THE columns and woodwork of the well-known old organ screen at St. Paul's are now being erected as a screen over the north door of the cathedral. It is to be hoped that the authorities will restore to its proper place the slab bearing the quaint Latin inscription to the memory of the illustrious Wren.—Musical Standard.

SMALL-POX, FEVERS, AND SKIN DISEASES.—The predisposition to is prevented by Lamplough's Pyretic Saline. Vitalising and invigorating, its effects are remarkable in their cure and prevention. Take it as directed. Sold by chemists and the maker, H. Lamplough, 113, Holborn-hill.—[Advt.]

REPORT of Dr. Arthur Hill Hassall, Analyst of the "Lancet" Sanitary Commission, Author of "Food and its Adulterations," &c., &c., on Mayar's Semolina: "I have carefully tested, chemically and microscopically, the samples of Semolina sent by Messrs. L. Mayar & Co., 36, Mark Lane, London, E.C. I find them to be perfectly genuine, of excellent quality, and eminently nutritious. They contain a very large percentage of nitrogenous matter, chiefly gluten, and are far more nutritious than any other food, such as Arrowroot, Tapioca, Sago, Corn Flour, Farinaceous Food, ordinary Wheat Flour, or any of the Cereals in use as food in this country.—(Signed) ARTHUR HILL HASSALL, M.D., London."—Highly recommended by the Faculty for Infants, Invalids, &c. Makes delicious Pudding, Custards, Blanc Mange, &c. After a trial no family will be without Mayar's Semolina.

CROSBY'S BALSAMIC COUGH ELIXIR.—Opiates, Narcotics, and Squills are too often invoked to give relief in Coughs, Colds, and all Pulmonary diseases. Instead of such fallacious remedies, which yield momentary relief at the expense of enfeebling the digestive organs and thus increasing that debility which lies at the root of the malady, modern science points to Crosby's Balsamic Cough Elixir, as the true remedy.—Select Testimonial. Dr. Rooke, Scarborough, author of the "Anti-Lancet," says: "I have repeatedly observed how very rapidly and invariably it subdued cough, Pain, and irritation of the chest in cases of pulmonary consumption, and I can, with the greatest confidence, recommend it as a most valuable adjunct to an otherwise strengthening treatment for this disease."—This medicine, which is free from opium and squills, not only allays the local irritation, but improves digestion and strengthens the constitution. Hence it is used with the most signal success in Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, Coughs, Influenza, Night Sweat, of Consumption, Quinsy, and all affections of the throat and chest. Sold by all respectable Chemists and Patent Medicine Dealers in bottles at 1s. 6d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. each, and wholesale by JAS. M. CROSBY, Chemist, Scarborough. * * * Invalids should read Crosby's Prize Treatise on "Diseases of the Lungs and Air-Vessels," a copy of which can be obtained gratis of any respectable Chemist.—[Advt.]

CURIOUS DISCOVERY at LETCOMBE CASTLE.

A curious discovery has been made by Mr. John S. Phené, F.G.S., F.R.G.S., member of the British Archaeological Association, who is making an archaeological inspection of the earthworks in Oxfordshire and the neighbouring counties.

On examining Letcombe Castle, one of the great embanked forts or camps along the ridge road on the chalk hills of Berkshire, he pursued a mode of investigation by which he has been repeatedly successful in obtaining relics among the tumuli of the Hebrides and in Scotland. His examination of the eastern portion of the mound was without result, but, on a careful measurement and inspection of the south, he came upon an apparently small stone, almost level with the turf, firmly imbedded, and somewhat foreign to the locality. Borrowing a small weeding spud from one of the several persons working in the camp, he set to work to dislodge the stone; this, as the hole deepened, became wider, and at a depth of eighteen inches, assumed the form of an almost perfect cone, a shape which had apparently been produced by chipping and not by rubbing or the application of any cutting instrument. At this depth the stone was found to be standing on five or six large flints, and on being removed exhibited a cist or chamber beneath, the walls of which were formed by the flints, and the floor by a flat slab of stone. In this cavity were human bones, portions of which only Mr. Phené was able to secure, as the rest crumbled away—some flint scrapers, a triangular piece of flint with true sides and angles, and which on a very reduced scale would show as by a section the form of the conical cover, half of a hatchet-shaped flint, the apparent outline of an ambo of a shield, which also crumbled, but left its flat base firmly attached to the bottom slab, and also a small fragment of a beautifully-formed urn or drinking cup of an unusually hard material.

Having taken these, and replaced the stones, Mr. Phené's first care was to find the owner of the estate, and acquaint him with the facts.

The trespass (if any) was at once condoned in a courteous way by James Palmer, Esq., of Letcombe, to whom the estate belongs, who expressed his interest in the discovery, and requested Mr. Phené to retain the relics, which were duly tendered by him to Mr. Palmer as the owner.

The cist itself was situated on the inner side of the embankment, i.e., within or almost within the excavate, and must therefore have belonged to the occupants.

Assuming the camp to be British, and, as a consequence, its occupants worshippers of the sun, this conical or flame-shaped stone surmounting the cist-van may have been emblematical of their religion; or from its position, it may have been an altar, beneath which was a rude reliquary, containing the bones and weapons of some former leader, whose aid was invoked for success in battle; or it may have been used as an altar of compact, on which the contracting parties would place their hands while taking their oaths, the solemn sanctuary of the relics attesting their sincerity, as we in a less formal manner touch the seal on delivering a deed; otherwise it would seem that these embankments were sometimes used for sepulture.—Oxford Journal, June 17.

"MORE than a year ago one of my children was attacked with bronchitis, and, after a long illness, was given up by my physician as 'past cure.' I was then induced to try your Vegetable Pain Killer, and from the time I began the use of it the child rapidly got better, and is now strong and healthy.—JOHN WINSTANLEY, 10, Whittle-st., Lpool, Jan. 1869.—To P. D. & Son."

GALVANISM.—Pulvermacher's Monthly Record of Cures is now ready for the benefit of Sufferers, containing documentary evidence of remarkable Cures effected by Pulvermacher's Improved Patent Self-applicable Volta-Electric Chain-Bands and Pocket Batteries, and may be had on application to the Sole Inventor and Patentee—J. L. Pulvermacher, 168, Regent-street, London, W. A Test on Loan sent gratis if required. Caution.—Spurious Electric Appliances being advertised by Quack Doctors, Patients should consult Pulvermacher's Pamphlet on that subject (free by post), embodying other most interesting matter for those suffering from Rheumatic and Neuralgic Pains, Functional Disorders, &c., &c.—[Advt.]

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—The Greatest Wonder of Modern Times.—They correct bile, prevent flatulency, cleanse the liver, and purify the system, renovate the debilitated, strengthen the stomach, increase the appetite, invigorate the nerves, promote health, and reinstate the weak to an ardour of feeling never before expected. The sale of these Pills throughout the globe astonishes everybody, convincing the most sceptical that there is no medicine equal to Holloway's Pills for removing the complaints which are incidental to the human race. They are indeed a blessing to the afflicted, and a boon to those who suffer from any disorder, internal or external. Thousands of persons have testified that by their use alone they have been restored to health after other remedies had proved unsuccessful.—[Advt.]

FREEMASONRY & ISRAELITISM.

BY BRO. WILLIAM CARPENTER, P.M. & P.Z. 177.

v.

Leaving for a time Israel—with whom, and not with Judah, it will be remembered, we have to do—we must now glance at the incursions of the northern nations—the barbarians—into Europe, and at their migrations and settlements in the west and south. The region along the south bank of the Danube, between that river and the mountains of Hæmus, was originally called Mæsia, and Herodotus, describing the progress of Darius [Hystaspes], northward (B.C. 507), in his wanton invasion of that country, says that before he arrived at the Ister [the Danube] he, first of all, subdued the Getæ [afterwards called Goths, a branch of the great Teutonic family, the chief whom were the Visigoths (West-Goths), the Ostrogoths (East-Goths), and the Lepidæ (Lagards)]. The Thracians of Salmydessus, the Cymmanians, and the Mysæans, he states, submitted themselves without resistance, but the Getæ obstinately defended themselves before they were reduced. “These, of all the Thracians,” he adds, “are the bravest and the most upright. They believe themselves to be immortal; and when any one dies, they believe that he is removed into the presence of their god, Zamolxis.” The Getæ were distinguished, not only for their religion and bravery in war, but for their advance in the arts of peace. They produced grain for exportation, as well as for their own consumption. It has been remarked, too, that from this quarter came the earliest poets and musicians, such as Orpheus, who was said to have so greatly assisted in charming the previously rude inhabitants of Greece into the mildness of civilised life. Mæsia was subsequently invaded by Alexander the Great (B.C. 329), but the Getæ refused to submit to national servitude, and passed over the Danube, settling in Dacia, a country north-west of the Euxine, part of which is now known as Transylvania, with the Danubian Principalities, or Roumania, the inhabitants of which are said to be Romanized Dacians. Here we have the Euxine on one side and Hungary on the other, Russia on the north, and the Turkish empire in Europe on the south. The Getæ became a formidable republic, but the Romans having made Mæsia a Roman province, invaded Dacia, and drove the Getæ still further into the northern wilderness. They were not to be subdued, but their sufferings were terrible, for the Huns, under the fierce Attila, poured down upon them from the wilds of Tartary, and they were driven to seek from their former conquerors an asylum south of the Danube. They were permitted to cross into the empire, and again occupied Mæsia. They were required, however, to surrender their arms, and to give up their children. The former condition they appear by some means to have evaded, but their children were taken and dispersed throughout the provinces of Asia, while the people again spread themselves over the plains lying between the ridges of Mount Hæmus and the Danube, whence they had been driven by Alexander in his early conquests. Their sufferings were indescribable. They were exposed to famine, and many sold themselves into slavery to escape starvation. Exasperated by the faithlessness of the Romans, who, when they bereaved them of their children, promised to supply them with provisions in their inhospitable plains, they invited the Ostrogoths to join them; and the two branches of the Getæ being united, they prepared to make war upon the Romans, who atrociously slaughtered the Gothic youth dispersed throughout the Eastern provinces. The Goths, under Alaric, whom they had elected as their leader (A.D. 396), rushed like a tempest on the central, and hitherto uninvaded, provinces of Thessaly, Greece, Epirus, and the Peloponnesus. The land trembled before them in terror. Theodosius, who became emperor (A.D. 379), broke, for a time, their strength, and peace was at length concluded between the invaders and the Empire of the East. Alaric was appointed Master-General of the eastern Illyricum, but a settled hatred to the Romans dominated in the hearts of the Getæ. When they were prepared to renew the war, they solemnly proclaimed Alaric king of the Visigoths, and he then felt, as he said, a preternatural impulse which directed and even impelled him to the gates of Rome; “secretly aspiring,” says Gibbon, “to plant the Gothic standard on the walls of Rome, and to enrich his army with the spoils of three hundred triumphs.” In fulfilment of his destiny, he descended from the Alps on the Italian plains. The gates of Rome were at length opened to the conqueror, and the Gothic fires blazed around the capital. Alaric spared the city, as he did a second and a third time; but, at last, goaded by treachery, he sacked and plundered it, carrying away its richest spoils. All southern Italy was soon subdued, but before the Goths could pass into Sicily, Alaric died. This people, however, were destined to achieve still greater things.

Sharon Turner says that the most authentic facts that can now be gleaned from ancient history, and the most probable traditions that have been preserved in Europe, concur in proving that it has been peopled by three great streams of population from the East, who have followed each other. (1.) The Kimmerian, Keltic or Celtic race. (2.) The Scythian, Gothic, and German tribes, from whom most of the modern nations of continental Europe have descended. (3.) The Slavonian and Sarmatian nations, who established themselves in Poland, Bohemia, Russia, and other vicinities. This able writer, who has set aside many fanciful and fallacious theories on the origin of the Anglo-Saxon race, has shown that the Scythians or Goths drove their predecessors, the Celts, towards the northern and southern extremities of Europe, and not only reached the Rhine, but crossed it into France; and that from the branches of the latter stock our own immediate ancestors, as well as those of the most celebrated nations of modern Europe, have unquestionably descended—as the Anglo-Saxon, Lowland-Scotch, Normans, Danes, Norwegians, Swedes, Germans, Dutch, Belgians, Lombards, and Franks. Europe changed her inhabitants, as it were, the new race issuing from the Danube, whence, as we have seen, they had made their descent on the Roman Empire.

With regard to the Saxons, in particular, Sharon Turner says, “Of the various Scythian nations which have been recorded, the Sakai, or Sacæ, are the people from whom the descent of the Saxons may be inferred, with the least violation of probability. They were so celebrated that the Persians called all the Scythians by the name of Sacæ. They seized Bactriana, and the most fertile part of Armenia, which from them derived the name of Sakasuma. They defeated Cyrus, and they reached the Cappadoces on the Euxine. That some of the divisions of this people were really called Sakasuna (from which we have our word Saxon or Sacson) is obvious from Pliny; for he says that the Sakai who settled in Armenia were named Sacassani, which is but Saka-suna, spelt by a person who was unacquainted with the combined words; and the name Sacasena, which they gave to the part of Armenia they occupied, is nearly the same sound as Saxonia. It is also important to remark, that Ptolemy mentions a Scythian people, sprung from the Sakai, by the name of Saxons.”

Let us now look a little more closely into the peopling of our own country by this Saxon branch of the Gothic family, for that is the main point towards which all I am writing tends. We have seen who the Saxons were; but who were the Angles? They were a branch of the family, who pushed their conquests along the north of Germany to the Cimbric Chersonesus, now called Jutland, and these, occupying a country called Anglia, lying between Holstein and Jutland, betook themselves to a seafaring life, and made several attacks on the western provinces of the Roman Empire. They several times invaded Britain, and hence the eastern coast got the name of the “Saxon shore.” They were, at length, invited by the Britons to join them against the incursions of the Picts and Scots, and they liked the country so well that they never afterwards left it. They first obtained the Isle of Thanet, and, at length, after having been greatly increased by various accessions of their brethren from Germany, they acquired the county of Kent, and proceeded onward until the greater part of the country was occupied by them. These two branches of the Gothic race, thus united, obtained the designation of Anglo-Saxons. The Saxon religion, laws, and language were universally established; and the seven independent kingdoms, which had been successively planted, formed the Heptarchy, somewhat analogous to the twelve kingdoms, or provinces, in Germany, and to those of the twelve tribes of Israel in the time of the Judges. These kingdoms were gradually merged in one kingdom, and called England—Angle-land. In the meantime, the Anglo-Saxons had embraced Christianity, through the preaching of missionaries sent from Rome. The Danes, a branch of the same family, subsequently made incursions into the island, and, after a time, became united with the Anglo-Saxons. At a subsequent date, the Normans, another branch of the same family, invaded the country, and became so intermingled with the Anglo-Saxons as to be at length undistinguishable from them.

Thus, as we have seen, this Gothic race, dwelling in the regions north of the Euxine, gradually spread themselves throughout the greater part of the civilised world, occupied and civilised countries which had previously been sunk in a state of barbarism, and, by its possession of England, became the messengers of civilisation to other and remote lands, planted the flourishing and powerful States of America, Australasia, and many other colonies in both hemispheres, and carrying their religion, language, and civilisation into India, China, Japan, and every part of the world. Thus, as Mr. Wilson (Lect. on Ancient Israel, p. 21) observes, "The European branch of the Semetic family, from the East came into the maritime parts of Europe; and gradually pushed to the ends of the earth the people who previously possessed these countries; or they have taken them up, to become one people with them, and to be made partakers with them of their blessings. This improved family of the Semetic race, after renewing their strength in these islands, have launched out into the Great Atlantic, and the tide of emigration has rolled over the world of waters, still further westward—encroaching still upon the Japhetic race in America as it did in Europe." And we may predict that this race will still further spread, until "the wilderness shall be inhabited, and the desert rejoice and blossom as the rose."

THE FAIR SEX AND ADOPTIVE MASONRY.

ARTICLE VIII.

Among the many questions that have commanded the serious reflection of the learned, none have, perhaps, been more perplexing and unsatisfactory than religion and human nature. Notwithstanding that so many commentaries upon these two subjects have been given, there is considerable latitude for an essayist to introduce into a critical analysis further proofs of the propositions deduced by minds qualified for the task of forming an impartial estimate of these truly important themes. The present writer, having in the preceding article touched upon the principles of religion, thinks it unnecessary to offer any further comment upon a question that has too frequently led to the display of much hostile feeling. In dismissing the subject, he may be pardoned for exclaiming in the words of the immortal bard that

Where envy breeds unkind division,

There comes the ruin: there begins confusion.

His duty is simply to confine his observations to certain matters characterising man, who (to borrow a phrase from Pope) is "the proper study of mankind." The passage has long since become an axiom amongst us, for all taking an active part in the business of life, have discovered the necessity for the possession of a knowledge of the quirks and quiddities of human nature. Those who have cultivated philosophical desires have not failed to note with some degree of satisfaction the good parts of human nature which triumph for awhile over inherent evil propensities. That man is more inclined to commit himself to sinful practices, every one will in all probability readily admit. He has, however, the power given him to do great service in his generation, if he will strive to disregard the allurements of evil in his pathway. It may be reasonably assumed that if every human being were to endeavour to cultivate a conciliatory spirit with his fellow-creatures, and to promote their comfort and happiness, the aspect of this sublunary state would be greatly changed. By this remark the writer does not insinuate that man alone can entirely remove evil from the world, but rather that a considerable modification in the wickedness now rampant would be effected by this consistent and unsophisticated system. The pure-minded and generous man has his foes, but he nevertheless receives from the worthy that respect to which he, by his amiable qualities, so deservedly merits. It is at all times excessively gratifying to the feelings to witness how his goodness of heart prompts him to dispense his gifts to the poor; to solace the widow in her affliction; to offer protection to the helpless orphan, and to lessen the distresses borne by those with whom he comes into contact. He has no foolish pride to gratify. He does not, like many of his fellow-men who pretend to have charitable principles, proclaim his acts, but blushes to have his deeds heralded forth to the world. In this age there is, unfortunately, a disposition to assume the philanthropist's garb merely to indulge selfishness and to insure laudatory remarks from all classes of society. Relief administered, under such circumstances, becomes a mockery and a disgrace to any community. When will this falsity, which is so extensively practised, cease amongst us? The man who quietly and unostentatiously contributes his mite to the necessitous, and softens the troubles of his less fortunate brethren, is infinitely more entitled to gratitude than the one who, in the sight of the world, gives his superfluous thousands away in the name of charity and demands his acts to be emblazoned in the Temple of Fame. It is not because an individual bestows a part of his worldly goods upon the needy and afflicted, that he is necessarily benevolent for it solely depends upon the intent or design which governs the act. If the offering is conscientiously and ungrudgingly made, in a strictly private manner, to alleviate those who, by misfortune, have decaded in the social scale, then may it be said that the donor exhibited one of the best traits of human nature—called charity. The quality, when properly understood and exercised, proves an inestimable advantage in a moral point of view. Man, in his association with his fellow-creatures, displays great vanity. Nothing probably delights him more than to receive slavish homage and the pamperings of fools and knaves. How much deceit and hypocrisy does he himself practise in order to humour his selfish tendencies! When will he learn to respect the behests of the Divinity? Surely he cannot be totally indifferent to the duties imposed upon him by the Great Law Giver? In his evil course, can the fact be patent to his mind that "All flesh is grass; the grass withereth and the flower fadeth away;" and that his life is of the most evanescent character? Then, why does he not give these matters deep reflection, and cast aside the pomps and vanities of the world and endeavour to prepare himself for the end of his career? The Creator has, in His infinite wisdom, given him a fitting companion, whose tender solicitude has soothed his cares and guided him through all the vicissitudes of life; her patience and affectionate regard being exemplified in every conceivable way. Charity from her has no alloy. It rises from the uncontracted spring of her guileless heart. She comforts the sick and distressed. She breathes to the dying words of hope, and tenderly closes their eyes as the spirit is being wafted away to the realms above; and at the last scene of all what Christian fortitude does she manifest! In everything she undertakes she has no selfish motives to serve. She has no arrogance. All her principles are founded upon goodness, and being so based, exercise great benefits to the opposite sex. Let man do his duty to his neighbour, himself, and God. Let him study to appreciate the works of Him who gave life, and he will derive such pleasure and profit as the immoral can never experience. Let his career be distinguished by a disposition to do good to those around him, so that when his pilgrimage has terminated, he may justly deserve the estimate made upon his character that—

His life was gentle, and the elements
So mixed in him, that Nature might Stand up and say to all the world,
"This was a man."

In reviewing the conduct displayed by Electa, one experiences an admixture of pleasure and pain—pleasure in the thought of her truly charitable acts, pain in the knowledge of the violent death suffered by herself and family. The heroic indifference to her fate, and the dignified behaviour to her persecutors, form conclusive evidence of what the faithful can endure when life is endangered. In the narrative produced in this column, the reader will probably recognise much terseness in the style in which her deeds are described to the candidate for the fifth degree of the sisterhood. The point of the signet may thus be explained:—

THE FIFTH POINT.

ELECTA, OR THE BENEVOLENT DEGREE.

[The Symbol of the Martyr.]

Dying, as Jesus died upon the tree—

Was ever worthier sacrifice than hers!

Sacred the cross, the nail, the thorn; for He

Who suffered has redeemed them from the curse;

Just as she passed to blest eternity

She pleads forgiveness to her murderers.

The scriptural illustration is selected from the 2nd Epistle of John, and is as follows:—"And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning—that we love one another."

The point of the signet is coloured red. The tinge has its representative in the red rose, which is symbolical of the benevolence and hospitality exercised by Electa. The emblem and grip are the cup and clasped hands. The lecture, delivered by the Instructor, runs thus:—

"The structure of Freemasonry, in its obligations, emblems, and principles, is so peculiar that we, Master Masons, above all other men, are taught to respect patience and submission under wrongs. That there will be a day of judgment, when all wrongs shall be redressed by the Divine hand, we firmly believe. Therefore, when we find in history a person whose confidence in God's justice gave her perfect patience and submission amidst the most inhuman wrongs, we seize upon that character as our own. We adopt and protect it. We hail it as a Masonic character, and we claim whatever credit or honour may be associated with it. Such a character, forcibly delineated, we discover in the traditions of our fathers. It is alluded to in the Second Epistle of John, under the title of Electa. And we have so surrounded the submission of that noble and heroic woman under wrong, and her matchless benevolence, with emblems, legends, and tokens of recognition, as to make of it a section in Adoptive Masonry. The history of Electa, as composing a degree of the Eastern Star, is thus given:—She was a lady of high repute in the land of Judea, of noble family, wealthy and accomplished, who lived in the days of St. John the Evangelist, and was remarkable for her profuse benevolence to the poor. Electa had been reared, as all her neighbours were, a heathen. The idols of Rome were the only gods she knew. Like Ruth, however, she had been preserved from the abominations of the system, and when by good fortune she was enabled to hear from inspired lips the story of Calvary and its Divine victim, her heart readily opened to the influences of the Holy Spirit. She became converted, together with her husband and all her household. She even professed, before the world, her faith in the despised Nazarene, though well she knew that to do so was to expose herself to reproaches, to persecution, and haply to death. Fourteen years, however, passed away before that great trial came upon her. These years became the happier as well as the better years of her life. She gave her great income to the relief of the poor. Her splendid mansion was made a house of abode to weary and persecuted pilgrims. The poorest of the flock, the tattered, and footsore beggar, coming up the great avenue to her door, was met as the father met his prodigal son. She ran out hastily to meet him, took him warmly by the hand, and 'welcomed him.' She led him to the best apartment, refreshed him with the richest wine in a golden cup, fed, cheered, clothed her guest, nor suffered him to depart until he was strengthened for the journey. Through all the country her name was famous as 'the beneficent and affectionate Electa.' And all this time she was ripening for the better world, and preparing for a fate which, although protracted, was inevitably to settle upon her. The time of her martyrdom drew nigh. A great persecution began, and any one who had confessed the name of Jesus was required to recant from his faith, or suffer the penalty of the law. Electa was visited by a band of soldiers, whose chief officer proposed the test of 'casting a cross on the ground and putting her foot upon it, whereupon he would report her recantation. She refused, and the family were cast into a dungeon, and kept there one year. Then the Roman Judge came and offered her another opportunity to recant, promising that if she would do so she should be protected. Again she refused, and this brought the drama to a speedy close. The whole family were scourged to the very verge of death. They were then drawn on a cart, by oxen, to the nearest hill, and crucified. She saw her husband perish. She saw each of her sons and daughters die on the cruel tree. She was then nailed there, and being about to pass 'to the better land,' she prayed with her expiring breath: 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do!' The colour red symbolises fervency, and alludes to the noble generosity of Electa, displayed toward the poor and persecuted of her faith. The emblem of the cup reminds us of the ardent hospitality of Electa, excited by the view of poverty and distress. The sign alludes . . . . The pass is used to recall the summing-up of the grand tragedy which crowned the life of the heroic Electa. The grip will serve to remind us of the manner of reception, alike to the rich and poor, practised by Electa."

The lines printed hereunder constitute a tribute to Electa:—

"When cares press heavy on the heart,
And all is gloom around,
Where shall we fix the heavy eye
In all this mortal bound?
What emblem hath the mourner here?
What love to warm—what light to cheer?
Thine, true Electra, thine which tells
Of His distress and thine!
The Cross upon whose rugged limbs
Ye both did bleed and pine!
The Cross by heavenly wisdom given
To raise our thoughts from earth to heaven."

The general instructions given to the officer presiding at the ceremonial business of the institution are brief, but perspicuous. They are thus laid down:—

"The Instructor will again refer to the signet, and repeat with care and distinctness the names, passwords, emblems, signs, colours, and scriptural passages of each degree, also the grip. Induce the ladies to make the signs, give the grip, and repeat the pass words. Excite a friendly and pleasant spirit of emulation; but keep all in perfect order and good humour. Explain the object and meaning of the motto—"I have seen His star in the East, and have come to worship Him"—in the scroll at the top of the signet; also explain in detail the Cabalistic motto—F.A.T.A.L.—upon the body of the star, in the following or similar language:—
Jephthah's Daughter, because she cheerfully rendered up her life to preserve her father's honour, was . . . . Ruth, because she forsook, home, friends, and wealth, that she might dwell among the people of God, was . . . . Esther, because she was prepared to resign her crown and life to save the people of God from death, or to perish with them, was . . . . Martha, because amidst sickness, death, and loneliness she never for a moment doubted the Saviour's power to raise the dead, was . . . . And, finally, Electa, because she joyfully rendered up home, husband, children, good name, and life that she might testify to her Christian love by a martyr's death, was . . . .
So, ladies, let it be with each of you. As you illustrate the virtues of these chosen and tried servants of God, so shall be your reward. You will not be called to suffer as they did, and yet sufferings and trials await all of us in this sublunary state; and those who in the place to which they are called best endure these trials, and resist temptations, prove that had they lived in ancient times they would not have been found wanting, though called to endure as a Ruth or an Electa. As Freemasons, we earnestly solicit your goodwill and encouragement in the work in which we are engaged. I have proved to you that it is for your good as much as ours that we are doing the Masonic work. Then, ladies, help us. Help us by defending our principles when you hear them attacked, and by ever speaking a kind word in our behalf. Your smiles and favours are the best encouragement we seek; with them we can do everything, and with them we pledge ourselves to do a double portion for you. And to those kind ladies who thus, while living, prove themselves the friends of Masons and Masonry, we promise that living we will love and respect you, and when you pass from this world to a better, we will remember you as . . . ."

The progress of the Order in America, the impressions entertained by the writer upon the introduction of a similar constitution into this country, and other matters, will, in the succeeding article, be communicated to the reader.

The ROYAL ORDER of SCOTLAND.

BY REITAM.

The Royal Order of Scotland consists of two steps or degrees—H.R.M. and R.S.Y.C.S.—the former being really the Christianized form of the ancient degree of Master Mason, and the latter an order of knighthood. Indeed, it is well authenticated to be the oldest, and perhaps the only genuine, order of Masonic knighthood, as in it we have an intimate relation between the sword and the trowel, which is shunned by all other orders. The order of Masonic Knights Templar has doubtless been instituted by Freemasons, but has nothing whatever Masonic in its ritual, unless in a spiritual sense, and has no claim to be a Masonic order, as it is well known the ancient Knights of the Temple were not Masons, as we accept the term. They may have possessed certain secrets, and undoubtedly had a secret ritual or form of reception of candidates, but the order was not a Masonic one. It can, however, be proved by public documents that the genuine Order of the Temple was in existence in Scotland till the year 1650, and we are told that about 1680 a body of knights attached themselves to a lodge of Masons at Stirling, and were called Crosslegged Masons. The traditional origin of the Royal Order, and the legend which ascribes its foundation to King Robert the Bruce, in 1314, are well known, and must be familiar to every Masonic student. We shall not, therefore, occupy space and time by a recapitulation. It is exceedingly doubtful when the Royal Order was really established, but it is a most interesting fact that, although at present we have no Chapter of H.R.M. or Grand Lodge of R.S.Y.C.S. in England, we have indubitable evidence to show that, so far back as 1730, there was a Provincial Grand Lodge for South Britain, which met at the Thistle and Crown in Chandos-street, the date of whose constitution was then so ancient as to be called "from time immemorial." There were also in London, of similar antiquity, chapters at the Coach and Horses, in Welbeck-street, and at the Blue Boar's Head, in Exeter-street. It is but fair to say that at this time the Order in Scotland had become almost dormant, and the Provincial Grand Lodge of South Britain obtained permission from the Deputy Grand Master and Governor to grant charters, and on the 11th December, 1743, a warrant for a chapter of H.R.M. was granted to certain brethren to meet at the Golden Horse Shoe, Cannon-street, Southwark, and about a year after, 20th December, 1744, some others were authorised to meet at the Griffin, Depiford, Kent. Bro. William Mitchel, a Scotsman residing at the Hague, obtained from the P.G. Lodge of South Britain a charter for Holland, 22nd July, 1750; but, from unforeseen circumstances, was unable to use it. On his return to Scotland shortly after, he called a meeting of the then existing Knight Companions, and succeeded in reviving the Order in that country, and placing it on a firm basis. From that time it has continued to flourish until the present day, when we hope soon to see the re-establishment of the Provincial Grand Lodge of South Britain in London. It must not be forgotten that in 1747 Prince Charles Edward Stuart, in his celebrated charter to Arras, claimed to be the Sovereign Grand Master of the Royal Order, "Nous, Charles Edouard Stewart, Roi d'Angleterre de France, de l'Ecosse, et d'Irlande, et en cette qualité S.G.M. du Chapitre de H." Prince Charles Edward goes on to say that H. or H.R.M. is known as the "Eagle and Pelican"—

'Connu sous le titre de Chevalier de l'Aigle et de Pelican, et depuis nos malheurs et nos infortunes, sous celui de Rose Croix.' Now, there is not the shadow of a proof that the Rose Croix was even known in England till twenty years after 1747; and in Ireland it was introduced by a French chevalier, M. L'Aurent, about 1782 or 1783. The chapter at Arras was the first constituted in France—"Chapitre primordial de Rose Croix"—and from other circumstances (the very name Rose Croix being a translation of R.S.Y.C.S.), we are forced to the conclusion that the degree chartered by Prince Charles Edward was, if not the actual Royal Order in both points, a Masonic ceremony founded on, and pirated from, that most ancient and venerable Order. This is said to have been done by that celebrated Scotsman, the Chevalier John Michael Ramsay, for political and Jacobite purposes. Indeed, we are at once led to the conclusion that to the Royal Order of Scotland we are indebted (?) for all those degrees called "Ecos-sais," but which were invented in France or Prussia towards the close of the eighteenth century.

All other Masonic degrees can, under certain conditions, establish themselves in each country as Grand Bodies, owing no fealty to any other country; but the moment a Provincial Grand Lodge of the Royal Order throws off its allegiance to the Grand Lodge of the Order in Scotland, it ceases to be legal, and is ipso facto incapable of advancing brethren to the degree of H.R.M. the first, and only portion of the Order, to confer which a charter is granted by the Grand Lodge. A Provincial Grand Lodge has in itself no power to promote brethren of H.R.M. to the Knighthood of the R.S.Y.C.S.; but in almost every case the Prov. G.M. and Governor receive letters patent, which enable him and his Deputy to confer that dignity. All Knights Companions, no matter where advanced and promoted, must be registered in the books of the Grand Lodge in Edinburgh, and pay the usual fees to the parent body.

We may mention that the original warrant for the chapter at the Hague, granted to Bro. William Mitchel in 1750, is still in existence, and is in possession of the Order in Edinburgh, as well as the letters patent authorising him to promote brethren of H.R.M. to the R.S.Y.C.S.

The Grand Lodge also possess a Book of Records, with the list of members and their characteristics, previous to 1763, and regularly engrossed minutes, the first of which bears date 31st October, 1766, and which are continued to the present time. Before 1766, there is but little doubt, the books and minutes were lost or destroyed in the Rebellion.

Should the subject prove interesting to the Masonic student, we may, at some future time, give a few interesting extracts from these valuable Masonic records; but at present time and space will not permit.

There are many Knights Companions of the Royal Order in England—we beg pardon, South Britain—and we have reason to believe that a charter would be granted to them were they to apply in the usual course. Indeed, we are not not sure but that something of the kind is being already done. Be this as it may, we sincerely hope before long to see the re-establishment of the Provincial Grand Lodge of the Royal Order for South Britain.

ROYAL ORDER OF SCOTLAND.—This order is now established at Bombay, under the Provincial Grand Mastership of Sir Knight H. Morland. The following Sir Knights were recently exalted:—The Hon. J. Gibbs, M. Balfour, J. Percy Leith, E. Tyrrell Leith, Colonel L. W. Penn, Captain B. H. Mathew, H. Maxwell, Hon. G. M. Stewart, A. F. Shepherd, Dr. Shepherd, Dr. Blanc, J. Thomas, V. Reid, G. L. F. Connell, K. R. Cama, J. D. Wadia, W. Cooper, J. Green, and C. Mathews.

WE extract the following from a letter of the London correspondent of the Western Morning News:—"It is not, I think, generally known that Earl De Grey found his labours facilitated in no small degree by the fact that he is at the head of the English Freemasons. Freemasonry in America is very strong, and there was thus a powerful inducement on the part of influential Americans who are also Freemasons to receive him with the utmost courtesy."

Reports of Masonic Meetings.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Rose of Denmark Lodge, No. 975.—A regular meeting of this lodge was held at the White Hart Tavern, Barnes, Surrey, on Friday, the 16th instant. The W.M., Bro. Charles A. Smith, presided, supported by Bros. W. H. Barnard, S.W.; S. H. Stephens, J.W.; R. W. Little, P.M., Sec.; C. Butcher, J.D.; T. Farrell, W.S.; H. Potter, J. H. Tyler, J. Brook, J. Ayles, S. Harris, W. Palmer, C. Angel, T. T. Willcox, E. Phillips, H. N. Hewitt, W. Hamlyn, and by visiting brothers T. H. Edmonds, P. G. Steward, W.M. 8; G. King, jun., P.M. 1260; J. Wright, S.D. 1158; F. Keily, 1293; J. W. Burton, 1260; C. Thomas, 1260; and Elton Glover, 509. The lodge having been duly opened, and the minutes confirmed, Bros. Palmer and Keily were passed, Bros. S. Harris was raised, and Messrs. C. Doerr and Jas. Adams were initiated. It was proposed, seconded, and resolved that Bro. Henry Potter, late Treasurer, be elected an honorary member. The lodge was then closed, and the brethren sat down to a banquet, which gave every satisfaction. "The Health of the Marquis of Ripon," as M.W. Grand Master, was drunk with especial cordiality on the occasion of his recent advancement in the peerage, and all the usual toasts were given and heartily received. Bro. Elton Glover delighted the company by several songs charmingly sung, and equally well accompanied by himself on the pianoforte.

Macdonald Lodge, No. 1216.—This lodge held its regular meeting at the Head-quarters of the 1st Surrey Rifles, on Wednesday, the 14th instant, under circumstances of considerable melancholy interest. For a long period the corps to which this lodge is attached had not lost any of its members by death, but within the past few weeks no less than three have been struck off the muster-roll, almost suddenly. Of these, two were members of the lodge, and on the occasion of this meeting the members appeared in full Masonic mourning, the lodge-room itself being appropriately draped. Bro. Bilby superintended the musical portion of the proceedings, which were conducted throughout with the most impressive solemnity. The W.M., Bro. S. H. Wagstaff, was supported by Bros. Larilham, as S.W.; Bridges, J.W.; Messenger, S.D.; Hastie, J.D.; and Carnell, as I.G.; and also by Bros. James Stevens, I.P.M., Thos. Meggy, P.M., Dr. Cronin, Treas., J. J. Curtis, Sec., Alfred Williams, Ross, Edmonston, Kethro, Johnson, Wolton, and others. Visitors: Bros. E. Baxter (P.M. 8), Bilby (P.M. 861), Gompertz (P.M. 869), and Strachan (1319). The lodge having been duly opened and minutes confirmed, Bro. Peall gave proof of proficiency in the first degree, and was subsequently passed to the degree of Fellow Craft. With gracious condescension to the wish of Bro. Edmonston that he should be raised to the third degree by the brother who had initiated and passed him, the W.M. surrendered the chair of K.S. to Bro. James Stevens, I.P.M., who in a most effective manner raised Bro. Edmonston to the degree of Master Mason, the solemn musical accompaniment by Bro. Bilby adding greatly to the impressiveness of the ceremony. The "Dead March in Saul" having been played, and the chair of K.S. resumed by the W.W., the lodge was called to order and were thus addressed by the W.M.: Brethren, Let us turn from this ceremony of a figurative death to a contemplation of the stern reality. We have to mourn the loss of two of our members since our last meeting—Brothers Alfred Scruby and John Edward Newton. Bro. Scruby was not so much among us, but he was well known in the corps and highly esteemed, his death is deeply felt by the regiment as well as by this lodge. Bro. Newton was at our last lodge meeting, only a month ago, in full health and spirits, and was invested with a collar of office. His death is a striking instance of the uncertainty of life and the vanity of all human pursuits. The last offices paid to the dead are only useful as lectures to the living. From them we are to derive instruction, and consider every solemnity of this kind as a summons to prepare for our approaching dissolution. Notwithstanding the various mementos of mortality with which we daily meet; notwithstanding Death has established his empire over all the works of nature; yet, through some unaccountable infatuation, we forget that we are born to die. We go on from one design to another, add hope to hope, and lay out plans for the employment of many years, till we are suddenly alarmed by the approach of death when we least expect it, and at an hour which we probably were led to think might be the most pleasant of our lives. What are the externals of majesty, the pride of wealth or charms of beauty, when nature has paid her last debt? Fix your eyes on the last scene, and view life stripped of its ornaments and exposed in its natural meanness; you will then be convinced of the futility of those empty delusions. In the grave, all fallacies are detected, all ranks are levelled, and all distinctions are done away with. While we drop the sympathetic tear over the memory of our deceased brothers, let charity incline us to throw a veil over their foibles, whatever they may have been, and not withhold the praise their virtues may have claimed. Suffer the apologies of human nature to plead in their behalf—perfection on earth has never been attained; the wisest as well as the best of men have erred. Their meritorious actions it is our duty to imitate, and from their weakness we ought to derive instruction. Let us while in this stage of existence support with propriety the character of our profession, advert to the nature of our solemnities, and pursue with assiduity the sacred tenets of our Order. Then, with becoming reverence, let us supplicate Divine grace to ensure the favour of that Eternal Being whose goodness and power know no bound, that when the awful moment arrives, be it soon or late, we may be enabled to prosecute our journey without dread or apprehension to that far distant country whence no traveller returns. By the light of the Divine countenance we shall pass without trembling through those gloomy mansions where all things are forgotten; and at the great, tremendous day of trial and retribution, when arraigned at the bar of Divine justice, let us hope that judgment will be pronounced in our favour, and that we shall receive our reward in the possession of an immortal inheritance, where joy flows in one continued stream and no mould can check its course. Unto the grave hath been consigned the mortal remains of our much-respected Brothers Scruby and Newton, there to remain until the general resurrection in favourable expectation that their immortal souls may then partake of joys which have been prepared for the righteous from the beginning of the world. And may Almighty God, of His infinite goodness, at the tribunal of unbiassed justice extend His mercy towards them, and all of us, and crown our hope with everlasting bliss in the expanded realms of a boundless eternity. This we beg for the honour of His name to whom be glory now and for ever.—A solemn "So mote it be" was the response of the brethren to this address, and for some moments deep silence remained unbroken in the lodge and until the brethren resumed their seats. The lodge was then closed down to the first degree. Bro. T. Meggy announced the result of his stewardship at the last festival of the Girls' School, and stated that in addition to other subscriptions, the lodge had sent in twenty guineas towards the amount required to secure the honourable position of Life Governorship of that excellent Institution. The W.M. expressed his regret that the testimonial voted by the lodge at its last meeting to the I.P.M., Bro. James Stevens, had not arrived so as to enable him to present it in open lodge as had been intended. As the lodge would not meet until October, he desired that the brethren and Bro. Stevens would consider the presentation as now made in due form, and he would see that the testimonial itself was immediately forwarded to the recipient. The lodge was then closed, and the meeting adjourned until the second Wednesday in October.

PROVINCIAL.

HOLYHEAD.—Ithernia Lodge, No. 597.—A regular meeting of the above lodge was held at the lodge-room, Marine Hotel, on Monday evening, the 5th inst. There were present: Bros. John Peters, W.M.; J. Lloyd Griffith, S.W.; William Lewis, J.W.; Owen R. Ellis, Sec.; John Ellis, S.D.; Dr. Owen Williams, J.D.; Rev. O. W. Jones, Chap.; Evan Evans, Steward; James Lloyd, I.G.; Samuel Hughes, Tyler; and a moderate muster of the brethren. The lodge was opened by the W.M., the opening ode sung; and the minutes of last meeting read and confirmed. Bro. John Roberts (of the Eblana Lodge, Ireland) was elected a joining member, and Bros. Vaux, Hattersley, Robson, King, and Little were passed to the second degree. There being no necessity for opening the lodge in the next degree, the W.M. proceeded with a course of instruction in the two first degrees, which was very well received by the brethren. The lodge was then reduced to the first, and after receiving propositions and transacting ordinary Masonic business, the meeting terminated.

HAMPTON COURT, MIDDLESEX.—Carnarvon Lodge, No. 708.—The regular meeting of this prosperous lodge was held on the 14th instant, at the Mitre Hotel, Hampton Court, Bro. the Rev. W. Taylor Jones, W.M., presiding. Four joining members, from Nos. 10 and 357 Lodges, were admitted, one of whom was passed to the second degree, and two gentlemen were initiated. Bro. the Rev. F. C. Crespieny, S.W., was then elected W.M.; Bro. F. Davison, P.M., re-elected Treasurer; and the Tyler was re-elected. It was unanimously resolved "That, in consideration of the distinguished position the R.W. Bro. the Earl of Carnarvon holds in the Craft as Deputy Grand Master of England, as well as from the lodge bearing his lordship's name, he be made an honorary member." Other motions having been discussed and adopted, the lodge was closed, banquet following.

TWICKENHAM.—Crescent Lodge, No. 788.—The election meeting of this lodge was held on the 23rd ult., at the Ait Tavern, Twickenham, Middlesex. Present: Bros. R. Gurney, W.M.; W. Smeed, G. Cordwell, Green, and Stedwell, P.M.'s; S. Larcomb, P.M., Sec.; R. Bendy, S.W.; Thompson, Hester, and others. Bro. F. Lane was passed to the second degree in a superior manner by Bro. Stedwell; Bro. Neats (22) was elected a joining member. Bro. R. Bendy, S.W., was unanimously elected W.M. Bros. Larcomb and Riley were re-elected as Treasurer and Tyler. The lodge was closed and banquet followed.

WALTHAM CROSS.—Gresham Lodge, No. 869.—The installation meeting of this prosperous lodge took place on Saturday, the 10th instant, at the Four Swans Hotel, Waltham Cross, Herts, the W.M., Bro. Robert Bruce, P.P.J.G.D., in the chair, supported by a goodly attendance of members and numerous visitors. The minutes of the last meeting having been read and confirmed, and the report of the Auditors received, Bros. Pery and Chapman were raised by the W.M. to the sublime degree of M.M. Bro. W. E. Gompertz, P.M. and Sec., having taken the chair, Bro. J. Forsyth, P.G. Sup. Wks., was presented for the benefit of installation, a numerous Board of Installed Masters was formed and Bro. Forsyth was duly installed in the chair of K.S. He afterwards appointed as his officers, Bros. Capt. Barnes, S.W.; F. D. R. Copestick, P.G.S.B., J.W.; J. Copestick, S.D.; W. C. Barnes, J.D.; A. C. Wylie, I.G.; Dr. Pottle, Organist; J. E. Grocott, Treas.; W. E. Gompertz, Sec.; Eltherington, Steward. An excellent oration was then delivered by the installing officer, after which the new Master initiated a candidate in a manner which reflected the highest credit upon him. Another gentleman being proposed as a candidate for initiation and some other routine business being completed, brought the evening's lodge business to an end, it was therefore closed with solemn prayer. The brethren then adjourned to a sumptuous banquet, to which ample justice having been done and the cloth removed, the W.M. proposed the usual toasts in a very happy and appropriate manner. The health of the W.M. was proposed by the I.P.M., Bro. Bruce, in a humorous and complimentary speech, to which he responded in a most graceful and appreciative manner, characteristic of his deep thought and earnest desire for the well-being and success of the Gresham Lodge, and expressive of the sense of honour done him by placing him in his exalted position. The toast of the visitors was responded to by Bro. Dr. Iles, P.G.S.W. Herts, in a very excellent speech, congratulating the brethren on the very good working he had that day witnessed; and also by Bro. Keleway, who had travelled from Somersetshire to witness the installation of his "son," for such he considered the W.M., as he had been the medium of first communicating Masonic light to him in his native city of Wells. The toast of the Officers was responded to by Bro. Grocott, the Treasurer, who gave an interesting account of his impressions of Freemasonry when in the backwoods of America, by witnessing the kindly acts of brethren of the mystic tie. The several speeches were interspersed with some capital songs, and altogether the evening was most agreeably spent.

MILLBROOK, CORNWALL.—Lodge Meridian, No. 893.—The installation meeting of this lodge was held on Thursday, the 15th instant, at the lodge-room, New-street, Millbrook. The principal business was, as usual, the installation of the W.M. for the ensuing year, Bro. Wm. Henry Clark, the W.M.-elect, being duly installed. V.W. Bro. R. R. Rodd, P.M. 189, P.P.G.S.W., was the Installing Master, assisted by V.W. Bro. E. J. Worth, P.M. 893, P.P.G.S.D., and supported by V.W. Bros. W. H. Bickford, P.M. 893, P.P.G.S.D.; R. P. Stephens, P.M. 893, P.P.G. Steward; R. H. Rae, P.M. 189; Smith, W.M. 954; Thomas, W.M. 159. At the close of the installation, the W.M. appointed the following brethren as his officers: W. J. Harris, I.P.M.; T. Scriven, S.W.; W. Coath, J.W.; R. P. Stevens, P.M., Treas.; John Henwood, Sec.; C. A. Payne, S.D.; H. Eaton, J.D.; J. H. Filmer, I.G.; J. Dillon, Dir. of Cer.; and W. Cawse, Steward. The Secretary was presented with a jewel of his office. In the evening a large party of the brethren dined together at the Coopers' Arms, Millbrook, when amongst those present, in addition to the officers already named, there were Bros. J. B. W. Williams, P.M. 70; E. Aitken Davies, W.M. 1099; Capt. Youell, R.N.; and Dr. R. J. Laity. The dining-room was gaily fitted up for the occasion, magnificent groupings of choice flowers, from the gardens of Mount Edgumbe, in vases, forming the centre pieces along the tables. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts, with special toasts to V.W. Bros. Rodd and Worth, were drunk.

COCKERMOUTH.—Skiddaw Lodge, No. 1002.—The eighth St. John's Festival, in connection with above lodge, was held at Cockermouth, when a large number of members and visitors were present. The Installing Master of the day was Bro. Crowther Morton, P.P.S.G.W., P.M. 872, 1002, and 1267; and the other brethren present were Bros. G. W. Kenworthy (P.J.G.W., 119), E. Busher (P.G. Sec., P.G.S.B. Eng., 129), Rev. H. L. Puxley (P.P.G. Chaplain, W.M. 1002), R. Robinson (P.G. Junior Deacon, P.M. 1002), Rev. W. Williams (P.G. Assistant Chaplain, J.W. 1002), J. R. Tickle (P.G.P., 371), J. Rothery, W. Alsop (119), J. Jackson (1267), Joseph Morton (872), P. de E. Collin, Dr. Jones, T. Mandle, W. Armstrong, G. M. Tickle (371), W. Gaspey, E. Hinks, W. Lamony, D. Crosthwaite (1075), W. Shilton, P.M.; W. Taylor, S.W.; I. Evening, Treasurer; C. Mayson, Secretary; W. H. Lewthwaite, S.D.; J. Allinson, J.D.; R. Brown, W. Potts, T.; J. Bolton, J. Pearson, Joseph Mayson, Joseph Graham, R. Bailey, H. Hammill, and W. F. Lamony (1002). Bro. Puxley, the retiring Master, having opened the lodge in form, the minutes of the preceding meeting were read and confirmed, after which Bro. Puxley returned thanks for the support accorded to him by the members of the lodge during his term of office; and he added that he was about to be succeeded by a brother who would well and worthily represent the lodge for the next twelve months. The Installing Master then assumed his position in the east, whereupon Bro. Puxley presented to him Bro. John Pearson for promotion as W.M., this being followed by the delivery and reading of the usual obligation and charges by the presiding officer and the Grand Secretary. All those who had not passed the chair were then requested to retire, and an installing board was formed, as follows: Bros. Kenworthy, E. Busher, H. L. Puxley, R. Robinson, W. Shilton, and J. R. Tickle. On the re-admittance of the lodge, the newly-installed Master was successively saluted by the brethren in the several degrees, during the progress of which Bro. W. H. Lewthwaite played on the harmonium the customary salutary marches. The retiring officers having divested themselves of their collars and jewels, the Installing Master invested their successors, viz., Bros. C. Mayson, S.W.; R. Bailey, J.W.; I. Evening, Treasurer; W. H. Lewthwaite, Secretary; J. Allinson, S.D.; J. Bolton, J.D.; W. H. Smeihurst, I.G.; W. Potts, Tyler. The working proceedings of the installation were performed in a most artistic and craftsmanlike style by Bro. Morton, whom it should be observed, was assisted very materially by Bro. Kenworthy. The lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to the Globe Hotel, where a first-class dinner had been provided by Bro. Rapley. Bro. Pearson, the newly-installed Master, presided, and was supported right and left by Bros. Kenworthy, Tickle, Collin, Morton, Busher, and Robinson. The two Wardens (Bros. C. Mayson and H. Bailey) occupied the vice-chairs. The W.M. proposed the usual loyal and Masonic toasts, which were drunk with all honours and responded to in eloquent terms, but which we regret we have not space to publish. The brethren then separated, well pleased with their re-union—one of the most successful ever held in the province.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—St. Key Lodge, No. 1222.—At the regular annual meeting of this lodge, which was well attended, Dr. Bradshaw, of the Hospital, was duly initiated by Bro. General Mumbee, W.M., after which the brethren proceeded to the election of a W.M. for the ensuing year, their choice falling upon the S.W., Bro. Clarke, proprietor and editor of the Weston-super-Mare Gazette. Bro. Edward Gregory was unanimously elected as Treasurer. A banquet followed.

SUDBURY, SUFFOLK.—Stour Valley Lodge, No. 1224.—This lodge continues to advance in prosperity under the able presidency of its W.M., Bro. the Rev. C. J. Martyn, Past Grand Chaplain of England, whose efforts for instructing and employing the brethren are indefatigable. Since his accession to office in August last the work of initiation, &c., has been generally sufficient to fill the allotted hours of labour, but at the meeting in May, the rev. brother took the occasion of a vacant evening to lecture on the tracing-boards, which he did in the most able and lucid manner, to the great edification of the brethren, many of whom had never had the opportunity of hearing them explained. At the regular meeting of the lodge on Friday, the 2nd inst., the W.M. further instructed the brethren in the working of the first degree. The Treasurer's report for the quarter was read, showing the finances to be in good condition. Bro. Edwin F. Fisher, late of the old Sudbury lodge, "South Suffolk," was elected a joining member; also Mr. Charles Osbourne for initiation, and Bro. the Rev. George W. Marwood, 312, for election, at the next meeting. Bro. R. E. Clarke, P.M. 1158, was invested by the W.M. with the collar and jewel of a P.M. of this lodge. The brethren adjourned to the Rose and Crown Hotel to banquet, where harmony and goodfellowship prevailed.

WARRINGTON.—The Gilbert Greenall Lodge, No. 1250.—The regular meeting of this flourishing lodge took place on Tuesday, June 13th, and was of more than usual interest, inasmuch as it was the day fixed on which the new W.M. (Bro. William Woods) was to be installed into the chair. The brethren began to assemble soon after two o'clock. Precisely at half-past two o'clock the W.M. (Bro. Mossop) took the chair, and opened the lodge with the usual solemnities. The following brethren, among others, were present, viz., Bros. Gilbert Greenall, P.M., P.S.G.W. of England, P. Prov. S.G.W. West Lanc.; Bowes, P.M., P.Z., P. Prov. G. Reg. Cumberland and Westmoreland, &c.; Richardson, W.M. 148; W. S. Hawkins, W. Pollitt, D. W. Finney, P.M., M.E.Z., Hon. Sec. 1258; Ephraim Auckland, A. Potter (Steward), the Rev. J. D. Massingham, D.D., LL.D.; R. Brierly, W. Reid, J. Barlow, R. Heaton, Dr. J. H. Gornall, T. Auckland, M. Whittle, Jos. Maxfield, P.M.; W. Savage, J. Parry, John Wood, Edwin Roberts, T. Donville, T. Pierpoint, W. Crompton, J. Dooley, J. Hannah, P. J. Edelsten, &c., &c. The minutes of the previous meeting having been read and confirmed, the ballot was taken for Mr. Joseph Dooley, gentleman, Warrington, and proved unanimously in his favour. Mr. Dooley, being present, was admitted in the usual manner, and duly initiated into ancient Freemasonry by the W.M. The Installing Master (Bro. Bowes, P.M., P.Z., &c.) now assumed the chair, and appointed as his officers Bro. D. W. Finney, P.M. 148, and Bro. Mossop, W.M. 1250. The W.M. elect was presented to the Installing Officer for the benefit of installation, and after assenting to a summary of the "ancient charges," was called upon to take a solemn obligation for the good government of the lodge. After this all brethren below the rank of Installed Masters were required to adjourn for a short time, which being done, a B. of I.M.M. was formed, and Bro. Bowes in a most masterly style, placed Bro. Woods in the chair of K.S. The B. of I.M.M.'s was then closed, and the brethren, according to rank, admitted and saluted the W.M. in the usual form and according to ancient custom. The W.M. then appointed and invested the following brethren his officers for the ensuing year: Bros. W. S. Hawkins, S.W.; W. Pollitt, J.W.; Richardson, W.M. 148, Treas.; D. W. Finney, P.M., Hon. Sec.; E. Auckland, S.D.; W. Crompton, J.D.; Roberts, I.G.; and J. Hannah, Tyler. On the proposition of the Secretary, the best thanks of the lodge were presented to the Installing Officer for the admirable manner in which he had performed the duties of the office. For this and past services to the lodge Bro. Bowes was also made an hon. member of the lodge. The R.W. Bro. Greenall, after expressing the pleasure it gave him to be again among the brethren, and to hear of the progress the lodge was making, proposed a vote of thanks to the I.P.M. (Bro. Mossop) for the very efficient manner in which he had conducted the business during his year of office. Bros. Bowes and Mossop returned thanks, and expressed a wish that the lodge might continue to prosper and become even more useful. The lodge was then closed in the usual way, and the brethren adjourned to the banquet, which took place at the Masonic-rooms, and was under the superintendence and management of Bro. A. Potter, one of the Stewards. The whole affair did infinite credit to Bro. Potter, and gave universal satisfaction to the members. We regret that Bro. Woods, the W.M., could not preside at the dinner, owing to the death of a brother and a brother-in-law, but his place was ably filled by the I.P.M. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and responded to, and after spending a thoroughly enjoyable evening, the brethren separated in perfect harmony and good fellowship.

POTTAR BAR, MIDDLESEX.—Acacia Lodge, No. 1309.—A meeting of this lodge was held on the 14th inst., at the Railway Hotel, Pottar's Bar, Bro. G. J. Loe, W.M., presiding. The work performed was passing Bro. Minctry, raising Bros. Luti, Belchambers, and Lamby, and admitting two brethren as joining members. Bro.

Selby (157) was proposed as a joining member, and the lodge was closed. There were present: Bros. F. Walters, P.M.; E. Sillifant, P.M., Treas.; G. Cattell, P.M., Sec.; C. Horsley, P.M.; C. Staker, P.M.; J. H. Butten, S.W.; &c. Banquet was served.

HARROW.—Harrow Lodge, No. 1310.—The first regular meeting, under the presidency of the newly-installed W.M., was held on Tuesday, the 6th inst., at the Railway Hotel, Harrow. The lodge was opened by the W.M., Bro. George Pymm, and there were present: Bros. John Coutts, P.G.P., I.P.M., Treas.; J. Smith, P.M.; F. Walters, P.M., Sec.; W. H. Green, S.W.; F. Coutts, as J.W.; S. Homewood, S.D.; J. Smith, as J.D.; J. Harrison, I.G.; J. Cox, as D.C.; and others. The visitors were: Bros. Lewis Benjamin (27), W. Maxwell (35), and W. Burnell (749). The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. Bros. Thos. Hammond, J.W. 212; James Moore, 212; Thos. Arno, 749; and William Wickham, 749, were elected joining members; Mr. Wm. Spells was initiated; Bros. Edward Rawson and James Adiel Martin were passed; and Bro. Lewis Benjamin (27) raised. It was unanimously resolved to recommend Bro. W. H. Green, S.W., as the brother whom the lodge would like to see appointed to office in the Prov. Grand Lodge of the province. It was also resolved that Bro. Green be elected as the Steward to represent this lodge at the next festival of the Royal Benevolent Institution, which was carried nem con. Bro. Green, in a suitable speech, acknowledged these compliments. Some propositions for initiations and joinings having been made, the lodge was closed. Refreshment followed labour.

HAMPTON.—Lebanon Lodge, No. 1326.—On 21st inst., at the Lion Hotel, Hampton, a meeting of this lodge was held. Bro. J. T. Moss, W.M., presiding. Two joining members were admitted, and the other work done was initiating Messrs. Fleet and Sinclair, and raising Bros. Gill and Saville. Bro. S. Wickens, S.W., was then elected W.M.; Bro. J. T. Moss elected Treasurer; and Bro. J. T. Bavins, P.M., re-elected Tyler. Two joining members were proposed. A five-guinea P.M.'s jewel was unanimously voted to Bro. Moss, to be augmented in value by the voluntary contributions of the members, and as he has done so much to increase the prosperity of the lodge, no doubt a valuable testimonial will be presented to him. The lodge was then duly closed. Present: Bros. F. Walters, P.M., Sec.; H. Potter, P.M.; J. Thomas, &c. Visitors: Bros. E. Hopwood, P.M. 141; J. J. H. Moss, 169; and E. Gilbert, 834. Refreshment followed labour.

ALDERSHOT.—Aldershot Camp Lodge, No. 1331.—The members of this lodge assembled for their regular meeting at the Royal Hotel, on the 1st inst., at 6 p.m. The W.M., Bro. C. Carnegie, P.M., Past Prov. G. Supt. of Works, Essex, presided, and was supported by the following officers: Bros. J. Fenn, S.W.; Capt. Richardson, R.E., as J.W.; M'Kenzie, as S.D.; Anderson, as J.D.; Lucas, as Sec.; Laverty, I.G.; and Gold (of 723), as Tyler. There were about thirty brethren present, including Bros. Hacker, Warne, and Wells, of the Panmure Lodge, No. 723. The lodge was opened in due form, and the minutes of the last regular meeting were read and confirmed. A ballot was then taken for Staff-Sergeant J. Smith, R.A., a candidate for initiation, who was unanimously approved of. Bro. Osborn, P.M., then initiated the candidate in a most impressive manner. Bro. Swann was passed to the second degree; Bro. Captain Richardson explaining the working tools. Bros. Gardyne and Griffiths were raised to the third degree, Bro. Fenn, S.W., presenting the working tools. Bro. C. Carnegie, W.M., was elected Treasurer instead of Bro. Vincent, R.H.A., who is about to leave the station. Bro. M'Kenzie was then elected Almoner, instead of Bro. Vincent. Sergeant-Major Scott, 3rd Dragoon Guards, was proposed as a candidate for initiation. Bro. Warne, No. 723, performed the music appertaining to the several degrees in first-class style. The lodge was closed in peace, love, and harmony, and the brethren sat down to an excellent supper. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were duly honoured, and a collection made for the charity funds.—An emergency meeting was held on the 8th inst., at which Sergeant-Major Scott, 3rd Dragoon Guards, was initiated into the mysteries of Freemasonry.

ONE GOOD TURN DESERVES ANOTHER.

FEW words ever uttered by the Most Worshipful Grand Master of England have been greeted with more general approval or with heartier applause than those spoken by the noble Marquis at last Grand Lodge respecting the great body of Masons in the United States. The "magnificent reception" to which his lordship alluded is a remembrance that will not easily pass away from the minds of any English-speaking brethren, whether their homes be on this or on the other side of the Atlantic—a chord of sympathy has been touched which we fondly hope will continue to animate and inspire the hearts of British and American Masons for all time to come. Why should it be otherwise? As we have frequently pointed out, the real principles of Freemasonry, and the social and charitable objects of a true brotherhood, are best understood and best practised by the Masons of this country and the States. Holding aloof from politics on the one hand, and avoiding any collision with creeds on the other, it is our high privilege to unite men of all parties and all religions under the broad banners of tolerance and fraternity. Other nations have unhappily strayed from the old and beaten track of the Craft into devious paths that lead only to anarchy and confusion. But the sons of light, both in England and America, have ever clung to the "ancient saws" rather than to the "modern instances," and hence we find that in few other countries in the world is Freemasonry so powerful and so respected at the present day as in the United Kingdom and the United Republic. Well, therefore, might the Head of English Masonry say that he "would ensure to every American Freemason who might come to this country the warmest, the heartiest, and most fraternal greeting by the Grand Lodge of England." Well might he rejoice at the strong and healthy ties which bind us together: a common reverence for the sacred traditions of the past, a common perception of the duties of the present, and a common desire to make the future brighter and happier for the whole human race. Not by the feverish dreams of a fool's paradise, in which so many weak imaginations indulge, but by the gradual yet sure development of the nobler faculties of man's nature, and the realization of true freedom throughout the world. The sentiments spoken by our Grand Master found, as we have said, an echo in the hearts of all who heard him, and we are sure, now that a fitting occasion presents itself, those sentiments will obtain practical expression.

Some time since we had the pleasure of announcing that a number of American Knights Templar were about to visit our shores, and we have now the gratification of stating that they arrived safely at Queens-town, and may be expected in London about the beginning of July. It is true that these brethren have chosen to come as a Commandery of Knights Templar, but, in a primary sense, they are Masons, and, as such, entitled to the friendly and fraternal courtesy of the whole Craft. What is being done to show these brothers that the good old spirit of English hospitality still animates the framework of English Masonry? Are any preparations being made for their reception by the Craft authorities, or by the heads of the Royal Arch or Templar Orders? As yet, we have heard of but one instance, in England at least, in which a fraternal greeting has been tendered and accepted by our visitors. The Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot has invited the American Knights to Alton Towers, and we are informed that delegates from all the lodges in the Midland Counties will be present to meet them. Nothing less was to have been expected from the premier earl, who, we are glad to say, will shortly occupy a high position in the Craft; but we want something more. A welcome ought to be extended to these brethren in the name of the great body of the English Craft, and no more fitting return could be made for the kind and brotherly reception recently accorded to our Grand Master by the Grand Lodges in the States.

There is now no time to be lost, as the stay of the brethren in England is necessarily limited, and we therefore trust that the subject will be at once taken into consideration, so that proper arrangements may be made. The American Knights Templar must not be suffered to quit the soil of Britain without experiencing, in some measure at least, the truth and reality of the words uttered by the Grand Master of England. There is often more good done by a fraternal shake of the hand than by all the diplomacy of statesmen, or the protocols of learned councillors.

Nor is any great display necessary, or indeed desirable—our object is to convey, in the simplest yet heartiest manner possible, the good wishes of English Masons towards the vast American Craft. Let us, in short, make them feel as much "at home" in our lodge-rooms as they would in their own, far away in the good old Keystone State. Let us regard them as the ambassadors of a wider dominion than any over which prince or potentate bears sway; legates of an empire vaster and grander than that of Rome in its palmy days—the empire of freedom and fraternity.

Having every confidence in the generous spirit which animates the English Craft, we need only add that the project will not brook delay, but that instant action must be taken to ensure a creditable and successful demonstration.

LODGE OF BENEVOLENCE.

The usual monthly meeting was held at Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday, the 21st inst., under the presidency of Bro. J. Nunn, S.V.P., supported by Bros. J. Brett, J.V.P.; J. E. Saunders, J. Smith, J. Boyd, W. Ough, J. Hervey, T. A. Adams, S. Gale, H. Garrod, C. A. Cottebrune, C. P. Ward, F. Bennoch, W. Watson, J. R. Sheen, W. Mann, H. G. Buss, R. W. Little, J. W. Halsey, S. May, W. M. Bywater, R. H. Marsh, R. Collett, E. Litchfield, J. Lord, G. H. Hart, F. Webb, J. Terry, J. Barnard, J. C. Frank, M. E. Loewenstark, W. C. Crick, J. Stevens, H. Bigg, J. Kew, H. G. Harrison, J. C. Davis, J. Lazarus, &c.

The sum of £300 was voted in various sums to twenty-one petitioners, and two cases were deferred to the next meeting.

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, P.G.M., has been elected W.M. of the Royal Alpha Lodge, No. 16.

WE are informed that Bro. the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot is to be the new Provincial Grand Master for Staffordshire.

Formal announcement is made in Tuesday night's Gazette that the Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal, granting the dignity of Marquis to the Earl de Grey and Ripon, under the style and title of Marquis of Ripon, in the county of York.

A long letter, headed "What is Spurious Masonry?" arrived too late for insertion this week, but as the points involved are important, and we are at all times quite willing to give fair play to every phase of Masonic opinion, the letter shall appear in our next issue.

THE RED CROSS OF CONSTANTINE.

I am happy to explain to your correspondent "Nemo" that I used the title "old" Masonic Red Cross Order for the purpose of distinguishing it from the "new" Masonic Constantinian Order. I referred to a Red Cross Order, a venerable member of which I met some five years since at Cheltenham. He wore, as the decoration of the Order, a gold Greek cross, enamelled red. He told me simply that it was the jewel of the Masonic Red Cross Order. I believe he had been a member for half a century. The same cross is indicated in the only published document found in the celebrated box. Whether this was the "Red Cross of Babylon" or not, I am incompetent to say; but perhaps some brother can inform us whether the decoration of the latter Order is a plain red cross of the Greek form? If so, they are no doubt identical. The "Constantinian" part of the business is, I take it, an entirely modern invention.

Bro. "Nemo" will find in the Freemasons' Magazine the correspondence which first occasioned my using the term "Old" Red Cross Order.

LUPUS.

NINE INDIVIDUALS THE RULING POWER OVER ALL LEGITIMATE LODGES.

Your contemporary informs Freemasons that "The Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General, 33°, of the Ancient Accepted Rite," is the "ruling power over all legitimate lodges, chapters, etc." I confess, although a Craft Mason for nearly fifteen years, and a Royal Arch Mason for over twelve years, this is the first time I ever heard that they had any jurisdiction whatever over either lodges or chapters. Perhaps one of the nine members will kindly explain how, and by what authority, they claim to be "the ruling power over all legitimate lodges and chapters"?

A ROYAL ARCH COMPANION.

HONORARY MEMBERSHIP.

Honorary membership is quite a recent invention, and should only be conferred as a mark of distinction on brethren of great talents or merits, who have been of service, by their labours or their writings, to the Fraternity. It confers no power on the recipient like those which are the results of full membership, and amounts to no more than a testimonial of the esteem and respect entertained by the lodge which confers it, for the individual upon whom it is conferred.

CHALMERS I. PATON.

THE WORD AND CEREMONIES OF THE EARLY CHRISTIANS.

"The secret word which the associated brethren used among themselves for purposes of mutual recognition and confirmation was Maranatha, 'The Lord will come.' They fancied that they remembered a declaration of Jesus, according to which their preaching would not have time to reach all the towns of Israel before the Son of Man appeared in his Majesty. Baptism was the sign of entrance into the sect. The rite was the same in form as the baptism of John, but it was administered in the name of Jesus. Baptism was, however, considered an insufficient initiation into the Society. It should be followed by a conferring of the gifts of the Holy Spirit, which was produced by means of a prayer pronounced by the apostles over the head of the neophyte, with the imposition of hands. This imposition of hands, already so familiar to Jesus (Matthew xix. 13, Mark x. 16, Luke iv. 40), was the crowning sacramental act."

OPERATIVE AND SPECULATIVE FREEMASONRY.

At page 345, Bro. Hughan says: "I believe strongly that the 'true history of Freemasonry in this country is the history of an operative body.'" Now, I believe that such is not the case, so far as our system of speculative Freemasonry is concerned; and I should like Bro. Hughan to prove his assertion. I challenge him to prove that there was any more of our Freemasonry among the pre-eighteenth-century masons than there was among the coeval carpenters or tailors?

I am aware the old "masons" had a word, but what that one particular word was I do not know—only I have been led to understand it had nothing to do with any of the words belonging to our system.

TOLERATION BEFORE 1717.

Toleration is a great principle of our Freemasonry. We find it enunciated as the "Great Fundamental" in the series of twenty-four articles which William Penn drew out in 1681 as the constitution of his new colony, Pennsylvania. The idea was noble and humane, and deserved success.

THE KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE.

The legend of King Arthur and the Round Table is always an inviting subject for the poets; and we know not how many have tried their hands at it with more or less success. Mr. Tennyson has added to his laurels largely in his "Idylls of the King;" and Lord Lytton has followed not ignobly in the wake of the Laureate. But we have a slight quarrel to pick with these Arthurian singers. We hear of the good Sir Lancelot, and Galahad the pure; but where is Tom Thumb? From the sublime to the ridiculous is proverbially an easy descent; but the fact remains, that the original Tom Thumb—for Mr. Stratton is not the original Simon Pure after all, whatever Mr. Barnum may say to the contrary—the real, original Tom Thumb was an important character at King Arthur's Round Table. A work was printed in the year 1630, which bears the following title:—"Tom Thumb, his Life and Death: wherein is declared many marvellous Acts of Manhood, full of Wonder and strange Merriments. Which little Knight lived in King Arthur's time, and famous in the Court of Great Brittain!" It begins thus:—

In Arthur's court Tom Thumb did lie,
A man of mickle might;
The best of all the Table Round,
And eke a doughty knight.

His stature but an inch in height,
Or quarter of a span;
Then think you not this little knight
Was proved a valiant man?

FREEMASONRY AND JUDAISM.

Our Brother Carpenter has done well in introducing to the notice of the Craft the anomalous fact that Freemasonry, so much believed in by Christian professors, should derive all its charms from the Hebrew ritual, which they affect to despise as a thing of the past, and which has been tried and found wanting. I do not know upon what logic they base such a result, but so it is. My firm impression is, and I take scripture as my authority, that the law as given by Moses nearly 3,400 years ago, is as much in force now, and the awful words pronounced then as much concern us now, as they did the wandering tribe of Heber then; and that we shall be rewarded or punished as we have obeyed or disregarded these Divine laws. "The law of Jehovah is perfect, converting the soul," is the inspired language of David. "Think not that I have come to destroy the law and the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfil," were the words used among the first sentences uttered by Divine lips upon the Mount of Beatitudes. The internal or spiritual meaning of that law is faintly shadowed forth by the display and setting forth of the ornaments, furniture, and jewels of our lodge, and the ritual of our R.A. ceremony. The arrangements of both Craft and Arch lodges are no doubt faulty and conglomerous, and many innovations have been made to suit our notions of ease and handiness, than by the rigid rule of the science which dictated it. Our lodge should be set out on the model of a Jewish synagogue (I am not a Jew), and that I think is meant to be in accordance with the Tabernacle in the wilderness, which became afterwards the perfect model for the building of King Solomon's Temple. The Almighty gave strict commandment to Moses how to make all those things: "And see and make in the form of those things which thou wast made to see in the mount." [The critic will observe here that the prepositional is in not on.] One of the oldest aphorisms we have is from Thales, one of the reputed seven wise men of Greece. He said: "There is nothing in heaven but is also on the earth, but in an earthly degree; and there is nothing on the earth but is also in heaven, but in an heavenly degree;" and no doubt the aphorism was borrowed from the Hebrews. It could not have been an earthly pattern that Moses "was made to see in the mount;" it must therefore have been a vision of the spiritual world; and, if so, a lesson to us of the life and habits of spiritual beings. I believe that much concern is taken by the Jewish priesthood to preserve the identical arrangements of the tabernacle, although it is asserted by Jew and Gentile that the Talmudistic gloss has defaced much of its original purity.

The Jewish history may be called a macrosomatic history, since the history of every known nation, ancient or modern, is identified with the Jew. With Terah the Noetic dynasty appears to have closed, and the, to us, world's history seems to open. The descendants of Noah appear to have sunk into the grossest idolatry, and Abraham was called to be the harbinger of a new theism, which should acknowledge the one only true God and His triune essence. In no history can the workings of Divine Providence be more beautifully displayed than in the Almighty's dealings with the Jewish people. Abram was called to leave his father's home, his household gods, and all dear to him, and go into a land of which he knew nothing, on the bare promise that his seed after him should inherit that land and become a great and mighty people. The nomadic life led by the patriarchs prevented all intercourse with the outer world. The patriarch was the Sheik or the family, and they had little intercourse with other tribes. Abraham appears to have been very scrupulous in this respect, by refusing to bury his dead with the dead of another powerful tribe; and the care he took to procure a wife for his son Isaac out of his own country and kindred. The cruel and treacherous murder of the Shechemites was occasioned by strong feeling which the Hebrew tribe had against intermixture with any other tribe, either in life or death, as they only had received the covenant of circumcision. By a series of provident steps, upon which even the infantine mind loves to dwell, we find this simple-minded pastoral people brought into contact with the most scientific and polished nations upon the earth. The introduction of Jacob to Pharaoh is, perhaps, as touching a scene as any recorded in sacred history. "How old art thou?" was the question put by Pharaoh; and mark the sublimity of the reply: "Few and evil have the days and years of my life been." And at the close of the interview, the aged patriarch blessed Pharaoh, who was the mightiest ruler on the earth, "and went out from before him." Jacob, true to his traditions, would not mix his bones with the bones of the stranger, nor would his son Joseph after him. The death of Jacob was considered to be a great calamity, and his funeral was attended by the chief rulers of the country, who gave it the name of "Abel Mizraim," or the "Mourning of Egypt." I have alluded to this because I have observed through the medium of THE FREEMASON that among the many exotics that have lately been produced in Masonry there is one called the "Rite of Mizraim," and I have wondered what could be its meaning. In my endeavours to find out, I find that Mizraim was the son of Ham, who was the son of Noah. The antecedents of Ham are not preposing. It must be borne in mind by all biblical readers that in the Sacred Volume the word NAME denotes a principle, either good or bad, and that the word city corresponds to doctrine, and that to build a city corresponds to the establishment or founding a school of thought. In this sense it has been asserted that Mizraim was the founder of those called the Magi, or as the scripture denominates them, "The Magicians of Egypt." In fact, they were a school of astrologers or witches. It is of this order that Jannes and Jambres belonged to, whom St. Paul alludes to as having withstood Moses, and whose characters, as given by St. Paul, are not fitting examples for Masons to follow. Passing over that portion of the Jewish history known as the prophetic dispensation, and ably alluded to by our Bro. Carpenter, we will take a running look at what is known as the connection, namely the closing of the Book of Malachi, and the advent of our Lord in the flesh, or the angelic prologue, sung to the shepherds while watching their flocks by night. It appears that the Almighty did with Israel

"As we with torches do ;
Not light them for themselves ;"

but for the nations of the earth, that through them the curse of idolatry should be removed. And the Almighty promised them many and great advantages, on the condition that they, as a nation, should remain faithful to the mission which he had charged them with. Our Bro. Carpenter has given us a succinct account of their occasional apostacies, and their dire punishments as the result. He has quoted largely from the prophet Isaiah, who flourished during the reigns of Uzziah, Joatham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah. Three of these were princes who possessed far above the average amount of kingly virtues and patriotism, and who received the approbation of Jehovah, through His prophet, for their munificent and beneficial actions while on the throne of David. Ahaz proved the most corrupt monarch that the house of David had as yet produced. He respected neither the law nor the prophets, nor even Jehovah himself ; but regarded nothing but his own depraved inclinations. His reign was as hateful to the Jews as that of John in England ; but we do not judge the kings of England by the character of John and one or two others, nor should we judge the kings of Judah by the measure of Ahaz. The great desert has beautiful oases, and the Jewish history has chapters which have been and still are the admiration of the world. They had been avenged of the Assyrians, who led them into captivity. The cause of their captivity was their proneness for the Assyrian gods, and Jehovah delivered them over to their bent, and they became sadder and better men. The destruction of the Babylonian Empire by Cyrus the Persian, gave the Jews new masters, and their return to Jerusalem. Daniel, Nehemiah, Ezra, and Haggai flourished during this time. The rule of the Persian was mild, and he greatly favoured the Jews. Isaiah's prophecy was shown to him where he is mentioned and addressed by name many years before his birth, as follows : "I am Jehovah, and there is none else. I form the light, and I create darkness ; I make peace and create evil. I, Jehovah, do all this." This declaration was directed against the doctrines of Zoroaster, which were taught in Persia by the magi. They taught the worship of two deities representing light and darkness, who were continually endeavouring to counteract each other ; but Jehovah declared that the Jews were His witnesses to bear the solemn record, "That before Him there was no God formed, neither should there be after Him, and that besides Him there was no Saviour.

After the fall of the Persian dynasty, occasioned by the battle of Issus and the death of Darius, the Jews were at the mercy of Alexander the Great. Alexander was incensed against the Jews, not so much on account of their religion (as there were some points in his own which were similar to the Jews), as their refusing to pay him their tribute when he first invaded Syria. Accordingly, on his progress to Egypt, after the destruction of Tyre (332 B.C.), he turned aside to Jerusalem. He was met by the High Priest, Jaddua, arrayed in his pontifical robes, the priests in their usual habits, and by a number of citizens in white robes. Upon seeing the High Priest, Alexander made the first advance to salute and to worship the sacred name inscribed on the mitre, observing to those around him, "I adore not the High Priest, but the God whose priest he is," and added that he had seen in a dream such a person in such a dress assuring him of the conquest of the Persian empire. He promised that the Jews in Babylon and Media should enjoy their own customs and laws. By the death of Alexander the Jews lost a friend, and under his successors they were subjected to a variety of oppressions and persecutions. Their country being placed between two powerful and opposing nations—that of Syria on the north, and of Egypt southward—they were in a rather perilous position. Josephus says : "They resembled a ship tossed by a hurricane, and buffeted on both sides by the waves, while they lay in the midst of a contending sea." Under the Ptolemies the Jews had about three parts of a century of comparative tranquillity, being under the protection of the Egyptian throne ; but this peace brought them into connection with the outlying Grecian nation, and notwithstanding the many bitter punishments they had endured for following after strange gods, the more opulent of the Jews studied the language, and copied the manners and customs of the Greeks, and made themselves acquainted with the Greek philosophy. This departure from the simplicity of their original law, that Jehovah was one, and that they should serve no god but Him, ended in their being delivered over to those nations whose gods they served, with the attendant persecutions and calamities. About B.C. 160 Antiochus, the fourth king of Syria, whom the Greeks surnamed Epiphanes (illustrious), but whom the Jews called Epimanes (a madman), subjected them to the most horrid cruelty. He murdered Eleazar, the High Priest, for refusing to eat swine's flesh, and the noble Jewish matron and her seven sons, who had set the royal madman at defiance. These, and many others, died declaring their hope in the advent of a deliverer, who appeared in the person of Mattathias, of the Asamonean family, from whom they afterwards took their name. He dying, left the cause and hope of Israel to his third and bravest son, whose youth and valour gave new life to the noble war. He raised his standard, and inscribed upon it a cabalistic word, formed by M.B.C.I., the initial letters of the Hebrew "Mi Chamoka Baalim, Jehovah," "Who is like unto Thee among the Gods, O Jehovah !" With the promotion of Judas Maccabeus to be the ruler of Judah, the rule of this family, which, after a reign of about 120 years, fell to the rule of Hyrcanus the 2nd. The history of the Jewish people is now involved in the records of anarchy, plots, treasons, and petty intrigues with Pompey, Caesar, and the Roman nation, which ended in placing Herod the Idumean, afterwards called the Great, upon the Throne, who commenced his reign by cutting off the heads of the Asamonean party. Thus ended what is termed "The Connection."

Our Bro. Carpenter writes very bitterly against Judah for their apostacy, profligacy, and enormous wickedness. Softly, softly, good Christian Brother, this is a point too tender for even tenderness to touch ; they have been wept over by eyes purer than our own, "too pure to behold iniquity," but who said, "He that is without sin cast the first stone." The names of David, Solomon, Jehoshaphat, Hezekiah, and Josiah are names that shine out with equal splendour with our Henries and Edwards. We care not to be judged by our John, and Tudors, and Stuarts ; judge not the kings of Israel by Ahaz and the like.

There is no nation that so often passed through the furnace of affliction as the Jews, but still they have been the favoured people of God. They have had the most glorious mission committed to their charge that ever nation had—the unity of God and the immortality of the soul, the blessed hope of a glorious hereafter to the good and of condemnation of the obstinately wicked. They have been sometimes faithless to their trust, but they have been the sufferers for their wrong-doing, and to follow the charge of our Divine Master, we must not throw a stone. And what is to be the future of the seed of Abraham ? Has the grand drama of the world's sacred history, in which the Jew has been made to appear as the leading character, to become extinct, like the climax of a modern drama where the hero is got rid of, and all comes right again ? The facts of the past give no such shadows for the future. Is Judaism a theory of the past ? and if so, what was its last act ? Among the many sensational societies of the present day is one "For the Conversion of the Jews." From what, or to what, are they to be converted ? Him you acknowledge as the founder of your faith was a Jew, and who said, "I am not come to abolish the law." He chose His twelve apostles from among the Jews. He never asked the Samaritan, whom He praised more than the Jew, to assist Him, but said to the woman at the well, "Ye know not what ye worship." We know what ye worship, for salvation is of the Jews. He greeted Nathaniel as "An Israelite indeed, in whom there was no guile." Can we say as much in our day of Christians being without guile ?

Why, it is the current coin by which Jew and Gentile pay to each other their debts ; and to which school of theological thought (as it is called) will you introduce him when you have got him ? and how will you teach him the difference between orthodoxy and heterodoxy ? St. Paul, a Hebrew of the Hebrews and who boasted of being so, applauded Timothy for his persevering study of the law ; and what law could he have studied but the Hebrew law ? John was commissioned to denounce the Church at Smyrna, not because they were Jews, but that they said they were, and were not. And have all the prophecies connected with the promises to that nation been realized, or not ? If they have, when was the last accomplished ? Ezekiel's vision has yet to be developed ; St. John's visions of the new Jerusalem have not yet come down from God out of heaven. When these and others shall be accomplished, then will be realized on earth Isaiah's prediction, "That men shall beat their swords into ploughshares and their spears into pruninghooks, nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more ;" "Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself, for Jehovah shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." This promise was made to the Jews, has it been as yet accomplished ? W. B. (742).

ON THE CARNALITY OF FREEMASONRY.

To the Editor of the Freemason.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I read with a deep interest the letter of Bro. Buchan at page 377, but am sorry to confess that I cannot understand what he defines Freemasonry to be. The chief characteristic he seems to see in it is that it is carnal. By this, young Masons (as I am) must, I suppose, imagine that our carnal passions (which are fleshly, sensual, unregenerate (Rom. viii.), the natural state of man ; in fact, in the state symbolised among us by the rough ashlar), are to be set forth and strengthened after we enter the lodge. This, however, our worthy brother cannot mean. To me, Freemasonry, in its degrees, is determinately opposed to all, and every passion of the flesh (a list of which Paul the Apostle has given for our instruction in Gal. v., 19) are to be knocked off by our instruction in the principles of Freemasonry—Brotherly Love, Relief and Truth ; nor are we to rest until we have made ourselves, by the help of our Great Father, perfectly square and upright—the perfect ashlar.

Surely Freemasonry, while its immediate work may be seen by man only on the earth, yet it points us away from everything carnal, and directs our thoughts to Him whose we are : bidding us work and live by rule, as T.G.A.O.T.U. ever has done. Religion proper is that which gives peace to man here and on to all eternity. And is Freemasonry unable to do this ? No, it is able ; and does do all to those who submit—by destroying every carnal lust in their flesh—to its most simple, yet grand, teaching. It initiates its founder, who is not carnal, by not using force, as zealots among so-called rival religious sects do, to compel men to worship Him only in particular places set up by proud man.

If the Fraternity is carnal in its teaching, how far does this carnality extend ? and where is the line of demarcation between it and the spiritual, since it points to an eternity? Where is the strength of Freemasonry? Remember the saying of Gamaliel, Acts v. 38: If this work be of man—in a carnal state, I presume—it will come to nought. Verily its strength lies in the infallible plumb-line, which, like Jacob's ladder, rises higher and higher, and forms one continual line of union between this world and the next.

In conclusion, T.G.A.O.T.U. has created all bodies on a plan drawn by Himself, and that were not so, there never could have been such a body of men as Freemasons on this earth. Hence, as long as Masons are true, and "hold fast the form of sound words once delivered," our venerable system cannot be called a carnal one.

I am, dear Sir and Brother,
"REGEM SERVA," 450.

A COMPLAINT.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

SIR,—Feeling satisfied that you are a lover of fair play, and that your columns are always open for a true and faithful statement of the proceedings of the Craft, may I beg your insertion of the following explanation of the treatment received by myself at the Lodge of Finsbury, No. 861. I have already written to the Sunday Times, who have not only refused the insertion of my letter, but have stepped out of the way to pile obloquy upon my head.

The installation of the lodge took place on Friday, May 26th, when such altercation took place as warrants me in offering some explanation. A feeling has for some time past, I regret to say of discord, crept into the lodge, which has arisen from a display of dominant tyranny on the part of some who should have shown an example more congenial with the ancient landmarks of Masonry—any dissentient from their views has met with most rancorous opposition, and unfortunately I have been made a victim.

The bone of contention has been the removal of the lodge to a more convenient place than the present, and I very much doubt if the Grand Lodge knew the particulars, it would allow the meetings to be held there. The Sunday Times had two previous statements, neither of which were founded upon facts. The true account is, that a brother proposed that the lodge should be removed, and requested the vote to be taken by ballot. This the W.M. refused, and ordered it to be taken by show of hands, when the brother who proposed it recommended his supporters not to vote, whereupon it was put to the show of hands, and there were sixteen against the removal out of a meeting of thirty-seven. There were not four hands up in favour of removal, as the Sunday Times stated, as no hands were shown on the contrary.

Trusting you will publish this letter in justice to myself, and to show the Craft how Freemasonry is estimated in the Lodge of Finsbury,

I am, yours respectfully,
E. BENJAMIN,
late J.W. to the Lodge.

THE 1717 THEORY.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I regret to say that I have not been a constant recipient of your paper from its start, and am therefore not in possession of all the arguments advanced pro and con. on the 1717 question. If, therefore, the following quotations from manuscripts, written prior to 1717, have not hitherto appeared in your paper in connection with the question at issue, permit me to furnish them, as they may serve to throw some light on the subject:—

First. In a constitution printed in C. W. Moore's Magazine, Boston, U.S., in December, 1842, said to have been copied by Bro. Henry Phillips, P.M. of Moira Lodge (London) from the Harleian MSS., vol. 1942, the following regulation is given, under the heading of "The New Articles:" "31stly. That no person shall be accepted a Freemason, or know the secrets of said Society, until he hath first taken the oath of secrecy hereafter following: 'I, A. B., Doe, in the presence of Almighty God, and my fellows and Brethren here present, promise and declare that I will not at any time hereafter, by any act or circumstance whatsoever, directly or indirectly, publish, discover, reveal, or make known any of the secrets, privileges, or counsels of the Fraternity or fellowship of Freemasonry, which at this time, or any time hereafter, shall be made known unto me. Soe helpe me God, and the holy contents of this book.'"

When and where that document was written I know not. Whether the articles above alluded to, called "new," were new when the document was penned, or copied so from some older constitution, I am equally unable to answer. One thing, however, we may be sure of. If the document itself is not a forgery, it must have been written some time before the establishment of the G.L. of England.

It is immaterial whether it was written one hundred years before the revival, or only one year. Here, then, we have a document older than 1717, plainly indicating that Masons were then in possession of some secrets. This, however, does not prove that the "secret" had reference to signs or words; but the following quotations from Mr. James O. Halliwell's book on Freemasonry certainly confirms the supposition that before 1717 Masons knew each other by signs and words. Mr. Halliwell says:—"In Aubrey's Natural History of Wiltshire, a manuscript preserved in the library of the Royal Society, on page 227, the following passage may be found: 'Sir William Dugdale told me many years since that about Henry the Third's time the Pope gave a bull or patents to a company of Italian freemasons to travel up or down over all Europe to build churches. From those are derived the fraternity of adopted masons. They are known to one another by certain signs and watchwords. It continues to this day. . . . The manner of their adoption is very formal, and with an oath of secrecy.'"

We are not, indeed, informed the precise date when Mr. Aubrey wrote the natural history of Wiltshire. Two things are however certain: 1st, that Mr. Aubrey must have written that natural history of Wiltshire during his own lifetime; and, 2nd, that Sir William Dugdale must have communicated to Mr. Aubrey the Masonic information, while he (Dugdale) was still a mortal. Now I learn from Charles Knight's English Cyclopaedia, that Aubrey died either in 1697 or 1700, and that Sir William Dugdale departed this life on February 10th, 1686. Assuming, now, that Aubrey did not write the natural history of Wiltshire until the year 1700, and by "Sir William Dugdale told me many years since," Mr. Aubrey meant that Sir William had told him that anecdote just before his demise on February 10th, 1686. We are here still certainly furnished with strong evidence that more than thirty-one years before 1717 the Masons had secret initiations, signs, and words. If, therefore, the above quotations, and the inferences they lead to, have not hitherto been advanced by the opponents to the 1717 theory, or rebutted or explained by its advocates, I respectfully submit the above facts to their consideration.

Respectfully and fraternally yours,
JACOB NORTON.

THE GEORGE TEDDER FUND.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have great pleasure in informing the Craft, through your columns, that the accounts of the above fund were audited by the Committee on Wednesday, the 16th June, when it appeared that the total amount received (including the grant from the Board of Benevolence) was £110 9s., which amount has been devoted to Bro. Tedder's benefit.

Allow me also, on behalf of the Committee and myself, to thank the Craft for their liberality in responding to the appeal, and yourself, for your kindness in forwarding the object we had in view.

Further information relative to the case, I shall be happy to furnish to any one who may require it.

I am, yours fraternally,
JESSE OWENS.

SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW.

On Tuesday, the 6th inst., the Girvan Encampment of Knights Templar met at the Masonic Hall, Struthers-street, Glasgow, under the command of Sir Knight Robert Bell, assisted by the following Sir Knights:—J. C. Park, Deputy Commander; Thos. Clanachan, P.E.C.; J. E. Speirs, C.G.; Mat. Clanachan, C.C.; James Love, Treasurer; George Reid, S.C.; Dugald Butter, J.C.; and about thirty others. The first business was the introduction of a candidate, Comp. George W. Wheeler, of Mount Lebanon Chapter 73 (E.C.), and Caledonian Unity 73 (S.C.), who, after undergoing the usual initiatory exercise, was dubbed a Knight of the Temple. The solemn and impressive ceremonies of this order were never more effectively rendered than on this occasion by the Noble Commander, whose working is always distinguished by solemnity and grace. He was ably assisted by the whole of his subalterns, as this encampment for some time past has chosen for its officers only those brothers who by careful working in the other grades of Masonry have proved their worthiness to serve in the Temple. The M.E.C. then read to the encampment the passage from THE FREEMASON relative to the visit of the American Templars, and said he thought it would be advisable to get up a suitable demonstration to welcome them to Scotland, and as this was the only encampment in Scotland that holds regular monthly meetings, it would naturally devolve on them to make an effort to welcome their Transatlantic confreres. After some conversation as to the best form of giving that welcome, it was moved by the Captain-General, and seconded by the Past Commander, that a committee be formed to correspond with the American Templars on their arrival at Queenstown, and offer them a fraternal greeting; also to arrange the time and form of the demonstration. The following Sir Knights were then appointed as the said Committee, viz., the M.N.C., R. Bell; H. Speirs, C.G.; T. Clanachan, P.N.C.; T. Love, T.; and Jas. Barclay. The encampment was then closed in the usual form and with the proper ceremonies.—An emergency meeting was held on Wednesday, the 14th inst. Sir Kt. R. Bell presided and informed the Sir Knights that the meeting had been called to make arrangements to meet their Transatlantic brethren, he having received a telegram from them from Cork to the effect that they would gladly avail themselves of the kind invitation of this encampment. Sir Kt. J. E. Speirs, C.C., then reported the steps already taken by the committee, and suggested the appointment of a larger committee to make the necessary arrangements. After some discussion, it was decided to invite the distinguished visitors to a banquet, to be held in the hall of this encampment on Saturday, the 24th inst., and to suggest to them the desirability of the members of this encampment joining their visitors in attending Divine service at the Cathedral on Sunday. [The interest evinced in this proposed demonstration may be judged from the fact that though only a few hours' notice was given of the meeting, twenty-five Sir Knights attended.]

THE AMERICAN K.T. TOURISTS.

The following "Letter of Credence" to the American Masonic tourists has been sent to us, and we have great pleasure in making it public:—

To the Most Eminent and Supreme Grand Master, the Grand and Subordinate Officers, and Sir Knights of all Encampments and Priors of the Royal, Exalted, Religious and Military Order of Masonic Knights Templar in England and Wales, and jurisdiction thereunto belonging; as well as to those of Scotland, Ireland, France, Germany, and in whatever country wherever the Symbol of the Cross has been displayed upon the banners of Templarism to advance the moral, intellectual, and religious knowledge of our Christian Order, PEACE, UNITY, FRATERNAL LOVE.

The active and honorary membership of the Sir Knights of Allegheny Commandery, No. 35, of the city of Allegheny, Pennsylvania (whose names are hereunto attached in their own handwriting), deriving a charter from the Right Eminent Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of the State of Pennsylvania—in their associate capacity as a subordinate Commandery, having made all the necessary arrangements for an excursion through Europe, and to visit all Encampments and Priors on their designated route—it is eminently proper on such an occasion that this Right Eminent Grand Commandery of Knights Templar should present a Letter of Credence to those valiant and magnanimous Knights of Allegheny Commandery, No. 35.

It is more particularly required from this Grand Body, as Pennsylvania was the first State in the American Union which organized a Grand Encampment, in Philadelphia, in 1797, from Sir Knights who came to this State from the mother country, and brought with them the rites and ceremonies of our chivalric and Christian Order. Hence it is right and proper that the glorious old Keystone State should be the first Grand Commandery in America to send back to our mother country one of her subordinate Commanderies, fully equipped, to visit the home, the altars, the asylums, the historic reminiscences; nay, the graves and monuments, of our Templar fathers. This fact of itself should, and we trust ever will, render more stable and lasting the fraternal intercourse which should exist between two countries descended from a common origin and bound together by the same ties.

In the exalted character of Knights Templar, therefore, we affectionately and fraternally commend each and every of the members and Sir Knights of Allegheny Commandery, No. 35, as Master Masons who have worked on the Square—as Royal Arch Masons who have wrought on the Triangle at the rebuilding of the Second Temple, and brought to light treasures of inestimable value—and as Sir Knights who as pilgrim penitents in our asylums, have not only visited the Sepulchre, but knelt around the Sacred Delta, and beheld the Cross of our ascended Redeemer.

These Sir Knights go from among us for a season as our immediate representatives, and we pray you, as Officers and Sir Knights, to extend to our beloved subordinate, the Sir Knights of Allegheny Commandery, No. 35, and those associated with them from other States and other Commanderies, those fraternal greetings and that disinterested friendship and unbounded hospitality which ever has, and we trust ever will continue to adorn, distinguish and characterize our magnanimous Order, based upon Brotherly Love, Friendship and the Christian Religion.

Throughout their perilous voyage by sea and land, the Officers of the Right Eminent Grand Commandery, its subordinates, and the individual Sir Knights, will feel it to be their duty to pray Immanuel, God with us, to have the illustrious Knights of Allegheny Commandery, No. 35, and those associated with them, in His most holy keeping, and in due time return the Sir Knights in peace and health to their families, their friends, their brethren, and their asylums, in which fond and loving hearts will greet them as weary, way-worn pilgrims, who, having performed their pilgrimage, desire to rest and offer their prayers and meditations at the shrine of their Redeemer.

Given at a Special Conclave of the Right Eminent Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of the State of Pennsylvania, convened at Towanda, Bradford County, and State aforesaid, on Tuesday, April 11, 1871, A.O. 753, A.E.O.P. 74.

THE WORLD'S OPINION.

We walk in anxious, thoughtful moods ;
Our hearts, we fully set them
To gain great share of this world's goods,
No matter how we get them.
But, ah ! what fairy boats go down
In dark Oblivion's stream,
While racing for that leafless crown,
The outer world's esteem.
We try with eager feet and hands,
Sad hearts, and faces gay ;
From youth to age we head Life's page
With "What will people say?"

Most of us live a double life :
The one is outward show,
The other springs from hopes of things
None but ourselves must know.
Our time is so entirely claimed
By worldly thought alone,
It almost makes one feel ashamed
A softer heart to own.
Alas ! they miss earth's purest bliss,
Far, far from light they stray,
Who always make their watchword this :
"But what will people say?"

Kind acts to bless those in distress,
Are oft in secret done ;
But how much oftener when we know Mankind is looking on !
Better a kind word, entered in
The Great Recorder's book,
Than careless thousands spent to win
The World's approving look ;
And he who does a noble deed,
And hides it from the day,
Be sure will gain a worthier meed
Than "What will people say?"

There is a higher One to please,
Who sends no cloud in vain ;
He will despise no sacrifice
Who bore all human pain ;
And so, if we could only act
To our own conscience true,
Keeping God's law of Love intact
In all we say and do—
We should not need so mean a chart
To guide us on our way,
To lay its shackles on the heart,
As, "What will people say?"

MASONIC CURIOSITIES.—VIII.

BY BRO. WILLIAM JAMES HUGHAN,

Some of the certificates of membership issued by lodges were almost exact copies of the regular diplomas of Grand Lodge. We have had one sent us lately by a kind brother, which was granted by a lodge at Chester. There are several emblems depicted in the engraving—one being a peculiar one, viz., an owl on the capital of a column. The beehive is also given, but of late that emblem has been ignored in this country, although in the United States it is still generally retained by the Grand Lodges. On the open volume of the Sacred Law is inscribed : "In the Lord is all our trust." It reads as follows :—

These are to certify

That Brother Samuel Brown was made a Free and Accepted Mason and admitted to the Degree of a Master in our Lodge, and accordingly registered a Brother and member thereof, and you are desired . . . him as a Brother after due examination.

Given under our hand and seal this 8th day of Decr. of the Lodge of Independence, now held at the old Nag's Head in the city of Chester—482.

A.L. 5820, A.D. 1820 JOHN THOMSON, S. Warden.
MICHL. PHILAN, J. Warden.
JOHN KERSLEY, Secretary.
N.B.—The Brother this belongs to has signed his name.

We have several old summonses of the last century, some of which are quaint and curious. Whilst alluding to lodges in Chester, I cannot do better than copy the ordinary summons issued by No. 171 during 1777. The part in italics being written, and the remainder printed :—

Brother,—You are hereby required to meet your Brethren, the Free and Accepted Masons, at the Lodge No. 171, now held at the Plume and Feathers in Chester, on Friday, the Thirteenth Day of this first June, precisely at the Hour of Eight in the Evening.

Being a Lodge of Emergency to receive a visit from Sir Robert Salisbury Cotton, Bart., and others.
T. CRANE, Master.

Chester, June 11th, A.L. 5777.

The following certificate, referring to the Royal Arch, Excellent and Super-Excellent degrees, and dated during the last decade of the eighteenth century, is certainly valuable. It is ornately painted and coloured, and was issued by the Glasgow St. Mungo's Lodge, No. 28, and on it are depicted symbols which evidently refer to the ceremony of "passing the veils."—

"Holiness to the Lord."

We, the High Priest, Captain Genl. and Grand Masters of a Grand Royal Arch Super-Excellent Encampment held under the sanction of Glasgow St. Mungo, No. 28 on the Registry of Scotland, Do certify that our Trusty and well-beloved Brother William Williams was regularly entered an Apprentice, passed Fellow-Craft, and raised Master Mason in said Lodge, and for his good character and Behaviour amongst us we further conferred upon him the honour of passing the chair, and consequently a Royal Arch, Excellent and Super-Excellent Mason. Wherein he gave us the greatest satisfaction in all the amazing and mysterious Trials attending his admission. Wherefore we greet well all our worthy Brethren of the same illustrious orders round the Globe, and recommend him to their Brotherly care and protection.

Given under our hands and seal this seventh day of March, A.D. 1798, of Masonry 5798, and R.A.M. 3598.

INAUGURATION OF WILLIAM IV.

In 1830, George IV. died. He had been the Grand Patron of Masonry in England from the beginning of his reign as King. The office, therefore, became vacant. The Duke of Sussex, brother of William IV. (who had ascended the throne as successor to the late king), was Grand Master, and was desirous of filling the vacancy in Grand Lodge. He accordingly ordered a special meeting of that body on the 17th of July, 1830, and addressed the brethren on the great loss the Craft had sustained by the decease of his late Majesty, who had so long and anxiously afforded his support and protection to the Order, first as Grand Master, and subsequently as Patron ; and stated that he had ordered this Special Grand Lodge to be convened for the purpose of considering an address to be presented to his present Majesty, upon the melancholy event ; at the same time to congratulate his Majesty upon his accession to the throne, and to implore his protection as Patron of the Craft.

His Royal Highness then read the draft of an address, which he submitted for the consideration of the Grand Lodge

It is beautifully written, and will be new to many, and perhaps interesting to all of our readers, as a short chapter in the history of English Freemasonry. It is as follows :—

"To the King's Most Excellent Majesty:

"Most Gracious Sovereign,—We, your Majesty's most dutiful and faithful subjects, the Grand Master, Deputy Grand Master, Officers, and Brethren of the United Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of England, with all humility and respect approach your Royal presence.

"We have a twofold duty to perform—as loyal and obedient subjects of your Majesty, we are bound to express our heartfelt congratulations at the accession of your Majesty to the Throne of this United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland ; whilst, as Brethren of the Craft, we most humbly request your Majesty to accept our sincere condolence on the death of your Majesty's illustrious and immediate predecessor.

"By this afflicting event your Majesty has been deprived of a beloved and affectionate brother, and the members of our Fraternity have to deplore the loss of the Great Patron of their Order, under whose auspices they had attained a height of prosperity hitherto unexampled in our Masonic annals.

"Most Gracious Sire, these are not the words of unmeaning adulation, but the genuine tribute of a faithful Brotherhood, from whose hearts the recollection of past favours can never be effaced.

"We are emboldened, perhaps, and encouraged in the further delivery of our sentiments by the gratifying consciousness that, among the most illustrious members of our Order, the name of your Majesty has, happily for us, long been enrolled ; nor has your Majesty disdained to take, at various times, an active part in the more immediate concerns of the Fraternity.

"May we, then, in all humility, presume to solicit from your Majesty that same patronage of the Craft which our late revered Monarch was graciously pleased to bestow on us ?

"In the steadiness of our loyalty and affection towards your Majesty's person, we feel justly confident that we yield to none of your Majesty's subjects.

"We can appeal, in this respect, to your Majesty's intimate knowledge of our Masonic pursuits. We feel assured that a speculative inquiry into the customs of antiquity—into the origin and progress of every liberal and useful art, which constitutes the very essence of Masonry—will never, in your Majesty's opinion, disqualify the true Mason from being considered a good and virtuous member of society.

"In the public declaration of your Majesty's sentiment we possess the surest pledge of that conduct which, under Providence, will continually lead to and effectually maintain the peace and happiness of the whole community. Your Majesty has therein graciously referred to the circumstances of a life passed in the service of your country, in faithful obedience and entire subjection to our Sovereign. But if a faithful submission to authority is the wisest preparation for the exercise of authority over others, then indeed we may look with confidence to the excellence of your Majesty's rule, since, in the person of your Majesty will be realized the saying of antiquity—"that he is best qualified to govern who has best known how to obey."

"In conclusion, then, we venture once more, in all humility, to solicit your Majesty's gracious assent to the petitioning prayer of our Fraternity ; and nothing now remains for us but to implore the Great Architect of the Universe, the Author and Giver of all Good, that He may be pleased to bestow His choicest blessings on your Majesty's head, and to establish in strength and righteousness, the Throne of your kingdom."

To this address the following answer was returned by his Majesty's Secretary for the Home Department :—

"Whitehall, July 28, 1830.

"Sir,—I have the honour to inform your Royal Highness that his Majesty has been graciously pleased to signify his consent to be Patron of the United Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of England.

"I am, Sir,
Your Royal Highness's dutiful and obedient servant, (Signed) ROBERT PEEL.

"His Royal Highness the Duke of Sussex."

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF MANAGEMENT.

The Committee of Management, in issuing their annual report, have to congratulate the brethren on the continued prosperity of the Institution, notwithstanding the large amount of money the late Continental strife has drawn from this country for various purposes, and which has so seriously affected many of the public charities at home.

The annual festival holden by direction of the Most Worshipful Grand Master, the Right Hon. the Earl de Grey and Ripon, K.G., on the 3rd February last, was presided over by the V.W. Bro. Samuel Tomkins, V.P. and Treasurer of the Institution, acting for Bro. Colonel Francis Burdett, R.W. Provincial Grand Master for Middlesex (who was unable to be present through a severe domestic affliction). The donations and subscriptions contained in the Stewards' Lists amounted to £3514.

The Committee have to report that they have received the sum of £200, being a legacy, free of duty, left by the late Miss Sarah Dorset, of Reading; one moiety to be paid in the name of one of the executors to constitute him a Vice-President of the Male and Female Fund; the other moiety to be equally divided between the two funds of the Institution.

The Committee have also to report that since the last election the votes to which lodges and chapters were entitled by virtue of the payments to the male branch of this Institution by the Grand Lodge and Supreme Grand Chapter have been reduced; this was rendered necessary by the large increase of lodges and chapters, which caused such a preponderance of free votes as to influence the elections to the prejudice of private donors and subscribers and the interests of the Institution. A Special General Meeting was held on the 15th October, when, after discussion, it was resolved—To amend Rule 17 by substituting the word "two" for "four" in the third line, and the word "two" for "three" in the ninth line, which alteration was approved by the Grand Lodge at its meeting on the 7th December last.

At the date of the last report there were 165 annuitants receiving the benefits of this Institution. These were increased to 169 at the last election. In the interim 10 have died, and the Committee now recommend the election of 25, thus making the number 184, besides 9 widows receiving half their late husband's annuity. This steady adhesion in the number of the recipients of its funds can only be maintained by a corresponding increase of its income, and the Committee again urge on all the members of the Craft the great claims the Institution has upon them individually.

The comfort of the inmates of the Asylum at Croydon has again been supplemented by the annual grant of £50 from the Grand Lodge funds for the purchase of coals, which were distributed amongst them during the late winter months.

For the information of the President, Past Presidents, Vice-Presidents, Governors, Subscribers, and friends of the Institution, the Committee subjoin a statement of the receipts and disbursements during the year ending the 31st March, 1871, together with the particulars of the fixed income of the Institution.

BENJAMIN HEAD, V.P., Chairman.
Freemasons' Hall, London, W.C., 10th May, 1871.

We shall have something to say respecting this excellent Institution in an early number.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

SIR,—Will you please inform me through the columns of your paper, what degrees it is necessary for a brother to have taken to render him eligible for the Rose Croix degree; and also what are necessary for the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine?
Yours respectfully,
MASONICUS.

Northallerton, June 20th, 1871.
[Candidates in each instance must be Master Masons in good standing. No other qualification is necessary.—ED. P.]

INSTRUCTION.

A meeting of the Sphinx Lodge of Instruction, No. 1329, was held at Stirling Castle, Camberwell, on Saturday, June 3rd, for the periodical working of the Fifteen Sections. Bro. J. Thomas presided, and having opened the lodge in due form, with solemn prayer, proceeded to put the questions. The brethren mustered strongly, and each sustained his part in the working in a most satisfactory manner. Also present: Bros. Worthington, S.W.; Allman, J.W.; Vockins, S.D.; Larham, P.M.; Martin, I.G.; Dawney, Poore, Pulsford, Bedolfe, Ross, Wise, Elliott, J. Elliott, Noke, Stevens, and Wingham. Visitor: W. Bro. the Rev. Geo. Ross, Prov. G. Chap. Cornwall. The Fifteen Sections were worked by the following fifteen brethren respectively, viz., Vockins, Pulsford, Martin, Worthington, Stevens, Poore, Larham, Ross, Bedolfe, Stevens, Worthington, Allman, Noke, Pulsford, and Dawney. The lodge was then duly closed down to the first degree, when a vote of thanks to Bro. Thomas was carried unanimously for his able conduct in presiding. The interest felt in the principles and practice of Masonry by the younger brethren, who chiefly compose the lodge, reflects great credit on Bro. Thomas, the esteemed Preceptor, and his friend and coadjutor, Bro. Worthington, P.M. Bro. Thomas, the Preceptor, may, in fact, be truly said to be the working "centre" of Freemasonry on the Surrey side of the water, a term given by Vitruvius to that branch of the compass on which the other pivots, and from which the entire circle is regulated and apportioned. In this lodge refreshment is not permitted during the period devoted to work, and the members invite the co-operation of those who approve the system.

THEATRICAL.

HAYMARKET.—Bro. Buckstone is to be congratulated on the unqualified success of the new comedy-drama "An English Gentleman." Mr. Sothorn, as Charles Chuckles, has added this character to his many legitimate triumphs. "Mischief Making" commences, and, after the drama, "Uncle Foozle" concludes the entertainment. We can place this theatre in the highest rank among the houses in our great metropolis. On last Saturday a new one-act extravaganza was added to the programme, under the title of "Not if I know it," written expressly for Mr. Sothorn by Messrs. Madison Morton and A. W. Young.

ADELPHI.—"Notre Dame" still continues in favour here, and notably so, as it is a great success. It seems likely to hold its own until Christmas, when perhaps a change may take place in the bill. "Fantisticuff," a comic ballet, terminates the evening's amusement.

QUEEN'S.—Mr. and Mrs. Rousby in "Joan of Arc" draw crowded houses. The piece is most successful, and is received nightly with great applause.

VAUDEVILLE.—At this popular theatre there is performed to crowded houses—"A Fearful Fog," "Tweedie's Rights," "The Orange Tree and the Humble Bee," and "Bubble and Squeak."

BRO. HENRY GRIFFITHS, W.M.-elect of the Kennard Lodge, No. 258, will be installed as the W.M. at the lodge meeting to be held at Clarence Hotel, Pontypool, on Monday, June 26, 1871, at 5 p.m.

WHILST we congratulate ourselves on the improved state of public opinion on the subject of food adulteration, it is our settled conviction that, to promote really useful legislation, a collateral knowledge of the laws of other countries is absolutely necessary; the more so as the paternal governments of Continental kingdoms adopt a wise system of controlling these matters, with a minuteness to which we are strangers. It seems to us that the favourite motto of "Live and let live" is carried too far in England; and many cases might be quoted in which "to let live" appears to be the very last thing that is contemplated.—Food Journal.

Bailey's Series of Practical Masonry.

We have read these works with great care and attention, and can unhesitatingly pronounce them to be all that can be desired. To the officers for whose especial benefit they are penned, viz., the W.M., the Secretary, and the Senior Deacon, they must be truly invaluable, while all—even the most experienced Masons—will gain instruction from their pages. The minuteness with which every detail is studied by our American brethren has frequently been the theme of our praise, and we may now add that in Bro. Bailey system and order have found a most eloquent interpreter. These volumes should be in the library of every Mason who studies the true interests of the Craft.

Piper on Poultry, &c.

Messrs. Groombridge, the enterprising publishers, of Paternoster-row, have done good service by the publication of these excellent handbooks, which may verily be said to exhaust the subjects upon which they treat. No pigeon-fancier or poultry-keeper can dispense with the knowledge to be gained from Mr. Piper's recorded experience, while "Carving made Easy" almost reconciles us to an attempted manipulation of the formidable delicacies depicted in this handsome and useful little volume.

FREEMASONRY & ISRAELITISM.

BY BRO. WILLIAM CARPENTER, P.M. & P.Z. 177.

VI.

We have traced the descent of the Anglo-Saxon race up to those peoples who dwelt in the countries bordering on the Euxine, and who, 500 years before the Christian era, were invaded by Darius Hystaspes; and who subsequently made a descent on the Roman Empire, and thence spread themselves throughout the greater part of Europe, including the British isles. The hasty glance which I have been compelled to take of their conquests and settlements, will not, as a more ample description would do, impress the mind with a sense of the vast benefits conferred on the nations by these migrations of the northern tribes. Herodotus, as we have seen, speaks of the Goths as a very superior people, in their moral character and habits, compared with the peoples by whom they were surrounded. And so speak all the writers who have devoted themselves to the study of the history of this branch of the Teutonic race. Their frugality, justice, honour, and chastity are preferred by a learned Roman to those of his own country; and their civil institutions were, as we should say, very advanced. Mr. W. F. Collier (Great Events of History) says, "In spite of their rude dresses of skin, and their clattering brogues, over which fell in clumsy folds their wide trousers, strapped round the ankle with a leather thong, we recognise in the Goths a race of men capable of high polish, and fitted for great deeds. They were honest and freehearted; and among them the Romans saw what they looked for in vain among themselves—modest and virtuous wives, each the centre and light of a home, where parents and children lived united in sweet domestic love. Let us thank God that many lands of modern Europe have inherited the good old Gothic home." Russell (Modern Europe) says they were "simple and severe in their manners, unacquainted with the name of luxury. Hardened by exercise and toil, their bodies seemed inaccessible to disease or pain; they sported with danger, and met death with expressions of joy. Though free and independent, they were firmly attached to their leaders. Nor were these their only virtues. They were remarkable for their regard to the sanctity of the marriage vow, their generous hospitality, their detestation of treachery and falsehood." Their institutions, too, were eminently adapted to foster and secure personal and political liberty. Their primitive government was a kind of military democracy, under a general or chieftain, who had sometimes the title of king. But the authority of these chieftains was extremely limited. They led the people in time of war, but, that over, they sank down to the level of other chiefs; or, at most, their authority consisted rather in the privilege of advising than in the power of commanding. In looking at their government and customs, we are strongly reminded of the Israelites, in the time of the Judges. "Wherever they seated themselves," says Sir William Temple, "they left a constitution, which has since been called, in most European languages, the States, consisting of three orders—noble, ecclesiastic, and popular—under the limited headship of one person, with the style of king, prince, duke, or count." Feudalism universally prevailed. The land was public property, for which services were due to the State—to the king as the representative of the State by the great holders of land, in the first instance; and then, through them, by the subordinate holders; every one rendering his services to him who was immediately above him, until it reached the throne, which itself was supposed to be held by the grace of God, as expressed in the voice of the people. Robertson (Hist. Europe) says, "It was a fundamental system of feudal policy, that no free man could be subjected to new laws or taxes, without his own consent. In consequence of this, the vassals of every baron were called to his court, in which they established, by mutual consent, such regulations as they deemed most beneficial to their small society; and granted their superiors such supplies of money as were proportionate to their abilities, or to his wants. The barons themselves, conformably to the same maxim, were admitted into the supreme assembly of the nation, and concurred with the sovereign in enacting laws, or in imposing taxes." According to the early policy of the Anglo-Saxons, each of their villages was divided into ten wards, or petty districts, called tythings or decanaries, as their leader was denominated a decanus or tything-man.

The Teutonic orders of knighthood were orders of men who, sacrificing personal ease and all expectation of personal gain, went forth to avenge wrong and relieve the oppressed; and cherishing the most courteous and chaste regard for women, and reverence for religion. With them, the sword was consecrated by religion, to be wielded by the most punctilious honour in support of morality. Nor was the Teutonic league less remarkable for the furtherance and protection of commerce. Spreading its ramifications throughout Europe, it brought together the productions of India, the manufactures of Italy, and the equally useful commodities of the North. It cleared the rivers and all other great thoroughfares of the predatory bands that had invested them, and made their alliance to be courted and their power to be dreaded by the greatest of monarchs. To them we owe also the guilds in town and city, in which those of the same craft or occupation associated together for mutual assistance and protection; several guilds being again combined in burgh-corporations, in which again we find the representative principle that characterised all their institutions.

Unlike the Celts and most other peoples, the reflective faculty of the Anglo-Saxons predominates over the imaginative. Deliberate and cautious, but progressive, they have steadily advanced in political, civil, and religious freedom. With them, discovery and invention have gone hand-in-hand; and the arts and sciences of civil life, as also the fine arts, which minister to the craving of the imagination, and so tend to refine and elevate the taste and manners, are by them being introduced into all the nations of the world.

"From such ancestors," says Sharon Turner, "in the course of twelve centuries, a nation has been formed, which, inferior to none in morals and intellect, is superior to all others in the love and possession of useful liberty; a nation which cultivates, with equal success, the elegancies of art, the ingenious labours of industry, the energies of war, the researches of science, and the richest productions of genius. . . . The invasions of the German nations destroyed the ancient governments, and political and legal systems of the Roman empire, in the provinces in which they established themselves. . . . A new literature and manners, all productive of great improvements, in every part superseded the old, and gave to Europe a new face, and to every class of society a new life and spirit." In this view of the character of the Anglo-Saxon race we have the concurrence of the French Roman Catholic Professor of History, the Abbé Milot (Pref. Elements of Hist. Eng.) After giving a summary of the principal epochs in English history, he observes: "Let us add the detail of those laws, successively established, to form a rampart of liberty and lay the foundation of public order; the progress of letters and sciences, so closely connected with the happiness and glory of states; the singularities of the English genius, profound and contemplative, yet capable of every extreme; the interesting picture of parliamentary debate, fruitful in scenes, the variety and spirit of which equally strike us. The reader will easily conceive that this history is unparalleled in its kind. In other countries, princes and nobles fill the entire theatre; here, men, citizens, act a part which is infinitely more interesting to men."

Wonderful, indeed, appears to have been the providence of God in the leading forth of this extraordinary people, who are destined to become the civilisers and saviours of the world. The hand of God is clearly to be seen in the history of the Anglo-Saxon race, whose antecedents, under the guidance of that same Providence, had made them the fitting instruments for this wonderful and beneficent work. Reviewing the history of this people, we are forcibly reminded of God's promise to Israel (Isaiah lx.) :—

That I may be glorified,
The little one shall become a thousand;
And the small one a strong nation:
I, the Lord, will hasten it in due time.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF KENT.

The annual festival of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Kent was held in Dover on Wednesday se'nnight, for the first time during fifteen years, and, notwithstanding the unfavourable weather, was attended by nearly three hundred Freemasons—almost every lodge in the county being represented. The festival was held in the Refectory Hall at the Priory—a place peculiarly adapted for the purpose. It had been elegantly decorated with trophies of flags, &c., and at one end of the room there was a large design containing the inscription, "May Freemasonry flourish in all parts of the Globe." What with the regalia, &c., from Lodge 199 (Dover) the Refectory presented a very attractive appearance.

Viscount Holmesdale, the Provincial Grand Master of Kent, arrived in Dover by the mid-day train on the South-Eastern Railway, and was received at the station by Bro. Wilson, the Worshipful Master of Lodge 199, and Bro. Adamson, P.M. His lordship proceeded to the Refectory in a carriage drawn by two greys, with postillion, and he was received at the entrance of the Priory by the Provincial Grand Officers and nearly 300 brethren.

The business of the lodge was immediately opened with proper Masonic ceremonies, and was proceeded with. The following gentlemen were appointed Provincial Grand Officers for the ensuing year :—

Bro. Colonel Warde ... Senior Warden.
" Dr. Hunter, Margate Junior Warden.
" Thorpe, Ashford ... Treasurer.
" Ed. Wates, Gravesend Secretary.
" Hall, Canterbury ... Asst. Secretary.
" Wilson, W.M. 199 ... Sword Bearer.

The lodge, at which Major Dickson, M.P., was present, was adjourned whilst the brethren attended divine service at St. Mary's Church.

At half-past one most of the brethren who had assembled at the court, dressed in their regalia and various orders of office, headed by Lord Holmesdale, as the Provincial Grand Master, left the Priory, and marched in procession to St. Mary's Church, where a special service was held. The centre portion of the church was reserved for the Masons, while the galleries and side aisles were filled with a general congregation.

The service was full choral. The Rev. Canon Puckle intoned the prayers in admirable style. The Psalms for the day were the 41st and 105th. Bro. the Rev. G. W. Sicklemore read the first lesson, and Bro. the Rev. Robinson the second. The anthem was Boyce's "Great and marvellous are Thy works," and was sung in splendid harmony by the choir. The hymn before the sermon, taken from "Hymns Ancient and Modern," was—

Come, gracious Spirit, Heavenly Dove,
With light and comfort from above.

Bro. the Rev. W. A. Hill, St. Peter's, Maidstone, and Provincial Grand Chaplain, preached the sermon.

The preacher took for his text the first verse of the 5th chapter of the 2nd Epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, but eternal in the heavens." He commenced by saying that on this their anniversary festival, on this day of their solemn meeting, when the members of the mystic Order of Masons met together for counsel, to take stock of their position, and drew nigh together unto the sanctuary to offer up prayer and praise, to obtain the blessing of God upon their present and future work, they might improve the occasion by keeping prominently in sight the changes which might soon take place in the earthly state of some or of all present, and so look up above to the seat of those foundations, the mystic builder of which was God. The speaker then gave a lengthy detail of the wonderful creation and attributes of man, remarking what frail creatures we were in ourselves, and how liable we were for a sudden departure from this world. What he had just said would be realised, perhaps, by many there that afternoon. The keepers of the mortal house would tremble, the muscular arms would wither, and the David who, with a single stone from the brook, could hurl his pellet straight for the centre, would scarcely be able to raise a cup of water to his lips. Yes, the strong man, with energy and activeness, would gradually lose animation and vigour as he looked out of the window to see always a bitter frost; the landscape would be deadened in its beauty, imagination would vanish, and he would say to himself, "I'm old, and must shortly die." Let us, then, wait calmly, and serve our God while we had time, while we carried our heads erect, walking in the path of duty, with the admiration of wise men. Whatsoever we did, let us do it with all our might. The text set forth that while our body was our temporal home, and while the framework of our body was weak, we had a home above that consoled us for it. St. Paul was eminently qualified as a learned man to teach others. Having the gift of the Holy Spirit breathed upon him he could give double comfort to those who were in trouble. His preaching was a literal theatrical show of what power the Gospel had which he proclaimed to all the world. The chapter preceding the text was a remarkably graphic description of St. Paul and his companions, and what they underwent. The greater our trials were in this world so much greater would be our glory in the next—things that were seen were temporal, things that were not seen were eternal. St. Paul and his companions were not solicitous about their own houses, but they were desirous not to be found unfit for their spiritual life. Again, the human body was elegantly made. Don't let us speak meanly of the house in which our spirit was contained. No; it was wonderful. The entire frame of man was wonderful. The sight was admirably placed on either side of the face. No sooner were the windows opened than they took in everything with ease and rapidity. The foot had well been termed an admirable contrivance; nothing like it was to be found among other living creatures. As for the hand, there was no greater curiosity to be found in the world. Then look as well to man's heart and brain and muscles. David, the inspired Psalmist, when looking at his his body, could not help exclaiming, "How wonderful," &c.; and he had never looked into the wondrous structure of man the same as our anatomists of the present day had. He would ask, then, when looking upon ourselves did we not see to some extent the depth of the love of our Maker, and it caused us to exclaim, "Great and marvellous are Thy works Lord God Almighty." We therefore thought not meanly of our temporal body. But, admirable as it was, it was only provisional—it was only for a time. It was intended to fall—it must fall to ruins—to set free a bird from its cage, its tenants for an eternal world. Here, then, was there not comfort in the words of St. Paul? We gathered from his teaching that whenever that change might take place, for us who remained faithful there was a house, not made with hands, built up for us eternal in the heavens. The preacher then likened our bodies to the tabernacle in the wilderness—on the constant move for a better land, and added, when the doorway was shut and the curtains drawn together, and our spirit taken home, there should come the reconstruction of our bodies by an Almighty hand. The house should be no longer perishable, but in a state for eternal and celestial life. At present the best of men wore garments of mourning; in heaven all would have robes of light, magnificent, clean, and fit for the noble society of that beautiful place. No few words from him could paint the picture of the glories there; nor did he intend to attempt it that afternoon. At that moment the human will should lose its proneness to opposition, and become one will subdued to God. Then should the spirit bow to its Heavenly origin—cleave to the eternal spirit of God, and the soul should become elevated and purified. We might see in prospect these individual changes—the drowsiness of age, sadness, weakness, and infirmities. All of these trials must come upon us. We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, to be each one judged according to the works we had done in the flesh. Let him then solemnly ask them in that ancient sanctuary, where they had been kindly invited to hold their service that day, what were the feelings of all present? Did a gloominess come over them? He hoped not. But to his Masonic brethren he would address a few special words. To those whose boast was that they were the true illuminators of the earth, who professed to be living stones in the Grand Temple above, and who had a craving after the highest influences of the Holy Ghost, he would put the question, "What was their state? Were they making progress or not?" They had heard the solemn charge and address made to them that day. They had heard the Bible solemnly proclaimed as the book in which they were told their duty to God, their neighbour, and themselves. They had been told to implore his aid in all their undertakings, and look up to Him in every emergency. He asked them whether they really felt these things, or passed through them as mere forms and ceremonies? Did they measure their religion by their morals? Did they see in all the Masonic emblems levels and squares, that ladder which was Christ, and which connected earth with heaven, and made the way for man's passage from earth to heaven? Did they try to give up the evil of their own hearts? Were they more advanced and more fit to meet their final end than they were at their last festival twelve months ago? If not, they were retrograding and going back. Let him convince them that, without personal holiness, they would never attain everlasting life. They must forgive him for putting such bold questions, because they had been asked in all affection towards them. Let them all turn to Him who died for all men. He entreated them to ponder the text, and make it their consolation. The good things promised us were not for the idler, but for the strenuous and diligent worker. In conclusion, he would say they had already made an appeal to the brethren in behalf of the holy cause of charity. He appealed to them again on behalf of the schools of that parish, as well as for their Masonic Charities. He knew they had in another place already contributed £200, but such a powerful body, with 33 lodges and 1447 members, must do more. He felt sure they would be true to themselves, and true to their keystone. May each one present hold fast to the faith, and win that crown that was laid up in store for the righteous.

The preacher then descended from the pulpit and returned to the altar.

The choir sang with great taste from "Hymns Ancient and Modern" the hymn

Pleasant are thy courts above,
In the land of light and love.

A collection was then made at the conclusion of the service, and nearly £20 was procured, which sum will be equally divided between the Dover St. Mary's School and the Masonic Charities.

After church, the procession was reformed and returned to the lodge, business being at once resumed. On the motion of Viscount Holmesdale, a vote of thanks was passed to the Prov. Grand Chaplain for the excellent and eloquent sermon he had preached that morning. Lord Holmesdale also proposed, and Bro. Dobson, Deputy Prov. Grand Master, seconded, a vote of thanks to the Rev. Canon Puckle for kindly granting the use of St. Mary's Church; and a vote of thanks was awarded to the President and Council of the Dover College for the use of the Refectory. Bro. Snow, P.M., submitted a resolution, to the effect that the thanks of the Prov. Grand Lodge be presented to Bro. Wates for his valuable services as P.G. Secretary during a period of eleven years. The proposer of the resolution passed a high compliment upon Bro. Wates for the excellent and valuable services he had rendered to Freemasonry in Kent during the years mentioned, and expressed a hope that the token of acknowledgment it was suggested he should receive should be accompanied by some more useful testimonial. The motion was seconded, and carried unanimously. A grant of fifty guineas, proposed by the R.W.P.D.G.M., was given to the Boys' School, in order to make the Deputy Grand Master of the province a Vice-President, and a gift of £20 each to Bro. Norris, Tyler of Lodges 784 and 1026, and Bro. Knight, Tyler of Lodge 199 (Dover), the former brother having been a Mason for 58 years, and the latter 59 years; and the sum of £32 was also given towards the erection of a tablet to the memory of the late Bro. J. S. Keddell, P.M. 158. The original sum proposed for the tablet was £25, but the estimate was £32, and it was considered a greater mark of esteem that the lodge should pay the whole expense. Bro. Knight, it may be mentioned, richly deserves the gift awarded him. He formerly served in her Majesty's Packet Service, and was superannuated some years ago. He is very highly esteemed both in and out of the lodge.

The business of the lodge having terminated, it was closed in due form, and the brethren proceeded to the Royal Oak Hotel, at the Assembly Rooms of which establishment the breakfast had been served in the morning to about ninety gentlemen, and there the banquet now took place. Viscount Holmesdale presided, and as many as 173 brethren were present. The banquet, we believe, was an elaborate one, and reflected the greatest credit upon Bro. Phillipott, whose arrangements were excellent, and were much praised by the guests. He was ably assisted by Bro. George, of "The Angel," Charlton.

The first toast proposed from the chair was that of "The Queen and the Craft," which was followed by "The Prince and Princess of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family." These toasts, we need scarcely say, were duly honoured.

Viscount Holmesdale next gave "The Health of the Marquis of Ripon, the Most Worshipful Grand Master of England," and adverted to the services rendered by him to the country, which had so recently led to the Government conferring additional honours upon him. The noble marquis had not only, his lordship remarked, done the State some service, but had done great service to the Craft, by whom he was greatly esteemed and respected.

"The Health of the Earl of Carnarvon, Deputy Grand Master of England," was also given by the Chairman, who said that his lordship had acted for the Marquis of Ripon at an important time, and had always shown a disposition to do whatever might be required of him in the interests of Freemasonry.

Bro. Dobson proposed "The Health of the noble Chairman, Viscount Holmesdale."

Lord Holmesdale, in reply, said that, much as he prized the honour of filling the position he then occupied, he still thought that they might select some one who was far more capable for the post than himself. However, so long as they continued to repose confidence in him, he should be only too pleased to do whatever was in his power to promote the interests of Freemasonry. (Applause.) He adverted to the success of the meeting that day, and made several complimentary references to the excellent arrangements of the local committee, the suitability of the Refectory for their purposes, the large attendance of the Craft, and the satisfactory manner in which everything had gone off. He concluded by proposing "The Health of the Provincial Grand Officers."

Bro. Colonel Ward responded.

"The Health of Bro. Dobson, Deputy Prov. Grand Master," was given in very complimentary terms by Viscount Holmesdale.

Bro. Dobson responded in a characteristic speech.

At this stage of the proceedings Viscount

Holmesdale left the room, having to leave Dover by the 7 o'clock train.

Bro. Dr. Marshall, Past Prov. Grand Senior Warden, was unanimously voted to the chair on the departure of Viscount Holmesdale, and under his presidency the proceedings were continued.

"The Visitors," proposed by the Chairman, was responded to by Bro. Stock (Folkestone); and the "Masonic Charities" by Bro. Binckes, Secretary of the Masonic Boys' School—a gentleman who has laboured with considerable success in behalf of the charitable institutions connected with Freemasonry, and who, in the course of an eloquent speech, referred to what had been done in the past, described the present position of the three charities with which they were concerned, and advocated their claims to support.

The Chairman then gave "The Health of Bro. Wilson, the Worshipful Master of Lodge 199 (Dover)." Dr. Marshall observed that Bro. Wilson had attained his present high position in the Order in consequence of the confidence which the members of the lodge reposed in him. In every office he had held Bro. Wilson had given that strict attention to his duties which had led to his elevation, and which set so good an example to every member of the Craft.

Bro. Wilson having briefly responded,

Bro. Coram, P.M., proposed "The Health of the Assistant Secretary, Bro. T. A. Terson," and said that all who had observed the energy with which that gentleman had performed the arduous duties of his position had the very highest opinion of his future prospects in the Craft, and were convinced that his efforts had contributed in a large measure to the success of the day.

"The Ladies," proposed by the Chairman, and responded to by Bro. Richie, met with a favourable reception.

"The Health of Dr. Marshall" was proposed by Bro. Wilson, W.M., who said that he had the pleasure of serving with Dr. Marshall in various offices, and had always found him animated by a thorough Masonic spirit, and his being selected as Grand Senior Warden at the last provincial gathering was evidence of the attention he had paid to his Masonic duties.

Dr. Marshall having responded,

Bro. the Rev. T. B. W. Briggs gave "The Host and Hostess," and made a very eloquent speech with reference to the events of the day.

Miss Palmer, Mr. George Perren, and Mr. Ralph Wilkinson sang at intervals during the banquet, which came to a close about ten o'clock.

The arrangements and decorations of the Refectory Hall reflect the greatest credit on the committee who undertook this important duty. The musical arrangements for the church and banquet were entrusted to the care of Bros. H. S. Boyton and J. O. Rees.

The comfort of the brethren at the banquet was cared for by several brethren of Lodge 199, who very kindly acted as Stewards.

The accomplished vocalist, Miss Palmer, who travelled from Bristol to sing at this festival, was unfortunately detained on her journey, and did not arrive until several brethren had left the banquet.—The Dover Telegraph.

AN election for the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex was held at the Guildhall on Saturday last, the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor presiding. The choice of the Livery was in favour of Bro. F. W. Truscott, P.M. No. 1 and P.G.S., as senior Sheriff, and Bro. R. Young, P.M. Wisbeach Lodge, P.G.W. Cambridgeshire. The latter brother has appointed Bro. Thos. Beard, P.M. 101, as his Under Sheriff.

BRO. SEYMOUR SMITH, Organist of the Crystal Palace and other lodges, is announced to appear at the Sussex Hall, Leadenhall-street, E.C., on Wednesday, the 12th July, in a new musical and descriptive entertainment, for the benefit of a brother who is in distress from sickness and loss of employment. The Stewards invite the co-operation of Brethren and Companions to render the entertainment successful in a pecuniary point of view.

In all affections of the joints, gout, rheumatic and scrofulous attacks, by which the health of many is daily drained away, Holloway's Ointment and Pills will afford indescribable relief. ## GRAND LODGE OF ROYAL ARK MARINERS.

The summer meeting of the Grand Lodge of the Antient and Honourable Order of Royal Ark Mariners was held at Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, W.C., on Wednesday, the 21st June. The M.W.G.C. Bro. Morton Edwards took the chair, having Bros. J. O. Oxland, Inspector-General, as G.S.W.; F. W. Koch, Inspector-General, as G.J.W.; M. A. Loewenstark, G. Scribe; M. Emmanuel, G.S.B.; G. F. Henly and T. W. White, as G.T.B.; H. Massey, G. Steward; E. H. Thiellay, George Neall, J. Stevens, P.N.'s; Funkenzstein, G. Guardian; Laing, G. Warder; Verry, Clayton, and others.

After the G. Scribe had read the minutes, the report of the Grand Council was read. It stated that they had been unable to arrange with the Mark degree as several important points had been left out of the draft treaty submitted to this Grand Lodge by the Grand Mark Lodge, in pursuance of the projected attachment of this degree to the Mark, and the proposed details of which were arranged for at a meeting held between the representatives of the two bodies. They had no alternative but to reject the treaty, leaving it, however, for negotiations to be reopened. It also stated that the Order had greatly increased, and that its affairs were in a much more prosperous state than twelve months back.

Bro. Emmanuel moved, and Bro. Oxland seconded, that the report be received. (Carried.)

Bro. Emmanuel, though he did not approve of the language employed in the report of the General Board of Grand Mark Lodge with reference to the Ark degree, "a body styling themselves the Grand Lodge of Royal Ark Mariners," thought the matters in difference between the Grand Lodges could be easily arranged. He had no hesitation in predicting that this language would be altered, for it really was nothing more than a slip of the pen. The Grand Lodge of Royal Ark Mariners was really acknowledged by the Grand Mark Lodge, because its members were allowed to retain their clothing and their rank as present and past Grand Officers. He did not blame the Grand Mark Master so much as he did others, for when he explained to the Grand Master the objection there was to the phrase employed, he as much as gave him (Bro. Emmanuel) to understand that he thought those words ought to be altered. But the two Grand Bodies were certainly in opposition on another point. Grand Mark Lodge had issued a circular to lodges stating that henceforth warrants for working the Ark degree would be granted by Grand Mark Lodge to the lodges under its jurisdiction. Grand Mark Lodge had formed treaties of alliance with three other supreme bodies, and this Grand Ark Lodge would, depend on it, however they might try, have strong opposition, as four men were stronger than one; and the four orders together, would use every means, pleasant or unpleasant, to swamp this Grand Lodge. He asked, therefore, whether it would not be better to postpone the adoption of this report, and give time to see whether the differences could not be reconciled, and he thought every endeavour should be made to come to terms. He therefore moved the postponement of the adoption of the report.

Bro. Oxland, S.G.W., seconded the motion.

Bro. James Stevens would remark that the Ark degree would be much more likely to progress under the auspices of an established Grand Lodge like the Mark than by its own unaided efforts. There seemed to have been some extraordinary misconception between the governing powers of the two Grand Bodies. It had been distinctly understood that the two bodies would amalgamate. It was with such an expectation that he himself had joined the Ark degree, and he would not have done so otherwise. Now it would be wrong that he and others should not only be disappointed but placed in direct antagonism to the Order to which they had lately become attached. If the two bodies were opposed, the members were placed upon the horns of a dilemma, as they could not pay fealty to both bodies. There was no desire on the part of Grand Mark Lodge to prevent a settlement, but it appeared to him that there were some small matters which had been allowed by members of the Ark degree to insert themselves to the disturbance of the arrangement, the basis of which was that both Orders should join together. The words which had been objected to, though injudiciously used, were not meant as a slur on the Ark degree. If in former times there had been as much wisdom among Masons as there was now, there would not have been at the present time so many independent jurisdictions. He was speaking now as a member of the Order—as one called to its councils—and as such he thought they should weigh every circumstance in the matter, but he could not help feeling that there were some little points which were obstructing the way to a settlement. (No, no.) He was glad to hear it; the impression he had was shared in by many others, and he thought it was a pity that trivial points should stop the way. He was anxious to see the Ark degree spread, and as Past Master of as famous a lodge as existed anywhere, he should wish it to be spread if this could be done consistently with his obligation to the Mark. Conciliatory measures, he thought, should be adopted, and he should with that view support the amendment.

Bro. Emmanuel said that if the report were adopted there would be no door left open for conciliation.

Bro. T. W. White asked whether the best course would not be to adopt the report, omitting the objectionable clause.

Bro. A. D. Loewenstark was not so much surprised at the views of Bro. Oxland and Bro. Stevens, but he was greatly surprised that Bro. Emmanuel should go so deep into the matter as to talk of this degree falling to the ground through Grand Mark Lodge granting warrants to work the degree.

Bro. Emmanuel had not said anything about the degree falling to the ground—he had said it was not possible for one man to stand against four, his meaning being that as Mark Lodges were so much more numerous than Ark, the former would make four members to the latter's one.

Bro. A. D. Loewenstark asked whether they were to be intimidated by the Grand Mark Masters, should they be threatened? Grand Mark was going in opposition to the Ark, because the Ark was working prosperously. Grand Ark Lodge had done more wonders since it had been established than Grand Mark could boast of doing during the five years of its existence.

Bro. Oxland would not for one moment sanction Grand Ark giving up its rights. But he thought that as far as possible the two bodies should come to an amicable settlement.

Bro. A. D. Loewenstark had no objection to that, but do not let them be intimidated. This Ark body was the only holder of the charter, and they had no right to be threatened in order to give up their rights to the Grand Mark Master. The Grand Mark Lodge had no thought of working the Ark degree until Bro. Morton Edwards revived it and re-opened the Grand Lodge of Royal Ark Mariners. When Bro. Morton Edwards asked him to take the degree he hesitated, and told him he could do nothing of the sort until he found what Grand Mark Lodge would do, for as a Grand Officer he must see whether his duties to the two bodies clashed. When he found the Grand Mark Master had taken the degree and was elevated with several of the Grand Officers of the Mark, by the Grand Commander, Bro. Morton Edwards, he no longer hesitated, for he believed in upholding the dignity of the one body he was upholding the dignity of the other. He maintained that Grand Mark Lodge had no right to extort—he would use that word—from Royal Ark Mariners, by such irregular means as they had tried, those privileges which were the Ark Mariners' own property. The draft treaty was sent in with insults, thrown upon the Ark Grand Lodge, and how could it be expected it would be agreed to?

Bro. Koch said that the treaty differed materially from the terms originally agreed to at the joint meeting.

Bro. Stevens thought it right that the members should know in what respect the treaty had been altered.

The M.W.G.C. said that the meeting must be adjourned for that purpose.

Bro. Stevens asked why?

The M.W.G.C. said because the treaty was not in the room.

Bro. Stevens thought this extraordinary, as it would have satisfied the brethren.

The M.W.G.C., before putting the motion, would like to say a few words, as there appeared to be differences of opinion. This Grand Lodge was re-opened a little more than a year ago, and Grand Officers were appointed; and there was nothing in its management to call for interference on the part of another body. It had been in existence for nearly 100 years—the charter was a very valuable document, giving power to work the degrees of Mark Man, Mark Master, and many other degrees. Finding this to be the case, being a Mark Master, and not wishing to interfere with his duties to Grand Mark Lodge, he showed this to the Grand Mark Master, who stated that the G.M. Lodge wished to work the R.A. Mariner, and he had a good deal of correspondence on the subject with the G.M.M., which could be referred to if necessary, and it was agreed to that, if he (the G.C.) undertook to give up all claim to work the Mark, the G.M. Lodge would not interfere in any way with the R.A. Mariner Grand Lodge. Very soon after, it appeared that the Grand Mark were not satisfied to work on that basis, and the members of the G. Lodge of R.A.M. were induced to agree to a treaty by which all was to be settled. This treaty the G.C., on behalf of the R.A. Mariners, and the G.M., on behalf of the Mark Degree, signed and sealed respectively; and he (the G.C.) considered that all was settled, as it was brought up to the Grand Mark Lodge and carried. However, four months after, at the next Grand Mark Lodge, the G.M. Master advised that this treaty be thrown out, as some Ark Mariners claimed to work the degree also. As the Grand Lodge of R.A. Mariners was now improving its position, and in consequence of the hostile attitude of the G. Mark Lodge in reference to the degree, a meeting was held, and at that meeting it was settled that the G.M. Master should be elected as G.C. of R.A.M., and that a committee be appointed to settle differences between them, and his being enthroned as G.C. of R.A. Mariners. They met, and it was considered again that the preliminaries of a treaty were settled; but before this committee could meet, a letter was published in THE FREEMASON stating that the G.M.M. had nothing to do with the Grand Lodge of R.A. Mariners, and did not intend to have anything to do with it; and the Grand Mark Lodge issued a circular offering to grant warrants to Mark Lodges to work the Mark Degree, and stating that the Grand Lodge of R.A. Mariners had ceased to exist, when, in fact, it was nothing of the kind, for the joint committee was then about to meet and discuss the question of attachment. He (the G.C.) had offered that, although the Grand Lodge of R.A. Mariners had the right to confer the degree of R.A. Mariner on any Master Mason, it should not be conferred on any one but a Mark Master; but while matters were under discussion the Grand Mark Lodge were encroaching as much as possible, and he distinctly stated that the G. Mark Lodge never had the power to give the Royal Ark Mariner, and never would have, except through them, or as long as they kept in the field. But even recently, the Grand Mark Lodge had issued a circular to say that they would give the degree of Ark Mariner at half the price of our fees. The Grand Lodge of Royal Ark Mariners had existed for nearly a century before them, and in 1793, the charter says, H.R.H. the Duke of Clarence accepted the Grand Command of the Order. The Grand Lodges then existing sanctioned their proceedings, and they were living in harmony with them, and these powers had never been ceded.

Bro. Emmanuel objected to the letter of Bro. Portal, the G.M. of the Mark Degree, being introduced, as it was before the joint committee on the treaty.

Bro. Stevens wished to know whether there was anything in the background which prevented matters being arranged? The M.W.G. Commander would excuse him, but had he not stipulated that he should be Past Grand Master of the Mark?

The M.W.G.C. : Certainly not.

Bro. Stevens was glad to hear it, as such a report had gone abroad, and it was only just to the M.W.G.C. that it should be contradicted. The belief was that some personal feelings, irrespective of the true interests of both Orders, had stood in the way.

The adoption of the report was then agreed to be deferred until the next meeting.

Bro. Oxland suggested that the draft treaty should be printed, and a copy sent to all the brethren.

Bro. Emmanuel proposed, "That a committee of three be appointed to meet the Grand Master of the Mark to arrange the differences, and in the event of these not being arranged, that the draft treaty, and the cause thereof, be laid before the Grand Lodge at next meeting."

Bro. Oxland seconded the motion, which was carried.

Bro. J. Stevens proposed that Bro. Morton Edwards, M.W.G.C.; Bro. Major Finney, R.W.D.G.C.; and Bro. J. O. Oxland, V.W.G.S. Warden, be the committee.

This was seconded by Bro. Koch, G.J.W., and carried unanimously.

The following are the principal of the Grand Officers of the year, the rest not being filled up yet by the M.W.G.C., who retains his position in consequence of the G.M. Master declining to fill the throne of the R.A.M. :—

R.W. Bro. Major Finney	...	D.G.C.
V.W. " Oxland	...	C.S.W.
W. " Joshua Nunn	...	G.J.W.
" " G. Lambert	...	G. Treas.

" " G. Neall	...	} G. Stewards.
" " J. W. Barrett	...
" " E. H. Thiellay	...
" " Funkenstein	...

The Grand Lodge was then adjourned, and the brethren proceeded to a first-class banquet, at which the M.W.G.C. presided. After the cloth was cleared, the hour being somewhat late, the usual toasts were briefly given and responded to, and the Warden's toast brought a very enjoyable evening to a close.

[With reference to the above, we are authorised by Bro. Cubitt (named as G.J.D.) to state that he repudiates all connection with the so-called G.L. of R.A.M., he having received the Royal Ark degree in the St. Mark's Lodge, No. 1, to which is attached the mother lodge of Ark Masons of England, and which has never owned Bro. Edward's authority.—ED. F.]

ALTON TOWERS HORTICULTURAL SHOW.—The first show of the present season is to be held at Alton Towers on Tuesday, July 4th, and it is expected to be one of the most successful shows yet held in these beautiful gardens, as the entries for flowers and vegetables are very numerous. The object of these shows is not generally known to the public. The movement was commenced for the purpose of encouraging cottage gardening amongst the cottagers and small tenants on the Alton estate, and the funds realised by the show are devoted to the prizes, the principal portion of which are awarded to the cottagers by Lady Shrewsbury on the afternoon of the show. Especial interest will be attached to the gathering on Tuesday, July 4th, from the fact that a party of forty-one American Knights Templar, who are now travelling through Europe under the personal arrangements of Messrs. Thomas and John M. Cook, are invited by the Earl of Shrewsbury to a reception at Alton Towers on the day in question. The party is composed of generals, statesmen, Doctors of Divinity, successful merchants, &c., &c., who are travelling through Europe as tourists. Their visit to Alton is of especial interest, it being on the anniversary of American Independence.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

St. Thomas's Lodge No. 142.—On Saturday, the 17th ult., this old lodge held an emergency meeting at Radley's Hotel, Blackfriars. Bro. J. L. Thomas, W.M., presided, supported by his officers. After the minutes of the last regular lodgy had been read and confirmed, a ballot was taken for a gentleman to be initiated, but owing to severe illness at the last moment he was unable to attend. Ballots were then taken for Bros. Captain Brennan (P.M. 263, Ireland), and C. I. Paton (S.W. St. David's, 393), who were duly elected joining members. The W.M. then appointed as Steward of the lodge, Bro. Haxell, who had been elected a joining member at last lodge, late of Maybury (969). The W.M. then said he had received notice from the proprietor of the hotel that the house was about to be pulled down, and that steps must be taken to find accommodation elsewhere. A committee was appointed for the purpose, and an expression of great regret was made at leaving such excellent quarters. The name of a brother having been proposed for joining, and that of a gentleman for initiation, the lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to banquet. Amongst the visitors were the V.W. Bro. John Hervey, P.S.G.D. and G. Sec. of England; Bros. Finney, 255; Naylor, 88; Goodliffe, 484, Ireland; Levander, P.M. 507; &c., &c. The usual toasts were given, and Bro. Hervey's name was mentioned in eulogistic terms by the W.M. in giving the toast of "The R.W. Deputy Grand Master and the rest of the Grand Officers;" and the G. Sec. in responding took occasion to say that though at all times it gave him great pleasure to visit the various lodges, yet never more so than when present at one like St. Thomas's, full of old traditions and having members truly imbued with the spirit of Masonry. The W.M., in responding to the toast of his health, did so in his usual happy manner, remarking that any one might be proud of ruling a lodge so ancient as this over which he had been called to preside. It was a happy and united lodge, and although it did not have many initiates, it could claim to have many joining brethren, which he thought, as they must first be visitors, spoke well for its character. He should, therefore, propose "The Health of the Joining Members," and said he hoped it would be a toast in the future. In naming them, he said it had given him great pleasure that evening to appoint Bro. Haxell to the only office at his disposal, although only elected a joining member from the Maybury Lodge at the last meeting; but not being present, he now coupled his name with the toast, which was most cordially received.—Bro. Haxell, in responding, said that he had joined them with great pleasure, particularly as he was proposed by, he might say, both by their Secretary and Treasurer, and seconded by the whole lodge. To be sure, the I.P.M. had reminded them that a joining member must first have been a visitor, but this was met by the Secretary's stating that he (Bro. Haxell) had done so for some six years past, and this alone was the drop of bitterness in his election, for now he felt that never again could he rise in his old character and return thanks for their visitors. However, the best thing they could do was to steadily invite visitors, and doubtless they would find one more worthy than himself for the task. Expressing his thanks on behalf of himself and the other joining members, and to the W.M. for his appointment to office, he concluded with a comic song he had written for the occasion, and which was received with shouts of laughter.—Bros. Ibbetson and Naylor returned thanks for the visitors, expressing the great pleasure they always felt at being in St. Thomas's Lodge, where they were at all times so cordially received. The Past Masters', Treasurer, Hon. Secretary, and Officers' healths having been drunk and duly responded to, the Tyler's toast brought a very enjoyable evening to a conclusion.

PROVINCIAL.

LANCASTER.—Lodge of Fortitude, No. 281.—The regular meeting of this lodge was held on Wednesday, the 14th ultimo, at the Masonic-rooms, Athenæum, Lancaster. The chair of K.S. was occupied by the W.M., Bro. J. Daniel Moore, M.D., G.S.B., &c., who was supported by the following officers and members: W. Bro. John Hatch, I.P.M.; Bro. B. Mills, as S.W.; Bro. W. Fleming, S.W.; W. Bro. E. Simpson, P.M. and Sec.; Bros. E. Airey, S.D.; John Bell, as J.D.; J. Harrison, I.G.; Beeley, Tyler; R. Taylor and Sumner, Stewards; J. L. Whimpray, King, and Kelland, P.M.'s; Acton, Bailie, Bradshaw, and Heald, Visitors: Bros. Jesse Banning, W.M. 343; J. Harger, James Taylor, and James Bolton, of 1051. The lodge was formally opened, and the usual business transacted. The W.M. reported that on the previous Wednesday he had attended the Grand Lodge of England, on which occasion the M.W.G.M. gave a glowing description of the enthusiastic reception he had met with at the hands of our Transatlantic brethren. In accordance with the notice in the summons convening the meeting, the W.M. then gave a short address on the ballot in our lodges, explaining its forms, uses, and applications, together with remarks on the manner in which its employment was sometimes misappropriated. The address was listened to with great interest by the brethren, and a cordial vote of thanks was recorded. The ballot was taken for a candidate for initiation, who was then declared to be duly elected. At the request of the W.M., Bro. Jesse Banning, W.M. 343, raised Bro. James Taylor, F.C., to the degree of M.M., the same ceremony being undertaken by Bro. John Hatch, I.P.M., for Bro. Jas. Bolton, F.C., the traditional history being given by the W.M., and the working tools presented in a very effective manner by Bro. J. L. Whimpray, P.M.

ORDERS OF CHIVALRY.

RED CROSS OF CONSTANTINE.

Roman Eagle Conclave, No. 6.—A regular meeting of this conclave was held at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street, on Saturday, the 24th ult. V.E. Sir Kt. C. H. Rogers-Harrison, 1st G. Herald, M.P.S., presided, supported by Sir Kts. Rev. W. B. Church, M.A., Viceroy; H. G. Levander, M.A., G. Historiographer, P.S. and Treas.; A. A. Pendlebury, K.G.C., Rec.; W. C. Lucey, M.D., S.B.; W. Carpenter, W. B. Hambly, A. C. Morton, W. Worell, D. R. Adams, and T. L. Fox. Sir Kt. Bulmer was elected a member, after which Bro. Pedro J. Marin, of the Lodge of Sincerity, No. 174, was regularly admitted and installed a knight of the Order. The conclave was then closed, and the chevaliers adjourned for light refreshment, there being no banquet upon this occasion.

KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

Mount Calvary or Early Grand Encampment of England.—This old encampment celebrated St. John's Festival on the 24th ult. The conclave met first at the Masons' Hall Tavern, Mason's-avenue, when Comp. Charles Jacques, of the Mount Sion Chapter, No. 19, was duly installed, after which the members proceeded to the Mitre Hotel, Hampton Court, where the banquet was held. The E.C. Sir Kt. W. Stone, 30°, presided with his accustomed geniality, and was supported by P.E.C.'s F. Binckes, 30°; W. Paas, 18°; J. G. Chancellor, 18°; J. Stohwasser, 18°; S. Rosenthal, 33°; and by Sir Kts. Colonel Burdett, 32°; Major E. H. Finney, 31°; John Hervey, 30°; E. Baxter; C. J. Morgan, 18°; D. M. Dewar, 18°; Raynham W. Stewart, 18°; R. Wentworth Little, 18°; E. H. Finney, jun., G. T. Carter, T. W. Distin, C. Jacques, and two or three other members and visitors.

INSTRUCTION.

A most interesting meeting—the first, we are informed, of a series which in the best interests of the Craft we hope to see imitated in every direction—was held in the East of London on Friday evening, the 23rd ult. The Doric Lodge of Instruction, under the able preceptorship of Bro. T. J. Barnes, has long held its meetings at Bro. Scurr's, the Three Cranes, Mile End Road, on Friday evenings, and on the same evenings the United Pilgrims Lodge of Instruction, under the no less able preceptorship of Bro. John Thomas, has met at Brixton. The members of the respective lodges have occasionally exchanged visits, but in an irregular manner, and the two chiefs having "put their heads together," resolved to carry out, if possible, a series of meetings which should be attractive and profitable to their brethren, and which began under most favourable auspices on the above-named evening.

Fifteen brethren of the United Pilgrims Lodge having pledged themselves to attend and respectively work a Section, the Doric Lodge met in force under the presidency of Bro. Cundick, the W.M. appointed for that occasion. There were present of the Doric Lodge of Instruction, Bro. Cundick, Barnes, Clayton, Verry, Mortlock, Scurr, Austin, John Stevens, Appleby, Berry, J. Davis, S. Davis, Benjamin, Fountain, Shorey, Lacey, Wildash, Kinnell, and others; and of the United Pilgrims Lodge of Instruction, Bro. John Thomas, Jas. Stevens, E. Worthington, H. Smith, M. S. Larlham, T. H. Pulsford, Martin, Ross, J. Noke, Robards, Poore, Welsford, Geider, Frances (Sec.), Hodges, Lilley, Catherwood, Madden, Overall, Wright, and others.

Bro. Cundick, of the Doric, the W.M., was supported by Bro. Thomas, of the United Pilgrims, as S.W., and each of these brethren was surrounded by the members of his lodge.

After the usual openings, the business of the evening commenced, and the Fifteen Sections were most ably worked by members of the United Pilgrims Lodge, in the following order:—

- First Degree: 1st Section, Bro. H. Smith.
- " 2nd " " T. H. Pulsford.
- " 3rd " " H. Martin.
- " 4th " " J. Noke.
- " 5th " " R. Rolands.
- " 6th " " T. Poore.
- " 7th " " M. S. Larlham.
- Second Degree: 1st " " H. Ross.
- " 2nd " " James Stevens.
- " 3rd " " F. Geider.
- " 4th " " E. Worthington.
- " 5th " " H. F. Hodges.
- Third Degree: 1st " " T. Welsford.
- " 2nd " " H. Frances.
- " 3rd " " John Thomas.

The absolute perfection with which both the W.M. and the brethren worked may be gathered from the fact that the time occupied was less by half an hour than is generally considered necessary for that purpose.

The thanks of the two lodges were accorded to Bro. Cundick for his able services as Section Master, and the thanks of the Doric Lodge was enthusiastically voted to the brethren of the United Pilgrims Lodge of Instruction "for the truly fraternal feeling evinced by them in so promptly accepting the invitation to work the Fifteen Sections in the Doric Lodge of Instruction on this occasion." This was supplemented by the unanimous election of the fifteen brethren before named as honorary members of the Doric, and further by a special vote of thanks to Bro. John Thomas for his assistance in securing the success of this "novel and pleasing Masonic reunion."

Bros. Thomas, Frances, and Stevens replied on behalf of their lodge to these compliments, the first-named brother expressing his pleasure at the result of his agreement with Bro. Barnes, and the hope that the return visit of the Doric to the United Pilgrims would be as agreeable to that lodge as this had been to the U.P.'s, and Bro. Stevens hailing the movement as a step in the right direction towards securing that uniformity of working which he had, in conjunction with others, so strenuously advocated, and the agitation in respect of which, as far at least as he was concerned, was not yet abandoned.

The lodge was then closed, and on the invitation of the Doric brethren, the members of the United Pilgrims partook of supper, and after hearty reciprocations of esteem and good-fellowship, took their places in the "break" which had brought them to the meeting, and drove away in time to reach their respective homes in the south of London before the "witching hour of night."

A more agreeable Masonic meeting we have never yet attended, and the practical usefulness of such a gathering is so self-evident that we feel assured the good example thereby set will be followed by our various metropolitan and provincial lodges of instruction. We shall be pleased to insert in our columns (as requested) a notice of the date fixed for the return visit of the Doric to the United Pilgrims, in order that other members of the Craft may have an opportunity of forming their judgment in respect of the movement.

MASONIC FESTIVAL at ULVERSTON.

On Tuesday last, the festival of St. John the Baptist was held by the Lodge of Furness, No. 995, at the Temple in Theatre-street, Ulverston, Lancashire. After the usual lodge business had been disposed of, the brethren adjourned to the Queen's Hotel, where they sat down to a magnificent supper, provided by Bro. Clayton. The table was most elaborately set out. Four large épergnes, filled with the choicest hot-house flowers, graced the centre of the board, while bouquets and plates of fresh fruit were disposed tastefully at intervals. The bill of fare comprised every delicacy in season, as the following will show:—

- White Soup. Soup Julienne. Salmon.
- Roast Lamb, Roast Beef, Dressed Veal, Spring Chickens, Tongues, Ham, Pies,
- Boiled Lamb (caper sauce), Lamb à la Grette.
- Puddings, Tarts, Cheese Cakes, Volouant, Creams, Jellies, Blanc Mange, Savoury Omelettes.
- Strawberries, Cherries, &c.

After the tables were cleared, the usual loyal and patriotic toasts were duly honoured—those of the Queen and Royal Family being especially acceptable to the Craft from the fact that Her Majesty is the daughter, niece, and mother of Masons.—Bro. S. H. Jackson responded for the Army, Navy, and Volunteers.—The M.W. the Grand Master of England (the Marquis of Ripon) and the officers of the Grand Lodge received very flattering attentions on the part of the Worshipful Master, Bro. T. Dodgson, who occupied the chair.—The R.W.P.G.M. Sir T. G. F. Hesketh, Bart, M.P., and D.P.G.M. Lord Skelmersdale, and the rest of the officers of the P.G. Lodge of West Lancashire, was proposed by Bro. Barber, P.M., in a humorous way, provocative of good feeling. He incidentally remarked that undoubtedly to dine Masonically was to dine correctly, for at all their assemblies they could boast that, with a refined and elaborate repast, they combined a rational and harmonious conviviality unattainable by any other body of men.—Bro. J. Case, P.M., in very complimentary terms, proposed the W.M. of No. 995, whose zeal, energy, and ability had astonished them all during his year of office.—Bro. Dodgson responded, modestly referring to his efforts for the good of Masonry.—The Wardens and officers of the lodge was proposed Bro. R. Pearson, who spoke in high terms of their efficiency, upon which the working of the lodge so much depended.—Bro. J. H. Matthews, S.W. responded.—The W.M. proposed the Past Masters, which was responded to by Bro. J. Case, P.M.—Other toasts and sentiments followed, the most noteworthy being the "Visiting Brethren," to which Bro. the Rev. W. A. Blake responded, "Musical Friends," and the "Host and Hostess." It is almost superfluous to state that the toasts were all received with that enthusiasm and esprit de corps known only to the initiated. The assembly broke up after spending a most enjoyable evening.

A choice selection of appropriate music was performed in the course of the entertainment in a manner most creditable to those who took part, and which elicited repeated bursts of applause and encores.

REPORT of Dr. Arthur Hill Hassall, Analyst of the "Lancet" Sanitary Commission, Author of "Food and its Adulterations," &c., &c., on Mayar's Semolina: "I have carefully tested, chemically and microscopically, the samples of Semolina sent by Messrs. L. Mayar & Co., 36, Mark Lane, London, E.C. I find them to be perfectly genuine, of excellent quality, and eminently nutritious. They contain a very large percentage of nitrogenous matter, chiefly gluten, and are far more nutritious than any other food, such as Arrowroot, Tapioca, Sago, Corn Flour, Farinaceous Food, ordinary Wheat Flour, or any of the Cereals in use as food in this country.—(Signed) ARTHUR HILL HASSALL, M.D., London."—Highly recommended by the Faculty for Infants, Invalids, &c. Makes delicious Pudding, Custards, Blanc Mange, &c. After a trial no family will be without Mayar's Semolina.

The GRAND LODGE of QUEBEC.

The recent recognition by the Grand Lodge of New York of the rights of Quebec is a great fact, and one which speaks more for the approaching success of the "Seceders," as they have been foolishly called, than all the rhetoric which could be employed in their behalf. With a prudence which we can quite appreciate, under the circumstances, many American Grand Lodges—and amongst others that of New York—have hitherto refrained from the adoption of any definite decision upon the Quebec question, in the fond hope that the quondam Grand Lodge of Canada—now more fitly termed, Ontario—would itself take the initiative of generosity, if not of justice, by holding out the right hand of fellowship to its younger sister of Quebec. But the hope thus naturally awakened soon passed away in view of the cold, unfraternal attitude assumed by the leading brethren of Ontario at their last Annual Communication. By a large majority, they determined to re-assert their repudiated authority over the neighbouring province, forgetting in this illogical resolve that Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, which are also integral parts of Canada, already possessed independent Grand Lodges, and that the right of the Quebec Masons to a similar autonomy was equally unquestionable. The result has been, that the doubt and indecision which may have prevented immediate action on the part of several American Grand Lodges have at length entirely disappeared. Recognition has followed recognition in rapid succession, and the adhesion of the Grand Lodge of New York now places Quebec in hearty and cordial communion with more than three hundred thousand American Freemasons. We congratulate our brethren of Quebec, and especially their chivalrous leader, M.W. Bro. Graham, upon so important a result. We also congratulate them upon the patience, the forbearance—nay, the courtesy—which they have invariably shown to the Ontario brethren throughout a long and very trying ordeal. The germs of victory were perceptible to all but prejudiced eyes in those noble traits alone, for right and truth and justice can ever afford to wait in imperturbable majesty the coming of an inevitable triumph. Even as the really powerful swimmer cleaves the waters with scarcely perceptible stroke, so advances, silently but swiftly, the cause that is righteous and just and honourable. Nor in our congratulations to Quebec must we forget the pleasing fact that THE FREEMASON, at an early period in the movement for independence, welcomed the Grand Lodge of Quebec into the sisterhood of legal Grand Bodies with no mercenary warmth or insincere affection. It is not for us to boast of any peculiar perspicuity over our neighbours, but guided by the instinct of honour, and the dictates of common sense, we at once espoused the cause of Quebec, and we now rejoice to see it victorious.

Another source of gratification to which we may fairly allude is that our opinions on the subject reflected the opinions of nine-tenths of the English Fraternity, despite the incoherent babblings of certain ignominious scribes, whose pretentious prophecies of defeat are now remembered only to be derided. But it must also be borne in mind that as we were actuated by no venal hope, neither were we inspired by any partisan venom. Looking at the conflict from a distance, unconnected, save by the common tie of brotherhood, with either one side or the other, we were enabled to form an impartial judgment, and from that judgment, when formed, we have never wavered.

The verdict of America has now been substantially delivered, for New York, with its seventy-five thousand members decides the scale, and it is a verdict which not only confirms our views, but ratifies for ever the independence of the Grand Lodge of Quebec. There may still be—we hope there are not—brethren in Ontario who may affect to pooh-pooh that verdict, and to reject the inexorable logic of events. To such men it were vain to address arguments, but to the great body of the Craft in that province we say that their recognition of Quebec must be immediate and unconditional; the time has gone by when it would have been a graceful act, but it is still a just one, and, moreover, a debt whose payment will brook no further delay. All English Masons are anxious that a thorough reconciliation should take place between the two rival Grand Lodges of Canada, and all desire to see the prosperity of the Royal Art assured by the adoption of such a noble and fraternal course.

The advice which we gave many months ago has acquired irresistible force by the march of events: "Let by-gones be forgiven and forgotten, and let every section of the Canadian Craft unite in the good work of disseminating the true principles of Freemasonry, and advancing thereby the real happiness of the whole human race."

THE PALESTINE EXPLORATION FUND.

We have very great pleasure in again commending the labours of the zealous Palestine Exploration Committee to the support of the Fraternity. From the last "Quarterly Statement" issued by the Society, we learn that a new expedition will leave England early in the autumn, under the command of experienced engineer officers, and that the co-operation of the American Association, in the general progress of the work, has been happily secured.

The results of the Palestine explorations, so far, have been so varied and so important that the whole civilised world will regard with interest the renewed work of discovery, but we may add that funds are urgently required to enable the Society to continue and complete an exact survey of the Holy Land. Freemasons, being especially interested in aught that tends to illustrate the venerable traditions of the Craft, will, we trust, respond liberally and at once to the appeal now being made for aid, and thereby associate the name of the Order with an undertaking which reflects the utmost credit upon the learning and perseverance of all who are engaged in the sacred research. Next week we will give a few extracts from Bro. Captain Warren's interesting paper entitled "The Plain of Philistia."

WE regret to learn that the Earl of Zetland is suffering from a severe attack of illness. In common with the whole Craft, we hope soon to hear of his lordship's restoration to health.

WE beg to call the special attention of our readers to the advertisement of the Summer Fête of the Boys' School, when, if they attend, we can promise them a real treat.

Multum in Parbo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

BRO. BUCHAN AND HIS CHALLENGE TO BRO. HUGHAN.

I shall be most happy to give reasons for my statement that the "true history of Freemasonry in this country is the history of an operative body."

No one has a right to make assertions in a public print without being prepared and willing to furnish evidence in support of his opinions so expressed, and I therefore accept the challenge for proof which Bro. Buchan has thrown out. Let me, however, first understand what I am called upon to prove. Is it that the Freemasonry of and since 1717 is a descendant of operative Freemasonry, and, in fact, was a revival of the operative body of former centuries? I have before objected to the term "our Freemasonry," and do so now, as it is not specific enough.

The foregoing question, if answered by Bro. Buchan in the negative, will be affirmed by
W. J. HUGHAN.

Let me suggest three letters on the question: Bro. Buchan, as the negative supporter, to write first, as he is the challenger; and therefore unless his objections are stated, I can only say ditto to what I have already advanced.

THE RED CROSS OF CONSTANTINE.

I am obliged to "Lupus" for his courteous explanation, but regret to find that the information at his command is so meagre. The jewel of the Red Cross of Babylon is a seven-pointed star, with a circle in the centre enclosing a cross; around the circle is the legend "Magna est veritas, et prevelabit," and the ritual of the degree is essentially Jewish. We must, therefore, seek for another solution of the query: Was the old Masonic Red Cross Order over which H.R.H. the late Duke of Sussex undoubtedly presided, and which was as unquestionably a Christian order, identical in essentials with the present Red Cross Order of Constantine, which is a Christian organisation; or can it be traced to a different origin, involving a different ritual and ceremony? However, as I have been requested to examine certain papers connected with the present Red Cross Order of Constantine, I hope soon to make known the results of my investigations to, all interested in the question.

THE HIGH DEGREES.

The only information I feel disposed to give, in print, has possibly not reached you, as it has not appeared. Regarding the 1722 mention of the K.H., I must remind "333" that I merely mentioned the assertion of Dr. Leeson for it; I suspect the authority, for this reason—that the degrees seem identical with the reformation of Paschalis' rite of 1754 by St. Martin.

JOHN YARKER.

THE GRAND CONCLAVE OF K.T.

This treaty is almost sure to be reversed next Grand Conclave, to meet in December. It is stated in Lancashire, most positively, that Bro. Wm. Birch, a member of Grand Conclave Committee, Registrar of Lancashire, and a leading member of the Palatine Rose Croix, suppressed the agenda papers sent to him for distribution. They reached no hands in Lancashire. If this is not so, Bro. Birch can contradict the statement in your paper; if it is so, it will form a subject for enquiry elsewhere.

LIBERTAS.

EARLY USE OF THE WORD "COWAN."

I promised my friend Bro. William Carpenter to search for the earliest records of the Craft that mention the word "cowan," and the following is the result of my hurried examination:—In the Freemasons' Magazine, vol. 15, page 90, Bro. D. Murray Lyon states that "The Court of the Massoun Tred of the Ludge Kilwyning, holdin in the upper chamber of Hew Smythe, at the croce of Kilwyning, the xx. of Decr., 164 . . . Item, they hev ordanit that Hew Mure sall not work with ony Cowane in tymes cuming, under the pain of xlb. monie;" and this worthy historian also presents another quotation, dated xix. Dec., 1646: "The glk day Hew Mure in Kilmarnock was discernit to pey to the box ten lb. monie of unlaw for working with Cowans, contrarii to the Acts and Ordinances of the said Ludge," and one dated January 28th, 1647: "Guhilk day, Robert Guhyt, masoune in air upoune oath disclymed all working with the Cowains at any tyme."

The word "cowan," then, according to operative masonry, signified what is now called a clandestine or irregular mason; in other words, one who had obtained a knowledge of the craft without conforming to the general laws of the order, as to serving an apprenticeship of seven years, being elected a "Freeman," and such like. Notwithstanding, however, such irregularities, "Cowans" were sometimes permitted to work with recognised craftsmen under certain restrictions. Bro. Lyon furnishes some most interesting evidence on this point from the minutes of the "Ayr Squareren Incorporation." The first instance refers to a Fellow Craft Cowan, and the remainder relates to Master Cowans:—"Feb. xxiii, 1593: Glk day George Gibsoun, indwallar of this burgh, meanit himself to the deakin and the craft concerning his weaknes and povertie, declaring to thame he nicht nocht pay muckill, bot wald doe his deutie so far as he nicht to pay that thing he nicht for his fredome to the craft. The deakin and craft foirsaid havand compasoun upon him, hes entert the sd. George to work as brother and fallow of craft in the toun. All work he can work excep hewin work, hewing and laying exceptit. For the glk libertie the sd. George hes payit to the deakin and craft instairlie the soume of fyve pundis and ane pitcher of aill. Guha hes maid his aith to be leill and trew to the craft, as use is." April xxi., 1671: ". . . Farder, the sd. Deacon and tred gives libertie to the sd. William Smyth to work cowan wark, he heving noe libertie by thir presents to work hewen work of the mason tred." Oct. xxiii., 1677: ". . . James Kenadie was admittit and receavit freeman with the tred, with libertie to him to work wright work and cowand work, and not to work any hewin wark; and hes maid aith as befoir to observe the actis and statutes of the tred." Nov. xi., 1688, William Mardock was admitted in like manner, and at the same time Robert Hunter, "Wright and Cowand, was received journeyman with the Tred."

These instances will suffice (out of many we have from Bro. D. Murray Lyon) to illustrate the use of the word "cowan" in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries.
W. J. HUGHAN.

THE EARL OF CARNARVON ON MONARCHY.

At page 348 we find the Right Honourable the Earl of Carnarvon, Deputy Grand Master of England, observing: "In conclusion he advised them to cling to our old institutions, and foremost among them all, the ancient and hereditary monarchy." Allow me to add the following as a comment upon this:—"Freedom of thought is always greater under a monarchy than under the rule of jealous and narrow-minded citizens, and it was unknown in the ancient republics. The Greeks accomplished great things without it, thanks to the incomparable force of their genius; but we must not forget that Athens had a complete inquisition."
W. P. B.

THE ROYAL ORDER OF SCOTLAND AND ITS ANTIQUITY.

At page 377, "An Edinburgh Member of the Order" tells us: "The facts related to every one on his admission are, that 'King Robert Bruce, immediately after the battle of Bannockburn, founded the Royal Order of Heredom of Kilwinning, reserving to himself and his successors on the throne of Scotland the office and title of Grand Master.' Now, this, instead of being a fact, or 'facts,' is simply neither more nor less than a little recently-manufactured legend, in which the names of 'Robert Bruce' and 'Bannockburn' have been made use of in order to impose all the more readily upon Scotsmen, and give clat to the proceedings.

The story about the "chair" is also another little trick; clever, no doubt, but none the less a trick for all that.

The Grand Lodge of Scotland was instituted in 1736, as its documents prove, but where is there any evidence of the existence of the "Royal Order," then? far less to boast of such an imaginary antiquity as A.D. 1314.

VISIT OF AMERICAN FREEMASONS TO EUROPE.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR BROTHER EDITOR,—Your most excellent article on the above subject will be endorsed by the Craft throughout Great Britain and Ireland. London is the centre for a grand reception to be given to our friends—say at the Freemasons' Tavern, in July. Whatever you at the "head quarters" of the Craft may decide on, will have the support and co-operation of the country Craftsmen; and I feel sure many would do their best to be present on so interesting an occasion.

We shall be delighted to hold out the right hand of fellowship, and give them all a right hearty welcome to our country, and as American Masons—the representatives of United States' Grand Lodges, and gentlemen bearing the "tongue of good report," and also well known at home as skilful Craftsmen—we shall rejoice in any way to promote their happiness and comfort while they sojourn among us.

W. J. HUGHAN.

June 24, 1871.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—However anxious we may be to greet the American Knights Templar who are at present in this country, not only as brother Masons but also as members of the Religious and Military Confraternity of the Temple, I fear it is out of the question that they can be received into any regular encampment in England.

In your impression of June 24, you give a report of a body styling itself the "Girvan Encampment of Knights Templar," meeting at Glasgow, who has, "as the only encampment in Scotland that holds regular monthly meetings," invited the Transatlantic brethren to visit them, &c. This invitation apparently has been accepted by the American Knights, who by this visit recognise and acknowledge the Girvan Encampment.

Now, on reference to the "Cosmopolitan" Calendar, we find the only bodies of Knights Templar who hold of the Grand Priory of Scotland are the Priory of the Lothians, the Priory of Ayr, and the Priory of Glasgow (now dormant), and we do not find the self-styled Girvan Encampment. Nor is it a legal and regular body, but one of a highly spurious character which has never been in connection with the Grand Priory of Scotland or with the Chapter General of the Order. We understand there are many illegal encampments in Scotland, for the most part in the neighbourhood of Glasgow, who confer the degree so called, for eighteen pence or half a crown.

There is also a clandestine encampment at Aberdeen, styled the "St. George Aboync," which works under a charter of Fr. Alex. Deuchar, G.M., and which separated from the Grand Priory in 1845 or '46. This encampment is of a very different standing to the spurious bodies in the West of Scotland, and numbers in its ranks several of the most earnest and worthy brethren of Aberdeen. Among others, we may mention the Prov. G.M., the D. Prov. G.M., P.G.S.W., &c., &c. We understand this encampment will shortly give in its allegiance to the Grand Priory and become regular, the want of recognition by the Grand Body being the only bar to this encampment being accepted as legal.

The pseudo-encampments in the West of Scotland are of a very different character, and their members of another calibre altogether. Nor can they ever be acknowledged, nor can any of the so-called Sir Knights be received in an English encampment or a Scottish Priory until they pass the ballot and are regularly installed as Royal Arch Masons.

We are therefore much surprised that the American brethren should not have been better guided than to be allowed to make this first step a faux pas. We sincerely trust the report may be non-confirmed, but should it be true, we call upon the Knights Templar of Scotland and England to decline to admit the Americans as Knights Templar, however they may welcome them as Master Masons or R.A. Companions.

Apologising for thus intruding on your space,
I am, dear Sir and Brother,
Yours fraternally,
FRATER † CAROLUS.

WHAT IS THE SUPREME GRAND COUNCIL OF THE 33°?

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The S.G.C. of the 33°, sitting at Golden-square, London, arrogate to themselves the claim to supersede all Masonic authority above the Master Mason's degree in this country. They totally ignore the time-immemorial Conclaves of Templars and their privileges, and in their published by-laws have placed them under ban.

For such extensive assumptions the S.G.C. 33° ought to have unimpeachable title of the validity of their own rite. I propose in this and some following articles to investigate their claims and titles. In the present letter I will confine myself to that claim which they draw from the alleged statutes of Frederick the Great of Prussia; as the S.G.C. 33° have recently advanced this basis by publishing a copy of the original Statutes in Latin, and English.

There is no external evidence whatever in favour of these statutes, and they bear upon their face the evidence of forgery, and are dated May 1st, 1786.

The first view that strikes one is the impossibility of the astute Prussian king ever having sanctioned, in unknown mediocrities, the power to create Knights, Princes, and Sovereigns, for a few guineas. This itself is fatal to all favourable conjectures upon the subject; but we have the most express testimony to rebut even the fancy of such an absurdity.

Mirabeau, in his "Histoire de la Monarchie Prussienne," shows that Frederick was never even Grand Master of the Craft. "L'Histoire Secrete de la Cour de Berlin," 1789, vol. 1, p. 215, shows that Frederick was imbecile on the 1st May, 1786, and had been dying for five months. These following authorities show that Frederick was never a member of the fancy degrees of the "Empire of the East and West," which it is well known had spread to Berlin soon after their invention in 1758, and that, though Frederick was cognisant thereof, he yet disapproved of the same:—Vassal, "Essai historique sur l'institution du Rit Eccossais," &c., Paris, 1827, p. 19; Lenning, "Encyclopedie"; "Hermes," vol. 1, p. 296, 1212; Chemin Dupontes, "Memoire sur l'Eccossisme;" Clavel, "Histoire Pittoresque," p. 206 (et passim); Schlosser, "History of the 18th Century;" Mitchell, "History of Masonry," p. 116; Albert Pike, "Address to the Grand Lodge of Louisiana," 1858; Findel (various articles); Folger, "History of the A. and A. Rite," New York, 1862.

The so-called Frederick Statutes [Frederick Dalcho?] are first heard of from Charleston, after 1802. What relations had Frederick of Prussia with Charleston, that his doings were known only there? All other countries, be it noted, have accepted the A. and A. Rite from Charleston, which derived it from the 25° and 29° of the Empire of the East and West, introduced into America by Bro. Morin, a travelling Jewish merchant. Let any man imagine, if he can, that Frederick of Prussia would have authorised such an agent to create "Sovereign Princes"! Take the Statutes themselves: at pages 38 and 39 of the recent edition of the English S.G.C. 33°, are four signatures and five blanks; at pages 46 and 47, the signatures are the same, but given in different order, with the same number of blanks. The explanation which is propounded for our acceptance of this mysterious identity of names and blanks, with diversities of position, is that the blanks have been produced by the attrition of sea-water and other perils of the elements! But the waves of ocean must have been very discriminating to efface the same signatures where the blanks exist, and to leave the same names surviving, although the order in the two cases is varied! It is unnecessary to draw conclusions, as the dullest intellect may judge such facts.

Thus far one of the claims: they have others which shall be investigated hereafter. This letter will sufficiently show that one of the most important of their positions is based upon forgery and fraud, and there is plenty of further proof if it is required.

Fraternally yours,
Manchester. JOHN YARKER.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR,—I am informed that members of lodges in Holland use short swords or dirks as part of their Masonic clothing in lodge. One such presented himself at a lodge in Liverpool recently, and was admitted after being duly vouchered for. As a matter of courtesy, the Master did not ask him to leave his sword with the Tyler outside the lodge. The question now arises, as a matter of practice, should such a case occur again, is the Master of a lodge bound to refuse a foreign brother admission, unless he takes off his side arms?

The old sections in the first degree says that the candidate was deprived of m—ls that he might bring nothing offensive or defensive into the lodge, as the principles of Masonry forbidding the one render the other unnecessary.

The modern edition of the sections is much to the same effect, viz., that he might bring nothing offensive or defensive into the lodge to disturb its harmony.

Does the above only apply to candidates, or is it equally applicable to members and visitors?

The favour of a reply in THE FREEMASON will oblige,
Yours fraternally,
Liverpool, 26th June, 1871. W.M. 724.

[In the earlier part of the last century English Freemasons wore their swords in the lodges, and the custom is still observed abroad. It is now tacitly prohibited in England, and visitors presenting themselves armed should be told that weapons are inadmissible in a Society dedicated to peace and fraternal affection.—ED. F.]

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

SIR,—I would feel obliged if you, or any of the brethren, would inform me if it is customary, at the installation of a W.M., where a banquet is held and the usual loyal and Masonic toasts are proposed, to leave out the retiring W.M. and officers?

I am, dear Sir and Brother,
A SUBSCRIBER.

[No. It is usual to couple the Immediate P.M.'s health with the toast of the P.M.'s during the year.—ED. F.]

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

SIR,—Will you kindly give me an answer to the following question? At the ceremony of installing the Master of a lodge, is the lodge raised to the third degree before the Master Masons retire; or only in the presence of the Board of Installed Masters and the candidate for the chair?

I am, Sir, faithfully and fraternally yours,
P.M. 1151.

Lostwithiel, Cornwall, June 28, 1871.

[The lodge is always opened or resumed (as the case may be) in the third degree before the M.M.'s retire.—ED. F.]

MASONIC SONGS TO POPULAR AIRS.

No. 1.—AIR, "Maggie's Secret."

In the days of old, when Earth was young
In all its golden prime,
When "the Light" in its earliest dawn was flung O'er the rippling waves of time;
Then man and man on the Level met,
And parted on the Square:
Ere class distinctions their barriers set
Around them everywhere.

As time rolled on, each passing age
New laws brought into play,
And we learn from History's ample page
How they strengthened, day by day,
Till man against man employed his skill
On a brother's fall to rise,
And those who had wrought the greatest ill
Were lauded to the skies.

But still through all, one golden link
Kept union with the past,
And made them pause in their course to think
As its light was round them cast;
It joined them to days that had long gone by,
It softened their passions down,
It chased the angry glare from the eye,
And turned aside the frown.

We Masons know that that golden chain
Our ancient Order binds,
And brings those bygone times again
To gladden doubling minds.
For when in Lodge our brethren meet,
They on the Level stand,
And the humblest Mason takes his seat
With the noblest in the land.

Then here's to the Craft, that binds us all
In a union strong and true;
Let every Mason respond to the call,
As Masons are wont to do,
May its power increase from day to day,
"Accepting" and making "Free"
Good men and true, and let each say,
From his heart: "So mote it be!"

WHAT IS SPURIOUS MASONRY?

The following is the letter to which we referred last week; it is necessary to add that we are not in any way responsible for the accuracy of its statements:—

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—On another page of this communication we beg to exhibit to you a copy of a circular referring to us, which has recently been addressed to the Irish Prince Masons; and, in doing so, we presume we are only carrying out the wishes of the authors of it by giving the paper every publicity.

We think we shall sufficiently answer the imputations cast upon us by giving a brief notice of the history of the rite to which we have the honour to belong, and under which, at the Jerusalem Chapter of Antiquity, Manchester (1786), we received the higher Masonic degrees; and afterwards by examining the claims of the system which has set itself in opposition to it. In referring to the authority under which these degrees are worked in Ireland, we shall endeavour to avoid the use of a single term which could be thought offensive, notwithstanding the fact that the circumstances of the case would justify us in employing strong language when speaking of those who, in their zeal to maintain the exclusiveness of their Order in this country, have in a manner forgotten their obligations to us as Master Masons, and have spoken of their brethren in words, not only harsh—not only unmasonic—but in some cases (we state it with regret) in a way that was ungentlemanly—an unpardonable offence, indeed, in those who, as Irish Rose Croix Masons, claim to be "gentlemen" par excellence.

In exhibiting the claims of the rites now practised in England, there is no necessity to go beyond the establishment of the Grand Lodge in 1717, and it is quite certain, from undeniable evidence, that the ancient English or (1) York rite has been in uninterrupted operation ever since. There is printed evidence in 1721 (2), 1724, and 1744 to show that a system of high-grade Masonry at that period prevailed, but was, perhaps wisely, repudiated by the modern Grand Lodge (3). The work of 1721 alludes to the higher mysteries of Christian Masonry, in Rosicrucian symbolic language, the pamphlet of 1724 to "the fifth order," and the work of 1744 to "three steps above Master Mason, (4) further stating that these were practised at York, London, and Dublin.

There existed in London in 1743, a "Provincial Grand Lodge and Chapter" of "Heredom—Rosy Cross," which at that date granted warrants claimed to have existed from "time immemorial," (5) and to have been instituted as an order by those Templars who fought for Bruce at Bannockburn. Upon this assumption of an antiquity of five centuries, the "Royal Order" claims to have originated the degrees of Rosæ Crucis, or Rose Croix, and this, and various other facts, connect these orders with the Templars, though the Rosæ Crucis embrace traditions from the ancient Theosophic brotherhood of the Rosy Cross. It is well known that the English Order of Templars could be traced back to the beginning of this century to the year 1740, and the close connection but separate nature of the Templar and the Kadosh, even at that time, can be proved. (6) The oldest document we have is a London one mentioning the following degrees:—Symbolic 3, Master Architect 1 [P.M.], Royal Arch 1, Rosæ Crucis, or Triple Cross, 1, HRDM TP 1, Kadosh Palestine, 1, Red Cross, Physical, Philosophical, and Moral.

On the Continent of Europe, the Chevalier Ramsay, 1728, advocated his own peculiar rite of seven degrees, and received, prior to 1736, the patronage of the Jesuit Chapter of Clermont, with which the exiled King James II. had been connected. In 1740 the Templar Order was practised by Field-Marshal Von Marshall and Baron Hunde ("Privy Councillor and proprietor of many estates"), crossed over to the French army at Brabant in 1743, and was there received a Templar (7). The Kadosh is said to have been established at Lyons in the same year.

In 1745 Prince Charles Edward Stuart was made a Scottish Templar at Holyrood, and in 1747 he granted to brethren in Arras, in France, a charter (yet in existence) as "King of Great Britain and in that quality S.G.M. of the Chapter of Heredom known under the title of Knights of the Eagle and Pelican, and since our misfortunes as Rose Croix" (the symbol of the Pelican feeding its young was used upon the banner of his father, the Chevalier St. George, in 1715). (8) Baron Hunde afterwards became Commander of the "seventh province of the order" (9) under the Stuart Prince, and propagated in 1754 a rite consisting likewise of seven degrees, of which we have 5th Rosy Cross, 6th Templar, 7th Professed Knight [Kadosh].

These facts are quite sufficient to prove the authenticity and antiquity of the Ancient Templar Rite of Seven Degrees; and we are expressly informed in the 32° of the modern "Ancient and Accepted Rite" that the Masonry of the Crusaders was confined to these seven grades, the last three of which were worked under the government of an Arch Chapter; but it was not until the year 1753 that the Ancient Masons in London started a separate organisation for the Arch degree of K.S. during the dormancy of the York Grand Lodge, which in 1780 resumed the working of the Templar. At this latter date the Camps of Bath and Bristol for a Grand Confederation under a "Charter of Compact," still existing, and bearing the seals of the Knights Rosæ Crucis, Templars, and Kadosh, and the Lodge of "St. George of Observance" at London practised a similar rite to that of Baron Hunde, and applied to the Royal Order of Scotland in 1782 for recognition in the degree of Rosy Cross.

In 1758, Pirllet, a tailor, and Lacorne, a dancing-master, invented a new and unauthorised rite of 25°, enabling them to confer the titles of Knights, Princes, Sovereigns, and even Emperors!! under the pompous designation of the "Empire of the East and West"!! The Sovereign of the Order, Chaillon de Joinville, gave a patent in 1761 to a Jewish merchant, Bro. Stephen Morin, to propagate the rite in the West Indies, where it was decided to adopt the uncertain name of "Knights of the (10) White and Black Eagle" (Templar colours) prior to the promulgation of the Statutes of Bordeaux in 1762, a Templar Order being interpolated between it and the Rose Croix. This new rite, there is no doubt, was formed upon the excellent principle of universal tolerance, but this tolerance introduced by Jewish brethren has altogether disappeared in this country. Bro. Stephen Morin granted a certificate in 1767 to Bro. Franchen, who founded a chapter, then of 29°, at Albany, New York; thence the rite reached Charleston, where, in a circular of 1802, issued by Bro. Dalcho, the K.H. is the 29° (11). It is, therefore, plain that it was subsequent to 1802 that the undoubtedly forged Statutes of Frederick the Great of Prussia were concocted. The present Supreme Council of Charleston honestly admit the fraud, which is proved by numberless authorities quoted by impartial historians (12). After 1802, one, Bro. Abraham Jacobs, a pedlar of degrees, travelled over America, and settled at New York in 1801, where he conferred by certificate the first 18 degrees upon Bro. J. J. Gourgas, clerk to a Dr. de la Motta. This Gourgas afterwards showed a patent in his own handwriting, signed by De la Motta, of the remaining 15 degrees, which enabled him to establish a schismatic Council; and in 1846, he being then a clerk on a boat trading with Liverpool, established the S.G.C. 33° of London, which continues a system of self-election, and gives the 33 degrees to any Master Mason.

We have seen that the old Templar Rite of seven degrees continued to be lawfully and regularly practised in England between 1721 and 1782, when it numbered at Bristol that eminent Mason Bro. Thos. Dunckerley, who was elected Grand Master of H.M.—K.H. in 1790, at which time was ranged under his banner (amongst many others) the following conclaves, then practising seven degrees of chivalry, which Bro. Dunckerley stated had existed as chapters of the rites, time out of mind; these were:—Observance, London; Redemption, York (whence, through the York Grand Lodge emanated, in 1786, the Jerusalem Conclave, Manchester); Baldwyn, Bristol; Antiquity, Bath (13). About this time the Irish Masons also conferred the Rose Croix degree under Templar authority (14), but to this we shall further on more particularly refer.

The official reports of Bro. Dunckerley, between 1790 and 1795, place the Rosæ Crucis degree before or after the Templar indifferently; but whilst giving the Templar epochs of the different degrees, he states that "the origin and history of the seventh degree, or Knights Kadosh, may not be written," and no minutes were allowed. This last degree (K.H.) is a Templar history, and was called the "Commander's Degree of Ne Plus Ultra"; and as the Grand Conclave in London was until 1850 composed solely of Commanders, it styled itself in all its circulars the "Grand Conclave of the Royal Order of H.R.D.M.—K.D.S.H.—Ne Plus Ultra."

The "Seven Steps of Chivalry," including Royal Arch, Templar-Priest, Palestine East and West, Rosæ Crucis, Kadosh, with other Commanderships, passed in 1796 to Baron Raneliffe; in 1806 to H.R.H. the Duke of Kent (acknowledged in Dr. Dalcho's circular as head of the K.H.); in 1809 to Judge Waller Rodwell Wright; and 1811 to H.R.H. the Duke of Sussex—who, after 7817, ceased all interest in the rite, and called no meeting of Grand Conclave. This want of government led the ancient premier conclaves to range themselves under a "Royal Grand Council of Ancient Rites, time-immemorial," the only untainted possessors of the high grades in the world; and under this body was, and still is, practised all the superior degrees of Masonry, and as far back as 1822 the 90° of the Order of Mizraim.

The state of affairs which we have described existed down to 1846, when Drs. Goss (alias Crucefix), Leeson, Nash, and Oliver, applied to the before-mentioned Bro. Gourgas to establish his rite in England. All these four brethren had received their high grades from the Templar Conclaves: Drs. Goss and Leeson were members of the "Cross of Christ" Conclave, London, and received the Rose Croix and N.P.U. 30° from Bros. Goldsworthy and Emly at a small tavern in Clerkenwell (15); Dr. Oliver from the Redemption, Hull; and the learned and worthy Dr. Nash from the Baldwyn, Bristol. (Bro. Nash was afterwards expelled by his confreres of the 33° for continuing his connection with his own ancient chapter!) It is evident that these four learned doctors could only have introduced the spurious rite of Bro. Gourgas by a breach of their O.B. as Templars, but this was of little account with ambitious men.

The doings of these destructive brethren met with no approbation from the Premier Conclaves, which had ancient power to confer all the degrees, and when the Antiquity, Bath; Baldwyn, Bristol; Redemption, York; Observance, London; Jerusalem, Manchester; and the ancient and regularly-continued chapter of H.M.—K.H.; after much delay and controversy were induced to unite themselves with Grand Conclave; they reserved to themselves all their original rights and privileges. Their system authorises the Templar Commanders to preside over all other degrees, and these dignatorial offices include the K—H., Grand Prince and Keeper of the Ancient Royal Secrets, Grand Inspector, &c., &c.

It was to afford these ancient conclaves relief that the Grand Conclave of 1850 passed the following law, Dec. 14th, 1866:—

"That in the case of any encampment of Knights Templar holding a warrant granted prior to 1791, and which warrant gives power to confer degrees not connected with the Order of Knights Templar and Knights of Malta, a warrant of confirmation shall, on proper application, be granted by the M.E. and S.G.M., assuring to such encampment all the powers it possessed under the original warrant, so far as the Orders of the Knights Templar and Knights of Malta are concerned, leaving the members holding such original warrant the discretionary exercise of the powers therein contained, so long as they are kept separate and distinct in every respect from the Order of Knights Templar and Knights of Malta."* * *

It is in accordance with this law that the loyal Templar high grade chapters have unanimously confederated under the Council of Ancient Rites, and continue now, as in time past, to confer the Rose Croix degree on all worthy Templar Masons, no matter from whence they come; but in confining the degree to those brethren, and the K—H to Past Eminent Commanders, it will be seen that they require a higher qualification for their honours than the S.G.C., which emanated from New York, for under their jurisdiction any Master Mason could have the 33°; and in the Scottish rite of thirty-three degrees neither the Royal Arch nor Templar is included.

We have shown the claims of the Royal Grand Council of Ancient Rites, and have proved its undoubted authority to confer the Chivalric and Philosophical degrees, which were worked in the Masonic world at the end of the last century, and we shall now very briefly refer to the systems under which, for some ninety years past, the higher grades of Masonry have been conferred in Ireland.

The first Prince Mason's Chapter in Ireland of which we have any authentic information is that which is now known as the Kilwinning, but which formerly claimed to be the Grand Prince Mason's Chapter, and which, in accordance with its title, asserted until a comparatively recent period its authority to issue warrants to hold subordinate chapters of Rose Croix. This body had no warrant, but acted according to the inherent right which was in the Templars possessing the Rose Croix to confer it on others. With the assistance of an expelled member of that chapter the "Original" was formed, and the bitter feuds which resulted from its formation will be fresh in the memory of many of the brethren who receive this circular. In 1825, Fowler, Bryant, and McGill received from Charleston a warrant to confer the 33 degrees of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite (16); but this warrant was a dead letter even as recently as 1862, for in that year we find the constituents of the Council of Rites to be of the most mongrel character, embracing "representatives" from the 33°, 32°, 31°, 30°, 28°, 18°. Rite of Mizraim (17), &c.; and the chaos in which the degrees were so faintly shown by the anomalous position in which our Most Noble Grand Master was placed by being, at one and the same time, the head of three rites, which had, in their spirit and traditions, nothing in common—the Ancient Craft Masonry, the A. and A. Rite of 33 Degrees, and the Order of Mizraim of 90°. Since then, the possessors of the degrees above the 18°, as such, have ceased to be members of the Grand Council of Rites; and the Sovereign Grand Inspectors General of the 33° have confined their exertions to the supervision of the degrees above the 18° which are worked in this country, namely, the 28th° and 30° (18). The principle of excluding all but Templars from the Rose Croix is utterly opposed to the statutes of the Rite (19) under which this Council pretends to work, as are, indeed, a variety of rules which are set down in our Ahiman Rezon for its government; for, according to the regulations of the Charleston Council, provision is made for having in its Supreme Body brethren who do not profess the Christian religion, and such brethren are excluded altogether from the Rite here. Indeed, so lame and impotent has the action of its supporters been in Ireland, that the older Prince Masons here know nothing whatever of the degrees between the 3° and 18°, if we except the degree of Knight of the East and West, which they received with imperfect ceremony at their encampments of H.K.T.

In England, the S.G.C. 33° act at least logically in giving the degrees to any Master Mason without requiring Royal Arch or Templar qualifications; but in Ireland the Sovereign Grand Inspectors General have been unable to grasp the authority enjoyed by the sister councils, in consequence of the Grand Chapter of Prince Masons having retained the full power which it possessed over the Rose Croix prior to the American warrant being obtained by Fowler and his confreres. In fact, this so-called A. and A. Scottish Rite has been unable to establish itself in this country with the degree of firmness which might be procured for it, one would think, by the eminently aristocratic supporters of it, had their acquaintance with the system been more than a name; and although all the degrees from the 4th upwards are energetically worked in the United States, they are unable here to work a single one introductory to the Rose Croix. So that it is a simple absurdity for Bro. Deering to speak of "chapters of Prince Masons and other bodies under their jurisdiction," for no such bodies exist. The truth of the matter appears to be that Rose Croix Masonry in Ireland exists only as the Templar offshoot which it really is, and the connection between it and the S.G.I.G. of the 33° is merely nominal, so that it would be an act of common honesty to have it attached to the only body it can naturally be allied with—the Grand Conclave of H.K.T. If the members of the higher grades here maintain the contrary, and say that the Prince Masons' Degree can only be conferred by permission of the Council of the 33°, let them then see that it is worked according to the statutes and rules of the body from which they claim to have derived their authority, for it is not in their power to sanction any regulations which contradict those of the mother Council; and most of the principal Rose Croix laws are in direct opposition to them—as, for instance, the requiring of qualifications which are not known in the Rite, forbidding brethren to seek the degrees (20), &c.

We, however, emphatically assert that the Rose Croix Degree is the heritage of the Templars; and that the Ancient and Accepted Rite, first of 25 degrees, then of 29 degrees, and lastly of 33 degrees, is a spurious Templar offshoot of 1758, which, at Charleston in 1802, was organised under the "authority" of forged statutes on a fraudulent basis; and that the only legal possessors of the Ancient Degrees of Rosæ Crucis, K—H, Grand Inspector, Prince of the Royal Secret, &c., in England, are the chapters working under the Royal Grand Council of Ancient Rites and the establishment of the Supreme Council of the 33° at London in 1846, by a venereal quack and others, was an unprincipled interference with an older existing rite which had sprung from a pure and lawful source.

We have, with extreme reluctance, penned this defence of our position; and we can assure you that if we had not been wantonly attacked we should not have troubled ourselves about a matter in which, either from ignorance or apathy, the Masonic Body in Ireland seem to have little interest. At considerable personal sacrifices we have warmly supported Freemasonry in this country, and have taken no mean part in the working of its degrees; and it has ever been our anxious desire to live in peace, love, and harmony with our brethren; but we could not permit a slur to be cast upon us, or upon the illustrious Council of which we are members, without resenting it, and every endeavour to defame our Masonic name shall be met as it deserves, whether the attempt be made by the Grand Prince Masons' Chapter of Ireland, or the "Holy Emperors" of Molesworth-street, Dublin, or of Golden-square, London.

Certain omissions in this circular were, from the nature of it, unavoidable, and we must accordingly again return to the subject. Meanwhile we have said enough to show at least that our censors would have acted with more prudence had they kept before their mind that homely proverb: "Those who live in glass houses ought not to throw stones."

We remain, dear Sir and Brother,
Yours most fraternally,
THE SEVEN ALLUDED TO IN BRO. DEERING'S CIRCULAR.

NOTES.

(1) "The York Rite is the mother of all the other rites; from it they have separated as so many schisms; it is the most ancient, the most simple, and most scientific; and so far as my knowledge of the other rites extends, with the principal of which I am sufficiently acquainted, I may be permitted to say that it is the only one in which the true system of symbolic instruction has been preserved."—Dr. Mackey, 33°, Charleston.

(2) Bro. Matthew Cooke, 30°, intends to republish this printed work, which in all probability originated the charges of a connection betwixt the Freemasons and the old Rosicrucians, subsequent to 1794.

(3) The Grand Lodge of England, by its statutes, declares that all ancient Masonry is included in the Craft and Royal Arch degrees; and the consistency with which it has discountenanced the multiplicity of other degrees, by refusing to recognise the Grand Bodies belonging to them, accounts for its prosperity and strength.

(4) This work was by Dr. D'Assigny, and extracts have been printed by Bro. W. J. Hughan.

(5) Vide the published minutes of the Order in the "Freemasons' Quarterly," 25 years ago.

(6) The Priestly Order of the Temple is believed to be the Cromwellian Kadosh, and has similar points to the other. It is suggested that in the original form of the ancient Orders, the Priests were the Preceptors of the Templars, the Kadosh of the Rose Crucis, and the Princes of the Royal Secret of the degree of Palestine, or East and West—all which degrees, Bro. Dunckerley states, were epochs in the Temple Order.

(11) A very old certificate of the English Council of Rites, time-immemorial, omits "Prince of the Tabernacle," proving it to be the latest invention.

(12) The best single work is Dr. Folger's "History of the Rite," New York, 1862. The S.G.C. of London have recently printed these forged statutes as the basis of their power, and have thereby laid themselves open to the moral and legal odium of the fraud. Bro. McClenachan, 33°, Boston, in his official ritual of the Scottish Rite (New York, 1868), says: "On the 1st May, 1786, the constitutions of the Supreme Grand Council of the 33rd and last degree were alleged to have been granted at Berlin." Bro. A. Pike, 33°, Charleston, says in a published speech: "Frederick the Great never had anything to do with the higher grades."

(13) Possibly ranked by the importance of the cities, having no guide to dates.

(14) Archdeacon Mant says that any three Templars, possessing the Rosa Crucis, had power anciently to confer it.

(15) This Bro. Goldsworthy constituted the "High Greenwood Chapter," Todmorden, which again constituted the "Rochdale Chapter."

(16) For the information of brethren who may be unacquainted with the matter, we give, from Mackey, the names of the thirty-three degrees. They are:—1, Entered Apprentice; 2, Fellow Craft; 3, Master Mason (these degrees are conferred in a symbolic lodge, and differ only in a few points from the same degrees as conferred in a lodge of the York Rite); 4, Secret Master; 5, Perfect Master; 6, Intimate Secretary; 7, Provost and Judge; 8, Intendant of the Building; 9, Elected Knight of Nine; 10, Illustrious Elect of Fifteen; 11, Sublime Knights Elected; 12, Grand Master Architect; 13, Knight of the Ninth Arch; 14, Grand Elect, Perfect, and Sublime Mason; 15, Knight of the East; 16, Prince of Jerusalem; 17, Knight of the East and West; 18, Sovereign Prince of Rose Croix; 19, Grand Pontiff; 20, Grand Master of All Symbolic Lodges; 21, Noachite, or Prussian Knight; 22, Knight of the Royal Axe, or Prince of Libanus; 23, Chief of the Tabernacle; 24, Prince of the Tabernacle; 25, Knight of the Brazen Serpent; 26, Prince of Mercy, or Scotch Trinitarian; 27, Sovereign Commander of the Temple; 28, Knight of the Sun; 29, Grand Scotch Knight of St. Andrew; 30, Grand Elect Knight K—11; 31, Grand Inspector Inquisitor Commander; 32, Sublime Prince of the Royal Secret; 33, Sovereign Grand Inspector General.—It will be seen that the Mark Masters' degree, the degrees of the Royal Arch, and the Templar degree do not belong to the Rite; but nineteen Masons out of twenty are ignorant of this fact, the knowledge of which would have prevented them sanctioning, in Grand Lodge, the unnatural alliance between that body and the Supreme Council 33°—an alliance the parallel of which is not to be found in any Masonic jurisdiction in the world.

(17) In the Rite of Mizraim the legend of the Third Degree is unknown, and H. A. B. is represented as having, on the completion of K. S. T., returned to his mother and family, and spent the remainder of his life in ease and opulence. In the Rite we find the following degrees:—Supreme Commander of the Stars (52), Washer (55), Bellows Blower (55). The 45°, 46°, 51°, 65°, and 66° of Mizraim are respectively identical with the 16°, 18°, 28°, 30°, and 31° of the Scottish Rite of Thirty-three Degrees.

(18) There is no accommodation in the Masonic Hall for conferring this degree, and it is a mystery to us how the brethren can receive it there.

(19) "Not more than one Supreme Council can exist in each nation, and it must be composed of nine members, called Sovereign Grand Inspectors General, five of whom at least must profess the Christian religion."—"Lexicon of Freemasonry," Dr. Mackey, 33°, Charleston (London, 1869).

(20) "All applications for the degrees of Knight of the East and West and Prince of Rose Cross must be in writing, with the fee for the degree accompanying the same, and shall be recommended by at least two perfect Prince Masons."—"Constitutions of the Ancient and Accepted Scotch Rite," Wm. M. Cunningham, M.A., 32° (Philadelphia, 1864).

(21) The Knights, or Emperors, as they styled themselves, of the East and West, were, as we have seen, the inventors of the Scottish Rite of 33 Degrees, and the present holders of the 33° call themselves "Holy Emperors" (!) A member of the Grand Conclave, probably attaching considerable importance to the 17° on this account, is endeavouring to have it removed from the Templar jurisdiction, and placed high up on the ladder of the A. and A.S.R. Perhaps it will be the 34° after a time.

GRAND CHAPTER OF FREEMASONS OF IRELAND.

Most Excellent Sir and Brother,—I am directed to call your particular attention to the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted at a special meeting of the Grand Chapter, held at Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday, May 31st, 1871:—

"It having come to the knowledge of the Grand Chapter of Prince Masons that several brethren on the registry of Ireland had received certain degrees purporting to be Masonic, and amongst others the Rose Croix Degree, in a body or assembly styling itself the Jerusalem Chapter of Antiquity, and meeting in Manchester; and the Supreme Council of the 33° for England and Wales having officially intimated to the Supreme Council of the 33° for Ireland that said body or assembly is illegal, and not in connexion with, or recognised by, said Supreme Council for England and Wales; the Grand Chapter hereby declares that it does not recognise said Manchester body as Masonically legal, nor acknowledge any degrees conferred by it; and hereby cautions all chapters of Prince Masons, and other bodies under its jurisdiction, against admitting to their meetings any brethren claiming to have obtained any Masonic degrees in said illegal Manchester assembly.

"All Prince Masons are likewise prohibited from holding any Masonic intercourse with such brethren with reference to such degrees so illegally obtained."

By order,

L. H. DEERING, Secretary General.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR GIRLS.

The Special Court of this Institution was held on Thursday, the 29th ult., at Freemasons' Hall, Bro. J. Symonds, V.P., in the chair. There were present:—Bros. J. R. Sheen, J. Nunn, Major Creaton, A. H. Tattershall, F. Walters, J. Terry, B. Head, W. Young, R. W. Stewart, W. Hale, J. Rucker, and C. H. Patten.

It was carried nem. con. that the infirmary be built from the main building; also that the House Committee be the committee for carrying out business, subject to the approval of the General Committee meeting in September.

The usual vote of thanks was given to the chairman.

After the Special Court, the General Committee met, Bro. H. Browse presiding. Also present: Bros. B. Head, Major Creaton, R. W. Stewart, J. Nunn, E. Cox, J. Symonds, W. Young, J. Terry, J. Rucker, F. Walters, W. Hale, J. F. Corben, and E. H. Patten.

Minutes of previous meeting were read and confirmed, minutes of House Committee read for information, and the minutes of Audit Committee were confirmed.

Five candidates were added to the list, which now amounts to twenty-nine, out of which number sixteen only will be elected in October, which will be an increase from 100 to 106.

A vote of thanks to the chairman closed the meeting.

"MORE than a year ago one of my children was attacked with bronchitis, and, after a long illness, was given up by my physician as 'past cure.' I was then induced to try your Vegetable Pain Killer, and from the time I began the use of it the child rapidly got better, and is now strong and healthy.—JOHN WINSTANLEY, 10, Whittle-st., L'pool, Jan. 1869.—To P. D. & Son."

THE AMERICAN K.T. TOURISTS.

Truro, Cornwall, June 26, 1871.

DEAR BROTHER EDITOR,—I enclose you the following sketch of the reception of the American brethren by the Freemasons of Belfast. All honour to the Craftsmen of the North of Ireland for so nobly welcoming our visitors. I trust that this, their first public reception, will be an earnest of what awaits them in England and Scotland.

W. J. HUGHAN.

GRAND BANQUET AT BELFAST.

The deputation of Knights Templar representing the Allegheny Commandery, No. 35, Pennsylvania, now on a tour through Europe, were entertained to a grand banquet by the Masons of Belfast on the occasion of their visit to that town. The banquet took place in the Ulster Hall. Masonic banquets in Belfast are usually of a most successful character, but on the present occasion it would seem that the brethren had determined to outshine all their previous efforts, and provide an entertainment in every way creditable to the members of the Craft in the town and worthy of the American brethren who were to be their guests. Though the notice was very short, the arrangements were most perfect, and the desire of the local Masons to join in the fraternal greeting to their Transatlantic brethren may be judged from the fact that at the banquet every lodge in the town was represented. The hall presented a really magnificent appearance. Plants and flowers tastefully distributed and interspersed with Masonic devices of various descriptions produced an effect at once pleasing and interesting. The hour announced for opening the proceedings was half-past seven, and at that time all the seats set apart were fully occupied by the brethren, all dressed in Masonic costume, which added an additional element to the attractive appearance of the hall.

The following is a list of those present:—

Guests' Table.—Sir Charles Lanyon, P.G.R.C.; W. H. Slack, Generalissimo, H.K.T. 35; C. M. Jenkins, Capt.-General; Wm. Hamilton, Em. Com.; E. Orme, R.M., H.K.T.; Judge Sholis, H.K.T. 35; W. E. Macartney, H.K.T. 12, Dublin; H. D. Keymer, H.K.T. 35; Commander Scott, R.V., H.K.T.; Thos. Palmer, H.K.T. 35; J. Hilton, H.K.T. 109; W. S. M'Kee, H.K.T. 35; Dr. Wm. M'Gee, P.G.R.C.; Rev. J. J. M'Illyar, Prelate 35; Hon. H. W. Barry, H.K.T.; Marcus Gage, H.K.T.; Judge Heath, H.K.T. 35; Dr. Pirrie, K.H.; J. K. Ritter, H.K.T. 35; Edward Coates, H.K.T.; Robt. Neill, H.K.T. 109; J. The chair was occupied by Bro. Sir Charles Lanyon, D.P.G.M.

Dinner, which was supplied by Bro. M'Cracken, Steward Masonic Hall, was served up at half-past seven o'clock in excellent style, and was of a most sumptuous and recherche description.

Grace having been said by the Rev. Bro. Freckleton, Chaplain, the company sat down to the good things provided. These having been partaken of, thanks were returned; after which,

The Chairman rose to propose "The Health of the Queen." He said: One of the first duties of a Mason is loyalty to his rulers. When she who governs in this country has enthroned herself in the affections of her people, it must add increased zest to the pleasure with which I give you, and the enthusiasm with which I am sure you will receive, the toast of "Our Most Gracious Queen." (The toast was drunk amid great enthusiasm.)

The Chairman then rose and said: I am glad to have the opportunity of introducing this evening a toast which will, I am sure, meet with a hearty reception at the hands of all. We have now the pleasure of entertaining many distinguished brethren, the subjects of a nation with which we are intimately connected, and to which we are socially and commercially bound by the strongest ties of mutual interest and regard—feelings which will, I trust, ever promote—nationally, as well as fraternally—peace, love, and harmony between us. Brethren, however much we may differ in questions of constitutional government, I sincerely trust that no other differences may ever arise between us, or, should they unfortunately occur, that they may be settled by the pen of the diplomatist, and not by the sword of the warrior. (Cheers.) We have just joined in drinking the toast of the Queen, and now our American brethren have, by their cheers, testified their sympathy with us in our love and affection to ruler. I now beg to give you "The President of the United States, and prosperity to that enlightened nation." (This toast was also enthusiastically received.)

Bro. Gardiner (Illinois), in acknowledging the toast, said he must first thank the brethren for the attention that had been paid them. It seemed to be the aim of all the brethren to do nothing except to pay attention to them, and to give them a most cordial and fraternal greeting. He thanked them for the hearty response which had been given to the sentiment of the President of the United States. They felt proud of such a reception to the toast of their President, and specially were they proud because they felt that the honour had been done him as the representative of the American people. They all spoke of him, as the chairman had done, as the representative of a great nation. As a man, they loved him; as a statesman, they honoured and cherished him. Speaking of the President as the representative of the people, he might remark they did not come there to boast. They had neither the wish nor desire to raise themselves above other nations. (Hear, hear.) They simply said, as true patriots all the world over, that they loved their country, and honoured their people, and they would endeavour to promote what is good and correct what is evil. They could not forget what they owed to this country, and while passing over its mountains and valleys, and crossing its rivers, they could say it was here our father or our grandfather lived. When they would return to their own country, they would inform the brethren of the heartfelt sympathy and kindness which had been extended to them here. (Hear, hear.) In America they might not be finally settled, and might not have all their machinery at work, but he hoped soon to see all perfect; and for what had already been done in cutting down forests, building cities, and establishing governments, they should not forget how much they were indebted to the thousands and tens of thousands—hundreds of thousands, he might say—that had gone from England, Ireland, and Scotland to help them. He hoped the time was not far distant when all their States and governments would be settled, and they would be prepared to reciprocate the kindness they had received from this country. He would say for himself and his brethren that they had received both enjoyment and instruction from their visit to Ireland; and when they would go back to America, they would say to that President and that people who had been honoured that night that they had found across the water brethren of whom they could never speak ill, and would return to their homes with more love, more honour, and more respect for the land they had visited than they had when they left their homes. He hoped the two nations would ever continue knit together in the bonds of international friendship and goodwill, and in what already existed in that respect Masonry had no small share. One thing he could say about the President of the United States that they could not say of their Queen—he was a Mason. (Cheers.)

A Voice: Her son is one. (Cheers.)
Bro. Gardiner said he was glad to hear it, and hoped they would work together to promote harmony and peace between the two nations. (Cheers.)

The Chairman then proposed "His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, Past Grand Master of England," and "The Grand Masters of England, Ireland, and Scotland, Earl de Grey, the Duke of Leinster, and Earl Dalhousie," both of which were received with Masonic honours. In proposing that of the Prince of Wales, the Chairman expressed a hope that His Royal Highness would, on his visit to Ireland, afford them the honour of entertaining him as a brother Mason. (Cheers.)

The Chairman then said: I have now the pleasure of introducing the toast more immediately connected with our social meeting of this evening. We have here met together for the purpose of entertaining those of our American brethren who have come on a visit to this country, and I am delighted to see so large an assemblage of the brethren of Belfast to give them a sincerely hearty and enthusiastic reception. Had time permitted a longer notice to have been given of their intended visit, I am sure that even larger numbers from the country districts would have attended. [Addressing the Excellent Commander.] We welcome you, and your companion Knights Templar, to our town. We welcome you, not only as brethren of our most ancient Craft, but specially happy are we in welcoming you as American brethren—citizens of that great nation between which and this country (specially this town) there are so many intimate associations. It is not, however, my province here this evening to dilate upon these points, agreeable as it might be to refer to the commercial enterprise and interests which connect this part of the country with yours, or to the names of many of your merchant princes and illustrious countrymen connected by family and friendly ties with many in the North of Ireland. My special business is to bid you welcome as brother Masons, and more particularly to give expression to those feelings which bind us together—feelings which have been so eloquently expressed by one of your own illustrious philosophers and authors that I do not think, on the present occasion, it would be out of place to quote them. In speaking of Freemasonry, he says: "Its good effects are established by the most incontestable facts of history. They have stayed the uplifted hand of the destroyer, they have softened the asperities of the tyrant, they have mitigated the horrors of captivity, they have subdued the rancour of malevolence, and broken down the barrier of political animosity and sectarian alienation." On the battle-field, in the solitude of the uncultivated forest, or in the busy haunts of the crowded city, they have made men of the most hostile feelings, most distant regions, and most diversified conditions, rush to the aid of each other, and feel special joy that they have been able to afford relief to a brother Mason. Brethren, if this be a true description of the value of Masonry in promoting peace, love, and harmony, we ought to be proud of calling yourselves by the name of Masonic brethren. As such, it has been our great happiness to entertain you this evening, and I now beg to give the toast of "Our American Brethren, especially the guests who have honoured us with their company," coupled with the name of Bro. J. J. M'Illyer. (The Chairman then sat down, having been much applauded throughout.)

Bro. the Rev. J. J. M'Illyer, who was warmly received, responded. On the part of the Masons of the United States, he returned his most sincere and hearty thanks. In coming from the United States in the character they assumed, they felt they would be in some measure the representatives of Masonry in that country, and since they had landed on these shores they had realised this most fully. He might explain that this visit was not the result of a consultation, but entirely originated with Mr. Jenkins, who was General of the Commandery. There was more in this visit than a simple representation of Masonry, or an interchange of Masonic feelings and Masonic greetings, for it showed in a marked manner the privileges and benefits of Masonry. They looked upon Masonry as having God for its author, the world for its field, and heaven for its asylum; and that in it were bound up principles for the fraternisation of the whole world, and that would make them all feel that they were brethren and worshipped one God. As children bore the resemblances of their fathers, so Freemasonry bore the stamp of its Originator and Creator. There was no other system that would cause men to harmonise so thoroughly as Masonry, for in it there was but one opinion. He knew nothing to compare it to better than the bow that spans the heavens with its seven prismatic colours, each making the rest more beautiful. Freemasonry was calculated to bind together all things on earth, and make them one in God. He was not going to make a speech on Freemasonry, but his heart warmed when he met a body of Freemasons anywhere; and they felt satisfied in coming to this country that they would receive kindness from brother Masons, no matter what tongue they spoke or where they lived. Masonry had a history that would endure for ever, and he believed the interview of that night would mark an era in it. He believed that that visit would be an introduction to other, and more gigantic, visits of Masons, and that the example set by the men of Alleghany would be followed by others, both in this country and America. He would say that their visit had been superintended by the providence of God, for they had been guided to take a passage in the Oceanic, and everywhere they had gone in the South and North they had met with the most cordial and friendly greeting. He hoped the visit would be returned, and that they would see some of those around them in the United States, and he promised that they would do everything in their power, and everything that Masonry promised, to make the visit as agreeable as theirs had been made in this country. Bro. M'Illyer concluded by proposing "The Provincial Grand Lodge of Antrim." (Loud cheers.)

The toast was drunk with Masonic honours.
The Chairman, in responding, said: On the part of the Freemasons of Belfast, I return your Excellent Commander, and to our American brethren generally, our hearty and sincere thanks for the manner in which you have toasted the Provincial Grand Lodge of Antrim. I may say that it has given us all great pleasure to have had the opportunity of entertaining you; as a proof of which I believe I may say that, of the numerous lodges in Belfast, there is not a single one unrepresented here. As for myself, I may say that the honour of presiding on this occasion has been one of the most pleasing duties which has devolved upon me as Deputy Provincial Grand Master. It is a matter of regret, however, that our Provincial Grand Master, the Marquis of Donegal, could not be present with us; but of this I am sure, that he sympathises sincerely in this tribute of brotherly love to you, sir, and your countrymen, on the part of the Grand Lodge over which he presides. (Applause.)

The next toast was, "Our poor and distressed brethren all over the world."

The proceedings shortly afterwards terminated.
Mr. Fred. Smythe, Mus. Bac., performed a number of popular selections on the grand organ in excellent style, and an amateur glee company sang a number of pieces of music in an effective manner, thus greatly enlivening and agreeably diversifying the proceedings of the evening.

The American brethren arrived in Belfast on the morning of the banquet, from Portrush and the Causeway. They took up their quarters at the Imperial Hotel, where apartments had been engaged for them. They visited the Brookfield and Linfield Mills, and were shown over those establishments by the courteous managers. They afterwards visited the Queen's Island, and inspected Messrs. Harland and Wolff's ship-building yard. They expressed themselves highly gratified with all they had seen. The Knights subsequently drove through the principal streets, and seemed much pleased with the appearance presented by the town.—Belfast News-Letter.

FREEMASONRY & ISRAELITISM.

BY BRO. WILLIAM CARPENTER, P.M. & P.Z. 177.

VII.

We now return to the ten tribes of Israel, who had been carried captive by the Assyrians. In the first deportation, under Tiglath Pilezer (B.C. 739—about 14 years after the supposed foundation of Rome), the tribes who dwelt in Gilead, east of the Jordan, and a portion of those who dwelt in the northern part of Galilee, were carried into Ashur, Halah, Habor, and the country through which the river Gozan flows. The second and complete deportation was by a succeeding king of Assyria, generally supposed to have been Shalmanezzer, but his name is not given in the biblical account of the siege of Samaria. He is only said to have been “a king of Assyria.” By him the people who had been left in the land, by Tiglath Pilezer, were carried into the same region to which the other tribes had been deported. Sir Isaac Newton (Chron. of Anc. Hist. p. 283), with other authorities, takes Halah and Habor to be Colchis and Iberia (Georgia and Circassia), on the east of the Black Sea, the inhabitants of which, as Herodotus states, practised the rite of circumcision. Major Rennel, whose judgment is greatly respected, agrees with Sir Isaac Newton. The country through which the Gozan flows, is reasonably believed to be a district in Upper Media (on the borders of the Caspian), called Gorzan. Philo describes the Jews as being very numerous in the East, under the empire of the Persians; and Josephus (Ant. xi. 5), speaking of the ten tribes, states that in his time they were in great multitudes beyond the Euphrates.

I may hope to be pardoned for a short digression here, as it will tend to remove a considerable difficulty in the history of the Assyrian empire, and a doubt which has been cast upon the verity of the Scripture history. In Isaiah xx. 1, we read: “In the year that Tartan came into Ashdod (when Sargon, the King of Assyria, sent him), and fought against Ashod, and took it.” This is the only mention we find of the Assyrian King, Sargon, whose existence was long doubted, but who is recently discovered to have been the Assyrian king who took Samaria, at the end of the three years seige (begun by Shalmanezzer), and carried away the tribes of Israel who had been left behind by Tiglath Pilezer. For the discovery of this interesting fact we are indebted to the researches of M. Batta, who, after some gleanings on the site of ancient Nineveh, turned his attention, in 1842, to Khorsabad, and there discovered a magnificent Assyrian palace, which was completely uncovered in 1845, and is believed to be the first exposed to view since the fall of the Assyrian Empire. It is from the walls of this palace, and the various tablets of gold, silver, and other materials, and from the clay cylinders discovered in the ruins, that the record of Sargon’s acts have been obtained. The palace is ten miles east of Nineveh, at the foot of the Makloub Hills, watered by streams which now make it a pestilential waste, but which once, no doubt, made it a delightful spot. Compared with the earlier buildings of a similar kind, erected by other kings, it is not remarkable for its size, but its decorations are unsurpassed by those of any Assyrian edifice, with the exception of the great palace of Assurbanipal, at Koyunjik. The annals of Sargon, gathered from the inscriptions found on the palace walls, and on the cylinders, reveal him as one of the most splendid kings and most successful warriors of Assyria (Oppert. Inscript. des Sargonides). These inscriptions contain the following sentence, amongst others, evidently recorded by the king himself: “I besieged, took, and occupied the city of Samaria, and carried away 27,280 persons, who dwelt in it.” This was in the first year of his reign, and he subsequently, in agreement with Isaiah’s words, captured the city of Ashod, and thus obtained the command of the maritime route into Egypt. He is also stated to have sent into Samaria those colonists from Babylon, Cuthah, and Sepharvaim whose struggles form an interesting episode in scripture history. He died B.C. 704, and was succeeded by his son, Sennacherib, who took all the fenced cities of Judah, but who, at length, by the miraculous destruction of a vast portion of his army (2 Chron. xxxii. 21), was driven back to Nineveh.

Returning once more to the captive tribes, whom we left between the Caspian and the Euxine Seas, we may remark, that it was not according to the Divine purpose, in relation to them and to the rest of the world, that they should settle down, as a people, in the land of their captivity. “They shall wander from sea to sea,” says the word of the Lord, by Joel (viii. 12), “and from the north even to the east they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord.” They were to be, as Hosea declares (xiii. 3), “as the chaff that is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor, and as the smoke out of the chimney.” They were not to stay long in the place of the breaking forth of children (ver. 13). In accordance with these prophecies, various groups appear to have migrated, some into China, some into India, and some into other countries, including North America; easily crossing over from the eastern extremity of Asia to the western extremity of that continent. As far as customs and traditions serve to identify a people, we have evidences of their existence in these and other parts. It was probably some of the people carried into Media, who joined the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, and returned with them, partly under Zerub-babel and partly under Ezra. The bulk of the tribes, however, there is good reason to believe, remained together, and, like those who had swarmed off from them, made their way into other regions, leaving the east, and going towards the west, in search of that which was lost—rest; pursuing their route along the northern shores of the Black Sea (“wandering from sea to sea”) until they reached the Danube, where we now find the fertile plains and valleys of Roumania.

This is not a merely gratuitous assumption, having nothing to justify it. The prophetic word plainly points northward as the place of Israel’s wandering, and whence they were to come: “Go proclaim these words towards the north,” said the Lord to Jeremiah (iii. 12), “and say, Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you, for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger for ever.” “It shall no more be said, The Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but the Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither He had driven them” (xvi. 14, 15). “Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth. . . . I will cause them to walk by the rivers of water, wherein they shall not stumble, for I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born” (xxxii. 9, 10). All this agrees with the position of the captive tribes, and with the course which we believe them to have taken. They yearned for their own land, or to get nearer to it. The tribes of Judah and Benjamin had returned, and the tribes of Israel would naturally be attracted towards their land, as, indeed, the prophecies we have referred to declared this should be; and towards it they directed their steps.

As we trace the passage of a caravan across a sandy desert by the footprints they leave behind them, so we may trace the migrations and settlements of a people by the customs they carry with them, and the monuments they leave behind them. We cannot fail to recognise a portion of the ten tribes in the Beni-Israel, scattered over the country from the neighbourhood of Bombay, who profess themselves to be of the tribe of Reuben; and we may find similar means of identifying the rest of the tribes. Allatius supposes that the Israelites who were placed in the Chaboras also peopled the countries of Iberia and Colchis—in this agreeing with Sir Isaac Newton, to whom we have previously referred—and he adduces the authority of Constantine Pophyrogenetes in support of the Israelitish origin of the inhabitants of Iberia, as Herodotus had done of the inhabitants of Colchis, all of whom claim to trace their descent from the favoured tribes, and practised, as Herodotus testifies, the rite of circumcision. But, in addition to these evidences of Israel’s migration, we find in the very supposed track of their movements westward, monuments which have existed for many ages, and which indicate an Israelitish origin. The manner of sepulture amongst the Israelites was to place the body, not in the rude earth, but in a cave or chamber, either built of stones or cut in the rock. A stone covered the opening, and this stone seems to have been covered by alternate layers of earth or sand and vegetable matter, the sand being first laid on. In some cases they were accustomed to raise high heaps, both to serve as a monument and the better to preserve the tomb from spoliation (see Joshua vii. 26, viii. 29, 2 Sam. xviii. 17). Now, the country north-west of the region in which the Israelites were placed, and now forming part of the Russian empire, consists of vast plains, apparently capable, when cultivated, of sustaining great multitudes, but now chiefly remarkable as places of sepulture. Dr. E. J. Clarke, the observant and intelligent traveller, who went through this region, says: "The most frequent objects here were the tumuli, which, from their great number, I should have been inclined to think had been raised as marks of guidance across the immense plains, during winter." But he goes on to say, that, whenever any one of them had been laid open, the appearance of a sepulchre placed their origin beyond dispute, as places of interment. The number of these monuments, he says, greatly increased as he drew near to the Kuban, which falls into the sea of Azov, north-east of the Crimea; and in the last stages before he reached that river he counted ninety-one, all at once in view. The Russian Archæological Society, of which Prince Woronzow, Governor General of Odessa, is President, has brought to light many interesting Israelitish relics found in this region, many hundreds of epitaphs from tombs, &c., some of which go back to pre-Christian times, and date from the "year of our exile"—no doubt, the Assyrian captivity. No trace of any ancient work afterwards appeared, excepting tumuli, to Dr. Clark, until he reached the Bay of Taman, on the shore of which stands the remains of a very large fortress and town, entirely surrounded with tombs and broken mounds of earth, evident vestiges of human labour. The neighbourhood was entirely covered with tumuli, of a size and shape that could not fail to excite a traveller's wonder and stimulate his research. One of these tombs had been opened by the soldiers of the garrison. It was quite a mountain; and after considerable labour they opened the eastern side, when they discovered the entrance to a large arched vault, of the most admirable masonry, of a white crumbling limestone, which the country still affords. The stones of the sides were all square, perfect in their form, and put together without any cement, the roof exhibiting the finest turned arches imaginable, having the whiteness of the purest marble. It contained two chambers, and there were found in them vases and other relics, but the most noticeable of all was a fine piece of workmanship in gold, representing a serpent with two heads, studded with rubies, to imitate the eyes, while the back part of each head was ornamented with two rows of gems. Further describing the sepulchre, he states that immediately above the stonework, constructed for the vault, was first a covering of earth, and then a layer of seaweed, compressed by another superincumbent stratum of earth, of the thickness of about two inches; and the like was found in all the tombs of the country. Similar tombs, he says, are seen on all the shores of the Bosphorus; and Pallas, in his journey over this country, states the same thing. The tomb described by Dr. Clarke was no doubt that of a person of distinction, and it reminds us of several passages in the Hebrew Scriptures, especially of Abraham's tomb, called the Cave of Machpelah (Gen. xxiii. 17, &c.), the double arce, for so the Hebrew word signifies, consisting, as Aben-Ezra and others suppose, of an inner and an outer chamber—a common form of the Jewish sepulchre for persons of note or distinction. But what of the golden serpent found in it? Does this in any way point to Israel? I think so. The Beni-Israel, in India, are said to have each in his secret chamber a silver serpent, before which he burns incense twice a day, and scatters a little flour, singing, accompanied by a small tom-tom, during the ceremony; and we know it was not until after the ten tribes were carried away that Hezekiah broke in pieces the brazen serpent which Moses had made, as a healer, through faith, of the bites of the fiery serpents in the wilderness; for until his days "the children of Israel did burn incense to it" (2 Ki. xviii. 4). Was the golden serpent found in the tomb, near the Bay of Taman, a representation of the brazen serpent, which had thus become an object of idolatrous veneration, if not of worship, and which, it would appear, is still used as a sacred relic and charm by the Beni-Israel? I do not ask that this conjecture should be taken for more than it is worth, but as one thing amongst others—as circumcision and sepulture—it deserves notice. May we not also find, as we pass westward along the shores of the Euxine, names which are indicative of an Israelitish origin? Do not the names of all the great rivers seem to refer to the Jordan, as marking the original seat of the people, which, before the great migration of nations westward, inhabited the country north of the Euxine, between the Don and the Danube? Thus, proceeding westward from the Don, we have the Danez, flowing into the Don; then we have the Danieper, contracted into Dnieper; and further westward, the Daniester or Dniester; and southward, and flowing from the far west, the Danau or Danube. May not all these be regarded as waymarks of Israel, in their progress westward, on the north of the Euxine?

MASONIC AUTHORITY CLAIMED BY THE S.G.C. 33°.

IN THE FREEMASON of the 24th June "A Royal Arch Companion" puts a query as to the "ruling power" claimed by the S.G.C. 33° "over all legitimate lodges, chapters," &c., and as he suggests that one of the nine members should satisfy him as to such assumption of authority, it might be well to enlighten him, while awaiting the reply from head-quarters as to what claims are put forward by the S.G.C., leaving to Bro. Yarker, for the present, the easy task of disposing of the validity of the grounds on which their assumptions rest.

Our enquiring brother states that although he has been a Craft Mason for nearly fifteen years, and a Royal Arch Mason for over twelve years, this is the first time he ever heard that they had any jurisdiction whatever over either lodges or chapters. Unfortunately, such want of information is very general among those who are not, and probably quite as much among those who are, under the immediate jurisdiction of the S.G.C. 33° by being members of the A. and A. Rite. If their unwarranted assumptions, and the grounds on which they base them, were clearly understood by the Craft at large, I think the "Golden-square Magnates" might soon (to use a trade expression, for which I hope I may be forgiven) "shut up shop."

The circular, "What is Spurious Masonry?" printed in last Saturday's FREEMASON, condenses a good deal of information on the question as to the right of the S.G.C. 33° to control the higher degrees, such as the Rose Croix, K.H., &c. That document is now being largely circulated in Ireland, where, from somewhat different causes, we are nearly as impatient of the assumption of the S.G.C. 33° as many of the English Masons are; and I am inclined to think that the time is fast approaching when the "good men and true" of both countries will make "common cause," and finally throw off a yoke which should never have been submitted to.

This is doubtless very revolutionary, but to my mind a revolution, not a reformation, is required. The latter would most likely be a compromise by which the S.G.C. 33° would be perhaps permanently established; whereas, if what is so distinctly stated and apparently proved as to their origin and pretensions is correct, they are simply usurpers with whom no terms should be made, and whose overthrow should be desired and worked for by all good Masons.

To come, however, to the immediate subject of this communication, we find that the S.G.C. 33° claims authority over all the degrees of the A. and A. Rite, from the 4° to the 33°. According to its published "rules and regulations," it "does not interfere with or militate against the authority of the Grand Lodge governing the three symbolic degrees," and requires that candidates for the higher degrees should have been previously raised to the degree of M.M. "in some regularly constituted lodge." Take, however, the fact that the title of its 20° is "Grand Master of all symbolic lodges," in connection with the statement found in Frederick Dalcho's "Orations" (as republished under the sanction of the Illustrious the College of Knights of K.H. and the Original Chapter of Prince Masons of Ireland," where the right of Councils of Sublime Masons to grant Blue warrants is claimed as indefeasible, and we need have little difficulty in understanding that it is quite possible "the secret constitutions" of the Order contain provisions that, if acted on, would be found most inimical to the authority of Grand Lodge, and that as such claims could not now be enforced, it is considered wiser for the present to hold them "in abeyance."

The "Supreme Grand Council" further kindly informs us that "it does not interfere with" the S.G.C. of the R.A. or the G.C. of K.T. It "does not forbid any of its members belonging" to those Orders, though it does not recognise them as part of the Ancient system. It is strange, however, that the 13° of the A. and A. Rite, though stated by Mackey to be "Knight of the Ninth Arch," stands in the list of the 33° in Dalcho's work (published here in 1808) simply as "Royal Arch," and its identity with the existing Royal Arch Order is clearly shown by a footnote in Dalcho's work, appended to the text of the "report," where it is stated: "In this part of the report the Inspectors omitted to insert that on the 20th Feb. 5792 (A.D. 1788) the Royal Arch Chapter in this city, working under a warrant from Dublin, formed a junction with the Sublime Grand Lodge, and their members were received into our degrees free of expense, and were acknowledged as high as the 13° inclusive."

It would seem that those "modern Masons" subsequently "improved" (?) their degrees, as is further shown by a comparison of Mackey's list with theirs of 1808, in which latter the 30°, 31°, and 32° are grouped together as "Prince of the Royal Secret—Prince of Masons."

The theory which seems to have inspired Dalcho in his dealing with the "ineffable" degrees assumes just the reverse of what is usually believed, namely, that Craft Masonry is Ancient Masonry, and that the high grades are modern additions. He assumes that in the high degrees we have preserved the ancient system as it existed before the era of Solomon's Temple, and he regards the three symbolic degrees as a kind of entrance chamber, necessary to be passed through before receiving the true mysteries of Masonry, and instituted to give the Sublime Masons an opportunity of knowing the characters and dispositions of the initiated before admitting them into the inner mysteries. Viewed thus, we can easily understand the claim of control over those so-called inferior degrees. It may interest those who regret the necessary exclusion of women from our meetings, to know (as stated in a footnote to one of the orations) that "although in the symbolic lodge no woman is admitted into a knowledge of their mysteries, yet in the sublime degrees there is a female lodge handsomely calculated to interest the delicacy of a female mind. In this lodge none but females are admitted, and their officers are selected from among themselves." Clearly, the Masons of the present day are as a body in much ignorance of the ancient truths of their Order.

I trust that the discussion of this branch of the subject lately commenced will enlighten many who "took things for granted," and help to establish the true principles of Masonry by enabling the Craft to discriminate between well-founded claims and pretentious assertions.

I hope shortly to take up more in detail the "Irish branch" of the subject. It is just possible that the discretion of those at the head of the high grades here may enable them to "steer clear" of a revolution; but if they are foolish enough to come into collision with the Craft at large, their power is not worth many years' purchase. I have been looking into the "statistics" of the subject, and they point to conclusions which I may throw into shape for your columns, if deemed advisable.

Meanwhile, I trust I have to some extent shown to "A Royal Arch Companion" that if the S.G.C. 33° have not put their claims to authority over all the degrees prominently forward, it is expediency that restrains them; and I trust that he and others will see the necessity of standing "shoulder to shoulder" in defence of our "ancient landmarks" against a body that propounds to a brother who has got the M.M. degree, and seeks to join the A. and A. Rite, a slavish oath of allegiance to their authority, that hedges in his Masonic career and prevents him holding Masonic communion with brethren who hail from more ancient bodies, possessed of legal and constitutional rights; and that when the final struggle comes, he and they will be found on the side of justice and right, helping to depose from its present position a system illogical, unmasonic, and well nigh intolerable.

AN IRISH H.K.T.

Dublin, 2nd July, 1871.

THE HIGH GRADES IN IRELAND.

BY HISTORICUS.

In your last the writer endeavoured to show the volcanic nature of Craft ground in Ireland. It is lamentable to observe that even in England Irish high-grade Masons are endeavouring to introduce the same fiery element into this country. They may rest assured that such a course, if successful, will inevitably cause the destruction of Masonry in this country, for such a state of things as exists under the popular and esteemed Duke of Leinster is altogether out of question in this country. Therefore, beware. If we can procure the necessary information, we will devote a few words to the consideration of the history of the "Royal Grand Council of Ancient Rites—time-immemorial," which is believed to have introduced "Misraim" into Ireland in 1822; but of the three Supreme Grand Councils of the "Ancient and Accepted Rite" existing in Britain, that of Scotland, without question, is the most regular—for the New York Council, which instituted the English, in 1846, was irregular and unrecognised at that time. The Supreme Council of Charleston deserves the support of the Craft for the honesty and straightforwardness with which it admits the Frederick the Great forgery, and states itself, from 1801, the "Mother Council of the World." In 1804 that body introduced the Rite into Paris, France, and that organisation, through Dr. Morrison, conveyed the Rite to Edinburgh. Previous to this time the Rose Croix and many other degrees (including Misraim) were practised by the Knights Templar of Scotland. Thus we find the degree of Templar Priest, Knight of the Sepulchre, the Holy Grave, Constantine, Black Mark, Knight of Death, Ne Plus Ultra, White Cross, St. John the Baptist, &c.; but the Kadosh Degree, though the writer is partial to it, never was popular in Scotland, and has even been styled the "execrable degree of petit du." The fact of the Scottish S.G.C. requiring the degrees of the "Royal Order of Scotland" prior to the Rose Croix must always limit the number of members of the Ancient and Accepted Rite. A good thing, we say, for the Craft, so long as Grand Lodge refuses to recognise anything but blue Masonry, as is the case at present in England and Scotland. The abandonment of the Order of Misraim in Scotland seems to have been caused by the stand made against "Accumulated Rites" by the Schismatic Council of Bro. Gourges. This stand would be just and right were the Ancient and Accepted Rite superior in authenticity to either Misraim or Memphis; but this is not so, as the one rite is quite as good as the other—lacking the latter a few extra years of antiquity upon the former.

We will, however, return to the history of the Irish Council of Rites:—

"But, with respect to the former rumour, they distinctly assert, without fear of refutation, and with a full knowledge of the facts, also with the most ample and satisfactory evidence of the same, that the Chapter of Zimmerman—out of which the Council of Rites, at the period of its unauthorized assumption of supreme power, was framed—possessed, at that time, as a Society of Prince Masons, no better or other title whatsoever than that which a degraded Mason could confer. And in proof of this they appeal to the framed diploma or certificate to Bro. Fowler, hung up by him for exhibition in the public office of the G.L., and bearing the signature of Zimmerman; to the paper of authorisation itself, exhibited by a member of the Council of Rites, a friend of Bro. Fowler, to a member of the Grand Chapter (who has already deposed to that fact, and can, at any time, again be brought forward to verify it); and, also, to the first page of the "Records" of that chapter itself, in which its title is plainly and unequivocally set out exactly as it is here stated and described.

"Thus matters stood for about thirty years, during which time the chapter so formed by Bro. Fowler under, and by virtue of, the piece of paper which had been given him by Zimmerman continued occasionally to meet and to initiate candidates; and as the Grand Chapter had no doubt that a great portion, at least, of the mystery had been communicated by Emanuel Zimmerman; also as the new chapter did not presume to arrogate to itself even the name of a Grand Chapter; moreover, as the names of several highly-respectable citizens were found upon its rolls, the Grand Chapter, while it never countenanced or recognised these irregular proceedings, yet, during all that period, never threw up any technical obstacles, or adopted any defensive movements, to crush a Society which, though illegitimate in its origin, appeared to be honest in its purposes; in short, never interfered at all, or in any manner, to prevent or restrain the original chapter from pursuing its own course as an independent body with which the Grand Chapter was in no way concerned.

"But about the year 1838 the case presented a new aspect. Encouraged by the forbearance of the Grand Chapter, the Chapter of Zimmerman then put forth a claim to despotic power. Without obtaining the assent or adhesion of the Grand Chapter, or of any authorised society of Prince Masons, it constituted itself a chapter paramount; and by a vote of its own, devolving upon a part of itself an authority which the whole never possessed. It thus sought to bring into bondage as its vassals, not only other chapters of Prince Masons whose title and legitimacy were less questionable than its own, but even the Grand Chapter itself, from the refuse of which it had been engendered.

"Though from the formation of the Chapter of Zimmerman, in the year 1804, the Grand Chapter had abstained from any attack upon it, or impeachment of its title—still this irregular chapter seems to have been in daily apprehension of an exposure of its spurious birth. Aware of the absence of all legal or regular authority, and conscious of the rottenness of its original foundation, it appears all through to have been haunted by the terror of discovery, as by some ghastly spectre; and to have avoided a disclosure as though it were to be its death warrant.

"Filled with these apprehensions, the Chapter of Zimmerman about four or five years ago anxiously cast about to discover some mode of obtaining a title. What was it to do? Could it contrive to make itself antique in a moment? Could it plant and rear for itself the root and branches of the genealogical tree from which it was suddenly to put forth the tender bud of its existence? it had no legal parents, no authorised or even reputable stock, to which it could trace its origin; and it seemed to be altogether in a very helpless and pitiable position.

"But as necessity has ever been the parent of invention, so in the present case it gave rise to the invention of a parent. Adopting that maxim of genius, 'aut inventiam aut faciam,' the Chapter of Zimmerman, not being able to discover the faintest trace of a legal origin—failing, after the most careful and laborious search, to make out for itself a Masonic father—boldly determined to beget one; and under the impulse of this grand and truly original conception it directly set about the execution of the pleasing task.

"Having met together in private, and without the assistance or superintendence of any other chapter, the Chapter of Zimmerman gravely selected out of its own members a certain number of persons, whom it appointed a sovereign body—generally for the purpose of governing the Order of Prince Masons, but especially and particularly for the more pressing purpose of granting authority and warrant to the Chapter of Zimmerman itself; and thus, of extending in its turn the fostering care of a parent and guardian to its parentless and unprotected progenitors. But, after having brought forth its own father safely into this breathing world, difficulties, similar to those which attended the birth of the illustrious Martin Scriblerus, now oppressed the disconcerted wits of the Chapter of Zimmerman, viz., How, and by what name or names, it ought to baptise the interesting babe which it had destined to become its sire. 'The Grand Chapter,' probably, would have been the name selected, but that denomination had been long pre-occupied in Dublin. 'The Royal Chapter' might, perhaps, have served the purpose, but a chapter bearing that appellation had been for upwards of five centuries a well-known body in Scotland. Thrown back again upon the ingenuity of its inexhaustible resources, the Chapter of Zimmerman at length triumphantly produced the splendidly-superb cognomen of 'The Supreme Grand Council of Rites for Ireland,' &c., &c.—a patronymic which was at once hailed with demonstrations of the most extravagant delight, being alike euphonorously dignified and appropriately unintelligible. The next step necessary to be taken was to invent magniloquent titles for the members of the body corporate of 'The Governor'—thus begotten and baptised. In this department, it would seem that these worthies could find no suitable region in which the wing of fancy might expand and imagination take its flight. But the powers of the wise seldom remain unoccupied or long without an object upon which they may interest and exercise themselves. Though the study of more official names was incompetent to afford much space for the exertion of those brilliant abilities which had already achieved so much, yet these philosophic Masons were determined, under every disadvantage, still to accomplish something above the common course of affairs. They resolved that, under their hands and management, some flower should grow, even in the most arid and unfruitful soil. The native dullness of the subject could not deter these congenial spirits from research. They explored its innermost recesses—they traversed its heavy bogs and unproductive wastes, and waded through the mire—until they at last discovered and made themselves masters of a wilderness of verbiage, with which no former, or other, system of nomenclature can bear the slightest comparison. Never was a collection of names put together which were more suited, from their wild magnificence, to entrance and overawe the multitude; or from their stolid and insignificant solemnity, to astonish and confound the learned. The Secretary of this mushroom body is termed 'The Grand Secretary of the Supreme Grand Council of Rites for Ireland;' and to that superlative functionary, in such capacity, is committed the custody of 'The Records' of the 'Supreme Grand,' though all the records that the poor man ever had to keep were the lodge-book, the tavern bills, and the bit of parchment given to Fowler by Zimmerman, and since then pleasantly called, by his followers, an Authorization.

Jennings, the manager of the Albion Tavern Company, with a solid gold locket, seal, and a gold pen and pencil case with suitable inscription, for the high esteem he is held in by the members of that lodge, and his assiduity in looking after the comforts of its members on every occasion when the lodge meets.

The brethren attended Divine service at two o'clock in St. Stephen's Church. Prayers were read by the vicar, Rev. G. Stokes, and the lessons by the P.G. Chaplain, Bro. the Rev. C. J. Martyn.

The sermon was preached by the Prov. G. Chap., V.W. Bro. the Rev. T. J. Brereton, from Isaiah xxviii. 16: "Therefore, thus said the Lord God, behold I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a sure foundation." All commentators agreed that Jesus Christ was the foundation here referred to. He wished, he said, that it had fallen to the lot of one more eloquent than he to preach to the brethren on this anniversary; but he gladly availed himself of the opportunity to exhort them, in all sincerity, not merely to perform their Masonic duties, but, as a Christian minister, to perform their Christian duties, to look for salvation to Jesus Christ, the chief corner-stone. There were two great points in the text—first, God's foundation for the stability of His church; and, secondly, the peculiar qualities by which this foundation is distinguished. Great pains were taken by skillful builders that the foundation of a building should be good, because, if not, the safety of the building was endangered. So, when the Great Architect had to erect the glorious temple of which Christ was the foundation, He selected the only stone which could bear the weight of the building which should be erected—namely, Jesus Christ. It was only through Christ taking upon himself the form of man and dying upon the cross that at one time sinners could be saved, God's justice satisfied, His law magnified, and His glory advanced. He passed on to notice the peculiar qualities by which this foundation was distinguished. Christ was frequently spoken of in the Scriptures as a stone, and one of the qualifications necessary was strength. The poets fabled one Atlas, who bore the earth upon his shoulders, but this Christ, the sure foundation-stone, could bear a much greater weight. Let no one present suppose the burthen of his sin too heavy for him to bear. Christ was further represented as a tried stone. The wise master-builder examined and proved the quality of the stones he used for the foundation, for were they rotten the building must fall. God had tried this foundation by laying upon Him the iniquity of us all, by causing Him to drink the cup of wrath, and placing Him in the ignominious position of death upon the cross. Herod tried it when he massacred the infants at Bethlehem, the Pharisees tried it when they charged Him with being gluttonous and a winebibber, and when they took Him to the brow of the hill and cast Him down headlong, when they took Him before Pilate and nailed Him to the tree, and when they placed a stone at the door of the sepulchre and set a watch, saying, "This deceiver said, In three days will I rise again." But in spite of this the foundation remained unshaken, and Christ had ascended up into heaven, He had led captivity captive, and had received gifts for men. What further testimony was needed? Again this was to be a foundation-stone, a corner-stone. Corner stones were generally used for three purposes. The first was union. If the corner-stones of a building were removed, the building would fall; and if the great corner-stone were removed, the living temple would become a confused heap. The second purpose was beauty, and in Christ, the sure foundation-stone, they had the greatest beauty. The other purpose for which a corner-stone was used was for regulation—the walls must be squared up with the corner-stone; and so our lives must be regulated by Christ, the chief corner-stone. In conclusion, he asked whether all the brethren were building on this sure foundation, and if they were not, he besought them to consider their position, retrace their steps, and rest themselves upon Christ, so that in due time they might receive the benediction, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

A grand banquet was afterwards held in the Public Hall, which was handsomely decorated for the occasion with the banners of the various lodges, as well as with spreading ferns and beautiful plants. The banquet was served by Bro. George Spalding, and reflected great credit upon his management. The harmony of the evening was greatly promoted by Bros. Montem Smith, Chaplin Henry, — Baxter, and G. T. Carter, who sung a selection of songs and ballads during the evening.

The Provincial Grand Master, who presided, upon the close of the repast, gave the toasts of "The Queen," "The Prince and Princess of Wales and the Royal Family," which were loyally responded to; "The Grand Master of England, the Marquis of Ripon;" "The Earl Zetland and the Prince of Wales, Past Grand Masters of England."

The toast of "The Deputy Grand Master, the Earl of Carnarvon, and the Officers of the Grand Lodge" was responded to by Bros. the Rev. C. J. Martyn and R.W. Robert Bagshaw, P.G.M. of Essex.

Bro. E. I. Lockwood, D.P.G.M. of Suffolk, then proposed "The Health of the R.W. the Provincial Grand Master," who appropriately responded.

The toast of "The D.P.G.M. of Suffolk," responded to by Bro. Lockwood, was followed by those of "The Provincial Grand Chaplain and Clergy of the Province," and "The Wardens and Officers, Past and Present, of the Provincial Grand Lodge," to which Bro. the Rev. F. Palmer replied. The "Visiting Brethren of other Provinces" was replied to by the Worshipful the Mayor of Ipswich.

Bro. the Rev. C. J. Martyn responded for the toast of the "Masonic Charities," Bros. R. M. Senderson and P. Cornell for the "Masters of the Province," Bro. Lucia for the "Provincial Grand Secretary," and Bro. Barber, Provincial Grand Organist, for "The Ladies."

Bro. Montem Smith and the rest of the vocalists were then toasted, the P.G.M. speaking in high terms of their vocal abilities and the extreme pleasure they had caused the brethren. With the Tyler's toast, one of the most successful gatherings every held in the county were brought to a close. We may mention here that Assistant Director of Ceremonies, Bro. Emra Holmes, acted as toastmaster.

The next meeting will be held at Sudbury, under the auspices of the Stour Valley Lodge. Bro. F. S. Corrance, M.P., who had been expected to attend, was unavoidably absent, and Bro. Lord Henniker had unfortunately to leave for town before the banquet.

ARK MARINERS.—The Ark Mariners of Rochdale, who constitute the oldest, if not the only continuous, Ark lodge in England, have applied to the G.M.M.M. for a warrant of confirmation.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Biliousness, Headache, and Deranged Stomach.—Recollect, reader, that most diseases come on with apparently a trifling beginning, which could at that stage be readily stopped, but being neglected, other and more serious symptoms soon set in—the stomach becomes disordered, more or less feverish signs appear, followed by loss of appetite, strength and energy. As a counteracter of these terrible symptoms it is only necessary to take moderate doses of Holloway's Pills, which will purify the blood, give a healthy action to the vital functions and restore a robust state of feeling to the greatest valetudinarian. During hot weather, when the spirits flag from exhaustion, occasional doses of Holloway's medicine will recruit the failing powers and renew vigour.—[Adv't.]

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR BOYS.

The usual meeting of the General Committee of this Institution was held on Saturday, the 1st instant, at Freemasons' Hall, Bro. Browse, V.P., presiding. There were also present: Bros. B. Head, R. W. Stewart, J. Symonds, J. R. Sheen, and F. Walters, V.P.'s; W. Young, N. Wingfield, T. Wilkins, D. Rose, M. A. Loewenstark, J. Weaver, T. J. Sabine, A. D. Loewenstark, H. Bartlett, Dr. Dixon, J. Turner, Grosjean, Motion, &c.

Bro. Frederick Binckes, Secretary, read the minutes of the previous meeting, which were confirmed.

Six candidates' names were added to the large list of applicants for admission to the school at the October election—making sixty applicants, viz., forty from the old list and twenty added during the last six months. Nine vacancies were declared. Such a state of affairs should not be allowed to exist. If every brother would but contribute a small sum annually, all applications would be received, want of funds only preventing more than the stated number being admitted.

Obituary.

BRO. WILLIAM DONALD, D.D.

Bro. William Donald, D.D., Chaplain of Union Lodge of Portland and the Grand Lodge of New Brunswick, recently died. He was made a Master Mason in Union Lodge on the 17th of August, 1865; exalted to the degree of a Royal Arch Mason in New Brunswick Chapter, on the 30th July, 1866; admitted to the circle of R. and S. Masters, 14th August, 1866; made a Knight of the Red Cross of Rome and Constantine, 9th February, 1869; a Knight of Malta, 2nd September, 1869; and was installed a member of the Order of Rose Croix, H.R.D.M., in Moore Chapter (Ancient Rite), the 14th April, 1870.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Will you have the goodness to say in next number of THE FREEMASON what is the correct size for a Master Mason's apron, as in two or three lodges that I know the size varies.

Your reply will much oblige
A MASTER MASON.

Church-street, Liverpool,
June 28th, 1871.

We copy the following from the Art Journal for this month, and are glad to see our Brother Rosenthal's work so highly spoken of:—

"A distinguished and very able artist, S. Rosenthal, has painted a picture to commemorate the inauguration of Freemasons' Hall. Bro. H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, the G. Master, the Earl of Zetland, the Earl de Grey and Ripon, and many other of the Brotherhood, 'Free and Accepted Masons,' figure in the group. It contains several portraits; we can depose to the accuracy of likeness in several of lesser note, while the leading personages will be recognised at once. The arrangement is excellent; each is fully seen while there is no overcrowding or confusion. The painter has necessarily introduced so many persons that perhaps grace of composition is sacrificed; but as an assemblage of portraits, it has been rarely surpassed; while as a work of art, it has high merit as well as interest, indeed, it may be justly ranked among the very best productions of its class. We presume it will be engraved, and probably some wealthy brother will present the picture to one of the Freemasons' Charities."

WE have received a ticket for the Grand Masonic Festival at Fountains Abbey on Wednesday next, the 12th inst., and regret our inability to attend. The object of the festival being to augment the fund for the "De Grey Scholarships," we are convinced it will ensure extensive support from the members of the Craft, and we wish its energetic promoters sunshine and success in their praiseworthy undertaking.

IN ROME.

ROME the capital of Italy! Rome the seat of a Masonic Grand Lodge! Such are the events of the day, and they may well arrest the attention of Europe—and especially of the Craft—even in this age of startling changes. Not a twelvemonth has elapsed since the dogma of Papal infallibility was launched from the Vatican; and now we find the champions of reason installed under the shadow of St. Peter's dome. But a few years ago, by a solemn curse, which ought to have swept Freemasonry away for ever, every member of the Brotherhood was consigned to perdition. And now the Grand Master of Italy dates his decrees from the city of the Cæsars, in sublime forgetfulness of the ill-advised and impotent malediction.

Truly, Time has reversed the verdict of the past, and many bitter memories of grief, of pain, and persecution are blotted out in the radiant hopes of the present. It is simply a matter of history that ever since the promulgation of the bull of Pope Clement XII., in 1738, against the Masonic Society, the Court of Rome has denounced the Fraternity in every land to which its influence extended, or where its voice could be heard; and not content with denunciation and proscription, there are well-authenticated instances that it has often, by means of the detestable tribunals of the Inquisition, satiated its vengeance in the blood of Masonic victims. If the prison walls of the Castle of St. Angelo could speak, many a hideous tale would be told, and many a scene of horror revealed. But we have no desire to dwell upon such a dismal subject now that the day of light has more than dawned, and when the sun of Freedom and Fraternity rides high over the walls of the Eternal City. It is the future of Freemasonry in that classic seat with which we are now concerned, and it is upon the results to be achieved by our Italian brethren in their onward march that we would fain rivet the attention of our readers. The Craft in Italy has suffered much from persecution, but more, incomparably more, from the mistaken policy of some misguided members within its pale. Every one knows how injurious to the progress of true Masonry was the rise of such associations as the Illuminati during the eighteenth century; and, beyond doubt, the evil which Weishaupt's band accomplished in Germany was equalled, if not excelled, by the Carbonari in Italy. The doctrines of the latter resembled in all essential points the teachings of the Bavarian professor, and their natural sequence was the disruption of every social tie by the rude process of revolution. Like Weishaupt, Maghella and other leaders of the Carbonari sought proselytes amongst the ranks of the Masonic community, and, unhappily, with too great success. At the same time, it must be remembered that fifty years ago the political condition of Italy was lamentable in the extreme. The nation groaned under the misrule of foreign despots, and insignificant princelings lorded it over the descendants of the conquerors of the world. A system of espionage prevailed, of which we in free England can form no adequate conception, and hence the rapid spread of secret political societies, whose members endeavoured to veil their proceedings under the mask of Masonry. This is a circumstance greatly to be regretted, but it by no means follows that the Carbonari were a branch of Masonry because several Masonic brethren took part in their proceedings, or were implicated in their designs. It only proves that a good and useful institution sometimes suffers through the faults and errors of its quasi-supporters. Not that we wish to brand the political opinions of some of the Carbonari with particular reprobation—many of its members were unquestionably honest men, who strove to compass the regeneration of their country by what they considered perfectly legitimate means, and much of their programme of liberty has since been practically achieved by kindred spirits. Our protest is levelled against the introduction of Freemasonry into the arena of politics at all—no matter what may be the pretext, or however laudable the objects sought to be attained.

In thus glancing at the past, our desire more especially is to warn, with all the emphasis at our command, our brethren of Italy against the pitfalls into which not a few Continental Masons have been allured, to their own destruction, and to the disgrace of the Masonic Order. The Italian Craft has a glorious prospect before it, but in the fulfilment of its destiny great wisdom as well as resistless strength will be required on the part of its rulers. Freemasonry to be respected must be untrammelled by extraneous associations; must be unconnected with political parties, although its development may be somewhat modelled upon peculiar national idiosyncracies. The Masonry of England and America may not in its entirety be adapted to the tastes or views of Masons in Italy, Spain, or Sweden, and a colourless uniformity cannot be expected to prevail in all nations. But the fundamental principle of non-interference in politics must be rigidly observed by all who desire to remain within the fold of ancient Freemasonry. No alliances with Communism, Carbonarism, or Fenianism can be tolerated. The Craft has a constitution of its own, and membership is incompatible with habitual infractions of the pure and primitive laws therein contained. Let the Italian Masons copy the example set by England in the practice of the great principles—Brotherly Love, Relief, and Truth. Let them steadily ignore the factions whose watchwords are hatred and revenge. Let them persevere in the promulgation of true and genuine Masonry, and they may rely upon the recognition and the support of all good Masons. The English Craft will watch with ardent hope, not unmingled with anxiety, the future career of their brethren in Italy. The leaders of the Grand Orient now seated in Rome have a brilliant but arduous task to encounter. Repressing all animosities, merging all minor differences of opinion, they may consolidate the union of their country by the cultivation and dissemination of those peaceful and fraternal ideas which are the basis of the Masonic Order. Failing this, their advent to the capital will be remembered merely as an epoch of great opportunities wasted, and the very lustre of their present success will serve but to exhibit the depth and darkness of their shame.

WE have pleasure in calling attention to an article extracted from the Daily News, and published in this issue, because we know that the sentiments expressed by the writer are sincere, and therefore worthy of respectful consideration. The installation of the Prince of Wales as the Worshipful Master of a Masonic Lodge is an event which, of course, may be regarded as the sequel to His Royal Highness's initiation into the Craft; but still we are all pleased to find that the Prince has determined to fulfill the rôle of a working Mason in our ceremonial assemblies, as well as in the advocacy of those charities which crown the Masonic structure in England. Our esteemed confrere of the Daily News—whose personal acquaintance we are pleased to have made—has rendered excellent service to the Craft upon many occasions, by the dispassionate and impartial tone of his criticisms; and he may rest assured that his genial labours will ever meet with the appreciation and approval of the Fraternity. In the preamble to his recent observations, allusion is made to the position which Freemasonry so honourably occupies in this country—a position of neutrality which enables the prince, the peer, and the representatives of every social grade to meet in fraternal communion. Freemasonry, as understood in England, cherishes as sacred and inviolable the principles of loyalty and attachment to the ancient institutions of the land. Hence our reverence for law, our devotion to order, our distaste to anarchy, our abhorrence of violent change. We are proud to be able to record that another instance of this deep-seated feeling on the part of English Masons was exhibited last week. By the special permission of the M.W. Grand Master, a Masonic demonstration, probably weak in numbers, but strong in zeal, took place at the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the Green Coat Schools at Camberwell. Unfortunately, although invited, we were unable to attend, but we have learned from those present that the proceedings were conducted with a dignity and decorum worthy of the reputation of the Craft. Brother Edward Clark, W.M. 1319, Past Provincial Grand Superintendent of Works for Middlesex, was entrusted with the direction of the Masonic programme, while the stone was actually laid by the Lord Bishop of Winchester.

It is so seldom that brethren in the metropolis have the opportunity of enacting a part in operative Masonry, that the efficient performance of a duty of this description becomes really important, and we have therefore the greater reason to rejoice that the ceremony was worked to the entire satisfaction of the Bishop and of the numerous and respectable assemblage present in honour of the occasion. Indeed, we are informed that his Lordship emphatically declared how pleased he was to meet "the Masons," and that he directed his discourse more especially to them as men who could understand and enforce its practical allusions. We are tempted to write thus much because an actual report of the meeting has not reached us, and may therefore add that a handsomely engraved silver trowel was presented to Bishop Wilberforce by the Sphinx Lodge, as a memento of the auspicious event of the day. The installation of the Heir Apparent as a W.M., and the kindly participation of a Right Reverend Prelate in a Masonic ceremony, show more clearly than words can convey how thoroughly engrafted in the minds of Englishmen are the peaceful, loyal, and religious tenets of the Craft. To use the old refrain, "There's nought but what's good to be understood, by a Free and an Accepted Mason."

SIR WALTER SCOTT was recently made a Freemason in the St. David's Lodge, No. 36, Edinburgh, holding of the Grand Lodge of Scotland.

We have received a copy of the Supplement to "Cook's Excursionist," giving the progress of the K. Templars through Ireland and their visit to Enniskillen, and are highly pleased at the reception they met with, and the manner they appear to have enjoyed themselves; want of space precludes our reproducing the account. We have also been favoured with a long report of their entertainment at Glasgow, which we are compelled to reserve till next week.

COWAN.

My thanks are due, and are offered, to Bro. Hughan, for the trouble he has taken to answer my question on the word COWAN. I submit, however, that what he has adduced from Bro. D. Murray Lyon, though very interesting and useful as to the use of the word COWAN by the operative Masons of the 16th and 17th centuries, does not in any way answer my question as to the origin and use of the word by speculative Masons. No doubt, it was a term employed by the operatives to denote a clandestine Mason, an illegitimate, who had not been initiated by a regular apprenticeship, as the craft required that every Mason should be; but we cannot use the word in that sense. If we can, then there is no distinction between a cowan and an intruder, for an illegitimate or non-initiate would be an intruder if he sought to enter a lodge. The operatives sometimes, as Bro. Hughan has shown from Bro. Lyon, admitted a cowan; the speculative Masons, never. But, I repeat, my inquiry was as to the origin or derivation of the word Cowan, and what it signifies amongst us. We know what an "intruder" is; what is a "cowan?" I suggested a listener, and gave my reason. Will or can any brother help me to a better derivation or Masonic import of the word?

THE CHARLESTON WARRANTS.

One of your correspondents says: "The proof of the Charleston warrants and statutes not being a forgery is to be found in the 3rd vol. of 'Histoire secrète de la Cour de Berlin, par Mirabeau.'" Another says that the same work "vol. 1, p. 215, shows that Frederick was imbecile on the 1st May, 1786, and had been dying for five months."

Perhaps some correspondent will give an extract from the 3rd vol.? If there is any allusion, however slight, in a book published in 1789, which has any bearing upon the subject, it is obvious that this could not be wholly an invention of 1802.

VISIT TO BRITAIN OF AMERICAN KNIGHTS TEMPLAR (p. 409.)

A most serious question has now arisen affecting members of encampments in Britain—in fact, now throughout the world. The question is: Are the Knights Templar meeting at Glasgow, under the name of the Girvan Encampment, a spurious body, or are they a legal body? A member of the Girvan Encampment boasts that they are the only legal body in Scotland. The sooner some light is given on this important subject to Knights Templar the better.

A KNIGHT TEMPLAR.

INFORMATION WANTED.

The friends of Bro. ADOLPHUS NOHL wish to learn his whereabouts. He is a German by birth, very tall and stout built, dark complexion, black hair and beard, slightly grey, and about 60 years of age. When last heard from he was in Liverpool, England, October, 1869. Direct information to Bishoh, Sherman and Co., Masonic Mirror office, San Francisco, California.

The press, generally, will confer a favor by copying the above. Will the London FREEMASON copy, also Masonic press throughout the world.—Masonic Mirror, San Francisco.

SUBORDINATION IN THE HIGHER DEGREES.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Will you permit me the briefest reply possible to this anonymous correspondent?

1. I mentioned the Royal Order of Scotland as proving the connection of the Rosy Croix with the Templar prior to the formation of the Rite of 25°.

2. There is really little difference betwixt all the K.H. degrees.

3. After examining the matter for myself, I believe in Rajon and Thory as to the origin of the A. and A. Rite rather than in the very much interested Mackey.

4. Your correspondent seems unable to see anything not expressed in the plainest language. I mentioned the trades of Pirlet and Lacorne as showing how ridiculous it was for a tailor and a dancing-master to invent a rite creating Emperors and Princes! I can afford to treat with contempt the ludicrous twist he has given to my business—one that employs all Lancashire, and in which, to make a bare living, I have had to turn over £50 to £100,000 per annum. Nor am I "Head of the Council of Rites," but a subordinate member thereof merely.

5. Your readers must form their own conclusions as to the quibble about Mirabeau's "History of the Court of Berlin"

6. In regard to my treatment of the S.G.C., I can only say that I usually treat people as I am treated. That I have had no correspondence on matters with the S.G.C. itself, but merely with one of their subordinates, who had insulted me, and for which I have as yet no apology, or remedy offered.

7. In reply to the last paragraph, I can only say that my own certificate is from a plate much over 50 years old, with a K.H. seal attached 100 years old, signed by aged members of the Order, and containing, amongst dignatorial Commanderships of our Ancient Council, the degrees of "Grand Inspector and Grand Prince and Keeper of the Ancient Royal Secrets;" and that I would not exchange this patent for those of all the other spurious councils in the world. The London S.G.C. have never hitherto shown any disposition to meet brethren half way. When they agree to recognise all the privileges of all the time-immemorial conclaves, my hostility ceases. But when this arrives, I will withdraw from all Masonry in which the allied bodies are mixed up, confine myself to the worthy old Craft, and recommend everybody else to do the same. The London governing bodies above Master Mason are the very hotbeds of Masonic vice and Masonic schism, and are simply contemptible.

Fraternally yours,

JOHN YARKER.

THE AMERICAN KNIGHTS TEMPLAR AND THE GLASGOW GIRVAN ENCAMPMENT.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Your correspondent, "Frater + Carolus," while professing to be anxious to secure a greeting for the American Knights Templar, at present in this country, takes a curious way of expressing that anxiety, namely, by finding fault with them for accepting the first invitation they received on landing on our shores. Would it not have accorded better with "Brotherly Love" if "Frater + Carolus" had endeavoured to excuse their fault, if unwittingly they had committed one, by attributing it to their want of correct information, rather than to invoke on their devoted heads the punishment of "exclusion from all other encampments or meetings of Knights Templar in England or Scotland"?

It would also have been more consistent with that "charity that should at all times characterise a Mason," as well as with truth, which should be another of our distinctive features, if he had made further enquiries before launching his invectives against the Girvan Encampment.

The "Cosmopolitan Calendar" is a very valuable compilation, but it is a new doctrine that an omission from its pages is to be taken as positive proof of illegality. It is true that the Girvan Encampment does not hold under what is called the Grand Priory of Scotland for the, to them, sufficient reason that they hold a charter of a date long anterior to the formation of that body; and therefore they do not feel inclined to give it up in order to receive one from an authority younger than themselves.

The Girvan Encampment, No. 32, is a perfectly legal body, working under a perfectly warranted charter, and in strict conformity to its terms. If there are illegal Templars in the neighbourhood of Glasgow, they have nothing in common with the Girvan Encampment, and any of "Frater + Carolus's" friends would find that they could not gain admission thereto at anything like the scale of fees he has named, nor unless they had been previously exalted in the Royal Arch degree, and were at the time in good standing with both their lodge and chapter.

The sneer about the different "calibre of the clandestine encampment at Aberdeen" we can afford to treat with the contempt it deserves, while admiring the logic that makes a difference of social rank the test of legality.

We think sufficient has been said to show brethren that they should take the trouble to ascertain facts before they rush into print, and under the shelter of a nom de plume, malign those who are working as legally as themselves.

G. W. WHEELER.

THE HIGH DEGREES.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

SIR,—In your issue of June 17th, you have an article by "An Irish H.K.T.," who says "the mere fact" of a brother seeking admittance to a Rose Croix chapter is taken as sufficient to debar him from that honour. He might also have added that there is at this time a notice before the Grand Encampment proposing that no brother shall know that he is to be brought forward; in fact, the members of the "higher degrees" are doing their best to make Freemasonry a large Conservative Club, where none but those with "gentle blood" or big purses will be admitted. This is so thoroughly un-masonic that I am sure the brethren will not permit themselves to be placed in such a false position.

"H.K.T." also says that after ballot in the chapter he is expecting (though of course he does not know he is to be proposed) to join, a ballot has to be taken in the Council of Rites. This applies with equal truth to a candidate for H.K.T. honours, for after a successful ballot in the encampment, of which the proposed being a member, he has again to go through the ordeal in the Grand Encampment, which gives it the power of refusing any one who may in any way have made himself disagreeable to members of the Grand Encampment, thus making this degree equally hard to obtain as that of Rose Croix, which no brother here can receive unless he is a K.T., thus violating the very constitution under which the Council of Rites works. The higher degrees in Ireland, "H.K.T." says, are, Masonically, almost "worthless." He should have said, "quite worthless," because they are no proof of Masonic worth, for the brother who works well all the degrees is the very one who will be refused, even though he may be a highly-educated intelligent man. It is also a fact that those who know most of Prince Masonry, and work it best, have got the degree out of Ireland.

I trust English Templars will not allow themselves to be brought into the condition we are here, but will hold to be free of all connection with the "Golden-square Council," and maintain their ancient rights and privileges with such supervision as may be necessary for proper working and uniformity of proceedings.

Yours,

"CONSTANCY."

Dublin, 29th June, 1871.

"OUR ANCIENT BRETHREN" ONCE MORE

[Reply to Bro. Howard's Letter of June 3rd, page 346.]

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Bro. Howard asked me to state the grounds for believing that the lines quoted by me the week previous—viz., "For seven of England's royal kings," &c.—were written by A. Mundy. Permit me, in the premises, to state that I used the words, "probably written by A. Mundy." My reason for that supposition was simply this: A. Mundy wrote in 1605 "Britania Re-united." It was written for the purpose of extolling the Merchant Tailors guild on the occasion of Lord Mayor's show. Just two years afterwards, viz., 1607, I find another poetical composition, written for the same object, on a similar occasion, closely following up the same ideas, stating the same facts, and possessing the same kind of jingle as the former. This led me to hazard the opinion that the two were written by the same individual. If my supposition was not right, I sincerely thank Bro. Howard for correcting me.

Fraternally yours,

JACOB NORTON.

Boston, U.S., June 16, 1871.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In the review of "The Proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts," by Bro. Hughan (June 10th), Bro. H. was pleased to designate our Deputy Grand Master as the Rev. Charles L. Woodbury. Permit me to correct him as far as the "Rev." is concerned. Bro. Woodbury is not a Rev., but a distinguished member of the bar. He formerly held the position of judge, and was at one time District Attorney of the United States, and during the last two sessions was a leading member of the Democratic party in the Massachusetts Legislature.

Yours fraternally,

JACOB NORTON.

Boston, U.S., June 23, 1871.

THE GRAND MASONIC GATHERING AT PENZANCE.

Penzance, Monday Afternoon.

The most ancient documents in England relating to Freemasonry is found in the Old Royal Library at the British Museum. It is a small quarto manuscript on vellum, at least 500 years old, and the second "article" begins thus:—

"The secunde artycul of good masonry,
As ge mowe hyt here hyr specyaly,
That every mayster, that ys a mason,
Most ben at the generale congregacyon,
So that he hyt reasonably y-tolde
Where that the semblé schal be holde;
And to that semblé he most nede gon,
But he have a resenabul skwsacyon."

The Masons of the westernmost and other provinces will have no "resenabul skwsacyon" (excuse) for non-acceptance of the invitation of their Grand Master if their brethren of Mount Sinai Lodge, at Penzance, can help it. For 120 years that lodge has been in existence—answering all reasonable demands on it, welcoming the brother who set foot on shore near it (it was held, in its earliest days, at the Ship, on the Quay); speeding him as he lost sight of his native land, perhaps forever; recruiting its ranks generation after generation; handing down its local as well as the world-wide traditions of the Craft; initiating the young; bearing its old men sorrowfully to the grave—in short, fulfilling the duties due to its neighbourhood and to the Fraternity; and it was not likely that it would omit anything in its power to give the country a fit and proper welcome. It is ten years since a similar "semblé" took place here. The lodge was then held at the "Union," as it had been for many previous years, but the visitors will now have to gather at the Public Buildings; and the sons of Hiram Abif will not fail to observe and value the massive pile and substantial workmanship before them, and the granite fountain whose fixture was expedited in their honour—a basin hewn from a block worthy the giant cities of Og and Bashan.

The lodge has received special attention for weeks, and its symbolism, adornments, and aids to "work" can hardly fail, we should think, to give satisfaction. The zealous Secretary, Bro. Goldsworthy, was taken seriously ill while superintending what is little else than a transformation of this apartment; but many of the Mount Sinai brethren, from the Mayor and Bro. F. Boase, P.M., down to "Entered Apprentices," have taken an active interest in the work carried on by Bro. C. Curnow as a cabinet-maker and decorator, and by Mr. Pine with his paints and brushes. We have heard that unwritten Masonic law says: "Three must rule a lodge, five may hold a lodge, but only seven can make a lodge perfect." Now, Mount Sinai Lodge would contain seven times seven comfortably; half as many again of the Fellow-Craft, with harodim and menatzchim (rulers and overseers), may crowd it to-morrow; but the only regret is that it is not large enough to hold all who may wish to pass within its portals. This compactness, however, suits the present members of Mount Sinai Lodge, which shelters about forty brethren, and will not interfere with to-morrow's larger gathering at ten o'clock. This lodge, used hitherto by warrant only, will be formally dedicated by the Provincial Grand Master. The province assembles in the lecture-room, contiguous to St. John's Hall, which has been temporarily decorated and fitted for Masonic gatherings. This apartment holds comfortably 200, and its walls are brilliantly festooned and ornamented with banners, devices, symbols, and watchwords. Overhead, the star-sprinkled firmament; in the East, sending its rays from above the Master's chair over the lodge, the All-seeing eye, denoting "the omnipresence of God in His watchful care over His creatures, and the equal distribution of those good things which will contribute to make us happy in this world." So at least Dr. Oliver, one of the great Masonic writers, tells us. The clouds above the Master's head may also denote majesty and power. Near them are the Divine command, "Let there be light," and the fulfilment, "And there was light." The Master's seat (which, as well as others, is of great age) is placed on a dais between the well-known two pillars (beautifully marbled by Mr. Pine.) The sides of the room are pannelled by other pillars; and between these are suspended pictures emblematic of various degrees in the Craft, the portraits of departed or existing worthies, and prints of the benevolent institutions of the Masons. Opposite the Provincial Grand Master is seen the "counterfeit presentment" of Bro. Curnow, one of the oldest and most respected brethren Mount Sinai ever had; to the South is one who deservedly stood high in the province, Bro. Richard Pearce. Both are three-quarter length, and excellent portraits. That amidst the rich and comfortable-looking furniture of the lodge, should meet the eye at every turn compass, and plumb, and square, every one would expect. Tesselated pavement; sun, moon, stars; sacred names (emblazoned, but unmentionable); triple taus, blazing stars, angles; hands, pentalphas; the theological ladder, with its "rounds" of faith, hope, and charity; the best and greatest of all books—wherever the eye turns there is something to remind it of belief in God, of the theological and cardinal virtues, of duty to be done in this world, of a state of reward and happiness hereafter. He must be a dullard (and, of course, no Mason is) who can look at these suggestive signs without being reminded of the highest and holiest principles.

But it is not permitted mortal man to live on thought. Bread must be had for the body as well as food for the mind. After long journeys, duties more or less arduous, and a walk to St. Mary's Church and back, the brethren must dine; and if what we see and hear be correct, they will find good refreshment after labour. St. John's Hall is occupied for sixty feet of its length by three tables, with one at the head of these and at right angles to them. The orchestra is decorated by beautiful plants from Mr. R. F. Belitho's conservatories; the space beneath the galleries is draped with flags; the Provincial Grand Master contributes largesse from the abundant stores of shell-fish formed around his island kingdom, and from the lovely gardens of Tresco. Bro. and Right Worshipful Master Augustus Smith is himself superintending to-day the arrangements; Bro. W. Mitchell, of the "Western," is busy in the many preparations required of a host who has a reputation to maintain. Penzance is remote, and has not the advantage of a more central situation; but, should fine weather favour the Craft, not the least pleasant of their annual convocations will be held in that town to-morrow.—Western Daily Mercury, July 3.

[A full report of the proceedings on Tuesday will be given in our next.]

SIX HUNDRED THOUSAND MASONS.

We have at the present time, upward of 7,000 Lodges in active operation in the United States, with an aggregate membership of 600,000, with an annual increase of about 50,000. The Annual dues to Grand Lodges, so far as have been reported, amount to the sum of 30,138 dollars. And when we consider that the reports from which those figures are taken, are most of them, for the year 1869, and many as far back as 1866, and that the increase has been continuing from that time to the present at the rate of about 50,000—with these figures before us, we may truly say: We are a nation of Freemasons! and should the principles which are inculcated extend with our membership, and be forcibly impressed upon the minds of the initiates, so that they would practise them, the institution would be the promoter of much good, and bring no discredit upon us as a nation. Six hundred thousand brothers linked together in one common bond of union, strong and firm, one and inseparable. And among this number are to be found men of every nation and religious creed; men of different political opinions; men of every profession; men occupying high places of trust in society and the civil government. And against this band, which cannot, as a class, be out-ranked for intelligence, patriotism, liberality, and all those virtues that characterise the good and true, a crusade is being inaugurated. A black cloud, no bigger than a man's hand, has arisen, and threatens death and destruction to all Societies; a cloud full of thunder and brimstone, which was conceived in the brains of a few old ladies wearing breeches, who were recently assembled in grand convention at Pittsburg, where they resolved that it was advisable to put an end to all this humbuggery of assisting brothers in distress, and "doing unto others as you would they should do unto you." In fact, they are fully persuaded in their own minds, that if the earth shall continue to revolve on its axis, and not in precise accordance with their views, then the whole machinery must be stopped. All we have to say to them is, when they succeed in overthrowing the Masonic Institution they will write to us; but we are fully persuaded that it will not be while there are "hungry ones to be fed," "naked ones to be clothed," "sick and afflicted to be attended," the "widow to be consoled," and the "fatherless to be comforted."—The Square.

GRAND LODGE OF NEW YORK.

The Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of the Ancient and Honourable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons of the State of New York assembled at Apollo Hall, in annual convention. Nearly all the Grand Officers were present at the first session, and these, in full regalia, together with the representatives of subordinate lodges in the State, to the number of about 2,000, made the assemblage an imposing one. The lodge was opened in due form at 2 p.m., the respective Grand Officers taking their appropriate stations, and with prayer offered by R.W. and Rev. Bro. R. L. Schoonmaker, Grand Chaplain. After opening, an ode prepared for the occasion was finely rendered by a choir selected for the purpose, under the direction of W. Bro. W. F. Sherwin of St. Cecile Lodge, No. 568, of New York.

On motion of R.W. Bro. W. T. Woodruff, all Master Masons of subordinate lodges in good and regular standing were permitted to visit the Grand lodge during the sessions.

The R.W. Bro. Rev. John G. Webster, Grand Chaplain, delivered the annual Chaplain's address—an address containing much of interest to the Craft, and which was listened to throughout with general attention.

On motion of W. Bro. Isaac L. Brown, it was ordered that the address be printed in full in the transactions.

The M.W. Bro. John H. Anthony, Grand Master, next delivered his address, during the reading of which he was frequently interrupted by applause, and particularly at the portion of it relating to French Masonry, and as to the attitude to be taken by the New York Grand Lodge towards the Grand Lodge of Quebec. The address, although much briefer than usual, is one of peculiar significance and of special importance. On motion, it was ordered that it be referred to a special Committee for subdivision. The Deputy Grand Master, Senior and Junior Wardens were appointed as such Committee.

R.W. Bro. James M. Austin, Grand Secretary, presented his annual report, which stated that the total amount of money received for the Masonic year ending May 31, 1871, was 63,854 dollars. The number of lodges making returns during the year has been 635, and in these bodies the following work has been accomplished: Initiations during the year, 6,778; affiliations, 1081; total number of Masons registered, 7,859. The number of Masons admitted during the year has been 1,844; expelled, 47; suspended, 33; stricken from roll, 2,037; restored to membership, 349; died, 702; total number of Masons now in State in good standing, 75,262; total number of warranted lodges on roll, 649.

On Wednesday, R.W. Bro. Breed presented the report of the Committee on Foreign Correspondence, which, after some discussion, was, on motion, received. The report is a pamphlet of 100 printed pages, in which the status of Masonry throughout the world is given in detail. To the report a resolution was appended in relation to the Grand Lodge of Quebec, advising that the Grand Lodge of New York extend to the Grand Lodge of Quebec, in the province of Quebec, Canada, full and fraternal recognition as a regular Grand Lodge. The story of the differences existing between the two Grand Lodges of Canada extends over too long a period and would occupy too great a space for reproduction at this time. Suffice it to say that the whole question has been thoroughly reviewed by the Committee, and from the investigation made the above conclusion is arrived at. The Quebec Grand Lodge has heretofore been recognised by Grand Lodges in the United States and by the Grand Lodge of Nova Scotia. Of the States bordering on Canada only New York and Vermont, as yet, withhold recognition. Before acting in the matter, the main record of the facts bearing on the question was read by direction of the Grand Master.

The resolution appended to the report was subsequently unanimously adopted, and the Grand Lodge, rising, received the new Grand Lodge of Quebec with the grand honours.

On Thursday, the third day of session, the Grand Lodge proceeded with the annual election of officers,

M.W. Bro. John H. Anthon retiring from the chair, while his place was occupied by M.W. Bro. Isaac Phillips. For the office of Grand Master for the ensuing year the name of the present incumbent was proposed by M.W. Bro. Stephen H. Johnson. R.W. Bro. William T. Woodruff, on the part of an opposition, offered as a candidate W. Bro. Gilbert E. Wood, Master of Pilgrim Lodge, No. 204, of New York city. The Grand Master appointed R.W. Bros. G. Brody and C. B. Wade, and Bro. C. Addoms, W.M., tellers, and balloting followed. The total number of votes cast was 2,272, of which the present Grand Master received 1,910, and Wood, 356—scattering, 6. The result, on being declared, was received with great applause, where upon M.W. Bro. John H. Anthon was presented to the Grand Lodge by a committee consisting of M.W. Bros. Johnson, Evans, and Jenkinson, and accepted the honour conferred in a few brief but appropriate words.

At the request of the Grand Master, M.W. Bro. Stephen H. Johnston took the East, when the following officers were re-elected by acclamation:—R.W. Bros. Christopher G. Fox, Deputy G. Master; Edmund L. Judson, Senior Grand Warden; and James W. Husted, Junior Grand Warden. Each of the officers were in turn notified of their election by committees appointed for the purpose, and, upon being presented to the lodge, accepted the positions. M.W. Bro. John W. Simons, present Grand Treasurer, was re-elected by acclamation. The lodge then proceeded to the election of Grand Secretary, upon which something of a contest arose, the names of R.W. Bros. James M. Austin (now Secretary) and Frederick W. Herring being both presented. The election resulted as follows: Total number of votes cast, 1,740—Austin, 1,509; Herring, 231. R.W. Bro. Austin was thereupon declared duly elected, and, being present, accepted the position in a feeling address. R.W. Bros. the Revs. R. L. Schoonmaker, F. C. Ewhr, and John G. Webster were next re-elected Grand Chaplains by acclamation. Also W. Bro. Johnston Fountain was re-elected Grand Pursuivant; W. Bro. John Hoole, Grand Tyler; and R.W. Bro. George H. Raymond, Grand Lecturer. The remaining Grand Officers holding their respective offices under appointment of the Grand Master, the election was declared closed, and, on motion, the officers elected were all duly installed by M.W. Bro. James Gibson with the usual ceremonies.

The Grand Lodge concluded its annual communication on Friday, the 9th. After opening, a letter was read by the M.W. Grand Master Anthon, which had been recently received by M.W. Bro. Jenkinson, Representative of the Grand Lodge of Ireland, near this jurisdiction, giving an account of Masonry in that country. Among other matters mentioned, was that a new Masonic hall had recently been erected in Dublin at a cost of 80,000 dollars, and also that a new lodge had just been instituted in the University of Dublin, which was working well, many of the professors and students having already become members thereof.

W. Bro. Seaman, from Committee on Constitution and Laws, reported in favour of the resolution increasing the yearly Grand Lodge dues from fifty cents to seventy-five cents, twenty-five cents of which sum should be devoted to the Hall and Asylum Fund. The report occasioned debate, when Grand Master Anthon, passing the gavel to M.W. Bro. Stephen H. Johnson, addressed the Grand Lodge, making a stirring and eloquent appeal in aid of the great charitable enterprise in which the Fraternity is now engaged. It was the first time, he said, that he had publicly called upon the Craft for aid in the work, and he sincerely trusted it would never again become necessary that he should do so. A scene of much enthusiasm followed, the resolution was adopted unanimously, and voluntary offerings were immediately made to a large amount. Although the exact sum is not known, it is estimated that nearly 6,000 dollars were added to the fund. Nearly all the Grand Officers donated their fees for attendance and travelling expenses, about 30 dollars each, and many of the representatives followed the example thus set. W. Bro. Robert H. Thomas, of Kane, and W. Bro. Henry D. Walker, of Independent Royal Arch, both lodges of this city, on behalf of these bodies, donated 1,000 dollars each, and several other Masters of lodges pledged themselves in sums of 100 dollars and upwards. W. Bro. Isaac H. Brown, Master of Puritan Lodge, individually donated 200 dollars. The result of the Grand Master's appeal was a most gratifying one.

When the enthusiasm had somewhat subsided, the Grand Master announced that the list of appointed Grand Officers, and that of District Deputies, for the ensuing year would be made out and announced after the Grand Lodge had ceased its labours. Also the Committee of five, authorised by the resolution providing for a revision of the Constitution, Prayer was then offered by R.W. Bro. the Rev. R. L. Schoonmaker, and the Grand Lodge was adjourned sine die.

THE FREEMASONS.

[From the Daily News of July 5.]

A striking contrast between Freemasonry as it is known in Great Britain and Freemasonry as it is regarded in some Continental countries was furnished by yesterday's Court Circular. The installation of the Prince of Wales as Worshipful Master of the Alpha Lodge of Freemasons was recorded therein, and one more testimony given of the complete harmony which prevails between constitutional government and the tenets of the Craft. It is the boast of Freemasons that their Order stands alone, and nothing offends a zealous brother more deeply than to affect to regard the Craft as an organisation of similar character to those recently described in these columns—the Foresters and the Odd Fellows. That which is the boast, and the laudable boast, of the two latter bodies, Freemasons repudiate with disdain. "We are not an insurance office. We are not self-seeking. Higher motives than mere worldly prudence govern us. No one is admitted into our ranks who does not declare himself uninfluenced by mercenary or other unworthy motives"—such is the outspoken creed of the Brotherhood, of which the Prince of Wales is a ruler. Those members of the general public who believe Freemasonry to be in any sense a benefit society might listen with advantage to the debates of the Grand Lodge, which is presided over by the Marquis of Ripon, as Grand Master, and attended by the leading members of the Craft. Grand Lodge, it may be explained, is the parliament of Freemasonry, and holds four regular meetings in each year. It is composed of Freemasons who have attained, by services rendered and the suffrages of their brethren, a certain defined position in private lodges to which they belong, and who meet and deliberate as representatives of the Order at home and abroad. Grand Lodge is, then, a strictly constitutional body, with a sway which extends over the four quarters of the globe. At Simla and at New Brunswick; at Shanghai, Barbadoes, the Cape of Good Hope, Tasmania, and Australasia are Freemasons' lodges which are worked under the Grand Lodge of England, and the members of which are guided and governed by its decrees. The debates of Grand Lodge are published in the Masonic organs of opinion, and it is certain that the doctrine it lays down has considerable influence for good or evil on the mind and temper of the Craft. It occasionally happens that discussion arises concerning the recommendations made by the various boards and sub-committees, and when a proposed grant of money to a distressed brother is the text, no doctrine is laid down more forcibly than that Masonic work and Masonic honours cannot be held to purchase a right of relief. The brethren are frequently warned against encouraging men to neglect their business for the acquisition of Masonic rank, and few things would astonish an outsider more than the gravity and importance with which the distinctions of Freemasonry are invested by their possessors and their aspirants. What is termed "the purple" of the Order, in allusion to the hue of the insignia worn by those who have attained it, represents the Masonic peerage, and its holders are recognised as leaders wherever Masons congregate. The Alpha Lodge, of which the Prince of Wales has just been made Master, is composed exclusively of wearers of the purple—in other words, of a selected number of the Past and Present Grand Officers of the Order, and, unlike every other Masonic lodge, its members are nominated, not elected. No new blood is brought into the Alpha Lodge save by the special intervention of the Grand Master, who nominates the brother he wishes to bring in, such nomination being equivalent to a Royal command. Lodges, it may be explained, are congregations of Freemasons formed into separate clubs, who make their own by-laws, ballot for new members, and elect their own chiefs. Some of these have special privileges, dating from remote periods, or due to the fact of exalted Freemasons—Royal Grand Masters or what not—having belonged to them. The first time the Prince of Wales visited a private lodge in this country was on the occasion of the Centenary Festival of the Jerusalem Lodge, a few months ago, when he won golden opinions from the Freemasons present when he formally announced his intention of making himself a "working" brother, and when he was, with the Earl of Carnarvon, made an honorary member of the lodge.

Freemasons, it may be remarked, rarely enter into particulars concerning the nature of "the work" to which they devote so much labour and time, but concurrent testimony proves it to be of an arduous character, and men are found who declare it to exact as much care and attention as the acquisition of several languages. What all the world can understand are the charities of the Order, by means of which a vast number of boys and girls are educated, fed, and clothed, with as close and careful supervision as is attainable by parents in any class of society, and which are looked after and ruled by honorary committees with a watchful energy which it is impossible to praise too highly. At Woodgreen is the Freemasons' Boys' School, an establishment which is well worth a journey to see; for while in every detail by which the health and comfort of lads is secured it may challenge comparison with the best public schools in the country, its system of tuition is so carefully adapted to the individual characteristics and talents that the annual examinations yield the most flattering results. One of the prizes given here every year is unique in character, and is bestowed by the boys themselves. The lad who is most popular among his school-fellows receives a handsome medal, such medal being voted by the boys, and awarded irrespective of scholastic proficiency or the good word of the masters. The Freemasons' Girls' School, on Wandsworth Common, is another establishment by which the Craft may be content to be judged; while the Asylum for Aged Freemasons and their Widows is what its name indicates, and confers great benefits upon the indigent and old. This is nearly all that the most persevering inquirer can learn respecting Freemasonry as it flourishes in England. Some important alterations have been made recently in the rules of the two first institutions, by means of which they will be more closely identified with the Order than before; but it is a little remarkable that the fruits of Freemasonry resolve themselves, so far as the outer world is concerned, into two excellent schools and a set of almshouses. If the student turns to the Masonic publications, of which there are two, THE FREEMASON and The Freemason's Magazine, both well conducted, he will find elaborate controversies upon abstruse subjects. "Our Ancient Brethren," their sayings and doings, are constantly referred to, and notes and queries of an antiquarian and archaeological character abound. A week rarely passes without familiar reference to King Solomon's Temple; while Knights of Malta, Knights Templar, Supreme Grand Councils, Mark Masters, Rites of Misraim, and a host of other fantastic titles give rise to correspondence, controversy, and leading articles. For Freemasonry has branches and degrees which are not "recognised," but which yet include many of its leading authorities in their ranks. If there could be a form of dissent which the Established Church, as such, ignored, but in which many of the bench of Bishops held offices of honour concurrently with their episcopal rank, it would furnish an exact parallel to some of the anomalies in English Freemasonry. The Prince of Wales, for example, is a Past Grand Master and a Masonic Knight Templar, yet the degree of Knight Templar is not "recognised;" the Earl of Carnarvon is Deputy Grand Master and Past Grand Master of the Mark Degree, yet the Mark Degree is not "recognised;" though no man can be a member of either Order who is not first a Freemason proper. What is called Mark Masonry furnishes, perhaps, the most curious anomaly of all, for while in Scotland and Ireland it is held to be an essential portion of Freemasonry, in England it has a separate jurisdiction and a separate Grand Lodge. One result is separate forms of charity, and the Annual Festival of the Mark Benevolent Fund, which is to be held in a private room of the Crystal Palace on the 28th of this month, is an illustration of the varied forms in which the Institution appeals to the kindly impulses of the initiated.

ANCIENT RUINS.

Ancient Egypt, Palestine, and the East.

BY M. W. ALFRED, A.M., M.D.

CHAPTER III.

King Solomon was the only Hebrew sovereign, whose empire compared with that of Rameses, the Scriptural Pharaoh, in extent and magnificence. It was more than five hundred years after the reign of this Pharaoh that the Hebrew kingdom attained to this greatness. The throne of Solomon "was made of ivory, and overlaid with pure gold. And there were six steps to the throne with twelve lions standing thereon, six on each side, and two lions standing beside the royal seat. And King Solomon surpassed all the kings of the earth in riches and wisdom. And all the kings of the earth sought the presence of Solomon, and brought him presents," and "he reigned over all the kings from the river unto the land of the Philistines, and to the borders of Egypt" (2 Chron., 9-26). Like Rameses, "he built treasure cities, all that he desired" (1 Kings, ix., 15), throughout his vast dominions. Five centuries before this, the captive Hebrews built for Pharaoh treasure cities, "Pithon and Rameses (Exod. i., 2). The gorgeousness of his ivory, gold-laid throne did not far exceed that of Rameses. When the 73 days of mourning had passed, on account of the death of Seti, the father of Rameses, he presented himself at the palace for public coronation. Under the main portico stood a magnificent dais, or chair of state, upon supports of ebony, carved in symbolical caryatides. It contained a throne of ivory, the base of which represented in gilded relief the spirit, the emblem of wisdom united with strength, and the lion, the symbol of courage.

Of this throne, the coloured statues of Tmei, the goddess of justice, and of Hor-Meni, the sun god of truth, with outstretched arms and expanded wings, formed the background and sustained the dais.

The exhumed Papyri explain many things otherwise quite obscure, and their statements entirely correspond with the writings of the historians of ancient Egypt, namely, Herodotus, Diodorus, and the later Champollion.

We are apt to speak of the Temple of Solomon as his greatest work, when, in fact, it was but an inconsiderable part of his labour, and was a very small structure when compared with other national temples.

Solomon built the walls of Jerusalem, Milo, the house of the Forest of Lebanon, his own house, which consumed almost twice as much time as the temple, the house of Pharaoh's daughter, and the cities of Hazor, Megiddo, Gezer, Beth-Horon, Baalath, Tadmor, and all the treasure cities he desired (1 Kings, ix., 15).

The house of the Forest of Lebanon was a larger building than the temple. It was 175 feet long, 87 feet wide, and 52 feet high. The temple was 107 feet long and 40 feet wide. The "most holy house," as it is called, in the rear of the temple, was 49 feet square, and the Peristyle, or porch, was 20 by 40, and 220 feet high; in front of which stood the two famous brazen pillars. If we add to the length of the temple the porch and the "most holy house," its length will be 183 feet, the porch being 37 feet higher than the whole length of the temple.

The temple, then, was much in the shape of the letter L. It was a costly edifice in gold and precious stones. The ceilings were covered with beaten gold, and the "most holy" portion was literally covered with plates of beaten gold, of vast thickness and purity. This, together with the golden furniture, was a great temptation to avaricious rival kingdoms to destroy and plunder this consecrated house. This was the well-known custom of those times, as the numerous ruins in Egypt, Syria, and the East abundantly testify. The temple at Baalbec, of which six columns are now standing, was a vastly larger edifice than that at Jerusalem.

This temple stood on a raised elevation 25 feet above the soil, its length being 1,000 feet. The portico was 180 feet by 37 (as large as King Solomon's temple) and its first court was 250 by 200 feet. The apartment in front of the temple proper, was 440 by 370 feet. Fronting this was the peristyle, 290 by 160, supported by 54 Corinthian columns, 7 feet at base and 5 at top; 62 feet in length, supporting an entablature of 14 feet, making in all a height of 76 feet. The western wall contains stones 64 feet long and 13 feet 5 inches square. In the quarries, one-fourth of a mile from the temple, there is a stone dressed 84 feet 4 inches long, 17 feet 2 inches broad, and 14 feet 7 inches deep.

Some have dated the building of the temple of Baalbec prior to all historical record; but King Solomon built Tadmor, the ruins of which appear as antiquated as those of Baalbec, and Tadmor was much the same style of architecture. Moreover, we have the scripture record, that Solomon built Baalath.

Now, is it not quite probable that both these names specify the same building and place? Some of the stones are bevelled in the same manner as those at Jerusalem. These are found in the substructions at Baalbec, and are sufficient to direct the attention of the antiquarian to King Solomon as the builder of this mammoth temple. It is true that we have no knowledge of the city of Heliopolis, where this temple was built, prior to the second century, and then only from medals, unless it is mentioned in the Scriptures as "Baalath" (1 Kings, xi., 15). The medals date no further back than the days of the Emperor Nerva, who succeeded Domitian A.D. 96.

John Malala, in the seventh century, ascribes the building of this temple to Antoninus Pius, who was converted to Christianity while Emperor of Rome, in the year 140 of the Christian era. This late date as the period of its erection is probably quite chimerical.

The temple at Jerusalem, as before stated, was immensely costly in gold and diamonds, and exceeded, perhaps, in its expensiveness many of the larger temples. But its arrangement into court, porch, and sanctuary was similar to those built in Egypt centuries before. "In all the great cities of the valley of the Nile, the sacred edifices enclosed within their limits, between the Pronaos and the sanctuary of the gods, a spacious hall which, owing to the numerous columns supporting its massive ceiling or carved and tinted granite, received the title of Hypostyle from the Greeks. The one that Seti (the father of Rameses) caused to be built in the temple of Karnac is celebrated among them all for its dimensions—one hundred yards by fifty, and its hundred and thirty-four columns, a dozen of which sustained the central part of the ceiling at the height of seventy-two feet from the soil upon capitals of twenty yards in circumference." The richness and grandeur of the columns, reliefs, and mural paintings of these hypostylic halls of the ancient temples in Egypt, as restored by the French Commission, exceed all other attempts at display in Palestine or on the face of our globe.

If Solomon built Baalbec, or even improved it, as was the custom of conquerors in order to immortalise their names, he improved in the magnitude and arrangement of this work very much upon the first temple building he erected at Jerusalem.—Michigan Freemason, June, 1871.

THE PLAIN OF PHILISTIA.

BY CAPTAIN WARREN, R.E.

It is no idle dream to suppose that Palestine might, in a few years, become a land flowing with milk and honey; even with the present inhabitants, under an upright Government, the land would in a short time change its appearance, and, as it is, the country has changed in parts to a small extent, due to the alteration in the Government, brought about by the influence of public opinion of the West asserting itself even in Syria. Look how those villages have begun to thrive which have been mortgaged to the Greek converts; and watch the cloud resting over the Christian village of Beitt Jala in the autumn sun, with its groves of olives, while all around is the brazen sky.

At present, however, Palestine—Philistia in particular—has not a tithe of the population that it would support; its fruit trees are left to take care of themselves, its waters allowed to run underground instead of on the surface.

Philistia consists of an undulating plain from 50 to 300ft. above the level of the sea, reaching thirty-two miles from Ekron to Gaza, with a breadth of from nine to sixteen miles. To the east of this the hills commence, not the hill country, but a series of low spurs and undulating ground, culminating in hogs' backs running nearly north and south, and rising in places to 1,200ft. above the ocean; to the east of these there is a steep descent of 500ft. or so to valleys which break through the barriers much in the same manner as we find the rivers forming passes through the chalk hills between Aldershot and Chatham. To the east of these again the hill country commences, and in two or three miles we rise to altitudes of 1,700 to 2,000ft.—the back bone of the country being at an elevation of 2,000 to 3,000ft.

In the hill country the spurs, not more than one mile or so apart, are often separated by narrow ravines 1,500 to 2,000ft. deep, at the bottom of which in the rainy season rapid torrents roll. Follow them into the plain and see what becomes of them; but first look at the existing maps. In one they appear to traverse the plains in a different direction to what they do in the next. The fact is, the bulk of the water reaches the ocean underground; on coming into the plain it forms marshes and pools, and quietly sinks away, while the bed of the stream itself in the plain is merely a narrow ditch some 6ft. wide and 4ft. deep. You may leave the water at the commencement of the wady mouth, ride over the plain without seeing anything of it, and meet it again welling out of the ground close to the sea shore, forming wide lagoons there. Now if proper precautions were taken, were the people industrious, and the country cultivated and clothed again with trees, the waters flowing in the ravines might be conducted over the plains in the early summer months and induce the rich soil to yield a second crop.

The encroachment of sand is one of the most serious evils now to be dreaded on the coast of Palestine. Already Gaza and Ashdod are threatened, and nothing is done to arrest the enemy, though there is little doubt but that the danger might be averted by obliging the landed proprietors to take common action against their silent foe.

On the coast near the mouth of Wady Semsim, which at this point flows north-west, the sand encroachment, proceeding N.E. by E., is evidently arrested by the waters of this stream, for on its left side are high sand banks dropping abruptly into the water, while to its right is low cultivated land.

The method of progression of the enemy here is plainly visible, for the whole country consists of sand-banks sloping down at 10° towards the prevailing wind, and at 30° to 35° on the lee side. Thus the sand is gently rolled up the slope of 10° by the wind, and then falls down the other side by its own weight, so that it actually does quietly advance towards the object it intends to overwhelm in banks 30 to 50ft. in height.

It is curious in traversing these sand hills to come upon the site of some orchard which has been covered perhaps for hundreds of years. You suddenly come upon a sort of crater in the sand, 40ft. deep, at the bottom of which flourishes an apple tree; then you come upon a fig tree growing in the same manner, and lastly upon a little patch of ground, quite below the level of the sand, with a house attached; but even this patch of ground has several feet of sand over it. The husbandman's chief duty appears to consist in dragging up the sand in baskets from the bottom of the craters to the surface. The trees growing in these little hollows are very fruitful, and no wonder, for they have no wind, plenty of sun, and good moist earth to grow in, the superincumbent sand being a non-conductor, prevents evaporation from the soil below, and keeps it moist through the summer.

During the time I was in Philistia, I examined and surveyed 800 square miles, and my time was so fully taken up with the work by day and night, that there was little time for any other examination; the latitude and longitude of more than 200 points on this plain are now fixed and published for the first time.—Quarterly Statement of the Palestine Exploration Fund.

THE SIEGE OF DAMASCUS.

BY MARIA J. BISHOP.

Damascus had surrendered, and the frightened Christians, long deprived of help, had reluctantly lowered the Cross, as the Crescent flashed along the walls. The richer merchants and citizens had left the place, under a safe conduct from Saladin, and those who remained—chiefly the poorer classes and women—sought in vain to escape through the strongly-barred and guarded portal.

It was the evening of the conquest, when an Emir, whose jewelled turban and the rich baldric which bound his breast, proclaimed him a leader in the Saracen host, entered the pavilion of the Moslem monarch. His dark, flashing eye, and the perfect symmetry of his form and features, were not unlike those of the former, while the restless glance and proud curl of the lip told of ambition more eager, if not more boundless, than his brother's.

"How, Melek?" said the Sultan, without lifting his eyes from the dispatches before him. "Do the Christians rally, or has the success which the Prophet hath granted subdued, at length, their proud spirit?"

"They sue for mercy, my Lord," replied the Emir; "and, sooth to say, it pities me to see the poor and trembling to remain, yet unable to pay the tribute gold. I would give Damietta as their ransom?"

"Go, Melek; let them take oath they have not the required gold; give them a drachma, and dismiss them at the gate."

The Emir bowed till his glittering turban touched the hand of his brother, and hastened to fulfil his errand.

All night the wretched fugitives poured through the city gate; old men tottering on the arm of some son or daughter; women, whose pale cheeks and unbound tresses told their distress; children, hand in hand, bowed their lips to the cross, and passed the heathen guard, receiving a piece of silver at the gate, until at length the tall spires of the minarets began to glitter with the coming dawn.

"Back! back!" cried the guard, as the fugitives still pressed on, "the ransom is ended."

A wild shriek rose in concert from the throng, as, wild with terror, they saw themselves hemmed in by the scimitars of the troops.

As the sun rose clear, banners were seen advancing, and, heading his splendid guard, Saladin advanced, borne on his jet-black steed. His kingly eye swept for a moment the crouching throng of fugitives, then, turning to Melek, he said:

"Brother, you have performed your alms; now let me bestow mine." And, waving his hand, he ordered the gate to be flung wide, bidding the crowd pass through.

Placing a guard in the mosques and palaces, Saladin, in a few days, left the city, knowing his possession of the city would be contested. Meanwhile the Christians were not idle. A large body of Templars had moved across the desert, under their indomitable leader, Reginald de St. Aldemar, and leaving a few of their number to defend Jerusalem, had rapidly crossed the plains of the Jordan. While Saladin had drawn towards the mountains, the bravest of his Emirs, Mustapha Achmet, with ten thousand Kurds and Saracens, hastened to intercept their path.

The plains around the city were crowded with Christian fugitives, when, like a black cloud, the Moslems swooped upon them. Rapidly the Saracens swept down from the surrounding hills, until the plain was white with flashing turbans, their dark, swarthy brows and jewelled vestments moving strangely among the motley crowd of Jews and Christians. Suddenly on the heights which skirted the Lebanon Range the tall forms and mail-clad horses of the Templars appeared like a serried phalanx.

The terrified women and children saw their danger, and clung to one another in despair. The Templars saw it, too, and instantly staying charge, pressed back their horses until they reared.

It was a goodly sight as they ranged rank on rank, the noblest soldiery in Christendom, their long lances held in rest, and their noble countenances seen through the raised visor. The glittering cross of the order flashed in the beams of the morning, as it towered over the crested helmets below.

For a moment all seemed uncertain. The crowd of helpless beings, at the mercy of the foe, blanched the brow of those who would have faced a thousand infidels.

A moment only intervened, and Mustapha, whose cruelty equalled his renown, ordered the helpless band to be massacred. As the death-shriek arose, the trumpets of the knights sounded. A shout arose that shook the rocks around:

"For the Temple! for the Temple! Ha, Beausant!" And, in thundering charge, they swept down upon the heathen host.

Back and forward surged the tide of battle—swords met and mail rang on mail. The countless throngs of Saracens, borne back by the irresistible charge of the knights, again and again rallied, and hung like dark masses of clouds on the horizon.

Apart from the main tide of battle, one knight had long contended with unequal odds. Many a swarthy foe had fallen before his arm. As he turned to rejoin the ranks a cry of pain met his ear, and pausing near the spot, the tones of a female voice were distinctly audible. Advancing in the direction whence it proceeded, he beheld a being of singular loveliness kneeling in the tangled shade of the forest. Her face, of exquisite beauty, was clouded by pain and fear, and the heavy masses of her hair, which veiled her slight figure, were wet with blood.

Eustace de Vincent gazed for a moment on the sufferer, and then, to a few entreating words in Norman-French, promised the protection sought. Binding up, with the skill taught by the rules of his order, the arm of the maiden, he consigned her to the guard of his squires, with orders to convey her from the field, and remounting, galloped back to the host.

The day pressed hard upon the Templars, outnumbered six to one. They fought long and well, but as their war-cry grew fainter, the horde of Saracens yelled louder and louder. In vain they charged with sweeping blows the scattered front of the foe. In vain they thronged to fill the places of the fallen. Fresh enemies assailed them, and the field, heaped with slain, seemed yet alive with countless foes.

At length, facing the foe, with the guarded banner in the midst, slowly they began the retreat. Avoiding their charge, like that of a roused lion, the Saracens kept at bay, their unerring arrows from a distance making some steeds run masterless over the plain. One by one the companions fell, and their war-cry, "For the Temple!" quivered from white lips, as they were trampled under the horses' feet.

At length Aldemar, with a band of twenty lances of the hundreds he had that morning led, arrived at the margin of a stream that wound its thread of silver through the sands. The "Ullahs" of the infidels rang faintly as they plunged into the wave, and, for a moment halting, looked again towards Damascus.

Among the survivors was De Vincent, who held the rank of Preceptor, and was accounted one of the bravest knights in Christendom. Turning to the leader, from whose side the blood flowed rapidly, he said:

"Yonder city, most noble Master, claims my vow. Christians are dying there—one I have pledged to save. With six lances, and alone, I must return to redeem my word."

"Go, my brother, if mercy calls thee," said the dying leader, as, falling from his horse, his eyes rested on the banner-cross, and then glazed in the fixed stare of death.

Trailing their lances in the dust, six knights followed De Vincent, leaving the remainder to guard the body of the fallen chief.

Winding through circuitous paths, a few hours brought them under the walls of Damascus, and at an angle of the wall where a sallyport had been left unguarded, De Vincent stationed his forlorn hope. Midnight had scarcely arrived when the postern was opened, and a young man, whose black hair and beard spoke Oriental lineage, stood before the knights.

"Silence, and the city is yours," he said. "Follow me!"

Swiftly leading the way up a winding stair, which opened on a courtyard, they found themselves in presence of the guard, who, secure in fancied safety, were sleeping heavily. A thrust, quickly given, prevented all outcry, and, from the door of a small tower emerging upon the rampart, the knights, closely following each other, sounded their terrible war-cry, and charged the astonished Saracens. A fierce conflict ensued, as the panic-struck foe fled before their dauntless assailants.

"Fly, Andreas, and raise the standard of the cross on the wall!" said the girl, as she stood listening to the clash of arms, which reached the most distant quarter of the city.

"Nay, brother, do you falter?" she added, as the youth who had opened the postern hesitated; "then will I."

She sprang to the rampart, and, with her arm bound by a scarf, seized a battle-axe, and dealt blow after blow on the heathen banner-staff. Andreas hastened to the aid of his heroic sister, and striking down a Turk stealthily advancing towards her, soon, by their united efforts, the cross once more arose above the walls.

Cries of triumph soon echoed below, as De Vincent, opening the gates, welcomed back the Christians, who thronged to the aid of the Templars; and as the knight, now commander of Damascus, trod the rampart, he recognised in the form fallen before the standard his protégée of the battle-field, whose white garments had rendered her too conspicuous a mark for the heathen shaft; and as the soldiers raised the light form upon their breeches, a moan burst from the lips of all as they gazed on the still, marble face. The Greek girl was dead.—The Landmark.

MASONIC SONGS TO POPULAR AIRS.

No. 2.—AIR, "Far, far upon the Sea."

Far, far o'er land and sea,
Where'er Earth's children be,
No matter what their country, creed, or race—
With a power exerted still
For good, opposed to ill,
The presence of our Brotherhood we trace.
For the ocean may divide
Our branches spreading wide,
Our root is firmly fixed in mother earth.
As our solemn mysteries blend
And ever upward tend To the "clouded canopy" from whence our Order had its birth.
Then here's abundant health,
Long life, sufficient wealth,
To all who love the "compass" and the "square;"
May they still united be,
In mind and body "free,"
True exponents of the symbols which they wear.

May our Order still be found,
Spreading peace and concord round,
Illuminating our land with its "transmitted light,"
Till the foe become a friend
And the rival colours blend
To form "the arch of peace" in Heaven's sight.
For the battle oft has been
'Tixt the Orange and the Green
Outside the magic circle where we meet.
Here the combatants unite
Unmindful of the fight,
And lay their tarnished weapons at our feet.
Then here's a health to all
Who obey the mystic call,
That gathers us in friendship, love, and peace.
May they still united stand,
Till in this and every land Unworthy strife and jealousy shall cease.

CROSBY'S BALSAMIC COUGH ELIXER.—Opiates, Narcotics, and Squills are too often invoked to give relief in Coughs, Colds, and all Pulmonary diseases. Instead of such fallacious remedies, which yield momentary relief at the expense of enfeebling the digestive organs and thus increasing that debility which lies at the root of the malady, modern science points to Crosby's Balsamic Cough Elixer, as the true remedy.—Select Testimonial. Dr. Rooke, Scarborough, author of the "Anti-Lancet," says: "I have repeatedly observed how very rapidly and invariably it subdued cough, Pain, and irritation of the chest in cases of pulmonary consumption, and I can, with the greatest confidence, recommend it as a most valuable adjunct to an otherwise strengthening treatment for this disease."—This medicine, which is free from opium and squills, not only allays the local irritation, but improves digestion and strengthens the constitution. Hence it is used with the most signal success in Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, Coughs, Influenza, Night Sweat, of Consumption, Quinsy, and all affections of the throat and chest. Sold by all respectable Chemists and Patent Medicine Dealers in bottles at 1s. 6d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. each, and wholesale by Jas. M. Crosby, Chemist, Scarborough. Invalids should read Crosby's Prize Treatise on "Diseases of the Lungs and Air-Vessels," a copy of which can be obtained gratis of any respectable Chemist.—[Adv.]

FREEMASONRY & ISRAELITISM.

BY BRO. WILLIAM CARPENTER, P.M. & P.Z. 177.

VIII.

Having traced the progress of Israel from the western borders of the Caspian to the west of the Euxine, through the Ukraine and Bessarabia, whence they pushed on further north and west, colonising parts of Roumania, Transylvania, Hungary, Poland, and Bohemia, we are necessarily led again to think of the people (Getæ) found on the south-western border of the Euxine, when Darius invaded the country, B.C. 507: that is, about 215 years after the tribes had been carried captive by the Assyrians into the countries south-west of the Caspian. And the question forces itself upon us—where they the same people? That is, were the Getæ identical with the Israelites? In attempting to answer this question, I shall briefly call attention to those external evidences of their identity which incidentally occur in the writings of the old historians; and to those internal evidences which are to be found in the literature, usages, and institutions of the people themselves.

Of the former class, is the description which Herodotus, the father of history, gives of the Getæ in his Melpomene (par. xciii. iv.). They believed, he states, in an immortal life and in one Supreme God, into whose presence they should go after death. They deplored the loss of the sacred books [Seeking the word of the Lord but not finding it, Amos viii. 12?] which they said were left to them by Zamoxes—literally, that Moses. He describes them as having been first found in Asia, east of the Araxes, in the seventh or eighth century B.C. Diodorus, in like manner, describes them as possessing a narrow region on the Araxes, but, by degrees, becoming more powerful in numbers, and extending their boundaries, till, at last, they raised themselves to be a great nation, subduing, in the course of time, many peoples between the Caspian and Mæotis, and beyond the Tanais; and he then speaks of them as having taken a westerly direction. Strabo, Pliny, and Ptolemy all speak of them as occupying the same region, but they are all silent as to their origin; and, in fact, they evidently knew nothing about it. Herodotus, however, states that the Scythians—this same people, sometimes called Scythians—declared their nations to be more recent than any other, and that they reckoned only 2,000 years between their first king and the invasion of Darius. Now, the invasion of Darius was in the year 507 B.C., and, if we go back a thousand years from this period, we are brought to that of the mission of Moses, who, in Deut. xxxiii. 5, is said to have been "King in Jeshurun (that is Israel), when the heads of the people and the tribes of Israel were gathered together" (see Gen. xviii. 13--27). This I take to be a most remarkable fact, which should not be lightly estimated. But to proceed. The authors to whom I have referred, evidently knew very little about this people, but they all concur in finding them about the Araxes—that is, between the Caspian and the Euxine—soon after the time that Israel was carried thither, and they describe them as afterwards becoming numerous, and pushing westward, as we have seen that the ten tribes did. I do not know that any further information touching the Getæ, at this early period, is obtainable. I have noticed the testimonies borne to their probity, chastity, hospitality, and other moral qualities, showing that their religion and their morals distinguished them from the other peoples or tribes in their neighbourhood. I do not insist that the historical incidents I have adverted to, striking as they are, are sufficient in themselves to convince us of the identity of the two peoples—the Goths and the Israelites—but I think they furnish at least some evidence of that identity.

I now turn to the other class of evidence, which I call internal, which helps us to identify the Getæ, or that branch of them known as Anglo-Saxons, with the Israelites, or the lost ten tribes. What evidence of this description have we in the literature, usages, and institutions of the Anglo-Saxons? The remains of early Anglo-Saxon literature are very scant, nor have we any that date back to a time when this people was in Asia or in the east of Europe. Nor is it at all to be expected that we should. Their migrations and their almost continuous wars of defence and of aggression, down to a comparatively recent period in their history, rendered the cultivation of literature almost impossible. When we first meet with them, therefore, they were as illiterate, apparently, as any of the barbarous tribes who find a place in history. We might expect, however, to find preserved amongst them some of the traditions of their fathers, for far as they had departed from the good old ways, forgetting the law, and joining themselves to idols, as Ephraim, that is, Israel, is said to have done, they could scarcely have failed to retain some remembrance of the older narratives originally recorded in their lost sacred books. And it seems to have been with the special design of collecting some of these, that the oldest composition of theirs known, namely, the Voluspæ—the spæ, or prophecy of Vola—was written. It is an extraordinary mixture of fact and fable, blending traditions of the creation with, apparently, some of the earliest incidents in Israel's history, and of their being cast out into the north country—the descent upon them of the fierce barbarians of the north, the Huns—the ravages of the Roman wolf, to which they were subjected—the renovation of their land, "in which virtuous people shall dwell, and for ages enjoy every good"—followed by the ravages of the "obscene dragon" and the "infernal serpent," preparatory to the final rest and continued peace and happiness of the people—

"The Asæ will dwell without evils;
Do you yet understand?
And the sons of the two brothers
Inhabit the vast mansion of the winds;
Do you know more?"

Then, there is the promised glory of Jerusalem: Israel and Judah have come out of the north country to Mount Zion, the glory of which covers the earth—

"A hall stands brighter than the sun,
Covered in gold, in Gimle.
There virtuous people will dwell,
And for ages enjoy every good."

No one, I think, can read this extraordinary poem, extravagant as, upon the whole, it seems to be, without seeing evidences of Israelitish traditions in it; and the notion once entertained; that the people to whom it owes its origin obtained the knowledge of those traditions through the medium of Christianity is, at last, abandoned.

I now invite attention to another subject connected with the Saxon literature. The English language, as everybody knows, is a collection of words from many languages, ancient and modern; but there are very few words in it that are recognised as being drawn from Oriental languages or dialects. Anglo-Saxon, Greek, Latin, and French words abound, as may be seen by running through the pages of any dictionary that gives the derivation of words. But though thus compounded, our language is Anglo-Saxon at heart—its life-blood is Teutonic; all its other elements are adventitious, compared with this. Take them away, and the English remains, but take away the Teutonic or Saxon, and the mere sweepings of the granary are left. But what of the Saxon words? Whence have they come? Undoubtedly, many of them from the Hebrew, Arabic, and other Semitic tongues. Sharon Turner (Ang. Sax. vol. ii.) has collected no fewer than 247 Saxon words that are undoubtedly derived from the Hebrew and the Cognate Arabic, regretting that health and other adverse circumstances had not permitted him to extend his investigations in this interesting field of enquiry. Had he done so, he would, no doubt, have found many more. That he should have found so many, is a very noticeable circumstance connected with our enquiry as to the origin of this people, and one that will help to prove their affinity, or identity, with the Israelitish race; for the Hebrew language is so unlike any comparatively modern language, and seems so incapable of being melted down into it, that its existence in the Anglo-Saxon is, at least, remarkable.

Another very striking circumstance is, that the Saxon names of persons are obviously given after the Hebrew fashion. They do not appear to have used surnames, although we occasionally find an appellation added to the original name. This was in conformity with the Israelitish custom. Sometimes the paternal person assumed the name of the first-born son, as is still the custom in Syria and Arabia. Thus, Abu-Michael is the father of Michael; Om-Suleyman is the mother of Solomon. It is the same in Abu-Beker, Abu-Taleb, &c. Our present custom of permanent surnames in particular families was not established until after the Norman conquest. But the names given by the Saxons bear so striking a resemblance to the mode of giving names by the Israelites that I must take permission to give a few of each. The following are Saxon:—

Æthelred ...	Noble in Council.
Eadbuhr ...	Happy pledge.
Æthelwyn ...	Noble joy.
Eadgifer ...	Happy gift.
Eadward ...	Prosperous Guardian.
Editha ...	Blessed gift.
Ethelstan ...	Noble rock.
Ethelbert ...	Noble and illustrious.
Lionrie ...	Lion of the kingdom.
Sigfred ...	Victorious counsel.
Wynfreda ...	Peace of man.

Let us now take a few Hebrew names, and note their resemblance to the Saxon; I mean, as to their expressiveness—

Abednego	...	Servant of light.
Abagtha	...	Father of the wine-press.
Abihail	...	Father of praise.
Abram	...	Father of the sea.
Abiram	...	Father of beauty.
Benjamin	...	Son of the right hand; or of strength.
Baruch	...	Who is blessed.
Jochebed	...	Glorious, or honourable.
Timeus	...	Admirable.
Zebedee	...	Abundant portion.
Zibiah	...	Honourable and fine.

These appellations or names, alike Saxon and Israelitish, are all significant. Amongst the Israelites they were sometimes given by a Divine command, as in the case of Ishmael—"The angel of the Lord said [to Hagar], thou shalt call his name Ishmael," that is, "God shall hear," "because the Lord hath heard thy affliction" (Gen. xvi. 11). In like manner, Isaiah was directed to call one of his children Maher-shalal-hash-bas; that is, making speed to the spoil. So, also, Hosea was to call one of his sons Lo-ammi—that is, not my people; and another Lo-ruhamah, not having obtained mercy (Hos. i. 6-9). But whether thus given or not, they were expressive of some sentiment, circumstance, hope, aspiration, or assumed character, as they also were among the ancient Saxons, and as they are to this day in Syria and Arabia.

I have neither space nor time to enter into a consideration of the political and social institutions of the ancient Israelites, and to exhibit the striking resemblance they bear to those of the Saxons. These German tribes, as they are often called, have usually been regarded as a set of barbarians, animated by little other than a ferocious purpose to destroy everything that was of a humanising and refining character, and their conquests as having carried with them misery, darkness, and ruin—a replunging of society into the savage chaos from which it had slowly escaped, and from which, through increased evils and obstacles, it had again to emerge. Nothing could be further from the truth—nothing more unlike the state of things which the Goths introduced wherever they settled. As Sharon Turner observes, their invasions destroyed the ancient governments and political and legal systems of the Roman Empire, and of the Provinces in which they established themselves; but, as he also observes, the institutions which they introduced cannot but have been superior to those they swept away, since—notwithstanding the discouragement of new languages and institutions, and ruder habits—many of the Romans joined the "barbarians," leaving the country which was their birthplace, which had been so long consecrated by deserved fame, and whose feeling, mind, and social manners were congenial to their own.

The conquest and partition of the Western Roman Empire by the Nomadic nations of Germany was, in fact, as Turner remarks, "a new and beneficial re-casting of human society in all its classes, functions, manners, and pursuits. The civilisation of mankind had been carried in the previous Roman world to the fullest extent to which the then existing means of human improvement could be urged. That this had long been stationary, and for some time retrograding, the philosophical examiner into the government, literature, religion, public habits, and private morals of the Roman empire will, if he make his researches sufficiently minute and extensive, be satisfactorily convinced. Hence, either the progress of mankind must have been stopped, and their corrupting civilisation have stagnated or feebly rolled on towards its own barbarization, or some extensive revolution must have broken up the existing system of universal degeneracy, and begun a new career of moral agency and social melioration. The fact is incontestible, that this latter state has been the result of the irruptions and established kingdoms of the Teutonic tribes. . . . A new set of landowners was diffused over every country, with new forms of government, new principles, and new laws, new religious disciplines and hierarchies, with many new tenets and practices.

A new literature and new manners, all productive of great improvements, in every part superseded the old, and gave to Europe a new face, and to every class of society a new life and spirit. In the Anglo-Saxon settlements in Britain all these effects were displayed with the most beneficial consequences." Elsewhere he says: "They introduced a form of monarchy under the name of kings, with powers so great, yet so limited; so superior and independent, and yet so subordinate to the law, and so governed by it; so majestic, yet so popular; so powerful, yet so contracted; so honoured, yet so counselled; so wealthy, yet so dependent—that all the good which sovereignty can impart was largely enjoyed, with as few as possible of the evils which concentrated power must always tend to occasion, while the executing instruments are imperfect mortals. Such an institution was the Anglo-Saxon cyning; and such, with all the improvements a free-spirited nation has at various times added to it, is the British monarchy under which we are now living." (Turner, iii. 141.)

I may not venture to go into any detail as to other Saxon institutions; indeed, throughout these papers, I have merely glanced at facts without enlarging or dwelling upon them—that being all I feel I am at liberty to do in these columns. I must observe, however, that all the Saxon institutions were adapted to insure the liberty and advancement of the people. We see in all of them the principle of self-government; and, what is somewhat remarkable, ten was an adopted number. They chose one from every ten men amongst them to act in the council of their little community, generally consisting of ten compartments, or wards. Ten of these wards formed a Tything, or Parish. Ten of these Tythings formed a Hundred, the Elders of which, thus chosen, met for the management of matters belonging to the Hundred, while each Tything took charge of the affairs especially pertaining to itself. It will be remembered, that, by the Mosaic institutions, the people were placed under rulers of thousands, of hundreds, of fifties, and of tens. A Jewish Synagogue, corresponding to a modern Parish, appears, at a subsequent period, to have been put under the direction of ten elders, of whom one became the chief ruler of that ecclesiastical division. The Saxon county, which was more extensive than the Hundred, corresponded to the Tribe in Israel.

The Saxons had three orders of men amongst them—the nobles, the free men, and the slaves; and their Wittenagemot was composed of the princes, or elders, and prelates, with certain of the free men. Courts of justice were established in the Decennary, the Hundred, and the County. Thus, as it has been observed, "the Saxons became somewhat like the Jews, distinct from all other people: their laws honourable for the king, easy for the subject."

It seems to me almost impossible for any one to read the history of these Anglo-Saxons without having present to his mind the early history of the Israelites. Amongst them, each tribe managed its own affairs, but the whole of the tribes formed a federative body, or a single kingdom, until after the time of Solomon, when they were separated into two kingdoms. They had a deliberative assembly, even while they dwelt in their encampments in the wilderness of Arabia, composed of the representatives of all the tribes. Indeed, there were two assemblies: the one composed of the Princes of Tribes and Heads of Thousands, which formed the senate; the other, of the representatives of the people at large. These assemblies exercised all the rights of sovereignty; they declared war, made peace, formed alliances, chose generals, judges, leaders, and kings. They prescribed to the rulers whom they elected the principles by which they were to govern, tendered to them the oath of office, and rendered them homage.

Nor should we overlook the fact, that the Saxons had the Israelitish division of the day. Their day did not reckon from morning to evening, but from evening to morning—not at all such a reckoning of the day as any people would naturally adopt, but which Moses had prescribed (Lev. xxiii. 32). The ancient Egyptians, Babylonians, Persians, Syrians, and other Eastern nations, reckoned their day, as we do, from sunrise to sunset. The Saxons, however, retained the Israelitish reckoning. In common with the Israelites, too, the Saxons had three great festivals: The first, Easter, exactly corresponded to the Passover; the second, Whitsuntide, corresponded to Pentecost, or the feast of weeks, upon the fiftieth day after the Passover; the third was a general gathering at the Wittenagemot, at which all the males were supposed to be present—as, indeed, they were at the other two festivals. So, in Israel, all their males were to present themselves before the Lord three times in the year (Deut. xvi. 16). The priesthood among the Saxons was confined to certain families, and descended from father to son, as in ancient Israel; and like the Israelitish priesthood, the Saxon priests were supported by tythes, or tenths, with the possession of certain lands. These similarities between the ancient and the more modern people, or between Israel as we know them through the Old Testament and Israel as we know them after their dispersion and assumption of the name of Getæ—or rather that great branch of the family known as Anglo-Saxons—might be pursued much further, but space forbids. I have said enough, I think, to show that history and customs agree in exhibiting them as one people. Further evidences remain to be considered.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR BOYS.

ANNUAL SUMMER FETE.

The cause of education is one which has ever preferred a peculiar—we might almost say a sacred—claim to the support and assistance of the Masonic Body. Recognising, as we do, the advantages of training in the various degrees of the Order—symbolising, as we do, by the rough and perfect ashlar of our Craft, the moral benefits of mental culture—it cannot be disputed that Freemasons are pre-eminently the friends of education and enlightenment. Examples drawn from the history of the ancient world are not wanting to confirm these views—the labours of Euclid, of Pythagoras, and other primitive worthies, are remembered with respect in our lodges, and the knowledge and wisdom of King Solomon are still staple subjects for Masonic dissertations. It has, however, been well said that "some individuals are not so much good men, as the friends of goodness;" and in like manner, it may be suggested that a theoretical desire for intellectual progress is not always the herald of practical results. This is not the case, we are happy to say, so far as the Freemasons of England are concerned. For many years the children of indigent or deceased brethren have enjoyed the advantages of education under the auspices of the Craft, and of late really gigantic efforts have been made to extend those advantages to still greater numbers, as well as to elevate the standard of the instruction imparted. The Royal Masonic Institution for Girls possesses a fine school-building at Battersea Rise, while the Institution for Boys is even more handsomely housed at Wood Green; and a visit to either of the schools is a treat which no earnest brother should miss. It has been customary for some years past to have a gala day at these Institutions on the occasion of the annual distribution of prizes to the most successful students, and the growing popularity of these pleasant reunions may be estimated when we add that more than three hundred ladies and brethren were present at the Boys' School Fête, which took place on Saturday, the 8th inst. The proceedings commenced at 12 o'clock in the dining-hall of the Institution, where the officers of the Institution, the prize-boys, and the visitors had previously assembled. Bro. the Hon. Captain Vivian, M.P., W.M. 108, one of the Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury, was to have officiated as chairman, but a sudden attack of illness deprived the Institution of his services. The Rev. Bro. J. E. Cox, D.D., P.G. Chaplain, however, was nominated to the vacant post, and most efficiently and gracefully fulfilled its duties during the day. An overture and march having been played by Bro. Seymour Smith, the classical division of prize-boys were presented to receive their prizes—song, recitation, and musical sketch succeeding until the presentation of the commercial division. Miss Moutrie then played a pianoforte solo, "Come back to Erin," in most excellent style, and the special prizes having been distributed, the Rev. Chairman addressed the assemblage upon the question of education generally, and its progress in the Boys' School more particularly. The prizes awarded were as follows, and we may also state that, in addition to the lady and gentleman above-mentioned, Miss Strangways and Mrs. Sydney Smith kindly assisted in the concert. The recitations were given by W. H. Owen, W. B. Redgrave, C. J. Jones, E. C. Isborn, and G. S. Recknell:—

The company then adjourned to the colation, which was laid out in the gymnasium of the establishment under the personal supervision of Bro. C. Gosden, of Masons' Hall Tavern, City, who supplied both edibles and wines to the entire satisfaction of all present. The toasts were few and brief—"The Queen, the Patroness of the Institution," "The Royal Family," "The Chairman, Dr. Cox," proposed by Bro. Head; P.G.D., "The Grand Officers," for whom Bro. Raynham W. Stewart, J.G.D., responded; "The House Committee," coupled with the name of the junior member, Bro. Roebuck; and lastly, "The health of the indefatigable Secretary of the Institution, Bro. Binckes." The company then returned to the hall, which had been cleared during the interim, for Terspichorean purposes—an excellent band, under the able direction of Bro. James Weaver, P.M. 862, P.G. Org. Middlesex, being in attendance to lure the gay and festive juveniles (and not a few seniles as well) of the party into the giddy mazes of the dance. Premising that Bro. Binckes acted as M.C. with his usual energy and success, we append for the delectation of our fair readers a list of the dances:—

Quadrille, Fleur de Thé; polka, Honeymoon; lancers, French; schottische, Le Mignome; mazourka, Traviata; lancers, Burlesque; galop, Flick and Flock; quadrille, Song of Songs; polka, Kirmess; caledonians, Cootie's; valse, Beautiful Danube; quadrille, Songs of the Christy Minstrels; polka, Debardeur; galop, Post Horn; lancers, Imperial; galop, Spirit of the Ball.

We have rarely spent a more enjoyable day—the weather was delightful, the company most agreeable; and our pre-conceived high opinions of the Institution were fully sustained by a close inspection of the building itself, and of the arrangements made for the comfort of the boys. In fact, the management reflects the highest credit upon the House Committee, the Head Master, Bro. Furrian, and the other officials connected with the establishment. Among the brethren present, most of whom were accompanied by ladies, we noticed:—Bros. Sage, Farthing, Dr. J. E. Cox, R. W. Motion, A. H. Tattershall, J. Dyer, B. Dosell, G. Motion, R. W. Stewart (H.C.), Kirke, B. Mallow (H.C.), E. Jones, G. R. Ware, F. J. Cox, W. Moutrie, W. Roebuck (H.C.), W. Palmer, G. Myers, C. Bennett, J. Symonds, J. Recknell, H. Hare, G. Thompson, J. ## ROYAL MASONIC BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

The usual monthly committee meeting of this Institution was held on Wednesday, the 12th inst., Bro. Major Creaton in the chair. Also present: Bros. J. Hervey, B. Head, J. Smith, J. Brett, H. W. Hems-worth, F. Walters, C. A. Cottebrune, J. R. Sheen, J. Bellerby, W. H. Farnfield, W. Young, R. H. Evans, E. T. Fraser, L. Stein, and F. Adlard.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed, and the death of one male annuitant, Bro. E. W. Shaw, was reported.

The report of the Finance Committee was read and adopted.

Three petitions from candidates—viz., one male and two females—were received, and their names placed on the list of applicants for election in May, 1872.

The usual vote of thanks to the chairman brought the meeting to a close.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF CORNWALL.

The annual meeting of the Provincial Grand Lodge of Cornwall was held on Tuesday, the 4th inst., at Penzance. We have already given particulars of the preparations that were being made for the reception of the brethren in the most western town of Cornwall. Besides the preparations made by Freemasons for Freemasons, the general public seemed to have vied in their endeavours to give a hearty, as well as a graceful, reception to their visitors. The bells of the church rang merry peals throughout the day, and many of the houses were adorned with banners. The town, therefore, looked very gay, and the gaiety was increased by a large number of country people who came in to see the Masonic procession—the first of its kind which has been held in Penzance for ten years past. The attendance of brethren from every part of the province was exceedingly good, more than one-fourth of the Masons of the county being present. The Provincial Grand Master, R.W. Bro. Augustus Smith, came over on Monday from his residence at Tresco, in the Scilly Islands, and we regret that, owing to the roughness of the sea, he suffered greatly, and had not recovered strength to enable him comfortably to discharge his duties as Grand Master. We hope—and in this hope all the brethren of the province will sincerely join—that his illness may prove only temporary. Still the Grand Master went through his duties to the close of the day, being assisted therein by the D.P.G.M., Bro. Roscorla, and other brethren.

The brethren assembled at the Public-Rooms in St. John's Hall, about 11 o'clock, that time being fixed for the convenience of those coming from a distance. Most of the officers of the Grand Lodge were present, and took their respective places.

Amongst the brethren present were the following: Augustus Smith, 331, Provincial Grand Master; John Roscorla, P.M. 121, P.D.P.G.M.; James O. Mayne, P.M. 331, P.S.G.W.; Dr. Geo. There were altogether about 200 present.

The Grand Lodge was opened by the Prov. Grand Master in due form, and the brethren thereupon immediately proceeded to business, there being a great deal of work to be done. Owing to the late arrival of the trains, some of the preliminary business was gone through before all the brethren had arrived.

Bro. Hughan, Prov. G. Sec, read the minutes of the last annual meeting, which were of considerable length. They were put by the G.M. and unanimously adopted.

Bro. Wm. Tweedy, P.G. Treas., read his annual report, which showed, on the credit side—

“By balance of last account, £94 9s. 11d; collection in church after sermon by Bro. the Rev. F. B. Paull, £11 13s. 2d.; fees of honour, £15 15s.; fee from the P.G.J.D. for non-residence, £1 1s.; fees from the lodges of the province, £95 5s.—making a total of £218 4s. 1. On the debit side of the account was an expenditure, in division of the church collections, in votes to the charities, and in expenses of various sums, which left as a present balance to be now dealt with by the Grand Lodge, £101 16s. 7d.

This report was duly received and adopted.

Bro. Hughan, P.G. Sec., read the following report:—

“According to the returns of 1870, receivable in January, 1871, there are 24 lodges in the province, with an aggregate of 869 members and 189 P.M.'s. An analysis of these figures shows the following:—Increase of members since 1869, 35 net; P.M.'s, 17; average number of members to each lodge, 36; P.M.'s, 8; maximum number of members, 67; minimum, 14. The oldest lodge was warranted in 1751, and the youngest in 1869. On the 11th September, the P.G. Master sanctioned the removal of the Eliot Lodge, No. 1164, St. Germans, to more convenient quarters in the same town; and on December 20th the removal of the Tregulow's Lodge, St. Day, to Redruth, pro tem. The P.G. Master consented to an addition to by-laws of the Fortitude Lodge, Truro, respecting the election of W. Master (May 1st 1870), and on June 16th, the new by-laws of Tregenna Lodge, No. 1272, St. Ives, were approved of and passed accordingly. On June 18th, 1871, the D.P.G. Master granted a dispensation for the W.M. and brethren of Mount Sinai Lodge, No. 121, Penzance, to attend the funeral of the late Bro. Charles Guy, S.W. At the election for Aged Freemasons and Widows, London, there being no Cornish candidates, our votes were forwarded to the provinces of Oxfordshire and Durham, and with the others given, resulted in each case in favour of the candidates supported. For the Girls' Institution, April, 1871, we supported the Cornish candidate, Gertrude Tippet, of Fowey. Only 43 votes were polled in all, 27 being given by the province. (We anticipate a more favourable result, however, in October, 1871.) For the Boys' Election, April, 1871, the votes of the province were sent to the Prov. G.M. of Leicestershire for Alfred Nutt. The lad was the highest of the unsuccessful candidates, so his election is certain the next trial. These votes thus given will be returned in full when we have Cornish candidates.”

This report was also unanimously adopted.

Bro. Chirgwin, the Treasurer of the Cornwall Masonic Annuity Fund, then read his annual statement, of which the following is a brief abstract:—

“The fund showed subscriptions from the lodge to the amount of £105 16s.; donations, £20 5s.; total, £126 1s.; an increase on last year's receipts of 7s. 6d. The account showed a balance on last account of £46 7s. 9d; interest received on stock, £26 0s. 8d.; receipts from the lodges, £126 1s.; total, £198 5s. 9d. The capital account showed £910 Cornwall Railway 4½ per cent. stock, and £300 Bristol and Exeter 4 per cent. ditto, realizing an annual income of £52 19s. The expenditure showed—postage and printing, £3 18s. 7d.; two half years' annuities, £20; and a balance at the bankers on this account of £174 10s. 10d.”

Bro. Chirgwin added a hope that there would be a grant of a further sum to day to enable them to have three annuitants on the fund at £20 a year each.

The P.G. Master said that this was a most satisfactory report, and it was unanimously adopted.

Bro. Chirgwin next read the following report of the Committee on Masonic Scholarship, &c., which reported as follows:—

“Your Committee consider that the time has arrived when the basis of the Cornwall Masonic Annuity Fund may be wisely extended so as to form, in addition to annuities to aged and indigent brethren, a fund for providing help towards the education and advancement in life of their children, or for assisting the widows of such brethren. Your Committee would therefore suggest that the name of the present fund shall be changed for that of the Cornwall Masonic Benevolent Fund, and that funds sufficient to establish three annuities of £20 per annum each be raised; that subsequent subscriptions and donations should be held for the general purposes of the Cornwall Masonic Benevolent Fund, and be subject to the laws and regulations for the management of the same, to be made from time to time by the Provincial Grand Lodge; and your Committee would further recommend that the Provincial Grand Lodge should forthwith take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the foregoing report.—(Signed) REGINALD ROGERS, W. J. HUGHAN, and W. TWEEDY.”

When this report was about to be read,

Bro. Hughan said he wished to express the great regret that Bro. Reginald Rogers felt at not being able to be present at the meeting of the Grand Lodge to support the report, which had his entire concurrence.

The next business being to receive a report from the Committee of Relief, Bro. W. H. Jenkins rose, and stated that they had nothing to report.

The Treasurer then stated that there was a balance to be appropriated of £101.

The G. Master said he had asked the question previous to asking whether any brother had anything to propose, because he had found that even in Grand Lodge there was often a scramble for the surplus moneys to be voted.

Bro. T. Solomons proposed that the sum of £10 be voted for an Assistant Secretary, to help the G. Secretary, whose work was very heavy, and that the appointment should be made subject to the approval of the Grand Master.

Bro. Boase seconded the motion.

Bro. Hughan, in answer to a question for information, said that he had written during the last two years a large amount of correspondence. The office was a very arduous one.

The motion was then carried.

Bro. Chirgwin then proposed a vote of £30 for the Cornwall Masonic Annuity Fund. That would enable them to have three annuitants without trenching upon the principal.

Bro. Johns seconded the motion, and it was carried unanimously.

Bro. John Combes next proposed that a vote of three guineas should be presented to the Masonic Life Boat Fund. He stated that he had collected money towards the life-boat, and that the project met with general favour.

Bro. May seconded the motion, and it was agreed to.

Bro. Boase proposed a grant of ten guineas for the Girls' School.

Bro. Boyns seconded the motion, which was also carried nem. con.

Bro. Hughan remarked that since 1862 the province had voted £193 2s. to the Girls' School, while they had received benefit to the amount of £350. (Hear, hear.)

Bro. Johns moved, and Bro. Lavin seconded, a vote of ten guineas to the Boys' School.—Agreed to.

The Senior Warden next proposed a grant of £20 to the Cornwall Benevolent Fund.

Bro. J. F. Penrose seconded, and the amount was granted.

The further business of the Grand Lodge was then postponed, in order that the brethren might proceed to St. Mary's Church to hear a sermon by the Rev. H. B. Bullocke, M.A., of St. Mary's, Truro, the Provincial Grand Chaplain. The procession was marshalled in the usual order customary amongst Masons, the Tylers heading the party, followed by a band of music. Next followed brethren bearing the various insignia, then the brethren of the youngest lodge up to the oldest. Next came another band, which was followed by the officials, the R.W. Bro. the Provincial Grand Master bringing up the rear. There was a large concourse of people along the whole line of march, and the scene was a very interesting one.

The services at the church were admirably performed. The Rev. Prebendary Hedgeland, the incumbent, intoned the services. The Rev. Bro. Paull read the first, and the Rev. Bro. Wright the second lesson. The Rev. Bro. Bullocke founded his sermon on 1 Corinthians, iii., 9th verse. The discourse was a very good one, and applicable to Masonry. He urged the three Masonic graces, Faith, Hope, and Charity—insisting more particularly on Charity as the crowning grace of Masonry.

The brethren then returned to the Grand Lodge, and the Grand Master proceeded to the lodge-room of Mount Sinai, in another room of the same building, and dedicated it in solemn form with the customary solemnities.

On the resumption of business, Bro. Reginald Rogers was appointed Treasurer, and Bro. Chirgwin, Secretary, of the Masonic Benevolent Fund.

Bro. Dr. Bannister proposed Bros. Holloway and Blamey as auditors.—Agreed to.

An alteration of the tenth rule was then made, so that the office of Grand Tyler might be filled in future by the Grand Master, instead of by election of the lodge.

The Grand Master then made the following appointments of brethren as Grand Officers:—

Reginald Rogers	...	D.P.G.M.
Charles Reeves	...	P.G.S.W.
Charles Veale	...	P.G.J.W.
W. Tweedy	...	P.G. Treas.

Rev. W. L. Church	...	D.P.G. Chaplain.
— Tucker	...	P.G. Reg.
E. T. Carlyon	...	P.G. Sec.
— Curry	...	P.G.S.D.
John Combes	...	P.G.J.D.

William Wright	...	P.G. Stewards.
— Kerswill	...
— Grigg	...
— Gay	...	P.G. Tyler.

(Bro. Hughan retired in order to do other Masonic literary work.)

Bro. Carlyon recommended Bro. R. Johns as assistant clerk, and he was appointed, with the sanction of the G. Master.

Bros. Jenkins and Hoskin, jun., were appointed auditors, and the Committee of Relief was re-appointed.

The collection at the church, which amounted to £11 6s. 4d., was thus appropriated:—£2 5s. 4d. to the incumbent, to be used as he may think proper; £4 10s. 6d. to the Masonic Annuity Fund; and £4 10s. 6d. to the Penzance Dispensary.

Bro. Hockin, jun., desired that a resolution of thanks should be recorded to Bro. Hughan for his valuable services as Secretary, and also for his literary services to Freemasonry.

The proposition was seconded by Bro. Solomon, who enlarged on the valuable services that Bro. Hughan had rendered, so that his name was as well known in Europe and America as it was in England.

The proposal passed with acclamation,

A committee was then formed for carrying out the objects of the Benevolent Fund, and bringing the report, already given into practical operation.

THE BANQUET.

The brethren adjourned from labour to refreshment. The banquet was held in the large hall, which was beautifully laid out. Plates were laid for more than 200 guests, and all the places seemed to be occupied. The Grand Master occupied the chair, and was supported on his right and left by his principal officers. Behind the chair was a beautiful array of rich and costly flowers, and the room was ornamented with many Masonic banners. The dinner was an excellent one, and did great credit to Bro. Mitchell, of the Western Hotel. There was great abundance, and everything was good. A quartette party in the gallery sang admirably, and Bro. Heath performed several tunes on the organ, a noble instrument, which he played with masterly ability.

As soon as the cloth was withdrawn, the Grand Master proposed the usual loyal and Masonic toasts, which were most warmly received and in the manner that becometh Masons, who in England are loyal to both Queen and Craft. Our report has already extended to such a length, that we have no room to report the speeches. We must content ourselves by saying that V.W. Bro. Roscorla proposed the health of "The Marquis of Ripon, the Grand Master of England."—Bro. Borlase proposed "Lord Carnarvon and other Officers of the Grand Lodge of England."—Bro. Boyns proposed "The Earl of Zetland" and "The Prince of Wales."—Bro. Boase, in an admirable speech, dwelt upon the great services rendered to the province by the Provincial Grand Master, and proposed "The Health of Bro. Augustus Smith." This toast was received with a perfect ovation of applause, which was again and again renewed. It must have been most gratifying to Bro. Smith to have witnessed the feelings of esteem and affection that are felt for him.—The R.W. the G. Master feelingly acknowledged the compliment so kindly paid to him.—The singers having returned, struck up the song of "The Fine Old English Gentleman," in which the whole of the company joined.—Bro. Solomon next proposed "The Health of the D.P.G. Masters Bros. Reginald Rogers, John Roscorla, and Lord Eliot."—Bro. Roscorla responded, and adverted to the past history of Freemasonry in the province.—Bro. Read next proposed "The Visiting Brethren," a toast to which Bro. Latimer responded, speaking of his long acquaintance with Cornish Masons, and congratulating them on the great strides that had been made in Masonry in the two western counties in the course of the last few years.—Bro. Jenkins next proposed "The P.G. Senior and Junior Wardens," both of whom responded, and a few other toasts brought to a close a very pleasant day.—Western Daily Mercury.

LIGHT GERMAN WINES.—There is every prospect of a considerable increase in the consumption of German wines by the British public. The growing taste for the light and invigorating wines of the Rhine and Moselle is really a matter of no small importance, for it is now well known that they excel all others in the gentle and peculiarly healthful nature of their stimulating power. The difficulty has always been to secure these wines in their native purity at a moderate cost, and we are glad, therefore, to see that Mr. A. Verkrüzen, of Fell-street, Wood-street, whose experience in this branch of trade is in itself a sufficient guarantee, has issued a price list, wherein he offers the public the choicest descriptions of these refreshing beverages at very fair prices. The list includes many exquisite brands. Niersteiner and Liebfraumilch are both capital dinner wines. Schiersteiner, which is remarkable for its agreeable taste and fine bouquet, is valuable to invalids as a dinner wine in consequence of its stomachic and invigorating properties, as are also many of the Moselle brands, which for elegant fragrance are unsurpassable, and which we should rank amongst the most delicious dinner wines we have ever tasted. Some of the hocks introduced by Mr. Verkrüzen are not only worthy of high appreciation on account of their splendid medicinal properties, but possess that delicacy of flavour which every connoisseur of wine delights in. Rudesheimer, for instance, is an elegant dessert wine of full body, that would be an important acquisition on any table; and Forster Ungeheuer is allowed to be one the very finest wines in existence. It is satisfactory to know that the medical press have almost unanimously recommended these wines; and we congratulate Mr. Verkrüzen on an enterprise which cannot fail to add many new attractions to English dinner tables. Those who desire a really high-class wine cannot do better than visit the above stores, where they will not only find a wide variety of vintages, but, what is of greater consideration, excellence combined with economy.—Court Circular.

The FIRST DISTRICT GRAND LODGE OF NEWFOUNDLAND.

On Monday, the 15th day of May last, a meeting of the officers of the First District Grand Lodge, appointed by the District Grand Master, the Honourable James Shannon Cliff, was held in the Masonic Hall, St. John's, at eight o'clock p.m.

The D.G. Master called upon the D.G. Secretary to read the patent, which he had received from the Right Honourable the Earl de Grey and Ripon, K.G., the M.W. Grand Master of England, appointing him to be the first District Grand Master for Newfoundland.

The patent having been read, a ballot was taken for Treasurer, which resulted unanimously in favour of the W.M. of St. John's Lodge, No. 579, Bro. C. S. Puisent.

A preparatory meeting was held by the members of St. John's Lodge in their spacious lodge-room, which was well attended by the Avalon Lodge members, as well as by the brethren of their own lodge. Bro. George Bishop, W.M. of Hiram Lodge, Burin, was also present.

The lodge having been raised to the third degree, soon after the District Grand Master was announced and received according to ancient form and custom, and took his seat on the dais. Alter the 100th Psalm was sung, the D.G. Master installed Bro. W. V. Whiteway, Q.C., P.M. of Avalon Lodge, No. 776, as Deputy District Grand Master, and authorized him to instal the other officers, viz.:

- Bro. U. S. Stabb, P.M. 579 ... D.G.S.W.
- " J. F. Chisholm, P.M. 776 ... D.G.J.W.
- " C. S. Puisent, W.M. 579 ... D.G. Treas.
- " H. J. B. Wood, Sec. 579 ... D.G. Sec.
- " P. J. Rankin, P.M. 579 ... D.G.S.D.
- " J. S. Hayward, P.M. 579 ... D.G.J.D.
- " G. Pender, P.M. 776 ... Master of Cers.
- " M. Monroe, P.M. 579 ... "
- " C. Will ... D.G. Org.
- " G. Geddes, P.S.W. 579 ... D.G. Purs.
- " William Smith ... D.G. Tyler.

These brethren then took their seats as D.G. Officers.

Upon motion of the D.D. Grand Master, seconded by D.G. Senior Deacon, a collection was taken up in aid of a proposed Benevolent Fund to embrace all the lodges in the colony, which amounted to £15.

The D.G. Lodge was then closed in peace.

MASONIC FESTIVITIES.

PICNIC AT SUNDERLAND.

On Thursday, July 6, the Freemasons of Sunderland, and their friends, held their fourth annual picnic, when, notwithstanding the very unfavourable weather of the last few weeks, there was a large muster. The early morning was fine, and when the special train left Monkwearmouth station there was every prospect of a beautiful day. Before Newcastle was reached a change for the worse took place in the weather, and Morpeth station was passed in a downfall of rain, which threatened to continue for hours. On arrival at Alnwick the whole party proceeded to the Corn Exchange, where the committee had decided to spread lunch should the rain continue over midday. Shortly after eleven o'clock, however, the weather cleared up, and a large number then proceeded to visit the magnificent gardens attached to Alnwick Castle, the castle, and dairy grounds, and thence proceeded along the winding course of the river Alne to Hulne Abbey. The remainder of the party having pressed into their service every disposable conveyance to be had in Alnwick, proceeded direct from the Corn Exchange to Hulne Abbey. This reached, every one sat down to luncheon in a large tent erected for the purpose. The inner man satisfied, a move was made to the magnificent ruins of Hulne Abbey, where an excellent photograph of the whole party was obtained by Bro. Stabler, of No. 80. During the afternoon a very interesting lecture on "Hulne Abbey and its Masonic Associations" was given by Bro. Allen, of Alnwick. Between lunch and tea and after tea the younger brethren and their fair partners tripped the light fantastic on the greensward. Bros. W. H. Crookes, P.M. 80, P.G. Sec., and R. Hudson, P.M. 949, P.G.D.C., ably officiated as M.C.'s. Others strolled to different parts of the extensive parks—some climbing the steep hill on which Brislee Tower stands, and ascending the tower, were amply repaid for their trouble by the magnificent panoramic view they obtained of the country; while others joined in games of football, quoits, &c. The afternoon was fine, and notwithstanding the morning's rain, a very enjoyable day was spent. Bro. Busby, the courteous Secretary of the Alnwick Lodge, Bros. Turnbull, Bowey, and others of the same lodge, with a party of ladies, joined their Sunderland brethren, and materially contributed to the day's enjoyment. The arrangements were carried out by a committee of officers of the four Sunderland lodges, the most active being Bros. W. Skelton, W.M. 97 (chairman); W. Liddell, W.M. 949 (vice-chairman); J. H. Coates, J.W. 949 (secretary); R. Hudson, P.M. 949 (treasurer); J. Henderson, W.M. 94; J. J. Clay, S.W. 97; R. Humphrey, J.W. 97; R. B. Lutert, J.W. 94; and others.

L. Mayor & Co., 36, Mark Lane, London, E.C. I find them to be perfectly genuine, of excellent quality, and eminently nutritious. They contain a very large percentage of nitrogenous matter, chiefly gluten, and are far more nutritious than any other food, such as Arrowroot, Tapioca, Sago, Corn Flour, Farinaceous Food, ordinary Wheat Flour, or any of the Cereals in use as food in this country.—(Signed) ARTHUR HILL HASSALL, M.D., London."—Highly recommended by the Faculty for Infants, Invalids, &c. Makes delicious Pudding, Custards, Blanc Mange, &c. After a trial no family will be without Mayor's Semolina.

AMERICAN AND BRITISH MASONRY.

WE are tempted to revert to the relationship between English and American Masonry—having just perused a handsome pamphlet containing a verbatim report of the Masonic reception extended to the Grand Master of England by the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia.

Anticipating the welcome so cordially offered by our American brethren to the representatives of the English Craft, we offered some remarks to our readers in connection with the subject upon the occasion of Lord Ripon's departure for America, but we are bound to say that the completeness of the arrangements made for the reception surpassed our utmost expectations. The initiative was taken by M.W. Bro. Charles F. Stansbury, Grand Master of the District of Columbia, who communicated to his Grand Lodge, at a special meeting held on the 8th of March, that the English Grand Master had arrived in Washington, when the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

"Whereas the Right Honourable the Earl de Grey and Ripon, M.W. Grand Master of Masons of England, has been accredited to our Government as the head of the High Commission of the British Government, to adjust the outstanding claims between Great Britain and the United States, and in the performance of that duty is now sojourning in this city; and

"Whereas this Grand Lodge is desirous of extending to him a cordial and fraternal Masonic welcome, as a testimony of personal respect, as well as of honour for his exalted Masonic office, and of fraternal regard for our Masonic brethren of England: Be it, therefore,

"Resolved, That a Committee of seven members of this Grand Lodge be appointed to take the necessary measures to extend to the Grand Master of Masons of England a suitable reception, at such time and of such character as the Committee shall determine."

Invitations were then sent to Earl de Grey and Ripon, Lord Tenterden, Sir John A. Macdonald, and other British and Canadian Masons attached to the High Commission, as well as to the Grand Masters of all the States of the Union, to be present at a Masonic reception and banquet on the 10th March. As we gave at the time an abridged report of the proceedings, it is unnecessary to repeat it now; but the impression conveyed by a perusal of the full details is one of unqualified admiration for the manner in which the American brethren perform their duties as Masons. They seem to possess a peculiar gift of organization which enables them to impart great solemnity and effect to the ceremonies of the Order, and their oratory also is frequently of a very superior character. Take, for instance, the following extract from Grand Master Stansbury's speech when he proposed Lord Ripon's health:—

"The trowel, my brethren, is the principal working tool of a Master Mason, and no true Master Mason can ever forget the moral lesson it is intended to teach. As Free and Accepted Masons, we are taught to make use of it for the noble and glorious purpose of spreading the cement of brotherly love and affection; that cement which binds us together in one common brotherhood, among whom no contention should ever arise, except that noble contention, who shall best work and who best agree. No doubt our honoured guest is a workman who knows how to use the trowel, and whose labours with it will serve to unite two great nations in bonds of reciprocal and enduring respect and affection."

Again, hear Grand Master Latrobe, of Maryland:—

"While progress in all all else is the characteristic of our day and generation, it has always been the boast of Masonry, that what it is now, so was it in the beginning. The political theories on which most governments rest are as changeable as the sands that the waves, fashion at their will; but Faith, Hope, and Charity, whereon Masonry is founded, are as immutable as the rocks that the billows beat upon in vain."

Or the soul-stirring utterances of the far-famed Bro. Dr. Albert G. Mackey, whose speech is a sermon of the purest Masonic type, and deserves to be enshrined in the heart of every Mason. Let our readers judge for themselves. The sentiment to which the eloquent doctor responded being—"Freemasonry! It has a language that men of all nations can speak, and an altar at which men of all creeds can kneel."

"The universality and the tolerance of Freemasonry are indeed the two brightest features of our noble and venerated institution. They are those on which the Mason can most proudly dwell, and which he can most triumphantly present as the evidence of the utility of our society as a human association, and of the sublimity and purity of its principles. I wish that time were afforded me to dilate on these interesting themes; but the present occasion will permit only a casual reference to that which might have afforded subject-matter for an elaborate discourse. The universality of Masonry commends itself to our regard, both for the advantages which it secures to its disciples and for the honour which it reflects on the Order. It was the boast of the Emperor Charles V., that the sun never set upon his vast dominions, and it has been said of that great nation, which is this evening represented by our illustrious guest, that the roll of its drum never ceases to be heard in every quarter of the globe. So may we say of Masonry, that the orb of day finds, at each hour of his course, some hallowed spot, the home of a Mason or domicile of lodge, on which to dispense his light and heat. As he leaves the ancient shores of Asia, and with them the lodges of India, of Persia, and of Turkey, he beholds other congregations of the brethren among the populous cities of Europe and on the coasts of Africa, and as he continues his career, he is welcomed by the Sons of Light who are meeting in the young and vigorous Republics of America. In every land the Mason may find a home, and in every clime a brother. In a well-known portion of our ritual, it is said that a lodge extends, in length, from east to west; in breadth, from north to south; in height, from the earth to the highest heavens; and in depth, from the surface to the centre. This is no unmeaning phrase, but a beautiful symbolism, intended to teach us that the whole world constitutes one common Masonic lodge, and that we Masons, however dispersed and separated by distance—whatever countries we may inhabit, whether in the sultry tropics or the arctic regions, by the side of the rocky mountains, or on the plains of Asia—constitute but one great family, ruled by the same laws and usages, working for the same great purposes, and encompassed by one encircling cord of brotherly love. Go where he may, the Mason can ever find a Mason's greeting—a warm welcome and a close grip—which converts the land of the stranger into a home and the stranger into a friend. Masonry is no obscure fountain, near some humble hamlet, meant to give refreshment only to those who dwell upon its banks; but a mighty river, traversing every field and valley of the earth, and bearing upon its beneficent bosom the perennial waters of love and charity and kindness. Well, indeed, has a venerated brother exclaimed, "What an angel of mercy is found in the universality of our institution!" "A language," says your sentiment, "that men of all nations can speak." Yes, because it is not that utterance of the tongue, which a wily politician once said was intended only to conceal our thoughts, but the sympathetic throb of the heart, the warm pressure of the hand, the kindly glance of the eye, which constitute the dialect of love and friendship. "Here's my heart and here's my hand," this is the cosmopolitan tongue which every Mason speaks and every Mason can understand. The sentiment, to which I am so inadequately responding, asserts also that this wide-spread institution has an altar around which men of every religion can kneel. This is, indeed, the brightest jewel in the diadem of its worth. We do not claim that Masonry is religion, in that peculiar sense of the word, which denotes a particular form of worship, or the adoption of a special system of theology. We have no creed, save a simple one of theism. No designated formula by which alone man is directed to approach his Creator; no articles for subscription; no ordinances deemed necessary to salvation. But, resting on the broad belief in the one Grand Architect of the Universe, the source of light, we invite men of every religious faith to unite with us around our sacred altar, in the cultivation of that eternal and immutable religion which God has implanted in the universal heart of humanity. I thank God, from my inmost heart, that there is such a common altar, where Christian, Turk, and Jew may kneel in adoration to a common Father, and that there is at least one spot in the world where the bitterness of polemics has no voice, where religious truth is taught without religious persecution, where brotherly love takes the place of orthodoxy, and where systems of interpretation yield to the all-pervading influences of charity. There, the Christian—in every phase of that comprehensive title—the Jew, the Mussulman, the Hindu, and the Parsee may all kneel around that altar of tolerance, and forgetful, for a time at least, of that difference of opinion on points in which that difference is sometimes deemed of vital importance, may unite in the friendly grasp that recognises their union in the one brotherhood of man. I thank God that one spot, consecrated to the blessed spirit of toleration, is to be found on this earth, so full elsewhere of angry strife; and I thank God that that spot is a Masonic lodge."

Bear witness also Bro. B. P. Poore's graceful allusions to Webster's famous description of England:—

"A Power which has dotted over the surface of the whole globe with her possessions and military posts, whose morning drum-beat, following the sun, and keeping company with the hours, circles the earth in one continuous and unbroken strain of the martial airs of England.' Let each of us, who boast that 'Chatham's language is his mother tongue,' also remember that while sending to these colonies civil liberty, constitutional law, and liberal education, Great Britain has also established here Masonic lodges, where the Craftsmen were taught to labour, and none went away dissatisfied. It was in these Colonial lodges that Washington and Warren, and the other great lights of our order on this Continent, were brought from darkness into Masonic light, and, through them, we proudly claim descent from our Alma Mater, the Grand Lodge of Great Britain. May that Grand Lodge ever remember the lodges of the United States, when, like the Roman matron, she counts her jewels with maternal pride; and may we, whether of the York Rite or the Scottish Rite, transpose the words of Horace, and exclaim, O filias pulchra, mater pulchrior!"

But our space will not permit us to extend our observations upon this interesting subject. We feel satisfied, however, that the English Craft will treasure within its heart of hearts the many kind and beautiful expressions of fraternity and fellowship on the part of our American brethren which we have now placed on record. May the union of the two nations be perpetual; may their march be ever in the van of progress and civilization, their victories those of peace, their rivalry but a friendly emulation in the arts that tend to increase the comfort and happiness of the human race. That our ancient science of Freemasonry can contribute to so blissful a result none but the veriest sceptic can doubt, and that it will may be fairly predicted from the cordial relations which are now established between British and American Craftsmen.

Multum in Parvo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

COWAN.

In his note on "cowan," Bro. William James Hughan has, in reply to the query of Bro. William Carpenter, adduced from my published notes on the subject, evidence of the early use of the word cowan or cowan. He might also from the same source have given a further quotation in regard to its Masonic import. In reiterating in 1707 its ordinance against the employment of cowans, the Lodge of Kilwinning describes a cowan to be a mason "without the word"—an uninitiated person, an outsider. And in this sense the term was retained by the same lodge on relinquishing its connection with operative Masonry.

In the ritual which has been in use in Scotch lodges of speculative Masons beyond the memory of any now living, we have the term "cowans and eavesdroppers." Cowans here means uninitiated persons, who might attempt to gain admission "without the word;" eavesdroppers signifies listeners outside the lodge.

Cowan is a purely Scotch phrase, and was peculiar to operative masons in the olden time as indicating irregular craftsman who executed certain branches of mason and wright work. Such persons were, under restrictions, admitted to membership in some masonic incorporations, but their reception in lodges was strictly prohibited. Besides, as is shown by the records of the Lodge of Haddington (1697), now before me, apprentices indentured to lodges were taken bound "not to work with, nor in company, nor fellowship of any cowan at any manner of building nor mason work." The earliest minute of the Lodge of Edinburgh (Mary's Chapel), July, 1599, records its deliverance on a breach of the statute prohibiting the employment of cowans.

Nothing can, we fear, be said with certainty as to the etymology of cowan. Some Masonic students assign to it a Greek origin—from κων, a dog. It is worthy of notice that cu is also the Gaelic word for dog. May the term, as one of contempt towards craftsmen "without the word," not have been derived from the Celtic word cu? And may it not be in this sense that we find it employed in "Rob Roy" by the great novelist, who, in the dispute between the Bailie and Major Galbraith in the public-house in the clachan of Aberfoyle, makes the Highlander, whose broadsword had in a previous brawl the same night been opposed by the Bailie's "red-hot culter," speak thus superciliously of the Duke of Argyle: "She'll speak her mind and fear naeboddy; she doesna value a Cawmil mair as a cowan, and ye may tell MacCallum More that Allan Inverach said sae." "Rob Roy" was written in 1817. Sir Walter Scott was made in 1801, and to his acquaintance with Masonic technicalities his use of cowan as a term of contempt may be ascribed.

D. MURRAY LYON.

I, to a certain extent, agree with our worthy brother who asks for information respecting the word "Cowan." It is a corruption (doubtless) of the Greek, and if so may be very ancient. ακουω I listen, past participle ακουων, would signify a "listening person," in a good sense, a "disciple;" in a bad sense, an "eavesdropper." κων, a dog, is also doubtless from the same root, in the sense of one who listens—as dogs do. The two ideas combined would probably give the true meaning.

Now, stray dogs were not in better odour in ancient times than the present, when every policeman is bound to apprehend them; and formerly, in Greece, they were not allowed to enter the interior of the temples, although kept outside to guard them.

Amongst the Jews "cowans," or dogs, were no doubt scavengers, as now at Constantinople. As we see by the passage in Kings, "In the place where the dogs licked the blood of— shall the dogs lick thy blood—even thine." Of course they were looked on as unclean ghouls.

At Rome, on a certain day each year, it was usual to hunt out and kill them, in memory of the time when the geese by cackling saved the Capitol from the Gauls whilst the dogs were silent.

St. Paul also uses the words in a bad or Masonic sense, "Beware of dogs," "cowans," beware of sorcerers—beware of the concision.

The philosophical sect, the "Cynics," were so-called from the Greek word dog (cowan), and gives the idea of one carping, sneering, snarling at their secrets, manner, and arts.

It is in this sense Lucian, in the 7th "Dialogue of the Dead," applies the word when he makes the Cynic philosopher, Menippus, claim kindred with Cerberus—κωνων και αυτος ων, "Being myself also a dog (cowan), tell me, Cerberus, how Socrates looked when, on coming down here, he first set eyes upon you?" His other dialogues give full proof how much a cynic was dreaded.

Taking, therefore, its comprehensive meaning in the bad sense, "cowan" would signify a sneaking, shameless, mocking, or railing eavesdropper, and such signification the Masonic context bears. For one may imagine that even a philosopher, if he claimed kindred with his infernal dogship, would not be a welcome visitor peeping through the crannies of a Masonic lodge.

In the Welch, cow signifies dyg; in the Armoricon, or Brittany dialect of Welsh, it is cuen, pronounced "chouan," hence the "chouans" of General De la Charette; so that "cowan" is evidently a word well known and well used both in ancient and modern times.

We must be careful, however, in applying theory to Freemasonry, as much of what seems ancient may possibly be modern, and the philological student may at any moment be encountered by an elderly "Edie Ochiltree" with an exclamation of "I mind the bigging of it."

My son (not a Mason) suggests to me that it is very likely of Saxon origin—thus, "cowering," present participle of the verb "cow," to frighten, to depress with fear; hence cowering-ones (by the slurred pronunciation of which Dr. Angus gives examples) would become "cowans," that is, "frighteners."

SIR WALTER SCOTT AND FREEMASONRY.

On the occasion of the approaching centenary of the birth of Sir Walter Scott, many Freemasons, both in this country and America, have been led to inquire if he was connected with the Masonic Order? It is pleasant to be able to inform these brethren that he was a Free and Accepted Mason.

Sir Walter Scott was born at Edinburgh on the 15th August, 1771. The house in which he was born stood in North College-street, opposite to the north side of the College or University of Edinburgh, and the room in which his birth took place was in the back of the house, not many yards—the writer of this notice may be excused from mentioning—from the spot of his own birth. That part of Edinburgh was then the habitation of many of the aristocracy, although now entirely deserted by them. The house in which the great poet and novelist was born has recently been demolished, in order to the widening of the street, which is now to receive the name of Chambers-street, in honour of William Chambers, Esq., of Glenormiston, late Lord Provost of Edinburgh, and the senior partner of the eminent firm of W. and R. Chambers, publishers.

Sir Walter Scott—then Mr. Scott—was made a Mason in the Lodge St. David, Edinburgh, No. 36, holding of the Grand Lodge of Scotland. This lodge held its meetings in Hyndford's Close, a narrow lane on the south side of the High-street, in a hall which then belonged to it. This hall is on the first landing of a turnpike stair, the entrance to which is the first door on the right hand from the entrance of the close. It is now used for meetings of various kinds, the lodge having provided for itself a better place of meeting elsewhere.

Sir Walter Scott does not seem to have at any time taken much interest in Freemasonry; but it is known that he visited the ancient Lodge of St. John, Melrose (residing many years only a few miles from it), a lodge which asserts its claims to be regarded as the most ancient in Scotland—even more ancient than the Kilwinning Lodge, from which many Scottish lodges are proud to have derived their original charters, and the name of which they have incorporated in their own. The Lodge St. John, Melrose, has never submitted to the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Scotland; but has always maintained its independence, although working the same system of Freemasonry.

THE VESICA PISCIS.

At page 249 we read:—"Another form of the feminine principle is the Vesica so prevalent in church architecture, alluded to in Solomon's song, where he says, "O, my dove, thou art in the cleft of the rock." Now, it appears to me that the above is a mistake, for the allusion in the passage is not to any "feminine principle," but to the "clefts" of the rock in which the doves built their nests. I can easily imagine Solomon (or the writer) calling up before him some rocky scene, perhaps in Galilee, where he had often witnessed the billing and cooing of the turtle doves as they flew about among the rocks, or sook shelter in the "clefts." In will also be seen that in Chap. ii., v. 14, the word "clefts" is plural. As to the emblem in the shape of a sharp-pointed oval, which we so often meet with in the study of mediæval ecclesiology, and which has been called—under, perhaps, a mistaken idea of its true allusion—the "Vesica Piscis," it appears to me that when used as an emblem by Christians the reference is to the wounds made in Christ's side by the spear of the Roman soldier, or in certain cases to the whole five wounds. If that be correct—and I observed Dr. Zerffi, a few days ago, stating that a table in a church which had five legs had that number in allusion to Christ's five wounds—then it seems to me, as I stated in February last, that the proper title of this figure, when used as a Christian symbol, should be "Christi Sigillum," in allusion to the Christian idea of Christ's blood being the Seal of the New Covenant. (See Heb. xiii. 20.) Possibly many of the seals belonging to the old bishops and ecclesiastical establishments, which are of the sharp-pointed oval form, were so made as containing in their form the symbol of the pierced body of Christ. In certain situations, however, this sharp-pointed oval would naturally grow out of the pointed style of architecture as a centre opening between a two light pointed window, as at Glaphorn, Northamptonshire.

It appears to me that if the sharp-pointed oval was really used as a symbol by the Christian church in the thirteenth century, its true reference is to the wounds in Christ's body, and that it had then no reference whatever to any "feminine principle," or Pagan mystery.

THE TRANSACTIONS OF 1717, WERE THEY OR WERE THEY NOT THE "REVIVAL" OF FREEMASONRY?

To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—At page 409, Bro. Hughan asks if what he is called upon to prove is—"That the Freemasonry of and since 1717 is the descendant of operative Freemasonry, and, in fact, was a revival of the operative body of former centuries?" To which I answer, yes. He, therefore, takes up the affirmative, while I take up the negative and assert that what took place in 1717 was not the "revival" of operative Freemasonry, or of any other Freemasonry; nor is the Institution known as "Speculative Freemasonry" a lineal descendant of either operative Masonry or operative Freemasonry.

The operative Masons—or any other club of the period, which chose, and was enabled to do so—could adopt "Speculative Freemasonry," after its formation by non-operatives; but, most certainly, the thing which since 1717—and not before then—has existed and been known and practised as Speculative Masonry, does not owe its existence to either the operative masons or their lodges. It is only owing to the adoption from without of Speculative Freemasonry by the old operative lodges of Edinburgh, Kilwinning, and Aberdeen that said old operative lodges have managed to keep themselves still alive.

Seeing that I have entered into the negative view of this subject in my opening chapter of the "Aberdeen Records," which I herewith enclose, it is unnecessary to recapitulate what I have there said. Consequently, after Bro. Hughan has had an opportunity of perusing both this and it, I shall expect his reply upon the affirmative.

I am, yours fraternally,
W. P. BUCHAN.

BOYS' SCHOOL FETE.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Can you or any of the Craft inform me why a charge is made to see the prizes presented at our Boys' School. I have always been given to understand that a subscriber could go over the building at any time, and that inspection was courted, so that when the School's cause was advocated, it might be warmly supported in lodges. Being a subscriber, I went down to Wood Green on Saturday, and took my wife and two children (one 11 years and the other 6 years of age). You may guess my surprise by being politely informed that, though a member and subscriber, I was not to be admitted unless I took tickets, which came to 13s. 6d., as follows:—Self, 5s.; wife, 3s. 6d.; two children, 2s. 6d., = 13s. 6d. I stated I did not desire to stay to refreshment; but was again told that made no difference.

Can you enlighten me on this subject?

Yours fraternally,
PLANTAGENET.

Stoke Newington, July 12, 1871.

P.S.—One brother, similarly situated with a small party, had to pay £1 14s. 6d. He demurred at it.

ABERDEEN RECORDS.

BY BRO. W. P. BUCHAN.

We are indebted to the energy and kindness of Bro. John Jamieson, P.M. of the old Lodge of Aberdeen (at present No. 34 on the roll of the Grand Lodge of Scotland), for a copy of its highly-interesting and very valuable records. These, so far as we at present remember, are unique upon some points, which, however, will be best seen by a perusal of them. Although Maister Measones, Fellow-crafts, and Entered Prentises are mentioned, we see no evidence of anything corresponding to our degrees until well on in the eighteenth century. They had the Maister of the lodge, the Box-maisters, and those who were Masters in their trade, but no such thing as our Master degree.

"Fellowship" seems to have been extra privileges, not extra secrets, as appears to be proved by Shaw's "1598 Statutes and Ordinances" (see Laurie's "History of Freemasonry," page 442, as also 1643 minute of ye Ludge of Kilwyning, as given by Bro. Lyon in the Freemason's Magazine for August 8th, 1863), where it says: "That na Maister or Fallow-of-Craft be ressavit or admittit wt.-out the numer of six Maisteris and tua enterit Prentiseses." Although there was only one "degree," if it can fairly be called such, it does not follow that there was only one ceremony; for there were, no doubt, several ceremonies. With the exception of the apron-washing and initiation of the Apprentice, which might be more elaborate, these were no doubt simple; probably only a formal obligation being taken, as in the case of the admission of an honorary or affiliated member amongst us, while all that was done was witnessed by the Entered Prentiseses, and being so witnessed, it was therefore impossible for our system of separate "degrees" to have been in use then. The "Honourable Lodge off Aberdeen," in 1670, cannot, therefore, be looked upon as a speculative lodge similar to our lodges of to-day—it was a trade and friendly society combined. It ruled the Masters, Journeymen, and Apprentices in their trade affairs, while non-craftsmen, or "Penticles," had, in common with all the members, an interest in its funds, &c.

In reference to the existence of our Freemasonry before 1717, the question is not, When did some plan of admission or membership qualification exist among "masons" before 1717? but, Where anywhere can there be found any evidence of the existence of our system with its three degrees, words (not merely a "word"), ceremonies, and doctrines before A.D. 1717? If no such evidence can be given of the existence of what is known as Speculative Freemasonry before then, it follows that, to talk of its "revival" in 1717 is simply a delusion and a mistake. The transactions of 1717 might, perhaps, be looked upon as the renaissance, in a new dress, of Pagan mysticism; but that does not justify their being denominated a "Revival" of Freemasonry! Mere resemblance—which can be copied—is one thing; actual relationship another. Religion and religious institutions existed ages before the first century, A.D.; but where did Christianity exist before the time of Christ? The way was open for the introduction of Christianity in the first century, and Christ being led up to seize the opportunity, the result was success. The way was open for the institution of speculative Masonry in the eighteenth century, and Desaguliers and Anderson skilfully seizing the opportunity, the result in this case was also success. Each administered in its own way to the human wants, feelings, and aspirations of its own age.

As per fifth statute, we see that linen aprons and gloves had generally to be given by the entrant. However, from the latter portion of same statute, we perceive that these were sometimes dispensed with in the case of relatives, &c. In the tenth item of the 1599 Schaw Ordinance, as given at page 302 of the Freemason's Magazine for April 18th, 1863, there is no mention of aprons—"gluffis," or gloves, however, are mentioned. These aprons and gloves might be remnants of the "best aray" which had to be put on by the craftsmen at the old religious processions in honour of the various saints and sacred days in Catholic times—e.g., in the "Burgh Records of Aberdeen," at date 1484, we read that all the craftsmen had to bear the tokens of their craft upon their breasts. And in 1505, we read that, according to ancient usage and "in the honor of God and the blissit Virgin Mary," the different crafts were all to turn out on Candilmas Day in their best array. On these occasions the masons and wrights were generally mixed up together, while the post of honour "nixt the Sacrament" was held by the smiths, as stated at page 42 ante. In order to show off all the better, clean aprons and gloves would be a great desideratum at these processions, consequently we need not wonder at it being a law that all new entrants, inter alia, should have to stand aprons and gloves to all present at their admission, or, as it says, "to all concerned." It saved the other members from the expense of buying them for themselves. From this we see that these articles then had no symbolic meaning, as with us now; they were more for show. Besides, as this fifth statute tells us, they used "linen" aprons, it follows that our lambskin ideas had no place there then. I am not aware of the white lambskin apron being used, as we now use it, by "Freemasons" before A.D. 1717. By this same fifth statute, we perceive that the Entered Apprentice got his mark on payment of "ane merk piece for his meassone merk." There was no Mark Degree then—such not being in existence until until about a century after 1670.

In reference to the "word," which, it has been stated, was in one case a monosyllable, we have never, as yet, either discovered what it was, or to what extent it was in general use. Was it the same in 1670 in London as it was in Aberdeen? Or had each different locality or nation a word of its own? We do not think that the use of any one word was universal. Bro. Hyde Clarke has observed that, before 1717, "The form of admission must have varied," while Bro. W. J. Hughan, a few days ago, observes "All 'degrees' have no older existence than the last century." From what has been said, therefore, it will be seen that the sodality or institution which for the last century and a half has been known as "Freemasonry," never existed before A.D. 1717. Nor was its universal ideas and system known to and practised by any lodge out of London until after the establishment of the first "Grand Lodge" there in 1717. However, after this the old operative lodges and Masonic friendly societies which existed before then gradually adopted it—just as present societies of Teetotallers might adopt the system of the Good Templars quite as easily were it not for the difference in name. Had the new system been called "Free-Teetotalism," there might have been by-and-bye a difficulty in stating when it originated! Only there is this difference between the Teetotallers and the pre-1717 Masons, viz., that the object for which both Teetotalism and Good Templarism exists is precisely similar; whereas neither the object nor the system was the same in the post-1717 speculative lodges as it was in the pre-1717 operative lodges or Masonic friendly societies. By being careful in their choice of words, or in the language which they used, Desaguliers and Anderson made things, which never before existed, appear as if they had existed for centuries—more especially could this be done with the ignorant, or with those who were ready and willing to be deceived. But, be that as it may, let the institution which is itself spotless cast the first stone at Freemasonry, for it is a fact that some of the noblest institutions which the world has ever seen have the same foundation—viz., a legend. If it be noble or beautiful men are fascinated by it, and self-delusion not only becomes easy, but is also looked upon by many as a virtue.

From the seventh statute, we are informed that they were to "honour" St. John's (the Evangelist's) Day, and "to observe and keep that day as a day of rejoicing and feasting with one another." St. John being their patron saint in Catholic times, they resolve to continue so much of the old customs as would not interfere with their altered views, and "feasting" being just as agreeable to the feelings of the Protestants of the seventeenth century as it was to their Catholic progenitors, could not of course be dispensed with. This honouring of St. John does not appear to have been universal, for the old Lodge of Kilwinning in the seventeenth century held its meetings on the 20th December; but whether at or before that time it honoured either St. Thomas the Apostle or Thomas a' Becket we cannot at present say, although in a minute of date 1779 the Kilwinning brethren resolve to hereafter hold their festival on the 21st of December, that being St. Thomas's Day. The reason why we mention Thomas a' Becket is because one of his murderers was a member of the De Morville family, which family largely assisted at the erection of Kilwinning Abbey, and possibly in Catholic times the anniversary of his martyrdom might have been kept.

The eighth statute refers to "this book"—that is the book in which they were writing down their laws, and in which certain things were to be recorded. They were to "have a special care of this Book, and to own it as their rull to walk by, and not to let it decay, neyther let the clerk keep it any longer, nor he is a wreating on it, neyther let him wreat upon it but when the three Maisters of the Keys shall be present," &c. No mention of the Bible here—the great thing is "this book," and the "Box."

In the fourteenth item of old General Lawes we find a set-off to the attempt, real or supposed, made through William Schaw in 1599 to place the Glasgow Masons under the Kilwinning Lodge, for we read that those companies in free burghs which had Seals of Cause of their own "shall nowise be interrupted nor impeded be the said General Warden within the bounds of their Seals of Cause." Now, as the "Masons" of Glasgow had their own Seal of Cause before "1599," it follows that neither the General Warden nor the Kilwinning Lodge had any right to encroach upon the Incorporation of Masons of Glasgow, or its "lodge," as the case might be.

As we perceive from page 448 of Lawie's "History of Freemasonry," the fourteen items of old Lawes and Statutes which the Aberdeen Masons have got in their 1670 book is quite similar to the last fourteen items taken from the minute book of the Aitchison's Haven Lodge, of date 1636, only the Aitchison's Haven book contains ten paragraphs extra. It was customary for these old lodges to correspond with each other in reference to work, wages, or runaway servants, &c. For a long period the Coipland family appear to have had the supervision of Masonic affairs in and around Aberdeenshire, as is stated in a Royal Grant issued by James VI. in 1590 to Patrick Coipland; the principal duty seems to have been to settle all trade disputes within their district. In the seventeenth century the St. Clairs of Roslin had the same privilege granted to them by the Masons of the midland counties. There is an absurd legend abroad to the effect that the St. Clairs of Roslin, long before the establishment of the Grand Lodge of Scotland in 1736, held the office of "Hereditary Grand Master" of the Masons; but that is a mistake. There never has been as yet an "Hereditary Grand Master" of the Scottish Masons. The first who ever bore the title of "Grand Master" in connection with the Masons of Scotland was William Sinclair, Esq., of Roslin, and he was elected to that office upon the institution of the Grand Lodge of Scotland in 1736. He only held it for one year, and was in 1737 succeeded by the Earl of Cromarty. The first individual who ever bore the title or presided as "Grand Master" of the Masons anywhere was Anthony Sayer, Esq., first Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of England—the mother Grand Lodge of the world.

The copy of Aberdeen records now before us extends to 1779, but as yet we have seen no reference to the chivalric degrees. As none of these existed until long after 1717, it is not necessary for us to deal with them here, we shall therefore in our next proceed to give the old Lawes and Statutes ordained by the Honourable Lodge of Aberdeen in 1670.

SCOTLAND.

THE AMERICAN KNIGHTS TEMPLAR IN GLASGOW.

Some time ago we announced that a large party of gentlemen connected with the Commandery of Knights Templar at Alleghany, Massachusetts, had determined to pay Glasgow a visit on the tour they contemplated making of the principal parts of Europe, and that they intend to make their visit also a tour of inspection of the Knights Templar Encampments and other Masonic bodies in the various cities through which they might pass, and that they would come fully equipped with all the paraphernalia of American Templars, who are even more fond of them than their English or Scotch brethren. The tour is taken under the auspices of the Messrs. Cook, the experienced tourists' guides. They left Queenstown on the 13th ult., and since then have visited all the places of interest in Ireland. They sailed from Belfast on Friday night, and on their arrival at Glasgow, were met at the station by a deputation from the Glasgow Girvan Encampment, No. 32, of Knights Templar, who had made arrangements for their reception and entertaining them during their stay in that city, which was limited to two days, as they had arranged to go by the Iona on Monday morning, visiting Glencoe, Ben Nevis, Staffa, Iona and the Isles, then by Inverness to London. After visiting the principal places in England, they make the tour of France, Holland, Switzerland and Italy, returning by Germany and the Rhine. The Glasgow Knight Templars having communicated with them on their arrival at Queenstown, had made arrangements to give them a banquet, which accordingly took place on Saturday, the 24th ultimo, at their own Hall in Struthers-street, which was well attended, though had it been any other day, they would doubtless have turned out in even greater numbers to welcome their Transatlantic confreres.

The banquet took place at six o'clock, under the presidency of Sir Knight Robert Bell, the M.N.C., of the Glasgow Encampment, who was supported on his right by Sir Knight Wm. Hamilton, M.E.C. of the Alleghany Commandery, and on his left by the Hon. T. Jenkinson, American Consul, &c. The duties of croupier were ably performed by Sir Kt. J. E. Speirs, C.G., who was supported by T. Clanachan, P.M.C., &c., &c.

Full justice having been done to an excellent repast, the Chairman proposed the first toast on the programme, "The Queen and Royal Family." He said: "This is a loyal toast, which I have no doubt will be loyally responded to. As a family, they have long presided over our destinies, and that too with our full acceptance. We are not only still loyal, but, for the satisfaction of our worthy guests, I may say, and say without fear of contradiction, that we are more loyal now than ever. This increase of loyalty is not with Freemasons only, but with subjects generally. There is evidently a growing admiration for our Queen and the Royal family. She is indeed worthy of our highest eulogium. She is patroness for the Craft in Great Britain, and extends her hand to all its charities. On that ground we have a right to drink this toast with all the greater enthusiasm. Whether we view our gracious Queen in her private, public, or political life, we find the same generous, conciliating heart, and the same traces of peace, harmony and prosperity. I am certain it is the ardent desire of all her faithful subjects that she may live long to enjoy that peace and prosperity which she has heretofore enjoyed. The Prince of Wales, too, is not only a brother and a companion, but a Knight Templar—not only a distinguished, but a zealous one. He gives great encouragement to all the charitable institutions of the Craft, which in itself is good. But the fact of his being a brother, is sufficient to make us drink this toast with all the warmth of a brother's heart. The Princess of Wales has now recovered her usual health, and last month she was made Patroness of one of the chief Masonic charitable institutions. Therefore, let us now show that we are not only loyal but grateful for the interest the Queen and Royal family take in the real welfare of the Craft, by giving this toast our heartiest reception.

Music, "God save the Queen."

The Chairman: The next toast is that of "The health of the President of America." From all that we can learn of General Grant, we judge that our cousins have been wise in the selection of their present President. A greater number of excellent qualities in one person is, I believe, not to be found. Are we not proud that such a man is of Scottish extraction? Chide us not for this. Are we not proud, too, that by his persevering activity and heroism he has been the grand agent in accomplishing the greatest temporal blessing the world has ever seen, namely, that of abolishing slavery—the most disgraceful of all evils. He has utterly destroyed its bulwarks, thrown open its floodgates, to allow the gospel of peace to enter in. It was certainly an expensive, a protracted and severe struggle. But who can measure the greatness of the victory? Time alone can reveal this. Grudge not your taxation. Let the honoured name and memory of Grant go down to the latest generation in letters of gold. I have, this week, had the pleasure of reading his opinion on the Washington treaty. It is like himself, conciliatory and good; like the hero of Richmond, who fed his enemies and sent them away in peace. Is it not gratifying alike for us and our welcome guests that the grievous disputations between us, the two great branches of the Anglo-Saxon race, are now amicably and finally settled. It is also congratulating for us, as Masons, that one of the joint High Commissioners in that treaty was the Grand Master Mason of England. Need I say that we were highly honoured by the warm Masonic reception he received at Washington while engaged in that treaty, by Masons—Masons from all quarters of America, some of whom travelled thousands of miles to do us that honour. Ours was the honour, his was the reception—the magnificence and grandeur of which no tongue can sufficiently portray. I may therefore safely prophecy that when our distinguished guests and brothers reach England, they may expect to receive a hearty welcome from the brethren of the Craft. It is surely delightful that the loving principles of Masonry are spreading so fast. The more rapid its progress the sooner will our swords be beat into ploughshares and our spears into pruning-hooks, or laid up in our archives as mementoes of the past. The little river that divides us from England has long since been thus Masonically covered; the Irish channel is being bridged with stones from the same fraternal quarry; and this evening we have the Atlantic spanned with the same ever-widening Royal Arch of Love on which we delight to stand to exchange our brotherly feelings. Now, Sir Knights, seeing that the President of America has done his utmost to make us one, and that our fraternal friendship forms so delightful a background to that lately-finished harmonious picture of peace, let us now, with our whole hearts, and with all our enthusiasm, drink a full bumper to this toast, with which I am proud to have the honor of coupling the distinguished name of Sir Knight Jenkinson, our American Consul. To the good health and long life of President Grant. (Drunk with enthusiasm.)

Song, "A' Brethren, a'."

The American Consul, in replying, said it had given him a great deal of pleasure to accept the invitation to be present at this fraternal meeting of Masons from both hemispheres, and to address a meeting composed of Americans and Britons, as such meetings were calculated to increase the harmony and good-will that already existed between them. We were pleased to join you in honouring your Queen, and you have well repaid us by the enthusiastic way in which you have responded to this sentiment. There are many points of resemblance between the two nations, and we are as proud of our Washington as you are of your Wallace. The same love of liberty, the same love of nature, the same feelings and sentiments, filled the breasts of both peoples, and they felt that they were indeed brothers. To this feeling the Orders of Masonry had no doubt very much contributed, for they taught that all men are brothers and all equal, and that it was the duty of all to spread peace and goodwill among men. Before sitting down he would like to give one word of warning to his countrymen. It was not to caution them against the irritability, the pride, or the jealousy of those whom they had come to visit, but he would warn them to beware of their hospitality. Scotch beef was good, and Scotch toddy not bad (if taken in moderation), but they must beware of being pressed too much. The hearts of the Scotch people were so warm, and their invitation so kind—as they might judge from the example before them—and he knew his American brethren were so warm-hearted and ready to appreciate kindness, that he feared, for the honour of his country, lest at any time they should suffer Scotch hospitality to overcome American moderation. (Laughter.) He would conclude by again thanking their hosts for the very cordial reception they, and the name of their President, had received. (The speaker throughout was loudly applauded.)

The Chairman next gave "The Grand Commanderies of America." It would be out of place at present (he said) when our time is so limited, to turn up the history of the Crusades and give you an account of the origin of Knight Templary, or to examine the annals of its amazing progress, and the despotic and treacherous way in which it was overthrown by its malignant foes, who so mammon-like thirsted for its material wealth. Let us rejoice that despotism, with all its infernal machinery, could not crush the spirit of our first Christian Order. It has again sprung up from the honourable ashes of our great Christian hero—its Grand Master, James Bernard Molay. It has now taken deep root in the western hemisphere, where it is spreading far and wide, and at this moment is ready to go forth against the bitterest despots, in the defence of its glorious principles. But happily for us, the word despot is fast losing its significance. It has of late been consuming itself on the very spot where it sought to consume our respected, our valiant, our magnanimous Order. Sir Knights, it gives us great pleasure to hear that Knight Templarism is increasing so rapidly in the United States. It is also making much progress in England. But I am sorry we cannot say this of Scotland. A few of us in Glasgow are alive to this fact, and we are now bestirring ourselves. I may say that this evening's entertainment is the first-fruit of our labour. It will be a new era in our history. We will, I doubt not, have to record to you the happy effects of your sojourn in our midst. May the God of all grace be your God and guide; may He conduct you during the remainder of your pilgrimage, and bring you again to your own homes in safety and peace, is the heart's desire of every Sir Knight of this encampment. I have much pleasure in coupling with this toast the Alleghany Commandery. (Loud cheers.)

After the toast had been duly honoured, the Chairman called upon Sir Knight Wheeler to recite a poem he had composed in honour of this visit, which he did as follows:—

THE GLASGOW KNIGHT TEMPLARS' WELCOME TO THE AMERICAN KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

A welcome to each noble guest!
We bid you welcome to our feast.
Templars offer not sumptuous fare,
But our crust and cup we freely share;
The shelter of our tent we give,
That all may enter in and live.
Then, pilgrim, tarry here, my son
Rest and refresh, and travel on.

Welcome, thrice welcome, to our board,
And to the best we can afford ;
With joy we greet your knightly band,
On your arrival in our land ;
With love your proffered hand we take,
And welcome you for friendship's sake ;
With joy we recognise each other,
And hail each true Masonic brother.

From Alleghany's sides you come,
We welcome you to Scotia's home,
Five thousand miles o'er land and sea,
Then cordial let our greeting be.
You come to us with sword and spear,
Yet not as foes do you appear ;
Fraternal greetings here you bring,
Fraternal greetings, too, we sing.

At home, abroad, on land, on sea
Our mystic brethren we see ;
In every clime throughout the world
Our Craft's broad banner is unfurled,
The flag whose colour is light Blue—
Emblem of all that's just and true.
Beneath its ample folds, I ween,
True men of every rank are seen.

The pride of caste is here unknown—
Merit's the only rank we own ;
As Widow's sons we help each other,
We're bound to always greet a brother.
But hailing from a distant land,
With extra zest we take your hand,
With heartfelt joy we hail your trip
And, joyful, give the Mason's grip.

Then, as Companions of the ARCH,
We greet you on this friendly march.
Sojourners in our land awhile,
We meet you with a friendly smile ;
We know that in your train you bring
The Priest, the Prophet, and the King,
And Scribes, expounders of the Law
From whence we inspiration draw.

The Master's Mark and the Keystone
To you alike are both well known ;
You've passed the Chair, likewise the Vail,
And know what mysteries they reveal,
And kindred Orders too, no doubt,
The world would like to know about :
Companions of the Red Degree,
It is with pride we welcome ye.

All Masons learn from early youth "Brotherly Love, Relief, and Truth,"
Of these, no doubt, you are bright exemplars,
But something more's required of Templars ;
And still as brighter grows your sight,
The less you need of outward Light ;
Upon your arms we trace with glee,
The emblems of the Black Degree.

We own those claims to our goodwill,
As proof of something nobler still :
You a more Holy cause espouse,
You all have taken deeper vows,
A longer pilgrimage have ta'en
And washed your hands from earthly stain,
I have been engaged in solemn rites,
And pledged yourselves as brave Sir Knights ;

Have girt upon your thighs the sword
To bravely battle for the Lord,
His cause and Temple to maintain
Till all His foes are crushed and slain.
The virgin and the widow, too,
Succour and help may claim from you.
Then enter our tent awhile, my son,
Rest and refresh, then travel on.

As all are pledged to serve the Lord,
Apostles of His will and word,
Upon this consecrated ground
May ne'er a Judas e'er be found,
But each, like taper firm and bright,
Shed a pure calm resplendent light,
That all the world may plainly see
How Templars dwell in unity.

Then drink to Hiram King of Tyre,
Who fed the true Masonic fire ;
Another cup then let us bring
To Solomon, the wisest king,
Who the first temple built to God,
And all who have his footstep trod ;
Then a libation let us pour
To him, the Widow's son of yore.

Now pause awhile, and let us think
Ere we the next libation drink ;
Let no vain idle thought intrude,
The drink be pure, the cup be rude,
Now take the draught with bended knee,
In His name we shall conquerors be ;
But sacred is the Templar's vow,
And I no more dare utter now.

When you return across the main,
May this one feeling still remain :—
In England, Ireland, Scotland too,
We found the brethren firm and true,
Lodge and Encampment all the same,
Each warmed at a Mason's name,
With open hand and kindly heart,
Masonic knowledge to impart.

While in our tent refresh awhile,
Then travel on through Britain's Isle.
Where'er you go, I dare be bound,
A kindly welcome will be found—
But none more cordial, while you live,
Than what the Girvan Knights now give.
So I'll conclude as I begun :
A hearty welcome to each one.

Sir Knight Gardner said their M.E.C. Hamilton had requested him to reply, for he was something like Grant—a first-rate commander, a good man, and also a Scotchman—but also like Grant, he would always shirk a speech if possible ; but he (Sir Kt. Gardner) felt it a pleasure, as well as a privilege, to respond on behalf of the American Commanderies. The task was large, for their camp was vast, but after the excellent poem they had just listened to he was inspired to speak. He should not dwell on the wonders of his great country—its thousands of miles of telegraph wires ; its railways, 3000 or 4000 miles in length without a break ; its chains of mountains, 2000 miles in length ; its rivers, that run as far as half the distance he was now from home ; its cities, that spring up as if by magic, some of which could vie in architectural beauty with Glasgow, Edinburgh, London, or other cities in the old country, and they must remember that their sites, in many instances, 30, 20, or even 10 years ago, were portions of the howling wilderness, with not a single dwelling near them. It was a marvel to many how this was accomplished ; how men from the east and the west, the north and the south, should meet together, coalesce, organise and build cities. But he would explain the mystery. It was Masonry, to a very great extent that caused it. We got Masonry (he proceeded to say), and Knight Templary too, from you, but like everything else, in that prolific soil they have grown to gigantic proportions. Do not think I am speaking in a boasting spirit, for if there is a boast, you are entitled to share, as the authors of it. I boast of Masonry not for myself, but our commercial interest is due to the same cause. Correspondence with you have known Masons with us, and opened up new sources of trade and commerce. So in building up our cities ; men from all quarters meet there with honoured brethren, and immediately there is an electric current rises, not only to the head but to the heart. That is the grand secret of our great success. I claim the honour of it for Masonry, and on behalf of the Commanderies of that great continent, as well as in the name of us present, thank you for the reception you have given us, and the way you have received this toast. (Cheers.)

"The Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Town Council of Glasgow" was then given by the Croupier ; followed by "The Commercial interests of the British and American Dominions," proposed by Sir Kt. F. G. Dougal, and responded to by Sir Kt. Robert Mitchel.

Sir Kt. M. Wilson, in a brief but eloquent speech, proposed "The health of the Visiting Sir Knights, and the Alleghany Commandery, No. 35."

The S.W., Sir Kt. D. A. Cook, replied, expressing the great gratification they all felt at the noble reception they had that day met. It was far in excess of what they had anticipated, though he must confess that when they organised this trip they fully expected to meet with a fraternal welcome from all Masonic bodies they might come in contact with, but on their very arrival at Queenstown they found the Glasgow invitation awaiting them. They gladly accepted the invitation, and this night would live in their memories long after their return to America.

The Croupier then gave "Freemasonry all over the World," which was responded to by Sir Kt. John Scott.

Sir Kt. Thos. Palmer, P.E.C. of the Alleghany Commandery proposed "The Girvan Encampment, No. 32." He said the proposing of this toast was both a pain and a pleasure. He had found the Girvan brethren true Masonic knights. Knight Templarism was increasing in England, though not so rapidly as with them in America ; but here in Scotland, the former home and refuge of the Order, most of the Priors and Encampments were either dormant or met so seldom as to be little better. All the more credit should therefore be given to the Girvan Encampment for the way in which they had kept up monthly meetings, while more pretentious bodies could not once in a quarter get enough knights to open an encampment. He had examined into the matter and looked at their charter, which proved that they were the oldest regularly-constituted body of Knights Templar in Scotland, working under the old Constitution and in accordance with the ancient landmarks of the Order. They ought to be the governing body in this kingdom, and if he returned in a few years he should be more than surprised if he did not find them the Grand Commandery of Scotland. These reasons, in addition to the kindness shown to himself and coadjutors, made him ask them to do full justice to the toast. (The E.C. led the American fire of 9 in a way that nearly electrified their hosts.)

It was then proposed, and carried unm. con., "That the whole of the members of the Alleghany Commandery now present be at once affiliated as honorary members of this encampment."

The N.C. requested Sir Kt. T. Clanachan, P.N.C., as the oldest member of the encampment, to administer the obligation, and also respond to the toast, which he did.

The remaining toasts were : "The health of the Chairman, Commander Bell" "The E.C. Hamilton," "The Croupier," and "Happy to meet, &c.," all of which having been duly honoured and responded to, Sir Kt. E.C. Hamilton led the company in a hearty rendering of "Auld Lang Syne," and thus ended this fraternal meeting.

During the evening a variety of songs were sung, those of Professor Slack, of Alleghany, eliciting loud applause.

The members of the two encampments attended Divine service at the Cathedral.

DUNDEE.

The committee of Lodge Ancient, No. 49,

Dundee, have been doing a good work, and have just brought it to a very agreeable termination. For a long time back a desire has pervaded the brethren of this lodge that the services of their R.W.M. (Bro. Kelt) to his mother lodge should not be allowed to remain acknowledged—he having filled several offices with acceptance, but with special reference to his long term of presidency, being unanimously returned to the chair no less than five successive years. It was therefore arranged that Bro. Kelt should give sittings to one of our best photographers, with the view of presenting him with a full life-size photo on canvas, and finished in oil. Bro. G. F. Roger was entrusted with the work, and has even excelled his usual success in producing a decidedly fine picture. Bro. Kelt is represented in the full regalia of office, wearing the jewels of the various degrees he has attained to. In the meantime such unlooked-for liberality manifested itself on behalf of the subscribers that it became evident the committee would have more than sufficient for their purpose. A very handsome sum in sovereigns was thereafter placed in a purse for Mrs. Kelt, to be presented at the same time with the portrait.

The meeting for presentation was called in the Lodge Hall, Murray-gate, Bro. Alex. Robertson, Deputy Master, presiding. There were present : Past Masters Ritchie and Dickson (of 49), R.W.M.'s Longmuir (47) and Roger (225), as well as several Past Masters of other lodges, and a number of distinguished brethren.

The lodge having been placed under the care of the J.W., and the usual loyal and patriotic toasts given and responded to, the Acting Master then desired Bro. Buick to give the toast of the evening and make the presentation.

Bro. Buick alluded, in a few well-chosen sentences, to Bro. Kelt's lengthened connection with Lodge Ancient, the healthy state of its funds, and recent additions to the property, which, he said, were mainly due to Bro. Kelt's excellent generalship. He concluded by reading the inscription on the picture, and asking Bro. Kelt's acceptance of it. Before sitting down, he also presented a purse of sovereigns, requesting Bro. Kelt to place the same in Mrs. Kelt's possession. Both of which were gracefully acknowledged by Bro. Kelt.

The remainder of the evening was spent in a most enjoyable manner, the Acting Master calling to labour at the accustomed hour—"all happy to meet, sorry to part, and happy to meet again."

KELSO.

A meeting of the members of Tweed Lodge, No. 261, was held in the lodge-room, Cross Keys Hotel, Kelso, on Thursday evening last week, for the purpose of initiating a number of gentlemen who had come forward to enroll themselves as members of the Order. The office-bearers of the lodge had some time previously invited Bro. J. S. Macgregor, Past Master of St. David's Lodge, Berwick-on-Tweed, to pay them a visit, along with as many brethren of his lodge as might find it convenient to attend with him, for the purpose of working the lodge and the degrees in the same manner as done in England. Accordingly a deputation came from Berwick-on-Tweed, consisting of Bros. Macgregor, Gibson, Hopper, Struthers, Scott, Moor, Moffat, and others. The members having assembled, the Right Worshipful Master requested Bro. J. S. Macgregor to occupy his seat and work the lodge, which was done in a manner not to be excelled, the entire degrees being gone through.

After the business of the meeting was finished, the brethren, to the number of forty, sat down to an excellent supper. After doing full justice to the repast, Bro. J. S. Macgregor proposed "The Health of the Queen," and afterwards "The Prince of Wales, Patron of the Craft in Scotland." Next proposed in succession was "The Grand Lodges of Scotland, England, and Ireland ;" then "The Provincial Grand Lodges of Scotland," coupled with the health of Bro. Gibson, Provincial Grand Warden of East Lothian, who replied. The Acting Master next gave "The Tweed Lodge" (261), and coupled the toast with the name of the Right Worshipful Master, Bro. James Steel, who replied, and expressed the great pleasure they all had in being visited by the deputation. He begged to propose "The Healths of the Brethren from Berwick," and he hoped it would not be long until a similar deputation would visit them from Kelso. He coupled the toast with the name of Bro. J. S. Macgregor. Bro. Gibson proposed "The Absent Brethren," and other toasts followed. Some excellent songs were sung by several of the members during the evening, and the brethren broke up after spending a very happy night.

The following reports stand over for want of space :—Lodges 597, 779, 863, 1107, 1154, 1275, and 1314 ; Chapters 148 and 619 ; also a report of "Grand Masonic Ceremonies at Albany," from our own Special Correspondent.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF A MASONIC HALL AT SWANSEA.

A Provincial Grand Lodge for the eastern division of South Wales was held on Thursday, 6th inst., at Swansea, with the view of laying the foundation-stone of a new Masonic hall. The ceremony was performed by the R.W. Prov. G.M., Bro. Theodore Mansel Talbot, the gathering of brethren from all parts of the province, and from the neighbouring districts, being larger than has been known in Swansea for a long time past.

The Provincial Grand Lodge opened at twelve o'clock, when a right Masonic welcome was given to visiting brethren from the neighbouring provinces, those from Monmouthshire mustering in great force, with the W. the Deputy the Prov. G.M., Bro. S. G. Homfray, at their head. The R.W. Prov. The procession left the starting point at one o'clock, and proceeded to the site of the new Hall, next to the St. Ives. On reaching the site of the building the brethren at the head of the procession halted, opening right and left, facing inwards, leaving room for the R.W. the Prov. Grand Master to pass up the avenue thus formed, he being preceded by his standard and sword bearer. The Worshipful the Deputy Prov. Grand Officer and brethren followed in succession from the rear. At this point the band played selections from the "Creation."

The stone being previously prepared, and the plate, with the proper inscription, the upper stone was raised, and the Prov. Grand Chaplain (Bro. the Rev. Mr. Jones, vicar of Llanmadoc) offered up prayer.

The Prov. Grand Treasurer having, by the command of the R.W. Prov. Grand Master, deposited in the cavity various coins of the present reign, &c., the cement was laid on the stone with the trowel which was presented for the purpose, and the upper stone was slowly let down, solemn music playing. Being properly placed, the R.W. Prov. Grand Master proved that it was properly adjusted by the plumb rule presented to him by the Prov.

J.G.W., by the level delivered to him by the Prov. S.G.W., and by the square delivered to him by the Deputy Prov. Grand Master, after which the mallet was handed to him, with which he gave the stone three knocks. The R.W. the Prov. Grand Master then delivered to the builder the several implements for his use; the plans of the building were presented by the Prov. Grand Superintendent and the R.W. the Prov. Grand Master, having approved them, delivered them to the architect for his guidance. The brethren bearing the corn, wine, and oil now approached and presented the vessels in order to the R.W. the Prov. Grand Master, who, after pouring them upon the stone, declared the stone properly laid according to ancient custom. The Prov. Grand Chaplain concluded with the Benediction, after which the band played the "National Anthem."

The procession then re-formed in the same order, and returned to the Lodge room, when the Provincial Grand Lodge was closed.

The brethren afterwards dined together at the Mackworth Hotel, upwards of 250 sitting down to the banquet, presided over by Brother Lawrence Tulloch, P. Prov. G.S.B., W.M., of the Indefatigable Lodge; the vice-chair being filled by Brothers G. Bradford and W. E. Brown. An excellent spread was served up, to which ample justice was done, the band playing a selection of music during the banquet, under the leadership of the band-master, Mr. H. Clews.

The Chairman proposed "The Queen and Craft," "The M.W. the Grand Master," and "The Deputy Grand Master and the Officers of Grand Lodge," which were warmly and Masonically responded to.

The Chairman next proposed "The Right Worshipful the Provincial Grand Master," which was received right heartily, and drunk with Masonic honours.

The Prov. Grand Master, who was warmly received, rose to respond. He said that during the time he had had the honour of presiding among them, he had had many occasions to respond to their good wishes, but this was the first time he had been called on to execute one of the privileges of a Provincial Grand Master—that of laying the foundation stone of a new Masonic building. He was pleased to know that on no former occasion, when he had found it necessary to call a Provincial Grand Lodge together had there been a better gathering than the present. The occasion that had brought them together was not a common one. It had never happened before during his Mastership, and might not occur again. He thanked them all heartily and sincerely for responding so readily to his call, and also expressed his thanks to the W.M. of the Indefatigable Lodge for the hearty welcome which had been given to him, and for the handsome trowel which had been presented to him. He looked upon this as an earnest of the good will which was entertained towards him by the members of the Indefatigable Lodge, and which he would do his best to reciprocate. (Cheers.)

The Chairman next proposed "The Worshipful the Deputy Provincial Grand Master," which was heartily drunk with Masonic honours.

Bro. E. J. Morris, D.P.G.M., responded. He said the occasion was one in which he had taken the greatest possible amount of interest, and it afforded him sincere gratification to see the undertaking commence under such favourable auspices. He wished with all his heart continued prosperity to the Indefatigable Lodge, and happiness to the members, and he sincerely hoped the future of the lodge would be as deeply graven and as satisfactorily written in the annals of prosperity and success as had been its past. (Applause.)

The Chairman then proposed "The Provincial Grand Lodge of Monmouthshire."

Bro. S. G. Homfray, Prov. G.M., who was received with cheers, responded, and while thanking the brethren of the Eastern Division for the kindly feeling which had been displayed by them towards the Monmouthshire brethren at all times, hoped the present gathering would have the result of cementing still closer the bonds of brotherly feeling between the two provinces. (Cheers.)

The Chairman then proposed "The Provincial Grand Officers," which was received with enthusiasm, and drunk with Masonic honours.

Bro. J. G. Hall, P. Prov. G.S.W., and Bro. Colonel Hill, Prov. G.S.W., (Cardiff) responded.

The R.W. Prov. Grand Master then proposed "The Indefatigable Lodge," and paid a very high compliment to the Masonic ability and personal worth of Bro. Tulloch, the W.M. of the Lodge, who responded.

The toast of "The Visitors" was coupled with the names of Bro. Clarke (Cardiff), Bro. Harris (Tenby), and Bro. W. E. Jones (of the St. Francis Lodge, Canada), all of whom responded, which brought the official list of toasts to a close.

A dinner was given to the workmen engaged at the building, which was supplied by Bro. H. C. Tate, Nelson Hotel. The weather throughout the day was most unfavourable.

PROVINCIAL.

LIVERPOOL.—Mariners' Lodge, No. 249.—On Thursday se'nnight the monthly meeting of the above lodge was held at the Masonic Temple, Hope-street, Liverpool, the principal business being the installation of the W.M.-elect, Bro. Henry Pearson. The attendance of brethren was unusually large, and the proceedings were marked by a harmony and unanimity which were both pleasant and instructive. During the year just closed, No. 249 has made rapid and decided progress, not only in numbers, but in the standing of its members and the character of its working. This satisfactory progress is due in a large measure to the invariable courtesy and indefatigable zeal of Bro. J. Kellett Smith, W.M., who neglected no opportunity of advancing the interests and maintaining the dignity of the lodge—a work in which he was ably seconded by an efficient staff of officers, whose careful attention to their respective duties is worthy of imitation and commendation. No fewer than about 20 visitors were present on this occasion, amongst these being a number of Provincial Grand officials, P.M.'s, and others. The lodge was duly opened in the three degrees, the minutes of previous meeting were read, and a Board of Installed Masters was subsequently held. The ceremony of installation was performed in a highly effective and impressive manner by Bro. J. K. Smith, I.P.M., and Bro. H. Pearson, W.M., afterwards invested the following officers:—Bros. E. Hughes, S.W.; J. Hyde, J.W.; J. J. Rose, S.D.; J. Lloyd, J.D.; De la Parelle, Sec.; R. R. Martin, Treas.; C. Leighton, M.S.; R. Carter, S.S.; J. Heyes, J.S.; C. Leighton, O.; Pemberton, Leader of Chair; and Ball, Tyler. The Committee of Management was then appointed. After granting relief to several applicants, and the transaction of some other business, the lodge was closed in due form. The brethren subsequently adjourned to the Adelphi Hotel, where they sat down to a splendid installation banquet, provided with the greatest liberality by "mine host," and served in the most expeditious manner. Between 70 and 80 sat down, under the presidency of Bro. H. Pearson, W.M. After dessert had been placed on the table, the W.M. proposed the toast of "The Queen," remarking that he was sure that amongst the whole body of the people was she more loyally respected than amongst Masons. (Hear, hear.)—(The toast was responded to with true Masonic enthusiasm.)—Bro. W. Crane, P.M. 249, next submitted "Bro. Albert Edward, P.G.M., Prince of Wales, the Princess of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family," expressing a hope that their brother, the Prince, would, when he ascended the throne, fill his exalted position in a manner which would do credit to the memory of his predecessors, and prove satisfactory to the English people. He had already proved himself a good Mason, and therefore worthy of the cordial recognition conveyed in the toast.—(The brethren responded with great cordiality and Masonic honours.)—Bro. Jones, P.M. 249, proposed "The Marquis of Ripon, M.W.G.M., and the Earl of Carnarvon, R.W.D.G.M." In the course of a short speech, Bro. Jones referred in eulogistic terms to the well-deserved honour which had been conferred on their illustrious brother, the efficient manner in which he had performed his State duties, and the "golden opinions" he had earned from the brethren across the Atlantic.—After the toast had been duly honoured, Bro. Pinnington, P.M. 249, proposed "Sir Thomas G. Fermor-Hesketh, Bart., M.P., R.W. Prov. G.M., Lord Skelmersdale, W.D. Prov. G.M., and the Provincial Grand Officers," referring to the satisfactory manner in which the respective offices were filled.—The toast was duly honoured, and Bro. Dr. Mercer Johnson, Prov. G. Steward, responded in a highly facetious speech.—In submitting the toast "The Worshipful Master," Bro. J. K. Smith said he was quite sure the brethren would receive it with even more cordiality than any which had been given that evening. The Mariners' Lodge had the names of many very eminent P.M.'s, but he believed Bro. Pearson would go out of the W.M.'s chair with an honour equal to any which had gone before him. Bro. Pearson had for many years been connected with the lodge in various offices, in each of which he had proved his usefulness. He (Bro. Smith) would conclude by wishing him long life and happiness, and trusted that the coming year would be the very happiest of all. (Cheers.)—(The toast was received by the brethren with utmost enthusiasm.)—The W.M. expressed his gratitude for the manner in which his health had been drunk. Although he had filled every office in the Mariners' Lodge during his eight or nine years' connection with it, he assured the brethren that he had no intention until last year of going into that chair, feeling content in filling any office, however humble, which would contribute to the prosperity of the lodge. (Hear.) At the solicitation of a few brethren, however, he had agreed to accept the position of W.M., of the responsibility and cares of which he was not ignorant. He was glad to know that he had been placed in the chair without one adverse vote, and if it pleased the Great Architect of the Universe to spare him, he trusted that he would always be found ready and willing to do his duty. He assured them with all sincerity that he would do his utmost to further the interests of the lodge generally, as well as those of every individual member.—The W.M. then gave the "Installing Master," and said no one had filled that chair who had been more worthy of imitation than their immediate P.M., Bro. Smith. They must have been delighted with the energy and courtesy shown by him as W.M., and with the effective manner in which he had performed the duties of Installing Master that afternoon. He (the W.M.) was sure that he could not have selected one who would have performed those duties more thoroughly. In Bro. Smith he had a very good example, and one he would try to imitate as far as he was able. He must also acknowledge the services Bro. Smith had rendered him since he (Bro. Peason) was W.M.-elect. Twelve months ago, that chair was anything but "bed of roses," but Bro. Smith, by his tact and good management, had left the lodge united almost to a man, and marked by the harmony and love which ought especially to characterise Freemasons. He spoke this to the honour and credit of Bro. Smith. (Cheers.)—The toast was received by the brethren with great cordiality.—In acknowledging the compliment, Bro. Smith thanked them for the flattering way in which the toast had been given and received, said his efforts had been a labour of love, and said he would continue to seek the prosperity and harmony of that lodge.—"The W. P.M.'s of Lodge 249" was given by the W.M., and acknowledged by P.M.'s Pinnington, Jones, and De la Parelle; "The Officers of the Lodge," by the W.M., responded to by Bros. Hughes, S.W., and Hyde, J.W.; "The West Lancashire Masonic Educational Institution," given by Bro. De la Parelle, and acknowledged by Bro. R. H. D. Johnson; "The Visiting Brethren," by Bro. Hughes, responded to by Bros. Sheldon, Washington, S. Hayne, &c.; "Absent Seafaring Brethren," by the W.M.; and "The Press" (acknowledged by Bros. Wood and MacKenzie. The Tyler's toast, "All Poor and Distressed Brethren," brought the list to a close. A sum amounting to upwards of £2 was collected for the West Lancashire Masonic Educational Institute. Harmony was contributed by Bros. Washington, Hughes, Sheldon, Pemberton, &c., and a recitation by Bro. J. M. Johnson, and the brethren separated after enjoying a most pleasant evening.

CROYDON.—Frederick Lodge of Unity, No. 452.—A meeting of this lodge was held on the 4th inst., at the Railway Hotel, Sutton. Present: Bros. C. W. Dormmett, W.M.; Jas. Robins, Treasurer; Magnus Ohren, I.P.M., Sec.; H. E. Frances, D.C.; J. W. Sugg, I.G.; R. H. Evans and Newton E. Jennings, P.M.'s; W. G. Davis, Jas. C. Campbell, W. V. Wilson, J. W. Pollard, George Wright, Fredk. Williams; visitors, M. D. Rucker (227), W. Webb (P.M. 72, 128, 890), Jno. Rodda (890). The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. Bros. Pollard, Wright, and Campbell were raised; Bro. Wilson was passed; and Mr. William Cartwright Holmes, C.E., was elected for initiation. The following notices of motion were severally put and carried: 1. By the S.W., seconded by the W.M., "That in consideration of the valuable services rendered to this lodge by P.M. Brother Magnus Ohren, as Secretary for several years, for the great interest he has shown in the prosperity of the lodge since his connection therewith, and that having passed through the chair with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of the brethren, and having again accepted the office of Secretary; that he be presented with a Secretary's jewel to the value of five guineas, as a mark of respect from the members of this lodge." 2. By Brother Capt. R. H. Evans, P.M., seconded by Bro. Jennings, P.M., "That in consideration of the valuable services rendered to this lodge by P.M. Bro. James Robins, in his capacity of Treasurer of the lodge, and the very able and perfect manner in which he has carried out those duties; that he be presented with a Treasurer's jewel to the value of five guineas, as a mark of respect from the members of this lodge." 3. By Bro. Magnus Ohren, seconded by the Treasurer, "That the sum of two guineas be presented to the fund for the Freemasons' Life Boat."

WALTHAM CROSS.—Gresham Lodge, No. 869.—This lodge met on Saturday, the 8th inst., at the Four Swans, Bro. J. Forsyth, P.G. Sup. Wks., W.M., in the chair, supported by all his officers, and a good attendance of brethren and visitors. The work done was initiating Dr. Rogers into Freemasonry, and passing Bro. Buxton, which ceremonies the W.M. performed in a most masterly and impressive manner. Bro. F. D. R. Copestick, P.G.S.B., gave the lecture on the lodge-board. The W.M. then presented a very handsome P.M. jewel (manufactured by Bro. George Kenning) to the I.P.M., Bro. Dr. Bruce, as a mark of appreciation of his services for the past year. Bro. Bruce, in reply, expressed his gratification at the manner in which he had been supported by his officers during his term of office, and enlarged on the duties of P.M.'s and their privileges, a faithful performance and a due consideration of which would promote every generous virtue and a liberal and charitable construction of the failings of others.—It being the custom at this meeting to have an open banquet, the W.M. issued a circular with the summons, expressing his "hope to have the pleasure of the company of the wives and daughters or sisters of the brethren to grace our board, and unite in those friendly interchanges that tend so much to the cementing of fraternal regard and the practice of all Masonic virtues." This was responded to by a goodly number of the lady friends of the brethren, who sat down together to an excellent and well-served banquet, which all present seemed most thoroughly to enjoy. After a few complimentary toasts had been given and responded to, the company adjourned to the beautiful lawn, where a capital dessert and wine was laid. The band of the 41st Middlesex, by the kind permission of Bro. Capt. Barnes, under the leadership of Bro. Etherington, played some excellent selections and dance music, in which delightful amusement most of the company joined, and one of the most enjoyable meetings of the season was brought to an end, and the brethren drove to town thoroughly appreciating the worthy W.M.'s desire to extend the pleasures, as well as the profit of Masonry to our domestic circles. Amongst the numerous visitors were Bro. Henry Mugggeridge and his wife; Bro. Bilby, P.M. 861; Bro. Storey, J.D. 1107; Bro. John Robert Tustin, Prov. G. Steward; Bro. Jordan, 861; &c.

LIVERPOOL.—St. John's Lodge, No. 673.—The regular meeting of this lodge was held at the Royal Mersey Yacht Club Hotel, 90, Duke-street, Liverpool, on the 5th inst., for the purpose of installing Bro. Henry Nelson. There was a numerous attendance of visitors, including Bros. James Hamer, Prov. Grand Treas. West Lancashire; T. Ashmore, P.M. 823; S. W. Sutton, P.M. 464; T. Sergeant, W.M. 594; P. M. Larson, P.M. 594; J. Pemberton, P.M. 1262; J. Taylor, W.M. 1264; J. K. Smith, W.M. 249; and R. Hill, P.M. 546. The minutes of previous meeting were read and confirmed, and two candidates were regularly initiated by Bro. T. Clark, W.M. The lodge was then opened in the second degree, when Bros. W. T. May and J. Hocken, P.M.'s, presented Bro. Henry Nelson for installation. The W.M.-elect having agreed to the ancient charges, was referred to a Board of Installed Masters, who, in due and solemn manner, performed the ceremony of installation. The lodge having been closed down in regular order to the first degree, the W.M. proceeded to invest his officers as follows: Bros. J. T. Callow, S.W.; E. Kyle, J.W.; R. Pearson, P.M., Treas.; Widdows, Sec.; Digges, S.D.; Roberts, J.D.; Burrows, I.G.; Meador and Bucknall, Stewards; Crawford, Tyler; and May, P.M., as D.C. A vote of thanks was passed to Bro. Hamer, P.G.T., and Bro. T. Clark, P.M., for the able and efficient manner in which they had discharged the duties of installation. A P.M.'s jewel was also unanimously voted to Bro. T. Clark, P.M., after which the lodge was duly and solemnly closed.—A party of about 150 ladies and brethren subsequently proceeded by steamer to Eastham, where they engaged in dancing and various other amusements till a late hour. A sumptuous repast was provided by Mr. Gough, at the hotel, and the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were honoured with enthusiasm. The weather having been propitious, the party, after thoroughly enjoying themselves, returned by special steamer to Liverpool.

MANCHESTER.—Strangeway Lodge, No. 1219.—On the 28th ult. the installation of Bro. Edwin Hardon as W.M. of this lodge took place at the Assize Courts' Hotel, Strangeway, and he made the following appointments of officers: Bros. Potts, S.W.; Rogers, J.W.; Andrew, Sec. (third year of office); Needham, S.D.; Robinson, J.D.; and Bro. Gilbody, I.G. The following brethren were present:—Bros. E. C. Lock, the retiring W.M.; Bennett, P.M.; Baldwin, P.M.; Muirhead, S.W.; Potts, J.W.; Schofield, Treas.; Rogers, S.D.; Needham, I.G.; Andrew, Sec.; Pike, Needle, Hetherington, Royle, White, Moss, Brandon, Patchett, Robinson, Johnson, Gilbody, Winterbottom, Haslem, Dawson, Pape, Crosby, Leanon, Reay, Green, Burns, and Monks. Jackson, W.M. 1077; Hartley, P.M. 204; Richard Seed, P.M. 204 and 337; Dr. Rains, W.M. 204; Mark Barlow, 1030; Weston, 1009; Nathan, P.M. 204; Howard, P.M. 1030; Melling, Newall Lodge; and Ashworth, S.D. 1322. Bro. P. M. Baldwin was the Installing Master; and Bro. Locke having presented the W.M.-elect, the ceremony proceeded in due form. The usual business having been transacted, and the financial position of the lodge and continued and increasing prosperity commented upon, the brethren adjourned from labour to refreshment, and did ample justice to the magnificent banquet prepared by Bro. Riley, and having done honours to the usual loyal and Masonic toasts, spent a very agreeable evening, closing in peace and harmony at a reasonable hour.

POTTERS' BAR.—Acacia Lodge, No. 1309.—This lodge held its usual meeting on Wednesday, the 12th inst., at the Railway Hotel, Potters' Bar, Middlesex, Bro. George James Loe, W.M., presiding. The lodge having been opened, the minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. Ballots were unanimously in favour of the admission of Bros. Luti and Selby (Bedford Lodge, No. 157) as joining members, and the W.M. in an admirable manner passed Bros. Schollard, Luti, and J. Finch (1275) to the second degree. Four candidates for initiation were proposed for the next lodge meeting, and the lodge was closed. There were present: Bros. G. Cattel, P.M. Sec.; F. Walters, P.M.; J. H. Batten, S.W.; Bellchambers, Selby, A. Overton, Luti, Schollard, and others. Visitor: Bro. J. Finch, 1275. Refreshment followed labour.

LEEDS.—Copley Lodge, No. 111.—The first annual meeting of the members of this lodge took place at the Alfred-Rooms, Leeds, on Wednesday, July 5th. There was a good attendance, including Bros. Allison, W.M.; Bean, S.W.; White, J.W.; Denison, Sec.; &c. After the transaction of a deal of business connected with the lodge, the installation of W.M. took place—the choice of the brethren had unanimously fallen on Bro. Allison, it being thought that the able manner in which he had carried on the lodge during its first year eminently entitled him to re-election. Bro. Allison, in accepting office, referred to the great success of the Copley Lodge, both in the number of members and the excellence of the working, and then proceeded to invest his officers as follows: Bros. Schofield, P.M. 304, as S.W.; Denison, W.M. 304, as J.W.; H. Haigh, M.O.; W. Verity, S.O.; Bedale, as J.O.; Seanor, as Treas.; J. P. Crosby, M.D., as Sec.; J. Allatt, S.D.; W. Cawthorn, J.D.; Heuthwaite, I.G.; Musgrave, as Registrar; and Wm. Heighton and J. L. Oates, joint Tylers. After the lodge was closed, the brethren adjourned to the banqueting-room, where an excellent supper was provided by Bro. Oates. During the evening the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were warmly honoured, and it was announced that three offices of the Prov. G.M. Lodge had been offered to the members.

GUILDFORD.—Percy Lodge, No. 114.—The anniversary meeting of the above lodge was held on Thursday, July 6th, when a large number of brethren assembled. In the unavoidable absence of Earl Percy, M.P., the chair was taken by the Rev. G. R. Portal, G.M., who advanced Bros. Whitley and Knight. The officers for the year were then invested, after which the lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to a banquet, which was, as usual, well served by Bro. Mitchaux, of the Angel.

THE NATIONAL UNION FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF INTEMPERANCE.

An important conference of magistrates, aldermen, councillors, clergymen, and others, was held in the Shire Hall, Hereford, on Friday, July 7th, 1871.

The Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Hereford presided, supported by a large number of influential gentlemen.

The Right Rev. Chairman cordially approved of the National Union's programme, and appealed to the magistrates, clergy, and gentry of Hereford to contribute liberally towards the expenses.

Mr. James Taylor, General Secretary, briefly explained the object and operations of the Union, after which

The High Sheriff moved, and Sir Harford J. J. Brydges, Bart., seconded, the following resolution —"That this conference, having considered the position of the laws regulating the sale of beer, wine, and spirits, and the vast evils, moral, social, and physical, which are engendered thereby, is strongly of opinion that any bill for their amendment should provide for a large reduction in the total number of public and beerhouses, a material diminution in the hours of sale, both on week days and Sundays, an efficient check upon the adulteration of liquors, and place the houses generally under more stringent police regulation and supervision."

The resolution was unanimously adopted, after being spoken to by the Mayor of Hereford, Alderman James, and Mr. Dawson.

The Rev. Prebendary Hill, M.A., J.P., moved, Mr. Josiah Newman, J.P., seconded, and the Rev. John Watson supported:—"That this Conference, recognising the importance of thorough unity amongst those who are anxious to secure a practicable and speedy reform of the license laws, requests the following gentlemen to become a City and County Committee for the purpose of co-operating with the National Union for the Suppression of Intemperance, and that a subscription list now opened to assist the Union in extending its organisation, and otherwise preparing for a strenuous effort to pass a measure during the next session of Parliament."

Moved by the Rev. Prebendary Phillott, M.A. (Prelector), seconded by the Mayor of Leominster, and resolved:—"That the following petition be signed by the Chairman, and forwarded to Major Arluthnot, M.P., for presentation to Parliament, and that copies of the foregoing resolutions, under the signature of the Chairman, be forwarded to Her Majesty's Home Secretary, the Members for the city and county of Hereford, the boroughs of Leominster and Ludlow, and the county and borough representatives of Radnor."

"To the Honourable the Commons of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled—The humble petition of the clergy, magistrates, aldermen, councillors, and others, of Hereford and neighbourhood, held July 7th 1871, sheweth, that your petitioners earnestly request your honourable House speedily to pass into law a bill reducing the number of licensed houses, shortening the hours of sale on week days and Sundays, providing against adulteration, and generally improving the police regulations of the liquor traffic; and your petitioners will ever pray."

His Lordship signed the petition on behalf of the meeting, and after the usual compliment had been paid, the conference terminated.

CROSBY'S BALSAMIC COUGH ELIXIR.—Opiates, Narcotics, and Squills are too often invoked to give relief in Coughs, Colds, and all Pulmonary diseases. Instead of such fallacious remedies, which yield momentary relief at the expense of enfeebling the digestive organs and thus increasing that debility which lies at the root of the malady, modern science points to Crosby's Balsamic Cough Elixir, as the true remedy.—Select Testimonial.—Dr. Rooke, Scarborough, author of the "Anti-Lancet," says: "I have repeatedly observed how very rapidly and invariably it subdued cough, Pain, and irritation of the chest in cases of pulmonary consumption, and I can, with the greatest confidence, recommend it as a most valuable adjunct to an otherwise strengthening treatment for this disease."—This medicine, which is free from opium and squills, not only allays the local irritation, but improves digestion and strengthens the constitution. Hence it is used with the most signal success in Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, Coughs, Influenza, Night Sweat, of Consumption, Quinsy, and all affections of the throat and chest. Sold by all respectable Chemists and Patent Medicine Dealers in bottles at 1s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. each, and wholesale by Jas. M. Crosby, Chemist, Scarborough. * * * Invalids should read Crosby's Prize Treatise on "Diseases of the Lungs and Air-Vessels," a copy of which can be obtained gratis of any respectable Chemist.—[Advt.]

"MORE than a year ago one of my children was attacked with bronchitis, and, after a long illness, was given up by my physician as 'past cure.' I was then induced to try your Vegetable Pain Killer, and from the time I began the use of it the child rapidly got better, and is now strong and healthy. — JOHN WINSTANLEY, 10, Whittle-st., L'pool, Jan. 1869.—To P. D. & Son."

Changes of temperature and weather frequently upset persons who are most careful in their health, and particular in their diet. Holloway's corrective, purifying, and gentle aperient pills are the best remedy for all defective action of the digestive organs; they augment the appetite, strengthen the stomach, correct biliousness, and carry off all that is noxious from the system. Holloway's Pills are composed of rare balsams, unmixed with baser matter, and on that account are peculiarly well adapted for the young, delicate, and aged. As this peerless medicine has gained fame in the past, so will it preserve it in the future by its renovating and invigorating qualities, and the impossibility of its doing harm.—[Adv't.]

FREEMASONRY & ISRAELITISM.

BY BRO. WILLIAM CARPENTER, P.M. & P.Z. 177.

IX.

In my two papers preceding this I glanced at such external and internal evidences of the identity of the Anglo-Saxons and the Israelites as are afforded by the brief notices of the ancient Getæ and of their immediate descendants, the Goths, Saxons, Scythians, or Germans, which occur in the pages of history; and such as are furnished in the identity or similarity of the institutions and customs existent amongst them and those of ancient Israel. I do not know whether I have rendered a dry historical inquiry sufficiently interesting to induce any of my brothers to follow me, but if any have done so, I cannot but hope they will have seen something in what has been advanced which—as far as it goes—gives considerable support to the theory I wish to establish. I attach much weight, especially, to the way-marks of Israel's migrations westward, to be found on the northern shores of the Euxine or Black Sea, and west of that sea, about the Danube, and to those institutions, usages, and customs introduced by the Saxon descendants of the Getæ, wherever they have made a settlement. Such memorials as these are of great value, seeing that we get less certain knowledge of the early races of mankind from direct history than from those relations and resemblances of custom which often remained infixes for ages, and when all other connections are lost—the usages pertaining to life and death, the political institutions, the punishment of offences, the manner of habitation, &c., to some of which we have referred, and to some of which we still have to refer.

At this stage of our inquiry, however, two questions suggest themselves, and demand some notice:—

I. If the Getæ were the ten tribes, how came they to lose their own name, and to be called, at the time we find them on the Danube, by the name of Getæ? That is a question which, perhaps, admits of no positive answer. I have sought in vain amongst those who have written on ancient geography and on ethnology for any conjecture which will help us to answer it. Did the people name themselves Getæ? That seems to me to be most likely. But for what reason, or on what account, should they so name themselves? Let us see if we can discover this. They had been cast out of their own land, and were trodden down, as the prophets describe it, by their enemies, as also by the Lord Himself. Is it not reasonable to suppose that, in this captive and down-trodden condition, they called to mind God's dealings towards them, both in mercy and in judgment? Surely, yes; and they could hardly do so, and not remember one of the most familiar symbols by which the prophetic word had described them—"My well-beloved hath a vineyard in a very fruitful hill; and he fenced it, and gathered out the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest vine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also made a wine-press therein. . . . What could have been done more to my vineyard that I have not done in it? Wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes? And now, go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up, and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be for a treading. . . . For the vineyard of the Lord of Hosts is the house of Israel" (Isaiah v. 1-7). "Israel is an empty vine. . . . It shall be carried unto Assyria" (Hos. x. 1, 6). This symbol of the vine, as every reader of the prophetic writings knows, is one used in a variety of ways to denote the tribes, and God's care and culture of them, the object being to make them fruitful in all good works. But were they not also spoken of—as other people who had incurred the Divine judgment were—as the fruit of the vine, trodden in the wine-press? We have certainly one well-known passage in the Book of Isaiah (lxiii. 2-4) in which it is so: "Wherefore are thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth the wine-press? I have trodden the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with me. I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury, and their blood shall be sprinkled on my garments, and I will stain all my raiment, for the day of vengeance is in mine heart." A parallel passage occurs in the Apocalypse (ch. xix. 15). In like manner, Jeremiah, lamenting the fall and punishment of Judah, says: "The Lord hath trodden under foot all my mighty men in the midst of me; He hath called an assembly against me to crush my young men: the Lord hath trodden the virgin, the daughter of Judah, as in the wine-press" (Lam. i. 15). The most striking passage is certainly that in Isaiah, and that Israel considered it as primarily referring to their own punishment is obvious from the circumstance that the rest of the chapter in which it occurs, with the whole of the following chapter, is a penitential confession and supplication of the Israelites in their then state of captivity. They acknowledge the favours and blessings which God had bestowed upon them, confess their ingratitude, bow to the judgment they had brought upon themselves, and pray for forgiveness, and for a restoration to their land. They had been trodden down by God as well as by man, and, in the Divine judgment, they had been represented as the fruit of the vine, trodden in the wine-press of the wrath of God. May they not, in their penitence, impressed with a sense of the Divine displeasure, and of the sins which had brought it upon them, have called themselves by a name expressive of that state, and corresponding with the metaphor under which they had been spoken of? In Hebrew, the wine-press is called Get. Some of the psalms have, in their inscription, "To the chief musician upon Gittith." In the Hebrew it is Getith, not Gittith—that is, it is the plural of Get; and the psalms are supposed to have been those sung after the vintage. The name of Get, or Gath, was given to many places in Israel, as Gath-Hepher, Gath-Rimmon, &c., as also to one of the five Principalities of the Philistines, on the Mediterranean. Now, if the Israelites, in their down-trodden condition, designated themselves, as I have supposed, Get, the word would easily, and almost surely, become Geta, and in its plural form, Getæ. I do not mean to say that they intended to call themselves "wine-pressers," but, by a figure of speech (a metonymy) common to almost all languages, by which the thing contained is put for that which contains it, and vice versa, the word for a wine-press would stand for the fruit of the wine trodden in it; so that Getæ would signify the trodden vine, or the sorely-crushed people. I had written so far, when I found that Diodorus speaks of a branch of the Scythian tribes, which occupied the mountainous regions about Caucasus, and also the plains towards the ocean, and the Palus Mæstis, with the other regions near the Tamais, whence they crossed the Araxes, and passed into Europe. The most advanced of them being known to the Romans under the name of Germans (evidently the people of whom I have been speaking); and he calls them Massagetæ. Here we have the Getæ again, but compounded with another word, Massa. What is Massa? In Arabic, the word Mass signifies to be dilated, as a wound, and in the Hebrew, to crack and peel off, as the diseased skin; hence, it signifies to reject with contempt or disgust—to despise—the opposite of to choose. In this compound word, therefore, we have the same meaning as in Getæ, but intensified—the cast-off, despised, bruised vine. Thus Hosea (x. 1) says, "Israel is an empty vine;" and Isaiah says that, under their punishment, Israel shall lament for the once-fruitful vine (xxxii. 12). In the absence of other means of ascertaining the origin of the name Getæ, from whom have descended the Anglo-Saxons, I submit this as a conjecture entitled to some consideration.

II. It may be asked whether there is any reason to believe that the Israelites, who, though they were to be cast forth and punished, as we have seen, but who were also to be recalled and restored to God's favour, and to their own land, which had been given to the twelve tribes, in perpetuity, would, during their exclusion from it, cease to observe the laws and disregard the ceremonies which it had proscribed? Though they were to be dispersed amongst the nations, they were not to be lost. Israel was to be brought back from Assyria, and the outcasts who had left the great body of their brethren were to be gathered together from all the countries into which they had been dispersed—"I will surely assemble, O Jacob, all of thee; I will surely gather the remnant of Israel; I will put them together as the sheep of Bozrah, as the flock in the midst of their fold" (Micah ii. 12). Yes, all this will assuredly come to pass, for "the word of the Lord is sure," and in this His word has been confirmed by an oath. But in the meantime, Israel was to pass through many changes, and amongst them that of apostacy, accompanied by blindness—that is, mental and spiritual blindness, a state in which they should know neither God nor themselves. This is assured to us by the words of prophecy; and whatever may be thought or said in disparagement of the prophecies by those who, in spite of the many and striking prophecies in relation to almost all the nations of the earth, as well as to the Jewish people, that have been already fulfilled, those who believe in the sworn word of prophecy will accept this word touching the condition of Israel during her dispersion as surely as they would any well-attested history which might claim their acceptance. Let us, then, refer to a few passages in the writings of two or three only of the prophets. Hosea, predicting the impending punishment of Israel by certain symbolic actions, which the Lord enjoined him to adopt, says ("calling things that are not as though they were"), "Ye are not my people, and I will not be your God . . . Yet, it shall come to pass that in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God . . . And they shall say, Thou art my God." (Hos. i. 9, 10; ii. 23.) And plainer still: "They (Israel) shall no more be remembered by their name (ii. 17). And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east; they shall run to and fro, to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it" (Amos viii. 12). "The children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without a pillar (as a witness to the Lord, see Isa. xix. 19, 20), and without an ephod and teraphim" (Hos. iii. 4). "Because thou has rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me; seeing thou has forgotten the law of thy God, I also will forget thy children" (Hos. iv. 6). "Because Ephraim hath made many altars to sin, altars shall be unto him to sin" (Hos. viii. 2). "They sin more and more, and have made them molten images of their silver, and idols, according to their own understanding; all of it the work of the craftsmen" (Hos. xiii. 2). "Ephraim, he hath mixed himself among the people" (Hos. vii. 8). "Israel is swallowed up: now shall they be among the Gentiles as a vessel wherein is no pleasure" (Hos. viii. 8). "And I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known . . . They shall be turned back, they shall be greatly ashamed that trust in graven images, that say to the molten images, Ye are our gods. Hear, ye deaf; and look, ye blind, that ye may see. Who is blind but my servant, or deaf as my messenger that I sent?" (Isaiah, xlii 16-19.)

There are several things, beyond mere punishment, included in these denunciations—(1) Israel is to lose the law—"The word of the Lord"—that is, to forget or not to observe it. (2.) Abandoning the law, Israel is to be given up to idolatry—to be "joined to idols." (3.) Israel is to be mixed with the people—"swallowed up amongst the Gentiles"—that is, is not to be distinguished from them, so that they who were once called, "My people," are not then to be so called. If the passages I have quoted mean anything, they mean these things, as things that were to befall Israel, under the judgment that was then impending, in consequence of their incorrigible perverseness, and the abandonment of their covenant God.

But this absorption of other peoples by Israel, and their absorption by other peoples, so as not to be, for some time, distinguished from them, have their parallel in Judah, or the Jews. The earliest Christians were of Judah. All the Apostles were of Galilee, and the first converts were men of Galilee, and their numbers were first augmented by Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven, with some of Judea and Jerusalem (Acts iii.). And these went forth everywhere, and became so mixed with the Gentiles that their descendants, after a few generations, became undistinguishable. But long before this, there were amalgamations with other races, even with some of those with whom they were forbidden to unite. Many of the Jews, during their dispersion in the Babylonian captivity, united themselves with the peoples inhabiting those countries, and thus lost their individuality; some becoming Mahommedans, and some, like their brethren of Israel, adopting the idolatrous practices of the peoples amongst whom they settled. On the other hand, after their return to Judea, John Hyrcanus, having conquered the Edomites—or Idomeans—gave them their choice, either to be circumcised and keep the law of Moses, or to leave the country. They chose the former, and became one people with the Jews, the name of Edomite being lost in that of Jew. Nor should we omit to notice, that Ruth, a Moabitess, was married to Boaz, the great-grandfather of David. About forty years before the Christian era, Phasaël, one of the sons of Antipater, an Edomite or Idomean, became governor of Jerusalem, while his second son, Herod, after having been made governor of Galilee, was made king of the Jews, by the Romans, and rebuilt, or partly rebuilt and beautified, the temple of Jerusalem, and was succeeded by his son, after whose reign of ten years, Judea became a Roman province. But it was not with the Edomites, only, but with Canaanites, that the Jews became intermingled—the two becoming one people, David having permitted the Jebusites, one branch of the Canaanites, to remain in Jerusalem, where were both the throne and the temple; so that, as Ezekiel says of Judah (xvi. 3): "Thy birth and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan: thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother a Hittite." These facts are not produced to disparage the Jews, but simply to show that Israel, in becoming mixed and united with the Gentiles, is only upon a par with Judah, who also mixed with them and absorbed them. But of both a remnant remains: "Yet will I leave a remnant, that ye may have some that shall escape the sword among the nations, when ye shall be scattered through the countries. And they that escape of you shall remember me among the nations, whither ye shall be carried captives . . . and they shall loathe themselves for the evils which they have committed in all their abominations. And they shall know that I am the Lord, and I have not said in vain that I would do this evil unto them" (Ezek. vi. 6-10).

I submit, then, that there is nothing in the two circumstances we have been considering that militates against the assumption—I say assumption, because as yet I have suggested nothing beyond probabilities, though probabilities which are, I think, very striking—that the Getæ of Moesia and Dacia were the people of the ten tribes, who were carried by the Assyrians into Upper Media, and the countries between the Caspian Sea and the Euxine, and who thence pursued a westward course, along the shores of the latter sea, peopling with Germany and the Cimbrian Chersonesus, and who, under the name of Goths, overran the western Roman empire, and the great branch of whom are now known as Anglo-Saxons. The absolute proofs of that fact have yet to be adduced, and though strong and conclusive, as I believe them to be, I have thought it right, at this stage of the enquiry, to advert to such circumstances as tend to prepare the way for them.

GRAND MASONIC CEREMONIES AT ALBANY.

[FROM OUR OWN SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

The laying of the corner-stone of the new Capitol building at Albany, the metropolis of New York State has this day (June 24th, 1871) been performed, with due Masonic honours by the Grand Lodge of New York.

Your correspondent, by the kindness of an influential friend, was placed within a yard or two of the Grand Master, and consequently had an excellent opportunity of viewing the proceedings.

From an early hour this morning it rained in torrents at Albany, and hence the spectacle was far inferior to what it would have been under more favourable circumstances. During the whole of the affair the rain came down incessantly, and the Albany Journal records the Masonic joke of the day when it says that "the different lodges put to one another this question: How could we have expected dry weather in which to lay the corner-stone, when the Grand Marshal was a Waterman?" Bro. Waterman certainly had a day after his own name, though not after his own heart, on which to perform his duties.

The Knights Templar, and the "Blue" and "Red" craftsmen, turned out in great force. Most of the commanderies, as encampments are called here, were headed with a band of music, and dressed in a uniform of a strictly military character they had a fine soldierly appearance. The full-dress uniform appears to be a cocked hat (something like an English general's), with a feather in it; a coat of blue, with silver buttons stamped with the cross of the Order, a belt and sword. Many of the Templars, however, wore an undress cap, which, to our mind, looked far handsomer than the cocked hat. The officers of the commanderies wore gold lace and epaulettes, and lead their men like military companies. The various chapters and lodges did not turn out in very grand regalia, perhaps owing to the weather. The companions and brethren mostly wore the cotton "Apprentice's" apron, and we may mention that in lodges over here the Master Mason's apron is seldom worn, except by officials. The Grand Lodge officers were of course more extensively "got up," but the display of ornaments by the Craft Masons was nothing like what would have been seen in England on such an occasion.

After His Excellency John T. Hoffman, Governor of New York State, had discharged his portion of the duties of the day in first-rate style, the Masonic ceremonies concluded the celebration. The Governor having finished his address, and the Most Worshipful John H. Anthon, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of New York being in his place, the following order was observed:—

The Hon. Hamilton Harris, President of the New Capitol Commission, addressed the Grand Master, ending with the formula: It seemed most fitting that your Ancient and Honourable Fraternity should be invited to perform the ceremony of laying the corner-stone of the new Capitol of the State of New York, and this I now invite you to do with the usual forms of Masonry.

Grand Master: From time immemorial it has been the custom of the Ancient and Honourable Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons to lay, when requested so to do, with their ancient forms, the corner-stone of buildings erected for the worship of God, for charitable objects, or for the purposes of the administration of justice and free government, and of no other building. This corner-stone, therefore, we may lay in accordance with our law, and gladly do so, testifying thereby our obedience to the law and our desire to show publicly our respect for the government under which we live.

The Grand Master then called up the lodge, remarking: The first duty of Masons in any undertaking is to invoke the blessing of the Great Architect upon their work. Let us pray.

Senior Grand Chaplain Schoonmaker, of Sing Sing, then offered the following prayer:—"O most glorious and eternal God, Great Architect of the Universe, Whomakest all things by Thy power, and adornest all things by Thy bounty, and fillest all things with Thy goodness, and sanctifiest the heart and gifts of Thy servants, Who in the days of old didst graciously accept the house which our Grand Master King Solomon erected to Thy glory! we praise Thee and bless Thee that Thou hast thus far prospered the handiwork of us, Thy servants, who are this day met together in Thy fear and love to lay the corner-stone of this building, dedicated to Thy service as the place of assembly of a Government which Thou hast blessed with freedom. We humbly pray Thee that Thou wouldst vouchsafe to sanctify this house by the outpouring of Thy holiness from on high. Let the sun of righteousness ever shine here, and the bright illumination of Thy grace. That which we dedicate, do Thou bless. That which we offer, do Thou accept. Those who shall assemble here, do Thou visit graciously and enlighten, now and for ever, even unto the Great Accounting Day, when we shall receive the due reward of our labours in the Grand Lodge above."

The following ode was then sung:—

TUNE—"Sparkling and Bright."

From the noble rest of our mountain crests,
From the forests grand and hoary,
From the rivers, bright in their liquid light,
We come in the Summer's glory,
With hearts so fraught with the swelling thought
Of the crowns our Age is wearing,
We stand in hope on the century's slope,
A loftier labour daring.

Chorus—The future hears thro' listening years,
In chorus loud and lusty,
Our Royal dome, our patriot home,
Well formed, and true and trusty.

Our storied past was proudly cast
To this high and holy keeping,
And gladly lay on its stone to-day
The fairest sheaves we're reaping.
So the record true that the Old State knew,
Her lives of brave endeavour,
Shall stand secure while its walls endure,
The corner-stone for ever!

Chorus—The future hears, &c.

May the marble white prove a symbol bright
Of whiter deeds unfolding,
While stronger far than her pillars are
The nation's life is moulding.
So its towers shall glow in their sculptured snow,
Our happy hills adorning,
Till the workmen wait by the Temple's gate,
Beyond the golden morning.

Chorus—The future hears, &c.

The audience united in the chorus.

The corner-stone being raised, the Grand Master said: The Grand Treasurer will place in the corner-stone the memorials prepared for that purpose, and the Grand Secretary will read the list of what is so deposited.

The Grand Treasurer thereupon took formal charge of the massive box (made of highly-polished copper and hermetically sealed), and it was deposited in the place provided for it. This ceremony was accompanied by music from the band, the Grand Lodge standing during the ceremony.

When this was done, the Grand Master spread the cement on the stone, and it was lowered, with music.

The Grand Master scated the Grand Lodge, and proceeded as follows:—

Grand Master: Bro. Deputy Grand Master, what is the proper jewel of your office?

Deputy Grand Master: The square.

Grand Master: What does it teach?

Deputy Grand Master: To square our actions by the square of virtue, and by it we prove our work.

Grand Master: Apply your jewel to this corner-stone, and make report.

Deputy Grand Master: The stone is square; the craftsmen have done their duty.

Grand Master: Bro. Senior Grand Warden, what is the jewel of your office?

Senior Grand Warden: The level.

Grand Master: What does it teach?

Senior Grand Warden: The equality of all men, and by it we prove our work.

Grand Master: Apply your jewel to this corner-stone, and make report.

Senior Grand Warden: The stone is level; the craftsmen have done their duty.

Grand Master: Bro. Junior Grand Warden, what is the jewel of your office?

Junior Grand Warden: The plumb.

Grand Master: What does it teach?

Junior Grand Warden: To walk uprightly before God and man, and by it we prove our work.

Grand Master: Apply your jewel to this corner-stone, and make report?

Junior Grand Warden: The stone is plumb; the craftsmen have done their duty.

The Senior and Junior Grand Deputies, bearing the trowel and gavel, then approached the stone.

The Grand Master, preceded by the Grand Marshal, advanced to the stone, spread mortar upon it, struck three blows with the mallet, and returning to his place, said: I, J. H. Anthon, Grand Master of Masons of the State of New York, declare this stone to be plumb, level, and square, to be well-formed, true and trusty, and duly laid.

The Grand Stewards then proceeded to the stone, followed by the deputy Grand Master, Senior Grand Warden, and Junior Grand Warden, bearing the corn, wine, and oil.

The Deputy Grand Master scattered the corn, saying: May the blessing of the Great Architect of the Universe rest upon the people of this State, and the corn of nourishment abound in our land.

The Senior Grand Warden poured the wine, saying: May the Great Architect of the Universe watch over and preserve the workmen upon this building, and bless them and our land with the heavenly wine of refreshment and peace.

The Junior Grand Warden poured the oil, saying: May the Great Architect of the Universe bless our land with union, harmony, and love—the oil, which maketh men to be of a joyful countenance.

The Grand Master returned to his place, when the Grand Marshal presented the Architect, as follows: I present to you, Thomas Fuller, the architect of this building. He is ready with craftsmen for the work, and asks the tools for his task.

The Grand Master then gave him a square, level, plumb, and plan, saying: Labour on this task, and be blessed, my brother, in the work. May it be blessed with wisdom in the plan, strength in the execution, beauty in the adornment; and, when complete, may wisdom be still within its walls to enlighten, strength to encourage and sustain our rulers, and the beauty of holiness to adorn all their works.

Then followed the benediction by the Grand Chaplain, when the Grand Marshal made the following proclamation: In the name of the Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of the State of New York, I proclaim that the corner-stone of the new Capitol of the State of New York has this day been found square, level, and plumb, true and trusty, and laid according to the old customs by the Grand Master of Masons.

The following ode was sung by the Fraternity in full chorus, when the assembly dispersed:—

CLOSING ODE—(Selected).

Tune—"America."

Let notes of gladness tell
Thoughts that each bosom swell,
The work begun!
Hope's joyous thoughts we bring,
While to our Heavenly King
Friends now united sing,
Hearts joined as one.

Where laid the corner-stone
Ever in kindness known
Be man's best good!
Though years shall pass away,
Though human works decay,
Ever by Heaven's own ray
Be Truth renewed.

May, in proportion true,
Rising to grateful view,
The work ascend!
Long may it safely stand,
Untouched by ruthless hand,
Till, true to Heaven's command,
All time shall end.

This terminated the proceedings, and umbrellas were soon seen vanishing in every direction. We just stayed to personally congratulate the Most Worshipful Grand Master on his successful Freemasonry under difficulties, and then adjourned to the Delaware House Hotel, which was all the day crowded with Templars and craftsmen. We found all whom we met to be "worthy Masons," as far as brotherly courtesy was concerned; and notwithstanding the miseries of a wet day, we feel that we were highly privileged in being able to attend one of the greatest events in the memory of Freemasonry in the State of New York. We had several invitations to join the ranks of the Masons for the day, but we declined them all, preferring as your correspondent to range ourselves with the "gentlemen of the press." As far as we could ascertain, no other English brethren were present.

LAYING the FIRST STONE of a MASONIC TEMPLE at HASSKEUI.

[From the Levant Times & Shipping Gazette, July 5.]

To the British colony in Hasskeui, and especially to the Scotch element which predominates in that community, belongs the honour of founding the first Masonic Temple ever erected in any part of the Turkish Empire. The establishment of a Masonic Lodge in Hasskeui, under the Scotch Rite, was in itself an event in the annals of Freemasonry in this country, and, considering the many members of the fraternity resident in that suburb, was a really important addition to the group of social institutions which the Hasskeuites have planted in their own midst within the last few years. Such was the success of the "Caledonian Lodge" that in a very short time the £200 expended in lodge furniture, officers' clothing and jewels, &c., was paid off. The accommodation the lodge had obtained in an upper room of the Mechanics' Institute soon became inadequate, owing to the continuous accession of members; and it was not long before the idea was broached among the members of providing a building for themselves, so desirable on Masonic grounds as well as for convenience and economical reasons. Convinced, as they soon were of the financial as well as other advantages of the undertaking, the brethren, with that unity of purpose which characterises the Hass-keuites, at once resolved upon carrying it out by subscribing among themselves for £T. 5 shares bearing 7 per cent. interest—to be derived from the rent payable by the lodge itself and from the letting of part of the premises—the shares to be purchasable by the lodge at par, so that the building should eventually become the property of the "Caledonians." Within a few weeks only, a capital of nearly a thousand pounds was subscribed for, on that basis a site in the Jews' Quarter, a few hundred yards above the Mechanics' Institute, was purchased; a contract was made for the erection of a suitable stone and brick building; the ground was at once levelled and the foundations made; and on Saturday, July the 1st, the corner-stone was laid with full Masonic "pomp and circumstance" by the Right Worshipful Bro. J. P. Brown, District Grand Master for Turkey under the English Constitution (Chargé d'affaires of the United States at Constantinople), who was requested by the Master and brethren of the Caledonian Lodge to officiate on the occasion. The event brought together an assemblage of the Craft which would have been considered large and imposing on any similar occasion at home. More than 156, including many brethren of foreign lodges, mustered in the Recreation Hall, where the District Grand Lodge was opened at four o'clock by the R.W. District Grand Master, who was supported by his present Deputy, V.W. Bro. Thompson, and his late Deputy, V.W. Bro. G. Laurie, the Warden's chairs being filled by W. Bro. J. Bevan, P.M. Caledonian and Leinster Lodges, and Bro. Temple, S.W. of the Oriental and Bulwer. The lodge having been opened in due form, the officers and brethren of the Caledonian saluted in turn, according to seniority, all the other lodges of the District, and the compliment was returned by the members of the latter.

The lodge was then adjourned, and a procession was marshalled by W. Bro. G. Warren, who acted as Director of Ceremonies, assisted by W. Bro. G. Mears. The cortège was conducted by a circuitous route over the Ok-Meidan to the site, with a view, no doubt, of giving Hasskeui a good opportunity of witnessing the disciples of the mystic art in all their glory of purple and gold and blue and silver. There was a great number of spectators, principally the Jewish inhabitants of the quarter, few, if any of whom had, perhaps, an idea that the spectacle they were witnessing was one at all connected with their own race and religion.

The brethren having formed in square round the foundations of the building, R.W.D.G.M. opened the proceedings by stating that he had been particularly flattered with the request of the Worshipful Master of the Caledonian Lodge to lay the foundation-stone of this edifice, and he assured him and his brethren that he accepted the invitation with much pleasure. He then called upon the Rev. C. B. Gribble, H.M. Embassy Chaplain, to open the proceedings with prayer, and the rev. gentleman offered up the following prayer, which we give entire as an excellent model of Masonic composition appropriate to such an occasion, though the author, Mr. Gribble, himself is not a member of the Craft:—

"Almighty Father, accept, we pray Thee, the humble tribute of gratitude which we Thy children and servants now offer to Thee. We derive from Thee our life, our reason, our faculties, our senses, and all things contributory to the enjoyment of our existence. From Thee, O Lord, cometh every virtue, the power to observe Thy laws, the will to do good, patience in well-doing, and the strength to suffer, to submit, and to revive when adverse advents, all ordered in Thy providence, occur to try our faith and to test our confidence in Thy mercy. We address Thee as our Creator; for Thou, O Lord, hast made the heavens, the earth and all that is therein, the sea and all that is therein. Thy wisdom and vast designs in the structure of the universe and the laws by which all nature is regulated would have been unknown by us but for Thy goodness in giving streams of light to our darkened intellect. It is of Thee that we learn to adore the majesty of Thy government in the realm of material nature; it is from Thee that we learn the inner law of love to Thy creatures, which we Thy creatures are duly bound to obey. Thou hast bestowed on man the power to found, to raise, and to consolidate states, societies, and brotherhoods for the welfare of our race. We lament our failure; we confess that the great law revealed from heaven—glory to God, peace on earth, and goodwill to man—has been neglected, and that its observance is our duty. To discharge this duty, we meet to consecrate to Thee a building devoted to philanthropy, the love of God to man, and of man to man. Deign then, Almighty Architect, framer of the world, and beneficent Creator, to bless our enterprise. Prosper Thou our handiwork. Enable us to complete it without accident or injury to the workmen, and, when the house shall be finished, be pleased to give wisdom to our deliberations, soberness to our judgment, prudence to our measures, energy to our action, and an untiring benevolence in helping the poor and afflicted, so that when Thou, Almighty overseer of our work, shalt be pleased to lay judgment to the line and righteousness to the plummet, we may be found wise master builders, discharging our duty with diligence and sobriety and with a wise liberality. We humbly pray Thee to grant us in Thy mercy what we now ask in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

The prayer was followed by a hymn admirably sung by a body of the Hasskeui Institute school-children, of both sexes, under the direction of Mr. Stewart, master of the school.

Bro. Frazer, Secretary of the Caledonian Lodge, then read a history of the establishment of the lodge and of the measures it had adopted for the erection of this Masonic Temple. Several coins and documents having been deposited in a cavity under the stone, the R.W. District Grand Master then proceeded to lay the stone according to Masonic usage. The ceremony having been solemnly performed,

W. Brother W. S. Henderson, Master of the Caledonian Lodge, presented to the R.W. Bro. Brown, as a souvenir of the service he had just rendered, a small but elegant silver trowel, one side of which bore a very artistically engraved inscription to Mr. Brown, and the other, the names of the Masonic Temple Committee.

The R.W. Bro. Brown then delivered the following address, which we print in extenso in compliance with general request:—

Brethren,—We have assembled here to-day for the purpose of laying the foundation-stone of a Freemasons' lodge, to be erected for the use of the Caledonian Lodge, under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Scotland. To many of those now present this may seem to be only an ordinary occurrence, inasmuch as so many other lodges have been constructed in other countries. It is, however, far from being a common occurrence. It is for the first time that, in this vast Ottoman Empire, a Masonic lodge has ever been erected; and the event is, therefore, one of peculiar interest to us all as Freemasons, not only here in Turkey but to our more distant brethren in every part of the world. Indeed, it forms an epoch in the history of Freemasonry, and, as such, is destined to be mentioned in all time to come, as one wherein our brethren of Scotland took the lead here in promoting the welfare and prosperity of our beloved institution, by the erection of a lodge in what may be truthfully called the country or empire in which Freemasonry originated. For this reason all of my brethren now present will, I feel confident, join with me in applauding the zeal and the great efforts of our Scottish brethren in this laudable undertaking. It will, hereafter, be stated by them with pride, that on the first day of July, 1871, the Caledonian Lodge of Constantinople, or more properly of Hasskeui, laid the foundation-stone of the first lodge ever erected in the East. To those who are not familiar with the history and traditions of our Order, a lodge of Freemasons may seem to be only an ordinary edifice erected for the exhibition of certain rites and ceremonies of a mysterious character; and this conviction will be more calculated to repel than to invite their sympathies and good wishes for its success and prosperity. To them I would declare that this lodge is truly, I believe, destined to be only another new temple dedicated to the cultivation and the preservation of the highest principles of morality and virtue existing amongst mankind; that it is dedicated to the Supreme Author of all divine providences; to the worship and adoration of Him whom we call the Great Architect of the Universe, the Creator of all things; that none other than a sincere believer in the actual existence of our divine Lord and Master will ever be permitted to enter it; and that all disbelievers will be kept away from it. I am also sure that it will aid in spreading, far and wide, a desire to contemplate and acquire a more intimate knowledge of the works of our divine Creator, even when taught in symbols and allegories; and that the conventional and harmless signs and tokens of its brethren will only serve to designate those who sympathise in the sublime principles of one Universal Benevolence from those who do not. The Almighty and Omniscient Creator of this little world, and of all the other far more vast worlds by which it is surrounded, in the three thousandth year of man's existence, commanded one of His faithful servants to erect a temple in the city of Jerusalem to be dedicated to the adoration of Himself. History and tradition inform us that the great Temple of Solomon was erected on a spot peculiarly interesting to mankind. Every Masonic temple is a humble imitation of that great temple of God. It represents the greater temple of the world, the great vault of the heavens and the surface of our globe, with reference also to the cardinal points; all indicating that Freemasons thus fully recognise and humbly adore the Great Architect of the Universe. When we remember that there are so many thousands—I may even say millions—of Freemasons, of the very highest and lowest degrees of social life, scattered over the world—showing how much our Institution is respected and esteemed—many persons will very naturally ask what are the peculiar attractions which connect so many men together by what we call our "mystic tie," what are the great principles which form its basis, and have continued through so many ages to sustain it in public estimation when so many others have, after a brief period, ceased even to be remembered? This query is easily answered. The great principle of Freemasonry is Humanity, and the welfare of mankind in every part of the world and in every position of life. To this must be added Benevolence and Philanthropy, with an ardent desire to unite all men together as the children of one great divine Creator as so many brethren, irrespective of their religious faiths and their nationalities; to lead them to divest themselves of their human prejudices; to respect the religious sentiments of every one, to bear with and, if possible, to correct their frailties; and to elevate them above degrading and harmful passions of weak prejudices and the fancied superiorities of life; to place all mankind upon one broad platform of Humanity and of a common origin; to induce them to regard knowledge, intelligence, and virtuous conduct in each and every sphere of life, industry and labour, as the most noble and elevating principles of man; and, above all things, of a never-ceasing conviction of a common individual responsibility for their moral acts to the Great Architect of the Universe. Perhaps some of the ladies present, who have honoured us to-day with their presence and their sympathies, will ask how it is that, as Humanity and universal benevolence are the first principles of Freemasonry, why they are not likewise initiated into our Order. If there be indeed any, I may answer them and appeal to the whole world, to history and tradition, for a confirmation of my declaration that the female heart needs no such institution. It is, naturally always actuated by the noblest sentiments of humanity and benevolence, and therefore needs no "mystic tie" to develop it. How many memorable instances, ever fresh in our recollection, might be cited, wherein man, wayward man, ambitious man, ambitious even in his thirst for knowledge, has, when reduced to the extreme depths of misery or misfortune, owed even his life to the natural benevolence of the female heart? In fact, the ladies are all Freemasons by nature, and art or craft can add nothing to the divine gift so largely bestowed upon them. The world has its snares and its attractions to often wayward man, which are unknown to those who adorn the dear place called home. There the mother, the wife, the sister, or the daughter, exercises each her natural feelings and benevolence within her own particular sphere. What the brother is within the lodge the sister is beyond it; and thus each promotes the first principles of our beloved institution. I sincerely and confidently believe that when Freemasonry is perfectly understood in this country, appreciated as it fully deserves to be, and acted upon with sincerity, it will become as highly esteemed and as popular as it is in all other parts of the world. Whatever may be the distinctions of official and social life, Freemasonry holds that all men are on the footing of one common brotherhood, united by the mystic tie of mutual interest and mutual affection. It has no design to extend any peculiar views of religion or politics. Any deviation from this rule is a serious error which degrades our Order. In both it fills a perfectly neutral position, though it strongly inculcates the principle that each brother should sincerely act up to those of his own faith and be devotedly loyal to his sovereign, his country, and his government. What more liberal principle than this can be proclaimed to the world? Within its own sphere it also calls for the strictest conformity to its own laws and regulations and obedience to its own authorities. I hope that this example of the Caledonian lodge will soon be followed by other lodges in this country. The same fraternal feeling of unity which unites it with the admirable and excellent Leinster Lodge under the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge of Ireland, would soon promote the erection of other Masonic Temples both in Constantinople and throughout the East, so that, under the blessing of Divine Providence, Freemasonry may extend its benign influences among the varied peoples of the Ottoman Empire and unite them together in one common fraternity. In conclusion, may our mysteries prove to be only those of nature and its Divine Creator. May this Caledonian Lodge become one more symbol of the great temple which surrounds us wherever we be; and its members fully appreciate the supreme truth that even the deepest recesses of our Masonic hearts are, here and everywhere, open to the all-seeing eye of the Great Architect of the Universe. And may this new lodge, of which we have just laid the foundation-stone, the rough ashlar, be the means of spreading, far and near, the learning of Scotland's Dugald Stewart and the tenderness of heart of Scotland's Burns.

A hymn having been sung by the school-children, the Rev. C. B. Gribble pronounced the apostolic benediction, and the brethren returned in procession (but this time by the directest route) to the Mechanics' Institute, where the District Grand Lodge was closed in due form, Br. Jory playing the National Anthem, as at the opening of the lodge. Soon afterwards, commenced an excellent cold collation, provided by Bro. Nunn conjointly with the proprietor of the establishment in which it was held, the British Club House. Nearly ninety brethren sat down, a number of whom, including all the officers of the D.G. Lodge and the W.M.'s and Wardens of the private lodges, were invited, the rest paying half a lira each, which was by no means an immoderate charge, considering the quality of the repast, the efficient waiting, and the unstinted supply of champagne.

THE BANQUET,

Bro. W. S. Henderson, W.M. Caledonian Lodge, presided, and was supported by the R.W.D.G.M., the D.D.G.M., the W.M. Oriental Lodge, the P.D. D.G.M., and other Masters, Past Masters, and officers of Grand Lodge. Bros. Spence and Scott, Wardens of the Caledonian, occupied the vice-chairs.

The first toast was that given at all assemblies of British Masons, "The Queen and the Craft," which was followed by the healths of the Sultan, the M.W.P.G.M. the Prince of Wales, the M.W. the Earl of Rosslyn, G.M. of Scotland, the M.W. the Marquis of Ripon, G.M. of England, and "all other Grand Masters and Grand Lodges throughout the world."

The Chairman said the next toast was one that every brother present, and more especially the members of the Caledonian, would respond to most heartily, "Prosperity to the District Grand Lodge of Turkey, with the health of its R.W. Master, Bro. John Porter Brown." (Loud cheers.) Bro. Brown had most cheerfully consented to officiate on this occasion, and the presence of himself and officers had not only given éclat to the proceedings of the day but had afforded a stimulus and an encouragement to the Caledonians in an undertaking which he (the Chairman) ventured to say would mark an era in the history of Freemasonry in Turkey.

R.W. Bro. Brown, in acknowledging the compliment, said he had thoroughly enjoyed himself, and had felt both happy and proud in the part he had to fill.

V.W. Bro. Thompson, in replying to the next toast, "The Officers of the District Grand Lodge," observed that he hoped the day would come when they would have to assist at the laying of the first stone of a Masonic temple in Pera, where there were so many lodges and so large a number of the brethren. (Hear, hear.)

W. Bro. Henderson, in returning thanks for "The W.M. and Officers of the Caledonian Lodge," proposed by the R.W. Bro. Brown, said he considered it a great honour to preside over so large a company of distinguished members of the Craft, who were not merely speculative Masons but might be considered, from the work in which they had taken part that afternoon, to be also operative Masons. If the great Temple of Solomon was built in Jerusalem, the humble imitation of it commenced to-day was situated in Jews' Town, Hasskeui. His lines as a Master had fallen in pleasant places, for never had a Master of a lodge a more dutiful or assiduous body of officers and members, and neither he himself nor any single brother among them had a right to take special credit to himself for results which had been achieved by the hearty, earnest and fraternal co-operation of all. (Applause.)

Bro. D. Frazer, Secretary of Caledonian Lodge, after some humorous remarks, observed, with reference to the W.M.'s allusion to the site of the Temple, that he was reminded of the circumstance of Joshua commanding the twelve men belonging to the twelve tribes each one to take up a stone, and telling them that when their children in time to come asked of their fathers, "What mean ye by these stones?" they should reply that they were as a memorial unto the children of Israel for ever. When he (Bro. Frazer) saw the crowd of spectators of the proceedings that day who were descended from those tribes, it occurred to him that they were wondering what those stones meant, and if they asked let the Masons of Hasskeui tell them that they were meant as a memorial to them and their children for ever. No one could tell what might be developed out of the work commenced that day, but he believed it quite within the bounds of possibility that the time would arrive when a future generation in this land, enjoying manifold blessings yet in store for them, would exclaim, "God bless the Caledonians!"

W. Bro. J. Laffan Hanly, in responding for "The Oriental Lodge—the pioneer lodge of Turkey," said he esteemed it a great enhancement of the honour he enjoyed as Master of the senior lodge in Turkey, that it should have fallen to his lot to represent it on so interesting an occasion as the present. Though the Caledonians had been the subject of so much compliment that day, they could not suspect that it was flattery. The praise could not but be thoroughly sincere, for it involved on the part of those who bestowed it a reproach to themselves—a tacit consciousness of their own shortcomings. (Hear, hear.) He trusted that the example set by the comparatively small body of Hasskeuite Masons would inspire their more numerous and wealthier brethren of Pera with a wholesome shame which might act as a more powerful stimulus than any that had yet been brought to bear upon them as a body. They had years ago been unanimously agreed in Pera that they ought to have a temple; in Hasskeui, no sooner did they come to such a conclusion than the thing was done. (Applause.) He felt certain that the Perotes could also have a building of their own if only half a dozen of them could be found possessing the same energy and unity of action as an equal number of Caledonians; and for his own part, he would render all the assistance in his power to such an undertaking as Master of the Oriental Lodge, which, by the way, had a fund accumulated for the very purpose. (Applause.)

W. Bro. J. Wetherilt replied for the Leinster Lodge (I.C.), which will be a tenant of the new temple; W. Bro. C. T. Reppen, for the Deutscher Bund; Bro. Temple, for the Bulwer; and other Masters and Past Masters responded for their respective lodges. The health of Bro. Walker, who drew the plans of the temple, was also duly honoured, as was that of W. Bro. Warren, who had acted as Director of Ceremonies. The Masonic part of the proceedings concluded with the Tyler's toast.

A vote of thanks was then most cordially passed to the Rev. C. B. Gribble for having officiated on the occasion in the absence of a Masonic Chaplain.

It only remains to add that from what we know of the plans of the proposed edifice, we have every reason to believe that the superstructure which towards the end of the ensuing autumn (for the contractors undertake to have the building up by Oct.) will be seen above the foundation-stone placed on the first inst., will be perfect in all its parts and in every respect creditable to its builders. The lodge-room will comfortably accommodate 150, Masonically seated; the building will also comprise every convenience, and its exterior will be creditable to the Craft.

GRAND LODGE OF IRELAND.

The July meeting of the Grand Lodge was held in the Freemasons' Hall, Dublin, on Thursday, the 6th inst., the R.W. Bro. R. W. Shekleton, D.G.M., on the throne. In consequence of several Grand Officers and Past Grand Officers having declined to act as Grand Inner Guard, the D.G.M. ordered Bro. A. M. Harte, one of the office assistants, to act in that capacity.

The Grand Officers having assumed their proper places, the D.G.M. requested that all brethren who were not members of the Grand Lodge of Ireland, should retire.

Bro. Wonfor, P.M. Lodge 75, protested against the unprecedented course adopted by the Deputy Grand Master in excluding Master Masons from the meeting.

The D.G.M. ruled that Bro. Wonfor was out of order, and that there might be no misapprehension as to his commands, he explained that none could be allowed to remain in Grand but certificated Past Masters, actual Masters, and the Wardens of lodges under the Irish Constitution.

Bro. Dr. Hepburn, I.P.M. Lodge 2, said he had only vacated the chair on the 1st inst., and had not yet taken out his certificate. Was he to be excluded?

The D.G.M. said his case was exceptional, and he might therefore remain.

All but members having retired, the Grand Lodge was opened in due form.

The D.G.M. then rose, and said he had always believed that Masons would support and respect the authority of the chair; but on this occasion, he regretted to state, he had been treated with disrespect, inasmuch as, notwithstanding his orders, a brother who was not a member of the Grand Lodge of Ireland, was then in the room. (Cries of "Name!" "Name!" and great confusion.) He was informed that a person (sic) named Yarker was in the Grand Lodge. ("Oh!")

Bro. Wonfor said he had the privilege of knowing Bro. Yarker, and could assure the D.G.M. he was incapable of the conduct imputed to him. He was not in the lodge, nor had he been in it that evening. Bro. Wonfor was proceeding to make some further observations, when the D.G.M. called upon him to resume his seat, and refused to listen to him.

On the recommendation of the Board of General Purposes, Bro. the Hon. David R. Plunket, Q.C., M.P., was elected Grand Junior Deacon, vice the Earl of Kingston, deceased.

Bro. Theophilus E. St. George, Grand Steward, informed the D.G.M. that the brethren who had been excluded remained in the porch, and expected to be readmitted.

The D.G.M. ordered the Inner Guard to admit any member of the Irish Constitution.

Bro. Graham, P.M. Lodge 250, inquired if none others were to be allowed to enter, and the D.G.M. replied that all others should first get his permission.

A large number of Master Masons were then admitted.

Some routine business having been transacted, the Acting Grand Inner Guard handed in the certificate of Bro. John Yarker, Past Master under the English Constitution, who requested to be admitted.

The D.G.M. said, as he thought that the presence of Bro. Yarker might cause dissention amongst them, he would exercise the power which was voted in him, and refuse that brother admittance.

Bro. Wonfor must again protest against the course pursued by the chair. It was a most unconstitutional thing to refuse admittance to a member of a sister Grand Lodge.

The D.G.M. had to call Bro. Wonfor to order, and must request that the business of the Grand Lodge be proceeded with.

Bro. Wonfor insisted upon his right to be heard, and, on advancing towards the pedestal, was met by Bro. the Rev. H. J. Westby, P.G.C., who "dared" him to approach. A scene of the most indescribable confusion then ensued, and the Grand Lodge was in a state of uproar for upwards of ten minutes, some brethren insisting upon Bro. Wonfor's claim to be heard, and others shouting "Put him out," "Shame!" &c.

On order being restored, Bro. Woodworth, P.M. Lodge 245, said it was but a very short time since another Grand Body in Ireland was compelled to apologise to a Grand Body in Scotland for refusing admission to a brother, and it would be a very painful thing, indeed, if this Grand Lodge were—

The D.G.M. ruled Bro. Woodworth out of order, and he accordingly resumed his seat.

After this a P.M. of Lodge 494 handed in the following protest from Bro. Yarker, but the D.G.M. did not read it to the Grand Lodge, and the brethren were thus left in ignorance of its contents:—

"To the Right Worshipful the Grand Lodge of Ireland.

"The Provincial Grand Lodge of Meath having, in an official communication to the Grand Lodge of Ireland, spoken of me, and brethren associated with me, as 'expelled Masons,' I, John Yarker, of 43, Charlton-road, Manchester, P.M. of Lodge 623, 'Fidelity,' Flowery Field, Cheshire, and Lodge 189, 'Integrity,' Manchester, Lancashire, present myself here in your Grand Lodge, and being, in common with the other brethren alluded to, a present member of the United Grand Lodge of All England, I repel the slanderous imputation cast upon us.

"I have come here at some expense, and considerable inconvenience, that I may be spared the pain of bringing the matter before the Grand Lodge of England, and I seek at the hands of my Irish brethren the justice which is my due.

(Signed) "JOHN YARKER."

Bro. Graham reminded the D.G.M. that, at the meeting of the Board of General Purposes, an official communication from the Provincial Grand Lodge of Meath to the Grand Lodge of Ireland was read and commented on. Why was all mention of it omitted from the minutes?

The D.G.M. replied that the Board, having unanimously decided that they could not entertain the subject of that letter, it could not be sent on to Grand Lodge, nor referred to there.

The committee appointed to make arrangements for the reception of H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and for his installation as Patron of the Order, at the suggestion of Bro. Dr. Davenport Crosthwaite, P.G.O., explained some matters of detail.

The Acting Grand Deacons having made the usual collection for charity, the Grand Lodge was closed.

(There was a general expression of opinion amongst the brethren that the Deputy Grand Master, even if he had kept within the letter of the Grand Lodge Rules, had most assuredly acted contrary to the spirit of them, and that an English brother had, on a flimsy pretext, been most wantonly insulted.)

Whilst the foregoing events were taking place inside; the following scene was being enacted out:—

Bro. Yarker having been reported,
Capt. Harte (opening the door): What rank do you hold?

Bro. Yarker: P.M. of England.
Capt. Harte: Are you under suspension by any Masonic body?

Bro. Yarker: I am in lawful standing in all lawful Masonic bodies in England from the 1<sup>o</sup> to the 33<sup>o</sup>?

Capt. Harte insultingly repeats his question.
Bro. Yarker: I ask admission as a P.M. of a lodge under the Grand Lodge of England, in which I am in lawful communion.

Capt. Harte (still more insultingly): Come, sir, no equivocation. Are you not under suspension by a Masonic body?

Bro. Yarker: By the Ancient and Accepted Rite, for exposing it as spurious and fraudulent; but that is recognised by no other Masonic body in England.

Capt. Harte (taking in the certificate): Aye, I thought so.

Shortly afterwards the certificate was brought back, and insultingly thrust out, Capt. Harte adding: The Deputy Grand Master refuses to admit you.

Bro. Yarker: Then I must request leave to hand in this written protest.

The door was closed, and Bro. Yarker's protest had to be sent in by a brother standing near.

One other visiting brother was refused admission in the same way, but with more civility.

ROSICRUCIANÆ SOCIETATIS IN ANGLIA.

The quarterly meeting of the Metropolitan College was held at Freemasons' Tavern on Thursday, the 13th inst. In the absence of the M.G., Frater R. Wentworth Little, P.M.G., presided, supported by Fratres Angelo J. Lewis, M.A., as D.M.G.; W. R. Woodman, M.D., Sec. Gen.; Rev. W. B. Church, M.A., William Carpenter, Ancients; G. Butler, J. W. Willing, T. W. White, D. M. Dewar, and several other members.

The mystic circle was duly formed, and after confirmation of minutes, ballots were taken for several aspirants to the grade of Zelator. Bros. Eugene Cronin, M.D., and W. T. M. Macy, being in attendance, were, after the usual proofs, admitted as members of the society. Several fratres were advanced to the grades of Adeptus Junior and Adeptus Major, after which it was announced that a College of Rosicrucians was about to be formed at Liverpool, under Capt. G. Turner, as M.T., assisted by Dr. J. Kelllett Smith, as A.E.

The Sec. Gen. further stated that the election of the Right Hon. the Lord Lytton as Grand Patron had been unanimously confirmed by the Council, and that H.I.H. the Prince Rhodocanakis had joined the Provincial College at Manchester.

It was resolved that the quarterly issue of the "Rosicrucian," as the organ of the Society, should be converted into a monthly one, to enable many articles to be inserted which were now held over for want of space.

The mystic circle was then dissolved, and the fratres separated.

QUALITY, NOT QUANTITY.

THE pluvial deities having at length condescended to stay their over-generous hands, doubtless many of our readers are preparing to enjoy the long-hoped-for sunshine and the customary relaxation from the business of daily life. Masonic labour, so far as the metropolis is concerned, has almost ceased, and we have now breathing time to look around and note the progress made by the Order during the past Masonic session. We have first of all to record that the numerical increase of lodges and brethren has been fully sustained, but we fear that the quality of the initiates is not always equal to the quantity. A careful study of the ancient charges of the Fraternity would in many instances deter the members of our lodges from admitting men whose moral character and mental calibre reflect no credit upon the Order. There are many so-called Masons who are utterly incapable of estimating the real value of the Craft—nay, there are many who by the coarse interpretation which they give to the idea of sociality, actually mislead and debase the minds of some from whom we might have reasonably expected something nobler and better. We by no means overlook the patent fact that all Masons cannot be Solomons, but that is no reason why we should court the society of the long-eared tribe. We know that habits of long standing cannot be laid aside simply by crossing over the threshold of Masonry, and it therefore behoves us to exercise the utmost caution in the selection of our candidates, and never to propose for reception into the Brotherhood men with whose antecedents we are imperfectly acquainted. If committees of enquiry were instituted by every English lodge, as we believe is almost universally the case in America, we should have fewer cases of that practical apostacy from the principles of the Order which is at present so painfully apparent. It has been well said that Freemasonry is not a reformatory institution—we do not profess to cleanse the moral lepers of society; we do not undertake to purify the corrupt, or to extract the venom from the serpent's tooth. A dishonest man, who unfortunately obtains admission into the Craft, does not necessarily cease to be dishonest; on the contrary, it too frequently happens that he avails himself of his ill-gotten privileges to prey with greater impunity upon his victims who, deluded by the rascal's cry of "brother," fall into the snare without the least suspicion of danger. Of this class there are several notable examples, men who flaunt about in Masonic ribbons and jewellery at the expense of their creditors—in a word, men whose Masonic certificates, disgraced and degraded, hang side by side with their certificates from the Bankruptcy Courts. The ugliest feature of such cases is, that it is difficult to unmask these traitors to the cause of honour and virtue. They walk about in our midst with "brazen fronts and eyelids unabashed;" they assume to be the mentors of worthier men; with covert sneer and guarded lie they emit the foul breath of calumny upon the reputations of those who eschew the polluted pale of their influence. And, like the rabble of Comus, these satyrs herd together; the cry of malice uttered by one is taken up by the whole obscene pack, and the echoes of slander reverberate in dismal peals from one to another. To what extent Freemasonry is injured by the acts of these, her supposed adherents, will never probably be known, but we may safely assume that they have done more mischief to the Craft than all the edicts of all the pontiffs that have denounced the Order. Let us hope that in the numerous additions recently made to our lodges there are no recruits for the ranks of infamy—no reinforcements for the moral Thugs who would fain strangle all that is great and good in the precepts and practice of the Craft. Let us hope that our newly-enrolled brethren are men who come amongst us to be confirmed in the virtuous and honourable courses which they have already pursued rather than men who have hitherto followed a career of villany and vice. We rejoice to know that such is really the case in an overwhelming majority of instances, but still this should not induce us to forget or to relax those wise and necessary precautions by which the entrance of black sheep would be rendered almost an impossibility. The importance of this subject both to the present and the future of English Freemasonry must be our excuse for dwelling so long and so forcibly upon a disagreeable theme. Happily during the past season we can point to other and pleasanter topics. The various Charity Festivals have been well supported, and the interest felt in our noble institutions seems to be spreading like a circle in the water. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and the other "Prince in Wales," Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, presided over the festivals of the Girls' and Boys' Schools respectively, and the pecuniary results of both were very gratifying. At the Festival of the Royal Benevolent Institution, Bro. Colonel Burdett was to have taken the chair, but was unfortunately prevented attending by a domestic affliction; his place was, however, ably filled, at a moment's notice, by our popular Grand Treasurer, Bro. Samuel Tomkins, and a goodly collection succeeded his advocacy of the Institution's claims. The mission of the Marquis of Ripon to America may also be regarded as a most interesting event in Masonic history, and we trust that the fraternal warmth now so happily kindled may ever characterise our relations with the American people.

THE AMERICAN KNIGHTS TEMPLAR.

WE are pleased to be able to place on record that the reception of the American Templars by the brethren of Great Britain has been most cordial and fraternal, and we regret that our space will not permit us to give an account in detail of the various entertainments to which they were invited. We have already chronicled at considerable length the meetings held in their honour at Belfast and Glasgow, and may now add that we learn from the Perthshire Constitutional that the Knights were fêted at Perth upon their visit to that ancient burgh. From the Derbyshire Advertiser we condense a report of the proceedings at Alton Towers, where the R.W. Bro. the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot, P.G.M. Staffordshire, received our Transatlantic brethren. On their arrival in London, several of the Knights were chaperoned to the various sights of the metropolis by our esteemed Bro. Hughan, who came up from Truro expressly to meet and greet them. The Knights Templar of England, we are glad to say, likewise welcomed their brother Knights, and an abridged report of the proceedings will be found in another column. We hope, however, that the Craft Masons of England will not allow their American brethren to return home without offering them a reception worthy of the Grand Lodge of England, and of the great cause of universal brotherhood.

Multum in Parvo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

COWAN.

I think we have got pretty well at the meaning of the word cowan, as it is used in the Craft. Bro. D. Murray Lyon will not take offence at my saying that I much prefer Bro. Dr. Bedolfe's conjecture to his, although the phrase "cowans and eavesdroppers," in the old Scottish ritual, shows that cowan was not synonymous with listener or eavesdropper there. We have cowans and intruders, however—the intruder being a person "who might attempt to gain admission without the word," and the cowan something else. I got listener through the Anglo-Saxon; Bro. Dr. Bedolfe through the Greek; but we agree in the import of the word, and in its use amongst Masons.

Will any brother tell me why we "leave the east, and go towards the west, in search of that which was lost"?

WILL CARPENTER.

A correspondent in your paper of the 8th instant, dating from Church-street, Liverpool, inquires the regulation size of Masonic aprons. It is a pity that members either don't, or won't, read the Book of Constitutions, for if he had referred to that part headed "Regalia," he would there have found that aprons are of two sizes—one being 14 inches wide and 12 inches deep, and the other 16 inches wide and 14 inches deep, either size being correct at the discretion or taste of the weaver.

W.M.

SCOTCH KNIGHT TEMPLARY.

Is the Grand Priory of K.T. of Scotland the only acknowledged body of that Order in existence there? Or do the Grand Conclaves of England and Ireland acknowledge any others working under charters held from H.R.H. Duke of Kent, Deuchar, or the Early Grand of Ireland?

In answer to the query of "A Knight Templar," on page 425, I beg to inform him that the so-called Girvan Encampment of Knights Templars, held at Glasgow, are a spurious and illegal body. They have no head, and are not recognised by the Grand Priory or Chapter General of Scotland; and, I believe, on the same footing with the Grand Conclave of Masonic Knights Templars of England or Ireland.

"A Knight Templar" will find my answer to Bro. G. W. Wheeler's letter of 1st July, which appeared in No. 122 of THE FREEMASON," a fuller explanation to his query. Want of time prevents me forwarding it this week.

MONTRA.

THE GREEK θιασοι, OR THE CLASSIC "LODGES."

"The Greeks had led the way for the Romans as well in matters relating to private associations as in all other results of thought and refinement. The Greek θηρασοι or θιασοι of Athens, Rhodes, and the islands of the Archipelago, had been useful societies for mutual assistance in the way of loans, fire assurance, common religious observances, and harmless amusement. Each society had its rules carved on a stela, its archives, its common fund, provided by both voluntary contributions and assessments. The members met together to celebrate the festivals and to hold banquets, where cordiality reigned supreme. A brother needing money could borrow from the treasury. Women were admitted into these associations, and had a president for themselves. The meetings were held in secret, and under strict rules for the preservation of order. They took place, it seems, in enclosed gardens, surrounded by porticos or small buildings, and in the centre was erected an altar for the sacrifices. Each association had its officers selected by lot for one year, according to the usage of the ancient Greek democracies, and from which the Christian 'clergy' may have derived its name. The presiding officer only was elected by vote. These officers passed the candidate through a kind of examination, and were required to certify that he was 'holy, pious, and good.' There occurred in the two or three centuries which preceded the Christian era a movement in favour of these little religious clubs almost as marked as that which, in the Middle Age, produced so many religious orders and subdivisions of orders. In the island of Rhodes alone there is record of nineteen, many of which bore the names of their founders, or reformers. Some of them, particularly those of Bacchus, inculcated lofty doctrines, and sought to administer consolation to willing men. If there yet remained in Greek society a little charity, piety, or religious morality it was due to the existence and freedom of these private devotional assemblies. They acted, as it were, concurrently with the public and official religion, the neglect of which was becoming more and more apparent day by day. At Rome, associations of this nature met with more opposition, and found no less favour, among the poorer classes. The rules of Roman policy in regard to secret confraternities were first promulgated under the Republic—B.C. 186—in the case of the Bacchanals. The Romans were by natural taste, much inclined to associations, and in particular to those of a religious character; but these permanent congregations were displeasing to the patrician order, who controlled the municipal power, and whose narrow conceptions of life admitted no other social group besides the family and the state. The most minute precautions were taken, such as the requirement of a preliminary authorization, the limiting of numbers, and the prohibition against having a permanent Magister Sacrorum, and a common fund raised by subscription. The same anxiety was manifested on several occasions under the empire. The body of public law contained clauses authorizing all kinds of repression; but it depended on the administrative power whether they should be enforced or not, and the proscribed religions often reappeared in a very few years after their proscription. Foreign immigration, especially from Syria, unceasingly renewed the soil in which flourished the creeds so vainly doomed to extirpation. . . . In spite of the efforts of statesmen, the confraternities multiplied immensely. They were precisely analogous to our confraternities of the Middle Ages, with their patron saint and common refectory. The great families might centre their pride in their ancient name, their country, and their traditions; but the humble and the poor had nothing but the collegium, and there they fastened all their affections. The text of the law shows us that all these clubs were composed of slaves, veterans, or obscure persons—tenuiores. Within their precincts the free-born man, the freed man, and the slave were equal. They contained also many women. At the risk of innumerable taunts and annoyances, and sometimes of the most severe penalties, men persisted in entering the collegium, where they lived in the bonds of a pleasant brotherhood, where they found mutual succour in time of need, and where they contracted obligations which endured even after death.

"The place of meeting, or schola collegii, usually had a tetrastyle—portico with four fronts—where were set up the rules of the collegium near the altar of its protecting divinity, and where stood a trichinium for the repasts. These repasts, indeed, were looked forward to with impatience; they took place on the day sacred to the patron divinity, or on the birth-days of members who had contributed endowments. Every one brought his little portion—sportula; one of the brotherhood furnished in turn the accessories of the feast, such as couches, table furniture, bread, wine, sardines, and hot water. A slave newly emancipated owed his comrades an amphora of good wine. A quiet air of enjoyment animated the repast; it was a positive rule that none of the business of the society should be discussed, in order that nothing might disturb the brief interval of enjoyment and repose which these poor souls were thus providing for themselves. Every violent act or rude remark was punished by a fine. In appearance, these clubs were simply associations for burial of the members. . . . The poor man loved to believe that his body would not be cast into those horrible trenches; that his club would provide for his decent obsequies; that the brethren who should follow him on foot to the funeral pile would receive each a little honorarium—about two pence. The slave especially felt the need of an assurance that, if his master denied him the privilege of the ordinary rites of sepulture, that there would be a little band of friends who would perform 'imaginary obsequies.' Hardly any was so humble or destitute as not to contribute a penny per month to the common fund to procure after his death a little urn in a columbarium, with a slab of marble on which his name should be carved." W. P. B.

AN unwarrantable liberty has been taken with the name of THE FREEMASON, by coupling it with a wretched anti-Masonic print in an advertisement in an Irish paper; and we can only state that the advertisement referred to was inserted without our knowledge or consent.

IF, in the time of the company mania, every undertaking had been based upon the sound principles of the Alexandria Palace and Muswell Hill Estate Tontine (a prospectus of which we publish in full in another part of our journal), there would have been less cause for the outcry raised against the joint-stock system. The directors of this enterprise, who have secured the subscribers from all liability by making it a trust, grant certificates to each Tontineer providing admission to the palace and grounds, participation in an Art Union, to which a sum of £500,000 is to be devoted during the period of the Tontine. The close of the Tontine is to take place in 1886, when the property, towards the improvement of which all the profits of the undertaking are to be devoted, will be sold, and the proceeds divided amongst the Tontineers. An insurance company has agreed to provide against possible loss by agreeing, for the consideration of 1s. for every 21s., to refund 20s. out of every such 21s. should the life so insured terminate before the close of the Tontine. This charming place of resort, originally planned more exclusively for the north side of this great city, is destined to be one patronised by the inhabitants of all parts, and will doubtless attract vast numbers of our country cousins, as the railway companies have, by their junctions and connecting systems, placed it within the reach of all. For the various amusements and exhibitions we must refer our readers to the prospectus, but when we mention that the directors are in this respect actuated by a desire to carry out the views of the late Prince Consort, we venture to think enough has been said on that point.

Original Correspondence.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In your number of the 1st inst. appears a report of the "summer meeting of the Ancient and Honourable Order of Royal Ark Mariners," held on Wednesday, the 21st ult.

The names of Bros. George Lambert and Rev. W. B. Church are there given—the former as "G. Treas.," the latter as "G.S.D." As both these brethren are Past Officers of this Grand Lodge—which claims to be the legitimate governing body over the Degree of Royal Ark Mariners in this country—I was commanded to inquire of them whether or not these appointments were made with their sanction? Both brethren have replied in terms repudiating all connection with the "Grand Lodge of Royal Ark Mariners," and stating that such appointments were made without their knowledge or sanction.

How many of the other brethren honoured by publication of their grand titles are similarly situated I have not, as yet, ascertained. Surely, this unauthorised manufacture of Grand Officers is matter for severe reprobation.

I may take the opportunity of informing your readers that the negotiations between the Grand Lodge and the "Grand Lodge of Royal Ark Mariners" have been finally broken off, it having been found impossible to recognise the position claimed by the latter self-styled Grand Body.

The Degree of Royal Ark Mariner will be worked by the Mark lodges under the jurisdiction of this Grand Lodge.

I am, dear Sir and Brother,
Yours faithfully and fraternally,
FREDERICK BINCKES, G.S.

Office of the Grand Lodge of Mark Masters,
2, Red Lion-square, High Holborn,
London, W.C., 19th July, 1871.

FREEMASONRY, ITS NATURE.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Allow me to express my thanks for your leading article, at page 440, on "American and British Masonry," and especially for including therein "the soul-stirring utterances of the far-famed Bro. Dr. Albert G. Mackey." It gives me very great pleasure to find that, although, judging by his writings, Dr. Mackey and I are at loggerheads regarding the origin of our system of Freemasonry, we yet are at one regarding its nature; and, indeed, the latter is the principal thing.

Although each is worthy of consideration in its own place, What is it? is of more value to us than, Whence did it come? As to what it is, allow me to endorse the following noble sentiments of our well-known brother: "The universality and the tolerance of Freemasonry are indeed the two brightest features of our noble and venerated Institution. . . . This wide-spread Institution has an altar around which men of every religion can kneel. . . . I thank God from my inmost heart that there is such a common altar, where Christian, Turk, and Jew may kneel in adoration to a common Father. . . . There the Christian—in every phase of that comprehensive title—the Jew, the Mussulman, the Hindu, and the Parsee may all kneel." From the foregoing, we see that the great beauty and power of Freemasonry is its universality; and consequently that the only true "Freemasonry" of the nature of our speculative Masonry is Universal Freemasonry—such an expression as "Christian Freemasonry" being a contradiction in terms, for genuine Freemasonry is opposed to all sectarianism. The foundation of the foregoing doctrines is found in the first head of the 1723 Constitutions, where it says: "'tis now thought more expedient only to oblige them to that religion in which all men agree." Yet, in the face of this plain statement, I am told by a contributor to your contemporary, who styles himself "a member of your Grand Lodge," that the 1723 Constitutions do not "entitle him (Bro. Buchan) to hold out the right hand of fellowship to a Hindoo or even to a Mahomedan"! What will Bro. Dr. Mackey think of that? We treat the dictum, however, with a smile, for the more we learn of the non-infallibility of the popular creeds of the day, the more are we led to acknowledge the ability and far-seeing policy of the founders of that system of cosmopol-tan Brotherhood, which, for the last century and a half, has been known as "Freemasonry."

I am, yours fraternally,
W. P. BUCHAN.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Having had a little leisure time, one afternoon, lately, my eye happened to alight on "an ode" in a magazine in my library, and thinking the same—with a few words substituted and transposed—suitable for your very excellent publication, have done myself the extreme felicity of forwarding you a copy thereof. If acceptable for insertion, well and good; if not, then let it lay on the table, or commit it to the wastebasket.

I remain, dear Sir and Brother,

Yours fraternally,

JAMES BALLANTINE,

P.S.W. Strong Man and P.S. Mount Lebanon.
Peckham, Surrey, July 4th, 1871.

AN ODE ON FREEMASONRY.

Though slander follows wheresoe'er I go,
To villify the art she does not know;
Undaunted guilt alone, has cause to fear;
Cloth'd in this honour'd garb I now appear,
Owning myself a Mason—at the name,
No guilty redness dies my cheeks with shame;
Let slander follow—I her darts defy,
And laugh at sneering folly's oft-told lie;
But what our Order teaches, I will show
The lesson you must love, when once you know;
It humbly bids us ever to adore
The Almighty Architect, by whose great power
The Universe was formed; to His decree (Which wisdom ever guides), resign'd to be,
It makes us zealous in our country's cause,
True to our Queen, and faithful to her laws;
For ever bids us, with the strictest care,
To act with all mankind upon the square;
Never to publish a frail neighbour's shame,
Or steal away a brother's honest name;
To be sincere—his secrets ne'er reveal;
But him to serve, with fervency and zeal;
Bids us show mercy, when we have the power,
And to the stranger ope' the door;
The naked with warm vestments to enfold,
And guard the shivering victim from the cold;
To visit wretches, tortured by disease—
Make smooth their bed, and pour the balm of care;
The widow's tale—the orphan's cry to hear,
And from affliction's eye wipe off the tear;
To know each office, each endearing tie
Of heaven-descended soft-eyed charity;
Regard not modes of faith, but firm unite
With all who work by the nice rule of right;
All have one Father—all good men, and true,
The same great end, by different roads, pursue.

When to the lodge we come, that happy place,
There social friendship smiles on every face;
Then on a pleasing level all appear,
And merit only is distinguish'd there.
Secrets we have, and those we gladly show
To proper persons, who apply to know;
Be not offended, kind and beautiful fair,
That you from Mason's rites excluded are;
'Tis not because we fear you would disclose
Whate'er within your breasts we might repose;
But we're afraid, and sure our fears are true,
Were you admitted, love would enter, too;
That jealousy might then our hearts inflame,
And to a rival, turn a brother's name—
Break all our bonds, annihilate our joy,
And soon our Ancient Order quite destroy.
Be not offended—we your sex adore,
And pay true homage to your sovereign power;
If 'ere this our actions disagree,
Censure the man, but blame not Masons free;
We do not blame, when mortals go astray,
The light that came from Heaven to show the way.

MASONIC FESTIVITIES.

SUMMER BANQUET OF THE LION AND LAMB LODGE, No. 192.

This old and influential lodge held its Summer Fête on Thursday, the 13th instant, at the Royal Crown Hotel, Sevenoaks, Kent, under the presidency of Bro. George Kenning, W.M., P.G.D. Middlesex. The company left London about 10 a.m., in saloon carriages, and arrived at Sevenoaks about 11 o'clock. After having paid a visit to Knowle Park (the seat of Lord Buckhurst), and inspected the beauties of the ancient abbey, the company assembled at the Royal Crown Hotel, at 3 o'clock, where a sumptuous dinner was provided, at which about sixty ladies and gentlemen sat down—nearly, we were glad to say, equal in numbers. Bro. George Kenning occupied the chair as Master of the lodge, and Bro. F. Trott the Warden's chair. The banquet was well served, for which every credit is due to Bro. Pawley, the proprietor of the hotel.

The cloth having been cleared, the W.M. proceeded to give a few toasts appropriate to the occasion—the first being "Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen and Royal Family," which was received with great enthusiasm, the band in attendance playing the National Anthem. The Master then proposed "The Most Noble the Marquis of Ripon, Grand Master," "The Right Hon. the Earl of Carnarvon, Deputy Grand Master, and the Grand Officers," coupling with the toast the name of Bro. Brett, a Past Grand Officer, who returned thanks for the Grand Master and the Grand Officers in a humorous speech.

Bro. E. Roberts then proposed the next toast, "Bro. George Kenning, W.M.," who so worthily occupied the chair on this auspicious occasion, and said this being the first occasion that the Lion and Lamb Lodge had celebrated a meeting of this kind to which every member of the lodge had the opportunity of introducing a lady—and which, he was happy to say, had proved a great success—upon that success he congratulated the W. Master for having so energetically put his shoulder to the wheel, and to whom, principally, the thanks of the meeting were due for the social gathering of brethren and their ladies on this occasion. (The toast was received and drunk amid great cheers.)

Bro. Kenning, in returning thanks, said a great deal more credit had been conferred upon him than was justly his due, as the idea of a banquet was proposed last summer by Bro. Trott, but, owing to various circumstances, was not then carried out. At the same time, he was happy that this meeting had turned out to be a thorough success, and when he suggested it to the members he made up his mind that it should be so. It was a great pleasure to him to meet the brethren of his lodge and their ladies on this the first occasion of a summer festival, and hoped that it would result in many réunions. He thanked them for the very kind manner they had received and responded to the toast.

The W.M. then gave "The Health of the Visitors," who had been invited to do honour to the lodge on this occasion. The visitors present being each named by the Chairman, viz., Bros. J. Brett, Foulger, J. B. Wolpert, — Yeoman, J. Weaver, — Thomas, A. Dawes, E. Turvey, and Mr. J. Reeves, and their ladies.

Bro. Foulger returned thanks for the visitors in an excellent speech.

The W. Master then gave "The Ladies," and Mr. James Reeves being specially selected by the chairman as the most fit and proper person to represent the fair sex on the occasion, returned thanks, doing ample justice to the importance and value of the toast.

The W. Master then gave the health of the officers and others who had acted as a committee and stewards on the occasion, which was responded to by Bro. Trott, S.W. pro tem.

The company then rose, and reassembled in the ball-room, where the dance was kept up till nine o'clock. Great credit is due to Bro. Weaver for the very efficient manner in which he conducted the band on the occasion—playing many favourite selections and overtures during dinner, and afterwards an excellent programme of dance music.

Amongst the brethren present we noticed: Bros. W. Goodyer, P.M., Treas.; J. G. Marsh, P.G.P. Middlesex, Sec.; E. King, P.M., W.S.; Charles Hosgood, P.M.; E. Roberts, P.M.; F. Trott, J.W.; George Abbott, S.D.; A. J. Dickenson, J.D.; George Newman, I.G.; W. R. Baker, R. E. Bright, W. Donne, T. Fisher, F. Baker, W. Ramsay, J. Fitzjohn, W. Harwood, E. Jones, H. Davis, and many others.

The thanks of the company were greatly due to Bro. Abbott for the excellent railway accommodation afforded by him; to Bro. E. Roberts, who acted as, and made an excellent Master of Ceremonies; to Bro. E. King for his indefatigable attention as their steward, and to the other brethren who fulfilled the duties of stewards in the most exemplary manner.

The company returned to London about ten o'clock, well pleased with the day's excursion.

PICNIC OF THE TEMPLE LODGE, No. 1094.

The members of the Temple Lodge, No. 1094, Liverpool, held their third Annual Picnic on Thursday, July 13th, at Eaton Hall, near Chester. There was a large muster of the fairer portion of humanity, this pleasant outing increasing every year in favour with the ladies.

The boat was despatched at 9.30 from the landing-stage, and reached Chester soon after 11 o'clock. The party then proceeded to the Dee side. Their arrival being anticipated, everything was in readiness, owing to the kind arrangements of Bro. Winstanley. The barges, with the band, began to move up the Dee at 12 o'clock. After about an hour and a half's row, the party, numbering about fifty, reached its destination. At 2 p.m. the luncheon was spread, which was abundant and sumptuous.

The after-dinner toasts were limited to the Worshipful Master only, which was proposed by Bro. William Crane, P.M., who in feeling terms alluded to the untiring zeal and disinterested devotion of Bro. Winstanley. Whether by affording instruction, correction, relief, or reproof, his hand was always guided by justice and his heart expanded by benevolence. In short, he (Bro. Winstanley) carried out, in his daily life out of the lodge, those precepts which he taught in it.

Bro. Winstanley, W.M. in reply, said that he felt deeply grateful to Bro. Crane for his kind eulogium, and to the company for their manifestations of good-will and esteem. He would do all he could to promote their comfort, and he trusted all would enjoy themselves. He hoped that these annual picnics would be long continued.

After dinner, many of the ladies and gentlemen had a sail up the Dee, and a view of the Hall and grounds. Others joined in the sports, while some kept up dancing with great spirit to the strains of the band until the shades of evening.

The annual gatherings have become an institution with the Temple Lodge, and decidedly popular amongst the ladies. The arrangements for the picnic were carried out with great spirit by Bros. Winstanley, Washington, Yelland, Martin, and Major Newman. The company were much pleased with the vocal arrangements of the Misses Washington, Mrs. Smith, and Miss Eves. A very happy day was spent. The weather was beautiful and fine, every one expressing a wish that the next Temple picnic was nearer at hand.

In passing, the Sir Knights advanced in military style and saluted the M.E. and S.G.M., and the Grand Officers, and were then invited to take their seats in the encampment.

The Grand Chancellor Sir P. Mc C. de Colquhoun then addressed the distinguished visitors.

Sir Kt. W. Hamilton, Eminent Commander, replied on behalf of the Sir Knts. of Allegheny: This seventh day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, is one that will be always remembered, not only by the Knights of Allegheny, but by all our Fraters throughout the United States of America, as an epoch in the history of the Order of the Temple, in the United States. We have left our homes in the Far West, and are now travelling East, not with the intent of winning renown by warlike deeds, but as pilgrim penitents, visiting the scenes made famous by those valiant knights who have won for themselves and for the Order of the Temple imperishable renown, and reverently, with uncovered heads and sad hearts, view those hallowed spots, sacred to the memory of those noble knights whose names are inscribed on the roll of the noble army of martyrs. And now, when we are weary with travelling, you have met us with kindly greeting, taken us into your tents, and made us the recipients of your unbounded hospitality. Although so far from our homes, we are not in a strange land—we feel to-day that we are at our mother's fireside, surrounded by our elder brethren. That the Grand Chancellor, in his official capacity of Grand Commander of Middlesex, should convene the Prov. Grand Conclave with regard to our convenience, we regard as one of the greatest honours that could be conferred upon us. And, in conclusion, permit us to say, that if any mists have darkened the political atmosphere between Great Britain and the United States, we believe that they have been happily dispelled, and we hope that Her Gracious Majesty, Victoria, Queen of England, may long continue to live and reign, and that her memory as a devoted wife and affectionate mother, a loving and gracious Queen, and a Christian woman, may be loved and honoured until the end of recorded time.

Sir Knts. W. Hamilton and E. M. Jenkins were appointed to the honorary rank of Past Grand Captains of the Grand Conclave of England and Wales, received their patents, and tendered their warmest thanks for the honour conferred upon them.

The Prov. Grand Conclave of Middlesex was then opened, and the following were duly appointed as Prov. Grand Officers:—

- Sir Kt. the Rev. A. B. Shepherd, Prelate and Almoner
- „ E. Turner ... .. 1st Captain
- „ S. Rosenthal ... .. 2nd Captain
- „ W. Tinkler ... .. Chancellor
- „ Raymond H. Thrupp... Registrar
- „ D. M. Dewar ... .. Chamberlain
- „ F. A. Philbrick ... Director of Cers.
- „ F. W. Ramsay ... Standard Bearer
- „ Clarence Harcourt ... Captain of Lines
- „ G. Hillyer ... .. Banner Bearer

Sir Knight J. Tepper was elected Treasurer, and Frater Austin Equerry.

The Sir Knights then adjourned to an adjoining room for the purpose of conferring upon the Sir Knights of Allegheny Commandery the degree of the Mediterranean Pass, according to their desire, although they had, with one exception, in their own country received the degree of Knight of Malta.

The Prov. Grand Conclave of Middlesex was then closed, and a Priory of Malta was opened.

Sir Knight James Dickson, of the Allegheny Commandery, and Sir Knights J. Boord of the Harcourt Encampment, J. D. Larsen of the Mount Calvary Encampment, Thomas Luty of the Ancient York Encampment, and G. Hillyer and J. Lockhart Syms of the Faith and Fidelity Encampment, then received the Mediterranean Pass, and were admitted into the Order of the Knights of Malta.

The Priory of Malta was closed.

The business of the Faith and Fidelity Encampment being concluded it was closed.

The American Sir Knights then formed a procession and retired in military order.

The Sir Knights shortly afterwards re-assembled in the Banquet Room in undress.

At the banquet the American Sir Knights were seated alternately between the English Sir Knights round the table. The Sir Knights Hamilton, Slack, Jenkins, and McIllyar, of the Allegheny Commandery, being the supporters, right and left of the Chairmain.

After the cloth had been drawn, the Chairman proposed "The Queen, the daughter of a Mason, the mother and mother-in-law of Masons." He said the manner in which the American Sir Knights had received the name of Her Majesty was sufficient to ensure a cordial reception of the toast.

The National Anthem was sung.

The Chairman gave "The President of the United States of America." Although they could not give this toast with Masonic honours, they no less cordially drank his health, and prosperity to the United States. The Chairman made some appropriate remarks upon the recent events in which, Freemasonry had taken an important part. (This toast was drunk with enthusiasm.)

The national song of the "Star Spangled Banner" was sung by Sir Knight Slack, with the additional verse, by Bro. Walter Montgomery.

Sir Knight Sir P. Mc C. de Colquhoun proposed "H.R.H. the Prince of Wales," as a Knight Templar, a zealous Mason, and an English gentleman. He had visited the United States, and had since frequently acknowledged the hearty welcome he had there received. He would also add the health of the Princess of Wales, as the daughter, the sister, and wife of a Mason, highly esteemed by all who knew her.

The next toast was "The Most Eminent and Supreme Grand Master of England, Sir Knight W. Stuart," given by Sir Knight Hamilton, who mentioned the connection of Sir Knight Stuart with the American nation, being the great grandson of William Penn, and a descendant of the royal Stuarts. (The toast was enthusiastically received, and it was regretted by all that the state of his health did not permit him to be present.)

The next toast was given by the Chairman, "The health of Sir Knight W. Sewall Gardner, M.E. and S.G.M. of Knights Templar in the United States," whose command extended over no less than 36 states, and about six territories. (The toast was received with Masonic honours.)

Sir Knight Huyshe then proposed "The health of the Visitors, as the representatives of the Knights Templar of the United States," in a forcible speech, which, we regret, our space will not permit us to give in extenso. He expressed his regret at the shortness of the notice which had no doubt prevented a larger number of Sir Knights being present; but he hoped the warmth of the reception would make amends for the smallness of their number. He strongly expressed himself upon the great influence which Masonry had exercised upon the welfare of mankind, and alluded in feeling terms to the very cordial reception which had been given to the Grand Master of Craft Masonry, during his recent visit to the United States. He agreed with the sentiments expressed by an American brother as to the influence which Masonry had exercised in the happy settlement of the differences which at one time threatened to disturb the peaceful relations of the two countries.

Sir Knight Rev. J. J. McIllyar, D.D., replied as follows: Most Eminent and Supreme Grand Master, I assure you that it affords me great pleasure, on behalf of all the visiting brethren of Allegheny Commandery, to return their heartfelt thanks for the very cordial manner in which they have been received by the Grand Encampment of England and Wales. When we remember, eminent sir, that this is the first time in the history of the world that such an honour has been conferred, it is impossible for us to express our high appreciation of your kindness. Eminent sir, the very eloquent and able manner in which you have spoken of the American people, and the settlement of those differences which seemed to threaten difficulty between two of the greatest nations in the world, has brought us under great obligations. I can assure you, eminent sir, that the American people no less appreciate the amicable settlement of those difficulties, and I have no doubt that the principles of Masonry which existed in Europe and America, tended no little to bring about this happy state of things. Eminent sir, I have neither time nor ability to make such a reply as your very eloquent address would demand. Again I thank you in the name and on behalf of American Masons, and on their behalf allow me to give you a pressing and cordial invitation to pay us a visit to the United States, and we will give you such a reception as American Masons can give. Only in this way can we hope to manifest our appreciation of your brotherly treatment to us. Masonry recognises the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. May the nations of Europe and America ever continue on the same fraternal and brotherly terms. Sir, it has afforded us great pleasure to travel through your dominions and read the ancient landmarks of our beloved order. Having received the Order of Masonry from you, we are glad to be permitted to come back as the representatives of Masonry in the United States, and learn amid the graves and monuments of our fathers that we have preserved the ancient rites committed to us unimpaired. I trust, sir, when we cease to labour in this mundane sphere that it may be our happy privilege to meet, from both sides the water, in that house not made with hands eternal in the heavens.

The usual routine toasts having been given and responded to, the remainder of the evening was spent in social conversation and interchange of civilities. The American Sir Knights then expressed their hearty thanks individually to G.V.C. Tinkler, and Assistant G. Dir., of Cer. Starkey, for their indefatigable efforts to render their reception agreeable.

The banquet and wines, supplied by Bro. Hart, received the highest encomiums from all who partook thereof, especially the American brethren, who frequently expressed their great gratification, declaring it was the best entertainment which had as yet been offered to them.

THE VISIT TO ALTON TOWERS.

The Earl of Shrewsbury having invited the American Knights Templar to pay a visit to the famed Alton Towers, it was arranged that they should go there on the 4th of July, being the 95th anniversary of American Independence, and also the Alton Horticultural Show. On reaching Alton station the party were met by the Earl's private band, and a procession being formed, all moved forward up the avenue of trees leading to the Towers. Close to the hall a private tent had been prepared for the American brethren, and after they had "arranged" themselves, they went to the chapel, accompanied by brethren from Derbyshire, where full choral service was performed. The Rev. Dr. Fraser, the Earl of Shrewsbury's domestic chaplain, intoned the service, the Anthem being taken from the 104th Psalm. The singing of the Earl's domestic choir was admirable, and at the conclusion the Hallelujah Chorus was played on the organ. It had been arranged that the reception of the American and English Freemasons should take place at a quarter to 12 o'clock, but in consequence of the non-arrival of a deputation from the Staffordshire Knot Lodge, it was postponed until 12.20. In the meantime the Americans, each taking the arm of a Derbyshire brother, and accompanied by the Messrs. Cook, rambled through the matchless grounds of Alton, whose beauties were greatly extolled, the frequent remark being, "We have nothing like this in America." It should be stated that the American flag was hoisted on one of the towers. At 12.30 the Derbyshire brethren were ushered into the Earl's Grand Dining-hall, where they were addressed by the Earl of Shrewsbury, who gave to them and the Staffordshire brethren a hearty welcome. His Lordship, who wore the costume of a deputy-lieutenant, was accompanied by the Countess of Shrewsbury, and the youthful Lord Ingestre. The Earl of Shrewsbury met the American legation at the Grand Entrance to the Hall, and proceeded then to the Grand Dining-room, the English Freemasons giving them a hearty cheer.

The Earl of Shrewsbury then addressed the company, observing that it gave Lady Shrewsbury and himself the greatest pleasure to receive them on that occasion as gentlemen, and he might add, as brethren. When he first heard of their visiting the county, he thought it meet to offer them the hospitalities of his place, for he could not express his gratification at the opportunity which it offered to reciprocate the good feeling evinced in America towards this country. The Marquis of Ripon had done him the honour to nominate him as Grand Master of Staffordshire, on the recommendation of the Earl of Carnarvon. The noble Earl then referred to the lineage of the family, which deduces its descent from a period antecedent to the Conqueror, the first person of note on record being Richard de Talbot, mentioned in Domesday Book, and who married the daughter of Gerard de Gournay, Baron of Yarmouth. He further observed that he had received every courtesy and kindness from the American people, and he was pleased to receive them now, and show them the beauties of the place. He trusted that the principles of Freemasonry would still more firmly unite the two countries, for, if so, peace would be more permanent, and commerce more prospering. The noble lord concluded by remarking that Lady Shrewsbury desired to join with him in giving them a hearty welcome to Alton.

The W.M. of the Staffordshire Knot Lodge of Freemasons then read a resolution which had been agreed to at a special meeting of the members at Stafford on the evening previous. It was an expression of gratitude to the Marquis of Ripon for appointing the noble Earl Grand Master of Staffordshire, and to the Earl of Shrewsbury for accepting the same.

Bro. Thomas Cox, P.P.G.S.W. of Derbyshire, in the unavoidable absence of the Deputy Provincial Grand Master of that province, then addressed the Earl of Shrewsbury.

Bro. William Naylor, Prov. G. Sec. Derbyshire, then read an appropriate address to the American Knights Templar from the P.G.L. of Derbyshire, which was beautifully illuminated and surmounted by several Masonic emblems, and the American and English coats of arms.

The Rev. Dr. Tudor (Wesleyan), of Baltimore, then replied on behalf of the Americans, as follows: It gives me great pleasure, my Lord Shrewsbury, to appear upon the part of my companions to respond to the very kind and cordial welcome which your lordship and Lady Shrewsbury have been pleased to extend to us this day. But how to respond in sufficiently appropriate and grateful terms is the difficulty, and is a task for the performance of which I crave your lordship's indulgence for a few moments. (Hear, hear.) We gratefully recognise the distinguished honour of being received by your lordship as the citizens and humble representatives of a nation between which and your own nation, my lord, there have long existed relations, not only of friendliness, but also of warm affection—(hear, hear)—relations sustained and ratified by the recent arrangements of State to which your lordship has alluded, and the terms of which have settled points of honour, which existed, I am persuaded, more in sentiment than in reality. Let us believe it to be impossible that those strong bonds of civilisation and Christianity, which hold fast together the two States, shall ever be severed, so as to precipitate us into other than relations the most friendly and loving. (Cheers.) We were touched in observing, immediately upon setting foot in your lordship's domain, the mark of the distinguished honour you would do us, in our national colours floating the highest over the towers of Alton. (Applause.) We recognise ourselves received also as the representatives of that Brotherhood of humanity concerning which the poet sings—

"Between us all let oceans roll,
Yet still from either beach
The voice of blood shall reach,
More eloquent than speech,
We are one."

Oh, it does our hearts good, my lord, to receive the attentions which met us at our very landing upon these foreign shores, and have culminated in your lordship's reception this day. We have felt deeply the inconvenience of exile from home, deprived, as we are for a time, of the sacred refining influences of domestic life, the sweet society of wife, daughter, sister, we are cheered and comforted by the kind offices of friends. (Hear, hear.) It is the quaint conceit of a wild modern poet, that the precious stones of our earth are the remains of a temple built by the angels in Eden to the worship of God. The foundations of the temple were bright and beaten gold, tower and roof of pinnacle without were solid diamond, the dome was eye-blue sapphire, studded with golden stars; the floor was emerald, veined with gold and silver; marble and mineral of every hue were in its walls; the altar was one ruby, heartlike; the columns were of alabaster, and where all things were magnificent, the meanest thing was gold, the plainest. Man fell and joined the hosts of hell, black-bannered, on the very day when he should have met God and his angels there, and immediately also fell that bright fane—no death-doomed eye gazed on its glory; earthquakes gulped it down—the temple of the angels lay in its grave, till, at the flood, it burst, like a shell, and scattered its fragments east and west and far and wide, which are the diamonds and rubies and emeralds and sapphires of this world's costly merchandise. (Applause.) Morally, human nature is just such a wretched temple; but we recognise in the affections and virtues and amenities and hospitalities of common life, scattered and fragmentary jewels of the wreck. These jewels have thickly strewn our way through the United Kingdom, but the Koh-i-noor, the crown jewel, my lord, we have found this day at Alton Towers. (Loud applause.) Furthermore, we recognise ourselves as having the honour to be received as the humble representatives of a fraternity, of which we are happy to congratulate your lordship as a chief officer, by recent nomination as Prov. Grand Master of Staffordshire (cheers); a fraternity whose laws, teachings, and work are designed to assist in rebuilding the wrecked temple of humanity to which I have alluded, until the perfect structure shall again stand forth, love ever beating in the heart, truth ever speaking from the tongue, justice ever reigning in the mind, benevolence ever giving from the hand, righteousness ever the path of the feet, kindness ever beaming from the eye, gentleness curving every limb, honour crowning the head, and goodness unqualified the description of the whole life. (Applause.) Begging your lordship and Lady Shrewsbury to accept the assurance that the reception extended to us this day is infinitely more beautiful in our eyes and more grateful in our hearts than are the blossoms of exquisite loveliness that lie in such rich bouquets over your lordship's estate, we remain, my lord, your humble servants. (Cheers.) By your lordship's permission, I would also, on behalf of my companions, express our lively sense of pleasure in meeting so many of our brother Masons on this beautiful spot to-day, our great happiness in receiving their kindly greetings, and the assurance of the sincere reciprocation from our hearts, on their behalf, of all their good wishes. (Applause.)

The above speech was listened to with marked attention by all present. It was delivered with great earnestness, and made a strong impression upon all who had the pleasure of listening to it.

The Countess of Shrewsbury then took wine with Dr. Tudor and the Americans, with the W.M. of the Stafford Lodge, and the acting D.P.G.M. of Derby.

The company partook of champagne and other wines, with choice grapes, peaches, strawberries, confectionery, &c., after which Lady Shrewsbury took the arm of an American brother, the young ladies the arms of Derbyshire brethren, and the whole then proceeded to take a private view of the flower show, which was in a tent near the hall. This over, the Americans had Luncheon in their private tent, provided by the Earl of Shrewsbury. The Derby brethren, with their well-known liberal manner in carrying out their arrangements appointed Bro. Plock, of the Midland Hotel, their commissariat. They had their own private tent, in which was laid out a splendid champagne luncheon. Bro. Plock, with one of his cooks and a numerous staff of waiters, personally attended to the wants of the hungry brethren. The Stafford contingent having come to Alton as it were in a hurry, had not "provided for a rainy day, so the Derbyshire brethren gave them an invitation to luncheon, which they cordially accepted. Before our Derbyshire brethren had finished they were visited by the Earl of Shrewsbury, Lord Ingestre, and the Americans.—Bro. Crossley proposed the health of the Earl of Shrewsbury, to which his Lordship replied.—An American brother then gave "The Countess of Shrewsbury," which was acknowledged by Lord Ingestre. One of the American "Legation" then sang "The Star Spangled Banner," with the following additional verse, composed by Bro. Walter Montgomery, specially referring to that day's proceedings:—

"See our Eagle so free, and old England's brave Lion, Henceforth and for ever in amity blending,
Since the treaty is sealed 'twixt the sire and the scion,
With the blessing of heaven aye surely attending;
Then let Britain's sweet shamrock, leek, thistle, and rose,

Those time-honoured emblems, for ever repose
With the star-spangled banner, oh! long may it wave
O'er the home of the free and the land of the brave.

The Americans then demanded "God save the Queen," which was sung by Bro. Naylor, and heartily joined in. The Americans in giving cheers for the Earl and Countess of Shrewsbury, responded to the cry of "Tiger, tiger," made by one of the brethren. The party then returned to the hall and witnessed the presentation of prizes by Lady Shrewsbury.

WE have pleasure in being authorised to announce that a marriage has been arranged between Bro. the Right Hon. the Earl of Breadalbane and Lady Alma-Imogen-Leonora-Carlotta Graham, youngest daughter of His Grace the Duke of Montrose. Lady Alma was born in 1854, and is therefore about 17 years of age.

PROSPECTUS.
 An advantageous Contract has been concluded for the purchase, free from incumbrance, of the Alexandra Palace Park and Lands adjoining, situate at Muswell Hill, Hornsey, in the county of Middlesex, (comprising about 470 acres of Freehold and 28 acres of Leasehold Land), and the contents of the Palace, for the sum of £675,000. Of this amount £450,000 may remain on security of the Property for 5 years, represented by Mortgage and Debentures. Power is taken to raise further capital not exceeding £150,000, if deemed desirable, for the improvement or enlargement of the property and for the benefit of the Tontine.

The object of the Tontine is to complete the purchase and improve the property, and thus to provide for all classes of the inhabitants of the Metropolis, and especially of its northern and eastern portions and suburbs, and for the many thousands of country excursionists, a Grand Institution of healthful recreation and elevating instruction, which will combine the solid advantages of the South Kensington Museum and Schools of Art, with the lighter pleasure and pastimes of the Crystal Palace at Sydenham, thus giving effect to the large and enlightened views of the late Prince Consort.

In furtherance of this design it is proposed to inaugurate a series of Exhibitions, Art Unions, and distributions, to the support of which, and as soon as the necessary power can be obtained for the purpose it is proposed that the chief portion of the profits of the Park and Palace, after making proper provision for management, improvement, and other charges, should be applied.

Under "The Muswell Hill Estate and Railway Act 1866" the Palace and about 200 acres (which then constituted the Grounds) are to continue a place of public resort and recreation, subject to the observance of such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the owners, and to the payment of such reasonable sums as may be fixed for admission to the Grounds and Palace or to any exhibition or sights therein.

It is now intended to enlarge the Park, and to lay out the whole of the lands as pleasure grounds, with the exception of about 80 acres of beautiful freehold land on the border, which will be reserved for building purposes, so that there will be a Park surrounding the Palace, and within a ring fence, of about 400 acres in extent. But power is taken with the consent of the Trustees to sell or lease for building purposes any part of this land not subject to the provisions of the Act of 1866, should such a course appear desirable in the interest of the Tontineers or subscribers.

The Palace is a splendid, capacious, and substantial structure, requiring but a comparatively small outlay to keep it in repair, admirably adapted for Exhibitions, Museums, and Lectures, and for Musical Festivals and Concerts, as well as for festive and social gatherings of the greatest magnitude.

A grand organ, which is reputed to be one of the largest and most perfect in the world, has been erected in the Palace by Mr. Willis, under the direction of Sir Michael Costa.

Archery, Cricket, and Croquet Lawns, Turfed Rides, a Race Course with Grand Stand, well levelled Carriage Drives, Groves and Gardens, will be found in the Park, which is nobly timbered, and commands extensive and magnificent views into several counties. This Institution, therefore, which can be opened to the public in a very short space of time, will combine the advantages afforded by museums, exhibitions, and schools of art, with scenery of the utmost beauty, and pure air, thus contributing alike to the instruction, amusement, and health of the visitor.

There will be easy access to the Palace by railway communications in connection with the Great Northern and Metropolitan Lines, and a Bill is waiting the Royal Assent for authorising the construction of a short line to connect the Park with the Midland and Great Eastern systems. The committee will have power to aid these enterprises, which are of great importance to the success of this undertaking.

The Exhibitions and Art Union Distributions will constitute a distinctive feature of the general plan, and will comprise every characteristic of the Fine Arts. An Inaugural Exhibition will be held as soon as the requisite powers are obtained.

It is intended to apply to Parliament for power to devote part or the whole of the surplus income to Art Union Distributions, to be held every third year during the term of the Tontine, and to appropriate a number or chance in each Distribution to every Certificate in respect of every 21s. paid thereon. It is estimated that the fund for distribution will amount triennially to £100,000, and the prizes will range from £500 to £2.

The following Table indicates what any Certificate holder may derive from this source.

The value represented by the Prize Tickets is to be applied wholly in the selection of articles contained in the Alexandra Art Union Exhibitions, and it will be seen that it is possible for the holder of a single right Certificate to receive Five Prizes of £500 each for his investment of 21s.

The Certificates will be issued under the powers of the Trust-Deed, which will define and regulate the rights and privileges of the Certificate Holders, and a covenant will be contained therein on their part to observe the provisions of the Deed.

The whole of the net income of the Tontine during its existence will be applied as above explained, to the improvement of the property and to Art Union Distributions.

An established Insurance Company has agreed, in consideration of the payment to them of a premium of one shilling for every A (or singleright) Certificate, and so on in proportion for any plural rights certificate (i.e., one shilling for each right), to pay to the holder £1 for each guinea paid on such Certificate, upon the death of the representative life in respect of which the Tontine privileges depend, if such death happens before the 30th June, 1886, provided such Certificate shall not have been previously surrendered, or the bearer of such Certificate for the time being shall not have drawn a prize in an Art Union Distribution in respect of the right representing such guinea. Such premium will be paid out of the Tontine Funds. The agreement is subject to 20,000 representative lives being nominated.

For the purposes of the Insurance and Tontine, every applicant for a Certificate must when requested nominate some life (which may be his own) between the ages of ten and thirty years; such lives should not be those of prominent individuals, but, if possible, of members of the applicant's family, or friends. Applicants may nominate a life for each right the certificate they apply for represents. If the applicant chooses to waive the insurance he may nominate any life.

To meet the case of any selected life having been previously nominated and assured to the amount of £500, an applicant may be required to furnish some other life or lives in substitution for that first nominated.

Upon the 30th June, 1886, the Tontine will absolutely cease; and as soon as may be after that date the whole of the property will be realised, and the net proceeds will be distributed amongst the Tontineers or Certificate holders.

The holder of an A, or single right Certificate, in addition to his other privileges, will be entitled to free admission to the Park (and also to the Palace, if open) upon every Sunday during the existence of the Tontine.

The holder of a B, or 10 right Certificate, will, in addition, be entitled to free admission on two days (not being fête days), to be fixed by the Committee in each week.

The holder of a C, or 25 right Certificate, will be entitled to similar privileges for himself and another, on foot or on horseback.

The holder of a D, or 50 right Certificate, will be entitled to free admission on four days in each week (not being fête days), to be fixed by the Committee, for himself and two others, either on foot, horseback, or with a single-horse carriage.

The holder of an E, or 100 right Certificate, will be entitled to free admission for himself and four other persons, at all times, either on foot, horseback, or with any carriage.

The Tontine rights and privileges attaching to certain Certificates may, at the option of the holder, be surrendered for the right of admission on other days, according to a plan or scale to be published by the Executive Committee. The surrender will involve the loss of every right and privilege offered in this Prospectus to the holders of Certificates, except so far as the same are reserved as part of the consideration for the surrender.

The holder of a Certificate which shall not have been surrendered, will be entitled to participate in the proceeds of the property at the end of the Tontine, in respect of every right depending on a representative life which shall be living on the 30th June, 1886.

Thus every subscriber of 21s. and upwards to the Tontine, or holder for the time being of his Certificate (the same not having been previously surrendered) will, in addition to the privileges of entry to the Park and Palace, as above enumerated, obtain the repayment, in case of the death of the representative life or lives of 20s. in respect of every 21s. paid by such subscriber, or will have previously drawn a prize of at least £2 in the Art Union Distribution in respect of such 21s. subscription, and will, when the Tontine ceases, have, in respect of each of his rights of which the representative life shall be then in existence, the right to a share in the proceeds of the Tontine property. Looking at the rapidly increasing value of Building Land near London there can be no doubt that at the expiration of the Tontine, in 15 years, the property to be then distributed amongst the holders of Certificates entitled to participate will be of enormous value.

For the convenience of management of the Tontine and property, and with that object only, a Company (limited by guarantee) has been incorporated by the title of "The Alexandra Palace and Muswell Hill Estate Management Company Limited." The Executive Committee of the Tontine are the Directors of that Company. The certificate holders will not be members or contributories of such Company.

All the landed property to be acquired for the purposes of the Tontine, will be vested in the Trustees upon trust, to permit the Management Company to manage the same, and with the consent of the Trustees, so far as required by the Trust Deed, to grant leases and deal therewith for the benefit of the general undertaking, and raise further capital, not exceeding £150,000, if required, for the undertaking by mortgage or debentures (in addition to the working Capital provided by the Tontine), and upon the termination of the Tontine (the 30th of June, 1886), or so soon after as may be convenient, to sell the Tontine property and distribute the proceeds.

By the terms of the Trust Deed all questions (if any) which may arise relating to the Tontine, during its existence or on its termination, stand referred to such counsel as the Attorney-General for the time being may appoint.

The Purchase Contract, the Trust Deed, the Insurance Contract, and the Memorandum and Articles of Association of the Management Company may be perused at the offices of the Solicitors.

If no issue is made the subscriptions will be returned in full.

The following documents have been executed:—

- (1) An Agreement, dated 13th July, 1871, between the Muswell Hill Estate Company Limited and the Alexandra Palace Company Limited of the one part, and the Alexandra Palace and Muswell Hill Estate Management Company Limited of the other part.

- (3) A Deed of Covenant, dated 13th July, 1871, between the London and Lancashire Life Assurance Company of the one part, and the Alexandra Palace and Muswell Hill Estate Management Company Limited of the other part.

Prospectuses (with an outline sketch of the Palace) and forms of application for Certificates may be obtained of the Secretary, at the offices of the Tontine, and of the Brokers.

Other Agencies for the receipt of Applications will be shortly advertised.

Applications for Certificates must be left with the Bankers at the time of payment of the deposit, and no application will be noticed unless the sum of 21s., in respect of each single right, or the amounts specified for plural rights applied for, as above stated, shall have been paid.

CONTINENTAL EDUCATION.

The Rev. WALTER HARDIE, B.A.,

RECEIVES into his family a few Pupils, who enjoy the special advantages of residence in France for learning the Continental Languages, while their general education is conducted on the English system.

Mr. HARDIE's plan is to spend the Spring and Autumn in Paris, and the Winter in Nice. The Session begins in the first week in September and ends in the first week in June. Nearly four months of this period are spent in Paris, so that Pupils have ample opportunity for acquiring the Parisian accent. The mild climate of Nice, on the sunny shores of the Mediterranean, renders it a most desirable place of residence during the winter season.

Should residence in Paris be impracticable this year, owing to political disturbance, the neighbourhood of Geneva will be selected. Mr. Hardie undertakes all Classical, Mathematical, and English studies, and personally superintends the tuition, by the best native masters, in French, German, Italian, and Spanish, in order that these languages may be thoroughly learnt and fluently spoken. The course of instruction may be modified to suit the wishes of parents and the aptitude of pupils.

In those cases where parents desire their sons to become acquainted with the Principles of Art and the remains of antiquity, by visiting Italy and the adjacent countries, Mr. Hardie will accompany and instruct them.

Special attention is given to Religious and Social culture, while health and happiness are sedulously cared for in all domestic arrangements.

TERMS for the whole Session, including ENGLISH, CLASSICS, MATHEMATICS, and two of the CONTINENTAL LANGUAGES, £120, payable half-yearly in advance.

BEAUTIFUL EXTRACT.

Grand is the wisdom of Masonry in her multifarious contrivances for the fraternization of the races, the diffusion of truth, the exercise of a world-wide philanthropy, the promotion of love and good-will among men, and the liberating of mind from the shackles of gross sensuality and lamentable ignorance. Her foundations were laid in the council chambers of Eternal Goodness; and from before the time when angels sang the birth-song of creation, until the present, generation after generation, have been added to the superstructure in process of erection on that base of everlasting truth; though multiplied thousands of courses have been laid by good and true workmen in the buried centuries of the past; yet, as higher and higher rise her walls, as more and more perfectly is seen the grand outline of this magnificent temple, more and more evident is the wisdom that devised and the strength that executes so god-like a mission. Conceived in Wisdom, resting on Truth, cemented with Love, and banded by Faith, Hope and Charity, it stands erect, clear and firm as the eternal granite. When Time was born, it was. Nations have arisen and fallen; empires have been born, lived, died and are buried; mighty coalitions have been formed and broken; inventions have been made and forgotten; arts have been discovered and lost; floods have desolated, fires consumed, sickness blasted, death devoured; and yet through all these mighty changes and these mutations, the principles of Masonry have survived, resisting all the elements of disorganization and decay, unaffected by surrounding changes or untoward events; she greets us in this afternoon of the nineteenth century with undimmed eye, with unflinching step, and in the completeness of her perfected majority.—Ar. B. Kendig.

FREEMASONRY & ISRAELITISM.

BY BRO. WILLIAM CARPENTER, P.M. & P.Z. 177.

x.

We now proceed to consider the several and diversified prophecies and promises pertaining to the ten tribes of Israel, after their captivity in Assyria and Media, embracing the region lying between the two seas, the Caspian and the Euxine, and which indicate, more or less clearly, their future destiny as the heirs of the promises made to Abraham, and confirmed to succeeding patriarchs.

I. The first thing that strikes one, in reviewing these prophecies, is the entrance of Israel into certain islands—THE islands. The forty-first chapter of Isaiah most graphically describes Israel's position, and the manner in which they obtained it, combined with visions of its high mission and future glory, with a declaration of the Source of its might, the Author of its success, and an exhibition of the false pretences and vanity of idols. The chapter opens with a command, that the people of these islands should keep silence—that is, should be quiet, should rest, that they might renew their strength, after their long wandering and continuous conflicts—"Let them draw near, and let them speak; let us enter into solemn debate together." After this command and invitation, the people, in their conquest of the islands, are described under the figure of a righteous man; for, as promised to this same house of Israel, the Lord was to bring His righteousness near, because Israel was his glory (chap. xlvii. 13). Here, then, is the manner of Israel's acquiring the islands:—"Who raised up the righteous man from the East, called him to attend his steps; subdued the nations before him, and gave him dominion over kings [or rulers]? He made them as dust to his sword, and as driven stubble to his bow. He pursued them, and passed safely by a way never trodden before with his foot. Who hath wrought and done these things, calling the generations from the beginning? I, Jehovah, the first; and with the last; I am He." Then we have a description of the fear created by the presence of these warlike people: "The isles saw it and feared; the ends of the earth were afraid, drew near and came. They helped every one his neighbour, and said to his brother, Be of good courage; the carpenter encouraged the goldsmith; he that smootheneth with the hammer, him that smote on the anvil, saying, It is ready for the soldering; and he fixeth the idol with nails, that it should not be removed." Then Israel, "the seed of Abraham and Jacob," here called "The Lord's servant," who had been called forth from the ends of the earth, were strengthened with the assurance that God had chosen them, would be with them, would help them, and would uphold them with the right hand of His righteousness, so that all who should engage against them should become ashamed and confounded, and should be as nothing—as a thing of nought."

Let us now see in how far the peopling of these islands by the Anglo-Saxon branch of the Getæ answers to this prophetic description. "The islands," says Dr. Hyde Clarke (Comp. Philology), "seem to have been first settled by the great Euskardian or Iberian stock, belonging to the Ugo-Tartarian, which once spread over Western Europe, and of which all that is left are the Basques in Spain, unless the Fins of several kinds are also to be reckoned; and unless, in the West of Ireland, some Iberian blood still lingers under the name of Spanish, as the common belief there is. The Iberians were slaughtered or driven out of Britain by the Celts; but in the time of the Romans, the Silures in South Wales still had a Spanish look, as Tacitus tell us. The Celts were yielding before inroads of the Belgians in Britain and Ireland, when the Romans made themselves masters of the islands, and for a time stayed the downfall of the Celts. In the fifth century after Christ, however, the Roman might tottered, the Germani rushed on the Roman Empire, and swept all before them. In these islands, the Celts threw off the Roman yoke, but not long to hold the sway; for the northern Germani of English kin came over the North Sea, and began to settle on the eastern shore, slowly spreading themselves till all the islands fell under their yoke." As the same writer observes, "In the Roman time, the Saxons and Frisians who were on the west side of Jutland made their first inroads, and hence the Celts called all the Germanic comers Saxons, as the Welsh, Irish, and Highlanders now do. The Frisians, Saxons, and Jutes seem to have been among the first who made good their landing, and set up their commonwealths; but the English, or Angles, passing from their seat in the east of Jutland to the west, soon took the leadership, and the names of the other Germani were lost in theirs, giving to the land, folk, speech, and laws, the name of English. The old, or first, Danes seem to have been near akin to the English, as were the Jutes, Vandals, and Bructwara; and all of these had more or less share in the first settlement. Under the name of English, all England, to the north of the Thames and up to the highlands of Wales and Scotland, was filled by them."

I now invite a comparison of the slight sketch I have given of the occupation of England by the Anglo-Saxons, and of the prophetic description of the conquests and occupation of the islands given by Isaiah. I cannot but think that if the metaphorical and symbolical style of the prophet be borne in mind, it will at once be seen that the description which the pen of history has given of the occupation of this land by the Anglo-Saxons and their kindred tribes, answers very closely to that which the pen of inspiration has portrayed; that we have, in fact, in our own early history, in Britain, the exact counterpart of the sketch given by the prophet to the symbolic righteous man; that is, the people employed as the intruments of God's righteous purpose to suppress idolatry, and to make Himself known as the only true God and the governor of the world. They were to be given possession of the islands in the midst of the sea—the most eligible spot from which to send forth into all the world that knowledge, and the blessings which that knowledge always carries with it. That England is the place described, is shown by other passages in the prophetic pages. Where is Tarshish, whose great ships, and merchants, and merchandises are so often spoken of in connection with Israel? There were more than one place bearing this name; but that one of them was a place of considerable importance for its mercantile wealth, large ships, and distant voyages, with vessels whose sails, like the white wings of doves—the symbols of peace and protection—cover with their shadow the width and breadth of the ocean. is certain. Ezekiel (xxxviii. 12) mentions it in connection with Sheba and Dedan, and speaks of its gold, and silver, and dyed goods, as though a hostile people might look there for "great spoil"; and, what is very remarkable, he speaks of the young lions belonging to Sheba and Dedan and Tarshish, as if all were closely connected. Whether Dedan is a port in the Persian Gulf, as has been supposed, we cannot be certain; but that Sheba is India and Tarshish England seems beyond doubt. What land but this is a large naval and mercantile power—a nation of merchants—a land rich in metals, and cloth, and cunning workmanship? What land but England has a lion for its symbol? what land but India young lions? "Be still, thou inhabitants of the isle, whom the merchants of Zidon (the Phœnicians) have replenished" (Isa. xxiii. 2). This island, with its dependencies, including India, was to be possessed by Israel. Every opposing force was to be overcome. Notwithstanding that every man should help his neighbour, and every one exhort his brother to be of good courage, so that their confidence should become so great, that in face of the impending danger, the makers of idols—the carpenter and the goldsmith—should pursue their work, completing the idol, and so fixing it as to defy removal, they should all become as dust to the sword of the invader, and as stubble to his bow; and all the kings or rulers should be overthrown and removed, for Israel was the Lord's servant, whom he had chosen, even the seed of Abraham his friend; whom he had called from the ends of the earth, for the accomplishment of this necessary work—necessary in order to fulfil His final purpose, of making known His name and salvation throughout the world. In the accomplishment of this great mission, all obstacles were to be overcome, all difficulties to be surmounted, all opposition to be put down; for, "I, the Lord, will strengthen thee, I will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not, for I will help thee. And then, the work being so far accomplished, possession of the islands having been obtained, they are commanded to keep silence. As He elsewhere commands: "Be still, and know that I am God. I will be exalted among the heathen; I will be exalted in the earth" (Psalm xlvi. 10). "For thus saith the Lord God, the Holy One of Israel: In returning and abiding quiet shall you be saved; in quietness and confidence shall be your strength."

The first step has been secured. Israel had been for ages making his way hither, through difficulties and dangers which threatened his extinction, but being sustained by Him who had promised deliverance from all evil, and who was to employ him for bringing back from idolatry and all its horrible accompaniments, the nations and peoples, and subduing them by the light and power of His truth, he had been made to "stand in the evil day, and having done all to stand;" and now, renewing his strength, he was presently to gird up his loins and pursue his high and holy mission, in making His name known and His Fatherhood acknowledged, "from the rising of the sun to the going down thereof;" for "Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified" (Isaiah xlix 3).

THE PLAIN OF PHILISTIA.

BY CAPTAIN WARREN, R.E.

We were out from sunrise to sunset every day, but we did not suffer from the heat, though it was often up to 100° in the shade during the afternoon; in the night time it was comparatively cool, going down to near 70°, except during the siroccos.

May 24, 1867.—We left Jerusalem on a month's tour in the Plains of Philistia, intending to try and photograph the monuments in the mosque at Hebron, and we were provided with letters from the Pacha of Jerusalem for that purpose. We travelled with much pomp and ceremony to Hebron, being accompanied by a lieutenant and four zaptis, who were to secure us admission to the mosque. The result of this expedition is described page 39 Recovery of Jerusalem. I had had a sharp attack of fever on 22nd May, and only got out of bed to get on horseback. Corporal Phillips also caught the fever on our arrival at Hebron, but our ride down to Gaza, where we arrived May 29, brought us round again. Riding all day in a hot summer's sun is a queer remedy for fever, but I have tried it more than once with success.

On our way down we met women in the villages acting the part of mourners. The conscription was going on, there husbands were being taken away. Soldiers, they say, never return to their native villages, so they are mourned as dead men, and the widows marry again shortly.

May 30.—I had been requested to proceed a few miles S.E. of Gaza in search of the Tels Jema and Gerar, supposed to be the ruins of the city Gerar (Gen. xxvi.), and spoken of by several authors as having been discovered by the Rev. J. Rowlands, in Van de Velde's Memoir (1858), p. 115 we have the following:—"Um el Jerar, the site of Gerar, at the foot of Tel Jema in Wady-el-Adar, recognised by a few scattered stones in the vicinity of some fine springs, was therefore laid down in our maps according to the information of the natives."

On making enquiries I easily learnt the position of Tel Jema, and the only difficulty in the way was the permanently unsettled state of the country about this borderland, which being almost common ground, appears to be constantly liable to raids from tribes from the south. Just now, the wheat having been recently gathered, there were many wandering bands of strange Bedouin about, who appeared to sniff our two zaptis from afar and long to punish them.

On making arrangements for passing a night at Tel Jema, our zaptis broke out in mutiny; so paying off the most blustering, we set off with the remaining man, a black, ordering the muleteers to encamp beside the "fine springs" at Gerar or Tel Jema.

We soon left Gaza behind us and entered upon a rolling plain covered here and there with a stubble of the wheat. The natives of these parts are roving farmers—a turbulent lot of a nondescript race, who are constantly in trouble either with the local government or with their own allies, the Bedouins; every now and then compelled to build themselves villages, they are again rendered homeless by the raids from the south, and thus being constantly exposed to dangers from all sides, they are somewhat reckless in their behaviour, and it is not uncommon to hear that the soldiers of Gaza have been ordered out against them. Still they appear to thrive and to be well-to-do, no doubt partly on account of the richness of the soil, but partly by doing a little foraging on their own account and putting it down to the Bedouin, or else by acting as "jackals" in the raids which are sometimes made on the villages of the fat Philistian plains.

Their land may—must—be very productive, but as we wander on up and down the wady banks and over the swelling hills, it appears to be a series of semi or wholly barren wastes, interspersed with sand-hills on which linger a few solitary fir trees, though in the far west, on the sea coast, may be seen clusters of date palms around the villages, with the line of telegraph wires from Gaza to Alexandria, rudely preventing our losing ourselves in thoughts of the past.

I had always pictured to myself a peculiar region for the scene of Isaac's life, perhaps from its name of Goshen corresponding with the name of the fertile Egyptian tract (Gen. xlvii. 11), "the best of the land," something to compensate for the difficulty of his position. But there is nothing at the present day to bear out the idea, and it strengthens our opinion of his obedience to the Divine command when we find how he gave up the pleasures of freedom, of a wandering life, or of settling in a country like the rich plains to the north of Gaza, in order to dwell in this tame and monotonous solitude. Perhaps to his gentle and peaceful nature there may have been something congenial in the character of this country, but to a European it simply presents the disadvantages of a desert and settled life without the joys of either.

We had not advanced far into the plain before we came across Wady Sheriah, and I became aware that this portion of Van de Velde's map, put in on Bedouin authority, was hopelessly in error; but I found little chance of correcting it, for there are few prominent points, and one sand-hill is the veritable twin brother of the next, and so on. After travelling south from Gaza, about eight miles, we came full in front of Tel Jema on the south side of Wady Gusseh, having to its west a little patch of cultivated ground on which melons were growing. But where are our tents, and where are the fine springs of Gerar? Mafish, Mafish; nothing but Tel Jema and its melon beds. The Tel itself is a mound similar to those of Jericho, the Jordan, and Arak Menshiyeh, artificial and covered with pottery and broken glass; and no doubt marks the site of some ancient stronghold or city. I now inquired from the natives for other ruins, but they denied there being any nearer than Sbeta, or any water either, except Tel Sheriah, where they say there are streams of water. Is not this latter likely to be the looked-for Gerar seen by Mr. Rowlands? At Tel Jema itself they said they obtained their water from Tel Ajur, on the sea-coast, the mouth of the Wady Guzzeh, and there we were directed to proceed, as being the only place where our tents could be pitched. There are here a lagoon and some springs of medicinal water, very nasty to the taste, but just the very stuff to carry off the ill effects of our fever, and we returned to Gaza next day nearly well. On our road through the sand-hills we came across a great lizard, looking like a small crocodile; we gave chase and ran it to bay under a little sand cleft. On going up to it, it puffed itself out, and opened its mouth so wide that we stood around not venturing to touch the beast, and eventually stunned it by swinging a leaden plumb-bob on to his head; we then tied him hand and foot and fastened him on the rug behind the saddle of the dragoman, who was rather nervous about his companion coming suddenly to life again. We then rode on to Gaza, and met a good many Bedouin on the road, who shouted out after us "Warren! Warren!" It did not strike me at first as odd, but when they all began shouting out my name we were a good deal puzzled. On getting into camp we tied the beast, now quite lively again, to a stake in the ground, and let him get in the shade under the lee of my tent. The townspeople soon began to flock around us, and I heard repeated exclamations of "Warren!" and on going out to see the reason, found them pointing to the lizard, and discovered that I had a namesake inhabitant of the desert. This animal is well known on the banks of the Nile, but I am not aware that it has been seen in Syria before by Europeans, and as I was anxious to get him forwarded to England, I sent him in a cage to Dr. Chaplin, at Jerusalem, who identified him as the Nile lizard; he was taken to be examined by some of the English residents, but after getting into a harmonium and refusing to be dislodged for some time, it was considered desirable to return him to the care of Sergeant Birtles, who was encamped outside the town. He thrived very well until a certain Sunday morning, when he was tied hand and foot and put into a pit so as to be very safe, and a Nubian guard was told to watch that he did not escape. On return from church he was not to be found, and nothing was heard of him for three years. When we were leaving Jerusalem in 1870, we learnt that this animal, when cooked, is a very favourite dish of the Nubians; and that some Nubian friends of our black guard having come to visit him, they had together regaled themselves on my unfortunate namesake.

At Gaza we were encamped under an aged tamarisk tree (see No. 255 photo.). I paid a visit to the governor, who gave me leave to visit the mosques, and served me with the best cup of coffee I have tasted in Syria. The old church, described by Porter, is worth a visit. On one of the white marble columns in the nave is a Jewish seven-branched candlestick sculptured; it was out of our reach, but there is no doubt about its existence; it is on a square of about six inches. Some of the columns appear to be of granite. We could find no vestige of ancient Gaza outside the city. 3rd June, left Askelon, thirteen miles in a straight line. At the present port to N.W. were bones and jars collected ready for exportation, and a few coasting boats in the offing. Passing over the drift sand we came here and there to craters, thirty to forty feet deep, at the bottom of which would be growing a fig or an apple tree laden with fruit.

CIRCULAR ON INTEMPERANCE.

Office of the G.M. of the State of Ohio,
Toledo, January 9th, A.L. 5871.

To the W.M., Wardens, and Brethren of Lodge
No. —.

Brethren,—At the last session of the Grand Lodge of Ohio, begun and held in the city of Springfield, October 18th, A.L. 5870, the select committee, to whom was referred so much of the M.W. Grand Master's address as relates to intemperance and profanity, submitted a report, which was unanimously adopted, as follows:—

"That those vices have become alarming and painfully prevalent, even among the members of our Ancient and Honourable Fraternity, marring the beauty and harmony of our lodges, producing discord, inalienation, and moral declension, at war with the very elementary principles on which the whole fabric of the Masonic Institution is based. Every Masonic brother, by the tenure of his profession, is bound to obey the moral law, and what said that law: 'Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain, for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh His name in vain.' In the first step which a man takes, at the very entrance of the vestibule of the Temple, with what solemnity is he charged, among other duties, that which he owes to his God—never to mention his name but with that reverential awe which is due from a creature to his Creator, to implore His aid in all his laudable undertakings, and to esteem Him as the chief good. Again, as he ascends another step towards the Inner Temple, what brilliant hieroglyphics arrest his attention, up towards which all eyes are turned in mute and reverend awe. And can even an Entered Apprentice profane that sacred name by imprecating its curse upon himself, or upon his fellow-man? How much more a Master Mason, whose feet have trodden the sanctum sanctorum, or Holy of Holies. Drunkenness is a vice of most hideous mien, brutalizing the physical man, and rendering him an object of contempt and detestation, mingled with pity. Alas! how many even of our brethren—generous, noble, and gifted—have fallen victims to this insatiable vice, and are now mouldering in dishonoured graves, or hastening with trembling strides in the same broad road to destruction and death, unhonoured and unwept, save by the grief-stricken, heart-broken wife and helpless orphans, or the doting mother, on whose maternal breast he in youth pillowed his boyish head. Your committee deem it unnecessary to elaborate the evils resulting from these unmasonic vices, not only to the Fraternity of which they were once honoured and beloved members, but by their vicious example in the community where their vices are practised. Your committee recommend for adoption the following: 'Resolved—That the M.W. Grand Master be, and he is hereby authorised, and it is made his duty, to issue a circular to be addressed to the subordinate lodges of this jurisdiction, enjoining the Masters of the several lodges to action in these premises, by all the powers of moral suasion and brotherly kindness, to arrest the evil, and, in the last resort, to cut off the persistently offending members as cancerous excrescences on the body of Masonry.'

Brethren.—Freemasonry is based upon the practice of virtuous principles, inculcating the highest standard of moral excellence; morality is its foundation and chief corner-stone. Every Mason should be a moral man; no member of our Fraternity;

however depraved or debased he may be, will for a moment dare to deny this fact, and yet how many, knowing their duty, as Masons, to the moral law, practise what they profess? Our Institution has suffered more through our own negligence in allowing so much immorality amongst our members than from all the anathemas that ever, from ignorance or fanatical bigotry, have been hurled against it. Its enemies, through our own inconsiderate acts of imprudence and negligence, have been furnished the weapons to assail it, and we have thereby weakened the means of our own defence. A man addicted to deliberate profanity, intemperance, gambling, or any other licentious habit or vice, is not a proper person for reception into the Fraternity, much less to be a member thereof, unless he reforms immediately, for such a person may with just propriety be classed as an irreligious libertine—his habits would at least entitle him to that credit. An institution where the purest of morals are taught, where reverence to the High and Holy God is enjoined, should never be contaminated with impure and defiled elements. Good men and true revolt at it, honour and honesty forbid it, and Divine justice will sooner or later demand full retribution for all such delinquencies. We have nothing to fear from outside pressure; the powers of the Church and State, with the feeble breath of the fanatic, have been hurled, time and again, against our noble and time-honoured Institution, and yet it occupies a stronger, a nobler, and higher position throughout the world than ever before, and so it will ever continue to do if you will only be just, and practise outside the lodge those noble precepts we are taught in it. It must be apparent to the mind of a reflecting and considerate Mason that his obligations are of a most serious nature, that he has voluntarily, and of his own free will and accord, assumed duties and responsibilities which require him to obey both Divine and moral law; and the nature of these responsibilities he cannot—nay, he dare not—with impunity disregard. His duty to his God, his neighbour, his lodge, and to himself and family, requires not only that he should obey it, but that he should use all means in his power to enforce obedience to the law from every member of his lodge. Every institution, and more particularly ours, is judged by its individual members. If any of our members are intemperate, profane, or immoral men, our Order must, to a great extent, suffer for their actions. A great responsibility rests upon the Master of a lodge. He should at least be possessed of all the cardinal virtues—temperance, fortitude, prudence, and justice. How can the Master of a lodge teach morality and virtue, and expect his members to follow those teachings, when, perhaps, he is intemperate, profane, licentious, and immoral in his habits? If so, he is false to his God, false to himself and his lodge, violating his obligation, violating the promises he made at his installation. He stands before the lodge a perjured man. Such a man is unworthy the name of a Mason, and ought not to be allowed to preside over a lodge of Masons. He cannot expect obedience to our laws from his members if he violates those laws with impunity. A man ought not to be a Master over others who is not master over his own habits and passions. Such a Master would not be the proper person to enforce this edict of the Grand Lodge, unless he immediately reform, and if he does not reform, upon proper information being sent to me, I will deem it my duty to immediately suspend him from office, as being unworthy and incapable of diffusing that light and knowledge due from a Master to his lodge, and I hope no brother, through fear or favour, will hesitate to inform me if the Master of his lodge is profane, intemperate, or guilty of any licentious or immoral habits. It is a duty every good man owes to himself and his lodge to see that none be elected to office but good men and true. To the end that our Institution does not suffer by the election to office of men who will bring censure and reproach upon our Order, it is necessary that we should commence at the Master of the lodge. If he is a moral man he can command the respect and esteem of his brethren; if he is immoral, the first thing to be done will be to relieve him from office. And it is hereby made the imperative duty of the Masters of the several lodges in our jurisdiction, and they are hereby ordered and enjoined, to use all the powers of moral suasion, brotherly love, and kindness to induce the erring brothers to reform; use all the arguments and entreaties in your power, talk to him as you would to your own brother or your only son, as you would like to have others talk to you if you were in danger. Point the brother who indulges in intoxicating liquor to the danger he is in, to the serpent he is handling, to the fire that is slowly but surely consuming his vitals, destroying his intellect, debasing his manhood. No man can indulge in the use of liquor, and be safe. If he is a moderate drinker, as some call it, it only takes a little more time; the fangs of the serpent will soon strike home. No man of good sense will say that the use of liquor is a benefit to himself or his family. Then why use it? Let each and every one of us who have the interest of Masonry at heart raise his warning voice against this foul monster, this demon intemperance, who is destroying its victims by thousands daily. How many of our brethren, otherwise noble, brave, and generous, are slowly but surely hastening on to destruction by the aid of this most deadly poison! Brethren, you who indulge in the use of it, pause for a moment, reflect on what you are doing, ask yourself if the course you are pursuing will make you happy; will it reflect credit upon the Institution, will it make your friends and family happy to know that one you love so dearly is hastening slowly but surely to a drunkard's grave? This may, to some of our brethren, seem a little too plain and strong language to use, but the disease requires a prompt and sure remedy; no other will restore the patient to health. And the Masters of the several lodges in our jurisdiction are hereby ordered to enforce this edict of the Grand Lodge to the very letter, against every offending brother who is guilty of intemperance, profanity, or any immoral or licentious habits. The indulgence of those vices not only tends to bring disgrace and dishonour upon the guilty brother, but it casts a stain upon, and he becomes a cancer on, the body of Masonry, and it can only be removed by his immediate reformation or expulsion from the Fraternity. One or the other must be done. It will not make any difference how high or how low a position the brother may occupy in community or in our Order. If guilty of violating the moral law, which is the very cement and support of our Institution, he must suffer the penalty. Every Master and member of our Order in this State will be held to a strict account in the enforcement of this edict. If it should strike from the rolls of the several lodges one-third, or even half, of its membership who will not conform to the law, let it be done. We are making too many members and too few Masons.

Let every Master and member do their duty in this. I assure you I will not hesitate to do my part of the work in enforcing this law, even to arresting the charter of any lodge in the State that fails to enforce this rule against every offending brother, and the suspension of the Master of any of the several lodges who fails to comply with or enforce this edict. The time has arrived that requires immediate and prompt action by all good Masons to arrest and stop those vices. It is hereby ordered that this circular be frequently read in the several lodges in this State, that none may plead ignorance of it. The law is plain and clear; but one course to pursue, if the guilty will not immediately reform; it is the Master's duty to appoint a committee to prefer charges and expel, for unmasonic conduct, all who will not conform to the law, to the end that the honour and reputation of our Fraternity may be firmly established, and the world at large convinced of its good effect.

Given under my hand, and the private seal of the Grand Master, the day and year above written,

ALEX. H. NEWCOMB,
Grand Master of Masons in Ohio.

GRAND CHAPTER OF ENGLAND.

The following is the report of the Committee of General Purposes, which will be read at the Grand Chapter Convocation on Wednesday next:—

The Committee of General Purposes beg to report that they have examined the accounts from the 19th April, 1871, to the 17th July, 1871, both inclusive, which they find to be as follows:—

To balance 19th April	..	..	£416	12	7
„ subsequent receipts	..	..	251	9	0
			£668	1	7
By disbursements during the quarter			£123	6	8
„ purchase of £200 Consols, at 93½ and Commission	..	..	187	10	0
„ Balance	..	..	357	4	11
			£668	1	7

which balance is in the hands of Messrs. Willis, Percival and Co., bankers of the Grand Treasurer.

The Committee have likewise to report that they have received the following petitions:—

1st. From Comps. George William Russell as Z., William Pearl as H., John William Minchin as J., and nine others, for a chapter to be attached to the Lodge Faith, Hope, and Charity, No. 1285, Ootacamund, Madras, to be called "The Excelsior Chapter," and to meet at Ootacamund.

2nd. From Comps. the Right Hon. Earl Vane as Z., James Kench as H., Henry William Lindus as J., and six others, for a chapter to be attached to the Lodge La Tolerance, No. 538, London, to be called "The Vane Chapter," and to meet at Freemasons' Hall, London.

3rd. From Comps. Daniel Pretto as Z., William Richard Bull as H., George Augustus Phillips as J., and seven others, for a chapter to be attached to the Harmonic Lodge, No. 356, in the Island of St. Thomas, West Indies, to be called "The Zetland Chapter," and to meet in the town of Charlotte Amelia, St. Thomas, West Indies.

The foregoing petitions being in all respects regular, the Committee recommend that the prayers thereof be respectively granted.

Petitions have also been received:—

4th. From Comps. John Woodward Barrett as Z., Charles Horsley as H., Christian Gilbert Constantias Stair as J., and seven others, for a chapter to be attached to the Acacia Lodge, No. 1309, Potters Bar, Middlesex, to be called "The Acacia Chapter," and to meet at the Railway Hotel, Potters Bar.

5. From Comps. John Thomas Moss as Z., Wm. Hammond as H., Samuel Wickens as J., and six others, for a chapter to be attached to the Lebanon Lodge, No. 1326, Hampton, Middlesex, to be called "The Lebanon Chapter," and to meet at the Lion Hotel, Hampton.

These petitions are regular in form, but inasmuch as the lodges to which the chapters are proposed to be attached were only respectively consecrated in the months of May and June in the past year, the Committee cannot recommend that the prayers thereof be granted, as they are still of the opinion expressed in their report to Grand Chapter of the 19th January, 1870, that it is not desirable that a chapter should be attached to a lodge which has been consecrated for a less period than three years, and they again submit their opinion for the consideration of Grand Chapter.

The Committee have also received a petition from the Unity Chapter, praying to be detached from the Fowey Lodge, No. 977, Fowey, Cornwall, and to be attached to the St. Andrew's Lodge, No. 1151, Tywardreath, Cornwall. Both lodges having given their consent, the Committee recommend that the prayer of the petition be granted.

The Committee have also received a petition from the Beadon Chapter, No. 619, Dulwich, praying for permission to remove the chapter from the Greyhound Inn, Dulwich, to the Masons' Arms Tavern, Masons' Avenue, Basinghall-street, in the city of London. As it appears from the statement of the petitioners that they are compelled by circumstances to remove from their present place of meeting, the Committee recommend that the prayer of the petition be granted.

The following notice of motion has been given by Comp. Matthew Cooke, P.Z. 534:—"That, whilst this Grand Chapter recognizes the private right of every companion to belong to any extraneous Masonic organisation he may choose, it as firmly forbids now, and at any future time, all companions while engaged as salaried officers under this Grand Chapter to mix themselves up in any way with such bodies as the 'Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite,' the 'Rites of Misraim and Memphis,' the spurious orders of 'Rome and Constantine,' the schismatic body styling itself the 'Grand Mark Lodge of England,' or any other exterior Masonic organisation whatever (even that of the Order of Knights Templar, which alone is recognised), under pain of immediate dismissal from employment by this Grand Chapter."

W. PULTENY SCOTT, President.
Freemasons' Hall, London, W.C.,

The W.M. announced that the business of the evening was to initiate Captain Hardy and Lieutenants Farie and Lonsdale, of H.M.'s 74th Highlanders, who had been proposed by Bro. Lyon Campbell, and seconded by the W.M., Bro. Balfour Cockburn. The candidates having been properly prepared and introduced, were admitted to the mysteries of the first degree in an able and impressive manner. As several little matters of charity and private business had to be transacted, the W.M. notified that, in consequence of the above, and also of the intense heat of the weather, he would defer the explanation of the tracing-board to the next meeting. The labours of the evening being ended, the lodge was closed, and the brethren retired to refreshment. After the usual toasts, the W.M. proposed "The Health and Prosperity of Bro. Allfrey," who was about to leave the garrison to assume the command of the depot of his regiment at home. The W.M. paid a well-deserved tribute to the energetic services of Bro. Allfrey, who, not only as a member, but as the holder of important offices in the lodge, had ever exhibited unflagging interest and zealous co-operation in its duties. Bro. Allfrey responded with a few appropriate remarks, adding that, as the Lodge of Friendship was his mother lodge, he would ever take the greatest interest in its proceedings.

LEICESTER.—St. John's Lodge, No. 279.—An emergency meeting of this lodge was held at the Freemasons' Hall, Leicester, on Friday, the 7th instant. In the unavoidable absence, until a later hour in the evening, of the W.M., Bro. Bro. Stretton, P.P.G.R., the chair was taken by the Prov. G.M. and senior P.M., Bro. Kelly, assisted by Bro. Toller, Prov. G. Sec. There were also present: Bro. Weare, P.M. and Treas.; Crow, S.W.; Widdowson, Sec.; Palmer, S.D.; Smith, J.D.; McAllister, as I.G.; Ellwood, Edwards, Wilkinson, E. J. Worthington, and Bembridge (Tyler). Visitors: Bro. R. H. Bakewell, M.D., Sec. 405, Trinidad; and Toller, P.M., Buzzard, P.M., Partridge, Thorp, and Thomson, of No. 523. Pettifor, P.M. and P.P.G.S.W., in reply to a vote of condolence on that brother's decease was read, and refreshment succeeded labour.

HOLYHEAD.—Hibernia Lodge, No. 597.—A regular monthly meeting of the above lodge was held at the lodge-room, Marine Hotel, on Monday evening, the 3rd inst. There were present: Bro. The lodge was opened, the opening ode sung, and the minutes of last meeting read and confirmed in the usual manner. Mr. John Hughes (of Holyhead), Mr. G. D. Owen (of Pwllheli, Carnarvonshire), and Mr. John A. Davidson (of Dublin) were initiated, and Bro. Little, Hattersley, and King were raised to the third degree, the ceremonies being most effectively and solemnly performed by the W.M. and his assistant officers, who, without a single exception, performed their various parts with great ability and effect. After discussing sundry matters of local Masonic interest, receiving propositions, &c., &c., the lodge was closed by the W.M. in due form. The brethren then adjourned to the banquet-room, where a cold collation had been prepared for the occasion by Bro. W. H. Smith. After the table was cleared, the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were duly honoured. The W.M., Bro. Peters, while proposing "The Health of the R.W.P.G.M., Sir Watkin W. Wynn," stated that it was a long time since a Provincial Grand Lodge had been held in Holyhead; he hoped, however, that now, the Hibernia Lodge being in such a flourishing condition and increasing so rapidly, the day was not distant when they would be so favoured. This anticipation was received with great warmth, and after several speeches and songs from the officers and brethren, which were all received with Masonic honour, the meeting (acknowledged by all present to be an extremely happy one) terminated. On July 10th a Lodge of Emergency was held for the purpose of raising Bro. Matthew Vaux and Stephen W. Robson, which ceremony was admirably performed. The lodge was then reduced and closed, and the "Closing Ode" sung, after which the brethren adjourned to partake of refreshment.

The preliminary business having been completed, and the lodge opened in the second degree by the W.M., he handed the gavel to the R.W.P.G.M., who proceeded to instal the W.M.-elect, Bro. John Henry Garnar, in the chair of K.S. according to ancient form, and who was duly proclaimed and saluted. The W.M. then appointed and invested the following as the officers for the ensuing year, viz.: Bro. Earl Ferrers, I.P.M.; Ison, S.W.; Faulkner, J.W.; Love, P.M., Treas.; Rev. John Denton, P.M., Sec.; Blood, S.D.; Johnson, J.D.; Dr. Morris, I.G.; and Canner, Tyler. A vote of thanks having been accorded to Bro. Lord Ferrers for his services in the chair, and who expressed his intention never to be absent from the meetings of the lodge when he could possibly attend, the lodge was closed, and the brethren adjourned to the Queen's Head Hotel, and concluded the day's proceedings with an elegant banquet, due honour being done to the usual loyal and Masonic toasts.

BELDIVERE, KENT.—Cornwallis Lodge, No. 1107.—This excellent working lodge held its installation meeting on Wednesday, the 5th instant, at the Belvidere Hotel, presided over by the W.M., Bro. C. T. Sutton, P.P.G. A.D.C. Kent, supported by his officers and Past Masters. The lodge was opened in due form and with solemn prayer, minutes of preceding meeting were read and confirmed, and the ceremony of installation was proceeded with. The Installing Master was the outgoing W.M., Bro. Sutton, who performed the ceremony in an admirable manner. The newly-installed W.M., Bro. T. W. Knight, then appointed his officers for the ensuing year, viz.: Bro. G. Harvey, S.W.; W. Perry, J.W.; J. Henderson, P.M., Sec.; J. Storey, S.D.; C. Reuter, J.D.; J. Wood, I.G.; Rev. W. Smith, Chaplain; M. H. W. Sherwin, Org.; and Bro. S. H. Pain, D.C., who (with Bro. T. Wyatt, Treas., and Bro. Peen, Tyler), was re-elected by the were invested with the emblems of their respective offices by the Installing Master, who also delivered the several addresses, which concluded the ceremony. The W.M. then said that he had a very pleasing duty to perform, which was to present Bro. Sutton with the P.M.'s jewel voted to him at the last meeting of the lodge, remarking that he trusted he would have the pleasure for many years to see him amongst the brethren, in perfect health to wear it.—Bro. Sutton replied, that as in the course of the evening he should have an opportunity of addressing the brethren, he would merely thank them for the high compliment they had conferred upon him.—It was then proposed and carried, "that five guineas be given from the funds of the lodge to Bro. T. Wyatt, Treasurer, in recognition of his past services." It was also unanimously resolved "that five guineas be given to the Prov. Grand Secretary's Testimonial Fund."—Three gentlemen were proposed as candidates for initiation, and the lodge was closed in due form. The brethren then adjourned to the Pier Hotel, Erith, where they partook of an excellent banquet, provided by Bro. F. Wain, to which upwards of seventy brethren did ample justice. The cloth having been removed the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and responded to, after which the Rev. Bro. Hill, Prov. Grand Chaplain, said that he had been called upon to perform a very important and pleasing duty, which was to present Bro. Sutton, in the name of the Cornwallis Lodge, with a very handsome and valuable silver tea and coffee service, weighing over 80 oz., in acknowledgment of the many services rendered by him to the lodge. He referred to Bro. Sutton having been thrice W.M. of the Cornwallis lodge, and hoped that he would live many years to enjoy the goodwill and affection of its members.—Bro. Sutton, in thanking the brethren for their kindness, remarked that he could not find words that would in any measure express his feelings. He had worked hard for the Cornwallis Lodge; his aim had been to make it second to none in the province, and he believed it bade fair one day to be so. It was a young lodge, of only five years' standing, yet it now numbered over fifty members, and was still increasing. The respectability of its members was, he thought, a guarantee of its success. He thanked them for the very valuable presents they had been pleased to make him, and trusted that the day was far distant when he would be severed from the members of the Cornwallis Lodge.—During the evening the brethren were delighted with the excellent singing, under the direction of Bro. G. Tedder, of Miss Rebecca Isaacs, Miss Roberts, Bro. Ransford, and Bro. Sherwin, Organist, Mrs. G. Tedder residing at the pianoforte. Amongst the visitors present we noticed the Rev. Bro. The lodge then adjourned to the banqueting-room, where a capital spread had been laid out with much taste by that excellent caterer, Mr. Phillips of the Port Elizabeth Club. About 50 brethren sat down to this repast, and of course did full justice to the good things provided. The usual Masonic toasts—viz., "The Queen and the Craft," "The Grand Master and Grand Lodge of England," and the "The Provincial Grand Master and Grand Lodge"—having been given and duly honoured, that of the newly-installed W.M. was given by Bro. G. Smyth. Bro. Knight, in responding, expressed the great interest he felt in Freemasonry, promised to do all he could to promote the best interests of the Craft, and wound up by paying a well-deserved tribute to Bro. Smyth, P.M., for the admirable manner in which he had conducted the lodge during his term of office.—The W.M. in a neat speech proposed "The Past Masters," which was duly honoured by the brethren and appropriately responded to by Bro. G. Smyth.—Bro. F. D. Deare gave "The Newly Installed Officers," which was drunk most heartily, and acknowledged by Bro. Horsley.—Bro. S. Bain, W.M. of the Lodge Good Will, proposed the "Past Officers," to which Bro. A. Brittain responded. Next there was an interchange of toasts between the sister lodges of the town, which work together with much harmony and good feeling. Then "The Visitors" were toasted, to which, among others, Advocates Stockenström and Brown responded. Other toasts followed, a few songs and some good recitations, and a very pleasant evening was spent by all present. For the information of English Freemasons, we may state that Freemasonry has taken deep root in Port Elizabeth, and is in a most flourishing condition. There is a Royal Arch Chapter and two Blue Lodges—Lodge Good Will, 711, and Lodge of Good Hope, 863—all working under the English Constitution. Brethren from abroad visiting any of these lodges may depend upon receiving a hearty welcome, and of being affectionately entertained at any of their meetings.

METROPOLITAN.

Beacon Chapter, No. 619.—The regular meeting of this chapter were held on Thursday, 6th instant, at the Greyhound Hotel, Dulwich, Comp. J. W. Avery, M.E.Z., presiding. The minutes of the previous meeting were confirmed, consequently the future meetings of the chapter will be held at the Masons' Arms Tavern, Mason's-avenue, Basinghall-street (Comp. Gosden's). After some formal business had been transacted the chapter was closed.

PROVINCIAL.

WARRINGTON.—Chapter of Elias Ashmole, No. 148.—A regular convocation of this chapter was held on Monday se'nnight. In the unavoidable absence of the M.E.Z., he was represented by Comp. J. Bowes, P.Z., Prov. G.S.B., who was supported by Comps. James Hamer, P.Z., Prov. G. Treas., as II.; W. Mossop, J.; W. Richardson, P.S.; W. S. Hawkins, E.; Wm. Sharp, N.; W. Woods, W. Savage, E. Roberts, R. Brierley, John Harding, A.S., P. J. Edelsten, W. Pollitt, and James Hannah, Janitor. The chapter was opened by the Principals, when the minutes of the previous convocation were read and confirmed. The ballot was then taken for Brothers W. H. Potter, Jas. Jackson, and W. Bryce, which proved unanimous in each case. Bros. Jackson and Bryce being present were introduced with due caution, and exalted by Comp. Bowes assisted by Comp. Hamer. There being no further business, the chapter was closed in form.

GIBRALTAR.—Calpean Chapter, No. 278.—A strong muster of this chapter took place on Friday, the 30th ult., M.E.Z. Comp. Henry, 1st Principal, supported by Comps. Beal and Francis in the 2nd and 3rd chairs. A ballot was taken for Bros. Brown, Beck, McLeod and Radcliffe, which proving unanimous, and Bros. Brown and McLeod being present they were duly exalted. In consequence of the absence of the garrison of Comp. Richardson, Comp. Cockburn acted as P.S., and Comp. Gilbert as Assistant. A letter was read from 2nd Principal Salmond, requesting his resignation of office to be accepted, pressing private duties incapacitating his regular attendance at the chapter; in consequence, however, of the near approach of the annual election, Comp. Salmond's resignation was directed to be held in abeyance. Scribe Ezra then, in a few remarks paying a well-deserved tribute to the long, tried and valuable services of Comp. Claudius Marin, who had held the important post of Scribe E. for some years, and who was now and had been a long time Treasurer, and who moreover had voluntarily imposed upon himself the duties of Steward—proposed that a jewel, or some other appropriate memento should be presented to him. Comp. Dantez seconded the proposition, which was most heartily received by the companions of the chapter. After the transaction of some business of minor importance, the chapter was closed in due form.

ULVERSTON.—Furness Chapter, No. 995. held its first annual convocation for the installation of Principals and officers in the Masonic Hall, Ulverston, on the 17th inst. The chapter was opened at 2 p.m., there being a fair attendance of companions. Amongst the visitors were Comp. T. Wylie, Prov. G.R., and Comp. Hamer, Prov. G. Treasurer, West Lancashire. Bro. Wm. Turner, of the Lodge of Furness, was duly exalted in ancient form. Comp. Case, Z., Comp. Dodd, H., and Comp. T. Wylie as J. The historic lecture was delivered by Comp. Dodd, symbolic by Comp. Wylie, and the mystic by the M.E.Z. The duties of Prin. Soj. were ably performed by Comp. R. Dodgson. The chapter was then formed into a Board of Installed Principals, and Comps. Wylie and Hamer, in their efficient and able manner, installed Comp. Dodd Z. of the chapter for the ensuing year, Comp. Case H., and Comp. T. Dodgson, J. The other officers invested were R. Pearson, S.E.; Matthews, S.N.; R. Dodgson, P.S.; Cornfield, 1st A.S.; Postlethwaite, 2nd A.S.; Whiteside, Steward; R. James, Treas.; Robinson, Jan. The business of the chapter was brought to a conclusion about 5 p.m., when the companions adjourned to the Sun Hotel, where Bro. Smith had prepared a sumptuous banquet, which was presided over by Comp. Dodd, M.E.Z. The usual toasts were drunk and responded to, and a highly enjoyable evening was spent. A selection of music was sung at the banquet, arranged by Bro. Parker, Organist of Lodge of Furness, 995, who was assisted by Miss Pattinson, W. J. Wilcock, and Comp. Matthews.

TWICKENHAM.—Royal Middlesex Chapter, No. 1194.—A convocation of this chapter was held at the Grotto Hotel, Twickenham, on Saturday, the 15th inst. Comp. Colonel Burdett, M.E.Z., presided, assisted by Comps. R. Wentworth Little, P.Z., as H.; G. Cattel, J.; C. Horsley, Treas.; W. Dodd, S.N.; Geo. Kenning, P.S.; &c. The business transacted was purely of a formal character, and there being no banquet, the companions separated at an early hour.—Col. Burdett, Prov. G.M., accompanied by Bro. Little, Prov. G. Sec., Bro. Kenning, Prov. G.D., and Bro. Horsley, then paid an official visit to the Lebanon Lodge, No. 1326, at Hampton, upon the occasion of Bro. Wickens' installation as W.M., and were received in a highly complimentary and gratifying manner by the brethren of the lodge.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—Inkerman Chapter, No. 1222.—This chapter met on Monday evening, at Carnarvon Hall, Regent-street, Weston-super-Mare, Capt. Irwin, Z. The Principals appointed for the ensuing year were:—Comps. F. Vizard, 1st; General Gore Munbee, J.P., 2nd; and T. Clarke, W.M. of St. Kew, 3rd, Scribes—Comps. Davies, 30, and Captain Townshend. Principal S.—Comp. S. Jones.

ANCIENT AND ACCEPTED RITE.

Mount Calvary Chapter Rose Croix of H.R.D.M.—This old chapter met at Freemasons' Tavern, on Friday, the 14th inst., and was very fairly attended. Ill. Bro. G. Cockle, 30, was duly installed as M.W.S., and appointed Bros. Binckes, 30; Rosenthal, 33; Stewart, Paas, and Roebuck to the principal offices in the chapter. A brother was admitted to the 11, and the chapter was closed. The summer banquet was held next day at the Mitre Hotel, Hampton Court, when a considerable muster of brethren, accompanied by ladies, sat down to a splendid banquet, and a very pleasant evening was enjoyed by all present.

Palestine Chapter Rose Croix of H.R.D.M.—A meeting of this chapter was held at Freemasons' Tavern on Monday, the 17th inst. Ill. Bro. John Hervey, 30, M.W.S., presided, supported by Bros. R. Wentworth Little, 18, H.P.; Col. F. Burdett, 32, 1st Gen.; Geo. Kenning, 18, 2nd Gen.; T. L. Fox, 18, Raph.; C. Hammerton, 18, C.G.; E. Stanton Jones, 18, Org.; J. W. Barrett, 18, Almoner; J. T. Moss, J. Dyer, W. R. Woodman, M.D., and T. B. Yeoman, 18. The chapter having been opened, and the minutes confirmed, ballots were taken for Bros. S. Leith Tomkins, P.M. 1, Past Grand Deacon of England; E. Sillifant, P.M. 217; P. J. Marin, 174; and J. Gilbert, 820. Bros. Leith Tomkins, Marin, and Gilbert being present, were regularly admitted and perfected as S.P. Rose Croix, the ceremony being ably performed by the worthy M.W.S. and his officers, with musical accompaniments by Bro. Jones. The officers for the ensuing year were then elected as follows:—Bros. R. Wentworth Little, M.W.S.; John Hervey, Treas.; J. Gilbert, Janitor. The magnificent furniture of the Grand Metropolitan Chapter was used on this occasion, and the solemnity and beauty of the ceremony impressed all who were present. Communications from the S.G.C. 33 as to irregular chapters were read, also letters apologising for non-attendance from Bros. Levander, G.M., Trickett, and Sillifant, the chapter being then closed. A recherche banquet followed, and the following toasts were proposed and duly honoured:—"The Queen," "The S.G. Council 33," "The M.W.S.," "The Newly-Perfected Brethren," for whom Brother Tomkins responded. The "M.W.S.-elect and rest of the Officers," "The Brethren not in Office," with the concluding toast by the Attendant. This chapter has now nearly as many on its roll as the members consider desirable to admit.

The ANCIENT and ACCEPTED RITE.

[FOURTH ARTICLE.]

WE have now to consider the teachings and symbolism of the 27°, or "Knight Commander of the Temple." And here it may be observed that, while the Masonic Knights Templar adopt the theory that the old Order was perpetuated through the medium of Freemasonry, the ritual of the Twenty-seventh Degree refers its preservation to the Teutonic Knights, and the Teutonic cross is borne upon the aprons and sashes of the grade. The members might also be called "Knights of the Round Table," as they are seated at a circular table in the centre of the chapter. The ceremony of reception is very solemn—a dirge being chanted in the ante-room during the candidate's introduction, and the refrain of which is the truism—"We all must die, we all must die." The history of the rise and progress of the Teutonic Order is recited to the neophyte, and the address concludes with these words: "A Knight Commander of the Temple should have five excellent qualities, which are represented by the five lights that form the symbolic cross upon our table—Humility, Temperance, Chastity, Generosity, and Honour." The 28°, or "Knight of the Sun," also called "Prince Adept," is the most philosophical degree of the series. The Master represents Adam; the Warden is styled Brother Truth. The other officers take the names of the Cherubim, and are designated, collectively, "The Seven Malakoth," or Angels. Each of these officers has a banner of a colour peculiar to his rank, and adopts a hieroglyphic or sign of the sun, moon, or planets. The degree is said to teach pure Deism, and it certainly appears to bear but little resemblance to the Christian grades which precede and follow it. For example, the whole of the emblems used in Freemasonry are explained in a mystical sense to the Knights of the Sun. The blazing star is the image of a true Mason perfecting himself in the ways of truth, that he may become like a blazing star which shineth equally during the thickest darkness. The triangle, or Delta, is the mysterious figure of the Eternal—the letter G, which is placed in the centre, signifies God; and in this Ineffable Name all the Divine attributes are found. This letter being placed in the centre of the triangle, reminds us that every faithful brother must carefully preserve it in his heart. Among the aphorisms of the degree are the following: "Faith has in all ages been the lever whereby to move the world." "Nature is the primary, consistent, and certain revelation or unveiling of God." "Analogy is the last word of science, and the first of faith." "The absolute unity is the supreme and last reason of things." "The work of God is the book of God, and in what He writes we ought to see the expression of His thought, and, consequently, of His being." "Life is a warfare, in which one must prove himself a man, to ascend in rank; force is not given, it must be seized." The "holy and mysterious pentagram" is thus elucidated. The pentagram is the sign of the microcosm, or universe—the sign of intellectual omnipotence and autocracy. It represents what is called in the Kabbala microprosopos, being in some sort a human figure, with the four limbs, and a point representing the head. It is the Universe contained within the Deity. It is a sign ancient as history, and more than history; and the complete understanding of it is the key of the two worlds. It is the absolute philosophy and natural science. All the mysteries of magism, all the symbols of the Gnosis, all the Kabbalistic keys of prophecy are summed up in the sign of the pentagram, the greatest and most potent of all signs. The white dove and black raven represent the two principles of Zoroaster and Manes, good and evil, light and darkness, also the fourth and fifth sephiroth of the Kabbala—the mercy or benignity, and the justice or severity, of the Divine Being. "Man is what the Deity meant he should be—imperfect, feeble, fallible, liable to err, and sensitive to pain, but capable of improvement and progression; and of a heroism that can smile at agony, be content with destitution, preserve an equal mind under the lash of injustice, and without unmanly fear await the approach of death, and count the pulses of his life. The man who can do this has attained the equilibrium of faith and reason, and may claim to be called Magus, Prince, Adept, and Knight of the Sun." From these extracts our readers will perceive that the twenty-eighth degree of the Ancient and Accepted Rite inculcates peculiar doctrines, and is more deeply impregnated with the spirit of mysticism than any of the degrees of the Rite. It sounds to us like a voice from afar—an echo from ante-mundane time—so vague and dream-like are its utterances. All our previous conceptions of right and truth and wisdom must be offered on the altar of the sun, and we are taught to cast off like worn-out garments all prejudices, superstitions, and errors. The next degree is derived from the Crusades, and is termed "Knight of St. Andrew." The first apartment represents the court of the Sultan Saladin, and is fitted up in true Oriental splendour. The officers personify the Sultan, his brother and nephew, also the Princes of Aleppo and Damascus, with the Emir of Emessa. The knights all wear the Turkish costume. Saladin enquires of the Grand Master if it be true that in this Order of Knighthood a strange equality exists so that a knight, though poor, may sit in the presence of a monarch. The Grand Master replies that the Sultan has not been misinformed, inasmuch as the name of knight, and gentle blood, entitle the possessor to place himself in the same rank with sovereigns of the first degree, except as regards kingly authority and dominion. The principal object of the degree, however, is to preach toleration, and in this respect it is thoroughly in accord with the precepts of ancient Freemasonry. It proclaims that "Masonry is the universal morality which is suitable to the inhabitants of every clime—to the man of every creed." It holds that each man is absolutely sovereign as to his own belief, and that belief is a matter absolutely foreign to all who do not entertain the same belief; and that if there were any right of persecution at all, it would in all cases be a mutual right, because one party has the same right as another to sit as judge in his own case, and God is the only magistrate that can rightfully decide between them. Hence Freemasonry invites within its portals the Christian, the Jew, the Moslem—every one who will lead a truly virtuous and moral life, love his brethren, minister to the sick and distressed and believe in the One, All-Powerful, All-Wise, and Ever-Present God.

We must postpone our remarks upon the 30°, or Knight Kadosh, until we can devote as much space to the degree as its importance in the Rite deserves, premising that the 30° is the first of the Templar grades in the system of the Ancient and Accepted Rite.

ROYAL MASONIC BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

WE are delighted to find that at a meeting of the Governors and Subscribers of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution held on Tuesday, the 25th inst., it was unanimously resolved to cancel the law by which one-third of the life subscriptions (?) was bound to be invested. The Institution has now funded property to the amount of nearly forty thousand pounds, and it is quite time that the claims of the present generation of Masons should be considered. Now that the compulsory investment rule is rescinded, the advantages of the Institution can be extended to every deserving brother, and there is also no reason why surplus funds, if any accrue, from time to time, should not be invested as heretofore, if considered advisable or necessary. The Institution is a most valuable one, and deserves every support.

THE ROSICRUCIANS.

A branch of the London College of Rosicrucians has recently been established for the northern counties by Frates C. F. Matier, M.G.; John Yarker, Prov. Sec. Gen.; Rev. J. N. Porter, Cel.; J. D. Moore, M.D.; P. J. Graham, M.A., LL.D.; Prince Rhodocanakis, &c. The number is limited to 36, and these to be Master Masons of literary ability and intellectual culture. The degrees, as in the ancient brotherhood of Rosy Cross, are nine in number. The association was very popular in Germany at the beginning of the last century, but receded before the English Templar Rite of Baron Hunde, 1754, and the pompous rite of 29 degrees called the "Empire of the East and West," 1762. Old Ephraim Chambers, who published his "Encyclopædæ" in 1727, says: "Some who are no friends to Freemasonry make the present flourishing society of Freemasons a branch of Rosicrucians; or rather the Rosicrucians themselves under a new name or relation, viz., as retainers to building, and it is certain there are some Freemasons who have all the characters of Rosicrucians; but how the aera and origin of Masonry as traced by Dr. Anderson, and that of Rosicrucians here fixed from Naudæus, who has written expressly on the subject, consist, we leave others to judge."

A standard German writer, of 1818, states that the German Rosicrucian endeavoured to enlist the more able of the Freemasons, which latter believing that they were joining an institution which would enable them to extend their charitable principles, gladly sought initiation in the nine degrees of the Rosicrucians. — The Hulme and Stretford Express.

Ultimum in Parbo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

If D is the first Master of a newly-consecrated lodge, and appoints B to occupy the Past Master's chair, does B rank as a P.M. of the lodge after the expiration of the year?

DATE OF THE UNIVERSALITY OF FREEMASONRY.

As it appears to me, if anything were wanting to prove that the 1723 Constitutions promulgated the idea of Masonic universality, we have it in the view taken by the Bull of Pope Clement XII., issued in April, 1738, which, inter alia, says: "A certain society has been formed, under the name of Freemasons, into which persons of all religions and all sects are indiscriminately admitted." Now, while it must be admitted that the words "has been formed" mean, or imply, has been recently formed, it cannot be admitted that they mean formed in 1738, for, although in that year certain Constitutions were issued, the "society" was "formed" in 1717, and issued Constitutions in 1723, which 1723 Constitutions, among other things, were the cause of the Pope's attack. W. P. B.

As the old "George and Blue Boar" Inn, Holborn, was a noted Masonic house until its demolition a few years back, the following narrative will doubtless interest some of your readers.

VIATOR.

"CROMWELL AND KING CHARLES.

"At the Blue Boar Inn, London, is said to have occurred the event which decided Cromwell to finally break with that faithless and utterly unreliable king, Charles I. Ireton and Cromwell having intercepted a letter from Henrietta Maria, then in France, reproaching her husband, whom she ruled, with having made unworthy concessions, knew that the king's answer would tell everything and disclose his whole policy. It was to be sewn up in the skirt of a saddle, and the bearer of it was to come, carrying the saddle on his head, to the Blue Boar, in Holborn, at ten of the clock on a certain night, to take horse for Dover. The messenger himself would not know the treasure the saddle contained, for those were ticklish times. Cromwell and Ireton, at Windsor at the time, were prompt men of action. They at once resolved to dress as troopers, and with one faithful Ironside to go to the inn, placing their man sentinel at the wicket. Then they shouted for cans of beer, and sat drinking in a stall till news came that the man had arrived, and was leading out his saddled horse. They instantly drew their swords, and went up to him, telling him they were ordered to search all who went in or out of the inn; but, as he looked like an honest man, they would only search his saddle, and then dismiss him. They upon this ungirt the saddle, and carrying it into the stall where they had before been drinking, ripped open the skirt, and found the fatal letter. It contained the king's declaration that he would keep no faith with the rogues who, in due time, 'instead of a silken garter, should be fitted with a hempen cord.' Cromwell frowned; he was a man of truth—that was enough. No more parley with the king; but the sword of the Lord and of Gideon to be drawn, and never sheathed. They delivered the saddle again to the innocent man, said he was an honest fellow, and bade him go about his business; so off he rode to Dover, innocent of all foul play. Lord Orrery tells this story; and Lord Orford, according to Richardsoniana, assured Lord Bolingbroke that he had read that very letter, and even offered £500 for it. It is very likely true; but it is false that Cromwell had ever consented to restore Charles to power on a promise of the Garter, £10,000 a year, and the earldom of Essex. Cromwell was not the man to look back when he had once set his hand to the plough. This part of the story is a mere Cavalier slander, and false as one of Charles's promises."

THE ROYAL ORDER OF SCOTLAND AND ITS ANTIQUITY.

In reference to this Masonic degree, permit me to observe that the only evidence hitherto produced by "An Edinburgh Member of the Royal Order," at pages 377 and 425, is the evidence of his own credulity. Shakespere's tragedy of "Macbeth" is bound to be 830 years old because Macbeth is mentioned in it! The "Royal Order" must be 557 years old, because the names Robert Bruce and Bannockburn are made use of in it! Surely, this is internal evidence with a vengeance! Any respectably-educated Englishman who has his attention properly drawn to the matter, and who is acquainted with Scottish history, cannot but perceive that the childish pretensions put forward by "An Edinburgh Member of the Royal Order," at page 377, are utterly at variance with the history of Scotland, the history of Freemasonry, and the real origin of the "High Degrees." So long as the members of the "Royal Order" kept their pretensions to themselves little perhaps might be said; but when they publish these openly to all the world, justice to all the other chivalric degrees demands—What evidence in support of its superexcellent pretensions can the "Royal Order" produce? And for answer we get—None! Of course, we get affirmations by the score; but substantial evidence is entirely wanting, simply, in my opinion, because it does not exist. Were any "proofs satisfactory" really extant of the existence of the "Royal Order" so early as the first quarter of last century, they would have been brought forward long ere now. The "Royal Order of Scotland," notwithstanding its high-sounding title, is simply a Masonic chivalric degree, and not one of its nature anywhere can prove an antiquity of so much as one hundred and fifty-four years, like the Grand Lodge of England. As to giving my name, I have no intention of doing so, nor of appearing before any inquisitorial convocation of the Royal Order anywhere to answer for my want of faith, or liberty of speech in this matter. What the readers of THE FREEMASON have a right to expect, under the circumstances, is not my "name," but his (and its) "proofs satisfactory" that the promulgated pretensions of the "Royal Order" are really "facts"? So far as we have yet seen, we are justified in believing that these "proofs satisfactory," like Royal Charlie, will be lang o' coming, and of very little use when they do come. If, however, any such be produced I may then not only give my name, but also the amende honourable to the fullest extent of my power. X. Y. Z.

ST. JOHN'S DAY.

St. John's Day marks the centre of the year, and was celebrated in old times with many ceremonies and formalities long since grown obsolete. In England it was the custom for the people to keep watch through the towns during the whole of Midsummer Eve, and the fashion was kept up at Nottingham until the reign of Charles I.; the common people paraded the streets with torches, and the watchmen were supplied with barrels of tar which they hung on the ends of their staves and kindled when the darkness came on. In 1510 King Henry VIII. came incognito to one of these festivals of the people, and was so delighted with what he saw that he attended a similar gathering on St. Peter's Eve, and was present in public with Queen Katharine and his retinue. The Eve of St. John, which falls on the same day as Midsummer Day, is one of the great festivals of Freemasonry in Scotland. In Wade's History of Melrose an account is given of the proceedings of the brethren. At six in the evening the members turn out, and walking two-and-two, each bearing a lighted torch, they march three times round the old cross, and then proceed to the Abbey. Here they form in grand procession; the torches are lit, the Grand Master takes the lead, and the other brethren follow according to their Masonic rank. The old Abbey is lighted up with the flames from the torches, and the procession, after passing slowly three times up and down the entire building, assembles in the chancel, where the members form in a grand semi-circle round the tomb of King Robert Bruce. Then the band strikes up "Scots wha ha'e wi' Wallace bled," and the procession returns to the town amidst a blaze of rockets and the glare of the blue lights.—Globe.

PRUSSIA IN ITS INFANCY.

Prussia is first mentioned in history early in the eleventh century, when it was visited by St. Adelbert in a missionary capacity, and who, like many of his fraternity, was murdered by the natives, for which barbarity they were chastised by Boleslaus, King of Poland. In the early part of the thirteenth century, an order, entitled the "Knights of the Cross and Sword," was instituted by Albert, Bishop of Riga, for the special purpose of conquering the district, but failed in so doing until reinforced by the Teutonic knights, or German Hospitallers, upon their return from the Holy Land. Still the natives were not subdued till 1283, and then it was only by their almost complete extermination. Prussia was afterwards under the sway of the Knights Hospitallers, who, in time, became so tyrannical in their rule, that, early in the fifteenth century, the people rebelled against them, and sought the protection of the Polish king, while the Hospitallers obtained aid from Germany. The result was a terrible war, which terminated in 1466, when the Grand Master of the Hospitallers ceded the entire western portion of Prussia to Poland, and consented to hold the eastern part as a vassal of the Polish sovereign. In a subsequent war the Margrave of Brandenburg obtained undivided possession of the whole country, and laid the foundation of the Prussian monarchy.

TETRAGRAMMATION.

The Jews are quite sure the true pronunciation of the Word is lost, and regard it as one of the mysteries to be revealed in the days of the Messiah. They hold, however, that the knowledge of the name of God does exist on earth, and he by whom the secret is acquired has, by virtue of it, the powers of the world at his command; and they account for the miracles of Jesus, by telling us that he had got possession of the Ineffable Name. Rightly understood, they seem to mean that he who calls upon God rightly, by this His true name, cannot fail to be heard by Him. In short, this word forms the famous tetragrammation, or quadrilateral name, of which every one has heard.—Kitto.

WASHINGTON'S MASONIC APRON.

In 1776 there was sitting at the table of the Commandant in Metz, in Germany, a distinguished scion of an ancient noble French family. During the conversation at the table, the Duke of Gloucester, brother to the King of England, spoke of the Declaration of Independence, just put forth by the Anglo-American colonies, and of the strong measures adopted by the British ministry to crush the rising rebellion. The young nobleman listened in silence. He was a boy in form and personal appearance, just past eighteen; but the heart of patriot and hero was beating beneath his closely-buttoned coat, and his imagination and zeal were fired at the recital of a people fighting for liberty. He rose from the table, hurriedly made his arrangements to return to Paris, and revealed his high resolve to his equally enthusiastic young wife. He came to America, sought the acquaintance of the Commander-in-Chief of the American army, and volunteered to fight in the cause of American liberty.

Life, youth, fortune, and the endearments of home were all freely devoted to colonial emancipation. Just the method to awaken the nobler sentiments of the heart, self-sacrificing devotion to the interests of others. Washington felt the electric shock from this benevolent heart, and took Lafayette to his bosom; nor was the bond severed till death gave the stroke of mortal separation.

After the close of the war, the young nobleman, with more of manly maturity, returned to Paris, and over and over again, in glowing eloquence, rehearsed the noble virtues of the great American leader to his young and charming wife. She, like every true woman, was always deeply interested in everything that engaged the attention of her husband. She soon came to reverence Washington with a feeling closely allied to that of devotion. She corresponded with him, and received from him cordial invitations to the simple delights of rural life at Mount Vernon.

In 1784, Lafayette determined to visit Washington in his retirement. Madame Lafayette earnestly desired to present some visible testimony of her regard to the great patriot. Besides the bond of personal friendship, there was a bond of union between Washington and Lafayette of a different character. They were members of the Fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons, and both loved the "mystic brotherhood." Madame Lafayette took advantage of this charm to add interest to her testimonial of esteem. She prepared with her own hands an apron of white satin, upon which she wrought in needlework all the various emblems of the Masonic Order. This she sent with her husband to be presented to her ideal of true greatness at Mount Vernon. It was kept by Washington as a cherished memorial of a noble woman during his life. It now occupies a conspicuous place on the walls of the Grand Master's room in Masonic Hall, Philadelphia.—Benson F. Lossing's (forthcoming) Washington.

SAINT PAUL.

"Paul had a sickly appearance, which did not, as it appears, correspond with the greatness of his soul. He was ugly, short, thick-set, and stooping, and his broad shoulders awkwardly sustained a little bald head. His sallow countenance was half hidden in a thick beard, his nose was aquiline, his eyes piercing, and his black and heavy eyebrows met across his forehead. Nor was there anything imposing in his speech; his timid and embarrassed air, and his incorrect language, gave at first but a poor idea of his eloquence. He shrewdly, however, gloried in his exterior defects, and even drew advantage therefrom. It appears that he was never married. 'The thorn in the flesh,' which he hints at, was apparently some bodily infirmity." B.

"Many of the antediluvian arts were lost at the deluge; and amongst the rest the use of fire, which was not regained for a long period afterwards." Goguet makes this observation, and affirms "that it is a truth attested by the most ancient and most unanimous tradition. The Egyptians, Persians, Phœnicians, Greeks, and several other nations, acknowledged that their ancestors were once without the use of fire. The Chinese confess the same of their progenitors. However incredible these facts may appear, yet they are confirmed by what several writers, both ancient and modern, have declared of nations who were their cotemporaries, and in this state of ignorance and barbarity when they knew them. Pomponius, Mela, Pliny, Plutarch, and other ancient authors, speak of nations who, at the time they wrote, knew not the use of fire, or had but just learned it. Facts of the same kind are attested by several modern relators. The inhabitants of the Marian Islands, which were discovered in 1521, had no idea of fire. Never was astonishment greater than theirs, when they saw it on the descent of Magellan on one of their islands. At first they believed it to be a kind of animal that fixed itself to and fed upon wood. Some of them, who approached too near, being burnt, the rest were terrified, and durst only look upon it at a distance. They were afraid, they said, of being bit, or lest that dreadful animal should wound them with his violent respiration; for these were the first notions they formed of heat and flame. Such, too, probably were the notions originally of the Greeks. And there is no doubt, for this reason, that there were some nations anciently who eat the flesh of animals quite raw. These facts may enable us to form a judgment of the savage and barbarous state of mankind after the confusion of tongues and dispersion of families."—Dr. Oliver.

COMMITTEE OF ENQUIRY.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I cordially endorse your opinions as set forth so lucidly in your article of last week, and cannot help thinking it would be much better for us to endeavour to prevent (so far as it is possible) the continuance of the great and palpable evil there dilated upon, than merely to read THE FREEMASON and lay it aside without any more concern; and for that purpose I should like to be informed, through your columns, what lodges have adopted the system of a Committee of Inquiry on all candidates proposed for initiation, the by-law they work under, and the practical result of the enquiry.

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,

THE MARK DEGREE.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am sorry to have to observe that the evidence brought forward by Bro. Kerr upon this subject, as recorded at pages 79 and 80 of your contemporary for July 22nd, is, in my opinion, full of mistakes. The Lodge of Glasgow St. John does not "hold a charter from Malcolm Canmore," while the document purporting to be such held by, or in possession of, the Glasgow Incorporation of Masons has not only been denounced by the best authority in the kingdom as a recent forgery, but it has also been twice repudiated, pro forma, by the G.L. of Scotland—viz., in 1850 and in 1870—as is proved by a perusal of the back numbers of THE FREEMASON. Neither is it true that "they have another of William the Lion, which is indisputably dated 1174," for the William the Lion document referred to is not dated "1174," but was granted about A.D. 1190, not to the masons, but to the Bishop (Joceline) of Glasgow cathedral. Said document is lost. There is, however, a copy of it extant in the Register of the Bishopric, written in a hand of the thirteenth century, which Register is in the hands of the Catholic clergy. The Lodge of Glasgow St. John, it must be stated, has never as yet been able to prove its title to this document, while, in the opinion of Professor Cosmo Innes, the word fraternitatem, which occurs in it, does not refer to a company of operative masons, but to "a body of zealous churchmen, zealous Glasgow men—not operatives." And as to their (St. John's) "books, which were brought forward," these, as I may state who have examined them, only go back to 1824, not half a century! And in the Incorporation books, which go back to 1600, there is nothing to show that any Mark degree ever existed before the latter half of last century, while, then, as now, apprentices used marks upon their tools, work, &c., as well as fellow-crafts or journey-men. Marks were in common use among all classes from their handiness, while people who could not write could manage to affix their mark. In the 1628 Roslin "charter" we find the masons confessing that they could not write. When an apprentice adopted a mark, he had to register it, which of course was made the excuse for a fee. This mark being cut upon his tools, enabled him to pick them out from a thousand others when a barrow-load came back from being sharpened by the smith. To return to the William the Lion charter for a moment, allow me to observe that, supposing operatives, masons, carpenters, &c., are either included or alluded to in it, it does not follow that said operatives were either the recipients or custodiers of the charter; and, in fact, such was not the case, as the document was given to Bishop Jocelyne and his confreres. There was no "Grand Lodge" held in Holyrood Palace in 1598. The idea or assertion is, in my opinion, a piece of childish Scottish pretension, founded upon misapprehension and misrepresentation, and it is anything but creditable to Scotsmen to either bring forward or support such ideas. The business of the seventeenth century operative, or friendly, lodges, in contradistinction to the eighteenth and nineteenth century speculative lodges, was work, wages, and their poor box; not a system of morality veiled in allegory, as we now have, with its accompanying idea of universal brotherhood—for the spirit of these old lodges was one of exclusiveness; and as to supposing that any old Scottish lodge either knew ought of or practised our symbolic teachings before last century, that is a mistake. The "symbolic teachings" and ideas now taught in Scottish lodges being simply borrowed from England in and after 1721. The first Masonic Grand Lodge in the world was the one held in London in 1717; but none such was ever held in Scotland until nineteen years after.

I am, yours fraternally,
W. P. BUCHAN.

To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Can you, or any of your readers inform me if annexed is a genuine affair? Feeling doubtful about it, from the fact that it appears not to be under the patronage, or with the sanction of any lodge, I wrote to the Master of a lodge in the province of Glasgow, who informs me that although it is possible such an affair might be got up in Glasgow without his knowledge, he thinks it very improbable, and, in his opinion, it is a trick and an imposition.

One would have thought, if the case is a deservng one, the various lodges of its own province would be applied to before coming so far south, and without resorting to a dodge that has fallen into discredit. Apologising for troubling, but in these days of imposition one cannot be too careful,

I remain, dear Sir and Brother, yours truly,

"O.B." AND BUSINESS.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Your contemporary has had the bad taste to insert the anonymous personal attack upon me which you declined, and must therefore take the odium. I say nothing of the badness of a cause which descends to personal libel, but as this Simon Pure, who is ashamed of his name, shows so much interest in my pecuniary and business relations, I may, with your permission, devote a few lines to his enlightenment.

As to the amount of my capital, I need only say that he is as much at sea as in everything else—however, that is no business of his. It may, nevertheless, be of some interest to explain how Lancashire business is conducted, and as I have been largely connected with it for 20 years, and at one time had considerably over half a million sterling annually through my hands, I may be presumed to understand what I am writing about.

A Lancashire manufacturer starts say 200 looms without money capital; he calls upon some one in my line of business and says, "I have these 200 looms, but to work them I must have assistance in yarns, credit guarantee, or cash." This for a long time has been a very unsafe game, and I hear of one house alone that has about £300,000 over-advanced and for which they have no security. Such a firm is master both of the manufacturer and the shipper. For a long time few Manufacturers have been in a position to give credit, and to meet their yarn payments we have had to advance them cash, whilst, owing to the badness of the times, the Shippers have pressed us for extra credits. During the last three years of a cotton collapse three-fourths of the men I had have failed or stopped their mills, and had I not suspended the guarantee of yarn accounts in time, I should have followed some of them into the Bankruptcy Court. Other firms have suffered equally. In fact, a good deal of our Lancashire capital has been swept to the other side of the Atlantic, and the risky nature of such a business as I have described must be manifest. Three or four of the leading members of the "believers" rite, in Manchester, are in a similar line of business, and will no doubt be highly delighted (?) at this line of attack upon me. But the fact is, that to conduct such a business successfully requires far more real intellect than is necessary to General an army, let alone to Captain a regiment of pensioners. A safer plan followed (but not exclusively so) by old-established houses, is to advance 75 per cent. upon goods made to stock. Many of these "Agents" also ship, sub rosa; others do a buying and selling, or Merchant, business, sub rosa.

It is needless to add that in this, as in every other business, there are many pettifoggers. Hitherto, I may say for "O.B.'s" information, that I have done a legitimate business; when I cannot do so, I will retire from it. I can further assure him that I have never used Freemasonry to facilitate any business operations. Others have done so to the extent of letting me in upwards of £800 this year, upon asserting their belief in their Masonic O.B.'s; not to mention numberless smaller amounts which I have dropped into goodnaturedly with my eyes open.

And now "O.B." is informed upon matters of which he writes so dubiously, I hope the knowledge may interest him and lead him to drop the subject of business. What is his own? If my conjecture as to person is right, the query may be answered as in an anecdote I heard in Dublin respecting Sir B. Burke. Some Irishman answered an enquiry: "Oh! he's one of the — that gets his livin' about here."

I remain fraternally yours,

JOHN YARKER.

CONSECRATION OF THE DUKE OF LANCASTER LODGE. No. 1353.

This new lodge was consecrated by Bro. Wylie, P.G.R. of West Lancashire, as representative of the Prov. Grand Master, Sir Thomas Hesketh, Bart., on Wednesday, the 12th instant, in the Lodge Room, Athenæum, St. Leonard-gate, Lancaster, when about fifty brethren were present, and the ceremony went off with great déclat. The presiding officer was assisted by Bro. Hamer, Prov. Grand Treasurer.

The Prov. Grand Chaplain, Bro. the Rev. H. G. Vernon, was present, and delivered a most solemn and appropriate oration for the occasion. The music rendered great assistance, which was ably and most efficiently conducted by Bro. Skeaf, Prov. Grand Organist, and assisted by Bro. Armstrong, P.P.G.D., and other talented brethren. There were also present Bros. Laidlaw, acting Prov. G. Sec.; Dr. Moore, W.M. 281 and S.B. of the Grand Lodge of England; Hatch, P.M. and T. 281; Kelland, P.M. 281; Simpson, P.M. and Sec. 281; Rev. G. H. Hobson, P.M. 477 and Prov. Grand Chaplain of Cheshire; and a large number of brethren from Lancaster, Ulverston, and Barrow.

After the consecration, which was carried out in the most dignified and impressive manner, and which will not readily be effaced from the minds of those present, the W.M.-designate, Bro. C. Hartley, was presented and duly installed, and the following officers having been nominated by the W.M., were severally invested with his particular badge of office, as follows:—Bros. John Barrow, S.W.; John Bell, J.W.; Joseph Barrow, S.D.; Acton, J.D.; Heald, Sec.; John Cross, Treas.; R. A. Hodgson, I.G. Bro. Wylie the consecrating officer, explained the several duties.

The W.M. having returned thanks to all those brethren who had assembled to do honour to the new lodge, it was closed in due form, and the brethren adjourned to the County Hotel, where a splendid banquet was served, which reflected great credit on the host and hostess. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were proposed by the W.M. and were duly honoured by good wishes for the future prosperity of the Duke of Lancaster Lodge, No. 1353. Unfortunately, several of the brethren assembled had to leave early, one portion going north over-sands and the other portion going south to Liverpool, their train hour falling due almost at the same time; but the Lancaster brethren remained for some time afterwards, when all separated a little before 8 o'clock, it being the lodge night for the Fortitude Lodge, No. 281.

MASONIC FESTIVITIES.

THE ANNUAL FESTIVAL OF THE DOMATIC LODGE, No. 177.

Never since the annual gatherings or summer festivals, as they are termed, were commenced in the Domatic Lodge has there been such a successful and happy gathering as that which took place on Thursday, the 20th inst., under the presidency of Bro. J. Walford, the courteous Master of the lodge. Upon that brother had devolved all the trouble and anxiety of bringing about so happy a result, and, as he remarked in one of his speeches, it was no easy matter to please the whole of the brethren of one of the largest, if not the largest lodge in England. Starting by four-horse omnibuses, provided by the London General Omnibus Company, from Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street (the meeting-place of the lodge), at eleven o'clock, they proceeded to the King's Head, Chigwell, kept by Bro. Basham, and as the day was most beautifully fine, and every one in capital spirits, a most enjoyable ride was made the most of. Several of the brethren accompanied the party in their own private traps.

The following is a list of those present:—Past Masters Foulger, Frederick Smith, William Carpenter (a very distinguished member of the Craft), Henry Elmes (late Secretary), Michael Hayden, Harry Potter (spruce merchant), and Baker (one of the oldest P.M.'s). Officers: J. Walford, W.M.; Ferguson, S.W.; Timms, J.W.; Everett, J.D.; and Amos Treadwell, I.G. Visitors: James Boyd, Asst. Grand Purs.; R. Motion, P.P.G.W. Essex; Major Finney, Harmony Lodge, No. 255; Stevens, of the Albion Lodge, No. 19; Hedington; Theodore Foulger, P.M. Confidence Lodge; Walter Woodman, J.W. Royal Standard Lodge; Charles Woodman, of the Etruscan Lodge; James Everson, 511; and Aston, of the Temple Lodge. Members: Crane, R. Ford, B. Cook (builder), Heath, Ford (of the Cogers' Discussion Hall, Salisbury-square, Fleet-street), Fountain ("White Swan," Salisbury-court), Sullivan, Arnold ("Robin Hood," 281, High Holborn), Chudleigh, Accason (Great Western Railway), Hancock, William Wigmore ("Fishmongers' Arms," Woodgreen), Goodfellow, Boutright, E. B. Clarke (the "Red Lion" and Cloak House, Rosoman-street, Clerkenwell), Nasielski, Ralph, Willing (contractor), Giles, Chas. E. Thompson, &c.

After a delightful journey, the brethren arrived at their destination about one o'clock, when luncheon was partaken of, and between that time and the dinner-hour the lovely gardens attached to Bro. Basham's were visited and greatly admired by some of the brethren, whilst others engaged in various out-door games, or passed the time very pleasantly by strolling in the fields and romantic walks and admiring the scenery.

A dinner, which consisted of every delicacy in season, capital wines and dessert, were then partaken of, and the way in which it was served called forth the highest encomiums upon the host and hostess, for nothing, in fact, could have been better. When the cloth was removed,

Bro. Foulger said he would not occupy their time with long toasts, but there were a few it was usual and proper to give. (Hear, hear.) He was glad to find that her Majesty, feeling her presence would revive trade, had lately come more amongst them. ("Hear, hear," and cheers). He had therefore great pleasure in proposing her health. (Applause.)

"The Health of the M.W.G.M. of Masons, the Marquis of Ripon," was the next toast. His lordship had discharged the important duties imposed upon him with faithfulness. (Hear, hear.) He was sure they would all agree he had deserved the honour—that of Marquis—which had been recently conferred upon him.

This and the preceding toast were enthusiastically received.

The W.M. then proposed "The Earl of Carnarvon, D.G.M., H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Grand Officers, Past and Present," coupled with the name of Bro. James Boyd. They were fortunate in having two Grand Officers members of the Domatic Lodge; and after alluding to the able manner in which the Grand Officers had discharged their duties, he concluded by proposing their healths.

Bro. James Boyd, Asst. Grand Purs., in responding, said he agreed with the Master, that short speeches ought to be the order of the day. He had experienced a great deal of pleasure in being present that day, and thanked them all, in the name of the Grand Officers and in his own. He regretted he was not a member of their lodge, for he had been associated with it as a constant visitor for about 20 years. (Hear, hear.)

Bro. Foulger proposed "The Health of the W.M., Bro. Walford, and he said the duty of doing so was an exceedingly pleasing one to him. He asked them to drink it in bumpers, for he had exerted himself very much to make the festival what he was sure they would all say it had turned out to be, viz., a success. ("Hear, hear," and loud cheers.) In the person of the W.M. he felt they had a good Master, and one who studied their interests in every possible way, and who also studied Masonry. (Hear, hear).

The toast was received with much applause.

The W.M. said, unaccustomed as he was to public speaking—(laughter)—they would pardon him if he were not able to express himself in a sufficiently thankful way for the honour they had been pleased to do him. If they would believe him, it was no small matter to be the W.M. of the Domestic Lodge, although he might not have been able to give satisfaction to every one of the eighty or ninety persons who sat down to dinner at lodge, yet he hoped he had been able to do so that day. (Hear, hear.) He was rather sorry the chairmanship of the lodge was of so short duration, for if it were, like some appointments, for three or four years, he would better learn how to please them, and suit everybody before he retired from office. He was glad to be able to say that he believed his name was cordially and kindly remembered. After some other appropriate remarks, which were received with cheers, he concluded by proposing "The P.M.'s," to which Bro. Carpenter replied in a happy speech, and said that, after being thirty years a Past Master, he was very glad, indeed, to come again amongst them.

To "The Visitors" Bro. Motion and Bro. Major Finney responded. The other toasts were "The Officers and Stewards," "The Ladies," and "The Press." To the latter the representative of THE FREEMASON responded, and a most delightful day was brought to a close and the brethren returned to town.

SUMMER FETE OF THE EUPHRATES LODGE, No. 212.

Summer banquets have now become so frequently introduced into all Masonic lodges, that it would almost seem a necessity for the brethren to have at least one retreat where they can meet during the summer vacation. That through these meetings harmony and friendship among the members is promoted needs scarcely any comment. But there is another reason which makes these summer banquets desirable, and that is, that it is usual to admit ladies to them. As we all know, ladies cannot join the Craft itself, but by the husbands being allowed on these occasions to bring their wives, relatives, and friends with them, it is obvious that ladies become acquainted with the various Masonic and other charities with which our Order has, since its existence, been so nobly associated. In fact, a good many gentlemen, who have, perhaps, no idea of joining Masonry, might, at the request of their wives, seek to join such a noble Society, and to be admitted into our ancient Order. And even if such were not the case, the fame of Masonry becoming more and more known in our households can have but a beneficial influence. Who amongst us can say that, by misfortunes and calamities, he may not be glad to seek the benefit that could be conferred on him by our charities? Charities, which are not only established for the good of Masons themselves, but which equally divide their bounty to their widows, daughters, and sons, should they require it. If, therefore, these summer meetings were not to take place, a great deal of good would be left undone, which otherwise could be accomplished. In this instance we refer to the Euphrates Lodge, No. 212, one of the city lodges of long standing, which held its summer banquet on Wednesday, July 19th, at the Bald-faced Stag Hotel, Buckhurst Hill, kept by their I.P.M., Bro. Henry Lock, which, to all intents and purposes, was a great success, Bro. J. C. Franks, the W.M., presiding. Last year's summer banquet held there, being the first revival after a number of years' omission, was, owing to the late decision of the committee on the subject, not so well attended to as the present. This year, however, the banquet showed a large muster, it being attended by about sixty guests, including between twenty and thirty ladies.

The dinner was served at three o'clock in Bro. Lock's usual way, which met with the approbation of all present, everything being placed on the table in a first-rate style. After dinner had been served, and between the dessert, the company adjourned for half an hour to the grounds, and on their return the dessert was served, which gave general satisfaction, the table being ornamented with bouquets and flowers in a most tasteful manner. The cloth having been drawn, the usual loyal and patriotic toasts were given and heartily responded to. So were also "The Visitors," "Ladies," "Officers," &c., the intervals being filled up with capital songs. Owing to the lateness of the banquet, a great many of the members left at nine o'clock in the evening, but some stayed till ten o'clock, enjoying themselves heartily in dancing to the strains of the piano. In the absence of the S.W., Bro. Thomas Hammond, J.W., took the vice-chair, which duties he discharged most admirably, great compliments being paid to him by all those who had occasion to witness his zeal and energy in making every one in the West comfortable, and assisting in the arrangements prior to the festivity.

PICNIC OF THE EVERTON LODGE, No. 823.

As a pleasant sequel to the installation festivities, which took place on the 19th inst., the brethren of the "Everton," with their fair friends, to the number of about 200, started on Friday, 21st inst., for a picnic excursion to Gresford, some dozen miles from Chester, being their second annual visit to that picturesque and charming village. The large party assembled on the George's Landing-stage, and the start was made shortly before ten o'clock, the arrival taking place about half-past eleven. Many were the anxious glances at the threatening sky, and numerous the expressions of hope that the wind would carry off the rain. These hopes, however, were not realised, as, shortly after the arrival of the party, the rain began to fall with unquestionable pertinacity, and the down-pour continued for several hours without intermission, rendering out-of-door pleasure utterly impossible. Application was made to the parish clergyman—a gentleman rejoicing in the name of Archdeacon Wickham—for the use of the schoolroom as a temporary shelter for the ladies, the application being backed by the assurance that it would be only used as a shelter, and not for "profane" dancing or any other purpose. With a consideration and kindness, however, which does the rev. gentleman great credit, the application was refused point blank, and no amount of special pleading could move him from his charitable resolution. About four o'clock the clouds began to lighten, the rain ceased, and the remainder of the stay went as merry as any amount of marriage bells.

A very appropriate opening to the day's proceedings was made by a visit to the church, where the 100th Psalm was sung by the whole company with very impressive effect.

During the continuance of the rain, the majority of the company amused themselves in a variety of ways, some dancing at the hotel, others singing under the tent, while some even braved the unpleasantness of the weather in order to see the splendid scenery of the Vale of Gresford and its surroundings. After enjoying themselves heartily, the party returned to Liverpool, arriving shortly after eleven o'clock. The whole of the merry meeting passed off with scarcely a hitch, and the day's "out," though curtailed by the rain, was generally voted the most successful and one of the pleasantest which the lodge has ever had. Dinner, tea, and other refreshments were provided in a liberal manner, and special praise is due to the Stewards, who spared no end of labour to supply creature comforts to all who sat down.

AN ORPHAN'S THANKSGIVING.

Being the reflections of a deceased Freemason's daughter, residing with her afflicted Mother in the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution, Croydon, after receiving an unexpected visit from a gentleman who (with his lady) had been one of the kindest of her benefactors.

I glance around the peaceful home,
Unto my mother given,
To soothe the few remaining years
Allotted her by Heaven.
I prize the precious privilege
Of being always near her,
And strive, despite her suffering,
To solace and to cheer her.

And then I ask with gratitude—
Who gave us each dear blessing?
Who, under Providence, relieved
Our grief when most distressing?
Kind Masons; 'twas their sympathy
That soothed our bitter sorrow,
And caused upon our woe to dawn
A brighter, happier morrow.

And I will bless them, whilst my heart
With gratitude is thrilling,
For thus in noble charity
Their Master's work fulfilling.
O! may their deeds be written down,
By angel-hands recorded,
Till in a fairer home on high
Their love shall be rewarded.

MASONIC SONGS TO POPULAR AIRS.

No. 3.—AIR, "Here's to the Maiden."

Here's to the Mason that's young in the Craft,
Whether Apprentice or Fellow,
To his good health let the vintage be quaffed,
May his inexperience soon mellow.
Fill up a bumper, and let the toast pass,
I warrant 'twill serve you to empty your glass.

Here's to the Master, who sits in the East,
Good and wholesome instruction conveying;
May all 'neath his sway, whether greatest or least,
Support him—true deference paying.
Fill up, &c.

Here's to the Past Masters, may they increase,
The power of the lodges to strengthen;

A NEW TEMPLAR ODE.

BY SIR S. T. CLARK, M.D.

Sir Knights attention! Sheathe your shining steel!
Doff helms, and at the pall-clad Trigon kneel,
And there remember Judas!

Eleven burning lights—one smothered flame
Left to proclaim the name, the sin, the shame
And fame, of fallen Judas!

The traitor Judas—who, for love of gold,
In days of old, his brother Jesus sold—
The bold, but blinded Judas!

The burning world the eye of Tyco spied,
Could hide itself in darkness when it died—
This was denied to Judas!

For while our Christ is God to fallen man,
On him the ban, he still must lead the van,
None can out-Judas Judas!

Then pledge me, Knights, beneath an arch of steel;
Seal me in five libations ne'er to feel
In woe or weal like Judas!

O Jesus, Master! from the mercy seat
Come down and meet us! we will kiss thy feet
And not Thy cheek, like Judas!
—Masonic Trowel.

SONG OF THE ROSE CROIX.

BY REV. J. GIERLOW, 32°.

Waving their banners high—
Snow-white insignia of the Reign of Peace—
For which the Lord of Glory left to die
His Father's Salem—never more to cease—
They hail their great Shekina, who arose
From death, that Heaven might triumph o'er her foes!

Crying aloud, All hail!
Unto the Mighty! unto Him who reigns
At the right hand of God in Heaven? prevail,
Ye Mighty Ones! Jerusalem! thy stains
Are washed away! thou art as white as snow,
And shall remain on earth for ever so!

All hail! all hail! arise,
Ye Legatees of Endless Life! shake Heaven
With clapping your white hands! he dies, he dies!
The Demon of the Earth! fierce Truth has riven
Him, as the lightning rends the clouds in twain—
Never to vex, with blood, the earth again!

Aloud, ye Sons of Men!
Rejoice! rejoice! the Reign of Peace is come!
The Sun of Righteousness descends again,
With healing on His wings, to take us home—
The ransomed of His love—the righteous given
To enter joyful with their Lord in Heaven!

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR BOYS.

A Quarterly Court of the Subscribers of this Institution was held on Monday, the 17th inst., at Freemasons' Hall. Bro. John Hervey, V.P., occupied the chair, and he was supported by Bros. J. Symonds, Benjamin Head, Geo. Cox, Edward Cox, H. Browse, Major J. Creaton, W. Young, Raynham W. Stewart, W. Roebuck, J. R. Sheen, R. Spencer, Jas. Weaver, W. Farnfield, Leopold Ruf, H. Massey, and F. Binckes (Secretary).

The ordinary business was transacted, consisting of the reading of former minutes and reports and settling the list of candidates for the October election; and then Bro. W. Young's motion, "That in acknowledgment of the services rendered by Bro. Joseph Lavender in connection with the erection of the new buildings at Wood Green, the rank of Honorary Vice-President, with full privileges, be conferred on Bro. Lavender," was unanimously carried; and the court was closed after a vote of thanks had been passed to the chairman.

PATENT LAW REFORM.

We have great pleasure in publishing the following report of certain resolutions adopted at a meeting of London Patent Agents, as the injustice done to patentees by the action of the present laws has long been an admitted grievance:—

At a recent meeting of London Patent Agents, convened to consider the proposed changes in the patent laws, Mr. George Haseltine, M.A., in the chair, the following resolutions were adopted:—

First.—"That the chief defects of the patent laws have arisen from a want of appreciation of the right of inventors to the sole use of their inventions, an unreserved recognition of which right should pervade every patent system, and the true aim of legislation is to harmonise this personal right with the interests of the state.

Second.—"That the granting of patents to mere 'first importers' is an injustice to inventors—an injury to society, as it induces the 'pirating' of inventions—and the reasons for these grants no longer existing, legislation should confine the issue of patents to actual inventors and their representatives."

Third.—"That, in view of the benefits inventors confer on the public, and the expenses incident to the completion and introduction of new inventions, a patent for fourteen years is an inadequate compensation, and we deem it expedient to grant patents for a term of twenty-one years without the privilege of extension."

Fourth.—"That the patent laws impose penalties upon inventors in the form of excessive fees, which justice and public policy demand should be reduced to the amount requisite to defray the expenses of an efficient administration of a simple patent system, and fees of ten pounds for the entire term—now one hundred and seventy-five pounds—would yield more than sufficient for the purpose."

Fifth.—"That the defects of the present practice should be remedied by the introduction of the system of granting patents, at the risk of the applicants, without any official supervision of the specification or preliminary investigation of the merits of the invention."

Sixth.—"That the rights of the patentees should be determined by a competent tribunal, excluding all technical objections to the validity of the patent, and we deem it expedient to dispense with jurors and 'expert' witnesses in patent suits."

Seventh.—"That these resolutions, signed by the chairman, be forwarded to the Parliamentary Select Committee on Letters Patent, and such other publicity be given them as he may deem conducive to the success of a liberal measure of patent legislation."

"MORE than a year ago one of my children was attacked with bronchitis, and, after a long illness, was given up by my physician as 'past cure.' I was then induced to try your Vegetable Pain Killer, and from the time I began the use of it the child rapidly got better, and is now strong and healthy.—JOHN WINSTANLEY, 10, Whittle-st., Liverpool, Jan. 1869.—To P. D. & Son."

"DEAD MASONS."

BY BRO. W. B. MELIUS.

There are those alive who do not live. In every Masonic lodge can be found Masons who are dead to all the highest purposes of Mason's life. They simply vegetate—eat drink, and absorb what they can get of the substance of others. They add nothing to the common stock of pleasure or of good in the society in which they claim a membership. They have no hand to help on any occasion, no word of cheer for the brethren of activity and enterprise, in fact, very little, if anything commendable.

They sit still, or if they show signs of life at all, it is to drag themselves across the path of progress in such a way as to check the passing current. If such brethren have their use, as they doubtless have, it is, in the economy of affairs, that of testing the strength and patience of live brethren in passing over and around their dead bodies.

Masonry! what is it, if it is not a progressive profession? The end at which it aims is human perfection, and in striving to attain it, there must be a constant battle with ignorance, prejudice, passion, and superstition. If we have abundance of charity, with plenty of zeal, we dare to stand in the open field ready to move upon the opposer of our institution, drive back the foe, capture his strong hold, and dictate peace to him as a conqueror. The living dead Mason is nowhere so much out of place as in the lodge; and yet we have dead Masons in New York State; some in every county; one or more in every lodge. Notice the marks by which we know them. Masonry now has a creditable literature. It is easy to collect a hundred volumes in English, appertaining directly to the Craft. Some twenty magazines are published throughout the country, and as many more papers, filled with the doings of our institution throughout the globe, besides abundant reading matter for the most fastidious.

The Master, or any officer who takes an interest in the growth of his lodge, feels interest in the one who says "I come seeking, and want more light." If he can feel in the slightest manner that his mission is to benefit that one, he will surely find means of procuring and reading some of these books and papers. But these are those who do not, and who would not, if they grew spontaneous, go to the trouble of picking them off the trees that stand by the highway or street along which they crawl on their way to the lodge. Their whole life seems to tend to dry up the stream of life in others.

These dead Masons seldom attend regular meetings if they can help it, but if forced to attend, their ears are deaf to what is said, their eyes are blind to what is done; they sit, but do not even look. The two pillars with the pedestal placed before the Master could not be more indifferent; and yet these brethren are without knowledge, while, like the miser's money, it is corroding for want of use.

Those who sit next to one of those torpid fellows in the meeting, invariably grow cold by the contact. Even the eye of the Master, full of life and fire, as he urges the brethren, or inspires them with greater zeal in the performance of known duty, necessary for the elevation of the Order, loses its lustre as it rests for a moment upon the cold, blank countenance of the dead Mason before him. The dead Mason has a certain amount of exercise that he follows day after day with as little variation as if he was turning the crank of a grind-stone. If the lodge runs he has no right to have any anxiety, only he don't want too many members to get sick, or die, for fear the funds may run short, and the dues for another year will be raised.

The joys and sorrows, wishes and wants, of his lodge are nothing to him. He hopes everything will "come out right." If he is placed on a committee, he attends to it with the most melancholy interest, and is sure to forget to report at the proper time.

I often think, my dear, dead brother, that you made a great mistake in thinking the institution "called" you a member, or that it is benefited thereby, and I fear when the Master calls for the designs upon the trestle-board of your life, it will be found unfinished!—Gavel.

THE ANTIQUARIAN EXPLORATIONS AND DISCOVERIES AT TIMPENDEAN MUIR.

(Extracted from The Scotsman of 18th July, 1871.)

Mr. John S. Phené, F.G.S., F.R.G.S., Member of the British Archaeological Association, has commenced explorations for the discovery of relics of early British art in the neighbourhood of Jedburgh, with the Marquis of Lothian's head forester, and a staff of assistants acting under him. Excavations have already been commenced, and it is understood that Mr. Phené will open a celebrated tumulus which, it is believed, has never hitherto been disturbed, near Monteviot, on the estate of Lord Lothian.

(Extracted from The Scotsman of 19th July, 1871.)

The Antiquarian Explorations alluded to yesterday as being at present carried on by Mr. Phené have resulted in some very interesting discoveries. Mr. Phené first surveyed the various points of interest on the estates of the Marquis of Lothian in the neighbourhood of Jedburgh, and selected Timpendean Muir as his field of operations. Several small tumuli and British camps were examined, and evidences were obtained of cremation in the tumuli, and selection as regards adaptation for defence in the positions occupied by the camps, but as these results were only of average interest, a more minute survey was made, and Mr. Phené selected a spot where some out-cropping stones, arranged in a more or less circular form, seemed to mark it out as best deserving attention. On removing the grass and the "brackens," the outline was found to be oval, and the area enclosed by the stones formed of green turf. A trench was partly cut in a line eastwards from the Eildon Hills, and on removing the turf, the area was found to be carefully paved at a depth of nearly a foot below the surface. When the stones were taken up to continue the trench, the soil was found to be undisturbed, but on close inspection the pavement was observed to be defective at several points, all equi-distant from the external stones forming the enclosure. These blank spaces in the pavement were found also to be discoloured, and, on being excavated, showed several round patches of charred wood, apparently oak. Digging downwards to the rock, a depth of about 3 feet from the surface, the charred material gradually disappeared, and soon assumed only the black appearance resulting from decomposed wood, stained probably by the infiltration of the charcoal, which had been carried down in small particles through the interstices. The trench, the direction of which had been designedly chosen, was found to have at each end one of these charcoal spaces, which appear to have been the remains of oaken supports to the roof. Near the one farthest from the Eildons a small circular stone amulet, neatly bored through the centre, and indented on the edge, was found. It is similar to those described by the late Mr. Tait as having been found in dwellings at Greaves Ash. On the side nearest the Eildons was found a fine urn, inverted and filled with human bones, mixed with vegetable charcoal, the bones showing signs of cremation. The place does not appear to have been designed for sepulture, and it is probable that it was destroyed by fire, and that the possessor had afterwards been buried under his own domestic hearth. Quartz pebbles were found near the urn. The moor is traversed by a Roman road, which runs into Watling-street. The dwelling, from the oval form, depth of deposit above it, and the remains of wooden supports, appears to be of the same class as those on Loch Eive in Argyshire, mentioned in Wilson's pre-historic annals of Scotland. Mr. Phené still continues his researches,

GLASGOW.

The Clyde Lodge, No. 408, held their usual monthly meeting on Friday, the 7th inst., when the R.W.M. occupied the chair, and in his usual faultless style initiated Mr. Burgess. At the request of the W.M., the P.M. then passed and raised Bro. Burns, who was about to sail from that port. The cases of two widows was then considered, both of whom had lost their husbands at sea. This lodge has a large Benevolent Fund of its own, but as many of its members belong to the mercantile marine profession, the calls on it are frequent and urgent.

On July 10th, the Caledonian Unity Chapter, No. 73, held an emergency meeting to confer this degree on Bro. James Bisland, who was about to sail for Montreal. A lodge of Mark Masters was held. Bro. Gilchrist, W.M.; G. W. Wheeler, S.W.; and A. Bell, J.W. The chair degree was then conferred, after which a chapter was opened, D. Gilchrist, Z.; J. O. Park, P.Z., H.; and T. Findler, J.; when the degrees of Excellent Master and the Holy Royal Arch were conferred according to the ancient ritual.

The Girvan Encampment of Knights Templar held its monthly meeting on Tuesday, the 4th inst., when the M.N.C., Sir Kt. Robert Bell, assisted by his principal officers, initiated into this Ancient Military and Religious Masonic Order Comps. J. Burns and J. Bryce, of the Cathedral Chapter of Glasgow. The address to the American Knights Templars that was passed at the previous meeting was now laid before the encampment as finished by the artist to whom it had been entrusted; it, as well as a photographic group of the principal officers of the encampment, and a copy of the poem of "Welcome," were ordered to be presented to each Sir Knight of the Allegheny Commandery that visited Glasgow.

FREEMASONRY & ISRAELITISM.

BY BRO. WILLIAM CARPENTER, P.M. & P.Z. 177.

[I have to apologise for a very stupid blunder in last week's FREEMASON, in the substitution of one article for another. I generally manage to have one paper a-head, and by some inconceivable mishap I sent No. XI. instead of No. X. I now give this, however, as I deem it a necessary introduction to what will follow. My readers will therefore be good enough to ignore last week's paper, for a time, and accept this in place of it.]

x.

I believe I have exhausted, as far as a brief glance at the evidences can do so, the historical enquiry as to the origin of the Getæ, and of those great branches of the race known as Saxons and Angles, who peopled North Germany, with the Cimbric Chersonesus (the peninsula of Denmark—Dan-mark?) Holstein, &c., and who, when united in this our land, were denominated Anglo-Saxons—the favoured race which has carried its colonies into almost every part of the world, and, through those colonies, has extended the blessings of civilization and religion. Whether I have succeeded in making out a case in favour of this people being a portion—a considerable portion—of the long-lost Tribes, who, be it remembered, were never to be utterly lost, but were, like seed cast into the ground, to seem for a time lost, and then, under the influence of the early and the latter rain, and the vivifying influence of the sun of righteousness, were to spring forth, bloom, and bear abundant fruit, filling with it the face of the earth (Isa. xxvii. 6), and thus to be employed for great and glorious things in blessing the world, I must leave my readers to determine. If any have followed me through the evidences I have adduced in favour of that proposition, I venture to think that some impression must have been made on their minds, although I am far from thinking it has produced conviction. The proposition is of so novel and startling a character, and can scarcely fail of being so antagonistic to the minds and feelings of those who, for the first time, have been asked to look at it, that I expect comparatively few will, at this stage of our enquiry, admit that there is anything conclusive towards establishing the identity of the Anglo-Saxons with the ten tribes. Be that as it may, I must ask the further attention and patience of my brethren, who should certainly feel an interest in an enquiry that gives even a faint promise of throwing light upon an historical question that has perplexed men's minds for centuries, and which promises, furthermore, to identify us and our fathers with a portion of the people whom the Great Architect of the Universe selected from amongst all other peoples, to maintain the great truth of the existence of the Divine Unity, of His moral government of the world, and of His gracious purpose to bring about and establish an universal reign of righteousness and happiness for the human race. Dean Stanley truly remarks, that "The sons of Israel are literally our spiritual ancestors; their imagery, their poetry, their very names have descended to us; their hopes, their prayers, their psalms are ours." I hope to show that the sons of Israel are not only our spiritual ancestors, but our natural ancestors, also.

Leaving the historical ground of testimony, and such proofs as it affords of the soundness of my proposition, I now turn to another species of proof, not less conclusive, I believe, than that furnished by the records of history, or by those marks of descent which the Anglo-Saxons exhibit in their language, institutions, and manners. To my own mind, indeed, this species of proof carries greater weight than either, or of all combined, of those I have passed under review—I mean the proofs furnished by the sure word of prophecy, which involves the sure promises of God; for most of the prophecies of the future of Israel take the form of Divine promises—promises of grace and mercy towards the house of Israel, and, through Israel, to the world at large, including Jews and Gentiles—"The Lord shall arise upon thee [Israel], and His glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising. . . The abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee. The multitudes of camels shall cover thee; the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah; all they from Sheba shall come; they shall bring gold and incense; and they shall show forth the praises of the Lord. . . Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them, unto the name of the Lord thy God, and to the Holy One of Israel. And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee" (Isa. lx. 2-10).

I know that many persons not only have a great distaste for the study of prophecy, but a strong repugnance to it, having on their minds an impression that it is impossible to derive any good therefrom. This arises, no doubt, in great measure, from the diversity of interpretation that has been given of unfulfilled prophecy, some interpretations being quite antagonistic to others, so that all prophecy seems to them not only obscure and uncertain, but defiant of all interpretation. I believe there are prophecies which never will be thoroughly understood until after their accomplishment. They appear as if intended to furnish proofs of the Divine prescience, after they shall have received their fulfilment, rather than as predictions plainly to fix the time and circumstances of the things which are to occur, and in such manner that we may assuredly anticipate the precise occurrence and its set time. There are many prophecies, however, that obviously invite consideration and inquiry, so that the mind may be prepared for the coming event, and are so plain and explicit in their form, that the event may be clearly foreseen, although the time at which it will occur may be left in darkness. Now, of this description of prophecy is that which I have just quoted as to the future of Israel, and its relation to the world at large, with many more of the like kind. If words have any meaning, we cannot, without doing great violence to them, set aside their literal meaning, and interpret them metaphorically or spiritually. It is an universally admitted canon of interpretation, approved by one's common sense, that the literal meaning is to be given to all words, unless there be an obvious reason for departing from it. The simplest and most natural meaning that flows from words may be relied upon as the sense in which they are to be understood. Symbols and metaphors, no doubt, abound in the prophetic writings. In many of the most magnificent prophecies they are obvious enough, as, when Isaiah, speaking in the name of the Mighty One of Israel, and depicting the future prosperity and glory of His restored people, says: "The light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun; and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold." No one can take that for a literal description of what shall occur; but in such predictions as several I have quoted, the language is plain and the literal meaning obvious. Take another: "And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall set His hand again, a second time, to recover the remnant of His people, which shall be left from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinah, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth. The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off; Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim. And there shall be a highway for the remnant of His people, which shall be left from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt" (Isaiah xl. 11-16). Many mistakes have, I believe, been made through interpreting such predictions as these metaphorically or spiritually; that is, in taking them in a spiritual sense, Israel standing, not for the literal Israel, but for the spiritual Israel, the church—the seed of Abraham by faith. As a Christian, I, of course, am satisfied that all who believe in the Redeemer are the spiritual seed of Abraham, and therefore that they are heirs according to the promise. At the same time, I as firmly believe, and with as good reason, that the promises and predictions which refer to the restoration and future glory of Israel will be literally fulfilled. Under the law, the promises were all of temporal good; under the Gospel, they are all of spiritual good; and a careful review of the Old Testament, by the light of the New Testament, leads to the conclusion, that both literal and spiritual Israel are to be blessed in temporal and spiritual things, and that there will be an union of the two, when the time of the fulfilment comes.

Here, however, I must observe that it is most important in the consideration of this subject, to note, in the prophetic writings, the distinction made between Israel and Judah; as in Isaiah xi. 12, among many other passages: "He shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah, from the four corners of the earth." What is said of Israel can no more be properly applied to Judah than what is said of Judah can be properly applied to Israel. It has been well said that "the two houses seem to have been intended to fulfil considerably different purposes in God's economy of grace to the world. Of Judah was to come the one promised Seed, the Heir of all things; of Ephraim, or Israel, the multitudinous seed, so much promised to the fathers—the many brethren who are also called the Lord's first-born. Judah has been a standing witness to the prophetic word; whilst Israel—long, to appearance, lost—is to come forth, in the latter time, with overwhelming witness to the truth. Judah was the first fruits, gathered in the apostolic age; but Israel is the harvest, to be gathered at the Lord's return. Judah was privileged to carry out the Gospel to the north and north-west, to the many nations who have come of Jacob; and Israel is being employed in carrying it out thence unto all the ends of the earth. Judah and his brethren were to be preserved alive in the midst of famine; but this was to be accomplished by their unknown brother, Joseph, who had been sent before them, and given a headship over the heathen. Judah seems to be given no home, but that of his fathers; whilst blessings unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills are promised to come 'upon the head of Joseph, upon the crown of the head of him that was separated from his brethren.' Their cities, it seems, are to be spread abroad; they are to be such an innumerable multitude that, although the land of Israel will be their common centre, they will, at the same time, be possessed of sea and land, unto the ends of the earth (Isaiah lx). But then, indeed, Israel and Judah shall have become one. 'They shall be one nation upon the mountains of Israel for ever' (Wilson. Lect. on Anc. Israel).

Now, bearing in mind this distinction between Judah and Israel, and accepting the prophecies and promises that are obviously spoken of Israel as to be fulfilled in them—that is, in the ten tribes, and not in Judah—that is, not in Judah as part of the chosen people, but in Israel alone—we shall have to examine them, and determine in what way and in what degree they identify the Anglo-Saxon race with Israel, to whom the prophecies and promises pertain. If we do this we shall see, or I much mistake, that not one prophecy or promise only, but many, have received or are receiving their fulfilment in the position, character, and works of the Anglo-Saxons—that they describe the position, character, and works of Israel in such a way that we can find nothing answerable to them in any other people on earth. but that we do find them in or amongst the Anglo-Saxons. The things predicted or promised are so obviously identical with what we know amongst this people, and this people only, that they produce a conviction in the mind that they must be the people of whom the prophecies and promises were originally written under the influence of the Holy Spirit. We know that there are many striking coincidences to be found in the course of human history—things turning up and so fitting together that, to many minds, they seem as if certainly connected together by some pre-ordained purpose, but we never find a number of these coincidences falling out as in a series or obvious succession. On the contrary, they are few and far between, and when the first impression which any such coincidence produces on the mind has subsided, we are generally able to disassociate the two occurrences, and to perceive their independence of each other. In the prophetic word touching Israel and its identification with the Anglo-Saxons, we have a different state of things. Here is not one prophecy or promise, only, receiving its obviously literal fulfilment, but many—not one striking characteristic, only, predicted of Israel, and finding its fulfilment in the Anglo-Saxons, but many—not one pre-destined work to be done by Israel which is being done by the Anglo-Saxons, but many; and in no other known people is anything of the kind to be found. Surely, there must be something more than fortuitous coincidences here, and I cannot but think that a dispassionate examination of them will lead to the conclusion, that the Anglo-

Saxon race is of that people of whom the Lord spoke to Abraham, when he said, "By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord . . . that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore: and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies: and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xxii. 16-18). In proceeding to examine these prophecies, and to identify them with Israel and the Anglo-Saxon race, I shall classify them, as far as they will permit of classification, under the following heads:—

1. Israel's Localisation.
2. Their Christianisation.
3. Their acquired possessions or settlements.
4. Their giving birth to nations and kings.
5. Their diversified works.

In the examination and exhibition of these facts and circumstances, and of their connection with the prophecies concerning Israel, it is likely that other points of the identity of the Anglo-Saxon race with the prophetic declarations concerning the ten tribes may suggest themselves. Should that be so, I shall bring them together under a sixth head.

BRO. THE REV. G. R. PORTAL.

The Earl of Carnarvon, D.G.M., has appointed the Rev. G. R. Portal, M.W.G.M.M., to the family living of Burghclere, near Newbury. The subjoined extracts from the Surrey Times will show the estimation with which our rev. brother is regarded in the county, in which he has held a living for fourteen years:—

"THE REV. G. R. PORTAL.

"The active and estimable rector of Albury will shortly remove to Burghclere, having been nominated to this living by Lord Carnarvon, to whom for some years past Mr. Portal has been chaplain. Speaking in the interests of the public, we deeply regret Mr. Portal's removal from Albury. He has proved himself something more than a village clergyman, his influence having penetrated Guildford and the surrounding district. As a member of the Guildford Board of Guardians he was known as one of the ablest and most efficient members of the body. Kindly in spirit, and ever with a good word in season, the interests of the poor and the suffering never sustained loss when he was present. As a member, and for some time as chairman of the Assessment Committee, his great business qualities were conspicuously manifested, and enabled him to achieve several important reforms in assessment procedure.

The Surrey Deposit Society, which has now attained such large dimensions is, as far as its introduction into Surrey is concerned, entirely the work of Mr. Portal's hands. The systematic zeal and energy he has displayed in promoting the interests of the Society are beyond all praise and the success which has attended his labours must be to Mr. Portal his best recompense. As an active member of the Council of the Surrey County School, he has rendered essential service to the development of that now great educational institution. Mr. Portal will be greatly missed in Western Surrey, and although we must affect to congratulate him upon his preferment, it is with the grimmest of countenances, and with the by no means reassuring reflection that we are losing in our district the services of one of the most hard-working and faithful of clergymen."

"A MOURNFUL FACT.

"The Rev. G. R. Portal has accepted the nomination of the Earl of Carnarvon to the family living of Burghclere, near Newbury. Great and widespread regret is expressed by the parishioners of Albury at the removal of their beloved rector. No clergyman could be held in higher love and esteem than is Mr. Portal, and the intelligence of his approaching departure has thrown a feeling of gloom over the entire village.

"ORIGIN OF FREEMASONRY," &c.

No. 1.

Bro. Buchan having agreed with me as to the conditions for discussing the following question, viz., "That the Freemasonry of and since 1717 is a descendant of operative Freemasonry, and in fact was a revival of the operative body of former centuries" (see FREEMASON, page 409, July 1st, 1871), and having also written his first communication in support of the negative, it is now my turn to write the first letter on the affirmative side. My reply must be short, because it is impossible for me to afford the time just now to present to Bro. Buchan, and the numerous readers of THE FREEMASON, anything like an exhaustive sketch of the evidences in favour of the above position.

As various articles have been written by me for several years, which have mainly tended to establish the operative origin of the Freemasonry of 1717, it is not my intention to reproduce the facts already adduced, but merely to confine myself in this communication to an examination of the reasons offered by Bro. Buchan for embracing the negative. In THE FREEMASON for July 15th (page 443), Bro. Buchan enters "into the negative view of the subject in the opening chapter of the Aberdeen Records." I have carefully read the article, and have found it most interesting. The most of the statements seem to me both reliable and valuable to the Masonic student.

(a) Bro. Buchan shows that the Aberdeen Records contain no reference to Masonic degrees until the eighteenth century. (b) The Aberdeen Lodge was an operative one A.D. 1670, or in other words "a trade and friendly society combined." (Gentlemen, however, were admitted as members, so it was partly speculative but mainly operative). (c) That the members kept their festivals on saints' days. (d) A fee was exigible on the mark being selected, although there was no Mark Degree. (e) Great care was taken of "the Book," or records of statutes, meetings, marks, &c. (f) The records of the lodge extend to 1779, but no word occurs about chivalric degrees in connection with Freemasonry, nor indeed of Grand Masters or Grand Lodges until long after 1670.

So far as our experience goes, this sketch of the first chapter of the Aberdeen Records is chiefly as the records of other old lodges, and therefore we find nothing antagonistic to our position, but quite the contrary, as all the lodges of the 17th century (and which exist now) were formerly operative societies, formed for the purpose of protecting and carrying on the "Measson Trade." Bro. Buchan states that the question is, "Can there be found any evidence of the existence of our system, with its three degrees, &c., before 1717?" If not, then we are told by the same brother that, "to talk of its revival in 1717 is simply a delusion and a mistake."

Now, we submit that Bro. Buchan knows very well that no records of lodges have been produced working the three degrees before 1717, and is also aware that we do not believe that the three degrees were worked as separate degrees before 1717; hence, unless there are some facts to be considered other than those connected with the degrees, the question of "revival" would not be to us worth considering. From 1723, when the first Constitutions were published by the Grand Lodge of England down to the present time, the great majority of Masonic authors have believed in the "revival" of 1716 or 1717, and some of these were actual participators in the event itself. Therefore, for us to believe that "Freemasonry" of the 18th century was a new creation, and not a reconstruction of an ancient society of great antiquity, we are surely entitled to something more positive in the way of proof than mere negations, comparisons, and declarations. The question cannot be as to the evidence of the three degrees being worked before 1717 to DISPROVE the "revival," seeing that several who do not believe in the former actually believe in the "revival of 1717," and Bro. Buchan being aware of my objection to the antiquity of degrees, should certainly furnish other proofs of his position than those resting entirely on facts about the three degrees wherein we agree, while we disagree about the "revival."

What facts has Bro. Buchan to offer which militate against the operative origin of Freemasonry, or which prove the falsity of the so-called "Revival of 1717" (solemnly declared to have occurred by certain brethren said to be present, of known intelligence, scientific attainments, and of a religious profession)? I am able to prove, as time permits (a), that several members who belonged to operative lodges before 1717, took part in the "revival" of that period, and organised the first Grand Lodge; (b) that other operative lodges which worked before this date continued to work after, and subsequently joined the Grand Lodge; (c) that other lodges of similar antiquity refused to be connected with the new arrangement of Freemasonry, and kept their members together for many years, permitted the visitation of lodges under the Grand Lodge by their brethren on a reciprocal basis, gradually ceased to be active, and, as lodges, finally decaying; (d) that some of the members of the first Grand Lodge visited other countries, formed other Grand Lodges (by the union of operative and speculative lodges), and thus, in process of time, became such a powerful organization that the old operative lodges either joined and participated in the admirable effects of the "Revival," or ceased to exist; (e) also, that notwithstanding the operative character of the early lodges generally, there are records prior to the "revival" of lodges mainly composed of non-operative members, who never met for operative but wholly speculative purposes, and one lodge of which class actually started their own Grand Lodge, chartered other lodges and another Grand Lodge, while some of the same class succumbed to adverse influences during the latter part of the eighteenth century.

Now, it seems to me that unless some very weighty arguments and facts are adduced to show that it was possible to so deceive the operative Masons of the second decade of the 17th century, that they would accept as a revived, improved, and enlarged organization of Freemasonry that which was neither a revival, reconstruction, nor an improved constitution, but simply an entire new creation, we shall be justified in refusing to give up our long-cherished belief in the general integrity, honesty, and truthfulness of our Masonic forefathers.

I most cordially thank Bro. Buchan for the instalment of "Aberdeen Records," which promise to be a most readable series of articles on that old lodge, but I fail to see wherein he proves that the Freemasonry of 1717 had not an operative origin. W. J. HUGHAN.

MASONIC "DAMES."

BY BRO. D. MURRAY LYON,

One of the Grand Stewards in the Grand Lodge of Scotland, Pr. M. of Lodge Scarborough, Tobago, West Indies, etc.

Interest in the legendary interest of operative Masonry was a few years ago revived by the reproduction, by Bro. William James Hughan, of the Cole edition of the "Constitutions of the Freemasons," with an admirable epitome, chronologically arranged, of the MS. Constitutions. In his recent exhumation of unpublished records of the Craft,* the same eminent Masonic authority has fallen upon a copy of the MS. Constitutions that had been preserved by the York Lodge, bearing date 1693, and possessing peculiarities, the chief of which he thus describes and dilates upon:—

" . . . Before the Special Charges are delivered, 'The one of the elders taking the Booke, and that he or shee that is to bee made a Mason shall lay their hands thereon, and the charge shall be given.' This reference is unquestionably to a female being admitted, and has caused no little surprise in some quarters. We do not, however, see anything to excite astonishment, because, as we have before stated, this manuscript must not be judged simply by the date when the copy was written. It is likely enough a transcript of a much older document, and in former times the guilds, from which the crafts evidently sprung, admitted both sexes. . . . We are not prepared to advocate the opinion that the women, as with the men, were admitted into the Mysteries of Masonry. . . . There is [in the MS. in question] more than one reference to the 'Dame,' as well as the Master, especially in the 'Apprentice Charge,' the like of which we have not read before, and is a strong support of our views that women really did at times employ Masons as the Masters did. We believe, then, under certain conditions, in early times, women were admitted into the Masons' Guilds, as well as into others, and were generally the 'wives or daughters of Guild Brothers,' who did not, however, take part in its administrations or councils. Bearing this in mind, the clause in the MS. of York, 1693, is fully explained, and is at once an evidence of its antiquity, as the custom to admit women into the guilds appears gradually to have been discontinued as years rolled on. It is the only Masonic MS. we know of that mentions such a clause for women."

In other than Bro. Hughan's hands, the appearance in the manuscript under consideration of the noun "shee" might have been held as evidence that in the olden time it had been a custom of the Masonic Fraternity to initiate females. But the grounds are here too slender upon which to build such a theory, and Bro. Hughan, it will be seen, does not adopt it. The introduction of "shee" into this particular copy of the Constitutions appears to us to have been either through an error in the transcription of the pronoun "they," or from a desire to make the directions anent the manner in which the charges were to be given and the oath administered harmonise with what we conceive to be an interpolation of the word "dame" in conjunction with that of Master. Taken in connection with the context, the substitution of the article "the" for the adverb "then," is unquestionably the fault of the copyist. We are of opinion that the introduction of "shee" proceeded from the same cause, for even had "dame" been in the original, there would have been no necessity for converting they into she in the sentence referred to, seeing that the injunction given to apprentices as to their duty to the "dames" in whose employment they might be, in no way implies that it was the practice for these dames them-

* "Masonic Sketches and Reprints. I. History of Freemasonry in York. 2. Unpublished Records of the Craft. By William James Hughan, P.M. No. 131, Truro, etc. With Valuable Appendices, containing MSS. from the British Museum, etc., never before published. New York: Masonic Publishing Company, 626, Broadway, 1871." selves to be initiated. The variations of expression and orthography that are to be found in existing copies of the ancient Constitutions are due in great measure to the mistranscription, ignorance, or whim of copyists.

The reference that is made in certain clauses of the manuscript of 1693 to an entered apprentice's obligation to protect the interests of his "master or dame"—i.e., mistress—clearly indicates that at that time it was lawful for females in the capacity of employers to execute mason work. A similar custom obtained in Scotland, where widows and, failing sons, daughters of freemen masons were, under restrictions which varied in different localities, allowed to exercise the privileges of burgesses in the execution of mason-work. In ratifying their ancient statutes in 1660, the Ayr Squaremen Incorporation, whose deacon had been a party to the St. Clair Charter of 1628, "Enacted that every freman's doghter shall pay in all tyme coming to the deacone and this tred for hir fredome the soume of aught pound scotts with ane sufficient dinner, and this ordnance to stand in force in all tyme to come. The stranger quho maries hir to have the benefite off this allenerly."

In the case of female members of Scottish Incorporations, the "freedom of craft" carried with it no right to a voice in the administration of their affairs. Neither was their presence required at their enrollment, although their entry money was double that of members' sons.

The records of Mary's Chapel, so far as we are aware, afford the only instance of a Scotch lodge acknowledging the lawfulness of a female occupying the position of "dame," or mistress, in a Masonic sense, and from the following minute of the Lodge of Edinburgh, it will be observed that it was only to a very limited extent that the widows of master masons could do so:—

"Edr., 17 of Apryle, 1683. The whilk day, in presence of Thomas Hamilton deacone and John Harvywarden, and remanant masters of the mason craft, in corroboratione of the former practise which was of use and wont amongst them, it is statute and ordained that it shall be in no tyme or in no wayes leithsome for a widow to undertake workes or to employ jurneymen in any maner or way, but if such work as ancient customers of the deceased husbands or any other owner who may out of kyndnesse offer the benefite of their work to the sd widows be ofered unto them, then and that caice it shall be leithsome to them to have the benefite of the work, providing alwayes that they bespeake some freeman by whose advyse and concurrence the worke shall be undertaken and the jurneymen agreed with, quhich freeman is hereby charged to be altogether inhibited to participate of the benefite arising from the sd work, under the paine of doubling the soume reaped and arriessing to them by the sd work unjustly and to the prejudice of the sd widoues, and contrare to the intent of the masters mette for this tyme; and lykewise to underly the censure of the deakon and masters in all tyme coming, if they shall think it expedient to punish them for their malversatione and circumvention of the said widoues. Written and subscribed by order and with consent of the deakon, warden, and masters by Ar. Smith, Clerk."

We have received a copy of 20th Annual Report and Balance-sheet of the Birkbeck Building Society, which proves that popular institution to be in a very satisfactory condition. The gross receipts since the formation of the society have nearly reached eight millions sterling, while those of the past year amount to 1¼ million, showing an increase over the previous years of nearly £200,000. The present available profits for the distribution of bonus in the year 1873 amount to £52,857 18s. 8d. The number of members and depositors at the present time exceed 22,500.

The "GOOD OLD DAYS" of UNIVERSAL FREEMASONRY in ENGLAND.

"This assembly was collected in Exeter, for the love of God and for our soul's need, both in regard to our health of life here, and to the after days . . . Now we have agreed that our meeting shall be thrice in the twelve months . . . and let each gild-brother have two sesters of malt . . . And if any one neglect his contribution at the proper day let him pay twofold. And if any one of this brotherhood misgreet another let him make amends with thirty pence. Now we pray, for the love of God, that every man hold this meeting rightly, as we have rightly agreed upon it. God help us thereunto."—Anglo-Saxon Agreement of the Gild of Exeter.

Here we have proof as plain as need be of an assemblage, twelve hundred years ago, in the ever-faithful city on the Exe, of a Fraternity who met together for the promotion of their temporal and eternal welfare, but who did not forget the good cheer and the funds, who were not unmindful of comfortable and brotherly words, and who ended the declaration of their objects (from which the above quotation is taken) with a solemn prayer that "so mote it be." Nor was this, by any means, the first of such assemblages in England. There is evidence of their existence in books which contain the oldest relics of English laws, and some authorities contend that portions of the statutes of Alfred and Athelstan, which relate to such concourses, are based on customs handed down from the sacrificial feasts of the ancient Teutonic nations, or on the whole Sabine curias. Certain, however, it is that, at a very early period, these associations claimed a beginning "from time whereunto the memory of man runneth not," and that their universal existence is treated as a matter of well-known fact. Penzance, Cornwall, recently saw the gathering together of the brethren who have best and most completely preserved for us the spirit of the ancient English combinations. There were days when the famous gilds were so prevalent that it was taken to be a matter of course that every Englishman and English woman belonged to them. In the following paper I shall refer principally to a period of about five centuries ago; and if it can be shewn that at the middle and end of the fourteenth century our ancestors and ancestresses were almost all of them enrolled in societies having many points in common with modern Freemasonry, the heading of this article, startling as it may appear at first sight, will be found to have a good foundation. Our materials are gathered from Turner and Kemble, as to Anglo-Saxon usages; and from Herbert, as to some of the London companies. Should there be occasion or space to speak of places of assemblage or of costume, Parker and Fairholt, on architecture and dress respectively, will befriend us. But principally is our debt due to that deeply-interesting book—"English Gilds," by the late Mr. Toulmin Smith and Miss Lucy Toulmin Smith, his daughter.

Mutual self-help and manly independence led to those Saxon gilds. They were sworn brotherhoods between man and man either for religious, political, or social purposes; but whatever the main object sought, all had the same general characteristic of fraternal aid. Religious observances, and a feast and morn-speech in a gild-house, were common to both social gilds and gilds of crafts. By them no wrong was done to any one, and no public responsibilities of individuals were interfered with, so the King's license was not necessary for those who banded themselves for "brotherly aid and moral comeliness." While the gilds were lay bodies and existed for lay purposes, priests might belong to them and often did so. But the chaplain was occasionally not thought so much of as the poorer brethren. If the funds got too low to maintain both the man who said prayers and the men who wanted bread, bodies were first attended to and souls left to other means of help. If there were no chaplain, however, few of these widespread societies neglected some provision for services at church, for the decent burial of members, for fetching the body by the brethren, for attendance at the last rites. It was usual for all the brethren and sisters to go to church on the day of their general meetings. Of five hundred of these gilds not five but were formed equally of men and of women—wives as well as single women. (This last point is not put as one of resemblance to modern Masonry; Miss St. Leger, Lord Doneraile's daughter, being an accident—as a Masoness—and not an institution.) Chaucer describes the brethren who joined in the pilgrimage to Canterbury. A haberdashe, a carpenter, a webber, a dyer, &c., were all clothed in aivery of a solemn and great fraternity. Fresh and new was their gear; their girdles and their pouches were wrought with silver; each of them looked a burghess worthy to sit on the dais of a guildhall. Persons of all ranks, even of the highest in the kingdom, became members of these fraternities. The Corpus Christi Gild at York had 14,850 enrolled brethren, and the Trinity Gild at Coventry had Henry the Fourth and Henry the Sixth on its books—two facts which show the wide area covered by some of these institutions, and the equality, blended with respect for those who could command it, enjoyed within the lodges of those days. Each member, on admittance, took an oath of obedience, and was received lovingly, with a kiss of peace, by the brethren. "And then drynke aboute; and, after that, departe for that nyghte." There were fees for admission; payments "to the light" for a feast; contributions on the death of a brother or a sister; levies when help was needed for a poor brother in distress; the regular payments were, generally, so much a year or so much a quarter; and of the contents of the common pyx, or chest, the stewards gave a faithful account annually.

Once a year, at the least, these societies met. The brethren and sisters were summoned by an officer—not by advertisement, as in these days, we may easily suppose. Their meetings were called "morn speeches," and at them those who wished had the opportunity for "spekyngges tokedere for here comunc profyte," and much business was despatched in the choice of officers, admission of new brethren, reading over the ordinances, &c. Then they worshipped together, gave their alms, and feasted one and all "for the nourishing of brotherly love." The brethren and sistren, clad in their hoods or livery, assembled at the church, bearing the lights which formed a universal part of their rites—in the sacred edifice to make the prayers enjoined by their rules and to consecrate by acts, faith, and worthy deeds that brotherly love and peace which they were sworn to cherish. In some processions numerous lights, music, and sometimes flowers and garlands of leaves, were used. "Symbolic shows," too, had a part in the pageant. The larger towns had spacious places to assemble in, but there was a hall of some kind in almost every parish and village. It was frequently a timber building near the church, sometimes over the lych-gate, at the entrance to the churchyard. Some of the more wealthy members doubtless occasionally invited the association to meet in the "great house-place" of their mansions. With such facts as are before us it is not difficult to imagine some such scene as this—the streets and dresses alone are different to those we looked at the other week; the essential characteristics are the same in the 14th and 19th centuries.

WHICHUM.

THE SUPREME GRAND CHAPTER OF ENGLAND.

The usual Quarterly Convocation of the Grand Chapter was held on Wednesday, the 2nd August. The attendance was very numerous, about sixty companions being present.

The minutes of the last convocation being confirmed, the business of the evening was proceeded with—which we published last week. The charters were granted, except for chapters to be held at Hampton and Peters Bar, Grand Chapter confirming the views of the Committee expressed in the report.

Comp. Matthew Cooke's motion was brought forward by himself, but he failed in obtaining a seconder, and thus the subject could not be discussed.

LONDON INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.—The Marquis of Ripon presided on Wednesday last at the Privy Council Office, over a meeting of the General Purposes Committee appointed by Her Majesty's Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851, to carry out the current series of Annual International Exhibitions. There were also present the Marquis of Lansdowne, Sir Stafford Northcote, Sir Francis Sandford, Mr. Edgar Bowring, Mr. Cole, Mr. Thring, and Col. Scott, R.E., Secretary.

THE closing of the banks on the 7th inst., under the Bank Holidays' Bill, will doubtless lead to an almost general holiday. The Stock Exchange will be shut, the committee having recently added the first Monday in August to the fixed holidays of that establishment, as well as Lloyd's, the Jerusalem, the Corn and Mincing-lane markets, and the offices of all the leading companies and private firms. In Liverpool there will be no produce or cotton markets, and both the Underwriters' and the Exchange Rooms will be closed. Strong efforts are also being made to induce the authorities to close the Custom-house. A strong hope is expressed that before the following bank holiday, on the 26th of December, an arrangement will be come to in favour of closing all Government establishments, and thus make the holiday a thoroughly complete one.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF SOMERSET.

The annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of Somerset was held at Crewkerne, and was a complete success. The Prov. Grand Master, the Earl of Carnarvon, was expected to be present, but almost at the last moment a telegram was received to the effect that his lordship was unable to come owing to the lateness of the debate in the House of Lords on the previous evening. Deputy Prov. Grand Master, Captain Bridges, of Bridgwater—upon whom devolved the duty of conducting the proceedings—presided.

The lodge was held at the Town Hall, which was admirably arranged and decorated. About 120 attended. Only two lodges out of the whole province failed to answer the roll-call. There were a few visitors from Dorset, Devon, and Wilts. The lodge room and its approaches were beautified with groups of very fine plants in bloom, ferns, &c., lent from Mr. Scott's nurseries.

The Provincial Officers for the ensuing year were invested as follows:—

Bro. J. W. Shum, P.M. 53	... P.G.S.W.

A magnificent banquet was served in the George Hotel Assembly Room, and about a hundred brethren sat down, under the presidency of the Deputy Grand Master, the P.G. Wardens (Bros. Shum and Strawson) occupying the vice-chairs. The viands, fruits, and wines were the theme of general admiration. The banqueting-room was handsomely decorated, and the guests warmly praised the Crewkerne brethren and Mrs. Marsh for the elegance and liberality of the provision made for their entertainment.

The following is the toast list:—"The Queen and the Craft" was proposed by the Chairman, who also gave "The M.W.G.M. of England, the Marquis of Ripon." The Chairman also gave successively, "The Prince of Wales, P.G.M. of England;" "The Earl of Carnarvon and the rest of the Grand Officers, Past and Present," which was responded to by Bro. R. G. F. Thomas; and "The Earl of Carnarvon as R.W.P.G. Master of Somerset."—Bro. Rugg gave "The Health of Captain Bridges and the rest of the Prov. Grand Officers," which the Chairman acknowledged.—Captain Bridges gave the health of the "Visiting Brethren," which was acknowledged by Bros. Jones and Dyke.—"Parrett and Axe Lodge," proposed by the Chairman, was responded to by Bros. Strawson, W.M., and Galpin, P.M.—The Chairman gave "The Masonic Charities," which was acknowledged by Bro. ## MARK MASONRY.

FESTIVAL AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

The annual summer festival in behalf of the Benevolent Fund of Grand Mark Lodge was held on Friday, 28th ult., at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, when a full attendance of brethren and ladies testified to the interest which is taken by the members of this ancient degree in the prosperity of Grand Lodge. The chair was taken by Bro. J. C. Parkinson, G.J.W., and among the other brethren present were the Grand Master (Rev. G. R. Portal), Colonel Burdett, George Elliot, M.P., Rev. D. Shaboc, Rev. Thos. Robinson, T. Meggy, O. Hansard, Fraser Rae, F. Davidson, R. Spencer, Eugene Cronin, S. Rosenthal, R. J. Spiers, F. Binckes, H. W. Binckes, Magnus Ohren, Joseph Wright, Glover, W. Roebuck, Hanson, Dibdin, M. Ray, T. Wynne, L. Bigg, H. Massey, &c.

The banquet was served in beautiful style by Messrs. Bertram and Roberts, under the superintendence of Mr. Coates.

After the usual loyal toasts, Bro. Parkinson, who addressed the company throughout as "ladies and brethren," remarked, in proposing "The health of the Grand Master of the Mark Degree": History is not wanting in salient examples of able Churchmen who have also been leaders in secular life—of ministers of religion who have also been powerful officers of state. In Freemasonry, the theory and sound practice of which embrace the broad elementary truths of religion, and which is yet an organization rejoicing in secular aims and conferring temporal benefits, there is, I think, a special appropriateness in the fact of a clergyman being elected by the free votes of his brethren to fill the leading place among them. (Hear, hear.) I believe we have no less than ten clergymen of the Church of England among our company to-night; and it seems to me that we see the two sides of Freemasonry blended very happily when we find ministers of religion busying themselves with its working details, and that those reverend brethren afford to the outer world convincing proof that there is nothing in our Order which is inimical to man's highest and holiest interests. (Cheers.) In the Reverend Grand Master of the Mark Degree, we have a brother greatly gifted with the ruling or administrative faculty; one who learnt the art of governing in the cold shade of opposition, and who did not forget the precious lesson when the opportunity came for him to wield power. Our Grand Master brought, moreover, to the discharge of his high trust a mind skilled in controversy, stored with classical knowledge, and exercised in the most sacred of functions—that of assuaging the sorrows and guiding the aspirations of the human soul. Need I add that our Grand Master came to us possessed of a strong will, ardent convictions, indomitable courage, and a goodly stock of shrewd, hard common sense? These be promising qualities out of which to evolve a prosperous reign, and as your mouthpiece, and in your name, I beg to thank our Grand Master for his judicious and constitutional rule, and at the same time call upon you to drink bumpers to his health. (The toast was enthusiastically received.)

The G.M., in reply, said that he had endeavoured, while holding his high position, to conciliate, as far as possible, every one whom he had come in contact with. But what had given him as much pleasure as anything else during his Mastership was the knowledge that he had been the first to inaugurate these happy meetings at which the ladies and the brethren sat down together to banquet. Whether the practice might profitably be extended to Masonry he would not attempt to say, but it was at all times pleasant to think that such happy reunions, took place in Masonry. (Applause.)

Brother Colonel Burdett replied for the Grand Officers.

In proposing "Success to the Mark Benevolent Fund," Bro. Parkinson said: Ladies and Brethren, I now pass to the toast of the evening, and in asking you to drink it heartily, I propose to explain briefly why we are here, who we are, what we claim, and to what we aspire. It has been asked, What is Mark Masonry? What does the Mark Degree mean? Is it something different to Freemasonry? Is it opposed to Freemasonry? These problems are, happily, very easy of solution. This Mark Degree, the existence and usefulness of which we celebrate to-night, is composed exclusively of men who being Freemasons already, and having the ritual, the traditions, the objects, and the privileges of their order deeply at heart, associate together under a distinct banner, but without abating one iota of their loyalty to the supreme rulers of the Craft, without renouncing a single privilege, and certainly without jeopardising a solitary landmark, (Laughter and cheers.) But for the better comprehension of the position of Mark Masonry and its relation to that general Freemasonry to which all Mark Masons necessarily belong, I will venture to draw upon an experience I acquired in a recent tour in the East. There, in ancient Egypt, that land of mystery and old renown, side by side with hoary monuments of antiquity, lying the yellow sands wherein these have for thousands of years found a resting-place and a home, their original purposes doubtful, and the very names of their authors forgotten—runs the most famous of canals. In that strange country the enterprise of man has, as you know, pierced the desert and turned a peninsula into an island. Over the arid waste, where the camel and the ibis, the Bedouin and the jackal, have held uninterrupted sway through the long grey centuries, argosies from every sea now make stately progress. Science has triumphed, the waters of two oceans are united; and the benefits to humanity and to civilisation will be incalculable. Let this Suez canal, then, stand for general Freemasonry, bearing on its broad bosom rich freights, knitting the nations of the earth more closely together, bringing about a more cordial understanding between those separated by time and space, and performing the god-like function of promoting peace on earth, good-will towards men. But running side by side with this glorious artificial sea, is another and smaller stream, created by the same agencies, reaching the same points, of service to the same mariners, and marking its progress through the sandy way by a line of tender foliage always beautifully fresh and green. This bears the attractive title—a title in which fancy traces some of the poetic imagery of the East—of the "Sweet Water Canal," and consists of a pure and refreshing stream, which was brought through the desert artificially when the works of the more important canal were being carried out, and which brought smiling vegetation, luxuriant gardens, and the goodly fruits of the earth in its train. If we adopt an image not unfrequently used by the theologian, and speak of the world as a desert—if we claim for general Freemasonry the beneficent powers and objects of that link which has made East and West one—then we may, I think, fairly regard Mark Masonry as the smaller stream, running peacefully side by side with its more powerful neighbour, interchanging benefits, never obtruding itself, but still welcoming heartily all who choose to partake of its refreshing waters. The Mark Benevolent Fund, which we are celebrating now, upon which the presence of so many fair ladies sheds a benign influence, and particulars of which will be read to you by our Bro. Binckes, is the line of tender foliage, marking the benefits conferred by this degree on those who have been overtaken in the desert, and who, parched and weary, are sorely in need of sustenance and help. (Applause.) We hope, by your favour, to increase our means of usefulness this evening, and I will just add that what this fund gives it gives quickly. There is no waiting, no inquisitorial sifting of necessities; but directly we are satisfied that a brother is deserving and in need, we render him all the assistance our means allow. Ladies and Brethren, confident of your sympathy and support, I give you "Success to the Mark Benevolent Fund." (Loud applause.)

Bro. Binckes also advocated the claims of the Fund, and announced that the Stewards' list amounted to more than £100.

Bro. Spiers returned thanks on behalf of the Grand Stewards of the Festival.

Bro. Magnus Ohren, G.M.O., proposed "The health of the Ladies." He said that he felt a feather had been placed in his cap by the toast the Chairman had done him the honour to entrust him with—a toast which should make the heart of any Mason beat with pride to have to propose it in the presence of so many of his Masonic sisters—"The Ladies," who had that day attended in such large numbers to grace their festive board. He believed the Grand Mark Festival had become popular with the ladies from the fact that they could sit at the banquet table with their husbands and friends, with all the pleasure and enjoyments of a private party. Some brethren might think they were but toasting their wives—theirself—but they must remember they were toasting them collectively, wives and sisters. He would also assure the ladies that the Masons present—particularly the Mark Masons—were delighted to meet them on that occasion, and he trusted they would be able to attend many such happy gatherings.

The toast was received with much applause, and was ably responded to by Bro. Ray on behalf of the ladies.

During the evening the company were entertained with some charming singing by Miss Alice Fairman, who was assisted by some amateurs of considerable ability—kind volunteers for the occasion.

The musical arrangements were under the superintendence of Bro. F. Davidson. The dinner and all the arrangements met with warm encomiums.

THE ANNUAL FESTIVAL OF THE DOMATIC LODGE, No. 177.—In our report of this festival last week it was stated that Bro. Foulger, the Immediate Past Master, proposed the first toast, "The Health of H.M. the Queen." This is incorrect; it should have been Bro. J. Walford, the W. Master.

South Middlesex Lodge, No. 858.—An "Emergency" was held at Beaufort House, Walham Green, on Thursday se'nnight. The W.M., Bro. Wellsman, presided, and the lodge having been opened in the three degrees, Bros. Singleton and Egan were raised to the sublime degree of M.M. Bro. Radcliffe, Treas., then took the gavel, and passed Bro. Crane to the degree of F.C. The W.M. having resumed the chair initiated Mr. Thomas Ward, Assistant Secretary of the London Free and Open Church Association, and Mr. William Blunell, Surgeon, into the mysteries and privileges of ancient Freemasonry. The lodge was then closed in due form, and the brethren adjourned to refreshment.

PROVINCIAL.

LIVERPOOL.—Newton Lodge, No. 823.—This body of "ancient free and accepted Masons" assembled for the duties of the lodge at the Temple, Hope-street, on Wednesday, the 19th ult., the chief business being the installation of the W.M.-elect, Brother T. D. Pierce. The attendance of brethren was unusually large, and amongst them were a large number of visitors. The lodge having been opened in due form, the minutes of the previous meeting were read and, after some discussion, agreed to. Bro. Pierce was subsequently installed W.M. for the ensuing year, the ceremony of installation being performed by Bro. Samuel Haynes, I.P.M., in a very effective and impressive manner. The following officers were then invested by the newly-chained W.M.:—Bros. Jos. Holland, S.W.; William Boulton, I.W.; Wm. John Lant, Treas.; Joseph Sharp, Sec.; William Cottrell, S.D.; Thomas Shaw, J.D.; Wm. Wilson, J.G.; Alfred T. Lowe, S.S.; Jno. Houlding and T. Evans, J.S.; T. Ashmore, P.M., D.C.; H. Ashmore, Choirmaster; John Carter, Org.; The W. Master afterwards gave the first degree to three gentlemen in a manner which augurs well for the efficiency of his services during his year of office. In the course of the evening he also presented a very handsome P.M.'s jewel to Bro. Haynes, for the highly satisfactory and admirable manner in which he had fulfilled the duties of the chair which he had just passed, by which he had maintained the harmony, good feeling, and prosperity of the lodge.—In reply, Bro. Haynes thanked the brethren for their substantial remembrance of his services, and assured them he would continue to maintain and advance the position and well-being of the lodge.—Several gentlemen were proposed for initiation, and two applications for relief were granted. The brethren were then called from labour to refreshment, and during the merry gathering a number of loyal, patriotic, and Masonic toasts were given and responded to with great enthusiasm, the proceedings being greatly enlivened by the fine harmony for which the lodge is famous. Bro. J. Skeaf, W.M., presided at the pianoforte. We may add that the lodge during the past year has greatly prospered, increasing both in the "quantity and quality" of its members.

MIDDLESEX.—Harrow Lodge, No. 1310.—The final meeting of the session was held on Tuesday last at the Railway Hotel, Harrow. The W.M., Bro. G. Pym, with his accustomed ability raised Brothers W. Spells and W. Batchelor (1178). A P.M.'s jewel was voted to the retiring W.M., Bro. Pym. Bro. W. H. Green, S.W., was unanimously elected W.M. for the ensuing year, and Bro. John Coutts, G.P., was re-elected Treasurer. The Tyler's election was deferred until the installation meeting in May next. There were present, besides those named, Bros. W. H. Green, S.W.; E. Harper, J.W.; Coutts, Treas.; Fredk. Walters, Sec.; S. Homewood, S.D.; J. Harrison, J.G.; F. Harrison, W.S.; J. Smith, P.M.; W. Spells, J. A. Martin, E. Rawson, T. Brewer, &c. Visitors: Bros. G. S. Elliott (759), E. P. Hartley (778), W. Batchelor (1178). Refreshment followed labour.

"MORE than a year ago one of my children was attacked with bronchitis, and, after a long illness, was given up by my physician as 'past cure.' I was then induced to try your Vegetable Pain Killer, and from the time I began the use of it the child rapidly got better, and is now strong and healthy.—JOHN WINSTANLEY, 10, White-st., L'pool, 7th, 1869.—To P. ## THE ANTAGONISM OF MASONIC RITES.

A GREAT deal has been said of late about the antagonism of certain Masonic rites, and a vast amount of misconception appears to prevail upon the subject. A little calm consideration of the questions involved will, however, enable us to dispel many of those deplorable fallacies which tend to alienate many good Masons, and to destroy the harmony which should ever prevail amongst the members of all branches of the Masonic system. In the first place, we may refer to the prolonged controversy which has filled the columns of THE FREEMASON respecting the origin and claims of the Ancient and Accepted Rite. The opponents of the Rite assert that its basis is not only unsound, but that in operation and results it is detrimental to the best interests of the Craft. They maintain that it establishes an imperium in imperio not to be tolerated in any country where a Grand Lodge of Symbolic Freemasonry exists. They contend that its administration is an ill-concealed despotism—obnoxious to the charge of injustice, corruption, and fraud. Such, in effect, is a summary of the bill of indictment brought against the Rite, and it cannot be said that we have overdrawn the picture. An examination of the evidence by which the arraignment is sustained will not, however, justify such a sweeping condemnation. It has been well said by Mackey, a learned American writer, that the York Rite of Symbolic Masonry is the mother of all rites, and that the others are so many schisms or deviations from that common centre. But at the same time, it must be remembered that even as the British Constitution, admirable as it may be, is not adapted for every race or nation under the sun, neither is the grand simplicity of the "Three Degrees" suited to the tastes of the Fraternity in every land. Accordingly, we find that at a very early period after the revival of Freemasonry in England additions, which it by no means follows were improvements, were made to the original structure. While all admitted that the groundwork was beautiful, some thought the edifice would look better if a few more ornaments were added to the frieze, while others sought to subdivide the main hall of the mansion into so many less capacious chambers. Ramsay is credited with the dubious distinction of being one of the first innovators. The idea of equality was undoubtedly repugnant to a mind which had been trained in the ultra-loyal school of Divine right; and among the proud noblesse of France, Ramsay found many disciples who would never have joined the Craft had he not opened to them the inner sanctorum of the chivalric degrees. It is therefore idle, at this time of day, to brand the promoters of the Ancient and Accepted Rite as knaves and impostors; because in reality the work had been begun long before their appearance on the scene, and the rôle which they undertook was simply that of organising a system out of the chaotic medley of degrees which had been previously invented. There is one point, however, upon which we cannot so readily acquit them. When the Inspectors-General of the Rite framed their famous Constitutions at Charleston in 1801, they deliberately palmed off upon the Masonic public an unfounded statement, that Frederic the Great of Prussia had instituted the 33rd degree, and had ratified the Constitutions which were then promulgated. It is now acknowledged by the Charleston Council itself that the statement was untrue, and it is also known by all who have investigated the matter, that Frederic never took part in, or recognised, any but the first three degrees of Freemasonry. It is a popular error to fancy that English Masons discountenanced, until a comparatively recent period, the innovations and inventions of their Continental brethren. Long before the Rite of Perfection of twenty-five degrees was reduced into a system, several of Ramsay's theories had taken root in Great Britain and Germany. Beyond question, we may attribute to him the germ, and to his enthusiastic successor, the Baron Hunde, the development of the many Templar organisations which spread so rapidly throughout Europe. One hundred and thirty years ago it was a moot point among German Masons whether the Templars would not, like Aaron's serpent, swallow up all the other orders and rites of Freemasonry, and but for the schism caused by the establishment of the "Rite of Relaxed Observance," in contra-distinction to that known as the "Strict Observance," Templarism would probably have won the day. But although ultimately defeated and almost annihilated in Germany and Holland, it triumphed in Sweden and maintained its ground in England. There is abundant evidence to prove that the Grand Lodge of "All England," at York, favoured the Templars, and in other parts of the kingdom encampments were held down to the time of Dunckerley, who, with all the zeal of a convert, never rested until he had established a Grand Conclave for England and Wales. In like manner, although the degrees of the Ancient and Accepted Rite, or "Rite of Perfection," as it was then called, were not adopted in their entirety by the Masons of England, the most important grades, such as the Rose Croix and the Kadosh, were regularly worked in connection with the Order of Knights Templar. Some of Hunde's ceremonies were also preserved in the degrees of the Holy Sepulchre or Red Cross of Palestine, the White Cross or Knights of Malta, the Knights of St. John the Evangelist, the Knights of Patmos, the Priests of Melchisedec, the Knights of Constantine, and several others now known only by name, except to a few Masonic students.

These are facts which should be borne in mind by all who desire to understand the controversy as to the relative claims of the Supreme Grand Council 33<sup>d</sup> for England and of the old encampments or chapters which appear to have conferred the Rose Croix and Kadosh degrees for many years according to the old system. The objection made to the Constitution of the Ancient and Accepted Rite, that it includes within its jurisdiction the first three degrees of the Order, is hardly tenable so far as this country is concerned—inasmuch as the members of the Council disclaim any interference with the powers of Grand Lodge.

The system of administration might, however, we are inclined to believe, be brought more in accord with the spirit of the times, for true progress is not incompatible with the careful conservation of all that is really necessary and just. We are far from saying that the present heads of the Rite are not eminently qualified for the dignified positions they hold; but the principle of self-nomination savours too much of the obsolete "close borough" system, and reminds one unpleasantly of the old Puritans who first resolved that the earth belonged to the saints, and, secondly, that they—the aforesaid Puritans—were the saints. We cannot do more than glance at the subject now, but in the interests of peace, and of that fraternal union which has ever been the strength and support of Freemasonry, we would urge upon all parties concerned the exercise of mutual forbearance in the discussion of matters appertaining to the Order. Above all, the use of personalities should be strictly avoided, as not only foreign to the point, but ungentlemanly and unmasonic. We have, unfortunately, within our pale a few reckless reprobates, destitute alike of honour or good sense, whose only weapon is abuse, and who cannot rise above the level of mediocrity unless goaded by malice and sustained by hate. To such men we have no remarks to offer, as they will never be allowed to pollute the pages of THE FREEMASON; but to our correspondents generally we appeal never to forget in the heat of argument that they are gentlemen and Masons—that the cause of truth is not advanced by sarcasms or jeers, but that all discussions and disputes on Masonic subjects, archæological, historical, or ritualistic, should be conducted in the columns of the Masonic press with the same decorum and sans froid that would be observed in the bosom of a Masonic lodge under the eye of a vigilant Master. But we trust that we have heard the last of the supposed antagonism of Masonic rites.

H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES

The following appeared in a letter of the Special Correspondent of the Daily Telegraph on Wednesday:—

"I have now ascertained why the Review of the troops at the Curragh was suddenly changed to the Phoenix Park. It appears that there is yet another festivity looming in the distance. The Freemasons of Dublin have from the first been anxious to pay some compliment to the Prince, and with some difficulty they have at last succeeded in bringing about an occasion of doing so. His Royal Highness, according to my present information, will be installed on Friday evening in the Grand Lodge room of the Masonic Hall in Molesworth-street as Patron of the Freemasons of Ireland. The grand ceremony will commence at five o'clock, and much to the disappointment of the Freemasons, there will be a ceremony, and nothing more; for a dinner party and the Agricultural Ball interfere with any Masonic festivities. The officers of the Grand Lodge, the Provincial Grand Masters, and the Secretaries, the officers of all the Irish lodges, and the Past Masters from the Dublin lodges, will be present. The numbers will be necessarily restricted, for I am told the Grand Lodge room will hold about 350 people. The greatest enthusiasm prevails among the brethren, and no bit of news has recently given such universal satisfaction."

BRO. NORTON'S CORRECTION.

I should have thanked Bro. Norton for his correction of an error in my short article on the Massachusetts Grand Lodge Proceedings ere now, but really I have had little time to spare of late for anything. I thank him now, however, and can explain the prefix of "Rev." to be a printer's error, as my description was the R. W. Bro. C. L. Woodbury.

Was John Wesley a Freemason? is a question that many have put again and again, and if you have room in the ensuing edition, I should be glad if some of your readers would settle the point.

MASONIC DATES.

The York and French Rite Masons of the Old and New World, to the Christian era add 4,000 years, calling it Anno Lucius, or Year of Light; thus the year 1871 would read A.L. 5871. All official documents pertaining to the first three degrees of Masonry are thus dated. York Rite Masons begin the year with January 1; French Rite, March 1. Those practising in the Antient and Accepted Rites use the Jewish calendar, which adds 3,660 years, and call it Anno Mundi—A.M., Year of the World. They sometimes use the Hebrew year, beginning September 26, or 1st of Tisri; using the initials, A.H., Anno Hebraico, the Hebrew year.

Royal Arch Masons date from the building of the second Temple, 530 years before Christ. Anno Inventionis—A. Inv., in the year of the discovery.

Royal and Select Masons frequently use Anno Lucis. But they should date from the completion of Solomon's Temple. This would add 1000 to the Christian Era. Anno Depositionis—A. Dep., in the year of the Deposit.

Knights Templar date from the organisation of the Order, 1117. Anno Ordinis—A.O., in the year of the Order.

Those of the Rite of Misraim, add four years to the usual computation of the age of the world.

To find the date for the York Rite, add 4,000 to the present year; for the Ancient and Accepted Rite, add 3,760 to the present year; for the Royal and Select Masters, add 1,000 to the present year; for the Knights Templar, subtract 1,118 from the present year; of the Rite of Mizraim, add 4,004 to the present year.

HOW TO MAKE A MASON.

M.W. Bro. Samuel Lawrence, Grand Master of Masons in Georgia, uses the following well-considered language on this important topic:—"To take a candidate, and pass him hurriedly through the ceremonies of the degrees with the bare recital of the ritual lectures, and too often with a moderate modicum only of these, will serve to make a member of a lodge, but can hardly be expected to make a Mason. You place in his hands a key to a lock of most intricate contrivance, and many wards, and you fail to instruct him in the use of the key. What marvel that he never enters the door? The 'open sesame' has never been imparted to him. Something more is required. You must enlighten him on the principles of Masonry—its great moral beauty and final saving object. It will not do to say, 'O, he is already prepared in his heart;' for that heart, if you confine it to barren pasturage, will soon fall into leanness, and at length die out. No; you must clothe the body of Masonry with its garments of beauty, you must make it inviting to the eye and refreshing to the soul. This cannot be done by unaided human genius. Genius may array it in the most graceful or the most gorgeous habiliments, but without the light from within their hues will remain leaden and dull. And that light must be caught from the source opened in our first great light itself. The rays of Divinity must shine in, and out of, and over it, or it will be darkness, and not light."

A SHORT ANALYSIS

Proceedings at a Conference on the Mark Degree,

HELD AT LONDON, APRIL 3RD & 4TH, 1871,

At which the Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter of Scotland, the Grand Chapter of Ireland, and the Grand Lodge of Mark Masters were represented.

(a) The report is most valuable and interesting.

The D.G.M. for Ireland, in wishing for the "first step,"† will never take a second, if the first is to be a sine que non, as the Grand Lodge of England, according to the opinion of most English Masons who have thought on the subject, will never recognise the Mark Degree. It went out of its way to adopt the Royal Arch in A.D. 1813, and it is likely will never again add to the "Three Degrees."

In Bro. Mackersy's lucid explanation of the present position of the Mark Degree is a reference to "certain degrees which occupy a position between the degrees of Master Mason and the Royal Arch" in Scotland and Ireland. This is correct with respect to the former, but not the latter. According to the last edition of the Constitutions for Ireland, no degrees are necessarily worked as intermediate to the two mentioned; and, what is more to the point, the Grand Chapter of Ireland does not in these Regulations declare the Mark Degree to be a prerequisite for Royal Arch Masonry, and their warrants do not provide for the working of the Past and Excellent Master Degrees.

We beg to draw attention to these important facts, as they will be found to affect the arguments very considerably of some of the worthy representatives.

Strange to say, this error is often made, and therefore we must beg most positively to state that many Royal Arch Masons under Ireland have not received the Past and Excellent Master Degrees, and some have not had the Mark Degree: so that Ireland is on a par almost with England in that respect,‡ these degrees not being generally worked in that country.

Bro. Mackersy (the esteemed Grand Scribe E. of Scotland) states that an Irish companion could attend a Scotch chapter without being requested to retire during any portion of the preparatory ceremonies, but an English R.A. Mason would have to leave; whereas the fact is, that both English and Irish members cannot be present during the whole of the ceremonies, unless otherwise instructed than their Constitutions provide for.

I take it, then, as established that the Grand Chapters of Ireland and Scotland are not identical in working, although they are virtually declared to be so in the Report.

Respecting the Bon-Accord Chapter, No. 70, of Aberdeen, a letter appeared in the 5 (d) Freemasons Magazine for June, 1855, page 368, by the Z. of the chapter. Bro. James Rittie, in defending the action of his chapter, observed that the Grand Chapter of Scotland denuded itself of the right to grant Mark warrants on March 12th, 1848, by resolving "That the power of granting these degrees [Mark and Past Master] shall be vested in chapters only, as formerly declared by a resolution of the Supreme Chapter, dated 16th September, 1846."

How can this resolution be sufficient to justify the introduction of Mark Masonry into England by the members of No. 70 Chapter, Aberdeen? Certainly, such a position can never logically be held by the Mark Grand Lodge, who has all along objected to the invasion of England (Masoni-cally) by the Grand Chapter of Scotland. As a member of the Grand Chapter of Scotland, I object most strongly to any arguments founded on the supposed right of subordinate chapters to grant Mark warrants out of their jurisdiction. The Regulations of the Grand Chapter of Scotland, dated 1848, of course had only reference to its own jurisdiction. I therefore agree with the Grand Scribe E. (p. 5) that the above "was a step which no supreme body could tolerate."

* The pages refer to the "Report," published by authority of the G. Chapter of Scotland.

† Viz., Recognition of the Mark Degree by the Grand Lodge of England (Craft).

‡ The remarks of the worthy chairman on the second day of conference would lead one to believe that the Excellent and Super-Excellent Degrees were generally worked in Ireland, but such is not the case. The Mark is not a prerequisite for the Arch in Ireland, and the degrees of "Past Master" and "Most Excellent" are not worked at all under the authority of the Grand Chapter.

The St. John's Lodge, No. 3 bis, Glasgow, certainly obtained the decision of the Grand Lodge in favour of its working the Mark Degree (and also for other lodges), and the Grand Lodge of Scotland (the Grand Scribe E. states) was "compelled to admit that the Mark Degree, as practised by them, was in point of fact a part of the Fellow-Craft Degree." Now, notice the words "as practised by them." It does not follow, then, that the Mark Degree is actually and always a part of the Second Degree, from this decision, but only that the Mark Degree, "as practised by the St. John's Lodge," was a part of the Second Degree.

It seems to me this point has been overlooked. There has not been sufficient evidence accumulated as yet to justify any one in positively asserting the original connection of the Mark Master's Degree with the Fellow-Craft. For every item of proof adduced to prove this apparent connection, I undertake to produce other evidences to establish the fact of the independence of the Mark Master's Degree, at least during the last, if not during the present century.

The following minute entered into between the Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter of Scotland is a case in point, viz., "That this degree [i.e., the Mark], whether viewed as a second part of the Fellow-Craft Degree, or as a separate degree, has never been recognised or worked in England, Ireland, or the Continent, or in America, as a part of St. John's Masonry."

We have, therefore, only to consider Scotland, and in confirmation of the superior position of the Mark Master's Degree to the Master Mason (superior as respects gradation in a Rite) even in Scotland, I would instance the Regulations of the "Operative Lodge of Banff," January 7th, 1778, which provide "That in time coming all members that shall hereafter raise to the Degree of Mark Mason shall pay one merk Scots, but not to obtain the Degree of Mark Mason before they are passed Fellow-Craft. And those that shall take the Degree of Mark Master Masons shall pay one shilling and sixpence sterling into the Treasurer for behoofe of the Lodge. None to attain to the Degree of Mark Master Masons until they are raised Master."*

This is the earliest minute I have as yet seen on the subject, and although many speak so much about the Mark Degree in connection with St. John's Lodge, Glasgow, no minutes of any importance or antiquity have been produced to prove such connection, and it is questionable after all whether an earlier minute than the one just quoted of 1778 can be found in Scotland.

I have no hesitation in saying that the St. John's Lodge, No. 3 bis (and in this respect it is but as all other lodges) never worked the Mark Degree before 1736. As a degree, it was unknown then in any country, and all that old minutes state simply confirms the ancient custom of "choosing the Mark."

The interesting observations of Bro. Kerr (representative of the G.L. of Scotland) do not prove the Mark Degree was known in 1598 in connection with "Mary Chapel" Lodge, Edinburgh. The name of the Fellow-Craft or Master, as also his mark, had to be inserted in the Book kept for that purpose, but no ceremony is ever mentioned, and the words Mark Degree, or anything approaching them, never occur, for the simple reason that, as a degree, the Mark Master was then unknown.

* This extract was made for me from the original minutes of this old chapter by Bro. Stenhouse Cairnsfather, of Banff, and is certified July 25th, 1857.

There are several records still preserved of the 17th and 18th centuries that illustrate our position, and abundant evidence has been accumulated to satisfy the most exacting that no degree whatever is alluded to in the ancient records of Craft Masonry for which Scotland is so famous, but all that can be claimed is that a mark was selected and registered, and a fee was exigible in consequence.

"Mother Kilwinning Lodge," Ayrshire, in the 17th century, charged four shillings as a fee for choosing the mark. In the Mark Book of the old Lodge at Aberdeen, dating from 1670, there is no trace of any ceremony in connection with the selection of the mark, nor is there in the minute books of Lodge "Journeymen," No. 8, Scotland.

In the Records of the ancient Lodge at Alnwick (Northumberland) marks are generally attached to the signatures from the first decade of the last century.

In the ancient Records of Haughfoot Lodge, Scotland, no mention is made of either the Third or of the Mark Degrees. These minutes commence 22nd Dec., 1702, and end 1763.

At a meeting of the old lodge at Brechin, Scotland, "27 day of December, 1714 years, being the anniversary of the Holly Apostle St. John," it was resolved "That each Meason shall insert his mark in this book, and shall pay thirteen shillings Scots, moe for booking their mark."

In all these records, and also in others, nothing has been found that alludes to either the Mark Degree or the Master Mason's Degree before 1716. The Fellow-Crafts simply chose their marks, which were registered on payment of the fee, and there the matter ended. The Masters being in official positions, and not members of a superior degree to the Fellow-Craft.

Bro. D. Murray Lyon, of Ayr (a great authority on ancient Masonry in Scotland), positively declares that "Up to within a short period of the abdication of St. Clair of the Protectorate of the Craft, there is a total absence from lodge records of any allusion to secret Masonic Rites other than what was embraced in giving the Mason's word." This same authority (who wrote the "History of Mother Kilwinning Lodge," and is now engaged in doing a similar important work for the "Mary Chapel," No. 1, Edinburgh) has stated it to be his decided conviction that there was no Mark Degree before 1736 in Scotland. In the remarkable award made respecting Lodge "Journeymen," and "Mary Chapel" of 1715 (a copy of which we have now before us) no mention is made of any degrees, but the "mason word" often occurs. We would gladly welcome a few words on this interesting subject from our old friend and brother, D. Murray Lyon, and we feel sure our readers would also.

I should be very sorry to hear of the Grand Chapter of Scotland acknowledging the Mark Master's Degree as a part of the Fellow-Craft Degree, especially as in the ceremonies of the latter throughout all last century the Mark Master is nowhere even alluded to or noticed in any way, so far as we can judge. It is only for those who think otherwise to produce a minute or record of a Mark Master's Degree in an old lodge, to disprove our statement. The Grand Chapter of Scotland is de jure the conservator of the degree in Scotland, and not the Grand Lodge.

Bro. A. T. Pierson says that "At no period since the revival of Masonry A.D. 1717 has the ceremony or ritual of the Fellow-Craft Degree, as practised anywhere assimilated to the ceremony or ritual of any of the degrees known by the name of Mark." This remark is to be found in "Traditions of Masonry," published by the Masonic Publishing Company, New York, and the statement is true of all America.

We have a record of the Mark Master's Degree when worked in Boston during the last century, which proves the lodge was originally held distinct from other degrees, and that on Nov. 28, 1792, it was united to those generally worked in connection with the Royal Arch. Several independent Mark lodges were held in the United States during this period by Master Masons.

As a contribution towards clearing up the character of the Mark Grand Lodge 13 (h) about 1857 I submit the following from the "Masonic Observer" for that year:—

"At a meeting of Mark Masters held at Freemasons' Tavern, London, 30th May, 1857, presided over by Lord Leigh, Bro. Havers opposed the degree as neither ancient nor of value. *Bro. Smith in answer stated that the Mark degree flourished in the midland counties, and to the knowledge of living Masons has never ceased to work for the last sixty years."

"At the Mark Grand Lodge December 11th, 1867, Bro. Matthews, as an old member for sixteen years of the "Kent Lodge" of Mark Masters, Bro. Lazarus, for twenty-six years a member of the "Royal Cumberland" Bath, Bro. Barnard, who had the degree conferred on him fifteen years ago in a lodge whose warrant dated back into the last century, and Bro. Burdy who had the degree conferred on him in 1823," were all present, and testified to the Mark degree being worked in England for many years,

I have never yet seen a warrant granted 16 (h) by the "Ancients" during the last century to work the Mark degree. Some have claimed to be in possession of documents, but so far their pretensions have been unfounded. Such an important statement as the authorisation of the Mark degree by the "Ancients" should be supported by evidence, as an ipse dixit is of little weight, especially when the existence of such warrants is generally doubted.

Bro. Kerr's sketch of Masonry is a most valuable one. Undoubtedly, these ancient lodges were speculative as well as operative, although mainly the latter. John Earl of Cassillus, was Deacon of the Lodge of Kilwinning A.D. 1672, and Lord Eglinton in 1674. These, Bro. D. Murray Lyon declares, are the earliest instances yet found of non-professional architects or builders holding office in a Scotch Masonic Lodge. It has been often remarked (and even Bro. Lawrie has supported the statement) that Thomas Boswell, Esq., was Warden of the Lodge of Edinburgh (Mary's Chapel) in 1660. After an examination of the records, Bro. Lyon assures me such was not the case. He only attended once, and then was not the Warden of the lodge. This shows the need of care in the reception of statements which are unsupported by authentic quotations.

I challenge Bro. Kerr to prove that the Lodge 18 (j) of Journeymen worked the Mark Master's Degree in 1707. Bro. Hunter, who wrote the history of the lodge never claimed such a distinction for it, and in his excellent history of that lodge, which is to be found in the Freemasons' Magazine (Parts 3 and 4, A.D. 1858), in speaking of the Lodge of Edinburgh, No. 1 (of which No. 8 was an "offshoot"), the author observes: "A distinction is kept up between the Masters and individuals who held the rank of Fellow Craft and Apprentice, but nothing, so far as I have observed, is said about any ceremony being used at the advancement of a Fellow Craft to a Master Mason, or about any fees being paid for giving such a degree. It seems, indeed, doubtful if the lodge, from its commencement down to the formation of the Grand Lodge, practised anything more than the two degrees of Apprentice and Fellow Craft. The Masters referred to in almost every one of the early minutes are, therefore, likely to have been merely masters in trade, and not Masters in the sense in which they are now regarded in the Masonic lodges of this country. . . . Most of the Fellow Crafts took a mark, which is generally inserted in the books after their names, and which they no doubt engraved on their tools, and carved on the stones which they prepared. For obtaining a mark they paid a sum of money."

We readily admit that in early days the marks were taken by the Fellow Crafts, and thus Fellow Crafts had selected marks before they became * Probably Bro. Basset Smith, of Birmingham, a well-known Mark Master.

Masters, but this fact does not prove that the Mark Master's degree was originally conferred upon Fellow Crafts, as the degree was unknown then, neither was the Master Mason's degree, so far as we know.

"Overseers" are so often referred to by Bro. 19 (k) Kerr that it would be well to give one excerpt from lodge records, dating before 1736, that mentions such an officer being appointed over Fellow Crafts! An instance is to be found in Bro. Lawrie's History of Freemasonry (2nd edit), pages 446-8.

According to Bro. Lyon, the Lodge of Edinburgh never worked the three degrees before the last century, and the minutes of all other lodges confirm his position. In fact, Masonic degrees were unknown before A.D. 1716, so that they are all inventions of modern times, and though some of them have actually continued ancient Masonry, the majority are wholly recent productions.

My opinion is, the Mark Master's degree belongs to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Grand Chapter in Scotland, and I have information on that point to prove its correctness, and to demonstrate that the Grand Lodge of Scotland has no business to control or be connected with more than three degrees. Even as late as the 26th May, 1800, the Grand Lodge of Scotland resolved to "Prohibit and discharge all lodges having charters from the Grand Lodge from holding any other meetings than those of the three orders."

I have a copy of a French work in 1745, which gives the "ancien mot de maître," as Bro. Rev. G. R. Portal describes. The degree of Royal Arch was instituted about A.D. 1738.

In conclusion, allow me to state that before 1717 there were no Grand Lodges, and therefore in that year the institution of a Grand Lodge was an innovation. About 1766 a Grand Chapter was formed by the "Moderns," although it appears they had no chapters at that time, but several members had received the Royal Arch of the "Ancients." The No. 2 Chapter was not warranted until 1769, the original charter for which I now hold. These bodies being instituted, however, was justifiable under the circumstances. In like manner the Mark lodges were justified in forming a Grand Lodge. They had individual lodges working before their Grand Lodge was instituted, some even during the last century, and in consequence of the Grand Lodge and Grand Chapter declining to incorporate the degree with their organisations, the Mark Masters were as a body without a head. Hence the constitution of these lodges into a Grand Lodge was as much a necessity as the Grand Lodge formed in 1717, and more so than the formation of the Grand Chapter about 1766. It seems, then, Masonically legal to form such a Grand Lodge, and that being the case, its members desire recognition by the Grand Chapters who support the Mark degree throughout the world.

The objection of the Grand Chapter of Ireland to recognise the Mark Grand Lodge has really no foundation in fact, because the Supreme Grand Chapter of Scotland is recognised by that body, although not recognised by the Grand Lodge; and what is more to the point, one of the bodies composing the Irish "Council of Rites," viz., The Supreme Grand Council for 33°, actually recognises the Supreme Grand Council for 33° of England, notwithstanding the Grand Lodge of this country does not. Now it is no more for the Grand Chapter (another of the bodies composing the authorized degrees) for Ireland to recognise the Mark Grand Lodge than for the Supreme Grand Council of the same country to recognise the Supreme Grand Council for this jurisdiction, seeing that in each case both are unrecognised by the Grand Lodge of England, and the arguments that would justify the latter certainly would also permit the former.

If the degrees of* Excellent Master and Royal and Select Masters are worked it does not seem to me that the Mark Grand Lodge ought to be the Conservator of them, but the Grand Chapter should be. As, however, the Grand Chapter cannot do so according to the "Articles of Union," it would be far better for these degrees to be worked under the Supreme Grand Council of 33° then for Mark Masters to seek to rule degrees superior in gradation to their own,

The Royal and Select Masters are simply copies of certain degrees under the Ancient and Accepted Rite, and they are not at all essential to Royal Arch Masonry. They had better be left alone, as they are not worth the trouble of incorporation with any rite in this country.

The success of the Mark Grand Lodge will be best insured by the members keeping closely to the ancient landmarks, and by refusing to incorporate into their organization any degrees of mushroom growth and questionable Masonic antiquity.

WILLIAM JAMES HUGHAN.

* The earliest Laws of the Royal Arch known (which I published in the first numbers of THE FREEMASON) refer to the Super Excellent as follows: Banff, Scotland, 7th January, 1765. "Any member who wants to attain to that part of Royal Arch and Super Excellent shall pay two shillings and sixpence to the public fund." It is questionable if the Mark Master's degree was known then.

SUMMER EXCURSION TO SEVEVOAKS.

On Saturday se'night, Bro. George Kenning, of Little Britain, entertained his employees, ninety in number, to a very delightful trip by rail to Sevenoaks, Kent.

After luncheon, the company, as is usual with visitors to this favourite town, did not fail to visit Knole Park and its noble mansion, which is beautifully portrayed in the following lines:

See with majestic pride, the work of years,
It's reverend front the stately mansion rears,
Within whose ample space the eye surveys
The labour'd excellence of former days:
The model whose perfection art supplies,
Sculpture's light touch and Painting's deathless dyes.

The following historical account of the ancient structure and manor will not, perhaps, be unacceptable to our readers. The House is built principally in the Elizabethan style of architecture, and is situated on a commanding and healthy eminence near the town. The building itself covers a space of ground said to be nearly  $3\frac{1}{4}$  acres. The principal portions of the mansion of "Knole" form a spacious quadrangle, built in the castellated style, with several square towers. The front of the building is not distinguished by ornamental details, but has an air of great plainness and simplicity. It would be in vain to attempt, in this short space, to describe the interior of the noble mansion so as to give our readers any just idea of its magnificence and beauty. Suffice it to say, a visit to Knole House will amply repay the most studious. The park is very extensive and beautifully varied in its features, with a luxuriant growth of timber, especially of oak and beech trees, for which the soil is naturally adapted. The girth of one of these venerable oaks is no less than 30 feet. Much assiduity and taste have been displayed in the arrangement of the plantations; the trees are not disposed in solitary clumps, but in broad and undulating masses, which rise and fall with the varying nature of the surface. From one point, viz., on gaining the summit of a hill near the House, a prospect of great extent bursts at once upon the sight—woods, heaths, towns, villages, and hamlets are all displayed in bright confusion, the eye commanding the greater part of West Kent, a considerable portion of Sussex, and a distant view of the hills of Hampshire. The manor and mansion of Knole were in possession of the Archbishops of Canterbury during the reigns of Henry the 6th, 7th, and 8th, but in the last of these reigns they were voluntarily surrendered to the Crown by Archbishop Cranmer. After passing through several hands, the estate was finally bestowed, in the reign of Elizabeth, on Thomas Sackville, Esq., afterwards Baron Buckhurst and Earl of Dorset, in whose hands it has continued almost uninterruptedly up to the present time, the present possessor being Lord Buckaurst.

After visiting Knole House, our party reassembled at the Rose and Crown Hotel, where they all partook of a sumptuous dinner, presided over by Bro. Kenning, and to which ample justice was done. The cloth being removed, the usual loyal and friendly toasts were given and drunk with much enthusiasm. After a few songs, the company adjourned to the grounds, where they enjoyed themselves to their hearts' content with dancing and other amusements; adjourned to a social and bountiful tea, resumed their outdoor games, and finally returned to town highly pleased with the day's excursion.

COMMITTEE OF ENQUIRY.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am very glad to see that your able remarks on this point have called forth a letter from "W.M." (p. 474). It is well known to me that, in certain foreign countries, a laudable custom has long been in force, by which the sponsor or next friend of the candidate has been held liable for the conduct of such candidate during the interval between his proposition and admission, and it has been found to work exceedingly well, ensuring earnestness and real purpose on the candidate's part.

Would it not be easy for lodges to frame a by-law to this effect? rendering it actually incumbent on the proposer or seconder to observe more attentively the general carriage of those seeking to enter the Fraternity. I know of more than one instance in which the proposer and seconder absolutely knew nothing whatever of the candidate, and in consequence it has led to circumstances greatly to be deplored. I could name an instance in which this occurred no later than a month ago, but as I am not wishful to injure the lodge in which the affair took place, it would perhaps be wrong to name that lodge; one, indeed, for which I entertain a sincere regard.

A regular form is issued out in French lodges to this end, and a similar one might easily be devised for this country. By the French provisions, two brethren are detailed off to make suitable enquiries—not, however, of a kind liable to endanger the candidate's worldly status—and to report generally upon such points as might guide the lodge in their ballot. This report is read in open lodge, previous to the ballot, and materially enhances the honour conferred upon the candidate at his initiation. No good man would at any time hesitate to undergo this preliminary ordeal, and unscrupulous or interested persons would thereby meet with a merited rebuff.

I will endeavour to find a copy of the French form, which, with slight and appropriate emendations, I am disposed to think would work very efficaciously amongst us in England. I have it not at hand, just now, but will seek for it.

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
CRYPTONYMUS.

August 1, 1871.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In your impression of the 22nd July, a letter appears signed Frederick Binckes, in which that brother talks very learnedly about certain matters connected with the Order of Royal Ark Mariners. This, Sir, calls for no reply on my part other than, as a matter of courtesy to your readers and for their benefit, I beg to state that Bro. Binckes is not fully acquainted with the working of the Order over which I have the honour to preside, and therefore I do not feel justified, being of a very superior grade, and having privileges and immunities not enjoyed by the Mark degree, to reply to any questions propounded by those of inferior standing.

I will also state that the treaty signed by the duly authorised representatives of the Mark degree on July 6th, not having been ratified by the G. Mark Lodge on the 1st August, as stipulated in such treaty, the Royal Ark Mariner Grand Lodge is now an entirely independent body, and the degrees of the Order will from this date be conferred on all Master Masons in good standing who may desire to have them.

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,

SUBORDINATION IN THE HIGHER DEGREES.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In reply to Bro. Yarker I have but two words to say. No one has a greater objection to personalities than I have, but some people are best fought with their own weapons. Fourteen years ago I had over £200,000 through my hands in one month. As to my statements generally, I have very good authority for all I have put in print; and it may perhaps interest Bro. Yarker to know that in consequence, no doubt, of his attacks on the S.G.C., over thirty good Masons have joined the Rose Croix under the A. and A. Rite in Lancashire alone within the last month.

Yours fraternally,
A MASON WHO BELIEVES IN HIS O.B.

ASKELON.

From our tents, pitched upon the brow of the cliffs overlooking the ocean, we commanded a splendid view of the ruined city; its walls thrown up in fantastic confusion half covered by the luxuriant growth of fruit trees or by heaps of drifted sand—strange contrast of fertility and desolation: useless it would be to attempt a more complete description than that given in Murray's guide, or the "Land and the Book." I shall content myself with touching on two or three points.

The city is four-and-twenty miles, as the crow flies, from the present ruin of Timnath, whence Samson came to plunder the thirty change of garments for the payment of those who had expounded his riddle; though this is the only incident with regard to the whole city recorded in the Bible, yet it is impossible to visit these ruins at the present day without realising, perhaps more than in any other ancient city west of Jordan, the utter overthrow of power that has taken place, the desolation which reigns supreme; the walls of indurated sandstone, though now of small-sized stones, were once formed of massive blocks, as is seen by the remains here and there that have not been cut down for other purposes, or carried away to Acca or Saidon; great columns of granite seventeen to eighteen feet in length, and two to two and a half feet in diameter, project from the faces of the existing walls, used as thorough bonds, though hardly necessary, it seems, for the intensely hard mortar has united the stones into one solid mass, which has only again been broken by some great force—probably gunpowder. Examine these walls (photos. Nos. 257-259), great discs of masonry overlapping each other in confusion, and it is apparent that they have been overturned at no very remote period. Some of these walls may have been built by the ladies of England as an offering to their country and lion-hearted king ("Chronicles of the Crusades") during the Crusades.

The view (No. 256) shows us the sycamore fig tree, now loaded with its burden of fruit, the hollow fig, which, though refreshing when picked from the tree, is considered too inferior a fruit to be eaten by any but the poorest of the people. See how the trunk of the tree, acted upon in its early growth by the prevailing wind, the sea breeze has bent over the narrow pathway for nearly thirty feet, at a distance of eight to ten feet from the ground, offering a secure seat to any who, like the lowly Zacchæus, wish to have a view of all that pass that way.

In No. 256 we have a picture of the sea coast, with the surf breaking on the shore. Just outside that surf, as we were coming up from Gaza, we observed a large shark moving about, and on going down to the beach at Askelon at sunrise to have a swim, I saw two sharks loitering about within a few yards, apparently waiting for me, and not wishing to gratify their appetites, I dabbled in shallow water. These sharks are larger than any I have seen in these latitudes, and their appearance reminds us that this is the coast on which the prophet Jonah was disgorged by the great fish that had swallowed him up. A few miles further up the shore to the north is the Neby Yunas, the monument of Jonah's, which vies in tradition with another point near Saidon as his landing-place. The booths used in the gardens by the watchmen of the fruit trees also remind us of his history, for they are similar in construction to that gourd-covered booth he rested in outside of Nineveh.

Mentioning booths, I would draw attention to 1 Kings iv. 25: And Judah and Israel dwell safely, every man under his vine and under his fig tree. This, of course, is a poetical expression, but as at the present day, during a portion of the year, the natives actually do live under trees or in booths, it is reasonable to suppose that the same custom obtained among the Jews, and, in fact, we know it did obtain (Lev. xxiii. 42; Neh. viii. 14; 1 Sam. xxii. 6). And such being the case, it is probable that the names of trees giving the necessary shelter would be used in the poetical expression.

To live in booths shaded by the vine, by creepers, by dry bushes, is very common at the present day, but I am not aware that the fig tree is ever used as a shelter for man. On the contrary, its rank leaves have a most repulsive odour, the juice is supposed, when it touches the eye, to produce ophthalmia, and to sleep under its shade is said to be a certain receipt for the production of fever. In Spain, also, there is the same opinion; a fig tree near a house is said to be unwholesome, and to keep an animal under it for any length of time is supposed to produce madness or death.

About Askelon there are the most delicious apples, which were just now ripe, fully equal in flavour to any I have tasted elsewhere, but, in keeping with so many of the Palestine fruits, they are sadly in want of proper treatment; they have dwindled down to one-half the bulk of an ordinary English eating apple. Dr. Thompson speaks of these apples of Askelon, but Dr. Tristram ("The Land of Israel," p. 604) suggests that he mistook the quince for the apple, and doubts whether apples grow in Palestine at the present day.

Although so little remains of ancient Askelon in situ, coins and bronzes are constantly being turned up by the plough and by the crumbling of earth during the heavy rains; at this time agents come down from Jerusalem and buy up all that they can lay hands on, and sell at immense prices to pilgrims in the Holy City. I was able to secure on the spot some small bronzes of the Egyptian gods, Osiris and Isis, and also a very elegant mutilated figure of Hercules, and the remains of a fish god; the greater portion, however, of the bronzes are distinctly Egyptian, and similar to those in the British Museum; the coins found are generally Roman, or of the Crusaders, or Cufic.

5th June, 1867.—Askelon is ten miles from Ashdod in a straight line. We left the former at 8 a.m., and passing Abu Mushad, an eminence and tomb from whence the minarets of Gaza can be seen, we passed in a few minutes remains of buildings of Ibrahim Pacha, and among other objects a well 140 feet deep, with a staircase running down, around the side. Leaving Mejdal with its minaret to our right, we came on Hamâmeh at four miles situate on the edge of the sand-drift, the next village to be submerged. A Greek Christian came out to meet us, and insisted on our coming into his courtyard and feeding on water-melon, and then produced several articles for sale, among the rest a pot of well-preserved bronze Roman coins. We had not time, then, to strike a bargain, and on enquiring for them a few weeks after I learnt that a commissioner for a collector at Beyrout had carried them off. On leaving this village we kept the drift sand close to our left, and shortly passed a small masonry erection in which water is deposited by the benefit of passers-by—a very kindly arrangement in a dry land if they would only take the trouble to keep it clean. Passing now over a country tame and uninteresting, we arrived at Esdud (Ashdod) shortly after mid-day. I went from here to the sea beach, a distance of three miles, in search of any remains of the ancient city, but nothing could I see but endless mounds of drift sand, over which we stumbled ankle deep; on the shore itself are the ruins of a rectangular barrack of sandstone, similar to the walls of Askelon, and at about a third of the distance on the road to Jaffa. It probably was a station connecting the two cities; it measures about 120 feet by 50 feet, with semi-circular flanking towers at each angle, and two on either side. No ancient pottery or glass was observed about, but there were a few broken bottles of modern construction, which looked as if they had once held beer.

Ashdod itself is a mean Mahometan village, situated on a gentle eminence, surrounded with beautiful gardens and palm trees, but with no signs whatever of its ancient grandeur visible, if we may except the sarcophagus shown on photograph No. 263, supposed to be of an early type. The view of the Persian wheel (N'aura), driven by a camel, and of a palm tree, Nos. 264 and 262, were also taken in this village. To the west the sand rises high above the gardens, and each year swallows up a portion. In the centre of the village is the usual elevated mound of rubbish, here of a considerable height, ending in a conical peak—a good theodolite station, and there we proceeded at sunset, just the worst time for observing, as then the fellahin were returning from their daily labour. We were soon surrounded by the entire village, who in a half defiant, half good-humoured manner advanced to the attack, determined to capture our instrument, which they considered to be exerting some sinister influence over the country; luckily the mound was steep, and as they came up we pushed over the foremost upon those behind and managed to keep our position until the pole star was observed. I was obliged, however, to complete the observations next day when the men had left the village. The sheikh came in the evening and made his apologies for the uproar, and affected great penitence.

On June 6th and 7th the country to north and east was surveyed. About one mile N.E. of Ashdod the Wady from the Valley of Elah (now Wady es Sumt) effects its junction with another from the south which runs by Kuratiyeh. They are here the merest ditches, about 6 feet wide and 4 feet deep, and just now are quite dry. Their course was followed to the sea coast at a point four miles north of Ashdod, where they form lagoons of shallow water, supplied by the oozing up of water from the soil, and separated from the ocean by a bar of sand. Neby Yunas is built on an eminence at this point.

BOMBAY.

FUNERAL OF W. BRO. H. H. AVRON.

[From the Bombay Gazette.]

The body of Mr. H. H. Avron, late Superintendent of the Bombay Sailors' Home, was buried in Sewree Cemetery on Friday afternoon, when the unusually numerous attendance of mourners testified to the high respect and regard felt for the deceased.

Although it was rather an advanced hour when notice was sent round to the friends of Mr. Avron that the funeral would start from the Sailors' Home at half-past four o'clock the same afternoon, and that those who are Freemasons were invited to attend as such, the shortness of the summons did not prevent a very great gathering—so great, indeed, that we believe the funeral procession was larger than is ever remembered to have been seen before in Bombay. Nearly seventy carriages followed the hearse. The mourners were almost all Masons, and amongst the number were some Parsees. The brethren were habited in the costume of their Order, and, in accordance with ancient usage, wore sprigs of Acacia.

Arrived at the tank bordering the compound of Government House, the whole party alighted, and the coffin was taken out of the hearse. On the top of the pall rested the emblems of different degrees in Masonry to which the deceased had attained, together with the badge of truth and uprightness. The procession then moved up the hill leading to the cemetery. In front marched the Grand Tyler, with drawn sword. Then came the Past Master of Wor. Bro. Avron's Lodge, "Concord," supported on each side by a Worshipful Master. Next came the Chaplain, succeeded by the coffin borne by brethren, with the officers of the before-mentioned lodge as pall-bearers, the rear consisting of a long line of Worshipful Masters and brethren. On reaching the cemetery, the burial service of the Church of England was read by the Chaplain, Bro. the Rev. W. H. Harper (Chaplain of Lodge Truth, 944). At the conclusion of this most impressive service, the equally-solemn Masonic burial service was read by the Past Master of "Concord," and at the appointed passage the Master deposited his sprig of acacia in the grave, whereon the brethren generally threw theirs on the coffin. The symbolical white apron of the deceased was likewise deposited with the coffin, and the service was closed with the funeral honours due from the Craft.

We may add that W. Bro. Avron, at the time of his death, was Master of Lodge Concord, that he had ruled over several other Masonic bodies in Bombay, that in this part of the Masonic world he rendered great services to the Craft, services which will not easily be forgotten, and that are known, not only in India, but in America, with some of the most distinguished Masons of which he maintained a constant correspondence in connection with Freemasonry. Than W. Bro. Avron it would have been difficult to find a more earnest and thorough-going brother anywhere, and the untiring exertions he made for the good of the Craft must have been a heavy tax on the time and attention of a man whose ordinary occupation was one entailing a good deal of hard work daily.

Mr. Avron was a native of Bristol, and for some years followed a sailor's life. He held a certificate of competency as a Master Mariner. We regret to add that he leaves a wife and large family to mourn for him.

WEST INDIES.

[From the Falmouth (Jamaica) Post, June 27.]

It is our painful duty to record the death of Mr. John Anderson D'Souza, one of the most worthy and deservedly-respected of our fellow-parishioners in Trelawny, and the eldest son of David H. D'Souza, Esq., the principal of the extensive commercial establishment of D'Souza, Sons, and Lazarus. This melancholy and generally-lamented event took place at nine o'clock on the morning of Sunday, the 25th inst., the deceased having received during his illness of a few days the careful and constant attention of his medical and other friends, as well as that of the members of his family. But all human aid was unavailing, and he "walked the way of nature" in the 32nd year of his age, having sustained an irreproachable character in all the relations of life. It was his earnest request to have a Masonic funeral, and the request was complied with by the members of the Athol Union Lodge, who met at their lodge-room in this town, at half-past eight o'clock yesterday morning, in accordance with the requirement of a circular which was issued by the Master, Mr. John C. Lewis. The meeting was in every respect, as we have been informed, in the true spirit of harmony, and the usual formalities having been gone through, a procession was formed in the following order:—

Two Tylers, with drawn swords.
Entered Apprentices, two by two.
Fellow-Crafts, two by two.
Master Masons, two by two.
Two Stewards, with rods of office.
Junior Guard and Secretary.
Senior and Junior Wardens.
Bible-bearer.
Depute Master.
Worshipful Master.

The Body, with three mourners on each side.

The procession reached the residence of the deceased brother at ten o'clock, and the Masonic funeral service was read by Master John C. Lewis in a solemn and affecting manner. The Masonic apparel and jewel of the deceased were placed on the lid of the coffin, and the procession was again formed in the order already mentioned, preceded by the constabulary body, and followed by merchants, public officers, planters, and other citizens, two by two, numbering upwards of 300 persons, independently of other parishioners to the extent of 1,500 males and females. The windows of houses in the streets through which the procession passed were filled by respectable families, all of whom manifested poignant regret at the death of a worthy member of the community. At the parish church the body was met by the Rev. Earnest A. Stewart, rector, the order of procession having been reversed. "The Dead March in Saul" was played by the Organist, Mr. James Atkins, until the congregation, exceeding 2,000 persons, obtained seats in every part of the sacred edifice. The rector read the 90th Psalm, at the end of which a chant was sung by the choir, and was followed by the reading of St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians, 15th chapter, commencing with the 20th verse. The choir then sang the 298th Hymn:—

"Beneath our feet and o'er our head
Is equal warning given:
Beneath us lie the countless dead,
Above us is the Heaven!"

The Organist played a solemn funeral march while the body was being removed from the church to the place of interment, where the concluding portion of the burial service was read by the rector. The Worshipful Master of the Athol Union Lodge then delivered a short and appropriate address to his assembled brethren, and thus closed the sorrowful ceremonies of the day.

The church bell tolled while the procession moved on to the church, the flags of all the vessels in the harbour were half-masted, and at nine o'clock the stores and shops in the town were closed in respect for the deceased, of whom it may be truly said he made many friends and never had an enemy. The large number of persons of all classes belonging to Trelawny and the parishes of St. Ann, St. James, and Hanover, who mournfully followed the remains of Mr. John D'Souza to their last resting-place on earth, afforded evidence of the fact that he lived esteemed and died regretted by all who were acquainted with his many excellent qualities. In commercial transactions he was a man of strict integrity; he bore the reputation of a fond husband and father, a dutiful son and affectionate brother, and a sincere friend; and to the poor and afflicted of his fellow-creatures, "he had ever a tear for pity, and a hand open as day for melting charity." We sympathise with his parents, wife, child, and other relatives to whom he was endeared, in their sad bereavement, and we trust that they will be sustained in their affliction by Him, "Whose Name is Love."

[From the St. George's Chronicle, July 1.]

A Masonic Ball, at Mount Moriah, came off with éclat on Thursday evening. Never, in our memory, has there been so successfully got up and carried through an entertainment of the sort. From an early hour of the evening, the parties invited began to arrive, and were received by the R.W.M., Mrs. Aird, and the Stewards: and at about 8 p.m. dancing commenced, and was kept up with scarcely any intermission until a little after midnight. We observed a large number of members of "Caledonia" present, and as all of the Craft in attendance were properly clad, the effect of the first entertainment of the description given in Grenada will not soon be forgotten. At supper—which certainly was most elegant and sumptuous—the company also enjoyed themselves; and, in discussing the good things provided, the time was spent in the full enjoyment of that rational festivity and social harmony which should always prevail—more especially upon such occasions—amongst those who "meet upon the Level and part upon the Square." After supper, the toasts proposed "from the chair," by the Worshipful Master, were "The Queen and the Craft," "Our Brother, the Prince of Wales, and the rest of the Royal Family," "The Grand Masters of England, Ireland, and Scotland," and last, though not least, "The Ladies." Dancing was resumed at 1.30, and kept up until gunfire. The meeting then separated, all who had been present being, "happy to meet, sorry to part, and happy to meet again."

SOUTH AMERICA.

[From the Callao and Lima Gazette, June 28.]

There is no institution, however pure the motives that gave it birth, or however great the usefulness which it displays, that is not open to detraction. It has been eloquently said that, "It is a grovelling taste to delight in distinguishing great characters by their faults alone; in tracing an eagle's flight by its earthly shadow." As of men, so of institutions, which are the work of men—all are open to detraction. Among the many, perhaps none more so than Freemasonry, than which no society was ever founded with loftier objects and upon more honourable principles. Those who decry it are ignorant of its character, or who have the misfortune not to be able to appreciate it. The public newspaper is not a fitting medium to discuss the beauties of the noble Order which stands as the solid rock in the civilised world, against which even detraction is powerless, since its ever-swelling stream diverges into broken rivulets as it approaches in its course the iron shores that protect the beacon light to men.

There are many thousands of Freemasons in this important republic, and their number increases, we might say, daily. It is an Order that needs no defence, for it knows no crimes and heeds no fears. True, like all societies, it has its abuses, for "where's that palace whereinto foul things sometimes intrude not?" But the abuses of the Institution are not inherent in, but foreign to, the Order. It would be well for mankind if practical Freemasonry were to influence worldly transactions more than it does; if its sublime principles were more universally followed and its solemn injunctions more scrupulously observed.

To-day we willingly devote a portion of our space to chronicle the great celebrations which have taken place in Lima and Callao, since it is well that the administrations of the several lodges in the two cities, for the current year, should be known. It is a mistaken notion that such celebrations are in themselves Freemasonry, and that all that is good in the Order is to be found at the convivial board. It is not so. The banquet affords only the occasion on which the Order may be known by those who are not of it. Nor is it within the portals of the building consecrated to Masonry that the virtues of the Institution are displayed—it is within the human heart that the sacred altar is built; it is in the human breast where the principles are actively at work, and it is in the outward work of the true Mason that the beauties of the ancient Order are practically exemplified. Whether Freemasonry will make a bad man good is certainly problematical; but that it will make a good man better will not be denied by those who know its obligations and its powers. It is indeed the "oxygen of the moral world," and has a purifying and healthful influence wherever it is known—and where is it not known? It is the handmaid of civilisation itself; it is built on the foundation of charity, and should be judged not by the weaknesses of its followers—for all are human—but by the strength, force, and power of its principles and by the God-like attributes it possesses.

The advance of such an institution in any community must be satisfactory to those who can appreciate it, as we hope we can, and it will not, therefore, we trust, be deemed out of place by even the uninitiated that we should, on the recurring periods of festivities of the Brotherhood, devote a small portion of our space to the notice of an Institution honoured from time-immemorial.

GRAND CELEBRATIONS IN LIMA AND CALLAO.

On Saturday, June 24th (St. John's Day), in accordance with the ancient usages of the Order, the newly-elected officers for the present Masonic year were duly installed by the Grand Master of Peru, Senor Don Blas Alzamora, 33°, assisted by several members of the Grand Lodge. Similar ceremonies took place in Callao on the following day. The subjoined are the names of the lodges and their officers:—

Orden y Libertad, No. 2.—Worshipful Master, John Meiggs; 1st Warden, Arthur M. Wholey; 2nd Warden, Rios y Negron; Chaplain, M. St. Marie; Sect., Aurelio Alfaro; Treasurer, Gilbert Brandin; Master of Ceremonies, B. Prieur; Tyler, C. Maxton; Treasurer of Poor Fund, A. M. Leon.

Virtud y Union, No. 3.—Worshipful Master, Luis A. Leuthold; Senior Warden, J. Landever; Junior Warden, G. Echandia; Chaplain, M. Sologuren; Sect. J. Vizcarra; Treasurer, J. D. Luque; Master of Ceremonies, G. Clausen; Tyler, J. Fernandez.

Estralla Polar, No. 5.—Worshipful Master, J. Sanchez Silva; Senior Warden, Pedro A. Iribaren; Junior Warden, M. M. Salazar; Sect., M. Solor-zano; Treasurer, J. A. Serdio; Master of Ceremonies, J. B. Saavedra; Treasurer of Poor Fund, Jose Casos.

Orden y Reforma, No. 7.—Worshipful Master, Ricardo Palma; Senior Warden, J. B. Fuentes; Junior Warden, M. Miranda; Chaplain, Aurelio Alfaro; Sect. J. Fuentes; Treasurer, M. Denegri.

Cosmos.—Worshipful Master, G. Hohagen; Senior Warden, C. E. Jones; Junior Warden, C. Davis; Chaplain, G. A. M. Mejer; Sect. N. Evans; Treasurer, Asker; Master of Ceremonies, J. Osborne; Tyler, Johnson; Treasurer of Poor Fund, D. Newman.

After the conclusion of the ceremonies of installation, upwards of three hundred and fifty brethren sat down at three separate grand banquets. Previously, however, the poor were admitted within the gates of the Temple, and the sum of one hundred and fifty soles was distributed amongst them. Several poor brethren and other applicants for charity were voted sums of money for their immediate wants.

The greatest harmony reigned amongst the brethren, and brilliant speeches were made upon the occasion. What added much to the solemnity of the proceedings was the reincorporation by a decree of the Grand Lodge of the symbolic lodge "Paz y Orden," that had from some motives not properly understood by its members become irregular, and was so declared; but the true spirit of Masonry was here manifested—the past was forgotten, and its erring brethren welcomed back to the fold.

The three banquets were under the respective direction of Aro. Rotalde, of the Hotel Morin, the second under Gatillon, of the Hotel Anglais, and the third under Bundichon, in the Calle de Mantas. As may be well supposed, the three grand caterers did their best to outvie each other, and they succeeded to the entire satisfaction of the brethren. The feast lasted until eight in the evening.

On Sunday another new lodge in Lima was installed by the Grand Master, under name of "Alianza y Firmeza." The following are the officers to whom the charter has been granted:—Worshipful Master, Dianisio Derteano; Senior Warden, E. Corrochno; Junior Warden, E. Plazolles; Chaplain, J. Nuvarro; Secretary, D. Ysquerdo; Treasurer, J. Mirandu; Master of Ceremonies, Bethancourt; Tyler, Belogron.

The installation was quite a brilliant affair, and after the ceremony a most sumptuous banquet was served to the brethren who assisted.

CONCORDIA UNIVERSAL (CALLAO).

The installation of the Worshipful Master and officers of the Lodge Concordia Universal, of this city, took place on Sunday, the 25th inst. On the occasion there was a very large attendance of the members of the lodge and visiting brethren. The ceremonies within the lodge, which are known only to the "free and accepted," were performed in a manner highly creditable to the Worshipful Master and those of the lodge who aided him. The following is the administration of the "Concordia Universal" for the current term:—Worshipful Master, Enrique A. Ziegler; Senior Warden, Lucio Richardson; Junior Warden, Frederico Rivera; Orator, Nicolas Chiuliza; Assistant Orator, Ester-van Dañino; Principal Secretary, Gil. Antonio Toledo; Assistant Secretary, Pablo Bocanegra; Treasurer, Sylvano Cavalie; Senior Steward, Alejandro Marsan; Junior Steward, Alejandro Herran; Master of Ceremonies, Leopold de Caila; Assistant Master of Ceremonies, Luis Kiffer; Steward of Charity Fund, José Origio; Senior Deacon, Juan I. Plunkett; Junior Deacon, Frederico Jansohn; Inner Tyler, Eduardo Lee; Outer Tyler, Vicente Molina.

The brethren retired from labour to refreshment, and partook of a splendid banquet, presided over by the Worshipful Master, who was supported on either side by worthy and distinguished brethren, high in the Order. About eighty guests were present, who did ample justice to the repast. There were, of course, the usual loyal toasts, and some very excellent speeches were made.

It is gratifying to notice that Freemasonry is taking a firm hold in Peru, and that, despite the few ignorant men who decry it, it is advancing with rapid strides, as it is in all other parts of the civilised world.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Bilious affections and stomach complaints induced by atmospheric heat or too liberal diet, if not at once checked, are often attended with serious consequences. When any one finds his ideas less clear than usual, his eyesight dimmed, and his head dizzy, while he is indisposed for all exertion, physical or mental, he may be sure that he is in immediate need of some cooling and purifying medicine. Let him send at once for a box of Holloway's Pills, after a few doses of which his head will be clear again, his spirits be elevated, and all his energies be restored. Printed directions for the guidance of patients in the use of this admirable medicine, are affixed to each box.—[Advt.]

RAMBLERS ROUND GLASGOW.

BY BRO. WILLIAM JOHNSTONE.

Ramblers round Glasgow!
A bumper I ask you
To pledge to our club,
With a hearty huzzah!
Born in the winter drear,
Welcomed with jolly cheer,
Cradled in Newton Inn,
Baptized wi' snaw.

Nae wonder sic a club
Grew up a sturdy cub,
Nursed by a score
O' gude fellows a'.
As if by magic strong,
It up to manhood sprung—
Smiled at the snawdrift,
Bade the winds blaw.

When the days langer grew,
Flowers deckt the earth anew,
Wee blue-eyed angels bright
Bade it "God speed."
Gowans and primrose pale,
Violets that scent the gale,
Spoke welcome to Ramblers
Through wild brake and mead,

Wild songsters numberless,
Far in the wilderness,
Wood'd us and won us
In "ilka green shaw."

Laverocks in sky so clear,
Linties in whin and brier
Sang, Love mother Nature,
For she loves us a'.

Next came blithe Autumn rare,
With brown'd cheek and golden hair,
Proud that the Ramblers
Her bounties should see.
Black-boys and berries red,
In rich abundance spread,
For the field-roamers,
So healthy and free.

Then old Winter so jolly,
With crown of bright holly,
And health-giving breezes
A ne'er-failing store,
Sang, If length of years you'd see,
Breathe mountain air so free,
There's life in the old boy
Though grizzly and hoar.

Shade of M'Donald true,
Warm-hearted, gifted Hugh,
Still hover round us
By hill-side and glen.
May thy true spirit
Each Rambler inherit,
Thou chief of good fellows,
Thou prince of good men.

BURNS'S LODGE, TARBOLTON.

BY BRO. A. GLASS, M.M. No. 138, Ayr Operative, Scotland.

I've sat beneath the old roof-tree
Where Burns oft spent the festive night,
As happy as a king could be Among the honoured "sons of light."
To me it was as Mecca's shrine
To ardent Eastern devotee,
Where Scotia's minstrel passed langsyne
So many hours of joyous glee.

What hallowed recollections throng
Around that spot, endeared to fame?
What happy scenes of love and song
Are conjured up in Burns's name?
What mystic fane, however grand,
Can with the lowly lodge compare,
Where, "honoured with supreme command,"
Presided Fame's eternal heir.

Along the corridors of Time
For ever sweep his deathless lays,
And Scotia's sons, in every clime,
Sing sweetly of their native braes;
In fancy rove "whaur Lugar flows,"
Where "hermet ayr" delights to stray,
Or "boony Doon" in beauty goes
Past hoary, haunted Alloway.

Nor sylvan bower, nor tiny flower
That blooms where wimplin' burnie strays,
But he possessed the innate power
To twine around them fadeless bays,
In Nature's Lodge, supreme and grand,
He sat as Master in the chair,
And shed a glory o'er the land
That time nor change can e'er impair.

His was the keen, prophetic eye,
Could see afar the glorious birth
Of that Great Power, whose mystic tie
Shall make "One Lodge" of all the earth;
Shall usher in the reign of light,
"Ring out the false, ring in the true,"
Cause man to walk "square" and "upright,"
And Wisdom's path of peace pursue.

THEATRICAL.

ROYAL STRAND.—The reappearance Mr. S. Clarke, the popular American comedian, on last Saturday, in his celebrated impersonation of Dr. Pangloss, in Coleman's comedy of "The Heir at Law," was received by one of the largest audiences we ever remember seeing at this ever-popular and most fashionable theatre. He has just completed a brilliant tour of eighteen months through the United States of America. His acting is unimpaired, and must be pronounced now to be of the highest order of merit. He must be seen to be fully appreciated, as no language can give a correct idea of his inimitable acting. He received the heartiest welcome, and at the end of each act had to appear before the curtain for the applause of the audience. The performances commence with "Lodgers and Dodgers," followed by the "Heir at Law," and conclude with Byron's celebrated burlesque "Miss Eily O'Connor." The company now includes Miss Ada Swanborough, Mesdames Louise Claire, Raymond, Jenny Lee, Rose Cullen, Asborne, Armstrong, and Topsy Venn, Messrs. Harry Paulton, Walter Joyce, John Wallace, E. Chamberlain, H. J. Turner, and Edward Terry.

OLYMPIC.—In spite of summer weather, which has a tendency to draw audiences anywhere than to theatres, yet this fashionable theatre is filled every evening to witness "Dominique the Deserter." "Daisy Farm" is as fresh as ever, and the performances concluded with H. J. Byron's fairy extravaganza entitled "Giselle." The lessee and manager is Mr. W. H. Liston; directress, Mrs. W. H. Liston; whose well-known names are a guarantee of the good performances at this theatre.

VAUDEVILLE.—Bros. J. H. Montague, D. James, and T. Thorne find it unnecessary to change the programme, which now comprises "A Fearful Fog," "Tweedie's Rights," and "The Orange Tree and the Humble Bee," large audiences witnessing the performances every evening.

FREEMASONRY & ISRAELITISM.

By BRO. WILLIAM CARPENTER, P.M. & P.Z. 177.

[The reader will be good enough to bear in mind, that the paper which was printed in THE FREEMASON of July 29th, on the peopling of the Islands by the Anglo-Saxons, and which, by a mistake, came out of its place, should be taken as immediately preceding this one. That was on the localisation of Israel, as this is on its Christianisation.]

XII.

Abraham and his seed were chosen of God to be the recipients, preservers, and promulgators of the great truth—the centre of all truth—the Divine Unity, and His attributes of holiness, justice, and mercy, and of His moral government of the world; so that, in the midst of universal idolatry, they should worship one self-existent, Almighty, holy, just, and merciful Being, obey new laws, and sustain new institutions in harmony with this knowledge and worship. This same seed appears, in the order of Divine Providence, to have been employed for the accomplishment of the same purpose, when, in subsequent times, the whole race of mankind had so far apostatised and gone astray from God, that idolatry, everywhere, not excepting the most advanced and civilised nations, was again in the ascendant. They were again to become as a light shining in a dark world—a beacon set upon a hill. "For thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will lift up my hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy [Israel] sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders; and kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and queens thy nursing mothers: they shall bow down to thee with their face towards the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord" (Isa. xlix. 22-3). "Whereas thou hast been forsaken and hated . . . I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations" (chap. lx. 15). "And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: and thou shalt be called by a new name which the mouth of the Lord shall name" (chap. lxxii. 2). "Prepare the way of the people, cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones, lift up a standard for the people" (ver. 10). Such was the mission given to this wonderfully preserved people, not on account of their own righteousness, but as the chosen of the Lord, for their Father's sake, and for the accomplishment of God's own gracious purposes. Israel had cast off its allegiance, and had joined itself to idols, as its forefathers had done and were doing when Abram was called out of Ur of the Chaldees, to go through the land of the Canaanites, as a preacher of righteousness; and when they had, by the valour of their arms, often against fearful odds, made their way westward, and settled down in the Islands, they gave their idols to the moles and to the bats, and themselves to the God of their fathers, who had chosen Abraham and his seed for ever. But it was under another covenant, as it was ordained of old that it should be. In a word, they were to be, and were, Christianised. But what are the intimations that this should be?

I. The Israelites were not to continue under the law. Not only were they themselves to abandon the law, but the Lord was to divorce them from it. Judah, or the Jews, remain under the law; not so the Israelites. They are freed from the Mosaic covenant, with all its rites, and worship, and sacrifices. They have been divorced from it, for, as the Lord said to Jeremiah (iii. 8), "And I saw when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery I had put her away, and given her a bill of divorce; yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also." Nevertheless, Judah was not divorced but was still held bound to the law. Israel, however, was divorced; and the Lord, upon one occasion, called for the bill of her divorcement (Isa. l. 1). As a divorced woman, she became desolate and forsaken; as she was, to all appearance, for several ages. But the Lord had declared, that however unfaithful she might be, He would never leave her nor forsake her, but would remain faithful to the promises He had given to the fathers. A great work was still before her, and she so multiplied, that, as the prophet says, "More are the children of the desolate than the children of the married wife" (Isa. liv. 1). It was to this same people (Israel) that it was said, "For the Lord hath called thee as a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit." And He adds, "For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee." Nevertheless, she was divorced—dead to the law—for, as Paul illustratively and logically reasons, "If a woman, while her husband liveth, be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress; but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law . . . wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law, by the body of Christ, that ye should be married to another, even to Him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God."

II. The Law, or the Mosaic Covenant, or dispensation, was not to be perpetual; that is, not to extend through all the times pointed to in the prophecies. That this dispensation was one of only a temporary character, and introductory to that of the Messiah, must be obvious, I think, to all who study the Old Testament, and have a perception of the exigencies which led to a Divine interposition in the introduction of the various dispensations. As the education of man for moral freedom is the chief end of his creation, as a rational being; and as reason requires instruction for its development, it follows from God's wisdom and goodness that the Divine enlightenment began with the beginning of the human kind; and as reason follows the law of development, not only must this instruction have had a commencement, but it must gradually progress, being only completed when the doctrines of God, of moral freedom, of Divine law, and of morality shall be fully developed; because then only will every condition of moral freedom be realised. That God wishes to enlighten the human mind, is an assumption we are compelled to make, since the training of man to moral freedom is in close connection with His holiness, and in accordance with His goodness and wisdom, also. The history of the world shews, however, that this subjective enlightenment has not realised the Divine purpose. Wherever man has been found, whether wandering in the wilds of savage independence, or living in the better regulated and more favourable circumstances of civilised life, he has exhibited himself as departing far from what his reason perceives and assents to, as the Divine requirement. Hence the necessity for an objective revelation, with its apparatus of miracles and prophecy, as attestations of its verity; and the necessity, also, of its being adapted to the gradually improving condition of man. Hence we find successive revelations—systems—covenants—laws, given to different individuals, families, and nations: containing gradually progressive, but partial, developments of truth and intimations of the Divine will, for the guidance of those to whom they were given, combined with peculiar positive institutions, adapted to the ideas and condition of the age for which they were vouchsafed. Thus, peculiar revelations, and required obligations—that is, laws—were made to Noah, to Job, to Abraham, to Isaac, to Jacob, to the Israelites, first by Moses, and afterwards by a succession of prophets. And when we see the imperfect intimations, often mere hints and allusions, given in the Hebrew records—the only intelligible records we have of primitive history—to the early religious revelations and institutions, as well as to the obvious and wide difference in the circumstances of those peoples and the peoples of later times, the discerning reader at once sees how little those institutions can have been intended to be understood as containing any elements of an ever-during and universal religion. In the plain terms of the several narratives, we discover nothing of the kind, and in comments on them, which the New Testament supplies, we have direct assurances to the contrary. In general, we find only that the servants of God, in the early ages, were accepted in acting, each according to the light vouchsafed to him ; while, in other respects, we see peculiar institutions and announcements specially adapted to the peculiar ends and purposes of the dispensations. Thus we trace the approach to God through sacrifices, offerings, and formal services. Religious truths are conveyed under figures, and obligations are enforced by motives specially adapted to the wants and capacities of the persons addressed ; while temporal prospects or benefits are held out as the immediate sanctions. The chosen seed of Abraham were formed into a distinct nation ; idolatry was strictly forbidden, and God Himself was the king and ruler. The government was a Theocracy, and only such of the kings as recognised this fact, and regarded themselves as the Lord's vicegerents, were approved by Him. The Mosaic law appears, throughout, as a national law. All its commandments, including the Decalogue, are civil laws. The first and second commandments are laws of State in the Theocracy. Everything was restricted to the nation, and the principal ceremonials of the law were confined to Jerusalem, where all the males were required to present themselves three times in the year. The many intimations which we find in the later writings of the Hebrew church (the Prophets) of the future extension of the true religion—the bringing in of the remote nations to the Israelitish church—of the whole earth, in fact, being brought by and into it—"The fulness of the Gentiles"—these alone would suffice to show that the forms and ceremonies which the law prescribed could not be meant for perpetual and universal obligation ; while the character of many of them sufficiently indicates that they were only symbolical, representative, or material types, or figures, of something beyond and better than themselves. "The latter days"—the times of the Messiah—were, in fact, often alluded to, more or less clearly, as those in which all mankind should be brought to the knowledge of the true God, and should form an universal church, in which Israel should occupy a prominent place, as part of it. Another covenant was to supersede the Mosaic one. The precision and formality of the law were in some measure extended and spiritualized by the prophets. Ezekiel (ch. xviii.), in fact, represents the Lord as positively abrogating one law—visiting the sins of the fathers upon the children—and Isaiah strongly declares against sacrifices and sabbaths, excepting, no doubt, their spiritual significance (ch. i. 13), while Micah (ch. vi.) specifically declares that neither burnt offerings nor other description of sacrifices or oblation, were to be required of Israel ; and Jeremiah plainly announces that the law was to come to an end ; or, rather, was to be superseded by a better, that is a more spiritual, covenant : "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah : not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them up out of the land of Egypt (which my covenant they broke, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord) ; but this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel : After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts ; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. . . . If those ordinances [the sun, moon, and stars] depart from before me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever" (Jer. xxxi. 31-36).

Thus, even from the intimations in the Old Testament, as well as from the peculiar character of the Mosaic dispensation itself, and its being obviously and avowedly disadapted for other than the people of which Jerusalem formed the centre and seat of Divine worship, it follows that it was designed only for those who dwelt within reach of the Holy City, and was intended only for a temporary purpose.

But though Moses was to be thus superseded, Israel was not to be left without a lawgiver and a law, as is testified by many passages in the prophets, and even by Moses himself, in the well-known passage, Deut. xviii. 15-19, when the Lord said to Moses, "I will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto thee ; . . . I will put My words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto My words, which he shall speak in My Name, I will require it of him." I am not unaware of the interpretation which most of the mediæval Jews have given of these words, referring them, notwithstanding the singular form of the noun nebia (prophet), to a succession of prophets, and not to a single person ; but I cannot help thinking, that, although they may have some reference to a succession of prophets, the form of the promise, which evidently refers to a distant time, as also the likening of the prophet to Moses—who was pre-eminently a lawgiver, and the introducer and mediator of a new dispensation, though a prophet also—point not to a number of men, who, though prophets, were none of them lawgivers (but only enforced the obligations of the law of Moses, and threw upon it a higher and more spiritual aspect than its mere letter presented, while they shadowed forth, in various ways, its transient character), but to One who was to be superior to all. If the promise be looked at impartially, and without any foregone conclusion, it appears to me that it must be seen at least to indicate—as many both early and later, and very eminent, critics decide—a line of prophets culminating in one eminent individual, the Messiah—who, only, was to be like unto Moses ; for, as the writer of the verses at the end of this Book (concerning the death of Moses) testifies, "there arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face" (ch. xxxiv. 10). This writer both Jews and Christians believe to have been Ezra, who did not live till after the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah had been destroyed, and the prophetic era closed. And thus the ancient Jews understood this prophecy, for though Maimonides only says that the Messiah should be endowed with wisdom greater than Solomon's, and should equal their master, Moses, those preceding him went much further—this being a common saying among them, which Abarbinel sets down in his commentary on the minor prophets : "He shall be exalted above Abraham, be lifted up above Moses, and be higher than the angels of the ministry." To this may be added that the cabalistic observation mentioned in Baal-Hatturim is not to be quite neglected, which says that the fifteenth verse begins and ends with the letter nun, which is the numeral letter for 50, importing that to the prophet here promised should be opened the 50 gates of knowledge, 49 only of which were opened to Moses ; and that this verse consists of only 10 words, to signify that they were to obey this prophet as they do the 10 commandments. The observation is, no doubt, weakly grounded, but it contains a most illustrious truth, showing that they believed that Moses here speaks of the Messiah. This prophet, then, who was to be raised up from among the people whom God chose to be the depositaries of His name and worship, was to be a legislator, as Moses was. He was to give a law, consequently, a more excellent law ; he was to introduce a better covenant, for if the Mosaic covenant had been perfect—that is, to accomplish all the purposes of the Lord—there would not have been the promise I have quoted from Jeremiah, of the days approaching in which the Lord would make a new covenant with the house of Israel.

III. Thus we see, that, though the Israelites were divorced from the law and its ceremonial worship, they were to be married to one another. The prophet Jeremiah (iii. 12-14) was directed to go and proclaim these words towards the north, to which Israel had been carried captive : "Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon thee, for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and will not keep anger for ever ; only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God, and hast scattered thy ways to the strangers, under every green tree, and have not obeyed my voice, saith the Lord. Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord ; for I am married unto you, and I will bring you to Zion." But before that return to Zion can take place "The children of Israel shall return, and seek the Lord their God and David their king, and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days" (Hosea iii. 5). Here are two noticeable things : (1) The children of Israel are to return from their idolatry (ver. 4), and seek the Lord their God, and David their king. Who is this David their king ? Not the son of Jesse, for he had died long since. It must be David's successor—the spiritual king of Israel—the Messiah—David's son and heir, who is to reign over the house of Israel for ever (2 Sam. vii. 16 ; Ps. lxxxix. 3, 4, 29-37). (2) Next, it was to be in the "latter days." Now, the "latter days," or the "last days," have always been understood, by both Jews and Christians, to denote the days or time of the Messiah. The Rabbi Nachmanides says, "According to the words of all, 'the last days' denote the days of Messiah ; and so Rabbi David Kimchi, on Isaiah ii. 2, where the phrase occurs, writes, "Wherever 'the latter times' are mentioned in Scripture, the days of the Messiah are always meant." This being agreed, it is clear that the king, and the law, and the worship of the "latter days," are not to be under the Mosaic dispensation, or the old covenant. Besides, seeing that all nations are in these latter days to be brought to the knowledge and worship of the true God, as are also Judah, or the Jews, through the instrumentality of Israel, and that Jerusalem is the only place in which sacrifices and the ceremonial worship can be carried on, it must be under a new law and dispensation, and an universal king, even David's son and heir, of whose kingdom there shall be no end.

In accordance with all this, we find that when the Anglo-Saxons had been fully established in these islands, and had become the rulers, they were converted to the Christian faith, and have ever since been spreading it abroad, by means of the written Scriptures, Old and New, and the preaching of those Scriptures in all the nations of the earth.

Let it not be supposed by my Christian brethren, that in thus reasoning with reference to the literal or natural seed of Abraham, and the literal and natural Israel, that I ignore the fact of a spiritual seed of Abraham, and of a spiritual Israel. By no means. There are two things to be here observed (1) that I am standing upon ground common to both Jew and Christian. My proofs of Israel's character, localisation, and mission, are all derived from the Old Testament ; not because I could not find many proofs—more and stronger, probably—in the New Testament than I find in the Old ; but in THE FREEMASON I am precluded from doing so by a mutual understanding between the two classes of religionists. (2) That many of the Old Testament prophecies of the destiny and work of Israel are, as I have shown, to be literally fulfilled, in accordance with the language in which they are delivered. That they are to have a spiritual fulfilment, also, I firmly believe, as well as that there are many Old Testament prophecies concerning the spiritual seed of Abraham—the seed by faith—the spiritual Israel, and therefore the heirs of the promises. But for the reason stated, I here pass over all these, and occupy neutral ground. Glorious will be the day, and happy they who live to see it, in which the stick upon which is written, "For Judah and for the children of Israel, his companions ;" and the stick upon which is written "For Joseph the stick of Ephraim and for all the house of Israel, his companions," shall be taken and be joined one to another, so that they shall become one stick ; and when it shall be said unto them, "Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: and I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all: neither shall they defile themselves any more with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions: but I will save them out of all their dwelling places wherein they have sinned, and will cleanse them: they shall be my people, and I will be their God. And David, my servant, shall be king over them: and they all shall have one shepherd: they shall also walk in my judgments, and observe my statutes and do them. . . . And my servant David shall be their prince for ever. Moreover, I will make a covenant of peace with them, it shall be an everlasting covenant . . . my tabernacle also shall be with them; yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people. And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore" (Ezekiel xxxvii. 19-28).

ABERDEEN RECORDS.—No II.

Hon. Cor. Mem. German Masonic Union.

Being anxious that the following eight "Laws and Statutes," which were ordained by the Aberdeen Lodge in 1670, and which were shortly after recorded in their old book, should appear in THE FREEMASON as correctly as possible, I have managed to get, in addition to the copy referred to at page 442, the perusal of another copy taken by a different party—for this latter I am indebted to the kind courtesy of Bro. William Garey, the author of "Reflected Rays of Light on Freemasonry," and I am happy to say that both copies agree:—

FIRST STATUTE.
Article for the Maister.

Wee Master Masons and Entered Prentises all of us under subscryuers, doe here protest and vowe as hitherto wee have done at our entrie when we received the benefit of the Mason Word that wee shall owne this honourable lodge at all occasions except those who can give are Lawfull excuse, or of sickness, or of being out of Towne.

SECOND STATUTE.

And lykwayes wee protest to own the Maister of the forsaid Lodge as a sufficient judge to decide quarrels and all faults that shall be committed in our Lodge, and to exact all fynes according to the cryme committed, and to pardon faults, he always taking the voice of the honourable company, and if any person be contumacious and will not pay the fyne imposed upon him, he being found guilty, in that case the forsaid Maister and his brethren has full power to cause his officer to poynd his work Loomes (tools) especially, or anything else belonging to him, att all occasions, and the officer to have one or two of our number, given him for assistance for that effect if necessity require, and if the forsaid massone that is rebellious shall goe to another judge and compleane and will not refer himselfe to the will of the honourable company being sworne to that Lodge, in that case, the Maister of our Lodge, and his brethren will go to that judge he complains to and will make him a perjured man, and never any more heirafter to be received in our Lodge, nor have any pairt nor portion in charitic, nor mortified means, nor none of his ofspring although they be needful, nor gate any more employment with any of our number, nor from any other far nor near in so far as we can hinder, excepting always such actions of Law as debts sowmes of money, houses, mealles, cloathes, prentise fies, dyets, selling or buying of houses or ridges (or rigs), or yarges, or workmanship to one another, if the Maister of our Lodge and his brethren cannot decyd it, in that case they have libertie to go before the common judge of the land, or Towne they live intill, and free of this their oath.

THIRD STATUTE.
Wardens.

And Lykwayes wee all protest by the oath we have made at our entrie to own the Warden of our Lodge as the next man in power to the Maister, and in the Maisters absence he is full Maister, he allwayes choysing a warden to supply his place for that tyme, and he has power to fyne and exact fynes and to pardon faults allwayes with consent of the willes of the company, and the forsaid Warden is to continue in his office and cannot be changed without a great fault, or his owne will to demitt his charge, or incapacity to go about it, or the willes of the company to take it from him, But the Maister of our Lodge is only to continue a yeire from Saint John's day to Saint John's day, but to continue any longer is the willes of the company. But allwayes every yeir a new choysing of a Maister. A Box Master is to be chosen everie yeir, and to continue no longer as the will of the company thinks fit, and Maisters for the Box to be chosen only from among the company because the Maister keeps one key and the Warden another. FOURTH STATUTE.

Laws for the Box for our poor, never practised heirtofore in Aberdeine.

Wee under subscrybers doe protest be all the oathes we received at our entrie to the benefit off the Measson Word, that wee shall owne and mentain the Measson Box of Aberdeine and of this our lodge, according as wee have begun as the authoires of it and shall employ any money therein, or shall be put therein, to no other end but for the use and mentenance of our distressed brethren, especiallie those of our own Lodge, if by accident they are maimed of leg, or arme, or blind, or aged and cannot work, or suffered stress by fire; in that case those being of our own Lodge wee are ingadged be oath to supply them according to our abilitie and according as this our mortified stock grows greater, we obelidge ourselves, and all our successors, to enlarge our charitic towards all such persones as shall be found needful belonging to our own Lodge. But never to break the stock. But such persones as doe lavish their tyme in drunkenness, and other debaushries, and can and will not work, though they draw on them and they reduced to poverty, by reasson] of ther debaushries, in this case although they belong to our Lodge yet wee are not obelidged to mentaine them in ther poverty, but in so far as can honestly burrie them.

As for ther children belonging to our Lodge, if thirr parents hath lived honestly and virtuously, or have been Maisters of our Lodge in ther tyme, and if those children be virtuously inclyned, out of Christianity, and for the respect wee bear to ther deceased parents, wee are obelidged to see them educat and put to schooles and trades, according to ther inclinationes and to bestow upon them for that effect such a competent supply as wee are able to give on breaking our stock allwayes referred to the will of the company.

As for the Meassons who are strangers to us, and are reduced to poverty, or lame, or blind, wee are obelidged to supply them at the present tyme according as wee are able, and as the willes of the company think fit, but not to mentain them allwayes though they live among us and not to wrong our own poor.

But if necessity requyre wee the members of the Honourable Lodge hath power and all our successors, and after comers in the Measson Crafte, to take out of the Box as much money as will give a treat to any nobleman or gentleman that is a Measson, or for any other affaires of the Lodge. The stock allwayes to be kept wholl but only the annual rents to be disposed upon as the will of the company thinks fit, for the wellfare of the Lodge, and if wee have no use for spending money wee are obelidged to make up the stock with it, and all wee can add to it, and give out the stock to ane sufficient debtor with ane sufficient cautioner.

And seeing wee who are the authoires of this so charitable a deed, and have vowed to mentaine the forsaid Meassone Box of Aberdeine, according as wee have begun for such a good end, Wee therfor strickly command all our after comers and successors in the Meassone Crafte, that they shall never enter any man in our Lodge, but shall be tyed be oath for the wellfair of the Box, as he is tyed for the benefit he receaves at his entric, and if any man of this our Lodge, or our after comers, and successors in the Meassone Craft shall break any of this our Statuts, and lawes, or employ any of the aforesaid money wee mortifie for pious uses, for self interest, he is to be accounted a perjured man not keeping covenant, a breaker of all just lawes and the malediction of our poor, to light upon him till he restore twofold, being once sworne and tyed to the aforesaid Box.

All these statutes wee command all our successors in the Measson Craft to observe and keep and to employ the money in the foresaid Box for no other end but for the uses above mentioned, and so the Lord will bless you and the works of your hands which is the heart wish and desire of us all who are the authoires and subscrybers of this Book.

On the arrival of the down train, shortly before 11.30, the lodge met in the Assembly Room, which was admirably suited for the occasion. On a raised portion at one end of the room was an harmonium, which was ably presided over by Bro. Winderatt, of St. John's, No. 70, and Bro. Taylor, of Pleiades, 710, who, in the course of the day, performed some sacred and Masonic music. The Committee of Petitions met at the Guston Hotel, immediately on the arrival of the train, and did some valuable and benevolent work, considering all claims for relief which were brought before them.

Meantime the other brethren assembled in Grand Lodge, which was duly opened by the R.W. the Grand Master in the usual form. Bro. Major Yates, S.G.W., filled his chair, and Bro. Captain Tanner Davy acted as J.G.W., in the absence of Bro. Prinsep, and the other chairs were occupied by their respective officers.

The new Torbay Lodge, No. 1358, was then opened, and after the warrant had been read and the lodge properly placed, &c., the D.P.G.M., Bro. L. P. Metham, delivered the following oration, which excited much applause:—

Under whatever circumstances Masons meet, whether as individuals in the street or in the dwelling-house, whether in the lodge room, or on an occasion of greater solemnity like the present, one sentiment alone animates them, one opinion alone prevails as to the immutability of the principles to which they owe obedience and regard. Politicians differ as to the principles by which mankind are to be governed, although all profess, that in governing, they seek to confer the greatest amount of good on the greatest possible number of individuals. Religious bodies, although they invoke the name and rely on the mercy of the same beneficent God for temporal happiness and eternal salvation, have even shed each other's blood in their zeal for their own, and their hatred of another's faith. But Masons do not, cannot differ as to their principles; they would cease to be Masons the moment that any but the one true view of Masonry is entertained and acted on. The methods by which those principles are inculcated and enforced are, of necessity, antiquated, for they have been handed down from father to son, by oral tradition, through numberless generations. But being founded on eternal truth, they are firm and solid as they are venerable. In those four words of our ritual, "Brotherly Love, Relief, and Truth," are the germ of all our principles. We may ornament them, we may enlarge, we may elucidate, we may practically apply them, but still they stand unaltered; the beacon light which has shone through ages, when all else was dark, the pure morning star which is to lead the happy future to the time when sorrow and suffering shall pass away for ever at the presence of its expanded rays. When we look back to the history of the past and reflect on the ruins of the narrow prejudices and seemingly unpassable barriers it has demolished, and of the bitter animosities it has quenched; when we regard, too, the movements of toleration, peace, and goodwill it has created in the minds of its disciples, the principles of Masonry need no argument for their support. They are the embodiment of charity in its truest, amplest sense: the charity which carries comfort and consolation to every one of our fellow-creatures in the hour of their need, to the widow and the orphan, the sick, the blind, the deaf, the dumb, the halt, and the maimed. It is that charity which encourages the feeble in their stern battle of life, aids the unfortunate in their troubles, and bids the despairing take heart again; which protects the weak and succours the oppressed of whatever race or creed. It is that charity which thinketh no evil and speaketh no evil, which gives to others the right it claims for itself, of freedom of thought and freedom of speech; it is that charity which not only preaches but practises peace and goodwill among men, and which, as the ritual of Masonry teaches us, leads us so to walk through life that we may raise our eye in humble and devout confidence in death—to that bright morning star whose rising shall bring peace and salvation to the faithful and obedient of the human race. Such are the words, Worshipful Master and brethren of the Torbay Lodge, which you, however feebly I may express them, one and all acknowledge, without a moment's hesitation, convey to your minds a correct description of the doctrines which Masonry enunciates to her children; not a sentence will pass your lips, not even a thought will cross your minds to protest that I have painted Masonry in colours too bright and glowing. No brother will be so great a traitor to those principles as to say, or even think, that Masonry is only a portrait of ideal excellence, meant as a pastime for poetical imaginations, rather than an employment for human nature's daily occupation; a theory to be expatiated on and admired, rather than a practice to be followed and obeyed. Its teaching is our truest staff in the battle of life; it instils into us patience and perseverance, and a firm trust in the final triumph of all that is good. The best of its lessons is the duty of work, constant work for ourselves and others; the idler in Masonry, like the slovenly husbandman, gets little for his pains when he merely scratches the surface: the earnest and industrious man who digs deep finds a mine of gold which will never fail. In its salutary influences it adds to the pleasant links which Providence has provided for strengthening social and domestic ties; to love Masonry and to care nothing for the home constitutes a paradox which no true Mason can understand. If Masonry, rightly practised, conduces, as I contend it does, to make men real, truthful, honest, independent, broad-minded, and warm-hearted to the outer world, surely in that inner world, home, it will make them kindly, considerate, and affectionate to those who depend on them for happiness and comfort. At best, life is not very long. A few more smiles, a few more tears, some pleasure, much pain, sunshine and song, clouds and darkness, hasty greetings, abrupt farewells, and life's play will close; and, injured or injurer, all will pass away and be forgotten. Is it worth while to hate each other or to wrangle on so short a journey? Be constant, then, I pray you, brethren of the Torbay Lodge, in the practice of active universal charity, not only the charity of almsgiving, beautiful and commendable as that is, but that higher, deeper, broader charity, which ennobles and sanctifies life. The one is lovely when even holding forth a cup of cold water to the passing weary pilgrim—let that be your delight and daily practice; but the other—digging a well in the desert, whose waters, once rising to the surface, shall flow on for ever, to quench the burning thirst of generations yet unborn—let that be the one aim and ambition of your lives as Masons. Let it be your earnest and lifelong purpose to make the world better and happier than you found it. If you have done, or have determined to do this, Masonry is not to you only an occasion for social gatherings and friendly recognition, it is not a sanded book, but, passing beyond the portals, you have entered the inner courts of the Temple, and there you will learn the true doctrines of Masonry, the lessons which smooth and adorn the path of life and cheer the bed of death. As a learned brother and minister of the Gospel in America has well said, "Remember, all the plans of Freemasonry are pacific. It co-operates with our blessed religion in regulating the tempers, restraining the passions, and harmonising the discordant interests of men, breathes a spirit of universal love and benevolence; adds one thread more to the silver chord of evangelical charity which binds man to man, and seeks to entwine the cardinal virtues and Christian graces in the web of the affections and the drapery of the conduct." Would all Masons but practice and enforce the doctrines Masonry teaches them, how much of the misery which the world has witnessed during the last year would have been avoided! The character of a true man is to hope all things not impossible, and to strive for all things not unreasonable. Why should we despair of the reason which has enabled us to subdue all nature to our purposes being competent, if permitted by the providence of God, to achieve the still more difficult task of enabling the collective will of mankind to bear down the obstacles which human shortsightedness, selfishness, and passion oppose to a "consummation so devoutly to be wished?" To do this it only needs that every brother should practise what he so professes to admire, and that he should labour by night and by day, in season and out of season, to forward principles so beneficent and divine.

While the day hath light, let light be used,
For no man can the night control!
Or ever the silken chord be loosed,
Or broken the golden bowl,
May we build King Solomon's Temple
With a true Masonic soul!

Bro. W. G. Rogers, G. Sec., next read the minutes of the last Provincial Grand Lodge, and then Bro. Jew, representing a committee, stated that £48 6s. 8d. was due for fees of honour. They had received of these arrears £18 17s. 8d., leaving a balance unpaid of £30 9s., and they regretted to have to report that, owing to the death of five of the brethren, the sum of £9 9s. was irrecoverable. This arose certainly from the want of perseverance on the part of the Treasurer, and the committee strongly recommended that all the fees of honour should be paid on the appointment to office, or within one month, or the P.G. Sec. make immediate application for the same. Bro. Jew then, while giving due eulogy to the conduct of the P.G.M., showed that the sum of £71 8s. was lost by making reappointments to honours, instead of appointing fresh men.

The P.G.M., Bro. Huyshe, thanked Bro. Jew for the report, and was much pleased with his courage in bringing up such a one. In respect to the latter part of it, referring to reappointments, he pointed out that the hopes of obtaining higher honours acted as an incentive to action, which more than counterbalanced any pecuniary loss—a point of view in which the lodge cordially concurred, and in support of which Bro. Captain Ridgway made an admirable and telling speech.

Bro. I. Watts moved that such of the brethren as were in arrears with their fees should be expunged from the lists; but, on the motion of the P.G.M., it was decided that they should have a month's time allowed them in which to pay.

The G. Sec., Bro. Rogers, read the statement of accounts, duly examined and signed by the auditors, Bros. W. Cann and Isaac Latimer, which showed a balance in hand of £211 os. 1d. The same brethren were appointed as auditors for the ensuing year.

The Report of the Committee of Petitions was read by Bro. Gover, mentioning the various grants made in charity. It wished to point out to lodges how permanent an advantage would be conferred on the province, if instead of making individual members governors or subscribers, all votes were purchased in the name of the lodge. It showed there was a large field for charity for the Devonshire brethren both in their corporate and individual capacities, and recommended the adoption of a plan, working excellently in other provinces, viz., the periodical purchase of life governorship or subscribership by a small quarterly payment of a shilling and upwards, by which means every brother would have the chance of having his name connected with some great Masonic charity, and thereby give an increased impetus to efforts on behalf of less fortunate brethren. After some remarks from Bro. Metham and Bro. Cap. Ridgway, the former in favour and the latter rather against this proposal, on the proposition of Bro. Metham, fifty guineas were voted the Protescue Annuity Fund, and fifty guineas to the Boys' School.

This was all the business of the lodge, and the brethren proceeded to church in grand procession, headed by the band of the Paignton Artillery Volunteers, taking in their walk a round of the town. The Rev. C. J. Lyne read the lessons, and the sermon, a very excellent one, on a subject the same as treated by Bro. Metham in his oration, was preached by Rev. Bro. Nankivell. The service ended, the procession re-formed, and returned to the lodge by the same way as it came.

The G.S., Bro. Rogers, read a report of the lodges of Devon, giving the names of the Masters, times of meeting, and number of members. The number of members is as follows:—

No. 39, 74 members; No. 70, 76; No. 105, 64; No. 106, 80; No. 112, 67; No. 156, 90; No. 164, 36; No. 189, 57; No. 202, 97; No. 223, 52; No. 230, 37; No. 248, 32; No. 251, 49; No. 282, 37; No. 303, 38; No. 328, 39; No. 372, 57; No. 421, 33; No. 444, 39; No. 494, 23; No. 666, 19; No. 710, 43; No. 797, 35; No. 954, 93; No. 1091, 33; No. 1099, 32; No. 1125, 42; No. 1135, 15; No. 1138, 42; No. 1181, 19; No. 1205, 90; No. 1212, 34; No. 1247, 19; No. 1254, 37; 1255, 17; No. 1284, 35; No. 1322, 32. Two of the lodges had not yet paid their dues.

The appointments being now all made, the brethren turned from labour to refreshment, and adjourned to the Churston Hotel, where a capital banquet—in respect of quantity and quality—was set out, and to which over 100 of the brethren sat down. Unfortunately, the attendance was not so good, and the impatience of a hungry spirit was not unfrequently shown. For a short time it was a case of care for one's-self, but gradually all things got to order and all went well.

As the banquet was not sat down to until after five o'clock, the time was too short to permit of more than the usual loyal and Masonic toasts.—In responding to his health, the P.G. Master, Bro. Huyshe, referred to the recent visit of the American brethren to England and the sister countries, mentioning the hearty reception they had received and their gratification at it, and said he believed nothing was so calculated, or had assisted so much to allay the jealousy that had existed between the countries as Freemasonry. A few more remarks brought the time near seven o'clock, when the brethren rose in order to catch the train leaving a few minutes after the hour.

The province of Cornwall would have been represented by Bro. W. J. Hughan, P. Prov. G. Sec., but he was unable to attend.

PROVINCIAL GRAND LODGE OF HERTFORDSHIRE.

The annual meeting of this Provincial Grand Lodge was held at the Town Hall, Hertford, on Thursday, 3rd August. Amongst the brethren present were the following: The R.W. Bro. W. Stuart, P.G.W., Prov. The Grand Lodge was opened in due form, and the minutes of the last lodge and the Treasurer's accounts were passed. The P.G. Master then made the following appointments of brethren as Grand Officers:—

Bro. George Francis	...	Prov. D.G.M.
" H. Basy Hodges	...	" G.S.W.
" James Shilcock	...	" G.J.W.
" Rev. G. Finch	...	" G. Chap.

Bro. T. S. Carter, P.G. Supt. of Works, proposed that £5 5s. should be paid out of the P.G. Lodge Funds to the Hertford General Infirmary, which motion was seconded by Bro. J. Sedgwick, P.G. Sec., and carried unanimously.

The banquet was afterwards held in the Assembly Room, which was tastefully laid out. Fifty-seven brethren sat down to dinner. The M.W.P.G. Master presided, the deputy chair being filled by Bro. Hodges, W.M. 403. The dinner was an excellent one, and was well served by Mr. E. M. Davis, of the Salisbury Arms Hotel. The M.W.P.G. Master proposed the following toasts, viz.: "The Queen and the Craft," "The Marquis of Ripon, G.M., and Earl Carnarvon, D.G.M.," "The Earl of Zetland and the Prince of Wales, P.G.M.'s," "The Past and Present Grand Officers of England," responded to by Bro. Stuart, jun. Bro. Halsey proposed "The P.G. Master," who returned thanks. Bro. Ovey proposed "The Deputy P.G. Master and the Provincial Grand Officers," which was responded to by Bro. Hodges, W.M. of the Hertford Lodge and P.G.S.W., who stated how pleased he and the other Hertford brethren were to receive the P.G. Master after an absence of seven years, and he trusted it would not be so long again before they saw the P.G. Lodge at Hertford. The G. Chaplain proposed "The Masters of the Lodges in the Province," which was responded to by Bro. Wilson, W.M. of the Berkhamstead Lodge. In the intervals during the toasts some fine glees and songs were sung by Bros. Barnby, Donald King, and Theodore Distin, and gave great satisfaction.

We must congratulate the W.M. and the members of the Hertford Lodge upon the great success of the meeting.

CONSECRATION of the HARTINGTON R.A. CHAPTER, No. 916.

On Wednesday last week this newly-formed chapter was consecrated with full Masonic honours at Eastbourne, in presence of the following companions: E. J. Furner, D.P.G.M. of Sussex, P.Z. Lennox Chapter; the Rev. Sir John W. Hayes, P.Z., P.G. Chaplain of Grand Lodge; Gavin E. Pocock, P.G.D.C., P.Z. Lennox Chapter; John H. Scott, P.Z. Lennox Chapter; Thomas Trollope, M.E.Z. Emulation; Joseph Dixon, P.Z. Lennox Chapter; W. T. Lording, Lennox Chapter; G. Tatham, P.Z. Lennox Chapter; R. Bramwell, P.Z. Lennox Chapter; A. Elmsley, J. 311; E. V. Freeman, P.Z. 311, &c.; C. G. Reed, M.E.Z. 732; W. A. Shickey, P.Z. Lennox Chapter; C. Briscoe, 311; Dr. John Griffiths, H. Lennox Chapter; Rev. G. W. M. Litle, M.E.Z. 311; G. A. Walters, 311; S. Hayward, P.Z. 53; Dr. Cunningham, M.E.Z. 916; Thomas Lane, H. 916; Walter Kirkland, J. 916; T. Headland, 916; C. M. Matthews, 916; T. S. Watts, 916; Charles Cooke, 916; J. Horne, P.Z.; and Dr. Bramley Roberts.

The first chair was occupied by Comp. Furner, supported in the second chair by Comp. Freeman, and in the third chair by Comp. Trollope, by whom the ceremony of consecration was most ably and impressively performed. Comp. Dr. Griffiths delivered an address—full, as indeed are all the addresses delivered by that rev. companion, of Masonic lore and instruction.

The whole ceremony was under the direction of Comp. Pocock, the pivot on which all the Masonry in Sussex turns. Comp. Dixon acted as E., and Comp. J. H. Scott having succeeded Comp. Furner in the first chair, installed Comp. J. M. Cunningham as Z. of the new chapter. Comp. T. Lane was then installed as H., and Comp. Walter Kirkland as J. The following officers were then appointed and duly invested: Comps. C. M. Matthews, as E.; T. S. Watts, as N.; T. Headland, as Treas.; S. P.S.; Dr. Robeck, as 1st Asst. S.; J. Horne, as 2nd Asst. S.

A number of candidates for exaltation were proposed, and all business being concluded, the chapter was closed in solemn form by the new Z.

An interesting feature in the consecration of the chapter was that a number of ladies were invited to a luncheon and to listen to the strains of the well-known Hanoverian Band, engaged for the occasion. Among the ladies we noticed Mrs. Lane, Mrs. Roberts, Mrs. Litle, Mrs. W. Kirkland, Miss Kirkland, Mrs. Freeman, Mrs. Trollope, Mrs. Reed, the Misses Cunningham, Miss Bellingham, Mrs. Hide, &c.

The banquet was served at four o'clock, and was of a most recherché description, and reflected great credit on Messrs. Headland (Sussex Hotel) and Mr. T. Morris, by whom it was provided. The Banquet Committee well performed their duty, and complete success was the reward. The guests comprised, in addition to the above-named companions, several distinguished Masons. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and suitably acknowledged. We need hardly say a very pleasant day was spent, and one which will be long remembered not only for the pleasure, but also for the instruction it afforded. Letters of apology were received from Comps. the Marquis of Hartington and Lord Pelham, both of whom were unable to be present.

SCOTLAND.

DUNDEE.

A large number of the brethren of Lodges 47 and 49, Dundee, under the patronage of their respective Masters, Bros. Longmuir and Kilt, have been fortunate in carrying out the most successful picnic party we have ever seen in this quarter.

The place selected for the day's excursion, was the Dundee commissioners water-works, at Monikie, in the immediate neighbourhood of one of the residences of the R. H. Earl of Dalhousie, Past Grand Master for Scotland.

Through the instrumentality of Bro. Col. Guthrie, permission was also given the party to visit Panmure House, the gardens, "Live and let live" Monument, and several other places of interest, within his Lordship's private grounds.

His Lordship also gave permission, to those who preferred to indulge in the gentle art, that they might use his boats, for that purpose, on the reservoirs, a favour which was highly appreciated, as it is known such privileges are seldom given beyond his own distinguished friends.

The Monikie reservoirs are very extensive, cover upwards of 130 acres; are studded with prettily wooded islands, and the grounds are beautifully laid out with walks, shrubs, evergreens, and flowers; with lawns sufficiently large to accommodate several thousand visitors.

They are 500 feet above the sea level, and contain nearly a years supply of water to the town of Dundee; 120,000 inhabitants.

The party arrived at the "works" a little before 12 o'clock, and as had been previously arranged, different sections were formed, so that all might see the places having the greatest interest to them.

Meanwhile the stewards, were busily preparing dinner, in a large pavilion, erected by the commissioners, for the comfort of such parties. A splendid spread was ready by three o'clock, including liquors, wines, beer, lemonade, and monikie. Thereafter dance-music was commenced, and large numbers availed themselves of a trip on the light fantastic toe.

Aunt Sally attracted crowds of the sterner sex to her arena, and much merriment was caused by the large number of misses.

Archey butts were put up, and superintended by Bro. Cowie, affording many their first opportunity of drawing the long bow. Tea was served at 6.30.

The greatest good feeling prevailed the company, only one regret was uttered, "that 8 o'clock had come too soon." A special train was now waiting, and all got to Dundee before 9 o'clock, delighted with the day's excursion.

THE PRINCE OF WALES IN IRELAND.

THE installation of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales as Patron of the Grand Lodge of Ireland is an event upon which the Freemasons of the sister isle may fairly be congratulated, and the manner in which the details of the ceremonial were carried out may likewise be regarded as in every respect commensurate with the importance of the occasion. It is also gratifying to be enabled to record that the venerable Duke, who has so long and so ably presided over the Irish Craft, had so far recovered from his recent severe illness as to occupy his wonted chair in the Grand Lodge of Ireland, when the heir to these realms presented himself as a Freemason, for the first time, in the midst of that intelligent and distinguished body. To say that the Prince was well received by such an assembly would be an insult to its undoubted loyalty and fraternal spirit; in fact, it may rather be questioned whether the enthusiasm which our Irish brethren evinced upon the installation of their Royal Patron could be paralleled out of the Craft. We all remember the hearty reception given to the Prince by the members of the Grand Lodges of England and Scotland, when his Royal Highness accepted similar honours at their hands, and we are all glad to know that the third Grand Lodge in the United Kingdom has fully equalled, if not surpassed, its sisters in the affectionate cordiality of its greeting. In his reply to the address read by the Deputy Grand Master of Ireland, the Prince of Wales energetically defended the Masonic Order against the various imputations which are so constantly levelled at its supposed constitution and character. The value of a testimonial as to loyalty derives additional force when uttered by the lips of one who is the heir apparent to a mighty empire, and the Prince very justly added that, if Freemasonry were in any way identified with sects or parties, he should not have joined the Craft. From experience, therefore, of its nature and objects, His Royal Highness was able to repudiate the erroneous idea that Freemasonry is other than a beneficent organization of men, banded together to promote the social, moral, and intellectual advancement of mankind in general, and more particularly to develop in the minds of its adherents the godlike precepts of fraternity, peace, and goodwill. Of course, every member of the Craft knew all this before, and a vast number of well-wishers outside the pale are equally convinced that the principles of Freemasonry breathe the very essence of charity and love; but there is nevertheless a considerable section of the community who, from various causes, view the progress of the Institution with dislike, if not with horror. Nor is this feeling confined, as some may suppose, to the dignitaries of the Roman Church—it is found deeply implanted in the breasts of men who refuse to discriminate in their prejudiced proscription of all secret societies. Such men would, in olden times, have denounced the Christian faith because its primitive disciples were compelled by fear to meet in secret, and to celebrate the mysteries of religion in the caves of Iona or the catacombs of Rome. To be logical, they must also maintain that the secrets of every household should be daily proclaimed on the house-top, and that every human heart should be furnished with a window, that all who pass may read its inmost thoughts. No! they may just as well contend that the seed should not be hidden in the ground—to germinate in darkness and silence into the perfect fruit—as to contend that the progressive lessons of Freemasonry should not be imparted under cover of the friendly shade, and sheltered from the vulgar eye.

It is not very long since an evidence of popular ignorance as to the influence of Freemasonry was exhibited in connection with a trial for murder in which the accused was acquitted, when, because some of the parties concerned were said to be members of the Craft, it was loudly asserted that the result of the trial was due to the efforts made by the Masonic Order in the prisoner's behalf. Ideas of this kind are not easily eradicated, and hence the importance which we attach to the testimony borne by the Prince of Wales in favour of the law-abiding and non-sectarian attitude of the Fraternity. From a Masonic point of view, it is also pleasing to contemplate that if we have separate Grand Lodges for each portion of the United Kingdom—the "Three" are as "One" in their support of the constitutions of the Order, and in their adherence to those principles of loyalty which more effectually guard our ancient monarchy than a rampart of swords and spears. We are also glad to note that the Heir Apparent embraces every opportunity of identifying himself with the Craft, not only by accepting its honours, but by advocating its charities and vindicating its good name.

Our daily contemporaries have been at some pains to contrast the Ireland of 1871 with the Ireland of 1821, when George the Fourth visited the Irish metropolis, and the balance of hope certainly inclines to the present day, notwithstanding the factious efforts of a few misguided partisans. Be this, however, as it may, English Masons rejoice to see the prosperity of the Irish Craft, and will ever be ready to unite with their Hibernian brethren in disseminating the light of Freemasonry throughout the globe. Nor can we doubt that the success of the Masonic Institution in Ireland may be accepted as a pleasant presage of the time when the sons of Erin shall form one united, happy people—when the true principles of freedom and fraternity shall guide their progress, and the blessings of union and peace be for ever established in their midst. In this spirit we tender our congratulations to the Grand Lodge of Ireland upon the installation of the Prince of Wales as Patron of Irish Freemasonry, and we are sure that the honour thus conferred is highly appreciated by our Royal Brother.

Mulum in Parbo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

Is it lawful for any brother, not being a present or past officer of a lodge, on being called on by the W.M. to do so, to deliver the charge to an initiate, the Wardens, of course, consenting to his doing so? Your answer, yes or no, will oblige.

W. T. KINNERSLY.

[Yes, certainly.—Ed. F.]

Bro. Richard Spencer informs us the reprint of the 1722-23-26-30 editions of "The Old Constitutions belonging to the Ancient and Honourable Society of Free and Accepted Masons of England and Ireland," edited by the Bro. the Rev. Dr. Cox, P.G. Chaplain, &c., illustrated with two facsimile frontispieces by the Woodbury process, and other cuts, is now in course of delivery to the subscribers at the Masonic Depôt, 26, Great Queen-street, W.C.

EARLIEST NON-PROFESSIONAL MASONIC OFFICE HOLDERS.

At page 490 Bro. Hughan refers to a statement of Bro. D. M. Lyon that the Earl of Cassillus and Lord Eglinton, being Deacons of the Lodge of Kilwinning in A.D. 1672 and 1674, are the earliest instances yet found of non-professionals, in the building way, holding office in a Scottish Masonic Lodge. Now, in the Aberdeen Records, I find an earlier instance, as it there says, under date 1670, "Harrie Elphinston, Tutor of airth, Collector of the Kinges Customes at Aberdein, Meassen and Master of our Honourable Lodge of Aberdein."

W. P. BUCHAN.

GRAND MASTERS.

The names of the two martyred Grand Masters who yielded up their lives rather than forfeit their integrity will be held in sacred remembrance by the Fraternity as long as time shall last, and their example be held up before the neophyte as worthy of all emulation.

A SENIOR WARDEN.

JUSTICE.

Justice, the practice of which is inculcated to every member of the Order in the first degree. This is the corner-stone on which we only can expect to erect a superstructure solid to ourselves, satisfactory to the Fraternity at large, and honourable in the eyes of the world.

THE LATE BRO. SIR WALTER SCOTT'S MONUMENT.

Some discussion has arisen as to who it was that undertook the drawings for the workmen to work by in the completion of the erection of the monument in Edinburgh to the memory of the late Bro. Sir Walter Scott. It is somewhat pleasing to learn that after the architect died, the charge of the building of the monument was left in the hands of Bro. John Nicol, architect, Master Mason of St. David's Lodge, No. 36 (S.C.), who, with his own hands and without the assistance of any one, drew out the full-sized drawings and also cut the moulds for the workmen to work by. His fellow-citizens and others interested in this noble structure, one of the finest specimens of Floid-Gothic architecture in Scotland, after his labours were completed, entertained him at supper in Bailie Robertson's tavern, Milne-square, Edinburgh, when a magnificent gold watch and chain were presented to him as a testimonial of his professional eminence and private worth. The watch bore the following inscription: "Presented to Mr. John Nicol, architect, by a number of his fellow-citizens, for his talent displayed in finishing the Scott monument after the lamented death of Mr. Kemp. Edinburgh, 1845." It was delivered to Bro. Nicol by Mr. R. W. Jameson, W.S., with a suitable address, in which he called attention to the gratifying fact that the monument had been completed without the slightest accident, to which Bro. Nicol made an appropriate and feeling reply. The evening passed off with much harmony and hilarity, and many excellent and appropriate addresses were made by the gentlemen present, chiefly on subjects connected with the Scott monument, and the very able manner in which his task had been accomplished by Bro. Nicol.

This occurrence, although some time past, is of importance in Masonry, especially when everything in connection with Sir Walter Scott is being brought to light.

BOYS' SCHOOL FETE.

To the Editor of the Freemason.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I am very much surprised to find no answer appear to my note that you kindly inserted in your issue three weeks ago concerning the charges made at the Wood Green Fête of the Boys' School. I certainly thought that a reply would have come from at least the Secretary, if no one else. I should have thought it was in his province, as it is certainly the Secretary's duty to reply to queries more immediately connected with the Craft who retain his services than writing about matters relative to extraneous Orders.

I certainly think that as a subscriber this ought to be properly explained, knowing there are many brethren who are looking anxiously for the reply that ought to put this matter straight.

I remain yours fraternally,

PLANTAGENET.

Stoke Newington, August 9, 1871.

CAUTION.

To the Editor of The Freemason.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—At a meeting of the Charity Committee of the Beaufort Lodge, Bristol, held on the 1st instant, a Frenchman who is travelling through the country, by the name of Charles d'Allemand, seeking relief, came here on the above-mentioned date, stating that he was a Mason and a member of Travailleurs Lodge, 212, and in the greatest distress; that he was an escaped prisoner from Metz, &c. He could not speak a word of English. I asked him numerous questions, and he said he had no certificate of any kind; his answers altogether were very unsatisfactory, consequently I did not examine him. I tendered him 2s. 6d., when he became most intolerably abusive, using frantic gesticulations and beating the table with his fist. I ordered him from the room, his expressions being something awful. He is a daring and resolute character, and it was with difficulty he was got out of the hall.

I write this that brethren and almoners may be on their guard.

Yours fraternally,

W. HAZARD, W.M. 103.

Freemasons' Hall, Bristol, August 3, 1871.

GENERAL GRANT IS NOT A MASON.

To the Editor of The Freemason.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In the account, July 1st, furnished by Bro. Hughan, of a banquet given in Belfast to our so-called "American Knights Templar," a Bro. Gardiner, of Illinois, is alleged to have stated that General Grant was a Freemason. Knowing that General Grant was not present at the Masonic banquet given in Washington in honour of the Earl of Ripon, G.M. of England, Bro. Wadman, publisher of the Masonic Monthly, was induced to make inquiry of Bro. Ben. Perley Poore, of Newburyport, Massachusetts, who for many years has been Secretary of the Senate Committee of Foreign Relations, and who is doubtless known to all the brethren members of the late High Commission, including the G.M. of England. The said Bro. Poore made the following answer to Bro. Wadman's questions:—

"July 17, 1871.

"Theoph. G. Wadman, Esq.

"Dear Sir and Bro.,—President Grant is not a Freemason. In the winter of 1870-71, . . . I waited on him to attend our annual ball, and was with him during the evening. The conversation naturally turned on Freemasonry, and he spoke highly of the Order, but left the impression on my mind that he was prejudiced against joining at West Point [the U.S. Military College], and I have since become convinced that such prejudice exists in that institution."

Now it is possible that President Grant may have been initiated since the above-alluded-to conversation took place, and that Bro. Gardiner of Illinois was apprised thereof by the Atlantic cable. It is, however, very improbable that such an active Mason (Knight Templar included) as Bro. Poore is known to be—and, moreover, he having for many years been a correspondent of the daily press in Boston, whose ramifications extend all around the country, and who doubtless keeps up a correspondence with the brethren at Washington—should not have been informed of President Grant's initiation, if it had ever taken place.

Fraternally yours,

JACOB NORTON.

Boston, U.S., July 19th, 1871.

WEST LANCASHIRE MASONIC RELIEF COMMITTEE.

The annual meeting of the committee of this praiseworthy institution was held on Friday, the 7th ult. Present: Bros. W. Laidlaw, P.G.S.W. (in the chair); Hamer, P.G.T.; Thos. Wylie, P.P.G. J.W., P.G.R.; Robt. Wylie, P.G.D.C.; Hill, 786; Robinson, P.M. 1013; Dr. Smith, P.M. 1094; Wilson, 241; Callow, 673; and the Hon. Secretary of the Committee, Bro. Thos. Marsh, P.G.A.D.C., P.G.S.B.

The following report was read and ordered to be printed, and a copy sent to each lodge and chapter.

Twelfth Annual Report of the West Lancashire Masonic Relief Committee.

The Committee have much pleasure in again calling the attention of the brethren to the annual report of the distribution of the Masonic Relief Fund, confident that the experience of the past years will convince them of the satisfactory progress of this valuable institution.

The good working of the Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, and other committees continues, and the interchange of reports prevents many impositions upon the brethren.

The committee regret the non-attendance of the representatives of lodges during the past year, and they consider it their duty to state that some of the lodges have been entirely unrepresented for some time past; and the committee respectfully urge upon lodges the desirability of electing only such brethren as will undertake the performance of the duties committed to them, so that the work of this committee may be more fairly shared, and the lodges generally better informed of the arrangements and working of the committee.

The committee again thank the Secretaries of Manchester, Birmingham, Leeds, &c., for their kind assistance.

The annual grant is now due, and can be paid to the Treasurer or Secretary any Friday at six o'clock.

You will please elect three members to represent your lodge in the committee, and forward the names of the same to the Secretary.

(On behalf of the committee)

THOMAS MARSH, Hon. Sec.

On the motion of Bro. Hamer, seconded by Bro. Hill, the best thanks of the committee were voted to Bros. Wm. Laidlaw (Chairman), Dr. Smith (Vice Chairman), Mott (Treas.), and Thos. Marsh (Sec.), for their valuable services; and they were again re-elected to the same offices.

THE annual Provincial Grand Lodge of Lincolnshire will be held at Lincoln, under the presidency of His Grace the Duke of St. Albans, Prov. G.M., and under the auspices of the Witham Lodge, No. 297, on Thursday, the 17th inst., at 12 o'clock. The lodge will be adjourned to the site of the new Masonic Hall, where the R.W. Prov. Grand Master will then proceed to lay the foundation-stone of the new building. The banquet will be held at the Saracen's Head at 4 p.m. Tickets, including dinner and dessert, 5s. each. In order that Bro. W. Watkins, the W. Master of the Witham Lodge, may make suitable arrangements for the banquet, the brethren are requested to intimate, as soon as possible, if their company may be expected, and he will in such cases reserve seats for them.

INSTALLATION of the PRINCE OF WALES as PATRON of FREEMASONS in IRELAND.

The installation of His Royal Highness as Patron of the Masonic institution in Ireland was by no means the least important incident of the Royal visit. Some time ago a unanimous vote of the Grand Lodge appointed him to that high honour, and the present visit of His Royal Highness to this country was made the occasion of his formal installation. The privilege of admission was restricted to Past Masters and the superior officers of lodges, and yet the attendance of members of the Craft at the Masonic Hall, Molesworth-street, was larger than the hall could accommodate. All were in full dress, and wore their aprons, collars, and jewels. Shortly before five o'clock his Grace the Duke of Leinster, Grand Master, preceded by the usual procession of Grand Officers, entered the Grand Lodge-room, and took his seat upon the throne. The Grand Lodge having then been opened in ample form, a deputation of Grand Officers, consisting of Sir Edward Grogan, Bart., Sir Edward Borough, Bart., and Arthur Bushe, Esq., the Deputy Grand Master, together with Theophilus E. St. George, Esq., the Grand Steward, and Alderman Manning, Grand Director of Ceremonies, were requested by the Most Worshipful the Grand Master to receive His Royal Highness. A few minutes afterwards loud cheers from the street announced the arrival of the Royal brother. The Prince was received at the entrance of the hall by the deputation just named. He was accompanied by the Marquis of Hamilton, Mr. Francis Knollys, and Mr. Courtenay Boyle. The party were conducted to the Grand Lodge-room, where, on entering, His Royal Highness was saluted by the brethren as a Past Grand Master of England, but at the request of his Grace the Grand Master the salute was strictly according to Masonic ceremonial, no demonstration of applause being made.

The following distinguished members of the Fraternity were present:—R.W. Bros. Robert William Shekleton, D.G.M.; Right Hon. Baron Athlumney, S.G.W.; Viscount Powerscourt, J.G.W.; Arthur Bushe, G. Treas.; Maxwell C. Close, G. Sec.; Rev. John James MacSorley, G. Chaplain; W. Bros. Charles A. Cameron, S.G.D.; Charles D. Astley, G. Supt. of Works; Joseph Manning, G. Dir. of Cers.; Theophilus E. St. George, G. Steward; Francis Quin, G. Organist; Stuart Nassau Lane, G.I.G.; Charles T. Walmisley, D.G. Sec. and Treas.; Bro. S. B. Oldham, Asst. Sec. Representatives:—From the G.L. of England, R.W. Captain Godfrey Brereton, R.W. Grand Orient of France, R.W. Sir Edward R. Borough, Bart.; G.L. of Prussia, R.W. Philip C. Smyly; G.L. of Canada, R.W. James V. Mackey; G.L. of Louisiana, R.W. Lucius H. Deering; G.L. of Virginia, R.W. John Cottle; G.L. of New York, R.W. John Ringland; G.L. of Illinois, R.W. Richard B. De Burgh; G.L. of Alabama, R.W. Capt. George Huband; Prov. G.L. of Lisbon, W. John H. Goddard. The W.M.'s, Wardens, and Secretaries of the Dublin lodges. There were also present: The Duke of Manchester, Lord Bernard, the Right Hon. Major-General Dunne, Sir John Keane, Bart., Sir William Wilde, Colonel Snow, Colonel Cooper, the Rev. S. G. Morrison (P.G. Master), Drs. Macnamara, Beatty, Banks, Ringland, and Smith; Major Gerard Irvine, Capt. Massey, Capt. Robinson, Capt. Robertson, Dr. Tufnell, Dr. Tyner (Downpatrick), Rev. C. K. Irwin, Rev. Mr. Stokoe (Armagh), Dr. Peyton, Major Copley, Captain Bailey, Geo. Chatterton (P.P.D.G.M.), W. Fetherstonhaugh, Ambrose M. Baird (Donoughmore), J. Spaight (Limerick), William E. Gumbleton (P.G.W. England), Mr. Hamerton (Queen's Proctor), Rev. H. Westby, Mr. William S. Tracy, Capt. Nicholson, Capt. Mostyn, Major Thompson, Mr. Francis Elakely, Captain Gilliton, Dr. Minchin, and J. L. Toole.

Having been saluted, the Prince took his seat on the left of the throne, in a magnificent chair, specially prepared for the installation by Bro. Digges, of Lincoln-place. It was surmounted by a beautifully carved and gilt plume of feathers and the Crown, with the motto "Ich dien," the blue ribbon of the Order, and scenery richly emblazoned.

The D.G.M. (Bro. Shekleton), was then called upon by the Grand Master to read the following:—

Address of the Most Worshipful the Grand Master and Brethren of the Most Ancient and Honourable Society of Free and Accepted Masons of Ireland to His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, K.G.

May it please your Royal Highness,—We, the Grand Master and Brethren of the Most Ancient and Honourable Society of Free and Accepted Masons of Ireland, in Grand Lodge assembled, do most cordially and fraternally welcome your Royal Highness to the Grand Lodge of Ireland. We hail with the highest gratification your Royal Highness' accession as a Brother of the Order. Your Royal Highness, in following the example of your Royal and illustrious relative, by affording your patronage to our Order, has conferred upon it the highest honour which it is possible for it to receive.

We more particularly have to express our warmest thanks and gratitude for the distinguished mark of favour your Royal Highness has conferred upon the Order in Ireland by accepting the office of Patron; and we pray the Great Architect of the Universe that He may grant you a long life and continue to pour upon you His best blessings.

LEINSTER, G.M.

MAXWELL C. CLOSE, Grand Secretary.

Dublin, 4th August, 1871.

His Royal Highness made the following reply:—Most Worshipful Sir and Brethren, I thank you very sincerely for your cordial and fraternal address, and for the kind sentiments contained in it towards myself. It was a source of considerable gratification to me when I was elected a member of the Craft, and I think I may, without presumption, point to the different Masonic meetings which, since my initiation, I have attended as a proof of the interest I take in all that relates to Freemasonry. I can assure you that it has afforded me great gratification to become the Patron of the Most Ancient and Honourable Society of Free and Accepted Masons in Ireland, and that an opportunity has been given to me by my visit to Ireland of being installed here to-day. (Cheers.)

The Grand Master then invested His Royal Highness with the collar, apron, and jewel as Patron. The apron was of the richest white satin, having two rows of gilt lace, fringed with bullion; the collar to match. The jewel was a beautiful and costly piece of workmanship. It was formed of an oval wreath of shamrocks of gold, on ground of blue enamel, surmounted by the Prince of Wales' plume in silver; upon the enamel is a square and compass, studded with diamonds, and surmounted by a regal crown enriched with rubies and diamonds. On the back of the jewel is a plate of gold, bearing the following inscriptions:—"Presented by the Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons of Ireland, to His Royal Highness Albert Edward Prince of Wales, Earl of Dublin, Knight of St. Patrick, &c., as Patron of their ancient Order, 1871."

The brethren then, according to ancient custom, saluted the Prince as Patron of the Order in Ireland, the venerable Grand Master giving the word, and the effect was thrilling in the extreme.

His Royal Highness, in returning thanks, said: Most Worshipful Sir and Brothers, I have now to thank you heartily and cordially for your flattering reception, and for the honour you have done me; and I beg to assure you of the pleasure I feel at having been invited to become the Patron of the Order of Freemasons in Ireland. It is a source of considerable satisfaction to me to know that my visit to this country has afforded this opportunity of meeting you, brothers, in lodge, and so interchanging these frank and hearty greetings. It is true I have not been a Mason very long. I was initiated, as you perhaps know, in Sweden, a few years ago. After which I visited the Grand Oriental Lodge of Denmark, and a short time afterwards I had the signal gratification of being elected a Past

Grand Master of the United Grand Lodge of England. Last year I had the honour of being elected Patron of the Order in Scotland, and, brethren, though last not least, comes the special honour you have conferred on me—that of being elected a member of this Grand Lodge and Patron of the Order in Ireland. (Cheers.) I thank you for it from the bottom of my heart. I may, I think, refer with some pride to the number of Masonic meetings I have entered in England since my initiation, as a proof of my deep attachment to our Order. I know—we all know—how good and holy a thing Freemasonry is, how excellent are its precepts, how perfect the doctrines it sets forth; but forgive me if I remind you that some of our friends outside are not so well acquainted with its merits as we are ourselves, and that a most mistaken idea prevails in some minds that, because we are a secret society, we meet for political purposes, or have a political bias in anything we do. I am delighted, brethren, to have this opportunity of proclaiming what I am satisfied you will agree with me in, namely, that we as Masons have no politics; that the great bonds of our Order is to strengthen the bonds of fraternal affection, and to make us live in pure and Christian love with all men; that though a secret, we are not a political body; and that our Masonic principles and hopes are essential parts of our attachment to the Constitution, and our loyalty to the Crown. (Loud and prolonged applause.) Your applause unmistakably shows me that you entirely agree in the sentiments which I have expressed. (Renewed applause.) Brethren, let me thank you for the kind and generous welcome which you have extended to me on this occasion. May we all continue to promulgate the principles which have been instilled into our hearts and minds since we became Masons, and let us endeavour to walk in the same path. (Great applause.) Brethren, I thank you once more for the cordial welcome which you have extended to me on this occasion, of which I shall ever bear a pleasing and lively recollection. (His Royal Highness resumed his seat amid loud and prolonged applause.)

At the conclusion of the ceremonial, the newly-installed Grand Patron was greeted with enthusiastic cheers, such as are seldom heard within the walls of the Masonic Hall. Shortly afterwards the G.L. was closed with the customary formula, and His Royal Highness was then conducted by the Grand Master through the various rooms of the hall, and explained the uses to which each was devoted. In one of the small lodge rooms the pupils of the Masonic Orphan School were assembled. The Prince seemed to be much struck with the appearance of the children. He put several questions to them, and expressed great gratification at their intelligence, and the evident interest taken by the Brotherhood in their well-being. While His Royal Highness was in the Prince Masons' room, the brethren lined the staircase and halls of the building, and on passing out to his carriage was greeted with enthusiastic cheers, which were taken up with spirit by the large crowds assembled in the streets.

It may be mentioned that the auspicious occasion of the Prince's visit was availed of to inaugurate the new organ which was sometime ago erected in the Grand Lodge room. As the illustrious Patron was leaving the lodge, Bro. Quin, Grand Organist, played a march composed by him specially for the installation, and which the Prince, in the most gracious manner, authorised him to dedicate to him. The organ was built by Messrs. Telford and Telford. The Grecian case, designed by Bro. Telford, was the present of his Grace the Grand Master. It is very rich, elegant, and appropriate. The instrument contains two manuals, great and swell organs of full compass, a pedal organ of two stops, the usual couplers, and above 1,000 pipes. There is a novel and ingenious plan for moving the stops at the will of the performer adopted in this instrument, which is most convenient, as by pressing a small button in front of the keys the stops are changed instantaneously in an astonishing manner. The tone is admirably suited to the hall, and the quality of each stop individually most perfect and beautiful, and the ensemble all that could be desired.

For the above report and following remarks we are indebted to the Dublin Daily Express, of 5th inst:—

The scene witnessed yesterday evening in the Masonic Hall has not disappointed our expectations. It was one of the utmost interest and impressiveness, not merely as a spectacle, but in a moral aspect. The brethren of an ancient and noble Order, which has been traduced and denounced by persons who are jealous of its social influence, will read with unalloyed satisfaction the manly vindication pronounced by His Royal Highness. His frank and generous avowal of sympathy with its principles, the true and telling eulogy which he delivered, and the fraternal tone of his address, will endear him to the Order, and raise him, we believe, still higher in the loyal esteem of the community. Independence and courage are qualities which every Irishman appreciates, and when shown in defence of a good cause, and under circumstances which test sincerity of motives and firmness of resolution, they claim a larger share of grateful admiration. The sentiments uttered by His Royal Highness will find an echo in the hearts of many, even of those who are not initiated into the Order, but who have opportunities of seeing the practical proofs of its benevolent spirit.

THE ROSICRUCIAN SOCIETY IN ANGLIA

It is but fair to the members of this society to state that it is entirely non-masonic in its character, with this sole exception, that every aspirant is required to belong to the Masonic Fraternity. This is rendered necessary, as we find in antiquarian research, that there are many points of resemblance between the secrets of Masonry and those of Rosicrucianism, which it would be impossible to discuss with any degree of fulness before gentlemen who were ignorant of at least the three first grades of Freemasonry.

The society is at present composed of 144 Fratres, and is ruled over by three brethren, who have attained to the ninth degree, or Supreme Magus. Seventy-two of these compose the London College, and thirty-six is the statutory number of each of the two subordinate colleges, Bristol and the west, presided over by Fr. Capt. Irwin, 31°; and Manchester and the northern counties, the president of which is Fr. C. F. Matier, 30°.

The object of the society being purely literary and antiquarian, it is almost unnecessary to state that no interference with, or opposition to, any rite of Freemasonry is intended, or even tolerated; and it matters not to the members whether the aspirant be a disciple of pure and ancient Masonry, as interpreted by the Grand Lodge of England, or be an enthusiastic follower of those rites which embrace the Hautes Grades, provided he be of good standing and possesses sufficient ability to take part in the peculiar objects of research to which the society restricts itself—mystic and Rosicrucian lore.

Thus the roll of the society displays names, side by side, on the one hand, ardent supporters of the high grades, and on the other, their bitter opponents. It affords to both a common platform to discuss for their mutual improvement the writings and doings of those ancient worthies to whom we must unquestionably attribute a great, if not the greater, part of the Freemasonry of the present century.

The Honorary President is Fr. the Hon. Lord Lytton, of Knebworth, perhaps better known in the hearts of Englishmen as "Bulwer Lytton," whose weird novels of "Zanoni" and "A Strange Story" are household works, and in the library of every one. Among others of high literary attainments, we can point to Fr. Lord Lindsay, one of the most energetic and enthusiastic amateur astronomers of the day. Fr. Hargrave Jennings, the author of "The Rosicrucians"; Fr. Yarker, the author of "The Secret Schools of the Middle Ages"; and many others, among whom we must not omit to mention one of the most erudite biblical scholars of the age, Fr. William Carpenter, and Fr. William James Hughan, whose name is familiar to every reading Mason in England and America.

The society possesses an organ of its own, The Rosicrucian, at present published quarterly, but which is about to be issued monthly. It is edited by Frs. R. Wentworth Little and Dr. Woodman, and is altogether devoted to that part of the proceedings of the society which may be written and communicated. Contributions are invited from all members of the society, as several of the mystic writings of Robertus de Fluctibus (or Fludd) and others are being reprinted in its columns.

We think we have now stated sufficient to assure our brethren of the mystic tie that in supporting the Rosicrucian Society we are not promulgating any new rite in Freemasonry, but simply devoting ourselves to researches in the literature of the past, and especially that portion which is endeared to us by the honoured names of Elias Ashmole and the Rosicrucians of the Middle Ages.

Benedictum sit nomen Domini.

"MORE than a year ago one of my children was attacked with bronchitis, and, after a long illness, was given up by my physician as 'past cure.' I was then induced to try your Vegetable Pain Killer, and from the time I began the use of it the child rapidly got better, and is now strong and healthy.—JOHN WINSTANLEY, 10 Whittle-st., Lpool, Jan. 1869.—To P. D. & Son."

ROYAL MASONIC BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.

The committee meeting of this Institution was held in the Board-room of the Freemasons' Hall, on Wednesday, August 9th, Bro. B. Head, V.P., presiding. There were also present: Bros. Major Creaton, C. C. Dumas, W. Young, J. Smith, Gale, F. Walters, F. Adlard, H. M. Levy, T. Cubitt, Fraser, J. Farnfield, E. Cox, A. Perkins, Baker, W. Farnfield (Sec.), &c.

The minutes of the meeting held in July were read and confirmed, and the death of Bro. J. Ashwell, male annuitant, was announced.

The sub-committee's report, recommending the acceptance of Mr. W. Gaskins' tender for repairing the asylum at Croydon, was agreed to.

Bros. C. Blake and Bull and Mrs. Buckingham accepted rooms in the asylum, and were approved of.

There are now on the funds 106 males and 74 females receiving full annuities, and 5 female annuitants receiving half their late husbands' annuity.

The petitions of Bros. W. Alison (Lodge 13) and B. Box (Lodge 422) and Mrs. S. Howell were accepted, and their names placed on the list of candidates for election.

It was arranged to solicit the Grand Master, Bro. the Marquis of Ripon, to preside as chairman at the forthcoming festival, or to get him to provide a brother to do so in case he could not accept it himself.

The usual vote of thanks to the chairman closed the meeting.

PROPOSED TESTIMONIAL TO BRO. BINCKES.

We have received the following circular:

The rise, progress, and ultimate permanent establishment of the Royal Masonic Institution for Boys have become matters for Masonic history, and of general interest to all Freemasons.

To those who have taken an active part in the development of the Institution, it is well known how Bro. Binckes has used the most untiring efforts and extraordinary exertions to obtain the funds required for the erection of the present handsome building, which, for completeness as a structure, and for utility as a home and school, is probably unsurpassed.

At the time of its dedication, it became a question amongst both town and provincial brethren, who were cognizant of the great exertions of the Secretary, whether the time had not then arrived for a general recognition of his valuable services; but in the minds of many brethren of eminence a difficulty presented itself in the fact that the school was then burdened with a debt of considerable magnitude, and on reflection it was determined that it was more fitting to centralize all efforts towards reducing the liabilities than, even temporarily, to divert the munificence of donors and subscribers.

By the Secretary's continued perseverance and thorough devotion to the welfare of the Institution the liabilities have been so far reduced as to leave the Institution now only indebted in a comparatively small sum to its bankers, whilst during the nine years of Bro. Binckes' Secretaryship the number of boys has been increased from 70 to 118.

This being the case, it is felt that some suitable compliment should be paid to him by such a substantial testimonial for his earnestness and unflagging zeal, as shall hereafter be a permanent benefit to himself and family. By a resolution of the Committee individual subscriptions are limited to one guinea—those from lodges and chapters are unrestricted.

The Hon. Sec. (Bro. Edward Cox, of 102, Chancery-lane, London, W.C.) will, on application, forward a supply of copies hereof and collecting cards, as desired.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Star Lodge, No. 1275.—An emergency meeting of this flourishing lodge was held at the Marquis of Granby, New-cross-road, Deptford, on Saturday, 5th inst., when the W.M., Bro. W. Ough, P.G.P., in usual fluent and correct manner, raised Bros. W. Kipps, R. F. Duff, and J. Davis to the third degree, initiated Mr. Edwin Townsend, and passed Bros. C. Saunders and J. Fox to the second degree. It was arranged to hold the installation meeting at the lodge-house, on Friday September 1st, and the banquet at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street. Business being ended the lodge was closed. There were present, besides those before named, Bros. C. J. Hogg, P.G.S., S.W. and W.M.-elect; H. Keeble, J.W.; J. Smith, P.G.P., I.P.M., Treas.; Fred. Walters, P.M., Sec.; H. Crabtree, J.D.; G. Pymm, P.M., I.G.; G. J. Elliott, G. F. Guest, W. H. Trampleasure, J. J. Limebeer, W. M. Bull, T. Hobson, and others. The visitors were Bros. G. Andrews (J.D. 871), W. Batchelor (1178), E. Glover (509), &c.

Lodge of Asaph, No. 1319.—An emergency meeting of this lodge was held at Freemasons' Hall, on Monday last to relieve the lodge of he work at the next regular meeting, being the installation of the W.M.-elect, Bro. C. Coote, S.W. Present: Bros. E. S. Jones, W.M.; C. Coote, S.W.; J. Chamberlin, J.W.; E. Frewin, J.D.; W. A. Tinney, I.G.; T. Adams, P.G.P.; H. J. Tinney, Egeron, Compton, Easton, Weston, Reynolds, Horton, J. Baker, jun., Boatwright, Silberberg, Snelling, and Snyders. Visitor: Bro. J. Caswell, 333, I.C. The business consisted in balloting for Mr. J. F. Hutchins for initiation, which proved unanimous; passing Bro. Reynolds, and raising Bro. J. A. Compton. The W.M. having entrusted the chair to Bro. Coote, P.M., and retired, Bro. Coote, in submitting that a P.M.'s jewel be voted to Bro. Jones, said that it afforded him the greatest possible pleasure to be the proposer. It was a law in this lodge (and, he thought, a every salutary one), that the sum should not exceed ten guineas, as some brother would subscribe a certain amount which others could not afford, but at the same time from feelings of delicacy felt, they could scarcely do otherwise. He should therefore propose that the highest amount allowed by the by-laws—namely, ten guineas—be voted to Bro. Jones for his indefatigable exertions as the first Master of this happy and prosperous lodge.—Bro. Chamberlin, J.W., seconded the motion in a few well-chosen words, and it was carried unanimously.—It was also proposed by Bro. Coote, duly seconded, and carried unanimously, that a testimonial, engraved on parchment, be prepared and framed to accompany the jewel, expressing the great esteem the brethren have for their first W.M., from whom the idea of the Lodge of Asaph emanated. On the W.M.'s return to the lodge, Bro. Coote announced to him what had been proposed and carried during his temporary absence.—Bro. Jones expressed the great pleasure it would afford him to receive this great mark of esteem. He assured the brethren that the testimonial would be more prized by him than gold or jewels, as it displayed the feelings of the brethren towards him.—The lodge was then closed with solemn prayer.

PROVINCIAL.

SUTTON.—The Frederick Lodge of Unity, No. 452.—The meeting of this lodge was held at the Station Hotel, Sutton, on Tuesday, the 1st inst. Present: Bros. C. W. Dommatt, W.M.; W. C. Poole, J.W.; J. Robins, P.M., Treas.; Magnus Ohren, I.P.M., Sec.; W. S. Masterman, J.D.; A. J. Dickenson, S.D.; H. E. Frances, D.C.; J.W. Sugg, I.G.; W. L. Webb, R. H. Evans, and N. E. Jennings, P.M.'s; F. Williams, W. V. Wilson, W. C. Holmes; visitor, Bro. H. B. Clarke, Albion, No. 9. It was moved by the Secretary, and seconded by the W.M., that notice be sent to the Grand Secretary and to the Prov. Grand Secretary for Surrey, that by an error of description the words Railway Hotel had been used in connection with this lodge instead of "Station Hotel." Minutes of previous meeting having been confirmed, Bro. William Virgo Wilson was raised to the third degree. Mr. Cartwright Holmes was then initiated in a very able manner by Bro. Magnus Ohren. The Treasurer and Secretary were invested by the W.M. with the jewels presented to them by the lodge. The W.M., in very flattering terms, thanked those officers for the labours bestowed by them upon the lodge duties, and specially thanked Bro. Ohren for the assistance rendered to himself by that brother in carrying out the duties of the chair. Mr. Charles Henry Edmunds was proposed for initiation, after which the lodge was closed and the brethren adjourned to banquet.

ULVERSTON.—Lodge of Furness, No. 995.—The usual monthly communication was held on Tuesday, 1st inst., at the Masonic Temple, Theatre-street. The lodge was opened by Bro. Thos. Dodgson, W.M. There was a good attendance of brethren. Three gentlemen were balloted for, the ballot in each case being unanimously in their favour. The W.M., in his usual impressive manner, raised Bro. Nicholson, initiated Mr. James Robinson, and passed Bro. Maud. The W.M. very feelingly referred to the great loss the lodge had sustained by the death of the J.W., Bro. R. James, who during the time he held the offices of Secretary and J.W. gained for himself such a reputation for correct working as few young Masons attain. It was resolved unanimously that an illuminated letter of condolence be forwarded to the father of the deceased J.W.—The lectures are now always given on the tracing-boards with the most particular attention to details, and the musical arrangements of the lodge are excellent, reflecting great credit on the organist and choir. A very interesting feature of the last meeting, after the regular business had been disposed of, was the presentation by Bro. the Rev. W. A. Blake, M.A., of a magnificent sword to the lodge for the I.G. A fine inlaid rapier, the gift of Bro. Remington, P.M., had hitherto been used, but this sword of Bro. Blake, although of so splendid a character, is by no means out of place in the most gorgeously appointed Masonic temple in the North of England. It is a beautiful new court sword (regulation pattern), with embossed and richly gilded hilt, and heavy gold bullion cord, knot, and tassels. The scabbard is patent leather, with handsome gilt ferrules. The W.M., on the part of the lodge, thanked Bro. Blake most warmly for this very kind donation, and assured him it would be treasured in the lodge as a mark of his esteem and goodwill, and would continually remind them of his fraternal regard.

WESTERHAM.—Amherst Lodge, No. 1223.—This young and flourishing lodge held its regular meeting on Thursday, the 27th ult., at the King's Arms Hotel, Westerham, Kent, Bro. Colonel Warde, W.M., in the chair, supported by his Wardens and assistant officers and a goodly muster of members. The lodge having been duly opened by the W.M., Bro. Pearson (of Maidstone), P.P.G.D. Kent, at the particular request of the Master, initiated Mr. Charles Atkins, of Lewisham. Bros. C. C. Petley and G. Mellish were then passed to the second degree, the work of the chair and that of its officers having been performed in a very able manner. Bro. J. T. Bowen, Sec., having read the report of the Audit Committee, the lodge was closed in due form, and the brethren adjourned to the banquet, which was presided over by the esteemed W.M., Bro. Colonel Warde. The cloth having been removed, the W.M. proposed the usual loyal and Masonic toasts, the brethren doing ample justice by responding in the most hearty manner. Bro. Col. Warde, being at the present time the Grand Senior Warden of the province, deputed the S.W. to propose the next toast, which was "The Provincial Grand Master of Kent and the Grand Officers, Past and Present." The W.M. and Bro. Pearson, P.P.G.D., returned thanks in suitable and effective speeches on behalf of the province. The W.M. then gave "The Provincial Grand Lodge of Middlesex," coupling with the toast the name of Bro. J. G. Marsh, P.M. 28 and 192, a Grand Officer of the province, who had especially come from London to visit the Amherst Lodge on this occasion, and called upon the brethren to give him a hearty welcome. Bro. Marsh returned thanks on behalf of the P.G. Master, Col. Burdett, and the Grand Officers, thanking the W.M. and members for the honour they had done the P.G. Lodge of Middlesex in proposing and responding to the toast, and also expressed himself highly pleased at the very kind reception given him, and the excellent working of the lodge. The next toast was—and which is also an important one in every lodge on such occasions—"The Initiate" (Bro. Charles Atkins), who had been received into the mysteries of the Order that day. Bro. Atkins replying in an excellent speech. "The Health of the Officers" and the Tyler's toast brought a very enjoyable meeting to a close.

ST. IVES, CORNWALL.—Treganna Lodge, No. 1272.—The regular monthly meeting of this young and flourishing lodge was held on Friday, the 4th of August, at 6 p.m. Bro. Martin Dunn, W.M., Prov. G. Steward, in the chair. There were also present: Bros. Charles Trevithick, S.W.; A. R. Harry, J.W.; John Coombe, P.M., Prov. J.G. Deacon; and several other members of the lodge. Bro. W. James Hughan, P.M. 131, P. Prov. Grand Secretary, attended as a visitor by special invitation from the lodge. The W.M. worked the ceremonies of initiation and passing in a faultless and most impressive manner, and in consequence of the anxiety of that worthy brother to give the degrees at all times to the candidates singly, and there having been a considerable number of new members within the last few months, the officers have had numerous opportunities to perfect themselves in the ritual, and availed themselves of such opportunities with avidity. The various officers performed their duties in a most satisfactory manner, and especially the capabilities of the Wardens and the J.D. were most manifest. The W.M. having desired Bro. Hughan, P.M., to confer the third degree on Bro. T. T. John, the ceremony of raising was worked by that well-known brother to the complete satisfaction of the brethren present; but, unfortunately, owing to the "slight of time," the lectures on the tracing-boards (which several of the members were prepared to give) were deferred to a more convenient season. The W.M. having resumed his chair, Bro. C. Trevithick then formally proposed a vote of thanks to Bro. W. James Hughan, the late Prov. G. Secretary of Cornwall, for travelling from Truro to St. Ives, in response to the wishes of the brethren. The proposition was seconded by Bro. Coombe, P.M., and most kindly supported by the W.M., J.W., and Bro. T. T. John, and, of course, carried by acclamation.—Bro. Hughan, in reply, congratulated the Master, Wardens, and brethren on their excellent working, and expressed his surprise to find that in a few months the youngest lodge in the province had actually proved itself capable of giving the beautiful ceremonies of Freemasonry equal in every respect to the oldest or best-worked lodge in the county! Bro. Hughan also observed that, as they had a fine Masonic hall of their own, and were determined to work together in love and harmony, and as every brother, from the Worshipful Master to the Tyler, endeavoured to assist each other in the duties of their lodge, and were most anxious to promote the interests of Freemasonry, it was evident that while the members were favoured with such excellent presiding officers as the present Worshipful Master, the lodge was bound to be prosperous, financially, and successfully, Masonically, in the highest degree.—Two propositions for initiation were received, and quite a "red-letter day" in the history of the Treganna Lodge was brought to a close.

Walters, P.Z., Treas., installed Comp. P. Browne as H. The usual five-guinea P.Z.'s jewel was unanimously voted to Comp. P. A. Nairne for his services rendered to the chapter. The following companions were elected officers for the ensuing year, viz., Comps. P. Browne, Z.; M. Scott, H.; R. S. Foreman, J.; A. Williams, S.E.; T. Quihampton, S.N.; J. Hills, P.S.; F. Walters, P.Z., Treas. (re-elected for fifth time); and C. T. Speight, Janitor (re-elected). The chapter was then closed. Visitor: Comp. G. S. Elliott, 949. Banquet and dessert followed, and the usual toasts were given and received, Comp. G. S. Elliott responding in an able manner for the visitors. "The Treasurer" was made a special toast by the M.E.Z., who, in an eloquent speech, mentioned the eminent services rendered to the chapter by their Treasurer, Comp. F. Walters; also alluding in a happy manner to the fact that it was the anniversary of that companion's birth. This toast was received with enthusiasm, and Comp. F. Walters responded in an appropriate speech. After a few hours most agreeably spent, the companions separated.

Bennett upon his appointment to the office of P.S.G.D.; expressing their firm convictions that the R.W. Prov. G. Master had made a very judicious selection. The ballot was taken for Bro. S. Suckley, of the Royal Brunswick Lodge, 296, and Bro. William Ryland, jun., of the Wentworth Lodge, 1239, which proving unanimous in their favour, they were severally introduced and advanced to this honourable degree in a very able manner, each officer doing his work in such a style as to greatly redound to his credit. Labour being ended, the brethren adjourned to banquet, presided over by the W.M. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were given and heartily responded to, Bros. Scargill and Moss adding much to the pleasure of the brethren by their admirable vocalisation, who separated after spending a truly fraternal evening.

ROYAL ARK MASONRY.

We are requested to insert the following copy of a letter sent to the G. Secretary of the Mark Grand Lodge by the Grand Scribe of the Grand Lodge of Royal Ark Mariners:—

"Devereux-court, Temple, London, 20th June, 1871.

"Sir and Brother,—I am directed by the M.W. G.C. of the Order of R.A.M. for England and Wales, the colonies and dependencies of the British Empire, to express to the Grand Lodge of M.M. Masons the great regret he feels that they should have published their intention to grant warrants to Mark lodges to work the degrees of the order of Royal Ark Mariners. The Grand Commander of R.A.M. enters his protest against this attack upon the rights of R.A.M. by a body which has not the slightest title to interfere with an order conferring a set of degrees higher than that of Mark Master Mason; the more especially as the Grand Lodge of R.A.M. have an undoubted and long-exercised right to confer the degrees of Mark Man and Mark Master. This right, however, they are willing to waive, provided their jurisdiction over other degrees is not interfered with.

"The G.C. of R.A.M. desires to place on record the following facts:—

"1.—That the English Order of Royal Ark Mariners, with its various degrees, has existed from time immemorial, and has had a Grand Lodge for nearly one hundred years. It has never been subordinate either to the United Grand Lodge or the Grand Chapter of England, and while the Scottish branch of the order is allied with, and under the control of, the Grand Chapter of Scotland, yet the order is never given to any brother unless he is a Royal Arch Mason, and the R.A. Mariners have their own office-bearers, separate books, &c.

"2.—That this Grand Lodge has had a continuous working long before and since 1793, when H.R.H. the Duke of Clarence was elected to, and did accept, the Grand Command of the order. The documents proving which are now in the possession of the G.C. of the R.A. Mariners.

"3.—That by this Grand Lodge, so constituted, during the past year 24 warrants have been issued or applied for, some of which are in various parts of the globe, so that very shortly, it is hoped, a R.A. Mariner may find a lodge with brethren of his own jurisdiction or order in the principal places of the world.

"4.—The Grand Lodge of M.M.M. was not formed until 1856, and until the last year have never claimed to have the right to work anything else but the Mark Master degree; consequently, in this invasion of the Royal Ark Mariners' jurisdiction a modern organization of Mark Masters is claiming authority over an order working higher degrees than its own, and endeavouring to coerce a Grand Lodge nearly a century its senior at least. This authority the G.C. entirely repudiates.

"5.—The G. Commander is well aware that the excuse offered for this unmasonic act, on the part of the Grand Mark Lodge, is that the G.M.M. is ex officio G.C. of R.A.M.; this is contradicted by its own showing, for if the G.M.M. was G.C. of R.A.M., the G.C. of R.A.M. would ex officio be the legal G.M.M. The Grand Lodge of R.A.M. having been in existence for more than three-quarters of a century previous to the establishment of the G.M.M., and having exercised power over the Mark and other allied degrees.

"The G.C. of R.A.M. must certainly condemn, in the strongest terms, the recent circular of the Mark Grand Lodge, in which a premium (so to say) is offered to R.A.M.'s to desert their allegiance, and offering to give, at half-price, spurious and counterfeit Ark Mariner degrees.

"It is urged that the recognition of a supreme jurisdiction over the R.A.M. degree would be an anomaly. It is scarcely more so than the recognition of an authority over the Mark degree. While, however, fully admitting the right of Royal Ark Mariners elsewhere to place themselves under the jurisdiction of their respective Grand Lodges, where such Grand Lodges recognise the Royal Ark Mariner degrees, the G.C. of R.A.M. has simply to vindicate the time-immemorial supremacy of the Grand Lodge of R.A.M., and to maintain its right of authority over the order, and to protest against the unwarrantable aggressions which are threatened by the G. Mark Lodge.

"The G.C. of R.A.M. is most sincerely anxious that brotherly friendship and mutual good feeling should subsist between all Ark Mariners as individuals; but the G.C. of R.A.M. can in no way recognise the warrants or certificates issued by the G. Mark Lodge.

"I am, Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
M. A. LOEWENSTARK,
Grand Scribe.

"To the Grand Secretary, G. Mark Lodge, London."

Morton Edwards, by virtue of a warrant dated 24th of November, 1793, and under a deed executed in his favour by the late Grand Commander, Bro. John F. Dorrington, on the 13th May, 1870, such surrender as aforesaid to be endorsed on the warrant of 24th November, 1793, and a copy of such deed of surrender to be attached thereto.

Article 3.—The Mark degree to be thenceforth the supreme jurisdiction.

Article 4.—The title, "Grand Lodge of Royal Ark Mariners of England and Wales, the Colonies, and Dependencies of the British Empire," shall be changed to that of "Grand Ark Council," for the working of the Ark degree attached to the aforesaid jurisdiction.

Article 5.—By the enthronement of the Grand Mark Master as aforesaid in Article 1, the appointments of all present and past Grand Officers shall be confirmed, and they shall take rank and precedence as Past Officers of the Grand Ark Council.

ROYAL NATIONAL LIFE BOAT INSTITUTION.

On Thursday, 3rd August, a meeting of this Institution was held at its house, John-street, Adelphi, London, Thomas Chapman, Esq. F.R.S., V.P. in the chair. Richard Lewis, Esq. Secretary, having read the minutes of the previous meeting, rewards amounting to £51 were granted to the crews of Lifeboats of the Institution for services rendered during the past month. The Lifeboat stationed at Bude Haven, on the coast of Cornwall, proceeded out in reply to a signal from the yacht Hattie, of Cromer, during a strong wind from the N.N.W. Twice the Lifeboat was beaten back by the rough seas, and one of the crew, whose heart failed him, had to be put ashore. His place was, however, readily supplied, and after nearly an hour's labour the breakers were passed, and the yacht was reached, when her owner and crew of two men were taken out of the little vessel, which was towed in by the boat. The courageous owner of the little craft, Mr. Abel Tillet, spoke highly of the behaviour of the crew and of the noble Lifeboat, and gave the men £5 in addition to what they would receive from the Institution. The Fishguard Lifeboat, the Sir Edward Perrot, went off to the aid of a sailing boat which had drifted out to sea, having on board two lads, who were unable to manage it. The Lifeboat on reaching the boat took in tow that boat and another which had come to its assistance, and brought them safely ashore. The Chichester Harbour Lifeboat, Undaunted, was launched on signals of distress being shown by a dismasted vessel, which proved to be the brig Hope, of Portsmouth, during a very strong wind from S.W., and in a heavy sea. The Lifeboat remained alongside until the weather moderated, and a steam-tug was enabled to take the vessel and crew into Portsmouth. The Kingsdown, North Deal, and Broadstairs, Lifeboats also proceeded out to the Goodwin sands in readiness to aid vessels which had gone ashore there; but happily there was ultimately no necessity to call their services into requisition, the vessels being enabled to get away from their dangerous positions. Other rewards were likewise granted to the crews of shoreboats for saving life from wrecks on our coasts. Payments amounting to £1,228 were also made on various lifeboat establishments, while various works at a cost of £374, were ordered to be carried out at other Lifeboat stations. A contribution of £800 has been received from J. M. S., which was to be appropriated in providing a very fine new Lifeboat for Wexford, to be named the Ethel Eveleen, after his little girl. J. M. Hetherington Esq., of Manchester, had just given a donation of £115 10s in aid of the general funds of the Institution. The Ancient Order of Foresters had presented the sum of £100 as their contribution of the past year, in aid of the support of their two Lifeboats, named the Forester, and the Foresters' Pride, which had been provided by them, and which were stationed respectively at Newquay, Cardiganshire, and at West Hartlepool. A new Lifeboat had recently been sent by the Institution to Dungeness, Kent, and was to be publicly named and launched there for the first time on the occasion of the Regatta. Reports were read from the Inspector and the Assistant-Inspector of Lifeboats to the Institution, on their recent visits to different Lifeboat stations. The proceedings then terminated.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—For the cure of burns, scalds, wounds, and ulcers, this justly-celebrated ointment stands unrivalled. Its balsamic virtues immediately on application lull the pain and smarting, protect the exposed nerves from the air, endue the vessels with the vigour necessary to heal the sore, and confer on the blood a purity which permits it only to lay down healthy flesh in place of that which has become diseased. Holloway's pills, simultaneously taken, much assist the ointment's purifying and soothing power. Together, these medicines act like a charm; no invalid, after a fair trial, has found them fail to relieve his pain, or completely cure his disease. The combined beneficial action of the ointment and pills, in all disorders, is too irresistible to be withstood.—[Advt.]

Foreign Masonic Intelligence.

NEW ZEALAND.

[From the Weekly Herald, Auckland, N.Z.]

The ceremony of the presentation of a jewel by the brethren of the Masonic Lodge Beta to Past Master William Cumming took place at Hamilton, in the Episcopal Church, where the Venerable Archdeacon Pritt, after reading the service of the day, delivered a very eloquent and impressive sermon, dwelling particularly upon the essential characteristic of Masonry—charity: the charity that suffereth long and is kind, that vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up.

Past Master McPherson addressed the assembly informing the initiated that the worthy recipient of this honourable distinction had, during the period of five or six years in which the lodge had been in existence, occupied the Worshipful Master's chair four different terms, in addition to holding the various offices of Treasurer, Warden, and Secretary. That he had performed the duties of those offices with an earnestness and zeal which gained for himself the approbation of his brother Masons. That they had resolved upon making this presentation public in order that all men might know that Past Master Cumming was a good Mason, and, as an inevitable consequence, a good man.

Past Master McPherson concluded a fervid address by saying: "I earnestly pray that the Most High may be pleased to grant you long life, health, and strength to wear your jewel, and that you may arrive at the summit of Masonry by passing through the speculative degree of this mortal life to that glorious and celestial lodge where the grand password of the Almighty Architect will procure you admission, and with whom peace, order, and harmony will eternally reign."

Senior Past Master Beere, with a few congratulatory words, affixed the jewel to Bro. Cumming's breast, who, in returning thanks, attributed his success chiefly to the cordial support of the other officers and the wise councils of the Past Masters.

After a Masonic prayer and hymn, and the benediction by the Venerable Archdeacon, the proceedings terminated.

The musical part was kindly conducted by a lady, who presided at the harmonium, and largely contributed to the interest of the ceremony. The jewel, a very massive one, consists of the square and compasses, with the rising sun in the centre, and bears upon its reverse side the following inscription: "Presented to Bro. P.M. Cumming, as a mark of respect, by the brethren of Lodge Beta, 450 I.C., 1871." The assembly of members and others not connected with the Craft in the church was moderately large. Outside the church a torchlight procession was formed, and the brethren returned to the Royal Hotel, where dinner awaited them.

In connection with the above event, invitations were issued for a quadrille party, which proved to be one of the best yet witnessed in the Waikato district.

MASONIC FESTIVITIES.

PICNIC OF THE HUMBER LODGE, No. 57, HULL.

The eighth annual picnic in connection with the Humber Lodge has afforded unusual enjoyment to upwards of 170 of the members and friends. On the morning of the 2nd instant the party started from the lodge-room to enjoy a delightful drive, by Hesselewood, skirting the pretty village of Welton, and on to Brantingham Thorpe, the seat of Christopher Sykes, Esq., M.P., P.G.S.W. of the North and East Ridings of Yorkshire, who had in the most generous manner placed the whole of the extensive park and grounds in the hands of the W.M. of the Humber Lodge, with a carte blanche to inspect the conservatories and house, which had been recently honoured by a visit from the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of St. Albans, and party. The grounds are charmingly situated on a slope commanding an extensive range of views over a well-cultivated country, stretching to the banks of old Father Humber, and across whose broad bosom are seen the wolds of Lincolnshire, forming a tout ensemble of rural beauty rarely surpassed. On arrival, dancing to an excellent quadrille band commenced, and croquet and other games were maintained with spirit during the happy hours.

The whole party dined together, under canvas, presided over by the W.M., Bro. W. Tesseyman, supported by Bros. Dr. Bell, D.P.G.M.; Dr. Hay, Anthony Bannister, and J. Wilson, P.P.G.S.D.'s; Michael W. Clark, P.P.G.J.D.; William Needler, I.P.M., and Thirling, W.M. 250; G. C. Roberts, P.P.G.R., the Town Clerk, and other distinguished brethren, with their ladies.

BEAUTIFUL SUMMER.

A SACRED SONG.

Beautiful Summer! thy glorious days
And lingering sunsets bright,
With the varied charms that the season displays,
Fill our senses with purest delight.
Father, we thank thee for each sweet scene,
For the balmy zepthers and the sky serene.

Beautiful Summer! the lovely flowers
That 'broider the emerald sod,
Or sparkle like gems in our garden bowers,
All lead our affections to God.
Father, we thank Thee for gifts so fair,
For the flowers that point to Thy watchful care.

Beautiful Summer! thy bright hours pass,
The pleasures thou bringest us fade,
The enjoyments we hope to partake of, alas!
Are soon lost in the Autumn's deep shade.
And our lives, like thy months, are approaching their close,

As day is succeeded by evening's repose.

Beautiful Summer! thy bright hours teach
An eloquent lesson of love,
Inviting the Christian in prayer to beseech
God's blessing from mansions above.
Father, we bless thee for Summer days, Hear our hymns of thanksgiving, our songs of praise.

THINK OF THE DEAD WITH AFFECTION

Think of the dead with affection,
Look back with a tear on the past,
On those hours of enjoyment and fondness,
Which, alas! were not destined to last.
Think tenderly, too, on the kindness
Thou, perhaps, hast received from that one
Who has quitted earth's trials for ever,
Whose labour in this world is done.

Think of the dead with affection,
Recall not each blemish and fault,
But rather their good deeds endeavour
In memory's shrine to exalt.
Think, too, of the love and devotion
That perhaps they once cherish'd for thee,
And remember from errors and failings
No mortal existing is free.

Think of the dead with affection,
And pray that their souls are at rest;
That their spirits have reach'd that bright haven
Which forms the last home of the blest.
Oh! think of the dead with affection,
Look back on their memory with love,
And pray for the bliss of reunion
In our Father's bright mansions above.

AGE OF MASONRY.—From a recent statement in a Moscow paper, it seems that St. John's Lodge, No. 3, of that city, has recently celebrated the 80th anniversary of its existence, it having been erected by charter from King Malcolm, in 1060. We should like to see the muster roll of that lodge, beginning more than eight centuries ago, and running along with the ages to the present time. What kings and kingdoms have risen and fallen since the gavel was first sounded in its East. How the world has changed, and what progress has been made in science and art. Eight hundred years in the lifetime of a lodge!—The Keystone.

Diseases of the Lungs and Air-vessels.

CROSBY'S

BALSAMIC COUGH ELIXIR.

Opium, Narcotics, and Squills are too often invoked to give relief in Coughs, Colds, and all Pulmonary diseases. Instead of such fallacious remedies, which yield momentary relief at the expense of enfeebling the digestive organs and thus increasing that debility which lies at the root of the malady, modern science points to CROSBY'S BALSAMIC COUGH ELIXIR as the true remedy.

SELECT TESTIMONIAL.

Dr. Rooke, Scarborough, author of the "Anti-Lancet," says: "I have repeatedly observed how very rapidly and invariably it subdued cough, pain, and irritation of the chest in cases of Pulmonary Consumption, and I can, with the greatest confidence, recommend it as a most valuable adjunct to an otherwise strengthening treatment for this disease."

This medicine, which is free from opium and squills, not only allays the local irritation, but improves digestion and strengthens the constitution. Hence it is used with the most signal success in Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, Coughs, Influenza, Night Sweats of Consumption, Quinsy, and all affections of the throat and chest. Sold in bottles at 1s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. each, by all respectable Chemists, and wholesale by JAS. M. CROSBY, Chemist, Scarborough.

* * Invalids should read Crosby's Prize Treatise on "Diseases of the Lungs and Air-Vessels," a copy of which can be had GRATIS of all Chemists.

CORNS and BUNIONS.—Hot weather makes these more than usually troublesome, but

ROYAL ARK MASONRY.

A special meeting of the Grand Lodge of the Antient and Honourable Fraternity of Royal Ark Mariners of England and Wales, the colonies and dependencies of the British Empire, was held on Wednesday, the 9th August, 1871, at the office of the Order, 7, Gower-street, Bedford-square.

Present: Bros. Morton Edwards, M.W.S.G.C.; Major Finney, R.W.D.G.C.; F. W. Koch, Inspector-General; A. D. Loewenstark, Inspector-General Surrey; G. F. Henley, G.T.B.; C. Lacey, G.G.; G. Neall, G.S.; and Bro. Morton Edwards, M.W.S.G.C., in the chair.

Grand Lodge was opened, and the minutes of the meeting of the 21st June read for information. Apologies were received from Bros. T. O. Oxland (through illness), V.W.G.S.W.; Joshua Nunn, V.W.S.J.W.; H. M. Green, V.W.D. Inspector-General, Hampshire; and others, for absence.

The report of the committee of three (to meet the duly-authorized representatives of the Grand Lodge of the Mark Degree) appointed at the G.L. on the 21st June was then read. It stated that the M.W.S.G.C., Bro. Morton Edwards, the R.W.D.G.C., Bro. Major Finney, and the V.W.S.G.W., Bro. T. O. Oxland, having been appointed a committee of the G.L. of Royal Ark Mariners, they met at the office of the Order, and decided that Bro. Oxland be secretary, and commenced their labours by an investigation of the title and powers of the Royal Ark Mariners. Being fully satisfied with the result of such investigation, they next turned their attention to the state of the negotiations, and found that a letter had been received (and omitted to be read at the G.L.) from the G.S. of the Mark Degree, Bro. Binckes, dated June 8th, 1871, asking, on the part of the G. Mark Lodge, for a meeting of representatives of the two bodies, to endeavour to reconcile the existing differences. Therefore they sent a letter to the M.W.G.M.M., Bro. Portal, notifying the fact of their appointment, and setting out five articles embodying the terms which (as they informed him) had been definitely fixed as the only basis upon which the G.L. of Royal Ark Mariners could again consent to treat. In consequence of this letter a meeting was held at which three duly-authorized representatives of the Mark Grand Lodge—viz., the V.W. Bro. F. Binckes (G.S.), V.W. Bro. J. Stevens (P.G.O.), and W. Bro. R. W. Little (P.M.)—were present; but in consequence of the absence of Bro. Oxland, nothing was done except to arrange for a meeting of the 6th July. On this occasion all being present, the authority of each set of representatives having been read, a treaty [as given in THE FREEMASON last week] was entered into and signed. In conclusion, the Committee reported that they had spared neither time nor trouble to bring matters to an amicable settlement, and that the ulterior consequences must rest with the Mark Degree, as they had refused to ratify this treaty.

The M.W.S.G.C. said that this Grand Lodge had heard the report of the Committee, and it was for them to decide upon the line of conduct now to be pursued. There could not be a doubt that everything had been done that could be done to meet the Mark Grand Lodge, and even concessions were made that should not to have been made; but they had given way in order that, when they had to report, they might say that the matter was finally settled. There was no doubt that the G.L. of R. Ark Mariners had been played with by the Mark Grand Lodge, who evidently were not sincere in the desire they expressed for union.

The following resolutions were then carried unanimously:—

"1. That this Grand Lodge, as representing the Fraternity of Royal Ark Mariners, having been a legitimate and properly-constituted body for nearly a century, stand entirely as an independent order for the future.

"2. That a circular, giving the necessary information, be sent to all Mark lodges, and other bodies interested, and that this G.L. be at once placed with all of those bodies who may be interested in its proceedings.

"3. That having the power by royal warrant of 1793 to confer the original and genuine degrees of Mark Man, Mark Master, Excellent and Super-Excellent Master, these be at once added to the working of every lodge of Royal Ark Mariners.

"4. That so much of the statutes as relate to the above be altered, and that the dues to G.L. for future members admitted be seven shillings and sixpence, which shall include registration and certificate for all of these degrees.

"5. That the thanks of this G.L. be sent to those lodges who have sent a vote of confidence, endorsing the proceedings and undertaking to sustain the action of this Grand Lodge, against the circular lately issued by the Mark Grand Lodge intimating that they would work the Royal Ark Mariner degrees."

Some business of a formal character being then entered into, the Grand Lodge was closed, and declared adjourned until next summoned.

FREEMASONRY & ISRAELITISM.

BY BRO. WILLIAM CARPENTER, P.M. & P.Z. 177.

XIII.

The more closely we look into the Old Testament scriptures, the more clearly shall we perceive the distinction that is made between Judah and Israel; that is, between the tribes which, in the course of time, constituted the kingdom of Judah and the tribes which constituted the kingdom of Israel. It was not always that the prophets understood the prophecies which they uttered or wrote under the Divine afflatus. They were the oracles through which God spake; and though they sometimes inquired and searched diligently what or what manner of time the spirit which was in them did signify, they did not always attain the knowledge which they sought. It was not necessary that they should. Indeed, there were reasons why they should not; one of those reasons being, that, to have made known the precise meaning of some of the prophecies before the time of their fulfilment, would have been to cause the interference or interposition of man, sometimes in order to prevent their fulfilment, and sometimes to bring the fulfilment about by other means and in other ways than those comporting with the Divine purpose; and thus to have thwarted, so to speak, the orderly working of God's providence, and in this way to have entailed evil upon the human race. With the Divine Being there is nothing future, as there is nothing past. He sees the end from the beginning. With him there is one eternal NOW. It may be well to bear these suggestions in mind, in examining the prophetic Scriptures.

In the blessing which the dying Jacob pronounced upon his children and two of his grandchildren—the heads of the tribes which afterwards bore their names—there is a reference to something of the past in relation to most of them, and there is a foretelling of something of the future. It may be that Jacob was unable to attach any precise meaning to some of the words he uttered in the course of this Divine blessing; but He who inspired him foresaw all, and had ordered and made all sure. It will be remembered, that previous to the prophetic blessing on the collected family assembled around the dying patriarch, he had pronounced a particular and special blessing on the two sons of Joseph, Ephraim and Manasseh, giving to Ephraim, the younger, the blessing which was the birthright of Manasseh, the elder, at the same time adopting them both, so that they were to be as much accounted his sons as Reuben and Simeon, his own two eldest, were. Hence, they became patriarchs—heads of tribes; and they were, accordingly, included in the prophetic blessing on the tribal stems, and their children shared equally with those of the other patriarchs in the division of the land by Joshua. Now, in this prophetic blessing the distinction I have referred to will be clearly perceived by any one who reads it attentively. The birthright belonged to Reuben, but it was taken from him and distributed among three of his brethren; the priesthood was given to Levi, the kingship to Judah, and the double portion—great increase—to Joseph; that is, to Ephraim, for he was now the representative, and as the firstborn, of Joseph. And this double portion, or extraordinary increase, is clearly indicated in the amplitude of the possessions which Ephraim was to inherit: "Joseph is a fruitful bough, whose branches run over the wall"—that is, extend themselves far beyond the ordinary limits—which was partly fulfilled even before the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh took possession of their inheritance, for Joshua (xvii. 17) tells the sons of Joseph that they were a great people, and had great power. But it was more largely fulfilled afterwards, as it is being fulfilled at the present time, when their descendants are sending forth branches into every part of the world, as it was said by the patriarch they should do so: "Through the hands of the Mighty God of Jacob, through the name of the Shepherd, the rock of Israel, even by the God of thy father, who shall help thee; and by the Almighty, who shall bless thee, may the blessings of the heavens from above, the blessings lying in the deep beneath, the blessings of the breasts and of the womb, the blessings of thy father and thy mother, with the blessings of the eternal mountains unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills, rest on the head of Joseph, and the crown of the chief among his brethren" (Gen. xlix. 22-26). Such is the amplitude of this blessing that it seems to have no bounds. It is to extend as far as "the everlasting hills." Such, and nothing narrower, is to be the extent of his habitation; and it was to comprise, in addition, the blessings lying in "the deep beneath." So that land and sea were to be possessed by the first-born of Joseph, "whose bow abode in strength, and the arms of whose hands were made strong by the hands of the Mighty God of Jacob." Such was the amplitude of the blessing, that the patriarch seemed as if unable to give an idea of it in few and plain words. He heaps metaphor on metaphor, raising a column of strength and beauty which astonishes and delights the reader. The multiplicity of the descendants of these tribes had been previously alluded to, in the blessing which Jacob pronounced upon them when Joseph placed his two sons before his father: "And he blessed Joseph and said, God, before whom my fathers, Abraham and Isaac, did walk; the God which fed me all my life long unto this day; the angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads and let my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers, Abraham and Isaac: and let them grow into a multitude, in the midst of the earth" (Gen. xlviii. 15, 16). The same thing is repeated in verse 19: "He (Manasseh), also, shall be a people, and he, also, shall be great; but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he; and his seed shall become a multitude of nations." Amongst the tribes, as we have seen, these children of Joseph were distinguished for their numbers and their strength; and it was the struggle for pre-eminence, on the part of Ephraim, which led to the schism in the tribes, and the establishment of the two kingdoms, Ephraim being so powerful as to give his name to the seceding ten tribes; "Ephraim" being often used as synonymous with "Israel." But the extraordinary multiplication of the descendants of Jacob, as foretold in his paternal blessing, was in strict harmony with the many promises made to his ancestors, Abraham and Isaac. When Abraham—looking at his accumulated wealth, and deploring, as Orientals are wont to deplore, the lack of children, complained that he had not a son of his own, so that the steward of his household would become his heir—the Lord replied (Gen. xv. 4, 5)—"This shall not be thine heir; but he that shall come forth out of thy bowels shall be thine heir. And He brought him forth abroad, and said, Look now toward heaven, and tell the stars, if thou be able to number them: and He said unto him, So shall thy seed be." And in two subsequent promises he was assured that he should be exceedingly fruitful, the father of many nations, and that kings should come out of him; and it was again repeated, with additions, "I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore: and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies: and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed" (Gen. xvii. 3--6; xxii. 16--18). The promise was repeated to Isaac, with a reference to the original promise made to his father: "And I will perform to thee what I swore to Abraham, thy father; and I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven; and will give to thy seed all these countries; and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed" (ch. xxvi. 2--4). The promise was confirmed to Jacob, when in his vision, at Bethel, he saw the intercourse carried on between heaven and earth, "the angels of God ascending and descending;" and the Lord said to him, "And thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth; and thou shalt spread abroad to the west and to the east, and to the north and to the south" (chap. xxviii. 12--15).

These promises were never fulfilled while the children of Jacob occupied the land of Canaan, for even in the time of David, when the kingdom had reached its utmost limits, it had not been spread to the west nor to the south, although all the nations on the east of the Jordan, as far north as the Euphrates, had been rendered tributary to him. He had obtained possession of "this land," which had been promised to Abraham and his seed, but the more comprehensive promises, which made his seed as the stars of heaven, as the sand on the sea-shore, and as the dust of the earth—the progenitors of nations and the fathers of kings—were never fulfilled while the kingdom of Abraham's seed—the twelve tribes—remained a people. And, I need hardly add, that since the dispersion of the tribes, they have never been fulfilled in the history of the Jews; that is, the descendants of Judah and Benjamin; and it is never likely to be. They do not materially increase in number, and they make no proselytes, as they did before their final dispersion. True, they form a vast network of consanguinity of race, and of unity of faith, which embraces the two hemispheres. They are to be found from Siberia in the north, to Van Diemen's Land in the south, and from Kamschatka to Cape Horn. But this cosmopolitanism which they alone possess, and which is of so remarkable a character as to confound human reason, is not combined with a corresponding existence of numbers. We can get only at an approximate estimate of these, for there are not many countries that have a decennial census, as we have. But though geographers and statisticians are not agreed as to the number of Jews existing in the world, they do not differ so materially that we should hesitate to say that the children of Judah are comparatively few. Hassell gives them 3,930,000; Bergham, 4,000,000; Balbi, the same; Malte Brun, 5,000,000; Johnston, 6,000,000; Harschman, 5,500,000; and J. Alexander, the latest writer, 6,798,000. Taking the numbers at the highest estimate, and making every allowance for Oriental hyperbole in the record of the early promises, in the comparisons with "the stars" of heaven, the "sand on the sea-shore," and "the dust of the earth," we cannot perceive any congruity between the posterity promised to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the comparative handful of the Jews known now to exist throughout the world, eighteen centuries after their extinction as a nation. Interpret the promises as we may, the least thing implied is, that the posterity of the patriarchs should be incomparably larger than any other people, and that they were to be, in fact, the fathers of nations, and kingdoms, and peoples, north, east, south, and west—in every part of the globe—while the blessings or possessions of the great deep, or the islands dotting the surface of the mighty ocean, were also to be theirs.

Where or in what people shall we look for the fulfilment of these prophetic promises? Nowhere, and in no people but the Anglo-Saxons and their kindred races—the Getæ—the ten tribes—the Israel of the Mighty one of Jacob—who were to become the most multitudinous of all people, and in whom all the nations or peoples of the earth were to be blessed. Take a map of the two hemispheres, and make a mark wherever these people are not to be found. I do not say make a mark where they are to be found, for that would be to make the map an almost entire blot. We have seen the course which their ancestors, the Getæ, or Goths, took after they had been invaded in their possessions on the Euxine, by Darius, Alexander, and Attila. From that region, lying between the Black Sea and the Adriatic, they poured into Italy and Spain, occupying a considerable portion of those countries; and onward, and onward, they pushed until the greater part of Europe was occupied by them. Gaul was laid hold of by the Franks, another branch of the same great family, while Britain came into the possession of the Anglo-Saxon branch, after they had erected free commonwealths in Germany, Cimbria, and Scandinavia. In fact, Europe, as I have said, fell almost entirely into their possession; and, in later times, they have spread themselves over a great part of the other quarters of the globe—Asia, Africa, America, and Australia, with the islands pertaining to them, in the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Indian Oceans. To me it seems that no one can contemplate this great fact without feelings of wonder and amazement. And, then, look at the position which they now occupy, as the little nest whence they have sent out their mighty broods; and whence they seem, more or less, to control or to influence all other peoples, either potentially or diplomatically. Glancing again at their possessions, it may be truly said that there is scarcely any place of importance, in any part of the globe, which they do not inhabit, excepting their own land of Canaan, the time for which has not yet arrived. And I must not omit to observe, that, wherever this race goes, it carries with it the blessings of religion and civilisation, if not without many drawbacks, yet so favourably contrasting with what it supplants, that the words of the psalmist suggest themselves to the mind: "He gave them the islands for the heathen . . . that they might observe His statutes and keep His laws." "The isles shall wait upon me, and in mine arm shall they trust." "Wherefore, glorify the Lord in the valleys, even the name of the Lord God of Israel, in the isles of the sea" (Ps. cv. 43, 45; Isa. li. 5; xxiv. 16).

FREEMASONRY AND JUDAISM.

The weekly articles furnished by our Bro. Carpenter on "Israelitism and Freemasonry" are highly interesting and instructive. They show, on his part, great painstaking in his researches, with a desire to be concise and accurate. It is therefore with great confidence that the non-student may spend his reading hours in contemplating the sublime and providential dealings of the Almighty with the favoured progeny of Heber (one that passes over), whom St. Luke has named in his genealogy as being the direct lineal descendant of Adam, who was the son of God.

But the biblical student should ever bear in mind that Jewish history is different from that of any other nation, it being a representative history. Indeed, the Jews have no history which they can claim as being peculiarly their own, as each episode in Jewish history has as much to do with some other nation as with its own, and the combination is a lesson for all time. All that the Jew can claim is that he is the trustee appointed by Jehovah to bear record to His Oneness and infinity, and the immortal destiny of the human race. According to the foreknowledge of God, man, whom He had created upright and predestinated to immortal life and endless bliss, had found out many inventions and fallen into the lowest depths of vice and misery. Man, without some knowledge of God, however imperfect, would not be able to live—the earth would be without form and void, and darkness would be upon the face of the deep. The light which had been called into existence by Almighty fiat must be preserved, or the end of all creation must come. All the spiritual trees of man's spiritual garden (the soul) were placed under his subjection; he was to cultivate and enjoy the fruits of temperance, chastity, and charity. One tree alone was not to be touched, though within his reach: the tree of knowledge—in other words, of self-derived intelligence. It is said: "Now the serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field which Jehovah God had made." The serpent corresponds to that principle in man which is called low cunning, or worldly wisdom. We know the character of an individual when he is called a serpent, or a snake in the grass. This principle then intruded itself (we are compelled to personify principles, although it is well known they are impersonal) to the woman. By the woman in sacred writings is meant the Church, which is always represented as the spouse of Jehovah—"Thy maker is thy husband, Jehovah of Hosts is His name;" and when the nation is upbraided for leaving its true and living God in order to serve the God of other nations, it is always as a husband upbraiding his wife for committing adultery and whoredoms with strangers—"Where is the bill of your mother's divorce, whom I have put away? for your transgression is your mother put away." And when that New Jerusalem, or New Church, which St. John describes as descending from God out of heaven, she is said to be "as a bride adorned for her husband." Thus the Adamic Church fell through its own violence and lusts, and great was the fall of it. The Golden Age was no more. Jehovah declared that He would put enmity between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent—"He shall tread upon thy heel, and thy foot shalt bruise his heel." By the seed of the woman is meant the true Church, and the Lord as its head, and by the seed of the serpent is meant envy, malice, pride, and all uncharitableness, which should bruise the heel of the lowest principle of the Church. This explanation may appear far-fetched and fanciful, but it is the language of Holy Writ. Human language would fail to express Divine things. God in his revelations to men uses His own language of nature, which is His own Book, and the objects in nature give the dictionary by which to read it; and when we are studying the Word of God, we must abide by the words of the Apostle addressed to the Romans: "For the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made." Under this guidance all things will be made plain, and "That God is light, and in Him there is no darkness at all." Mankind then had sunk into the awful condition of a fallen race, and the merciful providence of Almighty God was to be employed in rescuing him from the sad effects of that fall without infringing upon man's free will and moral responsibility; but how was this to be done? Man was too degraded to elevate his thoughts above this earth, and so Jehovah himself became incarnate by taking upon Himself the human frame in the womb of a virgin, having no human father, and appeared among men as a man of sorrows, growing up as a "tender plant and as a root out of a dry ground," and when degraded nature saw Him, there was no beauty that He should be desired.

The Jews were made the custodians of the promises and the harbingers of this glorious advent. Their prophets announced that the desire of all nations should appear in Bethlehem, and the angels sang to Jewish shepherds the heavenly anthem, "Unto you is born in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." It was the dawn of the morning when this song was sung, and a long and evil day has passed since then. "Time seems to roll over us thick as every cloud;" but the day-spring from on high seems not to be far distant when the chorus shall be completed, and there shall be "peace on earth and goodwill toward men."

It is in the nature of man to concern himself more about what he ought to THINK than what he ought to DO; but it is nowhere said that man shall be judged by his thoughts, but by his deeds. He should think good things, but he should bring forth the fruits of the spirit, for by their fruits ye shall know them.

But, to return to the Jew. Idolatry, with all its evil consequences, had become rampant and threatened the destruction of the human race, to avert which the Almighty made the seed of Abraham His instrument in extirpating it, and thereby redeeming the human race from its thralldom. The driving out of the Canaanite, the hotbed of idolatry was his first commission to the Jews. Much controversy has arisen about the God of Mercy doing this; but it was done in mercy to stop the propagation of that which would have involved the world in their own ruin. The Cities of the Plain were destroyed for the same causes, but the Jews were not made the instruments of their destruction, because their full time was not yet come; but Abraham witnessed it, and the episode of Abraham's intercession for them has no parallel in profane history. "Shall not the Judge of all the Earth do right? and be it far from Thee to do after this manner to slay the righteous with the wicked;" but the Almighty promised, "That I will not destroy for ten's sake"—if ten righteous men could be found there—and Abraham returned to his own place." Before his death, Moses charged the children of Israel in a manner that can only be found in Scripture narrative, that obedience to Jehovah would ensure their temporal and eternal happiness, but that following after strange gods would be visited with exemplary punishments. Their after career proved the necessity and accuracy of this premonition. Has the Jew been superseded and replaced by the modern Christian? What argument have we in support of this theory? the writings of the New Testament give none. St. Paul, who boasted of being the Apostle of the Gentiles, when addressing the Gentile Church at Rome, writes: "I say, then, hath God cast away His people? God forbid; for I also am [not was] an Israelite of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin." One of the great mistakes of the day appears to me to be that the Jew will be absorbed in the Christian; but the very reverse appears to be the spirit of prophecy and our Lord's teachings. The bringing in of the Gentiles seems to be the Divine purpose, and old Simeon declared that "He was a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people, Israel." Our Lord's death left His little band in an apparent desperate state. The shepherd was smitten, and the sheep were scattered abroad. But after His resurrection, He appeared to His disciples, and again proclaimed that all the transactions which they had witnessed were what had been foretold by Moses and all the prophets. After His ascension, the Apostles met by arrangement to comment upon their important mission, and at their first meeting struck the keynote of all their teaching—the resurrection of the dead, "He is risen;" and this, with the doctrine of repentance and a good life, is the whole of the Christian's creed. Nothing more is required of him; but to do that should be his life's study in order to fit him for the life to come. During the first century of the Christian era this was the substance, if not the whole, of Christian teaching. The theology of the day, or as now made up, was hardly known until the fourth century after Christ. There were heresies, but they hardly disturbed the quiet of the Church; and if they understood the nature of their own doctrines, they have not succeeded in handing their true meaning down to us. Indeed, the history of the new Church down to the third or fourth century is as much a myth as the names of the founders of Rome or the games of Olympia. It is, however, pretty certain that the doctrine of the trinity, or tri-personality, of the Godhead was unknown—indeed, unthought of—till the fourth century. It took its rise in Egypt, and at first little notice was taken of the new doctrine; indeed, the Emperor Constantine advised the bishops not to trouble their heads about such silly matters. However, the motto of Sir Henry Wottore, "Disputandi pruritus ecclesie scabes" (the itch for disputation is the dirty scab of the Church), was too rife then, as now. The ecclesiastical drum was beat, Arianism against Sabethanism, Donatists against Caecillanists, fought one against the other to decide the fact whether God was in one person or three. It was agreed to decide the quarrel by a council to be summoned by Constantine. It seems pretty certain that a council was held, but whether it was at Nice or elsewhere, who attended or presided, is a mystery. No authentic acts of its famous sentence have been committed to writing, and this is all the authority we have for the famous Nicene Creed, which before being "read or sung" in our cathedrals, is introduced by a flourish on the trumpet and a swell of the great organ stops, which would awaken the soundest sleeper.

Next to the doctrine of the Trinity, or equal with it, is the doctrine of the Atonement. This word in its original sense means reconciliation, agreement, viz., at one ment. The word though much used in the Old Testament is only once mentioned in the New, and then in the opposite sense to the one in which it is properly preached. It is preached "That God received the atonement by the death of his Son;" but in his Epistle to the Romans, Paul says "That we joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ by whom we have now received the atonement." Here modern theology says one thing and the scriptures declare the opposite. So in the word "sacrifice." We use it to express a giving up of something that is most dear to us and that causes distress in parting with it. We make an alarming sacrifice! But the word is formed from two Latin words—to make holy for an offering; and thus the Scripture says that we are "to present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, which is our reasonable service." I should like to avoid doctrinal disquisition, but upon this point it cannot be avoided. In the translation of the New Testament from the Greek, to one Greek word two English equivalents are given, and this is the case in the word Parakleton. Our Lord uses this word in John xiv. verses 16 and 26, where it is translated "comforter;" but the same word, used in the 1st Epistle of John, chap. ii. v. 1, is translated "Advocate," and these two separate offices, in modern theology, are second and third persons in the Godhead. Thus common-sense people are really at a loss to know what doctrine is intended, or whether the translators themselves knew. The consequence of having three Omnipotents, is that each must have something to do which the other two Omnipotents could not do. The whole scheme of salvation is to some minds (my own as well) very foggy and unintelligible. The Jews were guilty of a most abominable crime in the judicial murder of our Lord, whom His judge had declared to be innocent of the charge preferred against Him. Many of the Jews of the present day acknowledge this to have been a mistake, and offer but a very slight justification. The Christians, however, glory in the act, and say with exaltation, that "if the Sanhedrim had not been so hellishly cruel, the God of heaven could not or would not have been kind." I will not discuss the logic of this doctrine, but challenge its truth. It is said that the High Priest in placing the sins of the people on the head of the animal and then killing him and offering him in sacrifice on the Jewish altar, was a type of our Lord's death and sufferings in our stead on the cross, and by his sufferings we are freed from the curse of death and by imputation made righteous. But this scheme of salvation, as it is vauntingly called, is attended with a host of insuperable difficulties, and the first is, that in no case where the sins of the people were confessed and placed on the head of the animal was that animal slain, but driven out of sight. That our Lord's death, by the cruelties of the Jews, was necessary for our salvation is disproved by the teachings of St. Paul, who alludes to it at all times with just indignation and horror, and as a crime that has filled up the iniquities of the Jewish nation, and only uses it as an a priori argument to prove the a posteriori demonstration, viz., "The Resurrection of the Dead." In all his preaching and reasonings, temperance, righteousness, and judgment to come were his only themes, and when the wicked conscience of Felix trembled, Paul had no anodyne doctrine to offer him in the shape of imputed righteousness, or doubtless Felix would have given an instant hearing and sucked the poison in. The first duty devolving upon the disciples at their Lord's death was to complete their number, which was to be twelve. A number is used in the sacred volume to denote some specific state to which that number corresponds; one is never used but to express the One Divine Being, and twelve denotes all things of faith and charity in one complex. Thus was this sine qua non that the one elected should have seen our Lord subsequent to His resurrection to bear witness to that fact. St. Paul preached the doctrine of the blood of Christ, but in the same sense as the Lord taught it while on earth—that is, in its spiritual, and not in its natural or literal sense. "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." Man is a compound of soul and body, and each has to be nourished with food, each according to its kind. As flesh and blood are the means of support to the natural man, so it corresponds with the Lord's divine goodness and truth, which are the doctrines with which He feeds the souls of all His disciples. To what a sad state has the spurious doctrines of Christendom reduced the Church of God. They have deprived it of vitality. Where is the life of the Church? Is it to be found in the bickerings and dissensions of the day? Do we find it in the appeals to the Privy Council about forms, vestments, genuflexions, and the lighting up of candles? Light, more light! is the eager cry of man in his improved civilised state, and wax tapers are lighted up on unmeaning altars to satisfy the cry. When will nation cease to war against nation, and man begin to love his brother? is the piercing cry of humanity. When will kings and emperors cease to take counsel how best to despoil each other of their fair domains, which each has lusted after, and on the attainment of which God has been thanked for assisting perjury, robbery, and murder? Oh, when? Not while the priests of Christendom—whether in triple crown, mitre, or gown and cassock—consecrate and pray the "Author of Peace and Lover of Concord" to grant a blessing upon the banners which are to incite God's creatures to deeds of blood, hatred, and revenge. "The knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea." According to Bro. Carpenter's researches the Jew is covering the earth. Will he take his glorious book of prophecies with him? Will he, and what then? "The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like an ox, and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all My holy mountains, saith Jehovah, for a new heaven and a new earth shall be created, and the former shall not be remembered nor brought into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice in that which I create, for behold I create Jerusalem a rejoicing and her people a joy." But all this must be in that day "that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them towards the former sea and half of them towards the hinder sea, in summer and in winter shall it be. And Jehovah shall be king over all the earth. In that day shall there be one Jehovah and His name ONE."

"ANTAGONISM" IN THE HIGH DEGREES.

I have read with much satisfaction the leading article in THE FREEMASON of August the 5th, and as it seems to me to put matters fairly and clearly before the Masonic public, I think a little more in the same direction might not be out of place.

That antagonism exists between different rites in connection with the high degrees is a fact which cannot be ignored, but which, for the sake of Masonry—using that term in its very widest sense—is to be deplored, and should, if possible, be smoothed away and obliterated.

I, of course, constantly hold that true Masonry is bound by, at the utmost, the R.A. Degree. The three degrees of Craft Masonry are complete in themselves, and universal in their comprehensiveness; and the Royal Arch Degree is so far compatible with Craft Masonry, that it, like the latter, requires no special profession of religious faith, and is open to all who simply acknowledge a Supreme Being, without reference to the mode of their worship or the peculiarities of their creed. But once we get beyond the R.A. Degree, and enter what is sometimes called "Christian Masonry," the sectarian element comes into play, and one of the most valuable and distinctive attributes of true Masonry is laid aside. Several of the "higher" chivalric degrees are very beautiful and unobjectionable when properly worked, but they are, after all, merely appendages to the "Ancient and Honourable Order;" and while we differ as to the legitimacy and proper authority of the high degrees, as worked in various rites, we should be careful to avoid bringing our quarrels where they would disturb the peace, love, and harmony that should always exist in true Masonry, and we should distinctly and emphatically repress any attempt to enlist Craft Masonry in the fight, or make Grand Lodge directly or indirectly the battle-ground for the contending factions.

I the more distinctly emphasise this position because of the fact that our Irish Grand Lodge is in some danger of overlooking it. Readers of THE FREEMASON are aware that several of our Irish brethren have gone over to England, and taken many of the "high degrees" under the Ancient Templar Warrants, which confer the privilege of giving such degrees. This action on their part has evoked much unmasonic conduct on the part of certain brethren, who seem to think that the exclusive possession of those high degrees is vested in them and those whom they "delight to honour" by "calling them up" to share their dignity. It is quite time such a fallacy should be exploded, and exploded it very nearly is. Already the "movement" has borne fruit here, for a number of deserving Masons have been made "Irish Princes." Since action was taken in the matter by the brethren who were not so fortunate as to come up to the standard required by those who "pull the strings" in Rose Croix Masonry here, and probably nearly all of those recent additions to its ranks may thank the "Manchester Princes" for the honour that has been conferred upon them. But we hear sundry ominous mutterings of punishments in store for those who have dared to trespass on the preserves of the "high and select" potentates of Irish Rose Croix Masonry, and who have had the great presumption to accept the higher degrees from an authority more respectable and more legitimate than the mongrel rite under which they are worked in Ireland. Such brethren are to be suspended—they are to be expelled. Goodness knows what fate awaits them, while those who give credence to and repeat those dreadful rumours seem quite oblivious of the fact that Grand Lodge has no power whatever either to prevent, or to condemn, the course that they have taken, and that "divers and sundry" other "good men and true" may be preparing to follow.

It is quite true that another edition of the "Ahiman Rezon" is in course of preparation here, and that some of the new laws proposed might be twisted so as to bear on future transgressors in the same direction; but until those propositions are adopted and become the law, they, of course are of no effect, and I think it very likely that, whatever may be done in the direction of giving greater individual liberty to Irish Masons, an attempt to crush down or interfere with their right of private judgment and action, will be at once negatived, and that such attempted "mending" of the Constitution will be at once seen through and discarded.

There is one matter to which the attention of the "Law Committee" might be advantageously directed—namely, to the desirability of expunging from the "annals" appended to the "Constitutions" those references to the pretended statutes of Frederick the Great, which the old edition contains. We have in those "annals," gravely set out as historical facts, Frederick's Convention of the Princes of the Royal Secret, to give a patent to Bro. Stephen Morin, his proclamation as Sovereign Grand Inspector-General 33°, and his ratification of "the Constitution of SS. GG. II. GG., 33° Ultimique Gradus." I think too highly of the character and Constitution of the Grand Lodge of Ireland to believe that it will knowingly lend its high name and its official sanction to the propagation of admitted falsehood, invented to back up a gross Masonic fraud.

To come back, however, to our text, the "Antagonism in the High Degrees," we have to consider is it possible to do away with that antagonism, and to reconcile, without compromise of principle, the contending parties? Clearly, as long as the "heads" of the A. and A. Rite maintain the position they at present assert, such a reconciliation is impossible. Let them honestly imitate the Charleston Council, and throw overboard the pretended statutes of Frederick, and the supposed authority conferred thereby. Let them abandon the claim to exclusive control over the Rose Croix, Kadosh, and other degrees, and recognise brethren who have obtained them under other rites. Let them stand forth as the governing body of a rite conferring 33 degrees, and putting forward their claims to preference above other rites, on whatever real grounds of merit they are able to adduce, and thus meeting on a "fair field" and "free from favour," I see no reason why brethren holding particular degrees conferred under different rites should not meet in those degrees, wherever they are worked under a responsible authority. Such a course would go a long way to bring about true Masonic feeling in the high degrees, and to bridge over the gap that now separates different bodies of high grade Masons. If it should be thought necessary, it would be easy to adopt some slight distinction in the regalia of the orders. For instance, the Templar Rose Croix Masons might have their collars and aprons edged with black and white, the Templar colours, and such distinctive tokens could be very easily settled. I would earnestly counsel the English high grade brethren to make some effort to obtain peace and union in the matter. We Irish Masons are more or less "tied up," at least in Ireland; but there are many ways in which we could lend a helping hand, and many reasons why we would be glad to see matters fairly and satisfactorily arranged.

As to the claim of the S.G.C. over all the degrees of Masonry, although it may not be "tenable" in these countries, it is not so long since it was attempted to impose it elsewhere. I am informed that so late as 1850, Gourgas addressed his claims, to various bodies, of jurisdiction over "all the degrees of Masonry," and that according to the published proceedings of the Grand Lodge of Connecticut (part 4, page 157, 1861), that body found it necessary to repudiate such a doctrine. I am also instructed that so late as 1844 members of the 33° actually went the length of expelling a member of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, requiring that body to declare such brother expelled "merely by reason of his expulsion by this Supreme Council." Of course, such arrogant assumption was not submitted to, and the "Holy Emperor" "came to grief." (I am referred to Freemasons' Magazine, March 29, 1862, page 245.)

As to the further suggestion in your leader, that the government of the A. and A. Rite should be brought into harmony with constitutional Masonry, by abandonment of the self-nomination practice, such a change would doubtless be most desirable; but that point is one for the consideration of the adherents of the Rite, and need not affect the settlement of the controversy in the manner I have already indicated.

I most cordially endorse your deprecation of personalities in this controversy. We have had too much of them already, and if peace cannot be made, the battle must be fought out. I do hope that the candidates on both sides will import into the struggle some of the old chivalric spirit, and wage the fight as becomes gentlemen and Freemasons.

Reviews.

The Kingston Masonic Annual, 1871.

[From the Die Bauhütte (organ of the Society of German Freemasons), Leipzig, January 7th, 1871.]

Not only because the proceeds of this annual are to be devoted to the Charity Fund of the Kingston Lodge must we wish it the widest circulation and best success, for it is, once for all, the most valuable and sterling Masonic work which has appeared, not only in England, but in the English language, during the last half century. We go even further: We see in the appearance of this annual the commencement of a new era in the literature of Freemasonry, and in the Masonic life of England. Up to the present time there has always been more or less wanting in the English Masonic magazines a careful sifting of the material to be published, comparatively worthless matter having been allowed to swamp more important; they also lack a recognisable standpoint and a scientific bearing, properties which distinguish this annual in a praiseworthy manner. Although the editor has allowed the contributors perfect freedom, and they have written without concert, still the various papers are of the same stamp, as they are all more or less alike in the seriousness of conception and relation, as in the free, critical spirit with which the respective subjects are treated. In some points the different contributors agree almost literally, as for example, in the demand, perfectly justifiable, but hitherto almost unheard in England and America, for the introduction of a printed ritual. But by far the most important thing about this annual is that the contributions are the substantial emanations and the result of the mental activity of the Kingston Lodge, or of the Hull lodges, which set a brilliant example to all other English and American lodges. The old English custom of working on the brethren by means of addresses and lectures, in addition to the often-wearying ritual, and of giving to Masonic meetings a special interest and value by intellectual appeals and instructive discourses—this good old custom, which in Germany has almost without exception become the rule, has in England fallen into disuse and oblivion. And as the Hull lodges revive, and with it break through the slavishness and sterility of English Masonic life, they perform a service on which we cannot congratulate them too much. The consequences of such a movement cannot be guessed; they will appear in the future, and wake up the so long sleeping spiritual life of English Freemasonry. With this reform a more earnest and higher conception of the objects of Masonry, a more searching study of the history and symbolism of our Fraternity, and a noble emulation into spiritual work must be brought about in English lodge-life which will be the means of bringing still closer to us our brethren in England. We note with particular pleasure, and, as a sign of the times, that the editor, publisher, and several of the contributors are members, or corresponding members, of the Society of German Freemasons.

* * * * *

It is not our intention to go into details. We recommend the perusal of the annual to every brother. To the editor we can only say "God speed." We shall greet the continuance of the annual as a valuable addition to English literature, and as a means to elevate the tone of Freemasonry itself and to place it in a more favourable light before the new Masonic world.

Reports of Masonic Meetings.

THE CRAFT.

PROVINCIAL.

LIVERPOOL.—The Mariners' Lodge, No. 249.—The brethren of this lodge held their usual monthly meeting on Thursday evening, the 3rd inst., under the presidency of Bro. Henry Pearson, W.M. A special interest attached to the proceedings from the fact that a well-merited recognition was made during the evening of the valuable services rendered to the lodge by Bro. Joseph Kellett Smith, the immediate P.M., during his year of office as W.M. The gathering of brethren, amongst whom was a number of visitors, was large. After the third degree had been given and the consideration of several applications for relief, the principal business of the meeting was brought on. The testimonial consisted of an exceedingly handsome black marble dining-room timepiece, surmounted by a splendidly executed bronze figure of the late Charles Dickens.—Bro. Pearson, in making the presentation, said the duty which devolved upon him was a very, very pleasant one, because in performing it he recognised, in the name of the lodge, the great success and admirable wisdom which had marked Bro. Smith's year of office. The lodge, in making that presentation, had somewhat departed from their usual course of presenting a P.M.'s jewel to the retiring W.M., but in doing so, they wished to mark their high estimation of the services which had been rendered by Bro. Smith. Thanks to his zeal and excellent government, the lodge had greatly prospered, and he hoped that he would be long spared to aid them by his presence and counsel.—In reply, Bro. Smith said it would be idle in him to attempt to convey his feelings in words. He could assure them, however, that he accepted the handsome gift with sincere gratification, and he thanked the brethren from the very bottom of his heart. The hours spent in fulfilling the duties of the chair had been some of the most pleasant in his life, and he would ever remember the Mariners' Lodge with the greatest warmth. Bro. Smith concluded by assuring the brethren that he would continue to give the lodge his heartiest support and assistance.—The following inscription is on a silver tablet in front of the clock: "Presented to Brother Joseph Kellett Smith, P.M. and P.Z. of 1094, by the brethren of the Mariners' Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, for his zeal and success as Worshipful Master of the above lodge."—The lodge afterwards resolved that a picnic should be held in about a fortnight, and a committee was appointed to carry out the arrangements.—The brethren then adjourned from labour to refreshment, and a pleasant evening was spent.

LANCASTER.—Lodge of Fortitude, No. 281.—The regular meeting of this lodge was held at the Masonic Rooms, Athenæum, on Wednesday evening, the 9th inst. Present: Bros. Dr. Moore, G.S.B. England, W.M.; John Hatch, I.P.M.; John Barrow, as S.W.; W. Fleming, J.W.; Jas. Hatch, P.M. and Treas.; E. Simpson, P.M. and Sec.; E. Airey, S.D.; G. Ingall, as J.D.; J. Harrison, I.G.; Jas. Taylor, Organist; J. Watson and Beeley, Tylers.; Ch. Hartley, W.M. 1353; Bateson, Bell, Bradshaw, Balfour, Bailev, E. Lambert, W. Robinson (P.M. 730), J. Conlan, R. Harger, &c. The lodge was opened punctually at the time appointed, and the usual business transacted. The lodge then took into consideration the terms upon which the lodge-room should be let to the Rowley Chapter and the Duke of Lancaster Lodge, the result being that the use of the lodge-room was granted upon such terms as amply indicated the truly fraternal feeling which existed on the part of the Lodge of Fortitude towards the other Masonic bodies. Bro. Robert Balfour having given proof of his proficiency as an E.A.P., was duly passed to the degree of Fellow Craft by the W.M., the working tools being presented by Bro. John Barrow, the acting S.W. The lecture on the tracing-board of the second degree was then delivered by the W.M. The Treasurer proposed a candidate for initiation, and there being no other business before the lodge, it was closed in due form.

BARNET.—Aracia Lodge, No. 1309.—The last regular meeting of this lodge was held at the Railway Hotel, Potter's Bar, on Wednesday, 9th inst. Bro. Chas. Horsley, P.M., presided as W.M., and in an able manner raised Bros. Luti and J. Finch (1275) to the third degree. Bro. Horsley was unanimously elected Steward for the forthcoming festival of the Royal Masonic Benevolent Institution, Bro. E. Sillifant for the Boys', and Bro. J. H. Butten for the Girls' School. There were also present Bros. F. Walters, P.M., J. Clemmans, S.D., J. H. Tustin, A. Overton, &c.; visitors, Bros. J. Finch (1275), Smith, and Warrington. Refreshment followed labour.

ALDERSHOT.—Aldershot Camp Lodge, No. 1331.—The regular monthly meeting was held in the Royal Hotel, at 6 p.m., on the 3rd inst. The chair of K.S. was occupied by the W.M., Bro. C. Carnegie, P.M., P. Prov. G. Supt. of Works Essex, who was supported by the following officers:—Bros. J. Fenn, S.W.; Capt. Richardson, R.E., as J.W.; A. M'Kenzie, as S.D.; F. Anderson, as J.D.; N. Lucas, I.G.; R. White, Sec.; There was a good muster of the brethren, including several visitors from the Panmure, Southsea, and 12th Lancers' Lodges. The lodge was opened in due form and with solemn prayer. The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed. Bro. Sergt. Gourley, 100th Regiment, was elected as a joining member. Sergts. Bishop (7th Fusiliers) and Badcock (1st Regiment) were then duly initiated into the Order by Bro. Osmond, P.M., and Bros. Smith and Scott were raised by the W.M. to the sublime degree of Master Mason. On the proposition of the W.M., a sum of £1 is. was voted to the Masonic Life Boat Fund. The W.M. announced that a Lodge of Instruction would be held on the 24th inst. Bro. Willmoth (94th Regiment) presented four valuable works on Masonry to the lodge, and a cordial vote of thanks was passed by the brethren for such a considerate gift. The W.M. was requested to have the lodge property insured for £100. Some other business having been transacted, the brethren separated in peace, harmony and brotherly love.

ROYAL ARCH.

METROPOLITAN.

Panmure Chapter, No. 720.—A convocation of this flourishing chapter was held on Monday, the 14th inst., at the Horns Tavern, Kennington, and although the summer meeting is usually quite an "off night," there was on this occasion a good muster both of members and visitors. Comp. Nunn, the M.E.Z., was supported by Comps. Hyde Pullen, as H., and S. Davison, J.; and there were also present Comps. James Stevens, P.Z., Scribe E.; Rev. W. B. Church, N.; C. Hammerton, P.S.; John Read, P.Z.; W. Worrell, Org.; H. F. Hodges, J. Nixon, M. Larham, and others. Visitors: Comps. Hyde Pullen, H. E. Frances, S. Rosenthal, F. Binckes, J. H. Chase (New York), John J. Martin (New York), A. Taylor (New York), S. R. Sircour (Nova Scotia), and others. The chapter having been duly opened and the minutes read, there being no business before the meeting, it was called off. The companions then formed a Chapter of Instruction, under the presidency of Comps. Chase and Martin, of New York, and the American method of working the degree was practically explained by those most excellent and learned companions. Comp. Chase being the Grand Lecturer of the degree in the State of New York, is eminently qualified for the task he undertook, and the gratification and thanks of all present were respectively expressed and recorded. A more interesting evening in Royal Arch Masonry could not have been spent. On the chapter being resumed, a formal vote of thanks to Comps. Chase and Martin was ordered to be recorded on the minutes. The chapter was then closed in due form, and the companions adjourned to banquet, when cordial fraternization ensued, and "our friends from far over the water" were left in no doubt as to the earnest feelings of regard and esteem entertained for them by their English brethren. We must compliment the Panmure Chapter on having exercised a wise discretion in endeavouring to promote Royal Arch Masonry by bringing about this meeting, which cannot but be productive of good both here and elsewhere.

MARK MASONRY.

METROPOLITAN.

Macdonald Lodge, No. 104.—A very interesting meeting of this celebrated lodge was held on Saturday, the 12th inst., at the lodge-room, Head-quarters First Surrey Rifles, Camberwell, at which were present several eminent American Masons. In the absence of the W. Bro. Dr. Cronin, G.S.D., who at the last moment was detained by professional business, the V.W. Bro. James Stevens P.G.O. and I.P.M., occupied the W.M.'s chair, and was supported by the V.W. Bro. Thomas Meggy, P.G.O., P.M.; W. Bro. S. Rosenthal, P.G.D.C., S.W.; W. Bro. Charles Hammerton, Prov. G. Sec. Middlesex and Surrey, J.W.; Bros. A. Wolton, M.O.; Berridge, S.O.; Worrell, J.O.; White, Reg. of Marks; Newmar, S.D.; Finney, jun., J.D.; Newton, I.G.; Major Finney, Steward; and a large number of brethren. There were also present the R.W. Bro. Col. Francis Burdett, Prov. Grand Master for Middlesex and Surrey; the V.W. Bros. Taylor, Chase, and Thompson, of New York; V.W. Bro. Fred. Binckes, G. Sec.; and others whose names were not in the signature book when we inspected it. The lodge having been duly opened and previous minutes confirmed, ballots were taken for Bros. Clarence Harcourt and Herbert Barry as joining members, who were unanimously elected. Ballots being also found clear, the following brethren were admitted and advanced to the degree, viz., Bros. Edward Moody, W.M. 1287; Henry F. Huntley, W.M. 720; Henry F. Hodges, S.W. 720; and W. E. Newton, No. 766. The ceremony, as is customary in this lodge, was accompanied by musical service, under the direction of Bro. W. Worrell, Org., and made a great impression both upon the candidates themselves and the distinguished visitors. At the request of the acting W.M., the R.W. Bro. Captain Chase then exemplified to the brethren in an extremely lucid and interesting manner the American system of working the degree, and added greatly to the "Macdonald" store of knowledge connected therewith. At the conclusion of the R.W. Brother's address, a hearty vote of thanks to him and to his companions was passed, and the several responses thereto were given and received with much feeling and enthusiasm. The R.W. Bro. Col. Burdett, the Prov. Grand Master for Middlesex and Surrey, then addressed the lodge, expressing his great pleasure with the manner in which the business of the evening had been carried out, and his satisfaction at being enabled to number the "Macdonald" as one of the lodges under his Grand Mastership. He sincerely wished it the continued prosperity its members sought to deserve, and would at all times be very willing to render it assistance by attendance on occasions when the same might be useful. The invitation to the American brethren appeared to be a good and beneficial thing, and the result had proved that though we know much, there is yet room for improvement in our mode of working. He had no doubt the "Macdonald" would, as usual, improve the occasion, and take care that Bro. Chase's remarks and information should produce good and choice fruits. The R.W. Prov. Grand Master concluded an able speech by expressing his intention to enter upon the minutes of the lodge his entire approbation of the evening's proceedings. Some formal Masonic business was then transacted, recommendation given to the petition for a new Mark Lodge at Balham, under the presidency of Bro. Stevens, and the lodge was closed. Refreshment followed labour, and was served in the large canteen of the Head-quarters of the First Surreys to the delight of the company, who enjoyed ample space and fresh air on one of the very hottest afternoons it has ever been our lot to attend a Masonic meeting. At the table much further interesting matter relating to both English and American working was spoken of, and the representatives of both countries vied with each other to their endeavours to entertain. Need it be said that a most enjoyable evening was spent, and that though the Tyler's toast was not deferred beyond the usual hour at which it given in this lodge, it came upon the brethren as a summons to disperse just when they were most indisposed to separate.

MASONIC CRICKET MATCH.

A rather novel entertainment among the brethren of the "mystic tie" came off last Saturday, at Pemberton School, Middleton-St.-George, the residence of Bro. Christopher Jackson, W.M. of the Restoration Lodge, Darlington, who kindly invited the members of his lodge to a friendly game of cricket, on the ground belonging to his school. The day being fine, a large number availed themselves of the afternoon's recreation, the pleasure being greatly enhanced by the music of the Philharmonic Band, under the direction of Bro. James Hoggett, Organist of the lodge. The party left Darlington in two large pleasure vans, and were met on their arrival by Bro. Jackson, W.M., Bro. the Rev. L. B. Towne, Chaplain of the lodge and Rector of Middleton-St.-George, who, it will be noticed, made the highest score on his side, Dr. Parsons, &c., &c. Two captains were elected, who chose their teams from the brethren and some of the senior pupils in the school. The game was kept up with much spirit until six o'clock, when the party adjourned to Bro. Jackson's residence, and partook of a substantial repast, which was graced by the presence of several ladies. This being concluded, the match was played out, when some indulged in croquet, others went to inspect the new church of St. Laurence close by, while a few rambled by the river side into the beautiful woods of Dinsdale. The National Anthem by the band was a signal for the time of departure, but not before a determination had been come to to send a challenge to one of the neighbouring lodges for a match to take place two or three weeks hence. The following was the score:—

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—Determination of blood to the head, flushings, palpitation, and shortness of breath are cured by these grand regulators of the heart's impulse. Under Holloway's grand specific, the current of blood throughout the body becomes steady, and unchanged by the passing thought, hence the suffusion of the head and cheeks is avoided, and nervous embarrassment prevented. They, in like manner, remove excessive sensitiveness, so often the opponent to the ease and grace inherent in the healthful and strong-nerved frame, and eradicate the doubts of the nervous. In intellects declining from intense study, free living, or over-anxiety, no equal remedy is attainable. Without exaggeration, they give muscular energy to the paralysed and ease to the pained. —[Advt.]

A MASONIC LITERARY INSTITUTE.

LAST week we inserted a communication from a well-known brother respecting the Rosicrucian Society, a body but little known to the Craft in general, although its operations in the sphere of Masonic literature have been attended with greater success than those of more pretentious associations. It has always seemed to us an anomaly—to say the least—that notwithstanding the fact that there are many learned and scientific men amongst the members of the Masonic Order, we have yet no accredited organisation for the advancement of Masonic knowledge. It is true that an "Archæological Institute" was founded, with a great flourish of trumpets, two or three years ago, and it is equally true that its membership comprised names like those of Bros. Glaisher, Hyde Clarke, and Besant, which would reflect credit upon any literary or philosophical society. But, unfortunately, the tares creep in with the wheat, and it is rumoured that the fair prospects of the Institute were blighted through the inability of certain parties to keep its accounts in the old-fashioned style of debit and credit. If this rumour be even partially correct, it gives birth to the melancholy reflection that the presence of a "Cocker" at the Council Board of the "Institute" might have saved the archæologists from the discredit which is always more or less associated in the popular mind with the fact of failure. From another point of view our retrospective glance at the subject is somewhat painful, inasmuch as we personally invested the sum of five guineas in the "Institute," in the hope of deriving much pleasure and profit therefrom—a hope which, we need scarcely add, neither has been, is now, nor is ever likely to be, realised. Having ourselves fallen into the snare, we can sympathise with our brethren in misfortune, and yet in spite of the sad experience which we, in common with other quondam optimists, have thus acquired, we resolutely maintain that the Craft ought to possess an archæological, literary, or other similar institute, composed of the intellectual or true elite of the Order. Always, of course, premising that the doctrine of meum and tuum be sedulously impressed upon the minds of those who may honour the society by taking care of its funds; and, secondly, that the books, receipts, and other documents be enclosed, as a precaution against possible accidents, in one of Milner's best fire-proof safes. There can be no doubt that in Masonic investigations some of the highest faculties of the human mind may be usefully employed—the range for thought and speculation being almost illimitable. The labours of Oliver have to some extent, it is true, opened a path to the untrodden expanse of Masonic lore, but his conclusions are, after all, but texts upon which to found sermons. The affinity of our secret system to the ancient religious rites—the similarity between our present organisation and that of the Dionysian artificers, or of the Roman architects—are subjects which demand patient and impartial enquiry before we can venture to pronounce ex cathedra that modern Freemasonry is the direct successor of the operative guilds of the Middle Ages. The theory of progressive development seems to offer the best solution of the problem, but it rests at present upon such a shadowy basis, and is supported by such an incongruous array of evidence, that no honest Masonic student can consider the question settled. Now, what we want is an association of men competent to sift and to compare, to analyse and to scrutinise, the proofs, or supposed proofs, of the antiquity of the Craft. We want such an association to be composed of the leading minds in the Order, of the real aristocracy of thought, the kings of intellect, before whose decisions the Fraternity would cheerfully bow. Not that we desire to exclude the humblest seeker after knowledge, but the "blue riband" of the association should be confined to men who had distinguished themselves in the arena of literature and science. If Smith or Brown, Jones or Robinson, is anxious to play the oracle, let him seek some more congenial sphere, and not bring ridicule upon a professedly learned body by a ludicrous display of his crass ignorance. Let such men, we say, keep aloof, and allow their intellectual betters the place which they improperly assume. There must always be, we are well aware, a large proportion of superficial thinkers in all literary sodalities; but, as a rule, their measure is soon gauged, and their relative position speedily determined. A bitter saying is on record, that a certain army was composed of lions but led by asses, and really this seems to have been the case in Freemasonry so far as its literary progress is concerned. A plausible, pompous fool, with more shirt-collar than brains, will very often affect to be the Jupiter Tonans of a society which counts within its ranks men of culture and consummate ability. Some brethren through sheer stupidity, but more from apathy or indifference, tacitly admit his pretensions, and the great man forthwith sits enthroned on a pedestal of his own manufacture. The establishment of a Masonic Literary, Archæological, and Scientific Institute upon a just and equitable basis, and under the auspices of a dozen men of talent and integrity, would have the happy effect of deposing such usurpers and of re-asserting for Freemasonry its undoubted claims to veneration as a fount of light and wisdom.

Our own columns furnish valuable evidence of the fact that Masonic scholars and critics are to be found, as the varied contributions from the pens of Bros. Hughan, Lyon, Carpenter, Paton, Buchan, and others, will readily attest. We are also convinced that a large meed of support would be extended by the members of the Craft generally, to ensure the success of such an Institute, if they were once satisfied that its affairs would be conducted in a proper manner. The prosperity of the Rosicrucian Society, as stated by our correspondent last week, is to be ascribed primarily to the confidence inspired by the bona fides, its promoters; and what has been accomplished in a necessarily limited Society by a few Rosicrucians, can surely be achieved by the great Masonic Body.

In fine, we want in Freemasonry an Institute worthy of the Order, and to which its best members would be proud to belong. Let but a few men of the right stamp take the lead, and we will guarantee the success of the project. Nor do we fear that anything but good can result from the diffusion of larger, broader, and deeper views of Freemasonry. On the contrary, the more its principles are intelligently interpreted to the class from which our ranks ought to be recruited—the more its precepts are faithfully carried out in practice—so much the more extensive will be its influence over the civilised globe.

It is peculiarly the province of English Freemasons to take the initiative in this good work, as in every other which pertains to the sphere of the Craft, because the prestige of English Masonry is justly recognised wherever a Masonic sign is known, or a Masonic word spoken. But to maintain this prestige we must keep the flag of progress flying, and the formation of a Literary Institute is just what we require to enable us to keep our station in the van.

Mulum in Parbo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

THE ROYAL ORDER OF SCOTLAND.

The printed history of the Royal Order of Scotland says:—

"It is composed of two parts—H.R.M. and R.S.Y.C.S. The former took its rise in the reign of David I., King of Scotland, and the latter in that of King Robert the Bruce. The last is believed to have been originally the same as the most ancient Order of the Fistula, and to contain the ceremonial of admission formerly practised in it.

"The Order of H.R.M. had formerly its seat at Kilwinning, and there is reason to suppose that it and the Grand Lodge of St. John's Masonry were governed by the same Grand Master. The introduction of this order into Kilwinning, appears to have taken place about the same time, or nearly the same period, as the introduction of Freemasonry into Scotland. The Chaldees, as is well known introduced Christianity into Scotland, and from their known habits, there are good grounds for believing that they preserved among them a knowledge of the ceremonies and precautions adopted for their protection in Judea. In establishing the degree in Scotland, it is more than probable that it was done with the view to explain, in a correct Christian manner, the symbols and rites employed by the Christian architects and builders; and this will also explain how the Royal Order is purely Catholic—not Roman Catholic—but adapted to all who acknowledge the great truths of Christianity in the same way that Craft or symbolic Masonry is intended for all, whether Jew or Gentile, who acknowledge a supreme God. The second part, or R.S.Y.C.S., is an order of knighthood, and perhaps the only genuine one in connection with Masonry, there being in it an intimate connection between the trowel and the sword, which others try to show. The lecture consists of a figurative description of the ceremonial, both of H.R.M. and R.S.Y.C.S., in simple rhyme, modernised, of course, by oral tradition, and breathing the purest spirit of Christianity. Those two degrees constitute, as has already been said, the Royal Order of Scotland, the Grand Lodge of Scotland. Lodges or chapters cannot legally meet elsewhere, unless possessed of a chapter from it, or the Grand Master, or his depute. The office of Grand Master is vested in the person of the King of Scotland (now of Great Britain), and one seat is invariably kept vacant for him in whatever country a chapter is opened, and cannot be occupied by any other member. Those who are in possession of this degree, and the so-called higher degrees, cannot fail to perceive that the greater part of them have been concocted from the Royal Order to satisfy the morbid craving for distinction which was so characteristic of the Continent during the latter half of last century.

"There is a tradition among the Masons of Scotland that after the dissolution of the Templars many of the knights repaired to Scotland, and placed themselves under the protection of Robert Bruce, and that after the battle of Bannockburn, which took place on St. John the Baptist's day, 1314, this monarch instituted the Royal Order of H.R.M. and Knights of the R.S.Y.C.S., and established the chief seat at Kilwinning. From that Order it seems by no means improbable that the present degree of Rose Croix de Heredom may have taken its origin. In two respects, at least, there seems to be a very close connection between the two systems. They both claim the kingdom of Scotland, and the Abbey of Kilwinning, as having been at one time the chief seat of Government, and they both seem to have been instituted to give a Christian explanation to ancient Craft Masonry. There is besides a similarity in the names of the degrees of Rose Croix de Heredom and H.R.M. and R.S.Y.C.S., amounting almost to an identity, which appears to indicate a very intimate relation of one to the other."

The Royal Order formerly used to be conferred on Master Masons, but is now usually restricted to Royal Arch companions.

A MEMBER OF THE ORDER.

THE GRAND LODGES OF CANADA AND QUEBEC.

As many of our readers may be interested in the action of the Grand Lodge of Canada in relation to the Quebec difficulty, at its last communication, we give the several propositions. The Board of General Purposes, having had the matter referred to them, reported the following resolutions, the adoption of which was moved by R.W. Bro. Thos. White, and seconded by R.W. Bro. Montgomery:—

"1. That the Grand Lodge desires to re-assert the principles of Masonic law, adopted at the special communication, held in the city of Montreal in December, 1869, and subsequently re-affirmed by unanimous vote of Grand Lodge at the last Annual communication, held in the City of Ottawa, as to the 'extent of its jurisdiction,' comprising the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

"2. That whilst it has no reason to alter its views, thus formally pronounced, this Grand Lodge regrets the continuance of the difficulties which have arisen in the province of Quebec, and that no approach has been made to a restoration of the Masonic harmony in that province, as Grand Lodge had reason to hope would have taken place.

"3. That an unanimous desire on the part of the lodges in Quebec to have that province set apart as a separate Masonic territory, would at all times have been and will be favourably considered by Grand Lodge.

"4. That Grand Lodge most earnestly desires the removal of all difficulties amongst Masons in the province of Quebec, and with that view resolves that a committee be appointed by Grand Lodge to confer with a committee of the lodges of Quebec which have ceased to work under the authority of Grand Lodge, with a view to the restoration of Masonic harmony in that province.

"5. That the suspension by edict of the Masters of lodges and Masons in that province, subsequently confirmed, be removed.

"6. That the committee so appointed shall, with all convenient speed, report the result of their conference to the Grand Master, and that he be requested to take immediate action upon such report."

In amendment, it was moved by R.W. Bro. B. McKechnie, seconded by R.W. Bro. N. B. Falkner:

"That having in view the true interests of Freemasonry, the maintenance of harmony, and the avoidance of scandal, be it

Resolved—That the suspension of the adherents of the so-called Grand Lodge of Quebec be and is hereby withdrawn.

"That the Grand Lodge of Quebec be and is hereby recognised as a duly constituted Grand Lodge.

"That we hereby cede to the Grand Lodge of Quebec the whole of the province of Quebec, subject to the following conditions, viz.:—That all lodges therein now in connection with the Grand Lodge, and that are desirous of maintaining that connection, may do so.

"That this Grand Lodge do strongly, and with the most fraternal feelings, recommend that all the lodges in the province of Quebec, and now in allegiance to this Grand Lodge, do take into serious consideration the necessity of sinking all differences, and cordially uniting themselves to the Grand Lodge of that province.

And in amendment to the amendment, it was moved by V.W. Bro. Racicot, and seconded by R.W. Bro. Gutman:

"That this Grand Lodge, while re-affirming its former opinion expressed at the Montreal and Toronto meetings, December, 1869, and July, 1870, as to the illegality of the organisation of the Grand Lodge of Quebec, and although no valid reason has ever existed for the disruption of this Grand Lodge in the manner attempted by the so-called Grand Lodge of Quebec, but being desirous of re-establishing peace and goodwill and harmony amongst all the Masons of Canada, and of preventing further trouble and complications, and being now of opinion that these objects can best be obtained by the existence of a Grand Lodge for the province of Quebec, properly organised, with the same unanimous assent, if possible, and good feeling of all the Masons in that province; while at the same time the duties and obligations of this Grand Lodge towards the same loyal Masons should not be disregarded; this Grand Lodge will give up and cede all the territory which it has occupied since 1855 in that part of Canada constituting the province of Quebec, make all just and financial settlements, remove all suspensions, and do all such things as may become necessary, so soon as this Grand Lodge receives notice that a settlement or compromise, mutually satisfactory, shall have been effected between the Masons residing in the province of Quebec, who have been and are now loyal and faithful to this Grand Lodge on the one side, and the members of the so-called Grand Lodge on the other, in such manner as they may decide among themselves whilst acting in a true Masonic spirit; and this Grand Lodge will not, for the present, take any further step or action of any kind whatever concerning the said so-called Grand Lodge of Quebec."

This last amendment was carried by a very large majority.

TEA AND ITS PROPERTIES.

Since the time, now less than a century ago, when Messrs. Newbury, of St. Paul's-churchyard, advertised that they had a small parcel of tea for sale at the low price of thirty-six shillings per pound, the taste for the Chinese plant has grown so rapidly that it has now become an absolute necessity to all classes of Englishmen, and, more especially, of Englishwomen. Nor is this to be wondered at, for few of us there are who have not had occasion to be grateful for the refreshing and invigorating, yet soothing qualities of the fragrant infusion, in whose praises the poet Cowper sang so eloquently. The enormous consumption of tea has given a wonderful impetus to the widespread trade of this nation, and the cultivation of the shrub has furnished employment to many millions of Chinese agriculturists. But with the increased demand has come the "un-tradesmanlike practices" of dealers both at home and in the far East, who have in one form or another adulterated the innocent herb we are all so glad to quaff. It, therefore, becomes a public benefit when a well-known house like that of Messrs. Barber and Company's, of 274, Regent-circus, Oxford-street, and 16, Great Titchfield-street, which has branch establishments in most of the important towns of England, and consequently has the power of buying in the best markets, enters the field with the determination of supplying the general public with the best possible teas at a low price. No one expects a tradesman to supply his goods at a loss, but we have much pleasure in stating that, after testing Messrs. Barber and Co.'s goods, we are justified in asserting that in no one instance does their performance fall short of their promise. Messrs. Barber and Co.'s teas are in every respect excellent, and the purchaser can always depend upon receiving the growth for which he pays. This is in these times a rare advantage, but he who knows where it is to be obtained has only himself to blame if for the future he every fails in obtaining a really good cup of tea.

We learn that some correspondence has taken place between the Prince of Wales and the W.M. of Lodge 154 (Ireland), one of the most ancient lodges of Belfast, and which has been known since 1813 as the "Prince of Wales' Own." Of this lodge the Prince of Wales has consented to become an honorary member.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The publication in your columns of the two documents emanating from the "Grand Lodge of Royal Ark Mariners" is deemed, I presume, to be of essential service to the interests of the influential brethren by whom the affairs of that mysterious body are administered. For their self-deception I have nothing to say, and do not even envy them the delusive gratification they enjoy in the shelter of their own "vessel." My faith in the work of the "chief constructor" is but weak, and I rather fancy that of many of his coadjutors is of the same diluted description, and will, I should think, be further weakened by his indulgence in unwarranted assumptions. For the childish impertinences in the epistles addressed to myself I have only—forgiveness; for the misrepresentation sought to be conveyed in the heading to the second document I have—pity. By whomsoever the insertion of that document was authorised, it was with the full knowledge that it was not—nor ever was considered or termed—a "treaty." It was a memorandum drawn up as a possible basis upon which terms of agreement might be arranged, and with reference to which the representatives of this G.L. expressed themselves, at the time of signing it, as, in their opinion, little likely to be adopted. The result proved this apprehension to be well-founded, as the General Board, with the G.M.M. at its head, rejected the claims of the soi-disant G.L. of R.A.M., and with them the conditions sought.

The object of the publication in question is evidently to be found in the desire to encourage a belief in the want of bona fides on the part of this G.L. Of this, I fearlessly assert, it is impossible to produce a tittle of evidence. We have, from the commencement of the negotiations between the two bodies, been willing to make concessions more liberal than the circumstances would justify, for the sake of peace and unity. When we ascertained, however, that underlying every offer from the "G.L. of R.A.M." was a studied attempt to maintain a supreme authority and an independent jurisdiction, this G.L., with its inherent right to the control of the Ark Degree, had no alternative but to withdraw, and to decline any further consideration of disingenuous propositions.

I shall not permit myself to be led into controversy, nor is it necessary, as it is satisfactory to know that the majority of those who have accepted office, or who have paid their passage-money for a contemplated voyage in the newly-launched vessel—either from distrust of her seaworthiness or for some equally good reason—have declined further participation in her fortunes.

I am, dear Sir and Brother,

BOYS' SCHOOL FETE.

(To the Editor of the Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have been engaged, more or less, for nearly thirty years in newspaper and other controversies, and have never yet understood that it was incumbent on any one—or the duty of any official, no matter by whom "his services may be retained"—to reply to, or in any way to notice, anonymous communications.

Lest, however, silence may be misconstrued, and as I happen to know the brother who writes under the nom de plume "Plantagenet," I trouble you with an explanation of the grievance under which, I regret to see, he labours. The fixing a charge for admission to proceedings such as those occurring at our Annual Summer Fête is neither new with us, nor is it exceptional as regards this Institution, as abundance of advertisements and circulars from other institutions, announcing similar events, will amply testify. Large as is our accommomodation, it has a limit, and experience has proved that, in the absence of a qualification for admission, the hall in which the distribution of prizes takes place has been taken possession of by visitors from the immediate locality, and others, to the injury of those who have taken and paid for tickets for the collation, which is an integral portion of the proceedings. A rule, therefore, has been laid down that precedences shall be given to the latter, and no complaint has been made until now, so self-evident appeared the justice of the regulation. The rule, however, is not an arbitrary one, but one necessary for general guidance and for the exercise of supervision. Had "Plantagenet," on being made acquainted with our requirements, appealed to me, and stated his wishes, I—acting under the instructions, and endeavouring to carry out the wishes of, the committee—would have met him fairly and fraternally, on being convinced of the soundness of his claim for admission.

Brethren and friends should be good enough to bear in mind that we have expenses to meet, and a large constituency to provide for, and to give us credit for framing regulations, not for the purposes of harass or vexation, but for the good of the Institution as a whole, and for the decently and orderly caring for the comfort and accommodation of those who favour us with their attendance.

If "Plantagenet" will address me privately or officially, I doubt not but that some remedy may be found for the annoyance I so sincerely regret he has suffered.

I am, dear Sir and Brother,
Yours faithfully and fraternally,
FREDERICK BINCKES, Secretary.

COMMITTEE OF ENQUIRY.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—In your impression of the 5th inst., a letter appears, signed "Cryptonymus," on the subject of a "Committee of Enquiry," in which he calls attention to a particular instance that occurred no later than a month ago. In the defence of that lodge to which he alludes, I beg to state that by the express desire of "Cryptonymus," he having previously vouched for the trustworthiness and good character of the candidate both to the proposer and seconder, the initiation took place.

Trusting you will excuse me for intruding so far on your valuable space,

I am, dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,

THE MARK DEGREE.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER.—In continuation of my remarks upon this subject at page 474, I am sorry to have to observe that the further evidence brought forward by Bro. Kerr, as recorded by your contemporary, or as it is also contained in a pamphlet entitled "Proceedings at a Conference of Delegates," &c., held on April 3rd, 1871, is, in my opinion, also full of mistakes, as I shall proceed to show.

The old operative lodges, or Masonic Friendly Societies, were not unwilling "to commit anything to writing;" for we have laws and statutes, minutes, &c., still extant which were written between one hundred and fifty and three hundred years ago, and from their contents we find no evidence that our system of degrees and ceremonies was practised then, but, instead, proof to the contrary.

When saying so, I of course mean that brethren are to read them as they actually stand in the old books, not as they may wish them to stand. E.g., Bro. Kerr says:—"The minute of 1598 says 'that no E.A. or F.C. be received or admitted into the lodge without the number of six Masters and two E. Apprentices, the Wardens of that lodge being two of the same six Masters.'" Now, upon turning to page 442 of Lawrie's "History of Freemasonry," where a copy of this "minute" occurs, we find that Bro. Kerr has quite misrepresented matters, for it there reads: "Item, That na Maister or Fallow-of-Craft be ressavit nor admittit wt. out the number of six Maisteris and tua enterit Prenteisses, the Wardane of that Lodge being ane of the said six." So we here see that Bro. Kerr has substituted E.P.'s for "Maisteris," and two Wardens where there is only "one" mentioned! He, of course, I suppose, wished to keep up the idea that the present system of Senior and Junior Wardens was in vogue then, but such was not the case, as the above helps to prove. Further, Bro. Kerr's idea that the E.P.'s were not present is simply groundless, as the "minute" distinctly shows they were bound to be present in order to make what was done legal; seeing therefore that Apprentices were present when "Maisters or Fallow-of-Craft" were "ressavit or admittit," it follows that what was being done then was, not the giving of "degrees" as with us now, but the granting of privileges.

Bro. Kerr also gives a description of certain emblems which are cut on the stone sill of the second window on the south side of the choir of Glasgow Cathedral, which "symbols," he says, were cut in "1559," as that date is cut below them. Now, he is all wrong again in his description here, for the date cut is "1556," and there is no "sun;" the ladder also has five steps, not "three;" and the finger does not point to it, but to the eye. But be that as it may, although the date "1556" be there, the true time when these Masonic symbols were cut is nearer 1756, and perhaps they are no older than the present century, as their style is quite modern; consequently, whatever Bro. Kerr builds upon them as being cut in the sixteenth century falls to the ground. They look as if some one had drawn a circle about six inches in diameter, and, after dividing it into six portions, cut an eye at the top, compasses and square at the bottom, the moon and a hand on the one side, and three stars and a five-stepped ladder on the other; then below all stuck the figures "1556." He might about as well have said "1956" when at it, and been equally near the truth.

Our Mark Master degree and ritual was neither known to nor worked by either the Mary's Chapel Lodge or the Edinburgh Journeymen so early as 1707. The Rev. Bro. G. R. Portal comes nearer the truth when he styles a Mark lodge which existed in the year 1800 a time-immemorial Mark lodge, and one of about 1780 an old time-immemorial lodge.

Marks were used by merchants as well as by Masons and other Craftsmen, and although a fee was eligible for giving or recording it, there were no more extra secrets about it than there is about the trade marks at present used by manufacturers, &c. Bro. Kerr's statement that the "Mark Master was the Master of the Fellow Craft's Lodge," and "the Master Mason presided over the entire lodge of three degrees," is, in my opinion, pure imagination.

As to "these Rules of 1598" being promulgated while the head of the Rosslyn family was "Hereditary Grand Master Mason," that is another mistake, for no evidence has ever appeared to prove that any Rosslyn ever possessed such a title at any time. The present Earl of Rosslyn, I am happy to say, is "Grand Master Mason," but as for hereditary G.M., that is another matter.

At page 46 of the pamphlet I perceive it stated that the Scottish G.L. and G.R.A.C. Committees in 1860 considered that the "Mark Master's Degree" was wrought by operative lodges "before the institution of Grand Lodge of Scotland;" but that is a mistake, and if either the Grand Lodge of Scotland or the Grand Lodge of England were to follow the precedent of the Aberdeen lodge in 1670 "the Entering Prentise" would get his mark "on payment of ane merk piece (thirteen pence half-penny) for his Meassone mcrk." The notions hitherto promulgated for a considerable time as to Fellow Crafts being the recipients of the "Mark degree" in olden times being simply the result of misapprehension or misrepresentation.

There is one remark of Bro. Kerr's at page 17 of the pamphlet which amused me very much, viz., "As representing the ancient builders of Glasgow Cathedral, they (the brethren of No. 3 bis) only now practise the traditional Masonry received at that early period." Thus implying that as the three degrees were wrought in St. John's Lodge in 1860, so were they wrought six centuries before then by their predecessors! Now, that is pure folly, for, not to speak of other things, even in 1860, with all the aids to help them extant, the members of St. John's were quite unable to work these degrees themselves, and had to depend upon outsiders to come and do them for them. Although I have examined their books, &c., I can find no evidence—but the opposite—of any member of No. 3 bis ever working the three degrees before 1866; and when, about that time, one of their own members, by taking an interest in the working, began to make it independent of assistance from others, the phenomenon was so wonderful that it is hard to say what the "coming man" might have attained to had he not been so foolish as to consider that a legend was of little historical value unless it could stand investigation. What is also curious, this lodge can only point to one of its Masters who ever worked the ceremonies, and he was R.W.M. some years ago. Such is the difference between fact and fiction.

The foregoing remarks are merely made for the purpose of supporting the truth, and for enabling brethren to understand the difference between the old custom of using marks and the rise and progress of our modern "Mark degree."

I am yours fraternally,

W. P. BUCHAN.

P.S.—I observe the name of the late Dr. Walker Arnott introduced, but from his verbal and written remarks to me, I consider that he would not now, had he been living, support the ideas of Bro. Kerr, as he would have made use of the evidence so largely brought forward since 1860. W. P. B.

SUBORDINATION IN THE HIGHER DEGREES.

"Abstine et sustine."

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—As an impartial looker-on, and in the cause of good order and the fundamental principles of the Craft, I may be excused offering my opinion with a view to a settlement of this question.

I do not propose to discuss the merits of the present case, but to propound the broad principles of expediency and convenience as regards the Masonic Body at large. It appears to me, therefore, reasonable that Masons generally should desire a cessation of the present dispute, and the appointment of a joint committee, composed of three moderate members, nominated by either party, with a president approved by both, and having a casting vote, and under the authority of the supreme head of the whole Masonic Order.

Such a committee should abstain from expressing any opinion on the original causes of dispute, and should confine itself to determining equitably and honourably the simple terms of an accommodation, the same to be held binding on all concerned, and to have the effect of restoring the status quo of all the parties individually implicated before this disturbance commenced, the original provoker of it being, at the same time, held, to a certain extent, individually liable for the consequences, and compelled, under a Masonic penalty, to make the first of mutual apologies and concessions.

Should the original elements of strife, however, still continue to smoulder, some means might be found of obtaining, through a committee, the general opinion of a certain number of lodges, according to numerical seniority—the simplest plan, selection always leading to intrigue—and on it based certain propositions on fundamental Masonic doctrines, for the final decision of the Grand Lodge of England, or of the Grand Master alone, as umpire.

Fraternally yours,

ROYAL ARCH.

THE ABUSE OF MASONIC CHARITY—BOOK CANVASSING.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Seven months ago I was called upon by a Mason, who represented himself as a Frenchman, a linguist, and P.W.M., in great distress, who had escaped from besieged Paris, where he had possessed much house property, but was then quite ruined by the war. He had taken up canvassing for the sale of books issued by an Edinburgh firm of publishers to obtain a livelihood for himself and family. Moved by his apparent distress, by his making use of the name of one of the principal officers of my lodge as recommending him, and on the faith of his being a worthy "brother," I was induced to sign an order for a work he was selling ("Faiths of World") to be delivered in monthly parts—in which he stated I should find an account of the origin and history of the Craft, at the same time pointing out the engravings as of a Masonic symbolic character. Being myself newly-initiated, and but a few days before raised to the third degree, I felt anxious to do what good I could to benefit a "brother in distress," and also a desire for "more light" in connection with a Society I had so recently joined. Not suspecting that my first experience therein would be to be swindled by the first "brother" with whom I should have dealings. Such, however, it proved, for, on examining the first part of the work taken, I found it did not treat in the remotest degree on Freemasonry; neither had he received the authority of the brother referred to for using his name as recommending him. The fraudulent manner in which he had obtained his orders from myself and several others was represented to his employers, but they have fully identified themselves with the sharp practice of their canvasser—for, instead of allowing the orders to be cancelled on their being reimbursed the amount of commission they stated they had paid thereon, they reply, after five months' delay, that, as we had signed the orders, we must either take the seven parts that were due of the first work ordered, or select another at the same price from their (very limited) catalogue (in which I cannot find a single book I care to have), or be sued in the County Court for the amount. I am informed the man is now making victims in Lincolnshire, and therefore wish to put the brethren generally on their guard.

Yours fraternally,

J. S.

THE MARQUIS OF RIPON AT HOME.

The citizens of Ripon on Monday gave a public reception to the Marquis of Ripon, it being his first visit to the city. Great preparations were made for the occasion, banners covering every available space from the station to the Market-place. His lordship, accompanied by the marchioness, arrived at 2.20 p.m. from town, and were met by the Bishop of Ripon, Mr. R. Kearsley, Mr. R. D. Oxley, and other gentlemen. They were escorted into the town by about 100 mounted tenantry. On arriving at Princess-terrace the Ripon 27th West Work Rifle Volunteers, under the command of Captain Earl De Grey, replaced the tenantry as a guard of honour, and a procession, consisting of the different benefit societies, preceded his lordship's carriage into the market-place, where a dais was erected. The marquis was received by the mayor, aldermen, and corporation of the town. After the tremendous cheering, which had been continued along the route, had somewhat subsided the town clerk read the following address:—

"To the Most Honourable the Marquis of Ripon Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter.

"May it please your Lordship,—We, the mayor, aldermen, and citizens of the city of Ripon, on behalf of ourselves and fellow-citizens, wish to offer our most sincere congratulations and most hearty welcome to your lordship on your first appearance amongst us since your return from the important and delicate mission to America, in which so distinguished and onerous a part was assigned to you. Remembering the clear line of demarcation your lordship has been wont to draw at our annual civic meetings between the discussion of national as distinguished from merely party politics, we are wishful now to follow as good an example, and to conform most strictly to so salutary a rule. On a previous occasion, when efforts were made to settle our most unwelcome disputes with our Transatlantic cousins, we believe the arrangement then proposed was said to be one of which no one was proud. Be that as it may, we think that if nothing more could be said for the recent treaty of Washington than that, it is one at which all must rejoice and of which none need be ashamed. Even that would be saying no little, but we feel sure that without running the slightest risk of trenching on any such delicate ground as party politics, very much more than that may safely be affirmed. Most assuredly it is impossible to exaggerate the incalculable importance attaching to any well-devised means for the removal of the feelings of irritation and distrust and the substitution for them of those of good feeling. May there be a continuance of that frank and cordial friendship which ought ever to subsist between all branches of the Anglo-Saxon race, and most certainly between such Powers as the United Kingdom and the United States. Surely for such a boon scarcely any price could be accounted too great, save that only which neither nation could afford to pay—viz., the sacrifice or compromise of national honour and self-respect. That no such cost as that had been incurred, or was ever contemplated, the names and character of her Majesty's High Commissioners, and the fact that your lordship was able to undertake so important and responsible a part in that commission, are, to us at least, and surely must also be to all to whom they are known, an ample guarantee. Most cordially and most earnestly do we trust that the recent treaty may be found capable of effecting so desirable a consummation as has been sought to be obtained by it and that your lordship may long live in the enjoyment of your well-earned accession of rank and honour, as well as of every happiness and prosperity which can accompany it; and that we may long be enabled to recognise and remember an old friend, for such we feel sure your lordship would not only permit, but wish each one of us to consider, you under your new title as Marquis of Ripon. Given under our common seal at the Town Hall, in the said city, on the 14th day of August, 1871. HENRY KEARSLEY, Mayor."

His Lordship then said he quite agreed with the address with respect to the great importance this treaty bore to England and the United States. A term should have been placed to the various subjects of difference which of late years had unhappily created a certain amount of irritation between the two peoples. He believed that no task of more importance for the interest both of England and the people of the United States could have been undertaken than a task which was calculated to remove those differences, and which, he trusted, would go yet further, and realise in the future that which you,

Mr. Mayor, have most justly described as an object of first-rate importance to this country and the United States. He trusted that there would always exist between the two great branches of our race, not merely an absence of irritation and alienated feelings, but a hearty and cordial friendship, and we felt proud that he had been permitted to take part in laying a deep and weighty foundation for the future, which would create an intimate friendship between the two great nations.

The procession then re-formed, and proceeded to the flower-show field where a sumptuous luncheon was spread in a marquee. The Marquis was received at the luncheon tent by the mayor, the corporation, the bishop of the diocese, the dean, and the clergy of the cathedral and the neighbourhood. After the usual loyal toasts had been drunk, the Bishop proposed "The Health of the Marquis of Ripon."

In his reply to this, the Most Hon. Marquis said he found it no easy task to express the feelings of gratitude which filled his heart at the hearty and friendly welcome which the citizens of Ripon had been pleased to accord him that day. He could not hold lightly those distinctions, especially as he might venture to hope those honours had been offered by the Sovereign as a proof and as a mark of approval for the work done. The work which took him across the Atlantic was neither light nor simple. The Government believed that the time had come when it might be possible to make a serious effort to close up the wounds of past misunderstanding. He was surprised when called upon by the head of the Foreign Office to undertake the mission; and he doubted the possibility of attaining the object with which he was charged, because a series of difficulties had sprung up over a course of years; but, as it turned out, the time had been well chosen. Thanks to Sir Edward Thornton, the ground had been prepared for the present settlement, and he rejoiced to have this opportunity of thanking him for the skill and ability with which he had acted. He also thanked his colleagues for their support. But this was not a party, but a national question, and no one more largely contributed to the settlement of these negotiations than that distinguished Conservative Sir Stafford Northcote. He was proud to have the honour of taking part, however humble, and having signed such a treaty, which it was trusted would be the forerunner of a lasting peace between the two great branches of the English race, and more especially as the Parisian Commune had shown that passion and crime lay beneath our boasted civilisation.

Other toasts followed, and the proceedings terminated most enthusiastically.—Standard.

CONSECRATION OF A NEW LODGE AT WIMBLEDON.

The Royal Arthur Lodge, No. 1360, held at the Duke of Edinburgh Hotel, New Wimbledon, was consecrated on the 3rd inst., at 4 p.m., by W. Bro. James Brett, P.M. and P.G. Purs., assisted by Bros. W. Watson, G.S.L., as S.W.; and J. Thomas, P.M. 507, as J.W. The ceremony was performed in a most beautiful and impressive manner, and excited the admiration of all present.

Stevens, P.M., assisted most ably as Director of Ceremonies.

After the lodge was closed the brethren sat down to a most excellent and liberal cold collation, provided at the expense of the worthy host of the Duke of Edinburgh, himself a candidate for initiation into the mysteries of the Order. The usual loyal and Masonic toasts were drunk, and the brethren dispersed about 9 p.m., after having seen one of the most interesting ceremonies performed in a manner that must have impressed all with the beauty solemnity, and sound foundation of Freemasonry.

The District Grand Officers having been duly appointed and invested, the Acting D.G.M. adverted to the limited attendance of the members on the present occasion, and requested the officers to provide themselves with the proper clothing, as it was probable the M.W. the Grand Master would honour Cairo with a visit next winter. He (Bro. Borg) expected to see all the members wearing, at future meetings, the collar and jewel of the office by virtue of which they attend this D.G.L.

The Acting D.G.M. then addressed the brethren as follows:—Worshipful Brethren and Brethren, three years have now elapsed since we last met within these walls for the discharge of our duties in connection with this District Grand Lodge. During that period, several of its original members have quitted the country—one, especially, under circumstances which have been, and, I have no doubt, are still a source of pain and regret to us all. I allude to the R.W. Brother who was forced into exile, and who since his banishment has been visited by a severe bereavement in the death of his mother. I regret that Masonry in general cannot be said to have made much progress during that interval; for according to information I have received, several lodges holding under foreign jurisdictions have ceased to exist. The causes which have led to their closing are various, and I think it will not be out of place here to allude to some of them. From my personal observations during seven years' residence in Cairo, I feel convinced that sufficient enquiry is not made into the antecedents and character of the persons who offer themselves as candidates for initiation into our mysteries; a certain influence or name they may have acquired during their stay in the country is often, I am sorry to say, allowed to turn the scale in their favour, and, on the other hand, the careless and matter-of-course manner in which the ballot is treated by the members of some lodges has caused to be admitted into the Order several persons who have proved to be anything but acquisitions. Moreover, it would appear that of the members to whom I allude, few enjoyed independent positions, and this has had the effect of hastening the collapse of their several lodges. For, owing to the different elements of which those lodges were formed, the various objects they ascribed to the institution, and the inability of coping with the sordid persecution which proceeds from high quarters towards every known member of the Craft, their existence was well nigh exhausted even at the time of the foundation of this District Grand Lodge, and it was then felt that the least shock would have levelled them to the ground. The several Masonic assemblies that were held during past years had in a measure foreseen the catastrophe and tried to avert it. But some important resolutions that were then passed have, unfortunately, remained a dead letter, and the exile of our Chief, the dissension that was suffered to creep in, and the unabated persecutions, direct and indirect, have ultimately led to their closing. While we cannot but deplore this state of things with regard to foreign Masonry, it is extremely gratifying to find that English Masonry has been little affected by it, and that, if we have made no progress, at least, we have not lost ground. When I say "no progress" I mean to apply the phrase to numbers only, for it is a source of great satisfaction to me to know that the works of the two lodges now extant in Alexandria are carried on in an efficient manner, whilst the other two in this place leave little to be desired. This I conceive to be mainly due to their having at their helm Masters who, apart from their Masonic qualifications, have acquired in the country a certain experience which gives them the peculiar tact which W.M.'s are required to display on nearly every occasion. The Hyde Clarke Lodge, No. 1082, has, for doubtless good reasons, returned its warrant; of the other two—St. John and St. Paul, No. 1154, and the Egyptian, No. 1156—I regret I can get no information, because of the absence on account of ill-health of the Master, to whom the warrants were entrusted. The Grecia Lodge, No. 1105, had for some time past suspended its labours, but I am glad to learn they are about to be resumed. On the other hand, against the last-mentioned drawbacks we have to set the inauguration of a new lodge the labours of which will be carried on exclusively in the Arabic language. The importance of this new temple cannot be underrated when we bear in mind the prejudice—nay, almost hatred—that is entertained against us by high and low, and the deeply-rooted suspicion with which the intelligent classes regard us. It is in dispelling those prejudices and suspicion that the new lodge will prove highly serviceable to the Craft; for through it, I hope, the time may not be far distant when, as in India, we may reckon under our banner the most pious, the most illustrious, and the most learned of the Mussulmans. Meanwhile, if we would materially aid in the attainment of that object, we should meet all misconceptions by a carriage and conduct worthy of the name of Masons, and by creating a reputation for ourselves which will lay a sound foundation for confidence and respect. To that end we must be particularly careful in the choice of our members, cautious in the parade of our own connexion with Masonry, and last, though not least, we should discountenance all persons of dissolute and disreputable conduct who, although untouched by the law, reflect great discredit upon us, because such men are more eagerly pointed at by our enemies than are the good among us acknowledged. I have to recommend to you great caution in designating Orientals as Masons, for while Europeans may boast of their connection with the Institution because they run not the least risk of any evil consequences, the committal of native brethren may render them subject to persecutions which we are not yet in a position to avert. With reference to lodges holding under foreign jurisdictions, we should profit by every occasion that might enable us to exhibit sympathy on common grounds and give brotherly assistance to all, generally, as Masons; but at the same time we should be cautious in entering into close associations with them until their principles be well known to us and are found to be identical with our own. Above all, we should seriously repudiate any innovation they might attempt to introduce into the system of Masonry. These and similar views, I am glad to say, have been at different times propounded by the District Grand Lodge of Turkey—with which we have doubtless a communion of interests, on account of the several Masonic jurisdictions which are alike represented in both places, and the various nationalities which compose the lodges in existence—and I have no doubt we could do no better than follow them, dictated as they were by a lengthened experience. Before I close the subject of foreign lodges, I feel it my duty to warn you against a change that I am informed is meditated by the Loge Ecossaise No. 166, of Alexandria. I am not yet in a position to say anything with certainty about it, but leave it to you to ascertain how far such change, if any, would affect the landmarks of the Order, and I recommend you to act, with reference to the admission of visitors from that lodge, in strict conformity to the charges which you pledged yourselves to maintain. I cannot sufficiently recommend to your assistance two establishments which owe their existence solely to Masonry. I mean the Free Schools of Alexandria and Cairo. The fact of their having been started by foreign lodges should not be suffered to influence us against them, because, I have no doubt, they will materially contribute hereafter in clearing the cloud which has gathered over us, as I understand that, amongst others, a certain number of native children receive therein daily instruction. Education is one of the elements with help in turning the scale of public opinion in our favour, and the fact of its having been hitherto somewhat neglected generally, should impel us to forward it as much as lies in our power. By furthering that object, and by enabling the natives to receive a good, sound, and moral education, we shall by degrees win them to us, and accomplish the task we cheerfully accepted when we took our respective O.B. Through it they shall come to learn we are neither a political nor a religious sect, but that we belong to an institution which has for its main object peace on earth and good-will towards all men, and seeks to establish brotherly love, relief and truth. Before taking my leave of you on the present occasion, allow me, brethren, to return to you all my sincere thanks for the congratulations you have offered in consequence of the high honour which R.W. the D.G.M. was pleased to confer upon me; and let me assure you that I am fully alive to the fact that the duties attached to my new post will prove by far too onerous, unless I receive from you all that assistance which, I venture to hope, you will not withhold.

W. Bro. Rogers returned thanks to the Acting D.G.M., in the name of the brethren present, for the address; and, in his own name, for the flattering manner in which mention is therein made of the Star in the East Lodge, No. 1355.

The Acting D.G.M. having replied in suitable terms, a charitable collection was made, and the D.G.L. was closed in form with solemn prayer.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

[From the Eastern Province Herald.]

The installation meeting of the Lodge of Good Will, No. 711, took place at the Masonic Temple on the Hill on St. John's Day at high noon. Owing, however, to the unpropitious state of the weather, there was not so large a gathering of the brethren as is usual on this occasion. Bro. S. Bain, W.M., presided, supported by his officers, and Bros. F. S. Fairbridge, J. C. Kamsley, and Geo. Smyth, P.M.'s, and several visiting brethren. Bro. F. S. Fairbridge duly presented the W.M.-elect, Bro. H. E. Tonks, S.W., according to ancient custom for installation, and after the brethren had retired, he was duly and most impressively installed into the chair of K.S. by the W.M. The customary salutations followed, and the W.M. then proceeded to the appointment and investiture of his officers, as follows, viz.:—Bros. F. A. Pearson, S.W.; C. E. Dinsterville, J.W.; G. Armstrong, Treas.; H. Frost, Sec.; J. A. Bell, S.D.; A. Hill, J.D.; J. F. Gertenbach and J. W. Clark, Stewards; T. Cragg, I.G.; J. Morley, Tyler. The addresses were given with much earnestness and feeling by the Installing Master, and, after the usual routine business, the lodge was closed. In the evening the brethren again assembled, in number about fifty, to the annual banquet, which was sumptuous and well served by Bro. Phillips, of the Club. Dessert followed, and, after the customary toasts were given, of "The Queen and the Craft," and others, with Masonic honours, the toast of the evening was proposed by Bro. S. Bain, P.M., who observed that this was the second pleasurable duty which had devolved upon him on this occasion, the first being the installation of their esteemed W.M., and the second that of proposing his health, which he was sure the brethren would respond to with enthusiasm. Bro. Tonks had faithfully served the office of S.W. during his (Bro. Bain's) first year of office, and had acted in that capacity during the greater part of his second year, owing to the continued absence of the officer appointed to that post, and if ever merit deserved preferment it was in the case of their present W.M., and being, as he believed, the oldest Mason present, he would be of infinite service to the brethren if they would only rally round him and give him the support which he undoubtedly deserved at their hands. In the early days of the lodge, the W.M., as an old and experienced Mason, had done good service to the promoters by his advice, and he (Bro. Bain) felt sure if the brethren would only listen to his teaching they would all become good and zealous Masons.—The W.M., in responding, said that he could scarcely express to the brethren how deeply he felt the kind and hearty manner with which they had received the toast, and he could assure them this was a day he had looked forward to for many years, and the brethren might depend upon his doing his utmost to follow in the steps of their late W.M., whose ruling, working, and governing the lodge had met with the cordial approval of all the brethren. The W.M., in the unavoidable absence of Bro. F. D. Deare, P.M., gave the health of the retiring W.M., to which Bro. Bain duly responded. Other toasts then followed, interspersed with some capital songs and recitations, and although a most agreeable evening was spent, the brethren retiring about eleven o'clock.

MASONIC SONGS TO POPULAR AIRS.

No. 4.—AIR, "Auld Lang Syne."

As through the world our path we take, where'er that path may lead,
It smoothed will be if we but make our own the Mason's creed;
If we but hold in simple faith the truths that we possess,
And do our part like honest men, who act what they profess.

Then here's a health to all the Craft, our brethren true and tried,
False friend, or foe, no fears we know when standing side by side.

When shines the sun our ranks upon, we bless the power Supreme,
And work His gracious purpose while rejoicing in the beam;
And as His love to us is shown may we to others show,
A brother's love and tenderness as through the world we go.

Then here's a health, &c.

If clouds should come and dim the sun, our faith comes into play,
And bids us watch through darkest night to hail the coming day;
And as the day must surely come, so future time will tell
The wisdom of His high design who "orders all things well."

Then here's a health, &c.

THE WRESTLE.

BY BRO. GEORGE MC AULEY.

"And he said, 'Let me go, for the day breaketh.'"—
Gen. vi. xxxii. 26.

Though bound to earth by various ties,
Gladly would my spirit rise,
And anxious for a sure abode
In the blest presence of its God;
Still, still it cries to all below,
"See, the day breaks! ah! let me go."

Here sins defile, here cares oppress,
And fears alarm and foes distress;
Sickness here wastes, here plagues annoy,
And sorrow darkens every joy.
I would forsake this vale of woe,
And the day breaks, pray let me go.

If by disease or doubts distress,
I seek, in God, the promised rest;
Faithful and true, He makes the bed
On which reclines my weary head,
But greater good my God will show—
See, the day breaks! ah! let me go.

When favour'd by my Heavenly King,
As in the days of youth I sing,
When desert wastes around me smile,
My gladdened heart exults the while.
But brighter joys I hope to know—
Now the day breaks! so let me go.

Almighty Lord! to be with Thee,
Thy courts to tread, Thy face to see,
Is my soul's wish, and as it hies
Towards thy bless'd seat beyond the skies,
Still, still it cries to all below—
See, the day breaks! ah! let me go.

THE PLAIN OF PHILISTIA.

BY CAPTAIN WARREN, R.E.

The villages on the flat plain about Ashdod are as like each other as so many peas, and there is very little of interest to be seen in them, but they had nearly all to be visited, if it was only for making sure of their names, as the people were not all inclined to give information. Many of them had been down south working on the Suez Canal, and seeing our surveying instruments, they concluded that the English were going to cut a rival canal through Philistia and the Judean mountains to the Dead Sea, and to this they strongly objected, as they considered it would be the signal for our retaking possession of our inheritance; for they told me over and over again that they had taken the land from us, and that we should wrest it back from them again, but then many of them added, "You will have to fight for it; we will not give it up without a struggle."

At El Juseir we saw a white marble column and effaced capital, and at Summeil a few levelled stones. The ruins of the ancient towns about here are probably buried only a few feet below the soil.

On the evening of the 7th June we were camped at the foot of Tel es Safiyet, the Alba Specula, or Blanche Garde of the Crusaders, probably Gath of the Philistines. It is fifteen miles due south of Ramleh, and twelve miles to S.E. of Ashdod; the meaning of its name, Alba Specula, will be understood on reference to the photograph (No. 265), where the glittering white chalk cliff at S.W. angle is shown, a conspicuous object which can be seen for many miles to west.

To the east the country was surveyed, the first range of the hill country; the only villages of interest visited were Kudna, where there are remains of a castle, ancient walls, and large stones about; much of it appears older than the time of the Crusades, but there are also pointed arches, casemates, and plenty of modern ruins. It is five miles S.E. of Tel es Safiveh, and to its north by two miles is the village of Deir Dubân, where are enormous caves similar to those described by Dr. Robinson at Beit Jebrin. In one several inscriptions were found, cut on the rock and on plaster, apparently over a passage which has been built up. The Syrian Bishop of Jerusalem pronounces them to be Syriac, and to be the work of Christians who emigrated here from the Holy City at the time of the Persian invasion. There is a Byzantine cross over one of the inscriptions.

On June 10th we left Tel es Safiveh for Yebneh Port, a distance of seventeen miles in a straight line N.W.; passed along the Wady Sumt by Tel et Turmus (a village with no hill) and Kurtineh, and then turning off to Al Mesmiyeh, went due north over undulating hills past Emazmah (ruin) to Shahmeh, on the north bank of Wady Surah. This latter wady runs N.W. through a gap in the hills of El Mughâr and Kutrah, passing to the east of Yebneh town, and approaches the ocean about one mile to the north of the ancient port of Jamnia (Yebneh). There are at the mouth of the wady lagoons and fresh water springs; but no water in the wady during the summer months.

I may here make a suggestion with regard to the position of the cave of Makkedah where the five kings took refuge when pursued by Joshua from Gibeon. Joshua x. 5.

We have, Joshua xv. 41, the towns "Gederoth, Bethdagon, and Naameh, and Makkedah" placed together, and we have at the present day, Kutrah and Mughâr close together, Naameh, six miles N.E., and Beit Dejan about twelve miles to north. I have to suggest that the village of el Mughâr (the cave) is the modern name of the ancient Makkedah, and the desirability of making further researches at this place. It is true that several authorities place Makkedah further to the south of this point by several miles, but the writer of the article "Makkedah," Smith's "Dictionary of the Bible," appears to establish the fact that it must have been situated at no great distance from Ramleh, and el Mughâr is less than eight miles from that city.

There was little to be seen at Yebneh town except the church now used as a mosque, but excavations would probably uncover the old fortifications; it is admirably situated as a fenced city. The ancient port is some four miles distant; a large plan of it is given on one of the Admiralty charts of the Syriac seas. The photograph No. 267 gives a view of the southern end of the port, where are many confused ruins.

From this point we rode up to Jaffa, ten miles, to obtain our letters, the weather extremely oppressive in spite of the sea breeze.—"As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

June 12th. We left Jaffa for the little village of Surah, twenty-three miles in a straight line. For the first ten miles to Neby Ghundeh, we passed remains of walls and terraces on the hills which have now a coating of drift sand over them. We passed next through olive groves and gardens past Zernuka, until crossing over some undulating hills we came across the village of Akir, the ancient Ekron; with no remains of its fallen greatness. The people are very civil, and one old man came out and babbled forth a story about the villagers being descended from Jews. As it is five miles from Yebneh town, the great seat of learning in the time of the Maccabees, there may be some foundation for the story. Ekron is on a swelling mound only about two miles to the north of the Wady Surah, the valley up which the milch kine probably conducted the ark to Bethshemesh, and during harvest time there is a good road all the way. From here we gradually ascended the hills by Mansurah and Kuldah, and passing the ruins of Beit F'ar to our right, arrived at the 'Ain of Surah by night-fall, 870ft. above the sea. We had now a chapter of accidents; the dragoman, who had heard of his father's death that morning, forgot what he was about, and losing sight of us, wandered over the country, leaving us to find our own way. He did not arrive at camp till some time after us, and when he saw me he exploded in sobs, declaring that to have lost us on the road was a far greater grief to him than to have lost his father; he forgot to tie up his horse or give it a drink, and so the poor beast tried to satisfy himself and tumbled into the well, whose waters were nearly 4ft. from the surface. On our way in the dark the observation book had been dropped, and add to this our head muleteer was taken ill with strong fever, and Musa, his second, was stung by a scorpion on the big toe. The poor fellow was brought into my tent in a very exhausted state, and on finding that the application of strong liquid ammonia to his toe had no effect, I applied it to his nostrils, saying, "Musa, smell this." He sniffed, but it had no effect. "Try again, Musa." Again he sniffed, but his agonised writhings prevented his nose touching the bottle. "Sniff as strong as you can, Musa," and this time he regularly inhaled the blistering vapour, and fell back motionless as though shot. We had hardly time to think what to do next or to listen to the growing plaint that Musa had been killed, when a loud splash was heard, and a cry that the dragoman's horse had tumbled into the well. The poor beast was swimming, but had no chance of getting out by himself. The guy ropes of the tents were quickly on the spot, one we tied round his head and shoulders, and the other tight to his hock, and soon we were all lugging away at the animal. By some desperate efforts we at last got him on dry land somewhat worried by the ropes, but not permanently the worse for his rough usage. Among the most energetic of the party I thought I perceived Musa working away, and sure enough it was he, come to life again. After it was all over I asked him how his toe was, but he had forgotten all about it; either the ammonia or the excitement of getting out the horse, had effectually cured him.

In the morning our observation book was found; the head muleteer was, however, very ill with fever, so we had to make this spot our headquarters until 15th June, when he recovered sufficiently to move; it was astonishing how he would swallow strong doses down without their affecting him in the least. A sirocco wind was blowing at the time, when the heat was between 80° to 90° during the nights, and made us all very uncomfortable. In the survey of the country to the north of our camp nothing of importance was observed.

The village of Surah (the ancient Zorah) stands about 1150ft. above the sea, and is situated on the southern end of the hill crest overlooking the valley of the same name. On the opposite side of the valley low down in the ruin of 'Ain Shems (the ancient Bethshemesh), and from our stand-point it is easy to see the line which the milch kine would have taken in coming up from Ekron, and also the valley which the men would have ascended in carrying the ark up to Kirjath-jarim. Looking across the valley to the opposite crest we can see the ruin of Tebneh (the ancient Timnath), where dwelt Samson's betrothed; it is 740ft. above the sea, and therefore not in the plains, as some writers have stated. Samson in going down to it would descend 700ft. into the valley and then ascend again 350ft. to Timnath. It is apparent from the sacred narrative, Judges xv., that the corn was growing in the valley, as it does at present, with the vineyards and olives lining the side of the hills; for we are told that the Philistines came up to Timnath and burnt Samson's wife and her father with fire. Tibneh lies between El Bureij and Ammûrieh.

SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW.

The Thistle and Rose Lodge, No. 73, held an emergency meeting on Saturday last, at 12 o'clock a.m., to initiate Capt. G. Wilson, who was about to leave the port with his vessel. Bro. G. M'Donald, the R.W.M., was assisted by Bros. W. Walton, S.W., and G. W. Wheeler, P.M., as J.W. Bro. Bruce acted as Guide or Deacon. The ceremonies were all impressively worked by the R.W.M., who regretted the small attendance of members, which he attributed to the shortness of the notice and its being such a busy day with all tradesmen. After labour the brethren partook of refreshment, and congratulated themselves on the Masonic unity existing, the ceremonies having been conducted by an Englishman, Scotchman, Irishman, and Welshman.

The Shamrock and Thistle Lodge, No. 275, met in their Hall, Struthers-street, on the 4th inst. Bro. Wm. Philips, R.W.M., presided, assisted by Bros. Rewar, S.W., and J. Matheson, J.W. The lodge having been opened, the R.W.M. initiated Mr. G. Ross and raised Bros. T. Lisher and Joseph Henghui. A candidate was in attendance for the third degree, but the R.W.M. thought that it would be better to hold an emergency meeting rather than be obliged hurry through with it. The lodge was accordingly closed in peace and harmony, all being well pleased with the excellent working.

THEATRICAL.

COVENT GARDEN.—This aristocratic theatre will be opened to-night (Saturday) by M. Rivere for the first of his series of Grand Promenade Concerts, for which we anticipate complete success.

HAYMARKET.—We must remind our readers that the farewell performances of Mr. Sothorn, previous to his departure for America, are now taking place at this fashionable theatre. He appears every evening in "An English Gentleman" and "Not if I know it," which pieces are preceded by "Mischief-Making" and followed by "My Husband's Ghost." We are glad to see that this very attractive programme continues to draw as large audiences as ever.

LYCEUM.—This theatre, it is announced, will be reopened with a new play early in September, under the able direction of Mr. H. L. Bateman, sole lessee and manager.

CROSBY'S
BALSAMIC COUGH ELIXIR.

Opiates, Narcotics, and Squills are too often invoked to give relief in Coughs, Colds, and all Pulmonary diseases. Instead of such fallacious remedies, which yield momentary relief at the expense of enfeebling the digestive organs and thus increasing that debility which lies at the root of the malady, modern science points to CROSBY'S BALSAMIC COUGH ELIXIR as the true remedy.

SELECT TESTIMONIAL.

Dr. Rooke, Scarborough, author of the "Anti-Lancet," says: "I have repeatedly observed how very rapidly and invariably it subdued cough, pain, and irritation of the chest in cases of Pulmonary Consumption, and I can, with the greatest confidence, recommend it as a most valuable adjunct to an otherwise strengthening treatment for this disease."

This medicine, which is free from opium and squills, not only allays the local irritation, but improves digestion and strengthens the constitution. Hence it is used with the most signal success in Asthmas, Bronchitis, Consumption, Coughs, Influenza, Night Sweats of Consumption, Quinsy, and all affections of the throat and chest.

MASONIC FESTIVITIES.

PICNIC OF THE MARINERS' LODGE, LIVERPOOL.

Favoured with splendid weather, the heat being tempered by a genial breeze, with a large and spirited party, and a pleasant locality as the scene of the "out," the annual picnic of the Mariners' Lodge, No. 249, which took place on Wednesday, the 16th inst., was one of the most successful as well as enjoyable which have yet been held.
The party, which numbered nearly 100, started from the George's Landing-stage shortly before eleven o'clock, and and the journey to Beeston Castle, the scene of the day's picnic, was quickly accomplished. Very few places within a day's journey by railway are so picturesque, and the historical associations connected with the castle, now in ruins, are many and interesting. In the reign of Richard II. Beeston was selected as the safest place of deposit for the king's treasure and jewels, valued at 200,000 marks, and guarded by 100 men-at-arms; but these valiant tamely surrendered the place, without resistance, to the Duke of Lancaster. In 1642 it was garrisoned by the Parliamentary forces, but subsequently captured by the Royalists—a feat which was accomplished partly through the treachery of the commanding officer in possession, and partly through the bravery of a captain attached to the attacking forces. The Royalists held possession till nearly the end of 1644, when a second attack was made by the Parliamentary forces—at first without success, but in another attempt they regained the place, when they found "neither meat nor drink in the castle, but only a piece of a turkey pie and a live peacock and a peahen."
These are a few of the leading incidents in the history of this venerable relic, which, as the historian says, "battered and time-worn, still looks proudly over the great vale of Cheshire." The view from the summit is magnificent, embracing the estuaries of the Dee and Mersey, the towns of Liverpool and Chester, and extending in the other direction as far as Ruabon, in Denbighshire. Immediately on their arrival, the picnickers started for the top of the hill, where for some time they enjoyed the lovely landscape, which stretched away as far as the eye could reach.
Sight-seeing over for a time, they again descended the hill, at the base of which the refreshment tent was pitched, with whetted appetites, and quickly did full justice to an excellent dinner provided with great liberality by Mr.
Bolland, of Chester. With the "sharp edge" taken off their appetites, the happy outers again climbed the hill, where abundant amusements were furnished for almost every taste. Amongst these out-door sports were croquet, bat and ball, football, games, dancing, &c.; while a number of inveterate fern-hunters found congenial enjoyment in gathering rare and choice specimens of particular orders.
Several hours were thus pleasantly spent, and on the way to the all-important tea a flying visit was paid to what was modestly called the "sand holes," but which were more properly a series of caves of the most striking character, lighted by ingeniously arranged Chinese lanterns, provided for the occasion, which greatly added to the picturesque beauty of the interior. After tea, the large party again entered upon the enjoyment of games and dancing, with great gusto, until nightfall and a slight fall of rain, when "trucks" were made for the station, and a start made for Liverpool, which was reached in due time. After tea, on the motion of Brother J. K. Smith, P.M., and M.C., a cordial vote of thanks was given to Brother H. Pearson, W.M., for his efforts in connection with the pleasant day's proceedings. A similar compliment, on the motion of Brother Pinnington, was given to Brother Smith for his indefatigable exertions in carrying out the arrangements.
Mr. Cawley, agent to the estate, also received a cordial vote of thanks for his kindness in allowing the party to visit and inspect the grounds, and the Secretary was requested to send him a letter conveying the thanks so cordially given.

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has intimated his intention to accept the hon. colonelcy of the Norfolk Artillery Militia Regiment, in the room of the late Lord Hastings.

FREEMASONRY & ISRAELITISM.

BY BRO. WILLIAM CARPENTER, P.M. & P.Z. 177.

XIV.

I was precluded from noticing some details in the prophecies touching the extent of the possessions promised to Israel, as referred to in my last paper, by the length to which what I had necessarily to deal with extended. I now ask attention to some of these details.

In the blessing which Moses pronounced on Joseph (Deut. xxxiii. 14)—for its fullness and comprehensiveness the most remarkable of all the blessings pronounced upon the tribes—we find this unusual phrase: "Blessed of the Lord be his land . . . for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun and for the precious things put forth by the moon" (Hebrew, moons). Many of the commentators have passed this over without remark, while others have dealt with it in a very perfunctory way. The Targums of both Onkelos and Jerusalem interpret it, the former, of the moon bringing forth sweet fruits at the beginning of every month; the latter, of the bringing forth of fruit in every new moon—which is the same thing. These old Hebrew commentators are supposed to have fixed the meaning of the words "the precious things put forth by the moons;" i.e., the precious things (fruits) which the moon thrusts forth (as it is in the margin of our Bibles) every month; for in the night the fruits, say they, are plumped by the moon's cool and fattening moisture, which is digested by the sun in the day. But, then, how could this be said of every month, if, as is generally understood, it refers to the richness of Joseph's lot in the land of Canaan? The land was, beyond all doubt, the most fruitful in the whole world. Its diversified surface of mountain and valley, its many streams, and its varied climate combining to make it productive of almost every fruit that grows; and Ephraim and Manasseh occupying lands on both sides of the Jordan, had advantages as to the produce of the country which none of the other tribes possessed. But they had not the fruits of the earth in every recurring month, though they probably had for the greater number of months. But if the blessing had reference, as I believe it had, to the future of the tribes—that is, the distant future pointed to in so many of the prophecies—when these tribes shall have possessions throughout the length and breadth of the earth, as their descendants, the Anglo-Saxons, may be said to have already—then it may be literally said, they possess the precious things put forth by the moon in its monthly course, for they have, without exception, habitations in every latitude of the fruit-yielding zones. And that it does thus refer to their widely-extended habitations—habitations far beyond the boundaries of Canaan—is, I think, clear from what follows: "Blessed of the Lord be his land . . . for the choice things of the ancient mountains and for the precious things of the lasting hills, and for the precious things of the earth and fullness thereof . . . They are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and they are the thousands of Manasseh" (ver. 15, 16). Now, it is only of the Anglo-Saxon people, Israel's descendants, that any such thing can be said. No other peoples or nations in the wide world have settlements or habitations in the earth and fullness thereof which afford them a harvest of fruit and other precious productions in every month of the year. They, and they only, inherit the blessing pronounced upon Joseph and his descendants and those who adhere to him.

The Anglo-Saxons are known as pre-eminently a colonising people. They are pre-eminent in many things, but in colonising they stand foremost of all the nations of the earth. Phœnicia and Greece, both maritime States, possessing only scant territories, had recourse to emigration, as their population increased; and this was sometimes forced by civil contentions and foreign conquests, by which the losing party were either driven away, or preferred seeking a new country to remaining at home. Commercial enterprise, too, led to both maritime discovery and colonisation. Such seem to have been the causes which led to the founding of the Phœnician colonies, which, at an early date, were planted along the Mediterranean coasts. Tyre was a colony of Sidon, according to the Old Testament, which calls it "the daughter of Sidon." Leptus Magni, Hippo Hedrimantum, Utica, Tunis, and Carthage were all colonies of Phœnicia; as were also Gades (Cadiz), the Balearic Islands, Sardinia, and Sicily. In the islands of the Ægean Sea, the Greek colonies were numerous, and a few of them became considerable states, the old inhabitants being reduced to the condition of serfs, or bondsmen. The Roman colonies were also numerous, but they were like so many garrisons, or outposts, of Rome. They were part of the Roman State, and they secured her conquests, and maintained the subject people in obedience. Indeed, the early colonies of Rome had a two-fold political object: to secure the conquests of the Empire, and to satisfy the claims of her poorer classes, by a division of lands among them. The Goths—who, as the "Northern tribes," or the "Goths"—overthrew the Western Empire, did not found colonies; they overran and conquered whole provinces, establishing new states and kingdoms. But their descendants, the Anglo-Saxons, have colonised, not as conquerors, seizing provinces or countries by force of arms, but by discovery and commercial enterprise, and, in some cases, by sending their convicts to remote parts, only very partially peopled, and that by uncivilised tribes. The greater part of the colonies which they have founded have been commercial colonies, developing the means of providing for multitudes of those of their own people who were too much straightened at home. The vast increase and density of the population have induced philanthropists and commercial men (many of them uniting the love of commerce with philanthropy, and being thus, so to speak, animated by double motives) to put forth efforts to secure comfort and prosperity for masses of the industrial classes in distant lands greater than they could find at home, where they were "cabin'd, cribbed, confined." In the colonies of North-America, Australia, &c., they have mightily increased in numbers and progressed in wealth, and have become prosperous communities. Can any one review the colonial growth of Great Britain, and not think of the words of the prophet to the house of Israel, whose descendants we are: "The children which thou shalt have after thou hast lost the other shall say again in thy ears, The place is too straight for me; give place for me that I may dwell. Then shalt thou say in thine heart, Who hath begotten me them, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate, a captive, and removing to and fro? And who hath brought up these? Behold, I was left alone; these, where had they been?" (Isa. xlix. 20, 21.) The Anglo-Saxons, too, unlike the Phœnicians, the Greeks, the Romans, and other peoples, ancient and modern, have inherited "the desolate places" (Isa. xlix. 8); and the mountains have been made the way for them, and the highways have been exalted (ver. 11). The desolate one was to bring forth so many children that she was to "enlarge the place of her tent, and stretch forth the curtains of her habitations." She was to "spare not," but to "lengthen the cords and strengthen the stakes" of her tent; "for thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the nations, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited" (Isa. liv. 1-3). Accordingly, Israel was to be sown in the earth (Hos. ii. 23); And "They of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man; they shall increase as they have increased; and I will sow them among the people, and they shall remember me in far countries" (Zech. x. 8, 9). Now, look abroad, and find, if you can, any people but the Anglo-Saxons who have thus inherited the "waste" or "desolate" places—places either wholly without inhabitants, or inhabited by only a few wandering savages, who rendered desolation more desolate. The American colonies, the Australian colonies, and the South African colonies were all "desolate places," which have, being peopled by the Anglo-Saxons, become prosperous colonies.

There is a passage in the Book of Deuteronomy (xxxii. 8, 9) which has perplexed commentators. Its precise meaning is, indeed, by no means obvious: "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance; when He separated the sons of Adam, He set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. For the Lord's portion is His people, Jacob is the lot [margin, word] of his inheritance." Poole, as partially adopted by Bishop Patrick, interprets the passage thus: "When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, He had then the children of Israel in His mind, before they were a nation; and He made such a distribution to other people (particularly to the seven nations of Canaan) within such bounds and limits as that there might be sufficient room for so numerous a people as the Israelites, when they came to take possession of that country." Now, if we omit the reference to the land of Canaan, for which reference there seems to be no good reason, we get, I think, something like the genuine sense of the passage. The prescience here ascribed to the Lord, by Moses, is an idea that would seem impossible to enter into the mind of one who had not been enlightened by a Divine revelation. We look in vain for anything like it in all the systems (if systems they may be called) of ancient Oriental Theosophy. But in the sacred writing it is always recognised as one of the incommunicable attributes of the Divine Being. Wonderful, indeed, it is—so wonderful that any one contemplating it must feel with the psalmist that it is incomprehensible, and exclaim, "Such knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain unto it." What is here ascribed to the Almighty is, that He foresaw the future progress and history of nations; how some would grow into mighty peoples, and then cease to be—how, and in what way, the earth would become subjected to the dominion of mankind, located in different regions, and under totally dissimilar circumstances; and foreseeing all this, that He so determined the boundaries of their habitations as to make them subservient to His great design of rendering Israel the encompasser of the earth. Bishop Horsley translates thus: "When the Most High assigned the heathen their inheritance, when He separated the sons of Adam, He set the bounds of His own people, according to the number of the sons of Israel, for the portion of Jehovah is Jacob, the peoples are the measured lot of his [Israel's] inheritance." Thus, without altering a tittle in the Hebrew text, except in making a transposition of two words, he brings out the sense above given—his inheritance, that is, Jacob's; according to the constant strain of prophecy, that, ultimately, Jacob is to inherit all the nations. "Thus," he says, "the passage describes the call of the Gentiles, and their incorporation with Israel, not without an implied allusion to the exaltation of the natural Israel, above all the nations of the earth, in the last ages." But what is the "lot" or cord? Chebel signifies a cord, or rope, by which things are bound; and with which, also, they are measured, and the boundaries determined. In Zechariah ii. 1, 2, we read of a man with a measuring line in his hand, with which to determine the length and width of Jerusalem; and the psalmist says (2 Sam. viii. 2), "He smote Moab, and measured them with a line, casting them down to the ground: even with two lines measured he to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive; and so the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts;" that is, he divided the country of the Moabites into several parts, that he might better know what towns it was proper to demolish and what to preserve. In this sense, the descendants of Jacob were to be the measuring line—they who encompassed the inheritance their posterity were to possess. Thus, Jeremiah says (x. 16), "The portion of Jacob is not like them [the Gentiles], for he is the former of all things; and Israel is the rod [cord] of his inheritance;" and so the prophet prays in his distress, in the midst of the desolation of his people: "Remember thy congregation which thou has purchased of old, the rod of thine inheritance which thou hast redeemed" (li. 19). In accordance with the interpretation of the declaration of Moses which I have adopted, the Lord says (Ps. lxxiv. 2), "I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob, thy father, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." Who, indeed, could make such a promise but "He who worketh all things according to the counsel of His own will?" "Who doeth as He will in the army of Heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth?" Who could even conceive such a thing, or into whose mind would it enter to disclose it?

Look, again, upon a map of the world, and see how the descendants of Jacob, as preserved in the ten tribes (called by various names in history, the first known after their captivity being that of Getæ, or the bruised ones, and now the best known, that of Anglo-Saxons) by the multiplicity of their possessions, and in their introduction into countries and lands which they do not absolutely possess, but the people of which they influence, if they do not control, with their presence, have fulfilled the great law-giver's words, wonderful and improbable as the declaration seemed to be. They have measured, or encompassed, if they have not occupied, nearly the whole earth, and are everywhere accomplishing, more or less, the beneficent purposes of the God of Jacob. There is no prodigy, wonderful as it is, in a woman encompassing a man, but Jeremiah speaks of it as a prodigy—a new thing in the earth (xxxii. 22). The Hebrew word Gebër: a man, as distinguished from a woman, is sometimes used to denote the whole of mankind. Is it true that Queen Victoria, alone, of all the sovereigns of the earth, as the head of the Anglo-Saxon race, has a dominion on which the sun never sets? Once more look upon the map, and beginning with The (British) Islands, cast your eyes northward to Heligoland, then return southward, and you have the Channel Islands, Gibraltar, Malta, Gambia, Sierra Leone, the Gold Coast, Lagos, St. Helena, the Cape of Good Hope, Natal, Mauritius, the Straits Settlements, India, Ceylon, Labuan, Sarawak, Hong-Kong, Western Australia, South Australia, Victoria, Queensland, Tasmania, and New Zealand, thus completing the circle of the eastern hemisphere. Then take the western hemisphere, and beginning with Hudson's Territory, proceed to Canada, Newfoundland, St. John's, Prince Edward's Island, New Brunswick, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, the Bermudas, the West India Island, the Bahamas, Turk's Island, Jamaica, Antigua, St. Christopher, Nevis, St. Lucia, Barbadoes, St. Vincent, Grenada, Tobago, Trinidad, British Honduras, British Guiana, the Falklands, and British Columbia, which completes the second circle. What a dominion! What a realisation of ancient prophecy! "Let them know that God ruleth in Jacob unto the ends of the earth" (Ps. lxx. 13). "These shall lift up their voice, they shall sing; the waters shall resound with the exaltation of the Lord. Therefore in the distant coasts, glorify ye the Lord; in the distant coasts of the sea, the name of the Lord, the God of Israel. From the uttermost parts of the land, we have heard songs. Glory to the righteous" (Isaiah xxiv. 14-16).

MURDEROUS FOLLY.—Yesterday morning Mr. Walter Shrimpton, for many years stationmaster at Exmouth, Devonshire, died from the effects of a pistol-shot. The facts are as follows:—On Wednesday evening Mr. Shrimpton had been out for a stroll with his friends, Mr. J. T. Bickford, chymist; Mr. Nankivell, draper; and Mr. George Maynard, watchmaker. As they were returning home together, shortly before 12 o'clock, they went with Mr. Maynard into his shop, and stayed there while he took his watches and jewellery out of his window, and placed the articles, according to custom, in a box, preparatory to removing them to his bedroom for the night. After the valuables were all placed in the box Mr. Shrimpton remarked jocularly, "Let's garotte him, and take away his watches." Mr. Maynard, entering into the joke, went into a room adjoining the shop, and returned with a breech-loading revolver in his hand, and, pointing the pistol at Mr. Shrimpton, said, "This is the thing that settles garotters;" Mr. Bickford exclaimed, "Don't point it, it may be loaded;" and Mr. Maynard, replied "Oh, it is not loaded;" but the words had no sooner escaped from his lips than the pistol went off, and Mr. Shrimpton ejaculated, "Oh George, you've shot me!" It was quickly ascertained that a ball from the pistol had entered Mr. Shrimpton's body, near the right shoulder. The services of two surgeons were immediately procured, and the wounded man was conveyed to his residence adjoining the railway station. The ball, it was found, had traversed the lungs, and the sufferer had to be informed that there was little or no hope of his recovery. The doctors remained with their patient until his death, which occurred at 2 o'clock yesterday morning. Deceased was 25 years of age, a married man, and his wife happens to be absent on a visit to some friends at a distance. He was Master of the Masonic Lodge at Exmouth, and greatly esteemed on account of his genial and obliging disposition. The police constable who took possession of the revolver—a six-chamber one—yesterday morning, found that four other of the chambers were loaded. An inquest has been held on the body, and the Coroner's jury have returned a verdict of "Homicide by misadventure."—Times, August 18.

MASONIC HISTORIANS.—No. 3.

BY BRO. W. JAMES HUGHAN,
P.M. 131, Prov. Grand Secretary, Cornwall, &c.

BRO. SAMUEL BESWICK.

Bro. Beswick has endeavoured to write the Masonic history of Bro. Emanuel Swedenborg with perfect independence, freedom of opinion, originality of conception, and an entire avoidance of the beaten paths, and, I believe, in many respects, he has succeeded. In the first place, few have ever treated the career of Swedenborg as it deserved, and fewer still have succeeded in presenting anything like a sketch of the Masonic life of this great man. The work is entitled, "Swedenborg Rite, and the Great Masonic Leaders of the Eighteenth Century" (New York: Masonic Publishing Company,* 1870).

In the preface it is declared to be "The only book which treats of the Swedenborg Rite, the Masonic career of Swedenborg and his followers, and the relation which the symbolic system of Swedenborgianism has held with Freemasonry." Part 1 is entitled "Swedenborg's Initiation at Lund, 1706." Emanuel Swedenborg was born at Stockholm in January, 1688. When about eighteen years of age (thus in the year 1706), and whilst on a visit to his home at Brunsbo, West Gothland, he went to see the university at Lund. Of this period Bro. Beswick remarks: "Here he was initiated for the first time into the mysteries of Freemasonry, taking the chapter degrees of the Scottish Rite, which formed a part of the series. On his return, he joined or affiliated with the Stockholm Chapter, Lund, where he took his degrees in the capital of Sconen, the extreme southern province of Sweden. . . . If it be objected that Swedenborg was then only eighteen years of age, in 1706, and that he must have falsified his age in order to gain admission, we reply that it was customary to initiate in the Continental chapters and lodges at an age so low as seventeen." To make sure of the meaning of the writer, we again quote from his work: "Swedenborg's initiation was in the year 1706, and the order is that known as the Scottish Rite," p. 18. We challenge these statements, because we believe them to be unequivocally wrong. No evidence is given to justify such a statement, and the whole chapter is based upon hearsay and most improbable stories.

The "Scottish Rite" never existed so early as 1706, or even 1720, and it is most absurd in the present era of Freemasonry, to attempt to foist upon the Fraternity such a ridiculous and unfounded series of assumptions. We declare emphatically that no reference to the "Scottish Rite" (so-called, or the "Hautes Grades") can be pointed out in any record, minute, or other document, either for 1706, or for several years later; that no chapters for Masonic purposes were ever held before the "Revival of 1716," as meetings superior to, or beyond, the regular assemblies of lodges; and, finally, that, were Emanuel Swedenborg initiated in 1706, it must have been in an ordinary Masonic lodge of a similar character to those we know of through the records of that period. We give credit to Bro. Beswick for the ingenuity he has shown in weaving chapter No. 1 out of nothing, but beyond that we cannot say he has afforded the reader any evidence of his ability. Even the assertion made by Mr. Wedemar, that he saw Swedenborg's name in Lodge No. 6, London, and the date was 1706, is explained to mean Lund, or Lunden, as Bro. Beswick has discovered that Swedenborg was not in London until 1710!

We are also told that all the records of these old lodges at London were destroyed at the beginning of last century." This certainly is information for English Masons!!!

The next chapter is, "From Royal University to Royal College of Mines, 1709-1716." Bro. Beswick states most positively that during this period "young Emanuel renewed his acquaintance with the Masonic Fraternity, which had begun at Lund, and having plenty of leisure time he visited all the lodges, chapters, and commanderies." It is doubtful whether lodges existed at this time in Lund, but for certain there were neither chapters nor commanderies; and, as usual, these assertions are dispelled by the logic of facts, and are proved to rest simply on the ipse dixit of the author. If the work had rested its claims on attention as a sketch of the life of a great man, it would have been a success; but, as a Masonic work, it is a failure. In a letter dated Nov. 21st, 1715, and penned at Stockholm, we fail to see any mention of Freemasonry whatever; but even in this document Bro. Beswick sees a reference to the Craft, as Bro. Swedenborg remarks, "I might easily have arrived yesterday had it not been for the darkness, and uncertainty of finding quarters with some one in a blue dress." This latter allusion is, we are told, an acknowledgment that Swedenborg meant "the dress belonging to the Order of Sublime and Ineffable Masonry, which he had joined." This was in 1715, and "Ineffable Masonry" was unknown until at least forty years later in the same century! But enough of this. We will search still further for facts.

The 3rd chapter, on "Travels—Visits to Lodges—1716-1740" commences by the writer declaring: "If we look at York Freemasonry about 1716, we shall find it to consist of three degrees only, and these chiefly operative. In England, Sweden, Holland, and France, we search in vain for evidence of a lodge of pure speculative Masonry." This is not correct; for we have records of lodges of that period which were wholly speculative, not only at York, but also in Scotland, and then not even simply of A.D. 1716, but still earlier. Three degrees are not mentioned at York until much later.

After this erroneous view, we are quite prepared to read: "Knowing that Swedenborg was intimate with Charles XII., the brethren solicited him to urge upon their warlike monarch the propriety of initiating a similar revival of Freemasonry in Sweden (as in London, 1717), especially Sublime and Ineffable Masonry and the High Templar degrees, as they would keep up the warlike spirit of the people. . . . He accepted the task. . . . His mission was successful, and lodges and encampments were at once established under the sanction of royal authority." Again we have to complain of a want of evidence, and again we object to the assertions.

After this period, however, Bro. Beswick commences in a different spirit, and presents a mass of information, which must have cost him much time and trouble to obtain. The "Swedenborgian Rite" is explained, and it is stated that "The Rite was more systematically worked in Berlin than elsewhere, for the Prussian monarch preferred it to all others. For several years before Swedenborg's death King Frederick had become dissatisfied with every form of Freemasonry but the Swedenborgian, which included the three blue degrees of the York Rite. . . .

It is equally a notorious historic fact, that King Frederick from 1772-1786, or up to the day of his death, was a declared enemy of the higher degrees, whilst he did everything to encourage the three symbolic degrees. . . . On the other hand, he had a lodge working the Swedenborgian Rite, under his own auspices, up to the day of his death" (page 72). Bro. Beswick remarks of the Swedenborgian Rite, that it "excludes all cabalistic rites and reveries, and recommends the pure Eclectic Symbolic Masonry of the York degrees," and gives a most interesting sketch of its early history.

It is a curious fact that in none of the letters written by Swedenborg and printed in this work are there to be found any reference to Freemasonry. Bro. Beswick explains this by stating every care was taken to avoid any publicity with regard to the Craft, and nothing was recorded and preserved by Swedenborg that would exhibit his connection with the Craft. This is likely to be true, and plainly proves to our mind the reasons why we should be sceptical of any account of this noted man's Masonic career, seeing that he took such pains to prevent any particulars being known. It would be interesting to know how Bro. Beswick has obtained information on the subject, seeing "every care was taken to prevent publicity."

The Order of Charles XIII. of Sweden, confined to Masons, and into which H.R.H. the Prince of Wales was recently received, is declared to have been supported and continued by members whose qualifications were "only a modification of the qualifications of a candidate for the Swedenborgian Rite." The "Order of Illuminati" is carefully considered in the 13th and following chapters, as also the innovations of Count Zinnendorf.

The impostor, Count Cagliostro, has his character portrayed to perfection in chapter 17th, and the system which he invented in 1779 is reviewed in a fair spirit and just manner. The "impious fabrications" of this noted individual are briefly noticed, and it seems he attempted to deceive the London followers of Emanuel Swedenborg, but though at first he partially succeeded, the "cloven foot" soon showed itself, and he was cast off.

We are informed that the "Swedenborg Rite" was introduced into the United States in 1859. Applications for admission have come from every quarter of the American continent. It consists of six degrees, viz: "1, Entered Apprentice; 2, Fellow Craft; 3, Master Mason; 4, Enlightened Freemason, or Green Brother; 5, Sublime Freemason, or Blue Brother; 6, Perfect Freemason, or Red Brother;" so that instead of the "Red, White and Blue," the fashion now is Green, Blue, and Red. The Order is thrown open to all Masons of merit, without regard to their religious belief.

The extensive sketch of the Rite we cannot now allude to. It is certainly well arranged, and the last part of the book is the most valuable. We should think it the best work on the subject, and excepting the Masonic part, the work is interesting as a novel, and certainly in many respects an important addition to Swedenborgian literature. The correspondence relative to Swedenborg, as also his letters, are valuable to those who accept his teachings, but Masonically, we fail to see their importance. In the ritual of this rite "Phremason" is preferred to Freemason, because our ancient brethren were called so from two words, Phre or Pi-re, "The Light, and Mason to search." This statement is offered as a proof of the excellency of the Order, and the superiority of its definitions. We might have thought more of the ritual if nothing had been said, but this exhibits the unreasonableness of the ceremonies so much that we shall be surprised if the Rite ever receives much support anywhere.

PROV. GRAND LODGE of HAMPSHIRE and the ISLE OF WIGHT.

The annual Grand Lodge of this province was held at the Star Assembly Room, Gosport, on Thursday, 17th inst., at high noon, under the presidency of Bro. W. W. B. Beach, M.P., Prov. G.M., Bro. Naish officiating as D.P.G.M., Bro. H. M. Emanuel as S.G.W., and Bro. J. Wallingford, as J.G.W. There was a large attendance of the brethren, including Bros. J. R. Stebbing, P.G.D. England; Hon. B. Mildred, D.P.G.M. South Australia; Capt. Hooper, P.P.G.W.; Rev. C. R. Pettat, P.G. Chaplain; M. E. Frost, P.G. Treas.; Hickman and Le Feuvre, P.G. Secs.; W. H. Ford, P.P.G.W.; F. G. Bradbear, P.G. Reg.; J. H. Smith, P.G.D.; Binckes, Sec. R.M.I.B.; Aslatt, Stapleford, Wells, and Woollons, P.P.G.D.'s; A. Cudlipp, P.G. Dir. of Cir.; E. G. Holbrook, Asst. Dir. of Cers.; J. P. Hine, P.G. Sword Bearer; and several other officers of Prov. Grand Lodge, besides the W.M.'s and representatives of the various lodges in the province.

The provincial business having been transacted, The R.W. Prov. Grand Master then said that he had a painful communication to make to the Grand Lodge. He regretted to say that a few days since he received a letter from the Deputy Prov. Grand Master, Bro. C. E. Deacon, informing him that though his health was now better than it had been, yet he felt that age and infirmities prevented him from satisfactorily discharging the duties appertaining to his office, and therefore he wished to resign his position. He could assure the Grand Lodge that, as Prov. G.M., he received this communication with pain, and when they reflected upon the lengthened period during which Bro. Deacon had exerted himself in behalf of Freemasonry in this province, he thought all the brethren would receive his resignation with regret. In that acceptance they would ill discharge their duty did they not return their most hearty thanks to Bro. Deacon for those services, and express their regret at the decision which he had felt himself bound to make. (Hear, hear.) For more than a quarter of a century Bro. Deacon had occupied this post. During the greater part of the time that their late lamented Brother Sir Lucius Curtis occupied the position he (the Prov. G.M.) had now the honour of filling, Bro. Deacon was his faithful Deputy, and when he kindly consented to continue that office upon his (the speaker's) being placed in it, he could not say how much he felt indebted to him. All present knew how important and onerous were the duties attendant upon presiding over so large a province as this, and Bro. Deacon had been so long accustomed to those duties as to be perfectly conversant with every part of them. In tendering to Bro. Deacon his own personal, cordial, and warmest thanks, he could not do otherwise than wish him much happiness in his retreat from the more active duties of life, and he was quite certain he should express the feelings of the Prov. Grand Lodge collectively, as he did of every brother present individually, when he said that entertaining a lively sense of many of Bro. Deacon's qualities they hoped he would long live to enjoy the respect and affection of those who knew him best, and they hoped life and health would be extended to him yet for a prolonged period. (Hear, hear.) He could assure Bro. Deacon that he would carry with him into his retirement the cordial love and affection with which he was regarded in this province through so many active years as he was associated with it. (Hear, hear.) Let them hope that although relinquishing those duties Bro. Deacon would not refrain, when his health permitted, from showing a continued interest in Masonry. For his own part he could not but believe that so long as he lived the cause for which he had done so much must be dear to him, and that he would assist the brethren by his advice, and grace their gatherings with his presence whenever the state of his health should justify it. Entertaining these feelings, he moved that a vote of thanks be presented to Bro. Deacon for his past services, and that there be entered on the minutes this Prov. Grand Lodge's recognition of his labours on its behalf during so many years, and conveyed to him by the Prov. Grand Secretaries the assurance of the brethren that he would receive in his retirement their heartiest good wishes. (Loud applause.)

Bro. Miller, the W.M. of the Gosport Lodge, in seconding the resolution, felt no observations had need be added to the felicitous remarks of the G.M. in order to ensure the most cordial unani-mity in respect to his proposal. The influence of Bro. Deacon's example had permeated the province, which was at the present time enjoying some of its best effects.

The resolution was then put and carried unanimously, whereupon

The R.W. Prov. Grand Master said he considered himself exceedingly fortunate in that, having been deprived of most valuable services, there was amongst the brethren one whose ability, zeal, and experience in Freemasonry pointed him out as a most fitting successor. He was proud to say that Bro. J. R. Stebbing had accepted the office. (Loud cheers.) The applause with which Bro. Stebbing's name was greeted signified the accord—the unanimous accord—with which that appointment would be received throughout the province. There was no need to dilate upon Bro. Stebbing's Masonic abilities and labours, even would time allow. He would, therefore, simply say that during a long series of years Bro. Stebbing had exerted himself fat and wide in the interests of Masonry, and was not only most active in its behalf in this province, but he was equally well known in the Grand Lodge of England, on the Board of General Purposes, and in connection with the different Masonic charities, in all which positions he had held important posts. Indeed, his exertions were so well known that it was only to mention his name to ensure its being received with hearty respect in any part of England, and he felt himself fortunate at having such a Deputy. (Cheers.)

Bro. Stebbing, having been duly invested and passed through the customary formalities, on rising to return thanks for the hearty reception which had been given him, said he would not attempt to thank the brethren, for his heart was at that moment too full. He assured them that nothing would have induced him to accept this great distinction but his belief, from enquiries he had made, that it would be received with that unanimity with which the occasion had been so specially marked. The only matter for regret was the loss of the services of the R.W. Brother whose resignation had now been made. He trusted that some more substantial recognition than they had made that day would forth to Bro. Deacon as the acknowledgment by this province of the long and able services he had rendered to it, and of the efficient manner in which he discharged its duties when his official chief was absent in a distant land in the service of his Queen and country. He was sure they wished him a long and a happy life amongst them, and above all, that he would not miss the felicitous remarks made concerning him by the R.W. Prov. Grand Master, and endorsed by every brother present. (Loud cheers.)

The R.W.P.G.M. then appointed and invested his officers for the ensuing year as follows:—

THE BANQUET

took place in the Town Hall, Gosport, at which between ninety and a hundred of the brethren were present. The R.W.P.G.M. presided, supported by the R.W.P.G.M. of South Australia (the Hon. Bro. Mildred); the R.W.D.P.G.M. (Bro. J. R. Stebbing); the P.G.T. (Br. Frost); the P.G. Secs. (Brs. W. Hickman and J. E. Le Feuvre), &c. The banquet was served by Mr. Chick, of the Indian Arms Hotel.

The R.W.P.G.M., at the conclusion of the repast, said the first toast he had to propose was one which, as Englishmen, they would be proud to drink in one capacity, and as Masons in another. They showed that loyalty which was due to the Queen as the sovereign of the country, and joined with her the Craft, because they believed she ranked under her sway none more loyal than the Masons of the country. (Hear, hear.) He asked them to drink "The Queen and the Craft." (Cheers.)

The R.W.P.G.M. next gave "The M.W.G.M. of England, the Marquis of Ripon." He had been engaged recently in a most nice and intricate negotiation with America, and the manner in which he had discharged that duty should form a fresh claim to the regard of Masons as well as of the country, and they would hope that the work which he had so well conducted would prove a bond that would cement England and America more closely than they had ever yet been united together. (Cheers.)

The R.W.P.G.M. said the next toast he had to give was "The Deputy Grand Master and the Officers of the Grand Lodge." In Lord Carnarvon they had a Deputy Grand Master who was exceedingly popular, and belonging, as he did, to their own province, he was sure the toast would enjoy a most hearty and warm reception. (Hear, hear.) The manner in which he had discharged the duties of Deputy Grand Master entitled him to the regard of all Freemasons. In the absence of the Grand Master he had been called on to perform most important duties, and he had performed them most ably. He also presided over a very important province—Somersetshire—and notwithstanding this he came among them sometimes and gave them the benefit of his presence. He coupled with the toast the name of Bro. Stebbing. (Cheers.)

R.W.D.P.G.M. Stebbing, in the name of the Grand Officers of England, thanked the company very sincerely. He believed that no body of men in this country were more entitled to the thanks of the community over which they presided. The Earl of Carnarvon had done much for Freemasonry, and he hoped ere long, with that change which ought occasionally to take place in their presiding geniuses, he would hold the position of Grand Master. (Cheers.)

Bro. Hickman, A.G.D.C. of England, also briefly responded.

The R.W.P.G.M. of South Australia (the Hon. Bro. Mildred) said it afforded him infinite pleasure to propose a toast which he was certain would meet with universal acceptance. They all knew sufficiently of Freemasonry to admire the principles upon which it was constituted, the order and regularity which prevailed it, and the good government which was necessary to carry it out. The hon. brother whose health he was about to propose had the confidence and esteem not only of the Masons of the province, but of all those to whom he was known in his legislative capacity. After speaking in eulogistic terms of the manner in which the P.G.M. carried out his duties, he said it would afford him pleasure when he returned to his home in Australia, to bear witness to the pleasure he had experienced in a Masonic lodge in Hampshire. (Cheers.) He then gave the health of the R.W.P.G.M., Bro. Beach. (Loud cheers.)

The R.W. Prov. G.M., in responding, assured the previous speaker that the praise he gave, although it might be unmerited, he was exceedingly grateful for. It would be very unsatisfactory indeed to meet them did he not think that some progress had been made during the past year. But he thought he might say that great advances had been made during the last twelve months. (Hear, hear.) In the first place, he had had the pleasure of attending the constitution of a new lodge at Aldershot, which had sprung into existence during the last year. Although it might appear, at first view, rather extraordinary that a new lodge should be needed there, when the peculiar circumstances were taken into consideration they would see that it was. From all that he had seen, he believed the new lodge had attained considerable prosperity, and so far from detracting from the Panmure lodge, the brethren entertained the most fraternal regard for it, and worked together in harmony. He had also the pleasure of attending the centenary of the Hengist Lodge at Bournemouth. That was a most interesting ceremony, and when they reflected on such a fact they had reason to congratulate themselves on the efficiency their lodges were attaining, because when a lodge had an old character to sustain it must make them the more particular to act up to the manners and customs of their ancestors, more zealous to avoid detracting from the example they had shown, and more anxious to deserve the praises of others. Other lodges were of great antiquity, and in the course of another year another lodge of great repute (the Royal Gloucester, Southampton) would attain to that venerable period of existence. No doubt, in a large province like this it was impossible but that slight irregularities might occur from time to time. In some cases it was not always easy to understand the strict letter of the law, so as to apply it rigidly in every case. There appeared to be sometimes an idea that a certain relaxation was allowed for the purpose of convenience. But he would recommend to the brethren of the different lodges the Book of Constitutions as their guide, and if they only studied that most attentively he did not think they would have any reason to enter into anything which might admit of the slightest symptom of irregularity. (Hear, hear.) He could only say that it would be his effort, as it was his pleasure, to attend all the lodges he could within his province. He would try his best to see how far Freemasonry was extending. He had reason to congratulate himself on the able Masons who served under him. They had, indeed, aided him with their counsel, and given him every assistance in their power, and it was by the aid of able and experienced Masons at the head of the province that he was able to discharge his duties in a satisfactory manner. He believed that he had lost the assistance of one of the most able and experienced in Brother Deacon. (Hear, hear.) He regretted the loss of his services, but at the same time they had reason to congratulate themselves that such a very able, experienced, and loved Mason as Bro. Stebbing had taken his place. (Cheers.) He trusted that during the next year Freemasonry might succeed even more than it had hitherto done. He had reason to congratulate himself upon the very liberal manner in which the brethren had come forward throughout the province to support the Masonic charities. He could not too strongly exhort the brethren, as far as the limits of their circumstances allowed, to come forward and support the Masonic charities to the best of their ability. No more noble cause could they have in hand; to no more noble cause could they contribute. (Cheers.) He took the opportunity of tendering his thanks especially to the W.M. (Bro. Miller) and the brethren of the Gosport lodge for the kind reception and the hospitality they had extended to them on this occasion. (Cheers.)

The R.W.P.G.M. next gave, in truly Masonic sentiments, "The Health of the R.W.P.G.M. of South Australia" (Bro. Mildred), who in reply to the toast, which was drunk with much cordiality, said he must take, in all probability, a last farewell. Seventeen thousand miles would separate them, but they might be assured that the kindly feeling he had witnessed that day would be ever remembered by him. He was made a Mason in 1820, and had passed his seventy-seventh year—(cheers)—so that he could not expect to live much longer. By the last day of December the Australian cable was expected to be at work, and he trusted to have the pleasure of sending a vote of thanks from his lodge to the Worshipful Master and brethren of this lodge for the kindness he had received. (Cheers.)

The R.W.P.G.M., in proposing "The D.P.G.M. of Hampshire," said he thought that any Provincial Grand Master throughout the kingdom would be extremely fortunate if he could obtain the assistance of such an able and experienced Mason as Bro. Stebbing. (Hear, hear.) Not only did he bring to bear ability, experience, and reputation, but that knowledge of the brethren and that esteem which he had secured from them, and which would enable him to discharge any duty in the most able and efficient manner. He congratulated himself most heartily on having obtained his services. From the friendship that had existed between them for many years, he knew full well what a valuable brother he had to depend upon, and he tendered him his hearty and sincere thanks for having accepted the office. (Cheers.)

The P.G.M. having retired in order to save the train, the D.P.G.M. took his seat and responded, expressing in warm terms the gratification he felt at the manner in which his appointment had been received. He dwelt upon the duty of brethren not to seek office unduly, and to show that he had practised what he preached, disclosed a secret which he had hitherto kept—that in 1843 the late P.G.M. (Sir Lucius Curtis), being about to leave England, appointed him D.G.M. Having read the appointment, he said he felt that a brother of greater position ought to hold the office, and he never registered the appointment. After dwelling, in eloquent terms, upon the pleasures derived from Freemasonry, and the world-wide dissemination of its principles, he congratulated the Gosport Lodge upon its great prosperity, after having survived great difficulties, and upon the hospitality shown that day. (Cheers.)

The D.P.G.M. then gave "The P.G. Officers," to which Bro. Eve, P.G.S.W., responded.

Bro. Colonel Owen proposed "The Past P.G. Officers," and Bros. Wallingford (P.P.G.J.W.), Frost (P.G.T.), and Le Feuvre (P.G.S.) severally responded.

The D.P.G.M. next gave "The Gosport Lodge," to which Bro. Miller, the W.M., responded in an able speech.

Other toasts of a complimentary character followed, and the pleasure of the company was increased by the vocal efforts of some of the brethren. During the banquet and between the toasts the splendid well-trained band of the Royal Marine Light Infantry was stationed in the balcony, and under the direction of Herr Kreyer, discoursed some excellent music, to the great delight of all present.

"MORE than a year ago one of my children was attacked with bronchitis, and, after a long illness, was given up by my physician as 'past cure.' I was then induced to try your Vegetable Pain Killer, and from the time I began the use of it the child rapidly got better, and is now strong and healthy.—JOHN WINSTANLEY, 10, Whittle-st., L'pool, Jan. 1869.—To P. D. & Son."

THE CRYPTIC RITE.

For some time past a growing desire has been manifested by the heads of Mark Masonry in England to bring the Mark Degree into connection with those degrees which are usually associated with it under other Masonic jurisdictions. In accordance with this desire, and acting under the expressed opinion of the Mark Grand Lodge, measures have been taken by the M.W. Mark Grand Master, the Rev. G. R. Portal, to introduce the allied degrees into England; and authority having been obtained from the New York Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters, Ill. Bro. Jackson H. Chase, 33°, together with Ill. Bros. Martin and Thompson, were commissioned to proceed to England, and confer the degrees. Upon the arrival of the delegates several meetings were held, and four councils of the Order founded. A Grand Council for England was then established, with Rev. Bro. Portal as M.P. Grand Master, and Bro. F. Binckes as G. Recorder. The councils already formed are "The Grand Master's," No. 1, over which the G.M. presides as T.I.M., having as his principal officers: Capt. N. G. Phillips, Lt. Gd. Com. 33°, and J. M. P. Montagu, Sec. Gen. 33°; No. 2 is the "Constantine" Council, of which Bro. R. Wentworth Little, Past R.P.G.M. New Brunswick, is the T.I.M.; No. 3, "Macdonald," Bro. S. Rosenthal, T.I.M.; and "Mark" Council, No. 4, under the sceptre of Bro. F. Binckes, G.R.

On Monday, the 21st inst., a final meeting was held at Freemasons' Tavern, under the presidency of Ill. Bro. Chase, who advanced Bros. Little, P.Z., J. Reid, P.Z., C. Hamerton, W.M. 1339, H. Massey, P.M., and E. Kimber to the degrees of M.E.M., R. and S. Masters, and S.E. Master. Bro. Little, who had been unable to attend previously, was then installed as T.I.M. of No. 2.

Amongst the brethren present were Ill. Bros. Capt. Phillips, 33°; R. Hamilton, M.D., 33°; Hyde Pullen, 33°; S. Rosenthal, 33°; F. Binckes, 30°; W. Stone, 30°; E. Baxter, Rev. D. Shaboe, F. Davison, T. Meggy, R. Spencer, and J. Stevens—most of whom acted as officers during the several ceremonies, which were magnificently rendered by Bro. Chase and his coadjutors.

A banquet followed the arduous labours of the evening, and the chair was taken by Bro. Binckes, T.I.M. No. 4, under whose auspices the meeting was held.

English Mark Masters can now obtain those interesting degrees, and be thus placed thoroughly en rapport with their brethren in Canada and the United States.

Reports of Masonic Meetings.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Bradon Lodge, No. 619.—The installation meeting of this prosperous lodge took place on Wednesday, the 15th inst., at the Greyhound Hotel, Dulwich. Bro. Saul Wells, W.M., opened the lodge at the appointed hour, assisted by Bros. H. Massey, P.M., as S.W. (who ably filled that all-important office during the ceremonies); Forge, as J.W.; and W. H. Green, S.D. The minutes of the previous meeting were then submitted to the consideration of the brethren, and were duly read and confirmed. By an unfortunate concatenation of circumstances not only were all the gentlemen who were candidates for initiation absent, but likewise the two brethren who were to have taken the second degree, and to complete the climax the W.M.-elect, Captain George Arthur Smith, J.W., was detained by important business many miles away; no business could be proceeded with. The brethren of the lodge and the visitors descended to the beautiful grounds of the hotel, where they had ample time to amuse and recreate themselves, as it was approaching six o'clock before an opportunity was afforded to resume business. The ballots, taken separately, for the three candidates for initiation proved unanimous in favour of their admission. Messrs. E. Wright, J. Collins, and W. Dyer having arrived, and the lodge resumed, they were properly prepared, separately introduced, and in due form received into the noble Order. The candidates for the second degree then put in an appearance shortly afterwards, followed by the W.M.-elect; but as the day was fast waning, the ceremony of the second degree was deferred until October, and the installation of the W.M. commenced at once. Bro. S. Wells having vacated the chair in favour of Bro. J. W. Avery, P.M., that brother, according to ancient custom, duly installed Bro. Captain G. A. Smith into the chair of W.M. The ceremony, as is usual with the Beadon Lodge, being performed by Bro. J. W. Avery in a manner to well sustain the high reputation enjoyed by the lodge for correct working and impressive rendering of all the ceremonies in general and the installation in particular. The officers for the ensuing year who were appointed are as follows: Bros. Chapman, S.W.; W. Seaman, J.W.; C. A. Potter, P.M., Treas. (reinvested); A. P. Leonard, P.M., Sec. (reinvested); W. H. Green, S.D.; Forge, J.D., Kingdon, I.G.; Leeuw, D.C.; and W. J. Laing, P.M., Tyler (reinvested). Some important business was brought before the lodge, and when finished, the lodge was closed. The usual superior banquet and dessert followed. Owing to the lateness of the hour, the usual toasts were rapidly given, the most pleasing one being "The Health of the Retiring W.M.," accompanied by the presentation of a very handsome P.M.'s jewel in gold. The W.M. pointedly alluded to the modest and retiring excellencies of Bro. S. Wells, I.P.M., who had endeared himself to them all by his many amiable qualities of heart and mind. Bro. Wells suitably responded. After a few hours most agreeably spent, the brethren separated. The visitors were: Bros. E. Coste, P.M. 9, Sec. 1314; H. Potter, P.M. 11; F. Walters, P.M. 73; H. T. T. Ross, 87; W. J. Jones, 145; F. Cubitt, P.M. 157, P.G.D. Middlesex; Minnis, 172; E. J. Dyre, 186; J. F. Duggett, 186; R. Davey, 1305; T. Knott, W.M. 1314; R. H. Williams, S.W. 1314; W. Manger, S.D. 1314; Wyatt, 1314; J. Green, &c.

Rose of Denmark Lodge, No. 975.—A meeting of this lodge was held at the White Hart Tavern, Barnes Terrace, Surrey, on Friday, the 18th inst. Brother Chas. Arthur Smith, W.M., presided, and the other officers present were: Bros. W. H. Barnard, S.W.; S. H. Stephens, J.W.; G. T. Noyce, P.M. and Treas.; R. W. Little, P.M. and Sec.; C. Butcher, J.D.; and T. Farrell, Wine Steward. During the course of the evening Mr. Hinton was initiated, Bro. Doerr passed, and Bro. Palmer raised, all these ceremonies being admirably performed by the W.M. who received the congratulations of a large body of visiting brethren. The resignation of Bro. Hayes having been announced, the lodge was closed, and a banquet succeeded, at which Bro. Elton Glover again delighted all present by his musical abilities, both vocal and instrumental. Bro. D. Rose [P.M. 73, responded for the visitors.

LIVERPOOL.—Duke of Edinburgh Lodge, No. 1182.—The monthly meeting of this lodge was held on the 16th inst. at the Wavertree Coffee House, the attendance of members being large, along with nearly a score of visitors, Bro. Hamer, P.G. Treas. W.L., being amongst the number. The principal business was the installation of Bro. Philip Richard Thorn as W.M. for the coming year. After the transaction of some routine business, the ceremony of installation was performed with striking effect by Bro. Woods, and the W.M. subsequently invested the following officers:—Bros. S. Cookson, I.P.M.; W. Pugh, S.W.; J. Williams, J.W.; J. Taylor, S.D.; J. Edgington, J.D.; W. Brown, Treas.; J. G. Bales, Sec. (fifth year); E. O. C. Rothwell, I.G.; T. F. Jones, F. F. Meyers, and R. Martin, Stewards; J. Thornton, M.C.; Crawford, Tyler. After the investiture of the officers, the W.M. gave the first degree to two candidates in a most impressive and highly efficient manner, auguring well for the satisfactory performance of his other duties during his year of office. The lodge was afterwards duly closed, and the brethren sat down to a first-class banquet, provided with great liberality by Mrs. Wright, the hostess. After dinner the usual loyal and Masonic toasts were proposed in happy terms by the W.M. Bro. Cookson, I.P.M., afterwards gave "The Worshipful Master," and in the course of his remarks referred in eulogistic terms to the zeal and wisdom he had displayed, and expressing full confidence that under his direction the coming year would be a highly prosperous one to No. 1182. (The toast was received with true Masonic cordiality.)—In response, the W.M. said he was glad he had merited the eulogiums which had been passed upon him, and that he had secured the approbation of his brethren. He would do all that lay in his power to forward the interests of Freemasonry generally, and that lodge in particular. The duties of his office would receive his most careful attention, and the brethren might rest assured that the workings would be carried out to the strict letter.—The "Installing Master" was acknowledged by Bro. Woods, and "The Past Masters" by Bro. Thornton. The "W.L. Masonic Educational Institution" was given by Bro. Thornton, and Bro. Connell, K.T. 137, responded to the toast of "The Visiting Brethren." A number of capital songs were given by musical brethren, Bro. Scott presiding at the harmonium, and the highly enjoyable proceedings terminated at a seasonable hour.

HAMPTON, MIDDLESEX.—Lebanon Lodge, No. 1326.—The last regular meeting of the season of this summer lodge was held on Thursday, the 17th inst., at the Red Lion Hotel, Lion-square, Thames-street, Hampton. Bro. Samuel Wickens, W.M., presided. There were also present, Bros. W. H. Dubois, D.C., as S.W.; D. D.

Beck, J.W.; J. T. Moss, I.P.M., Treasurer; F. Walters, P.M., Secretary; H. Potter, P.M., W.S.; W. Hammond, P.M., J.D.; A. Beresford, as I.G.; J. Bavin, P.M., Tyler; and others. The visitors were Bros. R. H. Marsh, P.M. 1196 (well known as Marston, the eminent tragedian); J.W. Jackson, 1306; J. Catchpole, 1306; &c. The minutes of an emergency and the last regular meeting were read and unanimously confirmed. Ballots taken separately for Brothers F. Jackson (548) and A. Beresford (1155) were declared unanimous in favour of their admission as joining members. The ballots taken for Messrs. T. Wallis, C. S. Simpson, and H. Stevens were in each instance declared unanimous in their favour as candidates for initiation. Apologies were received from Messrs. T. Wallis, G. Wood, and R. Bell, candidates for initiation, excusing and regretting their non-attendance, which was caused by circumstances entirely beyond their own control. The W.M. soon showed his proficiency in his work by the admirable and painstaking manner he initiated separately Messrs. C. S. Simpson and H. Stevens into Freemasonry, then passing Bro. J. C. Sinclair to the second degree. By the unanimous desire of all present, Bro. R. H. Marsh P.M. 1194, in his usual kind manner, took the chair and gratified all by the admirable way he raised Bro. J. Catchpole (1306) to the third degree, which ceremony was never better rendered. Two gentlemen were proposed for initiation, to be made at an emergency meeting arranged to be held on Thursday, the 31st inst. Bros. J. W. Jackson (1306) and J. Catchpole (1306) were proposed as joining members. The by-laws were then distributed, which contain, in addition to the laws, a list of all those whose names have or had been on the list of members since the foundation of the lodge on June 27th, 1870, and it showed no less than 46 names, exclusive of the four names added to the list at this meeting. The report of the audit showed the funds to be in a good state. The lodge was closed. Banquet followed. The usual toasts were given and responded to. After the termination of an agreeable afternoon's and evening's pleasure, the brethren returned to town by an early train.

LANCASTER.—Rowley Chapter, No. 1051.—The regular meeting of this chapter was held at the Masonic Rooms, Athenaeum, Lancaster, on Monday evening, the 21st inst. Present: Comp. Dr. Moore, P.Z., as M.E.Z.; Comp. W. Hall, H.; Comp. Bagnall, P.Z., as J.; Comps. Whimpray, E.; James M. Moore, N.; E. Simpson, P.S.; J. Barrow and R. Taylor, as Asst. Soj.'s; Watson, Janitor; R. S. Bateson; and visiting Comp. R. Walker, of the Third Chapter of Ireland. After the usual business had been transacted the ballot was taken and proved unanimous in favour of Bro. William Bradshaw, of Lancaster, who being in attendance was duly exalted to the degree of R.A. by the acting M.E.Z., who afterwards delivered the historical and mystical lectures, the symbolical lecture being rendered by Comp. Hall, H. A candidate was proposed by Comp. Moore, and the Chapter closed in due form.

THEATRICAL.

STRAND.—We have nothing to add to our recent notice of the doings at this charming house of entertainment. The programme remains unaltered, and is likely to continue so for some time to come, the success of Coleman's celebrated comedy, "The Heir-at-Law," with its present almost matchless cast, being something marvellous. Dr. Pangloss has proved a happy addition to the wide range of characters Mr. J. S. Clarke has made, par excellence, his own.

OLYMPIC.—Mr. W. H. Liston, the energetic and enterprising lessee, finds it unnecessary, despite the hot weather, to change his bill of fare. On the night of our visit we found the house well filled in every part. Mr. H. J. Byron's excellent drama, "Daisy Farm," is the main attraction. It has ran nearly a century of nights, as far as numbers are concerned. Mr. Byron, the author, acts well as Mr. Craven. Mr. George Belmore as the Derbyshire farmer, Mr. C. Warne as his stepson, Charley Burridge, and Mr. W. Blakely as George Warriner well sustain each character they act. Mrs. W. H. Liston is life-like in her admirable acting of Cribbage, a maid farm-servant; Miss Hughes, as Bridget Armstrong, the farmer's wife, well delineates that all-important character. Every character in the piece is well filled. The burlesque, "Giselle, or the Sirens of the Lotus Lake," is from the prolific pen of Mr. H. J. Byron, and is equal to any of that gentleman's previous pieces. Giselle is taken by Miss Farren, who is a finished artiste, as far as the careful study and experience goes in stage business and dancing. Her acting and by-play remind us of Miss Louie Sherrington, whose style she imitates. But as a rule all imitations suffer by comparison, and this is no exception to that. Miss Rose Berend, as Albert, is well adapted for that all-important character. She possesses an excellent voice, and is a good figure. Mr. George Belmore, as Fredolin the beadle, by his eccentric acting concentrates all the fun in his character. The absence of all vulgarity, and the refined manner in which the burlesque is placed on the stage, is likely to render it popular for some time to come. This is one of the many theatres we can recommend any one to visit, and where they are sure to be pleased with the entertainment.

THE MARK DEGREE AND THE CRYPTIC RITE.

It cannot be gainsayed, even by the most ardent supporters of Mark Masonry, that the degree, as practised in England, occupies an anomalous position in relation to the Craft. Notwithstanding the comparative antiquity of the "Mark," and the coincidence of its traditions with those of the recognised degrees, the Grand Lodge of England, after expressing an opinion in its favour, finally resolved to ignore the degree. As a matter of course, the immediate result of this policy of negation was the formation of a separate jurisdiction for the Mark Masters of England, and the Mark Grand Lodge thus established is now probably the most popular and flourishing unrecognised Masonic body in the country. This, however, does not obliterate the fact that no similar jurisdiction exists, or has ever existed, amongst Masons. It must also be borne in mind that Mark Masonry is not known or worked on the Continent of Europe; and, in general terms, it may be said that the Degree is confined to the English-speaking populations of the globe. In every country, however, except England, the "Mark" forms part of a series of degrees conferred, as a rule, under the auspices of the Grand Royal Arch Chapters, and in this connection it succeeds the "Master Mason's," as the fourth degree. This is notably the case in the United States of America, where the "capitular," or chapter degrees rank thus: Mark Master, Past Master, Most Excellent Master, Royal Arch Mason. The symbolic or Craft Grand Lodges in the States exercise no control over any degrees but those of Entered Apprentice, Fellow-Craft, and Master Mason; but the higher organisations invariably recognise the Grand Lodges as the basis and source of their own existence; so much so, that if a brother be suspended or expelled by the authorities of the Craft, a similar penalty is inflicted upon him by the chapter, council, or commandery to which he may also belong. In several States of the Union, the correct theory of Masonic progression is to advance from the blue lodge to the Royal Arch chapter, thence to the council of Royal and Select Masters, and finally to the commandery of the Temple and Malta. In some councils, the grade of Super-Excellent Master is added; but this, being a very theatrical degree, is by no means universally appreciated. Our American brethren call this series the "York" Rite, to distinguish it from the "Ancient or Accepted," or "Scottish" Rite, which, as every Mason knows, consists of thirty-three degrees, from the "Entered Apprentice" to the "Sovereign Grand Inspector General."

Now, in our opinion, there cannot be a doubt that the American system of letting each division of the Craft pursue its own course, and manage its own concerns, is the best and the wisest one. For example, if an American Craft Grand Lodge were officially questioned as to the interior economy of a Grand Royal Arch Chapter, or a Grand Commandery of Knights Templar, the Grand Lodge would very likely reply that it knew nothing of the so-called superior body, although, in all probability, many of its members would be found to be also members of the other organization. It may here be appositely noted that the Grand Lodge of England itself, some eighty years ago, gave an almost identical response to a similar query which arose out of a complaint made by a Royal Arch Mason against the Grand Chapter for denouncing him as an irregular companion, when it was unanimously resolved "that this Grand Lodge has nothing to do with the proceedings of the Society of Royal Arch Masons." Since then, it is true, we have recognised the Royal Arch degree, but the principle remains precisely the same with respect to the relations of the Craft with the Mark, the Red Cross, the Order of the Temple, or any other unrecognised Masonic body. However, what we have now to consider is, the position of English Mark Masonry, and few brethren will deny that, as at present constituted, it is like Mahomet's coffin, suspended between the terrestrial and celestial spheres, and belonging neither to "blue" nor to "red" Masonry.

We are glad to say that this anomalous state of affairs will soon cease, and that English Mark Masters will be enabled to complete the chain of correlative degrees practised by their American brethren. An obvious difficulty exists as to the fifth in the series—the "Past Master's" degree; because none but an "Installed Master" can legally obtain the chair secrets under the English Constitution, but with this exception, which does not, of course, apply to actual P.M.'s, English Masons can now take the Mark and Most Excellent Master's degrees, and can then, if also Royal Arch Masons, proceed to the Cryptic Rite, which comprises the grades of Royal and Select Masters. The merit of having introduced these degrees into England is due to the present energetic Grand Master of the Mark Grand Lodge, Brother GEORGE RAYMOND PORTAL, under whose auspices a distinguished American brother, Jackson H. Chase, 33°, of New York, has conferred the degrees upon a number of leading Masons in the metropolis, and established a Grand Council for England. We attach greater importance to this event because we believe, that by adopting the American system we shall be drawing closer and closer the bonds which now happily unite the Fraternity of this country and of the great Republic, and we are persuaded that greater interest will be awakened in Masonic proceedings generally on both sides of the Atlantic in consequence of the assimilation—nay, almost the identity—of our respective Masonic organisations. The step thus taken cannot be said to interfere with the United Grand Lodge, because all who desire to progress must be Master Masons, and it will rather stimulate than otherwise the increasing desire of the brethren to enter into Royal Arch Masonry, because none but Royal Arch Masons can be received into the Cryptic Rite. The most immediate and tangible advantage will nevertheless be this: that an English brother, who is also an Installed Master, will now be enabled to claim admission to any and every meeting of the symbolic, capitular, cryptic, or chivalric degrees, wherever they may be worked, without having to retire because he is not in possession of the complete series. We do not pretend to maintain that the Cryptic Rite is a very ancient one; it is apparently an adaptation from an original with which all Rose Croix Masons are familiar. But setting antiquity aside, its ceremonies are very beautiful and instructive, and, as we have already said, will be found eminently useful in cementing the "solidarity," to use a French phrase, of British and American Freemasonry. In a future number we will give a sketch of the Most Excellent Master's degree, and also of the Cryptic Rite.

Multum in Parvo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

"POINT WITHIN THE CIRCLE."

This symbol or emblem is one which every Mason is to a certain extent acquainted with. They have, most of them, in a mechanical sort of a manner, looked upon, heard of, and spoken of it. They have an indistinct, hazy sort of knowledge, that it is one of the emblems of the 1st degree, and has some species of relation to the Order, but it is "monitorial," and therefore little or no stress is laid upon it. This is to be regretted, as there is scarcely any symbol we have so rich in significance, so ancient, so suggestive, or so beautiful as this so much neglected (or, to speak milder, so little understood) appeal to us, as Masons. Such being the premised facts, it seems to be in place to make a few remarks on the subject, and we cannot believe that any member of our Order, after reading them, will look upon the "parallel lines and the point within the circle" with anything but the most profound respect. We are taught that in every well-regulated lodge there is found a point within a circle, which circle is embroidered by two perpendicular parallel lines. These lines represent St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist. The two great patrons of Masonry, to whom our lodges are dedicated, and who are said to have been perfect parallels in Christianity as well as in Masonry. So say old lectures.

Hemming says: "The point is emblematic of the Omniscient and Omnipresent Deity. The circle represents his eternity, and the two perpendicular parallel lines his equal justice and mercy. It necessarily follows, therefore, that in traversing a Masonic lodge we must touch upon these two great parallels, as well as upon the volume of the sacred law; and whilst a Mason keeps himself thus circumscribed, remembers his Creator, does justice and loves mercy, he may hope, finally, to arrive at that immortal centre whence all goodness emanates." Here, then, is a new reading, and opens up the subject in a broader, purer light than we are accustomed to view it; but what a field is open, when we consider the following: The old Lectures say, "The circle has ever been considered symbolical of the Deity; for, as a circle appears to have neither beginning nor end, it may justly be considered a type of God, without either beginning of days or ending of years." The ancients, however, give us a more decided and literal interpretation of the point within the circle.

The Egyptians believed the serpent to be symbolical of divine wisdom, power, and creative energy (.), and of immortality and regeneration, from the shedding of its skin; therefore they represented deity by a circle. The monad is the principle of all things; the starting point hence to the heathen god, from the facts the learned ancients represented a point within a circle as Deity bounded only by eternity, never ending. Dr. Oliver says: "The point within the circle was an universal emblem to denote the temple of the Deity, and referred to the planetary circle, in the centre of which was fixed the sun, as the universal God and father of nature; for the whole circle of heaven was called God." Pythagoras esteemed the central fire the supernal mansion of Jove, and he called it "Mesouranco," because the most excellent body ought to have the most excellent place—i.e., the centre. He also taught that the point within the circle, and the dodecahedron (or figure with twelve sides), were symbols of the universe; the triple triangle was an emblem of health, and the letter Y a representation of the course of human life with the two paths—one leading to virtue and the other to vice. His doctrine was, that one point (.), the monad, represented God. The two points (.), or duad, matter. The three, the worlds which were formed by the action of the one, or monad upon the duad. And upon this symbol the initiate into the Pythagorean mysteries was sworn. The formula was, according to Jamblichus, thus: On the sacred tetractus' eternal fountain of nature I swear thee." This brings us involuntarily to another coincidence. The phallus or virile member was carried in religious processions; by many of the natives of antiquity it was revered by a symbol of creation, and dates back to the misty ages of the Indian mysteries; thence introduced into Egypt, and made conspicuous in the mysteries of Isis.

In the Grecian mysteries it was regarded with the same religious reverence, and traces of it are found among the Jews. It was not associated in the minds of the people, with any low, vulgar, or lascivious ideas, but as one of the holy principles of the creative force of nature. The sign is most prominently associated with the symbol of the point within the circle.

That this same sign, and doubtless with the same accepted significance as above mentioned, was known and used in the Odenic mysteries, is an undisputed fact. Those interesting relics of the Druids found at the present day throughout Great Britain, bear the proof of this fact.

These druidical stones are erected in the shape of a circle, and invariably in the centre of this circle is placed another, and generally a larger stone. Here we have the point within a circle, and in a grander and more undisputed form than any we know of. Many of the ancients worshipped the sun as the representation of Deity. They represented it with a point within a circle, and, even to this day, our almanacs adopt, unconsciously, the same symbol, and we see it daily, without once thinking of asking ourselves why and whence this representation sprung. The ancient Egyptian priests represented the kind, good, gracious, and merciful God by the water triangle ▽ (base up and point down), and the just and angry God by the fire triangle Δ (base down, point up). If we unite the two we have a six-pointed star as a symbol of the perfect Godhead in all His attributes. Gadlicke says: "If we surround this figure with a circle with the point, we have the perfect Godhead with the sacred number seven: the six points of the star and the central point making the seven." Dr. Oliver says: "The centre point is a symbol of time and the circle of eternity. He also adds, "The point in the centre represents the Supreme Being. The circle indicates the annual circuits of the sun; and the parallel lines mark out the solstices, within which that circle is limited; and thus the Mason, by subjecting himself to due bounds, like the glorious luminary, will not wander from the path of duty."

But this article must not be allowed to take too much space. Enough has been said and quoted to demonstrate to the thinking brother that the point within the circle has a deep and wonderful significance; it is one of the oldest and most instructive of our symbols, and, as we said before, we believe one of the most neglected.

Still, every brother has been a living representation of that same symbol; and if he will but recall his position, and that of his brethren, and the Holy Bible, at the moment he was brought to light, he will see and realise that so highly prized was this symbol to our ancient brethren, that it was introduced into our ritual in such a manner that each individual was called upon to represent the point—bordered by the parallel lines of his brethren—while he touched the Holy Bible at the apex of the circle.—Loomis' Journal. W. GELATIN.—It is said that an animal fed on gelatin dies rapidly of starvation and inanition. This is perfectly true; but the fact is, that no simple substance given alone will support life. The most nutritive materials, such as albumen, fibrin, gluten—to say nothing of such substances as starch or sugar—all equally fail to support life when given alone.—Food Journal.

"FREEMASONRY AND JUDAISM." (To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Greatly as I respect the motives and appreciate the intentions of Bro. W. B., 742, in his article on Judaism and Freemasonry, in your last issue, I cannot but think that he has exhibited a great lack of judgment in publishing it in THE FREEMASON. He has not only put forward opinions from which our Jewish brethren must dissent—but which they will probably refrain from replying to—but he has pronounced opinions upon the most important questions, wholly at variance with those entertained by very many of his Christian brethren. To say nothing of the condemnatory terms in which he pronounces judgment on the teachers of "modern theology," which he dogmatically condemns after a fashion not exceeded by the most self-inspired pretenders to infallibility, I cannot help remarking, that I remember scarcely anything more offensive to the feelings of those who differ from him than the style in which he delivers his censures. I know of no writer who has more strangely mistaken the facts of history than W. B. has done; and he makes his perverted facts the ground upon which he runs a-muck against all forms of religious belief, save that of the Swedenborgians.

I protest against the doctrines of the article in question, but to point out specifically its errors and false teachings would be to violate the rule I have laid down for myself touching religious controversy in the columns of THE FREEMASON, which should, I think, be closed against it.

WILLIAM CARPENTER.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The articles of Bro. Carpenter on "Freemasonry and Israelitism," contributed to your journal are doubtless interesting, albeit some of his theories, though ingenious, may not commend themselves to everybody. But I must put forth a humble protest against a contribution entitled "Freemasonry and Judaism," inserted in your issue of last week directly after Bro. Carpenter's 13th article. It is set out as a sort of appendage to Bro. Carpenter's views, and is signed W. B., 742.

What I object to is the sectarian and polemic character of the statements put forward by W. B. I discern little else but an attack upon Christianity and modern Christian teaching. It is unnecessary for me to quote passages at length, and indeed superfluous, because your journal is widely circulated. But, after an Old Testament summary, W. B. in his fulmination starts as follows: "Has the Jew been superseded and replaced by the modern Christian?" W. B. then attacks the doctrine of the Trinity, averring that it was unknown till the fourth century; and he even goes so far as to aver that "the history of the New Church down to the third or fourth century is as much a myth as the names of the founders of Rome or the games of Olympia." Then follows an attack in detail upon the doctrine of the personality of the Holy Spirit, starting from the office of the Paraclete, as variously described in the New Testament.

It would be easy to refute the errors into which W. B. has fallen in this and other particulars. But what I wish to point out is, how foreign all this must appear to the spirit of Freemasonry, which recognises no distinction of sect, and places a ban upon all religious controversies within its pale.

I am not a clergyman, but simply a layman; and though I am not ashamed to append my name, I prefer signing myself

Yours fraternally,

W. L. A., R.A. COMP., AND 30° K.H.

RED CROSS OF CONSTANTINE.

CONSECRATION OF A CONCLAVE AT LIVERPOOL.

Very rarely has any new Masonic movement been attended with greater success than that which marked the inauguration of the Liverpool Conclave, No. 55, of the Masonic Order of Knights of the Red Cross of Constantine. No sooner was the order mooted, than numbers of candidates sought to enroll themselves under the Red Cross banner, and the consequence is that the conclave opens with an array of Sir Knights which augurs well for the future of the chivalric Order in the province of West Lancashire. Although the first conclave opened in this part of the division, it is not likely to remain long alone, and ere long the inauguration of a second will probably have to be chronicled.

The consecration of the Liverpool Conclave took place at the Adelphi Hotel, Liverpool, on Friday evening, the 18th inst., at which there could not be fewer than forty Sir Knights present. Ill. Sir Kt. George Turner, Int. Gen. for West Lancashire, was the presiding officer, and the admirable manner in which he performed his onerous duties was the theme of general admiration and praise. A passing word of commendation is also due to the clothing, jewels, swords, furniture, and paraphernalia necessary for the working of the conclave—provided by Sir Kt. Wood, from Bro. Kenning's Masonic Depot, Monument-place—which were not only substantial and attractive, but of the most chaste description, contributing in a large degree to the impressiveness of the noble ceremonial.

After the conclave had been duly opened by the already-exalted Sir Knights, thirteen candidates for admission were duly passed and installed by Sir Kt. Smith, assisted by other members of the conclave.

Ill. Sir Kt. Turner afterwards proceeded with the work of consecration, which, though somewhat lengthened, must have deeply impressed all who witnessed it.

After the ceremonial, and the conclave had been duly constituted and proclaimed, the following officers were appointed: E. Sir Kt. J. Kellett Smith, M.P.S.; Sir Kts. J. Robert Goepel, Viceroy; Joseph B. Robinson, Sen. Gen.; Henry M. Molyneux, Jun. Gen.; Washington, H.P.; Joseph Wood, Treas.; W. Crane, Herald (by proxy); James, Recorder; Clarke and Doyle, Prefects; Nelson and Winstanley, Stewards; and Ball, Sentinel. In the absence of several of the other knights companions nominated to offices, their investiture was deferred. The enthronement of Sovereign, installation of Viceroy, and investiture of officers were performed with great impressiveness by the Int. Gen. Sir Kt. J. Skeaf, Organist to the conclave, presided at the harmonium during the consecration.

After the conclave had been closed in unity and peace, an excellent banquet was provided in the excellent dining-hall of the hotel, to which about thirty sat down, under the presidency of the M.P.S., the Eminent Eusebius occupying his proper place at the lower end of the table.

When dessert was tabled, the toast of "The Queen and Royal Family" was given and responded to with true knightly enthusiasm.

The M.P.S. then gave "The Right Hon. the Earl of Bective, M. Ill. G. Sov., and the Supreme Grand Conclave," and in doing so spoke of the great kindness which had been shown by the members of the council to Sir Kt. Turner and himself in connection with that movement. Some months ago the Int. Gen. for West Lancashire had originated the idea of forming a conclave in Liverpool, and asked his (the M.P.S.'s) assistance, and he had great pleasure in referring to the cordial reception they had met with from the Grand Council, in connection with their efforts, when the proposition was submitted to them. He was sorry that one of the Grand Conclave had not been present that evening; but he thought the holiday season might form a very sufficient excuse for absence. (The toast was received with much enthusiasm.)

The M.P.S. next gave what he called the toast of the evening, "Ill. Sir Kt. Turner, Int. Gen. for West Lancashire." To him they were chiefly indebted for the remarkable success which had attended the opening of that conclave, and he trusted that all the trouble, anxiety, loss of time, and multitudes of annoyances, to which Sir Kt. Turner had submitted, would be amply made up by seeing his efforts crowned with the success of their gathering that night. They must congratulate themselves on the fact that no fewer than thirteen candidates had been installed that evening—a fact which must give the greatest pleasure to their worthy Int. Gen. They were now starting on a voyage of discovery in a new ship, and with a new crew, during which they were likely to have some rough weather—old prejudices to overcome, and new ideas to interfere with them; but they must sail on cheerily, trusting in the motto of their Order: "Faith, unity, and zeal." He could scarcely express what he felt with respect to Sir Kt. Turner, but he would ask them to drink bumpers to his health and prosperity. (The toast was received in the most cordial manner, with the knightly honours.)

In acknowledging the toast, Ill. Sir Kt. Turner said he hardly thought he was worthy of the encomiums which had been passed upon him; but, nevertheless, it was a satisfaction to know that those efforts had been so remarkably successful. His grand idea in originating that Order in Liverpool was the conviction that no set of men had a right to hold all the honours amongst themselves; but that every one in the Order had a perfect right to occupy the proud position he did that evening, if worthy of it. He had endeavoured to make his appointments with thorough impartiality, disclaiming all humbug; and he trusted that one great good which would arise for the institution of that Order in the division of West Lancashire would be the destruction of everything like exclusiveness and cliquism, which did not certainly represent the true spirit of Masonry. He would consider it the greatest pleasure at any time to give a helping hand to any of his knights companions, feeling convinced that it was never intended they should be excluded from each other's kindness, but that they should go out of their way, if necessary, to give mutual help.

Ill. Sir Kt. Turner then proposed "The M.P.S.," and remarked that he had especial pleasure in doing so, because E. Sir Kt. Smith was a worthy Mason, a zealous worker, and possessing the true feelings which ought to be encouraged and commended. In connection with the formation of that conclave, he had worked early and late, putting his shoulders to the wheel with a will; worked against many discouragements, but still bravely saying, "No, we won't allow that to deter us, and this conclave shall, will, and must be carried out." That was the kind of man who ought to be valued and admired, and he (the speaker) was sure the knights companions would receive the toast in the spirit in which it was given. To the Illustrious P.S. they were largely indebted for the existence of the conclave. (The toast was received with great enthusiasm.)

The M.P.S. thanked his brother knights for the cordial manner in which they had received the Int. Gen.'s toast, and assured them it was a great pleasure to find his conduct had met with their approval. Reference had been made to the obstructions and discouragements placed in their way by what he might call ignorant people, but who, he still wished, would live to grow wiser. The greatest obstacle with which he had to contend was the very small amount of time he could give to the movement; but still he had made two journeys to London along with the Int. Gen., and he had great pleasure in making the sacrifice of time which these involved, leaving pocket out of the question, after seeing the success which followed their efforts. One result of these visits would be that he would require to go without his usual holidays; but he would be thoroughly repaid by seeing the continued and increasing prosperity of the conclave.

The M.P.S. next gave the toast, "The Viceroy, the Eminent Eusebius, Sir Kt. Goepel," in whom, he said, they possessed a most valuable assistant, and one who would do his utmost to forward the interests of the conclave, and who would be found able and willing to give all necessary information to the knights companions who required it.

Sir Kt. Goepel, in responding, said that, if anything gave him pleasure, it would be to advance the interests of that conclave. He then referred to the high standing of the Int. Gen. and the M.P.S. in other degrees, adding that, when he had two such bright examples before him, he felt he could not do better than imitate their zeal and efficiency. He felt proud of the success which had attended the opening of the conclave, feeling convinced that if they only went forward in the same way, they would soon have several conclaves in West Lancashire.

The M.P.S. then proposed the toast of "The Officers of the Liverpool Conclave, No. 55," which was responded to in happy terms by Sir Kts. J. Robinson, S.G., and Molyneux, J.G. Sir Kt. Skeaf, Org., also replied, speaking of music as an important element in the working of lodges and conclaves, and expressing an opinion that if called into more frequent requisition, it would tend greatly to their success and enjoyment.

The Int. Gen. next gave "The Knights Companions of the Conclave," coupling with the toast the names of Sir Kts. J. W. Robinson, Pearson, and Hague.

The toast of "The Newly-Installed Knights," also given by Ill. Sir Kt. Turner, was responded to by Sir Kt. J. B. MacKenzie.

A most enjoyable evening was greatly enlivened by the harmony of Sir Kts. Washington, H.P., Nelson, S., Brown, and Jarvis. A special enjoyment was derived from Sir Kt. Skeaf's accompaniments and performance of his well-known and splendid fantasia, "The Bells of Aberdovey."

NEW WESTERN INFIRMARY.

The foundation-stone of the Western Infirmary, erecting in the neighbourhood of the new University Buildings, was laid on Thursday, the 17th inst., with Masonic honours. The General Committee of the new Infirmary assembled at two o'clock in the Lower Hall of the Queen's Rooms, where they met the magistrates and Councillors of Glasgow and others invited to take part in the ceremonial. At the same time the Provincial Grand Lodge was opened in the Upper Hall. The Masonic and other bodies were afterwards formed into procession, and marched to the site of the foundation-stone through the West-End Park, across the Kelvin Bridge, and past the front of the University, where they were joined by the Principal and Professors, Sheriff Bell, and Mr. Dalglish, M.P. (Chairman of the Western Infirmary General Committee). The weather was brilliant, and there was a large concourse of persons at the Queen's Rooms, and along the line of route, but especially in the vicinity of the new Infirmary, where spacious platforms were erected, over three entrances to which arches of evergreens were raised, the central and principal one decorated with flags, bannerets, and devices. Chief-Constable McCall was Grand Marshal for the civic portion, and Mr. Robert Robb, Provincial Grand Marshal, for the Masonic portion of the procession, which arrived at the site in nearly the following order:—Band of music, Chief Constable, Officers of Police, Town Officers with halberets, the Lord Provost and Magistrates, followed by the Town Council; Judicial and Civil Officers of the Corporation, the Deacons of Trades' Incorporations, Officers of Police, Sheriff of the County, Members of Parliament and Military Officers, Justices of the Peace, Officers of Police, the Chairman and Members of the Western Infirmary Committee and Subscribers, Inspector of Works and Contractors, the Principal and Professors of the University, the President and Fellows of Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons, Glasgow; Officers of Police; Masonic Lodges (junior in front), Band of music, the Provincial Grand Lodge, Officers of Police. The Principal and Professors and the President and Fellows of the Faculty of Physicians and Surgeons appeared in their official robes. The following were the officers of the Provincial Grand Lodge who were present:—Bros. W. Montgomerie Neilson, P.G. Master; F. A. Barrow, D.P.G.M.; Jas. Steel, S.P.G.M.; David Kinghorn, P.G.S.W.; Jas. Wallace, P.G.J.W.; Arch. McTaggart, P.G. Sec.; Thos. Halket, Acting P.G.S.D.; George McDonald, Acting P.G.J.D.; T. Granger, Acting P.G.B. Bearer; James Leith, P.G.D.C.; Robert Robb, P.G. Marshall; James Gentles, P.G.S.B.; John Burnett, Acting P.G. Architect; John Fraser, P.G. Clerk; James Balfron, P.G. Inner Guard; James Pollock, P.G. Tyler; James Cruickshanks, P.P.G.D.M.; and Wm. Gilmour, D.P.G.M. of the Middle Ward of Lanarkshire, who was supported by the S.W., J.W., B.B., and S.D. The working tools were carried by members of St. John's Lodge, No. 3½. The following lodges were represented:—No. 9, Mother Kilwinning; No. 7, Kilwinning Hamilton; No. 13, Torphichen; No. 28, Kirkintilloch; No. 30, St. Mary's Coltness; No. 114 Cambuslang R.A.; No. 224, St. Innocents Cullen; No. 233, Hamilton St. Andrews; No. 244, Ardrossan; No. 335, Dunoan Argyle; No. 427, St. Clair Cambusnethan; No. 116, Rutherglen R.A.; No. 458, Busby St. John's; and the whole of the Glasgow lodges with the exception of one.

The proceedings having been opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Jamieson, Mr. Dalglish, M.P., presented the P.G. Master (Bro. Neilson), by whom the foundation-stone was to be laid, with an elegant silver trowel, bearing the following inscription:—“Presented to Wm. Montgomerie Neilson, Esq., of Queenshill, Provincial Grand Master of Glasgow, on the occasion of his laying the foundation-stone of the Glasgow Western Infirmary, on the 17th day of August, 1871.” At the point of the trowel there is engraved the P.G.M.'s Masonic jewel; there are also engraved on the trowel the crest and motto of the recipient, the arms of Glasgow, and the University arms.

The P.G. Master having accepted the trowel, the stone was laid in due accordance with the laws of Masonry, and the completion of the ceremony was signalled by rounds of hearty cheers. A glass bottle, containing several documents, coins, &c., was placed in a receptacle under the stone. The bottle was covered with a brass plate bearing a suitable inscription.

At the conclusion of the ceremony,

P.G. Master Neilson said: Brother Freemasons,—We have done a good work to-day in laying the foundation-stone of this building with Masonic honours, according to our ancient rites and ceremonies. Within these walls, when coped and roofed, many of our brethren will find relief from the pains and diseases to which we all are heirs. In yonder noble pile, the foundation-stone of which was laid by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, with his lovely and beloved Princess, unfortunately without Masonic honours, but which can never again occur when Bro. the Prince of Wales performs a similar ceremony—there, in that palace of learning, science will be invoked to disclose nature's mysteries and laws, teaching the healing art to those who will minister to us in the hour of distress, when laid low by accident or sickness. Brethren, we are much indebted to those gentlemen by whose diligent and arduous labours the means are being provided to build this hospital in the western district of our city, and I trust they will receive from all classes of the community that liberal support they so well deserve. (Applause.) Gentlemen, in the name of the Freemasons I thank you for the opportunity you have given us of being present and assisting at this interesting ceremony, and trust our services have met with your approval. (Cheers.) Allow me, in conclusion, to express the best wishes of the brethren that your labours may be crowned with success, and be acknowledged with gratitude by the people of this great city and the west of Scotland. (Cheers.)

Mr. Dalglish, M.P., as Chairman of the General Committee, returned thanks to the R.W. Grand Master and the Masonic body.

The playing by the band of “Rule Britannia” brought this part of the proceedings to a close.

On the conclusion of the foundation-stone ceremony, a large number of gentlemen proceeded to the University and partook of cake and wine in the Museum. Mr. Dalglish, M.P., occupied the chair, and proposed the usual toasts.

Mr. Gordon, M.P., in proposing the health of the Master Mason and the Masonic body who had assisted at the laying of the foundation-stone, confessed that, although not a Mason, he had a great reverence for the body, said it was wonderful the secret had never been divulged, and mentioned, amidst loud laughter, that perhaps the explanation of the matter was that there was no secret in it after all. If there was a secret connected with the Order, he was surprised that the ladies had not found it out, warned them that they might soon expect an assault upon their privileges by a demand by the so-called weaker sex for admission as members of the body, and spoke in eulogistic terms of the objects of Masonry so far as he could judge of them. He adverted to the sacrifices which many of the Masons must have made to attend on the present occasion, but was sure none of them would grudge it, the Institution, so far as he could judge, being consistent with the principles of the Masonic body.

The Prov. Grand Master, in returning thanks for the compliment referring to what the last speaker had said regarding the secret of the Order, said he was sure that if Mr. Gordon would but join the body they would be only too glad to let him into the secret. (Laughter.) He thought it was not only a necessary thing to have an hospital in connection with the University, but that the extension of public works westward made it almost compulsory that they should have an hospital as far west as the one of which they had just laid the foundation-stone.

The Girvan Encampment of Knights Templar, No. 32, held its usual monthly meeting on the 1st inst. Sir Kt. Robert Bell, M.N.C. presided, and opened the encampment in due and ancient form. The Secretary having formally tendered his resignation, the appointment of Sir Kt. Wheeler was confirmed. Propositions from three companions were read and accepted, and after the transaction of other business the encampment was closed till the first Tuesday in September.

THE GRAND COUNCIL OF ROYAL AND SELECT MASTERS, PENNSYLVANIA.

We have received a copy of the Proceedings of the Grand Council of Royal and Select Masters of New Brunswick, which contains a very full and interesting address of the Grand Master, Comp. Alfred Creigh. As it gives the traditional history of Cryptic Masonry as disseminated in Pennsylvania, and being full of interest to the Masonic student in search of light, we do not hesitate to quote entire:—

“We greet each of you as co-workers in the S.V., in this our Annual 23rd Assembly. We meet representing the different counties of the State of Pennsylvania—a State pre-eminently great, morally, scientifically, religiously, and Masonically. Within her borders, symbolic, caputular, cryptic, and chivalric Masonry, with the Ancient and Accepted Rite, are cultivated; the members of each zealously devoting their talents to the diffusion of those heaven-born principles which proclaim love to God and love to man, which elevates the standard of our manhood, and teaches the great and eternal truth: that every degree and every rite of Masonry is based on the Holy Bible—the first great light of Masonry.

“Cryptic Masonry, in all her teachings, her lectures, her ritual, and her three degrees can triumphantly proclaim this fact and establish it without even the fear of successful contradiction. She comes to you, not clothed in the garb of modern associations, not surrounded with all the aids and improvements in literature and science, and not wearing upon her brow even the marks of old age, but she stands erect in all the vigour of her manhood in the keystone State, with her thirty-seven subordinates, all doing homage to her shrine, enlisting the prayers, and sympathies, and learning of her novitiates, each swearing upon its consecrated altar to promote, and diffuse, and disseminate her high and holy principles. To understand these you must retrace earth's history for twenty-eight hundred and sixty-nine years, and dig down to the foundations of that magnificent temple erected on Mount Moriah by direction of the S.A.O.T.U. You must call to your imagination S.K.I., H.K.T., and H.A.B., who met in the very self-same tabernacle which was erected in the wilderness by Moses, Aholiab, and Bezaleel—a type of the temple of King Solomon; and upon which all our Masonic traditions are based. You must listen to the wisdom of King Solomon, who presented to the minds of his other two companions his higher and more refined notions of a temple, keeping steadily in view the tabernacle, because he was taught directly and immediately of God himself. Then contemplate Hiram, King of Tyre, consenting to aid the wise King Solomon, by the strength of his mind, his men, and his money. And to crown this noble union view that celebrated artist, Hiram Abiff, whom these two royal kings had selected as the principal conductor of the work, the beauty of whose work was to remain an eternal monument to his memory. Little did this humble artisan, this honest architect, ever imagine that any other monument than the magnificent architectural style of the Temple would be erected to his memory; but tradition informs us that after his death there was erected near the Temple a beautiful monument of the purest Parian marble, its superstructure composed of three steps, to represent these three illustrious Grand Masters; while upon it was placed the statue of a beautiful, though weeping virgin, with a broken column at her side, while in her left hand she held an urn, denoting that his ashes were enshrined therein. In her right hand she held aloft the sprig of acacia, denoting the immortality of the soul; while Time, with his scythe and his hour-glass, stood behind her, teaching that by time, patience, and perseverance, we can overcome all things, and that death is but the breathing out of the spirit, the ceasing of the heart's pulsation, the starting point of the spirit's existence in the eternal world, where the intellectual faculties will become perfect as Deity itself.

“I have been induced to prepare this annual address with the view of giving to the Cryptic Masons of the United States the reason why the Grand Council of Pennsylvania confers the three degrees of Royal, Super-Excellent, and Select Master in the order prescribed by our Constitution, yet different from most of the other States. If we can point out a more excellent and truthful way, founded upon reason, chronology, and circumstances which in themselves are conclusive evidence to every inquiring mind, should we not abandon untenable ground, and not cling to it, merely because State pride arrogates to itself oftentimes preposterous and absurd theories? We therefore assert that the starting point of the Temple, and upon which our superstructure (the various Masonic degrees) rests, is founded upon the Temple of King Solomon. It was designed by him, and with the assistance of Hiram, King of Tyre; a principal conductor of the work was selected in the person of Hiram Abiff. Although he was not equal to them as kings, yet he was their co-worker, their brother, their companion in everything appertaining to the Temple. There was no piece of work executed that Hiram Abiff did not design; not an ashlar, or pillar, or chapter, or base, or arch, or battlement, or bead, or case-ment, or cornice, or post, or lintel, or mortice, or moulding, or pedestal, or altar, that his great mind did not conceive, draft upon the trestle-board, and then submit to his companions. Hence, he was the master builder of that magnificent structure.

"This view of the position and standing of H.A. settles a very important question at the very outset of our investigation. It puts into our hands the key by which we can unlock the secret vault of the Temple, and thereby procure those inestimable treasures which were concealed for so many years. It tells us in unmistakable language, both by tradition, and circumstances, and history, that the three Grand Masters met at Mount Moriah in the very tabernacle which was erected by Moses, Aholiab, and Bezaleel; and which, with the Ark of the Covenant, the children of Israel venerated and preserved from time to time, until finally they were placed in the hands of King Solomon by his royal father David. Solomon felt that with these he had the protecting influence of Deity, and with that wisdom which God had given him he would go on to perfection, and that the Temple would be an eternal monument to his name and his memory.

"Under such inspired feelings, these Grand Masters daily met as Royal Masters in the Tabernacle—daily discoursing of those matters relating to its erection, and viewing the immense foundation stones placed in their appropriate places, with its arches and its vaults. In process of time an important question arises: How shall so many workmen be dismissed at once, at the completion of the Temple, and scattered throughout the country, without having some token and word by which they should be able to communicate with each other, that they themselves had assisted in its erection. These three Grand Masters resolved in council to remedy the evil; that, at the completion of the Temple, every skilful and approved craftsman should receive the word and sign appertaining to the degree of a M.M.; but until that period should arrive, no craftsman should receive it. Nay, our Grand Masters went further—they determined that the word of a M.M. should be in the H.S. and C. language, and deposited in the S.V. lest accident or misfortune should befall any of them, so that the G.O.W. should be transmitted to all future time, and at this agreement they bound themselves by the solemnity of an O.B. Time passes by, the word is deposited in the S.V., and before the completion of the Temple death invades its hallowed precincts, and one of his Grand Masters yields up his life in defence of his honour and his integrity.

"Is it not self-evident from this position, but more especially from our traditions, that the R.M. is the Alpha or first degree of Masonry. In it the whole minutiae of the Temple was planned, arranged, determined upon, even to the rewarding of the craftsmen after its completion. This of itself is a powerful argument to strengthen the position which the Grand Council of Pennsylvania assumes when she declares that, chronologically, the Royal Master is the alpha, or first degree. Its origin was really three years before the Temple was commenced, for Hiram, King of Tyre, sent Hiram Abiff about that period, and before the Temple was commenced, as the Bible asserts; for after all the materials had been prepared in the forests and the quarries under the direction of the H.A., they were then brought to Jerusalem, and each piece afterwards put in its appropriate place without the sound of the hammer, axe, or any tool on it? Do you ask me why? I answer, because each craftsman had his own particular mark upon the stone or wood which he had prepared. The timber was brought in floats by sea to Joppa, and thence to Jerusalem, while the squaring of the great stones was performed in the quarries under the direction of H.A. Is it not self-evident, therefore, that the S.V. had no existence until the Temple was erected; and therefore there were no Select Masters, because the work which they performed was executed at those times when the craftsman who had laboured through the heat of the day had reposed himself upon his couch for sleep.

"The officers whom King Solomon had selected at the building of the Temple were not at that period Select Masters. They constituted his chief officers—his cabinet. In 1 Kings, iv. chap. 7verse, their duties are thus defined: Azariah, superintendent of the twelve officers who provided food for the King and his household; Zabud was the Prime Minister, or confidant; Ahishar had control of his household affairs; Aaouiram collected taxes, and was the Treasurer. Hence, it is very evident that these men and these officers performed the duties assigned them before even the Temple was erected. Yet it is true, for faithful and meritorious services, they were rewarded by receiving the secrets appertaining to Select Masters when the S.V. was in process of construction. This is a fair, rational, and honest conclusion to which we can all assent—any other proposition destroys the harmony and beauty of the degrees, and throws into chaotic confusion the whole system of Ancient Masonry.

"In connection with this subject we may state that the Grand Council of Pennsylvania therefore places the S.M. as the third or last degree, because in its history and lectures everything appertaining to the Temple is made clear and intelligible to Cryptic Masons. The mysteries of the Royal Arch, the incommunicable word, the book of the law, pot of manna, the budding rod—all these are fully elucidated and explained, and the light shineth in the darkness of the Royal Arch. Is it not reasonable to suppose that our Masonic fathers should institute a degree in which the novitiate should be entitled to comprehend all the minutiae of the Temple, in its every phase, with all the explanations which the mind of man can conceive, so that our whole mysteries can be comprehended and understood as we pass the summit and perfection of Ancient Masonry, and therefore the circle of perfection.

"After the digression we shall return to the Super-Excellent Master's degree, and give the reasons why it is conferred as the second in our Grand Council.

"We enter the Temple, pass between the pillars of the porch, and in due time are raised to the east, having been taught in the lodge lessons of virtue, morality, of science and religion, while but one essential was wanting to make our Masonic journey finished and complete. I know you all anticipate me when I answer, that it was the G.O.W. agreed upon and promised to be given by our three Grand Masters at the completion of the Temple, and in the very presence of these three and no others. An agreement entered into the Council of R. Masters, but prevented by the death of the H.A. until the long-lost word was brought to light at the re-building of the second Temple. But we have not yet finished the first Temple. We had entered the quarries and renewed our devotions, by preparing our minds as spiritual stones for the Temple on high; we had presided a season in the Oriental Chair to learn to qualify ourselves for higher duties, and then we witnessed the dedication of the Temple. Such and such alone is the entire and complete history of the first Temple until the Babylonish Captivity.

"The Cryptic Masons are now required to take another standpoint. We study the beauty of this magnificent temple, admire the character of King Solomon, contemplate his extensive dominions, lament his death, witness the Jewish nation demanding a king in the person of Saul, the first King of Israel. Study the entire history of this nation for a period of 485 years, during which time twenty-two kings presided over its destinies, and you all see the Temple prepared, destroyed—its people and the furniture of the Temple, except the Ark, carried captive to Babylon, and there amid the willows, and on the banks of the river mourn the loss of their temple and city. This final scattering and destruction of the Temple, was brought on by the faithlessness of Zedekiah, its last King, who, refusing to serve the God of his fathers, and permitting the people to degenerate into idolatry, met a cruel and ignominious death. It is to commemorate this tragical event, and in further illustration of the R.A., that it is placed as the second degree of the Council. Chronologically it is its proper place, first, the Royal Council of Grand Masters, next the erection of the Temple; then follows the Select Master, explanatory of both the first and second Temples. Was there ever a more perfect system of mysteries more completely harmonized, than the Cryptic degrees, as conferred in regular order, and as now practised by the Grand Council of Pennsylvania. Their beautiful and harmonious arrangement stands forth, therefore, perfect, finished and complete; being perfect, because nothing is wanting; finished, because nothing can be added thereto; complete, because it has no defects—harmonizing every tradition from alpha to omega in Ancient Masonry.

"We commend Cryptic Masonry to you, as elucidating fully all the facts upon which our traditions rest, a foundation so permanent that time itself cannot destroy them. Great and important truth in both the Lodge and Chapter, and none but the select few who pass the circle of perfection should be permitted to guard them. Be it then your highest aim as members of your subordinate Councils and of this Grand Council to devote yourselves, your time and your talents to its interests. The subject is worthy of your study, because it appeals to the intellect, to the manhood, to the heart of each, and we should strive to elevate it to that high position which justly belongs to it. By doing so we shall each have fulfilled our Masonic mission, and Cryptic Masonry will be honored, served and loved. Her interests therefore are committed to your care, as the representatives of the Grand Council of Pennsylvania.

"Private business requiring my attention at home, I have been enabled to make but very few official visits. In these I was greeted with the cordiality belonging to Cryptic Masons. I have had considerable correspondence with all the Subordinate Councils, and prosperity seems to rest upon the Officers and Illustrious Companions.

"Illustrious Companions of the Grand Council of Pennsylvania: Fifteen years since, I had the honor of receiving, by the unanimous vote of the members of the Grand Council, the responsible office of M.P. Grand Master. None of those who thus honored me are with us, most of whom have passed into the V.S., awaiting the call of the Archangel; the remaining companions are battling nobly in the duties of life. Since my first election, year by year have I been honored with your suffrages. How faithfully I have discharged my duties, the history of our Grand and Subordinate Councils, and the proud position she has assumed, and the devotion of our Illustrious Companions to the diffusion of our principles, are the best evidence of her prosperity. With all this prosperity, with peace within our walls, with our principles engraved on every heart, I return to you the baton of authority with which I have been honored for fifteen years; and may my successor whoever your kind partiality shall designate, be more faithful than him whose official labours are now ended."

THE GRAND LODGE OF QUEBEC.

The Grand Lodge of the Province of Quebec, in the Dominion of Canada, has been fraternally recognized by the twenty-two following Grand Lodges:—District of Columbia, Maine, New Hampshire, Iowa, Wisconsin, Texas, Nebraska, Nova Scotia, Nevada, Kansas, Illinois, Ohio, Michigan, Georgia, Mississippi, Arkansas, N. Carolina, Connecticut, Indiana, New York, Vermont, and Rhode Island. Fraternal intercourse has also been established with the Grand Orient of Belgium.

The inhabitants of the village of Danville and neighbouring township of Shipton, Quebec, have been for some weeks with great interest anticipating the proposed ceremony of the laying the foundation-stone of their new magnificent town-hall at Danville with Masonic honours, which took place on Thursday, the 27th ult., in the actual performance of the ceremony by Bro. John H. Graham, J.L.D., Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Quebec, assisted by a very large concourse of persons.

Amongst the prominent officers of the Grand Lodge present on the occasion were the M.W. the Grand Master; George Thompson, of Quebec, as Deputy Grand Master; and the following District Deputy Grand Masters: The Hon. Thomas Wood, of Dunham; William Miller, Quebec; J. H. Stearns, Montreal; Dr. Meigs, of Stanbridge, C.S.W.; Thomas Milton, of Montreal, G.J.W.; Rev. C. P. Reid, of Sherbrooke, Grand Chaplain; J. H. Isaacson, of Montreal, Grand Secretary. About 200 Masters and representatives from nearly every lodge in the province were also present, and it is calculated that nearly 2,000 persons were spectators of the ceremony.

The civic procession was marshalled by J. P. Stockwell, Esq., and that gentleman, with Mayors Boutelle and Bernard, and the Secretary, Treasurer, T. Lect. as well as all the people in the place, were unbounded in their courtesy and hospitality to their guests.

The Masonic procession having reached the platform, the Danville Brass Band, led by E. M. Berry, played "Rule Britannia."

The Mayor of Danville, James Routelle, Esq., J.P., &c., then said: Most Worshipful Sir,—On behalf of the municipal councils of the town of Shipton, and of the village of Danville, I heartily thank you for accepting our invitation to lay the corner-stone of our town-hall in accordance with the ancient usages of your Order, and I beg to extend a cordial welcome to you and all the other officers and members of the Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of Quebec, and to all the other members of your Fraternity who have assembled here to-day to assist you in these ceremonies.

The Grand Master replied: Mr. Mayor, we are grateful for your cordial welcome, and we will now proceed cheerfully to comply with your kind request.

The G.M. then addressed the large concourse of spectators as follows: Men, women, and children here assembled, be it known unto you all that we are lawful Masons, true and faithful to the laws of our country, bound by solemn obligations to aid in the erection of stately and superb edifices—to be serviceable to our brethren—to practise universal benevolence—to fear God, who is the Great Architect of the Universe. We have amongst us, concealed from the eyes of all men, secrets which may not be revealed, and which no one has discovered. But these secrets are lawful and honourable, and are placed in the custody of Masons who alone have the keeping of them to the latest generation. Unless our Craft were good and our calling honourable, we would not have existed for so many centuries, nor would we have had so many illustrious brothers in our Order ever ready to sanction our proceedings and contribute to our prosperity. We are assembled here to-day, in the face of you all, to assist in building a house which we pray God may prosper in the grand objects for which it is about to be erected, by becoming a place of concourse for great and worthy men, and promoting harmony, prosperity, and brotherly love amongst this people and throughout the world till time shall be no more.

Brethren: So mote it be.

The Grand Chaplain then implored a blessing from Heaven on the undertaking.

For the architect, Bro. F. R. Bernard, Mayor of Shipton, handed the plan of the building to the G.M. for his inspection and approval. He next presented the working tools to the G.M.

By command of the G.M., the Grand Secretary then read a statement of what had been deposited in the box now placed by the civic authorities in the cavity beneath the corner-stone, and of the coins of the Dominion and of the realm, which had also been placed therein by the Grand Treasurer.

The G.M. then spread the cement with the trowel, and solemn music was discoursed by the band while the stone was lowered to its place.

This having been done, and the stone consecrated according to Masonic custom, the public grand honours were given, and the stone proclaimed to be duly laid.

The Sec. Treas. of the municipalities of Shipton and Danville, V.W. Bro. T. Leet, P.M. of Doric Lodge, then presented the trowel, which bore an appropriate inscription, to the M.W. Grand Master, in the name of the municipal councils of the township of Shipton and village of Danville, and on behalf of the officers and members of Doric Lodge.

The G.M.: V.W. Brother, you have kindly presented me with one of the most important instruments of the Craft, which I gratefully accept and will immensely prize. I shall take it to my place of residence, and will deposit it in a conspicuous place, and I will direct that it be handed down from me to my son, and to my son's son, in perpetual generation, as a valuable ornament and as an excellent token. An ornament, for its surpassing workmanship, which does honour to the silversmith; and an excellent token because, as in operative Masonry, its use is to spread the cement which binds all the parts of the building into one common mass, so we are taught by it to spread the well-tempered cement of kindness and affection, which tends to unite all men in one common bond of brotherhood, worshiping and serving the one God and Father of all.

The G.M. next addressed the Mayor, the other Municipal officers, and the large concourse of people assembled, as follows: Gentlemen, Mayors and Municipal Councillors of Shipton and Danville,—In compliance with your very kind, unanimous request, I have now had the honor, with the assistance of my Brethren, and in the presence of this large concourse to lay the Corner-Stone of your Town Hall in accordance with the ancient customs of our Fraternity. The highest commendation is due to you and your predecessors, for the inception of this grand undertaking; and if this superstructure is completed according to your designs, it will be a monument of your wise forethought, and an ornament to your beautiful village, as well as a great public benefit and lasting good to all this people. The spirit of union and harmony which has characterized your efforts, is worthy of great praise and general imitation; and I pray that it may be the will of the Great Architect of the Universe, to spare you to see the completion and long to enjoy the benefits of this public enterprise, which in all probability will be the best of its kind in the rural portions of the Province of Quebec.

Inhabitants of Danville and Shipton,—It affords me peculiar satisfaction to address you on this auspicious occasion. This indeed is for you a memorable day. These inauguration ceremonies will be long remembered. History will record them, and your posterity will bless you for your benefactions. You are the possessors of a goodly portion of the rich, fertile district of St. Francis, and by your thrift and industry, you are making these hills and valleys to bud and blossom as the rose. Yours, although not the greatest in area, is, in population the banner Township in Richmond County, and it must be obvious to the most casual observer that a great and prosperous future is before you and your children. You owe much to your Fathers and Mothers, who, through many trials and hardships, laid the foundations of your material, social, educational and religious prosperity. Nor can I allow myself to omit congratulating and heartily thanking the many gentleman of all professions and callings, who in such numbers honor this memorable occasion; and more than thanks should be tendered to the mothers, the sisters,—and the sweethearts who, by their presence, grace this assemblage, and shed lustre on this auspicious event. And I am sure that it is the fervent prayer of every one here, that all "the sons of this people may be like green olive trees in the house of God, and their daughters be as corner stones polished after the similitude of a palace."

Brethren of the Masonic Fraternity and members of the Grand Lodge of Quebec,—Your alacrity in responding in such large numbers from all parts of the Province, to assist in the pleasing ceremonies of this day, deserves and receives my highest praise and commendation. This is indeed a notable day in the Calendar of our Grand Lodge. This is the first Corner Stone laid under the auspices of the Grand Lodge of Quebec, which God greatly prospers. This day becomes historic in the annals of the Craft in this Province. It is, moreover, to me a day of peculiar honour and happiness. You and others, by whose affection and favour, the distinguishing preferment of being the first Grand Master of our renowned Grand Lodge, has been conferred—will, I know, heartily rejoice in the felicity of having the first official act of this character transpire during my term of office, in this charming village, the abode of Doric Lodge, and in the county of my residence. Nor can I forbear congratulating you, my brethren, on the unparalleled success of our new Grand Lodge, which but scarcely twenty months old, is in full, fraternal intercourse with twenty-three Canadian, American, and European Grand Lodges, with every prospect of soon being united in the bonds of Fraternity with every regular Grand Lodge in the world; and all whose organic acts have now been ratified and confirmed by about 300,000 of our Brethren, after such careful consideration as perhaps has not been given to any other Masonic event of modern times. But, my brethren, let us ever remember that all our successes come from Him who doeth according to His will in the army of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth; and while we continue to act towards one another, and to all men, as faithful Craftsmen, let us ever be mindful to serve Him with fervency and zeal. Amen and Amen.

The R. W. G. Chaplain then pronounced the following Benediction:—May the God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Jacob,—the God of our Fathers,—graciously command His blessing upon the labors of this day, and enable us all so to dedicate and devote our lives to His service, that we display the beauty of true godliness to the honor and glory of His great and holy name.

Brethren—So mote it be.

All united in singing the first stanza of the National Anthem, and after three cheers for the Queen, three for the Grand Master and Grand Lodge of Quebec, and three for the people and municipal officers of Shipton and Danville, and their new Town Hall, the Masonic procession was reformed and returned to the Lodge Room, amidst music by the band which led the procession to the door of the Masonic Hall.

About 300 guests sat down to a sumptuous Dinner served by Bro. William Barnwell in Hawes Hall. The Banquet was enjoyed all the more because conducted on total abstinence principles.

Many from abroad remained until the Concert in the evening, which was largely attended by old and young, who enjoyed the promenading to the excellent music of the Danville Band—the social chat,—and the songs and impromptu speeches and all the other parts of the entertainment conducted in the style in which the Danville people know so well how to do such things. All the people were unbounded in their courtesy and hospitality to their guests, and too much praise cannot be awarded to the Mayors, Messrs. Boutelle and Bernard, and to the Marshals.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Flatulency, Nausea, and Indigestion.—Nothing depresses the mind more rapidly, or wears out the body much faster, than a stomach incapable of fully digesting its food. Indigestion renders life so miserable that from it springs most of the suicides which daily shock our nerves. If Holloway's Pills be taken regularly for a time, and his Ointment be twice daily rubbed over the digestive organs, these melancholy symptoms will soon cease, and pleasurable thoughts succeed the dismal forebodings engendered by dyspepsia, and which drive the sufferer to misery and despair. Holloway's priceless preparations, by briskly acting on the liver and other internal organs, have long stood prominently forward for the wonderful cures effected by them.—[Adv.]

THE PLAIN OF PHILISTIA.

BY CAPTAIN WARREN, R.E.

The hills about bear witness of there having been once an industrious race inhabiting these parts, but the words of King Solomon may apply to the present owners: "I went by the field of the slothful and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding: And, lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof, and the stone wall thereof was broken down. Then I saw and considered it well; yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep; so shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man."

Photograph No. 271 gives a view of the valley of Zorah, and No. 272 of a curious monument placed upon a hill one mile to the west of the village; the top stone is 6ft. long and 3ft. by 2ft., and has a groove 2in. deep and 3 broad down the centre of each side—it appears to have been for a mill of some sort, probably for olives. The hill country commences to the east of 'Ain Shems, and the valley of Surah is seen no longer, being broken up into the defiles of W. Ismail, Mutūk, al Balūt, and others coming down from the hills; there are many ruins about the broken ground formed by the junction of these wadies, and no doubt it was once densely populated. Many cut stones were found about of large size, which had been used as mills. In W. Mutūk, near Teshua, we found running water and a spring hard by, but it is soon absorbed by the thirsty soil.

Near Tantūrah there are the remains of a tower 30ft. square, of large square stones. The ruins of 'Ain Shems extends many hundred yards east and west. The points were fixed independently by Lieut. Anderson and myself; in our longitude we differ somewhat, and in our latitude one-quarter of a minute (in my letter, 22nd Nov., 1867, printed in the Times and in the "Quarterly Report," this difference was given as four minutes, the one-quarter being turned into four.)

June 15.—We left 'Ain Shems 2.5 p.m., and arrived at a spring, Ben el Lemūn, at 2.45, and keeping to south arrived at Tibneh at 3.30. There are few vestiges here except caves in the rock. Close to is El Bureij, where we arrived at 3.43. Passing from here west we were at Ammūrieh at 4.20 p.m., where there are the remains of a castle, and progressing to west, at 4.57 we came on Khubel Ferrad, where there are extensive ruins; keeping to west several observations were taken, until it became quite dark, and our guide brought us back over the hills to Beit Kalif, 1200ft. This is a village of some importance at the present day, but it is not mentioned in Scripture. We here experienced the difficulties of Eastern hospitalities; we had run out of bread, but were too numerous a party to sponge upon our neighbours, and the people absolutely refused to sell, as they considered it too degrading; our dragoman had to go from house to house and beg a loaf from each, which we found means to repay afterwards.

June 17.—Leaving Beit Kalif at 6.45 a.m., we passed Neby Bulus and Telu Alia and Yarmuth (Jarmuch), where there are extensive ruins, and passing through wadies and marshes we ascended the hill of Keishūm (1150 feet), and leaving El Gina to our right we traversed a range of hills bounding Wādy Sumt to the north. On our way we met two old men, who assured us that the country belonged to the Christians—the constant repetition of this maxim sometimes appeared to be satirical.

11.5 a.m. we passed Moghullis, and passing a quarry to the left, arrived at Shukh Dand at noon; here we were (600ft.) on a projecting spur, 1½ mile due north of Tel es Safiyeh. From this, proceeding down to the plain due north, we came upon a very extensive ruin in the valley, called K. er Rassim (foundations), and after examining the country arrived at Tel Takariyeh by sunset.

We were now in the valley of Elah, and from this point I surveyed the country to east and south. On 19th June examined the country about Um Burj, and found extensive Christian remains on the brows of hills, large lintels 6ft. long and 2ft. thick, with crosses, &c., sculptured on them; the stone has a bell-like sound when struck, and is of soft mezzeh. Near Um Burj is a cave, or columbarium. On getting on the hog's-back, on which is the ruin Jedaidah, we appeared to be amongst ancient remains, but before this everything to-day seemed to be of the Christian period. Arrived in evening at Tel Bulnard, two miles N.W. of Beil Jebrin.

June 20.—Musa, who had gone up to Jerusalem for bread arrived in an exhausted state, having been pursued by two mounted and four foot Bedouins; he had turned down Wādy es Sumt and come over the hills, leaving his pursuers behind. We were engaged the whole day in examining the country up to Arak Menshiyeh, where we encamped. Here there is a strange mound of earth (see photograph

No. 274), called the Arak, while the village is distant some 400 yards or so. This mound is triangular in plan, and appears to be of Assyrian origin: it would be very desirable to cut a hole through it and examine its contents.

June 21.—We passed down by Falagy, past the ruins of Eglon and Lakis, and villages of Bureir and Simsim to Nigid. Nothing remains to be described here after the account of Dr. Robinson. At Eglon we found Bedouins from the south, but one of them got his ears boxed by Capt. Phillips for venturing too close to his horse, and they did not bother us further.

WE are informed that the Right Hon. the Earl Percy, M.P., Prov. Grand Master for Northumberland, has forwarded a subscription of two guineas to the "Wentworth Little" Testimonial Fund. It is expected that the testimonial will be presented at a public Masonic dinner as early as possible during the coming Masonic season.

CROSBY'S BALSAMIC COUGH ELIXIR.
DISEASES OF THE LUNGS AND AIR-VESSELS.
CROSBY'S BALSAMIC COUGH ELIXIR.

Opiates, Narcotics, and Squills are too often invoked to give relief in Coughs, Colds, and all Pulmonary diseases. Instead of such fallacious remedies, which yield momentary relief at the expense of enfeebling the digestive organs and thus increasing that debility which lies at the root of the malady, modern science points to CROSBY'S BALSAMIC COUGH ELIXIR as the true remedy.

SELECT TESTIMONIAL.

Dr. Rooke, Scarborough, author of the "Anti-Lancet," says: "I have repeatedly observed how very rapidly and invariably it subdued cough, pain, and irritation of the chest in cases of Pulmonary Consumption, and I can, with the greatest confidence, recommend it as a most valuable adjunct to an otherwise strengthening treatment for this disease."

This medicine, which is free from opium and squills, not only allays the local irritation, but improves digestion and strengthens the constitution. Hence it is used with the most signal success in Asthmas, Bronchitis, Consumption, Coughs, Influenza, Night Sweats of Consumption, Quinsy, and all affections of the throat and chest. Sold in bottles at 1s. 9d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. each, by all respectable Chemists, and wholesale by Jas. M. Crosby, Chemist, Scarborough.

FREDERICK the GREAT as a MASON.

Frederick II., while still a prince, was initiated in Masonry, but never dared, during his father's lifetime, to acknowledge the fact. When he ascended the throne, in 1749, he founded a lodge at Berlin, to which he gave the name of "The Three Globes," which is now the national mother lodge of Prussia. During the first year of his reign he founded a lodge, of which he held the gavel as Master. This lodge was composed of his most intimate friends—men of tried loyalty and morality. In the restricted circle of the lodge—composed of but twenty-four members—was a man who betrayed at once his King, his country, and the Craft, and toward whom Frederick, moved by superhuman generosity, acted as a king and a Mason. General Walrave, a favourite of the king, and a member of the lodge over which he presided, allowed himself to be seduced by the love of money, and opened a correspondence with Vienna to sell Austria the plans of the fortress of Neise, with indications of the mines and their connection with the works. The General was watched, and the first letter he attempted to send was intercepted and taken to Frederick, who broke the seal, and had before him the ocular proof of Walrave's crime. After a long reflection, Frederick arrived at a conclusion, which proves him to have been a true Mason. He called a meeting of the lodge, and delivered an address, in which he spoke with moving eloquence of the duties of every Mason toward the Craft, his country, and rising from his seat, concluded with these words: "One of the brethren here present, violating at once the laws of the Fraternity, his duty to the State, and his obligation, forgetting all sentiments of fidelity toward his Master and his king, has been guilty of a capital crime. As a king I desire to ignore it, as a Master I pardon him, as a brother I extend my hand to raise him from his fallen condition, as a man I would forget the past. I only require that he here acknowledge his crime and promise amendment, and all shall remain among ourselves, and will never be mentioned again. But if he is silent, and will not accept the pardon offered, I give notice that I shall be obliged to quit this lodge for ever, and that as king and chief magistrate of the country, I shall be obliged to place him in the hands of justice."

Silence and consternation fell upon the assembly, and there was no explanation of the king's terrible words. Walrave himself did not suspect that his treason had been discovered, and that the words were intended for him. After a brief interval, Frederick repeated what he had said. Silence followed. A third time he pronounced them, but there was no response. With tears in his eyes, the king continued: "As a Mason I have discharged my duty. Unhappily, I am forced to the conviction that no Masonic sentiment pervades this small assembly of initiates; that obligation, fidelity, duty, gratitude, are impotent to blind men and restrain their passions. I shall for the last time proceed to close, and never again will I preside." With due solemnity the closing rites were performed, and then, with uncovered head, the monarch deposited his gavel. In the ante-room he ordered Gen. Walrave to surrender his sword, and placed him under arrest. He was subsequently condemned to perpetual imprisonment, in a prison which had previously been constructed under his own supervision. Originally destined for a prison of state, it had been so constructed as to render escape or suicide impossible. The prisoner, could not even wound himself by striking his head against the walls, which were padded and covered with black. Walrave passed seven years in this narrow prison, with no light but a faint ray coming from the top of the prison, without books, pens, paper or ink, given up to himself and his remorse. No one was allowed to speak to him, not even the officers who took him his food, which he was obliged to eat without a fork, knife, or spoon. At the end of the seven years he was transferred to another and less terrible prison, where he had a small garden, could breathe the air, and move about. Here he remained until his death in 1776, twenty years. Once only Walrave sought pardon by sending the king the 89th Psalm, to which the king responded by sending in return the 101st. The circumstances here related prevented Frederick from ever again being present at a Lodge, but he never ceased to be a friend of the Craft.—Landmark.

FREEMASONRY & ISRAELITISM.

BY BRO. WILLIAM CARPENTER, P.M. & P.Z. 177.

XV.

In my last paper I glanced at the extent to which the Anglo-Saxon race inhabiting these islands had possessed themselves of the desolate places of the earth, and had there planted more or less prosperous colonies, encompassing the two hemispheres. The achievement has been a marvellous one, and it has so struck foreigners, some of whom, even of our own race, doubting whether we had not thus been exhausting our own population. Emerson, describing the "spawning power" of the Anglo-Saxon race occupying the British islands, says: "It has sufficed to the colonisation of great parts of the world; yet, it remains to be seen whether they can make good the exodus of millions from Great Britain, amounting, in 1852, to more than 1000 a day." Yes, they have made it good, for whereas the population in 1851 was 27,825,274, it was, in 1861, 28,927,485, and in 1871, is 31,817,108; the increase since 1851 having been 3,991,834—that is, 14.13 per cent. The prophecies run, that the seed of Abraham not only were to become nations and inherit the earth; they were to become great and powerful nations, not exhausting themselves by sending their children forth into other regions. To Jacob it was said (Gen. xxxv. 11), "A nation and a company of nations shall be of thee;" but of Ephraim it was said (Gen. xlvi. 19), "His seed shall become a multitude of nations." In the margin of the English Bible, multitude is rendered fullness, which is the better translation, the Hebrew being mele, which primarily signifies, to fill, or, to fill up. As applied to a nation, the idea is that of a populous one—a considerable one—not a petty state.

And where shall we find such nations as those planted by the Anglo-Saxon race? This "right little tight little island," too, is, with one exception, the most densely populated in the world. With a territorial area of less than one-third of France (before the late war), it has a population equal to seven-ninths of hers. France had a population of 175 to the square mile, while England has 397 to the square mile, and though but "a little spot," she has withstood the world in arms. Then, look at the nations she has planted—the United States, the Canadas, and other North American States, the peninsula of India, the Australian continent and islands, South Africa, &c. Look, also, at the nations of North Germany, now consolidated, and bidding fair to become the strongest of the Continental powers. And although some other nations which are of Anglo-Saxon origin have not such large territorial possessions, they are powerful in proportion to their numbers. They do not consist of puny peoples, who bow their heads and crouch down in the presence of hostile powers, albeit they may be of much greater prowess than themselves. Let this fact be noted, that the British colonies, alone—that is, the States which Great Britain has planted—without taking into consideration lands and countries in which she has settlements, or exercises political influence—embrace about one-third of the surface of the globe, and nearly a fourth of its population. If to this we add those independent nations which are of Anglo-Saxon origin, as North Germany, Belgium, Holland, Switzerland, part of France, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and those parts of the Turkish Empire west of the Black Sea, which have so far thrown off the yoke of Turkey as now to be little more than the nominal subjects of the Sultan, it may be said that the seed of Jacob already possesses one-half of the earth, and rules the world. Fifteen years ago, Emerson, to give an idea of the Anglo-Saxon power of only England and America, said: "The British Empire is reckoned to contain 222,000,000 souls—perhaps a fifth of the population of the globe; and to comprise a territory of 5,000,000 square miles. Add the United States of America, which reckon, exclusive of slaves, 20,000,000 of people, and a territory of 3,000,000 square miles, and in which the foreign element, however considerable, is rapidly assimilated, and you have a population of English descent, and language of 60,000,000, and governing a population of 245,000,000 souls."

Another thing to be noticed here is the likening the horn of Joseph's posterity to the horn of the unicorn (licem), with which horn he is to "push the people together to the ends of the earth; and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim and the thousands of Manasseh" (ver. 17). What does this mean? Every reader of the Bible knows that the horn is often the symbol of strength—the strength of most horned animals being in their horns. To exalt the horn is to augment the strength, power, or importance of an individual or of a people; and, in like manner, to cut off the horn is to bring them down, or prostrate them. We are by no means certain of the animal Moses calls the "Reem." Amongst the conjectures that have been put forward, that which supposes it to be the rhinoceros appears to me to be the best sustained. The Scripture references to the animal show it to be one possessing great strength, and the horn of the rhinoceros, which stands erect, at a right angle with the os frontis, unlike the horns of other animals, possesses, as a consequence, a greater purchase, or power, as a lever, than a horn could have possessed in any other position. To this the psalmist, no doubt, alludes, when he says: "My horn shalt Thou exalt like the horn of a Reem." Mr. Bruce (Travels, vol. v., p. 95) describes the rhinoceros as being so strong in this horn that he thrusts it into the trunk of a large tree, near the ground, and so tears it up as to reduce it to thin pieces, like so many laths. Well, then, the strength of these descendants of Joseph was to be exceeding great, so great as to be comparable with that of the strongest animal known; and with this strength they were to "push the people together to the ends of the earth." A similar idea occurs in Psalm xlv.: "Through Thee will we push down our enemies . . . for I will not trust in my bow, neither shall my sword save me." These sons of Israel, then, are to "push the peoples to the ends of the earth." Wherever they locate themselves, they are thus to drive the aborigines to the ends or extremities of the land (or earth). How markedly this has been done by the Anglo-Saxons is known to all. In these islands, the Britons were driven to the "ends," taking refuge in Cornwall and Wales. In North America, India, Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand, and other settlements, there has been the same "pushing." The aborigines have been pushed further and further away from the Anglo-Saxon settlements—would I could add, that in thus pushing them to the ends of the lands, we had always evinced the humanity upon which we so greatly pride ourselves. But the fact remains. With our "horn," or power, we have pushed them away from our dwelling-places, and have too often treated them as if they had been wild beasts; as, indeed, they have sometimes shown themselves to be, in cunning, treachery, and ferocity. Nevertheless, the fact, as I have said, remains: that the Anglo-Saxons (Israel), whatever places they have colonised, there, as with the horn of the reem, they have "pushed" the natives far away.

But Israel was not only to people many lands, and to encompass the earth, giving birth to powerful nations, but also to give birth to kings. This was the promise to both Abraham and his wife: "Kings shall come out of thee," said the Lord to the father of many nations (Gen. xvii. 6); and the promise was repeated in chap. xxxv. 11; while of Sarah it was said: "She shall be a mother of nations; kings of people shall be of her" (chap. xvii. 16). And so closely were they to be identified with monarchs, that kings were to be their foster-fathers, and queens their nursing mothers (Isa. xlix. 23). How completely, and almost peculiarly, this has been fulfilled in the Anglo-Saxon race every one knows. Even while, as Goths, they dwelt in the wildernesses on the Euxine, they elected a king (Alaric), who became the terror of the Roman world, and under whom and his successors the Goths made settlements throughout Europe. After they had founded many well-ordered communities in North Germany, they took possession of these islands, and here established seven separate kingdoms, under so many kings, which ultimately became one great State, under Egbert (A.D. 827), the sole descendant of those first conquerors of Britain. His grandson, the great Alfred, settled the kingdom upon a basis which has never been subverted, and developed those institutions of which Englishmen are justly proud, and which they are gradually spreading throughout the earth. The preponderating power of the aristocracy, which grew out of the feudal system, has, at various times, menaced the monarchy, but the revolutions through which the country has passed have left the monarchy intact; and with the short interregnum, during which the supreme power was exercised by Oliver Cromwell, the institution has been sustained, and has flourished, the throne being filled by the descendants of the Getæ—Saxon, Norman, and German. No other people can point to such a line of kings; and no man who finds a place on the page of history has given birth to such a line of sovereigns.

In the review I have taken of the migrations, conquests, and settlements of the Israelites, as represented in that great branch of the stem known as Anglo-Saxons, I have incidentally noticed their instrumentality in conferring upon peoples who were previously fast bound in the chains of barbarism the blessings of religion and civilisation. It has, by dint of frequent iteration, become almost the fashion with Englishmen to speak depreciatingly of England, and to compare her unfavourably with her former self. It would almost seem as if Englishmen had become ashamed of patriotism, and that it was heroic to depreciate and degrade their country. But that is an hallucination that will have its crisis and die out. He who reviews the past of England, and justly estimates her present place and character in the world, will not hesitate to apostrophise her as "Fair Amphitrite of the northern wave!

The hardy mother of the great and brave!
Thy strength thou dost not wield to crush,
oppress,
Disturb a world, or make men's pleasures less.
Thou bid'st injustice cease, and right be done,
Hailing, as brothers, all beneath the sun:
The oppres't afar ne'er plead to thee in vain,
The slave that plucks thy robe, lets fall his chain;
The exiled, wronged, whate'er their sorrows be,
Haste to thy side, and find a friend in thee."

She has been, as in God's providence she was destined to be, the standard of the Lord to the nations, who were to be exalted in knowledge and in the fear of the Lord, through the presence and in association with His people. They were to be given as a covenant of the people; to restore the earth and replenish the desolate places (Isa. xlix. 8). The same Providence which distributed the people, and settled the boundaries of their habitations, at the dispersion of Babel, fixing and limiting their possessions so as to lay out a field, as it were, to be cultivated and made fruitful by the seed of Jacob, in the latter days, is too evidently accomplished to leave the high purposes of God a matter of doubt. It has been well said, that "the events of history have the coherence and unity of a moral drama;" and God, according to His ancient promises, has made the commerce, the political influence, the naval and military prowess, the language and literature, the civil liberty and the religious enlightenment of the Anglo-Saxons of these our islands, the means of leavening the world, impressing the progressive race of mankind with holy principles towards God, with the honourable desire, and the steadfast resolution of obtaining better governments than the old despotisms, and a purer faith than the ancient superstitions. So that the old political and religious absolutisms, which were founded upon the assumption, that states and churches should be established for the benefit of priests and rulers alone, should, instead, be founded, established, and preserved for the peace, happiness, and benefit of the ruled and rulers alike. As Emerson says, "England has inoculated all nations with her civilisations, intelligence, and tastes."

When we look through the world, and notice the changes that are taking place, though accompanied by many troubles and much suffering, may we not hope that we are approaching the time when every nation shall regard itself as one political and religious society, honouring and encouraging each other to honour and worship the God of Israel, whose name shall be feared from the west, and His glory from the rising of the sun (Isa. lix. 19). Whatever brightness distinguishes the aspect of society at the present day, is almost wholly due to the principles which the Anglo-Saxons have carried abroad. Heathen virtue received its broadest expansion in the exercise of patriotism, not always free from personal bigotry and pride; but philanthropy is the nobler product of a more catholic and holy faith. "The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty," but the light of The Truth has humanized and expanded the affections, and revealed more clearly the mutual brotherhood of mankind. There is much corruption and misery still in the world, but the world is much better than it was. Bad as war is, it is not the frightful thing it was. The world is not now owned by a few despots as uncontrolled and as cruel as were the monarchs of ancient times. Formerly, the great mass of every nation was in a state of bondage, far more oppressive and galling than that under which the negro has groaned in modern times, and when their slaves grew too numerous they were massacred by thousands. We feel that there is something in the very air which makes these things now impossible. We call it public opinion, for lack of knowing what it is. It is easy to give it a name; but what has given this public opinion its power, and how has this public opinion been formed? Was there no public opinion in those old times? Why is the tyrant much more susceptible now than then? Why is he so much more powerless for evil? The Greeks were educated men, yet they murdered their Helots without mercy. The Romans were famed for their manliness and spirit of justice, yet 80,000 of them could assemble in the amphitheatre, to see, and exult over, men and women being thrown to the lions. It is the spirit which the Anglo-Saxons have been the means of diffusing which is raising and liberating the nations—nothing else has ever had the power. Let it be observed, too, that there can scarcely be said to be any living power outside of Christendom. The aboriginal races of America, Australia, and Polynesia, if they do not become absorbed, as few of them do, die out. Of Asia, the seat of the great ancient empires, and the oracles of civilisation, an intelligent observer thus wrote in 1861, and it is more forcibly true now: "The vast Asiatic monarchies do not merely yield to an external pressure; they are all, simultaneously, rotting down. The Sultan with difficulty holds together the shattered fragments of his empire. His army is weak, his finances are dependent upon loans from Paris and London, his cities are universally decaying. In India, the only vitality left is that of Europeans. The educated Hindoos, whatever their merits, have lost all their originality.

Indeed, if our experience in Hindostan is to be our guide, the vital force of the Asiatic is extinct. For two whole years (during the great mutiny) the people of Upper India were practically free. All India, thus fairly brought to the test, did not produce one statesman, one organizer, one leader, with more than the capacity of a bandit. The race who organised the system of castes placidly mimicked the conqueror's notions of civil order. The King of Burmah lives on small monopolies of produce, and his empire is maintained only because its profitable provinces are in English hands. The empire of Cochin-China is too weak to drive 150 sickly Frenchmen from the gates of its capital. Russia takes slices from Turkey at her own convenience. An English remonstrance sends the Sherceef of Mecca into exile. The action of Persia is regulated from St. Petersburg. The King of Siam speaks English, and releases Europeans from the operations of his laws. Malaga is a tributary of a London bonding-warehouse. The islands of the Archipelago are ruled by princes who succeed or fail, as they please or displease the Dutch. In China, the Emperor of one-third of the human race has had his capital entered, his palace burned, and absolute submission extorted from him, by an Anglo-Saxon army, half as large as his own body-guard. Japan, the last of these Eastern peoples, is succumbing to the power of these nations." What is the marvellous phenomena which passes before our eyes? It is a phenomena to which history shows us no parallel. It is evident that among the Christian nations, by some means, and for some reason, there has appeared an energy hitherto unknown among men. There is a power which is breaking every yoke, of body and of mind, and setting all captives free. And this, because, first of all, it sets thought free—or, rather, it creates thought, by which man releases and engages in his service agencies that have slept in the cavern of nature during all past ages. This Divine influence, in the countries into which it has been introduced, has created for us modes of thought and principles of action from which no man can escape. Its effects have been accumulating for ages, and in many ways. The influence penetrates into every family, every society, every institution, and every government. It influences and directs every educational effort, and becomes, recognised and unrecognised, as universal in its operations as the air we breathe. All literature, even language itself, becomes impregnated with it. It becomes part of our mental nature, and thence it builds up organs in the brain itself, so as to fix its foundations in the corporeal structures of men. Its claims continually become more urgent. It quickens intellect and the moral nature. It continually becomes less possible to resist it without visibly sinking to ruin by its rejection. Even bad men are obliged to pay deference to its righteous principles, while labouring to depreciate and destroy the medium through which they come. Before this power, old corporations, old religions, and old systems stand paralysed. Among the Anglo-Saxon nations, alone, has this new power appeared, and the rest are withering away, like the trees of a forest in the breath of a conflagration. It is but stating a simple fact to say that they "sit in darkness"—it is as though an infernal power had charmed them into a living death. They wait, benumbed and torpid, some change which no one foresees which may awaken them to new life, or utterly destroy them.

THE NEW CONSTITUTIONS OF
GRAND LODGE OF IRELAND.

A full decade has passed away since the last edition of the Constitutions was issued by the Grand Lodge of Ireland, and the authorities are now contemplating another edition being published, for which purpose a series of suggested Laws have been printed for circulation amongst the members of the Grand Lodge throughout the country, so as to secure the general opinion of the Craft on the subject. Too much care cannot be observed in the making of new Laws, and, on the other hand, if any of the old regulations have been proved defective, it would be sheer folly to retain them simply on account of their antiquity!

A number of "Prayers to be used in Lodges" commences the work, and although several are of a Christian character (and actually as those used generally during the last century), other prayers suitable for the most particular are likewise inserted, and can be delivered by "Jews, Turks, or Parsees," with the greatest propriety. In the excellent form of installation that follows, a note is appended, which we wish were also to be found in our Constitutions for England. Brethren, Past Masters, will recollect that upon being installed as Worshipful Master they each promised "A regular attendance on the communications and committees of the Grand Lodge, upon receiving proper notice thereof," although several had no idea of attending Grand Lodge, some never intended doing so during their year of office; and, accordingly, many actually promised what they never performed! The Grand Lodge of Ireland wisely adds: "This charge is not to be read unless the lodge is situate in a town where the Grand Lodge is held." The retention of this clause in our Constitutions, to be read to and agreed by every Master on his installation, is certainly most unadvisable for country members, and we would therefore most respectfully suggest either the addition after the words "Grand Lodge," or Provincial or District Grand Lodges, or "to be read on the installation of Masters within the London district."

The officers of the lodges under Ireland are each suitably addressed by the Installing Master according to a proscribed ritual, and informed of their duties. Past Masters under the Irish Constitution can secure their right to vote in Grand Lodge by taking out a Past Master's certificate, for which a fee is to be paid of five shillings. This is a law that we never remember being made under any other Grand Lodge, and one which we believe to be an innovation, as also the law which will enable a Past Master, a Grand, or Past Grand Officer, retaining all their rights in Grand Lodge, by payment of two pounds annually to that body, even when they do not belong to any lodge! The essence of all representation in Grand Lodge is subserviation to a Craft Lodge, and of all innovations that carry with them the most probably pernicious influences, surely it is the law which enables a number of brethren to vote in Grand Lodge, and retain their rank and privileges, without contributing one farthing to the support of a lodge under their jurisdiction! Such a law would not be tolerated in England for a minute, and we think that if it is carried by the Grand Lodge of Ireland, the brethren ere long will find it a most objectionable and unmasonic regulation. There is not a law of any Grand Lodge held anywhere in the world that is more entirely subversive of the true principles of representation than this, and for Masons to continue Past Masters and still be accounted Grand Officers, without being subscribing members to a lodge, is, to say the least, wholly unwarrantable in Freemasonry, and without any precedent whatever under the ancient Laws of the Craft. The Grand Lodge Regulations for Ireland (as also for England) provide for the admission of visitors at Grand Lodge, only on permission being first obtained from the Grand Master or from the Presiding Officer. Any member "being a representative of a lodge in the Dublin district shall be fined one shilling" for non-attendance. "Provincial Grand Officers take rank in Grand Lodge, and are entitled to vote." We cannot see the force of this regulation, because a Provincial Grand Lodge is formed for the convenience of the brethren who are so far removed from the city wherein the Grand Lodge is held as to render their attendance at its meetings inconvenient. To give such brethren votes in their provinces, and by virtue of being Prov. G. Officers, votes in Grand Lodge, savours to our ideas too much of a double representation. "No member of the Grand Lodge, or visitor thereto, shall be permitted to wear any jewel, medal, or device belonging to any order or degree beyond that of Master Mason, in which, however, the jewel of a Past Master is considered to be included." This is a most wholesome regulation, and one even more restrictive in its character than prevails in England.

A committee, consisting of the Grand Officers and Provincial Grand Officers, have the power to meet a fortnight before the Grand Lodge is held in January, and agree to the list of officers of the Grand Lodge for the ensuing year (excepting the Deputy Grand Master). At the meeting in January any member of the Grand Lodge may propose any other qualified brethren, "who must be Past Masters and Master Masons of five years' standing," for such offices, and the election would take place in April. This method of electing Grand Officers appears to be gaining in popularity, and, with few exceptions, is very generally practised in the United States, and in Scotland. In England, such appointments are the prerogative of the Grand Master, and we are inclined to give the precedence to such a mode, especially as it carries with it more compliment to the presiding officer. There are weighty reasons, however, on the other side, and it would be well—for the reasons offered by the Grand Lodges who adopt the elective system—to be carefully studied by English brethren, so as that they may judge practically of the benefits of both systems.

The 24th proposed law is a strange one. It reads as follows: "A discretionary power is vested in the presiding officer of rejecting any notice of motion, if such shall be deemed by him improper, unlawful, or inconsistent with the ancient landmarks of the Order." Surely, this needs alteration? Of what possible use is the latter clause but to mislead and complicate the matter? What are the "ancient landmarks" of the Order? In the absence of any definition, who is to be the judge, and is it desirable to leave such an arbitrary power in the hands of the presiding officer? So long as any proposition is in accordance with the Laws of the Grand Lodge for the time being nothing more can be fairly required, and any additional qualification is both unnecessary and illogical. The Grand Lodge virtually decides what degrees shall be worked beyond the Craft, although no other clothing, jewel, &c., than those appertaining to Craft Masonry can be worn in a lodge. Any brother being a member of any lodge on the Registry of Ireland who "shall join or become a member of any body or society, purporting to be Masonic, and not in connection with, or sanctioned by, the Grand Lodge, or other Masonic Grand Body recognised by it, shall be liable to suspension, or such other penalty as Grand Lodge may think fit." Of course, the members can, and no doubt will, carry this regulation, and be doing Craft Masonry a service, as it prevents the growth of mushroom Grand Bodies that crop up periodically in some countries; but, we think, before this regulation is agreed to, it should be defined as having relation only to what Irish Masons do in Ireland—e.g., we know some most excellent Masons under the Irish Jurisdiction who have joined the Royal Order of Scotland, a more ancient degree than which (excepting the Craft) does not exist anywhere; and yet it is not recognised by any of the "Grand Bodies in connection with the Grand Lodge of Ireland"! We might mention other degrees as well, given in other countries, which our respected Irish brethren belonged to, and therefore our suggestion is certainly worthy of consideration. After the word "society" there should be added, in Ireland. The constitution of the "Board of General Purposes" is so different to a similar body under the Grand Lodge of England, that it would be impossible to consider the respective advantages of the two systems in a short paper like the present. Annual fees are to be paid by the Grand Officers, varying from £1 1s. to £3 3s., which are handed to the Secretary of the Masonic schools, and also £2 annually to the Grand Lodge. A warrant is to cost £7, a dispensation £1, registration fee and certificate 15s. The lowest initiation fee for lodges in the Dublin district is £4 5s., and the minimum for country lodges £2 5s. The former should be in the place of the latter, and then Dublin district made proportionately higher. We believe in high initiation fees and small annual subscriptions, unless a certain proportion is retained of the latter on behalf of our great charities. Candidates for initiation in Dublin have to be approved of by "Committee of Charity and Inspection," and a fee of £2 12s. 6d. has to be paid to Grand Lodge for each of such initiates. Brethren must be Master Masons before being entitled to vote in a lodge. "Every lodge shall have a seal with an impression of a hand and trowel, encircled with the name of the place where such lodge is held and its number and name, if any, wherewith to verify the lodge transactions." It is also provided that the first and third degrees can only be conferred on one candidate at the same time, and a less interval than one month between the conferring of the degrees is permitted on the Master, Wardens and Secretary being satisfied of the emergency. Although in some respects we suffer in England because of the stringency of our laws with respect to the three degrees, and the month between each before their being given, on the whole it is for the advantage of the candidates, and adds to the solemnity and importance of the ceremony. To give the three on one night reduces them to a low level indeed, and certainly cannot impress the candidate, or be any way the means of properly instructing him in the mysteries of Freemasonry. "Ballotting must in all cases be with beans, one black bean to exclude except in the case of brethren already members of the Order." We hope ere long to see the following law adopted by the Grand Lodge of England; it has been found to work well in Ireland for many years, and it is also a Regulation in several Provincial Grand Lodges under the English Constitution:—"A lodge shall not ballot for nor initiate into Freemasonry any person who is not a resident in the town, village, or neighbourhood in which the lodge into which he seeks to be admitted holds its meetings, until due enquiry shall have been made of such lodge or lodges as may exist in the neighbourhood of his residence, respecting the character of the applicant for admission, and a satisfactory reply shall have been received and read in open lodge."

The Provincial Grand Lodges have to meet four times in each year for the dispatch of business. If the Prov. G.M. dies, the authority of the Deputy Prov. G.M. is continued for six months after that period, or until a successor be appointed.

The following is the agreement made by the Grand Lodge with the "other Masonic" bodies: "Any brother expelled, suspended, or restored by the Grand Royal Arch Chapter, the Grand Encampment of High Knights Templar, the Grand Chapter of Prince Masons of Ireland, or the Supreme Council of the 33rd Degree for Ireland, shall, on the case being officially communicated to the Grand Lodge of Ireland, be expelled, suspended, or restored, as the case may be, without any further enquiry or investigation." If the members of the Grand Lodge carry this law in its entirety, they will deserve the evil effects that must follow eventually.

COMMITTEES OF TASTE.

The engraving of "the jewel of the Grand Patron of the Order in Ireland," as published by a contemporary, is one of those remarkable and primitive efforts that carry the imagination back far anterior to the most ancient schools of design. Whether the designer's fancy was running on a pair of ornamental scissors resting with open shears on a fine cushion, or on the gastronomic beauties of a tartlet, and grape-scissors with a plumed handle, it is impossible to say. Again, the general contour reminds one of those convenient little flasks of brandy which one meets with in railway travelling, but where beauty has such a diversity of types, it is by no means easy to determine to which it belongs.

The engraving in question has led me to consider, whether a committee of taste, composed entirely of disinterested artists should not be convened to consider the present deplorable state of Masonic jewellery. With forms of beauty open to all, and a mass of symbolic characters adaptable to almost any design, it is nevertheless remarkable that we Masons, instead of initiating the delicate proportions and finish of knightly badges and decorations which, at any rate, have an artistic effect at a levee or drawing-room, persist in quarrying huge and tasteless lumps of silver, and decorating them with cumbrous and ineffective ornaments in the most vicious style of art—if, indeed, art is a word that can be applied to such rude designs. But even where Masonic jewellery is small, it still preserves the same humiliating poverty of invention, as though only in the Craft itself no true son of Tubal Cain were to be found!

To return, however, to the strange subject of the engraving. There is absolutely no excuse for a clumsy and ponderous design, when we consider that the artist had at his command gold, silver, blue enamel, diamonds, and rubies for his materials; and for his design, the plastic shanrock, the graceful plume and ducal coronet, and a square and compass that, with the least eye to art, might have been relieved of their excessive formality, standing out as they do from a flat and incongruous blue platter. Moreover, the crown in this design is not correctly represented—it is not the Prince's.

I do not mean to hurt the artist's feelings, and as an artist there is little chance of my doing so, but as a liberal-minded Mason, I wish to see our gifts equal to those of other institutions, and not more costly. Why should our jewellery be so absurdly primitive and rude?

SPONSOR-FOR-APEX.

N.B.—The writer has a collection of his own designs (not executed for sale, but for the love of Art and Masonry), and if published, he would rely for judgment on their merits on any art-educated Mason. These designs would be presented to any Grand Lodge that would cast off the present wretched style of Masonic design.

THE FORTHCOMING LIVERPOOL ART EXHIBITION.—This year Liverpool will have an exhibition of paintings in oil and water colours in many respects superior to anything previously shown in the town. Formerly there were art exhibitions under the auspices of public societies, but latterly the only opportunities afforded of inspecting works of art have been provided by private firms or individuals; and though in some instances the collections have contained paintings of a very high order of merit, many of the works shown have been but little above mediocrity, and some of them mere contemptible daubs. In taking the requisite steps for an autumn exhibition this year, the town council has given a guarantee that the collection shall comprise only works of a high order, and in that respects that it shall be far superior to any of its predecessors. This exhibition is to include works of modern artists whose productions may have adorned the walls of some of the best metropolitan exhibitions in this present year, every picture of which will have affixed to it the price at which it will be sold. Four capacious rooms in the Free Library and Museum have been devoted to the exhibition, and the hanging committee are now actively engaged in arranging the places for the pictures. The exhibition, which will open on the 4th September, will comprise about 200 productions of the leading artists of the day, many of them brought from the Old and New Water Colours Society, the Dudley Gallery and the Suffolk-street Gallery, and will continue open to the end of October. There will also be some very fine statuary. At present the arrangements are in so crude a state that it is impossible to give anything like a fair idea of the works sent from all parts of the kingdom; but when the hanging is completed a day will be set aside for a private view.

GRAND LODGE.

The order of the business to be transacted in Grand Lodge on Wednesday, 6th September, 1871, will be as follows:—

1. The minutes of the Quarterly Communication of the 7th June for confirmation.
2. Report of the Board of Benevolence for the last quarter, in which is a recommendation for the following grant, viz.: The widow of the late Bro. G. W., of the Caveac Lodge, No. 176, London, £50.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF GENERAL PURPOSES. To the United Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of England.

The Board of General Purposes beg to report as follows:—

In consequence of the last issue of the 32mo. edition of the Book of Constitutions being nearly exhausted, the Board have directed a reprint of 5000 copies of that edition.

A letter has been received from Bro. Sigismund Rosenthal, P.M. No. 435, offering for the acceptance of Grand Lodge, on behalf of the Craft, a portrait, painted by himself, of the Right Honourable The Earl of Zetland, K.T., Most Worshipful Past Grand Master, in which letter Bro. Rosenthal states that the offer had the formal sanction of the Most Worshipful Past Grand Master, and that it was his Lordship's desire that the Portrait, if accepted, should be placed in the Board Room. The Board have consequently accepted the Portrait, on behalf of the Grand Lodge, with a proper expression of thanks to Bro. Rosenthal, and have had it placed in the Board Room accordingly.

The Board beg to subjoin a statement of the Grand Lodge Accounts at the last meeting of the Finance Committee, held on the 11th August, 1871, showing a balance in the hands of the Grand Treasurer of £3380 6s. 8d.; and in the hands of the Grand Secretary, for petty cash, £75.

ORDERS OF CHIVALRY.

RED CROSS OF CONSTANTINE.

A special conclave of the Red Cross Order was convened, under the auspices of the Macdonald Conclave, No. 14, on the evening of Thursday, the 24th ult., for the purpose of conferring the grades of the Order upon Ill. Bro. Jackson H. Chase, 33°, of New York, and other eminent brethren. The meeting was held in the "Crown" Room at Freemasons' Tavern, and although the notice to attend was extremely short—in fact, only twenty-four hours—the following knights answered to the muster-roll: Sir Kts. F. H. Gottlieb, 30°, F.P., Int. Gen. East. Archipelago; Major E. H. Finney, 31°, Int. Gen. Cambridge; R. Wentworth Little, 18°, G.R., Int. Gen. Unatt.; J. G. Marsh, G.A., Int. Gen. Essex; S. Rosenthal, 33°, P. Sov.; G. Kenning, 18°, K.G.C.; T. Burdett Yeoman, 18°; E. H. Thicellay, W. Carpenter, J. W. Barrett, 18°; J. S. Banning, J. W. Dawson, and J. Gilbert, Sentinel.

The conclave was duly opened by Sir Kt. Little, who explained that Ill. Bros. Chase and Thompson were unfortunately unable to be present, in consequence of an unforeseen occurrence; but that the candidates in attendance would be received. Bros. Thos. Meggy, P.M. 21, F. Davison, P.M. 10, H. Massey, P.M. 619, and John C. W. Bailey, 32°, of Chicago, editor of the Voice of Masonry, were then regularly introduced and installed as Knights of the Order. A College of Viceroys was opened, when Sir Kts. Banning, Meggy, and Bailey were admitted to the Priestly grade, and subsequently to the rank of Sovereigns of the Order.

The conclave was then closed, and the knights retired to the banqueting-room, where an excellent repast was served—the chair and vice-chair being filled by Sir Kts. Little and Rosenthal respectively. After the usual loyal and chivalric toasts, which were drunk with great cordiality, the Chairman proposed "The Healths of the Newly-Installed Companions-in-Arms," who, he said, were all distinguished members of the Craft, and would be ornaments to any society. The toast was, however, specially coupled with the name of Ill. Bro. Bailey, 32°, who has accompanied the American Templar tourists during their visit to Europe, and in the name of the Red Cross Order, the Chairman greeted him heartily as their guest that evening, and expressed the assurance that he would carry back with him to the great State of Illinois the good wishes of every English Mason for the prosperity of the American Craft. (Cheers.)

Sir Kt. Bailey said that, as an Englishman born, he felt delighted to revisit his native land, and as an American citizen, he rejoiced to witness the harmony and good feeling which now existed, not only between British and American Masons, but between the two nations themselves. He was proud of Masonry, for wherever he went he found good hearts and true amongst the Brotherhood, and in thanking them for the honour conferred upon him that evening, he might add that, without loss of time upon his return to Chicago, he intended to hoist the Red Cross banner, and to form a conclave. (Applause.) Sir Kt. Bailey concluded his eloquent speech by proposing "The Health of the Vice-Chairman, Sir Kt. Rosenthal," which was received with all the honours, and elicited a kindly response from the Acting Viceroy.

The Chairman said that he felt some diffidence in proposing the next toast, inasmuch as it might be called "drinking their own healths;" but he felt that some acknowledgment was due to the brethren who had attended at very brief notice, in order to assist in the ceremonials of the evening; and with the toast the name of the venerable and respected Sir Kt. William Carpenter was specially coupled.

Sir Kt. Wm. Carpenter returned thanks in very humorous terms, and trusted they might have many more such pleasant and harmonious gatherings.

The stirrup cup was then passed round, and the knights separated.

On Monday, the 28th ultimo, Ill. Bros. J. H. Chase, 33°, and C. H. Thompson, 33°, of New York, were duly received into the Order, and advanced to the Sovereign's grade, and Sir Kt. Chase was empowered to found three conclaves in the State of New York on his return to America.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are decidedly the best remedy for all disorders of the stomach and bowels, the liver and kidneys. They act with so decided an effect, and yet so gently, that people of the most delicate constitutions may take them with the most perfect confidence. They do not contain a single grain of mercury or other noxious substance, being composed exclusively of rare balsams. They are, therefore, equally safe and efficacious, and as a family medicine, nothing yet invented or discovered can be compared with them for a moment. With these inestimable Pills at hand, together with the printed directions affixed to each box, no other medical advice or assistance can be needed in any ordinary case of sickness.—[Adv't.]

BUSINESS to be TRANSACTED
IN GRAND LODGE.

AT this season of the year, when most people are holiday-making, and, we hope, enjoying themselves, the attendance at the Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge is generally limited, and the business "to be transacted" of a very uninteresting character. Nor can we say that the forthcoming occasion will be any striking exception to the rule, although a celebrated professor of platitudes has undertaken to relieve the monotonous dullness by assuming the sponsorship of the following portentous proposition:—

By Brother Mathew Cooke, P.M. in No. 23:—"That whilst this Grand Lodge recognizes the private right of every Brother to belong to any extraneous Masonic organization he may choose, it as firmly forbids, now and at any future time, all Brethren while engaged as Salaried Officials under this Grand Lodge to mix themselves up in any way with such bodies as the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite; the Rites of Misraim and Memphis; the spurious orders of Rome and Constantine; the schismatic body styling itself the Grand Mark Lodge of England, or any other exterior Masonic organization whatever (even that of the Order of Knights Templar, which is alone recognized by the Articles of Union) under the pain of immediate dismissal from employment by this Grand Lodge."

Upon reading this, one is tempted to inquire, Who is this mighty Cooke? and why does he launch the crushing avalanche of his wrath against the "salaried officials"? These two mysterious problems we have endeavoured to solve with as much diligence and patience as the prevailing tropical heat would allow; but the result, we grieve to add, has been eminently unsatisfactory.

In the first place, the "Cooke" is not known as a working Mason; neither does a careful examination of the various lists of subscribers to the Masonic Charities for some time past disclose his name or place of abode: Ordinary sources of information being thus dried up, we were compelled to make inquiries amongst our personal friends, when one rejoined: "Matthew Cooke? Oh! he is the brother who was suspended by the authorities of the Templars (and the Ancient and Accepted Rite, a few years ago, for making use of capitular and epitaphic language." Another replied: "What, you don't mean 'Samson Agonistes,' the gentleman who proposed himself as Grand Master of the English Craft, to the intense amusement of all who heard him in Grand Lodge?" Thereupon we began to "smell a mice," as a facetious friend of ours classically terms the process of enlightenment; and by following the track of evidence, the painful conclusion was irresistibly forced upon our mind that poor Brother Cooke is not one of those whose "follies cease with their youth," or vanish before the light of experience. The unfortunate man's history is, indeed, a sad one. Endowed by nature with some ability, and possessing considerable powers of application, he might have made a creditable figure in the Craft, had not an evil temper and a fatal habit of quarrelling with his best friends, proved his utter bane. Even now, there are many of those whom at various periods he has attacked and slandered, who would gladly see him turn into the right path, and who would willingly assist him in his efforts to retrieve the past. But the proposition which he has had the temerity—not to say, under all the surrounding circumstances, the effrontery—to place on the agenda paper for the next Grand Lodge, proves we fear but too conclusively that the mad fit is as strong upon him now as it was years ago, when he sacrificed his Masonic prospects at the shrine of Unreason. Brother Cooke proposed a similar motion at the last meeting of Grand Chapter, and couched it, as we are informed, in the most offensive and libellous terms. In that Body he could not find a seconder. Does he hope to find one in the Grand Lodge of England? We throw not, because we believe that, apart from the merits of the question, there is not a representative of Masonry so lost to decency and dignity as to countenance gratuitous insult to the officials of the Order, so long as they faithfully perform their allotted duties. Looking, however, at the subject in the light of an abstract question, Cooke's proposition is only equalled in its intolerance by its absurdity. In all probability, le pauvre diable wants a berth, and would like to be employed in the gentlemanly occupation of general overlooker, or keeper to the officials after they leave their daily avocations in Great Queen-street. The logical deduction from his argument would necessarily be that a system of espionage, detestable in any case, but especially detestable in free Masonry, would have to be established, and a system of interference with the private rights of Englishmen instituted, which could never be contemplated for a moment, except by an idiot or a lunatic. But the old saying about breaking a butterfly upon the wheel recurs to our mind, and warns us not to waste too many words upon the ludicrous fancies of this eccentric man. Nor should we have considered the subject worthy of notice at all were it not that we deem it our duty to protest against the door of Grand Lodge being made the scene of such an unseemly exhibition or abuse as was recently witnessed by the members of Grand Chapter.

The remaining business of Grand Lodge will be the discussion of certain amendments to the laws affecting the Lodge of Benevolence, proposed by Brother John M. Clabon, P.G.D., President of the Lodge, and which amendments are as follows:—

By Brother John M. Clabon, P.G.D., President of the Lodge of Benevolence. To amend the Constitutions under the head "Fund of Benevolence," as follows:—

Art. 5, lines 1 and 2, omit "registered under the Constitution of the Grand Lodge of England;" line 5, omit "the" before "Grand Lodge," and add "a;" line 7, after the word "period," add "if a Member of the Grand Lodge of England, have."

Art. 8, line 3, after "foreign Grand Lodges," add, "and Members of Colonial Lodges;" line 9, after "such relief," add, "if exceeding three pounds."

Art. 10, line 18, after "Foreign Lodges," add, "and the Members of Colonial Lodges." Add to Art. 16, or as Art 17, "The Lodge of Benevolence may grant relief to the extent of two pounds to any distressed Mason who has presented his petition in due time, although the conditions and forms above contained have not been complied with."

The effect of these alterations will chiefly be to expedite the practice and enlarge the powers of the Lodge of Benevolence, and experience has proved that, if adopted, they will also tend to simplify the working of the laws which govern the administration of our Charity Fund.

THE "United Service" Lodge, No. 1361, will be consecrated on Saturday, the 9th inst., at the Swan Hotel, Ridgway, Wimbledon, by V.W. Bro. J. Hervey, G. Sec., assisted by Bros. Brett and Little. Bro. Major E. Hamilton Finney is the W.M.-Designate.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT.

WE have just heard from our Brother William James Hughan, that the long-talked-of History of the Lodge of Edinburgh from A.D. 1599 to 1871, is now nearly ready, and he also informs us that he can guarantee the most sanguine expectations of Masonic students will be fully realised. Brother D. Murray Lyon, the deservedly esteemed author, has been working laboriously for many months to render the volume worthy of the acceptance of the Craft universal (which accounts for his only occasionally writing in our paper), and we are delighted to know that his efforts will so soon be crowned with that success which he so thoroughly merits. Arrangements have been made with the well-known firm, Messrs. Blackwood and Sons, Edinburgh and London, to issue a limited edition of the work at one guinea per copy, and even if 500 copies are struck off it will scarcely prove remunerative, as there will be many illustrations and the book will be a large one.

Full particulars will be given in our advertising columns shortly, and we would advise our friends to lose no time in communicating with the author (address, D. Murray Lyon, Ayr, Scotland), and we respectfully suggest that they forward their names as subscribers at once to him, or to our office in Fleet-street. We hope a list of subscribers will be published with the work, and if they be done, there will be all the more need to subscribe as early as possible.

It is impossible to indicate anything like a "table of contents," in so short a notice as the present, as the work is full of specialities, and will be found to be in reality a history of the Scottish Craft, and as such will take its place as a standard work in Masonic literature. Bro. Hughan, who has had the privilege of corresponding with Bro. Lyon for many years, mentions the important fact, that in every instance the statements made by Bro. Lyon are profusely authenticated by quotations from the ancient records still preserved, but hitherto unpublished. We can only say: Success to Bro. Lyon.

WE are requested to state that the authority to establish the Cryptic Rite in England was vested solely in Ill. Bro. Chase, 33°, Grand Lecturer of the Grand Council of New York, and that the assistance rendered to him by Ill. Bros. Martin and Thompson was purely voluntary, they having accompanied him on his visit to England.

A STATEMENT having gone the rounds of the metropolitan press to the effect that the Lodge of Benevolence voted a sum of £40 to the fund now being raised to defray the expenses of the defence in the "Eltham Murder Case," it is necessary to explain that no such grant has been made, the amount in question having been awarded to Bro. E. W. Pook in response to his application as a distressed Mason, and without any reference to the unhappy nature of the circumstances which necessitated his appeal. Neither the Lodge of Benevolence nor the Grand Lodge itself is empowered to vote away the benevolent funds of the Craft for purposes other than those to which they are dedicated, and for which they must ever be kept sacred.

BRO. ROSENTHAL, the eminent artist, of 2, Red Lion Square, has presented a magnificent portrait of the Earl of Zetland to Grand Lodge, and, as will be seen on referring to the Report of the Board of General Purposes, this handsome gift has been accepted and is now placed in the Board-room.

THE MARK DEGREE.

In reference to this subject, which is treated upon by me at pages 522 and 474, as also by Bro. Hughan at page 489, the following from Bro. William Officer, J.G.D. Grand Lodge of Scotland and P.M. of the Lodge of Edinburgh Mary's Chapel, may be interesting:—"My knowledge of the subject leads me to be entirely of your view. M. C. [i.e. Mary's Chapel] never wrought the Mark degree until 1869, when I introduced it. It formerly gave marks to its members, like other old lodges."

W. P. BUCHAN.

THE ROYAL ORDER OF SCOTLAND.

The statements contained in the printed history of the Royal Order of Scotland, as published at page 521, are full of unhistorical statements, mushroom legends, and mistakes. The sooner they cast aside these childish dreams and give us something more reliable, the better will it be for the true credit of the "Order," and the real honour of its leading members. At least such is the opinion of

X. Y. Z.

THE FIVE-POINTED STAR.

There are many explanations of this, beside that given in the monitor. The following is one of them, which is worthy the attention of the studious. It is extracted from the publications of the Camden Society, of England, for 1839:—

"PENTALPHA PENTACLE.—This mark was heretofore used as the sign of the cross is now, i.e., at the beginning of letters or bookes, for good luck's sake; and the women amongst the Jewes (Dr. Ralph Bathurst tells me) did make this mark on the children's chrysome cloathes. Mr. Wyld Clark, merchant (factor) at Santo Crux, in Barbarie, tells me that the Jewes in Barbarie have this mark on their trunkes in nailles, and on their cupboards and tables. So in France, &c., and heretofore in England, were built crosses for good luck, and my old friend, Mr. Lancelot Morehouse, rector of Portwood, Wilts, was wont to make this mark at the top of his missive letters, as the Roman Catholiques do the cross, and he told me (1660) that the Greek Christians did so."

"The figure of the three triangles intersected (adds W. Kynett), and made of five lines, is called the Pentangle of Solomon, and when it is delineated in the body of a man it is pretended to touch and point out the five places wherein our Saviour was wounded. And therefore there was the old superstitious conceit, that the figure was a fuge demonium—that the devils were afraid of it."

NOTE.

The "Pentaculum Solomonis," the "Dridenfus" of the German magical writers, and which is regarded at the present day by the superstitious in Germany as an effective hindrance to the power of witches, is said to have its origin in the secret doctrines of the Pythagoreans, and to have been from thence transferred to the mysteries of the Druids. Be this as it may, it is certain it was looked upon in the middle ages as a sign of immense power; and at the present moment the magical Pentalpha, in the western window of the southern aisle of Westminster Abbey, is one of the emblems which still exist, and tell to the initiated that the black monks who once chanted in the choir were deeply read in occult science. We are not, therefore, surprised to find it treated of in Dr. Carl Grabner's "Bilder der Wunderkunst und des Aberglaubens," 8vo., Weimar, 1837, p. 86, or that Goethe should have made Faust avail himself of its influence—

"Für solche halbe Hollenbrat, Ist Salomonis Schlussei gut;"

but it would scarcely be expected that a belief in its influence should be gravely avowed in a work published at the commencement of the nineteenth century:—

"It is always necessary to have this Pentacle in readiness to bind with in case the spirits should refuse to be obedient, as they can have no power over the Exorcist while provided with and fortified by the Pentacle, the virtue of the holy names therein written presiding with wonderful influence over the spirits. It should be made in the day and hour of mercury, upon parchment made of a kid's skin, or virgin, or pure, clean, white paper, and the figures and letters wrote in pure gold, and ought to be consecrated and sprinkled (as before often spoken) with holy water."—Barrett's "Magus," book 2, part iii, (109).

Similar to this, and by many founded with it, is the "Seal of Solomon," which consists of a six-pointed star, formed of two triangles interlaced, and which was sometimes held to be even more potent than the Pentalpha. Passing down street one day, the writer noticed one of these figures, made of tin, holding in its centre the representation of a beer-glass, and doing duty as the sign of a beer-shop. It "attracted his eye's sad devotion," and he could not help wondering to what chain of circumstances it owed its situation. Subsequent study taught him that in Germany, and especially in Bavaria, this figure was deemed a sovereign defence against evil spirits. This sign was, therefore, used as a charm to protect against storms, and especially against fires (being thus a cheap kind of insurance).

Breweries being particularly exposed to fire, were so often protected by this that it became, in time, the sign of a brewery, and so of a beer-shop! And thus the mighty spell with which Solomon of old compelled the genii, and piled up "that splendid model of excellence which immortalized his name," in these degenerated times, having crossed the sea, had sunk to the ignoble position of a pot-house sign. Many a good man has fallen equally low by keeping unworthy company.—Evergreen.

THE "Doric" Chapter, No. 933, will be consecrated at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street, on the 19th inst., by the Grand Scribe E., assisted by Comps. Brett and Little.

CONSECRATION OF A NEW MARK LODGE.—We have received notification of the issue of a warrant for the Panmure Mark Lodge, No. 139, which is to be consecrated at Balham, on Monday next, by the V.W. Bro. Fredk. Binckes, Grand Secretary, G.M. S.L. The new Lodge will be under the mastership of the V.W. Bro. James Stevens, P.G.O. and P.M. of the Macdonald Mark Lodge, No. 104, which was also originated by him, and is so well known as a good-working and flourishing lodge. A large attendance of Mark Masons is anticipated on the above occasion, and from the popularity of the Master and his Wardens, we expect to find the "Panmure" another shining light in the Mark Degree.

O b i t u a r y .

R.W. BRO. COLONEL BOWYER,
Prov. Grand Master of Oxfordshire.

The recent loss which Freemasonry has sustained by the death of this distinguished brother ought not to pass without some notice of the services which he rendered to the Craft during his valuable life. He was a member of the younger branch of the Berkshire family of Sir George Bowyer, Bart., and his father, by his marriage with the daughter and heiress of Sir Richard Atkins, Bart., succeeded to large property at Clapham, of which Colonel Bowyer was Lord of the Manor, and patron of the valuable rectory. He was educated at the Royal Military College, Addiscombe, and afterwards pursued his studies at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he took the degrees of B.A. and M.A. He subsequently held a commission in the 14th Light Dragoons, and was always considered a high authority in all matters of military etiquette. In 1833 he married Isabella, eldest daughter of James Hodges Byles, Esq., and has issue, Henry Atkins Bowyer, late Captain 10th Hussars, Fitzwilliam A. Bowyer, of Ch. Ch. Oxford, and rector of Chingford, Essex, and one daughter.

On taking up his residence at the Grange, Steeple Aston, Oxon, he was appointed Deputy Lieutenant of the County, and subsequently a magistrate. He became an incorporated member of the University of Oxford in 1857 at Brasenose College, where his brother, the Rev. Wentworth Bowyer, rector of Clapham, and Past Grand Chaplain, was educated. He was elected Captain Commandant of the Oxford City Rifle Volunteers on the first formation of that corps, and was subsequently gazetted Lieut.-Colonel of the Oxford University Rifles.

His Masonic career commenced on the 16th of July, 1844, when he was initiated in the Lodge of Harmony, No. 255 (then 317), and was installed W.M. of that lodge in 1850. On taking up his residence at Steeple Aston, he joined the Cherwell Lodge, Banbury, and was installed in the office of W.M. of that lodge on the 8th of February, 1853, being shortly afterwards appointed Prov. S.G. Deacon of the province by the Prov. Grand Master of that time, Bro. the Rev. C. J. Ridley, of University College (brother of Sir Matthew White Ridley, Bart., of Northumberland), and this was the first occasion of his being promoted to the provincial purple. In February of the following year, 1854, he was appointed D.P.G.M. of Oxfordshire, and shortly after the death of Bro. Ridley, which took place in October, he was, on the 11th of December, 1854, appointed to the important office of Provincial Grand Master, to the great joy of the province. On the occasion of his installation on the 8th of May, 1855, the ceremony was performed by that accomplished Mason, Bro. Thomas Henry Hall, of King's College, Cambridge, Prov. Grand Master of that county. The occasion will be long remembered by those who attended, since there were present no less than six Provincial Grand Masters to assist at the ceremony, besides many other distinguished guests. The Stewards had paid their new Provincial Grand Master the compliment of inviting every member of the Lodge of Harmony, Bro. Bowyer's mother lodge, to be present at his elevation, and a large number availed themselves of the opportunity of doing honour to their highly-respected friend and brother. At this meeting he appointed Bro. Richard James Spiers, F.S.A., F.P., of the city of Oxford, and late Mayor (P.G.S.B. of the Grand Lodge of England), to the post of Dep. Prov. G.M., which he has ever since held. Two years afterwards, on the 16th of May, 1857, the Earl of Zetland, M.W. Grand Master, who was accompanied by a large number of Prov. Grand Masters and of officers of the Grand Lodge of England, was invited to visit the Provincial Grand Lodge to receive an address from the brethren of the province, expressive of their loyalty and attachment to him. During the year 1855 he became a joining member of the Alfred Lodge, Oxford, No. 425 (now 340), and subsequently of the Apollo University Lodge, No. 460 (now 357), and was elected honorary member of the Churchill Lodge. He became also a joining member of the Royal Alpha Lodge, No. 16, and of the Westminster and Keystone, No. 10, both in London, and the latter especially connected with brethren of his province of Oxford. In 1864 a warrant was granted for a lodge to be held at Chipping Norton, Oxfordshire, and the founders of it were naturally anxious that it should bear the name of one who had endeared himself by untold acts of kindness to every member of the province. Accordingly, the "Bowyer Lodge" was consecrated in the spring of 1865, the Provincial Grand Master himself performing the ceremony, and it is at the present time an excellent country lodge, with a goodly number of members, who vie with each other in good work, and in supporting the prestige and character of its name.

Colonel Bowyer received the appointment of Prov. Grand Superintendent of Royal Arch Masonry at the same time as that of Prov. Grand Master, being qualified by having served the various necessary offices in the Iris Chapter at Richmond. He became a Mark Master Mason in the Bon Accord Lodge in 1856, but took no office in the degree. As a Knight Templar our brother received his introduction to that order at the encampment of Cœur de Lion, in Oxford; and after serving as its First Captain and Eminent Commander, was, in 1858, promoted to the post of Provincial Grand Commander of Oxfordshire by the then Grand Master, Colonel Tynte. As his Deputy Prov. Grand Commander he appointed Bro. Richard James Spiers, Past Grand Captain, who continued to hold that post up to the decease of his chief. In the High Degrees, Colonel Bowyer received the 30th in February, 1854; 31st, November, 1855; 32nd, August, 1856; and 33rd, January, 1857. On the 6th of March, 1868, he received the high distinction of Most Puissant Sovereign, on the resignation of Dr. Leeson; but after a short time, on account of ill health, he resigned in favour of Bro. Vigne, who now holds the baton.

Socially, perhaps, the reign of Colonel Bowyer will be most remembered by the institution of the Masonic fêtes and balls, which, commencing in June, 1855, have been continued at the University Commemoration every year since, and have afforded to the numerous visitors at the academical festival the most agreeable experience of University gaiety. In June, 1860, at the time the Prince of Wales was studying at Oxford, a grand ball was given by the Freemasons to His Royal Highness, on which occasion the Earl and Countess of Zetland, and friends, attended, and were the guests of the D.P.G.M.; upwards of 700 were present at it. Subsequently to the marriage of the Prince of Wales, in 1863, at the commemoration of that year, the Prince, accompanied by the Princess, attended a grand ball given by the Freemasons, at which upwards of 1,000 persons were present. We have spoken fully of the Masonic events and festivities connected with his Provincial Grand Mastership; but this notice would not be complete if we were to omit one cause of the success of Freemasonry in Oxford during the 17 years Colonel Bowyer has been at its head. The foundation of his success has been the faithful and conscientious discharge of all the duties devolving on him as a Mason. The ceremonies of the Order were always most admirably performed by him, and during the period he held the Mastership of the Cherwell Lodge, although at the time Master of the celebrated Heythrop Hunt, he never neglected attending at the meetings, and although always a most ardent sportsman, he has, before returning home after the day's hunting, posted to Banbury to take his place, and to do his work, as W.M., taking every ceremony himself. The courtesy and the kindness he ever displayed to all who came within his reach, the kind consideration he gave to all cases in which assistance and help was required, the unbounded generosity, Masonic and social, which distinguished him, and the princely support which he gave to all our Masonic Charities, make his loss to his province, and to the Masonic world at large, one of the greatest which has fallen upon any society which prizes honour and virtue above the external advantages of rank and fortune. Requiescat in pace.

BRO. WILLIAM ANDERSON,

Late S.W. of Lodge Edinburgh St. James, No. 97, S.C.

Only a few days have passed since the remains of our much-respected brother, William Anderson, Senior Warden of the Lodge Edinburgh St. James, No. 97, were committed to the grave, with much testimony of respect from his Masonic brethren, of whom an unusually large number attended his funeral. It seems due to one who was held in great esteem whilst he lived, both for his conduct as a member of general society and for his discharge of his Masonic duties as a member and office-bearer of a lodge, that a few sentences should now be devoted to his memory. Such a notice of him, even although very brief, will doubtless be acceptable to many who knew him, and who will regard it as a proper tribute to departed worth; whilst those who have never heard his name before, may yet, it is to be hoped, peruse with interest the record of a life, very uneventful, if such events are only regarded as give interest to the pages of a sensational novelist, but full of all that Freemasonry encourages the brethren of the Order to cultivate and cherish—of honest industry and faithful discharge of all the duties of the domestic and social relations.

Bro. William Anderson was born on 2nd August, 1818, at Cousland, a small village near Dalkeith. His parents were highly respectable people. His father sent him at an early age to the parish school of Dalkeith, and made him an apprentice to his own trade, to which he adhered throughout life. Whilst still a very young man, he went to the south of Scotland, and there carried on his trade for a considerable number of years, and settling in business in Galashiels, where he married. Becoming somewhat prosperous, he thought it good to remove to Edinburgh, partly with a view to a wider field for business, and partly in order to the better education of his children. He accordingly set up business in Edinburgh, about twenty years since, and was successful, at least to the extent of his moderate desires, maintaining always a high character in the commercial world, and giving great satisfaction to many respectable customers and employers. In the year 1862 his attention was attracted to the many various things related of Freemasonry, so that he thought of joining the Order, and this he did before the close of that year, being enrolled a member of the Lodge Edinburgh St. James, No. 97. His natural sweetness of temper made a favourable impression on every member of the lodge, and his amiable manners did much to recommend him to their choice for the office of Senior Warden, to which he was appointed, and which he continued to fill till his death. He was only fifteen days ill before he died, in July, 1871, at the age of 53. He has left a widow to mourn his loss. His sons carry on the business of their father, and the eldest has followed his father's example by joining, about two years ago, the same lodge of which his father was a member. So much was Bro. William Anderson respected amongst the members of his lodge and of the Craft generally in Edinburgh, that not only the brethren of his own lodge, but many other members of the Craft, attended his funeral, and so great a number of brethren has seldom been seen in Edinburgh following the remains of a brother to the grave. This fact, of itself, speaks volumes for the character and worth of the deceased. He was, in fact, an admirable specimen of a "good and worthy Mason"—amiable and benevolent, without the least taint of vanity or pride, and therefore much endeared to all the Fraternity and much respected. The doctrines of Freemasonry teach many admirable things, and our deceased brother knew them well. They teach the members of the Order how to live and how to die; a belief in God and in a future resurrection are kept ever prominently before their notice. From the fact that previous to their very entrance at the threshold of a Masonic Temple, they are required to make a solemn declaration of these beliefs. And in "the Lord is all our trust"—trusting in Him we may rest assured that all is well, and will be well for ever. Our brother has gone, as we trust, to the house of his Heavenly Father. Let us follow his example, and considering well the lessons which are taught us from day to day, let us seek to live that we may be at any time ready to die, and may die in the sure and certain hope of a glorious resurrection. This brief notice is written by a Past Warden of St. James' Lodge, No. 97, S.C. Bro. William Anderson lies interred in the Warriston Cemetery, at Edinburgh.

THE Clapton Lodge, No. 1,365 for which a warrant has been issued, will be consecrated on the 20th of next month at the White Hart Tavern, Clapton. Bro. J. D. Taylor of the Whittington Lodge, 862, will be the first W.M.; Bro. W. Stephens, of the Vitruvian Lodge, No. 87, the first Senior, and Bro. Saunders, W.M., of the Burdett Courts, 1278, the first Junior Warden of the new lodge. Bro. James Terry, P.M. 228, has been named by the Marquis of Ripon as the consecrating officer, and the musical arrangements will be under the direction of Bro. Thomas, of the Urban Lodge, No. 1196.

"FREEMASONRY AND JUDAISM."

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have read Bro. Carpenter's reply to "W. B., 742," but can see no proper reason why he should so particularly object to "W. B.'s remarks appearing in THE FREEMASON. So far as I can judge, "W. B." has just as good a right to enunciate his views in our Masonic paper as has Bro. Carpenter his. For my part I agree with neither, but seeing Bro. Carpenter is being allowed very full scope to promulgate his own views he must allow to others a little of what he has taken so much of to himself. I did not intend to criticise Bro. Carpenter's article until he was finished with them, only, as can be easily seen, they fall in with the present popular ideas on religion. In fact, they are almost and altogether purely religious. Whether or not Bro. Carpenter be right in his views is questionable, and perhaps a matter of opinion; however, as I doubt the solidity of his foundation, I can have little faith in his structure. As to the attack upon "W. B." by "W. L. A.," it is all one-sided. He finds no fault with Bro. Carpenter for doing all he can to support certain sectarian ideas because they fall in with those generally adopted in this country, and with his own; but he must remember that there are other countries and other peoples, and even thousands of other individuals in our own country, who do not think as he does. Further, he must remember that Freemasonry puts the Christian and the Jew, the Trinitarian and the Unitarian, all upon the level in so far as regards itself. Consequently, if in a Masonic paper certain statements are allowed to be made in a friendly manner tending to support Christianity as popularly understood, it is equally allowable that remarks be permitted tending to show that, if "more light" were brought to bear upon the subject, the views at present held by the writer might be altered—e.g., Bro. Carpenter, I believe, considering that the latter portion of the xliv. chapter of Isaiah, and on to the xlv. chapter, contains a "prophecy," while I, on the other hand, consider it to be a song of thanksgiving. He would support the idea that it was written long before the Babylonish Captivity, while I believe it was written after the return from Babylon. Consequently, this would show how opinions differ. As to the idea that the Jews were a peculiar people—that is true to the extent that every nation has its own peculiarities, some, by a concurrence of circumstances more marked than others. The Jews were great and, supposing I admit, unique in theology and morals, yet the Greeks were equally great and unique in science and art. Each was great in its own sphere; and although the Jewish teachers have left their mark on the history of the world, and are not yet dead, yet we find that the Greeks have also left their mark, and are not dead either.

I remain, yours fraternally,
W. P. BUCHAN.

ANTAGONISM IN THE HIGH DEGREES.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

SIR,—In your impression of the 19th instant, you have an excellent article with the above heading. Being one who is honoured with "many of the high degrees," I think a few words in reference to the remarks of "An Irish H.K.T." will not be out of place.

Antagonism does and will exist so long as two powers claim the right of being the legal successors of the originators of the higher degrees. Undoubtedly, Craft Masonry terminates with the R.A. degree, which, in my opinion, is simply an offshoot from the chair degree, with some additions that have no reference to blue Masonry. Our H.K.T. seems to think that we enter "Christian Masonry" and "bring the sectarian element into play" so soon as we get the higher chivalric degrees; but this, with some exceptions, is not the fact, for many of them might be taken either by our Jewish or Mahomedan brethren. There can be no doubt that the Rose Croix, Kadosh, and several other high degrees were worked under Templar warrants long before the famous (forged) Frederick statutes were in existence, and those warrants have the same inherent right still where there is an existing M.W.S. holding power handed down to him by his predecessor, and no self-constituted authority can deprive the holders of such warrants of their authority, no matter how they may bind themselves together for that purpose.

There are many Prince Masons in Dublin, including the Marquis of Kildare and high dignitaries of the State, who were made under those warrants, and are now members of the various chapters throughout Ireland; though, I am sorry to say, many, with the newly-created Princes, are doing their best to create a schism that will not be easily healed, unless all parties will concede something, even for "expediency" and "convenience," for every true Mason must desire a settlement of this dispute. Unfortunately, here we have the same "Deputy Grand Secretary" and officers for all the grades; consequently, Craft Masonry is indirectly brought into antagonism with the high degrees, when there is any great question under consideration, and it is quite time our Irish Craft Masons saw the difficulty into which they are drifting. H.K.T. says the "movement has borne fruit," for a number of deserving Masons have been made "Irish Princes." Could he tell us if any one of those called-up brethren is able to give a single degree, or has ever written a line on Masonry worthy attention? If not, they were not "worthy" of the Rose Croix degree, the members of which should possess something more than mere social position.

The claim of any S.G.C. over all the degrees of Masonry is simply absurd, and will never be allowed by any number of Craft Masons; here it is attempted in various ways, so dovetailing the laws into one another that they make the censure of one Grand body equivalent to that of all, so that a simple report from one to the other excludes the offending party from all, without the power of appeal.

The S.G.C. here are supposed to work in strict alliance with those of London and Charleston, yet they act in the most opposite manner—in London they admit Master Masons of moderate standing and good position into Rose Croix chapters, while the "Irish Princes" will receive none but brethren who have all the degrees up to and including the Templars; they must also be 7 years Master Masons and 33 years of age, taking their standard of respectability by the age and position in the Order of the candidate, thus following out the mode adopted under Templar warrants.

Much comment has been made on the "Manchester Princes," but amongst them will be found men of the highest mental culture, together with some of the best working and most indefatigable Masons in Dublin, who had by many years' work fairly earned the honours of the "high degrees" conferred upon them; and I trust my fellow "Princes" will be warned in time to prevent what will otherwise have the effect of dividing into several Grand bodies the Masonic order in Ireland.

Yours,
CONSTANCY.

BUNCOME.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Do not consult either Johnson, Richardson, or any other English lexicographer for the meaning of "buncome." The word is a pure Americanism, and it supplies a desideratum not found in English dictionaries. It is applied to certain kinds of orations designed to humbug the unwary. Thus, when Gen. Butler indulges a crowd with a harangue about "British tyranny and American liberty," the sensible portion of his hearers pronounce the speech as buncome. The ignorant manifested their approbation by stamping and clapping, while the general himself was laughing in his sleeve at the pack of noddies who believed that he meant what he said. American Freemasonry has given rise to a greater number of buncome orators than even "British tyranny" has done. We hear them on St. John's Days; we hear them in Grand Lodges; we read them in its proceedings. I have lately criticised in the Mystic Star a buncome oration by a P.G.M. of Illinois exceeding in absurdity even the "Antiquities" of Dr. Oliver. The orator pretended to deduce from the emblems on the Masonic carpet: first, that our Masonry never originated from the Masonry of the operatives; second, the antiquity of our emblems as Masonic emblems; and, third, that those emblems taught Christian dogmas, and that Masonry was, of course, a Christian institution. During the delivery of the aforesaid oration, the G.M., Bro. Harman G. Reynolds, smiled benignantly, and at its conclusion, a Past Grand Orator moved for a vote of thanks for the very able address, &c., which vote was, of course, unanimously adopted. These sublime speech-makers form a mutual-admiration club for ever displaying Masonic courtesy, which means "you tickle me and I tickle you," all which is compressed into the word buncome.

But among all the buncome Masonic we have Bro. Albert G. Mackey's is by universal consent designated as the greatest. Before the southern rebellion, Bro. Mackey was regarded as the Grand Master Oracle in the U.S., Bro. Moore, of Boston, as the Senior Warden Oracle, and Bro. Harman G. Reynolds, of Illinois, as the Junior Oracle. Time, however, has modified public opinion about their oracleships. The Masonic public at large at last began to understand that the truthfulness of those oracles was over-rated, in short, that it was very much like buncome.

By referring to THE FREEMASON of July 13th thereader will perceive that Bro. Mackey's theme at the Washington banquet in honour of the Earl de Grey and Ripon was the universality of Freemasonry. He said then, "The universality and tolerance of Freemasonry are indeed the two brightest features of our noble and venerable institution. He thanked God from the bottom of his heart that there is such a common altar where Christian, Turk, and Jew may kneel in adoration to a common Father;" and he said twenty other very pretty things besides. But is that true? Did Bro. Mackey ever see such an altar in a Masonic lodge in America? Did he ever use his influence either with his pen or tongue to induce Bro. C. W. Moore, his S.G.W. Oracle, or Bro. Reynolds, his Junior Oracle, to bring about such a Freemasonry as he thanked his God for? Is it not notorious that for twenty years the sectarian question has been agitated in the U.S.? Have not articles appeared in more than a dozen Masonic journals filled with complaints at the deception practised in our lodges? In 1855 Bro. W. P. Mellen wrote several articles in his magazine (the Acacia) exposing the fallacies of the Rev. Bro. Randall, G.M. of Massachusetts, who, as chairman of a committee in 1851-2 on a petition to remove sectarianism from the Masonic work, claimed Masonry to be Christian, justified the retention of Christian saints and Christian prayers in the lodge work, and with the usual inconsistency of his class, he added, "At the building of the Temple the society was mainly in the hands of Jews, now it is mainly in Christian hands; but open for Jews as well as Gentiles." The report of the Massachusetts Rev. G.M. was not only attacked by Bro. Mellen and two or more other journalists in the U.S., but the Rev. Bro. W. Carver, then Representative of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts in the English Grand Lodge, also wrote several letters to Bro. Moore, denouncing the practice and principles of American Masonry. The subject was even noticed in a London Masonic magazine. After stating that the object of the petition was "that prayers in lodges should be addressed alone to the Supreme Being, and that allusions to Christian saints and Christianity should form no part and parcel of Masonry," the editor went on to say: "The committee to whom the matter was referred, after great delay reported against the petitioners, stating in their report, 'the petitioners say in their petition that Masonry was intended to unite men of every country, sect, and opinion; this is not so, all reasoning, therefore, on the subject is erroneous;" to which the editor added: "This is not so is certainly a very ready method of getting rid of the question; but if it is not so, the Masonry we have been taught and that of Massachusetts must be very different."

Now, previous to the breaking out of the late rebellion, Bro. Mackey, as already remarked, was the supreme Masonic oracle in the United States. No Pope's dictum was ever regarded by pious Catholic with more veneration than an opinion of Dr. Albert G. Mackey by the Masonic luminaries of this country. A word from Bro. Mackey in the right direction would have turned his subordinate oracles, with all their lesser lights, into the right direction. Instead of doing so, Bro. Mackey came out as an apologist for the prevailing humbug. In 1855 he informed us in his "Lexicon" that the dedication of lodges to the Saints John was not on account of their having been Christians or Saints, but because they were eminent Masons. Now, I would not have disputed the sincerity of Bro. C. W. Moore had he at that time expressed his belief in the ridiculous St. John's legend; for notwithstanding that Bro. Moore has been puffed up by Bro. H. G. Reynolds as "the greatest Masonic authority in the world," and by the "you-tickle-me-and-I-tickle-you" party, as "an eminent Masonic scholar." I venture to say that he is not so regarded by those who know him intimately. It is true that he has been editor for many years; show me, however, an editorial in his magazine that displays any historical knowledge or classical learning, and I will prove that it was written by Dr. Humphry, or some other brother. Bro. Moore never was an extensive reader or deep thinker. Indeed, he hides himself on his never reading a book or article that conflicts with his preconceived opinion; and whenever he finds a contemporary editor in the U.S. taking an independent course, conflicting with his dictum, he generally stops exchanging papers. If Bro. Moore told me he believed the moon was made of green cheese, I would give him credit for sincerity. Dr. Mackey, on the other hand, is not only a better educated man, but he is also a man of research, and free from superstitious bigotry; he therefore not only disbelieves in the moonshine story of the Grand Mastership of the Saints, but the concluding part of that very article in his "Lexicon" conclusively proves his disingenuousness.

I have said before, that previous to the late rebellion in the Southern States, Messrs. Mackey, Moore, and Reynolds exercised supreme power over the Masonic mind in America. But how has their power fallen, and how has their influence waned? Go to-day to Illinois, to South Carolina, or to Massachusetts and try to ascertain public opinion on these once great oracles, and I venture to predict that in each jurisdiction where the party is best known, the answer to your inquiry, by nineteenth-twentieths, will be, "Oh! he is played out" (also an Americanism).

You may still, however, occasionally read or hear of certain compliments paid to these extinct oracles. A Grand Master or Chairman of a G.L. Committee may still here and there, from old habits, indulge in complimenting the disinterested Masonic zeal of Right Worshipful Bro. Reynolds, the eminent Masonic scholarship of Bro. C. W. Moore, or the sincerity of the illustrious, or thrice illustrious, Bro. Mackey. If, however, you were present when those compliments were being uttered, and carefully watched the countenances and gestures of the by-standers, you might perceive an involuntary twitch of the nose on one brother's face, a smile on that of a second, a knowing squint on that of a third, a shrug of the shoulder by a fourth, the mutterance of "bosh" by a fifth, and other significant gestures denoting that those high-flown compliments, are part and parcel of "Masonic courtesy"—"you tickle me and I tickle you"—tersely expressed and conveyed by the invaluable Americanism, viz., "BUNCOME."

Fraternally yours.

JACOB NORTON.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR GIRLS.

The General Committee meeting of the above-named Institution was held at Freemasons' Hall, on Thursday, 31st ultimo. There were present: Bros. Browse (chairman), F. Adlard, Major Creaton, S. Noble, H. Massey, A. H. Tattershall, J. R. Sheen, F. Walters, W. Young, and E. H. Patten, Secretary.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed.

The minutes of the Howell Testimonial Committee meeting, which was held on Thursday, 17th August, were read. There were present on that interesting occasion: Bro. B. Head, V.P., in the chair; Major Creaton, and W. Young, when it was unanimously resolved that a silver tea and coffee service, with a salver, together of the value of forty-five guineas, be presented to T. S. Howell, Esq., with a letter of thanks, inscribed on vellum, as follows:—

Royal Masonic Institution for Girls,
St. John's-hill, Battersea-rise,
24th August 1871.

To Thomas S. Howell, Esq., M.R.C.S.E.

Dear Sir and Brother,—At the Quarterly Court of this Institution, holden at Freemasons' Hall, Great Queen-street, on the 13th April, 1871, it was unanimously resolved to acknowledge in some degree, the high opinion entertained by the House Committee of your valued services, at all times rendered to the pupils, but more especially during the prevalence of a severe epidemic, as its honorary medical officer, that a testimonial should be offered for your acceptance; and they regret exceedingly that they are constrained, at your own request, from making that acknowledgment in a more substantial form.

It affords the House Committee, however, the greatest pleasure in asking you to accept the accompanying articles of plate, as an expression of their deepest gratitude and friendship.

We have the honour to remain,

Dear Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,

H. BROWSE,	J. NUNN,
E. COX,	W. PAAS,
G. COX,	D. ROLLS,
J. CREATON,	J. A. RUCKER,
S. C. HADLEY,	J. R. SHEEN,
B. HEAD,	W. YOUNG,
E. H. PATTEN, Secretary.

It was also unanimously resolved: "That the sum of twenty pounds be presented to Edward Sutcliff, Esq., M.D., Bro. Howell's partner, as a mark of high consideration for his constant attendance and valuable services rendered during the severe illness of the pupils."

The above was presented to Bro. Howell, and to Edward Sutcliff, Esq., M.D., through Bro. Howell, at the House Committee meeting at the Institution, on Thursday, 24th August, by Bro. E. Cox, V.P., the Chairman of the day, to which Bro. Howell returned a suitable reply in acknowledging the kindness of the Committee by their very handsome present. The vote of thanks was very nicely engrossed on vellum, and handsomely framed. The plate consisting of a tea and coffee service and a salver service, all silver. It is only fair to state that a vote of one hundred guineas would have been passed unanimously had not Bro. Howell declined to accept it, and seventy guineas was voted in lieu for the plate and testimonial. The children had each a glass of wine and cake, and were presented with a new shilling each by the Secretary.

The minutes of the House Committee were then read for information, and several cases of application for admission to the school were again deferred, one from the Humber Lodge, No. 57, being accepted. It was announced that there were 17 vacancies and 28 applicants. The voting papers are being issued.

The usual vote of thanks to the Chairman terminated the meeting.

LAYING THE FOUNDATION STONE OF A NEW SCHOOL AT WORMHILL.

On Saturday last, the officers and members of the Phoenix Lodge of St. Ann, No. 1235, Buxton, assembled at Wormhill, on the invitation of their worthy Chaplain, Bro. the Rev. A. A. Bagshawe, P.G.C. Derbyshire, Vicar of Wormhill and Rural Dean of Buxton, to aid him in the good work of extending the benefits of education to his parishioners. There were present Bros. J. Millward, P.M., P.P.G.D.; R. Darwin, P.M., P.G.J.W.; R. R. Duke, W.M.; F. Turner, S.W.; Josiah Taylor, J.W.; Rev. A. A. Bagshawe, Chap., P.G. Chap.; P. Klitz, Org., P.P.G. Org., Hampshire; W. Millward, W. E. Clayton, E. J. Sykes, J. H. Lawson, P. Le Gros, J. C. Bates, C. Wilkinson, W. Goodwin, W. D. Sutton, J. Bennett, S. C. Darwin, W. H. Newton, G. F. Barnard, R. H. Hyde, J. C. Hyde, 1235; G. Beardmore, 966; J. S. Hague, H. Ffolliott, Chap. 127 Derry, G. Chap. Derry and Donegal; W. Webbe, W.M. 884, P.G.S.W.; E. J. Cullen, S.D., Witham Lodge, 297, Lincoln; S. R. Ready, P.M. 654; P. Bramwell, 654; T. Griggs, architect, No. 228, T. Bragge, P.M. 74, P.P.G.S.D.; C. Ferguston, 654; and the Rev. W. Vale Bagshawe, No. 353. The school accommodation at Wormhill being found inadequate it had been resolved to enlarge it, and the occasion offered an opportunity to lay the chief stone with Masonic honours. The permission of the Marquis of Hartington, Provincial Grand Master of Derbyshire, having been duly obtained, the arrangements were perfected by the brethren of the Phoenix Lodge of St. Ann, who mustered in good force to do honour to the first public ceremony they have been called on to perform. Arrived at Wormhill, the Lodge met, by adjournment from the last regular lodge, at the Hall, where every preparation had been made for the comfort of the visitors and the proper carriage of the duties undertaken. After the reading of the Authorization from the Grand Officer named, the brethren, reinforced by arrivals from Wirksworth and other lodges, former in procession, and attended divine service at the quaint and pretty little church, near the Hall. The service was most suitable, and was impressively rendered by the host of the day, aided by his son, the Rev. W. Vale Bagshawe. We must here note, too, that Bro. P. Klitz, had kindly volunteered to aid the ceremony by the introduction of suitable music, and, with a select portion of the Masonic choir, added to the service an interest which otherwise would have been wanting. Service ended, the brethren proceeded to the site in the following order:—

- The Tyler.
- Trumpeters.
- Brethren of the Lodge.
- The Stewards; Corn, Wine, and Oil.
- Architect with Plans.
- Inner Guard.
- Organist.
- Director of Ceremonies.
- Secretary with Book of Constitutions.
- Treasurer, with coins to be deposited in Stone.
- Visiting Brethren.
- Junior Warden.
- Standard Bearer with Banner of Lodge.
- Senior Warden.
- Junior Deacon.
- Chaplain with Volume of Sacred Law.
- Bro. Darwin, P.M. Bro. Duke, W.M.
- Bro. Millward, P.M.
- Senior Deacon.
- Sword Bearer.

Arrived at the site the beautiful work of laying the stone, with the touching lectures on the various tools by which an operative mason perfects his work, was impressively and solemnly performed by Past Master Millward, a Mason of more than sixty years' standing, assisted by Bros. R. Darwin and R. R. Duke. A Masonic ode, arranged and adapted for the occasion by Bro. P. Klitz, was then sung, and Bro. A. A. Bagshawe delivered an oration on the blessings of education, concluding with the benediction. A collection was made in aid of school furniture and fittings, and the ceremonies, in which a considerable number of the parishioners had, by their presence in church and at the site, shown great interest in the good work of their incumbent, terminated.

The brethren, returning to Wormhill Hall, closed the lodge, and on their return from labour were received by their Chaplain and his son at the Vicarage, where a sumptuous collation awaited them. Conversation and croquet filled up the time ere the return train arrived to convey the brethren back to Buxton, the host terminating an agreeable as well as useful day in a manner befitting a Mason, a Chaplain, and a noble-hearted English gentleman, in his intercourse with men whose principles are Brotherly Love, Relief, and Truth!

The inscription on the stone was as follows:—
 "Laid the 19th August, 1871, by the 'Phoenix Lodge of St. Ann, Buxton,' No. 1235.
 Bro. R. R. Duke, W.M.
 Bro. R. Darwin, P.M.
 Bro. J. Millward, P.M.
 Bro. A. A. Bagshawe, M.A., P.G.C.; Vicar.
 Bro. R. Griggs, Architect."

The new banner purchased by subscription was used on this occasion for the first time, and was much admired.

THE LAST LODGE.

[From the German.]

When the last of the stars, dimly flashing,
 See old Time to its end hasten on;
 When planets to ruin are dashing,
 And the sun's light is pallid and wan;
 Through the halls where the Masons are founding
 Their Temple, majestic and grand,
 Shall be heard that last cry loudly sounding:
 Hasten, brothers! the morn is at hand!

East and west, north and south, through all nations
 The work at that call will have ceased,
 And the brethren, observing their stations,
 Shall look in calm faith to the East;
 Joining hand over valleys and highlands
 Where each stands, in the land of his birth,
 Shall be seen o'er all continents and islands
 But ONE LODGE on the face of the earth.

To the Master's stern voice loudly crying:
 Have the Masons obeyed My commands?
 Comes the voice of the Craftsmen replying:
 Look with grace on the work of our hands!
 In our feeble and poor earthly fashion
 We have sought to hew out the rough stone,
 Let the depth of eternal compassion
 For the faults of our labour atone!

What's the hour? cries the voice of the Master;
 They answer: Low Twelve, but behold,
 The rays of Thy morning come faster,
 To our eyes all its glories unfold!
 At His nod see the veils rent asunder,
 And, while earth sinks to chaos and night,
 'Mid loud peals of the echoing thunder
 Shall the brethren be brought to pure light!

THE BRITISH MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.—At the museum, opened under the auspices of this association, Mr. M. A. Verkrüzen, of Fell-street, Wood-street, London, exhibited samples of his now somewhat famous wines. The visitors to the exhibition paid marked attention to this branch of the interesting collection, and a close and comparative analytical examination of the wines took place at the testing counter, conducted by Mr. G. Cory, London, who is connected with Mr. Verkrüzen's firm. Subsequently, the following testimony to the efficacy of these wines was presented in the name of the association, and signed by many of the principal members present:—"Royal Hotel, Plymouth, August, 1871.—We, the undersigned members of the British Medical Association, having tested the various wines exhibited by Mr. M. A. Verkrüzen, of 3, Fell-street, Wood-street, London, namely, Palatinate wines, Moselle and Sarr, red hocks, champagnes, &c., feel pleasure in testifying to their excellent character for purity, and wholesomeness especially. These wines we can strongly recommend for invalids, possessing as they do all the invigorating and exhilarating properties, and, being purely natural wines, contain no alcoholic or other dangerous adulteration."—Western Daily Mercury.

THE PLAIN OF PHILISTIA.

BY CAPTAIN WARREN, R.E.

June 22.—From Nigid I wished to take a straight cut east to Dwaine through the deserted hills south of Wady Hessa. A villager volunteered to accompany us, our baggage going round by the royal road, the distance in a straight line 18 miles. Leaving at 7.10 a.m., we saw from the top of the first eminence the ruins of Zeil, Bableyeh, Aran, and Beit Duas, on the hills above Simsim. Leaving this point at 7.45 a.m., we passed to east through hills of indurated shells, and leaving caves to our right arrived at K. Kums at 8.7 a.m.; left 8.10. Viewed Neby Hüd on W. Mehowreh 8.11, and at 8.22 came on K. Jelameh, a ruined site, 130 yards by 40 yards, with cisterns. At 9.10 a.m. we got down into W. Husy. A fantasia was here enacted for our benefit. Two Bedouins came up and robbed a camel-driver, but we did not see the joke in the way it was intended. At 11.5 a.m. we arrived at Tel Hessa, an artificial mound to S.W. of Wady, elliptical N.W. to S.E.; water running in Wady; left 11.23. We now found a beautiful stream of brackish water in Wady Hessa, and turned south to Tel Nargily. At 12.30 passed a hard clay threshing floor, and at 12.40 arrived at the Tel. Here there is a spring of fresh water welling out of the rocks in the midst of a salt and barren land. The Tel is artificial; a great deal of cut stone and concrete about, and graves on top; extensive ruins on all sides, but of no decided character. Left 1.10 p.m.; passed Arab camp, where they wished us to pass the night, and passing by some ruins and caves arrived at Dawaimah at sunset.

June 24th.—From the wely near this town observations could be taken of the most important points to the north. We left at 7.45. for Beit Ulla; and at 9.50 a.m. passed Tel ed Dewar, and oblong mound 50ft. high, close to the village of Lukbeibeh, one of those villages which the Government have caused the Bedouins to establish. At 11.5 passed a crusaders' ruin, and at 11.45 arrived at Santa Hannah, close to Beit Jebrin, an artificial mound. I here broke the glass of my prismatic compass, and found the instrument useless for the remainder of the day. With the aid of a ruby, however, which I had purchased at Askalon, one of the photographic plates was cut down in the evening to the required size, and made to replace the broken glass.

June 25th.—Several ruins were examined, but nothing of importance. We encamped in the Wady es Sumt (the valley of Elah) under a large Butm tree, probably the largest in Palestine. (See photograph No. 275.) To give an instance of the adroitness of the Arabs I may mention a scene which took place here. On arriving at our tree we found the cook and a fellah struggling violently, and each with a stone in his hand cracking into the other's head. After separating them I inquired the cause of the disturbance, and the cook said the fellah had kicked dust into the soup, but the man asserted that the wind had blown it in. They were both very violent in their movements, and the fellah accused the cook of having pulled his beard, and after several absurd gesticulations, he picked up a tuft of hair from the ground and showed us the place where it had been plucked from his chin. This, of course, was a very serious offence—only the cook denied having touched the man's beard. The dragoman at last came up, who soon settled the matter, for he recollected that the cook had just cut off some huge locks from his head, which the fellah had made use of by declaring they were part of his beard. On looking at him closely we found that his beard had never been touched, but was one of those which do not grow luxuriantly just under the chin. The man had been rather badly cut about the head by the stone the cook had wielded, and was bleeding profusely, but he would not allow his wounds to be dressed, as then, he said, the sheikh of his village would not see how he had been treated, and he marched off indignantly to call on his friends to attack us during the night. We were just now in the track which the Bedouins use on their marauding expeditions, so we found ourselves threatened on two points; all we could do was to keep strict watch during the night and hope that the villagers would cross the Bedouins and keep clear of us. We awoke in the morning without any mishap, but not by any means due to our watchers, for on waking once near dawn, I found all snoring fast, and could not disturb them by sticks or stones. Near this tree probably took place the combat between David and Goliath. Suwaikeh (the ancient Sokop) is on the hills to the west by one mile. From here we made our way surveying to Beit Atab and Deir al Howa, both prominent points in the hills of Judea, 1795 and 1780 ft. above the level of the sea. From here we observed to the points where we had observed from in the plains.

June 28th we arrived in Jerusalem.

A LODGE CHAPLAIN (M.A. Cantab.), with no interest and no private resources, having been a working CURATE nearly sixteen years, would be MOST GRATEFUL if some kind and influential brother Mason would help him to a more independent position. A small country living, or a Chaplaincy, would be very acceptable. Highest clerical and lay testimonials, also a letter of commendation from his late Rector, just deceased.

CROSBY'S BALSAMIC COUGH ELIXIR.
DISEASES OF THE LUNGS AND AIR-VESSELS.

Opiates, Narcotics, and Squills are too often invoked to give relief in Coughs, Colds, and all Pulmonary diseases. Instead of such fallacious remedies, which yield momentary relief at the expense of enfeebling the digestive organs and thus increasing that debility which lies at the root of the malady, modern science points to CROSBY'S BALSAMIC COUGH ELIXIR as the true remedy.

SELECT TESTIMONIAL.

Dr. Rooke, Scarborough, author of the "Anti-Lancet," says: "I have repeatedly observed how very rapidly and invariably it subdued cough, pain, and irritation of the chest in cases of Pulmonary Consumption, and I can, with the greatest confidence, recommend it as a most valuable adjunct to an otherwise strengthening treatment for this disease."

This medicine, which is free from opium and squills, not only allays the local irritation, but improves digestion and strengthens the constitution. Hence it is used with the most signal success in Asthmas, Bronchitis, Consumption, Coughs, Influenza, Night Sweats of Consumption, Quinsy, and all affections of the throat and chest. Sold in bottles at 1s. 6d., 4s. 6d. and 11s. each, by all respectable Chemists, and wholesale by JAS. M. CROSBY, Chemist, Scarborough.

FREEMASONRY & ISRAELITISM.

BY BRO. WILLIAM CARPENTER, P.M. & P.Z. 177.

XVI.

Hitherto we have regarded the Anglo-Saxons as identical with Israel, chiefly as it is seen in their relations with other peoples and in their occupation of, or establishments in, a considerable portion of the globe, continental and insular; and, in a general way, of the influence they have exercised where they have mixed themselves up with other peoples, in the social, moral, and religious character they have impressed upon them. We have seen them operating as the salt of the earth, purifying what was base, and preserving what had in it the principle of vitality, and was capable of a righteous and beneficent expansion. We must now consider, more particularly, the characteristics which they exhibit amongst themselves—religious, political, and social; and see in how far these agree with what was predicted of Israel after the overthrow of the kingdom. For it is to be observed, that the prophecies touching Israel do not deal in generalities, merely—describing what was to happen to them, as a people, in fulfilling the early prophecies, which gave them the earth for their possession, and depicting them as the progenitors of many and powerful nations, the ancestors of kings, and the heralds and teachers of those divine truths which are to subdue all peoples, and, ultimately, in the consummation of God's gracious purposes, to bring all men and all things into subjection to the Divine will; so that "judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness reside in the fruitful field—the work of righteousness be peace, the effect of righteousness be perpetual quietness and assurance; while the people shall dwell in a peaceful mansion, and in secure habitations, and in resting-places undisturbed" (Isaiah xxxii. 16-18).

Amongst those things which we have now to notice some may seem to be trivial, or, at best, of but small importance, hardly worth notice; nor would they be if they stood alone; but forming, as they do, parts of a great mass of the particulars which it was foretold Israel should possess, or exemplify, or perform, they assume a different character; and all concentrating in the Anglo-Saxons, and in them alone, they possess a weight and an importance which it is impossible to over-estimate, seeing that they form part of that aggregated mass of evidence which is strengthened by every added item. Amongst these items are the following.

We have seen that Israel was to lose its identity—that is, not to be known as Israel—that it was to become so far blinded as not to know itself; so that being called by another name it should not, until the fulness of the time had come for the realisation of the most comprehensive of the promises and prophecies relating to it, perceive, though performing its allotted work, that it was indeed the Lord's witness and messenger to the ends of the earth, putting down all false gods, overthrowing the inhuman and debasing rites of idolatry and demon-worship, and introducing, in their place, the knowledge and worship of the one true God. Hence, Israel was to become a pre-eminently religious people, setting up a standard for the nations, so that they should walk in its light and kings in the brightness of its sun-rising. Israel was not only to bless the nations by her presence, and her settlements; she was, while diligent in business, to be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. She was to proclaim the great truths of which she had been made the depository. See how clearly and repeatedly this is written on the roll of prophecy: "I, the Lord, have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and will give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the nations" (Isaiah xlii. 6); "Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit" (ch. xxvii. 6); "This people have I formed for myself: thou shalt show forth my praise" (xliii. 21); "Thou art my servant, O Israel; in whom I will be glorified" (xlix. 3); "I will also give thee for a light to the nations, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the ends of the earth" (ver. 6); "And I will strengthen them in the Lord, and they shall walk up and down in his name, saith the Lord" (Zech. x. 12); "Thus shalt thou [Israel] say unto them, The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, even they shall perish from the earth" (Jer. x. 11); "And the remnant of Jacob shall be in the midst of many people, as a dew from the Lord, and as showers upon the grass" (Micah v. 7); "And the Lord will be magnified from the border of Israel" (Malachi i. 5). Great and glorious as this mission was, it has been—though not fully, yet—largely fulfilled by the Anglo-Saxons, and by no other people in the world. By their translations of the Bible into nearly every known language, and the distribution of it over the whole world, they have, indeed, testified that "the gods which have not made the heavens and the earth shall perish from the earth;" and in every region it has been said of those who have been sent forth, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth" (Isaiah lii. 7). They have been, and still are, the missionaries of the good tidings, throughout the continent and in almost every island of the oceans, so that "the uttermost parts of the earth have heard songs, even glory to the righteous" (chap. xxiv. 16); and the Lord has "been glorified in the valleys: even the name of the Lord God of Israel in the Isles of the sea" (ver. 15).

Nevertheless, though thus to be made the witnesses to The Truth, and to constitute the true church, the body was not to be so religiously united as to be of one mind on all points appertaining to religion. They were to be divided among themselves, and to have distinctive religious designations. "One shall say, I belong to Jehovah; and another shall be called by the name of Jacob; and another shall subscribe his hand to Jehovah, and shall be surnamed by the name of Israel" (Isa. xlii. 5). How characteristic this is of the church, as it exists amongst the Anglo-Saxons, and their kindred peoples, every one knows. One is of the Church of England, another of the Church of Rome; one is of Luther, another of Calvin; one is of John Wesley, while others are of the Independents, Baptists, Swedenborgians, or other sectional denominations. One says, "I am of Paul; another, I am of Apollos; another, I am of Cephas; and another, I am of Christ." This becomes a matter of reproach, for many aver that if these Christians had the truth, they would be all of one mind pertaining to it. But whatever may be the object of a man's pursuit, however earnest he may be in that pursuit, and however disposed to embrace and act consistently with such light as he obtains, he is, after all, but a man; and seeing that man differs from man in the power of his intellect and in the breadth and soundness of his judgment, scarcely less than in the expression of his countenance, and in the height of his stature, it necessarily follows, that, though, on the broad and vital truths of religion, they who avow their acceptance of revealed truth, and their willingness to be governed by it, may be of one mind, there will be subordinate things, such as church government, and ceremonial services, and interpretations of particular passages of Scripture, on which they may separate, because holding diverse views. It may be observed, too, that if we looked more at the diversities of opinion existing among men who form part of the same body, we should think less of the differences which divide men into separate bodies. The Church of Rome, with its Dollingers and its Passaglias, its Antonellis and its Hyacinthes, its Mannings and its Newmans; that is to say, with its latitude of views, from the verge of Protestantism to the depths of Ultramontaniam, can only be vaguely regarded as a unity. The Church of England, in like manner, does not present the same face of a sober, and somewhat monotonous, uniformity as it did to our forefathers. From Archdeacon Dennison to Dean Stanley, from Dr. Pusey to Dr. McNeil, from Canon Close to Mr. Maurice, how wide the separation! Among Nonconformists, the diversities observable are fully as great as within the Church. Among the ecclesiastical descendants of the Puritans, who shuddered at the sinfulness of the dance and the play, the love-song and the novel, we have eloquent pulpit-sentimentalists who are authors of dramas and tales, and contemners of things for which their fathers would have suffered martyrdom. All things are progressing, Christian communities among the rest; and as an eloquent writer has said (Christian Society, p. 43): "A great untutored strength, a gigantic force, impetuous in its manifestations, but essentially healthy; a central heat of moral impulse and whole-hearted devotion to truth, may be discerned amid the weltering confusion of religious phenomena in our time. Better the shortcomings, the offences, the extravagances of life, than the silence of death. Earnest heresy, reverent scepticism, are more hopeful phenomena than the ecclesiastical formalism and infidel frivolity of the last century. The age has been one of extending knowledge. Science and criticism have widened the horizon embraced within man's intellectual vision. Difficulties have been felt, debate has arisen in harmonising the new knowledge with the old faith. The religious man has been compelled to admit, if not the conviction, at least the surmise, that there may be more of mystery in the ways of God with man than his fathers believed—that Revelation may have been a more complicated and wonderful process than was supposed—that the Spirit of God may have moved more extensively upon the waters of the human soul, leaving the vestiges on civilizations and in forms of national life where devout men of the last century did not suspect his presence. The faith which has been knit to the heart by the links of clear conviction—the faith which has been accepted, not blindfold but with open eye and assenting mind—the faith which is a man's own, as well as his father's, which he found, indeed, growing upon an honoured grave, but which, with loving hand and joyfully-accepting heart, he has planted in his own garden—this manly, vigorous, storm-tried faith is more common in our days than in any former generation." And, then, be it observed that whatever may have been done in times past in the way of mutual recriminations and persecutions amongst religious sects, this ground of reproach is continually narrowing. The Protestant and the Catholic; the Churchman, and the Dissenter, and the Jew work together for the accomplishment of a common object in philanthropy and religion. The wolf dwells with the lamb, and the leopard lies down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fating together; the cow and the bear feed together, and their young ones lie down together. How little of the bitterness of sectarianism exists in our day is seen in the fact, that Churchmen and Dissenters of various sects occupy the same pulpits, advocate on a common platform the claims of benevolence, and exchange in our lodges and chapters all the courtesies and kindnesses of fraternal union. By-and-bye, we shall, perhaps, see eye to eye, even in this world. Meanwhile, it would not be difficult to show that a mere difference of opinion, upon however many points, is rather a good than an evil, in our present state of imperfection. At all events, it is not a thing to be sweepingly or indiscriminately condemned, for while this sectarianism was foretold of Israel, the prophet, speaking in the name of the Lord, says: "I will pour out my spirit on thy seed; and my blessing on thine offspring; and they shall spring up as the grass among the waters, and as willows by the water-courses" (Isa. xlv. 3, 4).

UNITED GRAND LODGE.

[BY OUR SPECIAL REPORTER.]

The Quarterly Communication to Grand Lodge of England was made on Wednesday evening last, in the Temple, Bro. R. J. BAGSHAW, Prov. Grand Master of Essex, on the throne. The proceedings throughout were of a very animated character, which is an unusual occurrence at the September meeting. At this time of the year most of the brethren are out of town, and the business before Grand Lodge is light. The meeting, therefore, lasts about an hour, and the more important of Masonic affairs stand over till December. But on this occasion, Bro. Matthew Cooke, P.M. 23, had undertaken to remove the September Quarterly Communication from "the dull catalogue of common things," by a motion which asked Grand Lodge to forbid any of its "salaried officials" from "mixing themselves up in any way with" what he called "spurious," "schismatic," and "exterior" organisations. Love of a fray seems a part of the nature of a Briton, and consequently brethren from all parts of the metropolis pressed into Grand Lodge soon after the formalities of opening it were concluded. Whether they were much edified by the time the proceedings were closed, it is impossible to say. We venture to think that on no occasion was the presence of the Grand Master or his Deputy, both of whom so thoroughly understand the duties of a chairman, more urgently needed. A motion conceived in a bad spirit, introduced in a speech of worse taste, most sweeping in its charges, and in the highest degree libellous, has, by the unfortunate want of a powerful chairman, placed the officials of Grand Lodge in a less enviable position than they occupied before. The Grand Secretary, in the most manly way, craved the fullest investigation into all the charges made in the speech of Bro. Cooke; but Bro. Bennoch insisted on pressing to a division an amendment which referred the whole matter of Brother Cooke's motion to the Board of General Purposes. As Brother Evans, the President of that Board, said, there was then no specific charge for the Board to enquire into; and it not being, as he further said, the practice of the Board to enquire into hypothetical charges, Grand Lodge is now under the stigma that it has burked the subject. From the commencement of the evening there was a good deal of life exhibited, and considerable discussion ensued even on a simple motion to expunge a few words from rule 42 of the laws and regulations of the Masonic Benevolent Institution.

Among the brethren who were present we noticed the Rev. R. J. Bagshaw, P.G.M. Essex, as Grand Master; Rev. J. Huyshe, P.G.M. Devon, as D.G.M.; Lord Lindsay, S.G.W.; J. Havers, A. Perkins, P.G.W.'s; Rev. W. F. Short, G.C.; R. J. Simpson, C. J. Martyn, P.G.C.'s; A. J. McIntyre, G.R.; J. L. Evans, P.G.P.; S. Tomkins; J. Hervey, G. Sec.; S. L. Tomkins, J. R. Stebbing, J. E. Saunders, B. Baker, J. M.

Clabon, P.G.D.'s; Dr. J. D. Moore, G.S.B.; W. Young, P.G.S.B.; Wm. Farnfield, J. Smith, J. Brett, J. Coutts, J. Boyd, G.P.'s; and about 250 other brethren.

Grand Lodge having been formally opened, the Grand Secretary (Bro. John Hervey) read the minutes of last Quarterly Communication, which were put by the Acting Grand Master, and confirmed.

The report of the Board of Benevolence for the last quarter was then read by the Grand Secretary, and on the motion of Bro. Joshua Nunn, seconded by Bro. Brandt, a grant of £50 was made to the widow of a late brother of Caveac Lodge, 176.

The following report of the Board of General Purposes, taken as read, was received and ordered to be entered on the minutes:—

To the United Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of England.

The Board of General Purposes beg to report as follows:—

In consequence of the last issue of the 32mo. edition of the Book of Constitutions being nearly exhausted, the Board have directed a reprint of 5000 copies of that edition.

A letter has been received from Bro. Sigismund Rosenthal, P.M. No. 435, offering for the acceptance of Grand Lodge, on behalf of the Craft, a portrait, painted by himself, of the Right Honorable The Earl of Zetland, K.T., Most Worshipful Past Grand Master, in which letter Bro. Rosenthal states that the offer had the formal sanction of the Most Worshipful Past Grand Master, and that it was his Lordship's desire that the Portrait, if accepted, should be placed in the Board Room. The Board have consequently accepted the Portrait, on behalf of the Grand Lodge, with a proper expression of thanks to Bro. Rosenthal, and have had it placed in the Board Room accordingly.

The Board beg to subjoin a statement of the Grand Lodge Accounts at the last meeting of the Finance Committee, held on the 11th August, 1871, showing a balance in the hands of the Grand Treasurer of £3380 6s. 8d.; and in the hands of the Grand Secretary, for petty cash, £75.

(Signed)

J. LLEWELLYN EVANS, President.
Freemasons' Hall, London,
22nd August, 1871.

The Grand Secretary read the Report of the proceedings at a meeting of the Governors and Subscribers of the Benevolent Institution on the 25th July last, which report contained a recommendation that the words, "and not less than one-third of the life donations received on account of each fund," should be expunged from rule 42 of the laws and regulations of the Institution.

Bro. J. A. Rucker, as chairman of the meeting of 25th July, moved the alteration.

Bro. L. Evans said he had not the least idea what the proposed law was intended to be.

The Grand Secretary explained that the rule as it stood before the proposed alteration, required the investment in the name of trustees of all bequests, and not less than a third of life donations, with the view of providing for the permanency of the Institution. The proposed alteration would do away with the investment of the third of life donations, and would restrict the investments to bequests, at the same time leaving it to the discretion of the Committee of the Institution to say what further portion of the funds should be invested. At the commencement of the Institution it was desirable that a certain fund should be established for the purpose of insuring the duration of the Society.

Brother Havers requested the Acting Grand Master to ask the Grand Secretary first to read the law as it stood, and then as it was proposed to be altered.

Bro. Rucker begged permission to read a few statistics; but the Acting Grand Master desired the Grand Secretary to comply with Bro Havers' request, which Bro. Binckes considered unnecessary, as the Grand Secretary had most kindly and fully explained the matter.

After a few words from Bro. Algernon Perkins, the Grand Secretary read the rule and its alteration.

Bro. Francis Bennoch said it would be a great convenience if at this moment the Grand Lodge was informed of the amount of money already invested, for if they did not know something of the means at their disposal, he did not see how they could come to a conclusion on the point.

Bro. J. A. Rucker explained how the male and female funds stood. The male fund commenced in 1842, when there was nothing invested, and it was then ordered that two-thirds of the annual subscriptions, all life donations and all bequests, should be invested. In 1845, the sum invested being £2,600, it was ordered that one-third of the annual subscriptions, all life annuities, and all bequests, should be similarly treated. In 1857, there being £9,440 on account of the men, and £1,853 on account of the widows, the rule was again altered. All life donations, and all bequests were still ordered to be invested. In 1867, the amount to the credit of the male fund being £20,500, and to that of the female fund £11,450, it was further changed; and it was now, in 1871, thought prudent that one-third of the life donations should be excepted from the funds invested. The circumstances were these. The building at Croydon was in a dilapidated state, and as a matter of necessity, must be repaired. This would require an outlay of £2,600, and it was better to take this sum out of the Institution's own funds, than come to the brethren in Grand Lodge for it. He thought there could not be a doubt in the mind of any man who had heard the figures read, as to which was the proper course. There was now £22,900 on account of the men, and £13,700 on account of the women, and it would be relieving posterity of a burden to apply some portion of the future funds to the necessary repairs of the building. This was the object they had in view in proposing the alteration of the 42nd rule, and he begged Grand Lodge to understand that by making the alteration, they would not cease to increase the invested fund, as all bequests still remained to be put by.

Bro. Bristowe, W.M. 14, thought the proposition a good one.

Bro. W. S. Gover, W.M. 1, said that although the principle of the rule was good, a limit should be put to the rule. It was not for the benefit of the Institution that the sum invested should increase without limit. If a limit were fixed, say to £30,000 or £50,000, it would prevent impairing the present for an unnecessary provision for the future. He wished, therefore, that had been a part of the suggestion made in the motion.

Bro. F. Adlard, mentioned that the amount had been fixed.

The proposed alteration was then approved and adopted.

Bro. Matthew Cooke, P.M. in No. 23, in rising to introduce the following motion,

"That whilst this Grand Lodge recognizes the private right of every Brother to belong to any extraneous Masonic organization he may choose, it as firmly forbids, now and at any future time, all Brethren while engaged as Salaried Officials under this Grand Lodge to mix themselves up in any way with such bodies as the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite; the Rites of Misraim and Memphis; the spurious orders of Rome and Constantine; the schismatic body styling itself the Grand Mark Lodge of England, or any other exterior Masonic organization whatever (even that of the Order of Knights Templar, which is alone recognized by the Articles of Union) under the pain of immediate dismissal from employment by this Grand Lodge," said: Most Worshipful Grand Master, I believe that no society or body of men have ever been more conservative and less inclined to innovation than the society of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons. Within the last six or seven years a great innovation has, however, crept in, an innovation that we ought to look to and ought to stop, before it grows to too great a height. In the book of Constitutions we hold forth that it is not in the power of any man or body of men to make innovations in the body of Masonry; but when we come to find that in our own office there are innovations daily taking place—that they are growing—that they are absolutely compounding new degrees—that the business of sale is carried on, and the place is made a warehouse—I think it becomes necessary for us to consider how far this is to be tolerated.

Bro. F. Binckes rose to order.

The Acting Grand Master said it was but right that Bro. Cooke should explain the grounds on which his motion was made. Grand Lodge would have an opportunity of hearing anything Bro. Binckes had to say when Bro. Cooke had concluded his motion.

Bro. Matthew Cooke in continuation of his address said: In any commercial establishment we are perfectly well aware of one thing, that if the subordinates are allowed to carry on a similar business to their employers', ruin must at last ensue (cries of "oh, oh"), because "a house divided against itself cannot stand," and our house is being turned out of windows. We are at the present time supposed to be carrying on but the simple three degrees in Freemasonry. Our clerks are paid for certain services; but they go beyond that, and on their own account they formulate, tabulate, and send abroad other degrees, and they make our office the place from whence they emanate. Nay, they do more than that, they play into the hands of certain people; they give and they sell information; they withhold information from certain channels; they pour it into others: and I taxed a manufacturer one night in the next hall with receiving such information; and he said, at first, he had not received it. I said "Then, how came it that at the consecration of a certain lodge at which I was present, an application from this manufacturer to find the clothing and the necessaries for the opening of the lodge was dated exactly a fortnight before even the Grand Secretary's letter stating that the warrant would be issued had reached the parties who had applied for the warrant?" He said, "Well, if you know that, all I can say is, that I have paid for that information, and dearly paid for it, through the nose." Now, I say that that is not the thing that our Grand Secretary's office is established for. We have no right to allow our clerks to be receiving percentages while in our service.

Bro. Havers here interposed. Although he thought it quite right that Bro. Cooke should be allowed to bring forward his motion, he protested in the name of all the brethren of Grand Lodge against any statements being made which, if true, were most highly libellous, and which, if not true, ought not to have been made. He must respectfully submit to the Acting Grand Master that Bro. Cooke was bound to keep to the words of his motion.

The Acting Grand Master said that his feeling was that Bro. Cooke was making a statement of a character which Grand Lodge could not receive, and therefore he hoped that brother would moderate his language, and keep within bounds; because, if he continued in the way he had begun, he would only raise a spirit of indignation. The charges Bro. Cooke was making against the Grand Secretary's office were of a most frightful description, and he (the Acting G. Master) was amazed and astonished at what he had heard. Sitting in that chair, he did not wish to suppress anything; but he must insist on any statements which Bro. Cooke had to make being made with moderation. He must ask him to confine himself simply to his motion.

Bro. Matthew Cooke, in continuation, said: I will not go into any statements but what I can prove. The things are true. But, however, as you, sir, do not think I am justified in stating them, I shall not proceed with that. I shall, therefore, as you wish it, confine myself strictly to the motion; and I say this, that while we have clerks in our office, they have no right to be taking up any other degrees than those they are paid for. They have no right to be dabbling with other things, because they must learn certain things—and, I hope, sir, I am strictly in accordance with the motion in what I am saying—they must, in their intercourse with others, learn certain things; and I say that both in their intercourse in the office, and with other degrees and rites, naturally things must leak out, and matters be talked over which should have no influence and no bearing the one on the other.

Bro. Dr. Daniel Moore, interrupting, said it appeared to him that what Bro. Cooke was now stating had nothing to do with the question at issue.

The Acting G. Master admitted that he was of the same opinion. He thought Bro. Cooke was travelling into questions which did not concern Grand Lodge to any great extent. If Bro. Cooke had charges to prefer against the Grand Secretary, or the department of which he had the supervision, it was quite clear he was not pursuing the proper course. The matter should be brought before the Board of General Purposes in the first instance. He, however, had not done so, and the language he was now using was very irregular.

Bro. John Hervey, Grand Secretary, here rose, and, addressing the Acting Grand Master with great earnestness, said: Most Worshipful Grand Master, I do trust that the brethren in Grand Lodge, and yourself, will permit Bro. Cooke, who is making an attack on the office of which I am the head, to make his statement fully and exhaustively. I do trust that you will hear him make any observation he has to make against the Grand Secretary's office, and against those who are in it, in the fullest and most exhaustive manner. Grand Lodge will have an opportunity of judging whether the motion which he is about to make is just and well founded. If it is so, well and good; if it is not, the motion of which he has given notice will not be carried.

Bro. the Rev. J. Huyshe, Prov. G.M. of Devonshire, did not think that this Grand Lodge ought to listen to any libellous charges which were made against their officers, even though it should be the desire of those officers that such charges should be fully stated. It was quite unusual for Grand Lodge to do so.

Bro. Matthew Cooke, in reply, said: I make no libellous charges against any one. (Numerous cries of "Oh!" and laughter.) I should like to know where we are to bring our complaints, if we cannot bring them here?

Bro. Bristowe: Before the Board of General Purposes.

Bro. Matthew Cooke: The Board of General Purposes will not hear complaints. You are aware of that quite as well as I am. I am perfectly aware of this, that, to a certain extent, it is an unpopular sort of business to make a complaint. Still, I make a complaint on the score of duty, and I do not complain without coming thoroughly fortified by every word I utter. I state nothing recklessly—

"Nothing extenuate, Nor set down aught in malice."

(Cries of "Oh!") As you seem, sir, to think that every word I say is libellous, I will confine myself to the motion at once. First, I will say this, that, so far as touting for a seconder, or looking out for one, is concerned, I have not done so, as I thought that if I could have shown—but you do not allow me to show, because you say that is libellous—but if I could have shown that there is a prima facie case of injustice being perpetrated, the whole of Grand Lodge would have seconded it; but without having searched for a seconder, I now beg to move the motion (which he accordingly did).

A Brother at the further end of the Temple having seconded the motion,

A Brother on the left of the Grand Junior Warden, rose, he said, at the very earliest moment to oppose this motion. It was nothing less than a grave imputation on those officers on whom all Masons who came in contact with them so much relied; and he hoped that justice would be done to them by the motion being rejected. The officials under the Grand Secretary, against whom the motion was levelled, did everything they could for the good of Freemasonry, and it was but just to them that the motion be instantly rejected.

Bro. Francis Bennoch asserted that this motion was the most painful one that had ever been placed on the paper of business of Grand Lodge. The brethren were placed in a great difficulty. Only yesterday there came before him as Vice-President of the Colonial Board, a spurious warrant which had been circulating in the colonies, and that was only one of a considerable number that had come before the same board during the last two years. He was sorry that the motion was introduced in its present form. If it was rejected by Grand Lodge, a sort of sanction was given to these spurious objects (cries of "hear, hear," and "no, no"). If it was adopted, it was a notice to all Masters of lodges that certain warrants issued by some presumed Masonic bodies were spurious and not to be recognized. If it was rejected contumaciously, it gave a sort of quasi sanction to the conduct of those brethren who were carrying on this spurious masonry. There was a charge made by this motion against the officers of Grand Lodge, than whom he believed no number of gentlemen could be associated together who had a more earnest desire to faithfully perform their difficult duties. While on the one hand by carrying this motion Grand Lodge would seem to pass a vote of censure on those officers, on the other hand by rejecting it they would give a sort of sanction to those spurious lodges which were a disgrace to the Masonic fraternity (hear, hear). He was only speaking of what he had heard in connection with the conduct of the officers and the manner in which they superintended the business of the ancient order in this Grand Lodge. If it were true that within Grand Secretary's office they had certain gentlemen (he did not know that they had) who were using a considerable amount of time in touting for business in connection with spurious bodies it was a grave matter, and required to be gravely inquired into; but then, not in Grand Lodge. To go into details was not only a waste of time, but a degradation to Grand Lodge. On such details, perhaps only one or two gentlemen were informed or misinformed. The questions comprised in the motion were so vague that he dared not vote for it, but he could not vote against it. He presumed that the mover was in earnest in his desire to benefit Masonry, by bringing forward his motion, but he thought it would be becoming both to Bro. Cooke and to the dignity of Grand Lodge if Bro. Cooke withdrew his motion, and if that brother had but one per cent. of the evidence he had hinted at, he should bring the matter before the Board of General Purposes, who would be but too glad for their own sake as well as for the sake of Masonry to get the whole matter fully investigated. He trusted that the subject would not be treated with slight. It was far too serious. There was something astir in regard to Masonry which was sapping the foundations of our institution, and washing away our present landmarks. If we had officers who departed from their duties they were censurable, provided those things were proved. He trusted they would not be proved, for to have a person in one's employ who was sworn to fidelity, and who overlooked the obligation and the conditions under which he received the payment of his annual salary, and fostered spurious societies, was a dangerous state of things. He was sure the gentlemen in Grand Secretary's office were anxious for a full and impartial enquiry, and he hoped that the gentleman who brought the motion forward, would take it before the Board of General Purposes, to be properly sifted, (cries of "Move, move"). He would move "That this question be referred to the Board of General Purposes for enquiry and to report."

Bro. F. Adlard seconded the amendment.

Bro. Binckes would simply say that the denunciations that had gone forth of spurious bodies, though ostensibly directed against the officials in Grand Secretary's offices, were solely directed against bodies which had asserted an authority of their own to confer the Craft degrees. He referred to the offensive terms in which the motion was couched, and asked what proof there was that any member of the executive staff had violated the trust reposed in him, by propagating degrees antagonistic to the United Grand Lodge of Freemasons. Do let them have a distinct issue. They were charged with having, while engaged as salaried officials of this Grand Lodge, propagated a knowledge of antagonistic degrees. He challenged Bro. Cooke for a scintilla of proof of such a charge. It would be carrying us back to the middle ages, or to the period before the abolition of slavery, if after office hours in the Grand Secretary's office the clerks were not allowed to belong to other societies, to cricket clubs, boating clubs, or even to visiting friends (cries of "Question"). It was a most monstrous proposition, and such a rule would deprive the brethren of the services of high-minded, honourable gentlemen, who conscientiously discharged their duty at the present moment. Had any brother complained that the business of the office had been neglected, correspondence been unanswered, returns unnoticed; or that he had not met with that courtesy which was his due? No; and he said no with some pride and glory, as a lover of Freemasonry, who had first drawn breath under the English jurisdiction. Do not let them shirk the question in any shape or way, but meet the matter openly, and not let attacks be made on their officers in a covert, uncourteous, and unfraternal way.

Bro. Havers had not intended to speak on the subject, but after the highly inflammatory address just delivered (which was unnecessary, for they were all of one mind) he could not help making one or two observations. He would throw aside the injudiciously framed motion of Bro. Cooke, and merely notice a remark which had fallen from Bro. Binckes, as to the duties of the clerks during office hours. He was quite sure there was not one of those gentlemen who would not say that whether in office hours, or after office hours, he held an honourable engagement and could not foster anything subversive of our institutions. If Grand Lodge in its wisdom had pronounced against certain degrees, it would be most unwise, and in bad taste for any of the clerks to conjoin himself with an opposing order. One word more. Bro. Binckes could not understand that a man could not divest himself of his official position after the office doors were closed. But it was so. A clergyman would not be allowed to say that his position as a clergyman vanished as soon as his morning and evening prayers were read. In his (Bro. Havers') own profession a man would be scouted, who, after visiting his patients, cast aside the healing art. A stock-broker was similarly situated, and, in short, so was every business man. He (Bro. Havers) trusted that Bro. Bennoch would withdraw his amendment, and if Bro. Cooke had any evidence of the truth of his charges, as he firmly believed and hoped he had not, that he would bring the matter before the proper court, and he might rely on the help of every one in Grand Lodge. Before the character of gentlemen was again openly assailed, it was to be hoped sufficient evidence would be adduced. It was unfair, unjust, and improper to attack them as they had been attacked. If from thoughtlessness or other cause they had been led to allow their names to be brought prominently before the world in antagonistic degrees, he thought they would now see that that was a case of impropriety. In conclusion, he would express no further opinion on the case, but begged that the brethren would be fair and just to all.

Bro. the Rev. R. J. Simpson, P.G.C., coincided with every word which had been uttered by Bro. Havers, except one, which was his recommendation to Bro. Bennoch to withdraw his amendment. He thought that this, the most painful motion that had been brought before Grand Lodge since he had the honour of a seat in it, should have been brought before the Board of General Purposes, and if that Board refused to entertain it, then it could have been taken to the higher court. But now, that it was brought to the higher court, the charges which had been made against the officers under Grand Secretary should not for a moment be strangled or hushed up. Those gentlemen should insist, as an officer would on a court-martial, on the matter being taken before the Board of General Purposes. He sympathised with them most deeply. Although this discussion was going on in a Masonic lodge, it was unavoidable that its purport should ooze out to the public, and a very serious result might come about if some amendment were not passed, that night, which should show that Grand Lodge did not want to hush up, or in any way to strangle, the inquiry; but, on the contrary, demanded the proofs of the charges Bro. Cooke had brought forward. He should strongly support the amendment of Bro. Bennoch.

Bro. E. J. Barron would appeal to Bro. Bennoch to allow a slight alteration to be made in his amendment. As it at present stood, he did not think it fully expressed the feeling of Grand Lodge. He thought that, having this motion of Bro. Cooke's before them—which they all agreed was most objectionable in form, and had been most improperly supported (he trusted he was not using an unmasonic term)—they ought to make the amendment as strong as they could, and he would suggest that the words, "that this Grand Lodge, while strongly reprobating the terms of Bro. Cooke's motion, refers it, &c.," should be added.

Bro. Murton did not know anything with regard to the merits of the case of his own knowledge, but one thing appeared from Bro. Cooke's motion, that irregularities existed in the Grand Secretary's office. He could but regret it. He could not state what they were; and whether they liked it or not, it would go forth to the public that there were such irregularities. Therefore it was extremely advisable for the officials, that the matter should be inquired into, and if the amendment was carried, he hoped no additional words would be incorporated in it which would enable any one hereafter to say that the slightest opinion was expressed on the charges made. Judgment should be reserved until the facts had been brought forward.

Bro. J. M. Clabon, P.G.D., thought the amendment unnecessary. Bro. Cooke could bring his complaints before the Board without it. Grand Lodge could negative the motion, and then leave Bro. Cooke to go before the Board of General Purposes.

Bro. H. Browse, P.G.D., also suggested that Bro. Bennoch should withdraw his amendment.

Bro. Hervey, G.S., said: Most Worshipful G.M. in the chair, it is not usual for the Grand Secretary to make any observation in this lodge, but when he has been, I may say, so decidedly attacked as he has been this evening, I think he may be excused if he makes two or three observations to Grand Lodge. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) M.W.G.M., I, and the officers who act under me, have no objection to any investigation that can take place, and I can only say, we court it. But, M.W.G.M., I object most entirely to the amendment that has been made, inasmuch as it insinuates that some investigation is necessary. (Hear, hear.) I wish the issue to be taken, and I should like it to be taken, if I might throw myself on the mercy of Grand Lodge. The observations which Bro. Cooke has made to Grand Lodge, the attack he has made, wherein he has asserted that members of the Grand Secretary's office sell—

Bro. Matthew Cooke rose to order. He had been told he was out of order when so addressing Grand Lodge, and he ceased immediately.

Bro. Binckes said that Bro. Cooke did use those words.

Bro. Hervey continued:—I think, sir, that if those words were made use of by Bro. Matthew Cooke—and I believe they were—then I say, that I wish the issue taken by Grand Lodge, whether we of the Grand Secretary's office have ever sold information which we possess for the benefit of any Masonic tradesman. Most Worshipful Grand Master, I will not trouble you further with any observations. I feel strongly on the motion, and I say, take it on its original merits; do not take it by a sidewind; let us know what we have to meet; bring any charge you like against us, we are ready to meet it; and I, as Grand Secretary of Grand Lodge, say to this Grand Lodge of England, I am ready to abide by it.

Bro. Bennoch replied on his amendment, but could not see how he could withdraw it.

Bro. Clabon said, whether the amendment was put and carried, or put and lost, Bro. Cooke could still go before the Board with his complaint and have it fully investigated; but it would be much better for the officials ("no, no") that Grand Lodge, feeling strongly their innocence of any betrayal of their trust, should refer it to the Board of General Purposes. (Great confusion.)

Bro. Bennoch's amendment was then put, and declared carried.

Bro. Ll. Evans, President of the Board of General Purposes asked what was the question referred? It was not the practice of the Board to enquire into hypothetical charges. If substantive charges were brought before them it was their duty to enquire into them. At present none such were stated.

The Acting Grand Master agreed with Bro. Evans, but thought it a simple way of getting rid of a very disagreeable subject.

Bro. Ll. Evans protested against the un-businesslike way in which it had been brought forward.

Bro. Joshua Nunn, P.G.S.B., said the amendment had not yet been put as a substantive motion, and he should therefore move that the whole question be adjourned sine die.

Bro. Binckes seconded the amendment of Bro. Nunn, and called for a division on Bro. Bennoch's amendment as a substantive motion.

Bro. Edward Cox objected, that some of the brethren forming the majority had left the Lodge.

The amendment was then put when there appeared:—

For the amendment	...	...	75
Against	...	...	63
Majority	...	...	12

Bro. Joshua Nunn afterwards moved "That the whole question be adjourned sine die."

Bro. W. S. Gover seconded the motion. It was a rule in public bodies that charges should not be made covertly behind a motion which did not express censure. By what they were doing that night they would establish a precedent for the future whether a brother who wished to bring forward a charge against any other brother should construct a motion that should keep everybody in the dark till he brought it on. It was their duty to deal at once with such a matter, that it might never occur again. Bro. Cooke, having made these charges, was bound in honour as a gentleman to bring them forward in a formal shape, but the only way of preventing the course he had taken occurring again, was to adopt Bro. Nunn's motion.

After a few words from Bros. Brackstone Baker, the Rev. R. J. Simpson, Brandt, Bennoch, Binckes, Algernon Perkins and Edward Cox, Bro. Nunn's amendment was put and lost, and Grand Lodge was closed in proper form.

ROYAL MASONIC INSTITUTION FOR BOYS.

The General Committee of the Boys' School was held at Freemasons' Hall, on Saturday, the 2nd inst. Bro. H. Browse, V.P., occupied the chair, and there were also present Bros. B. Head, J. R. Sheen, G. Snow, F. Walters, J. R. Stebbing, and R. Spencer, V.P.'s; H. Massey, F. Adlard, W. Young, J. Weaver, M. A. Loewenstark, A. D. Loewenstark, S. Rosenthal, J. Turner, and F. Binckes (Secretary).

The minutes of the last meeting were read and unanimously confirmed, and the minutes of the House Committee were read for information.

A candidate was placed on the list of boys seeking admission into the school.

The interest of the Sustentation Fund not being equal to the demands made upon it, the sum of £200 was unanimously voted from the General Fund to the Sustentation Fund.

The usual vote of thanks to the Chairman brought the meeting to a close.

THE Clapton Lodge, No. 1365, for which a warrant has been issued, will be consecrated on the 20th instant, at the White Hart Tavern, Clapton. Bro. J. D. James Terry, P.M. 228, has been named by the M.W. Bro. the Marquis of Ripon as the Consecrating Officer, and the musical arrangements will be under the direction of Bro. GOLDEN RULES FOR SMOKERS.—To begin, a man with a bad appetite will, if he smoke, most assuredly eat still less—a noteworthy fact for smokers or others recovering from wasting illness or "off their feed" from whatever cause. This effect of tobacco, by the way, while an evil to the sick man who cannot eat enough, becomes a boon to the starved man who cannot get enough to eat; and ample illustration of this was furnished among the French and German soldiers in the recent war. Again, no man should smoke who has a dirty tongue, a bad taste in his mouth, or a weak or disordered digestion. In any such case he cannot relish his tobacco. It should be a golden rule with smokers, that the pipe or cigar which is not smoked with relish had better not be smoked at all. Indigestion in every shape is aggravated by smoking, but most especially that form of it commonly known as atonic and accompanied with flatulence. Diarrhoea, as a rule, is made worse by smoking.—Food Journal.

BOOTS of the Period at BLAKEY'S, Lime-street, Liverpool (under the Alexandra Theatre).—[Advt.]

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are admirably adapted for the cure of diseases incidental to females. At different periods of life women are subject to complaints which require a peculiar medicine, and it is now an indisputable fact that there is none so suitable for such complaints, as Holloway's Pills. They are invaluable to females of all ages, young or old, married or single. They purify the blood, regulate the secretions, give tone to the stomach, correct all suspended functions, and clear the complexion. The first approach of disordered action should be met with appropriate doses of these Pills; which taking then no restriction need be placed over the patient. They contain nothing which can possibly prove injurious to the system. They act by purifying the blood, and regulating every organ.—[Advt.]

THE GRAND ORIENT OF FRANCE.

IT is announced that the authorities of the Grand Orient of France have issued a circular to other Grand Masonic Bodies, with the view of removing an impression which widely prevails as to the participation of certain Parisian Masons, as such, in the revolutionary acts of the insurgent Communists. The Grand Orient denies that the attitude of the Masonic Fraternity in Paris during the recent troubles was at any time inconsistent with the teachings and traditions of the Order, and it is further averred that deviations from the neutral line prescribed by Masonic law have occurred amongst the lodges in Germany.

With respect to the latter assertion, we can only say that we hear it for the first time, and as no instances are quoted, or proofs set forth, we take the liberty of stigmatising it as a most uncharitable surmise, unworthy serious consideration. But the denial by the French Masonic authorities of all complicity in the miserable doings of the Commune cannot be so lightly dismissed. Does the Grand Orient ignore the fact that ten thousand so-called Masons fraternised with the men of blood, and planted their lodge banners on the ramparts of Paris? If these men were spurious Masons, owing no allegiance either to the Grand Orient or to the Supreme Grand Council of France, it merely proves that Freemasonry in France must be terribly effete to allow impostors to assume its symbols and degrade its name. But if, on the other hand, we take the more probable hypothesis, that the mountebanks who paraded their ribbons and jewels through Parisian streets were actually members of Masonic lodges working under the Grand Orient itself, or the Supreme Council, what becomes of the authoritative contradiction now given to the world? Are we to believe that not even ten regular Masons took part in the celebrated "demonstration" of which Henri Rochefort became the enthusiastic historian?—that every man who wore an apron or carried a sword in the vast procession did so under false pretences, usurping a title to which he had no just claim?

If this be the case, the clandestine bodies of Masons in France must be far more numerous than the regular brethren, and the utmost caution should be exercised by English lodges, accordingly, before they admit a French brother. Ten thousand men marching as Masons, and identifying what they are pleased to term the "Masonic programme" with the theories of the Commune! and yet we are gravely told that the Masonic Body kept aloof from the hideous politics of the time. We want further information as to those men, and why such a formidable host of soi-disant Masons should have been permitted to spring up side by side with the peace-loving adherents of the Grand Orient? Cannot even one man be identified as a quondam believer in the rue Cadet, and the Napoleonic Grand Mastership? Who were the Freres Moniere and Terifocq, whose names were reported by Rochefort in his Mot d'Ordre as prominent Masonic orators on the day of the demonstration? We have a right to demand if, after all that has been said, these men turn out to be subjects of the Grand Orient, and consequently traitors to their Masonic vows, that signal and condign punishment shall be inflicted upon them. Let them be solemnly expelled—their names blotted out for ever from the roll of the Craft, and only the record of their treason and their shame remain as a warning to future ages. The whole system of Continental Freemasonry must be purged and purified, and the dangerous practice of allowing political or religious discussions in the lodges must be at once and for ever abolished. In this respect, not only French Masons, but many others, especially amongst the Latin races, have grievously erred. Dreams of social reforms and plots for organic political changes have alike been ventilated under the protecting shade of Masonry, and with the most demoralising and destructive effect upon its fair fame, and its hoped-for progress. We are glad to find that the heads of the Craft in Belgium have sternly enjoined the lodges under their jurisdiction no longer to countenance this baneful and unmasonic practice, and we hope the Grand Orient of France will see the necessity of adopting a similar course.

Since we commenced this article we have received a copy of the Monde Maçonnique, in which the text of the circular issued by the Grand Orient is given, and we are happy to notice that the statements made as to its contents in several journals are to some extent erroneous. Bro. Babaud Larivière, the Grand Master, repudiates the action of the unworthy men who forgot the true principles of Freemasonry during the civil war; but the question still remains, as we have put it—Who were these men? and are they still acknowledged as Masons? Now that the attention of our French brethren is directed to the subject, we are satisfied that stringent measures will be adopted to prevent the recurrence of such a scandal, and in the reorganisation of their system we trust they will not forget to prohibit the discussion of political or religious matters in all the lodges under the jurisdiction of the Grand Orient.

FAIR OR FOUL.

THE debate upon Brother Matthew Cooke's motion in Grand Lodge, last Wednesday evening, acquires importance from the fact that one of the primary laws which govern not only Freemasonry, but all associations of just men, was deliberately violated by that member of the Craft. The Constitutions state, most distinctly, that if brethren have complaints to prefer, those complaints must be made to the Board of General Purposes, and that the accused party should have due notice of the same.

Now, on Wednesday night Bro. Cooke brought forward charges of venality and corruption against the executive officials of Grand Lodge, without having given the slightest previous intimation of his intention, either by notice of motion or otherwise. A constitutional right is imperilled by this proceeding, apart entirely from the merits of the case. The amendment of Brother Bennoch, by which the whole subject is referred to the Board of General Purposes for investigation, was carried, and, under the circumstances, we can easily understand the feeling which dictated this decision of Grand Lodge.

It is to be hoped that a full and searching enquiry will be made, and if the foul charges alluded to be not substantiated, we trust that the extreme penalty known to Masonic law will be meted out to the unworthy accuser.

THE MARK DEGREE.

On reading Bro. Buchan's notice of the Mark degree, and the testimony of Brother Officer, G.D. of Scotland, it occurred to me that perhaps those two well-known brethren, in connection with other qualified Freemasons in Scotland, would endeavour to trace the period of the introduction of the Mark degree into Scotland. Where is the first minute that alludes to the Mark degree, and is such to be found worked in a Craft lodge or a Royal Arch chapter?

Unfortunately, the records that would probably throw light on the subject are missing, and not all the endeavours of Bro. Hughan and other brethren (well known to the Craft for their Masonic studies) have as yet resulted in the discovery of the important volume, which is said to contain references to the Royal Arch as early as A.D. 1743. The next earliest we know of is to be found in the Banff Records of A.D. 1765, and which have been published by Brother William James Hughan, P.M., &c.

Facts we want, and must have, if we are to obtain the support of the reasonable and thinking members of our ancient Fraternity. 333°.

MANUSCRIPTS.

As some controversy has arisen about the true age of the MS. which is Art. 29, 3329 Sloane MSS., in the British Museum, I am anxious to let the brethren know that I purpose to publish the same, very shortly, with a fac simile of the handwriting and paper-mark, that we may have the whole matter fully and fairly before us.

ANTAGONISM IN THE HIGH DEGREES.

A word or two in reply to "Constancy." I alluded to "Christian Masonry" as it comes under the Irish working immediately after the R.A. Degree. I am aware that several of the "high degrees" may be given to persons not professing the Christian faith, and that under the A. and A. Rite such degrees as the Rose Croix, which is essentially and emphatically a Christian degree, is communicated to candidates not of that religion, with the clumsy and insufficient proviso that they are at liberty to apply its teachings in connection with whatever form of faith they may profess.

I believe some of the lately "called-up" Prince Masons here are able to give degrees, &c., but that such is by no means the rule regarding them. A point that might be worth ascertaining is: In how many instances has a dispensation been required for their installation, in consequence of their comparatively short membership in the Order, &c.?

The Rite, as worked in Ireland, is most inconsistent. It professes to derive its authority from the A. and A. Rite, but requires Templar qualifications in its candidates.

The whole subject here requires a thorough revision, which I trust it will shortly receive. Dublin. AN IRISH H.K.T.

"A MASONIC STUDENT" ON THE MASTER DEGREE AND THE ROYAL ARCH.

In your contemporary of the 26th ult., "A Masonic Student" observes: "Nothing can be more incorrect or unhistoric than Bro. Buchan's repeated assertion that 'the Master's degree never existed before 1717,' or 'the Royal Arch until the fourth decade of last century.'" And he further says: "As regards the 'Master's degree,' there is plenty of indisputable evidence to prove that it was well known and practised in this country before 1650, while there is a great body of proof now forthcoming that the threefold division of Master, Fellow Craft, and Apprentice is coeval with the existence of the Masonic guilds in this country."

Now, no one denies the existence of this "threefold division" centuries ago; what is denied is, that this "division" consisted of degrees, or, of our three degrees. Another point is, that this "threefold division" existed among other crafts, as well as among the masons; possibly the masons simply copied that system of classes from some of the other crafts. As to the Master degree (not "Master's") being well known and practised before 1650! that, in my opinion, is a mere dream; however, produce this pretended "indisputable evidence," and if it is all right, I am ready to admit it—after it is produced. More, I deliberately challenge "A Masonic Student" to back up his statement; he has made a similar statement again and again, but I could never get him to produce his "indisputable evidence" yet. Is he able to do it now?

He also says the Royal Arch existed before the fourth decade of last century. Now, if such were really the case, give us a little "indisputable evidence" in support of the idea. For my part, I am not aware of the Royal Arch being so old as 1730, nor of its ever having been referred to in any document before then.

In short, it appears to me that under the circumstances, "A Masonic Student," is bound in honour as a gentleman, either to properly substantiate his statements or else to withdraw them. His own words prove this, for he says: "I hope my brethren generally will bear in mind that unsupported statements do not constitute proof, and that constant repetitions of oft-repeated fallacies do not supply us with a satisfactory, or credible, or authentic history of Freemasonry in this country."

W. P. BUCHAN.

COMMITTEES OF TASTE.

I fully sympathise with the remarks upon "Committees of Taste," at page 550; they are both timely and appropriate. It would seem that Freemasons are always made the victims of defective jewellery. Look, for instance, at the wretched dumps which were presented to the Stewards at the inauguration of Freemasons' Hall; it could hardly be supposed they could be outdone in ugliness, but the committee, or whoever designed the "centenary jewel," engraved in the new edition of the Constitutions, have certainly carried their point, and kept the worst till the last. I trust, however, the issue of their hideous medal will not prevent lodges from adopting some design of their own of a better character than their guides seem able to achieve for them. VIATOR.

THE ARK.

We extract the following from "The Freemasons' Quarterly Magazine" for July, 1854:—

If we take the Indian Bacchus, as many very erudite mythologists are inclined to do, to be derived from Noah, the introduction of the cista mystica, or sacred allegorical chest, is perfectly accounted for; its introduction into the Eleusian processions and the Dionysiacal rites was frequent, and is incontestible. Virgil cannot enumerate the instruments necessary to agriculture without allusion to the mythic character of the chest, or wicker hamper (Georg. i., ver. 166):—

"Arbutæ crates et mystica vannus Iacchi."

The subject is so frequent on medals of a serpent, the emblem of good fortune and health, creeping into a wicker basket, that the peculiar name of c(r)stiferi has been attributed to them by numismatists, a name which the Latin artists of the Church have appropriated to a saint whom they significantly name Christopherus, from always bearing on his shoulder the most precious portion of the Church, its soul and founder, as the infant Jesus. This is best illustrated by the pictorial representations of a Dionysiacal procession, figured in the "Antiquities of Herculaneum," vol. ii., p. 135. A woman forms part of the group, carrying on her shoulder a square box with a projecting roof; and what stamps it peculiarly as a type of the Noachite Ark is a door in the front.

Numerous allusions to the Bacchic Ark are scattered through all the classic writers; and so sacred was its name that, equally with the sacred Tetragrammaton of the Jews, it was unpronounceable. Oppian (Cyneg. ii. 258) calls the ark of firwood, that had contained the infant Bacchus, and which was carried in procession by the sacred choir, χρηλον αρρητην, arca ineffabilis; and Homer uses the word chelos in the same signification, in which both Suidas and Hesychius interpret it as κιβωτος, an ark. Pausanias (lib. ii.) says that Vulcan made a small statue of Bacchus and gave it to Jupiter, who entrusted it to Dardanus, the Trojan, as the Palladium of his newly-elected Troy. In the sacking of that city by the Greeks, the portion of Eurypylus was an ark (γαριναξ), wherein was contained this statue; but at his first attempt to look into his ark to examine the statue, he was deprived of his senses, and became insane. We cannot avoid alluding here to the coincidence noted for the Ark of the Lord, which the men of Bethshemesh had profaned by looking into it, as related (1 Sam., chap. vi., ver. 19), and the punishment there recorded; nor can the conformity of the exposure of Moses amongst the bulrushes be passed over in noting the frequent recurrence of analogous facts in Holy Writ, and the mythological fables of the heathen. The northern Sagas are not evempt; the Volundr Saga tell us Voland, or Gualand (Walter Scott's Wieland Smith, in "Kenilworth"), was exposed in a chest hollowed out from a single tree; and the Danish legend of Scaf is more curious and interesting, as it is supposed to designate the fate of the earliest ruler of the Schleswig Angli, and consequently the immediate progenitor of one of the tribes who conquered our island from the Britons, and settled there. The best account we have found of this tradition is in a recently-edited roll of British history, by Thomas Sprott, the property of Joseph Mayer, Esq., of Liverpool, of which, at our suggestion, the liberal proprietor consented to give a fac-simile edition, principally for private distribution, and whose zeal and liberality have again been so amply proved in the recent purchase of the Faussett Collection of British Antiquities. After giving a spirited portrait in the margin labelled Scaf, the writer proceeds: "Iste, ut ferunt, in quadam Insula Germaniæ avulsus sine remige puerulus, posito ad caput ejus framenti manipulo, quem patria lingua Scaf (Anglicè Sheaf) dicitur, dormiens inventus est; hac autem de causa Scaf appellatus ab hominibus illius regionis: pro miraculo acceptus est et sedule (sic) nutritus, qui adultus etate regnavit in oppido quod nunc Slawick tunc vero Hedybye appellatur: olim dicebatur Vetus Anglia (unde Angli in Britanniam venerunt) inter Gothos et Saxones instituta."

He (Schaf), they tell, was driven on a certain island of Germany (in a boat) without oars, quite an infant and asleep, a sheaf of corn being placed at his head, which, as in the language of the country it is called Schaf, was the reason of his being called so by the people of that district, by whom he was received as a miracle. Being carefully nurtured when of a proper age, he governed in that town, which is now called Schleswig, but then was Haddebye: it formerly had the name of Old England, whence the Anglia came into Britain, and is placed betwixt the Goths and Saxons.

We will, however, resume our classic allusions. Theocritus says (Idyll. xxvi.) that Pentheus was pulled to pieces by the female Bacchantes for prying into the sacred things which they took out of the cista to place on the altars; and Catullus says that the rites of the cista were celebrated with the utmost secrecy;—

"Pars obscura cavis celebrant orgia cestus."

The heathen always carried the cista on the shoulder, and the person who carried it was called Kistopherus, according to Suidas. This cista mistica, or somewhat equivalent, was carried also in the ceremonies of Diana; and therefore we find in another picture in the "Antiquities of Herculaneum" (vol. i., p. 67), representing the sacrifice about to be made of Orestes and Pylades, at the altar of Diana Taurica, that behind Iphigenia are two females, one of which is busy reaching the sacred symbols from the cista. That it was also borne in the rites of Ceres and Isis needs no further comment, when we reflect that towards the decline of the Roman empire all these deities had been refined by the subtleties of their philosophers and the ingenuity of the priesthood to a conformity of attributes and power, and differed in little but in name.

The early Church seem to have used a reflex of heathen veneration towards the ark for its own purposes. Tertullian, de Baptismo (cap. viii.), declares the ark a symbol of the Church—ecclesiam arcam figuratam. It is, however, from the time of St. Cyprian that the constant use of this symbol for the Church obtains, which almost all the Latin ecclesiastical writers comply with, and thence may arise the many instances we meet with it pictorially represented. Justin M. in Dial. c. Tryphon. c. 138, expressly declares Noah in the ark waiting the return of the dove with the olive branch as a figure of Christ. It would, however, be more difficult to account for a medal of the Emperor Severus, which on its reverse contains an unmistakable pictorial exhibition of the falling of the waters and of the ark, did we not know that the tradition of a great flood pervaded the early histories of most of the ancient nations. They were throughout adapted to the feelings and fashions of each country, but the great lineaments of the relation are throughout identical. The tales of Cadmus, of Deucalion, and Pyrrha are familiar to all the readers of Ovid; but it may surprise some of our readers to find Mount Ararat mentioned by name in heathen writings as the spot on which the ark rested. In the Sibylline books, edit. of Galeus, lib. i., p. 152, are verses to the following effect:

"Midst Phrygia's stony plains a mountain is placed, Lofty raised, and wide spread out, which Ararat's called;
Thence the Maryas springs: that powerful river;
And on the top of that high-raised hill stood the ark still,
When the flood disappeared."

We may therefore now enter on the subject of the medal we have mentioned, and confine ourselves to one specimen; for though there exist nine similar types, yet so many have been pronounced forgeries, that we merely refer to one formerly in the royal cabinet of France, and now possibly in the Imperial Museum at Paris, which was minutely criticised by the Abbé Barthelemy, at the request of Mr. Coombe, and pronounced genuine. The reverse, then, is in two parts: in the first, two figures are enclosed in an ark or chest, sustained by stout posts at the corners, and well timbered throughout; on the side are letters; on the top is a dove; in front, the same two figures which we see in the ark are represented as come out and departing from their late receptacle; hovering over them is a dove with a sprig in its bill. This medal, therefore, clearly implies a deliverance by a vessel from the dangers by water; and, coupled with the other concordances, the plunder of the earliest heathen myths by a perversion, to fit them to the futilities of heathen relations. It is supposed this medal was struck at Apamea, and on it we have an express treatise (De Numo Apamensi Deucalionei Diluvii typum exhibente, printed in Gronovius' Antig. Græcæ, x. p. 678); but as the ancient name of Apamea was κιβωτης, which we have already seen signified "ark," this name may refer to some connection at their foundation with the ark, which we cannot now fathom. It is a somewhat cognate symbol and easy transition from the ark to a ship in full and easy sail, steering through the difficulties of events to the destined haven of bliss. Representations under this type are also frequent; and in verse we have lines from Venantius Fortunatus, which are somewhat to the purpose, though in a most wretched style:—

"Opto per hos fluctus animam tu, Christe, gubernas Arbore et antennæ velificante crucis:
At post emensos mundani gurgitis æstus,
In portum vita nos tua dextra locet."

We have mentioned the richness of synonym and designation by which Christ was lauded in the Eastern World; and the following examples deserve to be preserved for their fullness, as curiosities of literature.

The first is attributed to the famous John of Damascus:—

"Spes, Vita, Salus, Ratio, Sapientia, Lumen, Judex, Porta, Gigas, Rex, Gemma, Propheta, Sacerdos,
Messias, Sabaoth, Rabbi, Sponsus, Mediator, Virga, Columna, Manus, Petra, Filius Emmanuelque,
Vinea, Pastor, Ovis, Pax, Radix, Vitis, Oliva,
Fons, Aries, Agnus, Vitulus, Leo, Propitiator,
Verbum, Homo, Rete, Lapis, Domus, Omnia
Christus Jesus."

The second is that in which we have already found the epithet "Lucifer," by Ennodius, bishop of Pavia (511):—

"Fons, Via, Dextra, Lapis, Leo, Lucifer, Agnus, Janua, Spes, Virtus, Verbum, Sapientia, Vates,
Hostia, Virgultum, Pastor, Moses, Rete, Columba, Flamma, Gigas, Aquila, Sponsus, Patientia, Virtus,
Filius Excelsus, Dominus Deus, Omnia Christus."

The third of these curious assemblages, which could scarcely be verified in any but the Latin tongue, is by a Spanish bishop, Orientius (516):

"Janua, Virga, Leo, Virtus, Sapientia, Verbum, Rex, Baculus, Princeps, Dux, Petra, Pastor et Homo,
Retia, Sol, Sponsus, Semen, Mons, Stella,
Magister,
Margarita, Dies, Agnus, Ovis, Vitulus,
Thesaurus, Fons, Vita, Manus, Caput, Ignis, Aratrum,
Flos, Lapis angularis, Dextra, Columna, Puer, Mitis Adam, Digitus, Speculum, Vio, Botruo, Panis,
Hostia, Lex, Ratio, Virgo, Piscis, Aquila,
Justus, Progenies Regis, Regisque Sacerdos
Nomina magna Deo: Major et ipse Deus."

The biblical reader will at once discern that there is sacred authority for every epithet, and will find doubtless pleasure in the combination; if the Church find in all suitable recollections and admonitions of piety, the Masonic inquirer will find in many much for study and contemplation the greater his experience in the Order.

ORIGIN OF PAYING FOR INITIATION.—The Athenians believed that he who was initiated and instructed in the Eleusinian mysteries would obtain Divine honours after death, and therefore all ran to be initiated. They seemed to think initiation as necessary as the Christians did baptism. Their fondness for it became so great, that at such times as the public treasury was low, the magistrates would have recourse to the mysteries as a fund to supply the exigencies of state.

"MORE than a year ago one of my children was attacked with bronchitis, and, after a long illness, was given up by my physician as 'past cure.' I was then induced to try your Vegetable Pain Killer, and from the time I began the use of it the child rapidly got better, and is now strong and healthy.—JOHN WINSTANLEY, 10, Whittle-st., L'pool, Jan. 1869.—To P. D. & Son."

"FREEMASONRY AND JUDAISM."

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I have lived too long in the world, and have been too long engaged in public writing, to think that I can deal with any subject—historical, religious, political, or moral—without coming into collision with the opinions of some one, however desirous of doing so. But I am sorry, especially, to have incurred the censure of Bro. Buchan, for I greatly respect his acquirements and his capabilities. I cannot help thinking, however, that his feelings carried his judgment captive when he took pen in hand to write what appeared on the above-named subject in last week's FREEMASON. He "can see no proper reason" why I "should so particularly object to Bro. 'W. B.'s' remarks," because, "so far as he can judge, 'W. B.' has just as good a right to enunciate his views in our Masonic paper as has Bro. Carpenter his." I do not deny that right, nor did I object to the exercise of it. What I objected, and still object, to, is the purely sectarian character of those views, and the unqualified way in which "W. B." condemns the opinions and convictions of all religious sects, excepting one. I object to this, not because it offends me, personally, but because it is in violation of that good understanding which we have in Masonry, not to attack, or condemn, or say anything offensive to, any brother's religious opinions, whether he be, as Bro. Buchan says, "Christian or Jew, Trinitarian or Unitarian." But Bro. Buchan avers that I am doing all I can to "support certain sectarian ideas in the columns of THE FREEMASON" while I "deny Bro. 'W. B.' the right to do so." Now, in a perfectly fraternal way, I defy Bro. Buchan to afford a title of evidence of this averment. I defy any one to gather from what I have written whether I am Jew or Christian, Trinitarian or Unitarian. If Bro. Buchan means—and from some of his expressions, I infer that he does so mean—that to assume the Bible to be what it purports to be, a Divine revelation, is sectarianism, then, I plead guilty. But, will he permit me to say, that there is a sectarianism as marked, and as acrid, outside of those who thus accept the Bible, as any that was ever found amongst them. I should be sorry to promulgate sectarianism in THE FREEMASON, or anywhere else; but it is surely as Masonic as it is unsectarian to treat the Bible as I am doing, seeing that we impress upon every initiate, that these "Sacred Writings are to rule and govern our faith."

I do not allege that Bro. Buchan is promulgating "sectarianism," in saying he believes that the latter portion of the xliv. and the xlv. chapters of Isaiah is "a song of thanksgiving," and not a prophecy, although I know it to be a purely gratuitous theory, and without a title of evidence, adopted by those who deny all prophecy, and utterly at variance with the internal evidence afforded by the writer's language and style. Nor do I allege that he is promulgating "sectarian" views, in saying that he "doubts the solidity of my foundation"—that is, the Bible—although there might be more propriety in so saying than in saying that my treatment of the Bible as a "sure foundation," is "sectarianism." But let me say, in a word, that there is nothing in what I have written which does other than put the Christian and the Jew, the Trinitarian and the Unitarian "upon a level;" and that I appeal only to that authority which every Freemason professes to accept as the rule of his faith and conduct, whatever differences may exist as to its interpretation.

"A MASONIC LITERARY INSTITUTE."

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The idea of founding, or of refounding, a Masonic Literary Institute, as expressed by you at page 520, is worthy of the most serious attention. If properly conducted, it might be of immense value to the Craft. Suppose it were entitled The Masonic Archæological Society, all its members being "Masons." The qualifications for membership being election and the payment of, say, about half-a-crown yearly, so as to make it popular. Over and above M.M.A.S. (Member, Masonic Archæological Society), there might also be F.M.A.S. (Fellow, Masonic Archæological Society), the extra qualifications for which would be nomination and merit. Its motto ought to be "Truth;" and if, as a society, the members banded themselves together to seek out, support, and tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, in so far as they were able, the Society would command universal respect. Unless such would be its chief end and intention, better it should not be formed at all. Our London brethren ought to take the lead in this matter, and see about getting it properly started. As its first "job" I would respectfully suggest photographs being taken and distributed to its members of the Sloane MS. 3329, fol. 142. With good wishes for the practical carrying out of the idea,

I remain, fraternally yours,
W. P. BUCHAN.

Reports of Masonic Meetings.

THE CRAFT.

METROPOLITAN.

Star Lodge, No. 1275.—On Friday, Sept. 1st, at the Marquis of Granby, Deptford, the installation meeting of this young and most prosperous lodge was held. Bro. W. Ough, P.G.P., P.M., W.M., presided, and opened the lodge. There were also present: Bros. C. J. Hogg, P.G.S., P.M., S.W. and W.M.-elect; H. Keeble, J.W.; J. Smith, P.G.P., P.M., Treas.; F. Walters, P.M., Sec.; H. Crabtree, J.D.; T. R. Darke, D.C.; J. Davis, J. Finch, C. Saunders, J. Fox, W. Okey, A. Farr (M.D.), R. F. Duff, W. H. Trampleasure, E. Townshend, W. M. Bull, W. Kipps, A. Stevens, W. Bell (jun.), E. Harper, J. J. Limebeer, S. Homewood, E. S. Lane, G. S. Elliott, W. Avill, H. J. Clare, and many more. The visitors were Bros. H. Potter, P.M. 11; W. Watson, P.G.S., P.M. 25; S. Adams, 25; T. J. Thompson, 30; E. M. Hubback, P.G.S., P.M. 58, P.M. 140; E. Harris, P.M. and Treas. 73; J. Bagshaw, P.M. 158; G. A. Garnett, W.M. 704; C. G. Dilley, P.M. 1155; W. Buchanan, 12 (S.C.); Nicholas Weekes, P.M. 358 (S.C.); and others. The minutes of the last regular meeting and the minutes of the several emergency meetings were read seriatim, put separately, and carried nem. con. The report of the Audit Committee (taken as read, in consequence of each member having a balance sheet given him) was unanimously received, adopted, and entered in the lodge minute book. It showed a large balance in the hands of the Treasurer, and no liabilities against the lodge. Ballots, taken separately, were unanimous in favour of the admission of Dr. A. Farr, W. Avill, V. Bell, jun., and E. S. Lane, and being in attendance, were introduced (in the order named) separately, and initiated into ancient Freemasonry in a most impressive, painstaking, and correct manner. Bro. J. Smith, P.G.P., I.P.M., presented Bro. C. J. Hogg, S.W. and W.M.-elect, for installation, and according to ancient custom, he was duly installed W.M. for the ensuing year, appointing as his officers: Bros. W. Ough, I.P.M.; H. Keeble, S.W.; H. Crabtree, J.W.; J. Smith, P.G.P., P.M., Treas. (re-invested); F. Walters, P.M., Sec. (re-invested); T. R. Darke, S.D.; G. Pymm, P.M., J.D.; E. Harper, I.G.; G. F. Guest, D.C.; and J. Gilbert, Tyler. The beautiful addresses were then given, and on the termination of the ceremony a hearty burst of applause proved how well the brethren appreciated the admirable manner in which the ceremony had been performed. A vote of thanks, and the same to be entered on the minute-book, was given to Bro. Frederick Walters, P.M. and Sec., for the admirable, painstaking, and efficient manner in which he had performed his duties as the Secretary of the lodge. A similar vote was given to Bro. W. Ough, P.G.P., I.P.M., for his kind, valuable, and most useful present of three large handsome tracing-boards, and also for his services in rendering the installation ceremony in such an efficient manner. Afterwards, at the termination of the banquet, the W.M., on behalf of the lodge, presented Bro. W. Ough with three diamond studs, very handsomely mounted, of the value of ten guineas, in lieu of a Past Master's jewel, which had been unanimously voted to him from the lodge funds, at the last regular meeting, as a slight recognition of his very many essential services rendered to the lodge, and for the admirable manner he had presided over the lodge, during his year of office, as the Worshipful Master. Bro. Nicholas Weekes, P.M. 358 (S.C.) being unable to stay to the banquet, in consequence of his having to return to Australia (via Southampton) on that evening, expressed his gratitude for the kind, fraternal, and welcome manner he had been received at the lodge as a visitor, assuring them he would convey to the members of his lodge at Sydney, on his return, how pleased he had been with his reception. He expressed the pleasure he felt at witnessing the excellent manner in which all the ceremonies had been worked.—Bro. J. Smith, P.G.P., P.M. and Treas., gave a notice of motion—"That the future meetings of the lodge be held elsewhere." Several candidates were proposed for initiation at the next meeting of the lodge, and two members' resignations were accepted with regret, when the lodge was closed. The banquet was held at Anderton's Hotel, Fleet-street, and nearly forty brethren sat down. It was served under the superintendence of Bro. W. Smith, who was, as usual, successful in pleasing all with his unremitting attention. Bro. Mackney's singing was as good as ever. The brethren separated early.

GLASGOW.

An emergency meeting of the Neptune Lodge, No. 419, was held on Wednesday, 30th August, for the purpose of conferring the three degrees on Captain Thomas Osmont and Philip Verlide, his mate, both of Jersey, who were about to leave this part. The ceremonies were very ably rendered by the R.W.M., Bro. Alexander M'Dougall, and his officers, Bros. J. Scott, S.W.; William Donaldson, acting J.W.; J. Quigley, Sec.; and W. Dubie, acting as Deacon. After labour the brethren partook of refreshment. The R.W.M., in a neat speech, proposed "The Health of the Initiates," which was briefly responded to by Bro. Captain Osmont. Bro. Weightman, P.M., proposed "The Health of the Visiting Brethren," which was responded to by Bros. Irving (of Belfast Lodge), Batel (of 87, Manchester), and G. W. Wheeler (of 73), all of whom highly praised the excellent working of the R.W.M. and his office-bearers, and spoke highly of the Neptune Lodge, which is principally composed of those interested in shipping.

The usual monthly meeting of the Caledonia of Unity Chapter, No. 73, was held in the Masonic Hall, Buchanan-street, on the 29th of August. The principal business was the nomination of office-bearers for the ensuing year. Comp. D. Gilchrist was unanimously proposed for re-election as Z. For the chair of H. there were two candidates—Comps. T. Findler and G. McDonald. For that of J. it was unanimously voted to Comp. G. W. Wheeler, as was the case with the remainder of officers, except 3rd Sojourner. Amongst the visitors were Comps. Morrison and Comming, from the State of Michigan, who have received high honours in their own State and in Canada, both in the K.T. and Craft, and have taken the 3<sup>d</sup> of the A. and A. Rite. They were cordially received, and expressed their acknowledgments of the fraternal greetings they had received here and elsewhere since they left their adopted home.

NEW GALLOWAY.

On Tuesday, the 22nd ult., Lodge St. John, No. 494, held its usual monthly meeting. After having been opened in due and solemn form by the R.W.M., Bro. D. Millman, P.G.S.D., Wigtownshire and Kirkcudbright, the minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. Bros. J. W. McGill, J. Vine, and C. Blood, who were unable to attend at the installation meeting, were then installed as Depute Master, Director of Music, and Bible Bearer, and invested with the respective jewels of office. After they had returned thanks for the honour which had been conferred upon them, the lodge was opened in the second degree and Bro. McMichael having requested an advancement was duly examined by the Dep. M. and found worthy. The candidate having retired for the purpose of being properly prepared by Bro. J. B. Morgan, the Lodge was opened in the third degree, and on his readmission the ceremony of raising was admirably performed by the R.W.M., assisted by the Dep. M. The latter's rendering of the air and recitative "Remember now thy Creator" added considerably to the solemnity of the rite. The Lodge having been closed down to the first degree, the R.W.M. proposed a vote of thanks to Bro. C. Blood, for his present of a lamp for the third degree: this was carried unanimously. Nothing more appearing for the good of Freemasonry in general or this lodge in particular, it was closed in due and solemn form.

On the following day the brethren met to celebrate their annual festival. The lodge having been opened in the first degree, Bro. McMuldrow took the oath de fidei and was installed as Sub. Master. Bro. Blood acted as S.W. in the unavoidable absence of Bro. McAndrew. The brethren and visitors (amongst whom were Bros. Cranstoun, P.G.S.W. and P.M.; Clarks, P.G.I.G. and P.M.; McKenzie, Clegg, &c., St. Cuthbert's Lodge, No. 41, Kirkcudbright; Maxwell, acting R.W.M., Gordon, S.W., Pearson, &c., of St. Johns, No. 189, Castle Douglas; Ritchie, P.M., and Sandown, Treasurer, "Granite Union," No. 480, Dalbeattie), were then called by Bro. Turner, J.W. from labor to refreshment, and did ample justice to a most excellent banquet, supplied by Mr. and Mrs. Robb, of the Cross Keys Hotel. The cloth having been withdrawn, the R.W.M. proposed "The Holy Lodge of St. John" (in silence), followed by "The Queen and Craft," which was duly and right-loyally honoured, and "The Prince Steward of Scotland and Members of the Royal Family." Bro. J. W. McGill, Dep. M., proposed "The Grand Lodges of Scotland, England and Ireland," which, like its predecessors, was received with Masonic honours. Acting S.W., Bro. Blood proposed "The Provincial Grand Lodge of Wigtownshire and Kirkcudbright," which was replied to by Bro. Cranstoun, P.G.S.W. The R.W.M. proposed the toast of "The Visiting Brethren," coupled with the name of Bro. J. H. Maxwell, acting R.W.M., St. John, No. 189, who replied.

Several brethren contributed to the harmony of the evening, by singing some good songs. A vote of thanks was proposed to the Stewards, Bros. McKelvie, Johnstone, R. McGill, and M. Michael, for their careful and assiduous preparations.

After the toast "Happy to meet, sorry to part," &c., had been given, the final toast was sung in a masterly style by Bro. J. W. McGill, Dep. M., Bro. Vine, Di. Mus., not only in almost every instance accompanied the various singers, on the harmonium, but he played several selections, classical and sentimental, with most exquisite taste, and also sang two comic songs with great gusto; in short his performances each year cause the brethren much regret that he is not able to be present at each meeting of the lodge. The repast having been finished, the brethren after having spent several happy hours were called from refreshment to labour, and the lodge was duly and regularly closed by the Dep. M., who had assumed the chair of K.S., the R.W.M. having retired with the visiting brethren..

DISTRICT GRAND LODGE OF BURMAH.

At a Regular Communication of the District Grand Lodge of British Burmah, under the Grand Lodge of England, held at Freemasons' Hall, on Tuesday, the 14th day of March, 1871, the following brethren were present: W. Bros. H. Krauss, P.M. 1268, D.G.S.W., presided as D.G.M.; C. Pascal, P.M. 614, P.D.G.S., as D.D.G.M.; Jos. Dawson, W.M. 832, P.D.G.S., as D.G.S.W.; E. Hopper, W.M. 614, as D.G.J.W.; B. Samuel, J.W. 832, as D.G.S.D.; H. Godbier, 832, as D.G.J.D.; C. B. Cooke, S.W. 832, as D.G.; W. D. Cruickshank, 1268, D.G. Sec.; S. Andrews, Sec. 614, as D.G. Tyler; Bro. M. Appavoo Pillay, Treas. 614; &c.

The D.G. Lodge was opened in form at 6.45 p.m.

The G.D. Secretary reported the receipt of apologies from the under-named brethren for non-attendance that evening:—W. Bros. J. C. Brindley, D.G.S. and J. Petley, D.G.J.D.

The minutes of the Quarterly Communication of 27th December, 1870, having been printed and circulated, were read, as read and confirmed.

Wor. Bro. H. Krauss, D.G.S.W. officiating as D.G.M., read a letter from R.W. Bro. Spearman, Dy. District Grand Master (dated 25th February, 1871), intimating to the former that the powers and duties of D.G.M. would now devolve upon him as he (the Dy. D.G.M.) had left British Territory.

The following report of the proceedings at a meeting of the Board of General Purposes held on the 25th of February 1871, was read:—

"1. The proposed by-laws of the D.G. Lodge, were read and passed and the Secretary instructed to send copies to each of the Lodges in the Province for approval.

"2. The Board then took up the question as to the later proceedings of Lodge "Astrea" which was referred to by the last Quarterly Communication, and in connection therewith the President submitted a memorandum received by him from the Dy. D.G.M. shewing the nature of irregularities which had taken place in the working of the lodge referred to; whereupon the Board having regard to the serious nature of these irregularities, instructed the Secretary to prepare an abstract of them for submission to the D.G. Lodge at the next Quarterly Communication.

"3. A letter was read from certain members of Lodge "Astrea" and other brethren resident in Thayermyo dated 14th February, stating (1st) that the period for which a license had been granted to carry on the lodge, pending search for the lost warrant, had now expired, and (2nd) that the warrant could not be found; also begging the R.W.D.G.M. to grant a fresh license to enable them to work the lodge until such time as a fresh warrant, or a duplicate of the old one, could be obtained from the Grand Lodge of England. In the same letter application is made for the return of the minute book and Treasurer's account book, to enable the writers to recover the outstandings and pay off the debts of the lodge. The Board having considered the contents of the above letter instructed the D.G. Secretary to inform the writers in reply, that on receipt of a letter addressed to the Grand Lodge of England, signed by not less than seven Master Masons of their number, narrating all the circumstances connected with the loss of the Warrant of Lodge "Astrea" and soliciting the Grand Lodge to issue a duplicate of the same, or to grant a fresh one, the D.G. Lodge would be prepared to grant a Dispensation to enable them to carry on the lodge pending the reference to the Grand Lodge of England.

"4. The question of a memorial of the late R.W. Bro. Greenlaw was discussed, and it was unanimously resolved to suggest to the District Grand Lodge the expediency of addressing a circular to all the District Grand Lodges in India, and to all the lodges in the province, inviting their co-operation and assistance in carrying out the object in view, leaving it to be decided hereafter by a committee of the subscribers what kind of a memorial should be adopted.

"The District Grand Secretary was instructed to prepare an estimate of the cost of District Grand Lodge regalia, &c., and to submit it to the District Grand Lodge as soon as possible.

(Signed)

"H. KRAUSS, President of the Board."

The District Grand Secretary reported that copies of the proposed by-laws of the District Grand Lodge had been forwarded to all the lodges in the province, as well as to all the members of the District Grand Lodge for approval, but that no expression of opinion regarding them had yet come to hand; whereupon it was proposed by Wor. Bro. Krauss and seconded by Wor. Bro. Dawson that the proposed by-laws be at once adopted and confirmed by the District Grand Lodge. (Carried unanimously.)

With reference to the portion of the foregoing report regarding Lodge "Astrea"—Wor. Bro. Krauss read the following memorandum of the charges against that lodge:—

"There appear to have been numerous irregularities in the working of this lodge.

"1st. In the absence of any warrant beyond a dispensation telegraphed by the late Rt. Wor. Bro. Colonel Greenlaw, District Grand Master, no steps appear to have been taken by the lodge to get the telegram confirmed, nor is the telegram itself in existence so far as can be ascertained. Then it was the duty of the lodge to get a duplicate warrant or a new one, but no steps seem ever to have been taken to this end.

"2nd. The irregularity of the dates of meeting of the lodge. Emergent meetings seem to have been held without any emergency being shown in the minutes to necessitate them, in some instances within a day or two of each other, and candidates appear to have been balloted for at these meetings without the notice of seven days required by the Constitutions."

3rd. The later records of the minutes of the meeting do not contain any record of the names of members present, beyond a memo "refer to Tyler's book," which in opinion of the board is an irregular and reprehensible proceeding.

The proceedings of the Board of General Purposes with regard to the lost warrant of Lodge "Astrea" were confirmed by the District Grand Lodge.

The recommendation of the Board of General Purposes in regard to the proposed memorial of the late District Grand Master, Rt. Wor. Bro. Colonel Greenlaw, was adopted in its entirety.

A Committee composed of the members of the Board of General Purposes was appointed to prepare a statement of the accounts and to report on the financial position of the District Grand Lodge.

The District Grand Secretary reported the receipt of copies of proceedings of District Grand Lodge Communications as follows:—1st, From District Grand Lodge of Bengal, dated 27th December, 1870. 2nd, From District Grand Lodge of Punjab, dated 14th January, 1871. He further reported that the former was accompanied by a letter from the District Grand Secretary of Bengal, calling attention to a paragraph in the proceedings, having special reference to the lamented death of Rt. Wor. Bro. Greenlaw, District Grand Master British Burmah.

The above letter and paragraph of the proceedings alluded to were read, whereupon it was proposed by W. Bro. Krauss and seconded by Bro. Cruickshank, that a letter be addressed to the District Grand Lodge, Bengal, acknowledging the expression of condolence with this District Grand Lodge in the loss of its District Grand Master.

The Wor. Bro. Krauss, reported that since the date of the last quarterly communication a dispensation had been granted to Lodge "Victoria in Burmah" No. 832, under clause 2 paragraph, 9 of the Constitutions, for the purpose of initiating Mr. Larkings as a serving brother.

The Secretary read a letter from Bro. Brase, Editor of Masonic Record, Bombay, dated 1st March, 1871, accompanied by a letter from the widow of the late Wor. Bro. Henry Wickham appealing for relief; whereupon it was proposed by Wor. Bro. Dawson, seconded by Bro. Samuel, and carried, that a donation of Rs. 100 should be granted from the general funds of the District Grand Lodge.

There being no further business to be brought forward, the District Grand Lodge was closed in form at 9 p.m.

TURKEY.

Address delivered by the R.W. Bro. John P. Brown, D.G.M., at the District Grand Lodge of Turkey, held at Constantinople on Friday, 17th March, 1871:—

Brethren,—We must all feel deeply grateful to our Divine Master, the Great Architect of the Universe, for the innumerable mercies which we have received from Him since our last regular Communication.

Another cycle of time has passed away; the four seasons of the year have succeeded each other; Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter, have each followed the commands of their Omnipotent and Omniscient Creator, and we now, once more, merge upon the renewed youth of nature, deeply impressed with the Wisdom, the incalculable immensity of the grandeur of our Creator's works, which we, as Freemasons, attempt humbly to symbolise in the little world called by us our Lodge.

According to His universal laws, decay and death have also surrounded us, whilst we have been still permitted to live. We have mourned over the desolating strifes among our fellow-beings, and deplored the wretchedness and misery which these have inflicted upon so many once happy families. We have mourned over the departure of Masonic brethren, some of whom perished here during the late conflagration in the endeavour to perform the noblest of deeds, namely, the preservation of the lives of their fellow-creatures; of relatives and friends who have entered upon another sphere of existence, far superior, we trust, to that of this short life; and we all look forward to the future with the profound interest which is inherent to, and inseparable from, all mankind, even the most doubting, whose lives are spent in a perfect dependence upon their clement and merciful Divine Master.

In response to that feeling which is in the heart of every true Mason, we have exerted ourselves during the past year to effect all the good to our fellow-men within our limited means. He, who is not unmindful of the wants of His creatures, has enabled us to succour some of those who needed our assistance, and we have deeply regretted that we could not do more for the unfortunate. In this we have only endeavoured to act up to the great principle of Charity which forms the basis of our Fraternity, though exercised as silently and invisibly as are all Divine Providences.

There may be some who will believe that I thus allude to the mysterious ways of the Great Architect of the Universe, and that others of my preceding remarks refer to the future life of man, which is hidden, with infinite wisdom, from his human vision and comprehension. There may be those who believe that what we do not see and know around us has no real existence. Some may, most illogically, mistake the result for the cause; or who, in other words, imagine that no cause is needed, and that all things in this world are, in themselves, self-existing and self-reproductive. Brethren, over those, if there indeed be any, we cannot but shed a tear of mournful regret, for they can have no community of thought and feeling with us in our little symbolic world, where we fully recognise the hand of our Divine Master in all things; nor can we expect to meet them, hereafter, in that vast other world, where we shall all be summoned to render an account of our works to Him with whom there is neither East nor West, time nor space, and from whom emanate all true Light and knowledge. Though so many cycles have passed away, I may add, mankind is still much in darkness, whilst it is indubitably true that even the most unbelieving in a Divine Providence, which certainly overrules all things for good purposes, are anxiously in search of knowledge, figuratively called by us Light, the flame of which, by its pointing upwards, was considered an ancient emblem of Immortal Life. Seven thousand three hundred and seventy-nine years have now elapsed since, with our present degree of knowledge of the World's chronology, mankind commenced here to exist, and since then, like the inferior creature which works its way upwards to the surface of what, to it, is so incomprehensibly vast on earth, in search of light and warmth, without which it could not exist. Man also, in obedience to an impulse which we may surely name a mystical, or mysterious, command of the Divine Master, has been by degrees working upwards to better and purer knowledge of the sublime Great Cause of all light and life,—labouring to attain to a comprehension of the marvellous works of the Great Architect of, not only this, insignificant world, but also those innumerable, and far superior other worlds, which, though within the scope of our vision, are too remote for our present means of comprehending them. In the view of such incalculable vastness, power, and omniscience, how can we, insignificant beings, expect to reach more than a faint degree of knowledge of Him, in whose sight we are all, corporeally, but little more than the creature just alluded to? All creatures which breathe the breath of life are, it cannot be denied, endowed with reason and intelligence, or what is usually called instinct. With some, this is limited to the preservation of their corporeal existence—shortlived as it is—and they seem to have no thought, nor means of perpetuating knowledge; whilst it would also seem with man to be a duty attached to his superior degree of intelligence, to labour for its acquisition and increase, and to leave it as an inheritance to those who succeed him. Above all, it is likewise a natural obligation to man to promote the welfare rather than the unhappiness and destruction of his fellow-creatures. Are these not so many evidences of the immortal nature of human intelligence and its fruit—knowledge?

In our pride, we are apt to call this our world, and to consider the starry host above us as created to light our steps by day and night. We are prone to suppose that all things were made for our use, by the Great Architect of the Universe, and for the various other creatures which inhabit it together with us—all having an equal right to light and life. Perhaps this arrogance in man arises from the innate conviction which no one can suppress, of the immortal character of his soul, so far superior to all material and animal nature, and of its imperishable character. If this be the case, what a weighty responsibility must rest upon each and every one of us, for the use which we make of our present existence, of one intellectual gifts, and for the degrees of knowledge which we are, individually, enabled to possess of His sublime works, and our duties to each other!

These remarks, Brethren, are particularly applicable to us all, as Freemasons. The portal of the Lodge opens to us a vast field for reflection and enquiry, far beyond the possession of our simple conventional words and signs, which, strangely to add, create the mistrust of the uninitiated. It is in consequence of our inability to measure works, all created and existing with so much beauty and harmony and, when properly understood, found to be as regular as the most perfect lines of architecture, to explain them, as we yet know them, by the often inefficient terms of speech, that we, under the name of Freemasons, endeavour to portray them in symbols and in allegories. When words are incompetent to demonstrate our ideas, we endeavour, as it were, to picture them to our vision. Around me I behold an imitation world. Beneath me is the world's rugged and varied surface; above me, the starry firmament; and, what we call the "Cardinal Points" are around me. Paganism, which taught to man in the spring time of life the adoration of the sun in the East, the moon, and the stars, is now far behind us, replaced by the symbolic all-seeing eye, of their Creator. Mythology, which deified and embodied each of these stars of our symbolic firmament, beautiful and touching as it was, has been swept away by revealed knowledge, and, arrogant man, who dared to aspire to be a god—thanks to the merciful teachings of Divine inspiration and revealed light—has now being led to a knowledge of his own insignificance, and of the existence of the only One God!—one Divine Master—the Great Architect of the Universe.

Amid the imaginative and often erring philosophy of the scholars of our time, let us continue to labour and hope for the acquisition of still brighter light—for Freemasonry comprises every branch of science and knowledge of the arts. Let us hold to revealed truth as the mariner clings for safety and confidence to the compass which, notwithstanding the various powers of attraction and repulsion, ever points, by Divine command, to the north star as his guide. And, when this life is terminated, and we pass over, what is figuratively called, the "dark river," let us hope to enter upon a vast existence of purer light,—brighter by far than any we have ever seen here—and be nearer to Him who overrules all things for the wisest and best of purposes, in the pleasing hope of having done our work well here, and of being permitted to become members of that great Lodge above, there to hold together a Communion, which, if I may be permitted to use the expression, is symbolised this evening in our annual reunion on the occasion of the renewed existence of Nature, called Spring.

I have been requested by many of our brethren to promote the establishing of a "Lodge of Instruction" amongst us, in connection with the District Grand Lodge, in which the members of all the lodges may impart knowledge to each other on the real objects and scope of Freemasonry. I have done this with much pleasure, in the belief that it is greatly needed, and will tend to the advantage of our order in many respects. Though we have before us the Tressel Board as a symbol of nature and revelation; the Rough Ashlar as an emblem of an untutored mind and to point out the commencement of our speculative work; the symbolic pillars at the portal of our emblematic Temple and World; and moreover the "Starry Host" to light our paths, many of us are ignorant of the great truths which these are designed to impart to those who seek for instruction in Freemasonry. I trust that the Grand Lodge of England will be pleased to grant our petition. So as to render such a lodge all the more efficient, I cannot too strongly recommend also the gradual formation of a Masonic Library, composed of such books and periodicals, in various languages, as refer to our order, and that fixed periodical meetings be held here in strict accordance with its rules and regulations. I hope that the younger brethren who meet here will be able to learn something more than the forms of the Ritual and the ordinary signification of the material objects which they behold in a lodge, and be enabled to penetrate the real signification of both and retain them in their minds and hearts. If this be the result, they will hereafter be able to form a correct estimate of the great bearings of Freemasonry upon the life of man during all the seasons of his short cycle of existence in this world, as well as more fully to appreciate those indubitable truths which are taught by a careful study of the works of his Divine Creator; all leading onward and upward to the Great Architect of the Universe, typified in the construction of this humble lodge. Would it not also be well to add to this something of a general literary character, so that, from time to time, lectures may be delivered on the various subjects of the arts and sciences and the progress mankind makes in useful knowledge? Such an arrangement would tend to promote the best interests and welfare of our Order and sustain it in public opinion. Let it be impressed upon the minds and affections that the basis of our Order is a perfect liberality in matters of religion and nationality, and the great Charity which mankind should ever cultivate for each other—charity for the faults of others, their human weaknesses and their deficiencies, with, however, an anxious desire for their correction. This is a sentiment akin to the great mercy of our Divine Master towards all of His creatures, and which, when acted upon in the working of our lives, causes us to approach Him, whilst a neglect of it separates us from Him in spirit. We are taught by the highest principles of humanity to love each other, but nowhere to love ourselves. Whoever labours for the wellbeing of his neighbour, cannot fail to endeavour to offer him a corresponding good example in his own life, and Freemasons can never expect to be respected if they be not known to be honest, upright, moral, and temperate men,—free from all degrading excesses. This, therefore, should not be neglected in the teachings of the "Lodge of Instruction" now proposed. By this means, also, those who are not Freemasons will be instructed and enabled to judge of us without prejudice and mistrust, and learn to love and esteem us by our works and the lives we lead.

I feel it a duty to invite the particular attention of the W. Masters of the Lodges, and, through them, of the brethren generally, to the great prejudice done to our order by discussions on Masonic matters outside of the Temple. This should certainly not be done. It is, strictly speaking, contrary to our regulations, and must impress strangers unfavourably towards us. I trust, therefore, that all will be more guarded on this subject in future.

There is yet another matter to which I am obliged, very reluctantly, to make some allusion. The regulations of the Order regarding the charities of the private lodges, and the claims of those applying for aid and assistance, are too well known and defined to require more than allusion to them. These, nevertheless, have been, in some cases, disregarded. I have, therefore, to request that all applicants be required to comply with them before their requests be acted upon by the lodges. I also apprehend that some persons misapprehend the true character of Freemasonry, its purposes, and its duties, and do seek admission to it from motives, more or less, of an interested nature. This is contrary to their primitive declaration, and their subsequent course casts a shade over their vows. They seem to think that the benevolence of their brethren, individually as well as collectively, in the lodge must, as a matter of course, be bestowed upon them, and that out of the lodge the same principle may be freely invoked, disregarding of the consequences to the interests of the party or parties appealed to. Such a pretension, if persisted in, is calculated to destroy that harmony and respect for each other, which should ever exist between Freemasons. The very limited means of the lodges are always used for the purposes for which they are designed, and great care is required, by the regulations, in the use of them. Any misconception on the subject should be corrected in each and every case which occurs. All appeals for assistance beyond the lodge belong to the ordinary benevolences, concerns, and transactions of life and must, properly, be treated as such, and may be granted or refused by the brother to whom they are addressed, without at all exposing him to reproach. Were it otherwise, the most serious consequences might ensue to the honour, the probity, and the reputations of our brethren, who should never be called upon to jeopardise them, at well as the welfare and happiness of their own families, for the promotion of enterprizes and schemes, however plausible, of any one. Whenever any of us can aid a worthy brother by our personal recommendation or private intercession on his behalf it is our duty to do so, but always, however, with prudence and discretion so as not to carry out in private life what we would condemn in our Masonic intercourse.

Consecration of a Royal Arch Chapter at Hokitika.

The consecration of the Royal Arch Chapter of Westland took place on Monday, June 26th, at the Masonic Hall, Hokitika, under letters patent from the Earl de Grey and Ripon, authorising the Past Principal, Comp. John Lazar, to constitute a Royal Arch Chapter, to be attached to the Royal Pacific Lodge, No. 1129, Hotitika, under a charter from the Grand Chapter of England. Comp. A. H. Gordon was installed as Second Principal, and Comp. J. Shephard as Third Principal, after which the chapter was opened in due form, and nineteen brethren of the Craft were exalted to this sublime degree.

Every care and attention had been paid to render the decorations and paraphernalia of the chapter as effective as possible. On the north and south sides were the distinguished ensigns of the twelve tribes of Israel, while on each side of the canopy, at the east, were placed the standards of the four divisions of the Army of Israel; the latter were beautifully painted on satin, the former on zinc, and were supported on staves elaborately gilt. The robes worn by the three Principals were of crimson, purple, and blue, richly interlaced with white satin. The sceptres were of pure white and gold, surmounted by a crown, a mitre, and "the all-seeing eye." In fact, the tout ensemble was most imposing, and we are informed that the ceremony was performed in a most impressive manner by all who officiated.

An adjourned meeting of the Chapter was held on the evening of June 28th, when twenty candidates were set down for exaltation.

FREEMASONRY & ISRAELITISM.

BY BRO. WILLIAM CARPENTER, P.M. & P.Z. 177.
XVII.

Religion and philanthropy are inseparably united. He who wrote, "If a man love God, he will love his brother; also," wrote that which must approve itself to every man's judgment. It is a proposition that admits of no denial. What is religion? The love of God. What is philanthropy? The love of man. In both, the affection, if it exists, must exemplify itself in action. Love to God exhibits itself in serving Him; that is, in worshipping and obeying Him—doing what He enjoins, and avoiding what He prohibits. Love to man exhibits itself in sympathy, and in rendering active service on his behalf—in relieving his wants, when within the compass of our power. In both cases it is a reasonable service. If a man says he is religious, and is deaf to the claims of his fellow-man, he is but a pretender. "If a man love not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" If men or people exhibit a zealous activity in promulgating the knowledge of God, by circulating His written revelation; by expounding and enforcing its doctrines; by becoming, in a word, His messengers or missionaries, making Him known where he is not already known, putting down idolatry, and everything which exalteth itself against Him, while they are indifferent to the distresses or wants of individual men, they fall under the just condemnation pronounced upon those who affected to be zealous in attending to the word of the Lord, and showing much love to Him, while their hearts went after covetousness (Ezek. xxxiii. 30-32, &c.) If Israel, then, is to raise up a standard to the nations, making known the True God, and inviting men to love and serve Him, they are to be animated by the love of their fellow-men, as they are animated by the love of God. And we shall see the proof of the one as of the other; that is, in their works. "Brotherly love, relief, and truth" will be combined. Religion and philanthropy will go hand in hand. Of Israel, in their new state, this was predicted, in one of the most impressive, and, as to style and construction, one of the most perfect pieces of Isaiah's writings (chap. lviii.) After solemnly reproofing Israel for her sins, especially for her hypocrisy, the people are introduced as making confession, and deploring their wretched condition, as the fruit of their wickedness. Then comes the Divine promise, that they shall be delivered—that their light shall break forth as the morning, and that their righteousness shall go before them. Here is what was required of them, and what, having entered upon, the blessing was realised: "Is not this the fast which I choose? to dissolve the bonds of wickedness; to loosen the oppressive burthens; to deliver those that are crushed by violence; and to break asunder every yoke? Is it not to distribute thy bread to the hungry; and to bring the wandering poor into thy house? When thou seest the naked that thou clothe him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh" (ver. 6, 7). If the Anglo-Saxons are really of the Israelites, this must be one of the most marked of their characteristics; and that it is so the world not grudgingly testifies. England stands foremost of all nations in its works of philanthropy, but other members of the great Saxon family take part in the Divine work—for such it is. To speak of England, first. May we not refer to the millions we have expended, and the sacrifices we have made—not always wisely and well, it must be admitted—on behalf of the oppressed and trodden-down, in almost every part of the world? What is our National Debt, but a standing proof of that fact? It was not to achieve territorial conquests, though we necessarily made some; it was to defend peoples against their invaders, and for the maintenance of their independence, that the wars involving such an expenditure of blood and treasure were waged from 1793 to 1815. We may have made many mistakes, and may have done some wrong, as I believe we did; but the motive was not a selfish one. For twenty-two years we fought as if for our own existence. An eloquent American testifies, that "The stability of England is the security of the modern world. If the English race were as mutable as the French, what reliance?" he asks, but he adds, "The English stand for liberty. The conservative, money-loving, lord-loving English are the liberty-loving; and so freedom is safe, for they have more personal force than any other people. The nation always resist the immoral action of their government. They think humanely on the affairs of France, of Turkey, of Hungary, of Poland, and of Schleswich Holstein, though sometimes overborne by the state-craft of their rulers." How often have we interfered—too often, perhaps—though some tell us that we now often stand aloof when we should interfere. Be that as it may, the page of history gives abundant proof of the fact, that, in every international quarrel or difficulty, the voice of England is heard, and is never treated with lightness. And as England has ever evinced sympathy, and often afforded help, at great cost to herself, to foreign nations and peoples struggling against internal or external oppression, so she has afforded an asylum to all exiles, without distinction of race or nation, who have either been expelled from their own country, or have expatriated themselves, for political reasons. As Dr. Fischel, in his work on the English Constitution, observes, "not only has England afforded an asylum to foreigners, at all times, but she has likewise abstained from legislating to oppress them." This is true, upon the whole, but it is not to be denied, that, at times, some of our kings have emancipated themselves from our humane laws and customs towards strangers, and that there have been occasional exhibitions of jealousy, by the mercantile community, and efforts made to restrict the liberty of foreigners in regard to trade and commerce. The fact, nevertheless, remains, that one of the brightest jewels in the crown of England is her sympathetic treatment of oppressed foreigners. Other Saxon nations participate in the honour, but she stands foremost of all.

But this philanthropic spirit and conduct may be said to cost England nothing. But her deeds of active philanthropy and benevolence are of great magnitude. The kingdom is literally covered with evidences of them; and the sums voluntarily contributed to sustain institutions of various kinds are prodigious, and excite the admiration of the world. The charitable institutions of London, alone, acknowledge the receipt of voluntary contributions amounting to about two millions and a half sterling, annually; independent of numerous and munificent donations. The Lancet has recently been at the pains of ascertaining how many donations of £1,000, anonymous or otherwise, have been given to the metropolitan hospitals, within the last five years. Its list may not be quite complete, but it cannot be far off. These donations appear to have been seventy-one in number, the greater part from anonymous benefactors. In addition, there were gifts, which brought the total up to £89,000. I have just cast my eye upon an appeal on behalf of St. Thomas' Hospital. The new building, it seems, has cost £590,000, exclusive of fittings, museums, furniture, &c. The former had been paid for, and the appeal was for funds to pay for the latter. The response was contributions amounting to £15,000, exclusive of gifts to the hospital and chapel, by the President and others. In the same day's Times appeared advertisements stating that the contributions to the Bishop of London's fund, for building churches and supplying the means of worship where needed and called for, amounted to £439,821, and was still progressing; and that the fund for the relief of those who had suffered through the loss of the Captain had reached £56,000. Every week, too, brings before the readers of the public journals, considerable amounts bequeathed by deceased persons to charitable institutions; and if to these we could add the large sums dispensed in private charity, and given to numberless associations which do not find a place among public institutions, the amount dispensed in charity, in the metropolis, alone, would be seen to be immense. And then come local provincial charities, such as hospitals, asylums, dispensaries, and schools of various kinds, in almost every city and town, throughout the United Kingdom—all the fruits of philanthropy. Could we but add the amount of these to the metropolitan charities, the sum would be almost incredible. Nor can we omit to notice our national poor-rates, which in the year last past (1870) amounted to no less than £7,644,309, being about £30,000 less than in the previous year. By many, this is not regarded with much complacency, but as a matter of reproach. But, in whatever circumstances our pauperism may originate, the fund raised, and devoted to the relief of the poor, must be held to be a philanthropic fund. It should be remembered, too, by those who reproach us with the number of our paupers, that with no poor-law to be found abroad, or none so lenient as ours, the natural inducement to quit the country is taken away; and that, on the other hand, there is every inducement to the needy of other lands to come here. Thus, it is the fate of England to retain her own poor, and to attract those of other countries. So long as cheap Belgian and German labour is invited hither, we cannot hope to escape the duty of supporting foreign poor, as well as our own. The circumstance that sustenance is here provided for all, and that elsewhere it is not, necessarily draws to our shores the failures and incapables of other countries. The Registrar-General states that every day there land in the United Kingdom 1170 foreigners and aliens. No wonder that our poor are numerous, and our poor-rates heavy. Whether it be more philanthropic to sustain them than it would be to starve them, need not here be said.

But the philanthropy of Englishmen is not confined within the limits of their own island-home. Does a misfortune befall a people in a distant land—are they suffering from war, or fire, or famine, or plague—it is at once suggested, from many quarters, that there is a cry for help; the national spirit is stirred, hearts are warmed, pockets are opened, cheques are drawn, and money flows in from all quarters and all classes. No one pauses to inquire what is the race, or the religion, or the character, or the habits of the sufferers. No matter whether Turks or Parsees, Jews or Christians—they suffer, and the great heart of England promptly sends them aid. I say England, for that is the brood-nest of the Saxon race, which everywhere exhibits the same sympathy and solicitude for the distressed. Many evils exist amongst us—evils taking their rise in the long rule of an oligarchy—although the last forty years have seen the extinction of many more. Game laws, land laws, ignorance, able-bodied pauperism, and some other crying evils remain to be got rid of; and now that the reins of power have been taken out of the hands of the oligarchy, we shall get rid of these evils, as the enfranchised classes acquire wisdom and prudence.

I have already spoken of the influence which the propagation of Anglo-Saxon principles has had on the character of war. That it will ultimately suppress war altogether, I do not doubt, for it is as certain as that the sun opens and enlivens the day, that the time will come when the nations "shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks, and nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more" (Isaiah ii. 4). Nations are a long time learning the lesson, and submitting to the principles out of which this blessed state of things is to arise; but no one who reads history can fail to see, that though wars are still horrible, they are not now waged with the ferocity they once were. Another thing we see, too; that is, that amidst these sanguinary contests some of the best and deepest feelings of our nature are evoked. During the late war between Germany and France, the deeds of heroism and beneficence performed by multitudes of both sexes, in the perils of the battle-field, tending the wounded and assuaging the sufferings of the dying, will never be forgotten. We were sometimes horrified by reading of devilish atrocities committed by the belligerents on either side. At Bazailles, for instance, it was reported that the Germans drove the women back into the burning houses, shot children as they fled down the streets, tossed up babies and caught them on the points of their bayonets, and committed other cruelties unknown in civilized countries. Later testimony has happily removed this stigma, which was put upon the German troops, as it has also set aside many other stories of cruelty that were put into circulation. In like manner, the treatment of French prisoners by our German kinsmen was reported to be unfeeling, and in many cases most cruel.

These statements are now found to have been amongst the stories got up to embitter the French soldier against his German foe, as also to blacken the German character. We knew, at the very time these stories were circulating in France, that the Queen of Prussia, the Crown Princess, and numerous Prussian ladies of rank and fortune, left their quiet and luxurious homes, and, donning the dress of sisters of charity, or hospital attendants, devoted their days and nights to visit the sick and wounded, administering such comforts as words of sympathy could convey, and supplying what was needful for those who languished on beds of suffering, making no difference between friends and foes, but rendering to French and German alike. The blessing of many who were ready to perish fell upon their ears, and sank into their hearts, so that they wept with those who wept, and rejoiced with those who rejoiced.

A Parisian correspondent of the Times, whose communication appeared in that journal, on the 23rd of August, last, describes the treatment which the French sick and wounded prisoners received in Germany, and from that description I make a short extract or two. It appears that after the capitulation of Metz, the Comte de Damas, Chaplain-General of the French forces at that place, applied to the then King of Prussia, now Emperor of Germany, for leave to visit the French prisoners, to afford them spiritual consolation, and to obtain for them such alleviations of their lot as were compatible with their position. The request was immediately granted, and the Comte set off on what he called "his pilgrimage," armed with the fullest powers. Popular feeling was at the time very bitter in France. Metz had fallen. Sedan was doomed. The iron grip of Germany was firm upon the unhappy country, and Gambetta was about to prolong the war. It might, consequently, be expected, that the report of the Comte would have been at once scattered broadcast, if it had in any way tended to confirm the exaggerated statements which were at the time so current, as to the bad treatment of the French prisoners in the German towns to which they had been sent. On the contrary, the Comte had quite a different tale to tell. There were, at that time, he assures us, about 300,000 prisoners in German hands. At Cologne, there were 17,000, comfortably lodged in brick huts, with raised floors, weather-proof roofs, and good and well-constructed German stoves. Of those who were wounded and in hospital, the Comte writes:—"It is difficult for them to content themselves with the ordinary distributions of food. Accordingly, the sisters undertake to make five a day. At one time it is coffee, at another chocolate, or soup, or roast meat. The same labour is renewed every day, with the same ardour, and we left Cologne with our hearts consoled." At Stettin, there were 17,000 prisoners, who unanimously spoke in the highest terms of the German officers under whom they were placed. At Posen there were 10,000 prisoners, and at Glogau 13,700; and it seems that in these Polish towns so much sympathy was shown to the French, by the population, that the Prussian officers in charge of the convoy had considerable difficulty in maintaining order. Nevertheless, the Comte reports, all was done that was possible to render the hard lot of the captives endurable. "These men have met danger bravely," said the Prussian authorities; "it were unjust to let them suffer now." At Glogau there were some children, followers of the French camp, whom the victorious army had not found it in its heart to leave to starve. "God," writes the Comte, "has given these little ones a father, in the leader of the Prussian battalion, who looks after them with tender solicitude. This superior officer has ordered the subalterns to look after their education. He superintends their play. He even chose to distribute toys to them on Christmas night." Surely, this good old soldier has his reward laid up for him! In general, the Comte goes on, "I am struck with the way in which the heads of authority look after the soldier. These gentlemen, sometimes very stiff at first, are animated by real solicitude for their inferiors." At Posen, he found an order recalling him to Berlin. He was full of uneasiness, lest his mission was about to be stopped; but it was only a letter from the War Minister, requiring from the prelate, in the name of the king, his word, as a gentleman and a priest, never to discuss any political or military questions with the prisoners. He said:—"A very easy promise to make, for, in truth, these poor fellows have more need of the bread of the Word of God than of fine phrases about chassepots or breechloaders, or even about European equilibrium. With this easy condition they were willing to let me collect the prisoners together, wherever I went, and even sent orders to that effect to the Commanders." At Glatz, he found a colonel who looked after the French prisoners as if they were Prussian soldiers. He distributed among them shirts, shoes, and the pieces of cotton and woollen stuff, in which the Prussian soldier wraps his feet; and he asked the French Government whether they would not send them cotton vests and drawers. At Neisse, where he found 14,000 prisoners, he was told that the General in command came himself to see that the men wanted for nothing, and that their rooms were well warmed. And so he concludes his report, with several other striking instances of personal kindness, to which he himself had been an eye-witness.

This, be it remembered, is the testimony of a Frenchman, speaking of the treatment his fellow-citizens received at the hands of the enemy, into whose power they had fallen. In old times, says the Echo, referring to this report, no prisoners were made. Plato, the most humane of all the Greeks, declares that the man who is coward enough to allow himself to be taken alive, deserves no consideration. If a whole batch of prisoners was made at a swoop, they were either butchered at once, or else shipped off as slaves; while the side which remained in possession of the field wandered over it, and deliberately put the enemy's wounded to death. All this has changed, and when we look at the conduct of the Prussians, who suddenly found themselves obliged to feed, lodge, clothe, and warm more than 300,000 prisoners, of whom all were ragged, hungry, broken down, and destitute, many wounded sorely, and not a few at the point of death, we are filled with admiration, and may surely feel gratified to find in them so noble a trait of the Saxon character. The Goths are represented, in most histories, as a wild and ferocious people, warring as barbarians war, and showing no mercy. In those days war was, indeed, a sanguinary thing; but it must be borne in mind, that while historians describe the Goths as the most civilised of the northern tribes, their armies were joined by many barbarous tribes who ran into great and dreadful excesses, the blame of which the Goths have generally borne. Since the fifth century, however, those noble qualities for which even the Romans gave them credit, have exhibited the Goths as a generous people; and, as Anglo-Saxons, having no superiors.

While thus recounting the philanthropic and benevolent deeds of our race, I am not forgetful that there is another side to the picture. I have already said, we have much ignorance, much vice, and much misery amongst us, which challenge the attention of all who are capable—and who is not?—of aiding in their suppression. Much of the ignorance, and much of the vice and crime which are its natural fruits, will be removed by the Education Act of 1871, and by the extension of the Factory Acts to all children employed in trades and other occupations; while the modifications made, from time to time, in the Poor Law are bringing it much more in harmony with the national character for sympathy and benevolence. We have much to do before we shall fully recognise our obligations and faithfully discharge them. But we are going forward. Meanwhile,

"Let us all be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labour and to wait!"

THE FORTHCOMING EDITION OF THE IRISH AHIMAN REZON.

The article by our esteemed Bro. Hughan, on "The New Constitutions of Grand Lodge of Ireland," in THE FREEMASON of Sept. 2nd, is another added to the many contributions for which the Craft at large have to thank him. It is useful, especially just now, as it calls attention to several points that require careful consideration, and will help to "straighten" matters somewhat for the discussion of the various rules when they shall be submitted for confirmation to our Grand Lodge.

I have to thank him, personally, for the communication, as it enables me to say something on the subject, it having been brought forward and published by a brother not under the jurisdiction of our G.L. One of our G.L. Rules prohibits the printing or publishing of any of the transactions of G.L., of any private lodge, or of any Masonic committee, and also prohibits "any comment thereon, or reference thereto," without the permission of the G.L., the G.M., or the D.G.M., and thus practically shuts us out from legally bringing before the Craft at large many matters that might be advantageously considered in the pages of a Masonic journal. I hold that in Masonry, as in other organisations, free and full discussion is most useful, and that there ought to be as little restriction as possible on Masonic discussion, which does not touch too closely on the "secrets and mysteries" of the Order; but while the law exists, I of course, feel bound to obey it, and might have felt some scruple in bringing forward, in the first instance, comments on our new laws. But as Bro. Hughan has opened the consideration of the subject, I feel myself quite at liberty to deal with the matters referred to in his article.

I quite agree with our valued brother, that "too much care cannot be observed in the making of new laws," and as some of the new laws now proposed mean more than, perhaps, appears at first sight, it would be well for the members of our Irish G.L. to be "wise in time," so as to be prepared to deal at the proper time with regulations that, if passed, may be applied so as to "conserve" existing objectionable tendencies, and so as to interfere unwarrantably with the "rights and privileges" of individual brethren.

The first allusion to the new laws made by Bro. Hughan refers to the "Prayers to be used in lodges." He states that,

"Although several are of a Christian character (and actually as those used generally during the last century), other prayers, suitable for the most particular, are likewise inserted, and can be delivered by Jews, Turks, or Parsees with the greatest propriety."

Now, I contend that the Grand Lodge should not put forward or sanction any prayer that could not be joined in conscientiously by not only "Jews, Turks, or Parsees," but by any believer in God, no matter under what form of worship or in what frame of words his religious belief may find expression. The grand leading idea of Masonry is, its unlimited tolerance in religious matters. Elsewhere, men may and do differ widely and mischievously as to their estimate of the Supreme Being, and religious intolerance is at the bottom of many of those unhappy convulsions that in all ages and under various circumstances have rent asunder the human race. Masonry holds out to us the one platform, ascending to which we leave behind us our differences of faith and creed, and meet together "on the level" as brethren of one universal family, acknowledging one creating and protecting Parent. Prayer is an address to that Great Being whom we all acknowledge, and the Mason's prayer should be as simple and as comprehensive as the Mason's creed. "I believe in one God, the Father Almighty, Maker of Heaven and Earth, and of all things visible and invisible," is a creed to which every Mason can subscribe, but there it stops, and any attempt to Christianize our prayers, or to add to them the teachings of any of our "isms," is a departure from our ancient landmarks, and an innovation dangerous to the stability of the Craft and insulting to many "good and true" brethren. I have frequently been pained to hear the name of Him, whom I, as well as the great majority of our brethren here, acknowledge as the Saviour, used in Masonic prayers when those were present who do not—and from their stand-point, cannot—look on Him in the same light; and I cannot think that the introduction of His name on such occasions is altogether out of place in a Society that professes to admit all but those who proclaim themselves Atheists. I know that there are those who would be, perhaps, disposed to look upon the expunging of Christian prayers from the Ritual of Craft and Royal Arch Masonry (to which alone my objections apply) as an abandonment of "Christian principle," and who would consider it their duty, "in season and out of season," to advance what they believe to be "the truth." To them I would suggest that it should be a matter for consideration of their conscience whether they should remain members of a Society which places all creeds and all doctrines on the same level, and refuses to allow either the true or the false, as they consider them, expression within their boundaries; and I would refer them to His teaching, "who spoke as never man spake," Himself a Jew, while at the same time the Founder of Christianity, and remind them that he gave to His disciples a model prayer, which we Masons might, without the slightest inconsistency, adopt as ours. I know that the use of Christian prayers at our lodges and in our public meetings does give annoyance to our Jewish brethren, for example; and trust that Grand Lodge will deal practically with the matter, by striking out or altering the alternative prayer where it assumes a Christian character. In Templar and Rose Croix Masonry, as a profession of Christianity is necessary, in Ireland, Christian prayers are of course useful and appropriate.

The law requiring P.M.'s to take out a certificate at a cost of 5s. has been recently introduced, and whether it be the fee or the novelty, comparatively few P.M.'s have since qualified themselves in that respect as members of G.L. I trust they will see the necessity of at once doing this, so as to be entitled to give their votes on the new laws.

As to the law by which Grand Officers and P.M.'s retain their place in G.L. by a payment of two pounds annually, without being at the same time subscribing members of any subordinate lodge, I agree with Bro. Hughan that it requires alteration. All members of G.L. taking part, as they do, in the government of the subordinate lodges, should be members of, and contribute to, the funds of some one or other of those private lodges, and when they lose sight of what is, to some extent, their representative capacity, they are very apt to "give themselves airs," and to assume a bearing which would in some cases be offensive, if it were not also ludicrous.

Rule No. 9 provides that visitors to G.L. shall not be admitted, except by permission of the presiding officers. It seems to me that an improvement would be, to give the right of admission to G.L. to all M.M.'s of good standing. They must obey the rules made by G.L. They have an interest in knowing what is going on in the Craft at large, and as they cannot speak or vote in G.L. as M.M.'s, their presence would not be likely to do any harm. Practically, they have always been admitted, with, I believe, one solitary exception, when they were for a short period of the meeting excluded to enable the presiding officer to keep out an English visiting brother, whose presence, he was informed, might lead to discord. The wisdom of the course adopted on that occasion has been much questioned, and if any occasion should arise wherein it might be deemed expedient to confine the meeting to G.L. members, all others might be directed to withdraw, by a resolution put to, and carried by, G.L.

The rule giving into the hands of the Grand Officers the nomination of their successors, is an innovation. Heretofore "The Board of General Purposes," composed of representatives from the various lodges, nominated the Grand Officers, subject to the vote of G.L., any member of which could previously propose another candidate for any position. It is not the only point on which an attempt is being made to curtail the privileges and action of the Board, and I am much mistaken if innovations in that direction will be submitted to.

Bro. Hughan's query on the 24th proposed law is very pertinent, and I, for one, am of opinion that it is not "desirable to leave such an arbitrary power in the hands of the presiding officer." I would be disposed to add to the rule giving discretionary power to the presiding officer to reject any notice of motion which he may deem "improper, unlawful, or inconsistent with the ancient landmarks of the Order," a clause giving the right of appeal to the next meeting of Grand Lodge, which meeting shall decide whether such notice of motion shall, or shall not, be received.

There will probably be a good deal of discussion on the 30th rule, and I am not so sure as Bro. Hughan appears to be that "the members can, and no doubt will, carry this regulation;" at least, I think it will be modified in some such way as he suggests. As the rule is a very important one, and contains an "innovation" evidently contrived for a particular purpose, I quote it as it stands:—

"30. The Grand Lodge strictly prohibits 28

unlawful all assemblies of Freemasons in Ireland, under any title whatever, purporting to be Masonic, not held by virtue of a warrant or constitution from the Grand Lodge, or from one of the other Masonic Grand Bodies recognised by, and acting in Masonic union with, it.

"Any brother being a member of any lodge on the Registry of Ireland, or otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the Grand Lodge, who shall take any part in such unlawful assembly, or shall join or become a member of any body or society purporting to be Masonic, and not in connection with, or sanctioned by, the Grand Lodge, or other Masonic Grand Body recognised by it, shall be liable to suspension or such other penalty as Grand Lodge may think fit."

The first portion of the rule is identical with one in the existing "Constitutions," the word "Grand" being introduced between "Masonic" and "bodies, near the end, and "Masonic union with it" substituted for "unison with it." The second portion, commencing with "Any brother," is entirely new, and appears on the face of it to be an insidious attempt to bring under the power of Grand Lodge matters with which it has nothing whatever to do, so as to enable it to crush down the "right of private judgment" of individual members who may be disposed to join other organisations elsewhere, outside the jurisdiction of Grand Lodge. Even if the rule should, unfortunately, pass as it stands, I do not think that G.L. would sanction its application in the manner which its promoters intend, and thus be made an instrument in the hands of a mere section for neutralizing the equality of its members, and depriving them of rights which Masons elsewhere unrestrictedly enjoy. Bro. Hughan's suggestion, that the words "in Ireland" should be added after "society," would, I think, obviate the danger; but I am inclined to hope and to think that Grand Lodge will deal very summarily with the entire clause.

Rule 133 will probably give rise to much discussion, and I rather think G.L. will require more information as to some of the parties to the compact than it at present possesses. The rule provides for the expulsion, suspension, or restoration of any brother who shall have been expelled, suspended, or restored by any one of the different orders in Ireland, on such suspension, &c., being officially communicated to Grand Lodge, "without any further inquiry or investigation." In common fairness, any brother suspended or expelled by what are called the "higher orders" should have the right of appeal to G.L., as he might be punished by such a sentence in them, and still be clear of such Masonic misconduct as would justify his suspension or expulsion from the rights and benefits of Craft Masonry. In the proposed new rule we meet, I believe for the first time officially, with two new Grand Bodies in Masonry, formed apparently by a disruption of some sort in the body until lately known as the "Grand Council of Rites for Ireland." The existing compact is between the Grand Lodge, the Grand R.A. Chapter, the Grand Encampment of H.K.T., and the Grand Council of Rites for Ireland. In the proposed rule the latter body has disappeared, and is replaced by "The Grand Chapter of Prince Masons of Ireland" and "The Supreme Council of the 33rd Degree for Ireland." The Grand Council of Rites consisted of representatives from various degrees from the Rose Croix to the 33rd inclusive, and also of "The Order of Misraim." Any compact existing was made with a body so constituted, and if that body has thought fit to revolutionise its constitution, I do not see how Grand Lodge can be bound to the new arrangement without a full discussion and explanation of all the circumstances—more especially as one of the parties named, the S.G.C. 33rd, is favoured with somewhat notorious antecedents. I think it would be advisable to suggest that Grand Lodge should appoint a committee to inquire into and report on the origin and claims to authority of the S.G.C. 33rd, so as to enable G.L. to determine whether it is consistent with its dignity and independence to form any compact like that proposed, with a body constituted as the S.G.C. 33rd is, and connected with an origin open to such grave objections. I wish it to be distinctly understood that is not against the present holders of the Degree in Ireland that I express an opinion; but I would be sorry to see G.L. made a party to a compact that may hereafter compel it to act un-masonically and harshly, and that may, if carried, be productive of disunion and disruption to the Craft.

I have confined my remarks pretty closely to Bro. Hughan's article; but there are several laws, to which he has not referred, that will require a good deal of supervision, and probably a good deal of alteration, before they become confirmed by Grand Lodge. I trust that the members of Grand Lodge here will be in their proper places when the laws come to be discussed, understanding clearly what they are about, and fully qualified both to speak and to vote on the various points that are certain to arise, as on the course taken and the laws adopted will greatly depend the future unity and prosperity of the Order in Ireland.

AN IRISH H.K.T.

Dublin, 4th September, 1871.

CONSECRATION OF THE PANMURE MARK LODGE, No. 139.

The Panmure Mark Lodge, No. 139, was consecrated and dedicated on Monday last, at the Balham Hotel, Balham, by the V.W. Bro. Frederick Binckes, G.S. G.L.M.M. Although the weather was uninviting, a good number of brethren attended, and they were rewarded for their trouble by seeing the ceremony performed in masterly style. In the absence of an orator to deliver an oration, which is usually a part of the proceedings at a consecration, Bro. Binckes delivered an address, which explained what Mark Masonry was, the history of the formation of Grand Mark Lodge, and the position the degree now occupied in Freemasonry. Under these three heads, he was enabled to show the brethren that it was impolitic to multiply supreme jurisdictions, and that, with that end in view, Grand Mark Lodge was now taking steps, and had been taking steps for some time past, to confer on Mark lodges owning allegiance to it the power of granting other degrees which formed a part of Freemasonry. There being no Chaplain present, Bro. Binckes well supplied his place by reading, with great impressiveness, the beautiful narrative of the dedication of the Temple; and after Bros. Stebbing, Platt, and Stevens had fulfilled their duties with the cornucopia, the wine, and oil, he dedicated and constituted Panmure Lodge, No. 139, to Mark Masonry in all time coming. He afterwards installed Bro. James Stevens, P.M. 104 and P.G.O., W.M. of the lodge for the current year, who, having taken the presidential chair, appointed the following brethren his officers: John Thomas, P.M. 22, Prov. G.S.B., S.W.; Henry F. Huntley, 104, J.W.; Henry F. Hodges, M.O. and Sec.; R. W. Huntley, S.O.; George Lilley, J.O. and Treas.; George Neal, R. of M.; H. Payne, S.D.; James Madden, J.D.; G. T. Smith, I.G.; T. Lane, Steward; and Bro. Grant, T. Bros. G. Lilley, W. M. Huntley, G. T. Smith, T. Lane, H. Payne, J. Madden, and T. Allendale had been previously advanced to this ancient degree in a special lodge held for the purpose by Bro. Stevens. Before the proceedings in lodge were concluded, Bro. Stevens directed the thanks of the lodge to Bro. Binckes, for his able performance of the consecration ceremony, to be entered on the lodge minutes, and the brethren then elected Bro. Binckes an honorary member of the lodge. For both these compliments Bro. Binckes thanked the brethren, and after a committee had been nominated to frame the by-laws, a vote of thanks was unanimously passed to the visitors for attending and assisting in the ceremonies of the day. This acknowledgment was responded to by Bro. Hicks, and the lodge was thereupon closed.

A cold collation, which reflected the highest credit upon Bro. Lilley, of the Balham Hotel, followed, and at the removal of the cloth, the toasts were proposed and replied to in regular order.

The W.M., in giving "The Health of Bro. Portal, M.W.G.M.," said he was naming one who, for his zeal and ability in the cause of Mark Masonry, had never yet been excelled, and would, perhaps, never be equalled. Under his auspices this degree had become an important branch of Freemasonry, a position which, it was well known, was mainly due to him. In saying this, he (the W.M.) was not attempting to derogate from the value of the efforts of Bro. Binckes in the same direction; but, speaking of the G.M. as the head of the Order, it was but fair to say that, under his guidance, Mark Masonry had taken a firm hold, and the Grand Mark Lodge had become a credit to all who belonged to it. Although they would shortly lose him as Grand Master, it was to be hoped he would long be spared to them, and while he was in the position of the head of Mark Masons, they would pay him that respect which was his due; and whenever this toast fell to be given in its accustomed order, they would feel but too happy to have the opportunity of evincing that spirit of thankfulness to him for what he had done, and drink his health with all the warmth of which they were capable. (Cheers.)

The W.M. next proposed "The Health of Earl Percy, Dep. Grand Master of Mark Masons, and the rest of the Grand Officers, Past and Present," and, in doing so, said he could but reiterate the expressions he had made use of when speaking of the Grand Master. Earl Percy was an ornament to the degree, and would most likely be the Grand Master's successor. Under the rule of Earl Percy, in all likelihood, the degree would stand quite as high as it had in the past, and would continue to flourish. The rest of the toast which concerned the Grand Officers was a necessary compliment to pay the brethren who so ably assisted in the development of Mark Masonry; and more especially was it necessary at this meeting, because the lodge was honoured with the presence of some distinguished Grand Officers, who might fairly be credited with painstaking and zealous endeavours to promote the interests of the Order. Bro. Stebbing, in fulfilment of a long-standing promise, had come, and his continued re-election, year after year, to the office of Grand Treasurer, showed the estimation in which he was held in the Order. Bro. Davison, who was also present, was Deputy Grand Master of the province of Middlesex and Surrey, besides being Grand Organist of the Degree. Bro. Binckes, the Consecrating Officer, was Grand Secretary, and the brethren would be wanting in gratitude to him if they did not acknowledge his eminent abilities, both as a working Mark Mason and as an indefatigable member of Grand Mark Lodge. (Applause.)

Bro. J. R. Stebbing, in replying on behalf of all the Grand Officers, said: Worshipful Sir and brethren, I am very much obliged to you for the kind hospitality you have extended to me this evening, and for the generous sentiments you have uttered with respect to myself personally. I assure you it has been the greatest possible gratification to me to be here, and I shall look back to this evening with great interest for many years to come. I hope the lodge will prosper, and have every happiness surrounding it, which is one of the peculiarities of the Grand Mark Lodge of England and our Mark institutions. With regard to the officers of Grand Mark Lodge, the Grand Masters—Past as well as Present Grand Master—have set an example which other Grand Officers might well follow; and there is this secret connected with that lodge which I admire: there is cultivated a spirit of friendship and unanimity which I believe is unbroken, has been unbroken, from the time the lodge was instituted, and is likely to continue unbroken—because we have started upon the broad basis of acknowledging even the humblest brother among us, and so regulating our transactions that we are not a lodge of dictation, but a lodge of representation—which is of the utmost importance either to a state or a people, if you want the one to be powerful and the other to be happy. I look upon the Grand Mark Lodge of England as excavating, as it were, from olden time the olden principles that formed the cement of our Craft institutions; and the more those old principles are engrafted upon our hearts and practised by us in our lives, the more will Masonry flourish, and the more will it be a Grand Lodge, and a great body, and a powerful community; because discords will not creep in when the good men of our Order are represented by such, and it is only then that Grand Lodge can be a happy, contented, and united lodge. Therefore, I am proud and pleased that the Grand Mark Lodge of England possesses among its influential men those who strove in another place to get new systems—or, rather, not new systems, but old systems—revised and practised; and when they came into power—by a state of circumstances which I deeply regret—they put in practice those excellent principles they endeavoured to teach to others, and they now endeavour to get others to do the same. It is a matter of regret to me, I say, that there is a Grand Mark Lodge. You, perhaps, will hear that from me with some surprise, but that it is so is a necessity that has been forced upon us. The Grand Lodge acknowledged this degree. It did that which all others, where our common language is spoken, have done; and then afterwards, in a fit of pride, I suppose, or one of those changing states of temper, which the Grand Lodge of England has occasionally shown, retraced its steps, and reversed the decision it came to, that the Mark Degree was a graceful addition to the Fellow-Craft Degree. Then it threw down the challenge. That we were old it could not deny, but it chose to ignore an ancient body, and put it at sword's point; and then, with the pluck of Englishmen, and with the independence of freemen, we said: "If we cannot be part of the Grand Lodge of England, we will be a Grand Lodge ourselves." And we have become so, and are now, in the number of our lodges, one-sixth or seventh of the number of Craft lodges in the country. I hope the number of Craft lodges will greatly increase; but I hope we shall increase in a far greater ratio than they, because we are disseminating the genuine precepts of our Order. To the newly-advanced brethren I would say that, in the lectures of this degree, they will find language, and instruction, and moral principles, and deep thought, and serious and useful things, that will vie with anything we learn even in Craft Masonry, of which we are so very proud. If time permitted, which it does not to-night, I would tell you how Mark Masonry participates in the antiquity of the Craft. We can show as ancient a lineage and as old associations as Craft Masonry itself; and if we do date the foundation of Masonry from the building of King Solomon's Temple, we then find in connection with Mark Masonry put before us instances, and facts, and arguments which, at all events, would show that if one is of the oldest time, so is the other, and that when you illustrate Craft Masonry as beginning at that early date, so you may Mark Masonry. We cannot go into dissertations of this kind when we are pressed for time, and at the festive board; but we may hope to do so at another time, when we are not so hurried. A few stray thoughts may, however, be thrown before you upon the subject of the antiquity of this most interesting Order; but if we pass that by, and look at the moral principles that Mark Masonry inculcates in language that is not eclipsed by anything even in Sacred Writ itself, we find them equal to the Craft. I did intend not to say anything to-night, after the eloquence of my Bro. Binckes, who has done so well in putting before you an explanation of Mark Masonry in the lodge. Still, small lights must radiate round large, and I could not help saying the few words I have with respect to Grand Mark Lodge, which sets an example that might profitably be followed. (The V.W. Brother resumed his seat amidst much applause.)

The W.M. then gave "The Provincial Grand Master and Grand Officers," and stated that it was of great importance that a Provincial Grand Lodge was established for Middlesex and Surrey. But it was a matter of even more importance that the province should be governed by brethren whom they could thoroughly respect and venerate for their good offices in regard to Mark Masonry, as well as for their own individual characteristics, social position, and manner of life. In Colonel Burdett they had a Provincial Grand Master of a most kind disposition, of good public spirit, an excellent, thorough, enthusiastic Mason, and a man who was always ready to sacrifice time and convenience to show his appreciation of Masonry. He was thoroughly beloved by every one connected with the Mark Degree, and he would have been present on this occasion but for an important engagement elsewhere. On the first opportunity he would come, and would then express his opinion of the working of the lodge. The brethren would no doubt agree with him in admiring a principle of Colonel Burdett's, not to hesitate to express his disapproval of any loose working, though, at the same time, he was always ready to bestow praise where it was deserved. The Deputy Prov. Grand Master was Bro. Davison, who was present, and the eulogies passed on Colonel Burdett were equally applicable to him. He had evinced his interest in the establishment of the Panmure Lodge by attending at its consecration. He had the welfare of the degree at heart. The province was likely to be a great success—so great, indeed, that it was not unlikely that Surrey would, at no distant date, be formed into a separate province. It was pleasant to mention these things when proposing the health of the Provincial Grand Master, and he (the W.M.) would add that in further evidence of the desire that their rulers had that the degree should make way, and that those who connected themselves with it should have reasons for doing all they could in its favour—the office that had been given to the Junior Warden, who had only been a Mark Mason four weeks, was intended to establish a rule that Grand Lodge should have a representative of each lodge among its office-bearers. (Cheers.)

Bro. Davison, D. Prov. G.M., in reply, said that Colonel Burdett regretted exceedingly his inability to be present; but it was very gratifying to himself that he was able to be among the brethren to constitute a new lodge in the province. He agreed with the W.M., that Surrey would soon require to be erected into a separate province, as there were indications that Mark Masonry would be very flourishing in the province. When he saw so many brethren around him, he was not surprised that the degree flourished. The W.M. himself had given a great impetus to it, as he had imbued so many brethren with the spirit of emulation, that no less than seven had been advanced that night. While mentioning this brother's name, he might, perhaps, be allowed to propose his health. He was not known to him only as the Master of this lodge; he was also a very zealous working Mark Master in another well-known lodge, the Macdonald, one of the most prosperous Mark lodges in the province. Although he (Bro. Davison) had taken upon himself a task he ought not, perhaps, to have taken, the brethren would excuse him giving way to his feelings in the matter, as Bro. Stevens had done much for Mark Masonry. (Applause.)

The W.M. acknowledged the toast, and said: In thanking our Bro. Davison for the manner in which he put my name before you, I prefer that the past should speak for itself, and I assure you that, whatever that may have been, I will endeavour to repeat it in the future. (Cheers.)

The W.M. then proposed "The Health of the Consecrating Master, Bro. F. Binckes," to whom they were all very much indebted, and who had had the benefit of performing the ceremonies before an audience who were fully capable of appreciating the admirable style in which the work was done. The address he had delivered in lodge had given great pleasure to all the brethren, and they wished to remember among the toasts of the evening the brother whose ability had launched the new boat. (Cheers.)

Bro. Binckes said that it was in the discharge of his duty that he had visited the lodge that evening, and that whatever effect the atmospheric influences had had on the attendance of the brethren, the evening had been one which, he hoped, he should live long enough to treasure up in his recollection, and to look back upon with intense pleasure. Referring to Bro. Stebbing's remarks, he said he could not understand how the great body of the Craft who limited themselves to the jurisdiction of Grand Lodge, could cavil or find fault with those who chose to extend their researches beyond the extent of that jurisdiction. We were all members of that body, and were just as good constitutional members of it, as jealous of its rights and privileges, and probably should be found among its stoutest defenders if assailed from without, as any who who confined themselves in their allegiance to United Grand Lodge. With regard to the Panmure Lodge, he was pleased at having consecrated it, and also with the way in which everything had been conducted. He thought it augured well for the future prosperity of the lodge that it had for its first Master an experienced Mark Mason like Bro. Stevens. It was a great mistake when a newly-constituted lodge was presided over by a young member of the Fraternity. What was wanted was, a brother of judgment, zeal, and ability. A young Mason might have a large amount of zeal; but he could not have knowledge, even if he possessed discretion. Young Masons he was sorry to see taken, sometimes from the position of Inner Guard, and put in the chair of Master. He admired this lodge in having as its Mentor an old W.M., and he had the greatest pleasure in handing over to him the office of adviser. His justification for giving advice was his earnest desire for the good of the Order, and his desire that it should at all times flourish.

The W.M. then proposed "The Health of the Visitors," for whom Bro. Platt replied; and "The Health of the Newly-Advanced Brethren," who were represented by Bro. George Lilley. The toast of "The Officers of the Lodge" was responded to by Bro. H. F. Huntley, J.W., and the toast of "The Mark Benevolent Fund" and the Tyler's toast brought the proceedings to a close, and the brethren separated.

THE NEW MASONIC HALL AT LIVERPOOL.—The large and influential body of Masonic brethren in Liverpool will shortly set about the erection of a hall in front of the present structure in Hope-street, which will not only be worthy of their position and influence, but do away with all the inconvenience in connection with their present too limited place of meeting. Thanks to the liberality of the lodges collectively, and the self-sacrificing efforts of many of the brethren individually, funds to a large amount have already been secured, and there is at present every prospect that the foundation stone of the new building will be laid before the close of the year. This, of course, will be done in true Masonic style, and will probably attract a larger turn out of the brethren of the mystic tie than any that has taken place in Liverpool for many years. As a necessary preliminary, the committee entrusted with carrying out the scheme invited plans for the proposed building, offering £100 for the best and £50 for the second. In answer to this invitation 13 plans have been sent in for competition, the majority of which are of the most excellent character. These plans were inspected on Monday, the 11th instant, by the committee in a room in Old Postoffice-place (the use of which has been kindly given by Mr. Hime), and they will remain for a short time in order to give any who are interested an opportunity of examining them. It is understood the decision of the committee will be given on Friday, the 22nd instant.—Liverpool Mercury.

All communications for THE FREEMASON should be written legibly on one side of the paper only, and, if intended for insertion in the current number, must be received not later than 10 o'clock a.m. on Thursdays, unless in very special cases. The name and address of every writer must be sent to us in confidence.

WANTED, the address of "Sponsor-for-Apex," which has been mislaid.

JERUSALEM ENCAMPMENT.—If you gave no notice of your intention to initiate a discussion at the meeting, it is our opinion that the ruling of the E. C. was quite in accordance with Masonic usage.

BRO. W.B.J.—We are surprised to hear that a spurious lodge of Memphis is held with the connivance of English Masons. Read our article in the present issue, and you will be able to judge. The Order of Memphis, or "Universal Masonry," as it is sometimes called, was denounced as spurious by the Board of General Purposes, in 1859, and all who join or countenance its meetings are liable to suspension or expulsion from the Craft. We believe both Bro. Morton Edwards and Bro. Meyer Loewenstark, who are said to have organized a lodge of Memphis at Gower-street, are still members of regular lodges—if so, the W.M.'s of the latter must take immediate action in the matter, as no member of the "Order of Memphis" can be allowed to enter a regularly-constituted lodge under the Grand Lodge of England. We now see the point of Bro. Bennoch's remarks upon the subject at the last Quarterly Communication, and also why Bro. Matthew Cooke, who strongly supports Bro. Edwards and the Memphis set, threw dust in the eyes of the worthy Vice-President of the Colonial Board. Verily, a herring trailed across the scent! Have nothing to do with the spurious concern.

GRAND LODGE.

THE proceedings which took place at the last Quarterly Communication of Grand Lodge were undoubtedly of such a nature as cannot be reviewed by an equitably-balanced mind without awakening feelings of profound distrust, as well as of dissatisfaction. In the first place, under cover of a motion couched in terms calculated to alienate and disgust a very large section of the Craft, attacks were made against individual brethren, and charges preferred, which were utterly irrelevant to the motion itself. It is quite unnecessary to recapitulate the language used in connection with the accusations, but the fact thus noted is one which must be carefully borne in mind, because it contravenes every honourable man's idea of justice or fairplay. The ostensible object of Bro. Cooke's proposition was to prohibit the salaried officials of Grand Lodge from taking part in the proceedings of "extraneous," "spurious," or "schismatic" bodies, as he was pleased to stigmatise several highly-respectable organizations, to which none but Freemasons can belong. But, in the same breath, he charged those officials with selling information, which, to have any saleable value at all, must have been information acquired in the performance of their duties in the Grand Secretary's department—a charge which had no bearing upon the question then before Grand Lodge. It is evident that a mode of procedure like this is not only illegal, but unfair and unjust. Nor can the startling assertion of Bro. Cooke, that "the Board of General Purposes will not hear complaints," be accepted as a valid excuse for such conduct, inasmuch as it is well known that the members of the Board have at all times been ready and willing to consider complaints, and have adjudicated thereon with the strictest impartiality. Such a gratuitous assumption on Bro. Cooke's part should have been met at the moment by the question, "Have you ever made a complaint to the Board, and have been refused a hearing or investigation?" But in the heat of discussion common-sense views seldom prevail, and this constitutes one of the strongest arguments against brethren being permitted in future to ventilate their supposed grievances in a body like Grand Lodge—especially when the laws of the Order provide a fitter tribunal, like the Board of General Purposes, for the settlement of all differences and disputes which may unhappily arise. However, in the instance under review, the mischief has been done and cannot be recalled.

In the next place, it becomes necessary to consider the bearing which Bro. Bennoch's amendment has upon the proposed resolution. As it stands, it simply means that the "question"—or, in other words, the introduction into the Constitutions of a penal clause, which shall apply to the salaried officials, and to them only—be referred to the Board of General Purposes for inquiry and report. In moving this amendment, and doubtless influenced by the agitation which prevailed in the Hall, Bro. Bennoch seems to have confounded certain Masonic associations, which are merely "unrecognised" by Grand Lodge, with certain others, which are not only "unrecognised," but inimical and antagonistic to the ruling authorities of the Craft in this country. It is well known, and frequent reference has been made to the subject in the columns of THE FREEMASON, that a spurious body of Masons exists in England, claiming the rights and privileges of a Grand Lodge, and exercising the power of conferring the first three degrees. This disreputable association is called "The Reformed Rite of Memphis," has its headquarters in London, and recruits its ranks chiefly from the foreign element of our metropolitan population. But its operations are not confined to England, and the spurious warrant to which Bro. Bennoch alluded, was doubtless one of those issued to an irregular lodge of this kind in the colonies. It is an insult to the high-minded brethren who participate in the labours of the "Mark," the "Red Cross," "Rose Croix," or "Templar" degrees to class them, even inferentially, with such a heterodox organization; and it is very clear that the name of "Memphis" was introduced into the resolution brought forward by Bro. Cooke, in the most disingenuous manner, with the view of exciting hostility against the officials in the secretarial department, who, it is needless to add, have never been in the slightest degree "mixed up," to use his own elegant phrase, with any such despicable body as the "Order of Memphis."

Neither, as Bro. Brackstone Baker very pertinently remarked, can we share the fears expressed by Bro. Bennoch, that the foundations of Masonry are being sapped by some mythical "something" which is "astir" at the present time. Can the excellent brother point out any indications which lead him to apprehend such a catastrophe? Can he even quote a well-authenticated instance of admission to "extraneous" orders being the prelude to secession from the Craft, or forgetfulness of the grand, the universal principles upon which ancient Freemasonry is based? On the contrary, it is well known that the brethren who have extended their researches beyond the border-land of the blue degrees are frequently the most munificent and steady supporters of our charities, and the most consistent exponents, in their lives and actions, of those great truths which are taught upon the level of the lodge. If we believed otherwise, we would heartily join Bro. Bennoch in prohibiting, not merely the officials of Grand Lodge, but every member of the Fraternity, from entering into, or in any way countenancing, the exterior degrees. The experience of many years, however, dispels any such dread of occult influence, even if we fail to count in our consideration the important fact that the Deputy Grand Master himself, with many Provincial Grand Masters and other high Masonic functionaries, are active adherents of the "unrecognised," but certainly not "antagonistic," extraneous orders.

It will be observed that we address ourselves solely to the "proposition" which has been referred to the Board of General Purposes, and not to the charges brought against the officials; but we shall be very much surprised, indeed, if the brethren affected do not demand a full investigation of those charges, and, under such circumstances, comment would be unnecessary and improper. But we must, in any case, guard against the recurrence of such grave irregularities as have marked the introduction of Bro. Cooke's motion, and this can only be effected by a determination on the part of all to uphold the regulations of Grand Lodge, which prescribe the proper course to be pursued.

THE "FREEMASON" LIFE BOAT.

WE have great pleasure in recording the successful launch of the Masonic Life-boat on Tuesday last, when the ceremony of naming the boat, "The Freemason," was performed by Bro. J. Rankin Stebbing, P.G.D., Dep. Prov. G.M. Hants, in the presence of the President of the Committee, Bro. A. E. Harris, the Secretary, Bro. Gotheil, Bros. Davis, Boyd, and many other brethren, and a large number of the fair sex. After the launch, which was most satisfactory to all present, the brethren dined together at Bro. Gosden's, Masons'-avenue, Basinghall-street, and spent a most agreeable evening. We regret that a prior engagement prevented our having the pleasure of attending to witness the interesting proceedings.

Multum in Parvo, or Masonic Notes and Queries.

THE ROYAL ORDER OF SCOTLAND AND ITS ANTIQUITY (p. 473).

I might well decline to take any notice of the letter of "X. Y. Z.," which appears in THE FREEMASON of 29th July. It is certainly not incumbent on me to reply to an anonymous writer, who, for aught I know, may not be a Freemason at all. Moreover, "X. Y. Z." adduces no proof in support of his assertions, although he makes assertions in abundance, and was surely bound to adduce some proof of their truth when he ventured to make them. I beg leave, however, to offer a few remarks on the subject, but having done so, I will refrain from all controversy with "X. Y. Z.," until, at least, he comes openly forward, giving his name and address, as it is plain that in such a case any man of honourable feeling would consider himself bound to do.

Members of the Royal Order of Scotland cannot fairly be called upon by any one—least of all by one who withholds his name—to prove its antiquity. If such a demand is made, some reason ought surely to be assigned for making it. But "X. Y. Z." assigns none whatever. He has come forward to make an attack, and to make it in the dark, not only calling into question the antiquity of the Order, but the honour and good faith of the members of it, all of whom are certainly responsible to the Masonic body and to the community at large for the pretensions of antiquity they put forth on behalf of the Order. These pretensions may be well founded or not—I put this question aside for the moment—but it must be assumed that every member of the Order believes them to be well founded. It is open to "X. Y. Z.," as it is to every one else, to inquire into this subject; but it is not right for him to open the inquiry by assertions which imply a charge of imposture against all the members of the Order. They declare their belief in its antiquity, and are surely entitled to credit for honesty in doing so. If "X. Y. Z." were prosecuted for libel by any of them, he might find himself in an awkward position. It is not quite a safe thing to bring a public charge against a body of men, although it may be adopted as a method of gratifying spite against some individual of their number; and it is the very course which a coward might be supposed to choose who dares not to come forward in his own name and accuse that individual personally. "X. Y. Z." says, "Were any 'proofs satisfactory' really extant of the existence of the Royal Order so early as the first quarter of last century, they would have been brought forward long ere now." The fact is, as I can safely affirm, that there are documents in possession of the Order, more than two hundred years old, and these documents indicate a much higher antiquity. How high that antiquity is, or what truth there is in the alleged connection of the origin of the Order with King Robert Bruce and the battle of Bannockburn, are questions open for discussion—if the discussion of them is fairly and honourably conducted. All I intend at present is, by the statement just made, to show that the assertions of "X. Y. Z." concerning the recent origin of the Order are unfounded, and this is as completely accomplished by reference to documents two hundred years old, as it would be if they were of the date of the battle of Bannockburn itself.

If "X. Y. Z." is himself a member of the Royal Order of Scotland, his conduct in attacking it anonymously through the press is more inexcusable than on the contrary supposition. He ought, in that case, to have endeavoured, within the Order itself, to rectify any mistake into which he supposed its members to have fallen in the assertion of its antiquity. As a Freemason, if he is a Freemason, he ought also to know that Masonic documents cannot all be publicly produced, however important their production might be to the settlement of a disputed question. To brethren, however, they would be freely exhibited, and "X. Y. Z.," if he is a Mason, has only to apply in the proper quarter, that he may see and examine those belonging to the Royal Order of Scotland.

For my own part, I am willing to give him any information in my power or to assist him in any researches which he may desire to make. But in order to this I must first know who he is, and that he is a Freemason of some standing. I have neither time nor inclination to enter into further discussion of this subject with one who seems to shrink from giving his name. I am ready to make mine known to him, whenever his is made known to me. Meanwhile, I think it enough to repel his accusation against the members of the Royal Order of Scotland, for he has really accused them all of imposture in their pretensions of antiquity—an accusation which no man of right and honourable feeling could lightly have brought against a body of men, every one of whom is entitled to respect and to have his word received, if not as to the facts of a remote period, at least as to his belief that they are facts. Such a belief concerning the origin and antiquity of the Royal Order of Scotland, has been transmitted to the present members from their predecessors, and they ought not to be subjected to railing accusations for putting forth their claim in accordance with it.

The attack made by "X. Y. Z." upon the Royal Order of Scotland seems to be akin to those which have of late been so frequently made upon Freemasonry itself, by writers, some of whom are Freemasons, who maintain that our modern speculative Freemasonry had no existence till the beginning of last century. But I refrain from entering into this subject.

AN EDINBURGH MEMBER OF THE ROYAL ORDER OF SCOTLAND.

JEWISH ANTIQUITIES.

Some years ago, the Reverend Claudius Buchanan, D.D., Vice President of the College of Fort William, Bengal, devoted a considerable time in enquiring into the origin of an ancient colony of Jews which he found on the coast of Malabar. Some of the facts which he elucidated are so singular, from their great antiquity, that I have taken the liberty of sending an extract to THE FREEMASON. Strictly speaking, it is more of an archaeological than a Masonic extract. I quote the following from one of the rev. doctor's letters:—

"Cochin, Feb. 4, 1807.

"I have now been in Cochin, or its vicinity, for upwards of two months, and have got well acquainted with the Jews. They do not live in the city of Cochin, but in a town about a mile from it, called Mattachery and Jews'-Town. It is almost wholly inhabited by the Jews, who have two respectable synagogues. Among them are some very intelligent men who are not ignorant of the history of nations. There are also Jews here from remote parts of Asia, so that this is the fountain of intelligence concerning that people in the East, there being constant communication by ships with the Red Sea, the Persian Gulf, and the mouths of the Indus. The resident Jews are divided into two classes, called the Jerusalem, or white Jews, and the ancient, or black Jews. The White Jews reside at this place; the Black Jews have also a synagogue here, but the great body of that people, or rather tribe, reside in towns in the interior of the province. I have now seen most of both classes. My enquiries refer chiefly to their antiquity, their manuscripts, and their sentiments concerning the present state of the Jewish nation. On my enquiry into the antiquity of the white Jews, they first delivered me a narrative, in the Hebrew language, of their arrival in India, which has been handed down to them from their fathers, and then exhibited their ancient brass plate, containing their charter, or freedom of residence, given by a king of Malabar. The following is their account of their first arrival here:—

"After the second Temple was destroyed (which may God speedily rebuild) our fathers, dreading the conquerors' wrath, departed from Jerusalem, a numerous body of women, priests, and Levites, and came into this land. There were among them men of repute for learning and wisdom; and God gave the people favour in the sight of the king who at that time reigned here, and he granted them a place to live in, called Cranganor. He allowed them a patriarchal jurisdiction within the district, with certain privileges of nobility; and the royal grant was engraved, according to the custom of those days, on a plate of brass. This was done in the year from the creation of the world 4250 [A.D. 490], and this plate of brass we still have in possession. Our forefathers continued at Cranganor for about a thousand years, and the number of heads who governed were seventy-two. Soon after our settlement, other Jews, from Judea, followed us, and among them came that man of great wisdom, Rabbi Samuel, a Levite of Jerusalem, with his son, Rabbi Jehuda Levita. They brought with them the silver trumpets made use of at the time of Jubilee, which were saved when the second Temple was destroyed, and we have heard from our fathers that there was engraven on them the ineffable Name. There joined us also, from Spain and other places, from time to time, certain tribes of Jews who had heard of our prosperity. But, at last, discord arising among ourselves, one of our chiefs called to his assistance an Indian king, who came upon us with a great army, destroyed our houses, palaces, and strongholds, dispossessed us of Cranganor, killed part of us, and carried part into captivity. By these massacres we were reduced to a small number. Some of these exiles came and dwelt at Cochin, where we have remained here ever since, suffering great changes from time to time. There are amongst us some of the children of Israel [Bene-Israel], who came from the country of Ashkenary, from Egypt, from T'soba, and other places, besides those who formerly inhabited this country.

"The native annals confirm the foregoing account in the principal circumstances, as do the Mahomedan histories of later date, for the Mahomedans have been settled here in great numbers since the eighth century. The desolation of Cranganor, the Jews describe as being like the desolation of Jerusalem in miniature. They were first received into the country with some favour and confidence, agreeably with the tenor of the general prophecy concerning the Jews (for no country was to reject them), and after they had attained some wealth and attracted the notice of men, they are precipitated to the lowest abyss of human suffering and reproach. The recital of their sufferings at Cranganor resembles much that of the Jews at Jerusalem, as given by Josephus. I now requested they would show me their brass plate. Having been given by a native king, it is written of course in the Malabaric language and character, and is now so old that it cannot well be understood. The Jews preserve a Hebrew translation of it, but the Hebrew is very difficult, and they cannot agree among themselves as to the meaning of some words. I have employed, by their permission, an engraver at Cochin to execute a fac simile of the original plate on copper. This ancient document begins in the following manner, according to the Hebrew translation:—'In the peace of God the King which hath made the earth, according to his pleasure. To this God, AIRVI BRAHMIN, have lifted up my hand and have granted, by this deed which many thousand years shall run.—I, dwelling in Cranganor, have granted it, the thirty-sixth year of my reign; in the strength of power I have granted; in the strength of power I have given in inheritance to JOSEPH RABBAN.' Then follows the privileges of nobility—such as permission to ride on the elephant, to have a herald to go before to announce the name and dignity, to have the lamp of the day, to walk on carpets spread upon the earth, and to have trumpets and cymbals sounded before him. King Aviri then appoints Joseph Rabban to be 'Chief and Governor of of Congregation [the synagogues] and of certain districts, and of the sojourners in them.' What proves the consequence of the Jews at the period when this grant was made, is that it was signed by seven kings as witnesses:—'And to this are witnesses, King Bivada Cubertin Mitadin, and he is king of Travancore; King Airla Nada Mana Vikriin, and he is the Samorin king; Veloda Nada Archarin Shatin, King of Argot,

The remaining four kings are those of Palgatchery, Colastri, Carbinah, and Vara-changar. There is no date in this document, further than what may be collected from the reign of the prince and the names of the royal witnesses; dates are not usual in old Malabaric writings. One fact is evident, that the Jews must have existed a considerable time in the country before they could have obtained such a grant. The tradition before mentioned assigns for the date of the transaction the year of the Creation 4250, which is in Jewish computation, A.D. 490. It is well known that the famous Malabaric king, Cerum Perumal, made grants to the Jews, Christians, and Mahomedans during his reign, but that prince flourished in the eighth or ninth century."

The original plate herein mentioned was engraved on both sides, the fac simile forming two plates. These, along with a copy of the Hebrew MSS., were sent to be deposited in the Public Library at the University of Cambridge, where I have no doubt they are at present, to interest both the student and the antiquarian.

Original Correspondence.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions expressed by Correspondents.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—As Bro. Buchan has alluded to a contribution of mine, in answer to previous views and statements of his, sent to your contemporary on the 26th ultimo, I beg to forward the same to you to-day, that you may kindly publish it in extenso for the information of your readers:—

"THE MASTER'S DEGREE AND THE ROYAL ARCH.

"It seems almost useless to reiterate what I have before said on these subjects, but as Bro. Buchan, with amusing pertinacity, and with unabated confidence proclaims his favourite 'dogmata,' I can only give once more a simple denial and contradiction to his unwise and unequalled statements. Nothing can, in truth, be more incorrect, or unhistoric, than Bro. Buchan's repeated assertion that 'the Master's degree never existed before 1717,' or 'the Royal Arch until the fourth decade of last century.'

"As regards the 'Master's degree,' there is plenty of indisputable evidence to prove that it was well known and practised in this country before 1650, while there is a great body of proof now forthcoming that the threefold division of Master, Fellow-Craft, and Apprentice, is coeval with the existence of the Masonic guilds in this country.

"That the speculative Grand Lodge of 1717 is the legitimate succession and continuation of the old operative Grand Assembly; and that we, as Free and Accepted Masons, preserve to-day the carefully guarded secrets and traditions of the operative sodalities in England, is also, the further conclusion to which a careful study of Masonic history and archaeology, I feel myself convinced, must lead every candid mind.

"But Bro. Buchan has, unfortunately for himself, endorsed the hasty and ill-advised statement that Freemasonry only dates from 1717; and he therefore completely ignores all evidence which seems to upset his favourite but visionary theory.

"So intent is he on asserting, what others besides myself have denied and answered successfully before—as if assertion in the long run was to gain the day—that he remains utterly unconscious of the fact, patent to all other students and all who take part in the controversy, that the very 'excerpta' from old minute-books, he so carefully accumulates, and for which he deserves our best thanks, actually entirely cut away the foundation on which he rests so complacently, and tend more than anything else to disprove the statement he has made so often and so unhesitatingly, with much more boldness than discretion.

"In one sense I agree with Bro. Hughan, that before 1717 the present arrangement of Masonic degrees was not systematized exactly in the way we have it now; but that Bro. Hughan means to say, as Bro. Buchan would infer, that before 1717 the peculiar secrets of the three Craft degrees, and the traditions and ritual of the Royal Arch were altogether unknown to Masons, I, for one do not for a moment believe. Bro. Hughan is far too well versed in the archaeological history of our Order to make so rash an assertion.

"With a learned brother who wrote some time back, I am afraid that there is little practical good to be obtained from continuing this controversy, as Bro. Buchan has a way peculiar to himself of treating all evidence which opposes his pet and remarkable theory.

"For fear, however, that silence might be assumed to give consent, I am anxious to make one more protest against his many assertions and assumptions in respect of the real antiquity of of Freemasonry.

"I hope my brethren generally will bear carefully in mind, that unsupported statements do not constitute proof, and that constant repetitions of oft-repeated fallacies do not supply us with a satisfactory, or credible, or authentic history of Freemasonry in this country.—A MASONIC STUDENT.

I have at present nothing more to say on the subject, but hope soon now to resume my "Illustrations of the History of the Craft," in which, at the proper period, I will bring forward such proofs as I have so far been able to collect in support of the guild theory, which, as is known, is the one which, after much careful study and consideration, I have deliberately adopted and constantly advocated.

The history of Freemasonry cannot be disposed of by reckless statements and illogical assertions. As I have before pointed out, and I repeat the statement once again to-day, the evidence in confirmation of the existence of Freemasonry in England long before 1700, has to be sought for necessarily from a great variety of sources, and requires alike the most skilful treatment and the most patient investigation.

The fact itself has to be substantiated in many ways. We have, for instance, to use alike positive and negative evidence, direct and indirect testimony; we have to put forward what we may clearly deduce from incontestable facts, and what we may legitimately infer from certain well-known customs and usages; we have monumental, numismatic, and architectural evidences to study; we have historical statements and archaeological discoveries to consider and reconcile, while we have, at the same time, Fabric Rolls, Guild Regulations, ancient chartularies, and our own Masonic traditions and MS. carefully to collate and compare! Under these circumstances, I, for one, believing the question itself to be a very important one, entirely decline to conduct and continue the controversy on Bro. Buchan's principles, as utterly unworthy of the subject and our Order.

When I have formally put before my brethren all the evidence I have collected in favour of the view I venture to propound, then will be my best answer to Bro. Buchan's challenge, and then I shall gladly welcome, as I shall respectfully await, alike the criticism of the public and the judgment of the Craft.

I am, dear Sir and Brother,

Faternally yours,

A MASONIC STUDENT.

THE CRAFT GRAND LODGE.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—The disgraceful scene enacted in the last Craft G.L., and the fact that such a motion as Bro. Cooke's was not summarily negatived, may perhaps account for the progress that is being made by the other degrees in Masonry, and of which the partizans of Grand Lodge are at the same time so frightened and so jealous. That a system dating from 1813, with its new degrees, new secrets, and elimination of nearly everything that distinguished "pure and antient Masonry," should yet claim to be alone Masonic, only shows to what a height effrontery, presuming on ignorance, will reach. I need not remark on the bad taste that led Bro. Cooke to declaim against degrees recognised and worked by the sister G.L. of Ireland. No one expects good taste from Bro. Cooke. But I did expect that the Acting G.M. would have refused to put a motion containing nothing but insolent vituperation against Masonic degrees to which some of the most distinguished members of G.L. belong, with which G.L. has nothing whatever to do, and which, whatever their demerits, possess the great advantage that their members are protected from the presence of persons whom no gentleman desires to meet. I only trust that the Board of General Purposes will insist on Bro. Cooke's proving his monstrous charges against our respected G. Secretary, or, on his failure, suspend him till he has made a public apology.

Yours fraternally,
P.M.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

SIR AND BROTHER,—In your, generally correct, report of the proceedings in Grand Lodge last week, there is a slight inaccuracy as to the remarks which I made on Bro. Cooke's motion. The accidental alteration of one word leaves my observations open to misconception. I am reported to have stated, "it appeared from the motion that irregularities existed in the Grand Secretary's office." I said, were alleged to exist. This is material; for I was deprecating any expression of opinion, and urging the brethren that, while they might, on the one hand, justly complain of the terms of the motion, it would be equally imprudent to "instantly reject" a charge, without hearing it, as one brother proposed; or "strongly reprobate" the terms of the motion, as another brother asked. I felt that the Acting Grand Master had better have stopped Bro. Cooke at the outset, or let him go on when the damage was done. As, however, facts were not given, I submitted that judgment should be reserved till they were; and I desire to be so understood, as the subject—now made a very serious one—will doubtless be again discussed.

I am, Sir and Brother, yours fraternally,
FRANCIS K. MUNTON.
21, Montague-street, Russell-square,
13th September.

[Our brother will see that the "question" referred was not the "charges" made by Bro. Cooke, but simply the "motion," which ought to have been at once scouted by every one in Grand Lodge as an ignorant and intolerant tirade against degrees practised by some of the best Masons in the world.—Ed. F.]

FREEMASONRY AND JUDAISM.

(To the Editor of The Freemason.)

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—I intended briefly to have commented on the remarks of W. B., 742, last week, but had no opportunity of doing so, but was glad to notice two letters in your last issue against the opinions entertained by the brother referred to. Yet I feel bound to offer my humble protest against such antichristian views, and hope it will be a long time to come before we are called upon to notice the like in the pages of THE FREEMASON. I forbear, however, to enter upon the discussion of the important subject, believing that your valuable paper is no place for religious or political antagonisms, and I will content myself with recommending W. B. to read his Bible more attentively for the future; to read it with a mind unfettered with prejudice, and unbiasd with scepticism, and he will then discover no real contradiction, no real difference, but everything essential for man to know, so plain that he who runs may read. I venture to believe if he does so, the result will be that he will discover the garden of Eden and the fall of man to be no allegory—that from the atonement of the Saviour flows all our hope for the future—that the doctrine of the Trinity is a fundamental doctrine of the Christian's faith, which to disprove would be to ignore the Deity altogether. The doctrine of the Trinity has been taught with more or less distinctness from the earliest times. I would refer W. B. for the correct definition of the word Church, to the 19th article of the Church of England; and as to St. Paul regarding the atonement with horror and indignation, he on the contrary makes it his boast and glory, and exclaims "But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Yours fraternally,
J. W. C., 223.

THE FREEMASONS' LIFE BOAT.

The regular meeting of the Committee was held on Thursday, the 7th inst., at Bro. Forster's, Railway Tavern, London-street, E.C., Bro. A. E. Harris in the chair. There were present, Bros. S. Davis, Gottheil, Mortlock, Gluckstein, H. M. Levy, C. C. Taylor, W. Carter, Dairy, M. Davis, C. Lacy, John Boyd. The visitors were Bros. D. Davis (141), P. Davis (141), Rawley (P.M. 174), Marks (141).

The minutes of the last regular meeting were read and confirmed. The minutes of the special meeting held on the 10th ult. were then read.

Bro. Mortlock hereupon rose and said: Before the minutes of the special meeting are confirmed, I wish to state that inasmuch as this committee having been placed in a position of obtaining and taking immediate possession of a first-class life-boat, I desire to withdraw the motion, embodied in these minutes, relative to a proposed amalgamation of this committee and the committee of the "City of London Masonic Life-boat Fund."

The motion having been withdrawn, the remaining portion of the minutes were confirmed.

The minutes of a second special meeting, held on the 24th ult., were also read and confirmed.

An audit of the financial position of the committee having taken place previous to the meeting, the auditors (Bros. Mortlock, Gluckstein, and Dairy) presented their report, which, on the motion of Bro. Lacy, seconded by Bro. Boyd, was received and adopted. The report was as follows:—
