From the lovely Santa Clara valley resound echoes of President Putnam's grand labors of universal mental liberty, and San Jose marshals another gallant host under the banner of the American Secular Union in response to his rousing lecture on "Dangers Ahead." He is the only Richmond in the field, the only one who, in the West, works everywhere for something more than himself—the cause. From Mrs. R. H. Schwartz, the secretary of the new organization, we have received a charter fee, and the document is forwarded. May the Secularists of San Jose wage relentless war against orthodox tyranny, unjust taxation, and ever maintain "privileges for none, justice for all." Those who believe in the Nine Demands, who realize there is something for every Freethinker to do, should bend their energies to make President Putnam's tour, commencing June 3, one continuous triumphal march over Oregon's mountains and fertile valleys, following the Cascade range to the Olympian heights and beautiful bays of fair Washington territory, through Idaho, Utah, Colorado, Nebraska, and Iowa, till we shake the sturdy Secular soldier's hand in Chicago, where hosts of friends realize the labor he performs purely for the principles he espouses. If there is a date unfilled, or an appointment that can yet be made in addition to those herewith announced, do not fail to write him immediately.

Ashland.....Or.....	June.....3	Pasco, Waverly, Colfax, and
Talent.....".....	".....4	Spokane Falls, W. T. Aug. 1-12
Jacksonville.....".....	".....5,6	Walla Walla, W. T. ....14
Myrtle Creek } .....	".....7-10	Union.....Or.....15
Roseburg } .....	".....7-10	Baker City.....".....16
Coos County.....".....	".....11-19	Boise City.....Idaho.....19
Silverton.....".....	".....22-24	Ogden.....Utah.....21
Stayton.....".....	".....24,25	Morgan.....".....22
Lebanon.....".....	".....26-28	Coalville.....".....23
Molalla.....".....	".....29-30	Park City.....".....26
Eagle Creek.....".....	July.....4	Heber.....".....27,28,29
Sandy.....".....	".....5	Denver.....Col.....Sept. 2
New Era.....".....	".....6	Seward.....Neb.....5-6
McMinnville.....".....	".....7-9	Fremont.....".....9
McCoy and Ballston, Or.....	10-11	Omaha.....".....10
Independence, Or.....	July.....12	Creston.....Iowa.....11
Forest Grove.....".....	".....15	Ottumwa.....".....12
Hillsboro.....".....	".....16-17	Salem.....".....13
Portland.....".....	".....18	West Union.....".....16-17
Astoria.....".....	".....22,29	Dwight.....Ill.....19-20
Cathlamet.....W. T.....	".....24-26	Chicago.....".....23
		Pittsburgh.....Pa.....30

Those who are anticipating a visit from the poet, philosopher, and orator of the American Secular Union, who is performing heroic work for the present and future, should see to it that his reception is commensurate with his labors and his worth.—E. A. Stevens in the Truth Seeker of May 19.

A Cowboy Receives a Lesson.

A cowboy from Texas pointed a pistol at the head of a Georgia preacher and thus induced him to take a drink of whisky out of a bottle. "I fear, young man," said the divine, solemnly, as he wiped his lips with his handkerchief, "that your liquor is even more deadly than your firearm. I trust that I may now return good for evil by convincing you of the sin of drinking bad whisky. I have here," continued the good man, drawing a flask from his coat-tail pocket, "some copper-distilled, rare old moonshine, which would make the bees desert their honey, sir. Take a nip of it, and remember to always ask a man to take a drink with you instead of forcing him to drink alone."—Atlanta Constitution.

We acknowledge the receipt of a copy of FREETHOUGHT, a Liberal journal published at San Francisco by Samuel P. Putnam and George E. Macdonald. Both these gentlemen have been connected with the N. Y. Truth Seeker and are thoroughly competent to give the Pacific coast a Liberal organ. Their platform is the "Nine Demands" and we wish them abundant success.—Worthington Advance.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"Our Country is the World."To the Editors of Freethought:*

I really hope that the movement started by Messrs. Schou and Stone to place FREETHOUGHT on a firm basis will succeed. No two better men could have undertaken the task. Their reputation for liberality and earnest Freethought work is well known by many on this side of the mountains. Although the Freethinkers of California will naturally take a special interest in the establishment of a Liberal journal on the Pacific Coast, your friends and the friends of the movement in the Eastern states are in fact really as much interested. For as Freethinkers "Our country is the world," at least the whole of the United States. So I hope every man East who can afford it will join the proposed 100 band.

Fraternally yours, H. L. GREEN.
Buffalo, N. Y., May 9, 1888.

Our Only Hope.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I send you by to-day's mail one dozen of our Medical Lake toilet soap, made from the water of the wonderful Medical lake mineral spring of Spokane county, Wash. Ter. What FREETHOUGHT is doing for the minds of its readers, brushing away the cobwebs and mildew of superstition, brightening and invigorating the intellect, this soap will do for the cuticle. It cleanses, purifies, invigorates. When you return from a trip through the sage brush and sand, and have been rubbing against ministers, orthodox superstition, horned toads, lizards, and the rotten dogmas of obsolescent Christianity, put your trust in man and use Medical Lake Soap, and you will be cleansed. I am yours very truly,

E. S. McCOMAS.

Chicago, May 10, 1888.

"A Few Days in Athens."To the Editors of Freethought:*

I notice FREETHOUGHT publishers keep for sale "A Few Days in Athens," and I wish to call attention to this little volume as one well worth its cost. I had it when a girl and never read a more fascinating work. I fell directly in love with its grand old philosopher, Epicurus, copying many of his wise sayings in my note book and preserving them all these years.

It is a vivid picture of the two contrasting schools of Zeno and Epicurus, the stoic and the humanitarian. No man, save perhaps Thomas Paine, has been more vilified and misrepresented than has Epicurus, and few men lived more truly beautiful and useful lives than he did.

It is impossible for any one to read the course taken by this good man and not admire and love him. I remember one sentiment that especially struck me as I came upon it. Regarding the fear of death and what might come after it he says, "Death is never our foe. When not a friend, he cannot be worse than indifferent. For while we are, death is not; and while death is, we are not. To the wise, then, death is nothing." This is the true Materialistic faith, and it is admirable philosophy.

Epicurianism has been a name for all the excesses and intemperance of life—for reckless pleasures regardless of consequences, for sensual delights without thought of what may follow in their train—while Epicurus himself was one of the most temperate and chaste of men, and an admirer and teacher of all the virtues. He says:

"Perfect pleasure, which is happiness, you will have attained when you have brought your bodies and souls [minds] to a state of satisfied tranquillity. To arrive at this, much previous exertion is requisite; yet exertion not violent, only constant and even. And first the body, with its passions and appetites, demands gratification and indulgence. But beware! for here are the hidden rocks which may shipwreck your bark on its passage, and shut you out forever from the haven of repose. Provide yourselves, then, with a skilful pilot, who may steer you through the Scylla and Charybdis of your carnal affections and point the steady helm through the deep waters of your passions. Behold her! It is Prudence, the mother of the virtues and the handmaid of wisdom. Ask, and she will tell you that gratification will give new edge to the hunger of your appetites, and that the storm of the passions shall kindle with indulgence. Ask, and she will tell you that sensual pleasure is pain covered with the mask of happiness. Behold, she strips it from her face, and reveals the features of disease, disquietude, and remorse. Ask, and she will tell you that happiness is not found in tumult, but tranquillity, and that, not the tranquillity of indolence and inaction, but a healthy contentment of soul and body. Ask, and she will tell you that a happy life is like neither to a roaring torrent nor a stagnant pool, but to a placid and crystal stream; * * walk, in short, through life innocently and tranquilly and look upon death as its innocent termination, which it becomes us to meet with easy minds, neither regretting the past nor anxious for the future."

The book is in story form and will not fail to captivate and interest almost any reader, and there are few of us who will not be made wiser and better by reading it.

ELMINA D. SLENER.

Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va., May 9, 1888.

Miss Gardener Invited to the Coast.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Some time ago I wrote to Helen H. Gardener, inquiring her terms for a course of lectures on this coast, and in due time received a reply which you will find inclosed with this letter.

The chief obstacle to her coming is, of course, the expense, and the distance being great this will necessarily be heavy; and Miss Gardener cannot be expected to lecture for less than $25 or $50 per night, and hotel and railroad bills.

Wishing to get the sentiment of the different Freethought organizations throughout California, Oregon, and Nevada, I have arrived at the conclusion that the quickest and best way to reach them is through your paper. Our little band of Liberals will raise between $50 and $100, and I would suggest that each organization should report to you the amount they are willing to contribute.

San Jacinto, Cal.

ISAAC E. CRUM.

A Poem Without Poetry.

A brief outline of the evolution and reciprocal action of the united yet infinitely diversified forms of life which constitute the one infinite element, from their minimum stage to the maximum thereof.

I asked the hoary granite, with its stolid adamantine face,

If it with man had aught in common, or if it could trace

Its source of being; or if it was inanimate, devoid of soul;

Or if it was a live integral part of the stupendous whole?

It answered thus: All that the earth or air contains, or briny ocean,

Have ever been, are now, and ever shall be, modes of motion.

All atoms are correlated, moons, planets, stars, and glowing suns

Differ but in structure; in element the infinite is one.

The relationship of elemental forms in every structure,

Constitute environments that changed relationship of elemental forms alone can rupture.

Thus I, the solid granite, on this towering mountain's side,

Through changed relationship of elemental forms, do downward glide

Until I reach the valley—enviored still, though now alluvial soil

Rich in the power to bless with golden grain the farmer's patient toil.

Thus, by degrees, I'm moved along till I man's structure reach,

Become of him a structural part, of him I'm taught and teach

That man and granite must obey the law of reciprocity,

And both must ever give and take according to their inherent capacity.

Man thinks he has the power to choose the good, eschew the ill;

Till growth in knowledge doth him disabuse, despite his will,

And teach him his relationship to life's infinite forces.

Then he shall know that man and granite are ever moved in least resistant courses,

Nor can they e'er be more or less than they are now, and here;

They have now with them all they can have in this, or any sphere.

'Mong all the countless atoms, man only counts as number one;

A mode of motion he, and they, ever doing yet never done.

VINDEX.

Sierra Nevada.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS. By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7 jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50. With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17, $18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4, being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies' watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels, $22; 15 jewels, $28. In good second quality filled cases, $2 to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38. Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra. Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case. Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1; best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set test violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas, 50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $3, $12. Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free. BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

Designer and Patentee of new FREETHOUGHT Badge in PINS and CHARMS—emblematical of the light and day of Freethought, Science, and Reason vs. the night and darkness of Superstition.—Exact size of cut and smaller, two-thirds size. Warranted solid gold, enameled in four colors. Most beautiful badge ever designed. Small, $2, $2.75, $3.50. Large, $3 to $5; with genuine diamond, $8, $10; and charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,

Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

GOD

IN THE

STATE

By E. A. STEVENS,

SECRETARY OF THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAN FRANCISCO:

PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 KEARNY ST.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and a new feature, just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling work for AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscoan. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Tributes. "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," "The Grant Banquet Toast" and "Little Harry Miller's Grave," printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing; four to any address for 50 cents, or either one for 15 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," and all the famous tributes, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, table-talks and day-to-day conversations of the author. Fine steel portrait and autograph facsimile. Price, in cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. A. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Stenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald,
504 Kearny st. San Francisco.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenzel, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 884 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1.50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE.

Or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

...IN THE...

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

...FOR...

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument MR. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Vol. I—No. 22.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - JUNE 2, 1888

COLONEL INGERSOLL was chosen as the Decoration Day orator at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, and Mrs. Cleveland and ladies of the cabinet announced their intention to be present.

THE Post and Alta are in error when they say that Clark Braden, at the meeting in Oakland the other night, denounced Mr. Putnam as a liar. Braden would not be likely to transfer to another the title of which he himself is the undisputed possessor.

It is evident that the revised version of the Bible is not a success. Since public curiosity concerning it has become satisfied, its sale has practically stopped. The ministers reject it and stick to the old text, and now the Presbyterian General Assembly at Philadelphia has voted it out of the sanctuary.

THE police of this city might find worse nuisances to deal with than the few Salvation Army cranks who parade the streets with their banners and drums. The disturbance they make is not very serious, but the matter becomes serious when the liberty of the weakest person to conduct any kind of religious services he prefers is interfered with.

THE office of bishop in the Methodist church must be one desirable to obtain. At the conference the other day somebody got sufficiently enthusiastic over the matter to stuff the ballot box when a bishop was being voted for. Probably it is not of great moment who is bishop, but it is shocking to our confidence in Methodist integrity to know that such things can be, and overcome us to some extent, without marked expressions of wonder.

THE cornerstone of the Catholic University at Washington is laid. Bishop Spaulding made the address. Miss Caldwell, who gave $300,000 to found the institution, received a gold medal from the pope. The Catholic University will be a manufactory for papists—practically a church. How much it will ultimately cost is not stated, but if no more than the $300,000 is expended on it we fail to see how, under the law which confiscates Mormon church property, the institution can be allowed to exist. If no church may hold more than $50,000 worth of property in a territory, how can property in excess of that amount be held by a church in the District of Columbia, where the same laws are supposed to obtain? It is noticed that President Cleveland was present on the occasion in question and sat between Cardinal Gibbons and Bishop Ireland. It will be worth many Catholic votes to him in the event of his renomination; and it is the custom nowadays to bid for the Catholic vote, which is known to be always in the market in exchange for privileges and appropriations.

WE have before us a copy of the New York Star, containing a sermon by the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage on Atheism. Mr. Talmage, in his sermon, affirms that if men did not believe in a hell and retribution they would be dishonest. He also asserts that Freethought leads to the degradation of women. The latter is of course a falsehood, and yet Mr. Talmage puts it forth in the fear of hellfire, knowing that all liars shall have their part therein. We would like to know how big a lie he would have the assurance to tell if the consolation of everlasting punishment were taken away from him.

NEWS AND NOTES.

The Fresno Secular Union finds that the course of Liberalism does not always run smooth, any more than that of true love. There are difficulties in the way of what is best, and no good and grand thing is attained without labor. But our allies of Fresno are sailing into the open sea of bright fortune, and the scattered forces are gathering into power. It was with hope and pleasure that I again met these strenuous workers on Friday evening, May 18. A good audience greeted me, and evidently there will be no backward movement. Mr. J. F. Waterhouse, the president of the Union, is a most earnest supporter of Liberalism and does not believe in any half-way measures. Judge J. W. North, Geo. E. Church, and H. S. Dixon have assisted with able lectures.

Fresno is beginning to have a kind of metropolitan aspect. It is rapidly growing, and with many diverse elements Freethought is gaining ground. Certainly with such noble intellectual representatives as it has in Fresno, it must eventually take the lead and command the respect of all. When Freethought can have a home of its own, its hall, library, reading room, social life, and splendid fellowship of liberal and cultured minds, it will no longer be a glorious possibility, but an inspiring reality for labor and improvement. I think Fresno will be one of our shining stars in this onward way of the world. At any rate our motto is "Hope on, hope ever."

I felt as if I were back again in the New York Liberal Club, where the "Badgepin" was wont to flash its orient rays ere it circled to the occident, when I met the Washburns who have come to this far country with the spirit of reform as devoted as ever. The cordial hospitality of Mr. Waterhouse and family, and the greeting of many friends—among them Joseph Lee, Mr. W. T. Riggs, L. Fournier, Chas L. North, etc.—made our short sojourn a kind of holiday among the camp-fires. I was sorry not to meet Judge J. W. North, detained on account of sickness, who in his grand old age is doing such vigorous work, as if it were the morning and not the evening of life.

I found also in Mr. H. S. Dixon, one of the leading lawyers of the place, the true soldier spirit. He was on the other side, but somehow or other those who fought "under the two flags" can't help a sort of friendly feeling as they strike hands on the soil of one vast country, and realize that through the storm of war has come the sunshine of noble fraternity.

So Fresno "goes marching on," and I know we shall hear good news from this lively camp.

On to Bakersfield, where I lectured on Sunday and Monday, and with varying fortunes. I find much encouragement and good cheer. Of course one can't give up with such splendid comrades as the McCords to stand by through thick and thin. W. P. McCord, the father, is one of the old settlers of California, whose enterprising spirit has always put things ahead, and made the desert bloom like the garden. Years ago he built the first ditch on the north side of the Kern river—a ditch thirty-five miles in length, irrigating thousands of acres—and which has helped wonderfully to develop the resources of this land. A few years ago land was sold for about three dollars per acre, and now it is worth from forty to one hundred dollars per acre. When Mr. McCord first came here, it was a kind of barren wilderness; no trees, no grass. Now there are beautiful alfalfa fields, orchards and groves. Thousands of cattle roam over the fertile pastures.

Beside the McCord ditch are the Calloway ditch, Kern Island ditch, and McCaffry ditch, rushing like rivers almost, and watering hundreds of thousands of acres. Mr. McCord invented the McCord scraper, or "buck scraper" as it is now called, by which the cost of ditching was reduced from fifteen cents per yard to three and four cents, an immense gain, and which made possible all this rapid development.

A promising industry of this country is the "ramie," a kind of grass whose fibre is exceedingly fine and strong, and from which cloth and laces can be manufactured.

So Bakersfield and the country round about it has a bright look ahead, and wheels into line with the rest of California for the front of the world's column.

Dallas McCord is sheriff of the county, elected by his merits, although he does not belong to the reigning political party. He has made a brilliant record, and the office seeks the man, not the man the office.

Burnside McCord, deputy sheriff, is an ardent worker, and with a few like him it wouldn't take long to put Freethought where it belongs, and make it the leader in the heart and brain of the community.

Among other friends are Judge N. R. Wilkerson and wife, who are Liberals in every sense of the word, not afraid to stand with the minority for truth and right. Judge Wilkerson might have won almost any eminent position had he been less frank in the expression of his honest thought. But he is a true soldier of science, of independent mind, with loyalty to justice, and wins respect, although he is not upon the side of fashionable belief. His wife is equally brave and devoted, and such allies give hope, no matter how hard the campaign.

Among others are E. N. Jacobs—formerly of Oakland—a generous supporter; J. S. Ellis, who came twenty miles to the Sunday evening lecture, and enrolls himself in the ranks of Freethought; C. H. Emery, C. A. Nelson, etc. Although disappointed in some things, I leave Bakersfield with pleasant memories, and with Mackay sing:

There's a midnight darkness
Changing into gray;
Men of thought and men of action
Clear the way.

Leaving Bakersfield Monday on the midnight train, early on Tuesday morning I strike my old friend D. M. Buckingham at Berenda. I call him old friend, because although we have never seen each other, we have become acquainted in the columns of the Truth Seeker. On the branch railroad we come to Raymond, where besides the station there are about three houses and a little bit of a Congregational church. There was not much of a look-out for a large audience, and yet the dining room of the hotel was full on both evenings with intelligent listeners, and most of them were Freethinkers. The minister was present and took notes, bought a Freethought book, and had no word to say in contradiction to my statements, but I suppose as usual he will preach a sermon on the "horrible Infidel." The audience came from far and near. You would not think there were so many people in this wild looking country, but it seems as if the woods were full of them whenever there is anything special to attract.

I have had a resting spell in this upland spot, where the big coaches start for the Yosemite Valley. It is a good place in which to dream. The foothills roll softly away, covered with trees. The sunlight is gorgeous, and the sky with floating clouds is of a brilliant blue. We are on the edges of civilization and come to the bedrock of life, and human nature is genuine. The miner, the woodchopper, the teamster, the railroad man, the stage driver, the blacksmith, the carpenter are all here, and the varieties of genius and character are interesting and amusing beyond description.

Judge Maxwell, a sturdy Freethinker, keeps law and order with equal and exact justice, and everybody respects him, and obeys, no matter how much they may have aboard.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard are of the genial sort, who make the traveler feel at home. There is no particle of superstition in their minds. They are dwellers in the atmosphere of humanity.

Mr. Bond, who introduced me at the lectures, is an old Californian, and believes in looking upon both sides of every question.

I have enjoyed these free-and-easy days with friend Buckingham. He is coming on to the verge of life, but "bates no jot of heart or hope." He is a worker still, and in Freethought finds the joy that makes age golden with the fires of youth. He is one of the pioneers of the state and has met with all sorts of adventures in this land of gold, and generously he uses what fortune gives for the benefit of others.

J. G. Seaton and family were present with us from a dozen miles away. He is not afraid to stand up and be counted for Freethought.

A sudden and terrible accident, a few days before I came, caused the death of one of our noble soldiers, Joseph Gordon. An explosion of giant power killed him instantly. Sadness was mingled with our pleasure. He died at his post of duty. He was not afraid of the inevitable doom. He was loved and respected by all. The minister, with cruel, but of course consistent, Christian unkindness, declared from the pulpit that the accident occurred because Gordon was an Infidel. But a Christian young man was killed by the same accident; so it seems that God was mighty anxious to lay hold of the Infidel, without any regard to the welfare of his own followers. The logic of Christianity is a very perplexing affair. I wish the clergyman would explain why God had to smash a Christian all to pieces in order to wreak his vengeance on the Infidel.

Not such our thoughts of the dead. Over both Christian and Infidel we place the flowers of memory and hope. Both shall be honored for humanity's sake. Both are comrades, and as they sleep beneath the same sod and sky, in the bosom of eternal nature, for both there shall be the soldier's requiem, the garland of remembrance, and the star of hope.

Many friends I have met at Raymond, and labor has been mingled with sunny hours, and there has been a touch of romance in this frontier life, where one comes in contact with picturesque specimens of rude but generous human nature. The pages of Bret Harte come vividly to mind as the panorama passes before me.

If I had had time I should have gone up to Grub Gulch and Fresno Flats, where they tell me there are plenty of Freethinkers. I expect to come back this way sometime, and linger a week or two amidst these scenes, where the grandeur of nature cultivates the spirit of independence.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

May 25, 1888.

FOR A VETERAN FREETHINKERS' HOME.

A gentleman of this city, well known for his generosity and public spirit, has offered a lot upon which the Freethinkers of the coast can build a home for aged men and women, especially Freethinkers who without fortune have come to the verge of life, and must depend upon some assistance to smooth their pathway amid the snows of time. This is a laudable undertaking, and will be welcomed by the friends of Freethought. A little contribution all around will help make happy many a forlorn life, made so by sacrifices in behalf of liberty and justice. We are all growing old, and we are not all growing rich. Those whom fortune blesses should be ready to give a share to the comrade who, after life's battle, is worn and weary, and wants a place to lie down. The splendid offer of our San Francisco friend will enable us to build and maintain in this beautiful climate a home for the veterans of our cause, whose sunset of life will be made glad with the "fair humanities" of Freethought.

DEPARTURE.

By the time this issue of FREETHOUGHT reaches its nearest readers the senior editor will have begun his long lecture tour from this coast to the coast washed by the Atlantic. The tour will consume the time between May, 1888, and January, 1889—seven months of travel and work. The period now commenced will settle a question of the most vital importance to this paper. It will settle the question whether FREETHOUGHT is to continue as an institution or to end as an experiment. And the solution of this problem does not rest so much with the publishers as with the readers and patrons. We are not in a popular movement, where the ordinary kind of enterprise will insure success. The public is not interested. It is not for us, but against us. The failure of a Freethought paper is not a business failure. It is a moral defeat, a victory of the past over the present, of the old over the new. It is the rejection of an endeavor to help the world. Taking this view of it, Liberals must see which way their efforts should be directed, and it is hoped that they realize what depends upon their action. We should be ungrateful indeed if we did not appreciate what they have done and are doing for FREETHOUGHT. We should be blind if we did not recognize, in the support already accorded, an earnest of ultimate success; and we should be equally shutting our eyes to the facts if we did not see and point out the necessity of this support being maintained and increased. There is no lack of ways, and we do not believe there is any lack of will. That will, however, should express itself freely.

As we remarked in the beginning, the senior editor has departed, leaving this office, as it were, an orphan asylum with one inmate, who is hereby recommended to the kind guardianship of the reader. It is the only eleemosynary institution in the country that asks for no appropriation from the state, and depends entirely upon private subscriptions. We trust that during the period heretofore mentioned as now opening, an eye of solicitude will be turned from time to time in this direction.

To all friends we send greeting and good cheer.

WE DEFEND THIS COAST.

It is of course a matter for regret that Mr. C. B. Reynolds, the lecturer, does not find the Liberals of this Coast more to his liking. Only once in a while, it would appear from his letter in an Indiana paper, is he relieved from "the annoyance of having to contend with the little, miserable meanness of some illiberals."

Neither do places, more than persons, find favor in his sight. Los Angeles, he writes to the same paper, is "a grand rendezvous for sharpers and schemers. Even the Liberals," he asserts, "with very few exceptions, have lost all sense of common honesty; have no respect for their word, and regard no agreement made by them as binding unless exclusively to their interest. Los Angeles is a beautiful place for real estate sharks to congregate and all decent people to avoid."

Santa Ana Mr. Reynolds finds little better if not worse equipped. The Liberal League there is presided over, he says, by an "adipose excrescence, who toadies to the church, but, under orders from his wife, dares not go beyond loud talk for Liberalism, and that only when not in her presence or that of anyone religiously inclined." Others, as described, are "poor drones, and would-be Liberals who lack the courage of their convictions and who injure any cause to which they attach themselves."

We believe that this estimate by Mr. Reynolds of the Liberals of California arises from a misconception. There is some misunderstanding, apparently, on both sides. A man should judge not lest he be judged. It is not always possible for arrangements to be carried out. For instance, Mr. Reynolds had an engagement to speak in Oakland, and preparation was made accordingly; but owing to some cause unforeseen and unexplained he was not there at the date set, nor was any excuse offered. We have had at this office personal application from several people who desire to know where Mr. Reynolds is. We do not know. We cannot say. He has not kept us posted. Yet there have been no murmurs, no expressions of disapproval, no hints of the absence of common honesty or of any relaxation of moral obligations—nothing but regrets. We therefore appeal to Mr. Reynolds not to judge us too harshly. We hold out our hat for a charitable word. We can only point to one man (let some other section of the country duplicate him) who offers $300 worth of property to the best worker for FREETHOUGHT in the coming year. We are further humiliated by an unselfish Liberal who has $100 to tender for the circulation of a Liberal paper. Others draw $10 or $20 checks for the same object. Almost as we write, there comes from slandered Los Angeles an order for more than $25 worth of books and subscriptions, where Liberals, so says Mr.

Reynolds, "regard no agreement as binding unless exclusively to their interest." Simultaneously we receive this telegram:

BOULDER CREEK, May —.—Geo. E. Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., S. F.: Where is Reynolds? To lecture here last night. Didn't come. Answer. W. S. RODGERS.

What can we say? Only this: that all prearranged affairs are subject to modification by circumstance; that all are likely sooner or later to cause disappointment to others, and that we should therefore be prepared, when it overtakes us, to accept and sustain it with philosophical coolness. It will in no way take the edge off our grief to rush into print an Indiana paper.

LATER.—Since the foregoing was put in type, Mr. Reynolds has filled his belated engagements at Santa Clara, San Jose, and Boulder Creek. The man who scuttled the Queen of the Pacific is responsible for the delay. Mr. Reynolds has also called at this office and had a jolly time. Personally he is one of the most agreeable of men, but business is business, and, of course, being in the lecture business himself, he cannot be expected to take an interest in the success of any other lecturer or in a paper like FREETHOUGHT, which has a lecturer connected with it. This will explain to our inquiring friends why Mr. Reynolds does not communicate with the paper or obtain subscribers for it. The estrangement is merely a commercial one, and we are glad to say that it does not arise from personal dislike on either side.

THE CLUBBING LIST.

Perhaps it is time to restate the plan of Messrs. Stone and Schou for pushing the circulation of FREETHOUGHT.

Mr. Stone's proposition is this: That he will be one of one hundred who shall pledge themselves to obtain ten new subscribers each to FREETHOUGHT, and to pay therefor the sum of $20.

Mr. Schou's proposition is similar, namely, that he will be one of ten who shall pledge themselves to obtain fifty new subscribers each to FREETHOUGHT, and pay therefor the sum of $100.

Mr. Stone is fulfilling his proposition. He has forwarded $5 on account, with the names of subscribers.

Mr. Woolsey, of Messina, the first to respond, is doing likewise, having also forwarded $5, with names.

Mr. N. D. Goodell, of Sacramento, settles the matter at once. He was in the city last Sunday and left the ten names and the $20.

Mr. John Riffin, of Los Angeles, belongs also to the list, as he has paid for and forwarded a generous list of subscribers.

As we understand the matter, Mr. Stone's proposal is that the list of one hundred shall be filled before any of them is required to pay a cent or to send in a name. Thus far, as will be seen, those who have joined the list have gone immediately at work with a commendable determination to perform their duty and fulfill their obligation whether others do or not.

Everyone must understand that this interest manifested in FREETHOUGHT by its stanch friends is most gratifying to the publishers. We may not be able always to put our thanks in words that express them fully, but those who know how this paper is supported, who realize the magnitude of the burden that is borne, who see the days and nights of labor done for meager pay; those who are acquainted with these and other things will perhaps recognize them as at least an endeavor to make returns for the encouragement offered.

The list of one hundred is open. Its projector desires that it should be filled and closed before the year is out. Such also is our desire.

We have piped.

A vote of thanks is due the papers of this vicinity for the good work they have done in announcing and reporting the recent lectures. The Carrier Dove and Weekly Star published each a friendly word in San Francisco, and the reports of the dailies were all that could be expected. In Oakland the Enquirer, with a larger circulation, perhaps, than all the other papers published there, and having in its employ a reporter who combines honesty with a remarkably clear understanding of his business, gave the lecture large space in its most conspicuous columns. All the other notices were good, and, as before remarked, the papers merit a vote of thanks.

Just too late for publication in this issue we receive an interesting communication from Secretary R. D. Allen, of the Silver-ton, Or., Secular Union, announcing the anniversary celebration on the 23d of June. There will be a grand picnic and basket dinner, music by the band and the choir, and speeches by Messrs. Putnam, McCleary, Ford, and Beal. These exercises will take place in the park during the day. At Freethought Hall in the evening they will have a social dance to which everybody is invited. Next week we shall print Secretary Allen's communication.

DECORATION was commemorated in the FREETHOUGHT office by Mrs. Schou and Mrs. Broneer, who brought some gorgeous bouquets for the departing Secular Pilgrim.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

General Sheridan has been sick and hardly expected to live.—Vanderbilt, visiting London, keeps his address concealed to escape subscription book fiends.—The pope has written a work on the social condition of the laboring classes. He insists that the state should settle difficulties and prevent strikes.—Brooklyn will send a delegation of 150 teachers to the convention in this city.—The Manhattan elevated railroad, New York, has been robbed of some $40,000 by its employees, who issued counterfeit tickets.—Five Mormons on trial at Ogden, Utah, under the unlawful cohabitation act last week promised to obey the law and were let off.—The San Francisco Salvation Army, who up to a recent date had things pretty much their own way so far as the right to parade the streets with fife and drum is concerned, have had the tables turned on them on account of the action of a color sergeant, who blew his trumpet in the faces of the engine horses attached to engine 2 when proceeding to a fire a few evenings ago. Last Saturday evening three police officers gathered thirteen of them into the police net on Market street and conveyed them and their drums, tamborine, and fifes to the police station and placed them in the cooler, with the charge of disturbing the peace against their respective names. When seen by a Chronicle reporter in their cells they were profuse in choice language not to be found in the scripture.—The General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterians has decided, in the case of Dr. Woodrow, that a belief in evolution does not constitute heresy.—The deaths in this city last week numbered 123 against 98 for the corresponding week last year.—The English Quakers, Unitarians, and Free Christians are now all on record against the British government's Irish policy.—Ohio Prohibitionists have had a convention and adopted a platform which recommends a strict enforcement of Sunday laws and contains a Labor plank denouncing the importation of laborers.—The cornerstone of a Confederate monument was laid at Jackson, Miss., on the 25th ult., in the presence of 10,000 people.—The Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott is elected permanent pastor of Plymouth church in Brooklyn as successor to Henry Ward Beecher.—George P. Coffey, a Salvation Army soldier at Los Angeles, committed suicide with morphine last week. His mind was deranged by too much whisky.—The continued satisfactory condition of Emperor Frederick's health raises hopes of his ultimate recovery.—The assignees of the firm of W. T. Coleman report the assets of the firm to be $675,075 more than the liabilities.—May 24 was Queen Victoria's sixty-ninth birthday. The British Benevolent Society of San Francisco went on a picnic to Petaluma.—A California boy at Harvard has just died from the effects of opium smoking.—The steamer San Pablo, which struck a rock near Turnabout Island and was abandoned by the crew, was afterward looted and fired by Chinese pirates.—Dr. Stallard, of the San Francisco Microscopical Society, recommends that a law should be passed making compulsory the cremation of the bodies of persons dying of leprosy. He finds by experiment that the leprous bacilli will live and multiply for years after the death of the leper.—The Anarchist paper, the Alarm, recently suspended in Chicago, will be revived in New York.—Under the Contract Labor law the courts have decided that Trinity church, New York, must pay $1,000 for importing the Rev. Walpole Warren under contract to perform the Episcopal service.—The governor of Kansas has pardoned a wife murderer on condition that he shall abstain from the use of intoxicating liquor. An exchange makes out, by plenty of reasoning, that drunks should hereafter be pardoned on condition that they will abstain from killing their wives.—Thirty-five canvassers have been appointed to solicit funds to pay the expenses of the coming convocation of teachers.—The pope will not withdraw his condemnation of the Irish plan of campaign. He will trust to the astuteness of his priests to explain it away where it gives offense, and to boom it where it is indorsed.—A bill has been favorably reported to the House at Washington increasing the cost of a public building in Sacramento to $200,000.—Dom Pedro, emperor of Brazil, has been very sick and reported dying, but he is better.—The Pittsburg Dispatch says that at present there are over 1,000,000 people out of employment in the United States. In New York alone there are 67,000 men and 50,000 women who are idle.—Great damage has recently been done in the East, especially in New York and Pennsylvania, by a terrific storm. In Virginia loss of life is also reported.—A large number of boys in the St. Vincent's Catholic Orphan Asylum at San Raphael have recently been examined to learn what kind of treatment they have been receiving. The examination showed that the boys are in a lamentably filthy condition, poorly fed and clothed, covered with vermin, and treated with brutality by their overseers. Further testimony is being taken by the state board of examiners. These boys are wards of the state and St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum gets a per capita appropriation for supporting them.—Blaine positively declines to be a candidate for president, and Depew does likewise. Gresham is the next choice.

THE WATERS TROUBLED IN OAKLAND.

When Mr. Schou, of Oakland, announces that a Liberal lecture is to be delivered in that city, the non-appearance of the lecturer engaged is not allowed to lessen the interest of the occasion. He preserves his serenity and gets another lecturer. That is how Mr. S. P. Putnam happened to speak in Oakland on the evening of the 25th ult. Medical College Hall, on Clay street, is not a large hall nor a small one, but about medium-sized, and it was comfortably filled on the evening in question. The proceedings were full of interest. There was a gathering of pleasant people, half of them ladies, with a fair sprinkling of children. Mrs. Broneer attended to the floral decoration of the platform, upon each corner of which was a bouquet about the size of a shock of corn. Each filled a small tub. Calla lilies, rosebuds as big as hens' eggs, with blossoms the size of sunflowers, and other flowers that I do not know the names of and will not mention for fear of losing my cherished reputation for veracity—these made up the mammoth bouquets. I have seen women in the East devote a good deal of time to raising a calla lily with two leaves and one white blossom about the size of a baby's hand. They put it down cellar in a pot winters, and kept it in the window all summer where the sun could shine on it. They irrigated it with warm water, and turned it around carefully every day so that it would grow straight. The man who used tobacco was in demand to blow smoke at the poor afflicted plant to kill the lice; so that altogether it is about as much trouble to raise a calla lily in the region where these observations were taken as it is to bring up a lamb on a glass bottle with a wooden stopper. If one of these women could have seen the lilies slaughtered to make the bouquets here mentioned they would have felt as if the affair was a funeral.

Mr. Schou was usher and presiding officer. When he had got the people all seated, and had surveyed them with a glow of satisfaction, he called the meeting to order and announced that the Zither Club of Oakland would play a piece or two. Thereupon a little concert ensued. There is a wonderful melody about the music of the zither unknown to other instruments. It is awakening, inspiring, martial, majestic. The audience was not satisfied even after two encores, but the club was under engagement to play at the Congregational church and had to leave.

The chairman introduced the speaker with some appropriate remarks, and the president of the American Secular Union got a warm welcome. The lecture was on "Science and Theology," and pointed out how the methods of these differed. Science began with facts, and thence gathered ideas, made theories, formulated hypotheses. Theology, on the other hand, began with ideas, and paid no attention to facts except as they supported these ideas. Those facts which conflicted with preconceived ideas were rejected; hence the conflict between theology and science. The audience listened attentively, applauded frequently and discreetly, and were happy.

But trouble soon set in. As the speaker retired, a dark, sharp-faced young man, with an air of extreme assurance, arose and said that by request he would present a letter to Mr. Putnam and ask him to read it. The letter was duly presented. The chairman followed with a neat speech, saying that the last Liberal meeting he attended, the same being a funeral, was devoid of religious exercises, and had caused remark. To avoid a repetition of the mistake divine services would now be inaugurated. The choir would render a voluntary while he and Mr. Macdonald would pass through the congregation and receive the offerings of the people. The young man who had presented the letter again interrupted and insisted upon reading it himself without giving Mr. Putnam an opportunity to do so. He was momentarily squelched, and the collection proceeded, while the zither club, having returned, gave another excellent piece of music. Then he came on his feet again, in a chair, and read the letter. It was a challenge from Clark Braden, who has been lecturing in Oakland lately. The young man wanted to read the conditions of the debate, but the chairman stopped him. There was an uprising of the audience, and "Put him out" came from all sides. But he wouldn't subside. Said he, "I appeal to this audience to decide whether I shall proceed." He was hissed vigorously, but Mr. Schou consented to put the question, and called upon all those who were in favor of supporting the intruder to make it manifest by saying Aye. He waited for a response. There was none—not a sound. You could hear a watch tick. The silence was dense, palpable, material, tangible, and made the ears ring. The chair called for those of a contrary mind to express themselves, and a double-barreled NO came from every throat in the audience, followed by a blast of applause. The fresh young man was salted. His nerve was shaken; he collapsed, looked around for a place to conceal himself, and disappeared. Mr. Putnam took the floor. He announced that he would not debate with Clark Braden, nor would any self-respecting Liberal.

Here a mild-mannered gentleman half-rose in a hesitating way and said that his name was Sweeney, that he was a preacher of the gospel in Oakland, that he was sorry the meeting had been interrupted, but as Mr. Braden was lecturing in his church, to his congregation, he would like to inquire what was Mr. Putnam's objection to Clark Braden. As he sank back to his seat the door opened, and in walked Braden himself. The situation was getting dramatic to those who recognized the great bloviator. Putnam kept himself under control. "I will tell you," he said, "why I will not debate with him. I refuse to meet Clark Braden in public debate because he is a blackguard and a liar."

The coming of Braden was so timed that these words met him in the face at the moment he entered. He took a step up the aisle, and shouted, "Will you let Clark Braden answer you?" Braden was unknown to Mr. Putnam, and the two men faced each other for the first time. "Will you let Clark Braden answer you?" said Braden again. "No!" thundered Putnam, "you shall not address this meeting." At that moment nothing short of a personal encounter was expected. The man on the platform waited. The man in the aisle did not advance. Discretion and his mouth came to his rescue. "You are a miserable coward," he bellowed; turned on his heel, and walked stiffly out, while behind him stole the Rev. Mr. Sweeney and the sharp-faced young man who had inaugurated the trouble. As they went away Mr. Schou sent after them the reminder that had a Freethinker entered Mr. Sweeney's church and violated the sanctity of the place by the kind of conduct they had been guilty of, he would be immediately placed under arrest.

With this the episode was dropped. Mr. Putnam spoke a few words on organization and recited a poem. Mr. Schou thanked the audience for its good behavior and generous contribution, and the meeting was dismissed.

It may be added that this interruption was not unlooked for. It was a premeditated affair on the part of Braden and his confederates. The man who read the letter is C. R. Bennett, the Pacific Coast agent of Anthony Comstock's Vice Society. It is hoped he is satisfied; he was sat upon by the most unanimous vote within the gift of the audience. It is hoped that the Rev. Mr. Sweeney is satisfied; he has received indisputable assurance that his champion is a coward. Above all, it is sincerely hoped that Clark Braden is satisfied. He has had "liar and black-guard" thrown in his teeth, and has swallowed the dose. He may now hire a tent and exhibit himself to an admiring Christian community as the Giant Swashbuckler of the Pacific Coast.

THE SAN FRANCISCO LECTURE.

For the past month Mr. H. W. Walker has been sowing seed in the form of tickets for a lecture by S. P. Putnam on "the American Republic;" and last Sunday evening, in his holiday clothes, he sat at the door of Irving Hall gathering in the harvest. It is sufficient to say that the yield was good. Something like two hundred people paid the two-bits tariff and came in. Some were from a distance—Mr. Goodell from Sacramento; Mr. Davies from Brighton, and a strong delegation from Oakland. Mr. Schou, of the latter place, is getting to be a famous presiding officer, and he was allowed to take the meeting in charge. He said that he felt sorry for San Francisco because it would let Oakland, a town full of churches, excel it in the size of audiences at a Liberal lecture. Nevertheless the city had done well, and he was pleased to see so many present. Mr. Schou introduced the Zither Club, which made some surpassingly fine music for an overture, and was unanimously recalled. The zither is not a very well known instrument in this country, but it will grow into favor.

The lecturer of the evening, when the chairman had apologized for him and given him an introduction to the audience, received a warm welcome, and went into his subject at once. The body of the lecture on "The American Republic" is the exposition of the Nine Demands of Liberalism. It calls attention to the assertion of the Declaration of Independence that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed; and affirms that only the governed have a right to participate in the government. The National Reform party, backed by the Women's Christian Temperance Union and some of the Prohibitionists, is conspiring to enthrone a foreign power, namely, the so-called Almighty God and his alleged son. The speaker denied that these candidates were eligible to the office. They were not American citizens. The political work of Liberalism is, first, to secure the impartial taxation of churches and other ecclesiastical property. In California churches are nominally taxed, but they do not bear the same burden as other property. In other states they are totally exempt, though they claim and receive protection from the government.

The next demand is for the abolition of all Sabbath legislation—not the abolition of Sunday as a holiday, but of the Sabbath as a holy day. This state has no Sabbath laws, but the church is working for them and will get them if the Liberals are not active and eternally vigilant.

The oath is another ecclesiastical institution to be abolished. It does no good. It is merely a screen for the perjurer and places his word on an equality with that of an honest man, who is as ready to tell the truth before swearing as afterwards. The other demands were taken up and expounded. The audience was attentive and enthusiastic and the applause unstinted. The speaker also urged the necessity of organization. There should at least be a committee appointed to act upon any occasion that might arise, and especially to prepare for the next Paine celebration, and a state convention in conjunction with it. The following committee was named: A. H. Schou, W. S. Ray, H. W. Faust, Geo. E. Macdonald, and Mr. Mertz. Music by the zither players closed the exercises.

The sale of Mrs. Faust's painting brought $15 for Uncle John Dukenfield.

The success of this and the Oakland meeting is regarded as most encouraging by the Liberals of the two cities, and now that the ice is broken, the waters stirred, there will probably be less difficulty hereafter in effecting a gathering of Freethinkers.

THE BIBLE.

Many thousands of Christian ministers are teaching at the present time, as ministers taught in the dark ages, that the Bible is "the word of God," and absolutely necessary "to give that knowledge of God, and of his will, which is necessary unto salvation."

Have intelligent ministers, in this age of light, any excuse for still teaching such absurdity? Can they and do they believe for one moment that God is the author of a book with 130,000 errors in it, as the late revisers admit that book to contain? Can they believe that God would contradict himself in giving an account of creation as Dean Stanley and all learned ministers now admit that the first two chapters of Genesis contradict each other? Can they believe that the God they worship ever approved of human sacrifices, and provided for them in his law? Can they believe that he sanctioned for thousands of years nearly all known vices and crimes? Can they believe that he told our first parents, in the garden, what was not true, and when contradicted by the serpent, admitted the truth of what the serpent said? Can they really believe that God would write a book, and record therein his own untruthfulness? Is it not time for ministers to stop teaching heathen mythology, and tell us the truth?

But even supposing the Bible to be "the word of God," as claimed, is it necessary to salvation? If it is, should not all men, in every age, be furnished with it?

How long has the human family been on this earth?—and how long has there been a Bible?

The most learned of Biblical scholars now agree that the Pentateuch was not completed till within 500 years of the Christian era. But supposing it to have been written 2500 years before, how long had God left his children on this earth without a Bible, without any revelation to guide them in the way of life?

Now all the prominent evangelical denominations in our country support colleges. In all these colleges the sciences are taught. A doctor of divinity presiding over one of these colleges will teach the students that the Bible is "the word of God," when it teaches that this earth is less than 6000 years old; and that the human family is as old as the earth, within six days; while at the same time his students, with his approval, are taught in the geology class that this earth is, at the very least, 48,000,000 of years old, and that the human race have lived on the earth not less than 250,000 years. Here is the teaching by the same denomination, in the same institution, at the same time, of two professed systems of truth which flatly contradict each other. Can those ministers be honest and continue to teach such perfectly contradictory lessons? As to the age of the world, they teach that it is about 48,000,000 years older than God says it is. As to the human family, they teach that it is about 240,000 years older than God says it is; and the students are taught to believe both.

It does not help their case when they try to wriggle out of the difficulty by saying that "days" do not mean "days," and "morning and evening" do not mean "morning and evening," but "long periods of time." Do they expect to establish that the Bible is the word of God by contradicting its inspired chronology? What then would become of their Sabbath? If "six days" each composed of morning and evening do not mean "six days," how are we to know what the "seventh" means? And how are we to know when the Sabbath begins, or how long it is to continue?

Now if the Bible is really the word of God, and indispensably necessary to teach us the way of life, why did God leave the human family without it for more than 246,000 years? Is it not time for ministers to be a little more careful to teach the truth?

J. W. N.

A WHITE DAY.

Elysian day, the earth outrivaled heaven;
Like one sweet diamond was the glistening air;
There were no clouds along the blue arch driven,
Save those soft, fleecy clouds that make more fair
The splendor of the shining field and grove.
They gild the dome with white, entangling wings,
And with the gentlest motion break and move
To shapes more lovely and bright wanderings.
The wide horizon shines with peaks of snow
That seem a portion of the bending sky;
Bright billows on the morning's azure glow,
Surging on shores where thousand jewels lie.
The vast plains stretch with flush of harvest gold
Amid the freshness of its May-day green;
The bud, the blossom, and the fruit unfold,
And mingling treasures of the year are seen.
The heart is happy in that full delight,
Where dreams do seem as real as the earth:
Where all that hope can paint is not too bright,
For every moment's fair, entrancing birth.
The world is like an organ tuned to joy,
And every breath is an immortal strain;
Free from all fate, without death's cold alloy,
Time and eternity one life attain.
A sparkling island on a summer's sea,
Is that one day along the season's flow;
Undreamed of, sudden as the winds that flee,
Yet crystallized ever in thought's ceaseless glow;
It will abide though storms may sweep the way,
And bitter disappointments wreck the heart;
Naught can destroy the effluence of that day;
No imperfection can its grief impart.
White day; white rose of love's pure reckless bliss,
When shining eyes made answer unto eyes,
In the swift glory of the scarce-felt kiss,
Whose lightest thrill is heaven's divinest prize;
Ethereal as the sky was love that day,
And like the golden sun and music's breath,
The sheen of roses and the dewy spray,
Though fleeting, stronger than the darts of death.
White day, amidst a thousand days of toil,
Outshining all the evil of man's life;
And if a thousand years their length uncoil,
That day's sweet star gives grace to every strife.
It hath been—and its throne is ever sure;
No force can change its lustre to the mind;
Through fortune's wildest ruin must endure;
Immutable though fate were most unkind.
Elysian days, so perfect and so rare;
Because so rare more perfect and more good;
If bloomed less seldom, then they were less fair,
Losing perfection midst a multitude.
We live, we hope, we toil, though skies may frown;
We've touched the heights, henceforth there are no fears;
For one such day will make all life a crown,
And glorify a desert of dull years.

CHRISTIANITY AND PHILANTHROPY.

A Unitarian clergyman of high ability and character, Rev. Charles A. Allen, of New Orleans, has recently published in the Unitarian Review for April as well as in a separate pamphlet, printed by G. H. Ellis, 141 Franklin street, Boston, an essay entitled "The Christian Enthusiasm." His aim is to present the distinctive merit of Christianity, in contrast with other religions, as well as with the Ethical Culture movement, and he has taken unusual pains to be perfectly just toward those who differ with him. Nothing, of course, is harder or more important. Most of what is said against Freethinkers and Secularists in the pulpit is so badly aimed as not to hit the mark. The same is true of much that is said against Christianity. The theory of salvation by faith, for instance, though a bad one at the best, is not so bad in reality as it appears to Colonel Ingersoll, who does not see that its supporters consider it the best possible method of moral culture. To guard against such mistakes, it is well for us to be familiar with the writings of intelligent and fair-minded opponents like Mr. Allen.

His leading idea is expressed in these passages: "This religious enthusiasm of reverent, hopeful faith and love, that looks upon the vilest man of any race as one whom God would save and for whom Christ died, was from the first the most distinctive sentiment of Christianity. And the secret of this enthusiasm was a truth which Christianity alone has taught—the idea of the immeasurable value of every human soul." "This enthusiastic faith in man, which is essential Christianity, has repeatedly saved our European civilization." "How can our country be made a Christian land? Surely not by putting any mere words into the national Constitution, or by merely calling ourselves Christians, or by professing discipleship to Jesus—for we want realities, not names—but by making his humanitarianism a controlling power in our national life, arbitrating in the present dissensions between rich and poor, guiding our treatment of the Chinese and the Indian, energizing and humanizing our charities, making our religion more Christ-like, and prompting men and women even to go and live among the lowest classes, as some do now, so as to understand their needs and win their trust."

Even those who disagree most decidedly with Mr. Allen's theological theories must approve heartily of his practical aims. It would be a great blessing to the world if all Christians were to think and work in this spirit. It is pleasant to know that such Christianity is actually preached in many popular churches, and kept at work by many powerful organizations. Christianity is doing more to-day to relieve suffering and remove poverty than any other religion. So far I, at least, can go with Mr. Allen; but I must say that Christianity would have a much better title to be called the philanthropic religion, if people who can get very little healthy exercise or innocent pleasure on six days of the week were encouraged to amuse themselves on the seventh. A religion which does so much to prevent the children of the poor from enjoying out-door sports, and which closes the doors of the theatre and even the art-gallery on the only day of leisure for the people, falls very far short of being the best possible embodiment of love to man.

And while admitting, with Mr. Allen and Mr. Lecky, that Christianity is essentially philanthropic to-day, and was so in the first three centuries, I cannot forget that during the fourteen hundred years when the church was powerful, she was much more of a persecutor than a philanthropist. Mr. Allen remarks that these persecutions were carried on in order to save souls; but I am glad to have had that method of saving them given up. And we all know that it was given up simply because it could not be carried on successfully any longer, owing partly to the opposition of popular writers like Voltaire, and partly to the gradual discovery by politicians that persecution was only doing mischief. For the first three centuries Christianity was weak and philanthropic; then for fourteen she was strong and intolerant. This century and the last form another period of philanthropy and ecclesiastical weakness. Christianity is once more on her good behavior, and should be kept so. A great deal is said in this pamphlet and elsewhere about what has been done by Christianity to teach philanthropy; but I know that Voltaire taught it much more thoroughly and influentially than had ever been done by any Christian.

And I must say, too, that what Mr. Allen calls the distinctive essence of Christianity—a tender interest in every soul—seems to me to be a recent addition rather than an original element. During the twelve centuries between Augustine and Arminius, there was an almost universal belief that not a single soul could be saved except the very few who were arbitrarily picked out for heaven before they were born. The whole Epistle of Paul to the Romans, one of the earliest and most authentic of Christian books, is plainly based on this horribly misanthropic fancy. Jesus himself seems to have held it in regard to Judas; and he apparently did not consider the Pharisees likely to enter heaven. The concluding chapters of the gospel of John represent him as saying, at the Last Supper, that only a very small part of the human race were capable of benefit from his prayers: "I pray for them: I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me, for they are thine." I see much less of faith in man here than in the Buddhist legend of the saint who stands outside the gates of heaven begging with tears all who wander in sin and error to enter in, and declaring that she will never herself accept salvation until every one else is saved.

F. M. HOLLAND.

HUMAN TESTIMONY.

Science rests on facts that can be repeated, that prove themselves. Science never calls upon a man to believe what cannot be demonstrated. It would not be scientific to do so. Science is infallible, in this: that when you build a steam engine just right, and put the fire under, it goes, it never fails. If you have built it right it is demonstrated at once. Science verifies itself.

Religion—that is, what is called revealed religion—is quite different. It depends on human testimony. Some man saw it, or said he saw it. It is a wonder, a miracle, a something you would not believe unless some man affirmed that he saw it and knew it to be so. Now clearly all such things depend on the intelligence and honesty of the men who say they saw. . . And how uncertain is all this!

At a conference of Mormons at Salt Lake, held April 15, 1888, these words were spoken: Dr. Seymour B. Young: "I bear testimony that the gospel of Jesus Christ, as revealed by Joseph Smith, is true without exception." Elder A. Jensen: "Joseph Smith called angels from above, which an impostor could not do." Dr. S. B. Young: "Obedience to the Mormon priesthood is obedience to God, for I know they are of God. This was revealed to us by three witnesses, whom ye all know, and through Joseph Smith. The doctrine of plural marriage was revealed to Joseph by God."

Now here is human testimony, of men in our day, living men, whom some of us know. Do we believe it? Not a word. What then do we believe about these men? That they are either miserable fanatics, unworthy of the slightest attention, or arrant rogues who should be whipped out of town.

Is it possible? Are men so bad as to deceive and lie about a message from God? They have done so in all ages. They do so to-day. It is one of the peculiarities of the human mind that a man may tell a thing till he believes it, when the original idea was only a delusion, or a dream. We have known our Spiritualists to lecture on the appearance of the spirit of "Katie King," and declare that it was real, and that they had seen it.

After all this, Dr. Beers, of the Episcopal church here, says, "The birth, life, and death of Christ are as well proven as any facts we know." Does he speak the truth? Surely not. They are not near so well attested as the revelation to Joseph Smith, the Mormon. Men came forth and swore that the angel of the Lord told them that God showed Joseph where the book was, and translated it to him.

Dr. Beers can show nothing like that for any act or word of Christ, his birth, death, or resurrection. The testimony of the soldiers, who were set to guard the grave, is the poorest kind, and would not be received in any court in our city. In fact, the soldiers gave no testimony at all. Only the writer tells the story.

Then these soldiers were set to keep guard. They evidently lost their prisoner. They had some sort of a story to tell. They might have been asleep, or deceived by some person in disguise. They literally knew nothing about how the thing was done. But were they here now, in court, ready to swear to what they saw, and said that an angel came and rolled away the stone and took the body, no one would believe them.

If Dr. Beers thinks he could make a respectable showing of competent, relevant, and admissible testimony of the birth or resurrection, or a single miracle of Christ's, or of any miracle or any prophecy, we should be glad to hear from him.

We take the ground that all these things are relics of the barbarous past, and must be allowed to die a natural death. We are content to rest on what can be proven under all the rules of logical evidence. We cannot believe any religion necessary to man, morally or otherwise, that is not in harmony with science. Science is the correct reading of nature, the work of God, and there can be no truth inconsistent with it.

H. L. K.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary..... 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
CHARLES ECKHARD, Treasurer..... 28 Lafayette place, New York
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com..... 120 Lexington ave., New York
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com..... 27 Arcade, Cincinnati

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	Harry Hoover,	S. W. Devenbaugh,
Courtlandt Palmer,	Charles B. Reynolds,	Wm. Algie,
T. B. Wakeman,	Prof. Ch. Orchardson,	Roman Staley,
James Parton,	L. K. Washburn,	H. P. Mason,
J. D. Shaw,	W. S. Ball,	N. D. Goodell,
W. F. Jamieson,	Mattie A. Freeman,	D. W. Smith,
Charles Watts,	M. M. Secor,	Jas. Wardwell,
John E. Remsburg,	Otto Wettstein,	J. W. Black,
Horace Seaver,	Wm. Redfield,	Thos. J. Truss.
Mattie P. Krekel,

UTILITARIAN SECULARISM.

At the request of the writer, the Chicago Secular Union has appointed a committee of its leading members to commence agitation in favor of providing free music for the masses in the public parks during the summer months. If this movement is successful, the Union will deserve the lasting gratitude of the West Town residents, for they will doubtless eagerly avail themselves of this much to be desired privilege. It is a measure in accord with the spirit of progress—a recognition of the demands for higher ethical entertainment and diversion on the part of the industrial classes. The West Town has a number of small but beautiful parks, which, on account of their limited extent, require greater attractions to entice the public.

The Union will ask the co-operation of the Ethical society, the various Turner societies, the trade unions, all organizations of a progressive character, and the public generally. This will be the form of the petition:

To the Honorable, the West Town Park Commissioners:

GENTLEMEN: We, citizens of the West Town of Chicago, believing in the theory that public parks are provided principally for the health, recreation, and elevation of the closely housed and over crowded working classes, respectfully request that your honorable body take such steps as will, during the heated term, provide music in the parks every Sunday afternoon, and thereby greatly enhance their attractiveness, and add to the enjoyment of our citizens. In furtherance of which we add the following reasons:

1. As the largest contributors to the maintenance of those parks are the busy brain and hand workers—the real pillars of our social structure—who can find no satisfactory opportunity for their full enjoyment, except Sunday afternoons, we consider that a public boon would be conferred on the people by blending harmonious melody with nature's loveliness.
2. The cultivation of musical taste (as much if not more than the contemplation of nature) tends to ennoble the masses by their moral exaltation.
3. That such innocent entertainments will largely diminish vice and crime.
4. That if sufficient funds are not obtainable to provide music in all the parks, we suggest that concerts be held in each of the parks alternately Sunday afternoons.
5. We feel sure that the financial outlay should have little sway in this matter, for if this proposition receives the consent of the commissioners, the larger portion will be subscribed by public-spirited citizens.
6. We desire that the music furnished shall not be confined to any particular class or composer, assured that good music is most sacred.

E. A. STEVENS.

OUR SENTIMENTS.

We regret that of late the usefulness of the American Secular Union has been somewhat impaired through the existence of some misunderstanding among certain of its officials. We still more regret the undignified tone imparted and the publicity given to the discussion of the questions at issue. Let us hope that all this will be set right at the next congress, and that harmony and due regard to principles will be the order of the day.

—Charles Watts, in Secular Thought.

CHRISTIAN TOLERANCE.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I here send you for publication an argument between myself and brother, but I do it not with any intention of disrespect for my brother, but simply to tally one for Secularism vs. Religion. Here the argument began in his letter. He wrote to me thus to console me for the loss of my wife:

"I was very sorry to hear of your sad misfortune, but such is life in this world of sorrow; but, dear brother, we should look beyond this mundane sphere for brighter hopes where we shall meet to part no more if we lay up our treasures there as we are commanded to do by the great, good Father above."

My answer to this was that I and my wife did not believe in these things, that we believed in nothing that we knew not of; and as I did not wish to say anything further then upon the subject, I sent him FREETHOUGHT, No. 16, with marked passages, that he might know how I stood on the subject.

He sent back to me the paper accompanied with this note:

GARFIELD, W. T., May 4, 1888.

G. R. HIGGINS: I return your soul destroying, damning literature, and would thank you to never disgrace my name by placing it on the outside of a wrapper containing such trash. Yours truly, A. J. HIGGINS.

No doubt your influence has sent your dear young wife to hell, and now you want to send me there too. Misery loves company.

The following is my answer, which he sent back without reply:

NORTH YAMHILL, May 11, 1888.

DEAR BROTHER: Your letter, using the language you did, wounded my feelings somewhat, but when I took a second thought, I knew you did it more through the degrading influence of religion than anything else, as it has that effect. I took it that you sent FREETHOUGHT back, and used the language you did, to offend. Do you think it just right to address a brother in that way? I just politely told you what I believed. Everybody should have the privilege to state his or her belief on all subjects, nor should people fall out with each other on account of their belief. To send back a paper is to offend. I should not send back any paper you pleased to send me. I believe in free speech, free press, and Freethought.

The literature I sent is not soul destroying by any means, it is soul elevating. The Bible says man cannot destroy the soul, but that God can destroy both soul and body. You must read up your Bible. Nor will the literature damn any man, but God, it is said, will damn man for not believing that of which he has not the evidence to convince him. Nor is the literature trash, but it is good common sense, good logic and reason. I affirm that the Bible is trashy. Treating me as you did, do you not think your name would be more apt to disgrace FREETHOUGHT than it would be to disgrace your name? Or would the placing of your name on the outside of the paper be any more a disgrace to your name than to the paper to be under your name? Or would your name placed on the outside of the wrapper be any more disgracing than for you to place it inside of FREETHOUGHT, as you did to send it back to me? Besides, you should mind the Golden Rule, and not place my name where you would not place your own. Do to others as you would that they should do unto you.

Speaking of my influence, I would say that if reason and logic will send, as you say, to hell, let us go there—better go somewhere by reason to be damned, than to go to a heaven by such dogmas as the Bible teaches. It is preposterous to believe in such a book being the revelation of a God whose ways are just, and who is omnipotent.

I do not want to send you to hell, if your imputed God is cruel enough to send people there. If I must choose, I will choose such company as Voltaire, Hume, Gibbon, Haecckel, Spencer, Darwin, Huxley, D. M. Bennett, the noble Thomas Paine, Lincoln, and Ingersoll and thousands more, and you may go to your slavish heaven with the canting preachers and thieves, and those that swing from the gallows straight into heaven, for they, generally speaking, believe. The Bible says those that believe shall be saved, and those that believe not shall be damned.

Misery may like company, but pardon me when I say that I do not prefer the company of those who believe as you do. I love to be with those unprejudiced minds that will freely discuss all subjects, weigh evidence, and decide as reason leads; who will, when reason decides against them, throw overboard Bibles, Gods, and devils, and discard heaven and hell and supernaturalism of all kinds.

Now, then, you must prove positively the inspiration of the Bible; that there is a God, a devil, a heaven and a hell. If you cannot, it is vain for you to hold me responsible. You must not think Infidels ought to believe when the Christian world cannot prove, and never has proven those things. Furthermore, you have no business to teach Christianity or the Bible inspiration to others until you have proven all beyond a doubt. I affirm that theology is founded on superstition, on theory, on legends; has not a particle of foundation upon which to rest. Now the next time you write you must prove these things beyond a doubt. If you cannot, the argument ought here to end; what is the use of wasting words when nothing is gained?

If there is a hell to punish people in, and your God is just, he would not send my innocent wife there, but me, the guilty one. To send the innocent would be heinous. That is the plan on which the atonement is built; namely, that because Adam and Eve sinned by eating an apple we are all guilty down to the end of time; that we are required to acknowledge a sin that we are not guilty of; and that an innocent person—that is, Christ—suffering and dying can pay all the debt. What an inconsistency; how cruel, how heinous, how bloodthirsty would be your God! Could you call such a being good? I would abhor him. It would be just as consistent to hang all Guiteau's posterity down to the latest generation for what the father did. I think I can prove every assertion I have made when proof is called for.

I sent you the paper with marked passages that you might know how I stood on this subject without further writing, at a time when my heart was sad from the loss of my dear wife. Yours truly, G. R. HIGGINS.

My argument was answered by silence and by the return of my letter, which is equivalent to saying "I cannot refute your statements."

G. R. HIGGINS.

THE PRESS ON THE LECTURES.

A fair sized audience greeted Prof. S. P. Putnam at the opera house last night, the occasion being his lecture under the auspices of the Secular Union. As already announced, his subject was "Evolution and Creation." Professor Putnam is a lecturer of no mean ability, and his lecture last night showed that he was a thorough master of his subject, and that he had given it careful study. He was very interesting, and those present gave him undivided attention.—Fresno Republican.

Samuel P. Putnam, editor of FREETHOUGHT of San Francisco, was introduced to a fair congregation of people at the Avon theatre last evening by W. F. Freeman as "the hardest worker in the cause of Liberalism, as well as one of the best lecturers."

Mr. Putnam spent no time in apologies or preliminaries, but at once sailed away into a beautiful eulogy of liberty. He holds his audiences by his thought. While not an Ingersoll, he is above the average screamer of creeds, and is what he claims to be—a Liberal.—Stockton Mail.

There was quite an assemblage of those people of Lodi who are liberal in their religious views, who are moral for the sake of morality, who believe in being and doing good for the benefit their actions will be to the world of to-day, and not in the hope of future reward or through fear of future punishment, at Stoddard's Hall last Monday evening to listen to a lecture by Samuel P. Putnam, president of the American Secular Union, and editor of FREETHOUGHT, a Liberal journal published at San Francisco. The subject of the lecture, as announced in last week's News, was "Mental Liberty and the Constructive Side of Modern Liberalism." Dr. C. H. Gordon, with a few brief remarks, introduced the speaker. The lecture was promptly made, and the orator listened to with rapt attention, and showed to be a man capable of deep and earnest thought.—Lodi Weekly News.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made these lecture appointments from June 1 to October 1. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Ashland.....Or.....	June.....3	Walla Walla, W. T.....	14
Talint.....".....	".....4	Union.....Or.....	15
Jacksonville.....".....	".....5, 6	Baker City.....".....	16
Myrtle Creek.....".....	".....7-10	Boise City.....Idaho.....	19
Roseburg.....".....	".....7-10	Ogden.....Utah.....	21
Coos County.....".....	".....11-19	Morgan.....".....	22
Silverton.....".....	".....22-24	Coalville.....".....	23
Stayton.....".....	".....24, 25	Park City.....".....	25
Lebanon.....".....	".....26-28	Salt Lake City.....".....	26
Molalla.....".....	".....29-30	Murray.....".....	27
Eagle Creek.....".....	July.....4	Heber.....".....	28, 29
Sandy.....".....	".....5	Denver.....Col.....	Sept.....2
New Era.....".....	".....6	Seward.....Neb.....	".....5-6
McMinnville.....".....	".....7-9	Wahoo.....".....	".....7-8
McCoy and Ballston, Or.....	10-11	Fremont.....".....	".....9
Forest Grove Or.....".....	".....15	Omaha.....".....	".....10
Hillsboro.....".....	".....16-17	Creston.....Iowa.....	".....11
Portland.....".....	".....18	Ottumwa.....".....	".....12
Astoria.....".....	".....22, 29	Salem.....".....	".....13
Cathlamet, W. T.....".....	".....24-27	West Union.....".....	".....16-17
Pasco, Waverly, Colfax, and		Dwight.....Ill.....	".....19-20
Spokane Falls, W. T. Aug.....	1-12	Chicago.....".....	".....23
		Pittsburgh.....Pa.....	".....30

A Song of Humanity.

The poet-pilgrims wandering on the late Ægean shore,
Where the New was fast encroaching on the Old that went before,
And the ancient ruins trembled for the newer temples bore
A message glad for Humanity.

There were men who gave their welcome, I remember, with a frown,
They could not brook iconoclasts that threw their idols down,
Who planted Truth's white flowers in that city
gray and brown,
And sang the song of Humanity.

Here the primal grasses perish on the prairies and the hills,
Making way for greener pastures by the rivers and the rills;
Thus we wait and take our measure from the slowly grinding mills,
The mills of the gods and Humanity.

Crumbling ruins with their ivies, as the curling grasses low,
Sink beneath the broader channel in their westward wave and flow,
And the ship of Progress hides them in the slime and undertow,
As she makes the port of Humanity.

The later ages cover all the cruder with the clay
That calls upon the acorns for the forests of today, And Science builds her strata on the things that pass away,
While singing the song of Humanity.

Volcanoes of the ocean uplifting mountain chains Have wrought the rocky ranges and the western peaks and plains,
And as oriflammes upspringing are the brighter golden grains
That shall bless the world and Humanity.

MARY BAIRD FINCH.
Frenchtown, Neb.

CORRESPONDENCE.*Deemed Worthy of Encouragement.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed find $2, for which please send me FREETHOUGHT twelve months; as soon as I receive a few copies, will try to get you up a list of subscribers from this place. The enterprise is a good one, worthy of encouragement, and is entitled to the support of every man and woman in the land who has the moral courage to think for themselves.

R. BLACKBURN.

Colusa, Cal., May 24, 1888.

Long Articles Deprecated.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have received No. 19, and am well pleased with what you have to say. I look upon you as educators of the people, as your business indicates, but those long articles you publish, that cost you much time to handle, simply to please those who have no other amusement than to see their names in print, should be suspended. No correspondent should ask more of your valuable space than one half column. For my part, I never read those long strings.

Yours in the faith forever, P. H. FOSTER.
Babylon, N. Y., May 19, 1888.

Shall a Circuit be Established?

BROTHER LIBERALS: I address this to all interested in the advancement of our Secular Union. A proposition was made to confer with some experienced lecturers about having a circuit formed of four of our large towns—say, San Bernardino, Pomona, or Monrovia, Orange, or others that may reply to this, stating the amount that must be raised, so that some one in each locality could be soliciting subscriptions—and see if we could not be able to persuade some speaker to settle in this land of sunshine and flowers so that we could be sure of a meeting every four weeks and some one to officiate at funerals and weddings. I think if Jamieson and wife were once to see the field that is "ripe for the harvest," both physically and mentally; he would cast his lot among us.

We have over twenty-four names now, but we are still looking for help to advance our meetings. It seems to me that cowardice is at the bottom of Liberalist backwardness about taking hold. So afraid of Christian bigots and popularity, so afraid of political chances, a wife or a sectarian "hubby," or "I'll try to come," and then invite company so as to have an excuse to stay away, all shows the sad effect of the teachings of the past.

But those who see the great danger ahead to our republic, and the power of priestcraft, will know that we must all make renewed sacrifices and work persistently until success attends our efforts, or else (may that day never come) there will be gag law on speech and press and we are put in bonds for honest differences.

K. PARKER,

Sec. Anaheim Secular Union.

Anaheim, Cal.

Secular Meetings.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The organization of Secular Unions is one thing; to keep them together is another thing far more complex and wearisome than the former. There is no mystery why this is the case, for where there is no amusement, no one to impart knowledge, these meetings must necessarily become insipid; hence any organization, whether Secular or theological, will prove a failure unless there is some one to impart knowledge. Free-thinkers as a class believe in science, and in order to entertain them, they should employ some competent man or woman to give them weekly lessons or lectures. To illustrate, suppose four neighboring towns would employ some competent person to give them monthly lessons in astronomy, geology, chemistry, sociology, biology, etc., illustrated with magic lantern scenery, imparting useful and instructive lessons to the young and old. This is the way, and the only way, to bind us socially together. We care nothing about the unknowable or incomprehensible. There may be spirits, there may be gods. There may have been a time when matter, motion, time, and space did not exist. These are fit topics for the theologian only; science deals with demonstrated facts. I cannot express my ideas more fully or more forcibly than to take a quotation from Auguste Comte. He says, "In the final, the positive state, the truly scientific conception has given over the vain search after absolute notions, the origin and destination of the universe, and cause of phenomena, and applies itself to the study of their laws, that is, their invariable succession and resemblance." S. P. BATES.

Corresponding Secretary Anaheim Secular Union.
Anaheim, May 25, 1888.

A Historical Poem.

The author of the annexed poem, says the Theatre, was the late David Everett. He was born in Princeton, Massachusetts, in 1769. He graduated in Dartmouth College in 1789. In the winter previous to entering Dartmouth College in 1784, when a teacher in the grammar school at New Ipswich, he prepared a little poem, to be recited at an exhibition got up in the academy style, composed expressly for Ephraim H. Farrar, to be spoken by him on the occasion, when only seven years of age.

You'd scarce expect one of my age
To speak in public on the stage;
And if I chance to fall below
Demosthenes or Cicero,
Don't view me with a critic's eye,
But pass my imperfections by:
Large streams from little fountains flow;
Tall oaks from little acorns grow;
And though I now am small and young,
Of judgment weak, and feeble tongue,
Yet, all great learned men, like me,
Once learned to read their A B C.
But why may not Columbia's soil
Rear men as great as Briton's Isle—
Exceed what Greece and Rome have done,
Or any land beneath the sun?
Mayn't Massachusetts boast as great
As any other sister state?
Or where's the town, go far and near,
That does not find a rival here?
Or where's the boy but three feet high
Who's made improvement more than I?
These thoughts inspire my youthful mind
To be the greatest of mankind;
Great, not like Caesar, stained with blood,
But only great as I am good.

ONE of our western revivalists requested all in the congregation who paid their debts to rise. The rising was general. After they had taken their seats, a call was made for those who didn't pay their debts, and one solitary individual arose, and explained that he was the editor, and could not pay because the rest of the congregation was owing him their subscriptions.

THE most trying position a truthful clergyman can be in is to be preaching the funeral sermon of a man who died rich and mean.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS.
By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
Popular Jewelry Store
(Established 1857)
ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7 jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50. With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17, $18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4, being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies' watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels, $22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2 to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $33. Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra. Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $3; extra fine, $5. Sent prepaid in case. Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1; best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas, 50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $1.55; in pearl, $3, $12. Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free. BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

GOD

IN THE # STATE

By E. A. STEVENS,

SECRETARY OF THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAN FRANCISCO:
PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 KEARNY ST.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Tributes. "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," "The Grant Banquet Toast" and "Little Harry Miller's Grave," printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing; four to any address for 50 cents, or either one for 15 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," and all the famous tributes, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, table-talks and day-to-day conversations of the author. Fine steel portrait and autograph facsimile. Price, in cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. A. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Stenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald,
504 Kearny st. San Francisco.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY;

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenzel, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1.50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

...IN THE...

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

...FOR...

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsone 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument MR. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Vol. I—No. 23.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - JUNE 9, 1888

GEN. GEO. A. SHERIDAN wants to debate Christianity with Colonel Ingersoll. Mr. Sheridan should communicate his desire to Mr. Gladstone. Possibly the ex-premier will kindly give way to this abler champion of divine truth.

So the National Reform movement is being planted on this coast. The soil of the country is not favorable to its growth, but the announcement that the God-in-the-Constitution party will spend $25,000 in propaganda work during the present year is a trifle ominous.

THE action of the police in suppressing a play because it was anti-Catholic in its tone, shows to what extent religious liberty is enjoyed or understood in Berlin. In the minds of enlightened people the anti-Catholic tone of a play should constitute one of its chief merits.

THERE are men who were never born to get left. Such a one, evidently, is the Rev. Mr. Chamberlain, pastor of the African Methodist church, of Oakland. Having been expelled from his church by the trustees last Sunday, he calmly stationed himself at the door and took up a collection as the worshippers departed.

MR. PIXLEY, of the Argonaut, long since renounced Blaine, because of Mr. Blaine's Roman Catholic proclivities, and now Cleveland, having sat with the church dignitaries at the laying of the cornerstone of the Catholic University at Washington, meets the same fate. Mr. Pixley will find it difficult to discover a candidate free from the taint. They are all tarred, or ready to be, with the same stick. While the Catholic church remains the scarlet woman that she is, and barter her favors as in the past, politics will continue to play the libertine.

THE Presbyterians want a theocracy. A republic is not good enough for them. The general synod of this church at Pittsburgh, Pa., the other day passed resolutions disclaiming identification with the nation so long as it refuses to acknowledge Christ as its king; enjoining the session, under the care of the synod, to see that members of the congregation do not identify themselves with the nation by any act that appeals to allegiance, and refusing ecclesiastical fellowship with other churches which allow their members to identify themselves with the nation in its neutrality to the claims of Christ as king of the nation." We would call the attention of the Presbyterians to the fact that the war of the Revolution was fought to get rid of a king. This nation will acknowledge no ruler who is not first put in nomination, voted for, elected, and inaugurated, agreeable to the statutes in such case made and provided. If Christ is the Presbyterians' candidate, let them uncover their boom and open the campaign.

THE signs indicate that it will be Cleveland on the Democratic side against Blaine or Gresham or somebody else on the Republican side, and there is great uncertainty and considerable excitement over the question which side will win. In our opinion, which we express with due caution, the whole problem sinks into unimportance beside the overshadowing question who will be next to join the noble band of brothers who are pledged to boom the circulation of this paper to the extent of ten new subscribers. Incidental matters like a presidential election should not divert our attention from the great issues which confront us.

NEWS AND NOTES.

PERSONAL—TO THE SUBSCRIBERS OF "FREETHOUGHT."

Friends: We are a company working together, and it is well that we should have a frank understanding of the situation and prospects of our common endeavor. I call it common because every subscriber of FREETHOUGHT is interested in its success equally with the editors. It is not a money-making affair. It cannot be, for it flings its fortunes with the minority. We all want this enterprise to advance because it is an expression of our thought, because it bears the message of our life. It is for all those who see something better than the present, and who are willing to do their share of labor for the world's improvement.

When my colleague and myself came to San Francisco we did not know how this paper would be welcomed. It was an experiment. A Liberal journal was needed, but ours might not be just what the people of this coast wanted. We could only try; publish the paper and take our chances whether it would be accepted or not. If not accepted we would pocket the loss and go to work in some other way.

The paper has been accepted. The welcome is universal. There are no doubting voices. FREETHOUGHT has become a representative Liberal journal.

Our effort, therefore, is not simply individual. There is co-operation and general interest. I think that every subscriber feels as keen a desire for the success of FREETHOUGHT as the editors themselves. So we can talk together as friends; arrange and plan for future work in a kind and generous partnership, and there need be no concealment as to what we purpose to do.

My colleague and myself fling in our fortunes together. Our work is one. There is no separation. The press and the platform go together. All that is earned in the lecture field goes into the expenses of FREETHOUGHT. Nothing is kept back. Out of all the income received from lectures, subscriptions, etc., the editors limit themselves to a certain salary. All above that is for the paper. This salary is of the lowest possible amount. It is one dollar per day. For all the work that I do this year in behalf of Liberalism, writing for the paper and lecturing for hundreds of nights, I receive no more than the common day laborer. I receive but one dollar per day. All of my lecture fees above that is given to FREETHOUGHT to place it upon a firm pecuniary basis. My associate receives the same pay that I do, and makes the same sacrifice. I state these facts in order that the Liberals of the country may realize what it is to publish a Freethought paper. Under ordinary circumstances either of us, for the work we are now doing, could get at least $1,000 per year. Friends will therefore understand what we are doing for the sake of Freethought at the present. We are giving six or seven hundred dollars each, clean cash, per year. We don't grumble at this. It is the necessity of the case. But after surrendering so much we don't want to see FREETHOUGHT go down in case the burden should become greater than we can bear. The expenses of FREETHOUGHT for paper, printing, room rent, postage, etc., are about $4,000 per year. They cannot be much less than this. It will be seen that in order to pay expenses there should be at least twenty-five hundred subscribers. That number of paying subscribers will make FREETHOUGHT an absolute success. It will flourish as long as the world stands. And we must pay our way. Paying our way, we are ready for any other sacrifice whatever. But we will not run into debt. When expenses cannot be paid, FREETHOUGHT will suspend. We don't believe it will, but we want our friends to understand the situation. We don't want to beg or borrow money, and we shall not do it. We do want a large subscription list. We are ready to beg for that, because it is the life of the paper and constitutes its value.

Our list is now about one thousand. This is remarkable for a paper not yet five months old, and starting without any flourish of trumpets. These thousand represent a quite potent force. They are an army of good friends.

Now we want 2,500 subscribers at least. This is our goal, and there can be no halting until we get to it, and if all our present subscribers take hold we shall reach it. We must have our plan of campaign, and I hope all will join in, if not in one way then in another.

In the first place there are the generous proposals of Messrs. Stone and Schou. These are for the rich Liberals. Only a few can help us in this way, for there are not many rich Liberals. But there are some to whom the payment of $20 or $100 a year for the circulation of FREETHOUGHT would be comparatively nothing. I believe that sooner or later these proposals will be accepted. Wealthy Liberals give every year large sums for the support of the churches. We have no churches, but grander than all churches is the press. What cathedral is like that in the potency of its influence?

Mr. Worthing's offer is open to everybody. Rich or poor, one can strive for this magnificent premium. All can solicit subscriptions, and by an earnest effort some one will win this prize so freely offered. It cannot be possible for FREETHOUGHT to go down when there are such friends to stand by it as Messrs. Stone, Schou, and Worthing.

Another way to help FREETHOUGHT is through the lectures. Through the fees the paper is supported. I am kept pretty busy in the field, but I am willing to work harder for the sake of FREE-THOUGHT. Every $10 counts. Funds can be raised for a lecture sometimes that cannot be raised for any other object. So if friends will study the lecture route and see a chance to put me at work, I wish they would do so. They will be doing service for FREETHOUGHT, not simply for me or for themselves.

Another method I propose is this—what I call a Gift Subscription, and here everybody can offer a little and in the main it will be a big help. Almost every one of our subscribers has a friend or neighbor, or relative, who is not a pronounced Freethinker, but who might become so if they could read FREETHOUGHT for one year. Perhaps there are some genial Christians also who would welcome FREETHOUGHT to their firesides, if it were sent as a gift, and it might "regenerate" them after a while and they would be ardent supporters of the Liberal cause. Now we want each one of our subscribers to do a dollar's worth of missionary work. It is by the distribution of millions of books and pamphlets and papers that Christianity is kept alive. Let us do a little of this distribution for Freethought.

This is my plan: To allow every present subscriber of FREETHOUGHT to make a gift of one or more copies to whomsoever he thinks will read it with profit, by the payment of one dollar for each gift copy per year. It is understood that these low terms apply only to these gift subscriptions. It is expected that all bona fide subscribers—those who pay their own subscription—shall pay the regular rates, as heretofore published, for clubs, etc. Every pronounced Freethinker who pays his own subscription is willing to pay the regular rate, which is so low that no further reduction can justly be made. These gift subscriptions are for another purpose. They are to enable every subscriber by a contribution out of his own pocket to put FREETHOUGHT into families where otherwise it would never go. It thus becomes an ever-widening influence. Suppose every subscriber of FREETHOUGHT makes a gift subscription—and who is there that has not a dollar to spare for such a purpose? Instantly into one thousand families penetrates the light of Freethought, of reason and humanity, and of these one thousand families and five thousand readers, hundreds of additions will be made to the army of Reform. A gift subscriber of this year will become a bona fide subscriber next year, pay his own subscription, and become an active Freethinker. Are there not at least five hundred of the subscribers of FREETHOUGHT who would never feel it if they sent a dollar for a gift subscription? And if five hundred did this little service to themselves, to FREETHOUGHT, and to the world, what a powerful impetus is given to this journal!

I believe the first thought of every subscriber will be in favor of this cheap but far-reaching method of extending our circulation. Do not let the heat of the first thought pass away without result. Send the $1 and the name; mark it "gift subscription," so that the nature of the subscription will be understood. Here is an opportunity for everybody to do something. The way is still open for the $20 and the $100 subscriptions, to those who are amply able to thus assist; but I want every subscriber to do a little out of his own pocket for the circulation of FREETHOUGHT. Circulation is what we desire, not contributions of money, but funds to be used for increasing the number of our readers. If we can reach on this coast ten thousand or twenty thousand readers weekly, a vast power will be established for progressive thought and equal rights.

Now, then, I ask frankly and earnestly for the co-operation of our friends. This summer and fall I make a trip eastward to attend the Congress at Pittsburgh, and I look forward to a glorious gathering. After this lecture tour, I shall devote myself especially to the Pacific Coast. The work here is imperative. We must organize, and I find that it will need constant attention hereafter to bring the splendid Liberal forces of this coast into harmonious advance for moral, social, and political happiness.

We must have a paper. This is absolutely necessary to success, and with the paper and a subscription list of twenty-five hundred, there is no doubt of making Freethought a controlling element. We want to make our paper thoroughly democratic. We want to make it of the people, and for the people. We want the largest expression of opinion. We want a common interest. We are not working for ourselves. We give our life, our labor, our hope to this cause. Our highest joy is in Liberalism, and, whatever may happen, we shall never regret that we have embarked in this enterprise, that we have put all our treasures upon this good ship FREETHOUGHT, whether it sails triumphantly, or by unchangeable fate goes down. We cannot do otherwise than venture everything, for under this flag is the glory of all the future. Success without Freethought would be a barren height. Defeat with Freethought is better than any merely personal gain. It is through Freethought that what is universal in humanity touches and glorifies every toil. Let each do something and victory is sure.

For the next six months, from the Pacific to the Atlantic, I shall be working for FREETHOUGHT without cessation. My friend and partner will remain here, and we all know that from week to week our paper will go forth freighted with sparkling thought. But we cannot do this great work alone. We ask our thousand friends to help us. This is not a business enterprise; it is a grand co-operation in behalf of Liberalism, to make by common effort a power that will enlighten and inspire.

As I have said, there are several ways of "lending a hand" in his work. There are Messrs. Stone's and Schou's propositions, the offer of Mr. Worthing, the club rates, the gift subscriptions, and the lectures. In some way each can give a lift, and every dollar given in any one of these ways is for the cause.

I enter upon the campaign work from now on to the Congress with high hopes. I have not been disappointed so far. Friends have rallied. They have given the warm clasp of hand. They have been generous in support. They look forward and do not believe in failure any more than I do. With so well known and sterling a co-adjutor as the one I leave here at the office—one who has abandoned everything to put his life and fortune into the Liberalism of this coast—I have no particle of fear for the result. There never was a more favorable opportunity for combined action than now—and so I say to all our allies:

"Aid the dawning tongue and pen,
Aid it, hopes of honest men;
Aid it, paper; aid it, type;
Aid it, for the hour is ripe,
And our earnest must not slacken into play;
Men of thought and men of action,
Clear the way."

Yours truly, SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

INGERSOLL'S reply to Gladstone occupies forty pages of the one number of the North American Review. It clears away the cloud raised by the ex-premier as the sun clears away the fog. We can fill orders for the Review at 55 cents per copy.

OAKLAND wheels nobly into line with the pledge of a $3,500 contribution toward the expenses of the coming Teachers' Convention in San Francisco.

A WICKED CYCLONE.

On May 23 a cyclone struck the town of Brownston, Texas. The first building wrecked was the Methodist church, which, the telegraphic dispatch says, was "scattered to the winds like matches." After three residences were disposed of, the Congregational church was reached, and instead of sparing the "house of God," it "crushed it into a mass of ruins." This wicked cyclone then took a turn, and after demolishing several dwelling-houses, it came to the Baptist church and left it "an unrecognizable mass of ruins."

It is in order for our evangelical friends to explain, if they can, why the angel of destruction had no orders to spare their respective tabernacles, and confine its ravages to the secular edifices.

A ROTTEN INSTITUTION.

The testimony given before Secretary Maslin of the State Board of Examiners shows that the Catholic pesthole called St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum, at San Raphael, ought to be abolished. It is a disgrace to humanity. The five hundred occupants of this institution are the wards of the state.

The facts brought to light by the recent investigation are these: The boys are housed and lodged like pigs. Their clothing is ragged, filthy, and infested with vermin. Their food is insufficient and of the poorest kind—mouldy bread and half-putrefied meat being the staple articles of diet. At the table they are allowed to discard knives and forks, drinking their soup down without the aid of spoons, and tearing their meat with fingers and teeth like so many wild beasts. Upon this point the boys testified that by any other method they would get nothing, as at table it is "root, hog, or die." In the dormitory, where the boys sleep, the worst and filthiest vices are practiced. The bath is unknown, there being no decent provisions for such a luxury, and the sanitary arrangements are the worst imaginable. This would be bad enough, but in addition it appears that these wards of the state are treated with the utmost brutality by the teachers and overseers. One Whalen, the principal of the teachers, is shown to be a drunken brute, whose habit is to hit his pupils with whatever lies nearest to hand, from a strap to a baseball bat. The little victims are covered with bruises, some of which have required the services of a physician.

For maintaining this kind of an institution the Catholic church receives from the state of California an appropriation of $40,000 per annum.

But the treatment which the boys receive while at the asylum is not the worst part of it. They receive no education and are taught no trade. They leave the institution fitted for nothing but the Catholic church and the penitentiary. There is a pretense of instructing them in the "three R's," but the investigation proves that this is not done. They know the catechism and their prayers, and that is all.

Secretary Maslin has not yet made his returns to the Board, but to a reporter he said: "What I have seen, and heard from the lips of the boys, goes to show that the asylum is very badly managed. It is filthy. The boys are in the same condition. Besides being covered with vermin, they are beaten black and blue; poorly clothed and fed, and generally neglected. From the evidence of the cook, it appears that while we were carrying on the investigation there the boys were unusually well fed, and still the food was not what it ought to be, considering the fact that the state pays the institution 27½ cents per day for the maintenance of each boy. I found that the children were not given either sufficient food or time to eat it; that they were never helped to food twice, and that they did not know how to use a knife and fork; that they were deprived of home comforts and herded together like so many sheep or cattle. When I left there on Sunday, the sisters and Father Scanlon protested that the damaging evidence I had obtained was from the worst boys in the institution. I returned yesterday, and twelve of the worst boys had been sent to the House of Correction because they were 'bad.' I called for the good, truthful boys, and the first one examined told a worse story, if possible, than I had yet obtained."

The reform needed in this instance, as in all others of its kind, is the taking the wards of the state out of the hands of the class of men called priests and the class of women called "sisters," and putting them in charge of men and women appointed by the state and responsible to the state. Because boys have had the misfortune to lose their parents is no reason why they should be treated worse than criminals. The method of reform is simple, namely, stop paying money from the state treasury to the Catholic church. Adopt the Third Demand of Liberalism, "that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease," and that will be the last of St. Vincent's Roman Catholic Pesthole.

A VALUABLE BOOK.

A book which must prove of the greatest interest to the Free-thinkers of this country is the "Handbook of the Lick Observatory," by Edward S. Holden, LL.D., director of the observatory. It is a volume of 135 pages, 12mo., printed on heavy paper, and bound in flexible cloth covers. Besides likenesses of Professor Holden and James Lick, it contains twenty views, drawings, and illustrations of the locality, the machinery, and the apparatus connected with the great astronomical station. The table of contents includes:

- I. Information for Visitors.
- II. Sketch of the Life of James Lick.
- III. A Visit to Mt. Hamilton.
- IV. History of the Lick Observatory.
- V. Description of the Building.
- VI. Description of the Instruments.
- VII. The Work of the Observatory.
- VIII. Telescopes.
- IX. Poem: To the Unmounted Lens.
- X. Astronomical Photography.
- XI. Clocks and Time-Keeping.
- XII. The Principal Observatories of the World.

A great deal of interesting information is thus afforded besides that which relates altogether to the Lick telescope. We will fill orders for the "Hand-book of the Lick Observatory" by mail at 80 cents per copy.

We feel a deep and solemn sympathy for the Rev. Mr. Sweeney, of Oakland. Through mistaken zeal for the cause of Christ, he has saddled himself and his paper, the Christian Independent, with that great religious bloviator, the Rev. Clark Braden. Besides committing himself to a defense of Braden, Mr. Sweeney yields seven or eight columns of the paper to the same object. One article discusses the recent disturbance in Oakland, in which Comstock's agent, Bennett, participated, and contains numerous misstatements in regard to that matter. It also says that Braden drove B. F. Underwood from the lecture field, and forced him to take up journalism as a profession; that Charles Watts, W. S. Bell, C. B. Reynolds, C. W. Stewart, "J. W. Remsburg" (J. E.

Remsburg), and Robert G. Ingersoll have all taken water, and that no living Infidel dares to face his arguments or his "terrible sarcasm." The second article is a biography of Braden, pieced out with indorsements from numerous ministers and churches, and proves conclusively that the subject is the greatest man on earth. Both articles were undoubtedly written by Braden himself and contain his estimate of himself. We publish this week a few testimonials to the character of this same individual. If Mr. Sweeney will republish them, we will devote equal space to any testimonials he will furnish us concerning Braden. The reason why we feel for the Rev. Mr. Sweeney is because some day he will find out what kind of a man he has been harboring, and then he will want to kick himself.

THE National Defense Association, an organization formed to fight the inquisition as represented by Anthony Comstock's Vice Society, has recently had a hearing before the sub-Committee on Post-offices at Washington, in favor of the repeal of the laws which give Comstock his power over the American press. What the outcome of the agitation will be we cannot tell, but the Defense Association deserves the support of all who are in favor of a free and untrammelled press. A good way to render this support is to write at once (as we have done) to the Hon. T. A. Merriman, chairman of the sub-Committee on Post-offices and Post Roads, urging the repeal of these laws, or such a modification of them as will take the censorship of the press out of Comstock's hands. He has run the mails long enough. As T. C. Leland used to say, we are not in favor of God in the Constitution nor of the devil in the post-office.

THE greatest thing in Oakland at present is the Spiritualists' campmeeting on Lake Merritt. It opened last Sunday, fanned by the Pacific breeze, illumined by all the glory of California sunshine, and decorated with the perennial blossoms of Alameda county. There were as many as a thousand people on the grounds in the afternoon, and a whole tentfull sang Eliza Pittsinger's beautiful opening hymn to the tune of "Beulah Land."

O Golden Morn! Sweet Golden Morn!
We hail thy fair and perfect dawn,
When all the world, baptized with light,
Shall be an Eden pure and bright—
And every woe shall flee away
Before the Great Millennial Day!

Mr. Colville made an able address and won his first round of applause when he quoted Paine's sentiment, "The world is my country; to do good, my religion." Hundreds of people are camping there by the lake; and, in this world of labor, it would be hard to climb nearer to the summer-land than one may get by lying in the shade of the evergreens, gazing away over the water and the mountains, into the infinite blue, and hearing from the tent the "new millennial song in heavenly numbers roll along." The admission is only ten cents.

THE temperance crusaders of Keene, N. H., have brought about a disaster they did not expect. The three hotels of the city have closed their doors to the public. The proprietors say that if the enforcement of the law were in the hands of responsible persons they might be willing to comply with it, but owing to the unreliable character of those who have assumed the duty of spies and informers, they do not propose to longer render themselves liable to arrest for carrying on a legitimate business. The temperance people, at last accounts, were trying to compromise.

At the suggestion of R. D. Allen, secretary of the Silverton Secular Union, we have printed for the use of Oregon Liberals a petition to the legislature for the taxation of church property in that state. It will be found on another page. We have also printed it on blank sheets of paper, and copies may be had by addressing this office. Those who wish to pay for them may inclose postage at the rate of one cent per copy. Mr. Putnam will have this petition with him on his trip through Oregon, and will obtain signatures.

We do not specially object to the criticisms of Lois Waisbrooker upon the editors and patrons of this paper. Precept and advice are inevitable, and we sustain them with equanimity; but when Foundation Principles comes to us with leaves from FREETHOUGHT used as wrappers, we do not conceal that our feelings are injured.

THERE is no escaping the kindness of Mr. Vostrovsky, of San Jose. Having invited the subscriber to visit his home during the cherry season, and it so happening that the subscriber couldn't go to the cherries, Mr. Vostrovsky sends a box of cherries to the subscriber. This is hospitality tempered with philosophy.

It gives us pleasure to note that Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., has been elected president of the Manhattan Liberal Club. Dr. Foote and his worthy senior are among the most active and generous Liberals of this country and of the world.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The excursion to the coming Teachers' Convention will be one of the largest to cross the continent.—Ah Hin, the first Chinaman ever pensioned in the United States, was paid his first premium by Pension Agent Allen last Saturday. Hin received his injury while serving in a United States man-of-war.—Emperor Frederick of Germany, after improving very much in health, has suffered a slight relapse.—The Irish bishops have sent the pope a document acknowledging his right to interfere in matters of morality; and, as politics comes under that head, they receive his recent rescript with reverence.—The Rev. Mr. Spurgeon, of London, withdrew from the Baptist Union because it was too liberal on the hell question. Now he is about to initiate a movement for the secession of all who agree with him.—General Sheridan seems to have won a temporary victory over sickness, and is much better.—Judge Thurman's name is being urged for vice-president.—Ingersoll will nominate Gresham for president at the Republican convention.—The Northern California Exposition opened gloriously at Sacramento last Saturday in the new Exposition building. The display of products was large, and music and oratory made the occasion memorable. The exhibition will be permanent.—Gambling has been suppressed in Santa Barbara.—The commissioners decide to give the public advertising to the Examiner as having the largest circulation, about 52,000 per day.—The First African Methodist church of Oakland is enjoying a row. The congregation say the pastor's religion is behind the times, and the pastor avers that the congregation have "no religion nohow." Trouble accumulates.—Monsignor Bouland, a Catholic priest of New York, recently announced his intention of leaving the Roman church. The Catholics thereupon attacked his reputation, charging him with knavery and adultery; but the Episcopalians have examined his record and received him into their fold.—The trial of the medium, Madam Diss Debar, and her husband on a charge of conspiracy was begun at New York Monday.—The talk of Cleveland's renomination has already set the ghouls at work unearthing his private record. Of course, a "clergyman of unimpeachable veracity" vouches for the scandal.—Robert Lincoln has gone to Europe, perhaps to avoid being struck by vice-presidential lightning.—The testimony of the boys of St. Vincent's Catholic Orphan Asylum goes from bad to worse.—

Mr. Gladstone is said to be at work on another essay on Vaticanism.—Sometime this month Cardinal Gibbons and thirteen archbishops will meet in Baltimore to decide what attitude the Catholic church shall assume toward the Knights of Labor.—The Prohibition convention at Indianapolis nominated General Fiske, of New Jersey, for president of the United States.—The Post says: "The announcement that Colonel Ingersoll has consented to make the speech nominating Judge Gresham in the Chicago convention, and will take the stump if he is nominated, will strengthen the enthusiasm in favor of the candidate. Colonel Ingersoll has a just reputation as the most eloquent orator of America, with a wonderful power of swaying the feelings of men. His speech placing Blaine in nomination at the Cincinnati convention in 1876 was so powerful that the opponents of Blaine paid him the compliment of forcing an adjournment without taking a ballot. The 'Plumed Knight' has adhered to Blaine's name to this day from that speech. Leonard Swett was the man who has been expected to place Gresham's name before the convention, as, twenty-eight years ago, he placed Abraham Lincoln's name before the party's second convention. The augury would have been a happy one, for the Gresham movement is strikingly like the movement that resulted in Lincoln's nomination, and Swett himself is at the head of the Illinois bar. But he will hardly object to giving way to an orator of such fame as Colonel Ingersoll."—There will be no more hanging in New York after January 1, 1889. Death by electricity will be substituted.—The Mormon hierarchy is said to pay Mr. A. M. Gibson a salary of $10,000 a year to look after the interests of Zion at Washington.—The returns from the Oregon election last Monday are slow and uncertain, but a Republican victory is claimed.—The Democratic Convention nominated Cleveland.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

There exists in this country, having its headquarters at Pittsburgh, Pa., an ecclesiastical organization known as the National Reform or God-in-the-Constitution party, the object of which is expressed in the following resolution adopted at its first convention in 1874:

We propose such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as will suitably acknowledge Almighty God the author of the nation's existence and the ultimate source of its authority, Jesus Christ as its ruler, and the Bible as the supreme rule of its conduct, and thus indicate that this is a Christian nation; and place all Christian laws, institutions, and usages on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land.

An agent of this party, the Rev. J. L. McCartney, of Geneva, Pa., is now in San Francisco, and last Monday, by invitation, he addressed the Congregational ministers' meeting in the parlor of the Young Men's Christian Association building on Sutter street. About twenty reverend gentlemen and two reporters composed the audience. The Rev. Mr. McCartney, in his address, said that there were some distinctive Christian features in our government and laws—the appointment of Thanksgiving and fast days, that of chaplains to Congress and the state legislatures, etc.—but, unhappily, the name of God was not in the organic law of the land, nor was the Christian religion distinctly recognized in the Constitution. Taking advantage of this fact, he said, a powerful organization called the American Secular Union had arisen with the avowed object of eliminating all the existing Christian features of our government and making it wholly and entirely secular. Under the influence of this secularizing spirit, the Sabbath was more and more being desecrated and the word of God was excluded from the public schools in some cities and states of the union. The National Reform Association proposed to secure an amendment to the national Constitution recognizing the Lord Jesus Christ as the king of nations, and the word of God as the foundation of all righteous law. On this coast the Seventh Day Adventists had joined the Secular Union in opposing the objects of the National Reform League, and were publishing a paper in Oakland entirely devoted to this reprehensible object. The National Reform Association had six lecturers in the field to-day, and proposed to expend $25,000 the present year in spreading their views and organizing branch associations.

At the conclusion of the Rev. Mr. McCartney's discourse the subject was submitted to discussion, in the course of which it became evident that the speaker had not the undivided support of the audience.

The Rev. Dr. Holbrook said he did not see any occasion for the proposed amendment, nor how its passage could be accomplished.

The Rev. John Kimball favored the movement, but Rev. Mr. Nourse agreed with Dr. Holbrook that it was uncalled for. He did not believe such an amendment as that proposed could be carried through Congress. No other country had such perfect religious liberty as this, and it was a feature of which we might well be proud.

The Rev. Mr. Chamberlain thought the question a momentous one, and heartily favored the effort to Christianize the Constitution.

The Rev. Mr. Morris said the Christianized savages from the islands of the sea, if brought here, would be shocked at our Sabbath-breaking habits. He was glad that he was a member of the Prohibition party, which recognized God and the sanctity of the Sabbath.

The Rev. Mr. Monroe said he had been spending some time in Utah, where they believed in recognizing God in the Constitution, and had a union of church and state. He had not fallen in love with that condition of things.

The Rev. Dr. McCartney, in closing, said that the denomination of Covenanters, to which he belonged, forbade their members to vote under the present Godless United States Constitution, but some of their members would perhaps break over this rule, and vote for the Prohibition party, which had their unanimous sympathy.

In answer to the question whether there was any probability that the Catholic church would favor the National Reform movement, Dr. McCartney said he did not think there was.

On motion of the Rev. John Kimball a committee of three was appointed to draft resolutions on the subject presented, for action at the next meeting of the club.

CLARK BRADEN.

[We call the attention of the Rev. Geo. W. Sweeney, editor-in-chief of the Oakland Christian Independent, to the following compilation from the New York Truth Seeker of August 20, 1887.—Ed. FREETHOUGHT.]

As some of our readers do not know who Clark Braden is or why our lecturers refuse to debate with him, we present a few "testimonials" to his character which are calculated to enlighten them.

Some years ago the Campbellite or Disciple church, Perry, Ill., of which Mr. Braden was a member, issued an address to the Disciples of the country, repudiating him. The address contained the following:

We claim, therefore, that he imposed upon our ignorance in this matter when he sought and obtained our confidence and fellowship; and that consequently he is not, and never was, rightfully a member of this congregation. . . . Until Clark Braden sets himself right before the congregation for his conduct here, we must hold him an enemy of the church and to the cause which we plead, and as wholly unworthy of a place among us either as a member of the body or a preacher of the blessed gospel.

The Apostolic Times, a Campbellite paper, referring to one of Braden's pamphlets (they are all of the same character), said:

We do not hesitate to declare that the author of such a tract deserves to be not only censured, but excommunicated by the congregation to which he belongs, and repudiated by the entire brotherhood, unless he gives evidence of sincere repentance.

The Christian Review, another Campbellite paper, gave him the following notice:

In addition to the slanderous documents hurled like a firebrand before the public, Clark Braden's conduct has been such for some time past that the church has discarded him and disavowed any fellowship with him.

When he made his infamous attack on Colonel Ingersoll, the Christian Standard, the leading paper of his denomination, published a defense of Ingersoll, and refused to admit Braden's articles into its columns.

The Falls City (Neb.) Journal, from which Braden solicited a complimentary notice, gave him the following:

We personally know Clark Braden to be an unscrupulous liar. Braden is a liar by nature, and a charlatan by profession. He exhausted his resources for knavery in this state, and is no longer recognized by his own church in the East.

The Table Rock (Neb.) Argus testifies as follows:

From what we can learn of Mr. Braden, he is a scoundrel and a villain of the blackest dye. Christianity needs no such defenders as Clark Braden.

The Winfield (Kan.) Nonconformist says:

It is yet to be reported that Clark Braden was ever received in a community the second time, except in company of the officers with jewelry on his wrists.

The Rev. L. L. Luse, of Nebraska, says:

I have had business transactions with a large number of men in a great many different states—men of all characters and professions—but for pure meanness, unlimited trickery, uncalled for and foolish lying, the like of Clark Braden I have never known:

Clark Braden is an unfit man for any gentleman to associate with. He is a moral polecat.

WILBER, NEB. April 6, 1887.

MR. EDITOR: Friday of last week was a cold day for the Rev. Clark Braden. He and the Rev. L. L. Luse have been making Wilber their headquarters for settling a little unpleasantness existing between them for the past two or three years. First, Rev. Luse had Rev. Braden arrested for selling mortgaged property. Then Rev. Braden had Rev. Luse arrested for perjury. Then Rev. Luse, in a civil suit, obtained judgment against Rev. Braden for about $150, and seized Rev. Braden's grip-sack, or trunk, containing some old clothes, boots, and Braden's lectures, all of which were sold at sheriff's sale. Then Rev. Braden, on the oath of a Christian minister, had another warrant issued, and sent the sheriff all the way to Pennsylvania and had Rev. Luse again arrested for perjury. He was tried and acquitted, and at the instance of Rev. Luse, the sheriff seized Braden's overcoat to apply on a foresaid judgment; and Braden failed to prove himself a Christian by not even offering to give his other coat also.

H. KILGORE.

THE SILVERTON UNION.

The Silverton Secular Union will celebrate its first anniversary on Saturday, June 23, Mr. Putnam delivering the address. We expect to have a grand jubilee. Among those who are to assist on our programme on this blasphemous occasion, in addition to Mr. Putnam, are John T. Ford, Independence; J. T. McLeary, Stayton, and C. Beal, Portland, Or. These gentlemen are all progressive Liberals, outspoken in their views, intelligent, and a credit to our cause. We earnestly hope that every Liberal in Western Oregon, who reads the notice of our celebration, will make it a point to be present, and induce his friends to come.

Silverton is located on the line of the Oregonian Railroad, and efforts will be made to secure reduced rates to all who wish to come on that occasion. We wish to demonstrate to our Christian friends that the time has come when Infidels, so called, can get up celebrations and get out large, respectable, and intelligent audiences, who know how to appreciate good speaking and good music, all rendered by folks who are brave enough to deny the Jonah-whale yarn, and other Bible romances, and do not need the aid of a "sky pilot" to put on a long face and pronounce a dry benediction—without point or meaning—such as W. C. T. U. and Y. M. C. A. picnics are bored with.

The following brief sketch of the history of our organization may help to show the readers of FREETHOUGHT why the Silverton Secular Union deems itself of sufficient importance to make a public demonstration on the occasion of its first anniversary.

About one year ago some of the leading "doubters" of this place conceived the idea of organizing a Liberal society, and, learning through the Investigator and the Truth Seeker of Mr. Putnam's work in the early part of the year in California, a letter was addressed him and he was engaged for a series of three lectures, and his dates were duly advertised, June 22, 23, 24, 1887. In the mean time a live, wideawake committee of three was appointed to canvass the country round about Silverton, and urge every Liberal to be on hand and help to organize during the lectures. A grand "Liberal Rally" was advertised, and when the time came, every Liberal in the vicinity was on deck, and we organized with over one hundred members. We had succeeded far beyond our expectation.

The Christians were horrified at Putnam's "devilish work," but consoled themselves by assuring each other that the enthusiasm would all die down when "old Put" left.

They called in the Rev. Driver immediately after Mr. Putnam's departure, who, they thought, could soothe the turbulent waters. The Rev. Driver is well known as the leading Methodist preacher of this state, and, although challenged, would not meet Mr. Putnam in debate. But the enthusiasm created by Mr. Putnam did not die down, nor is it dead yet. For soon after he left we made up our minds to have a place to worship our God according to the dictates of our conscience.

We now boast of as fine a hall, for its size, as can be found in the state. We have it nicely furnished, beautiful stage, piano, etc., and when we get our library, and Mr. Heston to paint us a hell scene, the attractions at Silverton Freethought Hall will be varied and interesting. Our membership has increased to 120.

We hold regular meetings twice each month, first and third Sunday, and quite often have interesting lectures from parties abroad. Among those who have favored us with their services are Mrs. Dr. Lydia Hunt, Portland; O. P. Mason, Editor of Portland Northwest; C. Beal, Portland, and J. F. McLeary, Stayton, Or.

H. L. Green, of Freethinkers' Magazine; J. D. Shaw, of Independent Pulpit; Mr. Heston, the Truth Seeker cartoonist; Otto Wettstein, and Prof. D. G. Crow have each sent us words of cheer and a hearty expression of appreciation of our efforts to promote a great cause. The Union, in turn, appreciates the kind letters, and should the writers ever make a tour through Oregon, they will find the "latchstring outside" at Silverton.

The Union is also indebted to Professor Crow, Messrs. Harry Benham, and Fred Pope, all of Ft. Bayard, N. M., for valuable contributions to our Freethought Library. Also to Messrs. J. T. Ford and C. Beal for valuable assistance rendered, and to Mr. Wettstein for complying with the request to use a fac simile of his Freethought badge design as the motto for our hall. We had the same executed by a first-class artist, and it occupies the most conspicuous place in the hall—at the center of the arch over the stage front; so no one on entering the room is likely to mistake the place for a temple of the Bible God.

I will add that Christians here are not nearly so shy of our hall as they were at first, when they looked upon it as the abode of the devil; but it seems that, as usual, this god comes out first best, for he has already succeeded in getting them to taste the "forbidden fruit," and now they can be found quite plentiful at every gathering we have, notwithstanding declarations that they would "never be caught in such a wicked hole." They find the attractions will compare favorably with those in the church and that something of profit can be learned at our lectures. Furthermore, our Union has had the effect to put a dampener on church revivals the past year at this place. The Christian church sent East for a soul-saver, and got one of their best in the person of the Rev. Mr. Wade, of Kansas. He held the fort here for several weeks, but his dirt didn't pan out. He only saved three or four souls, and one of them, a woman, he snatched away from the Methodists. The others were children, but count just the same. He wasted enough gas and wind, if utilized, to run an electric light engine a whole winter, and the light he diffused was utterly worthless. It made a very fickle glare compared with the "light of reason." He is a gospel vender of the old school, preaching hell for the unbeliever. He illustrated the "broad and the narrow way" with large charts, and fully explained how infinitely hard is the route to eternal bliss and how few can ever get there. He preached from the "Moses wrote the Pentateuch" standpoint, perhaps not knowing that the average Silverton resident is better informed. People here are beginning to think that the yarns Moses is said to have started in regard to turning a whole country into lice and turning walking-sticks into live serpents got a trifle too stale before they were reduced to writing. Ditto concerning the stories about Christ and his miracles.

The minister concludes that this place is the "worst Infidel camp on the coast," and has given up his efforts to convert the Secular Union to Christ.

At Stayton the reverend gentleman was openly challenged to meet a representative of their Union in debate, but he declined, saying that public discussion with Infidels was out of his line, but assured the Union that the Christian people would soon have a "defender" on hand, when they would give us all the debate we wanted. This "defender" had made "Infidelity a life study," etc., and was endowed "with that pugnacious temperament (which, however, unfits him for pastoral duties and evangelical work) so essential to combat modern skepticism with," etc.

We are assured Mr. Putnam can get all he wants when he comes. Already the effluvia of Heston's "polecat" is in the air, so look out for fun.

R. D. ALLEN, Sec. S. S. U.

Silverton, Or., May 23, 1888.

FOR POUNDING THEIR PASTOR.

As murders and similar mirth-provoking matters are a glut in the news market of this modern Gomorrah, and as it is, as yet, an unusual Sunday morning diversion for leading members of a Christian congregation to pull their pastor out of his pulpit and attest their admiration by administering to him a severe thrashing, the filing of the petition in the circuit court Saturday morning amounted to almost as great a sensation as a ball game—baseball in particular. Not that a little corporeal discipline isn't frequently deserved by the pastors, but the "law of compensation" is generally out of joint, and we are liable to get what we don't deserve, and deserve many things we don't get. That's my experience.

The writer is at present officiating in a church where a pulpit used to be, and he approaches this subject with fear, trembling, and hope that this sort of sociability may not become vulgarly common, at least that the contagion of its example may not strike the members of the Chicago Secular Union as particularly deserving of emulation.

In this petition, the Rev. Leonard C. Koehler, pastor of St. Stephen's (we have a sort of family affection for this saint, even though he don't spell his name right) relates how the church and its other property, valued at $15,000, became involved, was foreclosed and finally repurchased with funds raised by the pastor of the German Reform church, which proves that if he isn't a reformer to any great extent, he is a successful rustler for filthy lucre. The $20,000 he secured from contributions was soon placed at the disposal of twelve of the wealthiest members of his church. Crowds flocked to hear him, but, as usual, with success came dissensions; they cropped out between the pastor and the twelve men who formed the trust (whose names I will not trust to your compositor), who are the defendants in this case. In spite of all protests these twelve men held office for six years consecutively. This clique concluded they could not "trust" the pastor, so they conspired to dismiss him and politely gave him the G. B. Koehler was not one of that kind, and the matter was settled by a vote of his congregation in his favor, and he thought the war was over.

We are told that Sunday morning, June 6, 1886, broke calm and clear. No spots were on the sun to give rise to suspicion of treachery. The robins sang merrily their lay, and the lake breeze broze just sufficient to lull the pastor into an angelic frame of mind as he walked toward the church. He felt at peace with all the world, and the world was at peace with him, as he blissfully stepped into his pulpit that bright Sabbath morn to dispense glad tidings to his people.

Alas! how could they do it? They ought to know they'd rue it. He was suddenly awakened from thoughts of loving kindness by the arch-conspirators of the religious trust. This man of God was, in the language of the petition, "actually seized by Hafer, Schedig, and others, while in the pulpit, and wickedly, unlawfully, violently, maliciously, and brutally dragged down and cruelly beaten." Mein Gott in himmel! "Can such things be," etc. I must pause to let my indignation evaporate—meanwhile I'll take a Teuton's consolation.

To resume the thread of my discourse. Rev. Leonard C. Koehler left his pastorate, which was very considerate, although a rather tardy, realization of an ugly fact—that they did not want him. One thing, however, sits badly on the stomach of the deposed pastor. It is that this self-same "trust" has remained in office ever since, notwithstanding that he claims that one hundred members of the congregation seceded and are sustaining Mr. Koehler in Grace church. He also claims that instead of paying the debts this trust have spent the money in riotous living for themselves; and for this he demands an accounting from the time he left the church, and that the money raised by him and wrongfully used be returned. He demands that the court admit the justice of his claim and that the money owed him be declared a lien on the property, which would make Leonard O. K., don't you C? We hope that this will not shake his faith in God, and that in future he will keep out of the courts.

Chicago, Ill.

E. A. STEVENS.

FREETHOUGHT AND PROHIBITION.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In your issue of May 26 is a paper by one "Jefferson" on the above subject. Now we do not know Mr. Jefferson. He is of the Freethought persuasion, so are we. He says a great many good things. His heart is in the right place, and his mind is full of reason and knowledge. We were much pleased with his article. Still, we do not reach his conclusion, nor can we accept much of his reasoning.

He is opposed to Prohibition. He regards it as a species of mental or moral despotism. He makes it akin to laws against heresy, blasphemy, or not going to church. He is opposed to it on that ground. He seems to think that a government that can say what a man shall eat and drink and wear may also declare what he shall think and believe.

Following up this idea, he makes some declarations about government that cannot be admitted. He says that government is not paternal; it is not moral; it is not educational; it cannot command good; it is simply to suppress crime; it is organized force, organized to resist force when force is criminal; it suppresses only actual crime; it cannot touch causes; it stops only the blows, but cannot touch the tempter; it is simply a police force. Vice may breed in its sight; murder be contrived in its hearing; it will only arrest the blow, or punish the murderer; it deals only with crime; it is force for order against force for disorder, and that is all. Your friend "Jefferson" is not alone in his notions. Most of our millionaires and monopolists are of the same opinion. Senator Stanford has expressed it repeatedly. He holds that government is not paternal; does not owe any man, woman, or child a living, education, or anything but the equal opportunity to make it for themselves. And if, short of crime and actual felony, one man can cheat another out of his land, home, employment, labor, and bread, it is none of the business of government. Let the poor wretch die, and plunder become a vested right! This is the theory of a great many as to our government, and they desire that it should be so, and act as though it were so.

But it is not the fact. It is not the theory. It has never been the practice, and it never will be. No government can ever be maintained on such a basis. To simply part the combatants in a fight, and go no further; to simply hang the murderer, and do no more, would be no government at all.

The Constitution of the United States sets out that it is to secure liberty and defend independence. It is to secure life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. It is to coin money and regulate commerce, and to secure to each state a republican form of government.

Then each state has a constitution, authorizing the legislature to make laws to suppress and punish crime; to appoint courts to determine all manner of controversies; to regulate marriage, divorce, land tenure, wills, deeds, etc.; to educate the children; to care for orphans, the sick, aged, helpless, and indigent; to suppress nuisance, to repel plague; to suppress indecency; to prohibit all natural crimes; to declare laws and rules, and make it a crime not to obey them; to regulate all dangers, as poisons, traps, pitfalls, and lurking evils; to guard children and females, and even man himself, from self-injury and destruction; and to restrain and punish, even when all the parties are more than willing to break the law. It is a crime to see any human being die by his own act, and not make an effort to save.

Nay, it is held by most to be a sacred duty of the government to see that all the children of the land should be educated to usefulness and honor, and secured in some employment that will yield a decent subsistence.

This is paternal government indeed. And this is our government, in theory and practice. Look on this list of ours, and read those of your friend "Jefferson," and you will find a wide difference. Under this paternal government would Prohibition be an unlawful stretch of power? We believe not. Should the majority be convinced that Prohibition alone can abate the evils of intoxication, we believe the law would be constitutional. As to minors, and all persons lacking discretion to keep sober, we believe it to be wise and right. As to all others, the question is more serious.

Then comes the statement that a government that may declare something a crime which is not naturally a crime, and then punish it, or prohibit it, may declare Freethought a crime, heresy a crime, and kissing your wife and baby on Sunday a crime.

Friend "Jefferson" is right, but for one thing—the men who made our government foresaw this point. They knew that the mind of man should be entirely free, and they provided that it should be so. They state in so many words: That government should establish no religion, favor no religion, suppress no religion, discriminate for or against no religion. This meets friend "Jefferson," point blank. This is why Prohibition might be enacted, and yet heresy cannot be condemned.

Yours as ever, H. L. K.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary . . . . . 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
CHARLES ECKHARD, Treasurer . . . . . 28 Lafayette place, New York
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com. . . . . 120 Lexington ave., New York
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com. . . . . 106 So. Halsted st., Chicago

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	Harry Hoover,	S. W. Devenbaugh,
Courtlandt Palmer,	Charles B. Reynolds,	Wm. Algie,
T. B. Wakeman,	Prof. Ch. Orchardson,	Ronan Staley,
James Parton,	L. K. Washburn,	H. P. Mason,
J. D. Shaw,	W. S. Bell,	N. D. Goodell,
W. F. Jamieson,	Mattie A. Freeman,	D. W. Smith,
Charles Watts,	M. M. Secor,	Jas. Wardwell,
John E. Remsburg,	Otto Wettstein,	J. W. Black,
Horace Seaver,	Wm. Redfield,	Thos. J. Truss.
Mattie P. Krekel,

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

Hon. M. M. Secor, Racine, Wis. . . . .	$25.00
James S. Smith, Hudson, N. Y. . . . .	15.00
W. H. Pepper, Petaluma, Cal. . . . .	10.00
Otto Wettstein, Rochelle, Ill. (Badges). . . . .	10.00
Fayette County (Iowa) Secular Union . . . . .	10.00
W. P. Brooks, M. D., Helena, Neb., fifty pamphlets
Jas. Lafferty, Banner, Idaho. . . . .	5.00
Wm. Phillips, Algonquin, Ill. . . . .	5.00
A. F. McMillan, Wamego, Kan. . . . .	5.75
Wimibold Boerner, Chicago. . . . .	5.00
Anaheim (California) charter fee. . . . .	5.00
San Jose, " . . . . .	5.00
Charter for St. Louis, per I. H. Lee. . . . .	5.00
Thos. Knight, Ceresco, Mich. . . . .	2.00
Mr. and Mrs. Lake, Garrettsville, Ohio. . . . .	3.00
P. B. Bosworth, Marsailles, Ill. . . . .	1.00

At the head of the "Roll of Honor" is the executive of the beautiful city of Racine, who takes a life membership. May he add as much life to Liberalism as he does to the city of his adoption. Your readers are somewhat familiar with him, owing to the recent article on a "Freethought Mayor."

James A. Smith, of Hudson, N. Y., joins our glorious company, adding $15 to a previous remittance of $10, and a life certificate is forwarded. It's a good way to begin new life without being born again. May it be a pleasant, and "long, long life" to Brother Smith, for he and Leonard Geiger have everlastingly aroused that Sleepy Hollow region, giving no rest to the Rip Van Winkles of orthodoxy, and have nobly sustained the battle for Universal Mental Liberty in their efforts to obliterate (by lectures and literature) the last trace of the appalling nightmare which superstition has cast over humanity. To them it is a labor of love to straighten out the furrows from human brows, by presenting the absurdity of the dogmas and creeds by which people have been held in worse than physical bondage; to replace moans by ripples of laughter; to let the light of reason, the joy of love, and human kindness assert themselves where ignorance and hypocrisy formerly held undisputed sway. For their grand, self-imposed labor, we exclaim, All hail, ye men of Hudson!

From Petaluma, California, W. H. Pepper, the oldest nurseryman in that region of luscious fruits and fragrant flowers, forwards $10 as his contribution to the campaign fund. From a comparatively barren region, such men have made the face of nature smile, and now the aim of Brother Pepper is, doubtless, that humanity shall have a similar legacy in the undisturbed enjoyment of those glorious advantages which that salubrious region possesses; that priestcraft shall not blight or stunt the onward march of mental progress. Your stimulant is quite seasonable, Brother Pepper.

"And thou, Rochelle, our own Rochelle, Proud city of" our Wettstein.

For were it not for Wettstein who, among Liberals at any rate, would know of Rochelle, Illinois, and who is so ignorant that has not heard of the beautiful Freethought Badgepin he has designed? Rochelle, through Brother Wettstein, has become as famous for his gems of intellect and his beautiful jewels of adornment as the city which succored the Huguenots and which Macaulay has immortalized. O to Wettstein, in forwarding Brother Lafferty's donation, sends $15 worth of badgepins for the good of the cause—$10 for the American Secular Union, and $5 for the Chicago society. We shall dispose of those for currency as soon as possible, and hereby send the thanks of the Chicago society and the National to the philosopher of Northern Illinois. We see Brother Wettstein has had some brilliant articles in the Chicago papers recently.

Fayette county (Iowa) Secular Union held its annual meeting May 24, at which the pledge of $10 made by Vice-President Redfield at the congress was approved and paid. The Fayette County Secularists are a splendid company, and Messrs. Redfield, Alex Risk, and Daniel Davis all have contributed generously, and wish the next congress could be held in Chicago. J. S. Brewer has just been elected president of their society, with his sturdy band of workers to sustain him—vice-president, Thomas Keeper; corresponding secretary, Luther Thompson; treasurer, Wm. Redfield; committee on arrangements, Alex Risk, Daniel Davis, John Pember, J. E. Krost, and Dr. Mattoon.

W. P. Brooks, M. D., of Helena, Nebraska, feels deeply interested in the success of the American Secular Union, and manifests it by forwarding fifty copies of his pamphlet just published (to be sold for the benefit of the fund), entitled "Hard Times and the Way Out." Of the pamphlet Mrs. Freeman has this to say:

That Dr. Brooks has succeeded in marshalling a formidable array of facts in support of the "government's right to issue full legal tender money" will not be denied by the most bigoted of his hard-pan opponents. He quotes the New York Tribune as saying: "The time is near when they (the banks) will find themselves compelled to act strongly. Meanwhile a very good thing has been done. The machinery is now furnished by which in any emergency the financial corporations of the East can act together in a single day's notice with such power that no act of Congress can overcome or resist their decision." From this, and many similar illustrations, the doctor argues "that the people are helpless in the hands of the moneyed power, the boasted Republic at the feet of Shylock." As the proceeds from the sale of these pamphlets are to be given to the Union, it is to be hoped that those interested in the poverty of the people will order it from the secretary at once.

James Lafferty is the "banner" Liberal of the town of that name, in Idaho, and he proposes to help the American idea to be planted in that bright and prosperous land. We noticed that he was also sending an order to Wettstein for a gold watch. Nothing like patronizing a friend of Freethought. You will get your money's worth.

Brother Phillips, of Algonquin, Illinois, who attended the last congress, forwards $5 to redeem his pledge, and words of good will for the cause. Wish we could meet him at the next congress, as he is a wideawake and thoroughgoing friend of mental freedom.

A. T. McMillan, of Wamego, sends the above sum for an annual membership and some leaflets to enlighten the hide-bound people in this section. Brother McMillan is, we see, chief commander of the Knights of Pythias, a person of prominence, of standing and integrity.

Our old-time friend Wimibold Boerner, a member of the home society, proprietor of the Illinois wire works, hands us his pledge made at the last congress. Brother Boerner is an uncompromising Freehinker, a social reformer, an inventor, a scientific and philosophical thinker. For nearly twelve years he has been working to perfect a new motive power out of atmospheric air pressure. He has spent a great deal of time, study, and money on this matter, ever looking forward to its realization, although he does not purpose to neglect too much present requirements, for a mere possibility. It is to be hoped his idea will yet prove a benefit to himself and the world.

From Mrs. K. Parker, of Anaheim, and Mrs. R. H. Schwartz, of San Jose, California, we have received charter fees, notice of which has already been given.

Brother I. S. Lee has been doing hard work since he arrived in St. Louis, and has got the nucleus of a strong organization started, and a charter has been made out, the following persons subscribing $1 each for that purpose: Major C. S. Ebaugh, Prof. H. Schwarz, S. A. Rendl, a college tutor, Prof. G. Bamcelli, and our old friend Mrs. Stella Rendl, now teacher. Dr. Schwarz holds the enviable position of president of a medical college. Major Ebaugh is also president of the Humane Society, and the rest are gentlemen of culture and position.

Mr. and Mrs. Lake, of Garrettsville, Ohio, join in a donation and words of cheer to the secretary, for which he is exceedingly grateful.

The venerable and valiant secular soldier, Thomas Knight, of Ceresco, Michigan, though eighty-three years of age, still keeps up his opposition to the Campbellite control of his neighborhood by their quartette of churches. The valor of old Mr. Knight resembles that of the knights of old.

Friend Bosworth proposes to keep up the work he helped to inaugurate at the congress, and for that purpose sends for $1 worth of leaflets.

The Chicago Union wishes to extend its thanks to H. L. Green, of Buffalo, N. Y., editor and publisher of the Freethinker's Magazine, for his generous and timely donation of copies of his excellent magazine, together with a large number of Colonel Ingersoll's masterly Centennial Oration. E. A. STEVENS.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made these lecture appointments from June 1 to October 1. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Ashland.....Or.....	June.....3	Walla Walla, W. T.....	14
Talent.....".....	".....4	Union.....Or.....	15
Jacksonville....."	".....5, 6	Baker City....."	16
Myrtle Creek } .....	".....7-10	Boise City...Idaho.....	19
Roseburg } .....	".....11-19	Ogden.....Utah.....	21
Coos County....."	".....22-24	Morgan....."	22
Silverton....."	".....24, 25	Coalville....."	23
Stayton....."	".....27-28	Park City....."	25
Lebanon....."	".....June 30, July 1	Salt Lake City....."	26
Molalla....."	".....July.....4	Murray....."	27
Eagle Creek....."	".....5	Heber....."	28, 29
Sandy....."	".....6	Denver.....Col.....	Sept.....2
New Era....."	".....7-9	Seward.....Neb.....	5-6
McMinnville....."	".....10-11	Wahoo....."	7-8
McCoy and Ballston, Or.....	".....15	Fremont....."	9
Forest Grove Or....."	".....16-17	Omaha....."	10
Hillsboro....."	".....18	Creston.....Iowa.....	11
Portland....."	".....22, 29	Ottumwa....."	12
Astoria....."	".....24-27	Salem....."	13
Cathlamet.. W. T....."	".....19-20	West Union....."	16-17
Pasco, Waverly, Colfax, and	".....23	Dwight.....Ill.....	19-20
Spokane Falls, W. T. Aug. 1-12	".....23	Chicago....."	23
		Pittsburgh...Pa.....	30

E. C. WALKER's new paper, Fair Play, is at hand. It has four pages, well gotten up typographically and well printed, and will be furnished to subscribers at the rate of 75 cents per year. We do not exactly catch Brother Walker's central thought, though he appears to stand for liberty on all questions. It is a further problem to us how he can place the subscription so low. In our judgment the more subscribers he obtains the more money he will lose, unless labor and paper are much cheaper in Kansas than in California. But that is his business. Fair Play is bright and breezy and readable, and we wish it success.

A QUESTION FOR A RABBI

The Jewish Times, of this city, publishes a Sunday lecture by Rabbi Krauskoff, in which he says that Infidelity, by which he means Secularism, "must be able to point out the hospitals and asylums, the homes and the colleges, which its own wealthy Ingersollites have erected for the benefit of humanity, before they can afford to reprehend religion for its faults."

I would ask the rabbi if he has never heard of Girard College in Philadelphia, and whether any church-member on this coast has done one-half as much for the State University, and various asylums and homes, as the late James Lick, of this city? Both Girard and Lick were pronounced Secularists. H.

From Idaho.

To the Editors of Freethought:

MY DEAR FRIENDS: I was very glad when I first heard of your coming west to start a Liberal paper. You must have thought of Greeley's advice: "Young man, go west!" It was a step in the right direction, for there are a great many Freethinkers on this coast, and we must have a paper of our own.

Your FREETHOUGHT fills the bill; it is a little diamond; it is just what such men as Putnam and Macdonald could be expected to produce; it is good for a beginning.

Now, my dear friends (I call you so, although I have never seen nor met you, but I know you through the good old Truth Seeker), if all the Liberals on this coast feel like myself, it will not be two years till we will make your paper as big, and the circulation as large, as that of the Truth Seeker.

Last Sunday I concluded to start out and see what I could do for the infant. I dotted down a number of names who, I felt, probably would take the little stranger into their house; out of that number of names I succeeded in getting eight real subscribers who paid down for the paper at once. The names and cash accompany this.

Nothing would have pleased me more than to have joined Mr. Schou's club of the $100, but times are hard and money scarce. I have sold no cattle for three years. For all that, count on me. I will stay with FREETHOUGHT as long as it stays with me, and I think now I will compete for the celebrated corner lot. You will leave my subscription open for additional names, will you?

Yours most affectionately,
Salmon City, Idaho, May 31, 1888.

L. C. GEERTSON.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

When I wrote you last I had just finished my lectures at Skamockawa. I boarded the steamer for Cathlamet, Waukiakum Co., Wash. Ter., where, I arrived in a drizzling rainstorm. I found my lectures well advertised and hall engaged by my friends Mr. and Mrs. Albert.

Cathlamet is one of the most beautiful spots on the mighty Columbia for a home or to build a city. The town site is a level table land, perhaps a hundred feet above the river, with running springs in nearly every man's dooryard, while the bluffs and mountains rise thousands of feet high just behind, covered with their immense forests of fir, cedar, hemlock, and spruce. The immense salmon cannery, and fishing boats, and numerous islands covered with timber, serve to make this future city of the lower Columbia a scene for the painter's pencil.

We gave two lectures here to small but attentive audience. These fishermen and lumbermen are ready for strong radical thought and there is very little religious "slush" among them. Mr. A. Birney worked to make the lectures a success, and gave us the use of his fine large hall, all lighted, free, besides attending the meetings and paying more than any other man. Mr. Albert and wife being away on business, of course failed to help swell the audience.

We found Mr. Sheppard, the merchant of the place, and family truly liberal in thought; also Henry Kaupp, a hard-working farmer, who lived five miles away in the forests and hills, a noble "Roman," Free-thinker, Dutchman, who has no use for Jesus's blood, but expects to save his children by education. He has but little school education, but has done a "power of thinking," consequently has no desire to get on to Heston's mercy seat and has no fears of his horned majesty, who was kicked out of heaven because he wanted to get a higher office. Mr. Kaupp is a true Liberal, and true to the instincts of his "Faderland," and has carved himself out a comfortable home in these valleys, covered with the heaviest timber on the continent.

We made our stay here short, because there was no proper hotel accommodations. We crossed over the river to Westport on the Oregon side, an old dead town and a rather fine location, very picturesque, only having one little fault, that of the river overflowing every June freshet and wetting things up by immersion.

We found a comfortable home here with Mrs. King, who keeps the only hotel in the "city," which is a model for a stopping-place for this far western neck of the woods.

I gave five lectures here, with audiences increasing every evening, who are liberal in all things, religion (they don't have any), cash, good feeling, prohibition, hospitality, etc.

I met here Mr. David West and daughters, Mrs. McGuire and family, D. Wests, Lester, also his father and mother, all radical and Infidels to the core. They have taken the Investigator for twenty years. In fact, I find all our Liberal papers taken all through this country wherever I go. Thank God, or "the other feller," that superstition is the under dog on this coast.

This town lost a large salmon cannery, fine saw mill, and a large part of the other buildings by a terrible fire a few years ago, but Comrade West has another fine mill nearly completed. Mr. West furnished me a large hall to lecture in, free, and nobly did his part to make our lectures a success. I think this little place will have a big future; at least the leaders here deserve it. Dairying, logging, and lumbering is the business of the people. Plenty of fine timber and government land yet back in the hills, awaiting the settler. This seems to be a splendid climate, at least in the summer time, with no end to the fruit, both wild and tame. Everybody seems to have good health and making a living easy, with no fear of God in their hearts, so I think "heaven is not just beyond," but not very far from Westport.

My next stopping-place was Clatskanie, Or.—up a tributary of the river called Clatskanie—a lumbering place, having three or four mills, two large stores, two hotels, and several dwellings. I met here with the kindest reception by Mr. and Mrs. Edgerton and many others, but had the school house locked on me; not for Christ's sake, but because one man chose to do the dog-in-the-manger act, and show a little petty soul, which is in no danger of being "damned," as it will surely get lost in the great round up, when Gabriel shall sound his blast. If he has any at all, it is so infinitesimally small that no notice will be taken of it whatever. The school house, neither ceiled nor plastered and only boxed up out of wide lumber, costing possibly $150, must not be injured by holding educational and scientific lectures. We need Brother Jasper out here in Clatskanie to teach this man that the world "do move."

I gave two lectures in the open air, upon the steps of the Edgerton House, hanging our gallery of heads and faces, skulls and crossbones, on the walls of the porch, to a large and kindly audience that "chipped in" a few nickels when the orthodox plate came around. I think they liked radical ideas, for they urged me to come again soon, and I should have a free hall next time. I measured their heads, at least some of them, with a tape line, and as usual found the same proportion of future senators, governors, presidents, generals, etc. I found Mr. Edgerton and wife, Mr. Gommel and wife, Mr. Merrill and wife, and several others ready for the dispensation of Science.

After the last lecture I boarded the steamer Manzanillo, lying at the wharf, and went to bed, as she was to leave at 4 in the morning. At 7 in the morning I was called to breakfast, and found we were out once more on the broad Columbia, which is nearly or quite two miles wide here.

Our next place of doing battle for the Lord will be Oak Point, W. T.
D. C. SEYMOUR.

A Hymn and a Collection.

Miss Eliza Bliss, of Rehoboth, Conn., invited an applicant for charity into her house the other day. While she was preparing food the tramp sang "Nearer, my God, to Thee," and at the same time stole the lady's pocketbook and $25 from the bureau drawer.—Chicago Tribune.

MOTHER: "And the serpent, as a punishment for tempting Eve, was made to crawl all the rest of his life." BOBBY: "Well, mamma, how did he get along before?"—Life.

To the Legislature of the State of Oregon:

The Constitution of our State provides that "no money shall be drawn from the treasury for the benefit of any religious or theological institution." The general principle of American Government is equality of all citizens before the law, regardless of their opinion on matters of religion. This, as Your Honorable Body are aware, involves the principle already acknowledged in theory, of the total separation of Church and State. But your petitioners would respectfully call your attention to the fact that, through the exemption of Church Property from taxation, Church and State are practically united. The failure of "religious and theological institutions" to bear their just share of the public burden is, for all purposes, equivalent to drawing money from the treasury for their benefit. We submit that this is unjust and unconstitutional, and we therefore pray that all laws exempting churches and other ecclesiastical property from taxation may be repealed.

NAME.

RESIDENCE.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walfs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History, of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 10th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenzel, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S.

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton. Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology. Price, 50 cents.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument MR. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)
ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7 jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13 50, $14 50; 5 ounce, $16 00; 6 ounce, $17 50. With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17, $18, $19 50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $1, being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24 50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch, open face, $7 less. Ladies' watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels, $22; 15 jewels, $28. In good second quality filled cases, $2 to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38. Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra. Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case. Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1, best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas, 50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12. Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free. BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Designer and Patentee of new FREETHOUGHT Badges in PINS and CHARMS—emblematical of the light and day of Freethought, Science, and Reason vs. the night and darkness of Superstition.—Exact size of cut and smaller, two-thirds size. Warranted solid gold, enameled in four colors. Most beautiful badge ever designed. Small, $2, $2 75, $3 50. Large, $3 to $5; with genuine diamond, $8, $10; and charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to
Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.
Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by
J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SIENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

GOD

IN THE # STATE

BY E. A. STEVENS,

SECRETARY OF THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAN FRANCISCO:
PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 KEARNY ST.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland; a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice. He writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" needed by all. Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the
Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 24.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JUNE 16, 1888

THE Rev. Vokey P. Chamberlain, having been dismissed by his Oakland congregation, will proceed at once to evangelize San Francisco. To that end he opened services last Sunday on New Montgomery street before a congregation of eight persons.

ROMAN CATHOLICS claim one-sixth of the population of the United States. That is to say, one in every six places the pope before the Constitution; and yet they are accounted as American citizens. There never was a greater mistake. They are aliens, acknowledging allegiance to a foreign power.

THE Christian Independent, a "primitive Christian" paper published in Oakland, deals with its readers in an offhand way. To one subscriber it says, "Stop so much soreheadedness and growling," and to all it gives the benediction, "Pay up or shut up." This brusque style is accounted for by the editor's confession that his great adversary is dyspepsia.

We are captivated by the reasoning powers of the Rev. Mr. Harcourt, of the Howard-street Methodist church. In his sermon last Sunday on the subject of "His Satanic Majesty" he argued, in effect, that the fact that Infidels disbelieve in a personal devil is proof of his existence; because it is the master wile of the devil to persuade humanity that there is no devil. If there were no devil, humanity would not be thus persuaded. The fact that they are thus persuaded proves the existence of a persuader; and that persuader is the devil. Nothing could be clearer.

THE San Francisco Evening Post has reduced its price to two cents per copy. This is progress. The idea of paying $18.25 per year for a paper, by the day, when it can be had a year for $4.80, by the month, is absurd. In order to make change the newsboys who sell the Post will be supplied with pennies. Of course those who object to copper coins will not take any change, but it may soon become the custom for these to have no nickel by them and to scrape up a couple of cents from the bottom of the pocket when it is desired to purchase a paper.

THERE is too much hocus-pocus introduced into practical questions in our law courts. The defense in the case of Madam Diss Debar, the New York medium, on trial for alleged fraud, warned the court to "beware lest it condemn a woman who, for all that man could know, might be a medium through whom the Infinite Being made his manifestations." A plea like that might not prove the accused to be a fraud, but it shows that the accused has a humbug for a lawyer.

JUDGE REARDON took it upon himself to say to a candidate for naturalization one day last week, "You are not an Anarchist, are you?" Give the God-in-the-Constitution party a little power and the question will be, "You are not a Freethinker, are you?" Judge Reardon's course shows that there are jurists not above that kind of discrimination.

THE Russian government gives $53,000 per year for the propagation of Greek Catholicism in this country. Though belonging to the diocese of Alaska, the Russo-Greek cathedral is in this city, and the fact that the services of the cathedral are conducted in an empty church indicates that the worshipers are also Alaskans, who do not find it convenient to attend. The people who perform the service have just had their salaries cut down fifty per cent by the archbishop.

NEWS AND NOTES.

From the broad waters, sparkling in the morning light, I say good-bye to the Golden Gate and the bright metropolis on the shining hills, where the mighty sea from the orient brings treasures to her fair feet. The rattling train carries me over the plains, and the six months' journey stretches afar with its unknown fortunes.

Where the banners are flying, and the music is sweeping, and the flowers in tender hands are borne to the graves of the martyrs of the Republic, I again find open for my pilgrim feet the hospitable mansion of N. D. Goodell. Again the wedding bells are ringing, and the fair daughter of the house enters the rose-crowned way where love makes light all toil, and hope paints its enchanting pictures. So life's romance mingles with the glory of the immortal dead.

I have again the pleasure of greeting Mr. and Mrs. Davies, of Brighton, who always lighten labor with cheerfulness, at the new William Tell House, where the daughter of Mrs. Davies presides with the genius of good cooking, and where the Liberal lecturer coming to the capital of the state will always have a hearty welcome.

I struck hands with Rufus Butterfield, staunch and faithful, whose mental activity is undiminished and who is a student and a philosopher after the toils of life and well-earned reward. He was once an ardent Spiritualist, and has tokens of the phenomena which are indeed surprising. His deep and earnest investigation of the matter under the most fortunate conditions has brought him to the conclusion that the manifestations originate from the spirits of the living and not of the dead, that there is the contact of mind with mind, and the projection of the mental power into one's environments. This affords at least a scientific basis of explanation, for we know that there are spirits of the living, and that the power of these spirits is not yet measured; but we do not know that there are spirits of the dead; and if an already known quantity can explain phenomena it is not according to the canons of logic to resort to an unknown quantity. I think Mr. Butterfield has struck the right lead, and something will come of it.

I guess that we can put Mr. Butterfield and Mr. Davies both on the roll of the one hundred, for they each gave five dollars to speed on the car of FREETHOUGHT. Such allies are an earnest of splendid victory. Mr. James Felter and Mr. Avery are also in the rank of Freethought, and their generous good-will lightens the heavy armor of campaign toil.

Friday night at ten o'clock, with the hearty hand-shake and earnest benediction of friend Goodell, I leave for Oregon. I curl up on the narrow seat, and find a quite comfortable repose until morning. Waking, I discover myself among the mighty hills, with Mt. Shasta looming at the top. It rained during the night and heavy clouds rolled along the summits. But the sun kept shooting his arrows from the white dawn, and the masses melted and disappeared, and as we went spinning through Shasta Valley the mountain, clear cut from base to peak, rose like a vast wave from off the plain, glittering with enormous sprays of snow. Over the Klamath river we pass to the Siskiyou range. Last year I crossed this by stage, and a wearisome journey it was until the crown of the hills was reached and the six-horse team went plunging down into the valley. Now the iron horse pulls slowly up. Round and round we go—over and across and zig-zag—through dark tunnels and by dizzy chasms, where if we fell the pieces could not be gathered up; climbing to the height of about ten thousand feet, and then the train glides like a serpent into the bosom of the lofty peaks, and descends into the broad valley, that shines like a palace in the evening sun; and from the farther edge beautiful Ashland greets the eye like a happy home, in the midst of bounteous harvest fields and orchards jeweled with myriad fruits.

The first one to greet me at the station was W. H. Breese, the dashing iconoclast, who never stops to think of consequences, but speaks the truth without fear or favor, and who stands by the flag no matter how thickly the shots may fall. Mrs. Breese was also there, and I was at once at home with these valiant friends. The good horses took us to Talent, I might almost say in "no time," and I spent Saturday night on this famous camping-ground, where the U. M. L. Hall towers white and triumphant, and flings its intellectual rays to the snowcapped mountains.

I greet the "Infidel schoolma'am," Miss Rosetta Waters, who, gentle as summer, is as unconquerable as the granite. A successful teacher in the public school, the Christians by the logic of a majority voted the Freethinker out, whereupon the undaunted woman opened a voluntary secular school of her own, which has been so well patronized that the public school has hauled its colors down, and the law of attraction has prevailed over the power of the sword. Mr. Booth, of Washington Territory, was also here, a veteran reformer and a welcome comrade. Close by are the Terrells, always ready to march on. Miss Effie Terrell provided the sinews of war for the campaign, and most successfully too.

Sunday morning, amid lowering skies and brilliant sunlight dashed with mist, in the glorious little hall, the first lecture in Rogue River Valley was given. All sorts of weather seemed to congregate to attend my steps in this valley. In the middle of the discourse a hailstorm came pouring down. At the close the clouds seem to be disappearing and the sky rayed in sapphire splendor, but just as we got ready to go to Ashland, again the rain came flooding down, without the least provocation, and baptized us all the way to Granite Hall. Friend Breese, who is always breezy, and has the backbone of the mountains and the perpetual music of the river, kept our heart alive with camp songs and martial strains. We didn't expect a baker's dozen at Ashland, but nearly a hundred were present afternoon and evening. The hall would have been packed if it had been pleasant weather. Captain Thomas Smith, a half-century soldier, introduced me. The audience was thoroughly appreciative, and, although it was the eve of election, could enjoy a discourse on Evolution and Creation.

Mr. Coolidge took me to his beautiful home. I wish I could paint this lovely spot—the mass of flowers, the evergreen trees, the tropical plants, the bright sward, forming a delightful scene. The orchards and vineyards are laden with fruit, and yet this land was once considered almost absolutely worthless. Mr. Coolidge crossed the southern desert twice with ox teams. He has had the fortunes of frontier life. He has worked his own way. He never trusted providence. He was a "born Infidel." He couldn't help it. It was in his blood and brain. In a vigorous old age reason still shines without a particle of superstition.

Friend Tozer is on hand, rain or shine. J. B. R. Hutchings was made captain of the campaign and did his duty nobly. Frank Meyers was the first to welcome the dripping pilgrim as he landed from the storm. Like the oak, he can wrestle with any tempest. I cannot enumerate all the friends I met at Ashland, who would not let any amount of rain or thunder break the ranks of Freethought: I. D. Fountain, Captain McCall, A. S. Hammond, Max Praecht—formerly of Cincinnati and New York, a co-worker with Vickers and A. K. Butts—A. T. Kyle, D. High, H. S. Evans, J. F. Strait, and others.

H. Casey, from the "Pinnacle of Piety," allows that I could convert him in one minute. The reason why is because he reads the Truth Seeker. It didn't take him a minute to subscribe for FREETHOUGHT, and he says he won't order his subscription stopped if every word don't exactly suit him. Mr. Casey has the reputation among the "saints" of being a very wicked man.

I had the pleasure of meeting Dr. Caldwell and Dr. Macauley, of the guard of Liberty, at Stayton, last year, who are not afraid of the shot and shell of orthodoxy.

I took dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Cordell, who dwell on the heights of the transcendental, but who also see the glory of the earthly paradise, and join hand with the Secular pilgrim.

So, mingling storm and sunburst, Ashland shines with the harvest gold amid its summer freshness. Beautiful are the green hills about it, the groves, the meadows, and the plains. The busy song is in the air—the music of progress. The rampart of the hills has been pierced by the wand of Science, and the stream of wealth rolls to this radiant valley.

Monday night we had a grand time at Talent. The hall was filled to overflowing. The storm-king for once went off to his gloomy palace and left the fair skies all to ourselves, which inspired us to talk of the "Dangers Ahead." All is not peace, and in the still air are the elements of destruction.

After the lecture there was music and dancing, and pleasure made strong the heart for toil. Not always can we climb the rugged heights. We must linger where flowers bloom, and then the work is grander. Uncle Sam Culver and Father Goddard, with seventy winters on their brow, in the midst of the happy round, danced what we used to called a "jig" down East, in the good old days of the fiddle, and the way they went at it was a delight to the lookers on. It was the melody of motion, and the grace of youthful fire. There was no infirmity in the quick and gallant step.

Postmaster Klum, who believes in reality and won't have any spirits in his philosophy, I found a genial comrade, and around his hospitable board was clear-eyed Science.

I broke communion bread with Mr. and Mrs. Dean just before my departure for the train. To visit their home of green and flowery scenes, where nature spreads her grand and lovely forms, is a refreshment to my busy path. These are friends to whom one can speak the heart's dear thought. Intellectual sympathy prevails. Mr. Dean is one of our foremost thinkers—refined, scholarly and brave. He is to carry the banner of the secular school this winter, and a better soldier never waved the colors. I found also Prof. J. H. Cook, stranded, as he says, upon the shores of life, incapable of expressing the noble aspiration of his being. Such is the tragedy of thought—a life of intellectual toil and no golden harvest at the end, but poverty and struggle still. But our good friend has done much for freedom and progress, and if hope is pale, memory shines brightly. Something has been done, and the star of the past cannot dim its lustre.

Henry Ammerman, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Robison, J. R. Robison, Mr. Truett, Mr. and Mrs. Horton, and others, are among the brotherhood of Talent. This is an advanced position, and all the powers of the church can't break our undaunted troop.

The rain and sunshine mingled still, and between the glittering drops I took my wandering way to Jacksonville. The storm king was victorious as the sun sank away into the gorgeous gloom of rolling clouds, and going to the court-house I was fairly submerged. I believe the clerk of the weather is a Baptist, and is bound to bring me into the fold by immersion, whether or no. However, I shall try to hold out. The court-house was comfortably filled after all, and the audience was appreciative. I was introduced by Mr. Langell, and spoke upon "The American Republic." There is a large Roman Catholic element in Jacksonville, an institution of the Sisters of Charity, and there is quite a conservative shadow, but in no place have I met a more cordial reception or more generous support.

I was glad to meet my friend, Mr. Granville Naylor, who pioneered my campaign last year at Medford, and who is a staunch ally.

P. Britt, of the church of Zwingle, where the snowcapped peaks of Switzerland "kiss high heaven," is a noble soldier of liberty indeed. Wednesday morning I climbed the hill where his mansion stands, embowered in roses and shrubbery save where the roof of glass gleams forth, beneath which he takes the "counterfeit presentment;" for our Infidel churchman is an artist, and on every wall are the pictures of "the human face divine," and lovely and sublime sceneries. There is not in the world a nobler view than from the lofty porch of Mr. Britt's residence. The wide valley of mingling grove and field, and meadow and mound, spreads for twenty miles away. The vast hills roll up on either side, green and shaggy. Mt. Pitt, fourteen thousand feet high, is seen like a shaft of marble. Table Rock, and beyond it Diamond Peak towers among palaces of white cloud, while the deep blue shines in the rainbow mists over the ample landscape. Here, where art and nature blend, the pilgrim of humanity can find food for hope, for the fair reality is like a dream.

The court-house was filled on the second evening, although it was rainy still. Half of the audience were ladies, and this shows that the spirit of "Men, Women, and Gods" is prevailing. Many miners were present, and they are a clear-thinking people. They don't find much theology in the earth and have very little use for "sky-pilots." They want the "hard-pan."

The Democratic Times gave good notices of the lectures, and the editor is a liberal-minded gentleman.

T. Cameron, of Uniontown, is a leading citizen of the valley, and, although on the ticket of the minority party, he came within an ace of going to the legislature, where he would do mighty good service for honest politics. He is a staunch, representative Free-thinker.

T. A. Newman, of Eagle Point, keeps the flag flying at the outpost, twenty miles off. I was glad to see and talk with this sturdy frontiersman.

James Herd, Max Muller, Thos. Kenney, Chris. Kretzer, G. Karewski, N. Ferleen, M. Caton, Jas. Elliott, Mr. and Mrs. H. Kelley, C. B. Rostel, H. Pape, R. S. Dunlap, J. B. Risley, John Miller, A. J. Cameron, etc., are among the friends of FREETHOUGHT, whose generous aid gives brightness to our toilsome journey.

Jacksonville is the county seat and is a handsome place. Although five miles from the railroad, it is quite a business centre. There are valuable mines in the neighborhood, and the mountain trade keeps things lively.

My campaign in Rogue River valley has been most encouraging, although it has rained every day. I have received warm greeting; friends are good and true, whether the skies bend fair or dark. Many subscriptions have been taken for FREETHOUGHT. There's no such word as fail. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

June 7, 1888.

CHRISTIANITY IN JAPAN.

A discussion is now being carried on in Japan by several eminent public persons respecting the advisability of adopting Christianity as the national religion. The arguments in favor of the movement are frank if not very sound. It is admitted that Christian dogmas are a bitter pill for an intelligent people to swallow, but the advocates hold that the after effects will be good. Mr. Fuka-Zawa, a well-known writer, champions Christianity. He confesses that he takes no personal interest whatever in religion and knows nothing of the teachings of Christianity, but he sees it is the creed of highly civilized nations. To him religion is only a garment to be put on and taken off at pleasure, but he thinks it prudent that Japan assume the same dress as that of her neighbors, with whom she desires to stand well.

Professor Toyma takes the medicinal view, and has published a pamphlet on the subject. He holds that Chinese ethics must be replaced by Christian ethics, and that the benefits to be derived from the introduction of Christianity are: First—The improvement of the mind. Second—A unit of sentiment and feeling leading to harmonious co-operation. Third—Furnishing a medium of intercourse between men and women.

Mr. Kabolat, president of the Imperial University, thinks that while it is not necessary to believe in Christianity, it may be a good thing to profess it for the sake of the moral teaching it contains. Among the educated religion is not needed, and he has a dislike for all religions, but for the ignorant who have given up their native creeds, Christianity may be better than nothing. President Kabolat is certainly not a flatterer.

On the other side is Mr. Sug Ura, described as a diligent student of philosophy. He says that he has especially remarked the lack of religious feeling and sentiment in his countrymen. The Japanese, he says, have no taste for religion whatever, and it is impossible that they should ever become a religious people. The youths of Japan, he argues, being free from the thralldom of creeds and free to act according to reason, are so far in advance of Europeans that instead of talking about adopting a foreign religion the Japanese should go abroad and preach their religion of reason to foreign countries.

The discussion develops the striking but not very surprising fact that those who know most about Christianity and its working in other countries are least enthusiastic in favor of its adoption in Japan. The Freethinker can suggest but one method to our Japanese brethren, namely, keep church and state separate, and leave the matter of religion to individual choice.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

In our last week's issue Mr. Putnam, in a personal letter to the readers, suggested that each should pay one dollar for what he termed a Gift Subscription, the paper to be sent one year, for that sum, to any address forwarded by a regular subscriber. We judge that this was a happy thought on the part of Mr. Putnam, as twelve Gift Subscriptions were received last Monday morning.

Between June 1 and June 13 the following persons have forwarded subscribers to FREETHOUGHT:

W. H. Pepper, Cal .....	1
J. Schur, W. T. ....	1
Lord A. Nelson, San Francisco .....	1
E. E. Mensch, N. M. ....	1
Thomas Lee, Cal .....	1
R. H. Nason, Cal. ....	1
Mrs. S. P. Bates, Cal. ....	1
W. S. Rodgers, Cal. ....	4
L. C. Geerston, Idaho. ....	8
A. H. Schou, Cal. ....	11
N. D. Goodell, Cal. ....	10
H. P. Stone, Cal. ....	10
S. P. Putnam. ....	26

Besides these, about a dozen have forwarded or handed in their subscriptions; others have rendered most gratifying encouragement by renewing before their time had expired; so that, altogether, nothing is quite so rare as a day in June.

Seventeen of the above subscribers are the result of Mr. Ranford Worthing's offer of a corner lot 50x100 feet, worth $300, in the city of San Diego, to the person obtaining the largest number of subscribers to FREETHOUGHT before May 1, 1889.

THE amount of religious barbarism developed by the late visit of the Liberal lecturer, Mr. L. K. Washburn, to New Brunswick is suprising to Californians. At Grand Manan, of that province, Mr. Washburn was made a target for eggs and other missiles, and logs were placed in the road over which he must travel in the night. Fortunately, he escaped with his life and unbroken limbs. A class of Christians calling themselves Sanctificationists were the assailants.

A DISPATCH printed in the London Daily News contains the information that the Hebrew Mortara child, kidnapped by Pope Pius IX. and reared a Catholic against his parents' wishes, is now a priest at Madrid, Spain.

A PORTION of Colonel Ingersoll's reply to Gladstone is given in this issue of FREETHOUGHT. The article is copyrighted by the publisher, and we are not, therefore, permitted, under the law, to reprint it entire.

THE first fruits of the Gift Subscription method proposed by Mr. Putnam last week were brought in bright and early Monday morning by our colored brother, Lord A. Nelson, being two four-bit pieces and the name of a subscriber. The colored troops fought nobly in the late war.

CHARLES WATTS, editor of the Secular Review, 31 Adelaide street East, Toronto, Ont., says that "the new venture in California bids fair to become an efficient exponent of Liberalism in the West." The name of the new venture is FREETHOUGHT, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, California.

A MERCHANT of this city, S. G. Sresovitch, sued the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company for $730 worth of chestnuts that were frozen, and therefore rendered worthless, while in charge of the defendants. The defense sets up the plea that cold weather is a dispensation of providence, who has been pleased to freeze Mr. Sresovitch's chestnuts, and that the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad Company cannot be held responsible for the acts of God. This shifting the blame for carelessness upon some party or parties whose whereabouts are unknown, is a chestnut a trifle less valuable than Mr. Sresovitch's frozen ones.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

General Sheridan and Dom Pedro are better. Emperor Frederick is worse.—Walt Whitman is reported dangerously ill at his home in Camden, N. J.—Fresno has had a $50,000 fire, destroying twenty-five buildings.—The delegates to the Republican convention at Chicago departed last Sunday. They had a special Pullman car and left in the best of spirits.—Owing to press of professional duties, Colonel Ingersoll will be unable to make his contemplated trip to California.—There is great rejoicing among the Democrats over the nomination of Cleveland and Thurman. The Republicans, in convention at Chicago, will soon name their candidate.—An illustrated Chinese paper has been started in New York.—President Cleveland has approved the act providing that pensions granted to widows of soldiers of the war of the Rebellion shall commence at the date of the death of their husbands.—The Cornell University at Ithaca, N. Y., announces a course of study in journalism, and the applications are numerous. It will be useful to young men who have never enjoyed the privilege of serving an apprenticeship in a printing-office.—It is announced that the thousands of Mormons in Southern Idaho will take the oath not to practice polygamy and will vote at the coming election. By this means they will take possession of the controlling vote.—A typographical error made the Prohibitionists vote for a "recorker" of conveyances in an Oregon town.—The steamer Etruria has cut down the passage across the Atlantic to 6 days 1 hour and 55 minutes.—The president has approved the act to increase the appropriation for a public building at Sacramento, and the act to amend the act to establish agricultural stations in connection with colleges.—Reverend James Freeman Clark, the well-known Unitarian divine, died at his home in Jamaica Plains, Mass., June 8, at the age of seventy-eight years.—The deaths in this city last week numbered 115 against 95 for the corresponding week last year.—Frank Pixley will publish in pamphlet form the truth about the Roman Catholic Orphan asylum at San Raphael.—There is a strike in the Argentine Republic. The government ordered the rates and contributions to the churches to be reduced, whereupon the clergy have closed the churches and ceased to ring the bells.—Ten thousand dollars will be spent in San Francisco celebrating the Fourth of July. Three thousand is appropriated from the city treasury and $7,000 will be raised by subscription.—The Methodist Conference has increased the time which a minister may stay over one flock to five years.—The Sacramento Bee of June 2 says, concerning the recent Presbyterian secession: "A special dispatch in to-day's Bee reveals a condition of asininity and disloyalty that nobody could expect to hear proclaimed in America. It is hardly necessary to say that the offensive combination comes from a body of religious fanatics, calling themselves the Synod of the reformed Presbyterians. This aggregation of pious imbeciles is in session at Pittsburg, and distinguished themselves this morning by denying allegiance to the United States, on the startling ground that the nation declines to proclaim Christ as its king. Nothing more treasonable and contemptible has been promulgated since the bitter acerbities of the war fired the treasonable hearts of the miserable copperheads of the North. Every one of these wheedling, puling drools ought to be banished from the country they contaminate. To what depth will not religious fanaticism drag men! It is enough to make the patriot rejoice that the Christ whom those simpering idiots are permitted to worship is not king of his country. It is not surprising that the idiots who gave utterances to such treasonable sentiments were stupid enough to declare their hostility to secret societies. There are asylums all over the land where driveling fools like these Reformed Presbyterians are kept under careful surveillance."—A fire destroyed $75,000 worth of property in Oakland Monday night at the corner of Broadway and Thirteenth street.—One alleged bogus medium named Hammond shot and seriously wounded another alleged bogus medium named Haley in this city last Monday.—The case of Madam Diss Debar, the New York medium went to the jury on the 11th.

COLONEL INGERSOLL TO MR. GLADSTONE.

Under no circumstances could I feel justified in taking advantage of the admissions that you have made as to the "errors," the "misfeasance," the "infirmities and the perversity" of the Christian church. It is perfectly apparent that churches, being only aggregations of people, contain the prejudice, the ignorance, the vices and the virtues of ordinary human beings. The perfect cannot be made out of the imperfect.

A man is not necessarily a great mathematician because he admits the correctness of the multiplication table. The best creed may be believed by the worst of the human race. Neither the crimes nor the virtues of the church tend to prove or disprove the supernatural origin of religion. The massacre of St. Bartholomew tends no more to establish the inspiration of the scriptures than the bombardment of Alexandria.

The truth is that what you call unbelief is only a higher and holier faith. Millions of men reject Christianity because of its cruelty. The Bible was never rejected by the cruel. It has been upheld by countless tyrants—by the dealers in human flesh—by the destroyers of nations—by the enemies of intelligence—by the stealers of babes and the whippers of women.

You are mistaken when you say that all "the faults of all the Christian bodies and subdivisions of bodies have been carefully raked together," in my Reply to Dr. Field, "and made part and parcel of the indictment against the divine scheme of salvation."

No thoughtful man pretends that any fault of any Christian body can be used as an argument against what you call the "divine scheme of redemption."

I find in your Remarks the frequent charge that I am guilty of making assertions and leaving them to stand without the assistance of argument or fact, and it may be proper, at this particular point, to inquire how you know that there is a "divine scheme of redemption."

My objections to this "divine scheme of redemption" are: First, that there is not the slightest evidence that it is divine; second, that it is not in any sense a "scheme," human or divine; and third, that it cannot, by any possibility, result in the redemption of a human being.

You admit that the "Christian churches have by their exag-gerations and shortcomings, and by their faults of conduct, contributed to bring about a condition of hostility to religious faith."

If one wishes to know the worst that man has done, all that power guided by cruelty can do, all the excuses that can be framed for the commission of every crime, the infinite difference that can exist between that which is professed and that which is practiced, the marvelous malignity of meekness, the arrogance of humility, and the savagery of what is known as "universal love," let him read the history of the Christian church.

What, I pray you, is the "heavenly treasure" in the keeping of your church? Is it a belief in an infinite God? That was believed thousands of years before the serpent tempted Eve. Is it the belief in the immortality of the soul? That is far older. Is it that man should treat his neighbor as himself? That is more ancient. What is the treasure in the keeping of the church? Let me tell you. It is this: That there is but one true religion—Christianity—and that all others are false; that the prophets, and Christs, and priests of all others have been and are impostors, or the victims of insanity; that the Bible is the one inspired book—the one authentic record of the words of God; that all men are naturally depraved and deserve to be punished with unspeakable torments forever; that there is only one path that leads to heaven, while countless highways lead to hell; that there is only one name under heaven by which a human being can be saved; that we must believe in the Lord Jesus Christ; that this life, with its few and fleeting years, fixes the fate of man; that the few will be saved and the many forever lost. This is "the heavenly treasure" within the keeping of your church.

And this "treasure" has been guarded by the cherubim of persecution, whose flaming swords were wet for many centuries with the best and bravest blood. It has been guarded by cunning, by hypocrisy, by mendacity, by honesty, by calumniating the generous, by maligning the good, by thumbscrews and racks, by charity and love, by robbery and assassination, by poison and fire, by the virtues of the ignorant and the vices of the learned, by the violence of mobs and the whirlwinds of war, by every hope and every fear, by every cruelty and every crime, and by all there is of the wild beast in the heart of man.

With great propriety it may be asked: In the keeping of which church is this "heavenly treasure"? Did the Catholics have it, and was it taken by Luther? Did Henry the VIII. seize it, and is it now in the keeping of the Church of England? Which of the warring sects in America has this treasure; or have we, in this country, only the "rust and canker"? Is it in an Episcopal church; that refuses to associate with a colored man for whom Christ died, and who is good enough for the society of the angelic host?

But wherever this "heavenly treasure" has been, about it have always hovered the Stympalian birds of superstition, thrusting their brazen beaks and claws deep into the flesh of honest men.

I am not satisfied with your statement that "the Christian receives as alms all whatsoever he receives at all." Is it true that man deserves only punishment? Does the man who makes the world better, who works and battles for the right, and dies for the good of his fellow-men, deserve nothing but pain and anguish? Is happiness a gift or a consequence? Is heaven only a well-conducted poorhouse? Are the angels in their high estate nothing but happy paupers? Must all the redeemed feel that they are in heaven simply because there was a miscarriage of justice? Will the lost be the only ones who will know that the right thing has been done, and will they alone appreciate the "ethical elements of religion"? Will they repeat the words that you have quoted: "Mercy and judgment are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other?" or will those words be spoken by the redeemed as they joyously contemplate the writhings of the lost?

No one will dispute "that in the discussion of important questions calmness and sobriety are essential." But solemnity need not be carried to the verge of mental paralysis. In the search for truth—that everything in nature seems to hide—man needs the assistance of all his faculties. All the senses should be awake. Humor should carry a torch, Wit should give its sudden light, Candor should hold the scales, Reason, the final arbiter, should put his royal stamp on every fact, and Memory, with a miser's care, should keep and guard the mental gold. The church has always despised the man of humor, hated laughter, and encouraged the lethargy of solemnity. It is not willing that the mind should subject its creed to every test of truth. It wishes to overawe. It does not say, "He that hath a mind to think let him think;" but, "He that hath ears to hear let him hear." The church has always abhorred wit—that is to say, it does not enjoy being struck by the lightning of the soul. The foundation of wit is logic, and it has always been the enemy of the supernatural, the solemn and absurd.

You express great regret that no one at the present day is able to write like Pascal. You admire his wit and tenderness, and the unique, brilliant, and fascinating manner in which he treated the profoundest and most complex themes. Sharing in your admiration and regret, I call your attention to what might be called one of his religious generalizations: "Disease is the natural state of a Christian." Certainly it cannot be said that I have ever mingled the profound and complex in a more fascinating manner.

If you will read again the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy, you will find how Jehovah, the compassionate, whose name is enshrined in so many hearts, threatened to use his power.

The Lord shall smite thee with a consumption, and with a fever, and with an inflammation, and with an extreme burning, and with the sword, and with blasting and mildew. And thy heaven that is over thy head shall be brass, and the earth that is under thee shall be iron. The Lord shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust. . . . And thy carcass shall be meat unto all fowls of the air and unto the beasts of the earth. . . . The Lord shall smite thee with madness and blindness. And thou shalt eat of the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and thy daughters. The tender and delicate woman among you, . . . her eye shall be evil . . . toward her young one and toward her children which she shall bear; for she shall eat them.

Should it be found that these curses were in fact uttered by the God of hell, and that the translators had made a mistake in attributing them to Jehovah, could you say that the sentiments expressed are inconsistent with the supposed character of the Infinite Fiend?

Another word as to Abraham:—You defend his willingness to kill his son because "the estimate of human life at the time was different"—because "the position of the father in the family was different; its members were regarded as in some sense his property;" and because "there is every reason to suppose that around Abraham in the 'land of Moriah' the practice of human sacrifice as an act of religion was in full vigor." Let us examine these three excuses: Was Jehovah justified in putting a low estimate on human life? Was he in earnest when he said "that whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed?" Did he pander to the barbarian view of the worthlessness of life? If the estimate of human life was low, what was the sacrifice worth?

You see clearly that the Hindoo mother, when she throws her babe into the Ganges at the command of her God, "sins against first principles;" but you excuse Abraham because he lived in the childhood of the race. Can Jehovah be excused because of his youth? Not satisfied with your explanation, your defenses and excuses, you take the ground that when Abraham said: "My son, God will provide a lamb for a burnt offering," he may have "believed implicitly that a way of rescue would be found for his son." In other words, that Abraham did not believe that he would be required to shed the blood of Isaac. So that, after all, the faith of Abraham consisted in "believing implicitly" that Jehovah was not in earnest.

If you are convinced that Moses and Darwin are in exact accord, will you be good enough to tell who, in your judgment, were the parents of Adam and Eve? Do you find in Darwin any theory that satisfactorily accounts for the "inspired fact" that a Rib, commencing with Monogonic Propagation—falling into halves by a contraction in the middle—reaching, after many ages of Evolution, the Amphigonic stage, and then, by a Survival of the Fittest, assisted by Natural Selection, moulded and modified by Environment, became at last the mother of the human race?

In my reply to Dr. Field I had asked: Why should God demand a sacrifice from man? Why should the infinite ask anything from the finite? Should the sun beg from the glow-worm, and should the momentary spark excite the envy of the source of light?

Upon which you remark "that if the infinite is to make no demands upon the finite, by parity of reasoning the great and strong should scarcely make them on the weak and small."

Can this be called reasoning? Why should the infinite demand a sacrifice from man? In the first place, the infinite is conditionless—the infinite cannot want—the infinite has. A conditioned being may want; but the gratification of a want involves a change of condition. If God be conditionless, he can have no wants—consequently, no human being can gratify the infinite.

But you insist that "if the infinite is to make no demands upon the finite, by parity of reasoning the great and strong should scarcely make them of the weak and small."

The great have wants. The strong are often in need, in peril, and the great and strong often need the services of the small and weak. It was the mouse that freed the lion. England is a great and powerful nation—yet she may need the assistance of the weakest of her citizens. The world is filled with illustrations.

The lack of logic is in this: The infinite cannot want anything; the strong and the great may, and as a fact always do. The great and the strong cannot help the infinite—they can help the small and the weak, and the small and the weak can often help the great and strong.

You ask: "Why, then, should the father make demands of love, obedience, and sacrifice from his young child?"

No sensible father ever demanded love from his child. Every civilized father knows that love rises like the perfume from a flower. You cannot command it by simple authority. It cannot obey. A father demands obedience from a child for the good of the child and for the good of himself. But suppose the father be infinite—why should the child sacrifice anything for him?

But it may be that you answer all these questions, all these difficulties, by admitting, as you have in your Remarks, "that these problems are insoluble by our understanding."

Why, then, do you accept them? Why do you defend that which you cannot understand? Why does your reason volunteer as a soldier under the flag of the incomprehensible?

How do you know "that they have been set down to work out their destiny?" If that was, and is, the purpose, then the being who settled the "destiny," and the means by which it was to be "worked out," is responsible for all that happens.

And is this the end of your argument, "That you are not able to explain the inequalities of adjustment between human beings?" Is the solution of this problem beyond your power? Does the Bible shed no light? Is the Christian in the presence of this question as dumb as the Agnostic? When the injustice of this world is so flagrant that you cannot harmonize that awful fact with the wisdom and goodness of an infinite God, do you not see that you have surrendered, or at least that you have raised a flag of truce beneath which your adversary accepts your final statement that you do not know and that your imagination is not sufficient to frame an excuse for God?

You say that "you have known a person who after studying the old classical or Olympian religion for a third part of a century, at length began to hope that he had some partial comprehension of it—some inkling of what is meant." You say this for the purpose of showing how impossible it is to understand the Bible. If it is so difficult, why do you call it a revelation? And yet, according to your creed, the man who does not understand the revelation and believe it, or does not believe it, whether he understands it or not, is to reap the harvest of everlasting pain. Ought not the revelation to be revealed?

You may make still another answer, and say that "the ancient Greeks were a race of perhaps unparalleled intellectual capacity, and that notwithstanding that, the most powerful mind of the Greek philosophy, that of Aristotle, had no clear conception of a personal existence in a future state?" May I be allowed to ask this simple question: Who has?

Are you urging an objection to the dogma of immortality, when you say that a race of unparalleled intellectual capacity had no confidence in it?

The dark continent of motive and desire has never been explored. In the brain, that wondrous world with one inhabitant, there are recesses dim and dark, treacherous sands and dangerous shores, where seeming sirens tempt and fade; streams that rise in unknown lands from hidden springs, strange seas with ebb and flow of tides, resistless billows urged by storms of flame, profound and awful depths hidden by mist of dreams, obscure and phantom realms where vague and fearful things are half revealed, jungles where passion's tigers crouch, and skies of cloud and blue where fancies fly with painted wings that dazzle and mislead; and the poor sovereign of this pictured world is led by old desires and ancient hates, and stained by crimes of many vanished years, and pushed by hands that long ago were dust, until he feels like some bewildered slave that Mockery has throned and crowned.

Science is the enemy of fear and credulity. It invites investigation, challenges the reason, stimulates inquiry, and welcomes the unbeliever. It seeks to give food and shelter and raiment, education and liberty, to the human race. It welcomes every fact and every truth. It has furnished a foundation for morals, a philosophy for the guidance of man. From all books it selects the good, and from all theories, the true. It seeks to civilize the human race by the cultivation of the intellect and heart. It refines through art, music, and the drama—giving voice and expression to every noble thought. The mysterious does not excite the feeling of worship, but the ambition to understand. It does not pray—it works. It does not answer inquiry with the malicious cry of "blasphemy." Its feelings are not hurt by contradiction, neither does it ask to be protected by law from the laughter of heretics. It has taught man that he cannot walk beyond the horizon—that the questions of origin and destiny cannot be answered—that an infinite personality cannot be comprehended by a finite being, and that the truth of any system of religion based on the supernatural cannot by any possibility be established—such a religion not being within the domain of evidence. And, above all, it teaches that all our duties are here—that all our obligations are to sentient beings; that intelligence, guided by kindness, is the highest possible wisdom; that "man believes not what he would, but what he can."

And after all, it may be that "to ride an unbroken horse with the reins thrown upon his neck"—as you charge me with doing—gives a greater variety of sensations, a keener delight, and a better prospect of winning the race than to sit solemnly astride of a dead one, in "a deep reverential calm," with the bridle firmly in your hand.—North American Review.

THE POPULAR SUNDAY.

Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, whose idiosyncrasies in the Senate have been a feature of that body for a year, is forward again with a bill embodying the most extremely ludicrous proposition advanced since the proposal of the member from Texas to pass a law against "blowing out the gas." Blair has introduced a bill "to constitute the federal government a moral police to prohibit not only work, but amusement and recreation on Sunday." Of course the bill can no more become a law than a camel can squeeze through the eye of a needle, but Blair is backed by a powerful ecclesiastical sentiment with a long following, embracing all the religious fanaticism in the country. Every day the church and the world are getting farther apart on the question of Sunday observance. The world is in the majority, however, and seems to be making progress very fast. The popular Sunday of the future, and of the present to a prominent extent, is not to be a day of straight-faced solemnity, nor of prayer, nor hymns, nor devotional piety. The Sunday is to be a day of rest, recreation, of innocent hilarity, of amusement, of joy, of all the things, conditions, and circumstances that go to make up the sum of human happiness. The divine purpose of the day will be better subserved if it shall make the world happier, and for one day in seven lift the load of life, rift the clouds, and let in a dozen hours of sunshine. Light and pleasure are what life most needs. We can conceive of no more fitting help to the men and women who toil unremittingly for six days than a seventh day for recreation and amusement. They will live longer and be healthier than if they pass the odd day in moody prayer, and we have no doubt that heaven itself is better pleased to see a romping multitude in the woods singing, chatting, and playing than with the doleful resonance of hymn or prayer. The churches are right enough and good enough, but they will never again be the end and aim of the Sunday.—Sacramento Bee.

LITERARY NOTES.

THE Popular Science Monthly, which is one of the best of its kind, numbers Dr. Felix Oswald, author of the "Bible of Nature," among its contributors.

THERE is a letter at this office addressed to Mr. Charles B. Reynolds. It is from New Castle, W. T. We do not know where Mr. Reynolds is.

WE are prepared to fill orders for the "Ingersoll-Field Discussion." Price 50 cents. Likewise of the speech of Ingersoll in the blasphemy trial. 25 cents.

PART VII. of "Saladin's" "Woman: Her Glory, Her Shame, and her God," is at hand, containing chapters xlviii to lv of the completed work. It is an exposure of the pretended chastity of priests, under cover of which they have in the past committed the worst immoralities.

THE London, England, Society for the abolition of Compulsory Vaccination publishes a monthly magazine called the Vaccination Inquirer and Health Review. The members of the society hold that there is no virtue in vaccination, and that its enforcement is an invasion of liberty. They have established a defense fund to pay the fines and costs of those who have vaccination forced upon them. The headquarters of the society is at 77 Atlantic Road, Bruxton, S. W.

THOSE interested in phonetic spelling and new things in the way of vowels and consonants will find entertainment and instruction in Prof. A. Melville Bell's pamphlet entitled "World-English, the Universal Language." Mr. Bell contends that English is the most simple and the most comprehensive language possible, its only drawback being the unphonetic and unscientific character of its spelling; and to correct this he has invented some characters to express all varieties of sound. While Mr. Bell has accomplished his object, we are free to say that the introduction of so large a number of "accented," or diacritically marked, letters is a serious obstacle to the acceptance of the proposed alphabet. Besides the nine marked letters, he gives us ten new characters, thus losing alphabetically something of what is gained phonetically. The introduction of superimposed dots and dashes and diæreses is not exactly in the direction of simplicity, and the effect is far from esthetic. The phonetic alphabet adopted by Alexander Longley in his Altruist has in this respect an advantage over Professor Bell's invention. No doubt our author is correct in his estimate of English as the best adapted to world-use as a written language, but there are some people who could never learn to speak it. The pamphlet is published by N. D. C. Hodges, 47 Lafayette Place, New York.

WE have received from the New York Truth Seeker Company seven new publications. They are as follows:

1. "The Universe Analyzed," by Col. John R. Kelso. The author of this book warns the reader at the outset that he is following no beaten track, but has boldly marked out a track of his own. He treats of, first, the Essential Elements of the Universe; second, the Systemic Arrangement of the Universe; third, the Formation and the Dissolution of Worlds and Systems; fourth, the Manifold Phenomena of the Various Worlds; and fifth, the Origin, the Evolution, and the Destiny of Man. The last chapter is the most interesting of the series. Astronomical problems and calculations are fascinating to many, but all are concerned with the origin, evolution, and destiny of the race: To illustrate the career of man, Colonel Kelso gives us what he terms the Arbor

Hominis, or human tree. According to this tree, man is not a descendant but a contemporary of the monkey. He grew up separately from the other animals. He is at the apex of the tree, the four branches of which ultimate in the dog, the chimpanzee, the orang outang, and the horse. The human or main branch subdivides into the five races, the Caucasian overtopping the others. The author holds that evolution is not a procession, but that "all the individuals of the race, except a few abnormal stragglers, march abreast, like an invading army, and cross at the same time the boundary that separates the lower kingdom from the higher." Those who do not cross with the rest are permanently left. Thus, as we might say, the monkey will never become a human being, the Ethiopian cannot change his nature to that of the Mongolian, and the Chinaman can never become an American citizen. Each branch of the tree is distinct. Colonel Kelso's book is certainly original, fascinating, and, above all, perfectly clear and comprehensible. If his teaching is correct (and we do not know whether it is or not) he has given our knowledge of evolution a vast accession. The price of the book is $1.

2. "The Bible of Nature," by Felix L. Oswald, M. D., in twenty chapters. This work takes up nearly all the important problems of life, and deals with them in the light of history, experience, and reason. The method is admirable and the treatment is characterized by clearness, originality, and good sense. The bane of this world, the author believes, is "otherworldliness," and to this he correctly traces about all the evils that trouble us. Those evils that otherworldliness has not originated, it has fostered and perpetuated. Dr. Oswald is a thorough scientist, but his specialty is those problems which directly affect the health, happiness, and liberty of the human race. In this, his chosen field, he has scarcely an equal. "The Bible of Nature," price $1.

3. "The Stage and the Pulpit." An interview with Col. R. G. Ingersoll, in which he gives his opinion of the comparative merits of the stage and the pulpit, of the Catholic church, of the trial of the Chicago Anarchists, and of other interesting things. Price, 5 cents. We venture the information that Colonel Ingersoll is a well-known and able writer.

4. "Materialism; Its History and Its Influence upon Society," by Dr. Louis Buchner. The conclusion here reached is that the result of Materialism is expressed in the motto which closes this pamphlet, "Liberty, education, and prosperity for all." Dr. Buchner is one of the ablest of the German scientists, and a thorough Freethinker. Price of "Materialism," 15 cents.

5. "Religious Problems," by L. K. Washburn. We do not know of any other man of his years who has written, delivered, and published so many good lectures as L. K. Washburn. Week after week he puts them forth from the platform, through the Investigator or the Truth Seeker, or in pamphlet form. Mr. Washburn is a rising man and a coming man, and he is getting there by hard work. The present pamphlet sells for 10 cents.

6. "An Outline of the French Revolution," by W. S. Bell. This is a republication of a pamphlet issued by D. M. Bennett. The French Revolution figures among the stock arguments of the clergy by the atrocities of which they seek to illustrate the effects of religious freedom. From this pamphlet the reader will learn that the evils of that period were the direct outcome of ecclesiastical oppression. Price 25 cents.

7. "Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," by T. E. Longshore. Ever since the Revised Version of the New Testament was issued Mr. Longshore has been going for the revisers and showing that they failed in the conscientious performance of their duty. The pamphlet at hand is one of his many able articles on that subject. By a study of the "Companion of the Revised New Testament" he makes the discovery that Jesus Christ is not the name of a man, but of, so to speak, a state of mind. The term has been clothed upon and personified by the church. Price 5 cents.

PARSON STARVEM—Brother Bobley, I'm grieved to see you coming out of a beer garden so soon after leaving church.

Bobley—Well, fact is, I felt uncommonly hungry after the strawberry sociable, and they have a jolly good lunch in here. —The Judge.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary..... 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
CHARLES ECKHARD, Treasurer..... 28 Lafayette place, New York
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com..... 120 Lexington ave., New York
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com..... 106 So. Halsted st., Chicago

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	Harry Hoover,	S. W. Devenbaugh,
Courtlandt Palmer,	Charles B. Reynolds,	Wm. Algie,
T. B. Wakeman,	Prof. Ch. Orchardson,	Roman Staley,
James Parton,	L. K. Washburn,	H. P. Mason,
J. D. Shaw,	W. S. Bell,	N. D. Goodell,
W. F. Jamieson,	Mattie A. Freeman,	D. W. Smith,
Charles Watts,	M. M. Secor,	Jas. Wardwell,
John E. Remsburg,	Otto Wettstein,	J. W. Black,
Horace Seaver,	Wm. Redfield,	Thos. J. Truss.
Mattie P. Krekel,

FREETHINKERS FROM FADERLAND.

Sunday, May 20, was the opening session of the Chicago German Freethought society, the North American Turner Bund. It will be a memorable session in their annals, as the most intellectual members were sent from every state, and almost all the territories, to decide, besides the regular business, whether they should become conservative reactionists or uphold a radical standard. To be explicit:

1. Whether the Bund should approve the course pursued by their official organ, the Turn Zeitung, for the past two years.

2. Whether they should identify themselves with a paper which sympathizes with Anarchists and denounced their hanging as judicial murders.

3. The Bund should not allow their organ to assail religion or monarchy, as the constitution left every one free.

It appeared that some Germans are as stupid as the readers of English Freethought papers who cannot discern between the advocate of Anarchy and one who demands justice even for his enemy—the Anarchists. Since the Haymarket tragedy the Turners have been considerably torn up, as August Spies was, a few years ago, the presiding officer of the Aurora Turn Verein, and four years ago a prominent delegate to the Bund.

Editor Boppe, as a matter of course, took exactly the same bold position as Macdonald of the Truth Seeker, and others who had reliable information. And the parallel is still more striking when it is shown that the Truth Seeker fought Anarchism the same as the Turn Zeitung. But when fear and terrorism closed the mouths of many and silenced their pens, Editor Boppe denounced the unfairness of their execution as murder.

President Starkloff, of St. Louis, made a strong, courageous address showing the injustice of the imputations heaped on the editor of the official organ.

The secretary's report showed a total membership of 29,147, an increase of 2,425, and urged special organization to fight the Prohibition party, such as personal liberty leagues. The election of both temporary and permanent offices demonstrated that the radicals were in a great majority, a result which the labors of Carl Plum helped materially to accomplish on his recent trip to California.

After a five hours' session of furious wrangling, Editor Boppe was sustained by a vote of three to one—421 to 158.

The next day the conservatives were mollified by adopting a resolution declaring the Turners favored liberty, but also stood for law and order.

During the Monday's session the sad announcement was made of the sudden death of Adelbert Kruger, a delegate from Dayton, Ohio, whose remains were viewed next day and escorted to the depot by the delegates.

Among the congratulations, letters, and dispatches was the following signed by the secretary:

The American Secular Union hereby sends greeting to its German compatriots, who first planted organization in this republic for the preservation of Freethought against insidious ecclesiastical encroachment. Though divided by language, we are one in purpose. May your labors be successful in elevating the standard of Freethought, so that it shall ever be recognized as the synonym for moral heroism, intellectual grandeur, and freedom universal.

The platform committee reported an important change, the negation of the long-standing resolution demanding the abolition of the United States Senate, which was adopted.

At the conclusion of the four days' session, President Lieber made the closing address, and the convention ended in apparent harmony.

The Germans are far ahead of the American Freethinkers—they comprehend the necessity and value of organization to maintain liberty of thought.

E. A. STEVENS.

THE NEXT LIBERAL OR SECULAR CONGRESS.

We have received a notice from E. A. Stevens, Esq., the secretary of the American Secular Union, that its next Congress will be held at Pittsburgh, Pa., in October. For several years this annual meeting has been held, and it is very desirable for many reasons, which will suggest themselves to our readers, that it should not be suffered to be neglected, but receive a generous and continued support for many years to come. The primary and immediate object of this Congress (as we understand it) is to organize the Secularists or Liberals of the United States (and also of Canada) into one general body in order that they may act in union and concert in maintaining, as a basis or platform of operation, the "Nine Demands of Liberalism."

Of the entire correctness of this platform as a basis for the formation of a Liberal, Secular, and constitutional party, which shall unite the rational or anti-theological element in its warfare against religious bigotry, intolerance, and superstition, there can be no question in the mind of any reflecting Liberal. Nor is it any the less self-evident that a general organization of the friends of this most excellent platform is imperatively needed now or immediately, to help its development and promotion. Never were there a couple of truer maxims than these, that "Eternal vigilance is the price of Liberty," and that "In union there is strength." Let these great truths never be forgotten, but always kept in remembrance and carried out on all occasions to the best of our ability.

We may learn one good lesson, at least, from our sectarian enemies—and that is, to follow their example in organizing for mutual strength, protection, and diffusion of our views. Why! just consider for a moment what they are about, and what we are doing, or rather what we are not doing. Every one of the little, petty, fanatical sects that swarm over the land as it is said the locusts did over Egypt (and to about the same purpose!) is organized and in working order. But we Liberals, who are really a large party, seem to prefer, as a party, to keep shady instead of coming to the front, and showing our hands, and standing up to be counted.

This ought not to be the case any longer; and as one step in the right direction, we hope that the Congress at Pittsburgh may be well attended, and prove a great success by its influence, talent, and numbers. This subject of organization is a very important and suggestive one, and we shall return to it again and often.—Investigator.

A LESSON FROM ABROAD.

The struggle now going on in the Netherlands upon the question of religious instruction in the public schools has, it seems to me, an important lesson in it for us in America, where a contest on the same point may soon be expected.

The avowed object of the conservative party there is to overturn the present Secular school system and introduce Christian instruction in the schools. The Liberal party, in favor of maintaining the Secular character of the schools inviolate, has, until recently, maintained its ascendancy and would have continued to do so but for a coalition of the conservatives with the clerical or Catholic party, who, as here, have established parochial schools of their own where religion is taught. By this strange union of Protestants and Catholics the conservatives have been successful in the late elections and have obtained a majority representation in the next House.

Now is not that move one that is very likely to be tried here? I notice that the National Reform Association, as it calls itself, which has for its object the Christianization of the United States Constitution and the forcing of religious reading and instruction into our public schools, has already made overtures to Roman Catholics indicating their desire for such an alliance. I note also that, for the first time, this association has sent an agent to this coast, Rev. J. L. McCartney, of Geneva College, Pa. Mr. McCartney addressed the Methodist ministers at their meeting last week Monday, and the Congregational clergymen at their meeting last Monday in the Y. M. C. A. parlor. He desires to form a branch of the association on this coast. All the more need of a Secular Union, and Freethought labor.

J.

FOR PRESIDENT: COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Why not? I believe that the time is ripe, and while our candidate may not be elected, we should bear in mind that all parties must make a beginning. Let him be nominated. If defeated at first, let us persevere. The third time we should win without doubt, and elect our president of the United States.

There are at least one million Liberals who would vote for Colonel Ingersoll. A great many would vote for him who neither subscribe for Liberal papers nor are known as workers in the cause, but nevertheless are out-and-out Liberals. If not successful in our first effort, it would at least kindle the flame, so that by the time we get ready to elect another president, four years hence, we would have shown the multitude that we have a torch around which all may gather; and when the good and eloquent colonel came among them personally, the opposition would be so small that his election might be assured.

While I would like to see him the candidate of the Republican party, I know that such an event cannot at present be looked for, as he would neither aspire to it, nor would he think for a moment of wrecking the chances of that party. I do not believe he would pull a single political wire to be the candidate of the Republicans. The Liberals themselves should nominate him, and vote as they think. I believe that to-day there exists no man better fitted for the position—none wiser, none clearer headed upon every question where statesmanship is required; no fairer judge of the relations of capital and labor, church and state, and all questions a knowledge of which would go to make up the capabilities of the best president this country ever had.

X. Y. Z.

San Francisco, June 9.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made these lecture appointments from June 1 to October 1. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Ashland.....Or.....June.....3	Walla Walla, W. T.....".....14
Talent.....".....".....4	Union.....Or.....".....15
Jacksonville.....".....".....5, 6	Baker City.....".....".....16
Myrtle Creek.....".....".....7-10	Boise City.....Idaho.....".....19
Roseburg.....".....".....".....".....	Ogden.....Utah.....".....21
Coos County.....".....".....11-19	Morgan.....".....".....22
Silverton.....".....".....22-24	Coalville.....".....".....23
Stayton.....".....".....24, 25	Park City.....".....".....25
Lebanon.....".....".....27-28	Salt Lake City.....".....".....26
Molalla.....".....June 30, July 1	Murray.....".....".....27
Eagle Creek.....".....July.....4	Heber.....".....".....28, 29
Sandy.....".....".....".....5	Denver.....Col.....Sept.....2
New Era.....".....".....".....6	Seward.....Neb.....".....5-6
McMinnville.....".....".....7-9	Wahoo.....".....".....7-8
McCoy and Ballston, Or.....".....10-11	Fremont.....".....".....9
Forest Grove Or.....".....".....15	Omaha.....".....".....10
Hillsboro.....".....".....16-17	Creston.....Iowa.....".....11
Portland.....".....".....".....18	Ottumwa.....".....".....12
Astoria.....".....".....22, 29	Salem.....".....".....13
Cathlamet, W. T.....".....24-27	West Union.....".....".....16-17
Pasco, Waverly, Colfax, and	Dwight.....Ill.....".....19-20
Spokane Falls, W. T. Aug. 1-12	Chicago.....".....".....23
	Pittsburgh.....Pa.....".....30

This instructive item we find in Dr. Foote's Health Monthly: "A faith cure healer at Salina, Kan., tried to cure a case of small-pox by the laying on of hands, and now the doctor and his patient are quarantined in a suburban blacksmith shop."

THE people in the Southern States have become so deeply interested in the subject of attracting settlers from abroad that camp meetings in that section are now called "heavenly immigration conventions."—Chicago News.

THE GIFT SUBSCRIPTIONS.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I think that Mr. Putnam has adopted a good plan in his letter of the 9th inst, in which he makes us all partners in the success or failure of FREETHOUGHT. I cannot do much, but I know I shall be none the poorer, and shall certainly feel a good deal better, if I do a little something to help. I feel a little mean in taking advantage of his extremely liberal offer to furnish the paper one year for one dollar, but it will enable me to get more readers for it than I could otherwise afford to get. Inclosed please find postal note for three dollars for three gift copies, to be sent to inclosed addresses.

T. A. MARTIN.

Stockton, June 11, 1888.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have just read Mr. Putnam's "Personal" in this week's paper, and have resolved to do at once what I have been thinking of doing for some time. I do not feel able to do very much, for I have five children to educate and provide for, and am only in very moderate circumstances; but I feel that FREETHOUGHT must be sustained, and that I should be doing myself and my family a far greater injustice by not doing a little to help, than I shall by giving five dollars to help sustain such a grand young paper as FREETHOUGHT. I therefore send you five names and five dollars for five "gift copies" for one year. I should be glad to do more, and cannot relieve my conscience by doing less. JOSEPH COOK.

San Jose, June 10, 1888.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I could not spare $20 to help your paper, but have resolved time and again when I have read the appeals of yourselves and others to Free-thinkers to do something to sustain the only purely Liberal journal on the Pacific Coast, that I would do something, and would at least get one more subscriber even if I had to pay for it myself. I have carelessly failed to do so until I read to-day Mr. Putnam's letter in the last issue, and I now send two names and two dollars for gift copies, instead of one, as I had intended. I don't believe there is a Liberal on this coast so poor that he cannot spare one dollar over and above his own subscription to help put the paper on its feet, and I should be ashamed for him if I knew he could and would not.

LIBERAL.

The San Francisco Lecture.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Under the above heading appears your report of the beginning of a movement having for its object the flinging aside of the scales of bigotry.

Sirs, I read it with some regrets, mixed with a little indignation. I regretted very much that Mr. Putnam merely "urged the necessity of organization." I regretted that it was only deemed necessary to prepare "for the next Paine celebration."

Now, Sirs, are we, or are we not, simply treading in the footsteps of Paine? I yield to no one in my respect and admiration for the Deist of other days, but I respectfully submit that Paine himself at this day, with the results of to-day's scientific research at his commands, would have been disgusted at the milkery-watery Freethought offered to the public, who wish to be able to give a "reason for the faith that is in them."

Organization, to be useful, must be definite. Having declared its objects, it must seek to achieve them; and surely in this, Freethinkers will not be behind the orthodox and superstitious Christian in whatever camp he may be found.

The recent lecture was not a success. Not one of every thousand in this city knew of it. Why was this? Had an organized society existed, justice to Mr. Putnam would have been rendered. As it was, a well reasoned address was delivered to a handful of people gathered at the feet of the lecturer.

Sirs, I contend that San Francisco contains the required elements of a successful Secular Society, and that we have no need to depend upon the adventitious aid that may be contained in the respected name of Paine.

We have to meet superstition in this city. It is rampant. It depends for its existence upon the most obscene and the most blood-thirsty book ever cudged out of the brain of man. It should be our duty to "destroy the wretch." Organization only can do this. With an organized society working week by week to gain converts, we should in a short time be able to engage, and keep fully employed, a lecturer in this city. We should be able to show the Christians, from whom proceed all the crimes and all the wretched misery, that Freethought alone contains all that is elevating, and all that can breathe into man the religion of humanity.

I send this note as an appeal to the Infidels of this coast. Unless a determined step is taken at this time, a golden opportunity is lost. In our day it may not return.

CLIFFORD DIX.

San Francisco.

An Enterprising Patron.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have just returned from my trip to Denver, which detained me over a month, and am happy to return to my San Juan home once more. I have purchased and will proceed to erect immediately a ten stamp mill on my property near Gladstone, nine miles from this place, up Cement Creek, but we cannot do without FREETHOUGHT to cheer us on to success. So you will find inclosed the balance of my yearly subscription.

Wishing you unbounded success, I remain most truly your friend, Silverton, Col.

PERRY FISHER.

The Will for the Deed.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Yours of June 2 at hand. You say my name has been left with you as a Liberal. You have been rightly informed. Though I have evolved, I was trained strictly in the straitjacket kind of churchism. I would like to take FREETHOUGHT, but I am taking the Truth Seeker, and have been for the last seven or eight years, and am taking three other papers, which is about all I can read, and all I can afford these hard times. If I had known of Mr. Putnam's lecture at Raymond, I would have been there sure. If ever I come to San Francisco I will come around and see what kind of fellows you are, though I know you both well, having read every line that either of you have written for the Truth Seeker for the last seven or eight years.

S. L. HOGAN.

Mariposa, Cal.

Back Again from the Valley.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I am uptown to-day for the first time in five weeks. I have been paying the penalty for disregarding the laws of nature. The doctors called it brain fever. I was told I could not live. I told them I was ready to go, and some of them insisted on having a clergyman come in and pray for my soul. He came and asked me if he should pray with me. I was so weak I could hardly open my eyes. I did not give consent to his coming. I asked him if he had faith in prayer. He said he had. I told him if he would move the bed from one side of the room to the other by prayer, he could pray for my soul. You should have seen the look he gave me. He called me a blasphemer and said I was too wicked to live. I gave him a good cussing and commenced mending, and am up and well to-day. I am going to work and will send you some of my first week's wages. I got more strength (spiritually) out of FREETHOUGHT and the Truth Seeker in my sickness than anything else. The cry has been, "Wait till Stalley gets near death, and you will see how his religion stands." I think I have proved it sound to the core.

Howard, Kan.

FRANK STALLSMITH.

JAMES PARTON is living in a quiet part of the picturesque old town of Newburyport. A writer in the Boston Post tells the story of how Parton, who was born in England sixty-six years ago, came to be the popular biographer of many eminent Americans: One day, while he was employed on the New York Home Journal, he dined at a restaurant with Mason Brothers, publishers, and the talk turned upon books. Parton happened to say, "What an interesting story could be made out of the life of Horace Greeley if a person could only get at the facts!" One of the publishers said, "Why don't you do it?" The young man replied that it would require an expensive journey and a year of labor, and that he could not afford it. A few days later the firm agreed to advance the money requisite, and the book was thus assured. Parton went from house to house in New Hampshire and Vermont, making inquiries. Thirty thousand copies of the work were sold, which yielded the author two thousand dollars above the cost of production. "Upon that most insufficient capital," the author said, "I had the temerity to set up in business as a book-maker."—Argonaut.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)
ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7 jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50. With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17, $18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4, being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies' watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels, $22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2 to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $33. Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra. Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case. Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1; best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas, 50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12. Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free. BEST WORK. Try me. For Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Designer and Patentee of new FREETHOUGHT Badge in PINS and CHARMS—emblematical of the light and day of Freethought, Science, and Reason vs. the night and darkness of Superstition.—Exact size of cut and smaller, two-thirds size. Warranted solid gold, enameled in four colors. Most beautiful badge ever designed. Small, $2, $2.75, $3.50. Larve, $3 to $5; with genuine diamond, $8, $10; and charms up to $23. Demand daily increasing.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to
Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.
Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by
J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

GOD

IN THE # STATE

By E. A. STEVENS,

SECRETARY OF THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAN FRANCISCO:
PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 KEARNY ST.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland; a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular READABLE because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. INSTRUCTIVE, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" VALUABLE to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. APPROVED by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. THOROUGH treatment of subjects especially important to young men. EVERYONE who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and A NEW FEATURE, Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the
Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1 25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Tributes. "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," "The Grant Banquet Toast" and "Little Harry Miller's Grave," printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing; four to any address for 50 cents, or either one for 15 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," and all the famous tributes, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, table-talks and day-to-day conversations of the author. Fine steel portrait and autograph facsimile. Price, in cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2 50.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

...IN THE...

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

...FOR...

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument MR. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenzel, Millman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 25.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 23, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal. as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JUNE 23, 1888

THE Congregational ministers of San Francisco last Monday tabled a resolution indorsing the National Reform or God-in-the-Constitution party. They are not quite ready for the Inquisition.

THE question now arises whether or not Mr. Gladstone will return to the attack upon the arguments of Colonel Ingersoll. In the previous case he went out for wool and came back shorn.

IN the steeple of a church up California street, a little way from this office, hangs a bell which sounds the alarm in case of fire. But why should it be rung when a good Catholic goes to his reward?

THE $200 check sent to the Fourth of July executive committee and the $100 check forwarded to the National Educational Association are double proof that the Brewers' Union believes that the young idea should be taught how to shoot.

THE one hundred and thirteenth anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill occurred on June 17. As it was Sunday the event was not celebrated on that day. Sunday was instituted by Constantine in the fourth century, and again, as Mr. Remsburg has said, a national holiday has been ignored and dishonored that the authority of a Roman cutthroat might be recognized and honored. It may be pertinently asked how long the cross is to displace the flag in the American republic.

THE News Letter takes to itself the credit of being a prophet because it said that the Irish would not disobey the papal rescript, and because it is now able to say:

"The pope is on top. After all their bluster about not taking their politics from Rome, the Irish are quietly submitting to the holy council's rescript, and already one of the most truculent of the so-called Nationalist bishops has served notice upon his flock that any adverse criticism of the rescript will be followed by excommunication."

It did not require the vision of a prophet to see this result. The pope owns nine-tenths of the Irish people, body and mind. But they are not alone in their mental serfdom, for half the religious world to-day is under the lash of the Italian boss, Pope Leo XIII. It is an unwelcome and melancholy fact that the minions of Rome are increasing and overwhelming us, but it is true, and they will elect the next president of the United States.

JUDGE JAMES G. MAGUIRE has published a book entitled "Ireland and the Pope," being "a brief narrative of papal intrigues against Irish liberty, from Adrian IV. to Leo XIII." The Weekly Star, in reviewing the work, is careful to say that "the book is not anti-religious nor anti-Catholic; it is written on Daniel O'Connell's principles—as much religion as you please from Rome, but no politics." We do not see, then, how the work can be very thorough in its treatment of the subject. The Roman Catholic superstition gives the pope his power over the people of Ireland, and he will hold that power as long as they hold the superstition. Make the Irish people Freethinkers, and the pope will send them no more rescripts. Furthermore, O'Connell's phrase, "As much religion as you please from Rome, but no politics," is destitute of good sense. Rome's religion is worse, if anything, than its politics, and a religious dictator is as great an impostor as a political one.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Roseburg is the seat of Douglas county, a pretty little place among the green hills; but six churches are there, and so I did not find my way altogether lovely. The Freethinkers of this place are in a kind of "masterly inactivity." They do nothing, because they think there is nothing to fear, and the path of evolution is smooth and bright. They are "out of the woods" and the rest of the world are bound to come sooner or later. However, I did not have to fight my battle all alone. Worthy allies are here. W. F. Benjamin, of the Plaindealer, the Republican newspaper of the county, and whose rooster was on the rampage as I struck the county, is a fair and square Freethinker, and is not afraid to show his colors like a man, and he aided effectually as a base of supplies.

The "mine host" of the McClellan House kept me in good bodily condition, and I advise all wandering pilgrims, whatever may be their mission, to locate in his vicinity. He can comfort the inner man.

Then there was my good friend, Engineer Wheeler, of Grant's Pass, strong as the oak, who will never say die even though the avalanche is right upon him. He can face death and go him one better, and "live to fight another day."

Then there was Frazier Ward, of Looking Glass, who will never go to the rear when the banners of Freethought are in the air.

Then there is Solomon Mendall and his wife. They walked twenty miles to hear the lectures, and they beat the Methodists all to pieces. There is not one of them that would walk twenty miles to hear a preacher. Mendall says he has been thirty-eight years in the church of Freethought, and he has never heard his kind of a gospel, and he was bound to do so or perish in the attempt. He was on hand. Just think of a woman walking twenty miles to hear a Freethought lecture. Where is the Methodist "woman in subjection" who will do that, even with the terrors of hell-fire to urge her faltering footsteps? Not one of them can beat the record of Freethought, although it is "go as you please."

Then there were Burke and Harper, of Anglo-Saxon blood, who came six miles to the bivouac of the Liberals, and Philip Damotta, and James Velzian, and others; and so orthodoxy did not have the best of it, and we held our own.

We gave three lectures. It was rainy all the time, and I have come to the conclusion to have a pair of "web-feet" in order to survive the flood. We had good audiences, expenses were paid, and I mean again to bring our forces into play and storm this conservative fort.

Long as the lamp holds out to burn,
There is a chance for the tide to turn.

That is the way we sing the old song.

My friend, Edward Cox, of Laird's Ranch, met me at Roseburg, and Monday early we started for our trip over the hills, not knowing by the way the rain poured down but that we would have to take a canoe part of the way. Our veteran friend and Liberal, Stephen Minard, was with us as far as Looking Glass. He has suffered a great loss, and his host of friends sympathize with him in his too common sorrow in this tragedy of life. He is an old settler in this country and one of the leading citizens. A few days ago, returning from a visit to his sons in Coos county, coming down the steep mountains his horses took fright by a sudden clap of thunder and plunged furiously down the declivity. At a sharp turn in the road the wagon was overturned, and Mrs. Minard was so seriously injured that she died in a few days. Mr. Minard was thrown twenty feet from the wagon, and was unconscious for an hour or two. The accident occurred miles from any habitation, and it was some time before Mr. Minard could obtain help for himself and wife. Amid these horrors of fate, what can one do except give the helping hand and the voice of sympathy? It is man to man alone that can give any comfort in these awful experiences. The heavens are cold and dumb, and there is no consolation in the blank skies. It is not in "the fatherhood of God," but in "the brotherhood of man," that the light appears by which we can find hope in the wreck of life's dearest joys.

From Looking Glass we press on. Friend Cox is one of those philosophical pioneers who never take anything amiss. He has hunted all over the hills, and neither lightning nor earthquakes could disturb his equanimity. I felt that I was all right, no matter if the windows of heaven did open and make things lively. A long day's journey we pass, and when evening's gold is streaming through the vast arcades of the forest, and the tumbling river, and mossy stones, and towering heights are bathed with brilliance, we come in the heart of the wilderness upon the "Half-way House," where friend Laird keeps open the hospitable door. All was cheerful here—the supper, the firelight, the pleasant company. Mrs. Laird received us with matronly grace. The fair forest maiden, Miss Emma, of one year ago, is absent, for the bridal wreath is on her brow. But there is a house full of children who make music and give me happy dreams.

There were Walter, Joseph Lane, John Haley—boys in whom the spirit of Freethought makes happiness. There was no cathedral here in the midst of the solemn woods, but humanity and joy. One was absent, alas! Carl Everett, a beautiful child, who heroically met the fate that is for us all, even before the morning dew had vanished. His father watched over him day and night for weeks, but the enemy could not be defeated. He was too strong, and the flowers now grow over the grave of the beloved child. Only with tears, only with hope born of affection, can we stand by the green temple of death and see over the flowery altar the white radiance of the eternal world, of which we know nothing, but believe all that love can make. Another child is on a bed of sickness. Friend Laird has had a trial that would shake the heart of the strongest man. All his family have been in danger, and the shadow of death has fallen. Deeply do we sympathize with his brave spirit; heroically has he borne the storm, and fronts life with undaunted courage. Only by our humanity, by noble fellowship, can we help our struggling band to meet the forces of destruction. No priest can give any hope. It is simply the heart of love that sustains in these dark hours.

Early on Tuesday morning the rain was pouring down. We prepared for all emergencies, and started off into the "endless woods." Our luck was good after a while. The blue sky appeared, and the glorious sunshine poured down into the green recesses of the forest, and with light hearts we went onward.

Half way from Laird's to Myrtle Point, we met James Laird himself, returning from Coquille, where he had been taking his sick boy. A hearty greeting I had from this true and noble ally, always ready to do his best for Freethought, and, like an oak, strong against the tempest. We halted and took our lunch together at midday.

Here I bade good-bye to my comrade Ed. Cox, and long shall I remember his gray team and good fellowship; and every time I come to Coos county, I shall look out for this genial companion.

Laird takes me on to Myrtle Point. Here we arrive at four o'clock. P. M. Lehmherr, the bishop of this domain, is ready to greet us—a bishop indeed of the glorious church of Freethought. His wife is Catholic, but gentle and true and humane, who shows how sweet religion is in spite of theological dogmas. Mrs. Miller and all the little children and Mrs. Dixon—daughters of the veteran—were there to welcome in the opening campaign of Coos county.

It was all that heart could wish, only that Brother Bender's cornet was in San Francisco, and its martial strains could not greet our ears, but the spirit of the genial music was with us nevertheless. There were flowers in beautiful array, presented by Mrs. Lat Wise, and in these we found the melody of the occasion. The hall was full and the opening of the campaign in Coos county was most auspicious.

Wednesday morning we came down the Coquille river. I am now at the Schroeders'—at Arago—at the store and the post-office, where people do congregate. This afternoon I lecture on "The American Republic."

The skies are lowering. It looks like rain. But the sternness of nature will be answered by the enthusiasm of Liberalism. The world is going ahead. Through the imperfections of nature we will reach the perfection of humanity. Coos county will not be behind in the grand march. Next week I will tell you all about our triumph here. I am with the Schroeders, a regiment in all, and there's no such word as fail. All is hope; the movement is forward.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Arago, June 6, 1888.

MOSES HULL, of Des Moines, Iowa, announces that he will meet Clark Braden in debate wherever a discussion is demanded. Mr. Hull is an able debater, and would metaphorically wipe the floor with Braden, or wipe Braden with the floor, as the case might be.

INGERSOLL FOR PRESIDENT.

This nomination was made last week by a correspondent of FREETHOUGHT, and the first impulse of every Freethinker would be to second and support it. Certainly, if there is one man in this country who rises head and shoulders over all the rest, that man is Ingersoll. He is great and mighty. Unapproachable as an orator, of magnificent proportions, of capacious intellect, of subtle wit, of unbounded sympathy with all, he fills the public eye and ear and heart. Nothing within the gift of the people of the greatest nation on the globe could be equal to the gifts with which nature has endowed him. To put him at the head of the nation politically would be to him but a change of place. He stands at the head now. He cannot be "raised" to the presidency; the presidency can only be raised to him. The office has heretofore distinguished the man. He would distinguish the office. He has never held any position under the government; he has never used political place for advancement in the public notice. Yet he has risen above all office, above all place. There has been no tidal wave in his career, no great occasion, except such occasions as his presence and his genius have rendered memorable. He has exalted every walk in life in which his feet have trod.

Such a man is Ingersoll. But could he be elected to the presidency by popular vote? that is the question at issue. He might be if nominated by one of the two great parties. And if he were nominated, the campaign with Ingersoll in it would be historic. The speeches by the candidate would live forever. But on the other side what might we not look for in the way of opposition? It would be a campaign of mud. The ministers would be in it—all the Clark Bradens, the Browns of Dubuque, the priests of Rome, the jackals of politics, the hyenas of the religious and secular press. The last presidential campaign was indecently conducted, owing to the scandalous element furnished by the Rev. Mr. Ball, and the present campaign has opened with a worse-flavored scandal retailed by the Rev. Mr. Pendleton. But in these instances only the political prejudices of those particular clergymen were aroused, whereas a campaign led by a Freethinker would awaken their religious prejudices as well; and everybody admits that, prompted by religion—that is to say, by superstition—the cruelest, the bloodiest, and the meanest acts ever charged to human beings have been performed. It is asking a good deal of any self-respecting man to request the use of his name as standard bearer in such a war as this. We doubt if the colonel would accept the well-intended honor.

Perhaps it would be better to leave our champion to his own destiny. He is working it out well. He knows that he has the moral support of all the Freethinkers in the country. On the one question of religious freedom he is our acknowledged representative. Politically his views are adverse to those of many Liberals who are affiliated with the old parties. He is a Republican; many Freethinkers are Democrats. He is a protectionist; many Freethinkers favor free trade. He is opposed to Prohibition; many Freethinkers differ with him on that subject. He would find that at least some of his foes were those who are now, so to speak, of his own household.

On the other hand, there is a feeling which cannot be repressed that the greatness of Ingersoll should be recognized in some palpable way by the people of this country. Naturally he is thought of in connection with the presidency. We would like to see him there, and we speak the sentiments of a hundred thousand Freethinkers when we say we would like to help put him there.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

There seems to be some misunderstanding in regard to the American Secular Union. It has been asserted that there is demand for a change of front and "fixing up." This is simply a mistake. Nothing of the kind is needed nor expected. The Union is in a very healthful condition. It does not require the services of a doctor. It is lusty and full of hope, and can make its way without any prescriptions. Medicine of any kind would be death.

To assert that the Union is not sustained by the Liberals of the country generally is an error. It has the support of the representative men of the party, of Ingersoll, Courtlandt Palmer, the Drs. Foote, and others, and of live Secular Unions. There has been no rebellion, and no fault has been found. So far as heard from, the Union has the hearty indorsement of the working portion of the Freethinkers of the country.

There is a mass of indifference among Liberals in regard to the campaign work. But this has always been the case. The Union started against this mass of indifference, which was one of the first obstacles in the way of its success. The Union has done more than any other organization to remove the indifference. It is well known, by those who understand the Liberal people of this country, that at least nine-tenths of them are totally careless of every progressive undertaking. This is simply the fact, whatever the cause of it may be. It has been so for fifty years. Every one of our Liberal papers has had to struggle against this lack of devotion. To-day all the Liberal papers combined have not one-tenth part of the Freethinkers of America on their lists of subscribers. The Union is weakened by the same cause. It has had this apathy to contend against, which has already destroyed many a promising movement. To accuse the Union of non-success for a condition of affairs which has always existed is simply absurd. If Liberal journals, edited with the genius of a Seaver, a Bennett, and others, have not been able to excite the universal enthusiasm of Liberals, how can it be expected that the Secular Union will do the same thing with less means at hand for its work?

There are a million Liberals in this land. How many of them support the Investigator and Truth Seeker? It might just as well be said that these papers, doing such splendid service, have not the hearty co-operation of the majority of American Liberals, as to say that the Union has not.

The great Liberal movement of America is carried on by a very small minority of those who are outside of the church. About one in ten of Liberals is a live Liberal—a real worker and contributor to the cause. Of this small working force, however, the Union has the support of a vast majority.

Why should it not have the support of every earnest Liberal? The platform, the methods, and the administration of the Union are Liberal and wise.

Does anyone desire to change the platform of the Union—the Nine Demands of Liberalism? To do so would annihilate the Union. It would create division. However important any other reform might be, it cannot be attached to the work of the Union, whose sole object is the separation of church and state.

After the experience of ten years, to change the platform would be suicidal. No true friend would think for a moment of any such "fixing up."

The methods of the Union, adopted at Cassadaga Congress, have met with greater success than any other methods, and have given the Union more prosperity than any other methods.

There has been some opposition to these methods. At the New York Congress especially, and at Chicago, efforts were made by certain parties to change these methods. This effort was defeated by the almost unanimous decision of each Congress. The vast majority—we might say all those who have contributed to the funds of the Union—have indorsed these methods, which have created more interest than ever before in the work of the Union. A far larger number of people have been reached, more lectures have been given, more books sold, more pamphlets distributed than ever before. There has been a wider acquaintance and fellowship among Liberals. New Unions have been formed. Freethought halls have been built, and throughout the length and breadth of the country there has been agitation and progressive activity. To change these methods would be disastrous. With the small means at command the success of the Union has been remarkable. Other methods have been tried and failed. With the adoption of the present plan, there has been new life, more determined effort, more unity, more achievement. There can be no doubt of the wisdom of this plan. Congress after Congress, in spite of factious opposition, has declared in its favor. To abandon it is to abandon the Union itself. To change is to put the Union upon the death-roll.

Shall the administration be changed? What attacks have been made upon the administration except personal attacks, composed of slanders and miserable gossip? The official conduct of the administration has not been in the least impugned. Everything has been fair, square, and honorable. The most bitter accusations have failed. Every cent has been accounted for. There has been no extravagance, no misappropriation. The affairs of the Union have been conducted economically. Only the enemies of the Union have assailed the conduct of its officers. Its friends are satisfied. To change the administration would be folly. It cannot be done without injustice.

The secretary is the chief executive officer. Upon him rests most of the burden and responsibility. He must go ahead and mark out the campaign. He should be sustained, encouraged, and kept in his position long enough to carry out his purposes. The last Congress elected to this position a man of eminent ability, who has shown his fitness for it by bold and self-sacrificing labors. He was taken from a lucrative business, and receives less salary than before. The Union is in honor bound to retain the services of so faithful a secretary—to give him a chance to prove his mettle, and the value of his policy. He has been welcomed by the best Liberals in the land. He has the confidence of all. He has infused new energy into the affairs of the organization. He has given it brighter promise. It is our manifest duty to keep this brilliant executive officer where he is. A better cannot be found. His experience of this year will be of value for next. To change so important an office would be a surpassing blunder.

The Congress is to be a rally of friends. It is to be for harmony, for enthusiasm, and for action. It is not for change, for "fixing up," or for any compromise. It is for a forward movement with those who have already proved their fitness. It cannot be possible that the great body of working Liberals in this land will now make a backward plunge and destroy the noble promise of the hour.

It must be remembered that the American Secular Union is the pioneer corps of reform. It has to work with rough materials and few means. It is on the frontier line. It has neither fashion nor power to support it. In the very nature of the case it cannot have a large following. The multitude do not see the vast importance of its radical work. The Union deals with fundamentals, and not with surface-questions which are more or less popular, and which are more taking because more easily understood. It is exceedingly unjust to condemn the pioneer corps for not doing like the organized army, or for not being an organized army. It cannot be other than a pioneer corps. That is the necessity of the situation. To make the American Secular Union like an organized army with divisions, and brigades, and regiments, and companies would be to destroy it. That is not its mission. It cannot compete with the churches in these methods, for it has not the wealth of the churches nor the numbers of the churches. The Union is simply "blazing" the pathway for the future grand armies of Reform. It must go here and there, wherever anything can be done in anyway, and push things without much reference to the order of so doing. To criticise the American Secular Union for not being as precise in its arrangements as "the Ancient and Honorable" companies that parade the metropolitan streets is both ridiculous and unjust. The Union, most of the time, is in the woods where no roads have ever been cut, and it must press on without much regard to uniformity of step.

Without doubt the friends of the Union realize all this—the difficulties of the work, the smallness of the means, and that great advance cannot be made. There must be patience, magnanimity, generosity in our little band. All must take hold and help. Those who are chronically dissatisfied with the Union should leave it and work their own way. The Union will not abandon its present policy. There is plenty of room in the world for those who think otherwise to act otherwise, choose their own methods, and enter into honorable competition.

The next Congress will undoubtedly be perfectly harmonious. Friends will agree, join hands, and go ahead to better things. There must be constant movement. We are in the enemy's country, and must be always on the lookout. We can't indulge in dress parades, torchlight processions, or bands of music. We cannot imitate the splendid paraphernalia of the church. We are not built that way. We are not for style, or ornament, or noise, or buncombe. We are not a picnic or pleasure party. We don't care for brass buttons or epaulets. Our leaders are not those who have "fine form," but those who work. A majority vote is of very little avail with us. It is the life that commands—the genius for labor. The Liberals of this country will never follow a clique or submit to cut-and-dried arrangements. The Congress cannot rule. It can simply express. It must express the common sentiment and purpose of Liberalism. It must be a servant and not a master. Its votes and resolutions will amount to nothing unless they voice the great beating heart of honest, earnest men and women who are for Reform. There is no authority in Liberalism—only attraction. The Congress can't "fix up" things. It can only make audible the "deep and sweeping thoughts that lift the world at last to Freedom."

THE OAKLAND AFFAIR.

The Rev. Mr. Sweeney of Oakland is not yet reconciled to the way his champion, Clark Braden, was sat upon by the audience who attended Mr. Putnam's lecture in that city. He, of course, has a right to reargue the justice of the verdict, but he ought to be careful to tell the truth. Among Mr. Sweeney's errors are the following:

He errs in saying that the report of the lecture printed in FREETHOUGHT was written by Mr. Putnam. Such is not the fact. He errs in attributing to cowardice Mr. Putnam's refusal to debate with Braden. Mr. Putnam stated his reason for declining the debate—namely, that Braden is a liar and a blackguard. What better reason could be asked for?

He errs in saying that Mr. Putnam refused to read the letter from Braden handed to him by Comstock's agent, C. R. Bennett. Mr. Sweeney himself was present, and he knows that Bennett read the letter himself without giving Mr. Putnam opportunity to either consent or decline.

He errs in saying that Mr. Putnam "would allow no one to utter a word in opposition." He knows that he himself spoke without interruption, and said apparently all he desired to say, and that he was respectfully listened to.

We fail to see how anything is to be gained by falsifying the facts of this matter. The Braden gang came there to make a disturbance. They were defeated. They should keep quiet and try again if they think they are doing the honorable and fair thing. Braden is a despicable character, and we don't believe Bennett is much better. His connection with the Comstock movement shows him to be either a dupe or a scamp. The Rev. Mr. Sweeney should remember the fate of people who are condemned for keeping bad company. Above all, he should learn to tell the truth.

A GRATIFYING SENTIMENT.

The responses to Mr. Putnam's suggestion that subscribers of FREETHOUGHT who desire to extend its circulation should send what he terms a Gift Subscription at $1 each, continue to come in. One sentiment that is most gratifying appears to be common, namely, that the Liberals here regard FREETHOUGHT as their paper and that each feels a personal interest in it.

It is easy to be seen that the publishers of FREETHOUGHT are not pecuniary gainers by the Gift Subscription, or by any other at present. Thus far every copy of the paper printed has cost a trifle more than four cents, and half of them have been given away. But it is not a pecuniary question. It is one of spreading Liberal ideas, and in this the Gift Subscriptions are an important factor. They send FREETHOUGHT where otherwise it would not go, and, furthermore, they furnish a palpable evidence of interest taken in the paper by friends who forward and pay for them. Nothing encourages like encouragement. Below are the regular subscription rates to FREETHOUGHT:

One subscription one year.....	$2.00
Two subscriptions one year.....	3.00
Three subscriptions one year.....	4.00
Four subscriptions one year.....	5.00

Besides these are the $1 Gift Subscriptions before mentioned. For that sum we will forward FREETHOUGHT one year to any address furnished us by a regular subscriber. This is a period of sacrifice in the career of our young journal, and the more it is shared the sooner will come the day of better things.

THE Roman Catholic church draws annually more than $153,000 from the state treasury for the support of its institutions. At present, investigation into the character of these institutions is being made, beginning with the Orphan Asylum at San Rafael. The Argonaut thus depicts the result so far: "Five hundred boys, from four to fourteen years of age, without proper clothing and proper food; without fires or a warm meal from one year's end to another; with at best but occasional baths; deprived of undergarments and stockings; covered with vermin on their heads and bodies—vermin feeding upon ulcers and running sores; neglected in all their studies except that of the catechism; not properly attended in illness; not allowed to enjoy the unlimited freedom of the playground; allowed to die without information to the mother, and so carelessly buried that the grave is lost; not permitted a cup of pure, fresh, warm milk from the sixty milking cows from one year's end to another; putrid and stinking meat in limited quantities two days in the week and served cold; bread in limited quantities and of bad quality and never warm; disciplined by a drunken and brutal master with strap and buckle; knocked down and beaten, and one is dead; boys let loose in dormitories to the unutterable licentiousness of darkness; towels seldom washed and seldom changed; fed in the freedom of a riot in which the strongest steal and the weakest starve; stock, hogs, product of the dairy, the poultry yard, and farm of a thousand acres sent to market; one egg given each boy at Easter; priests and sisters at a separate table, served by a separate cook, from a separate larder, fat, snug, and sleek, well-dressed, well-fed, in good health, while the boys are weak, emaciated, wan, famished, and ragged."

WE have on hand enough communications, correspondence, and selections to fill four or five such papers as FREETHOUGHT, and they are all worthy of publication. There was once a journal started on the principle that writers should pay the expense of printing their contributions and take their money's worth in copies of the paper for distribution among their friends. The journal was a great success financially and attained a vast circulation.

ADMIRERS of James Lick, the Freethinker philanthropist, will be pleased with the opportunity to purchase the "Hand-book of the Lick Observatory" advertised on another page.

EMPEROR FREDERICK of Germany died on the 13th instant. In our issue dated June 16 we reported that the emperor was worse. We trust that this is not true of any of the dead.

OREGON Liberals may obtain blank petitions for the taxation of church property in that state by sending to this office for them.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Emperor Frederick of Germany sleeps with his fathers, and William the Second reigns in his stead.—The Diss Debar trial ended in conviction of the accused medium.—Dom Pedro of Brazil has recovered his health.—Depew is looming up large as probable Republican presidential candidate.—The condition of General Sheridan's health is still favorable.—The Frenchmen of this city are preparing to commemorate the anniversary of the fall of the Bastille July 14.—Workmen on the Los Angeles cable line struck against a reduction of wages from $2 to $1.50 per day.—Some portions of California have recently been visited by the heaviest rains ever known here in June.—The autopsy on Emperor Frederick showed that the disease was malignant cancer. The emperor was buried last Monday.—Over 800 Chinese landed Saturday.—A car in charge of the Fish Commission is on its way here with 600 live lobsters, which will be transplanted to California waters.—Terrible damage to property in New York and New England has recently been done by violent thunderstorms and lightning.—One-half of the deaths in this city last week were of foreigners.—District Attorney McGinn, of Portland, Or., is charged with assaulting and battering the Rev. Ezra Haskell.—The sons and daughters of "Old Tuolumne" had a reunion in East Oakland June 16.—The Starr King monument fund is now over $9,000.—Mary N. Prescott, the authoress and poet, died at Newburyport, Mass., on the 14th.—Seven men held up and robbed a train near Muskogee, I. T., last week. They fired on the train, wounding two men and instantly killing another.—That Tennessee clergyman who inherited a fortune of $8,000,000 now asserts, says the Post, that the story of Dives is an "interpolation."—The late President Garfield's son Harry and Miss Bell Mason were married at Mentor, O., June 14. Immediately after this ceremony was over Miss Mary Garfield and J. S. Brown stood in the same place and were married.—Mr. Schultz, of Honolulu, on the way to Germany with his daughter to have her treated for leprosy, was stopped at this port by Collector Hager, who refuses to let the daughter land. The father will apply to Washington for a special permit.—Mr. O'Donnell desires to stretch a banner across Kearny street announcing himself the candidate of the Workingmen's Reform party for mayor. The party is yet to be inaugurated.—The new wire gun at Shoeburyness, England, has thrown a 500 pound shell a distance of twelve miles, the greatest distance ever covered by a cannon ball.—The San Francisco Brewers' Protective Union send the Fourth of July Executive Committee $200, and the National Educational Association $100.—E. T. Plank, president of the San Francisco Typographical Union, has been elected president of the International Typographical Union, to serve two years.—The Rev. James Hagar, who for the past ten years has been a missionary to China, talked to the ministers' meeting in the Y. M. C. A. parlor this week. The Chinese, he said, are an uneducated class of people and it is an impossibility to reason with them. He added that they were easily induced to attend church.—A dispatch from Rome says that the pope will soon issue an encyclical dealing with the true and false in liberty.—C. D. Story, the old man who attempted to kill off one of the vineyard superintendents at Folsom in order to alleviate the working classes, has been found guilty of assault with intent to commit murder.

OUR RED-HOT REPUBLICAN CORRESPONDENT.

Thomas Kerr does not go to Sing Sing this week. There are doubts if he is ever tried again. The little rebel colonel is at St. Louis shouting for free trade and Cleveland, instead of remaining at his desk and attending to his duties. In fact, the city government has been transferred from Manhattan Island to the banks of the Mississippi. When the Democracy calls, New York must answer. The great ratification meeting at St. Louis has not disturbed the slumbers of our apathy. The news from Oregon did, however. There is one thing certain, the laboring men in this town are in open revolt. The dullness in the various trades they lay at Cleveland's door. They are talking loudly for protection, and as loudly against free trade. This breach has got to be healed, or the Republicans will sweep this state in November. Henry George is for Cleveland, while Dr McGlynn and followers are against him. The doctor being an Irishman, his crowd is ten times as large as that of the ex-Californian. The professional politician is disgusted with Hewitt, who yesterday refused a salute to be fired over Cleveland's nomination.

We have the promise of another alderman scandal. Its extent is not yet developed. Facts have been, or will be, laid before the grand jury. Justice has not been swift enough to intimidate those disposed to evil. With Sharp in his grave unpunished, Cleary swaggering around the Equitable Building, and Mooney sporting gayly in Montreal, indifference to honesty is beginning to bloom at the city hall. Our "honest mayor" has not changed the complexion of the city politics by his appointments. The same old gang is at the helm. The same Mikes and Micks run the departments. Mayor Hewitt has not kept faith with the public; his pledged reforms have not been made. History will write him down a public scold, his mayoralty a failure.

Mr. Marsh still has faith in Mrs. Diss Debar. He believes her the most powerful medium in the world, and attributes her want of correct notions of marital propriety to the abnormal condition which Spiritualism tends to produce. It is sad to see the fall of this grand, esthetic old man. Few doubt that he has become demented. For years Mr. Marsh occupied a position at the bar second to none in this country. He was noted for the thoroughness of his preparation, the clearness of stating his proposition, and suavity in trying his cause. He was eloquent and logical before the jury, and won many cases by his urbanity. The legal fraternity takes especial interest in this case. Mrs. Diss Debar's counsel, John D. Townsend, has not a savory reputation. He is cute, and will make for her the best fight possible.

Midsummer dullness pervades business circles. A report of grasshoppers in Minnesota struck the granger like a cyclone, and they rattled down on the stock exchange. There is reported a little better feeling in pig iron. The weather is delicious.

New York, June 7, 1888.

EUDORUS.

A SUNDAY ACROSS THE BAY.

I have often wished that I could enjoy the opportunities for observation afforded by travel to the senior editor of this paper. A high knoll, a streak of sunshine, and an artificial creek for irrigating purposes do not always arouse my enthusiasm or excite my poetic fancy, but I am an intense appreciator of natural beauties, and I think I could describe them with a glowing pen. If any reader of these lines has a glowing pen in his possession he may send it to this office, and I will take it out among the sand dunes some evening and see if I can get a rise out of it. I love to hold the mirror up to nature.

I may say that the view from the window of our office, while varied for an hour, is apt to repeat itself during the next sixty minutes. The cable-cars and the horse-cars which circulate about the premises retain the same appearance they presented six months ago, and the soldier from the quartermaster's department at the Presidio still drives the identical army mule that I learned to esteem when I first came to this city. I see the same quantity of girls in red dresses, and a slight increase in the number of red parasols. There is no change in the pigtailed worn by our Asiatic citizens, and my desire to grab the same and give the owners a merry swing through the air and far out into the Pacific has not abated. Inside the room a similar lack of diversity is noted: no change in the books, in the papers, or in the pictures—except Heston's; none in the till.

To those who might be inclined to censure me for frivolity the foregoing will explain why, a Sunday ago, I took a day off and went to the Spiritualists' camp-meeting by Lake Merritt in Oakland. To get to this camp-meeting the traveler from San Francisco takes a ferry-boat, which meets a train of cars half way across the bay. The bottom of the bay on the Alameda county side is so near the surface that large boats can go no nearer than a mile and half or two miles from the shore without touching it, and the quay projects about that distance into the water. The cars would not be profitable but for the boats, for the reason that, though they run through the heart of Oakland, and stop with a yank at half a dozen stations on the way, no fares are collected on them, and the Oaklander may ride all day, if he chooses, and half the night, and it will not cost him a cent. This fact is worth mentioning often, because it is the only instance I am familiar with where the people get the best of a railroad. To reach the camp-ground it is necessary to let go at Oak street, walk north a few blocks, east a short distance, and there you are. Or you may release your pull on the railroad company at Broadway station and take a weary-colored horse-car with the same result.

Lake Merritt is not a gigantic sheet of water. Leisurely exercise at the oars will propel a boat around it in half an hour, but it has a surprising number of boats on its surface. It is a gay aquatic merry-go-round, but lacks a hand-organ. A fiddler on a big steam scow makes what noise he can. The wind here comes from the west. The sailboats leave the float with their little booms over the starboard side—provided I know the significance of the word starboard—take a streak along the eastern shore, go about, and follow the western shore back to the float. Sometimes the boats blow over. In such cases the occupants may waste leisurely to the shore and enjoy a picnic under the trees, of which there are several varieties.

I arrived at the ground too early for the afternoon discourse and too late to hear the remarks of the previous speaker. I was not alone, and we took a nicely painted blue row boat and went out among the white wings. Our boat had no wings, but it got there similarly. In propelling the craft I had the able assistance of Mr. F. L. Browne, who finds his chief delight in setting the type of this journal. I could not help perceiving a disparity between Mr. Browne's style of rowing and my own, and I think it must have attracted the attention of others. The diversity was pronounced in the "recover." Mine took the tops off the wavelets and landed them neatly in the lap of Mrs. Browne, who occupied the bow of the boat, while his oar cleared the waves by about a yard.

As we passed the camp-ground at great speed I caught a glimpse of the corporeal substance of Mr. George Chainey reclining picturesquely beneath a tree on the margin of the lake, perusing attentively, and we trust with profit, a copy of FREETHOUGHT. Later I met Mr. Chainey on the grounds. Time has lengthened his hair and silvered it a trifle, but his form is as stalwart as when I knew him years ago in the East. He was an iconoclast then. Now he is building, but he builds castles in the atmosphere. He believes that the air is full of spirits who can touch him, and that belief does not make him nervous, as it would me.

I looked about among the assembled Spiritualists for the long-haired men and short-haired women, but did not detect their presence. The only difference between them and the ordinary assemblage was the absence of the "rough" element, and the conspicuous amount of intelligence that their countenances displayed. As a general thing it is only necessary to nudge a Spiritualist to wake up a Freethinker.

The camp-ground is not without its bar, and here are dispensed such incendiary drinks as lemonade, sweet cider, and soda water. Among the luxuries in the way of food were graham crackers, boiled eggs, and fruit. In these we indulged mildly though somewhat expensively.

Speaking was in progress in the large tent, whence issued the sound of the orator's voice, and also, occasionally, portions of the audience, who complained that the discourse made them tired. I listened to the last part of it, and heard with sympathetic ear the sigh of relief that made the tent flap when the speaker remarked, "In conclusion I will say."

I made the acquaintance of Mr. Glover, of Los Angeles, who offers to pay $50 admission to the grounds if the managers will let the other visitors in free instead of taxing them ten cents each. I heard Mr. Glover say, in conversation with another man, that he had seen copies of this journal and did not think much of it. I should like to have Mr. Glover call at this office. I am sure I could convince him of my soundness on the spiritual question, but after what he said I am afraid I could not agree to let him have the paper for less than the top rates.

My friend, Mr. Kline, from Sunol, has done what he could to Liberalize the camp-meeting. He purchased a copy of the North American Review for June, and requested that some one read Ingersoll's reply to Mr. Gladstone from the platform in the big tent. He said everybody in the audience certainly wanted to know what the colonel had said, and his method would save them four bits apiece. The managers did not adopt this philanthropic plan with anything like a rush, and the matter was permitted to lapse. Mr. Kline, however, carried over a hundred copies of FREETHOUGHT and gave them away ere he rested from his labors.

I noticed many tents where people in the medium business were giving sittings at two dollars per sit. I did not apply for a sit, because I am of the opinion that when any citizen of the future state desires to communicate with me the message will be marked paid at the other end, or that I shall at least be notified of its arrival. I am waiting by the river.

What I saw of the proceedings gave me the impression that I was at church. Services open with a hymn. The speaker does not pray, but he invokes the Infinite Spirit of Truth. This, I suppose, is to put the audience into what D. M. Bennett called a similar frame of mind. The congregation is dismissed with a benediction. The portions of the discourses I heard did not impress themselves upon my memory. I could repeat or report scarcely a word of them. Like sermons, they lacked relation to things and facts as we know them, and had none of the associations that give substance to ideas and fix them in the mind. I have often wondered whether some discourses do not serve to empty the head of the information it previously contained rather than to fill it with great thoughts. On the other hand, it may be argued that not all minds are receptive of moral and spiritual truth. It is this two-sided aspect of the case that makes me cautious about expressing an opinion. I do not hesitate to say, however, that the visitor to the Spiritualists' Camp-meeting will enjoy himself if he has the necessary elements within him. Of what he sees and hears he must judge for himself. I do not regret the ten cents I invested in a ticket of admission to the grounds. M.

ATTENTION, CLERGYMEN!

Freethought knows no retreat. Its friends hold themselves in readiness at all times to meet all comers in debate, who have ability and manners to command respect and attention. They will hold to this proposition, or any part of it, or any conflict of opinion growing out of it:

That what is called the Christian religion has no foundation in Science, History,
Common sense, or Common justice.

All men, and especially all clergymen, are hereby invited and challenged to discuss any such question, in any important city of this state, on equal terms.

Said discussion may be from the platform, or in some newspaper, as agreed.

For further information apply at this office.

INGERSOLL'S VIEWS ON ORATORY.

If a young man imagines that he has an aptitude for public speaking—that is, if he has a great desire to make his ideas known to the world—the probability is that the desire will choose the way, time, and place for him to make an effort. If he really has something to say, there will be plenty to listen. If he is so carried away with his subject, is so in earnest that he becomes an instrumentality of his thought—so that he is forgotten by himself; so that he cares neither for applause nor censure—simply caring to present his thoughts in the highest and best and most comprehensive way, the probability is that he will be an orator. Otherwise not.

I think oratory is something that cannot be taught. Undoubtedly a man can learn to be a fair talker. He can, by practice, learn to present his ideas consecutively, clearly, and in what you may call "form," but there is as much difference between this and an oration as there is between a skeleton and a living human being clad in sensitive throbbing flesh.

There are millions of skeleton-makers, millions of people who can express what may be called "the bones" of a discourse, but not one in a million who can clothe these bones.

You can no more teach a man to be an orator than you can teach him to be an artist or a poet of the first class. When you teach him, there is the same difference between the man who is taught and the man who is what he is by virtue of a natural aptitude that there is between a pump and a spring—between a canal and a river—between April rain and water works. It is a question of capacity and feeling—not of education.

There are some things which you can tell an orator not to do. For instance: He should never drink water while talking, because the interest is broken, and for the moment he loses control of his audience. He should never look at his watch for the same reason. He should never talk about himself. He should never deal in personalities. He should never tell long stories, and if he tells any story he should never say that it is a true story and that he knew the parties. This makes it a question of veracity instead of a question of art. He should never clog his discourse with details. He should never dwell upon particulars—he should touch universals, because the great truths are for all time.

If he wants to know something, if he wishes to feel something, let him read Shakespeare. Let him listen to the music of Wagner, of Beethoven, of Schubert. If he wishes to express himself in the highest and most perfect form, let him become familiar with the great paintings of the world—with the great statues—all these will lend grace, will give movement and passion and rhythm to his words.

A great orator puts in his speech the perfume, the feeling, the intensity of all the great and beautiful and marvelous things that he has seen and heard and felt. An orator must be a poet, a metaphysician, a logician—and, above all, must have a sympathy with all.

R. G. INGERSOLL, in the Examiner.

THE BLUE AND THE GRAY.

Come, soldiers! Come, comrades! The blue and the gray!
Let us bridge o'er the chasm that keeps us at bay!
Let our hands, as our hearts, break rank to embrace
The Republic, our mother, the Nation and race.

The Republic! She won in the strife that is past;
Her banner, her stars, wave above us at last;
Equal laws for us all; for the blue and the gray,
Is the fiat of God and the people to-day.

Who won? Not the blue! Not a tittle was gained!
Who lost? Not the gray! Not a right but remained.
Nay, the loss was a gain, for the gray is more free
Than as slavery's henchmen they ever could be.

Who grieves now, who sighs o'er the fields that were lost?
Who repents that the Nation was saved at the cost?
Who repines, who is humbled? Who blushes to be Enrolled as a son of the brave and the free?

There is none, not a soul! Should war stalk through the land,
And the foemen appear on the sea or the strand,
The blue and the gray would be rushing pell-mell,
Hand to hand to the carnage the legions to swell.

Seal the compact once more, seal the compact of peace;
As our fathers of yore, let our discords all cease;
Sign a new Constitution, to bury the past;
One heart and one purpose, a Nation at last.

Make a pile of the banners we captured in war!
Blot out every tittle that keeps us ajar!
Proclaim that the war did the mother enthrone
The Republic, who calls all her children her own.

This only remembered, the war was for right,
And justice went forth with the blue in the fight.
There was need of a purging, and God sent the storm,
As a new dispensation, his plan of reform.

There was need that the sin and the sinner should come.
In the pride of their hearts, with the trumpet and drum;
There was need that the gray should believe in a lie,
That her legions and slavery might perish and die.

But now that the tempest is over and gone,
Let vengeance abide with Jehovah alone!
Let the mother take close to her heart from this day,
All the loyal and true of the blue and the gray.

H. L. KNIGHT, Veteran of the Mexican War.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made these lecture appointments from June 1 to October 1. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Ashland.....Or.....June.....3	Walla Walla, W. T.....14
Talent.....".....".....4	Union.....Or.....15
Jacksonville.....".....5, 6	Baker City.....16
MyrtleCreek } ".....7-10	Boise City...Idaho.....19
Roseburg } ".....".....".....21	Ogden.....Utah.....21
Coos County.....".....11-19	Morgan.....".....22
Silverton.....".....22-24	Coalville.....".....23
Stayton.....".....24, 25	Park City.....".....25
Lebanon.....".....27-28	Salt Lake City.....26
Molalla.....".....June 30, July 1	Murray.....".....27
Eagle Creek.....".....July.....4	Heber.....".....28, 29
Sandy.....".....".....5	Denver.....Col.....Sept.....2
New Era.....".....".....6	Seward.....Neb.....5-6
McMinnville.....".....7-9	Wahoo.....".....7-8
McCoy and Ballston, Or.....10-11	Fremont.....".....9
Forest Grove Or.....".....15	Omaha.....".....10
Hillsboro.....".....16-17	Creston.....Iowa.....11
Portland.....".....18	Ottumwa.....".....12
Astoria.....".....22, 29	Salem.....".....13
Cathlamet, W. T.....".....24-27	West Union.....".....16-17
Pasco, Waverly, Col'ax, and	Dwight.....Ill.....19-20
Spokane Falls, W. T. Aug. 1-12	Chicago.....".....23
	Pittsburgh...Pa.....30

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary.....241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
CHARLES ECKHARD, Treasurer.....28 Lafayette place, New York
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com.....120 Lexington ave., New York
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com.....106 So. Halsted st., Chicago

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	Harry Hoover,	S. W. Devenbaugh,
Courtlandt Palmer,	Charles B. Reynolds,	Wm. Algie,
T. B. Wakeman,	Prof. Ch. Orchardson,	Roman Staley,
James Parton,	L. K. Washburn,	H. P. Mason,
J. D. Shaw,	W. S. Bell,	N. D. Goodell,
W. F. Jamieson,	Mattie A. Freeman,	D. W. Smith,
Charles Watts,	M. M. Secor,	Jas. Wardwell,
John E. Remsburg,	Otto Wettstein,	J. W. Black,
Horace Seaver,	Wm. Redfield,	Thos. J. Truss.
Mattie P. Kregel,

PRACTICAL NEEDS—ORGANIZATION AND RECONCILIATION.

Dear Friend Green:

Nothing since entering upon the duties of secretary has given me greater satisfaction, and for nothing do I feel more profoundly grateful, than your two hearty, generous—yes, magnanimous letters. Those letters prove that you recognize principles as vastly superior to men, and that whenever you firmly believe the fundamental work of this organization—the Nine Demands of Liberalism—will be faithfully practicalized to the full extent of the means furnished, you are ready to fall into line, losing sight of any preconceived prejudice or former antagonism. We are all liable to be misunderstood, but there is one common ground of agreement: we can be reconciled with the Nine Demands for the unification of all the Liberal elements. To that end my course in the future as in the past will be directed. You can play as brilliant a role prospectively as you have retrospectively for the welfare and prosperity of the American Secular Union, and that is in urging this reconciliation.

The same original platform is all that we present—the identical opposition to ecclesiastical encroachment. Organization is as absolutely imperative to the development of state secularization now as it was 1876. All must admit that local organization can never be effective without a national nucleus to foster, encourage, and sustain. It would be simply superfluous occupancy of time to elaborate on the necessity of organization, when the foe shows such a formidable front from that fact alone, by which means it curbs, crushes, and muzzles modern thought and presents an effective barrier to further intellectual progress. The course of events proves clearly that secularization is the foundation of all true reform, social and political. Where ecclesiasticism holds people in mental bondage there is little hope for the cause of human justice, and social equality must ever sink in the background. It is this mental bondage which makes the long-suffering, patient, ignorant multitude bear with temporal hardships for a promise of eternal bliss. Thus the altar and throne have been inseparable, and the surpliced priest ever ready to bless the sceptered tyrant.

Never in the history of our own country was the Roman church so powerful, proud, defiant, and dangerous. Never has it been so openly antagonistic to the principal feature of American freedom—public schools. Never was there a time when leading politicians were so willing to wallow at the feet of the priests; never when the spirit of freedom was so little recognized in our national life or exercised by our law-makers. The cohorts of the God-in-the-State party are active in the camp of the Young Men's Christian Association; they have captured the Prohibition party; they control the Female Suffrage movement, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is one of their strongholds. It is natural, therefore, that Freethinkers should be the first to take alarm at the attitude of this fell destroyer of mental freedom—Ecclesiasticism; that they should haste to counteract its despotic tendencies, but they should remember that our platform is as broad as the principle of justice. Secularism is the antithesis of sectarianism. It is not merely a principle for Freethinkers, Agnostics, Materialists, Spiritualists, or Atheists, but one which every honest man and intelligent woman can indorse—one which every true American citizen should seek to secure, and it is the duty of every Secularist to invite and retain the interest, sympathy, and co-operation of all.

There never was more need for activity, unity, and harmony than now on the part of all true Secularists, and I appeal to you, as one who can materially aid in bringing that about, to give it the approval of your voice and pen. We have had a protracted internecine war while our enemies are welding the chains for our complete subjugation. Let us work while yet we may. The secretary has not always cordially agreed with everything done by the National Liberal League or the American Secular Union, but he considered it simply childish to withdraw from an instrumentality for good to the whole country, to the time and race, because some particular policy did not suit him. Liberalism should be made of sterner stuff. Our duty to the cause should be held much higher, nobler, and greater than any individual opinion. Can you call such back from their sleep of indifference to the crying need of the hour? We have men and women of culture, character, and unquestioned ability: these should be sent out to organize, for organization will be necessary to precede action. Literature needs to be thickly scattered over the country, but Liberals should blush at the beggarly sum which has thus far been realized for that purpose. Can we not get the Liberals to rise superior to the past, join forces, and once more, shoulder to shoulder, fight the common foe of Universal Mental Liberty?

E. A. STEVENS.

We take this letter as our text for a few comments on the work of the Secular Union. The Union, as all our readers know, is what was formerly the National Liberal League. That League was organized at Philadelphia, July 4, 1876. Its platform was the Nine Demands of Liberalism. For a number of years we were chairman of the Executive Committee of that society, and during that time we labored with all the power we possessed to build up the organization. The first rebuff the society met with was at the Syracuse Congress, held in 1878, when Mr. Abbot and his friends attempted to commit the organization to the doctrine of the "modification" of what were known as the Comstock laws, and, failing to do so, withdrew from the Congress. The next year the Congress met in Cincinnati and proved a great success. Colonel Ingersoll was chairman of the committee on resolutions, and introduced a series that appeared to satisfy all parties. They were unanimously adopted and great harmony prevailed. This was the largest and most successful congress the organization has ever held. Nearly every state in the Union was well represented. We remember that at a meeting of the National Executive Committee some twelve states were represented. Everybody went away from that convention greatly elated and encouraged and with bright anticipations for our success in the future. A large number of the delegates went direct to the New York State Freethinkers' Convention, at Chautauqua Lake, where hundreds of Liberals were assembled, and where we had another grand five days meeting. We well remember that Colonel Ingersoll said to us at the close of the Cincinnati Congress: "This has been the most successful gathering Liberals have ever had in this country." The next year the congress was held at Chicago, where resolutions were introduced committing the organization to the doctrine of the total repeal of the Comstock laws, and after a warm discussion were adopted. On their adoption, Colonel Ingersoll, the writer and others withdrew. Our position from the first was that the society should not, as a society, be committed to either "repeal" or "modification," but that each individual member should be at liberty to favor either "repeal," "modification," or neither. This proved another great blow to the organization, from which we think it has never fully recovered. We have not here repeated this well-known history of the movement to find fault with any one. We have no doubt that each party acted in accordance with their earnest convictions. It seemed to be, for the time being, an "irrepressible conflict" that could not be avoided. But it is now a part of the past history of the movement, and only as such do we here refer to it. But we are glad to know that those questions which proved so disastrous to our success as an organization in the past have been permanently settled, and that the last congress that met at Chicago fully recognized the fact, and placed the association again squarely on the platform of the Nine Demands of Liberalism—the same platform that was formulated by Francis E. Abbot, the founder of the association. We said, editorially, immediately after that congress closed, "If the officers elected will carry out, in good faith, what they have adopted as their platform, ignoring all other questions, they ought to succeed—they ought to have the united support of all the Liberals and friends of State Secularization in this country and Canada." Since then we have watched them closely, especially the course of Mr. Stevens, the secretary, and we rejoice to say that no one could have done better than he has. He went to work immediately after his appointment to organize the country on this old platform of the Nine Demands, and he has proved a faithful steward of our cause. He has not had the support he should have had, for the reason, probably, that many had lost faith in the organization. He has, with the help of Mrs. Freeman and other active Liberals of Chicago, built up a very large, active Union in that city, the influence of which is felt over the whole country. He has issued many valuable pamphlets that set forth clearly the importance of this Secular movement and the work necessary to be done. He has written thousands of letters to Liberals in all portions of the country urging them to get up local organizations. He has, from the first, worked with a zeal and energy worthy of the great cause he is engaged in. But it is impossible for one man to do everything. He needs, and must have, the financial and moral indorsement of every Secularist in this country to be able to make his administration a great success. And we earnestly urge each one of our readers to give him all the aid in their power. If you cannot send him money, write him a letter of encouragement, and offer to perform any labor in your vicinity that he may require of you. If you can do nothing more, you can purchase and circulate some of his valuable pamphlets. Commence immediately after reading these lines by sending him a dollar for documents to circulate. In that way you can aid a little.

We have here only space to add that we learn that the next Secular Congress is to be held in Pittsburg, Pa., the last of September. As the Secular Union is now based solely on the Nine Demands of Liberalism, which we have often characterized as the Second Declaration of American Independence, we urge every person who indorses those Demands to attend that congress. And we have yet to find a Liberal of any school, who does not indorse those Demands. Every honest American must indorse them. As Mr. Stevens suggests, let us cease our bickerings, forget all our contentions, and go to Pittsburg resolved to build up a great, growing organization that shall receive the support of every true Liberal, and command the respect of our opponents.—H. L. Green, in the Freethinkers' Magazine.

SAT UPON AGAIN.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The Christian church at this place is flaunting a challenge to the "Infidelity of the world," with Braden as their champion. It will be remembered that one year ago Mr. Putnam publicly and very emphatically refused to meet this man for good and sufficient reasons. This should satisfy all intelligent people, but it seems that the Christians are not satisfied, and Braden himself is striving hard to beat his record. It is evident that he has demonstrated to the entire satisfaction of his brethren here that he is the "greatest man on earth."

The following resolutions with regard to Braden and the "Infidel back-down" were unanimously passed at the meeting of the Silverton (Or.) Secular Union, Sunday, June 17:

Whereas, Silverton Secular Union recognizes in Samuel P. Putnam, president of the American Secular Union, an honorable gentleman and an able advocate of the cause of Liberalism; and

Whereas, The Christian church of this place is challenging Mr. Putnam to meet one Clark Braden in debate on the Christian religion; and

Whereas, Mr. Putnam publicly refused one year ago to meet said Braden, and emphatically continues to refuse to the present time; and

Whereas, The reason given by Mr. Putnam for refusing to recognize said Braden as an honorable opponent is that said Braden made an infamous attack on Robert G. Ingersoll in a pamphlet entitled "Ingersoll Unmasked," in which pamphlet the writer, Braden, not only seeks to blacken the good name of a great and good man—a man who to-day is recognized as one of America's honored sons, a man who by his genius and great literary ability has commanded the respect and admiration of the most eminent men in both Europe and America—but invades the threshold of the colonel's home and slanders with venomous tongue and pen the entire family; and

Whereas, The public conduct of said Braden as published in the New York Truth Seeker of August 20, 1887, and copied in FREETHOUGHT June 9, 1888, is dishonorable and a disgrace to the cause he espouses; therefore Resolved, That Samuel P. Putnam, or any other representative of the Liberal cause, is justified in refusing to meet Clark Braden in debate.

Resolved, That the conduct of Clark Braden, as exemplified in his vilification of Robert G. Ingersoll, is unworthy of an honorable man and merits the rebuke of an honorable people.

Resolved, That the admonition of the Christian Independent, of Oakland, Cal., to "run Putnam and Reynolds from the field," etc. (which, clearly, is intended for Silverton Christians), is calculated to engender a spirit of injustice and intolerance and to create an ill feeling among people whose relations are otherwise peaceful and friendly—in many cases causing dissension among families where differences of opinion exist on matters of religion—a condition of things inconsistent and incompatible with modern civilization, and always demoralizing and therefore detrimental to any community.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to FREETHOUGHT for publication.

R. D. ALLEN, Sec. S. S. U.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

It is to be regretted that there is such a division of opinions in regard to the true meaning of Shakespeare's plays; that they are not to be taken in their literal meaning and so to be construed, but having a bearing that does not admit of this.

Shakespeare's writings are to be understood as conveying a typical meaning, and his dramatis personæ as containing portraiture such as society is composed of, and denizens of this world, presenting prototypes of the good and bad, the foolish and wise, the discreet and the impulsive. But let us instance a few cases:

"Macbeth" is a portrayal which goes to show what unbounded ambition—exemplified in Lady Macbeth—will do to swerve a truly brave man from his loyal and sworn duty; "Othello" one which lets the principle of honor—for that is the cause—swallow up all feelings of love and bring chaos; "Lear," one of a demented mind which old age has weakened, indiscreetly giving away his whole kingdom, as many a one does his estate nowadays; the "Taming of the Shrew" shows us the wayward and headstrong vagaries of a vixen, and how such can be conquered and brought into the right channel, etc., etc., while the "Tempest" and "Midsummer Night's Dream," and some of his poems, are purely imaginative.

It is well to remark here that much has been foisted on Shakespeare wholly unworthy his great name. Such is "Titus Andronicus," and the churchyard scene in "Hamlet," which is said to be an interpolation.

It will be noticed to the credit of Shakespeare that he makes provisions for the erasing of all objectionable passages, by the "cutting" process, to use a stage phrase, so as the age and times progressed and morality advanced—which is the cornerstone of society—the objections which moralists have found in the text would be overcome. Herein Shakespeare shows himself in advance of his time.

In our mention of portrayals we did not mention one, important, "Richard III.," and in doing this we do not want to be understood as favoring his method, but that he did not "throw away the baser part and live the better with the other half."

Historians and biographers vie with each other in giving "Richard III." certain grand qualities, such as culture, a patron of the fine arts, etc., and when we reflect that he was of the royal family we cannot help admitting this. But his object was to gain a certain end, and to do this it was necessary to smother all his good qualities and let the baser ones rule him, the better to effect his object, which was to gain his goal, the "golden round."

But let us pay some attention to "Hamlet," and not to make this article too long, we will be brief.

In this portrayal we see a pen-picture of one who was incapable of maintaining his own position—incapacitated by "indiscretion"—which hereditary claims entitled him to—and thus becoming a "football of fortune." "Hamlet" (the play) is a complete glass where we can see ourselves and guard against the evils of the world, and everyone will say with Hamlet:

"Why let the stricken deer go weep,
The hart ungalled play,
For some must watch whilst others sleep—
Thus runs the world away."

Or with Richard III. say:

"Shine out, fair sun, that in a glass
I may spy my shadow as I pass."

That Hamlet was mentally afflicted is evident—according to Shakespeare, for he does not follow the dry and inconsistent account given by Saxo Grammaticus. Emotional insanity was Hamlet's malady, who in his lucid moments gives us the best of advice, but is powerless to do anything for himself.

The reader will at once see by his "mind's eye" that he must give the widest liberty to Shakespeare's fancy and imagination, and not be classed with the sheep and have others say:

"What fools these mortals be."

Spring City P. O., Pa.

C. D. F. RENTGEN.

A Rear-door Prohibitionist.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I want to tell you something about one of our sky-pilots, the Reverend Irving Lovejoy, who is leader of the Methodists of this place, and also one of the leaders of the Prohibition cause. On the 9th day of April last, San Jacinto was voted from a very small village to a city of the sixth class, merely as a sanitary measure, as proclaimed by the leaders in the movement; but as soon as the Honorable (or dishonorable) Board of Trustees got in good working-order, they passed an ordinance ordering all the saloons to close, which order was promptly obeyed, and in a very short time the business men of the place saw plainly that they had made a very bad blunder, as there happened to be one store and one saloon left outside of the corporate limits. The store kept on hand an assorted stock of liquors, sold for medicinal purposes and otherwise, the rear door of said department being very convenient for Prohibitionists, as well as others, and proved to be a trap in which the reverend sky-pilot fell an easy victim, as I will hereafter show.

A petition was circulated, signed by over two-thirds of the voters, and presented to the city fathers, requesting them to grant license to saloons, setting forth as reasons for so doing that trade was being injured by the Prohibition clause. Not to be outdone by such a move, the reverend pulpit-pounder and others got up a remonstrance, with the signatures of a few reformed drunks, a few cranks, and a few poor old women, and presented it to the Council at the same time. The trustees being three Prohibits, one on the fence, and one liberal on the liquor question, the result was a foregone conclusion, and of course the will of the majority was defeated.

But, horrible to relate, some very bad men circulated a report that the Rev. Mr. Lovejoy had been purchasing whisky, at various times, at the store outside of the city limits. This was more than some of the truly good could stand, and threats were made that divers persons would be arrested for circulating slanders on their beloved pilot; and it came to pass that the services of a notary public were procured, who visited said store and took the affidavits of two clerks who had issued the terrible drug to the blessed lamb. No arrests have been hinted at since. Thus matters rest for the present. Further developments are awaited anxiously, and will be promptly reported by Yours for Liberty,
San Jacinto, Cal., June 11, 1888.

JUSTICE.

The Secular Union of San Jose—Permanent Organization.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Our charter having arrived, and all other preliminaries having been settled by the temporary committee appointed when Mr. Putnam last lectured here, a meeting for permanent organization was called June 3d. The temporary president, R. H. Schwartz, called the meeting to order. After the reading of the minutes of the previous meetings, reading of constitution and by-laws, signing roll of memberships and payment of dues, the president made a few pointed remarks in regard to the work of the Secular Union. The members present were then called on to elect their permanent officers. The result stands as follows: R. H. Schwartz, president; Mrs. R. H. Schwartz, secretary; L. Magenheimer, treasurer; Messrs. Woodhams, Vostrovsky and Pobritz, finance committee; Mr. Scheneman, Miss Wehner, Mr. Titus, and Mr. Vostrovsky, executive committee. It was decided that we meet the last Sunday in each month. The meeting then adjourned until Sunday, 24th inst., at 8 P. M.

MRS. R. H. SCHWARTZ, Secretary.

The Gift Subscriptions.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have just read Mr. Putnam's personal to subscribers of FREETHOUGHT in the issue of June 9, and as he suggests to us not to let our first impulses fade away without action, I herewith inclose $5 for gift subscriptions.

I have read with much interest of Messrs. Stone, Schou, and Worthing's liberal proposals to the Freethinkers of this coast and am waiting with bated breath to hear responses to the two first named, for I know there are thousands in this growing West who are amply able, and who should feel it their duty to assist all in their power in putting down this blind superstition to which so many are slaves.

Of course Mr. Worthing's proposition will end in success to some one, and I hope to the extent of a thousand subscribers to FREETHOUGHT.

I would much enjoy meeting Mr. Putnam and our many Liberal friends in Silverton, Oregon, on the 23d—a place where we spent nineteen years of our first residence on this coast. Wishing FREETHOUGHT and Liberalism unbounded success, I remain your friend,
KATE P. WOLFORD,
Colfax, W. T.

HAND-BOOK OF THE LICK OBSERVATORY

OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,

—BY—

EDWARD S. HOLDEN, LL.D.,

Director of the Observatory:

A volume of 135 pages, 12mo., printed on heavy paper, and bound in flexible cloth covers. Besides likenesses of Professor Holden and James Lick, it contains Twenty Views, Drawings, and Illustrations of the Locality, the Machinery, and the Apparatus connected with the great Astronomical station. The Table of Contents includes:

- I. Information for Visitors.
- II. Sketch of the Life of James Lick.
- III. A Visit to Mt. Hamilton.
- IV. History of the Lick Observatory.
- V. Description of the Building.
- VI. Description of the Instruments.
- VII. The Work of the Observatory.
- VIII. Telescopes.
- IX. Poem: To the Unmounted Lens.
- X. Astronomical Photography.
- XI. Clocks and Time-Keeping.
- XII. The Principal Observatories of the World.

By mail 80 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and A NEW FEATURE, of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25. Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50. difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscoan. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Tributes. "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," "The Grant Banquet Toast" and "Little Harry Miller's Grave," printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing; four to any address for 50 cents, or either one for 15 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," and all the famous tributes, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, table-talks and day-to-day conversations of the author. Fine steel portrait and autograph facsimile. Price, in cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton. Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenzel, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1.50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7 jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50. With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17, $18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4. Being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies' watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels, $22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2 to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $33. Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra. Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4. $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case. Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1; best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine straws, 50c. Set best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas, 50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12. Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free. Best work. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Designer and Patentee of new FREETHOUGHT Badges in PINS and CHARMS—emblematical of the light and day of Freethought, Science, and Reason vs. the night and darkness of Superstition.—Exact size of cut and smaller, two-thirds size. Warranted solid gold, enameled in four colors. Most beautiful badge ever designed. Small, $2, $2.75, $3.50. Large, $3 to $5; with genuine diamond, $8, $10; and charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 26.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - JUNE 30, 1888

JESUS CHRIST is now exonerated from all blame in the Cana of Galilee wine-making affair. A member of the Young Men's Christian Association in St. Louis declares that "Christ did undoubtedly make wine at the feast, but it was his first miracle and he was young yet." Much is to be forgiven the inexperience of youth. It is the adult miracle-monger that first made whisky from rye who deserves permanent condemnation.

THE Republicans at Chicago nominated as their candidate for president Benjamin Harrison, of Indiana, a descendant of Thomas Harrison of Cromwell's time; of Benjamin Harrison, who signed the Declaration of Independence, and of William Henry Harrison, the ninth president of the United States. The fact that Mr. Harrison's first-named ancestor was publicly hanged, drawn, and quartered in 1660 should not be used as a campaign slander against the present candidate.

THE position of pope of Rome appears to be lucrative. In no single year since 1870, says the Brussels Courier, has the income of the office from "Peter's pence" been less than $1,400,000, and it has often reached a much larger sum. During the present year, which is a jubilee epoch, the contributions to the support of his holiness have amounted to $6,500,000, the jubilee mass netting $600,000. The pope may well believe, with the wealthy clergymen, that the story of Dives is an interpolation. But the case of Dives was a much more deserving one than that of Pope Leo XIII. There is no evidence that Dives extorted his wealth from poverty-stricken wretches by working upon their ignorance and superstition, or that he was an impostor.

As an agent of divine wrath lightning has always been regarded as a success when it strikes a secular dwelling. But it is a matter of history that it often lacks discrimination. The thunderstorm of last Sunday in Pennsylvania affords an illustration of this. At Wilkes Barre the Puritan Congregational church was struck by a terrific thunderbolt, while divine service was in progress, over a dozen worshipers, the dispatch says, being temporarily prostrated by the shock. Fortunately the homeopathic doctrine, similia similibus curantur, was called to mind, and communion wine applied as a restorative. The incident, while it strengthens the advocacy of fermented wine for communion purposes, is wholly destitute of the moral it might have afforded if the building struck had been a theater instead of a church.

COLONEL INGERSOLL addressed the Republican Convention at Chicago last week in response to calls from the assembly. In the course of his speech he said:

"I am a Republican because that party is pledged to the protection of American labor. The country that raises raw material and sells it as such will always be ignorant and poor. Why? The labor to raise the raw material is ignorant labor, but the moment the raw material is worked into fabrics, fashioned into beautiful shapes, that requires intelligence, and consequently the greater number of industries we have in the United States the more intelligent our population will be. Another reason, ordinary labor is always cheap. Labor commands a price in the proportion that mind is mixed with muscle, in the proportion that thought is mingled with effort. I am in favor of the protection of American industries because it will develop American brain, because under that system we can raise the most valuable things beneath the stars, great men and great women. Where men pursue but one industry they become stupid. Where the industries are diversified every part of the brain is developed and we have use for every aptitude, for every talent, and for every kind of genius."

This is the best argument we have ever heard in favor of the artificial impediment to international commerce known as the tariff.

NEWS AND NOTES.

The campaign in Coos county has been one of varied fortune. It seems as if in one week I had been all over creation and almost tumbled into the bottomless pit. Storms have raged as never before, and floods have swelled, and it needed only an earthquake to perfect the freaks of nature.

My friend James Laird on my arrival had taken his son Colfax, who is quite unwell, to Coquille City, where he might be under the care of a physician, and this, with the anxieties and toils of the last four months—his wife being on a bed of sickness and twelve of his family, children and grandchildren, attacked with measles, and one dying—has broken even his iron frame, and this soldier, so true and active, could not attend any of the lectures. He was obliged to return home immediately from Myrtle Point. Thus joy was mingled with sadness as we greeted many friends in this world of forest, stream, and sea. James Laird is as staunch as the oak itself—generous and ready for any arduous service—a comrade who gives courage even though fate were dark as midnight, and whose voice is as cheery amid tears as when sunshine falls. Good-bye, loyal champion. Over the grave of thy loved one shall bloom the flowers of sympathy and hope.

Our veteran, Henry Schroeder has also suffered a severe loss. His house was burned down and almost everything destroyed—the mementos of many years, books, paintings, and pictures, whose value is beyond price. So dark and bright have mingled in the panorama of time.

Happy I was again to receive the hospitality of the captain of our host, J. Henry Schroeder, and break bread beneath his roof. The Secular Pilgrim here will find the ardor that is better than wine to his spirit.

Again our flag was unfurled upon the fair ground at Arago, and "The American Republic" recognized. The welcome was all that heart could desire, and even amidst threatening skies the ranks did not seem to be diminished. But the rain it raineth every day; and at the close of the lecture in the afternoon it drizzled down; but we must be at Coquille City in the evening. The steamer Ceres was so heavily freighted that it could not get off in time. We were obliged to take to the skiffs. About thirty were to go down the river, but only eleven faced the music and the showers. I had to bid good-bye to friend McNaughton, who was our color-bearer at Myrtle Point. Necessity, alias rheumatism, compelled him to abide "where storms do never blow nor billows roar."

The brave "ten of Thermopylæ" went with me over the dark bosom of the Coquille, upon which the rain descended with one continuous "Oregon mist." I must enroll their names, for how many, even of the Baptist persuasion, would have taken such an immersion for the sake of a lecture?

"Tell me not in mournful numbers
That Liberals indifferent seem,
Though they do enjoy their slumbers,
They'll row down or up the stream."

These are the immortal ten. Put them down in the Secular annals: J. Henry Schroeder, Wm. H. Schroeder, Geo. T. Schroeder, Miss Ella Schroeder, Miss Alice Schroeder, Mr. and Mrs. G. B. Hunt, H. T. Burns, John Anderson, and Arthur Bartlett. We took our lunch with us—crackers and sardines—and they disappeared. The storm was an appetizer. From the time we left port in the open skiffs until we landed, three hours on the winding river, the drops came pattering down and made music with a million bubbles. Half way on our voyage one of the oarlocks went spinning into the water. This delayed, and it was nearly eight o'clock when we touched the dimly-lighted wharf, and heard the voices of friends.

H. H. Nichols, whom I last saw at San Diego, who is both Liberal and Spiritual, but who fights it out on the line of this world in order to make the glory of the next—he and Dell Cathcart and Judge Low, and others of the "Old Guard," beckoned us to the "stormy banks" of our Jordan, which we had found "a hard road to travel."

The hall was lighted, the band played, and notwithstanding the weeping skies, a fair audience assembled. Coquille is the least favorable point in Coos county, but no doubt the elements will sometime be rightly mixed, and the jewel of Freethought will glow.

Early Thursday morning we are up, and the Antelope takes us down the still misty stream. Now and then a dash of sunlight glitters among the clouds, and gives hope that I may have a pleasant journey along the blue Pacific to Langlois. When the huge Gibraltar rock heaves in sight, and beyond it the rolling ocean, the azure sky appears in patches, and the freshening wind seems to be driving away the battalions of the tempest, and with a light heart after dinner I mount the buckboard, and the brave team plunges forward to the surf-beaten shore, where the big rocks battle with the white legions of the sea. Almost in a moment, however, the demons of the sky gather their forces, and the most furious storm of the season strikes us in the face. The rain, the sand, and the spray sweep with such rapidity that I cannot keep my eyes open, and the driver only now and then catches a glimpse of the flying horses. Suddenly the face of heaven clears, and a most gorgeous vision bursts on the view. The vast magnificence of the sea on one side, with its thundering breakers flashing into mist and running foam and flecks of snow over the shining beach; and on the other side the low rolling mounds of sand fringed with green hills and ranks of trees, while the mountainous clouds retreat before the brilliant sun. But the triumph is of short duration. The south wind blows up another host with its "wind-built tents," and it encamps right against the sun and is ready for further onset. When we reach Four Mile Creek the roaring tide and tumbling stream makes nimble combat, and between the two we had to make a straight and narrow cut for the opposite shore. The horses stand the test like Christian saints. Reaching New River, its mouth is shut by the high tide, and for miles backward the bleak waters cover the land, and for a moment the way is lost. Winding among the "waste, solitary places," we discover the ford, but it looks as if one must submerge if he venture in. But it is impossible to camp out, and so my faithful driver, Dave Stitt, unhitches one of the horses and plunges forward to see what chance there is. The water won't go over the top of the seat, and by placing our luggage on that and our feet on the dash-board, we are able to just skim along the surface. The worst is over for that journey. We arrive at Nelson's Hotel while a black cloud shoots its artillery and opens its sluices, for thunder and lightning now mingle with the storm.

We are safe with our jolly landlord, but I wonder who will come to the lecture, for at Langlois there is only a hotel, a store, and one dwelling-house. The people live on farms from two to five miles off. However, just before sunset the golden West opens its halls, and gives a chance for some to venture forth. My staunch Liberal allies, Mr. and Mrs. Cope, cross Flora's Creek in a boat, and with Mrs. Walker and her little child, undaunted pioneers, are present at the lecture. About fifty gather. Three times that number would have come had the weather been pleasant. After the lecture the young folks, while it is raining, have a dance. Our day's struggle was thus crowned with happy work and life, and there was no regret for the toilsome adventure. F. M. Langlois, H. Nelson, B. F. Cope, J. P. Olsen, and others made that hearty greeting which is a reward for any effort. Freethought made us friends at once.

During the night the water rose two feet, and we could not return by the way we came. We had to ford a lake, three or four miles around and across. I did not know but, like Pharoah, I was going into the Red Sea, where the billows would tumble over my unsanctified head, but I trusted to friend Stitt, and the good horses and the staunch buckboard. If anything gave way I might be floating until this time. I had to put my Freethought literature on my lap, hold my feet at a right angle, while the charioteer drove along with the serenity of Neptune, the god of the sea. I escaped safe and sound after two hours' round-about travel amidst bushes, logs, sloughs, and ditches; but I do not desire to repeat the experiment.

A missionary Baptist clergyman, who was traveling the same way a little after me, did go under, and the horses of his coach had to swim for it. However, he is used to that sort of thing, and it didn't hurt him. I am quite thankful I do not belong to his church. My fate might have been like his.

After we struck the beach the route was quite smooth, though the mighty billows, leaping from a thousand miles away, piled upon the shore with infinite tumult, and once in a while sent the white waves to the horse's knees; but only when we crossed Four Mile Creek did it threaten disaster, and then we had to run for it, and the careering breaker returned without its prey. The sunshine struggled out a bit when we arrived at the Ocean House at Bandon, and there was promise of a cessation for our evening's lecture, just enough to allow about a hundred to gather together. In order to offset the dismal skies I discoursed of "The New Heaven and Earth," and subjectively if not objectively there were sunshine and flowers.

Bandon is on the sea, and a beautiful prospect stretches along the shores and over the ocean's breast. The huge rocks, the flying birds, the sea-lions, the innumerable waves—"now dark, now bright, now lending splendor, now reflecting gloom"—make a picture of dazzling enchantment that repays many a weary step.

Beside this sea the spirit of Freethought prevails, and mind is ample like the wide horizon itself. J. M. Upton, of the Bandon Recorder, has the scholar's noble enthusiasm. R. H. Rosa, Captain Reed, Judge Dyer, S. Danielson, William Hammersburg, Emil Walschlager, C. F. W. Von Pageit, J. Jensen, T. V. Nichols—an earnest student of nature, and like his brother H. H. Nichols ever ready for service—T. J. Potts, H. F. Burns, Price Robison, J. B. Hunt, Alex. Snyder, Mr. Henly, Judge Law and sons, Tupper of the Ocean Side where the pilgrim finds a happy haven, and many others with the Schroeder family—soldiers every one of them; grandfather and grandchildren have given that frank fellowship for labor which puts the rainbow upon every cloud.

Early Saturday morning, the Oregon mist still upon the face of day, the steamer takes us to Coquille City, where we arrive about noon. Here we say hail and farewell to Captain Smith and Comrade Nichols, and in a pouring rain begin, we might say, our voyage to Marshfield, for it seems as if water is everywhere. Half way we take steamer. On the wharf as we land J. D. Garfield gives the warm hand, and R. M. Hutcheson and other friends of a year ago. Mrs. Garfield and the three little children make the pilgrim welcome to the happy fireside.

The hall is full Saturday evening, Sunday afternoon, and Sunday evening; and a more generous welcome was never accorded to any speaker.

Marshfield by the sea is where the Westward march of empire stays its step, the Republic spreads its pennon of hope, the jeweled ocean from the orient pours its wealth, and the mighty forests and majestic hills breathe the voice of Freedom.

Never shall I find more magnanimous friends than here, who with heart and hand make the way of progress bright. F. M. Garrison, of Trumbull's brigade, gives the soldier's honest grip. Mr. and Mrs. Hilborn, from over the bay three miles off, don't fail to come, and the next time I will chose the full of the moon that they may have the benefit of its silvery rays for Freethought service, for this time they had to return in midnight darkness. Mrs. Bates, the sister of Mrs. Hilborn, is equally ardent.

H. S. Hyde—who introduced me at the lectures—A. J. M. Campbell, J. G. Chambers, Wm. Hunter, F. Mark, Samuel Archie, C. H. Sherwood, W. S. Bunch, Wm. Vincamp, C. Landreth, J. A. Yoakam, W. G. Webster—whose parting gift will make many a delightful hour in dreamland—E. W. Sprague, N. J. Ostrom, Wm. Hall, Captain Provost, are many whose faces I remember, and wishes for happy fortune. The farewell is bright, for it speaks of future work and nobler gain. As the little city fades in the distance, I turn to new fields with more exultant thoughts of victory. Our Marshfield friends had the band present at each meeting, and its inspiring strains have not yet ceased to vibrate in my memory of these noble allies.

A magnificent drive up the beach of the Pacific twenty miles, with sunlight and gloom commingling, brings me to the mouth of Umqua river. Here Captain Cornwall takes us on his steamer Juno to Scottsburg. A whole minstrel show is with us, but they land at Gardner, and we miss their merry music. It is raining, raining still as we go up the beautiful river, but I could not resist the temptation to let the showers bedew my face while from the deck I watch the wonderful array of hill after hill—precipitous, shining with many-colored rocks, towering like cathedral roof, with long withdrawing aisles into the green masses of forest. We sleep at Scottsburg over night. To-day—Tuesday morning—we journey in sunshine and storm to Drain's. The roads are in terrific condition. The horses were balky, the wagon broke down, but our company was jolly. We drove dull care away, and are safely in port.

I have seldom had such a varied experience as in Coos county. As the oldest inhabitant says, "There never was such a spell of weather," never so much rain in the month of June. Everybody is astonished. Each day fair weather is predicted, and each day there is disappointment. I have resigned myself to a siege of forty days and nights, and shall look around for an ark.

Whatever happens, Coos county will be to my mind a bright and varied picture, spicy indeed with toil and adventure. I wouldn't miss the experience now that I am safely through, but next year I will make a bargain with the weather before I trust its capricious temper.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Drain's, Or., June 19, 1888.

CHINA.

The truth will out. The Rev. Mr. Kimball, at the Congregational Club, last week Monday, said, "The Chinese, as a rule, are uneducated, and densely ignorant. You cannot reason with them. We have, however, very little trouble with them. Once they believe that you are sent of God, they believe all you say, and Christianity makes great progress." Exactly so! And it is there that the Christian fables take root. Reverse the conditions. Make them like San Francisco—the people educated and able to reason—and you might as well tell the Jesus story to stones. They will not believe that the God of the universe had a son by a woman; that she was the mother of God, and her father the grandfather of God. Reason forbids. The Chinese have no reason, and hence they readily become Christians.

IRELAND'S BANE.

Judge James G. Maguire's book on "Ireland and the Pope" should be read by every Roman Catholic who may ever have occasion to demonstrate to papists that the pope is the greatest enemy of those who believe in him. Judge Maguire has made a deep study of the relations of the Irish people with the Vatican, of the Vatican with the English crown, and of the crown with the Irish people. It is a sad story. The people of Ireland seem to be especially afflicted with the curse of Romish superstition. They have been the slaves of the pope, and the fact that the pope has always decided against them in their battles for civil liberty does not seem to have lessened their abject yet voluntary servitude to him. Often Irish liberty has been in sight, and equally often has the pope issued bulls and rescripts against it, so that when Irishmen have fought for their native land they have done so under the anathema of Rome. Everlasting damna-tion was made the price of a few brief years of freedom, and in this is found the secret of Ireland's servitude. And the worst part of it is that there seems to be no hope of anything better in the future. Catholicism in the mind is like scrofula in the blood—the victim may think himself cured, but the symptoms recur in after years and are handed down from sire to son like the mythical curse upon Canaan.

At the root of Ireland's woe is the papal superstition. Judge Maguire does not say so in so many words, but his book substantiates the assertion.

ISAIAH ELUCIDATED.

Much uncertainty has for a long time been felt concerning the significance of Isaiah vii, 20, which reads, "In that day shall the Lord shave with a razor;" and Mr. John Peck, of Naples, N. Y., we believe, once offered a reward to any minister who would tell what it means. It was left to that able colored commentator, the Rev. Vokey P. Chamberlain, of San Francisco, to throw the bright light of elucidation upon the problem. Before a large congregation on New Montgomery street last Sunday evening the Rev. Mr. Chamberlain preached a sermon on "The Greatest Barber on Earth, and His peculiar Customers," in which he said, in explanation of the text above quoted, that God had condescended to take upon himself the task of shaving the nature of man and making him fit to enter the society of heaven. "It is easier for heaven and earth to pass away," said Mr. Chamberlain, "than for man to enter heaven with the carnal upon him. The tonsorial chair is mourning, for God has said that we must come to him in a meek and lowly manner. The brush and water is the something that is required to soften the hardness of our nature. The razor is the gospel. Man must enter heaven shaved, because only young men and young women are admitted there, as the Lord has said that men must go to him as children." The Christian world owes the Rev. Mr. Chamberlain a debt of gratitude which no collection he can ever hope to take up will pay the interest on.

"FREETHOUGHT."

The want of every new paper is, of course, a constituency, and although FREETHOUGHT has obtained a thousand subscribers rather sooner than it expected to, and in less time, probably, than any Liberal paper ever reached that number before, still we are not satisfied to stop here. We have not been in existence quite six months, but in that time progress has been good. We want to keep up the average during the next six months and close the year with two thousand names on the list. Why not? For emphasis we repeat, why not?

We began this enterprise with small capital, no promises, and indifferent prospects. San Francisco has in the past been a populous burying-ground for papers of reform proclivities. But one was alive January 1, 1888, and that has since died. The temerity our enterprise excited more of sympathy than of enthusiasm. The printer engaged to bring out the first few numbers said that he had buried several reform papers from his office, and was prepared to act as undertaker in our case. It is sufficient to remark that he has not yet been called upon to direct our obsequies. We live, we are still in the field, and we shall win.

Friends have appeared from quarters where they were not looked for. They have laid plans for our success which we could not possibly have inaugurated ourselves. We would again lay these plans before the Liberals of the coast and of the country for their verdict, and it is hoped for their action.

Mr. H. P. Stone, of Oakland, makes this proposition: that he will be one of one hundred to pay $20 and send FREETHOUGHT to ten subscribers. With him in this are Mr. N. D. Goodell, of Sacramento, who has already fulfilled his pledge, and Mr. N. Woolsey, of San Bernardino, who has made his first installment. Mr. Pepper, of Petaluma, has placed $10 to his credit and will forward names accordingly, and Messrs. Davies and Butterfield, of Sacramento county, join with $5 each. Others who do not desire their names to be announced at present have signified their intention of extending a helping hand in the same direction.

Mr. Schou, of Oakland, proposes to be one of ten who shall pay for fifty subscribers each at $2 per year.

Next comes Mr. Ranford Worthing, of San Diego, who offers a corner lot 50x100 feet, in that city, to the person obtaining the largest number of subscribers to FREETHOUGHT before May 1, 1889. No paper could ever offer a premium to getters up of clubs equal to this.

There is also a plan proposed by Mr. Putnam, namely, that friends who desire to extend the circulation of the paper may make Gift Subscriptions at $1 each. This plan up to the present time has resulted as follows:

Lord A. Nelson.....	1
C. E. Spafford.....	1
H. Replogle.....	1
J. T. Cox.....	1
Wm. Redfield.....	1
— Ames.....	1
A Friend.....	1
E. Wolfard.....	1
L. Schindler.....	2
Jas. Downs.....	2
E. E. Mensch.....	2
A. Derming.....	2
A Liberal.....	2
T. A. Martin.....	3
Mrs. R. Scott Briggs.....	3
Lillian.....	3
Mrs. Kate P. Wolfard.....	5
Joseph Cook.....	5

This plan affords subscribers an opportunity to send a Liberal journal, at small expense, to places where it will do the most good.

Those who are not able to make Gift Subscriptions may obtain readers at the following rates:

One subscription one year.....	$2.00
Two subscriptions one year.....	3.00
Three subscriptions one year.....	4.00
Four subscriptions one year.....	5.00

At these rates since our last issue Mr. Putnam has obtained 53 subscribers in Oregon, and Professor Seymour sends 5.

By these various methods of work the way is provided for those interested to push FREETHOUGHT along on its second thousand. Possibly, with hearty co-operation from all directions, the first of the new year will see FREETHOUGHT come in a good third, in point of circulation, among the Liberal papers of the country.

We get from the Washington correspondence of an Oregon paper the substance of a discussion over the section of the legislative bill containing a proposition to increase the chaplain's salary from $900 to a larger figure: "Mr. Springer said the house chaplain was old and needed money. Mr. Browne, of Indiana, inquired if there was increased necessity for prayer. Mr. Springer replied that 'members had no idea of the great power needed to bring salvation to a body like this.' Mr. Grosvenor opposed an increase on the ground that the next House will be a better one than this, and will not need so much praying. Mr. Strube inquired if it was necessary to have a very able man for chaplain. Mr. Allen, of Michigan, answered that it always required a high order of ability to deal with an immature mind and that, therefore, the chaplain of the House should be a man of considerable ability. Then Mr. Holman, the old 'watch-dog of the treasury,' said $10 a day was too much for the House to pay for prayer, and the majority agreed with him, for it voted down an increase." These legislators deserve no credit for refusing an increase of salary to their chaplain. Their plain duty is to abolish the chaplain altogether. He is an extraneous person and does not address his remarks to the chair.

IN the Presbyterian Ministerial Association, Rev. J. Woodworth said, "The members of the Salvation Army are as pure as the members of the churches." The Association indorsed these views. The history of the army shows a strong tendency to drunkenness, fornication, and even theft. The great mass of our people hold themselves to be away up on a higher plane than any branch of the Salvation Army we have ever seen.

LITERARY NOTES.

THE blessings of "Self-Control and Temperance in All Things" are set forth by E. B. Waldo, 20 Shonard street, Syracuse, N. Y., in a little pamphlet upon that subject. Mr. Waldo exhorts people to avoid the vices of drink, of passion, and of prejudice and intolerance. His pamphlet contains good moral instruction for young and old, and comes a trifle high at 25 cents per copy.

THE Popular Science Monthly for July has not yet reached us, but from the announcement we judge it will be an especially interesting number. E. Hoyt, S. B., will contribute an article on house drainage, and the series on "Darwinism and the Christian Faith" will be closed in this number. The Monthly is 50 cents per number, published at 1, 3, and 5 Bond street, New York.

ATTENTION is directed to the advertisement on another page of Judge Maguire's work, "Ireland and the Pope." We mentioned this book last week, and have read it since. It is radical on the question of papal interference in politics. It does not touch the fundamental idea of religion, that being outside its province, but it tells the truth about the pope, which all that could be expected in a work of its size. Judge Maguire is judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, and is one of the best known advocates of what is termed the Henry George movement. "Ireland and the Pope" is a book of 118 pages, octavo, board covers, price 50 cents. It may be ordered from the FREETHOUGHT office by addressing Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal. We give prominence to mention of this work on account of its great historical value.

WE have read with a good deal of interest and profit Dr. G. H. Stockham's new book on "Temperance and Prohibition." It is a small book, about 130 pages, 3x5 inches, but there is no wasted space in it, which is a great consideration in getting up a book. Dr. Stockham gives brief histories of the origin of wines, beers, and liquors, describes their properties, their comparative effects, their physiological action, and their value as food, medicine, and poison. Adulteration, license, local option, sumptuary laws, prohibition, and the causes of intemperance are touched upon, as is almost everything else connected with the liquor question. The author yields to the Prohibitionists all they claim except their right to prohibit the sale of liquor. He is with them for temperance, but not for suppression. If man is endowed by his creator with the right to liberty and the pursuit of happiness, as a well-known document sets forth, then prohibition is an error. A man may be mistaken in believing that liquor promotes his happiness, but there can be no doubt that he drinks it with that end in view. The price of Dr. Stockham's book is $1.

THE Sinaloa Colony Club holds its regular meeting next Sunday, July 1, at 2 P.M., at 39 Fourth street.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The Republicans nominate as candidates for president and vice-president Harrison, of Indiana, and Morton, of New York.—The police are instructed to prevent the discharge of fireworks except on July 3, 4, and 5.—The entire business portion of Sierraville was destroyed by fire on the 23d. Loss, $40,000.—Congressman Belmont has introduced a new anti-Chinese bill in the House.—The German Reichstag opened Monday.—There were 119 deaths in this city last week against 107 for the corresponding week of 1887.—Eleven cases of prostration from heat were reported in New York last Saturday. The weather there has been frightfully hot, and numerous deaths are reported.—D. O. Mills has provided for a school for trained nurses in connection with the Bellevue Hospital of New York. The cost was $100,000.—Peterson, of San Francisco, beat Paine, of British Columbia, in the sculling match on Shawnigan Lake, B. C., on the 23d.—The press censor of Russia has ordered editors to abstain from writing exciting articles on the European situation.—Mrs. Garfield has an income of $25,000, $5,000 of which comes from the government in the shape of a pension. General Garfield's estate netted the widow about $40,000, and in addition she received $25,000 insurance on his life. Congress gave her $40,000, and the popular subscription raised just after Garfield's death amounted to $312,000.—Competition between the Pacific Mail and the Canadian Pacific steamship companies is much appreciated by shippers, who are giving both lines plenty to do.—Grape picking has begun in Yolo county nine days earlier than last year.—Minnie Scholtz, the leper girl from Honolulu, has gone East.—Dr. Theodore Gay, who attended ex-Vice-President Wheeler during his last illness, has presented a bill for about $14,800. Mr. Wheeler's executor has refused to pay the bill and the matter will go to the courts.—The Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Dowie are conducting a faith cure business in San Francisco.—The Prohibitionists held a ratification meeting at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, last week. Clinton B. Fiske, Prohibition candidate for president, said: "The home protected against the saloon will be the greatest factor in protecting the honest industry of our people."—St. Louis said not a word on the important question before us. Surely from Chicago we should have received deliverance." John A. Brooks, of Missouri, the next speaker, said: "We will not take a chief representative of monopoly in Nebraska and make him temporary chairman of our National Convention, nor a whisky man from California for permanent chairman. Polygomy, feudalism, and slavery are dead, and the whisky traffic must die."—The suit of William O'Brien, editor of United Ireland, against the Glasgow Herald for $25,000 for libel has been settled. According to the terms of the settlement the Herald publishes an apology for the language in regard to O'Brien and pays him $500.—General Sheridan is so far recovered that he will go to the seashore.—The yacht Olivette upset in Newark Bay last Sunday, and six persons, five of them girls, were drowned.—Charles Sullivan attempted to climb the spire of St. Michael's church in Buffalo to measure its height last Sunday, when the lightning rod to which he was clinging broke and he fell upon the roof, breaking his neck and back and killing him instantly.—The "Duke of York," chief of the Clallom tribe of Indians, was buried Sunday in the Masonic cemetery at Port Townsend, W. T.—Zukertort, the famous chess champion, is dead.—The steamer Gaelic brought 1175 Chinese passengers to our shores on the 24th.—A recent census gives Baltimore, Md., a population of 416,805.—Mme. Diss Debar claims as her guides a spiritual council of ten ancients, for whom Socrates is spokesman. The other members of the council are Pelopidas, Epaminondas, Cicero, Homer, Pericles, Archimedes, Pythagoras, Plato, and Aristotle.—In many parts of Indiana the women are arranging to celebrate the Fourth of July as "foremothers' day." It is a concerted action on the part of the advocates of woman suffrage. Mrs. Helen M. Gougar delivers the oration at Martinsburg, where great preparations are being made for the occasion.—Unprecedented rains have prevailed in Mexico. The Silao river overflowed its banks, and whole towns were swept away. Several hundred people perished.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary.....241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
 CHARLES ECKHARD, Treasurer.....28 Lafayette place, New York
 E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com.....120 Lexington ave., New York
 MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com.....106 So. Halsted st., Chicago

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	Harry Hoover,	S. W. Devenbaugh,
Courtlandt Palmer,	Charles B. Reynolds,	Wm. Algie,
T. B. Wakeman,	Prof. Ch. Orchardson,	Roman Staley,
James Parton,	L. K. Washburn,	H. P. Mason,
J. D. Shaw,	W. S. Bell,	N. D. Goodell,
W. F. Jamieson,	Mattie A. Freeman,	D. W. Smith,
Charles Watts,	M. M. Secor,	Jas. Wardwell,
John E. Remsburg,	Otto Wettstein,	J. W. Black,
Horace Seaver,	Wm. Redfield,	Thos. J. Truss.
Mattie P. Krekel,

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONGRESS A. S. U.

OFFICIAL CALL.

To the Local Secular Unions, Life, Charter, and Annual Members, and all Liberal citizens who support the Nine Demands of Secularism, Greeting:

You are hereby invited to attend the Twelfth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union, which will convene at Lafayette Hall, Wood street, near 4th, Pittsburgh, Pa., Friday, October 5, 1888, at 10 A.M., for a four days' session—5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th inclusive.

All Charter and Life Members, all Vice-Presidents, all Chairmen of State Executive Committees, and all duly accredited delegates from Local Secular Unions are entitled to seats and votes in this Annual Congress. Each Local Secular Union is entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates. Annual Members who pay or have paid $1 in the national treasury are entitled to seats, but not to votes, except by unanimous consent of the Congress.

This Congress will specially consider practical questions tending to further agitation for the taxation of church property; the abrogation of state aid to sectarian institutions; abolition of state, national, military, and prison chaplaincies; repeal of judicial oaths, Sunday and other oppressive and unjust ecclesiastical laws; nullification of attempts to subvert our Constitution by a legal recognition of Theism in the American Magna Charta, and such other measures as will not merely thwart intended theological encroachments, but absolutely expunge from our laws, state and federal, such insidious acts as have already crept in to blot out mental freedom from our republic.

It is to be hoped that the addresses delivered will deal with the practical issues of the organization, so that there will be such an awakening of the people to these vital questions of the hour that a revival of the instinct of liberty and justice for all will necessarily result; that again from the Keystone state—the birth-place of our association—the clarion voice of freedom shall reverberate throughout the land.

Pittsburgh being situated almost in the center of a district containing many of our most distinguished workers, thinkers, and writers, besides the active host within its limits, there is little doubt that this Congress will be a glorious gathering of the forces who stand for mental liberty, as expressed in the desire for a complete Secularization of the government.

S. P. PUTNAM, Pres.,
 E. A. STEVENS, Sec.,
 CHAS. ECKHARD, Treas.,
 E. B. FOOTE, JR., Ch. Ex. Com.,
 MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com.

IS THIS OUR BOASTED PROGRESS?

This morning's News contains a lengthy "special" dispatch from Pittsburgh, where yesterday (June 13) was celebrated the feast of St. Anthony (not Tony of the Suppression of Vice Society) at the church of the most holy name. For days pilgrims had arrived from distant points in a dozen states, and as less than one-third could obtain admission, Troy Hill was packed with men, women, and children, standing with uncovered heads beneath the hot sun until Father Mollinger appeared at the steps to bless the multitude. As this is supposed to be especially beneficial to the sick, many were carried in arms, or brought in chairs. The most notable cure effected was that of Miss Anna Kirk, of Philadelphia, who had suffered with hip disease. After the "solemn" ceremonies she threw away her crutches and walked without difficulty. Oremus. Those who are not cured are advised to remain in the vicinity until they are. Father Mollinger evidently "stands in" with the boarding houses in that neighborhood. I can appropriately quote from "God in the State:" "Rome, once the center of universal despotism, now the center of universal humbug." Americans have pretended to believe that this degrading superstition would never take root on our soil. By low deceit and fraud, it as effectually chains the mind and checks human progress as when it bartered thrones and dictated to Europe by its bulls. It no longer keeps a naked emperor shivering at its gates, but it compels a Presbyterian president and his cabinet to pretend homage by attendance at the corner-stone ceremonies of the Catholic University in the District of Columbia. If Cleveland wants the Catholic vote, he must make way for a papal representative at the White House. That's Rome's next move. How can Cleveland refuse his "dear friend," Cardinal Gibbons, such a reasonable request?

PRESBYTERIANS SECEDE AT PITTSBURGH.

We thought that secession had been effectually checked by the "late wa," but it appears the general synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church has fired on Fort Sumter in the shape of the United States Constitution, which, because it does not recognize Christ or the Christian religion, is characterized as a disloyal document to Christ. They have flung down their dictum that they will not perform any act which implies allegiance to the United States, nor in any way identify themselves with the nation, as long as the government is neutral as to the claims of Christ as the king of nations. They also propose to boycott all the other churches who permit their members to become good citizens. "Here's a how do you do! Here's a pretty mess!" No presidential dark-horses from religious rebels called Reformed Presbyterians. They indorse prohibition (which is a legal process invading the United States law, but then no minister can possibly be logical), denounce tobacco, secret societies, Sunday papers, and propose to boycott all their members who advertise in the same. Their committee appointed to secure Sunday observance in the postal service reported a bill pending in Congress for that purpose. That committee will have to be abolished now, since they have seceded from the United States. As our dictatorial dead-heads have become so refreshingly modest, as it were, it would be well to commence confiscating the property of traitors in "open rebellion" to the basic principles of our government. The American Secular Union ought to get a slice for this suggestion to the attorney general.

A GRAND ACHIEVEMENT.

A poster bearing Wettstein's emblem—the Freethought badgepin— informs us that the Silverton (Oregon) Secular Union, which set such a glorious example for all our friends of mental freedom to follow, will celebrate the anniversary of the dedication of their beautiful hall, built exclusively for this purpose. President Putnam delivers the oration, and such an occasion will doubtless inspire his poetic fervor for one his most brilliant efforts. A basket picnic in the city park, sandwiched by speeches, brass band, choir, and recitations, forecasts a most delightful day. The other speakers are J. T. McLeary, J. T. Ford, and C. Beal, the festivities to conclude with a grand ball in Freethought Hall. We groan,

"Oh what must it be to be there!"

feeling sure of its success, as a lady is at the head of the committee, Mrs. Carrie Fitzgerald, H. D. Mount, E. Wolfard. What a contrast and promise for liberty in the West, to the degrading superstition, which is gaining in the East. Brother Allen and others are a host in themselves.

POISONING BODIES TO SAVE THEIR SOULS.

According to Christianity, the mortal is of little consequence compared to that part which it considers immortal. To that idea is directly traceable a murder in Philadelphia, which has set the Quaker city aghast. Sarah Jane Whitley has just confessed to furnishing her husband with poison with which to end his life, last March, and to poisoning her nine-year-old daughter in April, and her two-year-old boy in May. She says: "I killed Bertie because I was afraid she would grow up in sin and crime; she was a bad girl; she had stolen pennies from the neighbors, and once from her teacher's pocket-book. I killed the boy, as he was in the way. Am sorry for what I have done, and want the people to pray for me." With customary Christian cupidity she had secured some insurance on her victims and collected it. She professed great piety, attended church in her neighborhood last Sunday, and kneeling at the altar asked for the prayers of the congregation for forgiveness of her sins. This wretched woman's crime and conduct are an answer to the churches' claim that morality and religion are one. Is it not time for humanity to protest against the immoral tone of a creed which teaches the body is of so little value that its adherents may sacrifice it to save their souls? Then assist the American Secular Union.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary.

FAITH HEALING.

The announcement in the daily papers that the Rev. John Alex. Dowie and Mrs. Dowie, from Melbourne, Australia, would unmask Spiritualism drew a large number of people to the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association on Sutter street last Sunday at 3 P.M. The main hall is big enough to hold five or six hundred people, and it was full. In the entry is a drinking fountain, over which is the statement that those who drink of the water which somebody or other kept on draught will never thirst again. It was a scrub audience—white, black, and Chinese. Services opened with some of Sankey's hymns sung drearily, followed by a collection. A gentleman with a thick beard read statistics about the number of members in the association in this state. Out of 290,000 young men in California, he said, 40,000 were Christians. In the past year $65,000 had been raised, and 600 young men converted at a little more than $10 per head. A prayer followed the statistics—the same old prayer: "O Lord, thou knowest," and "O Lord, we realize," etc. Mrs. Dowie read from the Bible, and then the Rev. Mr. Dowie took the floor to preach. And such preaching! Dowie speaks the United States language with an English accent. "Daw" is his pronunciation of door; Lord becomes "Lawd," God is "Gord;" "Krarst" answers for Christ, "bean" for been, and "wuks" for works. He had a voice that would split wood. I listened to it for half an hour and came away weary. The announcement that he would unmask Spiritualism was a mistake, as he did not touch that subject, taking the "Beautiful Gate of Divine Healing" as his theme. I have much sympathy for the janitor, whose duty will call upon him to listen to Mr. Dowie's thirteen other discourses of the series.

M.

"GOD'S GRINDSTONES."

Some theologian, Rev. I. D. Driver, we believe, said that "Col. R. G. Ingersoll is one of God's grindstones with which to sharpen preachers." We presume Mr. Driver knew from experience the truthfulness of his remarks. Apropos of this aphorism we note the series of lectures given in Slocum's hall last Saturday night, Sunday afternoon and evening by Samuel P. Putnam, another of these preacher sharpeners. But, if we mistake not, only one preacher availed himself of the opportunity to whet his intellectual ax on Mr. Putnam. The others were sharp enough to stay away, or else too dull to be brought to an edge.

Mr. Putnam's subject Saturday evening was "Universal Mental Liberty." Mr. Putnam showed with a great deal of logical clearness the necessity of every individual thinking for himself in religious matters with as much independence of thought as upon secular matters; that it is our duty to do so; that no subject is so sacred that we are to accept without question what the preachers tell us; that it is the duty of all to investigate for themselves the assumptions of theologians as well as of metaphysicians, or any other class of theorists. He said it is our duty to read the Bible by the light of science just as we read any other book.

Sunday afternoon his subject was "The Necessity of a Complete Separation of Church and State." He showed with much justice and reason the affirmative of this question that is receiving considerable attention all over the United States, and that several divines hold to the same opinion. He showed that the exemption of five hundred millions of dollars worth of church property from taxation forces non-communicants to pay an increased amount of tax by reason of this exemption. In other words, the churches do not pay for the protection they demand from the law. This he thought an injustice to non-sectarians and akin to the support of the church by the state.

Sunday evening he paid his attention to the Bible as a whole, and a few books composing it in particular. He spoke of Jesus as a very good man in his day; that he was to the Jewish religion, or church of his day, what Thomas Paine was to the church of his—an Infidel to the dominant creed, Judaism, which crucified him for his opposition to its dogmas.

Mr. Putnam is a very interesting speaker, and, from his standpoint, reasons well. He made no tirade of abuse on the popular creeds of the day; did not say anything to wound the feelings of any one, being free from personalities. He was not so bitter against the dogmas of the church as the church is against Infidelity. He showed a greater spirit of charity for the creedist than they for Freethinkers. But we deprecate both the preachers and the Freethinkers for their abuse of each other. Each have the unquestionable right under the broad ægis of law to build up their own peculiar views of religion, but neither has any moral right to assail the other, or to ostracize the adherents of the opposite side, for if the Bible is true it will stand the severest test of reason, and if false it will ultimately die like any other ism; and so of any adverse theory, if true it can't be destroyed, and if false it must inevitably die. What we all need to practice is a little more charity for the opinions of our brother-man. Love works no ill to his neighbor.—Roseburg (Or.) Plaindealer.

MR. LARSEN'S OBSERVATIONS.

It is natural that every man protect his own property. But how about God? The Cathedral of Upsala, the most holy church of Sweden, has burned down five times.

I saw once in my time a clergyman unite two hands together—the hand of a blacksmith and the hand of a handsome young damsel—and he said, "What God Almighty hath joined together let no man put asunder." Six years later she put asunder the blacksmith's skull with his sledge hammer.

The clergymen of Norway have great trouble because so many get married by the civil forms of the country. They have altogether lost their monopoly, and the almighty dollar don't go where they want it to. They have now agreed to expel all law-married couples from the holy sacrament. But the expelled people do not care. The soul never gets hungry. JOSEPH LARSEN.

S. P. PUTNAM has made these lecture appointments from June to October. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Eagle Creek.....	July.....4	Morgan.....	Utah.....	Aug.....22
Sandy.....	".....5	Coalville.....	".....	".....23
New Era.....	".....6	Park City.....	".....	".....25
McMinnville.....	".....7-9	Salt Lake City.....	".....	".....26
McCoy and Ballston, Or.....	10-11	Murray.....	".....	".....27
Corvallis, Or.....	12	Heber.....	".....	".....28,29
Forest Grove Or.....	15	Denver.....	Col.....	Sept.....2
Hillsboro.....	".....16-17	Seward.....	Neb.....	".....5-6
Portland.....	".....18	Wahoo.....	".....	".....7-8
Astoria.....	".....22, 29	Lincoln.....	".....	".....9
Cathlamet.. W. T.....	24-27	Omaha.....	".....	".....10
Pasco, Waverly, Colfax, and		Creston.....	Iowa.....	".....11
Spokane Falls, W. T. Aug..	1-12	Ottumwa.....	".....	".....12
Walla Walla, W. T.....	14	Salem.....	".....	".....13
Union..... Or.....	15	West Union.....	".....	".....16-17
Baker City.....	16	Dwight.....	Ill.....	".....19-20
Boise City..... Idaho.....	19	Chicago.....	".....	".....23
Ogden..... Utah.....	21	Pittsburgh.....	Pa.....	".....30

Note This.

A colony of Eastern Liberalists desire to locate in California for the purpose of Co-operative home life, and fruit culture. Friends of progress willing to dispose of suitable lands on favorable terms, or knowing of good government land, please address with full particulars,

ADVANCE AGENTS D. & S.,
Care of Geo. H. Gale, 1425½ Mission st., San Francisco, Cal.

INGERSOLL.

How often do we see and hear of the tributes paid by Ingersoll to the departed! What soul so charged with the love of the good, the true, and the beautiful? What tongue so trained to the utterance of sweet and glowing sentences; so skilled in chanting low, sad requiems over the forever silenced dead? What intellect so capable of weaving immortal chaplets to be laid upon the tomb of the loved and the lost? The thought often occurs to me, Who will give him a eulogy when he is gone? Who amongst all the struggling hosts of men can bring him fitting tribute or render appropriate homage to the intellectual giant of all the ages? For, scan the history of the past, search the records of antiquity, and your conclusion will be—but one age and but one land has produced an Ingersoll. Matchless man! imbued with the love of liberty, full of gentleness, yet of towering strength. Hating oppression, and detesting shams—liberator of millions yet unborn! Whose tongue shall tell his value, whose pen describe the riches he has added to recorded thought? Towering in intellectual grandeur immensely above the champions of bigotry and superstition; invulnerable at every point of attack; parrying with matchless skill the shafts of envy and malice, I for one feel like saying:

Grand champion of humanity, go on!
And in the hidden ages yet to come
Thy cause, augmenting as the years roll by,
Shall from the horoscope of mind and man
Drive off all fears, all clouds and mists of doubt.
And thus in brotherhood all men shall walk—
No creed, no dupe, no tyrant, and no slave!

Boise City, Idaho.

J. A. GOULD.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Scott, the defaulting paying teller of the Manhattan Bank, has returned, turned state's evidence, and testified against Dunn. Dunn seems ready for the fight. Of course he denies that he received the money. The question is, will a jury believe a thief? The Manhattan Bank is the second in age in New York. The Bank of New York is the oldest. When Hamilton was in his glory, the federalists controled this bank, much to the disgust of their opponents. Burr went to Albany, and in his adroit way secured a charter for a new bank—the Manhattan Company. He was a director in it for years. In banking, as in politics, Hamilton and Burr were bitter opponents.

Depression continues in Wall street. The falling off of net earnings of the Granger roads has been appalling. There is depression in the iron trade, coal traffic, railroad construction, manufacturing, and mercantile pursuits. The impression prevails that it will continue through the summer and fall. Stock has been in the dumps the past ten days. There seems to be nothing in the situation to rejuvenate the street. The public stays out.

The evidence of Assistant-engineer Craven before the aqueduct committee was startling. It has stirred up the dry bones. The commissioners are uncomfortable, the contractors are marked men, and the engineer ruined in character. The end is not yet. The people are up in arms, and want to know the whole truth. To be robbed is one thing; to have a defective aqueduct forced on us is another. Millions have already been put into this work, and millions more will be required, let it be as honestly built as possible.

Mrs. Langtry is back from her wanderings, and is at her home in 23d street. Mrs. Potter has also returned, and ended her season by a week engagement at the Grand Opera House. The critics still disagree about her ability, but the crowded houses show that the people award her success—the best of our swells, the middling classes, were each eager to see and hear her. We do not forget that, as an amateur, this lady earned for charity over $50,000. This fact appeals to the sympathy of our people, but does not make them blind partisans. As an amateur she was long ago voted a success. Some of our papers have evidently a spite against her, as their criticisms are bitter even to cruelty. They will not write her down. She has the "stuff" in her. She is daily climbing the dramatic ladder, and ere long will reach the "Hights of Abraham."

The new Broadway Theatre has been a financial success from its opening night. Fanny Davenport gave it character and popularity. Its situation is admirable. A splendid future is before it. The new play at the Casino is not particularly popular, but Aronson seems capable of popularizing almost anything. His company is able and artistic.

Madam Diss Debar's aggressiveness is what one might expect from an adventuress. It is difficult to believe that she expects to convince a jury that old Socrates and friends ordered the return of 160 Madison avenue to Mr. Marsh. Yet this is what she said in court. To an outsider this appears a lofty assumption. It has not increased her credibility or standing in this community. It is painful to see such depravity in a woman.

The Limited Trust Company is erecting a handsome building on the site of the Phoenix Bank and Colgate building. The Bank of America is to erect one on the corner of Wall and William streets. Wall is being filled with noble and massive structures. Builders are, however, doing little this summer in their line. They are feeling the hard times as much as any one.

New York, June 14, 1888.

EUDORUS.

RELIGION AND FREETHOUGHT.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I was much interested in the letter and experience of G. R. Higgins, who sent a copy of FREETHOUGHT to his brother, as given in your issue of June 2, and if you think it worth while you can use the following letter written to my sister, in answer to one from her acknowledging the receipt of copies of FREETHOUGHT, which she promised to read:

I am glad you will read FREETHOUGHT, and certainly do not wish you to agree with anything it says unless it seems reasonable to you. Simply be willing to hear all sides of a question and then decide for yourself; that is all I ask. You have heard the other side all your life, and in that time you have been told much truth and many lies.

You say FREETHOUGHT attacks everything and puts nothing in the place of that which it seeks to destroy. It attacks no known truth or moral precept. It attacks only what it conceives to be error, and I cannot see that it is incumbent upon Freethinkers to put anything else in the place of an error destroyed. We attack smallpox and other contagious diseases, and exterminate them as speedily as possible; but who ever heard of anyone recommending the substitution of some new or less objectionable disease in the place of them? The absence of disease leaves us in a state of physical health, and we want nothing more, only knowledge how to perpetuate that healthful condition of the body. It is the same with the mind. While it is filled with false ideas instilled into it by improper teaching, it is as much clogged and poisoned, and in as unnatural and unhealthy a condition, as is the blood when full of impurities; and when freed from this condition, it is in a proper state to receive and assimilate all truths that may be presented to it, and not till then.

I believe all religions are false and harmful. Why, then, try to substitute a new one or different one for the one destroyed; particularly when the new one can have no better foundation or proof for its truthfulness than had the old? You have read much. Think back over all the religions you have ever heard of from the present time to the earliest dawn of history, and tell me which one of them all you have any faith in except in your own, and then tell me how much and what kind of authority you have to prove that your religion is true and all the rest false. You know just as much about it of your own personal knowledge as any one living, or as any of those who wrote your religious book; for if you have read up the history of the Bible you know that most if not all of it was written from tradition, and long after the time of the persons and events written about.

Let us do away with all religions. We need none of them, and the world will be vastly better off without them, if all can be influenced to turn their minds entirely to the cultivation of moral principles and scientific truths. You know there is no possible connection between morality and religion. Morality is one thing, and grows entirely out of human experience as being that course of conduct which directly tends to the greatest happiness of all human beings, and cannot be taught with too much earnestness from the time before the child begins to reason until the time when he is prepared to assent to its precepts because of his own knowledge and experience. Religion is quite another thing. It is a system of peculiar notions about some future state of existence, with no better foundation for its truthfulness than a guess, or some person or persons' say so, and the farther back in the dim distance of the ignorant past it can date its origin, the greater its claim to authority and respectability; and every one that I know anything about bears upon its face the evidence of its being a scheme for the aggrandizement of the class called the priesthood, whose teachings will not stand the test of scientific investigation. Religion has a tendency to cripple and debase the human mind by leading it to be content with the study and contemplation of unreal, unknowable, and improbable things, instead of leading it out toward the study, contemplation, and discovery of the great truths of nature which lie hidden all around us, and not one of which was ever revealed by any one of the religions I have any knowledge of. It teaches us to be content with fables, instead of digging after facts, and substitutes faith in that which no one on earth can know anything about, except from hearsay, for works, which alone can redeem the world. It teaches us to regard a book as the word God, instead of teaching as Thomas Paine says, that "it is only in creation that all our ideas and conceptions of a Word of God can unite. The creation speaketh an universal language. It is an ever-existing original, which every man can read. It cannot be forged; it cannot be counterfeited; it cannot be lost; it cannot be altered; it cannot be suppressed. It does not depend upon the will of man whether it shall be published or not; it publishes itself from one end of the earth to the other. It preaches to all nations, and to all worlds; and this Word of God reveals to man all that is necessary for man to know of God."

Read FREETHOUGHT for one year; give up the study and contemplation of a religion and word of God that your priest knows no more about than you do, so far as its reality and truthfulness are concerned, and devote your best thoughts to the study of the word of God so grandly pictured by Paine, and you will soon cease to hanker after the "flesh-pots of Egypt," or to desire some other fable to be substituted for the one taken away from you or abandoned.

FREETHINKER.

Boasting Braden.

To the Editors of Freethought:

It has been my life-long principle to meet in debate any opponent indorsed by our Christian foes, and I see no reason to change my resolve. A brother Freethinker may say, as you quote from the New York Truth Seeker, that "Clark Braden is an unfit man for any gentleman to associate with. He is a moral polecat." If to debate with a preacher is equivalent to "associating" with him, then I am in for it, for I will debate with Braden whenever arrangements can be made therefor, and wherever Freethinkers desire to have me.

There is one man (it may be greatly to my discredit) in the Freethought ranks who is willing to meet any debater the Christians choose to put up. I have met Elder Braden three times in debate. I am not conscious of being less a gentleman now than before I met him; and as to his "merciless sarcasm," I am not one bit afraid of it, in spite of the fact that it pleases unthinking Christians amazingly. The way to meet such a Christian representative is with the utmost good nature. While he is engaged in pouring the holy oil of his personal abuse upon my sinful, Infidel head, amid the applause of his Christian supporters, I endure it pleasantly, not for "Christ's sake," but for the maintenance and defence of Freethought. In my scores of debates within the past quarter of a century I have never applied a single opprobrious epithet to any of my opponents. A gentleman will not do so. At the same time I freely discuss the manner, as well as matter, of a polemist; and, while I sometimes feel called upon to scathingly rebuke a Christian controversialist, steadily refuse to quarrel. Debating is not quarreling. My rule has been to let Braden do the wrangling all by himself, like Lord Dundreary's bird "flocking alone."

I have received letters from several Freethinkers of the Pacific slope inquiring whether I would consent to meet Clark Braden in debate. My answer is, Yes. If a few of the Secular societies will arrange for not less than five debates of from eight to twelve nights for each debate, and will insist upon Elder Braden meeting me on clear-cut propositions, such as I have encountered him on, and the same rules which have governed my debates with him, I am willing to meet him in five, ten, or twenty debates, commencing Nov. 15 or Dec. 1. My engagements are such that I cannot attend to the matter before Nov. 15.

One of the "rules" to which I refer is this: "Any categorical question asked by either disputant shall be answered by his opponent on the spot, without equivocation."

I have never yet found a "defender of the Christian faith" who could stand the "merciless sarcasm" of a Freethinker's questions. Braden cannot. He wilted like a cabbage leaf in a hot July sun, in my Salem, Ill., debate with him, and utterly refused, at last, to answer another question.

It is my opinion that he does not like to meet this Freethinker in debate, and while boastfully challenging the Infidel world to debate with him, never even intimated that I have ever stood ready to meet him whenever the people desire both sides presented in the form of a joint oral discussion. In Ottawa, Kansas, this boasting Braden backed squarely out of a debate with me. Would not think it, would you? What will his new-found Christian friends think of this?

All the business arrangements for five or more debates I will make directly with Secular societies or Secularists, not with Mr. Braden. Next week I will send you the propositions and rules which he once accepted. Will he meet me on them? We will see. In case Elder Braden backs out I will expect to give a lecture course in place of debate.

There is not a defender of Christianity in the world who is able to answer a Freethinker's facts, arguments, and questions. His system goes to pieces under their crushing weight. It is with systems I deal, and not merely the men who uphold them; hence, I demand that Elder Braden be indorsed by Christians, wherever debates may be held, as a representative of Christianity. Yours fraternally, W. F. JAMIESON.

Monte Vista, Col.

On the Trail.

Dear Editors:

The city of Oak Point is evidently so-called because there is not an oak in sight or hearing, but it is a very lively little hamlet of a few hundred persons, some of whom told me, in answer to my inquiry if there were any godly folks living here, that there was not one. I immediately scattered bills for two lectures in Young's Hall, and then proceeded to make the acquaintance of everybody who would listen. Oak Point is at the mouth of a fine creek and covers not more than two acres, mill, lumber yard, dock, warehouses, planing mill, log boom, residences, and all, with mountains shutting in on all sides except where the river runs through. I went around the point of the mountain to find Brother Wiggins and family and a lodging place. Friend Wiggins has a snug little nest of a few acres of level land, all embowered by forest, shade, and fruit trees. I left this little oasis in the desert of an itinerant's wanderings, promising to return at an early day.

I reached Stella, only six miles up the river, in time to fill an engagement, made several weeks before, for Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. I found P. M. Herron and wife emphatically "our kind of folks," with a good home, a nice little store, and a large fine hall, all seated and lighted, dedicated to Freethought and the religion of humanity. Make a minute of this, you weary laborer in the Infidel vineyard, and when you come this way let your voice be heard in this hall for freedom and universal mental liberty. Sunday the hall was well filled, mostly by young people who had come five or six miles to hear the first lecture on the "Origin of the God Idea." I found that a number of copies of FREETHOUGHT, the Truth Seeker, and Boston Investigator, were taken here and in a German settlement just back a few miles from this landing. The most of these folks—originally from Bingen-on-the-Rhine—are Materialists. My friend Herron I found true as steel to his belief, and no sign of putting his light under a bushel for fear he would not sell so much soap and sugar, which, I am sorry to say, is the way some of our pseudo Freethinkers pan out. From Stella I crossed the "mighty Columbia" again, back into Oregon to Magyr's Landing, and found my friends Robert Cril and wife in their beautiful home all surrounded by fruits and flowers. I gave four lectures here, in the school house, to a general turnout of the whole settlement. Here I met my old friends, S. H. Tryon and wife, and sister-in-law, who came over a mile and a half in a skiff, besides climbing up and down the river bluff over three hundred feet high, perpendicularly. "Our doctor" has between three and four hundred acres of the primeval forest, with his Queen Ann style of house under those giant trees right on the brow of this mountain three hundred feet above the river. He has, also, a wharf and wood yard where he markets his fine timber to the passing steamers. His wood comes down "from above," literally, making the lightning ashamed of its slow way of traveling, as it, the wood, comes down the chute as if the god Jove were hurling his thunderbolts at some puny pigmy below. I think Mr. Tryon has a fortune here in his pile of earth, rock, and woods, for it is a delightful spot for a summer's residence—the finest between Portland and Astoria—but it needs a balloon to get up and down these beetling cliffs.

I arrived at the Clackamas county, Or., Spiritualists' camp-meeting at New Era, June 8, and found a goodly number of "the faithful" camped there. There were some twenty-five tents and cottages altogether, besides the large frame temple or tabernacle, built to "worship" in when the weather might be unpropitious. The meeting just past could hardly be called a big success, for the reason that it rained every day and every night for the ten days. I met here Mr. Briggs, from Boston, Mass., the "wonderful dark circle" medium, who had a "black hole" fitted up for him, in the shape of a 10x12 shanty with every crack and crevice calked water tight, and in this dark as Erebus circle room the angels of "light" played the fiddle and guitar, threw the bells and musical instruments all over the room, while "spirit hands," caressed by loving pats the faces and forms of the sitters, whispered into startled ears long-forgotten names and incidents, pulled their beards, felt in their pockets, and in many other ways gave evidence of their presence. Some were positively certain there was no fraud, while other "doubting Thomases" thought it very thin. Mrs. Finnegan, from your city, gave many hundred platform tests, describing not only the spirits of many departed men and women, but also spirit dogs, horses, etc., which were recognized as somebody's pets. Verily it would seem that heaven must be a large place to hold all that have lived, or may live in the future, both animal and human. "In our father's house are many mansions," to be sure. Probably none but Spiritualists of the first water will accept these descriptions as real. Mrs. Brown, from Minneapolis, Minn., was also another platform test medium who seemed to give much satisfaction to all. Mr. DeJohns, of Salem, a reformed Jew, and Colonel Reed, of Portland, were the regular speakers, and very good ones they were, only they were so dreadfully afraid of hurting the feelings of those dear orthodox ones who never forget to lance the poor heretic of Freethought, either in public or private. Brothers DeJohn and Reed call very often upon God, and quote from that old compendium of horror and nastiness, the Bible, as if they had not yet progressed beyond its direful teachings. Shame on pretended scientific Spiritualists who cater to a cause so accursed as Bibliolatry. So long as Spiritualists open their meetings by singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee," then pray to that God, and preach to that God, and end their "services" by singing the Doxology, and with an orthodox benediction, so long will the scientific Freethinker paddle his canoe with "nary" a spirit to guide it over the troubled waters of this mundane shore. I, being appointed to speak Sunday evening, took for my text the article in FREETHOUGHT of June 9, headed, "God in the Constitution." Our idea, carried all through the hour we spoke, was for the Freethinkers, Spiritualists, and all to labor as hard, and pay their money as freely, to keep God out of the government, as the orthodox were working to get him in. I also gave another regular lecture entitled, "Right Generation, not Regeneration," showing that when men and women once learned how to marry right, then children would be born right, and none should be born any other way; then none would have to be regenerated—by the bye, a very doubtful process—for all would be as good as nature could possibly make them. About one-half of the audience thanked me privately for this lecture, while the other half did not seem to believe in falling in love scientifically no how, but would hold on to the good old way of going it blind, but they got something to think of which it will take them some time to digest. A lecture was announced for July 6, here on this camp ground, for our Mr. Putnam, who was here last year and I think will call out a large crowd if it ever quits raining. I met Mr. Frank Fuller, of McMinnville, Mr. Bruce and wife, Mr. Wallace, all of Lebanon, Mr. Hawkins, Mrs. Howland and others from Salem, Mr. Wm. Phillips and family, Thomas Buckner and wife, Postmaster Jessie, wife and family, all of New Era. All thorough Liberals and splendid thinkers, and true as steel to their belief. I also met many from Portland, Astoria, Hillsboro, and other parts of the country. All these I am proud to have met and to have them on my list of friends, for they are men and women who are working hard for the good time coming. I took a goodly number of them as subscribers to FREETHOUGHT, though most of them were loaded down with more spiritual papers than they could read. The camp broke up, as it commenced, in a rain storm, but held out its allotted time. Many truths were uttered; and may they all meet again.

Portland, Or.

PROF. D. C. SEYMOUR.

In the County of Coos.

Dear Freethought: Putnam has come and gone, and since parting with him there seems to be a void. To listen to the expounding of the principles of Freethought and contemplate its beautiful possibilities, especially when put in contrast with things that be, makes one either wish that the new heaven were at hand or regret that he was born so soon. There is, however, this consolation, that these principles will be sooner or later realized; and although we cannot enjoy the resulting blessings ourselves, we are helping to make a better world for our children.

I sometimes marvel at the inconsistency of Liberals. There is no question that Liberals are in the majority, yet how small is the number enlisted in our cause! They admit the justice of our demands and acknowledge the injustice of the demands of the "National Reform" party, and yet sit idly by and let a few do the fighting. Some will no doubt wait until the shackles of superstition are solidly riveted, and then for the first time realize the "might have been." Is this right? Is it just? Is it consistent? I say No—most emphatically, No.

Some put other issues to the front. Do they not know that the realization of our ideal state will make more possible the realization of other just and consistent issues? If not, it is surely time to give the matter a serious thought. Is it not a pleasure to labor for a cause the fundamental principle of which is right and justice to all? Can you lose anything by doing so?

Every Freethinker should use his best efforts to help the cause. An ounce of prevention is worth a cargo of cure; therefore up and at it and help spread the glad tidings.

I believe the indifferent Liberals are an element worse for our cause than the "Reform" party. We do not know what to expect of it when the final issue comes. We do of the "Reform" party. It is the cause of the slow development of our organization, thereby adding enthusiasm to the other side.

We had uncommon bad weather during Putnam's visit here. It rained about all the time, yet we had good audiences. He fulfilled all of his appointments at Myrtle Point, Arago, Coquille City, Langlois, and Bandon, some of them under trying circumstances. He is a zealous worker. If devotion to cause is a virtue, "Put" should have a medal.

FREETHOUGHT received quite an addition to its subscription list, and more promised. So the good work goes on. The Coquille Secular Union met at Bandon on the 15th inst., just before the lecture. Mr. Putnam was tendered the chair, and presided part of the time. He gave the Union a short discourse, touching principally the necessity and work of the National organization and his hopes for its future welfare. The Union pledged $20 for next year's work.

J. HENRY SCHROEDER.

Arago, Or., June 17, 1888.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Samuel P. Putnam spoke here last evening, in Masonic Hall. He has gone down the river to visit towns at the mouth, and on the coast; will speak in Marshfield or Coos Bay, Sunday. He is the only Freethought speaker who has ever visited this country, and is making many friends along the river and on the bay. The cause has never been defended, except individually; no united effort had ever been made, until Mr. Putnam came here. There is some stir now. But few understood the situation. Favorable comments were made by Christians, on the last night's lecture, "Danger Ahead." There was a fair audience, although there was a little "Oregon mist" falling at the time. He missed the steamboat seven miles above, and Mr. Henry Schroeder brought him down in a skiff, so it was 9 P.M. before the lecture commenced. Many gave up his coming. He leaves many friends here, and will receive a hearty welcome next year, on his return. I think I can send you some new subscribers for FREETHOUGHT soon.

HENRY H. NICHOLS.

Coquille City, Coos County, Or.

An Orb of the Better Day.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed please find postal note and stamps to extend my subscription. We look for FREETHOUGHT as regular as we do for the rising of the sun, and that it may rise like the sun to shed its light on all creation, is our wish. Trusting we may be able to shake Brother Putnam's hand in September at Creston, I am, fraternally,

JACOB GEIER.

Cromwell, Iowa.

Not in a Proper Frame of Mind.

"Well, deacon," said the new minister of a Dakota church, "did my initial sermon seem to please my congregation?"

"Yes; some of the boys were havin' a little game of draw after meetin' was over, an' the general sentiment among 'em was 'bout unanimous in your favor. Homestretch Mike allowed the sermon wasn't much, but he hed just run up agin' fours with a king full, an' under them circumstances a'most anythin' would natterly seem kind o' ornery."

THE Sundays don't seem half so long after the fishing season opens.—Boston Courier.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

HAND-BOOK OF THE LICK OBSERVATORY

OF THE

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,

—BY—

EDWARD S. HOLDEN, LL.D.,

Director of the Observatory.

A volume of 135 pages, 12mo., printed on heavy paper, and bound in flexible cloth covers. Besides likenesses of Professor Holden and James Lick, it contains Twenty Views, Drawings, and Illustrations of the Locality, the Machinery, and the Apparatus connected with the great Astronomical station. The Table of Contents includes:

- I. Information for Visitors.
- II. Sketch of the Life of James Lick.
- III. A Visit to Mt. Hamilton.
- IV. History of the Lick Observatory.
- V. Description of the Building.
- VI. Description of the Instruments.
- VII. The Work of the Observatory.
- VIII. Telescopes.
- IX. Poem: To the Unmounted Lens.
- X. Astronomical Photography.
- XI. Clocks and Time-Keeping.
- XII. The Principal Observatories of the World.

By mail 80 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION. Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE, Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" needed by all. Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling work for AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Tributes. "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," "The Grant Banquet Toast" and "Little Harry Miller's Grave," printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing; four to any address for 50 cents, or either one for 15 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," and all the famous tributes, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, table-talks and day-to-day conversations of the author. Fine steel portrait and autograph facsimile. Price, in cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. A. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton. Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extirpation; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on large quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT, 504½ Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7 jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50. With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17, $18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4, being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies' watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels, $22; 15 jewels, $25. In good second quality filled cases, $2 to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38. Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra. Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case. Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1 best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas, 50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12. Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free. BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Designer and Patentee of new FREETHOUGHT Badge in PINS and CHARMS—emblematical of the light and day of Freethought, Science, and Reason vs. the night and darkness of Superstition.—Exact size of cut and smaller, two-thirds size. Warranted solid gold, enameled in four colors. Most beautiful badge ever designed. Small, $2, $2.75, $3.50. Large, $3 to $5; with genuine diamonds, $8, $10; and charms up to $25. Demands daily increasing.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 27.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JULY 7, 1888

HAS the state investigation of the Catholic orphan asylum at San Rafael fallen through, or has it been completed, and what is the result? The public which supports this institution should not be satisfied with simply learning of the horrors existing there through sensational newspaper articles. They should demand assurance that the orphans have been rescued, and that state appropriations have been withdrawn.

THE California Catholic, published in Los Angeles, is candid enough to admit that the Roman Catholics elected the last president of the United States, and says that no one doubts that the next president and the rest of the presidents to the end of all time will be the ones chosen by the children of Rome. The children of Rome will vote as their priests direct, and the priests will be instructed, through their superiors, directly from the Vatican. Those desiring tips on the coming election should apply to Pope Leo XIII.

THE Fourth of July was generally celebrated throughout the country. With remarkable inconsistency the exercises were participated in by many Christians who look joyously forward to a time when this republic shall be no more and they shall dwell again in a kingdom. It is strange that they should care to commemorate the inauguration of a few brief years of independence here when they know that in the everlasting hereafter they are to be the subject of a king. With them it seems that a form of government good enough for heaven is not quite good enough for this world.

THOSE were queer ceremonies that attended the transfer of the Lick Observatory to the State University of California, at Berkeley last week. In the first place there was prayer, and afterward Professor LeConte, in accepting the gift on behalf of the board of regents, defended the study of astronomy on the ground that it is an investigation into the "modes of the Divine Intelligence." His address, as reported, was as much an exhortation to piety as to the study of science. In consideration of the fact that James Lick was a Freethinker, and made this contribution to science because he believed that science would be the death of superstition, it is to be deeply regretted that the ceremonies could not have been secular, even if the orators of the occasion had not generosity enough to pay to Freethought the tribute which was its due.

JULY 4.

Now we hail the glad returning of this time of powder burning,
And, all thought of labor spurning, go we out to celebrate
Old Columbia's independence of King George and his descendants,
And we're punctual in attendance where the people congregate.

How the air is filled with humming when we see the soldiers coming
And can hear the distant drumming and the bugle's silver sound!
In the streets are noise and bustle, and an all-pervading hustle,
For the country's on its muscle when its natal day comes round.

See the crowd the pavement lining, men whose hands are hard with mining;
See the gorgeous sunlight shining on the uniforms and guns,
While the state of golden treasure trembles with a sort of pleasure
'Neath the many-footed measure of her own intrepid sons.

Hear the orators appealing to the patriotic feeling
That on every one is stealing, on this day of jubilee;
Hark to cheers full-throated given, feel the air by salvos riven,
While on every breeze of heaven floats the banner of the free.

Then at eve the fires are burning, and the rockets upward turning Pass beyond the eye's discerning, tinting sky and cloud o'erhead.
Thus the celebration closes and the sober man reposes,
But the midnight hour discloses half the city painted red. M.

NEWS AND NOTES.

At Silverton, bright Silverton, the skies are clear, and for a day or two the sunshine triumphs, long enough to have a happy reunion in the grove and the new Freethought Hall. I went to this the first thing, for a year ago it was only a dream. On its outward walls shines our motto, "Universal Mental Liberty." It is a large, handsome hall, capable of holding an audience of five hundred. The columns are wreathed with evergreen and flowers. On its walls are the pictures of Ingersoll and Thomas Paine. Over the platform is the noble design of Otto Wettstein—the torch of Liberty above the night of superstition—in blue and gold. It is an attractive place, a beautiful home for Freethought, for intellectual and social progress. The heart is joyous with this sign of advancement and the greeting of many friends. Again I am at the hospitable fireside of the Fitzgerells, where the religion of humanity is like the harvest of summer. The cherries are ripe, and all one has to do is to eat and be merry.

It rained all the way from Salem to Silverton, but fate kindly put the storm-king at rest for a time, so that we could gather out of doors. The people seemed to be coming from everywhere. There was the whisper of conflict in the air, but the Liberals pursued the even tenor of their way, and the exercises progressed as if there were no such omen on the ground. On Friday evening, the anniversary of the organization, the hall was filled to overflowing. Many Christians were present out of curiosity, and there was opportunity to give to them some of the principles of Freethought. No conflict occurred, and those who desired to listen to the other side had the chance to do so at the church, where dirt could be thrown as freely as if there were no such thing as civilization.

Saturday was the gala day. I guess about a thousand people came from the surrounding country. The sun shone forth gloriously. The grove was filled. The Silverton Band discoursed sweet and martial music, and then the choir gave the songs of Liberty that vibrate in the heart. I lectured on the "Dangers Ahead." Our enemies were on the alert and ready to occupy the platform whenever we quit. It was threatened at one time to haul up a wagon, and start an opposition meeting close by our platform, or build another platform; but the city marshal expressed the opinion that this was not a good thing to do, and law prevailed. After my lecture was over the band played and the choir sang, and then the hundreds of people took their lunch beneath the trees, and there was no disturbance.

At two o'clock we again assembled for speeches. T. J. McLeary, of Stayton, gave an eloquent and fervid discourse upon "Science and Civilization," and showed the cruelty and ignorance of theology. Mr. McLeary is a bold advocate of Freethought, and has suffered because of his outspoken devotion. The Christians voted him out of school at Stayton, where he had taught successfully, and there was no fault to find except with his heresy. Mr. McLeary is a man of most earnest purpose, of enthusiasm, and stands by the flag even though the enemy do come pouring in. He is a genuine reformer and does not believe in a particle of compromise.

After his address Miss Nellie Hill, of Independence, recited "Nameless" by Miss Voltairine de Cleyre—published in FREETHOUGHT—which was finely rendered and held the deepest attention of the audience, and its noble lesson was enthusiastically applauded. The music again made the arches of the forest ring with "hymns of lofty cheer," and after a short address upon "Humanity and Morality," little Miss Kate Matheson recited "The New Dispensation," and the voice of happy children mingled with our celebration. The Nine Demands were then read by the secretary, R. D. Allen, and also Ingersoll's declaration of the principles of Secularism. Signatures were received to the petition for the taxation of church property; and then we had a sociable time until 5 o'clock.

The Christians, however, were everlastingly on the watch, and the moment we adjourned announced "religious services" for the evening in the grove; and, without asking permission, and without any compunctions of conscience, possessed themselves of the seats and platform built by the Secular Union. What a beautiful exhibition of Christian humility! However, we let them have the place. Our hall was full, and music and dancing held sway until midnight, and, with this festivity, humanity lost nothing of its dignity or glory. Through joy we reach the heights as well as through labor.

Sunday the storm-king seemed to be sulking far away, and didn't put in an appearance, and so we held meetings in the grove morning and afternoon, and in the evening at the Freethought Hall, when every seat was occupied. Yes, there was "one vacant chair," the "Champion's." He had announced there would be "fight or foot-race." The "foot-race" was his and the fight was "off." Everything on our side was harmonious, and the reunion from beginning to end was a success, and the future is bright. The harvest fields are glowing. The enemy is in a terribly demoralized condition. All their efforts have been futile. They expected to break up the gathering. They wanted it to end in a row. Their "Christian faith" was set upon this, but they have been wofully disappointed. The Silverton phalanx preserved order, and, only for the threats of Christians, no one would have noticed any signs of a disturbance. All the quarrel was on their side. The Liberals attended to their own business and let others do the same.

How can I mention all the many friends at Silverton, the Allens, the Geers, the Leonards, the Mounts, the Klines, Mr. and Mrs. Wolf and daughter, Dr. McClure—president of the Union, which now numbers one hundred and fifty—R. L. Milster, Mr. and Mrs. Ames, Elliot of Crawfordville, the Scotts of Butte Creek, Mr. and Mrs. Graves of Molalla, Mr. and Mrs. Smith, the Wolfards—always at work—James Downs, the Fishers, C. F. De Gure, J. T. Cox, A. Polley, Henry Warren, P. Rauch, Wright Forshay, I. Armstrong, Mackintosh, W. Dunegan, G. Haynes, John Porter, McCormick of Butte Creek, the Davenports, Hibbard, Miller, and a long list whose names are enrolled in FREETHOUGHT. It would take quite a sojourn to know each by name. But I know the faces, and the warm welcome is not forgotten; and this splendid reunion will indeed be a grand impulse for future effort. Our Silverton friends are to be congratulated on their courage, enthusiasm, and generosity. They have made a point of influence which will be widely felt. I look forward next year to a still grander rally, and I want all the Liberals in the state to come who can.

The Silverton Union is pushing forward the petition for church taxation. This is an important matter, and without doubt an advance will be made. The next step will be a state organization, a larger union of our forces, and more efficient plans.

Monday I go up—or down, I don't know which—to Stayton, where a few friends hold the fort most gallantly. The Christians were on the lookout, and arranged their forces accordingly. Their first piece of strategy was to cordially invite the Liberals to occupy their church, and give them a chance to reply. Our friends chose to occupy their own place, and be masters of the situation. The Christians outnumber the Liberals in Stayton, but, for all that, the Liberals know their rights and maintain them. We held our meetings in the schoolhouse. It was too stormy to have any grove meeting. In the morning the rain poured down, but it cleared off finally. I gave three lectures—Monday evening, Tuesday afternoon and evening—and the house was packed. Everything was peaceable. When our meeting adjourned, the Christians went over to their temple and had "divine worship" all to themselves, which consisted mainly in collections and abuse of Freethought.

If all Liberals were as strong, as ready for service, as the Stayton Liberals, what a mighty host we would have! Will C. Brown, who met me at Aumsville, is a loyal soldier, with McLeary, who is our "schoolmaster abroad" in this country. The moment I struck the domicile of friend W. H. Cooper I felt that it didn't make any difference how obstreperous the foe was. We were all right any way. Cooper had camped out and couldn't very easily be driven from his base. He and his family dwell in the fair land of reason, and his home was a delightful rendezvous for the little company of pioneers; and so the campaign went on with happy surrender to all sorts of weather—rain or shine—for just now it is impossible to tell from moment to moment what will happen in Oregon. No sooner do we declare that the rain must be over, and that it is a good time to gather crops, when the floods roll upon us without warning, and we are drenched. I am getting used to it, and am not surprised at any conglomeration of the elements. June is as capricious as April, and her smiles and tears are like the politics of the day—so mixed that nobody knows which side he is on. This very minute the rain is tumbling down from a blue sky.

N. R. Adams, Captain Waters, Samuel Horner, N. Lacroix, of Sublimity, are the frontiersmen of Freethought, with friends Cooper, McLeary and Brown; and the Christians will always find them "right side up with care" whenever there is threatening demonstration. The enemy talked loud, and dire undertakings were hinted at, but they never happened. The meetings were peaceable, and the theological club was unable to break the backbone of Liberalism.

Dr. Matheson, of Aumsville, is on hand, both at Silverton and Stayton. He likes to keep the ball rolling and is ready for the "Champion." But the Christians always back down when the doctor is near. He knows how to ask too many tough questions. His wife and little daughter are also in the front ranks.

Friend Allen, of Silverton, who makes the music that charms the soul, faced the storm and joined our forces at Stayton. Others were coming up, but the Oregon mist was a little too damp.

The campaign at Stayton was all that I could expect. There was no backward step. It is forward still. Heart and hope are unabated, and with the companionship of such brave spirits,

"There's a warmth about to glow;
There's a flower about to blow;
There's a midnight darkness changing into gray."

I had the pleasure of meeting Wilson Duncan here, late of Phoenix, Arizona, now of Council Bluffs, an old-time Presbyterian, but at present and from 1882 a soldier of Freethought, enlisted for war in the glorious army of humanity.

From Stayton I take my winding way to Lebanon—twenty miles across, but fifty miles by stage and railroad. I am greeted by John Settle. The enemy accompanied me all the way up, and the first question that greeted him on the platform, as he stepped from the car, was, "Is Putnam aboard?" It seemed to bother him, and he gruffly answered "Yes." He put up at one hotel and I at another, and soon the forces were in motion. John Settle is an old campaigner and not to be bluffed. He has been in the country since 1847. Everybody knows him. His record is honorable. He is now eighty years of age. His first vote was cast for Andrew Jackson, and he has voted the straight Democratic ticket ever since, and will continue to do so till the twentieth century. He is a famous shot, and can hit the bull's-eye now at one hundred and fifty yards. They all call him "Uncle Jack." He thinks for himself. He has taken the Truth Seeker from the start. Like Davy Crockett he's sure he's right, and then goes ahead. He had charge of the campaign. The Presbyterian clergyman at once tackled him for a debate. The clergyman was told that he himself could have all the time he wanted. He proposed the substitute. The substitute was refused on the ground that he was no gentleman. This angered the clergyman, and he came near striking Mr. Settle in his impetuosity. He is lately from the South, and is called the Texas Evangelist. He doesn't like opposition. At a recent revival he in vain called upon those who wanted to reach heaven to arise. Not a soul responded. He was angry and announced that on the next evening he would discourse on "How to go to Hell," seeing that no one was disposed for a trip to the other place. He is a very accommodating clergyman. He has maps for both routes, and I suppose can furnish tickets for either.

The frantic way he rushed about the street, when his substitute was laid on the table, was quite entertaining. He was a good advertising sheet. The hall was filled at my lecture. He and the substitute were promptly on hand. Near the close they both jumped up and went for the door, and the clergyman snapped his fingers and cried out, "Come over to the church and hear the reply to this!" Christian courtesy, was it not? They didn't give me a chance to pronounce the benediction. Beautiful exemplification of the Golden Rule. However, I let things take their course, and said nothing. On the following evening the hall was again filled. I gently reminded my hearers that it was a matter of respect to the speaker to remain until the peroration was given. The same process was repeated by the clergyman and substitute, but no one followed as on the previous evening. All the Christians remained until I ended. They didn't follow the leader this time. I am much obliged to the substitute. He is a valuable advance agent. I hope he will keep in the field. There couldn't be a more useful "drummer" for the Freethought cause. I feel like the blacksmith whose wife was continually beating him. He said, "Let her do it. It doesn't hurt me, and it does her lots of good." The Christians confess that they hire him to do the barking. The barking amounts to nothing, but it is really one of the cheapest methods of advertising that has come in my way.

Only a few Liberals are at Lebanon, but we are satisfied with the outcome. There is great excitement, and with it thought and investigation. Dr. L. Foley has always been radical and outspoken, and is a strong man and prominent citizen. Dr. Lambertson, George Hardy, Mr. Reed—"mine host" of the St. Charles—Mr. Peterson, G. W. Taylor, J. M. Settle, etc., are generous and uncompromising allies; first in war, if necessary, and first in peace. We make no fight. We simply stand our ground, and purpose to enjoy our privileges. So far there has been no difficulty. The clergyman apologized for his conduct to Mr. Settle the next day. It is discovered that bulldozing will not do.

Thursday afternoon, between the glittering showers, "Uncle Jack" took me to the Soda Springs, and we had a fine time. The waters are refreshing. The scenery from the quaint little village is lovely. We behold broad meadows, noble hills, fields ready for the harvest, the wandering herds, majestic forests—a mingling picture of mist and sheen, gloriously baptized by the showers that seem like a golden host rayed against the sapphire sky, and the advancing and retreating splendor of the sun that is vainly trying to give the farmers a harvest season. The crops are in splendid condition, but a few more rains will be destructive of the now wealth of promise.

Returning home I enjoyed the delightful hospitality of Mr. Settle's house. Mrs. Settle still claims to belong to the church, but if all Christians were as gentle, as Liberal as she, there would be no conflict in this world; for then nature and humanity would shine out, and the skeleton of theology be forever buried. She takes so much of Christianity as is sweet and truthful—made of real human nature—but the "dark things" of the gospel are utterly ignored.

I am now at New Era with my good friends W. W. Jesse and family. Passing through Salem, I had a pleasant call upon Mr. and Mrs. Torstner and Mr. Tiffany—staunch Liberals—who keep the sunshine of Freethought in this gloomy orthodox fort, which is haunted by the ghosts and awed by the priests. But I believe that some day the shadow will be removed.

June 29, 1888.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

SCENERY CORROBORATED BY SCRIPTURE.

The Rev. Mr. McKenzie, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of San Francisco, has had his vacation, and returns to his pulpit fortified with new arguments, which he is prepared to promulgate to the confusion of all Infidels. He opened the campaign last Sunday before a large congregation of receptive worshippers.

Referring to his recent sojourn in the country, the reverend speaker said that nothing before had so impressed him with the harmony between the Book of Nature and the Bible. He then proceeded from the general to the particular. For instance, in the country one is struck with the presence of mountains, plains, and rivers. Turning to the Bible he finds Mount Sinai, Mount Carmel, and other elevations mentioned, also plains, particularly that of Shinar; and, piling demonstration high as heaven, rivers are many times referred to. What, asked the Rev. Mr. McKenzie, could be more conclusive, not only that there is harmony between Genesis and geology, between the Bible and nature, but also that both are the work of the same almighty hand?

Dr. McKenzie admitted that he did not see the mountains and the rivers while on his vacation, but he had indubitable evidence that they existed. He had been in the woods, however, and had smelled their sweet perfume, and turning once more to holy writ he found there much prominence given to incense. If any further evidence were necessary to prove the oneness of nature and scripture, this latter coincidence furnished it.

Now all this may be very satisfactory to Dr. McKenzie, and he may deem it a part of his duty as a Christian minister to prove the reality of the works of nature by the Bible. Yet we should consider it further within the scope of his calling to pay more attention to proving the truth of the Bible by the works of nature. Others have observed the mountains of which he speaks, and have never thought of turning to holy writ for corroborative evidence that they exist. Substantially the same is true of plains and rivers. If the Bible writers had forgotten to mention them, their reality would not be doubted.

The plain duty of Dr. McKenzie and other preachers is to study their Bible first and then resort to nature for verification. We read in this book that the age of man on earth is about 6,000 years; that there was a man before there was a woman, and that woman was, so to speak, born of man. Does Dr. McKenzie find these alleged facts substantiated by nature? The Bible states that at one time a shadow moved backward on the face of a dial, and that at another time the sun stood still for a day. Are occurrences of that kind sufficiently familiar to the student of nature to form anything like a correspondence between the subjective order of the thought and the objective order of the phenomena?

Again, we read that if one have faith as a grain of mustard seed he may say unto this mountain, "Remove hence to yonder place; and it shall remove." Has Dr. McKenzie ever experimented in such a way as to prove the relation of Bible to fact in this case?

We could name many other instances where the sacred record lacks corroboration by nature, but they may be left until those mentioned have been attended to. Our object is merely to put Dr. McKenzie upon the right track. He will gain nothing by demonstrating that natural objects were familiar to Moses. No skeptic will deny that there are mountains, rivers, or plains, or even that fragrance emanates from the flowers of California. But there are many who doubt the correctness of biblical geology, astronomy, and physiology. Let Dr. McKenzie harmonize these with nature, and his duty is done. The skeptics of the world will look to it that our hills are not gnawed away by the tooth of doubt.

THE LIST.

Since our last issue we have had an accession of two names to Mr. H. P. Stone's list of one hundred who are to help the cause by paying $20 for ten subscribers each. The new names are:

S. LITTLEFIELD, of Anaheim;

W. S. RODGERS, of Boulder Creek.

Mr. Rodgers writes:

"Inclosed find $10—$5 for a club of four, and $5 for Gift Subscriptions. Also put me down on Brother Stone's list of one hundred to furnish ten subscribers and $20. The cash and the subscribers will be forthcoming whether the wished-for number respond to Mr. Stone's appeal or not. Anxiously hoping for the success of 'our' paper, I remain,

"Sincerely yours, W. S. RODGERS."

We do not know exactly how many subscribers this earnest Freethinker has procured for FREETHOUGHT, but the book is full of them—something more than one a week on an average. He may well speak of FREETHOUGHT as "our" paper, since he has done so much for it. Such services as his touch us elsewhere besides the pocket.

Mr. Littlefield writes:

"Herewith find inclosed $20 to apply on subscriptions to FREETHOUGHT. Yours truly, S. LITTLEFIELD."

A letter like this does not seem to present any point for discussion. It simply says, in effect: "Here is your $20; here are the names. Go on and prosper." We are grateful just the same.

Some time ago a man with shoulders broad enough for an Atlas, and otherwise formed in proportion, came in from the Sierras, absorbed the hand of the writer in one of his, laid the other on the youth's shoulder, gave him some good advice and a piece of gold, and laughed so heartily that the cheerful echo did not die away for weeks. It was Mr. R. H. Bliss, of Camptonville, Yuba county, though he says they call him "Dick." After he had gone we made the remark that if Mr. Bliss was a specimen of the Freethinkers of California we were rejoiced to be here. Our friend has just been heard from as follows:

"CAMPTONVILLE, June 30, 1888.

"MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: I herewith inclose $5 for Gift Subscriptions. Don't give up the ship. Yours truly, R. H. BLISS."

There is no danger that the ship will be given up while the Man of Magnificent Proportions stands by to pass the ammunition forward.

We have already published a letter from Mrs. Kate P. Wolfard, of Colfax, W. T., one of the women whose names have been familiar to us for a number of years. All the Truth Seeker readers know it. She sent the names of five subscribers. Now we get another letter from Washington Territory, and more evidence of the good work an earnest woman may do. Mr. Peter Selde, of Davenport, writes:

"Having the welfare of your paper at heart, Mrs. Selde has taken upon herself the task of getting you a few subscribers, hoping thereby to help the cause along. You will find inclosed $8.35."

Fortunate is that cause or that paper whose welfare the ladies take to heart. It cannot fail then, because it has its root in the home and family. Long life to all the fair workers for FREETHOUGHT.

It is said that friends are proved by adversity, but the discovery is now made that the publication of a Liberal paper on the Pacific Coast is an equally conclusive and much more satisfactory method. To say that this encouragement is due entirely to the excellence of the paper, or to the efforts of the publishers, would be claiming too much. Our labor is merely co-operative in the general work. We wish to do our part, because it is a fact familiar to experimenters that it is useless to boost anyone who is not trying to climb.

WE REPLY COURTEOUSLY.

The Christian Independent of Oakland says:

"FREETHOUGHT is a little one-hoss Infidel paper published in San Francisco. He does not care so much for my dyspepsia as he does for the fact that I put Clark Braden after him in this city and backed him down on his own platform. Of late years slight attacks occasionally of dyspepsia are my trouble, it is true. But Clark Braden to FREETHOUGHT is dyspepsia, colic, yellow fever, smallpox, paralysis, softening of the brain, nightmare, et id omne!"

We deny that the putting of Clark Braden or anyone else after an editor of FREETHOUGHT "backed him down." The senior editor of FREETHOUGHT stood before Clark Braden and an Oakland audience and denounced Braden as a blackguard and a liar. He still maintains that position. We have in our possession evidence which shows Clark Braden to be a blackguard and a liar. We shall print it, and it will force the Rev. George Sweeney, editor of the Christian Independent, to admit that the characterization is just. Did the Rev. George Sweeney ever see the letter that Clark Braden wrote to B. F. Underwood concerning the Rev. John Sweeney, his (Sweeney's) own brother? Clark Braden may be "dyspepsia, colic, yellow fever, smallpox, paralysis, softening of the brain, nightmare, et id omne!" to Freethinkers, but we will show that to the Christians anywhere who indorse him he is a pestilence and an epidemic. There are things calling themselves workers for Christ that are nauseating even to a Christian.

Mr. Sweeney refers to the "one-hoss" character of FREETHOUGHT. Possibly this paper may be correctly classified as unhippic, but we beg leave to so far adapt the remark of a well-known Freethinker as to observe that its horse is not a dead one. Besides, one good horse, for the general purpose of getting there, is often found preferable to any number of jackasses.

THE petitions for the taxation of church property in Oregon may be forwarded, when filled, to R. D. Allen, secretary of the Silverton Secular Union, who will see that they are duly presented to the legislature.

THE generosity of Mr. Ranford Worthing, of San Diego, has carried his name abroad. The London Freethinker makes a note of the corner-lot offer to the person who obtains the largest number of subscribers to FREETHOUGHT, and says that Mr. Worthing has adopted "a practical way in which to push his principles."

THE politician is a little wary of the political pastor. At the Republican convention, as is learned from the Chicago Mail, Mr. Clarkson called attention to the matter of selecting a chaplain. Several members of the committee at once interjected that a different chaplain every morning was desirable. One committeeman mischievously moved that no chaplain be selected by the name of Burchard. Another gentleman moved that the chaplain's prayer every morning be submitted in manuscript, before delivery, to the chairman of the convention. Chairman Jones thought the officers of the convention would have enough to do to attend to their own prayers. The matter of prayers and chaplains was then promptly relegated to the sub-committee on arrangements. It seems that the convention entirely overlooked the claims upon its gratitude of the Rev. Mr. Ball, of New York, and the Rev. Mr. Pendleton, of Massachusetts.

To the two hundred subscribers whose names were added to our list during the month of June we extend a hearty greeting. May they be long with us! To the twenty-four whose subscriptions reached us on the first working day of July we say likewise, All hail! To those who have not subscribed we would announce that we are still holding the reception, and they are invited to attend.

A TRIO of hearty miners from the interior of the state called at this office last week, with lumps of heavy gold-bearing ore in their pockets, and besides otherwise treating the occupant with great consideration they left a little package of yellow "dust" as a token of their appreciation of the aims of FREETHOUGHT. McLean and Johnson and Lee were their names, hail fellows all. The Californian has reversed the selfish scriptural maxim, for where his heart is, there is his treasure also.

WE learn by reference to the Republican journals that Mr. Harrison is to be the next president of the United States, as the intelligent citizens of this country will not elect to the highest office within their gift a man who would place American industry in competition with the pauper labor of the East. We further discover, by perusal of the Democratic press, that Mr. Cleveland is to be elected by a great majority as a rebuke to the man who favors unrestricted Chinese immigration and the naturalization of Mongolians. It thus appears that during the next four years the United States will have two presidents. Hail Columbia, happy land!

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

During the month of June $1,882,000 was coined in the mint in this city.—The assessed value of property in San Francisco is $272,711,006, an increase of $20,964,895 during the past year.—The 98 deaths in last week of June made the smallest death rate for many months.—A strike is looked for among the coast seamen against a threatened reduction of wages.—The Greenbackers, United Laborers, and the Industrial Party of California will pool their issues in the coming campaign. On July 12, delegates will meet at Grand Central Hall for the nomination of presidential electors, and a full state ticket.—The young ladies' seminary at Los Angeles was nearly destroyed by fire on Monday. Also the Tribune composing rooms in Oakland, and the business portion of the town of Flagstaff, Ariz.—The Spiritualist Camp-meeting at Oakland formally closed last Sunday.

There is a great strike among the ironworkers of Pennsylvania and Ohio.—Henry George is working for Cleveland.—The reduction of the national debt during the past fiscal year amounts to $110,000,000.—There were during the year ending June 30 importations to this country to the value of $70,000,000.—Iowa courts have decided that imported liquors may be sold in that state in original packages.—Two young men of Racine, Wis., locked the door of the Methodist church in that city during the service, and it became necessary for a deacon to climb through a window and unlock the door before the congregation could be released.—Senator Stewart has a scheme in hand to secure a national appropriation of $250,000 for the irrigation of arid land.—Wisconsin dedicated seven soldiers' monuments at Gettysburg, Pa., June 30.—Yale won the intercollegiate boat race on the Thames at New London, Conn., last Friday, defeating Harvard.—The duke of Marlborough, one of England's noble and disreputable lords, was married by Mayor Hewitt of New York to Lillian Hammersley, June 29. Mrs. Hammersley is a divorced woman, and Marlborough is a libertine and blackleg. —The president has approved an act making it a dire offense to send duns upon postal cards, provided said duns are calculated and intended to injure the feeling or reputation of the person addressed, or to bring him into discredit, or which threaten him. —J. H. Connell, of Hinsdale, Ill., was driven crazy by viewing the panorama of the crucifixion of Christ in Chicago. After a brief season of prayer he drew a revolver and commenced firing at an imaginary devil in the roof, and when interrupted turned his gun on the police officer. He was overpowered and locked up. —Mary Smith, of Philadelphia, crazed by religion, hanged herself one day last week.

Emperor William of Germany and the czar of Russia met on July 4th. The German police think they have discovered a Socialist plot to assassinate the emperor. —The recent fires in Sweden leave 12,000 people homeless. —A dispatch from Rome dated June 30 says: "Important changes are about to be made in the Vatican. Monsignor Galimberti will probably be appointed papal secretary of state. It is expected that a more conciliatory policy will shortly take place of the present policy of intolerance." —The Pan Anglican synod, in which the United States and Canada are represented, is in session in Canterbury, Eng. —The church at Brezecz, Galicia, says a Vienna dispatch, was struck by lightning during a recent thunderstorm, while services were in progress, and wholly demolished. Three persons were killed and 100 injured.

THE CHRISTIAN "CHAMPION" AT SILVERTON.

Clark Braden, the notorious, is doing Marion county, Oregon, and particularly Silverton. He struck this place Tuesday evening, 19th inst. He came at the instigation of the Christian church to show up the "cowardice of Infidelity," and to run Mr. Putnam out of the country. The local paper says "his friends recognize in him one of the ablest champions of Christianity in the world"—a sorry compliment, by the way, to the "grand old man," Wm. E. Gladstone, of England. He addressed the "lambs of the upper fold" at the M. E. church, 19, 20, and 21 inst.; Mr. Putnam's dates being 22, 23, and 24, inst. Members of the Secular Union also "took in the show." The writer heard him, and it is the unanimous verdict of every man and woman of common sense, who is not swayed by prejudice or saturated with orthodoxy, that the Liberal press' denunciations of this "moral polecat" are mild. I have in my time heard a great many sermons, and a great many lectures on a great variety of subjects, and by speakers, preachers, and lecturers of personalities representing various walks of life, and I can truthfully say that I have never before heard a harangue so inflated with egotism, vulgarity, bombast, and abuse.

But I must confess that I am surprised that my Christian friends here, after hearing him disgrace the pulpit of the M. E. church by abusing, in the vilest language, every Liberal in this place—men and women who are leaders in society and public affairs—denouncing us as the very "scum and off-scouring of the country," bow down to him, and worship him.

He tells his followers that the Infidels of this place must be subdued or they will ruin the country. They already disgrace it by their existence. "You have got to run them out of here," he tells them "or they will—well, they'll burn your town up; that's what they'll do!"

When we consider that the town is mostly owned by Free-thinkers, this Christian advice is timely. Whatever may be the conditions of society elsewhere, it is a fact that a very large majority of the leading tax-payers within a radius of six miles of Silverton are Liberals; and are recognized as the very best of citizens. Many of them are old pioneers, and have raised their families entirely outside of the church. Many of them have grown-up sons and daughters, and both intellectually and morally they are the peers of any like number of Christians' sons and daughters. Until Braden came amongst them last week this was admitted by all Christians. But now they begin to see that they have not been "serving the Lord" as they should, for, forsooth, they have allowed Infidels to live among them. Since Braden has been expounding the blessed gospel: "I come not to bring peace, but a sword. I come to place at variance father against son, mother against daughter, sister against brother," etc., they realize their duty. It is to malign their Freethought neighbors and relatives, and create dissensions in families who are divided on religious matters. It is to teach the Freethinker he has no rights they are bound to respect. The angels who are reported as announcing, "On earth peace, good will toward men," could certainly not have meant Christianity as a means to bring it, for its very history is written in blood, and we have an exemplification at Silverton of what it would do to-day had it the power.

Christian ministers and editors tell us of the great liberties we enjoy, and that the cry of the Liberal lecturer that there is danger of ecclesiastical encroachment is all bosh. Your Christian neighbor will tell you that he respects your honest opinion, but regrets that you cannot find the light. They say that you have as good right to disbelieve as they have to believe. Many Liberals believe the Christians are sincere, but let a number of Liberals unite and assert their right, and the truth of the situation will dawn. They will find that the liberty they enjoy in this land to-day is not because Christianity gives it to them, but in spite of it. Christianity has not the power to prevent Freethought lectures; for who will say that, had she such power, she would not have despotically used it at Silverton while Mr. Putnam was with us?

It will be remembered that one year ago while Mr. Putnam was lecturing here, the Christian Church sought to engage him in debate with Clark Braden. Mr. Putnam publicly refused to meet Braden, on the ground that he was a vilifier, and cited the pamphlet, "Ingersoll Unmasked," as the evidence upon which he based his charge. As many of these scurrilous pamphlets were in circulation here, the evidence was before us, and Mr. Putnam was sustained in his refusal. The Christians were not satisfied, but proposed to confront Mr. Putnam with Braden at the first opportunity, and demand a debate or an "investigation" of the charges made by Mr. Putnam. So when they learned Mr. Putnam's dates here, this month, arrangements were perfected with Braden to force an issue, and he came as before stated, sending an advance agent in the form of the Christian Independent, with a whole wagon-load of indorsements. The Union, at its meeting, 17th inst., passed resolutions denouncing Braden's conduct as exemplified in his scurrilous pamphlet before mentioned, and sustaining Mr. Putnam's refusal to meet him in debate, and the leaders in the church were notified of the fact in writing, by the secretary, and this should have settled the matter with any reasonable party at once. But they were bent on war, so at Braden's lecture Sunday evening they appointed a committee of three (the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Christian churches each being represented in the committee) to wait on the Secular Union with a communication, of which the following is a verbatim copy:

STATEMENT AND RESOLUTIONS.

At the close of a lecture in the M. E. church in Silverton by Clark Braden, Tuesday night, June 19, 1888, the following was adopted:

In June, 1887, S. P. Putnam visited Silverton, Oregon, and lectured. During his lectures there was talk of a public debate. Clark Braden was selected to represent the believers of the Bible. Mr. Putnam refused to meet Mr. Braden, and made attacks on Mr. Braden's character.

In view of these facts, we, the believers of the Bible, in Silverton, in mass-meeting request the Secular Union to accept the following proposition of Mr. Braden:

1. The Secular Union of Silverton shall select three members of the Union—persons in whose decision the people of Silverton will have confidence.
2. These persons shall constitute a committee that shall invite S. P. Putnam and Clark Braden to come before them for an exhaustive examination.
3. S. P. Putnam shall present his charges against Clark Braden and his reasons for refusing to meet him in debate.
4. Clark Braden shall present his reply to such reasons and charges.
5. The committee shall decide whether such reasons and charges have any foundation in truth and justice.
6. The committee shall send the report to the Infidel papers of the United States for publication.

The undersigned were selected by the audience to present the above paper and to transact the business

R. C. RAMSBY,
C. F. MASCHER,
MATTHEW SMALL. } Com.

President McClure having been absent from the meeting of the Union, 17th inst., was not apprised of the fact that the resolutions as published in FREETHOUGHT, 23d inst., had been passed, so he stated to the above committee that action would be taken by the Union as soon as expedient. When the secretary advised him of such action, and informed him that the leaders of the church had been notified of the resolutions, the matter contained in the paper was not further considered. On Friday, 22d inst., the committee presented the president of the Union with the following communication:

PREAMBLE AND RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, Infidelity has always arrogated to itself the exclusive right to the titles, "Freethought," "Liberalism," "Broadthought," "Rationalism," etc.

Whereas, Infidelity has always clamored for investigation, and that all persons should always be eager to hear "both sides;" and boasted that it invites challenges, and defies discussion; and that its platform is ever free to queries, objections, and replies; and that replies are defiantly invited; and that it is always eager to divide the time with every opponent.

Whereas, Infidelity has always sneeringly denounced Christians, churches, and preachers for making coward's castles of meeting houses and pulpits, by refusing persons the liberty to present objections and make replies in religious services.

Whereas, Clark Braden, during his lectures, invites Infidels to present objections and to occupy the platform in replies.

Therefore, We, believers of the Bible, in Silverton, would respectfully request the Secular Union of Silverton to make good its right to use the titles Freethought, Liberalism, Broadthought, Rationalism, and the constant boasting of its members that they are always eager to "investigate," to "hear both sides;" of their confidence that they have the truth; that their platform is always free; that they defy replies and discussion, by dividing the time with Clark Braden during the series of meetings now contemplated. By doing so they will reciprocate the liberalism and courtesy of Mr. Braden, and avoid a retort to the reproach that they make a coward's castle of their platform by shutting out all discussion.

They will set a good example by practicing what they so vociferously preach, and they will have some basis for making such demands of Christians.

The undersigned were selected by the audience to present the above, and to transact the business.

R. C. RAMSBY,
C. F. MASCHER, } Com.
MATTHEW SMALL.

In answer to the foregoing the following was communicated:

SILVERTON, June 23, 1888.

To R. C. RAMSBY, C. F. MASCHER, MATTHEW SMALL, Gentlemen: In reply to your first communication we have to say that the Silverton Secular Union is not concerned in proving, or disproving, the charges made against Clark Braden by Mr. Putnam, or any other man. We have heard Braden, and had we a desire to convict him of being other than a gentleman, we are persuaded that we could do no better than to allow him to proceed with his own case as he is now stating it to the people from your platform. Mr. Putnam, when at Silverton one year ago, indicated his willingness to meet in public discussion any Christian gentleman. He has not receded from that position nor will he recede from it. But we wish it distinctly understood that our platform is free to gentlemen only. If your second communication is worthy of reply you will find it in this. Respectfully submitted,

J. W. MCCLURE, Pres. S. S. U.,
R. D. ALLEN, Secretary, S. S. U.

MRS. CARRIE FITZGERELL, E. WOLFARD, H. D. MOUNT, Ex. Com.

At Mr. Putnam's lectures Friday evening and Saturday, both forenoon and afternoon, Braden and his followers were in attendance—a fact very gratifying to the Liberals, as it afforded the Christians an opportunity to note the difference in the style of the two speakers. At Braden's harangue on Wednesday evening, he declared his intention of demanding a hearing at Mr. Putnam's lecture in Freethought Hall on Friday evening. He came in early, and secured a seat near the front. A dramatic scene was looked for. At the conclusion of Mr. Putnam's lecture, President McClure having arisen to dismiss the audience, Braden sprang to his feet and asked permission to "make an announcement." "Yes, sir," said the president, "if you will confine yourself to a mere announcement." Braden answered the president that an announcement was all he asked to make, and proceeded to make it; which was to the effect that he would immediately repair to the M. E. church, and make a reply to the lecture just given by Mr. Putnam.

Many left the hall to attend the show at the church; some Christians and some Liberals, the latter out of curiosity, the former to get a dose of faith medicine, and to learn more of the "rotteness and cowardice" of Infidelity.

On Saturday Braden contributed quite largely to the interest of our celebration by his presence. Many who had never before seen this specimen of the genus mephitis got a glimpse at him for nothing, and were satisfied. Those who had the animal in charge got somewhat ruffled at us because we would not give them the greater part of the afternoon in which to exhibit it. But we exercised our own sweet will in regard to the matter, and if there is any reason why we should have done otherwise, we would like to have our Christian friends reduce the same to writing and forward to FREETHOUGHT for publication.

In conclusion I will say that I do not think that Liberals have any reason to fear Clark Braden. Sensible Christians, or those who are willing to appeal to their reason or manhood, will invariably repudiate Braden on sight—at least after they hear him once. Several Christians here are utterly disgusted with the man, but strange to say, a very large majority still cling to him, which proves, if it proves anything, that no matter how void of decency or manhood a man may be, if he will only don the robes of a priest and go about the country slandering his fellowmen who refuse to accept a religion that science and reason reject, the doors of the church are open to him, and he is welcomed and royally entertained. In other words, a great many people naturally prefer humbuggery, and there is no place where a greater premium is placed on humbuggery than in the church.

Silverton, Or., June 25, 1888. R. D. ALLEN, Sec. S. S. U.

CHRISTIANITY AS TAUGHT IN THE CREEDS.

The system of religion now called Christianity is based upon the story of the "fall" of our first parents in Eden, from the effects of which Christ came to redeem the whole human family. The fall, we are taught, made redemption necessary; if there had been no fall, no redemption would have been necessary. The story of the fall is so mythological that it is now generally discredited by biblical scholars, and by all scientists.

When and where this story of the "fall" originated, no one can tell. There is nothing of it in the book of Genesis, where it would naturally be looked for, in connection with the story of the first disobedience. The penalties inflicted there—if we are to believe the Bible—were all temporary and physical, none of them extending beyond this life, and none of them affecting the spiritual nature of man.

The prophets evidently knew nothing of it. Jesus and the twelve apostles seem to have been ignorant of it. We have no record of it in the Bible, until we find it in the writings of Paul; and he seems to have constructed his theory without any authority from the Old Testament, or from the teachings of Christ. We have, then, as the foundation of this doctrine of the "fall," the mere conjectures of Paul.

The doctrine of the "vicarious atonement," like the theory of the "fall," resting merely on the conjectures of Paul, and based only on the first fallacy, must fall with it. These two theories that have deceived the church for more than sixteen centuries, being thus disposed of, let us glance at a few of the absurdities they involved.

According to this legend of Eden, Adam, Eve, and the serpent were just as God made them, and he had pronounced them "very good." Adam and Eve, like the animals, were "naked and were not ashamed," and like the animals did not know good from evil. Their maker wanted to keep them in this state of ignorance, while the serpent wished for their enlightenment. Though in the first chapter of Genesis we read that God gave them the fruit of every tree "for meat," chap. i, 29, in the second chapter, verse 17, "the Lord God" says, "But of the tree of knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Now when the serpent approached Eve, and she had told him what the Lord God had forbidden and threatened, the serpent replied, "Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." Here is a question of veracity between God and the "good" serpent, and the first question of the kind that we have any record of in the Bible. Which told the truth? The question is settled in verse 22 of the third chapter, where "The Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil."

It is a pretty heavy strain on human credulity to believe that the serpent was more intelligent than the man and woman, and at once became their adviser; that it had the power of speech and at once talked in human language; that it knew just the effect that would be produced by eating the fruit of that tree; that it told the truth, as God himself bears witness, while the "death" that God threatened was not so much as mentioned when he passed sentence on the man and woman. And then must we believe that the Lord God was the first champion of ignorance, while the serpent was the first advocate of knowledge?

Leaving the Garden of Eden with its legends, let us see what is involved in "the scheme of redemption" through the "vicarious atonement." There being, in this theory, three persons in one God, each of them "the very and eternal God"—"God the father," "God the son," and "God the holy ghost"—we must believe that one is three, and three but one. These three, though of one substance, power, and eternity, act very differently toward the human family. As one distinguished theologian expresses it: God the father says, "My law has been broken and I demand a sacrifice." God the son says, "I am God equal with you; my law has been broken the same as yours; but I do not require any sacrifice; on the contrary I am willing to offer myself as a sacrifice, if that will be satisfactory." God the holy spirit says, "I am God equal with you; my law has been broken the same as yours, but I neither demand a sacrifice, nor offer a sacrifice, but I shall be satisfied with what is satisfactory to you."

One-third of God is angry and demands a sacrifice; one-third of God is loving and offers to sacrifice himself for man's redemption; and one-third of God does neither.

This doctrine of the trinity, as now taught, is not found in the Old Testament or in the New; and the atonement by Christ is taught only by Paul; and the material out of which he constructed his theory is of the most imaginative character. These two doctrines grew up long after Christ's death, and were mainly the work of African theologians, and contain much of both Jewish and Pagan superstition. Modern criticism now establishes the fact that the idea of a general catholic church, and of a New Testament canon, started about the same time and grew up together. The church consolidated its organization, and at the same time constructed its doctrines and its new scripture, each depending on the other, and both grossly fictitious. Fifty gospels were presented to a church council for approval, among which but four were sufficiently plausible for acceptance, and these contradict each other in some of the most important matters.

The attempted genealogy of Christ in Matthew differs in almost everything from that in Luke, and both claim to give only the genealogy of Joseph, who, it is claimed by all orthodox Christians, was not the father of Jesus. Matthew traces the line through Solomon, the much married son of David, who was born "of her who had been the wife of Urias," while Luke traces the line through Nathan, another son of David. But the contradictions are so numerous that I will only give the above samples of them. Our present Christianity is a composite system, containing very little of the Sermon on the Mount, and a great deal that is taken from Judaism and Paganism. The "Golden Rule" and other excellent precepts of Christ were not original with him, but had been taught by others for centuries before his time. These required no miracle to induce belief. Their excellence was self-evident and only needed to be uttered to secure assent. It was the Jewish and Pagan portion of Christianity that called for the supernatural and for miracles. It was easy enough to believe in the Golden Rule, the blessedness of the "pure in heart," and in the lesson taught by the parable of the good Samaritan; the excellence of such teaching was self-evident. But when the Pagan custom of changing a man into a God was entered upon—changing the man Christ Jesus into the God Christ Jesus—then miracles were deemed necessary, and religious fiction was ready to furnish them, as it had done in other lands for ages. And when the Jewish idea of sacrifices was applied to Christ by Paul—that "Pharisee of the Pharisees," whose whole religious training had been in that line—he did not fail to furnish the miracle to sustain it.

To make a Jewish sacrifice of Christ involves many absurdities. In the first place, if God doomed the whole human family to eternal perdition for one act of disobedience, performed by the first parents when they did not know the difference between right and wrong, he showed himself more cruel and heartless than Satan was ever accused of being. If God the father could not show mercy to any of the human family until his own best beloved son was murdered in his presence, he is hardly the being that we can address as "our father."

If Christ was offered as a sacrifice for the sins of the world, is it not strange that for thousands of years no person on earth—so far as we can learn from the Bible—was ever informed of it? That, though he was to descend through the tribe of Judah, none of the tribe of Judah seemed to have learned that fact even to this day? That he himself never seemed to have had an idea that he came into the world for the mere purpose of being offered as a sacrifice to reconcile the father to his human children? And that those who put him to death never dreamed that they were acting as priests, in offering a human sacrifice to God for the redemption of the world? The soldiers did not seem to understand that the cross was an altar, that the infliction of capital punishment was a religious ceremony, or that they were appealing to the love of the father by the murder of his innocent son. Even the victim, when he cried out in his agony, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" seems not to have mistrusted that his God, on whom he called, was the one who had ordered his execution for the mere purpose of appeasing his own divine wrath.

That the whole world should be doomed to eternal perdition, and not know it; and then, after thousands of years, be redeemed and not know it, are among the fundamental truths of modern Christianity that we are taught we must believe or be damned. Is it any wonder that but five per cent of the people are connected with the so-called evangelical churches? J. W. N.

ROBERT THE DEVIL.

THEM LONG-COOKIN' "SHALL NOTS."

I've often wonderd if the "shall nots," or "Ten Commandments," as they're called, which has come down to us from the day of Moses in the only truly good book that ever was, has done as good execushun as the 'riginals wood a done, if Mose in his great rath hadn't smashed the stone slabs on which they was rit by the finger of God?

You know the fust set of them "shall nots" was got up durin' that ever memerable tatertay of forty days and forty nites, between God and Mose on a mountain top, the same bein rit by the finger of God ackordin' to the truly good book, which, if it was so, I never could see why the presence of Mose was needed, unless for consultin' on the part of the Lord, which don't seem to be givin' the latter due credit for an all-knownin' God; but if that wasn't it, what was Mose tatertayin' there so long for?

This set havin' been broken all up by Mose in his great rath, the Lord in his mercy said he wood renew 'em, and there was another seance on the mountin top of the same length of time, but Mose had to do the work this time, the Lord dictatin', and not ritin' with his finger, as afore—probably to kinder pay off Mose for smashin' the 'riginals, you know; and yet he got orful rathy himself, offen, and smashed things high halleluyer, boys! Now, the question is, has the duplicate done the biz that the 'riginals wood a done? Has the "shall nots" from the finger of Moses got in their work like the "shall nots" from the finger of God wood a done? We never shall know, but can't help thinkin', all the same, that a god's finger and a man's finger is two very different kinds of fingers, and it seems as though the fust had ougter carry more wate than the second, don't it?

But no matter, the Hebrew nation got the second handed set of "shall nots," but it is doubtful if they 'presiated the mercy and goodness of God in givin' 'em a set of rules which they must a been brakin' putty liberally, or why did the Lord spring 'em onto 'em? If they wasn't in the habit of stealin' and killin', and uther ungentelemanly acks, what need was there for the Lord commandin' 'em not to do so? 'Tween you 'n me 'n the lamp-post, reader, I gess them galoots of Mose's wood jest as live not had them g'idin' rules as to had 'em, and didn't 'preshiate God's benevolence for a cent!

Considerin' that the Lord mite, or oughter, been able to git up them ten "shall nots" in jest about three shakes of a lam's tale, and cood a handed 'em to Mose some mornin' 'fore brekfast, it seems funny that he had to hive himself with Mose up on that mountin for forty days and forty nites, thus neglectin' biz and givin' the boys, who tho't Mose had tumbled into some gully, or been eat up by wild lions, a chance to git up an oppersishun god, which chance they took, gittin' up a god in the shape of a carf made of gold—think of a god in the shape of a carf! But then, what's in a shape? A god's a god, take any shape he may, ain't he?

It allus seemed strange to me that it took the Lord sech a long time to rite a hundred or two words, when our Evarts can shoot off a paragraph of a thousand words in less 'n an hour, by the clock! But if it took him that long in the fust place, seems to me Mose had oughter been able to rite 'em down in the second place in a day, and oughter been able to done it, rememberin' the fust ones, without goin' up on the hill, and havin' nothin' to eat or drink all them forty days and forty nites!—the Lord wasn't very hospitable to his company, seems to me. Judgin' by the time it took to git up them ten short rules of conduct, which wasn't 'riginal, anyhow, but recomposed from rules by previus gods, I wonder how long it took the Lord to git up his sacrid book?

It's altergether a queer racket, that "shall not" racket was, from the mountin mystry that surrounds it. It's ridickerlous to 'spose the Lord was all that time on that short pece of composishun, even if he considered it the greatest effut of his life, but if it wasn't, what in the thunder was he and Mose doin' all the time—playin' old sledge, or some uther simple Christian game? Another funny thing is, that the Lord never tho't of them "shall nots" afore. I 'spose it struck him all to oncet, that there was too much crooked biz goin' on all the time, so he lade down the law to 'em at that late day, and I wonder how much good it done? From further readin' in the sacrid book, I fale to see where them "shall not" cawt on to any grate effect!

It seems there wasn't any row after Mose got down the hill with the duplikit slabs—I wonder if they was marble?—as there was the fust time, when a scrimmage took place and three thousand men was knocked out so they cood sleep with their fathers. Now, this woodn't a happened if Mose hadn't been kept on the hill so long by the Lord, and the latter must a knowed it, of course, and cood a prevented it but didn't. He wanted Mose on the hill, and so the massaker come off later—it wasn't none of the Lord's funeral, you know, and what did he care?

Yes, them "shall nots" was the immedi't cause of three thousand men cuttin' one anuther's throats, but the Lord didn't care for a cent, and I am paned to say Mose followed in the illustrious foot-steps of the Lord, and never weeped a silent tear that's recorded in the sacrid book! The fact is, Mose was an offensive partisan of Zion Hall, and his motto was, "Our party, rite or rong!"

Now, what has them "shall nots," christened in blood, done for a sufferin' world? Has there been any less killin', stealin', fals swearin', adulteration—why, there never was so much adulteration as there is goin' on to-day, in all departments of life, includin' lickers and grocerys—and cuvitousness and things, than there wood a been without 'em? Alas! I fale to realize that there has, and to think it took the Lord forty days and forty nites to git 'em up!

I shall have to pause here, on account of exceedin' amazement and wonder, and a feelin' of weriness to think they didn't ketch on!

I gess old Skinner of Gabe's Horn woodn't print this pece in our columes, and send it rite on to FREETHOUGHT.

ROBERT THE DEVIL, of Gabe's Horn.

Two burglars were in a pantry enjoying a brief lunch after their arduous labors. As Mike was about to put a delicious bit of cold roast spring lamb where it would do the most good, Dennis suddenly turned pale and whispered: "Shtay yer hand, Moik; it's Friday marnin'."

LILIAN'S STORY

We note that Lilian, in the present work, has deserted the field of the actual and entered the realm of the imaginary. This departure we cannot unqualifiedly indorse. We believe that our gifted young authoress will agree with us when we say that the fanciful should be invoked only when it may be employed as the wings of fact. The story of the fairies and the hob-goblins, while it is diverting to the mind, seems to us to neither inculcate any moral precept nor enlighten the understanding. It is re-deemed, however, by the denouement, in which several wicked parties are left.

HOW THE FAIRIES FOOLED THE HOB-GOBLINS.

BY A. LILIAN ANDREWS, AGED 10.

One night the queen of the fairies said to all the fairies, "I want the light in the tower lit to-night." So up went Snip. Snip was the smallest fairy. He wore small red velvet trousers, blue stockings, and red coat. The queen had red hair and rode on a white horse.

"Now," said the queen, "I heard the Hob-Goblins were coming to-night to catch us for slaves. Now put out all the lights except the one Snip lit, and come to the middle parlor."

Now the middle parlor was in the middle of the castle.

"Now," said the queen, "the Hob-Goblins left their castle this way. Go, Snip, and light their castle while they are all out. You go too, little Sally."

Away they went, and lighted up the Hob-Goblins' castle, and came back.

"Now," said the king of the Hob-Goblins, "come along." So out they went and came to the fairies' castle—"Why! Why! this is our castle." Now this was a mistake, but they all ran back and surrounded their own castle, and ran in and found their own castle, and then there was such squealing. Now the queen of the fairies knew all this.

Christian Challenges.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I expected to send questions and rules of debate this week, but have concluded to wait and see whether the Christians really mean debate. In the East it is almost out of the question to induce them to maintain and defend their assumptions, or attempt to.

It looks to me as if Elder Braden does not fling out his challenges in earnest, else why challenge those Freethought lecturers who are, for good reasons to themselves and many of their friends, unwilling to meet him in debate? But Braden knows there are Liberal lecturers ever ready to meet him to his heart's content. Why should he be so silent about us, and strive to create the impression among his Christian followers that no one "dare" debate with him? Is it for effect? W. F. JAMIESON.

Monte Vista, Col.

S. P. Putnam and Human Liberty.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I had read Mr. Putnam's books, letters, and notes with great pleasure and hearty response, and had been in unison, sympathy, and rapport with his mind, spirit, and purpose since he became a Freethinker, when I first saw and heard him at Talent, Or., June 3 and 4. His two lectures there were able delineations, statements, and descriptions of his religious experience, and conversion to truth and liberty.

His description and definition of the state, and its true, legitimate, and only function of protecting all its subjects in the exercise of their natural rights and individuality, was very able, critical, discriminating, and humane, and a most noble and manly plea for a free and truer life. What a vast difference between the state as defined by Mr. Putnam and the state as it now is in its practical functions of granting special powers and privileges to sects, corporations, or individuals, and protecting them, while many of the rights of the people are ignored, disparaged, and violated. He very ably and forcibly depicts the growing co-operation between church and state, and the ultimate purpose of the National Reform Association, the Prohibition party, the Y. M. C. A., and the W. C. T. U., to make the state subordinate to the church, and the orthodox God the sovereign of our nation and government.

I glory in Brother Putnam's fearless utterance of those truths which alone can save our nation from slavery, and the subjugation of manhood and liberty to the reign of inhuman despotism, error, and bigotry. Oh that there were a thousand Putnams, who like his namesake, General Israel Putnam of Revolutionary fame, had both the physical and moral courage to go out and proclaim to the world the right of men and women to individuality and self-ownership, and to live their own lives and think and express their own thoughts, giving the same rights to all others. Let the great road of human progress be kept open and free from all obstructions, that humanity may grow to the stature of a full manhood and the dominance of the upper and frontal brain. Let men be taught, as Brother Putnam is teaching, the value and significance of this life, and how to make the most of it—how to live the longest and the best. Let men be taught that the only way to save the soul, in this life or any other, is to take care of and develop and strengthen the brain and body, and by a true parentage and education make the tree good, that its fruit may be good.

General Putnam, with lighted torch and a rope around his body, held by friends, descended to the wolf's den, and he and the wolf were drawn up together. The wolves of church and state are infesting our rights and liberties and we want many Putnams to thwart them by the torchlight of truth. For fifty years I have fought for truth and liberty, but now I am "played out," except my pen.

PROF. J. H. COOK.

A List Started in the East.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I noted an offer in your paper, from Mr. Putnam, that you would send one copy of your paper one year for one dollar; that is, you would send it to one's friend if he would send the dollar and the name of the friend the paper is to be sent to. Now I inclose the dollar and the name of the friend.

I noted the names of different parties ordering papers in this way, in your last issue. Some of them have done nobly, sending in as high as eleven names, but they were all from the Pacific Coast, so I thought I would start the list from the East. I am taking one copy of your paper, together with eleven others, and that is all I can read, so I thought I would let a friend read FREETHOUGHT a year for me, and I wish every subscriber would do the same. I think by that means Liberal ideas would be scattered all over the land and be better understood.

Hoping for you all of the success imaginable, I remain your friend and brother,

WM. REDFIELD.

Stanley, Iowa.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I arrived here at the county seat of Columbia county by the steamer Telephone, all in good shape for the week's work before me. I soon had the court-house engaged for four lectures and handbills scattered all over the town and sent out into the lumbering camps. St. Helens is a very pretty little place at the mouth of the Willamette river, and is older than Portland and really ought to have been the location of the metropolis of the Columbia valley. This country is a mineral one, also covered with an immense growth of fir and cedar. There is government land back in the interior, and only forty to fifty miles from Portland, a city of 40,000 to 50,000 population. Is there another place in the United States where government land can thus be found? It is very rough but splendidly watered and timbered, and near a magnificent river and the railroad.

The people here seem to be all Freethought and Agnostic in belief; in fact, I could hear of but one Christian in town, and he was a lawyer. There is but one church in St. Helens, and it sets back on a high bluff that is almost inaccessible, and I noticed that many of the windows were broken and that this "chapel on the hill" had a deserted look. It is surrounded by a beautiful evergreen grove of firs and has a magnificent view of the river.

I gave my four lectures here to full houses, and all seemed much interested in the subjects I presented. I gave them the most ultra-radical ideas, such as man must be his own redeemer or savior; right generation, not regeneration, alone will bring about the long-talked-of millennium; scientific mating of the sexes, not puppy love which comes of personal magnetism, should be the basis of all marriages and thus give every child born a chance for a well balanced organism. Orthodoxy seems to have but a weak hold anywhere in this great valley. I predict that from these hills and forests a generation will yet come forth of men and women who will be the standard bearers of the religion of humanity. I met here that grand thinker, N. C. Dale, clerk of the court, a fine scholar whose library contains nearly all the eminent scientific books of the day. This gentleman assisted me in various ways to make the lectures a success, and I shall not soon forget his pleasant acquaintance, nor that of his genial, splendidly mentalized deputy clerk, a very young man with an old head upon his shoulders. Mr. L. Hazen is another broad-gauged, whole-souled, fine-brained, web-footer, but not web-thinker, for his mind is clear as sunshine in regard to what he knows and hopes to know. Judge Cox, Mr. Blakesly, my landlord, the men who own the big saw mill, the merchants of the place, postmaster, etc., are all full of the milk of human kindness, but are not much afraid of that awful being called God or Jehovah. I was well paid for my lectures here, and enjoyed my stay very much. I waited after my last lecture for the "greyhound of the Columbia," the Telephone, the fastest stern wheeler in the world, until one o'clock, A.M., when I stepped aboard and was soon lost to the trials of a lecturer's life, by being wrapped in the arms of Morpheus in my narrow crib in the state room allotted me. In Portland I was invited to lecture in Snyder's Hall the next Sunday evening, which invitation I was pleased to accept. When I arrived at the hall I found it a large and pleasant one, well filled with a very intelligent audience gathered from both sides of the river. After some beautiful music and singing and some opening preliminary remarks by Col. C. A. Reed, I was introduced to the audience and gave them my lecture entitled, "The Origin of the God Idea." This is a very radical lecture and an idol smasher, but was well listened to, and, judging by the applause and congratulations received, fully appreciated. After the lecture Mrs. Ladd Finnegan, from San Francisco, Cal., took the rostrum and for an hour gave spiritual tests to dozens of persons scattered all through the audience, the most of which were recognized immediately by those to whom they were given, many not being Spiritualists. Mrs. Finnegan is a large woman with a very laughing, pleasant, jolly, face, and a loud clear voice, and her gift or genius is something to be marveled at. She seems to give universal satisfaction, at least to the Spiritualists, in describing one's dead friends, also the past and future. Colonel Reed, the manager of these meetings, is a big man with a big heart, and a 23-inch brain of fine quality. He is not quite broad gauged enough to drop prayers to a nothing in the skies, but our brother will surely evolve out of that as time rolls on. He has an immense social nature, with a soul big enough to say, "The world is my country, to do good my religion," but he is still fettered and bound by the superstition resulting from an orthodox education. Go where we will, into any home, take up any school book, newspaper, novel, or political harangue, and we will find the track of the slimy serpent called the priest. The marks of the iron hand of the pope and church are to be seen everywhere in the cramped brains and enchained thoughts that humanity manifest. Oh, for a banner to float over every home, with the glorious inscription, "Universal Mental Liberty," upon it! The world has had enough of "In God we trust," and "Thus saith the Lord." Let us rub all this superstitious nonsense forever out, and stamp our coins, flags, and mottoes with "The universe is governed by law." The only infinite we know anything about is infinite space, infinite time, and infinite matter; trinity enough and infinite enough, without trying to locate an infinite personal being, which is simply an absurdity.

There is room, but poor pay, for a thousand lecturers to help church-cursed humanity evolve out of the darkness of superstition into the broad sunlight of reason and science.

PROF. D. C. SEYMOUR.

St. Helens, Or.

NEVER to meet again.—A gentleman said to a minister: "When do you expect to see Deacon Logan?" "Never," said the reverend gentleman solemnly; "the deacon is in heaven."—Texas Siftings.

MINISTER—I understand that you do not believe that a person is sufficiently punished on earth for his misdeeds? Neighbor—Oh, yes, I do now; but I didn't until I heard you preach.—Yonkers Statesman.

"My friend," said a long-haired Brooklyn citizen, "I am trying to learn the sense of the community in regard to baseball playing on Sunday. Will you kindly tell me what stand you take?" "Certainly, sir," responded his young friend; "when I've got money enough I take the grand stand."

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

HAND-BOOK OF THE LICK OBSERVATORY

OF THE

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,

—BY—

EDWARD S. HOLDEN, LL.D.,

Director of the Observatory.

A volume of 135 pages, 12mo., printed on heavy paper, and bound in flexible cloth covers. Besides likenesses of

Professor Holden and James Lick,

it contains Twenty Views, Drawings, and Illustrations of the Locality, the Machinery, and the Apparatus connected with the great Astronomical station. The Table of Contents includes:

- I. Information for Visitors.
- II. Sketch of the Life of James Lick.
- III. A Visit to Mt. Hamilton.
- IV. History of the Lick Observatory.
- V. Description of the Building.
- VI. Description of the Instruments.
- VII. The Work of the Observatory.
- VIII. Telescopes.
- IX. Poem: To the Unmounted Lens.
- X. Astronomical Photography.
- XI. Clocks and Time-Keeping.
- XII. The Principal Observatories of the World.

By mail 80 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION. Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

GOD IN THE STATE

By E. A. STEVENS,

SECRETARY OF THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAN FRANCISCO:
PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 KEARNY ST.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" medicinal. Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and a NEW FEATURE, Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Tributes. "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," "The Grant Banquet Toast" and "Little Harry Miller's Grave," printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing; four to any address for 50 cents, or either one for 15 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," and all the famous tributes, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, table-talks and day-to-day conversations of the author. Fine steel portrait and autograph facsimile. Price, in cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BILASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7 jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50. With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17, $18, $19.50; 8 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4, being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies' watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels, $22; 15 jewels, $28. In good second quality filled cases, $2 to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38. Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra. Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case. Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1; best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas, 50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12. Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free. Best Work. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Designer and Patentee of new FREETHOUGHT Badge in PINS and CHARMS—emblematical of the light and day of Freethought, Science, and Reason vs. the night and darkness of Superstition.—Exact size of cut and smaller, two-thirds size. Warranted solid gold, enameled in four colors. Most beautiful badge ever designed. Small, $2, $2.75, $3.50. Large, $3 to $5; with genuine diamond, $8, $10; and charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 28.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JULY 14, 1888

THE London Freethinker says that the House of Lords has passed the bill for the better punishment of criminous clergy. The bill should fill a long-felt want.

SAYS the Alta, irreverently: "Somebody sent the pope a jubilee bicycle. Fancy his holiness straddle the machine and whooping it over the paths in the Vatican gardens!"

IN the Catholic churches of the state solemn high mass was celebrated on the Fourth and special prayers were offered for the prosperity of the government. Catholic prayers for the prosperity of a republic are especially hypocritical, because Catholics do not believe in that kind of a government. They believe in a government of the pope, by the pope, and for the pope.

COLONEL INGERSOLL addressed the Republican convention at Chicago, by request. He spoke his mind, and a gang of howling hoodlums drowned his voice, to their everlasting disgrace. The whole press of the country is discussing Ingersoll's "mistake" in speaking as he did. Possibly he made a mistake, but if so it was the mistake of the man who casts pearls before an unappreciative audience.

A RAILROAD employee named Muckle was recently killed accidentally at Grand Rapids, Mich. He was a man of average reputation, a Roman Catholic, and owned a lot in the Catholic cemetery, where one of his children was buried. But he was a member of some secret societies, and the priest refused him burial in the ground he had bought. This seems to be a case for the courts to decide. If the Catholic church still owns ground that it has sold and got the money for, its dupes should be apprised of that fact in season to preserve their remains at least from outrage.

THE "Native Sons of the Golden West," an organization composed of young men born in California, have requested Governor Waterman to set apart September 9, 1888, as a legal holiday, that being the date upon which California was admitted into the Union. The governor is in favor of granting the request, but says that "as the 9th of September comes on Sunday the celebration would take place on Monday, the 10th." Here we have it again—the birthday of the state displaced by a day of superstitious observances and incantations. It might not be out of order to have a new Declaration of Independence from a lot of Sunday usages for which the average Californian has not the slightest respect.

ONE of the most interesting features of the Fourth of July celebration held at San Francisco was the unveiling of the Francis Scott Key monument in Golden Gate Park. The monument was erected at a cost of $60,000, which sum was bequeathed for that purpose by James Lick. The structure bears this inscription:

TO FRANCIS SCOTT KEY,
AUTHOR OF THE NATIONAL SONG,
"THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER," THIS MONUMENT IS ERECTED
BY JAMES LICK,
OF SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA.
A. D. MDCCCLXXXVIII.

As Mr. Barnes, the orator of the day, remarked, "James Lick constituted himself the trustee of his vast estate for the benefit of the people of California. In how many ways he has shown his patriotism! He has given this state a telescope superior to any in the old world; he has founded a home where unprotected women can in peace and comfort prepare to leave this life. These and many other benefits we owe to his unbounded generosity." And yet there are clergymen right here in San Francisco who get up on their hind legs Sunday after Sunday and inquire what Infidel has ever done anything for this country or for public charity. And their stupid and long-eared congregations echo, "What indeed?"

NEWS AND NOTES.

Through rain and shine I went from New Era to Molalla. At sunset it seemed as if the clouds were speeding off under a northern breeze, and the long-looked-for "settled weather" was at hand. Philip M. Graves, who believes that Freethought has a future and works for it, made me welcome, and in the cool July evening the fire-light was a cheerful scene. Mrs. Graves, the little girl, and all the boys are the sturdy Freethinkers of the "generation to come," and will do good service when our harvest time is over. The to-morrow shines bright in the children's faces. Spite of all signs of fair weather, and the glorious sunset, when I went to bed the rain was pouring down, and in the morning the rolling mist obscured the sun. About ten o'clock, however, the blue sky emerged in spots, and flecks of sunshine dashed here and there amid the tall and shadowy trees. About five hundred persons, morning and afternoon, gathered beneath the green arches in Wright's grove. They came from miles about, and the uncertain sun did not prevent a happy crowd. After the morning's lecture came the dinner and the hand-shaking and social time. Our Molalla friends have not had a smooth time of it. Widely scattered, it has been difficult for them to hold meetings, but the flag has been at the top all the time. Capt. G. J. Trul-linger, although he doesn't make a speech, can keep order. He has faithful allies: Reuben Wright, Silas Wright, Dell Trullinger, A. B. Klise, A. S. Jones, and others. The Paine celebration was a success. Dr. Matheson, of Aumsville, gave the address, and recitations and music and dancing made bright the memorable occasion. There is no need of discouragement when this frontier point is so well held. There has been no loss, and some gain. The camp-fires are alive, and, gathering together, we find that hearts are warm and the music of hope is in the air. In the afternoon I discoursed on "Woman and the Bible," and tried to emphasize the tragic facts of that noble plea for Liberty, "Men, Women, and Gods," wherein it is shown that by the law of the Bible and of the church and "Christian civilization," woman has not been recognized as a person, but simply as a servant; able to recover damages for assault only through her "lord and master," by reason that he might be deprived of her valuable labors. Yet to-day this same ecclesiastical power undertakes to run the Woman Suffrage movement, hoping by the votes of women to enlarge its authority. The president of the Womens' Christian Temperance Union has declared that her chief reason for advocating woman's voting is that by her ballot Christ can be enthroned in the Constitution. It becomes a serious question whether "Christian women" shall be granted a political power which they are certain to abuse; having been so cowed by the physical force of the church that they are now its mental slaves, and glory in their shame. Woman suffrage, if granted, might precipitate a revolution and overturn the present order of society. The disgraceful methods pursued by the adherents of the Prohibition party in many places shows such gross ignorance of political virtue that it makes one hesitate to grant a legal privilege which is almost sure to be used in the interest of tyranny, and will create a far greater wrong than what exists at present.

After the lecture came music and dancing, and on to the midnight hour flowed the sounds of festivity—the melody of a happy human world where youth is bright and age benign.

Sunday morning dawned with mingling smiles and tears, but the grove was filled, and although there was a shower now and then, it did not interfere with the order of the day. We went right on. The lectures, the dinner, the music, the sociable time, made no delay for showers, for almost the next minute the sparkling sun would dry the glittering drops. It was rumored by our Christian friends that their "Champion" would come "like the wolf on the fold." He had threatened all along to put in an appearance, but he failed to make connection, and he halted and gave a sermon by the graveyard, about ten miles away. I suppose, like the bull which undertook to fight the locomotive, he got "discouraged." Wright's grove was too much for him. He could not surround it—not even with his cheek. It is said that he was afraid of his life. What a martyr he would make! He would have been perfectly safe, however, so long as he minded his own business. He said at Silverton he did not want to transgress the law and be arrested. He certainly will feel the strong hand of the police the moment he infringes upon rights; otherwise he will be allowed to go in peace, with the contempt of every honest man—Christian and Freethinker alike. His boasted attempt to capture the Infidel is like the Irishman crusader who called out that he had a prisoner of war. "Bring him in," shouted the guard. "He won't let me," was the reply.

If Jamieson ever comes within short range, he will change his mind.

"'Tis distance lends enchantment to the view."

Our campaign in the Molalla country was encouraging. There would have been two or three times as many on hand if the weather had been pleasant, but those who did come made our colors shine fair and noble even against a stormy sky.

Monday I had an off day and rested where the fireside of the Wrights has flung its cheerful blaze since 1850. Mrs. Wright came here among the first settlers, when the land was wild, hardly a house was built, and the Indians were plenty and treacherous. She has witnessed a marvelous growth; and her life of adventure and toil has not diminished her youthful fire. Mr. Wright was one of the leading citizens of the county. He died several years ago while member of the legislature. He was a pronounced Freethinker. Mrs. Wright and all the family, sons and daughters, belong to the same "big church." I could not find a more genial place to spend my Secular Sabbath, and for a few hours fling off all care and let things drift as they would. By this same happy fireside I enjoyed the companionship of Samuel Oakland, formerly of New York city, who left it when a small village and Canal street was way out of town—over forty years ago. He is now nearly eighty years old, hale and hearty; a confirmed bachelor who keeps his own cabin, is a wise philosopher after the style of Epicurus, has a large library and reads and thinks in sweet content, enjoys life, and fears not death. He believes in a hereafter, but is a thorough-going Liberal and accepts the spirits only according to sound sense and humanity.

I was glad to meet again comrade J. W. Plummer, formerly of Powder Creek, now of Union Mills. He has enrolled himself in the ranks of Freethought.

Other pleasant friends at this camp-ground are R. T. Dibble, B. F. Linn, and Mrs. Linn, of Ogden city, Newton Trullinger, of the same place, John Paine, M. Klise, Mrs. Geo. Knight, of Canby, Mrs. May, and Harvey Ball and brothers; Mrs. Wells, Miss Ola Mack, Arthur Mack, Mrs. Hodges, B. H. Rhodes, E. E. Cross, Washington Smith, Dr. R. Groucher, E. C. Jones, Eli Chiswell, H. A. Lee, and Mrs. Lee, of Canby; Fred Mashberger; and a "troop of friends" whose names I know are recorded in "the book of life," but I cannot remember them all as, like Ten-nyson's brook, I "go on forever."

On Tuesday morning, "with southerly wind and a cloudy sky," friend Trullinger, with the famous "six-mile" horse that takes no man's dust, in the rainy season, drives me over the up-and-down way to Eagle Creek, via Oregon City, a point of vast possibilities. There is enormous water power in the vicinity; many factories are being built, and the hum of industry is sure to prevail. It is rather slow at present so far as Liberalism is concerned, but I expect some day to lift the flag. There is Freethought in the air, but many are afraid just now to show their colors, for the Methodist church has had quite a run in this place and is opposed to innovation of any kind. It would like to make Oregon City a "Sleepy Hollow."

In the afternoon by slow gradations we reach the pleasant fields and groves of Eagle Creek. A cordial welcome, and a good night's rest prepares for the "glorious Fourth." It was a fair and beautiful day, the beginning of a shining column that stretches to the harvest home. The people throng from all ways; on horseback, in big wagons, and afoot, young and old, with gay apparel and joyous noise. They gather in the lofty grove where the schoolhouse—our church—stands, and beneath the green canopy the flags wave, the music sounds, the flowers shine, and all goes merrily. G. J. Trullinger is marshal of the day. Professors Croucher, Gavett, and Wiensett gave the martial and victorious strains, J. H. Gibson read the Declaration of Independence, and I gave an oration upon "Secular Politics" and read "M's" poetic contribution to the occasion, which was welcomed with applause. Then the dinner hour made the verdant scene a picture of enchantment to the hungry traveler. By and by the silver melody called the dancers to Wilburn's Hall, and there was no cessation of hilarity until another daylight's rosy banners fluttered. We lingered with the happy multitude and Liberal friends. Henry Wilburn keeps the store, and a staunch and cheerful Freethinker he is, for this world and the American republic, and is the guiding spirit in this rejoicing day. Robert Divine is here, no longer in his "den" in Paradise valley, but "working for the Lord," building a church, and helping to make the Fourth a holiday for his own secular benefit. He keeps things going with impetuous sparks of wit; McElsander, who by no means fulfils the definition of a Scotchman—"one who keeps the Sabbath, and everything else he can lay his hands on"—for he is generous and ready to make the car of progress roll on, with unstinted hand. He believes in humanity and the flag of the union, and universal justice.

Rollo Herring is one of our ardent supporters. It does one good to meet him and be encouraged by his enthusiastic nature. And Mr. and Mrs. Lacy, and all the family of this generous household, with whom I had the pleasure of a picnic dinner under the forest boughs, and Mr. and Mrs. Guthrie, Chas. A. Linn, John C. Tracy, H. Colsen, R. H. Linn, of Oregon City, who, with all his family, wife and eight children, was present (that is the kind of Freethinker to make a happy world), Mrs. Wilburn, Mrs. McElsander, Miss Emma E. Chase, W. Hutcheson, and many others are those of this patriotic gathering who understand the deeper meaning of this glorious day—that its salvos of joy must breathe of intellectual liberty.

J. M. Sliker insisted that I should spend Wednesday night with him on the banks of the Clackamas, in the "Valley of the Shadow," as he calls it, and "Deep Glen," as Mrs. Sliker more poetically names it; and a lovely spot it is, down under the lofty trees and overhanging bench, on the side of the river itself whose waters are clear as crystal. In this quiet lodge I rested with happy contentment, as if I were a thousand miles from the busy world. At eleven o'clock, up the winding road to the bench lands we took our way, and witnessed the grand illumination of Mt. Hood, forty miles distant. A glorious red ball, from the very heart of the sky, blazed forth, and for five minutes hundreds of thousands of eyes were riveted upon its mighty glory, and then it sank into the bosom of the night.

On Thursday afternoon I lectured at Wilburn's Hall on "Universal Mental Liberty." There was a large and appreciative audience. Eagle Creek, although it has only a store, a blacksmith shop—no church—a school-house, and three or four dwellings, is a grand rallying-place for the Liberals of the section; and I shall always come to its camp-fire with hope and enthusiasm.

Friday morning I am up at half-past three o'clock, and McElsander, with his "wind-splitters," the noble, magnificent grays, drives me, as the sun comes forth with unclouded rays, to Clackamas Station, and now I am at New Era where the Liberals are gathering. And in the grove this afternoon and evening I expect to do a little work for reform in the way of elucidating the "Constructive Principles of Freethought." SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

July 6, 1888.

THE "Hand-book of Lick Observatory" is sent post-paid for 80 cents.

A PRESBYTERIAN CLERGYMAN ON THE SITUATION.

There is one distinguished point of difference between the Roman Catholic and the Protestant theologian. The Catholic denies the truth of modern history whenever he chooses, while the Protestant does not, always; he relies chiefly on sophistry. The two methods are about equally effective, one with the ignorant, the other with the unthinking. It is needless to say that the Rev. Dr. Babb, of San Jose, under the nom de plume of "Rusticus," adopts the latter method in his article in the Presbyterian Occident on "Gladstone and Ingersoll."

For the purpose, we suppose, of showing his competency to deal with the question, Dr. Babb states at the outset that he has not read Colonel Ingersoll's reply to Gladstone. He believes, apparently, that nothing so qualifies a man to defend his cause as complete ignorance of what has been said on the other side. He charges against Colonel Ingersoll that "Finding fault, caviling, criticising, questioning, trying to pull down without building up, this is easy work and it is mean work. No real man would engage in it. He would say, 'Let the world believe what it does until I have discovered something better.' Suppose that Colonel Ingersoll should meet a friend in the street who, according to his standard, was very badly dressed, or whose clothes were ragged and dirty. Would he stop him and begin to strip him naked? The poorest and meanest dress is better than none. If the colonel was a true friend to that unfortunate man he would take him into a clothing store and buy him a better suit. Let him propose to do that and his criticisms would merit respectful attention. But until then they are impertinent, unmanly, and cruel. He who proposes to reform the opinions of his fellow-men must begin by offering them something more worthy of their credence than what they now believe."

This is an old, old argument, provided it merits the name of argument. Take the suit of old clothes. This is not, we judge, a question of physical habiliments, but one of mental clothing. Ingersoll believes, he says, in the gospel of good clothes, and it is presumed that he dresses quite as well as the average clergyman. But suppose the Freethinker meets the Christian wearing the uniform of the church, that is to say, the rags of faith, the tatters of outworn creeds, infested with the parasites called the priesthood. He tells him that his clothes are out of date, that his rags are not to be depended upon to keep him warm on a cold day, that the parasites are eating him up and giving him nothing in return for their sustenance. And supposing the man realizes the truthfulness of the information, and thereupon throws off his old clothes, takes a bath, and dons a suit of modern scientific cut, has he not been benefited? We should say Yes.

Suppose Dr. Babb meets a man who has a bad dollar, and Dr. Babb tells him it is bad; could the man demand a good dollar of Dr. Babb? Upon any theory consistent with sanity he could not. He must return to the person who palmed it off upon him and say, "Here, this coin is counterfeit. Give me a good one in its place." And if the person failed to do so, he could reasonably be denounced as a fraud. So might Dr. Babb's congregation come to their pastor some day and say, "We find that the truth you have been preaching to us is counterfeit. Your miracles are bogus. Your creeds have no security behind them. The doctrines you preach have no specie basis. Your Bible savors too much of the queer. We have paid you good money. You have taken our money away, and what have you given us in place of it?"

Any religionist can see from this that it is his duty to refill, if he can, the place made vacant by the destruction of falsehood.

The most fatal argument ever made by a believer is given by Dr. Babb in these words:

"If I believed, or rather disbelieved, as Colonel Ingersoll does I would not tell even my wife and children. I would let them cherish as long as they could the sweet delusion of faith in God."

If Dr. Babb had ever read Ingersoll he would know better than to make that remark. "A few years ago," says the colonel, "a Methodist clergyman took it upon himself to give me a piece of friendly advice. 'Although you may disbelieve the Bible,' said he, 'you ought not to say so. That, you should keep to yourself.' 'Do you believe the Bible?' said I. He replied, 'Most assuredly.' To which I retorted, 'Your answer conveys no information to me. You may be following your own advice. You told me to suppress my opinion. Of course a man who will advise others to dissimulate will not always be particular about telling the truth himself.'"

We can do no better than to leave "Rusticus" here. Having confessed that he would not tell the truth if he knew it, what he says can be no certain indication of what he believes; and words not backed by sincerity are a useless agitation of the air.

We will send sample copies of FREETHOUGHT to any address, and would like to have names of Liberals forwarded us for that purpose.

THE Christian Independent opens its columns, albeit with an apology, for B. F. Underwood to tell the kind of a man Clark Braden is. We predict that the Rev. George Sweeney will shortly realize the nature of the man he has been harboring and will publicly renounce Braden as the despicable character that he is known to be.

ABOUT half a dozen writers discuss the Ingersoll-Gladstone controversy in the North American Review for July. This seems unnecessary. Ingersoll's arguments do not require strengthening, and Gladstone's are incapable of it. The friends of the Grand Old Man ought to realize the uselessness of giving condition powders to a dead horse.

DR. STOCKHAM's work on "Temperance and Prohibition" has been reduced in price from $1 to 75 cents. The principles advocated by the book are substantially those of the Republican party as touching the tax on alcoholic beverages, and that party would find it a good campaign document, provided an earnest attempt to get at the truth can be of any account in a political campaign.

A MOST promising venture is the inauguration of the Historical American, an 80-page magazine published in Cleveland, O., by M. H. Meagher. Contributors to the first number are W. H. Burr, of Washington, and T. B. Wakeman, of New York, both well-known Liberal writers. The Historical American has 80 pages, and is to be published monthly at 90 Euclid ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made these lecture appointments from July to October. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Forest Grove Or	July	15	Salt Lake City, Utah	Aug	26
Hillsboro	"	16-17	Murray	"	27
Portland	"	18	Heber	"	28, 29
Astoria	"	22, 29	Denver	Col.	Sept. 2
Cathlamet, W. T.	"	24-27	Seward	Neb.	5-6
Pasco, Waverly, Colfax, and			Wahoo	"	7-8
Spokane Falls, W. T.	Aug.	1-12	Lincoln	"	9
Walla Walla, W. T.	"	14	Omaha	"	10
Union	Or.	15	Creston	Iowa	11
Baker City	"	16	Ottumwa	"	12
Boise City	Idaho	19	Salem	"	13
Ogden	Utah	21	West Union	"	16-17
Morgan	"	22	Dwight	Ill.	19-20
Coalville	"	23	Chicago	"	23
Park City	"	25	Pittsburgh	Pa.	30

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

A member of the Salvation Army quartering in this city became insane and ran through the streets last Sunday under the impression that everybody wanted to kill him. A police officer caught him among the lumber piles at the foot of Fourth street and put him where the commissioners of lunacy could sit on him. —The members of the National Educational Convention, which is to convene here on the 17th, are arriving in great numbers. —The Lick observatory is now open to visitors, and Saturday night from 7 to 10 o'clock they may gaze through the big telescope. —Anschlag, the Los Angeles murderer, is denied a new trial by Governor Waterman. —There was a serious fire at Lodi on the 7th, destroying the office of the News and several other buildings at a loss of $5,000. —The town of Denison was almost totally burned out on the 9th.

General Sheridan has arrived safe at his seaside cottage at Nonquitt, Mass. —There is trouble in the New York district assembly 49, Knights of Labor, and last Sunday's meeting broke up in open rebellion against Master Workman Quinn. —A fire in the office of the Century magazine, New York, did $200,000 damage. —Walt Whitman, the poet, is afflicted with progressive paralysis, and is growing weaker at his Camden, N. J., home. —The pilgrimage of a lot of Mexicans to Rome has caused a lawsuit. The Mexican Central railroad contracted with the Barrow Steamship company to transport 250 of the pilgrims. But 180 took passage, and now the steamship company sues to recover pay for 250. The railroad will pay for only 180; hence the suit. —St. Louis society is in a state of eruption over the elopement of Henry W. Moore, managing editor of the Post-Dispatch, and Mrs. Norton, wife of the manager of the Grand Opera House. —In the course of his weekly address before the Anti-poverty Society last Sunday night Dr. McGlynn said: "Some day there will be a tremendous revolution, which will eclipse the French uprising, and in which people will rise up in their wrath at the interference of these dictators and bayonet and club these monks and priest and archbishops, the pope and cardinals. This is the way the Lord will deal with them. So I say, leave them to his mercy." This speech was wildly cheered. —It is reported that members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, on strike in Illinois, have been arrested and dynamite found in their possession. The managers of the railroad claim to have unearthed a conspiracy to destroy their property with explosives. —Mayor Hewitt declines the American party's nomination as candidate for president.

A dispatch from Rome says that the convention with Colombia, South America, secures to the Vatican the protection of Catholicism as the state religion, the exemption of religious buildings from taxation, and the exemption of the clergy from military service. The clergy have entire control over the government schools and universities. —Dr. Mackenzie, the eminent physician who attended Emperor Frederick, reports that the present emperor of Germany is afflicted with a dangerous aural complaint, but may live for many years. —The people of Australia are much excited at present over the movement against the importation of Chinese. —There is a report that Spurgeon, the great Baptist preacher of London, will join the Presbyterians. Undoubtedly that church is the proper place for him. Its creed is the most barbarous in existence. —At Manchester, Eng., Irish Catholics last Sunday morning attacked an Orange procession while proceeding to church. Hatchets, pokers, and bottles were the weapons used. The police stopped the fight. Many persons were wounded and taken to the hospital. —O'Donnell, a recreant Land Leaguer, lost his libel suit against the London Times. Parnell denounces both O'Donnell and the Times, and the Times charges that Parnell was implicated in the Phoenix Park murders. Parnell defies the Times to substantiate its accusation. The Times repeats its charges, and publishes letters alleged to have been written by Parnell.

COUNTRY Minister—I am very sorry, Mr. Wrangle, but as I was driving from the parsonage before service, I saw your little boy on Goosecreek bridge snaring for suckers. Mr. Wrangle—Is that so, parson? Did ye notice what luck he was havin'?

BRADEN, THE SCAMP.

I have received copies of papers published on the Pacific Coast, in which Braden says that I have slandered him, and that neither Colonel Ingersoll nor I dare meet him in public debate. I am not troubled by anything he may say before my face or behind my back; but I should be glad to put your readers in possession of a few facts in regard to Braden that may be of use to Liberals in communities in California and Oregon in which "the great Champion of Christianity" lectures and repeats his falsehoods.

I last met Braden at Salem, Ohio, in May, 1879. He had been making there the same statements which he is now repeating. He had written a letter to the leading Liberals threatening to bring a libel suit against them if they did not retract some statements they had made upon my authority, or call me to account. He supposed I was hundreds of miles away, and for a week he had been indulging in the wildest talk about "Infidelity" and "Infidels," and distributing circulars abusing them in most offensive language, and applying to me about every epithet in the vocabulary of slang.

On passing through Salem, I learned from friends who saw me through the car windows that Braden was there, and I was requested to attend to his case. One evening sufficed. The next morning he took an early train West, and, so far as I know, he has never since lectured or preached in that community, nor in that vicinity. But as my own statement might be one-sided, I will give a few of the facts in passages from editorial articles which appeared in the newspapers of Alliance and Salem. First from the Alliance Independent Age:

Mr. Braden said in his first and second lectures, some six or seven weeks ago, in detail that B. F. Underwood, a Freethinker and distinguished lecturer, was a malicious falsifier, that he could prove said Underwood guilty of lying and other gross offenses. He reiterated the same statements in the town of Salem only week before last, supposing that Mr. Underwood was five hundred miles away, debating in a Western state. Mr. Underwood, however, happened to visit the vicinity of Salem last Monday evening. Hearing of Mr. Braden's abusive, reckless, and false statements, he went to Salem, delivered a lecture, and sent a note to Mr. Braden to be present, that he should expose him on that occasion. Mr. Braden attended. At the close of the lecture, Mr. Underwood tore the mask from the face of this fraudulent pretender. He read to the audience a letter that Braden had written to him about Elder John Sweeney, a distinguished debater and prominent minister in the Disciple church. Mr. Braden had been accused of writing this letter some days before. He denied it. Mr. Underwood now reads the letter, holds it up to the audience, accuses Mr. Braden of writing it, refers to his having denied it, and calls upon him to deny it in his presence. Mr. Braden writhes and cannot. He is dumb before Mr. Underwood. The Disciple minister rushed to his rescue, and asked that a committee be appointed to look into the matter. Mr. Underwood could neither coax nor threaten Mr. Braden into any kind of a defense while in his presence. Thus this man Clark Braden fell flat before the citizens of Salem with his feathers cut, and, in the eyes of those who once admired him, disgraced.

This is what the Salem National Greenbacker had to say about the affair:

The announcement that B. F. Underwood would lecture in the Town Hall, on last Tuesday evening, and at the close of the lecture would notice the infamous slanders of Rev. Clark Braden, brought out a very large audience of earnest listeners. Rev. Braden and Rev. T. J. Lyle, pastor of the Disciple church, had been previously invited to be present and they came. After the close of the discourse, Mr. Underwood said that a very unpleasant duty devolved upon him. Personal quarrels were exceedingly distasteful to him. . . . But in the present case that point had been reached where "forbearance ceased to be a virtue." Extracts were then read from a four-column circular issued by Rev. Clark Braden, in which B. F. Underwood was branded as an infamous coward, a liar, villain, etc., and his friends as lackeys. The circular was a most dastardly affair, and reflected the nature of its author. The church still indorsed this impostor, Braden, as a man of honor, and as worthy to plead the cause of Christ in its name. Hence the double duty of lifting the veil, and exposing to the public gaze the blackness of his character. Mr. Underwood was as good as his word. Never did a guilty soul receive a more righteous mental castigation at the hands of any man. . . . At the close of Mr. Underwood's psychologic dissection, he proclaimed his love of free speech, and invited Clark Braden to come forward and take the stand, and defend himself from the charges, or deny any of the testimony. A most ridiculous scene followed. Braden sat still, but Rev. T. J. Lyle arose and read some resolutions of "the church of Christ," proposing the appointment of a committee to investigate the difficulty between Underwood and Braden, said committee to keep the matter secret, to have all the papers, etc., bearing on the subject, and to hold possession of the same. The trap was set in vain. It was perfectly plain that the object was to get possession of those documents in the hands of Mr. Underwood. The resolutions also indorsed Braden, and certified to his good standing in the church. Mr. Underwood very properly declined to be a subject of investigation upon charges put forth by a moral leper like Braden; but offered to furnish the evidence in his hands to a committee, if the church thought its champion needed an investigation. . . . Had he (Mr. Lyle) been a man of moral courage, he would, then and there, have repudiated the impostor in the name of his church, religion, and humanity. But he allowed the golden opportunity to pass, and he and his church stand disgraced in the estimation of the public, unless reparation is made speedily.

G. B. Purdy and M. L. Edwards, "conducting the correspondence of Salem Infidels," wrote to Rev. T. J. Lyle, May 15, 1879:

On the evening of the 12th inst. it was announced in the Town Hall, on handbills, that Mr. Underwood would make a statement in reply to Clark Braden's circular. A letter was sent to Mr. Lyle requesting him and Mr. Braden to be present. Mr. Underwood's statement was bold, clear, and emphatic, charging Mr. Braden with conduct almost infamous in trying to secure the defeat and disgrace of his brother minister and rival debater Elder John Sweeney. Letters were read substantiating the charge. An opportunity was given Mr. Braden to reply. Having charged Mr. Underwood (in his absence) with cowardice, when confronted by him, he sat in silence, making no response to one of the most clear and convincing exposures we ever listened to, and which elicited applause from the large audience. If Braden had anything to offer against his antagonist, then was his time. He had accused Underwood of falsehood, forgery, etc., and when called upon to prove his statement he was as silent as the grave. Now Mr. Underwood declines to be the subject of any investigation by so unscrupulous a man as Braden; but when the Liberals of Salem shall desire an investigation of his character, he will readily submit to it. But this we shall not ask until we have some evidence or reason for believing that he has acted unworthily. Mr. Underwood was not disturbed by "Braden's circular," and made his statement at Town Hall only by our request. It is the party that is suffering from exposure made that requires to be investigated, and not Mr. Underwood, who says (and we agree with him) he can't be personally injured by anything Clark Braden may say about him.

I have had several debates with Braden. If anybody cares to learn with what success, let him write to any of the prominent Liberals of Du Quoin, Time, Washington, Bushnell, or Jacksonville, Illinois, or Dubuque or Toledo, Iowa, or Denver, Colorado. I did for a while refuse to meet him again until he should retract some of his slanderous statements in regard to me. Finally he made a retraction in writing, which I now possess. He got so badly defeated afterwards in the debate at Denver, and one or two other places, that he returned to his favorite method of issuing printed circulars, full of falsehood and abuse. The orthodox clergy of Denver even pronounced his statements "shockingly unfair," "a gross outrage," etc. The two moderators, Governor King, once governor of Kentucky and a member of Braden's own denomination, and Judge Shackelford, formerly of the Tennessee Supreme Court, declared Braden's representation of the Denver debate "an outrage on the people of Denver, and a gross libel on you" (Underwood). The reporter of the Denver Times, Mr. Jefferies, a Christian, whose reports showed strong prejudice against Liberalism, especially in the early part of the debate, had this to say in the Times after the debate as to Braden's falsehoods: "The sympathy of the Times reporter who attended the debate was against Mr. Underwood to such an extent that that gentleman spoke of it from the stage; but when a slander like the above is published against Mr. Underwood and our best people, he desires to protest in the interest of honesty." It is not necessary here to repeat the slanders.

After my exposure of Braden at Salem, Ohio, in 1879, he put in circulation so many falsehoods and slanders that I decided to bring together some of the evidence of his depravity and meanness. This was done in a little pamphlet entitled, "The Kind of Man Clark Braden Is." Wherever this pamphlet has been circulated Braden is a "dead duck." Such a man as he is shown to be is not wanted by decent Christians when they come to understand his true character. But I was careful to conclude my pamphlet, printed in 1879, as follows:

Although Braden is a man for whom I have no respect, yet as he visits communities in which he is but little known, and by his boastful manners and false representations endeavors to produce the impression that no Freethinker dares meet him in debate, I deem it proper to say, in closing, that I will in future meet Braden as I have in the past, but on condition only that he is put forward by some church in the community in which the debate is to take place and that he is indorsed by said church as a moral man and a worthy representative of Christianity."

Since the publication of this statement there has been no disposition among "the Disciples" to encourage debates between Braden and me. He can write eulogies of himself and get them inserted in papers, and write resolutions, designed to mislead and deceive, and get them adopted by societies that know nothing of the facts; but he cannot get the indorsement and support for a debate of the churches of his denomination in any of the larger communities. In our debate at Dubuque, Iowa, Braden was treated so coolly by the Disciples, who declared that the debate was strengthening Infidelity, that he withdrew from the contest on the second evening, and upon his solicitation I loaned him money to pay his hotel expenses and his fare home. He was not as well known then as now. The church which, with a knowledge of his character and career, indorses him now, is "damned already." Braden is a theological and moral polecat. When it is necessary to punish him the work should be done vigorously and effectually; but the punishment he receives in the dislike and disgust which his polecat proclivities excite among his own brethren is generally sufficient.

Braden has been trying the past dozen years and more to get some recognition from Ingersoll, who holds him in contempt on account of his "inbred wretchedness of heart," to quote an expression from Paine, "made up between the venomous malignity of a serpent and the spiteful imbecility of some inferior reptile." There are some things in this world that one may not care to meet for other reasons than that they excite fear, and if Braden will stop to think he may find among them the real reason why Ingersoll declines to have anything to do with him.

Chicago, June 28, 1888.

B. F. UNDERWOOD.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Colonel Macaul is debating whether he will put an American opera on the road this fall. It was written by Mrs. Emma Raymond of this city. The libretto was by Miss Mary Banker, also of this city. The scene is American, and some how connected with the Indians. Macaul's musical critic likes it exceedingly, but I understand the colonel fears, it being domestic, and not a foreign product, it will not take. Mrs. Raymond is a daughter of Dr. Marcy, of 396 Fifth avenue, and a cousin of Mrs. General MacClellan. She is one of our most beautiful women, and a great favorite in society. It was only some five years ago that she discovered she had a talent for composing music. Her compositions are popular and much sought after. Pond is her publisher.

Colonel Miles, of the Bijou, has returned to Cincinnati, his former home. He came to New York some seven years ago, and from the start he was a success as a manager. He leaves with the best wishes of hundreds of friends. Palmer and Frohman are spending the summer at Stamford, Connecticut.

We are promised a return of Lydia Thompson's troupe next fall. Her original company, Ada Harland, Pauline Markham, and Lisa Webber, pleased us amazingly some twenty years ago. Lydia was then in her prime, the three girls were sparkling, the play and acting a novelty. Can she attract now as then? This is questionable. There has been a very sad phase in her life. She has had reason to curse man. She is a hard-working, conscientious actress. Mr. and Mrs. Abbey are in Paris. Why they left South America is not even hinted at. Sara Bernhardt and Coquelin are playing there under his management. The latter is to open here in October or November. The popular Effie Ellsler will reappear at the Madison Square on the 2d of July in "The Keepsake." The Union Square is being rebuilt. It will be fire-proof. The suit of Margaret Mather against Hill, her manager, for an accounting, is now in court. It is pleasant reading. I should judge she has been badly used.

Our churches are being rapidly closed, and our clergy are skipping to the mountains, or to the continent. Our Protestant ministers are cool-weather fellows. They like their comfort, and manage to get a full share of it. With all the wrongs, the hateful things, in the Catholic church, its priests stand by their flocks in heat and cold, rain and sunshine. Her door is never closed. The poor, deluded fool can any day find comfort there. I hear of no changes in our pulpits. McGlynn is unreconciled to Rome, and also to Henry George. They seem to drift farther apart. There is a first-class row in St. Thomas church. The new rector, Dr. Brown, has introduced some high-church ideas into the service, which is displeasing to some of the oldest families. They say if they want Catholicism they will go to the Catholic church. Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher is kicking over the traces in Plymouth church. She does not like the pastor, Dr. Abbott, and makes some foolish charges. - Abbott is not Beecher in any way, but his moral and religious nature is far above Beecher's in his palmiest days. I am satisfied that Beecher deteriorated morally the last part of his life. Dr. Abbott is a common-place Calvinistic preacher, and has for years edited an ordinary religious paper. Plymouth church will doubtless go down hill yearly.

The past week has been a first edition of tophet. It wilted and withered man and business. Wall street has been almost at a stand-still. Failures are unusually large for this season of the year, indicating the general distrust in financial circles. The merchant and the manufacturer are not only uncertain of the future, but are reefing sails and hugging the shore. There is nothing to-day which indicates a disposition on the part of any class of business men to expand or branch out. The presidential year has something to do with it; the Mills tariff bill has more.

EUDORUS.

New York, July 1, 1888.

GREAT PRINCIPLES.

They really rule the world. In spite of man, of armies, governments, churches, and schools, the new idea that is absolutely right, important, and governing, takes control; and it is not in human nature to resist or destroy it.

When Galileo announced the great truth that the earth moved, and the sun, as to us, stood still, and this made the year, and the day and night, all the powers of the earth declared against him. But every fact was on his side. Every new fact pleaded for him. His case is now won by the common consent of all who have a right to an opinion. It is sheer ignorance not to know it.

When the Protestants, three centuries past, proclaimed the right to read and interpret for themselves, and protested against the infallibility of the pope, they were met in arms, and the battle raged for several decades. Now, an armed host, with infallibility on its banners, would be stamped out by the indignation of the civilized world. In the republic it is never named except in diffidence and shame.

When these great truths first come they are like great drops of rain at the beginning of a summer thunderstorm. They surprise, alarm, shock, and dismay. Umbrellas are raised on all sides. The state, the church, the universities and academies, all throw out their protectors, proclaim, denounce, and refute the intruder with all their power. But the drops still come, the facts still pour down, till all society is saturated with the new truth and there is a deluge of solid conviction. The truth is accepted, the fulminations cease. The mind has accepted the new truth.

Still, habits, manners, and words take time to train themselves in harmony with the new light. Hence, long after the scientist has ceased to question, the multitude still linger among the dead traditions. Their conduct and language speak of a past age, while the judgment keeps pace with the present. An opinion can be changed in a week, while a habit may take a lifetime.

One hundred years ago the great fathers of this republic, in convention assembled to frame the Constitution of the United States, did then and there proclaim these great truths:

1. That all mankind are by nature and right free and equal.
2. That all government and all authority rest upon the consent of the governed.
3. That the human mind, to be thus free and equal, and to direct government aright, must be free to think, speak, write, and propagate any and all opinions; that opinions are not crimes, and may on no account be punished as such. It is neither rational nor just.

This is the corner-stone of human liberty. Without it there could be no republic. With it there can be no other form of government. No man can presume to be a master; and surely none can consent to be a slave.

These principles, thus loudly proclaimed by our fathers, stand undisputed. In the world of learning there is not to be found a man who would openly controvert one of them. In the great republic, surely not one. In the state of California, and in the city of San Francisco, not one.

Are we mistaken? Is there one? Then, let him be who he may, we here invite him to a friendly comparison of ideas. In the papers, on the platform, in any form or manner that is fair and equal, we will meet any such person. We will hold:

That our fathers were right in all these three propositions; and the sooner they are made the guiding star of human policy and life, the better for mankind.

We ask only that the champion be capable, and of decent expression. We care nothing for rank or station. The archbishop, the president of the university, the professor of moral philosophy, the entire clergy, any respectable man, will be accepted. We hold these three great truths to be indisputable, and propose to defend them against the world—not only so, but the people of the United States have long done the same thing. The mind has assented. The American mind is soaked through and through with these truths. You cannot name them save to be accepted. You cannot find the man who dares dispute them. If you can, let him stand forth.

What we need now is to conform all our laws, habits, manners, and morals to this high standard. We are doing it, slowly, it is true; but we are doing it, surely and well. The XIVth amendment to the Constitution of the United States is a grand move in this direction. "All laws shall be just and equal to all men, and all shall have the equal protection of the law," is the grandest statute ever yet recorded by man.

Man includes woman for all purposes but war and government. It places all humanity on the same plane. There is no room here for pope, priest, pastor, master, bishop, or archbishop. We are all brethren, and all equal. There is no room for authority or dictation. There is no high seat for any man, only as the people prefer him to it. No man is less than a sovereign, and no man can be more. And we are conforming our lives to these laws and ideas. Nowhere in the wide world is there so much assured equality as in San Francisco. You need not salute the governor without an equal return.

But how about that third proposition that opinions are not a crime, and it is neither rational nor just to punish them? It is equally true with the rest, and equally the opinion of the people. If you do not think so, put it in issue. Let us hear from you! Let some one propose that opinions shall be punished as crimes, and see what will become of it! It would be snowed under and never heard of again. In fact, we are moving the other way.

But here is an irrepressible conflict: Our Constitution declares that opinions are not crimes, and cannot be rationally and justly punished as such; but all our religions declare that God will punish them with a fearful and endless torture.

Very true; and one of them is in error and must subside and die out. Which shall it be? Either the Constitution must be amended, or the religions must be reformed. They cannot both live together. The same mind cannot entertain the two opinions. Shall we amend the Constitution to read thus: "The mind is not free. Wrong opinions are crimes and may be justly and rationally punished?"

But the theologian will perhaps say, "Man may not, but God may punish opinions." But this remains, that God has never done so, except through man. For government to do so in the name of God, it must first ascertain and set up the true God, the true priest of God, and clothe him with authority to say what must be believed and what opinions must be punished. This would violate several other great principles of the Constitution.

The government may not discriminate, or favor one faith more than another, or set one man up above another, or make unequal law, or fail to protect all alike.

And this also remains to be considered: Is it rational or just to punish opinions. If not, God cannot be supposed to do what is not rational or just. A just and rational God could not do so.

So far as God is concerned, there is not a sign in all his works that he visits human opinions with condemnation. The sunshine, the showers, and the harvests descend on the believer of any faith with an absolute impartiality. Even in battle he shows no favor. Crescent or cross goes down alike under numbers and skill and valor. God throws no casting vote, so far as we can see. Nay, the best nations are they of little faith. Gunboats, and not "holy orisflamms," carry the day.

In despite of all these evidences, principles of nature, Constitution of the country, and common sense of the people, the theologian still avers that God hates an unbeliever; that he will punish him forever; that it is rational and just to do so; that the Constitution is all wrong; the law a grave error; the people all mistaken, and he is surprised that his church is empty, and the people laugh at him. What shall he do?

Fall into line with the new truths, admit the inevitable, and march with the people. No man with a brain larger than an oyster now admits that God either does, would, or should punish human opinions except with natural consequences.

Error is forever a blunder, a failure, leading to disappointment and misery. Truth is the highway to success, to wealth, honor, safety, happiness, and heaven. The poor victim of folly has punishment enough to bear, without God piling on the agony. And it is monstrous to believe that God will punish light, logic, and success with his endless curse.

Hell is the invention of malignant priests, for those who spurned their false pretenses—that is all; and it can have no place in the republic that a hundred years ago proclaimed that it is neither rational nor just to punish men for their opinions.

All churches that hope to succeed in the republic must conform their creed and practice to the Constitution of the country and the genius of the people.

H. L. KNIGHT.

The Girl Has the Drop.

Household Treasure—I'll whip you, Master Charles, for pulling your sister's hair like that. Ain't you ashamed of yourself, you naughty boy?

Sweet Child—If you whip me, I'll tell mamma that papa kissed you.

Mistress (who overheard)—So your master has been taking liberties with you, Bella. He is rather a bold man, and I would not like to expose you to his evil influence any longer. You may leave now.

Household Treasure—Yes, mum; but before I go I'd like to clear up my character with the master, mum. I think that as all a poor girl has is her character, the master ought to know that it was you the minister stayed so late to see, and not me, mum, as you told him.

Subdued Mistress—Perhaps you had better stay a little longer, and, by the way, that silk dress I wore at the party will just about fit you.

In the Usual Way.

By one of those unexpected turns of fortune, which occur in Albany as often as anywhere, a man who but half a dozen years ago was hod carrier has become comparatively wealthy. This change in financial circumstances has had the usual effect upon the hod carrier's wife, who enjoys decorating her adipose form with what she supposes to be the latest styles. She has also, notwithstanding an utter inability to read, affected a fine literary taste, which she ostentatiously announces whenever possible. Calling on a lady whom she had been trying to make herself acquainted with, she picked up a book from the table, and, innocent of any knowledge that it was a copy of the Bible, asked the loan of it for a little time, "as she had not the book in her library." After keeping it about a fortnight her visitor returned the volume with profuse thanks. "How did you like it?" was asked. "Very well, indeed, but I knew how it would turn out before I was half through. They got married after all."—Albany Journal.

JUDGE—Do you know where you will go to, little boy, if you swear to what is not true? Boy (of radical tendencies)—No; nor you neither.—Puck.

any more than he needs to eat enough on Sunday to do him all the week. What he needs is a little less preaching and a little more justice. He wants the privilege of dividing his time naturally; eight hours for labor, eight hours for sleep, and eight hours for rest and recreation every day of the week; and then, in the language of Justyn Martyr, there would be "no need of Sabbaths since Jesus Christ."

We contend for the laborer's right to rest when it suits his interest or convenience, and indignantly deny the right of the priest to compel him to remain idle on a certain day by the pains and penalties of Sabbatarian legislation.

The clergy claim that the command, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy," is to all nations, and of universal application. Now if that were true, God certainly knew before the command was given, the conditions under which it would have been observed.

By a reference to Exodus xvi, 25, it will be seen that "the Sabbath day" refers to an ordinary day of twenty-four hours' duration, and the observance of the Sabbath would be comparatively easy where the day and night are nearly equal. But when we come to apply the command to latitudes where the day lasts six months, and the night as long, the absurdity of the claim of universal application becomes manifest at once.

Again: Suppose A and B leave New York on Monday morning, Jan. 4, 1886, A going east by steamer to Liverpool, thence through the Straits of Gibraltar and Suez Canal to China and San Francisco, thence by rail to New York. B goes westward by rail to San Francisco, thence by steamer to China, England, and New York, where he meets A Sunday, April 4, 1886.

Now it so happens that A, having reckoned time in his diary by the rising and setting of the sun, would have the day recorded as Monday, while B, reckoning time by the same method, would find himself calling it Saturday. Thus it is seen that its universal application is impossible, and its practical application even on the same lines of latitude absurd; and the whole question would be ridiculous but for its pernicious and tyrannical interference with the religious liberty of the people.

We now come to a consideration of the question:

7. Has the Christian Sabbath any authority to bind the conscience of an American citizen?

It is alleged by Sabbatarians that this is a Christian government; that the Sabbath being recognized by most of the churches as a holy day ought to be observed by the nation, the states, and municipalities. Let us examine this point.

All must admit that George Washington, who presided over the convention that framed the Constitution of the United States, and heard every clause debated during the sixteen months they held their sessions, understood the true intent and meaning of that wonderful instrument. It must also be admitted that Thomas Jefferson understood the genius of the Constitution and its provisions to carry out practically the self-evident principles of the Declaration of Independence.

Now after the Constitution was adopted, and during the administration of Washington, when Thomas Jefferson was secretary of state, a treaty was made with Tripoli, one of the Barbary powers, which in religion was Mohammedan. Now, if it be, as alleged, that the corporation known as "the United States of America" was "a moral person" and this "a Christian nation," then was the time to make the announcement to the world. But what did our nation, speaking through its treaty making officers, the president and senate of the United States, do in the premises? They declared in the Eleventh Article of the Treaty, as may be seen on page 155 of the Statutes at Large, that "the government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion." Let it not be forgotten that this treaty, according to the Constitution, is a part of "the supreme law of the land, anything in the Constitution of any state to the contrary notwithstanding."

HARRY HOOVER.

A UNITED STATES COURT in Georgia has decided that a postal clerk who breaks open a decoy letter is not punishable for the act. It takes a very fine judicial mind to construe our laws so nicely in favor of thieves, but we have a good deal of that sort of talent in this country.—Chicago Times.

METEOROLOGY.

When speaking of our human habitat, I feel reluctant to give any well-defined scientific definitions calculated to awaken the pride of an arrogant race. For some unaccountable reason man is daily plodding over the country, or sailing across the great waters, with his "mind's eye" closed to very many important phenomena transpiring around him. The rains continue to descend, whether to damage or benefit his undertakings, without awakening in his mind an ardent desire to know more about them. He cares less for the whole meteorological concatenation leading up to these wonderful natural expressions than for the silly, and in the majority of cases false, prognostications of the Civil Service Bureau touching his wishes for more or less water. True, there may be some excuse for those deluded persons who scorn the lessons of nature, and still continue to believe the fable that "God makes the rain to descend alike upon the just and unjust;" but the more liberal-minded Freethinkers can not be thus protected in their ignorance.

If we live upon the ground, and this is the outside of the planet, whence the water? Whence the lightning's flash and thunder's roll? How can we gaze upon those beautiful clouds floating over our heads without inquiring what sustains their weight several miles above our habitations? Large birds are frequently seen swimming so high over our whereabouts as to appear no bigger than sparrows. Balloon ascensions have recently been attracting some attention, and vessels of considerable tonnage are being constructed for aerial navigation, without stimulating and arousing the mental functions of our evolving race. If we mention the existence of a nitrogenous ocean, our hearers are startled. If we tell them it lies above us, they say it is nothing but air—meaning the next thing to a vacuum. They are enraged when told how our race is confined to the bottom of an ocean, as are the clams in the deep sea, and that the swimming of birds over our habitat is perfectly analogous with the swimming of fishes over that of the bivalves.

So great is this ignorance of meteorological phenomena, that I recently heard a pretending scientific lecturer antagonize the well-known translation of our globe, because such a velocity as that of seventy thousand miles an hour must sweep us from the surface of the flying planet. Bless me! If we find a typical specimen of peasantry, vulgarly called a "moss-back," believing that he lives on the very margin, nearest to heaven, and that "God sends the rain," whence he cares not, the fathomless depths of his ignorance may pass as a matter of course, but just to contemplate such omnipotent wash poured from a bottle labeled science! Surely, no sane person can use even a small telescope for one year without being convinced that the sun has either gone around this world three hundred and sixty-five times, or that the world has gone one time around the sun. The same fixed stars which clustered around the sun a year ago, having returned to their former places, force us to conclude that earth and sun are again in the same relative positions. Nothing but the completion of an orbit could possibly give this result. If the sun had gone round our planet, to bring about the days and nights, the same fixed stars must environ him every twenty-four hours. This phenomenon is well known to transpire but once a year. Nor could the sun's motion causes his appearance of rising and setting without a velocity of more than seven thousand miles per second. By rolling on its own axis at a velocity of one-fourth of a mile each second, all parts of earth's surface can be turned toward the sun daily. But our annual seasons require a journey around the sun, and the well-known fact of our constantly returning positions in the macrocosm most positively proves the orbital hypothesis.

After a moment's reflection, what rational being can imagine himself standing on the margin of this world? Since it is also known that the space through which we are traveling is studded with crystalline rocks, from invisible specks to a half a mile in diameter, and that every shooting star seen at night is one of those stones plunging into the aerial ocean in which the clouds float and the birds swim, what living thing could remain in such an exposed situation? The truth is, that the exceeding delicacy of cellular life forbids the possibility of its appearance or continued existence outside of an ocean containing a large percent of oxygen. For many long geological ages all of the planets and animals originated, lived, and died in aerated water, before the atmosphere was sufficiently dense to float the watery clouds above the unsubmerged lands. The appearance of land animals, for the first time, more than three-fourths of the way up in our fossiliferous strata, can be accounted for in no other way. Aerated water being the first animal habitat, it is not difficult to trace the evolution of pulmonary air-cells around their expanding branchi, as they learned to breath watery air in its stead. This could not transpire until the nitrogeneous ocean was capable of supporting the weight of rain-clouds, which was subsequent to the carboniferous age, the era in which land animals made their appearance on our developing planet.

This upper ocean, for it is just the same to birds and animals as is the lower and denser one to the fishes, mollusks, radiates, etc., is known to be about fifty miles in depth. The barometer shows its gravitating force toward the center of the globe, at the water level, to equal that of fifteen pounds to the square inch. As the same barometer is carried down in mines below the water level, the atmospheric weight increases, and decreases in the same ratio when we bear it up the side of a mountain. We can thus weigh the height of any mountain, because the mercury in a barometer is effected by altitude precisely as it is effected in a thermometer by temperature.

We are very certain that all clouds floating in the air must be supported by the weight of the medium in which we see them. We also know that the denser rain-clouds are never elevated above three miles high, and seldom more than one mile. The lightest vapory cirrus that is frequently seen above the mountain tops may rise to altitudes of seven, and even ten miles, in an atmospheric ocean fifty miles deep. Then forty miles of the air we breathe could never have been the arena of a meteorological thunder shower, because its greater rarity could not have uplifted the water from its normal level. By thus reasoning from effects back to their necessary causes, we learn that our aerial ocean developed from the depth of forty to that of fifty miles, approximately, since the carboniferous age, when the rains moistened the elevated lands for the first time in geological history. And about this same epoch, the slumbering marine inhabitants of our infant planet were first startled by a peal of thunder.

Both water and air are known to be the chemical products of combustion. Out in cold space there can be no such fluids or gases. If the interior of our globe were anything less than a small inclosed sun, capable of maintaining a constant molecular radiation of the four elementary gases constituting these two oceans, the telluric crust must be dry and barren beyond the possibility of a doubt. Not only have all plants and animals been warmed into existence, but the oceans in which alone such beings can possibly exist owe their presence to the increasing temperature of a vast crucible inclosed within their rocky walls. Without the constant evolution of these gases, the oceans of water and air must again be absorbed, but we might just as well talk of trees growing less, as to talk of growing planets receding from warm and inhabitable conditions. They are all progressing in the opposite direction.

MILLESON.

The Liberal Lecture.

Mr. Samuel P. Putnam, President of the American Secular Union, lectured in Rosa's hall last Friday evening. A large proportion of Bandon's population attended, and, but for the heavy rains which had made the roads unfit for travel, it is probable that a greater number from the adjacent country would have taken advantage of the occasion to hear the distinguished exponent of Secular ideas. Mr. Putnam was here once before, and on the occasion under mention confirmed the favorable opinions of himself which were based upon his previous efforts, as an apostle of the new faith, whose creed is Universal Mental Liberty. Introduced by J. M. Upton, the lecturer proceeded pleasantly and considerately to the discussion of the questions involved in his subject, "A New Heaven and a New Earth," with a rare degree of eloquence, and apparent earnestness maintained the cause of Liberalism as opposed to orthodoxy, to the evident interest and appreciation of his hearers. Mr. Putnam departed the following morning for the bay, where arrangements had been made for three lectures.—Bandon Recorder.

The Glorious Fourth.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Find inclosed two Gift Subscriptions. Yesterday the glorious Fourth was celebrated at the neighboring town of Orange, an immense lot of people forming in procession with the goddess of Liberty, and girls dressed in white a la states, all convened under the cotton shade with very uncomfortable seats. Mr. B— made an opening by saying that God had in his mercy permitted us to make the "desert to blossom like the rose." They would soon hear from the pioneers the history of the way it was done. Then the Rev. Mr. Parker told God all about how thankful we should be, in the usual way of men that are used to talking to God with their eyes shut.

If God knows all things, he must be tired on the Fourth to hear such a rehearsal on the natal day. Maybe he can't stand noise and prayer at the same time. So when the Fourth comes on Sunday they corral the people in church, and take the day before or after.

Next came the reading of the Declaration by the pen of the great humanitarian, Thomas Jefferson; then the orator of the day, the Hon. Mr. Murphy, of Los Angeles, gave a very good speech—a review of our noted men, the fathers of the Revolution, West Point cadets, etc. He did not dwell on deity, nor forget history. The new brass band rendered good music during all the exercises.

J. B. Parke, a noted Infidel, was then called to give a pioneer speech and show to the audience how the labor of improving the country by plough, hoe, and shovel was done. For some cause he did not like to contradict the Rev. Mr. Parker in public after the latter had told us that God was to have all the glory—at least I infer that, as he did not choose to let his apricots wait for God to care for them. He has learned the important fact that God always helps those who help themselves.

The band got up the celebration for their own benefit, and the way dinners were eaten, lemonade drank, ginger ale sold, and ice cream disposed of they must have realized very well. Only one slight accident occurred; a staging gave way, everybody was frightened and a toe smashed. There were fireworks, a fine success; the crowd happy; a few tried to dance, but respectable people with the fear of Mrs. Grundy in their hearts did not patronize a squeaky fiddle and late hours. It is well so, for does not Orange know how to boast of the order of her people? and why not? May she always prosper in the future as she has in the past is the wish of the WRITER.

Anaheim, Cal.

The Land of Flowers.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Perhaps a few thoughts from the sunny land will not be amiss. This is certainly the promised land. Nature has indeed been lavish in her favors, provided you are easily pleased. But let the man of intellect, the lover of liberty, the man who wishes to make a living, stay away from Florida. To the intellectual man there is no joy. The dark clouds of superstition hang heavily here. In the entire state you could not find fifty Liberals. What few there are are northerners. Here Moses is still geological authority. Joshua commanded the solar system to stand still and it obeyed; Lot is still the virtuous man, and God still speaks to the trembling believers in dreams and omens. Secularism is regarded as the child of evil, and the "called of God" still pocket the ducats. Speak of Colonel Ingersoll, and visions of murder, lies, and theft arise before the elect. Speak of Talmage, and the hands are folded in prayer; heaven and its joys open. Also the pockets of Christ's own. Tell a man that Secularism means honor, humanity, charity, and mental freedom, and he begins to argue thus: An egg has two parts, white and yellow, therefore Secularism is wrong.

To the lover of liberty Florida offers no inducements. Unless he believes that liberty means permission to cheat all who differ in opinion, he can make no headway here. The courts of justice are closed to him. Social ostracism points her bony finger at him and says, "Believe or git." The man who wants to make a living should stay away. Land is cheap—and worthless; labor high, climate incomparable—so the alligators and insects say.

To the man of science, or to science, Florida is but a baby in the lap of Nature. Her years are but thousands. Thrown up from the bottom of the sea quite recently, her soil is naught but sand, her foundation the billowy crest of old ocean.

R. E. TOWNSLEY.

Ocala, Fla.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

HAND-BOOK OF THE LICK OBSERVATORY

OF THE

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,

—BY—

EDWARD S. HOLDEN, LL.D.,

Director of the Observatory.

A volume of 135 pages, 12mo., printed on heavy paper, and bound in flexible cloth covers. Besides likenesses of

Professor Holden and James Lick,

it contains Twenty Views, Drawings, and Illustrations of the Locality, the Machinery, and the Apparatus connected with the great Astronomical station. The Table of Contents includes:

- I. Information for Visitors.
- II. Sketch of the Life of James Lick.
- III. A Visit to Mt. Hamilton.
- IV. History of the Lick Observatory.
- V. Description of the Building.
- VI. Description of the Instruments.
- VII. The Work of the Observatory.
- VIII. Telescopes.
- IX. Poem: To the Unmounted Lens.
- X. Astronomical Photography.
- XI. Clocks and Time-Keeping.
- XII. The Principal Observatories of the World.

By mail 80 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION. Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

By E. A. STEVENS,

SECRETARY OF THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAN FRANCISCO:

PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 KEARNY ST.

PRICE, 10 CENTS.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.'"

It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of
MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,
Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" medi-
Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured
Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati
Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men
Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and
A NEW FEATURE, of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling
AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—16 page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.
Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the
Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.
MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Tributes. "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," "The Grant Banquet Toast" and "Little Harry Miller's Grave," printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing; four to any address for 50 cents, or either one for 15 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," and all the famous tributes, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, table-talks and day-to-day conversations of the author. Fine steel portrait and autograph facsimile. Price, in cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Free thought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7 jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50, 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50. With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17, $18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4, being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies' watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels, $22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2 to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $33. Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra. Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case. Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1; best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas, 50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12. Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free. BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Designer and Patentee of new FREETHOUGHT Badge in PINS and CHARMS—emblematical of the light and day of Free thought, Science, and Reason vs. the night and darkness of Superstition.—Exact size of cut and smaller, two-thirds size. Warranted solid gold, enameled in four colors. Most beautiful badge ever designed. Small, $2, $2.75, $3.50. Large, $3 to $5; with genuine diamond, $8, $10; and charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 29.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 21, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1883

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - JULY 21, 1888

A MINISTER ought to be truthful enough to be believed, but when the Rev. Mr. Bowdish, of New York, swoons in his pulpit and upon recovering states that he has seen the Lord, we are inclined to accuse him of being mistaken. He should at least have entered into particulars sufficiently to explain whether his vision was anything like that of Moses as described in Exodus.

WE are likely to have a Presbyterian for the next president. Both Harrison and Cleveland belong to that church. Harrison is an ex-Sunday-school teacher, an elder in good standing, and takes part in prayer-meetings; but occasional attendance at church is the extent of Cleveland's devotion. As the Truth Seeker observes, he fluctuates between the religion of his father and the religion of votes.

THE Pittsburgh-Truth is not specially charmed by the "scrub" orators who pose before the Liberal public as the "Ingersolls" of their localities. The Secular Society of Pittsburgh has had a painful experience with one of these "Ingersolls" who are in the field for revenue only, and who "skin the societies and find fault with the management." Our contemporary believes that these "scrubs" should be exposed, but neglects to say who they are.

THE Rev. Robert Mackenzie last Sunday preached a sermon from the text, "God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." From this text Dr. Mackenzie passed to an argument for the exclusion of foreigners from our shores. His argument was better than his text, and appeared to contradict it. There is no fact in ethnology plainer than that all the nations of men are not of one blood. If they were there could be no objection to Mongolians crossing the Pacific, since blood is thicker than water.

A COMMITTEE ON MATERIALIZATION appointed by the Society for Spiritual Phenomena and Psychical Research, of San Francisco, has reported to the society. Its researches resulted in the following resolution: "That the sum of one hundred dollars be taken from the treasury, and be made a standing offer to any public materializing medium, for one full form materialization, the seance to be held in the parlors of the society, or in the rooms of the medium, under reasonable and proper conditions." All the members of the society and the committee are Spiritualists and firm believers in spirit manifestations.

SURGEON-GENERAL HAMILTON, of the Marine Hospital service at Washington, has been in New York city investigating the system at Castle Garden to see what precautions were taken against the introduction of diseases from immigrants. He reports that he was disgusted with the class of immigrants now arriving, and said that if the people at large understood the real character of the hordes who are being dumped on the Battery by the foreign steamship companies there would be no immigration whatever. From the workingman's point of view the exclusion of foreign laborers is a more important question than that of taxing or not taxing imports.

A PLANK in the platform of one of the political parties reads in this way:

"The first concern of the government is the virtue and sobriety of the people and the purity of the home."

This sounds well, but the framer had no idea of the function of government. The first sentence needs turning end for end, i. e., "the first concern of the people is the virtue and sobriety of the government and the purity of the administration." Let us then add that the first concern of the individual is the virtue and sobriety of himself and the purity of his own life. The first concern of government is as set forth in the Declaration of Independence, to secure to each citizen the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. It is a good thing for the country that the platforms of political parties are seldom heard of after the election.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Several hundred people were at "our camp-meeting" at New Era. Friends were present from Molalla, Canby, Oregon City, etc. It was a lovely day, and the farmers were busy. "Make hay while the sun shines" is quite applicable at this time, and the sun did shine gloriously, with a few clouds here and there, and the clover must be gathered in; so we did not see all the good Liberals who meant to come to this Freethought picnic. W. W. Jesse and his family are the head and heart of this campaign, and well have they kept the forces in motion. Besides the lectures after noon and evening, the nimble feet kept time beneath the shadowy arches to the music of joy and progress. The beautiful Willamette rolled by beneath the starlight. Of course we shall have to have another of these picnics in the time to come. I suppose this grove is haunted by the spirits, for the ancient Indian often puts in an appearance, but this does not disturb our Freethought fun. It keeps right on and partakes of the glory of what is, and disdains the hope of the future. A goodly number of our Spiritualist allies were with us on this occasion, and added to the interest and enthusiasm. I believe that Mr. Jesse and family penetrate somewhat into the mystic circle, but they are just as solid and generous for this world, and know how to provide for the wandering Secularist, so that he is at home at once by their genial hearthstone.

Mr. and Mrs. George Knight, Mrs. May, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Lee, Henry Lohman, H. H. Wheeler, G. V. McCausland, L. P. Howard, Miss Ola Mack, and others of Canby; George Johnson, of Oregon City, who has plenty of ammunition for the war; the Wrights of Molalla, enrolled in the columns of Free-thought; J. E. Coates, of Hyland, and many besides make this green temple of nature cheerful with the light of coming days. So we pursued our journey with hope to the metropolis of the North, that waves its wand of empire over the Willamette and Columbia. Again we see our always cordial friends, Mr. and Mrs. Saunders, Professor Seymour and wife, A. F. Neunert, and others. After a few hours' rest we push on to McMinnville. The Opera House was full on our arrival. The "Champion" was there, flanked by half a dozen clergymen of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Campbellite persuasions. As I entered the stage, the Campbellite preacher looked at me with a pitying expression and said, "How scared he looks!" At sight of the Freethought literature, the Defender of the Faith muttered "dynamite." I gave my lecture on "The Bible and Modern Thought," and the large audience, perhaps half Christian, listened attentively, and I thought it was a very good evening's work, even if I was "scared." At any rate I enjoyed it, and I would like to have a few more "scares" of the same sort.

Sunday morning I went to church myself, to hear the Rev. Mr. Fairchild, of the Universalist sect, which is a very good kind of Infidelity so far as the love of God is concerned, if there is one. I liked his discourse. It had a good many sparkles of common sense. He made the most of the Bible and avoided the dark places of it quite skillfully. He said that no one need take the "whale story." They could have plenty of fish without that. He expressed a mild desire to convert me, but I don't think he has "great expectations" in that direction.

In the afternoon and evening of Sunday, and Monday evening, the Opera House was crowded, and so far as our side is concerned the meetings were successful, and a far larger number reached and set thinking than ever before. Our McMinnville friends feel that progress is being made, and they rally with new determination. The Secular Union will go forward. It is difficult to have sunshine all the time, but there is enough of fair weather to keep the line in motion. There are churches and colleges here, and they make it a strong point for orthodoxy, but it feels the movement of the world.

Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Booth, always among the first to welcome; Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Olds, in whose sunny home, amid the broad fields, there is fresh inspiration; Mr. and Mrs. Roberts, Mr. and Mrs. Younger, of Lafayette; President Olds, who will keep to the front; Mr. and Mrs. Ford, W. J. Garrison, S. Richardson, Jonathan Bogue, Wm. Lambert, G. W. Olds, A. J. Grant, Mr. and Mrs. Fuller, A. D. Simpson, J. R. Booth, and many more make up a bright battalion of the army of Reform. These heights, and green and golden expanses, where nature smiles with such bounty, will not be given over to ecclesiastical gloom, but they will shine with the world's best hopes.

I met some unexpected allies here, the Advent Christians, who have pitched their tent on the green, and expect to remain and battle for the Lord. They prophesy that the world will come to an end in four years. How they got their information I do not know, but I shall endeavor to be on the lookout. These Advents are liberal American citizens, whatever else they may be. They heartily concurred in my theory of the American republic, and cried Amen, much to the surprise of the other orthodox Christians, who will no doubt immediately count them down as Infidels. Rev. Mr. Reed, the Advent missionary preacher, gave me the right hand of fellowship and wished success to the Secular Union in its efforts for a thorough separation of church and state. The Advents are in earnest on this important matter. The American Sentinel, published at Oakland, is one of the ablest advocates of a Secular government, and is a mighty ally indeed, and I was glad of the opportunity to speak a good word for it. We may differ radically as to whether "the heavens will melt with fervent heat" or not, but in the sphere of politics we agree, and that is a great gain. The Advents number about thirty thousand, and they are among the most enterprising workers in the land. One or their members is equal to about a dozen ordinary Christians.

I have had a pleasant, varied, and most encouraging experience at McMinnville. The Christians have gained nothing, and our forces are together and full of hope. More and more do I see the great possibilities of the Pacific Coast, and what a work can be done in this formative period when so many elements are astir, and the forces of life, even in tumult, give promise of noble attainment. McMinnville shall be one of the stars of our firmament.

I speed on to McCoy. J. K. Sears is ready to greet me, and W. W. Stockton, of Ballston, and K. Campbell. The two lectures were to be given at the Ballston school-house, but the Campbellite brethren had taken pains to announce that one of the lectures would be given at McCoy, at which the "Saint's Perseverance" would be present and demolish the Infidel. So to accommodate the Disciples one of the lectures was given at McCoy, on Wednesday evening. The school-houses were crowded, and Freethought found an opportunity to give a few new ideas to the adherents of the church, who constituted the majority of the audiences. The campaign was all that we could wish. Something is begun for the future. There are strenuous allies here, and they will hold the ground. They believe in the gospel of Freethought; that it is for virtue and progress. With the friends already mentioned are Henry Black, Jos. Barbeau, of Sheridan; E. B. Wallace, Mrs. Coulter, and others, of Amity; earnest and devoted to the cause. Always it will be a pleasure to grasp the hand of these frontier co-laborers.

On to Corvallis, and in the same car rides the blue-coated "combination" of the churches, who carries a load of "indorsements" in his pocket. Corvallis last year was a rather slow place, but this year it was all alive. My friend Hyland was happy. We let things take their course. The city hall was full. The Christians were not afraid to attend. The antidote was there, and the poison of Infidelity could be easily overcome. "The American Republic" was well received. There was no reply, simply because there could be none. The churchmen are not hilarious to-day. The Champion did not find any kicking to do, and he felt his weakness. He did not indulge, this time, in any personal abuse. I guess the Christians have "corralled" him and forbid such antics. As is Samson without his hair, so is the Champion of the church without the privilege of abuse. It is generally conceded that the Christians have not bettered their cause. However, the agitation continues, the dead level is broken up, and there is a chance of improvement.

I am at the cheerful homestead of B. F. Hyland and wife. He is a worker. He goes ahead. He has good supporters—Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler, Harvey Sargent, J. D. Clark, Thos. Eglin; and so the dull atmosphere of this orthodox place brightens with a "golden dawn." The iron sceptre is departing.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Arnold, of Shedd, have just come to this country, from Missouri. They are grand Liberals, and it does one good to meet them. They stand like the oak. Mr. Arnold is one of the "Captains of Industry," and into the gloom of superstition he will bring the sunshine of knowledge and liberty. He has a big farm out here and on it is a once famous Methodist camp-ground. This is now captured for Freethought; and if everything is favorable we shall have a Liberal picnic there next year, and we will send our salvos of triumph to the Chicago Forum, and art and nature shall blend their glories for the victory of Freethought.

Mrs. Helm, whom I met at Emmett's last year, is now established as the gentle postmistress of this place. That is good for woman's rights, but what will St. Paul say, and the Methodist Conference?

Mrs. Louisa Bennett, of Emmett's, has also come here to live, and it was an unexpected pleasure to meet this noble friend of our cause, who is ever ready to be at the front; who will speak her woman's word in spite of the thunders of the church.

So this week has been full of bright, exciting work. I have met so many friends it seems like a happy dream. The storm-clouds are disappearing and the beautiful harvests everywhere greet the eye. This is a royal year for Oregon. The barns will be full to overflowing, and the machinery far and near will make the music of plenty. Poverty will hide its head. "Blessed be ye poor" will not be sung in this land to-day.

With the recollection of the many happy homes I have visited, voices of hope, strong hearts, ready hands, the long leagues stretch away into rainbow colors. The flowers are on the earth. Labor sees its rich reward.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Hyland Homestead, July 13, 1888.

NOTES AND NEWS.

I am sometimes apprehensive that the interest taken in the adventures of the traveling partner of this firm may render the reader oblivious to the fact that many things of importance are transpiring at the central office. I have concluded to make note of a few of these this week. There have been some complaints that I do not write so much for FREETHOUGHT as I should if I expect to make it a popular family journal. My friend, William Thorpe, of Ballston Spa, N. Y., assures me that as a describer I can beat hell and not half try. I do not like to print flattering remarks about myself, but I am grateful for what looks like just appreciation of my endeavors to be truthful.

I observe that a great many delegates to the National Educational Association's convention are arriving in the city daily and that the reception committee is in a state of anxiety to know where they are to find lodging. I take this way of informing the committee that while the senior editor is away there is considerable untenanted territory on the floor of our sanctum, and the same is at the disposal of the said committee. It has always been a source of pleasure to me to step forward in a crisis, and I do so at present with unusual delight. The last occasion I had to fill a felt want was when Mr. C. B. Reynolds was delivering illustrated lectures in Troy, N. Y., and went to Coxsackie across the river and could not return in season for the evening exercises. I delivered the lecture that night on Rome, Japan, Ireland, and the Hudson river scenery, and Mr. Reynolds's son Clinton, who was doorkeeper, returned the money to a large and appreciative audience as it dispersed after listening to me for forty-five minutes.

A paper has just been received from Oregon with a marked paragraph directing my attention to the allegation that there is no such coin as a penny. I do not know why this statement was brought to my notice so conspicuously. Every editor knows that pennies are quite scarce this season. Perhaps I have used the word penny in these columns, when I should have said cent, and if so I agree not to do it again. The coin by any other name would smell as sweet. I might almost say the cent would be the same. But I digress.

My object in promulgating this essay is to call attention to the movement to inaugurate the Reformed Picnic. The steamer Donahue began the reform the other Sunday by taking a select party around the bay at a dollar a head. How the participants were pleased with the innovation I have not learned, but there was another picnic on the same day which I personally know to have been wholly satisfactory. It was instigated by Mr. Schou, of Oakland, who is a leader in all good and philanthropic work, and was made up of about twenty-five persons, a concertina, a guitar, some lunch baskets, and a keg of beer, of which I was one. Many of the party spoke the German language fluently. We conveyed ourselves in a sort of omnibus drawn by three horses, and when all the old folks and young folks were aboard the driver headed his horses toward Lake Chabot, out somewhere in the hills back of Oakland, and set them gently in motion.

The route was interesting, the scenery being varied. There were so many lawns with palms and magnolias and century plants and cactuses that all these seemed to be arranged in rows beside the road as we rocked and tipped along, and I got so accustomed to them that I could shut my eyes and witness the panorama just the same.

We passed the camp-ground by Lake Merritt. Many of the tents still remained, but the people were gone. I missed them, and most of all I missed the person of Mr. George Chainey. I understand that he has wearied of these shores; that he has gone away; that the places which knew him here recognize him no more; that he gives lessons no longer in psychic research at Room 17; Flood Building; that the East has renewed its attractions for him; that a star there has come up again above the horizon of his wavering fancy like morn new risen on high noon, and that the mother of his soul looks in vain for the return of her spiritual offspring. Good-bye, Brother Chainey. He who steers his bark by your light will follow, I fear, a wandering glim.

But, gay or sad, away we go, rocking and tipping still, past cottages, palaces, gardens, and ranches, and orchards of fruit and vine. The tethered kine look up and smile. The vagrant pup larrups by with his nose to the ground, and long and wallowing tail. The small boys salute us and inquire what we call it; the girls wave their handkerchiefs; the idlers in the village of San Leandro view us with curiosity as though the effort of going anywhere except to the corner grocery were too great for their energy, and they couldn't understand why anyone else should do it.

Lake Chabot does not exist of its own volition. Between two hills Mr. Chabot caused a dam to be constructed. The wash from other hills settles there in the rainy season, and runs out through pipes during the dry season, and the people of Oakland drink it. There is a good deal of grumbling about its quality, which, like that of mercy, is not strained, so it may be said that the water is dammed at both ends of its journey. Thus again I am reminded that it differs from mercy, which is twice blessed. We picnicked in a canyon under the trees. The ladies unpacked the baskets, and from beneath the seat of the wagon Mr. Schou elicited the keg of innocuous steam beer. The same was warm and frothy. I drank one glass and had been furnished with a second when my attention was arrested by a phenomenon which caused me to set it down untasted. The phenomenon was nothing less than the apparition of a small boy in two different places at the same time. I glanced around to note if any of the party were similarly affected. Finding that such was not the case I emptied the glass upon the ground, and took a mental pledge never to drink steam beer again. I had reason to regret my haste in this, because the phenomenon was shortly explained. The boy was twins, but he looked so much like his duplicate that it was necessary to capture one of him and inquire whether he was himself or his alibi before his identity could be established. It is only the truthfulness of the boy that keeps him from getting mixed. If Rudolf should commit some act for which he deserved punishment, and should then declare that his name was Theodor, I am afraid that Theodor would stand a fair chance of getting disciplined. The study of this problem kept me in a thoughtful mood most of the day.

I have neglected to state whom the party was composed of. I will correct the oversight. First there was Mr. John McGlashan, of Ukiah, who is spending a few weeks in the city and vicinity, and making it pleasant for the writer; Mr. Schou and Mrs. Schou; Mr. Haelke, Mrs. Haelke, two young lady daughters who look enough alike so there will never be any dispute about which is the prettier, and the twin youngster; Mr. Broneer and Mrs. Broneer, and the three children; Mr. Mertz, who manufactures windmills and pumps for extracting moisture from the sub-strata of Alameda county; Mr. Sorenson and Miss Jensen, from as far off as Denmark; an aerial young lady from Northfield, Minnesota, to whom every incident of the occasion recalled a similar circumstance connected with that beloved spot, and who discoursed concerning the same in a most entertaining way; and two lively youths whom I took to be brothers from their accent, as well as from the family resemblance between the strings with which each had repaired his left suspender.

We took lunch in a shaded place, the cloth spread on the ground; and though no one suggested grace, yet Grace did much abound. The sun shone bright on lofty hills, and valleys green stretched far away, a gentle breeze perturbed the air, while at our feet, as diamond fair, the lake in all its beauty lay. Then when the simple meal was done, the Danish lad arose full soon, unslung his wild accordion, and played a Scandinavian tune. Whereat Herr Schou, pleased with the sound, bethought him of the mazy whirl, brought forth the fair aerial girl, and danced a polka on the ground.

When we had had all the fun we wanted we climbed into the wagon and moved homeward. I enjoyed myself greatly, though I did not contribute anything to the enjoyment of the rest. It pleases me most to sit apart and watch the innocent gambols of others who do not weigh so much as I do. This is a fair bright world on the whole, and most of us have just trouble enough to prevent our overlooking the deeper sorrows of others. But I think it is best once in a while to forget all about it; to lock up the doors of our offices and our houses and our churches, and go out into the country where we can commune with nature and help her beautify the rustic scenery.

G. E. M.

San Francisco, July 18, 1888.

COPELAND'S ANSWER TO INFIDELS.

Los Angeles has been afflicted with a reply to Ingersoll given by one Colonel Copeland before the Alliance Assembly. Mr. Copeland defends the rib story, the flood story, and the story of the remarkable multiplication of the children of Israel during their sojourn in Egypt. The "reply" is reported in the Los Angeles Tribune of July 12, from which we quote an extract:

"Mr. Ingersoll had ridiculed the idea of the flood, because he had said that if the ark rested upon a mountain five miles in height it must have stood upon two and one-half miles of solid ice, as water congeals at two and one-half miles. The lecturer showed the Infidel's shallowness as a philosopher, as any schoolboy knows that the heat of the sun is caused by refraction, when his rays touch the earth, and that consequently, the water, acting as a reflector, would be warmer at that height than on the level of the earth. In ridiculing the idea of water piling up five miles in height, Ingersoll had ignored the Bible statement that the fountains of the great deep had been broken up."

We do not know whether the stupidity of the foregoing quotation is the fault of the speaker or of the reporter, but it is phenomenal. Ingersoll does not say that the mountain was five miles high. He gives its altitude at seventeen thousand feet, which is about one thousand feet more than three miles. The two miles and a half of ice are therefore a fiction. Ingersoll merely remarks that "When the waters were abated it would be intensely cold at a point seventeen thousand feet above the level of the sea."

Neither does Ingersoll ignore the Bible statement that the fountains of the great deep had been broken up. Concerning this phenomenon he observes:

"Some Christians say that the fountains of the great deep were broken up. Will they be kind enough to tell us what the fountains of the great deep are?"

Mr. Copeland has not been answering Ingersoll, but his own misrepresentations of him.

Another passage in the reply reads as follows:

"The speaker said that the Infidel was as shallow in arithmetic as in history and philosophy. Ingersoll said that if the children of Israel multiplied as fast as Moses had represented, they must have had women of remarkable fecundity. Every mother would necessarily had to have been the happy possessor of seventy babies. The mistake in this was that he gave the time spent by the children of Israel in the desert at twenty-five instead of forty-two, as the Bible has asserted. And then his computation placing the number of Israelites at 3,000,000 had been based upon a wrong assumption, mainly that of making the age when the men were capable of bearing arms twenty-one years, whereas every schoolboy knows that this age is sixteen."

Here is some more stupidity. Ingersoll, following Paul and Josephus, gives the time spent in Egypt by the Israelites as two hundred and fifteen years. He says nothing about twenty-five. In some portions of the Bible the time is set at four hundred and thirty, but nowhere at forty-two, as the report states. Colonel Ingersoll finds that at the end of two hundred and fifteen years the Israelites are reported to have had 600,000 men of war. He does not say that every man of war was necessarily twenty-one years old. His statement is that in this Union we find on an average five other persons to every voter, and that there are more voters than men of war. Therefore if there were 600,000 men of war there were at least five times as many people in the total population. He nowhere states that the age of the man of war must necessarily be twenty-one years. Suppose Mr. Copeland places the arms-bearing age at sixteen, what difference will it make?

Ingersoll says nothing about mothers with seventy children each. He says that at the time of the exodus the Hebrews took a census and found that there were 22,273 first-born males. It is reasonable to suppose that there were about as many first-born females. This would make 44,546 first-born children. Now there must have been about as many mothers as there were first-born children. If there were only about 45,000 mothers and 3,000,000 of people, the mothers must have had on an average about 66 children apiece. There is no escape from these results.

It would be unfair to Colonel Copeland to base a criticism upon the report in the Los Angeles Tribune. No sane man would make the statements there attributed to him. The reporter is evidently not a biblical scholar, and Copeland, if he is intelligent and honest, will hasten to repudiate the whole affair.

REV. G. W. SWEENEY, ATTENTION!

The Christian Independent of Oakland announces that the Rev. John S. Sweeney is coming to this coast to debate. We do not know who is to debate with him, but for the information of all whom it may concern we publish the following:

"If you have not met J. S. Sweeney you will find him weak on history, historic evidences, sciences, the position that the Bible is an outgrowth of pre-existent paganism, and was built up like all other books of religion. He is sharp, pert, and declamatory, but superficial in education, not well read, and retails second-hand what he uses. If you will press these points on him, and frequently press on him that he does not answer them, you will defeat him. Review what you have presented on his attention and you will defeat him."

The Rev. John Sweeney is a brother of the Rev. George Sweeney, editor of the Christian Independent. This "testimonial" is not published in that paper, which we much wonder at, because the Independent loves to print the writings of Clark Braden, and Braden wrote the above extract. It was sent to B. F. Underwood in return for a loan of $20 to Braden to pay his fare home from a place where he was holding a debate and where he was informed by the Christians who employed him that he was injuring their cause. It would have been a much more graceful act on the part of Braden to repay the loan, which he never did, but the letter has done good service in revealing the meanness of the writer.

If the Rev. William Sweeney, another brother of the editor of the Christian Independent, still lives, we would recommend that the Rev. George W. inquire of him what sort of a man Clark Braden is. The Rev. George W. Sweeney is mainly responsible for foisting Braden upon the brethren of the coast, and he should miss no opportunity of informing himself on the subject.

PUNDITA RAMABAI, a wise woman of India, addressing a San Francisco audience, gave some queer facts about the condition of her countrywomen. Among others was her statement that "while Hindoo women may not read the sacred writings, the priests deign to expound to them sometimes an expurgated translation, not addressing their female auditors directly, but speaking to a large brass bell, and allowing the women to listen. The Hindoo woman lives in constant fear, if she happens to have a cruel or dissipated husband, lest her daily beatings may be too severe. Her only hope is that when she dies she may go to the Hindoo hell, where she will not be beaten by her husband, as would be the case if she went with him to heaven; therefore, she strives to so disobey him as to ruin her prospects of heaven." Madam Ramabai wants the Christian gospel preached to her benighted sisters, and will receive subscriptions for that purpose. We will give something toward the expense of having Helen Gardener's "Men, Women, and Gods" translated for circulation among Indian women. It is of more value than all that the gospel-mongers ever wrote.

THE Golden Gate, a Spiritualist paper, publishes the following notice:

"Mr. and Mrs. Fred Evans, who are under engagement to visit Australia, will sail by the steamer Alameda on the 15th of August. Those who would consult them prior to their departure should make their engagements at once."

In the advertising pages of the same paper is the following "Professional Card.":

"Fred Evans, medium for Independent slate and mechanical writing. Sittings daily (Sundays excepted) from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. Private developing daily. No. 133 Octavia street, near Haight street, San Francisco. Take the Haight street cable car. Mr. Evans leaves for Australia August 15. Parties desiring to see Mr. Evans had better make arrangements at once."

We can hardly understand why Mr. Evans should burden himself with the expense of keeping these advertisements standing in the Golden Gate. For the past four weeks we have been solicitous of having a sitting with him under the conditions proposed in the Truth Seeker by Mr. McArthur, of Boston, who is a firm believer, and we have twice communicated with Mr. Evans on the subject. He informs us that he has so many engagements on hand that he cannot give Mr. McArthur's proposition his attention. This is the reason why we cannot understand his object in continuing to advertise for custom. The conditions proposed by Mr. McArthur are such as would preclude the probability of Mr. Evans doing the slate-writing with his own hand.

THE Truth Seeker has voiced its sentiments with regard to the American Secular Union. It believes that the management of the Union has been better during the past three years than ever before; that organization is necessary if Liberals really propose to do something; and that the American Secular Union should be supported. We are gratified to be able to record that the Truth Seeker also favors a re-election of Secretary Stevens.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The weather the first part of the week got out its thermometer and showed our Eastern visitors what it could do. The maximum temperature was 93 in the shade.—The steamer Belgic anchored in the bay last week with 1206 Chinamen and 200 cases of opium on board. The duty on the opium will amount to $82,000.—The state is full of schoolmarmes who are here to attend the teachers' convention. They come from every state in the Union.—Indians on the Mojave reservation are threatened with famine this fall through failure of crops.—The Prohibitionists of Oakland have nominated a full state ticket, and will endeavor to take that city in out of the wet.—Gustave Touchard, a prominent and wealthy citizen of Oakland, died on the 11th, at the age of 72. He was president of the Union Insurance Company.—Reports from all parts of the state show that June was the healthiest month of the year.—Mrs. Lillie Devereaux Blake, the distinguished woman suffragist and lecturer, is now on her way to California, and will deliver one of her lectures in this city on about the 19th or 20th of the present month.—The judges of the federal courts at this port are landing Chinamen in a way that we grieve.

The great lockout of ironworkers at Pittsburgh, Pa., is declared over, the manufacturers having conceded to the demands of the men.—The canned bodies of 215 Chinamen are on their way to San Francisco from various cities of the East. They will be shipped hence to China.—General Harrison, Republican candidate for president, is suffering from a slight attack of neuralgia.—The National Union Labor Party is flying the banner of A. J. Streeter, of Illinois, and C. E. Cunningham, of Arkansas, for president and vice-president—Convictions are looked for in the cases of the striking engineers on the Burlington road who resorted to the use of dynamite.—The stone mansion on the Ben Holliday farm, White Plains, N. Y., was destroyed by fire on the 14th, at a loss of $500,000. The structure had been standing for over 200 years, and was owned by Whitelaw Reid of the Tribune.—Anna Dickinson will take the Republican stump in this fall's campaign.—Ex-Speaker Randall, of Pennsylvania, who has been very sick at Washington, is in better health.—Millions of dollars damage has been done in the counties of Alleghany, Washington, and Fayette, Pa., by floods on the Monongahela river and its tributaries.—Monday morning's papers contained this startling dispatch: "New York, July 16—An exciting scene occurred at the extraordinary revival service of in the John-street Methodist church to-day, where Harrison, the boy preacher, has been making many converts. This morning Rev. W. W. Bowdish, pastor of the church, while preaching swooned in the pulpit, but soon recovered. He asserts that he saw the Lord."

Minister Floquet and Dictator Boulanger of France fought a duel last week. Boulanger is laid up with a cut in the neck.—The steamer City of New York, of English build but owned by Americans, will make her trial trip August 1. It is claimed that the new vessel is absolutely unsinkable and that she will make the run from Fastnet light to Sandy Hook in five days.—A letter from the pope was read in all the Catholic churches of Ireland last Sunday. The pope hypocritically reiterates his love of Ireland and condemns boycotting as unlawful.—Cablegrams received at London from Cape Town, Africa, report a terribly disastrous fire in a diamond mine at Kimberly. Eight hundred men were in the mine and 225 were burned to death.—Patrick O'Brien, member of Parliament for Tipperary, was released from Tullamore jail last week. He was immediately taken in charge by officers and conveyed to Kilkenny jail, where he will undergo a further imprisonment of three months for another violation of the Crimes act.

NEW YORK LETTER.

As George Charles succeeded John, so Lillian succeeds Sarah, i. e., according to the law of this state. The laws of New York have made the duke of Marlborough and Mrs. Hammersley man and wife, but the English court, in granting Lady Marlborough a divorce from the duke, forbade his marrying again during her life. What will the English court do about it? Will their offspring be legitimate? Has this lady caught anything more than a shadow? There is one thing certain, this woman has taken the leavings of Europe. Any woman in England has had this scapegoat, who wanted him, and after being kicked out of respectable society, and denied access to the queen's drawing-room, a bankrupt in fortune and reputation, he comes to America, and in defiance of English law marries a woman with an income of £60,000. Who doubts that it was a love match? He had no thought of her income, and she had no ambition for a title! We venture to say that Mrs. Louis Hammersley would not have married an American with as unsavory a reputation. I will not mention Lady Aylesley; that story is too fresh to need repeating.

Mrs. Hammersley is the daughter of Commodore Price, of the navy. She was born in Troy, and in 1879 married Louis C., the only child of the late Gordon Hammersley of this city. The father and son were always together, and were known as "Dombey & Son." The father died in July, 1883, and the son the following May. They were opulent. The husband left his young wife the entire income of his millions, the estate at her death going to either the heirs of his cousin, J. Hooker Hammersley, or to charitable institutions. She is an extremely handsome woman, and rumor had it for a long time that she was going to join the Catholic church. This marriage shows that she did not. Like thousands of American women she was crazy for a title. But one thing is sure, she will never put her foot inside the old queen's drawing-room. She will never be received at court. Her standing in London society is problematical. The duke's brother, Lord Randolph Churchill, married Leonard Jerome's oldest daughter.

Miss Effie Ellsler made a marked success in "Keepsake." She is too well known to need any encomiums from my pen. "The Keepsake" is an adaptation from Raimond Deslandes' "Antoinette Rigaud," which was played three years ago at the Comedie Francaise, of Paris. The story is the same old French tale, too monotonous to be reported. Miss Ellsler will star this year with it. The English actor, J. H. Barnes, known as "Handsome Jack," returns to us this fall, and will support Mary Anderson. He was her leading man years ago.

Ingersoll lives at 400 Fifth avenue. The house was built by the late F. P. James, a Wall street banker, and is now the property of his estate. The widow last year married General Daniel Butterfield, who, the country in the past few days has learned, fought and won Gettysburg—not General Meade. The house is on Murray Hill, three doors south of 37th street. It is a "four-story" brown-stone, high-stoop house, with an extension in the rear for dining-room, over which is a billiard-room. The location is one of the best on the island, but, like all that part of the avenue, is being invaded by the shops. The colonel ought to be happy in this palatial mansion. I understand it is worth at least $150,000. Colonel Ingersoll has not in years uttered a word which has attracted as much attention as the beautiful thoughts which you commented on in your issue of June 30. The Fourth was a cool and delicious day. EUDORUS.
New York, July 6, 1888.

An Acrostic.

Centuries have rushed along
On the widespread wings of time,
Leaping to reach the moment when
Ready to launch a soul divine
On the mighty waves of Destiny.
Born to a fate sublime;
Every gift that the gods could give,
Rare and choice from the higher spheres,
Tuned to the music of heavenly love;
Great in wisdom while young in years,
Inheriting from the ages past
Nirvana's rest, Niobe's tears;
Glad is the country that calls him son,
Every word he speaks is a bugle note
Reverberating the crowds among,
Sounding ever the words of hope
Over the darkness of the past,
Lighting the present's horoscope,
Lifting the clouds that o'er us float.

M. A. LELAND.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made these lecture appointments from July to October. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Astoria, Or	July	22, 29	Heber, Utah	Aug	28, 29
Cathlamet, W. T.	"	24-27	Denver, Col.	Sept	2
Pasco, Waverly, Colfax, and	"	"	Seward, Neb.	"	5-6
Spokane Falls, W. T.	Aug	1-12	Wahoo	"	7-8
Walla Walla, W. T.	"	14	Lincoln	"	9
Union, Or.	"	15	Omaha	"	10
Emmett, Idaho	"	18	Creston, Iowa	"	11
Boise City, Idaho	"	19	Ottumwa	"	12
Ogden, Utah	"	21	Salem	"	13
Morgan	"	22	West Union	"	16-17
Coalville	"	23	Dwight, Ill.	"	19-20
Park City	"	25	Chicago	"	23
Salt Lake City	Aug	26	Pittsburgh, Pa.	"	30
Murray	"	27

A SUNDAY-SCHOOL picnic went sailing from Baltimore on a staunch steamer. When far from land there was a rattle and a racket. The machinery had broken and pallid fear soon produced a panic. The brass band thought to calm things and so began playing "Nearer, My God, to Thee," at which the people began to tie on life-preservers and jump overboard.

THE Gnostic, erstwhile Brother George Chainey's magazine, and now issued by the Gnostic Publishing company, is out for July with a bright-red, warm-weather cover, and gilt letters. Sample copies are sent for 15 cents each, room 17, Flood Building, San Francisco.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary ..... 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
 CHARLES ECKHARD, Treasurer ..... 28 Lafayette place, New York
 E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com ..... 120 Lexington ave., New York
 MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com ..... 106 So. Halsted st., Chicago

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	Harry Hoover,	S. W. Devenbaugh,
Courtlandt Palmer,	Charles B. Reynolds,	Wm. Algie,
T. B. Wakeman,	Prof. Ch. Orchardson,	Roman Staley,
James Parton,	L. K. Washburn,	H. P. Mason,
J. D. Shaw,	W. S. Bell,	N. D. Goodell,
W. F. Jamieson,	Mattie A. Freeman,	D. W. Smith,
Charles Watts,	M. M. Secor,	Jas. Wardwell,
John E. Remsburg,	Otto Wettstein,	J. W. Black,
Horace Seaver,	Wm. Redfield,	Thos. J. Truss.
Mattie P. Krekel,

SECULARISM IN CHICAGO.

MRS. FREEMAN'S LECTURE.

The Chicago Union celebrated Sunday, July 1, instead of the Fourth, it being much more easy to get a grand rally of Free-thinkers, as Mrs. Freeman had consented to deliver before the local society the lecture she gave at the congress, "His Satanic Majesty." In honor of the occasion, our Young People's Society determined to spread themselves, and the exquisite display of flowers—bouquets and baskets—they furnished did credit to their taste and liberality. As a matter of course, the Forum was filled with a splendid audience who came to pay their respects to the foremost lady Freethought lecturer in the West, and to be edified by her wit and eloquence. In the audience I noticed several friends who had prominently figured in the councils of the city and the state. During the delivery of the lecture the audience manifested their delight, but at its conclusion the speaker received a perfect ovation, when Dr. Henry, in behalf of Mrs. Henry, stepped forward and presented Mrs. Freeman with a monster bouquet. Mrs. Freeman's lectures cannot be epitomized to do her justice; they must be heard to receive the full benefit of her clear and faultless elocution, a matter upon which even all her orthodox critics highly complimented her. The debate which followed was a series of coruscations and intellectual pyrotechnics, from our standpoint, while the unfortunate opposition, although given the larger portion of the time, failed to score a mark.

While our Union feels the additional expense quite a tax, the musical talent are "drawing cards," for Miss Deal presides at the organ and piano with dignity and ability, while Mr. Card, our director, with the aid of our splendid soprano, Mrs. MaDan and Professor Metcalf (formerly of Boston), considered one of the best tenors in this city, "played" no unimportant part in the evening's entertainment. We anxiously looked for the return of Mrs. Gruber, our most excellent alto, for when completed there is no "misdeal" in this quartette, notwithstanding the name of the organist and director might indicate otherwise.

ENJOYING THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

Mayor Roche issued a proclamation as to what would be permitted and what forbidden, and a $50 fine is supposed to be incurred "for discharging guns, cannons, or pistols, whether loaded or blank," and in resentment of this unusual interference the sounds of the heavy artillery are almost splitting the tympan of my ears, and I absolutely cannot hear myself think. The fire-crackers are popping, the "nigger-chasers" hissing, the catharine-wheel is revolving on its axis, and to-night the rockets will go up and the blue light come down, the punk will glow, the cannon will roar, and the toy pistol will burst for the honor and glory of some old gents who adjourned without signing the "Declaration" on this day. Well, as the surgical industry must have its boom, historical accuracy should give away to the ebullitions of patriotic feeling which bubbles up in the heart of the small boy. This sort of patriotism is an article which we suspect was, on account of the noise, imported from Ireland by parties who control American politics for the purpose of freeing the Gem of the Seas.

JUSTLY PROUD OF OUR GIRLS.

The Daily News has invested $10,000 as a permanent fund, the interest on which is to be devoted to purchasing medals to present the successful competitors for the Lawson patriotic medals. This year the scheme was first set on foot, and of course the rules observed were more rigid than will likely be the case in the future, as the essays were written in the school room, and no books were allowed them except their regular "Readers." The Chicago Secular Union is happy to say that the only two young ladies still attending school, members of its Young People's Society, captured the prizes in their respective schools—Miss Bertha Piper, in the Oakley, and Miss Alma Wineman in Central Park school. Miss Bertha Piper was, for a long time, our accompanist, and is an excellent musician for a girl of fifteen. She is also treasurer of our Young People's Society. Mrs. Piper for some time contributed her services to the Secular Union quartette, and we are under special obligations to both parent and child. "Bertha" is known at school as "our Freethinker," and she often gives the scholars a touch of her radical sentiments.

Miss Alma Wineman took the silver medal at Central Park school, and is a girl of great literary promise, having given one of the most humorous essays before their society it has ever listened to. She and her brother were the leading spirits in the establishment of the Young People's Society, where they are undergoing a pretty thorough training to substitute some of the older heads. Miss Wineman's essay, with others, appears in this morning's News, and breathes the true spirit of what should constitute patriotism. They are both bright girls, and we are proud of them.

The only gold medal was captured by Miss Etta Lovi, whose parents have no orthodoxy in their household. This is a fair answer to the correspondent who claimed the Chicago Union was not a loyal institution, and that it was disseminating Anarchy. July 4, 1888.

E. A. STEVENS, Pres. C. S. U.

"THE HOLY SABBATH."

But it is said that "Christianity is a part of the common law," and judicial precedent is not wanting in favor of this absurd claim. These decisions are based on English precedent, but it must be remembered that the cases are not analogous at all. England did have, and still has a state religion, but it is contrary to the policy of our government to have any state religion whatever.

The common law deals only with the civil relations of man, and does not enter into the domain of religion at all. The only connection between it and religion—much less Christianity—is the common ground of morality. It enforces morality just so far as morality is enjoined by any religion, and so far only does the great unwritten law support that religion. But with the metaphysical abstractions and distinctive tenets of Christianity it has absolutely nothing whatever to do.

Precedent may have its uses in the economy of society, and the time no doubt was when it was a necessary conservator of the public peace and morals. Blind and unreasoning homage paid to hoary precedent, especially in the department of law, cannot be otherwise than detrimental to the best interests of society.

The bench, as well as the bar, appears to have its eyes in the back of its head, always looking back to the dismal past for wisdom and counsel, just as though what had been done was the standard of what should continue to be done, just as though the voice of the dead past were the embodiment of wisdom and the expression of the truths of nature for all time.

The time has come when a judicial owl, sitting on a withered limb of antiquity and repeating the hoots of five hundred years ago as the chariot of progress passes, has ceased to attract public attention or command respect.

The claim that Christianity is part of the common law is a fraud, and no amount of repetition can make an antiquated lie pass for the truth.

The decisions of some of our courts would lead us to infer that, being ashamed to openly trail the judicial ermine in the dust before the cross, yet willing to serve the clergy, the judges have decided that "the statute of 1794 is but a civil regulation, made for the government of man as a member of civil society, and that there is no religion in it." So, it is argued, the object of our legislature was to designate and set apart a certain day as a day of cessation from worldly employment, and that they fixed on the first day of the week, not because of any supposed religious character it had, but simply as a public convenience and as conducive to public morality.

Now I am sorry to say that this specious falsehood is frequently repeated by people calling themselves Secularists, who do not seem to have any definite idea of the significance of the phrase, "Holy Sabbath," or the covert menace to republican institutions contained in it.

A moment's examination of the language of the statute, and the course of legislation on the subject, will convince any candid mind that this is an entire misrepresentation of the question, and that it was because of the religious character of the day, among all Christian peoples, such legislation and recognition has been secured to save it from profanation.

The act itself designates it as "the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday." Why thus designate it, if they did not intend to recognize its sacred and religious character, and for that reason enforce its observance as such?

Blackstone calls Sabbath-breaking "an offense against God and religion," and the very first act of the very first legislative body in Pennsylvania, sitting in Chester in 1682, was an act recognizing the Christian Sabbath and enjoining its strict observance.

Among all the religious persecutions, with which almost every page of modern history is stained, no victim ever suffered but for the violation of what the priest, alias the government, denominated "the law of God." All religious despotism commences by a combination and concentration of sacerdotal influence; and when that influence begins to operate on the political institutions of a country the civil power soon bends under it. Behold Italy, Spain, Ireland, and Mexico.

But what right has the law to interfere at all? There is no established religion in this country. Why, then, should the state champion the Christian Sabbath and dictate what shall be done or omitted on Sunday? Why close places of amusement, for example? Theatres are permitted to be open in those countries which have a state religion; why forbid them here, where the state professes to have nothing to do with religion? Let the priests answer.

To the question, then, has the Christian Sabbath any authority to bind the conscience of an American citizen? we most emphatically answer No!

The government of the United States is not a theocracy. It is a republic, the Constitution of which guarantees perfect religious liberty and equality before the law of all its citizens. Total separation of church and state is sought to be realized. The Old World idea of "divine right of kings and priests" is reversed. Here "all laws receive their just powers from the consent of the governed"—a majority being the governing power—in all secular matters, but not in religion. In that, in theory at least, every one is a law unto himself. The population of the United States is made up of "every nation under the whole heavens," and each one has the right to enjoy his, or her, own religion, without asking permission of prophet, priest, or king, or even a majority of his neighbors.

Sunday is observed as a Sabbath by Christians, Monday by the Greeks, Tuesday by the Persians, Wednesday by the Assyrians, Thursday by the Egyptians, Friday by the Turks, and Saturday by the Jews.

Now any one of them has in this country just as much right to establish his Sabbath by law as the Christian has.

Christians with unblushing effrontery claim that because they happen to be in the majority (locally) therefore they may with impunity trample upon the rights of the minority. Suppose they are in the majority in the United States. Under the influence of railroad and telegraph the world is fast becoming consolidated into one family; the solidarity of the human race becoming an accomplished fact. At last accounts it contained 1,450,000,000 inhabitants. Of these much less than 450,000,000 are Christians.

Now if the majority rule were put in force in matters of religion, as well as politics, the Christians would find themselves laboring under the inconvenience of over a billion of an adverse majority. It is a poor rule that will not work both ways.

"But," says some weak-kneed brother, "would you do away with the salutary restraining influences of the Sabbath and thus open the flood-gates of licentiousness and crime?"

The very terms in which this question is concluded demonstrate that the interrogator is not acquainted with the factors of the problem, and at the same time unconsciously exhibits the dirty finger-marks of the priest on the material of his mental and moral make-up.

Let it be understood, once and for all, that the Sabbath question is not one of morals, but of religion; and is, therefore, one over which the law has no jurisdiction whatever. While professing great concern about the morals of the people, the priests—Catholic or Protestant—privately ignore the question of morals. With them faith is everything, and morality is "filthy rags." With them good works are at a discount, faith at a premium, and they are ready to repeat with Martin Luther: "Without doubt every moral man is accursed of God."

A notable instance of the priest's hypocritical insincerity is his treatment of the temperance question. In the pious city of Pittsburgh the sale of intoxicating liquor is licensed, i. e., legalized, or in other words made proper and right—six days in the week.

Now suppose two men enter a saloon late Saturday night. One calls for whisky, drinks it and pays for it. The other calls for brandy, but as the brandy bottle needs replenishing, the bar-keeper steps into an adjoining room for that purpose. While absent the clock strikes twelve, and on his taking pay for the brandy he is promptly arrested by the policeman doing duty as the tool of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, or Young Men's Christian Association.

It is one of the transcendent beauties of Christian legislation that it can not only make a crime of a thing which itself is no crime—Sabbath-breaking—and a virtue of a thing which is no virtue—lying and gambling for Christ's sake—but it can make the same thing—selling a glass of liquor—a virtue one minute, and a crime the next.

No! We would not seek to lessen any wholesome moral restraint. We advocate natural liberty, but not immoral license. But we would call things by their right names, and above all divert the slimy hand of the priest from the white throat of the Goddess of Liberty.

After an extended inquiry into the merits of this question we are constrained to heartily indorse the language of that sturdy apostle of freedom—Parker Pillsbury—when he said:

"The Sabbath is in itself an unmitigated usurpation. It has no warrant for its existence anywhere, in heaven above, or on the earth beneath, nor anywhere under the earth. It began in a lie, it lives in a lie, and must so live while its life lasts. It has no natural, no legal claim to observance, it never had and never can have. It has no authority which any being is bound to respect, in heaven, or on earth; none whatever. It was born of a priesthood that was self-created, self-consecrated, ambitious, pretentious, tyrannical, and hypocritical, and has been the instrument of usurped authority and arbitrary power; and often of outrageous cruelty in its hands."

We conclude, then, that there is not only no divine authority for the Christian Sabbath, but no authority whatever; that Christians possess no right, either human or divine, to bind heavy burdens on men's consciences simply because they happen to be in the majority.

This same Sunday law was conceived in ignorance, born in superstition, cradled in bigotry, clothed with prejudice, and sent forth fully armed and equipped with intolerance to do the dirty work of despotism. It is a most tyrannical infringement on the sacred rights of conscience, a relic of barbarism, a fraud, a lie, a blot upon our national escutcheon, a thing to be ashamed of and repealed as speedily as possible.

That it has so long, and is still permitted to disgrace our statute books, is no less a cause of humiliation than a matter of surprise.

The brazen impudence of the clergy in asserting the sacredness of Sunday is only equaled by the driveling idiocy of those who admit the claim, or the moral bankruptcy of those who, being cognizant of the audacious swindle, have not the moral courage to expose it.

HARRY HOOVER.
Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

THE PIOUS LONDON SCHOOL BOARD.

Arthur B. Moss, of London, whose contributions to the Truth Seeker have made him favorably known to the Freethinkers of America, is suffering a petty and spiteful persecution from the pietists of his city.

Mr. Moss is a school-teacher as well as a "Freethought and Radical advocate," and so subject to the London school board's orders. During his leisure time Mr. Moss has been lecturing before Freethought and the political Radical societies, as well as writing for the Freethought press. His interest in these reforms compels him to take whatever part in them that will be of advantage. When the Oaths bill was up for a second reading in Parliament he wrote his member, J. R. Kelly, asking that gentleman to be in his place to vote favorably upon the bill. The letter, says Mr. Moss, was a respectful and inoffensive one, "and might have been written by any earnest Christian calling upon another Christian to be true to his principles." Unfortunately for Mr. Moss, however, on the back of the note paper appeared the statement that he was a Freethought lecturer. But there was nothing in or on the letter indicating that the writer was in the employ of the school board, and to find that out the Tory member of Parliament had to make inquiries for himself. Upon obtaining this information Mr. Kelly wrote to the chairman of the school board, the Rev. J. Dibble, asking whether a man holding the "repulsive and blasphemous doctrines" of Mr. Moss was a fit and proper person to teach a London school.

Thereupon Mr. Moss was cited before the board, and questioned at length concerning his theological opinions. He defended himself boldly as a Freethinker, informing the reverend chairman and his associates that they had no right to interfere between him and his representative in Parliament, and furthermore that his private beliefs were none of the school board's business, and he was not responsible to the board for them whatever they might be. After a lengthy discussion the board adopted resolutions ordering Mr. Moss to cease lecturing on Sundays, to discontinue writing for the press, to discontinue selling his pamphlets, and to write a letter to Mr. Kelly to say that his conduct shall not be repeated. Concerning these orders of the board Mr. Moss says:

Had my character been anything short of exemplary, I should, without doubt, have been discharged forthwith; but I am allowed to retain my berth on condition that I conform to these resolutions. Long experience having taught me that I cannot earn enough by lecturing alone to keep myself, to say nothing of my wife and two children, I have no option, for the present, but to obey the first resolution. The others I will consider. As to my pamphlets, Mr. Bradlaugh publishes two and Mr. Foote two, and I am quite sure they would not cease to sell them if a thousand school boards were to command. But with regard to the others, I may say that I have invested almost all my savings in them, and I trust to my friends throughout the country to see that I do not lose it all. And finally, with respect to Mr. Kelly, all I can now say is that the first time he presents himself before his constituents I shall be present to move a vote of censure on him for his conduct, and I hope that the Camberwell friends will rally round and support me by their presence and their votes.

The unfairness and Christian bigotry of the board is clearly apparent. There are scores of school-teachers in London who devote their Sundays to teaching and practicing religion, and it is only because Mr. Moss is a Freethinker that he is debarred from publicly explaining his principles. The Rev. J. Dibble himself is a professional preacher of Christianity, though any rule which affects the school-teachers ought certainly to apply to the more important position of chairman of the school board. There is no rule or resolution forbidding Christians to write for the Christian press, nor forbidding them to sell Christian tracts, and every Christian teacher in London is perfectly free to write his member of Parliament urging that functionary to pursue a certain course in voting. Freethinkers alone are debarred from doing these things.

Mr. Moss submits just so far as circumstances and lack of cash compel him to, and no farther. In this he is both wise and brave. The victims of the Inquisition submitted because they had to, and died because they could not help it. Upon the church rests the infamy of their execution, and upon the church will rest the sin of a brave man's silence when he knows that he should speak out. This persecution shows the tyranny of Christianity in power, and furnishes an additional reason for increased effort on the part of Freethinkers.—The Truth Seeker.

CHICAGO TO SILVERTON.

The following letter from Secretary Stevens was read at the anniversary exercises of the Silverton Secular Union:

FORUM, 241 WASHINGTON BOULEVARD, CHICAGO, June 13, 1888.
R. D. ALLEN, SEC'Y SECULAR UNION, SILVERTON, ORE.

Dear Sir and Brother: On this anniversary, made memorable by the reception of Freethought in the first permanent place prepared for her residence in Oregon, the secretary of the American Secular Union hereby conveys through you to Silverton's glorious host of Secularists, who have so nobly unfurled the banner of mental freedom, his unbounded admiration for their marvelous achievement, splendid energy, undaunted enthusiasm, and practical success. May Silverton Union stand firm and united against ecclesiastical encroachments, remembering that "where there's a will there's a way;" for "The wise and active conquer difficulties by daring to attempt them; sloth and folly shiver and shrink at sight of toil and hazard, and make the impossibility they fear." Let us accept Carlyle's "latest gospel"—to know our work and do it.

My comrades of Chicago unite in the hope that the torch of liberty shall ever shine resplendent and be borne triumphant by our brothers of Silverton Union. All hail Universal Mental Liberty. Sincerely and fraternally,
E. A. STEVENS, Sec'y A. S. U.

NO PROGRESS IN RELIGION.

Most of our Christian friends profess warm sympathy and support for our institutions of learning, and as a rule are proud of the great advance made by humanity in the past century. As a class they do not object to progression in science, art, and invention, but when it comes to religion advancement must cease. We have a right to the fruits of nineteenth brains on all subjects except revelation; for the simon-pure of that article we must consult the diaries of barbarians who flourished eighteen centuries ago! That age which knew nothing of the enlightenment of to-day is upheld as the birth-time of the only salvation, and, considering that the first century produced so very little of anything else, is it any wonder that it should have produced so much salvation? It is strange also that the "inspired" writers knew so much about religion, and so little about everything else. "It won't do." Give us the same progress in theology that we have in other conditions. Take out the superstition and fear, and put humanity in their place. This is what we are fighting for, and what future generations will accomplish;

"For ever the truth comes uppermost,
And ever is justice done."

E. J. CHES.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

My next place for lectures was La Centre, Clark county, Wash. Ter., upon Lewis river, twenty-two miles north of Vancouver. This place has nothing specially worthy of mention except a wagon bridge about half a mile in length, which is about all there is of the town. It seems to be quite a business place and at the head of navigation. There are several stores, two hotels, one hundred houses, a well-settled farming country all around, and one church in which they try to herd the people together once a month; but I am told that but few will attend. Card playing seemed to be the only amusement and could be seen in full blast in every open place. I engaged Elon's Hall, and had it well filled by eager, inquiring people, but evidently far behind the age. The only thing I saw here worthy of note was a large black bear, killed out in the hills back of town. I returned to Portland July 1, to give a lecture before the First Society of Spiritualists, in their beautiful and finely furnished hall, corner of First and Taylor streets, on Sunday evening, July 1. I was invited to give the lecture, "What are the Natural and Scientific Evidences of a Future Life," and do they warrant us in saying we know that when a man dies he shall live again? The hall is a large one and was well filled by a very intelligent and fine audience, who gave the closest attention possible, and at the conclusion fully one-half of them came to take my hand and thank me for my effort. A public vote was asked by the president and most cordially given, thanking me for the hour given them. The Liberal and Spiritual element in Portland is a very intellectual and educated one and needs to be but harmonized to become a power,

There really is no need for the Spiritualists and Agnostics to turn to each other the cold shoulder. We are all in the same boat up to the "timber line" of death, and have the same work to do, namely, educating humanity out from the direful web that priest and pope, church and dogma, have been weaving through all the long ages of the past. Then let us work together, Materialists, Agnostics, Freethinkers, and Spiritualists, not for the "heaven over there" but for the paradise here, when the power of the church—which is simply superstition and its result, fear—shall be forever broken. This once accomplished, every man and woman would soon have a home of their own; vice and crime, poverty and ignorance, would soon disappear. Our dismal prisons, churches, convents, and jails would become schools and workshops of instruction. Four hours' work a day, with all our improved labor-saving machinery, would be all-sufficient to keep in comfort any ordinary family, and then the better living would soon eliminate disease and premature death. Pestilence, aggregated capital, trusts, and corporations—unless co-operative—would soon be gone, and man, having plenty of time for study and recreation, would rise above the creed-bound, mind-fettered slave that he is. Surely we Liberals, of either wing of our little but growing army, can find plenty to do, without calling each other names as we see them do in some of the papers. Cannot we see the smiles that will illumine the long-faced pious ones at the wrangling in our ranks, and in reading Brother Reynolds's letters giving "our folks" hades, when things do not go to suit him? I am afraid he does more harm than good by his personal severity, and makes more enemies than friends. We must show to the world that we are superior to all religion, and that we are not working for the glory of God, nor for heaven over there, but to bless humanity here and now. Man is not created (formed) yet, he is still the "rough diamond," the butterfly in the chrysalis condition, part animal and sensual (and the bigger part too), and it is our work, all Liberals' work, to help finish this masterpiece of nature's handiwork, to polish this diamond until it shall shine forth all its possibilities. Never mind the life beyond, what our friends there may be employed at, what they may eat or wear, or where they stay. To help all to enough to eat and wear, to a home here and a higher education; to destroy the priest and his dupes, the church and its power; stop glorifying God and try to bless humanity is our work.

PROF. D. C. SEYMOUR.

Secularism In and About Aumsville.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The Christians here are wrought up much more over Mr. Putnam's visit this year than they were last. The general idea among them appeared to be that Secularism was only a passing excitement, and would soon die out, and they do not appear yet to comprehend that Secularism has come to stay on this coast, and will be a feature of political and social life until its mission—the total separation of church and state—shall be accomplished. The Christian Standard regards it as a "gas-bag" that only requires to be "punctured" to "collapse." But that orthodox representative, Clark Braden, did not succeed in "puncturing" it. And although he advertised that he would meet in debate "any champion of Infidelity," etc., two opportunities were offered him at Stayton, both of which the Braden backers have failed to take. (Will inform you further regarding this, as it develops.)

But the seed of Secularism is sown here, and although some of it has fallen by the wayside, and among brambles and thorns, and in stony places, other has fallen in good ground where it has already taken root, and will bring forth fruit in due season.

We had a creditable Fourth of July celebration at Turner, on the O. & C. R. R., with the usual ceremonies, not omitting the regular orthodox chaplain. Notable features of the performances, as indicating the signs of the times, were the remark of the president of the day, that "we claim to be a Christian nation," etc., and the chaplain's prayer for the president of the United States (Cleveland is, no doubt, duly grateful), and all in office or power, and that the time may speedily come when all these shall be "God-fearing" men, and that God shall be legally recognized in all constitutions, state and national, as the head of the nation.

Afterwards, when accused of praying for the success of the "God-in-the-Constitution" party, he denied it, and also denied most positively that there was any such party in existence, and defied any one to prove it. He thanked God "for liberty of free speech and free thought," apparently oblivious of the fact that that is exactly what Seculars are contending for, and orthodoxy is opposing; but freedom, with the orthodox, is only for themselves; not for others. The orator of the day steered clear of all these ticklish questions, confining himself to "glittering generalities," and gave us a nice oration calculated to tickle the vanity of the average citizen to his satisfaction.

But the average "lay brother" of orthodoxy is very much exercised over the talk of Seculars. Putnam and Ingersoll are especially "sheoled," and the opinion of many is that such talk "hadn't order be allow'd." Asked to subscribe for FREETHOUGHT, they say they wouldn't mind reading it themselves, "but I don't want my boys to see it," forgetting apparently that their boys will "see it" sooner or later, and will then think that their father was either ignorant on the question, or else has deceived them.

Another source of infelicity to the orthodox is Braden's pamphlet, "Ingersoll Unmasked." These are quite common here in the hands of Seculars, and they seem to think that Braden and orthodoxy are the parties that are shown up; that Ingersoll is complimented, while their own spleen and vileness are exposed. A man's public acts are public property, and he may justly be held accountable for them. But the ghoul who enters the home life, the fireside, and the family, is not fit either morally or mentally to associate with decent people. Christianity must be hard up indeed to send to Oregon as its representative and champion, Clark Braden. That fact in itself is sufficient argument against intrusting it with more political or social power.

Aumsville, Or.

F. S. MATTESON.

Reminiscences of Ukiah.

To the Editors of Freethought:

One year ago the 13th of May last, the would-be tragic scene enacted in the Ukiah court-house, by the noted C. C. Hamilton, in his bombardment of S. P. Putnam with kerosene lamps, was an exhibition in which the said Hamilton claimed he was defending his religion.

It will be remembered that Mr. Putnam was employed at the expense of a few individuals to give a series of four lectures on mental liberty, and on the evening of the fourth lecture, about the middle of the lecture, Hamilton marched down the aisle, confronting the speaker, denouncing him with vile epithets, throwing a burning kerosene lamp at his head, instantly clutching a second lamp, but while in the act of throwing was fortunately, at the instant, surrounded by the crowd and prevented. The first passed out through the window behind the speaker.

This outrage was enacted in the midst of an assemblage of some 300 eye-witnesses, who were thrown into consternation, their lives endangered, a number being singed by flaming oil, women screaming and fainting; all this for the time seemed very much like reality. It was a self-evident case, which needed no proof, as every one cognizant of the case was satisfied of the guilt attached to it. Yet a jury of twelve Christian men, representing three or four different denominations; one Baptist minister, one Methodist exhorter, J. N. Nuckels, all sworn to truly try the case and render verdict according to law and evidence, the testimony both for the prosecution and defense being corroborative, yet this Christian jury rendered a verdict of not guilty! I could give you the names of these jurymen, but probably they would not relish seeing their names in print in connection with this case.

I am not aware that any one of these jurymen has the least stain on his reputation in the line of ordinary dealings with his fellow-men, but how humiliating to realize the fact that in this age of intelligence and enlightenment we have men of respectability in our community, who can stoop so low as to allow their prejudices, bigotry, superstition, religion, and intolerance to cause them to violate the plainest principle of law and justice between man and man.

However, a quotation from J. N. Nuckels may be somewhat explanatory of the general feeling of the jury. After the trial he was heard to say, "I thank God for the opportunity being offered me to strike a blow for religion." No doubt this was in accord with C. C. Hamilton's sentiment in defending his religion. Quite likely Mr. Disher, the minister, came to a similar conclusion. I would like to know how many did likewise. And while they were trying this case I would be pleased to know in which corner of their consciences their sacred oath was stowed, or whether their consciences were the receptacle of anything so sacred as an oath.

T. McC.

Ukiah, Cal., July 11, 1888.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

HAND-BOOK OF THE LICK OBSERVATORY

OF THE

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,

—BY—

EDWARD S. HOLDEN, LL.D.,

Director of the Observatory.

A volume of 135 pages, 12mo., printed on heavy paper, and bound in flexible cloth covers. Besides likenesses of

Professor Holden and James Lick,

it contains Twenty Views, Drawings, and Illustrations of the Locality, the Machinery, and the Apparatus connected with the great Astronomical station. The Table of Contents includes:

- I. Information for Visitors.
- II. Sketch of the Life of James Lick.
- III. A Visit to Mt. Hamilton.
- IV. History of the Lick Observatory.
- V. Description of the Building.
- VI. Description of the Instruments.
- VII. The Work of the Observatory.
- VIII. Telescopes.
- IX. Poem: To the Unmounted Lens.
- X. Astronomical Photography.
- XI. Clocks and Time-Keeping.
- XII. The Principal Observatories of the World.

By mail 80 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

THE FREETHINKERS' MAGAZINE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY AT BUFFALO, N. Y.

Terms: 20 cents single number; 50 cents for three months; $1 for six months;

Two Dollars per year.

We wish to introduce this magazine to the Freethinkers of the Pacific coast and to make it easy for them to take both FREETHOUGHT and this magazine we will send it to any subscriber of FREETHOUGHT at one-half price.

We intend the magazine shall voice the best thought of Liberalism in this country. Each number contains 48 pages, is printed on heavy tinted paper, and is got up in a style that makes it an ornament to any Freethought centre table. Each number contains several likenesses of distinguished Freethinkers with a short sketch of their lives. And remember that any subscriber to FREETHOUGHT can have it a year for $1.

The following are the names of some of the distinguished Liberals who will, from month to month, contribute to the columns of this magazine: Robert G. Ingersoll, T. B. Wakeman, Thomas Davidson, Wm. Emmette Colman, James M. McCann, Frederick May Holland, Helen H. Gardener, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Allen Pringle, J. M. Peebles, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, A. B. Bradford, S. H. Preston, Courtlandt Palmer, Harry Hoover, Lyman C. Howe.

TESTIMONIALS.

I am greatly pleased with the Freethinkers' Magazine, and wish it the greatest success.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Without doubt the Freethinkers' Magazine, as now published, is by far the handsomest journal in the Liberal field. No matter how many Liberal papers a Freethinker may be taking, he cannot afford to be without the magazine.—C. P. Farrell, Colonel Ingersoll's publisher.

I beg to congratulate you and your readers on the splendid appearance of the Freethinkers' Magazine. Nor is the mental part behind the mechanical. It must surely prosper, as it certainly deserves to.—Allen Pringle.

I think the magazine grows better and better with age. I like its Liberal spirit. I believe it will live. I shall do all I can to help it.—Judge G. W. Lewis.

The Freethinkers' Magazine is the only thing of its kind in the world, and should be taken and read—every word read—by every Liberal in America.—Moses Hull, in New Thought.

The Freethinkers' Magazine is a clean Liberal journal, whose editor does not trim his sails to the breeze of any crank who makes war upon society.—John W. Truesdell.

I like the spirit manifested by the editor of the Freethinkers' Magazine, in allowing all sides a hearing through its columns.—Clara Watson.

If you are not acquainted with the magazine send 20 cents for a sample copy. Address

H. L. GREEN,
Buffalo, N. Y.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS.

By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made available to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and A NEW FEATURE, Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25; Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50; difference in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Tributes. "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," "The Grant Banquet Toast" and "Little Harry Miller's Grave," printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing; four to any address for 50 cents, or either one for 15 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," and all the famous tributes, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, table-talks and day-to-day conversations of the author. Fine steel portrait and autograph facsimile. Price, in cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

THE OPEN COURT.

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company, Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7 jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50. With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17, $18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4, being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies' watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels, $22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2 to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38. Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra. Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case. Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1; best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine straps, 50c. Set best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas, 50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12. Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free. Best Work. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Designer and Patentee of new FREETHOUGHT Badge in PINS and CHARMS—emblematical of the light and day of Freethought, Science, and Reason vs. the night and darkness of Superstition.—Exact size of cut and smaller, two-thirds size. Warranted solid gold, enameled in four colors. Most beautiful badge ever designed. Small, $2, $2.75, $3.50. Large, $3 to $5; with genuine diamond, $8, $10; and charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing. Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 30.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JULY 28, 1888

COLONEL INGERSOLL said of Roscoe Conkling that "he held in light esteem the friend who heard with half believing ear the slander of a foe."

AMONG the religious events of the past week was the elopement from Halifax, N. S., of the Rev. J. S. Hutchison and Miss Gertie Smith. The reverend gentleman was so absent-minded as to leave his wife and child behind.

THE Russians have a law that forbids jokes on "religion, politics, officials, and the law." In a country where all these are so despicable as in Russia it is a wonder that such an ordinance should ever have become necessary. Anyone who would laugh at Russia's institutions would have played second fiddle to Nero when Rome was afire.

THE select committee appointed by the House of Commons has submitted a report recommending Sunday closing in all parts of Ireland, and also the closing of inns at 9 o'clock on Saturday nights. This is not a joke, but it is none the less diverting to observe the serene and monumental assurance of those who think themselves qualified to dictate how anybody else shall spend Sunday, or other days of the week.

If you enter a churchyard, you will find that almost everybody with a tombstone has fallen "asleep in Jesus," or done something equally pious. How is this to be reconciled, inquires the Secular Review, with Matt. vii, 13, 14: "Wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it?"

THE cause of American industry is a noble one. We all want to see American industry thrive, and until it has become of age, as it were, and until the American laborer is able to pit his strength and skill successfully against that of others, of course the infant must be protected, though the expense is large. But when at great cost the country has thrown up barriers for the defense of American labor, we want to see American labor get the benefit of it. It is logical, then, that every manufacturer or grower of commodities protected by law should be forbidden by the same law to employ any other than American workmen. High wages are of no benefit to the man who is out of a job.

"THE Unity of Truth in Christianity and Truth" is given as the title of a recent work by the Rev. Mr. J. Max Hark, D.D. It seems that a distinction is to be drawn between the truth of Christianity and actual, every-day, yard-wide truth, but that still the two kinds of truth are a unit. Mr. Hark might have followed the Proverbial Philosopher and put forth as the title of his book the indisputable maxim that "true truth is truly true."

THE London Freethinker, G. W. Foote's paper, complains that for some reason Mr. Gladstone's Remarks on the Field-Ingersoll controversy are withheld from the British public. Mr. Foote has requested permission to publish them, but is denied. He declares, however, that rather than see Mr. Gladstone's light obscured he will publish the Remarks without the author's permission, as he is legally free to do, unless Gladstone takes the matter promptly in hand and issues the work himself.

ALL the Liberals of this country know B. F. Underwood, formerly of the Boston Index. His judgment in some matters has not always been indorsed, but the charge of untruthfulness has never been made against him until now, when Clark Braden comes forward in the Christian Independent and says, in reply to Underwood's exposure of the great swashbuckler, "I will spend no further time noticing such a cowardly, lying sneak. I will not engage in a contest of filth-flinging with a skunk." This is the reply that Braden makes to Underwood's charges that he is an unredeemably bad egg. We would like to see Braden's denial that he advised Underwood how to get the better of the Rev. John Sweeney in debate.

NEWS AND NOTES.

I entered "Groveland" when the evening sun was making all the landscape brilliant. The wheat fields ready for the harvest, the green meadows, the clusters of trees, the stately hills, shining here and there with cleared spaces of fruitful land, the rest a shaggy forest, blend in a picture of glorious loveliness. Between the clefts of the wooded heights the clouds roll in dazzling masses, and whether they betoken fair weather, or more rain, it is difficult to determine, but the arrows of light are triumphant for the time, and over the varied scene falls the jeweled promise. Groveland is the home of Mr. and Mrs. Todd. For twenty years they have been making this place a part of the paradise of the world—where the blight of superstition shall never wither the heart of man or the breast of earth. Here I rest all day Saturday, and the coming and going clouds and changing sunlight make the vast scenery "like the uncertain glory of an April day." This is the home of Freethought, and it makes but little difference what the weather may be, the hearthstone is radiant. The to-morrow brightens in this atmosphere of reason and noble hope.

Sunday was a perfect day indeed. Not a cloud could be seen as Apollo mounted his throne. For once his sway was undisputed, and every breath of wind was the music of his harp. In the shining hours we came to Forest Grove, where the sleepy-looking churches tolled forth a melancholy tale. I could not see that many attended "divine service." It was the beginning of the hunting season, and the noise of the shot-gun could be heard mingling with the Sabbath bells. Forest Grove is under the sway of religion. The Congregational church has a college here, where theological fossils find a place to cast their shadow, but there is a sparkle of sense in its gloomy walls and now and then a thought is felt and the pulses thrill. Forest Grove is dowered with beauty, but Rip Van Winkle could sleep here to his heart's content. However, there are signs of waking, though Gabriel's trump may never sound. The alarm had been given that the Infidel was coming, and there was a flutter, which is a sign of progress. Vert's Liberal Hall was full, both afternoon and evening, and the presence of the antidote caused even Christians to assemble and listen, for the first time, to a Secular discourse. It was a good thing, and without doubt the agitation will produce life.

Fortunately our friends at Forest Grove have a place to gather. The funds for its building were given by Mr. Vert, a Liberal, and it is devoted to enlightening humanity. The Christians have tried to get control, but cannot. By the courtesy of the trustees it is used for any public service, but when the Christians use it they always call it "College Hall" or "Town Hall." They don't like to say "Vert's Liberal Hall."

I feel quite satisfied with the results of the lectures given. There is here a solid guard for liberty.

Mr. Thos. Todd is well-known over the country and is thoroughly respected, notwithstanding his Liberal colors that are never concealed. He has one of the best stock farms in the state, and it is a delight to look at his thoroughbreds, which are never troubled with theology, and so look fat and happy. They don't have to pay tithes to the church; neither does Mr. Todd.

Mrs. S. B. Todd is the daughter of a Campbellite preacher and was once a fervent Methodist. She never does anything by halves, and when theology went by the board Freethought found an earnest supporter, and she is one of our bravest pioneers.

Henry Buxton is always at the front and has sustained the Liberal movement when only a few were by his side. It was a pleasure to meet him and his amiable wife, who, although a church-member, has none of the bitterness of sect, but is as gentle as though there were no dogmas at all. Sunday noon I was in the pleasant shadows of Mr. Wm. Kane's "Summer Garden." He belongs to the church of humanity, and Mrs. Kane to the Congregational church, where once I found my "spiritual home," and Mrs. Kane rather thought I had better have stayed by the "altar of my fathers." But there seems to be very little of the ecclesiastical stamp in her kindly and generous spirit, and so there was welcome at her hospitable table.

Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Hines also cared for me, and Sunday night I slept where the spirits do sometimes congregate, but they did not disturb my peaceful slumbers. Mr. Hines has had some remarkable experiences in the spirit sphere, but he is an honest, straightforward, and unflinching Freethinker, and I enjoyed my visit at his cordial home, where there is the atmosphere of liberty and nature. Also I had a pleasant greeting with D. C. Stewart, neighbor of Mr. and Mrs. Todd, who also has a big farm and handsome stock. His family are in the ranks of Freethought, and he is respected by all the community for his integrity. J. A. Abbott and others are in the Forest Grove pioneer band, and, with the earnest efforts of Mrs. Todd, who is agent for FREETHOUGHT here, we shall have quite a company, I am sure. The future is ours, and Liberal Hall shall make the light flash, and the Rip Van Winkles shall awake, and a new world shall glow about them.

Monday I come to Hillsboro, the county seat. The court is in session and there is some stir. S. B. Huston, a young and brilliant lawyer, who has made his way both by brain and muscle, starts the campaign here, and a loyal worker he is. He was advised, for the sake of professional success, to keep his opinions to himself, but he found it impossible to do so. All know where he stands, and Freethought has not interfered with his large and growing practice. The enemy made a desperate endeavor to circumvent the Liberals by claiming that they had engaged the court-house for the dates of the lectures, and magnanimously offering to give us half the time, which we generously refused on the ground that the whole time belonged to us, and took it. The court-house was filled both evenings. A large proportion were Christians, and I found a good opportunity to enlighten them, notwithstanding the "Champion" was present. As usual he did a considerable free advertising for the cause. Indeed, it is rumored that I have hired the "Champion" to follow me up in order to give interest to the campaign. It would certainly be a paying investment if I were disposed to aid the Liberal cause with the livery of the devil. But it needs no such Jesuitical methods. Like the tides of the Propontic, it "keeps right on."

K. Crandall, T. S. Wilkes, A. H. Wolfe, of Beaverton, and W. C. Clow, are also our excellent co-adjutors here. The community is in a formative state. The church seems to be uppermost for the time being, but really it has little influence and is only a fashion without life. A beginning has been made and, without doubt, Washington county will furnish many a battle ground for the future.

Again in Portland, and once more are we glad to shake hands with Judge Beal, who falters not, whatever may be the fortunes of war. Again I am at the home where the good cow gives twenty-four quarts of milk a day, and in the heat of the noon I can take off my coat and lie down and be at rest. Mr. Sanders is not quite well, but is looking better than when I saw him last, and I hope will press vigorously on to the century mark. Friend Neunert has struck it rich, I guess. He is part owner of three thousand acres of coal land, which he discovered himself, and I should not wonder if there was "millions in it." If so, friend Neunert will surely build a Freethought hall in this northern metropolis, and a glorious monument it will be to his earnest Liberalism. He is a live man, and believes in doing something for this world, and I sincerely hope he will pick up a sack of diamonds on his coal fields. I know that some of them will shine on the coronet of human progress.

Professor Seymour is hard at work, and keeps the headlight moving on the car of advancement. Mrs. Seymour is equally on the lookout, and brings woman's pluck and talent to keep the train in motion and make the fires blaze brighter.

Mrs. Carrie E. Haight and her son, Will Haight, are with us from beyond the river—not Jordan, but the beautiful Willamette. I was glad to meet again these enthusiastic believers in the "good time coming," who are always on hand when the bugle "sounds reveille."

I had two "champions" present at my lecture. Elder Driver was one of them. He was invited to the platform, but declined, as he wanted to look the speaker right in the face. I really should like a debate with Elder Driver. He looks as if he could "pitch in" with vigor, and make a fair fight. I don't believe he would strike below the belt, but combat by the rules of honorable warfare. I spoke upon "The Bible and Modern Thought," and I guess I gave the Christians some knowledge of the "divine word" that the ministers are disposed not to circulate. Professor Seymour made a brief address on the "God-idea," and altogether the meeting was a decided success, and opens way for better work in future organization. Mr. Guthridge was present, all the way from Eagle Creek, and he brought a load with him. Mrs. Wilburn and Miss Emma Chase were also welcome visitors from the same quarter. Geo. Johnson came from Rock Island, W. W. West from Scappoose, where I shall spend a Sunday on my return trip, and I know I shall have a good time. With such handshakings and greetings from many fields I was "magnetized" into a very exultant frame of mind.

Thursday we took an excursion to Vancouver. Colonel Lewis was with us, Judge Beal, Mr. and Mrs. Sutton, Mrs. S. C. Butter, and Mrs. Edgington. Mrs. Edgington was one of the "faithful few" at Baker City. She has had a varied experience, living in palace and cabin, once a millionaire and now dependent upon her own exertions, but she is as happy as the lark and takes the blows of fate with the equanimity of a stoic and the cheeriness of a child. Mr. Sutton is an old rancher who always speaks his mind, and will fight for justice though the heavens fall, and is a staunch friend through thick and thin. He is one of the well-known characters of this picturesque coast country. Mrs. Sutton, who has been with him through a varied experience of over a quarter of a century, is a born Freethinker and never had any use for a "sky pilot."

On we went over the sparkling bosom of the mighty river, amid brilliant scenery. It was a joyous journey with joyous friends. We took our lunch beneath the lofty trees of the quiet park, and the smiles of nature gave the benediction. Vancouver is a beautiful but very uneventful spot. The only thing that takes place is the dress parade on the camp-ground, where about six companies of United States troops are stationed.

Our hospitable friends, Cushing and sons—father and four boys, all sturdy Infidels—took us to their home, in the warm afternoon, where, like Whitman, we "loafed with our soul" and lay on the grass and slept to our heart's content.

The hall was full in the evening. We were glad to greet the soldier boys, for we once wore the uniform and bore the knapsack, and marched to the music of drum and fife. They make glorious Liberals. Among our friends here are S. D. Bryan, a splendid ally; Eugene Bieth, equally enthusiastic; Wm. Crosby, Geo. Shap, Wm. J. Meyers, L. T. Franklin, Wm. Wollenberber, J. O. Smith, Geo. H. Eckart, Frank Thomas, R. F. Abbott, and others. I never found a better company of Freethinkers, and I look forward to still more gratifying results on my return trip. Long live Vancouver, and long may she wave, the home of the free, the land of the brave.

I come back to Portland in the early morning, and I am busy all day preparing these notes, replying to the attack of the adversary in the Oregonian, and getting ready for a bright voyage to Cathlamet and Astoria. Reynolds has just returned from that watery kingdom and reports progress. We bunk together to-night on the same lounge, and will talk over our campaign. He speaks in the city park, Portland, on Sunday afternoon, and I guess there will be a booming time.

Mr. O. Jeldness joins our ranks here, and is an able and generous supporter. S. M. Kelso, W. H. Noble, W. Slauson, and others are ready to stand up and be counted.

Altogether, the future is bright and the fields shine and broaden. Lee Laughlin, of Yamhill, Mr. Higgins, friend Brothers—who, though "under the weather," has pluck enough to recover from all the "ills that flesh is heir to"—and many from various places in the now shining Willamette valley, have made my closing journeys in its fruitful land a fireside pleasure, every greeting has been so warm and hopeful.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Portland, Or., July 20, 1888.

THE RELIGIOUS QUESTION AT THE CONVENTION.

The delegates to the National Educational Association's convention have been here and gone. There were thousands of them, male and female, from all parts of the country, and they made business good at the hotels and restaurants. The convention lasted from the 17th to the 22d of July. A great many addresses were read on important topics connected with educational matters, and the discussion and music were entertaining. Altogether the convention was a success.

But there were some features of the exercises that are not altogether above criticism. There was, first, the opening of each session with prayer. In a national, secular convention of delegates of all religious beliefs, and of none, what right had the management to inflict the windy incantations of a preacher upon the assemblage?

Then some of the addresses were of a bitterly sectarian character. One speaker wanted religious instruction in the schools, and he desired that it should be Protestant instruction. Catholics, he claimed, objected to the Bible in the schools because they were the enemies of freedom, while Protestants favored the Bible because they were the friends of truth. Infidels, he said, might deny the inspiration of the scriptures, but it was too late in the day to question that sacred work. He believed that the flood was a historical fact, that the Lord sent a great fish to swallow Jonah, which was done, and that Joshua commanded the sun and moon to stand still and they obeyed him. All these great truths, the speaker held, should be taught children at home, at church, and at school, which was only supplementary to the church.

It is due the intelligence of the other delegates to say that the most of them greeted the remarks of this educator with hilarious merriment. The Catholic contingent, however, took it seriously and hissed the strictures on the Roman church.

This was about the sole element of discord that crept into the convention, but it was an element which crept out as well, and Protestants and Catholics are discussing it now in the daily press. As the debate is of a sectarian character wholly, no good is likely to come from it. As between Protestant and Catholic teaching in the school, the former is perhaps the less dangerous because it is more civilized, but either violates the secular character of the educational institution, and therefore should be rejected without debate. Under the agreement that schools may teach nothing but the truth, no religious instruction of any kind can be admitted.

COURTLANDT PALMER, president of the Nineteenth Century Club, and ex-president, of the American Secular Union, died at New York, July 23, of peritonitis. He was only 45 years old, and New York had no more prominent or useful citizen.

THE NEXT PRESIDENT OF THE A. S. U.

The readers of the Liberal papers of about this date will learn that the president of the American Secular Union, Samuel P. Putnam, declines to further serve in that capacity. The reasons given by him are adequate and need no further setting forth at this time. The question of a successor is the one now to be considered.

There are many men in our ranks who would do honor to the office.

As a man who has done untold good for Liberalism the first name, perhaps, would be that of Horace Seaver, of Boston, editor of the Investigator. Age and the duties of his present position would probably deter Mr. Seaver from accepting the place.

Dr. E. B. Foote, Sr., would make a splendid president. So would Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., and with either at the head we might expect the liveliest work to be done.

If we look to the West, N. D. Goodell, of Sacramento, would do us all honor as president of the Union.

Judge J. W. North, of Oleander, Fresno county, Cal., is eminently fitted for the office.

East again, L. K. Washburn, of Revere, Mass., the Paine Hall lecturer, is a rising man. He fulfils all the requirements.

Besides these are many others, so there is no lack of timber.

The secretary, E. A. Stevens, will of course be re-elected. His energy and ability have been praised on every hand, and he has never been criticised except by the constitutional kickers; but as the kickers at the Union have never done anything else for its benefit, they are hardly to be counted.

May the Union have a harmonious and successful congress.

For some years a letter, purporting to have been written by Cotton Mather, has appeared periodically in the secular press of the country. It reads as follows:

September, 1682.—To Ye Aged and Beloved John Higginson.—There be now at sea a shippe (for our friend, Elias Holdcraft of London, did advise me by the last packet that it would sail sometime in August) called ye Welcome, R. Greene was master, which has aboard a hundred or more of ye heretics and malignants called Quakers, with W. Penn, who is ye scamp at ye head of them. Ye general court has accordingly given secret orders to Master Malachi Huxett of ye brig Porpoise to way-lay ye said Welcome, as near ye coast of Codd as may be, and make capture of ye said Penn and his ungodly crew, so that ye Lord may be glorified and not mocked on ye soil of this newe country with ye heathen worshipps of these people. Much spoil can be made by selling ye whole lot at Barbadoes, where slaves fetch good prices in rumme and sugar; and we shall not only do ye Lord great service by punishing ye wicked, but shall make gayne for his ministers and people.

Yours in ye bowels of Christ, COTTON MATHER.

W. H. Burr, of Washington, now states upon the authority of Mr. Spofford, librarian of Congress, that the letter is a forgery. That may be so, but "Yours in ye bowels of Christ" is a form of salutation that should not be permitted to lapse.

MR. W. F. JAMIESON announces his intention of visiting the Pacific slope, chiefly on purpose to meet Clark Braden in debate, or any other Christian preacher indorsed by a Christian denomination, as soon as arrangements now pending can be made. Jamieson says he wants no mere skirmish, but debates of from eight to twelve nights, two hours each. He accepts all challenges of Christians, and invites them and Freethinkers to write him without delay at Monte Vista, Colorado. He also writes us that he "snuffs the battle afar off" and wants to be there. As Braden backed out in an agreed on debate with Jamieson in Kansas, so he may again refuse to meet him. Mr. Jamieson's address is Monte Vista, Colorado.

W. S. BELL's lecturing trip in Dakota, the land of blizzards and sunshine, has been marked by tribulation. At one place the opponents of Liberal lectures got in the street before the hall and howled, and on another occasion hung a piece of iron against the window and by means of a string produced raps on the glass, thus forcing the speaker to cut the discourse twenty minutes short. Some way or another religious bigotry will inspire to acts of meanness beyond any other variety of prejudice.

ONLY a few weeks ago Mr. George W. Goodfellow, of Aylmer, Ont., stood up in church and gave his experience, stating that he never felt so happy as he had of late, and prayed that many more might be led into the right path. Not many days later Mr. Goodfellow was detected in unnatural intimacy with his fifteen-year-old daughter, and committed suicide. It generally turns out that the pious hypocrite who holds himself up as a shining light is a first-class rascal when you come to know him well.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Deaths in the city last week numbered 129.—Alexander Goldenson will be hanged August 14.—Rain fell in several portions of the state last Saturday, including the city and county of San Francisco.—The invention of a pneumatic tube is reported that will send packages from here to New York in one hour. This requires a speed of about 40 miles per minute.—The voters of Mariposa county have appropriated $75,000 for the purpose of building a free road from Mariposa town up the Merced river canyon into the Yosemite valley. This will break the monopoly now enjoyed by the stage companies, who have so long had travelers at their mercy.—A large colony of Swedes is preparing to settle near Burbank, Los Angeles county.—The eclipse of the moon last Sunday night was a failure as an exhibition, on account of the clouds, except at the Lick observatory, where the observation was entirely successful. It is said that the big telescope is revealing many new things.—The teachers' convention is over and the delegates are going home.—Twenty thousand people witnessed the launch of the United States cruiser Charleston at this port on the evening of July 19. The construction of the Charleston was commenced January 1, 1887, and it is thought that she will be ready for delivery to the government in December. Her dimensions are: Length over all, 320 feet; breadth, 46 feet; mean draught, 18.6 feet; displacement, about 3,750 tons. She is expected to attain a speed of at least sixteen knots per hour, the contract calling for engines of 7,500 horse-power. She was built at the Union Iron works, this city.—Mrs. Lillie Devereaux Blake, the woman suffrage advocate, spoke in the Metropolitan Temple last week Thursday. Owing to the numerous other attractions in the city her lecture was not well attended.—Cholera is epidemic in Hongkong, and there is a scare over the prospect of its reaching San Francisco.—Oakland harbor gets $350,000 in the River and Harbor bill, but San Francisco is to have no new post-office.—The railroad hotel at Lathrop Junction on the Southern Pacific railroad was totally destroyed by fire last Monday at a loss of $30,000.

The tariff measure known as the Mills bill passed the House last Saturday by a majority of 13. Its object is to reduce the tariff on various raw materials.—Ex-speaker Randall, of Pennsylvania, is getting better, but is still in precarious health. His trouble, it is said, is cancer in the stomach.—There is another dynamite scare in Chicago, and arrests have been made. A plot to blow up somebody is detailed by the police. The arrested men are said to be Anarchists.—E. P. Roe, the popular novelist, died suddenly at his home in Cornwall-on-Hudson July 19, from neuralgia of the heart.—The Chinese News, published in New York, is out for Harrison for president. The editor claims that the Chinese already landed are much averse to the admission of any more.—From Indianapolis comes the important information that Candidate Harrison attended divine service last Sunday and otherwise passed a quiet day.—The legislature of New York has abolished the use of machinery in the penal institutions of the state. Convicts will be employed at handwork on goods required in the prison system.—Edison has sold his phonograph patent to an American syndicate for $250,000.

Boulanger, wounded in a duel with the French premier, Floquet, is rapidly recovering.—Emperor William of Germany has been visiting St. Petersburg, Russia, and having a good time. On Sunday he went officially to church.—After a week in London, Mr. Blaine of Maine will sail for home August 1.—Dr. Mackenzie, the physician who attended the German emperor in his last sickness, having been accused of concealment in the case, now says that as concealment may be wrong he will not conceal his opinion that the present emperor is afflicted with insanity.—The New York Times correspondent says: "It is believed that there is a woman at the bottom of the Parnell prosecution, and that from her the London Times obtained the matter on which it based its allegations. The woman is said to be known, and a clause was put in the bill providing for the commission to enable it to get her in the witness-box."—The pope objects to Emperor William visiting Rome. He thinks it will affect injuriously his negotiations with the Italian government.

LITERARY NOTES.

THE best thing contained in Mr. H. P. Marsh's essay on "Evolution, the Light of Reason," is the picture of a beautiful little girl on the fly-leaf. This is saying nothing derogatory to the rest of the work, which is a thoughtful if not erudite treatise on evolution and progress. Address H. P. Marsh, Palmyra, N. Y.

H. L. GREEN publishes in handsome circular form Col. R. G. Ingersoll's Memorial Oration on Roscoe Conkling, delivered before the New York state legislature, May 9, 1888. It is a majestic piece of composition, matchless like its author. We are glad to see it put in this form for general circulation. Price 5 cents per copy; six copies for 25 cents. Order of H. L. Green, 143 Main street, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE publishers of the Popular Science Monthly announce for August a discussion of the tariff question by David Starr Jordan, president of the University of Indiana, in a witty allegory. Herbert Spencer will contribute an article on "The Ethics of Kant," which will no doubt be worth a year's subscription. "The Injurious Influences of City Life" are to be set forth in the same number by Walter D. Platt, M.D. Price of the Popular Science Monthly, 50 cents per number.

CHARLES WATTS has published a pamphlet entitled "The Critic of 'Tactics of Infidels' Criticised." It is an answer, and a most effectual one, to the Rev. L. A. Lambert's hair-splitting comments on Lacy's reply to "Notes on Ingersoll." Mr. Watts really leaves nothing remaining of Lambert's alleged arguments. The most admirable thing about Mr. Watts's labor is his patience, and this indeed is all that was required. Most men, in attempting a reply to Lambert, would merely give a few specimens of the priest's sophistry, and then inquire, "But why proceed?" Mr. Watts goes on in reverential calm, and knocks the point off Mr. Lambert's arguments with sedate and solemn perseverance. If any one conceives that Lambert needs answering, it must be confessed that this need has been filled by Mr. Watts's pamphlet. Price 20 cents; address the Secular Publishing Company, Toronto, Ont., Canada.

JOSEPH A. HECHT has dedicated to the National Educational Association, convening in this city, a pamphlet entitled, "Short-hand Simplified; a System of Improved Longhand for General Use." The claim made for this system is that it has one sign for each sound, is easily learned, rapidly written, and perfectly legible. It is not designed for reporting purposes but as a substitute for our present clumsy longhand, though the inventor claims that it may be abbreviated to such an extent as to make verbatim reporting possible. Letters in the Improved Longhand are distinguished by their form, by the direction in which they are written, by their slant, by their weight, and by their length.

Vowels are represented by up-strokes and are inserted without taking the pen from the paper. No arbitrary signs are permissible, as the author believes that the forms he has adopted after long experiment and as a result of familiarity with many systems are as near perfect as they can be made. The system, says Mr. Hecht, may easily be learned in two lessons and will save the writer forty-five minutes per hour. Price 50 cents.

AN INVESTIGATION OF SLATE-WRITING.

A correspondent writing over the the signature of "McArthur" contributed the following to the New York Truth Seeker of June 16:

I noticed in the last edition of FREETHOUGHT that "George" had had an experience with a slate-writing medium. I read his account carefully, but do not think he did himself justice. The deductions were somewhat far-fetched. While reading it I bethought me of an experiment, and have selected "George" as the subject, for the following reasons:

First, I do not know him personally, although I do very well by reputation. The "man with the badge-pin" has enabled me to pass many a pleasant hour. Consequently I feel drawn toward him.

Then, I have never been in San Francisco, and I do not know the medium with whom he sat, and even the name has escaped me.

Now I make the following proposition to George: Go to a stationer and buy two large slates. Cleanse them perfectly and place between them a piece of slate pencil about the size of a grain of wheat. Then take twelve (12) screws and screw three into each end and side. Thus the slates will be perfectly secure from any human effort to open them. Then take six small pieces of paper, such as FREETHOUGHT is printed on, and on each of these write the full name of some dead friend. Roll these papers up carefully, each one separate, and place them in an envelope. All this to be done in your own house, no one near you, and no possibility of anyone knowing the names.

Then call on the medium. Never let the slates leave your hand. As the little papers will be thoroughly mixed, it is fair to presume that even you will not know the name on any given one.

I merely suggest these precautions. If you wish to adopt any others, you are free to do so; only be sure that you have guarded yourself so that no known human ingenuity can hoodwink you.

At the end of the seance pay the medium his fee. I should like to have it understood right here that whatever the result may be, it is to be published in FREETHOUGHT, and you are at liberty to make any comments you desire. Only, remember, in advance, that you are at liberty to surround yourself with every safeguard, and, if the medium will allow it, you can have a friend or two at the sitting.

I should like an engraving of the slates (and writing, if any) made, and printed with the article. Now, as it is claimed that the phenomena occur independent of the medium, it is possible that the first or even the second sitting may be unproductive, so I would wish three different sittings, unless a result were obtained sooner.

I should also like fifteen copies of FREETHOUGHT containing the article, sent me, and at the same time a bill of the entire expenses, and I will remit at once.

Now, this is a fair proposition, Brother Macdonald, and "George" need not for one moment consider himself under any pecuniary obligation to me. I have many friends out his way, and I am willing to pay for his experiment, if by so doing I can find a good slate-writing medium on the Pacific Coast. Moreover whenever I find a friend who is really desirous of investigating, I always send him to some previously tested medium, with the understanding that unless satisfactory I am to pay the bill.

In this case I make an exception. I volunteer to pay the bill no matter what may be the result.

The "George" referred to in this article is the undersigned. Knowing Mr. McArthur to be a responsible man, a Spiritualist, and fully in earnest, I communicated at once with Mr. Fred Evans, a slate-writer with whom I had previously enjoyed a seance. Mr. Evans replied that he was too busy to write between slates screwed together, but if he found time to give me a sitting he would let me know. Failing thus in that quarter I applied to Mr. Colby, another slate-writer of celebrity. Mr. Colby called at this office and signified his willingness to make the test under the prescribed conditions, though he would not promise satisfactory results. He advised me to write something on one of the slates before sealing them. No pencil, he said, would be necessary, although that was immaterial. I therefore procured two large-sized slates, washed them clean, wrote upon one, "Come back and all will be forgiven," and fastened them together with twelve brass screws. Four of the screws were counter-sunk and the cavity filled with sealing-wax, to which was attached a slip of paper bearing my autograph. To fulfil the conditions imposed by McArthur I had put two small pieces of pencil between the slates.

Thus prepared, and accompanied by Mr. John McGlashan, of Ukiah, to whose presence Mr. Colby had assented, I visited the medium at his house, No. 956 Mission street. I took with me a half dozen ballots with names written according to directions. These were placed upon Mr. Colby's table with the slates. Around the same table the three of us sat for an hour without getting a word, and then adjourned. Mr. Colby asked us to come again and I brought the slates back to the office. The second sitting was equally unproductive, and a third was appointed, but before the time came Mr. Colby called and left the following statement for publication:

To the Editors of Freethought:

In abandoning the effort to obtain results in accordance with the plan proposed by "McArthur" in the Truth Seeker, I desire to make a statement as to the conditions governing the manifestations in my presence as explained to me by my Guides, as follows: The force used by the spirit in communicating is magnetic force, and to obtain this they must first equalize the magnetic forces between all parties present, thus forming a perfect battery in which to generate this magnetism. If this be accomplished, then good results always follow. I have found during five years' experience that only about three-fifths of my patrons obtain the wished-for results. These conditions may be reached at one sitting, while at another sitting with the same person total failure may mark the effort. With other persons I am sorry to say I never could bring about the desired results, owing undoubtedly to some peculiarity of physical organism. My Guides assure me that in our case I never shall succeed. Wishing as I do to place the cause I love far above any possibility of the charge of chicanery or legerdemain, I have ever adopted this course: That where no satisfactory results were obtained, no charge shall be made. As a natural sequence, then, Brother McArthur, who proposed to liquidate the bills connected with our efforts, is not in any way indebted to me. I wish it were possible for me to obtain the desired results with you, but knowing as I do that these matters are beyond our control, I submit, hoping, however, that your efforts with some other medium may be more successful, for what one fails to do another may do with perfect ease. Respectfully, W. R. COLBY, 956 Mission street.

I am thus left with nothing to report in this matter. I still retain the slates, and am prepared to submit them to any such influence as may be brought to bear upon them through the presence of the medium. I do not see how writing can be produced between them until the screws are taken out.

I may say that Mr. Colby is a gentleman I am glad to have become acquainted with. He is fair, courteous, and obliging. On the whole I am not disappointed by the result of this test. It is unreasonable to expect what is apparently impossible.

GEORGE E. MACDONALD.

San Francisco, July 20, 1888.

"God Save the Czar."

From yonder gilded minaret
Beside the steel-blue Neva set,
I faintly catch from time to time,
The sweet aerial midnight chime,
"God save the Czar!"

Above the ravelins and the moats
Of the green citadel it floats;
And men in dungeons far beneath
Listen, and pray, and gnash their teeth.
"God save the Czar."

The soft reiterations sweep
Across the horror of their sleep,
As if some demon in his glee
Were mocking at their misery.
"God save the Czar."

In his Red Palace over there,
Wakeful, he needs must hear the prayer.
How can it drown the broken cries
Wrung from his children's agonies?—
"God save the Czar!"

Father they call him from of old—
Batyushka! How his heart is cold!
Wait till a million scourged men
Rise in their awful might, and then—
God save the Czar!

—Thomas Bailey Aldrich.

SIEZE upon truth, wherever found—
Among your friends, among your foes;
On Christian or on heathen ground.
The flower's divine where'er it grows.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary ..... 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
CHARLES ECKHARD, Treasurer ..... 28 Lafayette place, New York
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com. .... 120 Lexington ave., New York
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com. .... 106 So. Halsted st., Chicago

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	Harry Hoover,	S. W. Devenbaugh,
Courtlandt Palmer,	Charles B. Reynolds,	Wm. Algie,
T. B. Wakeman,	Prof. Ch. Orchardson,	Roman Staley,
James Parton,	L. K. Washburn,	H. P. Mason,
J. D. Shaw,	W. S. Bell,	N. D. Goodell,
W. F. Jamieson,	Mattie A. Freeman,	D. W. Smith,
Charles Watts,	M. M. Secor,	Jas. Wardwell,
John E. Remsburg,	Otto Wettstein,	J. W. Black,
Horace Seaver,	Wm. Redfield,	Thos. J. Truss.
Mattie P. Kregel,

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

There are imperative reasons why, after the coming Congress at Pittsburg, I should refuse active official connection with the American Secular Union. These reasons do not proceed out of any distrust of the Union, but from an increased belief in its success and the triumph of Liberalism throughout the land. It is not the meagerness of the result that compels withdrawal from this sphere of action, but the very greatness of the result. It is because there is so much to do that selection is necessary as to the field of effort.

When I accepted the presidency of the Union at Chicago I did not anticipate the enterprise upon the Pacific Coast. I expected to devote myself mainly to lecturing throughout the states and so be able to aid the Union at any point. But the establishment of FREETHOUGHT in San Francisco has opened such vast and varied opportunities for labor that I am simply compelled to withdraw from the Eastern field for the next few years, and concentrate my energies upon the Pacific Coast.

From Denver to San Francisco I shall find constant employment, organizing and strengthening the Liberal party by lectures and FREETHOUGHT, and therefore I can no longer devote myself in a practical way to the purely national work. Under these circumstances, as I cannot be in intimate communication with Eastern friends, it is best not to occupy a position whose duties I must to a certain extent neglect on account of other fields of effort. If I could perform any effectual service as president of the Union, I should be ready to do so and accept the honor and responsibility with joy, but when I find that I can do just as good service to the Union as a private in the ranks, and that the official position can be better filled by somebody else, then my devotion to the Union leaves no other course but to refuse the office, while I shall still continue to aid in another capacity.

It is evident that the main work of the Union, at present, must be done at the East. In order to be effectual, the Board of Directors should be close together. There should be three in Chicago in immediate communication with the secretary. It weakens the action of the Union to have the president and the secretary three thousand miles apart. The wheels will not run smoothly when it takes a fortnight for a reply to a question which, for the convenience and oftentimes success of the secretary's enterprise, should be answered in a day. Delays are vexatious and sometimes dangerous, and the secretary, who is the main worker, must have his advisers and co-workers at hand.

I have chosen the Pacific Coast for my home, and for the labor of coming years. This choice necessitates a withdrawal from the active government of the Union in favor of someone who is nearer the headquarters; while I can still support the Union effectually by non-official co-operation.

In thus withdrawing for the sake of greater usefulness to all concerned, I wish to state frankly my views of the work of the Union. It has been subject to many criticisms. Some of these I wish to answer.

It has been said that "Putnam has carried the Union around in his vest pocket, and has used it simply for personal advancement." Nothing is further from the truth. I should have been better off to-day pecuniarily if I had never had any connection with the Union. If four years ago I had entered the field simply as a lecturer, dependent upon my own energies, I should have avoided many difficulties, and have received a larger remuneration. All the Unions in the world will not make one successful in the Liberal lecture field. In no case whatsoever has my official connection with the Union given me more enthusiastic reception, or better pay. In every instance I have had to win by personal effort. The American people are not so constituted that the patronage of any organization will make a lecturer acceptable. He must stand on his own merits. No amount of recommendation will transform dullness into power.

I have not endeavored to shape the policy of the Union to my own notions. I have not tried, in any instance, to make the Union subservient to my profit. The Liberals of this country are not the kind of people to be hoodwinked. None can use them, nor dictate to them. They allow no master. If my policy has been adopted, it is because that policy has expressed the common sense of the Liberals of this country. It is because, by my acquaintance with Liberals, I have known what is the general desire, and have put that desire into execution. My policy has been unanimously sustained by every Congress from Cassadaga to Chicago in spite of adverse criticism.

It is folly to say that a Congress of Liberals can be "fixed." There has always been the amplest freedom and everybody has said his say, and in the end the methods adopted have been thoroughly justified. I have had the cordial support of the vast majority of the active Liberals of this country; and this not because I have had any personal policy, but because I have endeavored to meet the demands of the situation. I have not been the master but the servant of the Union in honorable labor.

Many criticisms have been made because I have devoted almost all my time to the lecture field. There was no other course to pursue. Had I remained in New York city—in a home office—the Union would to-day be dead. The proof is palpable to all who know the history of the Union. It was absolutely necessary that I should travel from the Atlantic to the Pacific in order to arouse the dormant life of Liberalism and make fellowship. The lecture tours were successful. I undertook them on my own responsibility. The Liberals generously responded, and I am willing to leave my work to the judgment of all who are interested in the advance of the Union. I think now that a home office is better, and that the secretary should not be a traveling lecturer; but the opportunity for a home office was made only by two years' hard work in the field.

The Union has been criticised for not publishing Sunday-school leaflets, science books, and all the instrumentalities for work by local societies. It is simply impossible for the Union to do this. It has not the means. When there are one hundred live Secular Unions and Sunday-schools in this country, then these instrumentalities can be furnished, and not before. These instrumentalities can't be made out of air. There must be a fountain of support.

Such fault finding is like cursing a poor man for his poverty, and blaming him for not having a fine house to live in. The Union is not a rich institution. It is poor—very poor. Outside of the lecture fees, the income has been only a few hundred dollars each year. The Union has used its money to the best advantage. There has been no waste. This is fully apparent to anyone who will examine the records. To condemn the Union for not doing what it would take ten times its income to do is a cruel folly, and unworthy of any generous minded Liberal. The funds of the Union have not been misdirected. If the Union does not do all the good work that lies before it, it is simply because it has not the means. Let those who criticise the Union for not doing certain things of importance go to work and raise the funds, and give it a chance to do these things, and not try to destroy the Union on account of the poverty of its resources.

Poor though it is, the Union has done a noble work. I am satisfied that the Liberals of America will not permit it to be destroyed, simply because it is poor and struggling, and not rich and flourishing. I stand by the Union, I believe in the Union, and I will work for the Union more heartily than ever. It is a burning shame to the Liberals of this country if they will not sustain a national organization, on a platform—the Nine Demands—which everybody can support. I want a union of the Liberals of America, for the churches are powerful and aggressive, and do force and will force injustice upon us; and if we are men, we will resist, and to resist successfully we must combine.

The selection of Mr. Stevens for secretary was wise and opportune. He is the man for the place. He has given us new life and hope. He did not seek the office. It was the unanimous desire of the Congress that he accept it. He did so with generous devotion. Amid many difficulties and discouragements, his administration has been successful. With proper support, he will make the Union a power.

The secretary is the practical working force of the organization. The president and the other directors are mainly advisory. The secretary needs their wise co-operation, but his own personal effort is what makes the influence of the Union. He must be a worker. The Board of Directors should be representative Liberals, who have the confidence of the public, and will make harmony in the ranks. The best secretary can do but little without the united assistance of active Liberals. Mr. Stevens should be kept in his position. His ability is unquestioned. His earnestness is inspiring.

I look forward to a bright harmonious Congress. Our Pittsburgh friends have never lowered the flag. They will give, I believe, a grander impulse than ever.

In union with our Eastern friends, the Pacific Coast will do its share. A world in itself, it needs its own methods and instrumentalities, but Liberals here are American citizens, and we shall work for the American Republic, and for equal rights and impartial liberty wherever the flag of our Union waves. To do my work more effectually in the far West, I must sever my official connection with the national organization, but only as a private in the ranks to serve it with greater hope and enthusiasm.

Pacific Coast, July 28, 1888.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONGRESS A. S. U.

OFFICIAL CALL.

To the Local Secular Unions, Life, Charter, and Annual Members, and all Liberal citizens who support the Nine Demands of Secularism, Greeting:

You are hereby invited to attend the Twelfth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union, which will convene at Lafayette Hall, Wood street, near 4th, Pittsburgh, Pa., Friday, October 5, 1888, at 10 A.M., for a four days' session—5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th, inclusive.

All Charter and Life Members, all Vice-Presidents, all Chairmen of State Executive Committees, and all duly accredited delegates from Local Secular Unions are entitled to seats and votes in this Annual Congress. Each Local Secular Union is entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates. Annual Members who pay or have paid $1 in the national treasury are entitled to seats, but not to votes, except by unanimous consent of the Congress.

This Congress will especially consider practical questions tending to further agitation for the taxation of church property; the abrogation of state aid to sectarian institutions; abolition of state, national, military, and prison chaplaincies; repeal of all judicial oaths, Sunday and other oppressive and unjust ecclesiastical laws; nullification of attempts to subvert our Constitution by a legal recognition of Theism in the American Magna Charta, and such other measures as will not merely thwart intended theological encroachments, but absolutely expunge from our laws, state and federal, such insidious acts as have already crept in to blot out mental freedom from our republic.

It is to be hoped that the addresses delivered will deal with the practical issues of the organization, so that there will be such an awakening of the people to these vital questions of the hour that a revival of the instinct of liberty and justice for all will necessarily result; that again from the Keystone state—the birthplace of our association—the clarion voice of freedom shall reverberate throughout the land.

Pittsburgh being situated almost in the center of a district containing many of our most distinguished workers, thinkers, and writers, besides the active host within its limits, there is little doubt that this Congress will be a glorious gathering of the forces who stand for mental liberty, as expressed in the desire for a complete Secularization of the government.

S. P. PUTNAM, Pres.,
E. A. STEVENS, Sec.,
CHAS. ECKHARD, Treas.,
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Ch. Ex. Com.,
MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com.

CONSTRUCTIVE LIBERALISM.

While all recognize the necessity of a large amount of destructive work, in demolishing old myths and idols; and in clearing the field for something better, few seem to feel under any obligations to aid in sowing good seed or in reaping the fields already ripe for the harvest. While probably less than ten per cent of the entire people are in any way connected with the Christian church, that small fraction performs more work, and contributes more money for the dissemination of what we believe to be error and superstition, than the ninety per cent outside the churches give for the dissemination of what we all believe to be truth. Allowing for the fact that a large element outside the churches assent to the creeds of the churches (the vicious and criminal classes are generally orthodox), still the Freethinkers are doubtless five times as numerous as church-members, and yet contribute for the advancement of Liberal thought probably less than one per cent of the amount raised by the churches. A large share of these Freethinkers were formerly in the church and contributed liberally for the church's support. But finding that they had been in bondage to obsolete error, and taxed to propagate that error, they now throw off the burden and rejoice in freedom and in a mere passive Liberalism.

It is not strange that those who have been so long loaded with the church's burdens should now feel like taking a rest, and that those who have escaped from the tread-mill of superstition should feel a temporary unwillingness to enter another organization. In addition to this, the leaders of Liberalism have so far been chiefly occupied in pulling weeds, and clearing the field of the rubbish of obsolete error, and have little time to plan or build noble structures for the future, or to plan the constructive work which will soon be the attractive and distinguishing feature of Liberalism.

At present Freethinkers contribute to the constructive work of the churches, simply because in most localities they see no practical plan for Liberal work. Freethinkers have in the past contributed largely for the building of churches and the support of ministers; and the Young Men's Christian Association, through all sorts of secular appliances that used to be called sinful, are now receiving and controlling very liberal contributions from Freethinkers that could not be obtained for the church direct. This, it is to be hoped, will soon cease wherever Freethinkers are numerous enough to organize and direct their own constructive work, free from superstition and priestly control. That Freethinkers are less liberal than bigots in contributing money I cannot for one moment believe. But they must see an object and a plan worthy of their approval and their active effort. Where this has been clearly seen Freethinkers have surpassed the world in the magnificence of their liberality. Robert Morris, Stephen Girard, Gerritt Smith, and James Lick are noble examples of this fact.

As it seems to me, our first object now should be organization. Thousands of Freethinkers have been reading and thinking and rejoicing for some years, without doing much else. Is it not now time to become more actively useful? Not merely useful to others, but to ourselves chiefly, and also to our neighbors and our country. We cannot benefit ourselves as we should without organization. People improve in society, and deteriorate by isolation. Half the education we get is from conversation. People need to be brought together, "where mind and mind can blend and brighten." They need to learn to exercise their reasoning faculties, and to speak, as they can hardly do separately and alone. They need society—old and young alike—and to learn to work in unison. The evangelical churches include but about five per cent of the people of this state and of the United States, and yet they have dictated legislation to the ninety-five per cent, simply by their organization and united action. If we would vindicate our rights, now trampled upon by the church in many instances, we should organize. And as FREETHOUGHT has truthfully said, we need to be not only "organized," but also "galvanized."

The form and machinery of organization is not important, the aim and purpose should be high and broad. The "Secular Union" is all we need, which only binds to the one purpose of a complete separation of "church and state." That organization can work in any form desired—lectures, lyceum, social gatherings, scientific classes, libraries, reading rooms, etc. etc. These organizations should unite, so far as practicable, all who are in favor of a complete separation of church and state.

Having secured an organization, the next thing is to secure and maintain regular meetings of the Union at such times as shall be agreed upon—weekly if possible. Efforts should be made by every member to induce others to attend, and every member should attend regularly if possible. All who love truth will be ready to do some work, and make a few sacrifices.

Then as a bond of union, and a constant stimulus to action, as well as habitual food for the mind, every member should have a copy of a Freethought paper. A Freethinker who is good for anything will not rest without this. Nothing can take the place of a wide circulation of Freethought papers and literature. But the paper is indispensable. For that reason ten-fold efforts should be made to obtain subscribers to Freethought papers. They bring those who read them a flood of light that can be got in no other way. The value of a weekly paper that advocates truth and principle cannot be overestimated. It not only interests mature minds, but it teaches the young to think and reason. It is an antidote to lethargy and indifference. There is nothing more helpful to the formation of right character in the young than a thorough interest in some good cause. The listless, thoughtless, aimless lives of very many of our young men and women give poor promise of fine character in later life; while those who in youth become thoroughly in earnest in the support of a good cause are almost sure to display good qualities in later years. Our Freethought papers contain food for the mind, and they are worth ten times their cost in any family who love to read.

After the circulation of the papers, we must study to make our meetings instructive and interesting. How shall we do it?

J. W. NORTH.

IRELAND AND ITS LESSONS.

The contest in Ireland has been prolific in novelties. It has furnished the world some new phrases, new ideas, new methods and results. Though a tempest in a tea-pot, as it were, its eruptions have done much to wake up the world.

The boycott was its firstborn. No rent came next. Land monopoly is a sin, makes a good third; and now a fourth appears, not less threatening in its consequences. The clergy are with the people, for the very obvious reason that the people are Catholic, and the government Protestant. They have made common cause with the peasant in all his persistent resistance to the powers that be. They guide him to the ragged edge of crime and warn him not to step over it. They are great allies in a war of strategy, where open force must be avoided. They are themselves Irish and malcontents. But their great head, the pope, is a king in Rome. He would stand well with kings and landlords, and all such as have jewels and gold to give on his jubilee, and these sounds from Ireland alarm him. "No rent; land monopoly is sin; unjust law must not be obeyed; and boycott the tyrants," terrify the pope. What if they should reach Italy, Austria, Spain, or even Germany? There might be an end of kingcraft and priestcraft both. So he writes to the bishops of Ireland: "Gently, my children! Do not wake up the world in this way. It is dangerous. You may kill the English rats in Ireland; but you will burn the barn of monarchy, land monopoly and priestcraft for all Europe! Don't you do it. Be careful, and make war religiously. Kill your English enemies with prayer. Don't even make faces at them. It is not moral, and not pious. You had better sink Ireland than set Europe on fire."

Then the bishops' answer is the next step in the drama, and a new revelation to the pope. They say: "We are Irishmen, as well as liegemen of the pope, and we will not abandon our people at his command. We divide our allegiance, and we set the line where the division comes in. The pope cannot do that for us. We recognize our country as first. We will not obey the pope and abandon our people."

But this is rank heresy. The pope claims to be the fountain of all power, infallible in all spiritual things. When the spiritual and temporal overlap, he presides over both. He defines the lines, and is the supreme judge of his own jurisdiction. He alone may tell these bishops where their duty to him ceases, and their allegiance to their country begins. Their position is heresy and rebellion, rank and open. But it is reason, and it is right, and once broached, it will become the rule. The Catholic clergy of the United States will follow this rule on the first occasion. They cannot do otherwise. They dare not. Our people would never tolerate for a moment, in bishop or cardinal, a leaning to the pope against the republic. Here, then, is a new product of the Home Rule conflict, national allegiance before papal. And it is the end and the grave of the infallibility dogma.

Father McGlynn was the first victim of this conflict, but there will be others, and the time is not far distant when the Catholic clergy of America, in their own defense, will declare that allegiance to the republic is before all; and the pope must discreetly avoid a trial of the issue. It can only go against him.

H. L. KNIGHT.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made these lecture appointments from July to October. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Astoria, Or. ....	July . . . . . 22, 29	Salt Lake City, Utah. . . . .	Aug. . . . . 26
Cathlamet, W. T. . . . .	" . . . . . 24-27	Murray, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 27
Pasco, W. T. . . . .	Aug. . . . . 1-2	Heber, Utah. . . . .	" . . . . . 28, 29
Cheney, Or. . . . .	" . . . . . 3, 4	Denver, Col. . . . .	Sept. . . . . 2
Waverly, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 5, 6	Seward, Neb. . . . .	" . . . . . 5-6
Rockford, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 7	Wahoo, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 7-8
Spokane Falls, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 8, 9, 10	Lincoln, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 9
Colfax, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 11, 12	Omaha, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 10
Walla Walla, W. T. . . . .	" . . . . . 14	Creston, Iowa. . . . .	" . . . . . 11
Union, Or. . . . .	" . . . . . 16	Ottumwa, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 12
Emmett, Idaho, . . . . .	" . . . . . 18	Salem, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 13
Boise City, Idaho, . . . . .	" . . . . . 19	West Union, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 16-17
Ogden, Utah, . . . . .	" . . . . . 21	Chicago, Ill. . . . .	" . . . . . 23
Morgan, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 22	Pittsburgh, Pa. . . . .	" . . . . . 30
Coalville, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 23	Secular Union Congress, Oct. 5, 6, 7, 8
Park City, " . . . . .	" . . . . . 25

On the Trail.

DEAR EDITORS: I being at Skamokawa, W. T., July 14, 15, and 16, I met Mr. C. B. Reynolds and listened to him in four lectures, which were certainly equal to any I have ever heard upon radical thought. Mr. Reynolds is fearless and ultra radical, and certainly has no equal in "braining" the Christians with their own weapon, the Bible. His satire, mimicry, and pathos excel anything I ever listened to. He easily proves by the Bible that man has no immortal soul, and that the devil is everybody's father and man's best friend; that Christianity is a humbug of monstrous size and deadly tendency.

Last evening Samuel P. Putnam lectured here in the Turners' hall to a very large, attentive audience, who often applauded the eloquent thought of the poetic speaker. Mr. Putnam is a genius of peculiar merit, and is worthy of a crowded house everywhere he may speak. In the audience was the Rev. Mr. Driver, the Methodist divine of this city, who has the name of being a great debater and learned man; also was present that king of froth, that bundle of buncombe and mucus, Clark Braden the godite, who has followed Putnam and Reynolds from California to Oregon, saying he has run them from there here, and will drive them from this coast entirely. He tries to entice them into a debate with him, but so far has failed. "Our folks" are perfectly willing to debate with any honorable clergyman, but not with a man who uses personal abuse, insult, and blackguardism for argument. This of course calls out the applause of the hoodlum element, and so would the winner in a foot-race or dog fight. Braden has been following Mr. Putnam around in his lecturing tour, listening to his discourses, then inviting the audience over to his room to hear the answer of vituperation and abuse. I should think "Gawd" would be ashamed of his "agents," but they seem to be all rather slimy—Moses and Solomon, King David and Noah, and so on down to the present, Braden, priests, popes and all. If heaven is to be peopled with such an outfit, including nearly all the murderers and criminals that seek "Gawd" when the rope is around their neck, I will prefer to go to sheol where the good, true, and noble humanitarians and scientists have all been sent, according to these vicegerents of the Lord. After Mr. Putnam had finished his eloquent and splendid lecture, "The Bible, What It Is, and Whence it Came," the writer of this was called on by the chairman, and made a few remarks upon the church and Bible morals.

While at Skamokawa we met Mr. S. F. Albert and wife those thoroughly in earnest Liberals from Cathlamet; also Mr. Bowman, who is a whole team on the side of the under dog, Freethought; Mr. Thornburg, who, though but a poor boy struggling to get to the top, yet paid $18 towards getting Reynolds, besides boarding him and several others who came from a distance. If all our young men would manifest that amount of interest, Freethought would not long be the under dog.

100 S. First st., Portland, Oregon.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

Two Goats and a Hole in the Fence Make Trouble at Topolobampo.

[We have received the following with a request that it be published.]

THOMAS OLD, ESQ., Dear Sir: I write this letter to you for the purpose of contradicting several misstatements made by one H. W. Faust, of San Francisco, about a man named P. F. Johnson, of the Credit Foncier. All the trouble commenced over a tent which a poor woman named Mrs. Ingram left here in charge of Mr. Johnson, while she went to the bay to see if she could get away. In case she got away, Mr. Johnson was to take down the tent and sell it, and the money he was to send to her at San Francisco. I know this, as I myself was responsible to her for Mr. Johnson. Soon after Mrs. Ingram left there came another lady, and having no shelter for her the directors asked Mr. Johnson if she could use the tent. He told them yes, of course. He believed Mrs. Ingram would have no objection in case they took good care of it. She moved in and shortly afterward they bought a tent and she moved into it, when they (the colony) started to take down the tent of Mrs. Ingram's, and Mr. Johnson asked them what they were doing. They told him that the tent belonged to the colony and that they were going to take it. Mr. Johnson said that they should not take it, and he carried the tent over to his own, and there was no one to take it away.

Then they commenced to pick upon him in order to disgust him and induce him to leave, as they thought him too honest for the Credit Foncier. This at last culminated in the cutting of Mr. Byrnes. Of course about this last row I get my information second-hand, as nobody saw it, except the principals and Mrs. Johnson, but it commenced about a little hole in the fence that Mr. Johnson had to turn his goats out of, as he had a couple of goats that he used to milk and after milking he let them out to graze. Mr. Byrnes stopped up this hole and Mr. Johnson said to him that he would have to open it again to let his goats out. Mr. Byrnes told him that he had better not, as in case he did he would make a hole in him, and threatened to stab him, or words to that effect. Well, Mr. Johnson made another hole in the fence. Mr. Byrnes came up and they began to quarrel about it. Mr. Byrnes threw a rock at Mr. Johnson and ran after him with his knife open; and he (Mr. Johnson) grabbed a hatchet that he had been using to make the hole in the fence with and started after Mr. Byrnes; and Mr. Byrnes fell down over a guy rope of Mr. Stanton's tent, and Mr. Johnson cut him two or three times in the legs, and, I think, once or twice in the back. That is about the truth of the affair as near as I can learn.

I do not think Mr. Byrnes is altogether to blame for what he did, as I believe he had his orders from higher authority to stop up the hole at Mr. Johnson's, and to keep it stopped, as they knew very well that would compel him to sell his goats. I do not think Mr. Faust is a very good authority to deny statements of things that happen so far away from where he is, as he has never been down here to the colony and so can know nothing about it. As for me, I live right here and have seen how things were being done from the start. I joined the colony when it first came and put in all my property on certain conditions, which conditions they did not fulfil. I gave them more time and they could not or would not fulfil them and would not keep their word. They acted as if when they had got a good hold on me, so that I could not get out, they would take everything I had and turn me out of doors with my family and tell me to go and grub roots; that they did not have anything for us. So I concluded to draw out, and I have thanked God more than once that I did so after seeing how they treated the poor widows and children who had put their little all into the colony.

I think the colony could have been made a success by putting somebody with brains at the head of it; but with such a leader as they now have it will never amount to anything. I should like to see my own people come here and settle, but I do not believe in enticing them as the colony does, down here to starve, writing letters home about the fine living they were having and all that kind of rot, and at the same time living on boiled corn and cabbage. It might have been fine living for some of them, but some others made quite a violent kick about it.

Yours very respectfully, N. HASKELL.

Sufragio, Sinaloa, Mexico, June 12, 1888.

Raw Material and Ignorance.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I notice in FREETHOUGHT a short article said to be from a speech by Colonel Ingersoll at the Chicago convention. I think this cannot be a correct report, for it would seem impossible that after the deep reasoning exhibited in his reply to Gladstone he could have made such a statement as this: "The country that raises raw material and sells it will always be ignorant and poor. The labor that raises raw material is ignorant labor." Well, that is the most terrible thrust at us middle, southern, and western men that I have ever heard or read, and I do not believe it true. It would place the colonel in a pretty fix, for his home, the great state of Illinois, has up to this day been very little more than a producer of raw material. And so of all the other localities named, and they have produced and continue to produce as capable people as any on the earth. The colonel is more than an average example. This is getting into the great political question of the campaign, and I shall, like the article named, be quite brief. It is a fact that the states are selling the products of their labor—wheat, beef, pork—in the markets of the world by the side of and for the same price as the naked Hindoo and semi-barbarous Russian, and then they spend the money with the colonel's wise and protected citizens, taking learned labor in exchange at a protective price averaging 47 per cent; and they have been thus enslaved until three-fourths, and in some counties of this state 97 per cent, of the farms are mortgaged to the same protected people who thus own their own country and this too.

And now if it were correct, which it is not, that the laborers in raw material are more ignorant than in the fine arts, it is true that theirs is another kind of wisdom deserving of as much reward. Is it right on moral principles to enslave a man and keep him in ignorance because he uses more muscle for his money? I say without fear of any contradiction that there is no way of protection by money reward but by taking it unjustly from one person to give to another; and when, as the quotation implies, it is taken from the ignorant to give to the wise it becomes odious and closely related to crime.

GEORGE W. CHAPMAN, M. D.

Cawker City, Kan.

The Question of Prayer.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Through the kindness of some unknown friend I am in receipt of the last two numbers of your able journal, June 30 and July 7. In each issue our mutual friend, Prof. D. C. Seymour, takes me to task for offering an invocation at the commencement of a meeting, and says, "He [Reed] is not quite broad-gauged enough to drop prayer to a nothing in the skies," etc., etc. This seems to trouble our good brother, and I feel like coming to his relief. I will here say I never attempt to offer a prayer in public unless I am first invited so to do by the parties having the meeting in charge. On the evening that I introduced the professor, when Mrs. Finnican gave platform delineation of spirits, she requested me to give an invocation, and I presume I should do so if the professor were to request me so to do at the commencement of one of his lectures. I have heard the professor lecture many times, and heard his views on what we term Deity. Taking his own exposition: "The universe is governed by law," I claim that my own ideas are quite as broad as his own, although I do not claim to know as much; for he goes on to say, "The only infinite we know anything about is infinite space, infinite time, and infinite matter." Did you reflect, professor, how little we know about your trinity, "space, time, and matter?" You seem to have forgotten an important factor, one that figures quite as much as any of the three you mention, and that is mind. Suppose you include infinite mind with your three other points, and I am with you as far as Deity is concerned, and I am inclined to put in your universal law as a substitute for mind. Then we have infinite law, infinite space, infinite time, and infinite matter, all of which we know very little about with all our research.

Now, professor, let us go a little further. You claim, up here with us, to be a Spiritualist, and I trust you are one. This introduces spirit, another problem hard to solve. Then let us call this thing spirit, infinite. Let us go a little further, if you please. What lies back of all these, professor, do you know? I find myself living, moving, having a being, in the very midst of all these great infinitudes, and if I cannot help letting my thoughts go out into this great field of infinities, and invoke the aid of the all-good, though unseen and not understood, and use the word God for short, don't be alarmed, my good brother. I will try to be on board the great broad-gauge railroad train, when you come in from the "Trail," when we will all take a ride.

C. A. REED.

Portland, Or.

Prohibition vs. Liberalism.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In your paper of April 21, is an article from Isaac E. Crum, which I am glad to see, and wish to comment upon. I am glad, because it raises the question of Prohibition vs. Liberalism; which question must be met sooner or later and settled. I too am past fifty, and have been a Liberal (and a Temperance man also) from boyhood, "and the older I grow the stronger my belief." I also, "can see no way to conform Liberalism to Prohibition," and can go farther, and say that in my opinion Prohibition is only another name for God-in-the-Constitutionism, and stands for all that means, and nothing else. To those who may differ from this view I would say, take away from the Prohibition party the "God-in-the-Constitution" element, and what would there be left? Let us have the question discussed.

F. S. MATTESON.

Aumsville, Oregon.

"God in the State," by E. A. Stevens, secretary of the American Secular Union, is a very valuable document showing the dangerous practical alliance now existing between the church and our government. The pamphlet is crowded with facts sufficient to open the eyes of those blind with indifferentism, and arouse them, if not to action, at least to a sense of insecurity. The pamphlet should be circulated by thousands. Published by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal. Price, 10 cents.—The Truth Seeker.

A MINISTER in the country had some clothing repaired by a local taylor, and in conversing with him said, incautiously: "When I want a good coat cut I go to Boston. That's the place. By the way," he added, "do you ever go to church?" "Well, sir, when I want to hear a good sermon I go to Boston. That's the place."

The Aged Housewife's Prayer.

I pray that, risen from the dead,
I may in glory stand,
A crown, perhaps, upon my head—
But a needle in my hand.

I've had no time to learn to play—
So let no harp be mine;
Through all my life, by night and day,
Plain sewing's been my line.

Therefore, accustomed, to the end,
To plying useful stitches;
I'll be content if asked to mend
The little angels' breeches.

—Chicago News.

YOUNG wife (at the window): "Oh, heavens, Bridget! Stand by me!—don't leave the room!" Bridget: "Oh, murder, mum! what is it—a tramp?" Wife: "Oh, worse! worse! it's the minister!"

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

HAND-BOOK OF THE LICK OBSERVATORY

OF THE

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,

—BY—

EDWARD S. HOLDEN, LL.D.,

Director of the Observatory.

A volume of 135 pages, 12mo., printed on heavy paper, and bound in flexible cloth covers. Besides likenesses of

Professor Holden and James Lick,

it contains Twenty Views, Drawings, and Illustrations of the Locality, the Machinery, and the Apparatus connected with the great Astronomical station. The Table of Contents includes:

- I. Information for Visitors.
- II. Sketch of the Life of James Lick.
- III. A Visit to Mt. Hamilton.
- IV. History of the Lick Observatory.
- V. Description of the Building.
- VI. Description of the Instruments.
- VII. The Work of the Observatory.
- VIII. Telescopes.
- IX. Poem: To the Unmounted Lens.
- X. Astronomical Photography.
- XI. Clocks and Time-Keeping.
- XII. The Principal Observatories of the World.

By mail 80 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 16th and 18th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including various notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS.

By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular and readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and a NEW FEATURE, of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding. MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

For the Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS, CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.
PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.
33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS,
—DEALER IN—
CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS,
—AND—
Gent's Furnishing Goods,
Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.
Do not forget Street and Number,
357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S
Popular Jewelry Store
(Established 1857)
ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13 50, $14 50; 5 ounce, $16 00; 6 ounce, $17 50.
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17,
$18, $19 50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4.
Being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24 50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies'
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$22; 15 jewels, $28. In good second quality filled cases, $2
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38.
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4.
$5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case.
Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1;
best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12.
Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free.
BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
Badge in PINS and
CHARMS—emblematical of the light and day
of Freethought, Science, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of cut and smaller,
two-thirds size. Warranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2 75, $3 50. Large,
$3 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $8, $10; and
charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1 25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscoan. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Tributes. "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," "The Grant Banquet Toast" and "Little Harry Miller's Grave," printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing; four to any address for 50 cents, or either one for 15 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," and all the famous tributes, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, table-talks and day-to-day conversations of the author. Fine steel portrait and autograph facsimile. Price, in cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2 50.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walfs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiotcy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 31.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 4, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - AUGUST 4, 1888

THE Denison, Texas, Gazetteer is able to record this evidence of progress: "Two hundred years ago Christians burned fortune-tellers as witches; in Denison fortune-telling is employed to replenish the church exchequer."

THE Baptists of the state are arguing the question whether women can be deacons. The Rev. A. M. Johnson, of Willows, takes the negative. He holds that as Paul in his first epistle to Timothy makes it obligatory upon a deacon to have one wife a woman cannot fulfil the conditions.

E. C. WALKER's paper, Fair Play, published at Valley Falls, Kan., continues bright and breezy. Mr. Walker may make the mistake of criticising most severely those who would defend him the most persistently, but we judge this is due mainly to his lack of patience with people who cannot always enjoy his view of things.

THE Rev. George W. Bothwell, pastor of a Congregational church across the bay, avers that by actual count seventy per cent of the people of West Oakland have no church affiliations whatever. This alarming neglect of the means of grace is probably due to the absence of so many missionaries carrying the gospel to foreign parts.

THE pope has given Prince Amadeo, of Italy, a dispensation to marry Princess Lolilua Bonaparte, daughter of his sister; that is to say, his own niece. Without the dispensation this is incest. It would be interesting to physiologists to know by what process religious mummery can so change the laws of consanguinity as to make the marriage of uncle and niece anything else than unnatural.

*PROF. E. W. J. AUMSTEAD, of Hampton, Va., is giving select church entertainments in the South. This is the way he heralded his descent upon Smithville, Ga.: "Notis given to All There Will be a christian A magic wonder show at the Baptist church on Friday & Saturday night all friends are respectfully invited to attend the Beautiful sight. In which will give Great satisfaction to all who attend the Same. It is said or witnessed by hundreds of attenders. To B one of the finest magic wonders

That ever performed on this C. & W. Give notice by blowing a horn 3 times Notice also by Ringing the Bell on each night of the show Admittance 15 cents chil-at under 12 years 10 cts Doors open at 730 performance at 830 oclock Showed by Prof. E. W. J. Aumstead from Hampton Va."

DYER D. LUM, who had second place on the ticket when Wendell Phillips ran for governor of Massachusetts, is now editing an Anarchist journal in New York called the Alarm. The paper was formerly published in Chicago by Albert R. Parsons, one of the Anarchists hanged in that city. Mr. Lum is now under the surveillance of the police, who suspect he may have been connected with Chicago's latest dynamite scare. We do not believe Mr. Lum knew anything about it. We should pick him out as the least bloodthirsty man in a large congregation of Quakers.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Down the broad Columbia, to Cathlamet, I journey July 21. Mr. and Mrs. S. F. Albert live on the side of the hill overlooking the sweeping and shining waters. Amid the shadows of the trees I recline, while the dreamy winds go by, as if they were seeking some cool retreat from the burning sun. All that one can do is to keep still until the golden evening softens the fervent ray. At this home I find myself in the atmosphere of Freethought, where hope is bright, and the spirit of humanity prevails. Sheriff Albert believes in doing something; that the world is not right unless we help to make it right, and heart and hand are ready for labor. Mrs. Albert is a "little woman," but of boundless energy and intense earnestness. Her enthusiasm is catching, and work brightens, and victory seems assured with her open, frank, and brave spirit.

Mrs. Nelson and daughters are present from Stark's Point, and a pleasant addition these make to our force in this remote corner of "the world's great field of battle."

Uncle Fred was with us—Fred the blacksmith—as they call him up and down the river, who has made the sparks fly around the heads of the theological mummies, and it has been too hot for the ghosts and they have disappeared. Mr. and Mrs. Lawson and family came from Stella, in their own boat. Mr. Lawson has just built a Freethought hall, and purposes to establish a Secular Sunday-school, and have a place for social gathering and educational impulse.

Cathlamet is a small place, only a hamlet on the wooded banks of the Columbia, but my visit was delightful, for around the hearthstone was the illumination of progress. On Sunday morning the little band of reformers gathered in the hall. It was almost too good a day for a lecture. It was superb harvest time, and I guess the farmers wanted to make the most of it, and thought they would listen to the lecture when the barns were full. However, there were enough present to talk to, and perhaps something was accomplished. We did our level best. It may be the harvest time will come some day as rich and royal as that which now covers the fair lands of the Columbia.

The "Telephone" came along in the afternoon, and we all embarked and sped down the river. It was evening when I landed at Astoria. Of course Wm. Chance was on hand to greet me, and Colonel Taylor and others. There are many Liberals at this point, but not all of the working kind. However, the hall was pretty well filled at the lecture, but there were not so many as I expected. Perhaps they were looking at the eclipse. Well, we must bear disappointment and keep on. Next Sunday I look for a larger number. At Stark's Point they are preparing for a big picnic, and I should not wonder if we had a gathering that will stir all to better things. We take the smiles of fortune for better and for worse, but in spite of worse the to-morrow will be happier than to-day. We cannot be melancholy with our frontier companion, Wm. Chance, who has had an adventurous life for many years on the Pacific Coast. His camping-ground used to Coos county when he gathered up the remnants of the Indian tribes for the reservation. He has been all over the country. He has distributed hundreds of dollars' worth of Ingersoll's lectures. He keeps things a-going. Mrs. Chance accepts heartily the philosophy of Spiritualism, but this world does not become a shadow in the glory of the other, but a nobler reality. Ingersoll and Pearl, the little children, are full of life, and the gloom of orthodoxy will not make "their young affections run to waste, or water but the desert." They are born under a happy star—the star of reason and humanity.

I shall return to Astoria and shall have more to say of this city by the sea.

Monday, July 23, I return to Portland and rest for a few days. A little relaxation from toil is beneficial to the Secular pilgrim, especially when he can find so comfortable a sojourning place as at the "corner grocery" where friend Saunders keeps everything in apple-pie order, and where one can simply enjoy life; for there is everything to make agreeable the passing hours—books, pictures, music, flowers, the singing bird; and, without, the shining river, and beyond it Mt. Hood resplendent in the summer's glory of sky and earth. Professor Seymour is here, the earnest reformer who does not like humbugs of any sort; Mr. Saunders, the "grandfather," who has the enthusiasm of a boy in the work of Freethought, and who talks it and lives it; Mrs. Saunders, who not only thoroughly enjoys the world but knows how to make others do the same; Mrs. Seymour, her daughter, and Miss Orlic, grand-daughter; and among the company are Mrs. Haight and Will Haight, Mr. Staley, Mr. Darling, Mrs. Dean, Mr. and Mrs. Sutton, Mr. Beal, etc. These friends, some of them well-known to our readers, make Portland a very attractive place for intellectual and social pleasure. Claus Jeldness, of "the land of the midnight sun," has just given me a ride through the suburbs of this beautiful and growing city. It numbers now about 40,000. The lands about are exceedingly rich; manufactories are being built, railroads are coming in, and it must be a great centre of business and wealth. Mr. Jeldness is extensively interested in mines, and is quite successful, and with a few more turns of fortune will build a Freethought hall. He believes in the brotherhood of mankind, and not simply in the almighty dollar. He and friend Neunert are the kind of Liberals that make prosperity a blessing. Mr. Jeldness has written in Norwegian, his native language, a pamphlet entitled, "My Honest Thought," a letter to his sister, a lady of brilliant literary talent, in Norway. It is a plea for Freethought, containing extracts from Ingersoll's lectures. He has translated many of the lectures of Ingersoll into Norwegian, and is now translating the "Field-Ingersoll Discussion." He says that Liberalism is prevailing in his native land, and he has received many cheering responses to his efforts for the spread of Freethought. He is enthusiastic, and it gives new courage to meet so generous a comrade.

"I have just met Reynolds long enough to shake hands and have a talk over the prospects of work and organization. So far as I can discover, whatever differences exist in our ranks in regard to the Secular Union are mainly about method and detail, and could be easily settled by a frank and earnest conference of all who are really interested in the success of the cause. I hope that such will be the case; that misunderstandings will be removed. We cannot afford to quarrel. We must join our forces against the common enemy. I expect a more cordial co-operation. Let us agree to disagree on minor matters, and press forward without division, for the maintenance of Liberty and justice.

Mr. Reynolds's meetings on Sunday and Monday were quite successful, and in spite of many difficulties the work at this point is promising.

C. Beal, our faithful ally, has arranged, with other friends, for a lecture this evening. Mr. Beal is one of those who never give up. He keeps right on, however fortunes may vary. He will never haul down the flag. Summer and winter, he is the soldier still.

Just as I close this letter the sad message of the death of Courtlandt Palmer is flashed across the wires, and with it the beautiful, noble words of Ingersoll's eloquent tribute to a brave and honorable life—a life still, and not death. Tears fill our eyes as we think of this magnanimous spirit; unflinching, true to himself, true to others, generous, adorning a lofty station with a virtue that makes labor more honorable than wealth. Courtlandt Palmer was a man to love, to honor, to admire. His loss will be deeply felt; but with grateful memory we will toil to make real the dream of his gentle life—a free, a happy, a united world.

Portland, Or., July 27, 1888.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

COURTLANDT PALMER

By the death of Courtlandt Palmer New York loses one of its best citizens, Freethought a brave supporter, and all mankind a friend. He appears to have stood alone in the peculiar attitude he assumed before the public. No cause was too unpopular to receive his indorsement if he believed it to be a good one. By some sort of instinct he saw the right side of a question and placed himself there at once. In the dispute that divided the Freethinkers of the country at the time of D. M. Bennett's arrest, Mr. Palmer was with Elizur Wright and James Parton and O. B. Frothingham, and a host of clear-seeing men, in denying the constitutionality of the Comstock law under which Bennett was arrested. In all the discussions concerning the policy of the national Liberal organization, both as the Liberal League and as the Secular Union, he stood by the right side, and he was there till the last. Some of his latest letters written to the president of the Union show the loyalty of his heart. As a friend, he never heard "with half believing ear the slander of a foe."

This was Mr. Palmer's strong characteristic, that he was true to friendship and to principle, and unmindful of what the world might say. And for once the world was silenced: the courage of the man commanded its respect. The uprightness and honor of his life were his sufficient shield. Perhaps his wealth and position in society awed the whisperers. At any rate, in spite of his radical views, he was universally held in high esteem.

Elsewhere will be found a brief biography of Mr. Palmer. He was of a genial nature and quiet, unassuming manners. His slight build and rather fashionable dress concealed to some extent his real strength. He died July 23, aged 45. The funeral took place at his late home in New York, July 26. Col. Robert G. Ingersoll delivered the brief address. He said:

"MY FRIENDS: A thinker of pure thoughts, a speaker of brave words, and a doer of generous deeds has reached the silent haven that all the dead have reached, and where the voyage of every life must end. And we as friends, who even now are hastening after him, are met to do the last kind acts that man can do for man, to tell his virtues, to lay with tenderness and tears his ashes in the secret place of rest and peace. Some one has said that in the open hands of death we find only what they gave away. Let us believe that pure thoughts, brave words, and generous deeds can never die; let us believe that they bear fruit and add forever to the well-being of the human race; that a self-denying life increases the moral wealth of men and gives assurance that the future will be better than the past. A free and independent man, one who demanded reasons and demanded freedom, and gave what he demanded; one who refused to be slave or master; such a man was Courtlandt Palmer."

On the same day the body was taken to the Mount Olivet Crematory on Long Island and reduced to ashes.

There is probably no other man in the world who will be missed in so many and varied walks of life. He moved, first, in that portion of New York's population which calls itself the best society; yet he sat also in the councils of the workingmen and advocated their cause. Family relations made him a frequent attendant at church, but his heart was in the work of Freethought and he contributed liberally to it. At a congress of the American Secular Union he once delivered a lecture on "The American Aristocracy." It described his ideal of the true nobility; and of that nobility, founded on worth instead of birth, he was a member by virtue of his brave and exemplary life.

THE ESTABLISHMENT OF GREEK CATHOLICISM.

Roman Catholicism had its Constantine, a bloodthirsty pirate who by the sword of war established Christianity as the religion of the Roman empire. This was some fifteen hundred years ago. From the last Sunday's sermon of Bishop Vladimir, of the diocese of Alaska, having its headquarters and hindquarters in San Francisco, it seems that the establishment of Greek Catholicism in the Russian empire six hundred years later came about in much the same way. The story as told by the bishop is that "Vladimir, the son of Sviatosloff, the first Russian prince with a Slavonic name, was for some time a monster of cruelty and debauchery. In his harem he had eight hundred wives. He killed his brother Yaropolk and seized his dominions, and Yaropolk having some time before murdered his brother Oleg, Vladimir became sole ruler. To his hereditary dominions he added Galicia, or Red Russia, and subjugated some Lithunian and Lyonian tribes. He was powerful and bloodthirsty. He slaughtered the inhabitants of Greek towns by the thousand. At last, in the year 988, his soul troubled him and he made penitence. Suddenly he seems to have been troubled with religious difficulties. He sent ambassadors to bring him reports of the different religions—Jewish, Catholic, Mussulman, and Greek. The last of these beliefs seemed the most satisfactory to him. Vladimir marched south, took the city of Chersonesus, which belonged to the Byzantine emperors, and then sent to demand the hand of Anna, the sister of Constantine, the Greek emperor. His request was granted on condition that he be baptized, which honor was bestowed on him in the year 988—900 years ago. On his return to Kieff he caused the image of Perun, the Slavonic god of thunder, which had been erected on an eminence, to be cast into the river, after having been belabored by the cudgels of his soldiers. After this Vladimir issued a proclamation ordering all the inhabitants of Kieff to proceed on the following day to the banks of the river to receive baptism."

This command was naturally obeyed by those who preferred baptism to decapitation, and so Christianity was planted in Russia. The similarity between the methods of the two evangelists, Vladimir and Constantine, is striking. Each began by killing off such rival members of his family as stood in the way of absolute power, and then obliged all his subjects to be baptized.

The clergy of to-day instance the general acceptance of Christianity as proof of its divine origin. The same argument would establish the divinity of vaccination.

PROPAGANDA METHODS.

The circulation of Liberal papers means the propagation of Liberal ideas.

There have been numerous ways suggested to extend the circulation of this paper. We wish again to call the attention of our readers to them.

First, Mr. Stone's method. He proposes that those who can afford it, to the number of one hundred, shall pledge themselves to furnish the names of ten subscribers at $2 each. This, if carried out, would give us a thousand additional subscribers. The list stands at present:

H. P. Stone, ten names	$20
N. Woolsey, " "	20
N. D. Goodell, " "	20
H. W. Walker, " "	20
W. S. Rodgers, " "	20
S. Littlefield, " "	20
A. H. Schou, fifty " "	100

Many others have given generous lifts, and we are climbing. Mr. Schou expresses regret that he is still alone on the list of fifty.

We are interested to know who will get Mr. Ranford Worthing's $300 corner lot in San Diego, which he offers to the person obtaining the most subscribers to FREETHOUGHT before May 1, 1889.

The list of Gift Subscriptions at $1 each is doing well. We have these additional names of donors to report:

Lyman Smith, Cal.	1
E. E. Mensch, N. M.	1
J. R. Tewksbury, Iowa	1
P. Graves, Or.	1
N. D. Goodell, Cal.	1
W. C. Lyon, Cal.	1
Mrs. Broneer, Cal.	1
M. S. Palmer, Cal.	1
H. P. Replogle, Cal.	1
Mrs. Kate Parker, Cal.	2
Wm. Rashleigh, Cal.	2
Wm. Redfield, Iowa	3

It is gratifying and encouraging to see this interest displayed in our young enterprise. If the interest is sustained, FREETHOUGHT, so far from being anything like a failure, will achieve a phenomenal success.

THE "COOLIE" CLERGYMAN.

About a year ago the church of the Holy Trinity in New York engaged the Rev. E. Walpole Warren, an English minister, to fill its pulpit, and he was imported under contract to perform that service. To test the alien contract law, suit was brought by the United States to exact the prescribed penalty for importing laborers under contract. In the United States Court, July 20, Judge Wallace signed the decree overruling the demurrer of the rector, church wardens, etc., and a judgment of $1,000, the full penalty, and costs has been entered against the church. The case will probably be appealed to the United States Supreme court.

The trial ought to result in the repeal or material modification of the law, which, as it now stands, is absurd and unjust. Its design is to exclude laborers brought hither to compete with American workmen at starvation wages. It is ridiculous to put high-salaried ministers, who are notorious do-nothings, with this class. The clergy do not need protection from the "pauper" preachers of the effete East. There is a chance for broader statesmanship than has hitherto been displayed in the framing of our immigration laws.

ELDER SWEENEY'S PRINTERS, IN TROUBLE.

The Tuesday morning papers contained this item of intelligence:

"Clara H. Alexander and her husband, Frank A. Alexander, engaged in the publication of a religious paper known as the Christian Independent, at 1317 Telegraph avenue, Oakland, were arrested yesterday afternoon on a charge of felony, preferred by Gano Kennedy, who alleges that that firm sent him threatening letters through the United States mail, trying to extort money from him."

We hesitate to believe that the Rev. Geo. W. Sweeney, editor of the Christian Independent, would be a party to this sort of thing, but what can be expected of a clergyman who indorses a fraud like Clark Braden?

THE Monitor exults in the fact that the Franciscan priests have bought the ground where the Hostages, among them some Roman Catholic priests, were shot by the Communists. Which moves the City Front Gazette to remark that if the Franciscan priests were to purchase all the ground where the Roman Catholics massacred the French Protestants on Saint Bartholomew's day they would have to buy all Paris and half of France.

WE hope that the subscribers and friends of FREETHOUGHT will interest themselves in extending its circulation whenever they have an opportunity to do so. Patrons who are in business will find it to their advantage, we believe, to put their advertisements in FREETHOUGHT. We will send our table of advertising rates to any who feel disposed to try the experiment.

MR. A. H. SCHOU, of Oakland, starts for the East this week. He will attend the convention of the American Association for the Advancement of Science at Cleveland, and will go thence to New York and other eastern cities. Mr. Schou will call the attention of the Liberals he meets to the merits of FREETHOUGHT.

JAMIESON is making arrangements with the Silverton, Oregon, Secular Union to meet Elder Braden in debate. Liberals in Oregon, California, and Washington Territory can now avail themselves of his services for courses of lectures and debates. Address W. F. Jamieson, Monte Vista, Colo.

THE pamphlet "Two Years Among the Spirits in the Godless Town of Liberal," by Dr. J. B. Boutan, is out. Spiritualists will probably inquire of the author whether he was "lying then or lying now." Who knows?

WE have just learned of the death of Judge Arnold Krekel, of Kansas City, Mo. Judge Krekel was a prominent figure in the history of his state, and an able advocate of Freethought.

THE excellent likeness of the late Courtlandt Palmer which we present this week is reproduced from the Social Science Review by the Dewey Photo-Engraving Co. of this city.

OREGON friends may obtain blank petitions for the taxation of church property by sending to FREETHOUGHT office for them.

MANY subscribers to FREETHOUGHT whose subscription expired in July are renewing.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The registrar's office will be open for the registration of citizens from August 8 next until October 22, after which latter date registration will be closed.—The turn vereins are holding high carnival.—The yacht Coronet, which left New York for a trip around the world more than four months ago, and which lay at anchor at San Diego from July 6 to 28, started for Honolulu last Saturday.—His Highness, Henry, duke of Orleans, son of the duke de Chartres, grandson of King Louis Philippe, and nephew of the Comte de Paris, was one of the passengers who landed Sunday at this port from the City of Peking.—Rudolph Herold, a pioneer musician, died in this city last week.—The City of Peking brought 962 Chinese.—The Rev. Mr. Sprecher, of San Diego, is invoking the aid of a divorce court. He charges that Mrs. Sprecher is untrue to him.—The Greek church of San Francisco, followed the example of the Russians at Kief, celebrated on Saturday the 900th anniversary of the introduction of Christianity into Russia.—There was a destructive fire at Fresno last Saturday night.—The Rev. Alonzo T. Jones, editor of the American Sentinel, is delivering a novel course of free Sunday evening lectures in the Seventh-day Adventist church in Oakland on "church history." He maintains Catholicism to be old paganism revamped, and evangelical Protestantism to be but a second edition of popery.

A band of lawless characters in Indiana, called "Whitecaps," flogged some Mormon elders and their converts, one of them a woman, last week. The victims were nearly killed. The law-abiding citizens say the "Whitecaps" will have to disband or some of them will be hanged.—John Anderson, of Johnstown, Neb., was buried alive by the caving in of a well about July 18. It took five days to find him, but he was still alive, and after five days more of digging he was hauled out weak but thankful.—President Cleveland has been fishing off Fire Island, N. Y., and had good luck.—General Sherman in his cottage at Nonquitt, is not growing visibly stronger, though he is no worse.—A type-writing contest took place at Cincinnati July 26, between Frank E. McGurrin of Salt Lake, and Louis Traub of Cincinnati. The time occupied was one hour and thirty minutes, in which the report of the judges says Mr. McGurrin scored 8,709 words and Traub 6,938 words, half from dictation and half from manuscript.—This is a translation of what the Chinese News, of New York, says about the Republican candidate for president: "In regard to the Chinese bill, if for principle only, the Chinese Weekly News is heart and soul with Mr. Harrison, as this is a country free not only for the black and white, but the yellow sons of Ham, Shem, and Japheth as well."—"Lewis the Light," a religious crank who imagines himself to be the savior, was arrested in New York last week for disturbing a religious meeting. His name is Greensdale. He was formerly of San Francisco.—Steve Brodie, the New York bridge-jumper, has been in jail for abducting a young girl.—Rev. J. C. Hume, pastor of the Presbyterian church at Babylon, N. Y., was found guilty of assaulting Beckman Bergen, a member of his congregation, by breaking a cane over his head. It was claimed that the young man had insulted the preacher's sister and had aggravated the affront by tapping the pastor on the head with a fan. The preacher resented the action by striking Bergen twice with a cane. The court fined Mr. Hume $5.

A German named Glotten was arrested in London last week for threatening the life of Gladstone.—The nine hundredth anniversary of the introduction of Christianity into Russia was celebrated at Kief July 26 with great pomp.—The cholera is spreading in Hongkong.—American missionaries are reported to be in danger from the excited populace of Corea.—The pope is suffering from liver complaint.—Boulanger is better, being able to go out riding.

BRADEN'S OAKLAND SPONSORS.

From the Chronicle, July 31.

The arrest of Mrs. Clara Alexander and her son, Frank Alexander, yesterday, on charges of felony, is one calculated to create some scandal in the Campbellite church. Frank Alexander is one of the putative partners of the Christian Independent, the organ of the church on the Pacific coast. The complainant in the case is Gano Kennedy, business manager of the journal. The other partner in the concern is Rev. George W. Sweeney, pastor of the local church, who is now on his wedding tour. Kennedy charges that one day last week Mrs. Alexander wrote him a letter informing him that his "whereabouts are known" and that if he did not appear before Friday last at 10 A.M. and hand over the bankbook of the paper he would be criminally prosecuted. Kennedy replied by procuring the arrest, using the letter as evidence of an attempt to extort money from him.

The affairs of the paper appear to be badly mixed and the relations of the leaders of the concern strained. Some months ago Rev. Mr. Sweeney formed the project of consolidating all the church organs of the coast into one, of which he should be the editor. The Independent was the result. Alexander is a printer, and under the prospect of becoming a proprietor, he put in $500, the money having been borrowed from his mother. Rev. Mr. Sweeney, he states, put in $800, and Kennedy put in the Church News and his experience. Mrs. Alexander lives in Fresno and says she is wealthy. She expected to see her boy get rich, but instead he soon sent down for the loan of $25 to pay his rent, and later for $10 to pay his butcher bill. She came up to see what the matter was. She says she found her boy living on half rations, while partner Sweeney was preparing to get married and Kennedy held the bankbook, alone was authorized to receive postal orders, and looked fat and sleek. She demanded to see the books, and found that while her boy's $500 appeared as the capital of the paper, Rev. Mr. Sweeney's $800 appeared as a loan. She called the reverend gentleman's attention to the fact, and he said it was merely a mistake, and rectified the books. She wanted to know more about the finances, but Kennedy would not give her any information. Bills were being presented to the office, and no effort was being made to pay them. So she said her son wrote to Kennedy the letter which has resulted in their arrest. Both Mrs. Alexander and her son use the name of the Rev. Mr. Sweeney without much respect, charging him with several vices, and they say that they have nursed him while he was attempting to kick imaginary snakes. Kennedy could not be found last evening.

A GROVE MEETING AT M'LEAN, N. Y.

From the Ithacan.

The sun came out quite brightly about 9 o'clock, but the heavily charged rain clouds that soon rolled up overhead showed that the forenoon meeting could not possibly be held at the grove, but would have to be adjourned to the Universalist church, which was crowded by 11 o'clock A.M. Numbers had to stand in the halls, although the aisles were filled with extra seats. After some music, Dr. Robinson introduced the speaker, Mr. Jamieson, a man of fine personal appearance, having a ruddy face, tall athletic figure, and ambrosial locks. His qualifications for an orator are a strong, pleasant voice, a copious flow of words, and a goodly array of facts. His faults are occasional extravagance in statement, and tendency to digress from the point under discussion.

Mr. Jamieson began his forenoon address by stating that he wished to be considered a Liberal radical. He believed in every one who wished to be heard having a voice. Were the devil to drop in, he would invite him to a seat on the platform and give Satan a chance to be heard in his own defense. With the speaker, Truth was the foremost object, and he did not speak to please his audience. He tried to remember the martyr Stephen who made people so very angry by indulging in free debate.

Of course discussion implies false opinions, as where there are two, one must needs be wrong. But truth is mighty and will prevail. The speaker averred that the theological world, by terming certain discussion blasphemous or indecent, as effectually gagged free speech as did the old British laws and judges. The address closed with an earnest appeal to all to enjoy freedom of thought to the utmost.

During the intermission between the morning and afternoon meetings, the time passed pleasantly in social intercourse and friendly discussion. The tone of the gathering was neither solemn nor frivolous—a sort of camp-meeting air prevailing. Though many of those present enjoyed private hospitality, several hundred guests were bountifully, and without fuss or disorder, entertained by the well known landlord, Morgan, of the Elm Tree House.

The weather clearing away, the afternoon meeting was held in the grove. The crowd present must have numbered nearly or quite 800, and as the sun shone down through the leaves over the ladies' bright-hued toilets, and the flag hung on the platform, it made the audience cheerful and comfortable.

The afternoon discourse was decidedly radical. (Mr. Jamieson prides himself on going to the root of things.) The speaker devoted himself to showing up the "God-in-the-Constitution" movement, accusing the persons engaged therein of conspiring against American liberty by aiming at the union of church and state. The founders of our government were eulogized, and it was argued that they feared such a movement, and that the clergy, as a body, had never been the advocates of revolutions for freedom. Portions of scripture were read to show that the Bible did not advocate republicanism, hence the clergy were only consistent in favoring imperial governments.

THE BURLESQUE METHOD.

The question appears to be up for discussion whether the mission of the Freethought orator is one of instructing the people in the principles of mental liberty—what Colonel Ingersoll calls "intellectual hospitality"—or whether it is merely to mimic preachers, to be simply funny, and by contortion and quirk and grimace to make the groundlings laugh. Some of those described by the Pittsburgh Truth as "scrubs" have noticed that our great orator is not destitute of wit and that his auditors alternate between smiles and serious thoughts. These so-called "scrubs," having no wit of their own, borrow that of others, add to it the antics of the clown; and having succeeded in amusing a thoughtless element of the crowd, and having discovered that whereas Ingersoll's audiences laugh, and whereas their audiences laugh, have therefore resolved that they are another Ingersoll. They forget the difference between wit and harlequinry. It is generally acknowledged that the clown represents the lowest order of humor, and while he may be tolerated in the circus ring there is a feeling among serious Liberals that he is out of his sphere when he gets upon the Freethought platform. A lecturer distinguished chiefly for his ability to hold an audience through the medium of physical activity gave a course of exhibitions last winter at Salt Lake City, Utah. Financially the enterprise left nothing to be desired on his part, but what the leading Liberals of the place thought about it is set forth in the following memorial addressed to the performer:

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, March 10, 1888.

To Dr. J. L. York: We, the undersigned Liberals of Salt Lake, feeling that a more conservative course than the one adopted by you would result in greater good, therefore ask you to give this subject your most serious consideration. Facial contortions, nasal twang, mimicry, and ungraceful gyrations of the body are not the best methods of convincing intelligent and thinking people. On the contrary, the tendency is to keep the above class away, and the yap and the small boys are taking their place, as was plainly demonstrated at your last lecture. We know that it is not necessary for the Liberal element to have recourse to wholesale abuse. The facts are in our favor, and we recognize in you the ability to present them in their most logical and pleasing manner, without resorting to such crudities. Mormon theocracy, as well as kindred fallacies, can be quite as successfully combated by using argument in lieu of abuse. We have heard you express delight at having been born in a free country and in the full blaze of the nineteenth century, when people are guided by reason and intelligence; why, then, would it not be better to use reason and argument solely, when addressing intelligent people? A little polished levity interspersed throughout a lecture has a tendency to keep your hearers in a good humor and is in good taste and beneficial, but any course adopted that insults the intelligence of the better portion of your audience is in decidedly bad taste. You sometimes seem to lose sight of the fact that the thinking portion of your audience, those most likely to be won over to our cause, are in the transition period of religious thought. Ridicule and sarcasm, as you know, have a tendency to engender bitter feelings, and rivet those whom we would benefit more firmly to their creeds. You can no doubt recall a period in your experience when you were earnestly seeking the truth, when such assaults on your belief would have resulted in fixing you more firmly in the old faith, and have caused you to denounce the one who had insulted your intelligence. The Liberals of this city are agreed that your coming here was most opportune and that the Liberal cause has been advanced, but a feeling of sorrow is being manifested because many of our most influential Liberals are being kept away by this objectionable and extravagant abuse of the various religious elements of our city.

The character of your audience is rapidly changing, and unless a radical change is made in your style the hoodlum element will soon predominate. The frivolous manner in which you sometimes refer to the religious world is fast engendering a feeling of contempt for our cause which will be very difficult to overcome. Already the Salt Lake Tribune, the only paper in Utah to which Liberals can look for help or and sympathy, is taking advantage of the character of your audiences, and your mannerisms also, much to the injury of the cause for which we are working. We cannot afford to furnish the Tribune weapons with which to assail Secularism. We are in a small way furnishing the "sineews of war," and insist that we have a right to be heard. With no unkindly feeling, and recognizing fully your special utilities to our great cause, but feeling nevertheless the absolute necessity of conformity with the line of policy indicated above, we are, Yours sincerely, Here follow the names of twenty-two persons, members of the committee and otherwise instrumental in securing the presence of the magnetic artist.

It would naturally be supposed that a protest of this sort would have the effect of a hint, but it did not, and instead of cultivating a more moderate style the lecturer abused the committee. Furthermore, one of his supporters went into print in the Truth Seeker with the following affidavit:

I reside in Salt Lake City. About two years ago Samuel Putnam organized what was called the Secular Union, and filled about two columns of the Truth Seeker with gush about what had been done for Utah, then left for other fields. He returned in about a year after and found the Secular Union as he had left it, without one member added to the list, and not one single meeting had been held by the officers in charge. He gave us three "nice" lectures—that is, he did not hurt anyone or awaken any dead. He sold some literature and pocketed $50. The same organization—nothing done—no advancement made. Now comes Dr. J. L. York. He gives, per agreement, fourteen lectures, filling the Opera House every Sunday night, and on many occasions hundreds not finding room to stand. The officers of the Secular Union—I mean Samuel Putnam's pets—call a special Star Chamber meeting, then invite Dr. J. L. York to attend. The doctor goes, and to his surprise he is informed that he must stop speaking the truth: "We know you are doing a great work, but you see, we have a living to make, and you are too radical, too red-hot for us. We want a goody-goody man that will say the Methodists are doing a good work, the Baptists, Catholics, Congregationalists, and blue Presbyterians. We want to be all together, then we can have a fricassee Mormon to gladden the nostrils of Jehovah." Now, who are the petitioners for this kind of thing? The officers of the Secular Union. And who are they? I answer, the president, a defunct seer, prophet, and revelator, who had four wives before the law declared otherwise; vice-president and other officers in the same category, and all now Spiritualists. Now, if this part of the proceedings had been the end of the insult to Dr. York, I should not have said one word, but a petition was signed by the Secular Union, with two or three exceptions, and circulated among orthodox churchmen to sign. If this had been all the thing might stop right there. But no; when the Secular Union officers and churchmen found out that Dr. York could not be moved from the straight path of manhood and honor, they, the Secular Union, gave up the Opera House previous to the last lecture, took away the piano, and discharged Dr. York's solo lady singer, without acquainting Dr. York, who paid for her services out of his own pocket. But the friends of Dr. York came to the rescue, paid the rent, put back the piano, got up a fine social, presented Dr. York with a nice gold-headed cane, and a floral gift, the emblem of truth, with eight hundred friends to say goodspeed to Freethought, independent of the petrified fossils at the head of the Utah Secular Union.

W. WELLOCK.

This left the committee in a bad light before the public, and they at once communicated to the press a reply, in which, after giving a resume of Mr. Wellock's complaint, they proceeded to upset that gentleman's statements as follows:

To begin with, Mr. Samuel Putnam did not on the occasion of a visit to this city two years ago organize the Secular Union, and after a year's absence return to discover that its officials had "done nothing," for the simple reason that that gentleman—who, by the by, did a great deal of good here, and paved the way for much of Dr. York's apparent success—did not organize the Secular Union until his last visit, and consequently, although a tolerably quick man in his movements, has had no opportunity up to the present to discover by personal observation what the Secular Union officers may have done.

In the second place, the officers of the Union did not organize a "star chamber," nor indeed, any other kind of a chamber; nor did they get up a "petition" against Dr. York and circulate it either among orthodox or unorthodox churchmen to sign.

They cordially welcomed Dr. York, and started in prepared to stand by him in a fearless exposition of unemasculated Freethought. On his part they simply looked for solid argument, combined with refinement of language and bearing.

For a time, in some respects, they were not disappointed. Dr. York gave some excellent lectures. His peculiar mannerisms were not entirely suppressed, but they were kept within reasonable bounds. His audiences increased, however, and emboldened by this indication of success, he became less careful, and added to his legitimate accompaniments of fun and humor, not only considerable of mimicry and low comedy, but something of sheer grimace, at the same time interlarding otherwise excellent arguments against theological absurdities with much coarse denunciation and abuse.

A remonstrance or appeal to him on this subject was therefore resolved upon, which, after much trimming and pruning, so as to eliminate from it everything of an offensive character, was forwarded to him.

The appeal in question was intended at first to be of a strictly private and confidential character as between themselves and Dr. York; but the committee believing that the addition of the names of a few supporters of the Secular Union would reinforce their sentiments, and tend to show him that they were not alone in their views, a few of such names were added—and they were but few.

The signatures appended to the remonstrance, and falsely described by Mr. Wellock as those of "orthodox churchmen," are the names of as ardent Freethinkers as can be found in the country. Several of them were never churchmen in their lives, and the rest only such a good number of years ago, as was Dr. York, for that matter.

Now, we are not millionaires, nor are we troubled with any remarkable surplus of ready cash, but we will undertake as a committee to pay Mr. Wellock the sum of $10 per head for the names of any orthodox churchmen that he can produce from his own published list. The lie in this particular case can be easily nailed. Every one of the individuals referred to by Mr. Wellock resides in this city, and can be reached through the post, and we will undertake to furnish the exact post-office address of any of them to any person desirous of testing the question.

The remonstrance in question was forwarded to Dr. York by the hand of one of his special friends.

His own statement is that he never read it. He nevertheless felt it to be no less incumbent on him to be just as angry as though he had not only read but thoroughly digested it. From that time on he made a constant practice of publicly assailing the officers of the Union in an indirect way with innuendoes and side-thrusts, asserting, for instance, in a mysterious manner to his audience that "no man could throttle him," etc., much to the bewilderment of those from whom all knowledge of our objections to his course had been carefully withheld.

In regard to the "star chamber" meeting, concerning which the veridant Wellock knows so much, no meeting of the kind described ever occurred. A meeting arising out of, and, of course, following the production of the remonstrance, and to which Dr. York was invited, did occur. But—mark the difference between the fact and Wellock's statement!—it was called solely for the purpose of extending the olive-branch to Dr. York, or in failure of so doing successfully, of ending the difficulty in some other way.

As already stated, Dr. York did attend this meeting, and the kindly words of the preamble were read in his presence. They were, however, scarcely uttered before he arose to his feet, and placing his hat on his head, as intimating his intention to depart forthwith, stated to the committee and friends present that he did not intend to allow them to explain one word to him in reference to "that paper"—meaning the remonstrance. After considerable effort to induce him to change his mind on the subject, he finally departed, having frustrated every effort to carry out the conciliatory purpose of the meeting.

Now a few words in regard to Wellock's further charges.

He tells your readers that the Opera House was given up previous to

Dr. York's last lecture, implying that, contrary to our engagements, Dr. York was left without a hall to speak in previous to the expiration of his agreed course. Nothing of this was done. The Opera House was retained and its expenses fully paid for every night for which he was engaged. Let us refer your readers, and particularly those residing in this city, to evidences of this fact, which many of them will remember.

After the delivery of Dr. York's first two lectures—just prior to his course of twelve, and just previous to his departure for California—a financial meeting was held to ascertain whether sufficient funds could be raised to insure his services for twelve additional lectures; subscription papers were opened on this occasion for the names of donors, and Dr. York not only agreed at this meeting, in the presence of many witnesses, for the exact number of twelve additional lectures, but he suggested himself to the meeting that the written heading at the top of the subscription papers should state that sums promised were for the term of fourteen, for the purpose, as he remarked, of including the expenses of the two lectures already delivered, the rent for which occasions was not then paid.

Furthermore, on the occasion of the delivery of the sixth lecture of the additional twelve, Dr. York made a speech in the Opera House, in which, in the presence of several hundred persons, he reminded them of the fact that the lecture of that evening constituted the sixth, and the exact half of the course, and he took particular pains to impress on them the fact that the remaining "six lectures" would be better than the first. For every one of those remaining six lectures, then stated by him to be due (as, of course, for the whole of the eight preceding ones), the expenses were paid, and for it we have receipts.

The further statement in the same article that we took away Dr. York's piano and discharged his solo singer, is equally misleading. The facts are, that the furnishing of a piano or singer of any kind—much less a solo singer—formed no part of our contract with Dr. York. The creation of a choir, together with the effort to provide and pay for a musical accompaniment, was an unsolicited and purely voluntary act on the part of the executive committee. Long before the conclusion of the course, Dr. York discourteously expressed his indifference to these efforts of the committee to enhance the interest of the meetings, rudely requesting on one occasion that a certain performance by the choir be "cut short," "as the people came to hear the lecture, not the singing."

The piano voluntarily provided by the committee as stated was reluctantly relinquished two evenings before the conclusion of the course, simply because the funds in hand were found inadequate to meet the remaining expenses. Dr. York's solo singer—a personal venture of his own—was not discharged by us, as stated by Wellock, only to the extent that she was discharged by the absence of the piano, without the aid of which she professed to be unable to sing.

The personal treatment of Dr. York by the committee should be understood in this connection. They undertook to raise among themselves, and otherwise collect, the full amount necessary for the use of the Opera House, and also for the payment of all his advertisements, turning over to him for his own personal use the whole receipts at the door. In this way they personally raised and attended to the expenditure, on account of his course, of a sum amounting to about $400, every cent of which he would otherwise have had to pay out of his own pocket.

By this generous arrangement—to use Mr. Wellock's choice phrase—he not only "pocketed" $50 for three lectures, as he charges Mr. Putnam with having done, but he "pocketed" from $50 to $70 per night for every evening of the whole of his last course.

While thus fairly treated by the committee, the question next in order is, How did Dr. York treat this body, who undertook and executed these responsibilities on his account?

The answer can be given in a few words. No sooner were the subscription lists, headed by themselves, well started, with every indication that the necessary amounts would be forthcoming, than he acted as though he had no further use for them. He was engaged to lecture under the auspices of the Secular Union, of which they were in this city the representatives, but, save and except in the case of the president of the Union, who was absent nearly the whole of Dr. York's engagements, he ignored them almost from the beginning, selecting any person he pleased to preside over the meetings, without any regard to the order of the organization constituted before his arrival.

Wellock's winding up statements as to the "coming of Dr. York's friends to the front," urged by a desire, as he represents it, to rescue this poor man, deprived of hall, piano, and solo singer, and give him a grand ovation as a testimonial of their independence of the executive committee, is just as reliable as all of his preceding assertions.

A meeting, with all the accompaniments of flowers, gold-headed cane, and a request for his return, it is true, did take place; but it was engineered by Dr. York himself, who dictated the order of the whole of the proceedings, including the request for his return, and mainly carried into execution by two characterless individuals, previously altogether unknown to Utah Liberalism.

The ovation in question was no indignation meeting on the part of the Liberals of Salt Lake City as against the officers of the Secular Union, as implied by the veracious Wellock. Nine-tenths of those attending had no knowledge of any difficulty existing between the committee and Dr. York; and it was generally supposed that the whole affair was got up under their direction; indeed, they were personally applied to for contributions thereto.

In reference to Mr. Wellock's attempted slur on the character of W. S.

Godbe, the president of the Utah Secular Union, a man who we will venture to assert was never either a "defunct" or a living "prophet, seer, and revelator," to our own knowledge, and with whom, upon the wife question, we should take great pleasure in comparing the record of Mr. Wellock himself; this gentleman is known to the limit of a circle extending far beyond Utah itself as one of the distinguished "self-made men of America"—one who has done more than any other man to develop and aid the industrial development of this territory. This gentleman was elected without his knowledge to the office of president of the Union as a small tribute of respect to him as one whose money erected the first free platform in the territory, and who has in addition thereto spent tens of thousands of dollars in aiding the extension of Freethought principles.

Wellock's further implied charge that "all the rest of the officials of the Union are in the category" of former polygamists, and in addition thereto are all Spiritualists, exhibits the reckless character of the man. No one of them ever was a polygamist, and the two or three only who are Spiritualists were chosen as officials of the Union simply because of their well-known working qualities.

The various side-issues raised by Mr. Wellock draw the discussion away from the real question, which is this: Are "facial contortions, nasal twang, mimicry, and ungraceful gyrations of the body the best methods of convincing intelligent and thinking people?" That Dr. York employs these methods is not denied. His exuberance of gesture is well known. His backward and forward kicks and his habit of walking about the stage with a coat-tail under each arm, in order to illustrate some deep scientific truth, are familiar to all who have seen him deliver a lecture. We understand that others, observing his success in attracting crowds, have announced their intention of trying the "funny lay." In the interests of the cause, we hope they will refrain. Talmage, Sam Jones, and the Salvation Army will make themselves ridiculous, as usual, and the circus will be around sometime during the summer. In the mean time a calm and judicial style of delivery on the part of our orators will be appreciated in the way of diversity.

ZENO.

BOTH SIDES OF THE QUESTION.

At the regular semi-monthly meeting of the British-American Club last week the time was devoted to a debate between Judge Maguire and Senator Days, the former championing absolute free trade and the latter the highest protection consistent with life.

Judge Maguire believed that protection was a selfish policy, for it fostered the strong and crushed the weak. He did not believe in taxing one man to support another. Protection in America had built up some industries to the exclusion of all others. People should be allowed to follow whatever calling they saw fit.

Senator Days believed that cheap goods were an evil. Protection means to stop the influx of cheap goods. He read a roll of names a yard long of men who had favored protection in the past. He wanted everything made in America, even it could be obtained cheaper from abroad. He was for high Bessemer steel rails, and a high tariff. He believed in building a Chinese wall around America and buying nothing of other nations.

Judge Maguire, in conclusion, said that he was glad that Senator Days had referred to China as a model country of protection, where wages are only ten cents per day.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made these lecture appointments from Aug. to October. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Pasco, W. T. . . . .	Aug. . . . . 1-2	Salt Lake City, Utah . . . . .	Aug. . . . . 26
Cheney, . . . . .	Or. . . . . 3, 4	Murray, . . . . .	" . . . . . 27
Waverly, . . . . .	" . . . . . 5, 6	Heber, Utah . . . . .	" . . . . . 28, 29
Rockford, . . . . .	" . . . . . 7	Denver, . . . . .	Col. . . . . Sept. . . . . 2
Spokane Falls, . . . . .	" . . . . . 8, 9, 10	Seward, . . . . .	Neb. . . . . 5-6
Colfax, . . . . .	" . . . . . 11, 12	Wahoo, . . . . .	" . . . . . 7-8
Walla Walla, W. T. . . . .	" . . . . . 14	Lincoln, . . . . .	" . . . . . 9
Pendleton, Or. . . . .	" . . . . . 15	Omaha, . . . . .	" . . . . . 10
Union, . . . . .	Or. . . . . 16	Creston, . . . . .	Iowa . . . . . 11
Emmett, . . . . .	Idaho, . . . . . 18	Ottumwa, . . . . .	" . . . . . 12
Boise City, . . . . .	Idaho, . . . . . 19	West Union, . . . . .	" . . . . . 16-17
Ogden, . . . . .	Utah, . . . . . 21	Chicago, . . . . .	Ill. . . . . 23
Morgan, . . . . .	" . . . . . 22	Pittsburgh, . . . . .	Pa. . . . . 30
Coalville, . . . . .	" . . . . . 23	Secular Union Congress, Oct. 5, 6, 7, 8
Park City, . . . . .	" . . . . . 25

MR. COURTLANDT PALMER.

The following biographical sketch is from the Social Science Review of Feb. 18, 1888.

Courtlandt Palmer was born in New York city, March 25, 1843. His father was a native of Stonington, Connecticut, and was the descendant of a family that settled in this country early in the seventeenth century. •Leaving that state in his boyhood, he went to New York city, where, by his own efforts, he soon established himself in a position of wealth and standing. The mother of Courtlandt Palmer was one of the old Knickerbocker stock, the daughter of Mr. Richard Suydam.

He finished his school education in Mount Washington Institute, and from there went to Columbia College, where he remained until the middle of his junior year, when, on account of ill-health, he had to leave that institution. After that he entered Williams College, but eventually graduated from the law school of Columbia College.

In his youth and during the earlier part of his married life he was a member of the old Dutch Reformed church on Washington Square, but almost unconsciously to himself a new direction was given to his thought by the chance perusal of Herbert Spencer's little work on education, which, in the non-theological training its method imparted, in the development of head, heart, and hand, presented a complete contrast to his old theological conceptions of mental and moral advancement. The next work that engrossed his attention was Dr. John W. Draper's "History of the Intellectual Development of Europe." That book helped to confirm in him the impressions which had been previously produced by the other one. Taking a sociological point of view, it represented the course of human events—not as under the sway of an over-ruling and capricious providence, but as controlled by eternal and immutable laws, as vigorous and irrevocable in the birth, life, and death of a nation as in those of an individual.

The next Liberal experience of Courtlandt Palmer that needs to be noted was his introduction into and his connection with the New York (now the Manhattan) Liberal Club, where every Friday evening, some theme, political, religious, economic, or otherwise, was presented and freely discussed. The all-sidedness of that society was to him almost a revelation. It taught him that other men, both of brain and heart, had ample reasons for the faith that was in them, and for the doctrines they advocated. Gradually, through the influence of this club, and through his further study of such works as those of Buckle, Huxley, Tyndall, Haeckel, Buechner, and, above all, of Goethe, Spencer, and Comte, Courtlandt Palmer, with the aid of his philosophic friend, Mr. T. B. Wakeman, was enabled to formulate his creed as the Agnostic one of science, and his living faith as the religion of humanity.

Having thus found his moral latitude and longitude, the next point with Mr. Palmer was how to live up to his convictions. To that end he connected himself with, and was elected treasurer of the Freethinkers' Association of the state of New York, at whose annual conventions he was a frequent speaker. He also identified himself with the National Liberal League, now called the American Secular Union, the presidency of which he occupied for one year as the successor of Col. R. G. Ingersoll. The main object of that association was the complete separation of church and state. It also demanded and advocated the non-exemption of churches from taxation, the secularization of the Sabbath, the substitution of simple affirmation in the courts in place of the judicial oath, the prohibition of the Bible in public schools, and the abolition of national or state appropriations of public money for the support of chaplaincies in legislatures, etc.

In this, the American Secular Union, Mr. Palmer vigorously aided the efforts that society made to sunder and keep church and state separate, and to resist the ecclesiastical attempt made by means of Anthony Comstock in the attack upon the integrity of the United States post-office. Under the plea of preventing the transmission of immoral literature, it was felt that his proceedings were direct attacks upon the liberty of thinking and writing, to which the liberty of mailing was a necessary accompaniment. Anthony Comstock's effort was therefore condemned by the Union, on the ground of its unconstitutionality—its impracticability—and also as involving a sort of immoral and inquisitorial paternalism, quite foreign to the genius of republicanism.

The above mentioned experiences, it may well be assumed, formed the preparation for what, we believe, Courtlandt Palmer regards as the principal work of his life, viz: "The formation and establishment of the Nineteenth Century Club" in New York, the aims and objects of which are thus defined by him, as its president:

"The Nineteenth Century Club has no constitution and no by-laws, its policy being to remain totally unhampered. . . While it will promulgate no 'ism' as its own, it proposes to discuss every 'ism' that is interesting the minds or agitating the souls of men in these days. . . . The basic idea of it is to surround intellectual freedom with the refined atmosphere of the drawing room. To this end the woman element is indispensable, and the membership therefore consists of both sexes."

The club has now been five years in existence, and every way has proven a grand success. About two years ago President Palmer opened its session with an address from which, in order to show that it has been true to its mission, the following extracts are submitted. After welcoming the new members, and thanking the original members of the club, more especially the ladies, for their prompt attendance, he said:

"This club no longer needs vindication. Its record is at once its defense and its boast, and that record is before the world. Radical and conservative have been alike welcome in its debates. On the widest range of subjects the ablest speakers have appeared. Many of these have been scholars of national, and some of world-wide fame.

"Freedom in this club implies freedom of discussion, if only it be courteously conducted. Many of you will hear views expressed on this platform utterly antagonistic to your own. You are, therefore, one and all, as you enter this forum, to come armed with the shield of toleration. The merest glance will show you that toleration, based on courtesy, is now an urgent need; for our age, it must be admitted, is an age of conflict in ideas.

"The question now arises—Shall this conflict to which I am alluding (the conflict of religious beliefs) be fought out upon the field of war, or in peaceful clash upon the platforms of such clubs as this? for that, I believe, is the main issue before our civilization. In that question the lofty mission of this club becomes revealed. Our aim is peace through peaceful strife. Our hope is in the survival of the fittest, the moral fittest, as we set conviction against conviction in the struggle for existence. Our aspiration is for a finer taste, a deeper insight, a wider love, a more heroic will, that we may 'judge righteous judgment,' and come more truly 'to love our neighbor as ourselves.'"

Mr. Palmer is medium in size, being not more than five feet eight inches in height. He has light brown hair and a fair complexion. In politics for a long time he voted the Republican ticket; latterly, however, he has been connected with the Anti-Monopoly League, having been elected one of the directors of the central board, and chairman of the third assembly district. He has often spoken at labor meetings in favor of what may be called a co-operative, as opposed to the present competitive system. His advocacy of a commutation of the sentence of the Anarchists will be understood by those who peruse the interview of our reporter with him published in a late issue of the Social Science Review. He is also deeply interested in favor of technical and industrial education, and lately contributed $10,000 to the support of that cause. Notwithstanding the universality of his labors in the field of reforms, Mr. Palmer has rarely known what it is to enjoy good health, and, but a short while ago, in May, 1886, he was obliged to go to Europe in order to recruit his strength.

In conclusion, let us state that though born on the conservative side of the fence, amid the giddy whirl of fashionable society, Courtlandt Palmer's sympathies have ever been exhibited on the side of Liberal reforms now agitating all civilized countries. Furthermore, let us add that we have reason to believe that it has long been his desire that he (and others like him) might become the link or bridgeway to bring radicalism and so-called respectability to a better understanding the one with the other. Though the time may not yet be ripe for us to attain the absolute religious freedom which Mr. Palmer asserts to be the most important of all the reforms, yet he is justified in claiming that the matching of thought against thought, and conviction against conviction, together with the reasonable commingling of the knowledge of the people, will form a preparation of the soil on which a tree of morality, science, and religion can be planted, beneath the spreading branches of which our race may find that repose which human beings have so long and ardently desired.

COURTLANDT PALMER.

NO WORD CAME.

The Examiner of this city printed the following last Monday morning: Courtlandt Palmer and Stephen Pearl Andrews had an agreement that the one who died first was, if possible, to communicate from the spirit land with the survivor. A year was to be allowed for the communication to be had, and in case they did not the conclusion was to be that the theory of spiritualistic intercourse was false.

Andrews was a Spiritualist, Palmer an unbelieving investigator. He and Andrews, who was commonly called the "Pantarch," together founded the Colloquium, a society of philosophers of divers views, to meet for discussion. That was the origin of the Nineteenth Century Club, of which Palmer was the president and chief financial sustainer.

The two men were anxious to settle the question while, at least, one lived as to whether the spirits of the dead communicated with the living, so they made the agreement described. Each memorized a sentence, and this was, if possible, to be sent by the one who died to the one who yet lived through some medium hundreds of miles away. Nobody else was to know what the words were.

Andrews died last autumn,* and Palmer, although without faith, awaited for the promised message. It did not come. The "Pantarch" was frequently represented as speaking through various mediums here and there, but he did not mention Palmer or the compact.

Not long before Courtlandt Palmer's death he talked with several friends about the unkept promise made by Stephen Pearl Andrews and declared that if the expiration of the year did not bring the proof to the contrary, he should set down Spiritualism as a sheer delusion. As he died before the end of the year and without, so far as is known, disclosing the test sentence to anybody, this attempt by two members of the Nineteenth Century Club to ascertain the truth of Spiritualism comes to nothing.

CONSTRUCTIVE LIBERALISM.

MEETINGS, AND HOW TO MAKE THEM INSTRUCTIVE AND ENTERTAINING.

Our Liberal friends are apt to think that the only way to keep up an interest in our meetings is to secure able and popular lecturers. No greater mistake could be made. To listen occasionally to good lectures is a privilege and a luxury, but to indulge in them as a steady diet, their effect will be imbecility and decay. Our object is not to produce a generation of indolent, passive, admirers of other men's work, but to secure an army of clear-headed, robust thinkers, readers, speakers, and workers. To accomplish this each one must have something to do, and they should be very sure that they have the fidelity to do it. An active, conscientious, working Freethinker is above all price. An indolent, aimless, passive Freethinker is of very little use. We think that the churches are laboring to disseminate and perpetuate the errors and superstitions of a barbarous age, and that those errors and superstitions produce most pernicious effects in society, and cause the enactment of laws that seriously interfere with our rights as citizens. We believe that when crude errors and superstitions give place to truth and knowledge, the narrow clanishness of sects will be succeeded by a cordial fellowship; that the arrogance of dogmatism will give place to the conscientious study of truth; and the impudence of self-righteousness to the unpretending modesty of true charity. When this is achieved we may expect to be relieved from the oppressive laws enacted at the dictation of priests that now infringe on the rights of all outside the church who refuse to be either bigots or hypocrites.

Our meetings will be most effective in promoting our cause, and most instructive to others, when we make them most useful to ourselves. In order to disseminate truth we must first obtain it. Our meetings should be schools for the study of truth, as well as for the exposure of error; and here every individual should bear a part. Each one may be, at the same time, both a leader and learner. Every Freethinker should study the Bible carefully, thoroughly, critically, that he may know just what it is. He needs also to know the history of the Christian church, its changes, modifications, and characteristics in the different periods of its history; the history of its doctrines and their origin; how much of them is taken from Judaism, and how much from paganism; how much from Jesus and how much from Paul, and how much from the evil devices of the priests and monks. Even a brief study of Christianity will show how very little of what is now called Christianity was ever taught by Jesus Christ.

We should also study the present union of "church and state" in our own country; how much our politics and our legislation are directed by the church; how largely it draws on the state for funds, and how extensively it furnishes insane persons, criminals, and paupers for the state to care for. Any one of these branches will furnish a rich field for study and discussion, and each may be taken up in turn. When we come together at our meetings, with pleasant countenances, earnest purpose, and cordial greetings—all being prompt to time—nothing is pleasanter than a prompt and joyful song. It should come—not reluctantly, unwillingly, and after much hesitation, persuasion, and delay—but spontaneously, cheerfully, and as the natural expression of earnest, happy hearts. The value of music cannot be overestimated. It soothes, harmonizes, exalts, inspires, and stirs the energies to sublime effort. All nations, through all time, have felt the power of music. The battle songs of Cromwell's men, the war songs of the savage, and the martial bands that lead great armies, have all testified to the charm and power of music; and the churches make it a very prominent attraction. Freethinkers should always, if possible, secure an abundance of music, and it should always be cheerful and stirring.

Then, after one or two short addresses, the time may be very profitably and pleasantly spent in reading or reciting short selections, five-minute speeches, relating appropriate anecdotes, etc.; and all enlivened by frequent music. Let those who can speak be appointed to that duty, and always with the understanding that speeches must be short, earnest, and never ill-natured.

For selections, a living fountain of them can be found in Emerson, Ingersoll, Alcott, Whittier, and a host of others, as well as in all the Freethought papers. Any one, male or female, can find a selection and read it, and the benefit to the individual who reads or recites is very great. This food and exercise for the mind creates a livelier interest in important questions, enlarges the range of knowledge, and gives increased facility in thinking, reading, and speaking. Above all, it cultivates in the individual a higher, purer, and stronger character. In all these exercises it is important that beginners should feel that they are among friends who are ready to help them, and not among critics who are looking for defects. Meetings conducted in this manner can not fail to be both entertaining and profitable. A small but regular contribution should be made, a portion of which should be expended in choice Freethought literature for circulation among thoughtful people who are not afraid to read.

An organization working on some such plan will be independent of outside aid, and much more intelligent and prosperous than one depending on distinguished lecturers. Then when good lecturers come from abroad, they will find a field all ready for the harvest; a field in which they can accomplish ten times as much as they can in places that entirely depend on them; a field, too, in which it will be a luxury for them to work, while the association will enjoy the luxury of their help. The plan here proposed—or some other plan quite as good—is perfectly practicable in every locality where an organization is formed, and if carried on faithfully, the nucleus will grow till it can have a hall and library of its own, where Freethought and free speech is at home. If all our Unions would rouse themselves to action as they should, following the example of Boston, Chicago, Waco, Silverton, and a few others, the Secular Union would become a power, and the five "percent" of our population known as "the evangelical churches," would no longer dictate legislation for the "ninety-five per cent" of the people. Ignorance, superstition, and bigotry are organized forces in the church, and they act in unison. Can not Freethought, truth, and light be also organized and act in unison? Let us try it more vigorously than we have yet done.

*Stephen Pearl Andrews died May 21, 1886.—ED. FREETHOUGHT.

The history of the Christian church should be especially studied; its vices and its virtues, its sincerity and hypocrisy; the ignorance and crimes, as well as the sincerity, of the men who made the creeds; its devotion to superstition and its fiendish cruelty should all be known in order to form a just estimate of the institution that claims to be the repository of all knowledge and virtue. In this study, Dr. Draper's work on the "Intellectual Development of Europe," also his "Conflict Between Science and Religion," and Lecky's "History of European Morals," will be found to possess a flood of light and a fascinating interest.

And last, as the crowning glory of our acquisitions, our associations should be schools for the study and practice of virtue, and for the development of better types of character than are usually found either in or out of the churches.

We should make our meetings more useful and attractive to adults than the churches; more instructive and entertaining to the young than the Sunday-school. This can easily be done if all will join in it.

J. W. NORTH.

THE DECLARATION AND GOD.

From the Portland Oregonian.

A communication addressed to me in your issue of July 18, with regard to the Declaration of Independence and the Nine Demands of Liberalism, requires notice. In order that the question may be fully understood I herewith state the Nine Demands of Liberalism exactly as they are:

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

Your correspondent asks the following questions:

1. Does not the Declaration of Independence say: "When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for the people to dissolve the political bonds which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth that separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them," declare that God is the author of nature and of the laws of nature; the author of the laws of national origin, action, and life? Was not the first utterance of the American people as a nation a recognition of the existence and attributes of God that he is the great first-born of all things?

To this I reply: The Declaration of Independence was written by Deists. Paine, Washington, Franklin, and Jefferson were Deists and not Christians, and naturally their sentiments found casual expression in the Declaration. But these sentiments contain nothing vital. Drop out the word God, and all that might refer to such a being, and not one of the great ideas of that immortal document would be weakened. The reference to God is merely incidental. It is a part of the rhetoric of the Declaration, but its essential meaning derives not a particle of force from any theological idea that it contains. Its authors were not metaphysicians, but statesmen. They were not discussing theology, but politics.

The Declaration does not say that God is the author of nature any more than it declares nature is the author of God. The phrase, "Nature's God," might, for all the Declaration says to the contrary, mean a product of nature, as well as a cause of nature. The Declaration does not decide this subtle question, but I would not be at all surprised if the fathers of the republic would agree with Ingersoll that "an honest God's the noblest work of man."

The Declaration does not declare that God is the author of the laws of nature, nor hint at any such supernatural origin. Without doubt the writers of the Declaration believed the laws of nature to be eternal. The Declaration does not declare that God is the author of the "laws of national origin, action, and life." It is entirely silent on the matter.

The Declaration does not recognize any attributes of God; only his existence. I suppose your correspondent is ignorant of the distinction between existence and attributes. The Declaration simply admits existence, but says not one word about attributes.

The Declaration does not say that God is a "thing," or a "born thing," or a "first-born of all things." I must confess that the theology of your correspondent is perfectly original. In all my reading and study—and I was three years at a theological seminary—I never heard God called a "thing" and a "born thing" at that. What marvelous philosophy! Out of what egg was God born, and who laid the egg? Was there a hen before the egg in order that God, a "thing," might be "born?" I can confidently affirm that the authors of the Declaration never had any such theology—and who has, except your correspondent? If Christians wish the intellectual respect of the world they must not select for "champion" a man who calls God a "thing" and a "born thing." I wonder what there was before God was born.

Again the question is asked:

2. In the declaration: "We hold it to be self-evident that all men are created free and equal," does not the Declaration of Independence recognize God as the creator of man and base all other ideas in regard to man on that idea?

I answer that the Declaration does not recognize God as the creator of man, the Declaration does not say who the creator was. It might be nature, matter, force, for anything the Declaration says to the contrary.

Again the question is put:

3. In the declaration: "We hold it to be self-evident that all men are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights—life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," does not the Declaration of Independence recognize God as the author of all human rights, all political rights? Does it not declare that governments are instituted to preserve their rights, not to bestow them? That neither government nor the people, whose consent gives to government its just powers, can bestow them? That God alone can do this?

I answer that the Declaration does not recognize that God is the author of all human rights. It does not say that he is the author of political rights. The Declaration does not say that God creates rights. Has not God, if there is one, rights? If so, who made them? Are not rights eternal like the relations of mathematics? The Declaration does not declare that God can bestow rights, any more than it declares that governments can bestow rights. Rights exist in the nature of things; and the Declaration says nothing to the contrary of this.

Again, it is asked:

4. In the declaration: "We appeal to the Supreme Judge of the world," does not the Declaration of Independence recognize God as the judge of nations, governments, and men in political, governmental, and national life and action? That nations, governments and men are responsible to God as their judge for all political, governmental, and national life and action; and will be rewarded or punished by him for such life and action?

I answer: The Declaration does not say that God is the supreme judge. The supreme judge might be humanity itself as well as God for anything the Declaration says to the contrary.

The Declaration does not say that nations or men are responsible to God, and it does not say that nations or men will be rewarded or punished by God. It says nothing whatever upon the matter.

Again your correspondent asks:

In the declaration: "With a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence," does not the Declaration of Independence recognize God's control over nations and men in political, governmental, and national life and action as the source of their success and prosperity, and appeal to him for protection and success in political, governmental, and national life and action?

I answer: The Declaration does not recognize God's control over nations and men. It does not say who the "Divine Providence" is. It might, for all the Declaration says to the contrary, be the wisdom of humanity, or "the consensus of the competent."

The Declaration does not say that God is the source of the success and prosperity of nations or men, and it does not appeal to God for protection or for success. They do say, "For the support of this Declaration, we mutually pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor." They were self-reliant.

Your correspondent brings me to the book. We stand by the book—no more, no less. It teaches not the mass of theology which your correspondent would put into it. Its authors were far too wise to load it down with such metaphysics.

The Declaration is a political document. Its authors were Deists, and they wrote as Deists incidentally, not essentially. When they came afterward to formulate the ideas of that Declaration into the Constitution "to form a more perfect union," they, no doubt, considered the question, and that the union might be "more perfect," omitted entirely the name of God in the organic law of the land. The fathers of the republic fully answer all the questions of your correspondent. It was their purpose to form a purely Secular covenant in accordance with the Nine Demands of Liberalism.

Nothing but Deism can be made out of the Declaration of Independence. There is not a particle of Christianity in it, not a reference to the Bible or to Christ. If we take the Declaration as a legal document it would exclude all particular religions from the government, and Christianity would have to go with the rest. The utmost logic of the Declaration could only make this a nation of Deists like Voltaire, Paine, and other great Infidels. It would not make it Christian, and the Nine Demands of Liberalism would thus be in harmony with the Declaration. In contracting a treaty with Tripoli in the year 1797, George Washington, president, said: "The government of the United States is not in any sense founded upon the Christian religion." President Woolsey of Yale College, in 1873, said: "In the United States Christianity has as little to do with the law, and the law with Christianity, as possible. The Constitution of the American government would require little if any change to adapt it to a nation of Mohammedans."

President Garfield, in Congress in 1874, said: "The divorce between church and state ought to be absolute. It ought to be so absolute that no church property any where in any state in the nation should be exempt from equal taxation, for if you exempt the property of any church organization, to that extent you impose a tax upon the whole community."

President Grant said in 1875, "Let the church and state be forever separate."

These are sufficient answers to your correspondent. The Constitution of the United States, President Washington as official head of the government, president Woolsey of Yale College, President Garfield, and President Grant, wise and just representatives of the American republic, all declare against your correspondent and place him in the wrong—and there is not a single signer of the Declaration of Independence but would scout the ridiculous twistings of these Deistic expressions in which your correspondent indulges. The civilization of to-day forbids the classing of men and women as "things." They are persons. But your astute correspondent classes God as a "thing," and places him below the legal status of man and woman. Men and women are "born," but they are not "born things," as this marvelous theologian declares that God is. If his interpretations of the Bible are like his interpretations of the Declaration of Independence, then, beyond a doubt, he can prove from scripture that "the moon is made of green cheese." SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

MOSES WILL CONDUCT A CAMPAIGN.

From the New York Star.

A new political party is to be put into the field. Externally it will be only a welding together of Labor Unions, Prohibitionists, Greenbackers, and Female Suffragists. In reality its roots will run much deeper. It is being organized by Messrs. Philbrook and Dean, who conduct the "Church of Nature" at No. 271 Dearborn street, Chicago, and it expects to hold a great convention in the Auditorium about the middle of August.

Circulars announcing this important movement have been furnished to the press. They advocate the nomination of a "candidate who will favor a change in the policy of the government, check the power of monopoly, support the cause of prohibition, gradually change the banking system, and grant equal suffrage to women."

Mr. Dean sat in his office. A litter of correspondence lay around him. The works of his partner were on a shelf above him and seemed to preside over his labors. They are entitled, "Mating in Marriage," "What and Where is God?" "Work of Electricity in Nature," and, greatest of all, "The Spirit Control of People."

"A wonderful man Mr. Philbrook," said Mr. Dean. "I think, sir, that he has the most delicate organization in the world for receiving spirit impressions."

"What about the new political party?"

"That is a great movement, is it not? We have had expressions of sympathy from every part of the country. Delegates will come to our convention from all but the Southern states. We shall, perhaps, make less noise than the Republican convention. But our work will be quite as thorough. And, what is more, we shall elect our nominee."

"Then, neither Harrison nor Cleveland will have a chance?"

"Not a ghost of a chance."

"How did the movement originate?"

"Mr. Philbrook received a spirit communication from Stephen A. Douglas. I have it here."

"Does Stephen A. Douglas, as a spirit, write letters?"

"He communicates with Mr. Philbrook. And the signature of his letters is just as he wrote it in life. I was a postmaster formerly and thousands of Douglas's letters passed through my hands. I could tell his signature in an instant."

"What was the communication?"

"Simply this. He bade us form a new party. He said that the old parties had no hold on the people. He promised us the support of the spirit world in forming the new party. 'Remember,' said he, 'that we spirits are with you; we are neither Republicans nor Democrats; we want a new party.' To this end he bade us send circulars to the press announcing this new party, and desired us to distribute a large number of copies of a paper called Liberty Library, containing a photograph and biographical sketch of Mr. Philbrook."

"Will Mr. Philbrook be the nominee?"

"Mr. Philbrook is an extraordinary man," said his partner, evasively.

"Would he make a good president?"

"Excellent."

"Have many other spirits promised to support the movement?"

"Lincoln is with us."

"How do you know?"

"Lincoln has been importuning Mr. Philbrook ever since last November to form the new party. We count on his powerful aid."

"Is General Harrison's grandfather on your side?"

"We hardly expect his active assistance. Family reasons may estop him."

"How about the latest generation of statesmen?"

"We have most of them."

"Garfield, for instance?"

"We have not heard from Garfield. Garfield was a bitter partisan. At the same time, as soon as they enter the spirit world, most statesmen throw off their party ties. Some who were rabid in their lifetime are with us in this movement."

"How will the spirits hold the convention?"

"They will control the delegates. Thus, a delegate from California may be Abraham Lincoln. A delegate from New York may be Stephen A. Douglas. Each spirit will select a delegate, and will speak through that delegate's mouth."

"Will the spirits be controlled by other spirits?"

"Certainly. The spirits have a regular organization like an army. The general gives orders to the colonel, the colonel to the captain."

"Are Lincoln and Douglass generals?"

"Oh, dear, no. Have you not read Mr. Philbrook's greatest work? Lincoln and Douglas are both, I think, controlled by Moses."

"Then Moses will take an active part in the convention?"

"Quite active. We shall model the party on the lines of the Children of Israel. The party organization of Moses will be ours. Mr. Philbrook has obtained this organization direct from Moses himself."

"How about Isaiah and Jeremiah?"

"They will be there."

"And Daniel?"

"Probably."

"And the minor prophets at large?"

"I think Mr. Philbrook has heard from them."

"And you expect success?"

"We are sure of it. How can we fail when we have the support of the entire spirit world? We shall nominate our candidate by acclamation."

"And that candidate?"

"There can be only one," said Mr. Dean, looking proudly at the shelf where his partner's works reposed.

JUDGE ARNOLD KREKEL.

From the Kansas City Times.

Judge Arnold Krekel was one of the oldest federal judges in the country, both in age and in the length of time he had served upon the bench. He was born near Langenfeld, on the Rhine, in Prussia, 73 years ago, and came to this country with his parents in 1832, and had since resided in Missouri, where his father settled. Before emigrating he had received a village school education, to which he added three years of instruction in St. Charles College. Among other studies he took up mathematics, and at an early age became a surveyor. He was once a United States deputy surveyor, and was twice elected county surveyor of St. Charles county. In 1842 he was elected justice of the peace, and soon after began the study of law. He was admitted to the bar in 1844, and shortly thereafter was elected county attorney, an office he held a number of years. In 1850 he established the St. Charles Democrat, and was for a considerable time its editor. In 1852, Mr. Krekel, still a young man, was elected to the Missouri state legislature, and while a member of that body voted for the first railroad appropriation granted by this state. When the civil war broke out he enlisted in the Home Guards of St. Charles county, out of which he organized a regiment for actual service. He was elected colonel and served throughout the rebellion. He was a member of the constitutional convention of 1865, became its president, and February 11, 1865, signed the ordinance of emancipation, by which the slaves of Missouri were set free. It was while the constitutional convention was in session that President Lincoln appointed him one of the federal judges—March 9, 1865. His was one of the last names sent to the Senate by the martyred president. The western district of Missouri, to which he was assigned, had then but one division, court being held at Jefferson City. In 1879 the district was divided and he moved to this city, which had been made one of the places of holding court. The lawyers of Kansas City all speak in the highest terms of Judge Krekel's ability. He has made a name, they say, which will exist as long as law. Some of his decisions have taken rank as authority, and have been accepted as final. Noteworthy among these have been his decisions in cases of bankruptcy. Bankruptcy was his specialty, and it is said that the bankrupt law as it exists to-day is more the result of Judge Krekel's work than of any other judge in the country. In all bankruptcy cases his decisions were accepted as a finality, and there was no thought of an appeal. His death was due to general debility. His passing away was peaceful and painless, and at his bed-side at the final moment were his grief-stricken wife and daughters. He fully realized that his end might be near, and spoke of it several times to his still hopeful wife. He requested her not to wear mourning, saying that death was as natural as birth, and that the emblems of mourning were unnecessary and useless. He was very much averse to ceremony, and requested that the last rites be as simple as possible. It was his wish that he might be laid to rest at St. Charles, where his first wife and two children are buried, and thither the remains will be taken. Although of Catholic antecedents, Judge Krekel was a pronounced Agnostic, and his children and immediate relatives hold liberal religious views.

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONGRESS A. S. U.

OFFICIAL CALL.

To the Local Secular Unions, Life, Charter, and Annual Members, and all Liberal citizens who support the Nine Demands of Secularism, Greeting:

You are hereby invited to attend the Twelfth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union, which will convene at Lafayette Hall, Wood street, near 4th, Pittsburgh, Pa., Friday, October 5, 1888, at 10 A.M., for a four days' session—5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th, inclusive.

All Charter and Life Members, all Vice-Presidents, all Chairmen of State Executive Committees, and all duly accredited delegates from Local Secular Unions are entitled to seats and votes in this Annual Congress. Each Local Secular Union is entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates. Annual Members who pay or have paid $1 in the national treasury are entitled to seats, but not to votes, except by unanimous consent of the Congress.

This Congress will especially consider practical questions tending to further agitation for the taxation of church property; the abrogation of state aid to sectarian institutions; abolition of state, national, military, and prison chaplaincies; repeal of all judicial oaths, Sunday and other oppressive and unjust ecclesiastical laws; nullification of attempts to subvert our Constitution by a legal recognition of Theism in the American Magna Charta, and such other measures as will not merely thwart intended theological encroachments, but absolutely expunge from our laws, state and federal, such insidious acts as have already crept in to blot out mental freedom from our republic.

It is to be hoped that the addresses delivered will deal with the practical issues of the organization, so that there will be such an awakening of the people to these vital questions of the hour that a revival of the instinct of liberty and justice for all will necessarily result; that again from the Keystone state—the birth-place of the association—the clarion voice of freedom shall reverberate throughout the land.

Pittsburgh being situated almost in the center of a district containing many of our most distinguished workers, thinkers, and writers, besides the active host within its limits, there is little doubt that this Congress will be a glorious gathering of the forces who stand for mental liberty, as expressed in the desire for a complete Secularization of the government.

S. P. PUTNAM, Pres.,
E. A. STEVENS, Sec.,
CHAS. ECKHARD, Treas.,
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Ch. Ex. Com.,
MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com.

FORTUNATE is that nation which is great enough to know the great. How poor this world would be without its graves, without the memories of its mighty dead. Only the voiceless speak forever.—Ingersoll.

THE Sinaloa Colony Club meets August 5, at 2 P.M., at 39 4th st.

MYSELF.

You tell me, O my journalistic friend,
That you would blazon on your frontispiece
The head and front of my poor portraiture,
And with it you request that I should add
Some statement of my life—its work,
Its hope and aim.
The compliment I thank you for,
For what am I that thou
Art mindful of me?
The individual is so exceeding small,
Humanity is so surpassing great,
We all, compared to it, are but as water drops
Unto the liberal sea.
For each, then, unpretendingly,
To run his course, "unresting but unhasting,"
In the orbit of his life:
This, this, the duty and the glory is,
This, this, the satisfaction,
This, this, the triumph mastering
All transient failure or success.
The narrative
That I would fain have men relate of me,
Is what shall be engraved upon their hearts and minds
By the impress of my character.
I therefore covet not the sculptor's chisel
Nor the limner's pen
To point my virtues to the populace.
That I shall often err, as heretofore,
I doubt not:
Herein I crave indulgence
As doing in my humble way my meagre best;
But I propose to struggle on and up
Toward the lofty table-land of hope,
And there inhale the new and morning air
And bask more gladly in the rising sun
Of Liberty.
Let one and all join hands in this grand pilgrimage,
And proffer each to each, and all to all, encouragement and aid.
I've said enough;
My life, let it henceforth exclaim! —Courtlandt Palmer.

A CATHOLIC INDULGENCE.

I would like to know what an indulgence is, and I ask because I see in the "British American Citizen" that the Boston school board has decided that Swinton's history must go, because the Catholic priests object to it on account of this clause:

These indulgences were, in the early ages of the church, remissions of penance imposed on persons whose sins had brought scandal on the community. But in process of time they were represented as actual pardons of guilt, and the purchaser of indulgence was said to be delivered of all his sins.

That is according to history, and in a book called "The Tax of the Sacred Roman Chancery," are the exact sums to be levied for the pardon of each particular sin. Thus: For simony, 10s. 6d.; sacrilege, 10s. 6d.; taking false oath, 9s.; robbing, 12s.; murdering a layman, 7s. 6d.; laying violent hands on a clergyman, 10s. 6d. And so on, a long list in the whole. It was this indulgence business that stirred up Martin Luther, and helped to bring on the Reformation.

The dictionary gives this definition of an indulgence: "In the Romish church remission of the punishment due sins, granted by the pope or church, and supposed to save the sinners from purgatory."

Mr. Swinton's book is correct when it says that the Catholic church claims to forgive sins by granting indulgences. Here is the proof of this, in the "Boston Catechism," published for the use of the Catholic church, and approved by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Fenwick:

Question—What is an indulgence?

Answer—An indulgence is the remission of the temporal punishment due sin, either in this life or the life to come.

This language plainly means that the Catholic church professes to have the power to forgive sin; and yet, when we have stated this to Catholics, they have always denied it!—Investigator.

CIRCUMSTANCES over which we had not sufficient control to be effective make this issue of FREETHOUGHT a day late. Workmen and artists sometimes act on the principle of never putting off till to-morrow what can be done the day after.

Freethought Draws the Lightning Down.

[We are glad to print the following letter. As it was probably not written for publication, the name and address of the author are withheld.—ED.]

PHILIP COWEN, Esq., Petaluma, Cal., Dear Sir: Your kind letter informing me that the valuable paper, FREETHOUGHT, would be sent me free came duly to hand, and sure enough in a few days it came, and I found it filled with matter of great interest to me. Some two weeks ago I had been sitting at a desk in the agent's office nearly the whole day, engaged in writing, and though it had been raining very hard for more than an hour I had continued to write; but it grew quite dark from a cloud that was passing overhead at the time, and I arose and covered my paper with a large blotter and then laid the U. S. Revised Civil Statutes on it, and went into the next room to get a drink of water. In one minute the whole corner of the house was torn away and shivered into splinters, and a dog that had been lying at my feet for some hours was instantly killed, as I should have been if I had remained a minute longer. And I should have been not only killed but terribly mangled with the shattered timber of the house; but I was not even shocked by the bolt. If I had kept my seat and been killed, there is a cranky preacher here, sent out by the Methodist churches as a missionary, who would have said that providence did it because I was an Infidel. But the poor superstitious Indians say that the Great Spirit came down from the happy hunting grounds and whispered in my ear to cover up my paper with that large book and leave at once, and what makes them believe it the more is that though it had been storming for some hours we had not had any thunder and lightning, and the crash that tore up the house was the first we had seen or heard. So, you see that the idea of the poor savage places their god high above the idea the Christians have of their devil mis-called God. When D. M. Bennett was bathing in the Jordan river, and came very near being drowned, I read of it in the New York Truth Seeker, and said to my wife, "How the Christians would have howled about it if the grand old man had been drowned in the same little turbid stream that their God was baptized in." They would have said that the little river became indignant when the great Infidel dared to thrust his sinful body into its holy waters. So would the pious Hindoo say if a devout Christian should attempt to pollute the waters of the Ganges in the same manner, and should be drowned in the outraged and enraged water of that sacred river.

But all the religions of man are alike unreasonable and foolish, and their gods are monster devils or idiots. If there is any being or anything in the whole universe that is worthy to be called God, it must be an intellectual man, one who looks upon nature as it is, and one who can see the many imperfections of this world, and is not afraid to point them out to all the rest of mankind. If this world was created by a being who had the power to create just any kind of a world that he desired to create, that being was either an infinite fiend or a consummate fool. And as I cannot believe either of these theories, I am compelled to believe that nothing ever was created, and that the theory of Charles Darwin is the most correct. And if that be so, man is the highest organism in all the universe. Nature produces man without purpose, and obliterates him without regret. She hears no wailings of the bereaved widow, nor sees the dropping tears of the stricken orphan. She is neither merciful nor cruel; she does not weep; she does not rejoice; she does not frown; she does not smile; she is neither flattered by worship nor melted by tears. She knows no distinction between the growl of the tiger, the roar of the lion, and the scream of the hungry eagle, and the prattle of babes, the bleat of the lamb, and the singing of the merry mocking bird. She appreciates no difference between the poison in the fangs of the serpent or charity in the hearts of men; and through man, and man alone, does nature take cognizance of the good, the beautiful, and the lovely. I would love to believe that we would all live again and forever, but I am compelled to believe that death is an eternal sleep. The truth is, it is just as unreasonable that I should live again after I die on earth, as that my faithful horse or dog should live again. But I must close, after thanking you and all concerned in it for the kindness shown me in sending me FREETHOUGHT. It is a gem.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 339 Eddy st., S. F.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JOHN A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

HAND-BOOK OF

THE LICK OBSERVATORY

OF THE

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,

—BY—

EDWARD S. HOLDEN, LL.D.,

Director of the Observatory.

A volume of 135 pages, 12mo., printed on heavy paper, and bound in flexible cloth covers. Besides likenesses of

Professor Holden and James Lick,

it contains Twenty Views, Drawings, and Illustrations of the Locality, the Machinery, and the Apparatus connected with the great Astronomical station. The Table of Contents includes:

- I. Information for Visitors.
- II. Sketch of the Life of James Lick.
- III. A Visit to Mt. Hamilton.
- IV. History of the Lick Observatory.
- V. Description of the Building.
- VI. Description of the Instruments.
- VII. The Work of the Observatory.
- VIII. Telescopes.
- IX. Poem: To the Unmounted Lens.
- X. Astronomical Photography.
- XI. Clocks and Time-Keeping.
- XII. The Principal Observatories of the World.

By mail 80 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of ERICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.
P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1.50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS.

By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular, readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" medi- Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

For the Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS, CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.

33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS,

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50.
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17,
$18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4.
Being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best carat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest make, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and self for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies'
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$23; 15 jewels, $28. In good second quality filled cases, $2 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $33.
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case.
Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1;
best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set
best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $6, $12.
Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free.
BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
Badges in PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the Light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of cut and smaller,
two-thirds size. War-
ranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2.75, $3.50. Large,
$3 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $8, $10; and
charms up to $25. De-
mand daily increasing.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt,"
"Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.
Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois,"
"The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander
Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a
Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents;
cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain
cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll,
Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F.
Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents.
$1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks
of the New York Observer. By Robert G.
Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price,
5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size
octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Tributes. "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," "The Grant Banquet Toast"
and "Little Harry Miller's Grave," printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing; four to any address for 50 cents, or either one for 15 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," and all the famous tributes, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, table-talks and day-to-day conversations of the author. Fine steel portrait and autograph facsimile. Price, in cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2.50.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K.
Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00.
"The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me; with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry
W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A
Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."
—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr.
Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe,
San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health
Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents.
"Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible,
and witty without being coarse. On the whole,
it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery
Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington,
Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception;
Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness
to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagran-
cy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sab-batic Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan
Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers,
Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday
Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert
G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 32.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - AUGUST 11, 1888

THE North American Review for August has a splendid article from the pen of Robert G. Ingersoll on "The Divided Household of Faith."

FROM an Eastern clergyman we have received a letter containing this sentence: "I see in the sample copy you sent me reference is made to an infamous old impostor, Clark Braden by name, who is now on the Pacific coast." We admit having made reference to such a character.

A RAVING-CRAZY lunatic named Catz was arrested on the streets of this city last week while proclaiming that he was "Death" embodied to warn Colonel Ingersoll of the errors of his ways. There is another lunatic in New York, called Harrison the Boy Preacher, who thinks he has a similar mission.

It is understood that Governor Waterman will proclaim Admission Day, September 9, a legal holiday. This year the celebration will be deferred until the 10th because the 9th falls upon Sunday; and Sunday, appointed by a Roman emperor as a day of superstitious observances, is too holy to be desecrated by celebrating the birth of a state like California. We are ruled by a dead cutthroat.

WHAT kind of a story is this we hear? A reverend gentleman, J. V. Dundas by name, of Rice county, Minn., loses his baggage at Jersey City, N. J., made up of Indian shawls, men's and women's underwear, and high-priced cigars, which he was endeavoring to smuggle ashore from the steamer Rotterdam by means of a false bottom in his trunk! What can be expected of the sheep when the shepherds go thus astray?

BELVA LOCKWOOD, Woman Suffrage candidate for president, has chosen Mrs. Cynthia Leonard, of New York, for manager of her campaign. For this reason Susan B. Anthony and other prominent woman suffragists, it is reported, will retire from Mrs. Lockwood's support, their excuse being that Mrs. Leonard is not orthodox on the marriage question. Herein a great mistake is made. Mrs. Leonard on the subject of marriage is too orthodox for the orthodox. She is conservative to the extent of believing largely in celibacy. Her plainness of speech touching the question may be set down against her prudence, but she would resent the imputation of advocating anything beyond the most restricted association of men and women compatible with the preservation of the best specimens of our race. That she should be misunderstood is quite natural, and probably it is of no great importance anyway.

UPON the return of Charles M. Plum, one of the trustees of the School of Mechanic Arts, and Judge John H. Boalt, secretary of the board, steps will probably be taken to establish the school of arts for which an endowment fund of $540,000 was bequeathed in the famous will of the late James Lick. It is proposed to purchase property and erect buildings in this city at a cost of about $100,000, and to retain the balance of the $540,000 as an endowment fund, the interest of which will be used to operate the institution.

HERE is one of the declarations of the "Jesuit's Vow," a copy of which the Boston Investigator has in its possession: "I do renounce and disown any allegiance as due to any heretical king, prince, or state, named Protestant, or obedience to any of their inferior magistrates or officers. . . . I do declare from my heart, that the pope is Christ's vicar general, and hath power to depose heretical commonwealths and governments, all being illegal without his sacred confirmation, and that they may safely be destroyed."

NEWS AND NOTES.

This week has been full of ups and downs, good luck and bad luck. They say that one must have a certain amount of bad luck anyway, in order to carry out the law of compensation. I have had enough bad luck to last me the rest of the journey, and so from now on to congress I expect only good luck.

The lecture at Portland, Friday, July 27, was most favorable. The hall was full, and great interest was manifested in future work. A committee was appointed for preliminary organization. There have been many difficulties in the way of advancement at this point. Integration and disintegration have gone together with about equal pace. There is, however, a deep and earnest element of reform, and I believe the spirit is now awakened that will not be satisfied with anything less than victory. The friends called together at the close of the lecture adjourned to meet for further action at the office of Mr. Jeldness. Headquarters will be found somewhere for lectures, sociables, etc. Pecuniary support was pledged to the American Secular Union, and, so far as Portland is concerned, "the morning light is coming."

One of the disappointments of the week was the misunderstanding about Gray's River. I was expected there on Friday evening, the same evening that I lectured at Portland. I was obliged to telegraph that I could not come. As they are building a church there it was just the time for the Freethought lectures to be given, that people might look upon both sides before making investment. I, however, could not be in two places at the same time. It is a misfortune that the Liberal lecturer was not born a twin.

Friday night I sought my snug berth on the steamer and in the morning awoke at Astoria. Mr. O. Nelson and John Nelson were on hand with their sailboat; Mr. and Mrs. Albert arrived from Cathlamet, and, as the tide went sweeping out, we started, with a fair breeze, for Crooked Creek, twelve miles away. It was a glorious sail over the waters, with the woods and mountains glittering about. It only took a little over an hour to make the journey, and in the pleasant afternoon sunshine we went skimming like a bird into the winding river. Right on the banks, where the bees make honey and fruits bloom, is the home of Mr. O. Nelson, and we found other friends gathering there—Mr. and Mrs. Foster, and a troop from Skamokawa, who took the trail over the mountains. It looked as if we were going to have a big crowd at Stark's Point. Mr. Nelson, Mr. Foster, and two or three others, engineered the affair with that determination that commands success. They are all Freethinkers at the house of Mr. Nelson. The little girl, Miss Ella, has sixteen dolls. Fourteen of them are Infidels. The other two will be Infidels, Miss Ella says, on account of the good company they keep. The cows, perhaps, are a bit orthodox, for when it came milking time they did not put in an appearance, and Nelson was obliged to don his "seven-league boots" and hunt them up. They came to time. I rather guess they wanted to break up the Freethought meeting. They furnished cream for the occasion, notwithstanding.

Just at sunset we started over the bay. The wind was down and the oars must do duty. Ignorance is bliss. I couldn't row, and I enjoyed watching the stalwart sheriff as, with his compeers, he made the boat cut the shining waters. Out of Gray's river the tug boat "Improvement" flung its flickering stars as it brought another company to the dock. There is only one house at Stark's Point. Connected with it is a big hall. It was full to overflowing. Seats had to be brought in and extemporized, of various material and shape. The audience was a pleasant one; old and young were mingled together, and the babies were not absent, but they made no music. Of course there would not have been as many present—about five hundred—if only a Freethought lecture were the attraction. There was a combination—a picnic and a dance with the lecture. About eleven o'clock the music began, and it was Saturday night until six o'clock the next day. I went to bed after supper and slept to the rhythm of flying feet. It was a gala time, in dreamland and out of it. Such a Freethought festival will make the pulse of age beat with the ardor of youth.

I was up bright and early Sunday morning, ready for my voyage to Astoria, where I was to lecture in the evening. It was arranged for the tug "Improvement" to come from Astoria, take the Gray River party home and return to Astoria at eleven o'clock, same morning. The tug arrived as per appointment at Stark's Point. It was suggested that I join the tug and ride up the river. I did so, knowing that the tug was my only means of conveyance to Astoria. I thought I was all right, and with untroubled mind enjoyed the delicious scenery as we crept along the serpentine stream. Alas! I was inexperienced. The tide was going down and I did not know it. I realized it when we almost ran aground. I was informed that we could not get off on the home trip until half-past four in the afternoon, and that we should get into Astoria about nine o'clock in the evening. The lecture appointment was eight o'clock. I was in a fix. The captain said that he would do his best to start at half-past four and arrive at Astoria about eight. Fortunately Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Walker, and other friends, were present with me and time passed pleasantly. We took dinner at Mr. Walker's, who lives at the head of the tide water, where the open country begins to appear. We read some, wrote some, slept some, until half-past four. But the boat was not ready, and other things were not ready—freight and passengers delay, and we did not leave until seven o'clock, and Astoria was three hours' travel away. There was no help for it. I could only let things drift. I was a prisoner. If I could have walked on the water I should have footed it. I resigned myself with all the philosophy possible. I should have been obliged to Shakspeare's soldier who, "bearded like a pard," could have given me for the occasion a few "strange oaths." I should have reveled in them. As it was, I kept a "golden silence" and communed with the golden evening. The scenes were lovely; the tall glimmering trees, some as white as ghosts; the little wooded dells; the cottages here and there, stuck like bird-nests on the green knolls; the glassy waters, rippling to the slow moving boat; the sunset sky with fleecy clouds; and, finally, as we emerge from the intricacies of the river, the broad mouth of the Columbia glistening into the sea that touched with its thousand leagues the westering sun. It was too late to cross the bar for Stark's Point. We had to go round, a couple of miles. The captain would fain hurry on to Astoria, but I told him our company was waiting and he must stop. In we went. Our stranded friends were on the dock. All day long they had looked for the tug. Like "divine providence," it was mighty uncertain. It could not be trusted. The tug boat "Improvement" needs mending. At least it should change its name. When we arrived at the dock Astoria was in the arms of sleep. What became of my audience I know not. I wonder if they thought I was drowned. Chance said that if we Infidels got drowned he would eat no more salmon out of the Columbia. I hereby inform him that the Infidels are not yet food for fishes, and he can eat the salmon still.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert, and Brooks, King, and Vincent, of Skamokawa, are royal companions, and there is no need of fretting over disappointments when they are around. The sea-breeze made us hungry and we partook of our midnight supper with a relish and plenty of fun, and then we sleep on board the "Telephone," and all disappointment is forgotten, "rocked in the cradle of the deep."

Misfortunes never come single. My friends, Professor Seymour and wife, and Mrs. Saunders, and Miss Orlie, came from Portland to attend the picnic, but Mrs. Saunders was taken sick and they were obliged to return almost immediately from Astoria.

Friend George Rowe was coming out, but he failed to put in an appearance. Had he done so I should have put myself in his care, and should have been on hand for the lecture.

"Of all sad words of tongue or pen,
The saddest are these, It might have been."

Good friend Chance is also on the sick list and could not be with us; also Upsinger. These are most faithful workers, and the train is crippled when they cannot put their shoulder to the wheel.

Also a half dozen letters, forwarded from Astoria to Portland, never reached me. They may be important. If any, writing to Astoria, receive no answer they will know why. The letters have disappeared. Perhaps they are in the bosom of the Columbia, and the mermaids are gravely studying the matter, and perusing my lecture engagements. If they find a male in whom they can trust, I hope the letters will at once be forwarded to dry land.

It will thus be seen that I could now preach a sermon on the Bible text, "Man is born to trouble as the sparks fly upward."

However, gleams of fortune burst forth. Friend Upsinger is the father of a bright little Freethinker, about a week old.

Among those enrolled in the ranks of Freethought are W. W. Butts, J. P. Miller (whose son, Lewis Miller, is a San Franciscan), H. P. Anderson, C. Sorenson, Emma G. Nelson, P. C. Nelson, Lewis Olsen, etc.

We were glad to meet Mr. and Mrs. Davidson, of Oswego, at Portland; and the brother, Wm. Davidson, of Missouri, an old schoolmate of Judge Beal, whom he had not seen for forty years until he met him at the lecture. Both are in the army of reform.

Grandfather Saunders and I take a ride up to Beal's farm. It is the highest drive I have taken for some time. It is climb, climb, for about an hour. The scenery—the forests, the river, the far-off mountains, and, right below, the magnificent city—is superb, and I don't wonder friend Beal is fond of the heights. I don't think he will get nearer to heaven than he now is. However, he cannot escape purgatory. The Catholic burying-ground is close beside him.

I find, while preparing for my Eastern trip, a jovial home with Mr. and Mrs. A. Sutton. They have pioneered so long that they know how to make the traveler happy, and they are "true blue." Mr. Sutton is now with me. We go together, on to Spokane Falls. We left Portland this morning. What a lovely ride alongside the Columbia! The beautiful waterfalls, the rocks towering a thousand feet right over the head, the shaggy eminences glittering with spaces of green, as if fresh from spring's lap, the vast stream tumbling into cascades, make a panorama of dazzling and sublime beauty. We pass by the grave of Vic Trevett, whose lonely monument of white marble gleams over the solemn tide. He is buried in an Indian cemetery. He wanted to be far away from the whites. He was a famous hunter. It is said that he was a hundred and ten years old when he died. He was a man of learning, a strange genius, whose requiem is forever sung by the billows of this grand river.

By the Columbia, August 1, 1888. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

CLERICAL TESTIMONIALS.

We cannot believe that General Harrison's pastor, the Rev. M. L. Haines, is doing the candidate any good by the letter he is circulating. The reverend gentleman says that at the age of twenty-two young Harrison was already a professing Christian, and had united with the Presbyterian church. When twenty-four years of age he was elected to the office of deacon and four years later was made an elder of the church, the ordination ceremony being performed by the laying on of the hands of the session. For some time before the war, says the Rev. Mr. Haines, Mr. Harrison was superintendent of the Sunday-school, and after his return from the army was for a number of years, up to his election as United States senator, the teacher of the Congregational Bible class for men. During one of the political campaigns, when he was speaking six days in the week, he insisted that his appointments should be so arranged that he could get back to Indianapolis Saturday evening, and thus be enabled to meet his class Sunday morning. At Thursday evening services the general leads in prayer, and prays every morning at the family altar.

Such is the religious aspect of General Harrison. If he were candidate for missionary or for ordination as pastor in a Presbyterian church, no doubt this testimonial would help him; but, as before stated, we do not believe it will strengthen him politically.

There is a large and growing body of intelligent citizens who do not invest heavily in piety. Indeed, they are suspicious of it. "What is that noise in the next room?" asked a father. "That," said the mother, "is little Tommy singing 'I want to be an angel.'" "Then you had better find out what mischief he is up to," commented the sire. So it is in public as in private life.

The fact that Mr. Harrison is an able and honest man will gain him votes, and the same statement holds good as regards Mr. Cleveland; but intelligent people would vote for either with more confidence if the religious question were out of the campaign altogether. Besides, what is the testimonial of a clergyman worth? The circulars of patent medicines and toilet soaps are full of them.

THE PHILOSOPHER AND HIS DISCIPLE.

Anaxagoras, the founder of a Philosophic School counting its disciples by Thousands, was left to shift for Himself till the rumor of his having touched Hardpan brought Pericles, the most illustrious of those disciples, to the fourth-floor-in-the-rear Room of his Neglected teacher.

"Do not, do not leave us!" he cried, in an agony of remorse; "we cannot Afford to lose the Light of our Life!"

"O Pericles," said the Philosopher, as he removed the Lining from his overcoat, preparatory to making it do duty as a Linen Duster, "those who need a Lamp should take care to Supply it with Oil."

MORAL.—Those who believe that the circulation of a Free-thought Paper is beneficial to this Coast should Look to it that the receipts at the office are sufficient to pay the Postage.

WAR IN HEAVEN.

The trouble in the affairs of the Oakland Christian Independent, which we noticed last week, has culminated in the editorial chair of that great religious journal being yanked out from under the Rev. Geo. W. Sweeney. The announcement now appears that—

"The business will hereafter be conducted under the firm name of Mrs. C. H. Alexander & Son, to whom all communications must be addressed to receive prompt attention. Geo. W. Sweeney is not in any way connected with the Christian Independent financially."

There is, apparently, a simultaneous dropping of Clark Braden, as nothing from Braden concerning Braden is to be found in the last number of the Independent. The editors state that "Christian love and Christian purity will hereafter more than ever characterize the columns" of that paper.

This is a sad blow to the Rev. Mr. Sweeney. People who are unkind enough to say that they have nursed him "when he was trying to kick imaginary snakes" have prevailed in the affairs of the Christian Independent. Has the war in heaven resulted in the defeat of the wrong party?

PENANCE.

If what the priests of Bartholemi, Quebec, Canada, says about the plague of grasshoppers visiting that parish is true, the farmers have good cause to rebel against the decrees of providence. The pests are devouring everything green, and the Rev. Abbe Moreau, the parish priest, at high mass informed the parishioners that the grasshopper plague was a visitation from heaven to punish them for their sins. Every one in the parish, he said, should show his or her repentance by fasting several days. Mass would be said for two days, and then a procession would pass through that part of the parish which was being devastated. The masses were accordingly said, and headed by the priest, the people formed a procession and walked through the stricken district, saying prayers as they went, and stopping to say mass on a field of oats that had been entirely ruined by the pests. Returning to the parish church, Father Moreau delivered a sermon upon the visitations of the Almighty, and imposed a penance upon each of the parishioners who had failed to take part in the procession.

As an experiment the parishioners of Bartholemi might perform the penance imposed, and observe the result. If it brings about the abolition of the grasshoppers, they should try it next on the priests, compared with whom grasshoppers are a blessing. The insects are only a temporary affliction, but the priests are to Canada and her provinces a perennial curse.

BUNDY, of the Religio-Philosophical Journal, of Chicago, has again distinguished himself. This time he has a terrific cock-and-bull story about medium Colby of San Francisco. He accuses Mr. Colby of having been a Baptist preacher, a train robber, a forger, a revivalist, and a gambler. Currency is also given to the report that detectives are on their way hither to arrest Mr. Colby on some of the above charges. The police here have heard nothing about it and pronounce the story a "fake." Its source certainly condemns it.

PROF. GEO. CHAINEY is in the East. He opened the Cassadaga, N. Y., camp-meeting July 26, so says the Golden Gate. The headquarters of the Gnostic Publishing Company will be in New York after Nov. 1. Mrs. Chainey and two pupils from Australia sailed on the Columbia the 30th, going East via Portland. Mrs. Chainey will lecture there on the 12th, and teach classes in psychic and physical culture one month.

G. W. FOOTE has begun the publication of a new Radical weekly called the Leader, at 28 Stonecutter st., London, E. C.

For any book mentioned in our advertising columns, or for any other Freethought or scientific work, address this office.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The Apaches of the San Carlos, A. T., reservation are making trouble.—They say that the marriage of Lillie Langtry and Fred Gebhardt will shortly take place in California. The Lily's present husband will consent to a divorce.—There was a fight between Japs and Chinamen in Chinatown last Sunday. Some cutting and clubbing was done, but no fatal results are chronicled. Several of the invading Japs were arrested.—A large number of Democrats turned out last Saturday night to welcome home the delegates to the national convention.—The custom-house books show that between 1852 and June 3, 1888, 366,636 Chinese arrived here, and 179,095 departed, leaving 187,541 in the state.—Every Thursday the Lick Old Ladies' Home is visited by the president, Mrs. Goddard Clarke, who, on being interviewed, gave an enthusiastic account of the flourishing condition of that worthy charity. Within its walls are now accommodated twenty-seven old ladies of different creeds, the institution being conducted upon a non-sectarian basis. An excellent matron is in charge and the condition of affairs is in every way satisfactory, the finances being in a healthy and encouraging state.—Mrs. Josephine R. Wilson delivered a lecture on "Metaphysics" at 106 McAllister street last week. She denounced capital punishment as unjust in all cases, and argued that Goldenson, the condemned murderer, ought to be spared the rope on the ground that secret psychic impulses drove him to do the act. She regretted that some local ministers had publicly said that the young man ought to hang.—The Free Library of San Francisco has ceased to circulate books. No more will be issued on home slips until the library is in its new quarters at the City Hall.

Gen. Philip H. Sheridan died at Nonquitt, Mass., last Sunday of heart disease. His death was sudden and unexpected, although his condition had been serious for some months. General Sheridan was a native of Ohio, graduated from the West Point Military Academy in 1853, fought the Indians in the Northwest in 1856, was promoted to the captaincy in 1861, entered the war and rose to the rank of general. He was a good soldier. Age, 57.—The lawless Indiana regulators called Whitecaps are to be prosecuted.—Mrs. Belva Lockwood lectured in New York Sunday evening. She prophesied to a small audience that a woman would yet rule over the United States.—A fire in a Bowery, New York, tenement one night last week burned 17 people to death.—John L. Sullivan, who made a failure of the circus business, is talking fight again.—The steel steamship Coronado, built for the Oregon Improvement Company of California, was successfully launched Aug. 4 from the ship yards of Neafie & Levy at Philadelphia. Among those present were President Edward Smith, a number of officers of the Oregon Improvement Company, and Captain Goodall of San Francisco, who will command the new ship. The vessel is built entirely of steel; is 236 feet in length, 36 feet beam, 23 feet 6 inches depth of hold; is schooner rigged and will accommodate 200 first-class passengers. The Coronado will come to San Francisco as soon as her machinery is placed.—Robert Garrett, the well-known railroad man, is dangerously ill. He is said to be insane.—God rules the storm. Lightning last Saturday night knocked off the large cross and ten feet of the top of the tower of the Chapel of the Good Shepherd on Twentieth street, New York.—The Rev. D. C. Wood of the United Brethren preachers, living in Tama City, Iowa, has eloped with Miss Ada Rhoades, daughter of a well-to-do farmer. Wood is about fifty years old and has a wife and seven children living in Tama City, and so far as is known, has always lived happily with them. Miss Rhoades is 23 years old.—Prof. Elisha Gray has obtained letters patent for an instrument called the telautograph, designed for transmitting messages by the sender in his own handwriting, doing away with skilled operators. The invention is based on the discovery of a new principle in controlling the electric current whereby a pulsatory current is produced.—Among the passengers of the steamer Rotterdam, which arrived at Jersey City Aug. 1, was Rev. J. V. Dundas, of Rice county, Minn., who declared he had no dutiable article in his baggage. The customs officer, however, found in his trunk a fine white Indian crepe shawl, and a quantity of man's and ladies' underwear, and 5,000 cigars in boxes, all snugly fitted in a false bottom in his trunk. The trunk was seized.—The American party will hold its convention at Washington, D. C., Aug. 14. A good attendance is predicted.—At Cannon, Texas, July 31, the Rev. G. Harrison, a Methodist minister, killed his son-in-law, Ben Pervin, and then killed himself. Family trouble was the cause.—Thieves broke into the First Presbyterian church on Fifth avenue, New York, and stole two gallons of communion wine and a silver chalice. They got drunk on the wine.

The police report an Anarchist plot to overthrow the government of Austria. They say that French, English, Swiss, American, and German Anarchists are in the conspiracy. An Imperial Austrian decree has been signed by the whole Cabinet to suspend trial by jury in the charges made against the Anarchists throughout five provinces, including Prague, Brunn, Olmutz, and Gratz. The decree is to remain in force one year.—On the death of General Drenten, military governor of the Kieff district in Russia, it was announced that death was due to apoplexy. The Allgemeine Zeitung now says that it has learned that General Drenten was murdered by a nihilist at Kieff.—England is afflicted with pauper immigrants from Russia, Poland, and Germany.

CAN IT BE?

Yes, the trash is published in the Chronicle in San Francisco, in the republic of America, in 1888: "St. Francis, being in bed, near his church at Assisi in Italy, was woke up and called to the church. There he saw Christ on the altar, who told him that whoever would visit that church and confess shall have a plenary indulgence and be pardoned all their sins." This was in 1221. Ever since that time, deluded people have made their visits and paid their money, and the church has been mightily enriched. Then we are told that "the pope, being all the same as Christ, has made the grant include all churches in the world, of the order of St. Francis." We are not surprised to see such things in the Monitor, but in a paper pretending to common sense and progressive intelligence, and without comment on the folly and fraud of the imposture, is a scandal to the press of the city. An idiot in these days sees through these pious frauds. K.

VOLTAIRINE'S LETTER.

Some time ago I was rash enough to pen an article in which I took a position on the "abolition of rum" question which Mr. Isaac T. Crum and his able lieutenant, "Jefferson," have maintained is heretical to the true principles of "orthodox Liberalism," so to speak. I predicted a hailstorm of replies, and though I failed to get the storm, the hail came good and hard from "Jefferson's" "personal liberty" fortifications. My compliments to my most worthy opponent, and as soon as I have finished giving an account of matters and things for the past two months, I will endeavor to point out what appear to me to be flaws in his reasoning.

But first, let my readers forget, for the time, that there is in all the world such a curse as the thing called rum; let them remember only that through the fair breadth of our beautiful land there is a band of Liberty lovers whose eyes are lifted toward a morning heaven struggling faintly through the gloom, the grayness; whose hearts are beating, like the ocean pulses, the same deep measure, though so widely sundered; whose hands, through the distance, clasp each other, like children, loving their one great mother.

I am sure that our friends in that far-off country where "the beautiful golden city looks out through the golden straits" will be glad to know how bravely their brethren in the church-ridden East are bearing the flag of freedom. During my late sojourn in the quiet home of "the Friends" I learned to better understand the difficulties under which they labor, and the tremendous force of will it requires to be an outspoken Freethinker in the land of "brotherly love;" for "brotherly love," my friends, would rapidly hurry you into a brotherly prison did you attempt to buy so much as a glass of soda water on Sunday (though at the Catholic cathedral high mass is sold to every buyer at ten cents a buy—a placard over the door announces the price of admission, and it must be allowed the show is cheap), and the Sunday theatre, the Sunday amusement of any kind, is a thing unknown. And not only this, but the stones, the streets, the very atmosphere, are so permeated with exclusive "godliness" that for one to stand up and brave the odium of priest-made opinion, to assert the grandeur and dignity of the natural man, requires moral heroism enough to furnish material for several martyrdoms. Life under such conditions more than justifies the expression that, compared with those who bear it bravely, he who seeks death is a coward. And since the question of the maintenance of the national union is being at present somewhat widely discussed, perhaps it may not be out of order to say that the existence of an active, persistent, aggressive, national Secular Union must be the outgrowth of the emergency which is staring the people of the United States in the face.

Necessity creates the inevitable! The principles of the Union burn like fires! They flash through a heavy twilight that rests deeply, densely, on the grand free hills, and settles with the intensity of a coffin-pall over the silver Delaware.

In unity there is strength; to have the forces of Liberalism scattered, disintegrated; to break the circle; to unclasp our hands and say to bigotry, "march on," would be to desert the faithful few who have stood so truly; would be to deny our love for Liberty and negative our strength to stand by our colors; nay more, to herald the advance of the arch tyrant, the "church of God." And, as I recall the strong, tried hands that pressed mine in greeting when I first had the pleasure of being introduced to the Quaker city; when I think of the faithfulness with which they have defended the cause of Liberty, I cannot, I will not, believe it possible that the children of the prairies and the mountains can unloose the bonds that unite them, can forget the wide duty they owe to these veterans in the field. The West owes allegiance to the East—the allegiance of comradeship. In the East the brunt of the battle must be borne, for the orient source of the sunlight is the home of the shadows still, and the Afric hand of superstition is a deep, deep shadow.

I shall never forget the warm reception given me by the Philadelphia League, on the 27th of May last. A large and intellectual audience listened to the afternoon lecture on Convent Life, while the two great gladiators in the arena of thought, "Justice and Jehovah," received due attention in the evening. One of our Christian friends arose to do Jehovah's lawing after my case was presented; but the jury, being an enlightened class of intelligent Freethinkers, intimated that they "didn't take any in their'n." It didn't please friend Brotherhead, who has undertaken the rather heavy task of converting the Liberal League, and he took occasion to inform them that they couldn't appreciate solid argument. As the gentleman thinks that "women of my sex," as he expressed it, are incapable of platform work, it may be refreshing for Mrs. Severance, Mrs. Krekel, Helen Gardener, or Mrs. Freeman to learn that the keystone of oratorical success in "women of the other sex" is to insult the intelligence of an audience by telling them that they don't know a good thing when they hear it. The Freethinkers can afford to be charitable; women of that sex are certainly amusing, and when he has served out his apprenticeship he may make a second-rate Sam Jones.

You haven't all the beautiful things, dear California friends, though President Putnam's glowing poesy lifts up to our eastern vision a wondrous fair mirage. I had that night a beautiful gift, and I have a beautiful memory. Dear Mrs. Harper—I wish that every daughter of Liberal thought might look into those clear, kind eyes of hers—presented your correspondent with a group of those exquisite poets who speak in colors—lilies and roses and purple blooms, brow and cheek and deep dark eyes—and their perfume rose like the music which voices the minstrel's thought.

President Shaw is one of those sterling men whom Nature has moulded on a generous plan; orthodoxy was too narrow for the big soul that looks out through his Saxon-blue eyes—no prison-house for him. He and his hard working fellow-officer, Secretary Geo. Longford, are a strong dose of medicine for orthodox Philadelphia to swallow.

It was pleasant, too, to see so many young faces in the audience, so many girls; two of them I shall long remember—the frank-eyed one who thanked me because I "spoke for woman," and the ivory-featured face of the secretary's fair young daughter.

But you editor men will begin to think of "cutting it down," and as I have a whole lot to tell you yet about various public encroachments of the church which came under my notice during my sojourn in the city, I will just say "to be continued," and write you again next week. Salutations to all.

VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

THE "NEW AND LATTER HOUSE OF ISRAEL."

Considerable sensation has been caused at Chatham by the death of Mrs. Esther Jezreel, the leader of the New and Latter House of Israel, which occurred at her seat, the Woodlands, on Saturday. The deceased was known to her followers as "Queen Esther the Virgin, the Mother of Israel," and they were taught to believe that she was "The Woman" who, "broom in hand, had been placed to sweep the house (or body) in search of the piece which the first woman lost, and which the last Eve shall now find"—Mrs. Jezreel being the last Eve. "Queen Esther" had been ill only twelve days, the cause of her death being inflammation of the kidneys. Among "the faithful" the greatest consternation prevails; but they have tried in vain to prevent the fact coming to the knowledge of the "Gentiles," as they term the public. The removal of Mrs. Jezreel (writes a correspondent) is a striking, if sad, commentary on the central doctrine of the New and Latter House of Israel. According to this they are an elect people, who are to be preserved from the grave and corruption. It is their mission to collect together "the remnant" from all parts of the world of the people of Israel—the 144,000 spoken of in the Book of Revelation—and who are never to see death, and when the ingathering is complete then they are to enter into the enjoyment of the second resurrection, and are to live for 1,000 years with Christ upon earth, which is to be converted into heaven! This extraordinary doctrine suffered a great shaking about three years ago, when the Prophet of the House of Israel—James Jeroboam Jezreel—the man divinely chosen to collect the people who should not see death, himself went “the way of all flesh.” But “the faithful” got over the difficulty by saying that “the good man was not good enough,” and that some imperfection of which his followers were in ignorance unfitted him to be one of the genuine “remnant.” Mrs. Jezreel succeeded her husband at the head of the house, and it is thought that her unexpected death will result in the entire collapse of the movement. In a history of the religious eccentricities, not to say delusions, of the present decade, the story of this strange sect—a sketch of which appeared not long since in the Daily News—would form one of the most striking chapters. The saddest feature in connection with this religious delusion is the ruin it has brought upon many families. Men and women—Americans as well as English and Scotch—infatuated with the Flying Roll, and believing in Jezreel and his wife as heaven-sent messengers—gave up lucrative positions, broke up their homes, converted all their possessions into cash, and poured the whole into “the Lord’s treasury” upon “gathering” at Chatham, and then when after a time the scales have fallen from their eyes they—men with wives and families—have been compelled to go out in the world and begin life again. The history of the sufferings of some of these people would make a heartrending story.—London Daily News.

JOHN HEMPHILL PREACHETH.

We know John, and have known him long and pretty well. He is called reverend, and we believe D.D., but we take no account of these additions. They do not change John any more than the stamp of $20 would change a piece of lead. It is the stuff that is in a man, and not the letters branded on his forehead, that makes the man. John preached, or lectured, or spoke in the Calvary church on Sunday, July 29, on the Bible. He called it the word of God. He took a text from it about a certain king who, on reading a certain message only half through, without seeing the rest, threw it all in the fire, he was so disgusted. Now John said this was the way with Infidels and scoffers with the word of God, the Bible. They did not read it, or read only a little, and cast it away. Even David Hume admitted that he had not read the whole of it. Then John went on to say that Hume and all the other objectors had been answered over and over again. Their objections were wiped out, and the Bible stood brighter than ever.

This is a nice thing to say, but it is not so easy to make good. Where are all these fine answers? Does John know any of them? Would he like to meet Ingersoll, or any other man, and try the temper of these answers over again? Does the book stand, as he says, unscathed? Is he sure he speaks the truth? How many people in this city do not believe a word of it? How many who never go to church? How many of our leading men question this book, and invite Mr. Hemphill, or any other reverend D.D., to discuss the matter in open court? Has he accepted any such challenge? Dare he do so? It is open for him, and he is welcome to use all those ancient answers that have been so effectual.

He admits that it is charged to be full of cruelties and indecencies. But he denies the soft impeachment. He says it is all a stale slander. More, he “will pay $1,000, cash down, to any man who can prove that one man can be found who has been made cruel or indecent by constant reading of the Bible.” Now we would like to have that $1,000. We believe we can earn it on these terms. We feel sure we can find a thousand men who have been made cruel, indecent, malignant murderers by the perusal of that book and the ideas they have gleaned from it. We have no fear of making the proof. We are willing to appear in court, to make up a case, to sue John Hemphill for that money, on the ground that we have proven the case; and to meet him and all the doctors of divinity in San Francisco as attorneys on his side. Now, will he place the money in bank subject to these conditions? Or will he agree to select a jury to try the case on the ordinary rules of evidence?

But, indeed, we do not care about his $1,000. Dare he come into court himself and before an able adversary defend what he has so boldly asserted? We are willing to select three competent judges to preside, who are well skilled on admissible testimony; and to meet all the clergy in the city, they to prove their case if they can. On our part we will hold that there is no proof that the Bible is the word of God, that Christ was the son of God, that God is angry with men for mere opinion, that he has a heaven for true believers or a hell for unbelievers, or that men are not free to think, speak, write, and act as they please, regarding the same rights in others. We will affirm that the Bible is most probably not the word of God; that it is full of the unnatural, unjust, contradictions, indecencies, cruelties, grievous wrongs, oppressions, and delusions. We reject the book after a full reading through and through. Reject it, not because it is too good for our poor human nature, but because it falls below our common sense. We reject it, not for the good that it teaches, but for the bad that it favors and upholds. Here is a platform broad enough. This $1,000 trick is not to our mind. It is too much like a vulgar gamble. We do not care to encourage that sort of method of backing our opinions.

The time has come when those who dare not enter the arena and stand up for their religion must crawl into the dark corners of the earth for an audience. The American people have no further use for that which cannot be proven. H. L. KNIGHT.

THE LECTURE AT FOREST GROVE.

To the Editors of Freethought:

We had the pleasure of listening to two splendid lectures by Mr. Putnam, our president. We also had a delightful visit with him at our home. He has the happy faculty of making one feel as if they were entertaining an old friend. His lectures here were “The Bible” and the “American Republic.” Both were grand, but we liked the last best, as it treated on a subject of such vital importance to every voter in the land. He was followed by a mountebank called Braden—the same party, I think, that Heston so happily illustrated as a skunk, in the Truth Seeker last fall, and B. F. Underwood castigated so unmercifully some years ago.

Brother Putnam was kind enough to appoint me agent for FREETHOUGHT here, and I assure you that I was more proud of the honor conferred than I should be of an appointment from the present occupant of the “White House.” The first name I received was that of Thomas Hines, our staunch old pioneer of Freethought. Twenty years ago, when we first came to Forest Grove to live, Thomas Hines and Isaac Meyers were the only men here who dared to take a Liberal paper, or declare their Freethought principles. My husband was the next, and they have stood shoulder to shoulder under the banner of Freethought ever since. And how rapidly Freethought has grown in this state in that time. Really, it has become quite respectable to be a Liberal now, although there is a large number yet who appear to be seriously affected with “spinal disease.” Still we have some of the best men and women in our ranks, notwithstanding Braden’s denunciation of every one who believed as Putnam does, as idiots and lunatics. Braden’s tirade here reminded me of the immortal words of that grand old poet who is now, alas! forgotten:

The jabberwock, with eyes of flame,
Went whiffing through the tulgy wood;
And burbled as he came.

If he reminded me of anything else, “I dunno.” We hope you will continue your “Notes and News.” We heartily concur with your friend William Thorpe in regard to your descriptive powers. I think I shall soon be able to send you a good list of names for FREETHOUGHT.

MRS. SARAH C. TODD.

Forest Grove, Oregon, July 27, 1888.

HONOR to him who self-complete, alone,
Carves to the grave a pathway all his own,
And heeding not what others think or say,
Asks but himself when doubtful of the way.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary.....241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
 CHARLES ECKHARD, Treasurer.....28 Lafayette place, New York
 E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com.....120 Lexington ave., New York
 MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com.....106 So. Halsted st., Chicago

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	Harry Hoover,	S. W. Devenbaugh,
Courtlandt Palmer,	Charles B. Reynolds,	Wm. Algie,
T. B. Wakeman,	Prof. Ch. Orchardson,	Roman Staley,
James Parton,	L. K. Washburn,	H. P. Mason,
J. D. Shaw,	W. S. Bell,	N. D. Goodell,
W. F. Jamieson,	Mattie A. Freeman,	D. W. Smith,
Charles Watts,	M. M. Secor,	Jas. Wardwell,
John E. Remsburg,	Otto Wettstein,	J. W. Black,
Horace Seaver,	Wm. Redfield,	Thos. J. Truss.
Mattie P. Krekel,

A LODGE OF SORROW.

Before introducing the lecturer of the evening, Sunday, July 22, the president of the Chicago Secular Union announced the death of Judge Arnold Krekel, of Kansas City, Missouri, giving his personal recollections of the judge, a brief sketch of his remarkable career, and presented the following, which was unanimously adopted with a rising vote:

Whereas, We learn with deep regret of the demise of Judge Arnold Krekel, who for years was prominently identified with Freethought and Secular propaganda, and whose talented wife is a vice-president and lecturer of the American Secular Union; and

Whereas, Judge Krekel is a recognized historical figure in the struggle for freedom and the Union in his state, for it was at his home that Governor Reeder of Kansas, sought safety when flying for his life; and when martial law was proclaimed, President Lincoln placed unlimited power in Colonel Krekel's hands, for the fearless and faithful performance of which his appointment to the United States judgeship was demanded by all loyal people of Missouri, from the duties of which he only retired a few weeks ago; therefore,

Resolved, That in the death of Judge Krekel the family mourn the loss of a kind, indulgent husband, father, and friend; literature and science a patron and co-worker; Freethought an able and fearless ally; humanity a friend; the nation a distinguished soldier, and the bench a noble judge.

Resolved, That the Chicago Secular Union hereby extends to the bereaved wife and family its sincere condolence and sympathy.

CHICAGO, July 29.—The Forum was draped in mourning, and after the selection "Death" by the quartette, the president spoke as follows:

"When announcing the death of Judge Arnold Krekel last Sunday evening—a Liberal who was loaded with years as well as honors, and whose taking off was soon to be expected—I little thought that another life would be seemingly snapped in mid-day, and that our hall would be clothed in the habiliments of mourning out of respect to the memory of him who so short a time ago captured all our hearts while in Chicago—Courtlandt Palmer, ex-president of the American Secular Union, and for several years a member of the board of directors of the national body. During all the time Mr. Palmer was one of its officers, that official intimacy ripened into a warm personal friendship. Courtlandt Palmer's distinguished characteristic was his modesty, and you will recall a sentence from his valedictory address at the last congress. When referring to the notoriety he had obtained he said, 'Some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them. I am of the latter category, for none could be more diffident than I.' That was a fact. He possessed the unaffected simplicity of genius, for many literary critics have pronounced Palmer's poems worthy to be placed beside George Eliot's 'Choir Invisible.'"

The letter of Mr. Palmer to Robert Ingersoll, requesting that he and Mr. Wakeman deliver addresses, was read. The following memorial was adopted, the members standing during its delivery:

IN MEMORIAM.

Since last we met, Freethought has suddenly lost one of its most brilliant and distinguished champions, and a gloom is cast over the Liberal cause. Our late president and long-time treasurer of the American Secular Union, whose name stands as a synonym for princely generosity, for noble ideals, for moral courage, and intellectual grandeur, Courtlandt Palmer, has passed to the silent majority, but his disinterested, self-sacrificing, and exalted life adds a halo to the glory and sublimity of humanity. Born to the possession of vast wealth, his environments were cast among the conservatives, but he disenthralled himself from all ostentations and vulgar pride, becoming the very embodiment of a true reformer, for he sought to remedy the social as well as the intellectual condition of the race. He aimed to interest our "American Aristocracy" in the lives of the lowly laborers, to inspire them with loftier ambitions than fashionable dissipation, to lift science and logic to the place of debasing superstitions, and above all to secularize the state, that the light and joy of mental freedom will be the rightful heritage of every citizen of our republic. The death of this fervent Freethinker is an irreparable loss to the American Secular Union.

In an age of sordid selfishness Courtlandt Palmer's example shines illustrious by its labors for the elevation of others, and his was a truly noble life. For Wisdom and wealth and fame are glorious things,

 And each may add a grace to whom it brings
 Its treasures, to be shared, not garnered pelf;
 No life is noble with only good for self!
 Whoever a noble life would live
 Must toil to aid and gather still to give,
 Succor the weaklings, smooth the rugged way,
 And with wise bounty sweeten all the days
 He hath with man; so, laying down his staff,
 "A noble life" shall be his epitaph.

The quartette then sang "A Noble Life," from the Truth Seeker collection of hymns, and the president, introducing the lecturer of the evening, said: "Dr. McLeod has been a prominent figure for many years, and he, like Mr. Palmer, has been one of the most generous contributors to our society. The doctor was formerly one of the faculty of the University of Iowa, and is one of the best biologists and linguists I know of. His lectures are careful condensations of the most profound thought of the time, and he has especially prepared these numerous illustrations for this lecture, which is entitled 'A Study in Organic Evolution.'"

E. A. STEVENS, Pres. C. S. U.

PRESIDENT PUTNAM'S WITHDRAWAL.

From Pittsburgh Truth.

Mr. Putnam's message will, no doubt be a surprise to his friends, and received with regret. He has fully and satisfactorily given his reasons for withdrawing, and added some most excellent advice for the future guidance of the Union. His advice and his experience, both as a secretary and as president of the Union, should and will, we believe, be of inestimable value to the future president, and other officers of the Union. Mr. Putnam's friends, we have said, will regret his withdrawal. His enemies, no doubt, will hail it with delight. But as he will no longer be president of the Union, or connected with it in any official capacity, we would say to his friends and his enemies, if you desire a prosperous national organization in future, you must bury your animosities, get rid of your despicable jealousies, and cease the damnable fighting among yourselves. This must be done or the great body of the peaceful, the influential and unprejudiced Liberals who are now out of the Union will not come in and support it.

We are beginning to have more hope for the future of the American Secular Union. That we need a strong national organization, no thoroughbred Liberal will deny. That the work to be done is largely in the East, must be apparent to all observers of the enemy's movements. That our great enemy, the National Association, or the God-in-the-Constitution party, the foe of the American privilege of liberty and a traitor to the Constitution of our government, must be whipped clear out of sight, we are agreed.

We believe that Mr. E. A. Stevens, the secretary of the American Secular Union, is a good man for the place, and should be unanimously re-elected at the coming Congress. We know that he is a hard and earnest worker. We believe he is downright honest. We would not favor his re-election if we believed otherwise. We would no longer speak in favor of the American Secular Union if we did not believe that at the coming Congress it could be fixed up in such a way as to win the respect and confidence of the great body of Liberals throughout the country.

We hope that the delegates to the coming Congress will make no mistake in electing a president and officers for the Union. We would like to see the Congress more devoted to business than to "spooks" and the dead gods, and we hope the advice of Brother Putnam will be followed as far as practicable. With Brother Stevens for secretary, the right man for president, a good board of directors, and all outside issues kept out, we believe that the Liberals of this country will harmoniously unite and march on to victory.

When Napoleon made his expedition to Egypt, and met the enemy, just before the battle he gave inspiration to his men. Pointing toward the Pyramids, whose vast summits loomed up solemnly and sublimely into the clear azure heavens before him, he said: "Remember, that from the top of those pyramids forty centuries contemplate your conduct in this battle!" and he won the fight. So we say to the members of the American Secular Union, remember, that from your past and present quarrels and petty jealousies, the great body of Liberals throughout the United States will contemplate your conduct at the coming Congress.

FROM SECULAR THOUGHT.

We have just received information from Mr. E. A. Stevens, the secretary of the American Secular Union, that Mr. S. P. Putnam will be compelled to sever all official connection with that organization after the Pittsburgh Convention. Mr. Putnam has been for years a hard and consistent worker in the interest of the Union; and he has done more than his share in sustaining its existence. We are glad to learn that his withdrawal from any official position in the Union will not prevent him from rendering other aid to a movement which the record of his life proves that he has at heart. In his new home, friend Putnam has our best wishes for his success in everything that calls forth the grandeur of his nature, and that will tend to advance the cause of Secularism and Freethought. Now, more than ever, the friends of the Union should support the secretary in his efforts to promote the usefulness of the organization. It was with feelings of regret that we recently read that the funds of the Union were insufficient to meet the demands of outlay. Surely the Liberals of the states can avoid this deficiency remaining. It is now that pecuniary aid is required, and we sincerely hope that Mr. Stevens will receive enough to enable him to present to the coming Pittsburgh Congress that record of work done which we know he has the desire and ability to accomplish.

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONGRESS A. S. U.

OFFICIAL CALL.

To the Local Secular Unions, Life, Charter, and Annual Members, and all Liberal citizens who support the Nine Demands of Secularism, Greeting:

You are hereby invited to attend the Twelfth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union, which will convene at Lafayette Hall, Wood street, near 4th, Pittsburgh, Pa., Friday, October 5, 1888, at 10 A.M., for a four days' session—5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th, inclusive.

All Charter and Life Members, all Vice-Presidents, all Chairmen of State Executive Committees, and all duly accredited delegates from Local Secular Unions are entitled to seats and votes in this Annual Congress. Each Local Secular Union is entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates. Annual Members who pay or have paid $1 in the national treasury are entitled to seats, but not to votes, except by unanimous consent of the Congress.

This Congress will especially consider practical questions tending to further agitation for the taxation of church property; the abrogation of state aid to sectarian institutions; abolition of state, national, military, and prison chaplaincies; repeal of all judicial oaths, Sunday and other oppressive and unjust ecclesiastical laws; nullification of attempts to subvert our Constitution by a legal recognition of Theism in the American Magna Charta, and such other measures as will not merely thwart intended theological encroachments, but absolutely expunge from our laws, state and federal, such insidious acts as have already crept in to blot out mental freedom from our republic.

It is to be hoped that the addresses delivered will deal with the practical issues of the organization, so that there will be such an awakening of the people to these vital questions of the hour that a revival of the instinct of liberty and justice for all will necessarily result; that again from the Keystone state—the birthplace of the association—the clarion voice of freedom shall reverberate throughout the land.

Pittsburgh being situated almost in the center of a district containing many of our most distinguished workers, thinkers, and writers, besides the active host within its limits, there is little doubt that this Congress will be a glorious gathering of the forces who stand for mental liberty, as expressed in the desire for a complete Secularization of the government.

S. P. PUTNAM, Pres.,
E. A. STEVENS, Sec.,
CHAS. ECKHARD, Treas.,
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Ch. Ex. Com.,
MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com.

SOMETHING TO DO.

Christians sing, "There'll be something in heaven to do," but Freethinkers may well sing there is something to do on earth. There are wrongs to right. If indifferent Freethinkers will study the matter, they can easily see how the American Secular Union is working for equal rights and impartial liberty for every citizen in the United States of America. The work is not yet finished. No one who will give the subject honest thought can content himself by thinking that he is out of the woods, that others may follow suit, and that there is nothing to do. "Your first duty is to take care of yourselves, and if there is a surplus, with that surplus help your fellowman." There'll be something to do as long as church property and the homes of preachers and priests to the value of hundreds of millions go exempt from taxation; something to do as long as the state continues to appropriate the people's money to educational institutions where any special religion is taught; something to do till the use of the Bible in the public schools is prohibited, and till all religious services sustained by the government are abolished.

There'll be something to do till speech is free, and unbelievers permitted to enjoy equal privileges and rights with believers, instead of being outlawed as jurors and witnesses in the courts. There'll be something to do as long as millions continue to believe or claim to believe in the efficacy of prayer for rain, or any other benefit or favor; and while eighty thousand preachers—every one either deceived or a deceiver—continue to teach that there is a God who will save a credulous murderer and burn forever his skeptical victim.

W. A. CHES.

Monrovia, California.

IS IT RIGHT?

If woman should be given the ballot while she is so superstitious, the result would be disastrous. A bloody civil-war would be likely to result. Woman should not have the ballot until the holy ghost is educated out of her head. I am really sorry to believe it necessary to deprive good, intelligent women of the ballot because the holy ghost is in three-fourths of the women of the country.—Lyman Smith, Los Angeles, California.

In response to the foregoing note of Mr. Smith's I will say that every argument that will apply to man as a voter is equally applicable to woman as a voter; while she has one right that is superior to any that man has, and that is her right as mother of men. "O mother, O sisters dear! If we are lost, no victor else has destroyed us. It is by ourselves we go down to eternal night." We are the "architects of our own fortune." If we rear men to be our masters we must take upon us the yoke of the slave. "The hand that rocks the cradle rocks the world." Man has taken the advantage of woman's motherhood, and put chains upon her while she was bearing his children, and he has ever been dining it into her ears that she must be a clinging vine, a pretty doll, or a domestic drudge; that war, work and worry are his portion, and his shoulders are broad to bear, but all the while he has cunningly laid upon her the real burdens while he took the emoluments, honor, and pay. Once master of woman's person and purse, he has held his own with a relentless grip. He knew that if she became physically and financially independent, his rule would be forever at an end. But slowly and surely the right is triumphing and woman gaining ground. Now as a last resort he is shaking the bloody shirt of war and God-in-the-Constitution in her face. She cannot vote without becoming a soldier! He forgets how many thousands of old, crippled, insane men vote—men that would be rejected as totally incompetent to bear arms and mentally deficient in all that makes a true soldier, and yet their votes count as much as those of the grandest, strongest, and best.

If pious women put God in the Constitution, how about pious men? Are not the God-believers among men three-fourths of the whole number; that is, will not three-fourths of them vote for pious measures just as surely as the women would? Once we were told that if the slaves were freed, miscenegation would be the rule, and the negro would complacently seat himself in our parlor as an equal. This bugbear frightened the nation for long, long years, but when it was fairly forced, was like a ghost of the imagination—touch it and there is nothing there. The ballot will help to educate woman, and education is the surest known antidote to all religious superstitions. Slavery fosters ignorance, while freedom uplifts, educates, and refines. Even if woman by her vote puts her fetiches in the Constitution, she will outgrow them so rapidly in the fresh air of freedom that she will very soon gladly relegate them to the museums of ancient curiosities and dead faiths.

Dare to do the right, and be assured that the end will be good. Till we see civilization retrograding into savagery, we are always safe in trying to do the highest and best.

Don't crowd—the world is large enough
For me as well as you;
The door to woman open wide,
You've long withheld her due.
Be each day's record such a one
That you may well be proud:
Give each her right, give each her room,
And never try to crowd.

July 15, 1888.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

BIGOTED KNIGHTS.

A morning paper says that Arthur C. Everett has been expelled from the Knights of Labor at Wabash, Ind., on account of his Atheistic views to which he has given free expression, both publicly and in the lodge-room. Everett has taken an appeal, and his case will be heard at the State Assembly in Indianapolis next month.

Everett was formerly editor of the Labor Advocate, the official paper of the Knights in that district. It was principally through his efforts that the Wabash lodges were organized. He has always been a zealous worker in the cause of the Knights, both in establishing lodges and in advocating their doctrines.

Everett's anti-religious notions became very obnoxious in his lodge-room. He precipitated the affair by openly denouncing the members for allowing a copy of the Bible to be placed in the Assembly's reading-room. After a violent discussion he was formally and physically expelled.

Since then Everett alleges he has not only been deprived of the support of the Knights which he enjoyed as a publisher, but has been so effectually boycotted by them that he has not been able to secure any sort of employment. He has employed an attorney, and will make a vigorous effort to secure reinstatement.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made the following lecture appointments from August to October. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Spokane Falls, W.T.	Aug. 8, 9, 10	Heber, Utah.	Aug. 28, 29
Colfax, " "	" 11, 12	Denver, Col.	Sept. 2
Walla Walla, " "	" 14	Seward, Neb.	" 5-6
Pendleton, Or.	" 15	Wahoo, " "	" 7-8
Union, " "	" 16	Lincoln, " "	" 9
Emmett, Idaho.	" 18	Omaha, " "	" 10
Boise City, Idaho.	" 19	Creston, Iowa.	" 11
Ogden, Utah.	" 21	Ottumwa, " "	" 12
Morgan, " "	" 22	West Union, " "	" 16-17
Coalville, " "	" 23	Chicago, Ill.	" 23
Park City, " "	" 25	Pittsburgh, Pa.	" 30
Salt Lake City, Utah.	" 26	Secular Union Congress,	Oct. 5, 6, 7, 8
Murray, " "	" 27

THE "AUSTRALIAN FAITH HEALER."

Referring to John A. Dowie, the Australian faith healer, who has been drawing crowds to Association Hall in this city, and the First Presbyterian church at Oakland, and making a specialty everywhere of "unmasking Spiritualism," he appears to be now unmasked himself. The Oakland Tribune has been showing him up as a common scold and first-class fraud, and the Chronicle of Tuesday last contained a report of a minister in which Dr. John Thompson, Rev. M. Mathers, and others expressed a very decided opinion that the Rev. John A. Dowie was nothing else than a tramp and an impostor, pretending to work miracles, and denouncing with great bitterness all who doubted or opposed his pretensions.—"H." in the Golden Gate.

For Freethought and the A. S. U.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed find $1 more and keep my name on the list of patrons of the youngest and one of the most promising Liberal papers in this country. I despise flattery, but I think all worthy individuals and enterprises should be encouraged. I very much like the sentiment of Mr. Putnam's letter in the Truth Seeker of July 28. I am for the American Secular Union, and will be at Pittsburgh to aid in flying the colors of hope, that others may be encouraged. Very truly,
D. G. CROW.
Fort Supply, I. T., Aug. 1, 1888.

A Word From Washington Territory.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Thinking a communication from this part of the world would not be amiss, I will say a word or two.

Well, Brother Reynolds came, saw, and conquered. He gave three lectures at Skamokawa to large audiences, which were very appreciative. He is an excellent speaker, and I for one am proud to own such a one as comrade in our Secular band. We (Mr. Albert and your humble servant) went with him to Stella, where the same appreciative audiences greeted him. All the Secular literature he had was readily sold, and more could easily have been disposed of had it been at hand.

I think with Brother Putnam's coming, Liberalism will take an important onward stride in this vicinity.

May FREETHOUGHT prosper and "yerself" live to attend "yer" own funeral, is the wish of yours for U. M. L.
LIDA L. ALBERT.
Cathlamet, W. T.

The Orthodox Gentleman Backs Down.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In June, 1887, when Mr. S. P. Putnam was lecturing at Stayton, in this county, some propositions between Secularists and Orthodox, for discussion of the Secular question, fell through by reason, as I understand, of some failure on the part of the representatives of orthodoxy.

When Mr. Putnam was at Stayton again this year, one A. D. Gardner, a member of the orthodox committee in charge of Clark Braden, approached me and demanded that I "put up my man" now, for a discussion, at the same time saying that they had their "man on hand now," and intimating that the Secularists were afraid of him. As I run only one man's affairs, I told Mr. Gardner that I would do everything in my power to accommodate him and his party; and offered to meet the orthodox champion with many "indorsements," but was at once rejected as of insufficient capacity to amuse the Christian Goliath. I reminded Mr. Gardner that a little fish was easier swallowed than a big one, but I was reminded that their champion was a great man, and was not fishing for minnows. I then suggested Prof. T. J. McCleary, of Stayton, who is no "slouch," either at debating or speaking, but he received the same classification as myself at the hands (or rather the mouth) of representative Gardner. They wanted Putnam. Nobody would do but Putnam. Their champion was spoiling to get at Putnam. They knew that Mr. Putnam had refused to debate except with Christian gentlemen, and consequently would not meet Braden; therefore it was safe to pretend that they were anxious to engage him, and so employed Braden to follow him about, like a little bob-tailed cur barking at his heels, and I told Mr. Gardner so. But no one else was acceptable, and "thus endeth the first lesson." A few days afterward I wrote Mr. Gardner as follows:

AUMSVILLE, OREGON, June 28, 1888.

MR. A. D. GARDNER, Dear Sir: Please allow me to give you another opportunity of coming to time on your proposition for discussion of the issues of Secularism. You object to me as too small a fish. Allow me to call your attention to the following in your champion's hand-bill, viz., "offering to meet in public discussion any champion of Infidelity who can furnish one-tenth the indorsement he can furnish." Now, although the question before us is a Secular, and not an Infidel one (which is entirely another question), I sincerely hope that you may not crawl out at that hole, as you did from the "little fish" hole. Your "champion" requires only one-tenth the indorsement of his opponent, and may I also require that he shall possess one-tenth of those qualities which constitute a gentleman? I will, however, waive the requirement in favor of the especial champion you have "on hand," as I do not wish to bar him out, and I would not have raised the question of personal reputation at all, but he has set the example, and I become liable to be called a "fool," or a "vile wretch," if I should presume to differ with him on this subject. (See Braden's pamphlet, "Ingersoll Unmasked," page 16.)

The question and conditions I require are: "That the Bible is of superhuman origin, and is an infallible guide for faith and practice as represented by Christians; and Christianity should be entitled to the special privileges now sought to be denied it by Secularists." Christian affirms; Secularist denies. Each party shall choose an umpire, and the two shall choose a president. Each disputant shall have the largest liberty of discussion (but the negative shall not attack the Christian belief unless the affirmative by allusion or otherwise shall bring it in. This for the benefit of the affirmative).

I am willing to modify these requirements somewhat to accommodate, but they must cover the Nine Demands of Secularism. The clause referring to the "Bible" may be all stricken out to the third word "and," if required; but please allow me to call your attention to the fact that the Bible and the question of its origin or infallibility are public property, and one citizen has the same right of opinion or discussion as another.

I submit this to you, and through you to your colleagues, in all good will, but after being approached by you as I was at Stayton, I shall say publicly that you and your party have backed down if you do not come to the point. And please remember I am to meet you at Aumsville, or any other convenient place, for the reason that I am not paid, while your representative is. This, I believe, was understood between us at Stayton. Newspaper discussion will suit me if you prefer it. Please reply at your earliest convenience, and oblige,

F. S. MATTESON.

Receiving no reply, on the 12th of July I addressed Mr. Gardner as follows:

AUMSVILLE, OREGON, July 12, 1888.

A. D. GARDNER, Dear Sir: On June 28, I wrote you concerning your proposition to debate, but have as yet received no answer. Should yourself and committee consider me of not sufficient consequence to reply to, I presume there will be no impropriety in my publishing my letter to you, together with a statement of the case? If your representative is too great a "bug" to debate with Oregonians, he had best remain in Nebraska, where he is appreciated at his full value. It won't look well if he runs away from Oregon now. Respectfully, etc.,

F. S. MATTESON.

This letter brought a reply, and I received the following:

STAYTON, OREGON, July 13, 1888.

F. S. MATTESON, ESQ., AUMSVILLE, OREGON, Dear Sir: Your letter of ultimo date, together with card of 12th inst., was duly received. Owing to rush of business I have delayed to reply, not thinking that you were full and overflowing with debate, but what with due attention to the throttle-valve you might be enabled to keep your passions within due bounds, but as you seem quite bilious I hasten to reply. First, as to debate talked of in 1887, we have fully carried out our side of the proposition, as you can see in last week's Capitol Journal, 6th ult.; so if you desire a debate yourself, I would respectfully refer you to Clark Braden, who will give you any sized dose desired. Inclosed you will find his challenge, and he is ready to practice exactly what he preaches in every instance. Trusting this may be satisfactory, respectfully yours,

A. D. GARDNER.

The inclosed "challenge" referred to is a printed leaflet containing not a question covering the Demands of Secularism, but Braden's own bombastic "Proposition," hedged with "Rules" of such one-sidedness that no one of common sense and the least knowledge of debating could or would accept, which is no doubt what its originator intended when it was written. And this precious leaflet has been scattered all over Oregon, and furnishes the foundation for any amount of Christian bragging and misrepresentation of Freethinkers.

"Shall sectarian religion be united with, or have special privileges in, the state?" will cover all the issue that I can see between Christianity and Secularism; and I don't think the Secularists will hesitate to discuss this question at all reasonable times, and under all reasonable conditions.

The following is my reply to Mr. Gardner:

AUMSVILLE, OREGON, July 16, 1888.

A. D. GARDNER, Dear Sir: The "Epistle of Gardner, the apostle, to the heathen," of date '13 inst., is received. It is very characteristic—just what one might expect from an ignorant, foolish fanatic, who is driven into a corner. First you propose to me a discussion. Then, when I "talk business," you refer me to some one else, as though I were the one who had hunted you. You propose to me to skin your skunk. When I accept, you say, "There is the skunk; if you want to skin him, catch him." And you call that "fully carrying out your side of the proposition." Yes; I "see." The fact is, your Christian representative is a noisy braggart, a pestiferous coward, who goes dodging about the country, putting his backers in a false position, and will eventually leave them in the lurch. He dares not debate the question at issue on half-way square terms, as he now has several opportunities of doing, to my knowledge. That he is a fair Christian representative I admit, and as such, Secularists are ready to meet him on equal conditions and the question at issue. Not otherwise. In the mean time, I hope you will not object if I disregard the scriptural injunction, "neither cast your pearls before swine," and recommend to you the next time you tackle any one for debate to take a good look at him first, and see if he means business. By so doing you may save yourself the humiliation of another back-down. Go over to Silverton, next Sunday week, and hear C. B. Reynolds. Challenge him. I bear you no ill feeling, Gardner; I only regard you as having acted unadvisedly, if not to say foolishly, in this matter, of which further experience will probably convince you. Very respectfully, your personal friend,

F. S. MATTESON.

P.S.—Unless you make reasonable objection, I will probably publish this matter sometime when I have leisure to write it up. It will make good reading.

M.

And that is the last I have heard from Mr. Gardner. No reflection is intended to be cast upon Mr. Gardner, who, aside from his orthodox prejudices, is a good man. But the blame attaches to the false and vicious system of religion wherein he has been educated, and thereby rendered susceptible of being placed in a false position, and humbugged by such moral dead beats as Clark Braden.

Secularism is either right or wrong. If Christianity is right, then it should be united with the state, and have the special privileges it demands. If it is wrong, then it should be totally separated from state affairs, and support itself and stand or fall on its own merits. And no effort to discourage or prevent discussion of its merits and demerits will be successful. The time has now come when American citizens of independent minds will openly discuss any question of public policy, religious, social, or otherwise. Believing Secularism to be right, I believe it is right to advocate and defend it. I believe Secularism has come to stay, and its issues will be the most prominent ones before the American people in the future. It is only a continuance of that great reformation begun by the invention of printing, and is destined to continue until mankind achieve perfect mental liberty, and the reign of reason, science, and philosophy shall be throughout the civilized world.

Aumsville, Oregon, July 30, 1888.

F. S. MATTESON.

As to the Goats and a Hole in the Fence.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I was somewhat astonished to find an article published in your valuable and to me always welcome paper, of July 28, giving us a one-sided, threadbare story about "two goats and a hole in a fence;" proceedings which are claimed to have occurred in a far-off land, the state of Sinaloa, Mexico. As to the article itself, I have only to say that I am able, by official statements in my possession, to give quite a different coloring to that brutal goat story, provided I thought I had a particular right to occupy valuable space in your paper with matter for which the majority of your readers do not care a dot. Allow me to say this much, that, in my humble opinion, a man who thinks he is playing a big trump when loudly proclaiming that he "thanked his God more than once" for this or any other thing should look to different papers from FREETHOUGHT in which to have his own or his friends' grievances brought to the notice of the general public; especially when written, as is clearly shown in this instance, with malice aforethought.

HENRY DOPMAN.

San Lorenzo, Aug. 7.

FREETHOUGHT is a bright, ably-edited, nicely printed, 12-page Liberal journal published at San Francisco. Filled to the brim with excellent reading matter, it is exceedingly interesting and valuable, and those who subscribe for it will thank us for calling their attention to it. Samples may be seen at this office.—Plain-dealer.

Now is a favorable season for subscribing for FREETHOUGHT.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 339 Eddy st., S. F.

* *

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS.

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

HAND-BOOK OF THE LICK OBSERVATORY

OF THE

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,

—BY—

EDWARD HOLDEN, LL.D.,

Director of the Observatory.

A volume of 135 pages, 12mo., printed on heavy paper, and bound in flexible cloth covers. Besides likenesses of

Professor Holden and James Lick,

it contains Twenty Views, Drawings, and Illustrations of the Locality, the Machinery, and the Apparatus connected with the great Astronomical station. The Table of Contents includes:

- I. Information for Visitors.
- II. Sketch of the Life of James Lick.
- III. A Visit to Mt. Hamilton.
- IV. History of the Lick Observatory.
- V. Description of the Building.
- VI. Description of the Instruments.
- VII. The Work of the Observatory.
- VIII. Telescopes.
- IX. Poem: To the Unmounted Lens.
- X. Astronomical Photography.
- XI. Clocks and Time-Keeping.
- XII. The Principal Observatories of the World.

By mail 80 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

AMUSEMENTS.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE,

Mission Street.

Sunday Night Only ..... August 12
GRAND TESTIMONIAL BENEFIT

....TO....

THOS. H. ANDREWS,

Tendered by the Charming and Captivating

—NELLIE MCHENRY—

—NELLIE MCHENRY—

Through the courtesy of Messrs. Webster & Maeder,

SALSBURY'S TROUBADOURS

Making their Final Appearance in

THE HUMMING BIRD!

Fun, Wit, Music, Laughter.

POPULAR PRICES.....75c, 50c, 25c, and 15c.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,

Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools Price, 5 cents.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENER, Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS.

By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" needed valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

For the Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS, CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.

33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS,

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting. American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50; $13 50; $14 50; 5 ounce, $15 00; 6 ounce, $17 50
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17,
$18, $19 50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $1
being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best
14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest
style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24 50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies'
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually $6.10 to $3. $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case.
Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1;
best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set
best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12.
Large field glasses, $3, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free.
Best Work. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
Badges in PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of cut and smaller,
two-thirds size. War-
ranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2 75, $3 50. Large,
$3 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $8, $10; and chains up to $25. De-
mand daily increasing.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt,"
"Thomas Paine," "Individuality,"
and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.
Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois,"
"The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander
Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a
Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents;
cloth, $1 25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain
cloth, $1 25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25
cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll,
Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F.
Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents.
$1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks
of the New York Observer. By Robert G.
Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price,
5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size
octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Tributes. "Tribute to His Brother," "The Vision of War," "The Grant Banquet Toast"
and "Little Harry Miller's Grave," printed on heavy toned paper, 18x22, illuminated border, and in large, clear type, suitable for framing; four to any address for 50 cents, or either one for 15 cents.

Prose Poems and Selections. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," and all the famous tributes, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, table-talks and day-to-day conversations of the author. Fine steel portrait and autograph facsimile. Price, in cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2 50.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—*L. K.
Washburn.*

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00.
"The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story.
Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—*Dr. Henry
W. Bellows.*

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A
Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price,
25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale,
would be a work of which I confess myself
utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."
—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr.
Putnam as a genuine poet."—*The Universe,
San Francisco.*

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents.
"Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible,
and witty without being coarse. On the whole,
it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO. BALDWIN HOTEL.

OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.,

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

"Zum Walfisch."

THE WHALE CHAS. A. JONAS, Proprietor.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars,

Cold Lager and Sharp Steam Beers.

24 THIRD ST., Near Market,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert
G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 33.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - AUGUST 18, 1888

A MAN stands on the wharf at Sausalito on Sundays and endeavors to moderate the rush of the crowd through the narrow passage where tickets are taken, by vociferating, "Don't push. There's plenty of time; the world wasn't made in a week!" This is a bold, blank denial of the biblical record, and should be looked into.

SOME of the heathen on the southern islands are putting their souls in danger through a blunder of the missionaries, who, going thither to carry the gospel, neglected to take account of the changed chronology caused by crossing the line. The natives are, therefore, working on Sunday and keeping Monday as the Sabbath.

A EUROPEAN physician has dried the body of a man in an oven, like a brick in a kiln, and "after desiccation the body weighed only twelve pounds." This shows that a man weighing one hundred and sixty-eight pounds contains about one hundred and fifty-six pounds of water. When, therefore, he was made of "the dust of the earth," it is evident that he required considerable irrigating from the ditch as well.

BEFORE Courtlandt Palmer died he wrote that he did not wish to be buried from any Christian church and did not wish any Christian hymn sung. He thought that would be sufficient to warn his surviving relatives against having religious services over his remains. And yet it is on record that the Rev. R. Heber Newton read the Episcopal mummery at the funeral. They could not be fair with him even in death.

THE Rev. John Hannon of the Centenary church preached a remarkable sermon last Sunday. His subject was "Bulling the Market." The particular market referred to by the Rev. Mr. Hannon was the religious one. He seemed to realize, and to know that his congregation realized, the depressed state of the religious market just at this time, when both Field and Gladstone have lost saddle and stirrup before the lance of Ingersoll. But what Mr. Hannon contended for was that the time to invest is when stocks are down. He instanced several cases where men had invested largely at such times and had been great gainers thereby; but he seemed to entirely forget the still larger number of cases where stocks have gone down and been sold for almost nothing, and the owners of which grew old and gray and finally died waiting for the rise. The reverend gentleman advised his friends to invest in religion now, as a "bull" movement is about to be inaugurated, and those who have confidence in his tips will probably go in, but others are looking for the bottom to drop out of the business altogether.

THE Rev. Mr. Dutcher, of the Methodist church at Jersey City, N. J., is a diplomat. Becoming displeased at some act of his sexton, who is a dwarf, he proceeded to give the offender a drubbing. The sexton threatened arrest, but the Rev. Mr. Dutcher preached a powerful sermon on the blessings of forgiveness, and the prosecution dropped. Subsequently, however, the case was reopened, and the courts as well as the church will investigate.

THE Boston Pilot gives the following statistics of Roman Catholic strength in New York city: Seventy-five parish churches, 40 chapels, 300 priests, 300 brothers, 2,000 religious women, 40,000 pupils in colleges, academies, and parochial schools, 15,000 inmates of hospitals and orphanages, $30,000,000 invested in property and buildings, and 800,000 adherents within city limits. It is worthy of note that this $30,000,000 property does not pay a cent in the way of taxes, and that for the 15,000 inmates of hospitals and orphanages the church draws in the neighborhood of $100 per head from the state.

NEWS AND NOTES.

I arrived at Cheney, W. T., early in the morning, and was somewhat nonplused at the sleepy aspect of the place, although I was pretty sleepy myself. I supposed it to be a booming western town. It has been such once upon a time. It was county-seat and the railroad made it promising. But the star of Spokane Falls prevailed, and the latter became the county-seat, and the advantage of the railroad accrued to it, and this favored spot appears to be the Denver of the Pacific coast. The mines of the Cœur d'Alene are enormously rich and capital is coming there with gigantic enterprise. Cheney, however, has a future. The country about it is productive and is rapidly filling up. The wheat lands are among the best of the coast. About thirty bushels to the acre is the average yield this year. In some places there are fifty bushels to the acre. Without doubt a railroad will run from Cheney to Ellensburg, through a splendid agricultural region, and this will give Cheney a fresh start in the race of prosperity, and I guess it will keep going on. At present the churches seem to have considerable sway, for they are adapted to dull times, but when things are lively and the locomotive rings in the new, then the place will improve, for the locomotive is that kind of motive which induces to broad and general affairs.

Dr. F. A. Pomeroy was the first man I met, and I felt sure that I should find sympathy here, from his kindly greeting. He is not an iconoclast, but thoroughly radical. He leads in his profession, and, in a quiet way, has the courage of his convictions, and stands by the colors whenever necessary.

L. B. Jewell came next upon my list of acquaintances. His name indicates his business. Like my friend Wettstein, he keeps time, and is never behind time. He has the genial spirit of the watchmaker of Rochelle, and they would make excellent companions. Friend Jewell is what his name declares, and without his earnest effort I am afraid that we should not have held the fort. He did the business and there was no failure.

Friend Hall also put his shoulder to the wheel, and was not afraid of work; and as we tramped together beneath "the Red White and Blue," so now we could be soldiers in the new American Republic of Freethought.

Paul Bocion gave the use of his hall without price, and I found him a generous Liberal. I think he put up nearly the first house in Cheney, and his first establishment was a tent. He is a frontiersman of the right stamp.

Professor Stevens is one of the pioneers of education in this country. He has been superintendent of schools and has traveled thousands of miles on horseback in his arduous service. Education to him has been the spirit of freedom.

Sperry and Everson, prominent business men of the place, are brave and true comrades for Freethought and victory.

Friends McFarrell and Sessions are of the Spiritualist camp, but noble Liberals, ready to do service here, whatever may be the hereafter.

Other friends I found, and beneath the sleepy outside there were sparkles of life and progress, and Cheney has a warm place in my heart and hope. Whom should I see—of glorious Scotch Presbyterian descent, and from Graham of Claverhouse, and famous Londonderry—on the sunny afternoon of Friday, Aug. 3, but my big and cheerful friend and mighty ally, William Graham, of Waverly, W. T. I had known him for years by correspondence, and his wife, Mrs. Maggie Hope Graham, contributor to the Truth Seeker, and now it was a delight indeed to shake hands with him, face to face. What a worker this man is! I don't believe he would be daunted even with the twelve labors of Hercules himself. He would go through them all and come out on top. I had no fears of failure, the moment I saw this sturdy coadjutor.

Again fortune favored me in this little hamlet. Peter Selde and his daughter, Mrs. Ed. Ramms, and her baby, and H. L. Wilson, came all the way to the lectures, from Davenport, forty miles off. Only think of it, a baby traveling that distance to attend a Freethought lecture! Was ever a Christian baby like that? No, not even if it were an angel and had wings. This pretty baby is for this world, and long may it live, and when it is fifty years old may I have the fortune to give this adventurous Freethinker another lecture, and then I shall be ready to depart in peace. I will take this merry child as a good omen of old age.

My Davenport friends are indeed enthusiastic and generous, and I find myself constrained to visit their home on my return trip sometime in November. I cannot pass by a place that sends so hospitable a delegation to a Liberal gathering.

The first meeting, on Friday evening, was well attended. A young Methodist minister, after the lecture, complained that I did not attack any of the vital points of Christianity, and so gave him no chance to combat. I told him I had attacked the doctrine of total depravity. "That is not vital," he said. I answered that it was vital, for if man was not totally depraved but was able to save himself, there was no need of a savior and hence Christ was useless and the whole scheme of redemption valueless. He admitted then that total depravity was a vital point, and retired for further consideration. On the next evening he was present. The hall was full. I gave "The Bible and Modern Thought" and attacked all that was vital to orthodoxy, but at the conclusion he had nothing to say. Another minister was with him, but they both departed in peace.

The attendance was encouraging and the good will of friends at this point will not soon be forgotten. I must put down Cheney for future work as the grand army moves on.

Friend Graham roused me a little after two o'clock in the morning, and off we went to Waverly. It was cold, and when we struck the prairies I was fairly chilled through. The sun was just rising, but in a thick bank of clouds which it took an hour for the day-king to surmount. I don't wonder that people worship the sun. That is the kind of a god that I would believe in and thank, if there were any to thank. What is so beautiful as the sun? How it transforms nature! How its heat cheers and its beams exhilarate as they dance over the thousand hills, and make the waters shine and the grass glitter!

In the first beams of day the smoke was rolling from the bachelor residence of J. Schur, and his hearty grip answered to the warmth of the now far kindling sun. He is always at the front and keeps the torch of Freethought blazing.

It was eight o'clock when we arrived at the store of P. Gimble & Son, who are not afraid to keep open on a Sunday. Friend Gimble is a full-blooded Liberal, and of the famous Antislavery host. He was one of the three who voted for John P. Hall, in Peoria, Ill. This was his first vote for president. He believes in Liberty as fervidly as ever. All his boys are of the same stock, and they are live men. P. Gimble is from the vicinity of Peoria and Galesburg, Ill., and he remembers Ingersoll when he first began to be known, and it delights him to give reminiscences of our world-famous chief. He was at a session of court when the news came that Ingersoll was not nominated for governor of Illinois. There was universal disappointment among the lawyers, who knew the worth and power of Ingersoll. "He's too independent," said one. The old judge of the court answered, "Ingersoll has plenty of brains and he can afford to be independent." How few politicians are worthy of that compliment!

Waverly is a bright little place amid ample wheat fields. There are half a dozen houses, a store, blacksmith shop, church, and school house. The church was built mainly by the Liberals, and so its use was granted for the lectures. I doubt if this happens again, though. A large portion of the people of this country are Liberal. Waverly is an uncongenial place for revivals. They tried one in the spring. Nine ministers were in battle array. They struggled valiantly, but not a soul was brought into the bosom of the church. They were obliged to succumb. The clergyman who made the closing prayer of the occasion expressed himself as follows: "O Lord, it is a hard fight. We give it up. We turn it over to thee, and if thou dost win, O Lord, we will give to thee all the glory." Evidently that clergyman was not in a frame of mind to go his bottom dollar on the triumph of the Lord in Waverly.

We held our first meeting in the grove by Hangman's Creek, a soul-shuddering name. Four men, Indians, were hanged alongside its banks, and hence the name. I must confess that I do not like the sound, though it does smack of reality. Now that electricity takes the place of hanging they might call it the Electric Current. That would suggest all that was necessary of early history.

The little grove was crowded. There were five hundred people present, from ten, fifteen, and twenty miles around. Friend A. J. Carr came all the way from Idaho. A better soldier never drew breath.

W. C. Goff, who was the first Infidel in the country ten years ago and has had to bear the brunt of the battle, Capt. R. S. Davenport, A. K. Clark, who introduced me at the lecture, J. T. Helm, A. I. Loomis, U. E. Lemon, B. F. Dashill, John Fleming, and others are earnest supporters.

From Spangle, Rockford, Latah, etc., friends gather, and there was also quite a large sprinkling of Christians, and they were welcome. In the evening the church was so crowded that I had to stand at the door and speak to those outside as well as inside, and all the windows were full of faces. On Monday evening the Secular Union of Waverly was organized, with the following names: Wm. Graham, Maggie Hope Graham, Ed. Collins, Mrs. Nettie Collins, Fred Buckmaster, Matt. Buckmaster, W. E. Lemon, J. M. Covington, John Carr, J. Schur, E. E. Gimble, Julia Buckmaster, Wm. Rose, Kingbaum, Al. Gimble, Lewes Lindstrom, J. T. Helm, F. Dashill, P. Gimble, Thos. Secrist, Henry Weaver, Rudolf Andrett, Lewis Beahm, W. C. Goff, and Wm. Fisk. These are representative names and mean something for future work. This is a land of promise. There will some day be a net work of railroads, and happy homes will shine all over these now golden prairies. There is excellent material here for intellectual and social development. Freethought will have solid support. The men and women who represent it are those who earnestly believe in progress and in making this world happier, to whom the improvement of humanity is an inspiration and who will take no backward step. I think that Waverly will soon send greeting to Silvertown, with its colors flying over a Freethought hall.

Tuesday friend Graham and myself take our dusty way to Spokane Falls, amid the music of a glittering harvest. We find in the golden evening a pleasant sojourning place with Dr. J. A. Knowles and his son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. M. R. Doty, amid the pine woods and fresh-mown hay and the song of birds. It is a happy place, where one can find rest for body and mind. Dr. Knowles is a thorough radical and, with professional skill, can give many a sharp cut to the humbugs of the day. He is a genial companion.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Spokane Falls, Aug. 8, 1888.

A FREETHINKER'S BRAVE DEATH.

If there is one falsehood more palpable than all others it is the tale told by ecclesiastics about the death of the Freethinker. According to the church every distinguished unbeliever has died in an agony of remorse, shuddering with terror. There is no foundation for this assertion, but that does not prevent its being made over and over again.

In the Freethought ranks for the past dozen years, we have had an opportunity to become familiar with the last moments of many so-called Infidels. We never knew one of them to weaken, or to express regret for his unbelief. D. M. Bennett fell asleep in the arms of nature with no apprehension for the morrow. So far from regretting the work he had done, he regretted only that he could not continue it. The same is true of Stephen Pearl Andrews, and of others. So invariable has been the result of our observation in this way that we can say, with almost absolute certainty of being truthful, that no Freethinker ever did recant or greet with fear the approach of death.

Courtlandt Palmer added another example to those of the many whose courage at the last moment has refuted the lies of the pulpit. He felt that he could not survive the operation which resulted in his death. Yet, facing eternity and the unknown, these were his last words: "The general impression is that Freethinkers are afraid of death. I want you one and all to tell the whole world that you have seen a Freethinker die without the least fear of what the hereafter may be."

And so he died. Compare with this sentiment the final words of Christ, "My God, my God! why hast thou forsaken me?"

OUR PATRIOTIC GOVERNOR.

Other states may have governors to be proud of, and other governors may be proud of their states, but if we know the sentiment of the Californian heart, there is no other heart that so swells with pride when it contemplates the occupant of its gubernatorial chair. And what governor has ever paid so glowing a tribute to his state as that which has just emanated from the pen of Governor Waterman? For a long time the governor has had it in his mind to set apart Admission Day, the anniversary of California's admission to the sisterhood of states, as a public holiday. August 10, 1888, saw the consummation of this important step, and the act is accompanied by a document. It is no cut-and-dried state document, made up of the legal phraseology of a past age. It is a panegyric, a pæan. After the necessary legal formality is dispatched, Governor Waterman says:

"Business pursuits, the strife for place and power, the struggle in the battle of life for promotion, supremacy, and fortune, should not entirely obliterate the sentiment of state pride and affection, for in my judgment the highest sentiment that a community can express is gratitude for those endowments which contribute to happiness, contentment, and prosperity, and gives those interested an enviable position before the people of the world."

Hear, hear! Never mind the little hitch in grammar between the substantive "endowments" and the verb "gives." This is no time for carping criticism. Let us drink deeper from the flow of eloquence:

"This holiday, which by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution I am empowered to appoint, is entirely in consonance with my own views. I believe, and fully so, in thus commemorating the most marked era in the history of the state, giving us, as it did, the grandest and proudest heritage that ever fell to the lot of man, laying the foundation of a structure which, as the years are numbered, approaches a condition that will eventuate a building up of an empire on this western confine of our beloved country that will be a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, giving token of our fealty, loyalty, and devotion as a people to America, her flag, her institutions, and her destiny."

None of the things here mentioned seems to follow that which precedes it by any sort of logical necessity, but what of that? It is always the unexpected that gives greatest pleasure, and certainly nothing could be more unexpected than that the condition of a structure should eventuate a building up of an empire to be a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, the said cloud and pillar giving token of our fealty, loyalty, etc. Again:

"I might close this paper without anything further than those necessary details that contribute to give it force and vitality, but in connection I may be pardoned for adding a few words in obedience to a commendable state pride that actuates me at this time. Other states have their natal days which doubtless are appropriately recognized, but in my humble opinion no other state in the Union is more justified in expressing pride and gratification in what she has already done; rejoicing with exceeding gladness in her present, and looking forward to a glorious realization in her future, than California."

A little something in not too pronounced a way as touching our superior climate might have been worked into the foregoing paragraph, but as the document is put forth by the governor unaccompanied by any request for a raise of salary, we will not complain. Rather let us read on:

"No people on the face of the earth are more susceptible of self-government than those of California. There are none more liberty-loving, loyal, or patriotic. Ours is a state that is thoroughly and completely self-sustaining. There is not a foot of land within her borders that cannot be utilized for the benefit of the people. Her educational facilities are peerless. Her press, her judiciary, her schools, her pulpits, her artisans and mechanics, and her business men, are an honor in either of the capacities under which they have enlisted and to which reference is made in this."

"Susceptible" of self-government is good, but "capable" would have been none too strong a word to use in this place. The governor does not want to claim too much. Self-sustaining we are indeed. The name of a California firm may not be stamped upon a great variety of manufactured articles, but we pay for them ourselves—something like twice their cost—so we are self-sustaining, though the expense is large. Her land—is it not utilized? Ask the real estate speculator. Her educational facilities—vide Governor Waterman! Her press—the juice of the grape flows from it as from a perennial fount. Her judiciary, her schools (which might have been considered previously under the head of educational facilities), her pulpits (ah, her pulpits!), her artisans and mechanics, and her business men—these all are indeed, as Governor Waterman somewhat vaguely generalizes, "an honor in either of the capacities under which they have enlisted and to which reference is made in this." Yet once more:

"In no other state in the Union are there more homesteads paid for by the efforts of honest labor than in California, where the one who has worked at the bench, dug in the trenches of advancing progress, assisted to rear the magnificent buildings which beautify and adorn the state, or engaged in whatever manual or physical labor that has distinguished his day's calling, can, after his task is ended, wend his way to his own home, and rest himself for the recurring day of work and labor under his own 'vine and fig tree.'"

Listen, all other states! California, with a population of 750,000, has more homesteads paid for by honest labor than New York with five millions. Figures cannot lie. Still again, and finally:

"And so I might go on and enumerate countless reasons for the course to be pursued in the matter which calls this into requisition; but I will conclude by saying that her escutcheon is without speck or blemish, and the child born upon her soil is endowed with a priceless legacy in birth-place. Therefore it is right and proper that we should celebrate the day which gave California birth, and with such appropriate and impressive ceremonies as will live forever in the memory of those participating. And no official act of mine, since exercising the power vested in me, has afforded me more heartfelt pleasure and satisfaction than the issuance of this proclamation."

And who would not take pleasure, and even pride, in such a document? It must fill every son of the state with both. It must fill him also with wonder, though, to know why the governor of a state having no Sabbath laws should adjourn the celebration of Admission Day to Monday, the 10th, because the 9th happens to fall on Sunday.

THE law condemns the man or woman
Who steals a goose from off a common,
But lets the greater felon loose
Who steals the common from the goose.—Old Rhyme.

MUCH encouragement is drawn by the New York Independent from the fact that the church in the United States gained 774,861 communicants during the past year. Of these 200,000 were Roman Catholics. The Truth Seeker makes this deduction: "The Roman Catholic increase naturally comes from immigration and family increase. Without that the net increase was only 574,861 communicants. This is at the rate of 4.35 to every church, 6.6 to every minister, and one to every 21 communicants, if the Independent has ciphered rightly. In other words, it has taken a church, nearly a whole minister, and twenty-one church-members to haul four sinners and thirty-five hundredths of another sinner off the coals, supposing the gain to be all from conversions. And what did it cost? Close calculation is impossible, as church expenses vary from tens of thousands for the marble cathedral to hundreds for the backwoods church barn, and the salaries of the preachers run down from Archbishop Corrigan's annual fortune of forty or fifty thousand dollars to the country parson's three hundred and a donation party. Average it up and the expense of a church may be called a thousand dollars, and the preacher's salary another thousand—say two thousand dollars for less than five saved sinners—over four hundred dollars apiece! Miracle of cheapness! pleasing marvel of progress!"

THE Central Congregational church of Tottenville, Staten Island, N. Y., is about to lose its pastor and founder, Rev. Thomas B. Bett, whose resignation has been asked for by the congregation, tendered and accepted. The cause of this action is said to be the clergyman's abuse of his wife. Some time ago Mrs. Bett left her husband and went to her mother's house in Philadelphia. He is said to have induced her to come back by telegraphing her that one of the children was dangerously ill. Since her return it is alleged that he has maltreated her. It is asserted that Bett struck his wife across the mouth with such force that her teeth cut through her lower lip. When remonstrated with about his conduct, Bett replied that he had a right to slap his wife, as the law allowed him that privilege. She threatened to have him arrested. Every time he leaves the house he takes the children with him and locks up his wife's clothing, so that she cannot leave the house during his absence. All this comes about through the failure of Mrs. Bett to remember the time-honored divine saw, "Wives, submit yourselves unto your husbands."

A CLOUD LIFTED.

It is with considerable grief that I have read of late the published reports attacking the character of my friend, W. R. Colby, the slate-writer with whom I had two sittings. It is true that Mr. Colby failed to produce writing between the slates that Mr. John McGlashan and I screwed together, but I do not regard that fact as militating against Mr. Colby's character. I could not write between them myself without taking the screws out, and yet I am ready to prosecute to the fullest extent of a large club any man who attacks my character as his has been attacked.

Among the charges brought against Brother Colby are the following, to wit, that is to say:

1. That in Texas he was known as the Rev. W. J. or J. W. Rains or Raines.
2. That he bucked the tiger, i.e., gambled.
3. That he conducted a successful revival at Hearne, Texas.
4. That he robbed the mail train at that place.
5. That he was convicted and sentenced to five years' imprisonment, and was pardoned out by President Grant.

These charges originated with Mr. Bundy, of Chicago, who publishes the Religio-Philosophical Journal, and who has adopted the rule of never getting out a number of his paper without slandering somebody. Sometimes he kills two or more birds with one stone, as it were, by slandering several people in the same issue.

As I have been observed going in and coming out of Mr. Colby's house frequently of late, and might be compromised on that account, I resolved to see him about the matter, and to that end I visited him last Saturday. Mr. Colby was at home, and, though dinner was nearly ready, he at once granted me an interview. He was slightly embarrassed at first when I mentioned the object of my call, but was placed at his ease immediately by my inquiring if he had ever been in jail. I added that it was none of my business, and he agreed with me, and having thus reached common ground we conversed freely, and he confessed that incarceration had been no portion of his experience.

I then asked, "Were you ever known as the Rev. W. J. Rains?" He said no, he never bore that name.

Q. Is your name Wm. R. Colby? A. Yes: Wm. Rufus (not Rains) Colby.

Q. Were you ever in Texas? A. No.

Q. Consequently you never conducted a successful revival and train robbery at that place? A. No; my revivals were not attended with success.

Q. Then you were once a Baptist minister? A. Yes. I was ordained a Baptist minister while living in Ohio, May 25, 1875.

Q. The account says that at that time you were in jail for mail robbery. You doubtless perceive the discrepancy. A. The discrepancy is in the account.

Q. I notice in the charges you are accused of having shot at Mr. John F. Lippard near Grafton, W. Va., in 1878-9. A. At that time I was keeping a house of correction at Lawrence, Mass. I never attempt long shots of that kind.

[Mr. Colby here showed an envelope addressed to him at Lawrence, Mass.; also a notice with regard to dues in the Knights of Pythias dated Lawrence, Mass., July 10, 1879.]

Q. You never knew Rains? A. Never heard of him.

Q. How do you account for the fact that the people of Hearne, Texas, recognize the photograph of yourself, sent them by Bundy, as Parson Rains? A. I don't account for it. Bundy may have sent them Rains's photograph.

We talked some further about various things. I asked Mr. Colby if he ever tried his fortune on the green cloth, and he admitted that he had on occasions touched the harp gently in that direction, though he did not claim to be more than an amateur at it. As to the talked-of arrest, Mr. Colby said he had no apprehension of it. The dispatches announced that officers were on their way here from Chicago, but that is nonsense. The Chicago police could have nothing to do with the matter, as it came within the jurisdiction of the United States marshal at Austin, Texas. Furthermore, since Parson Rains had been pardoned for the offense the law had nothing more to do with the case.

I felt greatly relieved to find that Mr. Colby had never conducted a successful revival in Texas, and that he had no hand in robbing the mail. I have taken no stock in the reports, and have not printed them, though they have been forwarded to this office for that purpose from various quarters. I would rather publish a two-column vindication than a stickful of accusation any time.

Mr. Colby has retained a lawyer to give him legal advice. He thinks some of prosecuting his libelers, but the knowledge that Bundy isn't worth a red cent is discouraging. Besides, Mr. Colby says no man wants everything he has ever done yanked into the sight of an indiscriminating public. Here I sympathize with him. Since I stole Philena Cowdery's grapes in Westmoreland, N. H., in the fall of '73, I have always feared the result of an investigation of my career. Let us draw the veil of charity over the past. If every man's history were printed on his forehead we would all be Quakers and keep our hats on in public. M.

OUR CAMPAIGN OUTLINED.

Politician, politician, yours has been received to-day,
Asking us the leading question, in a confidential way,
How much space in FREETHOUGHT's columns we can give to this campaign,

And how much remuneration we should hope thereby to gain.

Politician, politician, would you tempt us, then, to join
In the race of rogues for office with the jingle of your coin?
With your bar'l of shining metal, head knocked out and bung-hole gone,
Would you hire us as your ally in the conflict coming on?

Lend us, then, your ear a moment, stimulate your torpid brain,
Yield us your polite attention, while we outline our campaign.
We are first for taxing churches everywhere they are exempt;
Abolishing all state-paid chaplains. Will you join in this attempt?

In the interests of justice, in the interests of peace,
We ask that appropriations for sectarian uses cease;
That the Bible as a text-book be not forced upon our youth,
And that public schools inculcate only demonstrated truth.

We demand that the appointment of thanksgiving days, and fast,
Be suspended as but relics of a superstitious past.
We demand that oaths and "swearing" from our courts of law be sped,
And a simple affirmation substituted in their stead;

That all sabbatarian statutes be repealed without delay,
And that freedom reign on Sunday as on any other day;
That, in fact, all shreds and remnants of religious law shall go
From the statutes of the nation. Will you help to make it so?

Then there are some local issues that should be attended to,
If you'll put them in your platform we'll co-operate with you.
First, we want some purer water—give it to us in a flood;
We will pay you for the liquid, but we kick at buying mud.

Will you pledge us safer pavements than the treacherous cobblestones;
Safer sidewalks than the planks that tear our shoes and crack our bones?
Will you rout the gambling-houses of our Asiatic host?
Will you close the dives and brothels all along our Barbary Coast?

Will you raid the cheap-John auctions that allure the passer-by
Into purchasing gold watches, changed for brass ones on the sly?
Watch the papal institutions—where the orphans taste of hell
And are starved to death and beaten—like the one at San Rafael?

Politician, politician, state your issues—make them plain—
And if these are found among them, we will join in your campaign!
M.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made the following lecture appointments from August to October. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Pendleton, Or.....	Aug.....15	Denver.....	Col.....	Sept.....	2
Union.....	Or.....	Seward.....	Neb.....	".....	5-6
Emmett,....	Idaho.....	Wahoo.....	".....	".....	7-8
Boise City..	Idaho.....	Lincoln.....	".....	".....	9
Ogden.....	Utah.....	Omaha.....	".....	".....	10
Morgan.....	".....	Creston.....	Iowa.....	".....	11
Coalville.....	".....	Ottumwa.....	".....	".....	12
Park City.....	".....	West Union.....	".....	".....	16-17
Salt Lake City, Utah.....	".....	Chicago.....	Ill.....	".....	23
Murray.....	".....	Pittsburgh.....	Pa.....	".....	30
Heber, Utah.....	".....	Secular Union Congress.		Oct. 5, 6, 7, 8

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Fresno had a $150,000 on Sunday morning last.—Last Sunday the crowd at the Haight street ball grounds rose up and mobbed the umpire for making "rank" decisions.—The executive officer of the Hawaiian board of health says that a casual inspection of Chinatown leads him to believe that at least 300 lepers are domiciled in this city.—The report of the board of health shows that during July there were 958 deaths in this state out of a population of 707,850.—A Mexican named Benito Maldonado had some horses stolen from his place at Ranchito, Los Angeles county. Benito and his son and a constable chased the thieves, overtook them at Bakersfield, shot one of them in the wrist, brought the two into camp, and lodged them in the Kern county jail.—The senate committee on military affairs at Washington has authorized Senator Stewart to report the bill for providing for the ascertaining in an authentic form of all facts connected with the claims of California, Nevada, and Oregon for moneys expended during the late war, and in suppressing Indian disturbances during the same period. California's claim is in the neighborhood of $4,500,000; Nevada's, $400,000; and Oregon's, over $500,000.—Outrages are being committed by roving bands of Apache marauders in Arizona.—The memorial adopted at a mass meeting of San Francisco citizens asking for the impeachment of Sabin and Sawyer, the federal judges at at this port who run the Chinese immigrant mill, has reached Washington and has been referred to a sub-committee of the judiciary committee.—Superintendent of Schools Anderson has forwarded his annual report to Superintendent of Public Instruction Hoitt, from which the following statistics are taken: Number of schools—High schools, 2; commercial school, 1; grammar schools, 16; primary schools, 44; evening schools, 5. Total, 68. Enrollment—Number of boys enrolled, 22,607; girls, 19,723. Total, 42,330. Average number belonging, 32,083.5; average daily attendance, 30,190.7; commercial school, 313; evening schools, 3,357; high schools, 1,082; grammar schools, 10,146; primary schools, 27,432.—Charles Crocker, the millionaire railroad president, died at Monterey last Monday.

General Sheridan was buried at Washington on the 11th with Roman Catholic mummery, Cardinal Gibbons officiating.—Blaine arrived at New York last week and was received by a large crowd, to whom he made his tariff speech.—Prof. C. H. Coy, who was prominent in the religious and social societies of Belvidere, N. J., and popular as a teacher of music and leader of a church choir, disappeared last Saturday, leaving his wife and child penniless. He was a leader in church work, until recently it became noised about that he was unfaithful to his marriage vows. Before leaving he sold all his wife's furniture and stripped the house everything portable.—Delegates to the national convention of the American party are in Washington.—Lawrence B. Jerome, better known as "Larry," died at New York on Sunday last.—O'Donovan Rossa was a witness before the immigration investigation committee last week. He said the worst thieves and convicts of England are anxious to come to America. The governors of prisons persuaded them to go. Only the worst are sent here.—Henry George thinks he would like to meet James G. Blaine in public debate on the tariff issue.—Maxwell and another murderer named Landgraaf were hanged at St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 10.

Boulanger was shot at in the streets of Paris last Sunday. Though five shots were fired he escaped unharmed.—The Pacific Mail steamer City of Sidney, which arrived on the 12th, brought Japanese papers which contain elaborate accounts of the late volcanic eruption in Japan of Mount Iwahashi, or Bandai as it is more properly termed. The number of persons buried is still put at upward of 400, and the number of those injured at 900. Among the former were 150 visitors to hot springs on the slope of the mountain. Iwase-mura, a village in the vicinity of the volcano, appears to have suffered most. Thirty-six houses were buried there and fifty-six injured. There was no warning.—The trial at Boyle, Ireland, of James O'Kelly, the journalist and member of Parliament, who was arrested in London on a charge of making speeches inciting to intimidation and boycotting, has been concluded. O'Kelly was convicted, and sentenced to four months' imprisonment.

A BEAUTIFUL TRIBUTE.

Below is a full and correct report of Colonel Ingersoll's words at the funeral of the late Courtlandt Palmer. We are able to print it through the courtesy of Mr. C. P. Farrell, Ingersoll's publisher:

MY FRIENDS: A thinker of pure thoughts, a speaker of brave words, a doer of generous deeds, has reached the silent haven that all the dead have reached; and we, his friends, who even now are hastening after him, are met to do the last kind acts that man may do for man—to tell his virtues and to lay with tenderness and tears his ashes in the sacred place of rest and peace.

Some one has said that in the open hands of death we find only what they gave away. Let us believe that pure thoughts, brave words, and generous deeds can never die. Let us believe that they bear fruit and add forever to the well-being of the human race. Let us believe that a noble, self-denying life increases the moral wealth of man, and gives assurance that the future will be grander than the past.

In the monotony of subservience, in the multitude of blind followers, nothing is more inspiring than a free and independent man—one who gives and asks reasons; who demands freedom and gives what he demands; one who refuses to be slave or master. Such a man was Courtlandt Palmer, to whom we pay the tribute of respect and love.

He was an honest man—he gave the rights he claimed. This was the foundation on which he built. To think for himself—to give his thought to others—this was to him not only a privilege, not only a right, but a duty and a joy.

He believed in self-preservation—in personal independence—that is to say, in manhood.

He preserved the realm of mind from the invasion of brute force and protected the children of the brain from the Herod of authority.

He investigated for himself the questions, the problems, and the mysteries of life. Majorities were nothing to him. No error could be old enough—popular, plausible, or profitable enough—to bribe his judgment or keep his conscience still.

He knew that, next to finding truth, the greatest joy is honest search.

He was a believer in intellectual hospitality, in the fair exchange of thought, in good mental manners, in the amenities of the soul, in the chivalry of discussion.

He insisted that those who speak should hear; that those who question should answer; that each should strive, not for a victory over others, but for the discovery of truth; and that truth when found should be welcomed by every human soul.

He knew that truth has no fear of investigation—of being understood. He knew that truth loves the day—that its enemies are ignorance, prejudice, egotism, bigotry, hypocrisy, fear, and darkness, and that intelligence, candor, honesty, love, and light are its eternal friends.

He believed in the morality of the useful—that the virtues are the friends of man—the seeds of joy.

He knew that consequences determine the quality of actions, and that whatsoever a man sows that shall he also reap.

In the positive philosophy of Auguste Comte he found the framework of his creed. In the conclusions of that great, sublime, and tender soul he found the rest, the serenity, and the certainty he sought.

The clouds had fallen from his life. He saw that the old faiths were but phases in the growth of man—that out from the darkness, up from the depths, the human race through countless ages and in every land had struggled towards the ever-growing light.

He felt that the living are indebted to the noble dead, and that each should pay his debt; that he should pay it by preserving to the extent of his power the good he has, by destroying the hurtful, by adding to the knowledge of the world, by giving better than he had received; and that each should be the bearer of a torch, a shedder of light for all that is, and for all to be.

This was the religion of duty perceived, of duty within the reach of man, within the circumference of the known—a religion without mystery, with experience for the foundation of belief—a religion understood by the head and approved by the heart—a religion that appealed to reason with a definite end in view—the civilization and development of the human race by legitimate, adequate, and natural means—that is to say, by ascertaining the conditions of progress and by teaching each to be noble enough to live for all.

This is the gospel of man; this is the gospel of this world; this is the religion of humanity; this is a philosophy that contemplates not with scorn, but with pity, with admiration, and with love, all that man has done, regarding, as it does, the past with all its faults and virtues, its sufferings, its cruelties and crimes, as the only road by which the perfect could be reached.

He denied the supernatural—the phantoms and the ghosts that filled the twilight-land of fear. To him and for him there was but one religion—the religion of pure thoughts, of noble words, of self-denying deeds, of honest work for all the world—the religion of Hope and Help.

Facts were the foundation of his faith; history was his prophet; reason his guide; duty his deity; happiness the end; intelligence the means.

He knew that man must be the providence of man.

He did not believe in religion and science, but in the religion of science—that is to say, wisdom glorified by love, the savior of our race—the religion that conquers prejudice and hatred, that drives all superstition from the mind, that ennobles, lengthens, and enriches life, that drives from every home the wolves of want, from every heart the fiends of selfishness and fear, from every brain the monsters of the night.

He lived and labored for his fellow-men.

He sided with the weak and poor against the strong and rich. He welcomed light. His face was ever toward the east. According to his light he lived. "The world was his country—to do good his religion."

There is no language to express a nobler creed than this; nothing can be grander, more comprehensive, nearer perfect.

This was the creed that glorified his life and made his death sublime.

He was afraid to do wrong, and for that reason was not afraid to die.

He knew that the end was near. He knew that his work was done. He stood within the twilight, within the deepening gloom, knowing that for the last time the gold was fading from the west and that there could not fall again within his eyes the trembling lustre of another dawn. He knew that night had come, and yet his soul was filled with light, for in that night the memory of his generous deeds shone out like stars.

What can we say? What words can solve the mystery of life, the mystery of death? What words can justly pay a tribute to the man who lived to his ideal, who spoke his honest thought, who was turned aside neither by envy, nor hatred, nor contumely, nor slander, nor scorn nor fear? What words will do that life the justice that we know and feel?

By the grave of man stands the angel of Silence.

A heart breaks, a man dies, a leaf falls in the far forest, a babe is born, and the great world sweeps on.

No one can tell which is better—Life with its gleams and shadows, its thrills and pangs, its ecstasy and tears, its wreaths and thorns, its crowns, its glories and Golgothas; or Death, with its peace, its rest, its cool and placid brow that hath within no memory, no fear of grief or pain.

Farewell, dear friend. The world is better for your life. The world is braver for your death.

Farewell! We loved you living, and we love you now.

A young Jew fell into the river at Cracow, and was in great danger of drowning. "Let him sink, he is only a Jew," was the exclamation heard on all sides. At last came the glad exclamation, "It's all up with him, he's sinking." Just then a young fellow burst from the crowd which had sought to restrain him, and brought the drowning man to shore—there to be received with an exclamation of execration. Suddenly the jeers ceased.

The drowning man was a Christian, his rescuer a Jew!—London Freethinker.

Who Shall Be Fairest?

Who shall be fairest?
Who shall be rarest?
Who shall be first in the songs that we sing?
She who is kindest
When Fortune is blindest,
Bearing through winter the blooms of the spring;
Charm of our gladness,
Friend of our sadness,
Angel of life, when its pleasures take wing!
She shall be fairest,
She shall be rarest,
She shall be first in the songs that we sing!

Who shall be nearest,
Noblest, and dearest,
Named but with honor and pride evermore?
He, the undaunted,
Whose banner is planted
On Glory's high ramparts and battlements hoar;
Fearless to danger,
To falsehood a stranger,
Looking not back while there's duty before!
He shall be nearest,
He shall be dearest,
He shall be first in our hearts evermore.

COMSTOCK'S LIEUTENANT DEFEATED.

The Chronicle of August 7 contains the report of a case in which C. R. Bennett, the coadjutor of Anthony Comstock and Clark Braden, had a wrestle with justice and was defeated. It reads as follows:

Justice was crowded with work in the police courts yesterday. There was only one bright episode in her day's work, and that was a very brilliant and pleasing lecture on art, illustrated by statuary and picture.

The statuary illustration consisted of the fine Japanese carving that has occupied such a prominent position in the curio store in the Palace Hotel block. It depicts in a terribly realistic manner the terror of a peasant who is almost in the grasp of a mythical monster. The lecturer was the distinguished lawyer and diplomat, General Van Buren, the owner of the carving. He appeared in behalf of G. T. Marsh, who has been arrested on a charge of displaying lewd and indecent works. Secretary Bennett, of the Society for the Prevention of Vice, was the complainant.

Mr. Bennett, on the stand, told of the large number of people who had had their morals inexpressibly shocked by seeing the carving. Mr. Bennett could show only one letter that called his attention to the alleged indecency. Mr. Bennett said a looking-glass was artfully used to display the carving in all its hideous nudity. He had seen the startling effect of the glass, and had in blushing confusion retired from the window, only to give place to crowds of boys, who gazed and gazed and gazed on the Japanese peasant, until their moral sense was destroyed and their physical growth became dwarfed.

A police officer was asked if he had not seen boys crowd each other off the sidewalk in their eager efforts to look on the polluting figure. The question was ruled out.

General Van Buren told how the carving came into his possession. While in Japan he had spent some time in collecting works of art, and was now in possession of some excellent bits of carving. He heard of a Japanese who, old and almost blind, was yet one of the most famous carvers in the empire, and he decided to have him make a fanciful picture from wood. The old man worked on the peasant and the monster for some months. It was the last work he did, and it was said to be his best. General Van Buren was going to present the carving to an eastern institution, but desired to give the people of San Francisco a chance to see it. He then spoke of Mr. Bennett's moral sense, and had his audience laughing at that highly useful quality in a man's make-up. He spoke of art breaking down the barriers of superstition; told of the grand pictures that were famous, not because they happened to be in the nude, but because they his reputation is as unsullied and unquestionable as his ability. But his defeat is the modern form of Christian persecution for daring to possess an opinion—for asserting his right to "liberty and the pursuit of happiness." It is just what orthodoxy is doing all the time, and, worst of all, doing it with the aid of Liberals. I'll venture to say that if Mr. Dawes received a small percentage of what Liberals pay to their powerful persecutors, he would be amply sustained. His particular desire is to wake up the largely indifferent Liberals of Wisconsin and Minnesota, and so far as possible bring to them a knowledge of the aims and work of the American Secular Union. No one who has read his articles in the Liberal press can question his fitness, for they demonstrate that he is an earnest, philanthropic, and scientific thinker, and lucid writer. He brings to the discussion of these questions that force which good, chaste language and natural dignity impart, and there will be nothing clownish in his advocacy of a philosophy that ought to appeal to those intellectually advanced. A long time ago, in canvassing the subject, he gave me his idea in these words: "Clownish actions may do in a church, but if we expect Liberalism to expand, our representative men must possess manners that will pass in good society." His recent contribution, "The Mission of Liberalism," was an admirable consideration of the relative utility of the constructive and destructive forces, proving that destructive arguments necessarily precede constructive action.

Here is a capable man willing to work in the much neglected fields of Wisconsin and Minnesota, but if not sustained there, will answer calls on any route. If Liberals in those two states do not keep him busy, it will be a lasting disgrace, and show their indifference. Nothing exasperates me so much as this never-do-anything Liberalism. Every orthodox spire is a menace to our liberty, and it is our duty—a duty vastly more sacred than any orthodox one—to help the American Secular Union, the lecturers, and papers to counteract the pernicious influence of church rule. If you are a Liberal, you will do this to the utmost extent of your means.

E. A. STEVENS.

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONGRESS A. S. U.

OFFICIAL CALL.

To the Local Secular Unions, Life, Charter, and Annual Members, and all Liberal citizens who support the Nine Demands of Secularism, Greeting:

You are hereby invited to attend the Twelfth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union, which will convene at Lafayette Hall, Wood street, near 4th, Pittsburgh, Pa., Friday, October 5, 1888, at 10 A.M., for a four days' session—5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th, inclusive.

All Charter and Life Members, all Vice-Presidents, all Chairmen of State Executive Committees, and all duly accredited delegates from Local Secular Unions are entitled to seats and votes in this Annual Congress. Each Local Secular Union is entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates. Annual Members who pay or have paid $1 in the national treasury are entitled to seats, but not to votes, except by unanimous consent of the Congress.

This Congress will especially consider practical questions tending to further agitation for the taxation of church property; the abrogation of state aid to sectarian institutions; abolition of state, national, military, and prison chaplaincies; repeal of all judicial oaths, Sunday and other oppressive and unjust ecclesiastical laws; nullification of attempts to subvert our Constitution by a legal recognition of Theism in the American Magna Charta, and such other measures as will not merely thwart intended theological encroachments, but absolutely expunge from our laws, state and federal, such insidious acts as have already crept in to blot out mental freedom from our republic.

It is to be hoped that the addresses delivered will deal with the practical issues of the organization, so that there will be such an awakening of the people to these vital questions of the hour that a revival of the instinct of liberty and justice for all will necessarily result; that again from the Keystone state—the birthplace of the association—the clarion voice of freedom shall reverberate throughout the land.

Pittsburgh being situated almost in the center of a district containing many of our most distinguished workers, thinkers, and writers, besides the active host within its limits, there is little doubt that this Congress will be a glorious gathering of the forces who stand for mental liberty, as expressed in the desire for a complete Secularization of the government.

S. P. PUTNAM, Pres., E. B. FOOTE, JR., Ch. Ex. Com.,
E. A. STEVENS, Sec., MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com.,
CHAS. ECKHARD, Treas.,

COURTLANDT PALMER.

When shall we know the life within our life;
The heart that makes us hope and dream and toil
Though sorrow crushes and death gives no sign
Above the marble stillness of its face?
Why is it that we cannot be shut in
To narrow walls, however poor we be,
But still must pierce beyond to seas of light
And summer skies, and claim them for our own!

Will it be ever solved what life may be,
Though one might circle the eternal round,
And pass the gates of death a thousand times
To higher, brighter, and diviner spheres?
Would one then pass all sorrow and all pain?
Would not the shadows be as deep as now,
And grief as terrible, and love as sad?

Such thoughts crowd o'er me when the sudden fall
Of thy heart's silence doth make blind the sight.
Life is more great than ever in thy death;
The rushing tide grows still—a mirror vast,
Wherein the majesty of time appears
Like crystal sky within a crystal sea,
When not a breath is on the boundless deep.
A moment I must pause, and let the past
Make sweet the present with unquestioned joy.
More than a name thou art, dear friend;
A beautiful and noble spirit thou,
Bright, delicate, like Shelley's glorious soul,
And shining with the ardor of his mind.
Like him thou wast to me an impulse, mild,
Beneficent, with youth's sublime romance,
And manhood's power, and thought's far-reaching flame.
In mine own struggle did I find thee brave;
Midst varying fortune ever still the same,
Thy word a summons and thy hand a help.

Knight of the people, in the people's cause
Is thy true claim to honor and renown.
With thee no bounds were set; no narrow creed
Of wealth or fashion marred thy soldier's grace.
The toiler was thy comrade; earnest hand
And earnest brain were royal in thy choice;
The chivalry of labor was thy pride,
The reign of Freedom thy most loyal wish.

O blessed friend, and art thou dead to these?
Thou canst not be, but living unto all
The beautiful, the noble, the sublime.
I greet thee still in hope's immortal realm.
Thou art not fallen in the flush of life,
Like flower cut off and nevermore to bloom
And make the summer's air a sweet delight.
Thou art an inspiration now, a star
In the bright firmament of time's elect.
From mortal to immortal thou hast passed
In the clear purpose of thy noble life.
Thou hast become a part of that great world
Wherein all love is centred and all hope—
The world sublime above life's restless sea,
Where genius triumphs, and the glorious throng
Of human virtues make the heaven we seek.

Live on, brave spirit, in our hearts' deep throb;
Live in our hope, our virtue, and our toil;
Live in our dreams of happier life for man;
Live in our consecration to the truth.
Thy stream runs to the ocean vast and bright,
And makes the ocean a more glorious world
Of symphonies magnificent. Life's frailties drop
From thy exultant and heroic course.
Thou hast burst forth to death's white, radiant crown;
In tears we see thy perfect grace of life,
That could not be except through sorrow's gaze.

Our task is nobler for thy golden sheaf;
Our harvest gladder for thy presence still.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

At Cheney and Waverly.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I met Mr. Putnam at Cheney on Friday, August 3, determined and ready to conduct our campaign in this district. The friends of Freethought soon got together and had arrangements made for his two lectures in Cheney. Mr. Putnam's lecture on Friday evening was "Universal Mental Liberty," which he delivered to a fair-sized audience, and explained to them that thought should be free and unshackled. After the lecture the Rev. Mr. Marvin spoke to Mr. Putnam, saying he agreed with him in most of his discourse, but said Mr. Putnam did not attack any of the vital truths of religion, and for that reason he gave a man no chance to make a reply. Mr. Putnam told Mr. Marvin to come to-morrow, as his discourse would be the Bible. Now I want to say right here that Mr. Marvin is a gentleman, and respected in our community by Christian and Infidel alike. I listened to several of his sermons last winter, at Waverly, and think they were as original and full of deep thought as any I ever heard delivered from an orthodox pulpit. He is honest and candid in his desire for the welfare of humanity, and every Infidel in this district could listen attentively to his discourses and agree with him in a great many particulars. Mr. Marvin did attend the next evening. There was a good audience, and a more appreciative one I never saw. In Mr. Putnam's lecture no creed was attacked; only the Bible, its authenticity, its inspiration and infallibility. There was no reply made. After the lecture was over the friends came forward and subscribed for FREETHOUGHT, and purchased enough Freethought literature to make Mr. Putnam know that his lecture had aroused an interest of search and investigation that would some day bear, and bring forth good fruit. I want to thank the Liberals of Cheney for their cordial support, and aid to me in starting this campaign.

Mr. Putnam and myself started from Cheney at three o'clock on Sunday morning, arriving at Waverly at eight, five hours on the way. At Waverly the friends had already begun to arrive for the lectures. The first lecture was to be at one o'clock. The day before friends had met and fixed seats and platform in the grove, expecting a larger audience than the church would accommodate, which turned out to be correct. Mr. Putnam's first lecture was on the Nine Demands of Liberalism, which was delivered in good style and to good effect. At the close that great defender of the churches, Clark Braden, who claims he is engaged by the churches of Oregon to follow Mr. Putnam, arose and announced that he would reply. Mr. Putnam, after the lecture, left the ground. Braden arose and howled out, "There goes the president of the great American Secular Union. Sneak, coward, coyote," and a torrent of abuse that was unbearable, until a man in the audience arose and said, "If you are going on in that strain I want to leave." And after a short altercation Braden resumed his discourse in less abusive language, now and then intermingled with "liar," and other epithets showing the genuine humility of Christianity. He carried his tirade along for some time, applauded by shouts and clapping of the hands by some church members, with now and then an occasional Amen. After Braden had exhausted his vituperation, he announced that now, to crown all, he would offer for sale his pamphlet, "Ingersoll Unmasked," which the devoted rushed forward to get. He had also a circular for free distribution, containing a vindication of himself and a slander of others. Thinking Christians are disgusted with Braden, and say he can do their cause nothing but harm.

All Braden wants is for Mr. Putnam to acknowledge him; it would be grist for his mill. He would use it as another indorsement, on top of the one hundred or more that he has got. When a man debates with Braden he must leave his manhood and honor at the door. He must attack Braden with his own weapons. He ought to be confronted, for he can easily be confounded. But it never should be done by the president of our Union. We have plenty of speakers who are ready to encounter him. We have none in our ranks who can equal him in slander and abuse, but we have men who are scholars and debaters—men that can convince a thinking public, and they are ready to meet Braden on any platform with prescribed rules and regulations.

The lecture in the evening was delivered in the church. There was not standing room; Mr. Putnam had to stand in the door, so that those who were standing outside might hear. He spoke on the Bible, and the audience was very attentive. After the lecture the reverend Braden announced that he would reply, and leave as little of the lecture as there was of Liberalism. When the time came for him to speak it was only a repetition of the afternoon's abuse and slander. We will leave the Christians to judge between the two speakers. Let them throw prejudice away and use common sense; it should be done in justice, as fairness between man and man. All we ask is honesty in spirit. I ask you, did Braden refute one argument that Mr. Putnam made? Will slander and abuse refute anything? Mark, for instance, his reply to the man who asked him where the immortality of the soul was mentioned in the Old Testament? Did you pay attention to Braden's reply? Was it not this: "Bring me your Bible and I will mark it for you." Now that gentleman does not carry his Bible around with him as his pillar of support. He asked Mr. Braden to give him the text and he would find it in his Bible at home. Did Braden do so? You know what he did, and what he said. He told him it was in the book of Ezekiel. Now search your book of Ezekiel and report to Mr. Braden the text when you find it. Was not his refutation of that lecture on the Bible all braggadocio?

On the evening of Monday, August 6th, Mr. Putnam lectured on the "Glory of Infidelity" to a splendid audience who seemed to appreciate what they heard, for they were very attentive. As before, Mr. Putnam did not attack any creed. He merely showed that Infidelity was the forerunner of advancement; that all reformers of all grand ideas were dubbed the Infidel by the parties they left. He claimed that Jesus Christ was an Infidel of his day; that Martin Luther was also an Infidel to the church of Rome, but the father of the Protestant religion. No one could say that Mr. Putnam used any slang or abuse in his discourse, and I do not think that any one who heard him would attempt to do so. Mr. Putnam announced the previous evening that he would take names as members of the Secular Union. About thirty names were attached, and I have no doubt that a hundred can be got.

After the lecture and other business, Mr. Braden made his reply. He was less abusive, and used less mean language than he did at any of the previous lectures. He merely stated that if Infidelity had made Christianity better he would give Infidels no credit for it, and told a burglar story to illustrate it. He said Mr. Putnam had given us three lectures, and had told us nothing and there was no place to put it. I suppose that implies that Infidels have no brains. He likened us to dog-fennel and pigweed, but applauded himself as the man who had driven to the wall some of the best thinkers of the day, and named Underwood, Watts, Stewart, Jamieson, and Hull. I must say candidly that I doubt his word. If Mr. Braden improves in his style of debate as much every night for a long time as he did on the evening of August the 6th, Infidels will begin to think that he may evolve into a respectable man.

Waverly, W. T., Aug. 7, 1888.

WILLIAM GRAHAM.

As to the Goats and a Hole in the Fence.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In your issue of July 28, you have an article on "Two Goats and a Hole in the Fence make Trouble at Topolobampo," by one N. Haskell. In this article he accuses me of making misstatements. Of this I am unconscious, for in my position as the San Francisco representative of the Credit Foncier Company of Sinaloa, Mexico, I have been as well posted as it was possible to be through reliable correspondents at the colony. They are Directors Schellhous, A. J. Wilber, and Friend, Mr. W. L. Patton, Dr. Scally, B. F. Close, George A. Appel, E. Haslam, and many others. The items given to the Denver Arbitrator were just as I received them from my correspondents, who were there and know the facts in the case. The colony is to-day self-supporting as far as food is concerned. They had just finished harvesting their crops June 12th, and have stored enough to feed all there for twelve months. All in the colony (135 persons) are well, united, and happy at the good prospects ahead. The colony is in a better condition to-day than at any time in the past. The farm at La Logia, 400 acres, has been bought and paid for. It is well watered, and several crops a year can be raised on this land; everything grows at a wondrous rate. The Credit Foncier will soon be published at the colony; then all interested in this greatest co-operative movement of this time will be well informed of every step taken for its fulfillment. Yours truly, H. W. FAUST, 307 Fourth st., S. F. Rep. of Credit Foncier of Sinaloa.

San Francisco, Aug. 8, 1888.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 339 Eddy st., S. F.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb's His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 884 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S
GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools Price, 5 cents.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.
P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months.
50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by
J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

...IN THE...

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

...FOR...

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents;
paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS.

By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" medicinal value to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

For the Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS, CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.
33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting. American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50.
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17,
$18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4,
being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best
14-karat gold-filled, gold watches, cases elegant and latest
style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies'
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$22; 15 jewels, $28. In good second quality filled cases, $2
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38.
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case.
Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1;
best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set
best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12.
Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free.
BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
Badges in PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of cut and smaller,
two-thirds size. War-
ranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2.75, $3.50. Large,
$3 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $8, $10; and
charms up to $25. De-
mand daily increasing.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

"Sum Walfisch."

THE WHALE

CHAS. A. JONAS, Proprietor.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars,

Cold Lager and Sharp Steam Beers.

24 THIRD ST., Near Market,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert
G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say
infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to
those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior
Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address
Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San
Francisco, Cal.

HAND-BOOK OF THE LICK OBSERVATORY

OF THE

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,

—BY—

EDWARD HOLDEN, LL.D.,

Director of the Observatory.

A volume of 135 pages, 12mo., printed on heavy paper, and bound in flexible cloth covers.
Besides likenesses of

Professor Holden and James Lick,

By mail 80 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 34.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 25, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - AUGUST 25, 1888

WHAT would the heathen in foreign lands think of the champions of Christianity if they knew that in Christian countries not one clergyman in a thousand is willing or able to defend his faith against the attacks of unbelievers?

GEORGE W. CHILDS, of the Philadelphia Ledger, so says the Evening Post, long since forbade all reference to Colonel Ingersoll in the columns of his paper. The heavenly chariot is expected shortly to swing low and take Mr. Childs on board.

It was only natural that the convention of the American party at Washington should "split" and "end in a row" as the reports say it did. New movements always begin that way. When the members get better acquainted and find out that men may have diverse views on points that are not vital and still work together for one central object, they will hold other conventions, perhaps, with better results.

THERE is no more important question for Liberals to consider just now than that of organization. A large and strong organization will lead outsiders to inquire our objects, and will furnish renewed opportunities for setting them forth. Following this the whole of the claims of Freethought must be stated and reiterated. Organization for action will alone make it possible for us to gain the attention of the whole country.

THE Chinese have a new Baptist church in this city at the corner of Sacramento street and Waverly place. In dedicating the structure last Sunday the Rev. Dr. Gunning, of Boston, was discriminating enough to say that "the Chinaman, by his clean, sober, industrious, and virtuous life, rebuked those of other nationalities who come here to fill our jails." Five Chinamen were baptized, and the cause of Christianity was reported to be booming.

A RECENT act of Vicar-General Prendergast, of this city, shows how much respect the Catholic church has for either the laws of the state or the laws of nature. For a sum of money to him in hand paid he granted a dispensation whereby Joseph Bijani was allowed to marry his niece. The groom took the girl and a priest aboard a tug and went outside the jurisdiction of the United States and had the ceremony performed on the high seas. This was done under the sanction of a church which declares that the marriage of divorced persons is illicit!

THE Rev. Dr. George Thomas Dowling is rejected by his congregation, that of the Euclid avenue Baptist church, Cleveland, O., as no longer a Baptist. A few weeks ago he invited to communion at the sacramental board "all who love the Lord and hate the devil and his works." This was too much for the close communionists and he was dismissed forthwith. Dr. Dowling has tendered his resignation from the Baptist sect. He announces himself a communist, like Christ and the apostles, and says the church is no place for a man of their views.

THE Hon. Mr. Maclay and Judge Widney intend to erect a theological seminary at the Mission San Fernando, Los Angeles county. The land whereon this institution is to be planted belonged to one Rogerio, aged eighty years, who, with his wife of the same age, was evicted from the premises, fraudulently it is alleged, by Messrs. Maclay and Widney. The wife perished from exposure, and the old man Rogerio is feeble and helpless. The Los Angeles Porcupine makes these appropriate remarks upon the case:

"That Maclay theological seminary might have a memorial bell sacred to the memory of the victims of the Maclay-Widney evictions. The old woman who died from cold and hunger on the roadside should have a memorial window where the pious pair, Maclay and Widney, could offer up unctious prayers for the repose of the old woman's soul. The wealth of the world, and the dignity of the commonwealth, would not compensate for the outrage perpetrated on old Rogerio and his family, in this most cruel eviction."

NEWS AND NOTES.

Spokane Falls is looking to a bright future. It has many advantages both for a railroad and a manufacturing town. It has enormous water-power, much greater than that of Minneapolis. There are now three flouring-mills which make 500 barrels a day, and one large saw-mill and planing-mill. The electric light works are run by water-power. For five miles on each side of the river are excellent mill sites. In one half mile there is a fall of 188 feet. There are rainbows in summer and dense white mists in winter. The stream never freezes.

The city has a population of 12,000. Last year the population was 7,000. The blue mountains are seen miles away in every direction. The city rises gradually above the river. There is a level plain half a mile wide, and terraces one after another. It is a most beautiful town site.

The churches have already come in and seized the opportunity and already own untaxed property to the extent of millions of dollars.

It is expected that five hundred houses will be built this year, at an expense of about $2,000,000. Some of the business blocks are five and six stories high, built of granite taken from the foundations to make room for cellars. There are three railroads now. A large force is at work on a road to Seattle. They bang away day and night blasting the granite ledges around the city.

The Indians are floating about the streets, a strange, and indeed ludicrous, mingling of barbarism with civilization. Some of the aboriginals wear only a red blanket. They come into town every morning. The squaws work and the bucks spend the money—Bible fashion. The soil in the vicinity produces wheat, oats, barley, vegetables and small fruits. The average yield this year is about 35 bushels of wheat, 60 bushels of barley, and 100 bushels of oats to the acre.

The Cœur d'Alene mines, of Idaho, are among the richest on the continent, and they contribute largely to the prosperity of Spokane Falls. Thousands are at work in the mines, and most of their supplies are purchased here.

There is considerable Freethought at this thriving point, if it can only be brought forth. More than half of the business men are Liberals. Still the churches hold solemn sway.

On account of misunderstanding and lack of acquaintance, no arrangements were made for my lectures—no hall secured and no advertising done. Mr. Graham and myself had to rustle, for we were determined to accomplish something. A beginning is half the battle. After much trouble, about four o'clock in the afternoon we secured the hall and put forth the posters. About a hundred were present the first evening, and the number steadily increased, and on Friday, the last evening, the hall was crowded. So great was the success that I have arranged to give three more lectures at Spokane Falls on my return, and, without doubt, an organization will be effected.

One of the first allies I came across was W. H. Galvani, master workman in the Knights of Labor, a bright and enthusiastic Freethinker. He has had an adventurous career. Born in Russia, finely educated, he joined his fortunes with the revolutionary party and was obliged to flee to America. He is an enthusiast for reform, and is ready for any sacrifice. It gives one new hope to meet with so bold and uncompromising a leader of the people.

Another good staunch friend is A. E. Davidson, foreman in the planing-mill. He used to live in Portland, and when there was heart and hand with friend C. Beal, and through the columns of FREETHOUGHT these old-time companions can give greeting and fresh cheer, and know that both are in the front line of battle yet. The aid of Mr. Davidson was invaluable to the campaign here.

Another generous supporter was Richard Sharpless; also his brother, both thorough-going Liberals who will stand by the flag in storm and sunshine. They are for the "forlorn hope" as well as the hour of victory.

Friend John Gimble, whose father and brother are of the Waverly guard, was also right at the front, and C. Moe, and these did not only support me by word of mouth, but with genuine hard work, and they were not afraid to lend a hand even though success might be problematical.

Mrs. A. E. Davidson, Mrs. Gimble, Mrs. Moe; Mrs. Sharpless, Mrs. Sires, and others, by their aid and presence show that woman's brain is as excellent as her heart.

J. B. Johnson was present, all the way from Kidd Postoffice, where he has a ranch. He is a host in himself. We camped together and went to sleep talking of what might be, and what will be when men shall speak their honest thought.

A. N. Sires, Abram Dorsey—from Rosalia, a veteran whose grasp of hand is warm and true—Maurice Morairta, Samuel Elder, and others, give noble cheer and hope to our heart and cause. I think that Spokane Falls will be one of our brightest fields, and here our star shall "blaze upon the forehead of the dawn."

Across country it is only about sixty miles from Spokane Falls to Colfax, and there is direct railroad communication, but the railroads don't connect, being as mysterious in their operations as divine providence itself. I was obliged, in order to reach Colfax in time, to go round about over two hundred miles by way of Palouse Junction. I had to leave Spokane Falls at one o'clock at night Friday, after the lecture. However, the Sharpless Bros. and Galvani kept me royal company till midnight, and so I could stand the "waiting for the train." Early Saturday morning I was at Palouse Junction. A long and dirty ride was before me. At Endicott, where we take what is called dinner, since by any other name it would be just as bad, friend Ewing hailed me, whom I met last year at Colfax. He was obliged to be away from the lectures at Colfax. It was a refreshment, amid our dusty travel, to meet so hale and hearty a Freethinker, and it mattered little whether I had a New York dinner or not. About three o'clock, down the steep grade the cars, most of them freight, went rumbling into the pretty city of Colfax, and friends Wilman and Wolfard were on hand to meet me, and soon I found rest in the pleasant house on the hill, where the summer breezes make gentle music and cool the brow, and where I was glad to greet again our strenuous and cheerful worker, Mrs. Kate P. Wolfard, who has faith enough in Freethought to remove mountains, if heart and hope could perform any such miracle. But whether mountains move or not, humanity moves on under the gentle impulse of such unflinching spirits.

The lecture was given on Saturday evening to a fair audience. There is a good deal of the spirit of Freethought in Colfax, but it does not always materialize. Fear and indifference prevail among many, but there is a nucleus of strong and brave hearts, and the future shines bright, for the sun is in the clouds and it must sometime be radiant. A much larger audience was present Sunday afternoon and evening. In the evening the hall was full, and I spoke of "Freethought and Civilization." I am confident that some advance has been made. Colfax still has solid prosperity. It has had more trade the last year than ever before. It grows with a growing and healthful agricultural country. The wheat product this season is larger than ever, and it only needs fair weather to make a most abundant harvest. The Wolfards are known here, as at Silverton, for their staunch fidelity to freedom. There is no such word as fail, with this generous host. Mr. and Mrs. Wilman, J. M. Harper, John Hart, F. G. Gerichten, Mr. Erfurth, Mr. and Mrs. Hunt and daughter, the Ewings, Mr. and Mrs. Sparrow, Mr. and Mrs. Davenport, Mr. Spencer, and others, are among our Liberal friends at this point, who make it a pleasant field of labor in spite of all discouragements. With only a few how much can be accomplished, since truth is on our side.

It might interest my readers to know that the "champion" was here, as at other places, and, as usual, did nothing but injure his own cause by his reckless bravado. "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." He was caught in the network of his own falsehood and exposed before the whole community. The lie was so palpable and uncalled for that it entirely destroyed his influence. It was declared to his face by D. Wolfard, and he could not escape. Everybody knows "Uncle D. Wolfard," and when he says a thing it is accepted as true. The audience cheered to the echo, and the "champion" had to confess. All decent Christians are ashamed of his misrepresentations and slanders. Give him rope enough and he will hang himself. Of course I absolutely ignore him, and only make mention in these notes as a matter of curiosity, for it is known that he follows after the Infidel, and readers desire to have a few scraps of information as to his "forcible feebleness." He was on the same train coming from Colfax to Pampa. He was on the same stage from Pampa to Riparia. The Infidel got the front seat. The "champion" had to take the back seat and the dust. On arrival at the hotel there was only one spare room. The landlord suggested that we occupy the same room. What a coincidence, and what a collision there might be! I happened to be half a second ahead, and first come first served. I took the whole room, determined to occupy two beds rather than divide. I don't know where he slept, but I had a good night's rest. He sat at the same table, just at my right hand. He seemed to take particular pains to do this, but such close quarters didn't appear to give him any appetite. He only drank one cup of tea, and left his beefsteak and eggs. Just think of it—riding twenty miles by stage in the dust and atmosphere of Washington Territory, arriving at hotel at half past eight in the evening, a jolly supper spread before one, and no appetite. I assure my Christian friends they must get a better "champion" than this. I cannot be afraid of a man who has no appetite under such circumstances. He will be an angel soon. The Infidel had a good appetite, a good supper, and a good bed.

With such fortune I have nothing to complain of, and press on to the Orient with renewed hope. I find everywhere a deep interest in the coming Congress. If all the Liberals could come that wanted to we should have a gathering of thousands. There would be hundreds of delegates from the various Unions.

Only a day or two ago I read of the death of Judge Krekel. A noble and heroic man has gone. I remember him, his kindness, his sagacity, his deep insight, his broad and wise understanding. I remember his happy home, where Freethought was like a summer's day. His death will be mourned throughout all our ranks, and the grief of his family will find sympathy in every heart. His noble wife, who has done so much for our cause side by side with the the beloved dead, shares with him the honor and reverence of those who love liberty and its faithful supporters.

And George E. Hartley, too, was my friend—a man, every inch of him, strong as any oak, a champion of Freethought. In the prime of life he has gone to his rest, and another beautiful home is shadowed. We have been at his fireside. His wife, with him, shared in the hope of divine liberty. It is as if a brother had fallen at our side, so genial, so bright were his thought and hope. We give flowers to thee, brave comrade! Thou hast perished from our side! We will keep thee in our heart!

On the Road, Aug. 14, 1888.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

ALEXANDER GOLDENSON, the condemned murderer, has published his thoughts on religion. He says: "I was brought up in the Hebrew faith, but whether I shall die in that I don't know. I have leanings toward the Roman Catholic religion; partly, perhaps, because Mamie Kelly was a Catholic. I am not particularly anxious about the bright crown and golden harp, if I get to heaven. I'll take chances on that, but I say distinctly that I'm not an Infidel." Somebody has lately sent Goldenson a photograph of Heston's picture entitled "Jerked to Jesus," representing a pious murderer upon the scaffold and his reception fifteen minutes later among the angels. It is this, doubtless, that moved Mr. Goldenson to enunciate his views upon the religious question.

"COMFORT AND ASSURANCE."

The Call, one of our city dailies, says:

"Now that the papers have got through quoting Colonel Ingersoll's eulogy pronounced over the late Courtlandt Palmer, perhaps some of them will be able to analyze it and see just how much substance after all is concealed in the talkative colonel's wordy tribute to a leader of Freethought. Of the two men Courtlandt Palmer was by far the greater, and Colonel Ingersoll may well bring to his coffin-side a tribute of praise for his earnestness and devotion to what seemed to him the truth; but who can read that tribute without seeing how empty, how stale and unprofitable, were all the ideas Ingersoll had to offer for hope, consolation, or inspiration to those who mourned the dead? Words, words, words, in plenty, a rhetorical stream, flowing in a silvery torrent, suggesting the possibility that, like Tennyson's brook, they might 'go on forever,' but no one of all these words bringing any new light or hope to replace the faith the speaker would so gladly tear down if he could—nothing to offer to the store of mortal knowledge, and no possible help for mortal need. No wonder that after the speaker had finished the assembly were glad to listen to the Christian minister, who read the burial service of the Episcopal church, and offered his hearers from the word of God comfort and assurance infinitely more valuable than had been the Agnostic's high-sounding Materialism."

Little good can come to replying to an expression like the Call's. If the Call were honest it would not commend the reading of religious services at the funeral of a Freethinker. According to what is called the word of God, the soul of Courtlandt Palmer is forever lost, and a conscientious minister, if obliged to say anything on such an occasion, would be obliged to make that admission. The Call thinks, or pretends to think, that there is "comfort" in this more valuable than the words of Ingersoll, who said of Palmer:

"He knew that the end was near. He knew that his work was done. He stood within the twilight, within the deepening gloom, knowing that for the last time the gold was fading from the west and that there could not fall again upon his eyes the trembling lustre of another dawn. He knew that night had come, and yet his soul was filled with light, for in that night the memory of his generous deeds shone out like stars."

For the dying Freethinker the Bible has this "comfort:"

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned."

How could the friends of Courtlandt Palmer draw "comfort and assurance" from that declaration? And yet it is about the only passage in the Bible that is not contradicted by any other passage in the same book. It fixes the fate of an unbeliever beyond a doubt in the minds of those who accept the Bible as the word of God.

The Call says: "No wonder that after the speaker had finished the assembly were glad to listen to a Christian minister"—which is an inference entirely unjustified by the facts. The reports say that at the close of Colonel Ingersoll's address nearly all of the assembly departed. They were not "glad to listen to a Christian minister," albeit the minister was one whose expulsion for heresy had recently been proposed. The assembly knew that religious services were contrary to the views of Palmer, and they expressed their disapprobation by their departure. It would have freed the conductors of the funeral from severe but just criticism if the services had ended then. As for the Call, that journal would appear less like an imbecile if it had either remained silent or embodied a little truth and justice in its remarks.

Freethinkers ought to be permitted the privilege of dying and being buried without the incantations of the priesthood. Christians are entitled to any form of service they may prefer, but to the friends of the deceased the assurance of a clergyman officiating at the funeral of an unbeliever is much more conspicuous than any comfort to be drawn from his discourse.

RELIGION AND CRIME—AN OFFER.

To instance the crimes of the clergy and believers in the Christian religion as proof of the falsity of that faith has never seemed to us a conclusive argument, inasmuch as both believers and non-believers in it have been known to commit crimes. When, however, both clergymen and laity assert that Freethought leads to murder, insanity, and suicide it is appropriate in rebuttal of the statement to at least point out that belief in Christianity is not a preventive. We are reminded of this fact by a dispatch from Aurora, Ill., dated August 16, which says:

"The Rev. G. J. Cooper set fire to his house at an early hour this morning with the intention of cremating his wife and daughter. The women escaped in their night clothes, but the building was burned to the ground. Cooper was found a few hours afterward in a barn hanging by the neck from a beam. He had committed suicide. Paris green was sprinkled on his beard and clothes, and he had probably swallowed a quantity of the poison. Cooper was a Methodist minister, about sixty years of age, and the pastor of a Newark (Kendall county) church until two weeks ago. He was insane, and tried to commit suicide twice before by hacking himself in the head with a hand-ax, stabbing himself with an awl, and gashing his throat with a draw-knife."

Suppose we follow this with another, from New York, dated also August 16:

"The Rev. Edward H. Camp, a prominent Presbyterian minister, committed suicide at his home in Newark to-night. He has been sick for some time. He recently returned from Palestine, where he had been traveling for several years. To-night he was missed at bed-time, and a search being instituted, his body was found in a cistern in the yard adjoining his own house, with his throat cut from ear to ear. He left a letter stating his reasons for committing the rash act."

To lay these rash acts at the door of Christianity would perhaps be unfair. How much religion had to do with upsetting the reason of the victims can never be fully ascertained; but the number of violent crimes directly traceable to religious delusion or fanaticism is certainly large. History and current news are full of them.

On the other hand, who ever heard of Freethought leading to murder, except when the victim fell by the hand of a believer? When did a "scare-head" in a daily paper ever contain the words, "crazed by Freethought?" Never. But how many daily papers is it possible to read for a week without seeing these words probably more than once, "crazed by religion?" We will let the Christians answer. If they say they do not recall a case of this kind, we would refer them to the daily Examiner, August 16 again. We abbreviate the account:

"CRAZED BY RELIGION."

"SAN JOSE, August 15.—This morning a boy appeared at Los Gatos and informed the people there that his father, Thomas Lahan, had just killed his mother and attempted to kill him. This morning while both lay in bed, the husband suddenly threw his wife out, and jumping upon her crushed her brains out. He then chased his boy, who ran to Los Gatos and gave the alarm. Both the man and the woman were religious fanatics. Last night Lahan made his wife go to bed at sundown, and he knelt on the floor and prayed till midnight, compelling the boy to pray also. At 12 o'clock he rose up and began spitting at his wife, who lay in bed looking at him but saying nothing. He continued spitting and shouting, 'Depart, depart at midnight, depart you villain.' He held in his hand a bottle which he said contained holy water, and gave a similar bottle to his son 'for protection from the evil one.' Finally he stopped spitting, and threw the bottle at his wife's head with such force that it was broken in small pieces. He then struck her with his fist, after which he jumped on her and stamped her into an unrecognizable mass. Having completed his bloody work he struck the boy and ordered him out."

We would not like to make unfounded allegations against religion in general, but for the sake of argument we will affirm that religion is conducive to insanity. Is there a religionist who will make the counter assertion that insanity is promoted by Freethought, i.e., by the rejection of religion and the supernatural? Before such, if there be any such, we will lay down this proposition: That we will keep a record of all the cases of insanity, crime, or fanaticism arising from religious excitement or religious teachings or justified upon religious grounds, reported in the daily papers of this city during the next year. He shall keep a like record of all cases of insanity, crime, or fanaticism resulting from disbelief in religion, or from the teaching of such disbelief; and if at the end of one year the cases recorded by us do not exceed in number the cases recorded by him, we will publish the record, whatever it is, and keep it standing at the head of our editorial columns for twelve months; on condition that some representative religious journal shall agree to publish the result, whatever it may be, for an equal length of time.

We make this offer for the purpose of furnishing the clergy with data upon which to base their charges against Freethought. They may have such data at present, but if so they are very reticent about putting them in tabular form for publication and general distribution.

Our splendid Liberal friend, W. S. Rodgers, of Boulder Creek, writing to the New York Truth Seeker, ends his communication as follows: "I cannot close this letter without mentioning our own local Liberal journal, FREETHOUGHT. The advent of Messrs. Putnam and Macdonald on this coast and the starting of this paper was a delightful surprise to the interested Freethinkers here, and the welcome thus far has been at the rate of two hundred new subscribers per month. I sincerely hope that our Liberal people will continue to rally until this undertaking is made an assured success. It deserves it, and we need such an exponent right here in our midst. There are many urgent reasons for this which I cannot elaborate. Organization, fellowship, the popularizing of our advanced ideas, everything socially and fraternally, urges us on to earnest work for the success of our home advocate, FREETHOUGHT. It would be a grand thing for the Pacific coast Freethinkers to make their local exponent as much a power for good as is the Truth Seeker now. They can do it, and I believe they will."

It appears that the reason why the investigation into the affairs of the orphan asylum at San Rafael has been dropped is because there are no funds to pay for continuing it. Secretary Maslin of the State Board of Examiners avers that somebody is making in the neighborhood of $100 per day out of the institution, and asks the board to permit him to hire an expert to go through the books. The Board consists of Attorney-General Johnson, Secretary of State Hendricks, and Governor Waterman. Johnson and Hendricks decline to authorize the expense, but the governor says that the books will be experted, even if the cost has to come out of the executive secret service fund. In the interests of secular government as well in the interests of humanity the investigation should be made thorough and the results published.

As next president of the American Secular Union the choice seems to be centering on Mr. L. K. Washburn, of Massachusetts. The selection is a natural and fitting one.

THE City Front Gazette has not done a bad thing in printing in full an account of the brutal and obscene outrage to which young Bruschi was submitted at the hands of one I. H. McDonough, head teacher of the Catholic Orphan Asylum at Watsonville, Cal. The story and affidavits, we understand, were sent to the New York Truth Seeker, but there are things, particularly in the Catholic church, which any publisher might hesitate to print, and the Truth Seeker rejected this. The crime was unmentionable, and the victim at the age of twelve is blinded for life by a horrible disease. But Catholics have votes, and there is not sufficient principle among politicians and political papers to expose the foul rottenness of state-fed Catholic institutions. The City Front Gazette of August 18 tells the whole story.

VON MOLTKE has resigned from the German army and Walderse is promoted to his place. "Two points," says the dispatch, "are considered as provided by his appointment—that William II. means to keep away from Bismarck, just as William I. did, and that under the new leader a touch of stern religious fanaticism may be trained into the army, for the new set headed by the kaiser is excessively and very actively religious." As a warrior the new emperor will doubtless prove a success. He appears to realize at the outset that religion is the most active inspiration to bloodshed, especially if it can be shown that the enemy is a heretic.

In the world's broad field of battle, in the bivouac of life, no more generous soldiers will be found than those in the ranks of Liberalism on the Pacific coast. We have recently received new proof of this in the liberal donation which Mr. John McGlashan, of Ukiah, makes for the support of FREETHOUGHT.

We have received notice that a meeting of three weeks' continuance will be held at San Bernardino, Cal., commencing October 12, for the discussion of all principles of politics and religion. Particulars will be furnished by "Dr. Taylor, No. 903, Pomona, Cal."

BROTHER SCHOU, of Oakland, is heard from at Cleveland on his way to New York. He will give Eastern friends word from this coast and will afford them a chance to keep permanently en rapport with California Liberals by subscribing for FREETHOUGHT.

THE Weekly Star is the liveliest political paper published in San Francisco. The editor goes for the bosses and rascals without fear of the consequences, and the Star is indispensable to a knowledge of city affairs.

KIND FRIEND: If you receive a sample copy of this issue of FREETHOUGHT, please regard it as an invitation to subscribe—and accept the invitation. One subscription, $2; two subscriptions, $3; three subscriptions, $4; four subscriptions, $5.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made the following lecture appointments from August to October. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Pendleton, Or.....	Aug.....15	Heber, Utah.....	Aug.....28, 29
Union.....Or.....	16	Denver.....Col.....	Sept.....2
Emmett.....Idaho.....	18	Seward.....Neb.....	".....5-6
Boise City.....Idaho.....	19	Wahoo.....".....	".....7-8
Ogden.....Utah.....	21	Lincoln.....".....	".....9
Morgan.....".....	22	Creston.....Iowa.....	".....11
Coalville.....".....	23	Ottumwa.....".....	".....12
Echo.....".....	24	West Union.....".....	".....16-17
Park City.....".....	25	Chicago.....Ill.....	".....23
Salt Lake City, Utah.....	26	Pittsburgh.....Pa.....	".....30
Murray.....".....	27	Secular Union Congress,	Oct. 5, 6, 7, 8

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Chief Justice Richard Ashbury Jones, of the United States District Court for Washington Territory, died Sunday morning last from dropsy of the lungs, aged 58.—Last Wednesday morning the steamer Oceanic ran down the City of Chester off the Presidio and sunk her. Fifteen passengers of the City of Chester and three of the crew were lost.—Mind-reader W. I. Bishop is in town. One morning last week he was picked up from the street in an unconscious state with a wound in the back of his head. He declares that he was knocked down and robbed.—The Native Sons of the Golden West will celebrate Admission Day on Monday, September 10th, at Santa Cruz. Between 1,500 and 2,000 Native Californians will depart from here by special train over the South Pacific Coast route on the Saturday evening preceding. A delegation of veteran firemen will accompany them. The Oakland parlors will go by the ways of Niles. A grand parade and festivities will be held on Monday, and the visitors will have opportunity to return to their homes on the same day.—The Los Angeles Herald is sued for damages in a libel suit aggregating $100,000. The libel was contained in an interview published in the Herald charging that the plaintiffs were implicated in the famous Mountain Meadow massacre.—Governor and Mrs. Waterman recently visited the Lick Observatory as the guests of Professor Holden.—Thomas Lahan, who murdered his wife near Los Gatos, Aug. 15, by stamping out her brains, declares that the woman was possessed of an evil spirit, which he endeavored to kill. Lahan shows evidence of insanity.

The Central Labor Union of New York, at its meeting last Sunday, decided in the case of two girls discharged by employers because of their testimony before the Immigration Investigation Committee, to ask Mayor Hewitt to take up subscriptions for them the same as he did for Hart, the boycotted victim of the labor organizations.—August 20 was the 55th anniversary of General Harrison's birth.—Ex-Secretary of War Robt. T. Lincoln arrived home from Europe last Sunday. Ignatius Donnelly, the Bacon-Shakespere-cipher discoverer, came by the same steamer, the Aurania.—Seth Green, the authority on fish culture, died at Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 19, of paralysis of the brain.—Four of the big and swift ocean steamers left New York on the 18th within an hour of one another. The commanders deny that they are to race across the Atlantic, but the general impression is that they will all get there as lively as possible.—The ocean steamers Geiser and Thingvalla collided in the Atlantic last week, and the Geiser went down with nearly all on board. The number of lives lost is placed at 105. The Geiser was valued at $350,000, and her cargo at $120,000.—It is said that over $1,000,000 in coin and notes is to be destroyed at Washington by order of the treasury department. The money is counterfeit.—The coming political campaign will be notable for the number of its debates between prominent Democrats and Republicans, which is a pleasing innovation.—Dr. Aveling, the London Socialist, and his wife, the daughter of Karl Marx and likewise a Socialist, are in New York. Mr. Aveling says he has written a number of theatrical plays and comes to this country to dispose of them. He avers that he has no other business here.—A Baptist church in Rochester, N. Y., has just excommunicated a reporter for the unchristianlike way in which he recently handled the church council.—Lightning at Greenfield, Mass., last week struck the house of Deacon Lovering and instantly killed the deacon and his sister.—The Knights of Labor deny the statement made by the New York Sun that the order is degenerating, and that Powderly is falling into disrepute.—The last words of Alexander Woods, a brutal wife murderer hanged at Salt Lake City Aug. 17, were, "I forgive everybody and hope to meet them in heaven."—The health of Walt Whitman is reported to be much improved, and he is at work on what he calls his booklet, "November Boughs," a work made up of short prose articles and verses.—The new Catholic church at Coleman, Wis., collapsed on the 16th, killing one man and crushing seven others so severely that they may die.

The National Co-operative Labor Society of England held a "labor festival" at Crystal Palace, London, Aug. 18. Geo. Jacob Holyoke delivered the opening address. As many as 20,000 people were in attendance.—General Boulanger has been elected to the French Chamber of Deputies from the department of Somme, with a majority of nearly 35,000.—The pope of Rome is suffering with rheumatism.

SOME MISTAKES OF AN OREGON PARSON.

James Campbell, V.D.M., is the name and title of a web-foot parson who is seeking notoriety as an Infidel smasher. He is of the Campbellite persuasion, and is the author of two books or pamphlets; a selection of theological poems, and another which is a reply to an Atheist. In this he unwittingly asks the Atheist a question which if he had stopped to think he would not have asked. He would have seen that the same question asked of the Christian would paralyze the future life idea. The question is very Christian in expression. Here it is: "What devil's tongue has told thee there is no future life when no traveler has ever returned?" Will James please answer his own question with the devil left out? What tongue has told you that there is a future life when no traveler has ever returned? The other pamphlet is entitled "Replies to a Skeptic." His poetical effusions are very good, but his replies contain more misrepresentation or falsehood than any pamphlet ever put in print. It is a very thin book, and the replies are thinner. The reverend has been reading Talmage, the acrobat, and Braden, the liar. When Putnam was here Braden was dogging him, and it was under the Reverend Campbell's wings that Braden rested. If the reverend gentlemen, when replying to Infidels, would keep within the bounds of truth they would command more respect. The day of priestly lies has gone, so far as intelligent people are concerned, but there is a mass of people who read but one side through fear of damnation.

As this pamphlet, "Replies to a Skeptic," is the latest wad fired by the "celebrated" Campbellite gun, I will give you a few sample extracts to show our California friends what the average Oregonian parson's calibre is. I think Oregon can take the lead for parsons who are not posted in science, history, and theology. The following extracts will show any intelligent person who does not look through theology-dimmed spectacles just where James Campbell, V.D.M., stands on the list:

Asylums for the insane, for the poor, the orphans, the inebriates; all these and a thousand more are the outgrowth of Christ.—Campbell, V.D.M.

Hundreds of years before the mythological Christ there were hundreds of asylums, hospitals, libraries, and schools in India and Egypt. The Egyptians cured the insane by music, flowers, and kindness. These pagans had hospitals for beasts as well as for men. The "Holy Queer" claims that Bullrush Moses obtained his education from Egyptians. I would advise the reverend to read the history of the world. He would find that during the time when Christians were imprisoning people for claiming that the world was round, the pagans were teaching geography with globes.

And it may be truthfully said that the teachings of Infidels were guilty of none of these things.—Campbell, V.D.M.

This reverend is ignorant of the fact that the teachings of the Infidel is to do right by being just, merciful, and kind. I challenge the reverend to name one Infidel writer or speaker who has taught or is teaching otherwise. Come to the centre and prove your contemptible insinuations, or be branded as you deserve. The reverend, if he ever reads the newspapers (religious papers excepted), knows that there is a state called California, in which state is one of the finest astronomical observatories in the world; also a women's home, etc., built by the Infidel James Lick. He knows, too, of the Girard College, and other institutions founded by Infidels. I would like to ask the reverend to read American history.

The few good and noble things they have done and are doing are in no way attributable to their Infidelity. They copy Christian example.

That smack strongly of the "we killed the bear" story. The reverend contradicts himself. With one breath he shouts, "You never did one of the thousand good things that Christians have done for mankind," and in the very next he gives the lie by saying that the despised Infidels have done and are doing good and noble things for mankind. After admitting that much he immediately robs them of the credit by claiming the glory for Christ. This comes with very poor grace from a believer in a religion that copied and borrowed nearly every ceremony and dogma it contains from the heathen religions. Will the reverend deny it? Christianity borrowed not only its ceremonies, etc., but its crucified Christ was a story taken from the heathen mythology. Does the reverend know that the story of divinely begotten and crucified saviors was believed in hundreds of years before Christianity? Christianity patterned after India's and Egypt's hospitals, borrowed their religious ceremonies, and stole their savior from them; and then the reverend tells the Infidel, "You are aping our good qualities."

I would ask him who were the leaders of the antislavery movement? Infidels. Who opposed them? The Christians clergy. Can the reverend deny this? Who mobbed William Lloyd Garrison in the streets of Boston? Christians, led by preachers! The churches of Boston closed their doors to antislavery speakers. The Infidel Investigator Hall in Boston opened its doors to antislavery speakers. Will the reverend deny this? Who did copying? The Bible teaches and commands slavery and polygamy. Will the reverend deny this? Lincoln, the Infidel president of the United States, issued the proclamation that freed millions of slaves.

Who were the leaders in the temperance movement? Infidels. The first book published in America against liquor was written by an Atheist; the first temperance newspaper was edited by an Infidel, and in all reforms you will find the Infidel in the front.

In America's nation of sixty million people Infidelity has but one representative man, and he fears oral discussion.—Campbell, V.D.M.

I wonder if he has a reader or hearer who swallows that. If the reverend is not ignorant he knows it to be a double falsehood. Infidelity in America has hundreds of representative men, and not one of them will refuse—on the contrary they invite—discussions with respectable men (not polecats like the self-convicted falsifier, Clark Braden, who is denounced as a liar by religious papers and the clergy who know him), and I would ask the reverend to inform me if there is a religious publishing house that has published the debates between Ingersoll and Black, Fisher, Field, and Gladstone, or the debates that have occurred between Bennett and the clergy, Jamieson, Underwood, Watts, Reynolds, and Putnam. These and many other Infidel debaters have held many discussions with the clergy. The debates were all published in book form, and in Infidel papers. Did we see any of them published in religious papers, or put in book form by the pious publishers? Notwithstanding this, we have parsons who have the cheek to say Infidels fear debate. Have you the honesty to say you were mistaken? Right here I would inform the reverend that Infidel papers give the Christians an opportunity to defend themselves through their columns. Religious papers will not accord that right to Infidels.

If the Infidels do not like the Bible and religion of Christ, why don't they flee the country?—Campbell, V.D.M.

For the simple reason that the Infidel has as much right on this soil as the Christian, and if there is any fleeing to do we prefer to let the Christians do that act if they do not like our company. No, we intend to camp right here. We know that the wish of the clergy is that the Infidels would leave them to pull the wool over the eyes of their dupes. Reverend sir, your church is to-day honeycombed with Freethought to the extent that you have not the power to compel us to flee. One hundred year ago you had the power to banish, or imprison and hang heretics. The church exercised the power, and would do it again, but the grip of the church is loosened. The only weapon used by the clergy against Infidelity is slander and falsehood. In the antislavery days the church used slander against abolitionists. The founder of your Campbellite or Christian church was a proslavery advocate. The Ingersoll you bark at is in favor of liberty. As a piece of advice, I would warn you not to endeavor to do what the intellect of the church, Gladstone, Field, Black, and Fisher, have failed to do—answer Ingersoll. All the clergy in the world cannot shake him from any position. You should let up. But then, you are modest about it; you pick out something easy.

Campbell's logic will not bear a very favorable comparison with Ingersoll's.

Speaking about Infidels fearing debate, how was it about that discussion you were to have with a young lawyer of Forest Grove? And last of all I will ask you if you are willing to meet the next Infidel speaker who comes to Hillsboro, and debate with him? Here is an opportunity to prove who fears debate.

There are twenty-five more misstatements in "Replies to a Skeptic," which I will not mention for want of space, but the samples given are enough to judge the rest by. W. C. CLOW.
Hillsboro, Oregon.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary.....241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
CHARLES ECKHARD, Treasurer.....28 Lafayette place, New York
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com.....120 Lexington ave., New York
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com.....106 So. Halsted st., Chicago

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	Harry Hoover,	S. W. Devenbaugh,
Courtlandt Palmer,	Charles B. Reynolds,	Wm. Algie,
T. B. Wakeman,	Prof. Ch. Orchardson,	Roman Staley,
James Parton,	L. K. Washburn,	H. P. Mason,
J. D. Shaw,	W. S. Bell,	N. D. Goodell,
W. F. Jamieson,	Mattie A. Freeman,	D. W. Smith,
Charles Watts,	M. M. Secor,	Jas. Wardwell,
John E. Remsburg,	Otto Wettstein,	J. W. Black,
Horace Seaver,	Wm. Redfield,	Thos. J. Truss.
Mattie P. Kregel,

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONGRESS A. S. U.

OFFICIAL CALL.

To the Local Secular Unions, Life, Charter, and Annual Members, and all Liberal citizens who support the Nine Demands of Secularism, Greeting:

You are hereby invited to attend the Twelfth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union, which will convene at Lafayette Hall, Wood street, near 4th, Pittsburgh, Pa., Friday, October 5, 1888, at 10 A.M., for a four days' session—5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th, inclusive.

All Charter and Life Members, all Vice-Presidents, all Chairmen of State Executive Committees, and all duly accredited delegates from Local Secular Unions are entitled to seats and votes in this Annual Congress. Each Local Secular Union is entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates. Annual Members who pay or have paid $1 in the national treasury are entitled to seats, but not to votes, except by unanimous consent of the Congress.

This Congress will especially consider practical questions tending to further agitation for the taxation of church property; the abrogation of state aid to sectarian institutions; abolition of state, national, military, and prison chaplaincies; repeal of all judicial oaths, Sunday and other oppressive and unjust ecclesiastical laws; nullification of attempts to subvert our Constitution by a legal recognition of Theism in the American Magna Charta, and such other measures as will not merely thwart intended theological encroachments, but absolutely expunge from our laws, state and federal, such insidious acts as have already crept in to blot out mental freedom from our republic.

It is to be hoped that the addresses delivered will deal with the practical issues of the organization, so that there will be such an awakening of the people to these vital questions of the hour that a revival of the instinct of liberty and justice for all will necessarily result; that again from the Keystone state—the birth-place of the association—the clarion voice of freedom shall reverberate throughout the land.

Pittsburgh being situated almost in the center of a district containing many of our most distinguished workers, thinkers, and writers, besides the active host within its limits, there is little doubt that this Congress will be a glorious gathering of the forces who stand for mental liberty, as expressed in the desire for a complete Secularization of the government.

S. P. PUTNAM, Pres., E. B. FOOTE, JR., Ch. Ex. Com.,
E. A. STEVENS, Sec., MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com.,
CHAS. ECKHARD, Treas.

E. A. STEVENS.

The world has heard much from the subject of this sketch but little of himself. His ambition has not been to ape martyrdom, or to laud the events of an exceptional career.

Secularism in Chicago has a glorious record. Omitting the name of E. A. Stevens, its history would be a single line. It would be like the play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out. As a recognition of his pertinacity of purpose, his bold and energetic advocacy of Liberalism, he was long ago dubbed Chicago's Bradlaugh by one of our papers, and he exhibits some of the tact for leadership which is conceded to his great countryman. Into whatever movement he has gone he has pushed to the front in spite of himself, and he has had to drop out of many to escape the honors and to more thoroughly devote himself to secular work, a work in which he never tires, to which all business, personal considerations, and everything else must bend. That is his prime object; the others are incidental.

He has a most remarkable history. When only a boy of 14, he ran away from home to join a cousin who commanded a detachment under Colonel Peard, "Garibaldi's Englishman." Shortly after his arrival, during the bombardment of Palermo by the Neapolitans, his cousin was killed. It was then insisted that this ambitious youth be returned to his relatives. Consequently, for this escapade, he was sent home by the consul in disgrace. Upon the death of his grandmother, apparently the only attachment that held him to England, he came to America, and after a brief visit to Canadian friends, he returned and enlisted in a New York regiment, serving the last year of the war, having had, at the age of 17, the unusual experience of sampling service in both hemispheres.

As a writer he is versatile and can show some flattering notices; has held several important positions, both editorial and reportorial, and might have had a successful journalistic career except for his radicalism on religious and social subjects. He has edited several labor papers, and contributed largely to the Liberal press. Notwithstanding his radicalism, he has (previous to his election as secretary) held for years an enviable position as the representative of one of the best known firms in the United States, and has the friendship and unlimited confidence and trust of his late employer.

In 1876 he was received into the Knights of Labor on his honor, refusing to take the oath; but, editing a labor paper at that time, his admission was considered essential. He was a delegate from Detroit to the General Assembly of '79, elected chairman of the executive board then in power, a higher office than the general master workman. His Atheistic views were very unpalatable to Powderly, who is merely an agent of the Romish church, and the law was soon changed to consolidate the two offices—that of chairman of the executive board and general master workman—thus placing the order more completely in the latter's power. He has held several offices in the Typographical Union, was secretary of the Detroit Union and other subordinate unions, and wrote the memorial address on the death of his friend Horace Greeley, which was presented to his family and published in the Philadelphia Printer.

Apropos of the recent unveiling of the statue to Garibaldi in New York I would say that the Chicago Liberal League was the first organization in this country which publicly commemorated Garibaldi's death. One of the finest theatres in the city was secured for the occasion. Several Italian patriots spoke in his honor, and Mr. Stevens presented the memorial which was unanimously adopted.

Mr. Stevens cannot lay special claim to oratory, but is a keen and trenchant debater. In regard to characteristics, it may be said that he is impulsive, energetic, aggressive, but exercises strong common sense. This last attribute makes him, whatever position he may fill, the right man in the right place, and if working for the success of a cause or principle, he "will fight it out on that line," if it takes him, like the hero of the Rebellion, "all summer." Unrelenting to opponents, for he places himself on the side he considers right, he is yet impatient of an injustice to his fellows, and his strong as well as his weak point is the chivalry with which he stands by his friends, always looking out for their welfare, seldom considering his own interest. He has the respect of many of Chicago's distinguished citizens of business, bench, and bar. He is rigidly scrupulous as to other people's money, but recklessly prodigal in regard to his own. The Chicago Secular Union has paid hundreds of dollars to the national organization, but not one cent of this has been drawn from its treasury. Mr. Stevens, by his own personal efforts, has raised this money and paid it in. He has been elected president of the local society again and again, and, although always protesting, has served nine or ten times. This he may well consider an honor, as the Union numbers among its members some of the "brainiest" people of the city. He was also elected secretary of the American Secular Union under protest. He did not seek the office. He gave up a position in which the remuneration was greater than he at present receives. The office sought him. It was suggested by Courtlandt Palmer and other prominent Liberals that Mr. Stevens would make a good secretary. The splendid work he has done since the Congress has verified the wisdom of his friends. He has devoted himself to the work with zeal and energy. If that devotion does not insure success, it will not be owing to any incompetency on the part of the secretary, but to certain Liberals of the country, who, having become chronic in criticism, seem no longer able to recognize honesty and ability.

MRS. M. A. FREEMAN,
Chicago, Ill. In the Freethinkers' Magazine.

A NATIONAL OUTRAGE.

We Americans are altogether a queer nation. We engage people at a very good price to tell us how great and glorious is the freedom enjoyed in this most great and glorious republic, and we smile and spat our hands together as they tell us about "liberty of conscience," and all that, and cast a pitying look across the waters at the poor "foreigners" who do not have this most excellent liberty. It is a very good thing to explode powder with on the Fourth of July, and I don't deny that I like to shoot off a fire-cracker myself once a year in honor of George Washington, but when one comes to consider a few plain facts seriously, the "liberty" floats off like a soap-bubble; and the "conscience"—ah me! I fear sometimes the conscience is a more hollow quantity still!

If, then, you have a conscience, you who read these lines, Freethinker or religionist, I care not which, pray consider the facts in this narration, and then decide for yourself whether that phrase, "liberty of conscience," can have any relevancy in the present status of things.

Conscience! I felt my cheeks burn with shame as I passed through the marble portals of Girard College, and faced the voiceless statue of the man whose magnificent gift to the children of the poor has built him a monument that will last as long as the human heart shall beat. Conscience! Could I, could you, my friend, pause before the helpless dust of the dead and know that the last wish, the last hope of the pulseless heart, had been mocked, ridiculed, trampled under foot; could you look at the solemn, low couch of stone, then turn your eyes to the left and see in the tranquil sunlight the haughty pile of masonry which is at once the tomb of his trust and a monument to the accursed treachery of some, the cowardice of all; could you steadily look at them both and in a firm voice speak that word—Conscience? Could you even whisper it?

An eerie reproach seems oozing out of these quiet stones, and it takes possession of you and follows you up the marble stairs, and stares at you out of the eyeless sockets of the beasts and birds in the zoological collection, and haunts you like a silent accusation as your eyes rest on the dusty chairs and desks and tables which were the dead man's private furniture. It almost seems like a presence as you step out into the softened light which rolls down through the splendid dome; and the silence that rests upon these beautiful edifices which adjoin the college seems like the ominous menace that issues from closed lips.

Luckily, while perambulating through one of these marble enigmas, we were fortunate enough to find an individual disposed to converse—a privilege not allowed the children, as we were rather peremptorily informed by one of the "gentlemen" tutors. But our conversationalist was a lady—a real lady too, though she does carry the standard of Jesus right manfully.

The following conversation took place, and I trust that the ingenious contortion of the meaning of words here given will enlighten some of our Freethinkers who imagine that a spade is a spade:

"How many pupils have you at present?"

"Thirteen hundred."

"How many teachers?"

"Well, about one to every forty children."

"Till what age do they remain?"

"They must go when they are eighteen. By Girard's will they are then bound to the city till twenty-one, but in order to avoid this they may have their indentures canceled."

"Does the college secure positions for them?"

"Yes, at first."

"I see you have a chapel built; do you hold religious services?"

"Oh yes, daily."

"Ah! Are the pupils free to attend or absent themselves as they wish?"

"Oh no; they are all obliged to attend."

"Indeed! Do you have any Catholic pupils?"

"A great many."

"Jews?"

"Yes, we have every sort of creed."

"All obliged to receive the same kind of religious instruction?"

"Well, the services are not conducted by an ordained minister; you see it was Girard's will that they should have moral training, but not religious training, and the services are intended as moral instruction."

(I recalled Heston's portrait of "Jo" in prison, and recollected the xxxviii chapter of Genesis.) Proceeding with the interview we learned that the Bible, from which the lay preachers gather their bunches of morals, was the Protestant Bible—"our Bible," the lady said.

I said to myself:

Lo, the poor Freethinker, whose untutored mind
Conceived morality, is left behind!
Faith to the dead is but an idle dream,
Betrayal, pure morality, 'twould seem!
Ye fools, whom conscience never taught to stray
In the particular blunders of God's way,
Lighting the earth before he made the sun
Setting his plants out ere the day begun,
Shaping a full-grown woman from man's rib,
Then making Eden one great baby crib!
Ye unpoetic souls who stick to facts
Liking the truth, whate'er the measure lacks,
Learn how your simple minds have been mistook!

Morals are not in men, but in a book;
That book, of all that Nature writes the libel,
The which you wiser fellows call "our Bible."
And more, ye simpletons, one word's another.
Hereafter when you say your sister, 'tis your brother,
If not, in name of all that ye can pitch on,
How do they confound morals with religion?

On looking over the class library, which the teacher kindly threw open for our inspection, the first thing that greeted the eye was a whole row of Bibles. Each pupil is obliged to have one, we were told. Part of Girard's will, I suppose! That man would certainly be surprised if he could come back and learn all the peculiar things he meant when he made that will. I verily believe he would find that document was what my friend, John S. Byers, says a parable is, viz.: "When I say something to you that you don't understand and I don't understand, that is a parable." For instance, he would learn, if he were talking with this lady, that when he stipulated that no minister or priest was to enter the college grounds, he meant no nun and no priest—minister meant "nun," of course, properly interpreted. But unfortunately there is a Catholic member on the board of directors, and said Catholic member appears to have keener faculties than the remainder of the board (they are all church members), so that the Catholic star is in the ascendant, and the sisters of charity visit the institution, and control the hired help; and quietly the cohorts of Rome are advancing their outposts, and closing in the magic circle of their anacondine power. It was amusing, yet "sadder than tears," to witness the indignation evinced by this good woman against the "misconstruction of Mr. Girard's will." It is so unique to hear how much that staunch old Free-thinker dreaded Catholicism and loved Protestantism—when the story is told by Protestant lips; yet it is sad, sad as the apathy of death, to see this magnificent gift to Freethought become a seeming matter of indifference to Freethinkers, a subject of wrangle between the contending powers of superstition. Upon that ground consecrated by a pure and loving act, no shadow of the church's sanguine seal should ever have been pressed. That stone which has been built to shape a sanctuary for God would have fed and clothed many a homeless lad, and the sound-waves floating over the dead ears that hear no more might have borne the foam of children's laughter, where it now bears the surge-like chant of the English church.

And, I ask again, is it liberty we lack, or is it conscience? Are we so bound by the chains of religious authority in this supposed free country that we dare not resist, or do we not care to win back our own?

Is it that we fear the wrath of the legalized God; do we so shrink from the enmity of our neighbors; are we so held by the vice-like grip of the social dicta that we do not clamor for an unattainable justice? Is this the liberty our Fourth of July orators declaim about? Or is it worse than this? Have we become so criminally indifferent, so incapable of effort, so engrossed in our lives alone, so wrapped in petty jealousies and quarrels unworthy to be fought by him who claims the glorious banner of Freethought, that we forget, or, remembering, resign our trust to the comfortable plan of laissez faire? We reap the ripened harvest sown by those who watered the furrow with their hearts' best blood; in these easier days, is there no seedtime—shall the future reap no harvest? Is this being a Freethinker?

This is not a small matter; it is not to be slightly passed over. I am not indulging in rhetorical bombast. The facts are there; I would alter them if I could, but there is no other alternative. In the face of this unblushing steal, perpetrated by the church, I must repeat, either we have not liberty or we have not conscience. Take which horn of the dilemma you will. And if you will neither, then let us get an expression of sentiment upon this subject which may crystallize itself into the demand, "Fiat Justitia." It is not I, but the smothered voice in the sepulchre, that is calling upon you to do it. Litigation is costly; loss of friends is costly; unpopular truth is costly; but there is nothing so costly as the sacrifice of principle. What I said at Chicago I now repeat: the gathering force of the church, as a political factor, checked by their own dissension, and by the weak barrier that a few true Liberals have thus far interposed alone, is the sword of Damocles suspended by a hair. Not that I underestimate the power and strength and goodness of those who wear the heavy harness—their devotion is a sacred thing to me—but because wherever I go, I have not to pierce deep to see that "the trail of the serpent is over all." And all the more, because I reverence those sternly faithful few, I am shocked, amazed, and bitterly pained to find the many so indifferent.

Now is your time to waken! Look at the signs of the times—loosen the coil before the serpent strikes. If not, you will wake one day—wake with a start to see them guillotine your "Liberty." And your "conscience!"—your conscience will be the conscience of the state; the state, the pope of Rome.

VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Since my last letter I have been out to Oswego, and given four lectures to very good audiences. Oswego is an iron manufacturing town seven miles south of Portland. It is also an old coal town, and has a railroad and a steamboat landing. The town is much scattered, but is a very fine location, being a little valley running into the Willamette river, surrounded by high hills, covered formerly with heavy timber, but now with fine orchards and splendid farms. Deep down in the hills are found plenty of rocks that yield a rich iron ore. A company has built a very fine set of ovens and reduction works; also a large water and gas pipe factory, and intends to build rolling-mills, and thus be able to work iron from the original ore into all its multitudinous forms for the market. Oregon is a great state, with wonderful possibilities in the near future. It has any amount of timber, coal, iron, and in places the more precious metals.

The lectures were well received, and I found the people generally intellectual and Liberal. While there I was magnificently cared for and entertained by J. C. Davidson and wife and two daughters, who are all natural-born Infidels, never having been born again, or tasted of the blood of Jesus, or eaten of his body. They have taken the Boston Investigator for nearly thirty years, and have no fear or love of God but live and are happy among the flowers and fruits that fill the air with their aroma. Father and Mother Davidson, in their fast ripening years, and Isola and Elva, their young daughters, in the bloom of life and health, all worked like Trojans to make the lectures a success and my stay pleasant and profitable. No pleasanter home or people are often met than these true, generous friends. May they ever maintain the flag above the cross, and continue to hold the fort of Liberalism.

Among the untiring workers here are Mr. C. Beal and wife, C. H. Saunders and wife, Mrs. Carrie Haight, W. Haight, and C. W. Saunders, who is just as ready to do up big packages of Infidel ideas and words and give them to his customers, as of sugar, soap, or tea. He never will put his "light under a bushel," for he is "dyed in the wool," like his father, C. H. Saunders. A committee has been appointed to lay the foundation for a permanent society, as there is a very large Liberal element in the city. A hall will be built without doubt, in the near future, and thus the good work goes on. Superstition dies hard, but die it must, as man rises slowly but surely out of his ignorance and the long ages of false teaching by the priests.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

Portland, Oregon, Aug. 7, 1888.

A Few Thoughts.

To the Editors of Freethought:

After reading Mr. McArthur's suggestions about testing independent slate writing, I anticipated something satisfactory from your second seance with the medium who gave you the first. But, alas! the seance did not come off because the medium had more callers than he could accommodate, though spending cash to call in more! It is very evident that honest skeptics are not desired by some mediums unless they come with open-mouthed credulity, and I am just simple enough to think that such mediums are mere pretenders; for over and over again it has been affirmed by mediums and spiritual instructors that an honest, sincere skeptic, desirous of finding the truth, was just the person they wanted to convince. Had writing been obtained under those test conditions the advertising which that medium would have got in every Spiritual paper and many of the Freethought journals would have given him such notoriety that his services would have been in constant demand. It was a fine opportunity to silence a doubter and establish a fact, but—it wasn't done.

There is something to interest the doubter, and the believer, in your extract from the Examiner relative to Stephen Pearl Andrews and Courtlandt Palmer. Why did that eminent Spiritualist and distinguished thinker fail to keep his promise and communicate with Mr. Palmer, is a question that will puzzle the believer more than the doubter; for the doubter thinks he knows why. We have the testimony of E. H. Heywood that Mr. Andrews put in an appearance at his house in spirit form; but among all the mediums, from Maine to California, he failed to find one through whom he could give the "memorized sentence" to Courtlandt Palmer as promised, and Mr. Palmer, like T. L. Brown, died without receiving promised evidence. Such things, in connection with the fact that professional mediums refuse to meet honest investigators, will go far to strengthen doubt and furnish arguments for those who see in death the end of conscious existence.

C. SEVERANCE.

Los Angeles, Cal.

Still Another Club.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have completed another small club for FREETHOUGHT, and take pleasure in inclosing you express money order for $5 in payment of same. I was much pleased to see FREETHOUGHT come out enlarged and illustrated in honor of our dead comrade, Courtlandt Palmer. If this is not to be permanent just yet, I hope you may soon get support enough to warrant such a step.

Yours for success and prosperity,

Boulder Creek, Cal.

W. S. RODGERS.

Dr. Chapman Rebutted.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In your issue of July 28 appears an article headed, "Raw Material and Ignorance," by George W. Chapman, M.D. Said article is such an exhibition of ignorance and injustice that I leave my harvesting to reply. Mr. Chapman's own statements refute him. He says 97 per cent of the farms in some counties in Kansas are mortgaged. And this applies to all the northwestern states, for the same cause, viz., producing raw material and exporting for European labor to manufacture and then importing it for American consumers. Why, oh why, not Americans manufacture their own woolen and cotton goods? And when Mr. Chapman says, "and if it was correct, which it is not," he makes a terrible mistake to say the least, for the statement of Col. R. G. Ingersoll that a country that raises raw material and sells it as such will always be ignorant and poor, is an absolute fact which will develop itself in a very few years in this grand and glorious land, to the satisfaction of the most ignorant and learned. Will Mr. Chapman give a reason why we should export a number of ox hides and receive back, by importation, a side of leather? My opinion is, the only reason that can be truthfully given is that it furnishes work for Europeans and freight for railways and British ships and sailors. I cannot do better than by inserting, before I close, what Col. R. G. Ingersoll did say. All his works and words are like the sunlight, they will not be dimmed by close inspection:

"A country that raises raw material and sells it as such, will always be ignorant and poor. The labor required to produce raw material is ignorant labor, but the moment that raw material is worked into fabrics and fashioned into beautiful shapes, it requires intelligence. The consequence is, the greater number of industries we have in the United States the more intelligent our population will be. Another reason: Ordinary labor is always cheap labor. Labor commands a price in proportion that the mind is mixed with the muscle, in the proportion that thought is mingled with effort. The people who want us to raise raw material for a foreign land like England to manufacture, simply vote for the poverty and ignorance of the Americans and for the wealth and intelligence of Great Britain. I am in favor of protection of American industries, because it will develop American brains; because under that system we can raise the most beautiful things beneath the stars—great men and great women. Where men pursue but one industry they become stupid. When the industries are diversified every part of the brain is employed, and we have use for every aptitude, for every kind of genius. I am in favor of American production, because under that policy we have become the richest nation on the globe. I am in favor of that policy, because we are the most ingenious people who ever lived; because we have more sense than any other people that I ever happened to meet. I am in favor of that policy because here in the United States we have on the average better homes, better clothes, better food, and better schools than any other nation. I believe the hearthstone is the foundation of America. I believe the fireside is the altar of the republic. I am in favor of that policy that will put a roof over the head of every mechanic.

Hooper, Utah.

EDWARD F. MUNN.

Will.

There is no chance, no destiny; no fate
Can circumvent, or hinder, or control
The firm resolve of a determined soul.
Gifts count for nothing; will alone is great;
All things give way before it soon or late.
What obstacle can stay the mighty force
Of the sea-seeking river in its course,
Or cause the ascending orb of day to wait?
Each well-born soul must win what it deserves.
Let the fool prate of luck. The fortunate
Is he whose earnest purpose never swerves,
Whose slightest action or inaction serves
The one great aim. Why, even death stands still,
And waits an hour sometimes for such a will.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Eternity.

Along the waste of chaos, from its source
Beyond the limit of the realm of mind,
Rushes resistless in a whirling wind
The mighty tumult of an aimless force.
Great clouds of star-dust rise along its course,
And on a settling atom left behind
Beings are formed, with power of thought combined
With love and hate and pity and remorse.
They plan and toil and struggle, sell and buy,
Make war among themselves, and take to wife,
While generations pass and multiply.
The little creatures wage their little strife,
Looking with longing on their little sky,
In expectation of eternal life.

LOUIS BELROSE, JR., in the Open Court.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM will lecture at Nonpareil Hall, corner First and Madison streets, to-morrow evening, upon the subject of "The Glory of Infidelity." Mr. Putnam is president of the American Secular Union, a writer of considerable reputation, and a fluent speaker. There is a man named Clark Braden, a former Campbellite preacher who has followed Mr. Putnam through Oregon seeking an opportunity to meet him in debate. Mr. Putnam, however, declines the honor upon the grounds that Braden published a vile slander against Col. R. G. Ingersoll and his family, and Colonel Ingersoll is a vice-president of the American Secular Union. The members of that organization claim to be ready at any time to meet any gentleman of contrary opinion, but refuse to debate with or recognize any slanderer, liar, or other disreputable person.—Portland Northwest.

SOME cranks are complaining against the Sunday sale of ice cream, soda water, and the mysterious but delicious milk-shake. There are some people who would make this world a place of torment, in the mistaken notion that they are working for the glory of God. But the dark days of the cerulean laws have gone forever, and if a man craves a milk-shake on Sunday he has a perfect right to tap the first lemonade stand he sees. The more dispensers of the thirst-slaking fluids there are, just at this time, the better it is for humanity, and the less liability of a fracture in the commandments.—Colorado Graphic.

"Love Ventures in the Aliunde Islands" is an interesting and amusing book published at 25 cents by the Truth Seeker Company, New York. It is not especially a Freethought work, but is sufficiently wicked to be classed as blasphemous by some of the reviewers. We do not believe that Mr. Somerby can look at the pictures in the book without blushing.

"Ten Nights in a Barroom" is the temperance play with which Messrs. Craig & Kemble are seeking to inculcate a moral lesson at the Standard Theatre this week. The prices of admission range from fifteen to fifty cents.

At the fire-proof Bijou Theatre (Market street opposite Grant avenue) Billy Emerson and his forty proficient assistants are making the welkin ring with minstrelsy of the polite and cultured kind.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 339 Eddy st., S. F.

* *

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S
GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.
P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months.
50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to
Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by
J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine
paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents;
paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS.
By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular, readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible; instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" needed valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured; Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati; Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men; Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 25th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

For the Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS, CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.

33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid gold silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13 50, $14 50; 5 ounce, $16 00; 6 ounce, $17 50.
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17
$18, $19 50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4
being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best
14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest
style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24 50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies'
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$22; 15 jewels, $28. In good second quality filled cases, $2
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38.
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis-
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4 $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1;
best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set
best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12.
Large field glasses, $3, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free-
BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
BADGE IN PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of cut and smaller,
two-thirds size. War-
ranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2 75, $3 50. Large,
$3 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $3, $10; and
charms up to $25. De-
mand daily increasing.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

"Zum Walfisch."

THE WHALE

CHAS. A. JONAS, Proprietor.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars,

Cold Lager and Sharp Steam Beers.

24 THIRD ST., Near Market,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert
G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say
infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to
those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior
Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address:
Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San
Francisco, Cal.

HAND-BOOK OF THE LICK OBSERVATORY

OF THE

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,

—BY—

EDWARD HOLDEN, LL.D.,

Director of the Observatory.

A volume of 135 pages, 12mo., printed on heavy paper, and bound in flexible cloth covers.
Besides likenesses of

Professor Holden and James Lick,

By mail 80 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Vol. I—No. 35.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - SEPTEMBER 1, 1888

WE have some patience with people who declare their mission to be that of saving the world; but when they pose as the judges of their fellow-men it is time to sit down on them heavily.

THE London Freethinker says: "A Christian traveler finds that there are at least three tombs of John the Baptist in various parts of Palestine, and two editions of the 'well' into which Joseph was cast by his brethren. Who will now venture to disbelieve scripture stories thus doubly and trebly confirmed?"

COL. J. RAINS BUNDY, of the Religio-Philosophical Journal, should be happy over his latest newspaper "fake." He fooled the press of the whole country by his yarn about the identity of W. R. Colby and the Texas parson. It probably helped his circulation, and as for his reputation, nothing could help or injure that. He deserves the felicitations of all humbugs.

IT is an ill-wind that blows no good to the church. When the harvests are bountiful the clergy tell the people that providence has blessed them with plenty in order that they may give generously to his servants—the priests. If the crops are short the priests assure their hearers that God is displeased because they have not paid their tithes, and a penance is thereupon imposed. Only another case of "heads, I win; tails, you lose."

THE Japanese carving, the exhibition of which caused the arrest of G. T. Marsh by C. R. Bennett, Comstock's Pacific Coast lieutenant, is still in the window of Mr. Marsh's curio store in the Palace Hotel block. Everybody who sees it agrees with the jury that there is nothing immoral in the little work of art. Bennett has not as yet made himself quite so conspicuous a public nuisance as his chief, but he is crowding the champion for the honors.

THERE is a faith-healers' campmeeting in Newark, N. J., and last Sunday was a day for the relation of experience—a sort of clinic. Among the remarkable effects of prayer was that instanced by Police Officer Enoch Perry, who testified that his home had been overrun with bedbugs. His industrious wife had endeavored to remove the pests, but soap and water, borax, and other usual remedies were applied in vain, the tiny vampires would not go.

He then tried irresistible, unfailing prayer, and nary a bedbug was visible after that. It appears that the age of miracles is not past, as some of the scoffers have the effrontery to claim. Hereafter let us pray, "Deliver us from bedbugs, for thine is the blowgun, the powder, and the borax. Amen." From this to the extermination of fleas will be but a brief and easy step.

WASHINGTON IRVING BISHOP, the mind reader, has made his little splurge and desiccated. He called it an exposure of Spiritualism, and challenged the mediums to duplicate his tricks. Slater, the test medium, made the mistake of accepting the challenge and was rendered ridiculous before a large audience. Mr. Slater no doubt now realizes his error. The mystery-mongers should confine themselves to such specialties as are included by their diverse gifts, and give each other a wide berth. For practical purposes it is quite unimportant whether such manifestations as occur in the presence of these gentlemen are produced in one way or another. The value of things is not determined by their mundane or "supramundane" source.

IN a little religious paper called the Testimony published at Cohocton, N. Y., is found this description of the "pastor:" "At ease among hundreds of dying sheep, smiling and smirking and receiving honors; uttering powerless platitudes and fine speeches; making fashionable calls in elegant attire, or attending entertainments and social gatherings suggested and enjoyed by the carnal heart alone; tolerating some words of earnestness from a few who have been truly enlightened, and smiling complacently at the manifestations of the spirit in a few who have not yet been wholly swallowed up of carnality and numbered with the dead, while he can hold them in subjection; salaried and fattened and favored; exalted and honored and obeyed; a picture of lordly superiority and contentment!"

NEWS AND NOTES.

THE first to greet me at Walla Walla was A. B. Niles, and the moment I saw him I knew that all was right after my long and dusty journey. Sol Center and W. S. Gilliam also gave hearty welcome, and for an hour or two we rode over the beautiful city of Walla Walla. You can look for miles away over the blue plains to where the mountains gem the horizon with varied forms. There is plenty of wealth at Walla Walla, but it is not of the adventurous kind, and so Walla Walla does not spread the radiant colors of the boom. It is a quiet, elegant, and genial place. It is bound to grow. The valley in which it is situated is productive, and the harvest makes beauty as far as the eye can reach. The United States troops are stationed here. The fort is on a lovely spot. In the evening Mr. Niles and I went to the dress parade. The band is one of the finest in the army, and the music and the uniforms and the stately march were quite delightful. However, I enjoyed it a great deal better than when I was once a part of the moving and glittering machine. In the golden twilight, returning from the barracks to the town, the prospects were most entrancing. The exquisite light over the clouds, the heights, the long stretches of land, the fields and orchards, and tree-embowered city, made a resplendent picture on the coming canvas of the night.

The hall was full. The reception was cordial. I gave the "Demands of Liberalism," and have not found anywhere a more enthusiastic sentiment. The Liberals are determined to go ahead, and I shall lecture again on my return trip, and an organization will be effected.

Sol Center is our wheel-horse. He puts things through with a vim. There is no such word as fail when he embarks in an enterprise. He is most generous, and counts not the cost when his heart is in the work. Every difficulty is easy to meet with his splendid energy. A. B. Niles, whom I met at Portland, at the Saunders' homestead, of which he is a member, and who awoke me early one Fourth of July with a big bomb explosion under my bed, and so kindled my patriotism; he makes a fellow happy anyway with his frank and Secular nature, for he takes this world at its best and don't believe in the "heavenly poultry." It's too thin. He has just moved into his new home, and I was pleased again to greet his wife and children, who give the Freethought of the radiant fireside. Friend Niles also delights in superb horse-flesh that can make the blood tingle as it speeds along, and I, also, enjoyed the same. Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Gilliam, and Mr. and Mrs. O. R. Ballou and daughters, of Milton, are among the staunch Freethinkers of this place, whose homes show that Freethought is for humanity, if not for deity, for that which is real and admirable in human life.

John Picard, Harry Carnes, Dr. Day, J. A. Gregory, M. Martin, Jos. Stockwell, Al. Brodeck, Pierson Bros., Z. K. Straight, S. Twist, Dr. E. L. Eaton, are enrolled in the ranks of Freethought and it was with regret that I had to bid good-bye and hurry on in my journey. I could only give one lecture at this important point, but the promise is all that heart could wish, and I look forward to my return with brilliant hopes. I believe our flag will float here both to summer's and winter's sky.

Frank Schunemann was present, all the way from Pasco, and brought good news of the work there, and of our friends. Schunemann stands by FREETHOUGHT with good wishes, and good money too, and is determined that our bark shall ride the sea in safety, and that the flag shall never be lowered.

On from Walla Walla to Pendleton. I arrive at 7:30 P.M. Nothing had been done about the lecture, but a few friends rallied and I pushed ahead. The court-house was secured, the boy sent out with a bell, and in half an hour the audience was gathered and I lectured on the work of the Union. The beginning is half the battle. I made acquaintances, and the next time Pendleton will be in the front rank. It has many Liberals. I shall lecture here on my return. H. Flickinger, over thirty years a subscriber to the Investigator; J. B. Eddy, of the Tribune, an independent and radical editor; J. B. Despain, whose uncle, Jerry Despain, was one of the noblest veterans in the army and who died about a year ago; Charles Bowsby; Eli Stewart, of Pilot Rock, 76 years old, hale and hearty, with clear, bright mind, and looking forward still to work in this world, are co-workers that will make this part of the field of Freethought aglow with advance.

I leave Pendleton on the midnight train, and early in the morning strike Union—a little bit out of the way of the rushing world, three miles off the railroad—a quiet and comfortable place. However, Freethought is here, and the gloom of orthodoxy does not reign altogether. Judge Brainard, who has the genius and content of the philosopher, makes the Secular Pilgrim feel at home. He has had a varied experience, being a "Forty-niner." The ups and downs of life are no strangers to him. He has learned by actual contact. He has lost no whit of sympathy with mankind by the wisdom of age. It was a pleasure to meet with so well-equipped a mind whose thoughts are original, who speaks from a full, honest, and manly exercise of reason.

My young friend, Bertram Hoffman, is a worker, but amid his matter-of-fact labor comes the poet's delicate insight and the journalistic ardor. He has the literary faculty, which with cultivation in the rough-and-tumble of life will sometime make him a power. He has written for the Investigator, Oregon Scout, and FREETHOUGHT, and has a facile pen. In the school of experience he will find the trenchant blade, for he is not merely a dreamer in the sunny fields, but a true soldier of humanity, ready for the toil and sweat through which only the real song can be sung, and the true music of manhood sounded.

My friend Geo. A. Thompson is on a ranch now, nine miles out, and he looks as if the storm and the sunshine agreed with him. Mrs. Thompson and the two children—Freethinkers, of course—are present at the lecture. One of the children is a newcomer since I was here, but its happy brow bears no impress of the night of orthodoxy.

The court-house was well filled. Judge Brainard introduced me. About five ministers were present, but they did no damage. Only one of them broke silence to correct my scripture quotation, "Blessed be ye poor." He was soon convinced of his mistake, and the hit was so palpable that "the subsequent proceedings interested him no more."

The "champion" was there, but he was made to know his place, and a more thoroughly disappointed intermeddler I have never seen. As will be noted hereafter, it broke his back. He has ignominiously disappeared, routed, "horse, foot, and artillery."

George Owens, of La Grange; J. B. Eaton, of Enterprise; Louis Dupre, of Telocasset; E. Vincent Miller, formerly of Coquille City, something of a Secular pilgrim, like myself; Jones & Tuttle, of the Oregon Scout—a sharp, and go-ahead journal, not afraid of plain speech and independent thought; these are stalwart Liberals.

I arise in the early morn and leave while the sun is just glimmering above the horizon, and as its beams sparkle over plain and hill, so does hope shine within the heart, remembering the generous friends of Grand Round valley. On I go. At dusty noon I arrive at Payette. The hotel at this place is so poor that it cannot afford a coach, and so I had to foot it through the sands to the inn, whose proprietor is able to furnish a good dinner by keeping a drug-store near by. He certainly could not do this out of the profits of his hotel. After dinner I mount an ancient vehicle to go across country thirty miles to Emmetts. My driver was constable at Payette, and many a thrilling story did he relate of war to the knife, and pistols, and dark and bloody deeds. I slept about half the time going over, and these romances of the plain kept me awake the other half. I did not get to Emmetts until the sun was down, but, tired and dusty, I was soon resting in a big chair and gazing placidly at the mill where the logs do congregate. James Wardwell is the boss riverman, and while others have got left he has made a drive of a million feet this season, and his wheels keep rolling round.

"For ever the right comes uppermost,
And ever is justice done."

If there is anybody who deserves to be on top, it is friend Wardwell. It a pleasure to visit his home, where nature and democracy prevail, and where life rolls on like the bright river itself. But the shadow will come. Since I have been here Mr. Wardwell's son Thomas has died—an eager and brave lad. He died in the logging-camp among the mountains. It was a sudden grief to the family. No words can give the consolation which the heart of love so eagerly desires. We stand on the brink of an unknown land, and can only try to make this side beautiful as possible, but for the other side the most learned priest is as helpless as the babe.

I lectured Saturday evening in Wardwell's Hall. Freethought has its temple here. It was built by Mr. Wardwell and is open to all, and I doubt not it will be a noble bulwark of the true American Republic. The hall was pretty well filled. There are two churches in the place, but both together could not gather any such number as the Infidels did. At the close of the meeting, about ten o'clock, music and dancing held sway, and Freethought rang with merry strains.

Miss Elsie and Mr. and Mrs. Gill and Park, and others, had just been on a huckleberry expedition among the mountains a hundred miles away, and the taste of these brought New England to my mind, and the days when I was young and went huckleberrying. I have not tasted a huckleberry for years, and to find them out here in Idaho was quite a surprise. They have gorgeous watermelons also, and Mrs. Gill brought forth a superb specimen when we made our afternoon call. In fact, they have all good things at Emmetts. In Mr. Wardwell's fields the sage-brush gives way to clover, and an average of six tons to the acre is produced. There are two and three crops per year.

Friend Church came all the way from Squaw Creek to be at the lecture. He never fails to be on hand. He lives like a philosopher. He has enough to make life happy, and he enjoys it. He has had a career of keen and strange romance in the border land, and knows what it is to keep the Winchester ready for defense in his cabin fort. He is the kind of a Church that will make this world better and happier, for he is a Church without a priest. How much more noble than those churches that "point their aristocratic fingers to the rich man's heaven."

Mr. and Mrs. Turley and all the children were there too. Mrs. Turley would delight Helen H. Gardener, for she demonstrates that there is no sex in brain. She is as good as a man at manual labor or intellectual argument. At the lecture she recited, "I Dreamed that I was God." It was nobly rendered, and received with applause.

Mr. and Mrs. Gill, Mr. and Mrs. Post and daughter, the Harrell Bros., Mr. John Smerage, Mr. and Mrs. Blanchard, Kelly, Deitz, Mrs. Francis, W. F. Wardwell, and others, make this little hamlet in the midst of the dusty plains an attractive spot where one can be at home and rest, for hospitality is as open as the day. I shall come here in November and lecture on election day, and cast my vote for the Nine Demands.

Kelly took me over to Boise City, Sunday morning, thirty miles off. We had a strong team, a mule and a horse, but they did like to loiter by the way. They didn't seem to have any idea that we wanted to reach our destination during the next twenty-four hours. But Kelly is an experienced driver, and the switches he cut and used upon that occasion are too numerous to mention. They did effectual service, and we struck Boise City at noon, but I bet Kelly's arm is a bit lame.

Boynton, of the Signal Service, was the first to greet me at Idaho's capitol. He took us straight to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gould, where the dinner was spread, and in the sunny afternoon, beneath the trees, we talked of war times, for Gould is of the Grand Army, as well as myself. But more interesting still were our thoughts and hopes of the grand republic of the future, when mental slavery shall be abolished.

Capital Hall was well filled in the evening. Evidently there is a strong Liberal element in this place. In accordance with the earnest request of our friends I shall return in November to give two or three lectures instead of one, and also organize. Mr. J. A. Davis made a short and eloquent introductory address. He is a capable and earnest representative of Freethought. He is deeply interested in labor reform, and has become a favorite speaker.

Mrs. Jas. A. Gould has written interesting articles for the Investigator, and Mr. Gould has also poetic enthusiasm and expression, and it was a delight to meet these excellent and ardent friends. With such the dawn sends forth more glorious rays.

We spent Sunday night with Mr. and Mrs. Miller, old settlers of the plain who have never bent the knee to superstition; who on earth's broad bosom have labored for humanity's sake.

A. D. Clark, R. W. Perdue, Mr. Chapman, P. J. Peffly, Harlan Peffly, Mr. Wilson, and others, are among our pleasant acquaintance in Boise City, and I believe we shall have many a good camp-fire here.

Mr. Bacon, of Nampa Progress, was with us. He abides in the Spiritualistic circles, but is a staunch Liberal. We dropped into his office at Nampa and penned some of these notes. They are boring an artesian well near by. If they get water there will be a grand hurrah. Nampa is finely situated and will grow if the country can be irrigated. The garden of the world can be made here, hedged in by the glittering purple hills where gold is said to be concealed.

Mrs. Dr. Beersby, of Mountain Home, was present; not exactly Liberal, but intensely unorthodox. She believes in women's rights, prohibition, Frances Willard, and Helen H. Gardener, and takes FREETHOUGHT. Without doubt she belongs to the big church. She reports that Mountain Home breathes the air of liberty, and I shall try to lecture there on my return.

I have had a splendid week's work all the way from Walla Walla to Ogden, nearly a thousand miles—over plains, through mountains, along broad rivers, beside wastes and shining fields—in a vast wonderful world heaving with new life. Here the mighty heart of Freethought must glow, and its spirit give dreams and hopes marvelous and bright, for the grandest republic of all time shall build its radiant temples beneath these skies.

For the information of the Liberal public I will say that the "champion" has incontinently fled. He bought a ticket for Boise City. I left him at Payette and expected to meet the "familiar demon" at Boise to continue the fight, for did he not say it should be "a fight or a footrace?" He did not, however, put in an appearance. He came, he saw, and was conquered. He took to his heels. He only left a lurid communication per mail. It is a curiosity in its way. I shall preserve it in the archives of FREETHOUGHT. It is a dead give-away. He covers up his dastard retreat with as much mud as possible. But that's no matter. His lies are harmless. He has been branded too often as he was at Colfax. All decent and honorable Christians are tired of his abuse and scandal. He has proved himself totally unworthy of notice. A more despicable braggart never walked the earth. Those who employed him to do his dirty work should hide their heads in shame. It seems they no longer support him, or why this sudden departure? If paid for it, I presume he would still follow the footsteps of Freethought with his infamous scurrility. He has been thoroughly beaten at his own game. He has made our ranks more united than ever. He has not won a single Liberal to justify his course, while I know that many Christians have utterly condemned him. He has marked himself with deeper brands of infamy than it is possible for others to give. He is the Dogberry of disputants, and is continually writing himself down an ass. It has been ground into his stubborn cuticle that he has been playing the fool. Those who believe his lies are equally abased with himself, and show the venom of their nature. As Beecher says, to hunt down slanders is like hunting fleas. It is a waste of energy. In Time's court of the noble and honorable the verdict will be given—not before those who are incapable of a worthy thought. The conflict is over. Freethought has come out victorious. The lies, the scandals, the abuse, the blackguardism, the mud flinging, the braggadocio, the impudence, the barking of the cur, the slime of the serpent, the growl of the wild beast, all have utterly failed. The poor orthodox dogs can only shiver disconsolately as their hired and ingrate mouthpiece scuds away.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Ogden, Utah, Aug. 21, 1888.

WHERE WAS PROVIDENCE?

The collision between the Oceanic and City of Chester off the Presidio recently, so far as the investigation shows, can be attributed to nothing but natural causes, i.e., to the currents and the fog. The captains of both steamers were experienced mariners with good records for ability and discretion. The signals were blown and answered, and apparently all was well, when suddenly the passengers and crew of the doomed vessel saw the great iron prow of the destroying steamer loom up out of the mist, and, before they had time to think, the crash came; the stricken ship went down, carrying with her a dozen human lives. All that human strength and courage could do was of no avail. No power could avert or remedy the loss.

We said no power. According to the belief of the majority of people there was a power that might have so guided the vessels that they would pass each other without touching. That power is called God or providence—an overruling deity that makes note of even the fall of so insignificant a thing as a sparrow, and who had taken the trouble to number all the hairs of our heads. Can it be possible that this being was at the time so engaged with these details that he failed to note the dangerous proximity of the Oceanic and the City of Chester? Is the fall of a sparrow of greater moment than the loss of a dozen human lives? Is it more important that the hairs on our heads should be enumerated than that two crowded steamers should clear each other in a narrow channel? If not, why was the disaster allowed to take place?

In view of facts occurring every day, can any one believe that a good and watchful heavenly father holds us, "as it were, in the hollow of his hand?" The sole refuge for theologians in a corner like this is the plea that there is a soul of good in things evil; but such a plea opens the way for the counter proposition that what is apparently good is in fact only evil, except that we are unable to discriminate. There is as much ground for the belief in universal malignity as in universal beneficence.

But admitting that there is an overruling providence that orders everything for the best, and admitting that the preservation of life and property is best, will some theologian tell us where that providence was hiding itself and why it was inoperative when the Oceanic and the City of Chester approached each other in the fog?

A QUEER RESPONSE.

We have from time to time invited readers of this journal to forward us the names of known Freethinkers, so that sample copies might be judiciously distributed. This request has been largely complied with, but some prospecting is done outside the ranks. In the latter way many strangers have been reached and an occasional subscriber is secured if the person addressed happens to be a Freethinker. Possibly half a dozen out of a hundred respond in one way or another. Some decline to subscribe because they are taking all the papers they can afford to. Some say they cannot subscribe, but would like to know our terms to contributors, either of prose or poetry, as they write both. These generally inclose a sample of their work. They are not aware, evidently, that this journal has a large corps of able contributors who are glad to help us fill our prose columns, without remuneration, and that it has also two editors, both poets, who, as editors, are kept busy reading and rejecting each other's rhythmical contributions.

Once in a while the paper falls into the hands of a good, earnest Christian, in which case we are directed not to send any more of our soul-destroying literature. Here is one of this sort:

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Sir: You will have the kindness not to send any more copies of the FREETHOUGHT to our home. We do not wish to admit to our fireside that which so grossly insults our best and truest friend; the God and rock of our salvation. To answer you in your own language would be to stoop and drink from the same cesspool, or to dip our pen in the same seething venom of hell. It is only another strong proof to us of God's loving kindness and tender mercy, that he still gives to you life with all its benefits, after publishing the matter contained in your journal.

Would it not be well, and to be fair, absolutely necessary, that you try the other side of the question by submitting yourself to the claims of God and of His dear Son Jesus Christ, and then if he fails to give you solid happiness, peace, and joy you will then, and only then, be in a position to deal with the solemn and eternal matters you are handling.

Alameda, Cal.

C. W. JONES.

Such a letter deserves no comment. The writer will remain a Christian until he gets ready to perk up and know something.

WHEN the City of Chester went down in Golden Gate last week before the prow of the Oceanic, a man was seen to jump into the water with a little child in his arms. The man disappeared, but the golden-haired, blue-eyed baby floated. No one seemed to care to risk his life to save the little waif, but, says the account, a sudden splash was heard near the fore part of the Oceanic, and shortly, within a few feet of the drowning child, there bobbed up the queue-wrapped head of a Chinaman. Ah Lung did not prove to be a very strong swimmer, but he "got there." His clothes weighted him down, and the distance was long. He grabbed the baby by the leg, swam to an upturned boat, and, clinging to the keel, lifted the limp little form out of the water. A boat's crew relieved the exhausted heathen, and in a few minutes the babe was in the arms of its mother. There seems to be a touch of humanity even in the breast of the unsanctified pagan.

THE editor of the London Secular Review displays rare discrimination in the selection of matter which he reprints from the Liberal press on this side of the water. Sufficient proof of this is his republication, with due credit, of Judge J. W. North's contribution to FREETHOUGHT entitled "Christianity as Taught in the Creeds."

It is learned from the Golden Gate that the papers are ready for service in the case of W. R. Colby vs. the publishers of certain daily papers of this city, in a civil action for libel, in publishing certain defamatory despatches referring to the plaintiff. Mr. Colby's attorney is ex-Congressman Barclay Henley, himself an able lawyer, who will be assisted by Henry McPike, one of the brightest lights of the San Francisco bar. Mr. Colby's backer is a wealthy Spiritualist friend, who declares that he will assist him in any amount necessary to establish his innocence of the charges made against him, and convict his traducers. "We are assured," says the editor of the Golden Gate, "that suit will also be instituted against the eastern publisher with whom the charges originated."

THE papers all along the route are treating the Secular Pilgrim, Mr. Putnam, with the greatest consideration. His lectures are fairly reported in most instances, and we judge that the impression he leaves in the communities visited is good. The Walla Walla Statesman says: "Samuel P. Putnam, the Liberal lecturer, is a very agreeable gentleman, and an interesting conversationalist. He is a graduate of a theological institution, and was in the ministry ten years. An effort was made to induce him to remain here longer, but his dates would not permit. He is now on his way East, and will return here in November, when our citizens would be pleased to listen to a joint discussion between himself and one of our ministers."

WHEN the New York Observer published a spurious and lying account of the last days of Thomas Paine—a story which had been answered by Colonel Ingersoll, and proved to be false—the publisher of the Observer refused to insert in the columns of that paper an advertisement of a pamphlet containing the discussion in full. The unfairness in this instance is now paralleled by that of the publishers of the London Congregational Review, who, having printed Gladstone's "Remarks" upon the Field-Ingersoll discussion, declined to insert an advertisement of Ingersoll's Reply. Such wretched and despicable cowardice as these religious publishers display ought to make a coyote proud of his record.

MR. FRED EVANS, the independent slate writer, has gone to Australia without redeeming his promise to give the writer a sitting in conjunction with two slates fastened together by twelve screws. We are assured by many persons that Mr. Evans could have produced writing between those slates if he had tried. His failure to do so is doubtless attributable to our intractable aura, which rendered it difficult for the spirits to put themselves en rapport with the medium's psychographic control. With regard to spiritual manifestations we have remarked that it is always easier to explain why they don't happen than why they do.

AWAY back in the early part of the year somebody sent us a clipping from another paper—name of paper not given—upon which we placed the heading, "An Unwelcome Visitor at the Vatican," and published it. The article was recopied in London, got back to America in due process of time, and has gone through many newspapers here credited to the London journal. It is a good thing, and we take pleasure in the reflection that we set it going.

IN the Truth Seeker of August 18 FREETHOUGHT is represented pictorially as the Goddess of Liberty holding aloft the torch of Science, before whose rays the priests and parsons of all denominations are fleeing in dismay. The hit is palpable, and Mr. Heston's compliment is appreciated.

VARIOUS Freethinking business men of this city say that they cannot afford to patronize the advertising columns of FREETHOUGHT for the reason that by doing so they would lose the trade of religious people. Some might set this down to the cowardice of the business men, but we do not; they must look out for their bread and butter. The trouble is due to the ineffable meanness and bigotry engendered by superstition.

It is understood that Mr. L. K. Washburn, of Massachusetts, declines to be named as candidate for president of the American Secular Union. Dr. E. B. Foote, of New York, differing with the Liberal public in general, thinks himself unfitted for the position. Let us therefore nominate Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., and positively refuse to accept any further declinations.

MR. CHARLES F. BURGMAN, the tailor who advertises with us, is said by those who know him to be fully worthy of patronage. He is a skilled workman in his line and has the faculty of treating his customers so that they will come again. He is something of a reformer as well, and has learned by troublesome experience the cost of mental independence.

WE have on hand and for sale a limited number of copies of W. S. Bell's pamphlet, "Liberty and Morality." It treats of prohibition, which the author condemns. Price, 10 cents.

J. S. ELLIS returns a copy of FREETHOUGHT marked, "Wish a remittal of this paper." We do not fully comprehend. Will Mr. or Mrs. Ellis please be more explicit?

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The trade unions are making active preparation for the celebration of Labor Day.—Jackson, the colored Australian, bested Godfrey, the Boston man, in this city last week.—The number of lives lost on the City of Chester, sunk by the Oceanic in the Golden Gate last week, is placed at fifteen. The responsibility for the disaster is generally laid to the fog.—The Lodi Weekly News, burnt out a few months ago, is succeeded by the Valley Review, Gertie de Force-Cluff, editor.—The petition for the impeachment of Judges Sawyer and Sabin, federal judges at San Francisco, has reached the Judiciary Committee.—The complaint of Gano Kennedy against Clara and Frank Alexander for felony growing out of the troubles of the Oakland Christian Independent, was dismissed in the police court last Saturday.—The number of deaths in the city last week was 120.—Evelyn O'Connor, an infant, has brought suit, by her guardian, Herbert Smith, against Rev. Maurice D. Slattery and Rev. Patrick Scanlan to recover $300, which she alleges is due her from the estate of her grandaunt, Margaret D. Slattery.—Eighty-three Chinese violators of the iron door ordinance were found guilty of misdemeanor by Police Judge Lawler last week Friday, and sentenced to pay a fine of $50 each or serve fifty days in the county jail.—Goldenson, the murderer, has concluded not to accept the Roman Catholic faith and will probably die a Hebrew. He will be the second Hebrew hanged in this county. The first was Rubenstein.—Arthur W. Dickens, said to be a nephew of the novelist, committed suicide at Los Angeles recently.—The giant powder works at Berkeley blew up on the 24th ult., killing five workmen.

The sea serpent has shown himself to the people along the St. Lawrence river. It is supposed to be an ocean monster spending a few weeks among the Thousand Islands for his health.—President Cleveland has sent Congress an astonishing message. In retaliation upon Canada for its action in the fisheries matter, Mr. Cleveland proposes to take from the people of that country the privilege they now enjoy of shipping goods through the United States under bond—a traffic which amounts to $270,000,000 per annum. Canada and Great Britain are in a state of excitement, while the people generally throughout the United States are inclined to applaud.—Fiske, the Prohibition candidate for president, expresses a determination to make a lively and effective campaign.—Jay Gould is at Saratoga trying to recover his failing health.—Yellow fever is rife in Florida.—The Umbria beat the City of New York in the race across the Atlantic.—Several Methodist bishops of New York have written to the national committee of one of the political parties saying they cannot support its candidates on account of the party's position on the liquor question.—Ignatius Donnelly, the man who discovered that Bacon wrote the works of Shakspeare, is nominated for governor of Minnesota by the farmers' and labor organizations of that state.

The European harvests are reported much smaller this year than last.—Cholera is abating at Hong Kong, but spreading to other ports.—The Manila correspondent of the Free Press tells of a terrible occurrence in the village of Antibue, near Iloilo. It is a village that contains several thousand natives, one priest, and one other Spaniard. A horde of the natives started out one day lately to kill the priest, and they were engaged in trying to beat him to death when the other white man arrived on the scene with his rifle and fifty cartridges. He set quietly to work and with every cartridge brought down a native. As soon as fifty of the mob were killed the rest became discouraged and retired.

PIOUS GHOULS.

Scarcely a week passes that we do not hear of some Freethinker being buried with Christian "services." The outrageous impropriety and monstrous absurdity of such a proceeding, one would naturally suppose, would prevent its repetition, but still the anomaly survives. The first reason, I presume, for this, is the fact that we have an army of seventy thousand priests, pensioned paupers, who must, by fair means or foul, maintain their hold on the superstitious fears of their silly dupes, and thus secure a mortgage on the "oil and wine," and "fat things" of earth. If they cannot answer a man's arguments, or dragoon him into the church while living, they do the next best thing—steal his body after he is dead and cannot protest.

A priest stands guard over our advent into the world, gives us a Christian name, assumes to think for us, and tells us what to say and do. Not content with dogging us through life, they must be "in at the death," and preach us into heaven, or hell, according as we have been obedient slaves, and contributed to keep them in pampered ease and idleness.

The second reason is, that each of these seventy thousand "shepherds" has perhaps one hundred sheep of the kind most easily led, silly dupes, who believe that their "first allegiance is to God;" that the priest is the oracle of the most high, and when he solemnly suggests the fruits of their husbands' blameless life must be stolen to decorate the cross, they bow in meek submission, and joyfully aid the holy man of God in any measures, no matter how shameless, that will either perpetuate the lie that "Infidelity will not do to die by," or steal the flowers of a noble life and heroic death to cover the hideous deformity of the bloody cross of Christ.

Dr. Titus L. Brown, of Binghamton, N. Y., was a noble specimen of manhood. He was a successful and popular physician. An intelligent and conscientious Materialist and Atheist, he was yet so popular that he for years held the office of president of the New York State Freethinkers' Association. He composed and had published a poem which he told me he had "made all necessary preparations to have read at his funeral." In conversing on the subject he seemed to have every confidence that his wishes in respect to the strictly secular nature of his funeral would be sacredly respected. But

"Alas for the rarity
Of Christian charity
Under the sun."

Dr. Brown was no sooner cold than his wife, the one of all others a man is inclined to trust, called in a priest—if, indeed, vulture-like, he had not already scented the prey, and come without being called—and permitted him to mumble his holy, hellish mummeries, and insult the memory of the man who deserved better treatment at her hands, the treatment she would have received from him had she been called first. I dislike very much to censure any woman, but I must be permitted to say that this act was so dispicable that it can only be excused on the supposition that she was subject to atrophy of the heart and softening of the brain.

Recently Courtlandt Palmer passed to "the silent land." I need not inform my readers who he was. All have read his letter to Colonel Ingersoll, containing instructions that the eloquent colonel should pronounce his funeral oration after his remains were incinerated. He continues: "I shall not be buried from any Christian church, nor do I wish any Christian hymn sung," and then, with the confidence of a trusting husband, he adds: "I have shown this to my wife."

Now, under the circumstances, what ought we to expect? Certainly that the word of a man of his position and means would be law. But as usual that would be reckoning without the priest. I quote from the published account of the funeral: "At the request of the family the Rev. Heber Newton then read the Christian burial service," and "when he had concluded Mr. Cox sang the hymn, 'Lead, Kindly Light,' and Mr. Newton offered a short prayer." "Christian burial service," "hymn," and "prayer" over the remains of Courtlandt Palmer! Sorrow for the baseness of the woman, indignation at the villainous cant and hypocrisy of the priest muttering a Christian ceremony he repudiates in his heart, almost give way to admiration of the sublime cheek of such a proceeding. But why should we be surprised at anything a priest or any of his brainless lackeys may do? The only wonder is that an Agnostic should be so childlike and bland as to trust either of them.

Liberals, how long will you continue to be the victims of Jesuitical guile? How long will you continue to trust in people who are willing to leave father, mother, husband, wife, brother, or sister, dead or alive, and cling to the cross of Christ? There is no just reason why you should longer submit to be maligned while living and insulted when dead. You might find an example worthy of your emulation in Rizpah of old, who faithfully guarded her dead from the vultures that fain would gorge themselves on human flesh.

Pious ghouls are no unsubstantial figment of the imagination. They never sleep. They never tire. They are constantly on the watch to glorify God and to build up the walls of Zion. Will you let them "creep into men's houses and lead silly women captive" while you are alive, and then gloat over your corpse when dead?

The time has arrived for Liberals to assert their rights. Let the watchword be: Priests, hands off! Presume not to invade the chamber of death, and like foul birds of the night litter its sacred walls.

Doctor Brown and Courtlandt Palmer were quite different men, yet I found much to admire, respect, and love in both. The fate of these, my friends, is being duplicated all over the country. What is the remedy? I reply: Let every Infidel make a will. Let that will be read before the funeral, and in it disinherit any or all who fail to comply with the directions therein set forth for a secular funeral. This I find the only safe course.

HARRY HOOVER,

Pres't of the Pittsburgh Secular Society.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 15, 1888.

[Our correspondent's strictures upon the conduct of the pious surviving relatives of Freethinkers are in general quite just. As regards Mrs. Palmer they are hardly applicable. Previous to Mr. Palmer's death he wrote as follows to T. B. Wakeman, Esq.:

"Mrs. Palmer is very anxious to find some liberal theologian who will officiate with Ingersoll. In that case probably you had best withdraw, because the most effective tribute I can receive anyhow is a short encomium as a Freethinker, and Ingersoll's eloquence will accomplish this better even than your knowledge and friendship. Please consult Mrs. Palmer, Mr. D. G. Thompson, and Colonel Ingersoll about details of funeral."

If survivors do not see the impropriety and mockery of these religious services, they must bear the criticism which their obtuseness evokes. Mr. Palmer's generosity in consenting to the presence of a "liberal theologian" will be instanced by the clergy as proof that he did not find the religion of humanity good enough to die by and though; the clergy who repeat this will know it to be false, that will not deter them in the least. It will only add to their stock of humbug. We wish all concerned had passed through the ordeal with as much credit as did Courtlandt Palmer himself.]

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary.....241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
CHARLES ECKHARD, Treasurer.....28 Lafayette place, New York
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com.....120 Lexington ave., New York
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com.....106 So. Halsted st., Chicago

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	Harry Hoover,	S. W. Devenbaugh,
Courtlandt Palmer,	Charles B. Reynolds,	Wm. Algie,
T. B. Wakeman,	Prof. Ch. Orchardson,	Roman Staley,
James Parton,	L. K. Washburn,	H. P. Mason,
J. D. Shaw,	W. S. Bell,	N. D. Goodell,
W. F. Jamieson,	Mattie A. Freeman,	D. W. Smith,
Charles Watts,	M. M. Secor,	Jas. Wardwell,
John E. Remsburg,	Otto Wettstein,	J. W. Black,
Horace Seaver,	Wm. Redfield,	Thos. J. Truss.
Mattie P. Krekel,

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONGRESS A. S. U.

OFFICIAL CALL.

To the Local Secular Unions, Life, Charter, and Annual Members, and all Liberal citizens who support the Nine Demands of Secularism, Greeting:

You are hereby invited to attend the Twelfth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union, which will convene at Lafayette Hall, Wood street, near 4th, Pittsburgh, Pa., Friday, October 5, 1888, at 10 A.M., for a four days' session—5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th, inclusive.

All Charter and Life Members, all Vice-Presidents, all Chairmen of State Executive Committees, and all duly accredited delegates from Local Secular Unions are entitled to seats and votes in this Annual Congress. Each Local Secular Union is entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates. Annual Members who pay or have paid $1 in the national treasury are entitled to seats, but not to votes, except by unanimous consent of the Congress.

This Congress will especially consider practical questions tending to further agitation for the taxation of church property; the abrogation of state aid to sectarian institutions; abolition of state, national, military, and prison chaplaincies; repeal of all judicial oaths, Sunday and other oppressive and unjust ecclesiastical laws; nullification of attempts to subvert our Constitution by a legal recognition of Theism in the American Magna Charta, and such other measures as will not merely thwart intended theological encroachments, but absolutely expunge from our laws, state and federal, such insidious acts as have already crept in to blot out mental freedom from our republic.

It is to be hoped that the addresses delivered will deal with the practical issues of the organization, so that there will be such an awakening of the people to these vital questions of the hour that a revival of the instinct of liberty and justice for all will necessarily result; that again from the Keystone state—the birth-place of the association—the clarion voice of freedom shall reverberate throughout the land.

Pittsburgh being situated almost in the center of a district containing many of our most distinguished workers, thinkers, and writers, besides the active host within its limits, there is little doubt that this Congress will be a glorious gathering of the forces who stand for mental liberty, as expressed in the desire for a complete Secularization of the government.

S. P. PUTNAM, Pres., E. B. FOOTE, JR., Ch. Ex. Com.,
E. A. STEVENS, Sec., MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com.,
CHAS. ECKHARD, Treas.

FREETHOUGHT: WHAT HAS IT DONE FOR MANKIND?

This is a question frequently asked by our clergy with a sort of triumph, as though there could be no answer, and Infidelity, so-called, had really no trophies to show, no good works to exhibit; no good done for mankind to vindicate its cause, or to show the need of its existence.

Let us pause here to reflect and see what has been done, what man is under the advice of Freethought, and what he was, and would forever have remained, had Freethought never come to the rescue, and opened up the path of liberty, science, and progress. Orthodoxy is an entire devotion to the powers that be; to the emperor, the high priest, the state religion, and all the dogmas, superstitions, habits, manners and customs that are the law, the fashion, the rule for the time being. Orthodoxy is to adhere to what is established in each country, no matter how different. It forbids assimilation, comparison, learning from each other, change, progress, discovery, and invention. It keeps each nation in its own track. It has forbidden commerce, exchange, travel, friendly offices, mutual instruction, and all movement for change.

The official class in all countries incline to be orthodox. The wealthy lean the same way. The learned are trained to it, and find preferment in that way. The clergy are the most orthodox of all. They are all in good positions as things are, and fear all change lest it should bring some calamity to them. The clergy are the most orthodox, in fact, the whips that keep all others in the traces, and guard the lines of superstition lest at any time one of the sheep should see the sunshine outside, and prefer the light to the darkness within.

Were religion a question of authority, or majority, or could be settled by quoting the opinions of great men, or men reputed for their learning, rank, standing, or wealth, each religion in its own land would find a sure indorsement, and every one would be established beyond a doubt. China would give us Confucius; Turkey, Mohammed; Russia, the Greek church; Austria, the Catholic; England, the Protestant, and America an awful mixture. Which is right? It is manifest that these persons are not safe guides. Each one points to his own and says, "Behold the religion of God, and make it eternal!" This was the condition of Europe four hundred years ago. With one voice all these parties pointed to the pope as God on earth; the holy Roman Catholic faith as the only plan of salvation, and faith and obedience as the bounden duty of all mankind. All the engineering of government power was used without scruple to train, bend, and compel all human beings to walk in these lines. It was death to step out—death at the stake by fire and fagot. There was no remorse at the burning of the heretic. The priest deemed he was but serving God when he stirred the fire and increased the anguish of the victim. The whole land was full of church police—pope, cardinals, archbishops, bishops, priests, monks, nuns, and confessors were in every house. The secrets of the family were gleaned from the husband, wife, children, or servants, and wherever a thought of freedom found expression it was crushed out, cut out, burnt out, as though it were some dreadful cancer. The pope and the emperor were sworn allies. The confessional was a telegram to both to warn them if their slaves had thoughts of freedom, and brought down upon their poor devoted heads all the power of church and state for their destruction. Tyranny was entrenched in these bonds of mind and body, almost beyond redemption. Man was a mere slave to this dual power of church and state. Mind and body were brutalized by this espionage, these bonds and stripes and burnings. Woman was the slave of a brutal slave, sworn to obedience, beaten, tortured, and burnt at the stake for believing that she should be free. Denied access to God except through a priest, she could not approach the altar; could not make sacrifice; could have no absolution except from a man—a priest. The children were taken, baptized, trained, whipped, confessed, tortured by priests, and confirmed and sworn to be faithful and obedient servants of the church even to the betrayal of father or mother to the fire, to death and hell.

Such was Europe when Infidelity came upon the scene to open a new chapter in human life. It came by degrees, bit by bit. First, dissent from some dogma; second, protest against the pope; third, the right of private judgment; fourth, rejection of the whole scheme. Each step was contested by the pope with all the power and malevolence that belongs to infernal fiends. He fought for his supremacy, and does to-day, with all the vehemence that characterizes the czar of Russia, or the Brandenburger. Had he the troops, even now, he would restore the triple crown to all its former power, by the slaughter of his enemies.

The Dissenters went but a little way, refused to go further, and bitterly denounced those who did so. The English Protestants refused to obey the pope, but made a pope of that pious ruffian, Henry VIII., and said, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther!" They burnt some Catholics on the one hand, and some heretics on the other; the one for not going with them, and the other for going a little farther. Then came the Nonconformist with the right of private judgment of the scriptures. Wesley was of this class. Then Priestley, the Unitarian, went a step farther. He said, "There is no God but God; no son; no holy ghost, and man may serve God as he pleases, according to his own conscience. There is no authority in religious truth." From this to Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll is but a step. They say: "The religion of slavery is all wrong. Every man may be his own guide. He may follow those he believes to be wiser and better than he is, but he must be the judge, as he is the chief one concerned." This is the ultimate truth in this matter. This is Freethought in its entirety. He who accepts this is an Infidel in the language of the church; he is free to be whatever appears to him to be true. He may even be a Catholic so far as the doctrines are concerned. He cannot be a Catholic in the sense of accepting papal authority.

What has this Freethought done for mankind? It has made free, mentally free, every man it has touched. It has made him the friend of freedom for others, for all, and the enemy of all religious slavery and tyranny. It has dethroned the pope as a king and a god, and laughs at his silly pretensions. It has liberated nearly all Europe from the dominion of priests, and set the people in the path of progress and liberty. It has emancipated the children from priestly training and abject obedience. It has raised woman from an abject slave of the priest and her husband, into an equal human being, with some rights. It has educated her to be a teacher, a preacher, a lecturer, and will place her finally in her true sphere. It gives hope to-day that kingcraft and priestcraft are near their end, and the people about to assume the management of their own affairs.

In our land it has done best of all. Our great fathers were all Freethinkers in the highest and best sense of that word. They dared to raise their hands against the "the Lord's anointed." They suppressed the throne and the church alike, in this glorious land of freedom. When they met in council to frame a Constitution, it was said to them, "Have a king; it is the plan of God." And they replied, "No king for us; the people are the fountain of all power, and they alone shall rule."

The pope and his ministers, and many of the Protestant churches, appeared before them and said, as they say to-day:

"Put God in the Constitution, and the Bible and Christ, and make this a Christian land. Have a church and priests to teach and guide the people. Let them control the schools. Let all law tend to support this religion. And let all who will not believe be disfranchised and anathema!" But our fathers said: "No! All these things are unproven. They may not be so. We will not tie the mind to any religion. All our people shall be free to think, speak, write, vote, and act as they please, for their own happiness, only as the law made by themselves shall direct or forbid. The people are supreme, and the fountain of all power."

Since then we have gone farther and declared that "all laws shall be just and equal to all persons, and all shall have equal protection before the law." Only Freethinkers could have done that. Only in a Freethought age could that have been done. Only because we have Freethought could that be possible!

Imagine the pope signing such a decree. "What! place myself, cardinals, bishops, and ordained clergy on a level with the congregation? Never!" How would the czar, the head of the Greek church, look at such a law?

Freethought gave us our liberty; our Sunday parks, picnics, theatres, lectures, excursions, and our right to remain at home, or go to church, whichever we please. Freethought gave us our equal standing with the priest or the clergyman, in the street, the court, on the witness stand, and every place. Freethought relieves us from the tithes, church dues, the expense of christening, marriage, and the priest at our funerals. Freethought and Freethought laws save us from the effects of a denunciation from the pulpit, from excommunication, and all their consequences. Freethought gave us the common school, wherein no priest can step, and no slave be taught. Freethought gives 200,000 of the people of San Francisco the right to think for themselves, leave the churches alone, and be very good, decent people after all, which they are. These are our moral people, our really good people. The police never catch them. The jails contain none of them. They are sensible people. They think. They follow the laws of nature and of right, and live in peace.

The small Salvation Army has supplied more criminals than all this 200,000 who have no priestly instruction. Go to our jails; these non-church-going Freethinkers are not there. Out of every ten prisoners, six are devout Catholics, three are Protestants of various sects, and the rest Chinese. Jews, Spiritualists, and Freethinkers get in one now and then.

Reader, you stand to-day a free man, mentally and bodily, in fear of neither priest nor king, the equal of all, with an equal voice in public affairs, and an equal chance to be president, because there were plenty of Freethinkers around when the Constitution of the United States was framed, and all these rights were forever established in the great republic. H. L. KNIGHT.

"TERMS."

In an article published in the Open Court—a Chicago journal—Mr. Moncure Conway gives as a reason for the employment of the term Agnostic, the fact that such names as "Atheist, Infidel, and Freethinker" are surrounded by "connotations." Of course they are, and why should they not be? So is any other term or prefigurement. "Nor can one wonder that some new and less odious term should be sought," he goes on. One may not wonder, since as we grow older nothing surprises us much; but one may object. I, for one, do. I have not the slightest objection to being called Atheist, Infidel, or Freethinker; I should be very sorry for myself if I were not a Freethinker. It's a hard thing in this world to retain pure freedom, but one's thoughts are most purely one's own. The term Agnostic is not a bad term in its way unless it be applied in order to screen the real sentiments of the Freethinker, as in the case quoted by Mr. Conway. He says: "I knew an Atheist whose son was troubled at school for openly calling himself the same. 'My child,' said the father, 'you must not call yourself an Atheist, but an Agnostic, then you will not be troubled.'" I strongly object to the ethics of this parent. What would have been said of the early Christian who invented some nondescript term wherewith to describe himself in order to escape the odium attached to that of Christian? Would the faith have lived a year upheld by such adherents? Shall we not, too, have the courage of our opinions? Let us honestly encourage inquiry, and freely acknowledge the results of our own researches.

In Darwin, Huxley, and Tyndall we have three great examples. It is not their province to combat worn-out and childish faiths; they are simply and purely scientists; but it is their province to defend the truth, and right well and boldly have they done so. They have never been frightened by such terms as Atheist or Freethinker, or taken refuge in ambiguity. There is no sign of weakness in any utterance of these men. We cannot all equal them in intellect, but we may in honesty. The spirit which should animate the Freethinker should be the same as that which animates the religionist—not the religionist whose orthodoxy is his doxy, and whose heterodoxy is another man's doxy, but the honest believer who, in spite of failure, still believes in the salvation of the world through his faith. Let us be as eager to teach what we deem the truth as he, regardless of the fact that he will receive the praise of men, together with more solid remuneration, while we only have the odious terms, "Atheist, Infidel, and Freethinker," flung in our faces.

ELISSA M. MOORE.

Free Speech—Keep the Flag Flying.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Better a thousand fold abuse of free speech than denial of free speech; the abuse dies in a day, but the denial slays the life of the people and entombs the hope of the race.—Charles Bradlaugh, of England.

I like that. It is in strict accordance with Freethought. Grant, if you will, that Clark Braden abuses free speech. For several months a number of my brother lecturers have denied to Braden the freedom of debate, notwithstanding Christian societies have indorsed him as their representative. This is practically a denial of free speech, and by Freethinkers too. According to our principles we have no right to deny free speech to the worst character that ever walked this earth, if I know the meaning of mental liberty. Hence, I could not agree with my Freethought brothers who asserted that it was not our duty to debate with a preacher chosen by a Christian denomination as their representative.

In many a battle of ideas, fought with Christian opponents, I have often known free speech abused that Christianity might triumph—short-lived victory! As Bradlaugh well says, "The abuse dies in a day." Again and again have I had nine-tenths of the population against me in some intensely Christian town, and on the side of a gifted Christian opponent; abuse heaped upon my undevout head, and fierce denunciation upon my cause. I could afford to be serene in such a storm, for I knew the truth would win. And so it did. I expect in many conflicts yet to come I will have the mass of the Christian people against me simply because I am against their theology—their "scheme." But as long as I live I will not deny free speech to the meanest Christian that breathes. This is not a mere question of the esthetic. It is deeper. It is a question of mental liberty, of logic, of truth. I notice that right here is where my brothers, editors and lecturers, have made their serious mistake. They have predicated the propriety of debate upon the basis of taste—and smell! That was where old Dr. Lyman Beecher put it as an excuse for denial of free speech to Infidels. To use the trite saying of Brother Bob, our Ingersoll, "It won't do!" Any man that will haul down the flag of free speech, "shoot him on the spot!" controversially.

Is Controversy Dangerous?

[I wish to present five short letters containing the principles which underlie my system of Freethought. In accordance with these, wherever I have addressed audiences an invitation has always been extended for free debate when the people would demand and sustain it as readily as they do "revivals," and other kinds of one-sided preaching.]

NUMBER I.

Is controversy dangerous? The mass of Christians say yes; the Freethinkers, no. The truth searcher is confident that controversy is the antidote for all sorts of superstition.

The Pagan Pontius Pilate asked, "What is truth?" Jesus did not answer Pilate's question. The lexicographers do better. They at least define it: "That which is;" "reality;" "real state of things." Where, then, shall we go to get the truth? The Christian church answers one way, the Freethinker another. As usual, the church answers wrong! It says: "Go to the Bible and nothing but the Bible." The Freethinker appeals to nature, the source of all truth. Nature is the inexhaustible store-house of the scientist. The Christian church has for ages committed the blunder of supposing that their Bible is a complete volume of truth, to which nothing should be added and nothing taken away. Every preacher is a pacing sentinel, in fact, to warn off intruders. Their Jesus said: "The truth shall make ye free." His admirers add: "The truth as it is in Jesus," not as it is in Humboldt, nor Huxley, nor Haeckel, nor Helmholtz, nor rock, tree, air, water, star. The scientist, in the true humility of knowledge, confesses that no man is great enough, grand enough, large enough to hold the whole truth. The whole truth is to be found only in the entire infinite universe.

The Christian church has always manifested a tender regard for the fate of truth, ever fearful that its foundations might be undermined. But since science has shown that matter and energy are indestructible, the conviction is taking root in the human mind that truth is "eternal as the hills;" enduring as granite; the only real "I am." Melt the hills, grind the granite and gods in the mills of ceaseless change; and yet, over all, star-browed truth sits supreme in her regal beauty, queen of the universe, an Almighty She instead of a tyrannical He. Said Thomas Paine: "Such is the irresistible nature of truth that all it wants and all it asks is the liberty of appearing." Even Paul had more confidence in the deathlessness of truth than the modern clergy, when he said, "We can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth." Then why should the preachers since his day condemn controversy? Gail Hamilton is not afraid: "If you are telling the truth, you need only know the thing you are telling, for it is." She wisely adds: "Somebody has said, the more you shake the truth, the more you shake it into place; but, if you shake a falsehood, it all shakes to pieces." This fact raises the suspicion that the courage of the clergy is surely dying out. The Christian confidence of former days, in the entire truthfulness of Christianity, is oozing away. Monte Vista, Colorado. W. F. JAMIESON.

Professor Seymour Replies.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I see Bro. C. A. Reed has been trying to lift my scalp, while I was out on the trail after the enemy, by a letter in FREETHOUGHT, July 28, with regard to prayer, because I took him to task several times for his misleading invocations. I have not the least objection to Brother Reed's prayer, if it does him any good to call on a nothing. As he himself admits, he knows nothing of what God is unless it is universal mind. I only ask that, if he must pray, he take Christ's advice (Matthew vi, 5, 6): "And when thou prayest, thou shalt not be as the hypocrites are, for they love to pray standing in the synagogues, and in the corners of the streets, that they may be seen of men. Verily I say unto you, they have their reward. But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father, which is in secret." When Mr. Reed says, "Our father who art above," or words to that effect, "guide us in all the affairs of life; help us in the hour of difficulty," etc., he is educating the mind of the young to believe he is talking to a personality that has ears so that he can hear, a brain so that he can think, and force and place so that he can act; also that he is a masculine god, and has benevolence so that he will be kind of heart, and be charitable. In other words, he is pandering to the orthodox and leading them to think, "Why, the Spiritualists are pretty good fellows after all. Their God is just like ours! I thought they were nothing but Infidels, but they are pretty near Christians." Then, to the young, it is building up and propping up that old superstition—the personality of God—which all good Liberals, and especially those that are "broad-gauge," should be tearing down. Our world is cursed all over to-day with that fearful belief in an autocrat away up in the heavens who is terrible in his anger and awful in his revenge. "The fear of God" is held up continually before us, and his awful power is illustrated by Ezek. ix, 5, 6: "Go ye after him through the city and smite; let not your eye spare, neither have ye pity, slay utterly old and young, both maids and little children, and women;" or Isa. xiii, 16: "Their children also shall be dashed to pieces before their eyes, their homes shall be spoiled and their wives ravished. Samaria shall become desolate, for she hath rebelled against her God; they shall fall by the sword; their infants shall be dashed in pieces and their women with child shall be ripped up;" Hos. xiii, 16: "Then I will walk contrary unto you also in fury, and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins, and ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters ye shall eat;" Lev. xxvi, 28, 29, etc., and thousands more equally as bad texts illustrating the orthodox God. I object most emphatically to my and my neighbors' children being educated by Colonel Reed or other pretended Liberals to believe such horrid superstition as this. No wonder that there is so fast becoming an army of unbelievers and doubters. The only wonder is that there are any believers left who believe the vile, obscene, barbarous compound of the Bible. Talk about the blasphemy of the Infidel! If there should happen to be a personal God, the Christian is the blasphemer in teaching such a libel on his character. It is a disgrace to the age of education in which we live, that 70,000 priests and reverends are standing up in as many pulpits every Sunday, praying to such a God and teaching "thus saith the Lord;" and for Spiritualists to give out taffy in the same way is simply ridiculous and deserves the severest censure. Let us be men, and not ape priestly knaves and clowns, and all humanity will respect us more and follow our teachings further.

I certainly know but very little about time, space, and matter, but I think I know much more about them than my good spiritual brother does about the God he prays to. Colonel Reed speaks of infinite mind, then of infinite spirit, as if these were an entity of themselves, separated from matter. Does not the colonel know that science teaches that matter in some of its many forms fills all space, and, so far as science can discover, that there is nought else but matter; that what he calls mind, spirit, law, etc., is only the manifestation of matter or a property of matter—that there can be nothing else? It is entirely unthinkable that there can exist something made of nothing, and if not made of nothing then it must be made of something, and a thing can be nothing but matter. Matter exists either in solid, fluid, gaseous, or ethereal condition, and as such can be found everywhere. Science has traced matter into a condition one million times more refined than the air we breathe, and some scientists claim to be able to reduce any and all kinds of matter to hydrogen gas.

Brother Reed says that I claim up here to be a Spiritualist, as if, maybe, I might be like Pat's flea, or like old Paul when he says, "Be ye all things to all men." No, sir; I do not pray to a God, I do not believe in nor set my sails to catch any breeze, but, like Columbus, paddle my canoe out into the sea of the unknown and hunt for a new fact or truth, then demonstrate it if possible. I am not much of a spiritist or "alist," but I am satisfied that we all have a property of matter within us that can out-ride the crash of the pains of death—or, more properly speaking, of a new birth—and live on, and keep our individuality and a memory of the past life; that the part that lives on is matter still, but perhaps so refined that the law of gravitation, heat, cold, etc., would not affect it.

We once lived in gestative life, but in the pains of birth (death to the outward body, the placenta, which up to this time had supported and nourished the more refined and inward body), we were freed from the coarse, now useless, outer matter or body, and entered into a sunnier and more beautiful sphere of action; more enlarged was our scope of action, and far greater our possibilities; and so in the coming birth, wrongly called death, we will be promoted by a law of our nature to a much higher and broader plane of action than this life can give; but none the less material will be our forms. Andrew Jackson Davis says no spirit can exist separate from matter, and I feel certain that all so-called spirit is matter and will live forever, as matter is indestructible. So can the Materialists and Spiritualists and all Freethinkers unite on this half-way ground, and work for the salvation of the race from its ignorance and superstition—the result of long-faced priests praying to something they utterly know nothing about. Let us quit praying and go to work, not for the good time over there with harps and crowns, with us all piled into Abraham's bosom eternally telling God how good he is, or how long his nose is, or what a fine fellow he is to have saved our bacon, while all our "wives' relation," and mayhap our own children, mothers, fathers, loved ones, all are sizzling and frying in hell. Out forever on such damnable teaching, or anything that panders to it! If there should happen to be a personified God who is omniscient and omnipotent, he, she, or it most likely knows its own mind and most assuredly would do what is for the best without humanity rolling up its eyes like calves in mortal agony, or a lot of children pulling at their mother's gown begging for bread when she was giving them three square meals a day. Let us use common sense in religion as in other things.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

Language from Brother T. Winter.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I see by your sample copy that you are located on the shining shore of old mundane, and not the cranky shore of the crazy Spiritualists. Now, sirs, doubtless you have read of this old Infidel veteran of eighty-one years, who is ever fighting the false and deceitful religion known as Christianity. Now, brothers, you know this Christian religion is a chronic curse to the world, and it is useless to kick the old thing with sore toes covered with soft pads. No, sir, the kicking must be done with hard, heavy boots, and vigorously at that. No kind of compromise with so bold a fraud. All its manifold and cranky phases should be repelled in the most forcible manner. No quarter, my noble brothers, with unblushing thieves. Give these pedlars of fraud hot-shot in full force with Infidel pluck and determined action. Fear nothing in defense of truth and genuine freedom. Let the tyrannies of the ages be destroyed, and the bright light of reason shine on the world which hath been black with the most ignorant superstitions ever palmed off on credulous humanity.

Fraternally,

T. WINTER.

Cincinnati, Aug. 7, Eternity of Time.

Wellock and Godbe.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I am not given to mixing in other people's disputes, but I know Wm. S. Godbe so well, am so well informed as to his nobleness of character, I make bold to say that any man acquainted with him who will speak lightly of him is entirely unworthy of confidence.

True, Mr. Godbe was brought up a Mormon and was one, the same as many are church members because brought up in the church—was one till his own good sense brought him out of it; but he has had only one wife for years, and utterly repudiates polygamy. True, when quite young and under the influence of Brigham Young, he was much married for the church's sake; but when he became older and began to think for himself, he gave the Mormon church the first heavy blow it ever received. One that was his wife said to me of him:

"I don't know what William married me for. It wasn't love, it wasn't lust—oh, I know," she added, after a moment's thought, "it was religion."

Volumes might be written of the spiritual experience of those Mormons, and those who think that all or even one-half of those leading men were other than conscientious are very much mistaken. There are many Spiritualists to-day who are making as big mistakes, though in a different way, as those Mormons did, and those who reject a rigid scientific analysis of the facts of Spiritualism and continually exalt the spiritual above the intellectual are as much in the dark, as much the victims of superstition, as are the Mormons.

A spirit claiming to be King Henry the Eighth gives, through the columns of the Better Way, published in Cincinnati, what claims to be an explanation of the law of spirit photography, and we beg leave to say we reasoned out from the known laws of nature a better explanation in 1875, and it was published in the Banner of Light—this just after we received the photograph of our mother, who had been what is called dead 34 years, and of whom there never was a likeness taken while she lived here.

Professor Lockwood, of Ripon, Wis., a Spiritualist and a scientific man, gives a scientific law which explains the possibility of materialization more clearly than any so-called spirit explanation I have ever seen. We have scientific, clear-headed Spiritualists, but as yet they are in the minority. For myself, I had as soon be a slave to a mortal as to a spirit, and I hope some day the law governing the relation between the two states of existence will be so understood that those there who so desire can no longer make dupes of those here.

LOIS WAISBROOKER.

P.S.—I have just been reading Philbrook's claims as published in your late issue. I do not wonder that sensible people are disgusted; still, the remedy does not lie in ignoring but in thoroughly analyzing this power that has held the race enthralled all these ages. We must learn to handle, control to our own advancement—to wit, that of humanity—the laws that enter into spirit communication.

L. W.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made the following lecture appointments from August to October. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Denver.....Col.....	Sept.....2	West Union....."	.....16-17
Seward.....Neb.....	".....5-6	Chicago.....Ill.....	".....23
Wahoo....."	".....7-8	Pittsburgh.....Pa.....	".....30
Lincoln....."	".....9	Secular Union Congress, Oct. 5, 6, 7, 8
Creston.....Iowa.....	".....11	New York....."	.....12
Ottumwa....."	".....12

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 339 Eddy st., S. F.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenzel, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S
GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months.
50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

...IN THE...

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

...FOR...

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine
paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents;
paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS.

By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK" SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of half a million to be the most popular, readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible; instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" needed valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured; approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati; thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men; everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

For the Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS, CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.

33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7 jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13 50, $14 50; 5 ounce, $16 00; 6 ounce, $17 50. With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $18, $17, $18, $19 50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4, being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24 50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies' watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels, $22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $3 to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38. Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra. Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case. Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1; best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas, 50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12. Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free. BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Designer and Patentee of new FREETHOUGHT BADGE IN PINS and CHARMS—emblematical of the light and day of Freethought, Science, and Reason vs. the night and darkness of Superstition.—Exact size of cut and smaller, two-thirds size. Warranted solid gold, enameled in four colors. Most beautiful badge ever designed. Small, $2, $2 75, $3 50. Large, $3 to $5; with genuine diamond, $8, $10; and charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.

OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

"Zum Walfisch."

THE WHALE

CHAS. A. JONAS, Proprietor.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars,

Cold Lager and Sharp Steam Beers.

24 THIRD ST., Near Market,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

JOHN WIELAND'S

Lager Bier
IS THE BEST.

CALL FOR IT.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

HAND-BOOK OF

THE LICK OBSERVATORY

OF THE

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,

—BY—

EDWARD HOLDEN, LL.D.,

Director of the Observatory.

A volume of 135 pages, 12mo., printed on heavy paper, and bound in flexible cloth covers. Besides likenesses of

Professor Holden and James Lick,

By mail 80 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 36.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - SEPTEMBER 8, 1888

THE Tax Reform Advocate announces that Colonel Ingersoll and Henry George will discuss free trade in New York sometime this month. Mr. Blaine declined to meet Mr. George in debate upon the same intricate problem.

A DISCUSSION has been going on in the London Spectator under the heading, "Is Marriage a Failure?" Many people in this country have sought to solve the problem with varying success by getting married and letting nature take its course.

THE Hindoo woman, Ramabai, who has been collecting sums of money wherewith to Christianize her countrywomen, is still in San Francisco. It is intimated that only one woman is getting the benefit of the subscriptions, that one being Ramabai herself.

DR. JOSEPH SIMMS, the physiognomist, has been measuring skulls in the old churches of Italy. "The skulls of the priests," he says, "average nearly an inch smaller in circumference than those of common persons. And still," he remarks, "the priests were educated men, and the others were not."

THE St. Paul Pioneer Press, having reviewed the first year of high license in Minnesota, decides that the system has proved all its friends claimed for it. In the state there are now only 1,597 saloons against 2,806 when the law went into effect. There is a decreased consumption of liquor in nearly every county, all the low grogeries are closed, and the liquor business is under better police supervision. The cost of license formerly averaged $300, and the total income $850,000. Now the license is $650 and the income $1,100,000.

THE career of Charles Bradlaugh in the House of Commons shows how time brings its revenges. When he opposed the Irish Nationalists, they voted against him and his proposed measures. Now that he has espoused the cause of the Nationalists, they support him and his Oaths bill. This illustrates, says the London Freethinker, how weak a power is religion in comparison with political sentiment. The same paper adds that if the Tories were convinced that Freethought would serve their purposes better than religion, they would renounce Christianity at once.

DR. SOLOMON JEWETT, now of this city, who styles himself the "American Shepherd and New School Physician of Vermont," announces that he has the ability to bring dead people back to life and to work other miracles through the power of Jesus Christ and the spirits. He has a revised and corrected version of the "Testament of our Lord Jesus," and unless newspaper reports do him injustice he deserves the foremost position among the cranks who make San Francisco a modern Jerusalem.

SIR WILLIAM R. GROVE, in a lecture at the Royal Institution of Great Britain, calls attention to the little known fact that Shakespeare was acquainted with the law of gravitation, putting his knowledge in the mouth of Cressida thus:

"But the strong base and building of my love
Is as the very centre of the earth,
Drawing all things to it."

This was written nearly a century before the time of Newton, to whom the discovery of the law of gravitation is popularly accredited.

MR. PIXLEY, of the Argonaut, seems to feel deeply upon the question of Roman Catholic rule in this country. He says: "Rather than allow the Italian church and its papal adherents to acquire control of the republic, turn its educational system over to Jesuit priests and Romish monks, its judicial and legislative authority over to Irish and other alien adventurers, we would prefer to see the institution of slavery re-established and Jefferson Davis made president of the republic." And perhaps Mr. Pixley's choice is not an unwise one. Physical slavery confined to one race can be no worse than the mental slavery which the Roman church is endeavoring to impose upon all mankind.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Things are going favorably at Ogden. There is a large Liberal element, without doubt, but somewhat heterogeneous. Ogden is a lively point and has many advantages for future growth. It occupies a prominent position in the railroad world. There is no better agricultural country in the West than in its vicinity. Numerous mines are in the neighboring hills. It has something of a metropolitan aspect with the rush of travel. It is difficult, in a place of this sort, with constant changes in the population, and whirl of business, to gather the Freethought element into united action. But the life is here, the forces of development; and the very diversity will sometime make greater power.

Agnostic Hall was full, and I have not found a more appreciative audience, more ready to respond to the call of the American Republic, for with the widest differences of view there is that which keeps step to the music of the Union. The proprietor of the hall, who generously donated its use for the lecture, is not only an Agnostic, but a gentle-minded ultra Anarchist, not for the inauguration of brute force, but of reason, and education, and voluntary government. I shall be glad when the word Anarchist is fully understood. It is a contradictory word, but represents some of the highest wisdom of the race, as expressed in noblest intellects and ardent hearts. Those who study the subject understand that Anarchy in its philosophic form is a beautiful dream of liberty and justice; when all compulsion shall cease, and there will be only the rule of attraction, all doing right because they wish to do right, and crime shall cease, not by police force, but by the enlightened feeling. This is the sweetest dream of the human heart, and if called Anarchy—no archon, no political authority—it is still the highest, the best. The Anarchy I oppose with all my heart is that which, for the attainment even of a worthy object, resorts to the old orthodox, cruel, and destructive method of brute force. I do not believe in it. It remedies nothing. It simply makes chaos, and not order. Force only for self-defense, but reason, education, persuasion, logic, poetry, eloquence, for all the grand advancements of the race. On this platform I stand, by whatever name it goes. I shall give two more lectures at Ogden on my return trip. I like the people here, and look forward to good work. They had a splendid Paine celebration last anniversary. Leo Hæfeli made a speech on Paine's great political work. Leo Hæfeli has been in the reform movement of both worlds, and is a bright and earnest thinker. John A. Jost, now about 77 years of age, still keeps in the harness. It was a pleasure to meet him again, in his cheery home, where, after a long and dusty ride, I found solid comfort. The deep shadow has passed into his life since our last summer's greeting. Fifty-four years he lived with his wife, and now the golden cord is broken. The flowers grow over the grave beneath memory's happy star. Friend Jost believes in the immortal life, but not the less does he realize the value of what is, and that in the to-day one finds the grandeur of the whole.

Friend K. B. Mercer has stood by the flag of Freethought and reform for many a year. He has ardent sympathy with the toilers of this planet, and very little with the "angels in heaven." He is thoroughly Agnostic, wherein lies the noblest wisdom of life. To confess real ignorance is the grandest illumination of the truth.

Dr. Palmer, who introduced me to the audience, Jas. T. Axley, C. A. Eckland, John Sleth, John Connor, Wm. Farrell, Maroni Stone, W. J. Bird, and others, are among the comrades of this post, where the music of progress will ever mingle with the noise of industry.

Wm. Jones, of Weber Valley; E. F. Munn, and Robert Simpson, of Hooper; Bowman, etc., were present from the vicinity, and these friends always add to the pleasure and the success of our gatherings. So the fire burns on and the torch of reason flames where fertile valleys greet the radiant hills.

Wednesday, Aug. 22.—I am at Morgan City—at the pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Williams, where, amid sunshine and shadow, the traveler finds a cool retreat. Our veteran friend, L. P. Edholm, was present, from Milton, and there was quite a gathering of the Liberals in the vicinity. John Thurston, P. Parkinson, J. Williams, and others, are in the Freethought ranks. I lectured in the court-house. A fair audience was present, but the harvest season kept some away. Farmers are obliged to be busy, for the golden days are flying by and the land shines with noble fruitage which must be gathered in. Mr. and Mrs. Williams were among the first visitants to FREETHOUGHT office in San Francisco, and in my winding journey I am glad again to greet these pioneer friends under their own vine and fig-tree. Quite a number of Liberals are in Morgan City. It is situated in Weber Valley. The lands about it are fertile. The cattle roam upon its hills, and for comfort, and the elegance of leisure, a more favored spot could not be found.

Coalville is my next point, a pretty strong Mormon place, but a few are on the frontiers of human thought, and there was good attendance at the lecture. W. H. Allgood, Wm. H. Smith, Thomas Ball, George Dale, C. A. Carlaneer, Elijah Swainsen, James Evans, and others, make the guard of Liberty at this point. They are genial allies. They keep good company and they won't allow the Secular Pilgrim to be dull or lonely. I shall always delight to visit this somewhat busy burg—the county seat, and whose neighboring coal fields help to keep alive the fires of progress. ✕

Wm. Reynolds and wife and baby, happy Freethinkers, were with us, from Wanship. Always I am glad to shake hands with these friends, who help to move the world in this nook by the hillside, where children make music and the Republic of Liberty breathes in meadow-flower and rugged height.

It was a delightful ride up to Coalville and return. Friend Hirst, of Echo, prevented my taking the cars and insisted on carrying me in his own hired rig, and the change was a joy for which I shall always be grateful. We started in the golden evening splendor, which was falling in mellow masses on the huge hills, the mighty rocks, the vast ravines, and the wild, dashing waters of the stream. Echo Canyon and Weber Canyon come together here. Along these passes was wont to roll the tide of emigration, before the railroad was built. Coalville is up Weber Canyon, and long ere we reached it, the lofty court-house seemed to stand in the centre of the far, winding valley. Nothing could one behold but the court-house, until it was passed by, and then the little city flashed in view all at once in the darkening twilight.

It was twelve o'clock when we started for home. The moon was shining wonderfully bright over the hills, and three black dogs accompanied us, and they went here and there in weird and swift motion, and made me think of Faust's devils. I could almost, in the brilliance of the moon, see them leap into horns and hoofs.

Echo is a little bit of a place, hedged in by enormous ledges. I thought, when I first struck it, that I was outside of the world. But it is a pleasant place to stay, and in the bright atmosphere there is constant change of scenery, from silver morn to golden eve. Friend Hirst has a lovely home on the banks of the Weber. Here the tame deer and elk roam in his sunny fields amid the beautiful clover. Hirst used to know me in North Platte and Omaha when I was in the Unitarian ministry. He was radical then as now and didn't care much for my preaching, but attended church because his best girl wanted to go. Now we are on the same road and the church is far behind. Hirst is an enthusiastic investigator of nature. He has sent a large number of specimens to the Smithsonian Institute. He found a quantity of Indian arrow-heads under a huge sandstone that it must have taken a hundred thousand years to build. Were Indians here as long ago as that? Such seems to be the evidence, and it is marvelous to contemplate.

I lectured at Echo on Friday evening. The school-house was full. Only half a dozen houses are in sight, and you wonder where all the people come from. But up and down the mountains there are little nooks and corners where a house can be stuck, and soil is found and a good stake is made. E. C. Morse, Alex. Fife—chairman of the meeting—Thos. Thackeray, Wm. Fay, T. W. Walker, Jas. Bromley, Wm. R. Turpin, etc., are among our good friends who purpose to stand by Freethought, and in no place have I had a more encouraging labor than in Echo. In fact, this is the biggest place for its size that I have yet seen. There are about as many telegraphic lines as in a large city, and business to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars is transacted at this lively junction. The Park City railroad meets the Union Pacific here, and it looks as if some day there would be a direct line from Echo to Salt Lake. The old settlers throng about Echo, and the air is redolent with Western myth. Jas. Bromley used to have charge of the stage lines and knows all about what happened in those eventful journeys. He took Horace Greeley across the continent from Julesburg to Salt Lake. Mr. Greeley was all curiosity among the marvels of the country. Arriving at Echo in the twilight hour, he observed the huge boulders, with vast orifices in them, as if chiseled out by some deft instrument of the winds. Mr. Greeley asked Bromley if he had ever noted any great changes in the formation of these rocks. "Yes, Horace," replied Bromley confidentially, "when I first came to this country, those rocks were holes in the ground." This piece of information was carefully recorded. When the wind was blowing furiously, almost tipping over the vehicle, Greeley observed his companion looking intently forth from the stage window. "What are you looking at?" inquired Horace. "To see if the tires are still on the wheels." Greeley wrote back that Bromley told him that the wind frequently blew the tires off the wheels. Bromley avers that such was not his remark. Bromley was also the owner of the "kicking pig," whose career was related by Ben Holliday from sea to sea. The pig was a good illustration of evolution. He was a pig only in form. From his birth he associated only with mules, and all his actions were those of his companions. The first time he met his own kin they punched at him, hog fashion. He turned round and deliberately kicked them, mule fashion. "Did he bray?" was Ben Holliday's first question, after hearing of the circumstance.

Echo is thus an echo of many things, old and new. The primitive life of the plains is mingled with the tumult of modern invention. It is a good camping-spot where the precipices, vast canyons, gentle vales, and shimmering stream make a varying picture, and human nature is as spicy and delightful as "original sin" can make it. There is no church here, and I hope there never will be.

Park City blazes and smokes away, amid the silver mines. It is nearly 7,000 feet above the sea, and the air among the shining heights is delicious. I meet my Grand Army comrade, James Williams, and in short notice I am whirled off to his ranch, four miles out from the city, where the mountain stream goes glittering through, and the vast hills rise from green to blue along the wide extending valleys. Here I have a good rest. It seems like Sunday all the time, so quietly the silver hours roll on. Friend Williams is a grandfather, and the baby makes music in the house; a fair little girl, but it is called "Bobbie" for all that, after Ingersoll. They love Ingersoll so well in this house that the first child, boy or girl, must be named after him. I don't think any of the world's great men ever had such a compliment paid to them as this.

Saturday night I lecture to a fair audience in Park City. The elements of Freethought, in this place, are somewhat mixed. There is considerable indifference and coldness, but there are warm friends too. There is more of the good than the bad. Joseph Fares, C. R. Gibson, Harvey Cheales, Hugh McDonald, Murray Shepherd, A. L. Johnson, Ezra Thompson, W. I. Snyder, Thos. Olsen, John McDonald, Winfield Sharp, James Snyder, etc., are for Freethought. Mr. Ezra Thompson is a genial gentleman whom I had the pleasure of meeting on my arrival. Thos. Olsen keeps the Freethought books agoing, and believes in agitation till the world is set right. A. L. Johnson is a veteran soldier. These are enough at Park City to make a blaze for Freethought some day. I look forward, not backward.

In "the world's broad field of battle, in the bivouac of life," Comrade Williams is the soldier of happy fortune. He carries you cheerfully through every difficulty. Sunday, down through Forest Canyon, he takes me thirty miles to Salt Lake City. He had a spanking team, and it went flying. The off horse was raised by Wm. Reynolds, and he had good Secular blood and didn't mind the Sabbath day. It was a splendid journey among the everlasting hills that tower on either side, while the mountain stream leaps along its shining bed. Coming from the canyon, the lake is seen glittering like an ocean, with broad fields, the city, and the temple between it and the hills, while on the farthest horizon the tall blue peaks are luminous with the mingling clouds.

We enter the city of the saints. The first to greet us is bluff Sam Chittock, who always welcomes with English hospitality. Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Mason, Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Chapman and the handsome baby, Mr. and Mrs. Williams, Mr. Rodgers, Wm. Fishinger, John A. Peters, P. Shegran, J. W. Chamberlain, and others, give me greeting, although we can only make a flying visit. In the evening, notwithstanding the warm weather and crowded pleasure resorts, and the absence of many friends for the summer season, a large audience was present at the Opera House, and there is every indication that our Salt Lake Liberal friends are at the front. The Secular Union has arranged for a course of lectures next winter which promise to be highly successful. Mr. Watts and Mr. Underwood are engaged for twelve lectures each, and other speakers are in view. There is, no doubt, a splendid field in Utah for genuine Liberal thought that is honest, brave, and cultivated. Of course the Liberal party cannot resort to the tactics of Sam Jones and the Salvation Army. It does not want the antics of negro minstrelsy. It desires something besides the services of an "end man," and, also, it will indignantly discard the scandal-monger, who seems to have no other occupation than to ruin every reputation that he thinks is inimical to his advancement. It is a disgrace to Liberalism that such men can be sustained upon the platform, whatever may be the talent of their heels or head.

On Monday I go to Murray. Our good Bishop Cahoon is here, forty years in the church, until he grew too broad for the priests, although the common people liked to hear him. He is a wise and genial reformer. It is a pleasure to meet him, with the music of the dawn in the golden evening of life.

I find a welcome at the elegant home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Haynes. Mrs. Haynes is the daughter of Mr. Cahoon. Mr. Haynes came to Murray as school-teacher, but was too radical for the church. In the mercantile business he has won deserved success. He is an undaunted representative of Liberalism. Mr. and Mrs. McMillan, G. A. Burgon, James May, R. Cahoon, Mary E. M. Hall, Mrs. F. C. Warenski, and others, wear the colors of Freethought. The Murray brass band discoursed sweet music for our gathering. Mr. Haynes introduced me to the audience. The house was crowded. Salt Lake City sent a liberal delegation. Labor was pleasant with such genial surroundings. I have a hearty invitation to come to Murray every chance I get, and I shall certainly do so.

There was a sociable occasion at the house of Mr. Harry Haynes, after the lecture, until the moon arose and our Salt Lake City friends returned by its silver beams. As I was due at Heber the following night, forty-four miles off, Comrade Williams and myself decided to travel by "the sweet, silver light of the moon." So about one o'clock we bade farewell to our kind host and hostess, and off we sped to the shining bosom of the hills. In order to keep awake we had a kind of traveling camp-meeting. Williams did the singing and I did the shouting. I think Williams must have belonged to the Methodist church, for he knew all the hymns. I occasionally fell asleep, but the moon shone down in cloudless lustre, the hills were beaming in mystical glory, the road went winding along the shadowy radiance, the dark trees tossed in unison with the tumbling brook, and

"The sky
Spread like an ocean hung on high,
Bespangled with those isles of light
So calmly, spiritually, bright."

Softly, silently, the morning came, mingling strangely and beautifully with the disappearing moonlight. One could not tell where night ended and day began, until along the eastern horizon the rosy clouds sailed up on the sea of light, and then, with its starry armor, the night hastened to its dreamy couch.

Aurora's rays were just glinting upon the windows as we arrived at Williams's ranch, and it was not long before we were sound asleep in the midst of the bustling day. When I awoke it was like a Sunday. Some how or other that long night ride seemed to roll back the wheels of time, and I was traveling towards infancy.

From some misunderstanding I did not receive any message from Heber City, and did not go over. I was constrained to rest by the side of the mountain brook, while the baby sang me to sleep.

Wednesday evening I spoke in the little Mormon church at Snyderville, a hamlet near by Williams's ranch. Mr. Archibald, counselor to the bishop, generously granted its use. He is a staunch Mormon but a man of intelligence and candor, and willing to listen to both sides, and wasn't afraid to let the Infidel speak on "consecrated ground." When this little church was built, a gentle Utah cyclone came along and moved it six inches from its foundation. While the bishop and his assistants were tugging to put it back, friend Williams remarked that "it wasn't best to interfere with God's plan. He probably knew just where he wanted his church planted, and had put it there by the breath of his own spirit." Archibald says, however, it wasn't God who put it there, but Satan, for does not the Bible declare that "Satan is the prince of the power of the air?" According to Mormon theology, as other, the devil must be a pretty big fellow; a "master workman" who has something to do with the location of God's churches.

Mr. and Mrs. James Snyder, Mr. Chapman, and others, are of the Freethought company here, and I expect many recruits as time rolls on. This is too good a country for superstition. The sunshine is too bright and the harvest too golden.

I have had a rare good campaign with Comrade Williams of the new Grand Army of the Secular Republic. I have had a delightful visit at his home under the shining hills, by the singing brook and laden fields. Mrs. Williams is a veteran Liberal and a grandmother, but she is not very old. The years go lightly by. In Freethought is eternal youth, and though our friends have been married twenty-three years, the morning light is on their brows as when the golden wedding bells first rang. Mrs. Frank Snyder, their daughter, is also of the big church, and her husband,

Mr. Frank Snyder, the same—a man of the right stamp, born in the church of the Latter Day Saints, but heir to humanity. He has forty-seven brothers and sisters. The little girl, "Bobbie," has cousins and aunts innumerable. In fact, life is too short to count them up. Wm. Long, friend Williams's partner, brought the best team of the city of the mountains to the little church, and beneath the starlight we bade farewell to the festive group, for, after the lecture, there was a little dance over the way. Our Mormon friends believe in dancing. It is a part of their religious exercises, and so far it is quite common sense. If it was the same all the way through I might join the Saints.

Early this morning I leave Park City. I am finishing these notes in the office of Fred Hirst, the telegraph instruments rapping all about me. These are the spirit manifestations that amount to something. They bear the messages of life and joy for this busy world.

I am waiting for the train. Denver is my next point, Queen City of the Plains!

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Echo, Aug. 30, 1888.

THE STIGMATA HUMBUG.

A contribution to the Popular Science Monthly for September by the Rev. Richard Wheatley is entitled, "Stigmatization," and deals with a form of fraud affected by would-be saints in the Catholic church. The stigmata are wounds resembling those received by Jesus Christ when he was nailed to the cross. They consist of one in the palm of each hand, one in the dorsum or top of each foot, where the nails entered, and one on the side, showing the effect of the spear-thrust whence came the historical blood and water. The possession of these wounds is thought by the subject and declared by the church to be "the special and wonderful favor vouchsafed to him in Christ."

Mr. Wheatley names the most prominent cases of stigmatization known to history. First is that of St. Francis of Assisi. Of this character the writer says that as a youth he was vain, gay, and prodigal; of ethical education so neglected that he did not scruple to steal. Regarded alike by his neighbors and by Innocent III. as a madman, and undoubtedly half crazy and fanatical, he pretended to the gifts of prophecy and miracles. Beggar, and nurse of lepers, pious and beneficent, he was still so deficient in moral sense as to set filial duty and authority at defiance, and to lure three imaginative sisters of rank and fortune into a life similar to his own. Ascetic, unnatural, and a devotee, he approached so near to utter insanity that the Mohammedan sultan of Egypt, whom he essayed to convert to Christianity, was fully warranted in dismissing him as a lunatic. This man had wounds or sores on his hands, feet, and side. As he had led a gay life in youth, and afterward mixed with lepers, it is not difficult to see how, by local irritation, the so-called stigmata could be produced upon Francis of Assisi.

The majority of the other subjects of these disgusting wounds were women. One was Christine de Stumbele, born in 1242, a hysterical, epileptic, and erotic woman, now honored as a saint by Catholics.

Palma d'Oria, an Italian woman, was a diabolically tormented, angelically visited individual, and an expert prestidigitateuse. As to her Mr. Wheatley concludes, with Dr. Hammond, that she was "syphilitic, strongly hysterical, the subject of purpura hæmorrhagica, and a most unmitigated humbug and liar."

Louise Lateau, a Belgian woman, born in 1850, is another. She is "chlorotic, unhealthy, and hysterical." She pretended to live without eating, and that all the natural functions of her body were suppressed, but investigation showed that a cupboard in her room contained bread and fruit and that her chamber communicated directly with the back yard.

In nearly all the cases subjected to scrutiny the stigmatized person was found to be either unhealthy or a fraud. The writer intimates that where the exudations of blood did actually take place the subject was afflicted with purpura hæmorrhagica, "which disease is characterized by a tendency of the blood to transude through the coats of the vessels." Furthermore, Dr. D. H. Tuke, in his "Influence of Mind upon the Body," adduces numerous instances of the fact that "intense sympathetic attention to the physical pains of another produces similar phenomena and experiences in the sympathizer." A fanatic, brooding over the "passion of Christ" and his crucifixion, might "sweat, as it were, great drops of blood," and the bleeding of hands, feet, or side might in some cases be so superinduced. Such skin diseases as urticaria, or hives, in children, are known to be the effect of emotional disturbances. "Thus," says Dr. Wheatley, "Francis of Assisi, Louise Lateau, and others, thoroughly excited by passionate devotion and desire to exhibit the stigmata, have unconsciously so directed the currents of nervous energy that the very phenomena desiderated have become visible."

America has not been without this class of dupes and frauds. Quebec, Canada, has one in the person of Vitaline Gagnon, who so loves the souls in purgatory that they frequently appear before her to be prayed for; and not long ago a Catholic sister in San Francisco, desiring to achieve a reputation for sanctity, developed stigmata of the most approved type. The ruse was successful until she was discovered in the act of abrading the skin upon her hands and feet by means of her finger-nails. No doubt this method explains many equally marvelous manifestations of this "special and wonderful favor" vouchsafed in the same manner. Above all, the stigmata illustrate the vile nature of the many impostures palmed off upon ignorance by the Catholic church.

SOMETHING INTERESTING.

A novel feature in the line of religious discussion has been proposed for adoption by the Freethinkers of this city. It is nothing less than to hire a hall and turn it into a court-room for the trial of the cause at issue between religion and Freethought. A preliminary committee will elect a chairman, who shall act as judge. It is hoped that some clergyman of the city may be induced to draw up an indictment containing the religionists' charges against unbelief. The clergy may also engage counsel for the prosecution. The Freethinkers will retain counsel for the defense, the case to be tried before an audience, who shall render a verdict according to the facts and the weight of evidence.

In default of an indictment from the religious party, it is proposed that the Freethinkers draw one against Christianity, charging that the said religion is a delusion and a fraud, unsupported by fact and destitute of historical basis, and that its clergy are to an extent impostors, in that they are obtaining money and divers other emoluments under false pretenses. Due notice will be served upon the defendants.

The Freethinkers propose to fulfil the office of the state in this matter, to provide a court and officers, and to try the issues impartially. If the defendants fail to appear in their own behalf or by representatives, they will be accorded counsel by the "state."

Probably it will be advisable to postpone the trial until after the presidential election, but preliminary arrangements can be inaugurated at any time, so that briefs and arguments may be carefully prepared.

PROTESTANT AGAINST CATHOLIC.

An anti-Catholic movement is reported to have sprung up in Minneapolis, Minn., in the form of a political organization, with eight thousand members. It is a distinctively Protestant movement, the first question asked a candidate for admission being, "Are you a Protestant from principle and choice?" The remaining questions are:

"Second—Are you in favor of preserving constitutional liberty and maintaining the government of the United States? Third—Do you regard Romanism as the enemy of civil and religious liberty? Fourth—Is it not, in your opinion, unwise and unsafe to appoint to civil, political, or military office in this country, men who owe allegiance to the pope of Rome and who have sworn to obey him? Fifth—Are you in favor of maintaining the principle of one general unsectarian free-school organization? Sixth—Are you opposed to all attempts to use the public funds for any sectarian purpose whatever? Seventh—Are you willing to be governed by these principles in your future political actions? Eighth—Are you willing to unite with others who hold these principles and henceforth devote yourself to the perpetuation of civil and religious liberty and the great American Union."

These questions, from the second to to the eighth, inclusive, are such as any Secularist might answer in the affirmative, but Query No. 1 bars a Freethinker from membership. The Protestant movement to put God in the Constitution and to make Christ the head of the nation is as dangerous as anything contemplated by the Romanists, and that movement is one toward which the whole Protestant church is tending. For that reason we are glad to see the two branches of the Christian church standing thus opposed. It is only their jealousy of each other that gives us such religious liberty as we enjoy. If they were united we should have none at all.

We make room this week for a letter by President McClure of the Silverton Secular Union. The letter should have been printed in a local paper called the West Side, but it appears that the editor lacks either the courage or the fairness to give Freethinkers a hearing. We believe that people generally desire to know both sides of controversies which engage their interest, and some of the West Side's readers will be afforded an opportunity to learn how that paper has defrauded them. Luckily, though shut out from the home press, the Freethinkers of Silverton have a paper no farther away than San Francisco through which they can be heard.

J. D. SHAW, editor of the Independent Pulpit, while lecturing at Greenville, Texas, had a lively tilt with a local clergyman who was in the audience. The reverend gentleman (so called) came to his feet in the middle of Mr. Shaw's discourse and demanded:

"Sir, I want you to tell the audience if you know of a single nation in all the world that has not been made better and stronger by becoming Christianized."

In reply Mr. Shaw called the attention of the audience to the Italians, the successors of the ancient Romans. He referred to their ancient glory as a people, their philosophers, their statesmen, their warriors, their poets, and the power they once exerted. That was when they were pagans. He then referred to their present degradation, the ignorance and poverty of their common people, as showing how they have deteriorated under the influences of Christianity. To illustrate what Christianity has done for them in fifteen hundred years, he compared the Romans of Cæsar's time with the organ-grinders and peanut venders that now come to us from the rich soil and sunny clime of once glorious Italy. A people who, under Jupiter, conquered the world are, under Jehovah, degraded to a petty state and a half-civilized population. The clergyman was not satisfied, and made himself so offensive that the city marshal warned him that if he did not keep still he would be ejected, when quiet was restored and the lecturer proceeded.

THE Carrier Dove, Mrs. J. Schlesinger editor, reprints "Our Campaign Outlined," from No. 33 of FREETHOUGHT, and comments:

"The Dove would willingly join with FREETHOUGHT in the campaign above outlined but for one reason—it is that of sex. Intelligence, devotion to principle, love of country, ability, energy, and self-sacrifice count as naught when arrayed against the superior qualification of sex. No matter how ignorant, depraved, vicious, and utterly demoralized a man may be, he is eligible to the position of law-maker for the most refined, pure, and intelligent class of women. Bah! it's nauseating to think of. And yet, we never longed to be a man. The priceless crown of motherhood outweighs all else. Liberalists cannot afford to be illiberal much longer. The time is soon coming when equality will no longer be a farce, but a reality."

We fail to see that the Carrier Dove makes good its objection to working for the Nine Demands of Liberalism. It is true that those Demands do not call for woman suffrage, but that is because woman suffrage is not essentially a secular as opposed to an ecclesiastical question. Woman suffrage has its advocates, and we are among them, but that does not prevent our simultaneous advocacy of the Nine Demands. The two questions of woman suffrage and religious liberty do not necessarily go together. If the women were to vote, the Nine Demands would be just as important as now, and no nearer realization. Hence we work for the Nine Demands first. The God-in-the-Constitution party, the Prohibitionists, and the Women's Christian Temperance Union are looking to it that female suffrage is not neglected, and it might be an evil day for this country if women were to secure the ballot before our liberties had been guarded from the encroachments of the church by the realization of the Nine Demands of Liberalism.

THERE is a rumor that the pope may change his residence from Rome to Madrid, Spain. An American priest who has recently visited his alleged holiness reports thus: "The only property now owned by the church is the Vatican, where the pope lives. His former summer palace is now being used as a residence for King Humbert. The Italian government and people are continually subjecting the pope and priests to every insult they can. In the streets the priests are spit on and insulted by the people. I escaped this, but know it to be a common occurrence. I have positive information that the pope will not remain in Rome longer than two years more, and from the way matters now stand I expect he will have to leave there within the next six months. He will go to Spain, where he has been invited to go, and is sure of a cordial reception. The headquarters of the Catholic church will be located in Madrid. Even now preparations are being made for the departure that is liable to take place at any moment." It is known that there is serious trouble between the Vatican and the Italian government over the coming visit of the young German emperor to Rome. The young emperor is a Protestant and objects to rendering homage to the pope, and King Humbert of Italy sustains him in the objection, and this will lead Leo to look about for a more subservient government. He will undoubtedly find it in Spain.

THE Salt Lake Tribune thinks that Freethought lecturers are doing good work in the city of the saints. The Tribune says: "Samuel P. Putnam gave one of his Freethought lectures in the Opera House on Sunday evening, to a good audience. It was as usual with Mr. Putnam's talks, racy and bright, and drew out plentiful applause. It is understood that there is to be an unusual number of Freethought addresses in this city this fall and winter, and they certainly do much to tear young Mormons away from the abominable ruts of the Joe Smith delusion."

SECRETARY MASLIN of the state board of examiners is at San Rafael engaged in another investigation of St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum. Governor Waterman says he believes that large profits have been made out of the state's aid to the asylum and the proceeds invested in land to the advantage of others than the wards of the state.

THE courts of Washington Territory having decided that woman suffrage is unconstitutional, the suffragists are endeavoring to raise a sufficient sum of money to retain Ingersoll as their attorney and reargue the case. So says report.

HOW THE EDITOR IS ENTERTAINED.

Some of the callers at this office tell me stories more interesting than any to be found in books. A man who has been in the state upwards of thirty years dropped into a reminiscent vein, the other day, and recited the incidents of a lynching that he witnessed sometime in the fifties. Said he:

I was at the time mining in Onion valley, in what is now Sierra county. At a camp some five miles above ours a man named Dunbar kept a supply store and eating and drinking house. He had a cook working for him. One morning in the winter somebody calling at the store was surprised to see a notice posted on the door to the effect that Dunbar had gone to San Francisco and would not be back for a week. The store was closed, and they noticed likewise that the cook had disappeared. Foul play was suspected at once, and upon going into the store through a window the neighbors found that the place had been robbed. Suspicion fastened on the cook, and when it was learned that he had been seen in San Francisco the sheriff there was notified to hunt him up. In the course of a few days Mr. Cook was brought into camp, but he denied all knowledge of Dunbar and the robbery. One night the miner who owned the cabin where the cook was confined heard a coyote barking off a little way from camp. He thought it was singular, and in the morning he went to see if he could discover what the coyote had found. Under a big tree he came across a place where the snow had been scratched away by the animal, and the corner of a blanket was seen sticking above the ground. The miner goes back to camp and tells the boys what he has found. They come out with picks and shovels, and in a few minutes the dead body of Dunbar is unearthed. He had been killed with an axe, the body wrapped in an old carriage top and buried among the roots of the tree.

When the cook was confronted with the corpse he weakened and confessed, his confession involving two other hard characters who had just left the camp and were working some ten miles below. In less than an hour a half dozen men were mounted and on their way to the other camp. When they returned, passing by where I was at work, they had the two culprits with them. As there was no jail convenient, the trial would take place that afternoon. We dropped our tools and went with them. The news had brought a hundred and fifty men together. The cook and his two confederates were brought into the presence of the crowd and placed under guard. The preliminaries of the trial were arranged by appointing a man to act as chairman of the meeting and judge of the court. Then a jury of twelve were selected, the prisoners being given a chance to pass on the jurors and to say whether they objected to any one of them. They declared themselves satisfied. Counsel for the prosecution and defense were chosen, and the court was declared in session. All who knew anything about the case were invited to testify, which they did. The speeches made by the witnesses and counsel were unique and would have made a civilized community smile, but the crowd was serious and there was no levity. In due time the case went to the jury, who returned a verdict of guilty. Ten of the jurors were in favor of hanging the murderers at once; the remaining two thought they should be taken somewhere and tried by a legal court. There was a good deal of discussion. Once it looked as though the prisoners would be granted a reprieve. Then every man in the crowd who had a weapon put himself in readiness to use it. The culprits kept close to the guards. They knew that if the venue was changed their end had come. They knew that if they got ten feet from their guards the crowd would shoot them. Finally near sundown, when the audience was getting cold and losing its patience, and when all the oratory had been exhausted, the two obstinate jurymen gave in. Plenty of hands were ready to put the finishing touches on the day's work. With ropes under their ears the condemned men were led to the nearest tree and hauled up toward a limb until their feet just touched the ground. They were given an opportunity to confess their bloody deed, which they did, and in another minute they were hanging by their necks. No word was spoken except by a young minister who protested that the execution was illegal, and ordered the men cut down. There was a movement in the direction of carrying out his order, when a tall Missourian drew a bowie-knife from his boot, and threatening the crowd with it said, "The one who cuts them men down cuts me down first." None cared to undertake this preliminary job, so the murderers hung there, their bodies turning slowly round and round. The court adjourned; and the audience went back to camp while the sun was going over the hills. The whisky belonging to the dead man Dunbar was tapped, and the revelers going home that night heard the coyotes barking and wrangling with one another under the tree where the murderers hung.

This was the first account of a lynching I had ever heard from an eye-witness, and it gave me a creeping sensation. There was another old Californian present, and I asked him if he had seen anything of the kind. He said that he had not. He remembered, however, that years ago horse-stealing was quite common in his neighborhood, and one morning when he woke up there was a man hanging to a tree in front of his house, after which horse-stealing was less frequent, but no one (said the old man with a wink) ever knew how that thief happened to get tangled up in the tree. He added that in the early days crime seldom went unpunished, but that since the law has taken things into its hands there has been one hundred murders and only one hanging in the county where he resides. M.

ALWAYS interesting, the Popular Science Monthly for September is more than usually so. It contains fourteen articles of merit, besides editorials of especial worth, notably "The Opposition to Darwinism" and "Petitions for Rain;" Book Reviews, Popular Miscellany, and Notes. It is the function of this magazine to present the latest discoveries of science in a form to be read and understood by all. Per number, 50 cents; per annum, $5; published by D. Appleton & Co. Bond street, New York.

BILLY EMERSON and his proficient assistant minstrels still tarry at the Bijou Theatre, and nightly entertain large numbers of persons for an admission fee most humiliatingly insignificant compared with the benefit the visitor receives. The minstrels have a large repertory, which admits of the programme being frequently changed.

Compelled to Move.

Cincinnati Saloonist—Vell, I dinks I have to move my saloon next week, on account oof dot church across der way.

Customer—Does the congregation object to the saloon, Dutchy?

Cincinnati Saloonist—No; mine goostomers don'd like dot organ noise mit Sunday morning.—Life.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Denis Kearney is working for Cleveland.—A police officer in full uniform and likewise full of whisky came careering down Kearny street last Sunday, holding up pedestrians and horsecars at will and running things generally with a high hand. A brother officer got him into a hack, and when sobered up he was released on $5 bail.—Henry Vrooman was very badly left in the Oakland primaries last Saturday. He was nominee for state senator, but got only ten delegates out of ninety-three.—During the month of August the police of San Francisco made 1,846 arrests. Nearly half were for drunkenness.—The Beer Brewer's Union has decided to boycott the United States Brewery.—Last week's death list numbered 114 as against 94 for the corresponding week in 1887. Small-pox is reported on the increase.—The Mechanics' Fair is drawing large crowds of visitors.—Bishop, the mind-reader, has gone to Mexico.—George W. Cox, who murdered his son-in-law, Henry G. Cook, last November, was hanged at Los Angeles August 31.—J. E. Ross of Santa Rosa has begun a suit in equity against the Rev. J. Conway, pastor of the Roman Catholic church of Santa Rosa, to recover $30,000 left by Ross's mother to the Catholic church. It is stated in the complaint that the defendant, Father Conway, fraudulently represented the plaintiff to be a very vicious and immoral boy, and that he, being the mother's spiritual adviser, persuaded her it was her moral duty to disinherit him. It is claimed that the deceased, having been an invalid for nearly two years, was in such a mental state that the solicitations of the priest, under the guise of religious exhortation, easily affected her.—A combination of dealers has sent the price of coal up from $17 to $20.—W. R. Colby, the slate-writer, has sued the Chronicle for $150,000 for libel. The Chronicle published an article charging that Colby robbed the United States mail fourteen years ago in Texas, and would probably spend the rest of his life in the penitentiary; also that he has figured as a gambler, train-robber, and dead beat.—Judge Terry and Sara Althea Terry created a sensation in Justice Field's court last Monday morning. Mrs. Terry accused Justice Field of taking bribe money and was ejected. Judge Terry drew a bowie-knife and joined in the fracas. He was overpowered and sentenced to six months' imprisonment for contempt of court. His wife got thirty days for the same offense.

Mr. Thurman is making speeches in the East.—Geo. W. Johnson, who is a printer and a member of the Nonpareil Rowing Club, began last Sunday a long pull in a twenty-foot shell from New York to Boston. The distance over the course he will be obliged to follow is 300 miles.—Benjamin F. Butler is speaking for the Republican ticket.—Robert Garrett, the railroad man, is insane.—The intelligent chimpanzee called Mr. Crowley, of the New York Central Park menagerie, died of pneumonia last week.—Charles J. Debaun, cashier of the Park National bank, of New York, who embezzled $110,000 and fled to Canada, was captured on the 30th ult.—Harriet Beecher Stowe, living at Sag Harbor, Long Island, is losing her mind. She is nearly 76 years old. Her belief is that "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was as divinely inscribed a work as the Bible—that she was merely a medium through which God expressed his condemnation of human slavery.—President Cleveland has contributed $10,000 to the Democratic campaign fund.—The proprietors of the Indianapolis Journal offer a reward of $1,000 for proof that General Harrison ever said that "One dollar per day was enough for any workingman," and $1,000 for proof that he ever said, "Were I the governor I would force these men back to work at the point of the bayonet"—referring to the railway strike of 1877. The Knights of Labor offer to furnish the required proof. It is not generally believed that General Harrison ever used the language attributed to him.—A strong Chinese restriction bill has just passed the house, and is in the senate.—The Rev. Mr. McDonald, of Blakeley, Ga., shot and killed a man named Chandler last Monday. Chandler appears to have been the aggressor. McDonald fled.—Nina Van Zandt Spies has put off her mourning and her anarchism and gone back to her relatives.

The Catholic bishops of Germany, assembled at Fulda, have signed an address to the pope in which they severely attack the clauses in the new Italian penal code regarding abuses by the clergy.—While Bishop Du Rousseau was addressing 5,000 pilgrims in a church at Jumet, Brussels, last Sunday a platform collapsed. Three persons were killed and a dozen were injured, including several priests.—A dispatch from Auckland says an earthquake has done serious damage in New Zealand.—It is said that China has rejected the latest treaty offered by the United States restricting Chinese immigration.—The English press is greatly agitated over President Cleveland's late message proposing to restrict the shipment through the United States territory of English goods in bond.—Recent floods in Japan have destroyed one hundred and fifty lives.

ABOUT THE PITTSBURGH CONGRESS.

SURE TO BE PRESENT.

First among those who will be present is he whose voice and pen have thrilled the Liberals of the country from New England to the Pacific's golden shore; who inspires his hearers and readers to actively espouse the Secular cause; whose ceaseless energies, bestowed on our Union, entitle him to rank as the "peerless"—our poet-president, Samuel P. Putnam, editor of FREETHOUGHT.

If years of unpaid, unselfish devotion of talents of the highest order to the upbuilding of the Secular cause entitle any one to our thanks, that person is the bright moral heroine who has won enduring fame in literature as well as on the rostrum, and of whom we of Chicago are justly proud, Mrs. M. A. Freeman, chairman of the finance committee. She has prepared a lecture especially for this Congress, entitled, the "Cross and Crown."

To Charles Watts, editor of Secular Thought, all, I think, will concede the palm as our most powerful and effective lecturer and debater. For twenty-five years he has stood foremost as the champion of Freethought in his own country, and is certainly unrivaled in this. His address will be "Religion and Science; their Relation to Civilization."

One of the best workers for the Liberal cause, and who performed marvelous service in Michigan in the early history of our movement, is Brother J. H. Burnham. As a student and thinker he has few equals, and his lectures and essays are among the most logical specimens of Liberal literature. Brother Burnham will instruct us on the question of "Organization."

I have heard L. K. Washburn, of Boston, lecture but once, but have longed for a repetition of that experience, for it certainly was one of the most faultless, ornate, and forcible pieces of rhetoric I have listened to from a Liberal rostrum. He possesses a charming voice and has a masterly delivery. Mr. Washburn will lecture on "The Christian Menace to our Republic," and represent the Boston Investigator.

Voltairine de Cleyre, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, at our invitation made her first appearance at the last Chicago Congress as a Liberal lecturer, and since that time has been actively employed. Having been educated at a convent school, from which she graduated with honors, she possesses many accomplishments, and as a poetic writer has earned distinction. Her subject will be "The Drama of the Nineteenth Century."

One of the pioneer Liberal lecturers, Prof. W. S. Bell, who is preparing a text-book for Freethinkers, and is author of "The Conflict between Christianity and Civilization," "Liberty and Morality," "Sunday Question," and "Anti-Prohibition," will be present, and, doubtless, deliver an address.

Prof. D. G. Crow, for years principal of schools in Illinois and New Mexico, a scientist of note, is about to enter the Secular lecture field, and is coming all the way from Fort Supply, Indian Territory, at his own expense, to hear the old pioneers, to meet those with whom he expects to labor, and determine what course he will pursue. He says that neither great distance nor pressing business will keep him away from the Congress.

The last on this list of "sure" speakers, but by no means the least on the rostrum, is our gallant co-worker from Texas, J. D. Shaw, editor of the Independent Pulpit, whose clarion tones are bringing into activity the hitherto scattered elements of Freethought in the South, and whose splendid services in that forbidding field are worthy of all praise.

EXPECTED TO BE PRESENT.

The heroine of abolitionism; that intrepid figure so prominent in the greatest epoch of American history, whose very name stands like a statue of Liberty, and to whom love and reverence are due from all Freethinkers for her fight for freedom, Lucy N. Colman, will, if present, favor us with at least a brief address. This will be a splendid opportunity to salute this brave champion of Freethought.

Whatever of success the Secular Union has attained is due more largely to the unswerving encouragement and support it has received from one individual than to any other circumstance—one who has placed a department at the disposal of the secretary, no matter how crowded were his columns, and thus—in spite of opposition—has been the main-stay of the organization, Eugene M. Macdonald, editor of the Truth Seeker. He will take a few notes among us, so that we shall try to behave ourselves.

When the biographies of Freethought philosophers are written, high among them will be that of the American representative of Positivism, Thaddeus Burr Wakeman, who for years was our president, and to whom Courtlandt Palmer left a legacy to assist in the publication of his works. He has notified me that if possible he will be at Pittsburgh.

Helen H. Gardener, who has won renown as the author of "Men, Women, and Gods," who is so widely and favorably known in the Freethought lecture field, and whose presentation of the ablest paper ("Sex in Brain") at the recent Woman's International Congress created such a furor, will be deterred from attendance only through physical disability.

The intellectual head of the progressive women of America, if not of the world, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, was to have lectured at the Congress, but she cannot endure so long a journey, as she will be out West at the time. She will, however, send a letter in which she will present her ideas relative to Freethought from a woman suffrage point of view. Mrs. Stanton and Miss Helen Gardener are preparing a Woman's Bible.

Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel, of Kansas City, one of our vice-presidents, who was a distinguished professional speaker before her marriage to the late lamented judge, is expected at the Congress.

Next to Ingersoll, the name of John E. Remsburg is better known to the Freethinkers of this country than any other Liberal lecturer, and his pamphlets are more widely circulated. Everyone has a good word for Remsburg. If possible he will speak on "Sabbath Breaking."

In deference to the many Spiritualists who give their aid and support to the Secular cause, Mrs. Amelia Colby, one of their wonderfully powerful speakers, has been invited. She is a great favorite of the Pittsburgh people.

H. L. Green, the veteran worker, is doing a valiant service in the publication of his most excellent magazine as when he was famously energetic as chairman of the executive board of the National Liberal League. He will return to embrace his first love at the Pittsburgh Congress.

Then there will be the Drs. Foote (senior and junior), whom, since our lamented friend, Courtlandt Palmer, has passed away, we look upon as our pillars. Requiring rest, they refuse to lecture, but their generous support of the cause entitles their counsel to profound consideration.

Our generous friend, and an enthusiastic Freethinker, Leonard Geiger, will certainly be present, and we hope his worthy coadjutor of Hudson, J. A. Smith, another life member, will likewise attend.

Dr. W. L. Willis, of Kokomo, Indiana, an earnest friend and life member, will be with us, as well as a large delegation from Alliance, and it is hoped from Cleveland also.

Philadelphia should be largely represented, as well as New York, seeing that the Congress is held in that vicinity.

Charles Eckhard, treasurer of the American Secular Union, will be on hand to render an account of his stewardship.

H. B. Marlett, the first president of the Chicago Young People's Society, will accompany the Chicago delegates.

Brother Godbe, president of the Salt Lake Union, is also expected at the Pittsburgh Congress, as are hosts of prominent Liberals.

E. A. STEVENS, Sec'y A. S. U.

A PIOUS FRAUD.

The following touching the theft of Girard College is from an Oregon paper:

The Rev. Dr. Westbrook is a clergyman who will not wink at fraud, even it is a pious fraud, and so he has addressed a protest "to the mayor, aldermen, and citizens of Philadelphia, their successors and assigns in trust," against the present system of religious teaching in Girard College as a palpable violation of the founder's will, and not well adapted to promote "those purest principles of morality" which were inflexibly adhered to by Stephen Girard in life, and for the non-sectarian support of which he directed his wealth to be used after his death. An unsuccessful effort was made after Girard's death to break his will because of its exclusion of clergymen from the college premises and instruction, and because of its preference for purely moral teaching. The will was sustained, but its intent has been grossly violated. There is a chapel on its grounds, and the manual used in this chapel is an affirmation of evangelical theology, full of texts and stanzas that enunciate the doctrines of the trinity, vicarious atonement, etc. While no ordained clergyman is permitted to teach in the college or preach in the chapel, nevertheless a preacher is furnished by the Young Men's Christian Association, and, as Dr. Westbrook sarcastically observes, "in order to make sure that Girard's wish that the tender minds of the orphans shall be free from the excitement which clashing doctrines and sectarian controversy are apt to produce, great care is taken that all of the preachers are of one kind, and that soundly evangelical."

Doctor Westbrook showed conclusively that these preachers are legally as well as morally included among the "missionaries, ecclesiastics, and ministers" excluded by the terms of Girard's will. He also makes it perfectly clear that Girard's money, by a pious fraud, is being used in a way that he never intended, and against which he would have protected himself had he anticipated that the mere verbalities of his will would have been thinly respected, while the spirit of his injunction is violently disregarded. Girard was a Deist, as were Franklin, Paine, and Jefferson in an early day, as were Parker, Thomas Starr King, Doctor Bartol, Professor Swing, Rev. Dr. Thomas, Rev. Dr. Collyer, Rev. Dr. Stebbins, Rev. James Freeman Clarke, O. B. Frothingham, Rev. Dr. Heber Newton, and thousands of Unitarians, Universalists, and other liberal Christians of our day. Girard wished to exclude from his college the teachings of Protestant and Roman Catholic orthodoxy, and in order to accomplish this by his will he directed the exclusion of "ecclesiastics, missionaries, and ministers of every sect" from the college he bequeathed his virtuously won millions to found. The Rev. Dr. Westbrook completely convicts the directors of the college of having established sectarian teaching in the college in conscious violation of the intent of Girard's will, and makes a strong argument to prove that "sectarian dogmas are not essential to morality." The pietistic administrators of Girard's great charity are convicted of having violated the clear intent and spirit of their sacred trust, while pretending to comply with its mere formal letter. Morality does not necessarily imply religion, but religion that has sanctity enough in it to keep it sweet must include morality, and it is just as immoral to be false to a sacred trust that has been legally affirmed when it is accepted from the hands of a Deist as when it has been accepted from the hands of an orthodox Christian.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made the following lecture appointments from August to October. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Creston.....Iowa.....Sept.....11	Pittsburgh, Pa.....Sept.....30
Ottumwa.....".....".....12	Secular Union Congress, Oct. 5, 6, 7, 8
West Union.....".....".....16-17	New York.....".....12
Chicago.....Ill.....".....23

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 339 Eddy st., S. F.

The Side that was Suppressed.

The appended letter having been denied publication by two Oregon papers, we are glad to print it in FREETHOUGHT:

Editor Statesman: The following in reply to an article which appeared in the columns of the West Side was refused publication by the editor of that paper. Will you give it space in yours? J. W. McCCLURE.

Editor of The West Side: In your issue of July 27, 1888, appears a communication from R. C. Ramsby, C. F. Mascher, and Matthew Small, in which these gentlemen, writing as a committee, valiantly espouse the cause of Elder Clark Braden; and in which, in their anxiety to render a good account of themselves, your correspondents are betrayed into statements at variance with facts. Indeed, the article so abounds in misstatements as to give rise to a suspicion that it is not genuine. It is so rank with incense to the being at whose shrine its authors worship as to tempt one to the conclusion that Elder Braden himself dictated it. It is to be regretted that statements so palpably incorrect should appear over the signature of persons whose opportunities admit of better information; and with your permission, Mr. Editor, we will endeavor to correct, as far as may be done without occupying too much of your space, the erroneous impressions growing out of the inaccuracies of statement referred to.

Your correspondents assert that "Infidels of Silverton made the first banter for discussion; that Mr. Putnam declared himself ready to meet any Christian indorsed by Christians; that Putnam slandered Braden before an audience in Silverton; that the Silverton Secular Union refused to appoint a committee to investigate Putnam's slanders; that for more than a year the Secularity of Silverton have peddled slanders of Braden knowing them to be false; that R. D. Allen wrote to Perry, Ill., to get something with which to defame Braden, but instead received statements highly honorable to Braden, and that Allen tried to suppress this fact"—a lengthy indictment, to be sure. Our purpose is to discover to your readers how far it is supported by facts.

In the spring of 1887 Mr. Putnam, who was at that time lecturing in California, was engaged by a few Liberals of Silverton to deliver a series of lectures at this place. Arrangements were made, and date of lectures announced by a committee appointed for that purpose. Some weeks before Mr. Putnam was due in Silverton, the writer, who was a member of the Liberal committee, was approached by the editor of the Silverton Appeal, who is a member of the Methodist church at this place, to know if Mr. Putnam would divide time with Rev. Mr. Driver. When informed that Mr. Putnam was under contract, and that the committee would not permit a division of time, the editor wished to know if the committee would arrange for Mr. Putnam to meet Mr. Driver in public discussion after the series of lectures was completed. Mr. Putnam, when communicated with on the subject, authorized the committee, by letter, to accept the challenge of any gentleman, and upon his arrival in Silverton expressed to the committee a willingness to meet Mr. Driver or any other gentleman who should challenge him. Mr. Putnam subsequently challenged Mr. Driver, but never in Silverton did he "publicly declare himself ready to meet any Christian indorsed by Christians," and the statement by your correspondents that he did so is gratuitous.

When Mr. Putnam was asked to meet Elder Braden he promptly declined. And when asked for his reasons for declining he publicly expressed the opinion that Elder Braden's pamphlet on Colonel Ingersoll and his family should forever bar its author from the arena of honorable discussion; referring to Underwood's pamphlet as further evidence of Braden's unscrupulous methods. If this be slander, then Christians, as well as Mr. Putnam, have slandered Mr. Braden. If it be slanderous to express the opinion that the author of "Ingersoll Unmasked" could not be a gentleman, then the "Secularity of Silverton" are not guiltless. As to peddling slanders of Elder Braden, knowing them to be false, the "Secularity of Silverton" have only repeated that which has been published in perhaps a dozen newspapers, including some of the elder's own church periodicals. The Silverton Secular Union did not wish to undertake the farce of investigating a difficulty which originated between Mr. Braden and Mr. Underwood fifteen years ago—the scene of action three thousand miles distant from Silverton, all witnesses equally distant, with only three days' time in which to complete the act. Furthermore, the members of the Secular Union had been attending Braden's lectures in the M. E. church at this place and had been convinced of that person's proficiency in the questionable methods attributed to him by Mr. Putnam. They deemed it unnecessary that a "committee" labor through an "exhaustive investigation," in order to determine if language as offensive to Christians as to Infidels is unbecoming a gentleman.

R. D. Allen wrote to a friend of his by the name of Browning, in Perry, Ill., for the truth in reference to statements attributed to Mr. Browning in Underwood's pamphlet. In his reply Mr. Browning, who is a member of the Church of Christ, evaded Mr. Allen's questions, but stated that he considered "Clark Braden good enough to debate with any Infidel." Mr. Browning's letter was read by Mr. Allen in open meeting of the Silverton Secular Union, a number of Christians being present. And when Elder Braden asserted that "Allen was suppressing statements received from Perry, Ill.," which he (Braden) considered "highly honorable" to himself, this letter was promptly published in the columns of the Silverton Appeal. If the action of Mr. Allen is to be construed into an effort to suppress statements received by him from Perry, Ill., we are curious to know by what methods your correspondents would expect him to make the statements public. Taking into consideration the Christian estimate of Infidels, the average person would see in this statement, claimed to be "highly honorable" to Elder Braden, only a doubtful compliment to that individual. But your correspondents seem to have encountered no difficulty in extracting from its ambiguous sentences food for the vanity of this much-indorsed elder, to whom, we are given to understand, the "churches, and the conventions, associations, and the press, of Oregon, the United States, and Canada," pay homage. Mr. Allen has resided in this community for many years, and we believe he has the confidence of his neighbors, irrespective of party or creed. His reputation for honesty and integrity of purpose will not suffer by comparison with that of any person whom we know. If his strictures upon Elder Braden are severe, they are fully warranted by that person's conduct while in Silverton. The Elder's first discourse to a Silverton audience was characterized by an indiscriminate abuse of Liberals. He proclaimed from the pulpit his ability to descend deeper into the "dirt," and to remain there longer, than any man in the Infidel ranks, and entertained his audience by rehearsing many of his wordy contests in illustration of his method of dealing with Infidels. Surely, the admirers of this bombastic preacher should be the last persons on earth to complain of extravagance of expression. Mr. Allen will be exonerated by all candid men of his acquaintance from any charge of dishonesty made by the defenders of Clark Braden. This much, Mr. Editor, in reference to the misstatements contained in the article under consideration. Our statements can be verified in every particular. The editor of the Silverton Appeal will corroborate our explanation of the "first banter for discussion," knowing, as do all persons who are acquainted with the facts, that it came from Christians. They early evinced a determination to interfere with the good order of a movement which they deemed inconsistent with their particular religion, and they have persisted in that determination, with more zeal than discretion perhaps, until the present time.

You, gentlemen of the committee, assert that "Infidels have no more right to object to Mr. Braden than the plaintiff in a suit has to dictate that the defendant shall not employ the lawyer the plaintiff fears." Is it your intention, gentlemen, to conduct the investigation of the evidences of Christianity upon a plane so low as this? If so, your position will not be approved by those who are unwilling to trifle with the hopes and fears of their fellow-men. We had supposed that the purpose of discussions of this character, by men of ability, was to elicit truth, and not merely to win a case or defeat an adversary, as the defendant's lawyer is paid to do. But it appears, gentlemen, that you hold victory above all other ends to be attained. Your reasoning in connection with your quotation from Bonaparte's instructions to his generals clearly defines your position, and every line of the context is an admission of this fact. It is an admission for which our recent experience with Christian intolerance had not left us unprepared, but it is an admission which is likely to affect the popular estimate of the sincerity of your pretensions.

For more than a year, gentlemen, you have been clamorous for debate; impatient for the opportunity to demonstrate the strength of your principles, the superiority of your system, and to forever silence the advocates of Freethought. But when asked by Liberals to select a gentleman to represent you in discussion it appears that you have less faith in the strength of your principles than you have in the tactics of Bonaparte, so you follow that great chieftain's instructions to his generals, "Never do what your enemy wants you to do," and name Clark Braden as your representative. And you declare that no other shall ever represent you in Silverton.

When we objected to Mr. Braden, gentlemen, we did not doubt his qualifications to represent Christianity. Neither did we know that he was the last of his kind. We supposed there yet remained a score of Christian ministers whom you regarded as competent to defend your religion. But if true, as your language implies, that they have given up the struggle, and of all the doughty parsons who have stood up in defense of the church Clark Braden stands upon its crumbling battlements solitary and alone, we have reason to rejoice that the work of overthrowing superstition is so nearly accomplished. And we waive our objections to this forlorn hope of Christianity, and ask only that you hold up his hands by indorsing him over your own signatures. Then he will be relieved from the necessity of barking at the heels of a man who treats him with contempt, and can turn his attention to willing foes who stand ready to meet him wherever indorsed by Christians.

You are loud, gentlemen, in denunciation of what you term the "colossal effrontery of R. D. Allen and Infidels." By what terms, pray, would you characterize the action of yourselves and Christians, in connection with the late Liberal reunion at Silverton? We are continually warned, by Christians, of the debasing tendencies of Liberalism. Are we to understand that your conduct on that occasion was offered in evidence of the refining influences of Christianity? Are Christians the exemplars of all that is conducive to peace on earth and goodwill to man? If you invite the issue, gentlemen, we are prepared to show that for shameless transgression of the bounds of decorum, and lack of decent regard for the rights and privileges of neighbors, your action on the occasion referred to is not paralleled by that of any people having a regard for the amenities of civilized life.

Silverton, Or., Aug. 15, 1888.

J. W. McCURE,
Pres. S. S. U.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I gave four lectures in Astoria, Oregon, in Rescue Glee Club hall, to large and well-behaved audiences. This is a mongrel population from every part of the globe. The town is built mostly upon piling driven deep into the sands of the Columbia river, but has a magnificent harbor, and is the greatest fishing town on this coast, there being over a dozen very large canneries here for canning salmon, besides as many more between here and Portland. This salmon packing and the lumbering business is about all there is of Astoria in the business line. The place has no country behind it but mountains and tide lands. I found many warm friends here whose hearts are with the Freethought cause, and who eventually will, I think, be enthusiastic Liberals. Liberalism is as sure to grow as the tides are to flow, but it takes time. It is a matter of education, and to educate the masses out of what they have been educated into for thousands of years is no trifling work, but I believe that another thousand years will leave hardly a vestige of the present religious superstition. We have had the kingdom of God long enough; now let us have the era of science, or the republic of man, or queenhood of woman—anything to do away with the God business, which has been overdone for many long years. It is out at the knees and elbows; it is theadbare, and the collar is greasy; besides, the big boy of humanity has outgrown such a pinafore religion. Let us put on him the full suit of Freethought, boots, spurs, and all, and in place of the old skullcap of Christ and his blood-cleansing power, shall we not crown him with the stovepipe hat of universal mental liberty? Our boy has outgrown the one-story brain condition. He now has three stories to his cranium (thanks to science) and is calling for more room and more light, and a thousand years from now our posterity will blush to say their progenitors believed in the twaddle of what is now called the Christian religion. Formerly innumerable gods filled the heavens—gods everywhere. Now there is but one left, and in a few short years more this one will disappear from the skies and the minds of our ideal (idol) worshippers, and like the other fellow, the devil, will be dropped from our lists. Oh, for the good time coming when the rattling, rusty chains of superstition shall clank their corroded links no more, and men and women, freed from such accursed nonsense, will live "for the cause that lacks assistance; for the wrongs that need resistance, and the good that they can do." The human family have been robbed for God's sake long enough; now let us demolish the hydra-headed monster, and let the religion-crazed world have a rest, so reason can obtain a hearing, and the long night of fanaticism will break in a dawn of splendor called the day of science.

Ilwaco, W. T.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History, of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S
GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months.
50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine
paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents;
paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS.

By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK" SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of half a million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made available to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25; Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50; difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

For the Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS, CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.

33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7 jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50. With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17, $18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4, being only $24 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies' watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels, $22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2 to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38. Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra. Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case. Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1; best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas, 50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12. Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free. BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

Designer and Patentee of new FREETHOUGHT Badge in PINS and CHARMS—emblematic of the light and day of Freethought, Science, and Reason vs. the night and darkness of Superstition.—Exact size of cut and smaller, two-thirds size. Warranted solid gold, enameled in four colors. Most beautiful badge ever designed. Small, $2, $2.75, $3.50. Large, $3 to $5; with genuine diamond, $8, $10; and charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.

OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

"Zum Walfisch."

THE WHALE

CHAS. A. JONAS, Proprietor.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars,

Cold Lager and Sharp Steam Beers.

24 THIRD ST., Near Market,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

JOHN WIELAND'S

Lager Bier
IS THE BEST.

CALL FOR IT.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

HAND-BOOK OF THE LICK OBSERVATORY

OF THE

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA,

—BY—

EDWARD HOLDEN, LL.D.,

Director of the Observatory.

A volume of 135 pages, 12mo., printed on heavy paper, and bound in flexible cloth covers. Besides likenesses of

Professor Holden and James Lick,

By mail 80 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 37.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888.

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - SEPTEMBER 15, 1888

A LOCAL paper says: "It is a notorious fact that no man gets his name before a nominating convention of the Republican and Democratic parties in San Francisco unless he is pledged to carry out the purposes and aims of the Irish Roman Catholic priesthood." And as it is in San Francisco, so is it in every large city throughout free America.

A DISPATCH to the London Chronicle says: "The pope has instructed the Papal Nuncio at Brussels to aid Cardinal Lavignerie to convoke an international conference on the suppression of slave trading." The traffic in Catholic slaves to his holiness the pope and his paramour the church will continue without protest from religious circles.

THE pope may find it necessary to leave Rome on account of the unfriendliness of the government and the populace. Here is a chance for our authorities. Why not imitate the example of King Leopold of Belgium, and invite him to San Francisco? Many of his most loyal subjects may be found any day in our courts, or later on at San Quentin.

THE Methodists in annual conference at Jamestown, O., last week, put themselves on record in a denunciation of Mormonism. No doubt the Latter Day Saints hold similar sentiments with regard to Methodism. These -isms are two of a kind, except that the Methodists prefer to take their polygamy in the form of pastoral visits instead of plural blessedness.

THE thirty-seventh anniversary of the admission of California into the sisterhood of states occurred last Sunday, but was not celebrated then. The Native Sons of the Golden West let it go by without recognition, in deference to the customs of a certain religious sect called Christians, who have appropriated the day for the exercise of a system of incantations adopted from their pagan predecessors.

THIS conception of the infancy of Christ—that is to say, of God when on earth—is from the pen of Martin Luther, the founder of Protestantism: "When Jesus Christ was born, he doubtless cried and wept like other children, and his mother tended him as other mothers tend their children. As he grew up, he was submissive to his parents and waited on them, and carried his supposed father's dinner to him; and when he came back Mary no doubt often said, 'My dear little Jesus, where hast thou been?'"

THE Rev. Mr. McFarland preached eloquently last Sunday in the Fairview, Pa., United Presbyterian church. While he was setting forth, presumably, the humanizing influences of the Christian religion Mrs. McFarland lay in her mother's house suffering from the effects of a severe beating at the hands of her husband, with whom she had recently had a misunderstanding. The reverend gentleman was jealous of his wife and beat and kicked her as an expression of his diapprobation.

LAWYER BRAITHWAITE, of Hemingford, Neb., has found that when giving money to a church it is safer to first take the precaution of getting it honestly. A clerk in a bank at Albion left him in charge while he went to get change, and when accounts were made up that night $1,100 was missing and Braithwaite had gone to Hemingford. A detective found that he had made a cash donation to the Baptist church at Hemingford, bought a Bible and carpets for it, and was otherwise spending money freely. He accordingly placed him under arrest.

THE fact that Mrs. Michael Dunn, of Prairie du Chien, Wis., died while kneeling at the altar of a Catholic church last Sunday is not proof that kneeling at an altar is a dangerous practice. It merely warns those who are subject to heart disease and kindred ailments to avoid emotional disturbances as much as possible. Religious excitement is a prolific source of sudden death or insanity, but the same results follow other forms of excitement, though less frequently. When the victim is an Infidel, the disaster is ascribed to the vengeance of an offended deity; if a religious devotee, it is referred to the cause above mentioned. Yet the facts are the same in both cases.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Denver is always an inspiring point. It is a beautiful city. The prospects of mountain and plain are lovely. The climate is exhilarating. The people are animated. They are full of business. They look ahead. Here are elegance, leisure, wealth, and industry.

It gives new courage to meet our friends here. They keep to the front, and nowhere has Liberalism made a more splendid advance. On Sunday evening Tabor's Grand Opera House was full. Fifteen hundred people were present. It was a magnificent and enthusiastic audience. The Opera House is as elegant as a drawing-room and as easy for speaking. The voice, with but little effort, can reach every part of the vast auditorium. Friend Alexander, who has charge of the building, arranged the adornings of the stage with delightful effect, so that it seemed as if I were speaking to a company of friends in a parlor. The path of Freethought, in this case, was certainly strewn with flowers. It was an entrancing picture of what will be in our land as time rolls on. The audience was representative. Fashion and culture were present; but hundreds of the working people were there—toilers in whose faces was the light of thought and the ardor of hope, who gave to the meeting its noblest success by their cordial understanding of Freethought as the new and brightest gospel of the race, not from heaven but from the heart and brain of this united world.

All honor to our good friends who labor so zealously for an hour of triumph like this, that sends the bugle-call along our lines. Thomas J. Truss, John G. Jenkins, Z. Shed, Charles Roth, E. T. Webber, Mr. Mathews, H. E. Hurlburt, Mr. Cohn, Richard Mueller, Chas. Smith, Fred Warren; these make a host in themselves, always in the forward ranks. They are generous comrades, and when I strike hands with them I hear the music of victory.

There is a lively little reform paper published here, the Arbitrator. It has the largest circulation of any such paper in the Rocky Mountain region. It is fearless, independent, and aggressive. Just now its columns are teeming with a fiery discussion between Z. Shed and the Hon. B. O'Driscoll. The latter is an earnest defender of the Roman Catholic church, which has been impeached by Z. Shed. The rattling musketry of Mr. Shed is quite demoralizing. It makes O'Driscoll stagger, but he is valiant still. I hope he will keep up the combat, for the facts and figures of Mr. Shed are the best artillery of the day against the church power, and he is doing a world of good by their publication in the Arbitrator. Large numbers of working people are reached. Mr. Shed is a leading merchant of Denver, but he has thorough sympathy with radical reform and believes in going to the root of the abuses in power. He has consented to prepare his articles for FREETHOUGHT. They will be republished in pamphlet form, and a more effectual campaign document for the Secular Union cannot be found. It should be distributed by the thousands. It gives the unimpeachable testimony of history to the vices, crimes, and cruelties of the church and Christianity.

Mr. Thomas J. Truss was unable to be present at my lecture. His father died suddenly Friday night at Syracuse, and he and Mrs. Truss and little Darwin were called away to the afflicted home. Mr. Truss's father was one of the old anti-slavery heroes. He was side by side with Samuel J. May, Gerritt Smith, and others. He lived a noble life devoted to freedom and humanity. His work was completed. He died in good old age, and has left a priceless inheritance of virtue that cannot die, but shines in the stars of memory and illumines still the dawns of progress. The sympathy of all is with our comrades in this affliction, which shall make dearer than ever the cause of liberty and justice.

Mr. T. S. Old, of Georgetown, was present also, and I was glad to shake hands with this veteran Freethinker. I had only known him by correspondence before, but had always hoped for the time when we could greet face to face, and it came on this auspicious occasion.

S. W. Clark, John Shuberg, E. E. Pascoe, John G. Evans, Mrs. Maggie Cleveland, A. Smith, J. J. Jensen—whom I last met at Plum Creek, Nebraska, one of our foremost co-workers there—L. C. Shields, J. H. Brennan, Mr. and Mrs. Caplin, Mrs. Chas. Roth, Mrs. Z. Shed, are also our pleasant allies and hospitable friends in this Queen City, and give heart and hope to the Secular Pilgrim.

Mr. Charles McCord introduced me with a graceful speech which gave the right ring to the occasion and made it easy to do my level best. Mr. McCord is one of the leading lawyers of the city, but he isn't afraid to stand upon the platform of Freethought. He referred to the time when it was threatened to tear down the hall in which Frances Wright was to give an address, and compared it to the present when the finest building in Denver was packed with hundreds to listen to the most radical sentiments, and all eager to hear, even if not agreeing with everything the speaker said.

The leading dailies of the city, the Republican and News, gave good notices of the lecture.

I made a flying call upon Mrs. Dowling, Mrs. Broneer's sister, grand-daughter of Abner Kneeland. Miss Josephine Kneeland, the only grand-daughter of the name, child of Mr. Kneeland's youngest son, is living with her. I handled the cane used by Mr. Kneeland, made out of timber from the ship Lawrence, presented to him by friends. I saw, also, a portrait of our noble pioneer. He is a fine looking gentleman, with somewhat the countenance of Ingersoll—full and fair, kindly and sweet in expression. There was no bitterness in that broad and genial face. It was a loving face, yet strong with thought and heroic purpose.

Besides other good things, the Denver Liberals contribute $50 to the next campaign fund. This shows which way the tide is going; that the people do believe in the Secular Union and will support it. The attacks made seem to produce very little effect. Wherever I have asked, the response has been generous. When the situation is fully understood there is confidence and enthusiasm. With Mr. Stevens for secretary, and Mr. Washburn or Mr. Remsburg, or some other good worker, for president, I believe that the next year's work will be the best yet, and that we shall go forth from the Pittsburgh Congress with hope and power greater than ever. Let us be united, and the future is ours.

I am willing to overlook many things and bear many things for the sake of harmony, but some things I will not overlook and endure. Patience ceases to be a virtue, and therefore I have a disagreeable task to perform, but I am compelled to it as a matter of self-defense. I find that from point to point Dr. J. L. York has been simply a scandal-monger. He has made statements, about myself and friends, that are outrageously false. The evidence of his perfidy is overwhelming. I wish to say to all the world, and have it distinctly understood, that Dr. York is not my friend but my enemy. He is not an honorable enemy, but a dishonorable enemy. Under the guise of Liberalism he is doing the dirtiest work of orthodoxy. He is seeking to destroy character and reputation, by the most infamous means. I must declare this openly to the world and let the issue be plain. I no longer recognize Dr. York as a gentleman. I no longer recognize him as a representative of Liberalism. I consider him a disgrace to Freethought. I will not stand with him upon the same platform. He is not my comrade. Hereafter our ways must be entirely separate. I brand him as a foul calumniator.

I would say, also, to all my enemies that I call for an open fight. I have been attacked secretly, and in the dark. I have not anything to conceal, not any record of my life. I want nothing covered up. I ask for no favors. I only ask that every one who has any charge of any kind to make against me, meet me face to face at the Pittsburgh Congress and make good these charges, or forever after hold their peace. I fling down the gauntlet, and ask for no defense except the truth.

I shall return again to Denver in October. Arrangements will also be made for lectures by Messrs. Watts and Underwood, in connection with their lectures at Salt Lake City. It looks as if there would be a splendid campaign for Freethought in the great West the coming year.

Monday I journey from Denver to Yuma, Colorado, a lively little town three years old. Here I find my old comrade of Omaha, Thos. Foreman, and his wife, who always make a welcome for the Secular Pilgrim. He has a homestead out here on the broad plains where the breezes blow with healthful zest; where the sunshine is fair and golden; the skies beautiful; and you can look off in every direction for almost fifty miles. He has a little house built about a mile from the village, three rooms in it and a closet, but there is plenty of space for hospitality, and I enjoy it here, as I write my News and Notes four thousand feet above the level of the sea, while the winds are singing round the "little cabin door" and the boundless horizon glimmers as if over a vast ocean.

I lectured here last night. Only a short notice could be given, but the hall was full. The hall was extemporized for the occasion. It was in the storeroom of a new building. The platform was made of barrels and planks, and the seats of chairs and planks, and every seat was occupied. There are no churches in this place, as yet. Several efforts have been made to build one, but the interest is slight. At the last meeting called for this purpose only three were present. They have had a clergyman here, but he has gone crazy, and so the ecclesiastical outlook is not very flattering. There is a good chance for Liberalism.

The right hand man of friend Foreman is Mr. Leland, a staunch Freethinker. I had the pleasure of going to his homestead last evening. He has a wife and four children, and they all seem to be happy in the thatched cottage. Mr. Leland has been here only about three years, but he is one of the old settlers. He speaks his mind without fear or favor, and everybody knows that he is an Infidel, but for all that the Christians keep him busily at work, for he always does his work well. Back in Iowa the Christians were so anxious for him to do a job that they even allowed him to work upon their church building on Sunday in order that it might stand the blizzards that the Lord occasionally sends into that country. It seems that Christians love God, but trust in the Infidel.

Mr. Leland is a royal worker, and, together with Mr. Foreman, he made the meeting here a success that promises much for future growth. With these friends are J. E. Davanon, C. Courcier, Mr. Rosencrantz, Mr. Myers, Mr. Orum, and others. A Liberal organization will be formed here, I hope, and a Freethought hall be built instead of a church. I have been quite delighted with my visit and hope to come again, and if any Freethought lecturer is passing this way he had better drop a line to Thos. Foreman. It is on the B. & M. R. R., one hundred and thirty-eight miles east of Denver.

On for Nebraska now, and Iowa and Chicago, and then for a grand rally at Pittsburgh. Come one, come all!

Foreman Homestead, Col., Sept. 4. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

MATTER FOR THE POPE'S NEW BOOK

Pope Leo XIII. is writing a history of the Middle Ages. He will doubtless find much of interest to discourse about concerning his own church. Luther, for instance, speaking of what he saw among the Catholic ecclesiastics of Rome in the sixteenth century, says:

"The crimes of Rome are incredible. There reign all the villainies and infamies, all the atrocious crimes, in particular blind greed, perjuries, sodomy. The cruelty of their revenge is atrocious. When they can get rid of their enemies in no other way they lie in ambush for them in their churches, so that one man cleft his enemy's head before the altar. There are often murders at funerals on account of inheritances. They celebrate the Carnival with extreme impropriety and folly for several weeks, and they have made a custom of various sins and extravagances at it, for they are men without conscience, who live in open sin, and make light of the marriage tie."

Some of Luther's remarks are unquotable, yet M. Taine observes that his words are weak compared with the facts. "Treasons, assassinations, tortures, open debauchery, the practice of poisoning, the worst and most shameless outrages," characterized the Roman Catholics of the age of which Pope Leo has chosen to write. At one time the pope's vicar having forbidden clerics and laics to keep concubines, the pope revoked the decree, "saying that that was not forbidden, because the life of priests and ecclesiastics was such that hardly one was to be found who did not keep a concubine, or at least who had not a courtesan." A pious historian wrote that under Alexander VI. "all ecclesiastics, from the greatest to the least, have concubines instead of wives, and that publicly. If God hinder it not this corruption will pass to the monks and religious orders, although, to confess the truth, almost all the monasteries of the town have become bawd-houses, without anyone to speak against it."

Such are the historical facts the pope must deal with in writing of the church in the Middle Ages. The list of crimes and atrocities of the time cannot be added to, because it includes them all. Numerous historians have placed the truth upon record, and the only object the pope can have in reviewing the matter is to cover up, for the benefit of Catholic readers, such features as are a scandal to the church.

THIS WORLD NOW—THE NEXT, LATER.

A Christian correspondent writes to say that FREETHOUGHT is dealing with the question of the eternal happiness or unhappiness of human beings in a most reckless way, and that we are taking risks in everlasting things. With all due respect for the convictions of those who share our correspondent's belief, we would say that we are doing nothing of the kind. We do not believe that anything we can do or say will have the slightest effect in modifying the condition of any human being hereafter, and by hereafter we mean after death. If there is another world we believe that the welfare of its population will depend much, as at present, upon economic and other environments.

According to the Christian plan of salvation some of the most selfish people in this world will be angels in the next. All the pious monopolists—those who have ground the faces of the poor—will be there; and they will have the best places. It may be said that a just God rules in heaven and that the happiness of all who attain that celestial abode will be assured. How do we know this? Is it not also claimed that a just God governs in the affairs of men on earth? What more can we expect in one place than another under the same administration? Suppose we get to heaven and find that a lot of enterprising saints are there ahead of us. Suppose we find the water front on the river of life is owned by a wealthy company, so we can't tie up to the wharf without paying for the privilege. Suppose the means of transportation are in the hands of a corporation, who charge all that the traffic will bear. Suppose all the best lands have been gobbled up. Suppose the circulating medium is controlled by banks; the schools by rings, the fat offices filled by rascals, industry in the hands of Christainized coolies; the minds of the people debased with economic and religious superstitions; a lot of priests living on the earnings of poverty; the poor man paying taxes on his harp, the archbishop sitting on an untaxed throne; honesty in rags, rascality in robes.

Suppose we find this state of things obtaining in heaven. What will it profit us that while on earth we accepted the lingo of the Bible and its hocus-pocus called miracles?

It will, of course, be denied that there is injustice in heaven, but the denial is worth nothing. We know that on earth injustice is the rule; and the theologians claim that Providence sees it all. And we must judge the unknown by the known. We have no other method. We have no reason to believe that the next world is better than this—not the slightest. If the administration of a ruler during one term is marked by a reckless disregard of the welfare of the people, we have the best of reasons for judging that his second term will be no better, especially if we accept his own assurance that he is totally unchanging.

We are agitating the air for no useful purpose when we talk of preparing ourselves for eternity. No just and wise god would leave such a matter in the hands of finite and fallible beings, imperiled by all their weaknesses and their liability to mistakes. We cannot look far into the future. The most we can do is to plow and plant, and gather the uncertain harvest. We can do our best to establish justice on earth; we can plead for liberty and opportunity and equal rights; we can do something toward overcoming ignorance and banishing disease of mind and body; and when we have effected these things, the orthodox heaven can add nothing to the joys of this world.

THAT UNFULFILLED PROMISE.

Our esteemed contemporary, the Golden Gate, of Sept. 8, quotes and comments thus:

"Mr. Fred Evans, the independent slate-writer, has gone to Australia without redeeming his promise to give the writer a sitting in conjunction with two slates fastened together by twelve screws. We are assured by many persons that Mr. Evans could have produced writing between those slates if he had tried. His failure to do so is doubtless attributable to our intractable aura, which rendered it difficult for the spirits to put themselves en rapport with the medium's psychographic control. With regard to spiritual manifestations we have remarked that it is always easier to explain why they don't happen than why they do.—Freethought."

"Mr. Evans does not claim that he is able to produce independent slate-writing. That his guides can and have produced writing in his presence between states screwed and sealed together, we do know. We have witnessed the manifestation many times. If we are not misinformed the editor of FREETHOUGHT has had the writing come between slates held in his own hands, in the presence of Mr. Evans, and under conditions that would make deception simply impossible. Why not own up to this fact, and not try to cast a slur upon Mr. Evans's mediumship, now that he is not here to fulfil his promise? We know that he was very busy for two weeks before his departure, getting ready for the journey; and we know also that he was obliged to refuse many orders for seances."

We do not care to discuss the question whether Mr. Evans or his guides write messages between sealed slates. We have no theory on the subject. In our dealings with Mr. Evans we were in pursuit of facts, and the facts so far obtained are that Mr. Evans produced "communications" upon slates in a most unusual and to us, at present, unaccountable manner; that these "communications" are in the same handwriting that Mr. Evans employs in his ordinary correspondence; that the "communications" bear no evidence of coming from the persons whose names are signed to them, and that Mr. Evans has not shown any desire to repeat the experiment.

The plea of lack of time for another sitting is contradicted by facts. On the same day that Mr. Evans declined our application for a seance he was visited by Mr. John McGlashan and a seance arranged for, but abruptly repudiated by Mr. Evans when he learned that Mr. McGlashan desired to bring his own slates sealed together. This was not two weeks but two months before Mr. Evans's departure for Australia, as will be seen by the following letter:

"133 OCTAVIA ST., SAN FRAN., CAL., June 20, '88.

"GEO. E. MACDONALD, ESQ., Dear Sir: Yours received and contents noted. I regret to say that I have so many engagements on at present that it would be impossible for me to name any date for a few weeks. I leave for Australia in August and therefore am rushed on account of my early departure. But rest assured I will make arrangements for you and your friend to have a seance before I leave.

"Yours respectfully, FRED EVANS."

It is impossible that Mr. Evans could have had two months' engagements in advance, for besides offering Mr. McGlashan a sitting he kept an advertisement standing in the Golden Gate soliciting more custom.

We say nothing about Mr. Evans's mediumship, and regret that he is not here to explain his reticence. His absence, however, makes no difference as to the facts mentioned, which speak for themselves.

THE WORK IN SAN FRANCISCO.

It is not too early to announce that the Liberal campaign is to be opened in this city in January, immediately upon Mr. Putnam's return. Irving Hall on Post street will be secured for all the Sundays of that month; also for Monday and Tuesday, January 28 and 29.

There are many calls for meetings and organization in San Francisco. The Liberals are ready for the question. The period during which FREETHOUGHT has been published has made us acquainted with a large number of Freethinkers and has gained us hundreds of readers here, and we believe that those sufficiently interested in Secularism to read its literature and support its journals will be interested enough to attend its meetings. Let us have an organization. The burdens will at first fall upon the few, but time and work and success will bring others around the standard; new speakers, new workers, will come forward, and out of the unorganized mass of Freethinkers in this city will spring a society second in size and importance to none on this coast.

Organization must come; it is vital to the cause. With it will be acquaintanceship such as now comes about only through casual meetings at the office of FREETHOUGHT. Liberals will learn to know one another, to patronize one another in business, so that there will be the mutual advantage which those of similar views should gain from social and business intercourse. There is everything to gain by such organization, and if the co-operation is cordial there is nothing to be lost.

The meetings will be held as announced. Here is room, here is opportunity for Liberals to come together. We desire to get word from all interested, to learn what they are prepared to do toward making the movement a success, so that the burdens and the benefits may be shared.

THE charges against St. Vincent's Catholic Orphan Asylum at San Rafael appear in a fair way to be glozed over. Secretary Maslin of the state Board of Examiners has just visited the place and is reported to be "loud in his praises of the present management." This won't do. A sepulchre may be whitewashed. If, as Maslin at first reported, the inmates of this asylum were starved, beaten, and in every way maltreated, indictments against the management should follow. If, as he has charged, somebody is "making $100 per day out of the institution;" if, as stated by Governor Waterman, "large profits have been made out of the state's aid and the proceeds invested in land to the advantage of others than the wards of the state," Mr. Maslin should inspect the books, and not stop at merely "initiating the superintendent into the bookkeeping formula established by the state Board of Examiners." In the first place, state aid to sectarian institutions should be withdrawn, and as a subsequent step proceedings for the recovery of the misappropriated funds and for the punishment of the offenders should be instituted in the courts. Let the rascals be exposed.

THERE are four, if not more, separate celebrations of New Year's Day in San Francisco—the Christian, the Chinese, the Greek Catholic, and the Jewish. Just why Christians celebrate January 1 nobody can find out. It is not pretended that Christ was born on that day, or that he was born 1,888 years ago. Dating from the alleged birth of Christ, New Year's would come in December and this would now be 1892 or thereabouts. The Chinese New Year is not at all a well defined era; the Greek Catholics celebrate according to the old style calendar; and the Jews, it is understood, date from the beginning of all created things; but as the exact time of launching this earth in space is variously estimated at from one hundred million to an indefinite number of years ago, they are about as far at sea as the others are from land. Nevertheless the Hebrews of this vicinity celebrated September 6 and 7 as New Year's days, and if they enjoyed themselves, as they appeared to do, any slight chronological inaccuracy may well be overlooked.

CLARK BRADEN's defeat in his prowling attempt to gain recognition from the president of the American Secular Union seems to have caused him a great deal more chagrin and expense than his various defeats by Liberal lecturers who have condescended to debate with him. After being steadily ignored for three months, he abandons his sneaking mission and vents his baffled malignity in a scurrilous circular, which as a transmitter of brazen and unqualified lies we have never seen equaled. Braden was denounced as a liar and a blackguard, and in defending himself from the charge he has proved himself to be both. Some Christians have a way of telling lies as though they were the truth, but Braden doesn't know how to do it. He wallows in his own mire and befouls only himself. By the way, why not arrange for a meeting between Braden and Dr. J. L. York? Par nobile fratrum.

READERS OF FREETHOUGHT who, without having ordered it, get the paper regularly and have a receipt showing that it is paid for are to understand that they are Gift Subscribers. Such Gift Subscribers, it is hoped, will find the paper worth renewing for when their time is out, as it is with the object of inducing them to do so that it is sent to them. Any subscriber may have FREETHOUGHT sent to the address of any person, not now taking it, for one dollar. Messrs. Wm. Redfield, E. E. Mensch, Wm. Fisk, Wm. Graham, Abram Dorsey, A. C. Schindler (3), H. S. Borrette, and J. D. Kaufman have sent us Gift Subscribers since our last acknowledgment.

AMBROSE BIERCE, of the Examiner, mentions the following as one of the pictures not on exhibition in the art gallery at the Mechanic's Fair: "Audi Alteram Partem" [Hear both sides]. A holy man of God presenting a copy of Ingersoll's works to a parishioner and saying, 'Prove all things and hold fast to what I tell you.'"

SOME of our religious brethren are quite zealous for the conversion of the Chinese, and four missionaries on their way to China are in San Francisco at this writing. Horace Greeley was once approached by a missionary, who struck the great journalist for a contribution. "What for?" asked Horace. "To save sinners from hell," replied the missionary. "Not a cent," rejoined Mr. Greeley. "If God chooses to send sinners to hell, it is a sign that they deserve it. If they don't deserve it he won't send them there." There are many residents of this coast who, as regards Chinamen, are content with Mr. Greeley's simple faith.

OUR friend W. S. Rodgers, of Boulder Creek, we learn, is candidate for a township office. We are willing to risk our reputation as a prophet upon the prediction that if the citizens of Boulder Creek elect him the honest ones will never regret it.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Last Sunday a most destructive fire visited the quarter of the city lying between Mission and Howard streets and extending from East to Beale street. The two blocks lying nearest the bay were totally destroyed, nearly all of the third, and about one-third of the fourth. The fire also crossed Mission street below Spear, and consumed a portion of two blocks. Mills, factories, tenement houses, and lumber yards went up in flames. The loss is more than a million, much valuable machinery being ruined. —Governor Waterman emphatically declines to grant Murderer Goldenson a thirty days' reprieve. —Mr. Frank Pixley, of the Argonaut, having accused "Boss" Higgins of dividing spoils with other office-holders, Mr. Higgins goes into print with the statement, four times repeated, that Mr. Pixley is a liar. Pixley says that Higgins is living far in excess of his legitimate income, and hence infers that he enjoys unlawful perquisites. —The Native Sons of California held a great celebration at Santa Cruz last Monday in honor of the thirty-seventh anniversary of the state's admission to the Union. —The American party has nominated Frank Pixley for Congress. —Miss Jessie Ackerman is lecturing for the W. C. T. U. in Alaska. She is evidently not much feared by the liquor dealers, as at Douglas City a saloon keeper offered her his saloon and dance hall to lecture in, which she accepted. —Judge Terry and Mrs. Terry are faring well in jail, but threaten dire vengeance when their term for contempt of court shall have been served out. —There have been great irregularities in the running of trains on the Southern Pacific recently, mail matter being delayed for days by missing connections. —Colton had its warmest day on the 7th, the thermometer reaching 115½ degrees in the shade. —The books of the Chinese Six Companies contain the names of over 3,000 of the 12,000 Chinamen who went away during the years for which the prior residence claim holds good. —The politicians complain that the registration of voters goes on very slowly. The registrar's office in the basement of the new City Hall will be open until October 15 from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M. —Five whaling vessels, the Young Phoenix, Fleetwing, Ino, Jane Grey, and the Mary and Susan, went to the bottom during a storm in the Arctic Ocean last week. No lives were lost, but the ships were total wrecks. Some of the cargo was saved. —Many boys are being employed in the vineyards in the neighborhood of Napa and St. Helena, to the exclusion of Chinese coolies. —Ah Lum, the Chinaman who rescued a child from drowning after the collision of the Oceanic and the City of Chester, was landed on a writ of habeas corpus, but returned to his vessel and his case was dismissed. —A pillar of an Oakland church is broken. His name is J. B. Smith, and for the past few months he has been teaching Sunday-school and giving promises in lieu of money for his worldly debts. Now he has disappeared; his Sunday-school has another teacher, and many of those who took his promissory notes and forged checks feel his loss deeply.

President Cleveland has sent his letter of acceptance to the committee. It urges tariff reform, reviews the political situation, denounces trusts and undesirable immigration, and calls attention to the dangers of excessive taxation and a congested treasury.

—Congress has passed a new and stringent bill restricting Chinese immigration. It is a consequence of the rejection of the recent treaty by the Chinese government.—Judge Thurman was to have addressed a meeting in New York last week, but was overtaken by illness and was carried to his hotel in a feeble condition. He has recovered his strength.—Yellow fever is epidemic and spreading in Jacksonville, Fla.—Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe is near death at North Haven, near Sag Harbor, Long Island. She is 77 years old.—James G. Blaine publishes an article in the American Magazine devoted to pointing out the errors into which he conceives President Cleveland has fallen in his recommendations touching tariff reform.—Lester Wallack, the eminent actor, died of apoplexy at Stamford, Conn., September 6.—Judge Ney, of Waterloo, Iowa, under the Iowa Prohibitory law, decides that a man cannot lawfully manufacture cider for use in his own family.

Bismarck is reported to have put a damper on Signor Crispi's plan for a war with France.—Michael Davitt, in a speech at Knockaroo, Ireland, last Sunday, said that the cry "Gloria Gladstone in Excelsis" had gone too far. The boasted alliance of the Liberals and Nationalists had proved to be a handcuff instead of a shield. Unless the Liberals did something to inspire confidence, the Irish would be compelled to adopt unconstitutional methods in dealing with the licensed agents of cruelty.—Twelve hundred spinners struck at Bolton, Eng., on the 6th.—Ouida, the novelist, has become religious. She spends her days in reading pious books and making long prayers. She even refuses to associate with worldly people. She is not devoted to any special denomination, but seems to be slowly forming a cult of her own.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

From the Utah Daily Union (Ogden).

Agnostic Hall was well filled with an intelligent audience of ladies and gentlemen last evening, all eager to hear Samuel P. Putnam, the much-talked-of advocate of Freethought, especially engaged in the work of absolute severance of church and state. Mr. Putnam, being introduced by Doctor Palmer, at once entered upon the work of Freethought, as he thought necessary for civilization. There are wrongs in the American republic. He is willing to agree to disagree. In Freethought no compulsion exists. Human right—liberty and justice—are all that is required. No arbitrary power for him. An extreme freedom where individuality has free play. The United States government has still been only an experiment. The fundamental principle is that the consent of the governed constitutes the government. This the speaker dwelt on forcibly. The rights of one man are equally strong to the rights of the many. "The state is not persuasion; it is force," said Washington. For the preservation of social order we have the state; only for the prevention of crime. Crime is the forcible invasion of another's rights. Then the prerogative of state comes in. Hence the function of state needs to be circumscribed. Sixty millions of people can no more pretend to impede the right of one, than one has the right to coerce sixty millions.

The speaker then went on at length on the demands of the American Secular Union, opposed to the "Religious Amendment Movement." There was danger of religious influences being thrown into the government in an undue manner. Church property should be taxed like any other property, otherwise there would be class legislation—an unconstitutional principle, robbery to help the churches. Garfield said that there should be an absolute divorcement of church and state. Grant also pointed out the danger of the exemption of church property, intimating that in A.D. 1900 there would be $3,000,000,000 of non-taxable reality. On this subject the speaker adduced statistics showing the enormous amount of untaxed ecclesiastical possessions.

He objected to army chaplains. One bullet in the battle was as good as all the prayers of a score of chaplains. Other state institutions, fostered by public moneys, part of which comes out of Freethought people's pockets, were also scorched by the speaker's scathing criticisms spreading over on the school management. The American public school system is the bulwark of American independence. It is to be free from hymns, litanies, and Bible readings. These latter may be retained in the homes, but are not to be allowed in public schools. No Christian clergyman would dare to read the whole Bible to his congregation.

Next the presidential and gubernatorial proclamations for Thanksgivings and other feasts or fasts were taken up and criticised, dropping in allusions to "the old savage barbaric practices of the Roman empire." These things were all farces—the oaths in judicial declarations also being held up as ineffectual proofs of honesty.

Loud applause responded to the speaker's denunciation of oaths. It is always MAN himself that will help himself, prevent crime, promote virtue, and advance human happiness.

The gentleman earnestly discussed the Sabbath question. There was to be, in his idea, a holiday, a "Sun" day, sunny for the enjoyment of art, nature, humanity, all the most intensified pleasures of pure manhood and womanhood. For all this he adduced the testimony of the records of early Christianity, tending to show that the obedience to the Sabbath laws was a yielding to Roman legislation, to Constantine, not to the principles of the republic. To-day we, American citizens, are still slaves to Roman imperialism, as shown by the fact that when the Fourth of July falls on a Sunday, the celebration day is put over to Monday. (Rapturous applause.) Religious persecution still prevails under this very great flag, ecclesiastical persecutions of the most hideous nature. See the experience of the Adventists of Arkansas and other states. Still there are in our land relics of barbaric fanaticism.

AN INCIDENT AT WALLA WALLA.

From the Statesman.

Baumeister's hall was filled last night by an intellectual audience to listen to the Liberal lecture of Samuel P. Putnam. A number of well-known religious people were in the audience. The lecturer was listened to with close attention, and frequently applauded. At the close Mr. Putnam announced that he was ready to meet any accredited minister of the gospel in this city in joint debate. He had no desire to enter upon a discussion with any one who indulged in personal abuse, but would be glad to meet any respectable representative of Christianity. At this point Professor Brock arose in the audience and stated that he understood from the papers that there was to be a gentleman present on this occasion to meet Mr. Putnam in joint debate, and desired to know if the other speaker was present. Sol Center stated that the announcement of a joint discussion between Mr. Putnam and Clark Braden was first published in the Journal without the authority of Mr. Putnam or his friends. He asked Mr. Besserer, who was present, to explain by whose authority he inserted the notice. Mr. Besserer said the announcement was handed in by a gentleman of this city, and he had given it space under the impression that it was all right. At this point a strange man arose from a front seat and stated that as soon as the present meeting was over he would reply to Mr. Putnam, and would like to have the audience remain and hear both sides. This man turned out to be Clark Braden, who is somewhat noted for his tilts with Liberal lecturers. Mr. Putnam stated that there would be a recess of fifteen minutes to enable the audience to examine his literature, when his use of the hall would cease. Hereupon H. Parker arose from his seat and inquired if he would be allowed to address a question to the lecturer, which was granted. Mr. Parker then said that inasmuch as the speaker had stated that he was formerly a minister, he would like to inquire if he was sincere in his belief at the time he was preaching. Mr. Putnam answered that he was. Mr. Parker then asked how he reconciled his past with his present course, to which the lecturer replied that he had learned something, and knew a great deal more now than he did then. Mr. Putnam then asked Mr. Parker if he was a Christian, and if he had been regenerated. Mr. Parker said if that was the answer he had nothing more to say. Sol Center spoke up and said that Mr. Parker had not been regenerated, as that was an absolute impossibility. The statement was loudly applauded, and Mr. Parker took his seat very much confused. After recess Mr. Braden took the platform, and devoted some time to answering Mr. Putnam, most of the audience remaining. Mr. Putnam quietly left the hall when Mr. Braden began. As a lecturer of the Secular Union, he some time since resolved never again to meet Mr. Braden in joint debate, on the ground that he descends to the lowest personal abuse, having attacked the character of Colonel Ingersoll's family. It is further claimed that he is a scoundrel, and not the accredited representative of the Christian religion.

A PIOUS CRANK.

A fellow calling himself Rev. Clark Braden made himself particularly obnoxious at Putnam's lecture by announcing that he would answer the speaker, obtruding his presence, interrupting the meeting by insulting remarks, placing himself in a conspicuous place, and making faces at the speaker and otherwise acting like a lunatic. We understand that he has been following Putnam and annoying him in this manner whenever the occasion presented itself. We are surprised at Putnam's forbearance toward him. The fellow is a little off in his head, or is a fanatic of the worst kind. In either case his bulldozing propensities should be checked. He should have been taken in charge by the officers of the law, and it is safe to say that he will be if he figures in a like manner in Union again. Had he been a gentleman, no doubt the audience would have stayed and listened to what he had to say, but as it was, they nearly all left when Mr. Putnam concluded his lecture.

We do not think that the church members or respectable people anywhere will sanction Mr. Braden's proceedings. The cause of Christianity has nothing to gain by it, and much to lose. Such an exhibition of overbearing intolerance only confirms the beholder in the pertinence of Mr. Putnam's remarks, and his mind involuntarily reverts to the rack and thumb-screws of the Inquisition, the bonfires made of heretics at Boston, and the Blue Laws at Connecticut.—Oregon Scout.

A DISSERTATION ON TALMAGE.

At Peeksville, T. DeWitt Talmage, in his sermon to the Thirteenth regiment of the New York state National Guards, preached about the "Uses of Stratagem," based on Joshua viii, 7, "Then ye shall rise up from the ambush and seize upon the city." Said he: "What are you reading? Bolingbroke? Andrew Jackson Davis's tracts? Tyndall's Glasgow University address? Drop that and run. You will be an Infidel before you die if you don't quit that. Turn your back on the rank and file of unbelief."

The reverend gentleman voices the truth when he says that by reading anti-religious works people will become Infidels, for just so soon as they throw aside prejudice, and begin to read and reason, the scales will fall from their eyes. The church always has tried to keep the people in ignorance; it will allow them to investigate only so far as science and logic can be kept in harmony with the Bible. It teaches that it is wicked to doubt and investigate.

The reverend gentleman knows that to investigate is to destroy faith in religion. He said: "I am always interested in the building of theatres, and the building of dissipating saloons. I like to have them built of the best granite, to have the rooms made large, to have the pillars made very firm. God is going to conquer them, and they will be turned into asylums and art galleries and churches." By this it would seem that Mr. Talmage prefers theatre-going to church-going, for indeed has there ever been one theatre turned into a church, or is there reason to believe there will be in the future? Are they going to force people to church by Sunday laws? Where does he get his authority for stating that God will turn these buildings into churches? He said further: "The wicked do not live out half their days. Some of them jump off the docks; some of them take prussic acid; some of them fall under the snap of a derringer pistol; some of them spend their last days in a lunatic asylum." Suppose we admit this; what do these wicked people read? Is it Infidel literature? Are they Infidels? What do they believe? They believe the Bible to be the inspired word of God. They read the Bible and trashy literature, if indeed they read anything. They believe in God and devil; they believe in heaven; they believe in hell. Let those who do not believe that but few Infidels are criminal, or inmates of prisons and asylums, read the statistics, where they will find that not more, perhaps, than five per cent are Infidels.

Mr. Talmage also said: "I answer, if the war was right, then Joshua was right in his stratagem." But was he right in taking the city of Ai, and other cities, together with the land of Canaan? No. It was not just to take, to steal by force, the land of peaceful nations, to murder innocent women and children, even if a revengeful, bloodthirsty God did direct a chosen people to do so.

More: "Oh that we all knew how to lie in ambush for opportunities to serve God. The best of our efforts do not lie on the surface, but are secreted, by tact, by stratagem, by Christian ambuscade, you may take almost any castle of sin for Christ. Oh, make a flank movement, steal a march on the devil, cheat that man into heaven."

The above tactics are the methods the church has ever been using in her warfare against Infidelity, against unbelief. She has used deceit, trickery, lying, and force. One of the fathers of the church said it was not improper to lie if it redounded to the honor and glory of the church. The church has, besides using stratagem and other means, resorted to burning at the stake, thumbscrews, the dungeon, war, and every means to put down unbelief, to "cheat men into heaven." It would seem, to read the history of the church, that no means are too despicable to be used to carry out her demands. I should think that stratagem and trickery in the church ought to cease in this enlightened age, in a land of telephones, telegraphs, railroads, and science. We want no more of Moses and Joshua's stratagem and warfare, rapine and plunder, for moral texts to befuddle men's minds that they throw aside the happiness of this life in hopes of another life beyond the grave.

I am glad to know that the reverend gentleman is so candid as to show up the church in its true light, but it would seem that the church is hard pushed for means upon which to work when it must use the methods of Joshua and the barbarous ages to gain its ends.

G. R. HIGGINS.

North Yamhill, Oregon.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

It is urged in both FREETHOUGHT and the Truth Seeker that women care too much for the church to make it wise to allow them to vote. It might also be said that they do much to prevent disestablishment in Great Britain, and that their votes would restore the papal power and destroy the French republic. But are these sufficient reasons for refusing them the ballot? Should we not put ourselves in a position too much like that of a clergyman who tells me that he don't want to have women interested in politics because that might make them care less for the church? Should I, who am a Democrat, be justified in keeping my neighbor from the polls, because he wants to vote against reducing the tariff? Should I keep my neighbor from the polls, because she wants to vote against Sunday amusements?

It is a question of justice, not expediency. But so far as our cause is concerned, we must remember that its ultimate success depends on our emancipating the women from clerical control, and that there is no surer way to accomplish this than to give them the ballot. Then they will come to read the same newspapers as men do, and thus they will soon adopt secular habits of thought. The press is the great secularizer, and the sooner women come under its influence, the better for them, as well as for all Liberal interests. My clerical friend is right in saying that if women go into politics they will soon go out of the church.

F. M. HOLLAND.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made the following lecture appointments from August to October. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Ottumwa . . . Iowa . . . Sept . . . 12 Pittsburgh, Pa. . . . . Sept. . . . 30
West Union . . . " . . . 16-17 Secular Union Congress, Oct. 5, 6, 7, 8
Chicago . . . Ill. . . . 23 New York . . . . . " . . . 12

To the Pacific Coast Bantling.

FREETHOUGHT! you're young, you're little, but, oh, my!
 You're "some," when "sand," esprit, and such are counted.
 Upon the steed of reason firmly mounted,
 The hordes of darkness will before thee fly!
 O gem—and then that other G. E. M.!—
 Of journals to the cause of truth devoted,
 Thou art upon the tide now fairly floated,
 And Superstition's current thou wilt stem.
 Speed on, O light of the Pacific coast—
 I'll bet on thee against the "Light of Asia,"
 Or light that lit the eye of fair Aspasia—
 And thou, ere many moons, shalt "rule the roost!"
 Mixed metaphor is this, without rebate,
 But then, who would forever "take it straight?"

SI SLOKUM.

LILIAN'S STORY.

We are pleased to again welcome our gifted young contributor to these columns. A story from her pen recently appeared in the New York Star, and it was feared that her old friends might be lost sight of amid the glitter of metropolitan journalism; but such is not the case. Lilian has dismissed the pen for the typewriter, and such inaccuracies as may be noted in the following composition are doubtless due to her imperfect control of that instrument. Her story is entitled:

NELLIE, S GOOD FOURCHUON

By Lilian Andrews age ii.

It was a nice day in Jun and Nellie had gone of on days rounds Nellie was a beger girl and t he old woman that she lived with was very crul and Nellie was thinking of runing away from her .herm other was died and her father was a drunkerd and gard nothing for her so in sted of beging she saiddo you want a little girl to help around. one old lady said yes child come in. the kind-old lady did not want any help but she wanted a little girlto live with for her hus band was at se a and she was alone wer is your mother ,?dead w er is lour father?he cars nothing for me who do you live withold maney gray but she is so crul to me pleas do not seand me back to hear why no of course not you shall stay with me and this is Neellies gkood for choun

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONGRESS A. S. U.*OFFICIAL CALL.

To the Local Secular Unions, Life, Charter, and Annual Members, and all Liberal citizens who support the Nine Demands of Secularism, Greeting:

You are hereby invited to attend the Twelfth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union, which will convene at Lafayette Hall, Wood street, near 4th, Pittsburgh, Pa., Friday, October 5, 1888, at 10 A.M., for a four days' session—5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th, inclusive.

All Charter and Life Members, all Vice-Presidents, all Chairmen of State Executive Committees, and all duly accredited delegates from Local Secular Unions are entitled to seats and votes in this Annual Congress. Each Local Secular Union is entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates. Annual Members who pay or have paid $1 in the national treasury are entitled to seats, but not to votes, except by unanimous consent of the Congress.

This Congress will especially consider practical questions tending to further agitation for the taxation of church property; the abrogation of state aid to sectarian institutions; abolition of state, national, military, and prison chaplaincies; repeal of all judicial oaths, Sunday and other oppressive and unjust ecclesiastical laws; nullification of attempts to subvert our Constitution by a legal recognition of Theism in the American Magna Charta, and such other measures as will not merely thwart intended theological encroachments, but absolutely expunge from our laws, state and federal, such insidious acts as have already crept in to blot out mental freedom from our republic.

It is to be hoped that the addresses delivered will deal with the practical issues of the organization, so that there will be such an awakening of the people to these vital questions of the hour that a revival of the instinct of liberty and justice for all will necessarily result; that again from the Keystone state—the birthplace of the association—the clarion voice of freedom shall reverberate throughout the land.

Pittsburgh being situated almost in the center of a district containing many of our most distinguished workers, thinkers, and writers, besides the active host within its limits, there is little doubt that this Congress will be a glorious gathering of the forces who stand for mental liberty, as expressed in the desire for a complete Secularization of the government.

S. P. PUTNAM, Pres., E. B. FOOTE, JR., Ch. Ex. Com.,
 E. A. STEVENS, Sec., MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com.,
 CHAS. ECKHARD, Treas.

THE RETURN TRIP.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places returning from the East:

Denver.....Col.,	Oct. 28	Spokane Falls...W. T.,	Nov. 14-16
Ogden.....Utah,	" 30-31	Davenport....."	" 17-19
M't'n Home...Idaho,	Nov. 2	Sprague....."	" 20-21
Boise City....."	" 3-4	Pasco....."	" 22-23
Emmetts....."	" 5-6	Portland.....Or.,	" 25-26
Pendleton.....Or.,	" 8-9	Vancouver.....W.T.,	" 27-28
Walla Walla...W. T.,	" 10-11	Scappoose....."	Dec. 2

It is desirable to announce the remainder of the appointments at the earliest possible moment. Will friends who wish lectures write at once to S. P. Putnam, care of E. A. Stevens, 741 Washington Boulevard, Chicago? Mr. Putnam will be in San Francisco and lecture here during the month of January.

EFFECT OF DRINK ON LIFE.

A report on the inquiry into the connection of disease with habits of intemperance, prepared by Dr. Isambard Owen, secretary of the investigation committee of the British Medical Association, gives some startling statistics for temperance people. Particulars have been obtained by the committee of 4,234 cases of deceased lives, aged 25 and upward, in which the habits of the person in regard to alcohol were recorded in five classes—total abstainers, habitually temperate, careless drinkers, free drinkers, and decidedly intemperate. The ages of death in each class show an average as follows: Total abstainers, 51.22 years; habitually temperate, 62.13; careless drinkers, 59.67; free drinkers, 57.59; decidedly intemperate, 52.03. This makes the lowest average duration of life that of the teetotaler, and the highest that of the moderate drinker, his average being nearly eleven years longer.

The habitual drunkard averages about a year longer than the total abstainer. Another table prepared by the committee, from which all deaths under 30 were excluded, showed the following durations of life: Total abstainers, 57.31; habitually temperate, 66.48; careless drinkers, 61.52; free drinkers, 58.87; decidedly intemperate, 53.42. Omitting lives under 40 years, the average age of death was: Total abstainers, 62.74 years; habitually temperate, 67.71; careless drinkers, 64.45; free drinkers, 61.90; decidedly intemperate, 57.47.—London Times.

THE Oregon Scout gives the lecture at Union, Or., this kindly notice:

"Mr. Samuel P. Putnam, president of the American Secular Union, and editor of the San Francisco FREETHOUGHT, delivered a lecture at the court house in this city on the 16th inst. which was largely attended, many people coming from the country to hear him. Mr. Putnam has few equals as a debater, and at times rises to heights of superb oratory. Like Ingersoll he is ever kind, courteous, and gentlemanly in debate, granting to those who differ from him the free and unrestricted exercise of their rights, but putting in sledge-hammer blows at what he conceives to be myths and superstitions of the age. In Mr. Putnam the Liberals have a powerful friend and ally."

The Telocasset correspondent of the Scout adds:

"Many of our citizens attended the lecture in Union last week, and came home well satisfied with Putnam as an orator, and well disgusted with Braden as a genuine cur."

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Arriving at Ilwaco, at the mouth of the Columbia river, north side, we (Dr. Taylor, who is traveling with me and who is my right bower, he being a sterling Liberal) found a quiet retreat at the Central House with Fred Colbert, a sturdy German, and Freethought all over. Ilwaco is a neat, small fishing town situated on Baker's Bay, about one mile from the ocean, whose ceaseless roar is ever in our ears. Near here is Fort Canby, also the government light-house, Cape Disappointment, a high, rocky promontory, jutting far out into the sea, or rather between the sea and river. The view from this high cape is grand and magnificent in the extreme, and is worth a journey of many hundred miles. The illimitable ocean, in its infinite and ever-moving grandeur, rolls in its huge, foam-capped billows almost with earthquake force against the rocky sides of this wind-swept and wave-washed mountain-side, while the majestic Columbia, by far the largest river on this coast, some ten miles wide at the mouth, comes rushing from the snowy peaks of the Cascades and old Rockies on the east, to mingle its waters with those of the mighty Pacific. It needs a poet's pen to describe this lovely spot on a calm, summer's day, and yet, for majestic beauty, one must view it when this vast waste of waters is lashed into a demon of fury by the storm king's awful wrath; then the rocks tremble, the very mountain quivers, and it seems that all must go down in a crash together. But nature took her own time to lay the foundations for these bold cliffs and mighty forests, and they yield but slowly to the destructive agencies ever at work. It almost seems I could lie here and dream forever, with the winds and rushing tides, the wash of the rippling river, the murmuring of the forest leaves, and the sweet scented wind from across the heaving bosom of the billowy deep. Oh, there is nothing grander than nature, for it is all there is except the puny works of man. Then let us turn the leaves of the mighty volume she has bound, and study well the hieroglyphics she has penciled on its glowing pages, and let the bibles of all and any age, like the dead mummies of a dead past, rest undisturbed until the accumulated dust of the quick-rolling years shall forever hide them from our view.

I gave five lectures in Ilwaco to good and eager audiences, and was well paid for them. There are a number of beautiful homes here, and it is a quiet retreat where peace and plenty prevail, far removed from the busy haunts of the city. I met here Isaac Wheeldon and wife, W. W. Ward and wife, Fred Colbert and wife, T. Alexander and wife, Mr. Bates, etc., all good Liberals or Spiritualists, who only need organizing to become enthusiastic workers. Let our lecturers make a note of this. Bidding good-bye to these newly-found, but ever to be remembered friends, we engaged a team of our landlord to take us up the beach twenty miles north to this city of clams and oysters, arriving in time for dinner at the Pacific House, where we soon found we had "struck oil," several copies of the Truth Seeker being scattered around. Mr. Mathews, the landlord here, is a lively, jolly, whole-souled radical, who thinks Ingersoll is "chief among ten thousand" and the greatest man America has ever produced, and he is about right there. We have feasted on clam chowder, clam soup, fried clams, oysters stewed, raw, fried, fricasseed, oyster pie, oysters on the half-shell, endwise, sidewise, live and kicking, and slept on the shells, until I feel if I stay here much longer I shall cease to be a Liberal and turn to a bivalve myself, and grow a shell around me to keep out all sinful influences, like the priestly web of some of our churches, the close-communion Baptists for instance, or the Holiness folks, who think they are so shut in by divine love that they can not sin.

I have given four lectures here in the M. E. church, a very neat and cosy place, which was freely granted for the purpose, and I shall ever kindly remember my Christian friends for their liberality to us while here. It is not often thus, so I feel it all the more. May their god bless them, and so will I so far as I am able. I had good audiences and good pay, and leave a host of friends behind. Oysterville is built on the sands of Shoal-water Bay, about two miles from the ocean, and is the seat of Pacific county. Shoal-water Bay is some ten miles across and some twenty-five to thirty miles long, and is, as its name implies, a very shallow bay; fully one half of it being a sand-bar at low tide. This "city" is situated upon a peninsula twenty miles long and two miles wide running up to here from Ilwaco.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

Oysterville, W. T.

The Case of Harman and Walker.

Dear Friends:

We have only a few weeks left in which to work for the help of Harman and Walker, who are indicted for printing a few greatly needed facts on scientific sexual physiology; though really not a lewd word or idea can be found in the three articles in which the two hundred and seventy counts are made.

It is simply because the pious, priest-ridden clan are determined to kill every Liberal paper they can, and imprison and fine every radical publisher, that these men are really in the toils of the enemy. It is evident that the Comstock crew are hard up for victims when they base charges on such noble and good works as those articles in Lucifer prove to be. To any one seeing with half an eye, it is plain that it is personal glory, honor, and fees the enemy want, and in the effort to obtain them they will strain every nerve to make white appear black and the truth seem a lie.

I ask you to come forward, one and all, with your dollars and dimes, and "hang the wretches." That is, hang the whole Comstock clan (morally). Crush them so utterly that they shall never again dare arrest a Liberal and reformer in the name of obscenity, simply because they are powerless to do so in the name of religion—for it is really Freethought that the Comstock law is aimed at. Comstock himself declared this to be so years ago, and his conduct since has proved that he meant it.

Not one of you who read this but is able to send at least ten cents for the dime defense fund. Blackberries are selling here at two cents a quart, and I would tramp the fields and roadsides and gather a dime's worth, if I could not raise my donation any easier way. To all who will send me a dime and three cents for postage I will send a blade of ribbon grass as a souvenir, or a lithograph photo of "Aunt Elmina," or of her granddaughter, "Little Mattie." I want five hundred donations before the trial. I have received one hundred and sixty donations, besides what was sent directly to Harman and Walker for my dime fund. Each donor will also have his name and address placed in the list of honor in my ledger, and will receive a copy of Lucifer and Fair Play, two excellent radical papers. And then the great honor of helping in so great a work will be yours forever and forever.

I hope my letter box will be brimful and running over every day between now and the trial. I am proud of my friends, but I want to be still more proud of them, and believe I shall be so each coming mail. We cannot do too many good deeds. Life is so short. Let us try hard to accomplish a little ere it is too late.

"Every good thought ever spoken,
Every grand deed ever done,
Is a fresh sword making surer
That the conquest will be won;
Conquest over superstition
That hath ruled and ruined so long,
Conquest of the captive peoples
Over mailed and mitred wrong,
In its palaces of splendor,
And its forts and bulwarks strong."

Snowville, Va., Aug. 29, 288.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

Dr. Chapman Replies to Mr. E. F. Munn.

To the Editors of Freethought:

So I have found a foeman at the plow in Utah. It is very strange that he should quit it, as the time might have been useful in growing some raw material, wheat perhaps, and selling it in the market of the world without protection, at, likely, fifty cents per bushel. Now look here, Mr. Plowman, do you see my plug hat? It cost me four dollars, and I paid for it in wheat at half a dollar per bushel. It was made in London, so the label inside of it says, and to my personal knowledge they are sold at retail for eight to ten shillings there, and two bushels, or less, of wheat pays the purchase, and, of course, if I had purchased an American hat the price would have been the same, for that is what the tariff is for. Now it appears to me that I am six bushels of wheat, or three more hats, the loser. And why am I to be punished in that way? Is it because I have been brave enough to face all the difficulties of a new life on the prairie and thus leave room for another in the East, already crowded? And it would have availed me nothing to have left my wheat in New York, except to have glutted the market and reduced the price, while the hat would have been the same price if one foreign hat had been admitted to duty in the whole nation.

Now here is the simple fact, and it is so simple that millions fail to see it. The hatter and the shoemaker and the cloth maker are protected alike, so when they deal with each other they are even, before the law, all sharing alike in the advantage, but when the ignorant Western farmer steps in to purchase of either of them he is fleeced by law. The story of the hat is not only a fact but applies to all other goods in a greater or lesser degree, as the law differs; and thus it is that the West and South without factories suffer, while the factory states save millions, plundered from us, and send it West and get our obligations in exchange, we paying interest on our own money. As to sending ox hides to Europe, I did not name the absurdity, and it is not done and never can be; the hides are tanned here and the leather sent there. There is this point to notice, that the purchaser of the foreign goods pays the expenses of the government, and thus places the protectionist in the situation of the hell-fire preacher: if he succeeds his game is up. If the preacher should convert all the people his trade is gone; and if the protectionist could succeed the manufacturer is beaten at his own game. Can you see it?

Now about the ignorance. I have worked in Europe and America; I have been in the forest, in the field, in the mines, and in the factories, and I say without a ghost of a fear of successful contradiction, the abundance of ignorance is in the latter places. But I expect to be told that these are ignorant and improvident foreigners. Now I ask the good reader to look around him wherever he may be and see if it is the American or foreigner that is in a dependent condition. I stake ten to one the foreigner is the best off under equal circumstances, as whatever the foreigner may lose in book learning he makes up in industry and economy, and this industrial wealth business is all the question at issue.

My critic, Mr. Munn, says we Americans are the most ingenious people that ever lived, because we have more sense than any other people that he ever happened to meet. Mr. Munn, you are using the laws, language, and literature of England. Why did not your great genius invent better? Do you know that these same institutions have encircled the globe, and are fast permeating every country on earth? If American genius is so great, why are Americans the greatest purchasers of foreign products, and why do eighty thousand Americans cross the ocean every year? Perhaps you will say they go as teachers; if so, they come back taught. And did the Americans, on their own soil, carry off all the awards at the Centennial exhibition in 1876, or at New Orleans two years ago, and does not England; a free trade country, do fifty per cent of the commerce of the world? You add, to finish, "because we have more sense than any people that I ever happened to meet." I grant you the correctness of every word of that sentence. GEO. W. CHAPMAN, M. D.

Cawker City, Kan.

Our Inconsistency Pointed Out.

AN OPEN NOTE TO THE EDITOR OF FREETHOUGHT, ALIAS THE MAN WITH A BADGE-PIN, ALIAS "ZENO."

To the Editors of Freethought:

In FREETHOUGHT of August 18 I was pleased to read these kindly words in an article entitled "A Cloud Lifted:" "It is with considerable grief that I have read of late the published reports attacking the character of my friend W. R. Colby, the slate-writer . . . I have taken no stock in the reports, and have not printed them, though they have been forwarded to this office for that purpose from various quarters. I would rather publish a two column vindication than a stickful of accusation any time." And I said, "What noble sentiments! How I wish all editors were so conscientious." But then I remembered sadly that only two weeks before, in the issue of the 4th, two whole pages were devoted to a matter that he knew no more about than he did of Brother Colby's, and it was not sent to the office from various quarters for publication, but was copied from another paper of his own free will. And then our worthy editor, over the word "Zeno," sets up a man of straw, and gives him a serious drubbing, thereby showing his ignorance of the man, his methods and manners. He has never heard him and is therefore incapable of expressing an opinion from knowledge. But does he know that the earnest labors of Doctor York, from Nainaimb to San Diego for the past eighteen years, have made it possible to establish a Freethought paper on this coast, and not the flying trip of S. P. Putnam? Doctor York was sowing the seeds of mental liberty before Mr. Putnam was a reverend in the church. Mr. Bennett said Doctor York had sent him more subscribers and money than any other lecturer in the field. He has no fears for his standing; his work speaks for him. The Salt Lake tempest in a teapot has no foundation. I have listened to nearly every lecture for the last three years until the last winter, and I know that he never carries his coat-tails under his arms; his backward and forward kicks, etc., are denied. But an unsuccessful man makes no enemies.

Yours for truth,

MRS. J. L. YORK.

[Our correspondent will please notice that nearly all of the two pages complained of are devoted to a vindication of the committee of the Secular Union at Salt Lake City from the charges brought against its members by Doctor York's friend Wellock. If we were inclined to attack Doctor York we might make effective use of information not as yet laid before the public. The matter was copied from another paper, partly by request but mainly on account of its interesting nature.—ED. FREETHOUGHT.]

Is Controversy Dangerous?

NUMBER II.

If it is dangerous to Christianity, then is the Christian religion doomed to die. If controversy is not dangerous, why do not the Christian clergy engage in it more generally? And why do not the laity everywhere encourage controversy? We have heard the boast in the pulpit and through the religious press: "Christianity has met and conquered every foe!" According to the Christians' own report its victories are numerous as the sands of the sea-shore. The time was when Christians had the courage of their convictions; when such grand old leaders of thought as John Milton brandished their polemical swords and cried out for the enemies of Christianity to "come on!" Said John Milton: "Give me the liberty to know, to utter, and argue freely according to conscience, above all liberties." Yes, said he: "Let truth and error grapple; who ever knew truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter?"

The man or woman that talks that way now-a-days is called an Infidel.

Bishop Watson joins Milton by saying: "Whoever is afraid of submitting a question, civil or religious, to the test of discussion seems to me to be more in love with his own opinion than with the truth."

What a terrible rebuke that is to the Christian church! But, then, we must remember when that was penned Christianity was full of courage—such as it was, physical, blood-letting courage. Neither Milton nor Watson ever dreamed that Christianity would cower in abject fear and with palsied hand try to stifle free discussion. Is not the church "more in love with its own opinion than with the truth?" Is it not everywhere, with rare exceptions, "afraid of submitting . . . to the test of free discussion?" Where does it challenge, "Let truth and error grapple?"

Now listen to an Infidel, Thomas Jefferson: "Error of opinion may be safely tolerated when truth is left free to combat it."

Historians, by instinct, as it were, are on the side of mental freedom. Said J. D. Morrel, author of "History of Modern Philosophy:" "Discussion is the only bulwark of truth—the only antagonist of dogmatism—the only handpost that points us perpetually along the pathway of moderation, which is most commonly the path of truth."

"The liberty of discussion is the great safe-guard of all other liberties," exclaims Macaulay.

Coming from England to America, we find Dr. James Rush, son of Dr. Benjamin Rush, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, on the side of Freethought. Said he: "Temperate, sincere, and intelligent inquiry and discussion are only to be dreaded by the advocates of error."

But the Christian church, like the Priest and Levite, is on the "other side." A few splendid men and women in the church, whose love of truth is superior to their admiration or religious worship, shine out glorious exceptions amid the gloom of the dark ages. W. F. JAMIESON.

Monte Vista, Colorado.

KIND FRIEND: If you receive a sample copy of this issue of FREETHOUGHT, please regard it as an invitation to subscribe—and accept the invitation. One subscription, $2; two subscriptions, $3; three subscriptions, $4; four subscriptions, $5.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 339 Eddy st., S. F.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History, of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including various notes by Guizot, Wenck, Millman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 884 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S
GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in:

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months.
50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine
paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents;
paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS.

By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of half a million to be the most popular readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made available to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

For the Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS, CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.

31 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,

(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)

TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17,
$18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4,
being only $25 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best
14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest
style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38.
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case.
Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1;
best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set
best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12.
Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free
BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
BADGE in PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of cut and smaller.
two-thirds size. War-
ranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2.75, $3.50. Large,
$5 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $8, $10, and
charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.

OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

"Sum Walfisch."

THE WHALE

CHAS. A. JONAS, Proprietor.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars,

Cold Lager and Sharp Steam Beers.

24 THIRD ST., Near Market,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

JOHN WIELAND'S

Lager Bier
IS THE BEST.

CALL FOR IT.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert
G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

F. SANGROVE, Merchant Tailor.

LATE OF LONDON AND PARIS,

All imported goods. Orders promptly attended. Prices moderate. Cleaning and repairing
neatly done.

Ladies' Cloaks and Riding Habits a Specialty.

F. SANGROVE, 104 FIFTH ST.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say
infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to
those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior
Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address
Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San
Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS,
the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author.
Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 38.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.
GEO. E. MACDONALD, }

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - SEPTEMBER 22, 1888

THE clergy on every hand are working for our welfare in the next world. The politicians are looking out for our interests here. We ought to be happy.

THE programme of the Chicago Polytechnic Society, an organization having in view the providing of free Sunday lectures on moral and intellectual subjects, is made interesting by the announcement that Gen. M. M. Trumbull, Wm. Zimmerman, Dr. E. S. McLeod, and other members of the Chicago Secular Union will speak from its platform. The Polytechnic Society began its meetings September 2, how auspiciously we are not as yet informed.

THE pope's decision that the Knights of Labor are not an anti-Catholic organization, in spite of the mandement issued against them by Cardinal Taschereau of Canada, will not raise that order in the estimation of American citizens. What is wanted just now is an organization whose members shall not only renounce allegiance to the Catholic church, but denounce it as what it is, the enemy of education and liberty, and the arch conspirator against a secular and free government.

OF all employees of the city, perhaps the most deserving, the teachers, have to wait for their salaries. Some have been waiting since July, 1886, and have been forced to get their warrants "shaved" by money brokers. There are charges that the schools are controlled by a ring, and that not merit but a diploma from a certain normal school, regardless of merit, constitutes a teacher's qualification to get employment under the school boards of the state; nevertheless the laborer is worthy of his promised hire.

WHEN we read of the "fall of a priest" the first thought is that the descent has been caused by some disregard of the moral law rather than the law of gravitation. Such was not the case with the Rev. Father Richardson at Dubuque, Iowa, who on the 12th instant fell from the window of his hotel and was killed. He was a somnambulist. Those who mourn his untimely taking-off may still solace themselves with the assurance that the fall of the sparrow is noted by the All-seeing Eye, though exactly how Father Richardson, or even the sparrow, is benefited by that reflection is not in anywise apparent.

A CATHOLIC priest named Rodriguez is on trial at Buenos Ayres for murdering his wife and child. He had been an apostate to Protestantism, and had married, but he deserted his wife, and the archbishop of Buenos Ayres took him back into the Roman Catholic fold. His wife, it appears, followed him; he lived with her, and a child was born. Last May he murdered them both, and, when exposed, gave as the main reason for the deed her inclination to live in his house, which, he being a priest, was not permissible. Such is the Catholic priesthood.

THE Rev. J. S. Hughes is the Prohibition candidate for governor of Indiana, and the Rev. Ira J. Chase is the Republican nominee for lieutenant-governor, and the fact that these brethren are ministers in the Christian or Campbellite church does not make them any more harmonious. The Rev. Mr. Hughes is especially bitter. He charges, it is said, that the Rev. Mr. Chase is an unmitigated rascal and a blasphemer, and the latter merely retorts that if his opponent chooses to hold that view there is no law to prevent it. It is a notable fact that when ministers enter politics they usually bring with them an element of personality that quite silences the barbaric yawp of the professional politician.

JUDGE MAGUIRE has just rendered a decision which may stand as a precedent in any other cases of the kind that may arise. It appears that several powder companies entered into an agreement regulating the sale and price of powder in certain states and territories, forming what is generally called a "trust." Several of the companies, it is alleged, failed to observe the agreement, and suit was brought to restrain them. The defendants demurred, and Judge Maguire sustained the demurrer. In his decision he said: "I am of the opinion that the contract sued upon is, as to its evident purpose, a contract for the restraint of trade and therefore contrary to public policy and void."

NEWS AND NOTES.

If it were always summer time in Nebraska, what a lovely country it would be! The bright air, the golden harvest, mingling with verdant groves, the beautiful cornfields that wave like an ocean; these make an entrancing picture. It is no wonder that people throng to this land, and that wealth increases.

Seward partakes of the general prosperity. Another railroad has been built, and canneries and factories are established, and there is a new church, also, called the "broad-gauge" church, and also the "Grasshopper." It is said that a good deal of money that went into the church was made at the time of the grasshopper plague by the foreclosure of mortgages on farms, stock, houses, furniture, etc., when hundreds had to borrow at high rates of interest, and could not pay, and so the church was built out of the proceeds of this usury, and hence the name, "Grasshopper church." Such is Christianity. It sells the home of the poor man and builds a temple to the Lord.

It is always pleasant to come to Seward. There are staunch Liberals here, although fashion goes the other way, and many so-called Liberals drift with the tide and seem careless of impending issues. Only a few take the laboring oar. I suppose that this is the way of all reform. A half dozen in each place must bear the brunt of the battle. The masses are indifferent. Well, this only makes it more imperative for the few to stand together and not give up. Something must be done, even if only one or two are ready to take the burden. If there is no forward movement then there is a backward. So we must keep right at the head, however the tide of battle rolls.

I am at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Moffitt, where the sunshine falls on the grass and amid the bright shadows of the singing trees. Here I spend happy days, for not one cloud of superstition is in the air. There is no praying to the wind, and the ghosts haunt not the fireside. Simple humanity and clear-eyed science are the divinities here. The Christians regard Moffitt as a kind of curiosity, because he is an honest Infidel. They don't understand it. It is hard for them to realize that one can disbelieve in the Bible and do right. If Moffitt should commit a murder they would understand it, for that would be according to their faith, but when it is found that Infidels are more trustworthy than the Christian, evidently the facts don't fit the faith and there is a serious shock, and somehow a "devil of a thinking," and so the world moves. Even Christians begin to see things as they are.

I enjoy myself in this Freethought home. Mr. and Mrs. Moffitt are genial comrades, heart and soul with the struggles and hopes of this present world. Here they find duty and destiny, and so this earth is rich with promise, as the golden days fly by.

Our good old friend, H. L. Boyes, is on the sick list this time and unable to attend the lectures, but I have had the pleasure of a short visit at his home. Mrs. Boyes has had experience with Christian science cure, and has derived some benefit, but for all that she discovers that it is not a "Christian" but a natural power of the mind. Our friends in this home are always bright and cheerful. There are children and grandchildren gathering about them in the summer's light, and whatever the end may be, it is clothed in the beauty of life and there is no terror. We hope we shall meet again though age may come, for in the mind one will not grow old, but live and hope for many bright to-morrows.

G. Babson, president of the Union at Seward, is always busy, for he has more to do, I guess, than any other citizen, in keeping things going both day and night. The electric light, the canneries, the lock factory, besides his own big establishment of agricultural implements, keep him always on the move. He is a live Infidel, but the Christians like to do business with him. He won't contribute a cent to the support of the churches, but is generous to help those who are in need. He believes in making this world as much of a paradise as possible, and then the next world will be all right when we get there. I am glad to announce that he will be present at the Pittsburgh Congress, and we could not have a better representative of the Liberalism of Nebraska. Notwithstanding the indifference of many, I think that Seward will keep the fires of Freethought above the steeples of the churches.

My veteran friend, Mr. McKillup, is over eighty years of age, and has never had a sick day in his life, nor a doctor to attend him, nor a preacher either. He is a good, sound, solid, sensible Infidel, and looks as if he would pass the hundredth milestone with unflinching step. W. D. Bowers and my friend McIntyre are as prosperous as ever, since they do not depend upon sky-pilots, but upon the real world, and are ready to do their duty in the Republic of Liberty.

I gave three lectures. I did not have full houses, but the audiences were appreciative, and so I am not discouraged. The churches here are so liberal that it is pretty hard work to make any issue with them. They are mostly broad-gauge, and all sorts of sinners can come in simply by paying the pew rent. When things are so easy, many are indifferent. Nevertheless, the iron hand of orthodoxy is in the midst of the flowers.

Mrs. Freeman was here last winter and made quite a stir, which has not died out yet. The clergymen, especially, were set on edge, and attempted a reply. They got along quite satisfactorily to themselves on the god question, but when it came to "his satanic majesty" they gave up in despair. "Why don't God kill the devil?" was beyond their logic.

Mr. and Mrs. McKillup, H. P. Brandes, Herbert Perine, Wm. Knight, and others, join our phalanx here, and the word is onward.

The cars are decked with harvest splendors as they go, singing and rattling, on to the great state fair at Lincoln. They have big fairs in Nebraska. It is a big state, and it does shine with magnificent products. It is like going through fairy-land to travel it now, there seems to be such a world of happiness and prosperity on every side. The groves glisten like jewels, and a green and golden carpet spreads beneath.

Friends S. B. Timmons—formerly of Ottumwa, where he kept the flag flying with our good host there—and John B. Johnstone, secretary of the Secular Union, met me at the station. Lincoln is the capital of Nebraska, with forty-five thousand inhabitants, and rapidly growing. It has some elegant structures. Crowds are coming to the state fair, and the scene is animated. Nevertheless the heavy shadows of orthodoxy rest upon this fair capital. I gave two lectures, afternoon and evening. A good number were present. A beginning is made. There ought to have been an audience of a thousand. Evidently only the pioneers were out this time, but I believe they will keep moving on. L. W. Billingly, one of the prominent citizens and officials of Lincoln, introduced me. He has long been in the front rank of Radicalism and is not afraid to declare his opinions. He made a short speech which gave the key-note to the meeting. Mr. Samuel McConega, an "old-timer," introduced me in the evening, with hopeful words. Altogether the meetings were a greater success than might be expected in such a stronghold of theology. There are over fifty churches in the city. The temperance people, working as usual the "religious racket," held meetings in opposition to our own, and the Salvation Army, a thousand strong, in brand new uniforms, paraded the streets. I was hailed, as I entered the door of the hall, by an emissary of the Y. M. C. A., who gave me a card of invitation to their rooms. The ecclesiastical forces are active at this point. However, our little company don't propose to give up the fight. Mr. Geo. B. Scott, Mr. Al Gowe, A. W. Day, Dr. and Mrs. Bumstead, Mr. and Mrs. McConega, Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Kostka, Mr. Astley, O. E. Goodell, Wm. Trumble, and many others, are thoroughly enlisted in the cause. They believe in it, and don't propose to let the church run this world and the next too. The Republic of Humanity is what they would build in the golden to-morrow of a free and happy human race.

I leave Nebraska with bright hopes. It is a wonderful and growing state. It offers a wide field for effort. The Secular lecturer could find work to do at almost every point. However, it is for the future one must labor, and not for the present only.

Freethought is of slow growth. The wilderness is not passed and the shadows are heavy to the enthusiastic heart. One expects a quick response, so mighty and so glorious seems the truth, but the sun shines on many a dreary field, and the columns must press on.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Lincoln, Neb., Sept. 10, 1888.

"THE SABBATH IMPOSTURE."

With this title we have just issued in neat pamphlet form the series of essays by Harry Hoover which appeared in FREETHOUGHT under the head of the "Holy Sabbath." It is a thorough exposure and refutation of the claim that Sunday is the Sabbath or that it was ever established or observed as a holy day previous to Constantine. It proves, in fact, what everybody ought to know, that Sunday observance is an infringement of liberty, unauthorized by even the founders of the church, and, like the rest of the religious system, an impudent humbug.

The pamphlet sells for 10 cents.

THE COURT OF TRIAL.

There are many points at issue between the Freethinkers and the religionists of this quarter of the globe. The Freethinkers are aware of the fact, and for years they have been stating their objections to Christianity and challenging the supporters of that system to debate; and, so far as possible, these objections have been totally ignored by the religionists, who, intrenched in long ages of ignorance, backed by wealth and fashion, protected by law, and freed of the burdens of the state, feel themselves secure from attack. Occasionally, it is true, one ventures forth to "answer" a Freethought lecturer after he is out of hearing, and some of them have had the valor to cross swords with our champion, Robert G. Ingersoll, but the success of these, we infer, has not been sufficiently flattering to encourage others to emulate their example.

In view of the general reticence of the clergy about debating the question, and in view of their disposition to make indiscriminate charges against Freethought without taking the trouble to prove any of them, we have proposed to bring the matter to an issue by establishing a Court of Trial, and it may as well be held in San Francisco as elsewhere, because here are to be found some of the ablest representatives of both sides; if not, they may be called hither at short notice.

We propose, as heretofore stated, to engage a hall and turn it into a court room. A committee shall appoint a chairman to act as judge. The Christian gentlemen who occupy the pulpits of our city are invited to draw up an indictment against unbelief—i.e., against Freethought and materialistic science—setting forth their objections to the same. They shall act as prosecutors; the Freethinkers will argue for the defense.

It is possible that the clergy will not move in the matter, in which case an indictment will be drawn against religion, and they will be called upon to show cause why they should not be condemned as preachers of false doctrine and deceivers of the people. They may choose their own witnesses, and great latitude will be accorded them in their methods of defense—such, for instance, as the introduction of the testimony of the patriarchs and evangelists. If they shall be able to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the Pentateuch was written by Moses, then the Pentateuch will be admitted to evidence. If they shall make it clear above uncertainty that the gospels were penned by the men to whom they are now attributed, then the testimony of the writers shall be given such weight as Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John's reputation for veracity entitles them to.

It has long been believed that the phenomena of Spiritualism would be the last retreat of religionists in support of their doctrines of miracles, revelations, a future life, and other dogmas of the church. In consideration of this fact, it is proposed that the clergy shall be allowed to strengthen their cause by such aid as they may be able to obtain from this source. A materialized prophet, patriarch, or evangelist would certainly be of value to them, and would be an interesting feature of the trial.

Having in mind the great benefits inuring to religion in the event of a decision favorable to the church, we fail to see how the clergy can conscientiously shrink from this trial. Freethinkers, being in search of the truth, assuredly will not.

DEATH OF RICHARD A. PROCTOR.

Another man who could ill be spared by the world has gone from his field of usefulness in the prime of life. Such a man was Richard A. Proctor, who succumbed to yellow fever in New York on the 12th inst.

Though Mr. Proctor was a delver and searcher for scientific truth, he was first of all an interpreter to the people of such facts as they could not understand when presented to them in the terms of specialists. He was an astronomer; he wrote many books and essays to popularize the discoveries of others; he discussed scientifically nearly every question in which the studious public mind is interested. He abandoned somewhat the field of original discovery, but he thereby only increased his usefulness. Between the specialist and the people he was the mediator, and he was pre-eminently the "popular scientist" of this time.

Furthermore, Mr. Proctor was a Freethinker. In the recent discussion between Ingersoll and the lights of the church he took the side of the truth. Formerly a Roman Catholic, he so far liberated himself from the dogmas of that church as to be able to say:

"I can for my own part be patient with the poor savages who pictured gods savage and unreasoning as themselves; but I must confess I sympathize in my heart of hearts with Colonel Ingersoll when he loses all thought of reverential calm in contemplating the ways of men who in these days of a higher and purer morality can speak otherwise than with horror of the being pictured as the God of Abraham, the God of Moses, and the God of Jephthah. Of what use is the evolution of morality if we are to hold by the teachings of the morality of savage times? And in what way shall men who love mercy, who as fathers seek their children's love, speak of a conception of the God which while calling him our father pictures him as mercilessly seeking his children's lives?"

"Where is the greater irreverence, in saying, 'These are God's words and therefore I will take them to heart, though they seem to present God as a terrible, nay horrible being,' or in saying, 'These words picture God as cruel and unjust, therefore they cannot be God's words—it were blasphemy to deem them such?'"

"The time will come when the teachings which seem to Mr. Gladstone wanting in reverence will be more justly valued. Hypocrisies and cruelties, which are now regarded as the expression of religious fervor, will be seen in their true light, and utterances warm from a tender and generous heart against the cruelty and intolerance born of superstition, will be seen to be the expression of the truest reverence, to teach the worthiest religion of which man is capable."

Mr. Proctor was a native of England, having been born at Chelsea, March 23, 1837. He was therefore but 51 years of age. He had made no preparations for death, as he needed none. His works were his confession of faith and his absolution, and they have won for him the everlasting gratitude of mankind, which, so far as we can know, is the only immortality possible or worth attaining.

ALL THAT WE CLAIM.

In President Cleveland's letter accepting the renomination for the presidency of the United States occur these words:

"While heavy burdens incident to the necessities of government are uncomplainingly borne, light burdens become grievous and intolerable when not justified by such necessities."

It is from this point of view that the Secular party has been arguing for the past dozen years. A Secularist, so far as we have knowledge of the matter, pays his legitimate taxes as uncomplainingly as other citizens. He recognizes, however, that the exemption of church property from taxation throws an increased burden upon his own. To this increased burden he objects from principle. The burden, though slight, is intolerable; hence he demands that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.

The Secularist observes also that money is yearly appropriated from state and national treasuries for the salaries of chaplains in various public departments. If the burden were incident to the necessities of government he would not complain, but as it is not he demands that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

He sees that money drawn from his pocket by taxation goes to the maintenance of religious asylums, colleges, and other sectarian institutions where religious instruction forms a large portion of the curriculum, and he therefore demands that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

The Secularist knows that a portion of the time of school teachers whose salary he is taxed to pay is spent in reading or listening to the reading of the Jewish and Christian scriptures. The burden is light, but being unnecessary to the requirements of government he protests, and demands that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

He notices with regret that sundry holy, fast, or festival days are set apart by the executive authorities for holidays, upon which public officials perform no service but draw full pay. He would not begrudge the slight sum which this costs him except that a principle of Secular government is violated; so he demands that the appointment by the president of the United States, or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

He observes that in our temples of justice the state prescribes certain religious formulas for the use of witnesses. The expense may be small; nevertheless, since the obligation is a superstitious incantation and not a necessity of government, he demands that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation, under the pains and penalties of perjury, shall be established in its stead.

In the great majority of the states of this Union the Secularist is by law forbidden to use the seventh part of his own time as he shall elect. He may not labor and earn his daily wage upon the first day of the week. He therefore emphatically demands that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

The Secularist has learned by sad experience in courts and jails that he may not promulgate a purer system of morality than that indorsed by the church; that the abuses sanctioned by theology must not be attacked and exposed; that if his ethical standard is a natural and not a religious one, the laws of the country may be invoked to arrest, fine, and imprison him. In this case the burden, while not incident to the necessities of government, is both grievous and intolerable, and he voices his protest in the demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

Finally, in view of all these various methods by which the expense of supporting religious institutions is forced upon him, he demands, as a settlement of the whole question, that not only in the Constitution of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely Secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

For this the Secularist labors, for this he speaks and writes; and it is a source of gratification to him that even after so many years of effort the chief executive of a nation numbering nearly sixty millions of people should so far agree with him as to admit that "while heavy burdens incident to the necessities of the government are uncomplainingly borne, light burdens become grievous and intolerable when not justified by such necessities." For he submits that the burden of supporting religious institutions is not justified by the necessities of government.

GREEK AND ROMAN CATHOLICISM.

"A Subscriber" sends the following inquiries from Stockton. We have interpolated the figures for convenience in answering: To the Editors of Freethought:

Will you be kind enough to inform a subscriber (1) whether the Roman Catholic or Greek church was the first after the birth of Christ; (2) which one of them was it that seceded from the other, and (3) about what time?

1. The two factions of the early church, distinguished as Greek and Roman, were identical previous to the division.
2. The Greek church seceded from the main body.
3. In the year 802. The division occurred, through dissensions between the patriarch at Constantinople and the popes of Rome, over questions of ceremony and doctrine of not the slightest human importance and about which one knew as little as the other—that is, nothing. Possibly the Greek church may claim to be the original Christian church. It is not much of a church that does not claim everything.

THANKS to the offices of a Catholic priest and the sheriff, corruption in the form of Goldenson, the murderer, has put on incorruption in the shape of Goldenson an angel. He was given years to prepare for death, and accepted the means of grace. He did not give his victim a moment for such preparation. If absolution and unction and prayers and confessions are of any avail, he entered eternity much better fitted to enjoy its blessings than did little Mamie Kelly whom he murdered. So says the Catholic religion if it means anything. It is fortunate, in the interests of justice, that crime sometimes meets with retribution in this world. Ever since the crucifixion the joys of paradise have been the reward of penitent thieves and converted murderers.

THE Young Men's Christian Association, at the instance of Gen. O. O. Howard, took a census of the evangelical churches and places of amusement in San Francisco on recent Sunday evenings, with the object of counting the young men between sixteen and thirty years of age. The result showed:

At church.....1,892
At places of amusement.....33,000

These figures would seem to indicate that the Protestant church is relaxing its hold upon the young men of the city.

THE Catholics of Pittsburgh, Pa., have captured the public school buildings in one ward of the city and have established a parochial school in them. The Protestants are up in arms over the matter and have held a public meeting to protest against the use of the buildings for religious purposes. Perhaps if they succeed in ousting the Romanists they will be content to let the schools remain secular. The admission of the Bible to reading in public schools, which Protestants contend for, is an entering wedge for all the practice of a whole religious system.

THE following intelligence comes as an item of news from Wisconsin:

"KENOSHA, September 12.—Five boys played tick-tack on Rev. E. O. Taylor's house last night. Mr. Taylor loaded his pistol and waited. Shortly two of the boys, George Beachel and Martin Slosson, went into the yard after their tick-tack. Mr. Taylor rushed at them, and as they ran away he opened fire and soon scared Slosson into halting. He then shot at Beachel, hitting him in the left forearm. Mr. Taylor's conduct has caused a sensation, and he will probably find his influence as a pastor gone."

The shooting of boys ought, we should remark, to have a slight effect in lessening the influence of a pastor. It should, however, be instrumental in illustrating the influence of the sheriff.

Nor long ago the Rev. W. H. Roberts, of the Westminster Presbyterian church in St. Paul, Minn., was accused of immorality, tried, acquitted, and requested to resign, which he did. The man who brought the charge against him was horsewhipped by the girl with whom he accused Elder Roberts of having had ministerial relations, another pastor was called, and it was thought that the difficulty had been adjusted to the satisfaction of all parties. Last Sunday, however, after a sermon on the "Beatitudes" by the new minister, and while the Sunday-school was gathering, a member made some reference to the late unpleasantness, one of the opposing faction took exception to it, and a free fight ensued. The organist was pulled from his stool backwards by an elder, fists were used with gory effect by the deacon and sexton, and more than a hundred women and children rushed from the church, as the report says, "yelling at the top of their voices, 'Murder!' 'Help!' 'Police!'" A thousand people gathered about the sacred edifice, afraid to go in until led by the police, who quelled the disturbance. It is believed that the good effect of the pastor's beautiful sermon on the "Beatitudes" was totally destroyed by the subsequent proceedings.

THE Jews are a peaceful, law-abiding, charitable, and industrious people. They have their religion and their religious institutions. They have their holy days and fast days and days of atonement, and are much more consistent in observing them than are their religious offspring, the Christians. Their Sabbath is the oldest institution of the kind, probably, known to history, and in the days of the patriarchs they made it rather tropical for violators of its sanctity. Modern Jews, however, are more Liberal, and they have not, we believe, endeavored in this country to enforce the obligations of Saturday upon those who do not recognize it as especially holy, and in this regard they set the Christians a worthy example. The first official recognition they have sought was that embodied in Mr. Silver's protest to the governor, last week, against the hanging of the Jew, Alexander Goldenson, on Friday, the 14th, the great Atonment day of the Jews, and it would perhaps have been a graceful act in Governor Waterman if he had let the execution take place a day later. But it seems now that the difficulty is set at rest by Goldenson himself. On the night previous to his hanging he became a convert to the Roman Catholic faith, and doubtless Mr. Silver will be ready to admit that the execution of a Roman Catholic who deserves hanging does not necessarily cast odium upon any particular day, holy or otherwise.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Goldenson, the murderer of fourteen-year-old Mamie Kelly, was duly hanged last week Friday. While his fate was regarded with satisfaction by everybody, there is some regret that the crowd did not lynch him on the day of his crime and thus save two years of expensive delay.—Sunday was an eventful day at Colton. The Mexicans celebrated their national birthday; Thomas Harwell was shot in the jaw; a Chinaman drove a wagon over a small boy, instantly killing him, and a drunken man fell out of a buggy and broke his arm.—Large quantities of rain fell in this state last week, accompanied by thunder and lightning.—The Odd Fellows have been holding a reunion at Los Angeles.—The State Fair at Sacramento closed last Saturday. There are complaints that the conduct of the fair was not in every way satisfactory.—The Pacific Yacht Club had a dull day last Sunday for its annual regatta, the weather being damp and sultry. The pilot boat America won, but her time in going over the course was the longest on record.—Mr. Irish, the editor of the Alta California, has been sued for criminal libel by Mr. Gilmour, a reporter on the Post. The trial is down for October 15.—This city owes its school teachers over $28,000 for the month of July, 1886, and every effort to obtain the money has been futile. "School Fund Exhausted" is the sign displayed in the treasurer's office.

The report that the Chinese exclusion bill had become a law was premature. It was reconsidered in the Senate and repassed. It now goes to the president.—The letters of acceptance of both our prospective presidents are now before their constituents. Mr. Cleveland's is rather more exciting reading than that of Mr. Harrison.—Charles A. Percy foolishly attempted to pass through the Niagara rapids last Sunday, and with the luck of a fool he accomplished the feat in safety.—Two women fought a prize fight in Buffalo, N. Y., last Sunday for a purse of $250.—The son-in-law of Amos S. Snell, who was murdered in Chicago last winter, offers $20,000 for the arrest and detention of W. B. Tascott, who is supposed to know something about the crime.—The Prohibitionists of Indiana are not receiving fair treatment. Their banner was torn down at Indianapolis, and some of their orators have had eggs thrown at them by the minions of opposing parties.—A special train over the Montana Central road, which is an extension of the Manitoba system in Montana, made the remarkable speed of 72 miles in an hour.—The yellow fever scourge at Jacksonville, Fla., continues unabated. Appeals for aid for the sufferers have met with generous response.—Dr. Tanner, the faster, proposes a new and startling feat. He believes he can hibernate like a bear, and offers to allow himself to be sealed up in an air-tight coffin until such a time as he shall specify for release.—The Chicago police have arrested another Anarchist who is accused of conspiring to blow up the City Hall.—In consequence of the fears of retaliation being carried into effect preparations are reported for stopping all winter shipments of cargoes from England by way of New York, Boston, and Portland, and sending them through Halifax and St. John.—Under the anti-polygamy law of 1882 there have been over 500 convictions in Utah for unlawful cohabitation, and 89 in Idaho.—A member of the Salvation Army named Tuttle boarded a passenger steamer at South Norwalk, Conn., one night last week, and began preaching to Jackson, the fireman of the steamer, when the latter struck Tuttle on the head with a shovel. Tuttle died of concussion of the brain, after suffering extreme agony. Jackson is under arrest.

A dispatch from Glasgow, Scotland, says: "Four hundred Irish stevedores employed in Glasgow harbor have been dismissed. They will be replaced by Protestants from Belfast. It is feared that a riot will ensue. It is claimed by the employers that the discharged men belonged to a union which was constantly making intolerant demands."—A telegram received at Madrid, Spain, says that the steamer Lawrence, when entering Port Luz, in the Canary Islands, ran into the Italian steamer Sud America. The latter vessel, which was lying at anchor, sank in a few minutes in ten fathoms of water. The Sud America carried 216 passengers and had a crew of sixty-seven men. Of these only 180 passengers and sixty-three of the crew reached the shore safely, some forty being drowned.

PUTNAM IN DENVER.

Mr. Putnam delivered his lecture as advertised at the opera house on "The Bible and Modern Thought." He was introduced by Charles McCord in a graceful little speech. The lecture was substantially as follows:

The Bible is not one book, but many books. It is a miscellaneous collection of literature. As literature it is accepted by modern thought, for whatever is natural and humanitarian. Christians have a theory about these books. This theory they must demonstrate or their system of religion falls to the ground. The Bible as literature is one thing. A theology concerning the Bible is a different thing. To reject the theology is not to reject the Bible as a part of the world's thought. The Christians must demonstrate four propositions about the Bible.

First—Its genuineness of authorship.

Second—Its authenticity or truthfulness.

Third—Its inspiration.

Fourth—Its infallibility.

All four of these propositions must be demonstrated, or orthodoxy has no logical standing. These propositions must be proved of each book, and not of the Bible as a whole.

As to the authorship of the Bible, it is simply unknown. It cannot be demonstrated who wrote a single book. The genuineness of a few books is conceded by modern scholars, but this only on probable evidence.

The authenticity of the Bible is disproved by the discoveries of science. There is an absolute contradiction between Genesis and geology. This was conclusively shown by Huxley in his celebrated discussion with Gladstone on the order of creation. If the truthfulness of the Bible is impeached all claims to inspiration and infallibility are destroyed. An unauthentic book cannot be a divine book.

It is said in defense of the Bible that it teaches immortality and so gives consolation to the human race. But other religious books teach immortality. Only the New Testament teaches it. The Old Testament is absolutely silent on the question. The New Testament proclaims in its doctrine of immortality the eternity of hell-fire. There is not much consolation in this.

It is said the Bible makes civilization. But when the Bible was at the height of its influence, the dark ages existed. This does not look like a civilizing agency. The genius of Greece and Rome, the scholarship of Arabia, were the impulses to modern growth and freedom and humanity.

It is said the Bible morals are best. But the Bible sanctions war, slavery, polygamy, theft, robbery, lying, intemperance, and other vices and crimes. Christianity accepts poverty as a good instead of a curse. Jesus says: "Blessed be the poor." This is not the best morality. Poverty is a curse and must be removed if possible. The church does not try to do this. It meets poverty with charity, not with justice. What the world wants to-day is justice, equal rights, and impartial liberty. This is the highest morality. The Bible does not teach this and it is not the book for to-day. It is valuable as record, but not as authority. It furnishes data for history, but not divinity either for the past or the future.

After the lecture a meeting of the Secular Union was held to make arrangements for future lectures.—Denver Daily News, Sept. 3.

Fifteen hundred people crowded the opera house last night to listen to the address of Samuel P. Putnam, president of the American Secular Union. Lawyer C. W. McCord introduced the lecturer in a brief speech, extolling the intelligence and progress of an age of steamships, telephones, telegraph, steam-cars, and newspapers, and the toleration that granted a disciple of Freethought so great an audience.

From first to last Mr. Putnam's lecture was a clear, able, and eloquent exposition of the modern Agnosticism. He began by stating his ideas on the differences between Christians and Liberals in the search for truth. All people must understand that there is a great difference, in the consideration of the Bible, between the book and the theory concerning it. A minister had claimed to him that in his degenerate days he had been an Infidel and taught that the Bible was a humbug. If the minister had ever taught that, he could not have been an Infidel. All Infidels accept the Bible for what it is worth as literature. They objected to the claim of its inspiration, as they denied its genuineness, its authenticity, and its infallibility. The speaker dwelt for some time on the position now generally held by liberal scholars as to the doubtful authorship and time of origin of the divine book.

In regard to a God, the position of the Agnostic was that the existence or non-existence of such a being transcends the limits of human reason. Even Sir William Hamilton, the Christian scientist, declared it impossible that any one could, from science, prove the existence of God. Through faith alone could the Supreme Being be accepted. He quarreled with none over his faith.

The Darwinian theory had proved false the claim of infinite love in nature. Thousands and thousands of forms were brought into life, and but few of them survived. If we had the sunshine and the flowers, we also had the viper and the lion. The study of nature taught that every motion in the universe was a continual struggle for life.

The speaker paid eloquent eulogies to the great deists, dwelling for some time on Thomas Paine.

At the conclusion of Mr. Putnam's address an informal meeting of Colorado Liberals was held, during which arrangements for future work were perfected and contributions received.

An incident of the evening was the exhortation of a member of the Salvation Army to the crowd to turn from Satan's path to the Lord's.—Denver Republican, Sept. 3.

JEFFERSONIANISM.

In order that my position in this article may be fully understood, permit me to briefly restate the points of argument in my article of last May on the "Abolition of Rum:"

1. He who declares that "all genuine Liberals abhor Prohibition, because it is persecution, and there can be no compromise between liberty and persecution," puts himself on the ground of philosophic Anarchy.

2. He must believe in its practicability at the present day.

3. Every person has a right to follow his own sweet will so long as he does not infringe on the liberties of others.

4. No person can be impure, drunken, or bestial, and live in society, without infringing on the liberties of others.

5. The prohibition of the liquor traffic is not a fight against individuals, but a system; it is an endeavor to abolish a nuisance called the saloon.

In your issue of May 26, Jefferson replies with the following logic:

1. No Freethinker can consistently be a Prohibitionist. . . . A fair enumeration will show beyond a doubt the irreconcilability of Prohibition with the principles of universal liberty. . . . It is a deadly assault on essential rights.

2. The state is the organized physical force of society. . . . Its function is the repression of crime by force. . . . The existence of crime is its sole justification.

3. Crime is the forcible invasion of individual rights. Nothing else is a crime.

4. The selling of liquor is not crime, there being no compulsion exercised in the matter.

5. A crime cannot be made—a crime is.

6. Liquor drinking may be the occasion of crime, but not the cause.

7. The state cannot deal with the cause of crime, only with the crime itself.

8. Intemperance is the result of the misery and struggle of life—the lack of ideas, of thought, the emptiness of mind, the weariness of body—intellectual slavery, false social conditions, degradation of labor.

In the first place allow me to point out that Jefferson has taken the precise ground laid down by your correspondent in Proposition 1, viz.: that of philosophic Anarchy. "The state exists solely for the repression of crime." This is only another form of my previous quotation from Benjamin R. Tucker: "Interference with another's business is a crime, and the only crime, and as such may be resisted." Observe that both these statements entail the conclusion that the power of resistance, collectively called the state, "can deal only with the crime itself, not with the cause of crime." Jefferson objects to Prohibition because "it is moral legislation, not municipal," and his concluding argument says that intemperance is a result of misery, struggle, lack of ideas, emptiness of mind, weariness of body, intellectual slavery, false society, etc. O consistency, thou art a jewel!

Not pausing to controvert this last statement, which would be much too easy, the mere recollection of the names of Daniel Webster, Henry Clay, Henry M. Look, and hundreds of others, being sufficient to answer that assertion, permit me to inquire how Jefferson proposes to remedy the "false conditions," which he avers are the cause of intemperance. Not by "moral" legislation—oh no, but by "municipal" legislation. At least that is the natural inference from his distinct repetition that the state should keep out of the domain of morals, and attend to municipal affairs. Oh, but, my dear sir, why deal with the cause?—limit your ministrations to the effect, the "nuisance." To my way of thinking this dealing with effects has been just the trouble always. It is the cause, or, if it please my opponent better, the occasion, which needs to be remedied; if we can rid ourselves of that which produces crime, then, and only then, shall we be rid of crime itself. And if Jefferson will but examine his own reasoning closely he cannot fail to perceive that he proposes to deal with a cause instead of an effect. The only difference is that he entirely overlooks the self-evident cause of much of this intemperance, and proceeds to hunt for some so remote that I venture to say that he has the merit of original discovery in the matter. Against the endeavor to remedy these other evils, as stated in my previous letter, I make no protest; I answer amen to every effort which lifts mankind out of the darkness into the light; but because one thing is bad, another worse, and another worst, I see no reason why the bad should not be dealt with, as well as the worse and worst.

Since, then, it is to the interest of society to deal not with the effects, but the causes, let us see whether liquor selling is or is not the cause of crime.

Jefferson says "it is not the cause, but the occasion, just as the application of a match to gunpowder is the occasion of an explosion, the cause lying in the nature of the gunpowder." This distinction of terms reminds me of a certain resolution passed by the American Secular Union Congress last fall, which "recognized the equality of woman, according to the Declaration of Independence." The italicized clause might mean much or little, just as you choose. The difference is that this distinction means very little, no matter how much you may choose to wish it otherwise. To speak of a primate cause is simple nonsense, and a combination of causes may very properly be called an occasion, if one is particular. In the case of the match and gunpowder, it appears to me that it required the addition of caloric to make the explosion, and consequently the nature of the match had quite as much to do with it as the nature of the gunpowder. Certainly the explosive will remain quite innocent till brought in contact with that peculiar agency called heat, which suddenly develops its expansive force. "Yes, but," you say, "the expansive force was in the powder; one might apply all the fabled heat of hell to a bit of earth and it wouldn't explode." Certainly; and one might pour all the waters of the fabled flood on a magazine of powder and it wouldn't explode. But when hell and powder get together, look out for earthquakes. The cause, then, lies quite as much in one as in the other. If you choose to call the combination of causes an occasion, very well; but please remark that it is the union of forces, and not the force of either singly, which is the occasion.

To follow out the comparison, I make the liquor drinking the match, and a bad or diseased nature the gunpowder—a possible crime is of course the explosion.

This is rather unjust; many a nature neither bad nor diseased in itself has become both by the continued use of alcoholic drinks; but supposing the assertion to be true, supposing that none but bad or diseased natures are injured by contact with alcohol; did it ever occur to my logical friend to make an estimate of how very, very many people are bad and diseased in that way? And if so, has he ever compared the number with those who are apparently uninjured by its use, and weighed the one against the other, and thought that the maximum of good occasioned to the one scarcely tipped a feather's weight against the minimum of the evil occasioned to the other? Has he ever reflected that there is no possible way of determining beforehand whether a nature will develop a gunpowder tendency or not, the only criterion being previous experience, which shows an odds of about ten to one that it will?

He who touches a match to a doubtful looking substance which has a large possibility of being gunpowder, becomes responsible for the results. Now suppose that notwithstanding the certainty of tremendous explosions, it should be found a profitable business for men to open up little stores all over the country and advertise themselves as willing to touch matches to any substance which might be subjected to the test by customers. No compulsion about it—the experimentalist's act is voluntary, the match-toucher's act is voluntary; yet at least nine times out of ten a terrific explosion follows, and some person who had nothing at all to do with it gets hurt. How long do you suppose that institution would exist? Well, just as long as everybody thought the state ought to deal with effects instead of causes. Just so long as our voters should exclaim, "Don't interfere with a man's liberty to get killed if he wants to, no matter who else gets injured or killed in the affair." Just so long as our law-makers say, "Don't prohibit these match-touchers' business, because if you do we can't collect any taxes from them to build hospitals for the maimed and blind, and build nice, smooth roads for the halt to walk on." This is Jefferson's reasoning (not the last; that is the high-license cant, and Jefferson seems to be a free whiskyite), and this match-touching business honeycombs all our country to-day. Its name is "the saloon," and as I said in the former article, it is the saloon system which we propose to attack, and not because we wish to destroy any one's personal liberty, but because in the exercise of this species of liberty under discussion the rights of others are "forcibly invaded."

With Jefferson's Propositions 2, 3, and 5 I have no quarrel. To his assertion that no Freethinker can consistently be a Prohibitionist, I reply as at the outset, then every Freethinker must be an Anarchist, and believe in practical Anarchy at the present day; for it is in the nature of law to be prohibitory.

To recapitulate, our differences are these: We affirm that "the function of the state is the repression of crime." Jefferson declares that this repression must deal only with effects; it is my opinion that such repression will be better served by dealing with causes.

Jefferson declares that liquor drinking is not the cause, but the occasion of crime. From all the light I can get upon the subject, it is not the occasion, but one of the most potent causes which go to make up the complicity styled an occasion.

Jefferson continually deals with individualities; I maintain that in the present transition state of society it is absolutely necessary to generalize results, to deal with systems rather than men.

In regard to the poisonous nature of alcohol, Jefferson may demonstrate it for himself very easily: he need not take the "opinion", of any "authority," big or little. Knowledge is worth more than the opinion of the greatest. Furthermore no one has a right to form an opinion without a certain amount of evidence. Again, it is asserted that even if alcohol is a poison, that does not make wine, beer, or other liquors poisons. I presume distilled liquors will come under the head of "other," etc. As Jefferson is aware, from 50 to 80 per cent of distilled liquors is alcohol. Wine, beer, and malt liquors are 20 per cent and over. Nux vomica, strychnine, and other poisonous ingredients in different proportions, together with sugar and water, form that refining compound called beer. If Jefferson doesn't believe it, let him make the chemical test. The best temperance lecture I ever read was one in which an old Teuton fed the ingredients of beer to his tipsy son, one at a time. It cured him. However, that is out of the main line of argument; I rest my case.

VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

A "LAW-MAD" NATION.

The best Fourth-of-July speech we have seen in print was that delivered by Mr. A. P. Miller, editor of the Worthington, Minn., Advance. It is published in the Advance, August 2. We quote a portion of it: "A third danger, or the same one under another phase, is the tendency to establish everything by law. 'Class legislation,' is becoming one of the greatest and the loudest crying evils of our time. A prominent Nebraska speaker recently said that 'be it enacted' was one of the worst tendencies and 'be it repealed' was our remedy. The Advance has often declared that the Americans are law-mad. It is said that all the laws in China are contained in one book, and that not a large one. At the rate the Americans are going, it will require immense library buildings in every state capitol to contain the law books. The last legislature of Minnesota, during a sixty days session, introduced over 700 bills and passed over 300 of them. The next may, and probably will, introduce a thousand and pass 500.

"The first and most powerful in securing 'class legislation' in its own interest is what is generally called the 'monopolistic class.' Having wealth and its attendant power, this class readily secures such tariff, financial, and other legislation as it desires. It generally dictates what shall be 'protected' by a heavy duty; how gold and silver money shall be made, issued and regulated, and how the banks and their issues shall be controlled. Immense fortunes have been made by this class at one legislative stroke, and you and I and the rest of the people have been compelled to contribute our tax to make up the vast aggregate. This class, already rolling in wealth, holds on with a death-grip to class legislation, in order that it may wallow and wade in greater depth of iniquitous gain.

"But while this is the most successful class in securing class legislation from a law-mad nation, it is not, in my judgment, the worst nor the most dangerous class. Those classes who are demanding legislation in the interests of their class of religious adherents and of their ologies; those classes of medical practitioners and adherents who are securing legislation in the interest of their particular pathies; those classes of people who have certain views upon social, domestic, and personal matters, and especially upon personal liberty, and liberty of speech, are by far the most dangerous classes.

"All these classes are active in securing legislation in their behalf. Not only are the Sabbatarians demanding Sunday laws from every state legislature, and securing them in most of the states, but they are, as before intimated, demanding a union of the government with their particular 'bride' or 'church.' What would you think of a family which would come forward and demand that the Constitution of the United States should be so amended as to compel the president to marry their daughter? If the orthodox people insist upon Uncle Sam uniting with their daughter, making their church his 'bride,' and making her his especial care and support, why should not the Jews, the Adventists, the Spiritualists, the Mormons, the Liberals, the Quakers, and all others make the same demand? Time and again I have asked this question, and those who believe in such a union have admitted their right, but they glibly reply that the majority of our people are Christians, that the leading religion is the Christian religion, and they want it so recognized by the fundamental law. It is, you see, a matter of majorities merely. The stronger must have his way, right or wrong.

"But is this really so? Is this brazen-faced demand really made? Yes. Twenty years ago a handful of ministers and church people held a convention at Springfield, Ohio, and resolved that the Constitution of the United States should be so amended as to declare that this 'is a Christian government, and that Jesus Christ is the ruler of this planet.' They adjourned and went home. Next year there were several conventions held. Since then many of them have been held, until now a strong church and state party is formed to force a conflict. A few years ago, Governor St. John, the leader of the Prohibitionists, sent greeting to the Iowa convention and hoped they would succeed, thus speaking for his party, or leading hundreds to believe that he spoke for his party. The best minds among the Liberals of the Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin stamp believe that they will succeed. What then? You and I will pay tithes to support a religion which we may or may not believe, and the speaker who rises in any city of the United States to question the statement that 'Jesus Christ is the ruler of this planet,' will be subject to arrest and imprisonment for blasphemy.

"Meanwhile, this class of religious partisans pull every string. They say: 'We cannot expect to amend the Constitution in a day. But we can attend to the outposts. We can enforce our views as to Sabbath by Sabbath laws; we can make war upon Freethought, and upon all classes which publish views contrary to our own upon social questions by having them arrested and tried under trumped up charges of sending obscene matter through the mails.' They say, 'We have already succeeded by convicting Bennett, Lant, etc., and we have greatly annoyed and subdued many others.'"

Midsummer.

How sweet to listen to the dove
When all the rest forget to sing,
And watch the swallows wantoning,
And butterflies, the gold whereof
Comes sinking through the skies above
Like feathers from an angel's wing.
What comfort in the proof they bring
Of perfect wisdom, perfect love.
Why is it when the heart is stirred
To praise of Him who rules on high,
Of Him who made our earth and sky
From nothing with a single word,
Why is it that the little bird
Will eat the butterfly?

Louis Belrose, Jr., in the Open Court.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has made the following lecture appointments from August to October. Friends will please notice and arrange accordingly:

Ottumwa . . . Iowa . . .	Sept . . . 12	Pittsburgh, Pa. . . . .	Sept. . . . . 30
West Union . . . " . . .	" . . . 16-17	Secular Union Congress, Oct. 5, 6, 7, 8
Chicago . . . Ill. . . . .	" . . . 23	New York . . . . .	" . . . . . 12

W. F. JAMIESON will deliver courses of lectures in Alamosa and Monte Vista, Colorado, in October. He will respond to calls for lectures East or West. Address him at Monte Vista, Colorado.

THE RETURN TRIP.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places returning from the East:

Denver . . . . . Col.,	Oct. 28	Davenport . . . . . W. T.,	Nov. 17-19
Ogden . . . . . Utah,	" 30-31	Sprague . . . . . " "	" 20-21
M't'n Home . . . Idaho,	Nov. 2	Pasco . . . . . " "	" 22-23
Boise City . . . . . " "	" 3-4	Portland . . . . . Or.,	" 25-26
Emmetts . . . . . " "	" 5-6	Vancouver . . . . . W.T.,	" 27-28
Pendleton . . . . . Or.,	" 8-9	No. Yamhill . . . . . Or.,	" 29-30
Walla Walla . . . W. T.,	" 10-11	Scappoose . . . . . " "	Dec. 2
Spokane Falls . . . " "	" 14-16	Snohomish . . . . . W.T.,	" 8-10

It is desirable to announce the remainder of the appointments at the earliest possible moment. Will friends who wish lectures write at once to S. P. Putnam, care of E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago?

TWELFTH ANNUAL CONGRESS A. S. U.

OFFICIAL CALL.

To the Local Secular Unions, Life, Charter, and Annual Members, and all Liberal citizens who support the Nine Demands of Secularism, Greeting:

You are hereby invited to attend the Twelfth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union, which will convene at Lafayette Hall, Wood street, near 4th, Pittsburgh, Pa., Friday, October 5, 1888, at 10 A.M., for a four days' session—5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th, inclusive.

All Charter and Life Members, all Vice-Presidents, all Chairmen of State Executive Committees, and all duly accredited delegates from Local Secular Unions are entitled to seats and votes in this Annual Congress. Each Local Secular Union is entitled to send its President and Secretary and three other members as delegates. Annual Members who pay or have paid $1 in the national treasury are entitled to seats, but not to votes, except by unanimous consent of the Congress.

This Congress will especially consider practical questions tending to further agitation for the taxation of church property; the abrogation of state aid to sectarian institutions; abolition of state, national, military, and prison chaplaincies; repeal of all judicial oaths, Sunday and other oppressive and unjust ecclesiastical laws; nullification of attempts to subvert our Constitution by a legal recognition of Theism in the American Magna Charta, and such other measures as will not merely thwart intended theological encroachments, but absolutely expunge from our laws, state and federal, such insidious acts as have already crept in to blot out mental freedom from our republic.

It is to be hoped that the addresses delivered will deal with the practical issues of the organization, so that there will be such an awakening of the people to these vital questions of the hour that a revival of the instinct of liberty and justice for all will necessarily result; that again from the Keystone state—the birthplace of the association—the clarion voice of freedom shall reverberate throughout the land.

Pittsburgh being situated almost in the center of a district containing many of our most distinguished workers, thinkers, and writers, besides the active host within its limits, there is little doubt that this Congress will be a glorious gathering of the forces who stand for mental liberty, as expressed in the desire for a complete Secularization of the government.

S. P. PUTNAM, Pres., E. B. FOOTE, JR., Ch. Ex. Com.,
E. A. STEVENS, Sec., MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com.,
CHAS. ECKHARD, Treas.

Eastern Oregon.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The great, weird plains and arid deserts of Eastern Oregon are as yet unnoticed for their agricultural richness and productive value. They lie in silent splendor, only valuable for range; the soil is mostly good, and if irrigated would teem with the rankest vegetation. Where the vast sage-bush plains stretch their heated, dusty arms away to the pine-clad mountains, you are made weary by the glimmering mirage. It trembles in the morning air like a gossamer veil spread out beneath the azure heavens, and drifts away in the hazy distance like a phantom in its beauty. Here and there around among the tangled shrubbery the golden bunch-grass decks the fertile soil, only a silent invitation to the strong hand of honest toil to rupture the sod and reap the reward that ever awaits to be grasped by the patient, weary laborer. Gently sloping away, up and down incessantly, the alluvial hills roll back from the level plain to meet and greet the higher mountain. Stock range in large numbers wherever there is water, and a little spring bubbles out of the mountain side here and there, giving life and nourishment to the dear old pines, the gentle willow, and, last of all but not the least, the dainty little flowers that seek the quiet, unknown dells to be born, to live, to die! The high old pine-clad mountains, nature's noble monuments, monuments that the waste and wear of ages cannot tear down, nor the storms of time efface, lift their proud, haughty heads high up into the ethereal blue. They tower in mute magnificence above the lowly vales below, where man is toiling and sweating and working beneath the burden of undeserved labor. But then, labor is sweet if we labor for those who are near and dear to us, and after all we cannot avoid looking up to their snowy summits and admiring their silent picturesqueness, even if we do so at intervals of rest in our incessant toil.

We are living at an age when the resources of a valuable country are developed with all consistent rapidity, for the spread and growth of our civilization demand it. The conscious eye of the artisan peers into the most secret caves of nature's bosom for the gems that may be there. The anxious miner upturns every rock and stone, explores every crevice for the sparkling treasures that earth contains within her vaults of richness. The moist sod is turned with the plow, and patient merit garners in its just reward. The archives of the mountains are opened up to the dazzled gaze of the laborer, whose toil has been coined into wealth and happiness. Honest labor never goes long without reward. Hope is the mother of triumph. Success is the inevitable result of patience.

In Eastern Oregon the facilities for advancement are inexhaustible, if only willing hands are applied and energy is exercised. The country is endowed with natural richness. It is particularly adapted to the advance of civilization in its varied forms and features. The soil is productive; timber is plenty; mineral wealth of untold aggregations exists in the rugged cliffs and sandy basins; range is splendid; health and happiness crown every home where love and labor rule supreme; manufacturing advantages are spread on all sides. People is all we lack, and the occident will be laid before the world, a model of progress, a model of the skill and ingenuity of a prosperous, energetic people.

Educational facilities abound. Good schools are in successful operation in every city, town, hamlet, and community. It seems that an earnest interest is taken by all hands, and the high, pure atmosphere imparts a vigor that only healthy climate can. The scenery is beautiful and inspiring. There is a poetic side to every nook and corner, however remote. There is poetry in the skies, the mountains, in the valleys, and in the flowers that nod and bend before the pressure of the autumn breeze. And best of all we are becoming pretty well Liberalized. Somehow the people of this country are naturally and truly a liberal, open-hearted, genial class. No traveler is homeless. Every threshold is a shrine for every being, even the stranger, far from his dear old fire-side and friends. There is a kind of attachment in the hearts of pioneers that does not seem to die, and the old role of pioneer has not yet left the settler of Oregon, California, Washington, and other states, for comparatively it is only a short time since the country was a wilderness; since the haughty red man roamed in untrammelled liberty over the plains, down the canyons, over the mountains. But what peace and freedom will not achieve in the advance of civilization, hostility and subjugation need not attempt.

Years will unfold the gems of Freethought, and some day the sun will set where nought but peace and love and freedom undefiled will meet the lingering gaze. No darkened brow from superstition's taunts will shed its sorrow over the world, and man shall walk in peace with man, and all the world will glow with freedom and glory uncontrolled. The fruit of labor greets the waiting ones, and those who pluck their fruit from bowers where all life's joy is clustered, shall fill the land, and peace shall reign a god supreme. Respectfully, Union, Oregon.

B. W. HUFFMAN.

Is Controversy Dangerous?

NUMBER III.

Elder D. R. Lucas, in the Christian Record and Evangelist, says, "I do not believe a single debate has ever been held when there was anything like equal talent engaged on each side that did not result in good. It is our only hope, as a people, in the great conflict, and whenever we cease to be an aggressive, agitating, investigating, and debating people, our mission is ended."

Rev. Charles Buck (Buck's Theological Dictionary) says that religious "disputation is the agitation of any religious question, in order to obtain clear and adequate ideas of it. The propriety of religious disputation or controversial divinity has been a matter of doubt with many. Some artfully decry it in order to destroy free inquiry. Some hate it because they do not like to be contradicted. Others declaim against it to save themselves the disgrace of exposing their ignorance, or the labor of examining and defending their own theses. There are others who avoid it, not because they are convinced of the impropriety of the thing itself, but because of the evil temper with which it is generally conducted.

"The propriety of it, however, will appear if we consider that every article of religion is denied by some, and cannot be well believed without examination, by any. Religion empowers us to investigate, debate, and controvert each article, in order to ascertain the evidence of its truth."

"Some artfully decry it," says Rev. Dr. Buck. Let those who denounce discussion make a note of this. "Some hate it," says this learned Dr. Buck, "because they do not like to be contradicted." That is it. Does this explain the general silence of the clergy when invited to debate? Is it not strictly true that, more than any other profession, they hate to be contradicted? Are not the clergy more one-sided, therefore, than any other class on earth? There are a few individual exceptions; a few grand, brave men among them who have the courage of their convictions.

But if Christianity, through the superiority of its reasons, the clearness of its logic, has gained success—and not by other agencies or influences, as state-craft and priestcraft and wealth and fashion—why should any Christian "artfully decry" debate as positively injurious to Christianity? Here, it will be seen, Christians are inconsistent in claiming victories as the result of contact with all other religions, or schools of thought. Why does it everywhere, as a rule, avoid the conflict? If it is a fact that the Christian system triumphed over all other systems for ages, is it not a still more palpable fact that in these days of increasing science, doubt, skepticism, it finds itself in the presence of a foe with which it is unable to contend? And is not that foe Infidelity?

Who is it, then, that condemns controversy? Does the Freethinker? No. Does the Christian? Yes. What does it mean? Are we to understand that Christian victories (?) are things of the past, and were victories of the sword? If they were triumphs of truth over error, instead of physical force over flesh, why should Christianity to-day shun intellectual conflict? Why should nearly every Christian minister publicly pronounce debate unprofitable? Why condemn controversy as injurious to the cause of Christ? To what is free discussion unprofitable? If free speech does Christianity "more harm than good," as most of its ministers confess, of what value is its boast that it has vanquished its opponents all through the Dark Ages, when it shrinks from meeting its assailants now? If for ages it conquered its foes, why should it be timid in our enlightened times?

Now that the Christian thumb-screw, fire, and fagot have become unfashionable, and the Christians of our day are ashamed that torture was ever mistaken by their ancestors for logic, must they, at last, make the humiliating confession that debate is unprofitable to Christianity, which set out to subdue the race; but, after nearly nineteen centuries, finds itself falling behind the birth increase of the heathen alone? Science is undermining its pretensions and philosophy is explaining its miracles.

Monte Vista, Colorado.

W. F. JAMIESON.

'A Young Lady's Large Contract.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The visit of S. P. Putnam to Murray, Utah, on the 27th of August will not soon be forgotten by those who heard the eloquent oration he delivered. His statements of facts were so conclusive and convincing that even professed religionists could not restrain their assent and admiration. His propositions were clearly stated and forcibly sustained; they were so powerfully demonstrative that but few of the unsympathetic listeners would have the hardihood to attempt to refute them. Yet one—a young lady of twenty-four summers—duly announced her intention to answer President Putnam on the evening of Sunday, the 9th inst., at the Methodist meeting-house. Among the few who were attracted by this announcement I attended, prepared to take notes or, if sufficiently instructive, to fully report the lady's "answer."

With reporting book and pencil in hand, I was prepared to chronicle the "slaughter of the innocents," for I had been told the fair lecturer was a highly educated woman, but I must leave you to imagine my astonishment when I found the "answer" to consist of bald assertions and the usual platitudes. She stated that at Christ's advent the whole world was in the condition of midnight darkness, and that civilization was the product of Christianity.

After the close of the lecturer's "answer," I asked her if she was familiar with the moral and mental condition of the world at the time of Jesus's ministrations; whether or not she had read such works as Seneca's Morals, Plato's Philosophy, the writings of the Gnostics, or the writings of the Christian Fathers during the early ages of Christianity. She confessed she had not read any of them, or even Gibbon's History of Chris- tianity, or any kindred author. In her "answer" she appeared to be entirely ignorant of the great civilization of the Aryan races; of the rise and fall of Nineveh, Babylon, Assyria, Egypt, etc.; of the glorious civilizations of Greece and Rome, and that the Dark Ages were the immediate product of the growth of Christianity. However, as she pleaded her youthfulness as an excuse for her limited acquaintance with these subjects, I suppose it is only just to her to grant her the same plea in extenuation of her attempt to "answer" Mr. Putnam's lecture. Yet in criticising the statement that "there are no evidences extant that can support the claims of Christianity," the lady asserted that Mr. Putnam had not read the "Evidences of Christianity," or, relying upon the ignorance of his hearers, had endeavored to impose upon them; and followed by saying that she could produce proofs to sustain her assertions, but thought it would be unprofitable to do so, as she feared that her hearers could not understand or appreciate them as she could, for it required brains to understand Christianity, "but how much brains does it need to say I don't believe?" The lady regretted much that the people around here were not acquainted with more Christians; that probably they had only seen about a half dozen of these noble men and women, or perhaps they would better understand the glorious lives these Christians live!

The evening's entertainment was not altogether unprofitable. At its close I more realized what was meant by the "self-righteousness of the pharisees." Pope's couplet, "a little learning is a dangerous thing," etc., had a much deeper, a more forcible meaning to it than before. I saw how easy it is to insult an audience, without intending to do so, and to innocently illustrate the following quotation: "Vox et prateria nihil."

Murray, Utah,

GEO. A. BURGON.

Our Advertisements Condemned.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have two objects in view in writing this time; the first is to tell you that I like the FREETHOUGHT very much, and what Liberal would not? I think I should never stop taking it were it not for one thing, which is the second of my objects in writing. It is the liquor and lager beer advertisements which have found their way into this grand little journal. I think it is a disgrace to Freethought. May be I am a little too rash, but I tell you I think a good deal of my Freethought literature. It has the first place in my library, but liquor and its advertisements are not good enough friends with me to occupy that place. Liquor has been the ruin of too many of my best friends for that. Perhaps most Liberals don't care if that kind of advertisements appear in their journals, so that where there is one who don't like it there may be a hundred who don't care, so of course it may appear to be so much ahead, although I think that FREETHOUGHT can live without such advertisements, and it would be better off, in the long run, not to have them.

This is all I have to say this time. I hope, though, that I will have the opportunity of renewing my subscription before it expires; that is to say, when there are no liquor or lager beer advertisements in it. I am also taking the Truth Seeker; there are no such advertisements about that. I like that paper.

Yours truly,

HALVOR CLAUSON.

Seattle, W. T., Sept. 10, 1888.

A Cheerful Note.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed find the names of seven new subscribers, and postoffice order to pay for the same. I am going to do all I can to build up FREETHOUGHT, and make it one of the best papers on the continent. We have the material on this coast to do it. If there is only one live Liberal in every town that will use his or her energy and influence in soliciting subscribers it will not be long until FREETHOUGHT will have its thousands. Don't let them get off with the excuse that it is hard times or that they are so cramped that they can't afford it. For the expense is nothing, as one might say, only four cents per week, and where is the Liberal that considers four cents per week anything? If there is one I would like to see him and size him up, for I think his soul could dance on the point of a needle. Very respectfully yours,

J. S. MARTIN.

Snohomish, W. T.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 339 Eddy st., S. F.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenz, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S
GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.
P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months.
50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine
paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents;
paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS.

By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling. Agents who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

For the Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS, CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.
33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 3 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13 50, $14 50; 5 ounce, $16 00; 6 ounce, $17 50
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17,
$18, $19 50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4
being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best
14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest
style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24 50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies'
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38.
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case.
Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1.
Best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set
best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12.
Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free.
BEAR WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
Badges in PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of cut and smaller.
two-thirds size. War-
ranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2 75, $3 50. Large,
$3 to $5; with genuine diamonds, $3, $10; and
charms up to $25. De-
mand daily increasing.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

"Zinn Walfisch."

THE WHALE CHAS. A. JONAS, Proprietor.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars,

Cold Lager and Sharp Steam Beers.

24 THIRD ST., Near Market,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

JOHN WIELAND'S Lager Bier IS THE BEST. CALL FOR IT.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert
G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

F. SANGROVE, Merchant Tailor.

LATE OF LONDON AND PARIS,

All imported goods. Orders promptly attended. Prices moderate. Cleaning and repairing
neatly done.

Ladies' Cloaks and Riding Habits a Specialty.

F. SANGROVE, 104 FIFTH ST.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say
infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to
those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior
Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address
Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San
Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS,
the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author.
Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 39.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1883

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - SEPTEMBER 29, 1888

THE Tax Reform Advocate appears to have been in error in announcing that Colonel Ingersoll would debate Free Trade and Tariff with Henry George. The colonel is too busy.

THE professed sympathy of the Catholic church with republican institutions is the emptiest hypocrisy. Sufficient evidence of this is the fact that the pope wishes Germany and Austria to compel Italy to restore his temporal power, urging as an inducement that he can more effectually suppress democracy in Italy.

SECRETARY STEVENS, of the American Secular Union, has caused to be prepared a full and accurate list of the untaxed church property in Chicago. It amounts to something like $6,000,000, and if taxed would pay 60,000 to the public treasury. The exemption of this property is an unmitigated swindle.

THE city of San Francisco, according to statistics furnished to secretary McCoy, of the Young Men's Christian Association, by License Collector O'Brien, has 4,459 drinking resorts. This gives about one for every 72 of the population, or for every 15 adult males! It is possible that Secretary McCoy's figures are somewhat exaggerated.

MR. CHARLES BRADLAUGH, of England, having announced that his various losses in contesting his seat in Parliament had so impoverished him that he must abandon politics for some more lucrative calling, his supporters are raising a fund to indemnify him. About $3,500 is now in the hands of the treasurer of the fund, Mr. G. Anderson, 35A, Great George street, Westminster.

THE Maclay Theological College (Methodist) was dedicated at San Fernando, Los Angeles county, on the 18th, Mr. Maclay, late of China, being installed as dean. R. M. Widney was one of the orators. This college is the gift of ex-Senator Maclay; and the land with which the institution is endowed comes from Messrs. Maclay and Widney, having fallen into the possession of these two pious gentlemen by the eviction of its alleged rightful owners, an old man and his wife. The fact that she died from exposure after they had been turned out of their home, and that he is a wanderer in his old age, will not dim a single jewel in the diadem wherewith Widney and Maclay are to be crowned; but if the property of the Christian church were to be sold to reimburse those whom it has robbed and defrauded, it would not have left a foot of ground on the whole surface of the globe.

MAYOR POND declined to review the Italian parade last Sunday because it took place on the Sabbath. Our foreign residents may console themselves with the reflection that this is one of the few states in the Union in which they could have obtained permission to parade on the first day of the week. Then, again, the people turned out and reviewed them, which, it must be admitted, is more of a popular indorsement than would have been the presence of the mayor.

THE sale of the Lick House affords opportunity for the final settlement of the benevolent Freethinker's great estate. There is still left the large amount of $889,519. The next important work now remaining on the hands of the trustees is the erection of the group of historic statues to be placed in the new city hall grounds, for which the sum of $100,000 has been set apart, and the erection of the California School of Mechanical Arts. The sum set aside for this institution is $535,000.

COLONEL INGERSOLL, besides making a cash donation for the relief of the yellow fever sufferers in the South, offers to go upon the platform and lecture for the same purpose. The Truth Seeker remarks: "We cannot help contrasting the conduct of Colonel Ingersoll with that of the Lord. The latter personage will do nothing, though amply able; while the former not only contributes his cash, but his services to get cash from others who will not contribute unless some service is rendered them in return. We think the Lord might, if not willing to forego his revenge upon the wicked, contribute at least a few of his cattle upon a thousand hills for the benefit of those who have not offended him, but yet suffer through the punishment of the wicked."

NEWS AND NOTES.

Just as the train stopped at Cromwell station and I stepped from the car, Jacob Geier drove alongside to greet me, and with him was the little girl, Edna, as bright as a dollar. Passing by the two churches that, like solemn sentinels, seemed to watch the course of the Infidel into the country which they claimed for their own, I soon came to the pleasant grove where the hammocks swung and the turkeys were eating themselves full for Thanksgiving dinner, and where stands the home of my friend Geier, built years ago when the country about was almost a wild prairie. It seemed to be the lap of luxury now, for the vast fields of corn, towering almost like forests, are beginning, amid their tassels, to shake forth the golden shekels. Soon after my arrival, Fred I. Green, from Nevinville, drove into the big yard, and we went forth and hailed him with three cheers, so that he might know that Freethought was in the land of the living and had not "got left." So we had a good gathering in this Secular home, and I passed a delightful evening of recreation, which was what I needed after the stress of so much travel. Mrs. Geier, and the children, George, Minnie, and Edna, helped to make merry and bright the social circle.

In the morning it was lowery and soon the rain began to pour, and it looked as if we should have a stormy time for the lecture at Orient. But we started off amid the dampness, bidding defiance to the "clerk of the weather" and orthodox prayers, and pretty soon it began to clear off, and by noon the skies were shining bright. In due season we arrived at the Green homestead, about two miles from the village of Nevin. Mr. Green's father came here in early days and bought about a thousand acres. The cultivated lands now stretch far as the eye can see, and the fat cattle roam over the rich pastures. The father has passed "the bourne from whence no traveler returns." The mother, Mrs. Green, is living with her son Frederick, and they are the only ones who remain in the old homestead. The other children are married and have settled near and far. Mrs. Green is a staunch Freethinker. She has no use for the churches, and for years, in an orthodox community, has maintained her Liberal convictions openly. She looks forward, and is enthusiastic for reform. It was a pleasure indeed to tarry in this hospitable home, where the ample acres, the green fields, the big barns, the fat stock, the innumerable turkeys, the sleek horses, and the vast haystacks give a feeling of largeness and plenty and the hours pass by with absolute enjoyment. F. I. Green is one of our best workers. He was one of the first to help push forward the work of the Secular Union, and is always ready to take "the laboring oar." He can row against the stream. He arranged for a lecture at Orient in the evening. At sunset we all set off for the appointed place—quite a company of us, enough to make an audience even if no one else came. So we were prepared for any emergency. 'Tis not always a lecturer can be assured of so good an assembly by having it along with him. Besides the Geiers and the Greens, the Trumans were in our "band of hope." Mrs. Truman is a sister of Mr. Green. Mr. Truman and the children, Miss Carrie, and Oscar and Orrin, are on the roll of the Liberty army. It was a beautiful evening. The tall trees waved over our path, where the grass was often so high that it swept the dashboard. Parts of our journey we were "cutting across lots." The gold on the far horizon was vanishing, and the new moon was glittering as we drove into Orient, a little village with two churches, and services in each but half the time. But the Christians couldn't agree to use one church, although that was all they needed. The Methodists must have a church of their own and grind the money out of the community that was ill able to pay for it. But it must be done. It wouldn't do for the Methodist to worship in another Christian church.

"Blest is the tie that binds
Our hearts in sacred love."

Dr. H. V. Monnette welcomed us at Orient. He is an ardent Freethinker, and it did me good to meet so gallant a soldier under our flag. The hall was in control of a churchman and we did not know if it could be procured. If not we should have gathered our audience together in the doctor's summer-house and spoken to them there. But the hall was granted for our use, and I don't think I damaged it in speaking of "The Bible and Modern Thought." The hall was full to overflowing, and almost everybody was satisfied. It was the first Freethought lecture ever given in Orient, and evidently there is a strong sentiment here for "our side," though two churches have captured so much of the ground.

I believe our excellent ally, Dr. Monnette, will build a Freethought hall front to front with these churches, and the flag will greet the cross, and its stars will triumph.

Dr. Monnette's family, Mrs. Monnette and children, are all Freethinkers. Dr. Monnette, although he looks as young as myself, is a grandfather, and the little baby bears the glory of our "Day-star" on its unwrinkled brow. Art and music are in this happy home. Miss Osee Monnette has the "gift divine" of making the canvass live with nature's beauty, and her deft pencil has put some of Heston's admirable pictures into color. Our friends think some of coming to California for its lovely climate and sublime scenery, and I don't blame them for thus desiring the garden of the world, but so long as they stay in Iowa they will keep our banner bright against the darkness of superstition, for Iowa, just now, is as near to paradise as any land can be, and I have an idea that if the churches should go the blizzards and cyclones would also depart. Some how or other, church steeples and cyclones have a tendency to be together, and whenever the one comes along the other is sure to be in its way.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Kunath, L. Crumrine, C. E. Carpenter, R. W. Johnson, C. H. Shaw—of Marshalltown—and others, are among the warm-hearted friends I met at this point. I hope that I shall be able to return to Orient, for I believe that a good organization can be started here. I like the people.

Wednesday I leave Orient for the eastward journey. I stop for a few moments to see our stalwart Liberal, Phil A. Derr, at Creston, who keeps the Investigators and Truth Seekers doing duty all the time. There is a large miscellaneous element of Freethought at Creston, but it is difficult to bring it into action. I may lecture at Creston on my return.

From Creston I take my way, or rather the cars take me, to Ottumwa. I find that Wm. Lindsay is on a journey to Ohio to see old friends, and I missed his kindly welcome. My comrade, R. L. Tilton, of far New Hampshire days and school days long ago, is still at his post, growing more popular, and the favorite of his place for a seat in Congress. He is a Republican and has got the figures down pretty fine on protection, and has the several tariff bills by heart, and he knows how to make a rattling Republican speech. On the other hand, my friend Truss, of Denver, is an ardent free-trader and doesn't go a cent on the "God of Protection." I find the Liberals to be about equally divided on the present issue, and therefore I have come to the conclusion that the country won't be ruined, whatever happens. I don't care how big a tariff is put upon orthodoxy, or how much free-trade there is in Freethought. I have also a very funny fact for our Prohibition friends to consider. There is scarcely a town in Iowa where one cannot procure all the whisky he wants, but it is almost impossible to get beer. This is a fact. Prohibition actually increases the sale of whisky. Those who drink the lighter beverage are compelled to resort to the "strong drink."

I am sorry our Ottumwa friends could not secure a hall for lectures. The elegant hall which they used to have for all occasions is now in other hands, and at present there is no suitable place for meeting. But our friends at this point are endeavoring to secure a good central location, and will keep the flag up. I may lecture here on my return if the hall is secured. I had a pleasant call on friends McCarroll, Winn, Bolton, Wegg, Captain Evans, postmaster, Mr. Duffy, etc., and I find they don't propose to give up the ship, although the winds and currents are not always favorable. Friend Wegg was once the pupil of Joseph Barker, when he was in the Methodist church. Wegg afterwards met Barker in this country when both had become Infidels. Barker said that it was impossible for him ever to be a Christian again. But he died, after all, in the bosom of the church; a melancholy conclusion of a brilliant career.

I also spent an hour or two tackling Cardinal Manning's article in the last North American Review. It is a shrewd defense of the church, but what a perversion of history, and what sophistry! Manning has a very small idea of nature and humanity. If anything extraordinary happens it must be supernatural. That, however, which proves the church to be supernatural would equally prove the Republican or Democratic party to be supernatural. The only difference is in the length of time, otherwise the logic is the same. The Republican and Democratic parties are "palpable facts," like the church. Through many diversities and changes a surprising unity has been preserved, of doctrine and sentiment. According to the logic of Manning, all that is necessary to make the Republican or Democratic party a "divine institution" is for either to exist eighteen hundred years; claim without cessation divine inspiration, and the mere fact that a party thus exists and preserves unity is demonstration that it is of God. Manning's logic makes everything divine which has the voice to make the claim and the brute force to back it up.

I travel Thursday afternoon to Cedar Rapids. There are some Liberals here, but those I once knew are gone away and I had to pass this point without doing anything. Friday, as I am waiting to take the train for Stanley, I meet my friends, Mr. and Mrs. Brewer, of West Union, where I am to lecture on Sunday and Monday next. My friends have been taking an eight-weeks' trip to New York state, where they used to live forty-five years ago. What wonderful changes have taken place since that time, when Rochester was considered to be out West.

At Oelwein I leave our West Union friends and run down to Stanley to spend a day or two with friend Wm. Redfield, who has a big farm; and alongside him Alex. Risk has another big farm. These are among our pioneers and leaders in this part of the country. I arrived in the afternoon, and a good rest I have until Sunday. Nothing to do, and that just suits me for the time being. However, looking over the broad acres, and the immense corn-fields with friend Redfield, we were caught in a sudden shower which poured down quite furiously, but a rousing fire was built in the kitchen and I was soon comfortable, and cared not for the stormy weather. It rained quite hard during the night, but this morning it cleared off splendidly, and I revel in the sunshine while I write these notes.

Mr. Redfield came to this country in 1849. In 1852 he crossed the plains to California. He struck it pretty rich at Yreka, where he owned two placer mines, from which sometimes a hundred dollars a day were realized. However, it wasn't all easy sailing. They would get snowed in occasionally and have nothing but meat for breakfast, dinner, and supper. When the first mules broke in across the Siskiyou with packages of flour, it sold at the rate of three dollars a pound. Afterwards, when about a hundred and fifty mules came in, it went down to a dollar and a quarter a pound. A loaf of bread about as large as a big biscuit sold for a dollar. Friend Redfield bought one for each meal, and it cost him three dollars a day for bread, not counting other luxuries. He returned to Iowa expecting to make the Golden State his home, but his friends persuaded him to stay, and here he has been ever since, one of the leading farmers and business men of the state. He now owns about a thousand acres, but he is not the slave of his land. He enjoys life. He took a trip to Europe during the Exposition at Paris. He was at our Congress last year and he purposes to be at Pittsburgh this year. He is a thorough-going Liberal, and is not afraid of hard work for the cause. He has laid out a week's campaign for me in Fayette county, and I expect to have a splendid time soldiering it with so lively a companion. He takes me with his own team all around—to West Union, twenty-five miles off, to Maynard, Oelwein, Aurora—and I am sure no one can look forward to a more enviable experience. We can travel by moonlight and starlight, and morning and evening, and camp where we will, and do just as we please, though the whistle may blow and the bell may ring.

I shall have a good deal to write about next week, from this point. I shall meet with many friends.

Ere I close this letter I must speak a word in memory of Mrs. Sarah Trullinger, the wife of our noble Liberal G. J. Trullinger, president of our Secular Union at Molalla. I saw her when I lectured there, and there was no thought of death. I could scarcely believe it when I heard that the dark shadow had fallen, that this loving and beloved wife and mother and friend was gone—embarked on that mysterious stream whose voiceless waters give no message to our ear. Angels nor God shine on the bosom of that endless river. The consolations of the church make death no less a tragedy, no less an infinite sorrow, no less an infinite gloom. It is love here and now that must glorify the love that is forever gone. Out of this world of sunshine and affection must breathe the immortal hope. Strew the grave with flowers and tears. It shall be a sweet remembrance for nobler toils and fairer days. Out of the darkness shall be woven the tenderest links of friendship and humanity.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Stanley, Iowa, Sept. 15, 1888.

THEY WANT A SUNDAY LAW.

A speaker at a recent meeting of the Monday Club of the Congregational ministers of this vicinity, after calling attention to the fact that church attendance was meagre, said that as the Mosaic law was the right hand of the Jewish religion in the old dispensation, so in the new dispensation we should call the civil law to the aid of the Christian religion.

To this end he would at once establish a Sunday law.

There is no doubt that San Francisco and other cities are just as wicked on Sunday as on any other day, and just as good; and that which is wrong on Sunday is equally reprehensible throughout the week. One does not have to go far on Monday to witness carnivals of intemperance and vice. The same statement holds good as applied to Tuesday, and so of Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday. There are laws against crime and disorderly conduct at all times, but these are not what the clergy are especially interested in enforcing. The fact is that in California the theatres and other places of amusement are open upon the weekly holiday and are patronized by thousands of respectable people. What the clergy want is a law that shall close these places of amusement on Sunday. They are shortsighted enough to believe, or desperate enough to hope, that if people could not attend a game of baseball or a circus they would do the thing nearest to it and go to church. They want the experiment tried. They are willing and anxious that San Francisco should be like Toronto, in Canada, where the sale of newspapers and sodawater is suppressed by law on the so-called Sabbath. They would like to stop the running of cars to the Park, the Presidio, and the Cliff House. They want a religious law that shall recognize their claim that Sunday is too holy for anything but preaching and church-going. Maybe the clergy can get laws of this sort passed. They are numerous and powerful and zealous. Politicians are subservient; the "religious racket" is their best game. The people are generally indifferent, and enjoy their liberties without thought of either losing or defending them, if threatened.

The trouble seems to be that the preachers are hypocritical in their Sunday-law advocacy, and base it upon false claims. If they want to suppress secular pursuits on Sunday they should say so. If they wish to suppress vice and crime, let them attack these evils on every day of the week. When iniquity shall have been done away with from Monday to Saturday, inclusive, Sunday will take care of itself.

THE CONGRESS AND METHODS OF PROPAGANDA.

Next week the Congress of the American Secular Union meets in Pittsburgh, Pa., and all the working Liberals of the country are interested in its action. Who will be next president of the Union? who will be secretary? what will be the outline of work proposed?—these are questions which those most intimately associated with the present administration are as powerless to answer, and as ill prepared to guess at, as the most remote Freethinker who has never heard of the organization. We can only wait.

Meantime, while waiting and hoping for the best, let us present a plan of action proposed for Western Secularists by a sturdy Montana Liberal. He says:

"The Liberal press and lecturers should go hand in hand. The lecturer will reach thousands who never read a paper. Besides this, the people of the West want sound men upon the platform, and not cranks. They want men who can handle a subject without every few minutes hissing out through grated teeth, "Hell-fire and brimstone." And in my opinion the Liberal cause needs men to go around delivering a few stereotyped lectures on anti-biblical subjects not so much as men who only make this incidental to their main purpose; the main purpose being to instruct the Liberal masses on the importance of organization, and in the objects and requirements of the organization. If every Liberal in the United States could be caused to contribute $1 per annum to the cause, it would put the National movement upon its feet financially. This has led me often to wonder why our Congress does not district the country and send lecturers and organizers into the strongholds of Liberalism, such, for instance, as the Pacific Coast states and territories, and in that way amass the financial ammunition to batter down the strongholds of orthodoxy. I believe that could the Liberals even of Montana (and I presume that California can show up ten Liberals to Montana's one) be induced to contribute $1 to the National cause it would create a fund of $12,000 or $15,000. Besides this, if the matter were properly placed before them by competent persons, divested of all crankism; the importance of organization thoroughly explained to them, and also that of the object of the organization; the encroachments it proposes to meet and the objects it proposes to accomplish, together with the necessity of financial aid, and the necessity of organization to that end, I believe the Liberals of Montana can be organized."

How practical this plan would prove we do not know. No one can know until it is tried. Certainly there are Liberals enough in the West to form a gigantic organization, and there is enough for such an organization to do in practical, everyday politics. Honest government is desired by Liberals everywhere, and honest government can be realized nowhere so long as religion and religious institutions are supported and fostered by public funds. We know not what will be done elsewhere, but we believe that the New Year will bring some developments in this immediate vicinity. The attempt at least will be made.

THE OLDER CHURCH.

While we differ theologically with the Rev. Bishop Vladimir, whose answer to our inquiry concerning the relative ages of the Greek and the Roman churches appears in this paper, we are inclined to the belief that he makes good his claim for the superior antiquity of the Eastern church. The pretense of the Roman Catholic church that St. Peter consecrated anybody in Rome is without the shadow of a foundation. The churches at Rome were not founded by Peter, as they existed before he went there. No history assumes to trace the connection of Peter with the popes. The traditions of the church are the only link, but as those traditions were manufactured to fit the necessities, they lack all the elements of reliability.

The claims of the Eastern or Greek church are more difficult to combat. There appear to have been churches founded by somebody shortly after the beginning of the Christian era, out of which has grown the great Greek Catholic church with its 90,000,000 to 100,000,000 adherents. We are glad to see the claims of this church brought forward. While in itself it is a huge religious despotism, it puts the greater despotism—the Roman church—upon the pillory and exposes its arrogant pretensions.

Probably no Catholic bishop has ever before had a hearing in a Freethought paper, and probably many Freethinkers will now for the first time learn something of the history of a Christian organization that denounces the pope as a Protestant.

FREETHOUGHT has received a communication to which is appended the name of Dr. J. L. York, and in which the charge of S. P. Putnam that Dr. York has acted as the purveyor of scandal is virtually admitted. Dr. York justifies his course by pleading that it was told to him by others, among them the editor of the Truth Seeker. We are authorized to deny that the editor of the Truth Seeker ever told Dr. York anything of the kind. Dr. York's present disposition to gossip is a passing whim of his, which we expect he will get over in due time. Those who have heard Dr. York lecture say there is good material in him, and that with a modified method of expression he would do the best of work. We merely wish to put people on their guard against this weakness of the old gentleman. Having done that, we wish him success in all good work, and drop the subject. It is our particular mission to work for Liberalism, and in this work we find no call to deny any good words spoken of those who are devoted to the same cause.

We have received the names of ten Gift Subscribers from Mr. John McGlashan, of Ukiah, Cal., who writes: "I have made the inclosed list of names for you to send the paper to, thinking it will do the most good both to the paper and the cause it advocates, and sincerely hoping that you may have many more like subscribers; for we can all do something, however little, in so noble an effort as that of trying to some extent to redeem humanity from one of the most useless, tyrannical, and mind-destroying fallacies that the human family is suffering with." We indorse this precept and approve of the example highly. A few good lifts at the start often put a climber where he can make his own way without being boosted.

WE deem it the part of wisdom to withhold from publication several letters received touching upon unimportant questions that concern only a few individuals. As long as men and women have tongues and pens and paper and ink they will say and write things that they will afterwards wish to recall. To print is to perpetuate. Let us discuss great principles, leavening the debate with harmless pleasantries. For the sake of peace we are willing to admit much. We will admit that the present incumbent does not know how to run a paper; that our printers are ignorant of the typographic art; that our correspondents are insane; that our editorial comments are idiotic; that our advertisements are immoral; that Wieland's lager beer is not the best; that Jonas and his whale have no place in our columns; that gossip is the soul of virtue; that to slander our representative men is the best way to gain respect for the cause; that we are physically, morally, and mentally incapable of good, and that the editor of the foremost Liberal paper of the country has said so; that this is no place for us; that there are no live Liberals in the state or on the Pacific slope; that Clark Braden is a gentleman; that we are not. All, anything, everything, we are willing to admit in the cause of harmony. And having admitted these charges, our Christian friends and other enemies will be absolved from the burden of further making them. Let us now proceed with the regular order of business.

OUR proposition to establish a court for the trial of religious assumptions is generally indorsed. There are in this city a number of Liberal judges who could doubtless be induced to sit upon the case. The only question that seems to stand in the way of a successful trial is that of the nature of evidence. We doubt if the Christian church has any evidence that could be admitted in a court under the ordinary rules. Its witnesses are all dead, and they left no authentic depositions; there are no affidavits except in the Mormon branch of Christendom; no miracle can be proved by people who saw it. All the Christians can present will be the say-so of somebody that somebody else said so. It will require a judge of very broad and Liberal views to preside at this trial, and his ruling must relax much of its ordinary judicial severity. Still the Freethinkers can afford to be magnanimous, and will accept such testimony as the religious world may be able to present, and the jury will accord it all the weight it is entitled to.

THE Secular Thought Publishing Company, of Toronto, Ont., is no more, as "Alastor" puts it, "either in theory or in fact." "Indiscretion and over-zeal led to something like dissension," and the company dissolved. This will not affect the publication of Mr. Watts's paper, Secular Thought, which will continue in new hands. The paper, we learn, is not financially self-supporting, but it is hoped to raise a sufficient sum to pay its way until it becomes so and to induce Mr. Watts to remain in Canada, where a Freethought paper is certainly much needed.

THE Baptist preachers of Oakland are in trouble. They want the Rev. W. T. Fleanor to pack up and leave the place, but he won't do it. On the contrary, he has organized a new church and will stay. Mr. Fleanor was formerly pastor of the San Pablo Avenue Baptist church, and having been charged with ministerial conduct, his congregation rose up and dismissed him. Some, however, who still believe in the long established ministerial prerogative of the pastoral visit and its perquisites, went out with him; hence the new church. The Rev. Mr. Fleanor should at once put himself in communication with the Rev. Mr. Downes, of Boston, whose success as an independent preacher has been marked. They are both tarred with the same stick.

WE see no reason why the series of lectures to be delivered in this city by Mr. S. P. Putnam during the month of January next should not be largely attended and a most successful course. The evenings of January 6, 13, and 20 will be filled up with lectures. On Sunday morning, afternoon, and evening, January 27, it is designed to hold a convention, to which all the Liberals of the coast are invited, for the purpose of effecting a grand Pacific Coast organization. Monday and Tuesday evenings, January 28 and 29, will be devoted to celebrating the 152d anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine. Much depends upon a good beginning, and it now looks as if this movement would start under the most favorable auspices.

THE Indianapolis Ironclad Age is in error when it states that the Secular lecturer is debarred from going into any argument on the merits—the truth or falsity—of the Christian religion or Bible. The Secular lecturer is not debarred from discussing any question he chooses to discuss. Further, the Ironclad Age is guilty of indiscretion when it quotes with approval from Col. J. Rains Bundy of the R.-P. Journal. A gentleman who has for some years watched the course of Bundy reaches the conclusion that the editor of the R.-P. would "publish an article against his own mother's virtue if by so doing he could make a dollar or create a sensation."

SOME six-month subscriptions to FREETHOUGHT, taken in the early part of the year, have now expired. We shall be glad to receive renewals whenever it is convenient for our friends to make them.

"THE SABBATH IMPOSTURE."

With this title we have just issued in neat pamphlet form the series of essays by Harry Hoover which appeared in FREETHOUGHT under the head of the "Holy Sabbath." It is a thorough exposure and refutation of the claim that Sunday is the Sabbath or that it was ever established or observed as a holy day previous to Constantine. It proves, in fact, what everybody ought to know, that Sunday observance is an infringement of liberty, unauthorized by even the founders of the church, and, like the rest of the religious system, an impudent humbug.

The pamphlet sells for 10 cents.

KIND FRIEND: If you receive a sample copy of this issue of FREETHOUGHT, please regard it as an invitation to subscribe—and accept the invitation. One subscription, $2; two subscriptions, $3; three subscriptions, $4; four subscriptions, $5.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM has the following lecture appointments:

Pittsburgh, Pa. . . . . Sept. . . . . 30 New York . . . . . Oct. . . . . 12
Secular Union Congress, Oct. 5, 6, 7, 8

CAPT. ROBERT C. ADAMS, of Canada, has been lecturing in Maine.

W. F. JAMIESON will deliver courses of lectures in Alamosa and Monte Vista, Colorado, in October. He will respond to calls for lectures East or West. Address him at Monte Vista, Colorado.

JNO. GEO. HERTWIG, of Washington, D. C., desires lecture engagements. He is a radical on religious and public questions generally. Although a German, he will lecture in English. Box 706, Washington, D. C.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The Italians of this city and elsewhere celebrated last Sunday the 17th anniversary of Italian unity and freedom from papal control.—The Republicans of San Francisco had a monster parade last Saturday night. An interesting feature of this occasion was Col. John S. Mosby.—There are 2,000 fewer voters registered at the City Hall this year than at the same time in the last presidential election.—A gang of mail robbers attacked a train on the Southern Pacific road near Harwood, Texas, last Saturday night, but were repulsed, and went away carrying with them two of their number who had been wounded.—The reports of the prevalence of small-pox in Oregon are said to have been greatly exaggerated. There are but few cases, and all precautions have been taken to prevent the spread of the disease.—Denis Kearney and Stephen Maybell addressed an anti-Chinese Democratic mass meeting at the Metropolitan Temple, this city, last week.—The fall of an elevator in the Bancroft building, seriously injuring several persons, will probably lead to the passage of a law fixing the responsibility in such cases. Both the owners and the manufacturers in this case are seeking to evade the burden.—If President Cleveland signs the new exclusion bill no more Chinese laborers can be landed in America under any pretext.—John L. Sullivan, the champion pugilist, is reported seriously sick.—The Swiss of Sonoma and Marin counties celebrated September 20, their national independence day, at Petaluma, with a fine parade and profuse decorations.—The Lick Hotel has been sold to Senator Fair for $1,250,000.—A fund is being raised for the benefit of the parents of Golden-son, who are very poor.—Edward Young, the son of an English clergyman, was found dead in an opium den at Walla Walla, W. T., one day last week.

It is hoped that the worst of the yellow fever plague at Jacksonville, Fla., is over. The disease has spread to New Orleans, La., and Nashville, Tenn.—The Socialists of New York will hold a convention and nominate national, state, and city tickets.—A pugilist named George Fulljames was killed in a prize fight at Grand Forks, Dak., last week by a blow over the heart.—The railroad officials of Canada treat Chinese passengers as merchandise, and it is expected that trouble will arise over indignities offered to three Mongolian ambassadors who were recently forced to ride in a box car.—Anna Dickinson is stumping Indiana for the Republican ticket.—The steamer Etruria on her last trip cut down the time in crossing the Atlantic to 6 days 1 hour and 50 minutes, a gain of 30 minutes.—Information has reached Washington that the Chinese government has rejected the latest treaty offered by the United States.—The district attorney of New York is thinking of prosecuting Herr Most, the Anarchist, for recent inflammatory utterances.

Last Sunday at Arcis-sur-Aube, France, a monument was dedicated to Danton, one of the French revolutionists.—Marshal Bazaine, a noted figure in the wars and politics of France, died at Madrid, Spain, Sept. 23.—The Nord, a German paper, referring to the suspicion that the Chinese are prospecting in Siberia and seeking there an opening for emigration instead of in America and Australia, says that Russia would not allow Chinese immigration to Siberia.—The late monarch of the kingdom of Oudh, in India, died intestate, leaving 284 widows unprovided for. The viceroy of India and his advisers have set apart $6,000 per month out of the dead monarch's estate for the support of the bereaved relicts.

THE W. C. T. U. A DANGEROUS ORGANIZATION.

In a letter to Elizabeth Cady Stanton, published in the Woman's Tribune, Matilda Joslyn Gage says:

I neglected to say that several of the state Prohibition conventions refused to put in a woman suffrage plank at all. The New York convention of Prohibitionists was held in Syracuse not long since, and a battle occurred over woman—who was defeated. You should have seen some of the delegates—Methodist brethren, too holy to exist. Another thing which makes this party one of extreme danger is the Women's Christian Temperance Union, upon which the Prohibition party depends for success.

Mrs. Chandler, in an open letter to Miss Willard, shows that the Women's Christian Temperance Union, at the Vermont convention, declared its belief in Christ as "the author and head of government," who should be recognized in all political platforms. Six more state Prohibition conventions have since indorsed this resolution, while the National Reform Association, through its secretary, distinctly states that the party that acknowledges the authority of God in civil government pledges itself "to choose for office only such as fear God."

This looks like a return to the middle ages and proscription for religious opinions, and is the great danger of the hour. The Catholics are full of it, the Episcopalians alongside of them, the Presbyterians not far off, the Methodists falling into line.

The great dangerous organization of the movement is the Women's Christian Temperance Union; and Francis Willard, with her magnetic force, her power of leadership, her desire to introduce religious tests into the government, is the most dangerous person upon the American continent to-day. The Council opened my eyes as never before. I am glad, oh, so glad, that Susan B. Anthony does not favor the Prohibition party. I have some hope for her yet, although she does not see the real danger.

You and I must stand firm; we have a great tide to stem, a great battle yet before us. We must have no religious test for anything. Get ready for a strong fight.

Sincerely yours, MATILDA JOSLYN GAGE.

GREEK AGAINST ROMAN.

Last week we received an inquiry from a subscriber who desired to know which was the older, the Roman or the Greek Catholic church. We answered the question according to the best light we enjoyed and then referred it to the bishop of the Greek church in this city, Brother Vladimir. The following is the reply. It is addressed "To His Honor Mr. G. E. Macdonald," and says:

C. Pahugucko, 20 Sepemb, 1888yr.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your question concerning the comparative antiquity of the Greek and Roman churches, I will present the true historical facts as opposed to the theological theory of the Roman-papish priests. Behold:

1. The first ecumenical council of the apostles (as you may see from the fifteenth chapter of the Acts of the Apostles) was not held in Rome, but in Jerusalem.

2. The first bishop, successor of Jesus Christ, was Jacob of Jerusalem. He was also president of the apostolic council, and his last words upon circumcision and the Jewish rites decided the question; all the apostles and St. Peter obeyed him.

3. All of the apostles wrote their gospels and epistles in the Greek or Hebrew language. Even the epistle of St. Paul to the Romans was written in Greek.

4. Three centuries of early Christianity knew no Latin Bible, all scripture being written in Greek, except a little in Hebrew.

5. The apostles, preaching in the Roman empire, spoke in the Greek language. St. Peter, after departing from the church of Jerusalem, was bishop of the Greek town of Antioch. During seven years afterward he preached and lived much in Egypt, with his disciple Marcus [Mark?], and both founded theological schools in Alexandria.

6. Only at the end of his life was St. Peter dragged to Rome to meet the death of a martyr.

7. Neither was St. Paul a bishop of Rome, but, like St. Peter, near the end of his life he was brought to Rome for trial and painful death. Church history does not know precisely who, during the first century, founded a Christian church in Rome. Peter and Paul found there an organized church, because many Christians of Palestine fled from persecuting Jews to the capital of the world, and, preaching the gospel, founded a church. In that time of fervent Christian zeal all Christians were missionaries.

8. All the twelve apostles and the disciples of Christ founded churches in the East, and Paul, Peter, Andrew, and Marcus in the West, but no one of them was the founder of a church in Rome. We have St. Jacob of Jerusalem, St. Peter of Antioch and Alexandria, St. John of Ephesus, Sts. Paul, Luke, Timothy, Titus, and many others, founders of our churches in the East; and recent orthodox bishops of Greece, Russia, Servia, Turkey, Bulgaria, Montenegro, Roumania, Egypt, parts of Asia, Japan, and America, are true and uninterrupted successors of the apostolic founders of their respective churches; but no one knows from whom the first bishop of Rome received consecration. Doubtful tradition says that Clement, the second bishop of Rome, was consecrated by the hand of St. Peter. Nobody from the apostles, for a long time, lived at Rome; and for this reason, the mere tradition of the Romish church is unworthy the name of historical truth.

The church of Rome fell into many errors, became apostate from the faith of the true apostolic church, and in later days has invented doctrines too monstrous for the human conscience, as witness the dogma of the infallibility of the pope, a heresy that gives to a single man the power of God in church affairs. The errors of the Roman church sprung up because the Western community of Christians never had the apostolic tradition in the true sense of the word. The center of true Christian conscience was with the Eastern Catholic church.

Behold, the first ecumenical council was held in Greece, at Nicea, and there was no pope of Rome. Other ecumenical councils have been held in Greece, without the presence of popes, but with the holy ghost, who, we hold, lives only in the true orthodox church of our savior and apostles, and who alone makes decisions on religious questions infallible.

Now our true Catholic orthodox church governs by four patriarchs east of Jerusalem—Antioch, Alexandria, Constantinople—and the holy synods of Russia, Greece, Athens, Servia, Bulgaria, and Montenegro. We have many orthodox potentates, the emperor of Russia, and kings and dukes. They are all sons of the orthodox church and obedient to her laws and customs.

Different countries and potentates belong to our church, with about one hundred million believers, but the unity and autarchy in orthodox churches are perfect, because the power to govern rests not with man, who is sinful, but with the holy ghost in the councils, who there makes decisions, in matters of salvation, that are infallible, as in the councils of the apostles. The head of our church is Christ; we have no pope, no emperor as lawgiver in faith except the savior.

In that unfortunate affair, the apostasy of the popish church from the orthodox faith, the best and most impartial judge is the history of the church. That is the true basis for a rightful decision of the question. If any church keep without corruption the apostolic faith and the constitution of the seven ecumenical councils, that church has divine right to excommunicate all sects and communities if they become apostates from the order of apostolic institutions.

As long ago as the ninth-century the papal community began to rapidly apostatize from the apostolic ideal in governing church affairs. Church councils at length lost due power, and the pope of Rome became the despotic governor in all spiritual affairs of the Western Christian communities. Among the good popes there were heretics, anathematized by ecumenical councils, and sinners in faith and morality. The Western church, up to the time of the Reformation, was the obedient servant of the popes, and committed errors with them both in faith and morality. (1) By order of the pope and Emperor Charles the Great, in the orthodox creed, filioque (and from the son) was introduced against ecumenical law, and is still recognized by the pope. (2) "Purgatory" was invented by the popes. (3) Indulgences were also invented. (4) The apostolic institution of the fast on Friday was transferred to Saturday. (5) All clergymen were prohibited from marrying. (6) The pope became secular sovereign and murderer of the guilty and innocent alike. (7) The pope approved the profligacy of his friends the Jesuits. (8) Invented the "immaculate conception." (9) The latest dogma of papal infallibility, etc.

Such teachings are unknown to the apostolic orthodox church. You may thus see clearly that the popes and their subservient communities are apostates to the ancient Catholic faith.

Historical facts must teach you that the Eastern orthodox church was the mother of the Western. The pope of Rome, proud, overbearing, and wealthy, showed to Eastern Christianity the daughter's intention to rebel against the law of the mother. In such a case every mother has the right to banish the impenitent daughter from her house, but all mankind agree that the daughter cannot excommunicate the mother if the latter be in the right before God and man. The Romish organization has been excommunicated by the orthodox church because it was seen that antichristian spirit was ruling the papal hierarchy. And the true church was not mistaken, for after excommunication, in the tenth century, and during many hundred years the abuses of the popes covered Europe and nearly all parts of the world with blood and dissension.

In my missionary work in Japan, and traveling in India and different parts, East and West, I myself experienced that domineering and persecuting spirit of the Roman-popish clergy. For one example: In the Island of Ceylon (south of India) I called at a large Portuguese Jesuit institution and asked the privilege of seeing it. The chief of that institution in Colombo was very rude in his conversation with me, saying, "You are a rebel against the pope." He berated me much and showed me nothing. I answered him: "History says that the popish church is daughter of the Eastern orthodox church, and a rightful mother cannot be a rebel against her daughter, if she banish her for disobedience; but all nations agree that the unruly daughter is a rebel against her mother and may be punished if she will not make herself poor in spirit, and penitent."

Eastern patriarchs in a letter to the pope (1844) called him the first protestant against the authority of divine law as held by the orthodox church, and predicted that popish errors, current at the time, must disappear like the widespread Arianism in the fourth century, and that the unchangeable apostolic truth of the orthodox church must fill all the world with joyful unity of faith and morality. There must be one true church of the Christians, and all communities at variance with her in dogma and canon of morality are excommunicated by her and cannot be called churches, but sects, no matter how large they are.

You will now understand that the Greek church is mother of all other churches, and had divine right to excommunicate disobedient Christians like the pope and his clergy. I have the honor to be
Your obedient servant, VLADIMIR,
Bishop of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands.

VOLTAIRINE'S LETTER.

My trip to Philadelphia was closed with a visit to the House of Correction, where religion is the only thing that is paid for; the Zoological Gardens, where the beasts of earth and fowls of the air are represented, two after his kind, and one can get a slight idea of the necessary size of Noah's ark and the amount of work the Noahs had to do in caring for the animals; the huge establishment of pious John Wannamaker, who pays $3,000 for Munkacsy's "Christ" and gives his clerks from $3 to $6 per week for standing behind a counter; the United States mint, where good silver is turned into poor money; Independence Hall, where there is considerable hall and not much independence; the Art Museum, Academy of Design, Memorial Hall, Horticultural Hall, Public Buildings, etc. Nor ought I to omit the hour spent in the Independent Church; the Rev. Mr. Mangasarién (don't know whether that's the proper spelling—his name is 'Greek' to me) announced a prayerful hymn, the choir sang, and then (consistency, thou art a jewel) he gave as pure an Atheistic lecture as ever fell from the lips of man. This gentleman deserves credit, for he left one of the best paying positions in the city; resigning hell and the Presbyterian pulpit at the same time. He would do better, though, to quit the hymn singing, and join with the practical issues of united Secularism.

The 10th of June I once more had the pleasure of addressing the Pittsburgh Secular Union, and it is a real pleasure to meet this true-hearted band who have fought so steadfastly for ten long years. I hardly think the people of the broad, free West can realize how much that means. It is not quite as bad as Philadelphia—one would need to go to New Jersey and Delaware for that—but the press, the public school system, the business interests are so interwoven and bound in by "church and state" that the whole population is absolutely church-begotten and priest-ridden, and it is my solemn conviction that the hard work done by Liberals in times past and present is all that makes it possible for a Freethinker to live in it. Not but that its natural advantages are great. A more picturesque scenery, more blooming heights, more glowing skies, more sylvan streams can nowhere be found than in this most sylvan land of Penn; and many times have I marveled that where there are mountains there can be churches. Many times have I dreamed of what the natural man might possibly be if all the gods, and all the ghosts, and all the superstitious fears whose seeds, sown by ignorance in the minds of men, have been ripening and falling through all the ages, if all these beliefs in things we know not of were hidden away from his reach and only the pure knowledge of the absolute were taught him, what would be his dreams of the perfect, vested in these surroundings, by the magic coloring, the majestic grandeur of these cloud-wooling, time-defying hills. There is something so woefully incongruous in the combination of a mountain chain and a slave chain. Yet the vast majority of these people, and more especially in the country is this to be remarked, are slaves to such superstitions as, nurtured in the bosom a century gone, might properly grace the effete monarchies of the old world; but which to one who has heard from childhood up that this is a free country, and believed it, jar on the sensibilities like the harsh grating of a prison hinge. It is all very well for one to sit down on his own little plat of ground and say, "What's the use of quarreling with the churches? I've got all the liberty I want; it's a free country;" but when he gets up and runs around and finds he has chains on his legs, chains on his arms, chains on his pocket-book, chains on his brains, and very fortunate if he does not have chains round his neck, he won't go very far before he learns that the free country is a big cell where the other end of the chains all fasten in one staple—the God-idea.

One can't help but be amused at times by the obstinately argued fear of such men as O. S. Barrett, S. M. Bayard, and other Solons of like ilk, who are so afraid that woman's suffrage is going to make Christ the king of the United States. Why, bless you, gentlemen, Christ is the king; and if you had seen such able representatives of the voters of this country as I have, if you were familiar with the stolid faces of the coal miners of Pennsylvania, or the iron miners and the copper miners of Northern Michigan, toiling out a lifetime underground, draining the flaccid veins of their poverty to pay the taxes on the village lot the priest has picked out for them in a country no one ever saw, and reward the intelligent politician for making laws whose advantages to them are equally invisible; if you had conversed with these devout individuals who vote for King Christ and the Republican or Democratic candidate every election, gentlemen, I don't think you'd have so much time to waste on the terrible probabilities of the female voter. It's just a little out of place to cry out against Francis Willard, when you people who have assumed the right to dictate what laws we shall observe, without consulting us, have voted God in and kept him in for more than a hundred years. It would be in a little better taste for you to reform on yourselves before you assure us of our incompetency. You would render a far greater service to your cause if you would devote yourselves to discovering a remedy for the ignorance in your own church-cursed ranks, instead of following in the footsteps of your Christian brethren, and creating a terrible future to frighten yourselves with.

This digression was called out by the recollection of a certain audience of devout Christians who listened to my lecture on "Convent Life" last June. Through the kindness of Mr. John S. Byers, who is one of the most original thinkers I ever met, I occupied a platform at Weaver's Old Stand, some six miles from Greensburg. Such was the piety of these men and women that when they discovered what I was talking about (which owing to lack of perspicuity on my part, or obtuse comprehension on theirs, was not until the very close) they deserted almost in a body, during the recitation of Charles Stephenson's "Our Father in Heaven." Perhaps the discovery was owing to the little American Secular Union tracts which were distributed in the audience. At sight of Colonel Ingersoll's name down went the tract, and a look of pious terror spread over each separate countenance.

In such abhorrence is Freethought held that Mr. Byers, whose Agnosticism is outspoken, deemed it politic to keep himself entirely in the background, in order not to "scare the game." Yet to him alone belongs the main credit of this endeavor to enlighten the believers. No, not alone; kind old Mr. Null, who so hospitably entertained me at Greensburg, and my generous host and hostess at the Stand, are brave, true, honest thinkers; aye, more than that—doers; and they too deserve the tribute of grateful thanks.

En passant, it will not do to forget Mr. Byers's explanation of the inspiration business. It is as original as the man himself, and will serve to illustrate his quaint method of settling a Christian. Said a pious neighbor one day, "Our law was revealed to us by inspired writers."

"So? Well, what's to inspire?" Of course the usual answer followed. "Oh, no," says this unique thinker, "to inspire is to draw in your breath. An inspired writer is one who breathes, who lives. An expired writer is a dead writer. Certainly it was written by inspired authors." Dictionary students will observe the merciless correctness of this interpretation. "If you say anything about us, just tell them we are plain and homely folks," said my modest friend at parting. "Plain and homely folks." Ah, but I wish there were more plain and homely people in this world like them.

I had expected to lecture at Connelville, where a number of Liberals had resolved to organize; indeed, they had an excellent impetus given them by the Christians, if they had any bumps of combativeness, as they endeavored to prevent the Freethinkers from securing a hall, and in various other ways made themselves religiously obnoxious. But I am afraid it was a case of "The king of France and four thousand men Drew their swords, and—put them up again."

The great trouble with many of our people is a disposition to leave all the responsibility to one or two, and of course failure is the inevitable result. One or two can't fight the battles for all the rest.

The lecture season at Pittsburgh closed on the seventeenth of June, and the following Sunday Thomas Paine Camp Fraternal Legion, assisted by the Secular Secular Society, had a grand boat excursion down the Ohio. There are scenes of wonderful beauty on these rivers, when the perfume of summer goes floating by, when bright-winged things come fluttering through the air, when sweet arboreal harps, touched by the minstrel wind, vibrate through their green frames and their sunshine strings quiver in low response. At Davis's Island Dam, the volume of the river breaks and falls. The gold light upon the brow of the falling water glances off as an arrow shivered against steel armor, and below the churning foam the music rings like the song of the "Magic Flute." The little ripples come dancing away like children laughing in their glee, and the laughter and dance got catching. Our young folks (and some of the old folks too) who would just as lief be natural on Sunday as any other day paired off, cleared the floor, and then measured the boards with their feet. Not being initiated in Terpsichorean mysteries myself, I looked on, and gruesomely wished I were.

There were lots of good things to eat on board—they don't require initiation to understand—and we feasted and speechified and laughed and made merry, as picnic parties are wont to do.

The following Tuesday I said good-bye to Pittsburgh, ticketed myself to Ashtabula, spending a pleasant week with "Ethical Culture" friends, then accepted the inevitable (my old enemy the Lake Shore road) to Cleveland. A visit to the Garfield monument, in that beautiful Lakeside home of the forever quiet, where the green mounds roll like broken waves at your feet and the blue waves roll like broken mounds in the distance, where the last peace, pausing before each sleeper, has kissed him silent and left him so, has left with me a never-to-be-forgotten impress, a softened memory whose perfume is like that of a pressed flower.

Mr. S. F. De Jones, who had the kindness to show me the different points of interest in the Forest City, is like a fish out of water. He is one of the radical Radicals, and the present inert condition of Liberalism in Cleveland is not a very bracing atmosphere for an enthusiast.

The trip up Lake Erie—it was grand. First the nightfall, the stars, the shadows, the splashing water, the long, trembling, wavering, trailing wake. Then the soothing sleep, the light touch of dawn upon the eyes; the gathering clouds, the thunder rolling over the watery floor, the flashing caps, the snake-like glitter of the coiling waves, the rushing of the rain; the red light shimmering through the dying storm, the gray turned azure; and then, as hope still shines through sorrow, as love still woos through coldness, as liberty still bursts the best forged links of tyrants, glorious, grand, vibrating, irresistible, over the green waters of Lake Erie the morning broke! VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

A Letter from Ukiah.

To the Editors of Freethought:

On a recent Sunday evening, in Reed's hall, Elder Sharard, our Campbellite Christian minister, gave us an excellent temperance lecture principally from a scientific standpoint, illustrating the ravages of alcohol on the human system, from its incipency through all its varying stages—from the first beginning of the moderate drinker on down step by step to delirium tremens and an untimely grave.

His experiment by the application of small portions of alcohol at intervals to the albumen of an egg, was admirably well performed; the first draft simply thickening the egg slightly, each succeeding draft perceptibly increasing the cooking or hardening process, until the whole mass was pretty thoroughly cooked; thus in a striking manner representing the gradual, but sure, cooking and hardening process on the brain of the habitual drinker, the brain being largely albuminous and the effect of the alcohol on the brain quite similar to that on the egg. The elder being a fluent speaker and handling his subject in so masterly a manner, could not fail to make a good impression on his audience. Notwithstanding, I could but smile and in my own mind take some exceptions to a remark or two in the introductory portion of his lecture. In speaking of the progress of civilization, from the early centuries, he alluded to the different important discoveries and inventions of those times, each one marking a decided upward or elevating step in the progress of civilization—especially the invention of the printing-press. One of those important epochs enumerated by the speaker was that in which Peter the Hermit was the conspicuous leading spirit, namely, the holy crusades, for the purpose of rescuing the sepulcher of Christ from the hands of the Infidels, in which Peter, the crusade orator, with his ardent and vehement oratory, fired the Christian heart by the most extravagant promises and inducements to those of the faithful and all who would join in the ranks and take an active part in rescuing the sepulcher of Christ from the unholy hands. All those joining in the conflict were not only indemnified from all loss, but from all the claims standing against them for either debt or crime they were effectually absolved, and even those killed in the conflict were insured a safe passport through the gates of Paradise. The speaker unreservedly condemned these extravagant propositions as rewards, but had no word of condemnation for the war; it, he thought, was all right. Neither did he attempt to enlighten his audience as to the character of those infidels in possession of the empty sepulcher of Christ. This, whether or not for a purpose, certainly was a very grave oversight; as the unthinking or unread hearer is left to draw the conclusion that these legions of infidel warriors (whether rightfully or not) through conquest, in possession of the prize, are Infidels of the same character as Bolingbroke, Voltaire, Paine, and Ingersoll; whereas, if prostrate prayers five times a day will pass for a criterion of religious devotion, these infidels discount Christians in general by a hundred per cent, not excluding Brother Sharard himself. Now it would have taken but a few sentences to have set the minds of his audience right on this point, and while in the explanatory he could in a few brief sentences have informed us that both contending parties in this holy crusade were not only devoted religionists, but that they mutually anathematized each other as infidels. As somebody has said, Mohammed first coined this word for the Christians' benefit. Then, in beating up for volunteers, no doubt these Mohammedan infidels had their Peters and their Pauls, with their vehement eloquence, to fire the patriotism of the Mohammedan heart in defense of their possessions, and no doubt they were authorized to offer as high bounties and premiums to their recruits as the Christians dare offer. In all probability they could distance their adversaries as far in this particular as in their devotion and prayers.

Then another query. Why should Brother Sharard consider the empty tomb of Christ of so much value that he could indorse this series of nine different crusades, extending over a period of 177 years, with the sacrifice of millions of lives? For wherein is the superior value of this empty tomb over that of Lazarus or any other beggar. And again, why should he have the effrontery to condemn either party in this deadly strife for offering their respective recruits indemnities, bounties, and premiums, or even complimentary tickets as sure passports within the gates of the golden city? Is not Brother Sharard preaching on this same strain every Sunday, just as surely and as confidently as those Mohammedan infidels, or even Peter the Hermit? "No remission but by the shedding of blood," this at least implies remission by the performance of the act; and again, "He that believes and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." Is not this offering a premium or indemnity on the act of belief? But I await the next lecture for further elucidation and harmonizing of the questions involved in the holy crusades.

Ukiah, California,

T. McC.

Professor Seymour On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Sunday, Sept. 2, we were loaded into a "one-hoss shay," and bidding our host of the Pacific House at Oysterville a "Freethinker's farewell" of "may good bless you," we were driven out some rods into this rightly named Shoal Water Bay—for at low tide it is two-thirds a bare sandbar and looks very much like the sand plains of southern Arizona. After getting out to deep water, say three feet deep, we came to our ship, called the Plunger, simply a small sloop or fishing boat, that was to carry us to our next point of labor. The wind and tide being right, we were quickly gliding over the "oyster farms" that seem to occupy one-half of these shallow waters, judging by the stakes set out to indicate each man's claim. This oyster farming is something new to me and, likely, will be interesting to many of your readers. The natural oyster beds are in the channel where the water is deep; the oystermen go out when the tide is out and "spoon" them up with immense spoons, tongs, etc., and take them to the shallow places that are bare when the tide is out, and spread them carefully, or plant them, as they call it. They wait patiently for these little fellows to grow and become "phat;" then, when the tide is out, they hire Indians, children, and sometimes women, to pick out the big fine ones, those that have about got their growth, and put them into gunny sacks, and thus they are shipped to Astoria, Portland, and San Francisco, and perhaps East. They are worth, here, about $1 to $1.25 per bushel, shells and all. Men are getting rich here at this rather easy labor, but there is considerable danger of loss; for instance, I was told by several that they often lost five or eight thousand dollars' worth, in fact, their whole plant, by a severe frost when the tide was out, thus freezing to death the whole "herd." This often happens; they lose the whole season's labor and there seems to be no way to prevent it, as this kind of season can't be driven in of cold nights to good warm stables for safe keeping, the Noah story to the contrary notwithstanding. Every "biz" has its troubles and sorrows, even the itinerant lecturer in his half gipsy life.

We, the "jolly doctor" and myself, reached the "city" of Bay Center, some twelve miles from Oysterville and across the bay, all in good shape, and soon were billed for a lecture the same evening, in the school house. This is a very religious place and the inhabitants are said to be nearly all preachers, but we had the house crowded full; the best of attention was given and no exceptions taken to our line of thought, which was radical and very unorthodox. We gave only two lectures here, as there was a deficiency of the filthy lucre when the hat came back from its collecting tour, and we did not want to jump our board bill, so left on the steamer Volga for a trip up the bay to this place. They have some fine oyster farms near Bay Center, also a large cannery for canning salmon. The cannery runs two steam tugs around the bay each day, collecting up the salmon caught by the hundreds of fishermen in their nets, traps, etc. We stopped with Brother Bush and family, the leading merchant and postmaster of the place, as there was no hotel. They are a splendid family of finely educated and refined people, but we had to "attend prayers" morning and night, and wait, until the "grub" all got cold, for Brother Bush to get God to bless their little oysters and sich. This was trying to an Infidel's nerves, to say nothing about his stomach, but we were raised that way, so it did seem a little like old times to have God with us looking after our multitudinous wants. At any rate, we felt blessed along with this splendid family of humble Christians. May the dawn of intellectual liberty soon shine over their beautiful but dreadfully orthodox home, is the prayer of your humble servant. After my last lecture there a very large, animal-looking man was called out to have his character read. I found him very full just forward of the ears, with a very large coarse neck, and told the audience he was a great lover of the feminine world and yellow-legged chickens, which took the house down. After we went home Sister Bush scolded me a little, saying, "He is our Congregational preacher." Thus "murder will out" when the phrenologist is around. Here at South Bend I have given five lectures in their neat hall to good and intelligent audiences. This is the principal point on the bay and has a very large mill, docks, warehouses, etc., all situated at the mouth of the Willapa river, Pacific county, W. T. Small steamers are continually coming and going, and occasionally ocean vessels and steamers come in. There are no roads in this country. All travel is by water in skiffs and sail boats, tugs, etc. The country is so terribly rough and so densely timbered that it is almost impossible to make a road from point to point. There is any amount of government land here yet and fine timber on it, but how to utilize it is the question. Sometime, of course, it will be done, but there are very few settlers here yet compared with the room there is to give all a farm. It costs from one to two hundred dollars to clear an acre for farming; then here, near the coast, they cannot raise either small grain or corn, only hay, vegetables, and fruit. Lumbering, fishing, and oystering are about all there is done. Some bear and deer are killed; sometimes a whale drifts ashore; a shark was caught here a few days ago—tangled up in a fisherman's net—that measured 17 feet in length. Good place this, to go in bathing for your health. His teeth, I mean the shark's, were eight inches long. This is a fish story, but is vouched for as true. There are no liquors sold here nor at Bay Center, the first places I have lectured in, on this coast, where the accursed stuff has been kept out. Alcohol is the demon of this coast. It has such a hold everywhere that it is almost becoming popular. Oh, for the time to come when it and its twin sister, superstition, shall be buried in one common grave forever.

I met here that solid Freethinker and old-time Liberal, Dr. James Hayes, who has lived here for thirty years and has a beautiful home, on the banks of the Willapa river, where all is peace and comfort. The doctor is over 70 years old but hale and hearty, and is not afraid to strike a blow for universal mental liberty and the death of superstition. He was one of our best allies in getting up our lectures here. The doctor soon became a subscriber to "our paper." Our home here has been at the Foster House, one of the finest kept hotels on the Pacific coast of Washington Territory. Mr. Foster is a thorough-going Liberal, and showed it by ordering FREETHOUGHT. May his house ever be full, is the prayer of the Infidel. Judge Skidmore, another tall cedar from Lebanon or Missouri, it matters little which, took us yesterday—the skeleton doctor (he only weighs 240) and myself—in his pleasure boat some two miles up the "lovely Willapa," to his country seat to have a few days' rest from the never-ceasing round of the itinerant lecturer's life, and to become acquainted with his family. We found a most beautiful home, the yard crowded to repletion with flowers and fruits, and all that makes life enjoyable. The everlasting mountains with the dense forest of the giant evergreens come up close to his cozy home on one side, while the tide-waters from the ocean often sweep the bay and river to his very threshold. Everybody here travels by skiff, and they often tie their "team" to the doorstep of their home; a fine team, too, it is; it needs no feed or bedding, but is ever curried and ready for a "trot" on the rolling deep. The judge has lived here nearly thirty years, has only two or three acres cleared, but has many acres of tide-lands for hay and pasture, which are very valuable. We had a rousing time, and found the daughter and son cultured and refined although living away out here in this wilderness of hills and woods on the borders of the sunset land. We left them as the sun was dropping 'neath the distant sea, with many a kind good-bye.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

Is Controversy Dangerous?

NUMBER IV.

The attitude of the Christian church in regard to debate is peculiar. Controversy, the Christian observes, does not win converts to the church. If it did, he would pay his money as freely to sustain debate as he now does to uphold revivals of religion.

If free debate would win the rising generation over to the church, even to the meagre extent of religious revivals, the Christians would encourage debate as a means of grace. But the mass of Christians inveigh against it. Christian victory, then, does not lie in this direction. Christianity is surrounded to-day by more open enemies than ever before in its whole history—controversial enemies—who are convincing mankind that the Christian system is untenable; that its teachings are inconsistent, "flat, stale, and unprofitable;" more, that Christianity is positively immoral. Whether these allegations of the rapidly increasing Infidel hosts are true or false, the fact remains that tens of thousands, every year, are convinced that the allegations are true, among them thousands who once devoutly believed in Christianity, and who have been captured by Infidel arguments. Infidel appeals to reason and the Infidel's willingness to abide by the "test of free discussion" are winning more converts to the Free-thought cause than the church is gaining in membership. Ex parte efforts by the pulpit are rapidly losing their force over the minds of the people. Whatever victories the pulpit may have secured in bygone generations, it cannot be disguised that the Christianity of our time looks upon controversy as its most deadly enemy. It is a notorious fact that very few Christians have confidence enough in their own system, with all its prestige of age, wealth, fashion, schools, colleges, and churches, to place it side by side, in fair contest, with its rival power, modern Infidelity, which, unlike Christianity, is extremely fond of debate and esteems it its best friend.

It has been the custom for clergymen to represent that Infidel arguments are easily demolished. Safely behind that rampart of superstition, the pulpit, which, by common consent, is the "coward's castle," the Christian clergyman's refuge, stands the "defender of the faith." He hopes to destroy Infidelity with exclamations of horror over the amazing progress of doubt and skepticism. Rarely, if ever, is Infidelity fairly represented in the pulpit. This reason, alone, is sufficient to sustain the demand which Freethinkers everywhere make, that Christians meet them on a free platform where there can be a fair, courteous, dignified presentation of both sides. This is the only way that Infidelity can be vanquished. If Christian advocates can overthrow it in a joint oral debate we are willing that every community in the land should witness its discomfiture.

Such intellectual conflicts, although frowned upon by the church in general, are encouraged by the people, who instinctively love fairness. If Christians were as willing to have both sides of religious questions discussed as they are to have one side preached, Christianity might obtain a prestige which it can never win while cowering in abject fear in the dread presence of controversy; never, while it shows a face blanched with moral cowardice.

W. F. JAMIESON.

Monte Vista, Colorado.

THE RETURN TRIP.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places returning from the East:

Denver.....Col.,	Oct. 28	Davenport.....W. T.,	Nov. 17-19
Ogden.....Utah,	" 30-31	Sprague....."	" 20-21
M't'n Home...Idaho,	Nov. 2	Pasco....."	" 22-23
Boise City....."	" 3-4	Portland.....Or.,	" 25-26
Emmetts....."	" 5-6	Vancouver.....W. T.,	" 27-28
Pendleton.....Or.,	" 8-9	No. Yamhill.....Or.,	" 29-30
Walla Walla...W. T.,	" 10-11	Scappoose....."	Dec. 2
Spokane Falls...."	" 14-16	Snohomish.....W. T.,	" 8-10

It is desirable to announce the remainder of the appointments at the earliest possible moment. Will friends who wish lectures write at once to S. P. Putnam, care of E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago?

"THE Relation of the Sexes to Government" will be discussed by Prof. E. D. Cope, in the leading article of the October Popular Science Monthly; the differences between the two schools of hypnotizers will be set forth by Dr. Christian A. Herter; Mr. Robert Mathews will give a thoughtful view of our social outlook; "Spiders and their Ways" is the title of a generously illustrated article by M. Emile Blanchard, a French naturalist; and a paper is to appear on "Man in Relation to the Lower Animals," by Prof. Edwin Emerson.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 339 Eddy st., S. F.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gotlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History, of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S
GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Dr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months.
50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine
paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents;
paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS.

By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice. He writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" mediated valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

he Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.
PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.
33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,
Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.
Do not forget Street and Number,
357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)
ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face on hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $18, $17,
$18, $19.50; 5 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4,
being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best
14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest
style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies'
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$22; 15 jewels, $28. In good second quality filled cases, $2
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case.
Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1;
best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set
best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12.
Large field glasses, $3, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free.
BEST WORK. Try me.
Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
Badges in PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of cut and smaller.
two-thirds size. War-
ranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2.75, $3.50. Large,
$3 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $8, $10; and
charms up to $25. De-
mand daily increasing.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

"Zum Walfisch."

THE WHALE CHAS. A. JONAS, Proprietor.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars,

Cold Lager and Sharp Steam Beers.

24 THIRD ST., Near Market,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

JOHN WIELAND'S Lager Bier IS THE BEST. CALL FOR IT.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert
G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

F. SANGROVE, Merchant Tailor.

LATE OF LONDON AND PARIS,

All imported goods. Orders promptly attended. Prices moderate. Cleaning and repairing
neatly done.

Ladies' Cloaks and Riding Habits a Specialty.

F. SANGROVE, 104 FIFTH ST.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say
infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to
those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior
Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address.
Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San
Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS,
the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author.
Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 40.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - OCTOBER 6, 1888

SECRETARY E. A. STEVENS's tabular statement in the Truth Seeker of September 22 shows that in the Southern Division of Chicago there is $4,526,000 worth of ecclesiastical property which escapes a public tax of $4,526. The people who do not attend church bear the burden with extraordinary meekness.

Two of the five members of the Utah commission have filed a minority report with the secretary of the interior. They say: "We are thoroughly satisfied that the work of reformation in Utah is progressing rapidly, and that it will soon result in a successful issue without resort to legislation that is proscriptive of religious opinion. Our view may be epitomized in a few words: Punish criminal action, but religious creeds, never."

THE Christian Independent, erstwhile the Rev. George Sweeney's paper, has no end of tribulation. Sometimes the paper appears and sometimes it does not. Just now its whole plant is in the hands of the sheriff of Alameda county, subject to the order of the court in the suit of F. W. Smith. The Independent has been involved in difficulties from the start, and in spite of its piety the Lord has never prospered it. The way of the transgressor is mountainous.

A DISPATCH from New York to the Examiner says that Colonel Ingersoll will not enter the campaign as an orator under the auspices of the Republican Committee. These words are attributed to the colonel in answer to an inquiry: "I am not going to make any political speeches. My tongue is a free one, and there wouldn't be any use in trying to fetter it. I should say just what I believed on all the phases of the campaign, and that doesn't seem to be desirable; or at all events, it is not desired."

Two men have turned up within the past few days both claiming to be the messiah. One is Mr. Lewis Greensdale, who calls himself Lewis the Light. He was ejected last Sunday from Talmage's Tabernacle for announcing himself the savior of the world. He also entered another church, requesting to be shown to a seat, and was given one on the front doorstep. The second is Mr. A. J. Bogatsky, of this city, who thinks if Dr. Messing of the congregation Beth Israel had done his duty the world would have come to an end last week Thursday and he would have demonstrated his messianic mission by saving all the Jews as the chosen people. But saviors are not now appreciated. Mr. Bogatsky was committed to the Napa Insane Asylum, and the papers dismissed his case with the old familiar headline, "Crazed by Religion."

THE movers in the Chinese exclusion act seized a favorable opportunity when they selected the present era of political activity for the birth of the bill which President Cleveland has just signed. If the bill had proposed the expulsion of all natives of China from America it would doubtless have gone through with equal celerity. Both parties desire the California electoral vote; they want the laboring man's vote, and they will make pets of California and the laboring man until after the election; then look out for amendments, reconsiderations, and a general disregard by Eastern politicians of the interests of this coast, and by all politicians of the interests of the workingmen. The exclusion bill is a war measure, and both parties claim the credit of enacting it; yet sober-minded men, while they admit its value, do not hesitate to say that the motives which urged its passage are not of the sort that animate the true statesman. Nevertheless, let us be thankful for the bill, though it comes a quarter of a century late.

NEWS AND NOTES.

It was almost raining when Mr. Redfield and myself set forth for West Union, Sunday, Sept. 16. Evidently the equinoctial storm was endeavoring to give us a benefit. Now and then, however, the sun struggled forth amid the vast array of clouds, and blue patches were seen, and so we could hope for fair weather. Half way on our route is Fayette, where the Methodists have a college, and tired retired ministers love to congregate, and so it is a wonderfully pious place. It only needs that the clergymen play on harps to make it a typical orthodox paradise. Fayette is beautifully situated, and it might have been a flourishing burg had not this priestly shadow rested upon it. But it's no use; theology is the death of any business. A brood of clergymen hatch nothing but stagnation, and so Fayette is gone by the board. A solemn stillness pervades it. As we hear the bells ring, one might remark, "Hark from the tombs a doleful sound." However, the theologians don't have it all their own way, even in the shadows of the sanctuary. The Infidel is about with the telegraph and the lightning rod, and the sparks fly, and the radiance of earth dissipates the gloom of heaven. Our good staunch advocate, Daniel Davis, is here, and for many years has been a thorn in the side of the church, and its members haven't felt comfortable at all. Their foundations have been sadly shaken by the presence of unbelief. They would like to crucify the "heretic." Mr. Davis, however, was made one of the city officials, in spite of them, at the last election. The people have a mind of their own and the rule of the priest is gone by, but the struggle is not over.

Whenever there is a chance the ecclesiastics put on the screws. Every tradesman who comes to Fayette must belong to the church, or he won't sell any goods. He may charge more for his goods, but he must put in a prayer or two and the extra price is cheerfully paid.

We stayed an hour or so in this citadel of Methodism and had a chat with friend Davis, Dr. Forbes, and some others of "the big church." I am sorry to report friend Davis on the invalid list. Some months ago he received an injury to his ankle which has kept him somewhat confined. He is now recovering. Mr. Davis is one of the old settlers and has always been "on the square" for Liberalism. Whenever the preachers tackle him they come out "second best."

About noon we arrive at West Union. The mists don't clear away and the casual sunshine seems to make little impression on the heavy masses of cloud. But there is plenty of sunshine in the home of J. F. Smith, where Mr. Redfield and myself are welcomed. There is not a cloud of superstition in the blue sky of Freethought that arches this home amid the golden harvest land. Mrs. Smith, Miss Ella, Miss Jessie, Miss Gertie, are all clear-headed Secularists, and I am not at all afraid of woman's voting so long as her intelligence is thus demonstrated. I suppose political slavery makes ecclesiastical superstition. I don't believe the women of this land will vote half a dozen times before the majority of them will be Freethinkers.

Mr. Smith has a beautiful farm about a mile from West Union, and it is a delight to visit these broad and rolling acres, where one has a sense of roominess as if upon the vast ocean. Sunday afternoon and evening I lectured at Zigler's hall. It began to rain about dark and the threatening weather kept many away, but friends were present from quite a distance—H. F. Dean, D. S. Richards and son, and E. M. French, of Castalia, seventeen miles off, and Dr. Forbes and Mr. Harrison, of Fayette, helped to swell our forces, and the camp-fires were bright, notwithstanding the frowns of nature.

Our venerable and ever-active president of the Fayette county Secular Union, John S. Brewer, returned from his trip East just in time for the lectures. I am in hopes he will attend the Pittsburgh Congress with Mr. Redfield. Notwithstanding age, he keeps in the front. He was once in the church, and a worker there, but his very sincerity of conviction forced him at last to pass the bounds of the creed. It is a pleasure to meet one who in the evening of life sees "The light about to gleam,

The fount about to stream."

Monday I pass in the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Woodward. These are generous friends and make the path of "the pilgrim stranger" a happy one. They are full of humanity, and believe in this world with joyous good will.

Monday evening I lectured again to a fair audience. The overhanging clouds, and "things too numerous to mention," no doubt kept people away.

Mr. S. B. Zigler is a representative citizen of this place and an ardent Freethinker, but if the churches want a little help now and then in the way of a lecture, he has too much kindness to refuse. Mr. Zigler has traveled extensively in Europe and Palestine, and can give a very interesting discourse, and, although he doesn't mix any theology with his descriptions, the Christians delight in his pictures of the "Holy Land." T. D. Reeder belongs to the "stalwarts" and is not afraid to be at the front always, be there few or many at the post. So West Union has the "heart of fire" in it, if not the outward appearance of triumph. "Providence" was against us this time, but "providence" is as changeable as the winds and next time may blow the other way. None the less, however, does the spirit glow with meeting these noble allies who will keep "marching on."

Messrs. Carpenter, Sturgis, Ainsworth, Wallace, McClintock, are also among our friends here. Luther Thompson, of the ancestry of Freethought, brings youth to the veteran host.

Tuesday morning, the equinoctial still flying about, we visit Mr. and Mrs. Edward Gleason, who superintend the county Poor Farm. This is about five miles from West Union. There is a farm of four hundred acres and it makes a lovely haven for the waifs of humanity. But oh, what waifs! What tragedy in these forlorn aspects of human life! It makes me shudder to think of what might be in the transitions of fate. Some of these were once in happy homes, the world bright and sweet about them, and now they are in a living grave—worse than death. Our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Gleason, give them the gospel of simple humanity, of real help and sympathy. The preachers very seldom come to give any consolations, and if they do they seem to be afraid to enter the portals. Perhaps they feel the hollowness of theology in the presence of actual suffering. The fair eyes of science only can give light and comfort to the darkness here.

We strike Maynard when the sun is shining forth, and all the clouds are gorgeous. Maynard is a lively place. There is a fine country about it, and the people have considerable enterprise. They have established two creameries on the co-operative plan, which are flourishing. Thousands of pounds of butter are made yearly, and the farmers get the best prices going, without paying high salaries to officials. Here one problem of labor has been solved for the benefit of the working people.

Mr. E. Frost, E. D. Godfrey, Thos. Barnes, Mr. Snedeker, Mr. Boals, Mr. Stansbury, and others, are good fellows indeed, and they don't let the Secular Pilgrim go by without a hearty welcome, and my stay in Maynard was one of the pleasantest along the route. The Liberal element here is go-ahead, and ready to "lend a hand." The hall was well filled. Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Davis were present, from Fayette. Uncle John Pember introduced me. He has the fire of youth still, and can say a good word on his own account, and he made an excellent introductory speech. The work at Maynard is progressive, and I leave it with high hopes that the fires will be kept burning for many a day to come, and Freethought shine in summer's sky and winter's day.

When we came to Oelwein it was almost as silent as the grave. A tragic mystery was in the air. A hundred people were out searching for Dr. Greenwood, who had gone out hunting the day before and had not returned. His dog came back without his master. Circumstances pointed to a terrible accident. At three o'clock, about two hours after our arrival, the body was found. Evidently he had been instantly killed by the firing of his gun so close to the body that the wadding was driven clean through. The doctor was a favorite in the community, enterprising and always ready to do his part in any work. He had been married only a little while, was young, full of ardor, of hope, looking to a bright and honorable career. The terrific vision of his lonely and awful death, away from friends and all human aid, haunted me. Where is the God of love, the infinite goodness, that could see this dread suffering and yet be blind and deaf to all?

Oelwein is quite a bustling place. It is a railroad junction.

Several fine brick blocks are being built, and the town has the look of improvement. The lecture was well attended in the evening.

Mr. McCammack is our wheel-horse at Oelwein, and he is a worker, and can be depended upon every time to do his duty with the ardor of a soldier. Mr. Smith, of "The Slocumb," Messrs. Sturgis, Slocumb, Hancock, and the Hough Bros., are among our ranks.

Comrade Godfrey, secretary of the Fayette county Union, came down from Maynard, and Uncle John Pember and several others took a handcar and sped over the track with their own Freethought steam, and so our gathering was something of a re-union. Mr. Pember presided and started me off with a ringing address.

I was pleased to meet with Dr. Cozzens, formerly of New York, an old-time friend of D. M. Bennett. He related some spiritual experiences which he had with Bennett, all of which tended to show that there was considerable sleight of hand amid the manifestations, and that the "life beyond" was not necessary to solve the riddle.

Redfield and I came home by moonlight. It was a beautiful evening. The clouds had all rolled off, or rested in silver masses along the horizon. The moon rode in full-orbed majesty along the dark blue sky. The fields and woods, the shimmering waters of the winding creeks, the archways of willows, and billowing prairie, made ever changing, soft and brilliant pictures on which the imagination could feed until midnight's solemn hour, when I rested on the downy couch.

I must say a good word for our equine companions of the varied journey, Jim and Fannie. They just kept right along and made no fuss about it, and covered the ground rapidly. We averaged pretty near eight miles an hour, and that was almost as lively as some railroad traveling. I do like a horse when he gets over the road like that. If there are no horses in heaven I shall certainly emigrate. Let the harp go, give me the horse that will go. All honor to Fannie and Jim. I shall remember them in my prayers.

On Thursday night I lectured at Aurora, in the school-house, alias Equality hall. Aurora used to be Mudville about two miles off, and the building in which I lectured was erected as a free hall for free speech on all subjects, since the church doors were shut against this. When the railroad was built, the church, the hall, and nearly all the houses were moved over to the track, and Mudville became Aurora. What's in a name? Will Aurora ever be ashamed of her original cognomen and the "Mudville" ancestry? The hall was generously given by its owners for a school-house, but it is open to Freethought lectures. Hon. Samuel Spangler, a Liberal in politics as well as religion, introduced me with an excellent address. Mr. Spangler went to the legislature as the representative of the Secular party and put in a bill for church taxation, and he began the battle for rights. He is an able man and no doubt will do valuable service in the future.

Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins, Miss Minnie Hawkins, Mr. Clark, and all his family, Mr. Austin, Mr. Eddy, Mr. Chas. Jakeway, and others, rallied under our flag at this first Freethought lecture, and so Aurora shall be a sign of the "morning-glory" of our cause. Mudville is of the past. We now press forward to the splendor of the dawn; Aurora it is, and Aurora forever. Farewell to Mudville.

Alex. Risk is Mr. Redfield's neighbor, brave and staunch always, and generous to assist. He owns about fourteen hundred acres, about here, with much cattle, horses, hogs, etc. He is a pusher. He began life in Scotland, at eight years of age working for a penny a day, helping on a farm. After laboring faithfully three months, with about one hundred pennies due him—about two dollars—his employer, a deacon in the church, turned him off with the payment of one crooked sixpence; a specimen of what Christianity will do for a working man when it has a chance.

At sixty years of age friend Risk can look upon his big farm and thank himself for the fortune he has won. He is a man, every inch, and hard work has not made him penurious. He has the spirit of the philosopher and the enthusiasm of the poet, and he takes life at its best.

A little way from here is Henderson prairie, where friend Henderson, of Yellowstone Park—my philosophic and poetic guide in the region of wonders—was born. He has good blood in him, and the family tree flourishes. His brother is congressman from the third Iowa district, and is one of the most popular and brilliant orators in the House. In fact the Democrats like him so well that they haven't nominated anybody to run against him.

I have passed a happy week in Fayette county with comrade Redfield, meeting many friends in storm and shine, and "rustling round." Mrs. Redfield takes good care of me in this quiet homestead, and when I am not campaigning, the hours pass pleasantly by. Mrs. Redfield is from Ohio, near the home of Garfield, with whom she was acquainted, and she thinks that Ohio is the fairest spot in the world. Mr. Redfield is in love with California, and if any Eastern friends want to buy a magnificent Iowa farm where one can have all the comforts and conveniences of life, with an occasional blizzard, this is the spot for them to look up, and they can address Wm. Redfield, of Stanley, Iowa. Mr. Redfield has worked hard for over half a century. His barns are now full, and he is going to enjoy himself, and one of his pleasures is to attend the Pittsburgh Congress and keep Freethought at the front. Redfield has seen much of the world. He has a library of five hundred volumes. He has collected nearly a thousand rare and curious coins from all parts of the world, and of all ages. Some of the coins are over four thousand years old—the first coins of Japan. He has Roman coins—some twenty-five or thirty—older than Christ, and I believe they are in a better state of preservation than the religion of Christ. They are about the same as they were when made, while the religion of Christ has altered beyond recognition. Christ would not know Christianity if he should see it. His stamp is forever obliterated. But the Roman coin has the original inscription. Cæsar is there. Mr. Redfield possesses the continental scrip and currency, and that of the United States up to the present time, and also of almost every nation on the globe. It is a valuable and interesting display, and suggests much of the marvels of history—the wondrous drama of mankind.

I leave to-day for Chicago, with happy anticipations of greater and grander advance for Liberalism. I find true and noble men and women who are interested, and who will sacrifice and labor for the truth. And the triumph must come—the glad days of freedom and justice, the glory of civilization.

"In the wide future is a golden age, Richer than ever gleamed on poet's page."

Redfield Homestead, Sept. 21, '88. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM

WE have just printed another thousand of Voltairine de Cleyre's poem entitled "Nameless." It is one of the most affecting and effective pieces of verse ever written. It will be forwarded by mail at the rate of 10 cents per dozen.

THE CONGRESS.

At the Secular Union Congress held in Pittsburgh, Pa., October 5, 6, 7, and 8, the following topics will be submitted for discussion:

1. What are the best means to further the agitation for taxation of church property?
2. How shall we prevent sectarian institutions from receiving public funds?
3. What action shall be taken by the American Secular Union to rescue Girard College from the control of those who daily violate the will of its founder?
4. What action shall be taken by the American Secular Union to actively enlist lecturers to organize and work specially for the up-building of the American Secular Union? What shall they be expected to do, and what shall the American Secular Union do for them?

The speakers at the Congress are Samuel P. Putnam, of San Francisco; Prof. D. G. Crow, of Fort Supply, I. T.; J. G. Hertwig, of Washington, D. C.; Dr. Juliet H. Severance, of Milwaukee, Wis.; Judge E. R. Westbrook, of Philadelphia; E. A. Stevens and W. S. Bell, of Chicago; J. H. Burnham, of Saginaw City, Mich.; Mattie A. Freeman, of Chicago; Voltairine de Cleyre, of Grand Rapids, Mich.; J. D. Shaw, of Waco, Tex.; Lucy N. Colman, of Syracuse, N. Y.; and Charles Watts, of Toronto, Ont.

The election of officers takes place Sunday morning, the 7th. On this and on the future policy of the Union the interest of the Congress centers. That the selection may be wise and just, and that the plan of campaign may meet the approbation and enlist the support of all Liberals, must be the wish of everyone interested in Secular organization.

THE CHICAGO SECULAR UNION'S FESTIVAL.

Ahead of the regular course of "New and Notes" we receive from Mrs. Mattie A. Freeman an account of the late reception given at the Chicago Secular Society to the president of the American Secular Union. The Forum, once a church, where this society meets, was ablaze with glory; flowers and flags decorated the rostrum and the stars and stripes waved triumphantly above a prostrate cross. The splendid Secular Union choir opened the services with a "Greeting Glee," there was a recitation, very finely rendered, by Mrs. Sherlie Woodman, an active member of the Union, who not long ago gave before the society an able lecture entitled "Christianity on Trial;" Miss Edith Deal, one of the finest pianists in Chicago, and a member of the choir, rendered a brilliant solo, and Frank Pearson brought down the house with a song called "Tubal Cain." This was not all. Mr. E. L. Dworak gave Marc Antony's Oration like a Keene or a Booth, and the applause he received should have satisfied either of those tragedians; little Ella and Maude, aged ten and eight, danced the Highland fling for a noisy encore, to which they responded with a recitation; Dr. E. L. Rivenburgh acquitted himself successfully in the "Stammering Wife," and the Temple male quartette sang and sang again. The president of the American Secular Union recited in his best manner, as the surroundings inspired him to do, a poem of his own, "Why Don't He Lend a Hand?" "For it was to greet this gentleman," writes Mrs. Freeman, "that the Chicago Secular Union was on its best behavior, and that Secretary Stevens had prevailed on one of the young ladies of the committee to sweep his office and make it presentable for the visitor. The president had come," continues the writer, "and Chicago Liberals were expressing their welcome and appreciation of the genial pilgrim who has only kind words for all."

The programme continued. Mrs. Emma MaDan, one of the members of the choir, sang as a solo, "Sweet Heather Bells," and bells were never sweeter than her own voice.

Next, we learn, came what all appreciated, namely, intermission and refreshments. The cake was perfect; the young ladies who served the cream were the pride of the "Young People's Society." General Stiles took the cake undisputed, and Mr. Gruber met his fate at the ice cream, wielding the spoon as caterer like an athlete. It is true that at first the cream adhered to the implement wherewith he was fain to remove it from the can, but when some one said "Wet the spoon!" he adopted the suggestion and achieved an immediate triumph. Thus, interspersed with pleasing incidents, the intermission passed, and the programme was resumed. The Emerson quartette (with no reference to the ice cream, of which there was much more than a quartette, several gallons having been provided) sang "The End of the World;" Prof. Carl Henry Novra, an accomplished elocutionist, gave readings from an English poet; the Temple quartette obliged with another song, and Little Ella and Maude, in Highland costume, danced a jig to the tune of "Rory O'More." Then there were Mrs. Gruber and Mrs. MaDan in the "Beautiful Moonlight" duet; Dr. Rivenburgh in another reading, and Mr. Morris J. S. Card, basso, in the song "Where are the Wicked Folks Buried?" The Zublins, Miss Daisy and Master Hubert, professionals, with mandolin and "banjeaurin" accompaniment, made a decided hit; and after that (why were we not all there to hear it?) Mr. E. A. Stevens, the veteran of two wars and the hero of the present war against ecclesiasticism in the state, closed the joyful festivities by singing "Beautiful Dreamer." Truly, this must have been an occasion long to be remembered.

We will give the rest of the report in Mrs. Freeman's own words:

"At half past two the following afternoon, Sunday, September 23, the sun shone through the stained glass windows of the 'Forum,' but it lit up no trace of the preceding night's amusement. The crumbs of cake and bits of paper, disorder and disarray, had disappeared, and Mr. Putnam and members seemed thoroughly recovered from the ice cream dissipation. Mr. Putnam is always a favorite in Chicago, and the suburban towns furnish their quota to hear him. Mr. William Walker came from Dwight to attend the entertainment and the lectures. The lecture Sunday afternoon was simply unanswerable. It was an iconoclastic masterpiece. And yet Mr. Putnam only tears down the bad to build up the good. Opportunity was offered to critics, and none responding Mr. Hudson, of Englewood, read an original poem. The lecture in the evening, 'The Glory of Infidelity,' was given by request, and, as John E. Remsburg recently said, is one of the grandest productions in the English language. Many thought Mr. Putnam's lectures the best that had ever been given before the Union, and the brilliant hits, the flashes of wit, the magnificent perorations were applauded again and again. The splendid audience was a fitting tribute to the man who has made a glorious pathway for Freethought from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The Chicago Secular Union has a warm place in its heart for Samuel P. Putnam, and always welcomes him royally in his flying trips across the continent."

With occasions like this, with successful meetings, inspiring songs, eloquent addresses, and enthusiastic audiences, surely the cry is Onward!

THE correspondent who notes with regret the disposition of editors and writers to criticise one another, and at the same time writes a column of sharp criticism about them all, may discharge what he feels to be a bounden duty and also relieve his mind, but we fail to see how he has materially reduced the sum total of discord.

WHY THIS DISCRIMINATION?

The Golden Gate, which is a Spiritualistic paper, publishes a telegram from San Diego announcing that Mrs. Elsie Reynolds, recently of this city, has been caught in the act of producing fraudulent spiritual manifestations and lodged in jail, charged with conspiring to cheat and defraud.

The exposure of fraudulent mediums is nothing to protest against, but why should they be imprisoned? It is true that they work upon the credulity of the people and obtain money under false pretenses, but in what manner do they differ from the priests and ministers of the country? When a clergyman offers a communicant a piece of bread and a cup of wine, alleging that they are the body and blood of a man who died eighteen hundred years ago, he is as much an impostor as the medium who puts forth from the cabinet a lay figure and claims it to be the materialized form of somebody more recently deceased. Why should the medium be imprisoned and the clergyman be permitted to continue the practice of his imposition? There is no reason whatever for discriminating between the two.

ORGANIZATION.

The one thing to which, in our opinion, the energies of Liberals should be bent in the near future is organization. Mr. L. P. Langley, in sending us the name of a subscriber, writes:

"I like to hear you talk of organization. I would almost be willing to part with my beautiful home in Montecito if I could live where there is a good Liberal society."

This is the feeling, doubtless, of many isolated Liberals who have never heard the spoken word of Freethought, and have no opportunity to mingle with others who share their views. They themselves, perhaps, have something to say of value to mankind, but who will listen? Nothing causes the average audience to protest or disperse so quickly as a word uttered against superstition, and until Liberals organize they will never succeed in securing respectful attention. Discussions of religious questions before casual knots of listeners, at stores, in the postoffice, on the street, or at social gatherings, are often the source of ill-feeling among neighbors and friends, and are always unsatisfactory. What we need are Liberal meetings where it is understood that speech is free and where people will become habituated to hearing both sides of all questions. The man who opposes the general tenor of religious meetings in a church is liable to arrest. If he utters an opinion in a political gathering contrary to the convictions of a majority present, he does so at the risk of life or limb. Local lyceums generally exclude the discussion of religion and politics, which, of all questions, are the ones that every intelligent person is nowadays thinking about.

Liberal organizations are therefore a necessity. Further, and better, they are a possibility. Let us, then, have Liberal organizations, and San Francisco is a good place for the Liberals of this vicinity to make a beginning. Be ready for the series of meetings next January.

THE Eighth Demand of Secularism—that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty—has caused Secularists more trouble than all the others. When "Christian morality" is repudiated people are desirous to know why. The question is effectively answered by W. S. Bell's pamphlet, "Liberty and Morality," in which Christian and natural morality are contrasted. We have a dozen copies of this pamphlet for sale at 15 cents each.

FRIEND SCHOU, of Oakland, has returned from his Eastern journey. He attended at Cleveland the convention of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, of which organization he is a member; visited New York and saw the editor of the Truth Seeker; went to Boston, where he met the men who publish the Investigator; Washington, where he saw the president, the Senate, and the House of Representatives, besides other public curiosities; viewed Chicago and called on Secretary Stevens and B. F. Underwood; took in Yellowstone Park and the great canyons of the north; and came home satisfied that he had seen the greatest of human and natural marvels. Mr. Schou confesses to a certain disappointment in the general make-up of the notable men he has met. The president, or "Grover," as Mr. Schou now calls our chief executive, looked like an ordinary substantial citizen. The nap on his beaver turned both ways and his trousers bagged slightly at the knee. The senators and congressmen did not excite the visitor's special admiration. They lounged about, chewed and smoked, and used bad grammar and profanity. The scientists he saw at Cleveland did not all have big heads and bulging foreheads and dandruff on their coat collars. During their leisure hours they enjoyed themselves and took their liquid exhilaration unmindful of the fact that it unquestionably contained cannabis indicus, capsicum, sulphate of ammonia, cocculus indicus, and onanthic, ascetic, and nitrous ethers in considerable quantities, and that it would superinduce transudation by exosmose and endosmose and irritate the mucous coating of the stomach. Mr. Schou concludes that one must go to the East to behold the wonders of human ingenuity—great bridges, tall monuments, lofty buildings, and cities compared with which the metropolis of the West is a village. The natural products of the country, however, awoke in his breast a feeling of commiseration. The East is practically barren as to fruit and flower. He observed a few "posies" struggling to exist, and some shriveled specimens of juiceless peaches and grapes. As to hotels it was the old, old story. They robbed him and sent him away hungry. For courtesies shown him by Messrs. Macdonald, Somerby, and Bridge, of the Truth Seeker office, and by Messrs. Seaver, Mendum, and O'Malley, of the Investigator, Mr. Schou acknowledges himself under deep obligation. Having seen our coadjutors in the East he returns to the West with new faith in the ultimate destiny of Freethought, and more a Freethinker than ever.

IF Professor Seymour's lectures are as breezy and entertaining as his letters to FREETHOUGHT we do not wonder that the whole community sometimes turns out to hear him. Though "on the trail," and looking for scalps, the professor does not raise them except when an increased bump of self-esteem gives them a hoist after he has made a phrenological delineation of their owners' character and possibilities for achieving greatness. Professor Seymour does what every Freethought lecturer on the coast ought to do but don't; he solicits subscriptions for FREETHOUGHT, and has sent us nearly twenty names since he went out on the trail.

A READER as far away as Dublin, in Ireland, who desires to emigrate to America and to settle in Southern California, writes us to know what chance a business man with a family and $10,000 to invest would have for making a living in these parts. We shall reply to him that the chance would be favorable, but we are surprised that the real estate men do not advertise in FREETHOUGHT, so that applications may be addressed to them direct. The gentleman referred to is Mr. J. Byrne, 2 and 3 Upper Kevin st., Dublin, Ireland.

Now that the Chinese question is settled, how about the Roman Catholics? Are they to be permitted to "rat" our schools with governmental assistance as the Mongolians "rat" our industries without it? It is as impossible for the papist to adopt free American institutions as for the Mongolian to assimilate American civilization. The Chinaman may in time become extinct in our land, but the conflict between the church and liberty is interminable. We may at least cease to strengthen the enemy by exempting its property from taxation and appropriating funds for the support of its institutions.

OUT OF POLITICS.

It has been a long time since I have attended a political gathering. The last I went to was in company with Counsellor Sherman, of New York. It was a convention of the County Democracy, and nominated Hewitt for mayor, an event over which my companion grew so enthusiastic that he hammered the floor of Cooper Union with his new $3.50 cane till the head of it jumped off, and a delegate from another district spit tobacco juice all over its coin silver surface before the counsellor got it back again. Otherwise the meeting was harmonious. It was a harmonious meeting because the delegates were "instructed." The members of each delegation knew that when their number was called they were to shout the name of the man chosen to represent them on the committee at the top of their voices, and to vote aye on every motion submitted to the house. During the intervals an expensive band played patriotic airs, and orators fired the popular heart with repeated references to the united Democracy (which wasn't united at all) of the great metropolitan city of New York. The absence of all disturbing elements showed the advantage of having delegates instructed in their duties before the meeting is called to order.

I am reminded of the fact that politics is active just now by reading in the papers about a meeting held the other evening a few blocks from this office, namely, at 14 Kearny street. Passing by there to-day I ran up to look at the ruins, which consisted mainly of papers scattered about to cover up bloodstains. The place was very quiet, so much like a funeral that I removed my hat. One of the political parties has the headquarters of its county committee there. On the evening of September 27 a meeting was held. A certain Mr. Donahoe, as I understand it, a gentleman whose calling is that of a political heeler, was there present. Enter Mr. B. Harrington, fighting drunk. "I protest," ejaculated Mr. Harrington, "against the election in the twenty-ninth district. We were bulldozed." "Who threw the cobblestones in that district?" inquired Mr. Donahoe, intimating that Mr. Harrington's adherents had been guilty of that offense. The next moment Mr. Donahoe fell to the floor dying, with a bullet-hole in his abdomen, and Mr. Harrington held a smoking pistol in his hand. Mr. Fire Commissioner Kelly advanced upon Mr. Harrington and endeavored to secure the weapon, which was again immediately discharged, Mr. Kelly receiving its contents in the chest. As Mr. Kelly retreated a second bullet took him in the right foot. Another detonation followed, the accompaniment of which Mr. Antone Christenson received in his person, his body being completely traversed and the ball coming out at his back. Subsequently somebody in the rear of Mr. Harrington opened fire with such good effect that the previous speaker was wounded in the left shoulder and in the back of the neck. At about this epoch several policemen intervened. The dead and wounded were carried away, and from behind the safe, from under the table and desk, and from every available hiding-place, the frightened and breathless spectators one after another emerged.

A few days ago I read in one of our daily papers an eloquently and quite grammatically written article on the duty of every good citizen to attend our primary elections and see that the people are represented by true and reputable men, and I was so impressed by the article that I had almost made up my mind to serve my country in that way, when the above unfortunate affair occurred. Since then, after deep thought, I have concluded not to attend the primaries or to identify myself in any way with the current political movement. While I do not fear death, I recognize that my sudden demise would cause my friends more or less inconvenience. Besides, the subsequent issue of this journal would be delayed. I can tell from letters I have received that there are many among our readers who could edit a paper much better than I am able to do; but as the editorial work is merely incidental to that of defending my good name against the aspersions of my enemies, and as no one has offered to do this, I feel that my continued existence in the present crisis is an imperative necessity. Since the charge has gained currency that I left the Truth Seeker office without collecting sixty cents from the editor, expended for carfare and bananas on behalf of his infant son, the desire to live down slanderous statements and to justify my conduct has grown daily more intense. For these reasons I have concluded not to enter politics, or at least to refrain from doing so until the result of Messrs. Kelly and Christenson's injuries has been determined. Some day after the excitement has cooled off I may arm myself with a policeman and go to the City Hall and register; but not yet, not yet.

Later: Since penning the above I learn that owing to my recent advent upon this coast I shall not be able to raise my voice in the coming election. I had intended to cast a freeman's vote for Cleveland and Harrison, and to do what I could in a small way to get Mr. Blaine into some retired but lucrative office where he could devote his talents to the tariff issue and the condition of British workingmen, without interruption from the purveyors of statistics about the price of labor in Germany. From this dream of future usefulness I am rudely awakened. I cannot vote, and the poll-tax I paid shortly after my arrival is a year's subscription thrown away. I am a political cipher, and can only stand idly by as a $2 spectator while the great political issues that confront us are settled by the Roman Catholic statesmen from Erin who may reach these shores between now and election day.

M.

"THE SABBATH IMPOSTURE."

With this title we have just issued in neat pamphlet form the series of essays by Harry Hoover which appeared in FREETHOUGHT under the head of the "Holy Sabbath." It is a thorough exposure and refutation of the claim that Sunday is the Sabbath or that it was ever established or observed as a holy day previous to Constantine. It proves, in fact, what everybody ought to know, that Sunday observance is an infringement of liberty, unauthorized by even the founders of the church, and, like the rest of the religious system, an impudent humbug.

The pamphlet sells for 10 cents.

S. P. PUTNAM has the following lecture appointments:
 Secular Union Congress, Oct. 5, 6, 7, 8 New York . . . . . Oct. . . . . 12
 Mr. Putnam will lecture in San Francisco during the month of January next.

The Sinaloa Colony Club meets Oct. 7, at 2 P.M., at 39 4th st.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

One man was killed and three wounded in a row with pistols at the headquarters of the Republican County Committee last week. Although twenty men were present it appears impossible to get a coherent account of the affair.—The Chinamen of Truckee are charged with selling whisky and opium to the Indians, and citizens of the town have ordered all Chinamen out of the place.—Last Sunday afternoon about 3 o'clock, during a high wind, the old convent building at Petaluma, in process of removal, fell down with a loud crash, and two young ladies narrowly escaped being crushed to death.—No new cases of small-pox have been reported at McMinnville, Or., for three weeks, and all the patients are getting along well. The schools are to be opened shortly.—A second race was sailed between the new pilot-boat America and the C. H. White Sept. 29th. The former won by about six miles.—The Southern Pacific railroad officials are making arrangements to put a "flyer" on the track. It is intended to land San Francisco passengers in New York in five days.—Health Officer Barger's report to the board of supervisors for the year ending June 30, 1888, shows that the deaths in this city during the past year number 6,036, against 5,359 for the preceding year; 530 of the departed were Chinese. Estimating the population of the city at 330,000, the death rate shows an average of 18.27 per 1,000, against 17.86 per 1,000 for the year preceding, when the population was estimated at 300,000. The rate amongst the Chinese population, which the health officer places at 30,000, is 17.63 per 1,000, against 18.36 per 1,000 for those of other nationalities. The Chinese have no infants to speak of to swell the death rate. The number of births registered at the Health Office during the year was 17.80 against 13.46 of the preceding year. "These figures are entirely out of proportion to the deaths," said Dr. Barger, "and would argue the extinction of the present permanent population of San Francisco in a few years if they were correct. The discrepancy is probably caused by the neglect of physicians and others to register births as required by law."—The Woman's Club of San Francisco held its first meeting last Saturday afternoon.—County Clerk McCabe of Stanislaus and Editor Hanscom of the Modesto Herald had a bout at fisticuffs in the post-office at Modesto one day recently over an article published by Hanscom. The clerk came out on top.

The president has signed the Chinese exclusion bill.—The Knights of Labor are collecting affidavits to the effect that General Harrison in 1877 said that $1 per day is enough for any workingman. In spite of the affidavits, the prevailing belief is that Mr. Harrison did not say it.—The Mormons are making large purchases of land in Mexico with a view to colonizing there.—Cold weather and frost are stamping out the yellow fever plague in the South.—Brother Blaine of Maine addressed 20,000 people at the polo grounds, New York, last Saturday night. The orator touched on the tariff question.—The sea serpent was found asleep in Georgetown harbor, S. C., the other day, but moved off on being awakened. According to voracious witnesses he was fifty feet long and as big around as a hoghead.—Freezing weather is reported in northern Minnesota, and killing frosts in Michigan and Wisconsin.—Twenty-one little girls aged from nine to fourteen years, brought to New York by Mormon elders from Europe, en route to Salt Lake City, were ordered by Collector Magone to be sent back to Europe.—J. W. Brown, a man convicted of bigamy at Detroit, Mich., last week, is said to have married thirty-three women, seven of whom appeared against him in court.

The European sensation at present is the publication of the private diary of the late Emperor Frederick, which is not complimentary to Prince Bismarck, and the chancellor is said to be furious over the matter.—Asiatic cholera is epidemic at Hongkong.—Pope Leo celebrated high mass for the dead at St. Peter's in Rome last Sunday. A reception was also tendered him, at which somebody shouted "Viva," and his holiness was much moved.—A mob at Neuchatel, Switzerland, made a savage attack upon the Salvation Army, on the 28th ult., blockading the meeting house, pouring petroleum on the building, firing pistols, etc. A riot ensued in which several persons were injured. The Lord appears to have done nothing to defend his servants.

COGITATIONS.

AT FIFTEEN.

The school is done, and the winter sped;
The schoolmarm and I, we drift apart,
And Romance I. lies cold and dead
On the fresh green grave of a broken heart.
Go plant the willow and cypress-tree,
Hang up the handsled out of reach;
I will get the parson to measure me,
And take my size for a funeral speech.

AT EIGHTEEN.

Moustache and whiskers are sprouting now,
I'm taller than then by half a head;
But oh! for surcease of an aching brow,
And the glare of a city painted red.
For I'm out sometimes with the other boys,
And come in, like Solomon, "filled with dew,"
I awake the morn with a merry noise
And the gentle murmur of my bazoo.

AT TWENTY-ONE.

I'm hardly the whale that I thought to be
In the first faint flush of my third decade;
The elderly matrons say "boy" to me,
My eternal fortune has not been made.
But I think on marriage and family,
(Measles and cradles and trundlebeds),
Hold other folks' youngsters upon my knee,
And damp little babies with tow-white heads.

AT TWENTY-SEVEN.

I sneer at the follies of long-gone years,
At the callow youth and the sweet sixteen,
At the heartstrings torn, and the bitter tears,
At the hand unpressed and the blush unseen.
With the outstretched ear of a rareripe mind
I list to the lovers that laugh or sigh,
I've a cynical smile of a freezing kind
For the tender grace of the days gone by. G. E. M.

EPILOGUE.

Alas for the youth and his high conceit,
And his strident yawp which he deemed so good,
The ground is uncertain beneath his feet,
And he howls ere yet he has left the wood.
Behold, he is born of the female sort,
And she filleth the day of his youth with pain;
His adolescence she cutteth short,
And gathers him under her wing again.

A GOLDEN WEDDING.

The Anaheim New Era of September 22 contains an extended report of a fine golden wedding celebration in which Liberals must feel a deep interest, the central figures being Mr. and Mrs. L. and K. Parker, a noble pair, as old in Freethought as in wedded life. We quote from the New Era:

Last Sunday being the fiftieth anniversary of the marriage of Leonard and Kate Parker, of Anaheim, the relatives and friends of the worthy couple determined to give them a house-warming. Knowing the company would be a large one, for invitations were generally distributed, Music Hall was secured for the occasion. At half past eight, to the strains of the wedding march, the old couple marched in and took the handsome chairs at the head of the hall, and here, standing on an embroidered carpet, they were "married over again" and received the hearty congratulations of their friends. A poem prepared for the occasion by the editor of the New Era was then read, and the whole company, headed by the "newly married" couple, descended to the hall below, where the banquet was spread in elegant shape, with wedding cake galore, coffee and wine.

Son-in-law Wood, as master of ceremonies, next introduced the Hon. Richard Melrose, who reviewed the progress made in this country since young Leonard Parker and handsome Kate Kennedy used to swing on the front gate, and she consented to sail out with him on the voyage through life.

The editor of the New Era was asked to propose the health of Mr. and Mrs. Parker and did so, and the company, standing, drank to their continued health and prosperity. Short speeches and congratulations followed, including a written address by D. Edson Smith, reviewing the progress which these two persons themselves have made in the last fifty years.

Mr. Parker himself was called on for a speech and responded in a few modest and well-chosen words, thanking the company in behalf of his wife and himself. Mr. McFadden, at the other table, said they all wished to hear from Mrs. Parker, and she, also, responded in her characteristic fearless and lively manner. She said, in substance, it was studying how to live and not how to die that had made it possible for them while living a life of toil, but one of happiness, to accumulate a competency, rear a large family of healthy children, and celebrate their golden wedding. The lady closed with a strong appeal for more sociability, and less personal and social differences.

After the banquet the hosts and guests repaired to the hall, and the numerous elegant and costly presents were inspected and admired.

D. EDSON SMITH'S ADDRESS.

We are met together this evening to celebrate the grandest event in human experience; to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of wedded bliss. We have come to join the children and grandchildren in having a happy, joyous time on this occasion of rejoicing.

For fifty years! For fifty years!
They've walked together midst joys and tears

Such golden anniversaries are rare, but this one is of peculiar rareness. This couple, instead of growing old, have grown young. They have found a way to keep out of the ruts and pursue the elevating path of progress. They have succeeded in finding the true elixir of life. The shining motto they have ever kept above their family altar is Progress. They have ever taken as their rule of action the grand words of that great and good man, Thomas Paine, "The world is my country, to do good my religion," and the consequence is that to-day they are found in the front rank of all thought pertaining to the welfare of humanity, and are dealing heavy and effective blows against all ignorance and superstition.

It is an ancient saying that you "cannot teach old dogs new tricks," but where will you find any puppies who will follow a new trail leading into the fields of science so quickly as these old searchers for truth? We now have on our list of term trial jurors, at Los Angeles, a man who complacently boasts that he is always with the majority. Such a man is dead. He ought to have been born ten thousand years ago. Such a man never ought to be allowed to marry. It is men of thought and men of action who clear the way for all that is great, and good, and elevating in this world. It is men and women like Leonard and Kate Parker, who dare to be in the minority if their convictions demand it, who make the world better for having lived in it. These two people have been honest with themselves for fifty years. They have earnestly sought to know the truth in every department of life, and have unfalteringly followed its leadings no matter what the consequences might be. They carefully sought all truth regarding the best methods of promoting the highest growth of human beings. And the happy results of their studies are here before you in the beauteous, healthful forms of these children and grandchildren. They sought the path of truth in the field of manual labor, and their present Edenic home, blossoming with roses and the golden fruit of the Hesperides, transformed from a desert cactus patch, attests to the faithfulness of their search in this direction. And in the higher fields of search for truth and light in the moral field, regarding the duties of man to man, and of men to gods, they have been untiring in their research, and true to their highest convictions. And here in this highest field of research they have made the greatest progress. They have climbed above the fogs of superstition into the beautiful fields of eternal progress and happiness. "The world is their country, and to do good their religion." They started out on the low plane, where the majority of mankind were doomed to an eternity of anguish without benefiting themselves or anybody else; and the small minority, although blessed with a seat in a heavenly choir, did not attain their seats through any goodness of their own, but simply because their names happened to have been drawn out of a lottery wheel before the foundation of the world. From this horrible idea those two people have steadily progressed for fifty years, till now they know that then they were in the darkness of childhood's ignorance and superstition; but that in reality each and every human being works out their own salvation. No sins of omission or commission can be laid upon the back of another, but each must suffer the just penalty of his own mistakes till experience has taught how to avoid the error, and do no act but what will naturally, and thus inevitably, bring peace and happiness; and so they have come to believe that the great universe is slowly but surely evolving into that plane of light and truth where naught but joy and happiness reigns.

A wedded life of fifty years,
Begun in youth's ecstatic hours,
Sweet with the breath of orange flowers;
The skies cerulean overhead,

Along all pathways blossoms spread,
Heart linked with heart in Love's bright chain,
Eden's first raptures born again.
Oh! beautiful, and quite divine,
Their early nuptial blisses shine!
But sweeter, holier yet, they grow,
As time's swift currents downward flow
If, when the bridal blossoms fade,
Shines out the gold they overlaid,
In love, without its fever heat,
In friendship for its frankness sweet,
In principle that moulds the life
Of husband true, and trusting wife,
In patience that the will restrains,
In reverence each for each maintains:
And their rare virtues, ripening still,
As grapes with wine the autumns fill;
Till golden tresses turn to gray,
And brown locks blanch their wonted way.
When, suddenly, the tale is told,
Of twinn'd loves half a century old!
As which, not queenly jubilee
Can half so grand or regal be.

This excellent couple, than whom none carry more bravely the weight of three score years and ten, are among the most substantial and highly respected citizens of Anaheim. They are acknowledged leaders in social, moral, and educational improvement, as well as in horticulture, and their fine fruit ranch, conquered from the cactus, is evidence of it and their intelligence and industry.

Mrs. Parker's head is slightly silvered, but the years have dealt kindly by her and left few traces on her strong, handsome face. Mr. Parker, with his well-knit, erect figure and military mustache, might be taken, as one little lady remarked, for one of Napoleon's marshals, summoned to answer the roll-call at a meeting of the Old Guard.

At a seasonable hour the guest dispersed, taking with them the feeling of having passed a pleasant evening, and with many an expressed hope that the "silver threads among the gold" might yet glisten with the rarer diamond lustre of seventy-five years married.

Sonnet.

TO MR. AND MRS. PARKER.

Tell us, brave veteran, by what noble art,
Through half a century's changeful, fickle years,
You keep the homage of a woman's heart,
While all our loves drift hence on floods of tears!
O Lady, silver-haired, but having still
A youthful spirit, brave and chaste and bright,
How in the meshes of your own sweet will Hold your the heart of this one loyal knight?
Tell us the secret who with lighter feet
Walk unaccustomed paths and fields unknown,
So we may separate the tares and wheat,
And love may only reap what love has sown.
Our children's children shall your praise prolong,
Your names be sung in every fireside song.

M.

LILIAN'S STORY.

Lilian is making progress. She has just offered us the appended narrative, which, we are pleased to observe, inculcates the moral precept that honesty is the best policy. Owing to the facility that Lilian has achieved in the use of the typewriter we are now able to pass her contributions to the printer without revision.

ONE PENNY.

BY LILIAN ANDREWS AGEII.

Be kind a nough to give me apenny? said apoor littlegirl to a stately gentleman. Give you a penny? pleaesire hers apenny run home now Anet turned away and ran as fast as she could to a small bakery to by aroll for supper after she got in the bakery she found she had a a two and a half. Anet ran out of the shop after the man who haad given a penny to hervas he th ught and he was suprised tosee hervrunning down the street after him he thought thatvshe wanted a nother penny Mr Mr Mr she shouted but he took no notice of her untile she came close up to him what do— oh sire you gave me this insted of a penny. thank you come with me the man took Anet home and adopted her he gave heer the $5 to Anet and she calls it her lucky penny.

A TRAMP.

"Mister, don't say no. What do I want with a dime? To get a drink? Maybe. True, I'm a tramp, and you folks say, 'Why don't you go to work?' Say, will you give me a job? No? I thought not. It's darned easy to preach, but when a man tries to get a chance he always gets left. Yes, there's the woodyard, where a man can saw a cord of wood for fifteen cents' worth of grub. And there's the county charity, where a man can get a loaf of stale bread if he takes off his hat and manhood, and stoops low enough to the political thieves who run it, and receive as charity the crust that may keep him from starving.

"What's that you say? I'm asking charity from you, and that's as bad as taking it from the poor societies? Oh no, mister. I come to you as man to man. Go to the public charity, and the official, in his uniform, treats you like a cur that is trying to steal a bone. No, I don't want any of what people call charity. I ask you for a dime simply because I'm so weak and tired and hungry that I must get something to sustain life or else lie down and die.

"I talk like a man of some education, do I? Well, I had fair schooling, and spent all the time I could in trying to learn. How did I get so low? It must have been through drink? That's where you're off your base, mister. I guess I never in a month, when I was best off, drank as much as you or one of your wealthy friends do in a day. That's the way you fellows who have the bulge on wealth try to make your minds easy when you see a man down. Why, mister, where I lived the whole town wouldn't spend in a year in drink as much as you rich 'uns chuck out in one wine supper.

"Why, what the whole gang in the mill where I worked (500 of us) got in wages for a month wouldn't pay for the banquet the boss, Mr. C——, gave after we were locked out. And our combined wages for a year wouldn't equal what he gave a big-bellied evangelist to help him to save our souls. Our bodies were of no account.

"Where's my home? I ain't got any. I used to have one in Ohio, and worked in a rolling mill. But the firm brought over a lot of foreigners, and we had to go to work for the same pay the Bohemians and Poles got, which was so much lower than American workers had ever earned in that line that we could hardly exist in decency on the wages. Two years later we found there had been three further cuts in wages, and then the imported paupers kicked. We few American workers had not manhood enough left to kick. We were locked out, starved and clubbed by the authorities. Later, starvation compelled the workers to accept the terms offered by the bosses.

"As I had taken a leading and active part in the trouble, when it was ended I could no longer get employment at the mill, even under reduction, and was further informed by the boss that he would blacklist me so far as he possibly could. Since then I could get no job at ironwork, and as I was fit for nothing else, having worked all my life at that trade, I was forced to be a tramp.

"Don't you think it was free choice, sir. The little education and refinement I had was rather a hurt than a good, for I couldn't get down to cleaning streets or peddling shoestrings.

"Did I have a family? Yes, sir. I had the best wife and three of the finest children you ever laid eyes on. What became of them? Mary, my wife, she died soon after the hard times came, from hunger and grief together. You see, it was a cold, wet, sloppy day when the company put us out of their house, which we had lived in for years, paying enough rent to build a half dozen like it, and Mary—she wasn't overly strong, poor girl—she took cold and sick and died. Don't mind me, mister. I feel all broke up when I think of that time.

"What became of the young ones? They went to the poorhouse, and Ned and Nan they hungered so for their mam that they kinder wilted away and died too. Little Mary, she still lives there, mister; but I never 'spect to see her again, for I've lost heart, and purty soon, mister, I'll lay down in some ditch and never get up no more.

"What's that you're givin' me, a V? That's no good now, sir. The time's past when it might a done good. I've had all the nerve and good drove out of me. I'm played out. But I'll tell you what to do, friend, if you'll let me call you so; send it to little Mary at the poorhouse; here's her address, and say you saw her old dad, and he loved her and wishes he could do her some good, and he can't just make it out that so many folks have so much that's no good to 'em, and so many folks that need so little to keep 'em happy have to starve and freeze to death.

"No, mister, I can't take so much money. It would do me no good now. Give me a quarter and do what I ask you, and that will do me more good now than money."

So they parted. The tramp and the man of wealth. As the rich man went up the road, he thought, "There's lots of truth in what that poor devil meant. The church says he is my brother. Then, in justice, I should treat him as such. But what can I do single handed? I can at least labor to help to change the present economic conditions which perpetuate such infamous class distinctions."

What thought the tramp as, with bowed head, he stumbled onward, shivering in his rags? No one can tell. In his seething brain boiled and bubbled all the hell that a class of birth or wealth has made its slaves endure since man first lived. The wind blew fiercer. Through the rain and mud and mire he struggled onward. His brain was still confused, for with the thought of what he had been and what he was now, there mingled soft-toned chimes of love and light, and brightness from the "long ago." But from the deepest recess of his mind there came this thought, clear cut and firm, the only remnant of the manhood gone: "Will ever, men live and work and love like brothers? Will ever from the womb of Time, be born the age when there will be no more kings by birth or wealth, and no subjected slaves toil, to through vested wrong, in rags, so they, the kings, may strut in fine array? I know not. I have played my little part and can but die."

The morning sun now gilds the eastern sky, and flashing through the glen, tints with his glory all the rags that cover that which once did live and move. For in the ditch, beside the winding road, beneath the weeds that quiver in the breeze, lies dead, "a tramp." And on his face, smoothed by the hand of death, is born again the hope and joy of youth.

W. J. GORSUCH, in the Standard.

No Excuse Required.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have just received the names of two good Infidels who are desirous of being enrolled on your subscription books, which is my excuse for writing at this time. I only wish I could have similar inducements oftener. Letters to editors, minus cash, must be dry reading for the editors, especially when they are made up of kicks at something printed in his paper. I think people are a trifle over-sensitive who condemn FREETHOUGHT for accepting such advertisements as appear in its columns. Let us use all our "kicking" powers in kicking superstition out of the brains of our fellow-men. When that is accomplished, mankind will be so full of joy and good will that there will be nothing left worth kicking at.

H. L. SHAUG.

Del Mar, Cal.

The Tempest in a Teapot.

To the Editors of Freethought:

C. B. Reynolds delivered a lecture here last Thursday evening on "Life's Duties; or, What does Liberalism Teach?" The school-house was full.

Somebody mislaid my last FREETHOUGHT and I have just read it. I will expose Dr. Chapman's sophistry as soon as I get my alfalfa in the stack.

About another matter. I say, stop this fool fight in FREETHOUGHT at once, and I sincerely hope the chairman of the Congress will sit squarely and heavily down on the first man who broaches personality there. Have Liberals nothing to do but quarrel, when the Jesuits clap their hands and urge them on? This tempest in a teapot had its origin with the jealous and malicious Wellock, who was treated as he deserved by the Liberals at the Salt Lake Convention when they organized the Secular Union. His accusation that the officers of the Secular Union were all expolygamists, etc., was such a cold chestnut that it was not worth notice.

The honorable man who was in that unfortunate position and who was elected by the Secular Union to preside, did not wait for the Edmunds law of 1882, or the Edmunds-Tucker law, but in 1862, as soon as Congress passed the first law, in July, against the practice of polygamy, he, with a few of the best men in Utah, put himself in harmony with all good citizens. No man who is a good man would bring it up at this late day. For the information of Mr. Wellock who is the real instigator of this trouble between friends, I will say that W. Williams, of Centreville, Davis county, Utah, sent a letter over his own signature, giving full particulars of Wellock's character; hence the coldness at the convention. I would not mention this now, but Wellock started the fire that is burning now, and it is useless to let the mole-hill become a mountain. EDWARD F. MUNN. Hooper, Utah.

Professor Seymour On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I gave three lectures in Willapa "city," called city, evidently, because there are no houses there—at least only a score or two; but the hall was well filled by very intelligent folks, who came from all around in the beautiful valley of the Willapa. This place is the head of navigation and is a most sightly place for the coming metropolis of this side of Shoal-water Bay, and some day here will be found a bustling, thriving city with all the airs of a metropolis. Here I met Jacob Drissler, a natural born gentleman, scholar, Freethinker, and, in every way, model man. He has a fine farm well stocked, but is a confirmed old bachelor; living alone, but serene and happy with his books, cattle, and "no one to scold him;" also his brother, J. H. Drissler, who is the merchant and postmaster of the city; also his wife and sisters, all true blue for the religion of humanity. J. H. Drissler has built up a good business, has a fine store and home. He has a large brain and is a regular old Roman for Freethought. S. D. Stratton, from nine or ten miles up the valley, is another sturdy old veteran for Liberalism. He has a nice farm with forty or fifty head of horses and cattle, and has a comfortable and happy home. His head is level and full of Freethought. I also found here Geo. M. Armstrong, another regular Phil Sheridan for aggressiveness and force, only his "Winchester rides" are taken in a fish boat on the "raging Willapa," and his command is shoals of salmon, for George is a fisherman from the word go. He has a fine home on the edge of the water, where he and his children dwell in peace and plenty. At our second lecture here a drunken man wanted to show how much more he knew than any professor, and that rum and "tobacker" never injured anybody, but he was soon collared by my friend Drissler and ejected from the hall and down the stairs, and troubled me no more. Our steamer, Tom Morris, went off and left us while we were waiting for the signal to go, so I hired a skiff, and the "skeleton doctor" (240) pulled the oar and paddled us ten miles by moonlight back to South Bend. The next morning a sail boat was engaged to sail us down the bay to North Cove, nearly twenty miles, which brought us back to the ocean again, whose ceaseless roar is music to my ears. North Cove is a very small place, being the U. S. Life Saving Station, also the location of the Leadbetter Point light house. The light house is situated upon a bleak point of sand where "desolation reigns supreme," a most inhospitable place, but inside is very cozy and comfortable, and splendidly kept by J. Tillburn, who has been here for eight years, and seems to like this last end of the road to sunset, as a home in his old age. I found the reflector for the light a marvelous thing of ingenuity, and a great curiosity. It runs, by clockwork, round and round the brilliant light, so as to keep the rays flashing and scintillating, thus making it visible much further out on the billowy sea. We stayed only one night at the Cove, but the "inspiration" was on, so we had a meeting in the "town hall," and I think the whole populace turned out, for there were forty or fifty persons, and only a half dozen houses in sight. At seven next morning we were in the stage, bowling along at high tide, driving in the edge of the sea so that the sand should be hard for the horses' feet. We had to go seventeen miles due north to Peterson's Point to meet the steamer that was to take us to Aberdeen on Gray's Harbor. This seventeen mile ride, not on but in the angry ocean, I shall never forget. Nearly as far out as the eye could reach, the giant waves hurled their white-caps over and over, and often some huge wave would half cover our horses and come into the stage, making it tremble with its mighty power, and the next moment the under-tow appeared to be taking us out to certain destruction. The sea was very rough from a storm the night before, but our driver had been raised right here and was some forty years old and knew the line of safety. This was a grand ride—the illimitable forest of giant firs and spruces on our right, and six thousand miles of rolling water on our left, seemingly ready to swallow us up, as old Noah's flood did all humanity once on a time, before God made a rainbow.

On our ride up the beach we passed a dead whale lying high and dry, thrown up by the waves some weeks ago. It was thirty or forty feet long, five to seven feet high, and excited much curiosity in our stage crew of landmen. I had never expected to see a whale out on dry land, or anywhere else, for that matter, so I took his whaleship in as much as possible. I think if Barnum had him on wheels it would be a drawing card for his circus, especially in the interior states. The Indians here have cut out many of the "choicest steaks." I failed to discover whether they cut porter house or round, but presume they did.

We soon sped on, leaving this leviathan, who, of course, was a near relative of the one that so kindly took Jonah in out of the wet, and thus saved him from drowning. I did look round a little thinking might be Jonah was lying not far off in some pool, just as spewed up by the whale, but I found him not. I expect he had got up and gone to spread the gospel among the heathen Indians who are plenty here.

We arrived in time for a good dinner at Mother Peterson's, but had to wait until dark for our steamer, the Rustler, for she was "sand-barred" about eight miles down the bay, waiting for high tide. So we—three doctors, one lady, one professor, and two "common men" who had no handle to their name—dug clams, built fires out of the log-heaps thrown up by the surf, and sung "Nearer, My God, to Thee," "Down in Dixie," "Over the Garden Wall," and other solemn and chaste music as we sat and sat upon that sandy Peterson's Point waiting for the tide to float yon scarcely visible craft within our reach. At last she came, only to tell us we must wait for morning light to go to Aberdeen; so we went a couple of miles to Ludlow's mill and bunked with the mill hands, and therefore went supperless to bed. We came out right side up the next morning with an appetite that a Siwash Indian might have been proud of. I could pretty nearly have eaten whale steaks; but the Chinese cook got us a good breakfast for 25 cents, which I feel sure did not make him very rich, as we "licked the platter clean," and went on our way rejoicing. Ludlow's mill and lumber yard were located a fourth of a mile out in the bay, from the shore, in deep water so as to load ships direct for San Francisco and other points. It looked queer to see a saw-mill out so far in the water, but seemed to be convenient for all concerned. One of our party, Dr. Balch, of "Hoquiam," a very strong Liberal and well-posted gentlemen, has lived here for twenty years, and gave us much information about this western world. We were glad to make a friend of him.

We finally made port at Montesano, the coming metropolis of this great valley, where we found hosts of friends whom we shall not soon forget. Elma, Wash. D. C. SEYMOUR.

THE RETURN TRIP.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places returning from the East:

Wahoo....	Neb.,	Oct. 23-25	Davenport.....	W. T.,	Nov. 17-19
Denver.....	Col.,	" 28	Sprague.....	"	" 20-21
Ogden.....	Utah,	" 30-31	Pasco.....	"	" 22-23
M't'n Home...	Idaho,	Nov. 2	Portland.....	Or.,	" 25-26
Boise City.....	"	" 3-4	Vancouver.....	W. T.,	" 27-28
Emmetts.....	"	" 5-6	No. Yamhill.....	Or.,	" 29-30
Pendleton.....	Or.,	" 8-9	Scappoose.....	"	Dec. 2
Walla Walla....	W. T.,	" 10-11	Snohomish.....	W. T.,	" 8-10
Spokane Falls....	"	" 14-16

It is desirable to announce the remainder of the appointments at the earliest possible moment. Will friends who wish lectures write at once to S. P. Putnam, care of E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago?

W. F. JAMIESON will deliver courses of lectures in Alamosa and Monte Vista, Colorado, in October. He will respond to calls for lectures East or West. Address him at Monte Vista, Colorado.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenzel, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S
GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Dr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months.
50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine
paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents;
paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

The Radical Remedy in Social Science.

A Plea for Smaller and Better Families.

AN EARNEST ESSAY ON PRESSING PROBLEMS.

By E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D. Price, 25 cents.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular R
Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible E Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" need A Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured
Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati I
Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men N
Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting Q

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr.
Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—A 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the
Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

for Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.
33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face on hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 1 jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50. With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17, $18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $1 being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies' watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels, $22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2 to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $33. Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra. Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case. Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) (Good razor, $1; best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas, 50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12. Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free. BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

Designer and Patentee of new FREETHOUGHT Badge in PINS and CHARMS—emblematical of the light and day of Freethought, Science, and Reason vs. the night and darkness of Superstition. Exact size of cut and smaller, two-thirds size. Warranted solid gold, enameled in four colors. Most beautiful badge ever designed. Small, $2, $2.75, $3.50. Large, $3 to $5; with genuine diamond, $8, $10; and charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

"Zum Waffisch."

THE WHALE

CHAS. A. JONAS, Proprietor.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars.

Cold Lager and Sharp Steam Beers.

24 THIRD ST., Near Market,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

JOHN WIELAND'S Lager Bier IS THE BEST.

CALL FOR IT.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

F. SANGROVE, Merchant Tailor.

LATE OF LONDON AND PARIS,

All imported goods. Orders promptly attended. Prices moderate. Cleaning and repairing neatly done.

Ladies' Cloaks and Riding Habits a Specialty.

F. SANGROVE, 104 FIFTH ST.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address. Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 41.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - OCTOBER 13, 1888

It is pleasing to note that the Bradlaugh fund bids fair to go beyond the $7,500 asked for. Mr. Bradlaugh should be kept in Parliament at any cost.

MRS. MILDRED LANGWORTHY, writing in the English "Political World," observes that "the woman who speaks kindest of her husband is the widow." This proves not so much that the marriage was a failure as that the funeral was a success.

AN English paper tells about a man who was employed by a priest at a franc per diem to have his leg tied up as a cripple and then go to Lourdes and be cured by the vision of the virgin. Under proper conditions there is no reason why miracles should not occur oftener than they do.

INSTEAD of getting into Beecher's pulpit the Rev. Joseph Parker, of London, is more likely to become the inmate of a lunatic asylum. His eccentricities are assuming the form of mental aberrations, and members of his congregation are bowed with grief. He has recently written a letter to the London Chronicle of a most frivolous character.

"No dollar of taxes should be levied and no money expended from the public treasury in aid of any parochial school or charitable institution of any character that is not under the control and subject to the supervision of non-sectarian officials under the law. No religious property of any kind should be exempt from taxation." So says Mr. Pixley of the Argonaut, and so say the Nine Demands of Liberalism.

THE Secularists of Canada have recently held a successful and interesting convention at Toronto. Mr. Wm. Algie, of Alton, was elected president, and Mr. J. A. Risser, of Toronto, secretary. The convention, among other matters, decided to raise a "Secular Thought Sustaining Fund" for the maintenance of Mr. Chas. Watts's paper, Secular Thought. It is proposed to raise $1,000 annually for this purpose, during the next three years. We trust that the plan will succeed, but it is a dubious matter. As Mr. Duval said at the convention, Secularists are not good at begging. Much depends upon able begging, and it is generally admitted that a great part of the credit given to Christians for generosity should really be accorded to the church solicitor who has extracted the donation by eloquent and persistent boring.

JERUSALEM is getting to be a commercial centre. One hundred thousand dollars' worth of objects of devotion in mother-of-pearl and olive-wood are exported to America and Europe every year. In some respects Jerusalem resembles places in California. We read, for example, that "vine culture is being extended and the price of land has risen sixfold within a few years." When the son of Joseph remarked that he would gladly have taken the citizens of Jerusalem under his wing, he little thought that eighteen centuries later the real estate speculator would accomplish what he found so difficult.

THE Labor World lays down the non sequitur that "the Christian church cannot adopt any measure that will so speedily and surely check sin and Infidelity as a vigorous war against unrestricted immigration." If nine out of ten immigrants who reach these shores were not Christians; if checking Infidelity had anything to do with lessening sin; and if a religious war against immigration for the reasons given would not be the most deplorable calamity that could befall a free country, we might indorse the Labor World's statement. In default of this condition of things the editor of the Labor World puts himself on record as a simpleton.

NEWS AND NOTES.

I am at Chicago. The great city is booming along, more proud and magnificent than ever. It makes the blood run swift to be in the midst of such vast rushing crowds; to look skyward to the lofty buildings whose roofs would overlook the towers of many a city of the olden land.

The first to greet me at the midnight hour of my arrival was our secretary, and at his home, 16 Union Park Place, is solid comfort, and the inspiration of labor. Mrs. Stevens can mingle transcendentalism and good cooking with charming effect, and my stay in the great metropolis has been a happy unity of Spiritualism and Materialism. Reincarnation is a lovely idea, but this world is not the less delightful while it lasts. Some how or other the spiritual body gets a great deal of "true inwardness" from material conditions. Given a good square meal, and Theosophy is a beautiful luxury that one can well afford. But divinity ceases with an empty pocket. The silver dollar says, "In God we trust." God can return the compliment to the silver dollar.

Stevens is working day and night almost. He is never at rest. He writes a multitude of letters; is in communication with all parts of the country, and by his indefatigable spirit keeps the wheels in motion, and the Union moves forward. No one need think that the secretary of the Union has an easy task. No man in Chicago is more active. There are a thousand things to attend to near and far, and the work is just as hard as though he handled a million of dollars, instead of a few hundreds. These few hundreds, however, represent ideas, principles, and every dollar counts and every dollar means a big field of work.

The Forum is sparkling, no longer a church, but a temple of humanity. A noble triumph it is of Mr. Stevens's skill and energy and the aid of cordial friends. Such a flower of victory does not come without many a toilsome day, and few can appreciate the industry which has been put into this Freethought "Home and Altar," where the best hopes of this world make the angels of to-day's progress.

I was there on Saturday night. There was a musical and literary entertainment and ice-cream festival. First was a "Greeting Glee" by the Emerson quartette, which poured forth happy strains of welcome. Then a piano solo, beautifully rendered, by Miss Edith Deal, organist of the Forum. The song, "Tubal Cain," was a strong and noble hymn of labor, by Mr. Frank Pierson. Mark Antony's Oration was recited, with fine effect, by Mr. E. L. Dwvrak. Dr. E. L. Rivenburg gave "The Stammering Wife," and the plaudits were numerous. The Temple male quartette scored a big success and there was no end to the clapping of hands until another song was given. "Sweet Heather Bells," by Mrs. Emma MaDan, was charmingly given. Little Florence Sequer's recitation of "Baby Land" was heartily applauded. The dance by little Maud and Ella, six and eight years of age, from the fireside of Mrs. Freeman, was a fascinating display of graceful motion. "The Highland Fling," in costume, was the movement, and the swift-footed, lightsome, infantile, exquisite dancers received the rapturous, tumultuous ovation of the audience. Then there was an intermission, and ice cream and cake were in order, and I had the pleasure, meanwhile, of making the acquaintance of the many people present.

After the recess the Emerson quartette and Temple male quartette and little Ella and Maude and Dr. Rivenburg entertained us brilliantly, and, in addition, Professor Carl Henry Novra gave a vigorous rendition of the poem, "What Shall we Bring as a Gift to the Lord our King?" This is one of the grandest radical poems in the world. Morris J. Card, musical director of the Forum, sang, "Where are the Wicked Folks Buried?" and this pathetic, humanitarian "psalm of life," rich with meaning, was excellently interpreted with harmonious voice. Miss Daisy Zublin and Master Hubert, with wonderful skill, played the mandolin and banjeaurin, and listeners were wild with delight, for the soft, entrancing notes seemed to dance in the air as the nimble fingers swept the delicate strings. Miss Daisy is a bright star in the theatrical firmament. She composes songs and dances for the stage, and is quite a professional attraction. She and her brother are still young—almost children—and they have a bright career of artistic triumph before them. Mesdames MaDan and Gruber gave "Beautiful Moonlight," and the moonlight and the music were equally delightful. Mrs. Woodman recited Lizzie Doten's "The Streets of Baltimore," and the weird imagination of the inspirational poem was gracefully interpreted. Mr. Geeting told the humorous story of the clergyman and the donkey, which was keenly appreciated by all the heretics present. E. A. Stevens closed with the song, "Beautiful Dreamer." Our secretary has not sung for twenty years. When he was a "boy in blue" he was one of the most popular singers in the grand army, but hard work has kept him from the field of music where he might have won the flowery crown, for certainly he has a voice of remarkable sweetness and power.

Mrs. Wiseman, and the sons and daughters of her house, a bright "Band of Hope," attended to the refreshments, and all were well provided for, and I, with the rest, did not depart hungry from the pleasant entertainment. The evening was full of good things. Sunday I gave two lectures. There was a fair audience of a couple of hundred in the afternoon. In the evening the hall was full, and it can seat nearly a thousand people. It was a magnificent assembly that responded heartily to the words of the speaker. After the evening lecture there was a business meeting of the Chicago Union, and without hesitation a hundred dollars was pledged on the spot for the next year's campaign. The Chicago Union is a power indeed. It has never failed to be at the front and do its duty. It is worthy to carry the colors at the head of the centre column.

Among our friends here are Chas. J. Sundell, consul, under Lincoln and Grant, to Germany, and now member of the city board of education, a thorough Liberal of superior intelligence, a representative citizen, and not afraid to work and be counted in the ranks of Freethought and progress.

D. W. Richardson, J. W. Harris, H. A. Oberman, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Card, Mr. McNab, of the Temple quartette, Dr. E. S. McLeod, Mr. and Mrs. Koerpel, Stafford Bolton, secretary of the Union, and others, are splendid co-workers with Mr. Stevens. I am sorry to hear that Dr. McLeod is about to leave the city, but one thing is sure, wherever he locates he will make our colors shine.

H. B. Marlett and N. C. Dahl, are among those who make us hope for the future, for they put the fire and promise of youth into the veteran corps.

My friend J. W. Howe is always at his post, and he don't allow any orthodox dirt to gather about the Forum. Cleanliness is better than godliness in a Freethought sanctuary.

Mr. and Mrs. Freeman are on the "good ship" yet. Mrs. Freeman is soon to take a lecture trip. Wherever she has spoken the people are enthusiastic. I suppose we shall have to give the palm to the "little women." Somehow or other, without making any fuss about it, they do a vast amount of service.

Commissioner Williams is a brave politician, one of the few who has ideas and is not afraid to speak for them, and he aids friend Stevens in many directions in the contest with ecclesiastical powers.

Young Darrow, formerly of Farmdale, Ohio, of heretic blood, is going to the head of his profession. Law, and politics, and reform are his forte, and he is bound to be one of the brightest leaders of the people.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. L. Robertson make glad our Secular heart. They are loyal to the good things and grand things of this life. Sunday afternoon I had a splendid drive over the city; along the magnificent lake-front, through the lovely parks and streets that, for miles, have only palaces on either side. A wonderland is Chicago, and I am glad that such Liberals as our friends the Robertsons can partake somewhat of its glory and wealth. At any rate, they have a good horse, and that is a paradise in itself.

A. C. Berg, I was pleased to greet again. Whenever Mr. Stevens wants anything, Mr. Berg is right at hand to give and do his level best. He never waits for others to shoulder the burden.

Always I rejoice to see our jolly friend, A. D. O'Neil, and to sit at his hospitable board where Mrs. O'Neil and Miss Kate make the traveler at home. One is an Episcopalian, one a Catholic, one a Freethinker, but the angels never get along any better with their golden harps than these frank and intelligent companions, who have sense enough to know that truth has its million sides, and that there is "good in everything" to the good-willing people. Monday afternoon Mr. O'Neil gave me a drive over the city, and the "man with the badge-pin" knows that such excursions are always delightful. Friend O'Neil takes the world at its best; a hard worker but a genial comrade in sunshine and in rain.

Professor Milleston, formerly of Indianapolis, author of "Embryotic System of Nature," one of the ablest scientific expositions of the day, is now at Chicago; a thoughtful and interesting speaker and industrial assistant of friend Stevens in his arduous labors.

Wm. Walker, of Dwight, Ill., was present all through the meeting. Unfailing in the ranks of Freethought, he takes the brunt of battle heroically in good and ill fortune and "looks up and not down."

I was surprised and delighted to meet my friend Miss Ida Black, of Longmont, Colorado. Mrs. Georgiana Rice, her mother, is on the list of FREETHOUGHT, and Chicago sends greeting. All is well.

Miss Laura Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Stiles, Mrs. Woodman, Mrs. Holmes, Henry Koehn, are also of the "five hundred friends" at this place—so many that I cannot speak of them all.

I must not forget the Young People's Society. It is doing a flourishing work. It is for social, moral, and intellectual cultivation. President Hutcheson carries the standard at the front. The society meets once a week. There are three private meetings a month and one public. It is an invaluable aid to the Forum. S. Steadman Schaeffer, Henry Borst, Young Midgeley, Bert Wineman, Miss Bertha Piper, the Misses Wineman, and others, make this a "bright morning star" in the dawn of liberty. It gives poetry and music to the toils and dangers of Reform.

I have enjoyed my stay and labors at this place, where the very heart of the world seems to be beating. Stevens has been for years in the business circles of this city, and he has won many friends. There is a grand opportunity here for a Secular organization. The elements are at hand. It is only, however, by ceaseless labors that the flame can be kept as a beacon light. Success here is success all along the line. It will be a noble stimulus.

Miss Ada Campbell, the Freethought lecturer from Australia, is in the city. She has been doing signal service in her own country. She expects, soon, to lecture in Chicago. I hope she will be greeted by a large audience. It is unfortunate that our scattered forces cannot give a broad field of labor to this devoted and heroic lady. It is the vast extent of our country which makes it so difficult to organize so that the laborers from other lands can receive that welcome and aid which they so richly earn. Amid these discouragements all we can do is to "hope on, hope ever," and keep our hand to the plow.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

The Forum, Chicago, Sept. 25, 1888.

CREED AND BELIEF.

At the church congress which closed at Manchester, Eng., last Saturday some views of an unorthodox character were presented by church dignitaries who were supposed to be sound on the question of tophet. Archdeacon Farrar said that the old doctrine of future punishment was dead, while the Rev. Sir Geo. W. Cox was still stronger in his repudiation of the same dogma. Mr. Cox said he was growing weary of the dramatic picture of a great white throne with angels as sheriffs bringing sinners to the bar of the great assize. The speaker further spoke of the tyranny of Bible worship, and expressed a doubt of the authenticity of some portions of the New Testament. He even doubted whether some discourses in the gospels were ever delivered at all. The reverend baronet was hissed for his skepticism by his auditors, and the president of the council found it necessary to interfere to prevent further demonstration of dissent. Most of the speakers joining in the debate solemnly protested against any interference with the time-honored place of darkness, fire, and chains known as sheol, though none of them professed to believe in it.

Christian teachers appear to prefer a creed that shall be far enough from their actual convictions to admit of their practicing a slight degree of hypocrisy in accepting it. This is the reason why creeds are always in the rear of current belief. Hypocrisy is an inexpugnable element of religion.

GAMBLING THAT NEEDS ATTENTION.

More than three hundred frequenters of a gambling resort were arrested at one swoop by our police last week, and no good citizen can fail to be pleased by this evidence of awakened conscience among the authorities. Nothing can be said in favor of sinful games. But the work of the police is not finished. In Monday's Chronicle appeared this item:

"The drawing for the many beautiful and valuable articles which have been on exhibition for the past two weeks at the ladies' fair and festival in aid of the Holy Cross and Star of the Sea churches at Saratoga Hall will take place this and Tuesday evening. The greatest interest will be in the drawing of the lucky number of the valuable building lot. All interested should try to be present. A magnificent hot lunch will be served to-morrow from noon to 2 P.M."

What progress can we hope to make in arousing public sentiment against games of chance when those whom many accept as the conservators of good morals run lotteries to catch the nickels of the rising generation? As we previously observed, the work of the police in the suppression of gambling is not yet completed.

CONFISCATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY.

On October 8 the Supreme Court of Utah entered a final judgment and decree in the case of the United States against the Mormon church, which was pending to dissolve the church corporation and have its property declared forfeited to the government. The church belongings are now in the hands of a receiver, who has succeeded in collecting over $1,000,000 worth of real and personal property. The court decides that all the property has been held upon trusts, the object of which was principally to uphold polygamy. It is further decided that the present church still upholds, teaches, and maintains polygamy, and that any dedication of property to it would be for the same purpose, and therefore unlawful.

It is not proposed to call into question the legality of this proceeding, but it is pertinent to inquire why the law is not applied to the Roman Catholic church as well as the Mormon. The charge is that the Mormon church is devoted to upholding an unlawful institution, namely, polygamy. But does the Catholic church uphold no such institution? How long is it since that church solemnized the incestuous marriage of the duke of Aosta and the daughter of his own brother? How long is it since Vicar-general Prendergast, of this city, granted to Joseph Bijani a dispensation to marry his own niece?

Why may not the charge be made and sustained that any dedication of property to the Catholic church would be for the purpose of upholding the practice of incest, and therefore unlawful? Which is the more offensive to law and morals, incest or plural marriage?

There are other matters in which the Catholic church stands opposed to law. It opposes divorce, which is granted by law. It advocates the division of public moneys for the support of sectarian schools, which is forbidden by law. And of one thing there can be no question, namely, that any property dedicated to the Roman Catholic church will be used for the purpose of destroying our public schools. According, therefore, to the precedent established in the case of the Mormon church, such dedication would be unlawful. Why, then, should not the property of the Catholic church be escheated to the state?

Let us have an even and impartial administration of the law.

SELECTIONS from the writings of the venerable editor of the Boston Investigator, Horace Seaver, have been compiled for publication in book form by Mr. L. K. Washburn, of Massachusetts, and are now ready for delivery. The volume comprises 220 pages of Mr. Seaver's best work during the past forty-five years, and contains a fine likeness of the author. The price by mail is placed at $1.50. No praise can add to the esteem in which Mr. Seaver is held by all the Freethinkers of this country. For nearly half a century he has labored with patience, persistence, and ability for the spread of mental liberty, and for the destruction of superstition. No man the century has produced is more worthy of our admiration and gratitude. We are glad to see this collection of his writings brought out, and it should stand as a monument and memorial in the library of every Freethinker. We shall be glad to help the circulation of the work by taking orders for it.

LONG ODDS.

O parson, platitudinous and poky,
Forever preaching of the "Prince of Peace,"
Or sheol wonderfully hot and smoky,
Oh, will you ever give us brief surcease?
You prate of things you designate as "holy,"
Or else, when not in "reverential calm,"
You give us hell, not calmly, sir, and slowly,
But fierce as roars that place of wild alarm!
Than with the "Prince of Peace," who brought a sword—
How strange!—you much prefer to deal at length
With sheol, serving it red-hot, the word
Of him styled "Savior" not replete with strength.
That you intend to frighten us to heaven,
The odds is long, say twenty-five to seven!

—SI SLOKUM

WHEN we draw our indictment in the case of the People vs. Christianity we will have to get Mr. Owen Thomas Davies, of Brighton, Cal., to contribute a few charges and specifications. Mr. Davies meets the religionists on Bible grounds, and floors them invariably. It may be noted, in passing, that Mr. Davies visited this office last week and left $10 for the American Secular Union and $5 for the benefit of FREETHOUGHT. He had wise and entertaining remarks to make on the subject of Liberal work.

PROFESSOR SEYMOUR, Liberal lecturer and phrenologist, will be in California after December 1, and will speak wherever called, from the Oregon line to Mexico. The professor is taking subscriptions for FREETHOUGHT, and will continue to do so. Friends can judge from his letters in this paper that his lectures are full of meat and well worth attending. Applications may be addressed to Prof. D. C. Seymour, 504 Kearny street, care of FREETHOUGHT.

THE Congress of the American Secular Union met at Pittsburgh, Pa., last week Friday for a four-days' convention. What the attendance was, what action was taken, and how everything passed off generally we have yet to learn.

WE are just as much obliged to Committeeman H. P. Mason for a ticket to the Utah Territorial Fair as though we could have attended. It is reported that the fair achieved a success without our presence, and Utah still flings defiantly to the universe the claim that her "Potatoes, Onions, and other Garden Crops are unexcelled in the world, and are exported to great distances."

A CARPING CRITIC.

The Melbourne Liberator, a journal printed in Australia on thick, heavy paper, publishes an article in which it says a tourist of long and broad experience puts forth the theory that the climate of California fosters and otherwise encourages habits of mendacity, irreverence, and meretricious morals. He says that our sinful customs here on the coast are not so much a matter of bilious or atrophied conscience, or of total depravity, as of atmospheric pressure and demoralizing influences of the weather. Our lack of a respectable winter, he holds, makes us "miss the best means of keeping alive a realization of the presence of a higher and over-ruling power, which people living in a sterner climate can so easily comprehend." The skies being soft and the temperature pleasant we are led, says the writer, to think lightly of serious things, and to forget how to cultivate the virtues.

The editor of the New York Truth Seeker republishes the paragraph under the heading, "Pray for the Editors of San Francisco FREETHOUGHT." If the matter had not thus been given a personal application I might have let it pass without comment, but since this has been done I have thought it best to make some remarks upon the subject myself.

Mendacity, as Webster understood it, signifies lying, deceit, or imposture. To employ the scientific definition given to lying by Herbert Spencer, it is a lack of correspondence between the subjective order of thought and the objective order of phenomena. It has long been charged by the envious population of an obsolete East that the champion liar of the country resides west of the Rocky mountains; but I would inquire of the supporters of that theory how they reconcile it with the fact that the Rev. Mr. Talmage is a citizen of New York, Joseph Cook of Massachusetts, and the Rev. Mr. Brown of Iowa. What Pacific Coast tergiversator is competent to enter the ring against J. Raines Bundy, of Illinois, or Parson Newman, of the Empire state? It is true that there is now a "champion" somewhere up north, and Mr. Moody is at present in San Francisco, but both are from the East; and until these opponents of veracity are shown to have their equals in California the natives of this state will continue their homage to that serene figure in our history who said:

"I reside at Table Mountain, and my name is Truthful James;
I am not up to small deceit, or any sinful games."

The charge that our gloripus climate is productive of irreverence falls to the ground with the same reverberating plunk when it is examined in the light of facts. The religious fervor of a people may be judged by its art and literature. In the issue of the Truth Seeker from which I quote the misleading article under review is a cut representing a brass serpent poked into the air on the end of a forked stick, beside which Moses, the divine law-giver, is pictured standing upon a dry-goods box, exhibiting the snake, and saying: "This is a sarpint. One look will kewer the bite uv the fiery snaix. Look, & look hard." Such is the Eastern interpretation of the twenty-first chapter and ninth verse of the book of Numbers. Several violent shocks of earthquake were felt in different parts of the state when this issue of the Truth Seeker reached California. I might adduce the further facts that California did not celebrate its fifty-eighth natal day because the 9th of September fell on Sunday; that the mayor of San Francisco declined to review a Sabbath-day parade, and that not more than one in five hundred of our population reads any Free-thought journal. We are a God-fearing people, and do not let it escape your recollection.

We are also a moral people, and no traveler of any amount of experience can make us appear otherwise. The desire to be truly good is born in the son of California, and is engrafted upon the immigrant after a short stay. The vigilance committee may have had something to do with engendering this sentiment; the flinty path of the transgressor sustains it. A youth after the style of Joseph excites no special admiration; he is too common; while Mrs. Potiphar would be unqualifiedly condemned. St. Anthonys abound, and they wander our highways and byways looking for the temptress who does not exist. Some of our clergymen, even, lead moral lives without causing remark.

It was very fortunate for the critic of our citizens that he enunciated his views from a distance, because nothing so agitates the gall of a California man as accusations touching his character. It is scarcely three weeks since one of our respected townsmen, Mr. B. Harrington, met a charge against his good name with a charge from a revolver delivered in his traducer's abdomen; and an eminent San Francisco judge has recently recorded the opinion that the man who enters a family to alienate the affections of the lady of the house does so at the risk of a similar perforation.

The writer who attacks a climate that has never injured him cannot be too severely condemned, and when that climate is as mild and innocuous as the one which we enjoy his conduct becomes still more reprehensible. If he is looking for a set-to with the weather, let him show that he means business by going to Dakota and engaging in discussion with a blizzard. Let him tackle a cyclone. Let him go where the people ask if it is cold enough for him. He will then be prepared to emigrate to California and recuperate. He may still recognize the presence of a higher and over-ruling power; but he will appreciate a brief suspension of its more active manifestations.

SAM JONES.

A resolution of congratulation on the promised coming of Sam Jones next January was passed at the Methodist preachers' meeting last Monday. Jones was in St. Louis last spring, and disgusted some of the religious people with his coarse and slangy talk. The Rev. H. W. Williams, editor of the Central Baptist, said of him:

"I have gone to hear Sam Jones for the last time. When he made that remark about 'loping through hell' it was all I could do to keep from taking my hat and leaving in mortification and disgust. I cannot stand this irreverence and vulgarity."

We have for sale at this office the recent work by Dr. G. H. Stockham, entitled, "Temperance and Prohibition." It is "a sensible and unprejudiced discussion of the question, giving a short history of the temperance movement originated in Ireland by the Rev. Theobald Matthew, its decadence and the causes. It gives also a history of the production of alcoholic liquors, their physiological, toxicological, and moral effects on the human race." Without either indorsing or dissenting from the conclusions at which Dr. Stockham arrives, we can recommend the work as containing information worth a great deal more than it costs, which is 75 cents.

W. F. JAMIESON will deliver courses of lectures in Alamosa and Monte Vista, Colorado, in October. He will respond to calls for lectures East or West. Address him at Monte Vista, Colorado.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Sound steamers will refuse to carry Chinese of any class from Victoria until the effect of the new law is definitely settled.—Clara Foltz desires to debate political questions with Anna Dickinson, and has issued a challenge to that effect. Miss Foltz spoke in this city on the 6th.—The Prohibitionists had a meeting in Metropolitan hall, this city, last Sunday. The attendance was rather small, but the enthusiasm was great and mostly of a religious kind. The exercises opened with prayers and gospel songs.—Of 830 Chinese who engaged passage to San Francisco on the Belgic only 176 embarked. This is one of the first results of the new exclusion act.—The other day some evil-disposed person caught a horse belonging to the Rev. C. R. Smith, of Santa Ana, and deprived it of its mane and tail.—The trial of Mrs. Elsie Reynolds, the medium arrested at San Diego, is set down for October 15. The case is exciting much interest.—Some California parties have bought the right for the Pacific Coast of a system of towing rafts at sea. It is understood that the consideration is $200,000, and active operations will begin immediately.—The American party, with Mr. Pixley as the central figure, is awakening to considerable activity.—The Oceanic Steamship Company will no longer carry Chinese firemen. The Australia sails with a white crew, which displaces twenty-four Chinamen. The Alameda lets twenty-eight go, and the Mariposa discharges thirty. Only a few of the Chinese will return to Honolulu.—During the week ending October 6, 87 deaths were recorded in the Health Office against 98 for the corresponding week last year. Of these 34 were natives of the Pacific Coast, 17 of other states, and 36 of foreign countries. One person died of small-pox.—An interesting archaeological discovery has been made at San Clemente Islands, and the Pasadena Star has an expedition on the ground in the interests of that city, where it is reported an ancient temple or vanquech has been found.—The friends of Judge Terry and wife, imprisoned for contempt of court, are endeavoring to secure a pardon for the offender from President Cleveland.—The Methodist Episcopal church (south) conference at San Diego last week suspended two clergymen for a year for refusing to serve at a charge where they were appointed. The conference discussed temperance and decided that it was not a political question.—The gospel steamer Evangel has quit distributing Bibles to the Indians and has gone into trade. The Evangel was built by money subscribed by the Sunday-school children of Brooklyn, N. Y., and was intended to distribute Bibles and good literature among the Indians of the Northwest. Not being able to pay her way, she contracted to carry the Alaskan mail. She only carried it one trip. Captain H. F. Beecher took her and lost considerable money on her. She is nine years old. The Sunday-school children put $14,000 into her.—The victims of the shooting affray at the Republican headquarters are doing well, particularly Mr. Donahoe, who died a Catholic. The others will recover.

The corn crop of the United States for 1888 is estimated at 2,110,920,858 bushels, which is a considerable increase over last year.—A street-car strike is on at Chicago. There was a collision between the strikers and the police last Sunday.—Over 100 people were hurt by an accident at the laying of a church corner-stone at Reading, Pa., on the 7th. The accident was caused by a temporary floor giving way.—The County Democracy and the Independent Citizens of New York have renominated Hewitt for mayor.—A special from Winfield, Kansas, states that there is great excitement in the vicinity over the discovery of a secret military order of Anarchists known as the "National Order of Videttes." It exists in Cowley and Sumner counties. A man named Pryor, formerly of St. Louis, is given as the head of the band. The agitation is increased by the discovery that several well-known citizens are members of it. The discovery was made by a detective who was initiated.—Mr. Thurman's health is not robust and Mr. Blaine's voice has weakened, but both are said to be on the mend.—The Mormon church is reported active and more defiant than ever.—The yellow fever is again spreading in Florida.—The cruiser Baltimore, the largest and best of the new steel vessels being built by the government, was launched at Philadelphia last Saturday. She is 335 feet long over all; her beam is 48.5 feet; her mean draught is 19.5 feet; and her displacement is 4,400 tons. The indicated horse-power of her engines is 7,800, and they are expected to drive her through the water at the rate of nineteen knots an hour. Her crew will consist of three hundred men. The new cruiser will be armed with a main battery of four eight-inch breech-loading rifled guns, and six six-inch rifled guns; six rapid-firing six-pounders, six Hotchkiss revolving cannon, and four Gatling guns. She will also carry five torpedo launching tubes or guns.

There is a drouth in Egypt, the water of the Nile being lower than was ever known before.—Great floods prevail in North China.—A terrific storm with hurricanes and flood followed the eruptions of the volcano Bandai-san in Japan. Thousands of dwellings have been destroyed, leaving great numbers of people homeless.—Friday, Oct. 12, is the day set for the meeting of Emperor William of Germany and the pope at Rome. A punctilious programme is prescribed for the occasion.—It is said that the freedmen of Brazil refuse to work since their emancipation, and the coffee crop is suffering in consequence.

VLADIMIR CATECHIZED BY HIS COUNTRYMAN.

Childish, foolish, almost idiotic as is the conception of the rights of mother and daughter acquired by "Brother" Vladimir, Russian bishop of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands, his letter in FREETHOUGHT, as a whole, afforded me a good half-hour's laugh, and for that I for one am very thankful to the "brother" for writing it and to you for its publication.

The purpose of these lines is not to dispute with the "brother" about the truth of the "historical facts" he referred to; nor an attempt to belittle the greatness of the Greek Catholic church because of savage czars and many robber kings belonging to it, nor do I wish to deny the right of "Brother" Vladimir's mother-church to excommunicate the pope and his clergy. As Jesus Christ, his immediate successor Jacob, or Jacobs, of Jerusalem, St. Peter, Paul, etc., were probably myths and not real characters at all, any dispute of "facts" regarding them is absolutely useless. The membership of czars and kings bestows no honor on any association, secular or religious, in the eyes of our citizens, who, over a century ago, declined to have one in their midst. As to the right of excommunication, the bull of the Greek Catholic church has proved a failure, as do all other bulls. The popes of Rome generally live longer than czars, in spite of the curses enunciated in the bull against them, and the prayers for the lives of the czars.

The purpose of this is to deny the claim so often made by dignitaries of the Greek church that Christ, and not the czar, is the head of that church in Russia. "Brother" Vladimir says: "The power (of the church in Russia) to govern rests not with man, who is sinful, but with the Holy Ghost in the councils, who there makes decisions, in matters of salvation, that are infallible, as in the councils of the apostles. The head of our church is Christ; we have no pope, no emperor as lawgiver in faith except the savior."

It must here be understood that I do not attempt to deny that claim as to its theoretical significance or insignificance. I might as well attempt to deny that Christianity is in theory based upon "love your enemies." And as the blood of millions of men, women, and children, who were hanged, shot, stoned to death, burned to ashes, stabbed, tortured, and otherwise banished from this world by the hands of Christians and in the name of Jesus, is a historic denial of the practice of "love your enemies" by Christians generally, so is the character of my denial of "Brother" Vladimir's statement in regard to the czar not being the head of the church in Russia.

I would "Brother" Vladimir could satisfactorily answer the following:

1. Did Christ, the Holy Ghost, or a czar establish the Holy Synod in Russia?
2. Has not the czar the power to abolish the Holy Synod if he pleases, or caprice wills him to do so, in spite of Jesus or decisions of the Holy Ghost in councils?
3. Has Jesus any guarantee that would prevent the czar from abolishing the Synod?

4. Is Christ, or the czar, appointing the high officials of the Holy Synod, and in whom rests the power of their deposition? If in both, which has proved the more effective? The souls of the bishops and priests put to death by the orders of czars, and those in exile and prisons, could probably assist "Brother" Vladimir in answering the latter question.

5. Did the churches and monasteries own serfs, not so long ago, by the will of Christ, or czar, and was it Jesus or Alexander that freed them?

6. Does the kingdom of heaven, or the government of the czar, build churches and pay salaries to the priests in Russia and "brethren" Vladimir & Co. in this country?

7. Was it the will of the Holy Ghost that monasteries should be placed in the penal code alongside prisons and forts to receive and punish criminal offenders, of non-religious character even? Was it his—excuse the pronoun; I determine the gender by the "historical fact" that Mary got the Holy Ghost as partner in the manufacture of Jesus—will that a criminal court in Russia should ask the prisoner, in many cases, to choose between a term in a prison and a cloister, and that notwithstanding the term in cloister being shorter, he should prefer the prison—the whip of the secular jailer to the rule of Jesus?

I could go on putting thousands of similar questions, but the few given are enough. His holiness, Bishop Vladimir, ought perhaps to be informed that the questioner is a native of Russia, a countryman of his; knows facts and can show data.

The claim that not the czar, but the Invisible Jesus, was the head of the Greek church is so absurd that only church dignitaries make it; the civil powers seldom, if ever. History, however, records one instance where a czar himself showed sufficient proof that Jesus, personated by priest, and not he, was superior. I shall admit that to be a "historical fact," if it pleases his holiness, Vladimir. The czar in traveling, history says, passed through a village on Sunday. The village priest was informed of his majesty's diabolic desire to attend the church services. He was glad of receiving the visitor, but was puzzled as to holding out his hand for the fools to kiss it, according to custom. As the czar approached, the priest became embarrassed, but was at last suddenly relieved by his majesty's graceful ejaculation, "Stretch out thy paw, idiot!"

Should his holiness, Vladimir, recognize in that ejaculation of the czar, representing a faithful Christian, to the priest, personating Christ, the superiority of Jesus, the quality of his logic would amply justify his present occupation, and even might induce the sinful czar to communicate with the infallible Holy Ghost, through the mediumship of the sinful procurator of the Holy Synod, "to raise the idiot to archbishop."

In conclusion allow me to advise my countryman, "Brother" Vladimir, to publicly refrain in the future from announcing the czar sinful. His majesty has a detective bureau in the metropolis of the Pacific Coast, whose chief, bearing the title of consul general, is in possession of a blacklist arranged in alphabetical order. W following V, mine and the "brother's" name might some day be found too close together, in spite of Jesus and common sense.

M. S. WAHRHAFTIG.

Can This be True?

As a rule, no class of publications, no business enterprise, carries so large a proportion of dead beats among its patrons as does the reform press. Believing all men to be honest who would care to subscribe for such a paper and take it from the post-office, the publisher sends it along, year after year often, thinking the subscriber has met with misfortune and will pay when able to do so. Then when after many months or years of waiting for his pay the publisher receives a printed notice through the post-office department that "Mr. Jones refuses" to take the paper from the office, or has "moved away"—"not wanted"—or some such notice, his faith in human honesty is not apt to be strengthened.—M. Harman in Lucifer.

WE have just printed another thousand of Voltairine de Cleyre's poem entitled "Nameless." It is one of the most affecting and effective pieces of verse ever written. It will be forwarded by mail at the rate of 10 cents per dozen.

A CONSUMMATION TO BE WISHED.

Whatever else the "Soggarth aroon" has done for weal or for woe, his effort to controvert the dogma, "Blessed are the poor," deserves unlimited praise.

The priestly instillment, that the poor will in the next world inherit additional blessings, all the greater for their meek, un-murmuring resignation here, has wrought more suffering and been better made to subserve imposture and oppression than all other tenets combined, inasmuch as it has kept replenished the coffers of the church, which in turn are the means of maintaining ecclesiastical authority. Not only this, but it has invested servility with a semblance of virtue, and implanted an indolence and groveling content in the minds of the credulous that will require generations to eradicate.

How long have priests fattened upon the belief of this dogma! What a handsome revenue it has afforded them! What superb palaces it has built for them! With what sumptuous tables, fine linen and purple, it has furnished them! Little wonder indeed that the anathema of so profitable a sentiment should evoke the wrath of the beneficiaries, and goad to retaliation by a like anathema.

But let the hitherto deluded once become impressed with the wrong this teaching has done them; let them learn that poverty, rather than a blessing, is a curse, at no time or place convertible into a blessing; make them know that those who have been instrumental in their misfortunes are amenable to punishment; that condonement of such wrongs is a crime, and retribution sure and swift would in a thousand ways overtake the perpetrators.

To expose the falsity of this pernicious dogma; to brand it with the infamy it deserves; to forever destroy its influence, and thus place it beyond the power of ensnaring the innocent, collectively forms the object for which Dr. McGlynn is working. Knowing, as he does, that this tenet is the pivot upon which hinge the charities that have beggared the world, the centrifugal force that is to-day keeping the "machine" in motion, he is concentrating his best energies, and we may add consecrating the worth of his manhood, for its elimination. May his good work continue until the priest and poverty are alike extinguished, that posterity will know them only through the musty tomes of a childish antiquity.

VIRGINIA E. VANCE.

FREETHOUGHT IN NEBRASKA.

From the Lincoln (Neb.) Daily Call.

The Hon. Samuel P. Putnam, of California, president of the American Secular Union, delivered two addresses in Bohanan's hall yesterday afternoon and evening. A fair audience greeted the speaker at each meeting. The afternoon lecture was upon "The American Republic." The "Nine Demands" or platform of Freethought were sifted, analyzed, and explained. That churches and other ecclesiastical property should no longer be exempt from taxation was forcibly presented. "They should," said Mr. Putnam, "pay their own way. It is not right that hundreds of Liberals in every community should be forced to pay for the support of Christian sects. The constitution and principles of the republic were based on the complete separation of the church and state. With the present unjust exemption of church property the union of church and state is apparent." Continuing along this line the speaker referred to the appropriations for sectarian institutions, the employment of chaplains in state and public institutions, supported by public money, as directly opposed to the fundamental principles of the government, and a wrong to every Liberal taxpayer. The use of the Bible in public schools was also severely condemned. "As well," said the speaker, "compel the children of Christian people to listen to the reading of Paine's 'Age of Reason' in the public schools as to compel our children to hear the reading of the Bible: a book that sanctions crimes and vices; a book containing many passages unfit for children to hear, or read, and many which no Christian minister would to-day dare read before an intelligent congregation." The abolition of the judicial oath was demanded, and it was argued that many took advantage of the oath to commit perjury. Simple affirmation with the pains and penalty of perjury should be substituted in its stead. All laws enforcing Sunday as the Sabbath were demanded to be repealed, and that in the administration of state and national government no privilege should be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion. The speaker closed in a warm exhortation to the Freethinkers of Lincoln to organize and push forward for the maintenance of their rights.

The evening lecture was upon "Universal Mental Liberty," and it gave full scope to the powers of Mr. Putnam as a poetic and eloquent speaker. The character of the mind and its free and untrammelled condition in free thought was explained, together with a rare description of the man Christ; how his works have been perverted by despotic priests and cringing slaves; how his goodness and radiant beauty of life have been destroyed for selfish ends and personal gain; how, if on earth to-day, the Christian church would be barred against him and the Christian priesthood would revile and scorn him. The lecture closed with a beautiful peroration, "Why Don't He Lend a Hand?" an original poem by Mr. Putnam.

The Secular Union has made arrangements for other lectures and entertainments in Lincoln in the near future.

"THE SABBATH AN IMPOSTURE."

I have just received an exhaustive essay entitled "The Sabbath an Imposture," published by Putnam & Macdonald, editors of FREETHOUGHT. It makes a beautiful little pamphlet, and that the contents are well worth perusing the very name of the author, Harry Hoover, is sufficient guarantee.

It seems almost impossible that any one could have any reverence for the day after reading its history as told by Mr. Hoover. And that he speaks "by the card" is proven by reference to history, and citations from reliable sources. He says among other proofs of the imposition put upon us in regard to the holiness of our present Sunday, "Constantine the Great (A.D. 321) becoming the head of the church—by murdering all his relatives that stood in his way—added a heathen title to it, borrowed from the pagan calendar, and changed the time from the seventh to the first day of the week. He decreed 'that on the venerable day of the Sun all judges, all townspeople, and all tradespeople should rest, while those in the country, including all agricultural people, should continue their work as on other days,' and from that date it has been called Sunday; not in commemoration of Christ crucified, but in idolatrous observance of the day of the Sun, as it had been for ages before in the Roman empire." Among other facts, Mr. Hoover tells us that in 1677 "young girls were publicly whipped for walking in the streets or fields on Sunday." Think of it, in America, the land of freedom, girls are brutally flogged by men for taking a healthful, invigorating walk on Sunday. Friends, we must guard our liberties if we desire to preserve them. Nothing is more Liberalizing than to circulate good reading matter, and this book I can earnestly recommend to each and all of you as one of the soundest and most complete of its kind.

Whoever wants the whole history of the God-day of the Christian mythologists, who make and maintain our laws, should buy this little book of Harry Hoover's and lend it to Sabbatarian neighbors. It is a readable book too, not a dull or prosy line in it. In closing he says: "The brazen impudence of the clergy in asserting the sacredness of Sunday is equaled only by the driveling idiocy of those who admit the claim, or the moral bankruptcy of those who, being cognizant of the audacious swindle, have not the moral courage to expose it."

But mightiest of the mighty means,
On which the arm of progress leans,
Man's noblest mission to advance,
His woes assuage, his weal enhance,
His rights enforce, his wrongs redress—
Mightiest of the mighty is the press.

—Sir John Bowering.

Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

DURING a trial, the judge called a witness. No one answered. An elderly man arose and solemnly said, "He is gone." "Where has he gone?" asked the judge in no tender tone. "I don't know; but he is dead," was the guarded answer.

FRESNO FLATS.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I wish to tell your many readers about a beautiful place far up among the mountains in the northeast corner of Fresno county. It is Fresno Flats, the paradise of Freethought.

On the first day of September I took the stage at Madera at 6 A.M. A long ride through heat and dust, over mountains and foothills, and we reach our destination at 6 P.M.; distance from Madera, fifty miles; stage fare, $5. I met at the post-office the Hon. Judge Johnson, postmaster and school trustee. It was soon arranged that I should lecture the following evening at the school-house; subject, "Phrenology." Let me say that the judge is a Methodist, but very liberal in his views.

The town has a fine school-house, two hotels, and a large dry-goods and grocery store combined. Of the latter Mr. Robert Larimore is the proprietor, and his son Edward, recently from college, is bookkeeper for the establishment. Both are men far above the average in mental capacity, and both are good staunch Freethinkers. On their table are found FREETHOUGHT, the Truth Seeker, and the Boston Investigator. Mr. Larimore has a large hall, a machine shop, and also a fine tract of land in and about the town. Judge Johnson keeps a grocery store in the post-office building. A livery stable and a white-labor laundry complete the business part of the town. Then come the lovely homes. The spreading oaks in the yards, flowers of every hue, beautiful shrubs, and vines lend enchantment to the scene. Bright faces are within these homes and bright children are on the lawn enjoying their childish plays. Sparkling waters, magnificent scenery, all combine to make this a lovely dwelling-place for man.

A majority of the people here are Freethinkers. All seemed to try to make my stay pleasant. I spoke to them three nights. The last night I spoke on "Liberalism." Twice I spoke in the hall, which has a larger seating capacity than the school-house; besides, Mr. Larimore tendered it free of charge. We had good audiences each night. When I spoke on Freethought, after I got through I told them anyone was at liberty to make remarks. Judge Johnson was called for, and spoke eloquently for half an hour. He said he did not feel competent to answer the speaker of the evening, who had advanced ideas he was not prepared to meet. He would agree with him that the Bible contradicted itself in many places; that miracles were not things of to-day. He added that the speaker, by his lectures in the town, had taught the people many good things; "but," said he "I cannot always agree with him."

After the lecture the hall was cleared, music struck up, and soon the most of the audience were whirling in the dance. Here let me say for the church-members of Fresno Flats that they displayed good sense while I was speaking. All kept their seats; none left the hall. Furthermore, the people here are liberal not only in thought but in money matters too.

Sunday Mr. Larimore took me to Coarse Gold, where I had to speak that night. Fresno Flats has more pretty young women and more bright, intelligent little children than I ever saw before in a town of its size.

I wish the editors of FREETHOUGHT the greatest success in their undertaking, and when settled I shall be one of their subscribers.

DR. J. A. GIBSON.

THE RETURN TRIP.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places returning from the East:

Wahoo.....	Neb.,	Oct. 23-25	Davenport.....	W. T.,	Nov. 17-19
Denver.....	Col.,	" 28	Sprague.....	" "	" 20-21
Ogden.....	Utah,	" 30-31	Pasco.....	" "	" 22-23
M't'n Home.....	Idaho,	Nov. 2	Portland.....	Or.,	" 25-26
Boise City.....	" "	" 3-4	Vancouver.....	W. T.,	" 27-28
Emmetts.....	" "	" 5-6	No. Yamhill.....	Or.,	" 29-30
Pendleton.....	Or.,	" 8-9	Scappoose.....	" "	Dec. 2
Walla Walla.....	W. T.,	" 10-11	Snohomish.....	W. T.,	" 8-10
Spokane Falls.....	" "	" 14-16	Silverton.....	Or.,	" 15-16

It is desirable to announce the remainder of the appointments at the earliest possible moment. Will friends who wish lectures write at once to S. P. Putnam, as above.

THE GREATEST WRITER OF THE REVOLUTION.

The meed of honor as the most powerful pamphleteer of the Revolution must unhesitatingly be awarded to Thomas Paine. His plain, perspicuous style, homely illustrations, force of reasoning, and nervous strength of utterance, rising sometimes to eloquence, gave to his best writings, which were those on American Independence, great popular acceptance. His "Common Sense," which ante-dated the Declaration about six months, was printed and reprinted in 1776 a dozen times, in eight different places of publication. His "Crisis," a series of pamphlets appearing occasionally from 1776 to 1783, reanimated the sometimes flagging zeal of the army, and his pungent wit and freshness of treatment kept public attention fastened to Paine's masterly productions. While they were far from being the first emphatic utterances for separation, they were the most direct, systematic, and effective. Paine's merit as a patriotic and influential writer cannot be impeached by detraction as to his habits or his opinions. Governor Morris said that he had written "Common Sense," "a quality which Paine wholly lacked;" but the force and spirit of his writings in timely advocacy of a determined resistance to oppression were praised by Washington, Lee, Adams, Rush, and others, as among the foremost influences which contributed to the grand result.—A. R. Spofford, Congressional Librarian, in the Historical American.

A Cannibal Idyl.

A cannibal maiden loved too well
 A missionary good,
 And he loved her, but dare not tell
 His love—for thus it stood:
 A cannibal she and a clergyman he,
 And their creeds were wide apart;
 And how could he take, for sentiment's sake,
 A cannibal to his heart?
 Oh, 'twas a problem vexing, very,
 For the cannibal maid and the missionary—
 Indeed it was.

But the cannibal maiden's love grew bold,
 For she was a simple thing;
 And thus her love to her love she told:
 "Oh, marry me! Be my king!
 For I love you, my sweet, well enough—oh, to eat.
 'Tis a terrible thing, I know;
 But I must be your bride, or encompass you fried—Oh, I must, for I love you so!"
 Oh, 'twas a problem vexing, very,
 To the maid, but more to the missionary,
 Indeed it was.

He looked in the depth of her dark-brown eyes,
 With their wealth of love and trust,
 And he cried, in the flush of a glad surprise,
 "Ah, well, if I must, I must!"
 They were wed on that day; for 'tis ever the way
 That passion must conquer creed,
 And a happier pair 'tis remarkably rare
 To discover—it is indeed!
 And so 'twas settled nicely, very,
 For the cannibal maid and the missionary—
 Indeed it was.

—Chicago Mail.

IS IT TRUE?

The Rev. Prof. Mansfield, at the preachers' meeting last Monday, said "he was personally acquainted with Renan, and knew him to be a blackguard and an immoral, sensual man, given to smoking and drinking." This, if true, is of no moment. It does not change the value or truth of his book, or change one religious fact. But if it be false it will go hard with Professor Mansfield, for Mr. Renan has friends who will see that he is vindicated.

H. L. K.

WE received this week a copy of a new weekly journal of the Liberal order, entitled "FREETHOUGHT," published in San Francisco, by S. P. Putnam, president of the American Secular Union, and Geo. E. Macdonald. It is very neatly printed, well arranged and carefully edited, and will no doubt be heartily welcomed by the independent thinker. Sample copies obtained by addressing the publishers, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.—Sharon Ozone.

Professor Seymour On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I arrived here after a fine ride, on the steamer Cruiser, up the Chehalis river, and soon made arrangements for a full course of lectures in Columbian hall. I gave seven lectures to crowded houses; in fact, we had to carry in lumber and make more seats every night. Our Liberal friends have an organization here, and are liberal to the core. "Our Put" should take it in on his next trip. The town has about one thousand population and is undoubtedly the coming city of the Chehalis valley. It is beautifully located on the slopes of these wooded dells, with immense forests all around it and fine farming land up and down the valley. Montesano is the seat of Chehalis county and expects a railroad soon. Now steamers run twice a day to Aberdeen, and twice a week to Portland. Immense mills, logging, fishing, hunting bears and deer, dancing, and attending lectures keep these hardy pioneers busy. This is a great country, but still in its wild state of nature, waiting for the over-crowded denizens of the East to come and plant their fruits and build their homes. Land is cheap and fuel plenty and free. The climate is very healthful; no severe storms nor hot summers, for it is only sixty miles from the ocean. Men get two to four dollars per day and board, either in logging camps or as mechanics in the towns, and you can get a good meal most any where for 25 cents. This is grand place for a poor man able and willing to work. Government will give him 160 or 320 acres of land with two or three million feet of timber of the best quality in the world upon it if he will take it and swear to be a good Republican or Democrat. You can live on bear steak, mountain trout, fresh oysters, salmon, and such, while the fire, in time, will clear your land for you. There are millions of acres here that the fire has entirely cleared, and it is yearly doing more and more in this line, while the timber should be kept for the near future when lumber will be hard to find.

We met here Mr. C. C. Tunnicliffe and wife, who are regular wheel-horses for Freethought, and work continually to keep up the society here. They have a delightful home on the hill overlooking the "city," where I am at present stopping. Mr. Lessman, another whole-souled, wide-awake Liberal, all the way from "Bingen, loved Bingen on the Rhine," is ever on deck, to watch the enemy of Freethought, and gives his money freely to the "cause that lacks assistance." Mr. Mooney and wife, Mr. Glenn and wife, W. Wedeken, Mr. and Mrs. Hildebrand, Mr. and Mrs. Lamb, and many others, all worked like beavers to make our stay both pleasant and profitable. These kind friends and true Liberals we shall long remember, and always make Montesano a point in our route when coming into western Washington Territory. I also met here two fine and noble-hearted young men, Chas. Patten and George Hayes, who are liberal to the core, both in religion and with the glittering pelf of money. These young men ought to be in our halls of legislature, instead of being cooped up here in a 7x9 business, for they are big-brained, fine specimens of men who might write their names high up on the hill of fame and the tablet of honor. Mr. Lamb is president of the society.

After the last lecture Saturday night the seats were "piled up" and a dance was soon in full blast. A large crowd took part, and the way the "fellers" took partners in their arms and went whirling and polkaing around the large hall, was a sight worth seeing. Even your correspondent, old and glum, "caught the fever," also a fair and pretty maid by the hand, and demonstrated that he could use his feet professionally, as well as his brain, and yet trip the "light fantastic." A lecture, then a dance—perhaps one is as useful as the other. We believe dancing to be the "safety valve" for the pent-up magnetism of men and women, and that without these social relations for exchanging these subtle and hidden powers, immorality and licentiousness would be greatly increased. If the churches would understand this law and have in their joss houses a good social dance once or twice a week, there would not be so many ministers and dear sisters continually falling from grace, nor so many reverends tried for crimes against women. The more we study and obey Nature's laws the better for us all.

On Monday, September 24, we staged it to Elma, twelve miles, where we gave four lectures in the Christian church, a very neat and cozy place for the Infidel to worship in, with the big Bible just before him. This was carrying the war into the enemy's country for certain, for there were testaments and hymn books lying in every seat, and "God was all around," but the other fellow did not show his cloven foot at all. We had fine audiences here; in fact, the church was literally jammed every night after the first and we had to use all the lumber and boxes we could find in making temporary seats. The church people and all united to make the most of the occasion, and nobly did they succeed. The county fair was in session and this helped to sustain us very much. This is a very new country, yet the display of apples and other fruits, vegetables, flowers, etc., was simply magnificent. The quantity of samples shown was small, but in size ne plus ultra. Very little stock was shown, but that exhibited was fine. We found a good home with Mr. H. Sheff and wife, who keep the only hotel, and though literally jammed with the crowd they managed to feed and lodge us all most regally. Mr. Sheff and family are thoroughly our kind of folks and have no use for the "blood of the lamb," but believe in giving their guests venison, trout, salmon, and bear's meat. They are late from the jay-hawker's kingdom, like your humble servant, but have come to stay here to feed the hungry, while somebody else clothes the naked. Really, we all obey scripture one way or another. While here we met Mrs. G. D. McLane, who, until two years ago, was a shouting Methodist, good and strong. Her husband, being a radical, borrowed the Truth Seeker to read, but kept it hid away so as not to offend his wife. However, she found it and read it, all unbeknown to him, and got converted to the religion of humanity, and sent and subscribed for the Truth Seeker out of her own earnings, saying to her spouse, "We will not borrow our paper nor put our light under a bushel." Mrs. McLane is a whole four-horse team in our cause. She has been all over the world with a concert troupe, and now, in her declining years, has settled among the big trees in Washington Territory. Success to them. I also met Postmaster Carney and wife, radical Freethinkers, Mr. Himes, and many others whose names I have forgotten, but who were "strikers" while we were welding Freethought and science into a lever to upset mouldy, worm-eaten, priest-ridden orthodoxy. Brother Reynolds has been here. Many of our folks think he is too hard and severe on the church people; that unpalatable truths better be sugar-coated so they will go down better and yet physic out superstition all the same. I guess molasses is better than vinegar to catch flies with; but the good work is going on, and all of our lectures and papers are doing a mighty work, each in their own peculiar manner. Let our friends everywhere sustain them.

Montesano, Wash.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

Is Controversy Dangerous?

NUMBER V.

The minister uses his reason to persuade his people not to trust reason. Every effort of the Christian church to suppress debate has proved futile. He who opposes mental liberty in another denies it to himself. A system which refuses to abide by free speech has no right to claim the ear of mankind for itself. Discussions of theological questions are nearly as important, to say the least, as legal and congressional debates. The interests of mankind require them. Men and women will discuss them. They will discuss all things. The question which one age does not investigate another will. Nothing will be allowed to escape. The countries where speech is free contain happy, truth seeking people. Controversy tends to make men and women think and examine for themselves. To discover truth is its aim. To smother freedom of speech has been a large part of the work of Christianity.

Buckle, in his "History of Civilization in England," has well said that "no man is true to himself who fears to express his opinion. There is hardly a vice which so debases us, in our esteem, as moral cowardice." Helvetius declares that "if we would be sure of the truth of our opinions, we should make them public." The clergy make their opinions public, but do they welcome opposing opinions? Helvetius added, "It is by the touchstone of discussion that they must be proved." If it is a fact, as Freethinkers believe, that "any system which shuns investigation openly manifests its own error," and if Christianity shuns the conflicts of controversy, is it not found wanting at the bar of reason? Has not Christianity lost the confidence and boldness of Paul, who said, "We can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth." If controversy is only "dreaded by the advocates of error," as Dr. Rush taught, and if the Christian church dreads it, what are we to think? If the church denounces discussions; and yet, as Macaulay affirms, "The liberty of discussion is the great safeguard of all other liberties" and is, as another asserts, "the very bulwark of truth," what are we to conclude about its professions of being the friend of man and of liberty? We leave the intelligent and unprejudiced reader to decide whether the "if" is fact or fiction.

This is pre-eminently an age of independent thinking and speaking.

We are living in a period of intellectual antagonism—whizzing, foaming, times! The world is in a foment! Truly, as that eminent scientist, John Tyndall, observes: "It is perfectly possible for you and me to purchase intellectual peace at the price of intellectual death." Is not this precisely the condition of the church? Millions of people seek the refuge of sectarianism, which offers shelter and peace instead of commotion. Can we not say, with Tyndall again, that a thinking being ought to "scorn such base repose?"

There is a universe around us, teeming with facts and beautiful truths, which can never be fenced off into sectarian lots. Why should not every one be free to explore whithersoever the mind may lead? It is despotism which calls liberty license, and fears the fiery furnace of criticism.

Remember, controversy is not quarreling. It is an earnest, sincere comparison and analysis of ideas. Let us join John Stuart Mill in saying that "all silencing of discussion is an assumption of infallibility." And can we not agree with Sir W. Drummond? "Philosophy, wisdom, and liberty support each other. He who will not reason is a bigot; he who cannot is a fool; and he who dare not is a slave." W. F. JAMIESON.

Monte Vista, Colo.

N.B.—In the course of a few weeks I will prepare another short series of articles entitled, "The Bible in Favor of Controversy; or, The Christian's Chief Witness turned against Himself." W. F. J.

"Christian" Morality.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The Cleveland Leader says in a recent issue, "According to Christian doctrine, Catholic as well as Protestant, it is a sin for a man to marry his brother's or his sister's daughter."

I fear these religions, if that be true, are forgetting the laws as written in the Christian Bible, which even permit the marriage of fathers with their own daughters. Read 1 Corinthians vii, 36: "But if any man thinketh that he behaveth himself unseemly toward his virgin daughter, if she be past the flower of her age, and if need so requireth, let him do what he will, he sinneth not; let them marry."

Then why do Christians make so much scandal over what they term "improper intimacies" between these relations? When the Lord says a thing is correct, and goes so far as to record it as no sin—as the thing to do—how will those elect ones who have made earth so hot for the perpetrators of these permissible acts account for their daring interference when standing before the "great white throne" to be judged as "ye who have hearkened unto my teachings," etc.? I fear the incestuous father and daughter will have the upper seat in glory, and those who giped at them will have to "depart hence, ye scoffers!" I daily marvel that this intelligent nineteenth century insists on hugging such a book of heathen edicts and ethics as the highest moral guide by which to rear children and model itself. The trouble is, three-fourths of the Christian world do not read the Bible; they only know the portions their pastors tell them about. M. E. C. FARWELL.

Vineland, N. J.

Coos County.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I feel that I must let your readers know how the cause of Freethought is progressing in the great forest of Coos county, Oregon. The outside world does not know how difficult it is to travel in this coast country. We must take into consideration that from Drain station, on the Oregon & California railroad, south to the California line, a distance of over two hundred miles on a line parallel with the Pacific ocean and about seventy-five miles east of it, there are but three roads going through to the coast; Drain, Roseburgh, and Grant's Pass all cross the coast range. This whole country is covered with a mighty forest, and from December until May all travel is on horseback through the mud; yet the summer climate is the most delightful in the world. The scenery is unsurpassed. The mountains are lofty, the forests grand. Deer, elk, and bear abound. The mountain streams are full of trout, the wild berries unlimited. Its cool shades far surpass those of fabled Eden that God so loved to walk in. The winters are indeed wet, but never cold. Snow rarely falls in the valley west of the range, and people, always healthy, give themselves up to amusement.

Here on the Coquille river we have the benefit of steamboat travel daily. Boats go up and down for forty miles, and the fare to the mouth of the river is only 50 cents. The boats are owned by Liberals. Reynolds left us a few days ago, after a trip up and down the river, with a picnic at Arago, five miles above Coquille City.

Paul A. Smith, a Spiritualist, will be here for a short time in about a month and will lecture at places on the river. Spiritualists turn out to hear Materialists, and vice versa, making common cause against the union of church and state. So the good work goes on.

Coquille City, Or.

HENRY H. NICHOLS.

NURSES in hospitals are rather apt to lay too much stress on the advantages received by the patients and their duty of thankfulness, but still it is the poor soldier who suffers the most from always having his causes to be grateful flung in his teeth. Witness the following true story:

Chaplain—So poor Hopkins is dead. I should have liked to speak to him once again, and soothed his last moments. Why didn't you call me?

Hospital Orderly—I didn't think you ought to be disturbed for 'Opkins, sir; so I just soothed him as best I could myself.

Chaplain—Why, what did you say to him?

Orderly—"Opkins," sez I, "you're mortal bad."

"I am," sez he.

"Opkins," sez I, "I don't think you'll get better."

"No," sez he.

"Opkins," sez I, "you're going fast."

"Yes," sez 'e.

"Opkins," sez I, "I don't think you can 'ope to go to 'eaven."

"I don't think I can," sez 'e.

"Well, then, 'Opkins," sez I, "you'll go to 'ell."

"I suppose so," sez 'e.

"Opkins," sez I, "you ought to be wery grateful as there's a place perwided for you, and that you've got somewhere to go." And I think 'e 'eard, sir, and then 'e died.—The London Hospital.

If parochial schools are as advantageous for a country as the Roman Catholic church claims, why have they done so little for the province of Quebec, where the priesthood and ignorance have joined hands to degrade a people and debauch politics. Race and religious prejudice hold that province in such dark bondage that the enlightened portion of its people see no hope for the future except through annexation to the United States, which has no relish for such a solution of a vexatious problem. Judged by what it has done for the French of Canada, the never-ending struggle of the church of Rome to get its hands on the school funds of this republic must be regarded as a sinister plot against its education and progress.—The American.

THE Wilmington Star notes that the Rev. Edward Hopper, of New York, died suddenly while writing a poem on heaven. On this the New Orleans Picayune remarks: "This should be a warning to people who write on tariffs, European politics, or any subject of which they know nothing. Mr. Hopper is possibly now qualified to describe heaven, but when he sat down to write his poem he was not."

At the monthly meeting of the Manchester Presbytery, the Rev. R. T. Cunningham fell unconscious. The Presbytery at once set to praying hard for his recovery, with the result that in a few minutes he died without having regained consciousness. The deceased minister was only 35 years of age, and had never given any signs of heart disease.—London Freethinker.

A KENTUCKY Sunday-school superintendent thus expressed himself to his pastor: "See here, I'm not going to teach this school any longer if I've got to leave my revolver at home. Only yesterday Colonel Kilgore mopped the floor with me because I contradicted his statement that Moses was found in a clothes-basket at the second battle of Bull Run."

A CERTAIN preacher called his hat Golgotha, because it was the place of a skull.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

LUCIFER THE LIGHT-BEARER.

DEVOTED TO THE

Frank and fearless discussion of basic principles in the field of governmental and social reform.

For more than eighteen months this paper and its publishers have been prosecuted in the courts by the agents of the Comstock Vice Society, for alleged violations of the U. S. postal laws.

Published weekly at Valley Falls, Kansas, at $1.25 per annum. Specimen copies free.

Miracles and Miracle Workers,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 10 cts.

Christian Absurdities,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 20 cts.

Both for sale at this office.

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question. Cloth, 75 cts. Address this office.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.
P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months.
50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

...IN THE...

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

...FOR...

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine
paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents;
paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to re-educate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" medical valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16 page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

he Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.
PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.
33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,
Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.
Do not forget Street and Number,
357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)
ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting. American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13 50, $14 50; 5 ounce, $16 00; 6 ounce, $17 50.
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $18, $17.
$18, $19 50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4,
being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best
14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest
style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24 50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$22; 15 jewels, $28. In good second quality filled cases, $2
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38.
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis-
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4 $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case.
Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1.
Best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set
best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12.
Large field glasses, $3, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free.
BEST WORK. Try me.
Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.
OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
BADGE in PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of out and smaller,
two-thirds size. War-
ranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2 75, $3 50. Large,
$3 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $8, $10; and
charms up to $25. De-
mand daily increasing.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application.

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.
N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

"Zum Walfisch."

THE WHALE CHAS. A. JONAS, Proprietor.

Fine Wines, Liquors and Cigars.
Cold Lager and Sharp Steam Beers.
24 THIRD ST., Near Market,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

JOHN WIELAND'S Lager Bier IS THE BEST. CALL FOR IT.

J. A. REED.
FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert
G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

F. SANGROVE, Merchant Tailor.

LATE OF LONDON AND PARIS,
All imported goods. Orders promptly attended. Prices moderate. Cleaning and repairing
neatly done.
Ladies' Cloaks and Riding Habits a Specialty.
F. SANGROVE, 104 FIFTH ST.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say
infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to
those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior
Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address.
Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San
Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS,
the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author.
Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 42.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter, Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - OCTOBER 20, 1888

THE death of more than sixty Catholic excursionists by a railroad collision in Pennsylvania last week is a grim and ghastly refutation of the claim that Providence protects its own. Is the same neglect under which Christians suffer here to be manifested toward the inhabitants of the next world?

It is deplorable, as the Rev. Mr. Bovard said at the Methodist ministers' meeting last Monday, that enough papists are on the school board to effect the removal of Protestant teachers and to substitute Catholics in their places. The only safety against the evil threatened is the thorough secularization of the schools and of the state.

THE following entry was made in his diary by the late Emperor Frederick of Germany when he was crown prince: "December 25, 1870.—After all, it really is an irony on the message of salvation when each side prays to God for its own cause as the righteous one, and at every success tries to prove that its opponent has been left in the lurch by heaven."

It looks if all the evangelizing talent of the universe would swoop down on the long-suffering city of San Francisco during the coming winter. We are to have Moody and Sam Jones, and a number of lesser lights, to say nothing about that prince of humbugs, the Rev. Mr. Dowie, the Australian faith healer, now holding forth in the Grand Opera House. It may become expedient to subpoena some of these as witnesses in the case of the People against Christianity, to be called, probably, in January.

SOME little time ago a paragraph in FREETHOUGHT hinted that Pundita Ramabai, of India, now in San Francisco, was probably first among the Hindoo women who would be benefited by the money she was collecting. The paragraph fell under the eye of a lady member of Dr. Garvin's Twelfth-street Campbellite sanctuary, who called a few days since to correct its erroneous impression. It is affirmed that the pundita sees none of the funds she collects; that she is not upon a Christian but a secular mission; that her object is to educate, not to evangelize, Hindoo women, and that her work is one that every Freethinker should assist. We hope this is so, and we trust that after next January there will be in San Francisco an organization of Freethinkers before whom the pundita may lay her scheme for the elevation of her countrywomen.

MR. L. K. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, utters words of wisdom and wit. In a recent address to young men he said: "Idleness is the road to ruin. It is the placid stream that ends in Niagara. Every young man should have a trade, a profession, or an occupation that will keep his hands or his brain employed. If you have the talent for a professional career, and want to serve your race nobly, be a physician; if you do not think much of yourself, be a lawyer; and if you do not think much of your race, be a minister."

CONGRESSMAN MORROW got home from Washington last Sunday night, and his friends fired cannon in honor of the event. This so seriously disturbed the prayer meetings held at the time that the Rev. Mr. Woodworth was moved to call attention to section 302 of the Penal Code and to recommend that the celebrants be immured in the county jail according to the provisions of that instrument touching the sanctity of religious meetings. If the Rev. Mr. Woodworth desires a little brief notoriety he should put his complaint in the form of a warrant for the arrest of the offending parties.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Findlay, Ohio, is a phenomenal city. Two years ago it had 5,500 inhabitants. Now it has 20,000. Five thousand new buildings have been erected during the last eighteen months. Farms within six miles of the city sell for $300 per acre, and are being divided into lots. The area of the corporation is twenty-four square miles, and streets are graded in every square mile. A vast centre of industry is being created. Already there are several glass factories, and the finest glass in the world is made here; also a nail, wire nail, table, lantern, and rapid type writer factory, architectural iron works, mask factory—the only one in this country—edge tool factory, rolling mills, chain works, brass foundry, hydraulic press brick works, aluminum factory—the only one in the United States—church furniture factory (I wonder if it is taxed), seamless tube works, pottery works, boiler works, refrigerator works, etc. It would take a week to visit all the manifold and extensive industries of this place.

The secret of this marvelous growth are the oil wells and natural gas wells. These are simply inexhaustible. They will last until the judgment day, and then furnish enough fuel for a first-class hell. Findlay is in the heart of the greatest oil and gas fields in the world. The belt is about three hundred miles long and fifty miles wide, as now developed. Findlay takes in the richest portion of this wonderful belt. One enormous gas well throws out 12,000,000 cubic feet every twenty-four hours. It burst forth in the month of February, and within the radius of a hundred rods the grass grew green, the buckeyes put forth their foliage as in May, bouquets of flowers were gathered along the banks of the Blanchard river, which fairly bubbled and steamed with the heat. There are twenty gas wells in the vicinity, and the average product of each is 5,000,000 cubic feet every twenty-four hours. The pressure is about five hundred pounds to the square inch.

The gas is used for light and heat. People have got so now that they don't recognize wood and coal when they see it. Every family is a happy family, for there is no quarreling as to who shall make the fire; no chopping of wood, no splitting of kindlings. What a paradise for a lazy man or tired woman! Gas for a cook-stove costs 50 cents a month. For $6 a year one can do the cooking for a large family. Parlor stoves are heated for $3.50 a year. One gas jet costs 5 cents a month, twelve cost 40 cents a month. For less than $5 a year one can illumine every room in his house day and night, and have morning and evening to suit himself, and can bid the sun depart in peace.

No wonder that rents are high at Findlay, and that every house is occupied. Winter has no terrors here; nor the gas man, nor the coal man. Wages are good. The common laborer receives about $1.75 per day; carpenters and machinists from $2.50 to $3.50, and glass workers from $3.50 to $15.00 per day. More money has been spent for building the last year than in any other city of its population. There are sixteen school-houses, costing $300,000. Six of these were built during the last eight months, costing $100,000. The water works cost $300,000, and the new court-house $250,000. The "Church of God," a new sect of "the latest style," has a college costing $57,000. The city gave it eight acres, valued at $16,000. This is pretty well for the youngest church in Christendom. This property is untaxed. It is "the church of God." If it were the church of man it would have to pay its own way. The deities are the "dead-heads" of the universe.

A new bridge is being constructed across Blanchard river, one hundred feet wide, one span costing $30,000. There are ten miles of horse railroads and thirty miles of electric wire for the electric lights. With these, the gas and oil wells, the juvenile band, and the "Church of God," Findlay is the best advertised town in the world.

It is curious that the source of all this wondrous wealth was discovered twenty-five years ago. The gas wells were considered useless. Occasionally they would be utilized to run engines. In searching for oil, if one struck gas he was disappointed. That was no bonanza. It took over twenty years for people to find out that natural gas was a good thing. What a case of "neglected genius." Mankind is pretty stupid, after all. Only think of natural gas blazing for nearly a quarter of a century out of the bowels of the earth, and the world passing it by without a thought of its glorious possibilities.

I went into one of the glass factories. The gas heats to 500 and 600 Fahrenheit. This makes a right smart hell. Every bit of sand melts until it flows like water. There is no sulphur or dust with gas, as with coal, and the glass is thus more brilliantly clear. All sorts of glassware are made. The workmen sing at their task, and it is a gay picture—the luminous balls, tossed from the seething pots, rolled into graceful shapes at one blow of the ponderous machine, that strong arms make swing with rhythmic motion. At the aluminum factory the heat is 3300 Fahrenheit. This is awful to think of, and in looking into the terrific abysses I was reminded of what the Sunday-school boy said. His teacher tried to frighten him with hell-fire. "Why," said he, "I couldn't stand it." "But," answered the teacher, "God will make you to stand it." "Oh," said the boy, "if I can stand it, then it's all right."

I don't think, however, that God could make one stand all the heat that natural gas can generate. What a magnificent crematory can be made here. It wouldn't take more than a twinkling to dissolve our mortal bodies. How much better this sparkling, glowing tomb than the cold earth, and how much more useful our bodies will become. We might miss the resurrection trump, but the most of humanity would be gainers by thus failing to answer the roll call.

I have had one remarkable pleasure. I "shot off" an oil well, 900 feet of oil in it, 1,242 feet deep, with 60 quarts of nitro-glycerine. I have done something, at last, which I hope is beyond criticism. The expansive power of nitro-glycerine is 1,600 times that of powder. It beats dynamite, for dynamite is only 900 times that of powder. Therefore I am not a "dynamiter." I want something ahead of that in the revolutionary line. Had this sixty quarts of nitro-glycerine exploded above ground it would have smashed Findlay all to pieces. What it did underground is a matter of speculation, but I am satisfied that I was the author of a small earthquake, and hereafter I shall have somewhat of the feeling of the Alps, of which Byron reports, taking notes on the spot, that they

"shook with their mountain mirth

As if they did rejoice over a young earthquake's birth."

This is the way the deed is done: They drill 1,242 feet. Then three long tin cartridges, holding twenty quarts each, are carefully let down, one fitting into the other, until there is a solid column of nitro-glycerine, of thirty or forty feet. The "go-devil" is then dropped. When it reaches the cartridges there is a big explosion. I dropped the "go-devil." That was my part of the transaction. It takes about a minute for the "go-devil" to reach the bottom, and about a minute for the effects of the explosion to reach the top. In that two minutes one can get to a safe distance, which, of course, I did. When all was ready I dropped the fatal instrument. I could hear it rattling along its journey as I proceeded to avoid the concussion. We waited a minute, and then the quick thunder of the explosion was heard, far down the chasm. Another minute, and the mass rolls forth—black volumes of oil—rising, like ocean waves, against the massive framework, until it splutters and splurges and roars hundreds of feet in air. Then the black volume descends; a moment's silence, and afterwards huge fountains of water pour forth, mounting to the skies, and tumbling back in glistening floods. The "go-devil" had done its work, but where was it? I found only a fragment, which I keep in memory of "a day that was not lost."

In this rushing city, with its amazing growth, Liberals have not yet become acquainted. A few, however, have struck hands, and our flag was raised, and I don't believe it will go down very soon.

Father Elias Price was the first Liberal I met. He is 72 years of age. He has been in this country fifty-four years, and has won his way by hard and constant work. His wife died a little over a year ago. Forty-eight years they have lived together through the struggles of pioneer life. For half a century Mr. Price has been a Freethinker. He was born in the fold of the church. The elders prayed that he might be converted or be cut off, but neither happened. He lived right on, and lives still, a staunch Freethinker, and pursues the course of nature with equable and courageous mind. He lives five miles from Findlay. Friday, Sept. 28, I had a visit with him, and a pleasant journey through this almost fairy land, where such wealth is flowing forth. With him, in his home, are Miss Nancy and Mrs. Meyers, his daughters, and also his little grandchildren. Age and youth mingle about this Liberal fireside. Mr. Price still lives near the old homestead, where his father settled when the country was almost a wilderness. The Freethought spirit goes from father to son. Jos. B., W. A., and B. F. Price, the sons, are active and generous supporters of the cause. Jos. B. Price has just met with a severe accident, falling from a tree, and he was unable to leave his bed. He is a strenuous worker and always ready to do his share, and his present misfortune is felt by us all, and his wife and children have the deepest sympathy of friends. Nature rolls on mindless whether we live or die, suffer or rejoice, but human hearts will give hope and courage.

Wm. A. Price is among our earnest workers, loyal whatever may be the fortune of war.

Dr. H. V. Beardsley has no fear of orthodoxy before his eyes. Born and brought up in this community, he has never ceased to maintain his right to think, and, though on the unpopular side, he has always been one of the most popular and respected physicians in the city. I think the sick people trust him a great deal more for this world than they do all the clergymen for the next. The doctor is heart and soul for Freethought; a generous and cultivated Liberal, and it was a great pleasure to meet with one who is so cordial and so determined to see the world move notwithstanding the indifference and fear of many.

Mr. Wm. Makinnis has been in the front for years, and is not discouraged, although it hasn't always been fair weather, and the heavy guns of orthodoxy have been pointed at his breast. He is alive and well without any of the prayers of faith, and ready to march at the bugle call.

V. H. Coons is the same brave soldier of humanity, and without fear or favor stands to the colors. He doesn't say much, but the effectual service is all the same.

Wm. Smith will stand up and be counted every time, and will submit even to "war taxes" rather than see the standard lower to the enemy.

H. M. Haverly, W. E. Oswalt, Jos. Rothchilds, W. M. Chadwick, L. B. Baker, F. Z. Taylor, Sam'l S. Clayton, L. D. Nettleton, Mr. and Mrs. Govier, Mrs. Wm. Smith, Jas. Palmer, Henry Rovey; these I find on the pioneer roll, helpful and enthusiastic, and with such allies I feel that to-morrow will be happier than to-day, for it will be freer and humanity will be nobler.

I count it also good fortune to meet Geo. E. Blaine, not "Blaine of Maine," but as good a man, every inch of him, and a Liberal to the core. He can't help it, for he is of the world's inventive force. He invented the "Blaine Dump Car" in use on many railroads, an assured success. He is now superintendent of the N. Y. M. & W. R. R., a trunk line per Findlay from east to west. Mr. Blaine took me up the new road to Ottawa. On my way, at his invitation, I "shot off" the oil well, as already told. Dr. Beardsley accompanied our party. His cousin, Dr. C. E. Beardsley, lives at Ottawa—one of the most orthodox towns I ever struck. The shadow is on all its streets and stores. There is a big Catholic church at Ottawa, and parochial school, and the priests hold the fort, but Dr. Beardsley has the honest, strong blood of the Secularist. He is our "forlorn hope" at this point, and I believe he will carry the day, for, like General Taylor, he would fight on, no matter if defeated according to the rules of war. I think all the Beardsleys must be born Freethinkers. At any rate, so far, they make a host. Capt. H. E. McClure and J. W. Cooley were also pleasant companions of this day's journey.

Thus our campaign at Findlay has gone along with bright and varying fortune. I gave three lectures. The audiences were not large, but they were appreciative. Something has been done and I look forward to results as brilliant, perhaps, some day, as the advance of the city itself to material prosperity.

Findlay, Ohio, Sept. 28, 1888.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

THE CASE TO BE TRIED.

A gentleman of this city, observing our invitation to the supporters of Christianity and opponents of Freethought to put their defense and indictment in form to be argued in a court held for the purpose of hearing the same, has presented the appended citation of skeptics, and offers to meet all comers on the issues raised:

THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, Plaintiffs, AGAINST ALL AND SINGULAR, THE ADVERSARIES, DENI-ERS, QUESTIONERS, AND REVILERS OF THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION, Defendants.

In the Court of the People of the State of California and City of San Francisco, set up for the purpose of investigating the Christian Religion, and for the determination of the following questions:

1. Is the Christian Religion founded in fact?
2. Is it a moral system, essential to the well-being of mankind?
3. Are its teachers evangelists of a higher civilization?

And now come the undersigned, attorneys for and in behalf of the Christian Religion above named, and complain to this Court,

That certain men of this said city and state, commonly known as Infidels, Atheists, Deists, unbelievers, etc., are in the daily practice of denying the truth of the Christian Religion, and reviling the same as a dangerous delusion, at war with the republic and inimical to rational liberty and wholesome rule, to the great detriment of the people, ruinous to their morals, and to their immortal souls.

That, on the contrary, we, the undersigned, show to this court, and stand ready to prove by competent and sufficient evidence, that said Religion is entirely founded in fact, and supported by science, history, and reason, to wit:

1. That there is a personal, conscious, knowing, wise, just, and beneficent ruler of the universe, whom we call God.
2. That this life is not the end of the human being, but there is a life to come in the spirit, and all will live forever.
3. That this future life is divided into two parts, a place of bliss, and one of torment.
4. That the bliss is to be earned by a belief in certain statements, and obedience to and support of the church, a good life as the church teaches, or a repentance and call on God, or some person appointed, for forgiveness.
5. That the torment is incurred by rejecting this belief, neglect of church forms and requirements, or a sinful life unforgiven.
6. That God gave man a book called the Bible, for a guide in this world and the world to come.
7. That God sent his son, born of a woman in the form of a child, and then a man, and called Jesus Christ, to teach mankind what to believe and what to do, to suffer for their sins, and to be their savior and mediator—God and man.
8. That he was put to death for the sins of mankind, and then took his place as God, as the son of God, and one of the trinity, to judge, mediate, and forgive.
9. That whosoever shall believe these things, and on him, and call on his name, shall have the eternal bliss. Though red as blood, his sins shall be forgiven, and shall be white as snow.
10. That he founded a church, commissioned his apostles and other disciples to preach these things, and to empower and appoint and anoint others to do so, and requires all men to believe and reverence and obey them, on pain of torment.
11. That not to believe these things, not to listen to the church, not to obey, not to call on the son of God, to deny them, and advise and persuade others, is to be at enmity with God, at war with Christ, and a wicked adversary of all mankind, and to be eternally lost and tormented, no matter how wise and good and just in all other respects.

12. That this religion, Bible, Christ, church, and these preachers so ordained, are in direct rapport with God, the only way by which men can be saved, and the only sure-basis for morality and happiness in this world.

And these affiants declare to this court that all these things are true, and can be proven to the satisfaction of the court, and to the confusion of all the above-named Infidels, heretics, etc.

And the court herein is prayed to summon before it all the above named to appear before it on [place and date to be hereafter specified] then and there to answer, and to show cause why injunction should not issue to forbid them at any time or place in this commonwealth to again deny the above-named Christian Religion, or mislead others into a disbelief thereof, to the manifest peril of their souls hereafter, and their morals and happiness in this world.

The author of the above citation does not wish to assume prominence in this matter except as it may become necessary in case no other defender of Christianity appears. He therefore invites all priests, ministers, evangelists, and other believers in the Christian religion to co-operate with him, and not only to give him their moral support, but to confer with the editor of FREETHOUGHT as to the selection of time and place for the trial to be held. He is a layman and expresses a willingness to withdraw in favor of any accredited minister of the gospel, or he will be pleased to have such minister or clergyman act as his colleague.

The citation sets forth very succinctly the points at issue between believers and unbelievers, and will be an admirable basis for a trial.

GOOD SECULAR WORK.

Last winter, when the alleged managers of the Chicago Catholic "Industrial School for Girls" applied to the authorities of Cook county for an appropriation for the maintenance of the inmates of the institution, County Attorney Bliss objected, and they were obliged to sue.

The defense showed that there was no such institution as the alleged Industrial School. A number of officials of the House of the Good Shepherd and of St. Joseph's Home had met and inaugurated such an institution, but there was no evidence of its tangible existence. In FREETHOUGHT of February 3, Secretary E. A. Stevens summarized the facts proved by Attorney Bliss to the effect that the incorporation was merely a scheme to evade the constitution of the state, which provides that no county shall pay money to support any school controlled by any church, and that the girls committed to the Industrial School were turned over to the House of the Good Shepherd and St. Joseph's Home, which were Roman Catholic factories and derived a revenue from laundry and other work performed by abandoned women who temporarily lodged there. The county claimed, in fact, that the Industrial School was a swindle. Judge Tuthill, however, before whom the case was tried, held differently, and decided that the state must pay the nearly $2,000 sued for.

From Judge Tuthill's jurisdiction the case was carried to the supreme court of Illinois, and here the argument of the county attorney was given the weight due to it, and the decision of the lower court has been reversed. If the other sectarian institutions of Chicago meet the same fate as the Industrial School, there are several that will be affected by this decision. The Chicago Tribune says that Mr. Bliss, attorney for the people, conducted the case "in a manner entirely free from sectarian prejudices, or prejudices of any kind. He presented the questions involved free from all spirit of controversy, and purely as a question of law." It is therefore, as the Truth Seeker observes, "not a victory of Protestants over Catholics, but of Secular over sectarian government."

And as the paper just quoted further says, "there are two parties to whom the tax-payers of Cook county should be particularly grateful. First, it is to Col. Robert G. Ingersoll that Illinois largely owes her secular constitution and the prohibitions upon which the decision of the supreme court rests. Second, the Chicago Secular Union, under the leadership of E. A. Stevens, has been behind this case all the way through, and hopes to wipe out other frauds of a similar character."

In the face of this good work, it is amusing to hear those who have said that the Union was a sham, assert in italics that they believe so still.

* SAFE AND SOUND.

In this condition the American Secular Union has come forth from its twelfth annual crucible called a congress. The report which we give in this issue is necessarily a mere synopsis. We have neither the space nor the material for a more extended account, but it gives the proceedings and the result. The election of Judge Westbrook for president is a choice that reflects credit, we believe, upon the Congress; and the re-election of Secretary Stevens certainly testifies to the wisdom of a majority present. Mr. Stevens has the energy, backed by ability, to go ahead and do something. If sometimes he is a trifle impatient with those whom Mr. Charles Watts characterizes as the parasites—those who are with us but not for us—he does not, after all, differ greatly from the rest of the working Liberals in that respect. To have elected any other man to his place would have been a fatal mistake.

The sum subscribed at the Congress for the work of the next year is a good beginning, but it should be doubled and trebled at once by subscriptions from all over the country. Ten thousand dollars could be used to advantage as a literature and lecture fund, and for executive work. A single individual has subscribed that sum for work in the national presidential campaign, and yet none of the issues between the Republican and Democratic parties are of so much importance to the purity and stability of government as are the issues involved in the Nine Demands of the American Secular Union.

It looks as if all connected with the Congress had done their duty well. The Auditing Committee, assuredly, acquitted itself with honor. So did the Committees on Resolutions and Nominations, and the Congress indorsed their suggestions with unanimity and enthusiasm.

When "News and Notes" from Pittsburgh come in we shall be afforded some accurate impressions of the Congress and the prospects of the national organization. Let us say with our New York contemporary:

"A union of hearts, a union of hands,
A union that nothing can sever;
A union of lakes, a union of lands,
The Secular Union forever."

Now the work in hand for the Liberals of this vicinity is to rally at the meetings in January and organize the largest Auxiliary in the United States.

THE "Sabbath Imposture," a pamphlet by Harry Hoover, 10 cents per copy; six for 50 cents; fifteen for $1.00.

ANYONE who has been near City Hall Park in New York on Sunday morning during the past two years has heard a white-haired old man thundering forth his denunciations of sin, and calling upon the habitues of that locality to forsake the ways of wickedness and flee the wrath to come. It was the Rev. Leander Scott, and at the close of the services he always took up a collection, not for his own support, as the Lord provided for him—so he said—but for the founding of soup-houses and lunch-counters for the poor. The Charity Organizations' Society last Saturday published a warning that the Rev. Mr. Scott is a swindler; that he has never established any charitable institutions, but has pocketed thousands of dollars collected for that purpose. Mr. Scott should have made his assessments on his audiences for the benefit of the heathen. Nobody knows whether any of the money collected for them ever gets there or not, and no questions are asked.

DURING the Congress at Pittsburgh some zealous but not very wise person sent to Captain Wishart, of the Law and Order Society, the following note:

"SATURDAY NOON.

"CAPTAIN: Mr. Dean telephones me that a blasphemous meeting is reported as being in progress in Lafayette hall. Will you proceed to investigate, and if the law is violated act accordingly? J. H. W."

It is a great pity that the Law and Order Society did not deem it advisable to act in the matter. A prosecution for blasphemy would be quite in consonance with the government of a city like Pittsburgh, where the sale of soda water on Sunday is an offense against the law.

THE meeting of the German emperor and the Romish pope bodes no good to liberty in Italy. The pope insists upon the restoration of his temporal power, and urges that all sovereigns unite to assure it. The young kaiser is pious to the verge of fanaticism, and ambitious to the extent of being unscrupulous. Though a Protestant, there is no reason to doubt that he would exchange favors with the pope if thereby he could increase his own prestige. If the temporal power of the papacy is restored, it will not be long before the Italians will wish, as the Frenchmen did a hundred years ago, that the last of the popes were strangled with the entrails of the last of the kings.

THE ubiquitous Gen. O. O. Howard turned up his eyes the other day at the Congregational Ministers' Association in Alameda, and, in a prayer, informed the throne of grace that he deplored the passage of the exclusion act, because the Chinese thereby miss the benefit to be derived from coming in contact with our civilization. The general appears to lose sight of the deleterious result of our civilization coming in contact with Chinese barbarism. In considering this question the welfare of the United States should not be altogether neglected, even for the immense gain of a few converted Mongolians.

THE small majority of four votes shows that the delegates to the Pittsburgh Congress found it difficult to choose between Judge Westbrook and John E. Remsburg, the two good men nominated for president of the Union; and the 18 against 29 who cast their ballots for E. A. Stevens instead of Harry Hoover show also that there was a marked division of choice as to who should be secretary. In both elections it was a case where either candidate would have been chosen unanimously if the other had not been running against him. Remsburg and Hoover remain a strong ticket, despite their failure of election.

WHILE the camp-meeting of Spiritualists was in session at Lake Merritt, Oakland, one of the mediums materialized a small piece of slate-pencil, with which he wrote several communications from the spirit-land. A reporter desired to retain the pencil, which he was permitted to do with the assurance that it would shortly dematerialize and pass off in imponderable vapor. This was several months ago, and in answer to many inquiries the reporter now states that the pencil is still in his possession and has every appearance of having come to stay. It is said to look much like the pencils quarried in Vermont.

WE yield to the expressed objection of some of our subscribers and withdraw from the columns of FREETHOUGHT certain advertisements that have given offense. It is hoped that the objectors do not begrudge us the slight revenue these advertisements bring to the support of the paper at a time when it is most needed. Of course, not being able to fulfil the contract made with the advertisers, the space already occupied is lost.

RETURN certificates being valueless, our Asiatic brethren are coming ashore on the plea that they were born in California and departed hence in their youth. The number of pigtailed Native Sons of the Golden West who have applied for admission to the land of their birth is rather too large to be genuine.

THE recent letter of Bishop Vladimir to this paper promises to be fruitful. An able historian of Washington, D. C., has written upon the subject an article which will appear next week.

To "M."

You ask us for our secret and our art,
But art and secret both we must disclaim;
And, simple love and confidence apart,
No dower but health, strong will, and steadfast aim.
No wish was ours to shine among the crowd,
To use the means of others, or to shirk
The tasks of life, but each of us was proud
To toil, and wait the long result of work.
And yet perchance one lesson I have learned:
If wives would keep their husbands' tempers straight,
Let them prepare their daily meat well turned,
Be useful, neat, attractive, ne'er too late.
And man himself should bear in mind, meanwhile,
That woman never tires of well-earned praise;
A "Thank you" lights her face up with a smile;
"How well you look!" will give her joy for days."
Tell her the dinner she has cooked is best—
Could not be equaled elsewhere, near or far,
Say that her voice which lulls the babe to rest
Is sweeter than all other voices are.
So shall the love wherewith he won his wife
Endure through fifty years of married life.
But ah! old age does not assist my rhyme;
I crave indulgence and excuse this time.

K. P.

Anaheim, Cal.

THE RETURN TRIP.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places returning from the East:

Washington....Ind.,	Oct. 17-19	Spokane Falls....."	" 14-16
Westfield.....Ill.,	" 20-21	Davenport.....W. T.,	Nov. 17-19
Wahoo.....Neb.,	" 23-25	Sprague....."	" 20-21
Denver.....Col.,	" 28	Pasco....."	" 22-23
Ogden.....Utah,	" 30-31	Portland.....Or.,	" 25-26
M't'n Home...Idaho,	Nov. 2	Vancouver.....W.T.,	" 27-28
Boise City....."	" 3-4	No. Yamhill.....Or.,	" 29-30
Emmetts....."	" 5-6	Scappoose....."	Dec. 2
Pendleton.....Or.,	" 8-9	Snohomish.....W.T.,	" 10
Walla Walla...W. T.,	" 10-11	Stella....."	" 8-9
		Silverton.....Or.,	" 15-16

It is desirable to announce the remainder of the appointments at the earliest possible moment. Will friends who wish lectures write at once to S. P. Putnam, as above. Mr. Putnam will be in San Francisco during the month of January,

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

R. B. WESTBROOK, LL.D., PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary.....241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treasurer.....Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com.....120 Lexington ave., New York
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com....106 So. Halsted st., Chicago

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll,	W. S. Bell,	Thos. J. Truss.
Samuel P. Putnam,	E. B. Foote,	Lucy N. Colman,
T. B. Wakeman,	M. M. Secor,	A. B. Bradford,
James Parton,	Wm. Redfield,	Juliet H. Severance,
J. D. Shaw,	S. W. Devenbaugh,	W. L. Willis,
W. F. Jamieson,	Wm. Algic,	D.G.A.F. de Lespinasse,
Charles Watts,	Roman Staley,	Photius Fisk,
John E. Remsburg,	H. P. Mason,	Leonard Geiger,
Horace Seaver,	N. D. Goodell,	Dr. S. S. McLeod,
Mattie P. Krekel,	J. A. Smith,	Daniel Aeri,
Prof. Ch. Orchardson,	Jas. Wardwell,	H. L. Boyes,
L. K. Washburn,	J. W. Black,	J. H. Burnham,
	Jos. Sedgbeer,	Major W. W. Forward.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

THE CONGRESS.

The Twelfth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union opened in Lafayette Hall, Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 5. Among those present from a distance were Mrs. Lucy N. Colman, Dr. Juliet H. Severance, Voltairine de Cleyre, ex-Rev. J. H. Burnham, ex-Rev. A. B. Bradford, Dr. E. B. Foote, D. G. Crow, E. M. Macdonald, and Dr. W. L. Willis. The session was opened by the address of S. P. Putnam.

PRESIDENT PUTNAM'S ADDRESS.

MEMBERS OF THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION: We come together as comrades. We are few against the many. Our cause is not popular. To educate the world in freedom, in equal rights, is our supreme purpose. For this we labor; for this we sacrifice; for this we hope.

In the manifold life of civilization no one organization can meet all the needs of the hour. To endeavor to do so is weakness, and not strength. It is division, and not unity. Our work as an organization is special, and not general. We have a particular task, and to that we must concentrate the efforts of the organization. The task is both great and necessary. Unless we and those who come after us succeed, the American republic will be destroyed. We stand by the Declaration of Independence and its simple and sublime principles, but such is the power of superstition and prejudice in our land that the administration of our American government is nearly as despotic as that of the old countries. The demands of Liberalism represent an immense work. There must be immense agitation, vast struggle, and strenuous effort for the enthronement of these demands in the state, and until this is done there is no true liberty, no true republic. Church property to the amount of one thousand millions of dollars is exempt from taxation. This is an enormous injustice. Our school system is persistently attacked by a church which has a membership of two hundred and fifty millions, and in this city its parochial school has taken the place of the common school. When the common school is destroyed, then the republic falls, for it can only be sustained by universal intelligence. The Sunday of the people, the democratic Sunday, the day of amusement and joy for those who labor, the festival day, is being usurped by the church for the benefit of the Christian Sabbath, and this city to-day is under the heel of the iron authority of the edict of a Roman emperor. What a disgrace to the republic of America! In the midst of the nineteenth century it is made a crime for a poor woman, who has no other means of living, to keep open a candy shop on Sunday, or to sell a glass of soda-water. Was there ever a more ridiculous, or impertinent, or more cruel tyranny than this under these Sabbath laws? Christians have been torn from their homes, dragged to the jail, despoiled of their property, and made to endure suffering that ended in death itself. Not even in the dark ages was there ever a more barbaric torture.

The importance of our work is thus manifest. Other work is to be done, other reforms to be carried. Labor must win its rights, woman must have her equality, monopolies must be overthrown, the reign of the people must be established, but the absolutely necessary step to all these is the total separation of church and state. To destroy class legislation we must first of all obliterate this church legislation. To overthrow monopolies we must attack this ecclesiastical monopoly. To make the administration of all the laws of this land non-Christian is the next step to universal rights. So long as there is any Christian legislation, so long there is injustice. It is useless to talk of the rights of labor until first of all we have the rights of man. The rights of labor are founded upon the rights of man. We stand for rights, the rights of all, Christian and non-Christian. If any rights are infringed, then there is a wrong, which every true American citizen should resist, and if he does not resist this, he is derelict to duty. The labor reformer who is not in favor of the total separation of church and state is not a true labor reformer. The woman suffragist who is not in favor of the Nine Demands is not a true woman suffragist. The temperance advocate who is for God in the Constitution is not a true temperance advocate. The reform for which we stand is the spirit and power of every other reform. The Nine Demands are the axioms of Liberalism. Concerning these there is no dispute. On these, therefore, we unite. All other issues must be avoided. Each issue must have its own organization. Differentiation is the law of civilization, and the law of reform. Reform may be essentially one, but it has many instrumentalities. The American Secular Union is one of these. It is not a general association, a congress for all subjects. It has a definite work. It must do this work, and no other. This is the only possible road to success, this one road, the Nine Demands. The individual, of course, is interested in a thousand other things, for life is far broader and deeper than politics, but an organization is not a combination of individuals for the expression of all their individual desires, but a combination for a particular purpose. An organization is a machine, and must be in the very nature of things, and as a machine cannot be made to do everything, so an organization cannot be made to do everything. There must be limitations to the sphere of every organization, otherwise the centripetal forces prevail and the organization falls to pieces.

Local Unions can be more inclusive in their work than the National Union, as the government of a city or town takes in more variety of function than the state or United States. The function of the United States is limited. It cannot do the state, county, or town work. It is confined to certain things. So with our Union. As its work becomes localized to town or city it broadens and deepens, but as it is nationalized it becomes more narrow and determined. It comes to one stream, to one purpose; as the general government is narrower in its function than the state or city.

To confine ourselves to the Nine Demands is the absolute necessity of the situation. We refuse to embark the Union in other reforms, because to do so would be to abandon this reform. For other reforms there are other organizations. The work of the Union, the literature of the Union, should be entirely devoted to the Nine Demands of Liberalism, to agitation and education upon these points.

The sphere of the lecturer must be broader than that of the organization. He must deal with life, and the philosophy of life, and all that interests humanity. He must deal with political Secularism mainly through philosophical Secularism. He must in his varied labors meet all the questions of history, of science, of reform. The Freethought movement as a movement includes all there is of civilization. The Union, however, cannot be thus universal. It cannot publish books on all subjects, it cannot concern itself with all subjects. The lecturer must do this, but in doing this general work, he should, whenever possible, emphasize the Nine Demands and the particular work of the American Secular Union.

While in a sense the American Secular Union is a machine for work, it is not a machine for authority. It cannot be run by the old ecclesiastical methods. Red-tape is of very little value in the Liberal movement. Unless the Union expresses the life of the people, it is worthless. The power of the Union is the power of attraction, of good service, of fellowship. Every Liberal is forever free, and at heart is a rebel to every kind of domination. He believes in fair play, not in the rule of majorities, right or wrong. The voice of the Congress must be the voice, as nearly as possible, of the rank and file. Machine politics are not for the Liberal party. There are no leaders except by natural choice. The attraction of the best to the best is the only obligation that can be sustained. We are comrades, and we are equals, all of us. Noble friendship should be the spirit of our movement. There should be no faction, no axe to grind, no petty partisan policy to triumph. There must be absolute good fellowship. Our membership is small. We cannot afford to be divided. The grandeur of our principles should subdue all personal ambition. We are not working for ourselves, but for humanity. Unless we recognize the law of companionship, our strength is gone, the heart of our enterprise is dead. The moment there is contention, enmities, animosities, our flag touches the dust. We stand for liberty and justice, but what is grander than the liberty of true friends, the justice due, not simply from man to man, but from comrade to comrade in the thick of the fight? If the American Secular Union does not stand preeminently for honor, for generosity, for good will, for courtesy to one another, then it should be buried out of sight. If we among ourselves are suspicious, quarrelsome, jealous, partial, then let us adjourn without date. The organization is worse than useless.

I cannot believe that such will be the case. I cannot believe but in every respect this Congress will represent the nobleness of our work, and thus create a grander impulse and enthusiasm than ever. There are no spoils of office. There is nothing to scramble for. Truth, justice, fellowship, honor, these are all that we have, all that we can give. Riches are not ours, nor golden mansions here or hereafter. Ours is a summons to battle, and to a victory afar off. Not during our lives will the mighty conflict be ended. It must go as an inheritance to our children. But along with the combat, deep and fierce, let us give a brighter hope, the lustre of unselfish deeds, the glory of absolute devotion to the truth, that gives no reward except itself. Let us look beyond this present moment, not to the heavens above, nor hells beneath, if there are any, but to what may be accomplished on the bosom of this earth, for the "fair humanities." Whatever failure there may be, whatever defeat, whatever sorrow, the future is ever ours, beautiful and grand in the visions of our soul. There is the ideal, our hope, our unceasing joy. There is the treasure of our hearts, amid the happy multitudes of this world, amid rejoicing labor, the song of industry, the music of home, the light of reason, the splendor of love, the majesty of justice, the glory of liberty, and the Promethean fire of fair-eyed science. Beautiful dream of all our hearts. It cannot perish. It is a part of our being. It is the life of our life.

Better than all measures of delightful sound,
Better than all treasures that in books are found, is this sublime and magnificent desire for liberty, surging on like the ocean, and like the ocean shining with the infinite lustres of the sun and star.

"There's not a breathing of the common wind
But waits on thee. We have great allies,
Our friends are inspiration's agonies,
Love, and man's unconquerable mind."

And again the poet jubilantly sings:

"The world rolls freedom's radiant way,
And triumphs in our sorrow,
We walk the wilderness to-day,
The harvest fields to-morrow."

The report of the Committee on Credentials, E. A. Stevens, chairman, was read and adopted. Mattie A. Freeman, of Chicago, chairman of the Finance Committee, reported during the year the following distributions of literature were made: 50,000 leaflets, 2,000 Constitutions, 1,000 copies of "Bacon's Paradoxes," 1,000 "Museums in the Parks and Why they should be Open on Sunday," and 600 copies of "God in the State."

The president announced the following standing committees: Resolutions—Dr. E. B. Foote, R. B. Westbrook, Lucy N. Colman, J. H. Burnham, E. A. Stevens. Nominations—E. M. Macdonald, William Redfield, Leonard Geiger, D. W. Robertson, Roman Staley. Auditing—Mrs. M. A. Freeman, F. A. Pierce, R. G. Smith.

The treasurer's report for the year showed receipts amounting to $1,272; expenditures, $1,225.

The report of E. A. Stevens, secretary, giving a concise review of the work done during the year, was read and adopted. It cited several instances where the Union had succeeded in having sectarian and religious institutions taxed. Notable among these is the Y. M. C. A. building in Detroit, Mich. There is more than $13,000,000 worth of exempted property in Detroit, nearly $2,000,000 of which will be taxed hereafter. The Union took up a fight against two institutions in Chicago. They had received over $19,000 from the state under the pretense of being charitable institutions. The Union fought the case on the ground that they were sectarian institutions, but lost in the Cook county courts. The case was carried to the supreme court, where the decision of the lower court was reversed in favor of the efforts of the Secular Union. The secretary recommended some decisive action in forcing the Girard College trustees to carry out the provisions of Girard's will.

FRIDAY EVENING.

The evening session convened at 8 o'clock. After music an address was made by Prof. D. G. Crow, of New Mexico, on "Christian Ingratitude."

The next speaker was Dr. Juliet H. Severance on the "Dangers to Our Liberty."

SATURDAY MORNING.

Most of this session was occupied by a discussion upon the following resolution:

Resolved, That the best means to further the agitation of the taxation of church property is to secure the correct figures in every community as a solid basis for the agitation, so that the public may know the extent of this outrage, and we earnestly urge upon all Secularists, individually and collectively, to see that through their personal influence on officials in their neighborhood, this information is obtained and forwarded to the secretary.

The speakers agreed that church property ought to be taxed, and that the plan proposed was a good one. The morning session closed with a discussion as to the best means of utilizing the press for the dissemination of Secularist views.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

When the session was called to order at 2:30 in the afternoon Secretary Stevens read letters of regret from Hon. Charles Bradlaugh, of England; W. F. Jamieson, of Colorado; Helen H. Gardener, of New York; Horace Seaver, of Boston, and others. These letters as they were read were received with applause.

Mr. Marlett, of Chicago, president of the Young People's Secular Union of that city, was next introduced. He spoke of the necessity of organizing the young people, as time was laying its heavy hand on the older folks, and there must be some one to take their places. He explained the work of the Chicago branch and announced it as his intention to organize such a society in Pittsburgh, and invited all the young people to meet him in the hall in the afternoon, when a society would be organized.

After a pleasing selection by the orchestra, Professor Bell was introduced and lectured on "Reason vs. Superstition."

SATURDAY EVENING.

At 7:30 o'clock the meeting was again called to order, and after an overture by the orchestra, the first speaker introduced was J. H. Burnham, of Michigan, whose subject was "Organization."

The next speaker was Mattie A. Freeman, of Chicago, who, in opening her address, which was on "Cross and Crown," paid a most glowing tribute to William Penn and to the state of Pennsylvania.

The following letter from Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton was read by the secretary:

I regret that it is not in my power to accept an invitation to speak before your association, but the distance between Pittsburgh and Omaha (where I am for the present) is too great for such an undertaking.

There are no convocations, however, in which I feel greater interest than in those striving to free the human mind from theological superstitions, more especially as through these woman finds her most grievous bondage.

A gentleman recently asked me the question at a suffrage meeting, "what I thought the greatest obstacle in the way of woman's enfranchisement?"

I replied, the perversion of the religious element in her nature. We know that the religious emotions—reverence for the authority of the unknown and unknowable—are stronger in the human soul than love of country; than natural affection for family or kindred; than even life itself. And as conscience is a matter of latitude and education, these religious emotions are equally available for unwise as wise purposes.

The history of the race is one long record of individual sacrifices at the supposed pleasure of some invisible powers, and as all forms of religion, in all ages and countries, have taught the depravity and subordination of woman, it is not remarkable that in the nineteenth century, under the Jewish and Christian religions, she should believe herself to be what the holy books and the priesthood teach, namely, an afterthought in the creation; the author of sin who, in collusion with the devil, effected the fall of man, and hence, cursed of God. . . . The church having made woman a bond slave through the strongest feelings of her nature, I hope no members of the American Secular Union propose to keep her in her present condition, lest, if enfranchised, she should place barriers in the way of man's religious freedom.

Do not lose sight, gentlemen, of the fact that the influence of the vast majority of women is in this direction now. It guards every cradle and fireside, and the prejudices of early education cling to her through life. It is this influence that limits the members in your association; the readers of your journals; the audiences at your conventions. Do you hope to change all this by holding woman in her present position, concentrating all her enthusiasm, outside the family, on the church, the blind victim of a morbid conscience and confused speculations of the unknown and un-knowable? Surely not. If you would realize a higher form of religion you must first broaden the horizon of woman's thought, and give her an active interest in all the practical affairs of life.

As to the Secular character of our government, that can only be fully established and preserved through education and elevation of woman.

The more time and thought she gives to these great questions involved in the science of government and the imperative duties of this life, the less she will give to the church and speculations about the future.

Sincerely yours, ELIZABETH CADY STANTON.

SUNDAY MORNING.

With a much larger attendance than at any previous meeting the Sunday's work opened. After the decision of the Committee on Credentials that no delegate should be empowered to cast more than one vote, the Committee on Nominations suggested the following officers for the ensuing year, who were duly elected:

President—Hon. R. B. Westbrook, of Philadelphia.

Vice-Presidents—Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, of New York; Samuel P. Putnam, of San Francisco, Cal., and T. B. Wakeman, of New York; James Parton, Charles Watts, A. B. Bradford, Juliet H. Severance, Lucy N. Colman, James Wardwell, J. A. Smith, Wm. Redfield, M. M. Secor, W. L. Willis, T. J. Truss, H. P. Mason, Dr. G. A. F. de Lespinasse, Photius Fisk, Horace Seaver, Mattie Krekel, E. B. Foote, Jr., Leonard Geiger, N. D. Goodell, Dr. S. S. McLeod, Daniel Aeri, Roman Staley, H. L. Boyer, J. H. Burnham, and Major W. W. Forward.

Secretary—E. A. Stevens, of Chicago.

Treasurer—Otto Wettstein, of Rochelle, Ill.

Chairman Executive Committee—Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., of New York.

Chairman Finance Committee—Mrs. Mattie A. Freeman, of Chicago.

Executive Committee—Massachusetts, George N. Hill; New York, H. L. Green; Ohio, R. G. Smith; Pennsylvania, William Whittick; Wisconsin, Juliet H. Severance; Indiana, John A. Geeting; Illinois, H. B. Marlett; Iowa, F. I. Green; Missouri, G. G. Beck; Kansas, T. H. Terry; Nebraska, G. Babson; Colorado, E. T. Weber; Utah, James A. Williams; Montana, E. M. Dunckel; Idaho, J. A. Davis; Oregon, C. Beal; California, W. F. Freeman; Vermont, John D. Powers; Arizona, Carl Hyldahl; Texas, Daniel A. Aeri; Minnesota, H. C. Draver; Indian Territory, Prof. D. G. Crow; Dakota, N. S. Johnston; Washington Territory, Sol Center; New Mexico, Prof. D. G. Crow; Kentucky, W. H. Tyree; Tennessee, M. J. Green; West Virginia, Louis Wolfes, Sr.; Maryland, Aaron Davis; Arkansas, James B. Hassett; Michigan, J. H. Burnham; Connecticut, E. I. Norton; Georgia, L. J. Moulder.

Dr. E. B. Foote, chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, reported, submitting a list of resolutions, the last of which protested emphatically against the prosecution, under the United States postal laws, of Walker & Harman, Valley Falls, Kan., "on a constructive charge of mailing obscene literature."

A minute on the death of Courtlandt Palmer and the following to the retiring president were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It is with deep and unfeigned regret that the American Secular Union accepts the unalterable decision of its valiant executive, Samuel P. Putnam, to resign the presidency and lay down the arduous task of leadership of the Secular host; and as we rejoice to know, he steps back into the ranks a loyal private, still the most eager to press forward and plant everywhere the standard of universal mental liberty, therefore

Resolved, That this Congress fully realizes that the highest encomiums it can bestow will fail to adequately convey in any true sense the profound obligation which this organization is under to our retiring president who possesses the fervid genius of the poet, the skill and polish of a brilliant writer, the genial warmth of the orator, and the keen discrimination of the philosopher, and who, above all, has been the American Secular Union's most heroic and energetic worker for the past four years, unreservedly devoting his time and splendid talents for but meagre compensation, organizing, speaking, and writing, with undiminished enthusiasm, for the advancement of the Secular cause beyond that of any predecessor—for all which we hereby tender Samuel P. Putnam our sincere gratitude and devotion.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON.

There was a large attendance. The main body of the hall was filled and many occupied seats in the gallery. Secretary E. A. Stevens spoke for an hour on "Romish Traditions."

Mrs. Dr. Juliet H. Severance spoke on "The Cause of Liberty."

Half an hour was spent in raising subscriptions for next year's work. This resulted in a collection amounting to $1,675. Dr. Foster, of New York, made a few remarks, referring briefly to the National Reform Association, and asserting that it was on the offensive, and that Liberals were on the defensive side of true reform.

SUNDAY EVENING.

There was a good-sized audience in the evening. Music by the orchestra, and recitations by Mrs. Charles Watts came first on the programme, and then Samuel P. Putnam, ex-president of the American Secular Union, was introduced. His subject was "The American Republic." The republic, he said, was founded on the Declaration of Independence, and the Declaration declares that the authority of the state to govern is derived from the consent of the governed. In the union of church and state the Christian had an advantage over the non-Christian, and for that reason the Secular Union was for total separation. The Sabbath laws came in for sweeping condemnation. Pittsburgh, he said, where a glass of soda water could not be gotten on Sunday, had a population that on Sunday were Roman slaves. He was willing to have a Sunday, but there was a difference between Sunday and Sabbath.

Dr. Foote offered resolutions setting forth that the trouble between the Catholics and Protestants in the First ward schools proves the necessity of adopting the Fourth Demand of Liberalism, and that Protestantism is not preferable to Catholicism in the public schools. The resolutions were adopted.

Charles Watts lectured on "Religion and Science; Their Relation to Civilization." The address consisted of definitions of religion and science, and from these Mr. Watts showed clearly that religion had nothing to do with civilization.

In view of the discussion over the matter by people who had neither the ability to understand it nor the honesty to admit their stupidity, the following report of the Auditing Committee, which was unanimously and enthusiastically accepted by the Congress, is of great interest.

REPORT OF AUDITING COMMITTEE.

The Auditing Committee appointed by this Congress to examine Samuel P. Putnam's report of 1885-6 of the finances of the American Secular Union are unable to find, after close examination of said report as published in the New York Truth Seeker of Dec. 4, 1886, anything wrong or irregular about it. We find that said report was adopted by the Board of Directors and signed by Daniel E. Ryan, chairman of the Auditing Committee. As Mr. Putnam has been accused of misappropriating certain funds belonging to the Union, at this time, or about the time the report was made, it seems to us that that was the proper time for his accuser or accusers to bring said charges of misappropriation, and not at this late day. In the absence of any specific or formulated charges, and as his accuser or accusers have not met him face to face to prove their charges, as he challenged them to do, it seems to us that it would be an act of justice for this Congress to exonerate President Putnam and declare such charges unworthy of belief.

F. A. PIERCE,
MATTIE A. FREEMAN,
R. G. SMITH,

Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 6, 1888.

Auditing Committee, Twelfth Annual Congress, American Secular Union.

COLONEL INGERSOLL'S MESSAGE.

NEW YORK, Oct. 8, 1888.

To SAMUEL-P. PUTNAM: Had it been possible I should have attended the Convention, but was prevented by an important suit in Massachusetts, the trial of which commenced last Wednesday and is not yet finished.

I congratulate the Convention on its success in the great cause in which it is engaged, and it gives me great pleasure to say that through the efforts of the delegates and their constituents intellectual hospitality is growing day by day; that the churches are getting ashamed of their cruel creeds; that the thoughtful people are coming to the conclusion that a government should be absolutely secular; that all legislation should be for this world instead of another; that all property not devoted to the public use should bear its equal burden; that all days belong alike to the human race, and that all the world should be free not six but seven days in every week; that the highest object of the republic should be to protect the rights of the individual; and that it is the duty of all to hasten the coming of the day when science, guided by kindness, shall fill the world with light and joy.

Be kind enough to present to the Convention my thanks and regrets.

R. G. INGERSOLL.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK

Politics is receiving a good deal more attention than it deserves. —The Italian colony of San Francisco celebrated last Sunday the 396th anniversary of the discovery of America by their countryman, Christopher Columbus. —An infant was christened by Mrs. J. J. Whitney, a spiritual medium, at Oddfellow's Hall last Sunday evening. The form of ceremony was much like that used in the churches, from which the custom is borrowed. —The president of the El Paso, Texas, Mining Company has been convicted of importing contract labor from Mexico. —The coroner's jury who sat upon the case of Donahoe, who was killed in a political row at the Republican headquarters, have not been able to decide how the victim came to his death. —Six women have been nominated for school directors in this city. —The ladies of San Francisco have organized a Woman's Educational and Industrial Union, similar to those in Boston and other cities of the East. Its object is to educate girls into trades and to protect its members from fraud. It is an entirely non-sectarian organization. —Charles R. Story has been nominated for mayor by the Republicans. —The judges have decided that the Chinese now aboard vessels in this harbor will have to go back. —The Methodist ministers, at their meeting last Monday, recommended that Dowie, the faith healer, be let severely alone. —The trial of Elsie Reynolds, the medium, began at San Deago on the 15th. —About 50,000 voters have registered in San Francisco. —Anschlag, the Garden Grove murderer, is to be hanged Nov. 16.

Two trains filled with Catholic excursionists collided near Pottsville, Pa., October 10, and more than sixty people were killed. —The Chicago street-car strike is at an end, important concessions having been made on both sides. —James Quinn, one of the leaders of the famous Home Club of the Knights of Labor, together with four friends, was violently ejected through the window of Pythagoras Hall, New York, last Saturday night. Quinn had been reinstated in the hall by order of the court, and was watching the place to keep out the opposing faction. He and his friends went to sleep, and the enemy came in and threw them out. Among those thus roughly handled was Dyer D. Lum, editor of the Alarm. —Experts denounce the so-called dynamite conspiracy at Chicago as a humbug. Captain Schaak of the police force has four alleged conspirators under arrest. —Judge Thurman has written his letter of acceptance. —There is a prospect that Congress may adjourn sine die this week. —Sullivan, the pugilist, has accepted the position of sporting editor on a New York illustrated paper. —"Long John" Wentworth, of Chicago, died Tuesday of softening of the brain. —Some three hundred persons were injured by the falling of seats during a fireworks display in Quincy, Ill., on the 10th. —Rabbi M. Strauss, late of Cincinnati, committed suicide by shooting himself in the head in Central Park, New York, Monday afternoon. He left a letter to his young son at Cincinnati, saying that he died of the up-hill struggle.

English and German physicians are quarreling over the question whether disease or the doctors killed Emperor Frederick. —The Pacific Mail steamship City of Peking brings news that floods in China have submerged twenty villages and drowned ten thousand persons. —His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has just been snubbed by an American lady named Wetmore, who did not relish the eminent roue's advances. —A statue to Shakspeare was unveiled in Paris on the 14th with much ceremony. —The Pall Mall Gazette challenges the German authorities to carry out the threat made through the Nacherichten to institute proceedings to prevent the publication in London of the late Emperor Frederick's diary. The Gazette warns Prince Bismarck not to attempt to extend abroad the tyranny over the press which is exercised in Germany. —King William of Germany has met the pope at Rome. —J. C. Flood, the millionaire, is said to be dying at Heidelberg, Germany.

KIND FRIEND: If you receive a sample copy of this issue of FREETHOUGHT, please regard it as an invitation to subscribe—and accept the invitation. One subscription, $2; two subscriptions, $3; three subscriptions, $4; four subscriptions, $5.

TOPOLOBAMPO.

Mr. W. N. Slocum, a printer by trade and a co-operator with sufficient faith in the Sinaloa colony to leave the world behind and go to Topolobampo, writes to his California friends through the medium of the Credit Foncier of Sinaloa as follows:

TOPOLOBAMPO, Sept. 12, 1888.

I am not disappointed here. Everything looks as well as I expected, and better than has been represented. The climate is good, the bay commodious, the scenery magnificent, and the people (the colonists) much better than the average. Whether the Credit Foncier Company prove a success or a failure, this country will not prove a failure. It is rich in natural resources, requiring only intelligent industry for development. In a score or so of years there will be hundreds of thousands of progressive people in Sinaloa, and this part of Mexico will be esteemed, as Southern California now is, one of the best countries on the face of the globe. The settlement of Sinaloa by a new people will add millions to the wealth of the world, and it remains to be seen whether this is to be enjoyed by the many, under a just social system, or seized by a few, under the plan of legalized robbery prevailing throughout Christendom. The principles of integral co-operation must ultimately prevail; but it may be years before so grand an example as is proposed to be established here will in its completeness be placed before the world. Capitalists are anxiously waiting the hoped-for failure of this latest, best effort for human rights, and stand ready to pay the Mexican government in cash for the franchises granted to co-operators on promises only—promises as yet unfulfilled.

I would not advise the bringing of women and children at present. We have the necessities of life here—little more—and people accustomed to the comforts, to say nothing of the luxuries of life, must expect to undergo what many would call great deprivations. I will not now enter into details. According to promise I will from time to time keep you informed of the colony, but as I have not yet visited the interior, I cannot at present write advisedly, consequently defer further comment.

My address is Topolobampo, Mexico, via Fuerte.

Hopefully,

W. N. SLOCUM.

The organ of the colony, the Credit Foncier of Sinaloa, is now printed at Topolobampo. The mail facilities of the place are somewhat imperfect as yet. It is eighty-five miles direct from Topolobampo to the post-office, and one hundred by La Logia, the usual route. A letter mailed at Topolobampo covers this distance in about two weeks, and reaches Guaymas in from four to six days more. An extra "burro" will be put on the mail service to carry the Credit Foncier paper.

The health of the colonists is reported to be good, such sickness as exists being attributable generally to bad cooking. The cooking is done by men, who take their turn at the work, and as a natural consequence the bread is leaden and indigestible, and the mush and beans are frequently raw or burned or both.

It will thus be seen that the path of the pioneer is not altogether carpeted with roses. Mr. Slocum reports that no papers are taken by the colonists and that a weekly journal of any sort would be a great blessing.

Mrs. M. Howland, editor of the Credit Foncier, who reached Topolobampo August 30, writes hopefully. Her first impressions were favorable.

EQUAL RIGHTS.

In the September 15th issue of FREETHOUGHT, F. M. Holland speaks a brave and honest word for woman suffrage. I wish to thus publicly thank him for it.

It is painful and humiliating to women of intelligence to note the flippant, sneering, or doubtful tone of men when speaking of the rights of my sex. "It wouldn't be expedient for women to exercise the ballot," is a common phrase among the more enlightened class of men. As if expediency were superior to justice, to honor, to right principle, to truth! And on the basis of expediency, would it not be a question whether suffrage is not exercised altogether too freely among men? Is not the very purpose so greatly feared if women exercise the same rights of the ballot, surely approaching now with the ballot in the hands of men only? Is not the crafty priesthood already a power, and growing stronger every hour by means of the ballot? And do not politicians creep and fawn and cater to that influence in order to catch votes? It is so, and you know it. But nobody says a word about disfranchising men, or restraining them from exercising their rights on this account. And yet there is abundant reason since allegiance to the pope of Rome is considered by the large number of Catholic voters as higher than their duty to the government of the country.

It may be that the time is close at hand when it is wisdom to look into the uses made by the ballot, to reorganize its powers in order to make it more beneficent, more useful to the people. There is no need to point you to the masses of men, reeking in ignorance, who would not know what you meant if you should speak to them of the Constitution of the United States. You know them to your sorrow. And yet in the hands of such ignorant men you intrust the ballot that means so much, that carries such a deep responsibility! Is it not a crime to permit ignorance and brutality to rule over intelligence, education, and refinement, as is done every time that low, uneducated men, by means of the ballot, declare how one-half of the people of our land (women) shall be governed, and how their money shall be used, while they stand helplessly by unable to make their remonstrances effectual, debarred from their rights because, forsooth, they uphold the church! Nonsense. So do men uphold the church. It is their money that supports it, their money that endows colleges, keeps the missionaries at work and theological schools in working order. It is men who keep chaplains in legislatures, in Congress, who keep the Bible in public schools, who keep up the laws relating to Sunday, to the observance of fast days, who let the churches go untaxed. They have the law in their hands. They made the laws. Why don't they stop these things and done with it? Why don't they withdraw their patronage from the church altogether? Why don't they rise up in a body all over the land and advocate the Nine Demands of Liberalism? Why don't they call meetings of women and tell them the truth? Why don't they teach them what they know themselves? They dare not. They're afraid, not of women, but of popular opinion. The fact is, men are but half enfranchised themselves. If they were in earnest, if they felt, through and through, the height, the depth, the length, and the breadth of that one word, justice, if they realized its broad, grand, great meaning, they would never let that word expediency slide off their tongues.

The way to educate is to educate. The way to bring women out of the clutches of the priesthood, is to show them the true path, and to walk therein yourselves. Send your little girls to Sunday-schools, and what can you expect but that they will be Sunday-school teachers when they grow up? Teach them that they are as good as your boys, imbue them with your Liberal ideas, and when they are twenty-one years of age, put the ballot in their hands as you do in the hands of your boys, and you need have no fear. They will know how to use it quite as well as that son of yours.

SUSAN H. WIXON.

Death of Calvin H. Saunders.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Calvin H. Saunders, an old and respected Freethinker, of Portland, Or., who has been in failing health for some time past, died on the morning of Sept. 29. Although he had suffered from chronic disease, the physicians attributed his demise to general debility, resulting from his advanced age. His passing away was peaceful, and at his bedside were his grief-stricken family. He died holding the same Agnostic views that had so long been his moral guide, and it is another illustration that the human mind can overcome that instinctive fear of death common to all mortality, and die content without the aid of pious promises and expectations of immortality.

The funeral took place on Sunday, Sept. 30, and was conducted on strictly Secular principles. It was attended by a large number of sympathizing friends, which, again, proves that unbelief in the Christian dogmas does not pluck the flower of sympathy from a single human breast.

Our staunch Liberal, Cornelius Beal, Esq., although unwell, and in bed at the time of Mr. Saunders's death, managed to be present, and spoke words of eloquence and hope at the bier of his old friend.

Mr. Beal, who has all his life labored faithfully for the benefit of humanity, will, no doubt, respond to calls, should his services be needed by Liberals on similar occasions in this and adjoining states.

Liberal lecturers always found Mr. Saunders at his post and a warm welcome to his home, and they will now hear with regret of their old friend's death.

O. JELDNESS.

A synopsis of Mr. Beal's address is subjoined:

LADIES, GENTLEMEN, AND SORROWING FRIENDS: A man in the city of Baltimore wrote the following poem two weeks before his death. It was read at his funeral and was the only service:

"When o'er my cold and lifeless clay
The parting words of love are said,
And friends and kindred meet to pay
Their last fond tribute to the dead,
Let no stern priest, with solemn drone,
A funeral liturgy intone,
Whose creed is foreign to my own.
Let not a word be whispered there
In pity for my unbelief;
Of sorrow that I could not share
The views that gave their souls relief.
My faith to me is no less dear,
No less convincing and sincere,
Than theirs, so rigid and austere.
Let no stale words of church-born song
Float out upon the silent air
To prove, by implication, wrong
The soul of him then lying there.
Why should such words be glibly sung
O'er one upon whose living tongue
Such empty phrases never rung?
But, rather, let the faithful few,
Whose hearts are knit so close to mine
That they, with time, the dearer grew,
Assemble at the day's decline;
And while the golden sunbeams fall
In floods of light around my pall
Let them in softened tones recall
Some tender memory of the dead—
Some virtuous act, some words of power,
Which I, perchance, have done or said—
By loved ones treasured to that hour;
Recount the deeds which I admired,
The motive which my soul inspired,
The hope by which my heart was fired."

The Hindoos have this address:

"In nurse's lap, a naked, new-born child,
Weeping thou sat'st, while all around thee smiled;
So live that, sinking to thy last long sleep,
Calm may'st thou smile while all around thee weep."

The sentiments contained in these beautiful lines express the history of Father Saunders. He was honest, benevolent, charitable, liberal, thoughtful, sociable, peaceable, patriotic, devoted, loving, and kind.

While his powers lasted, his innocent smiles fell upon those around him. During his agony his patience was heroic. At 71 years and 5 days Calvin H. Saunders sublimely surrendered the matter and forces of his body back to the elements from whence they came.

He believed, with many eminent scientists, that his mind was not an entity; that it did not exist before him and would not last after him; that it was an emanation, a process, similar to the light of a candle or the strength of the body.

Good men and women of all beliefs recognize the infinite justice of universal mental liberty. Charity buds and blossoms, winter and summer, in the hearts of the legions who are loyal to humanity and right. This mighty host will act as the body guard for liberty in the coming conflict.

Shriveled and dwarfed is the spirit of a person who believes he will dwell forever on the golden shores of a paradise and has a prejudice against the poor philosopher who expects to be a handful of ashes through all eternity.

AT THE GRAVE.

FRIENDS: We have met to do for this honest, sincere, and good man what will soon be done for us. The very moments seem oppressive as we attempt to part with him. The infinite universe brought this child of nature into life, sustained him until death, and will preserve his atoms from eternity to eternity. Let us draw around his body as it lies here in this beautiful casket, over this open tomb, and say: Affectionate husband, loving father, good friend, we bid you a long, loving, and lasting farewell.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

***

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

LUCIFER THE LIGHT-BEARER.

DEVOTED TO THE

Frank and fearless discussion of basic principles in the field of governmental and social reform.

For more than eighteen months this paper and its publishers have been prosecuted in the courts by the agents of the Comstock Vice Society, for alleged violations of the U. S. postal laws.

Published weekly at Valley Falls, Kansas, at $1.25 per annum. Specimen copies free.

Miracles and Miracle Workers,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 10 cts.

Christian Absurdities,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 20 cts.

Both for sale at this office.

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question. Cloth, 75 cts. Address this office.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,

Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

...IN THE...

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

...FOR...

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER, Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made available to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and a new feature, just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling. AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25. Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50. The difference is in paper and binding. MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

he Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.
PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.
33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

337 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face on hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 3 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50.
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $18, $17, $18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to beat and cold, and $4,
being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best
14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest
style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies'
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $20, $22, $23.
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4.
$5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case.
Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1;
best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set
best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12.
Large field glasses, $3, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free.
Best Work. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
Badges in PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of out and smaller,
two-thirds size. War-
ranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2.75, $3.50. Large,
$3 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $8, $10; and
charms up to $25. De-
mand daily increasing.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert
G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author,
Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum
notes by Guizot, Wenck, Millman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages.
Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1.50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron
D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

F. SANGROVE, Merchant Tailor.

LATE OF LONDON AND PARIS,

All imported goods. Orders promptly attended. Prices moderate. Cleaning and repairing
neatly done.

Ladies' Cloaks and Riding Habits a Specialty.

F. SANGROVE, 104 FIFTH ST.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say
infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to
those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior
Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address
Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San
Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS,
the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author.
Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 43.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - OCTOBER 27, 1888

THE nomination of several women for school directors in San Francisco is a good thing, and their election ought to follow. The result of the experiment cannot fail to be of value, whatever it is.

If the Southern Presbyterians were to devote to a study of evolution the energies which they are now wasting in opposing it, they would be both wiser and better. They are at present much in the position of the bull that disputed the passage of a locomotive.

A NOMINEE for the judiciary in St. Louis is recommended by the Post-Dispatch because he is a "representative Roman Catholic" and therefore likely to run ahead of his ticket. Some enterprising party should catch on to the suggestion here offered and nominate the pope for president. He is a representative Catholic.

How would it do to so amend our naturalization laws that no foreigner could become a citizen of the United States until he had forsworn allegiance to the pope of Rome? Why do we discriminate against the subjects of other foreign potentates in favor of those who owe allegiance to Leo XIII. as a temporal sovereign?

It is a serious matter that while the list of voters in this city has increased to the extent of 10,000 during the past two years, the attendance of pupils at the public schools has fallen off nearly 12,000 in one year. There is no doubt that these 10,000 "voters" could serve their country much better by augmenting the school attendance than by lengthening the polling lists.

THE pastor of a Baptist church in Paterson, N. J., has conceived a novel idea. He has arranged a series of lectures to be given in his church by ministers of different denominations upon their various sectarian views. The object is to instruct the young people of the church. A Presbyterian clergyman will talk to the Baptists of this church upon the benefits of Presbyterianism, and in a week or so thereafter a Methodist will make his appearance, to be followed by a Reformed preacher, who, in turn, will give way to a representative of some other denomination. This is good as far as it goes, but when all the sects have enjoyed a hearing, the pastor may still further increase the wisdom of his flock by getting some of the Liberal Leaguers in the neighboring city of Newark to deliver a Freethought lecture before them. Anything short of this will leave the experiment incomplete.

THE Rev. Mr. Dowie, the Australian faith-healer who is now performing at the Grand Opera House, stated at one of his meetings that heaven was a city fifteen hundred miles square; that in all the multitude of its inhabitants there was not a single case of sickness, and that but for the lack of faith and prayer San Francisco would be equally free from it. If the people of San Francisco are to continue to be afflicted until they have faith enough to believe that the Rev. Mr. Dowie is anything but a humbug, it is to be feared their unhealthy state will become chronic.

It took a Santa Rosa jury only fifteen minutes to render a verdict against the infamous practice that Catholic priests have of frightening or persuading dying women to will their property to the church. The late Elizabeth Ross was the victim. Taken to a Catholic hospital during her last sickness, she disinherited her son and gave her money into the care of the Rev. Father Conway for a boys' school. The son contested the will, and won the case. It is one of the evils of sectarian hospitals that patients are generally badgered by attending priests into giving their worldly goods to the sect to which the institution belongs.

THE RIGHTS OF SECTS.

THE Rev. Father Montgomery comes forward in a letter to the daily Examiner to deny the charge made at the Methodist ministers' meeting that Roman Catholic members of the school board have removed Protestant teachers to make room for others of their own faith. He ventures to deny that such a thing ever occurred, and challenges the Methodist ministers to prove their statement.

Mr. Montgomery makes a good point against the ministers by asking what would be thought of a president of a Catholic council who should remind his hearers that they must see that "the right sort of men (i.e., Catholics) were put upon the board of supervisors and the board of education?" He thinks the Catholics would never hear the last of it. Yet he claims that Catholics have more reason and a better right to do this than the Methodists, because they are more numerous, constituting nearly one-half of our population.

The priest makes the error that most religionists fall into. Because Catholics are numerous and pay taxes, he holds that they have a "right to representation on the school board." The fact is that the only right Catholics have, as Catholics, is the right to "worship God" according to the dictates of their own consciences. All other rights belong to them as citizens, not as believers in any creed. They have no right to demand that, on account of his belief, a man should be elected to office as a representative of his fellow church-members. This is a secular government, under which religious belief is no qualification or disqualification for any office. To say that Roman Catholics are entitled to public offices as Roman Catholics is to say that Greek Catholics may claim that right. The same with Protestants and all other religious bodies, sects, or denominations. Offices would thus become a prize for religious opponents to scramble for, and the spoils would belong to the victors. Under such a system there would be a religious qualification for office. We should have Protestant or Catholic administrations instead of Republican or Democratic. Our post-offices, custom houses, and other public institutions would be given to Protestants or Catholics according as the administration was the one or the other, and partisanship would be religious instead of political.

If every public office in the land were filled with Protestants, Catholics would have no cause for complaint. Neither would Protestants or Freethinkers if the situation were reversed, so long as the office holders discharged their duties faithfully and made no discrimination on account of religious belief. It is true that, in our opinion, no Catholic should be allowed to vote or hold office until he has renounced allegiance to the pope as a higher temporal power than the government of the United States, but so long as our laws permit Catholics to do both, we cannot protest; we can merely call attention to the defect in the laws.

Father Montgomery says that if he has learned his history correctly the American Revolution was occasioned by "taxation without representation," and intimates that Catholics suffer the same injustice as the colonists. He would have strengthened his argument if he had pointed out in what way any Catholic is denied the representation accorded by law to all American citizens. A Catholic may vote and hold office, and he enjoys the protection of the law. Anything more than this is a privilege, not a right; and privileges, not rights, are what both Protestants and Catholics are fighting for. To put a Catholic on the school board would be giving him a privilege; he has no right to demand it. Every dollar appropriated to a religious institution is a privilege granted, and a union of church and state. The state can recognize no religion except to protect its votaries in their right to hold and practice it.

If Catholics are elected to the school board, and appoint teachers because they are Catholics, they should be expelled from the board. So should any member or members of the board of education who make religion a test in the selection of teachers. Any teacher who conducts religious exercises in a public school, or any board which permits such exercises, should be removed. No text book containing any mention of religious subjects should be used in any school supported by public money. The entire system should be purified from superstition. Parents who desire to have their children instructed in religion must do it themselves. The state has no knowledge of religion and can impart none.

The way to settle this question, as we have often pointed out, is to make the public schools purely secular, and then, religious teaching being prohibited, it can make no difference, as it ought not to, whether a teacher is Protestant or Catholic, or neither.

If the Christian "champion" can be brought to face B. F. Underwood there will be a debate at Silverton, Or., November 10, with C. Beal, of Portland, as moderator. It is believed that the Christians of the vicinity will experience a decided drop from their present state of exaltation.

CATHOLICS IN THE LATE WAR.

To convince the gullible that Roman Catholics are good citizens of this republic one of those unfortunate persons whom Mr. Pixley denominates the "pope's Irish" recently wrote to a prominent paper claiming that the Irishmen (who were of course Catholics) enlisted in the war of the Rebellion outnumbered all the other foreigners. This has called out the following official figures, compiled from the muster rolls of the different organizations raised from 1861 to 1865:

		Per cent.
Native American.....	1,523,300	75.48
British-American.....	53,500	2.65
English.....	45,500	2.26
Irish.....	144,200	7.14
German.....	176,800	8.76
Other foreigners.....	48,400	2.38
Foreign, nativity unknown.....	26,500	1.33
Totals.....	2,018,200	100

The records of the war department further show that while these lambs of the pope formed less than 8 per cent of the army, about 78 per cent of the deserters were of their nationality. The Germans, who are known as a nation of Freethinkers, furnished 177,000 men to defend the union, and only 9 per cent of the deserters.

Catholicism has a forbidding aspect, in whatever light it is examined.

DEAR readers of FREETHOUGHT, let us bear in mind that these are hard times for the Liberal paper. It is always thus during a presidential year. If your subscription has expired, as shown by the receipt which you hold, you cannot perform a better deed than to renew. If you have been thinking all along that you would do something for the cause, now is the accepted time. If your side wins in the approaching election, you cannot experience the fulness of joy which should accompany that result unless you have done your duty toward the great cause of Freethought. Registered letters, post-office money orders, postal notes, express money orders, checks on local banks, or the current circulating medium are received at this office with equal gratitude. Lift upon us the light of a remittance.

THE Rev. Mr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, has recently repeated his inspired discourse on suicide, in which appears this remarkable passage:

"Ah! Infidelity, stand up and take thy sentence! In the presence of God and angels and men, stand up, thou monster, thy lip blasted with blasphemy, thy cheek scarred with lust, thy breath foul with the corruption of the ages! Stand up, Satyr, filthy goat, buzzard of the nations, leper of the centuries! Stand up, thou monster of infidelity! Part man, part panther, part reptile, part dragon, stand up and take thy sentence! Thy hands red with the blood in which thou hast washed, thy feet crimson with the human gore through which thou hast waded, stand up and take thy sentence! Down with thee to the pit and sup on the sobs and groans of families thou hast blasted, and roll on the bed of knives which thou hast sharpened for others, and let thy music be the everlasting miserere of those whom thou hast damned! I brand the forehead of Infidelity with all the crimes of self-immolation for the last century on the part of those who had their reason."

Mr. Talmage holds that Christians who commit suicide do so because they are insane, while Freethinkers destroy themselves because they are Infidels. When we consider that the great majority of people guilty of self-immolation are of a religious turn of mind, the only conclusion to be reached compatible with the statistics is that insanity is much more prevalent among Christians than Infidelity is among Freethinkers. And with such preachers as Talmage to harangue large congregations we don't wonder at it.

Nobody except Pope Leo XIII. and Emperor William of Germany knows what confidences passed between these two eminent sovereigns during their late meeting in Rome, but from a member of the imperial attendants it has become known that Emperor William, while telling King Humbert how the pope had insisted on talking on the question of Rome, said: "I had to destroy his illusions, and it was done effectually." The clericals of Germany are reported to be gnashing their teeth over this blow to the pope's hope of temporal power. The pope deserves no sympathy. He is a sharp, shrewd old rascal, and he can take care of his own interests.

WHEN the son of man shall sit upon the throne of his glory, Mr. C. H. Symmes, of Livermore, Alameda county, will occupy a prominent seat at his right. The man who sends boxes of grapes and almonds to this office without prospect or expectation of reward is not going to be left, in any sort of a fair trial. It is for such that a kingdom has been prepared from the foundation of the world.

PROBABLY the communication from "Historicus" in this issue of FREETHOUGHT will not draw out an immediate reply from Bishop Vladimir, who was in Chicago last Sunday, and proceeded thence to Washington, D. C., where "Historicus" resides. On his return to San Francisco he will doubtless have something further to say.

THE action of the Secular Union Congress in bestowing the honor of life-membership upon Horace Seaver, of the Investigator, and E. M. Macdonald, of the Truth Seeker, was a fitting recognition of the services these two able journalists have performed for the cause of Liberalism. We look hopefully toward the next Congress.

THE American Nonconformist, of Winfield, Kan., nips a promising sensation in the bud by giving the facts about the Anarchist scare reported from that place. There was nothing in it; and thus a lie instead of a bomb was exploded.

It should make some of our crack debaters eager for the fray when they read in the last issue of FREETHOUGHT the set of propositions that a defender of Christianity offers to support.

"THE SABBATH IMPOSTURE."

From Fair Play.

This is a critical examination of the Bible's supposed evidence in support of the assumptions of the modern Christian regarding the "Holy Sabbath," and a slashing commentary upon the claims and demands of the clergy. It is well worth the dime asked for it.

From the Plaindealer.

"Sabbath Imposture" is an able mass of argument and testimony proving conclusively that "there is not only no divine authority for the Christian Sabbath, but no authority whatever; that Christians possess no right, either human or divine, to bind heavy burdens on men's consciences simply because they happen to be in a majority." Neat pamphlet. Price 10 cents.

From Secular Thought.

"The Sabbath Imposture" is the title of an excellent pamphlet written by Harry Hoover, president of the Pittsburgh Secular Union, and published by Messrs. Putnam & Macdonald, San Francisco. Mr. Hoover has collected many valuable facts upon the Sunday question and presented them to his readers with original and interesting comments. These are a portion of his concluding remarks, which we commend to the Sabbatarians of Canada: "This same Sunday law was conceived in ignorance, born in superstition, cradled in bigotry, clothed with prejudice, and sent forth fully armed and equipped with intolerance to do the dirty work of despotism. It is a most tyrannical infringement on the sacred rights of conscience, a relic of barbarism, a fraud, a lie, a blot upon our national escutcheon, a thing to be ashamed of and repealed as speedily as possible. That it has been so long, and is still, permitted to disgrace our statute books is no less a cause of humiliation than a matter of surprise."

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Bishop Vladimir, of this city, established a Greek church society in Chicago last Sunday.—Returns show that the total number of voters registered in San Francisco is about 59,000, a gain of 10,000 in two years.—Professor Holden, director of the Lick Observatory, has been invited by M. Jansson, president of the French Academy of Sciences, to co-operate with him as a member of the committee studying the method of photographing celestial bodies, and has accepted the invitation.—W. H. Lawrence, superintendent of the Spring Valley Water Works, died at his home in San Mateo of malarial fever last Sunday.—The Catholic church and Priest Conway have lost the Ross legacy at Santa Rosa, the court having decided that Conway exercised undue influence over Mrs. Ross as her spiritual adviser.—Senator Stanford has arrived in New York from Europe.—The trial of Elsie Reynolds, the medium, resulted in an acquittal.—One hundred and fifty-eight persons contributed $665 for the relief of the mother of Murderer Goldenson.—A cargo of Chinese have gone to Tacoma to try the constitutionality of the Exclusion act before a court there.—Small-pox has disappeared from McMinnville, Or., and the quarantine is raised.—A 42-inch telescope is talked of for the university at Los Angeles. This is eight inches larger than the Lick glass.

There is probably slight foundation for the Anarchist scare at Winfield, Kan.—The Socialists of New York have nominated Alexander Jonas, editor of the Volks-Zeitung, for mayor. Mrs. Cynthia Leonard is the candidate of the woman suffragists.—Yellow fever is again on the increase in Jacksonville, Fla.—The union street-car men of Chicago are making it uncomfortable for the non-union drivers and conductors.—Three inches of snow fell at Nebraska City, Neb., last Sunday.—Congress adjourned last Saturday, after a session of 321 days, the longest on record. During this time 15,585 measures were introduced and disposed of.—The fight of the Southern Presbyterians over evolution has broken out afresh.—It is reported that absolute distress from lack of food is prevalent among the farmers of Dakota.—The Liberal Convention of Utah declared that the Mormons have not, as they claim, abandoned polygamy.—The Iowa Prohibition law has been sustained by the United States supreme court.—The Rev. James Stewart Greene, the former rector of St. Matthew's Reformed Episcopal church, of Chicago, whose head is whitened by the vicissitudes of seventy-four years, and who, last week, pleaded guilty to a charge of bigamy, was arraigned in the criminal court on Monday last. Instead of being condemned to go to the penitentiary or to pay a fine, the old man was allowed to depart on his own recognizance for $500.—It is reported from New York that Mrs. Fox-Kane, one of the original Fox sisters, has confessed that the famous Rochester rappings were produced by sharp cracking of the big-toe joints of herself and her sister Kate. Exposures of Spiritualism seem to be the popular "fad" just at this time, but the Spiritualists appear not to be greatly disturbed by them.

Ten cars of a train crowded with excursionists were crushed by a landslide near Naples, Italy, last Sunday. Nearly one hundred corpses were taken from the wreck.—A comic newspaper in Paris has been seized for publishing a caricature of Emperor William.—The Parnell libel suit against the London Times began on the 22d.—The memorial pamphlet containing Emperor Frederick's diary is suppressed by the German authorities.—Acting on the advice of Italian and foreign clericals, the pope has decided to instruct the bishops throughout the world to agitate for the restoration of the temporal power of the papacy.

HISTORICAL CHRISTIANITY.

It is undoubtedly true, as asserted by Bishop Vladimir, that the Eastern church was the mother of the Western. Nor can the several specifications in the bishop's indictment of the Romish church for heresy be successfully controverted. But I take issue with many if not most of the gentleman's allegations in regard to primitive historical Christianity, one of which is this:

All of the apostles wrote their gospels and epistles in the Greek or Hebrew language. Even the epistle of St. Paul to the Romans was written in Greek.

The language of Judea and Galilee eighteen hundred years ago was Aramaic, otherwise known as Chaldee or Syriac. The Hebrew language was not spoken at all, but the Aramaic resembled the Hebrew, just as the Italian resembles the Latin. The Greek language, while it prevailed on the Mediterranean coast, never made headway in the interior of Asia, or the countries inhabited by the Jews. Josephus, the great Jewish historian, says he found it "a difficult thing to translate our history into a foreign, and to us unaccustomed language." This was about the year 93, when he was fifty-six years of age. Now if so learned a Jewish priest and historian found it difficult to write Greek, how is it possible that Galilean fishermen, who in advanced life left their nets and spent the rest of their lives in traveling and preaching among people whose vernacular was Aramaic, were ever able to write epistles in Greek, or even to speak that language intelligibly?

And even in regard to Paul, who was an educated man, there is no evidence that he could speak or write Greek. It is true that the oldest extant manuscripts of his epistles are written in Greek, but the date of these manuscripts is assigned to the fourth, fifth, and sixth centuries, and it is admitted by Bishop Vladimir that the Latin version of the New Testament existed as early as the fourth century, nor will he, I think, dispute the fact that the Syriac version, called the Peshito, existed at least as early as the Latin. The claim on behalf of the Syriac version is that it is not only the earliest, but that it is written in the language spoken by Jesus and his apostles.

Paul began preaching in Arabia; then he returned to Damascus, whence he fled to Jerusalem, spending only fifteen days in the city, and that privately. From thence he wandered over various countries of Asia Minor trying to convert his fellow Jews, who doubtless all spoke the Aramaic or Syriac tongue. Even in Greece, where he spent about two years, most of the time in Corinth, he doubtless addressed Jewish immigrants from Syria and Asia Minor, who understood Greek but imperfectly.

Another assertion of Bishop Vladimir is this:

St. Peter, after departing from the church at Jerusalem, was bishop of the Greek town of Antioch. During seven years afterward he preached and lived much in Egypt, with his disciple Marcus (Mark), and both founded theological schools in Alexandria.

Antioch was a Greek city only in name, and being the capital of Syria undoubtedly the Syriac language was spoken in the city almost exclusively. St. Peter's ministry in Egypt is no doubt a myth. His epistle purports to be written from Babylon (1 Pet. v, 13), and whether authentic or not was probably written in Aramaic. The second epistle of Peter is certainly spurious.

But I assert that there never was an apostle Peter. That is to say, I do not deny the existence of a Jew who became a disciple of Jesus, and who is recognized as the apostle Peter, but that was not and never could have been his name. Petros is a Greek translation of the Aramaic or Syriac name Kepha, meaning rock or stone; and this is the only instance in the New Testament where a proper name has been translated. It is a fraud of the Greek scribe who translated most of the books of the New Testament from the Aramaic or Syriac. Keph, the Hebrew word, occurs only twice in the Old Testament, and both times it is translated petros, "rock," in the Septuagint.

The Peshito, or Syriac version of the New Testament, which doubtless existed before the Greek version, has no Peter in the gospels or Pauline epistles, but always Kepha. Only twice does the name Peter anywhere appear in the Syriac New Testament (Acts i, 13, and epistle of Simon Kepha i, 1) but in each case it is a manifest alteration from Kepha.

Furthermore, Paul mentions Kepha ten times. Our English version has the name Cephas (Greek, Kephas) five times, and Peter (Greek, Petros) five times. But the revised version, following the most ancient codices, changes Peter to Cephas three times. This leaves the name Peter only twice in the Greek version of Paul's epistles, and if the passage in which they both occur (Gal. ii, 7, 8) is not an interpolation the change to Petros was doubtless made before the date of the earliest codex extant.

But the fraud of the Greek version is perhaps more apparent in the following interpolation in John i, 40, 41, 42, indicated by brackets:

One of the two which heard John speak and followed him was Andrew, Simon [Peter]'s brother.

He first findeth his own brother Simon and sayeth unto him, We have found the Messias [which is being interpreted Christos].

And he brought him to Jesus. And when Jesus beheld him he said, Thou art Simon the son of Jona, thou shalt be called Cephas. [which is by interpretation, Petros].

The words in brackets are wanting in the Syriac version; they are added by the Greek scribe.

Shemeun Kepha was the name by which the chief apostle was called. Simeon, the proper Greek equivalent, occurs but once in the Greek codices, to wit, in Acts xv, 14—English Simeon. Everywhere else it is Simon. The Greek scribe found the name Shemeun occurring in the gospels and Acts one hundred and thirty-five times; he reduced it to fifty-three. He found the name Kepha occurring seventy-nine times; he changed them all to Petros, and added Petros seventy-seven times. In the first gospel no addition was made and only one subtraction; in the second gospel several additions and subtractions, and so on, increasing until in the book of Acts it is nearly all addition and subtraction.

These discrepancies evince design. Petros in Greek is as false a name for the chief apostle as Stone would be in English or Stein in German.

The apostle Simon Kepha probably never visited Rome. Paul's epistle to the Romans has doubtless a false title; it seems to have been intended for some other place. Paul doubtless died in Rome, but long before the reign of Nero. He was a disciple of Jesus who was stoned and hanged for sorcery about 75 years B.C. He was converted a few years later at Damascus, but had to flee from that city prior to the year 62 B.C. because the governor of the city, under Aretas, king of Arabia Petra, sought to apprehend him (see 2 Cor. xi, 32). No subsequent king of Arabia ever governed Damascus, though there were several successors to the throne named Aretas.

There was no Christ crucified under Pontius Pilate. The real Jesus was stoned and hanged a hundred years before.

HISTORICUS.

An Old Story Retold.

There once lived in the little city of Willamsport, Pa., says the Boston Investigator, an old judge of the name of Williams. This old judge was noted for two things: for getting mellow occasionally, and for being plucky and courageous under all circumstances. It was a peculiarity of the judge that whenever he got mellow he grew correspondingly religious. One night he wandered into a protracted religious meeting and seated himself upon the front seat, full of spiritual influence of some kind.

The clergyman, engaged in his preaching, rose to a fervid pitch of eloquence, and in the midst of it exclaimed: "Show me the drunkard? Show me the drunkard, of all men on earth the most unfortunate; show him to me!" To the consternation of all present the old judge arose, and, unsteadily maintaining himself, replied, "Well, sir, here I am." The clergyman, having realized upon his investment sooner than he anticipated, didn't know what to do with it.

They pulled the old judge down, and the excitement caused by the incident had subsided, when the clergyman again struck an impassioned period, and demanded in fervid accents: "Show me the hypocrite, of all men on God's green earth the most despicable! Show me the hypocrite."

The old judge rose the second time, and reaching over to a certain shaky old deacon with his cane, exclaimed, "Deacon, why the devil don't you get up when you're called on?"

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

R. B. WESTBROOK, LL.D., PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary.....241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
 OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treasurer.....Rochelle, Ill.
 E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com.....120 Lexington ave., New York
 MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com.....106 So. Halsted st., Chicago

A CALL TO ACTION.

There's a revolution rising; there's rebellion in the land;
 There's a movement past disguising for a better law to reign;
 And our able secretary sends his call on every hand
 For the sinews necessary to the opening campaign.

In our platform we've demanded every church shall pay its share,
 In a manner open-handed, of the government expense;
 We demand appropriation to remunerate for prayer
 Shall without procrastination be no more directed thence.

There's an alien institution kneeling round a papal throne
 Which demands a contribution to support its temporal power;
 'Twill beseege us and unhouse us, make America its own,
 Unless something shall arouse us to the duty of the hour.

In our halls of legislature there are parsons by the score,
 Paid to violate the nature of each man that holds a doubt
 As to God and inspiration and a dozen dogmas more;
 Let us purify the nation, then, and turn the rascals out.

There's a God-in-Constitution party roaming through the land,
 With a view to commination of their foes from sea to sea;
 Let us raise the Liberal banner with a strong, athletic hand,
 While we sing the loud hosanna and the anthem of the free.

Rally to this standard, brother, with your word and with your deed,
 Let us work for one another and the land that gave us birth;
 Follow where our leaders call us, be a help in time of need,
 And whate'er may hence befall us, we'll be happy on the earth.
 G.E.M.

SCRAPS FROM THE CONGRESS.

From E. M. Macdonald's report in the Truth Seeker.

If you ask a Pittsburgher what the industries are that have given Pittsburgh and Allegheny City (the two are really one) their population of three hundred thousand people without souls, he will answer NATURAL GAS and the steel, iron, and glass works. If you asked a Pittsburgh Liberal what the most important work of Liberalism was at that date, he would say, Elect Harry Hoover secretary of the American Secular Union. Pittsburgh is proud of her natural gas, and the Liberals of the place have a great admiration for Mr. Hoover. The two prides kept the delegates warm, the one glowing in the grates around fire-brick, the other in the groups which gathered to discuss the affairs of Liberalism. These discussions were not always good-natured, for between the Pittsburgher and outside delegate there speedily grew up a coldness which the natural gas and heated discussions could but partially dispel. The delegates from the portions of the country lying beyond the Pittsburgh boundaries were, with one or two notable exceptions, in favor of retaining the services of Mr. E. A. Stevens, who had, they alleged, been remarkably active, self-sacrificing, and efficient. The Pittsburghers, re-enforced by Brother Bell and Miss Voltairine de Cleyre, thought that Chicago was trying to run the universe, helped along by New York, and abetted by San Francisco, and that the time had come for Pittsburgh to take charge. Others had different reasons, but these were too contemptible to catalogue. Without reflecting upon any particular person, it was evident that a good deal of back-biting and lying had been done. This was a source of great grief to the older workers in the cause, but the fact was there.

President Putnam rose to a question of privilege. Charges had been made against his action as secretary by Mr. Eckhard, and he wanted them proved or withdrawn. If anyone had anything to say about him he wanted it said to his face. This matter was referred to the Auditing Committee.

D. G. Crow, of the Indian Territory, is a new comer on the lecture platform, and, suffering from the embarrassment of that circumstance, did not do justice to himself. He has a good presence and voice, is witty and learned.

Mrs. Freeman has a musical ring to her voice—a kind of an L. K. Washburn in soprano—and she takes her audiences up many flights of poetic and pathetic stairways—stairways trimmed and decorated and frilled and beautified, but landing at last in a solid superstructure of common sense and fact. She is one of the most graceful of our female orators in the presentation of her subject.

Sunday in Pittsburgh is the most miserable of all the days in the week. Nothing can be legally sold—not even grocery, candy, or cigar stores can be kept open. Everybody must lay in on Saturday night the solid and liquid refreshments for the following day. The improvident man who neglects to provide his spiritual food from the saloon on Saturday must take it on Sunday from the churches, or not at all. One of the delegates who likes a good cigar, and came originally from a country where Sunday is not much of a day, and having lived ever since near New York, was the most disgusted person in the city. The Editorial Reporter met him on Sunday morning walking up and down in front of the hotel and swearing earnestly. He had had his breakfast but not his cigar. He approached the Editorial Reporter and unbosomed himself. His language would not do to print. All at once a thought hit him, and he went plunging upstairs to his room, and punched the button of the electric bell till it went out of sight. When the hallboy made his appearance he shouted: "Bring me a cigar!" It came at once. And thus did ingenuity on the part of the guest and hypocrisy on the part of the hotelkeeper triumph over Pittsburgh puritanism. When Putnam was asking the audience for a campaign fund, that man's name went down for $50, and he wants it all applied to repealing Sunday laws.

This state of affairs is due to the Law and Order Society of Pittsburgh. Pennsylvania has a splendid blasphemy law whereby any person "who shall willfully, premeditatedly, and despitefully blaspheme or speak loosely and profanely of Almighty God, Christ Jesus, the Holy Spirit, or the scriptures of truth," may be made to pay one hundred dollars and be confined three months in jail. Profane swearing in Pennsylvania costs anybody over sixteen years of age sixty-seven cents per swear. The tariff is intended to be prohibitory, but it is not, though if the constable could have heard the delegates who wanted cigars on Sunday morning he might have captured cash enough to pay the bills of the state for several years. The Sunday laws are voluminous, rigorous, and all-inclusive. The penalties range from ten shillings to three hundred dollars and the stocks. The phraseology of the law indicates its colonial origin, when the ministers ran things generally. But Pittsburgh clergy are not much behind their ancestors, and are enforcing these laws with a rigidity that would have made Cotton Mather rejoice, though William Penn would have protested with all the force of his gentle Quaker nature. In fact, the Pittsburgh reverends drive the knife clear up to the hilt into the ungodly who want to waste money on Sunday, and their success in enforcing the Sunday law probably induced a Christian crank, "J. H. W.," to appeal to Captain Wishart to suppress the blasphemers. But Captain Wishart failed to materialize at Lafayette Hall, and the delegates slept in peace at their various hotels instead of wrestling with the vermin of a police station-house.

Mr. Hoover's ballots had been prepared at a printing-office, and most of the delegates had received at their homes letters asking them to vote for Mr. Hoover. Mr. Stevens's advocate was a silent one—his Record, and the unwritten law that tried officers should not be displaced without good cause. His friends also bestirred themselves, and Friday and Saturday the war was a merry one. It is to be regretted that it was not a better natured one.

Incidentally the presidency of the Union was dragged into the controversy. Mr. Putnam had positively declined to be re-elected, though he could have won the prize with ease, and with the exception of the friends of Mr. Hoover, scarcely a delegate knew whom he really desired for the office. Mr. Hoover's friends had decided to run J. E. Remsburg, hoping, as the other side alleged, that his popularity would pull Mr. Hoover through. At any rate they offered to throw him over, and vote for Mr. Stevens for president if the others would vote for Mr. Hoover. The proposition was declined.

Judge Westbrook was declared elected, and on motion of one of his opponents the election was made unanimous. It was a peculiar vote for this office. Under other circumstances either gentleman would have had every vote in the Congress, and the applause which followed Judge Westbrook's unanimous election was as hearty and sincere as though no one had voted any other way. There was really no one opposed to him except because of the disputed secretaryship, and no one opposed to Mr. Remsburg except for the same reason, and the further one that it was deemed best by the nominating committee to put no lecturers or people connected with Liberal papers in office, in order that the jealousy existing between some of these might have no meat to feed upon.

Judge Westbrook, who was at home unconscious of the honor done him, was notified by telegraph. Later in the affairs of the Congress his acceptance was telegraphed, as follows:

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION: Regarding the American Secular Union as an organization for the protection and promotion of the principle implied in its name, and not for the advancement of any dogma of religious belief or disbelief, I cordially accept its presidency unanimously tendered to me, and pledge myself to resist all encroachments of sacerdotalism, whether papal or puritan.

R. B. WESTBROOK.

Miss Voltairine de Cleyre was expected to speak Sunday afternoon, but a sore throat contracted by exposure (it rained about all the time during the Congress) prevented. The audience assembled early, and the session was marked by harmony. The factions had had their fight, the defeated were not sullen, the victors concealed, if they felt, any jubilant spirit, and brotherly affection seemed to take the place of the previous bitter determination of each to have their own way. The illness of Miss de Cleyre was very deeply regretted, as an audience of four or five hundred had assembled to hear her poetic and witty sentiments. Mr. Stevens, however, proved as good a substitute as a man can for a woman, and his speech on "Romish Rubbish" was attentively and appreciatively listened to. The fight going on in Pittsburgh over the public school question gave the exposé of Romanism a great advantage with the audience. Romanism is not popular with the average Pittsburgher just at present, though the city is permeated and surrounded with Romish churches, church members, and church institutions. Mr. Stevens's catalogue of the relics of Romanism was received with laughter, and the exposure of the idolatrous theology of Rome was heartily enjoyed.

Sunday night the audience was a large one, completely filling the hall, and overflowing into the gallery. The programme was modified to give the audience the pleasure of hearing Mrs. Watts deliver the dialogue between Sir Peter and Lady Teazle as it occurs in "The School for Scandal." Mrs. Watts is a thorough Secularist, her father training her from infancy in that philosophy, and she never was a Christian for a single minute. Applause brought her back upon the stage, and she gave "An Address to Men," which pleased the women mightily and made the lords of creation feel small. Mrs. Watts's beauty and elocutionary powers attracted the audience wonderfully, and they would have kept her upon the stage had not the chairman introduced Mr. Putnam, who was to speak upon "The American Republic."

The substance of Mr. Putnam's lecture has appeared in these columns, and reprint is unnecessary. He quoted from Garfield, Grant, and Spencer, the two former to the effect that churches must be made to pay their equal shares of the public burdens, and the latter as showing the indifference of the American people to ecclesiastical and political encroachments upon their liberties. Mr. Putnam took up each of the Nine Demands in turn, and urged the reasons for their adoption by the people. Mr. Putnam was rewarded by great applause as he made his points, and when he closed with "Why Don't he Lend a Hand?" the audience was ready to vote that he was as good a speaker as they wanted to listen to.

Mr. Watts came forward and addressed the Convention on "Religion and Science: Their Relation to Civilization." Mr. Watts is a great favorite in Pittsburgh, and when he diverged from his subject long enough to whack the writer of the scurrilous article in the Pittsburgh Press he obtained great applause indeed. Before closing his lecture Mr. Watts spoke against monopolies and poverty, urging the Liberals to fight the former, and characterizing the latter as the curse of the century. Mr. Watts closed with the poem, "God of Nature, Give Us Light," and the audience voted by their applause that the poetic race between him and Putnam was a dead heat.

The first thing to occur Monday morning was the discussion of a Prohibition resolution, offered by Mr. Silver, of Cleveland. The resolution stood no chance of passing, in that audience of Freethinkers and individualists, though everyone was in favor of temperance, and it was finally laid to rest upon the table.

After this had been disposed of the subjoined was passed:

Resolved, That the thanks of this Congress are hereby tendered to the members of the Pittsburgh Secular Union for their generous co-operation in the work and success of this Congress, and we congratulate this Union on its great service in the past to the cause of Liberalism, and are sure that this Congress held under its auspices will be a noble landmark in civilization, and will make a new and powerful impulse for Freethought, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

Mr. Watts reported that he was instructed by the Canadian Secular Union to call attention to the Eighth Demand of Liberalism and suggest that it be amended as follows:

We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality, as such, shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

The amending words are in italic. The amendment was adopted.

Dr. Severance thought that it was difficult to get ahead of the times—very hard work indeed to keep up with them. And more difficult still to be really Liberal. She calls herself as Liberal as most folks, but sometimes even she harbored il-Liberal feelings. The only limit to liberty that she knows is the infringement of some one else's liberty. Her trinity is, Liberty, equality, fraternity. The doctor was uproariously applauded. She has turned labor agitator in her own home, and her party wanted her to run for mayor of Milwaukee. The party carried the county, and if Mrs. Severance had not been too modest she might have been mayoress of Milwaukee to-day.

Mr. Bell is the same solid speaker as of old, though he has remained most of the past few years in Chicago, and his lecture, interspersed with witty anecdotes, was received with a good deal of approbation. After the Congress, Mr. Bell started on a lecture tour through Ohio back to Chicago.

Mrs. Mattie A. Freeman:

From that resplendent past, made glorious by the struggle of victorious heroes, comes the watchword of alarm, "Eternal Vigilance is the price of Liberty." The American Secular Union is demanding that that old will left by the fathers of this nation be enforced—that on no cornerstone of this great republic shall be written the word "Religion."

E. A. Stevens:

As you are aware, I was not wholly new to the work, for my hope and effort for years has been to help make this a national representative organization which shall eventually become, throughout the length and breadth of the land, an intellectual, social, and political power. Alas! unlooked for complications have largely tended to thwart the realization of my desire, and I regret that those stumbling-blocks were not from without but within; but in spite of opposition we have progressed.

Some organizations which have been slumbering for years have been revived, notably in Cleveland, Alliance, St. Louis, centers of intelligence and population where the chances for their permanence is greater. Correspondence with a view to organization is being had with Detroit and Minneapolis. Charters have been issued to Fresno, Anaheim, San Jose, Cal.; Stayton, McMinnville, Ore.; Quincy, Ill.; St. Louis, Mo.; West Union, O.; Fairmount, Minn., and Locust Dale, Pa.

A larger list of life members—who always have formed the sinew, intellect, and vertebrae of our Secular cause—have been added this year. Their names are: Leonard Geiger, of Hudson, N. Y.; Dr. W. L. Willis, of Kokomo, Ind.; J. A. Smith, Hudson, N. Y.; Jas. A. Greenhill, Clinton, Ill.; Hugo Schmidt, Chicago, Ill.; N. C. Dahl, Chicago, Ill.; A. K. Olds, of McMinnville, Ore.; E. Chope, Detroit, Mich.; Owen Thomas Davies, Brighton, Cal.; Photius Fisk, Boston, Mass.; James Tuttle, Atlantic, Ill.; Dr. G. A. F. de Lespinasse, Orange City, Ia.; N. F. Griswold, Meriden, Conn.; Mrs. M. J. Olds, McMinnville, Ore.; Maj. W. H. Forward, surgeon of the United States army at Fort Snelling, Minn.; Hon. M. M. Sæcor, mayor of Racine, Wis. Many of these life members have aided financially in addition to their membership fee. The roll of annual members is also unusually large and shows an increased interest in the Nine Demands, despite the distracting influences of a presidential campaign year.

Not wishing to point too much to personal work, but desirous of showing what an active band of Secularists can do, I will refer you to the response of Secretary Marius Heighton to my question, What has the Kent Society done in its existence?—which, of course, is only a part:

"It has organized a Secular library of one hundred volumes.

"It has introduced the Truth Seeker into more than one hundred families, and maintained a standing subscription of some seventy names.

"It has organized and maintained seven lecture courses at a cost of $326.04, all of which, save Dr. York's, yielded a small profit after paying expenses. All have been free, and the surplus put into the library.

"It maintains a circulating tract library to the number of four hundred.

"It has conducted a three day's debate, and by it spiked the guns of the bombastic Catholics.

"It has regular fortnightly meetings; has challenged the local clergy to meet it in debate.

"It takes higher moral stand than the churches.

"It is negotiating for a lot on which to build a hall, and it has a charter, and yet it is younger than Cleveland's administration.

"It can keep bigots out of the school board, and is feared and respected by the politicians. That is a glorious record surely, and if every chartered society had done half as much, politicians would not need to crawl after priests and preachers."

President Putnam has labored early and late, devoted a large portion of his paper to its interest, rolled up a splendid list of newly chartered organizations, secured pledges of large sums of money, has been burdened with a large amount of correspondence, on which he has spent his time, labor, and postage, and has worked as indefatigably and assiduously for the American Secular Union this year as though in receipt of a salary, but has been repaid by slanders.

J. H. Burnham:

Let our organization be made effective in the way that we have suggested. Let the Liberal public understand that we have come to stay, that we mean business, and that we are the persistent foes of this despotic ecclesiastical power for all time. The Liberal public will lend us its aid in financial support and in advancing our cause at the polls as soon as we have redeemed the mistakes which we have made. Organize every state as soon and as fast as possible, and then when we meet in convention with a thousand delegates we shall not need to ask for recognition; our position will command it.

Letters:

20 CIRCUS ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, LONDON, N. W., Sept. 11, 1888.

E. A. STEVENS, Esq., American Secular Union, Dear Sir: It is, unfortunately, quite impossible for me to attend your Twelfth Annual Congress at Pittsburgh. I shall be glad, however, if you will give my most earnest assurance to the Freethinkers there assembled of my heartiest wishes for the success of their work. I desire to be permitted to tender to the friends of the late Courtlandt Palmer my expression of deep regret and condolence.

It is pleasant to me to be able to think that in the present session of Parliament I have done something to promote No. 6 in the "Demands" of your platform. I have been for the last three or four years intending to again visit America, but my work grows each year. In default of seeing you face to face I send you my very warmest greeting across the ocean both in my own name and on behalf of the National Secular Society of which I am the president. Yours very sincerely,

C. BRADLAUGH.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS., Sept. 16, 1888.

MY DEAR SECRETARY: I trust you will have a full, harmonious, and business-like meeting at Pittsburgh in October. As the present presidential campaign calls our attention to the subject of taxation, I have thought much of late upon the infinite wrong of taxing a good workingman's home to its full value and letting a ten-million-dollar cathedral go tax-free. That workingman's home is the most sacred and holy thing in the universe. It is also the most important element in the strength and stability of the nation. What is the cathedral? It is the toy of a handful of rich men, contributing nothing to the power of the nation, and nothing to the moral elevation of the people. It can be demonstrated that the cathedrals of Europe, from St. Peter's to York Minster, are a cause of moral injury and mental torpor.

I hope the Congress will discuss carefully the project of suing the Girard College trustees for breach of trust. Where is the money to come from? Are you prepared to spend half a million dollars upon lawyers and court expenses? You will find nearly the whole of Pennsylvania behind these trustees, and Pennsylvania is a large-sized antagonist. It is well to count the cost. Health and happiness to all the members.

Very truly yours,

JAMES PARTON.

PAINE MEMORIAL, BOSTON, Oct. 3, 1888.

FRIEND STEVENS: It would be a great satisfaction to my friend Mendum and myself if we were able to attend the Secular Congress which meets next Friday, but I am sorry to say that feeble health and the infirmities of age must prevent. We hope, however, there may be a large attendance, and as you will have some of our best speakers to assist in presenting important subjects, you will no doubt have interesting meetings, in which we would be very glad to take part if our circumstances were more favorable. Old soldiers though we are of upward of half a century's warfare in the Secular or Liberal ranks, yet we have never for a moment lost our interest in the great and good cause of freedom and humanity, nor failed to defend and promote it as well as we know how, and our only regret is that we may not be able to work for it much longer; but while we do live we are sure that we will not "fly the track." Please read this brief note to the friends present, all of whom we would be glad to take by the hand; but as we may never have this satisfaction, we send them our best wishes for their health, happiness, prosperity, and long lives. May they always be united, harmonious, and vigilant, and never surrender. Fraternally,

H. SEAVER AND J. P. MENDUM.

The Auditing Committee:

With the exception of a few slight errors in addition, your Committee finds the secretary's report adopted by this Congress to be correct. From November, 1887, to September, 1888, inclusive, the receipts were $913.46, and expenditures $292.54, leaving a balance of $620.92.

The treasurer's report has been received without vouchers, and the Committee therefore cannot report intelligently upon it. The report is placed on file. The treasurer's report dates from October 1, 1887, to September 30, 1888, and the secretary's report from November, 1, 1887, to September, 1888. The treasurer's report includes the first two weeks of October, which belong to the preceding year. The report shows a balance of $46.42 in the treasury.

The Congress closed with a ball, which was a highly successful and numerously attended affair. The light and flags and music made a festival of beauty, and in what the conductor said was the grand march-calcium lights of various colors were thrown upon the marchers, weirdly heightening the beauty of the ladies and displaying the manliness of the men. Good-fellowship and sociability prevailed, and Mrs. Colman, with her seventy-one years weighing her down, marched over the floor, in company with young Mr. Marlett of Chicago, as gaily as the youngest girl.

INGERSOLL'S REPLY TO CARDINAL MANNING.

From the North American Review.

Cardinal Manning has stated the claims of the Roman Catholic church with great clearness, and apparently without reserve. The age, position, and learning of this man give a certain weight to his words, apart from their worth.

The proposition is that "the church itself, by its marvelous propagation, its eminent sanctity, its inexhaustible fruitfulness in all good things, its catholic unity and invincible stability, is a vast and perpetual motive of credibility, and an irrefragable witness of its own divine legation."

The reasons given as supporting this proposition, are:

That the Catholic church interpenetrates all the nations of the civilized world; that it is extranational and independent in a supernatural unity; that it is the same in every place; that it speaks all languages in the civilized world; that it is obedient to one head; that as many as seven hundred bishops have knelt before the pope; that pilgrims from all nations have brought gifts to Rome, and that all these things set forth in the most self-evident way the unity and universality of the Roman church.

It is also asserted that "men see the head of the church year by year speaking to the nations of the world, treating with empires, republics, and governments;" that "there is no other man on earth that can so bear himself," and that "neither from Canterbury nor from Constantinople can such a voice go forth to which rulers and people listen."

It is also claimed that the Catholic church has enlightened and purified the world; that it has given us the peace and purity of domestic life; that it has destroyed idolatry and demonology; that it gave us a body of law from a higher source than man; that it has produced the civilization of Christendom; that the popes were the greatest of statesmen and rulers; that celibacy is better than marriage, and that the revolutions and reformations of the last three hundred years have been destructive and calamitous.

We will examine these assertions as well as some others.

No one will dispute that the Catholic church is the best witness of its own existence. The same is true of everything that exists—of every church, great and small, of every man, and of every insect.

But it is contended that the marvelous growth or propagation of the church is evidence of its divine origin. Can it be said that success is supernatural? All success in this world is relative. Majorities are not necessarily right. If anything is known—if anything can be known—we are sure that very large bodies of men have frequently been wrong. We believe in what is called the progress of mankind. Progress, for the most part, consists in finding new truths and getting rid of old errors—that is to say, getting nearer and nearer in harmony with the facts of nature, seeing with greater clearness the conditions of well-being.

There is no nation in which a majority leads the way. In the progress of mankind, the few have been the nearest right. There have been centuries in which the light seemed to emanate only from a handful of men, while the rest of the world was enveloped in darkness. Some great man leads the way—he becomes the morning star, the prophet of a coming day. Afterwards, many millions accept his views. But there are still heights above and beyond; there are other pioneers, and the old day, in comparison with the new, becomes a night. So, we cannot say that success demonstrates either divine origin or supernatural aid.

Nothing can be clearer than that Christianity arose out of the ruins of the Roman empire—that is to say, the ruins of Paganism. And it is equally clear that Mohammedanism arose out of the wreck and ruin of Catholicism.

After Mohammed came upon the stage,

Christianity was forever expelled from its most glorious seats—from Palestine, the scene of its most sacred recollections; from Asia Minor, that of its first churches; from Egypt, whence issued the great doctrine of Trinitarian orthodoxy, and from Carthage, who imposed her belief on Europe. Before that time the ecclesiastical chiefs of Rome, of Constantinople, and of Alexandria, were engaged in a desperate struggle for supremacy, carrying out their purposes by weapons and in ways revolting to the conscience of man. Bishops were concerned in assassinations, poisonings, adulteries, blindings, riots, treasons, civil war. Patriarchs and primates were excommunicating and anathematizing one another in their rivalries for earthly power—bribing eunuchs with gold and courtesans and royal females with concessions of episcopal love. Among legions of monks who carried terror into the imperial armies and riot into the great cities arose hideous clamors for theological dogmas, but never a voice for intellectual liberty or the outraged rights of man.

Under these circumstances, amid these atrocities and crimes, Mohammed arose, and raised his own nation from Fetichism, the adoration of the meteoric stone, and from the basest idol worship, and irrevocably wrenched from Christianity more than half—and by far the best half—of her possessions, since it included the Holy Land, the birth-place of the Christian faith, and Africa, which had imparted to it its Latin form; and now, after a lapse of more than a thousand years, that continent, and a very large part of Asia, remain permanently attached to the Arabian doctrine.

It may be interesting in this connection to say that the Mohammedan now proves the divine mission of his Apostle by appealing to the marvelous propagation of the faith. If the argument is good in the mouth of a Catholic, is it not good in the mouth of a Moslem? Let us see if it is not better.

According to Cardinal Manning, the Catholic church triumphed only over the institutions of men—triumphed only over religions that had been established by men, by wicked and ignorant men. But Mohammed triumphed not only over the religions of men, but over the religion of God. This ignorant driver of camels, this poor, unknown, unlettered boy, unassisted by God, unenlightened by supernatural means, drove the armies of the true cross before him as the winter's storm drives withered leaves. At his name, priests, bishops, and cardinals fled with white faces—popes trembled, and the armies of God, fighting for the true faith, were conquered on a thousand fields.

If the success of a church proves its divinity, and after that another church arises and defeats the first, what does that prove?

Let us put this question in a milder form: Suppose the second church lives and flourishes in spite of the first, what does that prove?

As a matter of fact, however, no church rises with everything against it. Something is favorable to it, or it could not exist. If it succeeds and grows, it is absolutely certain that the conditions are favorable. If it spreads rapidly, it simply shows that the conditions are exceedingly favorable, and that the forces in opposition are weak and easily overcome.

To me, the success of Mormonism is no evidence of its truth, because it has succeeded only with the superstitious. It has been recruited from communities brutalized by other forms of superstition. To me, the success of Mohammed does not tend to show that he was right—for the reason that he triumphed only over the ignorant, over the superstitious. The same is true of the Catholic church. Its seeds were planted in darkness. It was accepted by the credulous, by men incapable of reasoning on such questions. It did not, it has not, it can not triumph over the intellectual world. To count its many millions does not tend to prove the truth of its creed. On the contrary, a creed that delights the credulous gives evidence against itself.

Questions of fact or philosophy cannot be settled simply by numbers. There was a time when the Copernican system of astronomy had but few supporters—the multitude being on the other side. There was a time when the rotation of the earth was not believed by the majority.

But, after all, is the success of the Catholic church a marvel? If this church is of divine origin, if it has been under the especial care, protection, and guidance of an infinite being, is not its failure far more wonderful than its success? For eighteen centuries it has persecuted and preached, and the salvation of the world is still remote. This is the result, and it may be asked whether it is worth while to try to convert the world to Catholicism.

Are Catholics better than Protestants? Are they nearer honest, nearer just, more charitable? Are the Catholic nations better than Protestant? Do the Catholic nations move in the van of progress? Within their jurisdiction are life, liberty, and property safer than anywhere else? Is Spain the first nation of the world?

Let me ask another question: Are Catholics or Protestants better than Freethinkers? Has the Catholic church produced a greater man than Humboldt? Has the Protestant produced a greater than Darwin? Was not Emerson, so far as purity of life is concerned, the equal of any true believer? Was Pius IX., or any other vicar of Christ, superior to Abraham Lincoln?

But it is claimed that the Catholic church is universal, and that its universality demonstrates its divine origin.

According to the Bible, the apostles were ordered to go into all the world and preach the gospel—yet not one of them, nor one of their converts at any time, nor one of the vicars of God, for fifteen hundred years afterward, knew of the existence of the Western Hemisphere. During all that time, can it be said that the Catholic church was universal? At the close of the fifteenth century, there was one-half of the world in which the Catholic faith had never been preached, and in the other half not one person in ten had ever heard of it, and of those who had heard of it, not one in ten believed it. Certainly the Catholic church was not then universal.

It will be admitted that the good man is kind, merciful, charitable, forgiving, and just. A church must be judged by the same standard. Has the church been merciful? Has it been "fruitful in the good things" of justice, charity, and forgiveness? Can a good man, believing a good doctrine, persecute for opinion's sake? If the church imprisons a man for the expression of an honest opinion, is it not certain, either that the doctrine of the church is wrong, or that the church is bad? Both cannot be good. "Sanctity" without goodness is impossible. Thousands of "saints" have been the most malicious of the human race. If the history of the world proves anything, it proves that the Catholic church was for many centuries the most merciless institution that ever existed among men. I cannot believe that the instruments of persecution were made and used by the eminently good; neither can I believe that honest people were imprisoned, tortured, and burned at the stake by a church that was "inexhaustibly fruitful in all good things."

And let me say here that I have no Protestant prejudices against Catholicism, and have no Catholic prejudices against Protestantism. I regard all religions either without prejudice or with the same prejudice. They were all, according to my belief, devised by men, and all have for a foundation ignorance of this world and fear of the next. All the gods have been made by men. They are all equally powerful and equally useless. I like some of them better than I do others, for the same reason that I admire some characters in fiction more than I do others. I prefer Miranda to Caliban, but I have not the slightest idea that either of them existed. So I prefer Jupiter to Jehovah, although perfectly satisfied that both are myths. I believe myself to be in a frame of mind to justly and fairly consider the claims of different religions, believing as I do that all are wrong, and admitting as I do that there is some good in all.

It is too late to talk about the "invincible stability" of the Catholic church.

It was not invincible in the seventh, in the eighth, or in the ninth centuries. It was not invincible in Germany in Luther's day. It was not invincible in the Low Countries. It was not invincible in Scotland, or in England. It is not invincible in France. It is not invincible in Italy. It is not supreme in any intellectual centre of the world. It does not triumph in Paris, or Berlin; it is not dominant in London, in England; neither is it triumphant in the United States. It has not within its fold the philosophers, the statesmen, and the thinkers, who are the leaders of the human race.

It is claimed that Catholicism "interpenetrates all the nations of the civilized world," and that "in some it holds the whole nation in its unity."

I suppose the Catholic church is more powerful in Spain than in any other nation. The history of this nation demonstrates the result of Catholic supremacy, the result of an acknowledgment by a people that a certain religion is too sacred to be examined.

Spain used the sword of the church. In the name of religion it endeavored to conquer the Infidel world. It drove from its territory the Moors, not because they were bad, not because they were idle and dishonest, but because they were Infidels. It expelled the Jews, not because they were ignorant or vicious, but because they were unbelievers. It drove out the Moriscoes, and deliberately made outcasts of the intelligent, the industrious, the honest, and the useful, because they were not Catholics. It leaped like a wild beast upon the Low Countries for the destruction of Protestantism. It covered the seas with its fleets, to destroy the intellectual liberty of man. And not only so—it established the Inquisition within its borders. It imprisoned the honest, it burned the noble, and succeeded after many years of devotion to the true faith, in destroying the industry, the intelligence, the usefulness, the genius, the nobility, and the wealth of a nation. It became a wreck, a jest of the conquered, and excited the pity of its former victims.

In this period of degradation, the Catholic church held "the whole nation in its unity."

At last Spain began to deviate from the path of the church. It made a treaty with an Infidel power. In 1782 it became humble enough, and wise enough, to be friends with Turkey. It made treaties with Tripoli and Algiers and the Barbary States. It had become too poor to ransom the prisoners taken by these powers. It began to appreciate the fact that it could neither conquer nor convert the world by the sword.

(To be continued.)

KEEP IT BEFORE THE PEOPLE.

The following is from what is perhaps the most famous speech ever delivered by Gen. U. S. Grant. It was made at a soldiers' reunion at Des Moines, Iowa, in 1876:

"In a republic like ours, where the citizen is the sovereign and the official the servant, where no power is exercised except by the will of the people, it is important that the sovereign—the people—should possess intelligence. The free school is the promoter of that intelligence which is to preserve us as a free nation. If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, in this centennial year of our existence, I believe it a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundation of the house commenced by our patriotic fathers one hundred years ago at Concord and Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the most perfect security of Freethought, free speech, and free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools and resolve that not one dollar of money appropriated to their support, no matter how raised, shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian school. Resolve that neither the state nor nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford every child growing up in the land the opportunity for a good common-school education unmingled with sectarian, pagan, or Atheistical tenets. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the church, and the private school, supported entirely by private contribution. Keep the church and state forever separate. With these safeguards, I believe the battle which created the Army of the Tennessee will not have been fought in vain."

CHARITY AND PIETY IN OLDEN TIMES.

Edmund Dudley, chancellor to Henry VII., says that the clergy disposed of "the profits and revenues of their benefyts as they by their own lawes are bound to do. It is one part thereof for their own lyvinge, the second in deedes of charitie, and ye thirde part thereof for the repaying and building of their churces."

According to Dunstan's "History of the Parish of Bromley, St. Leonard, Middlesex," in the church account of Tewkesbury, for the year 1578, there is a charge for the "Players Geers, six sheep skin for Christ's garments;" seven years later there is an order for "eight heads of haire for the apostles, and ten beards and a face for the Devil."

In the accounts of Winchester Cathedral in Catholic times, are the following and similar charges:

	£	s.	d.
For soldering and repairing St. Joseph.....	0	0	8
For cleaning and ornamenting the Holy Ghost.....	0	0	6
For repairing the Virgin Mary before and behind, and making a new Child.....	0	4	1
For screwing a Nose on the Devil, putting a new Horn on his head, and glewing a bit on his tail.....	0	5	6

Among the items in the list of disbursements for 1654 is this:

	£	s.	d.
Gave to a poor Minister which preached here for none and afternone.....	01	05	00

Two items in 1655 are:

	£	s.	d.
Given to a poor woman with child to get her out of the parish.....	00	00	06
Given to a sequestered Minister.....	00	01	00

Among the items in 1658 are these:

	£	s.	d.
Paid to Mr. Paul Knell (for preaching two sermons).....	00	00	00
Spent on him besides, 1 quart Wine.....	00	02	00

A little later appears the following:

	£	s.	d.
Given to a poor Gentlewoman big with child to get her gone.....	00	02	06

Among the items from 1671 to 1686 are these:

	£	s.	d.
Paid for making the stock and Whipping Post.....	02	17	00
Paid for a Hedge-hog.....	00	00	04
Paid for a robbery committed in the county of Middlesex.....	02	10	00
Gave widdo Ethredge, having a sore eye.....	00	01	00
Paid for passing the Fiddler.....	00	01	00

Among the grave-stone inscriptions in Bromley church yard is one of a virtuous old lady, and another of a sea captain:

"Mrs. Martha Wilson, who after a discreet and honorable widowhood of seven years, deceased on the 30th of December, 1812, aged 77 years."

"Here lieth interred the body of Mr. Wm. Dean, many years Captain of a Vessel in the Selby trade, who departed this life Sept. 2nd, 1788, aged 50 yrs."

"Blow, Boreas, blow! the Neptune's billows roar;
Here lies a Sailor buried Safe on shore;
Tho' Neptune's waves have tossed him to and fro,
By God's decree he's harbored here below.
He now at Anchor lies, amidst the Fleet, Waiting orders—Admiral Christ to meet."

—B. F. U. in the Boston Investigator.

*NOTE.—Mr. Dunstan explains this charge by stating that by a statute of Edward I., it was provided with respect to robberies, "that if the County would not answer for the bodies of such offenders, the people dwelling in the County should be answerable for the robberies done." In such cases a special rate was imposed on every parish.

Remarks Not Appropriate to Youthful Ears.

Rev. Charles Poundtext (who has been writing his sermon, looking up suddenly)—"Maria, will you take the children out of the room for a few minutes?"

Mrs. Poundtext (in surprise)—"Certainly, my dear. But—are they annoying you?"

Rev. Poundtext—"Not at all; but I have just dipped the mutilage brush in the ink-well, and I would like to be at liberty to make a few remarks."—Life.

SENTENTIOUS WISDOM.

"Does it ever occur to those people who advocate the "special providence" doctrine, and insist that "even the hairs of our heads are all numbered," what an immense amount of detail work must be imposed upon the Hair Department in heaven?

When I see a large city with a vast amount of money invested in churches, and not one single dollar invested in public baths, I am amazed at the folly of men running after things they know nothing about, and neglecting the simple and well-known means of preserving the public health.

If Christians are so anxious to follow the teachings of Christ, why not have suitable baths maintained in the basement of every church for the use of the congregation? They all admit that he washed his disciples' feet, and that he did it for an example; but if one is to trust his nose some of the faithful have not had their feet washed since.

It may be treason from an orthodox standpoint, but there is one human being in this world that wonders why it wouldn't be just as well for providence, which doesn't allow a sparrow to fall to the ground without his notice, to give some little attention as well to the bluebirds, thrushes, yellowbirds, wrens, robins, and swallows that are being murdered and driven out by these same pesky sparrows.

E. K. RAP.

From B. B. Rockwood.

To the Editors of Freethought:

You are publishing the spiciest little paper out, and, with little exception, I can indorse it all. We need each other's help, so let's use all our power on the enemy. Please find inclosed check for $5. I have been thinking for some time of sending my list of Gift Subscribers.

I am in hopes to see Mr. Putnam again on his round this winter, and wish you both abundant success in your laudable undertaking.

San Pasqual, Cal.

B. B. ROCKWOOD.

Mr. Munn Again.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Were it not that silence gives consent, the plowman would not waste time to reply to the sophistry of the learned George W. Chapman, M.D. ("M.D." means money down, as a matter of fact, I presume.)

I ask your readers to refer back to FREETHOUGHT for July 28, where they will see that Dr. Chapman quotes less than two lines of what he asserts to be Col. R. G. Ingersoll's speech on raw material and ignorance; said two lines omitting the qualifying words, "And sells it as such." Then the doctor fills over a half column with harsh criticism. I say harsh because Dr. Chapman's corner-stone is not true. There was a similar letter about the same time in the Chicago Express.

In FREETHOUGHT, August 25, I hastily wrote a rebuttal of G. W. Chapman's sophistry, asking him to give a reason why America should ship a bale of hides to Europe to receive back a side of leather. And the same principle applies to all hides, and pelts, wool, cotton, silver, and gold. The only reason that can be truthfully given is because England's aristocracy and the plutocracy of America have decreed it shall be so, that England, little England, but mighty in ambition, may bring the American mechanic and laborer to the low level of European serfdom, vassalage, and pauperism. Of course I made no reply to his campaign shouts, because every intelligent man ought to know that this national cry of free trade and protection is the cry of the demagogues who are in the employ of national and international Shylocks. This almighty cry, which Dr. Chapman seems so anxious to voice, as the champion of one wing, is not the real issue before the country, but a scape-goat to blind the people for fear they should open their eyes and brains and see that they have no circulating medium; that is to say, America has about one dollar to-day where it had ten twenty-four years ago, and most of what little circulating medium we have is locked up in the United States treasury or the unconstitutional national banks; and all this is according to the most infamous plot ever concocted by the Shylocks of free trade England—land of pauperism and crime—as their circular of twenty years ago, to American bankers, said (if not the exact words, the sense is this): "Make gold the only standard; destroy the people's paper money; demonetize silver, then we can govern American labor as we have that in many parts of Europe."

In FREETHOUGHT, Sept.-15, Dr. Chapman comes forward again. He wants to know if I can see his plug hat; it cost him $4—made in London, Eng. If made in New York it would have cost him the same price. In London its price is 10s. ($2.42½). He also says that he paid for his hat in wheat at 50c. per bushel, and if it were not for the tariff he could have bought four silk-nap plug hats in London with the same wheat that he gave for one in Kansas. The last plug hat I bought was purchased in Birmingham, England. It cost 10s 6d ($2.52). This was thirty-three years ago, proving that the same starvation prices are paid labor in free trade England now as then; and what gives me more sorrow is to say that in the Eastern states labor is no better paid than in the Southern or Northwestern states, in protected America.

Now suppose, friend Chapman, that your free trade party are elected next month, to power. Will that save the farms, or lift the mortgages on 97 per cent of the farms in some counties in Kansas? Not by any manner of means. It will be the same thing if the protectionists come into power. Nothing can save America from becoming a second Ireland except the people resolving that America shall be, in fact, governed by the people, and not by Shylocks who seek to set up class rule—a few to rule and own all, the masses to be slaves and vassals. America's labor, or her liberties, have never yet been protected except when the colonies threw off the yoke of oppression and fought the tyrant face to face, and even then the negro race did not count, because God and the Bible had fixed their status.

Hooper, Utah.

(Concluded next week.)

E. F. MUNN.

THE RETURN TRIP.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places returning from the East:

Washington.... Ind.,	Oct. 17-19	Spokane Falls..... "	" 14-16
Westfield,..... Ill.,	" 20-21	Davenport..... W. T.,	Nov. 17-19
Wahoo..... Neb.,	" 23-25	Sprague..... "	" 20-21
Denver..... Col.,	" 28	Pasco..... "	" 22-23
Ogden..... Utah,	" 30-31	Portland..... Or.,	" 25-26
Mt'n Home.... Idaho,	Nov. 2	Vancouver..... W.T.,	" 27-28
Boise City..... "	" 3-4	No. Yamhill..... Or.,	" 29-30
Emmetts..... "	" 5-6	Scappoose..... "	Dec. 2
Pendleton..... Or.,	" 8-9	Snohomish..... W.T.,	" 10
Walla Walla.... W. T.,	" 10-11	Stella..... "	" 8-9
		Silverton,..... Or.,	" 15-16

It is desirable to announce the remainder of the appointments at the earliest possible moment. Will friends who wish lectures write at once to S. P. Putnam, as above. Mr. Putnam will be in San Francisco during the month of January.

A NEWSPAPER reporter, who is still living, once got the better of Father Taylor. He came into church rather late, after the pews were all filled, and men were sitting on the pulpit stairs. Father Taylor saw him, and called out in a loud voice: "Come up here, McLean, and sit down on the sofa." McLean accepted the invitation, and it might be supposed that he was somewhat disconcerted when Father Taylor turned to him and said, "Now get up and pray, you sinner!" But nothing disconcerts a newspaper reporter. He arose unabashed and offered a very creditable prayer, in which, as he had been a sailor himself, he introduced suitable nautical phraseology, and concluded by commending to the mercy of heaven "this whole sinful crew, and especially the skipper!"

THE Popular Science Monthly for November will contain articles on "The Effects of Protection," by Charles S. Ashley; "Paleolithic Man in America," by W. J. McGee; "Altruism Economically Considered," by Charles W. Smiley; and "The Prolongation of Life," by C. M. Hammond. This monthly is one of the best of its class.

PROF. W. S. BELL, of Chicago, is arranging to lecture in Kansas, Texas, and Missouri in November after the election is over.

THE "Sabbath Imposture," a pamphlet by Harry Hoover, 10 cents per copy; six for 50 cents; fifteen for $1.00.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

LUCIFER THE LIGHT-BEARER.

DEVOTED TO THE

Frank and fearless discussion of basic principles in the field of governmental and social reform.

For more than eighteen months this paper and its publishers have been prosecuted in the courts by the agents of the Comstock Vice Society, for alleged violations of the U. S. postal laws.

Published weekly at Valley Falls, Kansas, at $1.25 per annum. Specimen copies free.

Miracles and Miracle Workers,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 10 cts.

Christian Absurdities,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 20 cts.

Both for sale at this office.

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question. Cloth, 75 cts. Address this office.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,

Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

...IN THE...

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

...FOR...

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER, Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" needed by all. Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE. A 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

he Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS, CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.
33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting. American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17
$18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4
being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best
14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest
style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies'
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $33.
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4 $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $3; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case.
Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1;
best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set
best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $3, $12.
Large field glasses, $3, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free.
BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
Badge in PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of cut and smaller
two-thirds size. War-
ranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2.75, $3.50. Large,
$3 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $3, $10; and
charms up to $25. De-
mand daily increasing.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert
G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion
in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author,
Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum
notes by Guizot, Wenck, Millman, "an English Church-
man," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages.
Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1.50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron
D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

F. SANGROVE, Merchant Tailor.

LATE OF LONDON AND PARIS,

All imported goods. Orders promptly attended. Prices moderate. Cleaning and repairing
neatly done.

Ladies' Cloaks and Riding Habits a Specialty.

F. SANGROVE, 104 FIFTH ST.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say
infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to
those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior
Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address:
Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San
Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS,
the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author.
Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 44.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal. as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - NOVEMBER 3, 1888

In the excitement over Minister West's letter the man through whose treachery a private communication was made public is lost sight of. One day, nevertheless, the scorn of mankind will transfix him.

No man by taking thought can add a cubit to his stature, but by taking FREETHOUGHT he may increase considerably the circumference of his intellect. The subscription price is $2 per annum, and after January 1, 1888, it will contain 16 pages.

THE claim of the agent of the Philadelphia Bible Society that in the past year fifty thousand Jews have been converted to Christianity, and that three thousand of these have entered the ministry, is rather too absurd to be credible. We have known of "converted" Jews, but they were always converts to Freethought.

A TRANSLATION of the four gospels by a French Catholic of Paris, with the sanction of the pope, reached a circulation last year of thirty editions. The Jesuits, however, placed the book in the Index Expurgatorius; the pope now sanctions the prohibition, and the work is practically suppressed. The incident raises the question whether infallibility rests with the pope or the Jesuits.

IN connection with a notice of Horace Seaver's new book the Ironclad Age characterizes the venerable author as "totally barren of originality, and never rising above the dead level of the commonplace—frequently feeble, hesitating, irresolute, and timid, and with an eye always steadfastly fixed upon the subscription book." We are sure that no other Liberal (genuine or professed) in this country shares Dr. Monroe's estimate of Horace Seaver.

THE Mormon church is bad enough, and so is every other church, and the institution of polygamy has everything against it, but can it be possible that such depravity as that described by Mrs. Newmann before the convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, exists in Utah? Mrs. Newmann has charge of the society's work among Mormon women, and in attacking Mormonism she told of two sisters, Mormon girls—one sixteen years old and the other fourteen years old—whom she saw in a squalid condition, both with babies in their arms, and both girls wives of their own father. Another case mentioned was that of a man who had married, besides a wife outside his family, his own mother, his grandmother, his daughter, and his grand-daughter. All these wives were living at the same time. If these things occur under Mormonism, it is a trifle worse than Catholicism. However, Mrs. Newmann should read 1 Corinthians vii, 36, revised version.

HARRY HOOVER's minority report of the Congress of the American Secular Union will be found in this issue. It belongs to the class of utterances which the writer generally lives to regret. It is an old trick for defeated candidates to allege fraud and "political methods" against their opponents, regardless of how much of the same tactics were employed by themselves. We do not believe that Mr. Hoover's protest, to use a mild term for his rather abusive diatribe, will particularly injure the American Secular Union or convince anybody that his charges are true. Due allowance must be made for the chagrin of defeat, and when this is done Mr. Hoover's report takes its proper place among the wails of the disappointed. We have for sale Mr. Hoover's able pamphlet on "The Sabbath Imposture," price 10 cents per copy; six for 50 cents; fifteen for $1.00.

NEWS AND NOTES.

EAST ROCHESTER.—Among the wooded hills and jeweled fields, where generous autumn smiles, I found a camping-ground and happy days and rest from wearisome travel. Here, the gentle Liberal Quaker spirit prevails; the genius of "the inner light" without the shadow of dogma. Jos. Coulsen was the first to greet with frankness and cordiality, and his hospitable mansion was open to the wayfarer. I expected to lecture on Monday night, but the floods came down in such a blizzard-like way that I remained indoors and let the thunder and rain have their own sweet will. However, there was entertainment within, and the evening was not lost. Miss Lizzie, daughter of the host, made music wing the hours, and Miss Emma Bashaw gave the soul of Delsarte, in beautiful renditions that bring smiles and tears, as passion, mirth, and sublimity touch the heart.

On Tuesday night the storm was not so fierce, and there were enough present in the school-house "around the corner" to make a meeting, and so I gave the lecture, "The Glory of Infidelity," which will win in spite of the orthodox weather. Friends came from quite a distance, and this little burg gave a greater audience than some far larger places under the same circumstances. Between the showers I went home with Enoch Wickersham, after arranging for a lecture on Wednesday night, if it cleared off. The lantern flung its light before us, and without accident we arrived at the big house where Mr. and Mrs. Wickersham take comfort, amidst broad acres. Wednesday was a changeable day. At one time the clouds sank heavily as if freighted with rain, then the blue sky would peer forth and the sunshine light up the landscape, and it was doubtful which would prevail, the storm king or bright Apollo. But the westering day flung the signals of hope far and wide over the glittering prospect. The clouds changed to masses of gold. The earth was like paradise, and evening shone with ranks of resplendent stars.

There was good attendance at the lecture, and so I leave East Rochester with sunshine crowning the storm.

John Sanor, Wm. Robbins, H. S. Bashaw, J. T. Johnson, Mrs. Fannie Freed, are among the friends of East Rochester, Hanover, and vicinity, and their welcome greetings make me want to come back to this land where silver spring and yellow autumn give their fairest wealth. One can be happy here, with solid comforts and genial skies.

Eli Taylor returned from a pleasure trip to Philadelphia and New York in time for the last lecture. I was glad again to see this hospitable veteran who believes in something new all the time.

At Alliance I just had time to jump off the cars and shake hands with R. G. Smith. As usual, I brought a storm. It snowed that day. Alliance is my fatal point. I never lectured there without a "frowning providence" of some kind or other. But friends keep things lively, rain or shine. Chas. Watts was on the field this time, and our colors are advanced.

PITTSBURGH CONGRESS.—J. H. Burnham, of Michigan, was the first of our "gathering clans" that I met on my way to the Congress. He was on the same train with me from East Rochester, although I didn't find it out until I was half way to Pittsburgh. I was delighted to meet with this sturdy champion, who could leave wealth and position to do battle for human rights. When we reached Pittsburgh all was activity. Mrs. Colman was there, Eugene Macdonald, Stevens of Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. Freeman, Robertson and Marlett; Redfield, of Iowa; Mr. and Mrs. L. Geiger, of New York; Dr. Juliet Severance, of Milwaukee; Dr. E. B. Foote, Jr., etc. I was plunged at once into a whirl of life so brilliant and exciting that I haven't had any time to write "News and Notes" until to-day, Oct. 18, as I am speeding over the Baltimore and Ohio railroad to my Western work again. The last fortnight lies in my mind like a bright and varied panorama—pictures of work and joy that I shall never forget. We have had an eventful Congress. Its influence will long be felt. I can only give sketches as things drift into view in a sort of dreamy atmosphere. The report of the proceedings has already been in the pages of FREETHOUGHT.

Our Pittsburgh friends did themselves honor with the beautiful and appropriate surroundings which they made for the place of gathering. Gorgeous flags swept the illuminated canopy. The names of illustrious Freethinkers shone among floral wreaths. Music mingled its enrapturing notes with these gay colors.

Mrs. Colman, seventy-one years of age, enjoyed the Congress like a little girl, fresh and happy always. She can fight if need be, but the flowers of peace are more welcome to her silvery brow. She was a gracious presence, bringing the lustre of the past to the promise and glory of the future.

Dr. Juliet Severance is an exhilarating speaker—strong and bright and kindling, a power to destroy apathy and make the fires of freedom glow. She voiced the thought of the hour with splendid and impetuous eloquence.

Mrs. Freeman's speech captivated the audience like a strain of music. It was one of the masterly addresses of the Congress. Her strength is wreathed in flowers of brilliant rhetoric. Flowing language, graceful delivery, wit, pathos, sublimity, are the charms of this attractive speaker.

J. H. Burnham, like a flame of fire, makes eloquence action. Energy and enthusiasm are the characteristics of his discourse. His address on "Organization" was a grand summons to duty.

W. S. Bell keeps right on to the mark. He swerves neither to the right nor to the left, and his audience does not linger either.

E. A. Stevens is laden with facts. He understands the wit of the situation and can place his facts in sparkling panoramic order.

Professor Crow is new to our platform, but the great West is in his heart and brain, and years of labor will make him an excellent pioneer.

Charles Watts is always effective, keen, and powerful, and when he undertakes to demolish some unfortunate orthodox editor who has put his foot in it, there is no foot left nor anything else except a smell of brimstone as the poor devil is ground to dust.

A rare treat it was to listen to Mrs. Watts's vivacious recitations. Mr. Watts is very good, but he has a "better half" who we hope will always attend the Congress of the American Secular Union. England could not send a more gracious gift. The muse of the drama will give its mirth and eloquence to our serious task. So we welcome this "Lady of the Isle" to whom orthodoxy has always been a tradition and Secularism a glowing life.

A. B. Bradford, who wears the mantle of Elizur Wright, has the heart of summer in the snows of age.

Thos. Douglass, John Downs, N. Eggleston, J. A. Bentley, Mr. and Mrs. L. Geiger; these bring the wealth of years to the rosy promise of to-morrow.

I was glad to meet Mrs. Lenont, of Northfield, Minn., whom I had known by correspondence. She sends love to the editor's wife, but I don't suppose the editor will give grace in return. Mrs. Lenont keeps our flag flying in an orthodox stronghold, where also Judge North, the founder of Northfield, has done excellent service. These valiant friends must give greeting via the pages of FREETHOUGHT.

My heart sang "Hail Columbia, Happy Land," when I beheld the brave Columbus delegation come marching in, colors flying. These are workers; Ralston, Montgomery, Saville, Mrs. Lyndall. The capital of Ohio will ever feel the throb of progress.

Smith & Sons, of Alliance, and Mrs. Rockhill are not "sunshine patriots" but can weather the storm. Good and true, it is a pleasure to meet these splendid friends.

G. Babson, of Nebraska, was on hand, and the Golden West couldn't send a better worker. Marius Heighton and A. D. Swan, of Kent, brought good news of work done—library, lectures, etc. I hope the example will be catching.

E. B. Foote, Jr., president of the Manhattan Liberal Club, has the faculty of saying the right thing at the right time. He must be a good doctor, for no one can better feel the pulse of a Congress.

Nixon and Cuthbert, of the State League, and the Beveridges and Byers, of Greensburg, know where the keystone of the arch belongs and they will keep it there for truth and liberty. Mr. and Mrs. Luse, of Waynesboro, old friends, again we greet. They are on the roll of honor, ever.

It was a good Congress, a strong Congress, a successful Congress. It has laid out grand work. More money was raised than ever before. There is more hope, more enthusiasm. A better selection of officers could not be made—noble standard-bearers, every one of them. Dr. Westbrook is worthy of the honor he has received, and an honor it is to be president of the only Freethought organization in this country. His book on the Girard will case is a bright, brave book, and shows the quality of the man, his power, his earnestness, his independence. It was a stroke of intuitive wisdom for the Congress to select this man for president.

Mr. Stevens's record has borne the brunt of criticism and stands clear and bright, a soldierly record—honorable, courageous, sincere, and effective. Congress could do no otherwise than re-elect this admirable worker.

Those who know Dr. Foote, Jr., know that beneath his gentle exterior are magnificent fighting qualities. Both at Albany and Washington he has made the enemy reel with decisive blows.

Otto Wettstein, the brilliant, keen, logical, writer, whose badge illustrates his splendid personality—for the blue sky of Freethought is ever in his ardent mind, and the night of superstition has forever passed—is a generous comrade, one to love and admire. Noble service he will do for the Union.

Mrs. Freeman is too well-known to need more words. Her fascinating oratory is the symbol of a warm heart and exalted mind.

The other officers are noble men and women, and represent a noble army of Freethinkers throughout the land.

Monday afternoon Anthony Barker and Harry Hoover guided a company of delegates through the vast, wonderful, weird, Plutonic iron machineries, where three thousand people work the massive ore out of crude darkness into shining implements of civilization. Standing before the hot, bursting, sheening floods I saw, amid those streams of fire, pictures of progress, happy homes, the romance of love, the glory of human intelligence, the magnificence of science. It was an inspiring scene, darkness and light clashing with each other in gigantic struggle, furious combat, and amid it all the deft hand of man creating delight, the land of felicity, the garden of the world. Thus Freethought goes on toiling with dark and terrible forces, but with breath of fire, and swift, compelling stroke it makes the rude, crude material glow to resplendent forms.

Monday evening was a festival occasion. The flags waved in multitudinous splendor and stars shone along the lustrous roof. The music was ravishing. The gay company went marching on amid purple lights and yellow lights, and crimson lights and red lights and blue lights—a glad, handsome company, eyes sparkling, feet thrilling with melody and ready for the "poetry of motion." It was a sweet, delightful, animating, scene. I was so tired out that I couldn't dance, but my heart beat with every strain of the glorious music. Good-bye, Pittsburgh, and if forever, then forever fare thee well.

I want to call attention to Truth, a paper published monthly by comrade Pierce. It is a plucky little paper. Orthodoxy is in the ascendant at Pittsburgh and forbids one to buy a cigar on Sunday, or a glass of soda water, or to get shaved, though the churches go right on shaving the people as usual, an orthodox privilege that no Sabbath law has ever yet interfered with. I hope that Truth will keep right on and Pierce the orthodox mail with shafts of editorial light.

NEW YORK AND THE LIBERAL CLUB.—There is no city like New York, so grand, so beautiful, shining, with its million lights, across the waters, a paradise to me more glorious than the New Jerusalem. What wealth of joy, of beauty, of art, of nature, of life, of passion, is in this tumultuous metropolis! From Jersey City side I looked upon its queenly magnificence with the heart of a lover. River and sea and island do homage to its tiara of a myriad stars. This is the epitome of the new world. Every industry, every art, every thought is here.

The Manhattan Liberal Club, we might say, is the epitome of New York. It is a representative institution. Here the bright intellects do congregate, and all the cranks. Every idea gets its chance. There is not a better educational arena in the world. Horace Greeley was once its president, Stephen Pearl Andrews was its many-sided genius, and T. B. Wakeman its Positivist and integral guide. The philosopher, the poet, the politician, and the priest have all said their say. Liberty has been the law to each. A deep, wide influence has gone forth from this intellectual centre.

I spoke on the "Reign of the People." Belva Lockwood was present and gave us a piece of her mind, and very bright and entertaining it was. She would probably make as good a president as any of the candidates. She is a good talker and can hold her own with any lawyer or politician in the land. Dr. Gunn, Mrs. Cynthia Leonard—candidate for mayor—Captain Clark, Dr. Weeks, and other old-time stars of the platform, were on hand, and "the man with the badge pin" would have found an excellent opportunity for reporting. I was glad to meet, on this familiar ground, our friends Mr. I. Rosenbrough, W. C. Kidney, Mrs. Macdonald, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, and E. W. Chamberlain. The thoughts of "auld lang syne" mingled with greetings and hopes. All inquired after "George," and sent benedictions to the Golden Gate.

I lectured before the Newark Liberal League on Sunday. W. P. Blythe, president, friends Gorman, Avery, and others, keep the citadel. This League has always done good work, and still keeps at it. Newark is overshadowed with orthodoxy. The Law and Order society are having a high time. You can't buy a decent meal on Sunday. A good lunch is a heresy. Solemnity and dyspepsia reign—the cardinal virtues of ecclesiastical morality. I hope better things of Newark hereafter. The League here has plenty of work on hand to preserve the American Sunday and liberty.

THE HOME OF INGERSOLL.—This is the Mecca of the world-wandering pilgrim, where the brightness of Freethought becomes a golden charm; where the poet's dream is a reality which the "star of Bethlehem" can never make. Here art and beauty reign, and simple humanity, and glorious nature. Here is the man who makes the Bible of to-day; the hope and aspiration of the progressive mind. Here is the genius of gracious hospitality to every honest thought, to every honest doubt, to labor, and to struggle. Here greatness is expressed with the simplicity of a child; and wisdom comes in the glow of genial wit. In the lowliest home there could be no more helpful sympathy, in the most royal there could be no more radiant delight. To be at this home is like being among groves and brooks and the mountains, and catching glimpses of the great sea. It is like being beneath the open sky, so broad and generous and healthful and happy is the spirit of its charming circle. To see Ingersoll is to have courage renewed, and hope made brighter, and toil nobler; this man who touches all life with the heart of a woman and the intellect of a god. Visiting this home, memory becomes a "Golden Treasury" for many a long voyage, and sunshine will ever linger amid the darkest storm.

LARCHMONT MANOR.—This is the home of Dr. Foote, by the beautiful, the magnificent, Long Island sound. I think it about the most lovely place in the world. The view over the waters—ever changing with the coming and going tide—the far shimmering shores, and glittering isles that seem to float in liquid splendor along the blue and white and golden sky; the passing of the great steamers, the thousand ships, white-winged, basking in the sun or flying like the birds; the near shores elegant with all that art and wealth can give; the groves, the uplands, the fields, the houses with every variety of architecture; the parks, the beautiful highways; these make infinite variety. There cannot on this planet be a more harmonious mingling of wildness, sublimity, grandeur, loveliness, elegance, and gaiety than at Larchmont. If anybody deserves the cream of life it is Dr. Foote. He has been a brave, hard worker for humanity, for truth, and freedom. Secretary Stevens and myself had a most pleasant visit with him Saturday night and Sunday morning. Sunday morning, in the misty weather, we rode over to Paine's monument at New Rochelle. Great and solemn memories of our world's hero swept over the kindling mind as we stood before the marble slab upon which are the immortal messages of liberty, of reason, and of progress.

I have to record, with gratification, that Dr. Foote has a horse, "Sam," named after myself. They say he is a reliable animal, and a good traveler. I hope I shall be worthy of my namesake. Time will tell. I am proud of the distinction. I love horses, and if I can do as good a work as this horse, "Sam," then I have not lived in vain. Of course I saw the editor of the Truth Seeker. We bunked together at Pittsburgh, came home together with Mrs. Colman and Mrs. Watts. The day was beautiful and the ride over the mighty mountains, in the gorgeous sunlight, was entrancing beyond description. In New York we found several occasions to dine together. Mr. and Mrs. Watts were with us. George Chainey occasionally floated in, with far-away look and vegetable diet. For a few brief days philosophy and poetry ruled the universe, and life was like the bead of sparkling wine.

The last evening of my stay, Wednesday, I called upon Mr. VanDeusen, the author of "The Future Republic of North America," in which are the seed thoughts of that brilliant novel, "Looking Backwards." This is a work for every one to read, who dreams of human happiness, who believes that things can be made better than they are. Mr. VanDeusen writes from a vivid experience. By hard work he has accumulated a great fortune. But nothing dims his enthusiasm or lessens his generous humanity. He does not believe in living for one's self, but for all the world. His home is simply beautiful, and there is always a cordial welcome for Freethought.

The "boys" at the Truth Seeker office do flourish, and inquire after the Pacific Coast editor. They send best wishes, and will give him a hearty welcome at the "old stand."

Among good friends who have made my brief journey in this metropolis a delight long to be remembered, are Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Farrell, of the Ingersoll household; Newton Baker, the colonel's stenographer, every inch a man and Freethinker; Peter Eckler, publisher of Gibbon's "History of Christianity," and "Voltaire's Romances," a noble enthusiast; "Eudorus," one of the Dartmouth boys along with me, and now on Wall street with the "bulls" and "bears;" N. Powers, once a brilliant Unitarian minister but to-day a man of business, too Liberal for the church and too earnest to trust in prayer. In fact, time, with its many enjoyments, fled so fast that I came within an ace of missing the train, and didn't have time to say good-bye to Eugene, who undoubtedly sent a blessing after my flying steps as I leaped on board the rushing ferry boat, my face again to the Occident.

Reading the last FREETHOUGHT, I find that our friends of Anaheim, L. and K. Parker, have passed their golden wedding day. Happy and beautiful palace of love, where only music is heard, and the long years make a wreath of stainless glory! Fare ye well, friends! Press on to the diamond dew of illustrious age, and youth shall be yours again in dreams and hopes that cannot die.

Just as I reach Chicago I receive a letter from Miss Orlie Saunders informing me of the death of her grandfather, Calvin H. Saunders, Sept. 29, aged seventy-one years, at Portland, Or. Friend Saunders was one of the gentlest, sweetest of men, yet as staunch as the eternal hills. A brave Freethinker, he was, a kind husband, father, friend, a delightful companion a broad genial philosopher, always at work for humanity and progress. His age was fresh with hope, beautiful as morning. The spirit of youth was in his eye, his voice, his smile. Beautiful friend, vanished only in thine outward form, still real in thought's immortal realm, and deathless to affection's gaze! We cannot obliterate death, but we will make it sweet with flowers and noble memories. Dark and blind in nature's course, to our humanity it shall be an impulse to life and consecration. Amid our tears, our sorrows, the virtues of the beloved shall be more dear, and more exalted; a sublime influence in the eternal toil and struggle of the race.

Chicago, Oct. 19, 1888.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

ATHEISTS AS CITIZENS.

Sometime in 1886 one Nathaniel Jarvis, clerk of the naturalization bureau in New York, refused citizenship to a Bohemian named Robitscheck on the admission of the applicant that he was an Atheist. The case caused considerable discussion at the time, and Mr. Jarvis was forced to accept the declaration of the irreligious Bohemian. That Mr. Robitscheck, although an Atheist, is a worthy candidate for citizenship, is shown by his record, which has not been marred by any overt act against the people of the country and their dignity. On the other hand, the pious Mr. Jarvis who objected to an Atheist as a fellow-citizen, was, at or about the time of this writer's departure from New York, undergoing an investigation for irregularity in the financial management of his office.

The next case of the kind to come under public notice occurred in Philadelphia, where Judge Arnold, of the Court of Common Pleas, declined to naturalize a Hungarian who said he did not believe in a deity of any kind. In rendering its decision the court spoke learnedly and grammatically as follows:

"We don't want any more Infidels in this country. There is enough in it as it is."

How Judge Arnold ever attained the judicial bench is a marvel, and that he is retained there after this decision would be a scandal in any state that had not already disgraced itself by allowing religion to be taught in a college from which the will of its founder especially excluded all superstition.

But there are other judges as bigoted and idiotic as Arnold. According to the Troy, N. Y., Evening Standard, Judge Fursman, of that city, not long ago refused to naturalize a man because he differed with him in his religious views.

The remarks of Colonel Ingersoll upon the first of these three cases are applicable to them all. According to these decisions, says the colonel, "neither Humboldt nor Darwin could have become a citizen of the United States. Wagner, the greatest of musicians, not being able to take an oath, would have been left an alien. Under this ruling Haeckel, Spencer, and Tyndall would be denied citizenship—that is to say, the six greatest men produced by the human race in the nineteenth century were and are unfit to be citizens of the United States. Those who have placed the human race in debt cannot be citizens of this republic. On the other hand, the ignorant wife-beater, the criminal, the pauper raised in the workhouse, would be welcomed."

Among others who are welcomed and made the especial pets of our statesmen are the Roman Catholic emigrants, who, while exercising the rights of American citizens, still maintain unre-nounced their allegiance to that pretender to temporal sovereignty, the pope of Rome. But the question that is bound to come more and more prominently before the American people is, whether the subjects of Rome, any more than the subjects of other powers and principalities, are to be admitted to American citizenship, without forswearing allegiance to all foreign rulers, while men who recognize no higher power than their own consciences and the Constitution of the United States are rejected as unworthy to become citizens of this republic.

WOMAN'S DESIRE TO VOTE.

The Duke of Argyll is accredited with saying that "a woman has no right to appear upon a platform except when she is about to be hung—then it is unavoidable." There are a few women who have rebelled against this sentence, who think that the freedom of the scaffold and the equality of the gallows is not enough, and who demand "a swing at life as well as at death."

A correspondent of one of our city papers has gathered together the replies of about thirty prominent women to the question, "Would you vote if granted that privilege?" The first on the list is Grace Greenwood, who not long ago joined a symposium of writers reviewing the Ingersoll-Gladstone discussion. She is a Christian, but she says:

"Would I vote if I could? Yea, verily, at divers times and in divers places, to make up for my long political disability. I think that for the first presidential election after my tardy enfranchisement I would wield the franchise with the patriotic prodigality of a newly-landed Hibernian, casting my vote right and left from 'early morn to dewy eve.'"

This is not encouraging to those who think women would use the ballot judiciously; but it is better that one should abuse a right than that many should be denied its exercise. Mrs. Susan Wallace, wife of Gen. Lew Wallace, the author of "Ben Hur" and "Ben Harrison," writes frankly:

"If the right were mine I should hold it a duty and a pleasure to go to the polls and vote."

Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher is more evasive, and reduces the question to a hypothetical one as follows:

"If suffrage were given me, I certainly should not go to the polls without my husband's company. Had that right been given me before he was taken from me, it is not necessary for me to say what I should have done."

Marion Harland, the accomplished cook, replies snappishly:

"Under no circumstances would I exercise the right of suffrage were it possible for me to do so. No, no! I do not wish to vote, and I hope the day may be far distant when my sex is given the lawful right to do so."

Edith M. Thomas, the poet, does not know what she would do; and Lucy Larcom, another rhymist, says it would depend "upon what was to be voted for." Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the Poet of Passion, has no time to devote to politics, there is so much to do at home. Jennie June, the well-known newspaper correspondent, thinks that women should have an equal chance with men, but does not believe in all men or all women voting. Adeline D. T. Whitney, who produces that undesirable kind of literature, the religious novel, hopes she will never be called upon to vote. Woman's sphere, as she conceives it, is internal, not external, and she would not wish that order turned inside out. Dr. Mary Putnam Jacobi, a prominent woman suffragist of New York, would vote on all occasions when not distinctly opposed to all the candidates for election. Rose Terry Cooke is satisfied with the apostle Paul's definition of woman's sphere. Sarah Orne Jewett says:

"Since only the matter of a general representation, and not a certain degree of intelligence and knowledge of the care of property are considered in the matter of deciding upon public questions which concern women as well as men, I believe that common justice gives woman the right to vote."

Mary Mapes Dodge, editor of St. Nicholas, is not worrying about the matter, but if woman suffrage should come she would "recognize the obligations involved."

Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, the writer, replies reprovingly:

"Should I exercise the right of suffrage if I had it? I certainly should think I ought to do so."

Augusta Evans Wilson pushes the sceptre from her with no feeble hand, thus:

"Under no imaginable circumstances would I go to the polls or exercise the right of voting. American women enjoy without restraint every civil, social, ethical, and intellectual right compatible with feminine delicacy and refined Christian womanhood, and to invite them into the arena of politics would prove subversive of all domestic quietude, loosen the ties that link them to their true kingdom, the home hearth, and prove as disastrous to harmonious social order as did the 'Wooden Horse' to the households of Troy. 'Woman's right to vote' would involve the forfeiture of woman's privilege of commanding the reverence and deferential homage of mankind."

Mary L. Booth is for woman's rights because it would put woman on an equality with men in the labor market. Lucy Stone would "most certainly vote if she had the right to do so." Kate Sanborn speaks nobly:

"For the sake of other women who have wrongs to right, and to exert an influence in the direction of progress and reform, I should go to the polls and vote. Interested in all topics of the time—education, religion, politics, the liquor question, social purity (with one standard for both sexes)—I should gladly endure a little discomfort or criticism for the privilege of declaring my convictions by a vote."

Christine Terhune Herrick would vote from sense of duty, but not from choice. Frances E. Willard, the recently re-elected president of the W. C. T. U., confidentially answers, "Yes." Elizabeth P. Peabody believes in the right of woman suffrage, and exercises it in the Boston school elections. Louise Chandler Moulton does not desire to see women get outside their sphere, and would vote only from a sense of duty. Olive Thorne Miller would feel called upon to vote in order that the intelligence of the country might be represented. Elizabeth Akers hits the nail on the head with these spirited remarks:

"I do not admit that any man, or body of men, can 'extend to me the right' of self-government. That 'right,' like the right to breathe, is already as much woman's as man's; he simply denies her the chance to exercise it. Should opportunity arise, I should most certainly vote—not as a privilege graciously granted by my masters, but as a right and a duty."

Celia Thaxter would not vote. Julia C. R. Dorr will do so when the voice of the commonwealth calls her daughters to the polls. Emma D. E. N. Southworth says she "would not go to the polls and vote if suffrage were extended to women," which future poll clerks will be glad to learn. Mrs. Winfield S. Hancock is worthy of quotation entire:

"I have always been in favor of equalizing life's chances to a greater extent than now exists between man and woman, and if the use of the ballot can be made the instrument to bring about a more uniform scale of services and compensation, I, for one, say, let us have it."

Likewise Mary A. Livermore:

"Would I vote? Bless your heart! I do vote every year, as by the laws of Massachusetts I am allowed to vote for school committee. It is but a crumb from the loaf, the whole of which belongs to me. Nevertheless, I bravely deposit my beggarly and semi-pauperized vote, and then, like Oliver Twist, reach up my hand for 'more.'"

The majority of intelligent women are decidedly in favor of voting. Mrs. Elizabeth Akers's argument cannot be answered, i.e., that men and women came upon earth at the same time and with equal rights, which they possess to-day, though men, through brute force and religious and political superstition, deprive women of the opportunity to exercise their right. Women have the right to vote, and the fact that some of them refuse to exercise it, or even deny the possession of it, does not alter the situation in the least.

THE WORK THIS WINTER.

We have made arrangements for a series of lectures in this city during next January, filling all the Sundays of the month. S. P. Putnam will be the speaker.

In conjunction with the lectures the Paine celebration will be held on the 29th.

It is desired, also, during this time to organize a California State Secular Union, and we would like to hear from those who wish to co-operate in the movement. Preliminary work must be done. It would be well if all interested would communicate their sentiments to FREETHOUGHT, so that the sense of the Liberals of the state may find expression.

THE EXPENSE.

The hall rent for the meetings in January, including all the Sundays, and Monday and Tuesday, the 28th and 29th, will amount to $112. In default of assistance from other quarters, this expense will fall upon Putnam & Macdonald. No doubt there are others who would willingly share the burden. Let us, therefore, open a subscription list.

Pledges and contributions toward the Meeting Fund will be received at this office and duly acknowledged in FREETHOUGHT. It is not too early to begin at once.

THE MINISTERS AND THE TRAMPS.

The Congregational Club of ministers some time ago discussed a paper read by a member, entitled, "City Tramps, and How to Get Rid of Them." One clergyman, named Dinsmore, described a tramp as a man who prefers to beg his bread rather than to work and earn it. Tramps, he said, were a great nuisance, and he wished to propose a plan to drive them out of the city. He would have a building erected and supplied with facilities for feeding and lodging tramps, and also provided with cordwood, saws, sawbucks, and hatchets, so that the applicants might work up wood enough to pay for their keeping.

Another minister said the plan was neither feasible nor desirable, as men who wouldn't work should not be helped. The Rev. Mr. Wykoff recommended the chain-gang. The Rev. Mr. Benson said a law making begging a misdemeanor was the proper and most wholesome remedy. The Rev. Dr. Noble said the strong arm of the law must take the tramps in hand. The Rev. Dr. Beckwith said he had sometimes given bread to the beggar, but had discontinued the practice. Let them work or starve. Other clergymen gave their views of the question; but beyond doubt those of the Rev. Joseph Rowell were the most striking if not the most inhuman. This charitable person recommended that tramps be sent to the workhouse for six months. They should be herded and made to labor, and when they had been sent up the second time they should be deprived of the power of propagation, like oxen.

The utterances of the clergy show that because a man is a preacher he is not necessarily a humanitarian; and when these gentlemen are examined on their record for clothing the naked and feeding the hungry, they will make a poor showing. But the most interesting problem connected with their discussion of the tramp question is this: If the clergymen who recommend the jail, the workhouse, the chain-gang, and the surgeon's knife for the tramp had been in power in Palestine eighteen hundred years ago, what fate would most probably have overtaken Jesus Christ and his disciples?

CALIFORNIA makes a good showing, comparatively, among the contributors to the funds of the American Secular Union. The Freethinkers of this state are upon the roll of honor with over $150—a sum exceeded only by the contributions from New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, either of which states has more than thrice her population. Oregon is not far behind, and with her $147 is fourth on the list. When we consider that the population of Oregon is not much above 200,000 this makes a remarkably good showing. If every state should do as well as these two the subscription would have been nearly $20,000.

The West will continue to lead the way in good works, and will wait patiently for the rest of the procession.

It is quite evident that the revised version of the New Testament is not popular among the readers of FREETHOUGHT, as several have written us that 1 Corinthians, vii, 36, as quoted by M. E. C. Farwell in our issue of October 13, is not in the Bible. The verse as revised by the committee and published in the New Testament, revised edition, reads as follows: "But if any man thinketh he behaveth unseemly toward his virgin daughter, if she be past the flower of her age, and if need so requireth, let him do what he will; he sinneth not; let them marry." There is Christian morality for you!

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places returning from the East:

M't'n Home...	Idaho, Nov.	2	Pasco.....	W. T.	"	22-23
Boise City.....	"	3-4	Portland.....	Or.,	"	25-26
Emmetts.....	"	5-6	Vancouver.....	W. T.,	"	27-28
Pendleton.....	Or.,	8-9	No. Yamhill.....	Or.,	"	29-30
Walla Walla.....	W. T.,	10-11	Scappoose.....	"	Dec.	2
Spokane Falls.....	"	14-16	Snohomish.....	W. T.,	"	10
Davenport.....	W. T., Nov.	17-19	Stella.....	"	"	15-16
Sprague.....	"	20-21	Silverton.....	Or.,	"	22-23

It is desirable to announce the remainder of the appointments at the earliest possible moment. Will friends who wish lectures write at once to S. P. Putnam, as above. Mr. Putnam will be in San Francisco during the month of January.

W. F. JAMIESON, who will shortly commence his lecture tour in the northwest, will receive subscriptions for FREETHOUGHT, the Truth Seeker, and New Thought. His address is Monte Vista, Colorado.

PROF. D. C. SEYMOUR, who has just forwarded the name of his twenty-fourth subscriber to this office, will shortly be in California, where he will continue on the trail. The rains have made the weather in the north too moist for lecturing purposes.

CHARLES WATTS intends making a lecture tour through Kansas, Colorado, and Utah next January and February. Friends on those routes desiring lectures at that time from Mr. Watts should write him at once, as he is now filling up his list of engagements. Address him direct, 282 Sumach street, Toronto, Ont., Canada.

COLONEL THISTLETON has left with us a few bound volumes of his "Jolly Giant," an illustrated weekly, published in San Francisco ten years ago. The volumes will be sent by mail to any address for $2 each.

MR. JOHN B. MCINTYRE, book-binder and candidate for recorder, is, we understand, a Presbyterian, but as the young ladies in his employ fold FREETHOUGHT and other religious papers with equal skill it is probable that he is free from sectarian prejudices.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

A dispatch from Heidelberg, Germany, says that J. C. Flood is getting better.—The women candidates for school-directors are making an active canvass.—During the past week Mr. Pixley has retired from the American Committee and joined it again. He is running for Congress.—The Hebrew Ladies' Sewing Society is working for the Dakota sufferers.—The paper mills of S. P. Taylor & Co. at Taylorville were gutted by fire last Sunday. Loss, $10,000. Messrs. Taylor manufacture the paper upon which these lines are printed.—There was a $1,500 fire in the residence of the Rev. J. E. Hopper at Sacramento on the 28th ult.—In consequence of his defeat by Professor McAuliffe, Professor Conley, the "Ithaca Giant," announces his intention of retiring from the pugilistic forum.—An association for the Propagation of Volapuk has been organized in San Francisco. Considerable interest is manifested in the movement.—Two of willing-to-be Mayor O'Donnell's constituents got into a row last Sunday over the proper tune for a campaign song, and were locked up by the police. Dr. O'Donnell bailed them out.—Captain William Blanding, the well-known Mexican war veteran, died at his home in this city at about 10 o'clock Saturday morning, aged 70.—The Examiner reports, with what truth it is unknown, that Col. R. G. Ingersoll, Gen. Martin T. McMahon, and Gen. Roger A. Pryor, council for Mrs. James G. Blaine, Jr., are about to begin a suit at the instance of their client against her husband's parents, James G. Blaine and Mrs. Blaine, for damages in the sum of $100,000, for alienating her husband's affections. Young Mrs. Blaine does not sue for divorce, as she is a rigid Catholic.—Two Salvation Army lassies were taken in custody the other day by the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children. They belonged to the Oakland army and came to San Francisco on an immoral spree.—An election held on the 27th ult. to straighten the northern boundary of the city of Oakland was carried for the measure by a majority of two votes.—A good many remanded Chinese have re-embarked for the Flowery Kingdom.

The mayor of Decatur, Ala., issues the following: "To the people of the country: We are supplying 600 destitute white people and a thousand colored, and we are now out of supplies. We appeal to the charitable people of the whole country for assistance next three weeks.—The official bulletin shows the new cases of small-pox at Jacksonville, Fla., to number 15, of which 6 are whites; deaths, 3; total cases to Oct. 28, 4,950; total deaths, 348.—The suffering of Dakota farmers from drouth is not so great as at first reported. The members of the Jewish settlement have been relieved by their fellow-countrymen and co-religionists.—It is said that the Navajo Indians on the reservation in New Mexico have laid in a supply of whisky and are assuming a threatening attitude toward adjacent settlers.—Members of a bagging trust in Tennessee have been indicted by the grand jury at Memphis. The indictments charge them with unlawfully agreeing and conspiring to buy all the bagging in the market and outputs of mills for several months, and advance prices to double what they were before.—Mrs. John A. Logan is to assume the editorship of a new monthly magazine to be issued in November.—There is a split in the Women's Christian Temperance Union caused by the late convention attaching itself to the Prohibition party.—A letter from British Minister West to a correspondent in Pomona, Cal., touching the attitude of the administration toward Great Britain is causing a great deal of discussion, and may lead to Mr. West's recall.—A dispatch from Boston, dated Oct. 27, says: An Episcopal clergyman of the Established church of England was to-day a prisoner before Commissioner Hallett, charged with selling liquor without a United States license. Three cases of lager beer and considerable hard liquor were found under his bed, and witnesses were on hand to swear that they bought and paid for liquid refreshments served from that room by a pretty barmaid. Rev. Henry Gillfillan has been in this country about six months, and has preached in East Boston nearly every Sunday. He has an unmistakable clerical air, and is quite a favorite with the ladies of his congregation, who are greatly taken with his heavy black mustache, handsome black eyes, and fresh, rosy cheeks.—Thirteen whaling vessels are frozen up in the Arctic sea with a poor prospect of getting out.—The Universalist church General Convention met in Chicago last week.—The total number of voters registered in New York city is 286,547.—Four years ago P. T. Barnum offered to sell all his property for 25 per cent of its value if Cleveland was elected. He did not sell out, but now renews his offer if the same political event is repeated.

The impression is that the London Times is making out a weak case against Parnell.—Riots in Ireland between Orangemen and Nationalists.—Three elegantly dressed foreign ladies drowned themselves the other day in the lake in which King Ludwig of Bavaria committed suicide.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

R. B. WESTBROOK, LL.D., PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary.....241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treasurer.....Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com.....120 Lexington ave., New York
MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com.....106 So. Halsted st., Chicago

PRESIDENT WESTBROOK'S ACCEPTANCE.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 11, 1888.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION, Friends and Patriots: When informed of my election to the presidency of your institution, I promptly telegraphed my answer as follows: "Regarding the American Secular Union as an organization for the protection and promotion of the principle implied in its name, and not for the advancement of any dogma or religious belief or disbelief, I cordially accept its presidency, unanimously tendered me, and publicly pledge myself to resist all encroachments of sacerdotalism, whether papal or puritan." It only remains for me now to thank the members of the Union for this token of their confidence, and to promise the utmost firmness and diligence in maintaining the Demands of Liberalism, which I prefer to call the demands of simple justice, and honest conformity to the Secular principle upon which our government was founded. Respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD B. WESTBROOK.

To care of E. A. STEVENS, Sec. Am. Sec. Union.

A MINORITY REPORT.

From the Ironclad Age.

I am not aware of the fact that when a battle (either political or secular) has been fought and decided the vanquished are expected to get up a ratification meeting, throw up their hats, and shout, "Long live King Stork!" Whatever may have been the opinion of myself and friends regarding the management of the XIIth Annual Congress of the A. S. U., we, for the sake of peace, refrained from open revolt against the same, and quietly submitted to a verdict obtained by worse than "the usual political methods." My silence would have continued unbroken but for the fact that insult has been added to injury by a contemptible caricature, mis-called a report of the Secular Union Congress, which appeared in the so-called Truth Seeker. There are a number of passages in that report that I cannot permit to go unchallenged, lest silence be construed into consent.

Mr. Macdonald says: "The Pittsburghers thought that Chicago was trying to run the universe, helped along by New York and abetted by San Francisco." Yes, that is true. But he did not tell what made us think so. I will supply the deficiency. The "slates" for the IXth, Xth, and XIth Congresses were made up and railroaded through by Macdonald, Putnam, and Stevens. Last spring I wrote to Mr. Stevens with reference to holding the next Congress at Pittsburgh; he replied, "there is no need of haste," and before the ink was dry he issued a "call" to take the Congress to San Francisco, and sent it to the directors to be signed. Failing in this scheme, he exclaimed, "I don't care a d—n for Pittsburgh;" and later, when it was decided to hold the Congress at Pittsburgh, he said, "I do not propose to have any one go down there to sit on the fence or kick up a muss."

Now, what but a disposition to "run things" could have inspired such language? This view is confirmed by his declaration, on the platform at Pittsburgh, "If I am elected I will run things." As to Putnam, I call the attention of the reader to an editorial in FREETHOUGHT of June 23. It says: "A majority vote is of very little avail with us." Just so; every Congress since Cassadaga has been conducted on that assumption. "The Congress cannot rule; it can simply express." Indeed! Most people labor under the impression that a congress is a legislative body. But it seems that its function is simply that of a ratification meeting, to express the sentiments of its masters. Later on, at the Congress, he played the anaconda thus: "The Secular Union is not a machine for authority. It cannot be run on the old ecclesiastical methods." And then he proceeds to swallow it whole. He concludes his address as follows: "The first business before the Congress is the appointment of a Committee on Credentials: I appoint E. A. Stevens, Wm. Redfield, and F. A. Pierce." It never entered the realm of his imagination to ask, "What is the pleasure of the Congress?" but it did occur to him to appoint as chairman of that committee a man who was seeking re-election; second, a zealous partisan of that same candidate, and third, a man supposed to be "fixed" in the interests of that candidate. That this committee was appointed for a purpose was soon made manifest by its action. A gentleman, without credentials, from the Indian Territory, and another from Michigan, were reported as entitled to vote, while another from Michigan received this, Mr. Stevens's ultimatum, "No, I'll be G—d—d if I am going to have outsiders coming here to cut my throat." Comment is superfluous.

The Committee on Rules and Resolutions was appointed exclusively by Mr. Stevens's partisans, he being a member of the committee himself. The animus of this appointment was shown when the committee reported that "where a single delegate represents a Union, said delegate be permitted to cast the five votes of said Union;" and yet the editor of the Truth Seeker is not too modest to say, "A motion from the Pittsburghers to admit proxies was voted down." The truth is that we claimed that if one delegate at large were admitted all others ought to be. We did not ask that annual members be permitted to vote, yet we thought it strange that the same parties who insisted on it at Chicago last year should violently oppose it at Pittsburgh this year.

The Committee on Nominations consisted of four of Mr. Stevens's friends and one of mine. The result is easily foreseen.

The presiding officer's violent partisan bias was conspicuous throughout the Congress by his utterly ignoring motions that did not suit him, and his springing eagerly forward to the verge of the rostrum and calling for "seconds" to motions that did suit him. He even went so far as to make a stump speech in favor of his favorite candidate for secretary as the ballot was about being taken for that office.

Again, our "Truthful Gene" says: "Most of the delegates had received at their homes letters asking them to vote for Mr. Hoover." Answer: Not a word of it true. "Mr. Stevens's advocate was a silent one—his record." A silent one, indeed! Those who heard Mr. Putnam's opening speech, Mrs. Freeman's report, and Mr. Stevens's own report will remember that the backbone of each was a fulsome laudation of Mr. Stevens and his wonderful achievements.

"Mr. Charles Watts gave Mr. Hoover an opportunity to gracefully withdraw by asking the candidates whether, in the event of their election, they would serve." True; but was Mr. Hoover under any moral obligation to avail himself of that magnanimous offer? How about Stevens? It will be recollected that just here Mr. Stevens vehemently demanded that a certain "resolution"—passed at Chicago, condemning Mr. Barker for nominating Mr. Hoover—be read, or he would not accept the office. The resolution was not read, but he accepted all the same.

As to my withdrawing from the contest, that opportunity was open to me from the very moment Mr. Putnam became aware of my candidacy; he at once demanded that I withdraw. And when I asked him if he and Stevens held a mortgage on the A. S. U., and if so why was it deemed necessary to hold an election every year, he replied that he had worked for the A. S. U. four years, and, "if I can't have my way now I'll be G—d—d if I don't kill the d—d thing." And his rulings, speeches, and actions throughout the entire Congress were in perfect harmony with the above classic declaration. His insane desire to "rule or ruin" led him to commit acts that ought to make a Five Points ward bummer blush, and disgrace a decent Digger Indian. That he and Stevens succeeded in bamboozling and bulldozing as many delegates as they did is beyond the comprehension of people who do not understand "the ordinary political methods." But once having the reins, they were determined to drive the coach at their own sweet will; hence the delectable piece of white-washing diplomacy by the auditing committee! But the crowning infamy of the whole star chamber regime was the gag resolution. Here it is: "Resolved: That a committee on grievances be appointed by the directors. . . . That any person who shall publicly or privately make charges against the officers of this union without giving them an opportunity to refute them before the board of grievance, shall be denounced as a slanderer of the American Secular Union!" Shades of the Spanish Inquisition, retire into oblivion! Your occupation is gone. The American Secular Union has made your offices superfluous. A padlock is now upon the lips and pens of the opposition, and "peace reigns in Warsaw." How delightful! How truly Christian! "Now if any discontented chicken dares to peep we can try it by a committee of our own appointment!" Gentlemen, if it will not be deemed profane, I would like to inquire wherein the proposed plan differs from trying a man in hell, with the devil for judge advocate and the devil'simps for a jury! To the credit of the Congress be it said the above resolution found but six votes to support it.

Mr. Macdonald says: "It was evident that a good deal of backbiting and lying had been done." He omits to say by whom, but he evidently wishes his readers to infer that it was done by my friends. I think, to put it mildly, that is a mistake, and I will give my reasons. 1. To lie about either Putnam, Macdonald, or Stevens would be foolish because unnecessary. 2. The truth is bad enough, and if the half had been told the result might have been different. 3. If the editor of the truthful report of the Congress insist on a few lies, I do not know of any place he would be more likely to find them than in his own report.

I cannot convince myself that I need to offer any apology for permitting my friends to put forward my name for the secretaryship of the A. S. U. Twenty-five years ago I was laboring in the Freethought field while Mr. Putnam was preaching Unitarianism, and Stevens and Macdonald were "as though they had not been." I helped organize the "National Liberal League" and have stood by it ever since, without hope of reward. The Congress is over and I am a Liberal still, and shall work on as ever, hoping for the ultimate triumph of the right.

For the delegates who voted conscientiously for Mr. Stevens I entertain only feelings of respect and kindness. But for the men who "navigated" the XIIth Congress I feel the keenest indignation, and despise them with all the fervor of an honest heart; I would be a caiff wretch to do otherwise. I may be content to be worried by a pack of bloodhounds, but do not fancy having vitrol thrown in my face.

HARRY HOOVER.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 20, 1888.

HONOR DUE.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In correspondence with the Silverton Committee it was arranged that Friend Underwood should meet Braden in debate. I was perfectly willing to meet Braden, or any other Christian chosen by a Christian denomination to represent Christianity; but Braden's assaults upon Underwood, as correspondents have written me, have been scandalous.

I am heartily glad that so able a gentleman as Mr. Underwood is chosen to represent our Freethought cause.

In several of my letters the impression was conveyed that Mr. Underwood, until recently, refused to debate with Braden. This was a mistake. He has indicated his willingness for the past nine years to debate with him, provided Braden is put forward by some church in the community in which the debate is to take place, and that he be indorsed by said church as a moral man and worthy representative.

This has been my position exactly. I got my impression from the journals which represented that no gentleman would debate with Braden. Mr. Underwood is a gentleman, and will debate with his weight in any kind of theological cats. The debate ought to be published, every word. W. F. JAMIESON.

Monte Vista, Colo.

INGERSOLL'S REPLY TO CARDINAL MANNING.

From The North American Review.

II.

Spain has progressed in the arts and sciences, in all that tends to enrich and ennoble a nation, in the precise proportion that she has lost faith in the Catholic church. This may be said of every other nation in Christendom. Torquemada is dead; Castelar is alive. The dungeons of the Inquisition are empty, and a little light has penetrated the clouds and mists—not much, but a little. Spain is not yet clothed and in her right mind. A few years ago the cholera visited Madrid and other cities. Physicians were mobbed. Processions of saints carried the host through the streets for the purpose of staying the plague. The streets were not cleaned, the sewers were filled. Filth and faith, old partners, reigned supreme. The church, "eminent for its sanctity," stood in the light and cast its shadow on the ignorant and the prostrate. The church, in its "inexhaustible fruitfulness in all good things," allowed its children to perish through ignorance, and used the diseases it had produced as an instrumentality to further enslave its votaries and its victims.

It is admitted that the Catholic church exists in many nations; that it is dominated, at least in a great degree, by the bishop of Rome—that it is international in that sense, and that in that sense it has what may be called a "supernational unity." The same, however, is true of the Masonic fraternity. It exists in many nations, but it is not a national body. It is in the same sense extranational, in the same sense international, and has in the same sense a supernational unity. So the same may be said of other societies. This, however, does not tend to prove that anything supernational is supernatural.

It is also admitted that in faith, worship, ceremonial, discipline and government, the Catholic church is substantially the same wherever it exists. This establishes the unity, but not the divinity, of the institution.

The fact that the Catholic church is obedient to the pope, establishes, not the supernatural origin of the church, but the mental slavery of its members. It establishes the fact that it is a successful organization; that it is cunningly devised; that it destroys the mental independence, and that whoever absolutely submits to its authority loses the jewel of his soul.

The fact that Catholics are to a great extent obedient to the pope, establishes nothing except the thoroughness of the organization.

How was the Roman empire formed? By what means did that great power hold in bondage the known world? How is it that a despotism is established? How is it that the few enslave the many? How is it that the nobility live on the labor of peasants? The answer is in one word, Organization. The organized few triumph over the unorganized many. The few hold the sword and the purse. The unorganized are overcome in detail—terrorized, brutalized, robbed, conquered.

We must remember that when Christianity was established the world was ignorant, credulous, and cruel. The gospel with its idea of forgiveness—with its heaven and hell—was suited to the barbarians among whom it was preached. Let it be understood, once for all, that Christ had but little to do with Christianity. The people became convinced—being ignorant, stupid, and credulous—that the church held the keys of heaven and hell. The foundation of the most terrible mental tyranny that has existed among men was in this way laid. The Catholic church enslaved to the extent of its power. It resorted to every possible form of fraud; it perverted every good instinct of the human heart; it rewarded every vice; it resorted to every artifice that ingenuity could devise, to reach the highest round of power. It tortured the accused to make them confess; it tortured witnesses to compel the commission of perjury; it tortured children for the purpose of making them convict their parents; it compelled men to establish their own innocence; it imprisoned without limit; it had the malicious patience to wait; it left the accused without trial, and left them in dungeons until released by death. There is no crime that the Catholic church did not commit—no cruelty that it did not practice—no form of treachery that it did not reward, and no virtue that it did not persecute. It was the greatest and most powerful enemy of human rights. It did all that organization, cunning, piety, self-denial, heroism, treachery, zeal, and brute force could do to enslave the children of men. It was the enemy of intelligence, the assassin of liberty, and the destroyer of progress. It loaded the noble with chains and the infamous with honors. In one hand it carried the alms dish, in the other a dagger. It argued with the sword, persuaded with poison, and convinced with the fagot.

It is impossible to see how the divine origin of a church can be established by showing that hundreds of bishops have visited the pope.

Does the fact that millions of the faithful visited Mecca establish the truth of the Koran? Is it a scene for congratulation when the bishops of thirty nations kneel before a man? Is it not humiliating to know that man is willing to kneel at the feet of man? Could a noble man demand, or joyfully receive, the humiliation of his fellows?

As a rule, arrogance and humility go together. He who in power compels his fellow man to kneel, will himself kneel when weak. The tyrant is a cringer in power; a cringer is a tyrant out of power. Great men stand face to face. They meet on equal terms. The cardinal who kneels in the presence of the pope, wants the bishop to kneel in his presence; and the bishop who kneels demands that the priest shall kneel to him; and the priest who kneels demands that they in lower orders shall kneel; and all, from the pope to the lowest—that is to say, from pope to exorcist, from pope to the one in charge of the bones of saints—all demand that the people, the laymen, those upon whom they live, shall kneel to them.

The man of free and noble spirit will not kneel. Courage has no knees. Fear kneels, or falls upon its ashen face.

The cardinal insists that the pope is the vicar of Christ, and that all popes have been. What is a vicar of Jesus Christ? He is a substitute in office. He stands in the place, or occupies the position in relation to the church, in relation to the world, that Jesus Christ would occupy were he the pope at Rome. In other words, he takes Christ's place; so that, according to the doctrine of the Catholic church, Jesus Christ himself is present in the person of the pope.

We all know that a good man may employ a bad agent. A good king might leave his realm and put in his place a tyrant and a wretch. The good man, and the good king, cannot certainly know what manner of man the agent is—what kind of person the vicar is—consequently the bad may be chosen. But if the king appointed a bad vicar, knowing him to be bad, knowing that he would oppress the people, knowing that he would imprison and burn the noble and generous, what excuse can be imagined for such a king?

Now if the church is of divine origin, and if each pope is the vicar of Jesus Christ, he must have been chosen by Jesus Christ; and when he was chosen, Christ must have known exactly what his vicar would do. Can we believe that an infinitely wise and good being would choose immoral, dishonest, ignorant, malicious, heartless, fiendish, and inhuman vicars?

The cardinal admits that "the history of Christianity is the history of the church, and that the history of the church is the history of the pontiffs," and then he declares that "the greatest statesmen and rulers that the world has ever seen are the popes of Rome."

Let me call attention to a few passages in Draper's "History of the Intellectual Development of Europe."

Constantine was one of the vicars of Christ. Afterward, Stephen IV. was chosen. The eyes of Constantine were then put out by Stephen, acting in Christ's place. The tongue of the bishop Theodorus was amputated by the man who had been substituted for God. This bishop was left in a dungeon to perish of thirst. Pope Leo III. was seized in the street and forced into a church, where the nephews of Pope Adrian attempted to put out his eyes and cut off his tongue. His successor, Stephen V., was driven ignominiously from Rome. His successor, Paschal I., was accused of blinding and murdering two ecclesiastics in the Lateran Palace. John VIII., unable to resist the Mohammedans, was compelled to pay them tribute.

At this time, the bishop of Naples was in secret alliance with the Mohammedans, and they divided with this Catholic bishop the plunder they collected from other Catholics. This bishop was excommunicated by the pope; afterwards he gave him absolution because he betrayed the chief Mohammedans, and assassinated others. There was an ecclesiastical conspiracy to murder the pope, and some of the treasures of the church were seized, and the gate of St. Pancrazia was opened with false keys to admit the Saracens. Formosus, who had been engaged in these transactions, who had been excommunicated as a conspirator for the murder of Pope John, was himself elected pope in 891. Boniface VI. was his successor. He had been deposed from the diaconate and from the priesthood for his immoral and lewd life. Stephen VII. was the next pope, and he had the dead body of Formosus taken from the grave, clothed in the papal habiliments, propped up in a chair and tried before a council. The corpse was found guilty, three fingers were cut off and the body cast into the Tiber. Afterward Stephen VII., this vicar of Christ, was thrown into prison and strangled.

From 896 to 900, five popes were consecrated. Leo V., in less than two months after he became pope, was cast into prison by Christopher, one of his chaplains. This Christopher usurped his place, and in a little while was expelled from Rome by Sergius III., who became pope in 905. This pope lived in criminal intercourse with the celebrated Theodora, who with her daughters Marozia and Theodora, both prostitutes, exercised an extraordinary control over him. The love of Theodora was also shared by John X. She gave him the archbishopric of Ravenna, and made him pope in 915. The daughter of Theodora overthrew this pope. She surprised him in the Lateran Palace. His brother, Peter, was killed; the pope was thrown into prison, where he was afterward murdered. Afterward this Marozia, daughter of Theodora, made her own son pope, John XI. Many affirmed that Pope Sergius was his father, but his mother inclined to attribute him to her husband Alberic, whose brother Guido she afterward married. Another of her sons, Alberic, jealous of his brother John, the pope, cast him and their mother into prison. Alberic's son was then elected pope as John XII.

John was nineteen years old when he became the vicar of Christ. His reign was characterized by the most shocking immoralities, so that the Emperor Otto I. was compelled by the German clergy to interfere. He was tried. It appears that John had received bribes for the consecration of bishops; that he had ordained one who was only ten years old; that he was charged with incest, and with so many adulteries that the Lateran Palace had become a brothel. He put out the eyes of one ecclesiastic; he maimed another—both dying in consequence of their injuries. He was given to drunkenness and to gambling. He was deposed at last, and Leo VII. elected in his stead. Subsequently he got the upper hand. He seized his antagonists; he cut off the hand of one, the nose, the finger, and the tongue of others. His life was eventually brought to an end by the vengeance of a man whose wife he had seduced.

And yet, I admit that the most infamous popes, the most heartless and fiendish bishops, friars, and priests were models of mercy, charity, and justice when compared with the orthodox God—with the God they worshiped. These popes, these bishops, these priests could persecute only for a few years—they could burn only for a few moments—but their God threatened to imprison and burn forever; and their God is as much worse than they were, as hell is worse than the Inquisition.

John XIII. was strangled in prison. Boniface VII. imprisoned Benedict VII., and starved him to death. John XIV. was secretly put to death in the dungeons of the castle of St. Angelo. The corpse of Boniface was dragged by the populace through the streets.

It must be remembered that the popes were assassinated by Catholics—murdered by the faithful—that one vicar of Christ strangled another vicar of Christ, and that these men were "the greatest rulers and the greatest statesmen of the earth."

Pope John XVI. was seized, his eyes put out, his nose cut off, his tongue torn from his mouth, and he was sent through the streets mounted on an ass, with his face to the tail. Benedict IX., a boy of less than twelve years of age was raised to the apostolic throne. One of his successors, Victor III., declared that the life of Benedict was so shameful, so foul, so execrable, that he shuddered to describe it. He ruled like a captain of banditti. The people, unable to bear longer his adulteries, his homicides, and his abominations, rose against him, and in despair of maintaining his position, he put up the papacy to auction, and it was bought by a Presbyter named John, who became Gregory VI., in the year of grace 1045. Well may we ask, Were these the Vicegerents of God upon earth—these who had truly reached that goal beyond which the last efforts of human wickedness cannot pass?

It may be sufficient to say that there is no crime that man can commit that has not been committed by the vicars of Christ. They have inflicted every possible torture, violated every natural right. Greater monsters the human race has not produced.

An "inch of rain" means a gallon of water spread over a surface of two square feet, or a fall of about one hundred tons on an acre of ground.

Appreciative.

To the Editors of Freethought:

We have received three numbers of FREETHOUGHT, and it suits us exactly. Although we take, and read, many newspapers, FREETHOUGHT is our choice among them all. Inclosed find 10 cents for Voltairine de Cleyre's poem entitled "Nameless."

ROBERT PEAKE.

Sultan City, Wash.

Mr. Munn's Letter Concluded.

To the Editors of Freethought:

According to Mr. Chapman's logic, under free trade he expects to purchase in Kansas articles made in London at the retail price in London, and as a matter of fact and justice the hat makers in London will purchase wheat raised in the United States at 50 cents per bushel; that is to say, 50 cents less than it can be raised for, unless the American farmer can live on faith. If the glorious time ever comes when the American republic shall be real and not ideal; when the American farmer, mechanic, and laborer are protected in their rights, wheat will never be less than one dollar per bushel. Any person who wants labor performed for less than its real value is a thief. Wheat will make as much life-giving force to-day as it ever did, but Shylock demands two bushels to purchase one dollar in gold, and this gold standard in America is illegal and unconstitutional. It was forced upon the American people by free-trade England through corrupt legislation in Congress. Personally I am for protection for all persons who are Americans at heart. I want the American people protected from the gods of Asia and the lords of Europe. I demand that the American people shall be protected from the national and international Shylock, who has received his pound of flesh. I want the Freethought party protected from the Christian church, which robs and imprisons them upon a pretext in the name of God. I want American labor protected from the criminals and paupers of Europe, as well as the Coolies or Tartars of China. I want America protected for Americans, native or naturalized. I want every acre of land, gold, silver, coal mine, etc., protected from the clutch of the despots of free-trade Europe. Has free trade in England given the sons of toil and labor a home of their own? Has it banished poverty and crime? Has free trade made the people happy, prosperous, and filled their hearts with love and content? A thousand times, No! The people there are robbed in the name of God, the throne, and the church under the pretext of free trade. In America the people are robbed under the pretext of protection, law, and usury.

How about the ignorance? You (Dr. Chapman) say you are willing to stake ten to one that the Americans are more ignorant than Europeans, as miners, factory hands, agriculturists, foresters, etc. And then as though you felt ashamed after telling such a whopper, you continue, and give yourself away, as it seems to me you have a habit of doing. Here are your own exact words: "The foreigner is the best off under equal circumstances, as whatever the foreigner may lose in book learning he makes up in industry and economy." And now, dear doctor, I see it, and he that runs may see it, and read it too.

Firstly, in your first article, your wish was father to your thought. You attempted to make Ingersoll say that any nation that raises raw material is ignorant and poor, and you seem quite anxious to convince the readers of FREETHOUGHT that you wished to set him right, as you were sure it was a mistake. You even go so far as to say that Illinois produced Col. R. G. Ingersoll, to prove him wrong about ignorance and raw material. Now in your last you come out square, flat-footed, and state that Americans are more ignorant, less industrious, and not economists like the priest-ridden serfs, criminals, and paupers who are being sent by free traders from Europe, to break the back of labor in America. Every true American mechanic spurns the offer of $4 per week, which he knows will not keep him and his family in food and clothing, to say nothing about education for his children, which every American laborer knows is as necessary as food. With the alien, it is "half a loaf is better than none," the old cry of free trade countries. I could name a prominent agricultural wagon and implement manufacturer whose factory is full of this free-trade trash at $4 per week, while the boss struts around like a peacock, with his thumbs under his arms, proclaiming he is for protection for the American laborer, etc.; you bet he is. I have been in the brass foundries, rolling-mills, and glass works, and worked in many factories in the Old World. I opened the first coal mine with pick and shovel, in 1856, in Western Nebraska—now Wyoming. I built the first house on Dear Creek, North Platte (log cabin), after the Sioux war of 1853-4-5, before Major Twiss, United States Indian agent, or any other person ever lived there except the man and his Indian wife with whom I lived, so I have had some experience killing snakes, making roads, bridges, etc., blazing the road west for tenderfoots to come and go. Your last paragraph needs no reply from me, as it does not contain a sentence of mine. It is another of your mistakes.

Hooper, Utah.

EDWARD F. MUNN.

Professor Seymour On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

After leaving Monteseño, our next place of doing battle for the Lord was Cosmopolis, a pretty little lumber town on the Chehalis river. Here we went into "God's house," fixed up "to kill;" all ceiled with different colored cedars, and then nicely oiled, with very fine pictures of a religious nature. It seemed a little strange to "Mellican man" that the gods have to have so many fine buildings erected for them, as they do not particularly need them, while whole millions of necessity-cursed humanity are shivering through our long winters with no home or decent place to stay. Is there not a mistake somewhere? Would not our religion of humanity give every man, woman, and child a home and plenty, instead of giving so many millions to the gods, that are said to have builded themselves a "mansion in the skies?" I gave three lectures here to large audiences that seemed to like something new to agitate the gelatinous mass called the brain. At any rate, they paid for it well and urged me to come again. The town is a clearing in the dense timber, and the stumps, ten to twenty feet high and six to ten feet in diameter, nearly half cover the ground, so that you cannot drive a team through the streets, and every man's lot, 50x100, contains thirty or forty of these big stumps, and he has to expend a mint of money to get them out so he can build his house. Then the logs lying between the stumps are another "slight impediment." There is no road out of the town; it is impossible to make a road through the woods, hills, and rocks. Here at the hotel we met K. Nimms, a broad-shouldered, level-headed, but behind the age Freethinker, that needs but to be baptized by Col. Robert G. Ingersoll to be a full-fledged radical. I met also Mr. Adolph Olsen, a boy in years, but who already has put on the thinking cap of our earth-bound philosophy, in place of the old greasy skull-cap, made for those who live in fear of the devil and his angels. Aberdeen, the "big city of the harbor," has more wickedness to the square inch than any little place I ever sojourned in, one-half gambling halls, running day and night, Sundays and all, saloons, etc., everywhere. I found a splendid home here with those radicals, Sargent & Minard, at the Sargent's Exchange, a new three-story mansard-roof hotel of large size and fine finish. These gentlemen know how to keep a house for "ye traveling men," and the result is, the Exchange is full all the time. Here again, through the courtesy of the judge, who is the probate here and treasurer of the M. E. church, although really a Freethinker, we occupied the splendid M. E. church, where we had full houses every night. In fact, these good Christian friends are more than glad to have anything come in to help combat the terrible dissipation in the rum-holes. Although Aberdeen has a hard name, our lectures here had the best order and decorum of any place we have visited on this harbor. These people appreciated fully the grand power of science and the good to be done by Freethought education. The town overflows daily with the tide-water from the sea, so they have built the buildings upon piles six to eight feet high, and the town is sidewalked all over in the same way. They are also filling up the streets with the sawdust from three big mills here. Everything is filled up, or will be, with sawdust. The tide has been four feet deep in the houses here. Thus you see, sometimes even the poorest have a sea bath room in every lower story. Ships and vessels of all kinds are constantly fitting out with lumber for San Francisco and the south. All business is represented here and times are good. We break camp reluctantly, and pass on to Hoquiam, the most beautiful place and location imaginable. Here we again had the good luck to find at the Grammage House a solid Liberal, who gave us a most hearty reception to his home and hotel. Here, for the first time, we were free from that Asiatic curse, a Chinese cook. I think we were born again, for I felt the love of—good things revived and glory all around. The cook is a big-hearted, generous-souled fellow, a Spiritualist, that looks out well for our mundane wants and believes in a good time now and here. I gave six lectures here in another fine church, and feel as though God had blessed my efforts hereof or the the ungodly. As the Spiritualists would say, the magnetisms of that church, as well as the last four where I have lectured, have called me from my back-slidden (slid forward) condition, and I know now that my redeemer liveth (in myself).

Mr. J. A. Grammage and family, O. C. Grammage and family, Dr. Balch and wife, Mr. Emerson, the manager of the mill company, and several others belonging to the noble order of Freethought, are leaders for the "coming republic of man," in place of the old worm-eaten "Kingdom of God." Here at our lectures we could hardly find room for the crowd, for nearly the whole town turned out. I think the doctrine of being born again through (in, or by) Christ received a back-set, for I did not "spare the rod" for the church's sake, but applied it hard and long. I am sure good will be the result; these churches all over the country will yet be free halls for lectures and discussions, dances, etc., and will be blessed with better morals, health, and good sense among the people. Dr. Balch has a beautiful home, also a very fine ranch near by, and a large practice in medicine. He has been here for over twenty years, and is one of the leading men of the country; also Mr. Carr, the church trustee, who generously told me they were glad to have me occupy their place of worship if any good could be done, and himself and family were there every night. Brother Carr has been here thirty years; has a large apple orchard loaded down with fruit; also a large dairy of blooded cows, and sells the "lacteal extract from the bovine" to these city folks, and thus keeps the pot boiling at home. Having now completed my two month's lecturing tour among the mountains and giant forests of Western Washington Territory, I said the last good-bye to the many friends I have made, and who will watch my future "trail" through FREETHOUGHT, for very many have joined our rapidly increasing family, and I am sure that all will not only read it themselves, but lend it to their neighbors, that they may be converted, too, to the truths of science, and forget all about thus saith the Lord. D. C. SEYMOUR.

THE NINE DEMANDS.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A Successful Experiment.

First Preacher—"You appear to be having remarkable success, brother."

Second Preacher—"Yes, my people have been very liberal since I changed my plan of taking the collection. I now have it done before the sermon."

"Has that made a difference?"

"A very great difference. If I find the collection is small I preach a two-hours' sermon on 'charity,' but when it is large I give them a twenty-minute sermon on the delights of heaven."

PREACHER (at waifs' mission)—Yes, my dear children, you little know of the blessed influences which now surround you. My son is here with me to-day, and I will ask him for a leaf from his own experience. Stand up, my son, and speak so all the children can hear you. How were you led to the Sabbath-school?

Preacher's son (fiercely)—By the ear.—Philadelphia Record.

THE "Sabbath Imposture," a pamphlet by Harry Hoover, 10 cents per copy; six for 50 cents; fifteen for $1.00.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

he Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS; CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.
PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.
33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,
Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.
Do not forget Street and Number,
357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, b.t. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular-account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)
ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting. American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 3 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50; $13 50, $14 50; 5 ounce, $16 00; 6 ounce, $17 50.
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17,
$18, $19 50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4,
being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best
14-karat gold-filled, gold watches, cases elegant and latest
style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24 50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies'
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$23; 15 jewels, $28. In good second quality filled cases, $2
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $38.
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case.
Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1; best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine straps, 50c. Set
best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
No. 1. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12.
Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free.
BEST WORK. TRY ME.
Let Every watch be looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or Otto Wettstein.
safely as ten.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
Badges in PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of cut and smaller.
Warranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$3, $2 75, $3 50. Large,
$3 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $8, $10; and
charms up to $25. De-
mand daily increasing.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert
G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion
in "The History, of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author,
Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum
notes by Guizot, Wenck, Millman, "an English Church-
man," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages.
Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Dr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron
D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

F. SANGROVE, Merchant Tailor.

LATE OF LONDON AND PARIS,

All imported goods. Orders promptly attended. Prices moderate. Cleaning and repairing
neatly done.

Ladies' Cloaks and Riding Habits a Specialty.

F. SANGROVE, 104 FIFTH ST.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say
infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to
those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior-
Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address
Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San
Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS,
the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author-
Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 45.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - NOVEMBER 10, 1888

FREETHOUGHT is not a partisan paper in a political sense, and therefore, touching the result of Tuesday's election, it begs leave to rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep.

LONDON has unveiled in Trafalgar Square a statue to Chinese Gordon, England's Christian Hero. With what pleasure some day, or most any day, San Francisco would pay similar post-mortem honors to her Christian Soldier, Gen. O. O. Howard.

WHEN the train containing the imperial family of Russia ran off the track last week a score of attendants were killed, but God saved the czar! His highness has publicly returned thanks for the divine protection; his subjects have not expressed themselves.

A LITTLE boy was asked by his mother the other day: "Rex, what makes you so naughty—don't you ask God every night to make you a good boy?" "Yes," replied the young hopeful, "I ask him right along, but he never seems to pay any attention to me." Little boy, you have made a confession that every Christian might make if he but possessed your juvenile frankness.

THE pope has given an audience to Archbishop Riordan, of San Francisco, and exhorts our fellow-citizen to stimulate American Catholics to an agitation for the restoration of his temporal power. This is getting a trifle monotonous. Americans have been willing to do something for home rule in Ireland, but they will be slow to exert themselves seriously for the establishment of Rome rule in Italy, which proved itself a dismal failure more than twenty years ago.

THE Rev. J. L. Stuart has been for twenty years a Christian missionary at Hang Chow, China. Fifteen other missionaries have been there an equal length of time, and out of the 700,000 inhabitants of the city, three hundred natives have become converts to Christianity. Mr. Stuart adds that "the people of Hang Chow are very peaceable. They have few police officers, and there are very few disturbances;" in view of which fact, perhaps the conversion of the orientals to western customs is as large as would be desirable.

THE president's Thanksgiving proclamation this year is unusually long and extraordinarily pious. The chief executive says that "constant thanksgiving and gratitude are due from the American people to Almighty God for his goodness and mercy which have followed them since he made them a nation and vouchsafed to them a free government"—which is simple and unadulterated slush. And the rest of the proclamation is worse. In one breath it commends thanks for bountiful harvests; in the next it urges charity toward the victims of short crops. The writer gets over the yellow fever epidemic by thanking providence for "setting bounds to the deadly march of pestilence." He calls attention, too, to the fact that our shortcomings have not been visited with swift punishment from heaven, which is quite apparent. No one ever was punished or rewarded by a dispensation from heaven, or ever will be. Every sensible person knows that the whole business is a humbug; that no deity interferes in the affairs of men for good or ill, and that so far as reason and experience can testify there is no deity in existence. Every sensible person knows that prayer is a waste of breath; that the rendering of thanks to the ghosts is equally idle, and that thanksgiving proclamations are the mere jargon of superstition. Sometime we hope to see a public sentiment that will sustain an honest executive in characterizing these incantations as the disgrace which they are to an enlightened age and a secular government.

NEWS AND NOTES.

I found it a somewhat roundabout journey to Westfield, Ill. Railroads, like man, are fearfully and wonderfully made, and, like God, their ways are past finding out. Inquiring for Westfield I was informed that it was about nine miles from Danville. Further inquiries developed the fact that it was about fifty miles from Danville. Seeking the confidence of the conductor, he told me that it was four miles from Danville. Somewhat bewildered, I resorted to the baggage man, and he affirmed that it was just fifty-eight miles from the aforesaid Danville. I arrived at the latter place about noon. Here I made another discovery. I landed at the Junction, and Danville was two miles off, and thither my baggage—Freethought literature, mainly—had been sent. I was obliged to secure the loquacious but expensive services of a drayman and proceed in search of my "dynamite," and after many winding ways I had it at last in my possession. When I went to purchase a ticket another dilemma confronted me. The train only went to Kansas, Ill., nine miles this side of Westfield. According to the railroad programme, I was to be stranded at Kansas until Monday morning, while Westfield was "so near and yet so far." I was due at Westfield for lectures Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon and evening. Fortunately there was telegraphic communication, and I sent message for a team to meet me at Kansas, from Westfield. I arrived at Kansas, after many turnings, at half past six. After waiting, like Micawber, several minutes for "something to turn up," a vivacious youth accosted me and wanted to know if I was "Putnam." I had sufficient presence of mind to answer in the affirmative. He drove up with a buggy. How to put all my luggage on that rather slight conveyance puzzled the twain, but finally we decided to make a high seat of one of the "telescopes," pack the other for our feet to rest upon, while I held the remainder in my lap. Thus perched on high, we proceeded forth. Kansas was in the midst of a grand Democratic rally, and shoutings filled the air, and bonfires, and music. We passed safely through the hubbub into the quiet, wide-spreading country. My companion was of a curious turn of mind, and inquired in what kind of goods I was dealing. I softly answered that I expected to lecture at Westfield. "Oh," said he, "and what about?" "Freethought," I answered. "What is Freethought?" he innocently inquired. I informed him to the best of my ability. He seemed to acquiesce in my statements, but remarked that he belonged to the church. I noticed that he was of a pious frame of mind. He said there was to be a "candy-pull" that evening, and he was anxious to be on time. For this reason the horses made pretty good speed, and a few minutes before eight o'clock I landed at the Opera House. A good fire was blazing away and it was not long before I became warm enough to take the platform. A fair audience was present, considering that there is a United Presbyterian college in the place which flings its solemn shadow upon all. The preachers and professors had given warning to the faithful not to attend the "Infidel meeting." Nevertheless a few appeared. I lectured on Sunday afternoon and evening. At the evening lecture there was quite an increased attendance, and friends came from a distance, although it threatened rain, and did rain before the conclusion of the discourse. Westfield is a pioneer point indeed. The orthodox tents are all around, and but few hold the fort for Freethought, but these few are of the heroic sort and "bate no jot of heart or hope" in the midst of adverse circumstances.

Charles Biggs and his uncle, Adam Biggs, are the staunch supporters of our cause at Westfield, and they have the true grit. It was a pleasure to meet such honest, generous men who quietly maintain their convictions and are willing to give time and money to the cause. Fortunately Charles Biggs owns the Opera House, and this gives a vantage ground without which it would be impossible, perhaps, to have Freethought lectures under the shadow of the Presbyterian college. Adam Biggs has a good deal of the "old Adam" in him, and therefore believes in progress and liberty, for in this case the "old Adam" is more desirous of knowledge than the "new." It is the "old Adam" who ate the apple, left his childish life in Eden, and went forth to conquer and subdue the earth, make railroads, telegraphs, steamships, and various other heresies, while the "new" Adam has no such ambition, but with prayers and faith looks for a golden harp and wings. Mr. Adam Biggs has been over this world considerably, and by much experience has acquired the wisdom of this life. He was in the army of the republic, received wounds; was also in Mexico, in California, and about nine years ago came back to Westfield, the home of his infancy, and here he stands, with unostentatious courage, for Liberal ideas and work.

The father of Chas. Biggs was also a soldier of the republic, and the spirit of patriotism and genuine love of liberty are in his descendant. There is not a more devoted, brave, and uncompromising worker in our ranks than Chas. Biggs, and I was well rewarded for all my troubles and travels, in meeting the small but cheerful band of Liberals at Westfield. Westfield has about one thousand inhabitants, is situated in the midst of a beautiful farming country, and would have been much more prosperous without the influence of the Presbyterian college. Somehow or other these institutions of learning put a damper upon business enterprise. Theology makes no motive power for civilization.

I believe in intellectual progress at Westfield while such good allies are there. Slow and sure the day will come, and our flag will answer to a thousand other victorious banners.

I was obliged to rise at four o'clock Monday morning and set off in a pouring shower for Kansas, to catch the early morning train for Chicago. My vivacious driver of Saturday night was on hand. He had enjoyed his "candy-pull" and, on the whole, was a fortunate youth. The "candy-pull" was by the King's Daughters, a missionary association for the conversion of the heathen. I suppose the "candy-pull" was for the sake of inspiration in the good cause. Some of the college boys, not invited to the sweet-meats, behaved badly. My driver was suspected of complicity. But he proved an alibi. He was with the Freethought lecturer, and so the King's Daughters smiled upon him. He was happy and didn't mind the storm which raged until we reached the station.

It took me all day long to get to Chicago. I had a chance to see Stevens for an hour or two. He is hard at work. He finds many things to do. In Pennsylvania, for example, it is discovered that one can't even affirm and become a citizen without a belief in God. Here is a direct violation of the Constitution and of civil rights. This shows how deep-seated is ecclesiastical power, and the vast work which must be done.

Wednesday morning I strike Omaha, and thence, in the afternoon, speed on to Wahoo. This is a bright little thriving place of about fifteen hundred people. Three railroads run through it. The country round about is magnificent. It is the model country for the farmer. During the fall months the climate is the most lovely in the world, and the outlook over the broad and cultivated prairies is charming beyond description. Wahoo has thirteen churches—almost one church to every hundred people. Apparently it is a poor place for Freethought, but the audiences that attended my lectures were good, and without doubt there is a large Liberal element if it can only be developed. Earnest Freethinkers are here, men of prominence and power in the community, who will not flinch. A beginning has been made, and I believe the movement will go on. What is needed in Nebraska is a state organization, a combination of forces, and then advance will be certain. Almost every town in the state has a Liberal people, who would sustain and carry forward the cause of mental liberty. It is pure negligence that gives the church party so much pre-eminence.

G. I. Moyer is one of our frontiersmen at Wahoo. He will face any difficulties rather than lower the flag. I had arranged to be at Wahoo while going East, but the Opera House could not be procured. This time we had to move to the court-house one evening, and give a minstrel troupe a "one night stand." Besides, the Republicans were at various neighboring points, and on Friday evening two or three car loads went off with banners and music to Ashland. But the Opera House was well filled, nevertheless, and I feel quite encouraged with the reception given, and with such stalwart supporters as my friend Moyer, the thirteen churches will find their number is indeed an unlucky one, and the stars of Freethought shall shine over their highest steeple.

Dr. Bush is another tower of strength for our cause in this place. He has not a particle of fear of any consequences for outspoken thought. He is a graduate of Ann Arbor, both the literary and medical departments, and has a high rank in his profession, to which he devotes himself with all the ardor of his nature. He recognizes the nobility of his chosen field; that his labor is for humanity's sake, in the glory of science, and not the barbarism of theology. He made a felicitous address of welcome at my opening lecture, which touched the keynote of reform and progress. Notwithstanding his radical and outspoken ideas, he is one of the most popular physicians in the community. He is a most skillful surgeon. I found that he also belonged to the same secret society in college that I did, so here was a fraternal bond of the "classic shades" and school-boy mystical rites, and I reckon that we shall have to be first cousins hereafter in the ranks of Freethought. Dr. Stone, his partner, is an old army comrade, and the grip of the soldier was the welcome of the Liberal.

John Bryan, of Ithaca, is one of the good captains of our host. He was on hand and brought his company with him. He always obeys the signal to rally.

D. W. Henderson is a genial comrade. He verges into the spiritual realm, but he has a heart for this world, and for justice and liberty now. On his broad acres he thinks independently, and in nature's bosom finds the inspiration for reform.

N. B. Berggren is a born Freethinker. He could not accept the dogmas of the church. The teachings of the priest were not according to humanity. Thus, for years, he has been in the grand army, marching on, and so we join hands beneath the banner of the free.

The churches of Wahoo put their foot in it lately, and now they wish they hadn't. They evoked the law to prevent a baseball game on Sunday. The law of the state forbids hunting and sporting, etc. Of course the boys were indignant at this exercise of ecclesiastical tyranny, and don't propose, hereafter, to chip in quite so freely for the support of the churches. It is well-known that the good nature of Liberals makes them contribute quite generously to the finances of the clergymen, especially if he is a decent sort of fellow. But when the churches thus show the tyrant's force, this good nature is very apt to be diminished, and Liberals will not support an institution that proclaims itself the foe of personal liberty. Well, the sooner the priesthood make the issue plain and unmistakable, the better it will be for freedom.

Besides those already named, I have met many friends at Wahoo. I like the place, and hope again to labor in this land of promise, for like its golden harvest fields are the beautiful hopes that come to the heart of the toiler amid such splendid companions.

While waiting for the train at Danville I read Watts's reply to Lambert, which is as good a reply as can be made to that wordy disputant. In fact, the "father" is completely demolished so far as ideas are concerned. Like the cuttlefish he defends himself only by muddling the subject. It is as difficult to find an idea in his metaphysics as to find a needle in a hay-mow. Mr. Watts had a double duty to perform—to discover some ideas in Lambert, and then reply. By a skillful use of Hamilton's metaphysics he was enabled to do the former, and by the application of common sense the latter. But it is much easier to answer Lambert than to discover anything worth answering. A more unmitigated blackguard never defended the church. That, probably, is the secret of his popularity. To make blackguardism assume the form of an argument is the only resort of priestcraft. Watts has done a good work. He has annihilated Lambert. There is not enough of him left for a grave. Like a vanishing goblin, only a smell of brimstone remains. That any decent Christian should have patronized Lambert's book shows to what straits theology is driven. The lion's skin is a poor apology, but what an ass is behind it!

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

CHRISTIAN MORALITY AND THE EIGHTH DEMAND.

The Eighth Demand of Liberalism, until a short time ago, read as follows:

"We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of 'Christian' morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty."

At the recent Congress of the American Secular Union, upon motion of Mr. Charles Watts, the words "as such" were inserted after the word morality. Thus amended, he who runs may read that Freethinkers do not wish morality enforced upon them in the name of Christianity; simple and lawful morality in itself being sufficient.

But it is worth while to inquire what constitutes Christian morality per se, and whence Christians derive their code of ethics. Beyond doubt the reply will be that the foundation of all morality is the Bible; and for the sake of ascertaining just what Christian morality is, and whether the Eighth Demand as it stood prior to the last Congress was too sweeping, let us throw the light of the scriptures upon the subject.

Morality, as we understand it, is the practice of truthfulness in speech and honesty in trade; respect for the rights of life and property; virtue; peacefulness; charitableness; intellectual hospitality; justice, kindness, temperance, providence, decency of word and act.

How does the Bible stand upon these questions? Mr. Remsburg, in a pamphlet entitled "Bible Morals," treats the subject quite exhaustively under the head of "twenty crimes and vices sanctioned by scripture." Let us look at them.

Untruthfulness and dissimulation were practiced by St. Paul. "Being crafty," he says, "I caught you with guile." Further (Rom. iii, 7), "For if the truth of God hath more abounded through my lie unto his glory, why yet am I also judged as a sinner?" Jesus Christ was uncharitable and deceptive enough to speak in parables, that those without the kingdom of God might not understand, "lest at any time they should be converted and their sins should be forgiven them." It is perfectly just to protest against all laws enforcing that kind of morality.

Dishonesty in trade is enjoined by the Mosaic law: "Ye shall not eat of anything that dieth of itself; thou shalt give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien" (Deut. xiv, 21). Does this precept of Christian morality account for the diseased meat found by the health inspectors in Chinatown? It certainly justifies our Christian and Jewish butchers in disposing of their bad beef to the alien Mongolian.

How many of the Biblical heroes would escape the penalty imposed for defrauding and stealing in any law-abiding community? Certainly Moses, and David, and Joshua would have been in the penitentiary. The Bible is so full of tales of murder and carnage committed under the order of the alleged author of that book that this paper could contain but a "partial list of the dead and wounded." The patriarchs and prophets were destitute of the slightest respect for virtue or for the marriage relation. David stole another man's wife, and Abraham and Isaac were willing to sell theirs to make themselves safe. This is Christian morality, and the Eighth Demand protested against its indiscriminate enforcement by law.

The Bible teaches persecution for opinion's sake: "If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house;" "If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed;" "I would they were even cut off which trouble you;" "If thy brother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, then thou shalt surely kill him; thine hand shall be first to put him to death." If the Bible is Christian, this is Christian morality, and its enforcement is most appropriately objected to by the Eighth Demand.

At the command of the Bible a man may give his wife a bill of divorce, if he does not like her, and send her out of his house (Deut. xxiv, 1). The Lord himself took men's wives out of their homes for neighbors to ravish in sight of their husbands. The thirty-sixth verse of the seventh chapter of First Corinthians (revised version) permits a father to marry his daughter. Christians must either repudiate the scriptures or admit that incest is sanctioned by inspiration. If they accept the latter alternative, they of course cannot indorse the Eighth Demand.

It would, indeed, be difficult to mention a crime or vice for which justification by example or precept is not to be found in the Bible, and yet Christians profess to get their morality from the Bible. It is to be said to the credit of the same Christians that they are as a general thing much better than their sacred book commands them to be, and far more civilized than its inspired author. Nevertheless, when dealing with Christianity we must deal with its doctrine and ethics rather than with its individual believers; and therefore, in view of the atrocious character of Christian morality as set forth in its code, it is proper that we continue to demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of Christian morality shall be abrogated. The amendment merely blunts the edge of criticism from those who do not understand the significance and gravamen of the original demand.

THE PROSPECT FOR A SUNDAY LAW.

In a late number of the Overland Monthly, a writer on Sunday laws says that back of all the fanaticism on the subject there is a large body of intelligent citizens who honestly believe that the state should take this matter in hand and by law make the California Sunday like that of New England. The writer, whose name is Clarke, objects that it is not a proper subject for state interference. He points out that among the citizens of a state there must be a wide divergence of opinion about Sunday laws, hence he would not recommend the interference of the state, but would "leave the whole thing to be regulated by the cities and towns according to the sentiment prevailing at that particular locality," i.e., to local option.

Such an arrangement as Mr. Clarke proposes would beyond doubt be more effective than state interference, but he forgets that higher than the rights of states and municipalities is the right of the individual to choose for himself how the first or any other day of the week shall be spent. If the majority in a state may not enforce their views upon a dissenting community, no more may a community force its views upon a dissenting member.

The laws of California touching the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession are at present most admirable. They subject the citizen to the same restraint upon Sunday as upon other days, and no more. And there would be the same objection to local option in the matter that there is to state interference. For instance, local option in San Francisco, provided it passed in favor of Sunday restriction of trade and travel, would affect the liberties of some 330,000 persons, while a state law in Oregon, Colorado, any one of several states, would touch the interests of a much smaller number. Local option in New York city would be equal to a state law in California in the number of people reached by its provisions. There is the further evil about local option, that it places one citizen in opposition to his neighbor, and brings the quarrel nearer home. As a general thing, too, whether it is right or not, people have more respect for a state law than for the petty ordinances of local politicians. A state prohibitory law, for example, does not cause so much ill-feeling as local option, which makes a man's foes, if not they of his own household, at least those of the household next door to him.

Of all the recommendations that have been made touching Sunday laws, we have never seen one that would bear the test of scrutiny. These laws have their root in the desire of religious people to enforce their belief upon others and to compel a recognition of Sunday as a Sabbath. That California will some day have such a law we see no reason to doubt. There is organization and agitation in favor of it, and there is none against it. Of course public sentiment opposes Sunday laws, as it does the appropriation of public funds for the support of religious institutions; but public sentiment is too intangible a force to long prevail against a combination of pious zeal and corrupt politics. The people who want a free Sunday may one day wake up to the fact that vigilance is the price of it, but will that awakening come before the enemies of a free Sunday have entrenched themselves behind a bulwark of statutes almost impossible to repeal? That is the question.

THE FIRST RESPONSE.

Last week it was proposed that Liberals interested in the series of Liberal meetings to be held in San Francisco during January next for the purpose of organizing a California State Secular Union should indicate the amounts they wish to subscribe toward the expenses of hall rent, etc., which will somewhat exceed $100. Room is still open for pledges. The meetings will be held on all the Sunday evenings of the month, and on the 28th and 29th. This attempt will be a test of what we are able to do in California in the way of a State Organization.

The following prompt response from our soldier-friend, John Robinett, has been received:

To the Editors of Freethought:

I observed in your last issue that Mr. Putnam's hall rent for January will amount to $112, and I also feel that he should not be left to shoulder the burden alone. I subscribe $1.00 and if there are not in the Golden State 111 others willing to do likewise, I will add to that amount.

It seems the Secular Union did not receive my humble pledge of $5.00 toward the Campaign Fund, as it was not in the list published in the Truth Seeker. To what address should the cash be sent? [E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.—ED.] I am more than anxious to see the good work advance with giant strides. I hope more of the wealthy Freethinkers will contribute to the cause. A few are doing noble work.

If the proposed trial between Freethought and Christianity should come off, I will make a great effort to be one of the audience.

With best wishes,

JOHN ROBINETT.

Nipomo, Cal., Nov. 3, 1888.

THE Rev. Dr. Briggs, of Santa Clara, hit off Dr. Dowie, the faith healer, in good shape at the Methodist ministers' meeting last Monday. He took issue with Dowie on the proposition that all sickness is from sin and the devil, as also on the statement that the scriptures offer divine healing for all bodily ailments in answer to the prayer of faith. Dr. Dowie, he said, had a diseased scalp, as evidenced by his baldness. If caused by sin, why was not prayer successful as a hair restorer?

BROTHER CLOW, of Hillsboro, Or., suggests in his letter to FREETHOUGHT this week that the approaching Underwood-Braden debate at Silverton be reported and published, and calls for subscriptions for that purpose. The suggestion is worthy of consideration. It may be depended upon that what Mr. Underwood will say on the occasion will be worth recording, and it is none of our concern what the character of Braden's utterances may be. The only obstacle in the way is the expense. An evening's debate of two hours' duration would make forty or fifty pages of a book, and one dollar per page would be a low estimate of the cost of printing a small edition. The length of the debate would decide the total expense, provided that both disputants could be induced to furnish the full text of their argument in manuscript. If reported by a stenographer, the charges would nearly equal the cost of printing. Condensed abstracts of the principal points made by each speaker might be furnished, and a three-nights' debate crowded into a book of one hundred pages at an expense, say, of $150 for an edition of one thousand copies. Its publication should follow the debate as closely as possible.

Such are a few practical suggestions as to the financial aspect of the proposition. We believe the book would be a paying investment.

THE pamphlet entitled "One Hundred and Forty-four Self-Contradictions of the Bible" is about the best missionary document extant. Believers who have never been accustomed to reasoning upon a proposition are able to perceive that two opposite statements regarding any occurrence are contradictory, and that while neither of them is necessarily true, one of them must be false. The Bible is full of these contradictory passages, and, placed in juxtaposition, they make the book a witness against itself, and set the Christian to quarreling with his own authority. We mail the pamphlet to any address for fifteen cents.

OBSERVATIONS.

Last year I was member of the board of inspectors of election in the twenty-somethingth election district of the third assembly district of the city of New York. The chairman of the board had a tailor shop next door to the polling-place, and did not like to neglect his business, so it fell upon myself, in the cases of several scores of candidates for registration, to administer the oath or affirmation. My remarks on these occasions were substantially to this effect: "You do solemnly affirm that you will fully and truly answer all such questions as shall be put to you touching your name, place of birth, place of residence, and your right to register and vote under the laws of this state." Some of the applicants observed that this constituted an affirmation, not an oath, and demanded the substitution of "swear" for "affirm," and kissed the book. The policeman in attendance, who was a Roman Catholic, insisted that the board should require the swearer to remove his hat during the votive ceremony, and that the affirmant should do the same and in addition elevate his right hand. I declined to enforce these formalities, and the officer went off to headquarters for instructions. As he did not renew the subject upon his return, I infer that the people at headquarters gave him no comfort, and he contented himself with uncovering his own head during the administration of the prescribed oath. Some discussion occurred, in which, as a minority of one, I maintained that the oath had no business in politics, it being a religious ceremony. The man who swears, as I understand it, calls in the deity to witness to the veracity of his deposition, while the one who affirms simply takes a legal obligation to tell the truth.

I am reminded of these things by a dispatch which appeared in last Saturday's Chronicle, whereby I learn that my distinguished brother, the editor of the Truth Seeker, has had a victorious tussle with a board of enlightened inspectors. It appears that upon presenting himself for registration, the chairman of the board handed him the Bible and commenced the usual recitation of an oath. The applicant ignored the sacred volume and stated, respectfully, that he preferred to affirm. Thereupon the official demanded that he should raise his right hand toward heaven, and thereupon, also, the editor again demurred. He was then asked, "Do you believe in a God?" The dispatch says that to this query the editor replied that the inspector had no right to ask such a question, but I suspect that his answer was more emphatic than this general statement of the case would imply. The board with unanimity declined to register the recusant journalist.

From the decision of the board the editor appealed to the Supreme Court, as represented by Judge Barrett, for a mandamus compelling the inspectors to register him, and in opposition those gentlemen sent in their affidavits stating that he had refused to swear or to affirm in the usual manner. The judge was a righteous one. He said that the chairman of the board had no business to ask a man to uplift his hand; a citizen had been denied his legal rights, and the board must reconvene and register the applicant. In his written opinion Judge Barrett said: "Inspectors have no right to require a man to affirm with uplifted hand, nor was it within their province to demand the religious test. Indeed, their interrogations about the relator's belief in the existence of the deity was an impertinence to which no citizen, in the absence of any suspicion of untruthfulness, should be subjected."

I consider this case one worthy to be recorded in leaded type to the credit of our contemporary. The relator, as Mr. Barrett designates the elder brother of this writer, is a public educator. The inspectors are not to blame for their course. They didn't know any better. The secular affairs of the state, generally, are so permeated by theology that it is no wonder they thought that some higher power than the statutes should be invoked by the sign of an uplifted hand. They knew that every public officer, including themselves, takes an oath upon being installed. Even the president of the United States so far recognizes the sacred character of the Bible as to swear upon it on inauguration day. They regard an affirmation as a mere conformance to the letter of the law, not its spirit, and look with suspicion upon a person who declines to take an oath. I learned this from two years' service on an election board. Therefore, as previously stated, the editor of the Truth Seeker is a public educator. It is as senseless to ask a man or woman to uplift the right hand as it would be to insist that the right foot should be placed on an equal elevation with the shoulder during the recital of an affirmation.

I came back to the office last Saturday evening to act as a given point for a big political procession to pass in a certain time. All the processions pass this office. The streets were lined with thousands of spectators. It wasn't an O'Donnell parade, but, for all that, at the head of it there was Dr. O'Donnell, standing up in a carriage drawn by four horses, tipping his hat and bowing and receiving the plaudits as though the whole thing were in his honor. I understand that a certain element in a man's character popularly termed "gall" is necessary to complete success in this world. If this alone is necessary, O'Donnell is all right, although he wasn't elected mayor.

A feature in the parade reminded me that some months ago, on the way to Lake Chabot, back of Oakland, we passed a fruit-canning establishment, in the fields surrounding which were swarms of Chinamen gathering berries and fruit. The feature of the parade which recalled this fact was a big wagon bearing upon its transparent covering the words, "Protection for American Industries forever!" The canning establishment and the wagon bear the name of the same firm.

The procession was a great success numerically and longitudinally. In the course of the evening a bottle of ink was upset upon our desk, some type in one of Secretary Stevens's articles got pied, and a page of Mr. Putnam's manuscript blew out of the window overlooking California street. For once the printer followed copy, and the lost manuscript was recovered. These trifling incidents varied the monotony of witnessing a procession composed largely of persons who had on the night previously paraded in honor of the party opposed to the one under whose auspices they were then shouting vociferously. I do not wish by these remarks to reflect upon the management of either demonstration. We are one united people.

The presidential election resulted exactly as I expected it would. Since the opening of the campaign I have been convinced that one of the candidates would be elected, and now I see no reason to doubt the correctness of that surmise. If I could have known exactly which one, and had made the knowledge public, the country might have been saved from the throes of political excitement which convulsed it last Tuesday.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The country seems to have gone for Harrison and Morton.——The Free Public Library has opened in its new quarters at the new City Hall.——The Japanese residents of San Francisco celebrated last Sunday the 36th birthday of the emperor of Japan.——Nearly all the whalers reported frozen into the Arctic sea have reached this port. The danger was less than the accounts stated, and two of the captains who went buggy-riding last Sunday and sustained severe injuries in a smash-up say that the sea is safer for mariner than the shore.——The discovery of a new comet, a small one, is reported from the Lick Observatory.——The Skookumchuck river threatens property at Centralia, W. T.——Great preparations are being made for the Moody revival campaign, to commence January 6th. A Bible training class meets every Tuesday evening, conducted by several of the city pastors, training workers for efficient labor among the inquirers; and a large choir is being organized and drilled.

The president has appointed Nov. 29 as a day of thanksgiving and prayer.——About twenty men were killed by an explosion in a coal mine near Lock Haven, Pa., on the night of Nov. 3.——Canadians favor the abdication of Queen Victoria in favor of the Prince of Wales. They say her majesty is in her dotage and an encumbrance to the throne.——The New York Herald claims that Dr. McGlynn threw the vote of the Anti-Poverty Society in favor of General Harrison, expecting in return the mission to Italy. Dr. McGlynn desires to be in a position to rebuke his ecclesiastical superiors.——A Chicago girl named Mary Cunningham married four years ago at the age of 15 to escape a convent. She has never lived with her husband and is now suing for a divorce.——Mrs. Cynthia Leonard was candidate for mayor of New York, but the inspectors refused to register her as a voter.——The Anarchists of Chicago will commemorate on Nov. 11 the anniversary of the hanging of their comrades. They will not parade, but will hold a "festival of sorrow." Poems will be read, songs sung and a drama, "The Unjust Sentence," in which all principal actors in the Haymarket tragedy and its consequences will have parts, will be enacted.——The expert appointed by the court to examine the Keely motor to determine whether or not it is a fraud, has reported that the generator shown him by Keely was a stationary structure, dependent upon the manipulation of an operator, and could by no possibility be made self-operating.——Alice D. Stockton, the candidate of the Equal Rights party for governor of Massachusetts, is only 26 years old.

A coolness has arisen between the Vatican and Germany on account of the pope's refusal to comply with Count Herbert Bismarck's request that he should use his influence in behalf of government candidates for the Landtag.——Cardinal Newman, of London, who has been sick, is out of danger.——The London journal, Vanity Fair, says, speaking of the betrayal of Lord Sackville West: "It is a mistake to send a gentleman to represent England in Washington."——The German paper, the Tagblatt, defies the emperor thus: "We shall continue to render unto the emperor the things that are the emperor's, and unto the free constitution what belongs to it."——The Catholics of Australia and India have presented the pope with a million dollars.——A prominent bookseller of London, has been tried for publishing the works of M. Zola, which were held by the courts to be improper literature, and fined £100.——In an accident near St. Petersburg, Russia, last week, to a train containing the imperial family and suite, twenty-one attendants were killed and thirty-seven seriously wounded. The czar was uninjured.

OCEAN LIFE.

A PARODY.

How nice to watch the dolphins play
About the vessel's plunging prow;
To see the whales come up and "blow,"
And watch the flying fish astray,
The trembling porpoises' array,
As these sea-hogs roll in the flow—
What comfort in the proofs they show
Of wisdom perfect, love au fait!

Why is it, when we mortals wish
To worship the all-ruling God,
Who made the earth and "land of Nod"
From nothing; in a monstrous dish—
Why is it that the devil-fish
Will eat the suckling cod? —SI SLOKUM.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places returning from the East:

M't'n Home.... Idaho, Nov.	2	Pasco..... W. T.	"	22-23
Boise City..... "	3-4	Portland..... Or.,	"	25-26
Emmetts..... "	5-6	Vancouver..... W. T.,	"	27-28
Pendleton..... Or.,	8-9	No. Yamhill..... Or.,	"	29-30
Walla Walla.... W. T.,	10-11	Scappoose..... "	Dec.	2
Spokane Falls.... "	14-16	P't Townsend.... W. T.,	"	4-6
Davenport..... W. T., Nov.	17-19	Snohomish..... "	"	10
Sprague..... "	20-21	Stella..... "	"	15-16
		Silverton..... Or.,	"	22-23

It is desirable to announce the remainder of the appointments at the earliest possible moment. Will friends who wish lectures write at once to S. P. Putnam, as above. Mr. Putnam will be in San Francisco during the month of January.

W. F. JAMIESON will commence his winter lecture campaign Nov. 15, speaking in Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas. He will receive subscriptions for FREETHOUGHT. Address him at Monte Vista, Col.

PROF. D. G. CROW will fill engagements to lecture at points between St. Louis, Mo., and Denver, Col. Terms on application. Secularism, Science, and Religion are general terms covering the subjects of his lectures. State time and give particulars. Address him at Hiawatha, Kan., until further notice.

CHARLES WATTS intends making a lecture tour through Kansas, Colorado, and Utah next January and February. Friends on those routes desiring lectures at that time from Mr. Watts should write him at once, as he is now filling up his list of engagements. Address him direct, 282 Sumach street, Toronto, Ont., Canada.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

R. B. WESTBROOK, LL.D., PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary..... 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
 OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treasurer..... Rochelle, Ill.
 E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com..... 120 Lexington ave., New York
 MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com., 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll, ex-President,

T. B. Wakeman, "

Samuel P. Putnam, "

James Parton,	E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Horace Seaver,
Charles Watts,	A. B. Bradford,	Leonard Geiger,
Lucy N. Colman,	Juliet H. Severance,	Mrs. M. J. Olds,
Photius Fisk,	J. H. Burnham,	Mattie P. Krekel,
Wm. Redfield,	J. A. Smith,	M. M. Secor,
H. P. Mason,	W. L. Willis,	N. D. Goodell,
Thos. J. Truss,	W. W. Forward,	H. L. Boyer,
G. A. F. de Lespinasse,	Roman Staley,	Daniel A. Aeri.

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

CALIFORNIA.

N D Goodell, Sacramento...	$25	T J Conley, Visalia.....	$5
A Schell, Knight's Ferry...	25	B B Rockwood, San Pasqual.	5
W H Pepper, Petaluma.....	10	Wm A Fisher, Fresno.....	5
S P Putnam, San Francisco..	10	Secular Union, San Jose....	5
O T Davies, Brighton.....	10	L and K Parker, Anaheim..	2
Ranford Worthing, San Diego	10	Bidwell & Son, San Diego..	3
W F Freeman, Stockton.....	10	John McGlashan, Ukiah....	2
R F Grigsby, Calistoga.....	10	C Severance, Los Angeles..	2
Philip Cowen, Petaluma....	5	L W Gallup, Westminster...	1
L P Langley, Santa Barbara.	5	A F Smith, San Diego.....	1
John Robinett, Nipomo.....	5

COLORADO.

Secular Union, Denver.....	$50	B L Smith, Forks Creek.....	$5
Richard Muller, ".....	5	Charles Ambrook, Boulder..	1
M H Coffin, Longmont.....	5	N R Howard, ".....	1
DAKOTA		N S Johnson, Sioux Falls...	$5

ILLINOIS.

Secular Union, Chicago.....	$100	Thos Goddard, St Johns....	$5
Mrs G L Robertson, Chicago	10	R and S Newkirk, Paxton...	5
Otto Wettstein, Rochelle....	10	Jos Haigh, Chebanse.....	2
C E Nicodemus, Forreston..	5

INDIAN TERRITORY

Chas F Blackburn, Nicholia.. $2

W L Willis, Kokomo.....	$25	John A Geeting, Washington	$1
IDAHO.

G A F de Lespinasse, Orange..	$25	Jacob Geier, Cromwell.....	$5
Secular Union, Fayette Co..	10	Phil A Derr, Creston.....	5
Alex Risk, ".....	5	Secular Union, Leon.....	2
Wm Redfield, ".....	5	Wm Lindsay, Ottumwa.....	1
Daniel Davis, ".....	5	Katie Kehm, ".....	1
D Q van Ufford, Orange City	5	F D Sheldon, Salem.....	1
MARYLAND		Aaron Davis, Frederick....	$5

MASSACHUSETTS.

Photius Fisk, Boston.....	$20	G N Hill, Boston.....	$3
---------------------------	------	-----------------------	-----

MICHIGAN.

J H Burnham, Saginaw.....	$10	E Carpenter, Charlevoix....	$2
J Francis Ruggles, Bronson..	5

NEBRASKA.

G Babson, Seward.....	$25	J Stahl, Stanton.....	$3
Wm Trumbull, Lincoln.....	5	E Underburgh, Stanton.....	2
P Helmerick, Stanton.....	3

NEW MEXICO		Prof D G Crow.....	$10
------------	--	--------------------	------

NEW YORK.

Dr E B Foote, Sr. N. Y. City	$100	A Horowitz, Hudson.....	$5
Thos Moneghan, ".....	50	Wm Peck, ".....	5
Leonard Geiger, Hudson....	50	J Wolf, ".....	5
J A Smith, ".....	50	F S Breckell, Rochester.....	5
Dr. E B Foote, Jr., N Y City	25	Burnz & Co., N Y City.....	5
T R Burroughs, Chatham.....	10	W H Tyree, Lexington.....	5
Mrs L Geiger, Hudson.....	10	J J McCabe, Albany.....	5
Josephine Duane, N Y City..	5	J Ray, Hudson.....	2
Lucy N Colman, Syracuse...	5	H P Marsh, Palmyra.....	1

OHIO.

E H Smith, Alliance.....	$25	Secular Union, Alliance....	$10
A D Swan, Kent.....	25	" " Kent.....	10
N Eggleston, Aurora.....	25	John Downes, Steubenville..	5
J Sedgebeer, Painesville....	25	M H Woodbury, E Rockport	5
Secular Union, Cleveland....	25	Mrs Mary Smith, Cleveland..	5
Marius Heighton, Kent.....	25	Guy C Irvin, Warren.....	5
Mrs S S Rockhill, Alliance..	10	F S Montgomery, Shepherd..	5
Mrs Wm Seville, Columbus..	10	John F Kryder, Alliance....	3
		John Jaynes, Akron.....	2

OREGON.

Secular Union, McMinnville	$50	A F Neunert, Portland.....	5
" " Coquille...	20	R H Scott, Scott's Mills....	$5
" " Coos Co....	20	B F Hyland, Corvallis.....	3
" " Silverton...	20	Henry Wilbern, Eagle Creek	1
" " Molalla....	10	R J Devine, ".....	1
" " Stayton....	10	H McElsander, ".....	1
Secular Union, Portland....	10	W W Jesse, New Era.....	1

PENNSYLVANIA.

J O Bently, Philadelphia....	$100	Eli Wrigley, Pittsburgh....	$5
League, Linesville.....	25	W B Moile, Tarentan.....	5
Wm Whittick, Dushore.....	25	Jacob Tausig, Harrisburgh..	5
Hudson Gates, Alleghany Co	20	A W Cook, Shannon.....	5
K Hellenstall, Pittsburgh...	10	Mrs S W Cook, New Brighton..	5
Mrs L J Demarest, Alleghany	10	Mrs A E H Woods, ".....	5
Mrs Lizzie Cutshall, ".....	10	John S Byers, Greensburgh..	5
Hon A B Bradford, Enon Val'y	10	John Bieler, Pittsburgh....	3
Mrs A Cutshall, Alleghany..	5	Ernest J Jones, ".....	2
Samuel Luse, Waynesburgh..	5	A E Aggess, ".....	2
H H Null, Greensboro.....	5	C F Knight, ".....	1
Truth, Pittsburgh.....	5	Alfred Augher, ".....	1
Wm M Smith, Pittsburgh....	5	Jno A Jacobs, ".....	1
J H Huff, Pittsburgh.....	5	S E Price, ".....	1
J K McIntyre, Greensburgh..	5	A friend, ".....	1
Geo Cook, Pittsburgh.....	5	Joe Finkelthal, ".....	1
I J Cutshall, Alleghany....	5	Walter Hague, ".....	1
E Driefus, Pittsburgh.....	5	W E Baker, ".....	1
Mrs C McGourty, Pittsburgh	5	N Baker, ".....	1
M Hoelscher, Pittsburgh....	5	A friend, ".....	1
L J Kauffman, Pittsburgh....	5	D G Litel, ".....	1
		Miss Bertha Haven,.....	1

UTAH.

Chas de LaBaume, Uintah...	$5.00	D L Evans, Goshen Valley..	$2.00
Wm Reynolds, Wasnhip.....	2.50	Peter Nelson, ".....	1.00
W O Williams, Tooele.....	2.00	Chas Crane, Kanosh.....	1.00
J W White, Goshen Valley..	2.00

VERMONT

John D Powers, Woodstock. $15

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

W & J Harper, Colfax.....	$3	J W O'Keefe, Pasco,.....	$2
WEST VIRGINIA		Herman H Bohda, Martinsburg	$6

NOTES FROM THE SECRETARY.

After the incidents and labors which the Pittsburgh Congress necessarily entailed, it was something of a relief to find myself journeying toward the city of "Brotherly Love," to pay my respects to President Westbrook, and to perfect our plans for the future. The doctor was not at home on my arrival at Philadelphia, so I passed on to New York, anxious to meet ex-Treasurer Eckhard, and very much regretted his being so suddenly called out of town after my arrival, so that my visit to the metropolis was of comparatively little avail, though full of pleasant memories.

Next morning I greeted the Truth Seeker people and occupied the sanctum with the jovial "Gene" for several hours, and tried to unravel the mysterious hieroglyphics on the various pieces of paper which comprised the much-to-be-corrected pledges or "Roll of Honor." If there are any further errors, please put them down to the umpire, or the first base.

Thursday evening our late president and Eugene Macdonald and the secretary were charmingly entertained by the lovely Lares and Penates, the only divinities of Colonel Ingersoll's household—his fascinating daughters, of whose grace, beauty, and accomplishments so much has been written, which falls so short of the reality, that it would be a hopeless task for me to attempt it. Both these young ladies showed an unusual degree of interest in FREETHOUGHT, which they apparently read with avidity.

But here comes the beaming countenance of the intellectual luminary of the nineteenth century—the central sun around whom all the greatest of our day can only hope to become feeble satellites; whose grouping of words with the force of logic forms a new era in English literature, and whose imitators will be legion for centuries; who takes the harp of humanity and plays a symphony which touches a tender chord throughout the civilized world, and, spell-bound, the world eagerly listens; whose logic, like diamond-pointed drills, is rending the "Rock of Ages." Before the thunderbolts of this modern Vulcan all orthodoxy trembles.

We are all warmly welcomed and soon enjoying the colonel's sparkling conversation on the candidates, Chicago, and the tariff, while he almost involuntarily perpetrates bon mots with the spontaneity with which corks fly from champagne bottles. We also had the pleasure of meeting Captain and Mrs. Baker, and Col. Tom Ochiltree, the brilliant Texan congressman.

Friday evening found us at the Manhattan Liberal Club, the Mecca of Liberalism in the East, which the "man with a badge-pin" has made famous by his reports, which were enjoyed by those a thousand miles away with possibly more relish than the participants. Here we met the Drs. Foote—ever to the fore in freedom; our scientific sage, T. B. Wakeman; that thorn in the side of St. Anthony, E. W. Chamberlain; the redoubtable Captain Clark, and Mr. Oppenheimer.

Mr. Putnam was the lecturer of the evening, receiving a hearty welcome from his old-time associates, and giving them a rousing discourse on the "Reign of the People." Cynthia Leonard, Dr. Gunn, T. B. Wakeman, Belva Lockwood—the presidential candidate—and yours truly, took part in the free-for-all discussion which followed, and, if not instructive, the remarks were so widely divergent that it was at least entertaining.

T. B. Wakeman called the club's attention to a practical case of persecution, where St. Anthony was trying to reign over the people, and Dr. Kinget, a member of the club, in particular, and called for some one, not a lawyer, to go Dr. Kinget's bail in the sum of $500. Mr. Thomas Monaghan—an enthusiastic Liberal of means—promptly volunteered, and the preliminaries were soon settled for the defense.

At the invitation of Dr. Foote, Saturday afternoon found Mr. Putnam and the writer whirling over the New Haven railway, through charming suburban towns, to Larchmont Manor, the doctor's summer Elysium. Larchmont Manor is seventeen miles from the city, situated on the mainland side of Long Island sound, and is the Eden of the Eastern capitol, owned by a wealthy corporation who exclude stores and allow nothing but handsome residences to be built. From the depot a street railway curves around its broad acres, giving an enchanting view of dell and dale, of sylvan English-like lawns, of wood and copse, of pleasant cottages whose architecture is, as usual, intermixed with the beautiful and the grotesque.

We alight to inspect a new mansion Dr. Foote is erecting which will cost many thousands, and pass on to his home, overlooking the sound. Sitting on his ample veranda we view the sun's declining rays reflected upon the waters, while the golden-tinged October foliage marks a strong contrast with the moss-covered fire-rocks at our feet which tell of the convulsive throbs through which our planet has passed. It is a scene that will live in our memory as long as life lasts.

R. B. WESTBROOK, LL.D.

Tall, well proportioned, of distingue appearance, gray locks covering like a plume a massive, well-poised head, affording ample proof why Dr. Westbrook left that "pent up" Presbyterian ministry; his blue-gray eyes are keen, kindly, and penetrating, and a clean-shaven face reveals a firm, though pleasant mouth, and a chin denoting energy and decision. In form and feature Dr. Westbrook betokens mental vigor, physical energy, and great nervous activity; and while his appearance is that of the student and scholar, he also possesses the carriage of a soldier.

R. B. Westbrook, D.D., LL.D., was born in Pike county, Pa., in 1820, and his family are noted as pioneers of freedom, his ancestors having fled from Holland in 1620 for the sake of religious liberty, and settled on the manor lands of the patroon Van Rensselaer.

R. B. Westbrook's early educational advantages were limited to the common district school and the old Delaware academy, and he was expected to make himself generally useful about the farm, the barn, and the wood-pile. He taught a common district school and "boarded around" before he was seventeen, and soon after taught in the Delaware and Milford academies. He turned his attention to theology and was admitted to the New Jersey Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church. In 1852, he withdrew from that denomination and joined the Presbyterian church, with the full consent and commendation of his former associates. While pastor of the Presbyterian church of Burlington, N. J., in 1853, Princeton College conferred upon him the degree of A.M. In 1854 R. B. Westbrook was appointed secretary of the American Sunday-school Union, a post he held for seven years.

When Dr. Westbrook retired from that important trust he entered the law department of the New York City University, and received in due course the degree of LL.B. Pressing ahead of his class he was, before graduation in 1863, admitted (after a rigid examination of several hours under the judges of the supreme court) to the New York bar, and in 1869 was admitted as attorney and counselor in the supreme-court of the United States at Washington, D. C., although his practice was chiefly in the supreme court of New York.

In 1864 Dr. Westbrook was suspended by his presbytery for "abandoning the ministry and engaging in a secular profession," since which time he has maintained a position of ecclesiastical independence.

In 1870 Dr. Westbrook published a work on "Marriage and Divorce;" in 1882 another on "The Bible: Whence and What?" and four years ago, a third on "Man: Whence and Whither?" His books, published by Lippincott, have been very favorably noticed by the press generally and extensively circulated, and are able defenses of the essential principles of morality while dissenting from prevalent theological dogmas. The Wagner Free Institute of Science conferred on Dr. Westbrook the honorary degree of LL.D., and the noble founder, before his death, insisted upon his becoming its treasurer and trustee.

Dr. Westbrook is best known to the Liberals of America for his gallant fight, single-handed and alone, against the violation of the will of Stephen Girard by the trustees of the institution bearing his name, having given a series of lectures in the City Institute of Philadelphia on that topic, paying all the expenses, and, more recently, published a work entitled, "Girard's Will and Girard College Theology," which is the clearest exposition of the whole subject ever given.

That Dr. Westbrook steps out from a high social position, which his wealth and talents assure him, to attack this gigantic injustice is a source of annoyance and wonderment to his conservative associates, but is the grandest indication that he, in common with the Westbrook family, possesses a love of liberty and firmly resists all tyranny. With Dr. Westbrook this whole fight is purely a matter of conscience, he believing that the daily violation of the will of the founder of Girard College is not adapted to promote that for which this noble charity was founded—"the purest principles of morality."

Possessing executive experience, splendid ability, intellectual and physical vigor, Dr. R. B. Westbrook seems in every particular pre-eminently adapted to meet the requirements of the Congress, and, as our standard-bearer, make a splendid record this year for Secularization of the state.

E. A. STEVENS.

THE ENEMIES OF THE REPUBLIC.

With the permission of the editors I would like to express some free thoughts on our public unsectarian schools and the Roman Catholic church.

It is frequently said by some of our political aspirants, who are desirous of gaining political influence in order to secure some fat office, that the public school system is a settled institution, and that the American people will take care of our schools throughout the different states.

While I, as a citizen of this republic, have as much confidence as any one in the strong common sense and patriotism of the loyal masses of our people, I at the same time know that a certain political church is seeking to destroy not only our free public school system, but also all our free and liberal institutions throughout the American Union.

Priestcraft, whether it goes under the name of Protestantism or Catholicism, is about the same, and is antagonistic to all institutions that have not its sanction. While Protestantism is divided into a number of sects, with no general or supposed infallible head, it is powerless, to a great extent, of doing any great and terrible evil. But this is not the case with the papal hierarchy of Rome. This institution is a grand and perfect organization for evil. Catholics have an infallible head at the Vatican at Rome.

They are organized in companies, regiments, brigades, divisions, and grand army corps throughout the world. There is no military body in Europe or America so perfect in organization and discipline as the Roman Catholic church to-day. The Catholic openly proclaims "that the present pope of Rome is Christ's vicar-general, and is the true and only head of the Catholic or universal church throughout the earth; and that by the virtue of the keys of binding and loosing, given to his holiness by the savior, Jesus Christ, he has power to depose heretical kings, princes, states, commonwealths, and governments, all being illegal without his sacred confirmation, and that they may safely be destroyed; therefore to the utmost of my power, I shall and will defend this doctrine, and all his holiness's rights and customs, against all usurpers of the heretical authority whatsoever" (Extract from Jesuits' Oath). He further swears to destroy all governments not in subjection and ruled over by the pope.

All past history teaches us that Catholicism is opposed to all free education and the enlightenment of the masses; that home rule in Ireland means Rome rule; that all papal Catholics as a class are both superstitious and ignorant, and incapable of making good citizens so long as they are under the rule of the pope and his priests. And no Roman Catholic, either native or foreign born, should ever be allowed to become a voter and a citizen until he first disavows allegiance to the pope of Rome, a foreign potentate, who has sworn to destroy all governments not subservient to and ruled over by him and his cohorts.

Statistics show that the Irish Catholics fill our almshouses, poorhouses, jails, and states prisons; that 66 per cent of our criminals are Irish Catholics; that the pope's Irish robbed and plundered New York under the boss rule of Tweed, and when the taxpayers complained Tweed used to say, "What are you (the people) going to do about it?" that the bulk of New York hoodle aldermen, thieves, cut-throats, and evildoers of all kinds are Roman Catholics, and that the papal Irish are the only enemies we have in this country who desire to destroy our free public school system.

No one understands better than the Roman Catholics the importance of controlling the education of the young as a means of strengthening their church, whether by keeping those whose parents profess to be Catholics or by making converts. Hence their denunciation of the public schools as "Godless," and their claim for a part of the school funds for separate education. What they mean by "Godless schools," however, is not so much the schools in which no religion is taught, as those in which the Catholic religion is not taught.

An Eastern journal says: "Many liberal-minded Catholics send their children to the public schools because they are free, and education in them is more rapid, practical, and thorough than in Catholic schools, but they do so at the risk of incurring the displeasure of their priest. They are often severely lectured, both in the pulpit and privately, for venturing to send their children to the public schools, and in many instances parents have been compelled by their priests to withdraw children from these schools. It should be remembered, too, that the Catholic clergy act in all such important matters upon established principles and rules of the church, and under the direction of their superiors. If they appear to yield under the pressure of circumstances any of their claims it is only for a time, for although the church has the habit of modifying its course of policy to suit different conditions of society, it never abandons any of its dogmas or its claims to infallibility."

J. G.

"THE REIGN OF THE PEOPLE."

From the Denver Republican.

The followers of Robert G. Ingersoll and others interested in the liberal discussion of religious topics gathered at the Tabor Opera-house last evening, to listen to the able apostle of Freethought, Mr. S. P. Putnam.

Mr. Putnam when introduced by the chairman, Mr. F. W. Hankey, announced as his subject "The Reign of the People." He commenced his lecture with a clear exposition of the belief of his sect in regard to the principles which should govern human action. Drawing a striking picture of what he considered the religious errors of the day, he contrasted the present lamentable state of affairs with the millennium-like condition that might be expected when the Ingersoll regime should be inaugurated. In incisive language he touched upon the social and other evils with which mankind is confronted, and handled them in a masterly fashion from the standpoint of morality and reason.

Mr. Putnam is a fluent speaker, and his interesting lecture was listened to by the fair-sized audience with apparent appreciation.

The Whichness of the Which.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In the Truth Seeker of Oct. 6, the ex-Rev. Reynolds has shown himself badly hurt, and all because of an innocent-looking article of mine, published in the same paper two weeks previously, entitled, "Why not Print Both Sides?" which Eugene did, and I hope always will. In my letter I labored to soothe the perturbed spirit of my ex-reverend brother for using maledictions and billingsgate. I hated to see him sink himself to a level with the generality of Christian controversialists. But I see it is "love's labor lost." He turns upon me, who sought to do him good, and calls me bad names, acts just like a would-be prominent and voluminously indorsed Christian—uses the same terms. In my article I thought I employed not one word which was not urbane. Several times I kindly call him "brother." He returns my fraternal greeting thus: "Jamieson debating with Braden has had its contaminating influence. The odor of the skunk has permeated him." Is this the refinement he has brought with him from Christianity into Liberalism? Had he forgotten, too, that he offered to "contaminate?" As Artemus Ward used to say, "It's amoozin." He charges me with having a "mean, mercenary spirit." Oh, well, this ex-reverend friend denounced coast Liberals as he has me, reported by FREETHOUGHT, page 263, bitterly complaining of "the annoyance of having to contend with the little miserable meanness of some illiberals." How naturally he murmurs the same strain when I gently reprove him, through the Truth Seeker, for his coarse, Christian expressions, which I do not think will shed lustre on the Freethought cause.

Why it is that, no matter how pleasantly I debate with preachers and ex-preachers, I manage to arouse their Christian wrath, I cannot understand. They write as if they could boil me, and I all the time wondering what I have done to stir such a storm! Old mariners tell me that petroleum oil is good to smooth the waters. So I send you this. It is dreadful to think that our brother will go through life feeling this way toward Pacifics and Coloradians. Of the Liberals of Los Angeles he said, "with very few exceptions they have lost all sense of common honesty; have no respect for their word, and regard no agreement made by them as binding unless exclusively to their interest." To one bent on making a "real sacrifice for the cause of truth," there was his chance. He arrives in Santa Ana and publishes to the world that among the Liberals there he discovers an "adipose excrescence," and "poor drones, and would-be Liberals who lack the courage of their convictions, and who injure any cause to which they attach themselves." Thus he roams and foams. Let no one imagine for a moment that the fault is with Brother Reynolds, although he is much in the same condition as the man who stood out against his eleven fellow-jurymen: He "never saw eleven such obstinate men in his life."

Freethinkers condemn the Christian for his coarse personalities. How about the Freethinker who employs as copiously as the Christian such terms as "mendacious fraud," "bombastic fraud," "mercenary and nefarious," "low bully," and so on? Can Freethinkers consistently commend the Freethinker and condemn the Christian for the self-same violation of the rules of courtesy and good breeding?

Brother Reynolds strongly intimates that I do not think he was "honest" in offering to debate with Braden. I have carefully re-read my article in the Truth Seeker, and admit it does look as if I did not have an exuberance of confidence. But that is easily explained. He says my "contact with Braden has so demoralized and corrupted" me! As I have not seen Braden in seven years, it will be readily understood that his influence is strong and lasting. What would have been the consequences if Reynolds and Braden had collided?

The tenor of my article, which has lashed Brother Reynolds into fury, is this: "How such expressions can help the cause of him who uses them, is hard to discern—I mean a good cause, full of humanitarianism and Liberalism. Their use by Christians may not hurt Christianity, but it appears to me when employed by a reformer they injure manhood, true dignity, and self-respect." I said so then, and say so now. The brother then unwittingly proved that I am right by slinging a string of seven scurrilous paragraphs at me, but not a single attempt to answer "Why not print both sides?" He has brought the church style with him into Liberalism. FREETHOUGHT (June 2) said, "Business is business, and of course, being in the lecture business himself, he cannot be expected to take an interest in the success of any other lecturer or in a paper like FREETHOUGHT, which has a lecturer connected with it." I would rather be "mercenary" as he charges; but I can say this: I have always taken pleasure in extending to my brother and sister lecturers any help that would conduce to their success and for the benefit of our cause.

When he does one-tenth as much for the Freethought cause in giving as I have, I will value his attempts to lecture me, and when he recklessly declares that I would not "advocate or defend any cause only for the money," notwithstanding I refused $1,300 five years ago to advocate or defend a local political move, which the mass of the people in the county believed to be a good one, but which I could not indorse, it shows just how little he knows of the writer.

After twenty-nine years of lecture life, I feel fully justified in asking pay for lectures and debates. Show me the lecturer who does not require pay! I am generously compensated by Liberals for my lectures and debates, as a rule. They are common sense people who do not expect me to travel and lecture without paying me for my time. W. F. JAMIESON.
Monte Vista, Col.

Those Evil Advertisements.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I read in one of the issues of your paper that one of your subscribers wants his paper stopped because you had a certain advertisement. Now that you have taken it out I hope he will renew. I do not want to find fault with the way you run your paper, but I did not like to see the advertisement. I hope you will be able to run the paper without having to take more of its kind. I will say to those that do not like to see it, Do the same as I propose doing. I will agree to pay the sum of twenty-five cents per month for one year to help to pay for the space of the advertisement. Inclosed find postal note; one dollar on the balance of my year's subscription; fifty cents for "Ireland and the Pope," and one dollar towards the advertisement for four months. Yours truly,

Puyallup, Wash.

A. N. MILLER.

Shall It Be Published?

To the Freethinkers of the Coast:

I am informed by R. D. Allen, secretary of the Silverton Secular Union, of Silverton, Or., that the organization has at last effected a settlement in regard to the Braden-Underwood debate, which will take place in November, commencing the 21st. I suggest that Freethinkers contribute enough to have the debate reported and published verbatim. The Silverton Secular Union has gone to considerable expense to arrange the debate and I think that we Liberals not connected with that organization should contribute enough to have the debate reported. I would like the debate published, for the following reasons, which I hope you will all agree, with me, are good:

1. If the debate is published in book form it will find its way into thousands of homes of Christians who cannot attend the debate, but who will read. Thus the facts of Liberalism, and at the same time the weakness of Christianity, will be made apparent to thoughtful Christians and benefit our cause.

2. It will be an able array of arguments to put in the hands of the rank and file of Freethought, as Mr. Underwood is an able debater and never states a position that he cannot prove by facts.

3. It will be a stumbling block in the way of Braden and his class in the future.

4. It will prevent the Christian misrepresentations and falsehoods which always follow a debate that is not reported. No matter how badly Braden may get scored or beaten, the country will be filled with misrepresentations. Words will be put into the mouth of Underwood that he never would say. Every pulpit in the country will resound with applause of Braden; how Braden said this and did that, and the mass of the people will be in actual ignorance of the true facts. Newspaper reports would be against us and we Liberals would be powerless to refute their statements.

By all means, let us have the debate reported. I will contribute $5 and will buy fifty copies of the published debate to distribute. Now, fellow-Freethinkers, let every one who would like to help the cause respond. Communicate with or send contributions to the editors of FREETHOUGHT, San Francisco, Cal.; to R. D. Allen, secretary Silverton Secular Union, Silverton, Or.; or to my address. Let us respond promptly.
Hillsboro, Or. W. C. CLOW.

CHARLES WATTS ON THE CHRISTIAN "CHAMPION."

Without exception he [Braden] is the meanest and most contemptible and uncultivated specimen of a human being we ever met upon a public platform. No Liberal debater need heed the charge of "controversial cowardice" while he is ready to meet any, or all, opponents save one, and that one, let it be remembered, is acknowledged by Christians to be a "moral scavenger." We know that there are many honest, honorable, truthful, and decent men on the Christian side, and these we are always ready to meet in debate. Clark Braden is not one of them, and personally we refuse to again being a party to one of the greatest frauds that were ever associated with public platform controversy. —Secular Thought.

UNDER date of November 2, Mr. F. S. Matteson, of Aumsville, Or., writes: "The Underwood-Braden debate, at Silverton, is likely to default through failure of the Christian Committee to come to terms. In the mean time the 'Champion' is knocking around the country, speaking in little hamlets and country school-houses, on Prohibition and free trade; and abusing Infidels generally. Anything for a square meal and a bed. When he has 'exhausted his resources' around here, his next lay may be to 'champion,' 'the set of propositions that a defender of Christianity offers to support,' in San Francisco. Being 'the greatest living defender' of Christianity, it would appear to be only according to the eternal fitness of things that he should be employed."

"LEWIS THE LIGHT," the lunatic who imagines he has a mission to save the world, has sued Talmage's deacons for ejecting him from the Brooklyn Tabernacle, placing the damages at $10,000. That is not the method pursued by Lewis the Light's great Galilean prototype. He would have cleaned out the house with a rawhide.

A Marked Improvement Suggested.

"I will now proceed to dilate upon this text," said the minister as he polished his glasses with a most harassing air of deliberation.

"I wish he'd remodel his remark," said Jim Saywell, to his wife.

"In what way?"

"Make it die early instead of di-late."—Merchant Traveler.

FIRST Reporter—"I'm just about dead. I've had to fill about six columns a day all summer long."

Second Reporter—"That's queer. I can never get a decent report into the paper, never any room; have to boil everything down to the smallest possible space. What line of work are you in?" "I'm the base-ball man. What's your department?" "I'm on the religious racket."—Philadelphia Record.

A CLERGYMAN having forgotten his notes one Sunday, apologized to his congregation, saying that he would have to depend upon the Lord that morning for what he might say, but in the afternoon he would come better prepared

COLONEL THISTLETON has left with us a few bound volumes of his "Jolly Giant," an illustrated weekly, published in San Francisco ten years ago. The volumes will be sent by mail to any address for $2 each.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

LUCIFER THE LIGHT-BEARER.

DEVOTED TO THE

Frank and fearless discussion of basic principles in the field of governmental and social reform.

For more than eighteen months this paper and its publishers have been prosecuted in the courts by the agents of the Comstock Vice Society, for alleged violations of the U. S. postal laws.

Published weekly at Valley Falls, Kansas, at $1.25 per annum. Specimen copies free.

Miracles and Miracle Workers,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 10 cts.

Christian Absurdities,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 20 cts.

Both for sale at this office.

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question. Cloth, 75 cts. Address this office.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.
P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months.
50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine
paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents;
paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by
J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

he Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.
33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, b.t. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting. American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50.
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17,
$18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4,
being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best
14-karat gold-filled, gold watches, cases elegant and latest
style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies'
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $33.
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case.
Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1;
best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set
best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
0c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $3, $12.
Large field glasses, $3, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned $1. Springs $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free.
Best Work. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
BADGE IN PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of cut and smaller;
two-thirds size. War-
ranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2.75, $3.50. Large,
$5 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $3, $10; and
charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert
G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, "the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author,
Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum
notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Church-
man," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages.
Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1.50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron
D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

F. SANGROVE.

Merchant Tailor.

LATE OF LONDON AND PARIS,

All imported goods. Orders promptly attended. Prices moderate. Cleaning and repairing
neatly done.

Ladies' Cloaks and Riding Habits a Specialty.

F. SANGROVE, 104 FIFTH ST.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say
infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to
those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior
Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address:
Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San
Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS,
the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author—
Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 46.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - NOVEMBER 17, 1888

THERE is much to be said in favor of the Home Journal's opinion on the school controversy, to wit, "A Catholic has no more business to be placed upon the school board than the sworn foe to a prisoner has to be empaneled upon the jury which is to try him."

THE pope announces that he is satisfied with the result of the recent election held in the United States, and the San Francisco Chronicle is frank enough to say that "had the election gone the other way the Vatican would have expressed exactly the same sentiment, merely substituting Cleveland's name for Harrison's." Just so; a candidate whom the pope and his church did not approve of would not have been elected.

A READER has called our attention to the coroner's report for the city and county of San Francisco for 1886-7. The document states that out of 72 persons who committed suicide during the time covered by the report, 62 were Christians, 8 pagans, 1 Jew, and 1 Infidel. To show how forbearing we can be, we will refrain from calling attention to the Christian's claim that only Infidels commit self-destruction. The figures speak for themselves.

GOVERNOR WATERMAN'S Thanksgiving proclamation calls upon the people of California to "humbly testify their appreciation of the untold blessings which the Almighty has vouchsafed them during the preceding year." Perhaps it is unnecessary for people to be told of the blessings they have received before they can intelligently "testify" their appreciation of them, but what is the matter with the past year? Has it not brought as many blessings as the "preceding?"

THE Christian Leader expresses the conviction that "we have much less to fear from the Catholics as the enemies of the public schools than from the blatherskite assailants of the Catholics." If the Leader were not a Protestant journal we should infer that this remark had reference to the Methodist ministers, whom the Catholic Monitor denounces with weekly regularity as blatherskites. But of course we know better. None but Freethinkers are blatherskites from a Protestant point of view, and Atheists alone are "blatant."

THE literary editor of the San Francisco Star, in laying out a "course of reading," mentions "Religion—i.e., God, his dealings with man, man's relations and duties to him." A man once thrust his finger into a bucket of water, withdrew it, and then endeavored to define his duties and relations toward the hole. After a vast amount of cogitation he discovered that the hole existed only in his imagination. Many persons who have agitated the gray matter of their brain over their relations and duties toward a supposed God, have at length made a similar discovery as to the object of their study.

J. D. SHAW, editor of the Independent Pulpit, has recently returned to his home in Waco, Texas, after a ten days' lecture trip through that state. Speaking of the reception he met with, Mr. Shaw says: "The Christians behaved themselves well as a rule. We heard of some sneaking opposition; but they had precaution enough to let us alone, taking but little interest in our salvation. The conviction is, somehow, growing upon us, that they would much rather see us damned than saved anyhow. There are many honorable exceptions to this rule, we know, and we take some pleasure in conceding the fact. At Goldthwaite we found one of these, a lawyer. He sought us at our hotel and, with the fear of God before his eyes, endeavored to dissuade us from so 'wicked' a course as that of opposing the Christian religion. He labored under the temporary embarrassment of being most gloriously drunk, but for which he might have done the Lord better service than he did."

NEWS AND NOTES.

If anywhere there are golden days it is in Colorado. It is like dreamland, so wonderfully lovely is the bright, picturesque world which we behold. The mountains ray with dazzling hue, and glittering summits melt like waves along the glowing horizon. The broad plains seem like a palace floor, measureless and jeweled, where harvest pennons hang in lustrous folds. The beautiful city of Denver shines like a queen amid this autumn scene. Six thousand feet above the level of the sea, she overlooks a mighty land. Towering above are the everlasting hills, every rugged peak softened into sapphire glory as from the sunny sky a sea of splendor falls in entrancing radiance. Such a day, perfect and exhilarating, was Sunday, October 28, when every breath of the delicious atmosphere was like a drink of wine from the cup of the gods. It seemed to penetrate every fibre of one's being like flowing music. Friend Webber and myself, over the shining streets, more brilliant than streets of gold, adorned with elegant dwellings, lawns, and gardens, enjoyed as luxurious a journey as could be had anywhere on the face of the globe. Denver, amidst the blue hills and snowy summits, and sweeping her sceptre over the limitless plains, waves our flag upon its battlement, and our comrades here, catching inspiration, I believe, from the crystal-line skies where nature's fairest face is beaming, do lift our flag over the orthodox steeples, and the stars are above the cross. The audience at the Opera House was ardent and sympathetic, and its greeting was like the voice of ringing hope upon the pathway of toil.

Fred'k W. Hankey introduced me with a brief and eloquent address. He is a prominent attorney of Denver, and brings to legal acumen the graces of literature. He has written a critique of the Ingersoll-Gladstone controversy which is quite admirable in thought and language. I think he gives Christianity too much the benefit of the doubt. He admits, however, that the popular religion has no particle of standing room in the court of reason. When Christians admit the same there will be an end of all controversy.

The attitude of Mr. Hankey is that of many cultivated minds of to-day, namely, that Christianity is so entirely remanded from reason to faith that it is a waste of time to controvert its claims. Having no evidence, it cannot be destroyed by a denial of evidence. This attitude would be wise and just if Christianity were a gentle belief indulged in simply for one's own happiness, but being a cruel and intolerant belief, impatient of opposition, the battle against it must go on, for the battle is not simply for truth, but for liberty. The fundamental question is one of rights and not belief.

Our Denver friends, of course, don't always have the golden sunshine, and the way of Freethought is not without its ruggedness and difficulty. Many do not see the vast importance of the issue. They do not realize that it is justice against injustice, freedom against slavery. The earnest enthusiast, therefore, does not find the multitude by his side. However, the combat must go on, be there few or be there many in the ranks.

I was pleased to make acquaintance with Frank Stuart, editor of the Arbitrator, a Liberal reform journal, which is doing splendid work and should have the support of Freethinkers, for it opens its columns boldly to the discussion of the church in politics and history. Mr. Shed's opponent has evidently had enough of the facts and figures, and his gun's are silenced. Mr. Shed's "Roman Rule and Ruin" will appear in the columns of FREETHOUGHT. This dark and terrific side of religion and the church must not be overlooked. The amazing assumption of Cardinal Manning, and the blind belief of millions in the holiness of Rome, can only be met by the blazonry of its cruelties, crimes, impurities, and filth. The truth must be told even if it is not pleasant reading.

Mr. Stuart is the author of a pamphlet entitled, "Natural Rights, Natural Liberty, and Natural Law," and it is among the best expositions of these subjects I have seen. It declares the foundation principles of the Nine Demands, for if man has no natural rights then there are no demands. There is only a question of privilege. Mr. Stuart goes to the bottom of the matter, and his essay is a valuable contribution to Freethought literature.

I have had a bright and cheering time at Denver, even if the "majority vote" is on the other side. Brave hearts and burning convictions are with us, and these will make the golden to-morrow.

A long pull over the mountains, and a ride of thirty hours, brings me to Ogden. On the way I meet Comrade Ackley, of the U. P. R. R., overflowing with Freethought and free trade. He keeps things lively, and my journey did not seem so long as it would without his genial companionship. At Echo I had just time for a handshake with Fred Hirst and C. B. Reynolds. Reynolds has been doing some hard work in Utah, and is now striking Eastward. At Ogden, John A. Jost, poet and philosopher, halts not in good service. Ogden has about as many ups and downs for Freethought as any place along my route. I was disappointed in regard to hall, and there was no lecture on Tuesday evening. On Wednesday it began to rain, and by evening it was pouring down a steady stream. There was not a large number out, but a better audience I could not find. It was generous and appreciative, and I "bated no jot of heart or hope" for Ogden. Some day our banners will greet the sun of triumph. There is a kind of a contest between Ogden and Salt Lake City, as to which will yet be the metropolis of Utah. Ogden is advancing rapidly, and as a railroad and manufacturing point has few equals, and Salt Lake City will have a rival worthy of its prowess, and it cannot afford to loiter by the way.

The morning after the lecture was all that heart could wish in the way of splendor. The train sped alongside the bright waters and the purple hills. The sky, decorated with innumerable fleecy clouds, glistening over and among the distant peaks, made gorgeous pictures in the boundless dome. On we went, climbing the vast table-lands, rushing around the gleaming curves into the wide Cache Valley, upon whose bosom a dozen villages can be seen at a glance where the saints do dwell; but, alas! the sinners, also, are coming in and Zion is troubled. Not the earth itself, however, which here gives forth its wealth of fruit. On we speed, where the hills of Idaho press their foreheads against the sky. The sunset views are varied and wonderful in ever-changing radiance. The snow-capped hills appear like silver castles, and beyond, the masses of gold shape themselves to majestic halls and pillars. The stars begin to twinkle in the luminous dark, and one by one shine over the splendid ruins of the day that, like a shattered goblet, spills its effluence upon the barren peaks. We seem to be plunging into the great palace of the night, as the rattling train presses forward. The American Falls flash their white foam in music before our sleepy eyes. Long ere the sun is up I arrive at Mountain Home and close my eyes in peaceful slumber. Mountain Home is a little bit of a hamlet, but it has mighty prospects. Like Sheol, all it needs is water to make it a handsome and growing place. Already they make brick here and substantial buildings are being constructed. It is quite a shipping point for cattle and sheep. Alturas county, which is about as big as three New England states, will sometime be divided, and then Mountain Home will pull for the county seat, and I guess it will get there. The boom will come with the voice of many waters. I spoke in Odd Fellow's hall, and it was full. Freethought evidently prevails in the community, but the churches are beginning to push. The Episcopalians, this time, are ahead of the Methodists and build the first house of worship in the place.

Dr. Jennie Bearby was our pioneer at this point. Women are just as good workers for Freethought as they ever were for the churches, and I hope for the time when they shall have all the opportunities of a man. Then the world will march on. Our friend is not afraid to make her opinions known, and to stand at the front.

Two stalwart representatives came from the family of James Stout, who has a ranch about twenty-two miles from Mountain Home, a lovely place, where hot springs bubble that can boil a hog's bristles off in fifteen minutes. Mr. Stout, who is a stout Infidel, has evoked a paradise out of the bosom of the sands. I hope to go there sometime and behold what can be done without prayers or faith.

Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Stevenson are present all the way from Glen's Ferry, and good allies they are indeed. There is no such word as fail when we strike hands with such generous comrades. I have a cordial invitation to their ranch, some "summer's day" when my pilgrim feet can rest, where the horses and cattle roam over the sun-lighted plains. I look forward to this as a royal holiday.

Mountain Home, with its lofty outlook, miles and miles of sage-brush stretching away to vast and glorious heights, gives happy signals. Freethought is here, exhilarating as the shining air itself. Westward I go before daylight, but the brilliant dawn, making every mountain like a bonfire, beacons the way to nobler toil.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Nampa, Nov. 3, 1888.

THIS PAPER FOR 1889.

The fiat has gone forth that after January 1, 1889, FREETHOUGHT must be made one-third larger than at present and contain sixteen pages. There has been but one serious complaint from our readers, which is that the paper is not large enough. It is admitted that what is published hits off the subjects treated of in a manner which leaves nothing to be desired except more of the same. The communications have been excellent; many have received the indorsement of republication in other Liberal journals, and the same kind consideration has been accorded the editorials quite frequently. Mr. Putnam's "News and Notes" are universally commended, while even the feeblest efforts of his colleague have not been discouraged by a total lack of appreciation. Many contributions worthy of print, however, have failed to see the light because the space was wanting which the enlargement will supply.

It is perhaps unnecessary to say that FREETHOUGHT has not as yet attained what could properly be termed a phenomenal circulation, but it probably has more readers than any other Liberal paper ever reached in less than a year. As has before been stated, San Francisco has seen the failure of so many reformatory journals within the past few years that the confidence in our success, at the start, was not great. The most that could be promised us was a respectable funeral. Nevertheless several cautious subscribers who last January gave the paper a six months' lease of life have since granted us a year's reprieve; and the prospect is brighter now than it was at that time.

FREETHOUGHT will therefore be enlarged. The readers demand it; the encouragement we have thus far received warrants it, and the acquaintance we have formed with the Freethinkers of this coast gives us the greatest confidence in their good-will and continued support. The Liberals of the East, too, have been an ever-present help, and nearly a third of FREETHOUGHT's readers dwell upon the farther side of the Rocky Mountains. These we shall have always with us.

Along with its increase in size FREETHOUGHT hopes to realize a corresponding increase of circulation. We do not need to read our patrons a homily on the duty of Liberals. They know their duty as well as we could tell it to them, but if we can now and then sound a note that shall awaken them to its performance we shall only have discharged our own.

In soliciting subscriptions friends may call attention to the enlarged size of this paper for the future. The subscription price will remain the same as at present.

UNDER the title of "Roman Rule and Ruin" we begin this week a series of articles, by Z. Shed, on the iniquitous history of the Catholic church. When the series is completed the readers of FREETHOUGHT will have had the best and most concise history of the Roman hierarchy ever gotten together.

LECTURES AND ORGANIZATION.

Irving Hall on Post street, San Francisco, has been engaged for the meetings in January next. The Sunday evenings of the month will be devoted to lectures by Mr. S. P. Putnam. January 28 is scheduled for business connected with a California State Organization, and the 29th for the Paine celebration.

The question of making these meetings free to the public is under consideration. The chief obstacle, as usual, is the expense. The rent of the hall amounts to $112.50, and something will necessarily have to be paid out for advertising and other incidentals. It is confidently believed that enough Liberals of this city and the state are interested in these meetings to voluntarily contribute the major part of the necessary outlay. Mr. John Robinett set the ball in motion last week; Mr. Derming, of this city, has paid in his donation, and Mr. McGlashan, of Ukiah, writes that he is much pleased to see that the meetings are to be held, and that he will help to meet the expenses. That others will do the same there is not the slightest reason to doubt. We would be pleased if those who desire to contribute would advise us within the next few weeks, so that arrangements can be made for issuing tickets and circulars for distribution.

Those who come together on this occasion will take the matter of organization in hand. Meanwhile, suggestions are in order. Mr. Thomas Lee, of Grass Valley, writes:

"I will suggest that the Freethinkers on this coast organize a Union, members to pay one dollar a year, or more if they like, for the purpose of keeping lecturers continuously in the field. My dollar is ready at any time."

There are plenty of other dollars ready to be put into a movement that promises success and effective work. Such a movement, we believe, will be inaugurated at the coming meetings, whence it will go on, conquering and to conquer.

INFIDELS AND LIBERALS.

Something of a discussion is going on in the Freethought papers over the difference between the classes of persons distinguished as "Infidels" and "Liberals." Mr. Shaw, of the Independent Pulpit, holds that an Infidel is not necessarily a Liberal. An Infidel, he says, may be anything, good or bad. He may belong to the church, as many do, or preach the gospel if it pays. On the other hand a Liberal, while he is also an Infidel, is more. "He is honest, conscientious, humane, and benevolent. He loves others than himself and seeks their good as well as his own. He is an Infidel who never deceives you by joining the church or pandering to the church. He is never a poltroon, a sneak, a flunkey, nor a hypocrite. He looks all the world straight in the face, and speaks his real opinions. He has the courage of his convictions, and he will stand by them at any sacrifice of power, place, or plunder. He is kind, at least when not hounded to vexation; generous, tolerant, and respectful, at least to such as deserve respect. He loves justice and mercy, is never cruel, but hews to the line. He judges others as he wishes to be judged."

The difference between bare Infidelity and Liberalism is thus defined: "Infidelity stands for nothing but an intellectual conviction, but Liberalism stands for an intellectual conviction warmed into a living, sacrificing goodness and devotion to other lives."

The Secular Thought, of Toronto, Ont., publishes Mr. Shaw's views with evident approval, and Mr. Charles Watts, in his address at the convention of the Canadian Secular Union, referring to those mentioned by Mr. Shaw as mere Infidels, said:

"At present we are suffering from having in our ranks men who are with us, but not for us. They are the paupers of Free-thought, constantly taking from us without giving us anything in return. Be it remembered, such persons are not Secularists at all, their conduct is the very opposite to what our principles inculcate. They are "hangers on" in the Freethought camp, mere speculative adventurers, like Micawber, always waiting for something to turn up to their own advantage. Secularism is frequently blamed for the misdeeds of these parasites. Our duty in future must be, as much as possible, to guard our movement against their evil associations. There is in our midst a class of Free-thinkers who may be termed the rest-and-be-thankful section. Having escaped from theological bondage themselves, they manifest too little concern for those who are still under the influence of creeds and dogmas."

Everyone who has had any acquaintance with these rest-and-be-thankful people knows that their indifference is the most exasperating obstacle the Liberal movement has to encounter. They do nothing for the cause but injure it. Mr. Shaw states that the mission of his journal is not so much to make Infidels out of Christians as to make Liberals out of Infidels. He will find that the former is much easier to do. The Christian, if he be honest and sincere, may sometimes be enlightened and brought out into the light; and when he has espoused the new cause his first inquiry generally is, "How can I help the movement?" The indifferent Infidel, on the contrary, is proud to boast that he has been an Infidel all his life and that it has not cost him a cent.

The latter variety of Freethinker has, so far, found but one champion among Infidel editors. Dr. Monroe, of the Ironclad Age, "defends" him as follows:

"Ex-Rev. Shaw has no faith in Infidels. Liberals he can tolerate because they are still Christians, and therefore good, but he draws the line on Infidels, who are apt to be bad, and even when at their best are never pure enough for the society of the pious ex-pulpiters whose opposition to the church can too frequently be traced to matters personal to themselves. Many ex-reverend gentlemen are doing good work in Infidel harness, and the Rev. Shaw is amongst the number, but he oughtn't to despise Infidels who didn't come from, or were not driven from the ranks of clerical hypocrites and false pretenders."

This is a mere personal fling at Mr. Shaw, and is misleading because it misses its mark. Mr. Shaw was honored as a preacher, and he is honored none the less as a Freethinker from that fact. We know of no ex-preacher in the Freethought ranks who left the pulpit for any other reason than that he could no longer honestly preach the doctrines of the church.

On the question raised by Mr. Shaw it is difficult to speak definitely and with perfect fairness. A great many men who ask for no other term than "Infidel" to describe their religious state are noble and courageous workers. They may not be sufficiently clear in their minds about the definition of "Agnostic" or "Secularist" to accept either of those titles. Because they disbelieve in the Bible the church has called them Infidels, and they accept the issue. There are those, again, who choose to be called Liberals or Freethinkers. We prefer the last, without disclaiming either of the others. It is not a name but a condition that confronts us.

We believe in intellectual just as much as physical activity. The man who neither works or thinks does not live at all—he merely exists. The man who does but one only half lives. He who does both lives a whole life. Colonel Ingersoll remarks that man has advanced materially just to the extent that he has mingled his thought with his labor. It may be added that the world has advanced intellectually just to the extent that the thinker has given his thought the wings of speech and sent it out among his fellow-men.

The mere Infidel who contents himself with doubting and disbelieving accomplishes only the negative good of omitting to join the church. It is the intelligent working Liberal who sows, and his labor is none the less cheerfully done because he knows that others share the harvest.

A NEW ORGANIZATION BY ALL MEANS.

To every person who indorses the Nine Demands of Liberalism we would say: Let us take the Union at its word, and for the next year do all we can "to gather into harmonious relations the Liberals of every shade" into the Union. And if at the end of the year we find it an impossibility to unite the Secularists of this country in this organization, then let a general convention be called of all classes of Liberals and a new society organized. But before we do that let us make an honest effort to permanently build up the present organization. . . . Is it possible for the Liberals of the country to forget past differences and all unite and give them [the board of directors] the support that they must have to succeed? That question must be solved during the present year. We shall do all in our power to decide it in favor of a general union of every class of Liberals with the present organization, realizing how difficult it is to establish a new one.—H. L. GREEN, in the Free-thinkers' Magazine.

We see no reason why the Secularists, if there be such, who cannot now conscientiously join the American Secular Union should waste a year in deliberating whether they shall violate their consciences, and affiliate with the present organization, or form a new one. The Secular Union is now what it has been for the past four years, plus its new members and new strength acquired through the energy and executive ability of its officers, and minus the element which now graciously proposes to give it a new trial and to organize separately if it is found wanting. The next year cannot change the character of the present organization. It will, as previously, do its best to further the ends for which it was founded. Any person who indorses the Nine Demands and still opposes the Union must oppose it for personal reasons, because the Nine Demands are its sole platform; there are no other planks. The past differences are chiefly present differences of a wholly personal character. There is no division of sentiment among Secularists as to the justice of the Nine Demands, and none as to the best method of enforcing them, except among those who oppose organization altogether, and these certainly would not favor a new society. There have been, and are, a few dissatisfied persons who objected to the methods of the officers, and who withdrew, but their withdrawal did not by any means constitute a "difference among Liberals," as they might all be counted on the fingers of two hands. They were like the dissenting juror, and, leaving them out, the Liberals of the country are solid for the American Secular Union. If they were to form a new organization and bend their energies to supporting it, allowing the old society to pursue its course unhindered by their criticisms, a doubly good result would follow. Such an organization, it is true, would contain in itself the seeds of disintegration, as the Liberal League did at first, but it is better that those seeds should exist in a new body having no special province except to contain them, than that they should be resown in the old one, where their presence has already been productive of inharmony.

These dissatisfied Liberals are capable of good work for Free-thought, and hence we favor their organization for active service. There is always mischief for idle hands to do.

GENEROUS WORDS.

Mr. John E. Remsburg has published a Card with regard to the use of his name at the recent congress as candidate for president of the American Secular Union. Mr. Remsburg says:

"Had I been called to the presidency, I should reluctantly yet submissively have obeyed the mandate, and to the best of my ability performed its duties. But I know Dr. Westbrook, and I have tried to know myself, and with no simulated modesty I frankly confess that the one selected is by nature and education the better equipped for the position. Had I attended the congress, I should, not as a mere act of courtesy to Dr. Westbrook but as a conscientious performance of my duty, have voted with those who voted against me."

Concerning the past and present officers of the Union Mr. Remsburg adds:

"I, for one, feel indebted to the retiring president, Samuel P. Putnam, for his labors in behalf of Freethought, and especially for his three years of toil in connection with the American Secular Union. Our literature has been enriched by his pen, and the cause of mental liberty has been promoted by his services in the field. I believe that a more devoted, unselfish, self-sacrificing Secularist than E. A. Stevens does not live. For the Liberal cause he has unflinchingly endured privation and obloquy. Sustain him as he deserves, and the affairs of the office will not suffer in his hands. In Dr. Westbrook, E. A. Stevens, Otto Wettstein, Dr. Foote, and Mrs. Freeman, the Union has a splendid corps of officers. Let us stand by them. If they make mistakes, let us exercise a little charity. Let us realize the impossibility of securing other than fallible men and women for these positions. Let us try to realize also that we, who serve in the ranks, are not infallible. Our officials may err, and while we may pass an honest verdict upon their acts, this verdict may not always be a just one. Let us put away all petty differences and jealousies. Let us cease pointing out the specks of rust upon the armor of our comrades and present a united front to the common enemy."

These are generous words, and just. Mr. Remsburg knows, as we all know, that it was not himself but his ticket that was rejected at the congress. The Secular Union would be proud of him as its president. What the congress rejected was a scheme to remove without cause a tried and efficient secretary, and it did this irrespective of the merits of the opposing candidate. It was not so much a question of men as of justice. That Mr. Remsburg recognizes this fact is apparent, and we are of the opinion that Mr. Hoover sees it, too, by this time.

MRS. SLENKER has forwarded a number of copies of her Freethought novel, "The Infidel School-teacher," to this office. The book is indorsed by the eminent writer, "Antichrist," as follows:

"'Mary Jones, or the Infidel School-teacher,' is a delightful story of the conversion of a man to Infidelity by an Atheistic woman. As in the case of our first parents, so in this case the woman gave the man the fruit of the tree of knowledge and he did eat thereof, whereby he fell—that is to say, he fell into the arms of the Atheistic woman, and they twain became one flesh. The story purports to be a novel, but has none of the stilted hisfalutin style of novels in general, and reads as if it might be a plain narration of a fact."

We will send this story to any address at 20 cents per copy.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Truth Seeker starts with $100 a fund "for testing the question as to whether the provisions of the will of the late Stephen Girard are or are not being carried out." The fund should be added to until the requisite amount is raised, although it is most unjust that the expense of testing the question should fall upon Freethinkers. The state of Pennsylvania, as James Parton says, is behind the management of the institution, and the state should conduct the investigation. If it be found, as charged, that the will is violated, the state should begin proceedings against the trustees, laying the costs of court upon the defendants if they are found recreant to their trust. It is not customary for private citizens to pay the expense of prosecuting cases of this kind. Indictment should follow the complaint. The insult to Freethinkers is already sufficient without adding injury to it. Nevertheless, it is probable that Freethinkers will have to contribute the cost of the legal proceedings if any are instituted, which certainly ought to be done.

THE Spiritualists of California have a promising colonization scheme on hand. Mr. H. L. Williams owns about twenty acres of land on the coast near Santa Barbara, and on this he has it in mind to build up a colony, to be called the city of Summerland. The tract is to be divided into about three thousand lots 25x60 feet in size, at $25 each. With lots in the Summerland at this figure it is probable that prices in the New Jerusalem will go down.

EVERY issue of the Investigator received increases our admiration for Mr. L. K. Washburn, the orator of Paine Hall. Week after week he is writing and delivering addresses upon questions of the hour, and they are all marked by originality and ability. And still we gaze, and still our wonder grows.

OBSERVATIONS.

Our literature has been enriched by the remark of the Rev. Dr. Barrows, of this city, that "what we need is an average moral standard which all men will live up to." Mr. Ambrose Bierce, of the Examiner, rightly points out that this is a mathematical impossibility, as if all men lived up to any standard, some would live above it, and it would not be the average standard, but the lowest. Dr. Barrows's solecism was once paralleled by a correspondent of the Christian Advocate, who said, speaking of a pastor, that "he never fell below his average, and often rose above it."

It is apparent that the Sunday laws of New York will have to be so revised as to reach offenses like that committed by Rudolph Van Clief, of Port Richmond, L. I. Mr. Clief made a bet on the recent election, in the event of losing which he agreed to paint the big liberty pole in that town. He lost, and last Sunday, provided with a paint pot and brush, he shinned up the pole and began to redeem his pledge. A policeman commanded him to come down. Van Clief joked with the officer, and told him if he wanted him he would have to do some climbing, but finally slid down the pole, not, however, before upsetting the paint pot over the gorgeous uniform of the policeman. The latter collared Van Clief as soon as he touched the ground and took him before a justice of the peace, charged with violating the Sunday law. He was released on bail. The Sunday law needs to be so amended as to decide whether painting a liberty pole or a policeman constitutes an interference with "the repose and religious liberty of the community."

I received the other day a letter from Mr. Charles Watts. It was mainly a business communication, but at its close the writer observed: "'Progress of Madness'—have you ever heard of it?" The question takes me back to a Paine celebration in New York, at which Mr. Watts recited a poem with the above title. It delineated the progress of insanity, induced by the surroundings, upon a sane person confined in a madhouse. Mr. Watts rendered it with great effect, and in reporting the occasion for the Truth Seeker I said that the audience were visibly relieved when the spell of the orator was broken by the closing of the recitation. I meant this remark as a compliment to Mr. Watts's elocutionary powers, but he never could see it in that light, and always maintained that I reported the audience as fatigued by his performance. Hence his present query, and his frequent assurance, "I am not mad, I am not mad!" Those who imagine that I misstated the effect of the recitation should induce Mr. Watts to repeat it when they have an opportunity to do so.

The believers in Spiritualism scout the idea that the confession of the Fox sisters should have the effect of lessening their faith. And they are right. Faith requires no facts to feed upon. The further it can get from facts the better it flourishes. If Spiritualism would succeed as a religion it must do away with tests. It must cease its attempts to prove a future life by scientific demonstration. It must place its miracles back two thousand years in the past, and credit them with accrued interest compounded annually since that time. Its witnesses must be dead ones, who left no authentic depositions. If they demonstrate a future life the people will lose interest in it. When Leverrier predicted the appearance of the planet Neptune, the world was excited over the prediction. After the planet appeared the excitement ceased and has never been revived. Heaven and a future life must depend on no such unstable foundation as a mere fact. The fabric of a dream is alone sufficient, as witness the dream of Joseph touching the miraculous conception of his son, upon which rests the whole superstructure of the Christian church. When the Spiritualists thought they had demonstrated a future life they should have claimed the discovery as a contribution to scientific knowledge instead of submitting it as an item of religious intelligence, and building upon it a code of ethics and a creed. By making Spiritualism a religion its advocates placed themselves in antagonism to Christianity, whereas, if they had not done this, Christians might have accepted the mediums as their best witnesses, and the world would have been favored with endless discourses on the harmony between religion and science. "The Bible Sustained by Spiritualism," not "Spiritualism Sustained by the Bible," would be the plea. The new discovery would have the support of all the religious and secular press, and mediums, instead of having to scratch for a living, would be the high priests and veiled prophetesses in the loftiest tabernacles of the world.

I trust that Spiritualists now realize the gravity of their error.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

None of the six lady candidates for school directors in San Francisco were elected.—Colonel Bee, the Chinese consul, reports that since September over 2,400 Chinamen have left this country for home, never to return. Only 413 have arrived here during that time, so that, at this rate, it is a question of only a few years when the Mongolian will become scarce in the land. Already the question of a substitute for Chinese labor is agitating the vineyardists and other employers of coolies. The importation of negroes from the South is seriously talked of.—C. C. O'Donnell, who ran for mayor of San Francisco and failed to be elected, does not take his defeat calmly. In a speech last Sunday he is reported to have said: "No honest man could have voted against me. It was only the ex-convicts, opium-eaters, and thieves. It is my prayer, so help me God, that whoever voted against me may be paralyzed, and his soul go down to the infernal regions, where he belongs." O'Donnell will call for a recounting of the ballots.—A Republican blowing a horn and riding in a wheelbarrow decorated with flags and propelled by a perspiring Democrat has been a familiar spectacle in this city during the past week. Those who will bet on elections must pay the penalty.—The deaths in this city numbered 145 last week. An unusual number died of pneumonia. There are a few cases of smallpox in the city and county hospital.—The McCue carriage factory and the furniture establishment of Fink & Schindler, located on Market street, between Ninth and Tenth, were totally destroyed by fire about midnight last Saturday night, entailing a loss of over $100,000. Messrs. Fink & Schindler estimate their loss at $55,000.—Judge Sawyer has decided that the Chinese born in this country are citizens.

The president is said to be preparing his annual message to Congress. It will be devoted mainly to the question of tariff reform.—Several thousand sympathizers with the Anarchists hanged a year ago, commemorated in Chicago, last Sunday, the first anniversary of their execution. There was no disturbance, although the police prohibited a parade. There were also celebrations in New York, and Pittsburgh, Pa.—An explosion in a coal mine at Pittsburgh, Kan., last week, buried nearly one hundred miners alive. The bodies are being slowly recovered.—Mollie Fancher, the fasting girl of Brooklyn, N. Y., is slowly dying. It is asserted that during the past twenty years she has not taken nourishment sufficient to keep a healthy child alive for a week.—An Italian was lynched at Cortez, Nev., last week for the unprovoked shooting of a miner.—The heaviest snow-storm that has occurred at any season of the year since 1878, visited Kansas Nov. 9. Railroad travel was crippled, and telegraph and telephone wires prostrated. Portions of Missouri also suffered severely.—Ex-Senator Barnum, chairman of the National Democratic Committee, is prostrated from overwork, and likely to die.—Dr. Hostetter, the patent medicine man, died in New York Nov. 7.

Dispatch from Rome: "November 11.—The Vatican authorities express satisfaction with the election of Harrison, at whose hands the Catholic interests of America are not expected to suffer."—A powerful American syndicate is about to be formed for the purpose of building railroads in Siberia. Besides a large subsidy, the government will give 4,000,000 rubles yearly for the transportation of mails and convicts.—Another woman murder is reported in London, and no clue to the assassin.—A new steel sloop is building at Queenstown, Ireland, designed to cross the Atlantic and compete for the America cup.—The Parnell-Times case, on trial in London, drags slowly, and bids fair to last for many months.—The parish priest at Lampa, Chile, S. A., has "boycotted" the only school in the place by threatening parents with excommunication if they send their children to it. The Intendente of Santiago and the Minister of Public Instruction have been appealed to in the matter.

A FREETHINKER'S MONUMENT.

A monument just erected by our friend Mr. John McGlashan, of Ukiah, is likely to draw comment from the religious people of that town, inasmuch as, instead of the usual tombstone legends, it bears sentiments to which every Freethinker can subscribe. The work is thus described by the Ukiah City Press:

The monument is 9 feet 6 inches above the base—which is almost buried by the mound—and is made of a material known as American white bronze, said to be more durable than stone or granite; and certainly more handsome. The base is 28 inches square, and the column gradually diminishes to 10x10 at the top. There are four movable tablets 11x15 inches, bearing the inscriptions. Besides the words:

MY WIFE,
ELIZABETH, MCGLASHAN,

Died Nov. 8, 1887, aged 68 years,

MCGLASHAN,

The following sentiments are expressed:

"Truth is a blessing to which all men have an equal right by the laws of nature."

"Reason was given man to be exercised, not to be stifled."

"Reason must be our guide and judge in everything."

"Credulity is not a virtue."

"Investigation is not a crime."

"Whoever is afraid of submitting any question to the test of free discussion is more in love with his own opinion than with truth."

A HOME VERDICT.

From Pittsburgh Truth.

We do not hesitate to say that the Congress was a grand success, and we believe that the Union is now in a fair way to become what its founders intended it should be, a powerful organization to accomplish "the total separation of church and state; to the end that equal rights in religion, genuine morality in politics, and freedom, virtue, and brotherhood in all human life, be established, protected, and perpetuated." And from now on we feel certain that the affairs of the American Secular Union will be conducted in a judicious and business-like way, that it will be free of internal strife, that the programme of the Congress will be carried out to the letter, and that all lecturers who are willing to work for the upbuilding of the Union will receive fair and impartial treatment at the hands of its officers.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

R. B. WESTBROOK, LL.D., PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary ..... 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
 OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treasurer ..... Rochelle, Ill.
 E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com. .... 120 Lexington ave., New York
 MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com., 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll, ex-President,
 T. B. Wakeman, "
 Samuel P. Putnam, "

James Parton,	E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Horace Seaver,
Charles Watts,	A. B. Bradford,	Leonard Geiger,
Lucy N. Colman,	Juliet H. Severance,	Mrs. M. J. Olds,
Phoebus Fisk,	J. H. Burnham,	Mattie P. Krekel,
Wm. Redfield,	J. A. Smith,	M. M. Secor,
H. P. Mason,	W. L. Willis,	N. D. Goodell,
Thos. J. Truss,	W. W. Forward,	H. L. Boyer,
G. A. F. de Lespinasse,	Roman Staley,	Daniel A. Aeri.

NOTES FROM THE SECRETARY.

For several years a cheer'ul-looking, matronly English lady, accompanied by a handsome daughter in her teens, whose features bore the indelible stamp of refinement and intellectuality, were faithful attendants at our meetings. It was some time ere I learned that the young lady was training as a kindergarten teacher; that finally she had mastered Froebel, obtained her graduation certificate, and rendered the usual six months' service as a teacher gratuitously, but when she expected to procure a paid school, found that she was deficient in the all-important prerequisite—she had no church or ministerial indorsement, so that her expense, time, and studies were all of no avail. This is a swindle on the part of the Chicago Free Kindergarten Association, as well as an outrage. As Miss Laura Lee is one of our most enthusiastic young Freethinkers, she will stand by the Secular Union, school or no school, and at present is the efficient recording secretary of our Young People's Society.

However, my particular reason for bringing this sparkling but modest young lady into prominence at this time is the distinction she has just obtained, reflecting credit on her research as well as honor on the society.

A short time ago the Chicago Mail offered several cash prizes to those who would answer the most of one hundred and twenty questions, ranged in series of twenty each, of the most complicated character. They were "posers," I assure you. Miss Laura Lee undertook the task, determined to win for the honor of the Secular cause, and our Young People's Society in particular.

From these one hundred and twenty questions on grammar, history, and literature, with your permission, I will select a few specimens, as they may be of interest to others:

What is meant by saying of a person he was "oyster shelled?"

Who was the first person that openly in any public meeting held in Massachusetts, declared for a total independence of the thirteen American colonies?

Of what battle may it be said that it checked the advance of the Protestant reformation, and why?

Why are American ministers to foreign countries, and foreign ministers to the United States, not called ambassadors?

Quote three or more anachronisms of Shakespeare.

By whom was the game of dominoes invented, and why was it so called?

Two of the greatest men died the same day—who were they? Give date of their death?

Who suggested E Pluribus Unum, the motto of the grand seal of the United States? and from what Latin author did he borrow it?

Who was Aldiborontiphoscophornio? and who wrote about him?

According to parliamentary law, is "a motion to lay on the table" or "a motion to take from the table" in order? If not, why not?

Who said "Cervantes smiled Spain's chivalry away?"

What much-read novel of a celebrated English novelist concludes with the words, "The worst use you can put a man is to hang him?" Are the words original with the novelist? If not, from whom are they plagiarized?

Why was Mme. Maintenon called "La Belle Indienne?"

These questions may not appear very difficult of solution, but the trouble is that the popular impression as to the correct answers is so much at variance with the facts that when you imagine you have the answer, you are as far away as ever.

Out of the one hundred and twenty questions Miss Laura Lee answered correctly one hundred and twelve, securing the third prize, while Miss Lane, who took first prize, was only credited with one hundred and fourteen, and Mr. Ferry captured second with one hundred and thirteen. In reality, Miss Lane did not answer any of them, as her father—a literary man—found the answers and credited them to his daughter, while Miss Lee had to attend to her duties, and received little or no assistance. Under the circumstances she ought to have secured the second, if not the first prize. However, as the Mail only debarred its employees from competing, any person was eligible, young or old. Miss Lee appears as the personification of the Latin motto (Per augusta ad augusta), "Through trials to triumph," and we take this occasion to congratulate her on her excellent record. This being the third or fourth public prize won by young lady members of the Secular Mutual Improvement Society since its organization last May, we hope that its example may be a stimulus to our young Freethought friends everywhere to organize and prove to the world that the claim of Secularist for sterling mental capacity is not a sham.

E. A. STEVENS.

ROMAN RULE AND RUIN.—FACTS, NOT FICTIONS.

"He that recalls the attention of mankind to any part of learning which has been left behind it may be truly said to advance the literature of his own age."—Dr. Johnson.

The past history of the Roman Catholic church reeks with the foul miasma of brutal intolerance and revolting crime.

No cruelty has been too heinous to receive her sanction. No virtue has escaped her withering anathema.

She reached the acme of despotic domination and brutal tyranny, during the Crusades, by wading through the blood of two millions of human beings and polluting the pure air of heaven with the putrid corpses of more than three millions of her own debased adherents. When once this foul vampire had gained the ascendancy over reason she made the air hideous with the shrieks of the victims of her malignant hate, and for centuries, known as the Dark Ages, the heavens were fairly blackened with the smoke of burning human flesh. Then in her wild delirium and hate of mental liberty, she used the thumbscrew, rack, and torture to rivet the manacles of mental serfdom upon groveling ignorance, and through the most sordid frauds and scoundrelly devices known in criminal practices she robbed and plundered her votaries without let or hindrance.

Centuries ago, when this church wielded its despotic and undisputed power, criminals could go to one in authority and buy a permit, or indulgence, to perpetrate the most revolting crime, and then go unpunished after its commission. This money, gotten from the people by these criminal false pretenses, went into the pockets of the infallible popes of this church and other holy vicars of Jesus Christ, to be spent in the most lascivious debauchery.

Motley says, "The enormous impudence of this traffic almost exceeds belief. Through the Netherlands the price current (of these indulgences) was published in every town and village.

"God's pardon for crimes already committed or about to be committed was advertised according to a graduated tariff." Poisoning was absolved for eleven ducats. (See Motley's Dutch Republic, vol. 1, p. 73.) The historian, Motley, further says: "The traffic in bulls of absolution became horrible. Christians throughout Europe were offered, by papal authority, guarantees of forgiveness for every imaginable sin, even for the rape of God's mother, if that were possible, together with a life eternal in paradise, all upon the payment of the price affixed to each crime," and that while "criminals bought paradise for money, monks spent the money thus paid, in gaming houses, taverns, and brothels." (Motley, vol. 1, p. 71.)

The Christian historian, Mosheim, tells us that "superstition and ignorance were substituted in the place of religion;" that abbots and monks carried about the country the carcasses and relics of the saints, selling the privilege of touching them for sums of money; that the bishops sold indulgences to get moneys for their personal pleasures (Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, vol. 2, p. 286); that the impiety and licentiousness of the clergy arose to enormous heights; that discord, conspiracies, and treason were supreme; that the bishops were voluptuous, indolent, and sunk in licentiousness; that the ignorance of the sacred order was so deplorable that few could read or write (Ibid, p. 17), and that acts of councils, records, epistles, and whole books, were forged by these zealous fanatics, in order to more easily rob and plunder the credulous, on whom they imposed their glaring and fraudulent absurdities.

D'Aubigne says, "The gross and immoral conduct of the traffickers in indulgences was much talked of;" they paid their fare, their hotel bills, and for jobs of work, by giving a letter of indulgence for four, five, or any number of souls, as the occasion might require; and "in this way the diplomas of salvation were current in inns and market places like bank bills or paper money." (D'Aubigne's Hist. Reformation, p. 75.)

As early as 1261 the council of Mainz "denounced the pestilent sellers of indulgences, whose knavish tricks excite the hatred of all men, who spend their filthy gains in vile debauchery." (Lea's History of the Inquisition of the Middle Ages, vol. 1, p. 46.)

"Monks traveled through the different provinces and not only sold, with the most frontless impudence, their fictitious relics, but also deceived the eyes of the multitude with ludicrous combats with evil spirits." (Mosheim's Ecclesiastical Hist., vol. 1, p. 283.)

A book called "The Tax of the Sacred Roman Chancery" contains the exact prices to be paid for indulgences, some of which are here submitted:

"Robbing a church cost the sum of $2; perjury, forgery, and lying, $2; robbery, $3; burning a house, $2.75; procuring abortion, $1.50; killing a layman, $1; striking a priest, $2.75; priest to keep a concubine, $2.25; ravishing a virgin, $2; all incests, rapes, adultery, and fornication committed by a priest with his relatives, nuns, married women, virgins, concubines, with the joint pardon of all his w—s at the same time, $10." See Harvie's Church History, vol. 3, p. 147; Smith's Errors of the Church of Rome; Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, vol. 1, p. 594; Havin's Key to Popery, p. 263-4.

"The vices of the clergy were now carried to enormous lengths. . . . Writers are unanimous in their accounts of the luxury, arrogance, avarice, and voluptuousness of the sacerdotal orders." (Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, vol. 1, p. 351.)

"Not content with their sermons from the pulpit, they offered indulgences in the streets and markets, in taverns and private houses. Tetzel, a Dominican friar, executed his trust with the most shameless contempt of all decency. There was no sin, however monstrous, which an indulgence could not remit; and even if any one, which is doubtless impossible, had offered violence to the virgin Mary, mother of God, cried Tetzel, let him pay, only let him pay well, and all will be forgiven him." . . . "Erasmus declared that the monks spoke of indulgences in a manner that idiots could not endure. . . . They were sold in gross to the best bidder, and were by them dispersed among retail pedlars of pardons, who resorted to public houses, exhibited their wares, picked the pockets of the credulous, and spent the money at the gaming table, and in more scandalous objects which need not be mentioned." (Steinmetz's Hist. Jesuits, vol. 1, p. 47.)

"The gradual improvement of arts, manufactures, and commerce destroyed throughout Europe the whole temporal power of the clergy." (Dr. Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations, p. 361.)

"In the average of instances, . . . according to the natural order, the most civilized countries should all be Protestant, and the most uncivilized ones Catholic." (Buckle's History of Civilization, vol. 1, p. 190.)

"In all Catholic countries, where ecclesiastic influences have been permitted to develop unmolested, the monastic organizations have proved a deadly canker, corroding the prosperity of the nation." (Lecky's Hist. European Morals, 2, 10.)

The same writer (p. 159-162), says, "Love feasts became scenes of drunkenness and riot. . . . The commemoration of the martyrs soon degenerated into scenes of scandalous dissipation, . . . gross breaches of chastity were frequent. . . . The clergy kept mistresses in their houses, . . . virgins and monks lived together with a curious audacity of hypocrisy."

Plat de Vit, p. 186, says of Pope Boniface VIII.: "He entered the papacy like a wolf, ruled like a lion, and died like a dog."

The system of Copernicus was not only discouraged but forbidden to be taught, on the ground that it was contrary to the scriptures. (Hist. Spanish Literature, by Ticknor, vol. 3, p. 241.)

"Pope Urban VI. glutted his revenge against the cardinals who opposed his election, by having them tied up in sacks and drowned in the sea of Genoa." (Ibid, p. 206.)

In 1188 Cardinal Henry deplores the depravity of the clergy, "their gluttony, their luxury, their gambling and quarrels."

St. Bernard, 19-20, says, "When fornication, adultery, incest, palled upon the exhausted senses a zest was sought in deeper depths of degradation."

Grossette, bishop of Lincoln in 1250, sums up the cardinals as follows: "The clergy are a source of pollution to the whole earth; they are anti-Christ, and devils, making the house of prayer a den of robbers."

Peter of Pichendorf says that "the Catholic priests are fornicators and usurers, and drunkards, and dicers, and forgers," and boldly says, "What then?"

"The stupid monks," says Erasmus, "come to the altar reeking from their filthy pleasures. Confession, with them, is a cloak to steal the people's money, to rob girls of their virtue, and commit other crimes too horrible to mention." (Froude, p. 75.)

(To be Continued.)

INGERSOLL'S REPLY TO CARDINAL MANNING.

From the North American Review.

III.

No one will deny that "the pope speaks to many people in many nations; that he treats with empires and governments," and that "neither from Canterbury nor from Constantinople such a voice goes forth."

How does the pope speak? What does he say?

He speaks against the liberty of man—against the progress of the human race. He speaks to calumniate thinkers, and to warn the faithful against the discoveries of science. He speaks for the destruction of civilization.

Who listens? Do astronomers, geologists, and scientists put the hand to the ear fearing that an accent may be lost? Does France listen? Does Italy hear? Is not the church weakest at its centre? Do those who have raised Italy from the dead, and placed her again among the great nations, pay attention? Does Great Britain care for this voice—his moan, this groan—of the Middle Ages? Do the words of Leo XIII. impress the intelligence of the great republic? Can anything be more absurd than for the vicar of Christ to attack a demonstration of science with a passage of scripture, or a quotation from one of the "Fathers?"

Compare the popes with the kings and queens of England. Infinite wisdom had but little to do with the selection of these monarchs, and yet they were far better than any equal number of consecutive popes. This is faint praise, even for kings and queens, but it shows that chance succeeded in getting better rulers for England than "Infinite Wisdom" did for the church of Rome. Compare the popes with the presidents of the republic elected by the people. If Adams had murdered Washington, and Jefferson had imprisoned Adams, and if Madison had cut out Jefferson's tongue, and Monroe had assassinated Madison, and John Quincy Adams had poisoned Monroe, and General Jackson had hung Adams and his Cabinet, we might say that presidents had been as virtuous as popes. But if this had happened, the verdict of the world would be that the people are not capable of selecting their presidents.

But this voice from Rome is growing feebler day by day; so feeble that the cardinal admits that the vicar of God, and the supernatural church, "are being tormented by Falck laws, by Mancini laws, and by Crispi laws." In other words, this representative of God, this substitute of Christ, this church of divine origin, this supernatural institution—pervaded by the Holy Ghost—are being "tormented" by three politicians. Is it possible that this patriotic trinity is more powerful than the other?

It is claimed that if the Catholic church "be only a human system, built up by the intellect, will, and energy of men, the adversaries must prove it—that the burden is upon them."

As a general thing, institutions are natural. If this church is supernatural, it is the one exception. The affirmative is with those who claim that it is of divine origin. So far as we know, all governments and all creeds are the work of man. No one believes that Rome was a supernatural production, and yet its beginnings were as small as those of the Catholic church. Commencing in weakness, Rome grew, and fought, and conquered, until it was believed that the sky bent above a subjugated world. And yet all was natural. For every effect there was an efficient cause.

The Catholic asserts that all other religions have been produced by man—that Brahminism and Buddhism, the religion of Isis and Osiris, the marvelous mythologies of Greece and Rome, were the work of the human mind. From these religions Catholicism has borrowed. Long before Catholicism was born, it was believed that women had borne children whose fathers were gods. The Trinity was promulgated in Egypt centuries before the birth of Moses. Celibacy was taught by the ancient Nazarenes and Essenes; by the priests of Egypt and India, by mendicant monks, and by the piously insane of many countries long before the apostles lived. The Chinese tell us that "when there were but one man and one woman upon the earth, the woman refused to sacrifice her virginity even to people the globe; and the gods, honoring her purity, granted that she should conceive beneath the gaze of her lover's eyes, and a virgin mother became the parent of humanity."

The founders of many religions have insisted that it was the duty of man to renounce the pleasures of sense, and millions before our era took the vows of chastity, poverty, and obedience, and most cheerfully lived upon the labor of others.

The sacraments of baptism and confirmation are far older than the church of Rome. The Eucharist is pagan. Long before popes began to murder each other, Pagans ate cakes—the flesh of Ceres, and drank wine—the blood of Bacchus. Holy water flowed in the Ganges and Nile, priests interceded for the people, and anointed the dying.

It will not do to say that every successful religion that has taught unnatural doctrines, unnatural practices, must of necessity have been of divine origin. In most religions there has been a strange mingling of the good and bad, of the merciful and cruel, of the loving and malicious. Buddhism taught the universal brotherhood of man, insisted upon the development of the mind, and this religion was propagated, not by the sword, but by preaching, by persuasion, and by kindness—yet in many things it was contrary to the human will, contrary to the human passions, and contrary to good sense. Buddhism succeeded. Can we, for this reason, say that it is a supernatural religion? Is the unnatural the supernatural?

It is insisted that, while other churches have changed, the Catholic church alone has remained the same, and that this demonstrates its divine origin.

Has the creed of Buddhism changed in three thousand years? Is intellectual stagnation a demonstration of divine origin? When anything refuses to grow, are we certain that the seed was planted by God? If the Catholic church is the same to-day that it has been for many centuries, this proves that there has been no intellectual development. If men do not differ upon religious subjects, it is because they do not think.

Differentiation is the law of growth, of progress. Every church must gain or lose; it cannot remain the same; it must decay or grow. The fact that the Catholic church has not grown—that it has been petrified from the first—does not establish divine origin; it simply establishes the fact that it retards the progress of man. Everything in nature changes—every atom is in motion—every star moves. Nations, institutions, and individuals have youth, manhood, old age, death. This is and will be true of the Catholic church. It was once weak—it grew stronger—it reached its climax of power—it began to decay—it never can rise again. It is confronted by the dawn of science. In the presence of the nineteenth century it cowers.

It is not true that "all natural causes run to disintegration."

Natural causes run to integration as well as to disintegration. All growth is integration, and all growth is natural. All decay is disintegration, and all decay is natural. Nature builds and nature destroys. When the acorn grows—when the sunlight and rain fall upon it and the oak rises—so far as the oak is concerned, "all natural causes" do not "run to disintegration." But there comes a time when the oak has reached its limit, and then the forces of nature run toward disintegration, and finally the old oak falls. But if the cardinal is right—if "all natural causes run to disintegration," then every success must have been of divine origin, and nothing is natural but destruction. This is Catholic science: "All natural causes run to disintegration." What do the causes find to disintegrate? Nothing that is natural. The fact that the thing is not disintegrated shows that it was and is of supernatural origin. According to the cardinal, the only business of nature is to disintegrate the supernatural. To prevent this, the supernatural needs the protection of the Infinite. According to this doctrine, if anything lives and grows, it does so in spite of nature. Growth, then, is not in accordance with, but in opposition to nature. Every plant is supernatural—it defeats the disintegrating influences of rain and light. The generalization of the cardinal is half the truth. It would be equally true to say: All natural causes run to integration. But the whole truth is that growth and decay are equal.

The cardinal asserts that "Christendom was created by the world-wide church as we see it before our eyes at this day. Philosophers and statesmen believe it to be the work of their own hands; they did not make it, but they have for three hundred years been unmaking it by reformations and revolutions."

The meaning of this is that Christendom was far better three hundred years ago than now; that during these three centuries Christendom has been going towards barbarism. It means that the supernatural church of God has been a failure for three hundred years; that it has been unable to withstand the attacks of philosophers and statesmen, and that it has been helpless in the midst of "reformations and revolutions."

(To be Continued.)

Death of Mrs. Reinstadler, of Oakland.

Mr. F. Reinstadler, a radical and respected Freethinker and subscriber of FREETHOUGHT, has just suffered a severe loss in the death of his noble wife, who died on the morning of October the 19th, after a short illness, her disease being pneumonia. The funeral took place on Sunday, October 21, and in accordance with the wishes of the deceased was conducted on strictly rational principles. It was attended by Freethinkers and Christians; among the latter some of the foremost citizens of Oakland, including the mayor of the city, and even a minister of the gospel, also a number of his Masonic brethren, showing thereby the high respect in which Brother Reinstadler and his wife were held, notwithstanding their outspoken views. The attendance of his brother Masons especially showed a laudable toleration as well as sympathy to him who, although standing in the higher light of the religion of reason, is yet claimed by Christians, Masons, and Freethinkers.

The following address was made by Mr. H. L. Haelke, a life-long friend and Freethinker:

"In nurse's lap, a naked new-born child,
Weeping thou sat'st while all around thee smiled;
So live that, sinking to thy last long sleep,
Calm may'st thou smile while all around thee weep."

These words, coming to us from the orient, from Persian literature, are especially applicable to the life and death of the one who has passed from our midst.

KIND AND SORROWING FRIENDS: On occasions like this, in the presence of the dead, a feeling of oppression seems to weigh down the spirits and hearts of all present. If vent can be given through those fountains of grief, the tears of sorrow, a relief is obtained, but to some this slight surcease of sorrow is denied, and then it would seem that any expression of the overflowing heart in words would give relief to an overburdened soul. Impelled by this motive, I wish to say a few words in memory of our dear departed friend.

Who, but the surviving husband alone, could be able to give us a true insight into the actual inner life, those mental forces and ever striving, tireless energies of our departed friend. But this cannot be expected; his heart is too full to find language at such a moment as this. I have by information through him and an acquaintanceship of twenty-five years become convinced that the life and character of our departed friend has been no ordinary one. Mrs. Agnes Reinstadler was born in Canada, and would, had she lived until the 22d of this month, have completed the 66th year of her life. Thrown upon her own resources in early childhood, a native spirit of self-reliance and independence was strongly developed. Later in life, after coming to this, our loved state of California, she met and was united in wedlock to her husband, our Brother Reinstadler; and no truer marriage ever was formed, for when I have said they belonged to each other I have said all that can be said. We therefore feel with him to some extent that overwhelming prostration which has overtaken him. A loss although inevitable, yet none the less severe; certainly, a void like this can never be filled, and the consolation we can offer is but very meager indeed. She bore with heroic patience the agonies of her short illness. That this illness was of no longer duration may be of some consolation; that the surviving partner will have more strength of spirit to bear the bereavement with fortitude than she might have had, may be considered another consolation; and lastly let us hope that time will kindly ameliorate the gravity of this sudden blow, and not aggravate an affliction which by the inexorable laws of nature has been precipitated upon him—laws immutable, which are but very imperfectly understood as yet.

If you ask me about the religious sentiments of our departed friend, I answer you: Her faith was of the broad kind, that charity and good will to all mankind not confined to any sect or nationality, but diffused and scattered among many churches and nationalities in the civilized world, and which very aptly might be termed the invisible church. Her desire ever was to do good; hers was indeed the religion of humanity, the religion of reason, by the light of which alone she was guided through life. She believed, in consonance with the views held by her husband, that "the time to be happy is now; the place to be happy is here, and the way to be happy is to make others so." Yes, she was eminently a woman of common sense, and as such did not need the incentive and promises of a glorious paradise hereafter as a reward for good deeds done, but she strove to fulfill these duties for the sake of the good results which ever follow as a rich reward already in this life, thus trying to make an Eden of the home built up by husband and wife. All who knew her will agree with me that no man ever was blessed with a truer helpmate than Brother Reinstadler.

If in the practice of the virtues of industry and assiduity she had overestimated her physical strength and fallen in full harness in the exercise of her household duties, we can but deplore the unforeseen sad results, whilst we admire the courage and energy of one who now lies before us, sunk in a sleep which knows no waking. O my friends, it cannot be too often repeated that the greatest heroes and heroines of this world are those who in the conscientious performance of fire-side duties, sometimes in self-sacrifice for loved ones, seek and find their greatest interest and pleasure. These seeming trifles, how important they become when collected on the string of life.

And now, dear friend, we are about to carry you away from this spot, which has been a home and a heaven to you, the scene of many a happy moment; one of these bright moments was thy silver wedding six years ago. Friends, those of you here who were present on that happy occasion will recall with pleasure and gratitude the festivities of that joyful day. Keep it in remembrance as long as you live.

Yes, my friends, kind and inexorable nature has claimed those elements in dissolution which once, attracted and united, formed this being into the individuality which has now been annihilated forevermore. Ever-creating, ever-destroying nature, we, thy children, submit and confidently put our trust in thee, our mother, knowing that all will be well. Farewell, farewell!

AT THE GRAVE.

The following quotations were read by A. H. Schou:

"From the blank chaos of the past we spring into being like bubbles on the ocean or flowers on the plain. The spark of our material life burns flickeringly on until extinguished by the touch of death, and it becomes us, as rational beings, to submit without a murmur to that which we know to be inevitable. Death is both natural and inevitable. Birth and death are in fact mere processes of all animate nature. Both are but the fulfilment of nature's law, and whether in life or in death, we are still in the arms of nature, still subject to that mysterious and incomprehensible power from which we derived our being.

"Every cradle asks, Whence? Every coffin asks, Whither? The poor barbarian weeping over his dead can answer this question as satisfactorily as the learned priest of the most authentic creed; and the tearful ignorance of the one is as consoling as the learned but unmeaning words of the other. We cannot tell, we do not know, which is a greater blessing, life or death. Neither can we tell which is the more fortunate, the infant dying in its mother's arms, ere its lips have learned to form a word, or he who journeys all the length of life's uneven road, painfully taking the last slow steps with staff and crutch. In this peaceful, silent city of the dead we have laid to rest the mortal remains of our departed sister. Peace be to her ashes, and respect to her memory. Let us forget her shortcomings, remembering that it is human to err. Let us cherish the memory of her virtues; her kind words and loving deeds, for humanity's sake. Amen!"

Professor Seymour On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

After a two days' voyage on the old ocean and Columbia river, which was wearisome in the extreme, I arrived at this city. While out on the ocean, tossed by the ever restless waves, I saw a whale floating leisurely along under the sunny sky. This incident set me thinking, and my mind went backward in the ages of Bible times, when Jonah's companions threw the poor fellow overboard, when he had done nothing at all, and a good and kindly whale (probably a female, for females are generally more kind and tender than others) that happened that way and took the man in out of the wet. I feel that every Infidel ought to believe this story of the Bible, at least out of respect for the whale that showed so much goodness of heart (stomach). Here at East Portland I attended, last Sunday, the Spiritualists' meeting, where we had a rousing time. An ex-reverend from your city, once a Baptist preacher, opened the meeting—divine service he called it—with an orthodox prayer, and talked about the goodness of God, and read scripture to prove that spirits could hold, and always had held, chats with mortals here below. Thus he tried to baptize us all anew with the love of "Gaud" and the angel world, but the majority of those present objected to being christened in the orthodox style, so called out your correspondent, who is known here as not being in love with that superfluity of nonsense and priestcraft called Jehovah, to answer the reverend gentleman. The fur flew for a few minutes and there was a big excitement. I asked him for any evidence that a prayer ever had been answered by his godship, and for any evidence of a personal god, creator, lawgiver, etc. I showed that time and space, matter and motion, law and procedure, were everywhere, always were, and in the nature of things always will be; that prayer to an earless, brainless, heartless god could never be heard or answered. If God had a head, brain, ears, eyes, parts, etc., then he, she, or it, must be a god of condition, and if of condition, then it certainly could not be infinite. To be infinite, God must be conditionless—then in no condition to answer the puny petitions of mortals; that, in fact, to be teasing God for favors is the act of an imbecile, of a cringing slave; that it is unmanly, enslaving, degrading, and unworthy of a civilized, scientific age; that if we wish to get out of our troubles we must work our way out, paddle our own canoe, be our own redeemer; that if all the vitality that had been expended in prayer to the gods had been used in manly, intelligent work, every poor person on the planet might have a home and plenty all around; that hell here and hereafter would be blotted out from the minds of earth's ignorant children, and peace and plenty prevail; that our world was prayer-cursed, priest-ridden, and God-damned, and we needed more Freethought and a higher education than Christianity, with its Bibles and conditional God, could possibly give. The ex-reverend was wrathful, and said I was too personal; but I intend to send in a shot whenever I can.

Yours,

D. C. SEYMOUR.

Portland, Or., Nov. 8.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places returning from the East:

Davenport.....	W. T., Nov. 17-19	Scappoose.....	Or., Dec. 2
Sprague.....	" 20-21	Prt Townsend....	W.T., " 4-6
Pasco.....	W.T. " 22-23	Snohomish.....	" " 8-10
Portland.....	Or., Nov. 25-26	Stella.....	" " 15-16
Vancouver.....	W.T., " 27-28	Silverton.....	Or., " 22-23
No. Yamhill.....	Or., " 29-30

It is desirable to announce the remainder of the appointments at the earliest possible moment. Will friends who wish lectures write at once to S. P. Putnam, as above. Mr. Putnam will be in San Francisco during the month of January.

PROF. D. C. SEYMOUR, who is now in California, is prepared to lecture on the following subjects:

1. Prehistoric Man.
2. Man, Mentally and Physically: How to Develop Scientifically.
3. Origin of the God Idea; also Prayer and Religion.
4. Origin of all Things—the Law of Development.
5. The Law of Influences: or, How we Help One Another.
6. The Birth, Growth, Decay, and Death of Worlds, Suns, etc.
7. Right Generation Alone, not Regeneration, can Bless Humanity.
8. The Right Relation of the Sexes; or, The Science of Stirpiculture.
9. The Future of this Planet, Redeemed by Science.
10. All the Evidences Claimed for Immortality Examined.
11. The Effects of Alcohol, Tobacco, Bad Foods, and Poor Ventilation.

These lectures are illustrated with large colored drawings, skeletons, lithographs, colored stereopticon views, etc. Liberals desiring the services of Professor Seymour may address him in care of this office. He makes no charge for lectures. The friends are only asked to provide a hall, church, or school-house, and the audience will remunerate the speaker.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them, A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

LUCIFER THE LIGHT-BEARER.

DEVOTED TO THE

Frank and fearless discussion of basic principles in the field of governmental and social reform.

For more than eighteen months this paper and its publishers have been prosecuted in the courts by the agents of the Comstock Vice Society, for alleged violations of the U. S. postal laws.

Published weekly at Valley Falls, Kansas, at $1.25 per annum. Specimen copies free.

Miracles and Miracle Workers,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 10 cts.

Christian Absurdities,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 20 cts.

Both for sale at this office.

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Cloth, 75 cts. Address this office.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,

Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

...IN THE...

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

...FOR...

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER, Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to re-educate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

he Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.
33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, b.t. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7 jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13 50, $14 50; 5 ounce, $16 00; 6 ounce, $17 50. With full 115 jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $18, $17, $18, $19 50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $4, being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24 50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies' watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels, $22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2 to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $33. Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra. Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case. Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1; best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas, 50c. Best chromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $8, $12. Large field glasses, $3, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free. Best Work. Try me.

2nd Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

OTTO WETTSTEIN.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Designer and Patentee of new FREETHOUGHT Badge in PINS and CHARMS—emblematical of the light and day of Freethought, Science, and Reason vs. the night and darkness of Superstition.—Exact size of cut and smaller, two-thirds size. Warranted solid gold, encased in four colors. Most beautiful badge ever designed. Small, $2, $2 75, $3 50. Large, $3 to $5; with genuine diamond, $8, $10; and charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 16th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Millman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

F. SANGROVE.

Merchant Tailor.

LATE OF LONDON AND PARIS,

All imported goods. Orders promptly attended. Prices moderate. Cleaning and repairing neatly done.

Ladies' Cloaks and Riding Habits a Specialty.

F. SANGROVE, 104 FIFTH ST.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address: Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 47.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - NOVEMBER 24, 1888

A MAN named Alfred J. Church offers the latest case of well-developed religious insanity. He went howling through the Baldwin House the other day proclaiming himself a messenger of God. The insane asylum received him.

CRISPUS ATTUCKS is to have a monument erected to his memory in Boston, as the first martyr in the war of the American Revolution. He was killed in 1770 by British soldiers. But his real name, as ascertained by the late Caleb Cushing, was Crisp Squattucks and he was a Natick Indian, therefore a true native American.

ABOUT $110,000 has just been invested by the Catholics of San Francisco in a new convent on Ellis street, designed for the incarceration of the more wealthy young women of the cathedral parish. It is said that church property in this state is assessed for taxes, and that the taxes are paid. Is it a fact? Who knows?

THE "Nun of Kenmare," appointed by the pope as mother superior of the Sisters of Peace, whoever those females may be, has resigned her position. The event is not of a startling nature, but her casual admission, made in the resignation which she forwards to the pope, that "working girls have been the great support of the Catholic church," reveals a disgraceful fact. Think of thousands of fat priests living chiefly upon the contributions of working girls! An able-bodied man who subsists on the earnings of a woman is not usually regarded with respect. Why should a priest form an exception?

JUDGE BENNETT, at Janesville, Wis., rendered his decision last Monday in the celebrated case of Weiss et al. vs. the School Board of district eight, Edgerton. The suit was brought to restrain the teachers from reading the Bible in the public schools. It was held by the plaintiffs, who are wealthy Catholics, that King James's version was not recognized by their church as correct, and that reading the Bible under any circumstances, unless explained by an authorized teacher of the church, was not only unhelpful but injurious. Judge Bennett held that the reading of the Bible without comment was not sectarian instruction. This decision is of slight importance to Secularists, as it merely sets forth that Protestant superstition is no more objectionable than Catholic.

The demand of Secularism is that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited. A decision on this question would touch bed-rock.

OUR Methodist brethren at their Monday meeting discussed the prospects of a society called the Young People's Methodist Alliance. Mr. Geo. Cole, corresponding secretary of the organization, stated that all who joined the alliance pledged themselves not to go to theatres, parties, balls, and like places, but to "rely only on religious services for amusement." It would be difficult to conceive of a more hilarious existence than these young people will lead if they keep their pledge. Methodist services, varied with an occasional funeral, cannot be excelled as sources of innocent diversion.

THE announcement that the Rev. E. Walpole Warren, the imported pastor of Trinity church, New York, has sworn off, will stimulate the cause of temperance. Mr. Warren preached last Sunday, a sermon on abstinence, at the close of which he said: "I am now going to make a resolution out of charity to those who are sufferers from the craving for drink. I am not going to give up drinking in moderation forever, but I have resolved to not touch a drop of anything intoxicating for a month, just to show myself that I can do it." There is no particular reason to doubt the sincerity of the Rev. Mr. Warren's reformation, but it would be well for members of his congregation to keep an eye on the side-doors of the hostleries in the immediate vicinity of the parsonage.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Boise City, like all other parts of the vast republic, was in a bubble of excitement on the eve of election. Local matters were of the utmost importance. There were hurrys to and fro, conferences at the street corners, impromptu speeches, and the final struggle for victory. There was not much use for a Freethought lecture in the midst of such a hurly-burly. However, fair audiences were present, and the work was encouraged with plenty of good companionship. Uncle Miller was busy gathering apples, and the ruddy and golden fruit was beautiful indeed. Idaho can't be beaten for apples. The mellow sunshine makes delightful flavor.

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gould is the bracing air of intellectual growth. Here is rest from toil, and animation for progress. These friends are deeply interested in all reforms, and live for humanity. Winged thought brings the riches that make labor royal. So the days were happy in this somewhat difficult outpost.

Comrade J. A. Davis was on the Democratic ticket for legislature, and, at last accounts, was going in by a big majority. He has made a brilliant campaign. He is not simply for party, but for the government of the people.

Friend Boynton, of the signal service, is about to make his stake at Seattle. Wherever he goes, there will be a staunch supporter of Freethought. Fortune could not do better than smile upon him in the golden West.

James Harrel never fails to be in the front ranks, and gives the ardor of youth to the action of the man.

H. L. Buell, C. R. Purdam, G. G. Folsom, E. C. Blanchard, A. D. Clark, friend Kelly, and others, in the advance corps, help the Secular pilgrim to "blaze" the wilderness.

Early on Monday morning, with "a southerly wind and a cloudy sky," James Wardwell is at the door, ready for a trip across the plains to Emmetts, where I am to spend election day, far from the noise of strife, with no railroads or telegrams to disturb my radical peace of mind with reports of victory and defeat. One might think that the bare plains of Idaho could afford no luxurious prospects, and yet in all the world I do not think there is a more lovely drive than from Boise City to Emmetts. Of course, there are wide wastes, and sand banks, and sage brush, without end, but the sunlight is marvelous in beauty, the skies are brilliant as those of Italy. The immense desert is dotted here and there with green fields and gardens, and cabins, and occasionally appears a stately dwelling and patches of grove glittering with the fires of autumn. The vast horizon is fringed with innumerable hills of every fantastic shape, hundreds of miles away, shining with lustrous azure or snowy crowns. There is something, always, in these wild, desolate, beautiful prospects to feed the eye and enchant the mind. If one could catch these delicious colors falling from the sky with ever-changing softness, intense glory mingling with desolation in magnificent contrast, the painting would be superb. When, over some sandy bluff where not a flower grows, a sudden illumination strikes the eye from the far surrounding sky—a lovely picture in a framework of the uninhabitable wilderness—the richness, splendor, and ineffable sublimity of the scene is unsurpassed. And when this sinks from view, and only rolling sands appear, like a motionless sea of barren waves, the spirit chimes in with Shelley's muse and sings with strange enjoyment:

"I love all waste
And solitary places, where we taste
The pleasure of believing what we see
Is boundless as we wish our souls to be."

Especially fine is the view, when from the vast encircling mounds we look upon Emmetts, in the valley of the Payette, fringed with green and golden trees, while Squaw Creek Butte towers over it like a mighty pyramid, and the hills of Oregon—the Cascade range—glitter in the splendid west. Emmetts is in the bed of what was once an immense lake. The mounds, once its curving shores, stretch away far as the eye can see. Where the waters once washed in wild eddies, grotesque shapes remain to attest the mutations of this world in dusty hieroglyphics. One might call this the enchanted valley, as he beholds it in the bosom of these sublime and mystic forms.

Always a royal welcome at Wardwell's. The generosity of pioneer life is here, the heart of oak, the open frankness of nature. Wardwell has been up in the mountains for two months driving a "bull team," as he calls it. Over a million logs are now ready for the river when the rains make it roar through the ravines. An exciting battle the rivermen have of it when they drive these masses of timber to the mill, for they sometimes roll and tumble fearfully in the sweeping currents.

I gave two lectures at Emmetts, and the hall was full both evenings to listen to radical politics, concerning which party politics have very little to do at present. So I was content to stay away from the "madding crowd," reading Scott's "Lady of the Lake," while the bright day rolled along, and ten million voters wrestled from sea to sea. After the second lecture, on the evening of election day, there was a dance and sociable in honor of whoever might win the victory. A kind of Arcadian life it was, while "revolutions sweep o'er earth." There was no fateful click of telegraph wires to disturb the melodious measures.

To visit Emmetts is a pleasure. Good friends are here, happy days, retreat from care, the atmosphere of liberty, the broad life, genial comradeship, truth, and nature. I go back to the big, bustling, railroad world with good cheer, from this lively outpost.

My friend Ezra Bradford is the philosopher of the plains. He studies nature with his own eyes, and sees her footsteps in the mighty ages. The rock-ribbed earth reveals its wondrous story. He gave me the petrified knuckle joint of a mammoth who lived two hundred thousand years ago; an old knife, of the stone age, the instrument of the cave-men, who also lived with the mammoth, and who might have cleaned off that knuckle bone with this same flinty knife; also the petrified mountain mahogany and woodbine. If I should go where that woodbine twineth green, I should have to traverse many a corridor of time. These seem to be relics of the "eternity of the past." They shall be put into the storehouse of FREETHOUGHT.

A sweeter day never shone, as down the banks of the brawling Payette the stage rolled swift and gay. There was scarcely a cloud in the sky, and all the landscape was bathed in crystal radiance. At evening I reached Payette, found out who was elected, and went to sleep. Onward, the next day, I journeyed to Pendleton, Or., which I reached Thursday evening. The hubbub was not over. Election news was hot yet, and the Democratic flag was floating. I did not have a large audience either evening. I lectured twice. Pendleton is a difficult place. There is much indifference. It is all business. The churches don't flourish much, neither does reform. But I don't regret the campaign here. I believe in the future. There are sturdy friends at Pendleton, true as steel. To meet them is to remember them for hope and progress always. My friend, H. Flickinger, has taken the Investigator for years, and he keeps Freethought books on the go, and as long as he lives the flag will not go down. He is enlisted, heart and brain, for the war. J. B. Eddy, of the Tribune, is equally earnest, devoted, and generous; not afraid to be an independent man in the editorial chair; the slave of no party, but a true American.

Mr. and Mrs. Hauser and family are also for Freethought whether it is in the minority or not. The father and mother are veterans in the cause and there was good cheer in their greeting.

So all goes well whatever fortune betides. We are not on flowery paths. We have to climb, but the morning comes, and "This old world is growing brighter."

Pendleton, Nov. 10, '88.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

THE STATE CONVENTION.

A Call for the meeting to organize a California State Secular Union has been printed in blank form for signing. We shall send out the blanks to Liberals of different parts of the state, and those who do not receive one and who desire to affix their signature to such a document, may obtain copies by addressing this office. There should be at least five hundred signatures to this call, to be published about January 1. Responses from California Liberals with reference to the coming Convention and the January lectures indicate a general interest and are most encouraging.

CATHOLIC INHUMANITY.

A story told in the Sacramento Bee of a late date gives the reader some idea of how much humanity is to be expected from the seared and atrophied specimens of the female sex who manage Catholic schools and convents. In the early part of November Miss Nellie Simons died in San Francisco. She was the daughter of Mary McCarty, a notorious woman of Sacramento, who has been and still is one of the most disreputable of her class, but the time was when she must have been possessed of some noble instincts. At any rate, years ago, when the young lady who has recently died was a mere child, the mother took her to San Francisco and placed her in a convent to be educated. Instructions were given that no efforts were to be spared in giving the girl a first-class education. The mother then departed, and doubtless never again darkened the doors of the convent. The quarterly payments for little Nellie's tuition and maintenance came with unfailing regularity, however, and she grew up to be a refined, educated, and accomplished young woman, a great favorite, it is said, with all who knew her. Of her parentage she knew that her father's name was Simons, but she did not then know of the later career of the mother—who had been Simons's lawful wife—and those young ladies attending the convent who did know of it had too much respect for the girl to acquaint her with the real facts.

Finally, however, says the Bee, the facts of the mother's career became known to one of the aristocratic patrons of the school. This noble Christian woman told other equally as good Christian women, and they held up their hands in holy horror to contemplate that their daughters had been defiled by contact with the young and innocent girl. They visited the faculty of the school and informed them that their tender offspring would at once be withdrawn unless the objectionable person were compelled to leave. The threatened withdrawal of patronage had more influence with the sisters than the dictates of right, Nellie was expelled, and the cloud of shame burst over the head of the innocent and well-liked girl. Overwhelmed with grief, she left the school which had afforded her shelter and protection during much of her lifetime. Her mother secured her a home in a cottage in the outskirts of San Francisco. Here she has lived ever since, but she never recovered from the cruel shock. She pined away until death came as a relief.

The people who did not deem this girl fit to associate with them in this world thought her good enough for the society of angels in the next, and readily granted her the funeral rites of the church whose members had driven her to death. The church resembles the species of wild beasts that bury their prey.

THE TELEPHONE AND THE CONFESSIONAL.

The holy office of Rome is to be called upon, says Labouchere, of the London Truth, to decide whether confession and penance can be transmitted over a wire through the instrumentality of the telephone. A learned Jesuit of Paris says it can, while other ecclesiastics hold that it cannot. The contention among the latter is that the confessional is a tribunal, and that a proximity of at farthest twenty paces between penitent and priest is necessary for the validity of the absolution. There is reason to believe, according to the general notion as to what passes between the priest and the penitent, especially if the penitent be a female, that the substitution of the telephone would rob the holy fathers of many perquisites which now make a life of alleged celibacy endurable. At the same time nothing could be more conducive to morality among priests than the intervention of a considerable distance between the confessor and the sinner. The one great obstacle to the use of the telephone in this country would be the laws administered by Mr. Anthony Comstock in New York and Mr. C. R. Bennett in San Francisco. We have seen a book entitled "Extracts from Den's Theology," wherein are defined the various sins distinguished as venial, mortal, or otherwise. The book is designed for the guidance of the priest at confessional, and sets forth what matters may be discussed between himself and the penitent. It has not as yet been prohibited, but if its contents were submitted to a telephone that instrument would cry aloud for Comstock. There are men under arrest in Kansas for publishing matter pure as the mountain air compared with this book. Substantially the same offenses are mentioned in both, the only difference as to the publishers being that the priests pardon the offenses while the Kansas men condemn them. So it is not a question whether a confession made through the medium of a telephone is valid, but whether it is permissible under the law regulating the character of the matter transmitted over the wires.

RENEWALS.

CERESCO, Mich., Nov. 12, 1888.

To the Editors of Freethought: I suppose my year's subscription to FREETHOUGHT must be up. Inclosed please find $2.60—$2 for renewal and 60 cents for books. It is a good plan to print a label on the wrapper, as the Truth Seeker does, showing when the year is up.

Yours in humanity,

THOS. KNIGHT.

Friend Knight's subscription does not expire until next March, and his renewal is commendably prompt. We have not, as yet, put our list in a printed form, having adopted the method of inclosing in the paper a printed slip hinting that the subscriber's time is out. Some of our patrons will receive the intimation this week, and it is expected that they will communicate with us upon the subject.

We present another letter which, like friend Knight's, touches a responsive chord:

NEVINVILLE, IA., Nov. 10, 1888.

To the Editors of Freethought, FRIENDS: If you are going to enlarge FREETHOUGHT to a sixteen-page paper you will need a little encouragement of a substantial kind from your subscribers; so just mark me paid ahead $3 worth, for which find cash inclosed. Yours. F. I. GREEN.

It is customary for subscribers to pay a year in advance, but Brother Green has done several months better. We have a subscriber in Inyo county whose subscription does not expire until the middle of 1890. We cannot reasonably expect that the custom of paying so far in advance will become general, and shall be quite satisfied if between now and the first of February readers whose subscriptions expire within that time will renew for twelve months. Those who come early will avoid the rush.

To see one minister seize another by the arm, while the latter is occupying the pulpit saving souls, and demand an apology for slanderous utterances; and then, in addition, to see a deacon arise and yank the first minister out of the pulpit, must be a spectacle calculated to make the angels grieve. It was witnessed by the attendants at the New Preston, Conn., Congregational church a few days ago, when the Rev. Henry Upson assailed the regular pastor in the manner above described, and was suppressed as aforesaid.

THE late aspirant to the secretaryship of the American Secular Union is strangling himself with rope furnished him by the Iron-clad Age.

AN Eastern paper, speaking of "The Coming 'Man of Sin,'" by "Historicus," remarks that in their febriculous condition, just at election time, half the people will think it a covert attack on Blaine, while the rest will regard it as underhanded abuse of Cleveland.

Just before Anschlag, the murderous fiend, took the poison that killed him, some sentimental women visited his cell and sang "Nearer, My God, to Thee." If this song expresses the facts of the case, the Ruler of the Universe is to be felicitated upon the acquisition of a new neighbor.

THE debate at Silverton between B. F. Underwood and the Christian "champion" should have begun last Wednesday, the 21st inst. Mr. J. D. Kauffman, of Boulder Creek, intimates that he would like a copy of the discussion, if published.

THE Insane Asylum at Stockton has just opened to Mary Burke, of this city, "a religious fanatic." When will superstition cease to claim its demented victims?

OBSERVATIONS.

There is much to be said against a hireling press that subsists by pandering to a diseased public sentiment; still it is often necessary to patronize it in order to get the news of the day. I picked up the Evening Post last Monday; and the first thing my eye fell on was an item saying that George Macdonald, a Scotchman, tumbled overboard in the bay the night before, while drunk, and was drowned. I adroitly concealed the paper, so that my friends who were present would not be agitated by the intelligence of my sudden demise. I knew the news must ultimately reach them, but I wanted to relate it in my own chaste language. I might admit that I was drowned: it is better to go that way than to be hanged; but I deny that I was under the influence of liquor at the time.

A visitor to this office from a section of the state devoted to sheep culture, whom I questioned as to his views of the election, replied that he did not think the prosperity of California at present depended so much upon the triumph of either party as upon a little rain in the contiguous future. He condemned the protracted dry spell, and, in the language of the statute, did unlawfully, wickedly, profanely, premeditatedly, and spitefully utter with loud voice, in the presence of divers of the citizens of the commonwealth, publish and proclaim, concerning the weather, certain wicked, profane, and blasphemous words, to the discredit and contempt of the same. What surprised me was the result. Within forty-eight hours it began to rain freely, and has not yet cleared off. I take a devout pleasure in recording this instance of the efficacy of swear.

I have been much disturbed lately by conflicting complaints that have reached me. Growls are generally homogeneous; that is to say, of one kind; and if not of one kind, they at least do not contradict one another. If the criticism all comes through the same quill, so to say, I can tell right away what to do. For instance, when a number of subscribers arose as a single individual and said that the assertion of our advertising columns that "Wieland's beer is the best: call for it" had not sufficient foundation in scientific verity to be put in a paper like FREETHOUGHT, I knew as well as if I had been an intuitive Andrew Jackson Davis seer that the statement would have to be withdrawn. It was the same with Jonas and dem Wahlfish; they had to go with their distinguished prototypes who voyaged between Joppa and Tarshish.

The complaints I now have to speak of are different, to wit: No. 1. Professor Seymour has just come from the north, and he reports that the people in that direction are protesting because the editors yield up so much space to correspondents and write so briefly themselves. That is quite flattering, and I can see the way to supply the wants of our Oregon and Washington Territory friends; but meanwhile (No. 2.) the appended letter from a gentleman in Missouri must not be ignored:

PUTMAN McDONEL Dear Ser? I seen a copy off your paper Fretout I would like to be your aggent hear if you could make it about as big-gergin you would get more subs if you would redose the price if I except the agency for it here I would advise you to leave out the editoril part and fill up the first part of your paper with some comen serser riting Every week put in something to suit us catolics I can get you lot of subs hear I am a Catolic but read Prodester papers

I shall not pay any attention to this letter until I find out how the Missouri Catholics are taking hold of the paper. I must decide one way or the other, and have concluded to make the trial, and see if my pen cannot be induced to give down a little more copiously than it has done of late.

When the article by Brother Vladimir, bishop of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands, was published in FREETHOUGHT the author bought up all the spare copies of the edition in which his communication appeared. I judge that intelligence of his advent in the fields of English literature found its way to Russia, as a card addressed as follows has just been received:

In San Francisco, Cal., U. S., 504 Kearny st.
In Editing of journal
„FREETHOUGHT.”

The card is postmarked "12 Okt 1888," and reads:

I beg you very humble to send to me the price for year of „FREETHOUGHT,” and if it is possible to send one Number your Journal for to get acquainted with it; and is it possible to acquire a copy your very worthy Journal at past years? Your very humbly Servant,
Address: Russia, Kief, Kreshtshatic, 56. J. MILEVSKY.

A copy of FREETHOUGHT has been forwarded to Mr. Milevsky for to get acquainted with it.

The completion of an article that I was engaged in preparing last Sunday on "The Fallacy of the Theory of Supernatural Interference with the Regular Order of Nature Because of the Sabbath" has been deferred to some more auspicious time. I had just written the heading, when my ear was struck by a sound that might have been made by a trainload of steamboilers coming up Kearny street over cobble-stones. The telegraph pole across the way waved like a cattail in a breeze, and the building suddenly appeared to move about six inches toward the south, stopping with a bump that nearly slid me out of my chair. I ceased writing, and the disturbance at once subsided. The papers on Monday reported a severe shock of earthquake at 2:30 on the previous day, moving in a semicircular direction from north to south. Professor Soule, of the Berkeley University, thinks that "the late heavy rains, diminishing the barometric pressure, and the critical condition of some of our underlying strata which have broken and slid down, account for the tremblors." That is the scientific explanation, while mine is the theological one. Readers may judge for themselves which is the more reasonable.

One day not long ago a young man stole into the quarters of this journal while I was reading the proofs, and waited patiently until I had got through and was preparing to go home. Then he inquired if I was Mr. Putnam, and when I told him that I was not, he said it didn't make any special difference; he merely wished to inquire if I had paid much attention to Swedenborg and his writings. I said I had not devoted a very large portion of my time to the study of that particular crank; whereupon he rejoined that until I had read Swedenborg I could have no adequate perception of the intense beauties of the scriptures. I argued with the young man that probably I could understand the significance of what I read in English as well as Mr. Swedenborg, and told him that if anyone desired more meaning than the scriptures expressed as at present translated and interpreted he must be a most unreasonable person. Well, he said, it was necessary that our eyes should be spiritually opened before we could recognize spiritual truths; that what we read in the Bible is not what the divine author of that work really intended his scribes to say, but merely the outward shell under which the interior truth is concealed. He further made it clear that Christ would never come again in person, and I agreed with him; but he held that Christ had manifested and revealed himself spiritually through Emanuel Swedenborg, and Mr. S. had thus been enabled to get a new and revised meaning out of the Bible. My suggestion that it would be more accurate to say that Emanuel had socked some new significance into the Bible, to draw on as necessity might demand, was not entertained. The young man disclaimed a sufficient flow of language to explain the Bible fully as interpreted by Swedenborg, and therefore desired the privilege of sending me a tract, which he firmly believed would open up my blinded sight to the light as he saw it. I gave him permission to send the tract, whereupon he departed on his way with the light and buoyant skip which characterizes a person who desires to conceal a perturbed state of mind. He sent the tract, and before I had found opportunity to read it he came again, left a small book, borrowed Paine's "Age of Reason," gave me his name and address, and said he would become a subscriber. I heard no more from him for a few days, and was trusting that the "Age of Reason" might do its perfect work, even though I should never see it again, when the sequel occurred which is my reason for mentioning the incident. The first part of the week a young woman with snapping eyes and a determined expression on her face popped in, deposited Paine's great work on the table with unnecessary force, and said that she would take the book left by the young man. I gave it to her at once. She instructed me to send no more copies of that paper, darted an indignant glance about the room, and was gone, leaving me once more in outer darkness.

From perusing the tract and the book I had become considerably interested in Swedenborgianism. I read with approval the unanswerable criticisms which the Swedenborgians make upon current theology, but I have never yet found the supporter of any creed who could not offer much stronger arguments against all other sects than he was able to bring to the defense of his own, and I am afraid the Swedenborgian is no exception to the general rule.

G. E. M.

LITERARY NOTES.

ARE any of our readers acquainted with a work entitled "Gawk Jim," with a sub-title of "Common Sense and Theology?" Mr. Anton J. Kraft, of Grantfork, Ill., would like to procure a copy of the work.

THE first step in avoiding mistakes is to find out how we fall into them. Valuable aid in this direction will be furnished in Prof. Joseph Jastrow's paper on "The Psychology of Deception," which will open the December "Popular Science Monthly." As illustrations of his subject the author cites the tricks practiced by conjurers, and the delusions which from time to time gain a hold on the public mind.

IN the Chicago Open Court of November 15 Prof. E. D. Cope, of Philadelphia, as per announcement, discusses "The Marriage Problem." It seems that somebody has propounded the question, "Is Marriage a Failure?" Writers have taken up the conundrum and are answering it affirmatively and negatively in about equal numbers. Professor Cope treats the subject from a practical and scientific point of view.

THE National Liberator, a new journal published by the National Constitutional Liberty League, is devoted to the advocacy of more liberal laws touching the practice of medicine. It appears that the orthodox medical colleges have formed a trust controlling the output of doctors, and proscribing all heresy in matters of physic. Against this the National Liberator protests. J. Winfield Scott editor, Hotel Glendon, Boston, Mass.

L. K. WASHBURN's Paine Hall lecture, "The Catholic Menace to Our Government," is issued in neat tract form by the Investigator. While we cannot go so far as to agree with the lecturer that the state should inform the priest "that he must not teach one syllable against the institutions of this nation on pain of being banished from the land," we are ready to say with him that the action of Judas Iscariot is "snowy white beside that of every Catholic priest who raises his arm to strike down our public schools." The price of the tract is 5 cents.

A good book to set people to thinking deeply on philosophical problems is F. Max Muller's "Science of Thought." The work comprises three lectures delivered in 1887 at the Royal Institution, London, and first published in the Chicago Open Court. The most striking of the lectures is the second, on the "Identity of Language and Thought." The writer holds, in accordance with many philosophers, and at variance with an equal number, that thought and language are one, and that we have no such faculty as reason, what passes under that name being the simple operation of adding and subtracting. That there can be no language without thought seems apparent enough, but the proposition that there is no such thing as disembodied thought will be more slowly accepted by those who have occasionally to search the Thesaurus for words wherewith to clothe their ideas. The book is elegantly printed and bound; price 75 cents.

Now that the election is over we deem it safe to announce that E. H. Heywood, of Princeton, Mass., has issued the twentieth thousand of his pamphlet entitled "Free Trade." Mr. Heywood goes behind the returns to draw from Mr. Blaine's "Twenty Years of Congress" the statement that in 1856, after ten years of low tariff, the country was so prosperous and the principles involved in the tariff of 1846 had been so entirely vindicated and approved, that a protective tariff was not suggested or even hinted at by any of the three parties which presented presidential candidates. This is a seeming contradiction of Mr. Blaine's present views upon the tariff problem, but in reality it only shows how true patriots can throw aside the past and adopt any attitude which the country calls upon them to assume in the exigencies of a national campaign. The price of Mr. Heywood's pamphlet should be 20 cents.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

San Francisco was shaken by an earthquake last Sunday—the heaviest since 1871.—The Chinese society, Kong Chow, celebrates nowadays the 2,000th anniversary of the death of the fire-god, Lung Han. It is a sort of Chinese Fourth of July occasion, and is observed with fireworks.—Copious rains have visited nearly all parts of the state.—Mrs. Margaret E. Parker, of the Young Women's Christian Association, has just imported a batch of "needy gentlewomen" from England, who expect to enter service in this state as "ladies' help." The general belief is that they will have to come down to Chinamen's work as servants, and the new importations express indignation over the prospect before them.—An Oakland man who lost his election bet roasted peanuts all day last Sunday on the public streets. He attracted great attention, and as no change was returned, his sales realized nearly $1,200, which will be divided among the charitable institutions of the city.—Anschlag, the Garden Grove murderer, cheated the gallows by committing suicide with poison furnished him by a fellow convict.—Railroad official report a large and increasing immigration to this state from the East.—The president having refused to pardon ex-Judge Terry for contempt of court, the case will be carried before the United States supreme bench.—The Presbyterians of San Francisco are holding a series of protracted meetings for the benefit of foreign missions. The Salvation Army is also about to inaugurate a boom.

The Knights of Labor held a convention in Indianapolis last week. The secretary reported that the membership of the order had fallen off 300,000 during the past year, and that the finances were not in a satisfactory condition.—The Rev. W. F. Laidley, a Methodist minister, was indicted for the seduction of Alice Alderman, at Boone, Iowa. At the trial the girl testified that her unlawful relations with Laidley began in 1884, when she was fifteen years old, and continued until September, 1887. At the trial the other day the clergyman took advantage of the statute of limitations, and the case was dismissed. Several other charges of lewdness against the Rev. Mr. Laidley were likewise dismissed without trial.—The board of trustees of Columbia College, New York, have decided to establish an annex for women.—Rear-Admiral Baldwin, of the U. S. Navy, died at New York on the 18th.—Official election returns from most of the Republican states increase the vote for Harrison.—The Woman's Industrial League of New York has adopted a protest addressed to the convention at Indianapolis protesting against the admission of Chinese to the Knights of Labor. The appeal in conclusion says: "We demand less selfishness from organized labor in the future and that it shall show more liberality to the interest of our wage-working women. New York furnishes 20,000 abandoned women annually. These recruits come largely from underpaid and starved women. If you are sincere as a body, protect your own household from these immoral, leprous Chinamen, who are taking the bread out of the mouths of our wage-women and driving them to immorality and starvation."—A suit is on trial in New York to determine whether John McGuire has the right of sepulture in a Catholic cemetery in which he owned a lot. The church claims that as McGuire was a follower of Dr. McGlynn, who was excommunicated, he had forfeited his right to be buried in consecrated ground.—Jefferson Davis's health is very feeble. The old man resides at Beauvoir, Miss.

The Socialists held a monster meeting in Victoria Park, London, last Sunday. Mrs. Parsons made a speech.—Lord Randolph Churchill, in a recent speech, denounced the Sackville West letter as a stupid blunder, and upheld the dismissal of the minister. Lord Salisbury takes an opposite stand.—American bishops have petitioned the Congregation de Propaganda Fide against the predominant influence exercised by German Catholics in America. They urge upon the Vatican that it is advisable not to permit the formation of separate German parishes or the nomination of German dignitaries.

INGERSOLL'S REPLY TO CARDINAL MANNING.

From the North American Review.

IV.

What was the condition of the world three hundred years ago, the period, according to the cardinal, in which the church reached the height of its influence, and since which it has been unable to withstand the rising tide of reformation and the whirlwind of revolution.

In that blessed time, Philip II. was king of Spain—he with the cramped head and the monstrous jaw. Heretics were hunted like wild and poisonous beasts; the Inquisition was firmly established, and priests were busy with rack and fire. With a zeal born of the hatred of man and the love of God, the church, with every instrument of torture, touched every nerve in the human body.

In those happy days, the duke of Alva was devastating the homes of Holland; heretics were buried alive—their tongues were torn from their mouths, their lids from their eyes; the Armada was on the sea for the destruction of the heretics of England, and the Moriscoes—a million and a half of industrious people—were being driven by sword and flame from their homes. The Jews had been expelled from Spain. This Catholic country had succeeded in driving intelligence and industry from its territory; and this had been done with a cruelty, with a ferocity, unequalled in the annals of crime. Nothing was left but ignorance, bigotry, intolerance, credulity, the Inquisition, the seven sacraments, and the seven deadly sins. And yet a cardinal of the nineteenth century, living in the land of Shakespeare, regrets the change that has been wrought by the intellectual efforts, by the discoveries, by the inventions and heroism of three hundred years.

Three hundred years ago, Charles IX., in France, son of Catherine de Medici, in the year of grace 1572—after nearly sixteen centuries of Catholic Christianity—after hundreds of vicars of Christ had sat in St. Peter's chair—after the natural passions of man had been "softened" by the creed of Rome—came the Massacre of St. Bartholomew, the result of a conspiracy between the vicar of Christ, Philip II., Charles IX., and his fiendish mother. Let the cardinal read the account of this massacre once more, and after reading it, imagine that he sees the gashed and mutilated bodies of thousands of men and women, and then let him say that he regrets the revolutions and reformations of three hundred years.

About three hundred years ago Clement VIII., vicar of Christ, acting in God's place, substitute of the Infinite, persecuted Giordano Bruno even unto death. This great, this sublime man, was tried for heresy. He had ventured to assert the rotary motion of the earth; he had hazarded the conjecture that there were in the fields of infinite space worlds larger and more glorious than ours. For these low and groveling thoughts, for this contradiction of the word and vicar of God, this man was imprisoned for many years. But his noble spirit was not broken, and finally, in the year 1600, by the orders of the infamous vicar, he was chained to the stake. Priests believing in the doctrine of universal forgiveness—priests who when smitten upon one cheek turned the other—carried with a kind of ferocious joy fagots to the feet of this incomparable man. These disciples of "Our Lord" were made joyous as the flames, like serpents, climbed around the body of Bruno. In a few moments the brave thinker was dead, and the priests who had burned him fell upon their knees and asked the infinite God to continue the blessed work forever in hell.

There are two things that cannot exist in the same universe—an infinite God, and a martyr.

Does the cardinal regret that kings and emperors are not now engaged in the extermination of Protestants? Does he regret that dungeons of the Inquisition are no longer crowded with the best and bravest? Does he long for the fires of the auto-da-fe?

In coming to a conclusion as to the origin of the Catholic church—in determining the truth of the claim of infallibility—we are not restricted to the physical achievements of that church, or to the history of its propagation, or to the rapidity of its growth.

This church has a creed; and if this church is of divine origin—if its head is the vicar of Christ, and, as such, infallible in matters of faith and morals, this creed must be true. Let us start with the supposition that God exists, and that he is infinitely wise, powerful, and good—and this is only a supposition. Now, if the creed is foolish, absurd, and cruel, it cannot be of divine origin. We find in this creed the following:

"Whosoever will be saved, before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic faith."

Is it not necessary, before all things, that he be good, honest, merciful, charitable, and just? Creed is more important than conduct. The most important of all things is that he hold the Catholic faith. There were thousands of years during which it was not necessary to hold that faith, because that faith did not exist; and yet during that time the virtues were just as important as now, just as important as ever they can be. Millions of the noblest of the human race never heard of this creed. Millions of the bravest and the best have heard of it, examined, and rejected it. Millions of the most infamous have believed it, and because of their belief, or notwithstanding their belief, have murdered millions of their fellows. We know that men can be, have been, and are just as wicked with it as without it. We know that it is not necessary to believe it to be good, loving, tender, noble, and self-denying. We admit that millions who have believed it have also been self-denying and heroic, and that millions, by such belief, were not prevented from torturing and destroying the helpless.

Now if all who believed it were good, and all who rejected it were bad, then there might be some propriety in saying that "whoever will be saved, before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic faith." But as the experience of mankind is otherwise, the declaration becomes absurd, ignorant, and cruel.

There is still another clause:

"Which faith, except every one do keep entire and inviolate, without doubt, he shall everlastingly perish."

We now have both sides of this wonderful truth: The believer will be saved, the unbeliever will be lost. We know that faith is not the child or servant of the will. We know that belief is a conclusion based upon what the mind supposes to be true. We know that it is not an act of the will. Nothing can be more absurd than to save a man because he is not intelligent enough to accept the truth, and nothing can be more infamous than to damn a man because he is intelligent enough to reject the false. It resolves itself into a question of intelligence. If the creed is true, then man rejects it because he lacks intelligence. Is this a crime for which man should everlastingly perish? If the creed is false, then a man accepts it because he lacks intelligence. In both cases the crime is exactly the same. If a man is to be damned for rejecting the truth, certainly he should not be saved for accepting the false. This one clause demonstrates that a being of infinite wisdom and goodness did not write it. It also demonstrates that it was the work of men who had neither wisdom nor a sense of justice.

What is this Catholic faith that must be held? It is this:

"That we worship one God in Trinity and Trinity in Unity, neither confounding the persons nor dividing the substance."

Why should an infinite being demand worship? Why should one God wish to be worshiped as three? Why should three Gods wish to be worshiped as one? Why should we pray to one God and think of three, or pray to three Gods and think of one? Can this increase the happiness of the one, or of the three? Is it possible to think of one as three, or of three as one? If you think of three as one, can you think of one as none, or of none as one? When you think of three as one, what do you do with the other two? You must not "confound the persons"—they must be kept separate. When you think of one as three, how do you get the other two? You must not "divide the substance." Is it possible to write greater contradictions than these?

This creed demonstrates the human origin of the Catholic church. Nothing could be more unjust than to punish man for unbelief—for the expression of honest thought—for having been guided by his reason—for having acted in accordance with his best judgment.

(To be Continued.)

THE COMING "MAN OF SIN."

The Rev. M. Baxter, an English Advent preacher, has been warning the people of this country that before the end of the year 1900 all of us will be either in heaven or hell. This awfully delightful prediction is printed in a two-cent pamphlet issued from the office of the Christian Herald, Bible House, New York, entitled "The Great Crisis." The pamphlet is without date, but in a note the author says it was written and in print in 1866. Our copy was obtained early in 1887, when Mr. Baxter was preaching Second Adventism and distributing gratuitously his two-cent prophetic revelation.

The coming "Man of Sin," says Mr. Baxter, seems to be Prince Jerome Bonaparte, who was born in 1823. He is "a man of fierce countenance, understanding dark sentences," i. e., of defiant aspect and great sagacity, and also a "vile person," notoriously ridiculed and vilified, and a Voltarian Infidel and democrat, all of which the Antichrist is predicted to be." And his name, as spelt in the Greek and Hebrew letters, foots up "the number of the beast," 666. See:

Greek } P. I e r o m e n a p l e o n letters { 80, 10, 5, 100, 70, 40, 5, 50, 1, 80, 70, 5, 70, 50=666.
Heb. } Pe, Gimel, Resh, Aleph, Mem, Beth, Aleph, Nun, Pe, Resh, Teth.
let. { 80, 3, 200, 1, 40, 2, 1, 50, 80, 200, 9=666.

"This latter-day Democratic Cæsar," says Mr. Baxter, "is to sit in the rebuilt temple of Jerusalem and to be worshiped as a god and to be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's personal coming."

Mr. Baxter does not explain why he contracts Paul to P. nor why he ends the name Jerome with an e in Greek, which would make the pronunciation Jeromæ. And it seems queer to the ordinary reader that in Hebrew the name should be spelled P-Grom Bonprt. But the absence of vowels in the Hebrew alphabet necessitates the imperfect spelling, and the insertion of the inarticulate letter Aleph twice (which is oftener sounded broad A than long O) helps to make the count come out right. And the omission of the final e in Jerome would have made the total number too small by five in Greek, while the addition of aul to the initial P would have made the count 431 too many. In expounding prophecies you must always fit the fulfilment to the prediction, even if you have to pervert both.

Mr. Baxter is cocksure that Antichrist will be a Napoleon, because the latter name is derived from the Greek word Apollon (Rev. ix, 11: aorist Apoleon), and the letters of the word Napoleon foot up 666.

Early last year Mr. Baxter was expecting the crisis to begin before the close of 1887, and that "the beast," Jerome Bonaparte, would reveal his antichristian characteristics. But European events are not even yet shaping themselves to the accommodation of the Adventist. We therefore suggest to Mr. Baxter, in view of the probability that Antichrist may not be a Napoleon, that some other Frenchman may answer as well for the coming "Man of Sin." We have a sort of suspicion that the coming man is Boulanger, and we have been figuring on the letters of his name with the following result: Boulanger in Greek foots up 661, which is only five short of 666. Now we would like to know Boulanger's Christian name, just to see if its initial or initials won't count exactly five.

We don't know on what authority Mr. Baxter gives to Jerome Bonaparte the name Paul. Is that really his first name, or did Mr. Baxter give it to him so as to fulfil prophecy? Anyhow, we will now guess that Boulanger's first name begins with E. That counts five in Greek, which added to 661 makes 666, "the number of the beast!"

We are far from being confident in regard to the discovery of "the beast," because so many students of divinity have tried and failed. In the second Toldoth Jeshu, a Hebrew document brought to light in 1705, there is a full account of the life and death of Jesus, the son of Miriam (Mary) by Joseph Pandira. An uncle of Jesus, named Simon Ben Kalphus (answering to Simon Kepha of the first Toldoth Jeshu), having procured the incommunicable name (Shem Hamphoras), wrought signs and wonders just as Jesus had done. Having by this means become the leader of a sect, Simon Kepha, alias Peter, sat on a tower and wrote commandments. The narrative then proceeds:

And Simon composed for the deception of the people of Ai lying books, and they called them 'Avonkelajon' (Evangelism) . . . . He also wrote books in the names of the disciples of Jesus, and especially in that of Johannes (John), and said that Jesus had given them these. But with special purpose he composed the book of Johannes (the Apocalypse), for the men of Ai thought it contained mysteries, whereas it contained pure invention. For instance, he wrote in the book of Johannes that Johannes saw a beast with seven heads and seven (ten) horns and seven crowns, and the name of the beast was blasphemy, and the number of the beast was 666. Now the seven heads mean the seven letters which compose the words 'Jeshu of Nazareth.' And in like manner the number 666 is that which is the sum of the letters composing his name.

The Rev. S. Baring-Gould, who translates and publishes the above, has not given us the seven Hebrew letters answering to "Jesus of Nazareth," but they are evidently the following:

Yod, Shin, Vau, Nun, Yod, Tsaddi, Resh.
10, 300, 6, 50, 10, 90, 200=666.

The equivalent of these seven letters in English is Ishu Natzr—sh and tz each being but one letter in Hebrew—shin and tsaddi—and the Hebrew quiescent letter yod varying in sound according to circumstances.

The authenticity or great antiquity of this document we will not pretend to vouch for, but it is perhaps as plausible as any other attempt to solve the mystery of the "Man of Sin," and it purports to have been written by Rabbi Jochanan, son of Saccai, in Jerusalem, soon after the events therein narrated as occurring in the reign of Herod the Great, some time before the beginning of the Christian era, that is to say, prior to the alleged birth of the gospel Jesus. HISTORICUS.

A CONVERTER CONVERTED.

One of the stories about Colonel Ingersoll is that a Christian woman went to his house to convert him. The colonel smiled with the most deferential politeness as he said: "Will you walk in, madam? There is no need of making too solemn a business of it. I thank you for your kind intentions at any rate." The lady, who, apparently, expected to be knocked down and dragged out for her temerity, looked very much relieved at the kindness of her reception. A moment after the dinner bell rang. "Come," said the colonel, "walk out and dine with the family, and we can talk over this conversion business as we eat."

Soup was served. As it came on the table, and before it was ladled out, the lady lifted her hand. "Stop!" said she. "What is it?" said the colonel. "Do you not think we ought to thank the good Lord for this bountiful dinner before we begin eating?" "I will only make one suggestion first. Your Lord is just, is he not? Now, perhaps within a block of me, at this present time, there is some faithful, devout Christian who is starving. Perhaps, if perfect justice were done, our dinner would be on his table. Do you not think the less we say about the matter the better?"

It was in this way that the talk ran on. The lady came every day to visit the colonel and his family. She appeared to be fascinated with the loving trust, content, and happiness of this compact household. Finally she said to the colonel: "I apologize. I do not care what you believe. You are leading more of a Christian life than I ever hope to accomplish."—Golden Gate.

ROMAN RULE AND RUIN.—FACTS, NOT FICTIONS.

"Monks prostituted their knowledge of writing to the purpose of forging charters in their own favor." (Hallam, 263.)

Guizot, speaking of the influence of the church upon the state, says, "I do not think, upon the whole, her influence has been beneficial." (Guizot's History of Civilization, p. 115.)

"Many of the peculiar and prominent characteristics of the faith and discipline of those ages appear to have been either introduced or sedulously promoted for the purposes of sordid fraud, above all the doctrine of purgatory and masses for the dead." (Hallam's Middle Ages, p. 252.)

The pious Council of Rouen, in 1231, "required the counsel who practiced in that religious tribunal to swear that they would not steal the papers." . . . "The judges are described as extortioners who rendered their occupation more base than that of a pimp with his bawds." (See Lea's Hist. Inquisition, 1, 2.)

It was a rule universally adopted at this time by the church that "it was an act of virtue to deceive and lie, when by that means the interest of the church might be promoted." (Möschheim's Ecclesiastical History, 1, 293.)

"During the pontificate of Sextus IV. regulations, enforced under penalty of excommunication, were enacted prohibiting the printing of any work excepting such as was previously licensed by an officer appointed for that purpose." (Roscoe II.)

"In many places people were pleased to see their priest keeping a mistress in the hope that it might secure their wives from seduction." (D'Aubigne's Hist. Reformation, p. 10.)

It seems from the above that Jehovah selected rather a scurvy crew as "the keepers of learning" for those days. How does it strike you?

"Wherever they wandered, the Jesuits were drawn or naturally fell into every scheme that disturbed, agitated, and harassed humanity. In the year they joined the pope's army in France they enlisted themselves in the expedition of the Spaniard warring with the Moors of Granada. Ferdinand, the Catholic, had burned four hundred Jews together and driven the greater part of the Moors into exile." (Quesnel's History Spain, p. 122.)

"The savages were better men, infinitely more moral, before they became Christians. . . . They were cursed with the name of Christian which they thought they honored by the foulest infamy that clings to the name of man." (Steinmetz's History of the Jesuits, p. 373.)

"Pope Alexander VI. has been universally denounced by Protestants and Catholics as a monster of debauchery and cruelty." (History Christian Church, p. 428.)

"Roderigo Borgia, who was a cardinal and an archbishop, and who bought the pontifical chair with 'four mules loaded with gold,' 'lived with a lady of Rome, continued the same intercourse with her daughter, Rosa Vanoza, and had five children by her.' 'All the ecclesiastics,' says a historian, 'had mistresses, and all the convents of the capital were houses of bad fame.'" (D'Aubigne's History of the Reformation, p. 11.)

"Clement V. declared the whole Venetian population infamous, their goods in every part of the world subject to confiscation, and every Venetian subject to be reduced to slavery. A bull, in the same terms, was published by Gregory XI, in 1376, against the Florentines." (Hallam's Middle Ages, p. 317.)

The same writer, p. 277, says that "all writers concur in stigmatizing the dissoluteness and neglect of decency that prevailed among the clergy."

The Christian monks destroyed the Serapian Library of Alexandria, and murdered the people who defended the valuable collection of books.

"The church of Rome has inflicted a greater amount of unmerited suffering than any other religion that has ever existed among mankind." (Lecky's Rationalism, p. 46.)

Motley tells us that "the Spanish Inquisition established by Pope Alexander the Sixth and Ferdinand, the Catholic, was devised for Jews and Moors, whom the Christianity of that age did not regard as human beings. That in eighteen years of Torquemada's administration 10,220 individuals were burned alive, and 97,321 punished with infamy, confiscation of property, or perpetual imprisonment; that the total number of families destroyed by this one friar alone amounted to 114,401; that it taught the savages of India and America to shudder at the name of Christianity; it was a bench of monks without appeal, having its familiars in every house, diving into the secrets of every fireside, judging and executing its horrible decrees without responsibility. It arrested on suspicion, tortured till confession, and then punished by fire."

"Two witnesses to separate facts consigned the victim to a dungeon. Here he was sparingly supplied with food, forbidden to speak, or even to sing, and then left till famine and misery should break his spirit. The torture took place at midnight in a gloomy dungeon; the victim, whether man, matron, or tender virgin, was stripped naked and stretched upon the wooden bench; water, weights, fires, pulleys, screws, all the apparatus by which the sinews could be strained without cracking, the bones crushed without breaking; and the body racked exquisitely without giving up its ghost, were now put into operation. The executioner practiced successively all the forms of torture which the devilish ingenuity of the monks had invented. Bertrand le Blass, of Tournay, was dragged on a hurdle with his mouth closed with an iron gag, to the market place. Here his right hand and foot were burned and twisted off between two red-hot irons; his tongue was then torn out by the roots; he was then swung by an iron chain over a slow fire until he was entirely roasted." This was for snatching a holy wafer from a priest. (Motley's Dutch Republic, vol. 1, chap. 3, p. 320 to 337.)

"The Book of Sentences of Toulouse," pages 1308-1323, gives the names and residences of 636 persons sentenced by the Inquisition in that time. "It became a terror to every man. The whole population was at the mercy of the Holy office." "Inquisitors employed spies, messengers, and bravos, who went armed, making the social scourge complete." "In 1310, at Toulouse, eighteen persons were burned alive." "In April, 1312, the dead bodies of six persons were dug up and burned, and five burned alive." (See Lea's History of the Inquisition, vol. 1, pp. 377 to 398.) This is a late and very exhaustive investigation of this subject. It consists of three volumes of 600 pages each, is fortified by more than a thousand authorities, many of whom were Catholics and officers of that brutal tribunal. For sale by Harper Brothers, New York.

Appleton's Encyclopedia says: "The Inquisition was a tribunal established in Roman Catholic countries to try persons accused of heresy; that it first appeared under Theodosius; that at the beginning of the thirteenth century Innocent III. sent Cistercian monks to the south of France to force a war with the Albigenses; that Pope Pius IV. made an attempt to establish it after the Reformation; that in Spain it was introduced soon after its establishment in France; that it can be traced back by authentic records to 1232." He quotes Lorents (who was a Catholic) and whose truthfulness is questioned by Catholics only, as stating that 31,912 persons were burned alive, 17,659 were burned in effigy, and 291,456 were punished by religious penalties. (See also Lea's History of the Inquisition, W. H. Rule's History of the Inquisition, Lunbarch's History of the Inquisition.)

"Upon the 16th of February, 1568, a sentence of the holy office condemned all the inhabitants of the Netherlands to death as heretics. A proclamation of the king, dated ten days later, confirmed this decree of the Inquisition and ordered it to be carried into instant execution without regard to age, sex, or condition. Three millions of people, men, women, and children, were sentenced to the scaffold in three lines." (Motley's Dutch Republic, vol. 2, p. 158.)

The university at Athens, and the academies of Berytus and Thessalonica were suppressed by the Christian, Justinian. Justinian and several of his successors issued edicts for the suppression of mathematicians. For centuries it was a crime punishable with death for one to have in his possession any book not authorized by the church. Countless thousands of valuable books were consigned to the flames, by order of this power, in order to make room for the sniveling rot which the corrupt priesthood of that time was foisting upon humanity as divine truth.

"A cloud of ignorance," says Hallam, "overspread the whole face of the church, hardly broken by a few glimmering lights, who owe almost the whole of their distinction to the surrounding darkness." In 992 scarcely a person could be found in Rome who knew the first elements of letters. Not one priest in a thousand in Spain, about the age of Charlemagne, could address a common letter of salutation to another.

In the French provinces of Languedoc alone, the man-hunters of the Holy Inquisition spilled more human blood than ever reddened the sand of the Roman arena. This was done in obedience to that "blind faith which is the sole saving merit of mental prostitution."

In one century after the Inquisition had been established, the number of convents had more than doubled. In 1450 the Franciscans had sixteen thousand two hundred convents, and the "observants" had thirty-four thousand monasteries of their own. In many parts of Spain there were six friars and two priests for every dozen workingmen.

In Germany the Inquisitor Hogstraten attempted the destruction of the entire literature, except the old Bible.

"Pope Pius praised and rewarded Alva for his atrocities. Alva had cut down the Protestant leaders Egmont and Horn. The prisons were filled with nobles and the rich. The 'Council of Blood' had the scaffold for its cross of salvation, and the decrees of the Inquisition for its gospel. Men were roasted alive, and women were delivered over to the soldiers' brutality. Alva boasted that he had consigned to death eighteen thousand Flemings." (History of the Jesuits by Steinmetz, pp. 453-454.)

In 1546 the Venetian ambassador at the court of the Emperor Charles V. stated in an official report to his own government, on his return home, "that in Holland and in Friesland more than thirty thousand persons have suffered death at the hands of justice for Anabaptist errors." (Correspondence Charles V. and his Embassadors: London, 1850; vol. 8, p. 471.)

"In the year 1209 a massacre almost without parallel was perpetrated in France in one of God's holy sanctuaries, the church of Mary Magdalene, to which the victims had fled for safety. From tottering infancy to tottering old age not one was spared. A vile lot of Christian zealots turned loose upon the defenseless inhabitants and murdered twenty thousand people. (See Lea's History Middle Ages, vol. 1, p. 154.)

"In Andalusia alone, during a single year, the Inquisition put to death 2,000 Jews, besides 17,000 who underwent some form of punishment less severe than the stake." (Ticknor's History Span. Lit., vol. 1, p. 448.)

In 1562, the Bishop of Chalons having failed to convert a congregation of Huguenots at Vista, "Cardinal de Guise summoned two companies of soldiers and sounded a charge. The conventicle was furiously entered; all who did not escape by the windows were slaughtered, whilst the priests busied themselves with pointing out the wretches who were trying to escape over the roofs of the houses. On a subsequent occasion three hundred wretches were shut up in a church and starved for three days. Then they were tied together in couples and led off to slaughter. Children were sold for a crown. During the slaughter of their mothers babes were born, to be thrown into the river by the murderous fiends. Babes at the breast were pricked to death with pogniards; some were impaled, others were roasted alive, and some were sawed asunder; women were hanged at the windows and door posts; girls were ravished, and still more hideous and brutal crimes were committed." (See Steinmetz's History Jesuits, p. 40; also D'Aubigne's History.)
(To be Continued.)

CULTIVATE the eye. Learn how to see all that is interesting, instructive, and beautiful. The world widens for all who see the most of its varied parts. Train the eye to observe and appreciate. Train the feelings to love and sympathize, and then earth will be filled with joy and happiness.—ELMIRA.

A Freethinker Artist.

To the Editors of Freethought:

With your kind permission I want to say a few words for F. E. Sturgis, artist, of Danville, Ind., and his beautiful works. He is a thorough, conscientious artist, indeed. I have received two portraits from him, the work of his genius—one a life size full figure in French Pastel colors, of our little boy we lost about two years ago; the other a crayon portrait of the better portion of the Wettstein family. Both are beautiful works of art, remarkably true to life, and will remain precious heirlooms for generations to come. I can safely indorse his works and the man, and am sure our Liberal friends will not regret having sent him a trial order. I have been a dealer in fine art goods, in connection with my jewelry establishment, for thirty years, and am considered an authority on pictures at home.
Rochelle, Ill. OTTO WETTSTEIN.

For the Meetings.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I take pleasure in spending you $1 toward the January meetings, and I would enjoy being with you all personally, but will have the whole thing in my mind if not present.

October 22 I received a telegram to attend the funeral services of Mrs. D. Edson Smith, of Santa Ana. They were conducted in a new and very impressive manner. Both Mr. and Mrs. Smith were sincere Spiritualists, and, by her own request, Mr. Smith made a few appropriate remarks and read several selections in proof of their ideas, then called on any one to speak in regard to the departed. Several responded, testifying to her exemplary life, etc. Mr. Smith's father, a Baptist preacher, and his mother, also, remained silent, although the neighbors sang, "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

When will humanity outgrow the God idea? Even a silver dollar has "In God we trust," but, nevertheless, it don't contain one hundred cents' worth of silver. When at the Sweetwater dam in San Diego county, I met a real live Methodist. He said that he had been a gambler, and an awful sinner, but that "God in his mercy had snatched him as a brand from the burning" and saved him. I looked up with surprise, and said, "Indeed, you had to be saved? You couldn't help yourself?" I asked him if he believed that God made us, and gave us all our faculties." He replied, "Yes." "Well, then," said I, "he made me very skeptical. I am one who believes that men make gods after their own image. I have outgrown all such ideas about salvation, and accept R. G. Ingersoll's motto, 'The time to be happy is here and now.'" At that he raved, and consigned me to hell, etc. I said, "If his God had made me so that I could not believe, of course I could not help it any more than he could help being saved."

KATE PARKER.

Anaheim, Cal.

Further Reform.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Please allow me to offer a thought upon a subject not much treated upon in Infidel publications, but which appears to me to be deserving of attention. I write this just before the presidential election, with the knowledge that it cannot appear until after the election, that it may appear, as I can assure the reader it is, free from political party bias.

Secularists claim to be seeking after truth, nothing else. Let us not stultify ourselves. We advocate freedom in all things; the absolute right of the individual to do as he or she pleases, so long as the rights of others are not trespassed upon; free thought, free speech, free press, free ballot, mental liberty, personal liberty, civil liberty, the advancement of knowledge, civilization, and everything that favors the well-being of the human race. Sufficiently comprehensive, surely.

Why not, then, include free trade? Not only for ourselves as a nation; but including all the nations of the earth. Many arguments can be adduced in favor of this proposition. I shall content myself with a few. It is a grand idea, not original with myself (I wish it were).

Free trade, absolute, unrestricted commercial intercourse among all nations, would be the greatest factor of this or any other age in building up a high civilization; to discourage wars; to promote arbitration of national differences; to diffuse knowledge, and promote "peace on earth and good will to men."

"Protection," so-called, is narrow and selfish. It is born of that disposition which is in some people to "hog" one another. It is puerile and short-sighted. It is "clannish," and "feudal," and taxes the many to benefit the few. What well-informed person would advocate interstate "protection" among the sovereignties of these United States? The very owls would laugh at him.

Then why not unrestricted commerce among all other sovereignties? Suppose they don't all speak the same language and have the same manners and customs. All the more reason for free intercourse. America has set many examples of freedom and advancement to the old world people, and it appears eminently proper that she should do so some more. This condition once in operation, coming generations will read with wonder of the short-sighted selfishness of their "protectionist" forefathers, and smile at their boasting of their "advancement," their "civilization," their "enlightenment," their "liberty." It appears to me fitting that Secularists, Agnostics, and all other "Infidels," should lead in this as well as other reforms, always occupying a plane above partisanship of any kind.

F. S. MATTESON.

Aumsville, Or.

The Right Ring.

To the Editors of Freethought:

All hail the Liberal meetings to be held in Irving Hall through the month of January next; to wind up with celebrating the anniversary of Thomas Paine's birth, and the organizing of a California Secular Union. Judging from the attendance on January 29 of this year at the same hall, the people are ready to organize; and time it is. They have only been waiting for a leader. Samuel P. Putnam is the man who can marshal the people, and lead them on to success.

The California Secular Union will be inaugurated in time of peace, but many a battle, of words at least, will be fought ere liberty and justice crown this nation. For past and present lukewarmness double vigilance and effort will be necessary.

It was my privilege to be present, in Philadelphia, at the inauguration of the Liberal League in 1876, and a delegate to subsequent meetings before its name was changed to the American Secular Union. I am only too glad to once more put on the harness and co-operate in speeding on the good work, with such men as Putnam & Macdonald, with their Freethought paper, and other grand men and women of this Pacific Coast.

I liked your admission, under "News and Notes," of Dr. Jennie Bearby being your pioneer at Mountain Home, Mr. Putnam, and that women were just as good workers for Freethought as they ever were for the churches; also your hope for the time when they shall have all the opportunities of a man, and your testimony that then the world would march on.

Brother Putnam, have no fears as to means to pay expenses of the meetings if you will but live up to the above sentiments and choose capable women as well as men to co-operate with you in building up a California Secular Union.

I would say to Mr. Shaw, of the Independent Pulpit, that my experience proves that there is little in a name, whether "Infidel," "Liberal," or "Freethinker." The last two "may be anything, good or bad, may belong to the church or preach the gospel if it pays," just as well as an "Infidel." If a person has inherited principle, honor, or integrity, he will live it. His faith or profession of goodness avails but little, while antenatal conditions avail much; yes, I wish people knew how much! I know Messrs. Seaver & Mendum, of the Boston Investigator, and others who are known as "Infidels." I only wish all my associates were as good as they. There are no "poltroons, sneaks, flunkies, or hypocrites," among them.

SCOTT BRIGGS.

San Francisco, Cal.

THE Pittsburgh Truth says: "The Sabbath Imposture," a pamphlet by Harry Hoover, president of the Pittsburgh Secular Society, has been received from Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco. This pamphlet contains many of the most valuable and stubborn facts upon the Sunday question that have ever been collected. It should be distributed by the thousands in every place where Sabbatharians are making a hell for the inhabitants. We need about fifty thousand copies for Pittsburgh. Ten cents per copy; six copies for 50 cents; fifteen for $1.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places returning from the East:

Sprague .....	W. T., Nov. 20-21	Scappoose .....	Or., Dec. 2
Pasco .....	W. T., " 22-23	Prt Townsend .....	W. T., " 4-6
Portland .....	Or., Nov. 25-26	Snohomish .....	" 8-10
Vancouver .....	W. T., " 27-28	Stella .....	" 15-16
No. Yamhill .....	Or., " 29-30	Silverton .....	Or., " 22-23

It is desirable to announce the remainder of the appointments at the earliest possible moment. Will friends who wish lectures write at once to S. P. Putnam, as above. Mr. Putnam will be in San Francisco during the month of January.

W. F. JAMIESON will commence his winter lecture campaign Nov. 15, speaking in Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas. He will receive subscriptions for FREETHOUGHT. Address him at Monte Vista, Col.

PROF. D. G. CROW will fill engagements to lecture at points between St. Louis, Mo., and Denver, Col. Terms on application. Secularism, Science, and Religion are general terms covering the subjects of his lectures. State time and give particulars. Address him at Sabetha, Kan., until further notice. Professor Crow will carry the light of FREETHOUGHT and other Liberal luminaries to those who desire to find the truth, and will receive subscriptions.

PROF. D. C. SEYMOUR, who is now in California, is prepared to lecture on the following subjects:

1. Prehistoric Man.
2. Man, Mentally and Physically: How to Develop Scientifically.
3. Origin of the God Idea; also Prayer and Religion.
4. Origin of all Things—the Law of Development.
5. The Law of Influences; or, How we Help One Another.
6. The Birth, Growth, Decay, and Death of Worlds, Suns, etc.
7. Right Generation Alone, not Regeneration, can Bless Humanity.
8. The Right Relation of the Sexes; or, The Science of Stirpiculture.
9. The Future of this Planet, Redeemed by Science.
10. All the Evidences Claimed for Immortality Examined.
11. The Effects of Alcohol, Tobacco, Bad Foods, and Poor Ventilation.

These lectures are illustrated with large colored drawings, skeletons, lithographs, colored stereopticon views, etc. Liberals desiring the services of Professor Seymour may address him in care of this office. He makes no charge for lectures. The friends are only asked to provide a hall, church, or school-house, and the audience will remunerate the speaker.

The Demands of Liberalism.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

Wanted,

By an Infidel, a situation to do the heavy work in a wholesale store, warehouse, or mill. No objection to country. Is a total abstainer, and does not use tobacco. Can give good references. Address, INFIDEL, this office.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Stenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

LUCIFER THE LIGHT-BEARER.

DEVOTED TO THE

Frank and fearless discussion of basic principles in the field of governmental and social reform.

For more than eighteen months this paper and its publishers have been prosecuted in the courts by the agents of the Comstock Vice Society, for alleged violations of the U. S. postal laws.

Published weekly at Valley Falls, Kansas, at $1.25 per annum. Specimen copies free.

Miracles and Miracle Workers,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 10 cts.

Christian Absurdities,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 20 cts.

Both for sale at this office.

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question. Cloth, 75 cts. Address this office.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,

Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by
J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland, a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made available to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

he Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS, CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.

33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, b. t. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, best make, solid coin silver, open face or hunting. American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 2 ounce case, 7
jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled movements, $12 50, $13 50, $14 50; 5 ounce, $16 00; 6 ounce, $17 50.
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17, $18, $19 50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to beat and cold, add $4,
being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best 14-karat gold-filled gold watches, casta elegant and latest
style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory and myself for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24 50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies'
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$22; 15 jewels, $23. In good second quality filled cases, $2
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $33.
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches, to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best rolled
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4, $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case.
Eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1;
best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strops, 50c. Set
best violin strings, 50c; for guitar, 75c. 3 Ludwig harmonicas,
50c. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $3, $12.
Large field glasses, $3, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free.
BEST WORK. Try me.

Every watch is looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
BADGE in PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of cut and smaller,
two-thirds size. War-
ranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2 75, $3 50. Large,
$3 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $3, $10; and
charms up to $25. De-
mand daily increasing.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.

OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Cardener. Introduction by Robert
G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Address this office.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author,
Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum
notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Church-
man," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages.
Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION.

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron
D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

F. SANGROVE, Merchant Tailor.

LATE OF LONDON AND PARIS,

All imported goods. Orders promptly attended. Prices moderate. Cleaning and repairing
neatly done.

Ladies' Cloaks and Riding Habits a Specialty.

F. SANGROVE, 104 FIFTH ST.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say
infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to
those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior
Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address:
Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San
Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS,
the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author.
Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 48.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - DECEMBER 1, 1888

Who hath seen the righteous man forsaken? The Rev. Mr. Perry, revivalist and philanthropist, is in the almshouse at Brooklyn, N. Y.

TWELVE years ago James Lick bequeathed nearly half a million dollars for the establishment of a manual training school for boys in San Francisco. The benefit of the gift has not as yet reached the youth of the city.

"FREETHOUGHT," says Moses Hull, "is a good paper, second only to New Thought." This is generous, but it isn't journalism. The true editor is like the man who reported the race between the old America and the British yachts. "Your majesty," said he, "there is no second."

In the latest issue of Foundation Principles—the last as well as the latest—Lois Waisbrooker, the editor, bids her readers adieu. Circumstances, she says, make it impossible for her to go on. Our experience has taught us that circumstances are the greatest obstacles that publishers of reform papers have to encounter. We move that they be either abolished or brought under better control.

The colonists of Topolobampo issue their paper, the Credit Foncier, semi-monthly. It is published at Topolobampo with a neatness of make-up quite creditable to Printer Slocum. Mr. Slocum's contributions to the columns of the paper, since he has been in Mexico, give the outside world a clearer idea of the advantages and difficulties of primitive life than anything previously printed.

Our remarks about the city of Summerland, the Paradise which our friends the Spiritualists design inaugurating near Santa Barbara, are said by the Golden Gate to be "preposterously wild." The correction is as follows: "The Ortega rancho, owned by Mr. Williams, upon which Summerland is located, contains 1,050 acres, and the site of Summerland 160 acres. Instead of 3,000 lots, the actual number is 2,557." To err is human, but we have not referred to Summerland as a "track." The credit for that typographical inaccuracy belongs to the Golden Gate. About one-third of the lots in the proposed colony are sold, and the enterprise has all the appearances of a financial success.

JUDGE RUTLEDGE, of Santa Rosa, has learned what it costs to render a decision against the Catholic church. He was judge in the celebrated Ross case. Mrs. Elizabeth Ross having been induced by a priest named Conway to bequeath her property to him as trustee for a Catholic institution, her son sued the church for the property, alleging undue influence, and won the suit through the decision of Judge Rutledge. The judge was candidate for reelection, and on the Sunday before election circulars condemning his course in the Ross case were distributed to members of the Catholic church, as a result of which he was defeated and a man of inferior abilities elected to his place.

It is not heresy, we trust, to urge that the United States government should issue paper money to replace the silver dollar nuisance. At least, the postmaster at every money-order office should be provided with paper dollars to deliver in exchange for silver or gold, without charge. The government officials know that paper notes are needed for the purpose of remittance through the mails, as is evidenced by the issuing of postal notes. The defects of the postal note, however, are that it is not legal tender, that it is purchasable only at a premium, while it is redeemable at par. For transmission through the mails it is no safer than paper money, as anybody may collect it, and the cost of registering must be added to the premium. Paper dollars, or even the good old-fashioned "scrip," would be a boon to publishers and purchasers alike, and there is no possible objection to it.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Early in the morning the freight train drags its slow length out of Pendleton. On this I pursue my journey to Walla Walla, where I arrive at 11 A.M., Saturday, November 10. Sol Center, who makes the work go forward whatever may happen, gives greeting. A Liberal club is already formed at Walla Walla, and is strong in numbers and influence. Dr. A. W. Calder, the president, is a man of marked ability. He is not afraid to stand by the colors, although some Christians think they are doing the Lord a service by refusing his professional aid. But these things do not disturb the philosophical doctor. He understands his business, and he has a keen insight into the principles of Freethought and its constructive aims. He would build up a broad and comprehensive institution that shall represent the best knowledge of the race.

Sol Center, with his boundless energy and genial service, makes the heart of the lecturer glad, for the omens of success are in such gallant comradeship. W. S. Gilliam, who for nearly half a century has borne the brunt of battle with superstition, was in our ranks, and age does not dim his enthusiasm. In this world, still, he finds the paradise of humanity. M. Martin strikes the iron while it is hot, and makes the sparks fly and the anvil chorus ring for progress. Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Olsen give gracious hospitality to the Secular Pilgrim. Mr. Olsen touches with gentle satire and lively rhythm the old theologies, and extracts from these ancient formulas entertainment for to-day. His literary contributions to the club are excellent. Dr. Harvey Day, from "Old Virginia," has been a soldier on these plains and mountains from "before the war," and has seen from the beginning the wonderful advance of Western civilization. In the breadth and power of science he has stood for reform, and he is radical still, although fortune smiles upon him. Wealth does not persuade him to submit to the powers that be. He has a beautiful library which he purposes to donate to Liberalism. His heart is generous, and he has the means to gratify his earnest desire for the world's improvement. It was a great pleasure to meet with Mr. and Mrs. A. Rosenow, and Mrs. Dusenbury, who are devoted Freethinkers. Mr. Rosenow is from Germany, and its finest spirit of culture and progress enriches his radical thought. In many respects Germany is a fountain of noble inspirations, and contributes to America a vast and magnificent impulse. The voice of Schiller gives some of the sublimest bugle notes of Liberty. It is music that thrills and enobles.

My friend Z. K. Straight keeps right straight along the heterodox pathway and the world knows just where to find him. Mr. and Mrs. S. Twist are of those in the frontier ranks who "dare to be

In the right with two or three."

Miss Elsie Wardwell, all the way from Idaho, is attending St. Paul's School, but, amidst its orthodox halls, does not forget the free spirit of the plains. I took dinner, on Sunday, with Mr. and Mrs. Sayne, who, I believe, have somewhat of the Baptist fervor in their blood, but Freethought found a hearty welcome at their board. So I guess that immersion did not cover the whole head and heart. Something was left for all the world, and the "wonders yet to be."

Martin Lyman, Chas. Romer, John Pieper, Pierson Bros., Frank Ricardo, of the Statesman; Harry Carnes, Stine Bros., and others, make Walla Walla a bright encampment along the Western verge, where the dawning days make harvest fields of hope. Walla Walla, one of the oldest towns of the Coast, has never deigned to court the uncertain favors of a boom. It has grown steadily. It is in the midst of one of the finest agricultural countries in the world. The climate is excellent. The prospects along the plain to the distant mountains are lovely. One feels that there is room enough for life, and thought, and growth, where such vast and splendid views meet the wandering eye. New railroads are coming into Walla Walla, and elegant blocks are being built. Many of the residences to-day, in the midst of lawn, and trees, and flowers still blooming, have a stately and ancient aspect like the country mansions of New England, and the animation of a new civilization is mingled with the sober delights of an olden time. Walla Walla cannot help being an important point. Business constantly increases. It is drifting, by the law of attraction, into the heart of the railroad system, and, with its natural resources and fine situation, will be a choice locality for traffic and communication.

Friend Niles was not at home this time, but I had the good fortune to run across him at Pendleton, and with his number one team, had a pull across the country through one of the best wheat sections on the continent, whence Eastern Oregon will draw much of its future wealth. These lands produce from thirty to fifty bushels per acre. One of our horses was young, and endeavored, with iconoclastic hoof, to go across lots via a wire fence. Like many a wiser head, after several ineffectual kicks, he forbore. It is sometimes better to go around, even if the journey is longer. Horses, as well as men, learn wisdom upon the highway of life.

A fair audience was present on Saturday evening and twice as many on Sunday evening. On Sunday afternoon we had a sociable and business meeting at the rooms of the club, Grand Army hall. With the many splendid elements among the Freethinkers of this place I look forward to important results. I believe that much will be done, even in this "city of churches." There are more churches to the square inch in Walla Walla, with one or two exceptions, than any point I have visited, but I believe that I had a larger audience at the opera house than the attendance at all the Protestant churches would make. The opera house was full. Empty benches prevail at the sanctuary.

Walla Walla is somewhat out of the way at present, while waiting for destiny to unravel the situation. A telegram sent on Saturday night to Pomeroy received no answer until Monday morn. Letters which should have been in the office on Saturday never put in an appearance. From lack of communication I was obliged to give up my appointment at Pomeroy. I was told I could leave Walla Walla at three o'clock on Monday afternoon. I was promptly at the station, but it turned out that I was to go on a "mixed train," and a "mixed train"—one passenger coach and a dozen freight cars—is more uncertain than an April shower, and comes and goes without the slightest regard to the time-table. Neither ticket agent, conductor, nor brakeman knows anything at all about it. It is liable to be "side-tracked" at any moment, and its advent from that position is as undiscoverable as the end of the world according to the book of Daniel. But it may come at any time, like a thief in the night. So one is constrained to be on the lookout. He can't go back to town, and wait in comfortable quarters with friends. The train may slide forth without warning. I had to stay on the car from three o'clock until nine o'clock before it moved forward. I was too late for the northern train and was obliged to lay over twenty-four hours at Wallula, where not an item of news could be procured the live-long day. However, I happened to strike a travel-bound Freethinker like myself, Ed. Linn, of Marshall, W. T., brother to our friend B. F. Linn, of Oregon City, and so we passed the time much more pleasantly than I anticipated. I took the train, that went as far as Pasco Junction, in the afternoon and spent an hour with friend O'Keefe. The Christians have been on the war path in this place, and the election was not all that could be desired, on account of the "religious racket." Starting from Pasco on the evening train, whom should I meet, journeying to the far East, but friend Sliker and his wife, from the valley of the Clackamas where the limpid waters flow, and bringing good news from Eagle Creek where McElsander and Wilbern keep the flag flying. This was fortunate. They had their camping outfit with them, and while the train went speeding on Sliker made a good cup of tea, which helped to keep me awake until the midnight hour; for my destination was not reached until that time. Another pleasant surprise was in store. Mrs. Mount, of Silverton, Oregon, was journeying to visit her daughter, and greeted me on this same train, and I heard post direct from our wideawake friends of the Freethought Hall where the battle rages with unwonted animation. So I was well repaid for the vexations of delay, and good fortune made the bad to be forgotten. One hour after midnight Spokane Falls gleamed in view, and comrade Richard Sharpless and his brother Jack were the first to meet me as I struck the platform. So I was all right and found a haven at the house of Richard, and not until ten o'clock of the next day did I greet the sun from my couch. I was well rested by that time, and prepared for work in this bright and lively city. Rains and mist have prevailed for some time, but now the days are simply resplendent—cloudless skies, and brilliant sunshine, and bracing air—and the nights are equally glorious, for the moon is shining fair. The sound of the hammer is heard mingling with the noise of the river and the hum of machinery. Spokane is going forward yet, and promises to be the queen city of these northern plains. It is beautifully situated. The pine groves are round it. The plains and gentle hills stretch away and the snowy mountains glitter in the sun.

On the first night of my lectures there was a grand parade. The Republicans were jubilant, and they made the red lights flicker and the flags wave. I could not see the use of all this emblazonry of victory. The field having been won it is time for business, and not for play. A party triumph represents but very little of the mighty life of this world.

I had a fair audience on the first evening, but the waves of the election still prevented a full gathering of friends. They could not all settle down to radical affairs. There was a goodly company from Davenport, forty miles off—Mr. and Mrs. Selde, and others. Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Johnson were present, from Kidd, twenty miles away, and the little Freethought baby was with them, the sunshine of the future on its happy face. Comrade Galvani introduces me at the meeting. He is a soldier who dares all for Liberty. The powers that be have tried to put the padlock on his lips, but it can't be done. He has no favors to ask of wealth or power. The hall was full on the second evening, and good notices were given in the daily papers. The tide rolls on.

Thursday I take dinner with Mr. and Mrs. John Gimble. These are splendid specimens of Western pluck. They came to Spokane Falls with just fifty dollars ahead. They started house-keeping in one room with a dry-goods box for a cupboard, two chairs, a table, a bed, and stove. They wouldn't go into debt. Gimble did anything he could lay his hands to, but work did not always come. But there was no such thing as fail. Of course success came. Mr. Gimble is now known as one of the most thorough business men in the place. He has a neat and happy home. He is coming to the top by self-reliance; not by faith or prayers or luck, but real grit. Of course the woman's work in this case is just as noble as the man's, and equally makes the victory.

It is pleasant to be in these western homes made by energy and perseverance. The atmosphere of liberty beautifies the roughest surroundings. The children are bright—life is genuine. The shadow of orthodoxy disappears. Such is the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sharpless. They have made it themselves. It is the blossom of toil. It is radiant with progressive humanity. Labor makes ideas—and ideas make the joy and splendor of life. Happy work for man and woman is the paradise of the future. The truest dignity is honest service. The royal degree is the stamp of labor. The church is on the side of wealth. It is for the rich man and not the poor man. The upholstered pew is the rented pew. It is only for those who can pay a fashionable price. The free pew is bare of all adornment. It is a wooden bench. This is the churches' reward for labor—a back seat. The glory of Freethought is work, achievement, and universal brotherhood. It does not believe in poverty—but in the blessing of free and honorable struggle—a beautiful home and wealth for all.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Spokane Falls, Nov. 17, 1888.

THE STATE CONVENTION.

Interest in the coming January meetings does not cease to grow. A printed Call for the Convention is in circulation, and should receive at least five hundred signatures before January 1.

Meetings, as previously stated, will be held on the Sunday evenings of the month, Mr. S. P. Putnam being the speaker. The Convention meets Sunday morning, January 27. As all these meetings are to be free to the public, it is probable that many will wish to contribute toward the expense of the hall rent, which amounts to something over $100 for the whole series, including the days set apart for the Convention and the Paine celebration. Such contributions or pledges may be forwarded to this office, and will be acknowledged in FREETHOUGHT.

Sign the Call, copies of which will at once be forwarded upon application to all desiring to affix their signatures or to procure the signatures of others in their vicinity.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS.

The reply of the Weekly Star to our paragraph touching man's duties toward some supposed God, is exactly what we expected it to be if any appeared. That is to say, it is fair, courteous, and logical. Of course we could not anticipate its substance.

The Star corrects FREETHOUGHT on but one point. It says there cannot be a hole in an imagination. Concerning that question there need be no contention. We knew in New York a gentleman of the name of Brewster, he of the hollow globe theory. Mr. Brewster imagined that at the north pole of the globe there was an aperture in the crust of the earth through which entrance might be had to the interior of the planet. Now, that hole was either in the crust of the earth or in the imagination of Mr. Brewster. Which?

The Star's classification of literature is not objected to. Unfortunately there is a vast quantity of theological books, and they must have a place assigned them in the library; but concerning their authors we might borrow an idea from Buchner and remark that the less they understand a thing the more words they make over it. They seek to explain the mystery of the world as though they were God's spies, and they become, through their speculations, "like owls that only see their dreams in the darkness, but become blind in the light of experience, and are least able to perceive that which is clearest." Their works are a deluge of words poured out over a desert of ideas. Most of the intellectual products of these writers are aptly described by the Arabic proverb applied to the metaphysicians by Schopenhauer: "I hear the mill clattering loudly enough, but I do not see the meal."

Current superstition gives to religious literature a fictitious prominence and a greater degree of importance than it deserves. Volumes are written in defense of one view of "God, his dealings with man, man's relations and duties to him;" other volumes are written to prove the first ones wrong and to defend some other view of the same matter, and still other volumes to show that the previous writers are both mistaken; the third writer leaving the matter exactly where the first one took it up. The scientist, the historian, if he be intelligent and honest, may add to the general spread of information; but no matter how honest or intelligent the theologian may be, he cannot contribute one single fact to the sum total of human knowledge. He merely corrects the mistakes of his brother theologians and substitutes his own guesses in the place of them.

It is an error to suppose that man's first concern is to discover his duties toward God, or to learn what others conceive those duties to be. Most of the troubles of this world arise from its imagined relation to some other world, a study of those relations, and a consequent neglect of our duties toward the people around us. Men who have thought that they knew the will of God have been afflicted with the belief that their duty called them to enforce that will among their fellow-men. Everybody knows the result.

We are indebted to the Star for affording us an opportunity to make these remarks.

THE DOCTRINE OF FORCE.

If the views of Roman Catholic citizens of America are identical with those of the pope, and it is presumable that they are, then Anarchy is not the form of attack upon our institutions that is most to be feared. In his encyclical letter Leo XIII. refers to the separation of church and state as a "fatal theory," and anathematizes "that liberty in individuals which is so opposed to the virtue of religion, namely, the liberty of worship, which rests on the principle that every man is free to profess, as he chooses, any religion or none."

Just this liberty to profess any religion or none is the liberty on which the United States government is founded. By what means can a Roman Catholic, owning allegiance to the pope, excuse his hypocrisy in swearing to support that government? The truth is that he knows and the pope knows that his oath is a perjury. If it were sincere he would be excommunicated and anathematized.

His holiness grows worse as he proceeds: "Justice and reason forbid the state to be godless, or to adopt a line of action which would lead to godlessness, namely, to treat the various religions, as they call them, alike, and to bestow upon them, promiscuously, equal rights and privileges." And he has the further effrontery to propose that "the state must profess some one religion, and the Catholic being that which alone is true, should be professed, preserved, and protected by the state, and false doctrines should be diligently repressed by public authority."

Here we have the Inquisition over again, and what the Inquisition was may be learned from the reply of Colonel Ingersoll to Cardinal Manning, and from the articles by Mr. Shed on "Roman Rule and Ruin" now running through the columns of FREETHOUGHT.

"I anathematize," continues the pope, "all who maintain the liberty of the press and all advocates of the liberty of speech, which is the liberty of perdition. The absurd and erroneous doctrines or ravings in defense of liberty of conscience are a most pestilential error—a pest of all others most to be dreaded in the state. I anathematize those who assert the liberty of conscience and of religious worship, and all such as maintain that the church may not employ force." Force! The Anarchists who threaten force are under police surveillance. The Catholics who advocate the use of force against free institutions fill public offices and control the police.

We know from these recent utterances from the Vatican what to expect under Roman rule. And when we consider the growing power of the Catholic church, that rule appears to be much nearer us in the future than in the past. The metropolis of the country, New York city, has a Catholic in every office from mayor down. The election in Chicago was what Secretary Stevens calls a "Romish Carnival." San Francisco has Jesuits and papists everywhere. In other centers of population it is the same. It only remains for the pope to make the issue, and this country is his. As the editor of the Truth Seeker inquires, what are the non-Catholic citizens going to do about it?

THE SOUL.

Friend Kaufman, of Boulder Creek, desires that those who make use of the word "soul" should prove their title to such an organ or expunge it from their vocabulary.

We are not conscious of having used the word frequently, but if it were to be employed it would be as signifying the "activity of the brain." The oldest sense of the word is "life," and as such it is unobjectionable. The question of the immortality of the soul is one quite distinct from that of its possession by animate beings. Mr. George Chainey, the Gnostic, locates it among the ganglia, or nerve centers, in the upper part of the abdominal cavity. Materialistic scientists affirm that its dwelling-place is the brain, which without doubt is the correct view. A writer of a pamphlet entitled "What and Where is the Soul?" quotes something like one hundred different "authorities" on the subject, who give its residence at nearly every point in the human body between the cranium and the lower end of the backbone. We quote a few as curiosities:

Plato: The soul is located in the brain.

Aristotle: The soul is located in the heart.

Heraclitus: The soul is located in the blood.

Epicurus: The soul is located in the chest.

Sommering: The soul is located in the ventricles.

Kant: The soul is located in the water contained in the ventricles.

Ennemoser: The whole body is the seat of the soul.

Fischer: The soul is located in the nervous system.

Descartes: The soul is located in the pineal gland.

Mayer: The soul is located in the medulla oblongata.

Camper: The soul is located in the pineal gland, nates, and testes.

Dohoney: Scientifically speaking, man is a threefold being: body, soul, and spirit. The home of the spirit is the cerebrum, while the seat of the soul is the cerebellum.

La Pieronie: The dwelling-place of the soul is in the callous body.

Buchner: Some authors imagine that the soul, under certain circumstances, leaves the brain for a short time and occupies another part of the nervous system. The solar plexus, a concatenation of sympathetic nerves, situated in the abdomen, was especially pointed out as the favored spot.

If we accept the word soul in its original significance, that of "life," its use as a synonym of life cannot be reasonably condemned; as the "immortal part of man," however, it is meaningless. The soul—that is to say, life—results from the development of activity in the brain, and ceases to exist with the death of that organ. Any other view takes us among those mysterious things hidden behind the phenomenal world, of which the senses can know nothing.

E. C. WALKER reads a correspondent of Lucifer a useful lesson like this: "Any writer, especially any Freethought writer, must feel that his position is weak indeed when he is obliged to call his gentlemanly opponents 'whelps,' 'pups,' and 'curs;' to say that they 'bark;' to designate their arguments as 'anonymous barks,' 'interrogative barks,' 'ignorant barking,' 'shallow barks,' etc., etc. The truest respect that can be shown a controversialist who thus lowers his dignity is a refusal to read his articles or cross pens with him. A writer who cannot discuss an economic question without attacking his opponent with such personalities should find himself boycotted by both publishers and readers. Rather than impress such uncalled for epithets upon clean paper types had better be melted and cast into desk weights." Admonition of this sort cannot be too often repeated. Sometimes a man gets so cocksure that he is right that he becomes impatient of those who differ with him and adopts vituperation in place of argument; but if he exhausts his vocabulary of epithets and quotations at the opening of a wordy battle he will have nothing to fall back upon in the exigencies of the deepening conflict.

ONE of the evils of political partisanship is its propensity for using a man's religious belief or unbelief as an argument against his soundness on economic questions. Mr. D. A. Blodgett, of Grand Rapids, Mich., gave $25,000, it is reported, to help along a candidate whose election he favored. Thereupon the opposing party issued a circular setting forth that this millionaire pine baron donates hundreds of dollars every year to have the Bible fought, scoffs at Christ, and opposes the redemption of man. On the other hand, the leading men of the community circulated a protest in which they said of Mr. Blodgett: "He has made large money donations for benevolent and charitable purposes whenever asked, and many times without waiting to be asked, and has aided worthy poor persons in large numbers. He has the respect and good will of all who know him in our city, and he has no better friends than the thousands of men who have been given employment by him." Mr. Blodgett's candidate was elected, so that the attack upon him recoiled on the heads of its originators; but the meanness of malice defeated is just as conspicuous and reprehensible as when it succeeds.

WE are sure that every reader will rejoice with us to hear that so sturdy a Freethinker and so upright a citizen as Mr. W. S. Rodgers, of Boulder Creek, was successful in his campaign noted some time ago in FREETHOUGHT. Mr. Rodgers was candidate for member of the board of supervisors in Santa Cruz county, and came out of the contest with a majority of 56 votes in a total vote of about 700. Eastern readers may perhaps need to be reminded that the California supervisor's duties are substantially those of an alderman. Out of the 287 votes cast in Mr. Rodgers's own precinct he received 205, showing that he enjoys a popularity at home quite superior to partisan politics. When it is considered that he was pitted against an old officeholder who had never been defeated at the polls, and who was on the ticket which has heretofore invariably won, and also that Mr. Rodgers is the first supervisor that his party has ever elected, his success is gratifying testimony to the esteem in which he is held by the citizens of his county.

JOHN F. BECK, one of the most active Liberals of West Union, O., is dead. He was drowned on the 5th of November, while on his way to the Beasley's Fork school-house to address a political meeting. The night was dark and his horse left the road, precipitating Mr. Beck and his cousin, Mr. Coleman Seaman, who was riding with him, into a deep hole of water. When discovered the following morning both were dead. Mr. Beck was still a young man, being considerably under forty years of age.

AN advertisement of the Canadian Freethought paper, Secular Thought, will be found elsewhere. Mr. Watts's journal has received so many encomiums from distinguished persons that the field of testimonials appears to have been reaped for its benefit. Let the reader peruse these commendations, and then send for a sample and see how well the paper fulfils them.

THE Spokane Falls, W. T., newspaper, the Weekly Welcome, deserves much credit for its able and impartial report of Mr. S. P. Putnam's lecture in that place, especially as the editor is reported to be a member of the Young Men's Christian Association. We are indebted to W. H. Galvani for a copy of the report.

FOUR more issues will complete the first volume of FREETHOUGHT—fifty-two numbers—and close the year. Friends who have kept the paper on file with a view to preserving it may get missing numbers at five cents each by sending to this office for them. The complete volume will also be bound handsomely to sell at $2.50.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

About a dozen Mormon converts from New South Wales reached this port on the 25th bound for Salt Lake City.—The Salvation Army has been holding an international pow-wow during the past week.—The report that the government of China has ordered all its subjects in America to return to their native land, is not generally credited.—Judge Allyn of the United States District Court at Vancouver, W. T., rendered a decision Nov. 23, in the famous "Mission Case," in which the Catholic Bishop of Nesqually laid claim to a portion of the United States military reservation at Vancouver, under an act of Congress of 1848. The court held the claim to be untenable and dismissed the bill.—Henry George is lecturing in England.—Judge Hornblower, of San Francisco, sentenced Hans H. Huhr, a 'longshoreman, to ninety days' imprisonment in the House of Correction the other day for beating his wife. The injured woman, with her face a mass of bruises and cuts, was present to plead with the judge to allow her husband to depart. She said that if he was punished she and her two little ones would starve. Judge Hornblower remarked that this case only offered another reason why the whipping-post for wife-beaters should be established.—A fire at Nipomo last week destroyed the larger portion of the town. The building owned by the Fry Bros., containing the post-office, public hall, and general merchandise store, was entirely consumed at a loss of $10,000. The total damage foots up $19,000.

A man has just walked on the Hudson river from Albany to New York. He wore water shoes five feet long.—Miller, commissioner of internal revenue, reports that the aggregate of taxes collected from tobacco during the past year was $30,662,431.—There was a violent storm in the East last Sunday. It centered in Massachusetts, prevailing as far north as Maine and westward to New York. In Brooklyn electric wires were wrecked. Simultaneously a severe storm is reported from the British coast.—P. T. Barnum has retired from the show business with a snug fortune of $10,000,000.—The Anarchists of Chicago have formed an Anarchist Sunday-school, and last Sunday 120 children took lessons.—Mr. Blaine may become the editor of the American Magazine, published in New York. He denies that he has any intention of entering Mr. Harrison's cabinet.—Forty-one men started on a six-days walking match in New York last Sunday night.—J. V. Williamson, a Philadelphia philanthropist, has bequeathed $2,000,000 for a boys' training school in that city.—The Rev. C. M. Verdell was arrested by mistake at Monroe, La., on suspicion of being a train robber.—W. J. O'Connor, of Toronto, Ont., made himself champion oarsman of America by defeating John Teemer in a three-mile race on the Potomac last Saturday.—The Republicans will spend $75,000 celebrating the inauguration of Harrison.—The Rev. D. S. Perry, once famous as a "boy preacher," is now in the Brooklyn, N. Y., almshouse.—Powderly is again elected general master workman of the Knights of Labor.—The net revenues of the government for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1888, were $379,266,074, and the net expenditure $267,924,801, the surplus receipts available for the reduction of the public debt being $111,341,273, an increase of $7,870,176 over the year before. As compared with 1887, the revenues were $7,862,797 greater and the expenditures $7,378 less. The treasury balance increased during the year from $69,224,379 to $129,804,242, and the total assets, including certificates of deposit in cash, from $622,304,284, to $764,729,535.—Lord Sackville West, late minister to this country from England, evacuated Washington Nov. 24.—The acolytes in the church of the Ascension (Episcopal), Chicago, went on a strike last week, demanding that the head acolyte be deposed.—The woman suffrage convention closed a four-days' session at Cincinnati, O., Nov. 22.—Three white and one negro convict were whipped at Newcastle, Delaware, Nov. 24, for larceny and burglary. They got from five to twenty lashes each, lightly laid on.—Gen. John M. Palmer, the defeated candidate for governor of Illinois, has resigned from the Grand Army of the Republic. He charges that the organization is used for political purposes.

The pope has instructed Cardinal Gibbons to congratulate Mr. Harrison on his election.—“Patriotic” meetings in Dublin, Ireland, last week, provoked a riot as usual.—John Bright, the English statesman, is near death.—Signor Ingma, a Roman advocate who died recently, left 1,000,000 francs to the pope.—A Melbourne, Australia, city official is a defaulter to the amount of above $100,000.

OBSERVATIONS.

A man who has evidently seen more prosperity than he is enjoying nowadays has twice called upon me at 504 Kearny street with products of his pen which he desired to dispose of for a price. The first time he came he brought a story of personal experience entitled “Embraced by a King.” He wanted a dollar for it. I shook my head. He added a poem to it and said, “Now give me a dollar for the two.” “No.” “Half a dollar?” “No.” “Two bits to buy a meal of victuals with.” I handed him that sum, and took the manuscript. The poem was of the Sunday-school variety, but “Embraced by a King” proved to be possessed of considerable merit. The next time he came I gave him back his poetry and recommended him to try some other paper. I didn’t care to purchase contributions—had a deep drawer full of good ones—but somehow before he went away he had got another two-bit piece out of me for a “meal of victuals,” and left the following verses. The reader must judge whether I got cheated or not:

SAINT PETER AND THE POPE.

The golden gate’s ajar, and there
No gold awaits the wicked prayer
Of those who spent Time’s sacred air
In gambling with the highest player
That they might win.

Saint Peter handed up his key,
Lang syne to stern old Destiny—
With this injunction, that there be Nor pope nor other scarlet she,
Allowed within.

But somehow Bobbie Burns and Jack,
One Barleycorn, with pint of sack,
Got old St. Peter on his back,
Then crow’d as Peter’s cock, alack!
Did at his sin.

The pope he heard it far in Rome,
Which made his angry heart to foam;
Then turn’d him to the awful tome,
That “Index” ’neath St. Peter’s dome,
And look’d within.

He saw (some spirit vision came)
A saint and sinner ganging hame
Tigither with a lovely dame—
The lassie seem’d a wee bit lame—
As might have been.

The pope with his long, crooked stick,
And flashier eye than lightning quick,
Ask’d the young gal what kind of trick
Had made her comrades so sin-sick,
Then ask’d her in.

The Vatican, my dear, says he,
Is only the fit place for thee;
Let saint and sinner parted be,
Come enter, and abide with me—
The church’s bride.

The limping damsel went with him,
To light his household’s holy dim,
With dusky face and smile as grim,
Looking the while so awful trim,
She did abide.

Some time had pass’d—one day says she,
You are not good enough for me,
And worse than Bobbie on the spree;
I do not like your mystery,

Nor such queer Christianity;
So to Saint Peter back I’ll go,
And wash with kiss his holy toe;
But yours—oh, no!

The editor of the Princeton Word writes in this uproariously funny way:

Nov. 16, Y. L. 16.

GENTS: In your issue of Nov. 10, on page 546, you say, “The presidential election resulted exactly as I expected it would.” On page 541 you say FREETHOUGHT “is not a partisan paper” and hence feels free “to rejoice with them that do rejoice and weep with them that weep.” Is then your paper edited by a neuter pronoun? If not, who is the “I” speaking above, S. P. P. or Geo. E. M.? Are the two one and that one “it”? Truly your perplexed reader,
E. H. HEYWOOD.

I decline to reveal any of the journalistic secrets connected with this paper. Mr. Heywood, being an editor, and having been graduated at Brown’s University, and having been in jail, ought to be able to settle for himself the grammatical difficulties whereby he says he is perplexed. But what hope can there be of successfully explaining the mysteries of grammar to a resident of Massachusetts who still persists in using the barbarism “Gents?” Gent. may pass muster as an abbreviation for gentleman, but the plural of gentleman is not formed by the addition of the letters s. Is it possible that the wild and woolly West must rise up to instruct the cultivated East, even that portion which dwells in the shadow of Princeton College and beneath the wing of Dr. McCosh? Let us hesitate and reflect.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

We are called on by the president, likewise the governor,
To suspend our ordinary work and render prayer and praise
To the giver of all blessings men have supplicated for,
And to sing a loud Thanksgiving song before the throne of grace.

We’re reminded that the harvests show a gratifying gain,
That our toil has been rewarded in the shops and marts of trade,
That throughout the country’s borders only peace and order reign,
And in all that adds to greatness much advancement has been made.

We are told that praise and gratitude are due for favors sent,
That the mercy of Jehovah makes him bless instead of curse,
And though we have been afflicted with a fever pestilent
We should thank the generous giver that it wasn’t any worse.

For the goodness and the mercy, so the president has said,
Of Almighty God attends us—but we’re bound to doubt it some—
And afflictions are but warnings kindly dropped from overhead
To forsake the ways of wickedness and flee the wrath to come.

Now, we are a grateful people, and we can appreciate
Any decent kind of treatment, and there’s no one who can say
We’ve accepted any favor which we don’t reciprocate,
Or have owed a single dollar we were disinclined to pay.

We’ve sustained, it is admitted here, a fair degree of health,
But better men are often sick, as all are grieved to learn;
And while some are on the highway to achieve ill-gotten wealth
The most of us have not a cent we didn’t work and earn.

Anywhere we look about us, inequalities abound,
There is suffering, here is pleasure—there a palace, here a den;
Some can sleep on downy feathers, others bunk upon the ground,
While a squalid lower thousand die to keep the upper ten.

So with these considerations we decline to celebrate
The existence of the evils that surround us everywhere.
Half is light and half is darkness; we accept the will of fate,
And to God we’ll just be generous and call the matter square.

But the custom of observing days with fasting or with feasts
Is a superstitious relic, when the same is rightly viewed,
It will have to follow churches, with their ministers and priests,
To the cold and saline regions of innocuous desuetude.

Mr. M. E. C. Farwell, of Vineland, N. J., has perpetrated an able joke on the readers of FREETHOUGHT. He quoted a passage of scripture (1 Cor. vii, 36), from the revised version of the New Testament, wherein permission is given a father to marry his daughter if otherwise she seems fated to die unwed. The passage does not read that way in the old version, and its barbarity is such that it set the readers to hunting it up. Something like a dozen indignant letters have come in, protesting against so palpable an injustice to the Bible. Even the astute biblicist, Prof. W. F. Jamieson, was caught. He was reading the issue of FREETHOUGHT of October 13, when his eye fell upon these words:

"But if any man thinketh that he behaveth unseemly toward his virgin daughter, if she be past the flower of her age, and if need so requireth, let him do what he will; he sinneth not, let them marry." He paused, considered, said to his major moiety, "Wife, here is something wrong;" got down the family Bible, found the passage, and having confirmed his view, wrote at once an epistle of considerable length touching the possibility of Jesuits in the guise of Freethinkers gaining the columns of Liberal papers under false pretenses, and doing more harm than good. He added something designed for the instruction of Liberal editors in such cases, and closed by expressing his belief that the communication containing the spurious quotation was a sort of Murchison letter. Since Mr. Jamieson has become enlightened on the subject, he acknowledges the error gracefully, but maintains, as touching the revision, that the last estate of the book is worse than the first.

For my own part, I am much gratified by the protests. They show that Freethinkers oppose all misrepresentations of the Bible, and are satisfied to try the case upon its real merits. Are the Christians equally fair? I guess not. G. E. M.

INGERSOLL'S REPLY TO CARDINAL MANNING.

From the North American Review.

v.

Another claim is made to the effect "that the Catholic church has filled the world with the true knowledge of the one true God, and that it has destroyed all idols by light instead of by fire."

The Catholic church described the true God as a being who would inflict eternal pain on his weak and erring children; described him as a fickle, quick-tempered, unreasonable deity, whom honesty enraged, and whom flattery governed; one who loved to see fear upon its knees, ignorance with closed eyes and open mouth; one who delighted in useless self-denial, who loved to hear the sighs and sobs of suffering nuns, as they lay prostrate on dungeon floors; one who was delighted when the husband deserted his family and lived alone in some cave in the far wilderness, tormented by dreams and driven to insanity by prayer and penance, by fasting and faith.

According to the Catholic church, the true God enjoyed the agonies of heretics. He loved the smell of their burning flesh; he applauded with wide palms when philosophers were flayed alive, and to him the auto-da-fe was a divine comedy. The shrieks of wives, the cries of babes when fathers were being burned, gave contrast, heightened the effect, and filled his cup with joy. This true God did not know the shape of the earth he had made, and had forgotten the orbits of the stars. "The stream of light which descended from the beginning" was propagated by fagot to fagot, until Christendom was filled with the devouring fires of faith.

It may also be said that the Catholic church filled the world with the true knowledge of the one true devil. It filled the air with malicious phantoms, crowded innocent sleep with leering fiends, and gave the world to the domination of witches and wizards, spirits and spooks, goblins and ghosts, and butchered and burned thousands for the commission of impossible crimes.

It is contended that: "In this true knowledge of the Divine Nature was revealed to men their own relation to a Creator as sons to a Father."

This tender relation was revealed by the Catholics to the Pagans, the Arians, the Cathari, the Waldenses, the Albigenses, the heretics, the Jews, the Moriscoes, the Protestants—to the natives of the West Indies, of Mexico, of Peru—to philosophers, patriots, and thinkers. All these victims were taught to regard the true God as a loving father, and this lesson was taught with every instrument of torture—with brandings and burnings, with flaying and flames. The world was filled with cruelty and credulity, ignorance and intolerance, and the soil in which all these horrors grew was the true knowledge of the one true God, and the true knowledge of the one true devil. And yet, we are compelled to say, that the one true devil described by the Catholic church was not as malevolent as the one true God.

Is it true that the Catholic church overthrew idolatry? What is idolatry? What shall we say of the worship of popes—of the doctrine of the real presence, of divine honors paid to saints, of sacred vestments, of holy water, of consecrated cups and plates, of images and relics, of amulets and charms?

The Catholic church filled the world with the spirit of idolatry. It abandoned the idea of continuity in nature, it denied the integrity of cause and effect. The government of the world was the composite result of the caprice of God, the malice of Satan, the prayers of the faithful—softened, it may be, by the charity of chance. Yet the cardinal asserts, without the preface of a smile, that "demonology was overthrown by the church, with the assistance of forces that were above nature;" and in the same breath gives birth to this enlightened statement: "Beelzebub is not divided against himself." Is a belief in Beelzebub a belief in demonology? Has the cardinal forgotten the Council of Nice, held in the year of grace 787, that declared the worship of images to be lawful? Did that infallible council, under the guidance of the Holy Ghost, destroy idolatry?

The cardinal takes the ground that marriage is a sacrament, and therefore indissoluble, and he also insists that celibacy is far better than marriage—holier than a sacrament—that marriage is not the highest state, but that "the state of virginity unto death is the highest condition of man and woman."

The highest ideal of a family is where all are equal—where love has superseded authority—where each seeks the good of all, and where none obey—where no religion can sunder hearts, and with which no church can interfere.

The real marriage is based on mutual affection—the ceremony is but the outward evidence of the inward flame. To this contract there are but two parties. The church is an impudent intruder. Marriage is made public to the end that the real contract may be known, so that the world can see that the parties have been actuated by the highest and holiest motives that find expression in the acts of human beings. The man and woman are not joined together by God, or by the church, or by the state. The church and state may prescribe certain ceremonies, certain formalities—but all these are only evidence of the existence of a sacred fact in the hearts of the wedded. The indissolubility of marriage is a dogma that has filled the lives of millions with agony and tears. It has given a perpetual excuse for vice and immorality. Fear has borne children begotten by brutality. Countless women have endured the insults, indignities, and cruelties of fiendish husbands, because they thought that it was the will of God. The contract of marriage is the most important that human beings can make; but no contract can be so important as to release one of the parties from the obligation of performance; and no contract, whether made between man and woman, or between them and God, after a failure of consideration caused by the wilful act of the man or woman, can hold and bind the innocent and honest.

Do the believers in indissoluble marriage treat their wives better than others? A little while ago a woman said to a man who had raised his hand to strike her: "Do not touch me; you have no right to beat me; I am not your wife."

About a year ago a husband, whom God in his infinite wisdom had joined to a loving and patient woman in the indissoluble sacrament of marriage, becoming enraged, seized the helpless wife and tore out one of her eyes. She forgave him. A few weeks ago he deliberately repeated this frightful crime, leaving his victim totally blind. Would it not have been better if man, before the poor woman was blinded, had put asunder whom God had joined together? Thousands of husbands, who insist that marriage is indissoluble, are the beaters of wives.

The law of the church has created neither the purity nor the peace of domestic life. Back of all churches is human affection. Back of all theologies is the love of the human heart. Back of all your priests and creeds is the adoration of the one woman by the one man, and of the one man by the one woman. Back of your faith is the fireside—back of your folly is the family; and back of all your holy mistakes and your sacred absurdities is the love of husband and wife, of parent and child.

It is not true that neither the Greek nor the Roman world had any true conception of a home. The splendid story of Ulysses and Penelope, the parting of Hector and Andromache, demonstrate that a true conception of home existed among the Greeks. Before the establishment of Christianity, the Roman matron commanded the admiration of the then known world. She was free and noble. The church degraded woman—made her the property of the husband, and trampled her beneath its brutal feet. The “fathers” denounced woman as a perpetual temptation, as the cause of all evil. The church worshiped a God who had upheld polygamy, and had pronounced his curse on woman, and had declared that she should be the serf of the husband. This church followed the teachings of St. Paul. It taught the uncleanness of marriage, and insisted that all children were conceived in sin. This church pretended to have been founded by one who offered a reward in this world, and eternal joy in the next, to husbands who would forsake their wives and children and follow him. Did this tend to the elevation of woman? Did this detestable doctrine “create the purity and peace of domestic life?” Is it true that a monk is purer than a good and noble father?—that a nun is holier than a loving mother?

Is there anything deeper and stronger than a mother's love? Is there anything purer, holier, than a mother holding her dimpled babe against her billowed breast?

The good man is useful, the best man is the most useful. Those who fill the nights with barren prayers and holy hunger, torture themselves for their own good and not for the benefit of others. They are earning eternal glory for themselves—they do not fast for their fellow men—their selfishness is only equaled by their foolishness. Compare the monk in his selfish cell, counting beads and saying prayers for the purpose of saving his barren soul, with a husband and father sitting by his fireside with wife and children. Compare the nun with the mother and her babe.

Celibacy is the essence of vulgarity. It tries to put a stain upon motherhood, upon marriage, upon love—that is to say, upon all that is holiest in the human heart. Take love from the world, and there is nothing left worth living for. The church has treated this great, this sublime, this unspeakable holy passion, as though it polluted the heart. They have placed the love of God above the love of woman, above the love of man. Human love it generous and noble. The love of God is selfish, because man does not love God for God's sake but for his own.

(To be Continued.)

ROMAN RULE AND RUIN.—FACTS, NOT FICTIONS.

III.

“In the Netherlands, where victims had been sentenced to death by this hellish tribunal, the tongue of each victim was screwed into an iron ring and then seared with a red-hot iron. The swelling which this caused effectually precluded all possibility of speech.” (Motley's Dutch Republic, vol. 2, p. 159.)

“At Flanders victims were skinned alive and swarms of bees turned loose upon their bleeding flesh to torture them to a death of exquisite agony.” (See Motley, vol. 1, p. 68.)

“The church of Rome has shed more innocent blood than any other institution that has ever existed among mankind.” (Lecky's Rationalism in Europe, vol. 2, p. 40.)

“The church of Rome proclaimed in every way that was in her power the reality and continued existence of the crime of witchcraft. Seven thousand victims are said to have been burned at Treves, six hundred by a single bishop of Ramsburg, and eight hundred in a single year in the bishopric of Wurtzburg. Remy, a judge of Nancy, boasted that he had put to death eight hundred witches in sixteen years. The executions that took place in Paris in a few months were, in the emphatic words of an old writer, ‘almost infinite.’ The same scenes were enacted in the wild valleys of Switzerland and of Savoy. In Geneva, which was then ruled by a bishop, five hundred alleged witches were executed in three months; forty-eight were burned at Constance or Ravensburg, and eighty in the little town of Valery in Savoy. In 1670 seventy persons were condemned in Sweden, and a large portion of them were burned. In 1484 Pope Innocent VIII. issued a bull which gave fearful impetus to the persecution. He it was who commissioned Sprenger, who it is said condemned hundreds to death.” (Lecky's Rationalism, vol. 1, pp. 29–32.)

“About one million of the most industrious inhabitants of Spain were hunted out like wild beasts because the sincerity of their religious opinions was doubtful. Men were butchered, women ravished, and children thrown into the sea. In one expedition 140,000 were carried into Africa; upwards of 100,000 suffered death in the most frightful manner.” (Buckle's History of Civilization, vol. 2, pp. 50–54.)

“At the beginning of the seventeenth century Madrid had 400,000 population; at the beginning of eighteenth century, less than 200,000. In the sixteenth century Seville had 16,000 looms, which gave employment to 30,000 people. By the reign of Philip V. the 16,000 looms had dwindled down to less than three hundred, and the city contained only one-fourth of its former number of inhabitants.” (Ibid, pp. 55–56.)

“All over Spain the same destitution prevailed. That once rich and prosperous country was covered with a rabble of monks and clergy, whose insatiate rapacity absorbed the little wealth yet to be found.” (Ibid, p. 57.)

The Christian laws of Spain were introduced into Granada. Appleton tells us that at that time the city of Granada had a population of 500,000 inhabitants. The Inquisition of Ferdinand the Catholic soon followed. “Catholic persecutions, with constantly increasing crimes, were inflicted upon these innocent people for a hundred years, ending in 1609, like the persecution of the Jews, by the extermination or the expulsion of the whole race.” (Spanish Literature by Ticknor, vol. 1, p. 449.)

Speaking of the Catholic crusades, which cost more than five millions of human lives, Mosheim, that eminent historian, says: “Murders, rapes, and robberies of the most infernal nature were everywhere committed by these holy soldiers of God and of Christ.” (Mosheim's Ecclesiastical History, vol. 1, p. 130.)

For years fires for the burning of witches blazed continuously throughout Europe. Owing to the persistent efforts of the Romish church to blot out these foul stains by destroying such books and records as relate to her past iniquities, but meagre proofs exist to-day where she has had any chance as the “keeper of learning.” Yet very reliable, in fact unimpeachable, testimony is yet to be found in the pages of Motley, Buckle, Lecky, Rule, Ticknor, Lea, Llorente, and others, showing that the church of Rome has caused the death of over fourteen millions of human victims. The crusades cost more than 5,000,000 lives. There fell in Ireland by the hands of Catholic persecution more than 200,000; at St. Bartholomew, 75,000 were butchered; in the Netherlands 3,000,000 were executed. In England, Scotland, France, Mexico, Germany, and Sweden the soil has been fairly drenched with the blood of the victims of this pious scourge—all done in the name of a Christian God. This load of church confiscation was heaped upon the followers of that faith in Mexico until the government, in self-protection, confiscated three hundred millions of dollars, which equalled one-half the landed value of the state, that dollar by dollar had been wrung from toil, crime, poverty, and superstition. (See Appleton.)

“Drunken with the blood of the saints and martyrs of Jesus, popery reigned in this age over some of the fairest regions of the globe.... Its footprints trailed everywhere with blood.”.... “They had murdered or banished millions of their best subjects. First, the Jews, the artificers, and merchants, by whose means chiefly the prosperity and intelligence of their country was maintained. Then the Moors, whose fathers made the land of the southern half of Spain a garden, where now ruined palaces and castles and a few highly cultivated spots indicate the forsaken homes and the abandoned labors of an extinct people.” (History Inquisition, by Rule, vol. 1, p. 236.)

“When Moorish Spain had its schools of poetry and philosophy in every town, Christian Spain was cursed with a mental famine. For a century and a half the Spanish Unitarians were burned to death at the rate of two hundred a year. Between the outbreak of the first crusade and the final expulsion of the Andalusian Moors, more than fourteen million human lives were sacrificed.

“Go back to Moorish Spain, whose beauty rivalled the god-gardens of Italy; whose colleges and academies studded the sixteen provinces of the Caliph. Two centuries after she had fallen under the withering wing of Romish protection, the sun of reason had set in the sea of insanity; schools were turned into seed-plots of superstition and jails converted into graves of liberty, literature was a farrago of silly fables, and science a sham.” (Felix Oswald.) (To be Continued.)

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

R. B. WESTBROOK, LL.D., PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary..... 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
 OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treasurer..... Rochelle, Ill.
 E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com..... 120 Lexington ave., New York
 MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com., 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll, ex-President,	T. B. Wakeman,	Samuel P. Putnam,
James Parton,	E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Horace Seaver,
Charles Watts,	A. B. Bradford,	Leonard Geiger,
Lucy N. Colman,	Juliet H. Severance,	Mrs. M. J. Olds,
Phoebus Fisk,	J. H. Burnham,	Mattie P. Krekel,
Wm. Redfield,	J. A. Smith,	James Wardwell,
H. P. Mason,	W. L. Willis,	M. M. Secor,
Thos. J. Truss,	W. W. Forward,	N. D. Goodell,
G.A.F. de Lespinasse,	Roman Staley,	H. L. Boyer,
		Daniel A. Aerl.

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

Samos Parsons, San Jose, Cal.....	25.00
Subscriber of the Truth Seeker, Noank, Ct.....	25.00
J. H. Barker, Sweet Home, Ind.....	5.00
William Walker, Dwight, Ill.....	5.00
W. I. Haldeman, Pine Grove, Pa.....	5.00
Ida M. Merritt, charter for Fairmont, Minn.....	5.00
J. F. Beck, West Union, O., charter.....	5.00
Joseph E. Alexander, Marysville, Mo.....	5.00
Charles Lownd, Minneapolis, Minn.....	2.00
John Jaques, Akron, Ohio.....	2.00
William Kronbergh, Hamburg, N. Y.....	2.00
F. Federspiel, " ".....	1.00
John Nuessle, " ".....	1.00
F. Spencer, Evansville, Wis.....	1.00
Peter Selde, Sr., Davenport, W. T.....	1.00
Peter Selde, Jr., " ".....	1.00
Mrs. M. M. Selde, " ".....	1.00
W. A. Tresse, " ".....	1.00
P. N. Weis, " ".....	1.00
William Crane, Kanosh, Utah.....	1.00
A. W. Noble, Marysville, Mo.....	1.00

A REGULAR ROMISH CARNIVAL.

For that is what the election in Cook county proved to be—an election having far more significance to those interested in the secularization of the state than who should be the next national political pap dispenser.

The county commissioners—Republicans and Democrats—known as the "Reform" board, which succeeded the boodle stealers, and which had assisted in adding to the Canadian colony of official delinquents, and which had sent most of its dishonest predecessors to Joliet penitentiary, had as a whole done its duty thoroughly, as stood for honesty, economy, and justice. At the head of the most important committee, that of finance, was William Williams, than whom there could be no public servant with more sterling fidelity to public trust, whose word is as good as his bond, a veteran of the war, and who stands an unflinching soldier of the Secular cause. Unjust claims had little chance for adoption while Williams was around, and it was through his gallant opposition to the fraudulent claim of the Catholics for nearly twenty thousand dollars that the American Secular Union was enabled to score a splendid victory—the greatest it has yet achieved—a sweeping supreme court decision sustaining our Third Demand. Although the supreme court merely affirmed the state constitution, that instrument has heretofore been a mere bagatelle, for the lower courts were either under control or completely at the service of the papal power. As FREETHOUGHT has already enlightened its readers as to the Chicago Industrial School for girls, and the means that corporation employed to rob the county, it is not necessary to reiterate them now.

So far as known, the record of the "Reform" board was creditable. They had honestly done their duty, but a majority had dared oppose the still most potent Romish power, and, in consequence, have met their political punishment.

The Democrats were prevailed on to make up a ticket on which they indorsed such of the "Reform" board as had impeded its reform in the matter above referred to, who, like faithful citizens, as Catholics always are, were willing to violate the law and connive at robbing this community for the honor and glory of the church.

From the majority of the candidates nominated it could readily be seen that the issue was clearly defined—Catholic control of the county board. Of the ten Democratic commissioners to be voted for in the city, six were Romanists and one doubtful, and out of the five voted for by the outlying towns three were Catholics. A notorious groggery keeper, "Mike" Hays, was Mr. Williams's opponent. Many of our friends did all in their power to avert the threatened calamity, Mr. A. D. O'Neil placing a carriage at the disposal of the secretary, and himself driving me wherever we thought a poster could be used for justice and fair play. But the priestly bulldozers—the representatives of the ecclesiastical monarch—had sent forth their political mandate, and all our feeble efforts were in vain, as the friends of freedom were badly defeated. Now for Romish raids on the county treasury in spite of supreme court decisions. Last year the secretary could secure the aid of the county machinery to defeat sectarian fraud, without a dollar being spent by the American Secular Union; now the tables are turned and it will require expensive litigation to enforce the law.

"CATHOLIC MENACE TO OUR GOVERNMENT."

In this connection, let me commend to your readers the forcible and brilliant lecture by L. K. Washburn, with the above caption, published in pamphlet form by the Investigator. That masterly and magnificent protest alone, if largely circulated, would open the eyes of our citizens and thwart the schemes of this blighting curse. If any one can read this eloquent and logical plea without a tinge of shame and a determination to henceforth wage relentless war upon Romish domination, they deserve our scorn and contempt, and, if sufficiently numerous, will soon wear the chains of superstition which their ignorance or indifference has allowed to be forged. These brave, burning words are the reveille of the advance army of freedom—the trumpet-blast on the dawn of the battle for liberty. Buy it, read it, circulate it.

DR. WESTBROOK.

The president of the American Secular Union has already opened the campaign by a rousing lecture before the First Society of Spiritualists of Philadelphia, on "Have we a Christian or a Secular Government?" His discourse was highly appreciated, largely attended by prominent merchants of that city, interest in the organization aroused, and contributions promised. Dr. Westbrook is determined to make good his remark to the writer, "The Union shall not be sorry for the selection."

E. A. STEVENS.

THE LOGICAL ASPECT OF IT.

From the San Francisco Weekly Star.

Our wide-awake friend FREETHOUGHT last week criticised the first of the eight departments into which the present writer, a week before, laid off all that can be read. His statement is as follows:

The literary editor of the San Francisco Star, in laying out a course of reading, mentions "Religion—i.e., God, his dealings with man, man's relations and duties to him." A man once thrust his finger into a bucket of water, withdrew it, and then endeavored to define his duties and relations toward the hole. After a vast amount of cogitation he discovered that the hole existed only in his imagination. Many persons who have agitated the gray matter of their brain over their relations and duties towards a supposed God, have at length made a similar discovery as to the object of their study.

First, brother, there can't be a hole in an imagination. But: the question is not whether there is any God, but whether there are any books about him. FREETHOUGHT apparently wishes to convey the idea that this department is superfluous, because there isn't any God, and of course, therefore, there are no dealings of his with man, and relations or duties of man toward him.

In reply: 1. This observation is not so much a direct criticism as a contrasting statement of the critic's own belief—which is, of course, his right. 2. If FREETHOUGHT supposes (we don't, on the whole, think it does though) that because this department was started, the Star or its conductors can, for that reason, be supposed to entertain any beliefs or disbeliefs whatever; it is in error. But it would have been a mistake, in discussing the whole of literature, to omit one of the largest departments of it, and whose subject, as FREETHOUGHT will agree with us in admitting, has interested and occupied a very great share of the thoughts of mankind. It is not the business of the guide to readers to say whether there is any God or not; but as long as there are books about him that people want to read it is his business to explain (more or less) about the books, God or no God. In like manner, metaphysics must be allowed for; but a very strong argument may be made against as well as for the usefulness of metaphysics. So about spiritism; and so about astrology. That is to say: He who sets forth a course of reading is bound to explain about literature as he finds it. He has no business to undertake proselyting. This explanation is made because there was a chance for it, and in order to state the principle of absolute impartiality that should govern literary advice. Perhaps it may be safe to venture a suggestion about the logical aspect of the question raised by the observations of FREETHOUGHT. It is, that as a matter of pure logic, it is harder to prove a negative than an affirmative; and that in mere reasoning it may, therefore, be more difficult (it is not positively asserted that it is) to form an argument in opposition to the belief in a God, than in favor of it. This suggestion is intended to be quite independent of any doctrine of Revelation. It is an attempt at free thought.

In Search of a Soul.

To the Editors of Freethought:

You will find inclosed $2.20 for books and pamphlets. If the Braden-Underwood discussion takes place, I will send you one dollar for its publication.

Now in this letter I would like to demand an explanation why the word "soul" is used so much in Freethought literature. For my part, I think that every Freethinker ought to abandon such a meaningless, superstitious word as "soul." Many a man have I consulted about it, and know as much now as before, so I come to the conclusion that it must be a Bible word, and, like nearly all the words in the Bible, it means everything, or nothing. I remember when I was a boy in the East our pro-slavery Christians used to say that the negro had no soul. The best understanding I could get out of their simple assertions is this, that the negro had nothing inside of him that would live after the negro was dead, which I believe to be a fact, and I think for making that assertion those Christian friends ought to have at least a head mark. Now if those who believe the negro to be without a soul would only examine themselves and see if they are the possessors of such a wonderful thing as a soul, of which the negro is so unfortunate as to be destitute, and then describe its structure, and locate its dwelling-place in the human body, for such a discovery they would deserve the thanks of every man, woman, and child. If any one will give a definition of the word "soul" in FREETHOUGHT, the same will have my thanks and best wishes. If this cannot be done I hope it will be abandoned ere long. To me it is a worse stumbling block than a liquor advertisement.

Boulder Creek, Cal.

J. D. KAUFMAN.

Kansas Notes.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Conditions being favorable I gave my lecture at Hamlin on Saturday evening to about seventy attentive listeners—subject, "Secularism: its Aims and Advantages." The Christian minister and many of his flock were in attendance. An opportunity for a reply was given, but owing to a want of time I was allowed to escape unpunished. The minister, Mr. O. H. Derry, is a fine man, and deserves a better life than he is apt to find as pastor of a country church.

R. P. Smith is a curiosity. He has unfortunately lost one eye, and is much worn generally. He is a Second Adventist, hence has little faith in anything else. G. S. Sandusky, a general merchant, T. J. Mathews, a grain dealer, and Mr. Hinton, a farmer, are the progressive board of directors who gave me the use of the school-room. They believe in listening to all sides and making it convenient for others to do so.

The Sweeney House is kept in good running order by a staunch Secularist. E. B. Warner, an old Pacific Coaster, is also a Secularist, but the trouble is these people take no Liberal papers, hence cannot realize their own condition. I have little hope of redeeming this place from the idolaters, yet there is excellent material for a great work. Not a paper taken at the place, nor a pronounced Secularist within two miles of the town, it presents anything but a hopeful field, yet I think I planted some seeds which will grow in the future, possibly to beautify some other soil or give fruit when it can be better appreciated. D. G. CROW.

Hiawatha, Kan, Nov. 19.

LILIAN'S STORY.

After a long silence Lilian favors us with another of her interesting narratives. Some doubts as to the personality of this juvenile novelist having been expressed, it may be proper to say that she is not a myth, but a bright little lady whom every young reader of FREETHOUGHT would be glad to know. She comes rightly by her powers as a writer, since upon the paternal side her grandfather was no less a personage than Stephen Pearl Andrews, the Pantarch, the Universologist, and the Sage; while on the other side the late T. C. Leland, one of the brightest stars that ever shone in the galaxy of FREETHOUGHT, occupied a similar relationship toward her. Add to these facts the further one that the writer of the foregoing is her uncle, and her literary precocity is explained.

HOW BABY MAISY CAUGHT THE TURKEY.

A THANKSGIVING STORY BY A. LILIAN ANDREWS, AGED 11.

"Oh! I forgot to tell Frank to get a turkey," said Mrs. Joy. "Why, where is our big turkey?" said Milde. "He ran away last night."

The Joys lived in a big farmhouse in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and Mr. Joy pastured his sheep on the Coast Range. Frank Joy had gone to the nearest city, which was thirty miles away, to get the raisins and other things for Thanksgiving. "There is to be no turkey, Maisy," said Milde. "Es 'ere is," said Maisy, "'ause me 'ill tatch the bid dobbler zat ran away." "No, you can't catch him; he will catch you." "No he 'ont; me tatch 'im." "Well, you will have to catch him to-day." "I 'ill tatch him to-day; me wants to do and play in 'e snow, Milde." Milde put on Maisy's coat and cap and leggings and mittens, and let her run out to play. As soon as Maisy got out she ran into the woods to look for the turkey.

CHAPTER II.

After Frank had done all his shopping he started for home. He went along all right till he came to the middle of the woods that Maisy had gone into that morning, when he heard some one say, "Ou bad turkey, teep till!" and then, to his surprise, he saw Maisy walking along behind him. Maisy looked at him and said, "Tate me home." So she got in the wagon and rode home.

CHAPTER III.

"I 'id tatch 'im! I 'id tatch 'im, an' 'e 'idn't tatch me, and we 'ill have turkey." Maisy dragged the turkey into the kitchen. "How did you do it?" "Oh, I dуст see 'im in 'e woods, an' I ran and picked 'im up. 'E 'idn't 'un 'tos 'is leg os b'oke. 'Oo took 'im, mamma." So Mrs. Joy cooked the turkey.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places returning from the East:

Scappoose.....Or., Dec. 2 Stella.....Or., Dec. 15-16
Prt Townsend....W.T., " 4-6 No. Yamhill.... " " 18-19
Snohomish..... " " 8-10 Silverton.....Or., " 22-23

PROF. D. C. SEYMOUR, is now in California, and is prepared to lecture. His lectures are illustrated with large colored drawings, skeletons, lithographs, colored stereopticon views, etc. Liberals desiring the services of Professor Seymour may address him in care of this office. He makes no charge for lectures. The friends are only asked to provide a hall, church, or school-house, and the audience will remunerate the speaker.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

LUCIFER THE LIGHT-BEARER.

DEVOTED TO THE

Frank and fearless discussion of basic principles in the field of governmental and social reform.

For more than eighteen months this paper and its publishers have been prosecuted in the courts by the agents of the Comstock Vice Society, for alleged violations of the U. S. postal laws.

Published weekly at Valley Falls, Kansas, at $1.25 per annum. Specimen copies free.

Miracles and Miracle Workers,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 10 cts.

Christian Absurdities,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price 20 cts.

Both for sale at this office.

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Cloth, 75 cts. Address this office.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,

Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year, $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER, Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular, readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible; instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made available to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured; approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati; thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men; everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25; Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50; difference in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

he Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.

33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,

(Weber's Block, b.t. Walnut and Locust Streets.)

TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

OTTO WETTSTEIN'S Popular Jewelry Store

(Established 1857)

ROCHELLE, ILLS.

The following are a few of my leaders, all of which are latest improved, set back, solid coin silver, open face bunting, American stem-wind watches, and guaranteed
strictly as represented or cash refunded: 3 ounce case, jewels, $10; 3 ounce, $11; 4 ounce, $12; with 11 jeweled moments, $12.50, $13.50, $14.50; 5 ounce, $16.00; 6 ounce, $17.50.
With full (15) jeweled movement, pat. regulator, $16, $17,
$18, $19.50; 6 ounce, $21; adjusted to heat and cold, add $1,
being only $22 for this magnificent 4 ounce, full jeweled, adjusted watch, usually sold for $35. The following are all best
14-karat gold-filled, gold watches, cases elegant and latest style, and guaranteed by special certificates from factory authority for 20 years: 7 jewels, $24.50; 11 jewels, $27; 15 jewels, $30. Adjusted, $34, cheap at $40, and practically as good as any $100 watch a lifetime; open face, $7 less. Ladies'
watches, same best quality cases, 7 jewels, $20; 11 jewels,
$22; 15 jewels, $28. In good second quality filled cases, $7
to $5 less. Ladies' 14 k. solid gold watches, $30, $32, $35.
Heavier gold cases in embossed, chased, enameled, Louis
XIV style, diamond ornamentations, etc., $5 to $50 extra.
Gents' 14 k. solid gold watches, from $45 up. Swiss watches to close out, very low. The above all guaranteed below bottom prices elsewhere, or cash refunded. All are carefully inspected before sending, warranted for one year, and sent prepaid if on line of American Ex. office. Sundries: Best roller-
gold plated chains and charms, for ladies or gents, $2, $3, $4 $5, usually sold for $3, $4, $5 to $7. Jewelry, latest styles, full line, 25 per cent below regular prices. Best spectacles in the world, $1; gold, $5; extra fine, $6. Sent prepaid in case eye-glasses, same price. (Send line of finest print you can read distinctly without glasses, and state how many inches
from the eyes, and I can suit you first time.) Good razor, $1; best in the world—a luxury—$2. Extra fine strope, $50. Set best violin strings, $50; for guitar, $60. 3 Ludwig harmonicas.
On. Best achromatic opera glasses, $4, $5; in pearl, $3, $12.
Large field glasses, $8, $10. Signal service, $12. Watches cleaned, $1. Springs, $1. Jewels, $1. And returned free
BEST WORK. Try me.

Let Every watch be looked over by me personally before shipment, in view of having it perfect. Goods are all sent prepaid, and can be sent a thousand or ten thousand miles as safely as ten.

Designer and Patentee
of new FREETHOUGHT
BADGE IN PINS and
CHARMS—emblematic
of the light and day
of Freethought, Sci-
ence, and Reason vs.
the night and darkness
of Superstition.—Exact
size of cut and smaller,
two-thirds size. War-
ranted solid gold, en-
ameled in four colors.
Most beautiful badge
ever designed. Small,
$2, $2.75, $3.50. Large,
$3 to $5; with genuine
diamond, $3, $10; and
charms up to $25. Demand daily increasing
Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

Agents wanted. These badges are on sale at this office.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.

OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Tel-phone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

SECULAR THOUGHT.

A Journal of Liberal Thought.

The Official Organ of the Canadian Secular Union.

Published Weekly. $2 per Year.

CHARLES WATTS, Editor,

31 Adelaide st. East, Toronto,
Ont., Canada.

Read what Colonel Ingersoll says: "I am much pleased with Secular Thought—with its form, arrangement, and contents—above all, with its spirit. It is splendid. I don't see how it could be better. I read it with the greatest of pleasure." COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Read what B. F. Underwood says: "Mr. Watts publishes a solid paper. Secular Thought is the best Liberal paper that now comes to me."
B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Read what Helen H. Gardener says: "I heartily congratulate our Canadian friends upon the fact that they are represented by Secular Thought, a paper of which they can be justly proud, and which they need never hesitate to hand to their most delicate-minded friends, however religious they may be." HELEN H. GARDENER.

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say
infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to
those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior
Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address
Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San
Francisco, Cal.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY;

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History, of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author,
Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum
notes by Guizot, Weyck, Millman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages.
Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

• ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S •

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national au-them entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron
D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Udolph. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 49.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - DECEMBER 8, 1888

"FATHER" LAMBERT, the priest of Waterloo, N. Y., whose "Notes on Ingersoll" made him somewhat notorious, is accused of heresy by his bishop, and both have gone to Rome to lay their case before the pope.

HUNTINGTON, Ind., has two well-developed cases of religious insanity—two brothers of the name of Dill who have been preaching in school-houses, and holding "holiness" meetings. When their insanity assumed a violent form they were put in jail.

MR. FRED EVANS, the independent slate-writing medium, is mystifying the Australians with his chirographic dexterity. We learn with grief that Mr. Evans has been so unfortunate as to meet with injuries while riding horseback, which laid him up for a week.

THE movement to raise one thousand dollars for the purpose of testing the question whether the will of Stephen Girard is or is not being carried out, bids fair to succeed. Joseph Sedgebeer, of Painesville, O., L. L. White, of Castroville, Texas, and N. F. Griswold, of Chicago, have subscribed one hundred dollars each.

Nor a week passes but some San Francisco clergyman is advertised to deliver a lecture "to young men only." Wouldn't it be a good plan to once in a while call attention to the way the aged sinner goes laden with grief and heavy woes? He has his weaknesses. Why shouldn't he get an occasional dig from the pulpit pounder?

ARCHBISHOP RIORDAN has issued a circular letter against mixed marriages, which was read in the Catholic churches of San Francisco last Sunday. It sets forth that for a Catholic to marry a Protestant, the ceremony being performed by a Protestant minister, makes the intercourse a "horrible concubinage" and subjects the contracting parties to excommunication. Marriages performed by justices of the peace, according to Riordan, come under the head of mortal sins: that is to say, law-abiding citizens will be damned. The church is getting a trifle arrogant. Since the state has the matter of marriage under its control, how would it do to prescribe a secular ceremony, and oblige priests to use it and no other?

It is expected that Colonel Ingersoll will be heard often on the platform this winter. He is announced to lecture in Toronto, Ont., before long. There are a good many thousand people in California who would like to hear this eloquent orator. Our climate also offers inducements of which Eastern weather is quite barren.

THE lots in Summerland are going off with a well accented boom. Something like a thousand have been disposed of, and the price has gone up to $30 per lot. On the principle that a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush, a small building spot in the Santa Barbara Summerland is more desirable than a much larger one in the uncertain Beyond.

THE Greek Catholics have won a victory in Alaska. They objected to Protestant religious services in the public schools of Sitka, and the school board passed a resolution excluding religion altogether. The jealousies between Catholics and Protestants, with the result of secularizing the school, illustrates the adage that when rogues fall out honest men get their dues.

NEWS AND NOTES

THE hall was full the last night at Spokane, and a preliminary organization effected, with nearly fifty names. The lectures bring people together and make acquaintances. In a place like Spokane Falls, advancing so rapidly, it is difficult for Freethinkers to know one another, and it is surprising, sometimes, to discover the strength of the radical element.

I believe there can and will be a flourishing Secular society in this place. Mr. and Mrs. John Sharpless, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Sharpless, Mr. and Mrs. Gimble, Mr. and Mrs. Moe, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, W. H. Galvani, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Davidson, and others, are generous and enthusiastic in the cause and will make a splendid influence for Freethought. The flag is flung to the breeze and it will wave in sunshine and storm. My friend A. L. Davidson was one of the excellent workers, with friend Beal, at Portland, and they can greet each other in the pages of FREETHOUGHT for pioneer service still. Davidson is foreman of the big planing-mill, and is sometimes kept at his post until the midnight hour, with the rush of business; but he has time still for the world of ideas—of intellectual progress and liberty—and it is a pleasure to meet with one so fully alive to the grand questions and hopes of the day.

I took supper and lunch with friends at the hospitable board of A. N. Sires and wife, and labor was delightfully mingled with social joy. Mr. Sires, in his youth, was on the briny deep pursuing an adventurous career, from San Francisco to Alaska, after the whales of the sea, but he never yet found the whale that swallowed Jonah. The fresh breezes of out-door life, however, don't allow him to take any stock in the prison house of orthodoxy.

I met friend Dettmer, formerly of Dillon, Montana, concerning which are bright recollections of campaign work. He is on the roll-call of Freethought.

Friend Gough was over from Waverly. I was sorry to receive word that Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Graham could not come. The fact is, Graham was kicked by a horse. "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," writes William. No doubt Christians will rejoice that the Lord has such an affection for the mighty Infidel as to try to shut his mouth with the hoof of a horse. However, the Lord's love was too far off, by the space of an inch, and the Infidel can still talk.

The Nicolaides Bros. walked about eight miles the first night to attend the lecture, and were promptly on hand at the close. They are staunch believers in Freethought, and will stand by until the last gun is fired.

Many others I met, new and old friends, in this bustling frontier camp already brilliant with wealth and enterprise—I cannot mention them all—whose hearts are true and brave; but the welcome and good cheer make undying hope for the future. Like the golden wealth of the hills, and the breezes of the plains, and the white waves of the sweeping river, shall be the inspirations and powers here for freedom and for truth. Spokane Falls is a happy, a superb picture in my memory.

Early on Saturday morning, a lovely, a sparkling day, cold and clear, friend Selde with Anderson and Kennedy, good companions, took me on my forty-mile trip to Davenport. As we left the city we plunged into a deep canon where the river rolls, and then up on to the opposite side, among the pine trees. Reaching the rocky and frost-glistening top, I look back, and on the broad, level, shining plain lies Spokane, beautiful for situation; the river winding about with the wild majesty of the falls; green belts of pine timber flinging back the lustrous rays; the tablelands glittering to the lofty mountains whose snows are like jewels in the glowing azure, and in whose heart is the gold and silver wand that holds the empire of the future. That varied prospect gleams in light and splendor on the tapestries of the brain. Along the broadening prospect we pass in the gorgeous sunlight. The keen wind softens beneath the ardent beams, and at high noon we ride comfortably along, and if our feet get cold we stick them out and warm them in the sun. Towards evening, however, the wind has an icy breath, and we hail the roaring fire with great satisfaction at the end of our forty-mile trip. Towards three o'clock we draw up at the house of Mr. Ed. Ramm, who owns over five thousand acres of this fertile country, through which two railroads are now progressing. A station is to be built on one of Mr. Ramm's sections, and where now only rocks and bunch-grass can be seen, a lively Western city will make the air hum with many voices. Mr. Ramm is a thorough Liberal, and Freethought finds happy welcome on his broad domain. Mrs. Ramm, the daughter of Peter Selde, is born with the sparkling blood of Freedom in her veins, and the little children, healthful and bright, greet the sun with joyous melody of childhood, and have no discord of orthodoxy in the spirit of their dreams.

Saturday night I lecture in the opera hall, Davenport—a cosy little village, snugly fenced in by broad hills, and which, now that the railroad comes by its door, looks forth to ampler fields. The house was full. Six ministers were present. It was a delightful occasion. I enjoyed it. They never cracked a smile, but took notes as if it were a race of life and death. I expect they have enough material for a twelve months' preaching. However, one of the preachers declared that my discourse was "terribly thin," and that if he couldn't "knock the water out of me he would lay down and die." I lectured Sunday afternoon and evening. I gave all the preachers a chance to answer. The challenge was not accepted until Sunday evening. The Rev. Mr. Gibson essayed to answer my lectures—mainly upon the Sabbath question. He good-naturedly called me "brother." I asked him if he would call me "brother" on the other side of Jordan. He said he would be glad to, only a "great gulf" would be between us and he couldn't. He said he preferred to be "created a little lower than the angels" than to come from the monkey. I told him it wasn't a question of preference, but of fact. We might like to be born rich. That doesn't prove that we are rich. If the evidence shows that we came from the monkey, we must stand it, as we must any other demonstrated truth. To my mind it seemed better to be descended from a monkey who did not commit the "original sin" and damn us with "total depravity" than to be descended from Adam, who cursed all his posterity by eating the apple contrary to orders, and then was so mean as to fling the whole blame upon the woman. Almost any monkey ancestor was preferable to such a sneak as Adam, who, after all, was made out of "the dust of the earth," the very same material that composes the monkey. The preacher gave himself dead away on the Sabbath question. He showed conclusively, according to St. Paul, that the law of the Sabbath was entirely abrogated; and the only Bible command that he could give for the "Christian Sabbath" was that St. Paul ordered collections to be taken up on the first day of the week. How that can prove the sacredness of the day is what "no fellow can find out," not even a preacher, whatever the size of his gall.

After Mr. Gibson sat down there were loud calls for Rev. Mr. Pershall, who arose and went at it in good, straightforward Methodist style. I don't know what the Christians expected, but if they expected an orthodox argument they "caught a Tartar," for the "parson" gave us a jolly Infidel discourse. He made some splendid hits, and brought down the house every time. He said he didn't want to get people out of hell, but hell out of the people. He declared against the doctrine of substitution, and in various ways gave orthodoxy a blow between the eyes. It turned out that the "preacher" had lost his Methodist theology and was now a Swedenborgian. My discourse was on the "Glory of Infidelity," and, as from the standpoint of popular belief he was as much of an Infidel as myself, he joined hands with me and gave cold comfort to the ordinary Christian. The Infidels enjoyed his speech amazingly.

I invited the other clergymen to come on, and gave them until Monday night to prepare for the battle.

I am now, Monday morn, at the ranch of my namesake, John Putnam, who, with the name, also has the same spirit of Infidelity. He came, originally, from old Massachusetts, and I suppose that we are far-away cousins. His father and five brothers settled in Cass county, Mich. From thence Mr. Putnam came to the far West, crossing the plains in 1851. He has roamed extensively over the Northwest, and has seen much of its rough life and varied fortunes. He knows a good horse when he sees it, and fine stock. When he came here, eight years ago, there was no other settler within thirty miles, and for six months Mrs. Putnam did not see the face of another woman. Now, the railroad is running alongside his land. Davenport, Sprague, Cheney, and Spokane Falls have all grown up since he came here. He has five running springs on his claim, and the soil is rich. Mrs. Putnam does not call herself an Infidel, but she is by no means an orthodox. She is of Universalist parentage, and the picture of the sturdy heretic, the Rev. John Murray, is on her walls. In his day he was a terrible Infidel indeed.

This is an almost new country, and the uncultivated plains roll away on every side. But the old is rapidly passing away and the new is coming. In a few years smiling farms, busy villages, harvest fields, orchards, full barns, will make all the face of the land like a picture, where the music of machinery and the whistle of the engine are the signals of ever-changing advance.

Monday evening the hall was crowded and there was a fair sprinkling of Christians and clergymen also. Those who declared they wouldn't come to hear an Infidel lecture were on hand. I gave "Freethought and Progress," and at the close invited the clergymen forward. This time Rev. McArthur answered the call and proceeded to say that he had attended a theological seminary where there were 40,000 volumes in the library, and it was to be presumed, therefore, that he knew something. In addition to this he had also ridden for five years over the bunchgrass. An experience like this, of course, was beneficial to his theological stamina, as it was to the ancient Nebuchadnezzar. I think that if, after a seminary training, most ministers would "go to grass" they certainly would be much more useful. The audience, after this prelude of autobiography, anxiously waited for the presentation of some argument. But McArthur declared that he had not a single shot in his locker, but that on the following Sunday evening when the Infidel was a hundred miles off he would lay him out flat. In the mean time he said that if the Infidels were on their death bed, without doubt, they would then send for him and ask for the consolations of the gospel. He warned them to flee from the wrath to come. He meant to be pathetic, but the audience applauded his most weeping utterances and sepulchral notes. He then proceeded to get mad, which he did in true Christian fashion, and denunciation took the place of entreaty, and finally his remarks became so insulting that even the Christians were ashamed of his tirade of abuse. He couldn't help referring to the monkey question and insinuating that the Infidels were still of that order, since they would not accept the teachings of the Bible, which he declared were pure and noble from beginning to end. This was all he could say. The Christians were more thoroughly demoralized Monday evening than before. The defender of the faith could do nothing except fling mud. Granted the courtesy of the floor, he violated all rules of propriety by personal attacks, and injured his case beyond remedy. There was evidently some sort of conspiracy to make a row, but it did not succeed. The current went peacefully on and the Liberals carried the day by a large majority. The meetings closed successfully. All are looking forward to liberal gains in the future. The Christian host has been routed. An unexpected advance sentiment has been declared. After the orthodox had retired, who were too strait "to trip the light fantastic toe," there was a sociable time and dance, and music winged the happy hours until midnight. On these broad plains, where the heart of civilization begins to beat, thought is free and noble, and the harvest of humanity shall mingle its glory with the harvests of the earth. Nowhere have I found more loyal companions, more beautiful hope, amidst toil and struggle.

H. L. Wilson is one of our best workers. To him the word Liberal is a word of hope and progress. Quiet as the hills, and staunch as they, he has the heart of gold. R. W. Johnson, Peter

N. Wies, S. Nielsen, C. L. Simmons, J. H. Nichols, C. C. May, Ostroski, Bressleur & Co., Dr. Whitney, Chas. Grutt, W. O. Freese, P. Jensen, John Horwege, P. Petersen, John Much, Bergand Born, Thos. O'Connor, C. B. White, P. Selde, Jr., and others, make up a gallant company for this frontier-land, and the post will never be deserted.

Tuesday morning, bright and early, friend Selde is ready to take me on my far winding journey to Sprague. I bid farewell to Mr. and Mrs. Ramm, my hospitable hosts, who leave nothing undone for the comfort of the Pilgrim; to the bright little children, the big dog, the noble hounds, and off we go while the clouds threaten. We stop a few moments at Selde's ranch, and say good-bye to his cheerful family, who make the fireside happy with noble toil. The dwellings are miles apart over the somewhat rough and barren country through which we travel, but the broad views are interspersed with arable lands that show signs of richness. The rocks shoot up like pinnacles, in many places, and evidently there was a flood here one day, but I saw no signs of Noah's ark. Round a sharp crag we plunge into Sprague, where the railroad shops make music. The first to greet us was comrade Cooper who had made ready the way for our lectures, the first Freethought lectures ever given at Sprague. The community, at present, appears to be largely orthodox. Freethought is but little known and expressed. Mr. Cooper, however, is not afraid to stand by his colors, like an honest man. He is county treasurer, and has just been elected auditor by a splendid majority, although his political party is in the minority. They have a good fashion in these western states of "scratching" the tickets, and so men of both parties are elected. Republicans and Christians voted for Cooper, although he is a Democrat and a Liberal. This shows that fair and square dealing is recognized. Along with Mr. Cooper are D. K. Macdonald and P. K. Spencer, also outspoken Liberals, but elected to offices of trust by the suffrages of those opposite in politics and religion. While making no quarrel on religious grounds, they frankly stand for the truth as they understand it, and respect and confidence are accorded them. This is a sign of the times that points to fraternity built not "on creeds, but honest deeds."

I enjoyed the delightful hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Cooper. Mrs. Cooper was brought up in the Catholic church, but now "the dim religious light" is permeated with the sunlight of freedom, and the grand ideas of the future melt the shadows of the past. Mr. Geo. Evart, an American cousin of the English premier, Gladstone, whose name is William Ewart, is a veteran of our cause, from the Maumee country, near Toledo, and was living there when I was Unitarian preacher at Toledo, and I guess we must have struck hands before. At any rate, we were old friends at once. J. S. Herman, of Fairview, P. H. Dencer, Mr. Stafford, Sergeant Oakley, Mr. Sawyer—mine host of the Pacific Hotel—and others, are of the few known to be Liberals. Sprague is a sprightly town. The railroad shops make it a lively place, and there is a vast stock country about it, and it is a shipping point of wool and cattle. Within a radius of ten miles are two hundred thousand sheep. In spite of the unpromising nature of the soil in its vicinity, Sprague seems destined to be a growing mart. From the court-house, built on a lofty bluff, a beautiful scene is presented of the bustling city, the wide plains and curving mounds sweeping to the horizon. There is a sense of liberty here, although the cross of the Catholic church is right before one's face.

I didn't have large audiences, must confess, and I felt somewhat discouraged at the outlook, but the genial friends I met here won't allow me to give up. I know there is a large Liberal element in the neighborhood, and it can be reached. So I shall come here again. There is a good "lead" and the gold will be found. I came across comrade Finch, of Baker City, who is trying to establish a creamery at Sprague, and, seeing that butter is brought from Iowa and Nebraska, and is worth 60 cents a pound, and twelve hundred cows are within a radius of ten miles, it looks as if a creamery was just the thing for this and other points in the territory.

I here bid good-bye to Peter Selde, who took splendid care of me all the way from Spokane Falls to Davenport, and from Davenport to Sprague, so that I was enabled to meet every fortune with a cheerful mind. It is friends like these that give the light of hope, who greet the storm and sunshine with free and equal mind.

At Pasco I am met by W. B. Grey and Frank Schunemann, and the school-house is filled to overflowing Thursday evening. There has been a somewhat bitter fight in the community and the orthodox have exercised the spirit of intolerance, but the better portion of Christians are beginning to realize that this will not do for the nineteenth century. A clergyman was on hand to meet me in battle array—the same who had already had a tussle with Mr. Reynolds. At the close of my lecture I asked him to come to the platform. But he was not ready for a reply, but proceeded to attack Mr. Reynolds. He was promptly called to order by the chairman, Mr. O'Keefe. That was not the question before the house.

The clergyman then remarked that he did not want to be a "side-show" to an Infidel meeting. What beautiful Christian meekness that displayed! He was then offered an opportunity for debate, and accepted. A committee was immediately appointed to arrange for four or six meetings, where the Christian and Infidel might have the tug of war without any "side-show." The Infidel will certainly be on hand, and if the Christian does not back down Pasco will see lively times. I have accepted the challenge to debate with this clergyman the latter part of December, and with all my heart I hope there will be no faint-heartedness in the orthodox ranks. They talk big now—but they can only escape the issue by a cowardly surrender.

Pasco is advancing. A new station has been built, and it is quite a busy railroad point. An artesian well is towering amidst the sage-brush, and I have no doubt it will be the touch-stone to waving harvests. The Snake river and the Columbia join their waters here—the finest navigable streams in the world. Pasco has improved much since my visit last year, and the music of progress ceases not.

With such good companions as Grey, Schunemann, Straub, O'Keefe, and others there was not a dull hour in Pasco. Friend Grey is a jolly host—a comrade of the grand army—with a heart as big as an ox. He has a ranch about ten miles from Pasco, and one of the finest libraries in the territories, of Freethought literature. Everybody respects his courage, his generosity, and his manliness of thought.

My stay at Pasco with these splendid friends was fresh breath of inspiration from the boundless fields of nature. This is no "pent up Utica," but the wilderness gives promise of Freedom's glory.

I was glad to meet friend Perry, of Tacoma, an ardent Free-thinker, and hope sometime to visit his camping-ground, where, I understand, there are many Liberals. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.
Pasco, W. T., Nov. 23, 1888.

THE JANUARY MEETINGS.

Expressions of interest in the meetings to be held in January are reaching us from all parts of the state. "You may depend upon me to be there and to help out on the expenses," is the cheering form usually adopted. The following contributions and pledges have been made:

Robert Gunther.....$3	K. Parker.....$1
Ed. Wegner.....3	John Robinett.....1
Philip Cowen.....1	J. Robertson.....1
H. Replogle.....1	A friend.....1
A. Derming.....1	Samos Parsons.....1

These are exclusive of numerous promises to "help" as necessity may require.

The call for a state organization has already received the signature of every Liberal to whom it has been presented. Doubtless by January 1 it will have been signed by five hundred representative Freethinkers of the state, and the most promising Freethought movement the coast has ever seen will be inaugurated with all the conditions favorable for its success.

The lectures by Mr. Putnam occupy the Sunday evenings of the month of January next. The convention will meet Sunday morning, January 27, and the Paine celebration comes on the 29th. All these meetings must be open to the public. The friends, of course, will want to pay the hall rent, and opportunity is offered them all to do so by adding their names to the foregoing list of contributors to the fund.

OUR GERMAN COADJUTORS.

It is unknown to many Secularists, and has not become known to us until within the past few weeks, that there exists in this country a large organized body of German Freethinkers, called the Turnerbund, in whose Declaration of Principles the Nine Demands of Liberalism are embodied, in practically the same form adopted by the National Liberal League and the American Secular Union. A subscriber, Mr. W. Schroeder, has just left at the FREETHOUGHT office a pamphlet comprising the "Platform and Statutes of the North American Gymnastic Union (Tunerbund). In this pamphlet the members of the organization set forth that they are banded together to co-operate in the rearing of a people strong in both body and mind; that they recognize in the spread of culture and the fostering of moral principles the only means of effecting a thorough reform in social, religious, and political life. They therefore oppose most decidedly every attempt to interfere with the liberty of conscience, and all legislation hostile to the perfection and development of free institutions. Economically, the Turnerbund maintains that the people cannot delegate to any legislative body the right to either propose or enact laws. The people, they hold, must reserve to themselves the right to suggest all statutory enactments, and must have an opportunity to pass upon them before they can become operative. For the purposes of legislation, therefore, the people need but a single body, whose members shall be responsible to the people and always subject to recall. The right of states to pass laws which conflict with the spirit of the Constitution of the United States shall be abrogated.

This organization proposes, as a relief from public distress and for the amelioration of the condition of the working class, shortening of the hours of labor so as to make eight hours a day's work; "prohibition of the employment of children under fourteen years of age in industrial occupations; protection against adulteration of foods; that public lands must remain the property of the people, transferable only to genuine cultivators; compulsory education free to everybody; prevention of sectarian influences in schools and institutions of learning; a progressive income tax, with the exemption of the minimum amount of property necessary for the support of a family; transfer of all public means of communication (including the railroads and telegraphs) to the state," and other reforms in this general line.

Above all, the Turnerbund favors education, both physical and mental. It proposes the introduction of gymnastics in public schools, and recommends to its members the study of social and economic reforms. As to religion the society holds that this must of necessity be outside the reach of all compulsory influence, and all laws and provisions restricting the liberty of conscience are, therefore, hostile to the Constitution and to freedom. These encroachments are thus specified:

- "Sunday laws;
- "The exemption of church property from taxation;
- "The appointment of chaplains for Congress, for legislatures, for the army and navy, for prisons, and for other institutions supported by public taxation;
- "The appointing of religious holidays or fast days by the president or by the governors of states;
- "The requirement of an oath upon the Bible or in other religious form;
- "The support of religious tendencies or institutions by state funds or public acts; and
- "The stamping or printing of religious mottoes upon coins or public documents."

The Turnerbund is at present non-political, and members are permitted to form their own political affiliations until such time as a political party shall arise embodying the foregoing Declaration of Principles in its platform.

It will thus be seen that the Turnerbund is in full sympathy with the American Secular Union, and, so far as the Turnerbund's strictly Secular principles are concerned, the Secular Union is in full sympathy with that organization.

SOMETHING HANDSOME.

There have been some days in the history of FREETHOUGHT that brought little else but discouragement. Friday, November 30, was not one of them. On the morning of that day the somewhat taciturn carrier who brings mail to this office opened the door about a foot and shied a single letter at the head of the junior editor. The latter looked at it ruefully. It might be an application for a sample copy, a change of address, or even an order to discontinue. When the letter was opened, however, a check was disclosed, and this is what the sender wrote:

DENVER, COL., Nov. 25, 1888.

MESSES. PUTNAM & MACDONALD, Gentlemen: Please find inclosed draft for fifty dollars as a donation to your paper. Recognizing the Liberal press as the greatest educator of the present age I feel like sustaining it and helping to carry on the business. For an enterprise of that kind must be uphill work for a time. The money is to be used in any way you may wish. Hoping you will meet with success, I remain yours,

AUSTIN W. SMITH.

Generosity of this sort puts us under obligations quite beyond expression by words. It gives FREETHOUGHT a strong lift; it puts obstacles out of the way, and prepares us to meet with confidence any future difficulties that are likely to present themselves. Mr. Smith has our thanks and deep gratitude for his generous help.

SECRETARY STEVENS of the American Secular Union has issued a Constitution and set of By-laws for the use of Local Secular Unions, to be obtained by addressing E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago, Ill.

THANKSGIVING LITERATURE.

Occasionally the arid desert of orthodox Thanksgiving day literature is broken by an oasis of good sense. The Bandon, Or., Recorder, for instance, furnishes this bright spot:

"The day of Thanksgiving as a national institution is a humbug of itself and a diaphanous fraud when proclamation enjoining its observance emanates from the president of the United States and is echoed by the governors of our commonwealth. These executive pronouncements come in prosperity and privation, inflation and depression, and with unvarying monotony they admonish us to unite in praise of the power which has bestowed upon us the blessings of health and plenty. But are there no sick? no poor? To whom, and for what should they be thankful? If these all be of philosophic mind they may gather some little consolation from the reflection that they might be worse; but they are not moved to an expression of 'heartfelt thanks.' The farmer whose wheat is selling for one dollar a bushel is grateful, perhaps; but it is a grim sort of gratitude, after all. He knows the rise in value of his breadstuffs—the source of his 'plenty'—is consequent upon a partial failure of crops in France and Russia, and it strikes him as anomalous that the whole people of a great and enlightened nation should be directed by its chief magistrate to render thanks to him who had, in his infinite goodness, visited drouths, grasshoppers, and cinch-bugs upon the European tiller of the soil."

Again, the editor of the Sunday Gazetteer from Denison, Texas, looks over the field and starts out to tell us why we should be thankful. His remarks form the grimmest kind of grim satire on the custom of rendering thanks when the occasion does not demand them. In the first place the editor says we should be thankful that the ordeal of a national election has been passed without bloodshed. Of course, he adds, there was no danger of bloodshed, and the election went the wrong way to suit him, but he mentions the political ordeal out of respect to the antiquity of the custom. Then he urges that citizens of Texas should be thankful for a bountiful harvest, though strict regard for the truth would suggest a slight modification of the description. Hay was very short in Texas on account of dry weather in the early part of the season, and corn was a robust failure from the same cause. Cotton might have exceeded half a crop but for the rains in August and September. The same is true of wheat and oats, but the editor learns that the polar regions fared no better than Texas, so he does not kick so hard as he otherwise would. He would be happy to praise God for the wisdom wherewith the latter has endowed the present legislators of the Lone Star State, except that the wisdom is not apparent. Speaking of uninterrupted commercial prosperity reminds him that shortness of crops has caused an immense shrinkage of business. There is only about half as much doing now as a year ago, and he wasn't very thankful then. It is so dull, in fact, that business men are inviting the assistance of the sheriff to help them dispose of their goods. The editor concludes that he can be thankful that he is alive, though there is a chance to hedge on that statement when the cost of living is taken into account. His health isn't good; the price of medicine has advanced; the coal man is uncompromising, and the butcher will not relent. The Gazetteer man therefore has to admit that his Thanksgiving editorial is a failure, and lays it aside until some time when he is less afflicted with cold feet than at present. With all its sarcasm the Gazetteer comes very near the truth. People who, in the presence of evils which they were powerless to avert, can offer thanks to God for the blessings which he took no part in furnishing them, are as blind to the irony of the case as the hospital nurse who reminded a dying man that he would undoubtedly go to hell, and then admonished him to be thankful that a place had been provided for him.

A WRITER in Public Opinion announces, we fear without due authority, that the theological seminaries propose hereafter to employ in each college a Professor of Heresy to act as a sort of Devil's Advocate. He shall be, says the writer (who cannot be other than our friend H. L. Knight), "a most sturdy scoffer, learned, calm, logical, and skilled in all the diablerie of skeptical lore, the best to be had for a good salary. It shall be his duty to meet the learned professors in the presence of the students. He shall produce all the thunderbolts of heresy in their most condensed form. And the professors shall answer him, and the students shall answer him; and no man shall hereafter be dubbed D.D. who cannot smite the Black Professor hip and thigh and drive him from the field." The inducement is held out that some of the students may convert the Black Professor and thus not only gain laurels for themselves but reinforce the cause of religion with a potent advocate. A Chair of Heresy in theological seminaries would be a most valuable acquisition, and who could fill it with more ability than Mr. Knight himself?

THE daily papers of December 1 contained this dispatch from Petaluma: "W. H. Pepper has offered to give to the public schools a lot, provided a suitable building is erected thereon for a kindergarten." The despatch does not tell the whole story. The offer of Mr. Pepper, who is a well-known and active Liberal, is to give the state a large tract of land for the purpose of educating boys in mechanical and agricultural pursuits. This offer has been open for some time, but the state does not show any great activity in accepting it. Perhaps the provision that no religious instruction of any kind shall be imparted to the boys has something to do with dimming the popular enthusiasm that would be felt if the donation had been made to found a religious institution.

OWING to the advanced age and infirmities of Leo XIII., the question who shall be his successor is agitating the cardinals. It is pretty generally conceded that the next pope must not be an Italian, and America being the stronghold of the church the next vicar of Christ is likely to be drawn from this side of the Atlantic. Cardinal Taschereau, of Quebec, is mentioned. Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, is not eligible because he represents a republic. The latter fact is significant as showing the enduring enmity between the Catholic church and republican institutions.

OREGON Liberals who desire to affix their signatures to the petition for the taxation of church property in that state should be up and at it, as the time for presenting the petition is near at hand. The blanks are in circulation in various parts of the state, and more may be obtained by addressing R. D. Allen, secretary S. S. U., Silverton, Or., and when signed the petitions should be returned to the same address. Mr. Allen will see that they are properly laid before the legislature of Oregon.

FROM a communication written by D. Edson Smith in the Santa Ana Standard it is learned that a Dr. Kennard, of New York, has been lecturing in defense of the Bible at Santa Ana; also that Prof. J. S. Loveland has replied to him. Professor Loveland would like to debate with any one the proposition that the Bible is not divinely inspired, and that Christianity is opposed to the progress of man in civilization and enlightenment. He offers to take the affirmative.

THE report of the Underwood-Braden debate appearing in this issue of FREETHOUGHT was prepared by the committee of the Silverton Secular Union, and forwarded for publication.

ATTENTION is called to the advertisement of Brother Wettstein, who in another column, by alliteration's artful aid, sets forth what watchful watch-buyers will want. We have no hesitation in saying that Otto can be depended upon to furnish exactly what he advertises. A watch which the writer purchased from him two or three years ago still continues to mark the lapse of time with relentless precision.

It is said that there are two hundred Catholic schools in California. There is also a seminary known as St. Ignatius, where teachers and priests are "educated."

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Several Chinese were killed in a battle between two high-binder societies at Portland, Or., Sunday.—The total vote of Oregon this year was 61,918. In 1884 the aggregate of the vote for Blaine and Cleveland was 51,544; so that Oregon appears to have gained over 10,000 votes in the last four years, which means an addition to her population of nearly, if not quite, 50,000.—Something in the sermon at the First Congregational church of Oakland so overcame Dr. R. E. Cole, president of the board of directors, that he fainted and had to be carried home. The minister denies all knowledge that his sermon was loaded.—An Examiner reporter dressed in the clothes of a pauper made the rounds of the fashionable churches of San Francisco recently in order to ascertain if the poor were welcome. He discovered that they were not by a large majority.—A meritorious feature connected with the hanging of John Harry Meyer at Placerville last week was his refusal to accept the services of a priest. Meyer remarked that he deserved to go to hell and did not want to see justice thwarted. His death set a better example than his life.—Hall McAllister, who was distinguished as the leading attorney of California, died Dec. 1, at San Rafael. He was 62 years old.—There will be a total eclipse of the sun Jan. 1, visible in various parts of California, and Eastern astronomers are coming hither to observe it.—There is to be a general recount of the ballots cast in the late election in San Francisco. There is a prevailing suspicion of crookedness.—The late rains have put California lands in excellent condition for plowing, and crops are expected to be in by the first of the new year.—The Pundita Ramabai has left San Francisco for Yokohama.

Secretary Endicott reports that the total expenditures of the war department during the year ending June 30, 1888, were $41,650,107.—The gross revenue of the post-office for the past fiscal year was $52,695,176; expenditure, $56,885,403; deficit, $4,150,229.—The second session of the Fiftieth Congress convened on Monday at Washington.—Col. Thomas H. Grasty, editor of the Arkansas Traveler, has experienced religion, and will devote the remainder of his life to the ministry.—The following is the debt statement issued by the treasurer of the United States: Interest bearing debt principal, $947,068,202; interest bearing debt interest, $9,896,258; debt on which interest has ceased since maturity (principal and interest), $2,313,031; debt bearing no interest, $731,697,758; total debt principal, $1,680,917,706; interest, $10,057,544; total, $1,690,975,250; total debt, less available cash items, $1,200,721,463; net cash in the treasury, $52,234,610; debt less cash in the treasury on December 1, $1,148,489,853; debt less cash in the treasury November 1, $1,137,290,036; increase in the debt during the month, $11,199,817; decrease since June 30, 1888, $17,094,803; total cash in the treasury, as shown by the treasurer's general account, $612,784,621.—Hroneck, the Chicago Anarchist, is sentenced to twelve years imprisonment.—Littlewood won the six-days walking match at New York, making 622 miles and beating the world's record.—The congressional committee on immigration may come to San Francisco to gather information.—Rev. Charles Dudley took charge of the Emanuel church at New Amsterdam, N. Y., stating that he was a single man and had recently come from Melbourne, Australia. It now appears that Dudley, throughout the greater part of the ten years during which he claimed to have been in Australia, was a Methodist preacher in Nebraska, where he went by the name of C. Edward Dudleigh, and where he married, at Wood River, an estimable young lady. He has abandoned her and her child, and she is now teaching school. Various other facts have also come to light concerning the clergyman's past life and his very questionable career in Utah and California.—The wife of Gen. W. T. Sherman died at New York Nov. 28. She was a fanatical Catholic.—Charges of fraud and other irregularity have been preferred against the receiver of the Mormon church property and his attorneys.

There was a big Boulanger demonstration in Paris last Sunday. The predicted riot failed to occur. France is not Ireland.—Poles and Jews to the number of 350,000 are to be banished from Warsaw in case of war.—After a week of improvement, John Bright, the English statesman, is again in a critical condition.—The Irish clergy of Rome are to give a "handsome reception" to Chas. A. Dana, of the New York Sun. Dana merits it. For the past half dozen years he has prostituted the columns of his paper to the service of Irish demagogues and Catholic priests.—Kaiser William of Germany is afflicted with a tumor in his ear, which causes some alarm among his subjects.—Henry George has been feted by his London admirers.—Lord Salisbury's unexpected advocacy of woman suffrage renders the measure likely to pass the English legislature early this season, only bigoted Tories opposing it.—Mrs. Parsons, of Chicago, with her dynamite methods, is reported to have been found too strong a dose for London Socialists. She sailed for New York on the 1st inst.—The pope proposes to establish diplomatic relations with Russia.—The London school elections resulted in a net gain of three seats to the advocates of non-sectarian education.—The Italian senate has rejected by a small majority the bill for the extension of suffrage to women.—The church of the First Congregational Society at Northampton, Mass., was ruined by fire last week. The building was new and cost $65,000.

UNDERWOOD VERSUS BRADEN.

An intellectual controversy between gentlemen will result in giving the world the best thought of both. Two well-bred dogs will play together for hours without quarreling, but a respectable canine always excites the envy and jealousy of curs.

If by any accident or design a gentleman and a blackguard are pitted against each other in debate, the former may pass the ordeal and the audience have the benefit of his knowledge and the example of his conduct, but the other will so mar it all that the opinion that debates are not profitable will be strengthened. A man like B. F. Underwood debating with a man like the Rev. Clark Braden is like Minerva hobnobbing with a carrion-fed buzzard: it is unnatural and degrading to wisdom, and does the guttersnipe no good.

"These few remarks," you must know, are based on a personal knowledge of the much-heralded "eight days' debate" between Underwood and Braden in Silverton, Or. The village of Silverton is situated in the Willamette valley, fifty miles south of Portland. Its population does not exceed 700, and yet it contains one of the most vigorous Liberal organizations in the country. They own a hall and number somewhere about 140 members. Their prosperity so excited the envy of the Christian, that is, the Campbellite, element of the community that this reverend Clark Braden was imported, at a salary, to not only break up the Silverton Secular Union, but to follow Liberal lecturers up and down the coast, and "drive Infidelity into the Pacific." One of his first exploits was to open meetings in Silverton, wherein he denounced the Freethinkers as a lot of incipient thieves and murderers who would make life and property unsafe if allowed to exist. He announced, among other things, that he had driven Underwood from the lecture field. The Liberals corresponded with Mr. Underwood, and were instructed to challenge Braden for a debate. This was done, and after weeks of artful dodging, in efforts to elude them, the Silverton Liberals corraled Braden, arranged the propositions and dates, and the meeting has taken place; the Secular Union of Silverton still lives, stronger than ever, and Freethought has achieved another signal victory.

The readers of a Liberal paper need not be told that Mr. Underwood acquitted himself well. Those who know him need no assurance that he would be a gentleman under all circumstances. He is, doubtless, the best equipped rationalist, with the courage of his convictions, in North America. His manners, in debate and under the meanest possible insults offered by his opponent, have been, in this meeting, of the highest type. Always calm, dignified, courteous, he has in no instance returned railing for railing, or for a moment descended to the level of his opponent. His presentation of matter, both in affirming his own propositions and in examining the arguments of Braden, has been clear, logical, and strong. He never wanders from his subject, and the audience always knows what he is talking about. Never "rising" to the frenzy of "impassioned" oratory, he nevertheless, by stimulation, produces an equal effect upon thoughtful minds. His discourse is as full of meat as his adversary's is of wind.

His opponent, Braden, is a peculiar individual, and somewhat difficult to catch with the chirograph. He is an intellectual chameleon, and he seems to possess as little conscience as that reptile. He gets on all sides of a subject, denying one day what he affirmed the day before, denouncing evolution one hour and advocating it the next, just as by squirming or doubling on his track he thinks he can best evade pursuit. For instance, when Mr. Underwood showed that the ark would not contain more than a fractional part of the animals, to say nothing of the "fodder" necessary to keep them alive during the wet spell, Braden attempted to prove that the ark was large enough by asserting that there were only a few species on earth then, and that they have differentiated since. Of course such a statement convinced the intelligent people in the audience that the man was either an ignoramus or a charlatan, or both. The fact is that he was not ignorant of what he was doing, but he was aware that the Christian portion of the audience knew nothing about evolution, and would believe whatever he might tell them. In a few words Mr. Underwood exposed the sophistry by stating that while the ark went to sea only about three thousand years ago, the present status of species is substantially what it was hundreds of thousands of years ago.

Mr. Braden, as a rough, a cowboy, a gambler, or a "holy terror," would be no enigma. But as he is none of these, in fact, but a minister of the gospel, there is an apparent discrepancy between his manners and methods and his profession that keeps one all at sea while listening to and trying to understand him. He has many of the symptoms of a low character, while assuming all the virtues of a saint. One minute he is talking about the "brazen infamy" of saying that the Bible contains bad teachings and records of cruelties and crimes committed under the alleged command of God, and the next he is resorting to bald-headed lying and misrepresentation of men and things in order to evade, to squirm out of, to wriggle around, a point made by his opponent, that could be expected only in a man utterly devoid of a sense of honesty and right. He is evidently in the wrong business. . . . If he had gone into law instead of gospel he would have succeeded as a third-rate pettifogger, but as a minister of any gospel that has any influence in the present age among free and enlightened people he is a failure. Hence, seeing that the modern spirit of Freethought has lifted the world out of the condition of theological serfdom, he frets and fumes about Infidelity, and it would not be surprising if he should become insane upon the subject. Even now one cannot avoid feeling at times that Braden foolishly imagines himself the son of Mary, and that Jesus is an upstart who will have to leave the throne and give him a chance as soon as he gets through "skinning Infidels" in Oregon and California.

The "champion" got terribly vexed at Mr. Underwood for charging that the Bible sanctioned polygamy. It didn't, and he knew. Solomon, in his opinion, was all right until he went to hear "Bob" Ingersoll lecture on the "Mistakes of Moses," and then he went over to free love, "'n' me 'n' God give him up to the Infidels." He proved that there was no polygamy in the Bible by the statement that he had "been married twice, both wives are dead, and I'm no polygamist, sir, and I defy you to prove the contrary." Five times in two days he repeated that argument, always being particular to add that "both wives are dead." The statement was so palpable an announcement that he was in the market again that it invariably caused a titter, and it looked as if the audience thought that if Braden had been a polygamist his wives might have lived longer.

As the debate wore on, the "champion's" followers got nervous and irritable. Underwood was quietly rubbing their hair the wrong way, and while they couldn't spit fire at him, they made it hot for those around them. Braden, instead of burying the Secular Union, as he advertised in Silverton he would do, found it at the end of the battle so lively a corpse that he was glad to get away from it. His employers could not obtain a dollar for him from any church save his own, and instead of going out a conqueror with a load of spoils, he departed poorer than he came, with none so poor as to do him reverence.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

R. B. WESTBROOK, LL.D., PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary ..... 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
OFFO WETTSTEIN, Treasurer ..... Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com. .... 120 Lexington ave., New York
MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com., 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll, ex-President,
T. B. Wakeman, "
Samuel P. Putnam, "

James Parton,	E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Horace Seaver,
Charles Watts,	A. B. Bradford,	Leonard Geiger,
Lucy N. Colman,	Juliet H. Severance,	Mrs. M. J. Olds,
Photius Fisk,	J. H. Burnham,	Mattie P. Krekel,
Win. Redfield,	J. A. Smith,	James Wardwell,
H. P. Mason,	W. L. Willis,	M. M. Secor,
Thos. J. Truss,	W. W. Forwood,	N. D. Goodell,
G.A.F. de Lespinasse,	Roman Staley,	H. L. Boyer,
		Daniel A. Aelr.

SACERDOTAL ENCROACHMENT.

A short time ago a preacher in Selma, Cal., delivered a sermon on temperance, Prohibition, etc., in which he said: "We have laws to punish the man who steals our property; but we have no law to prevent people from working on Sunday. It is right that the thief be punished; but I have more sympathy for that man than I have for him that works on Sunday."

Recent utterances of the clergy of Chicago are in the same line. At a meeting of the Sabbath Association of Illinois the Rev. C. S. Mandeville, in his opening address, likened the God-made Sabbath and the man-made Sabbath to constitutional and statutory law. The latter merely confirms the former. The decalogue in which the command to observe the Sabbath is given is God's constitutional law. The speaker's conclusions were that if the law of the Sabbath is a divine law universal mankind has an inalienable right to its enjoyment; that the law is indefinite as to time and is as obligatory on the present as past ages, and that the holy Sabbath should be protected by the civil law of the land.

The Rev. Dr. Evarts said that Sabbath observance is the question of questions, and the coming conflict is between the Sabbath and open Atheism. The rebellion of the masses in the cities against the Sabbath is as much open rebellion against the law of the land as the rebellion of the South.

The Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts made a long address in which he advocated, not local option or state interference, but a United States law making a crime of all kinds of Sunday labor or recreation. He would especially stop the running of mail and passenger trains on Sunday and close the post-office. One passage of the address was as follows: "'But,' you say, 'what if a father, hastening to the bedside of his dying son, should be stopped twenty-four hours on Sunday and so should be too late?' I answer that it is better that a son should die, now and then, without the comfort of his father's presence, which could not save his life, than that hundreds of railroad men should die every year, in more senses than one, through the exhaustion and demoralization of their Sunday toil."

These utterances are not arguments in favor of a day of rest merely. They are special pleading for the sanctity of the Sabbath. The clergy do not demand a law enforcing Sunday as a holiday, but the Sabbath as a holy day—the Lord's day, as they are pleased to term it. They deny religious liberty. They claim that the law of God, as they interpret it, is superior to the law of man as interpreted by the founders of this republic. It is not their design, as Sabbath advocates, to proselytize; with them the question is settled, and they seek to enforce their opinions upon others regardless of belief. They do not, in their present character, ask a man's belief upon the subject of Sunday observance; they demand that he shall keep the Sabbath whether he believes in it or not. If the clergy were merely to exhort their fellow believers to keep Sunday as holy, no Secularist could object; it would be but the exercise of their religious liberty. When they seek the aid of the law to compel all to observe it alike, it is infringing upon the religious liberties of others. It is, as President Westbrook calls it, "an encroachment of sacerdotalism." Against this particular kind of encroachment the Seventh Demand of Secularism was formulated, namely, "that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed." And while Secularists are demanding the repeal of all present Sabbath laws, it behooves them to look to it, still more earnestly, that the present volume of Sabbath statutes be not added to instead of diminished. The outlook is for more instead of less religious legislation.

In view of these facts, can any one fail to see the imperative demand for such an organization as the American Secular Union, and the necessity for its generous support?

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

Perhaps I am too impatient for the building of our grand temple of progress—the organization of Secularism; but the farther I go into this noble work, the more I see the necessity for it.

The old is fast passing away and the new is taking its place. Construction must follow destruction, as a necessity, if true progress is expected. What would the destruction in the South have accomplished if construction had not followed? We see the language, thought, and motives of a people changed in the short space of a quarter of a century from a slow-going, primitive ignorant race to a progressive, ideal people, breathing the spirit of American industry.

I find in the West that the battle against the creeds has been fought and won. The enemy have surrendered and are only waiting for an opportunity to take the train of Secular thought to the golden city which science is building. There may be yet a few slight skirmishes, but this will serve rather to spice the zeal of the cause than to retard our progress. It seems to me as if half the gain is lost by not having a permanent organization at every point where a lecture is a success. I know our brave iconoclasts, those who went to the front and fought the fierce but victorious battles, could not do this. Their time is too valuable, their services too much needed on the border to stop and attend to this. Besides, it is not always that the best trained soldier is the best statesman; neither is it true that the best image breaker is the best organizer. They have prepared the way for those who follow to do an effectual and a lasting work. My dear brothers and sisters in this grandest of causes, let us see if a mild but courageous effort will not strengthen some of the many faint hearts we find hoping and waiting for a more convenient time.

To make a Secular society attractive and cohesive good music must be called into use. To this end I use the Franklin Square Song Collection, No's. 1 and 2, Harper Brothers, New York. Of the two hundred songs and hymns in each, fifty per cent of the songs may be consistently utilized by our Unions.

I find it a good plan to actually take hold and show a willing and anxious people, as well as to tell them, how to organize and carry on a Secular Union. So ill-defined are the aims and uses of our Secular work that many good people, having given it little thought, do not understand what is required. I find also that a stranger, and one making it his business, can do more in a community than a resident. By a judicious manner of soliciting he may collect funds and aid a society so that it may afterward aid him, often drawing funds, by means of attractive entertainments, from church people.

"Keep working, 'tis better
Than sitting aside,
And dreaming and sighing
And waiting the tide;
In life's earnest battle

They only prevail
Who daily march onward,
And never say fail."

D. G. CROW.

THE BIBLE—WHAT IS IT?

No universal truth contradicts any other universal truth. A statement found in the Bible, claimed to be inspired and therefore universally true, ought not to conflict with any other statement in the same book. Nevertheless, in hundreds, not to say thousands, of passages the Bible is contradictory. Read:

I have seen God face to face.... No man hath seen God at any time.... I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne.... Whom no man hath seen, nor can see.

With God all things are possible.... And the Lord was with Judah, and he drove out the inhabitants of the mountain; but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, because they had chariots of iron.

I am the Lord, I change not. I will not go back, neither will I repent.... And God repented of the evil that he said he would do unto them, and he did it not.

There is no respect of persons with God.... Jacob have I loved, and Esau have I hated.... Is not my way equal?.... For whosoever hath, to him shall be given; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath.

I am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children.... The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father.

God is not a man that he should lie.... The Lord hath put a lying spirit into the mouths of all these thy prophets.... It is impossible for God to lie.... If the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have deceived that prophet.

Take no thought for the morrow.... But if any provide not for his own, especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel.

All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword.... He that hath no sword, let him sell his garment and buy one.

Provide neither gold nor silver nor scrip for your journey, neither shoes nor yet staves.... Take nothing save a staff only; no scrip, no bread, no money, but be shod with sandals.

Be not afraid of them that kill the body.... And after these things Jesus would not walk in Jewry, because the Jews sought to kill him.

Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.... The new moons and Sabbaths I cannot away with; it is iniquity.

All the women children keep alive for yourselves.... Thou shalt not commit adultery.... Then said the Lord unto me, Go yet, love a woman, an adulteress.... Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge.

If a man hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, he cannot be my disciple.... Honor thy father and mother; husbands love your wives: Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer.

I counsel thee to keep the king's commandment.... But the midwives feared God, and did not as the king commanded.... Let every soul be subject to the higher powers.... Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, answered and said, Be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

.... For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to evil.... And the rulers were gathered together against the Lord and against his Christ.

.... The powers that be are ordained of God.... Both Herod and Pontius Pilate.... For they are God's ministers.... And Herod set him at naught and mocked him; and Philate gave sentence; and the rulers also derided him.

And it was the third hour, and they crucified him.... It was about the sixth hour, and he saith, Shall I crucify your king?

The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene unto the sepulchre.

.... The first day of the week came Mary Magdalene and the other Mary.... Mary Magdalene and Mary, the mother of James, and Salome brought sweet spices.... It was Mary Magdalene and Mary, the mother of James, and other women that were with them.

And the men which journeyed with him [Paul] stood speechless, hearing a voice, but seeing no man.... And when we were all fallen to the earth, I heard a voice. And they that were with me heard not the voice.

Therefore Michal, the daughter of Saul, had no child unto the day of her death.... The five sons of Michal, the daughter of Saul.

And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and he moved David against them to say, Go, number Israel.... And Satan provoked David to number Israel.

And David's heart smote him after he had numbered the people.... And David said unto the Lord, I have sinned greatly in that I have done.... David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord all the days of his life, save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite.

Abraham had two sons.... By faith Abraham offered up Isaac, his only begotten son.... Then again Abraham took a wife, and her name was Keturah.... Keturah, Abraham's concubine.

I bear witness of myself yet my record is true.... If I bear witness of myself my witness is not true.

By the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified.... The doers of the law shall be justified.... A man is not justified by the works of the law.... Ye see, then how that by works a man is justified.

The trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised.... He that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more.... I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God.... The dead know not anything, neither have they any more a reward.... For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised.... They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise.

My yoke is easy and my burden is light.... All that will live godly in Jesus Christ shall suffer persecution.... There shall no evil happen to the just.... Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake.

Blessed is the man that feareth the Lord. Wealth and riches shall be in his house.... Blessed be ye poor.... In the house of the righteous is much treasure.... Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth.

.... I have been young and now am old, yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread.... And the beggar died, and was carried by angels into Abraham's bosom.

Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace.

.... In much wisdom is much grief, and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow.

It shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days.... Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, yea, are mighty in power?

Foolishness is bound up in the heart of a child, but the rod of correction will drive it far from him.... Though thou shouldst bray a fool in a mortar, yet would not his foolishness depart from him.

The rich man's wealth is his strong tower.... Woe unto you that are rich.... The destruction of the poor is his poverty.... Blessed be ye poor.... Give me neither poverty nor riches, lest I deny thee, or lest I be poor and steal.

A pamphlet entitled "One Hundred and Forty-four Self-contradictions of the Bible" has been compiled, giving chapter and verse for all these and many more quotations. It contains 72 pages, selling for fifteen cents, and will be sent from FREETHOUGHT office to any address on receipt of that sum.

He Did Not Know the Lord's Prayer.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In the Jamieson-Braden debate at Paola, Kansas, a serio-comic scene, which will never be forgotten by those who witnessed it, occurred the fourth night of the debate. Elder Braden, in his characteristic style, had asserted, night after night, that Christians had everywhere, and in all ages, been the patrons of learning, science, art, civilization. When Jamieson showed by standard historical data that each and every statement was the exact opposite of the truth, it made no difference to the "champion" nor his Christian backers. The elder imagined that by tedious repetition he established his assertions. Jamieson thought he would be fully justified in performing a flank movement on his adversary, and at the same time give the audience an object lesson. It came about in this wise:

ELDER BRADEN: "Infidels are ignorant of history, ignorant of science, ignorant of art, ignorant of the Bible. Did you ever hear an Infidel quote scripture? I have heard them try, but never knew one that could quote the Bible correctly. He may be able to give the substance of the text he tries to quote, but he cannot quote it word for word, just as it is."

JAMIESON: "My opponent has asserted that Infidels are ignorant—Christians the only sensible people on the globe. He says we are so ignorant that we cannot even quote the Bible without blundering. Mr. Chairman, I never knew a class of people so pains-taking, studious, and accurate as the Freethinkers in all their quotations of history, Christian doctrine, and the Bible. Misquotations of the Bible by Christians are so common that they are scarcely noticed, while if an Infidel is caught tripping in repeating Bible texts the welkin rings with Christians crowding over Infidel ignorance. We are treated to this sort of music in this debate, and yet I have not misquoted in a single instance. Perhaps my friend here knows a great deal more about the Bible than we do, but I doubt it. [A quick, disgusted look by Elder Braden.] Yes, elder, I doubt it. I do not bet, but I have a silver half dollar in my pocket, curiously enough, which I will give to the poorest widow in Paola if you will stand before this audience and quote correctly a small portion of your Bible, and I will give you the time from my half hour to perform the feat. This is fair. I do not want to be hard on you; will give you an easy lesson. For an example, that portion of your Bible with which you profess to be most familiar, the Lord's prayer. Surely, one who has had so much to say about our Infidel ignorance, can repeat that prayer, and thus show us a sample of your own intimate acquaintance with the scriptures. No, elder you dare not ("dare not," you know, are favorite words of yours) arise, and in the presence of this vast audience repeat the Lord's prayer. Is it possible that you do not know it? Oh, of course I believe you can give us the substance of it, but you cannot repeat it here, and now, 'just as it is, word for word.' If you think you can you are welcome to my time." [At this point Elder Braden arose amid applause, crossing his arms on his breast a la Napoleon Bonaparte.]

JAMIESON: "All right! Here, Mr. Chairman, is the Bible [handing the chairman, Attorney George Kingsley, a churchman, a Bible] and there in the sixth chapter of Matthew is the Lord's prayer. Will you kindly look it over while the elder repeats it?"

CHAIRMAN KINGSLEY (Looking over the page): "Where is it?" (Great laughter and cheers at Kingsley's confusion.)

JAMIESON: "The audience will please make due allowance for our chairman. He is not supposed to be as familiar with this book as with Blackstone. [Renewed laughter.] There it is, Mr. Chairman [pointing to the ninth verse]; all ready."

ELDER BRADEN: "'Our Father who art in heaven,'"—

JAMIESON: "Wrong, elder!" (Uproarious laughter, lasting several seconds, and renewed again and again. During the tumult several ministers who sat near each other were heard to exclaim, "Oh, this is too bad, too bad to make light of so sacred a subject! Oh, why did he try to say it?")

ELDER BRADEN (beseechingly): "How is it, then?"

JAMIESON (blandly): "'Our Father which art in heaven.' 'Which,' not 'who.'"

ELDER BRADEN: "That is a grammatical error, and I have a right to correct a grammatical error."

JAMIESON: "What! in a book where no error is found! In God's word, which is perfect! Correct an infallible guide!"

ELDER BRADEN: "I will go on with it."

JAMIESON: "You are welcome to; but I am sorry to say the widow has lost her half dollar. And you will fail again."

ELDER BRADEN: "'Our Father which [viciously] art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth.'"—

JAMIESON: "Wrong again, elder."

ELDER BRADEN: "Is not that right?"

JAMIESON: "No; in earth."

ELDER BRADEN: "'As it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive our trespassers.'"— JAMIESON: "Wrong once more, elder. The Bible says, if I remember right, and I think I do, 'forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors.' That is harder to do, you see."

CHAIRMAN KINGSLEY: "Mr. Jamieson is right. 'Debts,' elder."

ELDER BRADEN: "'And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.' There! The Bible says, 'Answer a fool according to his folly,' and I have done it."

JAMIESON: "Only you did not succeed in answering. I hope we will hear no more about infidel ignorance in this debate. We are now ready to proceed with the argument."

NOTE. A commercial traveler, with Christian proclivities, went over to Ottawa and reported that a Christian in Paola was demolishing an Infidel in debate. Mr. Bartlett said, "I don't believe it! Can't believe what Christians say even when they tell the truth. Let us hire a livery, get up a load and drive over" (twenty-eight miles). Those Liberals were present that night, and can attest. Mr. Bartlett remarked after the debate, "What did I tell you! Can't believe Christians!"

The foregoing is substantially correct, as I very distinctly remember, having frequently talked it over with others, and ever with much merriment.
J. T. HAUGHEY.

Eureka.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed you will find $5. Please apply $2 to my subscription to FREETHOUGHT for next year, and the remaining $3 I will donate to help defray the expenses of your January meetings. I hope the Liberals of this coast, and especially those of San Francisco, since the meeting is to be held in their midst, will wake up from their slumber and make the meetings a success.

Could you not occasionally insert an article in regard to the mismanagement of Girard College? Now, with Judge Westbrook at the head of the American Secular Union, some effort ought to be made to bring those religious hell-hounds to justice. I, for one, am willing to contribute my share towards defraying the expenses.

With feelings of pleasure I have found among your contributors the name of my old friend H. L. Knight. He is a man with many good ideas.
Yours fraternally,
ROBERT GUNTHER.

Eureka, Cal.

From Supervisor Rodgers of Santa Cruz.

To the Editors of Freethought:

During the election campaign I was away from home a good deal and so busy with politics and other things that I got considerably behind with my Freethought reading. But for the past week or two I have been trying to catch up, and I must say that I am much gratified at the brightening outlook all along the line of battle. I am especially pleased over the bright prospect for "our paper." That FREETHOUGHT is to continue on and be enlarged, with the beginning of the new year, is gratifying indeed. Hope you may yet reap at least a share of the deserved reward for the good start you are giving the work on this coast. I shall gladly continue to do all I can to help you on to success.

Now that Brother Putnam is again on this coast I am already looking forward with pleasant anticipations to the time when we can again have him here at Boulder Creek to give us another course of lectures.

I am also glad that you have started a movement towards organizing our scattered California forces, in January next. I sincerely hope it may prove a grand success. I hope, also, that I may be able to be with you for two or three days about the time of the Paine celebration.

I am also much gratified to note that you have eliminated the liquor dealers' advertisements from the columns of FREETHOUGHT. When they first appeared I regretted to see them because I was afraid it would hurt its circulation, but did not find any fault because I knew you would need the ready cash they would bring you in. Hoping to soon be able to send you a remittance, and with best wishes, I remain yours sincerely and fraternally,
W. S. RODGERS.

Boulder Creek, Cal.

For the Meetings.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I am well pleased with your paper; it is large enough for me. Your condensed "History of the Week," to one who has not much time for reading, with "New and Notes" added, is value for my money. You will please put me down for one dollar toward the hall expenses in January, which I will hand you the first time I am in the city.

Haywards, Cal.

JOHN ROBERTSON.

The Sinews.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed find five dollars—two dollars for FREETHOUGHT and three dollars for the meetings. Hoping both may be successful,
Sonoma, Cal.
Yours truly,
ED. WEGNER.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I hereby authorize you to set my name and the name of my son, Wm. Parsons, both of San Jose, Cal., among those who favor state organization. And to help defray expenses I promise, for myself, to hand in one dollar in February, when I call at your office to renew my subscription.
San Jose, Cal.
SAMOS PARSONS.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places returning from the East:

Scappoose.....Or., Dec.	2	Stella.....Or., Dec.	15-16
Port Townsend....W.T., "	4-6	No. Yamhill.... "	18-19
Snohomish....." "	8-10	Silverton.....Or., "	22-23

CHARLES WATTS intends making a lecture tour through Kansas, Colorado, and Utah next January and February. Friends on those routes desiring lectures at that time from Mr. Watts should write him at once, as he is now filling up his list of engagements. Address him direct, 282 Sumach street, Toronto, Ont., Canada.

PROF. D. C. SEYMOUR, is now in California, and is prepared to lecture. His lectures are illustrated with large colored drawings, skeletons, lithographs, colored stereopticon views, etc. Liberals desiring the services of Professor Seymour may address him in care of this office. He makes no charge for lectures. The friends are only asked to provide a hall, church, or school-house, and the audience will remunerate the speaker.

PROF. D. G. CROW will fill engagements to lecture at points between St. Louis, Mo., and Denver, Col. Terms on application. Secularism, Science, and Religion are general terms covering the subjects of his lectures. State time and give particulars. Address him at Sabetha, Kan., until further notice. Professor Crow will carry the light of FREETHOUGHT and other Liberal luminaries to those who desire to find the truth, and will receive subscriptions.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses.....	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons..	3.40
" Gold do., $5 and.....	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz.	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles.....	.35
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6....	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one....	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings.....	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives..	1.75	6 Guitar Strings.....	.75
" Forks.....	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to.....	10.00
" Teaspoons..	1.70

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded. Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see back numbers of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE. Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Through treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting. 4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling. AGENTS Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25; Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50; difference is in paper and binding. MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics. Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D., Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question. Cloth, 75 cts. Address this office.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping. PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills 414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

he Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS, CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.
33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for
the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands. 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

SECULAR THOUGHT.

A Journal of Liberal Thought.

The Official Organ of the Canadian Secular Union.

Published Weekly. $2 per Year.

CHARLES. WATTS, Editor,

31 Adelaide st. East, Toronto,
Ont., Canada.

Read what Colonel Ingersoll says: "I am much pleased with Secular Thought—with its form, arrangement, and contents—above all, with its spirit. It is splendid. I don't see how it could be better. I read it with the greatest of pleasure." COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Read what B. F. Underwood says: "Mr. Watts publishes a solid paper. Secular Thought is the best Liberal paper that now comes to me."
B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Read what Helen H. Gardener says: "I heartily congratulate our Canadian friends upon the fact that they are represented by Secular Thought, a paper of which they can be justly proud, and which they need never hesitate to hand to their most delicate-minded friends, however religious
they may be." HELEN H. GARDENER.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and
Development of the Canon. By Bronson C
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say
infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to
those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior
Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address:
Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San
Francisco, Cal.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY.

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including various notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Church-
man," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages.
Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1.50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration of Independence, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron
D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church
and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery
Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington,
Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception;
Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness
to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagran-
cy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath
from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sab-batic Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan
Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers,
Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday
Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald,
504 Kearny st. San Francisco.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 50.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - DECEMBER 15, 1888

THE Evening Post drives the nail in with one blow, thus: "The people do not go to church because they do not believe in religion, and that is all there is of it."

THE Investigator says that Mrs. Annie Besant, the distinguished Liberal lecturer and writer, has been elected to the London School Board, receiving the highest number of votes cast for any candidate.

A HUNDRED different reasons for the falling off in church attendance are given by as many different people, but they are nearly unanimous on the main point, namely, that church attendance is falling off.

THE owner of the Santa Barbara Summerland tract is putting on the cinch. Lots now cost $35. Those who are raised out of this Summerland may still console themselves with their prospects in the Ineffable Yet to Be.

THE fund to fight the Girard will case is approaching $1,000, and President Westbrook is preparing his brief. It will be triumph enough for one man's life if he succeeds in banishing the ghosts from the halls of Girard College.

IT is related that when God observed the wickedness which his children had got into through the interference of Satan, it repented him that he had made man. There is something rather strange in the fact that the creation of the devil never struck Jehovah as a mistake.

THE pastor of Christ church, Oswego, N. Y., has disappeared, and it is pretty well settled that he has committed suicide. The Rev. Mr. Talmage does not seem to enjoy the co-operation of his brother clergymen in his attempt to demonstrate that only Infidels are ever guilty of self-destruction.

A SNEAK-THIEF broke into the house of a New York priest and stole a church indicator, a device used to tally the congregation at church and to show whether the door-tender and the ushers are honest. When the thief found out what the instrument was he expressed himself as "broke up." He said: "If the honesty of church people is doubted, so that they must have an indicator to find out what the collections should amount to, what can you expect from the likes of me? I give up. I am guilty."

OUR president elect, Mr. Harrison, has so much regard for Sunday that he will not open letters on that day. Such piety as his is not the sign of intellectual greatness, but then it doesn't need a great man for president. An annual message that means nothing, a Thanksgiving proclamation that means less, a veto or two, and an occasional message of congratulation to the pope, are inside the scope of almost anybody's abilities, and they come cheap at $50,000 per annum!

THE Bostonese have just erected a monument to Crisp Attucks, or Crisp Squattucks, the first victim of the Revolution. Now the Native Sons of the Golden West have made a statue of James W. Marshall, the alleged discoverer of gold in California. Iconoclasts say that Attucks or Squattucks was a Natick Indian, and old Californians declare that Marshall didn't discover the gold any more than several other persons; but the enemy of patriotism who shall rise up and claim that he was a Piute brave will be unpopular, to say the least.

NEWS AND NOTES.

The rainy season is setting in, and the landscapes of Oregon present a somewhat melancholy picture. The mists and the mud are everywhere. Now and then, however, the golden sunshine weaves a kaleidoscope of beauty amidst the clouds and mountains and rivers, and the dark background is relieved with wondrous animation.

Portland is about one of the most difficult places on the continent for the Liberal worker. There is no homogeneity of the elements. Things take a different shape every time I visit it, "now dark, now bright." It is one of those places where circumstances alter cases immensely. It is like the weather, and to predict rain or shine is impossible. Several comrades were absent, and as in unity there is strength, much was not accomplished which might have been. However, advance has been made. Friend Whitfield, friend Staley, friend Lewis, C. W. Saunders, Mrs. Carrie Haight, and others of the old guard, were on the ground. The attendance at the three lectures was fair, although the sunshine gave us little encouragement. Old friends from unexpected quarters met me, and fate, on the whole, was kind. The clouds were rifted with many a sparkle of hope. Dr. W. J. Taylor, whom I met at Port Angeles, a confrere of Secretary Stevens in days gone by, and Mrs. Taylor, both of the heart and hope of Freethought, were present, and they did much to aid the work. The doctor is the "jolly doctor" that gave Professor Seymour such solid comfort on his trail, and I don't wonder that he found him an agreeable companion. The doctor would drive away the "blues" if any one could, with his constant good will and happy nature, and Mrs. Taylor is of the same quality. I was fortunate in their co-operation. I had also the pleasure of meeting C. A. Reed, who had charge of Central Hall in which I spoke. Mr. Reed, I believe, is a Christian Spiritualist. I did not know but I might find in him a stiff Presbyterian in the halo of Spiritualism, but he is a genial philosopher. • He takes the Bible, I reckon, in a kind of Swedenborgian way, and don't accept anything unless, somehow or other, he can make it "pan out" the metal of humanity. He proposes to take in everything, both new and old, and belief in God is not a dogma to him but a fountain of exalted feeling. I don't think he takes any stock in the dry bones of theology, but wants to get at what is living. He and Professor Seymour have had an interesting "set to" in FREETHOUGHT, and I hope the sparks will continue to fly. When one grants the reality of a spiritual world, much can be said on both sides of the God question. It is a battle in the skies, and, whatever the outcome, the swords of the combatants make a brilliant display.

Sunday afternoon, by the kind invitation of Dr. Taylor and other Spiritualist friends, I attended a medium's circle at Grand Army Hall. Of course I saw nothing but what, to me, was perfectly natural and could be explained by the laws of the human mind. Several articles of daily use—pocketbook, knife, ring, etc.—were placed on a table in the centre of the hall, and the medium, taking one of these in her hand, read character, history, and destiny—sometimes quite accurately and sometimes not. This does not betoken spiritual presence, only magnetic information and the Yankee gift of "guessing." However, the Spiritualists are bright and entertaining friends, and the flowers of humanity bloom, whatever may be the price of lots in Summerland.

On Sunday evening the gentle lady singer who kindly consented to brighten the waiting moments with music announced "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and requested the "congregation" to "join in." On hearing this I was wafted back to primeval times, and wondered how any mortal mind could sing that song to-day, it was such an absolute surrender of individuality. However, the rhythm of the music floated the dogma far out of the way. I wonder if the deft musician knew what was coming after that orthodox hymn? It made me realize the immense chasm between modern thought and ancient feeling. "Nearer, My God, to Thee" is not the song of science to-day, for it is equivalent to saying "nearer to Ignorance, nearer to thee."

The work and the days have been profitable at Portland, although I have missed seeing so many friends—C. Beal, A. F. Neunert, O. Jeldness, and others, who were imperatively called away by business. There is still the same cordial greeting at the home of the Saunders' where I have had so much rest from toil. One gentle presence is gone—and deeply do we miss his smile and cheer—Grandfather Saunders, who was truly Nature's nobleman. There was never a more devoted friend, a more ardent lover of humanity. He was sunlight itself, in his unselfish spirit. His wife, Mrs. F. A. Saunders, and son, Mr. C. W. Saunders, and Miss Orlie, the daughter, still make beautiful the memory of his life, and the hearthstone is bright with Freethought. So life and death, joy and sorrow, make the warp and woof of existence. No day without its shadow, no shadow without its stars of light.

I see by FREETHOUGHT, in a letter from Mrs. Kate Parker, that the home of my friend D. Edson Smith has been touched by the mystic wing of death. I remember the gentle home amid the fruit trees and sunshine of California, and the hospitality of the dear friend who has gone. I would place the flower of memory on the grave whose gloom is lost in the glory of virtue unforgotten. To cherish the dead is the heart of noble living.

Tuesday afternoon the clouds in the western sky were golden, and flooded the snowy heights with splendor, the bosom of the river, wood and field, city and arching bridge; and on the boat Lurline, in the softly vanishing afternoon and radiant twilight, I journey to Vancouver. A lovely voyage, this; Mts. Hood and Adams, from cloudy regions, flashing their majestic faces like serene and mighty gods. The broad stream is like a mirror, rippled only by the advancing boat. The rugged shores gleam with lights. At early evening I arrive at Vancouver, one of the oldest towns on the Columbia, quiet, almost, as a New England village, but destined to be a thriving mart when "war's magnificently stern array" is succeeded by the music of industry. It is a good place to locate, for those who would build for a prosperous future. The fort is here, and the guns go off morning and evening, but these are not the signals of progress. When the military post is removed the chances for business are better. The natural transportation facilities of Vancouver are equally as good as those of Portland, and in the growth of the country they will be made available. There are excellent farming lands about Vancouver, and it is one of the finest fruit-producing sections on the coast.

There are plenty of Liberals at Vancouver, but some are indifferent. A few, however, are earnest, and they make a host in themselves. There is not much danger of a retreat so long as this vanguard pushes through storm and sun. Mr. and Mrs. Chas. W. Cushing and Eugene Berth were the first to greet me. Cushing has his workshop located in a Methodist church, and if all churches could be thus appropriated I don't think much harm would be done. The world would put on a brighter look. In friend Cushing's home I find the cordial western life whose roots were once in far New England. The Yankee enterprise is here. Mrs. Cushing has lived upon a ranch where the wild beasts do roam, and has vindicated a woman's right to a part of Uncle Sam's broad domain. Cushing is a busy man, as the following notice on his shop-door indicates: "Hours for business—Beggars, 7 to 9; Bank agents, 9 to 12; Church subscriptions, 12 to 3; Politicians, 3 to 7; Office hours in the night time." Now that election is over the politicians may draw off, but I don't believe there will be much let up on the church subscriptions. But I rather guess friend Cushing won't build many churches. He can make better use of them for a paint shop. The difference is that preachers paint airy nothings, while our friend decorates the solid material.

There was a good number present Tuesday evening, among them a clergyman taking notes rapidly. They say he is pretty liberal and grants that Infidels are good men. I think that minister is on the road to heaven, whether he ever has a harp or not, or wings.

Wednesday I spent at the barracks with comrade Berth, to whom Freethought is an enthusiasm indeed, and who is a cheery companion, with his bright outlook. Soldier life was once more a reality. Many Liberals are in this post, and Liberal books are scattered about. The fort is beautifully situated. The morning of our visit was lovely with sunshine, and the prospects on every side were enchanting. Mt. Hood touched the skies with glowing forehead. The Columbia rolled like a jeweled stream, the islands shone with green and brown foliage; beyond, the hills were warm in the glistening rays; the flag floated and rippled in the breezy lustre. The big bear seemed to enjoy the generous autumn. The 'coon began to frolic when the noonday sun threw off the chill. Toward evening the band, which is one of the finest in the service, gave a concert, though the winds began to bluster and the softness of the morning surged to a stormy close. The martial music, sweeping over the wide expanse and mingling with the winds, stirred every pulse of the being. The old days came back, of marching men, and banners in the air, and the strife that shook a continent, and the victory that made a new world of hope and progress. I enjoyed this brief, bright glimpse of the military field and the gallant company ready for the strains of peace or the thunders of battle.

Sergeant Meyers, Eugene Berth, M. Healy, R. F. Abbott, Frank Thomas, Wm. Straub, C. A. Hole, H. Swan, and others, are our comrades of the army who will keep the flag above the cross. Our friends, D. A. Cushing and E. J. Cushing, father and son, the first to give welcome in the summer days, have the same warm heart in winter weather.

S. D. Bryan greeted me, from his ranch ten miles away. He has exchanged the soldier's life for the occupation of father Adam, and cultivates the ground. He has just set out five hundred fruit trees, so he can eat the apple to his heart's content and enjoy the Eden which he has made himself. The silver wings of Cupid are floating in the air. I have an invitation to visit that ranch, and shall do so in the golden days to come. Bryan is an unswerving Freethinker, and his home will always be where truth and liberty reign.

F. W. Bier introduced me at the meetings. He is recently from the East, and has obeyed Horace Greeley's injunction to "go West." He can't get much nearer to the setting sun, and if he remains at Vancouver he will be one of our strongest allies there. He has been trained in the school of Freethought.

Scott Sweatland, H. Leaser, M. Quinn, J. O. Smith, R. Burley, S. Preston, J. Perkins, L. T. Franklin, Wm. Wollenweber, J. Crawford, G. Harvey, G. Bohmer, are also of this frontier troop, and the camp-fires burn bright and the bugle call is sounding.

There was an increased attendance at the second lecture, and there is heart and hope for the future. A Secular Union is established here with good membership, and the earnestness and generosity of friends are a guarantee of success.

Mrs. Chas. Cushing encouraged my pilgrim way with music, the spirit of the light guitar. It was excellent, and I shall ask for more when again I touch these sunny shores, for music

"doth take us far away
Into the regions dim of rapture."

There must be dreams and melodies amidst the fields of thought and toil, or the task of life would be too great a burden.

Thus the campaign has been delightful and invigorating at this point, where the Roman church once held almost undisputed sway, and where its cathedral and college still tower. It laid claim to a portion of the land upon which the government buildings are erected, worth nearly a hundred thousand dollars, but the courts have just decided against it. But the church owns five hundred acres of the finest land in the vicinity, which, eventually, must be worth millions of dollars. It holds a good hand yet, even though it isn't a "straight flush," which is what it wanted. But the courts gave it a bit of a "cold deck." SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Portland, Or., Nov. 30, 1888.

If any of our subscribers desire to introduce FREETHOUGHT to their friends, they may have it sent six months to any address for 50 cents. Here is an opening. Drop a half dollar into it and see the list grow.

THE ENLARGED FREETHOUGHT.

We desire to keep it before our readers that beginning with January 1, 1889, FREETHOUGHT will contain Sixteen Pages, instead of twelve, in each issue, and every line will be filled with matter of interest. The enlargement will also give room for a greater variety, and we shall be able to present a paper as near perfect as our capacities will permit.

It has been complained that with only twelve pages FREETHOUGHT is too small for the price; with sixteen pages that complaint cannot be made. The paper will give the subscriber's money's worth every week.

What we want now is an extended circulation. We have a good list, but it ought to be doubled. This can be effected by several different methods. Each subscriber may obtain another, or every second subscriber may obtain two. The result will be the same in either case.

Last April Mr. H. P. Stone, of Oakland, offered to be one of one hundred to furnish ten subscribers at $2 each, and pay for them. Mr. A. H. Schou, of the same city, volunteered to be one of ten to furnish fifty names at $2 each, and contribute $100 in payment for the same. Some half a dozen friends joined Mr. Stone, but Mr. Schou still stands alone. Perhaps it would be well to revive this scheme and put it again before our readers about January 1, as we now have more than twice as many subscribers as we had at the time it was broached.

We do not need to remind the patrons of FREETHOUGHT that a larger paper means larger expense and calls for larger support. Four more pages increase the size one-third and add one-third to the cost of producing and mailing. But if the interest increases, and our list grows proportionately, we shall survive.

Friend, reader, patron, do what you can to extend the circulation of the Enlarged FREETHOUGHT.

THE CHURCH AND THE POOR.

When the Examiner reporter, in rags and tatters, was knocking about among the churches of San Francisco to discover whether or not poverty was welcome, he received the cold shoulder from the fashionable Protestants. When, however, he entered a Catholic cathedral, "his appearance failed to call forth remark or attract attention."

There is nothing strange about that statement. It is undoubtedly true. Not that the Catholic church loves the poor man more than does the Protestant; she merely hates rags and filth less, because more accustomed to them. As a matter of fact, she manufactures them, and the degraded wretch owes them to her influence more than to any other cause. She breeds them for him in all her strongholds. In Italy and Ireland and Spain, where the pope is well-nigh supreme, filth and faith are about all there is to the Catholic religion. Rome loves the rich man best because he pays better; it loves the poor man for what it can get out of him. He at least has a vote.

The Catholic church supports the orphan because some day he will be a voter; he will likewise be a prolific reproducer of his kind, and his children will be Catholics. They are wily rascals, these priests. They look ahead. Poverty benefits them as an epidemic does the undertaker. It furnishes them subjects for their Catholic factories, miscalled charitable institutions, supported by the state.

The church is beloved by the grasping monopolists and the oppressors of the poor. It keeps men ignorant and therefore in subjection to their bodily and spiritual masters. The church goes on breeding ignorance, and brutal wealth employs it at starvation wages. If sometimes ignorance revolts, as in the French Revolution, then the church and society point warningly to the result of loosening the restraints of religion and law.

Church and other charities, while they reach destitute people and do temporary good, are in the long run rather an evil than otherwise. They cover up and sometimes relieve poverty—like a plaster over a cancer—but they do not abolish it. If they were withheld—if the plaster were taken off—so that the real extent of suffering could be made manifest, something would be done in the way of social reform of permanent value. Charity merely whitewashes the sepulchre.

The humane aspect of Christianity is merely incidental—it is not fundamental. At heart the church is a fraud. It is charitable in self-defense, and it has no other merit. It assists the poor, as the morgue officials handle the dead, simply as a matter of business; and it has the same feeling for its subjects.

The mission of the church is to save men's souls from hell—about as useless a mission as that of guarding a last year's bird's-nest. Whatever of good there may be about it belongs not to the church, but to common humanity.

THE CALL.

Out of one hundred and fifty copies of the Call for a State Convention, about a dozen have been returned. This dozen contain over Two Hundred signatures. At this rate we shall have a big roll by January 1. There is no doubt that at least one thousand Freethinkers of the state will sign.

Friends who have obtained signatures will please forward them to the office of FREETHOUGHT during the next two weeks, so that the Call may be published the first of the New Year.

A FEW FACTS.

Clergymen do sometimes tell the truth. In their lamentations about the irreligion of this age, they often disclose facts worth public attention, and particularly interesting to those who favor a free mind in a free body.

At a clerical conference in this city recently it was stated that not one in ten of our young men ever go to church. They are relying on science, common sense, and experience for their guidance, and do not care to hear the wailing of the clergy in their behalf. They have learned that science and experience are best.

In Pittsburgh, Pa., a Rev. E. McL. Milligan has aired some truths worth general attention. He regards them as perfect horrors, but most Liberal minds will rejoice to know that they are actual and admitted facts. Here they are:

"The Constitution of the United States is not religious. It does not name or recognize God.

"The oath of the president does not name God.

"A treaty made with Tripoli expressly declares that this is not a Christian country, but a free country, in which the Turk is as free as the Christian.

"It puts the will of the people before the will of God.

"All citizens swear to support this Constitution, and no true believer can do so."

Now these are great truths. No man can deny them. And we rejoice accordingly that they are true; and no bigot and no bigotry can remove them.

All the armies of all the despots in the world march with the priest and the name of God in the van. All manner of misgovernment and oppression comes in the name of God. The republic alone is not without God, if there be one, but it is without, and above, and beyond all those who, in the name of God, hasten to set up wrong, robbery, villainy, and murder.

We indorse all that the reverend cleric asserts about our Constitution. We desire all others of his cloth to take notice of it, and guide themselves accordingly. We are pleased that our young men know it and prefer to follow Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin rather than Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

PRISCILLA AT THE POLLS.

Twenty thousand women voted in Boston, Mass., last Tuesday. The great question before them was whether or not the pope of Rome should run the schools of Massachusetts, and the women settled it in the negative. The anti-Catholic ticket was victorious by a good majority.

Who will now say that women should not vote?

THE following named persons have indicated their desire to help pay the expenses of the January meetings:

Robert Gunther.....$3	K. Parker.....$1
Ed. Wegner.....3	John Robinett.....1
Philip Cowen.....1	J. Robertson.....1
H. Replogle.....1	A friend.....1
A. Derming.....1	Samos Parsons.....1
Frank Butler.....1	Henry Kline.....1
Charles Kaiser.....1	E. M. Hansson.....1
Mrs. Rebecca Kaiser.....1	A. J. Andersen.....1
Henry Kaiser.....1

These are a few preliminary shots. They indicate that when the orators open fire on the assembled multitude the returns will be all that anyone can desire.

MR. B. R. TUCKER, editor of Liberty, Boston, is a rather irascible man, and difficult to satisfy. When the editor of the Truth Seeker took the trouble to vindicate, through the courts, the right of a citizen to make an affirmation without elevating the hand or foot, Mr. Tucker observed that this would gain him the gratitude of loafers. A few years ago Mr. Tucker refused to pay his poll tax, and lay in prison until somebody else paid it for him. If any other reformer had gone through the same experience Mr. Tucker would doubtless have said that the act should gain him the gratitude of dead-beats and paupers. There was no one out of jail, however, mean enough to make that remark.

THE Rev. John Dowie, the Australian faith-healer, has secured a local testimonial at last. A Mrs. Boone, who resides on Hyde street, says that a headache disappeared under the Rev. Mr. Dowie's ministrations, and that whereas her eyes were badly affected, she is now able to read with the assistance of a pair of glasses. It is not known whether Dowie furnished the glasses or not, but a cure that requires the co-operation of spectacles cannot by any means be called miraculous. Christ did not put a pair of specs on the blind man whom he anointed with clay and spittle and sent off to the pool of Siloam.

It seems to be a fact that the religious institutions of this state are assessed and that the tax is collected. A pair of black-dressed and black-hooded "sisters" exhibited a total lack of judgment one day last week by walking into the FREETHOUGHT office and soliciting a contribution to pay the taxes on some Catholic factory to which they were attached. We did not give them a nickel, and if they had known how little money we donate annually to religious purposes, it is probable that they would not have asked us for anything. Let them hustle as the rest of us do.

THE high hope raised by Mr. Austin Smith's gift of $50 last week has not yet ceased to brighten the prospect of FREETHOUGHT. We look into the vistas of the future and see their walls papered with copies of this journal, and a list of subscribers reaching from one end of the coast to the other, and spreading all over the Eastern Annex, to the wet side of Maine. And yet, holding Mr. Smith's example before our readers, we have not said, "Go thou and do likewise." This practice of an austere self-control will be the making or the breaking of us.

WE have to apologize to a number of able contributors for the non-appearance of their communications in FREETHOUGHT. And we can all the better sympathize with them for the reason that many of our own great thoughts have been hanging fire for some time awaiting the enlargement of the paper.

A NEW edition of "God in the State," by E. A. Stevens, secretary of the American Secular Union, has just been issued. Price, 10 cents; six copies, 50 cents; fifteen copies, $1.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

A bill to divide California into two states was recently introduced in the House of Representatives. The plan meets with the approval of many residents of the southern part of the state.—Major Venier Voldo, the poet, well known in the late presidential campaign as "The Little Giant of the Pacific," fell through the platform of Summit station last week, breaking his right arm and receiving serious internal injuries. He will at once sue the railroad company for $30,000 damages.—Last Thursday Rev. L. W. Simmons, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church, was stricken with paralysis at his residence in Biggs. Whom the Lord loveth he paralyzes.—A cargo of sugar has just been seized at this port. It weighs nearly 7,000,000 pounds, and an undervaluation of $80,000 is charged.—The Hon. David McClure, lawyer and railroad man, died in this city Dec. 8, aged 45 years.—One hundred and seventy-three Chinese left San Francisco for China last Saturday.—Small-pox is prevalent in Portland, Or.—The wife of Bishop, the mind-reader who recently exhibited himself in San Francisco, is suing him for a divorce.—Two murders, it is charged, were committed by San Francisco policemen when off duty last week.

The Spiritualists claim Lord Tennyson as a convert.—The marshal had to be present at a Catholic burial at Price City, Mo., one day last week, to quell a riot between two factions of Catholics.—Dr. Nathan R. Gorter wants $30,000 for professional services rendered Robert Garrett, the insane millionaire.—The Chicago police have prohibited all gatherings of Anarchists.—A Birmingham, Ala., mob attempted to lynch a murderer last Saturday. The sheriff fired upon the crowd and three men were killed.—Michael Sullivan, formerly in the employ of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, of which Anthony Comstock is chief, has furnished the press with a sworn statement, which has created a great deal of excitement among his former co-workers. He boldly alleges that the society is nothing more nor less than a blackmailing organization run in the interest of certain gamblers who pay large sums of money to the society for protection against arrest while plying their vocations.—Peter Campbell, a Brooklyn, N. Y., man has invented an air ship, in which he has just made a successful ascension.—The committee having charge of the arrangements for Harrison's inaugural ball have decided to fix the price of tickets for admission at $5 each. The sum of $48,700 has been subscribed to the inaugural fund.—Sarah F. Howe, of Boston, who it is estimated has swindled people out of at least $200,000 by her plausible schemes, chief among which was the "Woman's Bank," is under arrest upon a complaint charging her with swindling.—Slanders against Cleveland are being revived and refuted.—Mrs. Henry Robinson, of Seymour, Conn., charges that her pastor, the Rev. C. S. Williams, induced her to go to his barn one night and hold a lantern for him while he stabled his horse, and that then and there he sinned against her. The clergyman charges blackmail.—Father Gentile, of the Jesuit church of Albuquerque, N. M., is in trouble. It seems that he got $1,800 from a Mexican woman, who at the time was supposed to be dying, and he gave her a receipt for the amount. The woman recovered, and now wants her money, presenting a receipt for it. Father Gentile says the receipt is a forgery. Those who have closely examined it, comparing it with his other writings, claim that it will take an expert to decide the difference.—A parallel to the case of Rev. Walpole Warren, who was imported from England under contract with Holy Trinity church, has arisen in Jamestown, N. Y. Rev. D. L. McCoral, of Cobling, Canada, has been called to the First Presbyterian church, and this violation of the statute has created a sensation in church circles.—The Mormons have established a church in Brooklyn and another in Chicago.

During a meeting in Amsterdam, Holland, on Sunday to consider the project of erecting a statue to the pope a fight occurred between the Catholics and some Socialists, which was quelled by the police firing upon the belligerents.—The pope's health is failing, and his physician gives him but a year to live.—The Siecle says the French government has decided to introduce, if necessary, a bill to insure the completion of the Panama canal.—The French government has secretly advised the pope to leave Italy in event of a rupture between France and Italy, and has offered all possible assistance in the event of his deciding to go to France.

A CLERGYMAN'S CONFESSION.

The Rev. R. Heber Newton, pastor of All Souls' Protestant Episcopal church, New York, started his people thinking by a sermon delivered Sunday, in which he asserted that the need of the present age is a new religion.

The earnest manner in which he avowed his belief that Christianity in its present form does not satisfy the spiritual aspirations of modern progressive humanity has caused a sensation in the religious world. There are those who believe that the independent clergyman has got himself in hot water with his Episcopal superiors. Colonel Ingersoll, being interviewed on the subject, said:

"Dr. Newton is undoubtedly right when he says organized Christianity to-day is not a leader in social progress; the church, for the most part, is in control of the rich, the respectable, the well-to-do, and the unsympathetic. Having succeeded themselves, they think everybody ought to succeed. Dr. Newton realizes the fact that everything in this world changes; that creeds are influenced by civilization, by the acquisition of knowledge, by the progress of science and the arts; in other words, that there is a tendency in man to harmonize his knowledge and to bring about a reconciliation between what he knows and what he believes. This will be fatal to superstition, provided man knows anything."

A Fearful Misconception.

A little San Francisco girl of five summers lately attended Sunday-school for the first time. Upon her return home her father, who is a strict church-member, asked her what she had learned in school that day. She answered that she had not exactly learned anything, but the children had been singing about Jesus, and she joined in with them. "That's right," said her papa, delighted. "Leave off that ugly Yankee Doodle, you used to be so fond of, and sing about Jesus. That's much nicer." The child promised to do so.

A few days after she was sitting on the stoop of the back stair playing with her doll, and singing. Her father, who happened to be in the vicinity, stepped near to listen to her. Imagine the horror of the pious parent when he heard the little one sing with great devotion:

"Holy Jesus went to town, riding on a pony,
Stuck a feather in his hat, and called it macaroni.
Holy Jesus, keep it up! Jesus is a dandy.
Mind the music and the dance, and with the girls be handy."

The child obeyed her father's order. She left Yankee Doodle out, and replaced him with Jesus.

A. L.

THE "Sabbath Imposture," a pamphlet by Harry Hoover, 10 cents per copy; six for 50 cents; fifteen for $1.00.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

R. B. WESTBROOK, LL.D., PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary..... 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
 OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treasurer..... Rochelle, Ill.
 E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com..... 120 Lexington ave., New York
 MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com., 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.

Col. R. G. Ingersoll, ex-President,
T. B. Wakeman,	"
Samuel P. Putnam,	"
James Parton,	E. B. Foote, Sr.,	Horace Seaver,
Charles Watts,	A. B. Bradford,	Leonard Geiger,
Lucy N. Colman,	Juliet H. Severance,	Mrs. M. J. Olds,
Photius Fisk,	J. H. Burnham,	Mattie P. Krekel,
Wm. Redfield,	J. A. Smith,	James Wardwell,
H. P. Mason,	W. L. Willis,	M. M. Secor,
Thos. J. Truss,	W. W. Forwood,	N. D. Goodell,
G.A.F. de Lespinasse,	Roman Staley,	H. L. Boyer,
		Daniel A. Aeri.

WHY DON'T MEN GO TO CHURCH?

Last Sunday the Chicago Tribune printed brief interviews with the pastors of twenty-two leading Protestant churches of the city, and recorded the actual number of men, women, and children present at each "house of God." The reporter asked each these three questions:

1. Do men go to church? If not, what is the explanation of their non-attendance?
2. Do ministers still believe in hell?
3. Is orthodoxy dying out?

The figures showed that the total attendance of men in these twenty-two principal churches was 3,087; that of women, 4,109; and that of children, 1,106.

The reporter's first conundrum was invariably dodged, and I will give a few samples:

Dr. Hanson—"Men were never as good church attendants as women. Women are more ready to accept things by intuition. They grasp a truth much more quickly than men; they walk in the light before men can see it."

Dr. Lawrence—"Many men feel the church is a restraint on their personal liberty, and prefer the Sunday newspaper—which does much to break up church attendance."

Dr. Lorimer—"More men attend our services than women. This is not the day to discuss this question. I will not have the sanctity of the day and my privacy broken in upon in this way." The attendance at Dr. Lorimer's church was 97 men, 213 women, and 19 children. It might not be amiss to inform your readers that this divine formerly acted on the stage, but now he confines his performances to the pulpit.

Rev. Robert McIntyre seems frank and honest—"I am not enough of a preacher to suit the men;" but he had just as many as Lorimer.

Dr. Mandeville—"Woman is by nature better than man. She has more time for the consideration of spiritual subjects."

Dr. Bristol—"Men are tired out from secular labors. Women are more keenly conscientious; more devout; more sensible to moral and religious impressions."

Dr. Goodwin—"The carnal mind is in enmity to God; men love an easy life."

Dr. Noble—"I have no reason to suppose that men are less regular in attendance on divine service than women." The reporter counted 198 men, 341 women, and 81 children in that vast church.

Dr. Gunsaulus—"There is no falling off of men. The ushers estimate the regular attendance at 1,200 to 1,400—the latter oftener than the former. The proportion, men 600, women 700, children 100." The count was, men 297, women 294, children 82. Total, 773.

Dr. Little—"Women are not so troubled with doubts and skepticism. The average pulpit teaching commends itself to woman's judgment more fully than to man's." It seems almost time the church should adapt itself to men.

Those are sufficient. To the second and all-important question they replied:

Dr. Vibbert—"For reporters."

Dr. Barrows—"I believe in a biblical hell."

E. P. Goodwin—"Certainly, if the scriptures teach anything they teach there is a hell. I believe in a hell just as taught in the Bible."

Dr. Noble—"I certainly do. Christ taught there was a place of eternal punishment prepared for the incorrigibly wicked."

Dr. Hanson—"I do; yes, sir, I do sure. What is it like? I don't know. Don't want to know."

Dr. Lawrence—"I do as a condition in after life, primitive in character."

McIntyre—"Most certainly I believe in hell."

Mandeville—"Every man must believe in a hell. An innate sense of justice compels every reasoning being to recognize the fact that punishment will be meted out for the sins in this life."

Dr. Bristol—"I believe in a condition of less, remorse, mental suffering, spiritual degradation, consequent on a life of sin. In the separation of the pure from the impure, the virtuous from the vicious, the wicked from the righteous. I pity the mental make-up of a man who does not believe it." What a consolation "devoutly to be wished."

Dr. Gunsaulus—"Certainly."

Dr. Locke—"Emphatically. I believe in hell."

On this question the clergy appear to form a separate, distinct, concionative family, for they all unanimously believe in hell of some sort, and seem as though they considered it the most precious and indispensable appendage for their spiritual exaltation and intellectual aspiration. It was their sweet morceau which they rolled under their tongues with extreme satisfaction. We would hardly be cruel enough to deny them the experience on which they have laid so much store, and only regret they will not be likely to have their expectations realized.

To the third interrogatory nearly all replied with cheery persiflage that it was booming, although some were willing to undergo a new interpretation as to what orthodoxy meant. There were three exceptions who, like Mr. Green, thought "orthodoxy on the decline. Sadly so in the Protestant world."

Secularists have a chance to count the cost of this tremendous display of ministerial moonshine, and how much these enormous edifices, entirely exempt from public burdens, can be considered a public benefit when only a few citizens are the recipients of the droppings from the sanctuary.

E. A. STEVENS.

GATHERING EXPERIENCE.

After making arrangements to lecture at Robinson, and other points on the Grand Island road, I took a run to Pradonia and Reserve, both of which towns are as dead as if they never had drawn a healthy inspiration of breath. Orthodoxy and ignorance reign supreme. Not a Liberal could be found, not a man nor a woman who knew the meaning of the term Secularism.

My trip to Robinson on Friday evening was more successful. I found Mr. Jas. T. Pomroy, the postmaster and a dealer in hardware, a real live Liberal. He is a Unitarian in faith, but seems to think good works much the most worthy part of his creed. It is to him and Dr. Lemaster I owe my success at this very pleasant village. The opera house was provided and a pleasant audience greeted me at 8 P.M. After a discourse of one and a half hours on "Secularism: its Aims and Advantages," an opportunity was given for a few words of experience. No answer coming, the speaker closed his address with a good word for the American Secular Union and its friends.

I was introduced to Henry Williams, Dr. Jas. Gafford, and the next morning to the Rev. M. C. Pasley, of the United Brethren church, who excused himself for not coming by saying he forgot it. When a better reason was demanded, he said he thought it best to take no notice of objections and criticisms of the church, that in his pulpit he never even mentioned the Catholic church. To Liberals it is not at all curious that when Romanism gets a black eye Protestantism resents the blow.

I shall have the pleasure of going to Robinson again before the winter breaks, and have hopes of making a permanent color-bearer for the American Secular Union.

I now go to Sabetha, the stronghold of the faithful pioneers, and on to Seneca, where the United Independents keep the colors waving for light and truth.

D. G. CROW.

Hiawatha, Kan.

ROMAN RULE AND RUIN.—FACTS, NOT FICTIONS.

IV.

"The worst tyranny ever imposed upon the men of this earth has been perpetrated in the name of a Christian God."

This church has called in the aid of secular powers to protect the authority of her puerile dogmas, which were absolute blasphemy and nonsense, thus placing a reward upon hypocrisy and mental dishonesty. Isms and creeds have driven thousands from the plough and the sickle, to make a living in prayer meetings and confessionals.

This nauseous disease of hypocrisy, this mixture of blasphemy, cant, and nonsense, has always put a premium on intellectual dishonesty. Hence the thousand years' eclipse of common sense produced by a belief in the church's teachings.

We must bear in mind that the Romish Inquisition was concocted and perpetuated by Catholic popes; that the crusades, holy wars, and foraging expeditions against civilization, devastating millions of acres of fertile country, and exterminating entire races of industrious people, were deliberately planned, preached, and encouraged by the infallible popes of this Catholic church; that they as the head of this organization advised, aided, and promoted this villainous work of desolation and murder; that they made a specialty of dealing out indulgences to all those criminal hordes that were turned loose from jails and prisons on the sole condition that they would join in shedding the blood of all who offered resistance to this diabolical fester upon civilization.

And it was these divine persons, these holy and infallible popes, these sacred vicars of Jesus Christ, who were delving in the foulest depth of criminal debauchery, hiding their tracks with a religion cursed by their sanction, and kidnaping defenseless virtue to populate their convents and monasteries with concubines and prostitutes.

While the rank and file of this divine slaughter-house engaged in wiping out civilization with those pious contrivances known as racks, thumb-screws, fagots, weights, and pulleys, how were these popes these vicars of Jehovah, amusing themselves?

A few pages in Draper's "History of the Intellectual Development of Europe" proves conclusively that they must have been especially chosen as vicegerents of the Almighty.

Constantine had his eyes put out by Stephen IV., another holy vicar. The tongue of Theodosius was cut out by another vicar. Pope Leo III. was forced into a church, where the nephews of Pope Adrian tried to cut out his tongue, and blind him. His successor was driven ignominiously out of Rome. Paschal was accused of blinding and murdering two ecclesiastics in the Lateran Palace.

The bishop of Naples was excommunicated by the pope and afterward absolved in payment for certain treacheries and assassinations.

Formosus was excommunicated for the murder of Pope John. Boniface was deposed on account of his lewd and immoral life.

Pope Stephen VII. had the dead body of Formosus dug from the grave, clad in papal clothing, and tried before a council. The corpse was found guilty. Three of his fingers were cut off and his body thrown in the Tiber.

Stephen VII. was thrown into prison and strangled.

Leo V., soon after he was consecrated, was cast into prison by Christopher, one of his chaplains. Christopher then usurped the power and was expelled from Rome by Sergius III., who became pope in 905. This pope lived in criminal intercourse with two prostitutes, mother and daughter. He was thrown into prison and murdered. His prostitute Marozia, made her own son John, Pope John XI. Alberic, a brother of John, caused John and their mother to be imprisoned. Alberic's son then became pope as John XII. "His reign was grossly licentious" and immoral. He was tried for bribery, incestuous conduct, adultery, and making the Lateran Palace a brothel. He put out the eye of one ecclesiastic and maimed another; both died from their injuries. He was a drunkard and a gambler. He was deposed, but recovered power enough to cut off the hand of one ecclesiastic, the finger of another, the nose of another, and the tongues of several others. He was killed by a man whose wife he had seduced. He was certainly a darling vicar, whether he was chosen by God or the devil.

Pope John XVI. had his eyes put out and nose cut off.

Victor III. declared that the life of Pope Benedict was shamefully foul; that he ruled like a bandit. Because of his adulteries, murders, and homicides the papacy was sold at auction to a presbyter named John, who became Gregory VI. in 1045. Such is the history of the church which poses as our spiritual adviser and lurks like an assassin to deal a death stab to the free school system of America.

Persons pretending to believe in the inspiration of a Bible which teaches lying, larceny, adultery, murder, robbery, slavery, incest, witchcraft, bigamy, and arson may be excused on the ground of ignorance or of insanity. So when a man has been dwarfed to the verge of imbecility by a belief in the infallibility of a pope, the existence of a literal hell, personal devils, ghosts, witches, sacred relics, absolution, and holy water, we may reasonably expect him to have sufficient cheek and frontless impudence to extort the hard earnings from servant girls and washer-women under the criminal false pretense that he can absolve them. Such men may be a benefit to civilization, but the fact has never been demonstrated.

This church, its pope, and its priests subsist to-day upon moneys extorted from ignorance under such criminal false pretenses as would imprison a scoundrel engaged in any other business less divinely dishonest.

Sacred relics, masses for the dead, purgatory, holy water, absolution, indulgences, and kindred fraudulent myths have been made the subject of open and barefaced barter and sale in order to pick the pockets of the superstitious.

If such a priesthood as this church has produced is to be continued as fit and proper spiritual advisers for the human race; if the popes of this church are to be regarded as the infallible vicars of Jesus Christ and the vicegerents of an allwise God, what must we think of such a creator?

Were I compelled to pray to such a monster as this, I should regard the following as a prayer eminently suited to the purpose:

"Inhuman inspirer of the Jewish scriptures, murderer of millions of thy own creation; creator of death, hell, and the devil; producer of disease, famine, cyclones, earthquakes, pestilence, war, and misery; author of evil, endless punishment, and innumerable falsehoods; deceiver of thy people through lying prophets; destroyer of virtue among the captives of war; establisher of a religion which has been a blight and a withering curse to its adherents, who are you any how? and what a pity that you were ever born! Have you not glutted your brutal vengeance sufficiently against your defenseless creation? Is that insatiate greed for the torture of your children not satisfied? Has not humanity been sufficiently outraged by being brought into existence through your bungling creation, and damned before their birth to endless torture, without being compelled to bow in superstitious reverence to one who 'repented that he had made man?' You are omnipresent but always out of reach when you are wanted. You are a shining success when it comes to the extermination of whole tribes and nations, or slaying every living thing, creating floods to destroy millions of helpless human beings, raining fire, creating giants three hundred cubits high, stopping the sun so Joshua could murder his neighbors, or putting lying spirits into the mouths of your prophets. But when poverty, want, sorrow, and starvation threaten us; when the icy finger of death is about to fall upon the widowed mother, or tear the prattling babe from the tender embraces of widowed love; when crime, pauperism, and pestilence scourge the living, and devils, damnation, and lakes of eternal fire menace the dead; then you stand idly by with your hands in your pockets like a loafer, and pretend that you are 'counting the sparrows.'

"Why did you harden Pharaoh's heart? Why did you create the devil before you created Christ? Why are you systematically killing off the best men and women and peopling the earth with sycophants, imbeciles, dwarfs, cripples, hypocrites, thieves, and vagabonds?

"I have nothing to thank you for, because you did me a gross injustice when you brought me into existence. I owe you nothing, because you have neglected me ever since my creation. I have neither praises nor flatteries to offer you, because you are vain enough already, and are deserving of neither. I ask no odds of you in any shape or form; first, because I know that you are incapable of changing even one hair of my head; second, because I do not believe that such an infamous being as you are represented to be by your followers could possibly exist; third, because I am better capable of taking care of myself.

"Millions of human beings have lived and died without ever hearing of your name, and they certainly ought to be congratulated upon their good luck. Amen."

Some of the Good Who Don't Die Young.

As often it has happened that some pious folks are found—

I've got a little list, I've got a little list—
Some people of that kind who might as well be underground,
And who never will be missed, who never will be missed.
There's that old stupid hypocrite who always snores in church,
The Christian, when you're needy, always leaves you in the lurch,
The bullet-headed idiot who argues first and last
That the world is moving backwards to destruction very fast,
I've got them on the list, and they never will be missed.

There is that religious howler, the campmeeting Methodist—
I've got him on the list, I've got him on the list—
And the impudent old scowler says from dancing to desist,
They never will be missed, they never will be missed.
There's the preacher when he meets you always shakes your hand like that,

Invites you to his church and then he passes round the hat;
The stylish-looking minister who is clever, young, and spry,
Who makes many pastoral visits to the sisters, on the sly,
I've got them on the list, and they never will be missed.

There's the young man goes to meeting just to see the pretty girls—
I've got him on the list, I've got him on the list—
And the girl who goes there, also, just to show her fancy curls,
They never will be missed, they never will be missed.
The old religious bachelor whose actions are quite odd,
And the dried-up ancient maiden with no other friend but God.
Some people go to church and don't know any reason why,
And all are ready to complain of the sermon being dry,
But we've got them on our list, and they never will be missed.

There are people just like donkeys who can never change their mind—
I've got them on the list, I've got them on the list—
Like their parents and their grandparents they always go it blind,
They never will be missed, they never will be missed.
They think investigation will surely make them fall
And they swallow all the stories about Jonah, whale and all,
About Samson and his foxes, and the torches in their tails,
Tell their children all about hell-fire and other horrid tales,
I've got them on the list, and they never will be missed.

There's the stone-blind Roman Catholic who believes in patron saints—
I've got him on the list, I've got him on the list—
And the one who meets an Infidel and very nearly faints,
They never will be missed, they never will be missed.
There's the pious rich old fellow feels a little insecure, Whose life's been rather tricky and who thinks he will insure—
No matter what he's ever done, just now he's on the top
For he always buys his mutton at a Baptist butcher shop—
I've got him on the list, and he never will be missed.

There's the reverend who preaches for what money he can make—
I've got him on the list, I've got him on the list—
And those folks who join the churches purely for their business' sake,
They never will be missed, they never will be missed.
The Quaker, and the Mormon, and the Catholic Papist,
The Methodist, and Baptist, and the Universalist,
Jews, Mohammedans, and Buddhists, each upon his rights insists,
Each claims that all the others are but wicked plagiarists,
But we've got them on our list, and they never will be missed.

Spooks.

A gentleman of this city relates to us an astonishing fact that on Saturday evening last, while sitting in his back parlor with a friend and his two children (his wife having gone out to spend the evening), the piano in the front parlor commenced playing vigorously. Knowing that there was no mortal in that room, he naturally felt a chill of terror at the weird nature of the performance. Mustering courage, he threw open the folding doors, when the music instantly ceased. He then examined the windows and doors, and, accompanied by his friend, searched the house throughout, but no one could be found. He then went to the place where his wife was visiting, thinking possibly she might have returned to play a joke upon him. He found her undisturbed, and is thoroughly satisfied that he was not deceived. He would now like to know who or what played upon his piano.

—Golden Gate.

INGERSOLL'S REPLY TO CARDINAL MANNING.

From the North American Review.

VI.

Yet the cardinal asserts "that the change wrought by Christianity in the social, political, and international relations of the world"—"that the root of this ethical change, private and public, is the Christian home." A moment afterward this prelate insists that celibacy is far better than marriage. If the world could be induced to live in accordance with the "highest state," this generation would be the last. Why were men and women created? Why did not the Catholic God commence with the sinless and sexless? The cardinal ought to take the ground that to talk well is good, but that to be dumb is the highest condition; that hearing is a pleasure, but that deafness is ecstasy; and that to think, to reason, is very well, but that to be a Catholic is far better.

Why should we desire the destruction of human passions? Take passions from human beings and what is left? The great object should be not to destroy the passions, but to make them obedient to the intellect. To indulge passion to the utmost is one form of intemperance—to destroy passion is another. The reasonable gratification of passion under the domination of the intellect is true wisdom and perfect virtue.

The goodness, the sympathy, the self-denial of the nun, of the monk, all come from the mother-instinct, the father-instinct—all were produced by human affection, by the love of man for woman, of woman for man. Love is a transfiguration. It ennobles, purifies, and glorifies. In true marriage two hearts burst into flower. Two lives unite. They melt in music. Every moment is a melody. Love is a revelation, a creation. From love the world borrows its beauty and the heavens their glory. Justice, self-denial, charity, and pity are the children of love. Lover, wife, mother, husband, father, child, home—these words shed light—they are the gems of human speech. Without love all glory fades, the noble falls from life, art dies, music loses meaning and becomes mere motions of the air, and virtue ceases to exist.

It is asserted that this life of celibacy is above and against the tendencies of human nature; and the cardinal then asks: "Who will ascribe this to natural causes, and if so, why it did not appear in the first four thousand years?"

If there is in a system of religion a doctrine, a dogma, or a practice against the tendencies of human nature—if this religion succeeds, then it is claimed by the cardinal that such religion must be of divine origin. Is it "against the tendencies of human nature" for a mother to throw her child into the Ganges to please a supposed God? Yet a religion that insisted on that sacrifice succeeded, and has to-day more believers than the Catholic church can boast.

Religions, like nations and individuals, have always gone along the line of least resistance. Nothing has "ascended the stream of human license by a power mightier than nature." There is no such power. There never was, there never can be a miracle. We know that man is a conditioned being. We know that he is affected by a change of conditions. If he is ignorant he is superstitious: this is natural. If his brain is developed—if he perceives clearly that all things are naturally produced—he ceases to be superstitious, and becomes scientific. He is not a saint, but a savant—not a priest, but a philosopher. He does not worship—he works; he investigates; he thinks; he takes advantage, through intelligence, of the forces of nature. He is no longer the victim of appearances, the dupe of his own ignorance, and the persecutor of his fellow men.

He then knows that it is far better to love his wife and children than to love God. He then knows that the love of man for woman, of woman for man, of parent for child, of child for parent, is far better, far holier, than the love of man for any phantom born of ignorance and fear.

It is illogical to take the ground that the world was cruel and ignorant and idolatrous when the Catholic church was established, and that because the world is better now than then, the church is of divine origin.

What was the world when science came? What was it in the days of Galileo, Copernicus, and Kepler? What was it when printing was invented? What was it when the Western world was found? Would it not be much easier to prove that science is of divine origin?

Science does not persecute. It does not shed blood—it fills the world with light. It cares nothing for heresy; it develops the mind, and enables man to answer his own prayers.

Cardinal Manning takes the ground that Jehovah practically abandoned the children of men for four thousand years, and gave them over to every abomination. He claims that Christianity came “in the fullness of time,” and it is then admitted that “what the fullness of time may mean is one of the mysteries of times and seasons, that it is not for us to know.” Having declared that it is a mystery, and one that we are not to know, the cardinal explains it: “One motive for the long delay of four thousand years is not far to seek—it gave time, full and ample, for the utmost development and consolidation of the falsehood and evil of which the intellect and will of man are capable.”

Is it possible to imagine why an infinitely good and wise being “gave time full and ample for the utmost development and consolidation of falsehood and evil?” Why should an infinitely wise God desire this development and consolidation? What would be thought of a father who should refuse to teach his son and deliberately allow him to go into every possible excess, to the end that he might “develop all the falsehood and evil of which his intellect and will were capable?” If a supernatural religion is a necessity, and if without it all men simply develop and consolidate falsehood and evil, why was not a supernatural religion given to the first man? The Catholic church, if this be true, should have been founded in the garden of Eden. Was it not cruel to drown a world just for the want of a supernatural religion—a religion that man, by no possibility, could furnish? Was there “husbandry in heaven?”

But the cardinal contradicts himself by not only admitting, but declaring, that the world had never seen a legislation so just, so equitable, as that of Rome. Is it possible that a nation in which falsehood and evil had reached their highest development was, after all, so wise, so just, and so equitable? Was not the civil law far better than the Mosaic—more philosophical, nearer just? The civil law was produced without the assistance of God. According to the cardinal, it was produced by men in whom all the falsehood and evil of which they were capable had been developed and consolidated, while the cruel and ignorant Mosaic code came from the lips of infinite wisdom and compassion.

It is declared that the history of Rome shows what man can do without God, and I assert that the history of the Inquisition shows what man can do when assisted by a church of divine origin, presided over by the infallible vicars of God.

The fact that the early Christians not only believed incredible things, but persuaded others of their truth, is regarded by the cardinal as a miracle. This is only another phase of the old argument that success is the test of divine origin. All supernatural religions have been founded in precisely the same way. The credulity of eighteen hundred years ago believed everything except the truth.

A religion is a growth, and is of necessity adapted in some degree to the people among whom it grows. It is shaped and molded by the general ignorance, the superstition and credulity of the age in which it lives. The key is fashioned by the lock. Every religion that has succeeded has in some way supplied the wants of its votaries, and has to a certain extent harmonized with their hopes, their fears, their vices, and their virtues.

If, as the cardinal says, the religion of Christ is in absolute harmony with nature, how can it be supernatural? The cardinal also declares that “the religion of Christ is in harmony with the reason and moral nature of all nations and all ages to this day.” What becomes of the argument that Catholicism must be of divine origin because “it has ascended the stream of human license, contradictum fluminis, by a power mightier than nature?” If “it is in harmony with the reason and moral nature of all nations and all ages to this day,” it has gone with the stream, and not against it. If “the religion of Christ is in harmony with the reason and moral nature of all nations,” then the men who have rejected it are unnatural, and these men have gone against the stream. How then can it be said that Christianity has been in changeless opposition to nature as man has marred it? To what extent has man marred it? In spite of the marring by man, we are told that the reason and moral nature of all nations in all ages to this day is in harmony with the religion of Jesus Christ.

(To be Continued.)

HYPOCRISY.

Of all detestable specimens of humanity, the “holier than thou” specimen is the most to be abhorred. The poet Spencer says that spiritual pride is the worst sin in the whole calendar; and there seems to be no meanness of which a self-righteous saint is not capable. Pluming himself on his own goodness, he regards others as having no rights that he is bound to respect. He is a little god, and common humanity is a worm in his sight. He has so many virtues that what he does is right simply because he does it. Like the king, he can do no wrong, and hence he commits the greatest sin without any compunction of conscience. Since he is absolutely holy, it makes no difference what crime he is guilty of, for, according to his own standard, it cannot be a crime. If he does it, it is a virtue per se. His logic is: I am holy, therefore I have a perfect right to lie, steal, and murder, if need be. The history of the world is black with the crimes of such saints. The Inquisition, the fire, and the sword have been the instruments of their holy wrath, of their heavenly zeal, of their overwhelming virtue and unimpeachable morality. They have been so good that they must devastate the earth in order that their goodness may have “room and range enough” for its sublime excellence.

This is the spirit of orthodoxy, self-righteousness. The orthodox wraps himself in a mantle of conceit, and proceeds to do all manner of wrong with a clear conscience. Never has there been such a curse in the world as this spiritual pride. No wonder the poet of humanity hates it with all his heart. No wonder that every honest man is indignant at its enormous assumption. What tyranny is more unbearable than this? It is not merely the orthodox belief that is to be overthrown. This is comparatively harmless. It is the orthodox assumption of superior holiness, that Christians are better than other men simply because they are Christians, and therefore have a right to impose upon non-Christians and abuse them. This has been the bloody history of orthodoxy. In the name of its exalted virtue every law of justice has been violated. It is the self-righteousness of orthodoxy that must be swept from existence; this “whited sepulchre full of dead men’s bones.”

But worse even than the self-righteousness of orthodoxy is the self-righteousness of Liberalism. In orthodoxy self-righteousness is natural; in Liberalism it is unnatural, and therefore a monster “that to be hated needs but to be seen.”

Of all mean men on the face of the earth, the self-righteous Liberal is the meanest. He is capable of the most unjust acts. He is a bundle of conceit, a mass of egotism. He is so pure, so wondrously pure; he is so virtuous, so wondrously virtuous; so chaste, so wondrously chaste, that from his immaculate throne he can hurl all darts of slander; he can soil every reputation; he can stab every character; he can lie with impunity. He is as heartless, cold, cruel, malignant, devilish as Torquemada himself, while all the time he plumes himself upon his blameless conduct. Deliver us from these saints of Liberalism, who bring into the cause of freedom the heart and brain of a Calvin, and the cruelty of the Inquisition. “I am holier than thou” is bad enough for orthodoxy, but it is the very rottenness of Liberalism. The Liberal who is so devoid of ideas, of generous impulse, who is so self-seeking, so egoistic, that he can see nothing beyond his own greed; so orthodox in every fibre of his nature that his Liberalism is only an outward creed without one spark of humanity; who is a priest, and uses only the arguments of a priest, slander and vilification—such a Liberal does indeed excite the utmost abhorrence and indignation. He has all the vices of a Christian saint, with the added vice of thinking he is a Liberal when he is not. He ought to belong to the church of the sanctified. He is too good for this world. He is too holy for ordinary human companionship. He ought to play on a harp. He is certainly an angel in disguise. The slight evidence of his wings is the goose's quill with which he writes, plucked from his own immaculate hide. This Liberal should be a cherub; he is so innocent; he is in such an ecstasy of virtue; he is so moral, so utterly moral. It is impossible for this man to commit sin, he is so preoccupied in worshipping his sublime self. His egotism prevents the slightest departure from the path of rectitude. He can lie and slander to his heart's content, for he is so good, so goody good. What a beautiful Sunday-school boy he would make. What a superb theological student. It is strange that he has lived so long, for the poet sadly says, "The good die early." The only consolation amidst the unutterable meanness of the "holier than thou" Liberal is that his sublime holiness becomes the laughing-stock of the community. No sensible man takes the slightest notice of his moral attitudinizing. He is the Bunthorne of the Liberal camp, always on show, always in uniform and ready for dress parade. How he does delight to inform the world of his superior sanctity. Let him perform his "holier than thou" jig. He only needs the cap and bells, and the clerical garb, to expose his true nature. He is not a lion after all. He is only Bottom the mechanic, and his bundle of virtues is simply the ass's head. Of all prigs the Liberal prig is the most contemptible, who struts in the air of freedom with the feathers of orthodox morality. He is at heart the wild beast, but the fangs have been extracted. He can only claw, he cannot hurt.

The "Saints of Liberalism" are no more worthy of particular notice than the saints of orthodoxy. It is well, however, to know that there are such, and to estimate them at their true value, and guard against their "holy anathemas." The time is coming when generosity, charity, and justice will prevail; when the spirit of fraternity shall be the judge of every act; when morality shall be the recognition of the unity of all; when virtue shall not be in the outward act, but in the spirit of beautiful affection. Then self-righteousness will be seen in all its deformity; then its unutterable baseness will be declared; then its lies and slanders will be stamped with the condemnation of all honorable men and women; then the only theft of which it will be capable will be to steal away and die in the mud which it can no longer fling. Its occupation is gone the very moment humanity triumphs, for if there is anything that real men and women detest, it is the unconscionable prig, be he Christian or Liberal, who is so virtuous in his own estimation that he can stab the character of his comrade without realizing the meanness of his treachery.

Professor Seymour On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I am often asked what I am "on the trail" of as I am rambling to and fro over the country. My answer is, I am on the trail of superstition and the priesthood. In making the long ride from Portland to San Francisco, over the Southern Pacific railroad, we passed through numerous cities, towns, and villages, and in nearly every one we saw the trail of the priest; for the most conspicuous of all objects was the church, with its tall steeple, often with its gilded cross—oftener without—proclaiming to the world, "This is 'Gaud's' house." This is the case wherever we go, and thus is truly shown the trail of the slimy monster, superstition. If we take up a book of any kind except scientific or Freethought—even a schoolbook—newspaper, or magazine, we find on nearly every page the trail of the hydra-headed, three-in-one divinity—the god idea. Go out on our farms, into the purpling vineyards, or the deep-laden orchards, where all is beauty, and you will often see the angry teamster beating his stubborn mule or overloaded ox until he is tired, and then hear him call upon the deity to finish the brutal work by "God damning" the beast's soul to hell. Often the drunken sot, filled to the collar with whisky, goes home, kicks and pounds his wife and children, who, perhaps, are clothed with rags, pale, weak, and hungry, and turns them out into the winter's blast to freeze and perish, sending after them the devilish words—learned from some priest—"God damn you to hell."

Go where we will—down into the earth with the miner; deep into the forest, where the loggers and lumbermen are; up among the mountains, where the hunters steal upon their prey; out upon the ocean with the sailors, or in the ranks of our "boys in blue," amidst the carnage of battle—and the trail is there. In jest or in earnest, in the curse of anger or the mutterings of fear; the infant at its mother's knee, the smooth tongued parson, the discarded lover, the siren in her den of vice—one and all call on God to do what they cannot do themselves. Never has an oath been uttered, no matter how vile, that was not first hissed through the teeth of a priest. If there had been no priests nobody would ever have heard of a soul to damn, a god to damn it, or a hell to which it might be damned. All the cursing and profanity we hear is but an echo to the pulpit, its prayers and sermons. Go among the tribes that never heard they had a soul, nor of a god to give or a devil to receive it, and they use no profanity. Whenever I hear a man cursing and damning, I know he was raised in a Christian country, or at least under Christian influences. When Infidels employ this pious phraseology they are showing the effects of their orthodox education. They should discard it as soon as possible, and cease to stultify their professions of disbelief in all gods. For to say you do not believe in God, and then within the next hour call upon God to damn your horse, your dog, or your neighbor, is not to your credit as a truth-sayer.

I once, when a boy, listened to a Baptist minister, an educated man, who reached over his pulpit as far as he could, and said:

"Would to God my arm was long enough to reach down into the fiery, billowy depths of hell, that I might clutch some poor lost sinner by the hair of the head, and lift him up before this congregation, so that you all could hear his cries of agony and pain, and all see his burning flesh and smell the burning brimstone, that you might be turned from serving the devil, and come to the Lord."

I have been an Infidel ever since, and have done what I could to wipe out the trail that is worn so deep by these self-appointed agents and heavenly guides.

Comrades in the Freethought army, we have a herculean work to do. It may take a hundred or even a thousand years to tear down the wall of Christian superstition, for it is a million times longer, wider, and higher than the Chinese wall, and useless in proportion. It is so high that its shadow, by shutting out the light of science, darkens nearly all the civilized world; so thick that all our guns, even the one named Ingersoll, are necessary to batter down its moss-covered towers; and so long that its "trail" is everywhere. Then let our timid, unenthusiastic Liberals gather courage and enthusiasm. "God" will help only those who help him.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

San Francisco, Cal.

From an Active Worker.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I return Call for the State Convention with ten signatures. I hope to be in San Francisco this winter, when I will contribute $1 to the Convention and renew my subscription to FREETHOUGHT, my favorite paper. I wish you success in the grand and much-needed undertaking of your splendidly conducted journal.

E. M. HANSSON.

Merced, Cal.

Church Property Taxed.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Church property in this (Los Angeles) county is assessed as other property, and I think the taxes are paid. Of course this must extend over the state. I got my information from the assessment roll of this county, and if it is correct the first demand of Liberalism is satisfied, so far as this state is concerned.

W. A. C.

Monrovia, Cal.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. Putnam will lecture at the following places:

Stella ..... Wash., Dec. 15-16 Silverton, ..... Or., Dec. 22-23
No. Yamhill ..... Or., " 18-19

PROF. D. C. SEYMOUR, is now in California, and is prepared to lecture. His lectures are illustrated with large colored drawings, skeletons, lithographs, colored stereopticon views, etc. Liberals desiring the services of Professor Seymour may address him in care of this office. He makes no charge for lectures. The friends are only asked to provide a hall, church, or school-house, and the audience will remunerate the speaker.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wool, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35. for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses.....	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons..	$3.40
" Gold do., $5 and.....	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz.	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles.....	.35
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6....	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one...	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings.....	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives..	1.75	6 Guitar Strings.....	.75
" Forks..	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to.....	10.00
" Teaspoons..	1.70

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see back numbers of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "A graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE. Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" medicinal value to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and a new feature, of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Cloth, 75 cts.

Address this office.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

he Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS; CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.

33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for the amount of my Commission.

JULIUS LESS, —DEALER IN— CLOTHING, HATS, CAPS, —AND—

Gent's Furnishing Goods,

Stock always Complete. Prices to suit Everybody.

Do not forget Street and Number,

357 SUMMIT STREET,
(Weber's Block, bet. Walnut and Locust Streets.)
TOLEDO, OHIO.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.

OLIVER HINCKLEY . . . SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

SECULAR THOUGHT.

A Journal of Liberal Thought.

The Official Organ of the Canadian Secular Union.

Published Weekly. $2 per Year.

CHARLES. WATTS, Editor,

31 Adelaide st. East, Toronto,
Ont., Canada.

Read what Colonel Ingersoll says: "I am much pleased with Secular Thought—with its form, arrangement, and contents—above all, with its spirit. It is splendid. I don't see how it could be better. I read it with the greatest of pleasure." COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Read what B. F. Underwood says: "Mr. Watts publishes a solid paper. Secular Thought is the best Liberal paper that now comes to me." B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Read what Helen H. Gardener says: "I heartily congratulate our Canadian friends upon the fact that they are represented by Secular Thought, a paper of which they can be justly proud, and which they need never hesitate to hand to their most delicate-minded friends, however religious they may be." HELEN H. GARDENER.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History, of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Millman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald,
504 Kearny st. San Francisco.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 51.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - DECEMBER 22, 1888

THE Vatican has informed the Italian government that it can no longer prevent Catholics from voting, which is a back-handed hint that the pope will take a hand in Italian politics.

AN Eastern journal refers to San Francisco as the "Mecca of pugilists," and local papers are inclined to accept the characterization as a compliment to the city. It isn't anything to be proud of.

RELIGIOUS prospects in and around New York should begin to brighten. Our eminent Christian Soldier, Gen. Orison Oblation Howard, has taken up his quarters on Governor's Island in New York harbor.

THE coming election of master workman in the Pittsburgh, Pa., Assembly No. 3, Knights of Labor, is to hinge upon the religious question, a Protestant and a Catholic being rival aspirants for the position. The Protestants should withdraw and let the Catholics have it. It is a Jesuitical order.

ARCHBISHOP RIORDAN has asked the Superior Court for permission to sell a portion of the Mission Church property on Dolores and Sixteenth streets, this city, that Sixteenth street may be opened. It seems that when property is taxed the church does not hold on to it so tenaciously as when it costs nothing to keep it.

THE editorial page of last Sunday's Examiner contained in one column a defense of Ingersoll, by Ambrose Bierce, and in another column a reply to it. Any ill-feeling aroused by the editor's misrepresentation of Colonel Ingersoll must give place to admiration for his indiscriminating fairness in printing both sides.

ONE of our city pastors, the Rev. John Gray, in a sermon last Sunday, gave expression to the enlightened notion that "while the founding of great colleges, mechanical schools, and other educational and charitable institutions is a great and good act, yet the man who would spend such sums in the erection and adornment of churches for the worship of the Almighty would be doing a greater good to humanity." Pursuing the same line of thought, Mr. Gray added that "the soul of the poor man needs nourishment much more than his body." And yet people are inquiring why men do not go to church! If the Rev. Mr. Gray is a fair specimen of the preachers, the wonder is that anybody goes to hear them. A good meal for a hungry man, education for the ignorant, and manual training for the unskilled, are worth more than all the gospel preached during the past fifteen centuries.

LUCY PARSONS made a good point in her speech at New York the other day. "While I was addressing a meeting in Trafalgar Square," said she, "I learned that Bonfield, of Chicago, had ordered that the Anarchists be not allowed to meet. This is free America, while we were publicly proclaiming our theories in monarchical England." It makes a difference, though, whether you throw firebrands into a powder magazine or into some place where an explosion is in nowise likely to follow.

FORTY years ago a Catholic priest in Springfield, Mass., Father Dougherty, was charged with the betrayal of a young lady named Annie Monahan. On the Saturday following the exposure a crowd of forty or more excited parishioners gathered at the church door and refused Father Dougherty admission to the church. The angry priest thereupon cursed those whose hands were turned against him, and it is declared that nearly all of those he cursed have died unnatural deaths, nor have their children been exempted. This does not so much demonstrate the efficacy of the curse as the prevalence of sodden superstition. A priest's curse is as harmless as the croaking of a frog.

NEWS AND NOTES.

TO the land of the Scappoose—of the "round gravel"—I take my journey, on Saturday, Dec. 1. There is only one house to greet the vision, amid the endless fields and woods, but friend W. W. West was on hand, and that made up for any lack of outward appearance, for he is a "whole team" in himself, and I knew that he would see the Pilgrim safe and sound through "thick and thin." Going through the woods and over the muddy ways we soon reached his homestead, just as the clouds were breaking away and there was promise of fair weather, for an hour or so at least. The first thing that struck me, on entering his house, was a big fireplace and a crackling blaze. This was wonderfully cheerful, and I sat down and enjoyed it to my heart's content. Mr. West came to this country in 1861. He first struck Forest Grove, and then Scappoose, where, amid broad acres, he has built the "home of the free." His farm embraces about a section of prairie land and stretches of forest. The scenery about it is beautiful, especially on the fair days, when five noble mountains gem the vast horizon—Mts. Ranier, St. Helens, Adams, Hood, and Jefferson—while the spreading river, almost like a lake, dotted with islands, rolls by. Friend West delights in fine stock. He has about one hundred and fifty head, one-third of them of the Herford breed. The "Countess" roams over his delicious pastures, who has taken the premium at several exhibitions, both in this country and the old. In the afternoon we rode amid the herd, and I don't see how it is possible for any one to look at the broad back of a Herford and be a vegetarian. He must long for a steak from these sleek animals; and I have no doubt it makes a cow perfectly happy to contemplate the enjoyment she can give to man when she has "shuffled off this mortal coil."

The weather darkened toward evening and the night was stormy, but the little school-house in the woods was well filled. There are some stalwart Liberals about here. The churches are not very flourishing, and the preachers have a hard task to get a congregation. The weather was also stormy Sunday afternoon and evening, but still the people came, and the audiences were good, although twice as many would have been present if the rain had consented to take a breathing spell. Evidently Scappoose is a field for Freethought, and so I purpose to keep up the campaign, rain or shine. With such a strong, genial, generous coadjutor as Mr. West there won't be any such word as fail. Harry West, his son, is equally devoted, and Mrs. W. W. West and Mrs. Harry West are also enlisted in the cause with noble enthusiasm. Others also, Theo. Johnson, J. C. Johnson, C. O. Johnson, N. Johnson, M. McKay, C. Acker, O. Bohman, J. A. Freeman, are in the gathering ranks, and with a company like this Scappoose can look forward and not backward. It is progress, with this frontier.

I was pleased to meet with Mr. Dangerfield, and his sister, Mrs. Ross, formerly of Toronto, staunch Secularists. They have left the snows of Canada for the mild Pacific Coast, where the bees can hum the year round, but they have not left the ardor of Freethought, which, even in Toronto, is making the churches feel the breath of change. With these cordial friends thus unexpectedly met, came happy reminders of all Toronto friends who, with Chas. Watts, are doing such splendid work in the very teeth of winter. Scappoose, with its "pathless forests" and horizon of mountain peaks, leaves a bright memory along the track, and hope springs eternal.

Rushing along, crossing the splendid sound, beneath the stars, Seattle shining like a queen upon the lofty shores, I pass on to Port Townsend, which I reach early Tuesday morn, before the sun is up. Port Townsend is looking forward from its bright heights to a future of growth and enterprise. Things are going forward at a surprising rate. The music of the hammer is resounding and the busy flames are clearing the land, and elegant dwellings and massive blocks are being built. The population has nearly doubled since I was here last. The place was just waking up then and rubbing its eyes. Now it is hard at work, alive to splendid possibilities. Its natural advantages are great and must tell in the future. It has beauty, too—noble landscapes, broad water views resplendent in the ever-changing sunny atmosphere. The Cascade range and Mt. Baker and Mt. Ranier glitter in the distance. The residence part of the city is on a lofty bluff, and the prospects are delightful—majesty and grandeur mingling with exquisite loveliness.

This city is the port of entry for the whole of Puget Sound. A custom house is now being erected at a cost of $200,000. The sea is ninety miles distant. The bay has an anchorage in every port and is free from rocks and shoals, and can float the navies of the world. There are three large steam saw-mills with capacity of 3,000,000 feet per day, and these cannot supply the increasing market. Half a million dollars are invested in iron works. Steam vessels are being built. Coal has been found within eight miles of the city. Among the industries are a foundry, machine shops, soda works, brick yards, marble works, pottery works, iron smelting works, marine ways, etc. The business houses are constructed chiefly of stone and brick. The sea-front for half a mile is covered with docks and wharves. Puget Sound is aptly styled "the Mediterranean of the Pacific," and Port Townsend is the key to these magnificent waters. The straits of Fuca extend from the harbor to the sea, average twelve miles wide, and vessels may sail in on one wind without the aid of tug or the service of a pilot.

The principle necessity for Port Townsend is a railroad connection. This want is about to be supplied by the Port Townsend Southern Railway, a projected road to Portland, Oregon. The completion of this will give a wonderful impulse to the place. The road will pass through a section rich with lumber, coal, and iron. This will bring into play the splendid transportation facilities of Port Townsend. There is also a plan via Ship Harbor and ferry across the straits, to open a new trunk line to the Atlantic Coast.

The fish industry itself would make Port Townsend a thriving city. Captain Jacobs, of Gloucester, Mass., is here with his schooners, and halibut are being shipped in large quantities to the East.

It is no wonder that the pulse beats high with such splendors of material prosperity before the eye. But the lookout is not all for business. The educational facilities of the place are of a high order; and the advanced culture of Secularism is taking the lead. The atmosphere of Freethought is among these golden pictures. The Port Townsend North Western Normal College has been incorporated, and its founders have put it upon an entirely non-theological basis. It is for science and humanity. The site has been selected—a beautiful one on Mountain View, commanding scenery unsurpassed for magnificence, a hundred miles in every direction. Nature will have her royalty here. In the articles of incorporation is the following: "No book, tract, paper, catechism, or other publication of a partisan or denominational character shall be used or distributed in the school, nor shall any partisan or sectarian doctrine be taught therein, it being the intention of the incorporators that only Secular subjects shall be taught and that all religious and anti-religious subjects shall be relegated to the homes and churches." It will thus be seen that this is a Secular college. The incorporators are H. E. Morgan, L. P. Hastings, John J. Calhoun, C. W. Hunt, and D. W. Smith, all leading citizens and earnest humanitarians, of whom the world can say,

"For modes of faith let graceless zealots fight,
His can't be wrong whose life is in the right."

The lectures were well attended, the audience increasing from night to night. The second and third evenings all the seats were occupied. The number present was greater than at my previous lectures. Many of our Liberal friends are absent, spending the winter in California, and the increased attendance notwithstanding this shows the advance of Liberalism; that thought is on the wing, and the world feels its impulse, and the seeds dropped grow to harvest.

The Methodist clergyman of the place, a learned and Liberal gentleman, was present and made some criticism in a friendly spirit upon my discourse, in regard to my statements, founded upon Huxley's, that the order of creation given in Genesis did not agree with modern science. As it was a question, not of personal knowledge but of scientific authorities, it was agreed that we should both give our authorities the succeeding evening, which was done. I found that the only possible way the defenders of the Bible could reconcile its account of creation with modern science was to call the "great whales" reptiles. As Professor Huxley says, the pliancy of the Hebrew language in the hands of exegetes is marvelous. All must admit that reptiles came before birds, but Gladstone says that Moses did not take note of the reptiles, as they were a "fallen race." According to Principal Dawson, Moses did notice them, but labeled them "great whales," or as the Revised Version puts it, "great sea monsters." Huxley says that beyond doubt they were mammals, and of course not reptiles. According to science, mammals succeed birds, but according to Genesis they come before. According to science, reptiles precede birds, but according to Genesis they succeed birds, for "creeping things" were made on the sixth day. The discussion was a pleasant one, and I thank our reverend friend for his liberal and brave spirit.

D. W. Smith, a pioneer Liberal of the Truth Seeker and FREE-THOUGHT ranks, was especially courteous in his attentions, and, though full of business, took time to show me the points of interest and make me acquainted with the people and the place. It is to his earnest efforts that the city owes much of its prosperity to-day, and bright outlook. He has been ably assisted by the Hastings Bros., James Seavey, treasurer of the county and an ardent and generous Liberal; Captain Morgan, Captain Hines, J. A. Kuhn, John J. Calhoun, and others who take the spirit of Freethought and build for the future, and believe that heaven helps those who help themselves. So the Occident is about to gather in the riches of the Orient. East and West will join amidst these shining shores and spreading waters, and the arch of commerce will circle the vast Pacific from Japan to Puget Sound.

My good friend, Jack Slater, has been all over the world—a sailor in every port, a traveler in every land; even the sacred land beneath the towers of Jerusalem, but he has observed with the eyes of a philosopher and the spirit which no cloud of superstition obscures. He looks a veteran of half a century, but he is eighty-two years of age, and I believe has a score of years yet for this world. Age has not bent his frame. Tom Slater, his confrere, takes good care of the Secular Pilgrim, and sees him safe and sound from hotel to steamer, and that his voyage is comfortable.

Ed. L. Brown, who gave me a Bible for the benefit of the clergy—for I find the clergy don't always know what is in the Bible, and I have to read it to them occasionally—Smith, formerly of Shenandoah, Iowa, of Friend Holcomb's range; Benj. G. Smith, John Quinn, John Iffland, Mr. Behrman, mine host of the Central House, and many others, have given both joy and hope to labors where the setting sun makes promise of a glad tomorrow,

"And the world rolls Freedom's radiant way."

Meandering with comrade D. W. Smith over the wide-extending, pebbly shores, whom should I strike, at the lighthouse, which looks forth to the far sea, but A. W. Miller, a fellow-soldier of the Grand Army, and a Freethinker, who keeps the torch blazing for wandering ships, whose flashing rays, piercing the darkness, are better than all prayers. Miller has a thousand curiosities of shell and rock and ore, gathered from many travels, from field and mount and sea, readings of a by-gone age in crystal alphabet and rugged line, and through these we trace the corridors of the ages, with wonder and delight. Mr. and Mrs. Miller and the little children dwell by the sea in royal freedom, with no church bell to mingle with the music of the waves, and nature's panorama is undisturbed by the mimicries of theology.

I have just received a letter from my friends Mr. and Mrs. Newton and Virginia E. Vance, of Kansas, announcing the sad death of John F. Beck, of West Union, Ohio. I remember him well—a noble, earnest, Freethinker, by whose generous impulse and brave determination much was done at West Union for Freethought lectures. It was mainly through his efforts that Mr. Watts, Mr. Remsburg, and myself were able to arouse the community of his vicinity to some enthusiasm for progress and justice.

Our friends, who knew him well, write: "Though not a voluminous writer, his was a trenchant pen and one that hypocrisy would gladly have silenced. Without either wealth or position, still he was possessed of those intrinsic qualities deserving of the highest eulogy. As a man he was honest, as a friend warm and generous, as a Freethinker earnest, aggressive, and effective. We fear not to say that in years to come, when the old have died and the young grown up, the good seed sown by our lost friend will yield an abundant harvest." Farewell, dear friend, dying in darkness and loneliness by the wayside, thou shalt not be forgotten in the onward and glorious course of Freethought. We will cherish thy manliness, thy bright enthusiasm, thy earnest work, deeply, tenderly, for thy untimely end shall make more sweet in our hearts thy life of generous devotion. From the gloom of thy sudden grave, whose awful pall swept over thee like a dark, wild beast of terror, flowers shall bloom in sunlight; thy deeds shall be like rays of joy. Not to thought or progress or memory or hope or virtue shall thy heroic action die. It shall live in the world's immortal day.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Port Townsend, Dec., 7, 1888.

THE SUNDAY ISSUE UP AGAIN.

The National Sabbath Union held its convention in Washington last week, and petitions to Congress from every part of the country were presented, urging the passage of a bill which was introduced last session and known as the "Sunday Rest" bill. These petitions, it is claimed, contained no less than six million names. Mrs. J. C. Baleham, of Painesville, Ohio, reviewed the history of the movement in the society. Six million Protestants, 7,000,000 Catholics, and nearly a quarter of a million members of labor organizations, she said, had united in an earnest appeal to Congress for the enforcement of the Sabbath laws that Sabbath desecration might be checked.

Here is a danger to which every Freethinker in the country should be alive. We have not seen the text of the petition of the Sabbath Union, but the demand that "Sabbath desecration"—which means Sunday work or travel or recreation—shall be forbidden by law is sufficient to condemn it. The passage of a Sunday law by the legislators of the United States would be a plain violation of the Constitution, which says:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

Legally enforced observance of Sunday as a national holiday or holy day can be brought about only by an amendment of the Constitution, and there should be such a protest against the scheme that the legislature would pass no resolution in favor of such an amendment.

Already a petition counter to that of the Sabbath Association has been prepared. It reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned, adult residents of the United States, 21 years of age or more, hereby respectfully but earnestly petition your Honorable Body not to pass any bill in regard to the observance of the Sabbath, or Lord's day, or any other religious or ecclesiastical institution or rite; nor to favor in any way the adoption of any resolution for the amendment of the National Constitution that would in any way tend, either directly or indirectly, to give preference to the principles of any religion or of any religious body above another, or that will in any way sanction legislation upon the subject of religion: but that the total separation between Religion and State, assured by the National Constitution as it now is, may forever remain as our fathers established it."

We have a quantity of these petitions on hand in blank form and will forward them to any part of the country where there are people who will sign them. Certainly every citizen of California, every resident of this coast, should put his name to this petition. We take secular laws from Washington without serious complaint, but we object to blue laws and Puritanical enactments. A national Sabbath law means the Connecticut Sunday in California. It won't do.

Send to this office for an anti-Sabbath petition and get all your neighbors to sign it. The legislature is now in session, so that the work demands immediate attention.

RELIGION AND WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

In her letter to the last Congress of the American Secular Union, and later in the Woman's Tribune, Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton said:

"At a recent reception in Chicago a gentleman asked me, 'What is the chief obstacle in the way of woman suffrage?' I replied, 'The apathy of women themselves, due chiefly to the perversion of their religious sentiments.'"

The late election in Boston demonstrates the clearness of Mrs. Stanton's view in attributing woman's attitude toward the suffrage question to the influence of religion.

The church has opposed the rights of the female sex and does still. The reformers of Massachusetts gained for women the right of voting in school elections, and a sect of the Christian religion has turned the reform to its own advantage.

It will be remembered that by a vote of the school directors of Boston, not long since, a book which sets forth some facts of history denied by the Catholic church was thrown out of the public schools for that reason. The issue raised at the following election was not whether the suppressed book should be reinstated, but whether Catholics should be again placed upon the school board. Thus religion was introduced into politics. The religious enthusiasm of women was enlisted, and either by superior numbers or superior intelligence—probably as much the latter as the former—the Protestant women voters carried the day.

It was a victory for the best side, perhaps, but it was a victory over which Freethinkers have little reason to rejoice. It is a warning to America as well as to Rome, for it is not for a moment to be believed that the Puritan women of Boston voted against Catholics because they wished to see the schools secularized. The same women who voted Catholicism out of the schools would vote Protestantism into them if that were made the issue of a campaign. That women should vote at the call of the church is just as deplorable as that they should refrain from voting in obedience to the same dictator, and rather more dangerous. If the members of the Boston school board had been Freethinkers, and the suppressed book the Bible, and if the ministers of Boston had called upon the females of their congregations to defeat the election of the offenders, is there any one who doubts that those members would have been snowed under even deeper than the Catholics were?

When we consider that religious belief is not a test of eligibility to office in this country, and that the Boston women have made it such; when we remember that the Women's Christian Temperance Union joins the National Reform party in demanding that God shall be recognized in the Constitution and Christ ac-knowledgeed as the king of nations; when we recall that women are the most enthusiastic supporters of the clergy in their movement for a national Sunday law—when we keep these facts in mind, we are not half so enthusiastic as we should otherwise be in favor of woman suffrage. The prospect is that the first use made by the women of their new-found liberty will be to curtail the liberties of those who disagree with them. Such appears to be human nature, as male suffrage has demonstrated, so that no valid argument against female suffrage can be based on that tendency. Let us have liberty first, and meet the consequences as best we can.

It is to be regretted that the question before the voters of Boston could not have been the total secularization of the schools. This would have involved the vindication of a fundamental principle of our government, and if then the women had voted independently and wisely the election would have been a test of woman's fitness to deal with public questions, instead of a mere sectarian squabble wherein women were used as tools with which to work a victory for Protestants over Catholics.

ANOTHER CONVENTION.

It is proposed to have an Interstate Convention of Liberals at Chicago about the time of the Paine anniversary, January 29, 1889. Liberals in the Northwest are requested to correspond relative to the matter with E. A. Stevens, 241 Washington Boulevard, Chicago, Ill. As the holding of this convention will depend upon the responses received, those in favor of it should write Mr. Stevens at once.

A TOO PROTUBERANT CLERGY.

Perhaps we are prejudiced, but it seems to us that the clergy are attracting a good deal more attention than their numbers and importance entitle them to. Every paper, nearly, that one may pick up has something to say about a minister. One is in jail, another is suspended, another wants a divorce, the wife of another has just got one, and so forth.

Here is the Rev. Mr. Gamble, of the Hebron Baptist church at St. Paul, Minn. Scene, the holy sanctuary. A Mrs. Ballster makes charges against the Rev. Mr. Gamble that no moral man except a preacher would be guilty of. The Rev. Mr. Gamble replies in a manner reflecting on the sinlessness of Mrs. Ballster, and then he and Mr. Ballster have a fight to a finish with bare knuckles. Women scream, cry, and faint. Tableau. The minister resigns, and one of the Ballsters withdraws; the other is expelled.

Next we hear from Paterson, N. J. The landlady finds hairpins in the Rev. O. H. Corbin's bed-room. Miss Maloney is suspected and disappears. Returns. Infant. Confession. Was repeatedly enticed into pastor's room and overpowered. Sensation; scandal; curtain.

Next, Rev. Mr. Hooper, Morrisania, N. Y. Scandal, divorce, suspension, independent church.

Memphis, Tenn.; the Rev. Frederick Howard Jackson, charged with everything except murder and scuttling ships. Libel suits against deacons and newspapers. Tangled case.

Lots of minor cases: Reverend canon arrested for swindling; priest celebrates an incestuous marriage; clergyman sues for divorce. All these in one week.

Now it is only natural that men should like to get their names in print. We all have that weakness, but when one class or profession of men monopolize all the large, double-pica headlines in the newspapers, it is time for somebody to protest. We solemnly submit that the clergy are running the thing into the ground.

THE MEETINGS.

The list of contributors to the expenses of the coming meetings in January stands thus:

A. J. M. Campbell.....	$10	K. Parker.....	$1
Robert Gunther.....	3	John Robinett.....	1
Ed. Wegner.....	3	J. Robertson.....	1
Wm. Noble.....	2	A. friend.....	1
Philip Cowen.....	1	Samos Parsons.....	1
H. Replogle.....	1	Henry Kline.....	1
A. Derming.....	1	E. M. Hansson.....	1
Frank Butler.....	1	A. J. Andersen.....	1
Charles Kaiser.....	1	Henry Kaiser.....	1
Mrs. Rebecca Kaiser.....	1	A. H. Schou.....	1

The programme for the month is as follows, lectures to be delivered by S. P. Putnam:

Jan. 6.—“The Bible and Modern Thought.”

Jan. 13.—“Evolution and Creation.”

Jan. 20.—“The Religious Conspiracy.”

Jan. 27, 28, and 29.—Convention of Liberals of California, and Paine Anniversary Celebration.

All are invited, and seats will be free.

MOSES HULL has taken his paper, New Thought, from Des Moines, Iowa, to 675 West Lake street, Chicago. May success go with him.

ABOUT this time, when the bigots are agitating for a Sunday law, there should be a large circulation of Harry Hoover's “Sabbath Imposture.” Price 10 cents; fifteen for $1.

THE Walla Walla Liberal Club has ordered one thousand copies of E. A. Stevens's “God in the State” for general circulation. We are inclined to account Mr. Stevens's pamphlet a success. It has reached a sale of four thousand copies.

SILVERTON, Or., Liberals will celebrate Christmas in a Secular way. Putnam is to be the orator. Considering that the Silverton Secular Union has recently been buried by the “champion” Christian debater, its post mortem liveliness is something miraculous.

THE official statement now comes from Rome that the pope does not intend and has not intended to leave the Eternal City. Of course not. The pope is bishop of Rome, which he would not be anywhere else, and his two offices are identical. Whoever is bishop of Rome is the supreme pontiff. So say those who are supposed to know.

VOLTAIRE is thus described by the Readers used in the board schools of England:

“Voltaire: A famous French writer. Born 1694; died 1778. A clever, vain, worthless, man. Right in his hatred of tyranny, he was worse than wrong in his flippant irreverence. He had faith in nothing, in fact, except in his own surpassing merits.”

It would require a rare facility for condensation to print more misinformation in an equal number of lines.

In considering the subject of Spiritualism the other day, the Rev. J. A. Roney, O.P., gave utterance to these inspired remarks: “Angels, saints, and the souls in purgatory are under God's order and not subject to man, not even to the churches established by Christ. Mediums may call them, but they will not come. Neither can the reprobated souls come, because being consigned to the regions of perdition and being under God's sentence, it is not in the power of the devil to produce them at seances. If there are spirits at the service of spiritists it is certain that they are devils, and it is also certain that they have no good object in answering the call of the mediums. Spiritism is, beyond question, demonism.”

EVANGELIST MOODY has been in Walla Walla, Wash., recently. In one of his sermons he complained that Christians were not so familiar as they should be with the Bible, and urged them to study it. Thereupon the Liberals of Walla Walla issued a circular, which was handed out at Moody's meetings, giving “Five Christian Authorities on the Bible,” all of whom agreed that the book was not fit for indiscriminate perusal. The matter got into the local papers, and the Liberals are sustaining their side of the controversy with ability and good effect.

MR. JAMES H. WEST has ventured forth from 620 Atlantic avenue, Boston, with a monthly paper which he calls “The New Ideal, a Journal of Constructive Liberal Thought and Applied Ethics.” It has sixteen pages the size of FREETHOUGHT, and aims to fill the void created by the demise of Francis E. Abbot's Index. The names familiar to the readers of the Index appear among its list of contributors—Abbot, Whipple, Frothingham, Holland, Underwood, Traubel, Savage, etc.—all of whom are able writers. The New Ideal will represent Liberalism on dress parade. We need such a contingent to point to with pride when the respectability of Freethought is impugned, and hence we welcome the kid-gloved and tender-footed New Ideal. One dollar per annum.

OBSERVATIONS.

The frauds brought to the obscure light of the prevailing rainy day by a recount of the votes cast at the last election in San Francisco, are putting a severe strain upon our present method of ascertaining the popular will. It is growing more and more apparent that there was collusion between the supporters of Mr. Pond and the adherents of Mr. Story to sequester the votes cast for Mr. O'Donnell, and to add them impartially to the tally sheets of the two above-mentioned candidates for the mayoralty. A good many sincere people believe that the election of a man like Mr. O'Donnell would have been a public calamity, as was the election of the Rev. Mr. Kalloch a few years since, and these people are inclined to condone any moderate amount of connubiating—to use a Latin term—necessary to his defeat.

It seems to my weak intellect that we thus have before us a problem, any solution of which will condemn our cherished institutions. It resolves itself into these propositions:

1. If it has become necessary to so monkey with the ballots cast by American sovereigns as to thwart the will of the majority, and thereby avert a public calamity, then majority representation is not desirable, and the commission of fraud is commendable.

2. If by allowing the sovereigns aforesaid full scope and an honest count a calamity is precipitated upon the community, then, again, majority representation is an evil, and an honest election should be avoided.

There is no comfort in looking at the matter either way. There is something wrong in a system which involves the commission of fraud in order to obtain its best results.

In pursuing the matter further let us adopt the Socratic method. I suggest this because Socratic is a good word, and I have not heretofore found an opportunity to employ it.

QUESTION.—If C. C. O'Donnell had been elected mayor of San Francisco, in what terms should we allude to that event? ANSWER.—We should designate it as a public calamity.

Q.—Admitting your definition to be correct, what could be done about it? A.—Nothing.

Q.—Why? A.—Because he would be entitled to the office by virtue of the suffrages of a majority of our qualified voters.

Q.—You admit, then, that majority-rule may sometimes take the form of a public calamity. A.—I am forced to make that admission.

Q.—Does your fertile genius suggest no method of averting such a disaster? A.—It does.

Q.—What method? A.—A proper manipulation of the ballots.

Q.—Would not such manipulation constitute fraud? A.—The end justifies the means.

Q.—You are a Jesuit. But suppose a recount demonstrates that the Calamity is elected; then what? A.—As I said before, nothing.

Q.—We have, then, a public calamity. Who is responsible for it? A.—The voters.

Q.—What voters? A.—Who can tell? The ballot is secret.

Q.—Then somebody has inflicted a great evil on the community; the perpetrators are at large; and there is no way to ascertain their identity, so that they may be visited with the public reprobation which their conduct merits? A.—None whatever. I have just said that the ballot is secret.

Now, the foregoing is very much like a Catholic catechism, wherein the catechist is permitted to answer his questions to suit himself. Perhaps somebody else may be able to answer these questions in a way to reach a different result.

But it is useless to set forth an evil, apparent to everyone, and universally condemned, without suggesting a remedy. I have a remedy for the election evil put up in a plain envelope, and sent to any address on receipt of five cents. It is this: In the forward part of the ordinary every-day bobtail one-horse no-conductor, get-your-change-through-a-hole-in-the-door-car (description not original with me) there is a glass box, transparent when clean, into which the passenger drops his fare, and where the nickel lies in plain view of the driver and other passengers. When the driver has satisfied himself that the coin is good, he pulls a string, dumps the nickel into a lower receptacle, and rings up a fare.

I propose such a device as the above for receiving and recording ballots, to replace our present defective system. The name of the candidate is printed in bold letters on both sides of a stiff card of a proper size, having a coupon attachment bearing the name of the voter. This card is dropped into a glass receptacle. The chairman of the board of inspectors views it and calls out the names of the candidate and voter, which are checked off by the other inspectors and the poll clerks, and then rings up one vote for the candidate on a numbering machine, in full view of the voter and the surrounding spectators. The state of the vote may thus be ascertained at all hours of the day, and at the closing of the polls the number on the machine must correspond with the number of ballots in the box. There would be the further advantage that immediately upon the closing of the polls we should know who was elected without waiting for the count; and the impostor who now stays out half the night succeeding election day on the plea that he is after the returns, which he cannot give an intelligible report of the following morning, will have his brazen mask ruthlessly torn off. Furthermore, when the votes shall have been fully canvassed, the coupons bearing the names of the voters are to be detached from the ballot and presented to the candidates. The defeated office seeker will thus be able to detect whether the men who took his money and gathered about his bier (German word) were true to him or not, and the successful aspirant will know who deserve the offices within his power to bestow.

The question of responsibility for the election of any candidate will be for ever settled. Reference to the books of the inspectors and poll clerks make that easy. It is claimed that under the open ballot system employees would be visited with the penalty of a discharge from their employer if they vote against his interest. This would generally occur, however, only in cases where the employer's candidate was defeated; if successful he would not care to refer to the record. The victor is always generous. In the opposite event, the discharged employee would apply to the successful candidate, taking the record of his vote with him, and ask for a political situation, so that the last estate of such a man might be better than the first.

The legislative record of our representatives is open to inspection. Why should not that of the citizen be so likewise? The practice of open voting would cultivate a more robust public sentiment, and we should get more in the habit of doing what we believe to be right and taking the consequences. Those lacking the independence to do this would readily be excused from participating in an election. In New England I once saw a candidate for select man walk up to the polls with an open ballot and deliberately vote for himself. He had the sort of courage of his convictions that I am trying to advocate.

If anything in these remarks commend themselves to our legislators they are at liberty to make use of them in saving the country.

It is maintained that afflicted humanity has no friend like Jesus, but I am waiting for some advocate of that theory to bring forward the argument to support it. The other Sunday I heard a young man on the corner of Clay and Montgomery streets singing a song with the hybrid refrain, "There's no friend like Jesus, there's no place like home." Some hoodlums and a policeman came along and drove him away. Jesus did not interfere in his behalf. I followed him to Merchant street, where he hove to again and sang the same song. One of the hoodlums came also, and when the young man ceased singing, and began to exhort, the rough endeavored to stop him; told him the street was no place for preaching, and advised him to go to a priest for his religion. The young man wouldn't quit, and the hoodlum grabbed him by the collar. I thought that would be a good time for friend Jesus to take a hand, but he didn't materialize. The singing and preaching had drawn a crowd, and one attentive listener was an old, white-whiskered man, who sat on the hydrant. He carried a big, knotty cane, and when the hoodlum collared the exhorter, he moved from his seat to the middle of the street, grasped his cane firmly and deliberately by the end, and drew that hoodlum a two-handed blow across the lower end of his spine that sent him sprawling to the sidewalk, whence he forgot to return. After pausing to note the effect of his ministration, the old fellow took his seat again on the hydrant, and resumed his attitude of respectful but critical attention to what the exhorter was saying. I observed to the aged sinner that he appeared to be a staunch defender of the faith, and he replied, "Faith be damned. That young feller don't know what he is talking about; and you don't, and I don't, but he's going to enjoy the liberty of expressing himself while I'm around, I bet ye;" and the old chap gave his big cane a determined swish through the air. The exhorter went on from Adam to Moses, and from Moses to Christ; the crowd came and departed, but the hoodlum did not return; and finally the vindicator of American freedom stumped off up the street, whacking the sidewalk with his heavy stick as though every stone were a denier of religious liberty. When I left, the speaker was extolling the friendship of Jesus, and condemning to everlasting perdition all those who denied the faith—conspicuous among whom, I judge, is the old chap who defended the salvationist's right to make a nuisance of himself.

I like to see a man practice what he preaches, but I do not think he is always called upon to illustrate his argument in the way Mr. von Rhein, the agent for these premises, has recently done. Some time ago, when I went to pay the rent for FREETHOUGHT's quarters, Mr. von Rhein drew me into a discussion of the religious problem by asking me if I realized what the fate of the scoffer was likely to be. I said no, I was not clear on the subject; and he volunteered the information that all who denied the divinity of the Christian religion would be damned. I inquired if persons who had never heard of the Christian religion would meet that fate, and he said they undoubtedly would. "To illustrate," said Mr. von Rhein, "it is as if a person were approaching a deep hole; the fact that he does not know the hole is there will not save him from falling into it, however honest he may be." I couldn't reply to an argument like that except by saying that parties who dug pitfalls were more culpable than those who ignorantly walked into them, and that an infinite being who would play that sort of a trick on a blind man could not be depended upon to do the fair thing in any case. Mr. von Rhein said the arrangement was sufficiently equitable to satisfy his sense of justice.

The other day Mr. von Rhein was inspecting a building on Montgomery street, and illustrated the foregoing argument by walking through a skylight and taking a drop of some twenty feet to the floor below. His fall did not result fatally, but considerable blame is attached to the owners of the building, who neglected to provide proper safeguards against such accidents, while

Mr. von Rhein is entirely exonerated. When he has recovered from his shock I may take occasion to ask him whether he holds himself or the owners of the building responsible for his drop through the skylight. If he takes all the blame to himself I shall then understand how it is that he believes in the culpability of people who, as he imagines, walk blindfolded into the everlasting pit.

G. E. M.

A LECTURE IN OAKLAND.

B. F. Underwood will lecture in Oakland, Cal., Sunday evening, December 23, at 7:30 o'clock, in Odd Fellows' Hall. Subject, "The New Science and the Old Faith."

As a lecturer and debater Mr. Underwood has been well and favorably known to the Liberals of this country for the past twenty years. He has no superior as a logician and clear reasoner. The lecture in Oakland is free to the public. Remember the date, next Sunday evening, December 23.

From Oakland Mr. Underwood goes to Stockton to lecture the last three days of the month. Mr. Underwood has received so many applications for lectures which he cannot fill on account of previous engagements in the East that he has decided to return to the coast in the spring.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The recount of votes is giving O'Donnell large gains for mayor.—The reputable liquor dealers of Los Angeles have perfected an organization under the name of the "Mutual Relief Liquor Association," for the purpose of elevating the moral standard of their class, and to protect each other. The league will endeavor to suppress all dives and objectionable places, and assist the city authorities in their work of purifying the city.—The Rev. Edward H. Lewis, of Grass Valley, Cal., has applied for a divorce from his wife on the ground that she is an opium fiend.—California wines are gaining favor abroad, and vine growers are feeling elated.—A trainload of California products has started for the East. It will exhibit its contents at all places of importance beyond Omaha, with the object of informing farmers and others of the advantages of the Golden State.—Father Franchi, of the Italian church in this city, is again before the public. This time it is neither in relation to baptism fees, refusal to accompany a body to the grave, nor in the sensational role of the officiant at the marriage of a sexagenarian and a young girl three marine leagues off the heads. The priest now complains that Henrico Lunardini and one Antonelli have threatened to blackmail him and have vaguely threatened his life.—San Bernardino county promises to ship 350,000 boxes of the present crop of oranges, which will mature in about a month.—The rainfall thus far is greatly in excess of the usual quantity.—Governor Waterman will give the address of welcome to the State Teachers' convention at Sacramento on the 25th inst.—The building of a railroad from Seattle to the Canadian line is thought to be assured.—The California National Bank has suspended. Irregularities are charged upon the cashier.—Coquelin, the French comedian, is in San Francisco.

Henry George is back in New York from Europe. He holds that the single tax and free trade are to be the issues of the future.—New York ministers discussed last Sunday the question why people do not go to church. As no two gave the same reason, the problem was not solved.—The church scandal at Morristania, N. Y., has culminated in the public announcement of the Rev. Mr. Hooper's suspension from the ministry, which was made from the pulpit of St. Paul's Reformed church last Sunday. The suspended clergyman will start a church of his own.—Chicago Anarchists held peaceable meetings last Sunday. Come to think of it, all the meetings of Anarchists have been innocuous except when disturbed by the police.—The Sisters' convent and the residence of the Catholic priest at Mora, N. M., were entirely destroyed by fire last week. The loss was heavy and nothing was saved.—New York editors declare that they will defy the law which goes into effect Jan. 1, prohibiting the publication of details of executions by electricity.—Bills are being prepared providing for the admission of the territories of Dakota, Montana, Washington, and New Mexico as states.—The National Sabbath Union has elected General Harrison vice-president.—A bill providing for dynamite guns for the defense of United States harbors was before the Senate last week. The bill provides that twenty of these guns shall be placed around San Francisco harbor, fifteen at San Diego harbor, and fifteen at Portland, Or.—There have been severe blizzards in the East. At Montreal the thermometer registered 15 degrees below zero.

The Panama canal company is seriously embarrassed. The French government declines to interfere, and De Lesseps is much cast down.—The Rev. Canon Robert Hall was recently arrested in Scotland for swindling. He is the same canon who was in New York last September, and left a long string of creditors behind him.—It is thought that Explorer Stanley is in the hands of the mahdi at Khartoum.—George Routledge, head of the well-known publishing firm of George Routledge & Sons, London, is dead.—In the English Commons Dec. 14 the bill providing for the closing of taverns on Sunday was rejected by a vote of 167 to 160.—The pope has expressed a willingness to give Dr. McGlynn's case a rehearing, and McGlynn may go back to the altar of St. Stephen's. In such case Archbishop Corrigan, McGlynn's accuser, would doubtless resign.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

R. B. WESTBROOK, LL.D., PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary.....241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treasurer.....Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com.....120 Lexington ave., New York
MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com., 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago.

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

Leonard Geiger, Hudson.....	$50
Mrs. L. Geiger, ".....	10
T. K. Burrows (per L. G.), Hudson.....	10
G. A. F. de Lespinasse, M. D., Orange City.....	25
Wm. Whittick, Dushore.....	25
John Downs, Steubenville.....	5
A. J. Kraft, Grantfork.....	5
Mrs. Josephine Duane, N. Y. city.....	5
Reuben and Sophie Newkirk, Paxton.....	5
Francis and Ruth Brettell, Rochester.....	5
John F. Kryder, Alliance.....	3
S. S. Hayden, Charleston.....	2
C. Severance, Los Angeles.....	2
John W. White, Goshen.....	2
David L. Evans, Goshen.....	2
Peter Nelson, Goshen.....	1
Chas. Haas (per W.F.F.) Stockton.....	1
W. F. Freeman, ".....	1
Chas. Sperry, ".....	1
Harvey Squires, ".....	1
W. S. Fowler, ".....	1
J. C. Gage, ".....	1
T. J. Pope, ".....	1
Jacob Grundicke, ".....	1
T. Morris Perot, Philadelphia.....	1

A SECULAR CRUSADE AGAINST GIRARD COLLEGE.

Our friends will remember that at the recent congress of the American Secular Union, it was resolved to call upon the Liberals and Secularists of the United States to subscribe sufficient to defray the running expenses, literary propaganda, and an aggressive crusade to restore Girard College to the standard indicated in the will of its founder. All true Secularists—all lovers of justice—feel that the time has arrived to act and to act determinedly and resolutely. An enterprise, such as the restoration of Girard College to a course of instruction contemplated by the noble-minded Freethinker to whom it owes its existence, is one which must commend itself at once to the approval of all who are in sympathy with the "Nine Demands." It is scarcely necessary, therefore, to emphasize the importance of this matter or to point out the many reasons which imperatively urge this task upon the American Secular Union—the only guardian of mental liberty in the land. For the benefit of those, however, who may not have given the subject serious attention, I will refer to a few of them. In the first place, there can be no question of more vital importance than that of securing secular education. Every effort to thwart that is momentous—an obstacle to our movement—a menace that must be met. That an institution conceived and founded in the very spirit of modern Secularism has been diverted from its original purpose and converted into a medium for ecclesiastical propaganda is surely sufficient to arouse from their lethargy the Liberals of every shade, and a justification for decisive action on our part.

Again, as Dr. Westbrook has ably pointed out in his work on "Girard's Will," the fact that sectarianism has been able to so successfully evade the conditions imposed, cannot fail to produce a discouraging effect upon other generous-hearted and public-spirited Freethinkers, who might otherwise feel disposed to endow similar institutions? What security, what guarantee is there that any testator's wishes shall be respected, when the positive and unequivocal expressions of Stephen Girard have been thus wantonly and grossly disregarded? On the other hand, if Secularism can demonstrate its ability to successfully combat sectarian subtlety and ecclesiastical encroachment, it will inspire with confidence any who should be inclined to follow in Girard's footsteps. Thus a two-fold purpose might be achieved. Girard College could be rescued from the hands of the Philistines, or rather the Pharisees, and similar institutions would certainly follow in the wake.

But the strongest argument favoring action upon this matter by the American Secular Union is the immense impulse—the prestige and numerical accessions which cannot fail to follow it. While the American Secular Union is to-day stronger than it has been for some years, we regretfully admit our insignificance as compared to opulent orthodoxy. But if we challenge the trustees of Girard College to give "an account of their stewardship" and evince a determination to fight even in the United States courts for the vindication of the chivalrous spirit and noble generosity of Stephen Girard, we shall demand such recognition, as an organization, as will strike dismay and terror to the desecrators of the dead. Doubtless there are thousands throughout the land whose thoughts and sentiments are identical with ours, whom every Liberal should endeavor to reach, who will gladly flock to our standard and bring to us their encouragement and financial co-operation. For in order to commence this crusade we must have money. The sinews of war must be furnished. Modern crusades are conducted on a strictly cash basis. It has often been said that the pen is mightier than the sword; be that as it may, in this age money is mightier than either. It only takes a comparatively small amount to carry through a just cause, while an unjust one has to pay in proportion to its dishonesty. In that is our only consolation, for we must admit that money largely controls the intellectual forces of our time. Men speak for money, write for money, and fight for money. Therefore the American Secular Union has no alternative—the choice of weapons is not accorded us, we must meet the enemy on his own terms.

May this appeal meet with a prompt, cheerful, and overwhelming response. Let all contribute according to their ability. Those who can afford should give $1,000, and scores can easily spare $100; but if they can't do either, let them send $25 or even $5. Don't fail to do something. We had anticipated that $1,000 would start the proceedings, but President Westbrook assures me that he must have $2,000 as soon as possible. Our president has spent two years of arduous study and labor on this question, has written and lectured extensively, and expended over $500 and is willing to do more, as we should go into this crusade with a stern determination to secularize Girard College and purge it of its orthodox incubus.

Recalling the spirit—not the purpose—which actuated the crusaders of old, their enthusiasm, their sacrifices, their loyalty to the cause they espoused, shall we be less inspired for a more exalted purpose? Shall not their devotion be ours? And even as all their aspirations were centered on rescuing the holy sepulchre, so shall that of the Liberals of the United States be centered upon the restoration of the noblest charity known to man—Girard College—to pure Secularism and pure morality.

From the generous-hearted, gallant John E. Remsburg comes a magnanimous proposition to lead the crusade and pay all his own expenses in the warfare. Hark to the bugle blast:

OAK MILLS, KAN., Dec. 3, 1888.

MY DEAR STEVENS: The American Secular Union announces its intention to rescue Girard College from ecclesiastical domination. The undertaking is a laudable one and at the same time a most difficult one. A robber seldom surrenders his plunder until overpowered and compelled to relinquish it. The Christian city of Philadelphia, the custodian of Girard's bequest, backed by the Christian commonwealth of Pennsylvania, authorizes and upholds this outrage, and will doubtless do all in its power to perpetuate it. But even if the Union does not succeed in wresting this institution from the clutches of priestcraft, it can show the world that a great theft has been committed, and it can expose the thief. I wish to contribute something towards this work, and in lieu of more substantial aid, I desire through you to make the following proposition: I will deliver four lectures, one in Chicago, one in St. Louis, one in New York, and one in Philadelphia, if the Liberals of those cities will raise $100, $25 for each lecture, this money to be paid into the treasury of the Secular Union, and used for the purpose named. Yours very truly,

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

Brother John can safely count on Chicago. Who next?
E. A. STEVENS.

INGERSOLL'S REPLY TO CARDINAL MANNING.

From the North American Review.
VII.

Are we justified in saying that the Catholic church is of divine origin because the Pagans failed to destroy it by persecution?

We will put the cardinal's statement in form:

Paganism failed to destroy Catholicism by persecution, therefore Catholicism is of divine origin,

Let us make an application of this logic:

Paganism failed to destroy Catholicism by persecution; therefore, Catholicism is of divine origin.

Catholicism failed to destroy Protestantism by persecution; therefore, Protestantism is of divine origin.

Catholicism and Protestantism combined failed to destroy Infidelity; therefore, Infidelity is of divine origin.

Let us make another application:

Paganism did not succeed in destroying Catholicism; therefore, Paganism was a false religion.

Catholicism did not succeed in destroying Protestantism; therefore, Catholicism is a false religion.

Catholicism and Protestantism combined failed to destroy Infidelity; therefore, both Catholicism and Protestantism are false religions.

The cardinal has another reason for believing the Catholic church of divine origin. He declares that the "Canon Law is a creation of wisdom and justice to which no statutes at large or imperial pandects can bear comparison;" "that the world-wide and secular legislation of the church was of a higher character, and that as water cannot rise above its source, the church could not, by mere human wisdom, have corrected and perfected the imperial law, and therefore its source must have been higher than the sources of the world."

When Europe was the most ignorant, the canon law was supreme. As a matter of fact, the good in the canon law was borrowed—the bad was, for the most part, original. In my judgment, the legislation of the republic of the United States is in many respects superior to that of Rome, and yet we are greatly indebted to the civil law. Our legislation is superior in many particulars to that of England, and yet we are greatly indebted to the common law; but it never occurred to me that our Statutes at Large are divinely inspired.

If the canon law is, in fact, the legislation of infinite wisdom, then it should be a perfect code. Yet, the canon law made it a crime next to robbery and theft to take interest for money. Without the right to take interest the business of the world would, to a large extent, cease and the prosperity of mankind end. There are railways enough in the United States to make six tracks around the globe, and every mile was built with borrowed money on which interest was paid or promised. In no other way could the savings of many thousands have been brought together and a capital great enough formed to construct works of such vast and continental importance.

It was provided in this same wonderful canon law that a heretic could not witness against a Catholic. The Catholic was at liberty to rob and wrong his fellow man, provided the fellow man was not a fellow Catholic, and in a court established by the vicar of Christ, the man who had been robbed was not allowed to open his mouth. A Catholic could enter the house of an unbeliever, of a Jew, of a heretic, of a Moor, and before the eyes of the husband and father murder his wife and children, and the father could not pronounce in the hearing of a judge the name of the murderer. The world is wiser now, and the canon law, given to us by infinite wisdom, has been repealed by the common sense of man.

In this divine code it was provided that to convict a cardinal bishop, seventy-two witnesses were required; a cardinal presbyter, forty-four; a cardinal deacon, twenty-four; a sub-deacon, acolyte, exorcist, reader, ostiarius, seven; and in the purgation of a bishop, twelve witnesses were invariably required; of a presbyter, seven; of a deacon, three. These laws, in my judgment, were made, not by God, but by the clergy.

So too in this cruel code it was provided that those who gave aid, favor, or counsel, to excommunicated persons, should be anathema, and that those who talked with, consulted, or sat at the same table with or gave anything in charity to the excommunicated should be anathema.

Is it possible that a being of infinite wisdom made hospitality a crime? Did he say: "Whoso giveth a cup of cold water to the excommunicated shall wear forever a garment of fire?" Were not the laws of the Romans much better? Besides all this, under the canon law the dead could be tried for heresy, and their estates confiscated—that is to say, their widows and orphans robbed. The most brutal part of the common law of England is that in relation to the rights of women—all of which was taken from the Corpus Juris Canonici, "the law that came from a higher source than man."

The only cause of absolute divorce as laid down by the pious canonists was propter infidelitatem, which was when one of the parties became Catholic and would not live with the other who continued still an unbeliever. Under this divine statute, a pagan wishing to be rid of his wife had only to join the Catholic church, provided she remained faithful to the religion of her fathers. Under this divine law, a man marrying a widow was declared a bigamist.

It would require volumes to point out the cruelties, absurdities, and inconsistencies of the canon law. It has been thrown away by the world. Every civilized nation has a code of its own, and the canon law is of interest only to the historian, the antiquarian, and the enemy of theological government.

Under the canon law, people were convicted of being witches and wizards, of holding intercourse with devils. Thousands perished at the stake, having been convicted of these impossible crimes. Under the canon law, there was such a crime as the suspicion of heresy. A man or woman could be arrested, charged with being suspected, and under this canon law, flowing from the intellect of infinite wisdom, the presumption was in favor of guilt. The suspected had to prove themselves innocent. In all civilized courts, the presumption of innocence is the shield of the indicted, but the canon law took away this shield, and put in the hand of the priest the sword of presumptive guilt.

(Concluded next week.)

SPIRITUALISTIC AND OTHER FRAUDS.

The confession of the Fox sisters has, to a certain extent, convulsed the nation, and every one seems to stand ready to accept their statements at once as conclusive evidence of the absolute fraudulency of all phenomena which have been attributed to Spiritualism.

Spiritualism is a fraud of the first water, and it was made possible by that other fraud, Christian theology. And these two frauds have nicely paved the way for this last, but not least, fraud, the Fox sisters' confession.

The story itself as it reads in the San Diego Bee, to any analytical mind, is a perfectly transparent fraud, and it is certainly astonishing how readily the ordinary mind will grasp the announcement of a fraud and never perceive the possibility of another fraud in the announcement itself.

Why I boldly pronounce these things frauds is because I have proved them to be such as the result of twenty years of investigation under favorable auspices for careful demonstration and under a great variety of circumstances; and I am now prepared to show that the Fox expose is as great a fraud as the other. The vast amount of phenomena that has been demonstrated through the channel opened by so-called Spiritualism cannot be set down as false in fact, but may be in theory. There is a science at the bottom of these phenomena, and were it not for the warped and trammelled condition of the majority of men's minds by a hereditary belief in the supernatural, the light of truth would have dawned on us long ago. But, instead, we have the result of an attempt to demonstrate a theory instead of searching for facts regardless of theories.

If such men as Judge Edmonds and Professor Hare had been free from the superstitions of theology, and had not been rooted and grounded in the belief in immortality, they would have reached very different conclusions as the result of their investigations.

Let us analyze this famous expose. Soon after the Fox family had taken up their residence in Hydesville they began to hear knockings in the house, which increased rapidly for three months and gave these good people a great deal of trouble and annoyance. Now here are two girls, nine and twelve years old, making all of this noise and trouble by cracking their toes in bed. Here are the father and mother up night after night ransacking the house to find the cause of all this noise, and yet these two innocent girls, without any previous training, were capable of deceiving their parents all this time, and were fiends enough to keep up the deception and tantalize and terrorize their own father and mother, at the risk of the possible destruction of the family. If they were such fiends then, what must they be now after a life of fraud and deceit? Who could or would believe a word they would say now? On the other hand, how could the cracking of toes in the bed make raps on a door so plain as to deceive a man standing on the other side of the door and listening, ready to open it instantly? Ventriloquism is not possible with the toes. These people were not deceiving themselves through the belief that it was something supernatural, but "clung to the belief that some natural explanation of them could be found." What is to be thought of these girls for continuing the deception and taking the chances of discovery not only by their parents but by the neighbors who were being called in? What is to be thought of the brain-power of all of the neighbors who made all of those investigations and signed depositions that the "family had no agency in producing those sounds?" How about the mental capacity of four hundred persons in Corinthian Hall who could hear raps all over the room, which were, in reality, made by the cracking of a girl's toes inside her shoes, and not be able to discover the fraud? And what of the credulity of the reading public of to-day who can believe that all of the table-tipping, piano-moving, chair-lifting, door-slaming, slate-writing, picture-painting, instrument-playing and the great multitude of mental and physical phenomena which have been shown were the direct result of the cracking of two girls' toes?

Did these girls have anything to do with the thousands of other people who have held circles and developed a mass of phenomena which has astonished the world? If cracking the toes is all there is to it, why has it not all been produced by the same means? If these girls are responsible for all this fraud, why has it not been discovered before? If there is nothing to it but cracking of toes, why did it go beyond these two girls? Why is it that the same frauds are perpetrated by a great number of others through different means? How is it possible that so simple a thing as a little innocent diversion of these girls should have developed into such a gigantic swindle, and convulsed nations, if there was nothing else to it? To sum up the whole thing, this confession is an infamous adding of "insult to injury." It is an insult to the intelligence of the American people, technically and in the abstract.

There is behind this mass of so-called spiritual phenomena a scientific principle involving the origin of life, and when we shall have evolved beyond the degradation of supernaturalism, and learned to comprehend the material of the universe, this science will commence to unfold to us, and the broad expanse of primitive truth will cease to be obscured by spiritualistic frauds. We shall then find that electro-magnetism is the basis of all these extraordinary phenomena. Among its many phases, some of which we do not yet fully comprehend, and one of the most important, is mental telegraphy. To this may be attributed nine-tenths of everything that ever has been demonstrated by so-called Spiritualism. The concentrated mental power of a number of individuals is something wonderful, and where successful means can be employed in massing that power, wonderful results may be obtained. The brain or nerve-center is the instrument through which the electric force is received and transmitted, and the earth and the air the medium through which thought is conveyed. Man, if he possesses that peculiarity of brain power, or nerve force, susceptible enough to receive the necessary impressions, may become a station where messages may be intercepted or supplied. When a circuit is established between two or more persons who are sensitive to the current, the system may be extended to include all persons who have ever made an impression on the persons acting as sensitive instruments. Hence the messages to friends from so-called departed spirits. A more tangible form of mental communication is the paper pellet-medium. In writing on and folding or rolling a piece of paper it becomes charged with the electro-magnetism of the person, and when received by the so-called spiritual medium, who is susceptible enough to be impressed, the contents of the paper is transmitted at once and can readily be repeated. In addition to this the peculiar quality of the electro-magnetism of the person is transmitted so that the individual impression is also received. Still another form of using the force is demonstrated by mesmerizers. When they find a subject sufficiently sensitive to their peculiar quality of electro-magnetism they may mentally telegraph an order to that person and have it instantly obeyed, and a considerable distance does not interfere with the result. Slate-writing is a combination of mental telegraphy and material mesmerism, the slate and a bit of pencil being readily susceptible to electro-magnetic power, and the circuit having been established between the performers, the pencil yields to the will of the operators and records the impressions of either one of the operators or of some one who either is or has been connected with one of them. This is a difficult performance, and requires the very finest of conditions and the most powerful of mediums.

I have seen Watkins (the most wonderful slate-writer in the world) as powerfully convulsed by contact with a paper pellet, the size of a pea, which I had rolled between my fingers, as an ordinary man would be under the power of an ordinary galvanic battery. He has caused slate-writing without touching the slate, and at a distance of fifteen feet, on slates that he never saw before.

We have as yet but a slight understanding of the problem of life, and before we are prepared to comprehend it we have a large amount of error to overcome. The dense ignorance of the masses, caused by superstition, which has become hereditary to such an extent that it is only a phenomenal brain that can get out of the old ruts of thought and investigate the resources of nature, has to be overcome before we are fully prepared to comprehend scientific truths. The history of the past, however, ought to teach us to have more respect for the pioneers in the field of investigation, and we should, were it not that our brains have to be remodeled by generations of development before we are able to comprehend even what we see with our eyes. We cannot deny the fact that men, now and then, are born with intellectual capacities a hundred years in advance of the common mental condition of the people. And what is gratifying in the extreme is the fact that these men are correct in their advanced theories as a general rule, and we are learning to accept their theories as truth much sooner than did the people of ancient times. I hope to see the time when the credulity of the American people cannot be imposed upon by mysterious and miraculous performances.

San Diego, Cal.

RANFORD WORTHING.

Kansas Notes.

To the Editors of Freethought:

After recovering from the result of some mistakes which cost the weary Secularist something more than time and patience, I bid adieu to my friends at Hiawatha, and landed at this pleasant village, Sabetha, on the 12:40 train from the east.

Here I found a host of staunch Freethinkers; but owing to the absence of Liberal papers, they are several years behind the times, and can hardly be called Secularists. To dub them "moss-backs" would be rather unfair, for they are doing as well as they know, yet that is the impression their "wise" and confidential advice makes upon one who means business.

After arranging for a lecture at the G. A. R. hall with the veteran undertaker, Mr. N. S. Smith, who is also the police justice of the town, I started for Seneca, the seat of Nemaha county. Here I found Liberals so numerous, I made no attempt after the first hour to record their names.

Mr. J. H. Peckham, the city druggist, who is also the president of the United Independents at that place, acted as my escort, and we were not long in finding the most prominent and outspoken of this society. So numerous and deserving are the Liberals of this city that to name them would hardly be doing justice to the limited columns of FREETHOUGHT.

This society, though at one time a brilliant success, presents at present a most doleful aspect. Like a scythe without an edge, a locomotive without steam, it is a form without plan or purpose. It is the wish of a large majority of its most progressive and courageous members to reorganize and unite under the banner of the American Secular Union. These good people, with few exceptions, have a share of worldly comforts, and are both feared and felt in all election contests. The politics of the county is practically in the hands of these noble thinkers, and Mr. Brooks, the police justice, tells me it becomes the opposition to count the cost when they make religion an issue in politics.

I gave my lecture at Sabetha on Sunday evening at 7 P.M. to an audience of about two hundred people, who listened to an exposition of Secularism with a most patient attention. Mr. Jonathan Scott and sons, Jake Hoffman, Mr. Lyman, and others whose names I did not get, were there from Morrill. Father Sweetland seemed as happy as if he was attending a camp-meeting in his early Methodist days. The ladies and young people turned out generally, which was a good sign, and I must say Sabetha can and must support a strong Secular Union. We are to meet on Tuesday evening for that purpose.

Nemaha county is an exception for fertile soil and fertile brain. No prophet can predict the result of these most promising conditions.

Sabetha, Kan., Dec. 10, 1888.

D. G. CROW.

Whew!

To the Editors of Freethought:

A few months ago I was induced to subscribe for FREETHOUGHT. I need hardly say that it has not come up to my expectations. The freedom with which it publishes the most dastardly abuse of those who differ with it deserves strong censure. The report of the Underwood-Braden discussion, in issue for December 8, is an outrage upon your subscribers, even if it was "prepared by the committee of the Silverton Secular Union." I am a Secularist with a big S, and have the honor of a personal acquaintance with Mr. Underwood, and I admire him exceedingly for his conscientious convictions and scholarly attainments, but I will not stand aside, with silent pen, and see those who differ from him most vilely abused in the columns of what ought to be a respectable and enlightened journal. If matter similar in character to that alluded to above is to appear in subsequent issues, you might as well erase my name from your books at once. Yours, etc.

Chicago, Ill.

W. A. HALE.

Something for the Cause.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have been wanting to show that I appreciate the work of FREETHOUGHT, and other Liberal work, but as I am pretty hard up I can only do enough to show a disposition. So please find inclosed $10, and appropriate as follows: $2 for the paper another year, $1 as a gift subscriber, $1 for the January meeting, $1 for taking out that lager beer advertisement, $3 to help President Westbrook clear out Girard College, and $2 for four copies of Helen H. Gardener's "Men, Women, and Gods." I would like to help much more, but many reasons prevent at this time.

Fresno, Cal.

JOSEPH LEE.

More of the Sinews.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed please find money order for $3 toward defraying expenses of lectures in January (next). One dollar each from Charles Kaiser, Mrs. Rebecca Kaiser, and myself. I have returned a list of fifteen signers who are in favor of a state Liberal organization, but all could not render financial aid at present. I hope the lectures in January will be a success, and that the convention at Irving hall will terminate in a state organization. Truly yours with best wishes,

Loomis, Cal.,

HENRY KAISER.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Please find inclosed $3—$2 for next year's subscription and $1 for the meetings to be held in January.

Oakland, Cal.

A. J. ANDERSEN.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35. for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses.....	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons..	$3.40
" Gold do., $5 and .....	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz.	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles.....	.35
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6....	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one....	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings.....	.50
6 Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives..	1.75	6 Guitar Strings.....	.75
" Forks..	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to.....	10.00
" Teaspoons..	1.70

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see back numbers of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE, Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" medicine. Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

A NEW FEATURE, Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling. Agents who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding. MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Cloth, 75 cts.

Address this office

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are alling should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY. Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press. But, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors. DR. FELLOWS.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

he Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.

33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for the amount of my Commission.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.

OLIVER HINCKLEY . . . SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

SECULAR THOUGHT.

A Journal of Liberal Thought.

The Official Organ of the Canadian Secular Union.

Published Weekly. $2 per Year.

CHARLES. WATTS, Editor,

31 Adelaide st. East, Toronto,
Ont., Canada.

Read what Colonel Ingersoll says: "I am much pleased with Secular Thought—with its form, arrangement, and contents—above all, with its spirit. It is splendid. I don't see how it could be better. I read it with the greatest of pleasure." COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Read what B. F. Underwood says: "Mr. Watts publishes a solid paper. Secular Thought is the best Liberal paper that now comes to me." B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Read what Helen H. Gardener says: "I heartily congratulate our Canadian friends upon the fact that they are represented by Secular Thought, a paper of which they can be justly proud, and which they need never hesitate to hand to their most delicate-minded friends, however religious they may be." HELEN H. GARDENER.

Miracles and Miracle Workers,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price . . . . . 10 cts.

Christian Absurdities,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price . . . . . 20 cts.

Both for sale at this office.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application.

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author. Preface and Notes by the Editor, including various notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald,
504 Kearny st. San Francisco.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. I—No. 52.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1888.

PRICE, FIVE CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PROPRIETORS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - DECEMBER 29, 1888

THERE seems to be no protection for public men. The Sabbath Association elected General Harrison vice-president of that organization, and now the Anarchists of Chicago have made the mayor and the chief of police of that city honorary members. It would be difficult to decide whether the president-elect or the Chicago officials have been most honored.

THE clergy of San Francisco are circulating petitions for a national Sunday law, and urging their parishioners to sign them. We have counter petitions, asking the legislature to let the Constitution remain as it is, which we will send anywhere that people can be found who will affix their signatures to them. If Sunday is to be preserved as a holiday and a day when every man can choose his own kind of amusement, it behooves Liberals to remember the price of liberty and to exercise that vigilance which alone secures it.

THE Buddhists of Japan think that because Christianity is dying out there is a great opening for the spread of Buddhism in America and Europe. They have accordingly entered on a propaganda, and are about to send out preachers and found schools, and meanwhile have begun the issue of a magazine in English called the Bijou of Asia. The Japanese Buddhists have our sympathy. They will learn by experience that while the Christian superstition is not as prevalent as formerly among enlightened people, other superstitions are rejected to an equal extent. The rationalism that discards Christianity will serve Buddhism in the same way.

THE religious conflict deepens. A congregation of German evangelists in New York issue an appeal, in which they say: "The pope is a greater power to-day than any sovereign. He menaces the United States. Right here in New York Archbishop Corrigan is absolute ruler. While millions are expended for the Catholic church, nothing is done for the Evangelists. It is the duty of all people who have other than Catholic belief to make one front against the phalanx of their enemies." It would seem that some action should follow the thousands of protests made against the universally recognized encroachments of the Romish church.

IT is again stated that Colonel Ingersoll has determined to come to California for the winter, and January 25 is the date given for his arrival. As Pomona claims that it will have the honor of entertaining him, we fear the report was started by the gentleman who, during the late campaign, sustained so disastrous a correspondence with our English minister, Mr. Sackville West. If the colonel should visit this city about the last of next month he would find many of his admirers gathered here to give him welcome.

THERE are two views to be taken of the case of Mr. George Ross, who was converted during the recent Moody revival at Port Townsend, W. T., and who fell dead on December 21, immediately after being baptized. The first view is that if that date was his appointed time to die, and if baptism is necessary to salvation, he was sprinkled none too soon and escaped perdition by a narrow margin. The other view is that if a person is not in good health and liable to be injured by excitement, he should stay at home when revivalists are at large, and avoid giving rein to his religious emotions. We do not know which consideration best applies to the case of Mr. Ross.

NEWS AND NOTES

THE railroad now comes to Snohomish, which has nearly doubled in population since my last visit. But the woods are as big as ever, and the stumps have not yet disappeared from the middle of the streets. The primeval life remains amid the bustle of civilization. It will take a long time for these mighty forests to vanish. They are an innumerable horde, and stand at bay with broad, defiant arms. But the axe resounds, and almost a hundred mills keep up the music of industry, and the rushing stream is piled with "monumental ruins." So huge is the mass of logs that it swept away the railroad bridge, and when I arrived in the misty morning, I was obliged to descend a long flight of steps from the lofty trestle-work, and walk about half a mile to the ferryboat, a pursuit of Snohomish under difficulties. Passing over, I was met on the "farther side" by J. S. Martin and W. F. Eddy, the "angels" of the Secular host, a vast improvement upon the ancient species of the winged and harp order. Friend Eddy at once took me to the heights where Mrs. Eddy made welcome the heretic at the sparkling fireside. Although the clouds did gather, and the rains beat outside, there was good cheer within. Everything at this home is so cordial that the uncanny weather cannot disturb the mind. Mr. and Mrs. Eddy came from away down East, near by the "jumping-off place," and when they arrived at Snohomish only one house was built. But there were loggers' camps about, and a Maine man is at home among these, and our friends plunged into the new life and helped to conquer the wilderness. Through changing fortunes they have made sufficient to take the world at its best, but they have not lost a particle of generosity. Humanity is to them a word of inspiration. They are still young and believe in progress.

Their neighbor, last year, was a clergyman, a kind-hearted one who didn't seem to be afraid of the Infidel. Their neighbors now are a Liberal family from Minnesota, Mr. and Mrs. John Ford and family, and with them came quite a colony of Liberals from the land of the ozone. It was a pleasure to meet with these genial allies. My friend, J. S. Martin, has provided himself for the deluge and built his ark upon the waters. He has migrated from the hills to the bosom of the Snohomish, and whether up or down, he floats with the tide. This is a comfortable place and he has to pay no ground rent. His property rises and falls at its own sweet will, without any regard to real estate values. He can unhook at any time and float down to the sea. Here he has his cabin and his workshop, with the limpid stream for his front yard where the bubbles bloom the livelong year. Building his house, not upon sand or rock but on the water, is a happy thought. Friend Martin can bid defiance to all the rains of heaven. They can't destroy the foundations of his domicile.

Our student-Liberal Eldridge Morse is hard at work. He has a wealth of information which I hope will sometime be utilized in books. His dreams are grand. He reads the future in deep studies of the past. He sees in evolution a wondrous world of light. His enthusiastic nature makes delving among dry records a "laborious delight." He would rather do that than eat, or make money. Some day he will aid the world with a scholar's priceless contribution.

The Blackman Bros., John Swett, H. C. Comegys, Jas. Burton, C. Ames, H. D. Morgan, A. W. Morgan, B. H. Morgan, Mrs. Frances Blackman, and others, are among the friends at this point. The majority of the people are really liberal. The churches have poor support. The Presbyterian church is closed. The Catholic church is the largest, and has the biggest cross I have ever seen, upon its many-colored steeple, which reminds one somewhat, in its variegated appearance, of the gorgeous patchwork of a "crazy quilt." The Catholic priest declares his readiness at any time to debate; but somehow he manages to be absent when Mr. Reynolds or myself happen to be on hand to meet him. He wants to combat all heretics in a lump, and by heretics he means Methodists and Presbyterians. They are as bad as the rest of us, and Father Macauley desires that we hang together while he demolishes the whole at one fell swoop.

"Sweet is the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love."

The three lectures were well attended, although it rained, as usual, and the mud was deep and the ways dark, for the forthcoming electric light is not yet in operation. I am quite encouraged at the outlook. They mean to keep things lively here, and the Liberal lecturer will always have a cheering welcome.

A Freethought hall will materialize, I hope. It is greatly needed. It would be a stimulant to social life, which must accompany intellectual advancement. Freethinkers must work together for Humanity's sake. Snohomish will grow. It has now about fifteen hundred inhabitants. It has the prospect of railroad shops. It is the proposed junction of the Seattle & Spokane Falls R. R. This will make it an important point. The lumber industry is already large. The mill has a capacity of about forty thousand feet per day and one hundred thousand feet of shingles. These shingles are shipped to all parts of the country, even to New England itself. The value of these enormous forests will thus be seen. After they are cleared off, the soil produces bountifully.

The mountain scenery about Snohomish is beautiful. The view of Mt. Ranier is especially grand. I could not see it clearly, but the picture presented was one of sublime magnificence. The clouds were rolling away from the base, shining like burnished silver, while the white breast of the mountain rayed amidst the billowing splendors. The top was wrapped in mists and would not reveal its glory, but the vast pictures glittering along the base suggest a vision of noble loveliness when the whole majestic mountain appears. In the morning and evening of June and October days it presents an enchanting spectacle, when the glory of the sun is on its lofty crest, and gold and silver clouds swathe its ample bosom.

It is still raining while I take my journey, Tuesday morning, to Seattle. I was in hopes to lecture at this place, but the difficulty of procuring a hall, and the storms and the mud, which is of a fearful quality just now, prevented, and engagements would not allow a longer sojourn than twenty-four hours. However, I had a pleasant meeting with friends. John H. Hummell and family have always a cordial welcome. They live on the hill, which I climbed by a cable car, which reminded me of San Francisco and Nob Hill. I suppose this height will be the Nob Hill of Seattle, where its metropolitan splendors are assured. On sunny days the views are superb, over the sound and the many winding shores and islands set in light, reminding one of the poet's description of Naples and the sea, in "The sunny noon's transparent glaze."

Mr. and Mrs. Hummell, while Liberal to the core, are Spiritualists, and find joy in the world beyond, but they are not dogmatic. A few friends were present in the evening, among them L. Williams, of Port Angeles—my genial host when I visited there—a keen philosopher, without any "ism," as he says, being of the gentle Platonic order who see

"books in the running brook, Sermons in stones and good in everything."

Mr. and Mrs. Peck were also with us and we formed a circle "to summon spirits from the vasty deep."

I did not see any, but others had a deeper vision than mine. A little Indian girl, it was said, took possession of Mrs. Peck and gave some communications. Several "big chiefs," among them Walter Scott, were declared to be in close proximity to myself. Music was mingled with the mystic exercise, and its rhythmic spell was certainly a delight. I have touched the "border land," but no vision has yet come from the unknown world.

I find Walter Walker still busy for this world and humanity, the same enthusiast as ever. Judge Bush is one of the favorites of the People's party and is the Freethinker still, amidst the precedents of law. The Seattle folks don't give up the ship. This is a strong point for Liberalism, but work and patience are necessary with these quickly-changing elements. Its growth during the last year has been rapid, and hardly anything is now talked of but real estate.

P. Wickstrom and Miss Petersen were greeted by a hundred friends on Friday, Dec. 7, and, with the good wishes of all, joined hands for love and life. Happiness to the brave and fair, and may they pass, amidst flowers and song, the silver and the golden gates.

Friend Wickstrom is a generous comrade, a true soldier, worthy of the gracious reward of beauty and affection. May life's battle be wreathed with the fireside rose, and heart and hope ever grow where man and woman make lovely the home in the harvest-field of strenuous labor.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Seattle, Dec. 12, 1888.

A PROMISE KEPT.

The first issue of FREETHOUGHT contained this remark:

"The year 1888 will have fifty-three Sundays. It will also have fifty-two Saturdays, and FREETHOUGHT will illuminate every one of them."

This stipulation has been faithfully adhered to, and the present issue lends a tender grace to the fifty-second and last Saturday of the year.

Having thus kept its first promise to its readers, FREETHOUGHT feels that it deserves their confidence when it promises to appear above the horizon of every Saturday in 1889; and in this confidence it hopes its patrons may consider it worthy of an enlarged circulation and a stronger support.

We have no complaint to make of the reception FREETHOUGHT has enjoyed from the Liberals of the coast and of the country. That the paper continues to live, and is able to enlarge at the beginning of the second volume, is better proof of its acceptance than anything we could say. The existence of a paper for one year demonstrates that there is a field for it; another year will determine whether the field is large enough to produce sufficient sustenance for its permanent support.

To the friends who have stood by FREETHOUGHT through 1888 we return thanks and acknowledgments. They inspire respect and gratitude and hope. We close the old year gratefully; we shall hail the new one cheerfully. The prospect is much brighter than it was twelve months ago.

A JESUIT PRIEST.

There is something wrong with the Catholicism of the Rev. George Montgomery of San Francisco. In reply to the attack of the Methodist ministers upon Jesuitism and the papacy, Mr. Montgomery comes forth in the Examiner and denies nearly all that is claimed by the pope and the Catholic church. He says among other things that while Catholicism does not encourage mixed marriages it does not condemn them; which is a flat contradiction of an encyclical letter recently read in the churches of this city describing marriages between Protestants and Catholics as a "horrible concubinage."

The Rev. Father Montgomery professes to indorse liberty and freedom of thought, while the pope anathematizes it. He claims that the church does not favor the exercise of political influence, and at the same time the pope instructs bishops everywhere to agitate for the restoration of temporal power. He denies that Catholics wish to control the educational institutions, while it is a notorious fact that parochial schools are being everywhere established, and papists are demanding a division of the public school fund.

In all Montgomery has to say in his column letter he but once approaches the truth. As to the influence of skepticism he says:

"This very freedom of thought, of speech, and of the press is what is driving men from Protestantism into either Catholicity or skepticism."

Perfectly true. There is no logical stopping-place between Catholicism and total unbelief; and between the upper millstone of Freethought and the nether millstone of Catholicism, Protestantism is being ground to pieces. The most enlightened Protestants are at heart Freethinkers; the unenlightened, the ignorant, are Catholics, with a Bible instead of a man for pope.

In the rapidly approaching contest between ecclesiasticism and democracy there will be a few neutral Protestants, whose sympathies will be with the Catholic church. All others must take sides on the question whether just government comes from God or from men. The ignorant, the designing, the superstitious, the unscrupulous, will stand for Catholicism; the enlightened, the honest, and the patriotic will stand for liberty. It depends on the spread of Freethought whether the latter shall prevail or be a hopeless and defeated minority.

All the intelligent people of the world know what the Catholic church is after. They know it seeks to become the temporal as well as the spiritual ruler of the world, and the denials and sophisms of the Rev. Father Montgomery and other enemies of truth will not deceive them.

"BUNCOED" BY AN ARCHBISHOP.

The Supreme Court of Ohio has just decided a case growing out of the assignment of Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati. The object of the suit was to force a sale of the church property, including the Catholic cathedral in Cincinnati, for the benefit of the creditors. The decision of the court is against the creditors. This decision may be high-class law, but it is a good way from justice.

Archbishop Purcell borrowed about a million dollars, more or less, from his parishioners, and invested it in church property. When his dupes demanded the return of their money it was gone. The church had gobbled it. Purcell could recover nothing, and consequently his creditors, or depositors, were swindled. The old man got out of his trouble by dying, and left his victims to deal with the church. These addressed memorials to the pope, to no purpose, and finally sued with the above result.

Many of Purcell's creditors were poor, and the money they placed in his hands as almoner was all they had, but that made no difference to the Romish cormorant. The pope merely warned them against doing so again, as if they were likely to repeat the experiment!

The fate of these swindled dupes should at least be a warning to others. It should open their eyes to the fact that the church only takes; it never returns. This pious corporation overlooks the scriptural assurance that it is more blessed to give than receive, and waives all the beatitudes of generosity in favor of the fools, while it contents itself with gathering in the cash.

A BULWARK AGAINST FREETHOUGHT.

A dispatch from Rome, dated December 19, states that in an interview with the pope "Dr. Keene, bishop of Richmond, who is also titular rector of the projected University of Washington, handed to his holiness a collective letter written in Latin, from the Catholic bishops of the United States, thanking the pope for his support of the University scheme, and announcing that the work was making most satisfactory progress, $800,000 having already been collected, while the ground on which the buildings are to be erected has already been paid for." It is a pity that so much money should be worse than wasted, but the most interesting part of the dispatch follows:

"The bishops draw attention to the great importance of the university, which they believe will act as a bulwark against the rise of Rationalism and Freethought in America."

For the benefit of Americans the bishops should have stated in what manner another Roman Catholic factory, more or less, can prevent people from being rational or thinking freely. We have recently seen a suggestion that a few water meters should be placed in the sky to check the inordinate amount of rain with which the country is being flooded, but it does not appear to us to be a practicable plan. The fact is that the more religious institutions there are founded, and the more insolent and domineering the church becomes, the more opposition there will be, and the more Freethought. If the church desires that people should become Christians, let it appeal to reason with arguments calculated to convince intelligent men and women. Let it not, in the name of one who said that his kingdom was not of this earth, aspire to temporal sovereignty and the control of nations. So long as it appeals to superstitious reverence and awe by its incantations and its lofty structures surmounted by that Christian fetich, the cross, so long will sensible people denounce it and oppose it as the enemy of enlightened and progressive humanity. The more prevalent the poison the more the antidote will be demanded, and the supply will equal the demand.

The university at Washington is only another monument to ignorance. The corpse will be provided when Freethought and rationalism become powerful enough to bury the Roman Catholic church forever.

THE MEETINGS.

The time for the January meetings in this city is rapidly approaching—namely, the 6th, 13th, and 20th of the month, to be followed by the Convention of Liberals and the Paine celebration. Appended is the list of contributors to the expenses of the meetings as it now stands:

A. J. M. Campbell.....$10	K. Parker.....1
W. F. Eddy.....5	John Robinett.....1
Robert Gunther.....3	J. Robertson.....1
Ed. Wegner.....3	A friend.....1
Wm. Noble.....2	Samos Parsons.....1
Philip Cowen.....1	Henry Kline.....1
H. Replogle.....1	E. M. Hansson.....1
A. Derming.....1	A. J. Andersen.....1
Frank Butler.....1	Henry Kaiser.....1
Charles Kaiser.....1	A. H. Schou.....1
Mrs. Rebecca Kaiser.....1	B. B. Rockwood.....1
A friend.....1	A. L.....1

The programme for the month is as follows, lectures to be delivered by S. P. Putnam:

Jan. 6.—“The Bible and Modern Thought.”

Jan. 13.—“Evolution and Creation.”

Jan. 20.—“The Religious Conspiracy.”

Jan. 27, 28, and 29.—Convention of Liberals of California, and Paine Anniversary Celebration.

All are invited, and seats will be free.

THE CALL.

Will friends having in their possession copies of the call for a state organization, with signatures attached, please return them to the office of FREETHOUGHT. We shall print the call in our next issue.

LECTURES IN OAKLAND.

Sunday afternoons, at three o'clock, January 6, 13, and 20, S. P. Putnam will lecture at Odd Fellows' Hall, corner of Eleventh and Franklin streets, Oakland.

The work will thus be kept moving in both cities simultaneously. The Oakland lectures, like those in San Francisco, will be free to the public, and a cordial invitation is extended to all.

We have received a parcel of circulars from a Chicago firm, advertising books and pictures which, from their titles, would seem to be unfit for publication. What makes the matter most infamous is the fact that the same firm advertises Ingersoll's, Bennett's, and Paine's works in their catalogue of trash. We have seen what this firm calls its “Liberal Library.” San Francisco is full of its libels on respectable authors. Honest people should avoid them. The firm is a firm of literary pirates, and the books are rags.

ONE of our subscribers in San Diego county makes the standing offer to furnish FREETHOUGHT a year free to any Christian in his town who will promise to read it. He has made several gift subscriptions, and reports that the more intelligent people seem to be pleased with the paper. His is the kind of missionary work that does good.

WE would like to receive the names and addresses of all liberally-inclined persons known to the readers of FREETHOUGHT. We want to send them sample copies of this paper. Let us have a general canvass of the country, and see if there is not an additional thousand people who will subscribe for FREETHOUGHT within the next two months.

INTEREST in the meetings and convention in this city next month is not confined to California. Mr. A. J. M. Campbell, of Marshfield, Oregon, has sufficient confidence and enthusiasm to contribute $10 toward the expenses of the occasion, and Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Eddy, of Snohomish, Wash., have paid $5 for the same purpose. This is encouragement from unexpected sources, but nevertheless most acceptable. Friends from all parts of the Pacific slope and of the country will be very heartily welcomed to these January gatherings.

OCCASIONALLY, and sometimes more frequently, frauds get into the ranks of Reform. Thus one Prof. William Seymour, who was some years ago the president of a Freethought society in Pennsylvania, is now lecturing on the “Fallacies of Atheism,” and avows himself a thorough believer in God, Christianity, prayer, the divine inspiration of the Bible, and its perfect harmony with science. Another backslider is Mr. Fishback, at one time a respected Spiritualistic lecturer, but who has now, alas! is preaching the gospel of Campbellism in Nebraska. N.B.—The Professor Seymour above spoken of is not the Professor Seymour known to the readers of FREETHOUGHT.

It is but justice to the talented young contributor to our occasional Children's Department to quote the appended notice of FREETHOUGHT from Dr. Foote's Health Monthly, New York:

“This periodical is just about entering the second year of its publication. Under the management of its able editors it has shown its right to exist, and our friends on the Pacific Coast have reason to believe that FREETHOUGHT has come to stay. The descriptive writings of the senior editor, the wit of the junior, and the characteristic stories of Lilian, render each issue a welcome visitor. It is published weekly by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California, at $2 per year.”

Beginning with January 1, FREETHOUGHT will hereafter contain sixteen pages in each issue.

It grieves the Rev. Dr. Taylor, of Washington, to know that our next president's inauguration will be celebrated with a ball. He opposes dancing, of which he says: “So powerful is its grip that on the 4th of March next a great, godly man, the greatest man in the land, the leader of the people, and elder of the Presbyterian church, a pure man, whom I have known for twenty years, will either offend the nation or he will have to lend his presence to the inauguration ball, where he will see nothing more edifying than thousands of people in peacock costumes hopping around on the floor.” There is to an unappreciative person something closely allied to the absurd in a roomful of people “hopping around on the floor,” but a similar number going through the genuflections of a religious service strike an outsider as equally amusing.

AMBROSE BIERCE, of the Examiner, believes that he is credited by the recording angel with the most astonishing conversion to religion of which there is any account. His discussion of the question whether or not the Examiner had misrepresented Colonel Ingersoll has driven the editor "spang into the bosom of the Protestant church." Mr. Bierce hinted that a local parson had resigned his charge to accept a call to a higher salary. The Examiner denied it, and Mr. Bierce replied that "if parsons leave one congregation and go to another more frequently for that reason than for another, I stated with exactness a mathematical truth." The editor comes back with the charge that Mr. Bierce has added to his previous offense by deliberately extending the libel to the "whole sacred profession." Mr. Bierce answers that if he had known that the clergyman whose case is under discussion furnished an exception to the rule he would have been delighted to relate it—precisely as he would have been delighted to relate the discovery of a "living dodo, a green horse, or a river that runs up a tree." The discussion is bound to do good. Mr. Bierce wields a remarkably able pen, and so does the editor.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH, of England, mourns the death of his elder daughter, Alice, who died December 2, of typhoid fever.

ACROSS THE BAY.

Ten years ago come March I delivered my first and last public address. It was quite successful in a way, and I have since been requested to deliver others, but have not done so. This address consisted of a short essay in one chapter on "New England and the People Up There," and was read at the twelfth bi-weekly meeting of the Fourth New York Liberal League, of which I was the treasurer. Daniel Edward Ryan acted as president, and he and E. M. Macdonald, secretary, used to give me orders for necessary outlays. These orders were about all that the treasury ever contained. When money was needed I applied to D. M. Bennett. He paid the expenses and forgot it, and the League was always solvent. The essay to which I refer went into the Truth Seeker, and then Mr. Bennett issued it as a pamphlet, in which form it has in the past decade attained a circulation of at least one hundred copies. I do not mention this incident for the purpose of boasting about my popularity as an author, but because it so happened that Mr. B. F. Underwood reposed among my audience that evening, and last Sunday night I gave him a chance to get even with me. I had not seen him since that 9th of March, 1879, until the present occasion. Nearly ten years have not lessened his shadow, or otherwise detracted from his solidity, and he made the same or a similar remark concerning myself.

Readers of last week's FREETHOUGHT noticed that Mr. Underwood was to lecture in Oakland, and Old Fellows' Hall was full before the arrival of the speaker. Mr. A. H. Schou presided, and introduced Mr. Underwood. The lecturer proceeded at once to business, his subject being, "The Old Faith and the New Science." The address was of a scientific character, and close application was necessary in order to follow its line of thought. It dealt with the religious explanation of the world, and man's presence in it, and his attributes, as contrasted with the theological solution of the same problem. The speaker traversed the whole ground occupied by religion, substituting the ascertained truths of science for the speculations of theology. It was a fine discourse, ample in argument, in rhetoric, and in length. There was no lack of appreciation among the audience, who applauded with good will and intelligent discrimination.

At the close Mr. Schou assumed the floor for business purposes. By way of working up to the point he wished to make, he said that fifteen years ago Dr. Joseph Simms lectured in an Oakland church, and he, Mr. Schou, was there present. Simms, who was a physiognomist, claimed that by reviewing an individual, as the latter passed him in procession, he could tell what vocation the individual was best fitted for. Mr. Schou related that he took a turn in front of the grand stand, and that when Simms saw him he said at once that he was designed by an intelligent creator for a church deacon. Mr. Schou added that he did not wish to thwart destiny, or to cast any doubt upon prophecy. Therefore, in pursuance of his duties as a deacon, he would proceed to take up a collection, about the only office connected with the diaconate that he was familiar with. He added that the gentleman with the red whiskers would help him raise the wind. This referred so pointedly to myself that I at once started the hat down one side of the hall, taking the offerings of the people as I went, while Deacon Schou worked a route on the other side. Meanwhile, the Rev. George Sweeney entertained the audience with some remarks complimentary to Mr. Underwood.

The collection was quite generous, and when I brought my hat back to the desk somebody suggested that there was more "cents" in it than when I had it on. The above is a pun, and should be understood in that sense.

Afterwards I had a pleasant interview with the speaker of the evening, who paid his subscription to FREETHOUGHT for the ensuing year. I then put on my rubber coat and went out in the rain, and having caught the train and boat, was soon at home again. I love to hear our orators set forth the word of truth to aged searchers after facts, and free-inquiring youth. I love to pass the suppliant hat in good religious style, and with a deacon's cautious step go teetering down the aisle. But after all, my favorite game, on occasions of this sort, is making comments on the same, and writing the report. M.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The Rev. John Hannon, of San Francisco, says he has a petition for a Sunday law in circulation, and will present it to the legislature. He claims that Sunday liberty is a franchise which the city has given away to the hosts of sin.—Mrs. Charles Crocker has given $5,000 to the Children's Hospital and Training School for Nurses, as a Christmas present.—Monday's Chronicle says: "Last night Odd Fellow's Hall (Oakland) was filled as it never has been before, the occasion being an address upon 'The New Science and the Old Faith,' by B. F. Underwood, a disciple of Robert G. Ingersoll, who is rated next to that celebrated orator and writer of the Freethought school."—George Ross, a drayman of Port Townsend, W. T., who was converted during the recent Moody meetings, was baptized at the Methodist church, and a few minutes later fell dead in his pew, a blood vessel having burst.—There is no probability that O'Donnell will be elected as a result of the recount in San Francisco, though he has made large gains.

The steamer Kate Adams burnt on the Mississippi river near the town of Commerce, Miss., last Sunday. She had 200 passengers on board, 35 of whom were lost.—The Chicago Anarchists held meetings last Sunday. They have appealed for an injunction to restrain the police from interfering with their gatherings.—Gustav Herman, of Ann Arbor, Mich., named his boy Benjamin Harrison, and notified the president elect to that effect. The latter acknowledged the compliment in a letter, which act of condescension drove Mr. Herman crazy, and his friends have placed him in a lunatic asylum.—The first American Catholic pilgrims to Rome and the Holy Land will leave New York February 21st. The pilgrims will spend Easter Sunday in Jerusalem, will have audiences with the pope and khedive, visit the pyramids, and have a good time generally. Two bishops, twenty-five priests, and a number of ladies and gentlemen already have signified their intention of joining.—Three men who live at Nevada City and Grass Valley have been arrested for selling bogus gold nuggets and quartz specimens to Chinese merchants. The nuggets were made of brass and were gold plated, so as to resist acid. Small particles of quartz were imbedded in them. The quartz specimens have brass filings sprinkled in them and fastened in the crevices. The imitations are very good and would easily deceive any one but an expert.—The Lick Observatory will not be open to visitors on January 1, as their presence would interfere with the observations to be made. Professors Nipher, Engler, and Prichett of Washington University, and Rev. C. M. Charopping of St. Louis University started from St. Louis Dec. 22 for Norman, Cal., to observe the solar eclipse on New Year's Day. The Harvard College observers will be stationed at Willows.—Intense cold weather has been prevalent in parts of New York state. A man in Albany froze to death last Saturday 500 feet from his house.—There are charges that some of the Boston women were guilty of illegal voting in the late elections.—It is believed that ex-President Hayes will be tendered a foreign mission.—Hon. S. E. Sewell died in Boston, Dec. 20. He became early interested in the anti-slavery cause, and was associated with William Lloyd Garrison in establishing the Liberator in 1831. He was also counsel for the defense of Sims, Anthony Burns, and other fugitive slaves, and he prepared arguments and assisted at the trial of John Brown.—The steamboat John Hanna burnt on Ouachita river, La., Dec. 25. Many lives were lost.—A large portion of Marblehead, Mass., was destroyed by fire on Christmas day. Loss, half a million.—Train robbers got $5,600 from Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express near Truckee, Cal., last Monday. John Bright is getting better.—Lawrence Oliphant, the well-known writer, died at Twickenham, England, Dec. 23, of cancer of the lungs.—The Municipal Council at Paris has accepted the statues of Lafayette and Washington, presented by Joseph Pultzer of the New York World.—According to the census taken by the Home Department officials, the total population of Japan, on the 31st of December last, was 39,069,007, of which 19,731,354 were males, and 19,337,653 were females.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Wall street is still "in the dumps." The interstate law is charged with all the cussedness in the world. There is no doubt that it has been a millstone round the neck of railroads. The tonnage of the country is and has been large, but the roads are carrying it at extremely low rates. The southwest system, the granger roads, have been great sufferers; the dividends have been reduced, and a cyclone has struck prices, until the values of some of these roads have been cut in two. The losses have fallen heavy on Boston and New England investors. New York and London have also been bitten. Dullness in stocks is the result. This is one of the occasions when Wall street is not the barometer of the condition of trade. The conditions are favorable for better business in the near future. The farmer is now getting 92 cents a bushel for his wheat against 68 cents last year. The corn crop is the largest ever raised. This crop goes largely into beef and pork, thereby giving the railroads plenty of traffic. The tariff is out of the way. I notice Mr. M. is a free trader. All, or the majority, of our readers may be the same. That I know or care nothing about. This I do know: the agitation of this question, the president's message last year, and the Mills bill were a wet blanket on the country. The election of Harrison has changed this. The merchants and manufacturers breathe freer. I am not discussing the question, I am stating facts as they exist in the East to-day. A readjustment of the tariff must be made from time to time, but the business men prefer it be done by the friends, and not by the enemies of protection. The great bulk of our business men of both parties are protectionists, and as they think this policy is safe, they are casting round for new enterprises. I find the feeling is general that a new life is soon to be felt in all branches of trade. Restore confidence and you renew activity.

The politicians of the city are greatly exercised about the appointments to be made by Mayor Hewitt. Who will go into the Department of Public Works and the Corporation Council offices? The patronage of the former is enormous. The fate of County Democracy may depend on its being filled by one of its friends. I understand an effort is being made by the friends of ex-Senator O'Brien to secure his appointment. No better could be made. He is as clean as a hound's tooth, and one of the strongest men intellectually in this city. County Democracy needs this new blood. The senator for years has been a free lance in his party, supporting honest men and opposing dishonest ones. While sheriff he was the terror of the Tweed ring, and gave the facts to the Times which drove Tweed and his crowd out of power. There is not money enough in America to corrupt him. Without patronage he has a following of thousands. He holds his friends by silken cords, which Samson could not break. This hold is owing to his loyalty to his friends, to his integrity, to his moral character. The mayor cannot make a more acceptable appointment. Mr. Hewitt is more unpopular in his party than in the opposition. Although a Republican, I voted for him in November, believing him to be a better man than Erhardt. He has made a fair mayor, nothing more. If he had been a little less cranky, he might have been more successful.

A new German theatre has been built on the spot where Irving Hall stood. It is a beautiful building outside and inside. Our German population have long felt the want of this new home for their drama. For years they have worshiped their Goethe and Schiller at the Old Bowery. This element of our population are liberal supporters of the drama and opera, and have given us sweet singers and good "play actors." Mary Anderson is here, Booth is here, Josh Whitcomb is here, and we are happy. Why should we not be? Here are beauty, talent, and mirth. Full houses greet them nightly.

The weather continues as nasty as during the summer and fall. It is hoped that the new year will give us a change.

EUDORUS.

THE DEBATE AT EUGENE CITY, OREGON.

The Underwood-Braden debate, lasting eight nights, closed on the 13th inst. The Freethought element of Eugene had ample reason to be satisfied with their champion. Throughout the debate Mr. Underwood maintained that graceful self-poise which adorns the master of polemics. And his rival has many qualities of adaptation as an advocate of the Bible, for in this he needs no consistency, no logic or continuity of thought, and no gentlemanly courtesy. So, with his egotistic fluency, St. Braden is just the man for a theological scavenger—to do the dirty work that better men would not dare perform without a mask.

I half believe that Brother Braden is inspired—after the old fashion; for in his continuous splutters of rage he waxes hot with holy indignation, just as his Jewish God did in the palmy days of the Jewish monarchy. I guess St. Braden has got some of that holy stuff. At least he shows many symptoms common to that insolvent firm which Moses, the Devil & Co. imposed on so much as a scapegoat during the ancient days of theocratic despotism. As I am somewhat familiar with the subjects touched upon by the debaters, I cheerfully give my entire approval of Mr. Underwood's correctness and ability through the controversy.

Eugene City, Or.

J. C. SNODGRASS.

The following resolutions were adopted by the Liberals of Eugene City:

WHEREAS, B. F. Underwood was induced by persons acting in the interest of the Rev. Clark Braden to come to this city for the purpose of engaging in debate with the said Braden, and

WHEREAS, Such inducements as were laid before Mr. Underwood were wholly false statements to the effect that the skeptics of this city were very anxious to have him come to Eugene and debate with Braden, and

WHEREAS, The Liberals and Freethinkers of Eugene were not consulted concerning any such debate and knew nothing of it until Mr. Underwood came here, and

WHEREAS, The Liberals of Eugene knew nothing of Clark Braden save that he was backed by the Campbellite church; therefore,

Resolved, That, having heard the aforesaid debate between B. F. Underwood and the Rev. Clark Braden, we, Liberals of Eugene, reaffirm our satisfaction with and our confidence in B. F. Underwood as an able, ready, honest, courteous, gentlemanly debater, and a well equipped and competent exponent of the principles of modern Freethought, scientific investigation and criticism.

Resolved, That in this debate Mr. Underwood has in every respect shown himself and his cause to be much superior to his opponent and cause.

Resolved, That the method and manner of the Rev. Clark Braden in conducting his side of the debate have been such as to warrant his condemnation by all honorable men and women, regardless of religious belief.

Resolved, That if Clark Braden is a Christian he is at the same time a demonstration of the unfitness of Christianity to produce peace on earth and good will among men.

"THE LAMP OF REASON."

From the Examiner.

If one wishes to know what orthodox religion really is—I mean that religion unsoftened by Infidelity, by doubt—let him read "John Ward, Preacher." This book shows exactly what the love of God will do in the heart of man. This shows what the effect of the creed of Christendom is, when absolutely believed. In this case it is the woman who is free, and the man who is enslaved. In "Robert Elsmere" the man is breaking chains, while the woman prefers the old prison with its ivy-covered walls.

Why should a man allow human love to stand between his soul and the will of God—between his soul and eternal joy? Why should not the true believer tear every blossom of pity, of charity, from his heart, rather than put in peril his immortal soul?

An orthodox minister has a wife with a heart. Having a heart she cannot believe in the orthodox creed. She thinks God better than he is. She flatters the infinite. This endangers the salvation of her soul. If she is upheld in this the souls of others may be lost. Her husband feels not only accountable for her soul, but for the souls of others that may be injured by what she says, and by what she does. He is compelled to choose between his wife and his duty, between the woman and God. He is not great enough to go with his heart. He is selfish enough to side with the administration, with power. He lives a miserable life and dies a miserable death.

The trouble with Christianity is that it has no element of compromise—it allows no room for charity so far as belief is concerned. Honesty of opinion is not even a mitigating circumstance. You are not asked to understand—you are commanded to believe. There is no common ground. The church carries no flag of truce. It does not say, Believe you must, but, You must believe. No exception can be made in favor of wife or mother, husband or child. All human relations, all human love must, if necessary, be sacrificed with perfect cheerfulness. "Let the dead bury the dead—follow thou me. Desert wife and child. Human love is nothing—nothing but a snare. You must love God better than wife, better than child." John Ward endeavored to live in accordance with this heartless creed.

Nothing can be more repulsive than an orthodox life—than one who lives in exact accordance with the creed. It is hard to conceive of a more terrible character than John Calvin. It is somewhat difficult to understand the Puritans, who made themselves unhappy by way of recreation, and who seemed to enjoy themselves when admitting their utter worthlessness and in telling God how richly they deserved to be eternally damned. They loved to pluck from the tree of life every bud, every blossom, every leaf. The bare branches, naked to the wrath of God, excited their admiration. They wondered how birds could sing, and the existence of the rainbow led them to suspect the seriousness of the deity. How can there be any joy if man believes that he acts and lives under an infinite responsibility, when the only business of his life is to avoid the horrors of the next? Why should the lips of men feel the ripple of laughter if there is a bare possibility that the creed of Christendom is true?

I take it for granted that all people believe as they must—that all thoughts and dreams have been naturally produced—that what we call the unnatural is simply the uncommon. All religions, poems, statues, vices and virtues, have been wrought by nature with the instrumentalities called men. No one can read "John Ward, Preacher," without hating with all his heart the creed of John Ward; and no one can read the creed of John Ward, preacher, without pitying with all his heart John Ward; and no one can read this book without feeling how much better the wife was than the husband—how much better the natural sympathies are than the religions of our day, and how much superior common sense is to what is called theology.

Man is a being capable of pleasure and pain. The fact that he can enjoy himself—that he can obtain good—gives him courage—courage to defend what he has, courage to try to get more. The fact that he can suffer pain sows in his mind the seeds of fear. Man is also filled with curiosity. He examines. He is astonished by the uncommon. He is forced to take an interest in things because things affect him. He is liable at every moment to be injured. Countless things attack him. He must defend himself. As a consequence, his mind is at work; his experience in some degree tells him what may happen. He prepares; he defends himself from heat and cold. All the springs of action lie in the fact that he can suffer and enjoy. The savage has great confidence in his senses. He has absolute confidence in his eyes and ears. It requires many years of education and experience before he becomes satisfied that things are not always what they appear. It would be hard to convince the average barbarian that the sun does not actually rise and set—hard to convince him that the earth turns. He would rely upon appearances and would record you as insane.

As man becomes civilized, educated, he finally has more confidence in his reason than in his eyes.

There is in the life of the individual, as in the life of the race, a period of credulity, when not only appearances are accepted without question, but the declarations of others. The child in the cradle or in the lap of its mother has implicit confidence in fairy stories—believes in giants and dwarfs, in beings who can answer wishes, who create castles and temples and gardens with a thought. So the race, in its infancy, believed in such beings and in such creations. As the child grows, facts take the place of the old beliefs, and the same is true of the race.

As a rule, the attention of man is drawn first, not to his own mistakes, not to his own faults, but to the mistakes and faults of his neighbors. The same is true of a nation—it notices first the eccentricities and peculiarities of other nations. This is especially true of religious systems. Christians take it for granted that their religion is true, that there can be about that no doubt, no mistake. They begin to examine the religions of other nations. They take it for granted that all these other religions are false. They are in a frame of mind to notice contradictions, to discover mistakes, and to apprehend absurdities. In examining other religions they use their common sense. They carry in the hand the lamp of probability. The miracles of other Christs, or of the founders of other religions, appear unreasonable—they find that they are not supported by evidence. Most of the stories excite their laughter. Many of the laws seem cruel, many of the ceremonies absurd. These Christians satisfy themselves that they are right in their first conjecture—that is, that other religions are all made by men. Afterwards the same arguments they have used against other religions were found to be equally forcible against their own. They find that the miracles of Buddha rest upon the same kind of evidence as the miracles in the Old Testament, as the miracles in the New—that the evidence in the one case is just as weak and unreliable as in the other. They also find that it is just as easy to account for the existence of Christianity as for the existence of any other religion, and they find that the human mind in all countries has traveled substantially the same road, and has arrived substantially at the same conclusions.

It may be truthfully said that Christianity, by the examination of other religions, laid the foundation for its own destruction. The moment it examined another religion it became a doubter, a skeptic, an investigator. It began to call for proof. This course being pursued in the examination of Christianity itself reached the result that had been reached as to other religions. In other words, it was impossible for Christians successfully to attack other religions without showing that their own religion could be destroyed. The fact that only a few years ago we were all provincial should be taken into consideration. A few years ago nations were unacquainted with each other—no nation had any conception of the real habits, customs, religions, and ideas of any other. Each nation imagined itself to be the favored of heaven—the only one to whom God had condescended to make known his will—the only one in direct communication with angels and deities. Since the circumnavigation of the globe, since the invention of the steam engine, the discovery of electricity, the nations of the world have become acquainted with each other, and we now know that the old ideas were born of egotism, and that egotism is the child of ignorance and savagery.

Think of the egotism of the ancient Jews, who imagined that they were "the chosen people"—the only ones in whom God took the slightest interest! Imagine the egotism of the Catholic church, claiming that it is the only church—that it is continually under the guidance of the Holy Ghost, and that the pope is infallible and occupies the place of God. Think of the egotism of the Presbyterian, who imagines that he is one of the “elect,” and that billions of ages before the world was created God, in the eternal counsel of his own good pleasure, picked out this particular Presbyterian, and at the same time determined to send billions and billions to the pit of eternal pain. Think of the egotism of the man who believes in special providence. The old philosophy, the old religion, was made in about equal parts of ignorance and egotism. This earth was the universe. The sun rose and set simply for the benefit of “God’s chosen people.” The moon and stars were made to beautify the night, and all the countless hosts of heaven were for no other purpose than to decorate what might be called the ceiling of the earth. It was also believed that this firmament was solid—that up there the gods lived, and that they could be influenced by the prayers and desires of men.

We have now found that the earth is only a grain of sand, a speck, an atom in an infinite universe. We now know that the sun is a million times larger than the earth, and that other planets are millions of times larger than the sun; and when we think of these things the old stories of the Garden of Eden, and Sinai and Calvary, seem infinitely out of proportion.

At last we have reached a point where we have the candor and the intelligence to examine the claims of our own religion precisely as we examine those of other countries. We have produced men and women great enough to free themselves from the prejudices born of provincialism—from the prejudices, we might almost say, of patriotism. A few people are great enough not to be controlled by the ideas of the dead—great enough to know that they are not bound by the mistakes of their ancestors—and that a man may actually love his mother without accepting her belief. We have even gone further than this, and we are now satisfied that the only way to really honor parents is to tell our best thoughts.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Poverty's Children.

How oft along the busy street
On every day of life we meet
Some form all weary, pinched, and wan,
With trembling feet that totter on.
Both old and young, bowed down with care,
Who ask for bread or clothes to wear,
With outstretched hand, and piteous plea,
“Please give—give something, sir, to me!”
This cry came from a girl of ten,
Who held the hand of brother Ben,
These, as they stood in cold and sleet,
Are types of many that we meet.
“Father is sick, and mother dead,
One little sister home in bed;
The doctor says she cannot live,
Give me a penny, sir, please give!”
“You see me, with my clothes in rags,
Traveling over these cold, wet, flags,
No shoes or stockings on my feet,
I shiver, and want some food to eat.”
“No fire at home, no coal, no wood,
And here on the curb all day I’ve stood
Begging for pennies and for bread,
Poor father sick, and mother dead.”
The crowd pass on, the throng go by,
They never heed the poor girl’s cry;
Heed not her voice, so thin and weak,
Though tears are trickling down her cheek.
One more, a man all bent with years,
Whose hopes have fled, or changed to fears,
Whose life is wrecked by storms gone by,
Who waits the end, waits but to die.
So all along life’s weary way
The crushed and ruined, day by day,
As land-marks tell the old, old tale—
Where one may prosper many fail.
Ye rich and proud, hark to the poor,
Their grief and tears come to your door.
None are exempt from storm and wave,
That overwhelm alike the rich and brave. —A. F. SCOTT.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

R. B. WESTBROOK, LL.D., PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary..... 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago
OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treasurer..... Rochelle, Ill.
E. B. FOOTE, JR., Chair. Ex. Com..... 120 Lexington ave., New York
MATTIE A. FREEMAN, Chair. Fin. Com., 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago.

THE ROMISH CHURCH.

From the Chicago Times, Dec. 10.

E. A. Stevens, president of the Chicago Secular Union, made a savage onslaught upon the relics and traditions of the Roman Catholic church in his lecture at the Forum last evening. He had a large audience which, judging from the frequent bursts of applause, was entirely in sympathy with his most radical views. His theme was “Roman Rubbish,” and he commenced with a reference to the “crafty aggressiveness of the Romish church in this country, forecasting the struggle which freedom has before her unless Americans arouse themselves from their apparent indifference.” Romanism, he said, had grown out of all proportion to other sects. Cardinal Gibbons was recognized as our political dictator, for he wielded the loaded dice of destiny—1,500,000 of Roman Catholic votes—with unerring precision and tremendous effect. The priesthood were swelling with defiant pride and had opened a dangerous war upon our public schools, while their pestilential influence pervaded society with as deadly vapors as the upas tree. Manhood appeared to be oozing out of our national life, for whoever sounded the tocsin against Rome’s insidious intrigues and moral and political turpitude was set down as a foolish alarmist. The day of liberty’s doom might not be far distant.

Rome’s great boast was her universality. Her church was everywhere the same—indivisible. If its claim to unity meant the preservation of one unvarying aim—an undiminished thirst for power—then the claim might cheerfully be granted. Cruelty and intolerance were formerly the methods by which the motive was advanced, now fraud and deception were its chief stock-in-trade, from the self-styled successor of St. Peter down to the poorest clown who kissed his slippers. By uniformity of methods and efforts it had succeeded, even with fraud and deception, in increasing its wealth, confirming its power, and extending its dominion over men and nations, so that the pope to-day claimed 250,000,000 subjects. Romanism and liberty were antithetical terms—wider apart than the poles.

After reviewing some of the bloody wars, massacres, butcheries, and barbarous cruelties of past ages, which were perpetrated in the name of the “true church,” the speaker said that no Catholic of the present day condemned those atrocities. It was still claimed that the pope could not err; that the church was the “same to-day and for ever.” Romanism was rapidly preparing the minds of American children to swallow the rubbish about relics and shrines which had so long held the people of Italy, Spain, and other countries in the most debasing servitude. Rome was always against reason and for revenue. In the old world it had derived enormous incomes from palpable and preposterous frauds and now desired to impose its European relic rubbish for the enrichment of its American church. Our American school system was the main pillar of our republic. In them no sectarianism should be taught whatever. Protestants wanted Catholic intruders kept out of the schools, but wanted prayer and Bible-reading to remain. From this Protestant blunder the time was coming when Catholics would have turned the tables, for if they increased in the future as they had in the past the Catholics would have a majority in the year 1900, and, as Father Heckler said, take the country and keep it.

The lecturer named many of the relics that are exhibited for money in Catholic countries, and the stories that are told about them. He said the divine museum displays which had gulled and debased the credulous Catholics of Europe, furnishing marvelous instances of idolatry and lying, were to be petted and perpetuated in this country, and instead of being prosecuted for obtaining money by false pretenses their property must be exempt from a proper share in the public burden of taxes. He quoted from many sources to prove that the aim of the Catholics was to secure control of America, and that they were rapidly nearing the goal of their ambition. In conclusion he said:

"Believing in the integrity of and inflexible antagonism to church and state of the American people we consign to them the cause of truth and equity for ultimate triumph, for complete mental freedom is the foundation on which all future progress rests, and Secularists should renew their efforts to rescue the state from religious bigotry and ruin; for no truly republican form of government can consistently aid or recognize a tyrant of the skies or pander to his deputies of earth."

RELIGION IN THE SCHOOLS.

Boston is having a little religious earthquake in its common schools, and it is likely to shake the whole Union. We are glad to see it. The evolution, or the revolution, must come, and the sooner it is over, the better for all of us.

We have two great parties in this country who are about to measure arms on this school question, and the sooner the victory is achieved for the right side, the sooner we shall have peace and safety.

On the one side stand the American people, who declare that the children must be educated in science, history, politics, and letters at the public expense. On the other stands the Roman Catholic church, which insists that the church is the only true educator, and if the priest may not control the common school, no fact of science, history, politics, or letters shall be taught there that militates against the Catholic faith.

In a school history the story of the sale of indulgences by the Catholic church was told. It was true, gently told, with not half the horrors of that ancient abomination. No child could read history and not know it. All the doings of the pope and the church in England, France, Spain, and Italy are of the same character, and equally objectionable. The priests protested against this history for the simple reason that it contained facts not favorable to their church. The school directors condemned the book and its use in school. Then Boston, the hub of the universe, took a spasm of virtuous indignation. It swept that school board out of existence. It wrote "No Catholic need apply" on the department. And it did right. Boston did what the whole land must do. We must all declare that the Catholic church shall have no hand in our schools, no control in our government, no special privileges in our country.

But some say, "This is not fair. Catholics are one-tenth of our people, pay their taxes, are voters, and must have equal rights with their fellow citizens. They cannot be denied on account of race, color, or religion." That is all quite true. They must vote, and they may hold office, but they must obey our law, and not any law of church or otherwise, which is opposed to it. Our rule is that you may be of what religion you please, but you must obey the laws of the republic made by the people. This we say to the Mormons, Catholics, and all religions alike. When the people make a law it must be obeyed.

Now we have two kinds of Catholics, as well as two kinds of Mormons. One kind say, "Oh, yes, we are Catholics in faith, but we do bear true and loyal allegiance to the republic. We believe in government by the people. We are well affected to it. We swear to support it and obey its laws. We know no other allegiance, but we forswear all." They are of us, and entitled to our respect and confidence, to votes and office, and a full share of influence in our affairs, and they will ask for no more. And then there are other Catholics who say, "Yes, we are willing to become citizens and take your oath and call ourselves well affected, and be voters and taxpayers. But in fact, we are not well affected. We do not believe in government by the people at all. It is a damnable heresy. The pope is the only fountain of power and has our first and true allegiance. We obey his law, rather than yours. We hate your schools and will not send our children there. And we object to your teaching one word there against the sovereign lord and holy father, the pope. We help to support them by our taxes, and we demand that you expel all heresy therefrom." Now, what shall we say to these people? This: "Gentlemen, you are really not of us. You are not actual and bonafide citizens of our republic. You are invaders without right, and under a false pretense. We should have been more careful, and not admitted you. You should have been more open, and said you were not well affected to our republic, and then you would have been excluded. You do not like our schools, or our republic. But happily you are in the minority, and we shall run them to suit ourselves. We shall teach our children that the republic is right, and the pope is wrong. And you will have to pay your taxes too. But then our doors are all open, and no law compels you to remain in this heretic land. But while you do remain thus disaffected and in the minority you cannot rule our schools. You cannot close out truth, history, and freedom. You are only a minority, and we are glad you are. We give you liberty, but not dominion. Were you in the majority you would give us neither. Thank your stars that this is not a Roman Catholic country."

H. L. K.

THE PRINTERS OF THE WICKED BIBLE.

On May 8th, 1632, Richard Barker and Martin Lucas, the printers, were summoned before the Court of High Commission for having, in the edition of the Bible printed by them in the previous year, made grievous errors and used very bad paper. The Bishop of London (William Laud) "showed that this would undo the trade, and was a most dishonorable thing; that they of the Church of Rome are so careful, that not a word or letter is to be found amiss in their Ladie's Psalter and other superstitious bookes; and that we should not (sic) be so careful in printing the sacred Scriptures, and that they in Holland, at Amsterdam, had gott up an English presse, and had printed the Bible in better paper, and with a better letter, and can undersell us eightpence in a Bible."

The unhappy printers tried to excuse themselves through their advocates, and offered submission and amendment, but the court refused to listen. The case therefore came on again on June 14th, when the printers moved the court to pass by the errors as being faults of the workmen; but the royal advocate required a legal defense and the regular hearing of the cause, when Laud "would have the Church sett upright in her reputacion, that we are as carefull in printeing the Bible as they are of their Jesus' psalter, and whereas the printers say this is stirred up by the malice of one man against them; the Bishop saith he stirred not till the Bible was sould into his house, bought by his footmen; and he saith the printeing is soe bad and the paper too, that, if it be not mended shortly, they will be put downe by those of Amsterdam and their trade spoyled, and the two grossest errors—vizt., 'shalt commit adultery,' and 'great asse;' for 'shalt not commit mit adultery,' and 'greatnesse.'

"The Archbishop of Canterbury (Abbot) saith, that the Printers that print for his Matie have a very profitable place, and therefore should be more carefull. I knew the time when greater care was had about printeing, the Bibles especially, good compositors, and the best correctors were gotten, being grave and learned men, and the paper and letter rare and faire every way of the best; but now the paper is naught, the composers boyes, and the correctors unlearned. There is a former and he makes the benefit, and careth for nothing about it. They heeretofore spent their whole time in printeing, but these look to gaine, gaine, gaine, and nothing els; if it be good to bribe, to give hundreds, thousands, what to do? not to benefit the people, but to make a game, then they are to be commended: Well, let them look to it; and let the cause proceed, saith the Arch-Bishop. London. There was a great deale to doo betweene you of this City and those of Cambridge heeretofore about the priviledge of printeing the Bible and Psalmes, which they of Cambridge claymed; then the Bible was exactlie printed, now you have forced the Cambridge printer to an agreement, now noe Bible is right printed." (Rawlinson MS., printed Camden Society, N.S., 39).

This case was ultimately remitted to the Star Chamber, where the printers were fined £500, and the edition of one thousand erroneous copies was ordered to be burnt.

A NEW edition of "God in the State," by E. A. Stevens, secretary of the American Secular Union, has just been issued. Price, 10 cents; six copies, 50 cents; fifteen copies, $1.

"Freethought" a Necessity.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Inclosed please find $1 for six months of FREETHOUGHT. I can't do without it, although I said stop it at the end of the year. We hope to have Charles Watts here in January if we can so arrange.

Georgetown, Colo.

MRS. T. S. OLD.

The Enlargement Indorsed.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I think when your paper is enlarged to sixteen pages it will be just right, in size and style, and also that your thoughts on religious matters are wonderfully correct. May success crown your efforts. Yours,
New York.

PETER ECKLER.

Good Work.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Inclosed please find the Call properly signed by a few of the best men of Bakersfield. I could have got hundreds of names, but a pressure of business forces me to send it as it is. The majority of the best citizens here are Freethinkers but not workers. Hoping for you a great success, I remain in full sympathy, Hanford, Tulare county, Cal.

W. P. McCORD.

From Yellowstone Park.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I inclose draft for $2 for subscription to January 1, 1893, for FREETHOUGHT. The proposition to enlarge it with the new year will meet the hearty approval of all your patrons. I do not propose to give you any advice as to how to manage your enterprise, but you will permit me to express my satisfaction with that portion of the paper that has given me most pleasure.

"News and Notes" is an admirable feature of the paper. Putnam actually gives us a personal introduction to all the clear-headed, scientific thinkers that it is his good fortune to meet during his travels. His wonderful faculty of hunting them up and estimating their social value as thinkers and workers in the good cause of human progress, is of incalculable value. Let any one read his article in the Nov. 1st number of FREETHOUGHT, and he will see what a vast number of persons are spoken of; in their domestic relations, in happy homes; in their industrial relations as employer or employees, conserving or producing wealth; as good citizen, thinking out the best methods of securing a higher education for the masses, and consequently more liberty. I counted over twenty-five persons named in that one article whom I knew personally as faithful workers in the cause of human progress. How good it makes us feel that we are living in the same world and working in the same cause with Ingersoll, Foote, Rosenbrough, Chamberlain, Gunn, Mrs. Leonard, Mrs. Macdonald and her wise and witty sons, Juliet Severance, Mrs. Freeman, Mrs. Colman, and a host of others who go to make up that glorious minority that shall in time give the world its laws and mankind its liberty—a liberty rooted in law and founded in nature.

When Putnam lifts the curtain and reveals the motives that move this army of freemen while it advances to demolish the strongholds of superstition and despotism, we can feel that we are religious in the highest sense. Science and Humanity is substituted on its banner for the old theological wacry of God and the King. True, we may care less for a heaven in the clouds, but more for our homes on earth. We may lose faith in a lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world, while our faith increases in a science and art that will prevent the sins and suffering of the world.

History of the Week is an important feature. It gives us the news of the nation, and of other nations, boiled down.

The selected matter is first-class. "The Grand Old Man" went through the Ingersoll mill and came out ground up into the finest kind of atoms. We hope Cardinal Manning will apply some of Alcock's porous plaster to his lame back, and straighten up for another round with Ingersoll. If the church thinks it can afford to give its children of the "household of faith" a dose of the Ingersoll eye-opener, I am sure we shall be glad to furnish it without money and without price.

Perhaps Robert Elsmere would be a milder medicine to begin with, and use Robert Ingersoll as a last resort.

We hope that with more space we shall have more editorial matter. It contains a good deal of Voltairian spice and Scotch maccoboy. It is good to sneeze occasionally. For a "spur in the head is worth two in the heel."

Letters from correspondents give us an opportunity to get acquainted with the good Infidels whom Putnam does not find. They have got to hunt their holes if he does not find them, but there are a few, no doubt. Let us by all means hear from them, if we cannot hear of them. Let their letters be short, sharp, and encouraging. The encouraging letters always contain the capital that keeps the type clicking and the wheels rolling.

I not only wish you a merry Christmas and a happy new year, but a thousand of them—I mean new subscribers. G. L. HENDERSON.

Mammoth Hot Springs, Wyo.

P. S.—I fought a fierce anti-monopoly battle last summer for a free party, and I hope that the G. O. P. will compel monopoly to stand back and let the public in the Yellowstone Park be served by residents whose families and homes are to be there. It is admitted that the family is the basis and bulwark of the nation, and why not of the National Park?

It cost us thousands of dollars to fight a heartless monopoly in behalf of a free party. We shall spend $2 for FREETHOUGHT. H.

In an Anaheim Church.To the Editors of Freethought:*

A recent Sunday found us in the Presbyterian sanctuary of Anaheim, listening to the Rev. John Elliot expounding the thirty-third chapter of Exodus. This chapter contains the prayer of Moses and describes his seance with the Lord on Mount Sinai. It was face to face, but before the chapter is ended we read that no man can see God's face and live. Moses said, "Show me thy glory."

After the usual singing and a long exhortation to "God," "Lord," etc., to do things which the speaker evidently thought the all-wise had forgotten to do, the preacher began his sermon by extolling the genius of the past. He spoke of the achievements of the mechanic, the poet, the painter, and the musician who had made the world glad with a harmony of sounds—all had been adored and worshiped by men.

The speaker had the habit of adding to the end of each sentence the syllable "eh;" thus: "The moral greatness of a Wilberforce, eh." "When we realize that men have the power to worship greatness, in man, eh, shall they neglect the God that created them, eh? He should exclaim, Holy, holy Lord God, eh. Because I am thou must be. To believe the word of God is to shun the bottomless abyss. God is a spirit invisible [this after "talking to him face to face"]; but when he came down, what did he find? He found his chosen people worshiping a golden calf that they had just made, eh. Moses was so indignant that he let fall the marble tablet, eh. Idolatry had ever been the besetting sin of man, eh. Unbelief is the sin of all sins, eh. It is not so important what a man does as what he believes, eh. A belief in miracles leads to godliness, eh. Unbelief and Infidelity are the curse of curses, dragging down even intelligent and celebrated men and women to the darkness of blackness and flame, eh." And so forth, and so forth.

About thirty men, women, and children were scattered about in a fine church that would seat three hundred. The foregoing and the singing by some of the best looking girls in town made up the service. What does it all amount to, eh?

ANAHEIM.

THE January number of the Popular Science Monthly promises to be interesting to mariners. Most people have heard of the disturbing influence exerted on the compass needle by the various masses of iron on shipboard, but few have any idea how the trouble is remedied. The whole subject will be explained in a copiously illustrated article, entitled "The Guiding Needle on an Iron Ship," by Lieutenant-Commander T. A. Lyons, in the January "Popular Science Monthly." "Science and its Accusers" is the title of another article in the forthcoming number, in which the author, Mr. W. D. Le Sueur, affirms that Science is simply truth, and, while men and theories may properly be criticised, opposition to science is absurd and vain.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses.....	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons..	$3.40
" Gold do., $5 and .....	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz.	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles.....	.35
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6....	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one....	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings.....	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives..	1.75	6 Guitar Strings.....	.75
" Forks.....	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to.....	10.00
" Teaspoons..	1.70

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see back numbers of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE, Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

A NEW FEATURE, Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling. Agents who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—A 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Cloth, 75 cts.

Address this office

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indigestion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY. Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.
DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.
DR. FELLOWS.

S. P. TAYLOR &amp; CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping.

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st. S. F.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00.

"The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

M. LESS, Real Estate and General Business AGENT,

he Sale and Purchase of Every Class of
BUSINESS, CITY AND COUNTRY PROPERTY,
HOTELS, SALOONS, AND GROCERIES.

PARTNERS SECURED. LOANS NEGOTIATED.

33 Kearny Street; S. F.

All Purchase Money must be paid through this office, otherwise purchasers will be held responsible for the amount of my Commission.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.

OLIVER HUNCKLEY . . . SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N. W. and S. W. Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

SECULAR THOUGHT.

A Journal of Liberal Thought.

The Official Organ of the Canadian Secular Union.

Published Weekly. $2 per Year.

CHARLES. WATTS, Editor,

31 Adelaide st. East, Toronto,

Ont., Canada.

Read what Colonel Ingersoll says: "I am much pleased with Secular Thought—with its form, arrangement, and contents—above all, with its spirit. It is splendid. I don't see how it could be better. I read it with the greatest of pleasure." COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Read what B. F. Underwood says: "Mr. Watts publishes a solid paper. Secular Thought is the best Liberal paper that now comes to me." B. F. UNDERWOOD.

Read what Helen H. Gardener says: "I heartily congratulate our Canadian friends upon the fact that they are represented by Secular Thought, a paper of which they can be justly proud, and which they need never hesitate to hand to their most delicate-minded friends, however religious they may be." HELEN H. GARDENER.

Miracles and Miracle Workers,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price . . . . . 10 cts.

Christian Absurdities,

BY JOHN PECK.

Price . . . . . 20 cts.

Both for sale at this office.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS.

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

Ireland and the Pope.

A BRIEF HISTORY

—OF—

PAPAL INTRIGUES

Against Irish Liberty,

—FROM—

ADRIAN IV. TO LEO XIII.

"The pope enjoys the unenviable, not to say infamous, distinction of being dangerous only to those who confide in him."

By JAMES G. MAGUIRE, Judge of the Superior Court of San Francisco, Cal.

Pp. 118, octavo. Price 50 cents. Address: Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including various notes by Guizot, Wenzel, Milman, "An English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1.50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald,
504 Kearny st. San Francisco.

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA!

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or the Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.