SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JANUARY 7, 1888

THE year 1888 will have fifty-three Sundays. It will also have fifty-two Saturdays, and FREETHOUGHT will illuminate every one of them.

THE Roman Catholics are holding a jubilee over the fiftieth anniversary of Pope Pechi's priesthood. We are also threatened with an epidemic of small-pox.

THE man who always leaves the door open in the winter was not necessarily brought up in a saw mill, as in generally charged by people in the East. He is a native of San Francisco. We have an open climate.

THE faith-cure is at present attracting considerable attention in the East, a Mrs. Robson, of Brooklyn, having recently died while undergoing it. There is consolation in the thought that people who survive this kind of treatment are generally healed of one disease—that is, their faith. But in serious cases it should be tried first on a lower animal.

EVERY session of our national Congress is opened with a prayer by the chaplain, who asks that our lawmakers may be guided by wisdom and directed by the divine light. As there is not the slightest evidence that any of these prayers are ever answered, we would suggest that praying be dispensed with until a few back-number supplications have been responded to.

A CHICAGO spelling reformer remarks as follows upon our bad orthography: "Every child wastes from one to two years, not to speak of the tears and headaches that cum to so many helpless litl ones, becaus we retain this venerated stupidity, while we go forward in everything els. Not to speak either of the multitud who ar turnd aside by the difficulty of lerning at the very threshold, and so become huers of wood and drawers of water, or sumthing far les valuabl." Wisdom put in this form possesses the double merit of teaching both by precept and example.

HUMAN life is the sea that beats
On the shores of Time, with an ebb and flow,
And creeds are the waves which the voyager meets,
That rise and fall as the breezes blow.

Humanity is the boundless sky,
Its gods are the clouds that come and go,
To prevail for a season and then pass by;
And it ever has been and will be so.

BRAZIL has a humorous emperor in Dom Pedro. At a select reunion at which he was present allusion was made to the scandalous traffic in decorations, and Dom Pedro remarked: "In Brazil we always sell decorations, but charge a very heavy price, and the proceeds go to the support of our lunatic asylum. Thanks to human vanity, this establishment is probably the most flourishing in the whole world. It does not receive a penny from the state, and its income increases every year. He added: "This ingenious arrangement possesses the further advantage of enabling us to recognize by the bit of ribbon the lunatics who are still at large."

THE THOMAS PAINE ANNIVERSARY.

A Thomas Paine celebration is now one of the events of the year. From the Pacific to the Atlantic the lovers of American Liberty will gather together in honor of the Author-Hero of the Revolution. It is an inspiring anniversary. Thomas Paine is becoming better known. The clouds of defamation are passing away. His great services are recognized. A braver, wiser, nobler man never lived. To honor his memory is a privilege.

All Liberals should use this occasion to emphasize the principles of Freethought. Let there be social gatherings wherever possible. Let the name and services of this illustrious man be remembered with glowing hearts

Arrangements are made for a grand celebration of this anniversary in San Francisco. There are thousands of Liberals in this city, and we hope to see them all present. The place of meeting and the order of exercises will be announced in our next issue. Meanwhile we hope that every friend who sees this notice will take pains to advertise the matter, so that our gathering may be among the most notable of the year, and show that the heart of this great metropolis is for freedom and progress. Money is necessary for the rent of hall, advertising, etc. Contributions have already been made. Those who desire to further assist in this way will please communicate with H. W. Faust, 307 Fourth street, who is chairman of the committee of arrangements for the celebration.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

Our paper comes out just in time for a New Year's greeting to all its friends to be. We come unheralded, but we come to stay, and we come to work. We hope that our welcome will be a cordial one, and give us courage for this new enterprise. We hope that a year's subscription to FREETHOUGHT will be the gift of our many well wishers. We start this paper because it is absolutely necessary in this growing country. The forces of progress, of Liberalism, are increasing every day. With every new year there comes a new demand. Our work in itself is promising and makes the New Year happy, and we hope that it will bring joy and enthusiasm to others, and that our journal from week to week will be a pleasant friend, and help give to every toil the light of high ideas and aims which are not for this year only, but for all time. So, again, looking into the vistas of the future, and seeing many crowding around our banners ready for the conflict and the victory, we give greeting and a Happy New Year.

ATTENTION.

We intend to make this journal a representative of the times in which we live. We mean to deal with realities. We recognize the importance of this world and all its interests and welfare. We desire to make this a family journal which, in the atmosphere of Freethought, shall give living pictures of to-day. We wish to express the hopes and aspirations as well as the struggles of the common people. While we shall strike with unflinching hand at the wrong that exists, and make no compromise, yet we know that much has been accomplished; that this world is full of beauty; that there are "fair humanities;" and this glorious side of life we would emphasize so that every hearthstone may be brighter and better. Especially shall we endeavor to illustrate the progress of this great Pacific Coast. This is our home—a continent in itself of nature's most magnificent forms and man's largest enterprise; with a life so vast that only out of its very midst can spring the journal which shall be the best defender of its liberty and herald of its hope. The growth of Liberalism up to the present moment makes necessary new instrumentalities for its further advance. Our aim is co-operation with Freethought journals which are now doing such valiant service. But the situation demands that a Pacific Coast battalion be organized, not only to attain greater liberty, but to preserve that which is already possessed. The conflict is so wide that there must be a division of forces. Out of the very soil of this land of the West must be taken the weapons of its defense.

This is our home, from the Rocky Mountains to the sea—wonderfully attractive in its varied and immense activities. No doubt our friends here will see the splendid advantage of a paper published in their own section. From Denver to San Francisco there is no journal devoted to our special work—namely, Freethought, the Demands of Liberalism, and the total separation of Church and State. There are many Liberal journals doing noble service, but none that makes the advocacy of Secular principles the very purpose for which it exists. This is our special field. We are devoted to no particular method of reform, but we are devoted to ceaseless opposition to ecclesiastical tyranny. We stand supremely and always for the taxation of church property, for the abolition of the Christian Sabbath laws, and for the placing of all American citizens, of whatever religion or no religion, upon a full equality in the courts of justice and halls of legislation. Keeping this in view, we hope that all Liberals, from Colorado to the Coast, will rally to our support. They can do nothing better for the advancement of a cause which is dear to all our hearts. We shall endeavor to make ourselves worthy of the generous confidence of friends.

FREETHOUGHT.

Thought is the most precious power of human life. It sweetens every toil. It ennobles every delight. It is the supremacy of man.

To think, to progress, should be the happy lot of all. This is the paradise of the world—not material comfort only, but intellectual advancement. Reason should be the commanding faculty. The head must teach the heart. In music, in poetry, thought must prevail or there is no harmony, no excellence. Truth is not only stranger than fiction, it is greater. To comprehend reality surpasses every flight of the imagination.

The soul of thought is freedom. Without freedom thought is impossible. The slave can not think, he simply copies. In so far as he thinks, he is free. The shadow of slavery is the grave of reason.

All triumphs of thought have been the triumphs of liberty. No step of progress has been made except by freedom. No invention, no discovery, has come save by the untrammelled mind. All civilization is the flower of the emancipated intellect. Freethought, therefore, is the word of to-day. It is the word of progress; it is the word of hope. Freethought is the necessary condition of improvement. It is the breath of reform; it is the prerequisite to all sublime achievement.

To teach men to think is the highest function. To urge them on to freedom is the noblest work. Thought and liberty blend in eternal marriage and can not be separated. The victory of Freethought, therefore, is the victory of all. It is the solution of every problem that touches the destiny of man. It is the ideal made real.

Our flag, then, is FREETHOUGHT.

We welcome all knowledge, all the treasures of the human mind. Our field of labor is co-extensive with every human interest, work, struggle, and attainment. It is universal. It embraces the whole philosophy of life.

Freethought is the ally of virtue and morality, for without Freethought there can be no virtue and no morality. The pre-eminent quality of all action is free choice. To be compelled to do a thing destroys the nobility of the doing. The chained hand can do no heroic deed. The chained mind is equally incapable. Freethought is the fountain of all actual human good, of all generousities, virtues, nobilities, excellencies, philanthropies, of self-sacrifice, honor, chivalry, devotion, truthfulness, and magnanimity.

Freethought is constructive. It builds. It makes happy and beautiful the pathway of mankind. Slavery disintegrates and annihilates, Freethought brings together. In free diversity there is noblest unity. In liberty fraternity grows. In liberty knowledge bears its most precious fruit. In liberty the creative impulse of art makes the world lovely with new adornments.

Freethought is peaceful. It abhors physical violence, for violence is compulsion. Freethought reasons, educates, develops. Freethought is science, evolution. It is the power of knowledge, and not the sword of persecution. When Freethought is established arbitration will take the place of war. Harvest fields will not then be trampled by the iron hoof of battle. Homes will not be made desolate by shot and shell. Freethought is humanitarian. It makes gentler and nobler the heart of man and woman. It makes better friends, better neighbors. It is sociable, charitable, cordial. It is goodwill to good-willing men. It brightens the fireside and exalts the home. It dignifies the common tasks of life.

Freethought is forethought. It is the Promethean fire. It is the mighty providence of the human race. It makes the wealth of the present serve the glory of the future. The Freethinker is the poet, the artist, the inventor, the discoverer. The mental slave is blind. One hour is the same as another. There is no to-morrow. The dull present only repeats itself. There is no aspiration, no change. The Freethinker in the full enjoyment of to-day, creates the noblest conditions for to-morrow. Freedom is the mother of wisdom, of foresight. From the heart of what is it plucks the crown of that which is to be.

This is Freethought. Yet, noble as it is, it has had to struggle against error and superstition. The vast majority of the race to-day are utterly deprived of intellectual freedom. Hence the poverty, the suffering, and the ignorance of mankind. Freethought is the first means for the removal of these evils.

Such is the purpose of this paper, as its name indicates. It is for mental emancipation. It is for the triumph of human reason. It is for the overthrow of tyranny. When this is accomplished, the greatest good possible will be attained.

TO OUR EASTERN FRIENDS,

Everybody is curious to know about the Pacific Coast. Many conflicting stories are abroad, and myth and miracle are mixed up with actual matter of fact. It is somewhat difficult to know the exact truth. Now this is what FREETHOUGHT will endeavor to give, the lights and shadows of the Pacific Coast. We have no purpose to serve, except to state our real impressions. We are not an advertising sheet, but a journal of thought. By the very necessities of our work we shall be able to furnish a full and accurate report of this great country. We intend to lecture in every city and village from San Diego to Puget Sound, and from the Golden Gates to the plains of Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska. We shall give "News and Notes" of our travels, and paint things as we see them. We shall endeavor to correctly note the resources of every place we visit—its climate, soil, productions, growth, promise, business, and manners and ideas of the people, so that all readers of FREETHOUGHT will have a fair understanding of the advantages and disadvantages of this Eldorado toward which the tides of emigration are sweeping. Our Eastern friends, therefore, can do no better than to subscribe for this journal in order to obtain information about the Pacific Coast. We intend to give honest judgments and impartial descriptions.

DR. E. B. FOOTE writes to the New York Truth Seeker to express his admiration for the combined wisdom of the elder and the facetiousness of the younger Macdonald, embodied in some notes which recently appeared in that paper. The doctor is under a misapprehension. The articles which evoked his commendatory remarks were the work of the editor himself, who has resources equal to the demand of all occasions.

NEW YEAR'S DAY is popularly observed in the West much as it is in the East. The convivial San Franciscan loves to gaze upon the wine when it stirreth in the cup and to look upon a city when it is painted red.

SUBURBAN friends coming to San Francisco will be welcome visitors at this office, as will also resident Liberals. We keep a register-book, and our headquarters are in the heart of the great city.

To its Liberal contemporaries FREETHOUGHT extends the compliments of the season. May 1888 be, so to speak, the happiest moment of their lives.

BUSINESS NOTES.

We have quite a stock of Liberal books at the FREETHOUGHT rooms, which our friends are invited to call and inspect.

PLEASE be prompt in sending in your subscriptions. We start with plenty of faith and at the bottom of the ladder. We are willing to work hard, but we can't go it alone. Our enterprise will be successful only by the generous aid of the Freethinkers of the Coast.

It is hoped that all friends who receive one or more sample copies of this paper will do their best to circulate and call attention to the new Freethought paper of the West. We intend to win on our merits, and we want as many as possible to read our columns and judge for themselves.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

MRS. M. A. FREEMAN, of Chicago, goes out this month upon a lecture trip through Iowa. She carries the elements of success with her as in a satchel.

HELEN H. GARDENER, of New York, author of "Men, Women, and Gods," is unable to respond to many lecture invitations on account of ill health.

THE Waco (Texas) Religious and Benevolent Association celebrated its fifth anniversary last month. This is a Freethought organization, of which Mr. J. D. Shaw, editor of the Independent Pulpit, is the head.

THE ex-Rev. C. B. Reynolds is doing Freethought lecturing in Kansas. He is at Fall River, Kan., January 7, 8; Leon, 9, 10, 11; Benton and Andover, 13, 14, 15, 16; Dodge City, 18, 19, 20. From Kansas Mr. Reynolds goes to Colorado, and thence to Utah.

"Freethought" is an Immigrant.

We desire to wake the state up. The immigrant helps us. He is a waker.

ACROSS A CONTINENT.

Those who journey from New York to San Francisco by the way I came will indeed see the wonders of the world. These two cities are separated by the Hudson river, a large, wide continent, and San Francisco bay, and between them the traveler will see New Jersey, the Falls of Niagara, the city of Chicago, the Mississippi river, the Prohibition state of Kansas, the Indians of New Mexico and Arizona, the canons and cowboys of the same, the fruitful lands of California, big mountains, big fields, the most beautiful harbor the eye ever fell upon, and, last and greatest, San Francisco itself.

I had never been west before and all these sights were new to me. The train leaving New York at 5 o'clock in the afternoon reaches Niagara about the middle of the following day. The pilgrim here should view the natural marvels before the prices charged for all services rendered by the inhabitants have dulled his appreciation of ordinary curiosities. After a traveler has paid sixty cents for a plate of corned beef and beans the stupendous becomes fatiguing.

Canada, through which the train passes from Niagara to Detroit, derives its chief interest, at this season of the year, from its inhabitants. If the flakes fell as fast during the rest of the night as they were falling when we emerged from the Dominion, the country itself must now be buried under several feet of snow. The Canadian is more English than the Englishman, and the narrow Niagara river separates people of more diverse characteristics, north and south, than does the whole continent east and west. The New Yorker is at home in San Francisco; in Canada he is as much a foreigner as though the Atlantic lay behind him. At least, such was my impression. Canada, in general, is at the feet of the Pope of Rome, but there are a few Liberals within her borders who have the backbone to stand up and protest.

Sunday morning we—that is to say, Mr. Putnam and the writer—opened our eyes on the outskirts of Chicago. It is not to be denied that Chicago has large suburbs. A great deal of the city is out of doors, and not as yet roofed over or walled in, but all the same it is a mighty town lively as an ant-hill day and night and Sunday. Western life first stirs, apparently, at about that place.

There is an organization in Chicago called the Society for Ethical Culture, presided over and preached to by Mr. William Salter, a disciple of Felix Adler. In company with Mr. E. A. Stevens, Brother Putnam and myself went to hear Mr. Salter. A small audience of bright-looking people had assembled. The solemnities were inaugurated by a violin solo of considerable merit, which was received in absolute silence. Then Mr. Salter appeared—a clerical-looking gentleman—and began his discourse in a smooth monotone that was not at any time either raised or lowered. He had chosen as his text the recent discussion between Col. R. G. Ingersoll and Dr. Henry M. Field, and it must be said, to his credit, that his treatment of the disputants was strictly impartial. He could agree with neither fully, but was less shocked by the Presbyterian than by the Infidel, who, as he expressed it, challenged the Almighty as though he were his equal. The discourse was not dull—far from it—but it was full of that restful somnolence which comes to people who feel that their salvation is assured.

Quite a different affair was the evening meeting of the Chicago Liberal League. There the activity was intense, and the audience seemed hardly to sit down with its full weight.

Mr. Stevens called the one hundred and fifty persons to order. Mrs. M. A. Freeman, the secretary, gave a free and rollicking resume of the proceedings of the previous meeting, supplemented by the reading of the "Nine Demands of Liberalism;" there were songs and music, and Mr. Zimmerman, a lawyer of the city, was introduced as the lecturer of the evening, his subject being "The Fallacies of Socialism." Mr. Zimmerman made the preliminary announcement that he was prepared to be pulverized, and then produced a quantity of manuscript, which he held up before him in such a manner as to indicate that he was about to read it. The audience composed itself and held its breath and a notebook, and he proceeded. He took decided grounds against Socialism, going back at least four thousand years, to begin its history with Car-pocrates, and to continue it with the Adamites, a sect who, the speaker said, went without clothes, and committed other immoralities. This lecture, he volunteered to explain, had been hastily thrown together; if he had had sufficient time to devote to a full history of Socialism he could have made his essay more entertaining than an artfully constructed Arabian tale. Mr. Zimmerman continued for a long time without exciting emotion, but when he spoke of the hygienic value of hard labor, and laid it down as a law of nature that "presperation was necessary to health," a lady in a front seat was so overcome by the humor of the remark that she was compelled to thrust a money purse into her mouth in order to keep her laughter under control, while the rest of the audience, particularly the labor contingent, applauded derisively. The Chair restored decorum by requesting those who could not keep quiet to go out. Mr. Zimmerman blandly inquired of the Chair if he was putting it too strong, and again proceeded to consult his manuscript.

The lecture was more lively but not as finished a production as that of Mr. Salter. Speaking literally, it was not finished at all. At the end of an hour Mr. Stevens showed evidence of weariness and glanced at the speaker anxiously and even appealingly; but Mr. Zimmerman went inexorably on and on, until the idea of eternity began to dawn vividly upon the mind of the listener. When patience seemed to have become a vice, down came the mallet; the speaker lapsed, under protest, and the latter half of the fallacies of Socialism found the oblivion of his coat pocket, to his deep regret.

Then the audience arose as one man, not to depart, but to address the Chair. The Chair recognized Mr. Eckford. Mr. Eckford said the speaker of the evening did not know what Socialism was. When Mr. Eckford sat down the audience again arose. Mr. Darrell had the call. Mr. Darrell regretted that Mr. Zimmerman had said nothing about Socialism, and very little of value about any thing else. Mr. Collins was next favored with a hearing. He remarked that only the lecturer's ignorance could excuse his misstatements. Mr. Wheeler, gaining the floor, observed that Mr. Zimmerman's obtuseness had nearly made him weep. Mr. Hall announced himself as not in intellectual sympathy with Socialism, and he would agree broadly with the lecturer. So many here arose at once that Mr. Stevens could not decide the precedence, and settled the question by making a speech himself. He favored giving the Socialists a fair hearing, as there had been, and were, many able and thoughtful men among them. Professor Orchardson, being called upon, declined to make an address for fear of saying something severe. He recognized that between himself and the lecturer there was a first-class idiot, and while he did not wish to make invidious discrimination, he would observe, tentatively, that he did not think that idiot was himself.

There were numerous other speakers upon all sides of the question, both the adverse and commendatory references to himself being received by Mr. Zimmerman with magisterial complacency, and when it came his turn to speak again he said that he had been answered just as he expected to be, and that his argument had not been refuted.

The audience thereupon broke up into little knots, which ultimately slipped through the door and went home. The general opinion was that Mr. Zimmerman's essay had not afforded scope for intelligent criticism, though he meant well.

Monday found us roaming about Chicago, like countrymen seeing the sights, and the following day beheld us snowed in on the Chicago and Alton railroad, somewhere in Missouri. We had met a blizzard on its way southeast, and it held us down for some six hours. A dining car was sent from some mysterious source to feed the hungry passengers. It connected with our train at 10:30 in the evening. We had breakfasted that morning at half-past seven, making fifteen hours between meals. When the train got under way its progress was slow, and Kansas City must have started out to meet us or we would never have seen it.

This city is away up on a bluff, out of sight of the depot. We stopped there over-night. Concerning the place I am only able to report that it is cold; that it is evidently a large commercial center, doing an extensive business in a product labeled "Relief for Kansas Sufferers," put up in bottles; that shoveling snow is a leading industry; that pens in the hotels are frozen in the inkhorns, necessitating the use of a pencil for registering purposes; that guests are provided with skating rinks in their washbowls, and that trains advertised to leave at 10 A. M. pull out at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. On some fairer, warmer, brighter day, when the blizzard is in its hole up in Manitoba, I hope to visit Kansas City again.

Before we left Missouri we took on board an old man with a stiff knee, an armful of wire steak-broilers, a straw mattress, and an outfit for keeping house in a limited way. He had slipped and bent his stiff knee and enlisted general sympathy. A resident of Kansas remarked that he was not a drinking man, but he liked to have a little restorative with him in case of accidents. He thereupon pulled out a quart bottle and gave the sufferer a drink. Mr. Putnam hunted up the conductor and asked if something could not be done toward giving the stiff knee a berth. The conductor couldn't do anything. A benevolent old man from Ohio, evidently a deacon, being at a loss to make himself useful, let his second nature take its course and started a collection, and went out to buy a berth ticket; while he was gone the train departed, and we saw him no more for the next two days. Owing to subsequent delays on our train he was enabled to overtake us, by walking or otherwise. The man with a stiff knee passed by San Francisco and went into the northern part of the state. He gave me the parting advice to steer clear of this city, as I would find nothing to do here. As since my arrival I have labored some fifteen hours per diem, I hardly understand his notion of what would be called "something to do." But I digress.

A second fellow traveler was a harum-scarum carpenter from Chicago on his way to San Diego. He had a big valise full of bread, ham sausage, and a turkey. Out of this he made about six meals a day, and when he parted from us at Mojave he had reduced his supplies to half a loaf of bread, no sausage, and one turkey wing. Besides this he had visited every restaurant we passed, and sampled all the coffee on the route. We weighed him at Albuquerque, and found that he had gained five pounds since he left Kansas City. He was the life of the train; he joked with the cowboys, bartered with the Indian squaws, chaffed the brakemen and conductors, criticised the general management of the Santa Fe road, and otherwise made himself useful. I regret to say that his knowledge of geography was undeveloped, as he imagined himself in California as soon as we had crossed the Missouri river. Putnam christened him our end man. And if he was Bones, the tambourine must be awarded to a middle-aged and intelligent colored man, also a carpenter, and bound for Los Angeles. Bones called him "young feller." Coming over the mountains past Raton in a fierce snow storm, Tambourine was affected with the cold. Bones was near the stove and was too warm. When Bones dropped asleep Tambourine filled up the stove and turned on the draft. The heat soon woke up Bones, who put on the damper. The car being thus cooled off Tambourine awoke shivering, and stirred up the fire again. It was in this contest to see which should run the stove that Bones and Tambourine became acquainted, and their acquaintance ripened into a friendship the amenities of which furnished the car with diversion as long as they remained in it.

But I am at the end of the column. This subject may be resumed in our next.

A BEAUTIFUL TRIBUTE.

Mrs. Ida Knowles, of Peoria, Ill., died in New York, Dec. 15, 1887. Colonel Ingersoll, being an intimate friend of the family, was invited to say a few words over the flower-covered bier on the evening of its removal to the West for interment. He spoke as follows, as reported by the New York World:

MY FRIENDS: Again we stand in the shadow of the great mystery—a shadow as deep and dark as when the tears of the first mother fell upon the pallid face of her lifeless babe—a mystery that has never yet been solved. We have met in the presence of the sacred dead to speak a word of praise, of hope, of consolation. Another life of love is now a blessed memory—a lingering strain of music. The loving daughter, the pure and consecrated wife, the sincere friend, who with tender faithfulness discharged the duties of a life, has reached her journey's end.

A braver, a more serene, a more chivalrous spirit—claspings the loved and by them clasped—never passed from life to enrich the realm of death. No field of war ever witnessed greater fortitude, more perfect, smiling courage, than this poor, weak and helpless woman displayed upon the bed of pain and death.

Her life was gentle and her death sublime. She loved the good, and all the good loved her. But there is this consolation: She can never suffer more; she can never feel again the chill of death; never part again from those she loved. Her heart can break no more. She has shed her last tear, and upon her stainless brow has been set the wondrous seal of everlasting peace.

When the Angel of Death—the masked and voiceless—enters the door of home, there comes with her all the daughters of compassion, and of these Love and Hope remain forever.

You are about to take this dear dust home—to the home of her girlhood, and to the place that was once my home. You will lay her with neighbors that I have loved, that are now at rest. You will lay her where my father sleeps.

All I can say is:

Lay her in the earth,
And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
Let violets spring.

I never knew, I never met, a braver spirit than the one that once inhabited this silent form of dreamless clay.

THE MAGNETISM OF GENIUS.

A correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, describing a visit to the home of Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll, says:

"The Ingersoll parlor windows blazed with light, the door-bell jangled incessantly, the parlor was full of visitors and was humming like a beehive. In this there is a text for a new chapter in the history of this ever-growing, constantly changing metropolis. The chapter should be headed 'Hero Worship.' The theme should be the magnetic quality of genius that draws men of brains to the presence of the most original, aggressive, or brilliant leaders of thought in town. Among the chieftains Colonel Ingersoll has a commanding position, fairly won by his intellect, but strengthened by his good-fellowship with men. In this he is peculiar. He is not spoken of merely with respect, as Henry Bergh and Felix Adler are, or with deference, as Roscoe Conkling and Jay Gould are, but always affectionately, even lovingly, as only one other great man in the town is. He can move the heart as well as spur the mind. He can comfort a mother who has buried a babe, or encourage a father in despair over a wayward son, just as skillfully as he can set the wits of the city to hugging themselves with some such delicious utterance as that of his about Rutherford B. Hayes, of whom he said: 'He became president by a small majority, but he went out of office unanimously.' The colonel holds his levees on Sunday nights, and they are among the important institutions of the city."

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States, or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts, shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The American Secular Union is organized on the basis of these Nine Demands of Liberalism. It has no other object than the total separation of Church and State, and the destruction of all ecclesiastical authority. It stands for the absolute political liberty of every citizen. It is a national association and has auxiliary branches in nearly every state and territory in the Union. Its work is special and of the first importance. It is the only organization of the kind in the country, and the only combined power that stands ready to resist the encroachments of the church party. A persistent and threatening attempt is being made to put God and the Christian Bible into the Constitution of the United States, and to make Christianity the supreme law of the land, to which every legislature and court shall be subservient. A more destructive attack upon the liberties of America was never made. Its success would be the absolute overthrow of our republican and democratic institutions.

The American Secular Union is the common instrumentality for the defense of civil liberty. Through fortune and misfortune it has maintained its life. It cannot die until it has achieved its work. Liberals of every shade of opinion should unite with the Secular Union. There is no question as to the justice of the Nine Demands. They are the axioms of Free-thought. Whether one believes in a future life or not, he must believe in equal rights and impartial liberty now and forever.

The American Secular Union must have the sinews of war for the publication of documents on the Nine Demands and for legislative works. We must scatter information among the people, and those who in the halls of legislation are plotting for the establishment of an ecclesiastical empire must be met and foiled by the constant activity of our own leaders. There is no security so long as the church remains. Where it has no authority it is always striving to attain it. In its very nature it is despotic. It is never satisfied with argument. It delights to draw the sword.

At the last congress of the American Secular Union, held at Chicago, October 15 and 16, E. A. Stevens was chosen secretary, a man, a worker of irrepressible energy and splendid enthusiasm. We need his services constantly in the field. He must be supported, and he must have means by which to publish and circulate documents, and keep all our ranks informed in regard to the movements of the enemy. If every Liberal will do his best in a small way even, contributing a dollar a year for membership, a sufficient fund will be raised for campaign work. The Liberals of the Pacific Coast should respond generously to the call of the hour. In every state, in every locality, there are dangers from the enormous influence and power of the churches. Every Freethinker, every non-Christian, is interested in the maintenance of a secular government. Only by a national organization can the strength of Liberalism be made most effective. Let every Liberal, then, who reads this do something at once for the cause. Send all contributions to E. A. Stevens, secretary of the American Secular Union, 750 West Lake street, Chicago, Ill.

MACAULAY ON CHURCH AND STATE.

In his younger days William E. Gladstone published a book discussing "The State in Its Relations with the Church." The following is an extract from a review of the work, written by Lord Macaulay:

"We are desirous, before we enter on the discussion of this important question, to point out clearly a distinction which though very obvious, seems to be overlooked by many excellent people. In their opinion, to say that the ends of government are temporal and not spiritual is tantamount to saying that the temporal welfare of man is of more importance than his spiritual welfare. But this is an entire mistake. The question is not whether spiritual interests be or be not superior in importance to temporal interests, but whether the machinery which happens at any moment to be employed for the purpose of protecting certain temporal interests of a society be necessarily such a machinery as is fitted to promote the spiritual interests of that society. Without a division of labor the world could not go on. It is of very much more importance that men should have food than that they should have pianofortes. Yet it by no means follows that every pianoforte maker ought to add the business of a baker to his own; for if he did so, we should have both much worse music and much worse bread. It is of much more importance that the knowledge of religious truth should be wisely diffused than that the art of sculpture should flourish among us. Yet it by no means follows that the Royal Academy ought to unite with its present functions those of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, to distribute theological tracts, to send forth missionaries, to turn out Nollekens for being a Catholic, Bacon for being a Methodist, and Flaxman for being a Swedenborgian. For the effect of such folly would be that we should have the worst possible Academy of Arts, and the worst possible Society for the Promotion of Christian Knowledge. The community, it is plain, would be thrown into universal confusion if it were supposed to be the duty of every association which is formed for one good object to promote every other good object.

"As to some of the ends of civil government all people are agreed. That it is designed to protect our persons and our property; that it is designed to compel us to satisfy our wants, not by rapine, but by industry; that it is designed to compel us to decide our differences, not by the strong hand, but by arbitration; that it is designed to direct our whole force, as that of one man, against any other society which may offer us injury. These are propositions which will hardly be disputed.

"Now, these are matters in which man, without any reference to any higher being, or to any future state, is very deeply interested. Every human being, be he idolater, Mahometan, Jew, Papist, Socinian, Deist, or Atheist, naturally loves life, shrinks from pain, desires comforts which can be enjoyed only in communities where property is secure. To be murdered, to be tortured, to be robbed, to be sold into slavery—these are evils from which men of every religion, and men of no religion, wish to be protected; and, therefore, it will hardly be disputed that men of every religion, and of no religion, have thus far a common interest in being well governed.

"But the hopes and fears of man are not limited to this short life and to this visible world. He finds himself surrounded by the signs of a power and wisdom higher than his own; and in all ages and nations, men of all orders of intellect, from Bacon and Newton down to the rudest tribes of cannibals, have believed in the existence of some superior mind. Thus far the voice of mankind is almost unanimous. But whether there be one God or many, what may be God's natural and what his moral attributes, in what relation his creatures stand to him, whether he have ever disclosed himself to us by any other revelation than that which is written in all the parts of the glorious and well ordered world which he has made, whether his revelation be contained in any permanent record, how that record should be interpreted, and whether it have pleased him to appoint any unerring interpreter on earth, these are questions respecting which there exists the widest diversity of opinion, and respecting some of which a large part of our race has ever been deplorably in error.

"Now, here are two great objects: one is the protection of the persons and estates of citizens from injury; the other is the propagation of religious truth. No two objects more entirely distinct can well be imagined. The former belongs wholly to the visible and tangible world in which we live; the latter belongs to that higher world which is beyond the reach of our senses. The former belongs to this life; the latter to that which is to come. Men who are perfectly agreed as to the importance of the former object, and as to the way of obtaining it, differ as widely as possible respecting the latter object. We must therefore pause before we admit that the persons, be they who they may, who are entrusted with the power for the promotion of the former object, ought always to use that power for the promotion of the latter object."

IT IS THE PAPER ALL WANT.

FRIEND PUTNAM: I read in the last Truth Seeker that you and Mac were going to start a paper on the Pacific Coast. That is the paper I want. I know you will make it go, and I think you have struck the right point. California can appreciate a good thing.

J. R. TEWKSBURY.

Fort Madison, Iowa.

TRAVELING clergyman (to hotel clerk): "What are your regular rates?" Clerk: "Four dollars a day, sir, payable weekly." Traveling clergyman: "You have a different rate for clergymen, of course?" Clerk: "Yes, sir. Four dollars a day in advance."

On the Taxation of Ecclesiastical Property.

Gen. U. S. Grant: "In connection with this important question, I would also call your attention to the importance of correcting an evil that, if permitted to continue, will probably lead to great trouble in our land before the close of the nineteenth century. It is the acquisition of vast amounts of untaxed church property. In 1850, I believe, the church property of the United States, which paid no tax, municipal or state, amounted to about eighty-seven millions of dollars. In 1860 the amount had doubled. In 1870 it was $354,483,587. By 1900, without a check, it is safe to say this property will reach a sum exceeding three billions of dollars. So vast a sum, receiving all the protection and benefits of government, without bearing the burdens and expenses of the same, will not be looked upon acquiescently by those who have to pay the taxes. In a growing country, where real estate enhances so rapidly as in the United States, there is scarcely a limit to the wealth that may be acquired by corporations, religious or otherwise, if allowed to retain real estate without taxation. The contemplation of so vast a property as here alluded to, without taxation, may lead to sequestration without constitutional authority, and through blood. I would suggest the taxation of all property equally." (Annual Message, 1875.)

Herbert Spencer: "You retain the forms of freedom, but, so far as I can gather, there has been considerable loss of the substance. Free institutions can be maintained only by citizens each of whom is instant to oppose every illegitimate act, every assumption of supremacy, every official excess of power, however trivial it may seem. As Hamlet says, there is such a thing as 'greatly to find quarrel in a straw,' when the straw implies a principle. If, as you say of the American, he pauses to consider whether he can afford the time and trouble—whether it will pay—corruption is sure to creep in. All these lapses from a higher to lower forms of life begin in trifling ways, and it is only by incessant watchfulness that they can be prevented. As one of your early statesmen said, 'The price of liberty is eternal vigilance.' But it is far less against foreign aggressions upon national liberty that this vigilance is required than against the insidious growth of domestic interferences with personal liberty."

Jas. A. Garfield: "The divorce between church and state ought to be absolute. It ought to be so absolute that no church property anywhere in any state, or in the nation, should be exempt from equal taxation; for if you exempt the property of any church organization, to that extent you impose a tax upon the whole community." (Speech in Congress, June, 1874.)

THIS is the patriotic New Year sentiment of Andrew Carnegie, the Pittsburg (Pa.) millionaire iron-founder: "The old European continent is an armed camp, its millions training how best to kill each other. The new American continent is a smiling garden, its millions cultivating the arts of peace. The dynasties of the old world sink deeper and deeper under a load of debt. The new world is troubled how to dispose of its surplus. In despotic Europe, Anarchists and Nihilists abound, the result of unjust laws. The germs of these pernicious growths, transplanted to the republic, wither and die. For these, and many other mercies, rejoice, for of all lands America is the most favored."

THE compositors on the Deseret News, the official Mormon organ published at Salt Lake City, have gone on strike against taking tithing orders and store due bills in lieu of cash for their services. The striking men are Mormons, and will at once be cut off from the church as punishment for the heresy of preferring secular coin to sanctified script.

TRUTH, BEAUTY, GOODNESS.

[Written for the opening exercises of the Silverton Freethought Hall, of Silverton, Oregon, Nov. 25, 1887, by Samuel P. Putnam.]

To Truth we give this work of busy hands—
Fair Truth, that makes for life its happy toil,
For man his dignity, and for every path
The constant glory of to-morrow's gain ;—
Truth, forward looking, seeing in the old
The dawning splendor of the eternal new ;
Leading sweet stories in the rugged rocks,
In wastes of sand, the darksome cells of earth ;
In roots that struggle to the verdant soil ;
In clouds that float along the endless blue ;
The sunset's sea of light, and ranks of stars,
That never cease their glowing march sublime.
Truth sees in low the glory of the high ;
In dust the jewels of the golden sun.
Truth makes all things divine, disdains no worth
In man or beast, in clod or sparkling dew ;
In cavern's gloom or constellation's flame.
Truth makes the world effulgent for the right ;
Makes humblest duty an inspiring task ;
Makes every work a fair and noble prize.
To seek the truth with every living thought ;
To know what nature is and man himself ;
To read the message of the rosy dawns ;
To stoop and find the secret of the flower,
To see decay still ever flow to life ;
And life in death still blooming to new grace—
This is our labor and our rich reward.

To Beauty, too, we dedicate our work.
Beauty and Truth, these make one living soul
In the eternal progress of mankind.
We would make beautiful the fields of life,
And in the heart of nature find the joy
Which makes the music for our onward steps.
We would make flowers for every happy home ;
O'er every fireside fling the vivid light
O' wonder and romance—of hopes and dreams
That fact will always weave in mystery's web ;
Hanging sweet pictures o'er our bounded way,
From the untraveled future's endless wealth.
Ah, swift imagination is not dead,
Though with the truth we walk the solid earth.
For truth is movement, movement is delight,
And in the brain of man is rhythmic power ;
That so the ocean of the human heart
Still rolls in melody, and skies are blue,
And ever thought pursues its glittering flight,
While pregnant fancy o'er the dark unknown
From radiant blossoms of the things that are,
Scatters the myriads seeds of what may be,
To bloom and fade, the children of our wish,
Yet making dear the fated path we take.
Yes, we will have the song sublime of hope :
The music of brave hearts, the cheer of toil,
The dream of poet and the lover's thrill ;
The artist's glowing pencil, whose deft hand
From Truth's white lustre builds the rainbow's arch,
Making all colors grace the bending heavens.

To Truth, to Beauty, greater still to Good,
We give this work. It is for human weal.
It is a temple sacred to the right ;
It is for justice and for kindly deeds ;
It is to make us better, nobler friends,
Helpers in toil and grief ; to lend a hand
To every fallen brother in the race ;
To give the cup of water to the faint ;
To feed the hungry, make our home the spot
Where sweetest virtues shine, with welcome there
For every weary toiler of the world.
It is for honest labor—each for all,
And all for each on fruitful breast of earth.
It is that man and woman, equal, free,
Shall still in duty seek the wealth of love.
Truth, Beauty, Goodness—to these three in one
We give our work and all our heart and hand.
For these we labor—not with fear and doubt,
But minds elate ; for 'tis our radiant faith
That man will choose the good and not the ill ;
Take knowledge and not ignorance for his guide,
And do the right because he loves the right.

Thus will our temple be a brightening spot
Where virtue, justice, liberty, shall shine,
And brotherhood shall be the golden link
In joys and tasks and sweet delights of home.

A FREETHINKER'S CONTRIBUTION TO SCIENCE.

The great objective, or thirty-six-inch lens of the Lick telescope was successfully mounted on the afternoon of December 31, and would have been turned on the heavens that night had the sky been clear, but owing to its clouding up about sundown no observations were made. Superintendent Floyd, Professor Keeler, and Messrs. Swasey and Clark are satisfied with the work, and as soon as an observation is made, the photographic lens will be mounted and experimental photographs taken to determine the work required to finish it, which Mr. Clark has heretofore been unable to do.

The Lick Observatory, now complete, will in a few days be transferred by the trustees to the Regents of the State University, to be known as "The Lick Astronomical Department of the University of California." James Lick, the man to whom not only this state but the world is indebted for the grandest contribution ever made to astronomical science, was an American by birth, of German parentage. He was born in 1796, and experienced a variety of fortunes and misfortunes up to the year 1847, when the foundation of his immense wealth was laid by an investment of $45,000 in real estate in this city. From this investment sprang nearly all his future prosperity. Mr. Lick was a Freethinker and hated superstition. He saw that at its base was ignorance and that it might be swept away by knowledge. Those who seek for his motive in donating $700,000 for the construction of a telescope, "superior to and more powerful than any telescope ever yet made," may find it here.

The Observatory is upon Mount Hamilton, in the Diablo range, near San Jose, Cal. This eminence was chosen on account of its superior atmospheric advantages over any other place perhaps in the United States. The beauty of the outlook from Observation Peak is described by Professor Holden, who says :

"It would be difficult to find in the whole world a more magnificent view than can be had from the summit just before sunrise on one of our August mornings. The eastern sky is saffron and gold, with just a few thin horizontal bars of purple and rosy clouds. The sharp outlines of Copernicus and Kepler seem in sharp profile against this brilliant background. Orion, Procyon, the Twins, Sirius are in the morning sky, and Venus is brilliant and steady among the stars. The instant the sunbeams touch the horizon the whole panorama of the Sierra Nevada flashes out, 130 miles distant. Toward the south and west the beautiful valley of Santa Clara lies, dotted with farms and vineyards, and bordered toward the sea by Loma Prieta and the Santa Cruz Range. The winding road to San Jose, which takes twenty miles of twisting to accomplish the thirteen miles of air-line, lies like a dusty snake at your feet. The bay of San Francisco looks like a piece of a child's dissecting map and is lost in the fogs near the city. The buildings of the city seem strangely placed in the midst of all the quiet beauty and the wild strength of the mountains. Then you catch a glimpse of the Pacific in the southwest and of countless minor ranges of mountains and hills that are scattered toward every point of the compass ; while if the atmosphere is especially clear, you can plainly see to the north Mount Shasta, 175 miles distant."

The observatory owns at present some 1550 acres of mountain land, including and immediately surrounding Mount Hamilton. Of these acres, 1350 were public lands and were donated to the institution by a special grant from Congress ; 149 acres of private land were purchased, and 50 acres were donated by Robert Morrow. The objects of securing so large a holding were that the closely adjoining peaks should be under the direct control of the observatory, that an outlet from the property might be secured, and to prevent the erection of any buildings of an objectionable character or for objectionable uses, in even an approximate neighborhood to the astronomical settlement. As it is, the 1350 acres will be held by the University as a public park, which, at some future day, may possibly be treated for landscape effects.

The first work on the observatory site was commenced in July, 1880. Since then 7000 tons of rock and earth have been removed to make the narrow plateau upon which the buildings stand. These buildings are excellently constructed for their purpose as regards solidity of material, simple but effective architecture, and a completeness of internal arrangement that assures every possible convenience in the prosecution of the scientific work to which they are devoted. They are built of brick made upon the premises. The main building, which is 287 feet long, including the big dome that stands at its southern end, contains a hall 12 feet wide and running the entire length of the building. This is a serviceable feature, as it affords a space 270 feet long through which a straight line may be drawn—a space that will be useful for optical experiments. In this building are the offices of the director and secretary, the library, the clockroom, the visitors' room, the workshops, etc., and at its northwest corner stands the small dome, in which the 12-inch equatorial finds its home.

The telescope is not only the largest in the world, but also the one that is capable of doing the best work, according to the judgment of all the astronomers who have examined it. Its 36-inch object-glass is two inches larger than that of the celebrated telescope at Pulkova, nine inches larger than the one at Vienna, and ten inches larger than the one at Washington. The following statement was written for Science by Professor A. P. Todd. He says: "An inquiry often made and a very natural and proper one relates to the prospective capabilities of this enormous instrument, when mounted in so favorable an atmosphere and directed to the moon. Every astronomer who has observed the heavenly bodies from Mount Hamilton knows that the extraordinary steadiness of the atmosphere enables him to regularly employ eye-pieces on his telescope, which magnify two or three times as much as those he habitually uses for the same kind of work at home. It is thus not unreasonable to expect that a few nights in the course of each observing year may be found when the maximum magnifying power—about 3500 diameters—may be advantageously employed by the great telescope. The theoretical distance of the moon would then become about sixty miles, but the corresponding ideal condition of vision can never be attained. Making due allowance for the unavoidable effects of the earth's atmosphere and other unavoidable conditions, the observer might expect to see the moon much the same as he would without the telescope if it were only 100 miles away. If, at the same time the moon happened to be at its least distance from the eye of the observer—about 220,000 miles—and if the object on the moon were suitably illuminated by the sun's light, it is possible that details of its nature might be satisfactorily made out, even although they were no larger than some of the larger edifices on the earth."

Of the $700,000 donated by Mr. Lick for his observatory, there will be something less than $150,000 left to be invested for the benefit of the institution. In the budget of the University the astronomical department is to be allowed $1599 per month, or $19,188 per year, in addition to what may be derived from such investment as may be made of what is left of the fund.

The ashes of James Lick rest beneath this magnificent monument which his generosity has raised.

THE editor of the Truth Seeker announces that "our brother" has gone West to grow up with the country. Catch up with the country would be better. At the present moment California is ahead.

A DISCOURAGED TENDERFOOT.

The other day a man with a stubby beard and a manner softened by experience entered the office of an Eastern journal and inquired for the file of a daily paper containing a list of "want" advertisements. In explanation he stated that he was recently from the boundless West and was prepared to accept a remunerative situation in the East.

He was recognized as a citizen who went to New Mexico a few years ago to start a cattle ranch and get wealthy. The editor asked if the ranch was not panning out according to his expectations, and in reply the stubby-bearded man said:

"Yes, the ranch has panned out according to my expectations, and rather more. Let me tell the story and you will see right away why I have concluded to settle East. When I got out there to the place where I intended to locate I found loafing about the premises a worthless-looking resident who did not appear to have anything to do or to own any property besides a gun and a mule. The place was nothing but a spring where the water came out of the ground, ran a few rods, and then disappeared in the sand. I told the worthless-looking resident that I guessed I would throw up a little 'dobe house, catch the water in a trough, buy a few cattle, build a corral, and begin business. He wanted to know how much I was going to give him for the water privilege. I told him that I hadn't contemplated giving him anything for it, and didn't see how I was called upon to do so. 'Wasn't I on the ground first?' he says. I told him he was probably ten minutes ahead of me. 'Then it's mine,' says he, 'by virtue of peaceable possession. Fifty dollars, mister, afore you light off that mule.'

"I said I wouldn't pay a cent, and he raised it to $60; and every time I offered a new argument he slapped on $10 more, until it got to be a hundred. I saw he had the best of me, and knocked it down at that figure. Then he had the gall to want $5 for the good will of the business. I asked him whose good will. He said, 'the Injuns'; and that I'd find it was worth a good deal more than that when I'd learned by experience what an inconvenience their ill-will was. As he'd the draw on me, I paid him the $105 and he went away. I got supplies and some cattle from the nearest trader, built the 'dobe house and a corral according to my prospectus, and started in. The cattle prospered and everything worked well; but, to tell the truth, I got lonesome, and so left the ranch and traveled East.

"No neighbors, we presume?" suggested the editor.

"Well, no, just at present, I can't say there were any that could be called nigh neighbors. At one time a man located nine miles away and another six miles beyond, and I began to think the country was going to be quite a metropolis; but the Indians scalped both of them, and penned me up in the house for fifteen days hand running. Then they ran off a lot of my goats and horses, and killed some of my best cows. There's no one now within twenty-one miles of me."

"Why didn't the ranchmen organize a society for mutual protection?"

"That's just what we did. We tried that. A man came along one day, and notified me that a preliminary meeting for that purpose was to be held on such a date to form the Caraho Cattle Raisers' Protective Alliance, and that I was a candidate for secretary. He had a belt around him stuck full of cartridges, and I accepted the nomination. The preliminary meeting came off, and we elected a president, treasurer, and secretary, the last being myself. A regular meeting was called for the first Sunday in the following month. Saturday I was getting ready to attend, when the organizer showed up again, and said the meeting was adjourned. The president and treasurer had had a misunderstanding; the treasurer had failed to present his argument quick enough, and went under, shot through the neck. That broke up the Caraho Cattle Raisers' Protective Alliance, and I was lonelier than ever."

"What was done to the president? How was he disciplined for his extraordinary ruling?"

"Well, the sheriff wasn't where we could communicate with him, and so the affair blew over. The widow of the treasurer needed somebody to look after her ranch, and she hired the surviving president at $5 a day. The last I heard he was living half the time at the widow's, and the other half at home."

"Where was the sheriff?"

"At the county seat, having a good time."

"How is that?"

"This is how it was. He had just killed a man without any cause that we could discover, and the grand jury concluded it was an indictable offense and brought in a true bill against him. At the trial he was found guilty of manslaughter and sentenced to expiate his crime by six months' solitary confinement. We didn't have any jail, so he was committed to the custody of his wife, and the jury voted her $7 a week for boarding him. He stayed in town and collected the $7 every Saturday night and blew it in for redeye. He didn't do a stroke of work until the sentence was served out. After that he sued the county for his salary while he was in durance, and collected that, too."

"So it was lonesome for you?"

"Yes; and life there had other drawbacks besides. For instance, a cowboy took it into his head one day to call me a liar. I had my choice to pick it up and be shot, or to let it go; so I let it go."

"Is your ranch for sale?"

"Yes; the ranch is for sale. Since I came here I've had a letter from there saying the mountain lions have killed all the colts. There's been a freshet that took my goats off down stream and washed away the trough and the corral. The spring goes underground now altogether, and a new settler has run my cattle into his yard and put his brand on them. The ranch is for sale for what the good-will is worth. The man that will go there and carry it on can make an independent fortune in a few years if the Indians don't scalp him. But," concluded the stubby-bearded man, "New York is good enough for me. I prefer the quiet retirement of this metropolis to the dizzy whirl of life in the West. I hear that the government is to experiment with Lieutenant Zalinski's dynamite gun down the bay to-morrow. If I don't find anything to suit me in these 'want' advertisements, I am going to apply for the position of marker aboard the dismantled hulk they have anchored out there for a target."

THE ROSES.

TO VIRGINIA,

Whose flower-piece is on exhibition at the Academy of Design, New York.

Sweet roses, flushing with the skill of art,
In Nature's varied hues and wildering play;
Which from thy hand along the canvas start
As if the spirit of Spring's happiest day
Beat in the pulses of thy subtle touch;
As if the earth made thee its richest heir;
So that the painted petal seems as much
The glory of the sod, as ranks most fair
That bloom along the meadows flowing green,
When the swift glances of the Summer burn,
Still from their cunning beauty I must turn—
Thy daintiest art outrivalled still must be;
The fairest roses in thy cheeks I see.

BESIDES Dr. E. B. Foote, sr.'s, "Plain Home Talk," we have the young doctor's "Radical Remedy in Social Science." 25c

JOKES.

A Story that is Always Good.

Among the first Confederate troops that went out from Arkansas was Parson Geesmore, who enlisted as a chaplain. He was a devoted Christian, and his prayers were regarded by the men as utterances from a higher power. Just before the battle of Jenkins's Ferry the old man, in a sermon, said:

"My dear boys, I have decided to go into the next fight with you. I don't think a man can properly preach about the evils and sensations of war unless he has experienced the feeling of going into battle. Now, the next fighting we engage in shall have me numbered among its participants."

The old gentleman rode a large gray horse, and when preparations for the battle of Jenkins's Ferry were being made he appeared on the snowy charger. Some of the officers begged him to keep out of danger, but with an expression of heroism he replied that he would engage in the battle. The first artillery fire from the enemy shot the horse from under the old gentleman, and by the time he settled himself on his feet a bullet came along and carried off one of his fingers. He attempted to be calm, but just then a bullet carried away the right thumb, and, wheeling around, the old man struck a determined trot for the rear.

"Hold on, parson!" called some one.

"Hold on, h—l!" he replied. "Ask a man to hold on when the whole — universe is shooting at him. Take care of your body and the Lord will take care of your soul!"

A Needless Sufferer.

The sermon had been about the patience of Job, and when it was over a stranger, who had listened quite attentively, approached the clergyman and said:

"Say, who was that chap that had them boils?"

"His name was Job."

"Where does he live?"

"He's been dead for centuries."

"Great Cæsar!"

"Don't you admire his patience?"

"No; I can't admire any man who will put up with a whole herd of boils when by sending to me he could get a box of my Egyptian Boil Remover, only 25 cents, warranted to cure

"Let us engage in prayer."

Plenty of Time Guaranteed.

George—You look sleepy, John.

John—I did not get to bed until 3 o'clock this morning. I was out calling on my girl.

"Three o'clock! I should have thought the old man would have come down stairs with a shotgun."

"Her father is a widower, and is courting a widow in the next block. I never have to leave the house until he comes home."

A Vivid Description.

"The woman was old, decrepit, and gray;
As she trudged through the snow and the sleet
She wore on her face a sad, sad smile,
And her shoes were filled with feet."

SAID the clergyman: "I shall preach from the text, 'And David took from the brook three smooth stones.' Now, my hearers, I intend to prove and explain by these three stones the doctrine of the Trinity." "It was five smooth stones," said the deacon, very respectfully. "Well, my hearers, I made a small mistake in the facts, but it makes no difference in the argument."

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarian.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM

President of the American Secular Union,

Will make his annual lecture tour for 1888 in California, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, Washington Territory, Arizona, Idaho, Montana, and Utah. The purpose of these lectures is the organization of Freethought Societies, the discussion and advancement of the Nine Demands of Liberalism, the acquaintance and fraternal association of the Liberal people of this country.

It is necessary that those who desire lectures shall communicate at once, in order that at the earliest possible moment the route may be laid out, so that the largest number of places can be visited with the greatest economy of resources. Our country is so vast in extent, and railroad expenses are so great that lectures must be given on a pre-arranged route.

It is best, if possible, to arrange for two or more lectures, rather than for one. The expense of advertising is no greater, and much more good can be accomplished—a larger interest will be excited—and there will be a better opportunity for information in regard to the magnitude of our cause and the importance of our principles.

The following are some of the subjects of the lectures, dealing both with the destructive and constructive aspects of Secular work—and its scientific and literary form—giving special attention to the political significance of the Nine Demands:

Universal Mental Liberty,

The New Heaven and Earth,

The Glory of Infidelity,

American Democracy,

The New God,

The Bible: Its Genuineness, Authenticity, Inspiration, and Infallibility,

Thomas Paine: The Thinker, The Patriot,

The Moralist, and the Scholar.

The Moral Power of Unbelief,

Fair Play,

The Dangers Ahead,

Woman and the Bible,

Science and Theology,

Priest, King and People,

Creation and Evolution; or, Miracle and Law,

The Works of Man and the Works of God;

or, Civilization vs. The Raw Material.

The terms of the lectures will be made reasonable to all societies and individuals who desire to co-operate with the work of the American Secular Union. It is expected that hall rent, advertising and local expenses will be provided for—and beyond this, that every Liberal will do his best to help the general cause. By combination of effort local organization can be strengthened and universal interest aroused. The local work and national work depend upon each other. The local work is of the first importance; it is the vital force of the movement—but to have simply local enterprise is to destroy the noblest spirit of Freethought, which is world-wide in its relations. It is through the Union that the broadest humanitarian results can be achieved.

Will not friends instantly interest themselves in this matter, and arrange for lectures, so that dates and subjects may be given, and every possible point be made available for work.

PRESS NOTICES, ETC.

Mr. Putnam is one of the most thorough believers in intellectual liberty in the world. He has written some of the most stirring appeals to the Liberals of this country that I have ever read. He believes that Freethought has a future; that the time is coming when the superstitions of this world will be forgotten—or remembered—some of them with smiles, most of them with tears. Mr. Putnam, although endowed with a poetic nature, with poetic insight, clings to the known, builds upon the experience of man, and believes in fancies only when they are used as the wings of fact. His abilities are of the highest order. He compels the admiration of every one who really loves the just and true.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Putnam, the Freethinker, is the best posted and best talker we have ever had on Wood river. The theater has been crowded every night whenever Mr. Putnam was advertised to speak.—Inter-Idaho, Hailey, Idaho.

S. P. Putnam was greeted by a large and appreciative audience on Sunday night last, and if close attention, interrupted only by frequent rounds of applause, indicates anything, nearly all present felt that they were enjoying a rare intellectual treat, and more than compensated for their time and attention. Putnam is a calm, clear-headed Liberal thinker, a sound reasoner and an eloquent speaker, and is apparently incapable of giving offense to any one who is an honest, earnest seeker for truth.—Avant-Courier, Bozeman, Montana.

Mr. Putnam is an eloquent, attractive, and entertaining speaker, and his remarks were frequently interrupted by applause.—Rocky Mountain Daily News, Denver, Colorado.

Samuel P. Putnam has been entertaining our people with a course of lectures on Freethought. The seating capacity of the hall on Friday evening was inadequate to accommodate the audience. The speaker during his stay showed himself to be a man of extraordinary ability, holding his audiences continually wrapped up in his subjects.—Times, Black Hawk, Colorado.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JANUARY 14, 1888

Six men who tried to take the czar of Russia's life, and failed, were hanged last week. If they were hanged for failing, there are many people who will regard the punishment as inadequate to the offense.

CONSERVATIVE citizens must take a stand on the liquor question. We advise them to oppose prohibition and delirium tremens.

This is what the Alta California calls a "stand." As a conservative citizen, we pronounce it a straddle.

PROFESSOR STEWART, of Liberia, says that "for every missionary who goes to Africa seventy-six thousand gallons of liquor are sent to that country." The professor omits to state how much is sent for the natives.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND's jubilee gift to the pope is a copy of the Constitution of the United States. We should be pleased to see portions of that instrument embodied in Mr. Pecci's next encyclical. In that way his holiness would be able to issue from the Vatican a document worth more than the paper it is printed on.

DR. SCHLIEMANN, report says, has discovered the remains of one of the oldest temples of Aphrodite, which is mentioned by Homer, Herodotus, and Pausanias, on the island of Cerigo, the ancient Cythera. If Dr. Schliemann's object is simply the discovery of antique ruins, he is wasting his time in the Greek archipelago. He may find a much more interesting specimen in this city. It is the structure which the United States furnishes this magnificent city for a postoffice. It is not mentioned by any of the ancient writers, for the reason, probably, that it had gone to decay before they were born.

DR. JOHN HALL, of New York, writes to the papers that Santa Claus is a myth and should go. How about the myths that Dr. John Hall, of New York, preaches to his congregation every Sunday? Compared with the Eden myth, the flood myth, and the redeemer myth, the myth of Santa Claus takes to itself the character of an eternal verity.

SIXTY-FIVE years ago the first Catholic church was built in New Hampshire, and to-day in the city of Manchester the pupils in the Catholic schools outnumber those in the public schools. This fact is gratifying as showing the decay of puritanism in its own home; but an escape from puritanism only to be swallowed by Catholicism is like getting out of the mire into the mud.

THE PRESS AND THE PLATFORM.

The Press is one of the noblest and most varied instrumentalities of progress. It can touch every chord of passion and awaken every human thought. It is a constant educator. It is a ceaseless stream of influence and binds thousands together in one common purpose.

The growth of Liberalism in this great West demands the aid of the Press as well as of the Platform. The one cannot take the place of the other. The Platform is the expression of personal power. It is quick, intense, illuminating. But eloquence in its very nature is transitory, and unless allied with the Press its brightest flashes disappear into oblivion.

Liberalism is a growth—an education. It is one of the greatest movements in history. It is based upon ideas which the people cannot understand at once. Its principles reach into all life. They are the making of character, and create a new civilization.

Those who are truly Liberal must be thoroughly and profoundly in earnest, and they must recognize that all means must be used for the advancement of humanity. They cannot be satisfied with small things—only with great.

The Liberals of these Pacific states must recognize their vast opportunity. Here is a country capable of holding and sustaining all the present population of the United States. It has immense possibilities. In the course of a decade its population will increase by millions. Its developments are incalculable.

To meet the demands of the time there must be an association and organization of the Freethought party; otherwise the ecclesiastical dominion will be established.

Liberalism cannot express itself adequately except by the persistent power of the press. The ordinary newspaper will not print the radical thoughts of the people. It will not protest against injustice unless it is popular to do so. The ordinary newspaper is only a machine to grind out the established opinions of the world. Only on rare occasions will it open its columns to the Liberal thinker.

To educate the people; to meet important issues; to state facts; to guard against insidious oppression; to declare the truth without fear or favor, there must be in these states and territories of the Pacific an organ established for the express purpose of upholding, defending, enunciating, and spreading the principles of the Freethought party. Such a paper, in conjunction with eloquent and able champions upon the platform, will be powerful for the consolidation and influence of the Freethinkers of the coast.

Such is the design of FREETHOUGHT. It is not established for any personal interest, but for the maintenance and promulgation of universal principles to which every friend of humanity should be devoted. For this reason FREETHOUGHT should receive the generous support of those who desire the improvement of mankind on the basis of liberty and justice. In return FREETHOUGHT will do its best to maintain and advertise all the advocates of Liberalism who are doing such valiant service upon the platform.

ORTHODOXY.

Orthodoxy, in its very nature, is hateful. It has no redeeming quality. It is not true, and it is not good. It is simply and absolutely ugly.

It is born of the hideous side of the universe and of nature. It is the incarnation of fear. It breathes only of sorrow, desolation, and night. It abhors sunshine. It is a system of despair. It makes man a beast and God a devil. Its mockery of redemption only makes more cruel the horrors of the hereafter. Its Christ is a picture of weakness. He satisfies only vengeance. Justice is utterly overthrown.

Orthodoxy is the supremacy of brute force. It makes might the right. Its divinity is an irresponsible monster. He is under no obligation either to truth or duty. He can lie, steal, murder and destroy; and yet he is to be praised forever. He is king of heaven, and he can do no wrong although he violates every sentiment of humanity.

Orthodoxy is the ally of tyranny. It has never breathed a word in favor of freedom. It has lighted every fagot. It has built the prison house and the gallows. It has armed the despot. It has made bloody the pages of history. It chains the heart and the mind of man. It rules by terror. Submission is its law. To rebel is the unpardonable crime. Wherever Orthodoxy reigns there is the clank of fetters, the cry of tortured victims, the bones of martyrs, the gloom of the dungeon, the flame of dismantled homes, the infinite havoc of war. There the child is torn from its mother, the wife from the husband. All ties of nature, of friendship, of love, are disregarded. Nothing is sacred to Orthodoxy but slavery. Its only hope is helplessness. To do nothing and to be nothing is the road to heaven. To achieve on one's own responsibility is to incur the direst punishment. There must be no individuality, no self-reliance, no independence, no heroic action in Orthodoxy. There must be only humility, subserviency, the bended knee, the prayer. One must not stand up. He must be forever on the ground and put his lips to the dust.

Orthodoxy is relentlessly repugnant to progress. It is altogether conservative. It looks backward, and not forward. It has no faith in the new. Orthodoxy does not admit that there is anything better than itself, anything more noble, more beautiful. In Orthodoxy, there are no heights to gain. The universe is one dead level. History is an everlasting repetition, the treadmill of the beast of burden. It has no perspective, no pictures, and no anticipations. Everything is already acquired. The unknown is a myth; the known is only between the lids of a barbaric Bible. This is the "word of God," and it cannot be added to. Eighteen hundred years have passed, yet Orthodoxy has given no discovery, no invention. It has not increased one whit the area of human happiness. Its mockery of heaven has added nothing to the wealth of human civilization. The God of Orthodoxy has not plowed one inch of soil or reaped one golden harvest. If he made the world in six days, it so completely exhausted him that he has been on the retired list ever since; but he has drawn his full pay just the same, and his priests and ambassadors have lived on the fat of the land.

Orthodoxy is the upholder and defender of poverty. It says, Blessed be ye poor—poor in pocket and poor in spirit. It thinks that poverty is the condition of virtue; that no man can be good if he is rich. It advises the poor man to stay where he is, to live in tenement houses—and lay up treasure in heaven; to submit to injustice, and toil for a bare pittance; cringe through life and creep through life; worry along till death comes, and then play on a harp of gold. Orthodoxy deals with poverty merely by alms-giving. It makes no plea for the manhood and dignity of the toiler. It has no appeal for justice. Intent on the skies, it forgets the actual sufferings of millions on this earth. Hastening to eternity, it has no wish for the amelioration of the worker in the fields of time. What is poverty, what is disease, what is starvation? Nothing very bad, says Orthodoxy, for all here is shadow. The reality only is on "the other side."

Orthodoxy is the degradation of this world. It pours contempt on all human affairs. It has no interest in what is simply manly, for simple manliness, according to Orthodoxy, is total depravity. The welfare, the interests, the happiness, the glory of this life is nothing. Orthodoxy disdains nature. What are the flowers, the grass, the running brooks, the blue sky, to Orthodoxy? What the song of birds, the play of little children, the voices of affection which finds in the present moment the transcendent joy? These are nothing to Orthodoxy. It turns from them. It looks on high, to the blank spaces. It awaits the trumpet of the angel whose blast is the destruction of earthly delights. It revels in the Judgment Day, when all those who find in human love, labor, association, and devotion sufficient motive and reward, shall be doomed to everlasting perdition. The whole purpose of Orthodoxy is to belittle humanity, the reason, the natural sentiments of man, and elevate his "soul," which is so infinitely small that no microscope has ever yet been able to discover it. Orthodoxy stakes its worth, however, on the value of this vanishing-point. The sole mission of Orthodoxy is to give a pair of wings to a nonentity.

Everything else—art, literature, progress, culture, wealth, business, the simple home life—these have no attraction to Orthodoxy. All its energies, all its churches, all its ministers, all its disciples, are devoted to the salvation of a totally worthless, depraved, and undiscoverable vacuity called “the soul.” All else sinks into insignificance in comparison with this tremendous undertaking. The chief advantage of this world to Orthodoxy is that it affords a starting-point for the little end of nothing

Orthodoxy begins in ignorance and it ends in ignorance. It is therefore from first to last the patron of ignorance. Its learning is only cultivated superstition. The brains of Orthodoxy “run to waste, and water but the desert.” All its books, all its libraries, are absolutely worthless. They give no particle of information. Orthodoxy is either the tyrant of knowledge or its destroyer. It abuses it or kills it. It does not accept it as a helper or a guide. Science has had to win every position by martyrdom. Orthodoxy has combated every truth. It has an instinctive dread even of the advance of time, and would chain the flying hours if it were possible. It hates the revolution of the earth. It would like to keep the sun forever in the West. It trembles at the orient colors of the dawn. It crouches in the gloom of midnight, and is the assassin of every ray of light.

Therefore, the object of FREETHOUGHT is to combat Orthodoxy. It will engage in the warfare to the bitter end. It will not quarrel with its disciples simply as men and women, but it will strike, wherever it can, this huge system of wrong, oppression, and ignorance. It will spare nothing. Orthodoxy deserves no compromise. We must reform it altogether—that is, reform it out of existence. It is a wild beast, and we should strike at its very heart.

A REVEREND GENTLEMAN MISCONSTRUED.

We are called upon by the loud voice of benevolence to extend our sympathy to the Rev. Mr. Heller, of San Francisco, whose innocence and ignorance of the vices of a great city have placed him, as is now acknowledged by the press, in a light calculated to injure him undeservedly and to make the wicked scoff. The circumstances are these: Mr. Heller came from the East not long since, and for a brief while officiated as rabbi of the new synagogue, on the corner of California and Stockton streets. His ministration was not to the taste of the congregation, and Mr. Heller was requested to resign, which he did. A few evenings since, while sitting in his room on Trenton street, ruminating on man's inhumanity to the clergyman, he had it in mind to seek solace in a cigar. With this object in view he walked down Jackson street to Chinatown, and seeing some cigar boxes exposed to view in a store window, he entered for the purpose of buying. No sooner had he done so than, to his intense astonishment and dismay, a young woman placed herself between him and the door, while another siren attempted to lure him still further into what he now saw was a wicked place and the lair of Satan. But his nerve did not desert him. Finding that escape otherwise was impossible—for what could a single man do in the presence of two sirens?—with great presence of mind he sprang through the show window, completely demolishing the same. The noise thus made attracted the attention of a police officer, who, instead of arresting the inmates of the house, grabbed the Rev. Mr. Heller by the neck and marched him off to jail. To add to the outrage, the next morning's papers contained the following misleading account of the affair:

The Rev. Joseph Heller was arrested last night on a charge of malicious mischief, for having demolished a window in a disreputable house on Dupont street. Heller claims that he entered the house not knowing its character, and that to escape he was forced to leap through the window. The woman asserts that Heller refused to pay for some cigars he purchased, and smashed the window with his fist out of pure wantonness.

Of course this account is untrue, and the one we have given is the correct version, and when it was understood by the court officers the unfortunate victim was at once released. But the injury was done, and the suspicion that one of its members would knowingly frequent a house of disrepute, and wantonly jump through the front window, has been cast upon the whole clerical fraternity. It is enough to make the angels whoop.

The charge that the Rev. Mr. Heller was requested to resign by his congregation is true, but carries no weight. Being from the East, he brought with him the antiquated and effete style of preaching there in vogue, which was of course unsuited to a California congregation, and he was allowed to slide. Again we extend to the Rev. Mr. Heller our sincere condolence.

PROMPTNESS.

Promptness is a good thing, but it is an especially good thing for FREETHOUGHT. A great many, on reading its pages, will resolve to become subscribers, but they delay to act, and through delay sometimes act not at all. We ask those who desire to support us to do so at once. Do not put off until some more convenient time, but sit down at once and write the word of greeting and inclose the subscription price. If all do what they really intend to do when they first see FREETHOUGHT, there will be abundant cheer. The trouble is that many put off until to-morrow what can be a great deal better done to-day. FREETHOUGHT cannot flourish upon good intentions, nor can it live altogether upon dreams of the future. There must be some present installment. Will not our friends look to this—and let the thought at once be followed by the generous deed. Promptness shall be a virtue of FREETHOUGHT. It will always be on hand in time to give the best news of the world's progress.

THE first man to walk into this office and lay down two dollars for a year's subscription was Judge J. W. North, of Oleaner, Fresno county, California. Judge North owes his escape from the church to the pro-slavery attitude of that organization: The Judge's personal history is a part of the history of this country. The town of Northfield, Minn., was founded by and named after him; he was a member of the committee which drafted the constitution of that state and of Nevada; he was a member of the committee which waited upon Abraham Lincoln to apprise him that he had been nominated for president of the United States; he is one of the founders of the Republican party, and in Abolition days he worked with Wendell Phillips, Wm. Lloyd Garrison, and Elizur Wright for the emancipation of the slaves. He has sacrificed much during his lifetime for the sake of freedom and independence. He stands as the representative and defender of Liberalism in the vicinity of his present home near Fresno, where the President of the Secular Union will open the year's campaign the last of February with a course of six lectures.

ADDRESSES will probably be made at the Paine anniversary by Captain Scott, S. P. Putnam, and others. Vocal and instrumental music will be furnished by friends in this city and Oakland. The place of meeting has not yet been selected. A full programme will be published next week, and notice will be given in the daily papers. All who desire to assist will please communicate with H. W. Faust, Chairman of the Committee of Arrangements, 307 Fourth street. It is requested that notices be sent to these columns of all Thomas Paine anniversary meetings to be held in the Pacific states and territories.

AN impostor has been going about this town soliciting money in the name of religious charity. He made several visits to ladies in the Mission, representing that three or four boxes of eggs and butter had been sent by friends in Vallejo to them as Christmas presents, but the kind and remembering acquaintances at that place had forgotten to pay the freight upon the goods. There was just sixty cents required to liquidate the steamer's claim, and upon the receipt of that sum the fresh eggs and butter would be forthcoming. In some cases he succeeded. This rascal is, after all, a very close imitation of the brethren of the cloth. How many of the harps, crowns, and other goods which they sell as "futures" will ever be delivered?

It is reported that Archbishop Williams, of Boston, will receive a cardinal's hat from Rome. Nothing is said about a brick to wear in it, but that may be obtained in Boston.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

MR. A. F. SCOTT will lecture Monday evening, Jan. 16, in Irving Hall, 139 Post street, on "The American Party and Romanism." Admission, 25 cents.

C. B. REYNOLDS is at Benton and Andover, Kan., Jan. 13, 14, 15, 16; Dodge City, 18, 19, 20. From Kansas Mr. Reynolds goes to Colorado and thence to Utah.

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON is engaged to give a series of six lectures at Salida, Col., Jan. 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, and will lecture in towns adjacent to Salida and throughout Colorado during February and March.

MRS. A. M. FREEMAN, of Chicago, has engagements to speak in Fayette county, Shenandoah, Charles City, Perry, Leon, and Ottumwa, Iowa, and in Rockport, Mo., and Helena, Neb. Liberals on this route may engage Mrs. Freeman's services by addressing her at 175 South Halsted street, Chicago.

THOMAS S. RANDALL, of Chicago, says that the seceding elements of the Knights of Labor of that city have been "captured by and are now in recognized subordination to the Secular Union." E. A. Stevens, secretary of the American Secular Union, has been elected foreman of the assembly.—Truth Seeker.

F. F. FOLLET, the Liberal book-seller of Chicago, died Jan. 4, of pneumonia. He was taken to Rockford, Ill., for interment.

LABOR NOTES.

The Credit Foncier Club of San Francisco met at Murphy's Hall Sunday afternoon, January 8th, H. W. Faust chairman, W. N. Slocum secretary, Otto Sinz treasurer. A letter was read from Albert K. Owen, stating the prospects of the Sinaloa colony, the need of earnest work, and that colonists should not expect an easy time in an experiment so new and difficult. A letter was also read from B. F. Chase, giving his experience at Topolobampo and expressing his undoubted faith in the future of the colony. An article was read from the San Francisco Chronicle, containing an interview with Commander Leary, of the United States steamer Iroquois, who visited the colony in his official capacity. He offered to take away all who desired to return, but no one accepted. Though the colony lacked supplies, there was no actual suffering. A subscription was taken for further stock. The club meets the first Sunday of every month. Arrangements are being made for the purchase of a ship for the use of the colony. It is expected that A. K. Owens and Marie and Edward Howland will be in San Francisco in a few weeks, when a course of lectures will probably be delivered. Those desiring information will please communicate with H. W. Faust, agent, 307 Fourth street, San Francisco.

The Progressive Association met on Sunday evening at Murphy's Hall, Prof. D. C. Seymour in the chair. The subject of discussion was "The Functions of the State." S. A. Rosa opened the discussion by a statement of the principles of Socialism, the object of which was to so co-operate society that toil should be lessened and greater wealth produced.

George Cummings said: The gist of the question is this: Has the majority a right to compel a minority, or one man even, to submit to its dictation by force. If so, where is individual liberty—and where is society. Equity is the basis of society. Slavery is unsocial. To strip a man of his rights in order to maintain them was a legal fiction.

S. P. Putnam said: The function of a state is that of the police power of society. It is to preserve order and repress crime, to protect by some universal method the life and property of each citizen, without a resort to mob violence. To make the function of the state more than this was to make it an ecclesiastical and monarchical authority. S. Stetson said: The principle of the Declaration of Independence was that the people are the state. This principle has not been adhered to. Monopolies are the state now. The people—all the people—must be the state, and use it for its own good. G. W. Thurston said: It will not do to put new wine into old bottles. To put into the hand of the present government the control of railroads, telegraphs, steamships, etc., would put such power into the hands of the administration as to render its rule permanent, and an empire would be established which the people could not change. J. D. O'Brock said: The present system is founded upon selfishness and superstition. The state is ecclesiastical. The great evil to be removed first of all is the union of church and state. Government must be according to natural science and not according to theology. P. Rush Martin said: I believe the state has no junctions—it is simply public opinion. There are no natural rights—only natural might, the power of each to preserve himself. These natural might, or faculties for self-preservation, are surrendered in the social compact, and in return civil rights are conferred by organized society, or humanity. Humanity is an evolution. It does not exist with the first man. It is a social result. Our rights come from society. The present trouble arises from the fact that natural might, or powers of aggrandizement, have been surreptitiously returned to the few in order that they might prey upon the many. The remedy lies in stripping all of any power of aggrandizement and guaranteeing civil rights to all.

Prof. D. C. Seymour closed the debate by insisting upon the intelligent use of the ballot. The state is necessary for the time being.

The association meets next Saturday evening at 1220 Folsom street. The subject of discussion is "What are Rights?"

The National Co-operative Homestead Society of San Francisco is formed to procure, by means of organized societies, platform, press, educational and other agencies, the enactment by Congress of a National Co-operative Homestead law to enable properly qualified citizens of the United States who may to desire to organize co-operative associations and by means of government loans procure the necessary land and agricultural and mechanical implements and the manufacturing machinery required for the establishment of diversified industries. These associations will be a practical experiment by the state itself of Communal Socialism. As they increase in number they will gradually supplant the present competitive and compulsory systems, and co-operation on a national scale be established. Thus by a process of peaceable evolution the "invisible brigandage of the mind," as Judge Collins calls it, by which the superior intellect triumphs over the lesser, will be destroyed and full equality and justice be established. Those who desire further particulars can obtain information of W. N. Slocum, corresponding secretary, 526 Kearny street.

CORDIAL GREETING.

We learn from the New York Truth Seeker that one of its editors, Mr. Geo. Macdonald, and Mr. Samuel P. Putnam have gone to California to publish a Liberal paper in that state. These friends have the ability, energy, and disposition to make a good journal, and we hope they may succeed in their new enterprise.—Boston Investigator.

WE LOOK TOWARD YOU.

HELLO, GEORGE! So you have gone West to grow up with the country. You ought to have let your friends know of your hegira, and we would have given you a suitable "send-off." Well, here's to you and to Put., and to the new venture—the Occidental Freethought Puck. Inclosed I send my subscription. I want to be in at the birth, and may it live long and prosper.

New York, Dec. 27, 1887.

A HEARTY RESPONSE.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: I hail with pleasure the advent of FREETHOUGHT, the first number of which I received yesterday; and I hasten to encourage you with my two dollars for a year's subscription; and I trust that many more of the numerous Freethinkers of the Pacific Coast will respond with the same material greeting, for without money even salvation cannot be preached. As opportunity affords, I will cheerfully call the attention of Liberals to your paper.

With a happy and prosperous New Year to yourselves and paper, I am, Yours respectfully, W. F. FREEMAN.
Stockton, Cal., January 9, 1888.

FROM reports of the workings of what is called the "green goods" swindle, by which city sharpers advertise and sell to countrymen pretended counterfeit money, the New York Truth Seeker obtains the sad information that among the would-be purchasers of bad notes, the most prominent class are the deacons of country churches.

LEWIS MASQUIRIER, the veteran Land Reformer, died at his home in Brooklyn, N. Y., last Saturday, aged 87. He was buried at Cypress Hills cemetery, where his monument already stands, covered with lettering, setting forth his views upon land, music, and spelling reform.

COLONEL INGERSOLL'S LETTER TO DR. FIELD.

From an Article in the North American Review for January.

MY DEAR MR. FIELD: ....I congratulate you upon the advance that you have made. You not only admit that we have the right to think, but that we have the right to express our honest thoughts. You admit that the Christian world no longer believes in the fagot, the dungeon, and the thumb-screw. Has the Christian world outgrown its God? Has man become more merciful than his maker? If man will not torture his fellow-man on account of a difference of opinion, will a God of infinite love torture one of his children for what is called the sin of unbelief? Has man outgrown the Inquisition, and will God forever be the warden of a penitentiary? The walls of the old dungeons have fallen, and light now visits the cell where brave men perished in darkness. Is Jehovah to keep the cells of perdition in repair forever, and are his children to be the eternal prisoners?

It seems hard for you to appreciate the mental condition of one who regards all gods as substantially the same; that is to say, who thinks of them all as myths and phantoms born of the imagination, characters in the religious fictions of the race. To you it probably seems strange that a man should think far more of Jupiter than of Jehovah. Regarding them both as creations of the mind, I choose between them, and I prefer the god of the Greeks, on the same principle that I prefer Portia to Iago; and yet I regard them, one and all, as children of the imagination, as phantoms born of human fears and human hopes.

You do not exactly appreciate my feeling. I do not hate Presbyterians; I hate Presbyterianism. I hate with all my heart the creed of that church, and I most heartily despise the God described in the Confession of Faith. But some of the best friends I have in the world are afflicted with the mental malady known as Presbyterianism. They are victims of the consolation growing out of the belief that a vast majority of their fellow-men are doomed to suffer eternal torment, to the end that their creator may be eternally glorified. I have said many times, and I say again, that I do not despise a man because he has the rheumatism; I despise the rheumatism because it has the man.

It also gave me great pleasure to find that you have thrown away, with a kind of glad shudder, that infamy of infamies, the dogma of eternal pain. I have denounced that inhuman belief; I have denounced every creed that had coiled within it that viper; I have denounced every man who preached it, the book that contains it, and with all my heart the God who threatens it, and at last I have the happiness of seeing the editor of the New York Evangelist admit that devout Christians do not believe that lie, and quote with approbation the words of a minister of the Church of England to the effect that all men will be finally recovered and made happy.

Do you find this doctrine of hope in the Presbyterian creed? Is this star, that sheds light on every grave, found in your Bible? Did Christ have in his mind the shining truth that all the children of men will at last be filled with joy, when he uttered these comforting words, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels?" Do you find in this flame the bud of hope, or the flower of promise?

You suggest that it is possible that "the incurably bad will be annihilated," and you say that such a fate can have no terrors for me, as I look upon annihilation as the common lot of all. Let us examine this position. Why should a God of infinite wisdom create men and women whom he knew would be "incurably bad?" What would you say of a mechanic who was forced to destroy his own productions on the ground that they were "incurably bad?" Would you say that he was an infinitely wise mechanic? Does infinite justice annihilate the work of infinite wisdom? Does God, like an ignorant doctor, bury his mistakes?

Besides, what right have you to say that I "look upon annihilation as the common lot of all?" Was there any such thought in my Reply? Did you find it in any published words of mine? Do you find anything in what I have written tending to show that I believe in annihilation? Is it not true that I say now, and that I have always said, that I do not know? Does a lack of knowledge as to the fate of the human soul imply a belief in annihilation? Does it not equally imply a belief in immortality?

You have been—at least until recently—a believer in the inspiration of the Bible and in the truth of its every word. What do you say to the following: "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast." You will see that the inspired writer is not satisfied with admitting that he does not know. "As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away; so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more." Was it not cruel for an inspired man to attack a sacred belief?

You have been driven to the passions for the purpose of finding what you are pleased to call "sin" and "responsibility;" and you say, speaking of a human being, "but if he is warped by passion so that he cannot see things truly, then is he responsible." One would suppose that the use of the word "cannot" is inconsistent with the idea of responsibility. What is passion? There are certain desires, swift, thrilling, that quicken the action of the heart—desires that fill the brain with blood, with fire and flame—desires that bear the same relation to judgment that storms and waves bear to the compass on a ship. Is passion necessarily produced? Is there an adequate cause for every effect? Can you by any possibility think of an effect without a cause, and can you by any possibility think of an effect that is not a cause, or can you think of a cause that is not an effect? Is not the history of real civilization the slow and gradual emancipation of the intellect, of the judgment, from the mastery of passion? Is not that man civilized whose reason sits the crowned monarch of his brain—whose passions are his servants?

Who knows the strength of the temptation to another? Who knows how little has been resisted by those who stand, how much has been resisted by those who fall? Who knows whether the victor or the victim made the bravest and the most gallant fight? In judging of our fellow-men, we must take into consideration the circumstances of ancestry, of race, of nationality, of employment, of opportunity, of education, and of the thousand influences that tend to mold or mar the character of man. Such a view is the mother of charity, and makes the God of the Presbyterians impossible.

At last you have seen the impossibility of forgiveness. That is to say, you perceive that after forgiveness the crime remains, and its children, called consequences, still live. You recognize the lack of philosophy in that doctrine. You still believe in what you call the "forgiveness of sins," but you admit that forgiveness cannot reverse the course of nature, and cannot prevent the operation of natural law. You also admit that if a man lives after death, he preserves his personal identity, his memory, and that the consequences of his actions will follow him through all the eternal years. You admit that consequences are immortal. After making this admission, of what use is the old idea of the forgiveness of sins? How can the criminal be washed clean and pure in the blood of another? In spite of this forgiveness, in spite of this blood, you have taken the ground that consequences, like the dogs of Actæon, follow even a Presbyterian, even one of the elect, within the heavenly gates. If you wish to be logical, you must also admit that the consequences of good deeds, like winged angels, follow even the Atheist within the gates of hell.

You have had the courage of your convictions, and you have said that we are to be judged according to the deeds done in the body. By that judgment I am willing to abide. But, whether willing or not, I must abide, because there is no power, no God, that can step between me and the consequences of my acts. I wish no heaven that I have not earned, no happiness to which I am not entitled. I do not wish to become an immortal pauper; neither am I willing to extend unworthy hands for alms.

My dear Mr. Field, you have outgrown your creed—as every Presbyterian must do who grows at all. You are far better than the spirit of the Old Testament; far better, in my judgment, even than the spirit of the New. The creed that you have left behind, that you have repudiated, teaches that a man may be guilty of every crime—that he may have driven his wife to insanity, that his example may have led his children to the penitentiary, or to the gallows, and that yet, at the eleventh hour, he may, by what is called "repentance," be washed absolutely pure by the blood of another, and receive and wear upon his brow the laurels of eternal peace. Not only so, but that creed has taught that this wretch in heaven could look back on the poor earth and see the wife, whom he swore to love and cherish, in the mad-house, surrounded by imaginary serpents, struggling in the darkness of the night, made insane by his heartlessness—that creed has taught and teaches that he could look back and see his children in prison cells, or on the scaffold with the noose about their necks, and that these visions would not bring a shade of sadness to his redeemed and happy face. It is this doctrine, it is this dogma—so bestial, so savage, as to beggar all the languages of men—that I have denounced. All the words of hatred, loathing, and contempt, found in all the dialects and tongues of men, are not sufficient to express my hatred, my contempt, and my loathing of this creed.

You say that it is impossible for you not to believe in the existence of God. With this statement I find no fault. Your mind is so that a belief in the existence of a supreme being gives satisfaction and content. Of course, you are entitled to no credit for this belief, as you ought not to be rewarded for believing that which you cannot help believing; neither should I be punished for failing to believe that which I cannot believe.

You believe, because you see in the world around you such an adaptation of means to ends that you are satisfied there is design. I admit that when Robinson Crusoe saw in the sand the print of a human foot, like and yet unlike his own, he was justified in drawing the conclusion that a human being had been there. The inference was drawn from his own experience, and was within the scope of his own mind. But I do not agree with you that he "knew" a human being had been there; he had only sufficient evidence upon which to found a belief. He did not know the footsteps of all animals; he could not have known that no animal except man could have made that footprint. In order to know that it was the foot of a man, he must have known that no other animal was capable of making it, and he must have known that no other being had produced in the sand the likeness of this human foot.

You see what you call evidences of intelligence in the universe, and you draw the conclusion that there must be an infinite intelligence. Your conclusion is far wider than your premise. Let us suppose, as Mr. Hume supposed, that there is a pair of scales, one end of which is in darkness, and you find that a pound weight, or a ten-pound weight, placed upon that end of the scale in the light is raised; have you the right to say that there is an infinite weight on the end in darkness, or are you compelled to say only that there is weight enough on the end in darkness to raise the weight on the end in light?

It is illogical to say, because of the existence of this earth and of what you can see in and about it, that there must be an infinite intelligence. You do not know that even the creation of this world, and of all planets discovered, required an infinite power or infinite wisdom. I admit that it is impossible for me to look at a watch and draw the inference that there was no design in its construction, or that it only happened. I could not regard it as a product of some freak of nature, neither could I imagine that its various parts were brought together and set in motion by chance. I am not a believer in chance.

But there is a vast difference between what man has made and the materials of which he has constructed the things he has made. You find a watch, and you say that it exhibits or shows design. You insist that it is so wonderful that it must have had a designer—in other words, that it is too wonderful not to have been constructed. You then find the watchmaker, and you say with regard to him that he, too, must have had a designer, for he is more wonderful than the watch. In imagination you go from the watchmaker to the being you call God, and you say he designed the watchmaker, but he himself was not designed, because he is too wonderful to have been designed. And yet in the case of the watchmaker, it was the wonder that suggested the design, while in the case of the maker of the watchmaker the wonder denied a designer. Do you not see that this argument devours itself? If wonder suggests a designer, can it go on increasing until it denies that which it suggested?

You must remember, too, that the argument of design is applicable to all. You are not at liberty to stop at sunrise and sunset, and all that adds to the happiness of man; you must go further. You must admit that an infinitely wise and merciful God designed the fangs of serpents, the machinery by which the poison is distilled, the ducts by which it is carried to the fang, and that the same intelligence impressed this serpent with a desire to deposit this deadly virus in the flesh of man. You must believe that an infinitely wise God so constructed this world that, in process of cooling, earthquakes would be caused—earthquakes that devour and overwhelm cities and states. Do you see any design in the volcano that sends its rivers of lava over the fields and the homes of men? Do you really think that a perfectly good being designed the invisible parasites that infest the air, that inhabit the water, and that finally attack and destroy the health and life of man? Do you see the same design in cancers that you do in wheat and corn? Did God invent tumors for the brain? Was it his ingenuity that so designed the human race that millions of people should be born deaf and dumb—that millions should be idiotic? Did he knowingly plant in the blood or brain the seeds of insanity? Did he cultivate those seeds? Do you see any design in this?

You insist that a knowledge of God—a belief in God—is the foundation of social order; and yet this God of infinite tenderness has left for thousands and thousands of years nearly all of his children without a revelation. Why should infinite goodness leave the existence of God in doubt? Why should he see millions in savagery destroying the lives of each other, eating the flesh of each other, and keep his existence a secret from man? Why did he allow the savages to depend on sunrise and sunset and clouds? Why did he leave this great truth to a few half-crazed prophets, or to a cruel, heartless, and ignorant church? The sentence, "There is a God," could have been imprinted on every blade of grass, on every leaf, on every star. An infinite God has no excuse for leaving his children in doubt and darkness.

There is still another point. You know that for thousands of ages men worshiped wild beasts as God. You know that for countless generations they knelt by coiled serpents, believing those serpents to be gods. Why did the real God secrete himself and allow his poor, ignorant, savage children to imagine that he was a beast, a serpent? Why did this God allow mothers to sacrifice their babes? Why did he not emerge from the darkness? Why did he not say to the poor mother, "Do not sacrifice your babe; keep it in your arms; press it to your bosom; let it be the solace of your declining years. I take no delight in the death of children; I am not what you suppose me to be; I am not a beast; I am not a serpent; I am full of love, and kindness, and mercy, and I want my children to be happy in this world?" Did the God who allowed a mother to sacrifice her babe through the mistaken idea that he, the God, demanded the sacrifice, feel a tenderness toward that mother "compared to which all human love is faint and cold?" Would a good father allow some of his children to kill others of his children to please him?

You taunt me by saying that I know no more of the immortality of the soul than Cicero knew. I admit it. I know no more than the lowest savage, no more than a doctor of divinity—that is to say, nothing.

Is it not, however, a curious fact that there is less belief in the immortality of the soul in Christian countries than in heathen lands—that the belief in immortality in an orthodox church is faint, and cold, and speculative, compared with that belief in India, in China, or in the Pacific Isles? Compare the belief in immortality in America, of Christians, with that of the followers of Mohammed. Do not Christians weep above their dead? Does a belief in immortality keep back their tears? After all, the promises are so far away, and the dead are so near—the echoes of words said to have been spoken more than eighteen centuries ago are lost in the sounds of the clods that fall on the coffin. And yet, compared with the orthodox hell, compared with the prison house of God, how ecstatic is the grave—the grave without a sigh, without a tear, without a dream, without a fear? Compared with the immortality promised by the Presbyterian creed, how beautiful annihilation seems! To be nothing—how much better than to be a convict forever! To be unconscious dust—how much better than to be a heartless angel!

Of course, it would be a consolation to know that we have an "almighty friend" in heaven; but an almighty friend who cares nothing for us, who allows us to be stricken by his lightning, frozen by his winter, starved by his famine, and at last imprisoned in his hell, is a friend I do not care to have.

You persist, however, in endeavoring to account for the miseries of the world by taking the ground that happiness is not the end of life. You say that "the real end of life is character, and that no discipline can be too severe which leads us to suffer and be strong." Upon this subject you use the following language: "If you could have your way, you would make everybody happy; there would be no more poverty, and no more sickness or pain." And this, you say, is "a child's picture, hardly worthy of a stalwart man." Let me read you another "child's picture," which you will find in the twenty-first chapter of Revelation, supposed to have been written by St. John, the Divine: "And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain."

If you visited some woman living in a tenement, supporting by her poor labor a little family—a poor woman on the edge of famine, sewing, it may be, her eyes blinded by tears—would you tell her that "the world is not a playground in which men are to be petted and indulged like children?" Would you tell her that to think of a world without poverty, without tears, without pain, is a "child's picture?" If she asked you for a little assistance, would you refuse it on the ground that by being helped she might lose character? Would you tell her: "God does not wish to have you happy; happiness is a very foolish end; character is what you want, and God has put you here with these helpless, starving babes, and he has put this burden on your young life simply that you may suffer and be strong. I would help you gladly, but I do not wish to defeat the plans of your almighty friend?" You can reason one way, but you would act the other.

Calvinism asserts that man does as he must, and that, notwithstanding this fact, he is responsible for what he does—that is to say, for what he is compelled to do—that is to say, for what God does with him; and that for doing that which he must, an infinite God, who compelled him to do it, is justified in punishing the man in eternal fire; this, not because the man ought to be damned, but simply for the glory of God.

Starting from the same declaration, that man does as he must, I reach the conclusion that we shall finally perceive in this fact justification for every individual. And yet you see no difference between my doctrine and Calvinism. You insist that damnation and justification are substantially the same; and yet the difference is as great as human language can express. You call the justification of all the world "the gospel of despair," and the damnation of nearly all the human race the "consolation of religion."

After all, my dear friend, do you not see that when you come to speak of that which is really good, you are compelled to describe your ideal human being? It is the human in Christ, and only the human, that you, by any possibility, can understand. You speak of one who was born among the poor, who went about doing good, who sympathized with those who suffered. You have described not only one, but many millions of the human race. Millions of others have carried light to those sitting in darkness; millions and millions have taken children in their arms; millions have wept that those they loved might smile. No language can express the goodness, the heroism, the patience and self-denial, of the many millions, dead and living, who have preserved in the family of man the jewels of the heart. You have clad one being in all the virtues of the race, and in all the attributes of gentleness, patience, goodness, and love, and yet that being, according to the New Testament, had to his character another side. True, he said, "Come unto me and I will give you rest;" but what did he say to those who failed to come? You pour out your whole heart in thankfulness to this one man who suffered for the right, while I thank not only this one, but all the rest. My heart goes out to all the great, the self-denying, and the good—to the founders of nations, singers of songs, builders of homes; to the inventors, to the artists who have filled the world with beauty, to the composers of music, to the soldiers of the right, to the makers of mirth, to honest men, and to all the loving mothers of the race.

Compare, for one moment, all that the savior did, all the pain and suffering that he relieved; compare all this with the discovery of anesthetics. Compare your prophets with the inventors, your apostles with the Keplers, the Humboldts, and the Darwins.

I belong to the great church that holds the world within its starlit aisles; that claims the great and good of every race and clime; that finds with joy the grain of gold in every creed, and floods with light and love the germs of good in every soul.

Most men are provincial, narrow, one-sided, only partially developed. In a new country we often see a little patch of land, a clearing in which the pioneer has built his cabin. This little clearing is just large enough to support a family, and the remainder of the farm is still forest, in which snakes crawl and wild beasts occasionally crouch. It is thus with the brain of the average man. There is a little clearing, a little patch, just large enough to practice medicine with, or sell goods, or practice law, or preach with, or to do some kind of business, sufficient to obtain bread and food, and shelter for a family, while all the rest of the brain is covered with primeval forest, in which lie coiled the serpents of superstition, and from which spring the wild beasts of orthodox religion.

Neither in the interest of truth, nor for the benefit of man, is it necessary to assert what we do not know. No cause is great enough to demand a sacrifice of candor. The mysteries of life and death, of good and evil, have never yet been solved.

I combat those only who, knowing nothing of the future, prophesy an eternity of pain—those only who sow the seeds of fear in the hearts of men—those only who poison all the springs of life, and seat a skeleton at every feast.

Let us banish the shriveled hags of superstition; let us welcome the beautiful daughters of truth and joy.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

ACROSS A CONTINENT.

II

There were incidents enough upon our trip west to make a book if they were adequately enlarged upon. While we were traversing Kansas, three well-dressed men came aboard, one of whom led a dog and was apparently intoxicated. This man tied his dog to my seat, and then went strolling through the car, talking at random, in a rich Irish brogue, to the passengers in general. He finally sat down beside a young tourist who was going to California for his health, though he looked robust enough. The Irishman asked the tourist if he could play old sledge. The tourist said he could, and a quartette was formed, the Irishman and the tourist sitting in as partners and one of the Irishman's friends and a Chicago man playing against them. Before the first game had been decided, and when the friend had dealt, the Irishman picked up three of his cards with the remark that he held a good poker hand. The tourist had three aces, and knowing, as every person familiar with poker will recall, that three aces beat any other three cards, at once offered a dollar bet on his hand. To the surprise of everybody, the Irishman raised him ten dollars. The tourist wagered a like amount, and the Irishman laid down three hearts, which he called a flush, and pocketed the stakes. It was at least half an hour before it dawned upon the tourist that five of a suit are necessary to a flush, and that he had been fleeced by professionals. Then a sad and solemn quiet rested down upon him, and he sat gazing out from the window until Night, sable goddess, from her ebon throne, in rayless majesty stretched forth her leaden scepter o'er a slumbering world. Then he disappeared in the sleeping-car, and if his trip to California does nothing for his health, it has added something to his wisdom. Ten minutes after the game of cards ended, the Irishman yanked his dog out from beneath my seat and left us. His brogue was dropped and all indications of intoxication had vanished.

Through New Mexico and Arizona the train was full of men in long ulsters, and wearing white, wide-rimmed felt hats. These were cowboys, the first I had ever seen in their native clime. Of the cowboy there appear to be two classes—the genuine and the bogus. The genuine cowboy is a healthy specimen, a trifle prodigal in the use of his money, and his legs sometimes get beyond his control and stretch themselves across the aisle of the car, but he will make an effort, without taking offense, to coil them down when requested to do so politely. He wears an expensive band upon his best hat. He carries no visible weapons, as I conclude, when off duty, and is often an educated and agreeable gentleman, speaking grammatically and otherwise with propriety.

The bogus cowboy is different. He is not a cowboy at all, though he calls himself one and wears a cheap sombrero. He is an all-around tough, who never mounted a horse in his life and is seldom sober enough to keep the saddle if he were lifted into it. One of these fellows entered the smoking-car near Flagstaff, Arizona. He was the most uncomfortable man to have around that I ever fell in with. He bulldozed the passengers, lounging up and down the aisle with his hand to his hip-pocket. He made me the following requests:

To fight with him.

To give him something to eat.

To give him a drink.

To come out on the platform and have a little gun play.

To stand up and be gunned.

To loan him half a dollar.

To remove my valise from the seat and allow him to sit down.

To go to hell.

All of which requests I respectfully but firmly refused to accede to. During the conversation he kept his hand behind him underneath his coat. It was conducive to his health that he brought it forward empty.

Having made a failure of the coercive method, he was unmanly enough to attempt to work upon my sympathies. His left hand had a cloth around it, which he removed, bringing to general notice a pistol wound in one finger, given him, he said, by a man at Williams, whom he was now on his way to "gun," just for the fun of it. He added that after the man had shot him he also clubbed him on the head with his pistol, and he appealed to Mr. Putnam to decide if such conduct was not scandalous. Mr. Putnam acknowledged broadly that it would come under that definition. From his injuries he next recurred to his request for the loan of half a dollar, but didn't get it and fell to grieving over the lack of sand displayed by these tenderfeet who will neither fight or punge up. At Williams he got off for a drink and the train sailed without him.

Until he has passed Raton, on the state line between Colorado and New Mexico, some seven thousand feet above sea level, the traveler notes no perceptible moderation of the temperature, but as he descends the mountains toward Albuquerque the sun grows warmer, the air clearer and softer, and for hundreds of miles he seems to be in an atmosphere perfectly adapted to his wants. If people could live on the best articles of climate and scenery, the residents of that locality would not need to work. I never saw so beautiful a sunrise as overtook us coming down the mountains. The car window was covered with frost-work in innumerable designs, and when the rays of the sun struck it, all these forms took on a thousand hues, and seemed to be magnified, so that looking through the window was like gazing down an immense grotto, as near as I can describe it, with the sun shining in at the farther end, its blaze caught by great diamonds set in rocks, and turned into streaks of light shooting out in all directions. I looked at the view until the sun, melting away the ice, came through the window and struck me in the eye.

This southwestern land, New Mexico and Arizona, is a land of poetry and mystery and terror. It is full of fearful mountains and chasms and precipices. Along the line of the railroad nothing appears to grow, and the soil is of a rich brick color, as though it had been baked in a kiln. Bluffs rise near you hundreds of feet high, in layers or strata I suppose is the term, such as are sometimes seen in the high banks of a river. Isolated rocks turned up on edge stand off by themselves with no relative, perhaps, within a hundred miles. Then there are rocks weighing thousands of tons arranged in all manner of queer forms, helter-skelter, in pyramids, in circles, as we see cobble-stones beside the road where children have been at play. The sand-banks do not slope, they are straight up-and-down or overhanging. The mountains often have no foothills, but rise from these plateaus like the pyramids from the plains of Egypt. Solitary peaks stand treeless from the foot to their white summits, which, like William Tell's mountains, "wear their caps of snow in very presence of the regal sun." Again, there are canyons deep enough to put a good-sized mountain into. How these gorges ever got scooped out in their present fashion is a matter of great mystery. The train crossed one called Canyon Diablo 285 feet deep.

The natives of this land are much the color of the soil, somewhere between copper and chocolate. From their adobe huts these natives came out to meet the train and sell their wares to the passengers. The Pueblo Indians were, if I recollect accurately, the first we saw. All the business enterprise of this tribe seems to have been given to the women, who had bits of pottery, volcanic glass, and some colored stones which they desired to work off for the currency of the East. The tawny damsels were the least attractive of all specimens of the female sex that ever came under my observation. I looked them all over carefully, and failed to see either traces of past or premonitions of future loveliness. I understand that the male Indian is above doing anything to support himself, and allows the women folks to hustle for the family. I saw one absurd old Indian astride a small donkey. I addressed him as Powhattan and inquired after the health of his daughter Pocahontas. He replied, "No savey." He wore a blanket of divers hues, but of uniform dirtiness, and had a necktie around his head, the tie falling behind. There are a few adobe churches in these Indian villages and some converts are reported to have been baptized. If the ceremony is performed by immersion and frequently repeated, I am in favor of extending its observance.

Other Indian girls were the Hualipais, so some one called them, and the Mojaves. The latter wore their faces painted and penciled like the facade of a brick building, and so some of their natural ugliness was concealed by art. Before the average Indian maiden can make her debut in paleface society she must spend more money for buttons and adopt some form of trousering.

Some of the places marked on the map of Arizona as towns are calculated to make the stranger smile. They often consist of a single building and contain a single inhabitant. Among them I remember Chino and Aubrey, where a red-shirted man in a broad sombrero represented the total population of one. As a passenger remarked, if the conductor had not called out these stations in a loud tone of voice, no one would suspect we had reached them.

We came to Mojave (pronounced Moharvey) in California before we found any vegetation, except cactus as big as apple-trees, and some of the country is absolute Saharic desert—sand and nothing else for scores of miles. A remarkable feature of the atmosphere of this section is that a mountain twenty miles away does not look more than two hundred rods distant. At Mojave an experiment was being made in agriculture by an enterprising farmer who had struck a furrow around one hundred and sixty acres, and was putting in barley. The plow, an affair something like a harrow, sowed the grain from a box and turned four two-and-a-half-inch-deep furrows over it.

Penetrating California, the prospect brightens as fast as any reasonable person could expect. Here you begin to see trees and plowed land, buildings, and windmills pumping water. Villages with stores and school-houses appear, and you are again in a country where vegetation springs from the soil. Back somewhere about six hours from Oakland I put my head out of the window at a station and a man wanted to know if I wished to buy a hot chicken "tomally." I inquired what word he used. He repeated "tomally." "How do you spell it?" said I. "T-o-m-a-l-e," he replied. I said that I did not desire a tomale just then, as I had brought a large supply of it in my trunk. The fact was, I did not know what a tomale was and I have not since learned anything on the subject. It is not in the encyclopedia. M.

THAT was a rather pertinent question which a young man asked the Rev. Joseph Cook, when the preacher had ended a bitter diatribe on Sunday newspapers. He asked Cook wherein a Sunday newspaper differed from a prohibition meeting, as both were run for money. The preacher indignantly denied that he ever accepted pay for his addresses in behalf of prohibition, but all his brethren of the cloth would have difficulty in making the same denial. It is as idle for clergymen to make war on the Sunday newspaper as on the Sunday horse-car. Each is a necessity of which the public will not be deprived because of the Puritanic scruples of a small number of people.—Examiner.

ADMIRERS of the boy preacher Harrison may be interested to know that this promising infant is gray-headed, and in the neighborhood of sixty.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Chicago preachers show such unanimity of expression and sentiment as to prove that some insidious power is pulling the string on these puppets of the pulpit, making them all dance to the same melody; for the salient points of Dr. Withrow's late windy fanfaronade will, with very slight variations, stand for the rest. This Presbyterian prevaricator's text was: "Happy is the people whose God is the Lord," and he had the monumental audacity to affirm that all political freedom "depended on a pure and undefiled Christianity; that civilization, within itself, was but little better than barbarism. Nineveh and Babylon did not perish because of their barbarism, but because they did not worship God. Rome knew not God, and it perished. Israel was the chosen of God, and it had preserved its identity from the time of Abraham until the present day. Education was not sufficient to secure national happiness." He deplored the tendency of the press to make man greater and God smaller. If the people thought the laws man-made, they would have no respect for them, but if made to understand that God stood behind them—that they were God's laws—they would show more fear," and therefore he exhorted the people "to glorify and honor God by recognizing him more in our form of government and in the criminal laws of the land." If this were not done, the preacher prophesied, "in fifty years the idea of God will have grown so small that we could not find it with a microscope that magnified 70,000 times. Nations who worshiped God were the most happy and prosperous." He closed with a demand for the suppression of Sunday papers, which he claimed "violated the Sabbath and dishonored God."

Seriously it would be folly to follow this sniveler through his varied sinuosities, were it not to expose the covert purpose—the treasonable attempts of these God-in-the-Constitution agents to overthrow American liberty.

The above sermon, of which nearly all the others would form a part, proves that Christianity as an organized ecclesiastical power, is continually warring against the natural, inalienable right of the people to rule themselves. It does not believe in the people; it distrusts them; they are naturally full of folly and wickedness; God alone is goodness and wisdom, therefore self-government and God's government are incompatible.

Those restless Jesuits of the Protestant persuasion, the Evangelical Alliance, alias the National Reform Association, met in convention in Washington lately. Nearly two thousand of these oily-tongued, white-chokered, black-coated parasites were individually presented to the president, showing conclusively that our age, our country, our government, are all assisting in bolstering up exploded beliefs, even with the prestige of their official positions. As custom makes it the duty of the executive, in replying to deputations, to be diplomatic (otherwise, a convenient liar), more especially when a second term is being industriously "worked," despite the expiring efforts of the uncivil service, the president completely transcended the requirements of his office and party on this particular occasion. Said he: "All must admit that the reception of the teachings of Christianity result in the purest patriotism, in the most scrupulous fidelity to public trust, and in the best type of citizenship."

In the first place, Cleveland is well aware that "all" do not admit any such thing; that the world of scholars dispute and doubt the very existence of Christ, either as a man or as a divinity; that none of the so-called teachings of Christianity can be authentically attributed to him; that, in an ethical view, the teachings of the Talmud, the Koran, of Buddha, and others, are vastly superior to the majority of those incorporated in the creeds of Christianity.

Secondly, the "purest patriotism" is represented by a name still honored by the public, used with pretended veneration by the president's party, and usually standing as a synonym for governmental reform—that of Thomas Jefferson; yet the sage of Monticello never accepted the teachings of Christ—he condemned them. Were there any purer patriots than Thomas Paine and Benjamin Franklin? Yet neither of these accepted the teachings of Christianity. To take a local illustration, we have a lot of "boodlers," some in, some out of jail, but likely to escape merited punishment, as they nearly all are "good" church members. They accept the "teachings of Christianity," of course they do, and accept bribes as a benefit to themselves and the church; therefore they are purest patriots. They literally believe in "laying up treasures."

The third proposition, relative to "scrupulous fidelity to public trust," is quite amusing, seeing that our Sunday-school superintendents, teachers, and Bible-class leaders are so rapidly engaging in their great Canadian colonization scheme. There is more Christianity in Canada, so their disappearance is excusable. Colonel Bolton, one of the leading lights of Christian laymen in this city, was recently sent to Joliet for systematically robbing the government while superintendent in a department in the postoffice, by way of proving his fidelity to public trust.

As to the fourth and last falsehood, about the "best type of citizenship," we wish to respectfully refer the president to the statistical facts collected by Colonel Billings in his "Crimes of Preachers," for if acceptance of Christian teachings makes the average man a better citizen, the teachers should be the very best. Sad to relate, the figures show they are the very worst. One morning's paper (Chicago Herald, December 14) reports two church rows in Cleveland (queer coincidence in the name). One is the Pope-Hildreth trial between two leading representatives of the Methodist pulpit. Another is a priest who is arraigned on sixteen specific charges of ministerial morality, which report names "immorality"—not brought up by the unholy Infidels, but by his own congregation. A third is a Wisconsin Methodist minister who tried to defraud a widow out of a small property. Surely that is false. Ministers have a reputation of caring for widows better than that. She must have been very unattractive. This is only one paper's record for one day, and it does not seem to be an extraordinary day for clerical scandals either. If Christianity produces the best citizens, how sad to contemplate that many become such just before they have to forfeit their lives at the request of the law! What a pity that just as they are fitted for the best citizens they have got to die! Perhaps it is best, to "save" them from backsliding.

Just imagine what a drop from the Infidel Jefferson in the White House to Grover Cleveland!

Oh, what a fall was there, my countrymen!

When Liberals organize, contribute, and agitate, like the Evangelical Alliance, they will attain results proportionate to their efforts. They must learn that numbers are respectability; that our numbers are sufficient, if organized, to command attention and stop this governmental cant; that "in union there is strength," that evolution, physical and intellectual, is the result of energy. What we want is to spread the light of mental liberty; to rescue our country from the hands of priest and despoiler. For this purpose we need funds. Every cent contributed will be rigidly accounted for. No one is trying to get rich off the American Secular Union. All can do something. Come, instead of spending money in senseless presents to perpetuate what is now a Christian institution, learn to donate something to liberty. In former times, men had to lay down their lives that progress might reach its present altitude. We have merely to lay down a few dollars. Then let us do that, in future, willingly and generously.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM

President of the American Secular Union,

Will make his annual lecture tour for 1888 in California, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, Washington Territory, Arizona, Idaho, Montana, and Utah. The purpose of these lectures is the organization of Freethought Societies, the discussion and advancement of the Nine Demands of Liberalism, the acquaintance and fraternal association of the Liberal people of this country.

It is necessary that those who desire lectures shall communicate at once, in order that at the earliest possible moment the route may be laid out, so that the largest number of places can be visited with the greatest economy of resources. Our country is so vast in extent, and railroad expenses are so great, that lectures must be given on a pre-arranged route.

It is best, if possible, to arrange for two or more lectures, rather than for one. The expense of advertising is no greater, and much more good can be accomplished—a larger interest will be excited—and there will be a better opportunity for information in regard to the magnitude of our cause and the importance of our principles.

The following are some of the subjects of the lectures, dealing both with the destructive and constructive aspects of Secular work—and its scientific and literary form—giving special attention to the political significance of the Nine Demands:

Universal Mental Liberty,

The New Heaven and Earth,

The Glory of Infidelity,

American Democracy,

The New God,

The Bible: Its Genuineness, Authenticity, Inspiration, and Infallibility,

Thomas Paine: The Thinker, The Patriot,

The Moralist, and the Scholar.

The Moral Power of Unbelief,

Fair Play,

The Dangers Ahead,

Woman and the Bible,

Science and Theology,

Priest, King and People,

Creation and Evolution; or, Miracle and Law,

The Works of Man and the Works of God;

or, Civilization vs. The Raw Material.

The terms of the lectures will be made reasonable to all societies and individuals who desire to co-operate with the work of the American Secular Union. It is expected that hall rent, advertising and local expenses will be provided for—and beyond this, that every Liberal will do his best to help the general cause. By combination of effort local organization can be strengthened and universal interest aroused. The local work and national work depend upon each other. The local work is of the first importance; it is the vital force of the movement—but to have simply local enterprise is to destroy the noblest spirit of Freethought, which is world-wide in its relations. It is through the Union that the broadest humanitarian results can be achieved.

Will not friends instantly interest themselves in this matter, and arrange for lectures, so that dates and subjects may be given, and every possible point be made available for work?

PRESS NOTICES, ETC.

Mr. Putnam is one of the most thorough believers in intellectual liberty in the world. He has written some of the most stirring appeals to the Liberals of this country that I have ever read. He believes that Freethought has a future; that the time is coming when the superstitions of this world will be forgotten—or remembered—some of them with smiles, most of them with tears. Mr. Putnam, although endowed with a poetic nature, with poetic insight, clings to the known, builds upon the experience of man, and believes in fancies only when they are used as the wings of fact. His abilities are of the highest order. He compels the admiration of every one who really loves the just and true.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Putnam, the Freethinker, is the best posted and best talker we have ever had on Wood river. The theater has been crowded every night whenever Mr. Putnam was advertised to speak.—Inter-Idaho, Hailey, Idaho.

S. P. Putnam was greeted by a large and appreciative audience on Sunday night last, and if close attention, interrupted only by frequent rounds of applause, indicates anything, nearly all present felt that they were enjoying a rare intellectual treat, and more than compensated for their time and attention. Putnam is a calm, clear-headed Liberal thinker, a sound reasoner and an eloquent speaker, and is apparently incapable of giving offense to any one who is an honest, earnest seeker for truth.—Avant-Courier, Bozeman, Montana.

Mr. Putnam is an eloquent, attractive, and entertaining speaker, and his remarks were frequently interrupted by applause.—Rocky Mountain Daily News, Denver, Colorado.

Samuel P. Putnam has been entertaining our people with a course of lectures on Freethought. The seating capacity of the hall on Friday evening was inadequate to accommodate the audience. The speaker during his stay showed himself to be a man of extraordinary ability, holding his audiences continually wrapped up in his subjects.—Times, Black Hawk, Colorado.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JANUARY 21, 1888

POPE LEO'S Christmas presents amounted to fifteen million dollars. The mitred harlequin of Rome is the prince of paupers.

SOME one suggested to Ingersoll that his criticisms were too sharp. He answered, "There are plenty of thumbs. There must be some needles."

THERE is nothing sweeter than to think the thoughts of Liberty, and interpret something of their music to the world. Even if the world refuses to listen, the glory of the thought is undimmed.

THE Mormon church is in the hands of a receiver, and its affairs are now practically administered by the government. This is the first time in the history of the country that we have had a state church.

THE daughter of Commodore Vanderbilt has given a Boston faith-cure healer a thousand dollars for treatment, and the transaction is denounced by the press as a swindle. Yet if the deluded woman had paid the same sum to a priest for the saying of mass, what difference would there have been in the degree of imposture? And what would the press have to say about it?

THE Second Adventists of Michigan believe that the judgment day is close at hand, and to prepare for it they are selling their property and giving the proceeds to the church. If there is to be a judgment day, and if common sense and sanity are to be among the conditions of eligibility to the New Jerusalem, Michigan will on that day furnish a large contingent of disappointed people.

IF this cold weather holds on much longer, the Salvation Army and other branches of the orthodox church will have to go out of business. To warn the homeless tramp on the street corner that unless he mends his ways he will be consigned to a place where the fire never goes out, is no warning at all. When the thermometer reaches zero, it is time to pray that a certain kingdom may come on earth as it is in hades.

No work can be measured simply by its result. Failure does not make an action in itself less great, and success does not contribute to its real worth. The reward of life is in doing and not merely in acquiring. The heat of battle is nobler than the flush of victory. That is not a failure which lacks popular applause and wealth. That is failure when one ceases to do his best work. That is success when one achieves, not some outward gain, but the noblest expression of his being.

THE Rev. J. C. Smith, of this city, has just been tried before the Presbytery to determine his soundness on doctrinal points. The trial showed that the Rev. Mr. Smith's belief in the ultimate damnation of a majority of the race is implicit. Some of the brethren objected to giving him a hearing, but the Rev. Dr. Frazer said that if "Bob" Ingersoll even were to present himself as a candidate he would be proud and happy to examine him. Dr. Frazer evidently has not read the Ingersoll-Field discussion, or else the experiences of others are entirely wasted on him. We do not believe that Dr. Field is either proud or happy over the result of his examination of Colonel Ingersoll.

FREETHOUGHT AND THE LABOR QUESTION.

It is conceded that the most important practical question of to-day is the Labor question. Its right settlement is necessary to the preservation of our civilization. Stupendous forces are gathering, and volcanic intensity is in the air. At the top and the bottom of society are the dangerous classes, and unless there is reconciliation there will be certain destruction.

But no great question can be settled without ideas. There must be a philosophy of reform, a mental understanding of the situation. The labor question cannot be solved by an appeal to sentiment, by arousing passion. It is the intellect of man that must grapple with the difficulties, and not only see the evil, but the best way of escape.

It is granted by every thinker that education first of all is necessary for the elucidation of this question. It cannot be settled by an ignorant people, be they rich or poor. Prejudice must be removed. The world must know what equality is, what liberty is, what justice is. These cannot be guessed at. They are not feelings; they are relations which the reason only can unfold. As well might one understand music or mathematics without study as to understand equality, liberty, justice without study. Merely to harangue the multitude is not sufficient. The multitude must be taught. There must be a process of growth. Scarcely any are wise enough to-day. Most are hedged in, and see only a step before.

There must also be arbitration. The labor question can not be settled by brute force. It needs the wise head and the wiser heart. There must be a rational remedy. Conquest will not abate the difficulty. There must be adjustment, equilibrium, a balance. There must be no crushing out, but a harmony of all the forces of society. Capital and labor are friends and not foes, and should arbitrate in the open court of the universe.

Again, the true method of industrial co-operation can be reached only by experiment. There must be an actual trial of theories. No matter how beautiful a dream may be, it must be put to the test. Human nature must be taken exactly as it is. We are not dealing with imaginary quantities, but with real men and women—with vast differences of temperament and character. Some want one thing, others another. Individuality is a tremendous factor. It is a subtle and gigantic force—protean in its manifestations. We can not prophesy what it will do in given circumstances. We can only try. Every attempt and every failure are of advantage and open better ways for the future. This is the method of science—experiment. We can not deal with abstractions, but with things. Things and theories don't always match, and until they do the truth is not gained. There are no mathematics of human progress. One can not sit down and reason out, spin from his dreaming brain, just how humanity ought to go or will go. Humanity will not go according to any preconceived notion. It will not obey the hand of any engineer. It has a process of its own, and its evolutions come from unsounded deeps.

Whatever differences may exist, these axioms of reform must be admitted—education, arbitration, experiment. No thinker will for a moment deny the necessity of these. Whatever method he adopts, he must agree to education, arbitration, and experiment.

The relation of Freethought to the labor question, therefore, is this: it provides the conditions by which all reforms must advance, and all methods be successful. Without Freethought there can be no education, no arbitration, no experiment. With Freethought they all exist. Freethought of necessity means education, for it is itself the highest result of education. Freethought is arbitration, for every Freethinker recognizes the equal rights of all. Freethought is experiment, for it recognizes the value of what is, and that only through reality can the truth be attained.

Freethought is not the solution of the labor question, but it is the creator of those conditions by which only a solution is possible. Freethought is sympathetic to all reform, but it does not profess to decide a priori the best method of reform. That must be the result, not of thinking only, but of experience. Thought can not always declare beforehand what is the wisest action. There is no infallible guide. The wisest action is found by trying. But no trying is valuable unless Freethought is the very soul of it. The action of a slave has no scientific value—only the action of a free man. The Freethinker may sometimes think wrongly, but he will also think rightly; but the slave never can think rightly. His thought is wrong per se. Liberty is the only possible road to wisdom.

At present there is no unanimity among labor reformers. Their theories are radically different. Freethought does not and cannot decide between these, simply as Freethought. It says: Keep on thinking, keep on trying, keep on experimenting. Every Freethinker is bound to have his own way, but every Freethinker will accept the best practical results, for he is not a Freethinker who is controlled by his own prejudices and narrow outlook, but he is free who recognizes the supremacy of universal science.

The progress of the world is manifold. It is in every direction, in science, art, literature, in politics and social life. It is destructive and constructive. It is in the individual and in the mass. All our varied humanity is struggling at innumerable points. Each reform is involved in every other, and a gain in any place is a gain all round. But so vast is the plane of human endeavor that he who wishes to advance the world must concentrate his efforts. While interested in all reform, he must choose his point of emphasis—that point in the long line of progress to which his best life can flow and give the largest outcome for the common good.

But while choosing one point where he himself can do the most valuable work, he must recognize that advance is made in every direction, and that others working in a different way accomplish equally with him for the general welfare.

Nothing can be so important as Freethought, although Freethought is not the ultimate. The ultimate is a sublime and beautiful humanity, where toil is glory, and virtue is its reward. But Freethought is the means to this great end. It opens every door of human progress, takes off the chains of the mind and so the chains of the body. Mental emancipation is finally the emancipation of the whole man.

THE Russian and Greek Catholics celebrated January 13 as New Year's Day, that being the first day of 1888, according to the old style of reckoning which obtained previous to the dictum of Pope Gregory in the seventh century. Gregory being a Roman Catholic, the rival church of the Greeks refused to accept his amendment.

CRITICAL REVIEW.

Our attention has just been called to a work entitled "Paradise Lost," by John Henry Milton, a spring poet. The most remarkable feature of the volume is that while it is written in the form of poetry, it is totally destitute of rhyme. How this deficiency escaped the observation of the publisher is inscrutable. The theme to which John Henry tunes his lyre is the creation of this "tear and a grain of sand," called the earth, and concerning the alleged creator the writer gives us the following lines. We call them rather poor stuff:

He took the golden compasses, prepared
In God's eternal store, to circumscribe
This universe, and all created things.
One foot he centered, and the other turned Round through the vast profundity obscure, Etc.

If, with all the modern improved machinery for making poetry, John Henry can do no better than that, he should have let literature alone. "Circumscribe" will never rhyme with "prepared" while reason holds her seat. But the narrative is interesting. Let us throw it into contemporary verse and hear it. This is what Milton aimed to say:

He took some golden compasses, about the proper size,
For which he paid a quarter at the foundry in the skies;
One point he centered on his thumb, and let the other trace,
Round through the vast profundity, the outer rim of space;
And the same was the circumference of all created things,
And the inner side of heaven was denoted by the rings.
Thus the earth was separated from surrounding void and mist,
And set spinning on its axis by the turning of his wrist
Then he squeezed it 'twixt his fingers, and he rolled it in his hand
Till the oceans had been gathered in the hollows of the land.

So God moved upon the waters, having let his moorings slip,
And went sailing o'er the surface on a sort of trial trip.
It was thus that vital virtue was imparted to the world,
And the earth, self-poised and balanced, through the realms of ether whirled;

All the same as when a juggler, with a dextrous toss and twist,
Sets a gilded ball in motion by the turning of his wrist.
Then God said, Let earth be lighted, which was quite a happy thought,
And he lit a stub of candle which he happened to have brought;
And the match wherewith he lit it to produce the light of day
He ignited in the fashion of a person built that way.

Thus was earth illuminated, in a manner somewhat crude,
But it suited the creator, who at once pronounced it good.
And the light was from the darkness by the hemisphere divided—
Day on one side, night the other—so their names had been decided.
And when darkness had departed, and the primal morn had burst,
Day was ushered in, and people called it January first.
And in heaven the choir celestial, being pleased with the result,
Twanged their harps and raised their voices, and with music did exult.

We should hardly care to vouch for the truth of the foregoing narrative, but that is the way Milton tells it. He also finds corroboration in the words of the Rev. Mr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who no doubt would be able to read Mr. Milton without emotion, as he is something of a liar himself. Says Mr. Talmage: "Out in space there hung a great chunk of rock and mud, and water, and shell, thousands of miles in diameter, more thousands of miles in circumference—a great mass of ugliness, confusion, and distortion, uselessness, ghastliness, and horror. It seemed like a great commons on which smashed-up worlds were dumped. It is what poetry and prose, scientist and Christian, agree in calling chaos. Out of that black, rough, shapeless egg our beautiful world was hatched. God stood over that original anarchy of elements and said: 'Atlantic ocean, you go right away and lie down there! Pacific ocean, you sleep there! Caucasian range of mountains, you stand there! Mount Washington, you be sentinel there! Mount Blanc, you put on your coronet of crystal there! Mississippi, you march there, and Missouri, you marry it there!' And he gathered in his Almighty hands the land, and mud, and rock, and rolled, and heaved, and moulded, and dented, and compressed them into shape, and then dropped them in four places, and the one was Asia, and another was Europe, and another Africa, and another America, North and South."*

On the day following the one on which the proceedings just described took place, the narrator goes on to say, the creator made a firmament, and slipped it into place, thus dividing the waters above from those below it, and the remainder of the week was occupied in such minor details as making the sun, and stars, and moon; also great whales. Saturday's accomplishments are worthy of extended notice. The creator began to see his way through the woods. Says Milton, as we translate him freely:

The sixth day of creation, which was Saturday, arose,
And the angels of Jerusalem put on their Sunday clothes,
And were making heaven merry, for when the day was sped
They knew the boss would be at home and paint the city red.
* * *

Down on the earth the word went forth, Let creeping things appear,
And straightway they 'gan to obey the voice that they did hear.
The fertile earth teemed with the birth; innumerable living creatures
Out of the ground rose all around, with their distinguished features.
Straight from his lair the grizzly bear his hungry jaw protruded;
From rushes dank on river bank the behemoth exuded.
With open smile the crocodile crawled o'er the reeds and rushes.
The boojum snark, with visage dark, from out his dungeon pushes.

The snake and snail and waggletail emerged, no whit belated,
While from the soil, by dint of toil, fishworms vermiculated.
The willapuss, grandsire of us, began his natural duties,
With horrid mein, and eyeballs green, appeared the giascutis,
And made them all, the great and small, stand in their places rooted,
When from his ear, as did appear, a Parson evolved.
Each looked aghast to see this last addition as a neighbor—
'Twas then God spoke: "This is the joke of all my six days' labor.
Now, by my word, he is absurd, but take him in possession;
I give him free, henceforth to be the tail of this procession."
Thus having made the lower grade of animated creatures,
Including eke, and so to speak, one of the genus preachers,
With grander stride than yet was tried, he made a tree with branches,
In which full soon a gay baboon sat grinning on his haunches.

The tale, as we read it in the work under review, next describes the inauguration of the race to which we have the honor to belong. To quote the defective verse literally, the architect observed:

Let us now make man in our own image, man
In our similitude, and let them rule
Over the fish and fowl and sea and air,
Beast of the field, and over all the earth,
And every creeping thing that creepeth ground.

No objection to the above proposition being recorded, the process continues:

This said, he fashioned Adam of the dust that had been left
In the making of the creatures of intelligence bereft;

* Should any one suspect that this is a parody of the words of the Rev. Mr. Talmage, he is referred to the "Battle for Bread," by the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, what is here quoted being the two opening paragraphs. New York: J. S. Ogilvie & Co.

And having in his nostrils blown the vital breath of life,
He chloroformed him, stole a rib, and made the man a wife.
And it is held by chroniclers, and told by one who knows,
That the first deep sleep of Adam was the poor man's last repose;
For well he knew, as husbands do, that when he'd sunk to rest
She would deftly search the pockets of his trousers and his vest.

There is a certain familiarity about these last eight lines. If we remember correctly they are from an Eastern almanac for 1888, not yet in print. Evidently our poet has been plagiarizing, but as we read in the preface to the work that he was born in 1608 he must be dead now, and so we will say, De mortuis nil nisi bonum, or its equivalent. Of "Paradise Lost," however, we are free to maintain that as a poem it is a failure, and that if it was forwarded to us by the author the mails have been a long time getting it here. In these days of delayed trains there is nothing remarkable in this.

OUR PIOUS CONTINGENT.

The people in the whole world according to creed may be estimated thus, in round millions: Christians, 338; Buddhism, 340; Mohammedan, 210; Brahmin, 170; Confucius, 80; Sintoism, 14, and Judaism, 7. Of English-speaking people, the Episcopalians number 21,305,000; Methodists of all descriptions, 16,000,000; Roman Catholics, 14,600,000; Presbyterians, 10,650,000; Baptists, 8,195,000; Congregationalists, 5,750,000, and Unitarians, 900,000. According to the latest statistics, the number in the United States of each denomination is as follows:

The foregoing figures, with the exception of the 7,000,000 credited to the Roman Catholics, which is a moderate estimate are from the Alta California. The whole church membership, by this table, foots up in round numbers, say, 18,500,000—less than one-third of the population of the United States. With so many intelligent people walking the broad road that leads past the church doors, it is strange that religious people should worry themselves about the benighted heathen of foreign lands, who, according to the new theology of Andover, will be saved anyway.

THE WOMAN WAGE-EARNER.

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll has written the preface to a new nineteenth-century story entitled "For Her Daily Bread." The following paragraphs are from this preface:

I have read this story, this fragment of a life mingled with fragments of other lives, and have been pleased, interested, and instructed. It is filled with the pathos of truth, and has in it the humor that accompanies actual experience. It has but little to do with the world of imagination; certain feelings are not attributed to persons born of fancy, but it is the history of a heart and brain interested in the common things of life. There are no kings, no lords, no titled ladies, but there are real people, the people of the shop and street whom every reader knows, and there are lines intense and beautiful, and scenes that touch the heart. You will find no theories of government, no hazy outlines of reform, nothing but facts and folks as they have been, as they are, and probably will be for many centuries to come. If you read this book you will be convinced that men and women are good or bad, charitable or heartless, by reason of something within, and not by virtue of any name they bear, of any trade or profession they follow, or of any creed they may accept. You will also find that men sometimes are honest and mean; that women may be very virtuous and very cruel; that good, generous, and sympathetic men are often disreputable, and that some exceedingly worthy citizens are extremely mean and uncomfortable neighbors.

It takes a great deal of genius and a great deal of self-denial to be very bad or to be very good. Few people understand the amount of energy, industry, and self-denial it requires to be consistently vicious. People who have a pride in being good and fail, and those who have a pride in being bad and fail, in order to make their records consistent generally rely upon hypocrisy.

The reader of this story will get some idea as to what is encountered by a girl in an honest effort to gain her daily bread. He will find how steep, how devious, and how difficult is the path she treads.

There are so few occupations open to woman, so few things in which she can hope for independence, that to be thrown upon her own resources is almost equivalent to being cast away. Besides, she is an object of continual suspicion, watched not only by men but by women. If she does anything that other women are not doing she is at once suspected, her reputation is touched, and other women, for fear of being stained themselves, withdraw not only the hand of help but the smile of recognition. A young woman cannot defend herself without telling the charge that has been made against her. This, of itself, gives a kind of currency to slander. To speak of the suspicion that has crawled across her path is to plant the seeds of doubt in other minds; to even deny it admits that it exists. To be suspected, that is enough. There is no way of destroying this suspicion. There is no court in which suspicions are tried; no juries that can render verdicts of not guilty. Most women are driven at last to the needle, and this does not allow them to live; it simply keeps them from dying.

It is hard to appreciate the dangers and difficulties that lie in wait for woman. Even in this Christian country of ours no girl is safe in the streets of any city after the sun has gone down. After all, the sun is the only god that has ever protected woman. In the darkness she has been the prey of the wild beast in man.

Nearly all charitable people, so-called, imagine that nothing is easier than to obtain work. They really feel that anybody, no matter what his circumstances may be, can get work enough to do if he is only willing to do the work. They cannot understand why any healthy human being should lack food or clothes. Meeting the unfortunate and the wretched in the streets of the great city, they ask them, in a kind of wondering way, why they do not go to the West, why they do not cultivate the soil, and why they are so foolish, stupid, and reckless as to remain in the town. It would be just as sensible to ask a beggar why he does not start a bank, or a line of steamships, as to ask him why he does not cultivate the soil, or why he does not go to the West. The man has no money to pay his fare, and if his fare were paid he would be, when he landed in the West, in precisely the same condition as he was when he left the East. Societies, and institutions, and individuals supply the immediate wants of the hungry and the ragged, but they afford only the relief of the moment.

Articles by the thousand have been written for the purpose of showing that women should become servants in houses, and the writers of these articles are filled with astonishment that any girl should hesitate to enter domestic service. They tell us that nearly every family needs a good cook, a good chambermaid, a good sweeper of floors and washer of dishes, a good stout girl to carry the baby and draw the wagon, and these good people express the greatest astonishment that all girls are not anxious to become domestics. They tell them that they will be supplied with good food, that they will have comfortable beds and warm clothing, and they ask, "What more do you want?" These people have not, however, solved the problem. If girls as a rule keep away from kitchens and chambers, if they hate to be controlled by other women, there must be a reason. When we see a young woman prefer a clerkship in a store, a business which keeps her upon her feet all day, and sends her to her lonely room filled with weariness and despair, and when we see other girls who are willing to sew for a few cents a day rather than become the maid of "my lady," there must be some reason, and this reason must be deemed sufficient by the persons who are actuated by it. What is it?

Every human being imagines that the future has something in store for him. It is natural to build these castles in Spain. It is natural for a girl to dream of being loved by the noble, by the superb, and it is natural for the young man to dream of success, of a home, of a good, a beautiful, and loving wife. These dreams are the solace of poverty; they keep back the tears in the eyes of the young and hungry. To engage in any labor that degrades, in any work that leaves a stain, in any business the mention of which is liable to redden the cheek, seems to be a destruction of the foundation of hope, a destruction of the future; it seems to be a crucifixion of his or her better self. It assassinates the ideal.

It may be said that labor is noble, that work is a kind of religion, and whoever says this tells the truth. But after all, what has the truth to do with this question? What is the opinion of society? what is the result? It cures no wound to say that it was wrongfully inflicted. The opinion of sensible people is one way, the action of society is inconsistent with that opinion.

Domestic servants are treated as though their employment was and is a degradation. Bankers, merchants, professional men, ministers of the gospel, do not want their sons to become the husbands of chambermaids and cooks. Small hands are beautiful, they do not tell of labor.

I have given one reason; there is another. The work of a domestic is never done. She is liable to be called at any moment, day or night. She has no time that she can call her own. A woman who works by the piece can take a little rest; if she is clerk she has certain hours of labor, and the rest of the day is her own.

And there is still another reason that I almost hate to give, and that is this: As a rule, woman is exacting with woman. As a rule, woman does not treat woman as well as man treats man, or as well as man treats woman. There are many other reasons, but I have given enough.

This story is filled with sympathy for the destitute, for the struggling, and tends to keep the star of hope above the horizon of the unfortunate. After all, we know but little of the world, and have but a faint conception of the burdens that are borne and of the courage and heroism displayed by the unregarded poor. Let the rich read these pages, they will have a kinder feeling toward those who toil; let the workers read them, and they will think better of themselves.

DR. McGLYNN ON THE POPE IN POLITICS.

Dr. Edward McGlynn addressed the New York Anti-Poverty Society on the 8th. His first words were: "Pope in politics—What business has the Pope in politics?" He continued, saying that it was the meek spirit of Christ, and not the sword of Peter, that won at the start, and added: "The stupendous blunder of one thousand years ago, the union of church and state, shall not be repeated in this virgin continent to the detriment of both. Unfortunately the church is human as well as divine. There can be no new doctrine in the church, and yet in this city last Sunday the president of a meeting said that every word of the pope from his high chair was as from the Holy Spirit. Think of such rot as that in this country! Talk about the pope being the mouthpiece of the Holy Ghost. O Lord! Why, the highest people on the highest chair [with the accent on the "high"] would never venture to make such a claim. This is making of the pope a fetish.

"The pope has a right to write a letter to anybody and say, 'Come to Rome,' and leave to himself to say what it is about, and how long the bidden one is to stay there. In old times he would have exercised his kingly right and locked me in a dungeon. The pope has our allegiance as long as he remains in his proper position. The pope will be a real successor to St. Peter when he moves about the earth and will not kick any one in the mouth. Who shall so forget his manhood as to offer to kiss his foot? He could be as good a pope walking down Broadway with a stovepipe hat, instead of wearing a hat about five hundred years out of fashion. The pope of to-day is flattered by the attention of that great humorist, Bismarck, who asked him to be the arbiter of an operabouffe war which Bismarck had provoked with Spain.

"The figure which looks like an old woman was piled high with flattery until it was made to think that it was holding the balance of power of the whole world. Flattery has been piled on an inch thick all over that poor old seventy-six-year-old bag of bones. Poor, absent-minded old man, who is made to think he is the greatest of pontiffs! Why is it Italy is so bitter against the pope? Because he is in politics. He is a mere politician in the lowest sense of the word, and all because of his accursed clinging to his accursed temporal throne.

"I supported Cleveland at the last election, which I will not do again, because I would protest against the appliance of the ecclesiastical machine and corrupt Tammany Hall. It was a crime. In the old church over which I presided there were no political tracts put in the pews, even when tracts came through the vicar-general's office. It was charged that there was too much religion in St. Stephen's and not enough of politics and the machine. The so-called Catholic countries are the countries where the pope is most heartily hated, because of his political ambition."

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States, or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts, shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

ADDRESS

To the Liberals of the United States by the Board of Directors of the American Secular Union.

We take it for granted that the Secular Union has the sympathies of all the Liberals of the country, that its platform appeals to their reason, and that they would favor more practical means for carrying out its objects. For such work the first essential is an organization; the second, the necessary financial support. We desire that the organization shall be strengthened, and so conducted that all the Liberals of the country shall be sufficiently interested to co-operate in carrying out its purpose. This is a large country, and probably its extent has more to do than many of us imagine with interfering with the success of the Union. The members of our organization can not afford to meet together in large numbers, if for no other reason than the cost of traveling expenses. There is, however, a small body of speakers moving among the Liberals, promoting Freethought and Secular principles by eloquent lectures, who find their support in the audiences that attend. Our plan is to invite the earnest support of all these lecturers in a way that will bind them and the people in the fraternal bonds of the American Secular Union, giving them whatever prestige may arise from the fact of their being special agents of the American Secular Union. That such special agents shall endeavor to enlist the co-operation, moral and financial support, of the Liberals individually and collectively wherever they may have appointments. It is presumed that there are a great many Liberals throughout the land who would gladly make donations annually or oftener to the general fund of the Union, but who might put it off from day to day, and possibly entirely neglect, owing to the trouble of writing and sending a safe remittance by mail. Liberals will thus find a convenient way to do what they would wish to for the general fund, while at the same time contributing as much as they otherwise would to the lecturer.

The plan which has received the approval of the board of directors, and which will be communicated to each lecturer in detail by the secretary, has the merit of placing all Liberal lecturers on the same footing in the Union, and affords an arrangement which should be agreeable to all, besides affording a practical plan for insuring a sufficient treasury fund. The funds thus obtained are to be used for the maintenance of an active secretary and home office, and for the printing and purchasing of such literature, tracts or pamphlets, as is approved by the board of directors, for distribution to contributors to the fund, provided the income is sufficient, and for the assistance of the lecturers. The secretary, where possible, will assist the lecturers to procure appointments, and render them all the aid in his power. It is fair to presume that those who adopt this arrangement with the Union would not be contributing any portion of their own earnings, but that, being authorized agents, they will receive a much larger subscription than they otherwise would, besides building up a universal interest, and maintaining an active, vigorous national organization for the furtherance of Freethought and their own protection.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, President of the American Secular Union, will begin his lecture tour in the month of February. Arrangements are made for lectures at Fresno City, Oleander, Tulare, and other places. Mr. Putnam desires to work mainly in southern California during February and March. It is hoped that friends in San Diego, Del Mar, San Jacinto, Los Angeles, Santa Ana, Anaheim, San Bernardino, etc., will arrange for lectures at these various points. The following are the subjects of some of the lectures: "Universal Mental Liberty," "The Glory of Infidelity," "American Democracy," "The Dangers Ahead," "The Bible," "Priest, King, and People."

THE first lecture of the New Year and the last lecture of the old at the Chicago Secular Union were memorable occasions. Christmas night, Mrs. Freeman was as usual put on the list as a house-drawing attraction, on account of the festive season, and in this respect our anticipations were fully realized, and in her handling of her subject, "Orthodox Problems," she seemed to surpass all her previous efforts. The biblical conundrums she flung at professed believers will take them several ages to solve, and she showed up the Noah's ark and other absurdities in a manner that brought forth peals of laughter and rounds of applause. That her expected tour will be one of triumph; that she will go on from conquering to conquer superstition and bigotry, and that she will acquire abroad the reputation, influence, and encouragement her talents so richly deserve, is the hearty wish of every member of the Chicago society. The New Year's chimes, "Ring out the old, ring in the new," were well performed by Prof. W. S. Bell, who gave his first lecture before our society on the first day of the year, choosing appropriately as his subject those fundamental bases of human society, "Liberty and Morality"—a good New Year's discourse. Mr. Bell's lecture was a profound presentation of the philosophy of the individualistic school, interspersed with sufficient facetious allusions to enlist and retain the attention of the average audience, while placing before them abstractions of philosophy. Those who in the discussion disagreed with Mr. Bell acknowledged the ability with which he had presented his theory of "Liberty and Morality." The telling points were frequently applauded, and Mr. Bell can feel that he scored a success before as critical an audience as assembles between Chicago and New York. It was my intention to send you a synopsis of Mr. Bell's discourse, but having lost my notes, I must prepare, like the Seventh Day Adventists of Battle Creek, for the end, for which your subscribers doubtless will be duly grateful.—E. A. S.

THE PAINE CELEBRATION.

The Liberals of San Francisco will celebrate on Sunday evening, January 29, 1888, the 151st anniversary of the birthday of Thomas Paine. The exercises will take place at Irving Hall, 139 Post street, between Kearny and Grant avenue. The following programme has been prepared:

Piano Solo.....	Prof. Pettibone
Introductory Remarks by the Chairman.....
Selected Song.....	Prof. Briggs
Original Poem.....	Thomas Curtis
Address.....	Samuel P. Putnam
Address.....	Mrs. J. A. Shephard
Address.....	Geo. A. Bruce
Original Poem.....	Robert Stuart

Doors open at 7, exercises begin at 7:30. All are invited. The works of Thomas Paine and other Liberal authors will be for sale in the hall.

PAPAL CONTROL OF THE PRESS.

From the invention of printing, about 1444, the pope and the church of Rome have sought to control the press. Sixtus IV., in 1472, commenced the crusade. Alexander VI., in 1501, ordained, under the severest penalties, that no books of any description should be published without the sanction of the Romish bishop of the diocese. Leo X. renewed the prohibition. The fifth Council of Lateran, at which Leo presided, 1515, decreed "that no book whatever should be printed without examination and license by the bishop, his deputy, or an inquisitor." The penalty for violating this decree was of the most terrible description. A committee was appointed by the Council of Trent, whose duty it was to prepare a list of prohibited books. It was published on the 24th of March, 1564, and called Index Prohibitions.

The committee was made permanent, and was called "the congregation of the index." The writings prohibited by this body include many of the standard works of literature, to which others are added constantly, as the labors of the committee are continued to this day. Among the books condemned are Milton's "Paradise Lost," Young's "Night Thoughts," "The Dairyman's Daughter," and the writings of Addison, Lord Bacon, Jeremy Taylor, Mosheim, Locke, Calvin, Luther, Wickliffe, Zwinglius, Melancthon, Robertson, George Buchanan, Cave Grotius, and a host of others. In popish countries the index is posted up from time to time on the church doors. Besides this index there is another called Index Expurgatorius, which includes books not entirely prohibited, but which have certain passages expurgated. Mendham's "Literary Policy of the Church of Rome" has a very full account of both catalogues.

Pope Pius IV., in the bull issues of 1564, published ten rules, descriptive of the books to be condemned.

1. All books condemning popes or councils.
2. All books upon religion, written by heretics, are totally condemned.
3. Translations of the Bible, except for the use of learned men, at the discretion of the bishop.
4. The Bible, translated even by Romish authors into the mother tongues, not allowed to be used except on permission in writing given by the bishop.
5. Lexicons and other compilations must have the sanction of the priests.
6. Books of controversy are subject to the same rules as the use of the Bible.
7. The classics are permitted only to the aged.
8. Books, in the main good, must be emended by the priests.
9. Books on science must be carefully examined.
10. Enjoins printers and booksellers and all other persons from having anything to do with the prohibited books, under severe pains and penalties executed at the will of the inquisitors. These rules conclude as follows: "Finally it is enjoined on all the faithful that no one presume to keep or read any books contrary to these rules, or prohibited by this index. But if any one keep or read any books composed by heretics, or the writings of any author suspected of heresy or false doctrine, he shall instantly incur the sentence of excommunication; and those who read or keep works interdicted on another account besides the mortal sin committed, shall be severely punished at the will of the bishops."—Landmarks of Truth.

BUSYBODIES.

Mr. Secretary Gault was preaching National Reform out in Wisconsin, in October, at the same time that President Cleveland passed through that state on his tour of the Western and Southern states. Mr. Gault preached twice in Menomonee, and in one of his sermons he argued in favor of governmental enforcement of Sunday-keeping. In the Cynosure we find a highly commendatory report of it, and among other things we find this:

"Brother Gault was very much exercised with regard to the course of President Cleveland last Sunday at Madison. He, together with Postmaster-General Vilas, was expected to attend a certain church. Pews were reserved and decorated, and ushers were waiting; services were delayed a long time, but no president and no postmaster-general appeared. The fact was that when the bells were ringing for church, Grover was still in bed, and at 11 o'clock he was taking breakfast. He should have risen early, Brother Gault thinks, and studied the Sunday-school lesson for one hour before breakfast, and then after breakfast sallied forth to Sabbath-school and addressed the school. Then after dinner he should have visited and addressed the Y. M. C. A., and in the evening gone to some church. Instead of this he spent several hours of the afternoon dictating official correspondence; and doubtless a good many besides Brother Gault and myself will not vote for Grover Cleveland." This is a perfect illustration of the spying meddlesomeness that will be obtruded upon the people, and of the forms that will be exacted of them, when the National Reformers obtain the power which they are now so zealously seeking. How did Mr. Gault find out that the president was in bed when the church bells were ringing, and that he was at breakfast at 11 o'clock? How does he know that the president "spent several hours in the afternoon dictating official correspondence?" And even though it were all true, what business is it of Mr. Gault's, or of the National Reform Association, or of all the religionists of Christendom together? Macaulay truly says: "Nothing is more galling to a people not broken in from the birth than a paternal, or, in other words, a meddling government, a government which tells them what to read, and say, and and eat, and drink, and wear." But this galling thing is just what the National Reformers aim to establish in this land.—American Sentinel.

GOD VERSUS MAN.

The popular notion of religion is summed up in the word worship. People who do not go to church are looked upon as irreligious. Worship is man acknowledging his dependence upon a God. Is there any ground for this acknowledgment? What has any God done for man that man should worship him? From the hour that man is born to the hour that he dies does a God do a single thing for him? Man never yet received any assistance from anybody but man. Worship is not founded upon a fact. Was Jupiter a real, live God when the Romans worshiped him? If so, is he dead now? Were the gods of Greece actual living deities when the beautiful worship of the Athenians was offered them? If so, where are they now? Do gods die? Do they commit suicide, or are they slain by other gods? It is a fact that hundreds of deities have perished; fallen from the throne of worship, and lie entombed in dead languages. Who killed them? They died from neglect. Cease to worship a god and he falls from the heavens. Who makes a god? The one that worships him.

The religion that is founded upon a God enslaves man. Worship has killed India, checked civilization in China and been a drag upon the wheels of progress in Europe and America. The heaviest tax that is paid by every civilized people on earth to-day is the tax of worship. There is not a nation to-day that can afford to worship a god. It is like throwing money into the sea. Religion must mean something else than worship, or it is worthless. The false idea that morality depends upon a divine appointment must be corrected. Faith in a God has nothing to do with confidence in man. It is not necessary to believe in all the multitudinous divinities of the Chinese in order to get back your collars and cuffs from a Chinese laundry. The sweetest thing on this earth is joy, and the song of gladness from the human heart the purest sound that ever flowed from the lips of man. Around humanity clusters all that is fair, all that is good, all that is sacred to this age, and nothing is fairer, better, or more sacred than human happiness. Human love should no longer be wasted on divine beings; it should be lavished on human beings. If gods had done as much for men as men have done for gods, earth would be a paradise for every human heart. What a sorrowful waste of feeling has been love for God! What a pitiful loss of time and money has been worship of God! What a fearful failure of faith has been trust in God! Let us consecrate the human mind, the human heart, and the human hand to mankind. Let our labor, our thought, and our affection be all given to man. Let all that has been done for divinity be done for humanity. Let our appeal no longer be for God's sake, but for man's sake. Not a single cent of all the millions upon millions of dollars that have been taken from human toil in the name of God has ever gone into his pocket. The church is deceiving the world. When God asks for help through the priest let him go without assistance. I do not believe that God is as hungry, as cold, as sick, as wretched as men, women, and children are, and our duty is to the suffering ones of earth. God can get along without another church until every man on this earth has a comfortable home. That is what I would tell the priest, the minister, the pious beggar everywhere, who robs the home to build a church. It is human love, not divine love, that bends over the bed of pain, and soothes with pitying touch the aching brow. It is human charity, not divine charity, that relieves the wants of the poor. It is the human heart, not the divine heart, that bleeds at the sight of suffering and misery. It is humanity, not divinity, that cares for man, works for man, and dies for man.

The eye that looks with pity upon the sad homes of human beings upon this earth, upon the miseries and sorrows of the disappointed, deserted, doomed hearts of mortals, would drown with its tears the fires of hell, kindled by the church's hate and fed by the church's greed.

The threshold of our home is the entrance to the "holy of holies" that the men and women of liberated heart and mind in this age will protect from polluted feet. The beast that is trampling the earth to-day with feet of pollution is SUPERSTITION.

I do not want longer to see the home sacrificed to the church—the love of man or woman, of wife or husband, of father, mother, or child, sacrificed to Jesus. I do not want longer to be told that we are infidels to God by being true to man, that we are scoffers at what is sacred because we defend what is true and right.

Let us live to make earth a better place for man; let us add happiness to every human heart we can. In the throat of sadness put a song of joy; from the heart of anguish take the thorn of pain. L. K. WASHBURN.

THE TENDERFOOT IN SAN FRANCISCO.

The Oakland ferry bringing the passenger to San Francisco could hardly be improved upon as a method of impressing the stranger with the magnificence of this city and its harbor. The view from the deck of the boat is indescribable. The reader can understand a description only in so far as the thing described is compared with something he has already seen. I do not think the reader has ever seen anything to which this bay and harbor may be compared. He must see them as I saw them one sunshiny morning. He will need no description then, as he can appreciate none now.

A dweller of only a few days in a metropolis like this can hardly hope to have seen much of it, but he may gather impressions. He may get a notion, for instance, that the climate of this place is scarcely as rigorous as that of the East. I walked down Kearny street one day. The sun was shining like the sun of June, and there was but a slight chill in the air, from the mountains, I suppose, across the bay. I removed my hat occasionally to wipe the perspiration from my face, and wished my overcoat were at home. But I noticed that those whom I met were not overcome by the humidity. Their coat collars were turned up, their hands in their pockets, their lips blue, their noses red with cold, and in some instances the tears started from their eyes as they have from mine on a cold day. A man said to me that this "cold snap" was the backbone of the winter, and would be broken in a few days. The Californians boast more or less about their mild climate. I don't know what they would say if they were to find out that it is a good deal milder than they think it is.

Another thing a stranger may notice is the excellence and cheapness of San Francisco restaurants. A "table d'hôte" dinner, with salad, soup, fish, roast, dessert, coffee, claret, and cogniac, all plentiful and good, for twenty-five cents, is more than he would expect elsewhere, but here it is common.

Still further, the New Yorker will be surprised at the trustfulness of the San Francisco merchants and tradespeople. A day or two after I came, desiring some of the city papers regularly, I dropped notes to three, asking them to deliver their journals daily. These papers have been promptly thrust through the hole in the door of the office daily ever since, and no questions asked. The offer of payment in advance was declined at the office of one of them. A painter was engaged to do some sign lettering, which he did at once, but a week elapsed before we saw him or his bill. The paper to print FREETHOUGHT on has been trustingly delivered at the printers; the bill awaits presentation. The binder folded, cut, and stitched an edition with no further inquiry than whom the work should be charged to. But Mr. A. H. Schou, of Oakland, outdid all these. He worked half a day putting up some book shelves, and not only would take nothing for his services, but insists upon paying his subscription to FREETHOUGHT I am quite overcome.

I suppose I might tell New Yorkers, without being believed by them, that their finest residences—the Stewart mansion and the Vanderbilt houses—are mere huts compared with some of the palaces that San Francisco's wealthy citizens live in, yet such a statement would be pretty near the truth. The public and mercantile buildings fall behind those of the East, but in beating San Francisco in this respect, New York also beats the world.

I have not seen in this city as yet any specimen of the genus "tough." No doubt he exists here, but he is not overwhelmingly numerous. The reason San Francisco is less cursed with him than Eastern cities are, is that he is generally a foreign-American, whose parents landed at Castle Garden, and he hasn't been able to get as far west as this coast. But the Chinaman is here, and an unwholesome and unhealthy looking un-American citizen he is, with his ugly visage, his outlandish dress, and his queue that makes him look like nothing else so much as like a rat with a misplaced tail. Besides the Chinaman, we have also the "bum," the genuine, inimitable bum, who has lost everything but his dignity and the hope that sometime he will be able to brace up and be somebody.

I might also mention, as odd to me, the total absence here of one and two cent coins and the scarcity of paper money. I have seen no bills besides those we brought here. Nothing but gold and silver, barring the five-cent nickel. Up in New England in my boyhood I learned that a certain sum of money was four and sixpence. Later I heard it called three-quarters of a dollar. Then it was seventy-five cents. Now it is six bits. A bit is a York shilling or a New England ninepence.

In New York the wealthy citizen is envied because he can afford to burn soft coal. In San Francisco the wealthy citizen is envied because he can afford to burn hard coal. The philosophy of this lies somewhere. When found, make a note of it.

With the exceptions indicated I cannot see that the West differs in any great degree from the East. I believe that from the Atlantic to the Pacific we are one people. Long live the Union!

THE DEED OF AN ORTHODOX DASTARD.

The Rev. Bird Wilkins, for twelve years pastor of the Bethesda Methodist church, Chicago, has for months past been unable to harmonize the promptings of his reason with the requirements of the theology of his denomination, and being an advanced thinker and cultivated gentleman, has refrained from doing violence to his conscience by compromising his convictions. His sermons or lectures have for some time back been quite undenominational; in fact, the flavor of orthodoxy was conspicuous by its absence. These were relished by the intelligent portion of his colored congregation, among whom are many persons of education and means.

In September or October, Mr. Wilkins gave a radical discourse on the condemned Anarchists, comparing the agitation of such social reformers to the work which Christ attempted to inaugurate. The preacher conclusively proved the communistic character of Christ's teaching. It was a remarkable discourse, being copied largely in the daily press, and creating quite a sensation. That sermon was the culminating point, and shortly after Mr. Wilkins resigned his pastorate, cut adrift from orthodox moorings, avowed himself a Freethinker, and took the influential portion of his flock with him.

The ex-reverend, during December, paid a visit to the Chicago Secular Union the night of Professor Orchardson's stinging sarcasm on the "Immorality of Christian Teachers," and being invited to criticize, announced to the audience that he was neither shocked nor surprised, and had been giving expression to similar sentiments. This astounded his auditors, and they gave the new apostle of mental freedom a hearty welcome.

A few days later Mr. Wilkins called on the writer in exuberant spirits, and exhibited a paper sent him by several gentlemen admirers, who subscribed $100 each for the erection of a Liberal temple for an anti-slavery-of-the-mind society among his race.

Mr. Wilkins had been holding independent meetings, where portions of Ingersoll's works were taken as texts, read, and discussed by his audience in a hall hired for the purpose at 2906 State street. He has received numerous threatening letters, warning him to discontinue his unorthodox ministrations, or dire consequences would follow, to which, however, he paid no attention. Last Sunday evening, while conducting services at the above number, he was informed that his house was on fire, and on arriving at his residence, 2910 Dearborn street, found his home practically ruined and his furniture destroyed. Surmising that it might be the work of an enemy, but having no proofs, Mr. Wilkins said nothing about the matter, but on Thursday was the recipient of the following letter:

CITY, Jan. 5.—Mr. Wilkins: We have warned you that you cannot preach against orthodox religion. We believe you are teaching a religion from the devil, and we set your house afire in three places, but it burned only in one. We will kill you before you shall hurt us with your new religion. Our white orthodox churches tell us to run you out of this town, and you have got to go. If you stay, it will be at the risk of your life. We tell you in time. This is our last warning. We don't want to hurt you, but you must leave this place. Now get out as quick as you can.
AN ORTHODOX.

Mr. Wilkins proposes to hold the fort, despite the fire fiends, and if the police and fire inspector cannot protect him, he will be prepared to give his "orthodox" disturbers a foretaste of the place they have "prepared for the devil and his angels."

The God Idea at the Bottom of It.

A man named Sutton, who murdered a neighbor in cold blood, and was hanged at Oakland, gave the following as his confession of faith. He was a strictly logical Deist:

"I used to attend the Methodist church. My mother was a Presbyterian. I have not attended church for seventeen years. I believe in a deity. I never pray. My idea is that the deity controls my every action. I do not believe that any man has a will power independent of that deity. I believe that no man can act in any way except the way he does act. I believe that every act of mine was pre-arranged and foreordained, and that it is not possible for me to do different from what is provided by the deity.

"I have no regrets for the past, no fears for the future. I am certain that I never act by reason or judgment, but wholly by the control of the deity. Cannot tell how I am influenced, but am wholly under this power. It comes upon me all of a sudden. I do not believe in future punishment. I cannot act so as to offend the deity. I believe that a path is laid out for every man from birth to death, and that it is impossible for him to depart from it.

"The deity controls every action, good or bad. If one man is killed by another, it is the will of the deity. If a man is run over by the cars, it was ordained to be so. I believe that every act of my life is pre-arranged."

The Great Telescope.

Concerning the Lick telescope R. S. Floyd, writing from Mount Hamilton under recent date, says: "We have a beautiful night and are now observing. Just had a look at Rigel, splendid! and at Orion, very fine! We have the glasses now in two of the finders, but they are not yet adjusted to parallelism with the big telescope. The big telescope works well, I can safely say, excellently. But there is a world of nice adjustments to be made before we can get it in the shape that will do it justice." Captain Floyd writes further under the date of Sunday, Jan. 8, 8:30 P. M.: "We had a magnificent view of Saturn last night. The definition was exquisite, and it had the silvery brightness of the moon. We have this moment been looking at Neptune. There is no doubt but what we have the most powerful optical instrument in the world."

Home Song.

Stay, stay at home, my heart, and rest;
Home-keeping hearts are happiest;
For those that wander they know not where
Are full of trouble and full of care.
To stay at home is best.

Weary, and homesick, and distressed,
They wander east and they wander west,
And are baffled and beaten and blown about
By the winds of the wilderness of doubt.
To stay at home is best.

Then stay at home, my heart, and rest;
The bird is safest in its nest.
O'er all that flutter their wings and fly
A hawk is hovering in the sky.
To stay at home is best.

—Longfellow.

The Good Child.

"I love you, mother," said Little John;
Then, forgetting his work, his cap went on,
And he was off to the garden swing,
And left her the water and the wood to bring.

"I love you, mother," said rosy Nell;
"I love you better than tongue can tell."
Then she teased and pouted full half the day,
Till her mother rejoiced when she went to play.

"I love you, mother," said little Fan;
To-day I'll help you all I can;
How glad I am there's no school to-day!"
So she rocked the babe till asleep it lay.

Then, stepping softly, she fetched the broom,
And swept the floor and tidied the room;
Busy and happy all day was she,
Hopeful and happy as child could be.

"I love you, mother," again they said—
Three little children going to bed.
How do you think that mother guessed
Which of them really loved her best?

Some School Statistics.

The total school population in the United States, according to the latest reports, is 16,510,463; but of this vast number not above 7,000,000 are kept in school on an average throughout the entire school year. We pay out for our public schools almost $105,000,000 annually, the largest sum, $11,834,912, being paid by New York, though Illinois, Pennsylvania, and Ohio come close after, with almost $10,000,000 each. There are 365 collegiate institutions in this country, attended annually by 34,377 students. In college libraries there are 2,956,528 volumes, and the total value of all grounds and buildings of the institutions for higher education reaches $48,479,200.

A Profane Suggestion.

Mr. Blaine wants to keep up the tax on whisky because it promotes temperance. Colonel Ingersoll, on the contrary, thinks that if the Mississippi river should flow with free whisky there would be no more intemperance than now. The Prohibitionists are inclined to disagree with Mr. Blaine, but if they should find the Mississippi river flowing with whisky they would be sure to dam it.—Burr, in Truth Seeker.

The Good Missionary.

"Did I understand you to say that you had had considerable experience with the Indians in the West?" inquired a man on an Eastern train of a tall stranger.

"Yes; I suppose I have."

"What do you consider the outlook for their civilization?"

"Poor; very poor. They don't seem to learn anything. Why, sir, only last week I traded one of the most intelligent of them an old horse, blind in both eyes and all crippled up generally, for two good ponies, and he never knew he was cheated. I can't understand why it is the Indian don't improve more."

"Well that looks bad for them, sure enough. I suppose you have a ranch near one of their reservations?"

"Oh, no; I'm no rancher," replied the stranger, as he threw his leg over the arm of the seat; "no, I'm a missionary. I was sent out by the William Penn Missionary Society of Philadelphia, and have been laboring among the red brethren for the last twenty years."

A Cautious Official.

"Is your husband a Christian?" asked the minister. "I don't think so. He won't join the church." "That is very sad. Does he give any reason for staying out of the folds?" "Yes; he's an official in the bank, and he says he can't afford to risk his reputation."

Was Moses or James the Prevaricator?

And it came to pass after these things that God did tempt Abraham.—Gen. xxii, 1.

Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God; for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man.—Jas. i, 13.

It seems that the Protestant religion is making headway in Russia, and, because of this fact, the Catholic church is much disturbed and thinks something should be done to check it. The Journal Religieux says: "The holy synod has ordered inquiry to be made as to the progress of heresy in south Russian provinces, from which it appears that Protestantism is rapidly increasing, and that it will be necessary to take severe measures to put a stop to it." The Russian ideal is the same as that so disastrously followed by Louis XVI. Every one must be of the same religion as the czar. To think otherwise is treasonable. Thus, in religious matters, Russia is two centuries behind the rest of Europe."

An idea of the immensity of our nation's financial operations may be gained from the following report for December: "Receipts of the government from all sources during the month are $29,325,285, and expenditures $10,400,682, leaving a net gain of receipts over expenditures $18,924,603. Out of this net gain must be paid about $3,500,000 for interest upon the public debt, which will leave the actual surplus for December $15,424,603. The public debt was also reduced during the month to the amount of $15,250,000, and for the entire calendar year of 1887 the debt was diminished $1,117,016,000."

RELIGIOUS BULLETIN.—The Rev. Mr. Heller, who jumped through the window of a disreputable house in Chinatown, has also jumped the city.—Bishop Bamberger, of the Mennonite church, Lancaster, Pa., is convicted and disfellowshipped for ministerial conduct. Name of woman concealed.—The Rev. Chas. Herr, Jersey City, N. J., implicated in stock gambling operations.—The Rev. John Lowther, Wighton, Eng., summoned to answer the charge of a servant girl, blows out his brains.—The Rev. Joseph Cook is still at large.

GOVERNOR FORAKER says in his message: "Next after God it is our duty to take care of America." This is delicious. The idea of the Governor of Ohio taking care of Deity is a museum idea that ought to be stuffed.—Alta.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Strong Lift.—From the East, Too.

FRIEND PUTNAM: I approve of your plan, and my heart is in the cause of Freethought. I wish you success in your undertaking, and, in order to do something to insure your success, I inclose a postal order for $50.

PHOTIUS FISK.

Boston, Mass., Jan. 6, 1888.

Welcome.

FRIEND PUTNAM: Welcome to the Pacific Coast, and may success crown your labors. Send the paper, and I will try to get more subscribers for you. Yours,

JUL N. RODENBURG.

Prescott, Arizona, Jan. 11, 1888.

Working for the Near Future.

FRIEND PUTNAM & Co.: Sample copy received. I am trying to get more subscribers before sending my own name. I am delighted to know that you and friend George have come among us to stay. Yours, T. J. CONLEY.

Visalia, Cal., Jan. 14, 1888.

A Valued Subscriber.

MR. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: Received your paper and was quite surprised to hear that you are in San Francisco. I wish you success in your enterprise, and will take FREETHOUGHT for the next year.

Yours truly, ED. WEGNER.

Sonoma, Cal., Jan. 13, 1888.

From Dr. York.

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: I wish your paper well, as we need a journal on this coast to do honest and faithful work in our noble cause. I am glad that you and Brother Mac are here for work and to stay. The field is large and ripe. Sincerely yours for right and truth,

DR. J. L. YORK.

San Francisco, Jan. 14, 1888.

Short, and Direct to the Point.

DEAR MR. PUTNAM: I was somewhat surprised to hear from you in San Francisco. However, here's luck to you. Please send FREETHOUGHT to the six subscribers whose names I inclose, and also to your humble servant, for one year. "Nuff sedd." J. A. WILLIAMS.

Park City, Utah, Jan. 12, 1888.

May It Increase.

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: I am glad to learn of your and G. E. Macdonald's advent to this field of labor. As large oaks from little acorns grow, so may the acorn of FREETHOUGHT increase and grow to a great tree with roots, and branches full of ripe and golden fruit and leaves for the healing of nations and peoples.

Messina, Cal., Jan. 11, 1888. N. W.

Held in Kind Remembrance.

FRIEND PUTNAM: I am greatly pleased with your paper. You will find a grand field for work on this coast, and I trust for you abundant success and prosperity. I cannot write more in this letter, being anxious to send my subscription at once. We need your paper—must have it. I will not forget you in my dreams or realities.

Yours, A. N. BURGESS.

National City, Cal., Jan. 10, 1888.

A Good Constituent From Utah.

DEAR MR. PUTNAM: FREETHOUGHT is at hand. I now take a dozen papers, but I must also have yours, for I know you and George (pardon the familiarity; I've been with him in New England and other places so much I feel acquainted) will make a spicy journal. I have just opened FREETHOUGHT and been "Across the Continent" with you, and—well, I want the next chapter. The inclosed will secure me a berth on the new boat. With best wishes I am, as ever, WM. REYNOLDS.

Wanship, Utah, Jan. 10, 1888.

Best Wishes.

MR. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: Thank you for the paper. I will do all I can to help it along, as it is so much needed. I wish you the greatest success. A near neighbor of mine says he will take the first copy, and continue taking the paper as long as he lives; and it will be the first Liberal paper he ever took. Your paper is good for the first. We are very glad you are coming here, and wish we could have a lecture every month. We will have three or four, any way, if you come before harvest begins.

With best wishes for you and your partner, A. K. OLDS.

McMinnville, Or., Jan. 11, 1888.

Its Style is Pleasing.

DEAR FRIENDS: I received a copy of FREETHOUGHT. I like its style and type; in fact, I think the journal is gotten up in good shape. I feel more than pleased at your undertaking, and I wish you all the prosperity one true Liberal can wish another. I am at present doing all I can for Dr. York and C. B. Reynolds, waking up the sleepy Liberals. You may depend upon it I shall do all I can for FREETHOUGHT.

Of course Brother George will want his annual visit to New England; and only think what a treat the boys will have, as the letters about his trip will be continued every week for at least six months. You will hear from me again. Yours, H. S. BROOKS.

Spanish Fork, Utah, Jan. 12, 1888.

Good Cheer.

S. PUTNAM, Esq., Dear Sir: I am glad to hear from you and to know that you have made up your mind to settle in this Golden state of ours. I hope you will do well in your new undertaking. A good Freethought paper is what we require on this side of the continent, and I believe you will make such a one. Your first number is all that could be expected. I send a few names of those I think will be likely to take your paper. Give my best respects to George. I think he will help you wonderfully. He seems like an old friend, as you did before I saw you. I have read all his letters published in the Truth Seeker. I shall certainly call on you both. Of course I want FREETHOUGHT. Very truly yours,

N. D. GOODELL.

Sacramento, Jan. 14, 1888.

Vice-President Smith

DEAR PUTNAM: I am glad to hear from you, and wish you the highest success. I'll subscribe. I am obliged for the honor conferred on me by making me a vice-president of the Secular Union. I hope you can sometime visit us again; wish I could do more for the cause, but am too busy. I love all the brave fellows who give their lives to the work; yet, my dear Putnam, as I look at the matter, it will take many years to leaven the lump, for most people appear to be but lumps of animated clay with one idea, crooked in youth, which all the levers of learning and science cannot afterward straighten. Good-bye. D. W. SMITH.

Port Townsend, W. T., Jan. 11, 1888.

From San Jose Workers.

TO THE PUBLISHERS OF FREETHOUGHT: Find inclosed $2 for one year's subscription to your paper. You have my best wishes for your success. I have every reason to believe you true and sincere in the work you are engaged in, namely, Freethought, the grandest work ever to be achieved by mankind. It employs all the noblest qualities the human race is endowed with. Liberalism demands of one and all who count themselves in to labor unceasingly for liberty, the birthright of man. It calls for human advancement in all its various forms and phases, and stands for human happiness here and now and for all time. Give us knowledge, the only true guide to light and liberty.

I consider it the duty of all worthy the name of Freethinkers to do all they can for our leaders and champions, who devote their entire abilities and time to the cause we all should hold dear. All the remuneration I desire is for our leaders to prove worthy of the grand principles involved in the work before us. When Freethought duties call, always count me in. Your friend, R. H. SCHWARTZ.

MR. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: Although engaged in an important work, I cannot refrain from stopping to welcome you and your bright little sheet to the Pacific Coast. It sparkles with gems of thought, and all Freethinkers should hail its advent with joy, and (as my husband has done) subscribe for it without delay. Our enemies are diligently at work. Let us support a sheet through which we may make our views known; through which we may defend ourselves—a sheet that will use its every effort to emancipate our people from mental slavery by encouraging freedom of thought, and expression of that thought, which will result in "Universal Mental Liberty."

I have made up my mind that the birthday of that grand man, Thomas Paine, shall be celebrated in San Jose, and I am now busily engaged in preparing an address. We hope to make it a success. If your partner is as energetic and preserving as yourself, success must crown your efforts, for I do not believe the Liberals of this coast will allow such a paper to go to the wall for lack of support.

Fraternally yours, MRS. R. H. SCHWARTZ.
San Jose, Cal., Jan. 13, 1888.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JANUARY 28, 1888

TEN saints were canonized at St. Peter's, in Rome, on the 14th at an expense of $50,000. These canons are nearly as expensive as Krupp's, and they are of much smaller calibre.

IN these times of bakers' strikes it is little less than mockery for the minister to repeat that part of the Lord's prayer which says: "Give us this day our daily bread." The wind is not in the right quarter for that kind of a shower.

TALMAGE is chaplain of the Thirteenth New York regiment. It is thought that men who can stand unmoved before the mouth of the Rev. Mr. Talmage will not be terrified by any other large bore they may be called upon to confront.

THE life of the Rev. Henry Melville, of Halifax, has been subject to permutations. He has been married, deserted his wife, gone on sprees, betrayed a young lady, and been shot at. He now only needs to be vindicated to have filled the full measure of a pastor's life.

THE Presbyterian church will celebrate its centennial by raising $1,000,000 to support superannuated pastors. If a portion of the fund should be devoted to inducing some ministers now in active service to keep quiet for a while, great good might be expected as a result.

THE example of Henry Ostrum, a Swede of Princeton, Minn., is not one which should be emulated. Fearful that his wife and seven children would freeze, he cut off their heads with an axe, to save their lives, as he explained it. Now that it has been pointed out that they are quite as dead as though they had frozen to death, Mr. Ostrum admits that killing them was perhaps mistaken kindness.

THE editor of the Golden Gate is dissatisfied with his present editorial quarters, and inquires; "Is it an impression we get from the spirit world, or a mere imagination, that we are to have a better office ere long?" When Brother Owen has found the location he desires, it will be in order for the landlord to receive an impression that the rent is paid for a year in advance. There will then be no reason why Golden Gate should not move in at once.

A LETTER FROM COLONEL INGERSOLL.

NEW YORK, January 14, 1888.

MY DEAR PUTNAM: I have just read the first number of FREETHOUGHT. I like the paper and the name, and I wish you the greatest possible success. There is room on the Pacific Coast for such a paper. The Liberals of that great country are liberal indeed. They will welcome and support a good, free, manly paper, devoted to the extermination of parasites, to the destruction of vampires and all the monsters of superstition. They will recognize good, honest, faithful work, and will stand by the men who will stand by what they believe to be the truth. The people of the West believe in Intellectual Hospitality. They will echo your noble sentiment: "Freethought is the mighty providence of the human race."

You have made a good beginning, and in my judgment success is certain.

You have my best wishes—you and Macdonald—and so I say, Good Luck!

And good-bye. Yours always,

ROBT. G. INGERSOLL.

HOLY HYPOCRISY.

When the orthodox clergy can no longer play the lion, they know very well how to play the fox. This is illustrated by the action of the preachers of California who met a while ago for the purpose of re-enacting the Sabbath laws in this state. The convention originated in the Pastors' Union of Sacramento, it being "the sense of the Pastors' Union of Sacramento that a meeting of the pastors and members of the churches of the state, and of all other friends of Sunday legislation in the state, should be called to secure the passage of a Sunday law."

"The most notable thing about the convention," says the American Sentinel, "was the perfect confusion of ideas as to what was really wanted. With some, nothing but a Sunday law would do; with others, nothing but a Sabbath law would answer. With some, it must be a civil Sabbath law; with others, a religious Sabbath law. With some, it must be a civil Sunday law; with others, a religious Sunday law. With some, it was a Christian Sunday that was wanted; with others, a Christian Sabbath. With some it was a religious Sabbath law that was wanted, and a religious Sabbath law that must be had, and they were ready to go to the legislature upon that basis; but these were very few. While with others, and these the great majority, it was a religious Sunday law or a religious Sabbath law that was wanted, but at the same time it was naively argued that to go to the legislature with such a request would be all in vain, for the legislature would not act upon any question of a religious nature; therefore, to get what they wanted, they must ask only for a civil Sunday law."

The point is this: These clerical mountebanks want a religious law passed by the legislature; but they conceal their design under the phraseology of asking for a civil law. The constitution forbids any religious enactment. But the clergy, while they apparently regard the letter of the constitution, seek to destroy its spirit. They ask the legislature to pass a civil Sunday law, and under cover of this they will enforce the religious observance of the day. This point is being made everywhere by ecclesiastical politicians. They do not give up their purpose to enslave the people by Sabbath legislation; but they disclaim this intent, and with smooth words, especially to the laboring man, appeal for a civil law. They say there should be a day of rest, one day in seven, and they want their Sabbath made that day of rest by statute; that is, they want their Sabbath forced upon the community as a day of rest. This is a manifest injustice, and contrary to the constitution, for the Jews do not want the "Christian Sabbath" for their day of rest, and the Adventists and some other Christians prefer Saturday instead of Sunday for the "rest-day." To compel them to forego their own choice, and take Sunday as a day of rest, is simply ecclesiastical tyranny.

A civil Sunday law is in its very nature a religious Sunday law. If a day of rest is needed, every man can choose that day for himself, as he can choose his own hours of sleep. As well legislate as to the time a man must lie in bed as to legislate in regard to a day of rest. This is an individual affair, and there can be no just legislation concerning it.

The clergy understand this, that Sunday legislation of any kind is beyond the power of the civil authorities. But they hope to deceive the people. They pretend one thing and they mean another. They wear the secular garb, but beneath it is the sword of churchly persecution. It is perfectly apparent to every right-minded citizen that a day of rest should be voluntarily selected, and not forced upon the people. To do this is the despotism of theology.

We should be on our guard, for we are dealing with a mass of hypocrisy. The clergy do not dare to meet us on a square issue. They desire to inveigle the people into a species of legislation which is contrary to their spirit and to the constitution. They know they cannot get a religious or Christian law, and so they change the name, and with the title of civil law seek to introduce religious and Christian edicts. This is probably what they would denominate lying for the glory of God. As Paul was all things to all men, so the clergy of to day are the same; but in every aspect, whether "civil" or "religious," it is the wolf of theology that glares.

PAINE'S birthday will be observed at Stockton by a meeting at the Avon Theater Sunday evening.

BISHOP AND CLERGY DON'T AGREE.

A secular Bishop runs the electric motor road of San Jose. Seeing that the Lord doesn't help him, the Bishop has resolved to work on Sunday. He adopts the principle of Jesus—the Sabbath is for man. To the reporter the Bishop said: "We are working all the men that can be used effectively, and to further expedite matters have decided to gain a day by keeping the full force of men at work to-morrow (Sunday). I hate to do it, but it seems like a case of necessity. The worst feature of it is that the work which is most pressing now is directly in front of the church, on Ninth street. Some of the men demurred a little to working in front of a church on Sunday, but I told them they couldn't be held accountable when they were doing so at the request of a Bishop."

The clergy resist the Bishop, and at the Pastors' Union of San Jose the following resolutions were unanimously passed:

Resolved, That we, the ministers of the Pastors' Union, in deference to the Christian sentiment of our city, most earnestly request Messrs. Bishop and Rich, proprietors of the electric railroad, to desist from further desecration of the Sabbath day by permitting work on the said electric road during the hours of that day; and further be it

Resolved, That copies of the above, signed by the president and secretary, be transmitted to Messrs. Bishop and Rich, and published in the daily papers.

We hope the good Bishop will pursue the even tenor of his way. Such bishops are rare nowadays, but they do excellent service.

MARTYRDOM IN THE REPUBLIC OF TO-DAY.

In another column will be found a vivid story of the sufferings lately endured by those who conscientiously refused to obey the Sabbath laws of Arkansas. It is well to put this on record in FREETHOUGHT, to realize the hideous barbarity of that religion which is endeavoring to make itself the supreme law of the land. It reads like a tale of the Middle Ages—these persecutions under the flag of our republic. This is the legitimate result of Sabbath legislation. It is outrage—it is murder—it is the torture of the Spanish Inquisition. Read that story, and see the danger that lurks like a wild beast in the bigotry of the popular faith. Is there nothing to do, when such infinite cruelty is inflicted even upon the dissenting Bible believer? We stand for the rights of all, of the Liberal and of the Christian, of every American citizen, of every man, woman and child. Scarcely a year has passed since these atrocities were perpetrated in the name of religion and for the maintenance of the Holy Sabbath. We cannot be indifferent to these elements of savagery which the Christian church carries in its bosom, and with which it desolates homes even now; and the flag of the free is no defense against its brutal force.

WE have received a private letter from the editor of the New York Truth Seeker, in which, speaking of the weather, the writer says: "It is colder than hell—much colder." We trust we violate no confidence in laying the above before our readers.

FREETHOUGHT is as yet but an infant, though we feel justified in observing that it is a promising one. It has not attained its full stature, but will take on a larger size as circumstances may admit. Its growth, of course, will depend upon the amount of nourishment it receives from those who adopt it. In the presence of the uncertain, it is always advisable to proceed with caution.

On another page will be found a programme of the Paine Anniversary meeting to be held in this city on Sunday evening next at Irving Hall, 139 Post street. It is hoped that every friend of Freethought will be present and urge others to come, that this may be a memorable occasion. The exercises will be interesting, but the chief influence of such a celebration is in the numbers who attend, who thus show their appreciation of his services whose whole life was devoted to reform and progress, and who was one of the Fathers of the Republic. Rain or shine Irving Hall should be crowded on Sunday evening. Once a year at least every Liberal should show his true colors, and stand up and be counted for liberty and justice.

ELEVEN subscriptions to FREETHOUGHT come to us from Silverton, Oregon. This is the banner town yet. Summer and winter it weathers the storm and greets the sunshine. A beautiful Freethought hall has been built there, and a gala day it was when from all the surrounding country Liberals gathered to consecrate this temple of humanity to liberty, justice, and the progress of man—a long-to-be-remember occasion—a bright land-mark in the Freethought history of the Pacific Coast. In other places these homes of science and reform should spring up, for the way to destroy ignorance is by the rays of truth.

The President of the American Secular Union expects to be at Silverton June next, and at Stayton, Molalla, Salem, Portland, McMinnville, Eagle Creek and other places in that section during June and July. The campaign will also be continued in Coos county and Rogue River Valley, the last of May and first of June. Our forces will be more fully organized, and this year will see another great gain for Liberal ideas. Let the friends of Secular Reform be ready all along the line.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK,

The crown prince of Germany may recover from his alleged cancer.—President Garfield's mother is dead.—The Anti-Poverty Society, New York, has given Miss Munier, the choir leader, a benefit, and abolished $1500 worth of poverty.—A Swede at Princeton, Minn., chopped off the heads of his wife and seven children. He is insane.—In the providence of God, an $80,000 church was burnt last week in Minneapolis.—The Rev. C. D. Barrows (Congregationalist), of this city, repudiates the doctrine of eternal punishment hereafter.—The deadly blizzard in the north has strewn its path with frozen corpses. The doctrine that God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb remains to be denied by any but Infidels.—Ex-President Grevy, of France, has suffered a stroke of apoplexy.—President Cleveland's present to the pope was handed in with a carload of other gifts, so that his holiness may thank the donors all at once and thus avoid fatigue.—The primate of the church of Ireland asks Professor Galbraith to resign from the church on account of his connection with the National League. Galbraith expresses himself as grieved.—The Irish people get cold comfort from the pope, who expects the bishops and priests to use their influence to induce the people to submit to the reigning powers.—W. K. Vanderbilt is in Egypt, taking a trip up the Nile.—Six trains full of Eastern excursionists passed through Tucson, Arizona, on the 16th, bound for California.—A Los Angeles woman has secluded herself and held no communication outside her own room for eight years in order to develop as a spiritual medium and hold communion with her departed husband.—The Washington territory legislature has re-enacted the woman suffrage law, and the governor has signed it.—In New York

Sunday evening the police raided several Chinese gambling dens and captured in one a complete fantan outfit and a book of Bible quotations entitled "Daily Food," which had been presented by a white lady to the Chinese.—Cleveland has issued a scorching report on the Pacific railroads; he wants them to pay their debts to the government.—Several teachers have been dismissed from the Sunday-school of Spurgeon, the London Talmage, because they declined to teach everlasting damnation. Spurgeon's resignation from the Baptist Union has been accepted.—Eight hundred and eighty-seven Nihilists were arrested in one night at St. Petersburg, Russia.—The New York legislative committee on capital punishment report in favor of electricity as the most humane and practical method of effecting the decease of criminals.—The labor difficulties in Eastern mines have sent the price of coal up to $8 per ton.—A Chinaman of this city has been consigned to the lunatic asylum. His delusion is that a great fire is raging in his stomach. It is recommended that he be taken to a prohibition state.—A constitutional prohibition amendment has passed the Massachusetts legislature, 25 to 8.—A New York Methodist church secured a troupe of female minstrels to give an entertainment, which proved to be so immoral that many of the audience ran away. How the morals of the minstrels fared is not mentioned in the dispatches.—John Swinton, the Labor writer and orator, has been very sick with erysipelas.—The Committee on Foreign Affairs at Washington took up the Chinese question several times last week, and passed it down to a sub-committee. It appeared that President Cleveland is favorable to the Chinese.—The bakers' and cooks and waiters' strike has developed into a lockout.—Editor O'Brien of United Ireland is out of jail, having served out his time in Tullamore jail for indulging in the luxury of free speech.—In the week ending Jan. 20, there were 173 deaths in this city—only six from small-pox.—Joseph Pulitzer, of the New York World, is in Pasadena, Cal. He will find this country good for sore eyes.—A Socialist meeting was suppressed by the London police last Sunday and two of the leaders arrested.—Stockton churches have been burglarized and robbed of wine and coin by a wooden-legged thief.—The secretary of the Iron Moulders' Union absconded with $1100.—The Rev. Father Franchi, of this city, has caused the arrest for libel of a man who said that he (Franchi) refused to christen a child without payment in advance.—A Salvation Army man in Vermont stabbed his seven-year-old daughter with a jack-knife, trampled his ten-year-old son seriously, and then adjourned to a hallelujah in the street.—Cases of small-pox are decreasing in number.—Cardinal Manning has written to the pope that any outspoken opposition to Gladstone on the part of the Vatican would produce among Irish and English Catholics dissatisfaction that would lead to serious results.—George A. Meigs, New York, committed suicide on the 23d; a victim of "Christian science."—Members of the G. A. R. were arrested for parading in New York last Sunday.—Judge Bacon of the Massachusetts Superior Court has decided that spiritual mediums do not obtain money by "trick or device."—The St. Andrew Society celebrated the 129th anniversary of the birth of Robert Burns Wednesday evening.—Louise Michel, the female Socialist agitator, was shot while addressing a meeting last Sunday. The wound is not serious.

THE Klickitat Society, Goldendale, W. T., puts forth the following ringing platform: "For the promotion of truth, honor, purity, benevolence, and freedom. Truth as the highest revelation of science and philosophy. Honesty in all things. Purity of life and character. Benevolence in all actions of community interest. Free thought, free speech, and free press. We protest against all bigotry, party prejudice, clerical domination, and religious persecutions. We prescribe no limit to investigation, we require no confession of faith, but leave every one free to believe what to them seems right, requiring only that their morals be good and their lives pure."

THE EVANGELIST ELEVATOR.

The Chicago Tribune has undergone a series of tribulations recently, owing to the increased indifference to its requirements on the part of its autocrat of the elevator. Notwithstanding that the managers have tried everything but a Chinaman, their troubles have not ceased, and this story relates to the last artist who manipulates their passenger elevator. The president of the Young Men's Christian Association concluded that he could supply the much desired artist, and the management sent for him with a Macedonian cry to "come over and help us." Next morning a young man of solemn visage was in charge, and as he neither whistled nor danced jigs for the first week, the Tribune Company concluded they had found a treasure. After he got the run of the people who rode with him, the veil was ruthlessly rent in twain. He was a practical Christian, and tract distributing was his mania and his delight. He stowed several bales of evangelical ammunition under the seats, and began operations. Of course, with instinctive penetration, he selected for his first grand attack the hoary-headed sinner who presides over the editorial destinies of the Tribune, old Joe Medill, and handed him a tract entitled, "Listen to the still small voice." Now, it so happens that old Joe is so deaf that a still small voice wouldn't have the slightest impression, and he considered this a great personal affront, as he doesn't like to be reminded of his infirmities, and a gilt-edged explanation was made to order before the veteran journalist's angry passions were soothed.

Manager Patterson's well-known weakness is for fast trotters. He takes a spin every morning behind his Kentucky-bred geldings, and is a man of the world. This our soul-saver observed, and as Patterson entered the elevator he was the recipient of a tract with a flaming head-line, "Galloping to Hell." Patterson was not won from his wickedness, neither was he alarmed, but in language more expressive than polite he informed the young gentleman that his evangelizing efforts were entirely misplaced, and if he'd only gallop the elevator up and down in a lively manner that was all they would require, and they would look out for their future state themselves. This would have discouraged any but a true soldier of the cross, and our valiant evangelist, after a little prayerful meditation, during which he mixed up the occupants of the building in a fearful and wonderful manner, felt that his heavenly father's work—calling sinners to repentance—must be done. For twenty-five years the urbane Upton has been the Trib's musical critic, so the sins he has to answer for surely need sincere repentance. With fine discrimination the young man of the tract-distributing mania selected "Don't listen to the Siren's Song." The title was enough for Geo. P., for he immediately indulged in his customary dissertation: "That's right. The idea that sirens could sing well is bosh—exploded long ago. It was their beauty of person and grace of manner that enthralled men. How could they sing well? They had no tonic sol fa system, no conservatory. All stuff," and the musical critic stepped from the elevator with the satisfied smile of a man who has corrected a grave and erroneous impression. This almost knocked out the ardent elevator artist, but he hummed, "Do not be discouraged, for Jesus is your friend," and some one heard a refrain, "He will guide you to the end." Along in the afternoon he plucked up courage and intuitively felt the necessity of making an effort to stop Gallagher's mad career. T. J. Gallagher is the Tribune's sporting man, and is no novice with the billiard cue, and when he received an abbreviated narrative on "The Devil's Balk Line," it elicited his earnest attention and the unholy exclamation: "Rats! Balk-line is n. g. Too many frills on billiards. What we want is good, old-fashioned four-ball carom, where you can play a game of seven-up while your opponent is making a run," and he returned the tract to the disconsolate distributor.

When the elevator adjutant recovered from his last rebuff, he selected the burly but devout Israelite who does the railroad business, and who, if he is satisfied with anything, it is with the teachings of the Talmud. "Bismarck," as he is best known to the fraternity, accepted in silence, looked at it, grunted, and, getting off the elevator, rushed in to Gallagher, saying:

"Vat you dink! Dem elevator boy give me a Shesus Christ tract, 'Vat I shall do to be saved!'"

"I told him 'Rats,'" said Gallagher.

"Dot's recht, Gallagher, nicht wahr?"

"You bet it was," responded the sporting editor. "When we want any tips about how to reach first base, we'll ask for 'em."

Our zealous follower of the Lamb, discouraged by the slow progress he was making, at last accounts had evoked the other lambs to bleat at the noon-day prayer for the saving of the hardened, wayward, worldly souls of the Tribune staff.

An Old Editor's Benediction.

FREETHOUGHT is the title to a twelve page Liberal journal published at 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, and edited by these well-known advocates of Liberalism, Samuel P. Putnam and G. E. Macdonald. The Freethought cause was much in need of a good paper on the Pacific Coast, and we are sure that that need will now be supplied. Mr. Putnam is president of the American Secular Union, and has acquired a national reputation as a Freethought writer, poet, and orator. Geo. E. Macdonald is a brother of the editor of the Truth Seeker, and has for years past been one of the most interesting contributors to that journal. The two will make a full team, and we predict that the new enterprise will be a success from the start. The price is only $2 per year, and every Liberal on the western coast should at once subscribe, and also every Eastern Liberal who can afford to. We wish FREETHOUGHT abundant success.—H. L. GREEN, in Freethinkers' Magazine.

Regrets and Good Wishes.

Since our intimation that George Macdonald and Samuel P. Putnam had gone to San Francisco to start a Freethought paper, we have received many letters expressing regret at our loss. We assure our friends that we feel as badly as they do; but, then, New York's loss is San Francisco's gain. On another page we print an account of the two adventurers' journey across the continent. They are located at 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, and the title of their paper will be FREETHOUGHT. In the first number our brother promises to print the story which the cowboy insisted upon our covering up with black advertisements of the Annual for 1888 and the "Story Hour." We trust no casualty will result therefrom. We assure Messrs. Putnam and Macdonald that the heartiest good wishes of all Infidel New Yorkers go with them.—Truth Seeker.

Approval by a Hebrew Journal.

FREETHOUGHT is the title of a weekly journal started in this city by Samuel P. Putnam and Geo. E. Macdonald. Numbers one and two give evidence that the new-comer means to locate permanently, and we see no reason why such a weekly should not find support on this coast. The initial copies are quite creditable, and the price certainly moderate, five cents per copy, or two dollars per year. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco.—Jewish Times.

From Away East..

George E. Macdonald, formerly of Westmoreland, who has made a reputation as a clear thinker and forcible writer on the staff of the New York Truth Seeker, of which his brother, E. M., is editor, has become editor of FREETHOUGHT, a weekly journal published at San Francisco. Mr. Macdonald has many friends in this vicinity who will wish him abundant success in the Golden state.—New England Observer, Keene, N. H.

OUR friend A. H. Schou is a lover of art and music. His home in Oakland is decorated with paintings, some of which are superb representations of California scenery. In response to a cordial invitation we traveled through the mist and rain of Thursday evening last week and found his parlors filled with a jolly company indeed, drawn together by the spirit of "sweet silver sounds." It was the Zither Club of Oakland, to whom our friends Mr. and Mrs. Schou gave the generous entertainment of the evening. Sweet and sprightly is the music of the zither, a rippling river of melody, and when a dozen skilful players put their fingers together on the wires, the harmony is exceedingly fascinating. Very few cities can boast of a zither club. It is something new as yet, but Oakland leads in the matter. Fred H. Maar, Miss C. Schaefer, Miss Laura Haelke, Miss Clara Haelke, Richard Harms, D. V. Gelder, G. A. W. Folker, are members of the club. Their selections were finely rendered, and the applause was cordial. Miss Laura and Miss Clara Haelke, daughters of our veteran Freethinker, L. H. Haelke, played a brilliant duet which was warmly welcomed. When the happy strains were over the ample feast was spread of the good things of this golden land, and then, the tables being removed, flying feet kept time to the nimble notes, and not until the morning hours did the zither cease its dainty minstrelsy. Among the guests of the evening were Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Broneer and Miss Enna Broneer, Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Haelke and the bright little twins, Theo. Haelke and Albert Haelke; Miss H. W. Blake and Mr. R. O. Schaefer, Mr. and Mrs. Emlay, Mrs. L. Emlay, Mrs. F. Emlay, Miss A. Gaffney, Miss C. Emlay, Mrs. E. C. Farley, and Mr. D. G. Morgan. The occasion is one long to be remembered. Although the zither is committed to no creed, the club and the company present were almost unanimously for Freethought. Some Christians were there, but they were of the genial sort, and there was not a particle of orthodox melancholy among them. A theological student was among the number, and he took it all in, even to the dancing, and there is no doubt that he will be convicted of heresy one of these days. The Zither Club will give a concert at Hamilton Hall, Oakland, in a few weeks, and we bespeak a cordial reception from all lovers of refined and entertaining music.

DR. MCGLYNN in the North American Review: "Only common schools and common charities should be supported by the common treasury. The doctrine of equal taxation should be applied to all corporations, civil and religious, without exemption in favor of any church, charity, or school, or, in a word, of any institution that is not the property of the people, and controlled for some public and common use by public officials."

Concerning this doctrine, the Independent makes the following comment:

"It is the only doctrine that is consistent with justice to all the people, or with the fundamental principles upon which government is organized in this country. If religious sects, whether Catholic or Protestant, choose to establish a system of 'parochial schools,' for the purpose of teaching therein their peculiar religious tenets in connection with secular education, then let them do so at their own charges; but let not a dollar of the public money, raised by taxation, either directly or indirectly, be used for the support of these schools. It is enough for the general public to pay the expenses of the public schools organized by the state, without being saddled with those of private schools for religious propagandism. So, also, in the matter of taxation, there is no good reason why a religious corporation, owning private property which it controls for its own uses, and which is protected by civil society, should be exempt from taxation any more than a bank or railway corporation. Such exemption necessitates a heavier rate of taxation upon other property that is taxed; and it compels the people by law to contribute to the support of churches, and that, too, as really as if an annual appropriation of public funds were made for this purpose. The exemption is unjust on both grounds. Taxation, in order to be equal, should as nearly as possible apply to all private property."

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, President of the American Secular Union, will begin his lecture tour in the month of February. Arrangements are made for lectures at Fresno City, Oleander, Tulare, and other places. Mr. Putnam desires to work mainly in southern California during February and March. It is hoped that friends in San Diego, Del Mar, San Jacinto, Los Angeles, Santa Ana, Anaheim, San Bernardino, etc., will arrange for lectures at these various points. The following are the subjects of some of the lectures: "Universal Mental Liberty," "The Glory of Infidelity," "American Democracy," "The Dangers Ahead," "The Bible," "Priest, King and People."

No paper ever started with better prospects and fairer greeting than FREETHOUGHT. But while good will gives courage and resolution, it does not remove the difficulties to success, nor render arduous labor any the less necessary. The circulation of FREETHOUGHT should be pushed as rapidly as possible. It should reach thousands upon the Pacific Coast. It is desirable, therefore, at various important points to have Liberal men and women who can give time to the work to act as agents for this paper. A little personal effort in the community where one lives will do far more for the obtaining of subscribers than any general appeal. We do not ask labor for nothing, but to friends who are really interested in the cause, and can give their services to some extent to secure subscribers, a liberal commission will be paid, so that clubs can easily be made up at every important point. Friends who wish to aid in this manner will please communicate at once.

H. L. GREEN'S Freethinkers' Magazine for January contains leading articles by T. B. Wakeman, C. W. Stewart, the Rev. G. W. Samson, and F. M. Holland, besides contributions from other able writers, including a poem by Miss Susan H. Wixon. The magazine promises well and does well. It cannot have too many readers.

The Lick Telescope.

The report recently received by the secretary of the Lick Trust, M. H. Mathews, is that the thermometer stands at six degrees below zero; that the pipes are frozen up, and the astronomers have difficulty in keeping warm. Very little progress has been made in polishing the big glass, or photographic lens, as the work has to be done in the large dome. One side of it is open to the heavens, with the exception of a series of shutters, which are no use as far as keeping out the cold is concerned. The snow has been growing deeper, and is now fully two feet on a level, and the weather is intensely cold. Saturday night the thermometer recorded 6 deg. The lowest temperature previously recorded on the mountain since the observatory work began was 13 deg. The wind has been strong, demoralizing the chimneys, and making large fires out of the question. Owing to King Frost, few or no observations have been taken, as the dome is frozen and coated with ice. Captain Floyd and wife, Alvan G. Clarke, of Cambridgeport, and Mr. Swasey, of Cleveland, have all been on the mountain during the severe weather. With a few weeks of favorable weather the great observatory will be pushed rapidly to completion.

The story of General Israel Putnam entering a wolf's den is now denied. Next we expect to hear that Noah didn't get drunk after his voyage.—Alta,

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States, or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts, shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

THE WORK OF REDEEMING THE WORLD.

Christian papers are now glorifying over the speedy redemption of the world, and point to the thirty-four missionary societies at work in Africa, claiming that its population of 225,000,000 are "practically under the influence of Christianity." Between this missionary report and the recent revelations of Rev. Canon Taylor there is a first-class prevaricator. We will take a few excerpts from the divine's speech before the church congress at Wolverhampton, England, and let our readers judge:

"The faith of Islam is spreading over Africa with giant strides. * * * Christianity is receding before Islam, while attempts to proselyte Mohammedans are notoriously unsuccessful. We not only fail to gain ground, but even fail to hold our own. * * * An African tribe once converted to Islam never returns to paganism, and never embraces Christianity. * * * When Mohammedanism is embraced by a negro tribe, devil-worship, fetishism, cannibalism, human sacrifice, infanticide, witchcraft disappear. Filth is replaced by cleanliness, and they acquire personal dignity and self-respect. Hospitality becomes a religious duty, drunkenness rare, gambling is forbidden, and the promiscuous intercourse of the sexes ceases; female chastity is regarded as a virtue, industry replaces idleness, order and sobriety prevail, cruelty to animals and slaves is forbidden, a feeling of humanity, benevolence, and brotherhood is inculcated. Islam, above all, is the most powerful total abstinence association in the world; whereas the extension of European trade means the extension of drunkenness and vice, and the degradation of the people; Islam introduces a knowledge of reading and writing, decent clothing, personal cleanliness, veracity, and self-respect. Its restraining and civilizing effects are marvelous. How little have we to show for the vast sums of money and precious lives lavished upon Africa! Christian converts are reckoned by thousands—Moslem converts by millions. * * * Polygamy, with all its evils, has its counterbalancing advantages. It has abolished infanticide, and given every woman a legal protector. Owing to polygamy Mohammedan countries are free from professional outcasts—a greater reproach to Christianity than polygamy is to Islam. The strictly regulated polygamy of Moslem lands is infinitely less degrading to woman and less injurious to man than the promiscuous polyandry which is the curse of Christian cities, and which is absolutely unknown in Islam. The polyandrous English are not entitled to cast stones at polygamous Moslems."

Do the above quotations furnish the impression that Christianity has Africa within its grasp? This unusually candid canon practically admits that Christianity can only demoralize the Africans, as the trail of the (Christian) European traders means their demoralization and degradation. What a glorious work is this spreading of the gospel, to be sure! Africa is safe from its contamination, as the reverend gentleman affirms that "European teachers will never Christianize Africa. The experiment has been tried, and failed." Not content with their attempts to demoralize the Africans, these meddlesome missionaries are pegging away at China, where thirty-three societies are trying to turn its 350,000,000 people from the religious reverence they have cherished for their progenitors—a duty that amounts to almost sacrilege for a son to neglect his parents, and which is common to its three great systems of religion—for one which declares, "If any man come to me and hate not his father and mother, and wife and sister, and brother, yea, his own life also, he cannot be my disciple." Blow ye the gospel trumpet, and let the heathen realize the depth of depravity he has attained in following such fallacious teachers as Confucius, who first gave the golden rule in a direct and positive form: "Never do unto others what you would not have them do to you;" who with singular perversity places duty above faith in their code: "Fix thy thoughts on duty; practice without ceasing the virtue of humanity, and if you have leisure cultivate the arts." O thou sinful, sallow-colored, pig-tailed heathen, knowest thou not that to fulfil the glorious gospel of Christ the son must turn against his father, the daughter against her mother, and the mother-in-law shall bring up the rear of the circus. Ye philosophical mandarins, who pretend to follow the unsanctified Confucius, must be made to realize the insufficiency of your simple creed, "Adore heaven and be just." Ye need dousing very deep in a fountain filled with blood. That's what you do!

We are also apprised that Christian missions and schools have been established throughout India to boycott and bulldoze the nations from their adherence to Brahma and Buddha, and as the British government controls the resources of life, many nations are induced to play the hypocrite to be on the right side of the powers that be, just as is the case in England and America. Buddha laid particular stress upon purity of mind and thought, so what must the Hindoos think of the sacred book of the Christians which contains about 200 passages from which no preacher would dare to select a text? That's rather too dimly religious for our light understanding. Another cardinal principle for the benighted Hindoos is that of kindness, especially toward dumb brutes. "He that needlessly treadeth on a worm is darkly alienate to God," is their manner of expressing it. Yet the Lord God of Israel, when he "got on his ear," as the gamins say, commanded men to "slay both man and woman, and infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass." Truly "thy ways are ways of pleasantness, and all thy paths are peace," and if the Hindoos don't believe it, we refer them to the cowardly murder on thy authority of five captive kings, and smile on Samuel for hewing "Agag in pieces before the Lord." For bloody business, thy command to "slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbor," must have had, we suspect, a salient effect on the followers of Nina Sahib about the time of the Cawnpore massacre, for those native troops had a considerable knowledge of Christianity, and possibly that passage might have been their necessary inspiration. The Lord "moves in mysterious ways his wonders to perform." Yes, his ways are above man's ways—and the further the better for the inhabitants of India.

The cheering statement is also at hand that all the Fijians have been converted to Christianity; that "in no part of the world has Christianity been so successful, and there is not now an avowed heathen on the island." If this be true, and we are inclined to take the statement as it stands, possibly the instinct of heredity can account for their longing for this religion of the tender morsels. We should imagine that even their cannibalistic tendencies would have almost revolted, but they have good stomachs if they can stand the bill of fare presented by the Israelitish restaurateur: "Thou shalt eat the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat everyone the flesh of his friends." Doubtless the Fijians devoutly sang: "How amiable are thy ways, O Lord God Almighty!"

We are further informed that schools and missions are filling up Turkey, Japan, and Persia; that the jaw-smiths of the Great Jehovah are industriously laboring, and are in possession of those countries; and that "the grandest day of opportunity for the kingdom of God that the earth has ever seen has fully dawned."

Well, we were not previously aware that the Almighty was in particular need of a chance—thought he threatened to do it anyhow—but we sincerely hope that he will seize this golden opportunity with alacrity, and not let it slip through his fingers.

Yet D. K. Pearson, of Chicago, gave $50,000 each the other day to two theological factories to teach this brutal blasphemy, which is mixed with some humanity, of course. Think of it, $100,000 to teach that countless millions will suffer unending torment—that their dearest friends, if not converted through this gospel of blind faith and blood, are elected to this fearful fate. What a consolation even for those who consider they have received their O. K. mark!

Dr. Tolman Wheeler, of this city, a decrepit old man of 86 years, who crawls on crutches, is blind, and deaf, and irrational, has been wheedled into adding $150,000 in property to his former gifts to the Episcopal Theological Seminary, which makes his gifts total $280,000. Of course the church beggars swarm around him like flies around a candle. What a munificent gift to perpetuate such monstrous rubbish! to consign human beings either to endless misery or happiness, with all the chances in favor of the former; the road to happiness being a narrow little moss-grown tow-path, where one's feet are almost sure to slip, while the other has to have broad-gauge double tracks for its enormous traffic to its terminus, the Great Sulphur Springs.

The American Secular Union only wants a few thousand dollars to flood this country with facts; facts that will elevate humanity instead of degrading them by faith. So far we have scarce received enough for current expenses. We want to work for the glory of Man instead of a cruel and vindictive God. To make a paradise on earth instead of waiting for one in heaven. To teach mankind that the place to be happy is here, and the time to be happy is now. You Liberals who are worth a few thousands, can you not be inspired to do for a good cause what Christians will do for a foolish one? A little financial forethought is needed to establish Feethought and secular justice. Who responds?

E. A. STEVENS, Sec'y A. S. U.

C. B. REYNOLDS's appointments are: Canon City, Colorado, Jan. 22, 23; Elizabeth, Colorado, Jan. 25, 26, 27; Erie, Colorado, Jan. 29, 30; Georgetown, Colorado, Feb. 1, 2, 3; Leadville, Colorado, Feb. 4, 5; Delta, Colorado, 7, 8, 9; Hotchkiss, Colorado, 10, 11, 12.

THE Secular Union of Molalla, Oregon, will celebrate Paine's birthday with an address by Dr. Matteson, of Aumsville, followed by a dance. The Molalla Union meets every fortnight, to the dismay of the orthodox residents of that town.

PERSECUTION FOR CONSCIENCE' SAKE.

Let me, sir, illustrate the operation of the present law by one or two examples. A Mr. Swearigen came from a northern State and settled a farm in ——— county. His farm was four miles from town, and far away from any house of religious worship. He was a member of the Seventh-day Adventist church, and after having sacredly observed the Sabbath of his people (Saturday) by abstaining from all secular work, he and his son, a lad of seventeen, on the first day of the week, went quietly about their usual avocations. They disturbed no one—interfered with the rights of no one. But they were observed, and reported to the grand jury—indicted, arrested, tried, convicted, fined—and, having no money to pay the fine, these moral Christian citizens of Arkansas were dragged to the county jail and imprisoned like felons for twenty-five days—and for what? For daring in this so-called land of liberty, in the year of our Lord, 1887, to worship God.

Was this the end of the story? Alas! no, sir. They were turned out; and the old man's only horse, his sole reliance to make bread for his children, was levied on to pay the fine and costs, amounting to $38. The horse sold at auction for $27. A few days afterward the sheriff came again and demanded $36, $11 balance due on fine and costs, and $25 for board for himself and son while in jail. And when the poor old man—a Christian, mind you—told him with tears that he had no money, he promptly levied on his only cow, but was persuaded to accept bond, and the amount was paid by contributions from his friends of the same faith. Sir, my heart swells to bursting with indignation when I repeat to you the infamous story.

Another, and I am done. Sir, I beg you and these senators to believe that these are neither fancy nor exaggerated sketches. Five years ago a young man, newly married, came to ——— County, from Ohio. He and his wife were Seventh-day Baptists. The young girl had left father and mother, brothers and sisters, and all the dear friends of her childhood to follow her young husband to Arkansas—to them the land of promise. The light of love sparkled in her bright young eyes. The roses of health were upon her cheeks, and her silver laugh was sweet music, of which her young husband never wearied. They purchased a little farm, and soon, by tireless industry and frugal thrift, their home blossomed like a rose in the wilderness. After awhile a fair young babe came to them to brighten the sunshine, and sweeten the bird songs. They were happy in each other's affection and their love for the little one. For them "all things worked together for good;" for, in their humble, trusting way, they worshiped God and loved their fellow-men.

Two years ago the law under which their prosperity and happiness had had its growth was repealed! Accursed be the day which brought such a foul blot upon our state's fair fame! A change, sudden, cold and blasting as an arctic storm, came over their lives and pitilessly withered all their bright flowers of hope. Under this repeal, persecution lifted its ugly, venomous head. The hero of my sad story was observed by an envious, jealous neighbor, quietly working, as he believed God had commanded him, on Sunday. He was reported to that inquisitorial relic of barbarism, the grand jury—indicted, tried, convicted, and thrown into jail because his conscience would not let him pay the fine.

Week after week dragged its slow length along. Day after day the young wife, with baby in her arms, watched at the gate for his coming, and like Tennyson's Marianna—

"She only said: 'My life is dreary—
He cometh not,' she said.
She said: 'I am aweary—awear—
I would that I were dead.'"

Then baby sickened and died—the light in the young wife's eyes faded out in tears—her silvery laugh changed to low, wailing sobs. Pale-faced Misery snatched the roses from her cheeks and planted in their stead her own pallid hue. Sir, how can I go on? At length the cruel law was appeased, and this inoffensive citizen (except that he had loved God and sought to obey him) was released from prison and dragged his weary feet to the happy home he had left a few short weeks before. He met his neighbors at the gate bearing a coffin. He asked no questions, his heart told him all. No, not all! He knew not—he could never know—of her lonely hours, of her bitter tears, of the weary watching and waiting, of the appeals to God, that God for whom she had suffered so much, for help in the hour of her extremity, of baby's sickness and death. He could not know of these. But he went with them to the quiet country burial-place and saw beside the open grave a little mound with dirt freshly heaped upon it, and then he knew that God had taken both his heart's idols and he was left alone. His grief was too deep for tears. With staring eyes he saw them lower the body of his young wife into the grave. He heard the clods rattle upon the coffin, and it seemed as if they were falling upon his heart. The work was done and they left him with his dead, and then he threw himself down between the graves with an arm across each little mound, and the tears came in torrents and kept his heart from breaking.—Speech of Hon. Robert H. Crockett in the Arkansas Senate.

THE PAINE CELEBRATION.

The Liberals of San Francisco will celebrate on Sunday evening, January 29, 1888, the 151st anniversary of the birthday of Thomas Paine. The exercises will take place at Irving Hall, 139 Post street, between Kearny and Grant avenue. The following programme has been prepared:

Piano Solo.....Prof. Pettibone
Introductory Remarks by the Chairman.
Selected Song.....Prof. Briggs
Original Poem.....Thomas Curtis
Address.....Samuel P. Putnam
Address.....Geo. A. Bruce
Original Poem.....Robert Stuart

Doors open at 7, exercises begin at 7:30. All are invited. The works of Thomas Paine and other Liberal authors will be for sale in the hall.

PHOTIUS FISK.

Perhaps no man who has done so much for Liberalism has received so little notoriety as Photius Fisk, of Boston. Lucy Colman, speaking of him in the Truth Seeker, says:

"I have often queried in my own mind whether or not the readers of the Liberal papers have any idea of this man and how much we are all indebted to him for his generous help whenever the call is made for any worthy object. If a meeting of the Secular Society is called, and aid is solicited to pay expenses, you will always see, or almost always, opposite his name ten dollars given. Is a Liberal sick or aged, or without means of support, you may, if you inquire, find that a monthly donation from this same man is sent to keep the wolf from the door.

"I know a woman who worked hard in the Anti-slavery times for the slave, and who is now in the South, teaching among the freed people, who finds her work much lighter from her acquaintance with this generous man, and the freed people, for whom her daily work is done, are always remembered with barrels of food at least once a year. Does some one of the old Abolitionists die, who suffered torture and imprisonment at the hands of the slaveholder, like Capt. Jonathan Walker (he of the 'branded hand'), Mr. Fisk originates and pays for an appropriate monument, sends it to the burial-place, and has it placed upon the grave. I do not know how many stones he has thus erected—I know of three. I think that he has paid for a thousand dollars' worth of shares in the Paine Memorial building in Boston, and a munificent donation of valuable pictures, gathered from many parts of the world, are already occupying the walls of some of the rooms of Paine Hall. But all this does not tell my readers who this remarkable man is.

"I have before me a Missionary Herald of 1822, in which I find that he is a native Greek, by name Photius Ravasales; that he is the only one of his family that escaped death at Smyrna from the plague which ravaged the country in 1814—father, mother, two brothers, and two sisters falling victims. His age is a disputed matter, one writer making him in 1822, twelve or thirteen, another sixteen. His uncle, who had him in charge, says he was born in Hydra.

"It seems a Mr. Fisk gave his name to the young lad, perhaps thinking he would be a great acquisition to the cause of the missionaries. He was put under the care of the Rev. Mr. Cornelius, of Salem, Mass.

"I believe Mr. Fisk was first sent to a mission school in Cornwall, Conn., and afterwards in New Haven, and finally in Amherst, Mass., to the academy, which to-day is a college. Mr. Fisk was not pleased with the strictness of the rules at these several places, and failing to keep them he was sent back to Malta. He then concluded to become his own master, worked his way back, educated himself, was converted to Presbyterian Congregationalism, ordained a clergyman of that order, and for a time preached in Vermont. Parker Pillsbury, in a short sketch which I find in the pamphlet, 'The Man with a Branded Hand,' says: 'The severities of the winters in a place so far north as Vermont proved to be too much for his constitution, he being of a race born and for many generations living under so much more indulgent skies. He soon became unable to discharge the many duties and responsibilities of a minister, especially so far north as Vermont.' Mr. Pillsbury also says Mr. Fisk was too much of an abolitionist to be tolerated in an American pulpit:

"In 1842 Mr. Fisk received the appointment of chaplain in the United States Navy, which he still holds though retired from active service. On my table is a photograph of Chaplain Fisk, taken in Malta some years ago. I am often asked whom the picture represents, but before I can answer comes from the person asking, the declaration, 'What a benevolent face! He must be a good man.' All of which is true. Mr. Fisk was on the other continent when the great fires which destroyed so much in Chicago and Boston occurred. He immediately telegraphed Wendell Phillips, who had charge of his funds, 'Do as I would do.' This good man was never married, and having no children, he seems to have adopted as his own all the poor, and especially the oppressed, whom he can reach. He has great pity for orphan children, as he 'remembers that he was kicked about as a football, or showed off in some church, like a monkey, to raise missionary funds.'

"I have written what I know of Chaplain Fisk, but I have no doubt that he is more remarkable in what I do not know than what I do. He seems to follow the scriptural injunctions, 'Take heed that ye do not your alms before men, to be seen of them'; 'Let not your left hand know what your right doeth.' I have never met a more pronounced Liberal than this man of whom I am writing."

FREETHOUGHT LECTURES.

Judge J. W. North in the Fresno Daily Republican.

Permit me to announce through your paper that about the middle of February we are to be favored with lectures by a man to whom it will be a privilege and a luxury to listen. Mr. Putnam served his country four years in the army during our civil war. After that he studied theology, and was for three years a Congregational minister, like his father. Becoming too liberal for that, he became a Unitarian preacher for eight years. Outgrowing that, he became thoroughly a Freethinker, and for several years has devoted himself to the work of the American Secular Union. After having served most capably as secretary and lecturer, he has been made president. Mr. Putnam is a gentleman of culture, an author, poet, lecturer, and editor of fine reputation. He and his associate, Mr. MacDonald, have already started a weekly paper in San Francisco entitled FREETHOUGHT. As he has traveled and lectured extensively on this coast, and has numerous friends in every state and territory of the West, his paper will be a bond of union for Freethinkers, and can not fail to be a permanent success. I earnestly hope that the Liberal-minded people of our county will see to it that he has a cordial reception.

Believing that the lectures will be highly useful, we hope to have a few of them at Oleander, and there should be at least a half dozen of them in Fresno. Other places wanting lectures can write and make their wants known. Visalia and Tulare were visited by Mr. Putnam last year, but Fresno was too busy to invite him. Let us be sure to hear him now.

THE STAGE AND THE PULPIT.

In a recent interview with Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, the editor of the New York Truth Seeker asked, "What do you think of the Methodist minister at Nashville, Tenn., who, from his pulpit, denounced the theatrical profession, without exception, as vicious, and of the congregation which passed resolutions condemning Miss Emma Abbott for rising in church and contradicting him, and of the Methodist Bishop who likened her to a 'painted courtesan,' and invoked the aid of the law 'for the protection of public worship against strolling players?'"

Colonel Ingersoll answered: The Methodist minister of whom you speak without doubt uttered his real sentiments. The church has always regarded the stage as a rival, and all its utterances have been as malicious as untrue. It has always felt that the money given to the stage was in some way taken from the pulpit. It is on this principle that the pulpit wishes everything, except the church, shut up on Sunday. It knows that it cannot stand free and open competition.

All well educated ministers know that the Bible suffers by a comparison with Shakespeare. They know that there is nothing within the lids of what they call "the sacred book" that can for one moment stand side by side with "Lear" or "Hamlet," or "Julius Cæsar" or "Antony and Cleopatra," or with any other play written by the immortal man. They know what a poor figure the Davids, and the Abrahams, and the Jeremiahs, and the Lots, the Jonahs, the Jobs, and the Noahs cut when on the stage with the great characters of Shakespeare. For these reasons, among others, the pulpit is malicious and hateful when it thinks of the glories of the stage. What minister is there now living who could command the prices commanded by Edwin Booth or Joseph Jefferson; and what two clergymen, by making a combination, could contend successfully against Robson and Crane? How many clergymen would it take to command, at regular prices, the audiences that attend the presentation of Wagner's operas?

It is very easy to see why the pulpit attacks the stage. Nothing could have been in more wretched taste than for the minister to condemn Miss Emma Abbott for rising in church and defending not only herself but other good women who are doing honest work for an honest living. Of course no minister wishes to be answered; no minister wishes to have any one in the congregation call for the proof. A few questions would break up all the theology in the world. Ministers can succeed only when congregations keep silent. Where superstition succeeds, doubt must be dumb.

The Methodist bishop who attacked Miss Abbott simply repeated the language of several centuries ago. In the laws of England actors were described as "sturdy vagrants," and this bishop calls them "strolling players." If we only had some strolling preachers like Garrick, like Edwin Forrest, or Booth and Barrett, or Haworth, or some crusade sisters like Mrs. Siddons, or Madam Ristori, or Charlotte Cushman, or Madam Modjeska, how fortunate the church would be!

Question. What is your opinion of the relative merits of the pulpit and the stage, preachers and actors?

Answer. We must remember that the stage presents an ideal life. It is a world controlled by the imagination—a world in which the justice delayed in real life may be done and in which that may happen which, according to the highest ideal, should happen. It is a world, for the most part, in which evil does not succeed, in which the vicious are foiled, in which the right, the honest, the sincere, and the good prevail. It cultivates the imagination, and in this respect is far better than the pulpit. The mission of the pulpit is to narrow and shrivel the human mind. The pulpit denounces the freedom of thought and of expression; but on the stage the mind is free, and for thousands of years the poor, the oppressed, the enslaved, have been permitted to witness plays wherein the slave was freed, wherein the oppressed became the victor, and where the down-trodden rose supreme.

And there is another thing. The stage has always laughed at the spirit of caste. The low-born lass has loved the prince. All human distinctions in this ideal world have for the moment vanished, while honesty and love have triumphed. The stage lightens the cares of life. The pulpit increases the tears and groans of man. There is this difference: The pretense of honesty and the honesty of pretense.

Question. How do you view the Episcopalian scheme of building a six-million-dollar untaxed cathedral in this city for the purpose of "uniting the sects," and, when that is accomplished, "unifying the world in the love of Christ," and thereby abolishing misery?

Answer. I regard the building of an Episcopalian cathedral simply as a piece of religious folly. The world will never be converted by Christian palaces and temples. Every dollar used in its construction will be wasted. It will have no tendency to unite the various sects; on the contrary, it will excite the envy and jealousy of every other sect. It will widen the gulf between the Episcopalian and the Methodist, between the Episcopalian and the Presbyterian, and this hatred will continue until the other sects build a cathedral just a little larger, and then the envy and the hatred will be on the other side.

Religion will never unify the world, and never will give peace to mankind. There has been more war in the last 1800 years than during any similar period within historic times. War will be abolished, if it ever is abolished, not by religion, but by intelligence. It will be abolished when the poor people of Germany, of France, of Spain, of England, and other countries find that they have no interest in war. When those who pay, and those who do the fighting, find that they are simply destroying their own interests, wars will cease.

There ought to be a national court to decide national difficulties. We consider a community civilized when the individuals of that community submit their differences to a legal tribunal; but there being no national court, nations now sustain, as to each other, the relation of savages—that is to say, each one must defend its rights by brute force. The establishment of a national court civilizes nations, and tends to do away with war.

Christianity caused so much war, so much blood-shed, that Christians were forced to interpolate a passage to account for their history, and the interpolated passage is, "I came not to bring peace, but a sword." Suppose that all the money wasted in cathedrals in the Middle Ages had been used for the construction of school-houses, academies, and universities, how much better the world would have been! Suppose that instead of supporting hundreds of thousands of idle priests, the money had been given to men of science for the purpose of finding out something of benefit to the human race here in this world.

Hope for the Poorest Man.

Three million women in the United States are working for wages. The man who cannot marry rich may at least secure a wife whose wages will make his home happy.

CHURCH OF THE REPUBLIC.

Religion, properly speaking, is the guiding principle of man's life. He only has no religion who has no such principle. Robert Ingersoll is a very religious man, though utterly heretical and unorthodox, for he has a principle which he boldly teaches, and, as we learn, practices too, all the days of his life.

A church is an organized body of human beings, to teach, practice, encourage, and promote some religion.

Churches are born, and die. They seldom rise above the age in which they are born. They cannot do so. Moses could no more make a religion for this age than he could make a locomotive or a steamship. All religions will die when mankind have so far progressed in science that their teachings are no longer acceptable or useful.

And herein lies the conflict between Freethought and the churches.

Freethought looks forever forward. It appreciates the new, and is ready to drop the old the moment something better appears. It disdains to be seen working with an old scow while a steamboat is within hail.

But the churches cling to folly, injustice, error, and barbarism long after progressive men have cast them aside. The church cannot change—it dies.

The churches condemn, anathematize, and curse apostasy and change.

Freethought condemns not, not even the churches, the churchgoers, the preachers, the pope himself. It says: "Think! think boldly! think honestly! and whatever may be your conclusion, we respect your right to follow your own course."

The fraternity of Freethought can have no creed, no platform, no articles of faith but this: That the mind shall forever be unshackled, and search the universe for truth.

"The flower's divine, wherever found,
On Christian or on heathen ground."

This is in fact embodied in the Constitution of the United States. Our fathers were all Freethought men. Our noble fathers! the sires of the great republic! When they met in convention to frame the Constitution of the United States, there met the best, the bravest, and the wisest convention this world has ever seen. Not one was ever tainted by dishonor; and almost every one was distinguished for his worth and wisdom.

Before these fathers the churches of that day laid their claims. They said:

We are of God.
His ordained, appointed servants.
We alone may speak his will.
Government is impossible without us.
God will not bless or prosper it.
We are attested by miracles.
We are confirmed by prophecies.
Guided by God's book.
We hold the keys of heaven.
And the gates of hell.
Without our blessing you are lost.
Give us a part in your government.

And these brave fathers answered:

Not a jot! not a jot!
The people shall rule.
No king, by the grace of God.
No priest, by the grace of God.
No privileged classes.
No authorized instructors.
God, alone, above the American sovereign.
All men by nature free and equal.
All shall think as they please.
Freethought shall be absolute.
We recognize no religion.
We will favor no religion.
We will persecute no religion.
The American sovereign is free.

He, alone, will reckon with God.

The mind is and ought to be free.

Opinions are not crimes.

This is the Constitution. But laws do not at once become the practice of the people. It takes time to bring the common mind into harmony with the wisdom of great lawmakers. The people of the United States have never yet fully understood the full drift and purpose of these declarations. In no branch of our practice, save in the courts of law, are these principles fully sustained. And even there they are not always vindicated up to their full value.

In our churches these declarations of our fathers are denounced as most pernicious and damning heresies. In fact, the churches would unsay them all. They want God, Christ, the Bible, and punishment for unbelief in the Constitution, and they want the clergyman to be a pastor and master for the American freeman. They would like to see all the children trained to believe that the republic is a sin, Freethought a crime, and American independence worthy of damnation. They creep into our schools; they are crawling upon our university, and they will steal our government and suppress our liberties, if some power does not arise to stem the flood, and turn back the tide of superstition.

The church of the republic must come to meet this deluge.

It must have a religion consistent with the republic.

Its God must be republican. Wise, just, calm, considerate, and eminently the God of Nature and of man.

And herein will consist the main difference in the religion of the republic and that of the churches. The god of the churches is modeled on the imperial pattern. The figure was first set up by the imperial Council of Nice, fifteen hundred years ago. The whole scheme then and there set up was a despotism of the most cruel character—

God was an arbitrary ruler.

He does all that our fathers rejected.

He prescribes a given faith.

He appoints religious teachers.

He provides for their maintenance.

He commands man to believe them.

He makes unbelief crime.

Punishable with hell-fire.

And government shall not be of the people.

Now, if this is just and right, then were our fathers most rebellious and wrong. The two cannot live together. No American citizen can believe:

That we should not think freely that opinions are crimes, that it would be just to punish them.

And also that Freethought is sin, that he must listen to the preacher, that heresy is a crime and will be punished with hell-fire.

Is God less wise, less tolerant, less loving than our fathers? It is not to be thought of. This picture of God was made fifteen hundred years ago. Our fathers met only one hundred years ago. Who are the most tolerant among mankind? The wisest! Who are they who persecute, kill, and burn heretics? Barbarians! Which is most like God, the enlightened philanthropist, or the barbarian bigot? Can you doubt? Who expresses the rule of right?—

Our fathers, who declare that wrong opinions are not crimes, and shall not be punished,

Or the churches, that tell us that for errors of faith the fires of hell are burning?

And can men believe in both of these things? It is clearly impossible. The churches are at war with the republic. They are at war with the people and the age. They must either reform or die.

Another feature of church religion, and having its origin in the same imperial council, is this priestly privilege of forgiving sins, holding the keys of heaven, and passing in whoever the the priest may please, by some sort of hocus-bocus in his power alone. He must be ordained and appointed a clergyman to have this power. With us, this is unconstitutional. It is unjust, unequal, and expressly denied and refused by our fathers. And it is full of mischief.

This power is supposed to come through Jesus Christ. He was born the Son of God. He died to save sinners. He gave this saving power to all who believe. And the preacher, or priest, declares who is fit, and gives the passport to eternal bliss—

Not for good principles,
Not for good works for man,
Not for duty well done,
But for a mere profession;
A ceremony, a trick,
A compliance with forms;
For vain and empty observances.

In this manner tyrants, cut-throats, murderers, and all manner of sinners die assured of heaven. You have really no need to be good or virtuous. Indeed, among our great fathers few will be found in heaven, if these rules are right. You have but to comply with these forms, and your salvation is assured; and should you neglect them, all the virtues of Washington and Lincoln could not save you.

It is needless to say that there is no proof for one of these things that the scientist could accept for a moment. History gives them no support. Science declares them to be most improbable. Common sense and common justice repel all such notions. We stand ready to meet any clergyman of the Pacific Coast and to affirm:

That no such God as the churches set forth is to be found anywhere.

That the Bible is no more of God than any other book.

That Christ never lived and died as stated.

That no man ever reigned as king by the grace of God.

That no man was ever made a priest by the grace of God.

That men have a right to think freely on all subjects.

That error of judgment is no crime.

That heaven for mere belief, or prayers, or ceremonies, or shams of any kind, is a mischievous untruth.

That hell for honest opinions, or heresy, disobedience of the church, or neglect of forms, would be infamously unjust and is absolutely false.

That we need a new church, and a new religion, to teach—

That God is indeed our father, wise, just, merciful and loving.

That we are all his children, equal, and equally free and privileged, as the Constitution of our country declares.

That to serve mankind is the only way to serve God.

That the Republic, government by the people, is just, and the best for mankind.

That our fathers announced great truths in the Constitution, and any religion at variance with them is so far wrong.

That whoever sincerely endeavors to discover what is just and true and to act in accord with them, will have his reward, however much he may err in judgment.

We want this new church now, in California, in San Francisco. We face the eastern shores of the old world. We should set up in our university, and in our churches and schools, not the teaching of an old departed despotism, but the great truths of modern science, and the great principles of the Republic.

It will be one of the purposes of FREETHOUGHT to prepare the way for such a structure, and lay its foundation in this state. We are destined to be the Athens of the Pacific. Let us be worthy of our destiny. When men come to us from China or Japan for knowledge, let us give them the bread of life, the fruits of modern philosophy, and not the drivel of an antiquated and barbarous theology. H. L. KNIGHT.

THOSE who receive more than one copy of this number of FREETHOUGHT are kindly exhorted to put the extra ones where they will do the most good.

DIABOLICAL SENTIMENT.

THE Boston Pilot (Catholic) says: "No good government can exist without religion. And there can be no religion without an Inquisition, which is wisely designed for the promotion and protection of the true faith."

THE Catholic Archbishop, of St. Louis, once said: "Heresy and unbelief are crimes; and in Christian countries, as in Italy and Spain, for instance, where all the people are Catholics, and where the Catholic religion is an essential part of the law of the land, they are punished as other crimes."

THIS is what the Rev. Jonathan Edwards, D.D., said before the National Reform Convention in New York city February 27, 1883. It is still officially sent forth as National Reform literature:

"What are the rights of the Atheist? I would tolerate him as I would tolerate a poor lunatic, for in my view his mind is scarcely sound. So long as he does not rave, so long as he is not dangerous, I would tolerate him. I would tolerate him as I would a conspirator. The Atheist is a dangerous man. Tolerate Atheism, sir? There is nothing out of hell that I would not tolerate as soon. The Atheist may live, as I said, but, God helping us, the taint of his destructive creed shall not defile any of the civil institutions of all this fair land! Let us repeat, Atheism and Christianity are contradictory terms. They are incompatible systems. They cannot dwell together on the same continent."

Literature.

"THE Truth Seeker Annual and Freethinkers' Almanac" for 1888 is now at hand. It contains 117 pages, with twenty-four finely executed portraits of distinguished American Freethinkers, scientists, and philosophers; also thirteen of Heston's Bible sketches. The latter are accompanied by commentaries such as were never before made, written by George E. Macdonald. A page of calendar is devoted to the chronology of each month, telling the dates of the births and deeds and deaths of great men who have made their days luminous. At the foot of each calendar page is some sentiment or bit of philosophy that is worth remembering. The history of 1887, by the editor, reviews the past and points out the indications of progress or retrogression. It is an able article. Robert C. Adams contributes a paper on "Theism and Atheism." E. J. Bowtell after making his bow tells of his daily life in a Trappist monastery; the American Secular Union is written of by Samuel P. Putnam; there is an account of the International Freethought Congress in London; an article on "Sunday Amusements," by Frederic May Holland; "The Blasphemy Case," "How the Layman is Deceived," by E. M. Macdonald; "A Horrible Man," by L. K. Washburn; and "When Did Jehoshaphat Die?" is considered by J. E. Remsburg, wherein the writer shows from biblical authority that Jehoshaphat died at sixteen different times. Besides these contributions, the Annual contains numerous poetical selections, making a volume as large as the North American Review, all for two bits. The work is on sale at the office of FREETHOUGHT.

THE series of articles by John Peck, lately published in the Truth Seeker under the title of "Christian Absurdities," are now issued in an 80-page pamphlet, well printed and substantially bound. The price is 20 cents. "Miracles and Miracle Workers" is another from the same pen and the same press; price 10 cents. These are the first pamphlets we have ever seen with Mr. Peck's name on them, though he has been a favorite writer for years. The books ought to sell, and they will if Liberals desire good reading.

SAN FRANCISCO friends can obtain copies of the New York Truth Seeker at this office. Subscriptions and renewals will also be received.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Gramercy Park.

MY DEAR PUTNAM: I have seen, with great interest, your commendable attempt to found a new Freethought publication in the great new West. I earnestly wish it all success. Put me down, of course, as a subscriber. Your poem entitled "Truth, Beauty, Goodness," I read with the greatest interest, and any paper founded on such ennobling ideals ought to succeed, whether it does or not. May this child of your ardent hopes, as you term it, grow toward a full and strong maturity.

Yours in the faith, COUNTLANDT PALMER.
New York, Jan. 17, 1888.

Mixed in Metaphor, but Otherwise Correct.

DEAR PUT.: Just got FREETHOUGHT. She's a brick. Long may she wave.
Chicago, Jan. 12, 1888. E. A. STEVENS.

Well Spoken Of.

MR. PUTNAM, Dear Friend: Your paper came to hand to day—like it ever so much. I inclose stamps for copies. Send to within address. Your friend, DR. WITT T. ROOT.
Farmdale, O., Jan. 12, 1888.

We Hope So, Too.

S. P. PUTNAM, My Dear Sir: I send you $2 for a year's subscription, and wish that you may get 25,000 subscribers within a year. Send samples for circulation. Yours,

J. VOSTROUSKY.

San Jose, Cal., Jan. 16, 1888.

From San Jose.

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: I am glad to see you here on this coast to work up what we need in our cause. Hoping for success to you and us all, you have my best wishes. Please send me your paper. Yours,

L. MAGENHEIMER.

San Jose, Jan. 10, 1888.

One Word.

BROTHERS PUTNAM AND MACDONALD: We need a first-class Freethought journal in the great far West, and I hope you may succeed in building up one in that metropolis of the Pacific Coast. I have but one word and one wish for you both: SUCCESS! H. L. GREEN.

Buffalo, N. Y., Jan. 13, 1888.

Brethren in Bonds

S. P. PUTNAM, My Very Dear Sir: I was most agreeably surprised to learn that you had joined the grand army of the West that is marching on under the banner of truth and liberty. You can rest assured that all the assistance in the power of our boys to give, you will get in your enterprise. I will try to get up a club. The good people here are in the toils; can't find a man to debate. I have filed a bond in the sum of $500 that you will be here ready to debate at any time we may agree on, and have offered, if they cannot give the bond, to furnish it, providing the challengers will sign it with us. I have left no gap down through which they can get out except by ignominiously backing out. We had a good time at Silverton. They have a fine hall, which is only equaled in grandeur by the men who built it. They are doing a good work.

T. J. McCLARY.

Stayton, Or., Jan. 14, 1888.

A Welcome Visit Promised.

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: Please find inclosed $2 for one year's subscription, wishing you prosperity in your new enterprise. I may visit San Francisco before many days, and will be sure to call on you. Meanwhile I remain your friend, DANIEL WILLIAMS.

Morgan City, Utah, Jan. 16, 1888.

Our Efforts are Crowned by These Presents.

PUBLISHERS FREETHOUGHT: You figured correctly. Within find check for four dollars. Forward one copy of FREETHOUGHT to inclosed address and one to your humble servant. I hope success will crown your efforts.

Yours truly, J. W. O'KEEFE.

Pasco, W. T., Jan. 12, 1888.

Best Wishes and Best Help.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: I am glad that you and Macdonald thought enough of this coast to come and start a journal. Hope you will be successful. A long life to the editorial business! Inclosed find $2, with best wishes to you both. J. R. TOZER.

Ashland, Or., Jan. 14, 1888.

Still Alive.

BROTHER S. P. PUTNAM: I see you "still live," and have already got a FREETHOUGHT paper in full blast on this Pacific Coast. Good luck to you—go ahead. I can't help much, but if you send me your paper I will be in the city in about two weeks and will call and see you. I imagine you will succeed.

SAMOS PARSONS.

San Jose, Cal., Jan. 16, 1888.

Faint-hearted Missouri Christians.

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: I wish you and the Man with the Badge-pin unbounded success in your new enterprise, and I think the great West and the Pacific slope is a good field for FREETHOUGHT to work and thrive in. Long may it live and much good may it do.

I have a racket with the orthodox every now and then; and the manager of the Opera House offered the building free, lighted and warmed, for a discussion, but the other side would not accept. I am yours fraternally,

G. G. BECK.

Rockport, Mo., Jan. 15, 1888.

Eastern Enthusiasm

DEAR BROTHERS PUTNAM AND MACDONALD: Hurrah for FREETHOUGHT and its gallant editors! I glory in your spunk, and accordingly send my subscription and a million best wishes besides. I shall also, as a matter of course, do all possible for the little stranger. Yours, as ever, for Light, Liberty and Liberalism,

GEO. N. HILL.

Boston, Mass., Jan. 14, Year of Science 288.

A Religious Duty Discharged.

FRIEND PUTNAM: I consider it a religious duty to subscribe to your noble effort. I hope that you will make it a great success. Inclosed find $2 for my subscription. Yours for the truth under any and all circumstances.

CHARLES ROTH.

Denver, Col., Jan. 16, 1888.

Accounted Among the Workers.

EDITORS FREETHOUGHT: Two copies of FREETHOUGHT to hand. Hope you will be successful in your enterprise. Count me in. I have made up my mind to do what little or meekie good I can the few or many years I may be above ground. And it rejoices my heart to see the work in the hands of such pioneers as yourselves—Stevens, Reynolds, Remsburg, Jamieson. By the bye, I am acquainted with Jamieson, and would be proud to be considered a brother to all such. I am a Materialist myself, of the Agnostic school; have been a subscriber to the Investigator for six or seven years, and this year of the Truth Seeker also. I pass them all around after reading, that they may do as much good as possible. That I call casting bread upon the waters, etc. Wishing you every success in life, I am

Fraternally, JAMES A. GREENHILL.

Clinton, Iowa, Jan. 12, 1888.

Si Slokum the Humorist.

FRIEND GEORGE: O "G. E. M., of purest ray serene," I, like all the readers of the Truth Seeker, was knocked completely out, aye, "galley west" was knocked, by that incidental notice (that's all it was) that you had "departed this life" (in New York, you know) for a "future life" in Frisco.

I went right over immediately to "see about it," and found it all too true—too, damned true, my boy! But there is no help for it. The cold and naked truth I covered into my regretful bosom, tucked it up as well as I could, and got safely home with it.

I read to-day your letter in the Truth Seeker with pleasure. You have given your paper just the name I bet (with myself) you would. It is pat, pertinent, and palpable, as it were. It is concrete and expressive. He who runs and reads may know whereof Freethought treats, without wondering.

G. E. M. of p. r. s., send me a copy of the first issue, No. I, Vol. 1. George, you left an aching void at 28 Lafayette place, sure. Why, damn it, I feel lonesome myself whenever I think of the place, and a visit is robbed of a good half the former pleasure. Hoping the skies of fortune will prove as bright as the skies of the universe that spread over, Frisco, I remain, Yours truly, SI. SLOKUM.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Jan. 12, 1888.

Active Work in Utah.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: By to-day's mail I received the initial number of FREETHOUGHT. I have carefully read it through and am glad to acknowledge to you that it is just what is wanted in the West. I will do my best to work up a list of subscribers in this city and county.

Dr. York will be with us again in a week for a three months' lecture engagement, arrangements having been made for him to lecture weekly (Sunday evenings) in the Walker Opera House; the intervals between the Sunday's will be spent by the doctor in the surrounding settlements. These lectures will result in great good to the cause of Freethought in Utah, the land of polygamy and the mental "dark continent" of America.

Arrangements are being perfected for a grand Paine Anniversary to be held under the auspices of the Utah Secular Union. Dr. York will, on that occasion, deliver an oration on the great and illustrious Infidel. There will also be music and literary exercises. It is by no means a case of "counting chickens before they are hatched," to predict that on Sunday, Jan. 29th, the Walker Opera House will be crowded with a gathering of liberty-loving Freethought people, glad to do honor to the name of one who did, in his day, so much for the freedom of man and the elevation of his race.

Wishing FREETHOUGHT all the success it deserves under the able direction it has been started, and in the cause which has made it a necessity, I have the pleasure to be

Fraternally yours, A. B. THOMPSON,
Cor. Sec'y Utah Sec. Union.
Salt Lake City, Jan. 14, 1888.

Welcome Names.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Dear Friend: We hasten to add our names to your list. We have other Liberal papers, but we cannot do without, FREETHOUGHT. We think you have made a good move, and heartily appreciate your efforts, feeling sure you will make a success of your Liberal journal. We have missed "News and Notes," and shall be very glad to get them again from the West. Please extend our best wishes to G. E. M., who is indeed a gem in the editor's chair. Truly your friends,

F. M. and L. L. D. GUSTIN.
Ft. Madison, Iowa, Jan. 12, 1888.

Thanks, Thanks.

MR. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: I am glad we are to have an out-and-out Pacific Coast Freethought paper. From my knowledge of the editors I should say FREETHOUGHT will be a live paper. Of course we shall miss in the Truth Seeker the Annual Idler's spicy letters from his old home, and his badge-pin will no longer illuminate the Manhattan Liberal Club, but it will no doubt shine with greater brilliancy in the Golden state. We wish you both all the success you will no doubt merit. Inclosed is $2 for FREETHOUGHT. Yours truly,

KATE P. WOLFARD.
Colfax, W. T., Jan. 12, 1888.

With Pleasure.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Esq., Dear Friend: Put me down as a subscriber. To say that such a journal as FREETHOUGHT is needed on the Pacific Coast is putting it mild. You have a large field, and I hope you may reap an abundant harvest. May you be able to wake up many of the indifferent Liberals, and make yours the best Freethought journal published. Yours for the death of superstition.

A. K. COWARD.
Norwalk, Cal., Jan. 17, 1888.

A Jeweler's Estimate.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD, Esteemed Friends: Accept my sincerest congratulations and best wishes in your new and glorious enterprise, and I am sure such a journal as FREETHOUGHT, under your joint editorial management, will prove a great success. I like your No. 1. It is A No. 1, and your leader on the leading idea you intend to represent is a splendid specimen of editorial composition and epigrammatic power. G. E. M.'s gems will now be offered the public in larger variety, and will, I am sure, find thousands of admirers. Rochelle, Ill., Jan. 14, 1888. WETTSTEIN.

Peter Eckler.

FRIEND MACDONALD: Vol. I., No. 1, of your new Liberal journal, called FREETHOUGHT, arrived to-day, and is indeed a most welcome visitor. Please to place my name on your subscription books, and if your success but equals my good wishes the circulation of FREETHOUGHT will soon rival the sworn affidavits that appear so frequently in the New York World. FREETHOUGHT is a good name for a good paper. It is devoted to good objects, by good men, and will, I trust, do good service for the Liberal cause. Yours ever, PETER ECKLER.
New York, Jan. 14, 1888.

A Letter from an Author.

MY DEAR PUTNAM: Your paper received. I think you are one of the bravest of men to issue an Agnostic journal in that hot-bed of Catholicism, San Francisco. You must be ready, without notice, to dodge lighted lamps as at Ukiah. But speak and write you as you always have done—boldly, for the right. Speak and write of things and people as we find them, and of this world only. Say to the people that in order to make themselves and those around them happy they must banish the myths and the phantoms of their imagination; that it is a waste of time to occupy themselves with objects imperceptible to the senses, and that if they will but inquire into the origin of things they will learn that all gods are the product of fear and ignorance. Say to the president of the United States that his recognition of the pope is the first step taken by any president of this republic toward Rome with a stone to whet the sword that will cut our throats. I trust that this Catholic electioneering policy will result in placing at the head of our government a man who will have the fortitude and honor to discharge the duties of his office without catering to a church that is striving hard to place its cross above our flag.

I shall read your journal carefully, and hope you will be successful in teaching the people of the West the truths that make men and women free and happy. Send FREETHOUGHT right along, I am truly yours,

O. B. WHITFORD.
Butte, Mont., Jan. 14, 1888.

Assurance of Success.

FRIEND PUTNAM: Put me down for FREETHOUGHT. I feel confident that all the friends here who are able will help you in your venture. You can book yourself for a lecture in Coos county once a year at least. The Liberals here stood by me manfully in the last campaign.

I have become acquainted with George through the Truth Seeker, so give him regards and a hearty hand shake for me. Hoping that FREETHOUGHT may have a bright and successful future, I am yours fraternally,

J. HENRY SCHROEDER.
Arago, Coos Co., Or., Jan. 12, 1888.

More Workers Needed.

FRIENDS: FREETHOUGHT came to hand. Send it regularly, and we will induce others to take it if we can. Oh, how we need more outspoken men and women to popularize the Nine Demands of Liberalism. We are with all workers for the emancipation of the human mind from the fear of future suffering. Hoping you will meet with abundant success, Yours for progress, L. and K. PARKER.
Anaheim, Cal., Jan. 14, 1888.

Ever-present Help.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: Your journal FREETHOUGHT has come to hand. I have been expecting it, knowing you were coming to this coast, and I have been anxious to see in what style and shape it would make its appearance, and I must say I like both. From what I know of both of you, I am confident that you will make a success. I will try to help you along. Inclosed you will find my subscription. Yours fraternally, ROBERT GUNTHER.
Eureka, Cal., Jan. 16, 1888.

Willing to Reform.

"George, you ask me to be your wife; to give you my heart, my all. Think well of what you say, and then tell me if you will grant me one small favor."
"Anything you ask, my love."
"Then promise me that you will never smoke another cigar as long as you live."
"I promise, dear."
"And doesn't it cost you a pang?"
"Not a pang. I'd rather smoke a pipe anyhow."—Nebraska State Journal.

An Unpleasant Recollection.

"How it all comes back to me," murmured the poet sadly, as with practiced fingers he estimated the thickness of the portly package of MS. which he had just taken from the post-office.

The Underlying Cause of Virtue.

Minister—And so the little boys asked you to play marbles on Sunday, Bobby, and you refused?

Bobby—Yes, sir.

Minister—Now tell me why it was, Bobby, that you refused.

Bobby—'Cause they wouldn't play for keeps.

East and West.

Though in the East the sun may rise,
Thence shape its course along the skies,
And to the West then take its way
To belt the earth with circling day;
Yet not the East should proudly boast
The thronement of the shining host,
Or strive to sit in judgment on
The labors of the West's late one.

Where'er the sun may throw its beam,
At morn, or noon, or evening gleam,
That spot is gloried by the ray
And equal shares the orb of day.
While every place in honor lies
Which does good work beneath the skies,
And by that sign abides each one
Lit by the sun as it rolls on.

If in the East first flashed a mind
Which lured a path for human kind,
And to the West his feet made way
To gird the earth with civil day;
Then to the West is due full claim
For bearing high the guiding flame,
And to his praise sing loudest song
Who swiftest bears Truth's torch along.

When all the circles of the globe
The spreading light shall gaily robe,
The Eve shall to the morning say:
"I am the better half of day;"
So round the earth the truth and light
Dispelt the phantoms of the night,
The West a new-made East blooms on,
The East becomes the Western one.

JOHN P. GUILD.

You Have Struck a Rich Lead.

MR. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: Yours received. I am pleased to hear that you and G. E. Macdonald have started a Freethought journal in San Francisco. May success attend you. I am now engaged in prospecting here in Southern Oregon. Inclosed find $2 as my subscription to FREETHOUGHT. I wish to commence with the first number. Yours, JONATHAN WELLS.

Gold Hill, Or., Jan. 17, 1888.

An Earnest Worker.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, My Dear Sir: I was agreeably surprised to get your note stating that you, in connection with Mr. Geo. E. Macdonald, had commenced the publication of a Freethought paper on this coast. I am not personally acquainted with Mr. Macdonald, but from letters of his that have appeared in the Truth Seeker I am of the opinion that you have made a good selection—got a "wheel-horse"—and that FREETHOUGHT on the Pacific Coast will receive such an impetus that it will finally reach every house, and your paper be read by every man, woman, and child in the West. I think you have made a good selection also in locating in San Francisco. A Freethought journal was greatly needed on this coast, and I believe it will prove a success. "The woods are full of" Freethinkers all along the coast, but superstition still lingers in the brains of many. We are gaining ground rapidly with the male portion of humanity, and I feel hopeful that time will work a change with the women of this favored land.

When it comes I will show it around, and get subscribers if I can; will subscribe myself; will send you the necessary $2 in a few days.

I will now expect you at my house when you visit Southern California again, whether I can arrange for you to lecture in Del Mar or not. I want you to see my place, and see what a man can do in the way of bettering his condition in this world without the fear of the Lord or help from the "Almighty friend." I am building up a little heaven of my own, and will never call in any of the gods, past or present, to assist me in its management. I feel abundantly able, mentally, morally, and otherwise, to attend to all its affairs. Yours truly,

H. L. SHAUG.

Del Mar, Cal., Jan. 15, 1888.

The Author of "Why Don't God Kill the Devil."

FRIEND S. P. PUTNAM: Your kind letter has been received; also the first number of FREETHOUGHT. I am glad to learn that you have turned up in California—a land of gold, and of fruit, and of wheat. I hope you will get enough gold to line your pockets and pay your bills; enough fruit to keep your circulation lively and strong, and enough wheat to repair the waste of your bone and muscle. I like the name and appearance of your paper; the articles have the right ring, and I inclose you a subscription. As theology is old and sick and Freethought young and growing, I am sure you can succeed. The Pacific Coast is a wide field, and the people liberal enough to support FREETHOUGHT. I wish you abundant success; and if your energy and talent do not make it come, we may conclude that the world is a failure, and that God can not kill the devil.

JOS. HAIGH.

Chebanse, Ill., Jan. 20, 1888.

Accompanied by Proof.

DEAR FRIEND PUTNAM: I was glad to receive FREETHOUGHT, and to prove what I say I hereby send, with my highest regards for the paper as well as for its editors, the needful for the first journey around the sun.

Fresno, Cal., Jan. 18, 1888. JOSEPH LEE.

For One Year.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: Put my name down for one year's subscription to FREETHOUGHT. Glad to see you come to the West to stay. Yours truly, CHAS. DE LA BAUME.

Uintah, Utah, Jan. 14, 1888.

"Freethought" in a Thriving Town.

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: I heartily hope for you abundant success with FREETHOUGHT. You can count on me and send a dozen copies. I hope you will not leave Nipomo in the shade when you make your next lecturing tour, as this is a thriving town with a number of Liberals. Please begin my subscription with the first number. Best wishes for your success.

JOHN ROBINETT,

Nipomo, Cal., Jan. 17, 1888.

Too Late.

"My dear friend," said a minister at the bed-side of a sick man, "I want to call your attention to the blessed consolation which religion brings in hours of suffering and danger to those—"

"I'm much obliged to you," interposed the grateful patient, "but you are too late."

"Too late?"

"Yes, sir; my physician says that the crisis is past, and all danger is over."

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Edmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. ## SAMUEL P. PUTNAM

President of the American Secular Union,

Will make his annual lecture tour for 1888 in California, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, Washington Territory, Arizona, Idaho, Montana, and Utah. The purpose of these lectures is the organization of Freethought Societies, the discussion and advancement of the Nine Demands of Liberalism, the acquaintance and fraternal association of the Liberal people of this country.

It is necessary that those who desire lectures shall communicate at once, in order that at the earliest possible moment the route may be laid out, so that the largest number of places can be visited with the greatest economy of resources. Our country is so vast in extent, and railroad expenses are so great, that lectures must be given on a pre-arranged route.

It is best, if possible, to arrange for two or more lectures, rather than for one. The expense of advertising is no greater, and much more good can be accomplished—a larger interest will be excited—and there will be a better opportunity for information in regard to the magnitude of our cause and the importance of our principles.

The following are some of the subjects of the lectures, dealing both with the destructive and constructive aspects of Secular work—and its scientific and literary form—giving special attention to the political significance of the Nine Demands:

Universal Mental Liberty,

The New Heaven and Earth,

The Glory of Infidelity,

American Democracy,

The New God,

The Bible: Its Genuineness, Authenticity, Inspiration, and Infallibility,

Thomas Paine: The Thinker, The Patriot,

The Moralist, and the Scholar.

The Moral Power of Unbelief,

Fair Play,

The Dangers Ahead,

Woman and the Bible,

Science and Theology,

Priest, King and People,

Creation and Evolution; or, Miracle and Law,

The Works of Man and the Works of God;

or, Civilization vs. The Raw Material.

The terms of the lectures will be made reasonable to all societies and individuals who desire to co-operate with the work of the American Secular Union. It is expected that hall rent, advertising and local expenses will be provided for—and beyond this, that every Liberal will do his best to help the general cause. By combination of effort local organization can be strengthened and universal interest aroused. The local work and national work depend upon each other. The local work is of the first importance; it is the vital force of the movement—but to have simply local enterprise is to destroy the noblest spirit of Freethought, which is world-wide in its relations. It is through the Union that the broadest humanitarian results can be achieved.

Will not friends instantly interest themselves in this matter, and arrange for lectures, so that dates and subjects may be given, and every possible point be made available for work?

PRESS NOTICES, ETC.

Mr. Putnam is one of the most thorough believers in intellectual liberty in the world. He has written some of the most stirring appeals to the Liberals of this country that I have ever read. He believes that Freethought has a future; that the time is coming when the superstitions of this world will be forgotten—or remembered—some of them with smiles, most of them with tears. Mr. Putnam, although endowed with a poetic nature, with poetic insight, clings to the known, builds upon the experience of man, and believes in fancies only when they are used as the wings of fact. His abilities are of the highest order. He compels the admiration of every one who really loves the just and true.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Putnam, the Freethinker, is the best posted and best talker we have ever had on Wood river. The theater has been crowded every night whenever Mr. Putnam was advertised to speak.—Inter-Idaho, Hailey, Idaho.

S. P. Putnam was greeted by a large and appreciative audience on Sunday night last, and if close attention, interrupted only by frequent rounds of applause, indicates anything, nearly all present felt that they were enjoying a rare intellectual treat, and more than compensated for their time and attention. Putnam is a calm, clear-headed Liberal thinker, a sound reasoner and an eloquent speaker, and is apparently incapable of giving offense to any one who is an honest, earnest seeker for truth.—Avant-Courier, Bozeman, Montana.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - FEBRUARY 4, 1888

THE Catholic Monitor exults over the spread of Catholicism in Boston. The Boston Herald deplores the increase of crime in that city. There is such a thing as cause and effect.

IN the Christian Statesman of September 22, Secretary Weir, of the Reform Association, speaking of the Lord Jesus, exclaims: "To him be glory, and dominion, and power forever in American politics." It is doubtful if "the divine politician," as they call him, will be any improvement upon the "bar-room politician."

THERE is one thing concerning which the people of California have one mind, and that is, to provide facilities for education. The State University has now an income of nearly two hundred thousand dollars a year, about equal to that of Harvard University. There are enough institutions of learning in the state to meet the demand of a population of eight millions of people.

A CATHOLIC paper publishes the following item under the heading, "A Blasphemer's Death! Terrible Warning to Wicked Men:"

The Lenox, Iowa, Time Table relates the death of a man in Taylor county under circumstances that would make it an incident to illustrate a sermon on divine wrath: "A. W. Fullie, living in the northwest part of the county, met an untimely death on a recent Wednesday. He was a man well known in this community and quite wealthy. A week ago, when the first blizzard came, he made use of the expression that 'if there was such a being as God Almighty, he was without love or feeling for humanity, or he would not send such storms upon them,' at the same time declaring that if another such storm came he would go to a climate that had never been cursed with such storms, and escape the vigilance of the Almighty. The storm came on Tuesday morning, and he began preparations for departure. Securing a large trunk, he packed it, and Wednesday morning went to load it into a wagon to haul to Villisca, where he expected to take the afternoon train. He had one end of the trunk into a wagon-box, and was raising the other end from the ground, when his feet slipped from under him, the sharp edge striking him upon the neck, as he lay upon the ground. His neck was broken, and he died almost instantly."

It is quite an ordinary thing for Infidels to be struck by lightning, or to be drowned while fishing on Sunday, but when the Almighty gets to throwing baggage about, and hitting people in the neck, it is time to repeat the remark that God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform.

THE Christian Advocate (Methodist) holds that the church of Rome is "an organized malediction upon the evangelical faith," and that "the virtues of priests are more dangerous than their vices." The Catholic Monitor, speaking of Protestant clergymen, says: "Ah! those preachers! they are the unholy set of humbugs in the whole wicked world." We have, therefore, both Protestant and Catholic authority for stating that priests and preachers are a bad lot. Let us hope that they may see the error of their ways, and ultimately reform.

ABBE GARNIER, who is delivering a series of "religious dialogues" in Europe, has created a sensation by repeating an imaginary conversation between God and the Devil. Those whose feelings are shocked by the abbe can calm their excitement by reading the book of Job. They will there find one of the oldest dialogues on record, the dramatis personæ being Jehovah and Satan. It is interesting, though shocking, to know, on ecclesiastical testimony, that these personages are still on speaking terms. According to some authorities, their relations have hitherto been strained.

A LIVING WITNESS.

Until recently the Mormon Church has had a great advantage over every other religion. It has had a living witness in David Whittmer, who said that he saw God, and who made an affidavit to that effect. Mormonism is the only religion that ever had an affidavit as to the genuineness of its Bible. An affidavit is much better than a miracle.

The living witness of Mormonism is now dead. He was evidently a thoroughly honest man, and he solemnly averred that he saw God, and that God declared the book to be true. There was not the slightest motive for this witness to tell a lie. So far as the testimony is concerned, the Mormon religion has a better foundation than any other. Every argument by the Christian apologist in favor of his belief applies with greater force to Mormonism, and there is no possible escape from accepting the latter if the former is accepted, by the logic of the theologian. Besides witnesses and miracles the Mormon church has affidavits. What a support orthodox Christianity might have to-day if it could put forth the affidavits of Paul, Peter, John, and the other apostles!

However, Mormonism has no longer the advantage of a living witness. There is no one who can now say he saw God, unless a new revelation is made. A while ago if one doubted he might go to David Whittmer, and from his own lips receive the testimony. This can no longer be done, and hereafter Mormonism must rely upon dead witnesses. He who accepts it must accept it upon faith as he does other religions. Considering the advantage of a living witness this is unfortunate for the new religion.

It is a query why God doesn't always have living witnesses. They would be a great help to the inquiring mind. Doubts could be easily settled. A book revelation is very unsatisfactory. A few honest, sincere, respectable, living witnesses, then, would be a vast improvement. The Mormon religion is to be commiserated for its irreparable loss. Still, however, it leads all the other religions. It has affidavits.

PAINÉ HONORED.

All the seats on the first floor, and nearly every seat in the gallery, of Irving Hall were filled last Sunday evening when Captain A. F. Scott opened the Paine Anniversary meeting. Between five and six hundred were present, and they made as fine an audience as could be gathered on this continent. Many were from out of town. There were N. D. Goodell, the well-known architect of Sacramento; Philip Cowen, of Petaluma; Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Williams, of Ogden, Utah; A. H. Schou and wife, W. B. Patterson and wife, and Mr. Broneer and wife, the latter a granddaughter of Abner Kneeland, all of Oakland.

Irving Hall is an art gallery. Hundreds of pictures hung upon its walls, and at the rear of the stage was a magnificent painting of Thomas Paine. The exercises opened promptly at the appointed time with an overture by Professor Pettibone. Captain Scott was invited to the chair by the committee. The captain is an oldtime Californian. He is dignified, scholarly, eloquent, and patriotic, and his lofty sentiment, when he spoke of Paine and the old flag, set the hall ringing with applause. There was inspiration in the speaker's words, and while he spoke the listener might almost hear again the bugle blast, the rolling drum, and a strain of martial music. Captain Scott gave a brief biography of Paine, pointing out his leading characteristics, which he found to be patriotism, courage, and devotion to the cause of truth. Examples illustrating these traits were given. In closing he said: "As Thomas Paine did so much to secure our liberties, let us ratify him and the old flag here to-night; and we do ratify it, every thread and every fiber of it, every star and every stripe on it. We ratify it from Bunker hill to Richmond; as it waved from the battlements of Mexico; as it flung its starry splendors to the breeze from the mastheads of the Constitution, the Hornet, the Wasp; as it swept through Georgia to the sea; as it floated in triumph at the head of our boys in blue—a flag that has been on every sea and in every land under the whole heavens, that can fling back the morning's beam or meridian ray without taint or pollution; to which the toiling soldier can turn amid the smoke and carnage of battle for renewed hope, vigor, and inspiration; on which the glazing eye of the dying veteran can rest with a God bless thee, thou banner of the free! With such a flag and such a country, washed by oceans, backboned by mountains, ribbed by the everlasting hills, sluiced by rivers the affluence of whose waters can bear the commerce of nations, populated by a people who love justice and practice it, with no North, no South, no East, no West, we ratify it from Maine to Texas, from the Atlantic coast, breasting her icy currents, to where she dips her uttermost western bounds in the Pacific."

The next speaker was Mr. Samuel P. Putnam, President of the American Secular Union. His address was received with hearty cheers. He said:

MR. PUTNAM'S ADDRESS.

There are representative men in the world's history, who stand for something more than their individual careers. They become symbols of great movements, of civilizations, of national life. When we speak their names a picture rises before us of era in which they lived, of which their fame is the noblest interpreter. Homer is the supreme Greek genius; he is the representative man of that brilliant people, and in his lines to-day throbs the glory of that ancient world. The Iliad is more than the Iliad; it expresses the heart, the mind, of Greece; its poetry, its philosophy, its art. In Cæsar we see the imperial greatness of Rome, and the illustration of its original force. His Commentaries are interpretations of his age. Jesus is pre-eminently a representative man. He expresses a movement, not simply himself. Millions have been as good, as noble, as Jesus. Other characters have been greater, other minds more richly endowed, which have never emerged from obscurity, because their lives have been simply individual, and represented nothing beyond. Jesus appeared at that point of history when the hopes and aspirations of a struggling world must find some tangible object around which to gather and become a living force. Jesus was that object, and therefore his name is wonderful, not because of himself, but because of the movement of which he happened at a particular juncture to be the topmost wave. Shakespeare is the representative man of England. In his pages is more of the history of his race than in any other book. In the fertile mind of Goethe German character displays its highest lustre, and in Voltaire we behold the noble qualities of France. We must read the lives of these great men in order to understand history and literature aright. We must know them as individuals in order to read the signs of the times in which they flourished; for they are really the children of their age, and the fathers of that which succeeded. They are both receptive and creative; susceptible to every influence of their environment, and moulded to what they are by a sympathetic and yielding nature, but strong as iron in the expression of their will and genius. They are masters of the age in which they live, because, first of all, in heart and brain they are saturated and overcome by the spirit of that age. They are thus more than themselves—they are pictures that reveal the manifold progress of mankind.

Paine was a representative man, and we hold this anniversary to-night in his honor, not simply because he was Thomas Paine, but because he was the American Revolution; because in him we see the meaning and grandeur of that movement; because, without understanding Thomas Paine, we cannot understand the history of our nation. Thomas Paine was the child of the people. He mingled with them. He knew them. He realized their thought, their hope. He felt out of the common heart the change that was coming—the overthrow of tyranny, the advent of freedom. He was the first to understand the meaning of the American Revolution. He was the first to declare in favor of independence. He pronounced those fateful words, "The free and independent states of America." In him, more than in any one, was expressed the nature of that vast change. He was its spokesman. His pen was living with its thought. When hearts were weak, he aroused them to fresh enthusiasm. He was the prophet of the future, and, in the darkest day, saw the light that was coming.

The mind of Paine was of the first order. It was broad, discriminating, and inventive. It was not tied down to the old, while it accepted every advance that had been made. He was radical. He saw things as they really were. He comprehended universal relations. He was unawed by priest or king. He penetrated beneath the surface. The prince to him was no better than the peasant. He saw the man, and not the tinsel that covered him. He was not dazzled by power nor won by wealth. Reason was his constant guide, and from lofty heights he beheld the past—its wide wanderings, its hopes, its struggles, its defeats, its successes, and, with keen vision, he saw the onward tendencies of it all—that the good and beautiful were prevailing, that liberty was advancing, that knowledge was making nobler conditions, and so his outlook was grand and inspiring, and he was a leader of men, and could cheer them on to heroic endurance and splendid victory.

The intellectual supremacy of Paine was allied with a heart as warm as ever beat within the breast of man. He was a patriot, a lover of his country, but his country was not of narrow boundaries. It was not merely love of native soil, but of humanity itself. "The world is my country; to do good, my religion." This was his declaration, and nobly he fulfilled it. On two continents he labored for the rights of man. Wherever there was a struggling people, there was his home—there was his church. He was a true American because he was a citizen of the world; because he recognized that brotherhood follows the circling sun, and that all nations are bound together, and what is for the happiness of each is for the happiness of all. His patriotism was devotion to all mankind. Wherever there was any battle to fight for freedom, there was his chosen place.

The moral qualities of Paine were equal to his mental endowments. He possessed a deeply religious nature—if by religion we mean surrender to some great principle. The Quaker blood was in his veins, and in his intense activity we see the flashing forth of the "inner light." It was for the sake of religion in its highest sense that he criticised the Bible. He did not do it in any wantonness of thought, merely for the sake of destroying. He was not an iconoclast only, he was a builder. He stood for the moral sentiments, for the dignity of man. Said he: "A system of religion which shocks the mind of a little child, cannot be a true system." This is the highest morality. All through the writings of Paine are these just and manly sentiments. Paine believed in justice. He believed in a God, but a God of justice, of universal love. He rejected the partial, savage God of the Bible. Such a God is immoral and represents human degradation. It was this that excited the indignant zeal of Paine. The monstrous doctrines of orthodoxy create fear and not reverence; they crush the mind and destroy every noble aspiration. Paine wished men to believe in a deity whose attributes were glorious, whose revelations in the splendor of nature were attractive and enlightening, whose character was beautiful, whose deeds were gracious, whose laws were beneficent. Paine wrote the "Age of Reason" in order to clear God, if there were one, of the slanders heaped upon Him. His motive was intensely religious. It was for the sake of God as well as for the sake of man. Those who believe in a deity, should thank Paine for vindicating the character of God, for proving that he could not have made a revelation like that of the Bible. It was not an intellectual question, merely, but a moral question. To enthrone the God of the Bible was to destroy every principle of right. To uphold the priest was to uphold the king and all the tyrannies of the world. It was to praise vice instead of virtue; to crown falsehood in the place of truth. It was the spirit of martyrdom that animated Paine. It was that sublime spirit by which one will do and dare all for the sake of conscience. Paine risked everything that he might benefit his race. No Christ was ever more faithful to an ideal purpose than he.

There was no calculation about Paine. He was spontaneous in his heroism. He didn't stop to measure results. He only perceived the imperious duty, and the obligation was on him, without regard to consequence. The welfare of mankind—its progress—was the law of his being, and this he constantly obeyed. He never flinched, though death stared him in the face and the scorn of the world. He was afraid of nothing. He was consecrated to simple, absolute truthfulness. In the camp, in the prison, before the angry multitude, to the howl of the church, to the sword of the king, he was the undaunted soldier of humanity. His colors never fell. His moral fidelity was equal to his commanding intellect.

"The Age of Reason" is a remarkable book—an epoch-making book. It was written in prison. The author had no advantage of libraries; he must rely simply on materials gathered during a busy life. The book is a masterpiece of scholarship. Its positions have not been overthrown to this day. Its conclusions have been substantially accepted even by orthodox biblical scholars. It is to-day a living literature. Its admirable style, its candid spirit, its irresistible logic, place it in the front rank of the literary productions of his or of any age. It is one of the books that will always be read. Its ideas must ever influence a progressive world, and those ideas were never more fitly expressed. The language is immortal. It is simple, harmonious, eloquent. The common mind can understand it, while the subtlest intellect can discover new beauties in its thoughtful flow. It is a statement of fundamental principles applied to the greatest of subjects, the relation of man to the universe. This is an exhaustless theme, for the universe is endless, and the spirit of man an ever-growing process; and the master mind who can interpret this relation clear from superstition, with elevated sentiment and brilliant force, will have a universal and permanent fame. He will be a fireside favorite. Such is Paine. He is not simply a political writer, a critic; he is a literary power, like Homer, like Shakespeare. He writes history and he makes history. He has the inspiration of nature itself. He represents life—like the river, like the sea.

Thus Paine stands forth in history, bold, illustrious; a noble representative of humanity. His name speaks volumes for liberty, for knowledge, for progress. His career is a lesson for all ages. The thinker, the patriot, the scholar, will do him honor, and make his memory green. He is of the past—a shining landmark. He is also of the future. He is our leader still. We need his splendid example, and this memorial should be an impulse for to-morrow's gain.

The battle for human rights is not yet ended. We need the clarion voice of Thomas Paine in the politics of this land. We need a leader who is of the people and for the people. We need honesty, we need sincerity, we need fearlessness, we need men who are untempted by power and pomp. The politician of to-day, like the priest, is a hypocrite. He dares not be truthful. In almost every district he works the "religious racket," and wins the votes of the church by submission to its authority. He makes believe for the sake of office. Superstition is powerful. It is organized. It is wealthy, it is fashionable. No man can be president if he opposes ecclesiastical pretensions. The church monopoly is the father of all other monopolies. There is need once more of "Common Sense," of the "Age of Reason" and "Rights of Man." The bloody battle is over, but the moral and intellectual conflict is still going on, and the brave heart is wanted and the lofty mind. There must be the sway of reason, of education, of knowledge.

Christianity is the foe of progress. It cannot be otherwise. It must look back. It is anchored to a dead age. It settles no problem of human destiny. It leaves this world a wreck and has no salvation except in the skies. This is what Christianity essentially is, although in outward form it is mingled with much that is humanitarian and progressive, for the members of its churches are men and women, and have human wants and must supply them, but as a system of thought Christianity is altogether of the past. It makes no heaven here in this world. It says: "Submit to the powers that be;" "Servants obey your master ;" "Women keep silence in the churches, and if you wish to learn anything ask your husbands at home." To what a dense ignorance some women are condemned by such a mandate! This is the spirit of Christianity. It is the ally of tyranny, it is the patron of ignorance. It says: Stand where you are; cling to the cross—there is no more; think not, act not; simply believe.

This is what Paine saw—that Christianity could not be reconciled to an advancing world. It must be destroyed. It sets God against man, it degrades human nature, it enthrones superstition.

Let our vision be as clear as his, and with the added wisdom of a hundred years, let us realize that man must be ennobled and not deify; that our humanity is the supreme being; that there is no virtue greater than human virtue, no justice greater than human justice, no love diviner than human love, no intelligence nobler than human intelligence. Our Bible to-day is the Bible of all the races of men—of all hopes, aspirations, and toils; our service is the Golden Rule, as ancient as human brotherhood; our God is man's creative genius; our goal is duty well performed; our paradise the happy reward of free and honorable work. Long as humanity struggles, long as virtue grows, long as justice inspires, long as liberty cheers—so long will the voice of virtue, of justice, of liberty, of humanity, be the voice of our illustrious hero, "The world is my country; to do good my religion."

Mr. Geo. T. Bruce, the well-known temperance advocate, followed in a ringing speech. Thomas Paine, he said, had been maligned by the Christian world because he wrote a book which the common people could understand, and which the clergy could not answer. He had been accused of being a drunkard by men who themselves were drinkers as a class, and who indorsed such toppers as Noah and Lot. Mr. Bruce believed that many preachers at the present time drew much of their inspiration from the bottle. But Freethought was fast silencing the priests and vindicating the name of Paine. The churches, said Mr. Bruce, claim government support because of their alleged moral influence. How is it, then, he inquired, that the states having the most churches have also the most criminals? Someone wrote to the warden of a penitentiary to inquire what were the religious convictions of the inmates. The warden replied, giving the number of Catholics, Methodists, Baptists, etc., according to their distinguished precedence, and added: "We have one Infidel, but his Infidelity is not of a pronounced character." "Not pronounced enough," said Mr. Bruce, "to keep him out of jail." The speaker humorously maintained that it was an act of charity to have chaplains in the penitentiary, because eminent Christians were thus brought in communion with each other.

"The beautiful, fertile, and wide-extended valleys of California," said the speaker in closing, "were never intended as a home for priestcraft. The grand old Sierras, 'the palaces of Nature,' were never erected as a monument to superstition. The ocean voices of the Pacific were never tuned to sing a Freethought requiem. California, brightest star in the constellation, her green-bound hills begemmed with flowers, her snow-crowned mountains, with all their lofty majesty, grand in their physical beauty, are but symbolic of the moral and intellectual grandeur of our people when the principles of Thomas Paine prevail."

Professor Seymour, the phrenologist, delivered a short address eulogistic of Paine, calling attention to his great services, and pronouncing him worthy of the homage which was destined to be paid him more and more as we become familiar with his life, his character, and his heroic deeds.

During the exercises Mr. H. W. Faust called attention to a fine oil painting which had been presented to the committee to be disposed of by lottery for the benefit of an aged lady who desired to enter the Old Women's Home in Oakland. The tickets sold rapidly; the drawing was promptly made, and Mrs.

Ruth Briggs, holding the lucky number, obtained the picture, but at once gave it back to be sold at auction. The sale added a generous sum to that previously raised. At the close of the exercises a temporary organization was formed, with Mr. Faust as president.

This meeting and celebration was a success; the speakers and the audience all that could be desired, and Mr. Faust and the other workers are entitled to generous praise for their services in the preliminary arrangements. Along with that of Washington, the birthday of Thomas Paine is becoming a national anniversary.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE.

EDITOR FREETHOUGHT: As chairman of the Paine Celebration Committee, I have the following report to make: Subscriptions by friends, $33.25; collection in hall, $20.70; total, $53.95. Expenses were as follows: Hall, $20; music, $5; Printing, $8, advertising, $6.75; miscellaneous expenses, $1.25; total, $41. This leaves a net cash balance, $12.95. This the committee has decided to give to two worthy old friends of Freethought. First, a lady 67 years old who has taken care of herself for fifty years. On account of feeble health, she cannot work, and wishes to raise the money to go to the Old Ladies' Home in Oakland. The other is a worthy man of 77 years, who has lived and worked for many years in this city, but is now nearly incapacitated. He needs this, and all help that can be given.

Leaving it to FREETHOUGHT to give a report of the entertainment, we kindly thank all who aided in making this occasion so enjoyable to our Freethought friends.

H. W. FAUST, 307 Fourth st., S. F.,
Chairman Paine Celebration Committee.

The Day in San Jose.

The San Jose Paine meeting was well attended. The following programme was carried out: Overture, cornet and piano, National Potpourri, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Schwartz; recitation, "Theophrastus Brown," Miss Larilla Woodhams; song, Miss Emma Degner; Samuel P. Putnam's poem entitled "Thomas Paine," Cassie Jordan, seven years of age; address, Mrs. R. H. Schwartz. A short and spirited address followed by Professor Allen, of Chicago. The floor was then cleared for dancing, which was enjoyed by those participating until twelve o'clock. The stage presented a very pretty appearance, the setting representing an out-door scene. One could look (as it appeared) far back into a forest. In the center of the stage was suspended a fine portrait of Thomas Paine. Just in front of this was a table on which were placed several bouquets of flowers and a picture of S. P. Putnam, while just above hung that grand motto, in large, distinct lettering: "The world is my country: to do good, my religion."

On either side of the stage were hung pictures of George Washington and R. G. Ingersoll, with stands of flowers in front of them. In front of the stage the Old Flag was gracefully draped, while smaller flags were scattered here and there. Upon the stage were seated Messrs. Magenheimer, Woodhams, Vostrousky, and Professor Allen. The Liberals extend their thanks to the Germania Society for the gratuitous use of their fine hall, also to the press, for the kind and extended notices given.

ADDRESS OF MRS. SCHWARTZ.

The American heart holds sacred the memory of all those who have helped to make America the glorious republic that she is. Patriotic enthusiasm is at its height on each Fourth of July, for on that day the Declaration of Independence was signed—as Colonel Ingersoll says, "the grandest, bravest, the profoundest political document that was ever signed by the representatives of a people." On the 30th of May we bring our floral offerings, silent tokens of affection for those who have sacrificed their lives for their country. We stand with outstretched hands for those who yet live, ready to do what lies in our power for those to whom we are indebted for the removal of slavery—that terrible blot upon our fair land. On the 22d of February was born one who has taken a high place in the hearts and homes of the American people. Bands have played, enthusiastic speeches have been made, people have gathered from far and near to celebrate the birthday of a man that helped to make freedom a possibility in America, who helped to plant the tree of liberty in our midst, from whose topmost bough floats the grand old flag, the Stars and Stripes. This man is George Washington.

But there is another great man whom (be it said to their shame) the American people seem to have forgotten. This man stood side by side with Washington, his friend and counsellor. This man is Thomas Paine, whose birthday we have gathered to celebrate to-night. These two men have built for themselves monuments that will stand as long as America stands. On one of these monuments you will find inscribed the name of George Washington, the other the name of Thomas Paine. The people have tried in vain to keep the latter veiled, but the veil is being removed, and that monument shall yet stand forth in all its grandeur, in all its purity; his picture shall yet find its rightful place beside Washington; his name shall yet find its home in every household; his life was devoted to the cause of humanity; he embraced the whole world in his sympathies, as expressed in that grandest of mottoes: "The world is my country; to do good, my religion." As Colonel Ingersoll has well said: "There is in all the utterances of the world no sublimer sentiment. There is no creed that can be compared to it for one moment. It should be wrought in gold, adorned with jewels, and impressed upon every human heart: 'The world is my country; to do good, my religion.'"

His authorship has enabled him to stir the hearts of the world; he believed the pen to be mightier than the sword; that the most formidable weapon against error of every kind was reason; so he aimed his thundering guns, "Common Sense," and "American Crisis," at tyranny. Then he aimed his still larger guns, "Examination of the Prophecies," and "The Age of Reason," at superstition, whose foundation has been seriously shattered by the well-directed shots. On his banner was inscribed universal mental liberty, not mental liberty for the few, but universal mental liberty. That man never lived that was more unselfish, who made greater sacrifices for the freedom of his race; that great, sympathetic heart constantly reached out to benefit his fellow man. When Washington was almost compelled to give up in despair, he entered the army, giving his last dollar, and his salary in advance. He sent out that thrilling work, the "Crisis," which so revived the people that the army was sustained. He also raised the money which enabled Washington to gain that victory that made these the free and United States of America. He then returned to England to aid his own countrymen. Their condition made him feel the oppression of the human race, and he wrote that great book, "The Rights of Man." This book made a marked impression, which has not yet been removed, nor will be until the world is free from the oppression of nobility and aristocracy.

After he had done what he could for his English brethren, he was called almost unanimously to France, and we find that he has done as much toward accomplishing the liberty of the people of France as he has for the people of America; but when the people of France demanded the death of the king, Thomas Paine had the courage to vote against death. To vote against the execution of the king was to vote against his own life. For this sublime act he was condemned to die, and only escaped by what would seem a miracle. [Here the speaker quoted quite lengthily from Colonel Ingersoll's lecture on Paine; then proceeded to read extracts from letters received by Thomas Paine from Washington, Jefferson, Adams, and Monroe, wherein is expressed their high appreciation of him and his works. Had he not sought to emancipate the people from mental slavery, had he not published the "Age of Reason," he might have retained his high position, for none stood higher than he at the close of the revolution. A number of quotations from this book were given, including extracts from Paine's will.] The truly intellectual honor the brave thinkers of the past, for many of us understand what it costs to be a Freethinker to-day, and we know how few can stand the test, for you will find them scattered among the different churches, that they may be recognized in society, that they may be popular, that they may grasp a few more paltry dollars. They pay their money for the advancement of a cause in which they have no sympathy; they sit quietly and listen while the ministers hold their honest views before the people in a dishonest light. Was this the spirit manifested by Thomas Paine? Was this the spirit that has given us the liberty we now enjoy? If the principles of Freethought are worth room in our hearts, they are worth defending. If they are such as will make the world better, it is our duty to give them to the world. Let us stand by our colors, let our light so shine that men may see and glorify the principles that prompt us. How can we be cowards to-day, without blushing at our cowardice, when we think of the time in which Thomas Paine lived, 151 years ago? The tyranny of his day could not crush him. The superstition of that age could not dim the light of his intellect. Loyalty will not allow a malicious enemy to stand between us and those who have come to our aid in time of need. When they marched forth to battle for our rights, to save our homes and the liberty of our country, we asked no questions, and nothing can cancel our obligations to the memory of the dead, as well as the living heroes. I do not believe in hero worship, I do not believe in heaping fortunes upon the few and forgetting the many; but I do believe in remembering our obligations, and allow no false, slanderous fabrications to stand between us and justice.

In the writings of Thomas Paine we find none of that vindictiveness which characterizes the writings of his enemies. Charity and good will are expressed in every line. We cannot think of him without being inspired by his high purposes, by his useful, victorious, heroic life. If we follow his example we shall be just, kind, and charitable; we shall cheer the broken-hearted, we shall extend our hand to those who are not as strong as we, giving them words of encouragement; we shall think for ourselves, decide for ourselves, bravely accept the responsibility of our own actions, reap what we have sown. If the harvest does not yield abundantly we will turn over the soil and sow new and better seed; we will carry sunshine wherever we go, shall be true to ourselves, and, above all, bravely defend the truth. Then it may be said of us, as it was said of him, that "the world is better for our having lived." Let us endeavor to rest upon that high level of the heart to which at times we momentarily arise. Let us endeavor to dwell in the brightness of our better selves. Let us lay down our bitterness in that invisible but surrounding good from which all truth and beauty come. Let us cultivate, with tender care, the love within us, the love of our fellow-beings; that love that will hold our hearts poised above the sordid folly of earth. Let us act upon the grand principles of that motto, "The world is my country; to do good, my religion." Let us, like him, worship at the shrine of science. It rests with us to carry on the work begun by him.

There's a good time coming;
We may not live to see the day,
But earth shall glisten in the ray
Of the good time coming.
Cannon balls may aid the truth,
But thought's a weapon stronger,
We'll win our battle by its aid—
Wait a little longer.

There's a good time coming;
The pen shall supersede the sword,
And right, not might, shall be the lord
In the good time coming.

Worth, not birth, shall rule mankind,
And be acknowledged stronger;
The proper impulse has been given—
Wait a little longer.

There's a good time coming;
War in all men's eyes shall be
A monster of iniquity
In the good time coming.
Nations shall not quarrel then
To prove which is the stronger;
Nor slaughter men for glory's sake—
Wait a little longer.

There's a good time coming;
Little children shall not toil
Under, or above, the soil
In the good time coming;
But shall play in healthful fields
Till limbs and mind grow stronger;
And every one shall read and write—
Wait a little longer.

There's a good time coming;
Let us aid it all we can;
Every woman, every man—
The good time coming.
Smallest helps, if rightly given,
Make the impulse stronger;
'Twill be strong enough one day—
Wait a little longer.

The Stockton Celebration.

The Paine anniversary celebration filled the Avon theater Sunday night, every seat being filled and numerous people standing up a good portion of the evening. On the stage were a handsome oil portrait of Paine and a plaster bust crowned with a laurel wreath. There were, besides these, two stands with flowers, and from each end of the footlight shade garlands extended.

President Freeman opened the exercises by a few appropriate remarks. A song by the Stockton Maennerchor was warmly applauded, after which the president introduced H. B. Loomis.

Mr. Loomis said that those who would vindicate Paine would do well to avoid all illiberality themselves. The trouble with many Liberals was that they could only attack and pull down temples, because unable to rest in them themselves. A century ago it was necessary to dislodge superstition and bigotry, but this necessity has passed away. Liberals must be tolerant and really Liberal, because the world is still too young for all to think alike, and it was against the tyranny of trying to compel all to so think that Paine warred.

Mr. Loomis was warmly applauded several times, and at the close of his address Miss Julia Gage recited the "Two Workingmen," a very pretty selection, with a temperance moral very forcibly shown, and gaining in force by the excellence of the little lady's rendition.

The Maennerchor sang another selection, which was so well received that they had to return and sing another.

Dr. W. W. McKaig was the next speaker. His address was long and full of interest. Dr. McKaig said there were two parties in religion, one of whom loved change, and is never so happy as when being measured for a new suit of ideas. The other hates change, and is afraid to admit a new tenant to the mind lest, like Jehu, it should seize the reins and drive to destruction. Jesus was not afraid of change. He was one of the most radical of reformers. The party opposed to change imagined that they had pre-empted Christianity and inclosed it with a barbed wire fence, imagining that the gates of hell would not prevail against it; but notwithstanding this orthodoxy had to be patched, but hadn't been modernized. As to the eminent men and women of which Christianity boasts, they were eminent because of their faith in God, not because of their orthodoxy; of their usefulness, not because of their creed. Dr. McKaig's address throughout was a plea for freedom of thought, for real liberality, for charitable judgments of those who differ with Liberals, who, of all people, should be tolerant.

Judge Shell's address closed the speaking. He boldly attacked several Solomonic and Christian ideas and maxims, much in the style Ingersoll attacks Mosaics, saying that even the most devoted Christians did not follow them, as they were not true. Among these were the advice to turn the other cheek, to take no heed of the morrow, and "the love of money is the root of all evil." The judge put his ideas in such striking words as to create shouts of laughter, and having done this, he proceeded more soberly to show that the love of money stimulated enterprise to accomplish the greatest possible good for mankind. He intimated broadly that tramps were the only ones who take no heed of the morrow, and showed that some who are revered as eminent Christians not only did not turn the other cheek, but struck the first blow, citing Luther and Calvin as examples. He cited the opposition of orthodoxy to science, and its yielding slowly and grudgingly to every newly-discovered truth it could not crush out of sight, and the success it had enjoyed for a thousand years in crushing out the learning and light of Egypt, the most learned of nations, whose discoveries in science ante-dated Christianity, and of the world at large.

At the close of Judge Shell's address Mrs. A. M. Haines recited the "Gambler's Wife," and received most enthusiastic applause. The exercises closed with a solo, "'Tis Only in My Dream," by J. M. Reynolds.—Stockton Daily Independent.

Thomas Paine.

AN ACROSTIC.

Thomas Paine, all hail! Thy glory shall encircle every land;
Hated priest and despot hoary now appalled before thee stand.
Once a world, oppressed and bleeding, cringing, kissed the lifted rod
Meekly bowing, humbly pleading, owned the "justice" of their God.
Ah! how changed the world now rising rebel to the powers that be,
Sing the song thy wisdom taught them: "Man has rights and shall be free."

Peace on earth; all men are brothers; all are equal—masters none;
And oppression shall be banished from all lands beneath the sun;
In our might we'll hurl the tyrants from the thrones our hands have reared;
None shall heed the proud aspirants whom, enthroned, we basely feared;
Each shall worship in the temple which thy mighty genius reared.

G. W. THURSTON, SEN.

THE edition No. 3, January 21, of FREETHOUGHT, is exhausted, and there are still calls for that number among our subscribers. If any friends have copies of this number of FREETHOUGHT which they do not care to file, will they please return them to this office?

B. F. UNDERWOOD and Mrs. Sara A. Underwood have severed their connection with the Chicago Open Court, and have issued a pamphlet giving the reasons which impel them to the separation. It appears that the owner of the Open Court desired to introduce Dr. Paul Carus as associate editor after having given the paper over to the editorial management of Mr. Underwood. In resigning, Mr. Underwood took the only course consistent with dignity. Editors have rights which business men should learn to respect.

THE case of Harman and Walker, editors of Lucifer, Valley Falls, Kansas, is one which demands the attention of Liberals. These men are under bail, charged by Anthony Comstock with violating the statute against the mailing of obscene literature. The print complained of was a statement of physiological matters, useful in its place, and it does not belong to the kind of literature contemplated by the statute. The fact that Anthony Comstock is concerned in this arrest is a sufficient guarantee that it is an outrage. Those who desire to get full particulars, an to contribute to the defence of Messrs. Harman and Walker, should communicate with E. B. Foote, Jr., 120 Lexington avenue, New York.

EUROPEAN MORALS IN SAN FRANCISCO.

A very bright and witty young lady, a short-time resident of California, makes the following comments upon the customs she has observed:

I am studying California in its moral aspect a little. Unfortunately for the purposes of comparison, my knowledge of New York morals is rather vague. I believe, however, that weN York vice, while it is powerful and far-reaching, is still the under dog, relegated to special regions and byways, overawed, overruled, and ignored by the more orderly classes. Here the situation is reversed—the demi-monde supports the luxuries, the elegancies and pleasures, and if respectability wants any it's got to hob-nob with immorality. Vice is more generous than virtue. Vice has no special prejudice against virtue. Vice graciously permits virtue to share her elegant restaurants and luxurious seaside resorts. Virtue has only the stuffiest restaurants and no seaside hotels at all. Vice does not even look askance at virtue, or note that she is there, and feel insulted at her offensive respectability. The consequence is that it is the way of the truly good that is hard. Most of the innocent amusements are but the portals to sin. It requires the largest amount of heroism and conscious virtue combined to say, "I went for a moonlight drive to the Cliff House." If you are asked to go to the theatre, you want to think twice before accepting; and if you are asked to indulge in that innocent and refreshing pastime of taking ice cream, you must say, "I'll see you blanked first," or words to that effect, or take the consequences.

I didn't learn all this from experience, so it isn't so very reliable—that is, I'm not reliable authority; but I got it "straight" from an old resident, and it is in the air generally. I live in the most moral of respectable hotels; the purity of its morals is only equaled by the vileness of its table. If its linen were only as immaculate as its virtue, it would be a first-class place for a sensitive soul, who is weary of the wiles of this wicked world, to put up at. As it is, its dissolute napkins and dissipated looking tablecloth shock me, and I shall seek some more savory, if less respectable, house, where the host pays more attention to the integrity of its linen and less to the spotlessness of the reputations of its guests.

Later.—The cleanliness of the china is improving, the morality is getting chipped. I may conclude to stay. The most immaculate morals and the most spotless complexions are equally perishable in this sooty San Francisco atmosphere.

THE GREAT TELESCOPE.

An Alta reporter, recently visiting Mr. Swasey, who had charge of the manufacture of the machinery by which the Lick telescope is operated, indicated a desire to know something of the mechanical difficulties necessary to overcome in swinging a telescope so much larger than any heretofore made.

"Well," said Mr. Swasey, "of course you know this instrument is so much larger than anything of the kind in the world that new propositions had to be worked out as one went along. The telescope has fifty per cent. more light-gathering power than any other, and really combines three instruments in one—the spectroscopic, photographic, and equatorial telescopes. It became necessary, then, to design an instrument adapted to all these uses. Of course, after the specifications and conditions had been given to us, there were innumerable things to be considered: With reference to the shape of the column; the thickness of metal for the tube; to avoid, as far as possible, any deflection; the arrangement of the gearing and the mechanism for moving the tube in any desired direction; the place where the assistant should be, and that the machinery be adjusted so that it can be operated with or without the assistant, in case the astronomer chooses to work alone at any time. When you think that the column which supports all the movable parts is as high as a three-story building, and is of cast iron weighing 36,000 pounds, surmounted by a head weighing 8,000 pounds more, in which turns the steel polar axis, ten feet long and a foot in diameter, weighing 2,800 pounds, you will realize what kind of work it must require to have everything so nicely adjusted that one man alone can direct the tube mounted on this structure nearly sixty feet long, and weighing, with its attachments, 8,600 pounds. I felt also that I had $70,000 hanging on to the end of that tube—the amount of my contract—and you can imagine my feeling of relief when we found that all went well.

"No matter how carefully such work is figured, there is always some risk and element of uncertainty, and we had guaranteed to give you the finest thing of its kind in the world. Many of the details of construction became necessary for us to invent, in order that a telescope which, complete, weighs 65,000 pounds, should be used as conveniently and rapidly as many smaller instruments.

"One of the most difficult things to do was to construct a tube fifty-six feet six inches long, four feet in diameter at the centre, tapering toward each end to thirty-eight inches, and weighing, as I said, 8,600 pounds, with everything complete, and to so construct it that the deflection should be slight. To accomplish this we used steel nearly as hard as saw-plate, and riveted in the best possible manner, and we have succeeded in obtaining a tube the deflection of which is only one-thirty second part of an inch, and only one-tenth of an inch with all the photographic apparatus attached. We placed one ton extra weight on it, and then found the deflection only a fraction of an inch more.

"You can imagine what a multiplicity of machinery there must be in order to enable the astronomer to make all the motions, adjustments, and readings from his position at the eye end of the instrument, while by another set of mechanism it may be operated by an assistant at his station on the balcony which surrounds the head of the tower.

"The dome is seventy-five feet in diameter that holds all this machinery. We did not build this, as you know. It was built by your California firm, the Union Iron Works, and I am very glad to say of it that it is a very excellent piece of work, and I don't say this with any disposition to flatter.

"I suppose you have heard that the Lick Observatory is specially suited to stellar photography and spectroscopy, because, as I said before, the telescope collects so large an amount of light. The instrument will probably be mainly devoted to investigation in these two directions."

AMONG THE WORKERS.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM will lecture at San Jose next Sunday, February 5, in Turnverein Hall; at Livermore, February 10 and 11; at Fresno and Oleander, February 17 to 24; at Los Angeles and vicinity, from February 26 to March 1; at National City, San Diego, and vicinity, March 4 to 15. He will visit also during this trip San Jacinto, Del Mar, Monrovia, Nipomo, Santa Barbara, and other places. He will lecture the first week in June at Ashland and vicinity; afterwards in Coos county. He will be at Silverton, Or., June 22, visiting also Molalla, Stayton, McMinnville, Forest Grove, Salem, Portland, Astoria, and other places, during June and July. It is hoped that friends along the route will arrange at the earliest possible moment for lectures, so that definite dates can be made.

THE Sinaloa Colony Club meets at 39 Fourth street on Sunday, February 4, at 2 P. M. All friends of this colony, or of co-operation in any form, are invited to be present. Information about the colony will be cheerfully given, and correspondence is solicited by H. W. Faust, 307 Fourth street, San Francisco, agent of the Sinaloa Colony.

MRS. M. A. FREEMAN's lecture engagements are as follows: Salem, Iowa, February 2; Ottumwa, 4, 5; Leon, 6; Cromwell, 7; Helena, Neb., 9 to 13; Seward, 14 to 17; Rockport, Mo., 18, 19, 20; Shenandoath, Iowa, 24, 25, 26; Guthrie Center, Iowa, March 3; Perry, March 5.

THE Progressive Association meets every Sunday evening at 1220 Folsom street.

A Christian Science Episode.

A Christian scientist, whose time was fully occupied in thinking about the unreality of disease, at $2 per think, once treated a highly unappreciative man for chronic nervous affection of a very painful character. Under the glowing promises of a speedy recovery which the healer made, the man came every day to get his $2 worth of thought on the non-existence of his complaint, and all went well for several weeks. At the end of that time, the pain continuing with a cheerful assiduity that could not be disregarded, the patient grew restive, and intimated that although he had paid out $40, there was not a cent's less pain than before. He also respectfully submitted that a clear statement of just about when the amelioration was expected would be highly satisfactory to him and his family, who were cramped by the daily depletion of their funds. Then the Christian scientist waxed wroth and said: "O you of little faith! Know that you would already have been cured, if you had believed me, when I told you that your pain was not real. Pain and suffering do not exist; they are merely phantasms of the brain. There is no such thing as matter," continued he with so much emphasis that it rattled some silver dollars in his pocket, "none whatever; the only real thing is thought. All this is too subtle for your commonplace mind, and hence I can do nothing for you; you had better go and fill your coarse, unappreciative system with drugs." Then a vision of $40 that had vanished, and of pain that had vanished not, came before the mind of that long-suffering man, and he arose, and he took the Christian scientist, and he mopped the floor with him, smiting him sore upon the head and back, so that when he was through congestions, abrasions, contusions, incipient ecchymoses and epistaxis were among the phenomena presented by his Christian countenance. "There is no real suffering," said the Unappreciative Man, with withering scorn. "The bruises on your alleged head are entirely hypothetical; the choking I gave you was simply an idea of mine, and a devilish good idea, too; the pain which you feel is merely an intellectual fantasy, and your nose-bleed is only one of the ideal conceptions of the cerebral mass. Believe these things not to exist and they vanish. Good-day, sir," and the patient departed.—Medical Visitor.

The Christian Chinaman.

The Mott-street Chinese gambler who plays fan tan, and yet has a Sunday-school book in his table drawer, may be a novelty to the New Yorker, but he is well known here. The San Francisco highbinder is partial to Sunday-schools, for the simple reason that he can get instruction in English and get a valuable acquaintance for no other expenditure than the pretense of a little piety. It would be an interesting exhibit to show the careers of Chinese converts to Christianity in this city. In Hongkong and Shanghai they are proverbially worse in morals than the pagans, and there is no reason for believing that their conversion is any more genuine here.—Chronicle.

A Train of Thought Interrupted.

"We greatly dislike to find fault with any of the customs of our beautiful little city," says a Dakota editor, "but we must, nevertheless, insist that people keep their swine out from under the office of this paper. While engaged at our desk writing our leader on 'The Stability of Our Territorial Institutions' for our paper this week, one of Senator McBride's razor-backed hogs humped up its spine and began scratching its back on the beams, under the floor, jarring the whole building, and making it necessary for us to stop our work on the editorial, crawl under our office, and welt the critter along the side with a column rule. This interrupted our train of thought, and the editorial is not what we could wish."

Judging from His own Experience.

The congregation of a church at Elk Rock were much shocked upon learning that their preacher had departed under most discreditable circumstances. On the following Sunday it seemed to be the aim of nearly every one to hush up the scandal, and, under great restraint, many uninteresting conversations were held, merely to prove that the members of the church could rise above sensational gossip. Just before the services were closed Brother Elisha P. Brookrod arose and said:

"Brethren and sisters, since we last met in this house something which seems to have cast a gloom over this congregation has occurred. We were all much attached to our minister; in fact, we loved him, and I now propose that we offer up a prayer for the wanderer."

A sensational wave swept over the audience. Another brother arose, and turning to Elijah P. Brookrod, said:

"I am astonished that you should desire this congregation to pray for our erring minister—you above all others."

"Why?"

"Because he ran away with your wife."

"Yes, I know," Elijah replied, "and that is the reason why I think that he will need our prayers."—Arkansas Traveler.

It Was the Bull.

A good story of old days in Massachusetts has recently been published. In one of the churches in the eastern part of the state a bass viol was procured to help the choir. One summer Sunday, while the parson was in the middle of the sermon, a bull got out of his pasture and came swaggering down the road, growling as he came. The minister heard the low bellow, and looking up towards the singers' seat with a grave face he said: "I would thank the musicians not to tune during service time; it annoys me very much." The choir was surprised, but nothing was said. Pretty soon the bull gave another grumble, and then the parson was mad. He stopped short, and looking directly at the bass viol player, said: "I now particularly request Mr. L—— that he will not tune his instrument while I am preaching." This was more than the fiddler could stand. Popping up in his seat, he snapped out: "It isn't me, parson, it isn't me; it's that d—d—darned old town bull."—New York Sun.

N. D. C. HODGES, publisher of Science, 47 Lafayette place, New York, has begun the publication of a monthly "Puzzler." The February number contains eight pictorial problems, which we have not yet found time to solve. No doubt a large period of time will be gained by waiting for the next number, which will contain answers to this month's conundrums. Price, 10 cents per copy; $1.20 a year.

H. W. FAUST's Guide to San Francisco and vicinity for 1888 is out. Any one who desires to get acquainted with the urbs and suburbs of the city will find Mr. Faust's Guide worth much more than the 25 cents asked for it.

LIBERALS who visit FREETHOUGHT office are always welcome, whether they become readers or not. Those who subscribe receive a greeting which partakes of the character of an ovation.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States, or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts, shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

CHICAGO NEWS AND NOTES.

MAYOR ROCHE'S MORAL REFORM.

The political accident of large body and abbreviated intellect who holds down the executive chair of this corporation for his bosses—the two Georges (Mason and Davis,—was afflicted with an acute spasm of moral rheumatism yesterday, and forthwith revoked the license of the only bill poster in the city of Chicago; the occasion being the posting of bills for a novelty company now playing at the Casino—a company that has played here several times since Roche acted as proxy mayor of Chicago, and used the same bills every time. However, the official embargo was removed on promise that the objectionable posters be covered within twenty-four hours. The bills are no more indecent, immodest, or objectionable than thousands of performances, probably not so much so. They represent girls dancing on their toes in the ballet, the chief point of interest about their dress being that they have none to speak of. However, they have plenty of tights, but are not rigged out to brace up against a Dakota blizzard. It is presumed what scandalized the "good deacons" and incited them to have those "immoral" posters suppressed, was the long array of the bald-headed fraternity represented as anxious to obtain admission to the theatre to witness "Alice Montague's" performance of the "Little Devils' Revels," and they didn't like to be "given away" quite so freely. So they sought out Roche—John Roche—Mayor John A. Roche, and as a fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind, he sympathetically placed his No. 14's on the posters and they were covered. The Lillie Clay company have received some valuable advertising, but that has not deterred the "Cock" Roche of Chicago from declaring that he is going to make this a "clean city." He is now busily engaged in perusing an advance copy of Anthony Comstock's latest attempt at literary fame, "Morals vs. Art," with that end in view. If Anthony Comstock will only keep on writing books, his reign will be of but brief duration. For his enemies he has selected a most fortunate title, one which places morals and art in direct antagonism, and by its very title suggests that the writer is an idiot. Keep on writing books, Toney, for they show your conceptions of art to be of a low-bred, vulgar-minded egotist who discovers in pictures

An amount of vigorous pith
 That your writings have not,
 They're the veriest rot
 You could bore an editor with.

WHERE SAINTS IMMORAL REIGN.

Dispatches from Indianapolis state that the Christian community is greatly agitated over a clerical scandal. Rev. D. K. Buskirk is alleged to have been very attentive to the wife of another "divine," Rev C. W. Mertz. As the trial is anticipated to be very sensational, it will be secret. The matter is being pushed forward by members of each of their congregations. Rev. Mr. Mertz seems to be a philosopher, and doesn't seem to be worried over a little thing like that. Possibly he realizes how easy it is to be amiable to some other fellow's wife.

QUID PRO QUD.

Judge Ermentrout, of Pennsylvania, has affirmed the decision of the lower courts fining the gate-keeper of a camp-meeting association for taking money on the Sabbath. This prosecution was brought by the Philadelphia Sabbath Association against the other religious corporations. Good! When Christians get to fighting among themselves about the laws they have put on the statute, there is a good time coming for Liberalism. Only wait a little longer.

ROMANISM ALWAYS THE SAME.

Within a few months several freemasons, whose political and religious ideas were repugnant to the fanatical clericals of the state of Pueblo, Mexico, were foully murdered, and the affair is creating great excitement. Freemasons throughout the republic of Mexico support the re-election of Gen. Diaz, and the clericals in Pueblo have declared they will murder every freemason. This is not fiction but fact, and shows that Romanism is the same relentless religion that it always has been, only lacking opportunity to perform its detestable and murderous work

HOPEFUL SIGNS FROM FRANCE.

Dispatches from Paris, France, tell about a disgusting exhibition given by a pair of priests in the Cathedral of Rouen, where they attempted to personate God and the Devil in costume, but instead of awakening the superstitions of the audience it aroused their indignation and they chanted the "Marseillaise," and the police had to be called in to quell the disturbance by arresting several of the congregation. The priest who played the devil—if the average conception of satan is correct—did not need any rehearsing for his part.

NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND.

A Roman priest, of Illinois, has left the pulpit and announced himself an Agnostic, and though 70 years of age will start a church of a progressive character. So the good work goes on.

THE EX-REV. C. B. REYNOLDS IN KANSAS.

OLATHE, Kansas, Jan. 1, 2, 3.—I delivered three lectures in the Grand Lodge Room, a very handsome hall in the mammoth co-operative block of the Grangers—one of the handsomest and most perfectly equipped co-operative stores in the United States. The audiences were among the most intelligent and attentive I have ever lectured before.

I visited the State Deaf and Dumb Asylum here. There are 214 inmates, from eight to twenty years of age, one-third being females. Hours are devoted each day to religious worship, teaching the poor deaf mute that "God is love;" "God is a pitiful, all-powerful, all-merciful heavenly father." One One bright little fellow about nine years old asked one of the teachers: "O sir, do please tell me, why, oh why, did the good God make me deaf and dumb?" Think of it! The Christians declare that God could give every one of those poor innocent ones power to hear and speak if he would. God could, but will not. What a mockery!

BURLINGTON, Kan., Jan. 4, 5, 6.—This is quite a large village (city), but it has been "boomed," and now suffers consequent depreciation and stagnation. Her main hope of redemption is that she has a noble company of genuine Liberals. I had large attendance and real interest. Many came several miles to attend the lectures, regardless of the blizzard and the intense cold. I organized the "Burlington Liberal Union"—President, C. W. Lefering; Vice-President, Mrs. E. Storrs; Secretary, O. E. Sandford; Treasurer, John Hollywood. Vigilance Committee, Guy Watt; O. C. Horton, W. A. Anderson; Educational Committee, W. H. Bear, R. F. Douglas, Mrs. Guy Watt; Social Committee, John Hollywood and wife, Guy Watt and wife, C. K. Lefering and wife, O. E. Sandford and wife.

FALL RIVER, Kan., Jan. 7, 8.—Of all the wretched, shiftless, dead alive folks on earth, Fall Riverites are supreme. I arrived there about 5 P. M., accompanied by a roaring blizzard—eight degrees below zero—and took upon my abode in a hog pen they called a "hotel," appropriately run by a biped who possessed all the objectionable characteristics of the swine. The lectures were advertised at the Opera House, a fine, nearly new building, but dreary and filthy, decaying from neglect. I could not stand on the stage; the blizzard entered powerful protest as it swept in through the broken windows and unplastered walls back of the curtain—the only sweeping that had ever been done in the hall. I stood on the floor in front of the curtain. There was but one stove in the place, fire just started at time advertised to begin the lecture, and the entry doors could not be made to shut close. I spoke with my overcoat and overshoes on, and suffered terribly from the cold. Many of my audience sat huddled up, their heads sunk down in collar of overcoat, breathing on their benumbed fingers to keep them from freezing solid. That so many stayed in such misery for the sake of hearing "what Liberalism taught" was the reason I delivered lecture despite severe suffering. Promises were made me that the room should be thoroughly warm for Sunday afternoon lecture. About a quarter to three one of the friends called and told me that "I had better light a fire in the hall." I started to find some one to attend to it. At half-past three (lecture advertised at three sharp,) a small boy made desperate efforts to start the fire. Eight degrees below zero, and a gentle Kansas zephyr, with a velocity of sixty miles an hour, fanned the brows of those who ventured into the streets. I bribed two small boys to keep fetching in coal and filling up the stove. At four o'clock I delivered the lecture, standing close to the stove, so only one-half of me froze.

Sunday night the attendance was not larger than at the first lecture. It was slim; people had been froze twice, and declined to risk consequences a third time. A parson preaching hell-fire for the wicked in that opera house under the circumstances would have induced even Liberals to become wicked in hopes to eventually get warm.

C. B. REYNOLDS.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The present winter season is distinguishing itself as the most severe known for years.—The Sioux Indians have elected twelve delegates to Washington to confer on the proposition to open the reservation.—Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock, an estimable couple living near Anaheim, were brutally murdered on the 26th ult., by one Fred Anschlag and an accomplice named Decker. Money was the motive.—David Whittmer, the last surviving witness to the authenticity of the Book of Mormon, died at Richmond, Mo., January 25th.—It is said that warrants are out for the arrest of six Irish members of the British Parliament and magistrates.—The French courts, in the case of Pere Hyacinthe, have decided that a priest may legally marry.—The estimated cost of the Grant Monument at New York is $500,000. The design for the monument is open to competition by sculptors and artists.—James Lick's monument to Francis Scott Key, author of the "Star Spangled Banner," has arrived at this port from Italy. The sculpturing was executed by W. W. Story, and the total cost of the monument, which will be erected in Golden Gate Park, is $60,000.—The Paine Celebration and the Anniversary of the Young Men's Christian Association were held on the same night. The two meetings did not conflict.—The pope will touch upon the labor question in his forthcoming encyclical, and will advocate the principle of state intervention in favor of artisans.—Charles Dickens, Jr., who is reading his father's works to American audiences, thinks that he will clear $20,000 on his trip.—Anthony Comstock has just been sat upon by a Philadelphia court. After a severe criticism from the bench defendants in all the cases were discharged.—Another batch of Irish patriots has been sent to jail.—The California Christian Advocate says: "There are probably not less than 35,000 or 40,000 persons pursuing the college course. Of these at least one-half are not practical Christians, and make no pretensions to Christianity."—Friends of the Rev. E. F. Miles, of New York, who disappeared last December, will be pleased to learn that he has turned up safe and apparently sound in Memphis, Tenn. They may not be so pleased when they find out what he has been doing meanwhile.—There are nine British missionary societies now laboring in Africa, with an aggregate annual expenditure of $1,000,000.—New York Democrats are said to be evenly divided on the question whether Hill or Cleveland shall be the next presidential candidate.—Three hundred American Catholics have made a pilgrimage to Rome to get the blessing of the pope. His holiness interviewed each separately, and it is presumed presented the papal toe to be kissed.—There is talk of holding the national Democratic presidential convention in San Francisco.—The New York banks hold $23,258,000 in excess of the legal rate.—Joseph Smith, son of the prophet and president of the reorganized church of Latter Day Saints, is in this city. He denies that his father was a polygamist.—Cora Lee, the paramour of Evangelist Graham and indicted with him for the murder of Mrs. Graham, has been acquitted by a jury at Springfield, Ill.—Senator Ingalls says he sees no harm in prohibition. "It works very well in Kansas. They have prohibition laws—that's what they wanted—and the whisky-drinkers have all the whisky they want. There seems to be no complaint there. Both sides ought to be perfectly satisfied."—As Mr. Rule, editor of the Knoxville, Tenn., Journal, was about to enter church last Sunday, he was attacked by three men who were displeased by an article he had published, and he was obliged to shoot at them in self-defense.—The Rev. Mr. Chubbuck, the singing evangelist, is preaching in this city on the "Visit of Nicodemus to Christ," and other topics of contemporaneous human interest.

A CONTEMPORARY has explained the absence of the naked truth in Anthony Comstock's testimony. It is hiding from the agent of the Vice Society.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Only 38 Below

MR. PUTNAM: Within please find $4 for two copies of your paper. It is only 38 below zero this morning—the coldest for years. I wish you all the success possible.

JAMES WARDWELL.

Emmett, Idaho, Jan. 16, 1888.

Fraternity.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, My Dear Sir: To show my brotherly regard for you, I inclose $2 for a year's subscription to FREETHOUGHT, commencing with No. 1. My wish is that you may meet with the best of success in your undertaking. Most truly yours,

CHARLES LOWND.

Minneapolis, Minn., Jan. 19, 1888.

Best for Life and Death.

MR. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: I was very glad to get your new paper with the bracing name, and much enjoyed its contents. I herewith inclose my year's subscription, and wish you and Mr. Macdonald all the success your brave undertaking deserves. Freethought for life and in-eneration afterwards—what better? Yours faithfully,

JOSEPHINE DUANE.

New York, Jan. 16, 1888.

A Good Subscriber.

FRIEND S. P. PUTNAM: Please find inclosed $2. We want your paper, for we believe in Freethought and the Great West, and hope, as you are acquainted with the trouble in Utah, you will speak occasionally for the minority cause here. Wishing you success in your new home and new enterprise, Fraternally,

HECTOR W. HAIGHT.

Farmington, Utah, Jan. 19, 1888.

A Hand Lent.

FRIEND PUTNAM: I am well pleased to hear of your locating in San Francisco; just what we Liberals on this coast need. You can depend on us to "lend a hand." We want you to lecture again, so put us down on your route. Please forward the FREETHOUGHT to myself and D. L. Trullinger. Yours truly,

REUBEN WRIGHT.

Molalla, Or., Jan. 18, 1888.

Ruhe!

MR. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: For the copy of FREETHOUGHT received we thank you. We stopped subscribing for all so-called Freethought papers several years ago. Freethought papers in these days are principally intended for those individuals who are glad to leave the church to save paying pew rent. We do all that we possibly can, in our small way, to push the cause of anarchy. In working for anarchy we do better than to simply work for Freethought. Who cares what you think in these days? The church to-day, without state backing, is powerless for mischief. The state is our enemy; consequently, fight the state. Those evil geniuses, state and church, will hang together until death lays them low. We never will be able to part them; consequently, to my vision, it is a waste of time and energy to run "Secular Unions," "Liberal Leagues," and Freethought papers. When you start an anarchistic paper let us hear from you. Yours for liberty,

CORNELIA BOECKLIN.

Burlington, Jan. 19, 1888.

In the Land of Ozone.

MR. PUTNAM, Dear Friend: You may put me down upon your list. I think you have the right partner to secure your success in journalism. I hope your efforts will be crowned with victory, not alone in the circulation of your paper, but also in the converts you make and the good in general.

MRS. S. J. LENONT.

Northfield, Minn., Jan. 17, 1888.

A Veteran.

FRIENDS: I have concluded to take FREETHOUGHT. I wish you to look after the Catholics. The power which I perceive they are striving to gain annoys me much. I am not to be here a much longer time, owing to age, which is past 82 years. What time I do remain I hope to know that the press is doing what it can to enlighten the public. Yours, with respect,

JOHN D. POWERS.

Woodstock, Vt., Jan. 19, 1888.

For Life.

GEO. E. MACDONALD: Please find in this a postal note for $2 for your FREETHOUGHT paper. When the year is up, stop the paper if the money is not there before the time is up, as I may not be alive to send it. I shall be in my four score and fifth year if I live, and if I like the paper I will have the money there in time to have it continued.

T. H. ROWLAND.

Olney, Ill., Jan. 19, 1888.

Not a Dead Word.

DEAR GEORGE: I am much pleased with the first copy of FREETHOUGHT. It is neat in appearance, of convenient size, and well arranged. I like the plain, bold heading. I have read all the articles and the notes, and there is not a dead line in the paper. I prophesy success for FREETHOUGHT. I will help you succeed what I can. With best wishes for two thousand subscribers before 1889, I am yours,

L. K. WASHBURN.

Revere, Mass., Jan. 17, 1888.

A Gratifying Prediction.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, My Dear Sir: Paper at hand. I have looked over the first number of FREETHOUGHT, and I regard it as a literary gem—just what might be looked for from the "glorious climate of California." It is up in merit like the price on a corner lot in Los Angeles. It ought to take the Pacific coast by storm, and I predict for it a large circulation in the East. If the paper fails, it will not be the fault of its wide-awake managers. I can speak advisedly as to Mr. Putnam; he possesses that indefatigable push that he wouldn't know when he was whipped, like the old Southerner who remarked to a carpet-bagger that they were willing to let the North off this time, but if they didn't behave they would whip them "wus'n before."

I wish you all possible success. Yours truly,

J. D. KRUSCHKE.

Piqua, O., Jan. 18, 1888.

From the Ice-Bound Coos River.

DEAR MR. PUTNAM: Your paper, FREETHOUGHT, is received. We will "lend a hand," and herewith inclose subscription. We are very happy over a Freethought paper on this coast, and glad that it is started by those who seem like acquaintances. What little we can do will be done with an earnest desire to help you succeed.

E. A. HILBORN.

Coos River, Or., Jan. 18, 1888.

Well Backed.

MR. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: I was glad to learn that you have started FREETHOUGHT in San Francisco. I believe that it will "pan out." It certainly is backed by first class ability. I shall leave my order for FREETHOUGHT with your agent here, Mr. Fitzgerald. At our last meeting we voted to secure your services for June 22d. We'll want you for not less than three lectures, so book us accordingly.

R. D. ALLEN, Sec'y S. S. U.

Silverton, Or., Jan. 22, 1888.

As a Beacon.

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Friend: I received a copy of FREETHOUGHT, which I have just finished reading, and am, to say the least, delighted and instructed by its contents and it will be to the western shore (and by "shore" I mean all west of the Rocky mountains) what the Independent Pulpit is to the South and the Truth Seeker is to the East—a beacon-light to guide mankind to loftier motives, purer deeds; to recognize a world of realities in which they live. You may look for $2 from me.

MRS. FLORA A. ABBOTT.

New Cambria, Kan., Jan. 17, 1888.

Another Birth.

Another baby born in the world of Freethought! A wished-for and welcome child—one blessed with a healthy heredity and launched into splendid environments.

The wise men and women of the East will hasten to give it due homage and wish it success and prosperity.

It has sprung full-armed and panoplied from the best brains of our best thinkers.

If not born with a "silver spoon in its mouth," we think it is the heir to a more worthy and blest inheritance—the love and generous patronage of a vast army of Freethinkers, each and all of whom will wish it good speed and a splendid career.

It will voice with no uncertain sound "the Nine Demands"—the sublime poetical and materialistic utterances of S. P. Putnam, and the shrewd, sensible, and humorous thinklets of G. E. Macdonald, as well as the twinklings of lesser lights in the field of free speech, and the needed voicings of facts and truths that will build up a happier and better humanity.

"Let superstition be destroyed
And falsehood cast away,
That liberty may be enjoyed
And truth hold sovereign sway.
Let thought be free to all mankind,
And reason's light illumine
The long-benighted realms of mind,
Dispelling clouds of gloom."

ELMINA DRAKE SLENNER.

Liked in Philadelphia.

DEAR FRIEND PUTNAM: The folks here are well pleased with the first number of FREETHOUGHT. I like it first-rate. It is spicy and full of enjoyable reading. "Across a Continent," by Mr. Macdonald, and your poem, "Truth, Beauty, Goodness," are splendid. I wish FREETHOUGHT success. Truly,

ROMAN STALEY.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 15, 1888.

Our Reception in Texas.

S. P. PUTNAM—Dear Sir: On my return from a lecture trip I found FREETHOUGHT awaiting me. You say: "I hope you will like it." Well, I do; I like it exceedingly well. It is a fine beginning, and as you have a fine field I shall be disappointed if you do not succeed. Yours for Liberal success,

J. D. SHAW.

Waco, Texas, Jan. 19, 1888.

We Have a Heart for Any Fate.

MESSES. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: You have doubtless prepared yourselves for a hard and discouraging year's work, which, if you can tide through, I feel assured brighter and more encouraging prospects will attend your labors. Never talk or intimate that you fear you must succumb to the indifference manifested, and if you go down you must do so without a valdictory.

W. F. FREEMAN.

Stockton, Cal., Jan. 22, 1888.

A Steunch Friend.

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Friend: Inclosed is $2 for one year's subscription to FREETHOUGHT. I have been on the lookout for it for some time. I shall always remember and stand by the ex-Secretary of the A. S. U. I take five other Freethought journals, and I am sure yours will rank with the best. With best wishes to FREETHOUGHT and its publishers, I am, yours ever,

F. I. GREEN.

Nevinsville, Ia., Jan. 17, 1888.

It Rings.

MR. GEO. E. MACDONALD—Dear Sir and Brother: Your Pacific coast venture in the battle for common sense and freedom from superstition—FREETHOUGHT—has the ring of the old Liberty Bell. Its tone fires me with a new enthusiasm for the glorious cause of right and justice. With Putnam on the rostrum and you in the sanctum sanctorum (if the Liberals will send in the golden oil to lubricate the machine), I am confident yours will be a grand success. Inclosed find $1. More will soon follow when I get time to buy a postal order or draft on San Francisco.

I have constituted myself your agent, and now have two other subs promised. Your trip "Across a Continent" is well worth a year's subscription, and if you ever come to the City of Angels we will initiate you into the mysteries of a tomale; and don't fail to tell Put that when he comes again we will greet him with a hearty shake.

Truly Yours,

J. E. CLARK.

Los Angeles, Jan. 23, 1888.

A Hearty Hail.

COMRADES PUTNAM AND MACDONALD: My wife and I have finished reading the first number of your new paper, FREETHOUGHT. We inclose price of one year's subscription. We hope some day to return to our beautiful, our beloved California. We wish you the highest success in your noble undertaking. Pour hot shot into the ranks of superstition. Give their hell, hell. Though Liberalism in its highest form is called Anarchism, do not fear to attain it. Go on to perfection. Your comrade,

JOHN R. KELSO.

Warm Welcome.

DEAR MR. PUTNAM: I am much pleased (that is not the term), am truly gratified, that you have hoisted the flag in San Francisco. You have a big field before you, and I know that you will do it justice if you get the proper and deserved encouragement. I give you a hearty welcome. May you get the support you deserve is my earnest desire, I truly assure you.

Inclosed please find $2 for a year's subscription, and you may depend that the first time I am in San Francisco I will be sure to come and see you. Again wishing you all and everything that one dear friend can desire for another, I am,

Yours very truly,

JOHN MCGLASHAN.

Ukiah, Cal., Jan. 20, 1888.

The Junior Editor's Turn.

To S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: First number of FREETHOUGHT at hand. I cannot get along without anything so ably gotten up. I have always admired the writings of "G. E. M.," and wished him a large field to operate in, and now he has got it. As for yourself, why, you have always bored the readers of the Truth Seeker, and now you intend to keep it up on your own hook. Well, keep it up, old boy. I shall not forget you. I am going out West soon. When I return I will have a couple of dollars, sure. You must reckon on Fillmore and vicinity this summer in your lecturing tour. I shall not forget to talk well of the FREETHOUGHT to my neighbors. Fraternally,

GEO. C. VRIE.

Fillmore, Utah, Jan. 20, 1888.

Crowded with Good Things.

We are in receipt of the first number of a handsomely printed liberal journal called FREETHOUGHT, and edited by Samuel P. Putnam and Geo. E. Macdonald. Its dozen pages are crowded with good and thoughtful papers on progressive topics.—The Model Commonwealth, Port Angeles, W. T.

Dr. Monroe's Good Word.

FREETHOUGHT is the name of a new liberal journal just established at No. 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal. S. P. Putnam and George E. Macdonald are the proprietors. Mr. Putnam is well known to the liberal public. Macdonald not quite so well, as he is a bashful youth, who shrinks from the public gaze. But he is a genius, and we predict for him a brilliant career.—Ironclad Age.

It is Necessary to Salvation.

We have had the pleasure of reading No. 1, Vol. 1, of the new liberal journal, FREETHOUGHT, published in this city. Samuel P. Putnam and George E. Macdonald are the editors and proprietors, and their office is at 504 Kearny street. Over and above being in sympathy with the aims and objects of the journal, we unreservedly recommend it as a fitting weekly visitor at the hearths and homes of all classes of people who desire to pass their Sunday afternoons and evenings in the quiet and elevating enjoyment of a good, wholesome read. It's ten pages of clear type, bright ideas, breezy humor, brief and pungent paragraphs, cannot fail to accomplish their mission. "Who would be free, himself must get Freethought."—The People.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - FEBRUARY 11, 1888

THE publishers of the Open Court call our attention to that journal's change of purpose, which now is the conciliation of Religion with Science. We doubt the practicability of the scheme. It is better to let the ghosts go.

THE Rev. Dr. M. E. Gibson, backed by the Presbyterian Occident, holds that St. Patrick was a Presbyterian. We shall look for the Rev. Dr. Gibson and the editor of the Occident at the head of the imposing procession next 17th of Ireland.

VALUABLE presents to the pope from his worshipers in Ireland have rained in upon his holiness in such numbers that many of them remain unpacked. We are thus again reminded of Mr. Heston's improved biblical extract: "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the pope."

ACCORDING to the Pulpit Treasury, there are 92,000 ministers, 132,000 churches, and 19,000,000 members in the United States. These statistics leave 40,000 pulpits unoccupied and give each minister an average congregation of 200. The accuracy of the Pulpit Treasury's figures is open to doubt.

MEN who have been unable to raise themselves to a satisfactory distinction by efforts in their own behalf may often gain a temporary notoriety by defaming somebody who is more successful. In this way they make themselves known to many people who would not otherwise be aware of their existence.

THERE are said to be one hundred and thirty-five thousand lepers in India, and a society is devoting itself exclusively to the work of carrying them the gospel. When the lepers learn that they were afflicted as they are for some wise purpose, and that God has the power to heal them but declines to do it, the beauties of the Christian scheme must engage their attention at once.

HENRY GEORGE may or may not feel gratified over Cardinal Gibbon's letter to the pope in his behalf. The cardinal observes that George only follows the theories of Spencer and Mill, and that it is better to allow false theories to die a natural death than to fan them by giving them artificial importance.

THE following dispatch is from Rome:

As the grand master of the household of the prince of Colonna was advancing to the throne of his holiness to present a magnificent diamond jubilee gift, on behalf of his master, he suddenly fell forward on his face and when raised was found to be dead.

We call the attention of the editor of the Catholic Monitor to the foregoing, and would inquire if he recognizes in its significance anything which would "make it an incident to illustrate a sermon on divine wrath."

ORGANIZATION.

The question of organization is one of first importance to Liberalism. Radical thought cannot remain simply an individual affair. It is humanitarian in its scope and is for world wide progress. Were there no foes to combat, still Liberals should come together in friendly association. The union of many can do more in any sphere of human effort than the isolated labors of the same number. Co-operation is the word of civilization. There are art associations for the progress of art and scientific associations for the advancement of science. For the same reason there should be Freethought associations for the noblest expression of Freethought. Freethought is art, it is science, it is philosophy; and its greatest good and advantage can only be reached by a combination of intellectual powers. If all the world were Free-thinkers, the most splendid results of Freethought, as of art and science, must still come by organized life. But Freethought is not popular. It is not established; it is not even let alone. It has persistent and dangerous enemies. Its rights are infringed by the laws of almost every state. There is therefore a double reason for organization: organization for advancement, and organization for defense.

There are two forms of organization, local and national. At many favorable points are flourishing Freethought societies, and the good that is accomplished by these is incalculable. They are social, moral, and intellectual forces. Even though supported by but few, they are formidable opponents of the churches. The influence is constant for a better morality, for greater knowledge, for the prevalence of liberty and justice.

In order, however, to increase the number and influence of local associations, and give them power to resist successfully the encroachments of the church in government there should be a national organization of Liberals, not necessarily to make a political party, but to be a political force, which, making justice the law of the land, shall create nobler conditions for social and intellectual advancement. This is the method of all the churches. They band together; they have national organizations; and this adds greatly to their aggrandizement. If Christianity were simply a local affair; if each church had no affiliations outside of its own community, ecclesiastical tyranny would soon disappear. The sources of tyranny are not in local societies, but in vast organizations that extend throughout the length and breadth of the land. The only possible way to compete with these, that by their very nature are determined to exercise control, is by a union among Liberals equally extensive. A thousand Liberal societies combined together, manifesting a common purpose, would be an almost irresistible factor in favor of secular principles. The American people naturally incline to secular government, but with the combinations on the other side this tendency must be represented and enforced by a Freethought organization established for this special purpose. This has been the way of every reform. There must be unity of effort.

Liberal organization, however, must be entirely different from orthodox organization. It cannot be founded upon authority. No control can be exercised. Liberals will do as they have a mind to, whatever an organization may declare. Dictation is entirely useless. This is the glory of Liberalism—that each man will think for himself and act for himself. It is not for one man to declare what is the duty of another; nor can any number of men announce what line of conduct each should take. An organization of Liberals works by attraction and not by compulsion. It must constantly appeal to the reason and good will of each member. It can enforce nothing, only so far as it states what is right, what is just, what is reasonable, what is useful. The organization is simply the means for united action, that action in every case being based on individual conviction, and not the command of any convention, congress, or central authority. The method of orthodoxy is to dictate; the method of Liberalism is to express.

Such an organization is the strongest kind of an organization. It will be living in every part. It will breathe the atmosphere of Liberty. Recognizing the widest diversity, it will create the noblest bonds of union. Should there not be an organization like this—a national organization for national work? Should there not be such an expression of fraternity—of good will—of a common purpose?

In view of the reforms necessary to be accomplished in the state; of the knowledge and education demanded among the people; of the progress that must be made by the triumph of Freethought, are not the reasons strong for the maintenance of a National Secular Union? Can any Liberal minded man or woman deny the advantage of such a union? We may not see at present any great results. We have not the machinery nor the wealth of the Christian churches; we have not authority, ignorance, and superstition to work with; we are in the minority; our forces are scattered; there is also a mass of indifference to contend against; and therefore it is not possible to accomplish even a tithe of what should be done. The means are not at hand for such colossal enterprises as the church boasts of. We can only stand our ground mainly, keep things from retrograding, and here and there make some advance. This, however, is infinitely better than nothing; infinitely better than to make no movement in behalf of a better and nobler society.

FREETHOUGHT has received numerous handsome programmes of Paine celebrations in different parts of the country. The one from Chicago is especially attractive. It is embellished with a picture of Richards's statuette of Paine, and, besides a good list of musical and literary features, has figures of the dance dedicated to the Liberal papers, including FREETHOUGHT, and to prominent Freethinkers, including the president of the American Secular Union.

OWEN THOMAS DAVIES, of Brighton, dropped into our office the other day with several subscriptions to FREETHOUGHT and $25 for life membership in the American Secular Union. This is good, both for FREETHOUGHT and the Union. It is evident that the rank and file of the Liberals of America are in favor of the National organization and will stand by it. We are not rich, but something can be done, and we ask Liberals to contribute to this cause. Subscriptions of any amount, great or small, will be received at this office, and forwarded to the secretary. Enough has already been guaranteed for the secretary's salary, and what is now given will be used for the publication and distribution of secular documents. Mr. E. A. Stevens's admirable address delivered before the Congress at Chicago, "God in the State," will be immediately issued. Also Harry Hoover's "Holy Sabbath Tyranny," a vigorous protest against ecclesiasticism. The price of these pamphlets will be ten cents each. All those contributing one dollar or more will receive, if they desire, the full value of their gift in copies of these publications at retail rates. Let there be a generous support of the national work and a good publishing fund raised. Knowledge is power, and we want to spread all the Freethought and secular knowledge possible.

WE heartily wish that we had space in FREETHOUGHT to publish a tenth of the hundreds of splendid and cordial letters, from friends everywhere in the country, which the mail has brought us within the past month. They are full of fraternity and good feeling, and they contain also the material help that makes the printing of a paper possible. So, published or unpublished, they do their perfect work and make glad the hearts of these two sojourners on this coast,

Who through long days of labor
And nights devoid of ease,
Still hear in their souls the music
Of wonderful melodies.

WE have received a consignment of Colonel Ingersoll's published argument in the blasphemy trial of C. B. Reynolds. This trial of a man indicted on the charge of blasphemy gave the greatest of American orators an opportunity to make an immortal plea for human liberty—an opportunity which he improved to the fullest extent. The address makes a pamphlet of 86 pages. It is handsomely printed and bound. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper covers, 25 cents. It may be obtained at this office or ordered by mail.

THE People, the Labor paper of San Francisco, prints an able and appreciative account of the Paine celebration held here last week. The laborers of San Francisco should be proud of their organ, and, what is better, they should read it.

BRIEF mention has been made of H. W. Faust's "Map and Guide of San Francisco." This is a work in which an astonishing amount of information is given in a small compass, yet printed in type large enough to be easily read. It tells all about the theaters, halls, libraries, schools, churches, newspapers, railroads and ferries, street cars, hacks and cabs, secret societies, and streets, and also contains a map which lays the whole city under the eye at a single view. No one is fully prepared to go out of doors in San Francisco without a copy of Mr. Faust's Guide in his pocket. Price 25 cents.

THE CHINESE THEATRE.

Under the charge of Maum Sien Yueh, who has been in San Francisco seventeen years, and knows the ins and outs of Mongolian American life; and accompanied by our friend A. F. Goss, who though not of age has already done a brilliant work for reform in the Southwest and is undaunted by difficulties—Wednesday evening we plunged into Chinatown, and amid the by-ways looked upon fantastic types of Asiatic wickedness. The Chinese are thoroughly devoted to games of chance, and when the shades of night are falling fast they become fast themselves and go in for hilarious depravity. The theater wherein we spent most of the evening is a curiosity indeed. The stage has no curtain. It is a broad platform. The orchestra is in the rear—in full view—and the players make their exits and entrances on each side and enact their parts between the orchestra and the audience.

The musical instruments are a kind of horn fiddle with one string, cymbals, a drum, and "the bones." The music is not of a very exciting character, but it interests the nerves. The music and the play go on without interruption. There is no opportunity between the acts to purchase cloves, which makes it somewhat monotonous to the American.

The theater was packed when we arrived, but our little-footed Celestial guide piloted a way through the somber masses, across the stage through the crimson curtained door, behind the scenes, where we encountered the actors, some in magnificent costumes, and some, the comedy company, in motley habiliments, waiting their turn to enter. Winding through this dazzling phantasmagoria we come upon the stage by the opposite entrance and take our seats alongside the actors, who brush against us as they go in and out. We occupied what in an American theater would be called "the boxes." Right in front of us were packed a thousand Chinese, men, women, and children, to the very ceiling, intently watching the play.

It was a solemn audience. Seldom a smile would lighten along the shadowy expanse, but once in a while the comedian would take down the house, and a huge laugh would ripple along. It takes a tremendous joke, however, to excite the Celestial risibles. The comedian of the piece was a tradesman, a drummer one would judge, who was trying to sell his goods on every occasion.

The drama contained a love-making scene, and so far as we could find out the Chinese do it like the rest of mankind, except that they are not quite so impulsive. The damsel is very demure, hides her head behind the fan, casts sheep's eyes at her lover, and on the whole seems about as hard and willing to be won as the maidens of other lands.

The play was a kind of opera. The singing was something to us entirely inscrutable. We could not catch on to the melody. The voices are thin and unvarying. They harmonized, however, with the orchestra. The audience accepted in silent admiration. There were no encores, and no applause. The property man is in full view all the time, and seems to be the most interested party. While the play is going on he arranges and rearranges the different scenes. No time is lost. He kindly has a chair ready when any of the actors desires to sit. For the male actors he puts a box on the chair to give them, it seems, extra height and dignity. When the ladies prepare to be seated the box is taken off—a symbol, no doubt, that woman cannot occupy so high a position as man. The ladies were painted with extraordinary colors—the forehead white, the eyes pink, and the cheeks of a flaming red, a broad patch reaching from mouth to ear. The father of the family wore an enormous white beard flowing almost to his knees, which he fondly stroked as if it were the sign of exalted station.

The play lasted until about one o'clock and closed with a gorgeous wedding scene, when the big drum was brought forth and the music and the brilliant costumes seemed to vie with each other as to which should produce the most astonishing effect.

Connected with the theater is a joss-house; and climbing up the dingy stairs we viewed the dimly-burning lights and solemn deities in brass—a good emblem of what their ambassadors must always possess. Alongside the joss-house is an opium boudoir, where the happy magnates smoke and dream the hours away. The most ancient religion, the most ancient race, was before us as picturesque and real as if we were in the heart of China, and when a few moments' walk brought us again to American life it seemed like a vision of the night.

A PREVIOUS SUBJECT RESUMED.

I have received a good many earnest inquiries about some things I mentioned in giving an account of my journey across the continent. I have also received some earnest corrections of the same, and therefore I deem it my duty to resume the pen and elaborate, if I may use that word, to a brief degree. I do not always tell the truth, but I sometimes get so near to it that I am not detected. This is in all respects equivalent to veracity.

A young lady in New York doubts the accuracy of my description of the Indian ladies of Arizona and New Mexico. She writes thus:

"DEAR MR. MACDONALD: I have read about your journey over to California, and you spoke about how the Indian girls dressed that you saw while on your journey over to California. You can't fool us Eastern girls by saying as you did about how those Indian girls were dressed that you saw. It is too Thin"

I do not like to enlarge upon this question, though the subject of the discussion might be enlarged upon. I refer to the dress which the Indian girls wear. It really ought to be more ample. I should have a larger field if I were to speak of the clothes they do not wear. These poor Indians whose untutored mind can see no beauty in a hump behind do not wear the bustle or the high hat. Nature has denied them these gifts. They have no small dog with a blanket on. I think if they were given one they would wear the blanket for a polonaise, and cook the dog. Their dress is not too thin. It is too short at both ends.

Another correspondent wishes to know how I liked the palace cars on the Santa Fe road. I did not come in a palace car. When I reached Kansas City, Mo., I had in my possession an order for a so-called berth ticket in what was termed the Pilgrims' car, but the agent there said so many other pilgrims had got ahead of me that no more tickets were left. Indeed he said, in reply to my suggestion, that it was myself who was left. I therefore slept on a seat in whatever graceful attitude I was able to collapse into. Anyone who has retired for the night on an ordinary car seat with his chin on his chest and his knees braced against the back of the seat in front of him can realize how I enjoyed myself.

When I bought the tickets of a gentleman in New York called a scalper, he showed me a photograph of the Pilgrims' car we were to ride in. It looked rather stylish for a plain New Yorker, but I hoped we could behave as if we were accustomed to luxury. When I found out that I could not get one of these berths I tried to feel consoled by the thought that somebody else was happy in the possession of it. I am a lover of my race. The Pilgrims' car was just ahead of ours, and occasionally I saw a passenger come out of the door and stand on the platform for long periods scooping in great mouthfuls of Kansas blizzard. I inquired the reason of this, and he explained that the atmosphere inside his car seemed to be somewhat deficient in ozone. The berths were occupied by three adults each reclining lengthwise, with the smaller members of the family lying crosswise. These people, he said, absorbed much of the oxygen and two red-hot stoves consumed the rest of it. It seemed good to him to come out on the platform and inhale snow dashed a trifle with cinders from the engine.

At Barstow most of the pilgrims took another road and went down into the southern part of the state. Some also, whom we met at Barstow, were on their way East. Five of these latter were riding home in long narrow boxes, and they changed cars by means of a truck. They were consumptives who came West a little too late to recuperate.

The people who went south from our train left a Pilgrims' car nearly empty, and we got a berth for one night. The interior of the coach did not have the luxurious appointments of the one in the photograph I saw at New York, and the smell of it had entirely eluded the grasp of the artist's camera. The berths were formed by flattening out the seats, and were very hard. I do not know what wood they were of, but I judge it was lignum vitæ. Our nearest travelling companion was a large man with a four weeks' beard and a wild look in his eyes, who sat with his back to the window, his feet on the seat, his arms around his shins, and his chin on his knees. He kept his eyes fixed on us and anon lifted up his voice and howled dismally. He was a lunatic. Mr. Putnam and myself did our best to be gleeful, and amused ourselves by composing rhymes. Mr. Putnam said there was nothing like the glory of poetry to reconcile man to his lot. He worked off the ensuing:

Must I be carried to the west
On a couch with pillows stored
While weary pilgrims take their rest
On the hard side of a board?
Sure I must pay if I would ride
In a Pullman palace car
Or get my sleep on the aforesaid side
Of a board where the pilgrims are.

In the middle of the night the deacon from Ohio who took up a subscription for the lame man with a stiff knee at Kansas City, and lost his car while after a berth ticket for the same sufferer, found me standing by the stove and related the adventures of his trip. Grief first overtook him near Chicago, where he made the mistake of leaving the train while it was still in the commodious outskirts of that city. He paid a man a dollar to conduct him to the depot, but his hat blew off just as he got in sight of the train and rolled away so fast he could not catch it. He rode bare-headed for a thousand miles, and then paid two dollars for another hat. Shortly thereafter he had occasion to undo one of his bundles, and found inside an old hat which his thoughtful wife had put there for him to wear when it rained. He donned the old hat and left his new one with his overcoat on the seat, while he went to dine at the next station, resolved that the wind should not again rob him. While he was gone somebody stole both the hat and the overcoat. He did not mind these things so much, he said, but he had learned that his not reappearing at Kansas City when he went to buy the stiff kneed man a ticket gave rise to the report that he had absconded with the collection raised for that purpose, and he had been regarded with suspicion ever since. He added that he supposed the creator designed that we should help one another in affliction, but the next time he went anywhere he would be jingwhizzled if he didn't let other people take care of themselves and look out for number one.

Other inquiries that I have received are in relation to the climate of this state, in reply to which I would say that our climate is semi-tropical. A few days ago the thermometer stood at twenty-five degrees or so above zero, and water-pipes froze up and burst. The oldest inhabitant never saw anything like it, and the suffering was intense. People sat in their houses and shivered. My observation leads me to believe that the thought of shutting the door and building a fire entirely escaped them. Doors here seem to be designed for the same use as a pair of bars or a gate—merely to keep out trespassers. That they will keep out the cold has not yet dawned upon the Californian, and he does not close one behind him with that object in view.

The other day a man recently from Texas rushed into this office greatly excited and wanted to see the man who didn't know what a "tomaller" was. I revealed myself as the individual whom he sought. He was shocked that such ignorance should exist, and at once explained the origin of the tomale. It seems that the tomale is of Mexican growth. The manufacturer first visits the restaurants within his purview, and gathers up such scraps of meat as, after experimenting with them, the customer has found himself unable to chew. These the tomale manufacturer comminutes by the use of powerful machinery, adds to the result a quantum sufficit of indian meal and water, throws into the mixture a handful of chopped red peppers and onions, and of the dough thus formed he deposits little gobs in the inside of a corn husk. The whole is put over water kept hot by means of a lamp underneath a tin receptacle, and steamed. With this receptacle full, the manufacturer is ready for his victim. He waylays the traveler, and having effected a sale of two for five cents, he thrusts his hand into the tank, draws forth the tomares, hands them over to the purchaser, and receives the nickel, which he deposits in his ear. I was surprised to hear that the Mexican uses his ear for a money-purse, but I am assured that such is the fact, and when he goes anywhere he travels on the same. It has been proposed to raise a fund to buy the junior editor of this paper a tomale. We are in the hands of our friends. M.

WONDERLAND.

FROM ROCK TO DUST, FROM DUST TO PLANT, BEAST, AND MAN, BY FIRE, WATER, WIND.

Winter has been a lamb so far. To-day, the first of a New Year, is smothered amid whirling drifts of snow. The mountains are draped in ghastly white. There is a white mist from heaven behind which Mt. Evarts and Bunsen's Peak, the Temple, Sepulcher, and Electric peaks are hid away like the shrouded dead. The great clouds are steaming up and whirling hither and thither in spiral scrolls, behind which Limestone mountain presents his torn and ragged breast from which crag after crag has fallen and lie a thousand feet below—the Hoodoos of nature's madhouse—the voiceless record of an age of anarchy that speaks to the initiated ear and tells the story of the rocks in a remote age which the insect made at once its palace and its tomb, amid the surgings of an ancient sea, long ere man or beast had entered upon the scene. The clouds that rise for ever and forever from the hot, palpitating bosom of the earth. Jupiter, Minerva, Diana, Hymen, Cleopatra and Venus of the Orient have each a fountain whose sources are deep down in the impenetrable abysses. A thousand years hence these subterranean caverns will be, many of them, explored, when it will be found that they are the sepulchers of a risen lord. Aye! multitudes have had bodies formed out of the material that has once been solid rock. These cavities are really more cradles than coffins, out of which have arisen countless millions of animals whose bones that now lie near the surface of the earth were once in solid stratified masses of magnesian limestone. These great boiling fountains are the unconscious agents that are distilling the rocks and preparing the material, which, after being absorbed as nutriment for the vegetable, is ultimately transformed into bone and cartilage of all that creeps, runs, or flies on earth.

Countless millions of tons of magnesia and lime have thus been carried up in solution, deposited on terrace walls, and is then blown by the winds and carried, by water all over the continent. When your correspondent came to Mammoth Hot Springs in 1882 he could stand on the upper side of the Giant's Thumb and place his hand, by extending his fingers and on tiptoe, on the peak of this cone. Now, 1888, he cannot reach within two feet of it. If the dry carbonates of lime and magnesia have been dispersed by the winds to the depth of over two feet in six years, how many millions of tons have been thus sown broadcast over the earth from an area of six square miles?

Sometimes during my six years' residence in Yellowstone Park I have seen vast clouds of these carbonates lifted into the air by the winds that sweep down through the canyons on both sides of Limestone Mountain and go down the valley with the gale like a great snowcloud. There was perhaps enough carried away in one of those storms to fill all the freight cars of the Northern Pacific railroad. It was no overestimate of Prof. G. M. Von Rath's, that twenty thousand bushels of these carbonates were brought up out of the bowels of the earth by boiling water, and in invisible molecules, and deposited on the Grand Terraces every twenty-four hours.

Let the reader think for one moment of this most marvelous process! There are chambers extending several hundred miles. Some of these chambers are over one thousand feet in depth. Where these great mines now are there were solid ledges of magnesian limestone. These magnesian ledges were built by insects through countless ages. They were scorched to death by a heat so intense as to burn the material into quicklime. Then through other countless ages these limestone ledges were excavated and carried up in solution to construct the most beautiful terrace on this terrestrial globe. Then the winds and the waves have been dispersing these terraces to the four quarters of the globe. Then the grasses, mosses, sages, cacti, and forests have licked it up and conserved it; then millions of animals are in turn fed and made out of it. Can you now realize what one of England's great poets means when he says:

There's not one particle of all yon earth
But once was living man;
Nor yet one dewdrop sparkling in the sun
But flowed in human veins.

G. L. HENDERSON.

The New Egean Sea.***

Hesperia's hand is beckoning now,
Hope's amulet upon her brow;
Exchanged her barbarous heraldry
For peace and her white armory.
They sing her song upon the hills
Where Hood and Shasta's lightning thrills,
And on the path of dim frontiers
Rough-hewn by noble pioneers.

Civilization's restless round,
Whose feet first trod on classic ground,
Has laid her cycle's silver rim
Upon our plains and mountains dim;
With fruitful years and later lore
Is moving on our western shore,
And waiting on the further bar
She drops her westward-rolling star.

Hesperia's crown of sunsets made,
The Orient's purple car is stayed;
Italian skies of brodered gold,
Olympian hills and groves of old—
All these, and more, she yet shall bring
And clasp within this mystic ring.
Proud Marathon and Salamis
Were not more truly won than this,

A sea of gold from sunlit skeins!
Hesperia's grander battle-plain
Whereon her nobler monument
With names of pioneers is blent.
New states arise upon her zone;
Her emerald robe with stars is sown;
The New and Old her girdle binds
Her cheek is bronzed with western winds.
A golden age her future goal
With halos round her banner's scroll;
And, girt about with waning nights,
Are Territorial satellites
Unfolding their immensity,
Rescued from cairns of mystery
Through Science, with her star-like ray
And Art, that nevermore shall stray;
While Industry, with nut-brown hands,
Unwinds her distaff's silken bands.

Thermopylæ, whose fated wall
Embracing victory in its fall,
Gave to the nations yet unborn
The blessings of her natal morn—
Though cypress twined each crested hill
The laurel wreath was on them still.
With dreams of that Egean sea
We hail the East that is to be.

SHALL COLONEL INGERSOLL WRITE A DRAMA?

I like to see the stage honored, because actors are the ministers, the apostles, of the greatest man that ever lived, and because they put flesh and blood and passion upon the greatest character that the greatest man drew. That is the reason I like the stage. It makes us human. A rascal never gained applause on the stage. A hypocrite never commanded admiration, not even when he was acting a clergyman, except for the naturalness of the acting. No one has ever yet seen any play in which, in his heart, he did not applaud honesty, heroism, sincerity, fidelity, courage, and self-denial. And no man ever heard a great play that did not get up a better and wiser and more humane man.

And I enjoy the stage; I always did enjoy it. And I enjoy the humanity of it. I hate solemnity; it is the brother of stupidity—always. You never knew a dignified man that was not stupid, and you never will. There never was a man of true genius but what had the simplicity of a child. There never was a man of true genius over whose lips has not rippled the river of laughter—never, and there never will be. Solemnity is always a mask, worn to hide stupidity. I like, I say, the stage for that reason—for its wit and for its humor. I do not like sarcasm; I do not like mean humor. But there is as much difference between humor and malicious wit as there is between a bee's honey and a bee's sting.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Referring to the above I desire to address a few remarks to the able writer, and I think that a majority of the Freethinkers of this country will coincide with me. For years I have thought of a different mode of celebrating the birthday of our illustrious Thomas Paine, and it has often occurred to me to write Col. R. G. Ingersoll and ask him why, with his natural love for the genius of Paine and his extensive knowledge of his history from infancy to the grave, I ask him why is he not the proper person to write a play that the Freethinkers of this country could have produced upon the stage by the best actors upon Paine's birthday or as many days before and after as the multitude may require. What better subject could a person name? What better foundation to base a play; and, without flattery, what better person to write it than the able colonel?

I can imagine that I see the announcement of the play in the papers. The crowds are assembling, the houses (theaters) are packed, not in one city alone, but all over the United States, the Canadas, the Islands, and England. A few years later I think that it would be translated into other tongues and then that day would be our that would be remembered by the rising youth of all countries. They would desire to know who this hero was; and as soon as a child thinks, it reasons; to reason is to acquire knowledge, and the child soon has planted in its mind the seeds from whence grows the tree that bears the fruit of Freethought.

What person of all who have been associated with our country's history has been more able, self-sacrificing, unostentatious, intrepid? Whose career encourages benevolent, truthful, philosophical, and wise conduct more than Paine's? What better lesson for the rising youth of our country than to see exemplified upon the stage the hardships, the determination, resolution, force, privations, sacrifices, toils, and constant watchfulness required to establish the foundation of the governmental structure which we now occupy? Who of all now passed away receives so small a percentage of credit due for actual services rendered as Thomas Paine?

Freethinkers make good patrons of theaters, and if we are not heaping too much upon the good colonel, the majority of us would like (if we survive him) to go and see enacted plays of his production, not only upon Paine, but Humboldt and others, and to feel that we are serving two purposes, celebrating both the memory of the subject of the play and of the writer.

FREETHOUGHT is the name of the new Liberal paper just started at San Francisco, Cal., by our friends Samuel P. Putnam and Geo. E. Macdonald. It makes a handsome appearance, is well filled, and we hope it may prove successful and endure for generations to come.—Investigator.

An Interesting Paper—An Excellent Field.

FREETHOUGHT is the title of a new Liberal journal started in San Francisco by Messrs. Putnam and Geo. E. Macdonald. We have seen the first issue, which is an interesting number. Our co-workers have selected a most excellent field for their useful work, and we wish them every success in their secular propaganda.—Secular Thought.

Splendid is the Word.

We have received two issues of FREETHOUGHT, and find it about what we expected—a splendid journal. It is full of the earnest enthusiasm of Putnam and the no less earnest but more witty attacks upon superstition of "our brother," who is something of a Voltaire in his way. We agree with the Investigator that FREETHOUGHT "makes a handsome appearance, is well filled," and, with Mr. Seaver, "we hope it may prove successful and endure for generations to come." The Pacific Coast needs an Infidel journal, and we know of no men more competent to conduct one than the editors of FREETHOUGHT.—The Truth Seeker.

SECULARISM OR GOD IN THE STATE.

The primary factor which called the American Secular Union into activity was the so-called National Reform Association, a society which held its first convention in Pittsburg in 1874, and whose purpose can best be learned from the declaration of its president, who said:

We propose such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as will suitably acknowledge Almighty God the author of the nation's existence and the ultimate source of its authority, Jesus Christ as its ruler, and the Bible as the supreme rule of its conduct, and thus indicate that this is a Christian nation, and place all Christian laws, institutions and usages on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land.

Such an amendment to the Constitution was shortly after presented to the United States Senate, and immediately articles, appeals, arguments, and warnings flowed from the Freethought press, so that on October 17, 1875, a few delegates, headed by Francis E. Abbot, met in Philadelphia to form a preliminary organization. Their resolutions declared, in regard to this God-in-the-Constitution movement: "These great and growing evils render it a paramount and a patriotic duty, on the part of all American citizens who comprehend the priceless value of pure secular government, to take measures for the immediate and absolute secularization of the state, and we earnestly urge them to organize without delay for that purpose," and concluded by calling a national convention to meet in Philadelphia on July 4, 1876.

On that fitting and auspicious occasion—Independence day of the centennial year of our republic—the National Liberal League was organized at Concert Hall, Philadelphia (July 4, 1876), to oppose the encroachment of church and state proposed by the God-in-the-Constitution party.

These Liberals, like the founders of this government and the framers of our Constitution, reaffirmed that this republic was designed to be completely divorced from all religious dogma, of Christianity or any other sect or creed, and that it should remain, as was intended, a purely secular government.

Believing in the establishment, security and enforcement of complete mental liberty, they claimed that this cannot be accomplished so long as any church or ecclesiastical denomination or sect receives aid from the state by the remission of its taxes, or that statutory laws require any oath or obligation in conformity with Christianity, and therefore formulated the following justly celebrated Nine Demands:

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

Let me here state that those demands are still the only fundamental basis of the American Secular Union—all other objects must ever be secondary to that of secularization of the state.

Active measures were then taken by the National League to defeat the amendment, and when it was introduced by the Senate Judiciary Committee it failed to pass the United States Senate by but two-votes. Just think what a narrow escape, for had that amendment been submitted, there is little doubt as to its adoption at that time.

Owing in part to the lack of means to diffuse a knowledge of its principles, and in part to the persistent misrepresentation that every organized protest against time-honored evils has ever met with, there are millions of people many of them doubtless at heart in sympathy with its objects who were and are yet entirely ignorant of our aims and work. For this reason I have prepared this brief exposition of the ends it seeks to accomplish and the methods by which it proposes to attain them, in order that those who have not familiarized themselves with its efforts may lend it their names and influence.

Many well-meaning persons of fair intelligence express surprise and dissent at the assumption that there is in the United States even the faintest appearance of a union of church and state. They insist that in this country there is no established church, and consequently no union of political and ecclesiastical powers. Theoretically this is true, but practically it is far from the truth, and our second article will show wherein this is so.

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

James Tuttle Atlanta, Ill. ....	$25.00

Wm. Case, Lafayette, Ind. ....	10.00
Carl Hyldahl, Fort Thomas, Arizona. ....	5.00
Wm. Redfield, Stanley, Iowa. ....	5.00
Wm. Reynolds, Wanship, Utah. ....	2.50
E. R. Evans, Durand, Ill. ....	2.00

Mrs. Catherine Blair, $1; A. H. Graff, $1; Sheldon Tourgee, M. F. Dean, M. W. Dunham, and J. S. Smead, 50 cents each—all those from Miss V. de Cleyre. Edward Ross, $1; John J. Jost, $1.

First on the Roll of Honor for January stands the name of James Tuttle, of Atlanta, Ill., who attended the last Congress and pledged $25 for the Campaign Fund by taking a life membership. This contribution would have reached the secretary much sooner had he not been laboring under the delusion that Mr. Tuttle lived at "Atlantic" instead of Atlanta. James Tuttle is not so much of a talker, but as a worker and giver is entitled to take high rank among the noblest Liberals of our time, as his frequent labors and contributions amply testify. It is sad, however, to contemplate that our younger men do not more often show ardent love for the Liberal cause, when they see these venerable apostles, who, beside having borne the brunt of the battle as pioneers of Freethought, still have to sustain the struggle financially, even though weighted down by the burden of eighty years, as is the case of friend Tuttle. If possible, I shall soon take a trip through Illinois, when I will endeavor to furnish your readers with more interesting facts about Mr. Tuttle.

Photius Fisk is another to whom the cause of Freedom is profoundly indebted, and whose many generous deeds will be subjects of praise in coming time. Mr. Fisk has forwarded $25 for the treasury, and again there is a tinge of sadness to think that in his enfeebled condition—unable to walk, or read or write—we have to appeal to such afflicted Liberals, because we know that despite their decrepitude their hearts and minds are still sound to the core. As it is more "blessed to give than to receive," may Mr. Fisk feel abundantly repaid by a knowledge of work well done. Mr. Fisk's thought, for many years, has been concentrated on the well-being of others, and, though denied the dearest boon of the student and thinker, the faculty to read and write, whatever betide himself he has ever been foremost in sustaining the battle for mental freedom, which is grandly commendable of his qualities of mind and heart. It is hard to realize how much is the debt of gratitude we owe such moral heroes as Photius Fisk. It is perhaps idle to hope that Mr. Fisk might be fully restored to vigor, but if there were any virtue in mental healing his complete restoration would soon be an accomplished fact, for that doubtless is the desire of every true Secularist in the land who knows the name of Photius Fisk. You Liberal men of means and robust health should blush to be reminded by these acts of old heroes of your indifference.

Another veteran soldier in the battle against religious bigotry is Wm. Case, of Lafayette, Ind., who sends $10 to keep the flag of mental freedom flying. As Brother Case intends to do something better before he dies, we shall hereafter make special mention of him.

Wm. Redfield, of Stanley, Iowa, is a sterling soldier, intent on elevating our flag above the "cross," and who, together with Alex. Risk, makes it exceedingly interesting for the foes of mental freedom in his section of the country. Brother Redfield attended the last Congress and knows something of the importance of the work to be accomplished, and is also anxious that the next Congress should be held in Chicago.

Carl Hyldahl, of Fort Thomas, Arizona, is introduced to us through the Investigator, and sends through Mr. Mendum five dollars for the good of the cause. In his response to letter and certificate of annual membership, which evidences a gentleman of culture, Brother Hyldahl says he is glad and proud to be a member of the union. May he be fully able to hold the fort in Arizona till mental freedom is secured.

William Reynolds, of Wanship, Utah, is not a "Latter Day" saint by a large majority, but is an active, earnest, intelligent secularist, so he sends his tithing to the temple of Common Sense as represented by the American Secular Union, instead of to the church of Zion, with the regret that a couple of ciphers cannot add value to the above figures. As to that, the secretary, following a distinguished senator's example, says "me too." Brother Reynolds is secretary of the Utah Secular Union, which is shaking things up generally, and it doesn't look as if the saints would immortal reign—not while Brother Reynolds is around.

E. R. Evans, of Durand, Ill., attended the Chicago Congress and pledged $2, which he forwards with the wish that it were multiplied about a hundredfold for the purpose of spreading the light of universal mental liberty.

With the exception of Messrs. Jost's and Mr. Ross's contributions the rest are all the work of Miss Voltairine de Cleyre's energy at the very first place where she solicited aid toward the American Secular Union, and there are more of them that have not reached me. Those from Pittsburg will be noticed next month.

This establishes the fact that the American Secular Union will not be likely to flourish without a corps of earnest supporters in the Liberal lecture field—that it is in their province to build it up or let it go down. It is the desire of the board of directors to enlist all the lecturers in this work as special agents of the Union, and they are willing and anxious that these contributions may be a source of revenue to them in their work. The board of directors are willing to either pay them a Liberal commission on amounts collected, or a specified sum for services rendered, at the end of the month or year. There has been complaint that the policy pursued in the past has only resulted in the financial benefit of a few persons. That objection will be in future removed, and it is hoped that those lecturers who are willing to act as such agents will receive the aid and encouragement of all Liberals who believe in the upbuilding of an organization for secularization of the state. From present appearances we are going to succeed, for there are some splendidly equipped men and women likely to enter the lecture field in our behalf. E. A. STEVENS, Secretary A. S. U.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM will lecture at Fresno and Oleander, February 17 to 24; at Los Angeles and vicinity, from February 26 to March 1; at National City, San Diego, and vicinity, March 4 to 15. He will visit also during this trip San Jacinto, Del Mar, Monrovia, Nipomo, Santa Barbara, and other places. He will lecture the first week in June at Ashland and vicinity; afterward in Coos county. He will be at Silverton, Or., June 22, visiting also Molalla, Stayton, McMinnville, Forest Grove, Salem, Portland, Astoria, and other places, during June and July. It is hoped that friends along the route will arrange at the earliest possible moment for lectures, so that definite dates can be made.

THE Sinaloa Colony Club held their regular monthly meeting at 39 Fourth street, Sunday, 2 P. M., H. W. Faust, chairman, W. N. Slocum, secretary. A. K. Owen's greeting for 1888 was warmly received. A cheering letter was read from J. Burns of Topolobampo, and another from Dr. E. J. Schellhaus, one of the directors of the colony, and also his article published in the People. Quite a discussion took place in regard to the workings and the principles of the colony. Thirty dollars was subscribed for the ship-fund and seventeen dollars for stock.

MR. L. C. HILL has been authorized to lecture and organize branch societies of the Agnostic Moral Society of Hannibal, Mo. He will also receive subscriptions to FREETHOUGHT.

C. B. REYNOLDS will be at Delta, Col., Feb. 7, 8, and 9; at Hotchkiss 10, 11, and 12; at Canon City 19; LaVeta 21, 22, 23.

NEWS AND NOTES.

While the blizzard bloweth Eastward and King Frost revels in ice and snow, Sunday, Feb. 5th, was like a sunny day in June on the shores of this new Egæan. The air was luminous and warm, and as we rolled out of the city on the crowded train, green fields greeted our eyes; vineyards and orchards just ready to bloom were on either side; brown meadows stretched away to the margin of the shining sea, where the white ships glittered; along the horizon toward the varying hills, mingling in soft color with the glowing sky. Fifty miles' travel through this scene of enchantment into Santa Clara valley brings us to San Jose—the Garden City. Thirteen miles off is Mt. Hamilton, on whose summit could be seen the white walls of the Lick Observatory, where swings the great telescope day and night, watching the infinite heavens.

San Jose is thriving. Every house is occupied. Tourists throng its streets. Its lofty electric light blazes amid bustling activities, and alongside the church and cathedral the merry theater on Sunday nights proclaims its gospel of music and joy.

Again we greet our friends Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Schwartz, Mr. and Mrs. L. Magenheimer, Mr. and Mrs. F. Baumgartner, J. Vostrovsky and family, all ardent Freethinkers; Samuel A. Bishop, the Secular Bishop, Professor Cottinger, Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Titus, John A. Dibble, of Santa Clara, and others. We lectured in the afternoon at Turnverein Hall. Mr. and Mrs. Schwartz furnished excellent music for the occasion. The audience was not large, but the warm interest manifested by those present and the desire to carry on the work in spite of opposition and indifference made the visit one of great pleasure and promise. The campaign is just begun. We shall return again to San Jose and organize a Secular Union.

Quite a number of subscriptions were received for FREETHOUGHT. It is evident that the people of the coast have taken this paper to their hearts and will give it a cordial support. It is a bond of union which, combined with the platform and secular organizations, will make the triumph of Liberalism assured.

People do enjoy themselves here in California on Sunday. Bands of music, baseball clubs, and picnics enliven the day. It is a festival occasion. The cars were crowded with excursionists as we returned in the evening to the city. We were accompanied on our homeward way by Mr. and Mrs. Baumgartner and Mr. Vostrovsky and family, coming up to attend the annual reunion of their countrymen of Bohemia. S. P. P.

THE CHICAGO SECULAR UNION'S CELEBRATION.

There was a blaze of light in Kimball Hall last night; there was a singing society on the platform; there was an orchestra of seven pieces stowed away in the corner; there were decorations on every hand; there were pretty girls there by the score—pretty girls who sang, pretty girls who danced, pretty girls who played piano solos, pretty girls who apostrophized Liberty in pretty little speeches. There was even a zither solo to "Liberty."

The Chicago Secular Union was celebrating the 151st anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine. The Chicago Secular Union is organized for "secularization of state and Freethought propaganda"—that is what the programs said. In other words, it is a society of professed Infidels. It has about 150 members. There were nearly three hundred people there last night. One might expect a gathering of Infidels to differ in some way from a gathering of of Christians—to have some of the supposed ear-marks of Infidelity. But it might have been a Sunday-school soiree so far as outside appearances went. There were little children there who might be Sunday-school pupils, there were modest young ladies there who might be Sunday-school teachers, there were grave and gray-bearded men there who might be Sunday-school superintendents, men bald enough to be entitled to seats in the front-row when the ballet is on. First there were literary and musical exercises for two hours. Then there was a ball which lasted till nearly daylight. The literary exercises included an oration by the president, E. A. Stevens, on "Thomas Paine, Revolutionary Hero, Patriot, Statesman, and Philosopher." There would have been an original poem on the same subject by Dr. Juliet H. Severance, only that Mrs. Severance accidentally left the poem behind her on her dressing-table at home. It was a narrow escape. Mrs. Severance filled in her place in the program, however, by reciting a piece called "A Woman's Conclusion." The woman concluded in favor of the other fellow. It is usually that way.

Mr. Stevens's oration was the chief feature of the earlier exercises. A platform had been erected for Mr. Stevens and the singing society. The walls adjacent to the platform were ablaze with flags and mottos.

"Ye that dare oppose not only tyranny but the tyrant, stand forth.—Paine.

"The world is my country; to do good, my religion."—Paine.

"In vain would have been the sword of Washington, worthy as he was, but for the pen of Paine."—John Adams.

These are specimens of the mottoes. To Mr. Stevens's right on the platform there was a framed design with pictures of the father of the republic and a copy of the Declaration of Independence. On his left there was a framed parchment, on which were inscribed the "Nine demands of Secularism." On a small table before him was a plaster cast of "Thomas Paine writing his 'Age of Reason'." There were national flags everywhere around. Mr. Stevens wore the badge of the society—"the flag above the cross." It is a gray white satin badge, with a picture of the union flag floating over a prostrate cross. All the officers of the society wore secular badges. Mr. Stevens's effort was a brilliant oration and well spoken.

After the oration there was music interspersed with recitations. Then the chairs were cleared away, the orchestra tuned up its instruments, and the dancing began. There were fourteen numbers on the program, and each number was named in honor of some prominent Infidel, or the work of some prominent Infidel. Altogether it was quite a successful celebration.—Chicago Times.

TWO PAINE MEETINGS AT OGDEN.

The Ogden, Utah, Optic, Leo Hæfeli editor, gives this account of the Paine celebration at that place:

As the Optic predicted, the memorial exercises of the birthday of Thomas Paine, last Sunday in Union Opera House, went off in good style. It was not an aggressive affair or an iconoclastic concern. Nobody was burned in effigy or otherwise. All was harmony and good will, hilarity and happiness. Nobody's feelings could have been hurt, notwithstanding the unique nature of the celebration. Freethought does not arrogate to itself alone the right of being free, it grants it to others also.

In the afternoon Corey's hall was fairly filled with an audience of ladies and gentlemen of the best class of society. Children furnished a pleasing Sunday-school sprinkling. Mrs. Hamblin, supported by the chorus of the audience, rendered the "Star-Spangled Banner" in an emphatic manner. Leo Hæfeli made a speech on Paine's great political endeavors. John A. Jost also delivered an eloquent address. Other speeches were made, William Jones exhibiting his loyalty and patriotism. Ford & Co. gave a pleasing banjo chorus, while Professor Beeston thrilled the audience with a beautiful solo, "The Life Boat." Miss Simms entranced the audience with splendid violin solos. E. F. Munn presided in a dignified manner over these exercises, at the close of which the basket picnic was partaken of, all partakers getting their fill except the Optic man, who had to sit down twice. The afternoon was a Sunday school of reason and good will. We must not forget the efficient services of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Lambert in the culinary department, assisted by John A. Jost and others too modest to be mentioned.

In the evening H. C. Wardleigh presided. His gavel called forth Miss Cora B. Stephens, who gave an inspiring musical rendition of the "Red, White, and Blue," supported by the chorus, which was largely supplemented from the audience, which by this time filled the hall to overflowing. Miss Simms followed with a pretty violin solo, appreciatively listened to by the five hundred or more people who filled the hall. E. F. Munn, an old-time Liberal of this county, being introduced, did justice to the occasion with a most rousing speech on the hero of the occasion, Thomas Paine, who had fought the darkness of thousands of years. Miss Cora B. Stephens again thrilled us all with her sweetly rendered song of the "Vacant Chair," in that manner so felicitously her own.

The oration of the occasion was delivered by Hon. Ogden Hiles, assistant U. S. prosecuting attorney. It was listened to with rapt attention by an intelligent multitude. It was replete with the most patriotic and rational sentiments of liberty and progress, doing justice to the man and the day. A skeleton synopsis would be a shallow attempt. Suffice it to say, Mr. Hiles delivered a grand and glorious oration. Mr. Hiles's beautiful oration was followed by Mrs. Hamblin singing "A Thousand Years," well supported by the chorus.

After a short intermission ("to get a breath of fresh air") there was a banjo and guitar treat by Messrs. Ford and Browning. Miss Mason gave a pathetic recitation of "The Curfew Will not Ring To-night." The hall remained crowded, even when Leo Hæfeli made a speech in his usual rambling way.

The exercises came to a close with a song by Professor Beeston. The whole affair was one of great interest, and nothing occurred to mar the enjoyment and good feeling of even the most susceptible. None but the most rantingly captious fanatic could take exception.

PITTSBURG AND PAINE.

The Pittsburg, Pa., Secular Society, true to its trust, celebrated the one hundred and fifty-first anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine with appropriate ceremonies.

On Sunday, Jan. 29, Miss Voltairine de Cleyre, of Grand Rapids, Michigan, lectured in Maltby Hall, on "Secular Education," to a large and appreciative audience, that evidently enjoyed this foretaste of the good things to come.

On Monday evening, at 8 P. M., the programme was resumed at Lafayette Hall. Prof. William Seymour, of Philadelphia, presided and opened the exercises with a neat and appropriate address. The feature of the occasion was the Paine oration, by Miss de Cleyre, which proved a pleasing surprise. Leaving the beaten path, she led her audience by untrodden ways, past the solid rocks of fact, deep pools of logic, and sparkling cascades of wit, gradually up by the metaphor-crowned crags of rhetoric, until they stood upon the serene heights of reason, with the panorama of history, philosophy, and poesy spread at their feet, and from which vantage ground might be viewed, not only the life, character, and motives of the Author-Hero, but the glory of coming day.

When justice shall be done to Thomas Paine. The rapier of her wit is as keen and polished as the lance of Helen Gardener, while with a delicate hand she wields the golden wand of eloquence that sways "that enchanted realm where pathos touches tears." While the radiance of this rising star may not obscure any of the familiar lights of the galaxy of Freethought, it shines with brilliancy all its own, which is destined in coming years to illumine the path of many a weary wanderer on his way from the slough of superstition to the temple of Mental Liberty. Young, talented, enthusiastic, honest and brave, this lady deserves, and should receive the hearty co-operation and support of every Liberal in the land.

The excellent music was furnished by Gernert and Guenther's orchestra. Altogether the occasion was a very enjoyable one, and will long be remembered by those who participated. So,

"As round and round we run,
Ever does Truth come uppermost,
And ever is Justice done."

HARRY HOOVER.

THE PAINE CELEBRATION AT SALT LAKE CITY.

The Salt Lake Evening Times gives this account of the meeting which the Liberals there held on the 29th ult. in honor of Thomas Paine:

The Paine Memorial Anniversary held in the Walker Opera House last night was a grand success. Nothing of the kind ever equaled it in Utah. The house was crowded from the dress circle to the dome, every seat being occupied, and scores of people stood patiently through the exercises. That such a crowd assembled on such an occasion and on such a night, when churches are open and anxious for sinners to fill them, speaks well for the Freethought cause, and shows that the people expected what they enjoyed, an intellectual and social treat. The audience was made up of all classes of our community in this city, as well as some from the neighboring towns, and they were not attracted to the gathering out of curiosity or on account of any supposed novelty of the entertainment, for it was apparent from the first by the hearty applause and strict attention of everybody present that a deep interest was felt in the whole proceedings.

Stretched across the stage in front of the curtain was a banner on which was inscribed that humanitarian and memorable sentiment of Paine, "The world is my country; to do good, my religion." In front of the speaker's desk were the portraits of Paine and Ingersoll. The pictures rested within the folds of our national flag—a most appropriate device. Judge Bennett, of this city, presided, and at a few minutes after eight o'clock, he arose and in a few appropriate introductory remarks stated the occasion that had brought the vast audience together.

W. S. Godbe, president of the Utah Secular Union, made one of his characteristic speeches, short and terse, and closed by reciting an original poem, written for the occasion. The choir followed next by singing, "The Ship of State." Mr. A. B. Thompson recited a poem, entitled, "Memory of Thomas Paine." Dr. A. Scott, Mr. Chapman, and Mr. L. B. Yerxa sang the song, "Ship Ahoy."

Then came the great feature of the evening, the address on the life and acts of Thomas Paine, by Dr. York. The speaker was at his best, and his remarks were listened to with the closest attention. Dr. York commenced his lecture by reviewing in a brief way the history of Freethought and the kind of men that were the fathers of the cause. This soon brought him to consider the life of Paine. The lecturer showed how much the world is indebted to the fearless author of "The Rights of Man" and how in the trying times of the rise of the American nation he stood foremost among the agitators and proclaimers of liberty. Toward the close of his remarks the doctor showed how unjust are the charges of the church against Paine; even were they true that would not effect the work he did for humanity's sake. But Paine, he showed, was not the drunkard nor the recanter that Christians claim he was. On his death bed, his last words were a strong vindication of what he had during his life advocated. He died as he had lived, a believer in one God, but a disbeliever in any Christ. The whole address was a powerful one, sparkling with gems of thought, wit, and sarcasm, and the occasion was one that will long be remembered, and result in great good to the cause of freedom in this priestly land.

After the meeting was dismissed, hundreds of people gathered on the platform to shake hands with the doctor.

"Wayside Jottings," a 204-page book of poems and sketches by Mrs. Mattie Hull, is dedicated to the author's mother, companion, and spirit friends. Moses Hull writes the Introduction. The work is Spiritualistic, and as Mattie says,

Perhaps some of its simple rhymes may build
A hope and joy within a saddened heart.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The English courts have shut up Father Donegal, a priest, for three months. His crime is loyalty to Ireland.—Twelve of the Socialists on trial at Posen, Germany, have been convicted. The impression is gaining ground that Socialism is all that is necessary to a conviction for felony in any court.—The Rev. Mr. Spurgeon explains his resignation from the Baptist Union by saying that he does not hold a belief in immersion as sufficient unto salvation, and charges the Baptists with being false to the teachings of scripture.—The crown prince of Germany is feeling better. Professor Virchow reports that he finds no indication of cancer in the prince's throat trouble.—Dr. McGlynn has raised a storm by charging that General Master Workman Powderly, of the Knights of Labor, has sent an ambassador to Rome with Knights of Labor funds to buy up the pope's underlings.—The physician of James Redpath, journalist and traveler, has given up all hope of his patient's recovery from paralysis of the throat cords, the result of overwork one year ago. Redpath cannot speak, but is in possession of all his mental faculties.—Wisconsin courts have decided adversely to woman suffrage.—The supreme court at Olympia, W. T., decides that a local option law is void. This liberates twenty-eight persons held under that law.—The end of the Sharon-Hill divorce suit is that Sarah Althea was the late senator's wife, that she was legally divorced, and that she is entitled to alimony.—Dr. Edward B. Aveling, who was recently in this country, said in a speech the other night at Newcross, England, that upon his arrival in America he was greatly surprised to find the condition of the laboring people here much worse than in European countries.—The Rev. J. P. Bushingham, pastor of the Ada-street Methodist church, Chicago, is in trouble. On the 1st inst. he was arrested on a warrant sworn out by Miss Eva Parker charging him with the illegitimate parentage of her child.—Californians complain that the administration is blocking all efforts of the legislature to exclude the Chinese from this country.—Mlle. Senide, a female circus performer at London, desired a photograph taken of herself with her head in a lion's mouth, and last Saturday placed it between the animal's jaws for that purpose. The sitting was not satisfactory on account of the beast suddenly closing his mouth and severely biting the young lady's head.—Jenny June, in a letter to the Post, holds that the world is not divided into rich and poor, but into capables and incapables.—The English church receives in tithes, or taxes, above $20,000,000 annually.—Christianity is making poor headway in Africa. Only two missionaries were eaten there last year.—The Anti-Atheistic Society of Paris has taken into membership General Tchen-Ki-Tong. General Tong got in by proving that Chinese are not Atheistic, but believe in God, and think their emperor is his representative.—Arrests in this city during the past month of January numbered 1634. Nearly half were drunks.—Of the 90,803 farms in Michigan, 43,079 are mortgaged for 60 percent of their value.—The cooks and waiters, having lost the recent strike, promise to open co-operative restaurants.—Joseph Smith, Jr., the son of the man through whom the Mormons believe their Bible was revealed, lectured in this city last week. He had an audience of 22 persons.

AMONG BOHEMIAN GIRLS.

The little kingdom of Bohemia, which covers an area of central Europe about one-seventh the size of California, has its representatives in every large city of the United States. These representatives love to meet together occasionally to hear again the accents of their mother tongue and keep the fires of patriotism burning.

Such was the occasion of a ball held at Union Square Hall last Sunday evening by the Bohemian society of this city and vicinity. Several hundred persons were there, among them many children, for the Bohemian has the laudable custom of taking his wife and children with him when he goes out for a good time. The hall was prettily decorated; there was no lack of solid men and pretty girls; the music was lively and rollicking, and good cheer and sociability made the occasion more like a family gathering than a public entertainment. Through the courtesy of Mr. Baloun, who acted upon the suggestion of Brother Vostrovsky, the editors of this paper were enabled to be present and to make many desirable acquaintances. The Korbel brothers are gentlemen who enjoy wealth without displaying any of its pretensions; Mr. Baloun is a worker who cares more for the good results of his labor than for the applause it merits; Dr. Proshek is distinguished in appearance and reputation; and Mr. Vostrovsky, who was there with his family from San Jose, deals out hospitably and copies of FREETHOUGHT with unstinted cordiality. Mr. and Mrs. Baumgartner came also from San Jose.

The feature of the evening that warmed the heart of every man, woman, and child in the hall was the Bohemian dance, set to the music of the national airs of that country. It is a pretty dance, full of graceful figures; the music is alternately soft, then lively, then majestic; the dancers kept perfect time; the men were dignified, the ladies graceful; and at the end of each figure the hall rang with the applause of the patriotic Slavs. The exercises were sustained until well along toward morning. Probably no services held in this city on that Christian Sabbath were more profitable than the reunion of these fraternal Bohemians.

MISS GARDENER'S INQUIRY.

The Second Adventists of Michigan believe that the judgment day is close at hand, and to prepare for it they are selling their property and giving the proceeds to the church.

If the "judgment day is at hand," what does the church want with the property? Does it expect to take its corner lots and bank book up with it? If it, why not its members? What is the matter with the brains of the Adventists anyhow? Or rather, what is the matter with their brain cavity? H. M. G.

Anthony Comstock.

The government of the United States has an agency, appointed with a large salary, supported for the praiseworthy purpose of hindering or visiting with condign penalty the circulation of obscene pictures and books. One of the methods, perhaps the chief one, employed to this end, and which court and Congress connive at or shut their eyes to, is the agent's hypocritical ordering, under an assumed name, of a print or volume which he pretends to want, with no object but the obtaining of evidence against the publisher and shop. The officer plays the part of a decoy-duck to bring the shy and secretive offenders, for his prey, within the reach of his law-loaded gun. But for what recompense could one consent to be an informant in ambush on terms recognized in no Hebrew, Christian, or accepted pagan code? Something of his manhood is always sold by the spy. Part of his remuneration, if it be not blood money, is a bribe for his sly adventure and a sop to his shame.—Rev. C. A. Bartol in the Forum.

John Swinton.

Among those who know his story, there must be a great deal of sympathy for John Swinton, dying in poverty. He gave up his place on a newspaper in order to take hold of a journal devoted to the interests of the workingmen, and, after spending the little fortune gained by years of hard work, a new idol came on the scene, and the rush of worshipers to his shrine left Swinton almost alone. For his extreme views one may have little regard, but his unfortunate situation compels pity. He was, although visionary, brainy, energetic, and, above all things, honest, and it gives one no high opinion of the people for whom he resigned everything to know that they had no scruples about deserting him when the whim seized them.—Chicago News.

May it Come Long Hence.

San Francisco comes to the front in the ranks of Liberalism with a new journal, FREETHOUGHT, edited by Messrs. Putnam and Macdonald, both too well known to Liberal thinkers to need an introduction. Bright and spicy, as if the editors never breathed aught but the wild western air, we greet it with a cordial welcome and ask from Brother Putnam—when necessary—a kind obituary notice.—Dyer D. Lum in the Alarm.

A Numerical Misunderstanding.

Mormon elder (to shoe dealer)—I want to get a pair of shoes for my wife.

Shoe dealer—Yes, sir. What number, please?

Mormon elder—Seventeen.

Shoe dealer—Seventeen? Great Brigham, sir, we haven't shoes that large!

Mormon elder (sternly)—I'm not speaking of the number of the shoe, sir, but of the number of the wife.—Sun.

It isn't always the compositor's fault. The editor came hurrying in, primed with the latest information, and shouted down the speaking tube: "Change 'ill' to 'dead' in that Smith item." The literal compositor obeyed orders, and the item was printed: "Our esteemed fellow-citizen, Simon Smith, is lying seriously dead."

LAST summer a horse-thief posed as an evangelist in certain towns of Indian Territory, and is reported to have made many converts. In Missouri, a few weeks later, he was arrested for theft and convicted. He sawed and filed his way out of the prison, and, hastening to Arkansas, assumed a new name, and began a new series of revival meetings. Detectives traced him, and after what is described as an earnest sermon he was again arrested.

Santa Ana Standard: "FREETHOUGHT is the name of a new and elegant little journal just started in San Francisco by Samuel P. Putnam, the noted Liberal lecturer, and George E. Macdonald. It is a bright, spicy, ably edited paper, and advocates the right of Freethought and the cultivation of the intellectual faculties, while it fights superstition in every form. Mr. D. Edson Smith is the agent for it in Santa Ana."

THE National W. C. T. U. is circulating for signatures three petitions to Congress to be presented this month asking for national legislation on the Sunday question. It is under cover of the demand for Sunday laws that this nation is to be put under the tyrannical heel of the National Reform Church and State movement. If you want to help establish Church and State and a man-made theocracy, here, then sign these petitions. If you don't want to engage in that enterprise, then give these, and all similar petitions, the widest possible berth.—American Sentinel.

THE Independent says: "If the religious views of Infidels or some form of paganism were to be taught by the state, and believers in the religion of the Bible were to be taxed to pay the expenses thereof, these believers would complain bitterly and justly. The principle, however, is the same, no matter what religious views are incorporated into a system of popular education at the public expense. It is no better and no worse when applied to the religion of the Bible than it would be if applied to any other form of religious belief. The fact that the majority of the people, so far as they have any religion, believe in Christianity, and would have that taught by the state, if any religion is to be thus taught, does not alter the case at all. The rights of the minority not thus believing are just as sacred to them as those of the majority."

Dr. McGlynn says of the purposes of Rome: "The people may know, what I can tell them on the highest authority: The Roman machine is to-day most anxious to have a minister of the pope accredited to, and received by, the Government at Washington. Such minister would be an archbishop and one of the Italian ring, in whose hands it is the Roman policy to keep the power. His presence there could not fail to be a fruitful source of corruption and enslavement for the Catholic Church in this country. The pope is also trying to have diplomatic relations with Queen Victoria, in order, as he is alleged, "to be able to get accurate information about Irish affairs."

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Colonel Ingersoll's Publisher.

MY DEAR MR. PUTNAM: "Hail and farewell!" Glad you have reached so soon the golden shores; sorry for the host of friends you leave behind. You acted wisely. You believe in having your heaven here and now, and you have reached it! Your first number of FREETHOUGHT is as breezy and sunny as the slope it glances from. It sparkles of the "glorious climate." In the free air of your new home you will find an atmosphere ready-made for free thinking, free speaking, and free acting. You will improve it. No grander work can be done than to free the minds and lips of men; make them free as Nature. Hold the torch high, and it will light up not only the Pacific, but the great valley between, and its rays will reach even the benighted East, left in all the greater darkness by the removal of two such bright lights as yourself and Macdonald. Long life and good luck to you both, to the paper and the cause. You may charge my account with one year's subscription. All join in best wishes. Yours ever,

C. P. FARRELL.

New York, Jan. 26, 1888.

Better Subscribe Anyway.

DEAR FRIENDS PUTNAM AND MACDONALD: FREETHOUGHT from the Golden Gate came to me as sunbeams reflected from its native brightness, and thus it was I learned that without St. Peter's aid you had got there at last.

I read every word, including ads., of your number 1, and am much pleased with it. This much time I gave out of old-time regard and friendship, as I have no time to read other than morning papers. Papers and books come to me from "all over," but I cannot read them owing to my business and professional cares and their demand on my time. However, here is to and with you, heart and hand. You ought to succeed by the natural right of talent, heart, and brain, as well as good manly qualities.

DANIEL E. RYAN.

New York, Jan. 25, 1888.

An Early Abolitionist.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I see by your second number that Judge North, the first man to walk into your office and pay for your paper, is indebted to the Abolition party for his escape from the church. Now I never belonged to the church, but was among the first Abolitionists of the country, having voted for James G. Birney for president and also for Martin VanBuren in '48 when he ran on the Free Soil ticket; and I was the only man that cast a vote for John P. Hale in 1852, in Siskiyou county, California. The election was held on Green Horn Creek, three miles from Yreka, and the board of election got into a quarrel over the only Abolition ballot and wondered what d—d fool cast that vote. A part of the board did not want to count the vote, but they did just the same. I was also among the first to help organize the Republican party, and to that party we are indebted for the destruction of slavery in these United States, but no thanks to the church, which was all the while claiming that slavery was a God-given institution.

Inclosed you will find $2 to pay for FREETHOUGHT for one year. Wishing you all the success possible, I remain, with respect, yours, and a Freethinker, WM. REDFIELD.
Stanley, Iowa, Jan. 29, 1888.

A Letter from Captain Davis.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I am in receipt of No. 1 of FREETHOUGHT and shall be glad to see more of the same sort. Please put me down as a subscriber for two copies, for which I will remit at an early date.

Yours truly, ROBT. DAVIS.

Lunenburg, Mass., Jan. 20, 1888.

This is the Paper.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I inclose money order for two dollars ($2). If there is a paper edited by the fearless, energetic, and Rev. S. P. Putnam and the brave, witty, and impious "Man with the Badge-pin," I must have it. MARTHA M. BROCKWAY.
Jamestown, Pa.

Gen. M. M. Trumbull.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have received a copy of FREETHOUGHT, for which please accept my thanks. I hope it will do much to relieve humanity from the Slave-thought under which it is laboring now.

That you and the paper may both "live long and prosper" is the earnest wish of

Yours faithfully, M. M. TRUMBULL.

Chicago, Ill., Jan. 25, 1888.

No Sternutations this Way.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I like your paper. It is like everything the Golden state produces, much above the average. It is brighter than its gold, more sparkling than its wines, and we shall expect it to excel competitors as the fruits of that wonderful clime dwarf others in the markets. California papers and California pears are produced in the same soil, and neither are to be sneezed at. "Why shouldn't you succeed?" MRS. M. A. FREEMAN.
Chicago, Ill., Jan. 22, 1888.

Still Working at Eighty-five.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have your first number of FREETHOUGHT. I like it well and glory in your pluck in starting it. I verily believe it will prove a success. I shall try to get you some subscribers. But I am too old to do much in anything, being now in my 85th year. I can see that the power of priestcraft is weakening very considerably. Mr. Ingersoll has done wonders in opening the eyes of those who dare to read, and you, Mr. Samuel P. Putnam, are not far behind. Inclosed please find two dollars for one year's subscription to FREETHOUGHT. I cannot read half of the Liberal publications I take, but I circulate every one, including the Truth Seeker. Wishing you grand success, I am, very truly, J. SEDGEBER.
Painesville, Ohio, Jan. 20, 1888.

Piping Hot.

From Public Opinion.

FREETHOUGHT—fresh and warm from the oven o Putnam & Macdonald—has just come to hand, and its first issue looks quite refreshing, and makes us feel, since FREETHOUGHT "comes to stay," that there is a free-thinking element in this city, and on this coast, which is in earnest with regard to the issues which enlist the minds of men rather than their pocket-books. Hope FREETHOUGHT will see many Happy New Years.

Resigned to Live.

I dance no more on the music's wave;
I yield no more to its wildering power.
That time has flown, like a rose that is blown;
Yet life is a garden, forever in flower,
Though storms of tears have watered the years
Between to-day and that day departed;
Though trials have met me, and grief's waves wet me,
And I have been tired and trouble-hearted.

Though under the sod of a wee green grave
A great sweet hope in darkness perished,
Yet life, to my thinking, is a cup worth drinking,
A gift to be glad of and loved and cherished,
There is deeper pleasure in the slower measure
That Time's grand orchestra now is giving;
Its mellowed minor is sadder, but finer,
And life grows daily more worth the living.
—ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

For the Protection of Just Rights.

We have a new paper here called FREETHOUGHT, a very nicely gotten up weekly. Samuel P. Putnam and George E. Macdonald are the editors and publishers. The office is at 504 Kearny street. Freethought is the absolute birthright of every American citizen, and no novelty here in San Francisco. Yet we have many people who know nothing of that right. This paper comes to instruct them. We understand that part of its work will be to organize a Freethought power in this State that will see that the just rights of the people are not invaded in this regard.—Political Record.

Expedition Divorce.

"What man hath joined together, man may put assunder," holds a Western justice of the peace, who has recently granted a divorce after the manner of a dissolution of partnership. A man and woman in Michigan, after a short wedded life, recently walked eight miles to the justice who married them and demanded a divorce. After a command to "Unjine hands," the justice proceeded to administer an oath of mutual renunciation to each party. Then, stepping to the door, he loudly proclaimed the divorce. Receiving no objection, he pronounced the marriage annulled in the following words: "Then, by virtue of the power in me vested by the legislature of the state of Michigan, and my official oath, I hereby declare the partnership heretofore existing between the parties of this suit to be this day dissolved by mutual consent. All claims against the firm will be paid by John Henry Lawson, and all outstanding accounts owing the firm will be paid into this court." This summary proceeding seems to be fully equal of any of the expeditious methods recently unearthed in New York.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - FEBRUARY 18, 1888

THE ruling price of prayers in the legislature is quoted at $3 per pray. There is a lively competition among ministers for the position of chaplain.

PLYMOUTH church has fixed the salary of Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott at $6,500 yearly. This is right. What will it profit a preacher if he save the whole world on a small salary?

A PREACHER from the interior of Illinois has just visited a distinguished clergyman in Chicago to inquire whether he was justified in taking pay for evangelical work performed on Sunday. The question here raised needs agitating. The sanctity of the Christian Sabbath must be preserved.

THE announcement that there will be no Saint Patrick's day parade in this city must be received with universal regret. The public is thereby denied the pleasure of seeing the Rev. Dr. M. E. Gibson and the editor of the Occident marching in procession past a given point, in honor of Saint Patrick the Presbyterian.

LENT begins on the 15th inst., and his Grace the Most Reverend Archbishop of the Archdiocese of San Francisco has issued a proclamation setting forth the regulations governing that period as to eating. It is so worded that the faithful can eat anything set before them and ask no questions for conscience' sake. Like other religious forms, ceremonies, and institutions, Lent is a humbug.

THE Rev. J. P. Moore, a missionary, writes from Japan that if missionaries attempt to be economical in that country they can have very little influence with the natives. They must put on style. Any complaint which may reach the American Board of Foreign Missions in regard to the expenses of the Rev. Mr. Moore while doing the Lord's work in Japan is thus adroitly forestalled.

THE Nashville Christian Advocate says: "The jurisprudence that grants rich rascals new trials in the courts is more successful than will be the theology that promises new trials in the future life to those that wilfully go wrong in this. The judge of all the earth cannot be deceived or bribed." We accept the above statement only tentatively. Exactly what will happen in the next world cannot be determined with scientific precision until some one who has been there finds it convenient to materialize and depose.

THERE is a man at Rome, calling himself the successor of St. Peter, the vicar of Christ, and God's agent on earth. He dresses in unique costume, somewhere between a harlequin and a pantaloen. He sits upon a sort of throne, and his dupes kiss his foot—a relic of the kick in the mouth which serfs formerly submitted to as a token of their abject servitude. He professes to enunciate the will of the creator of the universe with infallible accuracy. He is the prince of impostors. Yet there are those who accept his claims and pay him homage and money. Some of these are physically alive. We live in an age of miraculous stupidity.

WHO PREACHES ANARCHY?

It has been persistently maintained by the orthodox party that Freethought leads to Anarchy; and by Anarchy they mean civil disorder, when every man shall be a law unto himself and have no regard to the constituted authorities of the people. This is mere assertion, and has never been proved by a single quotation from a representative journal of Liberalism. Freethought is in favor of order of government, of association, of the state, so far as it is in accordance with the Declaration of Independence, which is the fundamental document of the American Republic.

Freethinkers understand that, coming into social relations, there must be social limitations; that to a certain extent absolute individual freedom must be surrendered for the sake of society; that if a million people congregate together there must be a united action and a regard for what is called the voice of the majority under constitutional guarantees. This is simply a matter of necessity. There must be some orderly method of restraining crime. We cannot leave it to purely individual effort. The state may do many wrong things—this is not denied—but a wise reform will not destroy the state, but limit its functions. When the state exercises its legitimate functions it receives the respect and the support of the Liberal party.

Anarchy—that is, civil disorder—has been proclaimed all along the history of Christianity by fanatical sects; and anarchy, as a destructive force, has been based far more upon theology and religion than upon freethinking; and when it has accompanied freethinking it has been the result of a reaction of sentiment against the tyrannies of the state, as in modern Russia. Where liberty prevails Freethought is order, Freethought is justice, It is construction and not destruction. It is association and not disintegration.

The National Reform party, which seeks to put God and Jesus and the Bible into the Constitution, and which is pre-eminently the Christian party, preaches Anarchy even more vigorously than Herr Most, and sets itself defiantly against the American state founded upon the Declaration of Independence. The following is the declaration of one of their speakers at a reform convention at Kansas. A more unadulterated doctrine of Anarchy was never proclaimed. Read carefully:

If government be of man—if it be the mere will of the people—why should I stand in awe of it? I do not. I cannot look with awe and reverence upon the decisions and mandates of neighbor Jones, for I know that he is not the source of law to me; he is but my equal. Now if he and Smith agree to say what I shall do, must I recognize in Jones and Smith my rightful rulers? the government that I ought to respect and obey? Nay; if Jones and Smith and Brown agree to lay down the law for me, I am still unsubdued. I still assert my right. Nay, let millions of men, each of them my equal, command what is wrong or what is right, and their commands can never inspire in me profound reverence. Their will cannot be law to me. It is but the Jones, Smith, and Brown power at best. Multiply it to the millions, it is the Jones, Smith, and Brown power still. Its will is not law. It has no authority but what belongs to brute force. Neither God nor my conscience binds me to obey the will of a million any more than one of my neighbors.

Here is a distinct declaration against the value of all human law. It is revolutionary, it is destructive. It says: Obey my God, obey my Bible, or there shall be civil disorder. It says: Put Jesus into every law, or I will not obey. Herr Most says the same thing, i. e., If the law is according to my notion, I obey; if it is not, I reject it. So says the Reform party. Make laws according to the will of our God, or the laws are nothing to us. Says the Reform party, The government of the people, by the people, for the people, is not worthy of our regard. It is only the government of Smith, Brown, Jones, etc.

The Freethinker does not say this. He is willing to accept the government of the people for the sake of social harmony. He does not say, Make laws to suit me, or I will not obey. He respects the voice of the community. But the Reform party does not respect the voice of the community; it does not accept the government of the people of the United States; it tramples upon the Declaration of Independence. It says: Take God or Anarchy; take church or disorder; take theological sway or political chaos. The Reform party says: We will rule or ruin. In all the wildest utterances of the so-called Anarchists, there was never anything so utterly destructive of a social and political commonwealth as this declaration of the ecclesiastical party. It is a revelation of the cloven hoof of the church, of the devil of disorder and ruin that is in it. We see the gleaming sword half withdrawn from the scabbard of superstition, threatening not only the liberty but the order of society. It is the logic of religion which has made bloody the pages of history—submit or perish.

We proclaim Freethought, because it is in favor of a government by the people; because it is on the side of social order; because it is a protection to the rights and happiness of all; because it does make a nobler unity of mankind; because it does stand for justice and the repression of crime; because it does regard the voice of the community in questions of common interest.

Contrast Freethought with the Anarchistic utterances of the defenders of the church. They proclaim, disorder, ruin, chaos, the destruction of society, the abrogation of law, unless we quietly submit to the despotism of their barbarous deity.

The Anarchist says: Do as I—my ego—thinks proper, or I will overturn the state.

The theological fanatic says the same thing: Do as I—my ego, my God—thinks proper, or I will overturn the state.

Theology and Anarchy thus shake hands over a bloody abyss.

A LOUD CALL.

There has been such an unexpected demand for the back numbers of FREETHOUGHT that the issues of January 14 and 21, Nos. 2 and 3, are exhausted, and quite a number of our subscribers desire them, as they wish to have the paper on file from the beginning. Probably most of our readers want to keep the file complete, but there are some who may not, and we earnestly ask those who have copies of Nos. 2 and 3, or who can obtain them from others, and do not care to preserve for filing, to forward them to this office. They will thus confer a great favor upon us and upon subscribers who have failed to receive these numbers. We did not anticipate so extensive a call for our new paper. The sales at the newsstands have been far beyond our expectation. In fact, our circulation for a journal scarcely six weeks old has been remarkable. Our highest hopes have been more than realized in the generous welcome we have received from all parts of the country, especially from the Pacific Coast. It shows that a field long undesirably vacant is now occupied, and if friends continue to rally, our financial success is assured.

We are glad there has been so loud a call, and we shall be prepared hereafter to meet all demands.

THE LECTURE TOUR.

The sunshine is coming, the rains are clearing off, and the field work for Liberalism is at hand. We must leave the editorial chair and enter upon the pioneer service. The platform is as necessary as the press to the advancement and organization of our ideas. We must combine these two great means of labor. We expect to be in Fresno and Oleander this week, and then pass on to Los Angeles, Monrovia, San Jacinto, and Del Mar, to National City and San Diego. Returning, we shall endeavor to visit along the way Anaheim, Santa Ana, Nipomo, San Luis Obispo, Santa Barbara, Boulder Creek, Santa Cruz, etc. We shall lecture in San Jose in the latter part of April, and also in Gilroy, Livermore, and other places. We shall probably deliver one lecture in San Francisco during the month of May, and visit various places in the vicinity. From June 13 to 21 we expect to be in Coos county, Or. In June we shall open the campaign in Ashland and vicinity. June 22 we shall be at Silverton, on the anniversary of the organization of the Secular Union, and speak in the new and beautiful Freethought hall, which is an honor to the Secularism of Oregon. We shall also greet our friends at Molalla, Stayton, McMinnville, Salem, Portland, Vancouver, Forest Grove, Hillsboro, etc. We shall deliver the Fourth of July oration at Eagle Creek, and there will no doubt be a glorious celebration with hundreds of Liberals from near and far. We shall go down the broad Columbia to Astoria, Cathlamet, and other places.

So much of our summer's work is outlined. This will occupy us until about the first of August, when we shall take a trip to the far Eastward. Now we hope that all friends along the routes we have mentioned will begin the work at once. Either one, two, or three lectures can be given in a place. A little earnest effort will provide for a meeting at any point where there are half a dozen Liberals. We do not charge high prices, and are willing to work for a little where there are warm hearts and generous labors. We wish to continue the interest and enthusiasm that have already been aroused upon the Pacific Coast, so that there shall be a steady and permanent stream of progress. We have already received great encouragement for the coming year, but we are not satisfied with anything less than the most radical and productive results. We want every city and town and village along this wonderful coast to be agitated with the principles of Freethought. We do not purpose to take any vacation from this the work of a lifetime.

We ask the co-operation of all friends, of all Freethinkers; and we desire to communicate at the earliest possible moment with those who are willing to join in the campaign. The indications are that Freethought will make greater gains this year than ever before.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

A UNIQUE FIRE ALARM.

A singular card was handed us the other day, that is, at first sight it struck us as singular, but a little consideration showed that it was eminently appropriate. It was a pocket fire alarm, with the compliments of the Howard-street Methodist Episcopal church, containing a list of all the fire-alarm boxes in the city. On the opposite side was the benign picture of the Rev. R. Harcourt, D.D., pastor, and also a programme of the church services. The Rev. R. Harcourt is a happy looking gentleman, with spectacles on his nose, and an unwearying smile. His side-whiskers are beautiful. His necktie is gracefully concocted. Without doubt he is very popular. He doesn't seem to be ruffled by any care, but to have abundant appetite and good digestion. We looked inquiringly at the card, and wondered what connection there was between the Rev. Mr. Harcourt and the fire alarm of San Francisco. We were stupid indeed; having been so long out of the orthodox atmosphere, we had forgotten. This was a double fire alarm. On one side, a warning of fire in this world; on the other, a warning of fire in another world. The Rev. Harcourt himself was a fire alarm. There was no look of horror in his face, no agony; but there he was to announce an awful fire, where millions upon millions of the human race are burning up; and in view of this vast conflagration he holds a grand praise service every Sunday evening.

This is a symbolic card. Every time one uses the fire alarm boxes of the city he is constrained to remember the face of the Rev. R. Harcourt—the fire alarm for another world. We admire the ingenuity of the Howard-street Methodist Episcopal church. It knows how to combine business with theology. It realizes that its whole machinery is run by fire, and therefore it makes use of a pocket fire alarm to advertise its gospel.

THEODORE GORNER, of Livermore, left the names of nine subscribers to FREETHOUGHT at this office last week. J. Henry Schroeder, of Coos county, Or., sends us twelve names, and more coming. A. B. Thompson, of Salt Lake City, sends five names. H. L. Shaug, of Del Mar, six names, remarking, "To say that I am delighted with the general make-up of FREETHOUGHT conveys but faintly my feelings. I felt like shouting as the Methodists do, but instead of acting in so senseless a manner, I started out to circulate the good news and procure subscribers." A. H. Schou, of Oakland, brings us nineteen subscribers. J. Vostrovsky and R. H. Schwartz, of San Jose, add a dozen to the list; and along with the rush from the Pacific Coast far-off Maine is heard from; North Carolina, Florida, and New Jersey, "the state of blasphemy," and almost every part of the Union. New York joins with Chicago in forwarding recruits. Thomas J. Truss, president of the Secular Union of Denver, writes, "All the Secularists I have met with say they intend to subscribe for FREETHOUGHT." Thus the response is general, and enthusiasm prevails. Such success, however, only gives a splendid motive power for greater work. We have simply made a beginning. Within a month after starting, our subscription list ran up to over five hundred names, but we need ten times this number in order to achieve solid and permanent results. We want to reach a hundred thousand people on this coast. It can be done if every earnest Freethinker will aid in the circulation of this journal in his own community.

MR. CHARLES ECKHARD publishes a long article in an Eastern paper, the object of which is to cast doubt upon the correctness of the secretary's financial report to the Congress of the American Secular Union in 1886. Mr. Eckhard says:

"I was one of the Auditing Committee, and I declined to sign the report for the reason that there was no proof that the statement was true. Mr. Marshall, Mr. Thorpe, and Mr. Grower did not sign it for the same reason."

This statement by Mr. Charles Eckhard, so far as it concerns the action of Messrs. Thorpe and Grower, is totally and unqualifiedly false, and if we cannot prove it to be such over the signatures of both Mr. Thorpe and Mr. Grower we will forfeit one thousand dollars to the treasury of the American Secular Union, and retire. The remainder of Mr. Eckhard's article is inordinately malicious, and unworthy even of him. Having for a brief season enjoyed the ridicule of the Liberal public, he is now putting forth his best endeavors to merit its contempt. He should remember, however, that the rogues will sometime fall out, and that if he persists in his present course nothing will be due him in that event.

SOME one signing himself "A New York Dentist" writes from Los Angeles that, passing through a neighboring town, he stopped at a bookstore, where he saw a copy of FREETHOUGHT and at once bought it, not that he desired it for his own reading, but to "prevent its falling into the hands of some thoughtless young man and doing him an incalculable injury." The writer adds that what he saw in this paper determined him to give $1,000 for Christ's work, which he had brought to Los Angeles to invest in lots. Now let the recording angel give us credit for a thousand dollars. Religious editors may obtain our rates per column for cash-compelling literature by applying at this office.

J. D. SHAW, of the Independent Pulpit, writes, "I am so well pleased with FREETHOUGHT that if you are willing I will club with you." We accept the cordial invitation. We believe in joining forces. The field is big, and we can all help one another. Our motto is Fraternity. Many, no doubt, will be glad to take a weekly and a monthly together. The Independent Pulpit is an able and interesting journal, and is doing excellent work in the Southwest. The club rates for FREETHOUGHT and the Independent Pulpit, taken together, will be $2.80 per year.

THE Rev. Dr. Leonard, who opened the proceedings of the Subsidy Convention at Washington with a prayer, implored the divine guidance in measures "for the development of American shipping." The Almighty, we believe, has not as yet been requested to bear a hand in steering canal boats, though if prayer and commerce continue to be mixed as at present something of that sort may be expected shortly.

THE Rev. Dr. Maclay, a returned missionary from Japan, said at the Methodist parsons' meeting the other day that "in a short time Christianity would gain such a foothold as to be the recognized religion of that country and China." The facts are opposed to the Rev. Mr. Maclay's statement. No doubt he wishes he could believe it himself.

LET it be remembered that quite a stock of Liberal books are kept on sale at this office. This is the time of year when everybody should buy the "Truth Seeker Annual for 1888," price 25 cents, and Ingersoll's argument in the famous blasphemy case, price 25 cents. We have a large supply of both these works.

GATHERING EXPERIENCE.

The days of a man who looks after the details of publishing a new paper are full of woe. I, the writer, having been for numerous years foreman of a composing-room, congratulated myself—and it was also dwelt upon by Mr. Putnam—that in the publication of FREETHOUGHT we sprang to the conflict full-armed, and prepared to surmount difficulties as though on wings. On account of my previous condition of servitude Mr. Putnam left everything to me, and with the confidence born of inexperience I accepted the trust. To-day I found leisure to look in a glass, that is, a mirror, and I saw therein reflected a man bent with care, dusty, unshaven, baggy, and wearing a haunted, hunted, careworn look. The same was the junior editor of this journal as he appeared after seeing six numbers of FREETHOUGHT through the press.

Our first printer is a historical character in this city. He has been in the printing and publishing business for many years, and in his day has worked at the case when Henry George made typographical errors at an adjacent stand. I do not know how it occurred that the paper was always late while he had it. I went into his office one day when No. 5 should have been on the press and found much of it still in manuscript. He acknowledged that the paper was behindhand, but was unable to explain the circumstance. "Here we stand," he said reflectively, "in the presence of sufficient material to print the largest paper published in the country. Here are from fifteen to twenty men, all at work, many of them sober. I cannot understand why your work is behind." Investigation discovered that the men, instead of working on FREETHOUGHT, were putting in type an extended list of delinquent taxpayers of this city. I thereupon fell to and made up the paper, as I had done upon four previous occasions. I am rather fond of the so-called art preservative, and have no repugnance to handling type, but I found that for an editor to materialize into a printer so often was exhausting to the organism of the medium.

Two weeks ago the opportunity to obviate this difficulty seemed to have dawned upon us. Mr. F. Brown, who has set type on most of the Liberal papers, and who came to San Francisco in a palace car similar to the one occupied by Mr. Putnam and myself, proposed that FREETHOUGHT should have a private printing-office. The proposition was accepted; a room rented next to the editorial office, and an entirely new plant put in. Mr. Brown kindly agreed to do everything but the press-work. I thereupon prepared an announcement that I would retire from the printing business and hereafter devote myself to the production of thinklets. This announcement I am now obliged to defer. When No. 6 was about half ready for the press Mr. Brown succumbed to the influence of our semi-tropical climate, enrolled himself on the epizootic list, and at this writing has not reappeared. The experience of the past five weeks was repeated, and one long and weary day, and half of one abnormally protracted night, reduced me to the condition which I have hereinbefore described feebly. In justice to myself I would state that the paper got there, but to the eye of the experienced printer it bore the story of the attempt and failure of one man to do, without extra pay, the work of several. It is for these reasons I remark that the days of a man who looks after the details of publishing a new paper are full of woe.

All our local friends know that since FREETHOUGHT was first published it has enlarged its dominions. When the editors reached San Francisco and wandered forth to discover some quiet spot they could thenceforth designate as their editorial rooms, they found two offices in the handsome building at the corner of Kearny and California streets. The first was ten feet by eighteen, illuminated by one window; the other eighteen by twenty, with four windows. Having scrutinized the larger room carefully and pronounced it exactly what they desired, and having glanced casually at the smaller one and condemned it as precisely what they did not want, they accepted the latter on account of the difference in the rent. FREETHOUGHT had at that time but one subscriber, and he had not remitted his subscription. We had not then made up our minds whether the readers or the editors of this paper were destined to support it. At the end of the first month it was decided that the large room was not too capacious for a growing thing like FREETHOUGHT, and the editorial table was tipped up on one side and slid into its present quarters. The desirableness of the location is remarked upon by all who visit it. One corner window affords an extended view down Kearny street; the other looks up California street, toward Nob Hill, which the cable cars go up and down like the angels on Jacob's ladder ascending and descending. Near the opposite corner is a "Holiness Mission," from which members of the Salvation Army emerge nightly and amuse the heathen.

Amid these pleasant surroundings FREETHOUGHT will continue to be issued in an attractive form at $2 per year, single copies 5 cents; and its white wings will not become fatigued.

Associated with our removal is an incident which I may mention. When I went to our landlord's office to apprise him that we were now prepared to take two rooms instead of one, I remarked, as I signed a check in an off-hand and elegant manner, that I presumed he was pleased at this evidence of the promising aspect of our affair. To my surprise he said no, that he was not. He also said that in his opinion we were doing great injury to the cause of religion, and that he would prefer that the rooms should remain in a state of echoing vacancy if our publication could be squelched as a result. As a religious man, he went on to say, the central idea of this paper was very repugnant to him. He believed in a creator of the universe we inhabit, and could no more contemplate the works of nature which he beheld, and deny a designer, than he could look at his watch and deny the existence of a watchmaker. It seemed to me, upon searching my memory carefully, that I had before heard an argument similar to this, and I was forced to admit that a watch might convey to a reasonable person a notion that there was a jeweler somewhere; but I inquired, in the interest of scientific truth, if anything he had observed in the raw material from which the timepiece was constructed exhibited marked evidence of mechanical ingenuity. As he did not reply to this, except by a vague reference to natural law, I proceeded to explain that FREETHOUGHT did not pay special attention to the work of denying the existence of a god or two, more or less. We intended to point out as distinctly as possible, and frequently, that the natural law which gave to one or more persons the right to believe in God at the same time vested all other persons with the privilege of dissenting from that view. He shook his head doubtfully, but desired me to instance a case wherein liberty was infringed. I asked if a religious law, such as that under which members of the Grand Army of the Republic were arrested for marching on Sunday did not curtail the freedom of the citizen. He maintained that Sunday laws were necessary to protect people from disturbance while engaged in public worship. I held that people engaged in any other public demonstration—whether a procession, a target company, or the Salvation Army—were entitled to equal protection. No discrimination, I thought, should be made between two observances of a public character; and American citizens were as free to attend church as to go on an excursion—and no more so. If I remember correctly his closing remark was that I appeared to have been dyed in the wool, and that he was not at present prepared to subscribe for this paper.

THE LIVING PAST.

A copy of the Boston Investigator of Nov. 11, 1863, nearly a quarter of a century old, is before us. It bears the marks of service—a veteran of the wars. It is not so large as the present issue, and was published at No. 55 Cornhill. Paine Hall was then a dream. It is pleasant and hopeful to thus look back upon the past, to see the work that has been done, and to realize the gain that has been made. While we hail the future, we must not forget the toils that, in darkness and difficulty, have made that future so glorious. Freethought a quarter of a century ago was not the power that it is to-day. But there were brave hearts then, and voices of cheer and progress; and from that living past we gather impulse for our own time. We wonder if Horace Seaver will recognize one of his ringing editorials of those years of conflict? Its words are so wise and fearless that they are now the trumpet call of our advancing ranks. They breathe the immortal spirit of liberty, of justice, of truth, of humanity, and with joyous greeting to our more than half-century companion we place his admirable declaration of Freethought philosophy before our readers. The Investigator of 1863 announces to the Liberals of 1888:

"While we endeavor the best we can to make our paper Infidel, we think that we are consistently carrying out our principles when we allow the use of our columns for the discussion of any subject which interests any considerable number of human beings. Some matters, perhaps, can remain as well undiscussed as not. If, for instance, a man were to start the notion that on the planet Saturn the inhabitants had their heads placed below their shoulders, it would be of no great consequence to debate such a question, as it is of no practical importance. But any subject which concerns human rights and duties here in the United States would seem to be debatable, inasmuch as it is useful; and in regard to such we frankly confess that we do not know where to draw the line, or to shut down the gate. Some Infidels apply their principles to religion, some to politics. We do not see but we must let each party take its own way, and pursue the course which it deems best; else we must set up a kind of despotism, and that is not according to our taste or wish. Our paper is free enough, we think, to suit any reasonable man; nor is there any doubt, we believe, as to its Infidelity; and if it is right in these two important particulars, it is about as much as can be expected. We never can all think alike upon every subject, but if we possess and can exercise individual opinion without trammel or restraint, we enjoy mental freedom; and as this is what we are aiming at, we ask those of similar views to assist us in planting securely our paper upon this foundation."

Sunday and the G. A. R.

The Los Angeles Tribune says: "The New York city authorities seem to be enforcing the Sunday law with more strictness than prudence. Sixty members of the Grand Army of the Republic who marched in procession to the funeral of a comrade were arrested on Sunday, and two of them were held in $200 bail each. The Grand Army boys will make it a test case, as they should, for it is outrageous that they should not be allowed to give the last honors to a veteran who risked his life for his country!" and the Santa Ana Standard remarks: "Yes, that is just what the puritanical Sunday sentiment of this country is coming to, and ere long we may expect to see a strong pull made by the fanatics of California to inaugurate a similar Sunday law here. It was all well enough for the old soldiers to fight the battles of their country, while the professed Christians were praying for their success, but in these days of peace it is a crime against Christianity to bury an old veteran on Sunday with the honors of war! How do you like the picture, you men who fought every day for liberty, to now be restrained by fanatical legislation from showing respect to your dead comrades on Sunday?"

DARE YOU COME TO TRIAL?

This is addressed to all and singular, the clergy of the state of California, and all the presidents, professors, graduates, and students of all her theological institutions, and to all others whom it may concern, and comes greeting, all hail, health, peace, and success to one and all.

And now comes the undersigned, an old man of seventy years, a diligent student for more than fifty years in all manner of history, science, law, morals, and theology, and now in the full possession of all his faculties and powers, and addresses this letter to you in the spirit of truth, kindness, and justice. He submits and admits that you are each and all engaged in doing a certain good work for mankind, and in good faith, and sincerely aiming to serve God and man both, and to leave this world the better for your having lived in it.

He concedes that you are each and all calling sinners, the foul and the ignorant, from their evil ways, dragging them out of the mire and the clay, and calling them up to the ground on which you stand. You call all up and none down; and when you snatch a poor drunkard from the ragged edge of crime and sin, make him sober, and an attendant on your devotions, you have done him a real service, and for yourselves a great glory.

He admits that you call none down from above you. All your converts are from below, hence your work is good so far. But you must be aware, you are, all your clerical meetings confess it, that there is a grade of mind in this state, in this city, and in all the states and cities of this republic and of Europe, that is above your reach. You have lost it, you know it, you feel it. You ask for missionaries to Africa, China, anywhere except to this great class right in your midst—the unbelievers of the civilized world. These, your friends, neighbors, countrymen, you leave to a reprobate mind. You have no missionaries to them. You make no preparation to meet them. You are training no men able to meet them in debate, by lectures, in books, or otherwise. You seem content to run into the by-ways, and the dark corners of ignorance and barbarism; and to leave the high places of your own land, and the men of your own blood, to forget God, and follow the paths of Voltaire and Ingersoll.

But it is unwise. If the churches sally not out and attack these men, they will anon assail the church and throw down every turret and steeple. It was not the plan of your fathers to avoid the enemy, either in argument, or in arms. They knew full well that he who waits to be assailed is almost surely lost. You must put your houses in order. The enemy is at hand, and if you meet him not on the outside, you will soon find him within your doors.

The great republic is not as the empire. Its laws are based on freedom, justice, human equality, and individual manhood. It says to every citizen: "Think, feel, boldly, and without control or fear. Thoughts are not crimes, and shall not be punished as such." The teachings of imperial Rome are just the contrary. The emperor is all the same as God, and to be obeyed in all things. Its religion is the religion of the state. All people must accept on pain of death. Who so denies, let his head be stricken off!

The Roman emperor called the Council of Nice, of such bishops as he chose. That council settled all the tenets of your religion. It declared the books of the Bible, the Trinity, the rank and place of Christ, the creed, and the doctrine that opinions shall not be free, but death here, and hell hereafter shall attend all unbelief; in fact, that Freethought is sin, and errors in opinions crimes. You have followed that imperial council in all these things. You have pruned away some later errors of the Romish church; but in main you stand now with that Council of Nice.

The Roman Emperor called the Council of Nice, of such bishops as he chose. That council settled all the tenets of your religion. Now, in the republic, the fathers of the Constitution rejected that council, and all that grew out of it. They said:

"No man is king by the grace of God, and we will have none."

"No church teaches by the authority of God, and we will have none."

"We know only God, no Trinity, no Christ, and no Bible, except on the authority of this council, and we will have none."

"Man shall not be commanded to believe, in fear of death and hell; but thought shall be free, and errors of opinion shall not be crimes."

Here our Fathers reversed the council of Nice on every important matter. The republic took issue with the empire. Which was right? The people of the United States side with our Revolutionary sires. You still stand by the empire. You must come over or you never more can be a power in this land. The republic asks for a new trial of all these points. You must prepare for that trial. You are invited here and now to do so.

The writer of this letter invites your best and ablest, before the people of California, to discuss with him, by letter or on the platform, all these issues, this new trial, to the end that you may in future take higher ground, and conform your creeds to the genius of the Republic and the Constitution of the country. He will contend and affirm—

That the empire is not authority for anything, while the republic is.

That as compared with the bishops in the Council of Nice our fathers of the republic were angels of wisdom, justice, kindness, and good manners.

That as to the decisions of that ancient imperial council about the Bible, the Trinity, and the creed, they had no support in science, history, or common justice.

That as to the rights of man in government, in freedom of thought, and the punishment of erroneous opinions, our fathers were right and the imperial council grievously wrong.

That all of you, all churches, schools, colleges, etc., and a teachers who cling to these errors of that council, are equal wrong, at war with the American people, the American system, behind the age, and forever incapable of converting intelligent Americans to that faith.

That it is utterly impossible that God should ever have sanctioned the idea of punishing mere errors of opinion. Man has only just learned better, but God never learns.

Convinced that these errors will have to be corrected before the churches can become the efficient instructors and guides of the American people, and willing to aid you in making the necessary change, I have the honor to subscribe myself,

Your servant, H. L. KNIGHT.

AN INTERNATIONAL COUNCIL OF WOMEN.

The International Council of Women to be held in Washington, D. C., commencing March 25 and holding till April 1, promises to be of much interest. It is called for the purpose of celebrating the fortieth anniversary of the "first public demand for equal educational, industrial, professional, and political rights for women."

At this international convention there will be a review of the work done and points gained for women during the last forty years, as well as new work laid out for future action.

It is humiliating to think that for forty years the agitation of the question of equal rights for women has brought no more than it has. It is still more humiliating to witness the lukewarmness of woman herself in respect to her own enfranchisement.

True, woman has gained some laurels and made some headway within the last forty years, so that she stands to-day upon more solid ground than ever before. She has acquired the right to teach, to preach, to practice the professions, to vote for school committee in some of the states, the whole ticket in others, and to stand at the polling places and distribute votes on election day. This is something, but not what it ought to be.

That woman has made no greater progress is due in great part to the fast hold she has kept upon the Bible and popular religion. "No man can serve two masters," and no woman can obtain her entire independence until she throws off the yoke of religious bondage. The Bible is no friend to woman, but her greatest enemy. It teaches that the first woman brought all sin and sorrow into the world, and in consequence all women had to be cursed for her sake. Let women read the words of Paul, the great leading light and expounder of popular religion, "Let the women keep silent." "If they want to know anything, let them go home and ask their husbands." "Wives, obey your husbands." "I suffer not a woman to usurp authority." "Keep your wives in subjection," and much more of the same sort and worse. Let them read, and then go and open a Woman Suffrage meeting with reading of more of the same "scriptures," followed by prayer to a being who was never known to lift a lazy hand to help woman to a better position, but who pronounced the first curse upon her!

It is the shame of woman that she has been held captive to the church so long, kept in leading-strings to do the work that men did not care to do, to do all the real work and to get no thanks for it, either. She has been the auxiliary doing the drudgery, while men bore off the honors and the prizes. Only last week I read of a new hospital scheme, where the officers were all men, but they voted to have an auxiliary of women to aid in furnishing the hospital and in meeting expenses for the same. In the beginning of this scheme, the women were called upon to collect funds, and they did, by real work, to the amount of over two thousand dollars, while the men sat by cracking jokes and telling stories.

There are two factions among woman suffragists, those who have faith that woman may obtain her rights by adherence to the Bible and religion, represented by Lucy Stone, Mary Livermore, Francis Willard, et als; the other side battle for woman outside of the Bible and its teachings, and notably among them are Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Matilda Joslyn Gage, and Susan B. Anthony, followed by other younger but intelligent and justly celebrated women.

That women will obtain their just rights is only a question of time, for all will finally come to see with the late Frances Wright, that "until women assume a place in society to which good sense and equal rights entitle them, human improvement must advance but feebly, for, let women stand where they may in the scale of being, for good or for evil, for knowledge or ignorance, their position decides that of the race."

If the International Congress of Women will work to show women that in order to be free they must first break the fetters that binds them to false and ignorant theories—that they must turn from the superstitions of the past, and take on the white garments of the living truth—if they will do this, the great convention will not be in vain.

RELIGION IN THE SCHOOL.

Sectarian schools ought not to be supported by public taxation. It is the very essence of religious tyranny to compel a Methodist to support a Catholic school, or to compel a Catholic to support a Baptist academy. Nothing should be taught in the public schools that the teachers do not know. Nothing should be taught about any religion, and nothing should be taught that can, in any way, be called sectarian. The sciences are not religious. There is no such thing as Methodist mathematics or Baptist botany. In other words, no religion has anything to do with facts. The facts are all secular; the sciences are all of this world. If Catholics wish to establish their own schools for the purpose of preserving their ignorance, they have a right to do so; so has any other denomination. But, in this country, the state has no right to teach any form of religion whatever. Persons of all religions have the right to become citizens, and citizens have the right to advocate and defend any religion in which they believe, or they have the right to denounce all religions. If the Catholics establish parochial schools, let them support such schools; and if they do, they will simply lessen or shorten the longevity of that particular superstition. It has often been said that nothing will repeal a bad law as quickly as its enforcement. So, in my judgment, nothing will destroy any church as certainly, and as rapidly, as for the members of that church to live squarely up to the creed. The church is indebted to its hypocrisy to-day for its life. No orthodox church in the United States dare meet for the purpose of revising the creed. They know that the whole thing would fall in pieces. Nothing could be more absurd than for a Roman Catholic priest to teach a public school, assisted by nuns. The Catholic church is the enemy of human progress; it teaches every man to throw away his reason, to deny his observation and experience.—R. G. Ingersoll, in the Truth Seeker.

THE teacher—Correct the sentence: "The liquor which the man bought was drunk."

Smart boy—"The man which bought the liquor was drunk."

WHY DID THE LORD CREATE THE DEVIL?

THE SUBJECT ABLY CONSIDERED BY SI SLOKUM.

I

God having existed from time immemorial, said time having no beginning, he awoke one day to the realization of a long-felt want, and immediately proceeded to fill it by building up the earth and the heavens and all that in them is, not to mention, being of small account, sundry and divers suns, moons, and stars that glimmer and glisten and glare in illimitable space, when the weather is clear and no clouds obstruct the view.

Lonesome as he must have been in the vast void where there was nothing but himself, God hit upon the notion of an earth to be peopled with beings after his own image, and set out at once to form said earth and things, the fact that there was nothing to make them of not interfering with his plans in the least.

Here is where a god has the bulge on mortals, who are utterly unable to construct tangible things of intangible nothing, and who can't comprehend how a god can do it. Take Jay Gould, for instance, a sort of mortal god of finesse—he calls it finance—even he requires "water" to work with, and when his work is done he hasn't really made anything, but simply swelled twenty millions of stock to the proportions of forty millions, robbing Peter (the public) to fill the pockets of Paul (himself). This operation of his, with "water," seems a pretty big thing to do, but, after all, what is it for a man-god to accomplish when men-fools sit by and allow him to work his racket?

But God—our God, you know—the only true God, all the other gods being frauds—couldn't rob Peter, for there weren't any Peters to rob at that time—(the Peter that figured later on would have panned out very little, I think, had he been robbed)—and there was nothing to rob him of, and nothing at hand with which to build up the universe.

Yet, as I said before, the Lord, nothing daunted, set himself to work with the material he had, an unlimited supply of nothing, and, in the incredibly short time of six days—always provided these were twenty-four hour days—built up the entire universe; the most prodigious feat in the building line on record.

Of course there was nothing strange in the building up of an immense material system of immateriality, or nothing, for everything was and is possible with our God, but a very strange thing followed the creation of the universe, all the more strange from the fact that the creator was responsible for it.

After creating man of dirt—why man should have been made of vile dirt, when said dirt was made of pure and unalloyed nothing, is something I never could see into, and is what no fellow can ever find out, I guess—after creating man of dirt and locating him on one of the most magnificent ranches ever existing, according to accounts, and where said man might have thrived, and very shortly got up a land improvement and cattle trust company, God went to work and created a devil to harass man, who, he evidently thought, would have too soft a thing of it on the Eden ranch.

This, to me, is the strangest part of the whole business of creation; but of course I wasn't there and don't know what call there was for a devil, which might have been a loud one, and which the Lord couldn't very well ignore. Allowing there was such a call, did the Lord know, or did he not know, that the devil would "best" him in the scrapping-match for human souls?

Now, as it is not supposable that the Lord did not know, he being then, as now, omniscient, it follows that he did know, whence comes the overpowering conundrum, Why did he create the devil? Of builders it has been said, "They builded better than they knew;" in this case it must be said that the Lord created more powerfully than he knew.

In any way we look at this superfluous creation, the Lord is left in a peculiarly perplexing predicament, besides being very badly "left" in the scramble for human souls! If he didn't know the devil would prove too many guns for him, as he has proved from the start, and thus far toward the finish, then he was not omniscient any more than say Frankenstein; if he did know the devil would "best" him in the rustle, then he made the grandest mistake of his lifetime, showing that he was not infallible and therefore, on this lay, a lesser being than the pope, who is infallible! and a god who is not infallible is not much more, if any, of a god than the men-gods after the pattern of Jay Gould, who, as a man-god of finesse, is infallible every time, never getting left!

SI SLOKUM.

(To be resumed.)

THE CHURCH AND CHARITY.

Hospitals, asylums, almshouses, and other charitable institutions, it is claimed, are of Christian origin. Every student of history knows this claim to be false. Charity is not a virtue confined to Christianity. In every age and in every country, when famine and disease have stalked abroad, human hearts have throbbed with sympathy, and human suffering has been relieved.

Rome always supplied the wants of her poor, and the corn laws of Caius Gracchus provided as generously for the support of this class as the laws of any Christian nation do. Greece had her homes for the poor, her refuges for the stranger, and her hospitals for the sick. Four hundred years before the Christian era, an emperor of India established hospitals in every city and town throughout his empire, and these flourished for centuries. In Mexico and Peru, institutions of charity were everywhere maintained. In no country are the aged and infirm more tenderly cared for than in heathen China. The first asylum for the insane in which we have any record was founded by the Mohammedans in the seventh century. The first Christian institution of the kind was built in Spain seven hundred years later; and the historian states that the kind-hearted monk who established it did it to protect these unfortunate people from the insults of their Christian neighbors.

Tauntingly the church inquires, "What have Infidels ever done for charity?" What have Infidels done for charity?—Stephen Girard, an Infidel, left a fortune of six millions to found an orphans' college in Philadelphia; James Lick, an Infidel, gave more than a million for scientific and benevolent purposes; James Smithson, an unbeliever, left half a million to found the Smithsonian Institute at Washington; Henry Seybert, a Spiritualist, who died in Pennsylvania the other day, gave half a million to science and charity; Peter Brigham, an Infidel, gave three millions for the purpose of establishing hospitals for the sick poor of Boston; John Redmon, an Infidel, gave four hundred thousand dollars to support free beds in the hospitals of Boston; William Maclure, an Infidel, gave half a million dollars to aid the workmen of Indiana; Robert Owen, an Infidel, devoted fifty years of his life and expended five hundred thousand dollars in promoting the interests of the poor and laboring classes; Robert Ingersoll, an Infidel, although not a man of wealth, has probably given as much to charity as any living clergyman has done; Peter Cooper, the greatest philanthropist of the age, was a disbeliever in evangelical Christianity.

What have Infidels done for charity? Nothing that the church has not claimed the honor of doing. Stephen Girard had scarcely been placed in his grave before she attempted to steal his legacy and place it to her credit. Erect a charitable institution, and in less than twenty-four hours some emissary of the church will come along with a piece of chalk and write the word "Christian" above the door. Were the Freethinkers of New York to build a hospital to-day, the church would climb on top of it to-night, erect a cross, and in the morning ask you what Infidels had ever done for charity.

There are, scattered over our land, a lot of so-called charitable institutions, labeled "Catholic" or "Protestant," supported almost wholly by contributions from the secular public, and appropriations lobbied through our legislative assemblies. But Christians handle the funds, and so they are Christian institutions. Paying institutions, too. "Shepherds' Folds" furnishing mutton for the church's wolves.—Remsburg's "False Claims."

CHARLES KINGSLEY, when he visited this country, was quite enamored of the Pacific Coast, and declared that here would be the new Greece. The arts, the culture, the genius of the bright Athenian world would again flourish on these lovely shores that rival in their beauty and brilliant scenery the ancient dwelling of Apollo.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

SECULARISM OR GOD IN THE STATE.

When the government appoints and pays out of the public treasury Christian ministers to offer up prayers to the Christians' God;

When it salaries men to teach the Christians' religion to soldiers in the army, and sailors in the navy, and convicts in our penal institutions;

When it bestows upon religious institutions millions of public moneys;

When the sacred book of a special religious body is permitted to be read in the public schools.

When laws of the several states set apart one day as particularly holy in obedience to the demands of the church, and punishes those who may observe that day in a different way from what the church prescribes;

When, in the courts of justice, witnesses are compelled to swear by the Christians' God, with their hands on the Christian's Bible;

When the president of the United States (or the governor of the state) ordains himself high priest, lifts up his hands and voice, and calls upon all the people to bow the knee in prayer upon a specified day;

When the coin of the republic bears upon its face that hypocritical lie, "In God we trust;"

When, in a number of states, the person who is a disbeliever in prevailing religious dogmas is not only debarred from holding office, but from testifying in a court of justice;

When, above all, by exemption from equitable taxation, the government contributes $10,000,000 annually to the support of the church;

When the religious institutions of New York city alone (mainly Catholic) receive from the regular appropriations, and also from the excise fund, a sum of over $2,000,000 annually;

When Archbishop Corrigan's Catholic Protectory, in New York city, with the connivance of the lower courts, is able to steal John Mullin's daughter, Mamie; hide her away from her father, and have him arrested, and imprisoned on a false accusation, because he persisted in his endeavors to recover her, and only recently that slow-going machine, the supreme court of New York, has ordered the child's restoration to her parents after thirteen years of enforced absence, yet this kidnapping concern receives over $20,000 per month from the public funds of New York city, and it was proven that police, detectives, and judges, in brazen defiance of all law, assisted in that damnable conspiracy;

When the red-hatted representative of Rome has to take a trip to the eternal city to plead whether workingmen in this country shall be permitted to join an organization for their own protection, and when the Holy Father only "wilts" when shown that by opposing organized labor he imperils the financial grab-bag of the priests;

When Roman Catholic women in New Jersey have to publicly apologize to their priest and whole congregation for daring to marry Protestants;

When Chas. B. Reynolds, one of our vice-presidents of the American Secular Union, has recently been indicted, tried, and fined for the impossible crime of blasphemy in New Jersey;

When John A. Wilson, a publisher of Paulsboro, N. J., is sentenced to two years' imprisonment and $500 fine for mailing two books which are said to be found on the shelves of every first-class book store in the country, through the persecution of that Christian assassination vampire, Comstock;

When a noted liberal paper in Kansas (Lucifer) is attempted to be suppressed under the same law;

When art dealers are arrested for selling photographs of classic figures of the human form "divine (?);"

When in Boston a boy is fined $2 for playing marbles on the "Lord's day," we have a fair specimen of the light to which intellectual "culchaw" has attained in the Athens of America;

When the Tennessee legislature has recently passed by a vote of 26 to 4 a bill making it a misdemeanor to do barbering on Sunday, under penalty of fine, or imprisonment, or both, (their ministers can't stand competition in "shaving" the public);

When, in Iowa, a man was arrested at Lyons for chopping a stick of stove-wood on his own premises on a Sunday;

When, in Arkansas, Seventh-Day Adventists, who rigidly keep Saturday as their sabbath, have, during the past year, been arrested, fined, and imprisoned for working on the orthodox Sabbath, and where two deaths were the direct consequence of one case of prosecution under the law;

When a noted Liberal of Martinsburg, West Virginia, one of the oldest Odd Fellows and most respected citizens, is expelled from that order, through orthodox machinations, because our president, Mr. Putnam, when secretary, held meetings at his house, and he refused to avow a belief in a "supreme being;"

When the wooden legislators of the great nutmeg state of Connecticut have lately passed a law prohibiting the running of trains on Sunday;

When one priest is ordered to Rome to recant, and another to fasting and penance—for what? Daring to exercise their civil and political rights as American citizens. (One flatly and bravely refused, and has become the second Luther of (let us hope) a greater and truer Protestant movement than the first. The second meekly swallows his medicine—his gruel and water—like a man; no, like a priest, who is not a MAN);

When the commissioners of the District of Columbia, the headquarters of our national capital, formulate a new code for its "good government," whereby dogs must not bark, cocks dare not crow, and hens must not cackle; there is to be neither whisky-drinking nor cooking on that day; Soda water, when used medicinally, may be by special dispensation taken in small doses, but whisky must be laid in Saturday night; milkmen must not cry "milk," beat gongs, or ring bells, although the Salvationists' trombones and tambourines may raise the devil;

When the Solons of this great state of Illinois consume their time trying to pass a bill to prohibit ball-playing on the "blessed Sabbath," on account of its "immoral and Anti-Christian tendencies;"

When the faculty of the State University of Illinois expel Foster North solely because he refused to attend service in the chapel, or sign a request asking to be excused, when the laws of this state explicitly declare the enforcement of such a rule unconstitutional in any college receiving aid from the state—this is a case the American Secular Union should bring before the bar of an enlightened public opinion, and thus endeavor to frustrate this theological fraud—

This great Christian country is becoming excessively pious, and the legitimate crop of plundering hypocrites increases annually.

When, in spite of the foregoing undeniable facts, some persons claim there is no union of church and state in this country, you may rest assured that their judgment is warped by self-interest, or that their reason is abdicated. Thomas Paine well said: "One might as well give physic to the dead as attempt to argue with a man who has renounced his reason;"

Religious intolerance cannot be so far removed from us as currently supposed when Infidels in the North are imprisoned for opinion's sake, and such shocking tragedies as Senator Crockett, of Arkansas, has shown are the result of religious persecution in the South.

The Star Spangled Banner.

A. P. Dennison, on behalf of the Lick trustees, has been negotiating for some weeks back for the possession of the flag which floated over Fort McHenry, near Baltimore, during the war of Independence. The inspiration came to Francis Scott Key to write the "Star Spangled Banner" as he watched it float proudly on the breeze, while he himself was a prisoner on a British man-of-war. The flag is in the possession of Irving Appleton, of Baltimore, and if it can be procured will be placed under the corner stone of the "Key Monument," to be erected in this city.

In a Virginia newspaper of thirty years ago, says the Alta, is a long account of the sentence of a woman to two years' imprisonment for teaching slaves to read.

WHITTIER'S HOPE.

O Time and Change!—with hair as gray
 As was my sire's that winter day!
 How strange it seems, with so much gone
 Of life and love, to still live on!
 Ah! brother, only I and thou
 Are left of all that circle now.
 The dear home faces whereupon
 That fitful firelight paled and shone—
 Henceforward, listen as we will,
 The voices of that hearth are still;
 Look where we may, the wide earth o'er,
 Those lighted faces smile no more.
 We tread the paths their feet have worn,
 We sit beneath their orchard trees,
 We hear, like them, the hum of bees
 And rustle of the bladed corn;
 We turn the pages that they read,
 Their written words we linger o'er,
 But in the sun they cast no shade.
 No voice is heard, no sign is made,
 No step is on the conscious floor.
 Yet Love will dream and Faith will trust
 (Since he who knows our need is just)
 That somehow, somewhere, meet we must.
 Alas for him who never sees
 The stars shine through his cypress trees!
 Who, hopeless, lays his dead away,
 Nor looks to see the breaking day
 Across the mournful marbles play!
 Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,
 The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
 That Life is ever lord of Death,
 And Love can never lose its own.

—John G. Whittier.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The Chinese are celebrating their New Year's.—Out of 100 convicts in the Maine state prison 49 have always been total abstainers, 34 in the habit of drinking occasionally, while but 17 were immoderate drinkers.—Burglars have entered the rectory of the Rev. Mr. Nugent, a Catholic priest of this city, and robbed that gentleman of $50 worth of personal effects.—The imports of dry goods at the port of New York for the week ending February 6 were $3,639,000; amount marketed, $3,668,000.—Since 1865 the Federal government has paid out in pensions the enormous sum of $870,000,000.—Authentic statements place the number of lives lost in the recent Dakota storm at 114.—The crown prince of Germany is not feeling cheerful over the statement of his physicians that perichondritis will probably cause a serious permanent deformity of his larynx.—Willford Blunt has sued the English government for illegal arrest, placing the damages at $100,000.—A free fight among some Salvation Army warriors and the spectators of their show at Albany, Or., the other day, landed thirteen of the contestants in jail.—It is believed that the smallpox is rapidly disappearing, and that the city will shortly be free from it.—A faith-curst of Boston hangs out the sign, "Patients cured by divine aid."—The Starr King monument fund amounts to $6,605.52.—A woman took her stand at the corner of Kearny and California streets, the other day, and discoursed to the crowd on religious topics. A policeman took her to the station house. She was insane.—D. R. Locke (Petroleum V. Nasby) died Wednesday, Feb. 15, of consumption at Toledo, Ohio.—Moody will not come to San Francisco next month. There are still unconverted people, he finds, east of the Rockies.—The German Reichstag committee has rejected the clause of the anti-Socialist bill, relative to the expatriation of Socialist leaders.—The treasury surplus during January was $15,000,000. The people who paid this amount in unnecessary taxation would like it back in their pockets.—Louise Michel refuses to prosecute the man who attempted to assassinate her. She is a consistent Anarchist.—Amos J. Snell, a Chicago millionaire, was found murdered in his bed one morning last week.—Mrs. Salter, at present mayor of a Kansas town, is a candidate for the presidential nomination of the Woman Suffragists.—Charles Goodnight, of Paladuro, Texas, and L. R. Moore, of Kansas City, have purchased the Quit a Qua ranch in the pan-handle of Texas for $7,060,000. The purchase consists of 150,000 acres of deed land and 295,000 acres of leased lands, making the whole ranch 445,000 acres.—Henry George and Dr. McGlynn are at odds on the question of a presidential candidate. The statue will cost $35,000.—The czar of Russia recommends the remodeling of the laws respecting the imperial family so as to authorize morganatic marriages of younger members. Morganatic marriage is a species of concubinage.—During the week ending February 10, 128 deaths occurred in this city. Of these 75 were males and 53 females. Twelve were taken off by bronchitis, 9 by heart disease, 19 by phthisis, 16 by pneumonia, and 6 by smallpox.—Two Protestant citizens have been condemned to six months' imprisonment, for refusing to kneel before the Vatican at Madrid, Spain.

A STARTLING CEREMONY.

A correspondent writing from Havana, Cuba, to express his surprise at the advent of FREETHOUGHT on this Coast, asks, "Well, what next?" which reminds him of this story:

The widow Jones was for many years stewardess on a ship that hailed from Boston. She (not the ship) had two sons, Bill and Jack (William and John), who were born and reared on that ship. Bill, not liking a sailor's life, went ashore, and having acquired an education, took a position as bookkeeper in a commercial house, and soon thereafter was the senior member of the firm.

It was in early times, when Ohio was inhabited by Indians. Mr. William Jones having bought a large tract of land in Ohio, emigrated thither and established a gigantic farm. He soon became a representative of the people in Congress, got religion, and joined the seceders from the Scotch Presbyterian church; got married and settled down. His brother Jack remained with his mother on board the ship, a sailor, where he learned nothing more than the working of the rigging and the rough language of sailors. When he had grown old, and his mother had died, and after he had received from his brother Bill many letters of invitation to come to Ohio and live with him on his magnificent farm, where he could, during the remainder of his life, enjoy rest and the comforts of a quiet home, he bundled up his clothes, and at the end of a stick over his shoulder swung them at his back, and on foot set out for his future home on his brother's farm in Ohio.

Having arrived at Marietta, Jack inquired if "Bill" Jones lived in that neighborhood, saying: "I'm Bill Jones's brother, by G—d." He was told that the Hon. William Jones resided in that magnificent white mansion, over there, on that mound; and that, since he was the only Jones living in that region, he possibly might be the man sought for. Old Jack trudged along and, when he arrived at the gate in front of the house, inquired if "Bill" Jones lived there. One of the little girls playing upon the lawn in front of the house ran to the gate and answered him thus: "My papa, Hon. William Jones, lives here; would you like to see him?" "Yes, I'm his poor brother Jack, tired as h—l, by G—d." The little girl ran into the house and Mr. William Jones came out to the gate and threw it open.

Jack grabbed him by the hand, exclaiming: "By G—d! is that you, brother Bill? I never was so G—d d—n glad to see anybody in my life."

"H'sh! h'sh!" exclaimed his brother William, "come in, Jack, this is your home, but, for gracious' sake, don't let me hear you swear, and especially don't use rough language in the hearing of my children."

They went into the house, and immediately Mr. William Jones took down the Bible, read a chapter, knelt down and prayed (directing Jack to kneel likewise), sang a hymn, and then talked to his brother Jack (Jack keeping his hand over his mouth, lest an oath might slip out, had very little to say), till supper was announced. He then read another chapter, prayed, sang another hymn, and sat down at table and said grace. Having eaten supper and talked awhile to Jack, he read another chapter, prayed, and sang another hymn, when the entire family retired for the night. It was in springtime, when enterprising farmers are up before dawn, so as to begin plowing so soon as the light will permit. Breakfast was announced, and the family were gathered in the sanctum. A chapter had been read, prayers said, and a hymn sung. Just as they were then going to sit down to table, the servant girl went into a closet for something, and the candle in her hand came in contact with a keg of powder there, which exploded, scattering the entire mansion in fragments, around about the premises, and Jack went whirling around through the air at a great height. When he came down, it was sprawling, face downward, upon an adjacent straw stack. Soon thereafter he regained consciousness, very cautiously raised himself on hands and knees, and, looking around upon the ruins, exclaimed: "I wonder what in the name of God he's going to do next!" Our readers are pretty well acquainted with Samuel Putnam, as they have often read his writings and utterances in the Blade, and also in the Blade Library, and they know him to be one of the most poetic and forcible writers and speakers. In descriptive writing he has no superior on the continent, and as an observer he has few equals. He is now President of the American Secular Union, an organization that has enlisted a large army of the foremost thinkers of the age.

Mr. Putnam has traveled and lectured on the Pacific Coast for two seasons, and so delighted was he with that country that he was determined to make it his future home, and has engaged in the publication of a Liberal paper at San Francisco. The name of the paper is FREETHOUGHT, a very appropriate name for such a journal. Associated with him is George E. Macdonald, a man not altogether unknown to Liberal readers. The first number displays excellent editorial work, and is brimful of interesting reading.

We call the attention of our California readers to this paper, and advise them to subscribe for it at once. The articles descriptive of that country, by Mr. Putnam, will be a splendid advertisement, which of itself is a sufficient reason for taking the paper. Address, Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.—Concordia Blade, Jan. 19, 1888.

Our Old Friend Moses Hull.

Samuel P. Putnam and George E. Macdonald have gone to San Francisco, and started a new Liberal journal which they call FREETHOUGHT. Everybody knows Putnam through his writings, his lectures, his secretaryship, and finally, his presidency of the Secular Union. Macdonald is, unfortunately, not so well known, but we have known him from boyhood. He is a capital fellow, a number one printer, and a versatile and pungent writer. All who have read the reports of the Liberal Club meetings, by the "Man with a Badge Pin," will expect something spicy from George E. As George E. Macdonald is a brother to Eugene, the editor of the Truth Seeker, our readers can understand that the FREETHOUGHT and the Truth Seeker are brothers-in-law. There is no doubt of the ability and integrity connected with FREETHOUGHT; the only question is, will the people sustain it? Send to 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, for a sample copy.—New Thought, Feb. 4, 1888.

The Pious Man's Holiday.

An old friend of mine in New England had been a deacon in the church for forty years. One night he got drunk and tore up his native village. There was a sensation, of course. The next morning his preacher called on him. The deacon met him, and said: "I was drunk last night: I acknowledge it."

"Why did you do it?" asked the preacher, astonished that so staid a man should have done so dissolute a thing.

"Well, I will tell you," said the deacon. "I have been serving the Lord for forty years, and I just made up my mind to take a day off to myself."—Atlanta Constitution.

John Cane's Missionary.

About a month ago, when coasting sailors could scarcely be had for any price, John Cane, the sailor hoarding-master, shipped a man named Ericsson on board the schooner Maid of Orleans, bound for Shoalwater bay. Ericsson, who was a water-front itinerant missionary, agreed to go to sea only on representations that there was a big demand for missionaries on shipboard, and that sailors and skippers alike—especially on the Maid of Orleans—were just aching for conversion. The Maid of Orleans returned to port this morning, and the sailors are completely satisfied with their evangelization. Captain Atwood says that as soon as the Maid dropped anchor in Shoalwater bay the missionary incontinently deserted, jumping overboard and swimming ashore. He has founded a church at the mills on the bay, but the captain wants no more evangelists to take passage on his vessel.—Ex.

Their Manhood Voluntarily Surrendered.

An address has been received by the pope, in which a large number of Spanish Roman Catholic writers and publicists assure the pope that they will not write anything in opposition to his teachings.

In a communication from one of our old campaign friends, F. E. Sturgis, the writer says: "May the Liberals of the West everywhere sustain FREETHOUGHT, and make it for the Pacific what the Truth Seeker and Investigator are for the Atlantic Coast." Mr. Sturgis, who is a skilful artist, writes as follows in the last number of the Truth Seeker:

WAYLAND, Mich., Dec. 31, 1887.

I would like to say to the readers of the Truth Seeker that on and after January 1, 1888, I will make this offer to Freethinkers: I will make crayon portraits from any style of small picture sent me, in the following sizes, at prices stated opposite the sizes, if cash remitted with the order, and will pay the postage or express on the crayon when it goes to the owner:

Size of paper.	Length of head.	Price.
16x20.....	6½ to 7 inches.....	$ 6 00
18x22.....	7 to 7½ inches.....	7 00
22x27.....	full life size.....	10 00

Will furnish excellent appropriate frames for $2 50, $3 50, $5, and $7 each extra in the respective sizes, but where frames are furnished, the parties ordering must pay express charges. For a guarantee as to my work and ability I will send to those writing to me indorsements from those whom I have made portraits for, and those that have seen my work. I might offer here the names of Mr. Watts and Putnam, and Mr. A. P. Urey, Sandy Lake, Pa. I am making one for Otto Wettstein. Now, friends, you have a chance to get a good crayon for a small amount of money. I can make changes, such as clothing or hair, to suit, but changes will be charged some extra for. Let me know what you want and I will tell you how much, if any, extra will be charged.

Mr. Sturgis is a hardworking Liberal, and deserves success. This is a good chance to help a struggling Freethinker. The crayon portraits by Mr. Sturgis are excellent.

THE sixteenth anniversary of the birthday of Miss Laura Haelke, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Haelke, was the occasion of a pleasant gathering of the Zither Club of Oakland at the house of her parents, 1466 Grove street, Oakland. All the rooms were brilliantly lighted and ornamented with smilax and evergreens and the flowers that bloom in the sunshine of this marvelous climate. The delightful music of the zither mingled with the voices of congratulation. The members of the club present were Fred H. Maar, Miss C. M. Schaefer, Miss Laura Haelke, Miss Clara Haelke, D. V. Gelder, Wm. B. Ainsworth, C. C. Busse, Richard Harms, M. C. Diesbuttel, A. Harms, G. A. W. Folkers, P. F. Frear, and O. D. Weeks. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Fulton, Miss Crane, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Schou, Miss Edith Fulton, Miss Eva Fulton, F. O. Weeks, Mrs. M. C. Diesbuttel, Chas. F. Schaefer, R. O. Schaefer, Mrs. Schaefer, Mr. and Mrs. Kuertzel, Miss Hattie Kuertzel, Mr. and Mrs. Bolza, and Miss Flora Bolza. After the melodies that breathed of youth and gaiety had ceased, amid the fragrant roses a magnificent lunch was spread, and social festivities were the order of the hour. The happy day came to a close with the strains of the zither and the sound of the midnight bell. Long life and many anniversaries, and flowery paths and melodious summers to the fair recipient of the honors of this festival evening.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Biographer of Voltaire.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I inclose $2, for which please send me your bright and promising paper. You have a great chance, and I trust you will improve it.

Very truly yours,
JAMES PARTON.
Newburyport, Mass., Feb. 1, 1888.

Good Indorsement.

BRO. S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Sir: I have received a copy of FREETHOUGHT, and like its ringing, earnest, and vigorous exposure of shams, and past and present hypocrisies. Believing that your ultimate success is assured, as the West is ready to embrace reason, having discarded the follies and slush of the past, I inclose the requisite subscription price, conceiving this to be but another nail in the orthodox coffin.

E. T. WEBBER.

Denver, Col., Feb. 5, 1888.

This Is Right.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Noticing in the Truth Seeker that you have settled in Frisco for the purpose of fighting superstition, I was anxious to read the first number to FREETHOUGHT. I take great pleasure in stating that your friend, Jenkin Morgan, that staunch Freethinker and able advocate of Liberalism, claims the honor of being the first subscriber of FREETHOUGHT in Newcastle. It was through his kindness that I had the pleasure of perusing the first copy of your valuable paper, and I at once made up my mind to subscribe for FREETHOUGHT. Inclosed please find $2 for one year's subscription.

Please send me the back numbers from January 7th, if possible, as I like to be a pioneer subscriber to FREETHOUGHT. May it prosper marvelously.

RICHARD ROESIGER.

Newcastle, W. T., Jan. 31, 1888.

A Letter from Miss Wixon.To the Editors of Freethought:*

S. P. PUTNAM, My Dear Friend: FREETHOUGHT is a lovely blossom, sweet as a rose, and pure as Truth. I am glad it is rooted so firmly at the Golden Gate, and may it live a thousand years, or until there is no longer need of it, when all men, and women too, shall indeed be truly free. But I don't think I can quite forgive you for taking our Yankee boy, our genuine humorist, our G. E. M., away to the Pacific coast. But our loss may be his gain, and we know he will make FREETHOUGHT sparkle like the dancing sunbeams on the river, while you will enrich it with the wine of your own best thought. I wish the paper great success.

SUSAN H. WIXON.

Fall River, Mass, Jan. 30, 1888.

Did God "Permit" It?To the Editors of Freethought:*

We have obtained one name and the needful, so send you two subscribers. A few met with us on the 29th, in honor of Paine's birthday. The terrible double murder here was uppermost in mind. I never attended so sad a funeral.

They were young people, who lost a babe last year, which was taken up and buried with them. A reverend stood at the head of the grave and told the people that God, in his inscrutable providence, had taken our brother and sister home. A Presbyterian mother standing by my side turned to me and said: "I can't believe it." Nor could I. "Where man is powerless, God cannot save." It was the topic of conversation of all circles. Another lady said: "God permitted it." I replied that he couldn't help himself. In fact, who is there could he so cruel, if they were all-wise, all-merciful, all-powerful as God is said to be, that knows all things, just when to prevent such acts, and then permit them? I could have no love, respect, nor honor for a man who would do so, and much less for an unknown God.

I hope Mr. Putnam will be able to give more time to Los Angeles county than from February 26 to March 1. We have conferred with several in regard to a course of lectures. We will do all we can, but as it comes at our very busiest season on the land, it may be a slim audience. But we shall be richly rewarded if we can only procure the unity of action of those that dare let it be known that they do their own thinking. By organized effort, we could soon place ourselves in a position to have regular meetings. If we only had C. B. Reynolds or W. F. Jamieson to occupy the summer months and our fine autumns, pitching the Gospel Tent of Reason wherever a call was made—by so doing, all the money that is often paid to fill the coffers of Christian owners of halls might go to the support of our needy workers, and thus help to spread the light of science and enlighten the ignorant in the A B C of secularism. That reminds me of a college in Los Angeles, run by a reverend. A lady said it was secular. I asked if they had prayers. "Oh yes, of course." "Well, then, it can't be secular." "Why, it allows all kinds of sects to send their children—Baptists, Methodists, even Catholics." He claims it as a secular institution, but strictly orthodox. A person can be so easily deceived by terms used.

A Transcendentalist.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Remembering with pleasure an introduction and short interview with Mr. Putnam, now President of the American Secular Union, on a former occasion, the notice he gave me afterward in the columns of the Truth Seeker, and a partial mutual pledge to remember each other must account for this trespass of a "Transcendental" on the precincts of your time and space.

I have read with interest the San Francisco meteor, FREETHOUGHT, which I understand is in part controlled by Mr. Putnam, and do not think I could feel that I had done just the right thing if I did not in some way express my appreciation of the new aid in the direction of destroying the shackledom of human thought and setting the mind free to engage in the strife with the obstacles to race advancement that have borne so heavily on us for centuries past.

It is a matter of no small rejoicing that our horizon is illumined in every direction by the radiating splendors of the long-hidden sun of mental, moral, and religious light.

Philanthropy, philosophy, and moral metaphysics of the highest character have all along our history flashed out and illuminated with their beautiful scintillations the dark "waste of waters" for a season, only to glimmer awhile, fade, and retire from a world fettered by human ambition, ignorance, and hypocrisy. Happily for the philanthropist, he can, in the signs of the times, descry the gathering storm, the mustering of forces. The shouting of the captains can be heard, and the martial roll that beats the onset in the, it is to be hoped, last affray with the institutions of the iron-armed monster of human bigotry and oppression throughout the earth.

It should not be ours to too critically mark from what direction these forces come, but to gladly accept each "raw recruit," and cheerfully muster in the legions, till our armies comprise the untold millions that chafe under whatever forms of imposition that have fallen to their burdens in life. To lop away the limbs, remove the debris, and clear the highway of thought, in its upward aspirations and flight, is the work of this age; fruition must await the hour in which millions unborn shall share in perpetuity its fruits and blessings. We should hope to claim no more for our glory and happiness complete than to rear this magnificent temple, dedicated to love and truth. But this should be our task, and no bugle-call of rest or retreat, till the column is up and the capital laid thereon.

Standing upon its tip-top, Putnam and I, far above the chaos out from which we build, shall thought, set free, plume her wings for her ethereal flight? SAN FRANCISCO, - - - FEBRUARY 25, 1888

THE pope has been robbed. It appears that honor among thieves does not extend to include impostors in its benefits.

THE Chronicle is creating a brief sensation by reporting that the foundation of the Lick telescope is "shaky." It is not best to be alarmed at present. Perhaps it is the Chronicle's report that is shaky.

A TRUSTED young man in the employ of a wholesale grocer at Marysville proves to be a defaulter to the amount of $3,000. As he was a constant church-goer and a Sunday-school teacher, the revelation causes no surprise. He will not be prosecuted.

A MAN is seldom fitted for any place of trust or responsibility unless he has been raised to it by his own merits. He may for a time live upon the labors of others, and affect an importance which does not belong to him, but a Beggar on Horseback is a beggar still.

SAYS an exchange: "The Rev. Dr. Wayland Hoyt, of Philadelphia, has received a call to the Baptist church in St. Louis at a salary of $10,000, and his Philadelphia parish fear that he will accept." Let the Philadelphia people try a call of $10,500 as an experiment.

MANY of our church people are still under the delusion that the United States is a Christain country. The New York Weekly Witness declares that we are so because we have chaplains for Congress and for the army and navy. It is all a mistake. These chaplains are an excrescence, in violation of the Constitution. We have not yet worked up to the requirements of that instrument. Fanatics aim to force the violation upon us, and then argue that the Constitution is Christian because we allow them to do so. This is one reason why we so much desire to see the chaplain business dispensed with.

THE Monitor promises this week to lay "some facts regarding the frauds perpetrated by foreign Protestant missionaries before Brother McCrary of the Christian Advocate which will make his evangelical eye-balls almost roll out of their sockets!" Now let Brother McCrary respond with facts as to Catholic frauds. The truth will thus be vindicated.

CATHOLIC papers now state that people "don't really kiss the pope's toe. The pope's foot is encased in a silk stocking, which is again encased in a dainty slipper embroidered with a cross, which the pilgrim touches with his lips." This is no improvement. The fact that a portion of the pope's anatomy is clothed does not make kissing it any more desirable.

THE Rev. Hugh O. Pentecost says: "I am a profound believer in Christ. It is because I am that I leave the church." Mr. Pentecost's action is above criticism. Imagine Christ as a member of a modern church. Think of him taking an admission fee at the door of a cathedral, or auctioning off pews to the highest bidder. Christ never did either of these things. He was a pretty poor Christian.

A MONUMENT TO MICHAEL SERVETUS.

The following letter will interest every Liberal:

2 QUAI DES EAUX VIVES, GENEVA, SWITZERLAND, Jan. 28, 1888.

HON. JNO. W. NORTH, Fresno Co., Cal.; My Dear Sir: Since receiving yours we have come to this small but interesting republic, and to its chief city, memorable for what has been done in it both good and bad. Here a very grave question was settled between our own country and England by that most humane and civilized way, arbitration, and here too, and only a stone's throw from the same spot, I might say on the identical spot, was held that most infamous trial of the martyr Servetus, whose sin was believing and maintaining that Christ was the "son of the eternal God" instead of being the "eternal son of God," as he was told by Calvin he must believe or die.

Now it has come to the minds of a few of us, both Americans and Liberal Genevois (first suggested to us by Mr. Horace J. Smith, of Philadelphia), that it was time that a suitable monument be erected on the spot where this brave man was burned, and the first steps have been taken. A sort of self-constituted committee of three, consisting of Mr. Geo. Fazy, president, Horace J. Smith, secretary, and Henry F. Blount, high private, with a few friends, are trying to organize the working committees in each of the countries of France, Italy, England, Spain, and the United States. M. D. Conway will be asked to be chairman of the one for the United States, with the request to place one or more of the North family on it to represent the Pacific slope.

Mr. Smith has just sent an article on the subject to the editor of the Chronicle at San Francisco, and I took the liberty of requesting him to send you a copy. Should you fail to get it, please ask your son George to keep a look out for it and send you one. There is a portrait of Servetus here in Geneva, and we are to have photos of it taken and sent to the committees to be given to subscribers. We hope $1.00 in most cases, with here and there a contribution of $5, $10 or $20, will be all-sufficient for the purpose. From estimates already made $1,000 will cover the cost of a simple monument with bronze medallion portrait inserted on one side. But the committee have concluded to have the design so made as to admit of inscriptions, or bas relief representations indicating some prominent idea connected with his life, or his "taking off," should the world ever bold enough and honest enough to tell the truth on a monument—that proverbial "lying tablet."

HENRY F. BLOUNT.

This is a call which should meet an immediate and generous response. The martyrdom of Michael Servetus is known to all. In 1553 he was tried at Vienne by the Catholic church for heresy. He was convicted and sentenced to death by burning. Pursued by the sleuth-hounds of intolerance, he fled to Geneva for protection. A dove flying from hawks sought safety in the nest of a vulture. This fugitive from the cruelty of Rome asked shelter from John Calvin, who had written a book in favor of religious toleration. Servetus had forgotten that this book was written by Calvin when in a minority; that it was written in weakness to be forgotten in power; that it was produced by fear instead of principle. He did not know that Calvin had caused his arrest at Vienne, in France, and had sent a copy of his work, which was claimed to be blasphemous, to the archbishop. He did not then know that the Protestant Calvin was acting as one of the detectives of the Catholic church, and had been instrumental in procuring his conviction for heresy. Ignorant of all this unspeakable infamy he put himself in the power of this very Calvin. The maker of the Presbyterian creed caused the fugitive Servetus to be arrested for blasphemy. He was tried. Calvin was his accuser. He was convicted and condemned to death by fire. Servetus was bound to the stake, and the fagots were lighted. The wind carried the flames somewhat away from his body, so that he slowly roasted for hours. Vainly he implored speedy death. At last the flames climbed around his form; through smoke and fire his murderers saw a white heroic face. And there they watched until a man became a charred and shriveled mass.

So died Servetus. We have given his story in the words of Ingersoll. Servetus remains unhonored to-day save by Infidels. Calvin is the Presbyterian pope, happily dead and leaving no successor. A monument to Servetus will be a monument to Freethought, and there should be no delay in its erection.

SELFHOOD AND HUMANITY.

Practically, there are two grand classes of motives by which the individual is swayed—motives of self and motives of humanity, or of the other than self. Super-subtle refinement may endeavor to resolve all motives into one, and affirm that men are moved only by selfish motives, and that if one dies for humanity, like Socrates or Jesus, he does so as a matter of pleasure to himself, and is really actuated by a selfish motive. The philosophy of common sense, which takes things as they are, rejects this confounding of real distinctions, and maintains what everybody's reason and experience declare the essential difference between selfish and unselfish conduct. To every human mind the universe is dual. This is the fundamental assertion of science. There are the ego and the non-ego; there are the man himself and the universe without. This is the intuition of consciousness. It is the condition of consciousness. No one can know himself without knowing other than himself. To think, there must be relations, and the fundamental relation is that of the one with the all, and this implies a difference. The infant does not begin to know until it begins to distinguish, and the first act of knowledge is to recognize that the universe is not the same as himself.

It is impossible to analyze further. Therefore two great worlds exist side by side—the ego and the non-ego, constantly mingling, yet forever different, inextricably blended, yet never actually the same.

Motives are mixed, and conduct is the result of many motives and not of one. No one is absolutely selfish and no one can be absolutely unselfish.

Most religions decry selfhood. They insist upon the annihilation of the individual. He must be absorbed in the all and forget his own identity. Hence worship, self-abnegation, self-sacrifice, self-surrender. Hence the doctrine of total depravity and the worthlessness of one's own personality.

Over against this is the philosophy of egoism, which, carried to extreme, means every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost. It is selfhood concentrated to selfishness, and humanity is lost sight of; enthusiasm dies, and cold calculation is the rule. In the revolt against religious feeling which sinks man in God, this extreme is naturally reached. There are selfish Freethinkers; so selfish that they are willing that the masses should remain in ignorant superstition, rather than make any exertion to benefit them; often making the plea that the churches are good enough for the common people. There is a great deal of this kind of selfishness in the world. It is simply looking out for number one in all circumstances. Too many who throw off the shackles of religion drift into this absolute indifference to humanitarian effort.

This last state, however, is better than the first. Better enlightened selfishness than ignorant surrender to a God—to a master in the skies. This is debasing; while a strict looking after one's self does the world no hurt, even if it accomplishes no good. It preserves, at least, the welfare of one individual, and this is more than religious fanaticism can do.

But the philosophy and spirit of Freethought does not result in pure selfishness. It is a balancing of the grand motive powers of the world of life. It recognizes self. It also recognizes humanity.

Freethought insists upon one's respecting his own being. It insists upon self-reliance, independence, personal energy. It insists upon the cultivation of the will, and the enjoyment of one's own desires. It believes that each should be interested in his own welfare; should labor for himself and make himself happy. It would not annihilate selfishness, but enlighten it—give to it knowledge and wisdom. It would make one so regard his well-being that for his own sake he would do nothing base, nothing untruthful, nothing dishonest, nothing cowardly.

But selfhood is not humanity. Grandest than any one man is our united human race, and grander than any motives of self are the motives which spring from a wish for the happiness and progress of all. When we contemplate the vast brotherhood to which we belong, the uncounted millions that have lived and toiled from generation to generation; when we see heroes and martyrs forgetting all in devotion to mankind—to truth, to freedom, to justice; when we behold the grandeur of human reason slowly, wonderfully advancing, building up the magnificence of civilization, which makes each home a delight, giving to each man and woman a marvelous power otherwise impossible; when we see that each century labors and dies for that which comes after, as the mother gives her life to the child; realizing this, what a potent motive is awakened in every breast. Then action reaches its noblest significance. Then every common joy becomes a glowing duty. Freethought would cultivate this sublime and universal sentiment. It would create the enthusiasm of humanity. It would neglect God, but serve man. It would say, Each for all, all for each. It would teach the sympathy of age with age, of race with race, of neighbor with neighbor. Around the happy fireside it would bring the glory of every struggle and every achievement.

Realizing that countless millions have toiled for the wealth of to-day, we are constrained to do our share for gain of the future. In the nobility of ourselves we see the nobility of others, and therefore we would make the most of ourselves. In the happiness of others we reap also the sweetest harvest; and therefore to live for others is the highest law of liberty and reason. We would make selfishness selfhood; we would make God humanity.

PAINE REMEMBERED.

The Truth Seeker and Investigator print accounts of Paine celebrations at New York, Boston, Strasburg, Ill., and Milwaukee, Wis., besides those at Chicago and San Francisco.

In New York city the Society of Humanity gave a reception and Lawyer Fred Leubuscher delivered the address. In Boston the Ingersoll Secular Society had a grand meeting, and Horace Seaver made Paine Hall resound with the trumpet tones of other days. The Strasburg exercises were presided over by A. York; and in Milwaukee Professor Lockwood gave an address in English and Professor Graubran spoke in German. All these were accompanied with music, recitations, and dancing, so that the exercises were of the kind that interest the whole human family.

FREETHOUGHT has carried to its readers the news of seven celebrations. The West is a great country, and its atmosphere is conducive to activity.

LAST week we published a statement made by Mr. Charles Eckhard and offered to pay one thousand dollars to the treasury of the American Secular Union if we could not prove the statement to be totally and unqualifiedly false. We repeat the offer. Mr. Eckhard now has an opportunity to fill the coffers of the Union by simply vindicating himself from the charge of being a deliberate falsifier. He cannot do it. The brand is upon him.

Good Samos Parsons came into the FREETHOUGHT office the other day with a subscription and the benediction of age to youth and hope. He deplored the quarrels now in our ranks, fearing that they would do great injury. This is our own view of the matter. We have endeavored to avoid the quarrel. It has been forced upon us by unscrupulous enemies. We must fight, and we intend to fight hard and strike hard. There can be no compromise. Explanations have been given that are conclusive and unassailable. We have been attacked with malice. We shall keep up the contest only so long as it is necessary for self-defense. We shall prove that after a labor of two weeks or more Eckhard has produced a deliberate falsehood. We shall brand him before all the public—and then leave him to the ridicule and contempt he so richly deserves—and turn from these jackals of Liberalism to battle again with our legitimate opponents, the ecclesiastical tyrannies of this world.

Valuable Recipe.

A good way to kill a town is to encourage those who are doing all in their power to stir up strife, create dissension, breed discord, and engender factional bitterness. Peace and prosperity would then fly away.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Once more the bugle-call of the locomotive; and the bright fields are before us. Who can describe the loveliness of the scenery—fresh from the bosom of the rains, glittering in the sun! On we dash down the broad San Joaquin valley three hundred miles in length. Along the route are cultivated fields, trim houses, enormous barns, elegant orchards, and gardens on the verge of bloom. The blue hills melt away into the snowy ranges of the Sierras. Just as the shining day falls into the mellow gold of evening we arrive at Fresno—a busy place, the largest city between San Francisco and Los Angeles. An extensive and fruitful country is all about it, the best irrigated of any in the state. I found arrangements were made for lectures at Fresno Monday, February 20, and Wednesday and Thursday, February 22 and 23, and we shall have our story to tell of Fresno hereafter. Meanwhile we spend the days at Oleander, at the house of Judge J. W. North, who has arranged a good opening campaign. George L. North met us at the station, and in the glorious moonlight we haste away to the country schoolhouse, where the well-filled seats made a pleasant greeting, and we discoursed of Universal Mental Liberty. There were some Christians present, and they seemed to think that Freethought was not so bad as they expected, but on the whole a little better than what they had been accustomed to. On Saturday evening we went over to what is called the "Washington Colony," about three miles, and there we addressed a full house. The Presbyterian church was well lighted up for a prayer meeting, but the attendance was slim. The people wanted to hear something new, and so we gave the "New Heaven and Earth." There is a good Liberal element in this community, right under the very droppings of the sanctuary. Subscriptions were received for FREETHOUGHT and books sold quite rapidly at the close of the lecture—an indication of interest and progress. The campaign has opened well, and without doubt Southern California will give a splendid response.

To-day, Sunday, is beautiful. We are in the country, and quiet reigns. A bright picture is before us—a clear blue sky, glistening plains, evergreen trees just moving in the gorgeous sunshine, and far away the white mountains gem the vast horizon. We lectured again in the Oleander schoolhouse this morning on the Bible—a good Sabbath subject—and we stuck to the facts, which in this case are quite heterodox, and not orthodox. When it comes to facts about the Bible—its history—our Christian friends fight shy. They had rather swallow the Bible whole than to understand its origin. One of my orthodox hearers protested against my claiming the name "Freethinker." He declared that he was just as much a freethinker as I, and was entitled to the name. I told him that was all right. If he wanted the name he could have it, but I wanted it also. If Freethought made him a Christian, I had no quarrel with him. Freethought was a method—a universal way—the broad way, and not the narrow way—of finding out all the truth there is. If he took Freethought with Christianity, that was his affair. I preferred to take my Freethought without Christianity, and that was my right, and all I asked for. He said my facts were correct, but my inferences wrong. I told him I made no inference. It is the Christians who make the inferences, without the facts. We simply give the facts. My opponent, who was a preacher—but gets no money for preaching, and so doesn't preach—shook hands in a friendly way and departed.

I speak in the "Central Colony" this evening. The church is locked up and so is the schoolhouse, and I speak in a large packing house, with extemporized seats. I guess next week I shall have a good story to tell of this novel meeting-house. We Infidellecturers, like the anti-slavery pilgrims, have to deliver our messages in all sorts of edifices, and for my part I enjoy the variety.

I haven't time now to write all I desire about this place and work. The mail runs only three times a week from here, and if I wait I shall not get in any communication for this week's FREETHOUGHT, and so I hurry off this sketch. I shall have more to say about our friends, Judge North and others, next week. Suffice to say that all looks favorable. This is the first time that Freethought lectures have been given in Fresno county, and they are cordially received.

A week from to-day I shall be at Los Angeles. I shall be at National City and San Diego March 4 and 11; at San Jacinto and vicinity March 18, visiting Del Mar and good friend Shaug on the way. I shall be at Santa Ana, Anaheim and neighborhood March 25, and at Nipomo and San Luis Obispo county April 1, and during April shall also lecture at San Jose, Gilroy, Livermore, and Boulder Creek. The northern route has already been outlined. We hope that Oregon friends will be ready for a grand rally.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Oleander, Feb. 19, 1888.

LITERARY NOTES.

DR. JULIET H. SEVERANCE's address on Thomas Paine at the Chicago Secular Union's celebration is published in full in the Alarm of that city.

THE Hon. A. Schell's tribute to U. S. Grant, as published in the Modesto Herald of January 12, is a fine rhetorical effort. The eulogy was written for the Grant Club of Albany, N. Y., on the occasion of General Grant's death.

ON March 1 S. H. Preston will begin the publication of a monthly magazine to be called Thought of the Times. The office is at 1398 Broadway, New York; subscription price, $1 a year. Mr. Preston will send sample copies upon receipt of a stamp.

LET it be remembered that quite a stock of Liberal books are kept on sale at this office. This is the season when everybody should buy the "Truth Seeker Annual for 1888," price 25 cents, and Ingersoll's argument in the famous blasphemy case, price 25 cents. We have a large supply of both of these works. The Annual is unusually good this year.

THE publishers of the Popular Science Monthly announce that the era of attempts at compromise between scripture and geology will be described by Andrew D. White, in one of his "New Chapters in the Warfare of Science," in the Popular Science Monthly for March. The way in which this question has been handled by Voltaire, Cuvier, by Dr. Smith as editor of the "Dictionary of the Bible," by Gosse and Gladstone, is especially interesting.

N. S. JOHNSON, of Sioux Falls, Dakota, a Scandinavian, has published in his mother tongue a book of 190 pages entitled "Er Biblen Guds Ord?" which we have no doubt his countrymen will find well worthy their perusal. Mr. Johnson also prints in pamphlet form "Prasteskabet," being a Scandinavian translation of George Chainey's "The Clergy." The price of the first is $1; the second 10 cents. Address this office.

THE Puzzler, which Mr. N. D. C. Hodges, editor of New York Science, sends out, is calculated to set people's wits at work. The enigmas and rebuses and other mysteries appear at first to be wholly inexplicable, and therefore when the reader has succeeded in solving one of them he experiences a copious and gratifying influx of self-satisfaction, and has a higher regard for his own astuteness. The Puzzler costs 10 cents a number. We send it by mail on receipt of that sum.

E. C. Walker's Kindness.

The pressure upon our space caused by the Comstock raid has prevented the earlier notice of the new Liberal journal established in San Francisco by George E. Macdonald, the former brilliant humorist of the Truth Seeker and brother of its editor, and S. P. Putnam. The Macdonalds seem to be "born" editors. FREETHOUGHT is already giving promise of a bright future, and it needs but to stand firmly by the fundamental principles represented by its name to accomplish great good on the Pacific Coast and throughout the country.

It is published weekly at $2 per year. Address, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.—Lucifer, Feb. 10, 1888.

Sabbath Observance in Salt Lake City.

Yesterday, a most beautiful day, was enjoyed by our people in going to church, duck shooting, and standing pat on a bobtail flush.—Salt Lake Times.

NAMBLESS.

I thought that I heard a sound—a voice! Was there a voice that spoke? Or did I fancy? I must have dreamed, and have only now awoken. Again? What is it? I cannot see; is there any one in the room? Those words? "A minister! Come to pray my soul through the gates of gloom!"

That's kind of you, but—what's that you say? Do I not shrink from death?

Ah no, I long for his terrible arms and the frost of his icy breath. There is rest for me on his stony breast, there is peace in his cold, cold heart.

Ah no, I fear not! My bosom's bare for the sting of his shadowy dart. Do you know what death means, sir, to such as I, the wanton, the wretch of the street,

The trodden thing, that you godly ones crush down as a worm 'neath your feet?

It means the end of a ceaseless pain that none pity save those who bear. Dear Death, draw near; lay your hands on mine; draw nearer, my pillow share.

You say that I wander, that I forget the stains on my guilty soul, I must turn to Christ with a trusting faith, and he will wash out the whole. Why didn't your Christ save my soul before from pollution's dark living grave?

When I was honest, and pure, and good, was the time for your Christ to save!

I wasn't always an outcast, sir, a disgrace to my sex and name, And it isn't from choice that these last five years I've been leading a life of shame.

Why didn't you godly ones come to me ere my virtue was putrid, dead; If your Christ knew how hard I struggled, why did he make so dear honest bread?

If I only could tell you how hard I tried—if I only had time to speak— But what does it matter? It's over now, and I'm growing so weak, so weak!

What is it? I didn't "ask Christ," you say. Nay, sir, on my bended knees

In the street I've prayed him to send me work that I might not starve and freeze;

On my knees I prayed, in the other days, that his merciful hand might save The man I loved, and whose name I bore, from the stain of a drunkard's grave;

And I asked your Christ, when I saw him die, only six poor feet to yield Of his great wide earth for a burial place—and he gave me the Potter's field!

I followed John's corpse to a pauper's grave in the aisles of eternal night, And the love of my life went down with the clods that buried him from my sight;

I didn't think, as I stood there then, in the driving wind and sleet, Of my helpless self with a babe in arms turned homeless into the street! I didn't think of the weary years, nor the pain that was yet to come, I could only think of the close shut lids and the dear lips sealed and dumb.

I didn't remember the life he'd led, nor his last blood-curdling curse; I only thought I'd once taken him for better, or—for worse; That the heart I so often had pressed to mine lay pulseless, and cold, and still,

And a weary voidness was left to me, that nothing might ever fill.

Yes—he died of the tremens; you'll comfort me by saying his soul is lost!

But where is the fiend who sold him rum, the price that his ruin cost? He's sitting to-day in a cushioned pew—a good Christian, without a flaw, Along with the praters of justice high, and the deacons who make the law. When he dies, you will say that the great white gates flew open to let him in,

While my John, is lying in mortal pain from his great, unforgiven sin. Ah, John—dear John—I am faithful yet! All the love that I had to give Is yours in death as in life, dear John, and if—somewhere—again we live; You will know—and—forgive me. 'Twas for our child! You will pity, you will not blame

That to save him from starving I sold myself, and drank of the dregs of shame!

I tried so hard to be honest, John. But where was the use to try? So many were waiting to sell their toil, and oh! but so few to buy. So few, so few, have felt, have seen God's love in the cold blue skies, Though the ranks of the starving poor are filled with mournful beseeching eyes.

They are filled with eyes that implore, and haunt, and follow you through the years—

Strange suffering eyes that are always dry and heavy with unshed tears.

What is that? Could I get no work at all? Sometimes; but, good sir, I pray

Would you care to preach for seventeen hours at thirty-five cents a day? It wasn't often I'd make that much, for sewing without a fire, In the dead of winter, is fearful work; and your stiffened fingers tire,

And your head swims round, and your shivering limbs grow numb with the stinging cold,
And—well, it doesn't seem half so awful then—this selling yourself for gold.

To me it didn't seem half so bad as to you, in the generous heat,
When I was forced in my mouth to hold my little one's freezing feet.
The nobler self, like a delicate plant, dies fast in a pitiless hour,
And the numbing cold of Starvation's tooth has a terrible blasting power.
Aye, and many and many a winter night, while you in your well warmed home

Were teaching the love of Christ and God, I was forced in the streets to roam;
Forced in the streets to roam all night, with the babe on my shivering breast.

And a minister's wife has refused me food, or even a spot to rest!

How long do you think your own mother, sir, would have led a virtuous life

If she had been left in the world like this? How long would your trusted wife

Have remained like the snow ere it falls to earth, to mix in the muddy street

With the filth and the mire and the grime and the ooze ground in by the trampling feet?

I tell you, sir, it's a terrible thing to judge of a woman's sin
When a tenement's rent is a higher price than her honest toil can win.

No! Don't talk of Christ any more to me! When my little one's dying head

Was laid on my bosom, I asked him then, for the last time, to send me bread.

I prayed to him, oh! so earnestly—and how did his answer come?
The landlord knocked for his rent. And I, like your Christ, was dumb!
I was dumb with despair, a dull blank despair, as I went out into the night,

And I didn't know, nor I didn't care, if I did wrong or right.
I sold myself for a glittering price. 'Twas too late! Little Charlie died;
And I'm only waiting for Death to come, that we may sleep side by side.
Life hasn't mattered to me since then, all that I loved was gone;
But your God of Vengeance, perhaps, decreed that I, in my grief, live on.
It is over now—I am almost gone—it is darker—I'm nearly blind!
Yes, I thank you for your intention, sir, I'm sure it was very kind.

No! Your prayers would be useless! I asked for bread, and your Christ gave me a stone.

I can leave this world as I've lived in it—in shame, and in pain, alone.
It isn't the dying who need God's help. It's the living who cry for aid!
Don't expect to have virtuous deaths, my friend, while Virtue's so underpaid.

While Virtue's so underpaid in life, and honor is sold so high,
Don't talk about Jesus's tender love, don't endeavor to help Vice die!

I am weak—so weak—and my voice—it fails. A faintness steals over me—

O John!—dear John!—and my little one! I am coming. "Light—I see!"
VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

LOCAL SPORT.

The immigrant, after a few days' residence in San Francisco, awakes some morning to the realization that something is biting him. For a season he conceals the fact, or confides it only to his bosom friend, and if that friend be a resident, the immigrant will learn that "it's fleas," and will be favored with a recipe for their extermination. About the time he gets ready to use the recipe the pests have ceased to trouble him. Either the fleas get tired of him as a diet, or he becomes inoculated with their virus so that their bite no longer takes effect. The people here call it getting acclimated. A young lady correspondent contributes the following lively remarks upon the subject:

This is a beautiful country for fleas. The fleas here are the largest and finest and the most talented to be found in the world. They are also the most agile. I think they are thoroughbred; they are of a particularly fine strain, I know, and are wonderfully intelligent. While I write the accomplished flea hoppeth gaily up and down, bringing my paragraphs to many an impromptu period. After sundry exasperated but ineffectual digs through my clothing, I drop my pen and give myself up to an exciting chase after fleas. A well educated flea always hops about the remotest portions of the human geography. You never catch them, at least—very seldom.

Sometimes a coquettish flea will let you get a glimpse of him or her—I think the coquettish ones must be her—and even allow you to put your finger on her, secretly grinning at your exclamation of triumph; but at the least attempt to secure a firmer grip, preparatory to her utter annihilation, she skippeth frolicsomenely to some inaccessible and unknown spot and waits contentedly, even cheerfully, for you to give up the search in despair, when she cometh boldly forth again, and endeavors by airy skips and vicious nips to provoke the patient, or rather impatient, into a second doubly exasperating and equally unavailing combat.

It is said the ladies and gentlemen of California institute impromptu flea hunts on the streets, in the street cars or the ball-room, as the case might be. The excitement of the chase is said to render them entirely unconscious of spectators and regardless of consequences. I have not been an eyewitness to any such proceeding, but after a week's residence in San Francisco, and several violent and unsatisfactory encounters with the animal, in the sanctity of my apartment, I have no hesitation in vouching for the truth of the statement.

One California flea of average intelligence can keep an ordinary family in a state of excitement. If he be a genius he will monopolize the entire and combined attention of the inhabitants of a hotel. Flea hunts are extremely exciting to the participants and highly entertaining to the spectators.

DEATH OF ABRAM BRONSON.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The inclosed slip, cut from the San Diego Sun of the 15th of February, will inform you of the death of our good friend Dr. Abram Bronson. He passed into the "dreamless sleep" on the morning of the 7th of February, as a child retiring to its morning rest.

I would like to write for publication a biography of this great man, but do not feel that I am capable of the task. I trust some of his many able friends, on learning of his death, will write up his history and character; it will instruct and benefit every worker in the cause of Freethought that is struggling to obtain the truth.

The doctor, after bequeathing to those of his heirs the sum of one thousand dollars each, leaves the remainder of his estate, amounting to $25,000, to myself and A. N. Burgess, as trustees, we to elect a third (without bonds), whose duty it will be, after providing for the funeral, and paying all just debts, to use the balance in the construction of a public hall in the city of San Diego, which shall be named "Freeman's Hall," and dedicated to humanity—free to man, woman, and child; free from all sacerdotal influences; free from all secret clans, of whatever denomination. In accepting this trust, I pledge my honor to every friend of truth and liberty on this delightful earth, that I will carry out to the best of my ability every wish expressed or implied in his will, and will ever be found at my post, ready to receive "good cheer."

This grand old man labored in the cause up to his eightieth year, yielding only at the command of death, and handing the charge over to his confiding friends, together with all his accumulations of wealth, with the mandate, "Do thou likewise."

We will prove recreant to our trust if we fail in vigor or lag in our duty.

H. L. SHAUG.

Pious Labor Unappreciated.

Mayor Hewitt, of New York, has received a letter from a man, whose name he refuses to disclose, inclosing a piece of paper smaller than a penny, on which was written the Lord's prayer. Mayor Hewitt sent the following response: "I have to thank you for the specimen of your ability to write the Lord's prayer in script so fine that even angels could not read it without a magnifying glass. From my experience with the human eye, I am inclined to think that if you pursue this work very long you will destroy your vision, for which even the mere writing of the Lord's prayer will hardly compensate you in this world or the next."

Not a Satisfactory Experiment.

"Did you ever," said one preacher to another, "stand at the door after your sermon and listen to what people said about it as they passed out?" The other replied, "I did once"—a pause and a sigh—"but I'll never do it again."—Central Presbyterian.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

SECULARISM OR GOD IN THE STATE.

The first article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States reads: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."

In violation of this, and in substantiation of my charge, I refer you to the fact that our national and state governments pay about $50,000 per annum for prayers, in spite of the fact that there isn't a particle of evidence forthcoming to prove there has ever been any dividends declared on this investment, or ever will be.

A manifest injustice to Jews, Spiritualists, Materialists, and Agnostics alike is the use of the Bible in the public schools, professedly as a text-book. Rev. Heber Newton says: "The Bible is not fit to be put in the hands of children," and Secularists claim that its use as a moral guide is impossible until its indecent, filthy, and vulgar passages are expunged, and therefore should be excluded from our schools. Thanks to the German Turners of Chicago, the schools of our city are pretty well secularized, although Catholic influence for some years has been so powerful that it was next to impossible for lady teachers to get appointments unless they professed adherence to the church; but the new school board is, I believe, remedying this state of things. No wonder our schools were closed on Good Friday, when the composition of the Board of Education was fixed by the Council at nine Catholics to six of other denominations. The committee on school appropriations had a majority for years of three out of five for the Mother Church. As no good Catholic believes in a secular school system, how comes it that their management was turned over to their avowed enemies? Says the Catholic Review:

There is no longer a school question for Catholics. The door of discussion, which was slightly ajar prior to 1884, was closed, locked, bolted, and barred by the Plenary Council held in that year, which directed that Christian schools should be maintained by all parishes in the United States, not prevented by extreme poverty from carrying them on. That decree is law for priest and people.

The two questions for Freethinkers are to see that school funds, raised by taxation, remain intact for public schools; that they are never divided with the parochial schools; and the other, to remove the religious exercises now in vogue.

Our county authorities and state (Illinois) legislature have been base enough to bend to this insidious Roman power by passing a special law (which is a violation of the letter and spirit of the statutes of our state) to help pay for the manufacture of Catholics at Feehanville. That educational fraud needs a little ventilation also.

Nearly every state has laws enforcing Sabbath observance—a glaring example of church and state union, and a manifest outrage on the conscience of anti-Christians. True, in many places these laws are "dead letters." If so, why keep them as laws? Why not expunge them as relics of religious tyranny? They are not dead letters everywhere, for in Connecticut a little over a year ago several persons were jailed over night and fined next day for simply gathering nuts on Sunday.

In New York city the Sabbatarians swore out warrants for the arrest of the directors of the Art Loan Association when engaged in raising funds for the erection of the base of Bartholdi's colossal statue of Liberty Enlightening the World (as an ironical satire, I presume), because, in spite of the protests of the church, they determined to throw open their vast collection of art gems to the public at a nominal price on Sunday. The American Secular Union, through the labors of its secretary, Mr. Putnam, has so turned the tide of public opinion, or at least made it manifest, that it is confidently expected that the Art Loan and Museum of Natural History will soon be open to the public on Sunday.

Germany is recognized as a nation one of the foremost in material prosperity, intellect, and vigor; yet, as a nation, Sunday is a day of recreation with them, as it is also a day of pleasure in the intellectual centers of France. Here in Chicago, the dead-head ministers of deadhead churches indignantly denounce theaters, picnics, Sunday papers, and social amusements. How much worse would this be had they the patent right to rule by a recognized God in our Constitution! Seeing that clergymen perform their chief labor on that day, their protestations sound a good deal like cant.

In the states of Maryland, Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, and Tennessee an Infidel is not allowed to hold office; no matter how competent, honest, or faithful he may be, he cannot serve his state in a public capacity. This only offers a premium on hypocrisy, as no one can imagine for a moment that all these officers are orthodox in their belief. This only results in further demoralizing these political officeholders into a set of hypocrites by this enforcement of church and state. Verily,

All conviction should be valiant;
 Tell thy truth, if truth it be,
 Never seek to stem its current:
 Thoughts, like rivers, find the sea;
 It will fit the widening circle
 Of eternal verity.

Speak thy thought if thou believ'st it.
 Let it jostle whom it may,
 E'en although the foolish scorn it,
 Or the obstinate gainsay;
 Every seed that grows to-morrow
 Lies beneath the clod to-day.

In Delaware, Georgia, Indiana, Maine, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Tennessee the unbeliever is not permitted to testify in a court of justice. It has been clearly shown that through this legal outrage an Atheist's family might be murdered before his very eyes, and if there were no witnesses—other than himself—he has no redress, unless he turns traitor to his convictions and pretends to believe what he is certain is false. The Christian dogma of the necessity of belief as means of salvation is thus practically exemplified by this union of church and state, and this would be universal if God ever gets into our Constitution.

A still more striking illustration of this unholy union is the exemption from taxation of church property. In the city of New York, Trinity Episcopal church owns a block of land one-fourth of a mile wide by three-fourths of a mile long, valued at $25,000,000. Taxed equally with other property, it would yield $1,750,000 annually toward supporting the state; but being exempt, that amount remains in the church's coffers, and the people of New York, who are taxed the extra amount to make good this deficiency, positively pay $2,000 per annum for the religious instruction of each attendant at Trinity church. How is that for church establishment? On the land owned by this ecclesiastical corporation a few years ago were 764 saloons and 96 houses of prostitution—all contributing their share, of course, to give the Gothamites the gospel of glad tidings. They now pretend that no liquor is sold on their property. But Trinity church is notorious as the most merciless landlord in that city, more than any others having fought the sanitary authorities, absolutely refusing to do anything for the health or comfort of their tenants.

Not only is church property exempt, but the Water Department of our model city government (which for some years has closed its business in honor of St. Patrick) has been furnishing religious institutions with free water in return, I presume, for the water of life they keep so freely on tap. And a West Town assessor informs me that on his rounds he found that all residences of clergymen were also exempt from personal property tax; that he would be told: "This is Rev. Mr. So-and-so's residence, of such a church. We never pay taxes." We would like to know by what authority they are exempt. They haven't even the color of law for this additional outrage.

SOUND DOCTRINE.

A writer in the American Sentinel who signs himself "A. T. J." comes to the defense of the Demands of Liberalism as follows:

Last fall one of the editors of the Sentinel made a speech in Oakland on the coming union of church and state in this country. A National Reformer was present and heard it, and he has written in reply and sent to us manuscript copy sufficient to make more than two full pages of the Sentinel, and asks that it may all be printed. But it is almost wholly made up of arguments for National Reform, which have been quite largely discussed already in the Sentinel, from both sides of the question, and we do not deem it just to our subscribers to devote so much space to mere repetitions. There is, however, one point which demands notice in our own defense, as well as for the principle involved.

This point our correspondent throws into the form of a question, as follows:

Are you aware, or being aware do you not care, that the "Demands of Liberalism," and of the "National Liberal League," are now clamoring for the abolition of these very things which National Reformers wish continued? And do you not know that these Liberalists oppose the amendment with great vehemence? So that in this controversy you are identifying yourselves with the Infidel Liberalists. The third article of the National Liberal League states the specific objects of the association. Among these are the following: "The total discontinuance of religious instruction and worship in the public schools;" "the abolition of state-paid chaplaincies;" the abolition of the judicial oath; the non-appointment of religious fasts and holidays, etc. In like manner the Liberalists demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated. And all these people are furiously opposed to the amendment which we seek. They know that so long as the Constitution remains as it is, so long they and their cause are safe in case an appeal be made to the courts, whose decisions must be in accordance with the Constitution.

We are perfectly aware that the National Reformers are ready on the instant to raise the cry of "Infidel" or "Atheist" against all who choose to oppose the religious amendment to the Constitution, even though they know that the opponents are avowed Christians. And being aware, we do not care. They may call us Infidels, they may call us Atheists, or may apply to us any other term of reproach that they please, and that to their hearts' content, but it shall not make a particle of difference with us, in our attitude toward the religious amendment to the Constitution. We know that in his day they called our master Beelzebub; and we, doing our utmost to be counted worthy to be of his household, expect that much more they will call us of his household. Besides this, we know that "it is only in the absence of argument that recourse is had to ridicule;" and as the worthy National Reformers cannot answer our arguments, we expect them to call us names. We derive our principles from the word of Christ; the principles which we advocate are those established by Christ; and when Infidels advocate those principles, then we are perfectly willing to be classed with Infidels. We would rather be classed with Infidels in opposition to the tyranny of a religious despotism than to be found on the side of those who call themselves Christians while promoting it. We know exactly where we stand, we know precisely what we are doing, in our opposition to the religious amendment to the United States Constitution, and to any sort of religious legislation under any Constitution. We know whom we believe, and for the National Reformers to call us Infidels or Atheists, or Anarchists, or to class us with all these, does not make us so, nor does it frighten us.

As for the Demands of Liberalism, and of the National Liberal League, we have never made them a subject of study; we have never seen a copy of them, except as given in National Reform literature. But there is one thing which we know to be a fact, and that is, there was never any such thing heard of as the Demands of Liberalism until after the National Reformers had set on foot their movement to secure a religious amendment to the Constitution, endangering the civil and natural rights of men. Then it was that the Liberal League was formed, and their Demands were framed in direct opposition to the National Reform demands, and in defense of their own rights. We say "in defense of their own rights," because we utterly refuse assent to the National Reform proposition that if a man be an Infidel he has no rights. And that then it was high time for them to do something in defense of their rights is shown by the words of our correspondent. Hear him.

They know that so long as the Constitution remains as it is, so long they and their cause are safe.

Of course they are, and they ought to be safe. They ought to be just as safe as anybody else in the nation. But they know, and we know, and the National Reformers know, that just as soon as the religious amendment to the Constitution is adopted, or religious legislation is sanctioned, just so soon they will not be safe. In view of this, it is certainly time that somebody was maintaining the principles of the Constitution as it is, under which is their safety. But according to the charitable decision of the National Reformers, for even a Christian to do this, it lands him at once into Infidelity.

Anybody who will take the time to compare the Demands of Liberalism, as given by our correspondent, with the National Reform Constitution, will see at once that these Demands are aimed at that document, and that they are wholly defensive. And it is perfectly safe to say that if now there was no such thing in existence as the National Reform Association, there would likewise be no such thing as the Demands of Liberalism.

Taking these demands as given by our correspondent, there are some of them that are perfectly proper in themselves. On the subject of the "discontinuance of religious instruction and worship in the public schools," the position of the Sentinel is well known to be in favor of it, because it is right. As for the abolition of state-paid chaplaincies, the Sentinel is heartily in favor of that also; nor are we speaking at random on this subject. The writer of this article spent five full years in the United States army. He has seen state-paid chaplains in the East and in the West. He has attended their services. He has heard them pray, he has heard them preach, and has seen them about the garrisons. And he states it as his honest conviction, that unless the state-paid chaplains whom he did not see far surpass in efficiency those whom he did see, the whole lot of them put together do not do either the government or the soldiers as much good as would a bag of white beans.

And as for the abrogation of all laws "looking to the enforcement of 'Christian' morality," we also heartily favor that, because it is right. Any law or any proposition that looks to the enforcement of Christian morality, or anything else that is Christian, is contrary to every principle of the doctrine of Christ. And to advocate any such proposition is logically to advocate the Inquisition. The tyranny of the papacy and the iniquity of the Inquisition are the logical conclusions from the National Reform propositions throughout. And therefore the Sentinel now is, and forever more shall be, outspokenly opposed to the whole National Reform scheme. If that be Infidelity, the National Reformers may make the most of it.

EVOLUTION AND THEISM.

So vast are the processes designated by the term Evolution that but few popular readers are familiar with the doctrine. It is true that current literature and conversation are colored by its presence, and that the intellectual atmosphere of the present time is saturated with it. In fact, our thought moves along the channel which the theory has formed, whether we will it so or not. Nevertheless, but comparatively few get more than a vague idea of the true nature and scope of the doctrine. The modern doctrine of Evolution postulates the unity of all phenomena. The indestructibility of matter and the eternity of energy furnish the primary requisites for a beginningless and unending universe. In ceaseless changes the formative forces act and interact, transforming a universe of atoms into light, heat, crystal, flower, and nerve. Thought and feeling accompany neural disturbances, and the various distinctive groups of phenomena possess characteristics which unite them in one continuous, rhythmic, and cosmic process. Day by day is the wondrous magic in nature unfolded as the inquisitive prying into her secrets continues, and every discovery tends to verify the doctrine as enunciated by its most radical scientific adherents.

Men of science, like students and investigators in every department of thought, may be grouped as conservatives and radicals, with a semi-neutral class joining the two extremes. The first class named are, necessarily, the allies of the church and of religion. Let it be here said that this term, "religion," has a distinctive signification from which it cannot justly be separated. Within it is comprehended that which is meant by "supernatural." These conservatives may love the truth as ardently as do their radical brethren. Nor does it follow that they are scientific stars of a diminutive magnitude. For example, Descartes opposed strenuously to the end of life the doctrine of gravitation, which has made the name of Newton immortal; and the senior Agassiz failed to find in the writings of the late Dr. Darwin the evidence necessary to guide his judgment toward the doctrine of evolution. What comparison may do for these last two great names, future generations may observe. The feeling that prompts the scientist to oppose to the utmost any encroachment of the new doctrine may be quite different from that which stimulated the religionist in his opposition. In the former case, the motive may be purely secular; while in the latter it is for the maintenance of "spiritual" and "revealed" truth.

With this last, the scientist, as such, has nothing to do, as the field of his inquiry is confined to the realms of nature. However, from the dawn of the modern scientific era to the present day, the apostles of religion and the foremost scientific investigators have been in conflict. The students of nature do not seek this conflict; they are searching for the exact relations among phenomena; but the truths they learn concerning such relations are almost invariably antagonistic to "revealed" truths. The supremacy of "thus saith the Lord" must be maintained against the new scientific doctrine; and in the name of religion, persecution, in one or many of its forms, follows the expositors of the new theory. Under such circumstances there is but one course open to the scientist, and he is impelled toward it by the basal principle in the preservation of life. Truth is an oral or written expression in accord with a fact. Fact is the actual relation among phenomena. Statements about the relation of phenomena may be true or false. Man's life, enjoyment, and progress are dependent upon his cognition of things which do, or may, exist in nature; and herein resides the motive by which he is actuated, whether consciously or unconsciously. The ruling minds in science are born, not made. They come into being with tendencies, aptitudes, and capacities that unfold into an inspiration when called into use by the myriad mysteries in nature; and their richly-endowed faculties "breathe large meanings into scanty facts." It is impossible for men possessing such minds to refrain from uttering their deepest convictions respecting processes transpiring about them. Though the sacrifices may be great, the new doctrine must be given to the world. A conflict cannot be avoided. "Revealed truth" has possession of the ground, and the advantage of being "infallible." In affirming the new doctrine, either directly or indirectly, there is a denial of "the word of God," or the interpretation received as "the word."

Theism and Atheism are correlative terms. That which is asserted by the former is assumed to be denied by the latter. However, like most of all general terms, their signification is largely dependent upon the relation in which they are used. Theism not only affirms there is a God, but asserts respecting its nature, attributes, and works. Atheism may be used as the negation of the first affirmation, though its general use is for the purpose of denying the nature, attributes, and works asserted by Theism. While in current thought Theism is sometimes blended into Pantheism with such harmonious shadings that lines of distinction between the two are difficult of finding, still, Theism has a meaning distinct from Pantheism, and one which is clearly defined throughout many centuries of history. As scientific research has progressed, and the uniform relation of antecedent and consequent becomes more and more established, and, therefore, divine interposition removed from the affairs of the natural world, it has appeared as though Science and Atheism had joined hands.

If within the premise of a scientific proposition there is included a theological ingredient, the conclusion is in conflict with the doctrine of evolution as expounded by its most exalted exponents. Science is secular, and is confined in its consideration to the realm of the knowable—to the domain of "things." The process described by the term Evolution must have its warrant in every department of science. It cannot transcend the domain of the natural, for it, too, is secular.

It is apparent that science and the doctrine of Evolution have an appreciable influence on religious thought, notwithstanding the oft-reiterated statement that their domain is entirely outside the realm of theology—that the former are limited to the sphere of finite, while the latter has the scope of the Infinite.

Defining the relations between these two great phases of human thought does not, however, fix the channel into which either may flow. It simply denotes the relation they must hold to each other when philosophically considered. Man's religious and scientific thoughts have been developed by like natural influences. Both have attempted a response to questions relating to objective phenomena. Between the explanations offered by these two orders of thought there is a wide difference, arising from their radical dissimilarity in their methods of verifying the doctrines each enunciates.

Religion is the expression of that view of the activities in nature which attributes them to supernatural cause or causes. It is the product of that state of mind which must necessarily precede such mental development as could make scientific interpretation possible. It is as necessary to the latter as boyhood is necessary to manhood. It exhibits the presence of the interrogation point in the primitive mind, and the capacity of the human mind undergoing development to formulate answers. It is conservative; and thereby preserves the old forms with rigid tenacity, though the element which once vitalized them may have long since passed away. Religion nourishes the spirit of credulity, and despises inquiry; discourages the use of man's intellectual faculties, and degrades reason; asserts absolute knowledge respecting the source of the universe, the origin of evil, and the genesis of knowledge. It exhibits the primitive human mind groping in the infancy of its development for an explanation of the manifestations presented by the phenomena of nature.

Theory is no theory, or doctrine, formulated by religion in respect to natural phenomena which science can support. Science may, apparently, assist in giving religion stability; but this is only apparent, as in reality there is no common ground whereby they can unite. Religion, in its true nature, can have no scientific basis whatever. Science deprives it of its essential elements. Science, by reason of the methods it employs, cannot assert there is a supernatural cause. Such an assertion comes within the province of religion. It is frequently stated that the religious nature of man is organic. It is here contended that the nature which is organic is that of inquiry, which leads to investigation. The method of obtaining replies to interrogatories developed the two systems of thought—Religion and Science.

WHY DID THE LORD CREATE THE DEVIL?

THE SUBJECT ABLY CONSIDERED BY SI SLOKUM.

II.

The all-powerful rival of God for the possession of human souls is the devil, and why God should have created a rival at all, and one of heavier caliber than himself, is something that has flabbergasted the writer from the moment he was old enough to think anything about it until the present time; and he has never found the Christian who could satisfactorily explain matters in this direction.

To ring in again that man-god of finesse, Jay Gould, would he be apt to create a rival against himself in the domain where he is monarch of all he surveys, whose right to fleece the country there is none to dispute? Not much. But suppose there came a turn in the tide of his affairs, when it would be well to have a dummy rival for the purpose of huggermuggering the public, and to boom the profits of a gigantic deal into his hands, and he should set up that rival, would it be one more powerful in craft than himself? Well, hardly.

Take a fellow who is after a girl, loving her to that degree when tripe fed to him from her sweet hand would taste like ham in champagne boiled, or water plain like nectar of the gods, would that lover e'er hunt up a rival for that girl's affections? Never, for ducats! But suppose, just for fun, that he should conclude to set some other fellow on the trail of her he loved so deeply, just for the fun of seeing him sat down upon, as it were, would it be a fellow handsomer than he, and with more winning ways, think you? Well, you don't know much about lovers in general if you think he would.

I tell you, brother Infidels, this devil business rattles me. It forces me to the conclusion that God, at the time he created said devil, was not all that is now, and ever has been, claimed for him—omnipotent, omniscient, etc., and I can't help thinking that the devil is now, and ever has been, laughing in his sleeve at his creator, and wondering how the latter allowed him to get the bulge on the Lord of omnipotence! Yes, indeed, how the gentleman in horns, tail, and cloven foot must laugh on the sly, if not, indeed, openly, at the situation, knowing that he is beating the creator out of sight in the grand sweepstakes for human souls!

I have often heard the conundrum, "Why doesn't God kill the devil?" This is a foolish conundrum, I think. Because God made a mistake in creating the devil, he is not to be written down an ass, by any means. The being who created innumerable worlds, not to mention heaven and hell, and all that in them is, out of nothing, in six days by the clock; who wrote the Holy Munchausen, fitted up whales as marine hotels, and fashioned a fine-looking woman out of the fifth rib of a man, is not to be written down an ass, and don't you forget it.

If God should kill the devil—I doubt very much that he could "do" for his satanic majesty at this late day—it would be a triple-X, yard-wide acknowledgment of a wild mistake, the wildest kind of a mistake; and of late years the Lord has not been making such acknowledgments, though formerly he did. To acknowledge he made a mistake in drowning the world was well enough, and a gentlemanly thing to do, but to acknowledge that he slipped up in making the devil, a being who has bested him in the grand sweepstakes for souls, would be to plunge him to the depths in the slough of mortification, and is not to be expected. No, the Lord wouldn't kill the devil if he could, and thereby acknowledge that he has set his foot in it, as it were. There are no flies on the Lord with this regard.

Now, as regards God and Satan, I have an idea the pair were coeval; that God set himself up for a goody-goody, while Satan was a rustler roundabout the universe; that the latter in his rounds discovered the earth one day, finding the citizens thereof to be tough cusses generally, in fact, devilish tough, as Joe Bag-stock might say. There being nothing mean about Satan, albeit a rustler from Wayback, he thought he would like to see what the power of "heavenly love" would do for the reprobate earthlings, and so put his side partner, as it were, onto them, willing that he should cover them into the "fold" if he could; but, of course, standing by to see how the co-ruler of the universe progressed. And he saw that "heavenly love," as manifested for several thousand years, didn't catch on worth a cent, and that a large majority of the earthlings enlisted under his banner; and if he didn't "larf right out in meetin'," being too polite, he laughed right heartily in his sleeve, and is yet laughing, at the signal failure of the self-boasting "all-powerful" one!

Now, if this is not my fixed idea regarding the status and workings of the supreme co-existing duad, it might be, and I don't see why it isn't as sound as any other idea that can be advanced concerning the great mystery of the unknowable. One thing, I don't seek to cram this idea down anybody's throat. Let every one formulate his own idea, confident that one idea is just as good as another, if not a good deal better. SI SLOKUM.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

A delegate from Salt Lake City has been laboring before the Senate Committee at Washington on the question of admitting Utah as a state. The committee did not receive him cordially. —Anschlag, the Santa Ana fiend, is convicted of murder in the first degree.—The following is the mortality statement for San Francisco in January, 1888: There have been 15 deaths from alcoholism, 11 from measles, 27 from smallpox, 89 from phthisis-pulmonalis, 11 from apoplexy, 26 from bronchitis, 14 from congestion of the brain, 103 from pneumonia, and 34 from atrophy. In the whole state there were 1225 deaths, 232 being from pulmonary diseases.—The condition of the crown prince of Germany is said to show improvement.—Burdette, the humorist, is in the city.—A baby was born in Oakland the other day which became heir to $100,000 at its birth. It is a son of Capt. Wm. Walkerly, the Oakland capitalist, recently deceased.—The mayor of Cork, Ireland, has been convicted of a charge of assaulting a police sergeant and sentenced to fourteen days' imprisonment without hard labor.—The statement is made that President Cleveland weighs 325 pounds.—The Rev. Augustus Littlejohn, the once famous revivalist and fellow-laborer of John B. Gough, died in the almshouse at Paw Paw, Michigan, a few days ago, and his remains were consigned to a pauper's grave.—The Chinamen devoted nearly all of last week to celebrating New Year's day.—Bank robbers at Cisco, Tex., got away with $6,000.—The sentences of two Chicago boodlers have been affirmed by the appellate court.—Providence, R. I., had a $360,000 fire last week.—The grand jury in New York are investigating the charge of the Kansas Pacific railway company that Jay Gould and Russell Sage appropriated to their own use $3,000,000 of the company's bonds.—The Elmira, N. Y., Advertiser and other buildings were burnt out, at a loss of $250,000.—James Redpath, the traveler and writer, is suffering from a second stroke of paralysis.—The smallpox, according to report, has taken a fresh start.—The long strike on the Reading road, Pa., is declared off.—Burglars robbed St. Peter's church, on Alabama street, and tried to get into two local convents for felonious purposes, last week.—The San Francisco Art Association held a gorgeous carnival the other night.—A national teachers' convention will be held in this city next July.—The New York Anti-Poverty Society is split in two factions by the quarrel between George and McGlynn, and each faction has read the other out of the party.—The trustees of the Phillips Academy, Andover, have brought a suit to determine the rights in equity of all parties concerned in the heresy trial.—Robbers entered the Vatican at Rome and stole $10,000 worth of the pope's presents.—Editor Childs, of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, reaffirms his determination not to be candidate for president.—George Hutchins, of Camden, N. J., left Henry George $10,000 by will for the propagation of George's theories. The will is contested in the courts.—A priest left in charge of a Guayaquil, Ecuador, bishopric, has made himself ridiculous by excommunicating the supreme court.—The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations last Saturday heard arguments from the Pacific Coast delegation in Congress, in favor of further legislation to restrict the immigration of Chinese.—Nast, the cartoonist, reached San Francisco last Saturday.—W. C. Houghton, an English "boy preacher," is the latest religious attraction here.—A man named Christ has just been appointed postmaster at Sierra Madre.—The Denver Labor Enquirer states that the Socialist vote in Germany numbers 1,000,000.—It is hoped that John Swinton is recovering from his attack of erysipelas.

THE CASE OF HARMAN AND WALKER.

In pursuance of the inquisitorial purposes of the Society for the Suppression of Vice to stamp out Freethought in this country, another Liberal paper has been singled out for its attack.

Messrs. Harman & Walker, editors of Lucifer, at Valley Falls, Kansas, have been indicted on a vague charge of "obscenity"—the same charge raised against Charles Bradlaugh and Annie Besant, in England, and D. M. Bennett. It is impossible to ascertain from the indictment what the specific act is with which they are charged. They disclaim any intent to publish anything obscene, and any knowledge that they have done so. I have been a reader of Lucifer for years, and have never seen in the paper anything that could possibly come under that head, although I have been far from agreeing with its philosophic ideas outside the advocacy of Freethought.

Messrs. Harman & Walker have been prominently known as able, earnest workers for the spread of Freethought, and have valiantly opposed church and state encroachments. Their prominence has invited this attack of the suppressors, which is, without doubt, instigated by the same motives and contemplates the same ends that were so glaringly manifest in the persecution of D. M. Bennett.

It is as apparent as it was in Bennett's case that the attack upon Messrs. Harman & Walker is a violation of the principle laid down in the Eighth Demand of Liberalism, viz., That all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

I therefore urge upon all who have at heart the stability of our institutions, the perpetuity of free speech, and the permanence of freedom in this country to aid in the various ways open to them in the defeat of the efforts of Comstock to silence the editors of Lucifer, and thus to suppress the paper, under the pretense of enforcing "Christian" morality.

The National Defense Association have interested themselves in this case, and are soliciting subscriptions and the active aid of all workers. Liberals will be advancing the cause of progress if they can, in any way, aid or co-operate with the Defense Association, and I am confident they will make no mistake in so doing.

E. A. STEVENS.

THE CHILDREN.

Long, long ago the church saw the necessity of beginning to teach her myths to the children if she wished the men and women to accept them as facts.

There were two reasons for this. The plastic mind of the child is ready to receive and retain almost any impression made upon it, and the natural inclination to believe all it is told makes it all the more important that the seeds of the future harvest be sown in childhood.

These points Liberals have too long overlooked. They trust to chance that the little ones will believe as they do, but they forget that schoolbooks, newspapers, and even almanacs are all full of the religion of 1800 years ago, and the seeds of that which is so much older still as to be lost in antiquity. Our children will have social cravings, and they must have the company of other children; so they flock to churches and Sunday-schools, and get poisoned before they are old enough to see truth or error as they really are. To avert all this we need gatherings of our own sort wherever there are two or more Liberal families—little Sunday-school meetings of our own, both for older people and children. We need Liberal books and papers for children.

Every Liberal paper should have one page for children. Every child should be taught the rudiments of science, divested of all theological ideas. I hope FREETHOUGHT will begin by devoting a column to at least advertising Liberal books for the young.

Susie Wixon's "Story Hour," "Apples of Gold," and "All in a Lifetime;" "Youths' Liberal Guide" and "Elements of Universal History," by Professor H. M. Cottinger; "Life and Her Children," by Arabella B. Buckley; "Darwins," "John's Way," "Mary Jones," "Studying the Bible," and "Little Lessons in Science," by Elmina. These books are all free from orthodox theology, and will make good foundations for youthful knowledge.

In this day of much reading, we need to look well to the books of our children. The gathered thoughts of our lives make our minds—make us what we are.

LILIAN'S STORY.

A little girl who wants a Children's Department in this paper has contributed the following as a starter. It is addressed to to "Mr. G. Macdolland and Mr. putnam, freethout, 504 coney, Sanfrankisca, city." We have corrected, in the story, such errors as might be looked for in a first effort.

NELLIE'S MONKEY.

BY A. LILIAN ANDREWS, AGED 10.

It was Nellie's birthday. The doorbell rang; a large box had come for Nelly. It had little holes in it. It was not to be opened till after supper, when N. was to have a party. They came. The parlor was full of children. A box was brought in and opened. A lovely doll, a plush workbox; a set of dishes; a set of kitchen dishes; a set of napkins and tablecloth. At last the big box that had come was brought in, and opened; and what do you think was in it? Well, it was an monkey. The children had fun playing with Jericho, as he was named. Jericho pulled candy and roasted marsh-mallows, and enjoyed it as much as the others. He now lives. He can drill like a soldier and ride a dog or pig. He has a soldier suit. Nelly is now ten. She was six when she got Jericho. Jericho had his picture taken. Nelly Crawford has a little baby brother two years old. Harry and Jericho are good friends; they play together all day.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

SINCE Prof. W. F. Jamieson went to ranching in Colorado he has acquired the title of the Farmer Preacher. After harvest he will be prepared to give Freethought sermons and to plow superstition under.

Our energetic friend Marwick, of Provo, Utah, reports that Dr. York's lectures there on the 7th and 9th drew crowded houses; and that the doctor will return in March and deliver two more lectures. The theater managers at Provo decline to rent their building for Freethought purposes, and the addresses were given in the district court-room.

W. P. BROOKS, M. D., of Helena, Neb., writes: "I wish to call the attention of Liberals to the fact that Mrs. M. A. Freeman is a zealous worker in the Liberal cause and is competent to cope with the advocates of orthodoxy at any and all times. In brilliancy of diction and force of argument she is a star of the first magnitude. After listening to her eloquence and logic for three successive nights in this place, I think I do not overstate the facts when I say that there are but few her equal. Wherever she may be called to expound our principles, I am frank to say I believe she will please and instruct, and she should be kept constantly in the lecture field.

FREETHOUGHT is the title of a new weekly liberal journal of twelve pages which has made its appearance among the Eye's exchanges. It is published at San Francisco by S. P. Putnam, president of the American Secular Union, and Geo. E. Macdonald, formerly connected with the Truth Seeker. All liberal minded people (and even those whose creeds have prevented intellectual progress) will find FREETHOUGHT an interesting and instructive addition to their assortment of reading matter. The subscription price is only $2 a year.—The Eye, Snohomish, W. T.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Farmer Preacher.To the Editors of Freethought:*

You have chosen the thorny path of journalism. I have been there. Accept condolence.

In Sunny San Luis Park, Colorado, among the Rocky mountain peaks, thirty to forty miles either side, I have my recreation, raising vegetables, and hell among my orthodox friends. I preach during the winter, commencing November 1. I will send you a couple of dollars soon. Were I not an Infidel itinerant could easily send them now.

Your paper is an honor to our Freethought cause. Its very name is the soul of wit. I wish we had one hundred free journals, and ten thousand lecturers.

I would like to visit the Liberals of Washington Territory, Oregon, and California next fall and winter and deliver about one hundred and fifty lectures. "May you live long and prosper."

W. F. JAMIESON.

Monte Vista, Col., Feb. 13, 1888.

A Stanch Old Worker.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I am happy to know the Pacific Coast has at last what it has long needed, a paper devoted to the cause of Secularism—that is to say, to liberty, equality, and justice.

I am fully convinced that the vast majority of Americans in the West are far more liberal in every sense than their brothers of the East; and I feel assured of your success in your glorious undertaking of starting a Freethought journal, to open the eyes of the blind, to cause those who live in fear of angry gods and jealous priests to arise, rejoice, and live, in mental and physical liberty.

Again, you have selected the freest city in the world for your publication, and with its present editors, there cannot be such a word as fail. As a matter of fact, all Freethinkers on the coast will send on their subscriptions at once, as they fully realize that the editors of FREETHOUGHT are real men, and cannot live on faith, as the gods and angels do.

I inclose you particulars of the great celebration of Thomas Paine's anniversary in Ogden. The janitor informed me that hundreds could not get in. So you see the seeds of eternal truth are beginning to sprout. Yours fraternally,

EDWARD F. MUNN.

Hooper, Utah, Feb. 2, 1888.

Good, Better, Best.

S. P. PUTNAM, My Dear Sir: It was with great pleasure I received yours of the 6th instant; better still, it bears the tidings of your locating with us to stay; and yet better, that you and Brother Mac are going to give us a good home Freethought paper every week; and best of all, you are going to do up this coast with a lecture tour the coming summer, and no doubt you will drive Brother Driver to the wall, if we can on I get him out. You ask if we want a lecture at New Era. Yes, we want many of them if we could get them, for we are a blessed people round about here, if we take Brother Driver's doctrine for it—Blessed are the poor. However, if you are coming this way during the summer campaign, and can make room in your programme for one, two, or three days here, I will see what can be done. I have in contemplation the organizing of some kind of Liberal Secular Society in the near future, that we may have some place to while away the Lord's day now and then, and try to make it of some use to humanity.

And now, here goes the wherewith for FREETHOUGHT one year, and may it grow and grow, and live to celebrate its centennial, is my sincere prayer at this time. With best wishes for success all round, I am, yours very truly,

W. W. JESSE.

New Era, Or., Jan. 22, 1888.

Quarantine the Immigrants with Cold Waves About Them.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I send eight names to-day for FREETHOUGHT. I have spoken with a number of friends concerning Mr. Putnam's visit to Los Angeles county next summer, and all expressed themselves pleased to again have an opportunity to see and hear him.

This is the twenty-eighth winter of my residence in Coos, and the coldest I have experienced here. The thermometer was down to six degrees above zero on the 13th instant. I am inclined to attribute the cause of this state of things to the unprecedented influx of people from the East. In days gone by, when it took six months by land and one month by way of Panama to reach here, it gave them plenty of time to get over their climate; now the transcontinental roads land them here inside of a week, and it is unreasonable to suppose that they get entirely over it in so short a time. Every one from the East with whom I have conversed had the climate bad; at least, this is my inference, as they talked of the climate principally. I hope you did not bring any with you; if it be traced to you, your influence is gone up.

This is a serious matter, and should be attended to at once. I would respectfully recommend a quarantine, but will leave it with our legislators to decide. J. HENRY SCHROEDER.

P. S.—Since writing the above, I learn from the press that the cold has extended all over the coast. I tremble with fear for the safety of FREETHOUGHT, in the event of an investigation. The cold snap commenced soon after your first issue, copies of which you mailed indiscrimi-nately all over the coast. The coincidence is unmistakable. If the cold facts of a Freethought journal have such an effect on climate, there is no wonder that orthodoxy has given it the cold shoulder heretofore. Why not make this a subject for discussion or for a scientific treatise—"The Influence of a Freethought Journal on Climate?" There may be facts developed hitherto unknown. I advise you to study the subject sufficiently to clear yourself, before you come to Coos, or we may save a few coal-oil lamps for your benefit.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MARCH 3, 1888

A CLERGYMAN may be defined as a man learned in all manner of things that are not true, and sworn not only to refuse all new truths but to consign to eternal torment those who do otherwise. By any method but this a clergyman would become an Infidel.

THE Post heads its account of the disaster at Mt. Vernon, Ill., "Cruel Cyclone." This is unjust. The cyclone is merely an instrument in the hands of a just God to wreak divine vengeance upon a sinful people. At least such is the theological view, which none but Infidels question. It is well to keep the more obvious distinctions in sight.

THE Rev. John Hannon, of the Centenary Methodist church, took for the text of his last Sunday's sermon the words "Get up and git," being a free translation of the marching orders received by Abram. Had the late revisers of the Bible retained the Rev. Mr. Hannon on the committee, their work would have met with a more popular acceptance.

It seems that not San Francisco but St. Louis is to have the National Democratic Convention. This is to be regretted less on this city's account than on account of the politicians. The hymnbook speaks of a land where everlasting spring abides, and never-withering flowers. We fear that some of the Democratic delegates have missed their last chance to behold that country.

MINISTERS will never learn what freedom of discussion signifies. In a recent paper read before the Nineteenth Century Club of New York Edgar Fawcett, the poet, said that the model of the future American poet was Robert G. Ingersoll, and the time was coming when poetry would be stripped of its gods and goddesses, its piety and impiety. This moved the Rev. Mr. Lloyd to say that when Mr. Fawcett advocated Atheism or Agnosticism as the models for the coming poet he transcended the liberty given him in that club. The fashionable audience appearing to indorse this view, the president, Mr. Courtlandt Palmer, arose and administered the following appropriate rebuke: "When Mr. Lloyd says that Mr. Fawcett transcended the liberty given him by this club I must call that sentiment to order. Mr. Fawcett has simply expressed his opinion that science and Agnosticism are to be the inspirations of the poetry of the future. Now, it seems to me quite legitimate that he should propound that proposition, and also it is quite legitimate that Mr. Lloyd should give his criticism. The one is as consistent as the other with the spirit of this club."

At the Congregational Club last week the Rev. Mr. Meserve demonstrated to the satisfaction of all present that Spiritualism is of satanic origin and therefore to be avoided. In replying to him before the Spiritualists' meeting at Metropolitan Hall on Sunday Mr. J. J. Morse denied the reverend gentleman's statement on the ground that there is no such personage as the devil. If Mr. Morse can make this proposition clear, the Rev. Mr. Meserve will be obliged, perforce, to acknowledge himself mistaken. His reply would probably be like that of the other clergyman caught in the same fix—that while he may have made an error in the fact, it would make no difference with the argument.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

Science is freedom. It leaves every man liberty to think for himself. No school of science has ever yet established a privileged order, or commanded men to believe and obey on pain of death and hell. Science has no devil, and no demon but demonstration. It knows no virtue but that which does good.

If it accepts a future life, a heaven, it is for the great, the good, the practically useful. The man who invented the steam engine, saved the state for liberty, or led the human mind to higher grades of thought and action, will enjoy it. Science has never laid the finger of oppression on mankind, never persecuted those who do not receive it. It has no curse, no anathema but this, "If you do not understand and believe, you cannot enjoy the benefits."

What our churchmen call religion is quite different. It comes from a different source. It runs in a different groove. It evolves to a different result; and it is always the direct antagonist of science.

Religion begins with an assertion of something that cannot be proven. It rests on the mere authority of those who assert. It may be of a theorist, a visionary, a crank, or an impostor. The originator may be a good man, as Christ; he may be a visionary, as Swedenborg; or on impostor, as Mohammed or Joseph Smith. It matters not which, for by a natural evolution they all reach the same end.

The scientist proves and waits patiently for mankind to learn and believe. The religionist asserts, is angry at contradiction and unbelief, and denounces them as crimes. Those who believe him become his useful followers, and more or less slaves. They are called the faithful, the virtuous, the good; and by contrast those who do not are denounced as the unfaithful and the wicked.

Science has no hereditary scientists; it does not descend from father to son. Religion, like monarchy, does. Confucius left a priesthood. So did Moses, Christ, Mohammed, and Joseph Smith. The priests are either hereditary, or self-chosen, making a perpetual succession. Moses made his brother Aaron head of the line. Christ had no children; but the Roman clergy pretend to apostolic succession, and continually fill their own ranks. These men all claim alike power from God to teach mankind; a right to be believed and obeyed; and also to be supported.

This condition once acknowledged by a large number of people, the priests proceed, like the kings, to consolidate and magnify their power. They decree, from time to time, additions to the creed, the ceremonies, and the fees. They widen the breach between the priest and the people, till the head priest becomes an autocrat and the poor believer a slave. In this process there has been no difference between one church and another. The evolution is the same. To have any religion is to have a pastor and master.

The church, once in power, does not tolerate unbelievers. It persecutes, kills, and consigns to hell-fire, and therefore when the majority of the people belong to the faith, all the rest must do likewise or suffer consequences. The church is very angry with unbelievers. It says God is angry with them. They may not live here, or go to heaven when they die. So all the people become of one faith, because they must. There is no choice. It is believe, or get away, or die.

That all religions should fall into the same groove is a natural evolution from the first assumption, "God has sent me to teach." Whoever says these words naturally gravitates to all the rest. If God sent him, he must command, and others must obey. He must know all the purposes of God. What he does not know he must invent. This necessitates a plan of salvation. It must save all who believe and obey—and pay; and it must condemn all who refuse to do so.

Plans of salvation are a little varied, of course, but all of them begin with faith and end in payment and obedience; and when a church gets control of any country it wants to stand still forever. There must be no change. "As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be."

Science, and scientific men have ever been at war with this kind of religion. Science demands an advance into new fields of knowledge, freedom of thought, no obedience and no taxes to support these pretensions.

A FAIR PAPER

The Fresno Expositor has honored itself by the fair way it has reported the recent lectures of the president of the American Secular Union at that place. Of the first lecture it says:

Samuel P. Putnam, introduced by J. F. Waterhouse, lectured last night at the Opera House on the subject, "Universal Mental Liberty," to an audience not large but certainly appreciative and thoroughly demonstrative at times. The speaker had a good presence, a voice of liberal compass and well trained, is graceful in all his gestures, and, what is sometimes rare, he spoke English without making an indecent attack upon it. Mr. Putnam is the editor of FREETHOUGHT, a paper published in San Francisco, and, as the name would indicate, devoted to so-called Liberalism. He is the successor of Robert G. Ingersoll as president of the American Secular Union.

The foregoing is from the issue of Tuesday, Feb. 21. Wednesday an equally good notice of the second lecture appeared. We copy the following from the same paper of Thursday:

The attendance last night at Samuel P. Putnam's third and last lecture was larger than at the two previous lectures, and the interest appeared to increase as the audience had grown numerically. The speaker denied that the Bible was the work of revelation, but added that there was nothing beautiful or moral in that book that Liberals did not as thoroughly adopt as do the orthodox Christians. The supernatural idea of the Bible was rejected by people of the speaker's belief. The lecture was principally devoted to an elaboration of the Nine Demands of the Liberals, the substance of which has already been given in the Expositor. He spoke at considerable length, advancing practical ideas on the advantages of a secular system of education over the modern sectarian method. Particular stress was laid on the necessity of sound physical training, and had Froebel been present he would probably have bowed his thanks for the compliments the speaker paid the kindergarten system of instruction. The educational plank in the Liberal platform is one of the strongest in the structure.

At the conclusion of the lecture, according to the announcement made by the chairman at the opening of the meeting, a pledge indorsing the Nine Demands was opened for signatures, and the following were obtained: B. F. Smyth, D. W. Washburn, Benton A. Washburn, J. W. North, Am. L. North, M. B. Washburn, Hattie E. Washburn, D. W. Foster, T. M. Stone, J. G. Shoemaker, W. T. Riggs, Chas. Chamis, Joseph Lee, R. N. Caughill, Wm. A. Fisher, C. F. Busks, J. F. Waterhouse, Geo. Lee, W. C. Downey, G. W. Campbell, Anthony Wagner, and G. Bowditch.

A temporary organization was effected by the election of J. F. Waterhouse as chairman and C. A. Burks as secretary. A committee of five on permanent organization was formed, consisting of the two persons above named, J. W. North, J. F. Lee, and George Church, who are to report at an early day. The intention is to form a branch in Fresno of the American Secular Union, procure a place for holding meetings, have speaking, musical and dramatic entertainments, in short, to form a complete organization for the advancement of the principles of Freethought.

When the press treats Liberal lectures with simple fairness at is a herald of better days.

JOSEPH HAIGH, of Chebanse, Ill., has published in metrical form his version of the creation story. In a dozen stanzas of eight lines each he tells how the earth was made and cursed and drowned and redeemed, all these processes appearing to have been failures, and the creator retired in disgust. We give Mr. Haigh's closing stanza, containing the moral of the composition, to which we say Amen:

Poor, god-forsaken human race,
Left to their own resources,
Have turned their thoughts to worldly things,
And found out nature's forces.
They learned the laws of life and health—
A boon to every one;
And earth is now a better world,
Since gods and ghosts are gone.

THE Rev. Mr. Carver, of Benicia, in a paper read before the Methodist Ministers' Association, the other day, made the startling statement that there were in San Francisco three thousand saloons and a still greater number of grocery stores, with only one hundred churches to counteract the devastating effect of these institutions. As a consequence of this state of things our population is largely given over to the Catholic church and Judaism, and the Rev. Mr. Carver urged that the Methodists should bestir themselves to bring the heathen papists and pagan Jews into the fold of Christ. Here is a chance for Brother Boanerges McCormick, of the Catholic Monitor, to further express his opinion of the Protestant ministry. Of course it will be a charitable opinion, for verily these Christians love one another.

THOSE who receive one or more sample copies of this paper are requested to distribute them judiciously.

FATHER NUGENT, Roman Catholic prison chaplain in Liverpool, Eng., states that during the year 1875, 13,683 persons passed through the borough jail. Of these 9,397 were Roman Catholics, and 4,286 were Protestants. The number of Infidels is not given, but it may be shown by the following operation:

Total number of prisoners.....	13,638
Roman Catholics.....	9,397
Protestants.....	4,286
Total number of both Catholics and Protestants....	13,683
Balance, presumably composed of Infidels.....	00,000

The Parliamentary returns for Scotland in 1872, are equally instructive. They are as follows:

Total number of prisoners.....	34,182
Protestants.....	23,434
Roman Catholics.....	10,748
Total of both Protestants and Catholics.....	34,182
Balance of Infidels.....	00,000

Take Ireland, also. The figures are from the Dublin Christian Advocate:

Total number of arrests in 1884-5.....	37,049
Roman Catholics.....	31,110
Protestants.....	5,939
Total of both Catholics and Protestants.....	37,049
Infidel contingent.....	00,000

If we look at the criminal statistics of Ontario, Canada, for 1881, as given by the same authority, we find:

Total number of arrests.....	6,940
Roman Catholics.....	3,844
Protestants.....	3,096
Total of believers.....	6,940
Unbelieving remainder.....	0,000

Let us consider Toronto alone in the same light:

Total number of commitments from 1873 to 1886.....	8,118
Protestants.....	5,316
Roman Catholics.....	2,802
Total of both.....	8,118
Total of neither.....	0,000

If we were to draw inferences from all these statistics, religious people would deny our conclusions. We will therefore submit them without comment and let our pious friends wrestle with the figures.

MR. W. S. ROGERS, of Boulder Creek, has the right sort of enthusiasm. Hearing that a Freethought paper was to be published on this coast, he subscribed at a venture, and upon receiving the first number renewed his subscription and takes two copies for a year. Mr. Frank Schuneman, of Pasco, subscribed at sight and donates $5 to the cause. A staunch friend at Cambrian Mills, Round Valley, signing himself "Old Dusty," incloses a $5 bill "to help FREETHOUGHT;" all of which, and favors from other friends too numerous to name, are acknowledged with feelings of deep gratitude.

THE projected monument to Michael Servetus, the martyr, mentioned in last week's FREETHOUGHT, should claim universal attention among Freethinkers and Liberal religionists. The cost of the monument is placed at the moderate sum of $1,000, and subscriptions of $1 and upward are solicited. Judge J. W. North, of Oleander, Fresno Co., Cal., as a member of the committee, will receive contributions to this noble object.

WE have received several orders for books which we have heretofore been unable to fill, on account of delay caused by the railroad blockade. Our stock of books has now arrived, and we would be pleased to have friends repeat their orders, so that there may be no error in filling them.

THE meanness of men who will tell deliberate lies to the injury of others is equaled only by that of the dastards who knowingly print and circulate them. One liar would be comparatively harmless without other liars to repeat his words.

NEWS AND NOTES.

FRESNO, Feb. 20.—Mrs. Austin's packing-house was filled on Sunday evening. The audience made themselves comfortable on board seats, and listened for an hour to a discourse on Freethought. Some of those present were earnest Christians, and did not altogether like some of my radical assertions. When I declared that Christians did not want to go to heaven, one young man impulsively arose and said he wanted to go at once. I told him that if he was sick he would probably send immediately for a doctor. He realized the point, and preserved a discreet silence thereafter. Of course, when one must die he is willing to take up with heaven as a last resort; but so long as life is possible here, it is the life that all desire, no matter what their theology may be.

Mrs. Austin is a member of the Congregational church, but is Liberal and generous in spirit, as is indicated by the use of her building, well prepared and lighted, for a Freethought lecture. I found it a very pleasant place in which to lecture. It is so arranged that dramatic and other entertainments sometimes take place in it. The church close by is only open for a sermon; and the schoolhouse, under the management of the trustees, is open only in the daytime. It cannot be used evenings. So the packing-house is the resort where one can give the fruits of philosophy and science. Our thanks are due to Mrs. Austin for her kindness; and though perhaps she still calls herself a Christian, it is after the manner of the Golden Rule, amid whose genial atmosphere Christians and Infidels can shake hands for humanity's sake.

Some object to the use of the word Infidel. It does not express our whole work, but as applied to the Freethinker it means that he is unfaithful to the popular theology; and accepting it in that sense without fear, let us show that to be Infidel is to be fellow workers with the reformers of all time, who never could have made this world better except by a thorough disbelief of prevailing ideas. We must deny in order to know and accept the best.

We have had four meetings since I have been here, under the arrangement of Judge North. Although he is seventy-three years old, he has been with me to every one, and put his shoulder to the wheel whenever necessary. Last evening he made the closing address, which was exceedingly appropriate, relating somewhat his experiences, and advocating, not unity of opinion, but sympathy and goodwill in the holding of diverse opinions. While the Freethinker recognizes the honesty of the Christian, the latter must also recognize the honesty of the former; and if honest, no just God would punish him for his belief—for belief is not the act of will, but the result of evidence, and cannot be different unless the evidence is different.

Judge North is one of those stalwart Liberals whose life is in reform. It is his joy to do something in the frontier ranks; otherwise he might have occupied any eminent position in the political world, for he is a man of remarkable talent and energy, and has the power to make himself felt in any community. He was born into the Methodist church; his father was a local preacher of that denomination, and it was expected that his son would follow in his footsteps and preach the gospel. But he chose another gospel—the gospel of freedom for the slave. He plunged into the earlier anti-slavery conflict with all the enthusiasm of his nature. He saw the great wrong; and the refusal of the churches to resist this wrong first opened his eyes to the unsoundness of Christian belief, and carried him into the broad fields of Freethought.

Still the process was slow, and it was not until he was fifty years of age that he read Thomas Paine and became thoroughly radical. For years he was in the lecture field, in conjunction with the great leaders of the anti-slavery movement in Connecticut and New York. He came to the Northwest and settled in Minnesota. He was a member of the constitutional convention of that state, and besides other speeches made an especially brilliant plea for the omission of the word "white" in the qualifications of voters. It may seem strange, but only six Republicans dared to stand by Mr. North and vote to strike out the word "white." Mr. North showed that the word "white" was not in a single constitution of the original thirteen states, and yet the Republicans of Minnesota did not dare to omit that word. Is there not such a thing as evolution backward?

Judge North was in the memorable convention that nominated Abraham Lincoln. After the election he came to the frontiers, to the then territory of Nevada. He was here appointed judge, and his record is interesting and honorable amid the tumultuous life of the West. He had the courage of his opinions. A lawyer found fault with one of his decisions, because it was not according to precedent. Said Judge North, "This court has as much right to set a precedent as any that existed two hundred years ago." A little law of that kind would indeed be a refreshing experience.

I know that all Liberals will be interested in the career of one who has for over fifty years been a reformer in politics and religion, and who is still one of our most energetic toilers. It is a pleasure to be with such a man, because from a living past he goes on to a nobler future.

His wife has always been an ardent companion of his labors and successes. He has six children, and they all dwell in the atmosphere of Freethought.

So I have found a pleasant sojourn in Oleander, in the midst of a beautiful country, with lovely days and gorgeous nights, and the wheels of progress seem to roll brightly on.

Judge North has excellent co-workers here: Mr. Galloway, the postmaster at Oleander; Mr. Dickinson, of Washington colony; Mr. Bowditch, of Central colony. With the generous support of these the Liberal lectures have in every respect been a success; good attendance, appreciation, and cordial aid.

S. C. Bryan, Mrs. A. Wilson, Mr. Potter, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. White and son, Mr. Eckhard, Mr. McAlman, Mr. Wolfe, and others are among our ranks in Oleander and the neighboring colonies.

Judge North is known throughout the country for his unflinching defense of Freethought. In reply to some attacks and criticisms made by a clergyman, he published a series of articles in the Fresno Republican entitled, "The Rights of Freethinkers." They are exceedingly valuable, clear and strong in the statement of facts and arguments. We hope some day to issue them as campaign documents. They are just what is needed for the dissemination of the Nine Demands.

While with Judge North a letter was received from Henry C. Blount, informing of the steps taken to erect in Geneva, where Mr. Blount now is, a monument to Servetus on the spot where he was burned. This is a glorious undertaking, and the warm heart of the Pacific Coast will no doubt respond to this call for building a landmark of progress that shall convey a great lesson.

Mr. Blount is still a member in good and regular standing of the Presbyterian church, and was once an elder. Is it not one of the curious revenges of time that out of the bosom of the Presbyterian church shall come the spirit of the purpose to honor the martyr whom John Calvin burned at the stake?

Henry C. Blount is proprietor of large agricultural machine works at Evansville, Indiana. He conducts these on a truly wise and generous principle. He says to his workmen, "I will give you good wages and a percentage of the profits." The result is that his factories are never idle, and he could leave them for years to the care of his workmen and they would go on like clock-work, so harmonious is the interest of the employer and employee, a noble illustration that capital and labor can be friends.

Fresno is a bright and lively place. People are so busy that they can attend to but little else than the sale of real estate. The country about Fresno is well cultivated and fruitful. There is reason for the splendid business activity of the place. It numbers about ten thousand inhabitants. The climate is mild, the scenery pleasant. The valley is about sixty miles wide at this point, and along the horizon can be seen the snowy crests of the Sierras. Thitherward the inhabitants flee during the hot summer months, and find coolness and delight amid the palaces of the mountains.

Large quantities of wheat are produced in this section, but the main sources of wealth are the raisin, fig, and wine, which are exported to all parts of the United States. The evidences of prosperity are seen on every hand. The houses are elegant, the gardens are kept almost as neat as a parlor, and flourish with tropical luxuriance, and the wide fields stretch away, drinking in the fervor of the gorgeous sunlight. This is a land of sunlight indeed. It is a joy to revel in its glorious rays.

There is a large Liberal element in Fresno. We gave three lectures in the Opera House, and were greeted by intelligent audiences. At the close of the meeting a Secular Union was organized for Fresno county, and the prospects are most favorable for its future work. There is plenty of home talent to represent the cause and extend Freethought. We look for a flourishing Freethought society. J. F. Waterhouse was chairman of the meetings and is elected president of the temporary organization. He is alive with energy and is one of the chief business men of the place. Chas. Burks is secretary; Judge North, Joseph Lee, and Geo. E. Church, executive committee. With these and many others whose names are enrolled, there is a noble promise of success.

We have enjoyed, while here, the hospitality of W. T. Riggs, one of the prominent merchants of the place, who is not afraid of his colors. His wife although, I believe, still a member of the Episcopalian church, is equally genial with the spirit of Liberality, and show how wide is the drift of intelligence and culture from the moorings of the creeds. I had the pleasure of meeting with two eastern visitors at the home of Mr. Riggs who are still in outward conformity with Christianity, but absolutely devoid of sympathy with its essential ideas. Thus we perceive the unconscious evolution of mind, of thought, of reading, of education, without a violent breaking off from the institutions of the past, which must have a vast and beneficent effect upon the more manifest and revolutionary powers of progress. For when the issue comes and the questions of justice and liberty must be fairly met, we shall find many now in the bosom of the church who will not sustain the dogmatic authority of the priest. Not less imperative, however, is the duty of earnest effort and destructive forces, for error is mighty still and bears the earthquake.

Also, we enjoyed the pleasant hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Sheppard, and Mr. and Mrs. Waterhouse, and many other friends we have met here, and the days have passed happily by, and new hope and courage is given by the pilgrimage in this lively spot, where even the deacons of the church pitch into real estate transactions with the fervor of an angel playing on a harp, and don't express the slightest desire to migrate to the New Jerusalem. It looks as if Fresno had come to stay. Railroads are approaching it from various directions, and it promises to be quite a shipping point.

I was pleased to meet with Joseph Lee and his son and daughter. He is a "Forty-niner" and a veteran of Liberalism and always ready to do his share, no matter what may be the ups and downs of fortune. Like every old Californian he has seen almost every side of life, and knows just about what human nature is, and accepts its real value.

Geo. E. Church was some years ago a fellow worker—when I was a Unitarian minister in Nebraska. He is a man of brilliant talent. While professor in the Nebraska State University he was open in his advocacy of Liberalism and the sectarian people dreaded his influence, and finally, after persistent labor and by a treacherous trick, deprived him of his professorship, so that virtually the University came under church control. This demonstrates the ever-busy machinations of the ecclesiastics—always on the alert to grasp every power possible, by just or unjust means.

Our friend Wm. A. Fisher, who has put two or three additions to the town, and who crossed the plains in early times, is a staunch Freethinker who does not allow wealth to blind him to the value of human progress. Among others whom I have had the pleasure of greeting are W. B. Washburn, D. W. Washburn, Hattie E. Washburn, Bertha A. Washburn, formerly of New York and the Liberal Club, and I guess they know the "man of the badge pin;" D. W. Foster, J. G. Shoemaker, G. W. Campbell, N. W. Moody, W. D. Crichton, and Mr. Curiton.

This is pioneer ground. No Freethought lectures have ever been given here before, but a marked influence has been produced. Our labors have been full of promise; we have been among generous workers, and we go forward to new fields with "our banners in the air."

To Robert G. Ingersoll.

When thou wert born, the wanton winds sang low,
And Nature smiled upon her newest toy;
She gave to thee the frankness of a boy;
A great warm heart, a soul and brain aglow
With all the nobler passions that do blow
Great thoughts around the world; and then in joy,
She gave thee Mirth, and said: "Thou shalt destroy
The weeds that in my children's gardens grow."

And what a faithful gardener thou art here,
The roses growing in our gardens tell;
We look for weeds, but look for them in vain,
The rose of Hope grows in the place of Fear—
The rose of Reason in the place of Hell—
In the wondrous gardens of the human brain!

LITERARY NOTES.

E. A. STEVENS, of Chicago, has published his Paine oration in pamphlet form at 5 cents per copy. Mr. Stevens's address is 750 W. Lake street, Chicago, Ill.

DR. JULIET H. SEVERANCE'S Paine address before the Chicago Secular Union now appears in the form of a handsome pamphlet published by the Alarm Company, Chicago.

IN a former issue of FREETHOUGHT we reproduced the preface written by Colonel Ingersoll to a story entitled "For Her Daily Bread." The book is now on our shelves. It is handsomely printed and beautifully covered. Price, paper, 25 cents.

COLONEL INGERSOLL'S publisher announces that the Ingersoll-Field discussion, which appeared in the North American Review, has been gathered into book form to be issued immediately. Orders will be readily filled at this office. The discussion makes a dollar book in cloth; in pamphlet, 50 cents.

"THE American House of Lords," by R. Guy McClellan, is an ably written argument for the abolition of the United States Senate. Mr. McClellan, who is a well-known lawyer in this city, holds that the Senate is not contemplated by the Constitution, is irresponsible and dangerous to American liberty.

A PHOTOGRAPHER in the building from which FREETHOUGHT is issued recently wheeled his camera into our office and took the junior editor in the act of writing thinklets. He has finished several dozen pictures of cabinet size, and the same are offered to a patient public at 25 cents each. Address this office.

ALTHOUGH 85 years old, Prof. H. M. Cottinger, of San Jose, has not ceased his labors in behalf of education. He sends us a copy of his last book, "Rosa, the Educating Mother." It is a work to be read by women who have children to bring up, and to these, no doubt, it will prove very useful. The price is $1.00.

LET it be remembered that quite a stock of Liberal books are kept on sale at this office. This is the season when everybody should buy the "Truth Seeker Annual for 1888," price 25 cents, and Ingersoll's argument in the famous blasphemy case, price 25 cents. We have a large supply of both of these works. The Annual is unusually good this year.

THE Sinaloa Colony Club meets Sunday, March 4, at 2 p. m. at 39 Fourth St. All friends are invited.

NOW FOR PROHIBITION!

To the Editors of Freethought:

I agree with your indorsement of Horace Seaver's statement, made many years ago, and quoted by you in your issue of last week, that "an Infidel journal consistently carries out the principles of Freethought when it allows the use of its columns for the discussion of any subject which interests any considerable number of human beings;" and I ask space for a few thoughts on a question that interests more than a considerable number of human beings, and the proper solution of which will, in my judgment, bring peace, joy, and comfort to thousands of agonized hearts and tempted victims, and light the path to success for all true reforms. I mean the temperance question.

I am a total abstainer from the beverage Christ made (?) from pure, cold, bright and sparkling water. In fact, it was this first miracle of his that first caused me to question his divinity. If Christ was God, then he knew the nature of alcohol; he knew that it finds no place in the constitutional wants of man; that it comes out of the human system just as it goes in; that its tendency is evil and nothing but evil. If Christ was God, he never would have turned pure, wholesome water into that which destroys his children's reason, unfits them for the duties of life, and robs them of their happiness and their homes.

To say that the wine Christ made (?) was not intoxicating does not mend the matter, for if he was God, he knew that his making wine, without saying the kind of wine it was, would lead people to believe that it was the kind in ordinary use, which was intoxicating, and that this miracle (?) would be used as it has been by millions of his children as an excuse to drink intoxicating wine. Had Christ been God, he would have foreseen the struggle that is taking place over this question, and would have known the influence his words would have; hence he would have condemned, in positive terms, the use of intoxicating wine; but he did not, which proves to me that he was human, that he never turned water into wine or grape juice, and knew but little, if anything, about the nature of alcohol.

The Temperance cause is a grand one, but it can not succeed, nor should it succeed, as at present managed, because it is in the hands of those who base their claims upon supernatural authority, the Bible, and, along with Prohibition, demand that this Bible be accepted by us as the basis of all our civil laws. This is treason to the Constitution of Washington and Jefferson; it is treason to the enlightened judgment of the world.

I am a Prohibitionist not because the Bible teaches it, for I do not think it does, but because experience has demonstrated the necessity of it, and because the bravest, the profoundest, document ever put forth by brains and patriotism clearly and unequivocally teaches the principles of prohibition—I mean the Constitution of the United States.

Our Infidel fathers, in founding this government, placed beyond the control of Congress or legislature certain reserved rights, among which is the right of every man to be secure in his person, his home, his family, his life, and his health. He has a right to be secure in all these things, to demand of government to make him so, and, in the absence or neglect of government, to secure himself, to guard his family, to abate nuisances, and to remove from his immediate presence all that threatens death to himself, to his family, or to his property.

In pursuance of these reserved rights, laws have been made from time to time to prevent or remove dangers of the above nature, pest houses, nuisances, immoral practices, inflammable buildings, and even unusual noises are restrained and removed by law; and the quarantine now being enforced in this city is of this nature. Druggists are not permitted to sell poisons except under careful conditions. Gunpowder, dynamite, and kindred materials are not to be stored too near your dwelling. All these things government has promised to guard you from; and more, it has reserved to you the right to guard yourself whenever the government either cannot or will not do it for you. It is self-defense in its purest and most honorable form.

Now, if you have a family in San Francisco or in any other city or town, every saloon is a nuisance, menace, and danger. They are more dangerous and destructive than pestilence-breeding plague-spots, because these are all passive dangers. They do not coax and allure and invite. On the contrary they are repulsive. But not so with the saloon. This deadly trap is baited to catch the innocent and unwary—lights, music, pictures, even the sweet voices, fair faces, and forms of women are enlisted to invite, and all manner of arts are employed. The saloon goes after its victims; it hides the sting in wreaths of pleasure till the moment comes to strike and kill. Wolves and hyenas are not more destructive to human life and happiness. The smallpox itself is a mild form of disease compared with the pestilence engendered by the saloon. The saloon lives on the bodies of famished children and slaughtered wives. No man can show that one jot of strength or manhood, mind or morals, comes from the saloon. The earth reeks with the bodies of its poor victims, slain in murder and accident; it is a great element in the corruption of our elections; it starts most of our destructive fires; it menaces not only those who patronize it but every family in our land; it is an enemy of Freethought, because it makes war on sound minds; it starves little children; it makes brutal, base, insidious, and perpetual war on the virtue of young girls; it prepares the victims of the gambler, the robber, the cheat, and the sneak-thief; it is the resort of the cowardly villains who have no courage without alcohol to commit their crimes.

Our Infidel fathers organized this government for protection against recklessness, carelessness, and utter indifference of the rights, the interests, and the happiness of others; they never meant to tolerate and encourage any business the very nature of which is to develop all that is base, degrading, and dangerous in man, and destructive of good government, good order, and common decency. We have a right to protection from the consequences of drunkenness in others; we want to be rid of the taxes that come from the crimes of drunkards; we want our property secure from drunken fires; we want our persons secure from the thousand accidents that have their origin in drink; we want our wives, children, and mothers freed from the brutal lust of drunkards, and secured from being lured to sin by the many avenues opened by the saloon. We have a right to these things. We have a right to say that no man shall be permitted by law to roam our streets and come about our homes frenzied with the poison of the still.

GEO. T. BRUCE.

MRS. FREEMAN'S LECTURES.

The first lecture on my route was delivered February 2, at Salem, Iowa. This is an old Quaker settlement, and made a record for itself on the side of liberty in the stirring times when the slaves of Missouri were hurried away toward Canada on its underground railroad. However glorious its work for human freedom, so far it has been content to remain in mental slavery. Francis Sheldon and his intelligent wife are a noble exception. In the midst of bigotry this Liberal family think for themselves. Twenty-five years ago they came out from the Society of Friends, and ever since have worked for the mental liberation of the race.

"There is one thing," said the mother of this family, "that I still admire about the Quakers, and that is their integrity; but to-day," she added, "it must be admitted that they have wandered far away from their early principles."

The eight children—three noble boys and five bright girls—comprising this family are Freethinkers. They are all large and strong, were never sick a day in their lives.

The lecture was well attended, the hall nearly filled. Mr. Sheldon made a few remarks, and Mrs. Sheldon introduced the lecturer. The audience listened attentively, laughing now and then a little. Three or four left, but they did well, and seemed anxious that I should remain another night. It was the first Freethought lecture ever given in Salem. Mr. Sheldon told me of a promise Mr. Putnam had made that on his way East he would speak for them. Mr. Putnam, it seems to me, is the kind of clergyman they need at this time.

Mrs. Sheldon told me of having driven a good many miles to hear Mr. Putnam speak at Fort Madison, and said she, "Although we had to change our sleigh for a wagon, on the road, and the rain poured down in torrents, yet we felt amply rewarded."

Thomas Rook is a good earnest Liberal, living three miles out of town. He brought his young family with him, two boys and a girl. These listened intently to the speaker's every word, their bright eyes and intelligent faces full of appreciation.

At Ottumwa, Iowa, I was met at the depot by that veteran in the Liberal cause, William Lindsay. He had secured a pleasant home for me with the McCarrolls, known to all the Liberal lecturers and progressive people of the country. Mrs. McCarroll is the daughter of Jacob Millisack, now eighty-seven years old, an anti-slavery pioneer, having entertained all the old abolitionist speakers, William Lloyd Garrison, Abby Kelly Foster, Wendell Phillips, Frederick Douglas, and so on. I had the distinguished honor of writing my autograph in the old album containing many of these immortal names.

Here at the McCarrolls' I met Mr. Fred Stillman, the son of Dr. Juliet H. Severance, of Milwaukee. Mr. Stillman's company were playing an engagement at the Opera House. I also met Mr. and Mrs. Phillips and Mr. and Mrs. Adler, Mrs. Adler being sister-in-law to that enthusiastic young worker, Katie Kehm.

N. M. Ives, editor of the Industrial Appeal, was present at the lectures and manifested an intelligent approval by saying, when I asked for criticism, that my audience were all of the same opinion. Other earnest Liberals here are B. Y. Bolton, P. F. Kearns, Miss Ellen Armstrong, with whom I passed a pleasant evening, and Mr. Scott, a lawyer. The McCarrolls' daughters are Liberal and musicians. During Mr. Peck and Mrs. Lake's sojourn in Ottumwa they had a fine choir for the meetings. Mr. Kelly, the husband of Laura McCarroll, is also an intelligent Liberal, connected with a bank, and champion rower of I don't know how much territory.

The McCarrolls' is a nice place to stay, as has been testified to again and again by many a fortunate wanderer. One doesn't readily forget the ladylike wife, or the pleasant, genial husband of this happy household.

At Cromwell I was met by Jacob Geier. Here I felt at home at once: lots of cream, and nice fresh butter and chickens, and the brightest, smartest children, and a husband and wife who were perfectly agreed in regard to theology.

Mr. F. I. Green came over from Nevinville, a distance of twelve miles, to attend my lectures. Mr. Green is an earnest, intelligent Liberal, taking all the Freethought papers in the country. His mother is also a Liberal and came over here to hear Mr. Putnam. I find that all along the line our president has left many warm friends, having had the happy faculty of pleasing all and offending none.

At my lecture here I met Jessie Wright and family, themselves and children all Liberal—Dr. A. S. Baily, D. B. Blosser, and F. C. Bates. Master George Geier is also an intelligent young man and takes an active part in debates held in the schoolhouse, where the question under discussion often assumes a liberal phase.

At Helena, Nebraska, I stopped with Dr. Brooks and family. Mr. Brooks remembered meeting with the editor of FREETHOUGHT a year ago in Linesville, Pa. The doctor has taken the Truth Seeker for years. He takes, I believe, about thirty papers. He is well known as a speaker and writer, having done good service for the Labor party in the last year's campaign, and is expecting to continue his work through the contest of next fall. He has a little pamphlet in press on the finance question, and disagrees altogether with the position taken by Van Buren Denslow in his recent articles in the Truth Seeker.

I had a very pleasant time here with this Liberal family. I gave three lectures in the schoolhouses; two, three miles and a half from the doctor's, and one, seven miles distant. The audience were attentive, and quiet. These were the first Liberal lectures to which they had ever listened. I bade good-bye to these kind friends regretfully—the doctor and his wife, the son and daughters, all Liberals—and like the wandering Jew, passed on.

At Seward I found H. L. Boyes in waiting with the carriage. If I had been a dear relative I couldn't have been received more kindly than I was by this family. I made myself very much at home at once. Mrs. Boyes is an intelligent lady, full of quaintness and originality, never having read much, she says, but always thinking. If I could have taken down all the bright things she said I could have written a book that would sell. Mr. Boyes is a constant, consistent, and persistent Liberal. Whoever else becomes conservative, he does not. Mr. Moffatt and he are indefatigable. Mrs. Moffatt is also an earnest worker. Among the evergreens shading their pleasant home I was shown the spot where Mr. Putnam, the then genial secretary had lounged in undignified position, prostrated by the hot summer sun. Mr. Moffatt and wife are thinking of going again to California for the winter, and perhaps before many months will brighten with their presence the office of FREETHOUGHT.

I gave two lectures in Seward. I spoke in the courthouse. The hall was pretty well filled the first night, but the second it was packed, some standing. Many orthodox were present; two clergymen, also—the Methodist minister, Elder Preston, and the Congregationalist minister, the Rev. Mr. Dalley. At the close of the second lecture the latter announced that on the next Sunday evening in the opera house he would reply to Mrs. Freeman's lectures.

H. H. Boyes, son of H. L. Boyes, is intending to be present. Mr. Boyes is thoroughly posted, being quite a professor in theological lore, including all ancient myths, and will endeavor to follow the learned gentleman. Among the many Liberals I met here were, B. Babson, junior, Judge Lowery, president of the Secular Union here, when it was working Daniel; McKillip, eighty years old, he told me, strong and well, and never sick a day in his life; his son Daniel McKillip, a popular lawyer; and his handsome wife; several teachers from the schools; William Bowes; Cornelius Clark, a writer and speaker; Schuyler Clark; Dr. Reynolds; Dr. Leinhardt, and many more. Among the strangers introducing themselves was a gentleman from Kansas, a reader of all the Liberal papers and a friend of all the Liberal lecturers.

I left Seward regretfully. Mrs. Boyes invited me to come and stay a few weeks next summer, when the thermometer goes up into the hundreds in Chicago, and I know that the proffered hospitality was sincere. All this family are Liberal. Harry and wife, Carlos, Thomas, and others that have drifted on out into the world. The dear old lady, at parting, said: "You have been as a drop of water or a ray of sunshine in my life, and I thank you for coming."

Mr. Boyes said: "I shall pass away before many years, and I want no superstitious mummery to be indulged in at my grave. Let me be laid aside quietly. And the next lecturer that comes here, if it isn't until six months later, let him say a few words then in regard to me as a man, as a citizen. I am willing to be judged by the people among whom I have lived. This is all I ask."

Here, in this home, I found FREETHOUGHT and many Liberal papers. "Of course FREETHOUGHT will succeed," was said to me again and again on my route, "conducted by Putnam, the poet, and that bright young fellow, George Macdonald, the man with the badge-pin." A peculiar tenderness seems to be entertained toward those two brothers, George and Eugene—"Bennett's boys," as I have heard them called—the mantle of "liberty" having fallen from the shoulders of the brave old Freethinker upon their own.

MRS. M. A. FREEMAN.

ROMANISM IN THE CHICAGO COURTS.

Another instance was added Saturday, if any additions were necessary, to prove the persistent, dangerous, and successful encroachments of the Romish church in the county of Cook and state of Illinois.

During the past week a bitter battle was waged in the court on the question of Church vs. State. County Attorney Bliss bravely blew a trumpet-blast of defiance and warning to the educational machinations of the papal power in our midst, while priestly vampires have secured another decision from a servile judge to sustain their raid on the public treasury and enable them to continue their brain-numbing schemes, so that obedient children of the church can be manufactured at public expense.

For years the maintenance of "dependent" girls has been the bugbear of the county board, the former commissioners refusing to pay bills aggregating $19,583 rendered by the Chicago Industrial School for girls, for the maintenance and tuition of females under 18 years, committed to its care by the county courts. This instance was the clearest case of sectarian education that ever came into our courts, but in which the church of Rome is, for the time being, triumphant through a truckling decision of a judge and the indifference of the people to this greatest of all educational questions—separation of church and state.

The pretense of the plaintiff was that, being duly incorporated by the general law of the state, the Industrial School provided homes and proper training for such girls as were committed to its charge so that they might become good and useful women, and that it admitted girls irrespective of "race, creed, or color;" that it was supported "by voluntary contributions and by means of such money as it may be entitled to under the law." How philanthropic and innocent, to be sure! Especially when we find that seven of its nine incorporators were nuns; that its meeting of incorporation was presided over by Archbishop Feehan, and that having no buildings this mythical Industrial School simply transferred its girls to the St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum and the House of the Good Shepherd, both avowed Roman Catholic institutions. The president of this Chicago Industrial School for girls, by some fortuitous circumstance, was also the mother superior of the House of the Good Shepherd, while the assistant superior, by the same strange coincidence, was the recording secretary of this industrial incorporation that never incorporated; that is, there is nothing to show that it ever did anything in a corporate capacity except draw money from the county; that it was simply a jesuitical trick to gain control of the education of these girls and make the county pay for it. The most scandalous part of this Romish scheme, it was shown, was a habit the mother superior had of collecting all the children she could, sending them down to the county court before a Catholic judge, have them pronounced "dependents," committed to her care as president of the Chicago Industrial School for girls, and by her placed in either St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum or the House of the Good Shepherd, and she, volente Deo, evaded the constitution of the state by drawing pay for their support.

The Chicago Industrial School, the St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum, and the House of the Good Shepherd were simply emblematic of the Holy Trinity, I presume. We feel inclined to reverently bow our heads as we listen to the sacramental benediction of those young frisky Chicago girls slowly intoning in their enforced solitude: Bella premunt hostilia.

County Attorney Bliss ably extracted the milk from the cocoanut by showing the absurdity of the claim that Mary Cleary, as president of the Industrial school, employed herself as mother superior of the House of the Good Shepherd to look after the girls. The incontrovertible facts which the county attorney proved may be summarized as follows: That this act of incorporation was a mere scheme to evade the constitution of the state, which provides that no county shall pay money to the support of any school controlled by any church; that the House of the Good Shepherd and the St. Joseph Orphanage are controlled by the Roman Catholic church; that the Industrial School was incorporated by nine persons, every one of whom was a Roman Catholic and seven of them nuns, who had taken solemn vows and obligations to teach and preach the dogma and doctrines of the Roman Catholic church to the exclusion of all other creeds; that these nuns were subject to the superior powers of their order and to the superior authorities of the Roman church; that the head of the Roman church in Chicago presided at the meeting of incorporation; that after the incorporation the Industrial School dropped out of sight and everything was done in the name of the order of the Good Shepherd; that the Industrial School for girls, ever since its incorporation in 1885, has existed only on paper; that it has no habitation, no place of abode, and has installed itself in the House of the Good Shepherd and the Orphanage, and that, in consequence, it came within the prohibitory clause of the statute; that from the manner in which this institution had evaded the law these girls had been incarcerated illegally, the county courts having no more jurisdiction to commit these girls to the House of the Good Shepherd and thus dump them upon the taxpayers of the county than it had to commit them to the county jail; that legally their commitments were nothing but waste paper.

Notwithstanding this array of evidence which Mr. Bliss proved beyond cavil, the court decided that the service having been performed the county was liable. Judge Tuthill's decision is a lengthy document, which strikes one as an ingenious political pettifogger's argument rather than that of an upright impartial jurist.

He holds that "the mere fact that members of a particular church predominate in or constitute the entire membership of a corporation does not fix a sectarian character upon it. No more does the fact that the teacher of a district school belongs to a particular church make her school sectarian. Neither where there are several teachers will the fact that all are members of the same church make that school 'sectarian.' There is surely nothing of sectarianism in the character of the work for which this school was organized. * * * * Having no house of its own and no means with which to build one, this corporation, as unquestionably, it seems to me, it might have done with any private person, hotel, or boarding-house, made a contract with two other corporations existing by virtue of the laws of this state, and having facilities to render the desired service, which the corporation undertook, and have, in fact, temporarily housed, fed, and clothed the children committed to its care. But the plaintiff itself, and no others, has, through its officers and teachers, constantly had actual legal charge of, taught, managed and controlled them. * * * He saw nothing in the fact that the religious services of a particular church were observed there."

In conclusion the decision holds that while the House of the Good Shepherd and St. Joseph's Orphan Asylum are connected with and exist under the sanction of the Roman Catholic church, their work is in no way sectarian and the county must pay.

"O wise young judge!" Truly, Dick Tuthill, thou art much older in tricks than thy looks!

RESOLUTIONS OF THE CHICAGO SECULAR UNION.

In introducing the resolutions on the subject Sunday night, Dr. E. S. McLeod created no little merriment by his facetious allusions to the judicial dicker between the two "Dicks"—"Dick" Tuthill, who renders a decision to support "Dick" Prendergast, who performs the commitment part of the program; but the end is not yet, as the case will be taken before the state supreme court. After some discussion by Gen. M. M. Trumbull, George Collins, and Dr. Henry, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we commend the wise and patriotic action of County Attorney Bliss in the Industrial School suit, and trust that the higher courts will maintain the letter and spirit of our constitution and the secular traditions of our government.

Resolved, That judges are placed in office to define and protect legal rights, not to perpetrate a wrong or shield a wrong-doer, and we condemn the action of Judge Tuthill in the Industrial School suit as a direct violation of the plain constitutional provision, and denounce his misinterpretation of law which diverts public money from legitimate governmental uses to the support of a religious sect.

Resolved, That the sentiments expressed in the foregoing resolutions are emphasized and intensified by the recollection of the manipulation of a disgraceful New York political ring in favor of a more disgraceful ecclesiastical machine, and it is pertinent to bear in mind that the beneficiary in New York and the proposed beneficiary in Chicago belong to the same church.

Resolved, That we believe that an ecclesiastical organization or corporation has an equal right with any other organization or corporation to acquire property and an equal right to governmental protection of its property; and we further declare that an ecclesiastical organization or corporation has an equal right and duty with every other organization or corporation or individual possessor to pay its just share by taxation for the protection which the state at present bestows as a charity.

The lecture of last Sunday by C. S. Darrow was on "Refined Barbarism" and dealt with the system of competition in a profound and philosophical manner, and was highly appreciated. Mr. Darrow has had considerable experience on the platform as well as high honor in his legal profession. Mr. and Mrs. Pierson, of the Apollo Club, furnished the vocal and instrumental music for the occasion, the splendid voice of Mr. Pierson fairly enrapturing the audience.

E. A. STEVENS.

An Omaha poet has produced a local poem in which are these lines:

"Hell is paved with good intentions, Omaha with asphalt mostly."

An advertisement reads: "Wanted, a young man to be partly out of doors and partly behind the counter," and a lady has written to ask, "What will be the result when the door slams?"

ROBERT THE DEVIL.

When I went into the sanctum yesterday after copy, the editor of Gabe's Horn says to me, "Robert, who took that fifteen-cent cigar off'n my desk yesterday?"

"How should I know?" says I; "was the dog in here, Mr. Skinner?"

"What if he was?" says he. "Dogs don't sequester cigars," and he looked at me sharp, but dasn't say 'twas me, 'cos pop's a big stockholder in the Horn, you know, bein' offle pious, for revenue only; and there's where I've got the bulge on the editor of Gabe's Horn, you see.

"Well, never mind, Robert," says he, "p'raps I smoked it—I am forgetful at times."

"You bet you are," says I to myself, "and never think of payin' the dimes you borrow of me, that I'm fool enuff to lend you; and where'd I come in if I didn't git square on you somehow?" Then says he, "Oh, by the way, Robert, did you read that tract I gave you last night?"

"Yes sir," says I.

"Well, what did you think of it?"

"Rot!" says I; "hogwash, and nuth'n else."

"Robert!" says he, kinder sharp, but simmerin' down right off, and sayin, "Oh, well, you are young yet, Robert, and the scales will fall from your eyes some day. You are all right at heart"—this was taffy, and I was bettin' he'd strike me for a dime in a minit—"and your head will get right before long." Then he ast me 'f I'd rit anything, as I'd promised, as he was anxious for me to make my dabue—whatever he meant—in Gabriel's Horn, as I rit well, but with too much freedom, as yet. I said yes, and showed him the pece, w'ich he said, as soft as silk, that he thought would be available for our columns; and then smiled on me as he put it in the desk, like a alligator when he sees a nigger boy in swimmin', and knows he can foreclose the mortgage onto him 'fore the nigger boy can swim out. Then, rubbin' his hands, and lettin' that smile run 'way back to his ears, he ast me in honey-sweet tones if I had a dime about me that I didn't want to use till to-morrow, as he'd left all his change to home in another pair of pants—he must a put it into them other pants, 'cos he had on the same ones he'd worn for a year, by gosh!

I was fool enuff to say yes, and lend him a dime, when he thanked me in silvery tones, gimme some copy, and I went off to the composin' room, gettin' blowed up by the boss for 'stayin' so long.

The next day, when I called onto him, he gimme that pece back, sayin' he was sorry he couldn't use it, but knowed I would ketch on some day. This is the pece:

JOB AND HIS BILES.

It seems tuff that the Lord set down so hard on Job when he was a yard-wide, all-wool God-fearer, and didn't go back on him in all his trouble—thund'rin' tuff!

I dunno if Job had been in the coal biz as he would a give more'n 1800 pounds for a ton of coal, but he give the Lord a good square ton of faith, and a few shovelfuls over, and yet the Lord let Satan go for Job, and do his dodrattedest to knock him out of the sheep pasture into the goat pasture, killin' all his cattle and folks, and then coverin' him all over with biles from head to foot!

I don't blame Satan, 'cos he was right on that kind of racket, and had rather make it hot for a fellow than eat mince pie, but it seems mighty tuff that the Lord should a let him plunk it so hard to Job, who was the Lord's solid Muldoon of faith, and right bower in the vinyard; I'm blest if it don't.

I had a bile once, only one, and I know there was times when I would a sold my grandmother to the kannibals for a plaster that wasn't made of soap and sugar, but would cure the bile right away. But Job, covered all over with them, didn't shoot off a cuss word at the Lord, as his wife wanted him to, but stuck to him like the freckles do to the face of my cuzzen Suse which lives in the country.

Ma says who the Lord loveth he chasteneth, and my! how he must a loved Job. If I'd a been Job I should a said, "Lord, let up on enuff biles so I can set onto a chair, and not have to set in the ashes, and let enuif love slide to make it square, and I'll try to git along with so much less love." The Lord wouldn't a lost anything by that swap, but would a got some of his love back, and I'd a been willin' to stand the loss—so much love for a bile, you know.

However Job stood the racket of them biles, I dunno. If he'd been a slugger, what a glutton he'd a been for punishment—my! Sullivan would a got tired tryin' to lick him, and throwed up the sponge, same's Satan did. And Satan was a slugger for any man's money, this bein' the only time he ever got knocked out all through the old Testament record, Job then bein' champion.

If this Job story ain't a yarn for the marines, then I don't see how the Lord is a lovin' father to his children, playin' roots on 'em like he did on Job. Spos'n' a man had a boy which was the best boy out, and doin' his level best for the old man, and the old man know'd it, but put up all sorts of mean and tuff jobs onto him, sech as hidin' his base ball bat, chokin' him offen his cigarets, punchin' him in the snoot, feedin' him on tripe, killin' his pet dog, breakin' his sled, makin' him sleep in the sullen, stickin' pins into him, and all such fresco work, what would folks say? Wouldn't they howl and say he'd orter be tarred and feathered? You jest bet they would, and do it, too, out West where they've got the sand. But I guess the Job story is a farry story, and there ain't no such kind of a Lord as that, 'cept some tuff English lords.

Mr. Editor FREETHO'T, may I ast you what's the reason you spose the editor of Gabe's Horn wouldn't print this pece? Seems to me it's a fare treetis on the subject.

ROBERT THE DEVIL, of Gabe's Horn.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

W. W. Corcoran, public benefactor and philanthropist, died at Washington on the 24th ult.—Anschlag is sentenced to be hanged by the neck until he is dead.—Miss Helen Taylor, the step-daughter of John Stuart Mill, is about to visit this country, and will arrive in New York in a few weeks.—Henry George has consented to resign from the Anti-Poverty Society in order to preserve harmony.—C. R. Bennett, Anthony Comstock's Pacific Coast lieutenant, has received a commission as United States postoffice inspector.—Henrietta Maria Lochner von Huttenbach is the name of a lady who has just applied to the supreme court to have her name shortened.—Father Kennedy and eight farmers have been convicted and sentenced to two months' imprisonment for attending a meeting of a suppressed branch of the National League at Newmarket, County Clare, Ireland.—A telegraphic dispatch says: "Queen Victoria went to London yesterday. Her majesty drove across Hyde Park in an open carriage." This is important news. No one need be surprised now to hear that the queen rode home again.—President Cleveland is enjoying himself in Florida.—The Chicago Times' Memphis, Tenn., special says: A day or two ago two Mormon elders, Fuller and Douglass, who have been operating in West Tennessee, went to Denmark, in Madison county, and asked leave to hold services in the Cumberland Presbyterian church. The pastor, as soon as he recovered from the shock of contact with their assurance, reported their mission to his congregation. A delegation of the latter at once waited upon the elders and ordered them to leave, on penalty of being tarred and feathered. They left. A number of converts are reported to have been made by them among the ignorant class of white people in West Tennessee.—San Francisco people are edified to learn from "specials" in Eastern papers that this city is at the mercy of "an organized band of burglars and robbers who have bought immunity from police interference." The report is without the shadow of a foundation.—A monument is about to be erected to the memory of the late czar in the grand court of the Kremlin at Moscow, which is to cost $650,000.—The Canadian Parliament was opened Feb. 23, by the governor-general.—The Post truly remarks that the simultaneous news that the crown prince is much improved, and that he is getting worse, will not reassure the world in regard to his condition.—Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton will return to the United States the latter part of March, and will thereafter make her home at Omaha.—The body of James McGuire was refused interment in the Calvary cemetery, Brooklyn, because Mc-Guire had been a follower of McGlynn. He owned the lot from which his remains are excluded.—Washington's birthday was celebrated by the soldiers at the Presidio and by the militiamen, who marched in gorgeous array.—The Mt. Vernon, Ill., cyclone of the 20th ult. killed about 30 people outright, wounded and maimed scores of persons, and left 1,000 homeless. The Baptist and Methodist churches of the town were, as reported, almost swept from the face of the earth.—A reception was tendered Joaquin Miller the other evening in East Oakland.—The Congregational Club met last week and discussed the subject of "Spiritualism." It was decided that Spiritualism was satanic and should be condemned.—A. Giovannini has been held to answer in $1,000 bonds, on a charge of having published a card in an Italian paper criminally libeling the Rev. Father Franchi, in accusing him of exacting a $3 fee for baptizing infants.—The passenger steamer Julia, running between Vallejo Junction and Vallejo, was completely wrecked by the explosion of her boiler last Monday, and over thirty persons are supposed to have been killed or drowned. The steamer burned to the water's edge.

THE LICK OBSERVATORY.

Prof. James E. Keeler of the Lick Observatory at Mount Hamilton has addressed a communication to the San Jose Mercury, in reply to a sensational article on the observatory which appeared in a recent issue of the San Francisco Chronicle.

He says: The article in question betrays so slight an acquaintance with the present condition of the work on Mount Hamilton and its past history that it would hardly be worth while to reply seriously to its many absurdities, if it were not for the erroneous impression which it might convey to persons having no means of judging the accuracy of its statements. I shall confine myself to merely pointing out and rectifying the misstatements of the article, without further reference to the remarkable animus which seems to have prompted it, and which is the more surprising because one would naturally expect instead a feeling of pride in a great institution whose success is so largely due to local munificence, enterprise and skill.

The buildings and instruments of the Lick Observatory form the most perfect appliances yet devised for the observation of the heavenly bodies. So far from being the crude experiment of amateurs, they are the embodiment of the combined wisdom and experience of the most eminent astronomers in the world. The greater the knowledge of the visitor to the Lick Observatory of what has been accomplished at other institutions, the more he will appreciate the care that has been expended here to make every detail represent the latest development of science. Every important step has been made with the advice of those most competent to express an opinion.

I will now review in detail some of the statements of the Chronicle article.

The most serious defect, it is stated, is in the construction of the pier for the great telescope. It is of iron, hollow, and can be shaken by the hand.

The facts about this pier are as follows: It is built of iron, weighs twenty tons, and rests upon a base sixteen by ten feet. It is hollow—all iron piers of any size are hollow—and some of the largest telescopes in the world, including the Russian thirty-inch, are mounted in the same way. The pier is so solid that a man clambering up the spiral staircase attached to it produces a barely perceptible tremor of a star in the eye-piece. If this is at any time not deemed sufficient, it will be the easiest thing in the world to fill up the pier with masonry. The exquisite views of Saturn and the great nebulae obtained with this telescope on the few nights when it has been tried are sufficient evidence of the stability of the mounting.

If the telescope tube is struck it will vibrate like any other tube of the same length. To avoid this it is only necessary to refrain from striking the tube.

The movable floor is found to answer its purpose admirably in all ways but one; the motion is inconveniently slow. To remedy this another motor will be provided, at an expense which is inconsiderable compared to the total cost of the floor. The floor itself will require no alteration whatever,

The great dome is pronounced by Mr. Swasey, himself the largest manufacturer of domes in the country, to be most admirably constructed. We have not yet been able to discover any room for improvement. There is not a single piece connected with it which is intended solely for ornament.

It is true that water in the "liquid seal" of the dome was frozen by the most severe weather ever known on the mountain, but it was also maintained in all accounts of this that the non-congealing liquid had not been placed in position. That the dome was frozen was therefore not surprising. We should not expect a wagon to pull easily before the wheels were put on. To prevent the freezing of the dome, when it becomes a matter of importance, it is only necessary to put an anti-freezing mixture in the annular trough, but it would not be a public calamity if the dome did freeze every ten years.

It is true that water froze in drinking glasses and that pipes burst during the cold weather. We read of the same things happening in San Francisco. In other observatories where I have worked they happened nearly every day. For, judging the value of all these things, it would seem as if profound scientific knowledge were less required than ordinary common sense.

The writer of the Chronicle article is evidently ignorant of the fact that heating observing rooms is not permissible in any climate. The observer must take his chance of cold weather.

It is stated that the instruments at the observatory have not been tested yet, and that they will not be in order for a long time. I quote from Professor Holden's article in the Sidereal Messenger, February, 1888: "Observations by Mr. Burnham, Professor Todd, Professor Comstock, Mr. Keeler, and myself have thoroughly tested all the instruments, except the large telescope." Satisfactory tests of the latter instrument have since been supplied.

It is undoubtedly true that considerable time will be required for adjusting the instruments after the completion of the observatory. The final adjustment of an instrument is the business of the astronomer who is to use it, and he would never allow it to be done by anybody else. The maker has fulfilled his duty when he has made this possible and easy, and this has been done with every instrument in the observatory, while many of them are in perfect adjustment already as a consequence of my own work.

The only point really requiring consideration is the delay in the completion of the observatory, which was confidently expected to be in active operation by this time. The delay is to be regretted; but what great public undertaking has not had the same experience? Only those who are thoroughly acquainted with the observatory can appreciate the magnitude of the work which has been accomplished. I am myself one of the observers referred to, who have given up positions elsewhere in anticipation of the chances here, and all my interests are centered in the completion of the observatory. Nevertheless, I believe that every delay has been made with good cause and to the final advantage of the institution.

I give also the testimony of another gentleman who is equally interested in the completion of the work here. Mr. S. W. Burnham, of Chicago, in a letter to Captain Floyd, received but two days ago, says: "On the whole, I think you and every one else should be satisfied with the progress made. You have got along quite as rapidly as I expected." If persons so immediately interested in the beginning of astronomical work consider the delays which have been made necessary, those who have no interests at stake should be able to bear them with some degree of equanimity.

The mention of Mr. Frazer as still connected with the observatory shows the entire ignorance of the Chronicle writer about the present condition of affairs here, as Mr. Fraser's connection with the observatory terminated nearly three months ago.

The "junketing trip" of Captain Floyd to Europe, although made in the interest of the Observatory, was entirely at his own expense, as, with an accurate apprehension of the peculiar species of gratitude with which the best efforts of a public man are certain to be regarded by some members of every community, he had foreseen the occurrence of just such an occasion as the present one.

Still other statements in the Chronicle article might be discussed, but it is not necessary, since the question of the fitness of the observatory is entirely one of fact, and must finally rest upon the merits of the work itself. I remember once reading an article on the Brooklyn bridge when that great piece of engineering work was in process of construction, in which it was stated that the structure could never support its own weight. Nevertheless, the bridge still stands, and the value of the criticism is apparent. Whether the trustees of the Lick Observatory have builded as well may be left for the decision of years to come, but in the mean time no advantage is gained by substituting the opinion of uninformed and irresponsible persons for that of the highest acknowledged authorities.

LILIAN'S STORY.

We are in receipt of a second contribution to our Children's Department. It is offered as an "edicle" and is entitled:

A CANDY PULL.

BY A. LILIAN ANDREWS, AGED 10.

"At two, remember!" shouted Belle Brown to Nelly Castro.

"I'll be there, sure."

The girls parted and went straight home.

At two the next day Nelly was at Belle's house to write invitations for a Candy Pull. As soon as the invitations were written they were sent. The night came at last. The children met at Belle's house. The dishes of hot molasses were brought on, and at once all the girls were pulling candy. They were in the midst of fun when suddenly they heard a bang, bang, bang, bang, bang! The girls screamed and suddenly all the boys rushed in and got the candy and ate it. Belle said that Harry Smith was at the bottom of it, and both girls resolved never to have a candy pull again.

Better Two Than Ten Thousand.

Talmage recently preached on pugilism which he endorsed this far: "It is a bad thing to have a jaw broken and a few drops of blood shed, but is it not less distressing than to break a thousand jaws and to cover miles of territory with the signs of carnage? If the world must fight, I prefer the fight of a recent date. Why not, instead of a Zulu war, in which thousands of Englishmen and Zulus were put to death, have compelled a Disraeli, after he had instituted the war, to go forth to meet a responsible Zulu, and have two battered and bruised men instead of 10,000!"

Such is the Christian Scheme of Redemption.

The Presbyterians of San Francisco have started to raise a million dollars for the saving of souls in the penitentiaries. In the meantime the unnumbered thousands of rascals outside of prison walls will have to struggle along in the toils of sin as best they can without the efforts of zealous Presbyterians to rescue them. In the interim it will be comforting for those who die in the faith to know that they are so soon to join the angelic company of converted thugs, thieves, and scoundrels who were considered too dangerous to be at large on earth, but who may run unrestrained among the priceless treasures of the kingdom come. —Sacramento Bee.

The Church of England Catholic.

The Church Times (London) says: "To say that the Church of England is Protestant is as false as to say that she had been endowed by the state. The proof is the same in both cases—it is impossible to produce the instrument whereby the church was so endowed, or whereby she protested. As Bishop Seymour puts it, this church and realm drove out the pope, and it was the pope that protested, not the Church of England. The Church of England affirms what she conceives to be vital truth, and condemns what she considers deadly error; but she has never thought of doing so foolish, so imbecile, and so unchurchly a thing as to protest. To brag of being a Protestant church is as if a bank should glory in the title of insolvent."

CORRESPONDENCE.

Spicy and Entertaining.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I have received four copies of FREETHOUGHT and have read every word in each number. It is a spicy and entertaining little weekly, and I think there is no doubt about the success of the enterprise.

J. J. MCCABE.

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 14, 1888.

Congratulation.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Allow me to congratulate you on the birth of this noble "child of the brain," FREETHOUGHT, which promises to do much towards the glorious cause of liberty. I am pleased to see it has already teeth sharp enough to bite through the tough skin of orthodox hypocrisy with an incisive force that can leave no doubt in the mind of the bitten as to its ability to do still more forcible work when occasion requires.

I have been among our Pittsburg friends for the last two weeks and have heard nothing but praise for the President of the A. S. U. and his brave work. I was very much pleased with Mr. Putnam's address on Paine. I thought I had done pretty well myself till I read his, whereupon all my fine ideas about myself subsided, and my inflated vanity shrank up somewhat.

My address will be published in Secular Thought.

VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

Pittsburg, Pa., Feb. 10, 1888.

Asa Gray.To the Editors of Freethought:*

In the death of Asa Gray America has lost a life not soon equaled, and the country has among its due bills to departed genius a note which it can redeem only by erecting a practical monument to his memory which shall inclose a school of science that will care not for popular theories, but make truth popular in spite of musty bibles and purblind priests.

I send you the Philadelphia Telegraph's editorial on Gray's demise, which I think you will like to copy:

"In the whole history of natural science no man ever had a greater opportunity, both for the widening and accenting of knowledge and for the making of individual reputation, than Agassiz had in the decade following the publication of 'The Origin of Species.' Those ten years not only marked an absolute revolution in the accepted ideas of Biology, but they left hopelessly stranded the naturalists who could not or would not accept the new ideas. Agassiz in the beginning of that vital period held in this country a position of unexampled authority and influence. It is not too much to say that if he had found himself able to march with Darwin from the very start he would have been as intimately and honorably associated with Evolution as Wallace is, who, in the opinion of many good and fair judges, divides the honors with Darwin himself. He unhappily missed a chance of centuries—and what he refused Dr. Asa Gray accepted. Dr. Gray did not become the even partner in the new light which Agassiz might have been, because he was not such a general student; his knowledge of botany was great, but was confined to that study, while Agassiz was equally eminent as botanist, geologist, and zoologist—sciences in which Evolution is equally concerned. Still it was the enormous good fortune of Professor Gray to have been the leader of the American contingent of the war of Evolution, and it has now been long acknowledged that it was through the fight waged here, and in Germany under Haeckel, that victory was won beyond anything that was accomplished in England. In any reflection upon the great and honorable labors of Asa Gray these central facts must stand out beyond all others; but speaking generally, there will, we fancy, be none to question the assertion that he was one of the most distinguished men of science this country has produced. The story of his useful career is told in another place in this paper and we will not here repeat, but it is fitting that all Americans who cherish the best things should join in honoring a man who happily illustrated some of the highest forms of intellectual life."

Ever fly the flag of the United States and in the name of reason defy all religion.

Flatfootedly, JOHN P. GUILD.

Camden, N. J., Feb. 7, 1888.

It is Needed.

S. P. PUTNAM, ESQ., My Dear Sir: I am in receipt of No. 5 of your fearless and independent journal. I inclose one dollar, which please apply on my subscription. I am pleased with the general make-up of FREETHOUGHT. A Liberal paper is much needed on this coast, and if the Liberals rally to your support as they ought your paper is destined to have a splendid success. The Liberals of the Northwest and along the Pacific coast are widely differentiated both geographically and in their speculative beliefs. We need an intelligent medium like FREETHOUGHT to unify us both in sympathy and intellectual convictions.

You will have a hot fight of it on your return to Oregon. The orthodox element is rampant, belligerent, and defiant, and they seem to think we Liberals have no moral and intellectual rights whatsoever. The spirit of Loyola is still abroad in the land.

J. T. FORD.

Independence, Or., Feb. 10, 1888.

Excelsior.To the Editors of Freethought:*

The star of empire, wending its way westward, has glimmered a few rays of light on the "Egyptian darkness" of Rockport. Mrs. M. A. Freeman, whose equal is not in the United States (nor in Europe either for that matter), has been here and delivered three lectures, and she awakened an interest in Freethought and Universal Mental Liberty that will never cease. It is like a pebble thrown into a placid lake that creates a rippling circle growing larger and wider and grander all along down the cycles of time; and the great truths enunciated by her will be remembered as long as life lasts.

The logical reasoner and solid, sedate Mr. Remsburg has lectured here, and so has the poet laureate and indefatigable lecturer and worker Mr. Putnam, but the majority decision is that the noble little lady, Mrs. Freeman, gave the best Freethought lectures ever delivered in Rockport.

Messrs. Editors, there is another subject we wish to agitate, and wish all Liberals to take an interest in, and that is a Lecture Bureau. Let every Liberal pay into the fund $1.00 per annum. With the establishment of such a Bureau we would have funds sufficient to send Liberal lecturers to every hamlet in the land. Agitate, friend Liberals, agitate and let us start the ball rolling. There is not a true Liberal in the United States that cannot raise $1.00 a year for such a grand work.

G. G. BECK.

Rockport, Mo., Feb. 22, 1888.

Vials of Wrath.To the Editors of Freethought:*

The God of the Jews has been vindicated here this week. Two of our young men laughed in meeting Sunday night (and from all accounts I think they had good cause), and were arrested, taken to Salina, nine miles, and fined $50.00 and costs. We had all the officers here, but the Christians must make all the costs possible. One of the young men is the only support of a widowed mother, and here now, in the middle of an extraordinary hard winter, it takes two months and a half pay for his fine. But then they may think themselves very lucky that the Christians have not the power, or they would have hung them or burned them at the stake as they used to do, or tried the water cure of old times on them.

Friend Putnam's lectures begin to tell here now, and this gets lots of them to reading, and they find there is a great deal they never knew in our laws and in the "good book." I will send money for your paper soon.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument Mr. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MARCH 10, 1888

For general enlightenment we give the latest market reports: Wheat, variable; corn, still; butter, easier; eggs, irregular; mining stocks, uncertain. This is reliable if not definite.

FREETHOUGHT has now a good list of working subscribers. If each one should proceed forthwith to secure another, the list would be doubled. This is a mathematical proposition which we have never heard questioned, but if our readers should conclude to demonstrate it, the good resulting therefrom would be far-reaching in its effects.

ALDERMAN JACOBS of Detroit did not have very good luck with the Secular resolutions which he presented to the common council of that city. A defeat is better, however, than no attempt at reform. It was a coincidence that the resolutions should have been sprung on the aldermen while Secretary Stevens was in town, and coincidences are what make this world interesting to the student.

An able Methodist parson from Illinois recently stated at a Kansas revival that a daughter of D. M. Bennett, when on her deathbed, inquired of her father whose religion she should accept to die by, her mother's or his own, and Mr. Bennett replied, "Your mother's." This was told to prove that Freethinkers are not sincere. The fact that D. M. Bennett had no daughter of course makes the illustration none the less conclusive from a Christian point of view.

THERE are a good many people who will sympathize with the Rev. Mr. Geddes. He was talking to a meeting of the Presbyterian Union. "Some time ago," said he, as reported, "when one of our ministers went to Santa Barbara, his wife died there and the Santa Barbara paper printed a long obituary notice about her. It was a splendid thing. I took that around to several of the newspaper offices in this city and wanted them to publish it, but, would you believe it, all of them refused to unless they were paid! The next day I observed," said the elder, with indignation, "that one of these papers had a column and a half about J. W. Howe's dog." So much for ordinary unregenerate newspapers. Then he went for the Presbyterian journal, the Occident. "In the last issue," he said, vehemently, "there was only about so much [he measured an inch off on his finger] in relation to the ministerial fund, while there was a column and a quarter about Mrs. Rideout's camping out." Reform in local journalism is an imperative necessity.

THE Chronicle last week published the accusation that the Adventists' printing establishment in Oakland forces its employees to pay a tenth of their wages to support the church. A Roman Catholic paper republishes the Chronicle's accusation and comments upon it as showing the grinding character of Protestantism. In another issue the Chronicle takes back all that it previously charged. The Catholic paper does not publish the correction. There is no doubt that Adventism is a humbug, but it is not so colossal a fraud as the Roman Catholic church.

TYPGRAPHICAL errors are usually hailed by editors with anything but expressions of hilarious pleasure. Not so with our esteemed contemporary, the editor of the Pacific Herald of Holiness. Having printed "Jehovah tsidkenu" (the Lord our righteousness) when he meant to say "Jehovah jireh" (the Lord will provide), he ejaculates, "Well, we are blessedly saved just now, and one beautiful consolation is that the Lord is able to make even our mistakes redound to his glory and our good. Alleluia!" We have previously noticed that errors redound to the glory of God and the good of religious editors. It is facts that lay them out cold and stark.

NEWS AND NOTES.

LOS ANGELES.—A good hand-shake with Geo. L. North, comrade of the Grand Army of Humanity, and forward march, we dash into the glorious moonlight, on to the ramparts of the hills, through whose rocky heart the iron horse snorts and leaps with glistening armor. In the happy dawn we come to the Queen of the Angels, where the sunlight falls with the richest smiles of heaven. The Queen wears her tiara still, and her diamonds—corner lots—still blaze aloft. They say the white of the boom is coming, but there's music in the air, and the voice of the auctioneer is heard in the land. Grand excursions come and go, and the ancient landmarks are rapidly disappearing.

The days are brilliant in Los Angeles. The skies are blue and the white clouds roll away over the distant peaks. The trees and grass are green, and amid the blooming flowers sparkles the yellow orange. The breath of spring flows with delicious joy.

J. E. Clark still holds the fort at the old stand, always ready for work, and he never hauls his colors down. His orthodox friends think he is not politic enough, but as he gives a dollar's worth for a dollar his trade is flourishing. It does not pay to be a hypocrite, and even Christians like square dealing better than professions of a creed.

Things are mixed at Los Angeles. Pioneer work isn't always free and easy. It is against the powers that be, and our forces are not always in marching order. Many changes and outside issues have prevented for some time any regular meetings of the Secular Union, and amid the tearing down and building up it was almost impossible to procure a hall. When I arrived no place for the Sunday lecture had been found. There was no time for delay, and so we went forth in search of a spot where we could plant our standard. Friend Glover joined us, and although an ardent Spiritualist he is a very good worker for this world. After several hours' devious travel, the game was finally hunted down and a hall secured, thanks to friend Glover's perseverance, which is a great deal better than saint's perseverance.

In the course of our peregrinations it became our duty to visit Mrs. Maud Lord Drake in her cosy country mansion. In the intervals of business the bright-looking seeress gave a reading of our destiny in the mystical light of the beyond. She said that I had never yet fairly succeeded in life because I was always striving after the unattainable. I thought this was a very close hit. I have always wanted to be rich and to be a Liberal lecturer. This of course is the unattainable. She said, however, that now the way of my fate was broadening and brightening, and would keep doing so until I had shuffled off this mortal coil. This meant the success of FREETHOUGHT, and therefore I accepted the prediction as a splendid test and absolutely veracious. So far I am a confirmed Spiritualist; I believe in the happy destinies.

We had a fair audience on Sunday evening in spite of the short notice that was given, good in numbers and excellent in quality, and it was a pleasure to address such appreciative friends—and generous friends too. The banners of Freethought will never go down at Los Angeles so long as we have even these few to gather almost at a moment's notice with warm hearts and open hand. The pioneer corps will be rallied for more effective service than ever.

After a hard day's work on Friday, and having taken the car to seek a needed rest, whom should I find on that veritable vehicle but my old Oregon friends of Portland, where I had already sojourned for pleasant days—Mrs. Graham, Mrs. Seymour and daughter. They and their mother, Mrs. Saunders, and Mr. Graham were living at East Los Angeles, and here my pilgrim feet found a welcome spot. There is a big yard about the house, with trees and shrubs, and in the soft sunshine there was delightful repose. Amid the musical winds and glittering leaves, and broad spreading boughs, I could forget the turmoil of life. So fortune favored my path. This is indeed a City of the Angels—you are constantly meeting friends from every part of the world, and hospitality is as bright as the climate itself.

It is always a joy to meet my fine old philosophic friend John Riffin. He is already past the scriptural period of man's life, but he has not the slightest idea of quitting this beautiful planet. He is youthful still in spirit and thought, and in long years of work and progress has gathered that which is most precious and enduring—the wisdom, calm and genial, by which life is sweet and death without terror. He is worthy of the sunny old age which he enjoys, in whose mellow light still sparkles the morning glory. He says his chief endeavor is to take care of "John;" but "John" is such an excellent fellow that in looking after his interests he is certain to do generously for all mankind. There is no such thing as failure for Freethought so long as John Riffin gives you his heart and hand. His son, Eugene Riffin, is equally ready, in spite of business, for service, and notwithstanding difficulties there was cheer and hope in our labors with such an ally.

I was pleased to meet with Mr. Calhoun, president of the Union, who has been on the coast for over thirty years, and knowing all about "hard knocks" is not at all discouraged if things don't go all right at once. To be patient is one of the wisest virtues of the Radical.

C. Severance is bright as a dollar, and, as we know, always in the advance army, thinking more of the truth than of the consequences that come from loyalty to its demands against the popular error.

Mr. and Mrs. Hawkins, Mr. Newell, Colonel Voss, Colonel Violet, Dr. and Mrs. Patterson, Mr. Turner, H. Kinney, Henry Foss, Mr. Pryse, Mr. Taft, and others have helped to smooth the way with agreeable companionship and bright faith in what will make this world better and happier.

It is expected that Reynolds will visit Los Angeles in a few weeks, and efforts are being made to give him a good reception.

Los Angeles is in many respects a difficult place for organized work. The elements are uncertain and changing, while at the same time the promise is large if one could devote himself wholly to this field. I am glad to hear that Jamieson is coming to the coast. One of the first points he wants to strike is Los Angeles. I think he could conduct here a successful campaign, for there are hundreds of Liberals in the city who could be aroused to action with a competent leader.

When I was here last we had a most favorable meeting in Turnverein Hall. The old structure has been torn down and a new and elegant building is in process of construction. When this is finished there will be a rallying-place for all the Liberal forces, for our German friends are mainly on the side of advanced thought and Secular government.

Los Angeles, Feb. 27, 1888.

MONROVIA—Monrovia is only nineteen months old and is now a handsome city of fifteen hundred inhabitants. What will it be when its majority is attained, at the rate things go on in California? There is no knowing what will happen. The changes here have a dramatic intensity.

I could only catch a glimpse of the beauty of Monrovia, for the sun scarcely shone all the time I was there except in a pavilion of clouds. When the hour for lecture arrived the rain poured in torrents. No business is transacted here in stormy weather. It is such an unusual thing that even the boom hangs pausing and waits for the sunshine ere its colors can flash. We did not give our lecture, for Monrovia is a Christian town, and we came for the especial purpose of turning the orthodox majority from the error of their ways, and confirming the "weaker brethren." Only the sturdy Liberals were out who could stand any amount of storm and flood; and we decided to wait for fairer skies, in order that with our small forces we might do more effective service. We have to obey the poet's song, "Learn to labor and to wait."

The sun struggled forth somewhat on Wednesday, and the Chess brothers gave us a drive through the surrounding country, which teems from season to season with fruit and grain. The orange trees were heavily laden, some of the golden branches almost touching the ground. Lemon-trees, lime-trees, walnut-trees, stand in fair ranks. Of the latter we passed by the grove whose products took the prize at the New Orleans Exposition. A vast amount of fruit is produced along the foothills, where the warmth of the sun gives a luscious flavor. I ate an orange thirteen inches in circumference. This kind is the seedless orange, and an exquisite luxury that one never gets outside of California. It is too delicious a fruit to export, and the rich New Yorker must come here if he wants a bite.

Monrovia has a solid growth, for it has an extensive and well cultivated country behind it. It has also a beautiful location, and is destined to be a fashionable resort, with many elegant homes. The mountains tower about it six and seven thousand feet high, the Baldy reaching thirteen thousand feet, and shining with eternal snows. The scenery is sublime, and never the same, as the clouds roll over it in gorgeous masses, and the sunshine plays with every variety of hue upon the heights and chasms, while towards the sea the valley opens with wonderful brilliancy to where, on clear days, the broad expanse of waters is seen melting into the dim horizon. The lowering skies just breaking away now and then gave hints of the wondrous summer pictures of this Eden land.

The Chess brothers have all come out from Kansas and left the blizzard far behind. They are not afraid to take an open stand in favor of Liberalism. They have the courage of their convictions, whatever may be the tide of speculation. They deserve all the success that honesty and energy can attain. It was a pleasure to greet again such enthusiastic reformers.

W. E. Pile, A. T. Morgan, W. F. Palmer, and George Pearsons are among the few who are not afraid of an open avowal of Liberal ideas. Spite of fortune and "preventing Providence" we had among these genial spirits a bracing holiday. We were pleased to meet with T. Y. Rippey and put his name upon the FREETHOUGHT list. J. Deveny and Frank Kasson of the Monrovia Leader are those who use the press with courage and truthfulness. The clergymen of the place are fond of real estate transactions, and don't scruple at a little trickery in order to make a deal. The Leader has the boldness to criticise. The churches wince and withhold subscriptions, but the "common people" hear gladly and go the Christians two better on the list.

REVIEW OF A BOOK.

We acknowledge the receipt of two copies of a book entitled "Twelve Select Sermons," by D. L. Moody, one copy being addressed to each of the publishers of this paper. The first sermon inquires, abruptly, "Where Art Thou?" Pausing merely to remark that we are at the old address, let us pass to the context. "The first thing that happened," says Mr. Moody, "after the news reached heaven of the fall of man, was that God came straight down to seek out the lost one. As he walks through the garden in the cool of the day, you hear him calling 'Adam! Adam! where art thou?' God left heaven to grope through the dark world for the rebel who had fallen—not to hurl him from the face of the earth, but to plan him an escape from the misery of his sin. And he finds him—where? Hiding from his creator among the bushes of the garden." This is most affecting and arouses our sympathy for the creator at once. We see him coming down from heaven like a resident of Nob Hill descending upon the corner of Kearny and California. We see him groping through the garden in the darkness, hitting everything that didn't hit him, and calling, in a plaintive, wo-bist-du tone, for Adam to emerge. It was Adam's obduracy on this occasion that brought death into the world. Otherwise many Biblical characters, who should have died in their infancy, would still be alive. Like the ordinary religious dissertation, Mr. Moody's sermon has no reference to the text.

The second sermon is headed, "There Is No Difference," in which the author endeavors to show that the good and bad among unbelievers will be promptly, unflinchingly, and impartially damned, in order that the glory of God may be more protuberant. In substantiation of this proposition Mr. Moody quotes the words of Paul, "All have sinned and come short." There were evidently Sunday-school treasurers in Paul's day.

The third sermon deals with "Good News." Here the author takes occasion to say that gospel means god-spell; god, good, and spell, tidings. The writings of the New Testament were so called because they broke to mankind the news that, having lived and struggled and died in this world, the chances were largely in favor of their being eternally tormented in the next. If this was good news, then intelligence concerning an approaching cyclone or earthquake should make the inhabitants of earth delirious with joy.

Perhaps it is not necessary to follow the author through the nine other sermons. Thank fortune, it is not compulsory. We do not wish to speak in a disrespectful tone of voice, but truth—which is our guide—impels us to say that we do not believe Mr. Moody knows enough about the unknowable to give information concerning it worth the cost of the book under review, which is 60 cents.

AN IMPORTANT FACT.

Three hundred years ago it was the common belief of mankind that Infidels deserved death and hell. At this day no sensible man holds to such a doctrine. The Constitution of the United States utterly repudiates it. Which is right, the ancient or the modern? Is God with the barbarian, or with the modern scientist?

THERE are two reasons, either of which is sufficient, why FREETHOUGHT should have a wide circulation in the West. The first is that the people here want this kind of a paper, and the second is that this is the kind of a paper the people want. When demand and supply articulate in this harmonious manner nothing less than general satisfaction can be looked for as a result.

AFTER Mr. Putnam had left Fresno, having delivered three lectures there, a writer signing himself "Veritas," and who confesses that he did not hear Mr. Putnam, rushed into print in a local paper with an "answer." Of this answer it is sufficient to say that the writer has succeeded only in throwing the bright light of publicity upon his own ignorance. Judge North, of Oleander, has published a brief but pointed reply to the critic, which appears in the same paper. The case of "Veritas" may safely be left in his hands.

THE office of FREETHOUGHT was left temporarily vacant last Sunday evening; and when the tenant returned at ten o'clock he found the building surrounded by fire engines and ladders and a big hose leading upstairs. The windows were open, emitting clouds of smoke, and outside appearances indicated that FREETHOUGHT was getting a dose of fire. When the police line had been passed it was found that the fire was not in this office, but in the adjoining gallery of the photographer, Mr. Stender, whose operating room had been completely wrecked and deluged, besides having its roof and floor burnt away. The lawyers underneath lost the ceiling of their office and got wet, but in FREETHOUGHT's apartments no damage was done further than to decorate the furniture and books with a dress—not to say a soot—of smoke and cinders. It was, however, a close call, as the fire burned fiercely within ten feet of our door. We acknowledged to the captain of the engine company our appreciation of his efficient services, and accepted his congratulations upon our good fortune in escaping the fire. He was kind enough to express the hope that our luck in that regard here might follow us into the next world.

MARCH 2 was celebrated at Rome as the anniversary of the pope's coronation. In responding to speeches made upon the occasion his so-called holiness complained that his position under the Italian government was unbearable, and that he would be satisfied with nothing short of complete independence and a restoration of his temporal, i. e., political, power. The pope is one of those who, to speak without exaggeration, desire the earth. He should remember that the impostor of whom he is the reputed successor was at one time rebuked for resorting to the sword, which is all that temporal power means.

As we ventured to predict last week, Brother Boanerges McCormick, of the Catholic Monitor, has paid his respects to the Methodist brethren who are desirous of converting the Catholics to Christianity. The gist of Brother McCormick's argument is in the following terms, which he applies to Methodist preachers in general and to those of the Methodist Ministers' Association in particular :

Wolves in sheep's clothing,	Conspirators against God's truth,
Sectarian brethren,	Beef-eating brethren,
Puffed-up parsons,	Simple Simon,
Biblical bazoo,	Culprits,
Big, fat, fanatical preachers,	Ravenous wolves,
Carnivorous buzzards,	Vultures of vice,
Billygoats,	A Buck from Alameda,
Sons of Belial,	Scheming sectarian speculators,
Gold-seeking gospelizers,	Impudent,
Arrogant,	Hypocritical,
Brazen-faced,	Conceited,
Cansters,	Wicked,
Vicious,	Scramblers,
	Scufflers.

The difference between the Methodist brethren and the editor of the Monitor appears to be in the degrees of civilization they have attained.

Thomas Paine.

We hail the day that gave thee birth, O Paine !
 As natal day of one of freedom's sons
 Who scorned the beaten track the Goths and Huns
 Of modern life pursue for sordid gain,
 Who sell their pens to swell the loud refrain
 Of adulation. Mightier than the guns
 Of minute men, or prayers of priests and nuns,
 Thy "Crisis" rang at Valley Forge a strain
 That nerved the patriot to daring deed
 In "times that tried men's souls." In freedom's van Thy ringing words were heard in hour of need
 Proclaiming far and wide the rights of man—
 The liberty of thought from bond of creed,
 And equal rights for humblest artisan.

—The Alarm.

No Apparent Moral.

Twenty odd years ago a kind-hearted old Philadelphia merchant caught the office boy pilfering. He talked with him, prayed with him, gave him another chance, and in time the boy was promoted step by step until he became the most trusted employee. A few days ago it was discovered that the young man had been appropriating twenty dollars a day for twenty years. Some true stories don't seem to have any moral. This one hasn't.—Post.

SOME VISITORS.

It is worth the expense of starting a Freethought paper in San Francisco just to meet the good people who come in to see the editors write thinklets.

The first to call upon us and register his name in the book we keep for visitors was a solid Freethinker from Oakland who views all matters calmly and decides questions in the light of cold reason. He said this was a hard field to open up. Liberal papers had been started here by able persons and had died from lack of support. He didn't believe the local Liberals wanted us, and expressed a doubt of our ability to run a paper anyway. To illustrate this view he set at work, helped fix up the office, and left us with the promise to call again soon. When the paper came out he examined it critically, pronounced it a failure, and thereupon proceeded to secure subscribers. He has brought in about twenty, and has been a sort of guardian angel ever since. We have learned that encouragement does not always come in the form of expressed veneration for the editor's intellectual capacity.

One after another the people found out we were here. One man who comes none too often is a retired clergyman who once had the audacity to question the "federal headship" of Adam, and to say that while it was possible that infants might be damned for Adam's sin, he was not prepared to admit that such a thing would be just. This heresy cost him his pulpit. He is now the religious editor of a leading journal here, and drops in to look over the Truth Seeker and Investigator for items.

There is another, an old warrior, a Knight, I might say, who knows more about religious history and about California, probably, than the whole faculty of the university. He generally has little bits of manuscript which he is often too modest to sign his name to, but which are always acceptable. He does some of the best editorial work on a number of city papers.

A converted and enlightened Mormon, who once stood high in the church and married a bishop's daughter, is a frequent and welcome visitor. He carries FREETHOUGHT wherever he goes. The Catholics do not like him. One of them who assaulted this gentleman with intent to do him bodily harm got a reception which appeared to satisfy him.

A professor of phrenology has been here a few times. He gives you a diploma of moderately good character for fifty cents. If you wish your finer and loftier gifts delineated it costs six bits. For a dollar you get as good a testimonial as Nelson Sizer gives for five. Mr. Putnam and I thought of having our fifty-cent characters read for publication, but feared it might disappoint our readers and injure the paper. We have concluded to wait until our list is a little larger, and then get a dollar diploma.

The liveliest Liberal in town is a man who carries the Credit Foncier of Sinaloa in his pocket, together with circulars relating to the Topolobampo colony. He allows the visitor he meets to spend all but his last coin for books; then he takes that for a subscription to the Credit Foncier of Sinaloa, and the visitor walks home.

We have a young caller who has not yet attained his majority, but has been connected in some way with a newspaper. Being of the fraternity, he looks over our subscription and receipt books at pleasure, reads letters and unfinished copy, comments on the numerous typographical errors which appear in this paper, reclines in the rocking-chair and examines the exchanges, uses our letter heads, smokes strong cigars, and expectorates upon the floor with the most abandoned freedom. As he is only a three-months subscriber the taking of the last liberty I regard as a violation of the amenities between the editor and his constituent. None but yearly subscribers in advance are entitled to use the redwood substratum of this office for a cuspidore.

Another visitor entertains the belief that the universe is a monad, and that upon this theory all mysteries become solvable. He held Mr. Putnam up against the wall one day for three hours while he made the matter plain to him. It reminded me of a crucifixion. He then went his way without accepting my invitation to subscribe, but promising to return shortly with some manuscript which he would offer for publication. I am laying for him. When he comes in I shall engage him in conversation with the visitor who believes that an infinite intelligence governs the aggregate of matter. During the discussion I shall proceed to the discharge of my accustomed duties.

A man called the other day who appeared to have something on his mind which he desired to express. He looked about the office in an embarrassed manner for a while, picked up a book and read it bottom upward, attempted to sit down on the editorial table, which, being on castors, rolled out from under him and baffled his design, took a drink of water, cleared his throat, squared off, and said: "Don't you think you and Putnam had a terrific nerve to come out here from the East and start a paper for us westerners to read who have been here since forty-nine?" I replied that such a view might be taken of our action, though I had not so contemplated it. He said that was what he thought, and he hadn't anything further to say. He then reviewed his original proposition, softened it, apologized, subscribed, bought some books, wished us the best of success, and went away much relieved.

We have a Prohibition visitor. Having failed to convert the editors to his method of regulating the liquor traffic, he concluded to try his success with the readers. He wrote an article on Prohibition and went into the printing-office and set it up in type. After the lapse of quite a period, he presented a proof slip and inquired my opinion. I pronounced him a much better writer than printer. His article, which is an able one, appeared in last week's FREETHOUGHT.

There are scores of other visitors, all interesting and all good people. To mention them all would weary the reader, but I must not forget the man from out of town. He comes in diffidently. He does not wish to take up anybody's time, but there are a few men in his locality who told him to leave their names as subscribers. So he lays down a big gold coin, takes his change in books, gives your hand a grip that you feel for the rest of the day, and departs, leaving behind him the hope and prophecy of good luck.

Life in this sanctum, though quiet, is not monotonous. M.

LITERARY NOTES.

THE Ingersoll-Field discussion, which appeared in the North American Review, has been gathered into book form. The discussion makes a dollar book in cloth; in pamphlet, 50 cents.

WE have photographs for sale of Thomas Paine, Robert G. Ingersoll, and Samuel P. Putnam; also the writer of these lines. The price is 25 cents each, except that of Colonel Ingersoll, which is 40 cents.

JOHN PECK, a favorite writer with all Liberals, has lately appeared as an author. Two pamphlets from his pen are, "Miracles and Miracle Workers," and "Christian Absurdities." The former sells for ten cents and the latter for twenty. We sell them both and fill orders by return mail.

AMONG the Liberal books kept on sale at this office are: "Truth Seeker Annual for 1888," price 25 cents, and Ingersoll's Argument in the famous blasphemy case, price 25 cents. We have a large supply of both of these works. As previously said, the Annual is unusually good this year.

So much admiration has been expressed for Miss Voltairine de Cleyre's poem entitled "Nameless," published in FREETHOUGHT of February 25, that it has been issued in leaflet form. It is at once a sermon, a poem, and an unanswerable argument. Copies can be furnished at 10 cents a dozen.

GEN. M. M. TRUMBULL, of Chicago, publishes a pamphlet of 75 large pages reviewing the case of the condemned Anarchists. It is entitled "The Trial of the Judgment." If General Trumbull could have been upon the bench at the trial of these men, or if he had been one of the judges who reviewed the evidence, there is reason to believe that not only would the judgment in the case have been more just, but our legal records would have been enriched with some valuable opinions on American jurisprudence. The price of the pamphlet is 25 cents, and it is issued by the Health and Home Publishing Company of Chicago.

RELIGION IN CHINA.

There comes from China a little story of the treatment of two Buddhist priests that is full of interest to the student of religious history. It may be found in the Chronicle of Sunday, Feb. 26, under the head of "News from the Orient."

The Chronicle tells us that there was a certain monastery and nunnery of Buddhist priests and nuns. Two young women came to be initiated. They were duly admitted, but during the ceremony two of the priests were so smitten by the peculiar charms of the young nuns that they took the first occasion to assault them with a view to gratify their passions. The women screamed and fought, and the two priests were arrested. The abbot of the monastery sent them to the civil officer for punishment. He returned them to the abbot, to deal with as he pleased, seeing that they were sacred persons. The two culprits refused all humiliation, penance, or pardon, and the abbot condemned them to be burned to death, which was done.

Here we find in China to-day the Buddhist religion, gray with age; a monastery with monks, a nunnery with nuns, all in one; an abbot at the head; death by fire as a punishment, and benefit of clergy accepted as law.

What is curious about all this is that if you read of Europe in the middle ages and down to the Reformation you will find precisely the same thing. There is not a jot of difference. There were the monastery and nunnery; the celibate priests and nuns; the abbot, of the same name; the turning over to the church for trial; the cruel death by burning—not for the crime but for contempt of court.

That the one is an exact copy of the other there can be no doubt. They must have had the same origin. Now which was the pattern and which the copy?

The Chinese is the original, without a doubt. China is older than Europe in all such things; and Buddhism is older than Christianity.

These things traveled down-stream, from China through India, Persia, Syria and Greece, to Rome. And the Christian religion came from the same source. It was simply a sect of the Buddhists, changed a little in its journey west, and accepted, established, and consolidated by the Council of Nice under the emperor Constantine.

The Essenies were simply traveling students and priests from the far East. They were first called Christians at Antioch. We are told by Hume and Gibbon that even then they had all the forms, fasts, sacraments, and orders of the churches of this day.

In fact State Religion has never been anything more than an alliance between the conquering king and the priests who had the most influence over the people. The king held with the sword and slew those who would not obey; while the priest aided him to rule, with all the force of superstition and fear.

The compact might not have been in so many plain words, but its terms have always been the same, no matter who the king or what the religion. The high priest crowns the king ruler by the grace of God, who must be obeyed, for the powers that be are of God. It is treason and worthy of death to rebel. The king slays and the priest curses all who refuse to obey.

Then the grateful king returns the compliment. He proclaims the priest to be the authorized mouthpiece of God, to be believed, obeyed, and held sacred. This was the compact made at the Council of Nice, between the bishops of the Christian church and the emperor Constantine. They proclaimed the tenets of the Christian faith and the emperor by the grace of God; and he, that that faith was the religion of the empire, and whoso denied it, let his head be stricken off.

From that moment the work began of subduing all to the empire and the church. Schools must be Catholic. The children must be taught the faith with their first lessons. Thus nations became Catholic as one man, not because it was true, but because every instrument was used to educate and compel all to accept the faith.

The church teaches theoretically that man has a free will, and can believe what he pleases, and may therefore be justly damned for unbelief; but practically it knows better, and insists on training the young mind to implicit faith and obedience.

Hence the struggle for control of the school, the suppression of heresy, and the control of the church over the state. It secured Catholic uniformity in Europe for a thousand years—from the Council of Nice to the dawn of the Reformation. It has secured Buddhism in China in like manner. It arrests all development. China has stood still. Hence this most cruel and barbarous act by the abbot of a monastery. It is possible in China. It is impossible in Europe. It would be preposterous in the United States.

Yet there are those among us who seem to regret those ancient days, and regard the present as a falling away from God and religion. They would deliver their children to the priest to be educated, not for Americans, for the republic and liberty, but to be Irish Catholics, German Catholics, and Italian Catholics. They would soon have a Concordat with the pope. Then the priests would be governed only by the church. Monasteries and nunneries would reappear, and here in the United States an abbot might again lead his victims to the fire.

But it is impossible. We are on the march to the glorious future, and not backward into the barbarous past. And we have the consolation, as we look back on the line of march, that every people are free, moral, enlightened, prosperous and happy in proportion as they have escaped from the trammels of the State Church, and every man is left absolutely free to serve God in his own way.

Do you doubt it? Look at the world! Put your finger on the darkest corner, and there you will find the priest supreme. Put it on the lightest, and you find him in a back seat. Our fathers shut him out of state affairs, denied all his claims, made every man his equal, stripped him of all title, all privileges, all emoluments, save just as the people choose, and we are in the van of the nations and bound to draw the rest after us.

Oh, we have cardinals, archbishops, bishops, and reverend clergy, and thrones, God save the mark! Thrones! for the cardinals. So have we the Grand Worthy Chief Muck-a-muck of the wigwam. But in the republic they are all a jest. "Only that and nothing more."

We are sovereigns, each and every one. Who can be more? or less? There is none. Our people need to realize this great truth, and show these puppets of a foreign power what tinsel things they are. Let us be ourselves, and no man can outrank us.

H. L. KNIGHT.

THE GOSPEL IN FOREIGN LANDS.

Protestant "missionaries" in foreign lands have a feather-bed existence at the expense of their too-trustful brethren. They generally live in the most healthy sections of the lands they go to, and in the midst of European society, surrounded by all the luxuries of life which their fat salaries can procure. Their mis-called "missionary" work is fully as mythical as the man in the moon, and the roseate reports which these roving tourists send to their dupes at home are mere romances which are written to while away hours that otherwise would hang heavily upon the soft hands of the heretics whose hearts are filled far more with "salary" than they are infused with a desire for their neighbor's salvation.

Mr. W. S. Caine, an English member of Parliament, has recently been traveling through different sections of the East, and as he had read many of the glowing accounts sent to England by the gentlemen who live on gospel geese in that region, he made it his special business to ascertain the condition of the Protestant missions in that section of sectarian propaganda.

The first place noticed by Mr. Caine is Singapore, where, he informs the reading world, there is "a magnificent cathedral, an Anglican bishop, a venerable archdeacon, and an assistant colonial chaplain. There is a surpliced choir to boot. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel has also a missionary, who gets $1,500 or $2,000 a year, and the only natives visible at the cathedral services are the fifteen or twenty Malays, who, standing outside the building, pull the punkah strings to cool the fashionable worshippers inside. The only attempt to reach the heathen by the Church of England is a small school chapel, at which there is an attendance of fifty or sixty at most. The Presbyterians have a fine handsome chapel for themselves. I surveyed it from the outside, and it had a fashionable congregation of one hundred and fifty or two hundred, fifty or sixty handsome carriages waiting outside, with as many native servants as there were good Presbyterians inside. The minister gets $2,000 a year and a free house. The English Presbyterian mission have one clerical and one lay missionary. These two energetic brethren have four small rooms in Singapore in which they hold services, and in none of which do they muster a congregation of fifty souls."

Such is sectarian "missionary" enterprise in Singapore. Well may such goody-goody gospeling gentlemen as Brother McCrary weep salt tears over such scandalous desecration of the Lord's day, when puffed-up Pharisaical Protestant preachers hire the poor heathen natives to work the machinery by which huge fans cool the atmosphere for the Nabobs who loll in velvet-covered pews, proud in their own conceit and wallowing in the wealth poured into their coffers by the foolish people who feed these sectarian cormorants under the idea that they are doing "missionary" duty among the benighted natives of the far East.

In Penang, says Mr. Caine, the Nonconformists have no missionary whatever, but the churches of England maintain an excellent native missionary to the Tamils, who seems to be meeting with some small measure of success. He has an average congregation in Penang of eighty-five out of a total Tamil population of 25,000. In province Wellesly there is an undenominational Protestant mission, with an English minister, and four native assistants. They have services in five places, and possess three small chapels, none of which will hold one hundred persons. They have sixty or seventy Chinese worshippers among the lot. The Church of England people keep a parson for themselves at a salary of $2,000, and have three 'catechists,' whatever they may be, who work among the Tamils. At Malacca, the colonial chaplain ministers to English residents at a salary of $3,000, and they pay Mr. Chong Sin Tai to convert the Chinese a salary of $300. Nonconformists do not put in an appearance at Malacca. So much for Protestant zeal for the conversion of our heathen fellow-subjects in the Straits settlements.

The so-called "success" of sectarian foreign "missions"—whether in Mexico or Mesopotamia—is all humbug of the most dishonest kind. The account Mr. Caine gives of the profitless Protestant missions he has visited only serves to strengthen the truth of what hundreds of travelers have said before him. Thus we have it on the authority of Dr. Winslow Cooke that the attempts of the Protestant sects to evangelize the people of China are signal failures, although fully $200,000,000 has been expended in paying sectarian men and women to waddle around the seacoast of that land, and to live in luxurious laziness at better people's expense.

With regard to India, Sir James Brooke told the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in London: "You have made no progress at all, you are just where you were when you first went to India." Mr. Craston, himself a missionary, spoke similarly of the efforts in China, and hundreds of other writers spoke of their converts whose lax morality "shocks the feelings of even their heathen countrymen." In Ceylon the converts were little better, according to Mr. Hammond; and the Rev. James Selkirk, himself an Anglican missionary, said that "by far the greater part of them live as though they had no souls." In Australia, Dr. Lang said the progress made there was very little, and in the following year Mr. Minton declared that all missionary efforts have failed. Speaking of New Zealand, Mr. Fox said that amongst the natives the word Christian was only a name and nothing more. Another Protestant authority stated that the converts were distinguished from the unconverted heathens as "rogues," "thieves," and "liars"—three "accomplishments," which, no doubt, they picked up readily from those "missionaries" who gave them a sectarian "stone" when they asked for the "bread of life."—S. F. Monitor.

New Truth.

So bitterly and intensely opposed are churchmen to new and important truths that a leading scientist declares it is safe to accept whatever the clergy condemn. They are committed to the defense of error, and all that belongs to the barbarous past.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Arrests in this city during February, including witnesses detained, numbered 1,649. Of these 721 were drunk.—The strikes on the Burlington and Reading railroads are of serious importance. There are also strikes on the Atlantic & Pacific road.—De Lesseps asks for 600,000,000 francs to complete the Panama canal. Owing to the prevalence of the rainy season and the difficulty of procuring workmen he does not promise that the work will be finished before 1890.—A large number of unemployed workmen engaged in a riot at Rome, March 1. Bake shops were broken into and pillaged, and the police who attempted to arrest the rioters were driven away with stones. Finally the mob was dispersed by troops. Many of the rioters were arrested. No bloodshed.—Mount Hamilton is reported to be snowed in, and the only way of communicating from the observatory to the outside world is by telegraph.—A Paris paper announces that thousands of people in the United States are being carried off by an epidemic known as the "blizzards."—The wreck of the Julia by a boiler explosion at Vallejo made sixteen widows and forty orphans. Only three men escaped uninjured from the wreck and nearly thirty lost their lives.—A New York court has granted Dr. McGlynn a permanent injunction restraining Henry George and his followers from incorporating an Anti-Poverty society. There is a prospect that McGlynn will run for president on the United Labor party's platform adopted at Syracuse last year. George will support Cleveland, provided the latter is renominated and sticks to the tariff reform as an issue.—A Dublin newsdealer has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment for selling copies of United Ireland containing reports of meetings of suppressed branches of the National League.—The Progressive Labor party of New York, composed of the rejected portion of Henry George's party, it is reported, will either disband shortly or merge with the Socialists.—Senator Stewart's Chinese restriction bill was reported favorably from the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs. One of the provisions of the bill is that all Chinese residents now absent and having the right to return shall avail themselves of that right within six months or forfeit it.—The date of the hanging of Anschlag is fixed for the 13th.—Henry Ward Beecher's son Herbert is unpleasantly implicated in the operations of opium smugglers.—Charles Maynard, who got out of the Oregon state prison by professing religion, has shown the sincerity of his conversion by robbing a church.—Negotiations between the pope and Russia have proved fruitless. Russia stipulated that all Catholic bishops throughout Russia should be appointed by the czar; that the Russian language should be used exclusively in the Catholic churches in Russia, both in preaching and in the catechism, and that the offspring of mixed marriages should be educated in the orthodox Russian church. The pope, of course, rejected these propositions. He makes no deals that do not give him all the stakes.—There were 112 deaths in this city last week.—Professor Huxley has been chosen trustee of the Bristol Museum.—English Sabbatarians collected under the title of the Lord's Day Observance Society have petitioned the Upper House of Convocation against allowing the popular Sunday recreations of the rich.—During the month of June there will be an interstate faith-cure revival in Cumberland county, Pa. The fool-killer will reap an early harvest.—The legislature of Mississippi has voted $10,000 for a Confederate monument fund.—Anthony Comstock has an agent in San Francisco, and report says he arrested a singer at the theater the other night for presenting a new ditty.—A. Bronson Olcott, the well-known writer and Concord philosopher, died March 4.—The famous Mt. St. Bernard monastery in the Alps has been destroyed by an avalanche.

Morality.

Morality is a science entirely independent of religion. Preachers are not moral men. Few moral men are religious. And few religious men are moral. Morality teaches manly independence, freedom of thought and action, and no deference to any one as superiors. Religion has pastors and masters, and teaches obedience and servitude,

RELIGION.

Mythological fables still cast their dark and evil shadows over ignorant minds. Ignorance is the abyss where ghouls congregate—accursed phantoms having no existence but in minds that superstition has diseased. In vain the light of science shines on their benighted souls. In vain the telescope points out to them the limitless universe. They will persist that there is a heaven beyond, above, where God sits upon a throne. Wretched mortals! not to know that this so-called religion is the foundation of monarchy and aristocracy. The aborigines who knew no God were never slaves to mortals. Christianity is the same old story—paradise and hades, Jove and Pluto, Jehovah and Satan, heaven and hell—with the addition of a lake of burning brimstone where human souls endure eternal torture, unless forgiven by the intercession of God's son, begotten (see catechism, where children learn what is divine). God forgives—violates the immutable laws of nature, of which, religion says, he is the author!

The following passages are quoted from a Lenten sermon delivered in this city: "The temptation of Christ by Satan;" "The enemy of mankind is especially active at this time;" "Christ who was as truly man as he was truly God." The well known tale of Christ and Satan on the mountain bandying words was also part of the discourse, and the preacher adds: "It may be doubted whether the evil spirit was really convinced that Christ was divine." What do these quotations mean if they do not imply a personal God—in three persons—and a personal devil? Is not this idolatry? The sermon quoted from ends with these words: "In the name of the father, son, and holy ghost." The equivalent of the holy ghost in Latin is espiritu sancto, meaning simply pure spirit and not a person. Tertulian, bishop of Rome, in his defense of the Christians before the Roman magistrates about A. D. 200 and during the persecutions under the Emperor Severus, said: "The Christians worship but one God." Where did they get the others from? They were added at the Council of Nice.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM lectures at San Diego March 11; at San Jacinto and vicinity March 18, and at Anaheim and Santa Ana March 25.

C. B. REYNOLDS's lecture appointments are as follows:

Kingston, New Mexico, March	6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11.
Florence, Arizona.	13, 14, 15.
Tempe, "	18, 19, 20.
Phoenix, "	21, 22, 23.
San Bernardino, Cal.,	25, 27, 28.
Riverside, "	29.
San Jacinto, "	30, 31, 1 April.
Diamond Mines, " April	2, 3, 4.
San Diego, "	6, 7, 8.
National City, "	9, 11, 12.
Los Angeles, "	14, 15.
Santa Ana, "	17, 18, 19.

California friends desiring lectures will please address Mr. Reynolds so letters will be at any of the above places two days ahead of dates.

Mrs. B. E. HOLCOMB writes from Shenandoah, Ia., concerning Liberal organization at that place: "We are just home from our first meeting for organization for Freethought work. But few were out, as the traveling is very bad. None came from the country. We organized, though, and adjourned until next Saturday, when we think there will be a good turn out. The committees will send messages around the country to all who are Liberals, and ask them to invite and get out all they can. We met to-day at Dr. Humphreys. Next Saturday we meet at our store. We think that Mr. Putnam did a grand good work here, in awakening an interest in Freethought in a good many who had never before studied much outside the orthodox catechism. I am going to see if some will not subscribe for FREETHOUGHT. I am very much pleased with it and think it will do a good work. We want one such paper in every town in the world, and one such a lecturer as Mr. Putnam (or a good Spiritualist) in every town and city."

SECULARISM OR GOD IN THE STATE.

Archbishop Corrigan, a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus in New York, has a marble palace furnished and maintained free of cost; a salary of $5,000; his cathedraicium is estimated at $15,000 more; and the per head for each interment in the cemetery will amount to $20,000, so that nets him $40,000 a year exclusive of the gifts and fees from wealthy parishioners. This is equal to an income on several millions, but pays no taxes.

Over $700,000,000 of church property is now exempt from taxes, amounting to about $10,000,000, of which the people are defrauded year by year. If the rate of increase continues the same as in the past, at the end of this century we shall have $4,900,000,000 worth of church property exempt from taxes, thus paying theology $50,000,000 a year. If this rank injustice is not subversive of all liberty and equality, what is?

Dr. Franklin, in a letter of October 9, 1780, said: "When a religion is good, I conceive that it will support itself, and when it cannot support itself and God does not take care to support it, so its professors are obliged to call for help from the civil power, it is a sign, I apprehend, of its being a bad one." This is exactly the position of the American Secular Union. It insists that the church must stand or fall on its own merits; that it ought not, and must not, be supported by the patronage of the civil powers, or the forced contributions of the people, whether they believe in its dogmas or not. We hold that the only perfect guarantee of religious or civil liberty is the absolute divorce of church and state. Nor are Secularists alone in this demand. Rev. Dr. Barrows, of Brooklyn; Rev. Dr. Snyder, of St. Louis; and the majority of the more liberal religionists favor the taxation of church property.

When a member of Congress, James A. Garfield, in the House in June, 1874, said: "The divorce between church and state ought to be absolute. It ought to be so absolute that no church property anywhere, in any state, or in the nation, should be exempt from equal taxation. For if you exempt the property of any church organization, to that extent you impose a church tax on the whole community." This fact was plainly apparent to Garfield's comprehension, and he had the courage, in this instance, to declare his convictions.

Freethinkers! can you afford to be careless, unheeding, indifferent, while this God-in-the-Constitution party is growing in importance and power? They claim to have enrolled 3,000 members in one year, and they are not all obscure individuals. Several papers are published by this association, or under its auspices, and some twenty-five conventions and hundreds of meetings were held last year, according to reports of its executive committee, which met at Pittsburg one month ago. One contributor laid down his check for $1,000. Who will do that for mental liberty? They promise to enlarge their operations, and are showing remarkable activity—employing seven district secretaries, constantly holding meetings, conventions, addressing churches, circulating petitions, and extending its membership, which boasts a formidable army of doctors of divinity, and prominent and influential men. The most alarming of all is that several members of the supreme court are said to favor this scheme of church and state. Their latest move is to raise a $50,000 fund to send their organ of prohibition to the 60,000 ministers whose addresses they have. This, they claim, will "bring the entire ministry on our side, and with them will come the church, and that means victory, for prohibition means the reign of King Jesus." They have also sent a congratulation and appeal to the headquarters of the Prohibition party, from which I take this brief extract:

"We rejoice in the fact that the Temperance reformation has become so distinctively a Christian movement, and we hail its approaching triumph as the enthronement, so far, of the law of Christ in our national life. We have * * * listened with delight to the frequent and explicit acknowledgment in its platform of the government of Almighty God and the supreme authority of his laws. In repeated instances in the platforms of county conventions, in at least three different states, express acknowledgment has been made of Jesus Christ as the king of nations, a fact peculiarly interesting and gratifying to Christian hearts."

Let Liberals remember that they who aid Prohibition also help crown Christ as king of our republic.

Dr. Edward McGlynn, the excommunicated priest, in a recent letter to a society formed in New York to agitate the taxation of church property, said: "What I say now is what I said in the New York Sun in 1870. I am glad to know that what was said so long ago is in spirit and substance, and largely in phrasology, the same as the Nine Demands of the American Secular Union. I can cordially and unreservedly subscribe to those demands, and should be glad to see them adopted by appropriate changes in our constitutions, state and federal."

To agitate these questions, to spread these views, until the American people are fully aroused to their importance and resolved to act, in the mission of the Secular Union and the duty of its members. Taxation without representation was the cause of one disturbance here; it is high time for a second revolt against church and state encroachments.

Church and state? What do we mean by that? We mean that in all history the freedom of the people has always been destroyed when theocratic domination has gained power over any government or its laws. "To smother its grand adversary, Liberty," says the faithful historian, Guizot, "has ever been the first and last aim of the church. The overthrow of freedom is its mission and its hope. No man can read its history, the doings of its conventions, its laws and canons, without perceiving that in every act its aim has been to crush human liberty, under pretext of piety, and to found a tyrannical despotism, civil and religious."

E. A. STEVENS.

SECRETARY STEVENS ABROAD.

The secretary made a flying trip to Detroit on the evening of the 27th, supposing that arrangements for a lecture the succeeding night were being perfected. As to the anticipated meeting, however, his mission was a failure, as the party he relied on for the preliminary work could not devote the requisite time. Nevertheless, I hope soon to return, when the disappointment can only be on the part of the audience. That will be my opportunity for justifiable retribution. While in Detroit my visit was made agreeable by the veteran Freethinker, Edward Choep, and his sons, and my friend Carl Schulenberg. I readily enlisted Mr. Choep as a life member in the American Secular Union. A meeting will be arranged in March or April, and we shall have the pleasure of assisting in stirring up this stronghold of orthodoxy.

During my two days' sojourn the Detroit common council and the entire community were shaken from center to circumference, while your correspondent had the ineffable satisfaction of reading the indignant fluttering of the morning papers at what they styled the "insulting resolutions" which had disgraced their council chamber. It was the most sensational session the Detroit common council has held in a long time, for Detroit was formerly my home, and I am somewhat familiar with its political picnics. The headlines and editorials all denounced Alderman Jacobs for insulting the intelligence and respectability of the city by offering the following:

WHEREAS, The state law exempts all property owned and occupied for religious, educational, and charitable purposes from taxation; and

WHEREAS, The value of such property in this city aggregates some $7,000,000, or about 5 per cent. of the total assessed valuation of all property assessed for taxation for the year 1887; and

WHEREAS, They receive all the benefits of municipal government, such as police and fire protection, without contributing anything to the expense thereof; therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on License be, and they are hereby, directed to prepare and present to this council a schedule of license fees to be paid annually by all churches, hospitals, asylums, private or denominational schools, together with all hotels, restaurants, lunch-houses, club-houses, opera houses, public halls, and places of amusement, skating rinks, toboggan slides, baseball and cricket grounds, sporting houses, and all houses of prostitution; also all railroad corporations.

Had a dynamite bomb been thrown into the council chamber, it could scarcely have created greater consternation, and it took some seconds for the members to draw a breath long enough to reply. When Alderman Burt rose to his feet, he moved that a committee be appointed to examine into Alderman Jacobs's sanity. Then there was a chorus, "I think so, too."

A motion was then made to indefinitely postpone the resolution, but Alderman Jacobs's friends did not wish to do that; they wished to have it aired. Several city fathers desired to place themselves right before the church-going community, and protested against coupling them with houses of prostitution generally in this style.

Alderman Trombly: "I am astonished at such a resolution being brought here. It is preposterous. The resolution ought to be killed right here."

Alderman Jacobs boldly returned to the attack: "I don't believe that Alderman Trombly should tax me for his religion, to support his churches. It is the same with railroad property. The firemen run first to railroad property, or to a costly church that don't pay a cent of taxes, and let the poor man's cottage burn."

Alderman Gilmore thought church property, charitable institutions, and hospitals should pay taxes; but he did not believe in coupling them with houses of prostitution. After further discussion, the motion to indefinitely postpone was defeated—16 to 14. Then a motion was adopted by a large majority "to strike out churches, charitable institutions, and hospitals." So the secular portion of the resolution is, for the time being, defeated. However, Alderman Jacobs is still in the ring and ready to make it unpleasant for the pious tax-dodgers, even if it is considered an "insult" to their intelligence. All honor to Alderman Jacobs for his manly, though impolitic, resolutions.

This proves that the harvest is ripe for secular work in the city of Detroit, but the laborers are few and hard to be found. I hope that Alderman Jacobs's fusillade may be the effective forerunner to future secular success, and that soon our declaration of "justice for all; privileges for none," shall find a staunch band of adherents in the city of Detroit.

OUR CAUSE IN QUINCY, ILLINOIS.

Some months ago I was in that city where Romanism holds undisputed sway, and sought out some one to take an active interest in the work of the American Secular Union. I mentioned in my articles to the Freethought press that I had made the acquaintance of Mr. I. S. Lee, whom I found anxious to espouse the cause as lecturer and organizer. Subsequently I commissioned Judge Lee as special agent, and he has proved a splendid worker. He has built up a society, obtained a charter, given lectures in Merrick Hall, and induced a young gentleman, the son of a minister and a student at the college, to take the Liberal platform with him. The society in Quincy numbers some of its leading citizens and solid business men.

Judge Lee is a born doubter; a lover of independence; a Freethinker and Secularist, "grounded and rooted in bed-rock granite," as a friend remarks. He is familiar with all the religious philosophies, and is an explorer in the domain of nature, and I hope that the friends of Freethought and secular justice in Southern Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri will furnish him plenty of employment in the near future in the work he loves to perform.

JOTTINGS.

Chicago Secular Union continues to have crowded houses, and has engaged a splendid professional quartette for the regular Sunday evening services, which will be under the leadership of Bro. M. J. S. Card. There is nothing too good for Chicago.

Clerical scandals have become epidemic, and the most scandalous of all is the Brushingham case in Chicago—a young girl, betrayed, a mother, and penniless, while a pitiless congregation professes to believe in the innocence of their shepherd. The frequency of these scandals has taken all the sensation of novelty out of them, and our Freethought friends will doubtless thank me for ignoring the salacious details. These "divines" are much more devilish than men.

Dr. Severance's address at the Chicago Secular Union, on Sunday night, January 29, is out in pamphlet form, as is also that of the writer at the entertainment the following evening.

Chicago Union contemplates celebrating Thomas Jefferson's birthday April 13, which reminds me that to-day (Feb. 20) is the birthday of the great epoch maker of France, Francois Marie Arouet, better known as Voltaire. He who was born 194 years ago to-day literally crushed old systems of theology, and though his wit and sarcasm twice brought him to the bastille and to exile they finally brought him a deathless fame. E. A. STEVENS, Secretary A. S. U.

LILIAN'S STORY.

Lilian does not allow our Children's Department to languish. We are this week enabled to lay before our readers the following "edicle" from her pen:

A BALL ON A LILY LEAF.

BY A. LILIAN ANDREWS, AGED 10.

CHAPTER I.

A Musketo gave a ball. He invited the gnats, the butterflies, the dragonfly, the beetles, and the tumblebugs to his Ball. They were dancing on a lily leaf, when snap went the stem, and oh! the Ball went too.

"What are all these things?" cried Alice, and dropped the Lily Leaf in the stream and it floated down the stream with the insects dancing on the Lily Leaf.

The butterfly spread her wings and flew home, the dragonfly and musketo flew next; then the beetles; last the tumblebugs.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Too many Liberals are indifferent. They do not realize how deeply their personal welfare is blended with the progress of all. One's own advancement and comparative security should not make him careless of those who need his knowledge and broader outlook. The degradation of the lowest mars the nobility of the highest.

"OUR FATHER IN HEAVEN."I Kings xviii, 27.*

"O God, have mercy!" a mother cried,
As she humbly knelt at the cradle side.
"O God, have mercy and hear my prayer,
And take my babe in thy tender care.
The Angel of Death is in the room,
And is calling loud for my babe to come.
Thou, thou alone, hast power to save;
O God, have mercy! 'tis all I crave."
* * * * *

A tiny grave, 'neath a willow's shade,
Telleth the answer the Merciful made.
"O Father in heaven, protect my boy
From the wiles of Folly, from Sin's decoy;
From the snares of Temptation in Life's dark sea
Guard him and keep him pure for thee."
So a mother prayed as her darling one
Went forth to battle the world alone—
Alone, save the blessing his mother gave,
And that prayer to God to keep and save.

* * * * *

A murderer's gibbet, high in air,
Answered the trusting mother's prayer.

A father and mother knelt them down
Together, before the Eternal One,
And with trusting hearts implored that Heaven
Would guard the flower its grace had given—
Would keep their blossoming daughter pure,
And guard her eye from the Tempter's lure;
And from every stain would keep her free
As the lilies that bloom in eternity.

* * * * *

A self-slain lost one, seduced, betrayed,
Was the only answer Heaven made.

A beautiful maiden knelt to pray
For the life of a loved one far away—
Away on the fields where life and death
Hang poised in the scales that tip with a breath:
"O Father of Mercies, protect the heart
Of him I love from the foeman's dart.
When the death-bolts rain on the charging field,
Be thou his strength and guide and shield!"

* * * * *

A mangled corpse and a soldier's grave
Were the answer the Father of Mercies gave.

The night was dark on the ocean's breast,
And the waves rolled high in wild unrest,
Where a stately bark was dashing on
Towards a breaker's crest, with the rudder gone.
Around the capstan, in wild despair,
The crew had gathered, and joined in prayer
To Him who only had power to save—
To deliver them from a watery grave.

* * * * *

A crash and a gulping wave alone
Were the answer of the Omnipotent One.

At noon of night, in the city's heart,
When slumber reigned o'er home and mart,
The fire-fiend burst from his secret place,
And wrapped all things in his fierce embrace.
Oh, then how many a frenzied prayer
To heaven for safety rent the air—
For homes! for lives! for loves—and then
The flames that crisped them sneered, "Amen."

* * * * *

Homes, friends, and loved ones, crisped and charred,
Told how Heaven the prayer had heard.

From the earliest dawn of Nature's birth,
Since sorrow and sin first darkened the earth;
From sun to sun, from pole to pole,
Where'er the waves of Humanity roll,
The breezy robe this planet wears
Has quivered and echoed with countless prayers.
Each hour a million knees are bent,
A million prayers to Heaven are sent;
There's not a summer beam but sees
Some humble suppliant on his knees;
There's not a breeze that murmurs by
But wafts some faithful prayer on high;
There's not a woe afflicts our race
But someone bears to the Throne of Grace;
And for every temptation our souls may meet
We ask for grace at the Mercy Seat.

* * * * *

The beams smile on, and Heaven serene
Still bends, as though no prayers had been,
And the breezes moan, as still they wave.
"When man is powerless, Heaven cannot save."
—Charles Stephenson.

CORRESPONDENCE.The Aim of Freethought.To the Editors of Freethought:

We have received several copies of your paper FREETHOUGHT, and inclosed you will find $2 for one year's subscription. I have no doubt as to it being a success. I hope FREETHOUGHT will prosper in its double work of tearing down the falsehoods taught mankind in the past, concerning his relationship with that fellow God, and building up true principles based on solid facts, reaching all the way up from the known to the unknown. Yours truly, J. B. JOHNSON.
Kidd, W. T., Feb. 23, 1888.

We are Apostrophized.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I have carefully read a copy
Of FREETHOUGHT. May its pearls
Forever be a blessing
To men, women, boys, and girls.

May it always cheer and comfort,
May it ever lead to light,
And may it always battle
'Gainst superstition's blight.

May it ever grow and prosper
There, at the Golden Gate,
Until it's read and welcomed,
In every home and state.

I see its aim is noble,
Yes, beautiful and grand,
For naught on earth is better
Than freedom for our land.

For Freethought leads to freedom,
From error's fearful chains,
And banishment of hell-fire,
With everlasting pains.

Can any one do better
Or anything more kind,
Than to chase away the goblins
That distress the human mind;

And in place of superstition
And its ever-burning hell,
To teach men to be happy
While here on earth they dwell?

Then teach the facts of science,
Show that the gospel plan
Can never save the sinner,
And will surely curse the man.

Show how it breeds contention
Between the man and wife,
And instead of bringing peace on earth
How it brings the sword of strife.

Teach the people to be human,
Loving, gentle, kind, and true,
And that all the gods and devils
Are the church's bugaboo.

Teach that helping one another
Is the noblest work of man,
And that all we know of heaven
Is no more than eyes can scan;

Or no more than heart discovers
In its efforts to do good,
For the human race fraternal—
Universal brotherhood.

Man, with all his heavenly yearnings,
Is but product of the earth,
And takes hence no more in dying
Than he brought here at his birth.

W. O. WILLIAMS.

Tooele, Utah, Feb. 10, 1888.

Occurrences in Iowa.To the Editors of Freethought:*

The cheering evidence of progress is manifest in the receipt of the first number of FREETHOUGHT. Long may your banner wave. We need a thousand more to help the struggling millions to shake off the nightmare of old effete theology.

The Lord seems to "move in very mysterious ways his wonders to perform" over here. I suppose "it is him that worketh in the people to will and to do, and all for his own good pleasure." The Women's Christian Temperance Union and the American National Reform Association seem to have become very fraternal. They both want to get God in the Constitution, Jesus Christ to be the ruler of nations, the Bible in the public schools, and they especially want more stringent Sunday laws. They would like to see us "walking reverently to and from church." I think they would sooner go back to their "philips," and "todies," and "faggots," than to see the cause of temperance prevail. Prohibition of intoxicants is inconsistent with all their Bible teaching and all their past history. I have seen the Bible in the public schools, and the principal use I ever saw of it was some of the boys hunting out and passing around some of its obscene texts.

Then another strange thing has occurred over here. The Lord sent a rushing mighty wind out of the north, the other day; the people call it a "blizzard." It swept from Maine to the Rocky mountains; perhaps it didn't reach you Infidels over there, but here it was terrible. It came about the time of dismissing the school children, and it froze a great many to death. Men were frozen to death within fifteen feet of their own doors. A mysterious providence. I think it would be well for some of the good Christian people to try and find out what is the matter; what great sin we have committed, that we may make restitution for the same and ward off another such calamity. I have been trying to think what it can be, and I have come to the conclusion it's because Grover Cleveland forgot to mention the name of the "Supreme Ruler of the Universe" in his late message to Congress. I see he is being severely criticised for the omission. It could only have been an oversight. He was thinking more of reducing the revenues than about the Supreme Being just at that moment. Cleveland has no seven sons to be hung up as a sacrifice, like unto Saul, of olden time, but they might take his wife and hang her up over against Arlington Heights; that might do. I hope it won't be done.

We had Mr. Remsburg here on the 16th of January, in the cold time. He had a very good house; spoke to good acceptance. We expect Mrs. M. A. Freeman here the 25th and 26th instant. We want to keep the ball a-rolling. One of our editors here seems quite badly affected ever since you were here. He seems to have a kind of phobia. I don't know whether it is hydrophobia or spiritphobia; he seems to kind of froth over. It's probably all a kind of dread of common sense. He doesn't even dare to come out here, but stands off and calls us "names." He is entirely void of arguments, like all the rest of them; I will close by wishing you the best success, and hope your shadows may never grow less.

H. S. HOLCOMB.

Shenandoah, Iowa, Feb. 1, 1888.

Orthographical Rhymes.

There was an old maid of Mobile,
Whose shoes were run down at the hile;
So she had them built high,
And cried loudly "Oh, migh!
How hunki and scrumptious I file!"

Sam Plodder, who ate too much steak,
Found quickly his stomach did eak;
So he swallowed a drachm

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument MR. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM

President of the American Secular Union,

Will make his annual lecture tour for 1888 in California, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, Washington Territory, Arizona, Idaho, Montana, and Utah. The purpose of these lectures is the organization of Freethought Societies, the discussion and advancement of the Nine Demands of Liberalism, the acquaintance and fraternal association of the Liberal people of this country.

It is necessary that those who desire lectures shall communicate at once, in order that at the earliest possible moment the route may be laid out, so that the largest number of places can be visited with the greatest economy of resources. Our country is so vast in extent, and railroad expenses are so great, that lectures must be given on a pre-arranged route.

It is best, if possible, to arrange for two or more lectures, rather than for one. The expense of advertising is no greater, and much more good can be accomplished—a larger interest will be excited—and there will be a better opportunity for information in regard to the magnitude of our cause and the importance of our principles.

The following are some of the subjects of the lectures, dealing both with the destructive and constructive aspects of Secular work—and its scientific and literary form—giving special attention to the political significance of the Nine Demands:

Universal Mental Liberty,

The New Heaven and Earth,

The Glory of Infidelity,

American Democracy,

The New God,

The Bible: Its Genuineness, Authenticity, Inspiration, and Infallibility,

Thomas Paine: The Thinker, The Patriot,

The Moralist, and the Scholar.

The Moral Power of Unbelief,

Fair Play,

The Dangers Ahead,

Woman and the Bible,

Science and Theology,

Priest, King and People,

Creation and Evolution; or, Miracle and Law,

The Works of Man and the Works of God;

or, Civilization vs. The Raw Material.

The terms of the lectures will be made reasonable to all societies and individuals who desire to co-operate with the work of the American Secular Union. It is expected that hall rent, advertising and local expenses will be provided for—and beyond this, that every Liberal will do his best to help the general cause. By combination of effort local organization can be strengthened and universal interest aroused. The local work and national work depend upon each other. The local work is of the first importance; it is the vital force of the movement—but to have simply local enterprise is to destroy the noblest spirit of Freethought, which is world-wide in its relations. It is through the Union that the broadest humanitarian results can be achieved.

Will not friends instantly interest themselves in this matter, and arrange for lectures, so that dates and subjects may be given, and every possible point be made available for work?

PRESS NOTICES, ETC.

Mr. Putnam is one of the most thorough believers in intellectual liberty in the world. He has written some of the most stirring appeals to the Liberals of this country that I have ever read. He believes that Freethought has a future; that the time is coming when the superstitions of this world will be forgotten—or remembered—some of them with smiles, most of them with tears. Mr. Putnam, although endowed with a poetic nature, with poetic insight, clings to the known, builds upon the experience of man, and believes in fancies only when they are used as the wings of fact. His abilities are of the highest order. He compels the admiration of every one who really loves the just and true.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Putnam, the Freethinker, is the best posted and best talker we have ever had on Wood river. The theater has been crowded every night whenever Mr. Putnam was advertised to speak.—Inter-Idaho, Hailey, Idaho.

S. P. Putnam was greeted by a large and appreciative audience on Sunday night last, and if close attention, interrupted only by frequent rounds of applause, indicates anything, nearly all present felt that they were enjoying a rare intellectual treat, and more than compensated for their time and attention. Putnam is a calm, clear-headed Liberal thinker, a sound reasoner and an eloquent speaker, and is apparently incapable of giving offense to any one who is an honest, earnest seeker for truth.—Avant-Courier, Bozeman, Montana.

Mr. Putnam is an eloquent, attractive, and entertaining speaker, and his remarks were frequently interrupted by applause.—Rocky Mountain Daily News, Denver, Colorado.

Samuel P. Putnam has been entertaining our people with a course of lectures on Freethought. The seating capacity of the hall on Friday evening was inadequate to accommodate the audience. The speaker during his stay showed himself to be a man of extraordinary ability, holding his audiences continually wrapped up in his subjects.—Times, Black Hawk, Colorado.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MARCH 17, 1888

THERE are said to be but nine Christain missionaries in Siam among a population of nine millions. Let all the heathen nations join in singing, "Just as Siam."

OUR escape from the flames which devastated some of the other offices in the building is due, it is hinted, to the intercession of providence, which is holding its fire in reserve for a future occasion. We see no reason, however, for introducing any foreign and invisible element, when the activity of the fire department is quite sufficient to account for the facts as they stand.

A FREETHINKER in this city whose model Freethought journal is the New York Independent (Congregational) objects to this paper because it is not conducted on a sufficiently high plane. He is evidently unaware that the building we tenant is only three stories high. The exigencies which bring this criticism upon us are of course regretted, but we see no way out of it until the rainy season has sufficiently abated to permit of our occupying the roof.

IN 1807 Napoleon, speaking of the Sunday labor of Jews, said: "The Jew has his necessities on Sunday as well as on the week days. The government could not pass a law compelling him to be idle on Sunday unless it could give bread to those who have none!" This remark is an answer to the Sabbatarians of our day. If the religious people wish a man to be idle on Sunday, let them feed him and pay him for the time thus wasted. There will then be no necessity for Sunday laws against servile labor.

SOME New York Socialists applied to Mayor Hewitt for permission to produce a play illustrating Socialistic doctrines. In reply the mayor is reported to have said: "You have a right to present your Socialistic ideas. It is said that I agree with you in some particulars of political economy, and, if so, I am glad we go together so far. Now, you have a right to give a play teaching that there is no God. You can found the triumphs of a hero or heroine on that belief. You have a right to present such thoughts as do not oppose the administration of the law. The police have nothing to do, either as judges of facts or as public servants, with the question of morality in the play." If the mayor said this, and we trust he did, he possesses clearer ideas of constitutional liberty than the average magistrate is endowed with.

OUR esteemed Presbyterian contemporary, the Occident, thus laments: "It is one of the saddest facts in connection with our Presbyterian church in San Francisco that, for a number of years past, there has been no advance in the way of new organizations. With possibly one exception, there has not been a church of our denomination organized nor a building erected in this city during the last ten or twelve years. We are mortified most deeply in confessing the fact; it is shameful and deplorable in its sadness." It must deepen the Presbyterians' woe to realize that there are none to share their grief.

WITH reference to the untrue reports concerning the work on the Lick telescope, Prof. J. A. Brashear writes to the Pittsburg, Pa., Dispatch: "The writer of this article is personally acquainted with those who have done the greater part of the work, and he believes that everything has been done conscientiously, carefully, and as near correctly as human judgment could do it, and he also believes that every man has had a personal pride in the successful issue of the great undertaking. Private letters from observers, with whom I am well acquainted, have assured me that they are perfectly satisfied that the trustees, the director, the advisors, and all connected with the construction of the physical and astronomical apparatus of this great observatory have done their best to make it what James Lick designed it to be. My own opinion, though it may be unfounded, is that the writer of the article was some unsatisfied person who failed of getting one of the contracts and takes this short route to condemn the work of men who have done their duty and have given to the astronomer and observatory an equipment second to none in the world."

NEWS AND NOTES.

National City still looks upon the sea with brightening crest. Coronado Beach and the big hotel and handsome cottages shine in the tropical air, while the splendid ocean gives its everlasting music to the glistening shores, and the bright bay spreads its peaceful waters. Far to the south the beautiful Mexican mountains attract the view, while to the eastward roll the snow-capped hills with innumerable heights, amid whose rugged bosom fruitful valleys gleam.

The rain was pouring heavily when I arrived, bearing the wealth of millions in its misty floods. However, our cheerful comrade, A. N. Burgess, was on hand to make merry music for the pilgrim's heart, in spite of storm and darkness. We sped away to Mount Paradise, preferable to the New Jerusalem for its joy and entertainment. No wings, no harps here, but the pleasures of an enlightened humanity.

The mists roll off and Saturday burst brilliant on the gaze. It was a delight indeed to view the far-shining sea; the blue sky over which the white troops of clouds went prancing by the scattered city, flecking the green earth for miles away to the foothills, while near at hand the orange groves mingle bloom and fruit, and the rose and geranium and calla lily make the very threshold of spring brilliant with summer's glory. So far as climate is concerned, one can desire no more than what is in this sunlighted and flowery world. I think it would cure one's heart of many aches and pains to live on Mount Paradise, and the perpetual benediction of the mountains and the sea.

A. N. Burgess is an active worker, and amid the hubbub of real estate transactions knows how to advertise a Freethought lecture, so that people will understand that something is going on. Grangers' Hall was filled on Sunday afternoon. Wm. Burgess, the father of the Burgess family, who would make an audience in themselves of Freethinkers, delivered an excellent introductory address, stating the value of the truth, and that to search for it is the noblest privilege of the human mind. This made a happy opening for my discourse on American Democracy, wherein I endeavored to express the essential principles of Liberty and Justice in the government of the state, as formulated in the Nine Demands of Liberalism. The desire was universal to have another lecture in the evening, and I spoke again to a full house, on "Universal Mental Liberty." These are the first Freethought lectures ever given in National City, and the outlook for future work is full of promise. There is a staunch band of Radicals in this place, who are not afraid to be counted for reason and humanity. I had the pleasure of attending church after my afternoon's lecture; that is, the Unitarian church. I don't think there would be much pleasure in attending any other church. But under the broad and genial ministrations of a clergyman like the Rev. Mr. McDaniel there is a pleasure in the sanctuary where the walls are almost broken down, and the universal light of nature is flooding in. Mr. McDaniel is just as free and reasonable and bright as it is possible for one in the pulpit to be, and I rejoice in the success of his labors.

I enjoyed, on Sunday afternoon, the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Watts Burgess, who have a lively family of Freethinking children to carry on the flag of liberty. The Quaker blood is predominant here, and the "inner light" flashes forth. Mr. Burgess is a thorough-going temperance man and leader of the Good Templars' organization in National City; but I don't think he takes much stock in my friend Bruce's method of Prohibition, which is essentially a church method, and opposed to human rights. Friend Bruce will find this out when he has thought the matter through. In every case Prohibition runs to tyranny, hypocrisy, and injustice. When Prohibitionists hang people without trial, and rifle the beds of the sick without warrant, it is about time for the American people to resist such ecclesiastical warfare and adopt more civilized means of suppressing an evil. The way to temperance is by the broad, beautiful, and ennobling paths of Freethought.

My namesake, Samuel McHenry, is in favor of cleanliness if not godliness. He keeps a first-class bathing-house and does more good to humanity than all the washings of the priest. He is one of the veterans of the army here. He has been on the coast for years and all the saints of the church have not held him from the ranks of freedom. He is a generous comrade, and furnishes the sinews of war with open hand.

Silas C. Field is eighty-six years of age. He has had an eventful life. He tried the Methodist church, the Episcopal church, and finally the Roman Catholic church, in which he remained twenty-two years, and occupied prominent positions, and even to-day he has not been excommunicated. It is expected that before he is a hundred years old he will return to the bosom of the church. But the torch of reason is flaming too bright for such a consummation. His mind is clear to-day and well trained in the principles of truth and logic. He is an expert in chemistry and astronomy, and the clergymen have learned to beware of his keen thrusts and stores of learning. His wife is eighty-five years of age, and I enjoyed my visit with these advanced Freethinkers, in whom the spirit of youth still prevails, and who have had so rich an experience.

Another pleasant friend is Mr. Joseph Ryan, recently from London, England, of the school of Frederic Harrison and Comte. He is a gentleman of means, and intends to make National City his home, and will be quite an acquisition to our Freethought ranks. His wife is an excellent artist, an enthusiast of progress. Our friends purpose to open an elegant art store at National City and will act as agents for FREETHOUGHT and receive subscriptions and orders for books.

C. B. Roberts, Mr. Longshore—a name familiar to Liberal thinkers in the land; Mr. Ward, of Rochester, N. Y.; "Uncle Josh," Mr. Griffith, and others are also among the Liberals of National City. Also Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, from far-off Boston, brought the spirit of Theodore Parker, among whose early and stalwart defenders was the father of Mr. Thomas, when the conflict was fiercer than now and even Unitarianism was rampant with orthodox hate, and thrust Theodore Parker from the fold.

The campaign has thus been one of varied interest and delight. From all parts of the world the Freethinker comes, and at every spot we touch the springs of universal life. We anticipate congenial work in this thriving place. There is every evidence of growth and prosperity. Manufactories will be built, the country—once waste—is now rapidly improving, and the barren hills are prolific. Friends have given ample encouragement and the star of Hope is in the sky.

March 5, 1888.

Del Mar, "by the sea," as its name indicates, is indeed an enchanting place when the sunshine is upon it and the winds are soft. The Pacific, with its eighty millions of square miles, tumbles upon its beach with varying song. All about the horizon stretch the magnificent mountains from Mexico to the San Bernardino range. Friend Shaug lives on Thermal Heights, two and one-half miles from the shore. His house is built on a rock—built by an Infidel, and so it will stand. About spread the green fields where, two years ago, there was only brushwood. The fruit trees are almost in bloom, and the garden shines with every variety of flower. A lovely home indeed has been hewn out of the wilderness. All this country was thought, a decade ago, to be given over to desolation and the wandering herd. It was not thought capable of cultivation. Land was sold at from one to three dollars per acre. It is now sold from forty to one hundred dollars per acre. Oranges, apricots, almonds, olives, and grapes are produced; also wheat, barley, oats, and corn, and all varieties of vegetables. In some sections the finest of apples are raised. With the rains of this season there is promise of abundant yield. I am surprised at the fruitfulness of the soil, and the process of improvement is rapidly going on. Friend Shaug is a thorough student of nature, and has lost all faith in theology. He has been a great trouble to the clergymen. He has kept the press alive with his attacks upon their solemn absurdities. He knows the weak spot of the church as well as he knows the fruitful places of the earth, and he goes for both; and the pretensions of the one are knocked to flinders while the harvests of the other flourish. Mr. Shaug was born into the Methodist church, and his father was one of its most zealous advocates. But he could not be converted, and the fires of Freethought have taken the place of theological heat.

Mrs. Shaug and all the family are Freethinkers, and it is a joy to visit this home of liberty, where the harsh tyrannies of the past are no more; where nature breathes her beauty, and humanity is sublime.

Yesterday (Wednesday) I went over with my friends to visit Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Smith, who occupy an extensive ranch about five miles away. They are earnest and cultivated Freethinkers. They dwell in what might be called Paradise Valley, on the bank of the San Diequito, where the Jersey cows do wander over the happy meadows, and the green hills melt into the rugged mountains, making a wide and varied picture to the dreamy gaze. Mr. Smith struck this country in 1850, when it was the land of gold, and it was thought that after the metals were exhausted California would be left a wilderness of shrubs. Her new and more abundant wealth of wondrous fruitage was not then dreamed of. Mr. Smith is owner of eight thousand acres—one of the Spanish grants, purchased at one dollar per acre about eight years since, and is now held at forty dollars per acre. He bought it for the sake of the valley lands with the "hills thrown in," but the hills promise to be more valuable now for cultivation than the valleys. So the old Californians are always learning something new about the resources of their country.

Wednesday evening was appointed for a lecture in the school-house. But the south winds blew, and from the breast of the ocean the storms rolled up, and it was no use; it was too dark and rainy for people to venture forth and climb the hill where towered the temple of learning, and the lecture was adjourned until to-day. The weather is still uncertain. For a while the sun is out, and then the mists of the sea rush in dark battalions and the blue speck disappears, and the melancholy winds make orthodox music. However, we shall not fret; sunshine or rain, the world rolls on to joy and truth.

It has turned out after all to be too stormy for a lecture this day. The "preventing providence" has it his own way this time. Notwithstanding the gloom outside, there is plenty of social life within, and we endure the frowning skies with cheerful philosophy, knowing, as we do, that the big rains mean a "good time coming" amid the summer's gold. Mr. and Mrs. Knowles, Mr. Ford, Mr. Dennis O'Brien are among the pleasant friends we meet here, and our flag will float and flash back the rays of the sun in spite of lowering skies. Hearts good and true will make music that will conquer all the discord of the elements.

SOMETHING WRONG.

Some weeks ago, when Hammond was running his revival meetings in Los Angeles, he found an earnest assistant and coadjutor in Rev. Dr. John Linwood, late of London, Ontario. He had connected himself prominently with the Young Men's Christian Association, and his prayers and exhortations to "flee from the wrath to come" and "come to Jesus just now," were noted for their fervor and unction. In fact, next to the great Evangelist Hammond, Dr. Linwood was regarded as the leader of the revival.

But letters have been recently received from Canada by the secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at Los Angeles, giving such an account of Linwood's antecedents as has compelled the association to withdraw "the hand of Christian fellowship" from him, and has led him to leave for other parts. Among the letters received was one from the deserted wife of Linwood, who represented himself in Los Angeles as a single man. Mrs. Linwood states that her husband has not only treated her in a brutal and violent manner, but that she has good reasons to believe that he had planned to get rid of her and their child by burning or blowing up the house. The Y. M. C. A. and Dr. Hammond, of course, could not sustain such a scamp, and they did not; but it shows a screw loose somewhere, when such a man can pass himself off for weeks as a first-class A No. 1 saint.

WE take it that it is not necessary to remind our readers too often of the good they may accomplish by extending the circulation of FREETHOUGHT. Kind words are cheering, and criticisms clarify the mind, but there are material and financial aspects of the case which demand attention. Those who will work for FREETHOUGHT and procure subscribers will be allowed a liberal cash commission. Our rates are: One copy per year, $2; two copies, $3; three copies, $4; four copies, $5. Now let the names come in.

WHY should an aged and wealthy man, shuffling heavily and painfully to the grave, make his last days turbulent with war upon those who are doing the work that his clumsy hands have only injured by their touch? Why should he disgrace a cause he might help? Why leave humanity and honor at the top of the hill of life, while he goes stumbling down the decline, supported only by the rotten crutches of enmity and spite? Though a man be without child or friend, he may, if he will, still hear the birds singing even in the leafless and fruitless branches of the tree of age.

An Acrostic.

Freedom is the vital word;
Ring the changes of its scope;
Every woman, child, and man
Everywhere be cheered with hope.
Thought is master of the world;
He who thinks is sure to win,
On his earnest brow you trace
Unbounded power to cope with sin.
Great be the power of this FREETHOUGHT,
High as heaven its echoes ring:
Thought is master, Thought is king! M. A. L.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Emperor William of Germany died Friday morning, the 9th. He was nearly 91 years old. His successor, the crown prince Frederick William, is 56 years of age and is fatally stricken with cancer of the throat. He will be followed by Prince William, a young man of 29. The mourning which people are indulging in is for the man. The king, unfortunately, survives.—The viticulturists have been holding a convention in this city. The Hon. A. Schell, well-known to Freethinkers, is an attendant from Knight's Ferry, where he has a large interest in grape culture.—A man named Warner, hanged at Louisville, Ky., last week, delivered the following effective temperance discourse from the scaffold: "I have a few remarks to make before I die. If any of you take a glass of whisky, before you put it to your lips think of Macey Warner with this rope in his hand, and then look into the bottom of the glass and see if you cannot see the rope there."—Labouchere's motion against a hereditary House of Lords was negatived in the English Commons by a vote of 223 to 163. The Gladstonians and Parnellites supported the motion.—The House Committee on Military Affairs has determined

The contest was then pronounced a draw.—Henry Bergh, the founder of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, died March 12, aged 68.—A terrific blizzard visited the Atlantic coast states the first part of this week. New York city was snowbound; trains stopped running, and business generally was suspended, according to report.

A Liberal Journal.

FREETHOUGHT is the name of a new Liberal journal, the first number of which has reached our table, published in San Francisco by Samuel P. Putnam, President of the American Secular Association, and George E. Macdonald, formerly of the Truth Seeker. It is published weekly, at $2 per year, and is brimful of good things. It is a publication much needed on this coast, and should receive the hearty support of all. We wish it unbounded success. It will be remembered that Mr. Putnam delivered two lectures in this city last summer. He is getting ready for another tour of the coast during the coming summer, and the towns desiring to hear him lecture should communicate with him at once, so that his route may be arranged before he starts out. Union will not fail to be on the list.—Oregon Scout.

ART AND MORALITY.

The following paragraphs are from an article by Robert G. Ingersoll in the North American Review:

Our fathers read with great approbation the mechanical sermons in rhyme written by Milton, Young, and Pollock. Those theological poets wrote for the purpose of convincing their readers that the mind of man is diseased, filled with infirmities, and that poetic poultices and plasters tend to purify and strengthen the moral nature of the human race.

Poems were written to prove that the practice of virtue was an investment for another world, and that whoever followed the advice found in those solemn, insincere, and lugubrious rhymes, although he might be exceedingly unhappy in this world, would with great certainty be rewarded in the next. These writers assumed that there was a kind of relation between rhyme and religion, between verse and virtue, and that it was their duty to call the attention of the world to all the snares and pitfalls of pleasure. They wrote with a purpose. They had a distinct moral end in view. They had a plan. They were missionaries, and their object was to show the world how wicked it was, and how good they, the writers, were. They could not conceive of a man being so happy that everything in nature partook of his feeling; that all the birds were singing for him, and singing by reason of his joy; that everything sparkled and shone and moved in the glad rhythm of his heart. They could not appreciate this feeling. They could not think of this joy guiding the artist's hand, seeking expression in form and color. They did not look upon poems, pictures, and statues as results, as children of the brain fathered by sea and sky, by flower and star, by love and light. They were not moved by gladness. They felt the responsibility of perpetual duty. They had a desire to teach, to sermonize, to point out and exaggerate the faults of others, and to describe the virtues practiced by themselves. Art became a colporteur, a distributor of tracts, a mendicant missionary, whose highest ambition was to suppress all heathen joy.

Happy people were supposed to have forgotten, in a reckless moment, duty and responsibility. True poetry would call them back to a realization of their meanness and their misery. It was the skeleton at the feast, the rattle of whose bones had a rhythmic sound. It was the forefinger of warning and doom held up in the presence of a smile.

These moral poets taught the unwelcome truths, and by the paths of life put posts on which they painted hands pointing at graves. They loved to see the pallor on the cheek of youth, while they talked, in solemn tones, of age, decrepitude, and lifeless clay.

Before the eyes of love they thrust, with eager hands, the skull of death. They crushed the flowers beneath their feet and plaited crowns of thorns for every brow.

According to these poets, happiness was inconsistent with virtue. The sense of infinite obligation should be perpetually present. They assumed an attitude of superiority. They denounced and calumniated the reader. They enjoyed his confusion when charged with total depravity. They loved to paint the sufferings of the lost, the worthlessness of human life, the littleness of mankind, and the beauties of an unknown world. They knew but little of the heart. They did not know that without passion there is no virtue, and that the really passionate are the virtuous.

Art has nothing to do directly with morality or immorality. It is its own excuse for being; it exists for itself.

The artist who endeavors to enforce a lesson becomes a preacher; and the artist who tries by hint and suggestion to enforce the immoral, becomes a pander.

There is an infinite difference between the nude and the naked, between the natural and the undressed. In the presence of the pure, unconscious nude, nothing can be more contemptible than those forms in which are the hints and suggestions of drapery, the pretense of exposure, and the failure to conceal. The undressed is vulgar, the nude is pure.

The old Greek statues, frankly, proudly nude, whose free and perfect limbs have never known the sacrilege of clothes, were and are as free from taint, as pure, as stainless, as the image of the morning star trembling in a drop of perfumed dew.

Morality is the harmony between act and circumstance. It is the melody of conduct. A wonderful statue is the melody of proportion. A great picture is the melody of form and color. A great statue does not suggest labor; it seems to have been created as a joy. A great painting suggests no weariness and no effort; the greater, the easier it seems. So a great and splendid life seems to have been without effort. There is in it no idea of obligation, no idea of responsibility or of duty. The idea of duty changes to a kind of drudgery that which should be, in the perfect man, a perfect pleasure.

It has been the object of thousands of reformers to destroy the passions, to do away with desires; and could this object be accomplished, life would become a burden, with but one desire; that is to say, the desire for extinction. Art in its highest forms increases passion, gives tone and color and zest to life. But, while it increases passion, it refines. It extends the horizon. The bare necessities of life constitute a prison, a dungeon. Under the influence of art the walls expand, the roof rises, and it becomes a temple.

Art is not a sermon, and the artist is not a preacher. Art accomplishes by indirection. The beautiful refines. The perfect in art suggests the perfect in conduct. The harmony in music teaches without intention the lesson of proportion in life. The bird in his song has no moral purpose, and yet the influence is humanizing. The beautiful in nature acts through appreciation and sympathy. It does not browbeat, neither does it humiliate. It is beautiful without regard to you. Roses would be unbearable if in their red and perfumed hearts were mottoes to the effect that bears eat bad boys and that honesty is the best policy.

Art creates an atmosphere in which the proprieties, the amenities, and the virtues unconsciously grow. The rain does not lecture the seed. The light does not make rules for the vine and flower.

The heart is softened by the pathos of the perfect.

The world is a dictionary of the mind, and in this dictionary of things genius discovers analogies, resemblances, and parallels amid opposites, likeness in difference, and corroboration in contradiction. Language is but a multitude of pictures. Nearly every word is a work of art, a picture represented by a sound, and this sound represented by a mark, and this mark gives not only the sound, but the picture of something in the outward world and the picture of something within the mind, and with these words which were once pictures, other pictures are made.

The greatest pictures and the greatest statues, the most wonderful and marvelous groups, have been painted and chiseled with words. They are as fresh to-day as when they fell from human lips. Penelope still raves, weaves, and waits; Ulysses's bow is bent, and through the level rings the eager arrow flies; Cordelia's tears are falling now. The greatest gallery of the world is found in Shakespeare's book. The pictures and marbles of the Vatican and Louvre are faded, crumbling things, compared with his, in which perfect color gives to perfect form the glow and movement of passion's highest life.

Everything except the truth wears, and needs to wear, a mask. Little souls are ashamed of nature. Prudery pretends to have only those passions it cannot feel. Moral poetry is like a respectable canal that never overflows its banks. It has weirs through which slowly and without damage any excess of feeling is allowed to flow. It makes excuses for nature, and regards love as an interesting convict. Moral art paints or chisels feet, faces, and rags. It regards the body as obscene. It hides with drapery what it has not the genius purely to portray. Mediocrity becomes moral from a necessity which it has the impudence to call virtue. It pretends to regard ignorance as the foundation of purity and insists that virtue seeks the companionship of the blind.

Art creates, combines, and reveals. It is the highest manifestation of thought, of passion, of love, of intuition. It is the highest form of expression, of history, and prophecy. It allows us to look at an unmasked soul, to fathom the abysses of passion, to understand the heights and depths of love.

Compared with what is in the mind of man, the outward world almost ceases to excite our wonder. The impression produced by mountains, seas, and stars is not so great, so thrilling as the music of Wagner. The constellations themselves grow small when we read "Troilus and Cressida," "Hamlet," or "Lear."

What are seas and stars in the presence of a heroism that holds pain and death as naught? What are seas and stars compared with human hearts? What is the quarry compared with the statue?

Art civilizes because it enlightens, develops, strengthens, and ennobles. It deals with the beautiful, with the passionate, with the ideal. It is the child of the heart. To be great it must deal with the human. It must be in accordance with the experience, with the hopes, with the fears, and with the possibilities of man. No one cares to paint a palace, because there is nothing in such a picture to touch the heart. It tells of responsibility, of the prison, of the conventional. It suggests a load, it tells of apprehension, of weariness and ennui. The picture of a cottage, over which runs a vine, a little home thatched with content, with its simple life, its natural sunshine and shadow, its trees bending with fruit, its hollyhocks and pinks, its happy children, its hum of bees, is a poem—a smile in the desert of this world.

The great lady, in velvet and jewels, makes but a poor picture. There is not freedom enough in her life. She is constrained. She is too far away from the simplicity of happiness. In her thought there is too much of the mathematical. In all art you will find a touch of chaos, of liberty; and there is in all artists a little of the vagabond—that is to say, genius.

The nude in art has rendered holy the beauty of woman. Every Greek statue pleads for mothers and sisters. From these marbles come strains of music. They have filled the heart of man with tenderness and worship. They have kindled reverence, admiration, and love. The Venus de Milo, that even mutilation cannot mar, tends only to the elevation of our race. It is a miracle of majesty and beauty, the supreme idea of the supreme woman. It is a melody in marble. All the lines meet in a kind of voluptuous and glad content. The pose is rest itself. The eyes are filled with thoughts of love. The breast seems dreaming of a child.

The prudent is not the poetic; it is the mathematical. Genius is the spirit of abandon; it is joyous, irresponsible. It moves in the swell and curve of billows; it is careless of conduct and consequence. For a moment the chain of cause and effect seems broken; the soul is free. It gives an account not even to itself. Limitations are forgotten; nature seems obedient to the will; the ideal alone exists; the universe is a symphony.

Every brain is a gallery of art, and every soul is, to a greater or less degree, an artist. The pictures and statues that now enrich and adorn the walls and niches of the world, as well as those that illuminate the pages of its literature, were taken originally from the private galleries of the brain.

The soul—that is to say, the artist—compares the pictures in its own brain with the pictures that have been taken from the galleries of others and made visible. This soul, this artist, selects that which is nearest perfection in each, takes such parts as it deems perfect, puts them together, forms new pictures, new statues, and in this way creates the ideal.

To express desires, longings, ecstasies, prophecies, and passions, in form and color; to put love, hope, heroism, and triumph in marble; to paint dreams and memories with words; to portray the purity of dawn, the intensity and glory of noon, the tenderness of twilight, the splendor and mystery of night, with sounds; to give the invisible to sight and touch, and to enrich the common things of earth with gems and jewels of the mind—this is Art.

THE LATE DR. BRONSON.

There seems to be a disposition in some directions to attack the character of the late Dr. Abram Bronson, of San Diego, for the sake of the influence this course will have toward diverting his $25,000 legacy from the noble purpose for which he left it—that of erecting a Freethought hall in San Diego. Those who knew Dr. Bronson, however, and are not moved by selfish motives, will prefer to accept the estimate of H. L. Shaug, his friend and funeral orator. Mr. Shaug said:

"FRIENDS: We are assembled around this little mound as a mark of respect to a most worthy man.

"Dr. Abram Bronson was no ordinary personage. He possessed that composition of mind and character that marked him as a teacher among his fellow-men. He loved the useful and good with the same intensity of feeling that he despised the evil. What he knew he knew well, and wished the better part of his knowledge known by his fellow-creatures. He despised hypocrisy in all its forms. The creed of superstition had no lodgement in his brain. Secret clans he abhorred. Monopoly in all its forms he negated. The poor and oppressed received his aid and sympathy at all times, and when occasion offered, tyrants and oppressors of mankind received from his pen, deathly stabs. He delighted in upholding the rights of the slave, even at the risk of life or property. His early life in the campaigns against slavery merits the admiration of all. His co-workers for the oppressed are numbered among the greatest and grandest of this age. His great brain was moulded for a more advanced age than this. He did all he could with pen and in speech to break the chains of superstition that sacerdotal influences have, in the past, woven around the minds of mankind. He rested results upon acts; believed that man can get all the enjoyment he desires and that is necessary for his happiness and comfort in this world; believed and taught that one world is sufficient to consume all his thoughts and aspirations; firmly believed that man is capable of doing all the good to his fellow-man necessary to his comfort, without the assistance of supernatural agencies. He believed that the human family, through the medium of Free-thought, is rapidly reaching a higher standing in morals than it could possibly reach under the preaching of the gospel. And so we might speak on, rehearsing the many noble qualities of the heart and brain of this good man. He was a stranger to most of us, but those who knew him well and had his confidence will ever cherish his memory. Many of us may yet profit from the lesson of his loyalty to honor. He was not satisfied to relieve man of his physical disease and leave him prostrate with the mental malady of superstition, but did all in his power to place him upon his feet, mentally, morally, and physically. His aims in life arose to the highest order of usefulness, which will profit us to imitate.

"And thus this good and useful man lived to a ripe age, passing into the dreamless sleep where 'man knoweth not.' Let us hope that all suffering is ended, and that in consigning these remains to the great laboratory of Nature, where no atom will be lost, the 'God of Nature' will be their conservator for still greater and more useful purposes."

AMONG THE WORKERS.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM will be at San Jacinto and vicinity March 18, and at Anaheim and Santa Ana March 25.

C. B. REYNOLDS's lecture appointments are as follows:

Tempe, Arizona.	March	18, 19, 20.
Phoenix, "	"	21, 22, 23.
San Bernardino, Cal.,	"	25, 27, 28.
Riverside,	"	29.
San Jacinto, "	"	30, 31, 1 April.
Diamond Mines, "	April	2, 3, 4.
San Diego, "	"	6, 7, 8.
National City, "	"	9, 11, 12.
Los Angeles, "	"	14, 15.
Santa Ana, "	"	17, 18, 19.

California friends desiring lectures will please address Mr. Reynolds so letters will be at any of the above places two days ahead of dates.

THE following note is from the Salt Lake Tribune of Feb. 25: "Where are all the Mormon Israelites going that are selling out to the Egyptians their inheritances in the land of Goshen?" asked a Tribune reporter of a real estate dealer who has handled much Latter-Day Saint property. "Going? why, they're not going anywhere, except to apostatize. They are staying right here and becoming good Gentiles. A prominent ex-Saint, who only left the church recently, said to me, 'I used to believe as much as I did that the sun shone, that Brigham Young was daily in communication with the Almighty, and that no man could go to heaven unless he went into polygamy. Moreover, I have paid thousands of dollars in tithing to the Mormon church, thinking I was doing my duty. But now, in looking back, I can see that I was a d—n fool. I went to hear Dr. York the other Sunday night, and he opened my eyes, so that I am through with all these isms. The religion of humanity is good enough for me." Said the real estate man, "I am not at all surprised at this. I predicted a big falling away when I came here a year ago, and it's bound to come, the church cannot stop it."

LITERARY NOTES.

THE Ingersoll-Field discussion, which appeared in the North American Review, has been gathered into book form. The discussion makes a dollar book in cloth; in pamphlet 50 cents.

THE March number of the Puzzler is at hand. It contains eight problems calculated to interest the curious and awaken the dormant intellect. The Puzzler is published by N. D. C. Hodges, 47 Lafayette Place, New York.

JOHN PECK, a favorite writer with all Liberals, has lately appeared as an author. Two pamphlets from his pen are, "Miracles and Miracle Workers" and "Christian Absurdities." The former sells for 10 cents and the latter for 20. We sell them both and fill orders by return mail.

THE Swiss Cross, a very handsome and neat publication, is issued monthly from 47 Lafayette place, New York. The March number presents illustrated articles on "A Hindoo Town" and "The Cataracts of the Congo," and other matters pertaining to popular science. Price 15 cents.

So much admiration has been expressed for Miss Voltarine de Cleyre's poem entitled "Nameless," published in FREETHOUGHT of February 25, that it has been issued in leaflet form. It is at once a sermon, a poem, and an unanswerable argument. Copies can be furnished at 10 cents a dozen.

THE addresses at the Paine celebration in Ogden, Utah, were good ones and worthy of publication in the neat pamphlet form in which they now appear from the press of B. H. Douglass. Leo Hæfli's opening address forms a good introduction to the speech following, by Mr. John Jost, and the oration of the Hon. Ogden Hiles is a fitting climax to both. A price of 25 cents is placed upon the pamphlet, which may be ordered of Leo Hæfli, editor of the Optic, Ogden, Utah.

MANY who have read Pope's "Essay on Man" may like to read it again in the light thrown upon it by modern thought. To such Dr. C. S. Weeks's "Pope's Essay on Man, with Responding Essay: Man seen in the Deepening Dawn." The doctor does not, as we understand, claim to be as great a poet as Pope, but he appears to have fully as clear a perception of the everlasting truth, and sets it forth in even and accurate verse. The work is published by Messrs. Fowler & Wells, 775 Broadway, New York, and the price is probably 25 cents.

AN edition of that literary "What-is-it?" Francis Bacon's "Christian Paradoxes," has been issued by the American Secular Union for free distribution to "the subscribers of the Fund." The work, which is a 14-page pamphlet—handsomely printed, like all of Peter Eckler's work—sets forth in quaint language "the characters of a believing Christian in paradoxes and seeming contradictions." It is generally understood that Bacon was a Christian. He certainly had the characteristics of one, being as much like John Calvin as his opportunities would permit. His "Paradoxes" are his confession of faith. They show the absurdity of superstition and are a good companion work of the Athanasian Creed.

Two pamphlets reach us from Canada, published at the Secular Thought office, Toronto, Charles Watts, author. The first is "Bible Morality," wherein its teachings are shown to be "contradictory and defective as an ethical guide." We have held this view ever since D. M. Bennett called our attention to the subject by the remark that Christianity was full of errors. We do not need to testify to the ability of Mr. Watts as a writer and a logician; it is acknowledged. The price of "Bible Morality" is 10 cents. The second pamphlet is larger, containing 95 pages, price 25 cents, and is entitled, "The Teachings of Secularism Compared with Orthodox Christianity." The subject is treated under eighteen heads, and it is plainly shown that the good qualities of mankind are not religious, and that the religious qualities are not good.

SECULARISM OR GOD IN THE STATE.

Theocracy has indeed actively assisted in throttling all republics and turned them into ecclesiastical despotisms and ultimate ruin, by steering the people's aspirations after divine phantoms.

"All religions," says Bakounine, "gods, demi-gods, prophets, messiahs, or saints were created by the credulous fancy of men who had not attained the full growth of their intellectual faculties. God, once installed, became the Cause, Arbiter, Reasoner, and Absolute Disprover of all things. Man was nothing—God was all; and man has ever bowed down before and become the debased slave of those who pretend to speak of him with authority. God being truth, justice, goodness, beauty, power, life—man is falsehood, iniquity, ugliness, impotence, death. God being master, man is slave. Slaves of God, men must be slaves of the church and state in so far as the state is consecrated by the church. Such an idea of god implies the abdication of human reason and justice; it is the negation to human liberty, and necessarily results in the enslavement of mankind both in theory and practice."

For a forcible illustration. Here is an expression of King James—to whom the British Protestant Bible is dedicated—one of the most infamous characters in history. In the 1610, James I. called a parliament, which met on the 24th of February. On that occasion he delivered the following speech before both houses:

"Kings are justly called gods, for they exercise a manner or resemblance of divine power upon earth. For, if you will consider the attributes of god, you shall see how they agree in the person of a king. God hath power to create or destroy, to make or unmake, at his pleasure; to give life or send death; to judge all and to be judged of nor accountable to none, and to raise low things and to make high things low at his pleasure; and to God both soul and body are due. And the like power have kings. They make or unmake their subjects; they have the power of raising and casting down of life and of death." This resemblance of the divine power also said, "As it is Atheism and blasphemy in a creature to dispute what the Deity may do, so it is sedition in a subject to dispute what a King may do."

That is what we mean by church and state!

It may be objected that that being long ago, things have changed.

Do you realize that in Virginia—even after the Revolution—the laws compelled every one to pay tithes to the church and also to attend its services at least twice on Sunday, or pay the penalty of the loss of a week's provisions for each offense? For not paying proper respect to a minister they were publicly whipped until they begged his pardon before his whole congregation. For blaspheming God, the first offense was punishable by having a stiletto thrust through the tongue—the second, with death. It took ten years of the most indefatigable labor of that noble scholar and patriot, Jefferson, to expunge these detestable laws from the old dominion state.

Here is a specimen of our own day. Emperor William, of Germany, at a birthday celebration, replying to an address, said: "Every new period of life reminded him that it was the Almighty who, at certain times, chose his instruments. God had called on him to carry out certain tactics, and he had never failed to find fit and capable men to carry out his purposes. Considering that the czar had fallen a victim to Anarchy, who could now deem himself safe? He laid great stress upon the importance of fervent religious feeling which he had often exhorted the people to cultivate. As Anarchy threatened both sovereign and people, he wanted to again remind the country what the crown in Prussia was. It was a symbol of absolute authority from God, and not to be taken away by man." Here is a chosen instrument of the Almighty, who is afraid the divine power is not great enough to protect him from being "taken away" by man with a little dynamite.

The Catholic provincial council, at its session in Cincinnati, made this reactionary and treasonable declaration: "That the will of the people is not the source of law," and demanded its followers to obey "kings, bishops, and priests—the latter in all things—temporal and spiritual." Let us also remember that Mgr. Capel threw out the threat, in this very city, that soon the school money should be divided—that it would be done, in his own menacing words, "sharp as the click of a trigger"—when orders were received from Rome; "that Rome—once the center of universal despotism, now the center of universal humbug."

These institutions, fostered and fed by our state and municipal governments, are now endeavoring to sap the foundations of our national life.

The pope, in a late encyclical, bewails the good old times when the gospel governed the states. Those were the times when heresy was easily punished; a paradise for the pope—a bonfire for the heretic. He also makes some significant suggestions. Hear him:

"From the decisions of the popes it is clearly to be understood that the origin of public power is to be sought from God himself, and not from the multitude; that the free play for sedition is repugnant to reason; that it is a crime for private individuals and a crime for states to observe nowhere the duties of religion, or to treat in the same way different kinds of religion; that the uncontrolled right of thinking and publicly proclaiming one's thoughts is not inherent in the rights of citizens, nor to be placed among those things which are worthy of favor or patronage. It is also of great importance * * * to take pains and pass effective measures, so that public provision be made for the instruction of youth in religion and morality, for upon these things depends very much the welfare of every state. Besides, in general, it is useful and honorable to stretch the attention of Catholic men beyond this narrower field, and to embrace every branch of public administration. Generally, we say, because our precepts reach unto all the nations."

Here is the cloven hoof! O Columbia! we may soon realize the words of Richelieu: "Around her form I draw the awful circle of the church." This orthodox vampire is not to be reformed—it must be destroyed, and its destruction will be swifter by taking away governmental props—exemption of its property from taxation.

Though the power of the Christian church is visibly declining, so far as its vitality as a belief is concerned, it still holds its own as a social exterminator, and its supporters are rousing for a struggle, and are undergoing a process of consolidation and crystallization through this organization, whose purpose is to make theology the real government and priests its legal inquisitors.

A CHURCH CAPTURED.

In a former article I intimated that the Chicago Secular Union was about to rent, for its regular meetings, the Madison-street Theater, as its present quarters are becoming quite inadequate to the attendance. Well, we have done better, vastly better, having paid six months' rent in advance and secured the lease for a year of the church formerly occupied by the Universalists, corner of Sangamon street and Washington boulevard—the most celebrated drive on the west side. The building is a large frame structure, 50 by 100 feet, fronting on the boulevard; has recently been decorated and repaired inside, and possesses a fine organ which cost $3,000. The Chicago Union will have exclusive control, except one evening each week, and proposes to sublet it for concerts and meetings and thus replenish its treasury.

An office for the secretary of the American Secular Union is to be provided in the building, and some extensive alterations, besides painting the outside (which will probably cost $200) prior to our occupancy on Sunday April 1st. It will be the largest building occupied by any branch of the American Secular Union, and is an evidence of what patient, earnest, persistent endeavor, coupled with considerable sacrifice of time and money, will eventually accomplish.

Seven years ago, when reorganizing the Liberal League, the writer and others passed this very church, when one of the party remarked: "Don't you wish we had a building like that?" I merely observed that we would some day, although my experience even then had made me modest in my expectations. The Episcopal Cathedral is on a similar corner, just one block below, and in a much poorer location! Though that is a stone structure and ours a frame building, it is larger and higher and more imposing in appearance. To-day Drs. Henry, and McLeod, and myself closed the bargain, sighed the lease, and concluded that we had accomplished enough for the glory of Secularism in one day surely. Our motto is "I. X. L.," or I should remark that is the monogram of a club composed of part of our young people's society. They have a social on Friday night. Dr. McLeod is going to give some biological lectures under their auspices. The writer will furnish them some scientific text books.

THE ELGIN SUNDAY-LAW CONVENTION.

The American Sentinel in its March number publishes an article under this head. It is so powerful an arraignment of the hypocrites who are endeavoring to secure the enforcement of a religious Sunday law as a civil one that we shall give it entire:

The Elgin Sunday-law Convention was held the eighth day of last November in the Baptist church, Elgin, Illinois. It was "called by the members of the Elgin Association of Congregational Ministers and Churches, to consider the prevalent desecration of the Sabbath and its remedy." The leading preachers present were W. L. Ferris, of Dundee; J. M. Clendening, A. H. Ball, Wm. Craven, H. O. Rowlands, and Geo. A. Milton, of Elgin; John Mitchell, of Sycamore; Henry Wilson, of Carpenterville; W. W. Everts, Dr. Mandeville, S. I. Curtis, and C. K. Colver, of Chicago; Staunton, of Rockford; Harbaugh, of Genoa Junction; Lea, of Woodstock; Stewart, of Savannah; Helms, of Forrest; Chittenden, of Wheaton; Swartz, of Leaf River; and Harris, of Byron. Besides these there were President Blanchard, President Stratton, and Professor Fisher, of Wheaton; Professor Whitney, of Beloit; State's Attorney Cooper, of Du Page county; Hon. T. E. Hill, ex-Mayor of Aurora; and Frank W. Smith, the evangelist and Andersonville lecturer.

The convention passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we recognize the Sabbath as an institution of God, revealed in nature and in the Bible, and of perpetual obligation on all men; and also as a civil and American institution, bound up in vital and historical connection with the origin and foundation of our government, the growth of our polity, and necessary to be maintained in order for the preservation and integrity of our national system, and therefore as having a sacred claim in all patriotic American citizens.

Resolved, That we look with shame and sorrow on the non-observance of the Sabbath by many Christian people, in that the custom prevails with them of purchasing Sabbath newspapers, engaging in and patronizing Sabbath business and travel, and in many instances giving themselves to pleasure and self-indulgence, setting aside by neglect and indifference the great duties and privileges which God's day brings them.

2. That we give our votes and support to those candidates or political officers who will pledge themselves to vote for the enactment and enforcement of statutes in favor of the civil Sabbath.

3. That we give our patronage to such business men, manufacturers, and laborers as observe the Sabbath.

4. That we favor a permanent Sabbath organization for the state of Illinois; the object of which shall be the creation of public sentiment and to secure the enactment and enforcement of necessary laws for the protection of the Sabbath.

5. That we favor the organization of auxiliary societies to accomplish the above object.

6. That four committees be appointed by this convention, consisting of two persons each, a minister and a layman; one committee to carefully and accurately investigate and report to the next convention all the facts obtainable concerning Sunday business; one to investigate and report similarly concerning Sunday newspapers; one concerning Sunday pleasuring; one concerning Sunday transportation and travel.

Resolved, That this association authorizes the Executive Committee to request railway corporations and newspapers to discontinue the running of Sunday trains and the publication of Sunday editions of their papers.

Notice the Sabbath is here set forth as an institution of God, and also as a "civil institution." It is for "candidates or political officers who will pledge themselves to vote for the enactment and enforcing of statutes in favor of the civil Sabbath," that they will vote.

Now we shall present some of the arguments upon which they base this demand for laws in favor of the "civil Sabbath;" and also showing what they want these laws enforced for.

Rev. Henry Wilson said:

The industries of the world should be silent one day in seven, that the toiler may hear the invitation of the Master, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," and that the spiritual temple of God may be built without the noise of the hammer.

Exactly. The state must compel everybody to keep Sunday "that the toiler may hear the invitation of the Master" and "that the spiritual temple of God may be built." And then they will call that a civil statute! If such a statute as that would be a civil one, then what would be required to make a religious statute? But suppose the toiler should then refuse to go to hear that invitation; what then? Will the state compel him to go? If not, why not? The state compels him to keep Sunday that he may hear the invitation; now is the state to allow its good offices to be set at naught, and its purposes frustrated by the toiler's refusing to hear the invitation? And the church having gained the recognition of the state to that extent is she going to stop short of her object? Other quotations will answer these questions.

Dr. W. W. Everts, of Chicago, said:

This day is set apart for divine worship and preparation for another life. It is the test of all religion. The people who do not keep the Sabbath have no religion.

Is it then the province of the state to pass and enforce statutes in the interests of divine worship? Is it in the nature of a civil statute to prepare men for another life? "It is the test of all religion," says the doctor. Then what is the enforcement of the Sabbath but the enforcement of a religious test? And what is application of it to "candidates and political officers" but the application of a religious test? And what is that but an open violation of the Constitution of the United States, which says, "No religious test shall be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States?" It is true that, under the decision of the United States Supreme Court, this provision of the Constitution does not prohibit the application of any religious test as a qualification to any office under any state. And if there be no such provision as this in the state constitution, these preachers of Illinois, and of all the other states, can go ahead unrestrained in the application of their religious test to all the candidates for state offices. But there is one thing certain, and that is, Sunday being "the test of all religion," no Sunday-law test can ever be applied to any candidate for the House of Representatives, for the Senate, and for any other office or public trust under the United States, without a direct violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Further, says the doctor, "The people who do not keep the Sabbath have no religion." The antithesis of this is likewise true. The people who do keep the Sabbath have religion. Therefore this demand for laws to compel people to keep the Sabbath, is a demand for laws to compel people to be religious. And yet they have the face to call it "the civil Sabbath."

Again Dr. Everts says:—

He who does not keep the Sabbath does not worship God, and he who does not worship God is lost.

Perfectly true, doctor. The antithesis of this is also true, He who does keep the Sabbath, does worship God. Therefore your demand for laws to compel men to keep the Sabbath is a demand for laws to compel men to worship God. And that is only to introduce the system of the Papacy and of the Inquisition. There is no use for you to deny that you want laws to compel the observance of the Sabbath, and that, too, with the idea of worship, because in the very next sentence you say:

The laboring class are apt to rise late on Sunday morning, read the Sunday papers, and allow the hour of worship to go by unheeded.

Here are the steps plainly to be taken, as surely as these ambitious clerics ever get the slightest recognition of their Sunday law demands. First, a law compelling all labor to cease on Sunday. Then the laboring class will read the Sunday papers, and so allow the hour of worship to go unheeded, consequently there must be, Secondly, a law abolishing all Sunday papers. But suppose then these people take to reading books, and let the hour of worship go by unheeded, then, logically, there must be Thirdly, a law abolishing all reading of books on Sunday. But suppose they let the hour of worship go by unheeded anyhow, then, logically, there must be, Fourthly, a law compelling them not to let the hour of worship go by unheeded. Having secured themselves in the first two of these steps, what is to hinder these divines from taking the other two, which just as logically follow as the second follows the first? There is just nothing at all to hinder them. Well, then, having taken the first two, will they not take the other two? Anybody who thinks they will not has studied human nature and read history to very little purpose. And anybody who thinks that they do not intend to take the other steps has read the Sunday law propositions to very little purpose.

ROUSING WORK IN UTAH.

It has been my intention to write to FREETHOUGHT regarding the progress of secular work in Utah before now, but attention to other things has caused the delay. We are pursuing the even tenor of our way with gratifying results, somewhat to the disturbance of the religious feelings of our ecclesiastical friends, especially the Presbyterian flock, which is watched over by the very Rev. R. G. McNiece, who recently got up on his ear and advertised to give a course of four Sunday-evening sermons on the "Unreasonableness of Infidelity." To the people who know the mental calibre of this wheezy sky-pilot, such an announcement sounds like a joke, as the sainted preacher has never been known, during his long sojourn in Zion, to prove the unreasonableness of anything, save it be the creed of the Presbyterian church, by simply pouring out a lot of twaddle twice every Sunday.

Well, the result of Mic's two sermons already delivered, on the "Unreasonableness of Infidelity," have not only been to increase the attendance at our Liberal lectures in the Opera House, so that the place is filled to overflowing, but to thin down the Presbyterians to a couple of handfuls of listeners, who are growing very impatient in following the pastor to find out when he will prove the "unreasonableness of Infidelity." The query has already been aroused: "What will be the size of Mic's audience when he has reached the end of his series?" which no doubt will, at an early date, be followed by four discourses on the "Reasonableness of Presbyterianism;" but it is apprehended that he will find it as hard a matter to palm off on a suspecting public the "Reasonableness of Presbyterianism" as to show the "Unreasonableness of Infidelity."

Now for a few words, regarding the work here. Last Sunday evening Dr. York began the last half of his course of twelve lectures. There were fifteen hundred people in attendance—Mormons, Methodists, Jews, Gentiles, and several hundred of the unregenerate, besides a sprinkling from the Presbyterian's flock. The subject was "Science and Religion." For two hours the doctor showered forth his logic and eloquence, upholding the claims of science by irrefutable facts and arguments, and showing up the fallacies of creeds and priestcraft, much to the satisfaction of the large audience present.

During the evening there was some excellent singing by Dr. A. S. Chapman and Miss Crissie Larson, each of whom sang a solo, and, at the close of the lecture, a duet. To show how much the people enjoy these entertainments—for such they are—and how eager the attendance, it is only necessary to mention the fact that by seven o'clock nearly every seat is taken and held down for three hours, without a murmur.

One of the most gratifying results of these lectures is the attendance of a great number of Mormons, who take in the teachings of Freethought as flowers absorb the morning dew. One of the high bishops of the church has occupied a conspicuous seat for three nights. He came alone the first night; the second, he brought a fellow elder, a member of the legislature, which adjourns to-night; but as the f. l. went to sleep during the doctor's lecture, the bishop, not wishing to be seen in a public place with a sleeping member of the legislature, he being also of that august body, brought his wife with him the third night. The lady kept wide awake.

LILIAN'S STORY.

We give this week the second chapter of Lilian's serial story contributed to our Children's Department.

A BALL ON A LILY LEAF.

BY A. LILIAN ANDREWS, AGED 10.

CHAPTER II.

Alice Mulberry looked for more lily leaves. She could not find any more, so she went home. When she got home she said, "O mamma, I only found one, and that one had bugs all over it," said Alice.

"Why, how funny!" said Tom Blake, Alice's cousin. "Anyhow, I wanted to take some lilies to Amy White, and now I can't. Oh, dear!"

"Well, you can take some china lilies."

"Oh, yes, that will be better than pond lilies," said Alice. "Amy will like that better—for the party—and I will wear some roses and my pink satin dress. Amy is going to wear her white satin dress and the lilies."

Alice ran to see Amy.

DAMAGES BY AN UNBELIEVER.

The Ionia, Mich., Mail tells this no doubt truthful story:

A hired man who has been employed on a farm in this county for several months entered suit against his employer the other day for balance of wages, amounting, as he claims, to $32. The suit was on trial before Justice Blank yesterday, and it looked at first as if the plaintiff had a clear case. He gave dates and figures in a straightforward way and seemed a very honest young man. When the farmer took the stand he said: "I claim an off-set for that $32. No man need sue me for what I honestly owe." "What is your off-set?" asked the lawyer. "He's an unbeliever." "In what?" "Why, in the Bible." "What has that to do with you owing him $32?" "It has a heap to do with it. I had six hands in my employ, and we were rushing things when I hired this man. He hadn't been with us two days when he stopped the reaper in the middle of the forenoon to dispute about Daniel in the lion's den, and in three days we had a regular knock-down over the whale swallowing Jonah. The man who run the mower got to arguing about Samson, and drove over a stump, and damaged the machine to the tune of $18, and the very next day my boy broke his leg while climbing the fence to hear and see the row which was started over the children of Israel going through the Red Sea. It wasn't a week before my wife said she didn't believe Elijah was fed by the ravens, and hanged if I didn't find myself growing weak on Noah and his flood. That's my off-set, sir, and if he was worth anything I'd sue him for $1,000 besides."

Hell.

The grand old fire is a relic of the barbarous past. It was the invention of some malignant priest. The men who teach that they are God's servants always get very angry with those who will not believe them, respect them, and pay them. They invented hell for all such. To the priest unbelief is the worst of all crimes, and has ever been cursed above all other things. But the wise and good man truly says: "If there is a soul asleep, dead, and God has no other need to wake it up but to burn forever, if he is a good God he will let it sleep." Why not? What good in such a waking? K.

Our Future.

The Republic is perpetual!
 The WILL of the great whole—
 Omnipotent forever!
 As the voice of God above.
 The People, here below,
 Make every whisper law.
 There is no hand to stay,
 No precedent or rule to say them nay!

Amenable forever at their will,
 The Constitution is a dashing wave,
 That breaks the rocks of law,
 And crumbles precedent to dust,
 Just as the People will.
 There is nothing fixed but this:
 The Great Republic came to stay,
 The human mind to have its own sweet way.

Men cannot make a mark,
 A law, a statute, contract, or franchise,
 Or any vested right, or single thing,
 That may not be amended and cut down.
 Let but the public will proclaim
 A new regime, and it is there.
 The ballot box is a magician's wand,
 Dissolving all restraint, and every bond.

No blundering statesmen, courts,
 Assemblies, or commissions;
 No rascals bought to perjury and crime
 Can bind the people for a day;
 They hold the scepter, to revise, review,
 And ever right and justice to renew.
 Liberty! the Republic! to proclaim,
 All else abolished, in the People's name!

In Bohemia.

I am rich; who says me nay?
 I have bread to eat each day,
 Water from the mountain rill,
 Woman's lips to kiss at will,
 Russet garb and couch of moss,
 Treasures free from rust or loss—
 Why should not my life be gay?
 I am rich; who says me nay?

I am rich; who says me nay?
 Friends have I in long array—
 Sun, the rain, the cloud, and dew,
 Fields of green and skies of blue;
 Pictures drawn by nature's hand,
 Books the soul may understand,
 And a life-long holiday—
 I am rich; who says me nay?

I am rich; who says me nay?
 Whom have I to envy, pray?
 Crown-incumbered king, or sage
 Poring o'er the midnight page?
 Midas starving with his gold?
 Better far, a thousand-fold,
 In Bohemia than Cathay!
 I am rich; who says me nay?

They sat together on the lounge;
 A blush suffused her face
 As round her form his manly arm
 Stole in a tight embrace.

"Is it quite proper, John," she said,
 "That you should hug me so?"
 "It is my dear," he prompt replied,
 "My warmth of love to show."

"Free trade in kisses we have had—
 You never did object;
 And now that you should disapprove
 I scarcely did expect."

"Besides, my arm a symbol is,
 To show my future wife
 The duty of protection which I'll owe to her through life."

Then in low tones she archly said,
 "Perhaps—you may, dear John.
 If that's the view you take of it,
 Just keep the duty on."

I am on the C. N. W. R. R., and if either of you ever go through this way call and see me and I will have some fun with you. I was in California from September, 1850, to August, 1854, and have many old friends there yet. Mac must have hated to leave the Truth Seeker office. Only Ten Cents.

DEAR FRIENDS: I mean you; I mean all American citizens, men and woman; all who believe in free speech, free press, and free mails; I ask each and all of you to come forward and defend the publishers of Lucifer the Light Bearer. They have been terribly guilty of throwing too much light upon the errors and mistakes of human kind, and have shown up the superstitions of religion and law till they have become so obnoxious to Comstock and Company that they have been indicted under a vague and indefinite statute that places all we may mail, even to our nearest and dearest, under the censorship of any one who sees fit to start the cry of "mad dog."

That Walker and Harman have done no real wrong is evident when we learn that their case has been taken up by the National Defense Association. The cause which this body of wise humanitarians champion must needs be a worthy one, and therefore I ask you each and all to take hold right now and help them.

Ere this gets in print the time will be nearly arrived for their trial. Please, then, do what you can at once. Send me at least 10 cents toward the defense fund. Send me more if you can, but 10 will show your good will and be of some aid and assistance.

Those who can will please ask friends to add other tens to these and send together, registering all over 75 cents as more safe as well as assuring you by P. O. return card that it has reached its destination. I will acknowledge each donation personally and also in Lucifer, and to all who put in an extra stamp I will send a specimen copy of their paper.

A $5,000 fine and ten years in state prison is a terrible penalty for good works. Will you not do a little to help try to avert this from the pioneers of the light, truth, and happiness that come from freedom of speech, press, and mails?

Anarchy Condemned.*To the Editors of Freethought:

A copy of your journal is before me. The first thing to attract my attention is, "Who Preaches Anarchy?" You certainly take the right view of that pernicious creed. The advocates of that murderous doctrine ought to have the heavy hand of good law and good government placed with a squelching force upon them.

And the idea of putting God, devil, or any absurd dogma, or the sore-toed representative of that old fossil, St. Peter, into the Constitution is repugnant—that document which was framed to benefit all loyal citizens, and the wisdom of said declaration is very manifest. The framers of that instrument foresaw the necessity of keeping it free from the unscrupulous appropriation of dogmatic religious beliefs, and to keep it pure from the blighting curse of sectarianism. Superstition is, of all others, the most hurtful to any and all reasonable courses taken by civilization.

There is only one way to deal with those who advocate Anarchy, and those who try to practically carry it out; and that is to make an example of its agitators. Hang every one of them, and expose their carcasses to view, as a warning to others who are so inclined. Could they carry out their idea of right, what kind of government would they maintain? Why, they would fight like cats and dogs, and rend each other in their foolish and arbitrary rage. The weak would be at the mercy of the brute stronger. The conduct of the wolves of the Siberian wastes, of Russia, would be tame in comparison to the wild ravings of these human brutes. Benny Owen's dream in Putnam's wolf-den will be made prophetic unless a restraining hand is stretched forth by this government.

Law and order must be maintained at all hazards. We have but lately emerged from as dangerous a condition of things as could possibly be inaugurated, and it behooves this land to "look a leedle oudt."

I wish you much success in your laudable undertaking.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument Mr. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM

President of the American Secular Union,

Will make his annual lecture tour for 1888 in California, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, Washington Territory, Arizona, Idaho, Montana, and Utah. The purpose of these lectures is the organization of Freethought Societies, the discussion and advancement of the Nine Demands of Liberalism, the acquaintance and fraternal association of the Liberal people of this country.

It is necessary that those who desire lectures shall communicate at once, in order that at the earliest possible moment the route may be laid out, so that the largest number of places can be visited with the greatest economy of resources. Our country is so vast in extent, and railroad expenses are so great, that lectures must be given on a pre-arranged route.

It is best, if possible, to arrange for two or more lectures, rather than for one. The expense of advertising is no greater, and much more good can be accomplished—a larger interest will be excited—and there will be a better opportunity for information in regard to the magnitude of our cause and the importance of our principles.

The following are some of the subjects of the lectures, dealing both with the destructive and constructive aspects of Secular work—and its scientific and literary form—giving special attention to the political significance of the Nine Demands:

Universal Mental Liberty,

The New Heaven and Earth,

The Glory of Infidelity,

American Democracy,

The New God,

The Bible: Its Genuineness, Authenticity, Inspiration, and Infallibility,

Thomas Paine: The Thinker, The Patriot,

The Moralist, and the Scholar.

The Moral Power of Unbelief,

Fair Play,

The Dangers Ahead,

Woman and the Bible,

Science and Theology,

Priest, King and People,

Creation and Evolution; or, Miracle and Law,

The Works of Man and the Works of God;

or, Civilization vs. The Raw Material.

The terms of the lectures will be made reasonable to all societies and individuals who desire to co-operate with the work of the American Secular Union. It is expected that hall rent, advertising and local expenses will be provided for—and beyond this, that every Liberal will do his best to help the general cause. By combination of effort local organization can be strengthened and universal interest aroused. The local work and national work depend upon each other. The local work is of the first importance; it is the vital force of the movement—but to have simply local enterprise is to destroy the noblest spirit of Freethought, which is world-wide in its relations. It is through the Union that the broadest humanitarian results can be achieved.

Will not friends instantly interest themselves in this matter, and arrange for lectures, so that dates and subjects may be given, and every possible point be made available for work?

PRESS NOTICES, ETC.

Mr. Putnam is one of the most thorough believers in intellectual liberty in the world. He has written some of the most stirring appeals to the Liberals of this country that I have ever read. He believes that Freethought has a future; that the time is coming when the superstitions of this world will be forgotten—or remembered—some of them with smiles, most of them with tears. Mr. Putnam, although endowed with a poetic nature, with poetic insight, clings to the known, builds upon the experience of man, and believes in fancies only when they are used as the wings of fact. His abilities are of the highest order. He commands the admiration of every one who really loves the just and true.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Putnam, the Freethinker, is the best posted and best talker we have ever had on Wood river. The theater has been crowded every night whenever Mr. Putnam was advertised to speak.—Inter-Idaho, Hailey, Idaho.

S. P. Putnam was greeted by a large and appreciative audience on Sunday night last, and if close attention, interrupted only by frequent rounds of applause, indicates anything, nearly all present felt that they were enjoying a rare intellectual treat, and more than compensated for their time and attention. SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MARCH 24, 1888

IN the next number of the North American Review the Hon. W. E. Gladstone will give his views of the religious views of Robert G. Ingersoll. The subject is full of interest.

No one has remarked, upon the death of Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany, "The king is dead: long live the king!" It would be mockery. Emperor Frederick is dying of cancer in the throat.

A MOVEMENT has been started to present the French people with a statue of Washington in return for the statue of Liberty given by France to the United States. Why not make it a statue of Thomas Paine?

MAYOR HEWITT, of New York, very appropriately forbade the raising of the Roman Catholic flag on the City Hall on St. Patrick's day. The star spangled banner may not be good enough for Irishmen, but the American people are not yet prepared to swap it off for a green one.

"I TRUST my children will be brought up in the Protestant faith. The Bible pure and simple is the true religion," are words in the will of a man hanged at Cork, who had murdered his wife in order to marry a governess. They should be added to the other "words of great men" who have testified to and illustrated the value of the Bible as an ethical guide.

SOME time ago the Rev. Dr. M. E. Gibson, Presbyterian, of this city, said in a sermon that St. Patrick was a Presbyterian, and the editor of the Occident supported the affirmation. We called upon these two gentlemen to show the courage of their convictions by heading the stately procession on the 17th of March, and no doubt they would have done so if the Catholic societies had not voted to have no public demonstration this year.

A DENVER, Colorado, paper speaks with great admiration of the Rev. E. P. Hammond, the evangelist, now holding revival meetings in this state, and says the children there were "delighted and infatuated" with him: "To children Mr. Hammond is a living, talking volume of 'Arabian Nights'—a sort of unending fairy tale serial. The quantity of stories he has at his command is surprising." When it is said that revivalists and other expounders of the Bible tell nothing worse than fairy tales, that is the best that can be claimed for them.

ACCORDING to a statement in the American Israelite the rabbi of a Jewish congregation is not considered a "spiritual guide," but simply an "ethical and moral teacher." "Holiness and sanctity of thought and belief, in the sense in which our Christian brethren understand them, are not demanded of the rabbi. Aside from intellectual ability, eloquence, and scholastic acquirements, there is nothing asked of him further than the morality, charity, and good breeding that the world looks for from every man who desires to be ranked as a gentleman."

THAT was a pertinent inquiry which Mr. Geo. T. Bruce propounded to Judge McGuire at the meeting of the San Francisco Anti-Poverty Society the other night. The judge made a speech in which he put stress upon the affirmation that it was the evident design of the creator that all men should share alike in the bounties of nature, and Mr. Barry, who made an address, laid down the same proposition. Questions being called for, Mr. Bruce arose and said: "Did I understand you to remark that the creator favored the general distribution of nature's bounties among all mankind?" The judge replied that such was his contention. "If that is the case," said Mr. Bruce, "why is it that the creator is not more active in bringing such a state of affairs about?" Judge McGuire confessed that the question was unanswerable; and from the point of view of a Deist he was correct. The fact is that so far as having or carrying out any design is concerned there is no evidence of any gods. Those who profess to reveal the will of a deity are pretenders.

NEWS AND NOTES.

SAN DIEGO.—We were amply repaid when the storms rolled off. The weather was simply exhilarating; the green fields flashed; the ocean was like a vast diamond in the sunshine; and the sky was like a mirror of beauty with enchanting pictures.

So we come to San Diego with fresh hope and enthusiasm, after a pleasant sojourn on Thermal Heights. We find a good host in splendid marching order. Last year things were rather fragmentary. There was no combination. But a vast improvement has been made. A union of forces has come, and with differences of opinion, there is work and advance together on the lines of this world's improvement. Our Spiritualist friends join heartily in the secular movement, and realize the value of definite humanitarian reform, while at the same time the hope of endless life loses none of its luster. There is no reason why we should not thus co-operate on important and pressing issues, with the largest liberty of expression. There is no essential disagreement in our philosophy of life. We do not believe, any of us, in the orthodox heaven or hell, or in the authority of the church. Our moral standards are alike. We believe in the same kind of existence, whether that existence is longer or shorter. Here or hereafter, liberty is always a blessing; justice is always noble, and love is beautiful; and so, whatever our paths of thought, however varied our experiences, the aim is identical—a grand and splendid existence of "fair humanities" and advancing virtues.

Amid this golden atmosphere of fraternal hope and labor, we passed happy days in San Diego. It was a good "saint" for us. We lectured afternoon and evening to crowded houses. There was no standing room, and in the evening nearly two hundred were turned away. Next time we shall occupy a larger hall, and we feel sure of a generous greeting in this city by the sea, over which the blue mountains fling their benediction.

The music furnished by the Case Bros.' orchestra and the singing were excellent; and if the lecture was good it must owe part of its goodness to the inspiration of delightful sound.

H. H. Nichols is one of our foremost workers here. Broad and genial, it is a pleasure indeed to grasp the hand of so ardent a comrade who will make you hopeful in the midst of every service. He has been all along the frontier, and is a soldier young in spirit, but of veteran experience. With such allies victory is sure. Paul A. Smith, formerly a Universalist minister, who has done great service in that denomination, I found to be a delightful friend, earnest, sympathetic, open-hearted. He is president of the organization here, and one better adapted to the position could not be found. He is a fine speaker, a cultivated gentleman, a practical force, a living man indeed.

I was glad to meet, for the first time, with Dr. and Mrs. Taylor, whose effective and brilliant work for Liberalism is well known. Mrs. Mary A. White is also one of the go-ahead and interesting people, who are always doing something for a better world right here and now, although she looks forward to eternities of being. She is engaged in the formation of a Freethought library and reading-room. Several hundred dollars have been contributed for this object. A pleasant and convenient location has been secured, and with the energetic services of Mrs. White without doubt this noble undertaking will be a success.

Mrs. Dr. Schroder, "Christian Scientist," is not so vague and mystical after all, for with a good, level head and busy hand she assisted me in the sale of books, for which there was an unexpected rush; so there is one Theosophist at least who has the "material" for every-day life and work, and is a cordial and skilful coadjutor.

Mr. and Mrs. Rowe and Mr. and Mrs. Bidwell are our old-time friends, with hearts of oak, who have experienced the sunshine and the storm, and who are to be depended upon in all sorts of weather. To shake the hands of such gives new courage.

I was pleased, also, to meet with Dr. Peet, whom I found to be as enthusiastic as ever for the Sinaloa colony. A meeting of the San Diego club was held after the lecture, and reports made, and subscriptions to stock taken.

Mr. R. H. Byers, Dr. Cooper, Dr. and Mrs. Post, nearly a hundred years old, both of them, and still bright and earnest and forward-looking; F. W. Bradley, formerly of Texas, where he has been president of Ft. Worth Union, and a fearless advocate of Liberalism, now located here; Ranford Worthing, one of our most enthusiastic allies, a leading business man of the place; thoroughly devoted to Freethought; Mr. Hartley, a frontiersman, who has learned humanity and reason from nature herself; Richard Day, of Colorado, now of Lower California, where he has a big ranch and many mines, and purposes to make things hum for freedom and progress, where the climate is the most perfect under heaven, the Italy of this new world; Mr. Hughes, W. S. Babcock, Rebecca McKean, Mr. and Mrs. F. F. Wright, formerly of Napa City; Mrs. Ana F. Smith, Mr. Spaulding, and many others whose faces we remember, but whose names vanish, all have made our visit to San Diego most agreeable. The skies poured forth their brightest rays and human hearts were equally expressive for that which shall emancipate the world.

Dr. Abram Bronson has died since I was here; a man notable for his Freethought convictions and work. He was over eighty years of age, and his intellectual fires were not dimmed even at death. He has left several thousand dollars for the erection of a Freeman's hall in San Diego. This noble bequest will be of great service. With such a beginning other generous contributions will be made, and in a central part of the city there will be a temple of humanity in honor of one of the staunchest pioneers of freedom, Dr. Bronson was an Antislavery soldier, and he never let go the flag.

Southern California has been all and more than I could expect for the arduous work of reform. This country is in such a tumult of advance, so many visions are in the air, and so many real things are being planned—railroads, manufactories, etc., and the churches still pushing with all their might—that I did not anticipate so good and cheering a welcome. But fortune is with us after all, and in the busy upheaval and combination of diverse elements in San Diego, our flag, in the hands of brave men and women, is flung to the breeze with shining promise, and the forward ranks are multiplying.

San Diego is bound to be a big city. Her excellent harbor and the increase of railroad facilities make her growth assured. Real estate transactions are dull at present, as everywhere in Southern California, but the resources are here, the wealth, the enterprise; and this will be one of the richest and finest of commercial points.

The impression is abroad that the country about San Diego is not capable of cultivation. But I find the land to be exceedingly productive throughout the country. All tropical and semi-tropical fruits can be raised, and all kinds of grain and vegetables. In some places irrigation is needed, while again better crops are produced without irrigation than with. The soil holds moisture for a great length of time. The rains, so far, have poured millions of dollars into the lap of this county, which is about as large as the state of Massachusetts. San Diego is laid out for a vast emporium. It is twenty miles long and ten wide; two hundred square miles laid out into streets and lots. It looks like a big contract, but I guess in course of time it will be filled.

I am now at Escondido, among the foothills, where six churches are being built and an imposing Methodist college, in a town only two years old. I don't know what kind of a chance Freethought lectures will have, but I shall beard the lion in his "golden mansions."

I am just now in the home of B. B. Rockwood, in San Pasqual valley, where the rugged hills tower on every side, and the valley, from a mile to a mile and a half wide, stretches in and out among the enormous masses, fruitful as Eden itself. Here I am having good companionship, amid the blossoms and the fruits, and here I pen these notes, where the happy fireside home makes the music of hope and progress.

I go from Escondido to San Jacinto for next Sunday, and Anaheim for March 25, and San Bernardino for April 1, and then to San Luis Obispo and Nipomo, and on through Boulder Creek and Santa Clara valley to the Golden Gates again.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

Secretary Stevens, in his communication this week, opens up for discussion a matter that needs agitating, because it concerns the life of the American Secular Union. There is no question that the great body of Liberals throughout these States desire a union of some kind through which they can, as it were, touch hands, and which will bring them together in national fraternity. There is no question either that the American Secular Union effects this result so far as it goes; and that it does not go further is not the fault of the Union or its officers. Such funds as have been subscribed to the work of this organization have been used with wisdom. None have been wasted or misapplied. This is granted. The only question is one of method, and in regard to this, one thing is certain: the method adopted has kept the organization alive and has made it known from one end of the country to the other. Another thing is, in our opinion, equally certain: that if the stay-at-home policy had been followed, as was advised by the opponents of the administration, the Secular Union would be a lifeless and forgotten organization. This aspect of the case, however, need not be discussed, as it is difficult to decide exactly what would have happened if something else had not happened. Future action is certainly open to debate, and we are glad to see that Messrs. Reynolds and Stevens, in setting the ball in motion, have had the good taste to make the question a general instead of a personal one.

As we view it there is need for a division of the house; or, rather, it is appropriate that those who do not wish to remain in the house should hasten to leave it, making as decent an exit as circumstances will permit. If gentlemen who are vice-presidents are not in sympathy with the Union; if, as they claim, the Union is not a good thing, but on the contrary an imposition upon the Liberals of the country, they should no longer allow their names to stand at its head. They cannot consistently be its representatives in office and its opponents in print. Any officer of any organization has the right to resign, and to state his reasons for so doing, but his consistency, if not his sincerity, will be open to question if he gives reasons why himself and colleagues should resign and yet refrains from carrying them into practice.

It is well for each man to be definite and to make himself understood. When an Auxiliary Secular Union, or a body of Liberals desiring to become such, engage an officer of the Union as a speaker, believing him to be its sincere supporter, they will be disappointed to find upon his arrival among them that he is nothing of the kind, and they will be charitable if they do not set him down as, to that extent, an impostor. They will at least be at a loss to know what to make of it all. And when a treasurer denounces the executive officers of an organization as a whitewashing committee, and charges misappropriation of funds while he continues to receive them, people will inquire whether he is a knave to his own knowledge or a fool to the knowledge of his colleagues. He may be neither, but his line of conduct lays him open to the suspicion that he is one or the other. If his own appreciation of the fitness of things does not call upon him to resign, a call to that effect may appropriately come from other sources.

Again, when a speaker allows his name to be used as an officer of an organization until he has secured appointments to lecture as such, and then quietly withdraws from the organization, giving varied and contradictory reasons, which are equivalent to no reason at all, for so doing, and then fills his appointments thus secured, he is, to say the least, sailing under false colors. And if, parallel with this course, he pursues that of basely impeaching the motives, the honesty, and the character of his fellow workers, he is simply undermining the structure which he professes to be engaged in building up.

This article is not written for the purpose of charging that any of the inconsistencies pointed out are really imputable to any officer or member of the American Secular Union; they are apparent only. We charge nothing, but inasmuch as the attitude of many supposed-to-be representatives of the American Secular Union is generally regarded as undefined, we suggest a division of the house and an open debate. Let those who oppose the present policy say so; let those who oppose current methods say so; let those who oppose organization say so; and let those who oppose any measures for the carrying out of the Nine Demands of Liberalism freely express their opinion. Delegates and leaders may then enter upon the deliberations of the next Congress with definite ideas of the questions to be settled, and with matured plans for future action or inaction.

HELEN GARDENER will please accept thanks for her notice of FREETHOUGHT in the Truth Seeker of March 3. It is rather too good to be copied into our columns.

A GOOD many names have been added to FREETHOUGHT's subscription list within the past few weeks. We hope that every subscriber will consider himself or herself a friend, a worker, and an agent for this paper. We will gladly send sample copies to the addresses of any who would be likely to subscribe, and patrons will do us a favor by forwarding such addresses.

J. W. McCORD, of Hanford, was in the city last week, looking after stock for his horse ranch. By accident he had seen a copy of FREETHOUGHT and hastened at once to call and leave the names of four subscribers. He also proved to be an interesting talker. Among other things he said was that the Masonic lodge in his locality is composed mainly of Agnostics and Atheists, and that other lodges in the state are pervaded with Infidelity to a similar extent. This will be entertaining information to some of the Eastern Masons, who regard Atheism as a Masonic offense.

WHEN any question needs settling it is only necessary to call in a priest, and the discussion may be closed at once. At a recent meeting of Congregational pastors the Rev. Mr. Meserve, discussing Spiritualism, pronounced it an institution of the evil one and therefore to be condemned. All the religious people except the Spiritualists were willing to accept this view of the case, but Mr. J. J. Morse, of England, stood up in Metropolitan Temple the following Sunday, and, while under spirit control, proceeded to pulverize the Rev. Mr. Meserve in quite an effective style. He asked that the reverend gentleman should demonstrate his fundamental thesis, that there is such a personage as Satan. He deemed it essential that the existence of the great adversary should be proved before anything could be truthfully attributed to him. This sounds to us like a reasonable proposition, but it can have no weight with Christians. If Satan actuates the Spiritualistic speaker, it would be exactly in his line to lie about facts and to serve his diabolical ends by denying his own existence. He knows, of course, that he can do his most effective work in the livery of heaven, and this is undoubtedly the reason why he has chosen honest and upright persons, as the Spiritualists generally are, for his servants instead of trusting his reputation in the hands of clergymen, priests, and Sunday-school superintendents.

MR. STONE'S DISCUSSION.

We publish this week part of a discussion which Mr. H. P. Stone, of Oakland, is having with a good Christian lady. In offering it for publication Mr. Stone is modest enough to admit that there is in it little that will be new to Liberals. In reply to this objection we may say, as Colonel Ingersoll says, that an argument is new and has the dew of morning upon it until it has been answered. Besides, we hope that this paper is read occasionally by others than Liberals. We hope we are doing something in the way of missionary work. This issue, at least, will reach several hundred of Mr. Stone's acquaintances, Liberal and otherwise. We assure them all that the reading of it will repay them for the time so spent, and it is hoped that many of them will embrace the present moment to subscribe for FREETHOUGHT. We can promise them, if they do so, that their mental evolution from the conditions imposed by early education will not be as slow as his has been, for he tells us that it took him fifteen years to become sufficiently advanced after he began to think, to accept the "Nine Demands of Liberalism," and he could not have done it then only from having had the good fortune to hear Remsburg's lecture on "False Claims," at the Rochester Convention.

That lecture, together with the help of the Truth Seeker, which paper he had never heard of until that day, has done much to set his mind at rest. We think his experience is similar to that of the majority of Liberals, and shows the necessity for missionary work among our best, most thoughtful, and active men.

Some may inquire who Mr. Stone is. We take pleasure in introducing him to the readers of FREETHOUGHT. He is a gentleman who frequently calls at this office, and we have extracted from him the information that he is a native of Rochester, N. Y., and reared in Canada, where he worked on a farm summers and went to school winters until he himself became a teacher, and prepared himself for the university. The Cariboo gold excitement in 1862 brought him as near British Columbia as San Francisco, but the reports received here as to those mines determined him to go no nearer. He drifted about this state looking for something that would just suit him until his money was all spent, and the first "soft job" he struck was chopping cord wood for his board. He says he put in a week of as good solid work on that salary as he ever did in his life. From this he won his way up to the work of cutting saw logs in the Santa Cruz mountains at $1.50 a day, and would have done well there if at about the end of the first month the contractor had not gone off and forgotten to pay him. He next found himself making shakes (split boards), but in the autumn of that year secured a position as teacher of the Soquel school in Santa Cruz county, which occupied him for the next five years. At this period he seems to have been something of a "rustler," for during the last two years of the time he also discharged the duties of county superintendent of public schools, and United States inspector of spirits for the second district of California. He also, he says, studied law with John P. Stearns, Esq., now of Santa Barbara, then district attorney of Santa Cruz county, and was admitted to practice in the district court. He gave up all his positions in the winter of 1867-8 to engage with a couple of friends in making their fortunes in the Texas cattle business in southern Kansas, near the Indian territory. Inexperience, hard winters, and low prices swept away all their capital, together with the prospective fortune, within two years, and concluding that he was not designed for a "cow boy" life anyway, he removed his family to California and located in Santa Barbara, where his former success as a teacher in this state secured for him the position of principal of the public schools of that place. Here he wrought some reforms to which at this day he still points with pride, and at the end of five years, after having had ten years' experience in teaching, received a state life diploma as teacher.

Drifting into politics, during the last year of his teaching he was elected county clerk, who was then also auditor and recorder. After two terms in that office he went back to Rochester to engage with his brother in the retail nursery business which the latter was successfully conducting there. In a few years they built up the largest business of the kind ever conducted, up to that time, having branch offices in Portland, Me., Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Detroit, St. Paul, Kansas City, Toronto, and Oakland, and a force of nearly five hundred salesmen on the road. They also had quite a large import trade from Europe and some from Japan. But Mr. Stone's health failed from overwork, so he spent one winter traveling in Europe for the benefit of his constitution, and in the interest of his firm.

At the time when the business seemed most prosperous, the sudden death of his brother, coupled with his own impaired health, compelled him to close out the business, and, like all old Californians who leave this state, he turned his steps once more toward home, and located his family permanently in Oakland; while for the next few years he spent much of his time traveling back and forth to the East in connection with his former business, and for the past two years has been doing a little something in real estate in Los Angeles county, and now, at forty-seven years of age, for the first time in his life, finds himself without employment, and is sufficiently unreasonable to complain of being miserable in a situation which we suppose we shall publish this paper for the remainder of our natural life without securing. The old saying, "A rolling Stone gathers no moss," has not been verified in Brother Stone's case, though he is not a mossback by any means. He confesses that he was married while teaching in Soquel, and owns up to five children, all natives of California. The two eldest, a son and daughter, are in the junior class of the State University, while a third is attending the Oakland High School, and he hopes to give them all a liberal education whether they ultimately become subscribers to FREETHOUGHT or not. He says he has traveled much and seen many desirable places, but, all things considered—society, climate, beautiful scenery, educational facilities, and all those things that tend to make a desirable place to live and raise a family in—Oakland excels them all. He is there now to stay, and has sent the junior editor of this paper a warm invitation to go buggy riding with him in the outskirts some Sunday and select a nice, quiet lot in the Mountain View Cemetery for future reference.

THE ELGIN SUNDAY-LAW CONVENTION.

From the American Sentinel.

II.

Prof. Samuel Ives Curtis said in this convention: "We are not commanded to remember the Sabbath as a day of rest and recreation, but to 'keep it holy.'" And last spring in the Boston Monday Lectureship, Joseph Cook said:

The experience of centuries shows that you will in vain endeavor to preserve Sunday as a day of rest, unless you preserve it as a day of worship.

There, that ought to be plain enough to make anybody understand what is the purpose of the demand for "civil" Sunday-laws. The only safety is in never allowing them to secure themselves in the first step—that is, in never allowing them to secure any sort of a Sunday law. For just as soon as the so-called Protestant churches in this land become possessed of power to wield the civil power in the interests of religion, we shall have the papacy over again.

But Dr. Everts continues; it is not enough that Sunday papers must be stopped in behalf of the churches, but Sunday trains must also be stopped, and for the same reason. He says:

The Sunday train is another great evil. They cannot afford to run a train unless they get a great many passengers, and so break up a great many congregations. The Sunday railroad trains are hurrying their passengers fast on to perdition. What an outrage that the railroad, that great civilizer, should destroy the Christian Sabbath!

Oh, yes! The church-members, and the church-goers, will go on Sunday trains and Sunday excursions, etc. Therefore the trains are responsible and are hurrying their passengers on to perdition. Therefore by all means stop the Sunday trains so as to keep these excellent church-members out of perdition, for if they have any chance they will go. Shut up the way to perdition, and then they will go to heaven. They haven't enough religion, nor love of right, to do right, therefore they must have the state to take away all opportunity to do wrong. And these people will boast themselves of their religion, and their being Christians! It is difficult to see how a Sunday train can hurry anyone to perdition who does not ride on it. And if these church-members are hurried on to perdition by Sunday trains, who is to blame?

The following statements made by Dr. Mandeville, in the convention, are literally true, in a good deal deeper sense than he intended:

1. There has been an alliance formed between the church and the world.

That is a fact, and it is going to ruin both.

2. Let us not deny it.

Amen. We earnestly hope you will not. There is no use in trying to deny it. But instead of going about in the right way to remedy the evil, you set on foot a scheme to compel the world to act as though it were religious, and so to bind closer the alliance, and increase the evil.

3. Influential men fasten themselves upon the church: a sort of political Christians.

Most decidedly true. And the most "influential" of these "political Christians," and the most of them are found in the pulpit; and they organize conventions and pass resolutions to give their "votes and support to those candidates or political officers who will pledge themselves to vote for the enactment and enforcing of statutes in favor of the civil Sabbath," "as a day of worship."

4. Too many men are in the church for self-profit.

Indeed there are, a vast number too many.

5. We pastors are to blame for allowing them to rule.

Yes; you are. You are especially to blame for those influential political Christians fastening themselves upon the church and ruling it, and trading off its votes through Sunday-law conventions. The churches themselves, however, are not clear of blame in this.

But the following statements by the same gentleman, we do not suppose have any deeper meaning than he intends:

1. The subject has two sides. We must not look alone at the religious side. The interests of the church and state are united.

And yet you are all opposed to a union of church and state, aren't you?

2. The merchants of Tyre insisted upon selling goods near the temple on the Sabbath, and Nehemiah compelled the officers of the law to do their duty and stop it. So we can compel the officers of the law to do their duty. . . . When the church of God awakes and does its duty on one side, and the state on the other, we shall have no further trouble in this matter.

Yes, we remember how it was before. The gentle Albigenes in the south of France greatly disturbed the church. They refused to obey its commands. But the church was wide awake, for Innocent III. was pope; and he awoke the state with the call, "Up, most Christian king, up, and aid us in our work of vengeance!" And thus with the church awake to its duty (?) on one side, and the state on the other, the Albigenes were swept from the earth, and there was no further trouble in that matter.

Woe worth the day, and thrice woe to the people, when the religious power can compel the civil. And that is precisely what this Elgin Sunday-law Convention proposes to do.

It would seem from Dr. Mandeville's citation of the example of Nehemiah that they intend to set up a theocracy here. If not, there is no force in his argument, from that instance. But from the following it is quite certain that that is what they have in view. Prof. C. A. Blanchard said:

In this work we are undertaking for the Sabbath, we are representatives of the Lord God.

Therefore it follows that when they vote to support those candidates and political officers who will pledge themselves, etc., they will vote as the representatives of God. And if any of themselves should secure votes enough to send them to the legislature or Congress, they would go there and legislate as representatives of God. And when they get into their hands the power to enforce the law, and to compel the civil power to do their bidding, they will do it all as the representatives of God. And thus again it is demonstrated that if these influential "political Christians" once get the Sunday-laws for which they are so diligently working, we shall have in this nation a living image of the papacy. And again we say the only safety is in not letting them secure the enactment of any sort of a Sunday law, nor anything else through which they may dominate the civil power.

NOTE.—We have not selected all these quotations about the religious Sabbath, and left out what was said about the civil Sabbath. We have carefully read the whole report, and we state it as the literal truth that outside of the resolutions there is not in all the report a single sentence about a civil Sabbath. It is all religious and that only. And yet, just like the California Sunday-law Convention, when it came to putting the thing in form to get votes and legislation they deftly insert the word "civil." All this goes to show what we have often stated; that there is no such thing as a civil Sabbath; and it shows that these men do not really intend to secure, nor to enforce, a "civil" Sunday-law, but a religious one wholly.

THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

MRS. M. TO MR. STONE.

DEAR FRIEND: I have thought a good deal of our little talk upon the cars last Sabbath, and while I know full well that such discussions are apt to be very fruitless, I trust you will bear with me if I add a thought or two to that which has been already said. Those troublesome questions about the Old Testament history that can never be satisfactorily settled to the mind of a doubter, are not after all the important ones, at least not those of first or prime importance.

To begin an investigation of the claims of religion with such inquiries always seems to me like beginning the study of arithmetic with the miscellaneous examples at the very last of the book. There is an A B C of religion as well as of science, and we cannot make satisfactory progress till we begin to study in the right way. You will of course accept that statement and have your own ideas of what constitutes the very first principles of religion, and so I do not propose a discussion, but ask the privilege of stating the matter as it seems to me; and in so doing I represent no system of theology, but the results of my own thinking.

Human reason does not seem to me the dominant faculty of the human soul, that which most vitally affects its weal or woe, but rather the principles of love and hate. In other words, the moral nature of man transcends the intellectual, both as a motive power and a source of happiness; and so it follows that to understand the needs and wants of a human soul in this its most vital part is the most important subject of inquiry. The soul of man is made to love, and can never be satisfied without an adequate object of love. Human love only partially meets this want. It is as a rule disappointing; we must have something higher, nobler. Neither does a beautiful ideal satisfy this craving of the soul. Can we believe that there is in human nature this great want without its counterpart? I do not see how we can escape the conclusion that there must be somewhere a personal God to meet this crying want of the soul, a being away above us, capable of commanding our admiration, as well as love, and one that can and does love us, and makes us feel it. In short, the God-man, Christ Jesus, combines in himself all the requisites to meet and satisfy this great crying want in every human heart, and that history as well as the Bible proves it I am sure can be shown most clearly.

This power of love to a personal God, as revealed in Jesus Christ, is one that challenges an equal. It lies at the foundation of all our missionary operations. Men and women are found to-day going everywhere to help and save the ignorant and degraded, moved by this overmastering power of love to God, and that simple power is that which moves the heathen world to accept the religion thus offered. The history of the Sandwich Islands is in point. They had been known to the civilized world for forty years before the missionaries went there, and were made no better, but rather worse, by the contact. But the missionary went preaching the love of God, his holiness and their sinfulness, and in less than five years the queen and her prime minister, with others, were won, and the change that came over them was marvelous. Twenty years from the time the first missionary went there, an entire change had come over society and the government, as well as over the face of the country. Its civilization was the outgrowth of religion and nothing else.

The fact that there has been, in some respects, a retrograde movement there does not militate against this statement. That came, not because the work done was not real and genuine for the most part, but because wicked men from this Christian land had power to draw away those who were not genuinely converted. The savior himself told us that there would be tares with the wheat, and all experience proves it, but that is not saying there is no wheat; and what is true of the Sandwich Islands is true of multitudes of other places to-day. A religion that is based upon undying love to a personal savior is the foundation of the highest forms of civilization, and is regenerating the world to-day.

My dear friend, I trust you will pardon the personality, but I must tell you that I know this by the most blessed experience, as well as history. Oh, I wish I could tell you what a blessed thing it is to have an Almighty Savior; one that loves you and that you can love with every fiber of your being. That you may yet have such a one to the joy of your soul, is my prayer.

Your true friend,

P. S.—Since writing the above I have decided to ask you to help the good women of this state in the great temperance work they are doing through an organization known as the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. You are, doubtless, more or less familiar with its history and work, and of course are interested in that great movement which is fast becoming the leading idea of the age, viz., saloon and anti-saloon. There is a band of most earnest and successful workers right here in Oakland, but alas! what can we do without money? I often say to the gentlemen: You are as much interested as we are in the great outcome of all this work, but you cannot spare the time to educate the people and save the young. We women are doing the work, and a great deal of hard work free gratis, but we need money for literature and to keep lecturers in the field, etc. For that we must look to the gentlemen, and so give to the world a new illustration of that great principle of political economy, the value of division of labor. How would you feel about making Mrs. Stone a life member of our Union by the gift of twenty-five dollars, and so greatly help those workers?

REPLY.

DEAR MRS. M.: I certainly appreciate the kindly feeling which prompted you to write the letter I received from you a few days ago, for I know it comes from a good and honest heart and sincere desire to do me good.

I am sure I can all the more readily and truly appreciate your motive from the fact of knowing that I honestly occupied exactly the position you occupy to-day for nearly thirty years of my life, and remember well how solicitous I felt for the welfare of the souls of those who seemed indifferent to the momentous question of the soul's salvation, or who could not see as I saw.

I was quite a thorough student of the Bible, believed as I had been taught, that every word of it was the inspired word of God, and when I read of those terrible crimes committed by his chosen people, often by his express commands, and the foolish tales without reason or profitable instruction in them, I devoutly closed my eyes and refused to allow myself to disbelieve them or to reason upon them; saying, "Great is the mystery of godliness," or, "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform;" thus satisfying myself that it must in some way be all right, that I had no right to call in question the truthfulness, or justice, or reason of anything recorded in that book. I furthermore refused to read anything except what would tend to confirm me in a belief which had been instilled in my mind as it grew, and for which I was in no way responsible.

About twenty years ago I had the good fortune to hear that gifted man, Chas. G. Ames, a Unitarian minister, preach in Santa Cruz, and I shall ever regard him as the Moses who led my mind out of "Egyptian darkness," and cherish his memory accordingly. Since then I have read and thought much upon these matters, and believe I have been able to take a position from which I can view them impartially; and I assure you I now view them in an altogether different light from what I formerly did.

I know you are honest in your convictions; I know I was honest in mine at the earlier period I speak of, and from what you have known of me for many years past, I think it is not too much for me to ask you to believe me when I tell you I never was more honest in my convictions than I am at the present time.

I am very liable to be mistaken, of course; but I always supposed that the Old Testament was claimed to be the A B C of the Christian religion, that which led up to and was the foundation and support of the New Testament, that upon which the whole superstructure of our religious system rested, and without which much of the latter would be as unintelligible to the ordinary understanding as would be the miscellaneous examples at the end of the arithmetic to the ordinary mind without all that goes before.

I am afraid you take me out of my depth when you speak of the human soul as a thing having faculties not dominated by reason, or as being something distinct from mind or reason, and you must excuse me if instead of trying to follow you into deep water, I prefer to "keep near shore and bait for small fish."

Many years ago a very great man for whom I have a great admiration wrote: "It is only by the exercise of reason that we can discover God. Take away that reason, and he would be incapable of understanding anything, and in this case it would be just as consistent to read the book called the Bible to a horse as to a man. How, then, is it that these people pretend to reject reason?"

The reasoning faculty being absent, we are no wiser than the brutes; hence reason must be the dominant faculty, and we have no use for any book or any science or any teaching that will not stand the test of reason.

I would not willingly say anything to hurt your feelings, but I must be honest enough with myself to say to you that I shall never again so far renounce my reason, or so far outrage my sense of justice, as to allow myself to believe for one moment that a God exists who ever did or ever can perpetrate a wrong or an act of outrage and injustice upon any of the beings he has created, or that very much of that book called the Bible is his inspired word.

There are many moral precepts contained in that book that I am willing to accept without question; not because they are in that book, for most of them appear in the sacred writings of so-called heathen nations, penned long before most of our Bible was written (see Confucius, Buddha, etc.), but because, like the axioms of geometry, they are self-evident truths which all human experience teaches us require no demonstration.

I know from my reading of history that differences of opinion with regard to the teachings of this book have led to more wars, persecutions, bloodshed, terrible crimes, and human misery generally, than all other causes combined, and that only as the superstitions taught in this book, and those growing out of it, have lost their hold upon the mind through the light of science and the general diffusion of knowledge among the masses of so-called Christian nations, have those nations been enabled to emerge from the debasing ignorance which for a thousand years, during the so-called Dark Ages, when they were entirely dominated by the Christian church, enveloped the world like a pall of blackness.

As the diffusion of knowledge becomes more general, the disbelief in the inspiration of the Bible becomes more nearly universal; the supernatural gives way to the natural, and men are not afraid to hold up their heads and apply the test of reason to every question, be it religious, scientific, or political.

You say, "I do not see how we can escape the conclusion that there must be somewhere a personal God."

I say with equal honesty—for one must be honest with himself when thinking on such a question—that it is entirely incomprehensible to me how anyone who thinks can imagine the possibility of such a thing in nature as a personal God.

Such a being, if I understand the expression, must have form and parts and occupy some definite space. My God is omnipresent, and consequently occupies all space; and if personal, having form and parts, there would be no room for anything else in the universe. It is just as impossible for me to think of a personal God being in existence without some creative power back of him as it is to think of a universe being in existence without some creative power back of it.

There is a creative power acting in and through all nature which you may call god, law, or any term to express the idea, which acts continually, invariably, and has never changed in its course of acting, and never will notwithstanding all the prayers and sacrifices offered up by all the human beings that have lived since the first rude savage, just developed to a condition a single stage above the brute creation, lifted up his hands in supplication to the "great spirit" to protect him from the lightning or other destructive force of nature. The same God that sends the rain upon the just and the unjust, that causes the light and heat which produce the abundance of the earth, sends also the lightnings that smite the just and the unjust alike, the hurricane that destroys, the earthquake that lays in ruins the palace and cathedral, the "little church round the corner" and the poor man's cottage, with equal impartiality; the famine which falls most heavily upon the poor, and the pestilence which is no respecter of persons. The good and the evil all come from the same source, and often that which seems to promise most good if we can only attain it, when attained results only in evil; while the apparent evil often proves to be a blessing in disguise.

There is no such thing as the supernatural. Everything in nature is subject to the same unchanging universal laws, and hence I do not believe there ever was such a thing as what we call a miracle, which could be accomplished only by a change or suspension of a law of nature. Nor are such things as miracles needed to establish any truth. You know that this miracle business has been worked to an enormous extent by the most powerful Christian church, and in that church in certain places (notably in places where the people are most unenlightened) they continue to occur up to the present day; and why should they not if Christ's promises to his disciples are worth anything? Where one miracle is recorded in the Bible, they have a hundred performed by their saints and relics of saints, all equally well authenticated with those in our Bible, and some of them more wonderful than many of ours. You do not believe in those miracles taught by priests not of your faith, but hundreds of millions have believed them, and do to this day.

You say, "I wish I could tell you what a blessed thing it is to have an almighty savior."

My dear friend, I sincerely believe you, and I used to feel exactly that way toward my father and mother, who were Presbyterians at that time, when I abandoned the faith I was brought up in and was converted at a Methodist camp-meeting, and as a choice of societies I would unite with, through the influence of one of the best men I have known, was led to choose the society of "Disciples," as they styled themselves because they had no creed but the New Testament. At that time they believed baptism by immersion essential to salvation. The good friend spoken of directed my scriptural studies, and I soon learned to believe firmly in the doctrine—for you know you can learn to believe almost any doctrine by a diligent study of the scriptures with that special end in view. How often have I prayed earnestly to the "personal God" I could then see so vividly sitting on the great white throne, surrounded by angels with harps in their hands, singing his praises day and night, that he would enable my parents to see his will and do it. His answer to my prayers was to make them both professed Liberals.

I was young and enthusiastic and thoroughly in earnest in my religion then, I assure you; but the picture of a personal God and the heaven of my imagination have gone the same way the picture of Santa Claus with his reindeer and sledge and bundle of toys went at a somewhat earlier period.

Why can you not understand it? Don't you know as well as believe that the Hindoo, the Mohammedan, the Catholic, thousands of millions of them, have received the same consolation from their religion, the same answers to their prayers, in times of calamity and distress and in the hour of death, that you and other Christians of your faith have from yours? This does not prove that either they or you are right, but simply that they and you are honest in thinking the religion you have been educated in is the true religion and satisfies all the longings of the human soul. Had you been born of Catholic parents, you would be as firm a Catholic as you are now a Protestant; for I know you too well to think you could ever be anything but intensely true to your convictions; and if you led as honest and useful a life as a Catholic as you have as a Protestant, you would certainly have had the same claim to all the future good there is in store for anyone that you have now. Your claim does not rest upon what you believe, but upon what you are. I know an ignorant Irish Catholic washerwoman in this city who has done more real good in the world in her quiet way, according to her means, than thousands of professed Liberals and Christians who are living in affluence, and I have no hesitation in saying that I would refuse to enter a heaven whose doors would be closed to her. Still I have not the slightest idea it is her belief that makes her character so admirable.

Belief is simply a matter of education, for which you are no more responsible than you are for the color of your hair, so long as you continue in the belief you were born and educated in. I do not believe as you do, or as my Catholic friend does; but I am just as honest in my unbelief in most that you believe in of a religious character as you are in your belief; yet this has nothing to do with my moral character. I am just as happy in my Infidelity, if you choose to term it that, as I ever was when I believed about as you do, and have no more desire or license or temptation to lead a dishonest or immoral life than I ever had. I have no fear for the future, for, you know, "knowledge casteth out fear." My father, brother, and many of the best and truest men I have ever known have gone into eternity in no more hopeful condition of mind than I now enjoy, so far as their faith was concerned, and I have not a shadow of a fear that they are not all right if they still live, providing they find something to do and something to learn. To wear white robes and walk golden streets and wave palms and sing praises forever and ever would be no heaven for them. There can be nothing satisfying to the all-inquiring, active, progressive human mind in such a child's picture of paradise as that. Progress, growth, and development or decay and death is the law of nature and ever will be.

You say, "The soul of man is made to love and can never be satisfied without an adequate object of love," and that "the God-man, Christ Jesus, combines in himself all the requirements to meet and satisfy this great crying want in every human heart." I should like to preach you a sermon on this topic as long as those I was compelled as a boy to sit and listen to from the good old Scotch Presbyterian minister I remember so well, rest his soul! He is in heaven now, and I bear him no animosity for the tortures I endured on those hard seats. But I will be more merciful to you, and content myself with quoting that beautiful little poem of Leigh Hunt's. It always does me good:

Abou Ben Adhem—may his tribe increase—
Awoke one night from a deep dream of peace,
And saw, within the moonlight in his room,
Making it rich and like a lily in bloom,
An angel, writing in a book of gold.
Exceeding peace had made Ben Adhem bold,
And to the presence in the room he said,
"What writest thou?" The vision raised its head,
And, with a look made all of sweet accord,
Answered, "The names of those who love the Lord."
"And is mine one?" said Abou. "Nay, not so,"
Replied the angel. Abou spoke more low,
But cheerily still, and said, "I pray thee, then,
Write me as one who loves his fellow-men."
The angel wrote and vanished. The next night
It came again with a great awakening light,
And showed the names whom love of God had blest,
And lo! Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.

These are my sentiments. This covers the whole ground. "In as much as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me." Let all good men and women lavish the wealth of their love upon their fellow-men. Let them exhaust their energies in efforts to form and elevate human character, and they will come nearest to serving and loving the Lord. God, Christ, and all the holy angels are able to take care of themselves; they want no service from us, for we can do nothing for them, nor can we teach them anything. If all the wealth of love and money and energy and enthusiasm that has been expended in trying to bring the nations of earth, through the power of love or through the power of force, to believe in and love God and Christ, had been expended in enlightening the human mind and dispelling the dark clouds of ignorance and superstition which have only been partially lifted as yet, even in the most favored places, we should be much nearer the millennium than we are to-day. To quote from Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason:"

However unwilling the partisans of the Christian system may be to believe or to acknowledge it, it is nevertheless true that the age of ignorance commenced with the Christian system. There was more knowledge in the world before that period than for many centuries afterwards; and as to religious knowledge, the Christian system was only another species of mythology, and the mythology to which it succeeded was a corruption of an ancient system of Theism. It is owing to this long interregnum of science, and to no other cause, that we have to look through a vast chasm of many hundred years to the respectable characters we call the Ancients. Had the progression of knowledge gone on proportionably with the stock that before existed, that chasm would have been filled up with characters rising superior to each other; and those ancients we now so much admire would have appeared respectably in the background of science. But the Christian system laid all waste; and if we take our stand about the beginning of the sixteenth century, we look back through that desert in which not a shrub appears to intercept the vision to the fertile hills beyond.

Let us try to realize that our duties belong to the here and now, and to the inhabitants of this world, where we shall find ample room to lavish all our love and sympathy where it is needed and can do some good; that love to man is love to God, and the consciousness of having faithfully served our fellow-men will satisfy all the longings of the human mind. If we can fully realize this, we shall have little more concern as to what may be our condition hereafter than we have with our condition before we came into this life; and we shall be satisfied that if there is a future for us, it is in the hands of our creator who makes no mistakes, and it will be all right. The very best use we can make of our time in this life will be the very best preparation we can make for another, be it what it may. One world at a time is all that the best of us can well attend to.

You say, "Men and women are found to-day going everywhere to help save the ignorant and degraded, moved by this overmastering power of love to God." Far be it from me to disparage their motives or the good they do. If they would only content themselves with saving them from their ignorance, without trying to substitute one kind of ignorance for another, you would find me a regular contributor to the missionary cause. I acknowledge that they may do some good, but were it not that the primer goes hand-in-hand with the catechism, and secular education with the religious teaching, they certainly would accomplish very little good.

Can you show in the world's history greater religious zeal, greater personal sacrifice, and more heroic fortitude than has been displayed by the Jesuits and the missionaries of the Catholic church, or point to labors of this character that have been more successful in accomplishing their object? The only parallel is to be found in the history of Mohammedanism. Then comparing your creed with theirs, can you honestly rejoice in their success in converting the heathen to their faith?

Read a few excerpts from the late speech of Rev. Canon Taylor at the church congress recently held in Wolverhampton, England, and say whether you can honestly rejoice in the temporal regeneration of the African heathen by the Moslem missionaries when they are thereby, according to Mr. Taylor, irrevocably lost to the redemption taught by the Christians. Mr. Taylor says:

The faith of Islam is spreading over Africa with giant strides. . . . Christianity is receding before Islam, while attempts to proselyte Mohammedans are notoriously unsuccessful. We not only fail to gain ground, but even fail to hold our own. . . . An African tribe, once converted to Islam, never returns to paganism, and never embraces Christianity. . . . When Mohammedanism is embraced by a negro tribe, devil-worship, fetichism, cannibalism, human sacrifice, infanticide, witchcraft, at once disappear. Filth is replaced by cleanliness, and they acquire personal dignity and self-respect. Hospitality becomes a religious duty, drunkenness rare, gambling is forbidden. A feeling of humanity, benevolence, and brotherhood is inculcated. Islam, above all, is the most powerful total abstinence association in the world; whereas the extension of European trade means the extension of drunkenness and vice, and the degradation of the people. Islam introduces a knowledge of reading and writing, decent clothing, personal cleanliness, veracity, and self-respect. Its restraining and civilizing effects are marvelous. How little have we to show for the vast sums of money and precious lives lavished upon Africa! Christian converts are reckoned by thousands. Moslem converts by millions. . . . The strictly regulated polygamy of Moslem lands is infinitely less degrading to women, and less injurious to man, than the promiscuous polyandry which is the curse of Christian cities, and which is absolutely unknown in Islam. The polyandrous English are not entitled to cast stones at polygamous Moslems."

He also says, quoting from the returns of the Church Missionary Society, that "in India last year, 841 missionaries spent £48,000 in making 297 converts. In Ceylon, 374 agents secured 207 converts at a cost of £10,138 17s. 6d., and in Persia, Palestine, Arabia, and Egypt together it required all the efforts of 109 missionaries and native agents at a cost of £11,804 9s. 6d. to baptize one person."

The London Table, commenting on the above, says:

It may be argued that the worth of a human soul is not to be estimated in currency. That may be so, and it may be also that the particular Jew, Turk, Infidel, or heretic whose baptismal expenses amounted to £11,804 9s. 6d. is a bargain at the money, but only think how many English souls could be saved, and how many human English stomachs filled, at a tithe of the expense.

I cannot help thinking there is a vast amount of good hard sense in the Table's criticism, and that there is much force in the old saying, "Let charity begin at home."

From all that I have read and learned of the Christianizing of the aborigines of this country and the islands of the Pacific, and considering what you say and what I have read elsewhere of the ultimate effect of the Christian civilization on the natives of the Sandwich Islands, up to the present time, taking a candid, practical view of the matter from the outside, I cannot resist the conviction that all those barbarians would have been vastly better off if by any possibility they could have been left in a state of nature, undisturbed by civilizing influences; unless we take the utilitarian ground that their annihilation is preferable to their continued existence in that condition; for we know that their natures seem to be such that our civilization to them generally means extermination.

You are precluded from taking this ground, for by so doing you would impugn the wisdom of their creator in making them at all. This thought of course can only relate to those tribes that perish under our form of civilization.

Then, looking at it from another point of view. If I honestly believed, as I suppose you do, that to learn of Christ and the gospel without accepting him and believing in him will consign the unbeliever to endless woe, I should say emphatically that the greatest cruelty and injustice you can possibly perpetrate upon thousands of millions of human beings now living and yet unborn who have never heard of Christ, and never would hear of him except through the Christian missionaries, the Christian churches are perpetrating upon them to-day by spending millions of money to carry to them the "glad tidings of great joy" which in the very nature of things can result only in the salvation of a few while it brings eternal damnation to the great multitude. I cannot look at it in any other way. Better let them live for a few years in the innocent enjoyment of the ignorance, bestiality, and even cannibalism to which they were born, and than which they know no better condition, and let them go into eternity the innocent children of Nature with the possibility of advancement ever open to them, than consign them to eternal perdition. What a terrible significance is there in the thought of an eternity of misery; and how can you for a moment compare any possible advantage to be derived from the most favorable conditions of this brief life with that? I know it is not in your good heart to retain your faith in the goodness and justice of God, and consent to the late infamous decision of the Presbyterian American Board for Foreign Missions, viz., that their missionaries must teach that the heathens who never heard of Christ must spend an eternity in misery.

I honestly think that an intelligent, educated, civilized man who can believe and teach such a horrible doctrine as that in the last end of the nineteenth century is beneath the contempt of all honest men and women. He must have a heart of stone; be devoid of all sense of right and justice; be a fit instrument to seize upon and perpetuate the horrors of the Inquisition if he had the power, and one worthy to be avoided by all good men.

The great mass of Presbyterians, I am sure, do not believe this, for the laity have ever been in advance of the clergy in all liberal ideas; their humanity overrides their theology, and even if they know that such doctrines are taught by their creed, they do not think of it, but simply pass it over, pay their pew rent, and retain their church relations; while the humane and liberal-minded among their clergy are boldly disavowing such debasing portions of the creed, or severing their connection with the society.

An intelligent man who could allow himself to accept of such a belief would richly deserve to be sent as a missionary to a cannibal island. No, I would not consign him to so merciful a fate; I would do worse; I would consign him to the infamy of his own mind; and at the same time extend to him my pity for allowing his theology to distort, and cramp, and dwarf his soul into an object too infinitely small to be discoverable at short range by the immense telescope* donated to science by the Infidel, James Lick, and erected on the mountain named in honor of the noble minded and liberal Presbyterian, Rev. L. Hamilton, who, as you doubtless remember, was deposed from the pastorate of the first Presbyterian church here in Oakland, and condemned for heresy and excommunicated from the Presbyterian denomination on two charges:

"First.—That he held and publicly expressed the conviction that both scripture and reason sanction the hope and belief that repentance and forgiveness of sins will be possible after death for souls that have not become hardened against the truth in this life."

This is the doctrine, as I understand it, that the American Board for Foreign Missions, in solemn council, in America, in the year of grace 1887, forbade their missionaries to teach.

"Second.—That he denied the belief that the state of the lost will be one eternally increasing in knowledge and capacity for suffering."

My God! can human imagination or devilish malignity devise a more horrible doctrine than this? God will not be satisfied with allowing his victims, poor, weak, ignorant mortals, mere children in knowledge, unnumbered millions of whom never heard of Christ, to rest in eternity with no greater capacity for suffering than they possess here, but will have them go on "eternally increasing in knowledge and capacity for suffering." Do you wonder that I cannot believe in such a God as that, or still * Correctly speaking, a small object near at hand is a proper subject for the microscope; but the thought of the telescope, leading to what follows, slipping into my mind, I used it by no kind of license I can name.

think I have spoken too strongly against Presbyterian teachers? A successor of Mr. Hamilton in the Presbyterian church in Oakland has taught that a failure to observe the first day of the week in a particular manner is a "violation of a command of the decalogue;" yet I have never heard of his being tried for and convicted of dishonesty. But let us not be hard upon him, for perhaps he believed it; I once did. Or perhaps he thought God made a mistake when he wrote on the table of stone the seventh day; or perhaps he thought the Roman Emperor Constantine, who issued the edict first proclaiming Sunday, the first day of the week, to be "God's holy day," knew better what God wanted than the Almighty did himself. This same divine also proposed to abolish Sunday newspapers. But the world still moves. Superstition and priestcraft have lost their power to block the wheels of progress, and the Sunday newspapers, purified but not abolished, will be going on educating and redeeming the world when curious antiquarians shall be searching among the musty archives of the past for a copy of the "Presbyterian Profession of Faith."

I have told you some of the things I do not believe, and now I will try, in few words, to tell you some of the things I do believe.

I think I can honestly use the words of Thomas Paine given in his "profession of faith," in the "Age of Reason:"

"I believe in one God and no more, and I hope for happiness beyond this life.

"I believe in the equality of man; and I believe that religious duties consist in doing justice, loving mercy, and endeavoring to make our fellow-creatures happy."

My only creed, and all the moral precepts that I can conceive of as binding upon any human being, may be condensed into the single sentence, "Do unto others as you would that they should do to you." This involves the idea that you can commit no sin against yourself without wronging others.

I believe that the consequences of all our acts are as eternal as eternity itself, be they good or bad, and that it is impossible to escape from the consequences of wrong-doing by throwing the responsibility upon an innocent party, even with his consent; and as a natural consequence, I believe the doctrine of "vicarious atonement," and "forgiveness of sins" is immoral, pernicious, and has been the cause of untold mischief to the human race. Let all men be taught that they, and they alone, must suffer the consequences of their own acts, as surely as that their hands must be burned if thrust into the fire, and they will be taught a most powerful motive for right living; and we shall hear no more of the disgusting nonsense about murderers stepping from the scaffold into Paradise and proclaiming with their last words a perfect assurance of heaven for themselves, while their "greatest regret" is that their poor victims went into eternity unprepared."

I recognize the fact that the churches, through the power and influence of organization, accomplish much good by teaching moral precepts in connection with their religious superstition, and are able to do much for charity; but I think they would accomplish much more good if they would confine themselves entirely to teaching moral and scientific principles.

Of course you recognize the fact that there is a broad distinction between morality and religion. A person may be intensely religious; that is, believe firmly in the inspiration of all scripture, in the divinity of Christ, the vicarious atonement, and all the doctrines of the church he has been educated in, and at the same time be extremely immoral; while, on the other hand, a person may sincerely disbelieve all these things and still be a strictly moral man and good citizen. Many of our greatest thinkers, scientists, reformers, and philanthropists, as you know, belong to the latter class.

Recognizing, as I do, the good that is accomplished by the churches, I should gladly unite with any one of them that would give up the claim that the religion that was good enough for the civilization of thousands of years ago is good enough and all-sufficient for the requirements of the more advanced civilization of to-day; who would look forward instead of backward, and acknowledge no standard of morality which was not at least equal to what they preach and practice, instead of clinging to a book "written, no one knows when, by persons, no one knows whom, and consequently without authority," many parts of which are so indecent a man cannot read them to his children, or a minister to his congregation.

Knowing, as you and I both do, the wonderful advancement in the liberality of religious ideas, as taught to-day, when compared with the teachings of even forty years ago, gives me full faith to believe that if I could live fifty years longer, I should have no difficulty in finding a church that I could sincerely and heartily fellowship with, without feeling that I was acting the part of a hypocrite, which is a character I do not admire.

I cannot believe any ultimate good can come from teaching error, no matter how much good may be mixed up with it, for it retards the advancement of the mind, which needs the spur of truth rather than the curb of error; and consequently I must be content to live an outcast from church society and all the pleasures of its social life, and satisfy myself with the reflection that my children will live to see the day when no one will be ostracized by society, boycotted in his business, or neglected by his friends in consequence of his religious opinions.

You are surrounded by your church society, church influences, literature, and work, and have not the same opportunity for knowing what the great, busy, stirring, outside world thinks on this subject that I have; and I assure you that among all the active business men that I meet more than three-fourths of them seem to have much the same views with myself. I know many who attend church regularly and contribute largely to its support who do so, not from any thought of its being necessary for themselves, but because they think it is necessary for others, to keep them straight. Besides, it is "eminently respectable," and, as one friend of this class said to me a short time ago, "good for the women and children."

If the Liberals would unite in compact organization like the churches, there is no question in my mind that they would form by far the largest, strongest, and wealthiest societies in this state. But the trouble with most of them is that, being satisfied with their own convictions, they do not much concern themselves with the views of others, as they recognize everyone's right to think for himself. Besides this, most of them have worked out their own salvation by doing their own thinking, and get beyond the first energy and enthusiasm of youth and become absorbed in business and encumbered with the cares of life before they have come fully to know what they do believe; for you know most of them, of my age, have had to unlearn much of their early teaching, which is no easy thing to do for most persons, especially without a teacher; and by that time they have little leisure to devote to the care of others' minds. It took me fifteen years after I commenced to advance to become sufficiently Liberal to indorse all of the Nine Demands of Liberalism, and now it is hard for me to understand how anyone can dispute the justice of them. Human nature is eminently selfish, and most of those who see little harm to the individual in allowing him to believe in error are not likely to care to submit themselves to the only form of persecution left to intolerance, and still freely exercised, viz., social ostracism and injury to business.

Religion, like everything else, is a matter of evolution, and I look to see the best and highest code of ethics evolved from the churches of to-day, and given force and effect through the influence of church organization; and as I am impatient over the tardiness of that evolution, I feel that the greatest service now being rendered to the world is by such men as Colonel Ingersoll, who, let them be ever so much worse, and their teachings more destructive, than their opponents can picture them, by the vigor and pertinacity of their assaults upon the citadel of superstition are compelling honest men and women to doubt and think; and until they can be brought to this condition of mind there is no possibility of advancement. The lightning sometimes hurts, but it purifies the atmosphere. Nearly all reforms that history gives any account of were inaugurated by those who were infidel to the general teaching of their times. Copernicus and Galileo were infidels to the science of their time, and their doubts led to the discovery of new truths. Luther was an infidel in his time, and helped to weaken the chains of mental slavery. Garrison and nearly all the leaders of the antislavery movement were infidels, but the movement they set on foot resulted in breaking the chains of millions of human beings; while at the beginning the orthodox clergy, both North and South, with rare exceptions, were opposed to the movement, basing their opposition on Bible grounds.

Even the temperance movement originated not with the religious teachers, but with Infidels and laymen; and at the "World's Temperance Convention," held in New York about 1853, as well as at the "World's Antislavery Convention," held in London, England, in 1840, the lady delegates were refused admission on the ground that the Bible forbade their being permitted to speak in public. Speaking of temperance reminds me that in your letter you ask me to donate $25.00 to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. I believe in temperance, and have done so all my life, though I am not sure I can indorse your movement to the full extent. I have paid some attention to the subject to try to satisfy my own mind as to the right and practicability of it, but this letter is already too long to discuss it generally; therefore I will merely touch upon the religious aspect of your movement, for I cannot resist the temptation to ask you if you do not think your society is flying false colors.

To be a Christian Temperance Society, it seems to me it must be based upon the teachings of Christ and the Bible. Unfortunately we cannot take the Bible as a text book on temperance, for nine-tenths of its authorities are against us; nor can we follow the example of Christ. The record tells us that he was a "wine-bibber," and that he manufactured as well as drank wine, and nowhere in the New Testament does he forbid the use of wine.

There are nine passages in the Bible and no more, all in the Old Testament, which speak of its use in terms of condemnation; four of these being in Proverbs. But the writer more than nullifies all the good things said in these four passages by what he says in Proverbs iii, 10, and xxxi, 6-7.

As against these nine passages, there are more than one hundred contained in the Old and New Testaments which speak of wine either as a blessing, or threaten to withhold it as a punishment, or directly recommend its use, or forbid its use on stated occasions only, and by certain persons, or speaking of it incidentally, showing that all classes used it, and without either condemning or commending its use.

Some months ago I read a letter from a Methodist minister, published in an Eastern paper, in which he took the ground that Christians did themselves great wrong in trying to base their temperance movement upon the Bible, because the evidence of that book was overwhelmingly against them; and it would be much better to let the temperance question alone altogether, than to destroy the people's faith in the Bible as an infallible moral guide by trying to force an interpretation of it that would support their temperance theories, when the preponderance of testimony was so strongly opposed to such interpretation, as all thinking men and women would readily discover upon examination. He said further that the claim made by some that the wine mentioned in the Bible was not intoxicating was altogether foolish and untenable; that nine-tenths of all the intelligent Christian men and women in the world believed it was intoxicating, else what reason could there be for its being spoken of anywhere in terms of condemnation?

In all this he is of course correct, particularly in the latter proposition; for there are more than thirty passages which show emphatically that it did make people drunk. About the same time I read that article I saw advertised in a New York paper a pamphlet called "Bible Temperance," by Edwin C. Walker, and out of curiosity I sent for it. The pamphlet will accompany this letter, and if you will read it through carefully as you would your Bible—in fact, there is but very little in it but Bible quotations—and after a few days tell me you have done so, and also tell me you honestly believe the preponderance of testimony contained in the Bible is in favor of prohibition, and that you agree with Rev. T. P. Stevens, of Philadelphia, editor of the Christian Statesman, when he wrote: "The education of the children of the republic in temperance principles logically involves the maintenance in those schools of the Bible as the great text book of morals," I will give you $25.00 to be applied in any way you may think best.

Very respectfully,

H. P. STONE.

MAN has discovered that no one is responsible for his opinions, over which he has little control. Can it be that God did not know it all the time?

THE LEAFLET METHOD.

"If the Liberals of Colorado were thoroughly organized," says Mr. C. B. Reynolds in the Truth Seeker of March 3, "they would be a mighty power for good." Let me ask, then, why does not Mr. Reynolds, as vice-president of the American Secular Union, proceed to rouse their latent energies and demonstrate this mighty power? The benefits to be derived from organization are certainly not confined to Colorado. Mr. Reynolds's excuse is that the American Secular Union has not prepared leaflets on "How to organize a local Secular Union and insure success." I am not aware that anyone has been able to insure the success of a Secular Union by merely writing a leaflet. If such a leaflet exists, I shall be only too happy to publish it, for it will far transcend in importance all the rest of our literature. But, if the experience of some years is worth anything, I can assure Mr. Reynolds that it will have to be something different from the crudities so far presented.

Liberals, on the question of organization, are as unlike any other portion of the community as it is possible to imagine. I have found that it takes something beside leaflets to inaugurate and maintain a successful Secular Union. The Chicago society has donated hundreds of dollars to the national treasury, besides keeping up a continuous agitation at home. Where can Mr. Reynolds point to a more successful organization of Liberals? This was not the result of leaflets. It was the result of work. The same work on the part of Mr. Reynolds or anyone else could dot this country with organizations all over.

We are also informed that if we publish "How to inaugurate and conduct a science school successfully without a professor or experienced teacher, the American Secular Union would be doing something toward fulfilling its mission, and there would be little difficulty in forming local Unions, with science schools on Sundays and social advantages that would insure their becoming a power for good, and as they grew in influence and numbers, they would in turn help sustain the American Secular Union." In other words, the child must be born before the parent has matured. Mr. Reynolds should remember that there was but $5 in the treasury when I came into office, and scarcely a thing to work with.

Another thing, it appears I have been all along laboring under the delusion that this movement was organized for the separation of church and state. Scientific schools, when possible, are commendable, but they are only remotely related to secularization, and are at least secondary to the practical work for which the American Secular Union was organized. Mr. Reynolds's articles in some of the Liberal papers are headed "The Blasphemer's Peregrinations," as though the writer particularly courted that distinction. Now, a conservator of science would find it more in keeping with the dignity of his ideas to drop that title and give us a little more science. However, that is merely a matter of taste.

The "unkindest cut of all" is that, as Mr. Reynolds must have known when he penned that article, the secretary had been refused the authority by the Board of Directors to even draw from the fund held for his salary to print needed documents, as they did not feel authorized to incur additional expense; that he preferred to have the printing done rather than to draw his salary. However, to get over the difficulty he has drawn his salary and ordered the printing of 65,000 leaflets, 2,000 constitutions, and has aided in getting out his pamphlet on "God in the State" at his own risk, trusting that the majority of Liberals will do something more than throw cold-water criticism on the American Secular

Union. The leaflets are what I consider essential to the work of the organization. Dr. Willis, of Kokomo, a life member, is generously assisting in this work. I am having twenty electrotypes made; ten with the Nine Demands, five with Senator Crockett's speech, and five with Putnam's rally for organization. Each thousand impressions on a large press will make twenty thousand leaflets, and if not ordered in large quantities they come extravagantly high. We can have other plates made, but the first ten, the "Nine Demands," will always be good. These will be out next week. Weeks ago I ordered the constitutions, but no sign of them yet. Treasurer Eckhard has got out one thousand "Christian Paradoxes," which will be mailed to contributors to the fund. The illogical part of Mr. Reynolds's criticism, as I view it, is, that the American Secular Union should first do all this and then "there would be no lack of funds." Can he find printers with such firm faith in our "futures" as to accept them in payment? When I took this office I outlined in "A Word to Liberals Everywhere" what I thought was a practical plan. A portion of that scheme—the book business—I have not attempted to carry out as yet. Probably I placed too much reliance on proffers and assurances of active assistance from quarters where, up to the present moment, it has amounted to o. But when I make and inaugurate a plan which enables me to see my way clear, the slumberers rise from their "masterly inactivity" for the American Secular Union and scream, "Bribes, commissions!" No one prevents any lecturer from donating all the time and service he will for the pure love of the cause, but some people have the notion that "what is worth doing well is worth paying for." The organizer of a society deserves to be paid as much as a talker, in my humble opinion. Secular Unions do not die of discouragement from lack of leaflets, but from being stabbed in the back by pretended friends.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary A. S. U.

SECULARISM OR GOD IN THE STATE.

The suppression of vice society, whose agent is the reptile-like Comstock—chief ransacker of the public mails and paid spy of our moral police—has done its best to suppress the vice of Freethought. Astonished at the advance of Liberal literature, association encouraged Comstock to commit crime for the purpose of fastening it on others. As Comstock had boasted that he would turn his attention to the Boston Investigator, that Freethought or Infidel publications or tracts would soon be circulated no more, and that he would revive the laws against blasphemy, it was time for the Liberals to be up and doing, for irresponsible dogmatists have never failed to pursue the interests of their creed regardless of the interests of humanity.

President Madison advised in his time that "it is proper to take alarm at the first experiment on our liberty. We hold this prudent jealousy to be the first duty of citizens, and one of the noblest characters of the late revolution. The free men of America did not delay until usurped power had strengthened itself by exercise and entangled the question in precedents. They saw all the consequences in the principle, and avoided the consequences by denying the principle. We revere this lesson too well to forget it."

As Secularists, we are opposed—on principle—to the policy of leasing out the laws to irresponsible amateur theological societies, which has resulted in a whole net-work of similar societies. It is unsafe in theory or practice, because it is a palpable violation of the fundamental principles of our state and national government, which must fail or achieve success by being capable of self-government. The policy of legislation must be judged as it tends toward this result. It destroys all confidence in popular institutions, and is a confession that popular government is a failure—that the people cannot be depended on to suppress vice, punish crime, or enforce laws. Therefore, these sanctified inquisitors assume privileges superior to other citizens and act as their accusers. They are selected by co-religionists and are responsible only to them. They cannot be removed by the people, defeated at election, nor impeached. They are the "elect" who are not elected. What a scathing reflection on a republic where all laws are supposed to be enacted and wholly executed by the people or their direct and responsible officers! Our press and people seem to have forgotten the traditions of American liberty, and are ready to acquiesce in anything that is momentarily popular.

The persecutions, imprisonment, fines, and outrages which fell to the lot of D. M. Bennett, Dr. Foote, and many others, were owing solely to their pronounced Infidelity, and were attacks on their constitutional rights which were properly resisted; for against this encroachment of the kingdom of God we must raise up that of a rational, intelligent man. The intermeddling of these quasi-theological societies is a direct insult to the masses. They are a return to the detested forms of ecclesiasticism—committing crime to punish it—employing jesuitical devices and trickery to decoy and espionage. To talk about popular government while these methods of the Inquisition are practiced is simply a farce. It is now very fashionable for pious meddlers who enjoy too much leisure, at some one else's expense, to get up a society to suppress this evil or that vice, never dreaming that the greatest benefit to society they could accomplish would be to acquire sufficient intelligence to suppress themselves.

There are thousands who believe in the justice of our demands; thousands—not strictly Liberals—who would join us on the question of taxation of church property. By organization this element might be made available. If men would only stand up and be counted, the church would find its adherents are not quite so numerous. This must be done, and the Secular Union has undertaken the work. It proposes by literature, lectures, and debates to create a public opinion favorable to secularization of the state.

The pope's legate no longer brings an emperor to his knees, but the multitude still wallow shamelessly at the feet of priests.

Among the best means to counteract opposing influences is to liberally support the Freethought press. It cannot be expected that a secular journal can look beyond us for sustenance, and a press is absolutely necessary for the advancement of any movement. Heretofore our Freethought press has existed through the heroism and financial sacrifices of its editors and publishers. Are we content to leave them alone in the fight?

Anyone can claim to be a Freethinker, Rationalist, or Liberal, but he who will not sacrifice something for the advancement of secular principles—who will suffer its fearless champions to carry unaided the burden of agitation; who offers no resistance to this God-in-the-Constitution scheme; who makes no protest against the discriminating ecclesiastical laws; who refuses to join us in our efforts; who makes all sorts of paltry excuses when asked to contribute a dollar to Liberalism, but who, for business reasons, gives a good many dollars to the enemy; who always has too much company to attend any Liberal meetings—is unworthy the name he assumes.

What right have we to assume the honored title of Liberals or Freethinkers, if we continue to exhibit such discouraging apathy and disheartening indifference? If freed from the galling chains of superstition ourselves, shall we sit with folded hands and afford no aid to the brave organization which is battling for all? If we have ceased to worship God it is high time to render service to humanity, and look well to the betterment of the social and intellectual condition of the race. We should resolve ourselves into an aggressive, educative, organizing propaganda for:

1. Total separation of church and state.
2. Taxation of church property.
3. Abolition of Sunday laws and chaplaincies.
4. Secularization of public schools.
5. Security of all citizens in their equal rights and privileges, without regard to their beliefs and disbeliefs.

Too many excuse this Christian meddling, as it is done in behalf of religion. Religion, as taught to-day, is an empty, cruel hoax. It is simply the imposition of mind-obscurer priests. They talk of their redeemer and their God. The earth teems with them. Thousands of redeemers rushed on to the crucifixion of the battlefield in our memory, and in dying uttered no whine of upbraiding, no Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani, but a colossal evil crumbled to pieces in attestation of their heroism. Such Christs will never die! Woe to the race if but one savior were all it had to look to for redemption from the deep damnation of injustice. Wherever man has dared to resist a wrong, there has humanity been glorified. Not by the pomp of armies—not by the roll of drums, the blare of trumpets, nor the thunders that Jove's great clamors counterfeit—but by earnest aspirations of noble men and women, led by the everlasting illumination of wisdom—the resultant forces of the development of reason.

The time has come, freighted with the fate of coming millions, which beckons us to push forward every action and power. There is a great national work to be done as well as a local and personal one by the American Secular Union. All secular reform, to be successful, must be organized. An army without a commander is a powerless mob.

Liberals who enlist in this grand army, on whose banner is inscribed "Universal Mental Liberty," deserve to be enrolled in Fame's brightest temple, where their names should endure for generations. But fame or no fame, it is our duty, and now is the time for action.

If poor in pocket, let us not be poor in spirit or in action. Something is due from all Freethinkers to the work of the American Secular Union. The enemy never sleeps—neither should our vigilance for Freethought.

"It demands thy thought in justice,
Debt, not tribute of the free;
Have not ages long departed
Groaned, and toiled, and bled for thee?
If the Past has lent thee wisdom,
Pay it to Futurity."

E. A. STEVENS.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A LOCAL UNION.

For the information of those who desire to form local societies and unite with the national organization, the following is printed. The form of constitution is simply for suggestion, and changes can be made as the members of the local societies may think best in order to do a more varied intellectual and social work.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A SECULAR UNION.

The American Secular Union is formed by the union of Local Auxiliary Societies. To organize a Local Auxiliary Society, any person (man or woman) may place the following Call at the head of a sheet of paper and solicit signatures:

CALL.

We, the undersigned citizens of [here introduce name of town or city], agree to organize an Auxiliary Secular Union, to work in connection with the American Secular Union, and to pay the sums set opposite our names for that purpose.

Names.	Residences.	Amounts.
--------	-------------	----------

As soon as ten persons have subscribed to this Call, and five dollars have been paid in, make out an application for a Charter, inclosing the application, together with a money order or postal note for five dollars (or the amount may be inclosed in a registered letter) to the secretary of the American Secular Union.

Any Liberal society can by a vote qualify itself an Auxiliary Secular Union, and take out a charter.

On receipt of the five dollars and application signed by the president and secretary (or the temporary secretary) of the new Union (and as many others as may choose), the secretary will forward to the applicant a charter signed by the proper officers of the American Secular Union.

SUPPORT OF THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

In order to provide an adequate revenue to the treasury of the American Secular Union, to enable it to carry out the requirements of sections 4, 5, and 6 of Article III. of its Constitution, and to do other legitimate work of the Union, every auxiliary is requested to contribute a certain sum monthly, not less than five cents per month from each one of its members, for the use of the American Secular Union. The amount thus collected should be remitted quarterly on the first days of January, April, July, and October, by the secretary of the auxiliary to the secretary of the American Secular Union.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperiled, the advance of civilization impeded, and that most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the state in matters of religion; and,

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ARTICLE 1. The name of this Association shall be THE SECULAR UNION OF—.

ART. 2. The object of the Secular Union shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in—.

ART. 3. The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4. Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the Union as shall be prescribed in the By-laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5. Any person may become a member of the Union by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6. The Officers of the Union shall be a President, a Vice-President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex officio delegates to the National Convention of Secular Unions when called together.

ART. 7. These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

THE DEATH PENALTY.

It will be remembered that the legislature of the state of New York in 1886 passed an act providing for the appointment of a commission "to investigate and report at an early date the most humane and practical method known to modern science of carrying into effect the sentence of death in capital cases." The commission, consisting of Elbridge T. Gerry, Matthew Hale, and Alfred P. Southwick, has just made its report to the legislature. Immediately after its appointment the commission met, and carefully considered the general outlines of the subject, and also examined the entire criminal law, from its earliest history down to the present time, as to the principles upon which the infliction of capital punishment was based, the methods of execution and the reasons therefor; and in its report, which consists of a pamphlet of one hundred pages, it gives a history of the law, beginning with that of Moses. Letters were sent to sheriffs, physicians, and judges, requesting their opinions as to the present modes of punishment, and inviting suggestions. To these letters two hundred answers were received, and after their perusal and a careful study, the commission decided that electricity was the best means for effecting capital punishment.

The advantages claimed for electricity are that death is instantaneous upon its application, and that resuscitation is impossible. For the administration of electricity to a criminal, all that would be essential would be a chair with a head and foot rest, in which the condemned could be seated in a semi-reclining position. One electrode would be connected with the head-rest, and the other with the foot-rest, which would consist of a metal plate. The expense of such a chair would not exceed $50. If the current of electricity is supplied from the electric-light wires there would be but slight expense incurred to make the connection from the chair with the wires outside. An independent application would cost between $250 and $500.

The commission concludes its report with the following recommendations: That the death penalty must be inflicted by causing to pass through the body of the convict a current of electricity of sufficient intensity to cause death, and the application of the current must be continued until the convict is dead. The execution must take place within the walls of the state prison designated in the warrant, or within the yard or inclosure adjoining. It shall be the duty of the warden to be present at the execution, and to invite the presence of a justice of the supreme court, the district attorney and sheriff of the county in which the conviction was had, together with two physicians and twelve reputable citizens. Besides one, or at most two, clergymen, and seven assistants or deputy sheriffs, no persons other than those mentioned shall be permitted to be present. Immediately after the execution, a post-mortem examination of the body of the convict shall be made by the physicians present at the execution, and their report in writing, stating the nature of the examination made by them, shall be annexed to the certificate, signed by all the persons witnessing the execution, that the sentence was duly carried into effect in accordance with the requirements of the law. After the post-mortem examination, the body shall be delivered by the warden, for the purposes of dissection, to some public hospital or incorporated medical college within the state; or the body may be interred in the graveyard or cemetery attached to the prison, with a sufficient quantity of quicklime to promptly consume it. In no case shall the remains be delivered to any relative or friend; and no account of the details of any such execution, beyond the statement of the fact that the convict was, on the day in question, duly executed according to law at the prison, shall be published in any newspaper.—Science.

THE FATE OF PROTESTANTS.

Bishop Coxe quotes from a book issued by the Catholic Publication Society in New York, and by affiliated publishers in Baltimore and Cincinnati, for the instruction of children. Its motto is (quoted from Benedict XIV.), "We affirm that the greatest part of the damned are in hell because they did not know those mysteries of faith which Christians must know and believe." The book says:

"QUESTION. Have Protestants any faith in Christ?

"ANSWER. They never had.

"Q. Why not?

"A. Because there never lived such a Christ as they imagine and believe in.

"Q. In what kind of a Christ do they believe?

"A. In such a one of whom they can make a liar with impunity, whose doctrine they can interpret as they please, and who does not care what a man believes, provided he be an honest man before the public.

"Q. Will such a faith in such a Christ save Protestants?

"A. No sensible man will assert such an absurdity.

"Q. What will Christ say to them on the day of judgment?

"A. I know you not, because you never knew me.

"Q. Are Protestants willing to confess their sins to a Catholic bishop or priest who alone has power from Christ to forgive sins? "Whose sins you shall forgive they are forgiven them."

"A. No; for they generally have an utter aversion to confession, and therefore their sins will not be forgiven them throughout all eternity.

"Q. What follows from this?

"A. That they die in their sins and are damned."

Freetho't Philosophically Discussed.

George E. Macdonald, formerly of New York, an old-time graduate of the Scott-Browne college and an enterprising young man, has taken up his residence in San Francisco, Cal. He honors us with a copy of FREETHOUGHT, a Liberal journal, Vol. I., No. 1, January 7, 1888. Two dollars a year, and issued weekly at that. Indeed tho'ts are getting free, to come so often and so cheaply. But in this case they are good, nevertheless. Here is a specimen: "The shadow of slavery is the grave of reason. The soul of tho't is freedom; the slave cannot think, he simply copies. The head must teach the heart." Right here a tho't strikes us, namely: Why should a man spend four years in college, and as many more years in study as circumstances will permit, in order to educate the head, and then, the first time he feels the beat of the heart in fond ecstasy, imagine that he is in love, and, if disappointed, wreck all the work that has been done for his head? Simply because, as our good friend says, his heart has had no part in all this education. Isn't it then about time to commence the education of the heart? Who will start a school for the improvement of the heart, to impart heart instruction; to teach the heart to beat with sense, to act with reason, to submit to discipline and control by the exercise of a higher feeling than mere impulse, and be governed by sensations derived from reflection rather than from animal instinct? FREETHOUGHT is full of tho't; but why should our friend call it Freethought? There would be no tho't without freedom. Tho't is free.—Scott-Browne's Phonographic Monthly.

LILIAN'S STORY.

A BALL ON A LILY LEAF.

BY A. LILIAN ANDREWS, AGED 10.

CHAPTER III.

Amy was sitting in her room waiting for Alice to come. She was looking over her dresses. Amy and Alice were to dress in Amy's room. Amy heard a ring of the bell, and in a minute she heard Alice knock. "Come," she called. The door opened and in came Alice. "Here, Amy, I could not get pond lilies, but I brought you these," said Alice.

"All right, they are nice. Come, let us get dressed." So both girls dressed and were off to the dance in an hour. While Amy and Alice were at the ball a man came for Mr. and Mrs. White, also Mrs. and Mr. Mulberry. They took Tom of course. So when the girls came home no one was home, so they went to Dora Hood's house to spend the night. When Mrs. and Mr. White and Mrs. and Mr. Mulberry came home they found Amy and Alice at the Hood's, and this is the way the ball on the lily leaf ended.

(THE END.)

Discovery Encouraged.

Edward Everett Hale has resurrected a bit of history, in the King of England's account book, in which he puts down what he paid Jack Cabot for finding America. It reads after this manner:

To the damsel that danceth	£12
To the man that found a new island	10
To Jake Haute, for tennis play	9
To a woman with a red nose	25

That was the first cost to England for North America—less than was paid for the girl that danced for the king.

SAYS E. A. Stevens in the New York Truth Seeker: "We have men in our own time, let us not forget, who are making history; who are revolutionizing the thought of the period, and spreading the light of mental liberty in the dark places of orthodoxy, prominent among whom is our president, S. P. Putnam. He is now somewhere in the vicinity of Santa Barbara, and hopes the friends at San Jose, at Gilroy, and Livermore may greet him the latter part of April. He will speak in San Francisco again in May. From June 13 to 21, he will labor in Coos county, Or. June 22, he will orate at the anniversary of the Silverton Secular Union, in their new Freethought Hall. From thence he will pass on to Molalla, Stayton, McMinnville, Salem, Portland, Vancouver, Forest Grove, and Hillsboro. He will make the national bird scream at Eagle Creek on the "glorious Fourth," and then descend the Columbia to Astoria, Cathlamet, and other places, where our Secular friends will, I hope, make way for the pilgrim of Freethought, and not fail to have him lecture in places near where he is already announced."

WE had a friendly call, the other day, from Bro. Samuel P. Putnam, one of the editors of FREETHOUGHT, a new Liberal journal lately started in this city. This paper has a very neat appearance, is clean and dignified. The other editor, George E. Macdonald, will have charge of the paper while Mr. Putnam will take the lecture field in behalf of the cause it represents.—Golden Gate.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Candidates Nominated.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have read so much of Mr. Putnam's lectures and works that I think I am acquainted with him and am free to write and ask for a sample copy of your paper, as I have no doubt it is as able as the lectures, and hope the new star just risen will be a success.

I am the only outspoken Liberal in the place and am boycotted on that account, but I care little. I get Freethought literature whenever I can and distribute it. I think I can see that some begin to think and love freedom.

I would like to nominate as my choice for president of these United States for the coming campaign:

For President,
ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

For Vice-President,
ROBERT LINCOLN.

G. P. DREISBACH.

A Colored Brother's Enthusiasm.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Three cheers for the "boss" paper of the Pacific coast. Hurrah, hurrah, hurrah! Three cheers and our grizzly bear thrown in (I omit the tiger).

Allow me to congratulate you on the appearance of your journal. It's little in size but mighty in power. I like both the paper and form. You did not come to conquer with the spear and shield, the bow and arrow, the blunderbuss, the hatchet, the stake and fire, a herd of ferocious animals, the jail, the thumbscrew, the gag. These are what the Catholics used to establish their religion. But you have come to our golden shore, and brought with you the greatest implement to accomplish or commence a great work; that is, the pen. I had a copy of your Freethought journal handed to me on the street a few days ago by a friend to FREETHOUGHT, but not more so than I. You can put me down from this date a subscriber. I will call in, in a day or two, for my first copy. I read every syllable of the gratuitous number.

You have my best wishes. I am strictly secular; an Atheist of the olden type. "The woods is full" of us. Only blow your horn boldly and loudly and we will come together.

Yours truly,
LORD A. NELSON.
San Francisco, Mar. 8, 1888.

The Post-office Gives Up its Dead.

[The following letter was mailed at Denver, Col., as the envelope shows, Jan 14, unstamped. It is interesting to note the amount of trouble the government took upon itself not to forward the letter: 1. The postmaster at Denver notified us that it needed a two-cent stamp. 2. We forwarded a two-cent stamp. 3. Our letter miscarried. 4. We wrote to the postmaster at San Francisco. 5. The postmaster at San Francisco wrote to the postmaster at Denver. 6. The postmaster at Denver forwarded to the postmaster at San Francisco a large wad of documents showing that somebody had done a day's work looking up the ancient history of the letter. 7. The postmaster at San Francisco forwarded all the previous correspondence and his own remarks to us, stating that the letter had gone to the dead-letter department in Washington. 8. We notified the dead-letter office that we would pay the postage on that letter, and inclosed stamps. 9. The dead-letter office sent the letter to the postmaster at Denver. 10. The postmaster at Denver notified Mr. Truss that he could have the letter upon receipt of 2 cents. 11. Mr. Truss paid the 2 cents. 12. He then forwarded the letter to FREETHOUGHT. 13, 14, and 15, represent the correspondence on the same subject between Mr. Truss and this office. But, anyway, we got the letter, and it is a good one.—ED.]

To the Editors of Freethought:

The first number of your paper reached our home on yesterday. During the evening, wife read it entire. Everything about it commends it to our favor. It is a convenient size, and the matter is nicely arranged. It is an interesting number, and gives promise, unmistakably, of success. Your editorial on Freethought is full of gems. Every line is a golden brick, and the article complete is radiant with truth and clear expression. I believe with you that you have a grand field before you. The spirit of Science is the essential element in the intellectual atmosphere, and this is your formidable ally.

Yours for universal justice, THOS. J. TRUSS.
P. S.—Inclosed find draft for two dollars, subscription for one year to FREETHOUGHT.

The Rev. I. D. Driver.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In a late article appearing in the Oregonian, the writer states that the Rev. I. D. Driver made a reply to Colonel Ingersoll's last pamphlet in which is contained the colonel's reply to the Rev. Dr. Field. The writer says that while Mr. Driver was making the reply he held said pamphlet in his hand and fully answered and refuted everything in it from a legal point of view.

We infer that the writer agrees with Mr. Driver that there is a personal devil, an anthropomorphic God, a hell, and a heaven, and in "believe or be damned." It appears according to this eulogy on Mr. Driver that he (Driver) is the ablest defender and advocate of orthodoxy in all Protestant Christendom. We would like to see Mr. Driver's reply in print.

We have men in the Liberal ranks of much less repute than Colonel Ingersoll who can drive Mr. Driver "where the devil drove the hogs." Mr. Driver would not debate with Mr. Ingersoll, for why did he decline meeting S. P. Putnam in public discussion last summer? Now, if Mr. Driver is the champion of Protestant Christianity, he is the very man Freethought men want to debate with. Let this Goliath of superstition draw near and our modern David of intellectual enfranchisement, without a helmet or a stone from the brook, but with the sword of truth manipulated by experience and observation, will disrobe him of his priestly mantle and liberate the people of these United States from the thralldom of superstition taught by 80,000 drones who produce nothing, but live on the fruits of others' labor because of their credulity, ignorance, and superstition.

But even church-members are coming more and more in contact with Liberals and Infidels and find them not half so bad as their priests have represented them. In fact, they don't believe all their preachers tell them. They will soon begin to laugh about a personal devil, a snake devil, and a devil that made war in heaven. They do not believe in miracles now, nor in the doctrine of incarnation, and soon they will doubt that anything of the kind ever did occur. They are finding out that even an Atheist is as liable to swear to the truth as one who believes in vicarious atonement. They find more religionists and church believers in penitentiaries and asylums than Infidels.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument MR. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM

President of the American Secular Union,

Will make his annual lecture tour for 1888 in California, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, Washington Territory, Arizona, Idaho, Montana, and Utah. The purpose of these lectures is the organization of Freethought Societies, the discussion and advancement of the Nine Demands of Liberalism, the acquaintance and fraternal association of the Liberal people of this country.

It is necessary that those who desire lectures shall communicate at once, in order that at the earliest possible moment the route may be laid out, so that the largest number of places can be visited with the greatest economy of resources. Our country is so vast in extent, and railroad expenses are so great, that lectures must be given on a pre-arranged route.

It is best, if possible, to arrange for two or more lectures, rather than for one. The expense of advertising is no greater, and much more good can be accomplished—a larger interest will be excited—and there will be a better opportunity for information in regard to the magnitude of our cause and the importance of our principles.

The following are some of the subjects of the lectures, dealing both with the destructive and constructive aspects of Secular work—and its scientific and literary form—giving special attention to the political significance of the Nine Demands:

Universal Mental Liberty,

The New Heaven and Earth,

The Glory of Infidelity,

American Democracy,

The New God,

The Bible: Its Genuineness, Authenticity, Inspiration, and Infallibility,

Thomas Paine: The Thinker, The Patriot,

The Moralist, and the Scholar.

The Moral Power of Unbelief,

Fair Play,

The Dangers Ahead.

Woman and the Bible,

Science and Theology,

Priest, King and People,

Creation and Evolution; or, Miracle and Law,

The Works of Man and the Works of God;

or, Civilization vs. The Raw Material.

The terms of the lectures will be made reasonable to all societies and individuals who desire to co-operate with the work of the American Secular Union. It is expected that hall rent, advertising and local expenses will be provided for—and beyond this, that every Liberal will do his best to help the general cause. By combination of effort local organization can be strengthened and universal interest aroused. The local work and national work depend upon each other. The local work is of the first importance; it is the vital force of the movement—but to have simply local enterprise is to destroy the noblest spirit of Freethought, which is world-wide in its relations. It is through the Union that the broadest humanitarian results can be achieved.

Will not friends instantly interest themselves in this matter, and arrange for lectures, so that dates and subjects may be given, and every possible point be made available for work?

PRESS NOTICES, ETC.

Mr. Putnam is one of the most thorough believers in intellectual liberty in the world. He has written some of the most stirring appeals to the Liberals of this country that I have ever read. He believes that Freethought has a future; that the time is coming when the superstitions of this world will be forgotten—or remembered—some of them with smiles, most of them with tears. Mr. Putnam, although endowed with a poetic nature, with poetic insight, clings to the known, builds upon the experience of man, and believes in fancies only when they are used as the wings of fact. His abilities are of the highest order. He compels the admiration of every one who really loves the just and true.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MARCH 31, 1888

THE blind people of the asylum in Oakland are treated to religious "instruction" every Sunday. It is the old story over again—the blind leading the blind.

Two hundred and five youthful victims were "confirmed" at one Catholic church in this city last Sunday. The Roman Catholics differ from the Chinese in the respect that while the latter imprison and prevent the growth of the feet only, the Catholics imprison the brain and dwarf the faculty of reason.

It appears, reports the Omaha World, that the Church of England is getting so pressed for money that Canon Gregory proposes to cut down the salary of the Archbishop of Canterbury from $75,000 to $60,000, and the salary of the Archbishop of York from $50,000 to $40,000. Troops will be held in readiness to protect the church property from violence in case the archbishops go on strike.

THE Jewish Messenger tells of a certain Hebrew rabbi of the Reform persuasion who adopted the marriage ceremony in English instead of Hebrew. One day he refused to marry a couple that were religiously disqualified. They went to the judge of the supreme court and were expeditiously joined, and in less than three months the judge married fifteen Jewish couples, seriously curtailing thereby the wedding perquisites of the rabbi.

It is learned from the Chicago Tribune that an inventor there has perfected an electric contribution box for church use. An alarm bell on the inside rings violently whenever a tin-tag or a flattened button is dropped in. This is a good beginning. Now let the inventive genius devise an appliance to be attached to the heads of the congregation, so that they will know when the minister is giving them spurious doctrine, and another long-felt want will be filled. The church, however, would be emptied.

THERE is an ancient rule requiring every court in Massachusetts, whether state or national, to formally open each session with religious exercises. The United States district court opened the other day at Boston, for the first time known to history, without any such ceremony. Congress had failed to appropriate the ten dollars necessary to pay the minister and he declined to pray.

The neglect on the part of the Congressmen, who were talking about the tariff instead of thinking of spiritual matters, may cost a lawyer's soul.

THE Monitor (Catholic) declares the statement of the reverend editor of the Occident (Presbyterian), viz., that he would have breathed more freely if Anschlag, the murderer of Mr. and Mrs. Hitchcock, had been lynched, to be "precisely the Presbyterianism of John Knox and as much opposed to true Christianity as darkness is to light." It adds, in pretty bad verse:

"John Knox is not dead: his horrible spirit, we find,
Has invaded the Occident editor's mind,
Implanting therein a bad type of smallpox,
From the virulent virus of vicious John Knox."

THIS is the best the Signs of the Times can say for the Catholic church. It is "a church whose soul and spirit consists of the most abominable dogmas and misleading heresies, whose characteristic tenets are opposed to God and his plan of grace; a system described by inspiration as 'antichrist,' 'that man of sin,' a blasphemous 'beast,' and 'Babylon the Great, the Mother of Harlots and Abominations of the Earth,' and identified by all Bible students. Her history reeks with the blood of martyrs and saints; and her utterances, many of them, 'speak great words against the Most High.' She yet pursues, as far as permitted to do so, the same policy, with no word or sign of repentance for the past, or reformation for the future."

NEWS AND NOTES.

SAN PASQUAL.—The audience at the lectures in the school-house at Escondido was not large in point of numbers, but "fit though few," and perhaps in a place where the churches are making a special effort to have a "Christian" community, a greater attendance was among the "impossibilities." Even the Freethinkers of this new city are of such a speculative turn of mind, some of them, that they don't care to diminish the value of ecclesiastical investment by supporting Liberal lectures. "Silence is golden," they think, in this case.

Escondido—the "Hidden Ranch," its name means—is in a beautiful location, and it shows that the orthodox have an eye to business, and desire the best that the earth can give. The valley is broad and surrounded with undulating hills, that greet the sunshine with fruitful bosom, rolling away to immense and rugged heights clothed in dazzling drapery of blue. The hotel is one of the finest in the county, and from its porch a lovely prospect extends. It is about seven hundred feet above the sea; the ocean gales are softened by intervening mountains and a distance of about twenty miles, and the climate is delightful and refreshing. The Methodist College is superbly situated, and my hope is that some day it may become a School of Science, and then indeed it will be a happy mansion for the attainment of knowledge. The idea of studying theology where nature is so smiling seems simply absurd. Who can think of "hell fire" where flowers of every variety make brilliant the carpet of the earth?

The "saints," however, don't have it all their own way, even if they are "the favored of the Lord." The Infidel comes in for a good share of the luxury and glory of this beautiful land. San Pasqual Valley is about eight miles off, in among the vast foothills, and here the heart of the earth rejoices in luxuriant fruitage, where the warm sun pours its kindling radiance. My friend Rockwood has about the gem of the valley, and like a philosopher he enjoys the life that now is. He has worked and helped to make civilization in more than one state, being born in Vermont and migrating westward, settling and building in Illinois and Kansas, until he has come to the extreme verge, and here he finds a home where the setting sun gives its last golden smile. In a wide experience of men and affairs he has learned the wisdom of honest thought, and he lives to express it without fear or favor, in the independence of noble toil. It was a delight to roam over his spacious fields, where the trees are blooming in purple promise, and where the golden fruit is hanging. While four feet of snow is falling and the hurricane is blowing in New York, here is the balmy breath of springtime, the delicious sunlight, amid a garden where the bees sip sweetness, and the song of the bird mingles with the perfumed air. I don't wonder that friend Rockwood is satisfied with life, and has no dreams of heaven. Several of his neighbors are Adventists, who think they know all about God, Satan, and the Bible, and who expect every moment to see the angels flaming from the sky. Yet they go in for building fine houses and getting big crops, and still they wonder how it is possible for Mr. Rockwood to be an Infidel. I hope sometime to be able to give them a little satisfaction, for my pilgrimage is not over in this "happy valley." I want to see friend Rockwood again and his intelligent Freethought family, wife, children and grand-children, all making a fireside circle where there is no fear, but always hope and progress.

Prof. O. S. Ingham, Mr. E. Ward, and Frank Bates are among our pioneers here with Mr. Rockwood, and with such staunch supporters we will float our banners still, even against six churches and a Methodist College. Humanity and nature will some day be too strong for the devil of theology, and he will take his darkening flight over the hills and far away to some more gloomy region. The wondrous flowers of every hue, the green fields, the honey and the milk, the orange and the almond, the mighty heights blazing with dawn and gilded with evening's splendor, the blue sky ever smiling, where no cyclones come nor blizzards blow, these things of nature's wealth and man's labor and courage will be radiant and victorious forces for education, progress, and liberty; and so from the mountains greeting the boundless sea at Ocean side in the morning's luster I have hope, and realize that what now is so little understood will broaden like the day, and bring joy to every labor, and crowning to every struggle.

Oceanside, Mar. 16, 1888.

Diamond Valley is worthy of its name. It shines with the brilliance of many rays, flowers, mountains, clouds, skies, and emerald plains. Here our stalwart Liberal, P. A. Clark, is located, where the breath of summer makes music even in winter's bosom. Here I sit in the warm sunshine, mellow as June, and read stories of the down-east blizzard, and how my friends of "former days" are buried in snowdrifts ten feet deep and don't dare to venture out for fear the frost will take them by storm. How they would envy me if they could see how beautiful this land is, with its infinite variety of flowers, and lustrous landscapes! Far away against the horizon glisten the snowy peaks, where the rolling masses of cloud still hover as if loth to leave the rays of Helios. This side are the enormous foothills with every shape, and between stretch the vales, some of them creeping away in among the canons and behind the rocky and verdant mounds, where the orange will woo the perpetual sun, and every month of the year make jewels for the bridal of earth and heaven. I wish all could see the flowers that weave their thousand colors in the sod. Seventy-five or a hundred different varieties are found, and the botanist could wander for days and discover something new in these wondrous petals. All sorts of fruit, vegetables, and grain can be produced, and land which was held a few years ago at ten dollars per acre is now held at eighty and one hundred dollars, and settlers are coming in rapidly.

Fortunately, I arrived before the railroad strike set in. One train later and I should have been stranded somewhere between here and Oceanside, afoot and alone, endeavoring to make time by muscle instead of steam. Nearly fifty citizens of San Jacinto were summoned to attend court at San Diego to serve on jury. They were obliged to take teams and go across lots a distance of one hundred and twenty miles, as all travel by car is for the time being stopped. More than half the number that went are Liberals, and I miss their company. But we get used to these "special providences" and all that sort of thing, and notwithstanding strikes, blockades, earthquakes, and roaring streams, pursue the even tenor of our way, knowing that sooner or later we shall get there.

We struck the broad valley of San Jacinto on Friday afternoon, and I never looked upon a more enchanting prospect, as our stage went speeding on. The descriptions of Moore of far eastern scenery, of the vale of Cashmere, came to my mind. It seemed as if that lovely picture had been dropped right before me on this western shore. I don't wonder that the bright little city of San Jacinto has grown from half a dozen families to a population of fifteen hundred during the past three years.

I found my friend Perkins busily distributing notices of lecture. Notwithstanding the "Crazy Tea" which the churches had inaugurated for the occasion as the best means of circumventing the Liberal campaign, a fair audience was present and a good beginning made for future work.

Saturday our friend Clark came over and took us to his ranch in Diamond Valley, eight miles from San Jacinto, in the nook of the hills, where he has several hundred acres which are beginning to evolve into orchards, gardens, groves, and fields, where one can live like a king and snap his fingers at the orthodox deity, and beat harp-playing all to pieces with the rhymes of the harvest song.

This is a widely scattered community, friends living eight and ten miles away, and as they exist by the "sweat of their face" they can't at will attend evening lectures. Besides, all is not fair weather, even in California, and Saturday and Sunday evenings the mists rolled up from the sea, and there was a bit of rain, but Sunday afternoon was favorable and there was good attendance from Diamond Valley and Pleasant Valley, and although we haven't had any very big fighting in this district, we have had a lively skirmish on the frontier, and no lives lost or bones broken.

Sunday morning I went to church, that is, to the school-house, and listened to a Liberal discourse by the Universalist clergyman, Rev. S. L. Boripaugh. It was good and practical and a long way from orthodoxy. This clergyman is of a fine and generous spirit, and it was a pleasure to meet with one whose interpretations of Christianity are so much in accordance with common sense.

I had a little tilt with a couple of Mormons of the Joseph Smith school. They are a queer mosaic of orthodoxy and Liberalism. They grant that the Bible is mutilated, that it is not a revelation, but only contains a revelation, and they don't believe in hell-fire, or the vicarious atonement, or the infallibility of the scriptures; but they have a wondrous faith in Joseph Smith. They think he knew it all, has fixed up things perfectly correct, and performed prodigious miracles, and could even drink poison and not die, and like David was a saint after God's own heart and did not believe in polygamy except for his own personal pleasure. The Joseph Smith church is the only true church. Brigham Young is the arch heretic and traitor to the cause. I had asserted in the course of my first lecture that St. Paul and St. Peter had quarreled face to face, and this was a strange predicament for two "infallibilities," and that without doubt it must be a drawn battle like the modern conflict of Sullivan and Mitchell. It is difficult to decide which is the better man when both are "infallible." My Mormon opponent thought I had misquoted and brought me to the book. I unfolded to them the Epistle of Paul to the Galatians, wherein he boasts of having "withstood Peter to the face because he was to be blamed." Thereafter was great silence, and I heard no more of misquotations of the "mutilated scriptures." Whenever I cornered the "saints" they gracefully fell back upon "mutilation." My critics also quoted the Sermon on the Mount. I asked them if struck on the one cheek, they would turn to the slugger the other also. They had not "cheek" enough to answer my query in the affirmative. The Rev. Mr. Boripaugh thought they would do like the Quaker who, under similar circumstances, took off his coat and putting it aside said, "Lie there, Quaker, while I whip this fellow." Our controversy was entirely good-natured, and we separated the best of friends, and the rippling waves of discussion, I guess, will flash the rays of truth.

Judge Clark thinks it would be a good scheme to form a grand Liberal Syndicate and purchase in Diamond Valley an immense tract of four thousand acres now held by one man, and form a Liberal colony. When Judge Clark came to the valley this land was rated at ten dollars per acre. It is now rated at eighty dollars. Land close by it is sold at one hundred and fifty dollars per acre. These seem to be high prices, I know, but the prospects are for an increase rather than a decrease. This would be a sunny spot for a Freethought colony, and four hundred Liberals together like Judge Clark and his family, baby and all, would make a delightful association. If Liberals were only forehanded, what happy places we might make in this new bright world of the Pacific coast just launching out upon its magnificent possibilities. If any Liberal is floating over this country who wants a little nook where three hundred days of sunshine greet him from year to year, let him drop around the ranch of my big friend Clark, and I think he will realize that he is pretty near the gates of the earthly paradise, provided he has a little ready cash and is full of days' work. This is no place for a lazy man. Labor is necessary, but it is sure of a bright reward. No loafers need apply.

How I do rejoice in Stevens's "magnificent audacity." I shall call him the Rupert of the Liberal army. His capture of a church is one of the best strokes of policy in the whole history of the Secular Union. It ought to give new enthusiasm to every Liberal in the country. It is an earnest of the brilliant success of the administration of the new secretary. It fills me with hope and courage, and shows that in spite of everything our army is advancing and our flag is flying. A better, wiser, braver, and more far reaching movement in favor of organized Freethought was never made. With such assurances of the ability, daring, and wisdom of our secretary, let there be a grand rally. Mr. Stevens is publishing a large quantity of the Nine Demands and campaign documents for distribution. If any Liberal has a dollar or two to spare, let him give a lift to this important work.

QUEER RELIGIOUS EXERCISES.

The Harper, Kan., Daily Sentinel gives an account of a church festival held there by the ladies of the Methodist church. "It was," says the Sentinel, "a grand and peculiar freak indeed, and was well attended by the people. Old ladies were dressed as young girls, and young ladies as quite old women, with spectacles. No one could help laughing when sitting down to the table; pickles were served on currycombs, sugar in butter dishes; served meat in silver cake-baskets, coffee in vases; water was brought in in coal-buckets, and the old-fashioned wooden pail served for a coal-bucket; high heeled suspenders and long-waisted umbrellas were served cold. When a hungry denizen called for a stewed breast of a chicken, the waiter brought him pickled pigs' feet; an order for cake brought a fine slice of head cheese. A live rooster was chained to a dish in the middle of one of the tables, but there was not a man in the house brave enough to carve him; the pepper boxes were filled with flour, and the salt-cellars with sugar; oysters roasted, stuffed with cranberry sauce, was the grandest delicacy of the evening. The ladies deserve great credit for the ingenuity displayed in getting it up. The receipts of the evening amounted to $41.50."

Upon this performance it may be supposed that God and the angels looked down with a benevolent smile. It is also to be supposed that the parson pocketed the $41.50 with similar tokens of approval.

THE CAUSE OF UNBELIEF.

The very Rev. J. J. Prendergast, vicar-general, in the Catholic cathedral in this city on a recent Sunday, took for his subject the "Cause of Unbelief." There are, he avers, two causes for the widespread doubt and skepticism that prevail, namely, weakness or darkness of the intellect, and corruption of the heart. The first of these causes he did not find it convenient to elaborate, but he invited especial attention to the second. The reason, he claimed, why the intellect of the unbeliever can see no beauty in religion is because the exhalations of a sinful heart have clouded his mental vision. This is not an original notion with Mr. Prendergast. It has always been held by Christians, who have been satisfied with repeating instead of proving it. For instance, religious people hold that if a man is respectable it is quite easy for him to see that Abraham and Jacob and Lot, and other characters who if they lived in this locality would have their residence at San Quentin, were models to be revered if not imitated; whereas if he is skeptical with regard to their morality being inspired, it is a sign that he is one of their kind. The Christian people think, too, that if a person be honest, his respect for biblical prevaricators will be sincere, while if he lacks that respect he must necessarily be something of a liar himself. According to Mr. Prendergast and those who agree with him, the man who is moral and believes in justice will recognize the infinite fairness displayed in the vicarious atonement scheme, but should he doubt that the conviction of an innocent man is equal, for all the purposes of justice, to the punishment of the guilty, it is evidence on the face of it that his mental vision is overshadowed by the exhalations of a corrupt heart.

If we take the Rev. Mr. Prendergast's view, the Nine Demands of Liberalism are the concentrated expression of all that is unethical. A person whose heart is pervaded with a due love of the good cannot ask that ecclesiastical property, which is protected by the state and is a source of revenue to its proprietors, shall devote any of that revenue for the protection afforded. He cannot object to being taxed to pay a chaplain for boring our legislators. He must admit that all sectarian institutions should be supported, by the state; that the government should furnish us all with religious services, at our own expense, whether we desire them or not; that the word of an Atheist may be taken in court as to his belief, but may not be accepted as to facts; that every seventh day belongs to the priests because it is their busy day; and that, in short, the priests, who claim to be appointed by God, should make laws for the country, instead of the officers elected by the people. To doubt any of these propositions is, in the Christian view, a manifestation of total depravity. They are doubted only by Infidels.

Religious people, priests, and, according to scripture, the devils believe—belief in every case being, we must suppose, the exhalation of a pure heart!

THE only answer necessary to the last statement of Mr. Charles Eckhard, regarding the action of the auditing committee at the Congress of 1886, is this: that Mr. Putnam has in his possession the auditing committee's report, dated Nov. 12, 1886, and bearing the autograph signatures of Messrs. Thorpe, Grower, and Ryan. Mr. Eckhard stated unqualifiedly that two of these gentlemen did not sign that document. We state that they did sign it, and are still prepared to prove it, over their own signatures, to any responsible party who desires to see the evidence. Other matters under discussion may be appropriately referred to a committee at the next congress.

ACCORDING to the Chronicle's "Religious Notes," Port Angeles, W. T., where the Puget Sound Co-operative Colony is located, has no church, but last December the Rev. Samuel Greene, of Seattle, organized a Sunday-school, and a Congregational church is about to be built. We imagine that this church will not receive the undivided support of the colonists, many of whom, like other progressive people, are outspoken Freethinkers.

JUDGE J. W. NORTH, of Oleander, Pacific Coast member of the Servetus Monument Committee, will draw upon us for $1.00 contributed to that fund by Mr. Joseph Larsen, of this city. We take this occasion to acknowledge also a donation of $1.00 to FREETHOUGHT from Mr. Larsen, and $5.00 from Mr. P. H. Foster, of Babylon, L. I., sent in "to help along the cau e."

SAN FRANCISCO will soon have some free baths. James Lick left $150,000 for that purpose, and the trustees are now ready to advance the project. Among other bequests of Mr. Lick not yet carried out are one of $100,000 for a group of historical statuary in the new City Hall and one of $540,000 for the founding of a California School of Mechanical Arts.

A COPY of a McMinnville, Or., paper has just reached us with a letter over the signature of "Investigator," purporting to be a reply to the lecture by S. P. Putnam delivered there last year. The letter is no answer at all, but it drew out an answer to itself that is complete. "A Liberal" takes up the defense and writes a good column of Freethought argument. We note that whenever a religious person resorts to print in an attack upon Freethought or its representatives, it is sure to develop an able reply.

X A CLERGYMAN sent the Argonaut a long poem, prefaced with some remarks which the editor was supposed to have made, calling attention to the profound and original ideas contained in the lines. The editor of the Argonaut prints the introduction and omits the poem, which omission may be called an unkind cut at the cloth.

THERE have been no calls for the book containing the Rev. Mr. Moody's "Twelve Select Sermons" noticed in these columns some weeks ago. The price is 60 cents. We have been advised to place them in the hands of Mr. Charles Eckhard for "free distribution to the subscribers of the fund."

MR. E. A. STEVENS's "God in the State," the concluding chapter of which was printed in FREETHOUGHT last week, will be issued immediately in pamphlet form, price 10 cents. It is the best argument in print in favor of the American Secular Union.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

J. M. Roberts, who used to publish the Spiritualist paper Mind and Matter, is dead.—Miss Irene D. Willis was lately refused as a witness in a lawsuit at Hannibal, Mo., because she did not believe in hell.—A bill has just been introduced in the New Jersey legislature providing that disbelief in a supreme being shall not disqualify witnesses. Dr. McGlynn, James Redpath, and other officers of the Union Labor party have issued a call for a national conference to meet in Cincinnati May 15.—The oath which a Chinaman took in a murder case the other day was of a singular character. It recited in substance that the party taking it called upon the king of the sky and the queen of the earth to witness that he was about to tell the truth with regard to the matter in dispute, and that if he swerved from it so much as a single word, knowingly, he hoped that the great ocean would swallow him, that his body might be consumed by frightful fish, and that his offspring might never prosper. The witness, after carefully reading the oath, signed it, and then, holding it up before the jury, ignited it, and held it till it entirely vanished, which act was symbolical of his belief that his soul would cease to exist after death if he swore falsely.—Mr. Pridgins, an old preacher of High Shoals, Ga., has decided to preach his own funeral sermon, and has set for the day the second Sunday in April, and the place a little church near High Shoals. He has ordered his son to make him a coffin.—The railroad strikes have seriously interfered with the freight, passenger, and mail service. No doubt the employees of the railroads saw how the strike would prove to be of general benefit or they would not have engaged in it.—Very many German-American societies refused to half-mast their flags as a token of respect for the dead emperor, being apprehensive that such an act might be construed as an indorsement of the empire.—It is thought that the Mormons have in view the scheme of establishing themselves in New Mexico, and then getting the territory admitted as a state.—Sam Jones, the evangelist, is not afflicted with modesty. In Kansas City he said, "I had not been in Chicago two days before 800,000 people knew I was there, while a lot of you musty old preachers have been in Kansas City twenty years and nobody knows it."—Ninety-nine deaths occurred in this city last week.—At a dangerous grade crossing at Adrian, Mich., a religious crank has hung up the sign, "Prepare to meet thy God."—It was Palm Sunday this week, and the Catholics carried palms in their hands as an indication that asses are still ridden.—The stable and laundry on the fortified island Alcatraz were destroyed by fire on Sunday at a loss of $3,000.—Mrs. Anna A. Pitts, of Sonora, came to the city a short time ago, and was vaccinated as a precaution against smallpox. The vaccination developed into erysipelas, and she died last Sunday.—Gold has been found in the township of Cordier, Canada, within a mile of the Canadian Pacific track. The ore assays $800 per ton.—Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton, president of the National Woman Suffrage Association, is in Washington. Mesdames Seatherd and Dilke, of England; Gulafsen, of Sweden; Bogelet, of France, and Gripenberg, of Finland, delegates to the International Council of Women, are in New York.—Chief Justice Waite, of the United States supreme court, died suddenly at Washington March 22, aged 71.

"FREETHOUGHT" GETS A CAKE.

For the past few days the writer of these lines has breathed an atmosphere perfumed by the odor of roses and other sweet-smelling flowers, and has lunched frequently upon choice pastry. The office was taken possession of last Saturday night by a number of friends of this city and Oakland, who came laden with bouquets and cakes. There were Mr. and Mrs. Haelke, Mr. and Mrs. Schou, Mr. and Mrs. Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Beaumont, Mr. and Mrs. Broneer, Mr. and Mrs. Patterson, and Mrs. Reguin. Mrs. Schou appears to have been the instigator of the affair, and Mr. Schou presided. The exercises were scientific and literary, the former comprising a rubber at eucher, and the latter consisting of confession and the relation of experience. Proceedings were quite informal. Mr. Schou sat on a printer's stool turned down on the side. Mr. Beaumont occupied the type-writer table. Mr. Patterson found a seat on a trunk, and a plank borrowed from the masons who are repairing the damages caused by the recent fire made a good teeterboard for several persons. At the close of the scientific exercises mentioned, Mr. Schou arose to say he would make a short speech. He then went on to recount that some twenty or thirty years ago he was ship's carpenter on board a vessel sailing between New York and San Francisco, the bos'n of the same being Mr. John Beaumont, here present. At that time the narrator was a pious Christian and read his Bible studiously, while the bos'n applied himself to Shakspeare and scoffed at the scriptures. Mr. Schou, however, prevailed in argument, which he fortified with a book on the doubts of Infidels, and Mr. Beaumont got sufficiently religious to say grace at mess. At San Francisco the carpenter and bos'n parted. Last year they met again for the first time in a quarter of a century. It was upon the occasion of Mr. Putnam's lecture here. Mr. Schou passed the hat, and Mr. Beaumont was there to chip in. All this, Mr. Schou thought, formed an interesting coincidence, a view in which the listeners heartily concurred.

Mr. Beaumont explained that the weight of evidence at that time seemed to be on the side of Christianity, and he came very near conversion; but he afterwards read Taylor's "Diegesis," which knocked the foundation out from under his belief altogether.

Experience telling here became general. Mr. Haelke and others described their religious evolution, and made wise and thoughtful suggestions as to the duty of Freethinkers. Mrs. Reguin's contribution was especially lively.

The central figure of the occasion proved to be a cake made by Mrs. Broneer and by her presented to this paper with all the best wishes in the world. The cake is the size of a milkpan and is surrounded by a wreath and ornamented with frosting, the wonder concerning which is how it was ever done so well, and a bouquet that seems to be a part of the cake, while across the top is the word FREETHOUGHT in white script. There were also numerous other cakes, and many pies, which were cut and eaten. The cake that FREETHOUGHT took was not cut. But when Mr. Putnam returns I think it will be a good plan to call the friends in again and have him make a speech to them. He can tell how appropriate it is that Mrs. Broneer, a granddaughter of the brave Abner Kneeland who founded the Investigator, the oldest of Liberal papers, should be found giving cheer and encouragement to this, the youngest. He will also be at liberty to add a few thoughts of his own if any occur to him. I think it would be well to hold at the same time a preliminary meeting for the organization, as a correspondent suggests, of a San Francisco Secular Union. On such an occasion the cake may be cut with a proper flourish.

The evening passed away before it seemed hardly begun, and the friends went home and left the writer surrounded by the fragments of the feast and bucketfuls of roses. The office has not as yet fully recovered from the look of surprise which it wore the following morning. M.

OUR UNIVERSITY.

We cannot fill our mission without glancing at our University. It belongs to the people. It is for the education of the people. It is to make men and women such as the republic may delight to acknowledge her own, and who will prove her staunchest bulwarks and defenders. It is to make useful citizens.

Our state wants practical and useful men to fill all its departments, and to fill their own coffers too, by wise and useful life. Most of our children will have their own fortunes to make.

We would have it turn out poets, philosophers, statesmen, and finished gentlemen; and open the way to the highest mental achievements. But the greater part of its work must be for practical life, because that is what our people most need. In fact, it must be a people's University, not below the best, in all the republic may call for; but in no sense a copy of any imperial or theological foundation of the old world or the new, or of the exploded past.

In its halls the constitutions of the nation and the state should find a profound knowledge and an exact observance. If not here, where? If, where law is taught, where morality and justice have a special chair, a conscientious performance of public duty and exalted patriotism may not be expected, where can it be?

In the Constitution of the United States, and in that of this state, after the most careful and mature deliberation by the best and wisest of mankind, our fathers, it was resolved that what is called religion should have no place, no voice, no power, and no recognition, either by word or deed, in the republic; but that all men should be free to think, speak, write, and act for themselves in such matters. The republic would condemn none, accept none, encourage none, and restrain none. An absolute forbearance was set up. Let them alone! This was not done unadvisedly. Before that convention of our fathers there came the advocates of Rome, of the church of England, of many other churches. They all showed their proofs and their claims. And those fathers said, "No, gentlemen! we reject all. You shall have no favor, no hate; but an absolute exclusion. No favor to any."

The constitution of the state pursues the same purpose. The learning, and good sense, and the body of the people approve and pursue the same course in the common school. Religion may not put in an appearance there.

God is there. Moral instruction is there. The finest examples of American life—and no land on earth can show better—Washington and Lincoln and the rest, are there; but no sectarian religion. It is not because it is not true, but because we do not know which is true, if any; and we would promote none, offend none, give no occasion for complaint or contention.

Would not the University do well to review this work and decision of our fathers, and if it be an error let us all know it? But if it be true and just, follow the time-honored example intelligently and strictly.

The enlightened legislator is often in advance of his age. He makes laws wiser than his people. And it takes time for the ignorant to throw off the old habits and conform to the law. We have something too much of this even yet. Chaplains in the army and in other places are a noted example. They are a concession to prejudice, to people who are not up with the times. But you cannot make this plea for yourselves, or your students. You know the law. You have no prejudices. You teach:

The latest touches of aspiring genius,
The latest manifesto of great truth.

And we conjure you to strike out of your programme all that the law would not warrant. Let the University of California be equal to its mission. The whole Pacific world is before us thirsty for real knowledge and splendid example. Prepare ye the waters to slake that thirst from the limpid fountains of pure science. Teach only

Things averred, and known,
And daily, hourly seen.

H. L. KNIGHT.

MAYOR HEWITT ON TEMPERANCE.

Mayor Hewitt, of New York city, in his recent message to the Board of Aldermen, had the following to say on the temperance question: "I know there is, in some quarters, a disposition to belittle the excise cases and to regard them as of less consequence than cases of felony affecting life and property. But this is an error. A visit to the great charitable institutions maintained by the city, containing a population of over 14,000 persons, will convince the most skeptical observer that the chief cause of crime, sickness, and poverty, which fill these institutions with their tenants, is to be found in excessive indulgence in intoxicating liquors. If the abuse of this traffic could be prevented, there would follow an immediate and very large reduction in the general criminal business of the city, by which the moral tone would be raised and taxation would be lessened."

"In all civilized communities, it is the practice to control the traffic in alcoholic beverages. Indeed, in some of them it has been attempted to prohibit the sale of intoxicants altogether."

"The feeling among thoughtful people is practically unanimous in favor of the largest restriction upon the sale of intoxicating liquors which in practice can be made effective. As society is now constituted, prohibition may be declared to be a failure."

"I concur, therefore, in the recommendation of the Board of Excise in favor of higher rates of license for the sale of strong drinks, but I would not increase the rates for establishments selling light wines and beer, the consumption of which, so far as they are antidotes to the more intoxicating beverages, ought thus to be encouraged."

"The question of the traffic in liquors on Sunday is full of difficulties. Personally, I should be very glad to see it absolutely abolished. But this city contains a very large proportion of people who have been accustomed to regard Sunday as a day of recreation, and a part of this recreation consists in social eating and drinking, which they rarely carry to excess. To deprive these citizens of their privileges in this respect is a hardship. I am satisfied that any attempt to carry out such a policy will result in failure, and failure in such a case is very disastrous, because it practically breaks down the enforcement of the law, not only on that day, but on all other days. In this view I am supported by the judgment of the police commissioners, who, in official communications, have informed me that it will be impossible to enforce the law in regard to closing the saloons on Sunday, without a very large increase in the police force, and even then the result would be a very great dissatisfaction in the public mind which might lead to disorder and outbreaks. Hence, I have heretofore recommended, and I now repeat the recommendation, that special licenses should be granted, with the approval of the mayor, to reputable persons for the sale of light wines and beer after one o'clock on Sunday. These licenses ought to be not too numerous and should be confined to the places resorted to by that portion of our population who find recreation with their families in such places of gathering. I do not think that any evil results will spring from this relaxation of the law, and I do think that most of the violations of the law, which are so fruitful of evil consequences in the minds of the young, who are growing up among us, will thus be avoided. I know that I shall be condemned by many persons whose judgment I respect and whose good opinion I value, for making this recommendation; but it is my duty to express the honest opinion which I have formed as to what is practicable after the most careful examination of the question and a study of the conditions for which we have to make provision by law."

To the Editors of Freethought:

Many of your readers may think it presumptuous in me to criticise the distinguished Mayor Hewitt's views on temperance, but his opinions, in the main, are so erroneous that I deem it my duty to point out his mistakes.

It is true as Mr. Hewitt says: "If the abuse of the traffic could be prevented, there would follow an immediate and very large decrease in the general criminal business of the city, by which the moral tone would be raised and taxation would be lessened." But it is not true that anything like all the 14,000 inmates of the charitable institutions of New York city are there because of the excessive use of strong drink. Strong drink does not cause all the poverty with which it is generally charged, but the misery and despair of poverty drive many men and women to drown their miseries in intoxication.

Mr. Hewitt knows how the thousands of laborers of New York city toil the long, weary hours of the day for a mere pittance; he knows that the miserly allowance granted them by their millionaire masters gives them poor food, poor clothes, and wretched houses in which to live; he knows their houses are overcrowded and badly ventilated. Because of these conditions, the vital energies of the laborers are reduced, disease takes hold of them, and in obedience to a command of the book that Mr. Hewitt believes to be of God, they seek relief in strong drink. "Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be of heavy heart. Let him drink and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more." (Prov. xxxi, 6, 7.)

If Mr. Hewitt and his class, who are engaged in protected manufactures and who have by tariff laws and other frauds got possession of the people's earnings and through means of wealth secured the control of government, will allow the producers enough of what they produce to provide them with comfortable homes, they will not have to go to the saloon for comfortable quarters, and the population of charitable institutions will very materially decrease. The people of India are miserably poor, but not from strong drink, for their religion prohibits its use. They have one of the richest countries of the world, but they are robbed by English monopolistic rule. The monopolization of natural resources by a few persons, which enables them to compel the great mass of the people to slave for a mere existence, would cause poverty and crime had alcohol never been discovered.

Mr. Hewitt repeats the oft-exposed falsehood that Prohibition is a failure. It seems that they who repeat this assertion expect iteration to be taken for evidence. If Prohibition is a failure, why did Maine after trying it as a legislative enactment for more than thirty years make it a part of her constitution by the largest majority ever given to any measure adopted by the people of that state; and that too at the most warmly contested election ever held in Maine—an election which the liquor traffic of the entire United States drained its coffers to carry? In such a contest it is not probable that the people of Maine would indorse a thirty year's failure by a majority vote of more than 50,000. That Prohibition is a success in Maine is testified to by James G. Blaine and by other leading politicians. That it is a failure is mostly claimed by non-residents and by those who would be pecuniarily benefited by its overthrow. If Prohibition is not effective, it is just a little inconsistent in liquor dealers to spend money to defeat the passage of such laws, and to prevent their enforcement, as it is well known they do. The attorney general of Kansas, who was opposed to Prohibition before it became a law, said in a speech in this city: "Prohibition in Kansas is no longer an experiment, but on the contrary, is being enforced as successfully as the law against horse stealing, murder, arson, or other crimes known to our statutes."

The trouble about Prohibition is not with the law, but with those whose duty it is to enforce the law. The nominations of both the dominant political parties are made by the "machine," and the "machine" is always controlled by men devoid of principle. It seldom happens that men making any pretensions to temperance or any other virtue get nominations, and when they do get them it is a blind to catch votes. When honest Democrats and Republicans will lay aside their prejudices long enough to see that there is no difference between these "machines," and refuse to vote their tickets just because they are labeled "democrat" or "republican," then the machinery of government will be placed in the hands of those who believe in the law, and who will enforce it.

When Mr. Hewitt recommends high license as a remedy for the evils of the saloon, he recommends a failure. It may sometimes close a few saloons, but it adds to the capacity of those that remain. It may increase the revenue, but what people want to increase their revenue at the expense of their individual safety and the virtue of their sons and daughters? High license is wrong in principle and unsound in policy. It has nowhere decreased the consumption of liquor. The high licensed saloon is more dangerous than the low licensed saloon, because more tricks and devices are resorted to to make up the difference in license. High licensed saloons increase the demand for the fair faces and sweet voices of girls to allure and fasten upon the young and inexperienced the virus drink. Poverty, caused by wage slavery, compels girls to accept these places where, robbed of virtue, their charms and attractions are prostituted to vice.

No business, unless it serves some public good or is in some way allied with the general welfare, is a proper subject for permission. If the liquor traffic is a legitimate branch of trade, if it serves any real want, then our authorities have no right to impose upon it any more burdens and restrictions than upon any other legitimate business. On the contrary, if it serves no natural demand, but causes disease, increases taxes, multiplies crimes, and in multitudinous ways burdens the people, then it should not be permitted, no matter how lucrative it is to those engaged in it, or how profitable to the city as a source of revenue, for no amount of private gain or public revenue can justify the licensing of a trade that is subversive of all the aims of organized society. Liquor selling under high or low license is a crime and pauper-breeding, disease-producing, wife-beating, and baby-starving business, and interferes with the guaranteed and inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. High licensed liquor ruins homes, starves children, and breaks the hearts of wives and mothers just the same as low licensed liquor. In Chicago, now under high license, most of the saloons have reduced the price of beer from five cents a glass to three cents, and I commend the following from the Inter-Ocean to high license advocates: "The city is to be congratulated for one thing at least, in raising the price of saloon licenses, and that is in the increase of the revenue gained. It was predicted that the number of saloons would be decreased, but when the first period of the present fiscal year passed, it was found that there were a hundred more saloons than last year. The second period licenses went very slow, and a great deal of exertion was necessary to get the saloon keepers to pay up. For about six weeks there were over one hundred saloons running day and night, but these have all paid up, and to-day there are more saloons than at the time the high license law went into effect." The father of the Nebraska high license law says: "My advocacy of high license was the great mistake of my life." Science and experience have demonstrated the falsity of Mr. Hewitt's assumption that wine and beer are antidotes to the more intoxicating beverages. It seems that Mr. Hewitt, like most Christians, has neglected to read his Bible and of course don't know that good old Noah and Lot got drunk on native wine. It may be that he has been so busily engaged in trying to have pig iron admitted free of duty, in order to increase the already large profits of the protected article which he is manufacturer of, and which makes him a large consumer of pig iron—that he has had no time to investigate the wine and beer question. Von Moltke, the great German soldier and statesman, has said that the German empire has a greater enemy in beer than it has in France. Iowa gave up Prohibition for wine and beer, and after a fair trial went back to Prohibition. J. Fenimore Cooper, John G. Holland, and Horace Greeley spent a long time in the wine and beer countries of Europe in the investigation of this question, and on their return home declared against wine and beer. Had Mr. Hewitt known these things he probably would not have made the recommendations he did.

Placer county has the reputation of producing the best wine in California, and ought to show some good results, if wine ever produces any good results. At the Viticultural convention held in Los Angeles four years ago, a member from Placer county said in discussing wine as an antidote for stronger drinks that the wine drinkers of his county after a time give up wine for stronger drinks, and that five of the principal wine producers of Placer county were in the insane asylums at Napa and Stockton. A school teacher of this same county told me that most of her pupils brought wine to school to drink with their lunch, and that often several of them after lunch were incapacitated for study.

Wine is drunk for the alcohol it contains, which is about fifteen per cent. Science has disclosed the nature of alcohol, and its verdict is: "A little is bad, but more is simply worse. The true verdict is none."

"Honest water too weak to be a sinner," should be the Infidel's drink; a beverage that never yet filled a life with woe, that never yet excited a brain to acts of frenzy; that clears the head and warms the heart; gives brighter hopes and purer thoughts.

In closing, I recommend to all the readers of FREETHOUGHT who desire to know the truth on this question, James Parton's book: "Will the Coming Man Drink Wine?" and T. B. Wakeman's address: "Scientific Reasons for Total Abstinence and Prohibition."

MRS. FREEMAN'S LECTURES.

It seems a little thing to say, "From Seward, Nebraska, I went to Rockport, Missouri." And yet that journey involved long, tedious hours of waiting in depots, changing at junctions and stations, riding all day, nearly, and a good part of the night.

It was twelve o'clock at night when we reached Phelps, five miles from Rockport. After waiting three hours for another train, I was taken in charge by the mail-carrier and placed in a coverless, well-ventilated wagon. The mud was deep; the night was dark. At the head of the horses a lantern cast a weird gleam athwart the blackness. Besides myself there was one other solitary passenger, Benjamin F. Goodhue, of Chicago, a gentleman who ran last fall as representative to the legislature on the Labor ticket. He was to lecture in Rockport in the afternoon, myself in the evening. After three long mortal hours of heroic labor, our patient, faithful horses reached their destination. Mr. Goodhue was left at a restaurant, Uncle Sam's consignment at the post-office, and I, most fortunate of all, was delivered safe and sound and half frozen into the generous, tender hands of those two noble workers, Mr. and Mrs. Beck.

G. G. Beck is the worker of Rockport. It is owing to his earnestness and enthusiasm that any Freethought lectures have ever been delivered there. I gave three lectures, speaking Saturday, Sunday, and Monday evenings. On Saturday night the rain poured down. I did not expect we would have anyone, scarcely, but we had quite a good house. The two following nights the weather was more favorable and the attendance much larger. The audience were attentive, intelligent, and interested. I imagine that I did considerable good in this town—waked the people up and set them to thinking.

In addition to G. G. Beck and wife, I met M. M. Klein, O. B. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. John Grieve, Miss May Moore and Miss Vic Moore, two pretty, intelligent young ladies; E. B. Barker, Dr. Whitmore, Dr. Chamberlain, and many others.

At Maitland, Mo., I was received by that honest, earnest Liberal, B. F. Springs. Two years ago Helen Gardener lectured here. Graham is two miles from Maitland, and the Liberals of that place came to hear her, and of course were much pleased. Mr. Springs passed me over to H. B. Lang, who was in waiting with his carriage. I was to lecture at Graham, and the Liberals of Maitland were to come over to attend the lectures. The roads were so bad that not nearly so many came as would otherwise have been there. The "boys" at Graham had gotten up the lectures, and I found that they were nearly all young men—and nice-looking, intelligent young fellows they were too. Professor Fletcher, of Kansas, happened to be here on a visit, and furnished fine music. He is considered one of the finest musicians in the country. He is an earnest and whole-souled Liberal as well.

Charles Reynolds gave five lectures at Graham this winter. The preachers prayed for him; I understand. They also prayed for me in their protracted meeting, tenderly and Christianlike, to the end that some divine dispensation might keep me away. But the rain falls on the just and unjust alike, and no special providence laid it hand upon me. The "boys" were much pleased with my lectures, and want me to come back again.

At Shenandoah I was met at the depot by H. S. Holcomb, and entertained very nicely by himself and wife at his home. Here I found the Boston Investigator. Mr. Holcomb has taken it for years. He is an earnest, fair-minded Liberal, and his wife an intelligent lady. I found that the former genial secretary had made a host of friends for himself and his cause in this place.

I gave three lectures in the opera house, speaking Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon and evening. All seemed pleased with my lectures, and we had a good time. Before I came one of the ministers asked of the Sunday-school how many believed as that lecturer, Mrs. Freeman, who was coming, did; and not one individual stood up. This is a fair illustration of the intelligent methods pursued by the church. It is like the old school-boy game of betting "unsight and unseen," asking them to decide with regard to what the preacher or themselves had never heard nor knew anything about.

At Shenandoah also they wanted me to come back at my earliest convenience. I left with the feeling at my heart that I was saying good-bye to old friends.

At Guthrie Center I was met at the depot by one of the most intelligent, earnest workers I have found on the route—E. B. Rigler. Mr. Rigler certainly deserves a good deal of credit, as it was due to his persistent, earnest labors that I was enabled to give a Freethought lecture in this place. Mr. Rigler and his wife are both Liberal, and both young. I was entertained at the pleasant home of James France. Mr. France came here twenty-eight years ago, resides at present in town, but owns a fine, well-improved farm six miles from the Center, which is the seat of Guthrie county. Here also I found the Boston Investigator. He has taken it for years. His wife and himself, and family too, for that matter, are Freethinkers. I spoke in the opera house. It was a bad night, but we had quite a good house.

Mr. France and wife were very kind to me and made me feel very much at home.

At Bassett I stopped at the hotel. Mr. Joseph A. Huffman is the moving Liberal spirit of this place. No Liberal work, I think, would ever be done here if he didn't do it. He is an intelligent young man, deals in Freethought literature, has lectured some on phrenology, and very successfully too, as many press notices amply testify; is correspondent for some of the papers, and is, altogether, quite active, and is mapping out for himself a useful future. About nine miles from here, at Deerfield, are a number of Liberals, but the roads were so bad and the weather so disagreeable that I think none from that vicinity came in to my lectures. I regretted this very much. I spoke in the school-house, and it was nearly filled. The audience seemed to like the lecture. They laughed and applauded, and assured me at its close that they would like me to come again.

On my route I sold a number of Mr. Stevens's "Oration on Thomas Paine," which has received so many warm encomiums.

In my journeyings I have noticed the immense influence for good wielded by our Freethought literature, both books and papers. In a great measure this must be the means employed for Liberalizing the people. Freethought papers must be the John the Baptists fighting their way through the wilderness. Wherever these are taken the people become aroused, interested, and a demand for lecturers is the result. The idea, then, of the secretary was a good one, that tracts and leaflets should be distributed among the people. To do this he had to have means. If Freethinkers would aid him, would send in contributions, there isn't a doubt that he would do such a grand work in that direction as has never been done in this country, and the effects of it would be felt far and near, and for years to come. Now the burden of employing lecturers comes upon a very few. The people must read, must think. If they can be made to do this by a judicious distribution of Liberal literature, in a little time they would be demanding scientific Freethought lectures instead of supporting an idle, ignorant, and dishonest priesthood.

In concluding this letter I wish to thank my Liberal friends for the unvarying kindness I have met from them on my journey. They have all seemed to me so good, so true, so honorable, that I am almost persuaded that there are none unworthy in our ranks.

RAISING THE DUST.

Had anyone peered into the church at the corner of Sangamon and the Boulevard Monday morning, March 19, they would have certainly concluded that Messrs. Humpert, Merty, Howe, Bock, and the writer were demons from Dustland, for the accumulation, subsoil, strata, and antique layers of this light and airy evil (in a house where they pretend to consider cleanliness next to godliness) passeth our understanding. This group of grimy dirt raisers were carpet cleaning, cushion shaking, and doing the disagreeable work, preparatory to the occupancy of the building by the Chicago Secular Union—were the pioneer corps of volunteers to perform the necessary labor of literally digging up the dirt from under a cocoa-matting, where revivalists recently dispensed the droppings of this sanctuary, and we concluded that a Christian's lungs were fearfully and wonderfully made. This labor was volunteer work, for the reason that it is anticipated by each of the participants that in a not far distant day in the future it will be a source of personal pride with them that they performed such work for the glory of Freethought and the advancement of Secularism. With this and other duties the writer expects to be as busy for a couple of weeks as a family on moving day.

Brother John Bock is carving an elegant sign for the outer door. Mrs. Dr. Henry is to furnish flowers for the platform for a month, although she and the doctor will be absent in New York and Washington till the latter part of the month. Ladies are to be on hand to do whatever mending of the cushions or carpets is desired. The raising of the dust above alluded to was only consequent on our raising "the dust" of another description, as will be seen by the list of pledges below:

Not so bad a beginning for our new quarters. On Saturday the painters who had made an agreement to paint the building came to us desiring to throw up the contract, as there was to be a strike on Monday and they could not pay the increase demanded at the contract price. As Drs. Henry, McLeod, and myself had assumed the lease we had to have the work finished in time, so we told the painter that his men need not strike on the work for the Secular Union, as we would increase the amount of his contract to cover the additional wages. That is our way of advocating the labor problem. As soon as we occupy our new quarters, it is hoped that we of Chicago will enter on an era of usefulness and activity that will redound to the glory of secular work.

Will your readers remember that the address of the secretary is hereafter 241 Washington Boulevard.

ORGANIZATION.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In your issue of February 4 an article appeared under the above heading. I have looked anxiously for some response to it from your readers, but so far in vain. Allow me, therefore, to step in and press upon your readers the great necessity and importance of organization for the furtherance of Liberal or Freethought views.

Unless we co-operate we are like the proverbial bundle of sticks, liable to be broken to pieces. As you say in your article, "there is a double reason for organization—organization for advancement, and organization for defense." What we want in San Francisco is local cohesion, a solid phalanx, ready at once to join the national Union and resist the common enemy. Christianity, through its churches, presents a formidable, insidious, and active foe, prepared at any time to spring, panther-like, at the throats of defenseless Liberals. The farce at New York, reported in another issue, proves that the church is prepared, not only to thrust her "doxy" down our throats, but, if opportunity serves, to give us a fresh lease of all the horrors of the holy Inquisition.

It will be only through a well-constructed organization that the suggestion made by a correspondent as to subscribing a dollar per year each for the maintenance of an efficient staff of lecturers on the Pacific slope can be carried out satisfactorily.

One other feature, and not the least in importance, would be, in this cosmopolitan life, the drawing together men of all nationalities, the breaking down of the system that obtains so much favor among our pastors and masters, viz., the setting of nation against nation.

When all nations learn to understand that their best interest is a common brotherhood, then, and then only, will men cease to fly at one another's throats.

I suggest, gentlemen, that an invitation be inserted in FREETHOUGHT, at an early date, for as many of your readers as can, without inconvenience, meet, say, in the editor's sanctum to take the preliminary steps toward the formation of the San Francisco Freethought Society.

San Francisco, March 24.

CLIFFORD DIX.

C. B. REYNOLDS IN THE FIELD.

TEMPE, Ariz., March 18-20.—In the long distant past—two thousand years ago—this was the great city of the plains. Here the Zuni had their temple and made grand strides toward civilization. The legendary lore of the Zunis speaks of the cities and towns in this region, and far, far back into the more remote past, ever since the first expedition of Coronado, the ruins of this valley have been a source of wonder and speculation as to their original inhabitants. To Frank H. Cushing, the distinguished archeologist and earnest Liberal, alone is due the credit of clearing up all doubts. With unflagging zeal he has pushed the exploration, until even the domestic customs and many of the temple ceremonies of these ancients have been brought to light.

Large quantities of beautiful fabrics, earthen vessels, stone axes, hammers, tools, war clubs and implements of war, finger rings of shell beautifully engraved, a large number of cigarettes, some half smoked, skulls and part skeletons of the priests, with teeth all well preserved in the skull, have been unearthed. Mr. Cushing has evidence that these people were driven hence by earthquakes. No doubt now exists that the people who built these great cities, here at this mighty altitude, surrounded by these mountain peaks, had a more northern origin in common with the Zunis, or their far northern connection with the Toltecan predecessors of the Aztecs.

To the untiring energy, pluck, perseverance, and generosity of Charles Trumbull Hayden is due the present flourishing condition of Tempe and vicinity. The land of the valley is rapidly enhancing in value, immense fields of bright alfalfa, peach-trees in bloom, in fact, for miles from the Hayden Butte the mesa is an endless garden.

I delivered three lectures at the A. O. U. W. hall, the first Liberal lectures ever delivered here, to crowded house, standing room even at a premium. The last night I urged the forming of a Liberal Union library and reading room, and $170 was promptly subscribed. This will best describe the influence of the lecture.

I have obtained my first new subscriber to FREETHOUGHT. To Mr. John Martin I am indebted for assuming responsibilities and making arrangements. He is a most earnest and devoted Liberal, but his work was a labor of love, and made a very joy by the prompt alacrity with which the Liberals here seconded his efforts.

I go from here to Phoenix, thence to San Bernardino.

C. B. REYNOLDS.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

CHARLES WATTS will lecture during April in Pittsburg, Pa., Kent, O., and in May will make a trip to Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Kansas. His address is 282 Sumach street, Toronto, Canada.

S. P. PUTNAM was at Anaheim March 25, 26; Monrovia 28; Pasadena 29; Messina 30, 31. He speaks at San Bernardino April 1; at Pomona April 3, 4; Santa Barbara April 8, in San Luis Obispo county from April 9 to 15; Boulder Creek, 17 to 19.

C. B. REYNOLDS's lecture appointments are as follows:

San Jacinto, Cal.	March	.....	30, 31, 1 April.
Diamond Mines, "	April	.....	2, 3, 4.
San Diego, "	"	.....	6, 7, 8.
National City, "	"	.....	9, 11, 12.
Los Angeles, "	"	.....	14, 15.
Santa Ana, "	"	.....	17, 18, 19.

California friends desiring lectures will please address Mr. Reynolds so letters will be at the above places ahead of dates.

LITERARY NOTES.

MISS VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE's poem entitled "Nameless," published in FREETHOUGHT of February 25, has been issued in leaflet form. Copies can be furnished at 10 cents a dozen.

THE Ingersoll-Field discussion, which appeared in the North American Review, has been gathered into book form. The discussion makes a dollar book in cloth; in pamphlet 50 cents.

WE have photographs for sale of Thomas Paine, Robert G. Ingersoll, and Samuel P. Putnam; also the writer of these lines. The price is 25 cents each, except that of Colonel Ingersoll, which is 40 cents.

JOHN PECK, a favorite writer with all Liberals, has lately appeared as an author. Two pamphlets from his pen are, "Miracles and Miracle Workers" and "Christian Absurdities." The former sells for 10 cents and the latter for 20. We sell them both.

Freethought.

Guess the "good time" is coming now,
Energetic men are here,
Opinions fearlessly discussing,
Right will conquer, never fear.
Get the "ears" of honest men,
Every wrong will righted be.
Endurance is no longer wise,
Minds must be from error free.
As the child to manhood grows
Clearer and brighter is the view;
Dismal visions of the past,
Only are background to the new.
Now, this FREETHOUGHT light will shine
As a beacon in the night,
Leading all who now are lost
Directly on to Reason's light. M. A. LELAND.

A WELL-GROUNDED SUSPICION.

FREETHOUGHT, of which three numbers have come to hand, is a new anti-Christian journal published in San Francisco. The editors are our indomitable and enthusiastic friend, Samuel Putnam, and George E. Macdonald, whom we suspect to be a brother of Eugene Macdonald, the able editor of the Truth Seeker. The new journal, as far as we can see, is fairly on the right track, and, from time to time, we trust to be able to extend to it words of fraternal cheer.—Secular Review, London.

THE Sinaloa Colony Club holds its regular meeting next Sunday, April 1, at 2 P. M., at 39 Fourth street.

True Worship.

There is worship in fashion's caprice,
 For the one's in fashion's thrall;
 To the spirit of fearless manhood,
 This is not true worship at all,
 Give me not the towering chapel,
 With its faint illumined pews,
 But the wider temple of nature,
 With its flame of stars, and dews.
 For there is the music of knowledge,
 The rhythm of all is love;
 The answer of what is around us
 Is sweeter than from above.
 Why should one baffle his vision,
 Seeking the unknown skies?
 All the aids and the hopes that befriend one,
 From the struggles of man arise.
 Our heaven is with one another,
 Our hell is the wrong and false;
 In the good we find the happy,
 And justice the last exalts.
 Our goal is human welfare,
 Our duty to help the weak;
 Lift the mind to high endeavor,
 And in all, the truth to speak.

CORRESPONDENCE.It is Indeed.To the Editors of Freethought:

We think your paper is a daisy.
 Yours respectfully, A. T. McMILLAN.
 Wamego, Kan.

There Will be More Sometime.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Inclosed find $5.25 to apply as per bill. FREETHOUGHT is just grand and cannot help succeeding. We enjoy each number and only wish there was more, when finished. The paper is filling a long felt want and must prosper. With best wishes from both Mr. Albert and myself,

Yours for U. M. L., LIDA I. ALBERT.
 Cathlamet, W. T.

Appreciation Expressed.To the Editors of Freethought:*

A subscriber for FREETHOUGHT and a student of Freethoughtology, I must pen you a few lines expressing my appreciation of your paper.

I once saw and heard Mr. Putnam in Goshen, Utah, and now understand that he is on a lecturing tour. I hope he will come this way, and that myself and others will have the privilege of again hearing him speak in the advocacy of freedom of thought, freedom of speech, and the enjoyment of true and honest liberty. Wishing success to your own efforts and the efforts of all honest advocates of Truth and Liberty, I am

Yours truly, DAVID L. EVANS.
 Dallas, Col.

A Safe Offer.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Please permit me to call the attention of your readers to the pamphlet called "The Gods," containing five of Ingersoll's lectures, which I had never seen until I called on you the last time. The lecture on "Thomas Paine" is to me the grandest thing I ever read, and is alone worth ten times the price of the book. Everyone who fails to read it will fail of a rich treat, and if any subscriber will send for it and read it and tell you he or she is not fully satisfied with such an investment of fifty cents, you may return him or her the money and charge it to me.

Truly, H. P. STONE.

Oakland, March 16, 1888.

This is the Talk.To the Editors of Freethought:*

In reading the Truth Seeker I see you have started a Freethought paper in San Francisco. I wish you the very best of success. I wish you could succeed in driving the sky pilots plumb to—well, I don't care where, just so they leave the Pacific coast. I hope every Liberal will come bravely to the scratch. Come right forward, Freethinkers, and put your shoulders to the wheel, and help to forward the interests of Freethought. Let us try to make ourselves and our movement felt here in the Pacific Northwest.

Inclosed you will find $1. Please send FREETHOUGHT to my address and oblige a Freethinker and a friend of Liberalism. WILLIS L. PENCE.
 Caleb, Or.

Welcome.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Thanks for a copy of your Freethought journal. I think you are "the right men in the right place" to carry on such a Liberal work.

If oratory, poetry, energy, application, witicism, and criticism have power to move people's minds, then these will be stirred to their very depths, as well as being rippled upon the surface by the profound and facile tongue and pen of its editors.

As I am a pioneer of the state of California I am proud to welcome such talent and enterprise to this coast. Like the lightnings, Freethought is shining from the east into the west, and the way is being prepared for the culminating wave of civilization to return with accumulating force and higher intellectual power, upon the shores of the Orient, thus returning the more ripened fruits of the practical philosophy of the Occident.

LUNA HUTCHINSON.

Bellevue, Idaho, March 8, 1888.

The San Diego Organization.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Thinking that it might interest your readers to hear from this place, I will send a few lines. Liberalism is progressing finely here; we have an organization of about one hundred members, and more than that number of regular attendants. A large majority of those attending these meetings are Spiritualists, yet many Materialists and Agnostics work with us. These meetings are known as the Co-operative Spiritual Union, which teaches universal mental liberty, and believes that freedom of thought and speech is the only safe rock to build upon. With this for a platform we cannot help but succeed. Paul A. Smith is president of the society, which meets twice every Sunday, at 2 P.M. and 7:30 P.M. Mr. Smith is a regular speaker and is a hard worker in the field. All agree that he has done nobly. Lately he has been ably assisted by Dr. T. B.

Taylor, an old worker and a good one. He delivered the address on the anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine to an overcrowded house, of which a fair report was given in the Daily Bee, of this city.

I must not forget to mention Mrs. Mary A. White, who has done so nobly here since her arrival among us. Her words from the platform have been simply grand. Through her work and assistance by other ladies we have now a fine Spiritual and Liberal library and free reading room where your splendid paper, FREETHOUGHT, will always be found on the table.

I must tell you of the very pleasant Sunday (March 11) that we enjoyed listening to the grand lectures of Samuel P. Putnam, "Danger Ahead," and "The Bible." The hall was full and many had to go away unable to get in. Standing room was all taken. After the lecture he sold many books. Everyone that heard the lecture spoke in the highest praise of it. Mr. Putnam made many friends here. His future return will be anxiously awaited; and I think he left our beautiful city by the bay with some regrets. He has the thanks and best wishes of the society.

We are now waiting for C. B. Reynolds, who will speak for us on April 6, 7, and 8. We have a larger hall now. From time to time I will write to you and let you know how the cause is progressing.

HENRY H. NICHOLS.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

...IN THE...

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

...FOR...

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument Mr. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

LECTURES

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM

President of the American Secular Union,

Will make his annual lecture tour for 1888 in California, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, Washington Territory, Arizona, Idaho, Montana, and Utah. The purpose of these lectures is the organization of Freethought Societies, the discussion and advancement of the Nine Demands of Liberalism, the acquaintance and fraternal association of the Liberal people of this country.

It is necessary that those who desire lectures shall communicate at once, in order that at the earliest possible moment the route may be laid out, so that the largest number of places can be visited with the greatest economy of resources. Our country is so vast in extent, and railroad expenses are so great, that lectures must be given on a pre-arranged route.

It is best, if possible, to arrange for two or more lectures, rather than for one. The expense of advertising is no greater, and much more good can be accomplished—a larger interest will be excited—and there will be a better opportunity for information in regard to the magnitude of our cause and the importance of our principles.

The following are some of the subjects of the lectures, dealing both with the destructive and constructive aspects of Secular work—and its scientific and literary form—giving special attention to the political significance of the Nine Demands:

Universal Mental Liberty,

The New Heaven and Earth,

The Glory of Infidelity,

American Democracy,

The New God,

The Bible: Its Genuineness, Authenticity, Inspiration, and Infallibility,

Thomas Paine: The Thinker, The Patriot,

The Moralist, and the Scholar.

The Moral Power of Unbelief,

Fair Play,

The Dangers Ahead,

Woman and the Bible,

Science and Theology,

Priest, King and People,

Creation and Evolution; or, Miracle and Law,

The Works of Man and the Works of God;

or, Civilization vs. The Raw Material.

The terms of the lectures will be made reasonable to all societies and individuals who desire to co-operate with the work of the American Secular Union. It is expected that hall rent, advertising and local expenses will be provided for—and beyond this, that every Liberal will do his best to help the general cause. By combination of effort local organization can be strengthened and universal interest aroused. The local work and national work depend upon each other. The local work is of the first importance; it is the vital force of the movement—but to have simply local enterprise is to destroy the noblest spirit of Freethought, which is world-wide in its relations. It is through the Union that the broadest humanitarian results can be achieved.

Will not friends instantly interest themselves in this matter, and arrange for lectures, so that dates and subjects may be given, and every possible point be made available for work?

PRESS NOTICES, ETC.

Mr. Putnam is one of the most thorough believers in intellectual liberty in the world. He has written some of the most stirring appeals to the Liberals of this country that I have ever read. He believes that Freethought has a future; that the time is coming when the superstitions of this world will be forgotten—or remembered—some of them with smiles, most of them with tears. Mr. Putnam, although endowed with a poetic nature, with poetic insight, clings to the known, builds upon the experience of man, and believes in fancies only when they are used as the wings of fact. His abilities are of the highest order. He compels the admiration of every one who really loves the just and true.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

Putnam, the Freethinker, is the best posted and best talker we have ever had on Wood river. The theater has been crowded every night whenever Mr. Putnam was advertised to speak.—Inter-Idaho, Hailey, Idaho.

S. P. Putnam was greeted by a large and appreciative audience on Sunday night last, and if close attention, interrupted only by frequent rounds of applause, indicates anything, nearly all present felt that they were enjoying a rare intellectual treat, and more than compensated for their time and attention. Putnam is a calm, clear-headed Liberal thinker, a sound reasoner and an eloquent speaker, and is apparently incapable of giving offense to any one who is an honest, earnest seeker for truth.—Avant-Courier, Roseman, Montana.

Mr. Putnam is an eloquent, attractive, and entertaining speaker, and his remarks were frequently interrupted by applause.—Rocky Mountain Daily News, Denver, Colorado.

Samuel P. Putnam has been entertaining our people with a course of lectures on Freethought. The seating capacity of the hall on Friday evening was inadequate to accommodate the audience. The speaker during his stay showed himself to be a man of extraordinary ability, holding his audiences continually wrapped up in his subjects.—Times, Black Hawk, Colorado.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - APRIL 7, 1888

COLONEL INGERSOLL will spend the next two months in California.

LAST Sunday was All Fools' Day. The churches were crowded.

BEFORE going into a fight it is always well for a man to consider what he will gain if he wins. Above all he should take into account the consequences in case he gets licked.

RELIGIOUS papers are expressing surprise that the Hon. W. E. Gladstone should esteem the anti-religious views of Col. R. G. Ingersoll worthy of his distinguished attention. After the discussion it is probable that their surprise will be supplemented by regret.

MAYOR HEWITT has issued a circular address to the board of aldermen stating his reasons for not complying with their recommendation to raise the Roman Catholic flag on St. Patrick's Day. He believes in one flag, and no more, and he is ready for office beyond this term.

THE Young Men's Christian Association of Princeton recently secured the services of Anthony Comstock as a lecturer on moral purity. Out of respect for Mr. Comstock's modesty the students draped the statue of the Gladiator on the campus with a pair of red flannel undergarments. At last accounts the faculty were debating the question how to remove the ornaments without attracting undesired public attention.

THE sensation created by the Rev. Mr. Taylor, of Riverside, last Sunday, would subside if people were better acquainted with the contents of the Bible. Mr. Taylor said: "I believe that God gave us the fruit of the vine for other purposes besides eating as grapes and making raisins. The 'wine that maketh glad the heart of man' is spoken of in the same passage of scripture as corn and oil, and referred to as gifts of God." This was a part of Mr. Taylor's argument in favor of high license for strong drinks, and low license for wine.

SOME time ago Brother Owen, of our Spiritual contemporary, the Golden Gate, inquired, cheerfully: "Is it an impression we get from the spirit world, or a mere imagination, that we are to have a better office ere long?" Here Brother Owen paused for a reply. At the end of two months, apparently not getting any, he asks again, this time pathetically: "Brother Spiritualists, are you willing to have your editors and printers destroy their health by breathing the vile atmosphere of a ramshackle den in an unsavory quarter of the city, simply because the rent is cheap? Can you not afford to assist the cause you love, just a little—especially as you have no pew-rent to pay nor churches to build, nor orphan asylums to provide for? We pause for a reply." We fear that Brother Owen's impression was self-induced and of a psychic character. The matter of office rent belongs to the economy of this world.

OMAR KHAYYAM, the Persian astronomer-poet, prays like this:

O thou who didst with pitfall and with gin
Beset the road I was to wander in,
Thou wilt not with predestined evil round
Enmesh, and then impute my fall to sin!

O thou who man of baser earth didst make,
And even with Paradise devise the snake:
For all the sin wherewith the face of man
Is blackened—man's forgiveness give—and take!

MONDAY's Alta California contains a leading article on "Relics of the Crucifixion." It tells how St. Helena found the true cross in the sepulcher, and proved its genuineness by a miracle; the nails which held Christ to the cross; the inscription, "Jesus of Nazareth King of the Jews," which lay detached at a convenient distance, and such other fragments of the event as were deemed desirable. It is believed that the Alta's article was written for the Sunday issue, and was crowded out. It would have been very appropriate for a special April fool's day edition.

NEWS AND NOTES.

SAN JACINTO.—The San Jacinto valley is eighty-five miles east of Los Angeles and one hundred miles north of San Diego. It is in the county of San Diego, which county is as large as the state of New Hampshire. The area of the valley is about fifteen miles square. In connection with it are Diamond Valley, Pleasant Valley, and up among the vast surrounding mountains sunny nooks and dales, where the orange-trees can bloom every month of the year. It is fifty miles from the ocean, and the altitude is fifteen hundred feet.

It is indeed a lovely valley. The mountain scenery is wild, beautiful, and of endless variety of form and color, as morn and mid-day and evening go flying by with flashing banners. Enormous peaks stretch to the heavens, massive and white, on three sides of the valley, while it is encircled in every direction by hills, mounds, and soft declivities, that sweep and roll like the innumerable billows of the sea. When the sunlight is on them, especially the golden floods of westering day, the picture is one of transcendent loveliness, the sheen of distant snows mingling with the verdant beauty of the plain and the purple splendor of the hills. There is a grove of cottonwood along the banks of the river San Jacinto, which is a novel attraction in this part of the country, for such groves are seldom seen.

A railroad is now being built from Perris to San Jacinto and will be completed about the first of May. This is good from the business point of view, but not the poetic. The stage ride from Perris to San Jacinto is simply enchanting, and the delight of that trip will never be forgotten. I seemed to be passing amid a huge gallery of wondrous paintings, whose lustrous and ever-charming prospects were like the charm of music, and with every motion of the horses' hoofs my dreamy spirit exulted.

There are one hundred flowing artesian wells in the valley, besides surface wells and huge reservoirs in the mountains holding billions of gallons, and there is no lack of water. The average rain fall is about twelve inches. The fruits of this soil are many: the apricot, peach, prune, raisin, grape, apple, pear, plum, and olive. There are also excellent alfalfa and pasture lands. The population now numbers about twenty-five hundred.

There is plenty of fuel and cottonwood, pine, and cedar timber, also large deposits of lime-rock and clay. There are two steam mills in the mountains. Three hot sulphur springs are near the town. If one is hunting for a home, it is well to visit this advantageous point, and the Freethinker will find some congenial spirits.

D. W. Perkins is one of the veterans—bold, generous, and ready to lead the column. He is a staunch Prohibitionist and is delighted with friend Bruce's articles, and would shake hands cordially with him, but he don't believe in any of the church stuff.

R. C. Reed, though struck with paralysis and not able to do any work, doesn't loose a particle of his devotion to Freethought.

Ira B. Todd is eighty years of age, and chockful of scripture, and he does rattle the clergymen fearfully.

Henry Chester is the chum of McHenry, of San Diego, and is as Liberal as the sunny skies of California. He and McHenry can shake hands via FREETHOUGHT.

Truman E. Deming, Martha Deming, his wife, Jos. S. Deming, Lucie A. Deming, his son and daughter, are all enlisted in the ranks of the Union with open hand and heart. They live in Pleasant Valley, and amid the benediction of nature express enlightened humanity.

C. S. Hemstrett is a worker in every sense of the word. He is a good man to tie to, as Westerners say.

Wm. Vawter is level-headed, and doesn't go much on enthusiasm, but when it comes to science, he is firm as the everlasting hills, and hasn't any room for faith.

Mrs. Florence Reynolds, Isaac E. Crum, and E. J. Vawter furnished excellent music for the lectures, which received merited applause, because the heart was with it and it vibrated with the spirit of liberty.

J. F. Shultze I found a genial companion, who knows how to strike good blows when the iron is hot. He will do for Longfellow's blacksmith making the dark ore gleam for humanity's sake.

L. Durett, who introduced me at the lectures, is not afraid to stand up and be counted.

J. B. Vernon, president of the new organization, and Chas. W. Gray, secretary, are earnest and well-equipped representatives of our cause.

The San Jacinto Secular Union was organized on Thursday evening, and with the names already mentioned are E. C. Lamb, John D. Kelley, John Blair, C. J. Eberly, Adolph Berman, A. C. Fately, N. D. Hanson, Ed. Harris, and E. J. Vawter.

Professor Livingstone, teacher of the school at Diamond Valley, is of the Universalist persuasion, but with his family is of the broad church of humanity, and they stand for the enlightenment and progress of the world. Among other Liberal acquaintances are Dr. Whittock, Dr. Ryan, F. Earle, S. A. Hubbell, I. R. Scranton, N. O. Hanson, etc.

C. B. Reynolds will lecture here on April 1st, when the organization will be completed.

There is good material in this noble valley for a successful Union, notwithstanding the many church influences. I gave eight lectures in all. The audiences were composed of the best citizens of the place. Of course the usual tyranny is exercised, and some are afraid to express their opinions, but there is a sterling element, independent as the mountains, and they will keep Freethought at the front. The campaign everyway has been encouraging. These were the first Freethought lectures ever given in the valley, and they have created a great interest, and with material prosperity there must come enlightened reason.

San Jacinto, March 23, 1888.

Lovely Anaheim! Garden of Eden, they call it, and it is as near to that as any earthly paradise can be. It is just near enough to the sea to feel the benefit of the soft ocean gales, which cool the summer's heat so that the thermometer seldom rises above eighty or ninety, while in places inland it goes to one hundred and ten or twenty. The winters are mild and the climate throughout the year is equable and pleasant. A net-work of railroads is being built and the country has every modern facility for commerce, and the markets of the world can be easily reached. The Garden of Eden must have a railroad and big hotel, or the American would leave it altogether to the voice of God walking in the twilight. The holy cherubim must be conductors and brakemen; the sword of flame must be the stack of the locomotive; and the tree of knowledge of good and evil must be worked up into a first-class real estate office. The Garden of the Gods itself must have a boom, or it will be out in the cold. The old days are passed forever. We live a century now where once they lived only a decade.

I am at the home of the Parkers, L. and K., and the warm sunshine falls on fruit and flower. The sky is perfectly blue and cloudless, and the horizon is gemmed with varying hills, and the beautiful undulations and magnificent peaks sink away into an ocean of azure. The fields are glittering. Bird songs are in the air. The trees of every variety seem to make a palace of mingling beauty where the melodious winds are gently breathing. The tall eucalyptus appears clothed with jewels, as its leaves catch the lusters of the glancing sun. The flower garden is before me with brilliant colors, white, red, purple, crimson, blue, golden, with pale and vivid green, and the brown ear h, while the orange groves stretch away into dim arcades, with constellations in the radiant shadows. It is a scene of perfect happiness. The dog and cat, the hens and the chickens, the shovel and the hoe, the horse and the plow, all things animate and inanimate, seem to revel in superb enjoyment. On such a day we can dream of liberty, of progress, of knowledge, of art that shall make this world a noble heaven, and hope becomes more lofty than ever.

Our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Parker, coming to their golden wedding day, amid the jewels of September, through the long years have been ardent pioneers of thought and civilization. They have helped to make the wilderness blossom like the rose. This was all wild land when they came here, and the cactus flourished without a rival. The splendid picture that now greets my eye is the result of their busy hands. Equally progressive have they been in the realm of truth, and helped to new discovery and ampler fields of intellectual attainment. It is a joy, amid such glory of fruit and flower, to meet these pioneers whose lives are rich with such experiences of nature and life. They have a large family—children and grandchildren—and their home circle is broadening with advancing generations, and old age is beautiful with the brightness of youth, and the splendor of dawn mingles with the evening light.

The course of lectures at Anaheim has been a success that justifies the earnest efforts that have been made by our friends. It shows that there is a good and strong element in the community in favor of Liberalism. Its best business men are in favor of the Nine Demands and organized work.

I gave my first lecture Sunday afternoon. The audiences increased at every lecture. On Monday evening a Secular Union was formed. The following names are on the list: L. Parker, K. Parker, S. Littlefield, M. Lendke, Mrs. S. P. Bates, R. Lendke, Z. E. Bell, A. J. Mason, H. P. Larsen, Robert Maunder, Julius Harting, Peter Skorigs, J. C. Grader, A. B. Clinedisset, E. A. Pullen, John Meredith, Harriet Meredith, and Frank Ey. Mr. Ey was chosen president; Mrs. Kate Parker, secretary; and S. Littlefield, H. P. Larsen, and E. A. Pullen committee on by-laws. A beginning has thus been made, in a community where there are many difficulties, indifference, the church power, and the conservatism of fashion. This is pioneer work, and only those who have tried it know the discouragements. It is against the stream. It requires personal power to succeed, the heroic qualities. It is not the garden, but the rough fields wherein the labor must be performed. The seed must be planted, sometime in storm and tempest, and sometime be thrown to wind and stream. The Freethinker is committed to perpetual struggle. But the harvest must come, the golden, happy days when humanity shall be "good and great and joyous, and beautiful and free."

There must be more virtue and knowledge with the "process of the suns." There must be the excellence of truth, the glory of justice, the joy of liberty. These must be our inspiration, and beyond all the limitations of to-day, the toil, the disappointment, shines the ideal world.

"The earnest purpose makes the future bright,
And paradise is found in doing right."

I enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Bates. Mr. Bates insures against fire in this world, but he takes out no policy against the fire of the next. One world at a time for fire insurance as well as other matters. Mrs. Bates's energy added quite a number to the list of FREETHOUGHT subscribers.

F. L. Mason, "mine host" of the Planter's Hotel, is one of those genial landlords who always make the pilgrim's pathway pleasant.

John E. Schrick took me out to his handsome residence and culled me a beautiful bouquet of flowers from his garden, which ornamented the Freethought platform. Mr. Schrick's wife is a Catholic, but is pervaded by the gentle spirit of charity.

E. A. Pullen is an active worker, for years in the front rank, and always ready to be counted for Freethought.

Mr. and Mrs. Joel Parker and Miss Kate Parker, their daughter, of Orange, were present Sunday afternoon. Mr. Joel Parker is one of the progressive men of the world. Like my friend Bruce, he is in favor of Prohibition, but not of the church rule. He would deal with the evils of drink by Secular means. He wants to make Freethought a mighty power for reform. He is the oldest son of L. and K. Parker, and was born to Radicalism, and has no need of a "second birth."

S. Littlefield and Frank Ey are prominent business men, but are ready to be in the minority for humanity's sake. They are able to be independent and exercise the divine right of the American citizen. Mr. and Mrs. Meredith, Mr. and Mrs. Lendke, H. P. Larsen, C. B. Johnson, John Turner, Robert Larter, Alex. Henry belong also to the era of man and have left theology far behind.

Mr. McFadden, who introduced me at the lectures, is one whose broad humanity is too much for the boundaries of the church. Also Dr. A. V. Fox, formerly of Neodesha, Kansas—about where I think friend B. B. Rockwood, of San Pasqual, used to live—and perhaps the latter will recognize in the doctor an old neighbor.

Prof. E. James, of Orange, Mrs. Schubert, N. Bittner, and E. A. Pullen opened our meetings with exhilarating music, and the happy strains seemed to give new impetus to the spirit of liberty, and we thank our friends for helping to interpret Freethought in beautiful harmonies.

Miss Lottie Beckington, the granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Parker, whom the Muses have gifted, was the messenger of the "musical sphere" on the last evening, and with exquisite skill blended voice with the melodious instrument: and so there has been cheer and entertainment for the path of labor, and amid "sterner duties" there has been

"The Dorian mood of flutes and soft recorders."

If all do as well as Anaheim, we shall have a noble army of Freethought, and why shouldn't this fruitful valley, which man and not God has made, be consecrated to truth and justice. Mr. and Mrs. L. T. Wood, Mrs. Lewis, Mrs. Wellman, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Shoemaker, etc., are among our pleasant acquaintances here, and although some are not altogether of our way of thinking, yet in spirit they are with the sunshine and flowers, and the beauty of this world, and not with the gloom of orthodoxy. They are therefore with us, and not against us.

In reading over my "News and Notes" of San Diego, I wonder I omitted the name of my friend Wm. A. Allen, who is one of our pioneers in that city. He was first to greet me last year, and it was through his efforts mainly that the campaign was begun in southern California. I want the readers of FREETHOUGHT to know our generous ally. He is the Infidel who built friend Shaug's house upon a rock, and Jesus would be delighted with a house so solidly constructed that all the winds of heaven can't tumble it over. I think Jesus would take a great deal more stock in this Secular mansion than in the steepled churches that the cyclones embrace with such evangelical fervor that only the foundation is left. Whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth. We sincerely hope he will never fall in love with Shaug's house, admirable though it is. It was built for man and not for deity.

I have received the following letter from Dillon, Montana:

S. P. PUTNAM, Dear Friend: Our friend, Mr. Emerick, told me that he had sent you the sad, sad news. My dear friend died in my arms, a brave, staunch, and true Liberal to the end. She left such a sweet little babe a few days old. Almost with her last speech she told me to remember to name the little one S. P. Putnam. She wanted me to have it put in the paper that she had three bonny boys named after Liberals; the oldest after Thomas Paine, the next after that good, good friend Robert G. Ingersoll, and the last after yourself. Won't you mention this in your paper and so grant the wishes of the dear one gone to sleep? Hoping we may some day meet again in our happy home, I am your sincere friend,
MRS. D. CARRINGTON.

It is sweet amid all toil and the shadow of death to realize the depth and power of human friendship, that in it comes the immortal life, not in length of years, but in the quality that makes each moment a breath of eternity. Mrs. Emerick was a noble Liberal, true, faithful, generous, charitable, with no particle of bigotry, but standing firm to her convictions. I shall not forget my visit to her cheerful home, with husband and children dwelling in the atmosphere of Freethought. Mr. Emerick is one of the pioneers of our land. Amid arduous labors he has never bent the knee to superstition. He has been a free man amid the plains and mountains of the frontier, finding in nature the teachings of humanity. He has met with an inexpressible loss—a dear wife, a gracious mother gone. We cannot help it. Death is mightier than God himself, if there is one. We must submit to its awful power. But in the midst of the unfathomed sorrow, let there be the music of love, the courage of brave hearts, the joy of fraternity, the gentleness of humanity, the beauty of sympathy; and thus, whatever fate may do, life shall be grand, over every grave the flowers shall grow, and in the evening gloom beautiful Memories shall make hope for the coming dawn.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Anaheim, March 28, 1888.

LET US HOPE NOT.

In an article entitled "A Christian Nation," a paper called the Interior says:

We are a Christian nation, and the foundations of the republic are imbedded in the conservative principles of Christianity. Christianity alone is benevolent, and it alone bridges the chasm between wealth and poverty. The advance of Atheism and Agnosticism, with their fruits of despair and Anarchy, has roused the Christian public to the dangers that beset society, and has given an interest and impetus to Christian benevolence that has never been felt before. We must push along these lines. We must purify and foster our common schools, and push our churches out into the districts occupied by the laboring population. The battle is providentially forced upon us so that Christianity may develop her power. She has a new grasp upon human selfishness and can appeal to its fears.

The Interior's first proposition is as far from the truth as it could be by any possibility of misstatement. How long since we became a Christian nation, and what evidence is there that we are such? It is assuredly since the day when George Washington said: "The government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion."

"Christianity," goes on the Interior, "alone is benevolent." We might accept this as true if we were not able to point to more than a dozen millions given to charity by Infidels; and we might perhaps believe that Christianity "alone bridges the chasm between wealth and poverty" but for the fact that the chasm has never been bridged. Further, nearly all the efforts now being made in that direction are the work of people outside the church.

As to the advance of Atheism and Agnosticism, that has nothing to do with Anarchy and despair. The Atheist does not believe in a future life, and he certainly is not going to despair over the prospect of not gaining what he does not believe in nor hope for. Christians profess to believe in a hell, where a large number of human beings will burn forever in perpetual fire. The Agnostic says he does not know that such will be the case. The absence of this knowledge does not throw him into a despairing frame of mind.

By Anarchy, which is called the fruit of Atheism and Agnosticism, the Interior doubtless means lawlessness. But statistics show that the law-breakers are almost exclusively Christians, and that among a thousand criminals there is not, on an average, one Atheist. The Atheist knows that consequences follow evil-doing. The Christian believes that forgiveness, and even reward, may intervene. Between the two, Atheism should act as the most effective deterrent to bad actions.

The argument is plainly against the Interior, but that could doubtless be got along with if the facts did not conspire with it to show that the editor does not know what he is talking about.

The mistake that Christians make is in supposing that when their religion begins to lose its hold, society is threatened; when the truth is that nothing is in danger but superstition and the grip of the church upon the public mind and pocket.

To proceed, in what way does the Interior propose to purify the common schools? Certainly not by putting more Bibles into them or by insisting upon the continuance of the reading of that book as at present practiced. The only purification necessary is to throw the Bible and superstition out of them.

The Interior says that Christianity "has a new grasp upon human selfishness and can appeal to its fears." Great will be the victory won by such a method as that! But the average man, with average notions of honesty and moral courage, will say it is nobler that all mankind should go down in everlasting wreck and misfortune, if such a fate awaits those who honestly follow their own convictions, than to gain any imaginable heaven by being frightened into it by spooks or drawn thither by the selfish hope of reward.

A PLAN THAT WILL SURELY WORK.

A correspondent this week outlines a plan by which he believes a large circulation for a Freethought paper could be secured. We have no doubt that, put in operation, it would result as he expects. Dr. Chapman's scheme is worth trying sometime.

But there is a question of more immediate importance. The great want of every Liberal journal is subscribers and readers, both for the support of the paper itself and for the spread of its principles. And the one helps the other. A paper carries weight, largely, according to its circulation. A paper with ten thousand readers has ten thousand indorsers, and speaks with ten thousand tongues. If FREETHOUGHT had that number of readers in this Western country, it could be safely asserted that there were ten thousand Freethinkers here whose sentiments, to some extent, it voiced; and ten thousand people of one mind make an element that everybody is bound to respect.

It is not expected that FREETHOUGHT will attain a circulation of ten thousand at once, but there is no reason why it should not reach half that number within two years. Our plan for achieving this result is for every subscriber to consider himself or herself an agent and act as such. We propose these rates:

One subscription one year, .....	$2.00
Two subscriptions one year, .....	$3.00
Three subscriptions one year, .....	$4.00
Four subscriptions one year, .....	$5.00

It is complained that Freethought papers are too high priced to be popular. Certainly this objection is removed when the terms are placed at $1.25 per year.

We offer two subscriptions for $3. In order to adjust this price with those who have already subscribed, any one who has heretofore sent to this office $2 for one subscription may secure another subscription by the payment of an additional dollar; two more for $2, or three more for $3. These terms are offered for the sake of introducing FREETHOUGHT and gaining a circulation for it among those who would feel unable to pay the full price. Of course such as have the good of the cause at heart and a well-filled purse at hand need not consider themselves bound by the above rates. This is a business offer merely, and is not intended to check the spontaneous flow of generosity.

Again, a good many readers of this paper are business men. These should patronize its advertising columns. There are real estate men, hotel men, railroad men, steamboat men—men in every business. The weight of FREETHOUGHT's circulation at present is in what here are called the Eastern states, and it is the people of the East, in great measure, that Western advertisers desire to reach. FREETHOUGHT will be found a good medium for that purpose, as we are in frequent receipt of inquiries concerning business prospects, etc., in this country, and we know of no one to whom such inquiries may be referred. The advertising columns of the paper are for sale at reasonable rates. Free-thinkers in business should buy them and be patronized by Freethinkers.

Such is our plan for making a Freethought paper successful, i. e., to enlist the active co-operation of each old subscriber to procure a new one, and the co-operation of new ones to procure still others; this to be supplemented by the advertising patronage of business Liberals.

Of course the foundation for a journalistic success must be a good journal. We hope, we trust—indeed, we mildly claim—that such a journal is FREETHOUGHT. As we look over the thirteen numbers issued and contemplate the fourteenth, we pronounce it good. It does not repent us that we have made it. Contributors always appear at their best when they write for FREETHOUGHT, and selected articles take on a new life and a fresh brilliancy when transferred to its columns. We have yet to hear the first complaint from a subscriber that FREETHOUGHT is not all that could be desired. Many encomiums it has received are so flattering that we do not feel justified in printing them. We may be excused, perhaps, for introducing one here from a resident of New York:

"I like FREETHOUGHT very much. It is vigorous, enterprising, original, and pithy. I have been sending my copies to —, who thinks it immense, and has promised to subscribe, and to get others to do likewise. You have made a great success of the paper in a literary way. In fact, you have justified all the predictions of your friends as to your ability, and I am glad to believe that you are meeting with pecuniary recompense, which you richly deserve."

Encouraged thus by old friends, we in turn extend greeting to new ones, relying not upon our merits altogether, but much upon their generosity and the merits of this cause. The people of the great Western country take a justifiable pride in their home. It is not right that it should be given over to superstition. Let the Freethought banner here planted still wave in the free air, supported by the tried soldiers who have thus far upheld it and by others who may be called to its standard. Individually and collectively may we make a great and sustained effort in behalf of the cause which promises to the human race the only redemption worth having.

MR. STEVENS'S PAMPHLET.

We have started in the publishing line by issuing a pamphlet entitled "GOD IN THE STATE," by E. A. Steven, secretary of the American Secular Union.

This is a work which bears directly, and with force, upon the subject of ecclesiastical interference in political matters. It states the case as it is and points out the instances in which we have a union of church and state. It contains the Nine Demands of Liberalism and a clear and vigorous statement of their application, and of the objects of the American Secular Union. It is the only work of the kind accessible to Liberals. We have issued it in substantial and attractive form to sell at 10 cents per copy, three copies for 25 cents, or 12 for $1.00. It is genuine Secular Union literature.

An advertisement of the Independent Pulpit appears in another column. The Pulpit is a 24-page monthly magazine—pages about the size of those of FREETHOUGHT—with cover. It is ably edited by J. D. Shaw, and has many good writers among its contributors. By an arrangement with Mr. Shaw we will take subscriptions for the Pulpit in connection with this paper, sending the two—FREETHOUGHT and the Independent Pulpit—for $2.80. Separately the price of the Pulpit is $1.50, and it is well worth that sum. We hope many will take advantage of this offer.

THE revived Pittsburgh Truth—at whose reappearance we rejoice—says:

"We are informed that President Putnam would like to have the next Congress of the American Secular Union held in San Francisco, Cal. Many Liberals think Pittsburgh is entitled to the next Congress."

This is quite correct. Mr. Putnam would be pleased to have the Congress held here, but he is ready to admit the claim of the many who think Pittsburgh deserves it. The Congress will be held at Pittsburgh in October.

"GIVE us this day our daily bread;
Forgive our debts," the preacher said.
"For who, believing, so doth pray
His prayer is answered every day.
Salvation's free—the glorious news!—
The sexton wishes me to add
Our door receipts to-day are bad;
Likewise for rental of the pews
Many are owing six months' dues.
Disburse from your God-granted hoard
Enough to pay your pastor's board.
In sacred history we've read
Elijah was by ravens fed.
Out of a godsent fish's head
Were paid in full of all demand
St. Peter's taxes up to date.
Now let the congregation stand,
While Deacon Jones, with pious hand,
Shall pass you the collection plate."

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The fortieth anniversary of modern Spritualism was celebrated last Sunday in Metropolitan Hall, by the Golden Gate Religious and Philosophical Society, under the auspices of Mrs. E. L. Watson and J. J. Morse.—Railroad strikes are spreading. It is difficult to get at the cause or the merits of them.—Cashier Hopkins, of the Cincinnati Fidelity Bank, convicted of violating the National Banking law, has been sentenced to seven years' imprisonment in the penitentiary.—A terrific storm at Warren, Ark., demolished a Baptist church, besides doing damage to property in the surrounding country.—The International Council of Women is in session at Washington. Only meager reports of the proceedings reach these shores.—The San Francisco Public Building bill came before the house last Saturday, and was deferred.—Emperor Frederick, of Germany, still lives and suffers. He is said to bear his affliction with fortitude, though aware that his disease must have an early fatal effect.—Thousands of people have been rendered homeless and destitute by storms sent upon central Europe by an indulgent overruling

Providence.—A New York medium claims to have an order from Senator Stanford to produce for $5,000 a spirit picture of the senator's dead son.—The ex-sexton of Trinity Methodist Episcopal church, New York, has had to bring suit for his salary.—The Rev. Dr. Dix, in his Lenten sermon, brings some very sensational charges against the morality of New York society. He does not divulge the sources of his information, the accuracy of which is denied.—They say that Thomas Nast, the former cartoonist of Harper's Weekly, will build a theater at Los Angeles.—The estate of Chief Justice Waite, recently deceased, nets but a few thousand dollars. When living he was supposed to be rich.—New York's aldermen, it is reported, have voted to take the flag-raising power out of the hands of the mayor, where it now resides, and vest it in themselves. As the resolution must be signed by the mayor himself in order to become effective, it will probably be lost.—Boston kindergartens get $20,000 per annum of public money for their support.—During the recent Eastern weather, the San Francisco papers reached Chicago ahead of New York papers of the same date.—Miss Francis Willard made a speech for Neal Dow, candidate for mayor of Portland, Me., in which she averred that his defeat would "send dismay throughout the world." News of Mr. Dow's defeat the next day has not been followed by anything like the result mentioned.—The printers of New York will join with the Horace Greeley post of the Grand Army in erecting a monument to Horace Greeley. Mr. Greeley was the first president of Typographical Union No. 6.—Oregon Prohibitionists, at their convention in Portland last week, adopted a platform declaring against the manufacture, use, and sale of all intoxicants; advocating the disfranchisement of paupers, illiterates, and criminals; and, after touching "trusts," interstate commerce, and internal revenue, demanding the exclusion, so far as possible, of all Socialists, Anarchists, and other undesirable citizens.—Friday, March 29, was a busy day in the United States Senate. Sixty-one bills were passed without trouble. That will come later.—The National Educational Association gave its president, Prof. Aaron A. Grove, a cordial reception at its headquarters last week.—The regents of the State University held a meeting on the 28th ult. to make the final preparations for receiving the Lick trust.—About a score of married Los Angeles newspaper men have perfected a scheme to form a colony and settle together near that city within easy reach of their labors. Each family has a half-acre lot. Thomas Nast is among the colonists.—President Cleveland and Secretary Whitney went to New York to attend the funeral of ex-Governor Dorsheimer. Newspaper obituaries state that the deceased was "universally esteemed." They were careful to conceal this estimate of Mr. Dorsheimer's character previous to his demise.—The state Democratic Convention will be held at Los Angeles.—Oskaloosa, Kan., has elected a woman mayor.—Trinity church, New York, is on trial for violating the law against the importation of contract labor. The Rev. E. Walpole Warren is the cause of the trouble, having been imported from England under a contract to perform the Episcopal service.

LITERARY NOTES.

MISS VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE'S poem entitled "Nameless," published in FREETHOUGHT of Feb. 25, has been issued in leaflet form. Copies can be furnished at 10 cents a dozen. Hundreds have already been sold.

JOHN PECK, a favorite writer with all Liberals, has lately appeared as an author. Two pamphlets from his pen are, "Miracles and Miracle Workers" and "Christian Absurdities." The former sells for 10 cents and the latter for 20.

O. S. BARRETT, a veteran of the war, both for the Union and for intellectual emancipation, has written a book entitled "History, Services, and Reminiscences of the Old 4th Michigan Infantry in the War of the Rebellion." Mr. Barrett was lieutenant. At Gettysburg he received a gunshot wound, and has been partially paralyzed and unable to work for a number of years. The book sells, according to prospectus, for 25 cents per copy. Address O. S. Barrett, Adrian, Mich.

SOME BUSINESS VIEWS.

No doubt we owe Mr. H. P. Stone an apology for publishing the appended strictly private letter, but he is so accustomed to giving that we believe he will prove forgiving also. His appreciation of the value of Freethought is unlimited, and in a quiet but effective way he is serving it. A good many people on this coast and elsewhere who have received specimen copies of this paper are indebted to him for them. If a hundred more men like Mr. Stone would come forward and do as he has done, there would be a great awakening light in the West.—Ed.

OAKLAND, April 2, 1888.

FRIEND MACDONALD: Yours of the 31st ult. received this afternoon. Thanks for kind words. If I can be useful in any way, don't think I want any pay for it. Simply to know that my poor efforts are appreciated is abundant compensation. Even that is not necessary, for like our good Christian friends I want to do what little good I can in the ranks, and look not for reward in this world; and, unlike them, I do not expect or wish for any personal reward in the next. I have simply got it into my head that I should like to see as great a paper as the Truth Seeker built up on this coast, that shall be a big thorn in the orthodox side, and the foundation of a publishing house that shall issue millions of tracts and scatter Freethought literature broadcast over the country.

The interest I have seems to me to be purely selfish. I have neither the brains nor the money to do much towards it myself, and don't know that I should try it if I had; but since I have had a little more leisure lately I have been reading more and have become so much interested as to be glad to see you and Mr. Putnam at work, and feel like helping a little.

I believe you are able to accomplish the task you set out to do if you can only get the matter before the Liberals of this Coast. They have the wealth and the disposition to help, if you can only reach them and find out who they are. You have not their names, and as there is no organization among them, there is no one to give them to you. They do not even know one another, though they live neighbors for years. I have met three within a few days whom I have known and done business with for from two to four years, and never knew until now that their views corresponded with my own. I feel more fraternal toward them already for knowing it. I always believed them to be men I could respect and trust, and now I know it.

If there were organized Freethought societies all over the Pacific states and territories, you could very quickly get lists of names and a good list of subscribers. As it is, this will come through Mr. Putnam's missionary journeyings.

Liberals need waking up. They are having too easy a time. A little persecution judiciously administered would quickly stir them up and make them show their colors. I know plenty of them who are as well able to give a hundred dollars to the work as a hundred cents, and they will do it, too, as soon as they see you are going to make a success of it. "Nothing succeeds like success," you know, and when Mr. Putnam meets with such men he must not be too modest in his demands. He should say to them: Now, you go right on making money, but don't forget that you owe a duty to society; and as I am devoting myself entirely to the interests of society, it is your privilege to help me, and I assess you $1,000 or $100, according to your means; and I agree to distribute Freethought literature to the retail value of this amount, or send the paper free to a sufficient number of those who will not subscribe and pay for it to use up your donation. There are plenty of men who will pay attention to that kind of talk who would not listen at all if you asked them to pay you $2, the price of a year's subscription. I know. It sounds like business, and when they see you really mean business, they will talk with you.

Please excuse me. I simply sat down to thank you for your very complimentary letter, not to tell you how to conduct your business. The interest you seem to appreciate so highly will be my apology.

Truly, H. P. Stone.

he has been attended by his wife, who survives him at the age of nearly eighty-six years.

Our community will not soon forget the genial, warm-hearted, white-bearded old gentleman who seldom, for a day even, was not seen on our streets. He passed away without a fear for the future, or regret for the past. Nor was a more restful, peaceful countenance ever placed in a casket.

Mr. Field died on Monday and was buried at 2:30 o'clock, Wednesday, the funeral services being largely attended.

THE STRUGGLE FOR EXISTENCE.

Under this head Prof. T. H. Huxley has a contribution in the Nineteenth Century magazine. The article, of which the following is a part, is reprinted entire in the Popular Science Monthly for April. Professor Huxley says:

Even the modified optimism of the time-honored thesis of physico-theology, that the sentient world is, on the whole, regulated by principles of benevolence, does but ill stand the test of impartial confrontation with the facts of the case. No doubt it is quite true that sentient Nature affords hosts of examples of subtle contrivances directed toward the production of pleasure or the avoidance of pain; and it may be proper to say that these are evidences of benevolence. But if so, why is it not equally proper to say of the equally numerous arrangements, the no less necessary result of which is the production of pain, that they are evidences of malevolence?

If a vast amount of that which, in a piece of human workmanship, we should call skill, is visible in those parts of the organization of a deer to which it owes its ability to escape from beasts of prey, there is at least equal skill displayed in that bodily mechanism of the wolf which enables him to track, and sooner or later to bring down, the deer. Viewed under the dry light of science, deer and wolf are alike admirable; and, if both were non-sentient automata, there would be nothing to qualify our admiration of the action of the one on the other. But the fact that the deer suffers while the wolf inflicts suffering engages our moral sympathies. We should call men like the deer innocent and good, men such as the wolf malignant and bad; we should call those who defended the deer and aided him to escape brave and compassionate, and those who helped the wolf in his bloody work base and cruel. Surely, if we transfer these judgments to Nature outside the world of man at all, we must do so impartially. In that case, the goodness of the right hand which helps the deer, and the wickedness of the left hand which eggs on the wolf, will neutralize one another; and the course of Nature will appear to be neither moral nor immoral, but non-moral.

This conclusion is thrust upon us by analogous facts in every part of the sentient world; yet, inasmuch as it not only jars upon prevalent prejudices, but arouses the natural dislike to that which is painful, much ingenuity has been exercised in devising an escape from it.

From the theological side, we are told that this is a state of probation, and that the seeming injustices and immoralities of Nature will be compensated by and by. But how this compensation is to be effected, in the case of the great majority of sentient things, is not clear. I apprehend that no one is seriously prepared to maintain that the ghosts of all the myriads of generations of herbivorous animals which lived during the millions of years of the earth's duration before the appearance of man, and which have all that time been tormented and devoured by carnivores, are to be compensated by a perennial existence in clover; while the ghosts of carnivores are to go to some kennel where there is neither a pan of water nor a bone with any meat on it. Besides, from the point of view of morality, the last state of things would be worse than the first. For the carnivores, however brutal and sanguinary, have only done that which, if there is any evidence of contrivance in the world, they were expressly constructed to do. Moreover, carnivores and herbivores alike have been subject to all the miseries incidental to old age, disease, and over-multiplication, and both might well put in a claim for "compensation" on this score.

On the evolutionist side, on the other hand, we are told to take comfort from the reflection that the terrible struggle for existence tends to final good, and that the suffering of the ancestor is paid for by the increased perfection of the progeny. There would be something in this argument if, in Chinese fashion, the present generation could pay its debts to its ancestors; otherwise it is not clear what compensation the Eolippus gets for his sorrows in the fact that, some millions of years afterward, one of his descendants wins the Derby. And, again, it is an error to imagine that evolution signifies a constant tendency to increased perfection. That process undoubtedly involves a constant readjustment of the organism in adaptation to new conditions; but it depends on the nature of those conditions whether the direction of the modifications effected shall be upward or downward. Retrogressive is as practicable as progressive metamorphosis. If what the physical philosophers tell us, that our globe has been in a state of fusion, and, like the sun, is gradually cooling down, is true, then the time must come when evolution will mean an adaptation to a universal winter, and all forms of life will die out, except such low and simple organisms as the diatom of the arctic and antarctic ice and the protococcus of the red snow. If our globe is proceeding from a condition in which it was too hot to support any but the lowest living thing to a condition in which it will be too cold to permit of the existence of any others, the course of life upon its surface must describe a trajectory like that of a ball fired from a mortar; and the sinking half of that course is as much a part of the general process of evolution as the rising.

From the point of view of the moralist the animal world is on about the same level as a gladiator's show. The creatures are fairly well treated, and set to fight—whereby the strongest, the swiftest, and the cunningest live to fight another day. The spectator has no need to turn his thumbs down, as no quarter is given. He must admit that the skill and training displayed are wonderful; but he must shut his eyes if he would not see that more or less enduring suffering is the meed of both vanquished and victor. And since the great game is going on in every corner of the world, thousands of times a minute; since, were our ears sharp enough, we need not descend to the gates of hell to hear—

"Sighs, complaints, and loud cries, Voices loud, and weak, and with them sounds of blows"— it seems to follow that, if this world is governed by benevolence, it must be a different sort of benevolence from that of John Howard.

But the old Babylonians wisely symbolized Nature by their great goddess Istar, who combined the attributes of Aphrodite with those of Ares. Her terrible aspect is not to be ignored or covered up with shams; but it is not the only one. If the optimism of Leibnitz is a foolish though pleasant dream, the pessimism of Schopenhauer is a nightmare, the more foolish because of its hideousness. Error which is not pleasant is surely the worst form of wrong.

This may not be the best of all possible worlds, but to say that it is the worst is mere petulant nonsense. A worn-out voluptuary may find nothing good under the sun, or a vain and inexperienced youth, who can not get the moon he cries for, may vent his irritation in pessimistic moanings; but there can be no doubt in the mind of any reasonable person that mankind could, would, and in fact do, get on fairly well with vastly less happiness and far more misery than find their way into the lives of nine people out of ten. If each and all of us had been visited by an attack of neuralgia, or of extreme mental depression, for one hour in every twenty-four—a supposition which many tolerably vigorous people know, to their cost, is not extravagant—the burden of life would have been immensely increased without much practical hindrance to its general course. Men with any manhood in them find life quite worth living under worse conditions than these.

There is another sufficiently obvious fact which renders the hypothesis that the course of sentient Nature is dictated by malevolence quite untenable. A vast multitude of pleasures, and these among the purest and best, are superfluities, bits of good which are to all appearance unnecessary as inducements to live, and are, so to speak, thrown into the bargain of life. To those who experience them, few delights can be more entrancing than such as are afforded by natural beauty or by the arts, and especially by music; but they are products of, rather than factors in, evolution, and it is probable that they are known, in any considerable degree, to but a very small proportion of mankind.

The conclusion of the whole matter seems to be that, if Ormuzd has not had his way in this world, neither has Ahriman. Pessimism is as little consonant with the facts of sentient existence as optimism. If we desire to represent the course of Nature in terms of human thought, and assume that it was intended to be that which it is, we must say that its governing principle is intellectual and not moral; that it is a materialized logical process accompanied by pleasures and pains, the incidence of which, in the majority of cases, has not the slightest reference to moral desert. That the rain falls alike upon the just and the unjust, and that those upon whom the Tower of Siloam fell were no worse than their neighbors, seem to be oriental modes of expressing the same conclusion.

"Two Sinners."

There was a man, it was said one time,
Who went astray in his youthful prime.
Can the brain keep cool and the heart keep quiet
When the blood is a river that is running riot?
And boys will be boys, the old folks say,
And a man's the better who's had his day.

The sinner reformed, and the preacher told
Of the prodigal son who came back to the fold,
And Christian people threw open the door
With a warmer welcome than ever before.
Wealth and honor were his to command,
And a spotless woman gave him her hand,
And the world strewed their pathway with flowers a-bloom,
Crying, "God bless lady and God bless groom!"

There was a maiden went astray
In the golden dawn of her life's young day;
She had more passion and heart than head,
And she followed blindly where fond love led.
And love unchecked is a dangerous guide,
To wander at will by a fair girl's side.

The woman repented and turned from sin,
But no door opened to let her in;
The preacher prayed that she might be forgiven,
And told her to look for mercy in heaven.
For this is the law of earth we know,
That the woman is scorned, while the man may go.
A brave man wedded her, after all;
But the world said frowning, "We shall not call!"

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

HAPPINESS.

To the Children.

Did you ever think of the full meaning of the word happiness? It is a word we all love. It is what we are forever seeking after. It is the whole aim of all our actions. We do all we do to be happy. Even in doing good to others we seek our own happiness, because it pleases us to feel that we are helping another. We could not enjoy a good dinner if some starving fellow-being stood looking at us and longing for each mouthful we ate. So in self-defense we should have to allay his hunger that we might be relieved of the sight of his misery.

Happiness is derived from hap—meaning luck or good fortune that comes unexpectedly. Pope says, "O happiness, our being's end and aim!" and Wirt says "he found himself happiest in communicating happiness to others." I think the truly good always enjoy giving more than receiving. Not merely giving what we can as well spare as not, but giving of our prized treasures, and of our labor, love, and real self; trying to make sunshine in all hearts and lifting burdens from others.

The child who helps mother and does chores for father, who is careful not to hurt the feelings of those who love them, and indeed of all around them, will experience real happiness and make glad the hearts in the home circle. It is the little everyday words, deeds, and smiles that sow the great amount of all happiness. To be happy just now is wisest and best. If you are washing dishes or studying a hard lesson, you should do it with sunshine in the heart. Not say, "I'll be happy when it is done," for you must take the joys of each moment if you want happy lives; not keep saying, "I'll be happy after so and so." Only now is really ours. Affectionately, AUNT ELMINA.

FREETHOUGHT AN OUTLAW IN CANADA.

The Ontario government (Canada) has again refused, upon the application of sixty-one law-abiding and intelligent citizens, to grant letters patent to the stock company that proposed to continue the publication of Secular Thought and found a great printing house in connection therewith. The refusal of the government has been met with a spirit of defiance on the part of the Agnostics, who will carry on the business through a board of trustees, and run the risk of a conflict with the authorities.

They say that Secular Thought has been published for the last fifteen months and will continue to be published notwithstanding its principles are opposed to Christianity, and it is alleged that "Christianity is the law of the land." Our readers will remember that the reason why the Ontario government did not grant letters patent in this case is because the intending incorporators are engaged in a work which tends to undermine the Christian religion, which in Canada has been decreed as the law of the land. There cannot be much intellectual freedom in a land that surrounds human thought with a single sectarian bulwark. We don't see the justice of putting a padlock upon a man's mind simply because he has the courage to think for himself. Has not a Jew, an Agnostic, an Atheist, as much right to his honest opinion as a Christian?—Jewish Times.

Faith in Prayer.

I will close this letter with a little incident, the story of which may not be so startling, but it is true. It is a story of child faith. Johnny Quinlan, of Evanston, has the most wonderful confidence in the efficacy of prayer, but he thinks that prayer does not succeed unless it is accompanied with considerable physical strength. He believes that adult prayer is a good thing, but doubts the efficacy of juvenile prayer.

He has wanted a Jersey cow for a good while, and tried prayer, but it didn't seem to get to the central office. Last week he went to a neighbor who is a Christian and believer in the efficacy of prayer, also the owner of a Jersey cow.

"Do you believe that prayer will bring me a yaller Jersey cow?" said Johnny.

"Why, yes, of course. Prayer will remove mountains. It will do anything."

"Well, then, suppose you give me the cow you've got and pray for another one."—Bill Nye in the New York World.

Uncalled for Self-reproach.

From the Truth Seeker.

Oh, call my brother back to me!
I cannot play alone;
The summer comes with flower and bee—
Where is my brother gone?
And by the brook and in the glade,
Are all our wanderings o'er?
Oh, while my brother with me played,
Would I had loved him more!

J. D. SHAW's notice of FREETHOUGHT in the Independent Pulpit has just reached us, and is none the less appreciated because deferred:

"Mr. S. P. Putnam, president of the American Secular Union, and Mr. George E. Macdonald, formerly associated with the New York Truth Seeker, have started the publication, in San Francisco, Cal., of a new Liberal paper to be called FREETHOUGHT. Two good men, a good cause, a good field, and a good name, all together, ought to insure a good paper, and judging from the two copies we have seen, this is to be expected. We welcome this new enterprise, and wish it every success in battling for universal mental freedom. FREETHOUGHT is a weekly of twelve pages, neatly printed, and is worth $2.00 a year."

If present tendencies in religious matters should continue and no general revival of religious feeling occur, the effect will be felt by all faiths alike, and the future of religions will be a question not for Judaism alone but for Christianity and the civilized world as well.—Jewish Progress.

NO BACK STEPS.

The old Latin maxim, "Nulla vestigia retrorsum" (no backward steps), is a good one. Progress and not retrogression is the order of the day. Crabs, it is said, go backward, but men go forward. A Hebrew book reads backward and the Jews, as a people, have adhered slavishly to the precepts of their ancient lawgiver, Moses. There are exceptions, however, to all general rules, and there are progressive and liberal Jews, a leader among whom we have accounted to be Rev. Dr. Wise, editor of the American Israelite. And not without reason. In his paper and in his published lectures he has constantly shown a decided leaning to rationalistic thought, and a determined disposition to be governed by common sense rather than ancient authorities. This makes it the more surprising to find the leading editorial in his paper of February 24 advocating the idea that the Mosaic laws are the ultima thule of human attainment, and that states and communities which adhere most closely to the Old Testament code are wisest and best. The writer—it is hard to believe that it is Dr. Wise and not some tyro left in charge during the editor's absence—has the hardihood to declare that this is generally recognized to be true by our legislators and that the laws of Moses are rapidly becoming the laws of our land.

This is far from being true. The Mosaic law was theocratic. Our legislation is democratic. The two great laws of the Mosaic dispensation were the law of the Sabbath and that of circumcision. Our laws never have recognized or favored the bloody rite, and the Sabbatical law is, by the statement of both Jewish and Christian papers, more and more disregarded. Instead of the general adoption of the Jewish dietary rules regarding pork, etc., the Jews, especially in our cities, are many of them disregarding these rules as well as the Sabbath commands, if the statement of their leading rabbis is reliable.

Allowing that in many respects the Mosaic legislation was, for that time, a decided advance, yet during the last four thousand years a great further advance has been made, and to return to the Mosaic code now would be a backward movement indeed. Moses was a wise lawgiver, but he made some great mistakes, as Colonel Ingersoll has demonstrated; and, as James Russell Lowell says in his "Bigelow Papers," "They didn't know everything down in Judea."

GOOD THINGS TO READ.

I am a real cormorant to devour all that lies around loose in the way of mental liberty. Lately I got me "Voltaire's Pocket Theology," which is really a dictionary, giving definitions of various words known and used in church circles. I want your readers, a kind, thinking, and gentle set, I know, to read a few of these definitions given by that caustic old heretic, who could see through the gauzy pretenses of a corrupt priesthood and into the utter uselessness of "revealed religion." I append a few, feeling sorry that your space will not permit us to give many:

"ABSURDITIES.—There can be none such in religion, which is the work of the word, or the divine reason, which as we all know has nothing in common with human reason. It is only through want of faith that incredulous persons fancy they can perceive absurdities in Christianity, whence it results that a want of faith is the height of absurdity. The absurdities of the Christian belief disappear when its doctrines have been inculcated from earliest childhood and adhered to without doubt or question. The more absurd a thing may appear to the eyes of human reason, the more fit and proper does it appear to the eyes of divine reason, or, in other words, of religion."

"ALMS.—A distribution of one's own possessions, or somebody else's, to the end of perpetuating the pious leisure of priests, monks, and other lazy folks who find it much more agreeable and convenient to pray than to work."

What slugs of truth! I think that the world sees the truth of these burning words more than it did when they were written. Let us go for another:

"ASSES.—Long-eared animals, patient and humble, and the true models to be imitated by all good Christians, who, like them, must allow themselves to be saddled with their burdens and carry their cross. Jesus was mounted on an ass, which did not belong to him, when he entered into Jerusalem, by which action he intended to proclaim, to all whom it might concern, that the priests should thenceforward enjoy the right of riding on the backs of Christians to the end of all time."

"AUTO-DA-FE.—An act of faith, a dainty feast offered to the divinity from time to time, and which consisted of roasting, in great pomp, the bodies of Jews or heretics for the salvation of their souls and the edification of the lookers on. From this we may infer that the Father of Mercies has ever shown a marked taste for roasts and broils."

"BRAINS.—A good Christian should have no brains, or at least the less he has of them the better. With the help of preceptors, confessors, and convents, Christian parents can have the brains of their offspring reduced to the least volume."

If these should prove good reading, and any person should desire more, there are many better ones left.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM speaks at Santa Barbara, Cal., April 8; in San Luis Obispo county from April 9 to 15; Boulder Creek, 17 to 19.

C. B. REYNOLDS's lecture appointments are as follows:

National City, Cal.	April	.....9, 11, 12.
Los Angeles,	"	.....14, 15.
Santa Ana,	"	.....17, 18, 19.

California friends desiring lectures will please address Mr. Reynolds so letters will be at the above places ahead of dates.

THE People Co-operative Publishing Company will have its first annual festival for the benefit of The People, the local Labor paper, on Sunday, April 22, at the Seaside Gardens, Presidio. Prizes, including a house worth $2000, are offered to the holders of the lucky numbers. Tickets admitting gentleman and ladies are $1.00 each, and may be found at this office.

S. P. Putnam's Lecture at San Diego.

Good Templar's Hall was crowded and packed to overflowing yesterday afternoon to listen to the glowing eloquence of the above-named gentleman. In his subject, "Dangers Ahead," he set forth in lucid terms the dangers to be apprehended from a union of church and state as advocated by the God-in-the-Constitution party. His definitions of religion and state were correct, his facts truthful, his arguments logical, and his eloquence greeted with frequent applause. An original poem at the close of this address, "Why Don't He Lend a Hand?" was well delivered and well received by the audience. The subject in the evening, "The Bible," was perhaps more difficult to handle, but Mr. Putnam was equal to the occasion. It was a grand dissertation of reason, logic, and common sense. Case's orchestra, assisted by Mrs. Mantel, produced some exquisite music, adding greatly to the interest of the two meetings.—San Diego Daily Bee.

THE San Jacinto Register says: "S. P. Putnam, the Free-thought lecturer, has been delighting the minds of the Freethinkers for the past week."

LAST Sunday evening was the occasion of a pleasant gathering of the friends of Mr. C. C. Busse to celebrate his forty-second birthday. All the rooms were brilliantly lighted and ornamented. The fine selections by the Oakland Zither Club and the excellent vocal solos of Miss C. M. Schaefer deserve special mention. After the melodies came a magnificent supper among the roses, and the evening closed with a social dance. The guests departed wishing their host many happy returns of the day. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Busse, Mr. Fred H. Maar, Miss Laura Haelke, Miss Clara Haelke, Miss C. M. Schaefer, Mr. P. F. Frear, Mr. F. B. Morrow, Mr. M. Vanderslice, Mr. E. Harms, Mr. R. Harms, Mr. W. B. Ainsworth, Mr. D. V. Gelder, Mr. and Mrs. H. Peterson, Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Haelke, Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Schou, Mr. and Mrs. G. Brennan, Mr. and Mrs. D. Gruettner, Mrs. Baab, Miss Mercedes Baab, Mrs. K. Schaefer, Mr. R. O. Schaefer, Mr. Charles Schaefer, Mr. Andrew Brennan, Mr. Will Busse, Miss Flora Busse, Mr. O. Busse, Mr. John Baab, Miss Carrie and Bertha Samuels, and others.

Inclosed please find check for $5.00 I have received a copy, No. 7, of FREETHOUGHT, and am so well pleased with your new movement that I send you this little help. Should you want more, write me.

The article of E. A. Stevens is to the point. All history tells the same story, but if a man has peanuts to sell he is obliged to be continually crying out to attract attention. Nothing like keeping these facts before those who read.

I am an old man 75 years old, lived in New York and at one time was connected with Liberals, who established an order of Independent Liberals and had several hundred dollars in funds. Mr. Vale, of the Beacon, was one of the order and through his vagary of the Paine Farm arrangement threw our society into chaos.

Yours truly, P. H. FOSTER.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed in this please find $2 for one year's subscription to FREETHOUGHT. I do not think I would be doing my duty if I did not support the only Liberal paper on the Pacific coast, for I too well remember when I was here single-handed and alone. That was thirty-nine years ago, when there were no churches nor school-houses; only Methodist and Catholic Missions and missionaries. They used to roam around the country and preach, and I used to get them into an argument or discussion. I used to handle them without gloves, and the listeners got horrified and declared that they would not let me sleep overnight in their houses, nor would they risk to stop overnight in my house, for fear that old splitfoot would surely pay us a visit. But they have got bravely over it, for it broke up Methodism in this part of the country, and I did succeed in converting the most of them to rationalism and common sense, and a good many of them are living here to-day and are thankful for having had the wool lifted from their eyes. That is some consolation to me, and I am satisfied that I have done some good for the future.

That every Liberal will lend a helping hand to make your paper a success, is the wish of one truly in the cause of progress and development.

Stella, Wash. F. C. SCHARNHARST.

Our Objects Outlined.

To the Editors of Freethought:

You have my thanks for copies of FREETHOUGHT. It is a prophecy; a bow of promise and hope in the western horizon; a headlight in the march of human progress; an oasis in the great desert of superstition and ignorance. May its enlightening banner wave till it is welcomed by every land and clime; to teach the nobility of man, and that human reason is before and above all books, all revelations, and by which standard all must be tested; that our revered patron saints were human, subject to error like ourselves; that Infidels alone have advanced the world; that human love is the only divine love; that Christian religion crucified the saints; that its teachers have ever been the incubus to all progress; that peace on earth is better than war in heaven; that love to man is better than love to God; that God ever was and is the unknown and unknowable; that Science retires the gods from human view; that conversion from Christianity to Infidelity is a change from hatred to love, from fear to hope; that all miracles are lost arts, the bait for fools; that Ananias and Saphira were "bounced" for being generous, for telling the truth; that Jesus was an Infidel, and that Infidels (judged by their works) were the best Christians; that the grass-grown path to the Christian heaven need never be paved; that veneration for the old prophets does not justify stoning the present ones; that the lion and lamb—power and innocence—can live together without rapacity or fear; that your mission is to give the world a passion for the truth, to inspire with a holy human love, to make it sure that ere a man can be a saint he first must be a man. I admire the saints and prophets of our day, who do not feel obliged to sneak behind the inspired words of old saints; who have words of their own just as truly inspired, dropping from the golden mouths of saints and prophets now; souls aflame with noble fires, not smothered in the ashes of fires long ago spent.

May the fruits of your labors be bounded only by your capacity to enjoy. So hopes your abiding friend,

ELIJAH MYRICK.

P. S.—Herewith is the needful for one year's welcome visitor, FREETHOUGHT. E. M. Ayer, Mass., March 21, 1888.

A Plan for Spreading the Light.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The Liberal papers do not reach the masses of people that need them most, because they are higher priced than other newspapers; and they are higher because they have a smaller circulation. Now for the remedy. First hold a council of printers as to a plan—as Abbot would put it, a consensus of the competent. Learn if a given number of patrons, say fifty thousand to commence with, will be sufficient to get out a cheap paper, something like the Industrial News, of Toledo, Ohio. That is doing much good in the co-operative work for laborers.

I suggest to the consensus this plan: Start a subscription sheet in each state, to be given to one or several known Liberals who will canvass a certain district. Say, divide the state of Kansas into four quarters, with a Liberal in each, who will receive a printed statement of the general plan of organization; then another sheet for names, and another sheet of coupons about the size of a postage stamp or a little larger, one to be given to each subscriber paying five cents in advance; this will make three sheets that shall not weigh more than the postal ounce. Take one state at first, say California; divide as above; give one letter to, say, six of the centers of population. Let each one send it to the nearest Liberal with a stamp to prepay to the next, as the receiver may select. Each gets what subscribers he can, takes his coupon, remits to headquarters the money received, and gets other sheets of explanation and coupons, when the first are exhausted or lost. Let the sheet of explanations state that the paper will issue only on condition of the number being made up perhaps one year from the start. Let your own state lead, and if the plan is a success it will afford means to extend it to other states.

I may say that there are some difficulties in the plan, but they are not vital. They are composed mostly of negligence and dishonesty; but the sums of money in each friend's hands will be so small that it may never occur to any to steal it. Each person should send a stamp to pay for the next trip, because it might find those who would not spend two cents on it, or might consider it a petty fraud to get a snug sum by aggregated nickels; but the trial in the first state would be a fair index to the future and would cost so little that you could not lose much.

Let me add in conclusion that I am not the author of this, only in part. You are at least acquainted with the history of the famous Mrs. Slenker, who, not having stamps enough to answer all her correspondents, wrote to each one and requested them to send the same letter to others named, and thus made one stamp and one explanation do for many people. A gentleman in the East, when she was a prisoner and needed help, sent one of her own letters around the country in the same way. It reached me in due time, after going to Canada and many states; I sent it on over the Rockies, and it returned to the sender all right. I suggest that the FREETHOUGHT Liberals of the great West fan this spark to a flame.

ARGUMENT

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument MR. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - APRIL 14, 1888

THE Hon. W. E. Gladstone's assault on the religious views of Colonel Ingersoll does not appear in the April number of the North American Review. It is promised at an early date.

FRANKLIN had a grand-niece of very Liberal religious views. An orthodox kinswoman once asked her how she accounted for the fact that there were so many Presbyterians and so few Unitarians. She replied by quoting, "Broad is the road that leadeth to destruction, and many there be who go in thereat."

SOME well-informed believer should arise and answer the Argonaut's philippic against the intelligence and moral character of Spiritualists. One strong point to be made against Mr. Pixley is that he would be accredited with greater sincerity in his attacks upon error if the truth did not sometimes suffer at his hands.

A VISITOR at Colonel Ingersoll's New York home remarked upon the elegance of his surroundings. The colonel replied, "I wish I lived in the poorest house in New York." The guest asked what he meant by that. "I mean," said Ingersoll, "that I wish every man in New York had a better house than this."

EVERY issue of the Carrier Dove, the Spiritualist paper, bears upon its cover a picture of a band of presumed angels preceded by a dove bringing "tidings of great joy." The angels differ from the Sunday-school angel in having no wings, but we believe this is scriptural. Is there any Bible authority for putting wings on angels?

IN an autobiography of Henry Ward Beecher, uncomplimentary reference is made to Mrs. Victoria Woodhull, once a social reformer, now Lady Martin and Roman Catholic devotee. Mrs. Woodhull-Martin threatens the publisher with a suit for libel. The claim for damages will be based upon the ground that at the time of the alleged libel the plaintiff possessed such a thing as a character.

AN English lady writing American Notes in the Nineteenth Century magazine reports that religion and morality are almost unknown in San Francisco, and that murders and divorces are of daily occurrence. To say nothing about the truth or falsity of this assertion, the way the writer has the alleged crimes and alleged virtues arranged in couples does not show a broad and comprehensive view of the questions.

AT Salt Lake City last Saturday argument was made in the territorial Supreme Court to forfeit and escheat to the state some $12,000 worth of alleged Mormon church property. With hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of church property in Washington subject to the same laws as that in Utah, and a three million dollar Catholic university about to be built, it is strange that the government should vex itself over the insignificant possessions of a Mormon bishop.

THE Call, being in a pious frame of mind, discusses, in its Sunday issue, the custom of having churches decorated with flowers, claiming that the presence of these beautiful objects has a tendency to "promote gratitude to the providence to which we owe the pleasure it bestows." We doubt the correctness of the Call's conclusion. The mind of the average citizen turns invariably from the contemplation of flowers to a consideration of the glorious climate which produced them. Providence has no roses for the Eskimo.

INVESTIGATION made by the coroner into the cause of the death of the Rev. Mr. Sutherland, of New York, who was found dead in his bed, reveals the fact that he committed suicide. He was under a shadow at the time of his death, being accused of criminal conduct toward a girl who belonged to his church at Rockville Center. The Rev. Mr. Sutherland was called a "reformed" minstrel. If there are others of the theatrical profession who contemplate reforming and entering the ministry, his example may serve as a warning to them against doing so.

NEWS AND NOTES

After a visit with Comrade Clark at Los Angeles, which is always pleasant, for he has been in many a battle and from memory's page makes hope for the future, and while the huge clouds are rolling away and the sun struggles forth with faint glimmering banners upon the mighty hill-tops, we ride to Pasadena and Monrovia; church places indeed, where orthodoxy prevails with smooth and business front, where clergymen deal in real estate, and deacons smile like cherubs as the corner lots go up. No use for Liberal lectures here. The atmosphere is stifling. There is too much speculation in the air. The almighty dollar joins forces with the things that be, and no opportunity is offered for the storm and agitation of Freethought. It does not enhance the profits.

However, we cannot blind our eyes to the beauty of the scenery, and progress must be some day amid these beautiful pictures. The breathing spirit of nature will make the mind akin to these lofty heights and shining plains.

The Chess brothers are staunch, and always ready to make the best of every fortune. They drove me over to Baldwin's ranch, where the orange groves mingle with broad fields of living green, where the mountain streams bubble into placid lakes, where villas invite amid the brilliant foliage. Here one man owns sixty thousand acres. Fifteen hundred people at least should find homes on this immense tract, instead of one man with a few dependants.

We had a short and exhilarating vacation with the Chess brothers, T. Y. Rippey and friends, and then pressed on to other fields.

I am now at the Highlands, where the great foot-hills loom before me and over them towers San Bernardino peak, the giant sentinel of the valley, while to the southward rolls up the magnificent San Jacinto range. All around are the blooming ranks of trees and garniture of flowers. The beautiful apricot, nectarine, quince, peach, pear, and bridal wreath blossoms make the air redolent with white and crimson petals.

Here lives my friend Nathan Woolsey, with his daughter, Miss Josie Woolsey, and one could not find a happier place for the contented mind and independent worker. One can rest here amid bounteous delights. The wide valley is before him, with the city shining like a gem in the distance. The undulating tablelands spread away in glittering gardens, orchards, fields, and groves, dotted with hundreds of elegant dwellings. This whole valley will some day become a sort of widespread city, with acre lots, where every home will rejoice in rural felicity. San Bernardino is a railroad and manufacturing center. It has now ten thousand inhabitants and is rapidly increasing. Mr. Woolsey is one of nature's cheerful philosophers. He is a thorough Secularist, and believes with all his heart, not only in the good time coming, but in the good time now. The days pass cheerily by in this bright Freethought home.

I have lectured every night, and something has been done for progress. Friday evening I lectured in Warm Creek schoolhouse, and Saturday evening in Highlands schoolhouse. Not a great many were out, as the neighborhoods are orthodox, but the audiences were appreciative. Sunday afternoon and evening I lectured in the Opera House at San Bernardino. The number present was not large, and evidently there is plenty of work to be done in this locality for the advance of Liberalism. Mr. Reynolds was here and experienced the same difficulties. However, the battle has begun, and we do not purpose to give up. There is excellent material in this place, noble Liberals who are generous and devoted, who dare to be in the minority and work for to-morrow's glory.

Mr. Woolsey's home is a fruit farm five miles east of San Bernardino and near the Rabel Hot Springs. It commands a view of the surrounding country, with nine or ten villages and cities to be seen in a clear day, and the vast panorama extends even to the coast. Cultivated lands are now held in this valley at from $1,000 to $1,300 per acre. Uncultivated lands are held from $300 to $800 per acre. A motor road is being built to within a mile of the residence of Mr. Woolsey. It is astonishing indeed to note the rapid improvement of this country. The well-known Cheney Bros. of Connecticut have purchased a large tract, and have already laid it out for a town site, and this is an indication of future developments.

H. B. Westner, whose acquaintance I have made through friend Shaug, I find to be a stalwart Liberal and a cordial co-worker with my friend Woolsey, whose friendship and hospitality give fruit and flower to hardest labor, so that even in disappointment hope becomes more strenuous. In his genial home the world of Art mingles its benediction with the sunlight of reason.

H. J. Weil, of our German fraternity, is one of those splendid Liberals who will never desert the "forlorn hope," whose heart and hand are ready for any service. Side by side with such a comrade there is victory, for the march is ever forward. August Wyman, his partner, Captain Powell, and Mr. McDonald we are glad to place upon our list of Freethought friends.

On Monday evening I closed the series of lectures at Liberal Hall, where our Spiritualist friends for several years have kept an outpost for reform. Wm. Heap, Mrs. Thorndyke, Mrs. Wilson, and others are co-workers here. I gave a discourse on "The American Republic." The audience was not large, but the greeting was so warm that we shall come again to this fort where the colors are ever flying. All honor to our allies of "the summer-land," who fail not to rally at the cry of Liberty.

A. D. Clyde and daughter, Mrs. Holman, Mrs. Davis, Mrs. Haven, H. M. Wallace, M. Martin, Nathan Keller, A. C. Smith, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Lenherr, Master Heap, who is one of the brightest of our young soldiers, and others help to make San Bernardino a happy memory, and with the glory of its hills shines the luster of advancing humanity.

S. P. PUTNAM.

San Bernardino, April 3, 1888.

THE PROHIBITIONISTS.

The Prohibition party of the state of California held its seventh annual convention in San Francisco last week. It started off with a prayer, being opened by several clergymen. The first hour and a half was a praise service; the next two hours were spent in a wild and disorderly wrangle. Then harmony ensued, together with hymns and more prayer.

On the second day of the convention the delegates were enabled to adopt a platform. The document opens as follows:

"The Prohibition party of the state of California, in convention assembled, reverently recognize Almighty God as the supreme ruler, to whose laws all human laws should conform."

Delegate Robinson, of Sonoma, who opposed to this the suggestion that probably God would not feel especially flattered by knowing that the Prohibition party of California recognized and indorsed him, was hissed for his pains. The platform next passes to the consideration of the liquor question, demanding the "extinction of the manufacture, import, export, transport, and sale of intoxicating beverages," and lamenting that women are not permitted to vote. It likewise says that whereas,

"Sunday is an institution so interwoven into our laws, our customs, our civilization, and the very structure of our government, so intricately and beneficently connected with our social, business, and moral life, that we cannot dispense with it without sacrificing the very best interests of the country and the highest welfare of the whole people, we demand the enactment and enforcement of an intelligent and rational Sunday law."

This resolution brought Delegate Robinson, of Sonoma, again to his feet. He believed in keeping the religious question out of the platform, because there were in the party men as sincere, as worthy, and as temperate as any of those who called themselves religious, who did not believe in any Sunday law at all. Judge Boren, of San Bernardino, moved an amendment to add the words "provided, however, that this resolution does not apply to those who religiously observe the seventh day of the week as a day of rest, and for religious duties." Judge Boren's amendment, in favor of the Adventists, was wasted, as were also all efforts to modify the platform or to introduce other resolutions

"viewing with alarm" the growing power of various evils which should be suppressed.

The Prohibitionists have therefore put themselves on record as recognizing God instead of the people as the supreme ruler, thus practically joining hands with the God-in-the-Constitution party. "To whose laws all human laws should conform" is indefinite, because, outside of the Bible, there is no pretense that the law of God is recorded. If that part of the preamble means anything, it means that human law should be founded on the Bible, which is nonsense.

The Prohibition party has also declared itself in favor of an "intelligent and rational Sunday law." The framers of the resolution omitted to define a "rational" Sunday law for the very good reason that there can be no rational Sunday law. A law that applies any more to Sunday than to Monday is of itself irrational, no matter how "intelligent" it may be. A Sunday law which appeared rational to one man might regulate only the selling of liquor. A law that would stop the street cars, abolish the music in the park, and drive everybody to church would be wholly rational to another; while the only rational Sunday law in our opinion is the law that applies to the other days of the week.

If the Prohibitionists can get votes enough they will no doubt enact a prohibition law. If they can elect the right sort of officers they will enforce the law and suppress the sale of the prohibited wares. It does not give us much enthusiasm for the accomplishment of this end to know that as soon as it is reached these Prohibitionists will turn their attention to the suppression of religious liberty.

A LECTURE IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. S. P. Putnam will return to this city in May, and on the evening of the 27th, the last Sunday in the month, will deliver a lecture in Irving Hall. His subject will be "The American Republic." Tickets will be printed and can be procured at this office.

In conjunction with the lecture, Mr. Putnam will endeavor to secure the organization of the Liberals in this locality into a San Francisco and Oakland Secular Union. He desires the co-operation of all interested in that object.

AN EXEMPLARY CHRISTIAN.

We are in the habit of sending out occasionally, to people mentioned to us as Freethinkers and probable subscribers, sample copies of this paper, together with a personal letter and stamped envelope for reply, favorable or otherwise. It seems that sometimes our informants are mistaken as to the views of persons whom they recommend as potential patrons. We have received the following letter from Oakland:

PUBLISHERS FREETHOUGHT: The copy of FREETHOUGHT reached me, and for the courtesy extended I thank you. I do not, however, indorse in the least the sentiments you there express, nor do I believe the influence of your teaching can be productive of good. I believe there is "one name given under heaven and among men whereby we must be saved." That name is Jesus the son of God. I cannot in conscience help to circulate what seems to me to be detrimental to Christian education.

Respectfully, T. O. CRAWFORD.

This is certainly a courteous response, and secures our respect for the writer at once, although we are nowhere near agreeing with him in his estimate of Freethought, or the saving efficacy of the name of Jesus. We do not, however, publish his letter for the sake of refuting his position, but for the purpose of recommending his example to others. He believes the influence of Free-thought is bad. He cannot give it his support, and says so. Others, we know, who received a letter similar to that addressed to Mr. Crawford, are sure that the influence of Freethought is for good, and that they should give it their support. But do they take the trouble to say so? Not to our knowledge except in rare instances. Out of ten known disbelievers in the Christian superstition perhaps one on an average has replied. It would have been a very inexpensive matter for them to answer our respectful note, as the envelope was furnished and postage paid. We trust that each, at least, picked off the two-cent stamp and devoted it to some useful purpose.

MR. STONE'S WORD TO LIBERALS.

All the readers of FREETHOUGHT should attentively consider Mr. H. P. Stone's "Word to Liberals" published this week. Mr. Stone is a business man and all his propositions have a business ring about them. It is easy to see that his suggested method of establishing a Freethought paper here is perfectly practical. We could almost name the 99 men whom he calls upon to join him and make a hundred to send in ten names and $20 each.

There is no reason why a Freethought paper should not have as large a circulation as any other journal in the West. We propose to make FREETHOUGHT worth every cent that the reader is asked to pay for it, and when once introduced and made known to the people it will be self-supporting. Now, in its infancy, it needs the sort of boom Mr. Stone proposes. The publishers might be willing to work hard and do two or three days' labor in one, and to spend two or three dollars for every one that comes back, if necessary, to establish this paper, but they might not look forward cheerfully to the prospect of being a bleeding sacrifice for a protracted term of years, and then make a failure of it after all. It is just as well to decide the question at once, and by the method pointed out by Mr. Stone send the circulation up into the thousands.

And now, following Mr. Stone, comes Mr. Schou, of Oakland, with an offer that shows he likewise means business, and that there is an earnest intent here to make FREETHOUGHT a success. Both Mr. Stone and Mr. Schou are responsible men, and their taking hold of this matter is almost equal to success at the start. The proverbial enterprise of the people of the coast will not see them stand alone.

RELIGION IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Our clergy have been stirring themselves to find out how their business stands in this city, and they give these figures:

Total population.....	300,000
Seating capacity of churches.....	45,000
Occasional church-goers .....	55,000
Steady church-goers.....	30,000
Wholly indifferent.....	245,000

Of these wholly indifferent, it is fair to presume that the odd 45,000 are down in the gutter below the Salvation Army. But the other 200,000 have risen up into the realm of common sense and do not need clerical advice. The figures are quite encouraging.

CHEERING news is received of the work of the Fresno Secular Union. Judge J. W. North and J. F. Waterhouse have been giving lectures to full houses. There has been quite a newspaper controversy, and Freethought has had a chance to reach large numbers of thinking people. With such forces as the Fresno Secular Union there will be no backward step. The friends there are to be congratulated for the splendid services they are rendering to reform.

FREDERICK MAY HOLLAND, secretary of the Free Religious Association and an author of note, writes: "I have read with great interest those numbers of FREETHOUGHT which you have been kind enough to send me. The paper is as good as its name. You are unusually fortunate in not admitting any matter that is not bright and readable into your columns. There is really nothing to skip."

OWING to the resignation of Edgar C. Beall, chairman of the Finance committee of the American Secular Union, the Board of Directors have decided to select his successor in Chicago so that the secretary may have a fellow-officer near by to confer with. The board has therefore unanimously chosen Mrs. Mattie A. Freeman for the office. Mrs. Freeman is an active worker and has earned the honor.

I MET three men in the day just gone,
I spoke to each of the self-same thing;
And one was a Christian, who traveled on Through Immanuel's ground, and I heard him sing:
"The cross of Christ is a crown for me,
And scoffers may boast that they are free;
I but a servant of God will be,
And accurst is the rebel to heaven's great king."
And one was wiser, and thus he spoke:
"I see the errors of yon poor man;
I see he bears but the galling yoke
That his grandsires bore since the world began.
His faith is his faith, mine is my own.
Must I for the folly of fools atone?
He is safer, happier left alone.
Forget and be joyous while you can."
The third man spoke, and he spoke full voiced:
"Who knows one truth and that one truth hide,
If none hath heard him, and none rejoiced
In that man's utterance, woe betide!
Being given a gift, then let him speak;
Being strong, in his power unbind the weak.
Servants to tyrants abide the meek,
But to free and be free is a brave man's pride."

SALADIN, editor of the London Secular Review, and Mr. G. W. Foote, of the Freethinker, are sending FREETHOUGHT their papers in exchange. Mr. Bradlaugh, of the National Reformer, is still reticent. The English Freethought papers are ably conducted.

THE Chicago Secular Union, it seems, went into its new quarters with flying banners and salvos of victory. Only religious people will see anything inappropriate in a church being turned into an engine for the destruction of piety.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

S. P. PUTNAM is in San Luis Obispo county from April 9 to 15; Boulder Creek, 17 to 19; San Jose, 22; Livermore, 29; Sacramento, May 6.

C. B. REYNOLDS has lecture appointments at Los Angeles April 14 and 15, and at Santa Ana 17, 18, and 19. Those desiring lectures will address Mr. Reynolds so that letters will be at above places two days ahead of date.

THE People Co-operative Publishing Company will have its first annual festival for the benefit of The People, the local Labor paper, on Sunday, April 22, at the Seaside Gardens, Presidio. Prizes, including a house worth $2000, are offered to the holders of the lucky numbers. Tickets admitting gentleman and ladies are $1.00 each, and may be found at this office.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The commission appointed to look into affairs at the Pacific Press rooms of the Adventists in Oakland report the best of surroundings for employees, but starvation wages.—A resolution in favor of female suffrage passed the Iowa House of Representatives last week.—The Rev. Mr. Sutherland, the evangelist, better known as "Senator Bob Hart," of the minstrel stage, which he quit to preach the gospel, was found dead in a New York lodging-house April 6.—The death of Jacob Sharp, the convicted briber of New York aldermen, is reported.—Four thousand Irish emigrants sailed from Queenstown, April 5, for America.—The ladies who were elected to the offices of mayor and common council of Oskaloosa, Kan., have taken the oath of office. They declare for law, order, and public improvement.—The trustees of the Lick Baths say that within thirty days they will decide upon a plan for the building to be placed on the lot on Tenth and Howard streets, which cost $38,000. The building is to cost $50,000, and that will leave $65,000 principal upon which to run the free baths.—From the edition of Geo. P. Rowell & Co.'s "American Newspaper Directory," published April 2d (its twentieth year), it appears that the newspapers and periodicals of all kinds issued in the United States and Canada now number 16,310, showing a gain of 890 during the last twelve months and of 7136 in ten years.—Gen. O. O. Howard, it is said, will shortly be transferred to Chicago with the Department of Missouri, and San Francisco will lose thereby her only distinguished "Christian soldier."—During the week ending April 6, 106 deaths occurred in the city against 115 for the corresponding week last year.—The floods have caused great distress in Germany. In the inundated districts 250 villages are in ruins.—Blaine, it is reported, is showing himself to be stronger than Edmunds in Vermont.—Senator Roscoe Conkling, of New York, is in bad health, but hopeful of recovery.—Emperor Frederick of Germany's condition is more favorable.—Leading members of the Washington bar have had consultations for raising a fund for the widow of Chief-Justice Waite.—A special to Chicago from the City of Mexico says that a party of Catholic priests will shortly leave that place as missionaries to the Lacandons, a warlike tribe of Indians in Southern Mexico. It is said that the natives offer human sacrifices, which may stimulate the Mexicans to send their priests among them.—Two Mormon missionaries were severely flogged at Golconda, Ind., last Saturday by a body of "regulators."—The Call says: "Since Henry George and Father McGlynn parted company, there have been several attempts to rally the followers of George. At the first meeting only six of his supporters came out, and at the following only eight or nine. George keeps aloof from all these efforts to revive his former glory." With exaggeration left out, it is evident that Mr. George must follow John Swinton, his predecessor as the New York workingmen's idol, into temporary obscurity. It is the way of the world.—High license is said to have reduced the number of saloons in Pittsburgh, Pa., from above 1500 to 223.

MR. STEVENS'S PAMPHLET.

"GOD IN THE STATE," a brochure of 22 pages by E. A. Stevens, secretary of the American Secular Union, is a review of the attempts being made to make the United States a distinctively Christian government. It quotes this innovation adopted at a convention of the National Reform Association, held at Pittsburgh in 1874.

We propose such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as will suitably acknowledge Almighty God as the author of the nation's existence, and the ultimate source of its authority, Jesus Christ as its ruler, and the Bible as the supreme rule of its conduct, and thus indicate that this is a Christian nation, and place all Christian laws, institutions, and usages on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental law of the land.

Mr. Stevens ably combats this dangerous proposition. The Constitution is good enough as the immortal framers left it. Under its benign influence all are secured the blessings of civil and religious liberty. With such a proposed amendment as that alluded to in force, our government would be a miserable spiritual despotism, ruled by sectarian cranks. "God in the State" is published by Putnam & Macdonald, San Francisco. Price 10 cents.

A WORD TO LIBERALS.

I have, of my own notion, asked the privilege of laying before the Liberals of the Pacific Coast, through FREETHOUGHT, a matter which I believe deeply concerns them. In doing this I have no desire to appear particularly liberal or to make myself conspicuous. The writing of the letter which the proprietors of this paper paid me the compliment of publishing in the issue of March 24, was purely accidental, and was my first, as it will probably be my last, attempt to put in writing my thoughts upon the subject of which it treats. My only reason for writing this is a sincere desire to see the effort to establish a purely Freethought journal on the Pacific slope crowned with success; and I am fully persuaded that this can be accomplished, if by any possibility the importance of the matter can be brought to the attention of those whose minds are sufficiently free from prejudice to enable them to feel friendly to it. I believe if there is any lack of support, it will not arise from inability or ill will, but purely from indifference. I am willing to confess that I have done few things in this world wherein I was not actuated more or less by selfish motives, and at the time I heard Remsburg's lecture on "False Claims" and became a subscriber to the Truth Seeker, I was paying $100 a year for a pew in a fashionable church, which is more money than I have paid in my whole life for purely Liberal literature and for the propagation of Liberal ideas. I have in my mind now the name of a friend, probably the most prominent and enterprising man in the town in which he lives, who could have taught me Infidelity while I was yet superintendent of a Sunday-school, and whose opinions have not changed since, who has to my knowledge paid as high as $500 a year since then, when he was ill able to do it, for the support of an orthodox church of which he is a regular attendant, although he makes no pretense of believing in the dogmas they teach, and it is a question whether he would be willing to subscribe for a copy of FREETHOUGHT.

How many Liberals are there, who are at all able to do so, who could resist the appeal of a nice, friendly, persuasive minister who should earnestly press them to contribute $20 to the support of his church? Now the question is, Is this right, and are we doing our duty to ourselves and posterity by persisting in this selfish and illiberal course? If the perpetuation of the orthodox religion is the best thing for the people, should we not at once abandon our so-called Liberal ideas and give it a hearty support? If it is not the best thing, should we not withdraw our influence and support from it, and be at least as generous in our support of that which we believe to be for the best interest of the present and future generations? But say you, "I get value received in the way of social influence, etc., for all I give to the church, while it might even be detrimental to my interests to be known as one of the opponents of its teachings." Ah, my friend! Now you have made an open confession, which is said to be good for the soul. But just pause and think for a moment. Think what a poor world this would be to live in now, if all those noble souls who have gone before us, and whose labors for humanity have measurably wrested from religion the power to fetter the human mind, had said the same thing. Think of the condition we should be in, as Huxley says, "without that organization of society created by the toil and blood of long generations before our time," and ask yourself if you are willing to accept of all that has been done for you, and go out of the world without, in your turn, attempting to do a little something for posterity, and to make the world a little better than you found it; and, as Huxley says again, "if there is not a manifest unfairness in allowing all the burdens to be borne by the willing horse."

The publication of FREETHOUGHT has been commenced in San Francisco by those who, with proper support, are capable of making a grand success of it. Shall it be supported in such a manner as to enable it to grow to such proportions as to become a power on this coast, or shall it be allowed to struggle along for a time and die the death of starvation? I have taken some pains to inform myself of the cost of such a publication, and can safely say that the actual expense of issuing one thousand copies for one year, office rent and all, cannot be short of $4000. The subscription list does not yet number one thousand names, and a considerable proportion of the present subscribers reside in the East. With a small circulation, it can command but little advertising, and unless the list of subscribers can be largely increased, it does not require much calculation to see that its publication cannot be long continued, unless the proprietors are willing to sacrifice not only their time but a very considerable amount of money as well.

Everything must have a beginning, and there are many reasons why this paper, or some other which shall advocate its principles, should be supported in such a manner as to enable it to become the great center for the publication and propagation of Liberal thought on this coast.

The church is ever aggressive and becoming more and more so every day. The Catholic church is making a bold and not unsuccessful assault upon our public school education all along the line, and in some places has already secured a division of the public school fund. In many places too Catholics have elected public school boards and supplied the public schools with their own teachers, while many Protestant ministers are but little behind them in their animosity to the so-called "godless education" of our public schools. The "National Reform Association" are even more outspoken than the Catholics in their determination to unite church and state, for the purpose of crushing out what they call "political Atheism." So strong is their desire to accomplish this that they would willingly join hands with the church of Rome for that purpose.

This is no unsupported statement of mine. An editorial in one of their organs, the Christian Statesman, of Dec. 11, 1884, says, "Whenever the Roman Catholics are willing to co-operate in resisting the progress of political Atheism, we will gladly join hands with them." Also: "We cordially, gladly, recognize the fact that in South American republics, and in France and other European countries, the Roman Catholics are the recognized advocates of national Christianity, and are opposed to all the proposals of Secularism. . . . In a world's conference for the promotion of national Christianity, many countries could be represented only by Roman Catholics."

In the same paper of August 31, 1881, Rev. Sylvester F. Scovel, a leading National Reformer, says: "This common interest of all religious people in the Sabbath ought both to strengthen our determination to work, and our readiness to co-operate in every way with our Roman Catholic fellow-citizens. We may be subject to some rebuffs in our first proffers, and the time is not yet come when the Roman church will consent to strike hands with other churches—as such; but the time has come to make repeated advances, and gladly to accept co-operation in any form in which they may be willing to exhibit it. It is one of the necessities of the situation." In all this do they not equally with Rome show themselves enemies of the United States government and American institutions—the enemies of human rights and human liberties? For further testimony of the most convincing character on this point, I most earnestly commend to your attention the pamphlet entitled "God in the State," recently published, by the secretary of the American Secular Union, which can be had at the office of FREETHOUGHT for 10 cents.

As every Liberal who reads knows, these people are increasing rapidly in numbers and securing the countenance and support of some of our most prominent public men, and the fanaticism of the members makes them willing to contribute hundreds and thousands of dollars to promote the success of their cause. All Christian societies acknowledge and deplore the rapid advancement of liberal ideas among the people, and I believe there is nothing surer than that they will all eventually unite to put it in the power of the church to enforce religious laws and correct heresy. They will never succeed, but when that time comes it will be a sorry day for Liberals. But regardless of any fear of the power of the church, I believe the Liberals of this coast should support at least one paper that shall find its way into every village and hamlet, so that through its subscription list every Liberal could be reached and thus some concert of action could be brought about at any time that it might be necessary to resist any attempt to tamper with our liberties. This would also, to a great extent, supply the want occasioned by lack of organization, which it is extremely difficult to secure among a class of people who act independently of a fear of hell or a hope of heaven.

There are many other reasons why our paper should be supported, which will suggest themselves to your minds, but I am occupying too much space and must come at once to the practical part of this communication. I know there are ten thousand Liberals on this coast who are easily able to give $100 a year to the support of a good Liberal paper, and I want to find one hundred of them who will each agree with me to make out a list of ten names of parties who are sufficiently liberal to read the paper, and send it in to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, accompanied by a check or postal order for $20, without asking any discount, and next year send ten new names and $20 more, and leave the old ones to look out for themselves. Most of them will subscribe by that time. Never mind if you send it to some who are better able to pay for it than you are. In this matter you are not acting because somebody else does or don't will or want; but simply for your own personal satisfaction and to pay a small part of the debt you owe to the martyrs to Truth who have gone before you.

Putnam is full of enthusiasm, and his "News and Notes" are to me about the most interesting feature of the paper, for they make me think more of myself when they show me I am associated in thought with the stirring, active business people of the country, who are looked up to by the communities in which they live as men and women of character and standing. Mr. Macdonald, his associate, is in the full vigor of life and capable of any amount of hard work, and never speaks without saying something. A few years of such help as this will aid them to build up a paper that shall be a power in the land and by its force and character command the respect of those who differ with it. The subscribers in every community will form the nucleus of a society for the circulation of Liberal literature and will become acquainted and be in a position to secure an occasional treat in the form of a liberal lecture when some first-class man comes within reach, and in a few years they will grow into regularly organized societies; for man is essentially a social animal, and those of similar tastes and ideas will associate themselves together. Science schools will be formed where the children can gather themselves together on Sundays for pleasure and for instruction in all those moral principles which shall tend to their development into true manhood and womanhood and leave their mind entirely free from fear and from all forms of superstition.

Now will you not do this. Don't think what you could do with $20 if you kept it, or think you are taking so much from the fortune you hope to leave your children when you die. If they are girls, the way things look now, it is very probable that a very liberal percentage of what you leave them will find its way into the coffers of the church, and you will be doing them and their children a great favor by devoting a small portion of your savings to a good cause while you are in a position to do so, and you will help to hasten the time, which will surely come, when it will be just as respectable to be called a Freethinker as anything else—when character and not opinion shall be the standard of respectability.

If you are rich, give $100 if you feel like it, but please join with us medium ones who want to make up the 100 list at $20. If you can't afford to send ten names, try to send five; and if you can't send any but your own, do that and then lend your paper to some one who will read it but not subscribe. But first and foremost I want to carry out this pet scheme of my own and find 99 men to join me in furnishing 10 new names each. Don't spend $20 worth of time trying to find subscribers, but just send in the names and the money, and collect from them afterwards.

I am sure this list can easily be made up if by any possibility I can get the proposition before the Liberals of this coast, and I am going to ask Mr. Macdonald to strike off a lot of sheets containing it in suitable form for distribution, and shall depend upon Mr. Putnam to so far forget his native modesty as to distribute them for me wherever he goes, until the list of one hundred is made up. Then we will have it published if you like, but not as a Roll of Honor; for I am one of those who hold in as deep reverence the memory of the humblest soldier who left his family and home from motives of pure patriotism, and sacrificed his life on the battlefield, and rests in an unknown grave, as I do that of the man who, as often through opportunity as special worth, attained the highest honors his country could bestow. The one gave his all, the other could do no more. The man who can only pay his $2 for the paper, or even the one who through misfortune is compelled to borrow one to read through the pure love of truth, is worthy of as much honor as the one who is fortunately able to give $20 or $100. But if the majority pleases we will have it published just so we may know who those are who are willing to give $20 for their opinion's sake, so we can call on them, when we go their way, and get acquainted. Now let me add just one word more. After you have sent in your list of ten names and your $20, if you find upon consideration that you can spare $25 more without doing any injustice to yourself or anyone else, just send it to E. A. Stevens, secretary of the American Secular Union, for the general good of the cause. Don't ask me if I have done so, for I have confessed enough already in regard to my illiberality, and I blush for it every time I read one of his appeals to Liberals and note the meager response. I remember that I have seen a single church, not very rich at that, raise as much money in an hour as the American Secular Union has raised in the whole United States in a year. This, however, is the result of lack of interest, occasioned by lack of organization and the consequent inability to bring the claims of the movement directly home to the individual.

If we succeed in making up this list of one hundred names we shall be proud of our success, and I am sure we shall succeed, for I cannot think there is a Liberal on the coast who can possibly spare $20 who would not willingly, gladly, give it, if by so doing he could know that he could thereby make FREETHOUGHT a success. Then please send in your names to Putnam & Macdonald as soon as possible, informing them that you wish to join the club of one hundred, with the full assurance that by so doing you put FREETHOUGHT squarely on its feet and enable it to go alone, and that it will continue to go on doing its good work long after we have passed from this stage of action.

H. P. STONE.

MR. SCHOU'S OFFER.

OAKLAND, April 7, 1888.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: I have read the "Word to Liberals" that Mr. Stone proposes to ask you to publish, and I believe his plan is a good one, and that he will succeed in accomplishing his purpose of securing 1000 subscribers for FREETHOUGHT at $2 each.

I too feel the importance of having a first-class Liberal paper published on the Pacific slope, and realize that many a useful enterprise perishes for want of a little of the right kind of help at the right time. I believe the present attempt to establish such a paper may justly be regarded as a test case, and if it cannot be accomplished under the present management any such attempt in the near future may be considered as well-nigh hopeless; and although I have no "embarrassing surplus" of this world's goods, I have not many responsibilities, and deem the present a case of sufficient emergency to justify me in expending in one year for Liberal propagandism what I should otherwise spread out over several years, and in connection with Mr. Stone's offer I wish to make the following:

If nine others can be found among our Liberal friends on the Pacific slope to join me in making up a club of ten who will agree to send you the names of fifty persons each for you to send the paper to, together with $100 in payment for the same, you may put my name down for one of the ten. As soon as the ten names are obtained you may draw on me for the money, and I will furnish the list of subscribers. Respectfully, A. H. SCHOU.

THE New York Truth Seeker falls into the error of printing the statement that "San Francisco policemen say they have never seen a drunken Chinaman," without the accompanying remark that no Chinaman has returned the compliment.

THE Ingersoll-Field discussion, which appeared in the North American Review, has been gathered into book form. The discussion makes a dollar book in cloth; in pamphlet, 50 cents.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

THE FORUM.

Last Sunday the members of the Chicago Secular Union were fully recompensed for their years of arduous toil and apparently thankless efforts by the grand turnout and deep public interest manifested in the dedication of their new building, "The Forum," transformed from a sanctuary of superstition to a temple devoted to science and reason. The largest audience was there assembled that ever attended a strictly Liberal meeting—except Ingersoll's lectures—since the writer has lived in Chicago. Every seat was taken before the exercises commenced, standing room was at a premium, and many could not gain entrance. The decorations were unique. As a back ground for the arch at the rear of the rostrum were grouped appropriate mottoes fringed with a canopy-like border of American flags. Ranged in front of these, so as not to obscure them, was a floral design some twenty feet in length—"The Forum." Under the flowers on a pale-blue satin banner, trimmed with silver fringe, was our motto, "Universal Mental Liberty"—a most artistic piece of pen shading, executed by Professor Rice. Overhanging the arch was an American flag and a cross reversed and recumbent, signifying "our flag above the cross." On the rostrum was an immense bouquet of flowers, and some very rich and handsome rugs. Through the liberality of Dr. McLeod the (Mendelssohn) leading male quartette of this city was engaged to assist the Secular Union quartette, and the press made particular mention of the excellence of the music on this occasion.

The programme consisted of an opening address by the president, in which was outlined the necessity of maintaining the most distinguished characteristic and precious boon of American citizenship, religious freedom, which was left us by the heroic Free-thinkers who founded this government, as a priceless heritage which it was our duty to guard and maintain.

After music, Professor Orchardson followed with his stinging sarcasms on the chronology of Christ; and Professor James Milleson, well known to the readers of the Investigator as a scientific writer, in somewhat the same vein. Then C. S. Darrow, who, next to General Stiles, is the best extempore speaker I know at the Chicago bar, made some telling hits. He spoke thus of evolution: "If I never believed in the theory of evolution before, I should firmly believe in it now, when I find that this building has been developed by the process of the survival of the fittest, from a church to a Forum for free discussion." Then came the leading light of the Chicago bar, as well as the acknowledged wit of the West, Gen. I. N. Stiles, whose sparkling hits on the Easter tide kept the audience in convulsions of laughter. The Times and Tribune gave his speech in full. Judge E. R. Paige, who is a perfect encyclopedia of science, urged the importance of scientific education and was glad to give the honor to the Secular Union as the pioneer in this important work. Prof. W. S. Bell ably replied to one speaker who inferred that had Colonel Ingersoll devoted as much time to science as he had to ridiculing the Christian religion much more would have been accomplished. Mr. Bell showed that Ingersoll had accomplished more than all other men of his time.

By request Mrs. Freeman gave the "Guardian Angel" in her inimitable style, and Prof. William C. Wilson delivered his poem on "Dust," which was well received. At the close, large additions were made to our membership.

This telegram was read during the proceedings:

CONTINENTAL HOTEL, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

E. A. STEVENS, President Chicago Secular Union: Although a thousand miles divide us, my heart is with you in your services to-day in transferring a temple, erected to an unknown God, to a Forum dedicated to reason and the maintenance of human rights. Every true American should rejoice with you. You this day consecrate a temple whose walls should resound with hosannas to liberty of speech, freedom from superstition, reason, justice, and equal rights to all mankind. May the seed that you sow to-day prove immortal.

W. H. HENRY, M. D.

I wish to particularly acknowledge our obligations to Mrs. Jas. Gruber and Messrs. Wm. Smith, Daniel Brown, and Thomas Andrews for the work they gratuitously performed in preparing the building for our reception.

Prof. W. S. Bell, who has recently returned from a lecture tour, has begun the compilation of a Freethinkers' handbook of some 400 pages, in which, in a condensed form, will be found the facts and arguments sufficient to refute all the fundamental Christian doctrines. This will be a very valuable addition to Freethought literature, and Mr. Bell's extended experience and research give us assurance that the work will be well done.

E. A. STEVENS.

MR. PUTNAM'S LECTURES IN ANAHEIM.

Samuel P. Putnam, a Liberal lecturer, gave a course of three or four lectures at Kroeger's Hall on Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday evenings. The address on the Nine Demands of Liberalism was a concise and masterly statement of the claims, in a political, educational, and social way, of most liberal-minded and right-thinking people in this country. We never could understand why a Catholic or Jewish child in a public school should be obliged to read or listen to the reading of a Bible, which he and his ancestors have disbelieved in, or at any age in life keep a feast or a fast in which in a religious or a personally moral way he has nothing in common. The Sunday-school, and not the week day common school, is the place to read the Bible to your heart's content, even if that were not the easiest and surest solution of the growing problem of the parochial school business.

We always believed the Constitution the fathers bequeathed us is good enough as it is, and would deprecate the innovation of an introduction into that document, or the process of government of which it is at once the bond and promise, of any special sectarian or religious idea. Nor could we ever see the justice of compelling by law one man to pay by a tax on his head or property for the support of a man to teach the people something which he does not himself believe, or impose upon that man a further tax to make up a revenue to which property of enormous value, for eleemosynary reasons, is not asked to contribute its moiety.

The religious close corporation of Trinity Church in the heart of New York city, with its millions of property, is a case in point—a state of affairs which could exist nowhere else outside of a monarchy, and is a menace and a blow at the genius of liberty.

Then there is the Christian oath. We never had occasion to administer an oath or listen to that senseless mummery without being ashamed of a custom which either offers a premium for perjury or otherwise defeats its own purpose in the very cases in which it is supposed to have just the opposite effect. You swear a good Catholic on your Protestant Bible, forsooth, and expect it to have a binding force on him! And how much do you suppose the wily Chinaman regards it in your courts of justice, even when he understands its meaning.—Anaheim New Era.

THE CRUCIFIXION STORY.

Not long ago I received a note from Mr. P. Ross Martin, editor of the People, saying that if I would look in at the window of 1390 Market street I would see something worthy of my pen. So one day last week I strolled out that way. It is quite a distance to No. 1390, and the mountains get close aboard before you reach it. If the number had been 1930 I should have chosen some other subject for this sketch besides that suggested by Mr. Martin.

The sight in the window proved to be several lifelike, or, I should say, deathlike, representations of the crucifixion of Christ. One was especially striking, and at the same time revolting. The figure of the victim is about the size of a ten-year-old boy, which is rather small when we remember that it represents the creator of the universe, including California, and is sufficiently well executed to be horrible. Christ is presented upon the cross, with large holes in his hands and feet, which are bleeding profusely. The crown of thorns has lacerated the scalp and forehead, so that blood trickles down his face, while in his chest is a wound from which the gore exudes in purple clots. The countenance wears the peaceful expression which often follows a violent death. Scattered about the window promiscuously are several other corpses of Christ, emaciated, bloody cadavers. There was also an execution in relief of Christ bearing a cross upon his shoulder. As a dime museum chamber of horrors, the window leaves nothing to be desired, but the first impression is that there should be several funerals from that address.

I noticed some slight discrepancies in the different figures of the crucified party. Thus, in some cases the spear-wound was in the right side, while in others it was in the left side. We do not read in the various published reports of the affair that the defendant sustained two spear-wounds, or that the one which it is alleged that he received had the faculty of shifting from one side to the other.

On returning to the office I sought light upon the subject from a Testament which my Sunday-school teacher presented me with in 1863, I being at that time some five years of age and naturally very appreciative of a gift of that kind. The first account I met, that given by Matthew, says nothing about any wound in the side. The condemned man was crucified in a place called Golgotha, and members of the committee cast lots for his clothes; passers by wagged their heads and asked him why, seeing that he was in the saving business, he did not try a little of his own medicine. Two thieves, crucified with him, "cast the same in his teeth." The victim, as the story goes, seemingly appreciating the pointed nature of the query, wailed, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" The wound remained still unaccounted for, and I turned to Mark, another reporter, whose account agrees substantially with that of Matthew. Both omit to mention the wounded side, and both say that not Christ but a man named Simon was pressed into service to carry the cross. Luke tells the same story as to Simon, but says that only one of the thieves reviled Jesus, and he was rebuked by the other. The crucifixion here took place at Calvary instead of Golgotha. The gospel according to John agrees that the place was called Golgotha; says nothing about Simon, and makes Jesus carry his own cross. The account of his side being pierced with a spear is here found, but it takes place after death has intervened, so that the blood following the wound seems to be out of the regular order of things. Whether it was the right side or the left side is nowhere revealed.

My brief search of the scriptures raised several questions. As thus:

1. Did Simon carry the cross, as stated by three of the writers, or did Christ carry it himself?

2. Was the place of crucifixion called Golgotha or Calvary?

3. Was it the third hour according to Mark, or the sixth hour according to John?

4. Did both thieves or only one revile Jesus?

5. Did they give him vinegar to drink mingled with gall, or wine mingled with myrrh?

6. Was his side pierced, or was it not?

7. Were his last words "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" or "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit?"

All these questions are raised, and no point settled, by the gospel writers. I am reminded of a story. A preacher delivered a sermon on the crucifixion, and then went home to dinner with a parishioner. The lady of the house, being deeply impressed, inquired into the circumstances of the affair. "How long ago," she asked, "did this dreadful thing occur?" "Eighteen hundred years or thereabouts," replied the preacher. "And was it near here?" she went on. "No," said he, "several thousand miles distant." "Well," concluded the woman, "since it was so long ago and so far away, let us hope it never happened." Such is the hope that many better informed people will entertain despite the gospel stories and the remarkable show at 1390 Market street. M.

UNPROFITABLE READING.

That the literary world is being flooded with a vast amount of idiotic nonsense, no one who reads and retains his grip on reason can deny. For ages the world has been damned with theological stupidity and superstition, and just as we begin to think the age of reason is dawning, and facts are to have preference over fables, Christian science and metaphysics come to the front with a rush, and passive minds, which drink in other people's opinions as a sponge does water, emerge from the fog of one delusion only to enter that of another.

Transcendental visionaries who have "passed beyond mere intellectualism" rise in myriad numbers to emit a deluge of words that are as destitute of sense or practical value as the bray of a burro; for when people reject the use of reason and pass beyond the basis of knowledge, their opinions become of no earthly use or importance; and to read them is about as profitable as trying to discover coming meteorological changes by reading the weather predictions in Ayer's almanac. Such people simply show to what extent their minds can corral curious combinations of senseless expressions, and how easy it is to play upon the emotions if the reasoning faculties are neglected.

At this time I wish to make brief reference to a small book published under the expensive if not expressive title, "Through the Gates of Gold." The author is a lady, and her efforts are to show the origin and object of life, and also to find the way through the "Gates of Gold," which gates bar the way to an imaginary condition that words are powerless to define. She has discovered that "the mystery of life is unapproachable by ordinary thought," that is, that reason is powerless to explain the unknowable, and the attempt must be left to the imagination; which, like a boat without a rudder, is as liable to go one way as another. Affirmations are not neglected because of their trivial value, but are thrown out with lavish hand. One of her fundamental ones is that "man is a powerful consciousness" and "is his own creator;" that he creates not only himself, but his "pains and pleasures." This is quite definite and very satisfactory. She now has man created, and proceeds to show why he creates his own pain and pleasure. That I may do her no injustice I will produce her own words: "For unless man vacillated between these two (pain and pleasure), and ceaselessly reminded himself by sensation that he exists, he would forget it!" "And in this fact lies the whole answer to the question, "why does man create pain for his own discomfort?" "What more could any reasonable man desire to know than is contained in these answers? But some are never satisfied, so we will read on. It is very evident that by some means the author is aware that misery and restlessness pervade the breast of mortal man, for again she says: "Why does not the creature man return into the great womb of silence whence he came, and remain in peace?" With the same unaffected readiness with which she asks a question, her answer accompanies it: "He does not do so because he hungers for pleasure and pain, joy and grief, anger and love." Eureka! and I might add Keno! The mystery is solved. No longer let mortal man ask the foolish question, "Is life worth living?" Should anyone do so, it will be seen at once that his "hunger for pain and pleasure" has been sated, or "grief and anger" have lost their charm.

Again we read: "When man has conquered once for all that shifting serpent in himself which turns from side to side in its constant desire of contact, in its perpetual search after pleasure and pain, never again can he tremble or grow exultant at any thought of that which the future holds. Those burning sensations which seemed to him to be the only proof of his existence are his no longer. How then can he know that he lives? He knows it only by argument. And in time he does not care to argue about it. For him there is then peace, and he will find in that peace the power he has coveted. Then he will know what is that faith which can move mountains." This last quotation must now suffice, for we are near the "Golden Gates" and anything further in the same strain would simply confuse the ordinary mind, which, of course, has not "passed beyond mere intellectualism." But enough has been presented of these sublime thoughts to show that good paper and valuable ink are not entirely wasted while purchasers for such reading can be found. C. SEVERANCE.

VIEWS ON POLITICS.

The past few days have settled two things. Ex-Mayor Grace is a candidate for the nomination for governor. Grace is the president's candidate. Governor Hill has lost favor with Cleveland, and will be buried this fall.

Chauncey M. Depew is actively in the field as a presidential candidate. He has already commenced laying his wires. He is the pet of the Vanderbilt family, and extremely popular with the workingmen of this city. If he can show the Republican party that he can carry New York, he can secure the nomination. The young element of the party in the East are Depew men. This is a strong point in his favor.

The agitation of the tariff is crushing business. Even the mercenary Wall street broker is feeling its deadly influence. Free trade is a beautiful theory, but it is death to new countries.

The Mills bill has paralyzed business throughout the East. The manufactories are dubious of the future, and are curtailing their outputs. The South and West are buying sparingly. Collections are poor. The stock exchange is as dead as Dickens's doornail. Wheat, cotton, iron, and stocks have gone down, down, down. The grand public has buttoned up its pocket, and bided itself from the vicinage of the sub-treasury. If this dullness continues three months longer, it is good-bye to Cleveland; it is good-bye to the Democratic party. The demand for a change will sweep them out of existence. Mutterings of discontent are already heard.

Joe Choate is making the fur fly in the Hilton family. Just wait until he gets the judge on the stand. What a crucifixion there is in store for the old man! Joseph, with the sweetness of Fenelon, is a relentless Bossuet in the court room. He will make it an interesting episode before he clears up, how with $1,000,000, and that willed him by Stewart, Judge Hilton became the possessor of factories, stores, hotel, etc., the estate of that great merchant. What Rufus Choate was to Boston, this nephew is to the New York bar. Roscoe Conkling, Dan Rollins, Elihu Root, and ex-Atty.-Gen. Russell are pitted against him. An army is needed to fight this Goliath.

District Attorney Fellows is whining like a whipped child over the criticisms of the press. Three months have passed, and his office has accomplished nothing. The Squire-Flynn fiasco was a disgrace to any man having charge of such a case. There is one thing sure, Fellows has neither the moral nor intellectual qualifications for a prosecuting officer.

To-day the body of an ex-president of a South American republic is lying in state at the city hall. This man died in this city an exile from the country he aided in freeing from Spanish rule. Driven from home in life, Venezuela now seeks to honor his memory.

ROBERT THE DEVIL.

When I went into the sanctum this mornin' after copy, the editor of Gabe's Horn looked at me kinder hard, but said, smilin' like, "Robert, things mysteriously disappear here—little things, you know, such things as cigars, oranges, sandwiches, etc. Now, I don't for a moment suspect you." This was a squaretoed lie, for he did, but didn't say so, 'cos he knows I'd make it hot for him with pop, who owns a big slice of Gabe's Horn, he bein' a pious man, 'cos it pays; "but it is a singular fact, Robert, that these things always disappear after you have been in here." "That lets me out, Mr. Skinner," says I, "if they disappear after I've been in here. What's took to itself wings and flied away now?"

"Oh, nothing of consequence; only a cigar, Robert, costin' only fifteen cents. It isn't the loss that troubles me, but to think that there should be peculation goin' on in the offiss of Gabriel's Horn, you know."

"Yes," says I, "that's the tuffest part of it. The sinners oughter be ketched and hauled over the coals," says I.

"Ah! that gives me an idea," says he. "I'll leave a loaded cigar here on the desk for the peculator, and he'll get his nose singed, and his eyebrows, perhaps."

"Will that be Christian?" says I, and then says, "I guess so, 'cos it wouldn't be no wuss 'n the Lord let Satan work it onto Job, and not half as bad as the Lord played it onto the Sodom folks."

"Robert, Robert, you musn't talk like that, criticizin' the ways of the Lord, which are not our ways."

"But that loaded cigar is somethin' like his ways, Mr. Skinner, and I'd do it, I know! It would serve the snide rite to burn his nose."

You see, I knowed he wouldn't dare to play no loaded cigar onto me, 'cos pop would give him the grand bounce on the fly; and I 'vised him to do it, 'cos I knowed he wouldn't, 'cos he knowed where his cigars and things went to, bein' the only way to git square with him.

"Well, I'll think about it," says he; "I don't want to adopt harsh measures, if I can help it." Then he smiled like a bullfrog that's jes' caught a big hossfly, and ast me to lend him a dime till he went out and had a bill changed, which I did, not thinkin' it would be time enuff for him to use the dime when he got the bill changed; and then he ast me if I'd writ any more literary effects, and I showed him a piece, which he looked at, an said he tho't it would do for our columns; hoped so, anyhow, and put it in his desk and gimme some copy, and I put for the composin' room, with a leadpencil and nickel cap that looked lonesome on his desk. He gimme that pece back as I was goin' home, and on the rapper was rit, "Declined with thanks. A brilyent composition, but not suitable for Gabriel's Horn. Try Satan's Bugle." This is the pece:

THE LOST GARDEN OF EDEN.

It seems mity funny to me that the Garden of Eden should a got lost, it bein' the most thund'rin' interestin' place that ever was, on account of Adam and Eve havin' been made there, and that seance Eve had with the talkin' snake—mity funny it warn't kept track of, seems to me.

Thunder! what a lager beer garden it would make for pic-nicks, schuetzen fests, and baseball. Crackey! wouldn't it draw though? A Dutchman could get rich there in a year, and then oughter give it up to some other feller for a year, till everybody gets rich and didn't care whether school kept or not.

It's funny there hain't never been no explorin' expeditions to find the Garden of Eden. Men go huntin' for the North Pole, which wouldn't be no good only to Jay Gould for a telegraph pole, if they found it; but nobody, as I ever heard, ever went out hunting for the Garden of Eden. It's funny, durned funny.

I s'pose it must a run wild to grass and weeds and huckleberry bushes and scrub pines, but Adam oughter kept track of it, and passed it down to his grandchildren, and them to their grandchildren, and so on till there was folks enuff to take some interest in it, and weed it up and put it in shape, becomin' in time the world's park.

If King Solomon's mines could be kept track of and Allan Quartermain and them other two English roosters git into 'em and load up with the plunder, seems to me the Garden of Eden oughter been kept track of, so Christians of all colors and sexes could go there in picnic parties and have a bully time of it.

It seems funny to me that arts should ever be 'lost—I've allus heard of the "lost arts"—but it's durned sight funnier that the Garden of Eden, bigger'n any cattle king's ranch, probably, should be lost forever, and nobody ever find it! I wonder if Boston's public garden and our Central Park'll ever be lost? Mebbe as a garden and park they will be; but you bet your boots the land-grabbers, like the Astors and others, 'll know where the land is every time!

I spose Mr. Adam felt mity sour when he was bounced from the Garden of Eden, and, knowin' he couldn't go back there to live, on account of them angels with fiery swords, that cut and burnt like thunder, didn't mean anybody else should live there, and so kept dark about the lay of the land, and let it run to weeds and scrub till nobody knew it from a huckleberry pastur or sheep run.

This seems to be the only way of explainin' how it got lost, and if you think it was mean of Adam, jes' put yourself in his place and think, if you'd been bounced from the Eden ranch, if you'd a kept a map of the place for snoozers comin' after you, five or six thousand years. I'll bet you wouldn't—I wouldn't, anyhow—but said, "Go to thunder with the old ranch; it's nuthin' but a goose pastur anyhow, and I can fix up a garden anywhere; land's plenty and cheap!" But for us it's ruff, all the same, that it was lost.

I don't see why the World newspaper don't hire Stanley and send him out to search for the Garden of Eden. It would be a trump card to play, anyway; and, if Stanley should jump the claim for the World, the biggest trump card ever played by a newspaper or any other man. It would knock Bertholdy's statue higher'n a kite, and Stanley's discovery of Africa wouldn't be a masker for it! Funny Pulitzer don't see it. But then he's seen so much sence he's been here in York that his eyes are off their base, and he's gone off somewhere to git 'em on agen.

There's a long-felt want for the Garden of Eden, and if somebody'll only fill it, he'll be the king pin rooster of all creation, and Berry Wall with all his dude trousis couldn't hold a taller candle to him. Who'll set out to find the Garden of Eden, or perish in the 'tempt?

This was rit spos'n' for a sure thing there ever was a Garden of Eden. But who knows there was? If there was, would it have got lost, never to be found again, like day 'fore yesterday was? I don't think so, and ain't a goin' to fret any more 'bout the Garden of Eden. I'll bet there never was any Garden 'of Eden, where snakes talked!

Mr. FREETHO'T editor, please tell me why you spose the editor of Gabe's Horn wouldn't print this pece. Seems to me it's a fair and candied essay on a place that never was, p'r'aps; don't you?

ROBERT THE DEVIL, of Gabe's Horn.

Ingersoll on Alcohol.

I believe that alcohol, to a certain degree, demoralizes those who make it, those who sell it, and those who drink it. I believe from the time it issues from the coiled and poisonous worm of the distillery until it empties into the hell of crime, death, and dishonor, it demoralizes everybody that touche's it. I do not believe that anybody can contemplate the subject without becoming prejudiced against this liquid crime. All you have to do is to think of the wrecks upon either bank of this stream of death, of the suicides, of the insanity, of the poverty, of the ignorance, of the distress, of the little children tugging at the faded dresses of weeping and despairing wives, asking for bread; of the men of genius it has wrecked; of the millions who have struggled with the imaginary serpents produced by this devilish thing. And when you think of the jails, of the almshouses, of the prisons, and of the scaffolds upon either bank—I do not wonder that every thoughtful man is prejudiced against the damned stuff called alcohol.

LET US ACCUMULATE TO BUSINESS.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have perused, with inimitable interest, the several epistolary propositions as promulgated in recent issues of your journal, and think with our friend Clifford Dix—who views mental and universal Liberty from a fundamental point—that, "unless we co-operate, we are like the proverbial bunch of sticks, liable to be broken to pieces."

Liberalism is no longer in its infancy; it is now near full-grown and ere many years must necessarily reach maturity. The people have bitterly experienced ecclesiastical tyranny and infamy. It is no longer traditional and must sooner or later be cast by every sensible person back into that mythological epoch. Papistical despotation is no longer secluded. It's nefarious doctrinals are no longer enigmatical but conceived in their extreme tyrannical and jeopardous altitude.

Is it not surprising, then, that in this enlightened age so many Liberal-minded people are subjected to obmutescence? Rather than step forward and demand their rights, they remain in obtenebration, submitting themselves to unjust taxation and religious caducity. I am sure no man need fear to speak his political opinions, nor need he hesitate to express his mental belief. Let him come forward and declare his liberty and assist his fellowmen in escaping from papal iniquity. If he be devoid of sufficient courage to express these rights and firm convictions, he is not fit to mar the sullied streets with his footprints.

In union there is strength; therefore let us unite and keep the ball a rolling, and that Liberalism may become more familiar, let us concentrate our forces and organize for the purpose of advancing Liberalism and Freethought.

The suggestion of Clifford Dix for the formation of a San Francisco Freethought society should meet with merited success, and I, for one, second the motion.

A Psalm of Western Life.

Tell me not in mournful numbers that the town is full of gloom, for the man's a crank who slumbers in these bustling days of boom. Life is real, life is earnest, and the grave is not its goal; every dollar that thou turnest helps to make the old town roll. But enjoyment and not sorrow is our destined end or way; if you have no money, borrow—buy a corner lot each day. Lives of great men oft remind us, we can win immortal fame; let us leave the chumps behind us and we'll get there all the same. In the world's broad field of battle, in the bivouac of life, let us make the dry bones rattle—buy a corner for your wife. Let us then be up and doing with a heart for any fate, still achieving, still pursuing, booming early, booming late.—Atchison Globe.

We have received from San Francisco numbers 5 and 6 of a new weekly journal edited by Messrs. S. P. Putnam and George Macdonald, entitled FREETHOUGHT. The paper is a bright, lively, and living one. We trust it has a long and prosperous career before it and that it will do much to emancipate the far west from the slavethought that has been transplanted there by Christianity. Messrs. Putnam and Macdonald form a good combination, and if they work well in harness together, it needs no prophet to predict they will achieve success in their new field.—London Freethinker.

GIVE Christianity a trial. Practice it for a little while, strictly and fully. You will need no other cure. In a month you will find it impractical and no good.

We have photographs for sale of Thomas Paine, Robert G. Ingersoll, and Samuel P. Putnam; also the present writer. The price is 25 cents each, except that of Colonel Ingersoll, which is 40 cents.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Religious Intermeddling.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I believe that in the church the same spirit of persecution reigns to-day as of old; that if the church to-day had the power, she would burn at the stake those that differed with her in religious belief, and those that do not believe in any religion whatever. The church would by law force mankind to be religious, to be Christians, to go to church, to keep the Christian Sabbath; and Infidels must be buried under her auspices.

I will give you some of my experience. I have for several years been a pronounced Infidel; to speak the truth, I often have talked it on the street, and such was my standing with the people generally. Recently my dear wife died, and the Christians knew that I would have none of their offices at the grave or elsewhere, so they prevailed upon my aged mother to secure the services of the Rev. Morgan to officiate at the grave, as if an Infidel had no rights which the church ought to respect. Was it strictly honest in the church; was it honest in the Christians, to do thus with a disbeliever? Was it honest in the reverend gentleman to accept an application for his services except through me? Does any end justify the means? I would beg leave here to say that my wife lived and died in my own faith, that of the total disbelief in all dogmas, of all theology. She believed not in god, devil, hell, or heaven. I write this short epistle just to show the religious intolerance of the nineteenth century.

Not to the Point.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I have been reading the notice of the Klickitat Society, in a January issue, with its platform attachment, which I think needs to be more to the point, that we may know whether it is orthodox or radical, religious or humanitarian, or what else may be the real spirit of it. I find nothing in it that I think an orthodox person would object to, not even its claim to free speech and free press, since it caps this demand by requiring all to live moral and pure lives. Even one's freedom of opinion and speech (minus the liberty to act upon it) is squelched by the stress laid upon this requirement that all shall live in purity of life and character, since it doesn't say what, in its opinion, constitutes living a life of purity. No minister or priest will object to our opinions, so long as we don't express or act upon them. Expressing them would alone (if radical to their dogmas and social rules) brand me as one not living in purity of life and character. What good then would be my conflicting opinions, with this moral-purity bugaboo hanging over my head, to be manipulated by my masters as a restraining reality? What would the Klickitat Society do with such as lived not in purity according to its views, whatever they may be? I hope its constitution is less obscure in its purposes. All any priest or minister will demand of any of us is that we live in "purity of life and character" as they choose to interpret the rules for such life. Have the members of this society any rules of action of the individual that it asks the world to respect? That is the main thing for those of us to know who favor a scientific, humane, social, and equality state of progression—that is, may the individual indulge in such "vices" of thought or action as neither directly nor indirectly harm another?

The Worth of a Minister's Word.To the Editors of Freethought:*

FREETHOUGHT and the Truth Seeker are welcome visitors in my home. We live on the Delta southeast of Greeley, with the Rocky Mountains on the west to fill the imagination with wonder and delight, and on the north is the Linn Grove Cemetery, which always throws a dark shadow across my path when I see others mourn the loss of their friends.

The funeral services of L. L. Putnam, one of our staunchest advocates, was held the 18th of March, under the auspices of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, of which he was a member. The family are all Liberals and intended to have a secular funeral, but the Order required that their chaplain should conduct the exercises. Therefore a member of the family called upon the clergyman (he being a Presbyterian) and informed him in regard to their belief, and requested him not to say anything contrary to their views, and gave the minister a history of Mr. Putnam's life. The divine promised he would not say anything that would in any way be repulsive to an unbeliever. But after giving Mr. Putnam's history and speaking of what an exemplary life he had lived, he asserted his bigotry by preaching one of the most awful hell-fire and eternal-damnation sermons ever listened to. So much for the word of a minister of the gospel. This should be a warning to Liberals not to intrust the burial ceremonies of their friends to the hands of such foes. Just before moving from Greeley, I met Mr. Putnam, and he said when I was ready to remit to FREETHOUGHT again, I might call upon him, but alas! it will never be.

Assuring you that I will ever lend a hand toward your support, I remain, Yours for truth EULAH C. STILLWELL.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument MR. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

DR. DIX's sermon, says the Argonaut, is still the subject of discussion in New York. One lady, on being asked what she thought of it, replied: "I have not read it. I am not very particular, but I must draw the line somewhere, and I draw it at Dr. Dix—and Zola."

THE Alta California presents its reports of court proceedings under the heading, "The Wages of Sin." In most cases the penalty is fine or imprisonment, which is a perversion of scripture. We do not read, even in the revised version, that the "wages of sin is ten days in the lock-up."

MONTREAL, Canada, is enjoying all the benefits and edification of a religious row. The Catholics want a public statue of the Virgin Mary, while the Protestants are opposed to so honoring that peculiarly endowed female. Petitions from both factions are raining in upon the common council. The devotees of the virgin claim that the statue would ward off smallpox and other epidemics. It might be suggested that they should erect a statue at private expense and then get the health board to adopt it in the form of a resolution.

THE party of Catholic pilgrims on their way from Mexico to Rome with $200,000 worth of gifts for the pope should return home and repent of the folly which they thought to commit. The pope is the richest impostor in the world, and the Mexicans are about his most wretched and poverty-stricken subjects. When they arrive at Rome he will merely gobble their gifts and kick them in the mouth. It were better for them if some kind hand should turn these pilgrims around and some friendly foot kick them in the other direction.

THE annual letter of the Twelve Apostles of the Mormon church is a queer document to emanate from polygamists. It is, says an exchange, "an exhortation to pure and right living." A young elder in the conference who raised his adolescent voice in behalf of plural marriage was "sat upon" by his elders. It is possible that the Mormons really mean to abandon polygamy, but if so what will they do with the tomes of biblical argument in its support with which they have vanquished all religious objectors?

Above all, will they give up their claim that polygamy was divinely instituted as a cure for the "social evil" with which monogamic communities are cursed? If so, what will they have left to fight for?

THE citizens of the territory adjacent to Pasadena, in which place Prohibition is understood to reign, are alive to the great issues which they are called upon to meet. An enterprising publican opened a saloon nine miles from the town, and the residents of that locality held a mass meeting last Saturday night and by the living voice voted to annex. Prohibition is thus extended, and nine square miles added to Pasadena's corporate limits.

THE exclamations of horror with which press correspondents and even editors have greeted the utterances of the International Council of Women on the family question speak volumes for the virgin innocence of our moulders of public opinion. The newspaper fraternity of this great country is a brood of callow chickens, and the attempts of the International Council of Women to invest them with the plumage of experience has been promptly and appropriately resented.

A CERTAIN Rev. C. O. Brown, of Dubuque, Iowa, got off a sermon not long ago on the connection of Colonel Ingersoll with the attempt to repeal the statute under which Anthony Comstock carries on his trade. The Truth Seeker of April 1 reviews the sermon and the facts and convicts the Rev. Mr. Brown of a whole column of falsehoods. If the testimony of the clergy about another world bears no more relation to the truth than what they say about this, we are wasting our money in supporting them.

NEWS AND NOTES.

California is a succession of lovely pictures, and Pomona is like the rest—a broad valley sparkling with cultivation, edged with green foothills winding into blue mountains topped with glittering snow. Here the morning comes with breezy delight; here the noontide glows with soft, warm splendor; and most enchanting are the sunset's delicate lusters, gold on all the hills burnished like Achilles' shield. The chasms of the precipitous mountains seem like fairy halls in the fleeting radiance, and the snowy summits defy the black banners of the night.

I found Pomona a favored spot. I have not received anywhere a warmer welcome. The air seems to be pervaded with the bright spirit of the new. The opera house was full on two evenings, and the band of music gave the charm of romance to the discussion of the great themes of liberty and justice. It was an appreciative audience. Some Christians were present, and of these a few left, but only a few, on the first evening. At the close of the second lecture a Secular Union was formed. The following are enrolled in the temporary organization, representing an intellectual and social power which must be deeply felt for reform: C. Burdick, P. C. Tonner, T. W. Brooks, J. B. Camp,

E. B. Tilden, Charles French, Jos. P. Clarke, Mrs. J. P. Clarke, D. B. Moorman, J. C. Lewis, J. C. Gowpil, Peter King, Miss Birda Camp, Miss Ella Bingham, Miss Annie Bingham, O. J. Feny, R. W. Harkers, H. B. Adelson, Henry Bruck, J. S. De Ment, Mrs. J. French, E. J. Rogers, E. B. Duncklee, Mrs. Bessie H. Ting, C. H. Hogan, J. A. Clarke Jr., J. Bryan, Mr. and Mrs. M. G. Rogers, A. Hamilton, and A. W. Brooks.

Pomona is the former home of my friend Shaug, and where he kept up a lively skirmish with the clergymen and they all dreaded his sharp shooting. Mr. Charles French, mayor of the city, who arranged for the lectures, is a representative man of this country, who through all the blows of fortune makes way with magnificent courage and wins the laurel by indomitable pluck. Such is the spirit that makes California the glory that it is.

I. B. Camp took me out to his ranch, where he too has made the struggle and the success, and can show the well-earned fruits of hard labor. I guess he has discovered a mint of money in flowing artesian wells. Water is worth almost as much as gold in this country. It is reckoned at a thousand dollars an inch, flowing permanently. A few inches of water, in perpetual stream, is therefore quite a comfortable fortune. I am certainly a cold-water man to that extent, and wish I owned a few inches. Mr. Camp is a thorough radical. His boy Orin, fifteen years of age, has never read a chapter in the Bible, finding much more profit in modern books. The daughter, Miss Birda, has the genius of Art along with the spirit of Liberty.

Col. T. W. Brooks is one of those who have won their education in the battle of life itself, where orthodoxy and metaphysics go by the board and genuine science prevails. Mr. Brooks has occupied prominent positions, but he has never flinched from the frank expression of his thought. As secretary of the new association, there is no doubt he will keep the flag at the front.

Our friend P. C. Tonner, president of the Union, never does anything by halves. He knows how to make the ears of the orthodox tingle when he attacks humbug, but withal he is good natured and don't mean to hurt only the pretensions. He is an eloquent talker, wields an able and facile pen, and can do a power of work when the spirit moves. He presided at the lectures, and his remarks were to the point and well applauded.

C. Burdick is a comrade of the veteran army, and is no sunshine patriot, but will stand amid the storm and peril like the gray front of Mount Baldy itself.

The elegant home of Mr. and Mrs. French was the first to greet me with the delightful hospitality, and give courage to my labors.

I met my old friend, Rev. Mr. Clute, of the Unitarian ministry; of broad and noble spirit, in harmony with Freethought, but working on a different line from my own, for he accepts God, immortality, and Christ as the perfect humanity—results as vague and shadowy as orthodoxy itself to me, though beautiful as the sunset's glory. But Unitarianism is simply the sunset glory of Christianity, its latest and finest interpretation, and lovely if it were only true. Mr. Clute and myself wandered out to the heights surrounding the city, and amid nature's surpassing glory we traced the mystical and wondrous pathways of human thought, resplendent and lofty as the far-off mountains themselves. Wonderful human thought, wonderful human hope and aspiration! As the mountains sink into the misty distance and we know not where they end, whether in gloom or glory, so is life. It was exquisite pleasure, amid nature's sublimity, to revel in man's daring speculations that defy death and iron fate. My friend and

I start from radically different premises, but in one thing we agree—in the world of beauty about us and its inspiration for to-day.

H. G. Tinsley, editor of Progress, Louis Phillips, E. B. Tilden, Mr. Ross, Peter King, T. B. Atkinson, and many others have contributed to the pleasure of our work, and we look forward to a brightening future where Freethought has so many noble friends, and where the blooming earth and shining dome make pictures that weave a happy pathway for the feet of toil and hope.

April 4, 1888.

It was my good fortune to meet S. Calhoun at Los Angeles, and besides his subscription he chipped in five dollars for the benefit of FREETHOUGHT. With such generous friends our prospects brighten, and upon hard toil shines the light of success. There is evidence that Liberals of the Pacific coast have taken FREETHOUGHT to their hearts, and will not let the flag sink amid the storm of war, or droop to defeat in the air of indifference. So from field to field hope shines over every disappointment.

Santa Barbara—beautiful for situation, with its wondrous wealth of flowers, with the thousand jewels of the Pacific at its feet—was not altogether a "Beulah-land" for our pilgrim wanderings. Amid the enchanting scenes there were difficult labors and some discouragement. Formerly there was a flourishing Spiritualist Society here, but the many changes of western life broke the forces of this movement, and organized effort for reform is in a state of "suspended animation." Being a stranger we could not find at once the elements of work, and it took a day to enroll the few soldiers of humanity who would hoist the standard and open the way to action. A hall was secured and the lectures advertised on Saturday and Sunday, and Sunday afternoon and evening quite a number of friends were present, and a few who were not friends and unceremoniously departed when the nature of the lecture, after half an hour's talk, was made known to their orthodox intelligence. However, the ice has been broken. I have made a beginning; pleasant acquaintance has been formed; and I guess Freethought will find a home in Santa Barbara, and there will be good fellowship and progress as the years roll on. In this garden of the world must flourish the tree of knowledge and life, and its fruit will be partaken, let the consequences be what they may.

It was a pleasure to meet with Mrs. L. P. Langley, to whom our good friend Washburn gave a letter of introduction. She comes to a sunny old age in the spirit of that thought whose waves give new beauty on the shores of life, like those of the bright Pacific in the evening's gold.

Mrs. Dr. Ashley is one of those who are happy and industrious most when they broaden and beautify the world about them. Mrs. Ashley makes wealth and leisure the opportunity for public benefaction. She is one of the guiding spirits in the beautiful Floral Fair, where woman's genius makes nature's bounty pictures of delight. Santa Barbara has the glory of originating the Flower Festivals which are now such a marked feature of California. These exhibitions are simply wonderful in the magnificence of the display, and it is an hour to be remembered when one walks through the palace of delight, where every perfume mingles with every hue, and resplendent masses like seas of color ripple and break into delicate blooms that jewel the verdant walls. Day after day fresh flowers make dewy the marvelous splendor. I could only get a glimpse of the coming glory of the Santa Barbara Festival. I found Mrs. Ashley, Mrs. Ford, and Mrs. Langley amid the chaotic treasures busily translating the joy of nature into galleries of Art.

Dr. Abner Rush is one of those quaint geniuses who by a dextrous allegorical twist makes the Bible a beautiful treasure house of wisdom. He is a thoroughgoing Radical, who does not believe in theology or the churches. But the Bible is to him a spiritual kaleidoscope, and if one knows how to turn the instrument, truth becomes manifest with prophetic illuminings. He gave me his book, "The Principle of Justice. The World's Crucified Savior," an "Inspirational Lecture" delivered at Irving Hall, San Francisco, which I read with interest. He gave me an hour's drive about the suburbs of Santa Barbara, and by the old mission house where darkness still broods, though the walls are bathed in sunshine. The mystic lights of Theosophy and Spiritualism mingled with the splendid inspirations of this material world.

My friend Stone's letter to James A. Blood Jr. introduced me to a cordial and delightful companion, and I shall not soon forget our Monday's ride along the ocean shore and through the brilliant valleys, where shining fields and homes greet one at every turn. The heavy mists were rolling as we started on our journey, and it seemed as if the rain would pour down in a few minutes. But gradually the masses departed, bright openings appeared, darts of sunshine rifted the gloomy spaces, and glittering views flashed beneath the cloudy canopy, and at high noon all was one effulgent scene, from the blue and wavering summits to the white caps of the measureless sea. Through Monticello and Carpenteria we come to La Sarena, a sightly place just rising from the sea and sweeping back to the foothills, amid whose green and billowy fields and scattering groves are laid the streets of a new city—awaiting the magic wand of the railroad to spring to elegant villas and cottages. I do not think anywhere in the world one could find for leisure and happy work a more smiling and noble prospect. The sea is right before, stretching to the immense horizon, along which the islands Santa Cruz and Anacapa lift their precipitous peaks. Around Point Rincon the billows roll away to San Diego, that can almost be seen on a clear day, while to the north the wharf, and shipping, and dwellings of Santa Barbara attract the gaze. The ever-varying outline of the hills, with dark blue chasms or snowy points, the groves of live oak, the blooming orchards, the brown fields, the rocky steepes where the brook goes tumbling, the houses, and the gardens make a landscape upon which the eye can linger with constant pleasure.

This is the home of Mr. Blood's uncle, James A. Blood, who has been in this country for over a quarter of a century, and who has battled all its vicissitudes. He is a genial philosopher, who takes comfort in this life and in the eternity, knowing as he says that there is immortality—not the immortality of the orthodox heaven, but the immortality that breathes in this life its ever-constant glory, so that each day the paradise will bloom. A happy welcome, food for mind and body, and nature's feast made this day a "thing of beauty and a joy forever."

J. W. Hiller, Mr. Hunt, Mr. Hayman, Mr. Johnson, Dagmar Mariager, Mr. Kroner, Mr. Dutton, Mr. Barber, and others are among the pleasant acquaintances formed in Santa Barbara, and their invitation to come again will by no means be neglected.

Down on the wharf we struck E. T. Gourley and Frank Smith, who take FREETHOUGHT—comrades good and true of the army of progress, whose heart and hand are ever ready for the secular pilgrim, and whose hail and farewell give new courage for the adventurous and toilsome march,

The big steamer awaits me. It sweeps into the glimmering night. The sea rocks, the stars gleam, the lights of the city fade away, the outline of the shores is lost, the mighty Pacific takes one to its generous bosom. From ocean and sky, from bright ship and breathing machinery, from glistening bubbles and dark depths, glowing visions arise, and as if winged by them we pass

"O'er the glad waters of the dark blue sea,
Our thoughts as boundless and our soul as free."

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

April 9, 1888.

THE "FREETHOUGHT" ENTERPRISE.

Let none of our friends lose sight of Messrs. Stone and Schou's generous offers published in our last week's issue.

Mr. Stone's offer is this: That he will send in the names of ten yearly subscribers to FREETHOUGHT, together with $20, and he asks ninety-nine other Freethinkers to do the same. He recommends that those who join him pick out their ten subscribers, forward the names and money, and collect afterwards from those who receive the paper. It is more than probable that in nine cases out of ten the latter will be perfectly willing to pay after they have read the paper for a while and become interested in it. This method, carried out, adds one thousand to our list at once.

Mr. Schou's plan is equally large. He offers in fact, to add $100 to the funds of the paper, and fifty names to its list, provided that nine other Freethinkers will do likewise. His money is ready the day and the hour when the rest of his club are found.

These offers have come voluntarily and without solicitation or suggestion from the publishers of FREETHOUGHT, who have begun the work of opening up this field with the knowledge that a long and hard struggle is before them. They have simply matched their physical endurance, together with such ability as they possess, against established opinion on the one hand and indifference on the other. They have stood their ground, and thus far the odds are in their favor. The battle, however, is not won.

For those who enter the conflict for a great cause it is pleasant to look ahead and contemplate from a distance the laurels of victory. And when that victory has been achieved, it is said to be pleasant to look back upon the toil and endeavor, and note how obstacles have been made the stepping-stones to success. But success is none the less valuable if it be immediate, for every day it is delayed must count as so much lost time. If we would act at all it must be in the living present.

A word may be added. It is not understood that the propositions of Messrs. Stone and Schou are intended in any special sense to boom this paper. The object is, through the present medium, to advance the cause of Secularism, to resist ecclesiastical encroachment, to spread the light of mental liberty. FREETHOUGHT will stand, perhaps, as a sentinel, and it will never object to being relieved when a more vigilant one is ready to take its post.

A LECTURE IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. S. P. Putnam will return to the city at an early day, and on the evening of May 27, the last Sunday in that month, will deliver a lecture in Irving Hall on "The American Republic." Tickets will be printed and can be procured at this office.

In conjunction with the lecture Mr. Putnam will endeavor to secure the organization of the Liberals in this locality into a San Francisco and Oakland Secular Union. He bespeaks the co-operation of all interested in that object.

SOME OF THE FIGURES.

There appear to be a few people unwise enough, timid enough, and mistaken enough to allow themselves to admit that there may be a foundation for the suspicions which Mr. Charles Eckhard is throwing upon the report of Secretary Putnam to the Congress of 1886. It seems to be the object of Mr. Eckhard to prove, first, that the report was not true; second, that the Auditing Committee did not accept it or sign it; and when driven from this position he insinuates, and leaves it to be understood, although he knows it to be false, that Mr. Putnam afterward by misrepresentation induced two of the committee to append their signatures. The fact is that the secretary's honesty was not questioned, that the chairman of the committee signed the report at once, and that he, not Mr. Putnam, afterward secured, without objection, the signatures of the others.

The records of the Union were spread before the public in the columns of the Truth Seeker of Dec. 4, 1886. We quote:

At four meetings of the Board of Directors of the American Secular Union Nov. 16, 23, 28, and 29, at which were present Charles Eckhard, Dr. E. B. Foote Jr., E. M. Macdonald, and S. P. Putnam, the following business was transacted:

CHARLES ECKHARD was chosen chairman of the meeting.

The report of the Auditing Committee appointed for the examination of the treasurer's and secretary's report of the finances was presented and adopted by the Board.

COPY OF REPORT OF THE AUDITING COMMITTEE.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Nov. 12, 1886.

Your Auditing Committee report the receipts and expenditures to date as follows, as per statements of the treasurer, Courtlandt Palmer, and secretary and acting treasurer, Samuel P. Putnam. Courtlandt Palmer's statement from Oct. 27, 1885, to May 18, 1886.

Receipts .....	$1,918.51
Expenditures .....		$1,918.51
Samuel P. Putnam's statement from May 18, 1886 to Nov. 12, 1886.
Receipts .....	$1,449.94
Expenditures .....		$1,449.94
Total receipts .....	$3,368.45
Total expenditures .....		$3,368.45
Balance necessary to raise to pay secretary's salary ..	$618.14
Balance due secretary, Samuel P. Putnam, to Nov. 8, 1886, as per his Bill, Nov. 12, 1886 .....		$618.14

$3,986.59 $3,986.59

Vouchers and accounts examined, and account found correct as per the foregoing statement.

DANIEL E. RYAN, Ch. Com.
William Thorp,
Geo. G. Grower.

Following was a list of disbursements since the treasurer's report to last Congress, amounting to $3,368.45, including $881.86 paid Secretary Putnam, and leaving $618.14 his due. "The above account of expenses," says the report, "has been examined and approved by the Auditing Committee and Board of Directors."

Expenses of the Cleveland Congress received a similar examination and approval by the committee and the directors, Charles Eckhard among them. The report proceeds:

Samuel P. Putnam, the secretary, stated to the Board of Directors that in order to make the work of the Union in the future untrammelled by debt, he would forego his claim to the $618.14 due for services as secretary to Nov., 1886, as allowed by report of Auditing Committee.

Dr. E. B. Foote Jr., presented the following, which was adopted:

Resolved, That we recognize in Mr. S. P. Putnam an efficient secretary, and a man of unusual fitness for missionary work in the way of planting the seeds of Secularism in distant fields, hitherto unplowed with Liberal thought; that in so doing he is preparing the way for other Freethought lecturers to find profitable fields of employment; that his services are fully worth the sum of $1,500 per year as voted at the Cassadaga Congress; and, therefore, let it be further

Resolved, That we again appeal to the generous impulses, the public spirit, and the humanitarian zeal of the Liberal public to raise a fund for the coming year which shall make it possible to carry forward promptly and energetically this and other important work, and in so doing to adhere to the principle that the "laborer is worthy of his hire."

DR. E. B. FOOTE JR.,
CHAS. ECKHARD.
E. M. MACDONALD.

Thus it will be seen that Secretary Putnam began his year's labors indorsed by two honest and responsible men, and Mr. Eckhard.

To recur to the Auditing Committee's report, it has been incorporated into the records of the American Secular Union as correct, signed by three members of the Committee, and approved by the Board of Directors, including Mr. Eckhard, chairman. No document could receive a more unequivocal indorsement. There is no need of any further newspaper controversy. The matter will be referred to the next Congress of the American Secular Union.

CLUB RATES FOR "FREETHOUGHT."

For the purpose of extending the circulation of FREETHOUGHT among those who might not feel sufficiently interested to pay the full price of $2 per year, we will until further notice take subscriptions at these rates, to wit:

Two subscriptions one year .....	$3.00
Three subscriptions one year .....	4.00
Four subscriptions one year .....	5.00

Present subscribers are requested to consider themselves agents for the procuring of others.

A LARGE number of circulars have been printed containing the "Word to Liberals" by Messrs. Stone and Schou, and those gentlemen would like to have the names of others who might possibly join them sent to this office, so that the circulars may be distributed in the most effective manner. This plan of extending the scope of a Liberal paper is laid out for a successful issue. The projectors feel an interest in it which is not second to our own, and they do not desire the credit for a generous offer which they are not given an opportunity to fulfil.

A Poem of Three Epochs.

I.

Come join us in three rousing cheers,
'Twere better now than later,
For veteran bold, grown gray and old,
The staunch Investigator.
Born in a pious atmosphere,
Hard was the infant's lot there;
Opposed by hate, success came late,
But still, somehow, it got there.

II.

And later on another rose,
We hail it with a beaker,
Here's to our friend, world without end,
The good New York Truth Seeker.
Its home is the metropolis—
From Illinois 'twas brought there—
Far off from fame was Bennett's name,
But still, somehow, it got there.

III.

Now fill again up to the brim,
And drink the health eternal,
In hearty toast, of all this Coast
And its new FREETHOUGHT journal.
We plant our flag in Western soil,
And many a friend we've met there;
We build our hope on this green slope,
Subscribe, and we will get there.

SUBSCRIBERS living in the city received FREETHOUGHT one day late last week owing to an oversight through which the post-office authorities detained it twenty-four hours. It was mailed at the usual time.

THE "Truth Seeker Annual" and Ingersoll's argument in the Blasphemy case have been seized by the Canadian customs authorities. The pretense is that they are immoral, and the dealer is liable to a fine of $200 for importing them. A few new words are needed in the languages of the world to characterize the idiocy of the Canadian customs officials.

A GREAT deal is being said about Madam Diss Debar, who has, it is alleged, extorted large sums of cash from Lawyer Marsh for her services as a medium, and she has been arrested for obtaining money under false pretenses. At the same time priests and ministers are allowed to go on extorting millions from their dupes under pretenses as false as those of spiritual mediums can possibly be if all that is charged against them is true. If the fees of frauds are to be cut down the reduction should be made horizontal.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The American party records itself in favor of Abram S. Hewitt for president.—Hydraulic rams are to supply the Lick Observatory with motive power for its apparatus. These will complete the machinery of the structure.—It is as might have been safely predicted. After considering the matter of raising a subscription for the widow of the late Chief Justice Waite, the legal gentlemen of Washinton have concluded to forego the opportunity to show their openhanded generosity, and will ask Congress to award her a sum equal to two years' salary.—The New York medium who obtained so much money from Lawyer Marsh in payment for spirit pictures of his dead relative which she painted to order, has retransferred some of the property to her dupe.—It is hinted that Emperor Frederick of Germany will remodel his ministry. The Bismarck organs speak slightly of the new emperor.—Harriet Beecher Stowe is rapidly failing in health and is losing her memory even of acquaintances.—Mrs. Sophia Johnson, a young New York woman, becoming insane—that is to say, sincere—in religion, chopped off her finger the other day as a sacrifice to the Lord. She was placed in a lunatic asylum and given a padded cell.—The Hon. Ignatius Donnelly, who believes that Bacon wrote the works of Skakspere, is to have a reception tendered him by the Bacon Club of London. This club is an organization of people who, in the Bacon-Shakspere controversy, as Mr. B. Nye has said, take the side of Bacon.—Ex-Senator Conkling of New York died on the morning of the 18th., aged 60.—William O'Brien, editor of United Ireland, has got himself into jail again by attending a forbidden meeting of the Nationalists.—The proselyting overtures of Mormon missionaries in West Virginia are repulsed by the natives, who have burned the house of one and warned the whole of them out of the community.—The flint glass workers of Pittsburgh, Pa., have won a strike, and the manufacturers have resumed business on the workers' terms.—There was a lively fight under the window of FREETHOUGHT last Saturday. A big Italian scavenger yanked an offending car-driver off his car, laid open his head with a piece of iron, and then fell on him in the scuffle that ensued. An athletic citizen in a long linen duster grabbed the Italian by the collar, and after sweeping the pavement with his person, hoisted him to his feet and hustled him off to the station house, followed by a crowd of people who wanted to lynch the son of Italy. The car-driver went to the hospital to have his head doctored.—The Stanford boom for president has reached the East and is favorably received.—A colored man named Duplex has been elected mayor of Wheatland—the first case of the kind on the Coast.—A Rev. Mr. Hammond is working the revival "racket" in San Francisco. Is this the famous lunacy encourager of the East?—Out of an estimated population of 734,750, there were 1,066 deaths in California during the month of March, giving a percentage of 1.4 per thousand. Of these, 7 were victims of alcoholism, and 183 died of consumption. The latter were mainly strangers who came too late in search of health.—The New York Assembly has adopted a resolution providing for the submission of a prohibition amendment to the people of the state.—John L. Sullivan sailed for home on the 12th. A large crowd was present to speed the disappointed pugilist.—Superstitious people regard the falling on the heads of the workmen who were tearing it down of the roof of a building where the Thirteen Club formerly met as nothing more than was to be expected. The parochial school building that not long ago fell on the priest who planned it, and killed him, is overlooked and proves nothing.—Two thousand six hundred emigrants left Queenstown, Ireland, in one week just passed. There is no restriction, we believe, on this desirable sort of emigration.—There were some hot days last week, and in parts of the state the thermometer rose to 90 degrees.—S. M. Wilson, of San Francisco, is spoken of for the vacancy left by the death of Chief Justice Waite. Another rumor gives Mr. Wilson the mission to England in place of Phelps, who may get the chief justiceship.—The Rev. Father Powers, of Livermore, was recently fined $50 for caning a boy who went to see a baseball game on Sunday.—Matthew Arnold, the noted English poet, scholar, critic, and theologian, died suddenly in Liverpool, the 16th, from heart disease. He was in his 66th year.—The German emperor had another relapse early in the week.—All the breweries in and around New York locked out their men on Monday, and refused longer to recognize the unions.

LITERARY NOTES.

R. FORDER, 28 Stonecutter street, London, E. C., is responsible for the publication of a pamphlet on "Bible Bestiality, and Filth from the Fathers." The collocutor conceals his cognomen.

CHARLES SEARS publishes a historical and descriptive sketch of the North American Phalanx, a co-operative scheme tried and abandoned some forty years ago at Redbank, N. J. The sketch makes a 5-cent pamphlet.

WE are unable to understand what Mr. Oswald Dawson desires to make out in his pamphlet entitled "An Indictment of Darwin," published at 63 Fleet street, London, E. C., unless it be that Mr. Darwin was a hypocrite. But it will need stronger evidence than Mr. Dawson presents to make that proposition clear.

"THE New Departure," a pamphlet by William H. Muller, gives a great deal of information about the Sinaloa colony. In this way Mr. Muller is somewhat more successful than Mr. Owen himself in the larger work on "Integral Co-operation." By sending five cents to Mr. H. W. Faust, 307 Fourth street, San Francisco, a copy of this pamphlet may be obtained.

DR. W. H. BENSON, of Philadelphia, gives "Easy Lessons in Socialism" in a 31-page 6-cent pamphlet, a copy of which he has sent us. His lessons are plain and to the point, and his last ten pages, wherein he considers the religious question, will be read with joy by every Freethinker under whose eye they may fall. Dr. Benson's address is 1225 Filbert street, Philadelphia, Pa.

ONE of the most thoughtful and interesting articles lately published is that by Prof. T. H. Huxley in the Popular Science Monthly for April. It would make about eight pages of this paper. In the same Monthly for May the first of a series of articles on "Darwinism and the Christian Faith" will be printed. The publishers state that the author's name is concealed, but that he is supposed to be an Oxford tutor. Whatever he may say about Darwinism and the Christian faith it is a foregone conclusion that he will not reconcile them.

GEORGE CHAINEY has returned from Australia, and continues in this city the publication of his monthly, the Gnostic. We learn from announcements that the Gnostic is a "journal of Spiritual Science, devoted to Esoteric Religion, Psychometry, Occult Science, Mental Therapeutics, Human Liberty, and the culture of all that is Divine in the Human Race." Anna Kimball-Chainey, George Chainey, and W. J. Colville are publishers and editors; rates of subscription, $2 per year in advance; sample copies, 25 cents. Being far in the lead of the majority in religious thought and purpose, the Gnostic will depend for its patronage upon the most advanced and earnest Souls. In conjunction with the Gnostic Mr. Chainey and Mrs. Kimball-Chainey will conduct the "Delsarte Conservatory of Oratory, Elocution, and Dramatic Art, including the Gnostic School of Psychic and Physical Culture." The faculty of the conservatory is composed of Mrs. Anna Kimball-Chainey, Honorable President and Instructor in Mental Therapeutics, Psychometry, Medial and Soul Culture; and George Chainey, President, Professor of Esthetic Physical Culture, Physical Culture, Physiology and Voice Culture, Elocution, Oratorical and Dramatic Action. All these are for the development and expression of the Soul. This is a queer world.

Columbus; or, a Hero of the New World. A Historical Play by D. S. Preston. New York and London. G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1887.

This truly American drama, by a gentleman of advanced views, is dedicated to James Russell Lowell, who speaks of it highly, as does Edwin Booth. The introductory poem gives this beautiful description of Mr. Lowell's home at Cambridge:

"The elm, in autumn's broadest glow,
Transfigured all the tranquil scene,
From sun to daisied turf below,
And phantom-haunted porch between.
Through the sweet ocean of the air
The boughs dropped many a yellowing fleet;
In rivalry of plume, as fair,
Chirped the gold robins at their feet."

In the first act, Columbus appears before Ferdinand and Isabella in the Alhambra, which had but just been conquered from the Moors. His proposal to sail around the world is at first rejected; because Bishop Fonseca shows that, according to the Bible, the earth is flat, and bids the king embrace this opportunity,

To curb the soul from infidelity.

The queen pleads for Columbus successfully, and offers her jewels for the enterprise, but the bishop bids his fellow-voyagers to plot against him in the service of heaven. Accordingly a mutiny breaks out in the fleet, as is depicted in the second act, but is quelled by a vision of the future glory of America.

The third act shows King Ferdinand, still in the Alhambra, and speaking thus:

Month follows month. The crimson sun descends
Like an escutcheon stained with knightly blood,
Into the sea; and dark the waves extend,
Like folds of o'er-gorged monsters. Sea and sky
Alike are silent. From the west returns
No faintest shadow of the glorious shapes
It hath engulfed. No ghost in warrior's arms;
No vision of wrecked seamen, drenched with spray;
No monk in shrowding cowl; no son of toil,
White-lipped, with thews relaxed; no spectral craft
Against the low, weird moon. An argosy,
Snatched beyond rescue by the shifting sands,
Were not a loss more hopeless than this venture.

He has scarcely finished saying this to Isabella, when they are told that America had been discovered, but the news is brought by the conspirators with the bishop; and they hasten to assure the king that no gold has been found, and to tell the queen that Columbus is sending the natives to Spain to be sold as slaves. Both sovereigns are indignant, and a friend of the bishop is sent out with orders to investigate the charges against Columbus and depose him if guilty. The envoy deposes Columbus, without waiting to try him, and sends him home in chains. His appearance thus in Spain moves his sovereigns to pity; his innocence is brought to light; and the fifth and last act ends with a vision in which appear "the allegorical impersonations of the states composing the American Union," surmounted by "the glorious images of Columbus, Washington, and Lincoln." #### MR. STEVENS'S PAMPHLET.

"GOD IN THE STATE," by E. A. Stevens, is an able document. Those who do not believe there is any union of church and state in this country would better read it, and carefully. Price 10 cents. Address Putnam and Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco.—Foundation Principles.

THE BIBLE AS THE WORD OF GOD.

The sensible American of this day makes up his religious opinions from the best evidence at hand. He sums up the known facts of the universe, the world, man, the soul, God, and the future, and his conclusion is his religion. It is in harmony with the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. In fact, they are a part of it. The work of our fathers is not second to that of any men on earth. They were infinitely more wise, more honorable, and better men than the bishops in the Council of Nice, or the fathers of the church.

The clergy derive their religion from Moses, Paul, Eusebius, the pope, Luther, Calvin, or Wesley; and perhaps Christ.

All these persons were and are ignorant of the most important truths in relation to man, his rights, his constitution, and his destiny. They are no more to the wise men of our day than a wheelbarrow to a locomotive.

Our clergy pretend to train young men in their colleges in the classics, the sciences, theology, and logic. But when their pupils emerge from the dark cloisters into the light of day, they find themselves pigmies in mind, who have been misled rather than instructed, and well informed in nothing.

Science has been diluted for them. History has been perverted. And the logic of the theological seminary is a mere burlesque of the rational process. The laws of evidence are suppressed, lest the neophyte should discover that the faith has no foundation in fact.

Dr. Scudder, of this city, is supposed to be a polished shaft of clerical proficiency. He is called D. D. because he is supposed to have imbibed the entire scheme of Christian doctrine. He is a man of years, of eminence, and of ability—so far as a clergyman can be able. He delivers a sermon on the Bible as the word of God, and we propose to follow his footsteps, and show how helpless, and even childish, his great mind becomes when it undertakes to reason out the monstrous absurdity that God could ever have had a hand in such a book.

He begins thus: "There is an intelligent, loving, and personal God, the maker and father of man." We grant that much without question.

"God would likely desire to instruct and guide his creatures." Let this also be accepted.

"Man needed such guidance and instruction." We do not doubt it. Man appears in all ages to have stood in great need of instruction, and does yet. There is still much that a revelation might improve.

"Many books pretend to be the revelation, and claim attention as such." The doctor is right again. Many, indeed, make that claim. The book of Mormon is one.

"The Bible is far the best of all those books." It may be so. We have not read them all. Such as we have read have not made a very brilliant impression on our mind. We are ready to admit that the Bible may be the best in spots and the worst in spots; but we will grant it to be the very best of the lot.

"Therefore the Bible must be the book of God." It does not follow at all. There is no sound logic here. They may all be counterfeits, and yet the Bible the best. The best of a nest of rotten eggs is not necessarily a good egg, any more than the best counterfeit is a good dollar. We object to this statement on the ground that it is not logical, and for the following further reasons:

The Bible is not such a book as a wise and good God would send. The Bible has not instructed mankind, but deluded, bewildered, and misled. The Bible sets out no well settled knowledge on any subject; no theory of the universe; no description of the world; no philosophy of man; no system of government, of marriage and divorce, of education of children; no means of living. Had it said as much about the rights of man and of government as the Declaration of Independence, it would indeed have been worthy to be called divine. But it is no guide on any question that agitates the human mind or concerns human welfare. Even on the matter of faith and practice, and salvation, its great purpose, as Doctor Scudder would say, it is vague, indefinite, and utterly misleading.

Christ is represented as saying, "He that believeth in me, and is baptized, shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned." But when it is asked what shall you believe in or about him, every sect has a different answer. You consult the book in vain to find one that you can rely upon. You are to believe something and be saved. If you disbelieve you are to be damned. Yet that something is not set out in plain terms. The men who pretend to follow the book cannot agree on a single point. You must be baptized or you must be damned. How shall it be done? Will a sprinkle do? Will the sign of the cross with a wet finger? Must you be plunged over head? At what age? Under what conditions? There is no answer. The book is silent. The believers are of all opinions.

The wisest men of this age are those who study nature and let that book alone. It is not a guide to anything we desire to know. It is a compound of history, poetry, stories, opinions, ceremonies, and laws, as diverse, contradictory, foolish, and impossible as any ancient book can well be. The man who reads it as a guide, and reads nothing else, will be a raving and dangerous fanatic, or an idiot. They do turn out both at times.

Do we reject the Bible, then, as an inspired book? We do, utterly and wholly. There are some good things in it, but they are few and far between, and in a great stack of folly, untruth, and indecency.

Do we take no account of its prophecies? It has no prophecies. It has nothing worthy of that name from end to end. If any clergyman thinks otherwise, we will meet him and argue the case.

Do we reject its miracles? We do, every one. Our modern Spiritualists can beat the best of them, and only deceive at last.

Indeed, our Revolutionary fathers rejected this book as neither guide nor authority. They rejected the churches founded upon it—all of them. They rejected Christ, the pope, the apostolic succession. They said, "It is all unproven. We reject it. It shall have no part in our government. All men shall think as they please." And our fathers did right. We hold with them; and will defend their decision against all the clergy in the state.

A STORY OF TWO BEARS.

For the Children.

There are two bears who live in the sky. One is larger than the other, and is called the Great Bear. The other, being smaller, is known as the Little Bear. For many millions of years, for aught we know, these two bears have lived right there in the blue sky. They have never been known to eat up dear little children, as the two bears are said to have done in the Bible bear story, but on the contrary, they have been very useful in shedding sparkling little rays of light and beauty upon the people who live on the planet Earth. More than that, they have been the means of guiding travelers on the land out of dangers and difficulties. Sailors, too, sailing o'er the trackless main, have been shown by them the right course to harbor and to safety. How? I'll tell you. There are seven stars in the northeastern sky, placed so as to look very much like a big dipper. Look up and find them. Two of these pretty stars are called pointers, and they point to a beautiful bright star midway between the northern horizon, and a point right over your head. This bright star is known as the North Star. You can easily find the big dipper in the sky, and from it trace the Great Bear and then the North Star. It is this star that sailors and travelers think so much of, for it never leads them astray, so they have reason to think highly of it.

When you are looking for the North Star, don't mistake that large red star near the end of the Bear's tail for it. That is Arcturus, and is the very brightest star in all the northern sky.

Quite near to the North Star is the Little Bear. In it, also, are seven stars, appearing, for all the world, like a cunning little dipper, hence, this seven-starred figure is called Little Dipper. As you look at it, you can easily trace the dimensions of the Little Bear. In the extreme end of the Little Bear's tail is the North Star. It is called, also, the Polar Star.

When it is dark, look up to the sky and find the Two Bears in their sky parlor, and then look for the North Star, which is better than the "Star of Bethlehem," because it is always in its own place where all can see it. It never disappears, and is a beacon of hope and promise, showing always the right course, following which, travelers o'er sea or land cannot mistake the way.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book, or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

ANAHEIM ORGANIZED.

Mrs. K. Parker, secretary of the Anaheim Secular Union, in writing for a charter, informs us of the enthusiasm aroused and the organization formed at the conclusion of President Putnam's course of lectures, especially the one on the "Nine Demands," which was well attended by the best citizens and well received. Anaheim is the occidental Eden and stands a crowning glory of what in early days a band of German Freethinkers accomplished. It was the single, solitary exception in this country of successful colonization. While the city has outgrown its foundation phase, it has nevertheless attracted to it men and women of brain and courage, who, the secretary informs us, "will work for the Union and universal mental liberty," and she hopes "that no prejudice will be allowed to creep into our Union, no bickerings, no strife, but that we shall work together for the liberation of the state from the church, and support our glorious bulwark of freedom, the United States Constitution, entire and intact." This breathes the spirit which should animate every true Secularist. Frank Ey is president, and it is presumed that he will keep a vigilant outlook for the enemy. President Putnam's labors in Anaheim, San Jacinto, and Fresno prove what a loyal soldier in the cause of Secularism can accomplish. We wonder that in the midst of incessant labor, and the rush and whirl of travel, he can pen such poetic prose—such glittering dewdrops fresh from perfumed flowers, such word-paintings of an earthly, actual paradise. May his voice and pen find welcome responses in golden showers and well-earned appreciation.

In proof of the adage that "nothing succeeds like success," is the extended and favorable notice the Chicago press is giving the meetings of our Union, while the same speakers have been unnoticed for years. The Herald speaks of our last lecture as follows:

The Forum, the large and handsome new hall of the Chicago Secular Union, was crowded last night, the occasion being a lecture by Judge E. R. Paige, his subject being: "How Worlds Grow." The hall was elaborately trimmed in the vicinity of the rostrum, the central feature being the United States flag hanging above the cross, the emblem of orthodox religion. The secularism which is typified by the flag above the cross is the silent protest of the society against ecclesiasticism before the state. All who visited the Forum last night were presented with a circular on which was set forth the "Nine demands of Secularism." The fourth "demand" in the list is a key to the others. It is thus phrased:

"We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited."

The exercises of the evening were commenced by the singing of a patriotic glee by the quartette. It was a spirited apostrophe to the flag of the nation. Stafford Bolton, secretary, read the minutes of the preceding meeting, which were approved. Another song by the quartette.

President Stevens then introduced Judge Paige, who was greeted with applause. [Here follows an extended report of the lecture.]

At the business meeting the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the sincere thanks of the Chicago Secular Union are hereby extended to Dr. W. H. and Mrs. Henry, not only for munificent generosity financially, but for the active interest and enthusiasm they have manifested for the society, and especially do we recognize the far-seeing executive ability by which the doctor prompted the procuring of a permanent home, his intelligent and successful direction in its preparation, and the prominent part he has taken in the up-building of Secularism in Chicago; and be it further

Resolved, That we tender our acknowledgments, esteem, and appreciation to Mrs. Dr. Henry for the beautiful and elaborate floral decorations which (even while absent from the city) she has so graciously donated, furnishing unmistakable evidence of her kindly remembrance and sympathy.

Had Dr. McLeod also been absent we should have tried to suitably express our deep obligations for years of labor and generous bounty for the good of the cause, but it would be of no use to attempt it when he was present.

Am just now busily engaged forwarding bundles of literature to contributors to the campaign fund of the American Secular Union and find the cost of transmission is going to be quite a serious item. I hope that all parties will remit enough postage to cover the cost of sending out further documents. Individually that would be a small outlay; to the Union, a serious expense. If sufficient postage is furnished we will forward them any other pamphlets or leaflets we may be able to issue.

About those leaflets? Do the Liberal readers realize how little is known about the American Secular Union? Ask your orthodox neighbors, and nine times out of ten they will tell you they never heard of it. If you are a Liberal, Freethinker, or Secularist; if you believe in the essence of American liberty, it is your duty to enlighten them on the fact that we do exist and what we exist for. Now let every one whose eye this meets commence to co-operate for the common cause. The majority of my correspondents deplore that orthodoxy has got the grip on their town. Two or three good Liberals can set orthodoxy out in the cold in any small community. My friends, you have not done your duty. Take pattern from the success of orthodoxy and organize. Become a part of the American Secular Union, and if there are none to organize with you, you can help the work along somewhere by sending in the sinews of war. Let us keep the guns well-shotted with literature, and give the battalions of God-in-the-State an effectual bombardment. We are marshalling the forces to break the manacles of fear and superstition from the human mind. Who will respond to the roll-call? not for bloody conquest, but to light the world with the Torch of Reason, and lift the race to higher and nobler conditions; to keep the watch-fires of Liberty burning in every village and hamlet. Have the lecturers visit you, and sustain the Freethought press. If Secularism does not thrive it is because you do not perform your duty. You profess to honor the Freethought heroes—for what? Doing just what most Secularists through fear singularly fail. The sustaining by their means of their opinions. Still, as sure as "Ever the truth comes uppermost" success is bound to be the benison of an association which, though weak in point of organization, gathers to the support of its principles such a noble host as year by year sustain the American Secular Union. Contrast the high purposes, the unselfish sacrifices, the chivalrous conduct of this brave band with the petty frauds and pious slanderers whom we recognize as our enemies—enemies to the Declaration of Independence, to the Constitution, and to natural rights.

We are confining ourselves to constitutional methods, and the constitution is the same with which we originally started out. It points like a lode-star of destiny to absolute divorce between church and state. We invite all who can rise above personal piques of the past to come into cordial union, and we will give them the right hand of good fellowship. E. A. STEVENS.

WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I regret to say that there is great need of an Infidel or anti-church paper on this coast. And as long as our people are willing to support several hundred middle men, known as priests and clergymen, to expound and to compound a lot of senseless twaddle called theology, this need will exist.

To me it is a profound mystery how people of average intelligence will listen to and pay for the re-hashing of idle fables, silly stories, clumsy absurdities, and impossibilities which had their origin in the childhood of our race and which to accept we must throw away reason, science, and common sense.

Yes, so long as the people of this coast hug the delusion that the Bible, with all its obscenity, vulgarity, and immorality, is the word of God, we who look for truth and knowledge in the beautiful, unerring, and changeless book of nature must support FREETHOUGHT. There are other and older sacred books than the Bible which contain just as much evidence of divinity, just as good morals, and far less immorality and cruelty.

Though we have had the Bible for nearly two centuries, yet humanity the world over is suffering and oppressed by giant wrongs. Ignorance and licentiousness, drunkenness and starvation, are constantly before us as the result of these wrongs, yet most Bible advocates are indifferent to the most vital questions concerning our existence here and now. One day in seven they repair to some magnificent building devoted to the worship of God (mammon), from which all but the rich are practically excluded, to sing praises to him who, if living, would be imprisoned as a tramp and for not wearing the amount of clothing prescribed by the laws of his professed followers. The six other days are devoted to making money, or, in other words, trying to get something for nothing.

Many of our churches are most beautiful to behold. The dim, mellow light that comes through the many-colored panes, and falls on velvet pews; the melody of the organ's tones, the rites and ceremonies, are pleasant to the ear and beautiful to behold; but there are better sacraments and a truer worship.

There are certainly questions that ought to be settled, and that would have been settled, had not theology stood in the way. All over Christendom "God's children" are under the oppressor's heel—the young and beautiful forced to barter their beauty for bread, yet our preachers are talking about infant baptism, recognition in heaven, etc., etc.

How different would have been our condition to-day had the founder of our religion treated of the practical things of life instead of leading men and women to waste their energies on the unknowable. How glorious would have been the results had he, instead of making wine and commending its use, condemned it with the physiological reasons therefor. How much better it would have been had he taught the people that there is no need of poverty in this rich world; that the fact of living is proof of the right of every human being to the things necessary to sustain life; that holding more of nature's bounty than is necessary for a comfortable subsistence is a crime, instead of teaching that poverty is a virtue. Had Jesus taught for the good of this world, those who do the hardest work would not have the poorest food to eat and the meanest clothes to wear; their homes would not be in garrets, basements, and tenements; but, being the workers, they would have the best of everything. And they can have it yet if they will give up theology for sociology. GEO. T. BRUCE.

RELIGION.

The professors of all religious creeds have in all ages pretended that their creed was the inspired word of God. But who or what God it is, has ever remained a mystery. The Bible is filled with what God said and did. Adam and Moses both heard God speak, if that book can be relied upon. But there is no record of God ever having been seen, and yet Christians insist that we must believe in their mythical God or eternal torture in a lake of burning brimstone will be the doom of our souls hereafter. This threat was first made in an age when the masses were too ignorant to know that the physical body only can be tortured with fire. Has anyone the right to make such threats? If attended with injurious results—and they have been—the person who made them would be indictable under a just code of laws. But instead, for many centuries, millions have been imprisoned, tortured, murdered, aye, burned at the stake, for refusing to believe a creed that justified these atrocities. In deference to the intelligence of this age they are now deferred to the time when we become the spiritual denizens of another world.

When the world was supposed to be flat, heaven, the supposed residence of God, was located above the stars, and even now Christianity teaches the same theory even though the telescope for nearly four centuries has explored the celestial firmament without discovering God's abode or that of the angels. But they have proved how limitless is the boundless universe, for that instrument has brought down to us the light of stars so distant that, though light travels with the speed of the lightning, more than a thousand years are required for the light of the stars revealed by the telescope to come to this earth.

Christian theology also teaches that this globe only 6000 years ago was created and prepared for the abode of the first man Adam in six days; untruths indorsed every day in the year by the press and the pulpit. Shall we believe these fabricators whose falsehoods are exposed by the investigations and deductions of science? these falsifiers who to enslave the bolies of men persist in enslaving their minds. From the earliest ages this has been the object and purpose of religion. Possibly it may have been the indispensable auxiliary of civilization, for during many centuries missionaries have been the avant couriers of traders. Take the Pacific Islands and Africa as examples. But what wrecks have they made of races that had existed throughout the barbaric ages. These facts, together with the conditions that exist among the nations most highly civilized, prove that the days of the usefulness of a theology are past that teaches men to bear the wrongs that are in the hope of future wrong hereafter. Is it not plain that under the present Christian civilization things are steadily growing worse and worse? Instead of improvements in science and art benefiting the masses, they are making their condition worse. But if we dare speak of tearing down the rotten social fabric, theologians everywhere with very few exceptions cry "Hands off," proving that theology or religion, if you please, is in league with hell instead of God or good. S.

A SOLOMON IN CHINA.

The aged Biblical chestnut illustrating the wisdom of Solomon will be recognized in a different dress in the following from the St. James Gazette:

Two women came before a mandarin in China, each of them protesting that she was the mother of a little child they had brought with them. They were so eager and so positive that the mandarin was sorely puzzled. He retired to consult with his wife, who was a wise and clever woman, and whose opinion was held in great repute in the neighborhood. She requested five minutes in which to deliberate. At the end of that time she spoke: "Let the servants catch me a large fish in the river, and let it be brought to me alive." This was done. "Bring me now the infant," she said, "but leave the women in the outer chamber." This was done too. Then the mandarin's wife caused the baby to be undressed and its clothes put on the large fish. "Carry the creature outside now and throw it into the river in sight of the women." The servant obeyed her orders, flinging the fish into the water, where it rolled about and struggled—disgusted, no doubt, by the wrapping in which it was swaddled,

Without a moment's pause one of the mothers threw herself into the river with a shriek. She must save her drowning child. "Without doubt she is the true mother," the mandarin's wife declared, and commanded that she should be rescued and the child given to her; and the mandarin nodded his head and thought his wife the wisest woman in the flowery kingdom. Meantime the false mother crept away. She was found out in the imposture, and the mandarin's wife forgot all about her in the occupation of donning the little baby in the best silk she could find in her wardrobe.

A HEATHEN LAND.

At a preachers' meeting held in this city last month, one of the "relics of the barbarous past" told the rest that he was from Honolulu, and that that city on Sunday had a quiet Christian air to it as compared with San Francisco. Indeed the faith was alive there, and dead here, to all appearance.

Precisely! That is the actual fact of the case. What the churches call Christianity is dead and dying in all the great cities of civilization; and it lives where the people have no sense. In Honolulu, with an idiot for king, and hoodoo dancing girls, a Christian preacher passes for a great man, and is listened to with awe and wonder. But in San Francisco he is out of date, below par, behind the age, and attracts no attention.

We have sense and Honolulu has religion.

San Francisco has 300,000 free, sensible people, who do as they please, and do not mistake a solemn face or a solemn Sunday for true religion. K.

PROF. D. C. SEYMOUR is making a tour in Oregon and Washington Territory giving Liberal and scientific lectures, illustrated with a collection of oil paintings, anatomical and physiological plates, portraits, skulls, busts, etc. He will answer any call to lecture from Liberals who will provide a lecture room and circulate handbills. He says: "No pay is demanded. My audiences will recompense me. Let the friends all through the northwest get up grove and camp meetings, lasting two days or a week, giving me at least thirty days' notice with explicit directions where they are located and how to reach them, and I will be at their service. Address me at No. 100 S. First st., Portland, Or."

THE People Co-operative Publishing Company will have its first annual festival for the benefit of The People, the local Labor paper, on Sunday, April 22, at the Seaside Gardens, Presidio. Prizes, including a house worth $2000, are offered to the holders of the lucky numbers. Tickets admitting gentleman and ladies are $1.00 each, and may be found at this office.

DEATH OF MR. HUGHAN.

A. Wallace Hughan, a well-known and respected Liberal of Oakland, died suddenly of apoplexy, April 14, at his tobacco store at 860 Washington street. The St. Andrew's Society, of which he was a member, took charge of the funeral arrangements, but in deference to his wish Mr. A. H. Schou spoke a few words at the grave. He said:

By the will of our friend, and in the absence of Mr. Putnam, I am called upon to say a few words at our friend's grave—a task I have never, heretofore been called upon to perform; still I must not evade his last request. We are here not to praise our friend; we are here not to blame him; we are here to bury his body. His wish, as expressed in his will, was that his body should be cremated; but in the absence of a crematory in this city, or in San Francisco, his friends, the members of the St. Andrew's Society, believed it would be more in accordance with the other request stated in the will—viz., that the funeral should be of the simplest and most inexpensive kind—to bury the body at Mountain View Cemetery, than to go to the expense and trouble of sending the remains to Los Angeles to be cremated. And I, as one of his friends and companions in his Liberal and tolerant view of things, heartily concur in this belief. The opinion of our friend as to cremation being the best way to dispose of the body was not a sentiment, but a sincere conviction; and if his friends should contend for carrying out his wish in this respect, they believe they would err in the other extreme on account of sentiment.

Now as to our friend as we knew him. He was very humane; he had a kind heart and a conscientious mind; he was tolerant of other men's convictions, and was honest and truthful in his dealings. With regard to creeds he believed that they had an average fitness to the minds of those who professed to believe them, but that as these minds were ever in process of changing, the creeds were becoming unfit to represent the progress of the ages, and therefore should be cast off as an old suit of clothes whenever they became outworn, outgrown, or unseemly. With such a mind this man was always tolerant of the opinions of other men and demanded the same tolerance for his own.

Now, as our friend was always fond of flowers, and as my wife and I often carried him a bouquet, we will for the last time place these blossoms on his casket.

A PREACHER shows how dangerous it is for clerical wisdom to step out into the open air and into the bright light of publicity. One Rev. T. J. Curtis, of the Woodbridge church, speaks of Christ and his kingship. He says: "Humanity must have a chieftain. If a nation is not ruled by Christ's code, it is a pocket-borough of the evil one. I am glad that the American people are asked to put Christ in the Constitution as the great Lord and head of all nations." Here is a man who steps out of a clerical seminary and airs his ignorance by denouncing the republic and the Constitution of our fathers. He comes out of a dark cloister into the sunshine of a free people to spread ignorance and monarchy. He evidently does not know that our fathers, among the best and greatest men of all the world, more than a hundred years ago declared that all government must come from the people, and from no chief whatever. And he does not know that our people indorse these fathers, stand by them, their opinions and their laws, and only look down with pity on men who hunger and thirst after the ignorance of the barbarous past. Put him to school.

It is estimated by Professor Kirchoff, of Halle, that the language most spoken on the globe, for the last thousand years at least, is Chinese, for it is without doubt the only one which is talked by over 400,000,000 of the human race. The next language most in use, but at a very great distance behind Chinese, is Hindustani, spoken by over 100,000,000. Then follow English, spoken by about 100,000,000; Russian, over 70,000,000; German, over 57,000,000, and Spanish, over 47,000,000.

LEAVE the matter of religion to the family altar, the church, and the private school, supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the church and state forever separate.—U. S. Grant.

The Divine Residence.

"Nearer, my God, to Thee," is popular in Pasadena. They are soon to have a railroad to the top of Wilson's Peak, 8000 feet above the town.—Pomona Times.

The Pasadenians will then be like the farmer who visited Chicago, and coming to an eleven-story brick block commenced to ascend the stairway, as he was not posted as to the elevator. On reaching the last story he stepped up to a door and rapped. On the door being opened he inquired: "Is God in?"—Riverside Press.

That might be the natural query in Chicago, perhaps in Riverside, but here in the San Gabriel valley that august personage lives on the ground floor.—Monrovia Leader.

The Compliment.

Miss Sawyer, who is poor, was introduced at a lunch party to Miss Taylor, who is rich, and was coldly received. Miss Sawyer is bright and knows her own antecedents and Miss Taylor's also. She was unabashed, and spoke cheerily: "I'm so glad to meet you. I've often wanted to. It's so funny—my name is Sawyer and my grandfather was a tailor, and your name is Taylor and your grandfather was a sawyer. Mine used to make clothes for yours and yours used to saw wood for mine."

The Sanctity of the Sabbath Preserved.

The reverence for the Sabbath in Scotland is illustrated by an old Highlander, who said to an English tourist:

"They're a God-fearin' set o' folks here, 'deed they are, an' I'll give ye an instance o't. Last Sabbath, just as the kirk was skailin' there was a drover chiel frae Dumfries along the road, whistlin' and lookin' as happy as if it was ta muddle o' ta week. Weel, sir, our laads is a God-fearin' set o' laads, an' they yokit upon him an' a'most killed him."

ONE thing must be said for Tennessee: They stick to their religion there. Now, only last Sunday a man going to church in Knoxville left his wife at the church door while he stepped across the street to shoot two or three men. He did shoot two of them, and would have shot the third had the third not run away. The man himself got one bullet through his arm and another ripped up his scalp, but he managed all right to get into meeting in time for the prayer, if not for the collection. They never let anything interfere with their religion down in Tennessee.—Ex.

AN advertisement of the Independent Pulpit appears in another column. The Pulpit is a 24-page monthly magazine—pages about the size of those of FREETHOUGHT—with cover. It is ably edited by J. D. Shaw, and has many good writers among its contributors. By an arrangement with Mr. Shaw we will take subscriptions for the Pulpit in connection with this paper, sending the two—FREETHOUGHT and the Independent Pulpit—for $2.80. Separately the price of the Pulpit is $1.50, and it is well worth that sum. We hope many will take advantage.

A BOOK of 99 octavo pages is "A Rigid Earth: Geology as Applied to Mining," by Stephen Barton. The contention of the writer is that the interior of this planet is not in a molten state, as generally taught by geology. Mr. Barton appears to thoroughly understand the different aspects of the subject, and gives evidence of being a mining expert. His book cannot fail to interest the student of geology. J. C. Ward is general agent, 64 Main street, Visalia, and the price is $2.

JOHN W. LOVELL, the New York publisher, is sufficiently enthusiastic about the Credit Foncier of Sinaloa to write a little book about it under the title of a "Co-operative City." It is condensed from an address before the Manhattan Liberal Club, New York, Nov. 19, 1886, but does not include the discussion which followed its delivery. Price 5 cents.

WE have photographs for sale of Thomas Paine, Robert G. Ingersoll, and Samuel P. Putnam; also the present writer. The price is 25 cents each, except that of Colonel Ingersoll, which is 40 cents.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Mr. Heston Doing Missionary Work.To the Editors of Freethought:*

DEAR COMRADES: Inclosed find $2 for your excellent paper for one year. I am distributing the numbers received after reading them to the poor benighted clergymen round about, with marked passages to call their attention to such articles as may be instrumental in saving their minds—I am not sure of their souls—from the wicked darkness of Christian superstition.

With the most sincere wishes for the success of FREETHOUGHT and its heretical editors, I am Faithfully and fraternally yours,

WATSON HESTON.

Carthage, Mo., April 6, 1888.

A Suggestion Made.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I wish to make a novel suggestion. How it will work I cannot say, but nevertheless a fair trial should be given it. All men are selfish, and after the dollars. My suggestion is to make all Infidel meetings interesting to the masses. I propose that all Freethought lecturers, wherever their lectures are held, shall pay their listeners a sum of money, enough to induce them to be present. Then if the listeners sit quietly, and behave properly, when they retire the sum agreed upon shall be handed each individual. Such proceeding may convince some. Their time in listening is paid for, and time is money.

Yours, P. H. FOSTER.

Babylon, N. Y., April 8, 1888.

Prohibition Inconsistent with Liberalism.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Wishing to call the attention of some of the professed Liberals of this place to the ridiculous position they occupy in the eyes of the genuine Liberals and Freethinkers, I ask space in your columns for that purpose.

In the first place, I wish to call their attention to the platform adopted by the Prohibitionists at San Francisco on the 5th inst. recognizing God as the supreme ruler of the universe, and prohibiting the manufacture, import, export, and transport of intoxicating beverages within the United States.

Second, I wish to call their attention to the eighth article in the demands of Liberalism, viz: "We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of Christian morality shall be abrogated; and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty."

And as some of our loudest-talking professed Liberals are ardent supporters of the Prohibition movement, I ask them to explain their position and show their consistency. I am past fifty years of age, and have been a Liberal since boyhood, and the older I grow the stronger my belief. I can see no way to conform Prohibition with Liberalism. For instance, in the election which took place at Riverside last Monday, the issue was for and against licensing saloons; and out of a total vote of over eight hundred, the Prohibition element carried by the pitiful majority of forty-five! Where are the rights and liberty of the four hundred in the minority? This is liberty with a vengeance! All fair-minded men admire temperance, and, on the other hand, all genuine Liberals abhor Prohibition. Why? Because it is persecution, and there can be no compromise between the two. Hoping our erring brothers will explain through the columns of your paper, I will drop the subject for the present.

The lectures recently delivered at this place by S. P. Putnam and C. B. Reynolds were well received, and appreciated by all fortunate enough to hear them. They have started the ball in motion, and we must endeavor to keep it moving. We Liberals are very much in hopes that Helen Gardener will visit this coast. The women would turn out to hear her, and where women go, men will follow. The hardest task before us is to induce the public to listen to our lecturers.

You will find my name on your list of subscribers and I forward three additional names of those who wish to try FREETHOUGHT for one year. I shall try to get more subscribers in the future. Yours for Liberty, ISAAC E. CRUM.

San Jacinto, April 13, 1888.

A Quick Response.To the Editors of Freethought:*

In the midst of very busy times I have picked up four subscribers to FREETHOUGHT from among my neighbors. As a particular inducement to take the "newest and best" paper of all, I have given them the benefit of your club rates. Thus they get it for the remarkably low price of $1.25 per year. I take my commission out in solid satisfaction in being able to help our Truth Seeker of the West just a little. Inclosed is money order for $5, for which please address FREETHOUGHT for a year as per list of names. There are others here who will subscribe on these liberal terms as soon as I can get time to bring it to their notice.

A week from to-night I anticipate meeting Mr. Putnam for the first time, and listening to a lecture. I think we shall have a good attendance, as many are already interested.

W. S. RODGERS.

A Good Word.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I am much delighted both with the appearance and tone of FREETHOUGHT. It is like a refreshing breeze from the delightful clime from which it hails. I shall try to extend the breadth of its mission. Send me one dozen copies Stevens's "God in the State," one dozen "Nameless" poems by Voltairine de Cleyre, one copy "False Teachings of the Christian Church" by Washburn, and the balance in copies of FREETHOUGHT of April 7. Two dollars inclosed.

Most truly, D. G. CROW.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument MR. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

Sold at the Office of FREETHOUGHT,
504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. A. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

It gives increased importance to Mr. Gladstone's remarks on Colonel Ingersoll's religious views to know that he gets $1,200 for writing them. It also removes, of course, all doubts as to their sincerity.

It was Washington Irving who said that "with every exertion the best of men can do but a moderate amount of good, but it seems in the power of the most contemptible individual to do incalculable mischief."

THERE are in this state one hundred and twenty settled neighborhoods with populations of from one hundred to five hundred without regular religious services of any kind. The reason presumably is that the people don't want them.

THERE will be an exhibition in Paris next year intended to illustrate all the religions of the earth, past and present. Idols, manuscripts, and all tangible symbols of religions will be shown. Christianity should be stuffed and given a prominent position.

MADAM DISS DEBAR, the New York medium, has received among other communications from the spirits an epistle from St. Peter, the apostle, addressed to Lawyer Marsh. Mr. Marsh accepts it as canonical, but the general public is skeptical. It has the disadvantage of being produced in an age when all but distinctively orthodox frauds are regarded with suspicion.

SAN FRANCISCO has one institution that not every city can boast of. The same is a Russo-Greek church with a Russo-Greek bishop to conduct the services. The bishop is a new importation, and he will endeavor to extend Russo-Greek Catholicism among the residents of the Coast. As an experiment with the novel form of superstition he should be allowed first to try it on a Chinaman.

THE fact that the Rev. Mgr. Leon Bouland, of New York, honorary private chamberlain to the pope, is about to withdraw from the church is considered of sufficient importance to telegraph across the continent. Mr. Bouland's reasons for withdrawing are that he "cannot subscribe to the teachings of the syllabus and doctrines proclaimed by the last Vatican Council, and because he cannot admit the pretensions of ultramontaniam, claiming as it does absolute authority, not only in matters religious, but also in matters scientific, philosophical, social, and political." These excuses do not go to the root of the matter. The reason why everybody should withdraw from the Catholic church is that the church is a system of fraud founded upon superstition, and its head, the pope of Rome, is the prince of impostors. This is the only tenable ground with reference to that church, and most others.

SENATOR INGALLS, of Kansas, has expressed the opinion that in twelve years more the public domain will be virtually exhausted, and that thereafter all kinds of land will increase enormously in value. Those who accept Senator Ingalls's view will make strenuous efforts to possess themselves of the corner lot in San Diego so temptingly held out by Mr. Worthing in this issue of FREETHOUGHT.

THE question arises whether or not a priest has the right to chastise one of his mental slaves. The Rev. T. Powers, of Livermore, thinks he has that right. Catching a lad named Michael Hartigan playing ball on Sunday instead of going to church, the Rev. Father Powers gave him a heavy beating with a cane to remind him of his duty. The courts fined the priest $100 and Hartigan has sued him for $5,000 damages.* Something like an eye for an eye would be appropriate in this case.

THE uncertain tenure of human eminence is illustrated by the political career of Henry George. In 1886 the Central Labor Union of New York nominated him for mayor, secured thirty thousand signatures to a petition asking him to serve as candidate for that office, and then on election day gave him seventy thousand votes. Now, only two years later, the Central Labor Union meets and repudiates Mr. George and resolves to conduct its campaign wholly independent of him. It sometimes happens that men go out to sea again on the same wave that almost landed them high and dry on shore.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Early in the morning, after a heavy sea, the Santa Rosa anchors alongside the beautiful shores of Port Harford, and from dreamland and the rocking deep I come upon the shining morning banks, where the winding iron pathway leads into the bosom of the soft green hills. I seemed to be coming into a new country. It was not like what I had just traversed. The massive mountains were not present; the snowy peaks, the blue chasms, the broad-sweeping plains, and purple horizons. The eminences were gentle, the valleys narrow, and green flowed even to the tops of the sides, and all along were groves. We pursued a circuitous route on the slow freight train. We stopped for an hour at one station, but fortunately a minstrel troupe was hovering by, and regaled us with customary music, so our journey was a happy mingling of life and stupidity, and finally as the afternoon began to decline we reached Nipomo, and in this year-old hamlet—where the banners of metropolitan ambition float—we find our good and true friends of the Grand Army, Mr. and Mrs. Robinett, Herman Fry, and others. Nipomo, meaning "foot-hills," is the name of an immense Spanish grant of forty-eight thousand acres, and this name is attached to the new city that has bloomed so suddenly in these pasture lands, where now the grain and fruit make glad the eye. The ranch belonged to the Danas, in the last generation of which are twenty-two children, located mostly in the neighborhood, and good citizens they are, and show what this climate can do in the way of humanity.

I had a miscellaneous audience the first evening. Dr. Armstrong gave a pleasant introduction. I think about half of my hearers were Christians. There were ministers, elders, and deacons. One of the ministers heartily applauded some of my utterances. He was good-natured and Liberal, and from reports I should judge he was doing something to enlighten the community. He guardedly refuses to commit himself on the Jonah story, and so far he is a little ahead of the majority of his brethren. He is of the Methodist persuasion, but puts as much Universalism into his sermons as he can with profit. He has full houses, and the work of the Lord progresses via good sense and humanity.

Nipomo is a pretty place, a few miles from the sea, and the fresh breezes always cool the summer's heat. The hills about its green plains are not lofty, only rising from one hundred to five hundred feet, and they are capable of cultivation, many of them to the very summit. The Fry Bros. are the leading spirits of this lively burg, and they have brought to it much of the growth and enterprise which have produced so quick a result.

Our first lecture was well received and we decided to give another on Friday evening. Meanwhile, on Thursday evening we made a beginning at Santa Maria, a town of several years' standing, about eight miles to the south of Nipomo.

Robinett is a magnificent campaigner. He never gives up, and has a heart for any fate. He was a soldier boy and went through many fortunes under the starry flag, and he has the same audacity and energy as when he tramped with the "hundred thousand strong." We knew hardly a soul in Santa Maria, but we hired the hall and distributed our circulars, and in the course of time found quite a number of friendly spirits. We struck Dr. Marsh, whom three years ago I met at Turner's Falls, Mass., where George Hartley, now of Florida, once made rattle the old bones of the orthodox camp. Since then the doctor and I, from the classic sod of New England, have become Californians through wide wanderings and changeable luck. I found also a San Franciscan, Mr. Robertson, and the McMillan Bros., all radical, and Dr. Lucas, and others. Judge Monroe, a comrade of the G. A. R., introduced me at the meeting, and everything went off quite cheerfully, and we did not find ourselves out of pocket in the moonlight ride homeward. I am sorry to say that some Christians came who were very much disappointed. They did not like the lecture at all, which was a "History of the Bible" and dealt only with facts. Some of them were so troubled that they went out, and I am afraid I shall never look upon their like again. One minister went rapidly forth in the middle of the discourse, but his wife stayed until the end, and then bought a Liberal book with an air of determined inquiry, as if she meant to get at the bottom facts. In this case "the gray mare was the better horse." I am quite satisfied that this woman will not ask her husband at home all that she wishes to know. I think he had better make a few inquiries of her.

Not a great many were present on Friday evening at Nipomo; for the elders and the deacons had decided to stay away on important business, but nevertheless our campfires blazed.

Saturday I left this bright and promising spot, where I have found some good allies and genial work. Mrs. Robinett is the gentle school-mistress of the village. She was born a Catholic, and was devoutly religious. Her nature was too earnest to accept anything by halves. She wanted the truth. She read the Bible through several times. Thence came skepticism, and finally what Science nobly teaches. With such women, the army of progress will never falter.

I could not do without Robinett. He was my body-guard to San Luis Obispo, where we made another pioneer effort. We didn't know anybody, but the theatre was secured and the advertisements put forth. In the afternoon there was a railroad meeting. Attending this, we struck up some acquaintances, and even found one or two familiar spirits who had heard me before at Los Angeles and San Diego, and the ball was set in motion.

San Luis Obispo county is one of the finest in the state. Its natural productions are great. It produces the best butter in the market. It is well timbered and watered. It is now somewhat isolated, its main traffic being by the sea. Its public spirited citizens are determined to have a railroad to the San Joaquin valley. Over seventy-five thousand dollars have been subscribed, and there is every prospect that the enterprise will be pushed to profit and success, and fruitful land be made available. San Luis Obispo will then become an important point. It is a beautiful town; the climate is excellent; it is a little way from the sea, with one of the finest beaches in the world; and its natural advantages, with the pluck of its people, will make it an attractive country both for the tourist and the settler.

The lectures were well attended on Saturday evening and on Sunday evening, and we found some staunch Liberals—Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Simpson, Mr. Green, W. Gierisch, Mr. Pixley, and others—and we were not sorry that we had made a trial of our forces here. We look to something hereafter, now that fellowship is made.

We attended the religious lecture of Professor Tapp, the horse trainer, in his tent on Sunday afternoon. He gave a much better sermon than the average minister. He had some good sense mingled with his religion, and he judges the value of religion mainly by the dollars that it saves, which standard would eliminate a great deal of nonsense. He says cultivate the mind. The professor is the best posted man on horses in the whole country. He can train the wildest animal. He has a wonderful knack and courage. He conquered Cogniac that had eaten up four men in his fierce madness. It was the struggle of mind with matter, and mind conquered. The professor is a thorough original. He has his own way of saying things; and knowing the nature of a horse, he knows something of the nature of a man, for we are all alike.

I enjoyed my campaign at San Luis Obispo very much, but I couldn't have got along without my soldier-friend Robinett. He stuck right through and made things go in spite of everything. With such a supporter I think I could stand all sorts of weather. If we had a hundred like Robinett on the coast what a glorious success we would have; and we shall have. The choice spirits will come—the gallant frontiersmen, the forward brigade—who will carry the flag right on, and Freethought will be bright and high on all the winds of heaven.

Early Monday morning I am up. The heavy mists roll from the sea, the sun is not visible. The coach is ready to start, and with one good hand-shake off we speed, over the hills, through the groves, and along to pleasant fields, where quiet Templeton, amid delightful scenes and morning's freshness, hails our six-horse coach with the whistle of the locomotive, and northward we journey to Boulder Creek.

April 16, 1888.

California has every variety of scenery. From the hills and vales of San Luis Obispo county we are plunged into the mighty forests of Santa Cruz county, where the trees rise two hundred and three hundred feet high, and are from five to ten and twenty feet in diameter. Boulder Creek is a lively lumber town in the heart of the wooded heights. Tall ranks of trees overshadow it. Three streams mingle and flow to the sea—Boulder Creek, Bear Creek, and San Lorenzo. A dozen mills are scattered and busily at work in the vicinity. It was a fresh, attractive scene; the dwelling-houses almost lost to view amid the vast trunks; huge stumps in the middle of the streets; the rivulets dashing along embowered and rocky banks, while as you glance upward the sky is almost shut in by the shaggy tops of the immense forest.

It didn't take long to feel at home in the hospitable cottage of C. C. Rodgers, who is a thorough Liberal. His father was a pioneer in this country, one of the first to cross the great plains, when it took six months to make the journey. Mr. Rodgers himself has been all over the state, plunging into the wilderness on surveying expeditions, with many an adventure on flood and field, where grizzly bears do congregate without any warning to the wayfarer. Mrs. Walser, the housekeeper of the mansion, Eugene Walser, her son, and the little girls helped to make merry music in this mountain hamlet.

On Tuesday night I gave a lecture to a well-filled house. The Salvation Army is here, consisting of two men and two torches which parade the streets nightly. The Army does not seem to have a large following. There is a church in the place—a Methodist—which is built and run by one man. The people are quite Liberal, as they generally are in lumber and mining towns. I gave three lectures and there was an increased attendance from evening to evening. The prospect is favorable for good work in the future. There are quite a number of subscribers to FREETHOUGHT, and this makes a nucleus for organization and progress.

W. S. Rodgers is one of the splendid pioneers of humanity. Eleven years ago he was married to a bright little woman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Woods, now of Napa Valley, and went into the big forest to make a home. No roads were broken then, and he had to pack his furniture—what little he had, a stove, etc.—on mules to his "forest sanctuary." It seemed far out of the world at that time, but the railroad and civilization are drawing near. With his own hands he built a road two miles long, at a cost of thousands of dollars, and so formed a line of communication. On Wednesday I visited his pretty home, where the orchards flourish, where the roses bloom, and the green fields spread on the mountain-side. He has a family of six children, quite a little host for this garden spot of the wilderness. It is on an elevation about fifteen hundred feet above the sea. From some points the ocean is visible over a vast expanse of foliage, where not a house is to be seen. Here is the "great basin," miles and miles of forest land untouched by the axe and scarcely traveled by the foot of man, a "primeval forest" still, only sixty miles from San Francisco. But the saw-mill and the locomotive are coming, and these mighty ranks must bow to the earth. The soil is rich, and when cleared makes the best farming and fruit lands in the state.

W. S. Rodgers is a soldier of progress every way. He has secured several subscribers to FREETHOUGHT, and arranged for the lectures, hardly knowing what the fortune might be, whether many or few would come. The result has justified his hope and devotion. I met Mr. Creed, a subscriber of FREETHOUGHT, on this hill-top, and he is one of those who amid hard work do a good deal of thinking on their own account. I also made the acquaintance of Mr. Bloom and Mr. and Mrs. Pierce, who are not Freethinkers exactly, but very genial Christians and so close on to the line.

I also visited awhile at the home of Captain Brimblecom, an old sea captain of New England stock, from Worcester county, where I spent several years of my youth. He has sailed all over the world, and finally settled amid these woods that remind one of the Down East country. I realized the flavor of New England the moment I sat by his broad fireside, where the big logs were burning. The house is full of books, and intelligence is in the very atmosphere. His wife and the boys and girls have the New England neatness and steadfastness mingled with the out-door sprightliness of California life.

Wednesday evening I spent with Arthur Hageman, the schoolmaster of the place, a staunch Liberal, not afraid to show his colors. He introduced me at the lectures. He takes FREETHOUGHT and will visit our sanctum when he comes to the Teachers' Convention at San Francisco.

Thursday I went a-fishing with C. C. Rodgers—"Charley," as they call him all over the country—Mrs. Walser, and Eugene. It was a delightful day. We went two miles up the creek, and then began our day's sport. I have never yet been able to cultivate the acquaintance of mountain trout, and didn't expect to return with a big string. But there was plenty of fun among the green shadows, watching the play of the waters, the glistening tops of trees in the far sky, the green depths opening into wide arcades where the sunlight made rich the forest gloom. All was enchantment and dreamy splendor, and we didn't care much for the nibbling fish, which evidently didn't mind scraping acquaintance further than by eating off the bait and leaving the hook. I promised Mr. Hageman one-half my spoils of war. As a result he had a minnow about an inch in length for supper, while I had only a bite as my portion of what I caught, or didn't catch. But Mr. Hageman said he had only half a bite, so, on the whole, I was ahead. Mr. Rodgers, however, made up for all omissions on my part, as he had quite a basketful, and so there was a royal feast at the conclusion of our excursion. It will thus be seen that work and play are mingled in my pilgrimage, and even if I am in the pioneer corps, and forlorn hope, and picket line, it isn't all disappointment and labor and pulling against the stream. There are sunny hours, happy days, when weariness is forgotten in the simple enjoyment of nature's wealth.

Our campaign here has been pleasant indeed. We have not struck a nobler company of friends. David B. and Charles A. Michener are Liberals by birth, for the blood of the old reformer, Kersey Graves, is in their veins. J. D. Kauffman, Mr. Krebs, whom I met at Prescott, Arizona, last year, W. W. Rollins, Ed. Hesse, Herman Hesse and his wife and little baby, constant at all the lectures, William A. Day, Ellis Davis, Samuel Long, Arthur Applebee, A. J. Baldwin, W. O. Boyce, W. O. Porter, Darius A. Porter, Mr. and Mrs. West, Mrs. Hartman, and others are among the acquaintances made in this breezy and bustling settlement, where humanity has a good chance to show its real qualities, since fashion and orthodoxy have not yet come to kill the natural feeling.

Boulder Creek is quite a summer resort. Hundreds come from the city and camp amid the cool retreats of its forests. The ocean sends its healing breath along the radiant shades. It is comfortable all through the hot months. The scenery is magnificent and varied. The glimmering sea, the shining mists, the rocky heights, the many mountain streams, the wilderness of trees, the happy homes and busy life make this a bright Arcadia indeed, and in time to come elegance and culture will prevail, for there is no place along the coast where one can find a more lovely climate, or more beautiful views, amidst which tranquil leisure can alternate with ardent toil.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

April 20, 1888.

THE BIG CLUBS.

It is hardly time yet for the responses to Messrs. Schou and Stone's propositions to be very numerous. People want time to think the scheme over before acting upon it. Nevertheless, we have heard from the man who promises to be the last when the other 99 are secured, and another who is coming in if he can by any possibility.

The following is from the second man on the list:

MESSINA, CAL., April 16, 1888.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: In response to Mr. Stone, I will say I am one of the 99, and will hurry up the names and the money as soon as possible. It has been said that the "first shall be last and the last first." Presto! I will be neither first nor last. I am content to be called if not chosen. I am glad sunlight and Freethought are free—not salvation. In the words of Dr. E. B. Foote, let it be proclaimed from the housetop, "The world do move," especially Liberals of California.

NATHAN WOOLSEY.

Thus it stands now: H. P. Stone, ten subscribers, $20; Nathan Woolsey, ten subscribers, $20; with others who hope to join them, but are not prepared to put their names down at present.

Mr. Schou is sanguine that he will not long stand alone on the list of ten who shall procure and pay for fifty subscribers each.

We trust that all understand the plan of clubbing. Mr. Stone, the originator of the suggestion, offers to join 99 others who shall furnish ten subscribers to FREETHOUGHT and $20. The object is to build up a strong Liberal journal and publishing center at this point. Messrs. Stone and Schou realize that alone their efforts would not accomplish the desired result. If, however, the rest will join with them, the success of this paper will be assured beyond all question.

Think of it.

EXIT THE LAMP-THROWER.

The people of the town of Ukiah, in Mendocino county, mourn the departure of a distinguished citizen. His name is Hamilton, and hereby hangs a reminiscence.

In May, 1887, S. P. Putnam delivered a lecture in Ukiah on the Nine Demands of Liberalism. As he was explaining the different points involved, this man Hamilton, who was present, arose and denounced the speaker as a scoundrel. To emphasize his remarks Mr. Hamilton seized a lighted kerosene lamp and threw it at the speaker's head with murderous intent. The lamp missed its mark, crashed through the window, and exploded outside. Hamilton was about to throw a second lamp, when some one caught his arm, and he rushed from the building, carrying the lamp with him. The speaker finished his argument and the next day went on his way rejoicing.

Hamilton was afterwards indicted for murderous assault, or something of that sort, but escaped punishment. Indeed, he was rewarded, for when the citizens of Ukiah got up a scheme to purchase the right of way for a railroad to North Cloverdale, Hamilton was made secretary of the organization formed to raise money for that purpose. They thought a man who would attempt murder on another for saying that Christians were not always honest would himself avoid doing anything to prove the truth of his opponent's words. They have now found out how easy it is to be mistaken. Mr. Hamilton accepted the position with alacrity, and collected money for all he was worth; but some two weeks ago, when the time came to report, he had sudden business in San Francisco. The citizens of Ukiah appointed the sheriff a committee of one to wait upon Mr. Hamilton at his hotel here and inquire why he thus held himself aloof. Upon reaching the city the sheriff found that the secretary's affairs had called him to Australia, and that he had inadvertently taken the funds of the Ukiah and North Cloverdale Railway Extension Company with him. Effort will be made to induce him to return. Ukiah people do not care so much for the loss of the few thousand dollars Hamilton got away with, but they object to losing from among them a man who can arise to the necessities of all occasions and be a burning and a shining light to all the place.

A CORNER LOT.

We have received the following communication:

To the Editors of Freethought:

If you think it will assist materially in increasing the subscription list of your paper, I will make this proposition:

I will give a corner lot, 50x100 feet in size, in the city of San Diego, to the person who sends you the largest number of subscribers, at your own rates, accompanied by the cash, during the year commencing May 1, 1888.

Yours for the spread of a New Gospel. RANFORD WORTHING.
San Diego, Cal., April 19, 1888.

This is a proposition not by any means to be overlooked. It is attractive. The more it is contemplated the brighter it grows. Corner lots in San Diego are little scraps of geography that are not to be duplicated elsewhere. San Diego is the Mecca, generally, of the pilgrim from the East, and while he is waiting for something to turn up, he may sleep beneath the fruitful orange-tree at night and pick his breakfast from it in the morning. He is sure of a happy lot who gets a corner one in San Diego.

It seems as if this offer should awaken the interest of fifty Liberals, and we are sure that if fifty secure on an average ten names each, Mr. Worthing will regard his corner lot as well invested.

Our subscription rates are:

One subscription one year.....	$2.00
Two subscriptions one year.....	3.00
Three subscriptions one year.....	4.00
Four subscriptions one year.....	5.00

We are interested to know who will get the corner lot.

MR. PUTNAM'S LECTURE HERE.

On the evening of May 27, the last Sunday in the month, Mr. S. P. Putnam will deliver a lecture in Irving Hall; subject, "The American Republic." Tickets will be printed and can be obtained at this office.

In conjunction with the lecture Mr. Putnam will endeavor to secure the organization of the San Francisco and Oakland Secular Union, if the Liberals of the two cities feel inclined to unite in that way.

THE TUCKER "BRAND."

A copy of B. R. Tucker's paper, Liberty, has fallen into our hands. On its editorial page is an article beginning with the announcement that "the time has come to publicly brand S. P. Putnam, president of the American Secular Union, as the miserable coward, hypocrite, and wretch that he is."

These are fighting words, and it might reasonably be expected that their author would give some excuse for using them. Well, he does, or thinks he does. He says that S. P. Putnam was a subscriber to Liberty for several years; that in his private conversations he accepted Anarchism, and drew pictures of it in his romances; and that upon coming to San Francisco Mr. Putnam published an article showing that the God-in-the-Constitution party, who deny the validity of human law, place themselves upon the same ground as the Anarchists, who repudiate the state. Following this, complains Mr. Tucker, Mr. Putnam printed in FREETHOUGHT, without comment, a letter from O. S. Barrett, of Adrian, Mich., in which, speaking of Anarchy, Mr. Barrett was permitted to say:

"You certainly take the right view of that pernicious creed. . . There is only one way to deal with those who advocate Anarchy and those who try to practically carry it out, and that is to make an example of its agitators. Hang every one of them, and expose their carcasses to view as a warning to others who are so inclined."

"We own that these are diabolical sentiments, but Mr. Putnam had nothing to do with admitting them to the columns of FREETHOUGHT. It may be doubted if he ever read the letter containing them. At the time it was printed, as the same issue of the paper showed, and as Mr. Tucker, therefore, could not help being aware, Mr. Putnam was hundreds of miles away from this office, and mails have often failed to reach him. It is further doubtful if he would have replied to the letter if he had seen it, for no one except the writer and Mr. Tucker could imagine that it had sufficient bearing upon the real question at issue to demand attention. If Mr. Barrett believes in hanging corpses of labor reformers up as a warning to others not to become labor reformers, he can injure no one more than himself by so expressing his opinions. But it is not always profitable to reply to unreasonable people. Silence is often the best answer, and Mr. Tucker's attack is noticed only because his opening sentence was republished by the Examiner, of this city, and excited some curiosity. We trust he feels better since freeing himself in the manner here commented upon. The squawk was in him, and had to come out.

WANTED.

We want the names of Freethinkers to whom sample copies of FREETHOUGHT may be sent. The reason why a great many Liberals have not subscribed to this paper is that they have never read it. It is a journal of such pleasing mien, that to be taken needs but to be seen. Names of probable subscribers are therefore respectfully solicited.

We are indebted to our Spiritual contemporary, the Carrier Dove, for a candid reply to our observations concerning the wingless angels that adorn the cover of that journal. The editor explains that these angels are simply human beings who have doffed "the garments of materiality—swallow-tail coats, dude pants, bustles, corsets, trains, tight boots, and diseased or worn-out bodies—and return as natural, sensible people." We are of opinion that there are angels without wings that have not yet laid aside the garments of materiality. They wear bustles, boots not too loose, and, presumably, corsets. If the inhabitants of the future world are any more desirable persons than these, then the sooner we lay our armor by the better. Heaven is our home.

At a meeting of the Congregational Club last Monday the question of Sunday Labor was considered. One brother said that a man who worked Sunday and had faith in God was as good a Christian as one who spent the day in church. Another brother denied that a man could be a Christian and work Sunday. If he had faith in God he "could support himself and family without Sunday labor." While the clergy are thus bothering about the question the people are settling it for themselves by doing as they please on Sunday, which is the true solution. The mistake of the ministers is in supposing that so soon as they reach an agreement they will have a right to force it by law upon everybody else.

ONE OF FREETHOUGHT's valued subscribers is Mr. P. H. Foster, the nurseryman, of Babylon, L. I. Thirty or thirty-five years ago Mr. Foster was an active member and officer of a society called the Independent Order of Liberals, which met at Military Hall in the Bowery, New York. Gilbert Vale was among its members. Mr. Foster is a shareholder in the old Thomas Paine farm at New Rochelle, and thinks he would like to locate in some of the country described by Mr. Putnam in his "News and Notes."

THE SPEAKER.

Serene as summer's cloudless sky,
Active as the busy bee,
Making converts all the while,
Untiring in the cause that's free,
Every word you speak for Freedom
Lights the path thro' error's night,
Places on a pedestal
Principles of eternal right.
Unnumbered minds you aid to see
That creeds like dreams must pass away;
Night, with all that's marvelous, fade;
Arrive the brilliant orb of day
Morning comes with reason's sway.

M. A. LELAND.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The German-Americans of this city are preparing a fair to be held in behalf of the sufferers by the recent European floods. It is a great pity that Providence could not have had a trifle more forethought in the matter, and saved all this expense by withholding the flood.—The steamer San Pablo ran ashore on Turnabout Island, in the Formosa Channel, China Sea. Mails and passengers were got ashore, but the vessel, which is a remarkably fine one, is expected to be a total loss.—Mrs. James Brown Potter, the lady who gave Washington society the horrors by reciting "'Ostler Joe" at a swell reception, has just scored a dramatic success in this city.—The New York Senate Committee is investigating charges against Governor Hill. The charges imply corruption in the awarding of public contracts. The notorious Rollin M. Squire is concerned in the business.—The late Roscoe Conkling was not reputed to be a pious man, but they gave him a religious funeral. It is related of him that when he attended church he invariably stood erect, declining to bow to any power that did not first recognize and bow to him.—Dexter, the first horse to trot a mile in 2:17½, died of old age last week in Robert Bonner's New York stables. He was thirty years old.—San Jose is soon to have a marvelous floral fair.—Emperor Frederick of Germany is failing rapidly, and fears are entertained that he will die suddenly of suffocation.—There were the usual riots in Dublin last Sunday, the rioters stoning the police and getting clubbed in return.—The Rev. Mr. Heacock, of East Oakland, preached a sermon last Sunday on "Noah and the Deluge." It is reported that the bell in the steeple rang up a "chestnut" on him of its own volition.—The Baptist Union, of London, is endeavoring in conference so settle on a definite creed.—Mr. Pendleton, minister to Germany, sustained a stroke of paralysis last week. He is recovering.—A woman and child died in West Medford, Mass., last Saturday, under the treatment of a faith curist.—In the trial at New York of Madam Diss Debar, the alleged fraudulent medium, a conjuror was introduced to show how she effected her marvelous performances, but he proved to be unable to duplicate her tricks, and left her triumphant.—The Chinese have in some localities what they call a "Go Home Club." Members pay $10 per month, and there is a monthly drawing. The member who gets the lucky number takes the pot and goes to China.—Judge Barrett, of New York, has issued a warrant for the arrest of Anthony Comstock, charged by John N. Stearns with false imprisonment. #### THE POPE AGAINST THE PEOPLE.

On the occasion of the recent jubilee of the pope, Leo XIII., he was repeatedly held up to the world as the redeemer of social order. This was the subject of an exhaustive address by the old Catholic (anti-Romanist) Bishop Herzog, of Switzerland, the head of those Catholics who, while within the pale of primitive Catholicism, reject the syllabus, the papal infallibility, and other doctrines contrary to the true faith of the fathers. In his able address, of which a synopsis is given in the "Volksblatt vom Jura," March 8, the reverend speaker set up for answer the following three questions:

1. By which evils is the social order of mankind afflicted according to the conception of said "redeemer?"
2. Whence those evils?
3. Which are the remedies to be employed?

The answer in globo is about as follows: If a preacher of repentance would arise he might take John the Baptist for a prototype and say: Because there is a lack of virtue, so much happiness is destroyed. Were we men better there would be less evil in the world. This, one would think, would be the language of a priest who claims to establish the kingdom of God on earth. But not so Leo XIII. He says that all truths are being undermined upon which is based the welfare of mankind. This he understands his temporal power to be. He complains that even the highest rulers are tainted with a contagion leading inevitably to revolution. There is, he says, too much liberty in the world; all are free to say everything, to print everything, while the good are persecuted.

Leo XIII. complains that there is scattered all over the world a "sect" aiming only at evil, that there is an irresistible grasping for earthly goods instead of heavenly ones; but that those who are principally striving in that direction are esteemed as the true champions for liberty and country. Were this really so the world would go out of joint. But the especial complaint of Leo XIII. is that there is great wrong and disorder in the family. A whole series of godless laws have been enacted, resulting, instead of in Christian marriage, in legalized concubinage, whence again ensue discord between the married, breach of faith, severance of the matrimonial tie, disobedience of children, destruction of family life, things lamentably deplored by all reasonable people in Germany. But no more satisfactory than the condition of the family is the situation of the church, but by no fault of the hierarchy. First there are the attacks on the pope, the bulwark of justice and virtue, who has been despoiled of the patrimony of Peter and thus deprived of the liberty necessary for the execution of his task. But as unfree as he are the bishops whose domains are administered by laymen and who have been essentially injured by some establishing the principle that religion be left to the good will of each individual, and who have been further injured by the withdrawal from them of the control of the school, whereby unrestrained license has been introduced. Thus lies and vice are reigning undisturbed, the foundation of human society is undermined, and the chief fault lies with the rulers.

Such is the picture which Leo XIII. draws of the existing human society. But which is the order he proposes? An answer to this is furnished by the bull of Nov. 1, 1887. The first principle there set down is that all power of government is primarily and directly derived from God. It is a fundamental error to assume that rulers derive their power from the people. But as the rulers derive their power from God, they must see to it that everywhere the true, i. e., the papal religion, be revered and enforced. They must acknowledge that the church is a Societas perfecta, a society of inherent, proper authority, and in no wise dependent upon the state. If there arise conflicts in the state, the rulers must submit to the pope's arbitrament. Then he will enjoin obedience on the subjects and clothe the rulers with dignity. It would be absurd in the pope to take into cognizance the wishes of the people.

If such is the true order of things, it is easy to say whence comes the evil in the world. It comes from the democratic organization which has come into existence since the end of the last century. With that the masses (multitudo) rule, which recognize no duty to care for religion, leaving it to each individual conscience. This modern democratic tendency is the new pest with which society and her organs are infected.

But this democratic tendency has been established by the Freemasons, who know no other aim than to establish upon the ruins of the social order according to divine law, an order emanating from rationalism. Hence the arbitrariness in religion (religious liberty), the encroachments on the pope, the surrender of the schools to the laymen. But there is only one more little step from the people's sovereignty to the Socialists, Communists, and Anarchists. They really rule the world; but the essence of Freemasonry is sin and crime. Let them but enervate the people and they will have it in their grasp.

But how have the Freemasons obtained such a power? The answer is simple. There was a time when everything was plain sailing. Then came the deplorable sixteenth century. There arose the heresiarch and ungodly apostate, Martin Luther; there commenced a contest which still endures and the aim of which is to establish an order corresponding with the aberration of reason. Thus came the right of free investigation and with it the Infidel philosophy whence emanated the modern right and the godless state constitutions according to which all authority rests with the people. Thus heresy crept into civilization, wars ensued, family life was undermined. Everything beautifully leads back to one and the same source—the Reformation. Out of that confusion spring all the evils.

Therefore it is easy to answer the question how all this can be remedied. The answer simply is: Let the world return to the pope. The papacy requires only right and justice, the restoration of temporal government, the recognition of the Societas perfecta, then everything will be serene. If the states wish to escape the storms of Socialism there remains nothing for them but to steer the little ship into the safe harbor of the church. If they want to escape democracy, to restore the family, there is no other way. Obey God rather than man, the pope rather than earthly rulers.

Leo XIII. makes greater pretensions than his predecessor, Pius IX. He demands not only a dogma, such as the infallibility passed at the Vatican council, July, 1870; he is a realist in politics; he demands recognition of everything the popes have taught or may yet teach. Especially no conscientious Catholic can be a democrat or a republican (this is not meant in the American acceptation, but as antithesis to monarchist, etc.), his conscience forbids him. But it is right and incumbent upon him to accept office, devote his attention to schools and societies; but above all recognize as the highest the philosophy of St. Thomas Aquinas, who first taught infallibility and the papal omnipotence as the continuation of the ancient Roman imperialism, which Leo XIII. consistently claims for himself. "Leo alter adest," a second Leo the Great is here, he says in one of his poems; "imperium tenet," he holds in his power the authority of the ancient Roman Cæsar. Hence the philosophy of St. Thomas is to be taught as the highest in all educational institutions. As to the "common people," the "masses," the pope has another way to bind them to him. To that end he has the third order of St. Franciscus, whose duty is especial obedience to the ecclesiastical supervisors.

But the pope disposes of numerous other means, among them the rosary prayer, which is not to be said in the secret chamber, but openly before all the world, as a huge prayer machine, whereby all know that they depend upon the one who sets them in motion, for the restoration of the good old order, the right and liberty of the church and the annihilation of the hosts of Satan to which belong all who appeal to another right and rebel against the pope.

And let no one say, "This is far distant lightning; there's no danger in it." Thus they had been saying in 1870, when the Vatican council convened—and still the infallibility is taught in all churches and chapels. Emperors, kings, and other heads of states, negotiate with the pope as if he really held the imperium in his hands. For three powerful allies are at his side: Ignorance, fear of man, and perfidy. Remove these three allies of infallible papacy, and we can afford to let St. Thomas philosophize.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book, or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

"THE HOLY SABBATH"

The air of pious assurance with which this choice phrase is bandied about by Sabbatarians would almost deceive the very elect into believing that some kind of sanctity attaches to the particular day of the week which they choose to designate by that particular title.

The recent action of the church bigots in attempting to enforce their puritanical notions in Pittsburg and elsewhere is a case in point. The cool impudence of the assumption challenges our admiration and might provoke a smile but for the serious consequences which result from its practical application.

That the term "holy Sabbath" is not applied to the Jewish Sabbath—Saturday—but is applied to Sunday, the first day of the week, and its observance, as such, sought to be enforced by legal enactments, will not, we presume, be denied.

The Sunday law of Pennsylvania reads as follows:

If any person shall do or perform any worldly employment or business whatsoever on the Lord's day, commonly called Sunday (works of necessity and charity only excepted), shall use or practice any unlawful game, hunting, shooting, sport or diversion whatsoever on the same day, and be convicted thereof, every such person so offending shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay four dollars, to be levied by distress; or, in case he or she shall refuse or neglect to pay the said sum, or goods and chattels cannot be found whereof to levy the same by distress, he or she shall suffer six days' imprisonment in the house of correction of the proper county. Act of 1794.

Now the simple fact of the existence of such a law carries with it the idea of some authority competent to enact and sufficient to enforce it. As the terms "Lord's Day," "Sunday," and "Holy Sabbath" greet our ear so frequently, accompanied by threats of pains and penalties if we fail to recognize their inherent holiness, we are just perverse enough to ask these pious people to produce their authority for their contemplated action.

Right here we desire to ask the Sabbatarian bigots a few plain questions, viz.:

1. What was the reason assigned for the institution of the Jewish Sabbath?
2. Did Jesus observe the Jewish Sabbath, or recognize its sanctity?
3. If the Jewish Sabbath was abrogated by Christ's coming, did he establish the Christian Sabbath in its stead?
4. If Christ did not establish a Sabbath of his own, did Paul or any of the apostles do so in his name?
5. If the apostles did not institute the Christian Sabbath, did the fathers of the church do so?
6. If the fathers did not, who did?
7. Has the Christian Sabbath any authority to bind the consciences of American citizens?

These questions ought to be easy of solution, and if the clergy have as much confidence in the sanctity and authority of the day as they would have their dupes believe, let them vindicate the same by answering these questions, or forever abandon their insolent pretensions.

We have, at various times, and in various forms, propounded the above interrogatories about the "holy" day to the "holy" clergy, but up to the present time our success in eliciting information has not been particularly brilliant. The reason of this appears to be that intelligent clergymen are too discreet to attempt to answer them, and the callow clerical chanticleers never succeed in doing so.

There are a few plain truths about this "Sabbath" question that need to be told, and which the innocent victims of puritanical persecution need to hear; and we propose to tell them.

1. Our first question was: "What was the reason assigned for the institution of the Jewish Sabbath?"

In Genesis ii, 3, we read: "And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, because in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made." Here man is commanded to refrain from labor on the seventh day, because God rested on that day. This is repeated in Exodus xx, 8, 11, "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested on the seventh day, wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." This seems sufficiently explicit. Man must rest because God rested, and in Exodus xxxi, 16, we learn that it is to be a perpetual covenant. But in Deuteronomy v, 15, we read: "And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand, and by a stretched out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." This is repeated in chapter xvi—a different reason entirely from the one assigned in Genesis. Not because God got tired and rested, but because the Jews got tired of work and ran away from it. So it seems the Jewish Sabbath itself rests upon a very unstable foundation, with no consistent reason assigned for its institution.

2. "Did Jesus observe the Jewish Sabbath or recognize its sanctity?"

Let John v, 16, 17, 18, answer: "And for this cause did the Jews persecute Jesus, because he did these things on the Sabbath. But Jesus answered them: My Father worketh even until now, and I work. For this cause the Jews sought the more to kill him because he not only brake the Sabbath, but also called God his father."

Again, as recorded in Mark, ii, 28, when accused by the Pharisees of breaking the Sabbath, he claimed immunity from its requirements and exemption from the penalty attached to its violation because he was "Lord of the Sabbath." Christians with characteristic effrontery claim that Christ meant by this to acknowledge that the Sabbath was a divine institution and claim its pater-nity. But the fallacy of that pretext is apparent on the face of the narrative; for Christ had just violated the commandment openly and permitted his disciples to do so, and his words were a justification of his action. This is evident from the reading in Matthew xii, 6-8, "But I say unto you that in this place is one greater than the temple. . . . For the son of man is Lord even of the Sabbath day," i. e. Lord of it to disregard it and nullify the penalty attached to its infraction. No other construction is consistent with his actions. This view is further emphasized by his healing the sick as narrated in Luke xiii, 10-14.

The Sermon on the Mount is justly celebrated, but in all the beatitudes there is not a blessing on the Sabbatarian—a serious omission in the opinion of many modern clergymen.

Again, when one asked Jesus, "What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" (Mark x, 17-21) Jesus replied: "Do not kill. Do not commit adultery. Do not steal. Do not bear false witness. Do not defraud. Honor thy father and mother." And when he said: "All these things have I observed from my youth," "Jesus looking upon him loved him." But Jesus had forgotten to mention the "holy Sabbath," and we are actually left to infer that Jesus loved a Sabbath-breaker.

Thus we see that Christ did not recognize the sanctity or binding force of the Jewish Sabbath; but,

3. "If the Jewish Sabbath was abrogated at Christ's coming, did he establish the Christian Sabbath in its stead?"

If he did so there would most assuredly be some mention of that fact. But not a word is to be found on that subject, in the New Testament. Had he done so, his disciples or the apostles would know something about it, and, doubtless, not only observe it themselves, but recommend others to do so. This leads to:

4. "If Christ did not establish a Sabbath of his own, did Paul or any of the apostles do so in his name?"

As Christianity is more Pauline than Christian, Paul may be permitted to speak for the apostles and disciples; and it is evident from his writings that he knew nothing of any Christian Sabbath, and had very little respect for those he did know of. Paul in writing to the Galatians calls them "foolish Galatians," and says: "Ye observe days and months, and times and years, I am afraid of you least I have bestowed labor on you in vain" (Galatians, iv, 10). And to the Romans he used this language: "One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind" (Romans xiv, 5). And in Colossians ii, 16, he says: "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath day."

Paul himself invariably labored or traveled on the first day of the week.

Nothing Sure but Hope.

We range through the halls of confusion,
We recline on the clouds when we rest;
And we know there is nought but delusion,
And that right is all wrong at the best.
We know that the dreams of our childhood
Were all a delusion and snare;
That the violets we found in the wildwood
Have faded and vanished in air.
We fear that the future has nothing,
As the present is only a dream,
And that like the past it will mock us
With visions of things as they seem.
Knowing this, we still wait for the morrow,
Like Job in the mythical tale;
And we turn our back upon sorrow
While the present would bid us to wail.
Ah, Hope was the alchemist's secret—
This turns all our moments to gold,
And now that we've found it we'll keep it
Ever bright from the rust and the mould.

Satisfied and Dissatisfied.

One, satisfied with what must be her lot—
'Twas not a corner lot—serenely meant
Never to wander from her humble cot,
Made beautiful by wise and sweet content.
And one, dissatisfied with all he had,
Roved from his place into the world's mad whirl.
What did he find? Well, it was not so bad—
The fellow found that cottage and that girl.

JOSEPH COOK started in again yesterday, just as we were congratulating ourselves that the worst of the winter was over.—Boston Post.

AN UNPOPULAR VISITOR AT THE VATICAN.

At that time a man appeared at the great entrance to the Vatican. He was young, and his face, pale and thin, betrayed great sorrow and suffering. He wore a long mantle of white wool, the dress of the nomads of the desert, and from beneath the cape of the same his hair fell long and waving. It was plain that he was poor and tired, but his eyes sparkled, and a sorrowful smile played upon his lips.

As he was entering the great doorway the gorgeously uniformed guards of the pope, dressed in red and gold, looked at this strange individual, and one of them barred his way, saying in a gruff voice: "Hold on, stranger! This isn't the way to enter the palace of the great pontiff." The pilgrim halted, and answered him in a voice full of sweetness, "I only came to see the presents the great kings of the world have sent to the vicar of Jesus Christ."

"Well," said one of the guards, "as I see that you come from some far-away country, I'll let you in, so that you may tell your people of the greatness and glory of our master."

And they allowed him to pass.

The traveler stepped up the marble stairs, and came to the great halls paved with mosaic; rare marbles, frescoed ceilings; immense paintings covered the walls on all sides. In that palace, itself as great as a city, he beheld great rooms, filled with treasures of all kinds, so that it looked like a great bazaar, greater than those of Suza, Babylonia, Cairo, Damascus, or Jerusalem. There were gifts of great value sent from all parts of the wide world; presents from kings, emperors, queens, princes, and others; rare jewels, golden vases filled with precious stones, piles of silks, velvets, and costly embroidered stuffs of all kinds, gold and diamonds everywhere.

The pilgrim looked with eager curiosity at all these treasures for a long while; his eyes sparkled with joy, and his face appeared to beam with triumph. "At last," he exclaimed, "men have become good, and the great give to the poor!" and turning to one of the splendidly dressed guards, he added, "what great benefits will be done with those vast treasures! the hungry will be fed, the naked will have dresses, and the shivering poor will be warmed. Ah, blessed be those paternal hearts! Yes, those who have plenty do give to them who have not; fraternity has come at last upon the earth, and the blessings of heaven."

While the stranger was speaking in this manner, the guards near him, looking at each other, whispered: "The poor fellow, he must be crazy."

But the pilgrim continued with warmth and animation: "Glory be to God, and blessed be the holy man by whose hand all these riches will be given to the poor and unfortunate!"

Then turning and speaking to them he asked: "And when will the distribution of all these treasures take place? I'd like to be there and see the poor made happy and contented."

"Why, man, you are dreaming," answered one of the guards to him. "All those things belong to our great pontiff; to him alone, and he won't give any away."

"To him alone!" exclaimed the stranger excitedly; "for him all of those jewels, and gold, and precious stones; all of those robes of silk, gold, and rich stuffs? Go and tell the vicar of Jesus Christ that I am hungry and thirsty, and that my robes are all in rags, while he has here enough to feed and clothe hundreds of thousands of poor men like me."

The guardsman laughed loudly in his face.

The pilgrim folded his arms, and looking at one of the magnificent sacerdotal vestments of the pope, embroidered all in gold, with precious stones, he continued:

"The vicar of Jesus cannot but be the father of the humble, the benefactor of the poor, the apostle of fraternity. But, alas! I see he lives in a marble palace, dressed in golden mantles, and surrounded by a court and gorgeous valets, while I go barefooted." So saying, he tore the golden fringe from off the precious robes, and threw it on the ground, under his feet.

The guards fell upon him, and holding his sacrilegious hands, dragged him to a dungeon. And while they were taking him there, he kept on saying:

"They call themselves my disciples!" and his eyes gave forth sparks, as of lightning.

He was Jesus Christ.—Translated from the Italian.

LILIAN'S STORY.

It is not Lilian's fault that the Children's Department of this paper has been omitted to make room for less important matter. The following has been on hand for several weeks:

HARRY'S DOG; OR, WHAT DASH DID.

BY A. LILIAN ANDREWS, AGED 10.

Harry was looking out of the window. "Oh, dear," he said, "oh, dear, I wish Uncle Tom would come and then I would have my dog."

"Do keep still," said his sister Maude.

May was a younger sister. Maude was the older. She was twelve, and she had an older brother, Frank; he was twelve also. He and Maude were twins. May came in.

"Where have you been?" asked Harry.

"I went to Jennie Roberts's," said May.

"What for?"

"To see Jennie, of course."

"Did mamma say you could?"

"Yes."

"Maude, do you know what Katie Roberts said?" said May.

"No." "She said that the party was to be had and that no boys were going because they made a noise. Uncle Tom is coming and Frank has gone to meet him. Here they are," shouted she; and away May ran to the door.

After dinner Uncle Tom began to unpack his trunk. He told Frank to go out to the barn and bring a dog in. Harry liked his dog and said, "I shall call him Carlo."

"His name is Dash," said Uncle Tom. He gave Maude a $10 gold piece and Frank the same. He gave Harry $1, and May a cat named Tab, with four kittens. The kittens' names were Snowdrop; that was a white cat; a maltese name was Frolic; and a black one was Erebus; a black cat with a white paw was Dina, and May had a dollar. Uncle Tom went away. Harry got very angry at Dash because he saved May's cats from drowning. He said that cats were a bother. He had thrown Tabby in the brook himself. He beat Dash, who staid in his house and would not come out. Harry said if he wanted anything to eat he could come out and get it, so May fed him. When Uncle Tom came again and heard it all he gave Dash to May and said to Harry, that is what happens to boys who act that way.

An All-round Sinner.

At a recent gathering of Unitarians one speaker recited an anecdote which admits of large and varied application. It was the story of a minister who, preaching on exchange, said some strong things about fast horses. He was told after the sermon that he had touched one of their best members on a tender spot. "Well," said the preacher, "I cannot change my sermon for him." In the evening the man was introduced to the minister, who said, "I understand that what I said this morning touched one of your weaknesses. I assure you that I was altogether unconscious of the weakness when I said it." "Oh, do not trouble yourself," said the man. "It is a very poor sermon that does not hit me somewhere."—Christian Intelligencer.

FREETHOUGHT, the Liberal journal begun at San Francisco the first of the year by Messrs. Putnam & Macdonald, continues to make its weekly appearance. It has evidently come to stay. It reports that California is a beautiful country for fleas—that the fleas of California are the most agile and talented to be found in the world; that one of them can keep an ordinary family in a state of excitement.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

THEOLOGIAN LUM, of the Chicago Alarm, speaks as follows concerning a recent publication: "I have received a copy of a pamphlet named 'God in the State,' by the small god in the Secular Union—E. A. Stevens. As one who thinks himself a god is authority upon the subject of the bigger god he naturally antagonizes him."

WE have photographs for sale of Thomas Paine, Robert G. Ingersoll, and Samuel P. Putnam; also the present writer. The price is 25 cents each, except that of Colonel Ingersoll, which is 40 cents.

Since Samuel P. Putnam delivered his lectures here on the 3d and 4th inst., there has been a demonstrated interest in the cause of the American Secular Union that has astonished the most sanguine. We expect a very prosperous organization and many successful clubs throughout the county.

Inclosed please find a list of names of thirteen members of a club, also a check for the amount of thirteen subscriptions. Please keep the present club open; will send you other names.

Kind Acknowledgments.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Mr. Putnam had laid us, and the people of this valley, under many obligations for kind remembrance, and the grand panorama and descriptive view of "Highlands" as well as the future greatness of San Bernardino as a business and manufacturing centre. It may be well said of Samuel P. Putnam, "He came, he saw, and is conquering." His brave words for liberty, humanity, and impartial justice and the dawning of a better day, the realization of an ideal republic, the real New Heaven and Earth; have won for him a warm corner in the hearts of those fortunate ones who had the courage to listen to his eloquence. Should Mr. Putnam return to this vicinage, many who now regret not having heard him will gladly welcome him.

A New Lecturer Announced.To the Editors of Freethought:*

The last number of your paper came with the Truth Seeker. "Well," I says, to myself, "I wonder who the old Truth Seeker has got for company to-night;" and lo and behold! they were brothers—brothers who had come from opposite sides of the continent. I thought to myself how glad I would be to see the boys themselves.

Last fall I had the great pleasure of meeting with our noble worker, C. B. Reynolds, and of hearing him give four lectures, the first I ever heard.

I wish to announce to the readers of your paper that we have another lecturer in the field. His name is B. F. Boyd, author of "An Open Letter to the Clergy." He is a man about 35 years old, with a brain full of splendid thoughts. I think he will be a power for good to the grand cause of mental liberty. I have been acquainted with Mr. Boyd for about a year. I know him to be of good character and ability. He is a man of good standing in society among honest people. Of course the Christians denounce him, as they do every other honest man who differs with them on the subject of damnation. I wish to say to all of the Liberals who may see this that I heard his first lecture, and I call it a success. Now, brothers, let us all stand by him. We need all the good workers we can get, and there is no place where work is more effectual than in the lecture field. Address him at Lockwood, Dade Co., Mo. I am yours with an eye to the great star of hope.

Love to God or Humanity, Which?To the Editors of Freethought:*

It used to be repeated in the prayers of church members: "Let the love of God run and be glorified, and let it be shed abroad in our hearts." Now if we pray this prayer to humanity, we are told to "hush up, and keep quiet." We are informed that to ask for sympathy or charity is all wrong.

It would be better for the sufferer, then, to utter his prayer to the unknown God, in the faith that he will be heard, than to make his desires known to a world which has no feelings of pity for him, or a wish to be of help to him. In great calamities there is a display of charity, and in quite a different way than has been advised by a wise teacher, "not to let the right hand know what the left hand doeth," but with flourish of trumpets and names of the donors.

Without the love of God, or the good, this life is a blank, a world without a sun! Human hearts wither and die, deprived of this life-giving power.

It is the fire and moving force of the mind, the living waves of the emotions, and, when not needed in any other direction, seeks the intellect with its overabounding life.

The religious emotions, or desire to worship some being higher than ourselves—"this homesickness of the soul" and longing for its native heaven, or the higher life—cannot be suppressed by reason or logic; and could they be, all ideas and thoughts would be but as glittering icebergs, cold and forbidding, with no warmth or glow of feeling or poetic imagery; hate and discord would take possession of every heart, and the world become a mere pandemonium.

Let love then be cultivated without dissimulation, or hate and malice will soon rule the world.

Lectures at San Diego.To the Editors of Freethought:*

The lecture by C. B. Reynolds at San Diego on the 8th was greatly enjoyed by all fortunate enough to listen to him. It is not surprising that Colonel Ingersoll came to his rescue at Boonton. The attendance at his lecture was not as large as it would have been, but for the fact that two of the daily papers, the Union and the Bee, refused to publish notices of the lecture.

They wear the church collar. The Sun is more liberal, and gave notice of the lecture.

There are many Freethinkers in San Diego, some quite wealthy, but they lack vertebra. When they do give expression to their thoughts they survey the field, lest some follower of the meek and lowly should be in hearing and annihilate them with one of those holy frowns that are ever ready to play over the countenance of those heaven-bound "images of their maker." Why should science bow to superstition? Why should any thinking man give up that which he knows for that which no man knoweth? Until Freethinkers get more backbone, our cause will linger. Let us all advocate that which we know to be right, and maintain it with a vigor that the puniest as well as the more ponderous advocate of the popular superstition, commonly called Christianity, may know our position; then and not until then will they have any respect for us. Let our example compel their admiration. Honesty does and will pay.

I like Reynolds because he is aggressive; at the same time he penetrates deep into our humanity, arousing love and sympathy. There was not, in my opinion, one of his audience who listened to his lecture, "Why I Left the Pulpit," but felt a kindlier feeling toward himself and his fellow-beings. The lectures give courage to the strong as well as to the weak, and stimulate a new growth in the right direction. He is full of the "milk of human kindness," and has the ability to impart his goodness with a feeling that bears fruit. Such lectures will strengthen human ties, and make us better citizens of this, the only world of which we have any knowledge whatever, and cause us to erect mansions on earth instead of in the skies. Our God will be a reality; our worship will be acts, not faith. We will not crave a home in the New Jerusalem, with its harp, hallelujahs, crowns, and nauseating diet of milk and honey, but will be content with the good things of this world, with little or no desire for the companionship of the Gods of the skies. Their record is bad, and should they get us in their hands we would be at their disposal, for he is a God of vengeance; and some donkey of a Christian might spring the Garden of Eden episode upon us, and the trio might get on their ear, and kick us out. To be kicked out of nowhere, by nobody, into nothing would be terrible; for we would not even have the opportunity of going to hell, as we had lost our chance while on earth. Better be kicked out than not be worth a damn. Hypocrisy does not come up to the standard of "worth a damn" in this world, though it is at a premium up there.

This supposed "creator," boss of the universe, started in at the wrong time and at the wrong place to manufacture the human race; got hold of wrong kind of mud. If he had waited until now, and come West and grown up with the country, he could have done better, at least would have missed a great amount of the trouble he has had, and avoided the punishment he inflicts upon the human race, to say nothing of the vast expense that might have been saved; but the course he saw fit to pursue is as clear as mud, and no one can see clear through the whole business, except those who view it through spiritual goggles, manufactured by the clergy expressly for hypocrites or fools, principally for the hypocrites.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. A. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

ARGUMENT

....BY....

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

....IN THE....

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

....FOR....

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument Mr. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MAY 5, 1888

SIMULTANEOUS news from Germany and Cuba of floods in one place and droughts in the other, indicate that supply and demand and production and distribution are yet undeveloped sciences with the ruler of this universe.

THE custom officials have come to the conclusion that Christianized Chinamen are frauds invariably, and that they pretend to conversion that they may have better opportunities to profit by duplicity. There is reason in this. Why should a man change his character simply by professing to change his superstition?

THE pope's recent decree condemning the present methods of conducting the Irish Home Rule campaign is regarded as evidence of a deal between the English government and the Vatican. Some of the Irish leaders say the decree will be resisted, but it is safe to say it will not. A Catholic will obey the pope though he knows him to be a fraud and a tyrant.

By sending fifty cents to the Very Rev. Father Prior, convent of St. Louis Bertrand, Louisville, Ky., any one can get a certificate entitling him to the benefit of Catholic masses for one year. Mr. Pixley, of the Argonaut, sent for such a certificate, received it, and published it in last week's Argonaut. It is astonishing that so vile an imposition as the Roman Catholic church can exist in this century and escape universal condemnation.

THE Prohibitionists at their state convention passed a resolution in favor of a "rational and intelligent Sunday law." In 1653-1655 the New Haven colony of pious rascals had a law reading as follows: "Whoever shall profane the Lord's day or any part of it, either by sinful servile work, or by unlawful sport, recreation, or otherwise, whether wilfully or in a careless neglect, shall be duly punished by fine, imprisonment, or corporally, according to the nature and measure of the sin and offense. But if the court upon examination, by clear and satisfying evidence, find that the sin was proudly, presumptuously, and with a high hand, committed against the known command and authority of the blessed God, such a person therein despising and reproaching the Lord, SHALL BE PUT TO DEATH, that all others may fear and shun such provoking, rebellious courses. (Num. xv, 30-36.)"

The Prohibitionists might object that this law is a trifle stronger than the necessities of the present crisis seem to demand, but it is the "law of God," and no doubt its framers regarded it as eminently "rational and intelligent."

THE Christian Advocate tells of a flowery young preacher who prayed by the abbreviated method as follows: "O Lord! we ask that thou wilt bless the Y. M. C. A.;" and of a colored brother who ascribed thanks to the deity for what he had done for the world "both B.C. and A.D." Again, a woman at a Prohibition convention prayed for the divine blessing upon the W. C. T. U. If this style gains prevalence, a Dictionary of Abbreviations in Current Use will become a necessity to the party addressed.

THE citizens of New York called a public meeting for May 4, the object of which was to express their admiration of Mayor Hewitt for his conduct in refusing to allow the raising of the Catholic flag on the city hall, and in refusing to recognize Good Friday as a holiday. The following resolution received many signatures.

"Resolved, That we are firmly opposed to the spirit which defends the hoisting of foreign flags on public buildings, and we earnestly protest against the impudent bigotry that would fasten upon our nation sectarian holidays, invade our schools, and denationalize the asylum for the oppressed of all nations."

The question may possibly become a national one, and the people who do not believe in having all the public buildings painted green on St. Patrick's day may want a candidate to represent their sentiment. In that case the finger of destiny will point unmistakably at Mr. Hewitt.

NEWS AND NOTES.

The loveliness of other parts of California does not dim the glory of Santa Clara valley. Like a parlor it stretches between the shining walls of the mountains. The flowers are all in bloom among the orchards and green fields. San Jose is the Garden City. It needeth not the tintinnabulation of the boom. Its future is assured without the voice of the auctioneer.

We are at The Willows, one of the most elegant suburbs of the city, in the home of our generous friend, Mr. Vostrovsky, where everything is as charming as Nature and Humanity can make it. Out of doors the trees and flowers attract in the warm golden atmosphere. Within is the cordial intelligence of Freethought. The darkness of orthodoxy has disappeared forever. No particle of superstition is in this happy home. Reason's light is as beautiful as the brightness of a sunny sky. Mr. Vostrovsky is from Bohemia, the land of Huss, where the fire of Freedom will not die; and in America this glorious spirit makes loyalty for the flag of our Union. There are now about three hundred thousand Bohemians in this country, an intelligent and Liberal people, in sympathy with the principles of the republic, while cherishing memories of the fatherland enshrined in poetry and romance. Twenty-three Bohemian newspapers are published in this country; three of them dailies. These are well supported and represent the remarkable intellectual activity of this gifted race.

My friend Vostrovsky has the genuine American enterprise. At West Point, Neb., Livermore, this state, as well as at San Jose he has been a prominent and successful business man; always an able defender of Freethought. The clergymen have endeavored to boycott him, but he has been held in honor and respect by his fellow-citizens, and the persecutions of the church have not availed. His family are equally frank and ardent in their devotion to Freethought. His wife and daughters, Miss Anna and Miss Clara, and son Romie have been born under that happy star that shines upon "the forehead of the dawn," and the mists and gloom of night have not troubled their way.

With the inspirations of this fortunate fireside, and other friends of this "happy valley," our labors have been made fruitful. We lectured on Sunday afternoon and evening to good audiences, larger than before, and a Secular Union was formed, and the Liberal element of San Jose is now organized for victory. It is a most important point. The following are our pioneer band: J. Vostrovsky, Anna Vostrovsky, Jacob Polak, Lewis Rothermal, L. Magenheimer, R. H. Schwartz, Emma L. Harrison, August Erbsen, M. Lendorff, I. Wallace, Emil Bihn, A. R. Woodhams, Karl Pobritz, Harry Zuk, C. M. Friedrich, S. R. Titus, Cecelia Titus, Mrs. R. H. Schwartz, E. Schnabel, Wm. F. Levering, Geo. P. Meinhardt, Max B. Schunemann, Louis Hemming, Mrs. L. M. Woodbury, and John Miller. This is an excellent beginning. These names represent intellectual and social life. They mean work. They mean progress. A. R. Woodhams was chosen president of the temporary organization, and Mrs. R. H. Schwartz, secretary. L. Magenheimer, L. R. Titus, Karl Pobritz, and Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Schwartz were appointed committee on by-laws. The Union will meet again next Sunday evening to complete the organization. Thus our ranks are gaining. All that is needed is hearty co-operation. The vast importance of united effort is recognized.

Monday morning I had a pleasant call upon Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Polak. Mr. Polak has long been in the service of Freethought. At Cedar Rapids, Iowa, he was a prominent citizen, and with Mr. Vostrovsky was almost the only one for years to openly oppose the church. Spite of all, good fortune has favored him, and he has the sinews of war to battle right bravely for humanity.

I had a pleasant visit also with Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Schwartz, and Mr. and Mrs. L. Magenheimer. With such friends to lighten our way, the future glows with hope. They are not afraid to cast their fortunes with the forward ranks. Among these genial spirits we learn to "labor and to wait."

Mr. and Mrs. Woodhams and daughter, of Santa Clara, Mr. and Mrs. Titus and daughter, Mr. E. Schnabel, Professor Cottinger, and others are among those who give promise to our labor with cordial support.

Friend Baumgartner, with Mr. Vostrovsky, took me over the big Fredericksburg Brewery, whose beer is like the wine of the Bible. It cheereth the heart of man, and is known all over the state, except by my Prohibition friend Bruce. I suppose he hasn't the slightest idea how good this beer tastes, and that it is no more hurtful than a cup of coffee. The brewery is almost as large as a small village, and Mr. Baumgartner is the manager. Everything goes on like clock-work, and Art and Nature make a very delightful beverage. Freethought is so universal that it doesn't object to a moderate use of all the good things of this world. I can assure my friend Bruce that he has an immense contract to constrain humanity from these gentle stimulants that "cheer but not inebriate." I don't think that Jesus at Cana of Galilee did much better work than the Fredericksburg Brewery; and the German race certainly has a magnificent record on the world's most splendid pages, and yet it has not confined itself altogether to soda water or weak tea. When temperance is identified with prohibition, and prohibition with the church, it is about time to utter a protest. When people say we shan't drink, our human nature is very much inclined to say we shall, and with Byron our toast goes forth:

"Here's a health to those that love me,
Here's a smile for those that hate,
And whatever skies above me
Here's a heart for any fate."

San Jose is one of the most brilliant cities of the coast. It is being rapidly improved. The new City Hall will cost $125,000; the Vendome Hotel $150,000; $100,000 is being put into street work and pavements. Patent cement sidewalks can be seen in every direction. The number of new buildings this year will not fall short of one hundred and fifty. The average cost of each house is about $1,300. In architecture they are pretty and attractive, and are mainly the homes of those of small means. Many are built by the aid of building and loan societies, of which there are two in the city. Some of the new residences cost from $10,000 to $20,000.

It must be admitted that San Jose is one of the finest stations this side of the New Jerusalem, and the Christians who stop over have not the slightest desire to continue their journey. This will make harder work, of course, for the Secular Union.

April 24, 1888.

Gilroy is one of the most arduous fields for Freethought I have yet found. There is a mass of indifference which is quite astonishing, and more discouraging than the most bitter assaults of orthodoxy. Our audiences were small and showed no signs of increase. As, however, there are no roses without thorns, so there are no thorns without some signals of a better time. Always there are some good and true friends, and I found these at Gilroy: Mr. George Dunlap, who introduced me at the lectures, Mr. James T. Dunlap, R. H. Nason, Jas. Howarth, and others; generous comrades, and with them the campfires of the forlorn hope blaze brightly and we look forward. With only a few there is promise of great result, for "The thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns."

Gilroy has hardly come into the boom yet, but it is a beautiful land, and in the shining glory of these April days delightful landscapes meet the eye. The fields are flowing with green, where vast herds revel in luxuriant grass. Groves adorn the valleys and the hillsides that sparkle with picturesque views.

Friend Nason took me out to his ranch, "The Owl's Retreat," a place for wisdom in the quiet air, where one can dream and not be disturbed. Mr. Nason is the fortunate owner of "Nutwood Jr." and "Woodbine" that do indeed delight the eye of the lover of horseflesh. They are magnificent animals, and it makes one more hopeful of man to see such superb creatures. If horses are so grand, what will not humanity be when the science of life prevails? Mr. Nason in early life had the ministry in view, but soon preferred the gallant steed to the dull deacon, and the swift foot to the slow pulpit, and so he has become one of the famous horsemen of the country, and has put on the road some of the fleetest racers; and, while he can't describe an "angel with wings," he understands the build of the equine and knows the good points at a glance, which is vastly better than theology. To drive a fast horse is nobler than playing on a harp. Behind "The Grasshopper" we sped our way, and this nimble-footed traveler will sometime win the stakes.

Thursday we went to Sargent's Station, a most charming picnic retreat, where the river winds through dense foliage, and swings and hammocks are amid the gleaming shadows. Mr. Sargent is an old-timer, owning several thousand acres, and in his stables are the celebrated "John Sevenoaks" and "The Brown Jug." Thus in the genial company of our friend Nason, "philosopher and guide," our labors have been lightened by a contemplation of the evolution of life; for if there is anything that is wonderful and attractive in the panorama of nature's forces it is the horse, whose symmetry, beauty, strength, speed, and intelligence are oftentimes so marvelous. I have no doubt that the Eve-horse ate the apple with the same avidity as our own grandmother, only our ancestor took a bigger bite, and hence the greater progress and power. But the horses have one advantage. There are no clergymen among them.

So I have had pleasant days at Gilroy in spite of disappointments; and the warm grasp of friendly hands assures me that when I come again to this thriving town I shall be greeted with brighter signs of advancement. A further acquaintance, more organized effort, will undoubtedly stir the inert masses, and with movement there will be enthusiasm. The Liberals of California—many of them—do not realize what powers are at work for retrogression and that the glory of civilization is not won by mere evolution, but by the wise, intelligent, concerted, and determined action of the moral and intellectual forces of man himself. Things are not right, and will not be right until Freethinkers take hold with earnest heart and brain and make them right.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

THE SECULAR UNION.

The Twelfth Annual Congress of the American Secular Union will be held at Pittsburgh, Pa., in October. Considering the subject, the Pittsburgh Truth says:

"In FREETHOUGHT, a new Liberal paper, of which President Putnam is one of the editors, there appeared on March 24 a significant editorial in reference to the American Secular Union and what ought to be done at the next Congress. 'There is no question,' says the editor, 'that the great body of Liberals throughout these States desire a union of some kind through which they can, as it were, touch hands, and which will bring them together in national fraternity.'

"We firmly believe the prominent and influential Liberals of this country would heartily support such a union. But why is it that the American Secular Union does not receive a hearty support from the great body of Liberals, of every shade of opinion? That it does not, no one will deny."

The question, "Why is it that the American Secular Union does not receive a hearty support from the great body of Liberals, of every shade of opinion?" is one that is easily answered. It was answered substantially in the article from which Truth quotes. The Union is not heartily supported because it has so many supposed-to-be friends who are in fact its enemies. By these persons every device for injuring the organization is resorted to. The public and private character of its officers is attacked in open charges and by innuendo. There are promulgators of confidential circulars. There are schemers and plotters and whisperers who by underhanded methods reach the working Liberals of the country and instill into their minds the poison of suspicion and distrust. These schemers and whisperers cannot be reformed; the nature of them cannot be changed; their malady is chronic or constitutional. If they cannot be induced to make their attacks openly, or to put themselves in a position to be attacked, the only hope for the Secular Union is that they may pay the debt of nature soon and their deeds die with them. No one can wish for the prolongation of the lives of men who live only for the injury they can do to others. It is because such men exist, and make the Secular Union the object of their malignity, that the organization does not receive the full confidence of the great body of Liberals, which it deserves, and is not generously supported by them.

We second the motion of Truth that the other Liberal papers take a stand in the matter, but we cannot agree that the Union needs fixing up by the Pittsburgh Congress or any other. The Union has a platform—the Nine Demands of Liberalism—that needs no tinkering. Its methods are the most effective that can be carried out with small means, and its executive officers are among the best men in the ranks.

The Congress may possibly find means for furthering the work and giving the Union a new impetus. That will be its chief object. It promises to be a lively gathering, and it is hoped that the whisperers or their representatives will there find the lungs to express themselves in a voice audible to the public ear.

A CORNER LOT.

Last week we published the following proposition:

To the Editors of Freethought:

I will give a Corner Lot, 50x100 feet in size, in the city of San Diego, to the person who sends you the largest number of subscribers, at your own rates, accompanied by the cash, during the year commencing May 1, 1888.

Yours for the spread of a New Gospel. RANFORD WORTHING.

San Diego, Cal., April 19, 1888.

The offer is still open, and we believe it is the first one of the kind ever made. Some papers give chromos, and some offer sewing machines, Flobert rifles, and lottery tickets as premiums; but it is evident that the day of chromos and premiums is drawing to a close when corner lots in San Diego take the field. Subscriptions may be sent in at the following rates:

One subscription one year.....	$2.00
Two subscriptions one year.....	3.00
Three subscriptions one year.....	4.00
Four subscriptions one year.....	5.00

THE CLUBBING BUSINESS.

No subscriber to this paper whose means will permit of his joining the club of one hundred, headed by Mr. Stone, can reasonably expect us to allow him to enjoy a peaceful conscience until he has sent in his pledge. The sooner he gets his name on the list the sooner will he know that satisfaction which comes from a sense of duty well performed. There are now on the $20 roll Mr. Stone, of Oakland, and Mr. Woolsey, of Messina.

Mr. W. H. Pepper, of Petaluma, has started a $10 roll by sending a check for that amount with instructions to open an account with him. He will send the names of subscribers later.

There are, too, the requisite number of sufficiently opulent

Freethinkers within the sound of these words to make up Mr. Schou's $100 club.

Procrastination is the thief of time. By grasping time by the forelock the theft may be prevented. One-half the merit of a good deed comes from doing it promptly, and delays are dangerous at best; for when a man goes to his final rest, it will be no consolation to him to recollect, between his last dose of medicine and his last breath, that he has been a Freethinker all his life, and that it hasn't cost him a cent.

THE people of the East have a legend that somewhere out west of the Rocky Mountains there is a liar who wears the champion belt of the country. He is not definitely located, but the following extract from the Daily Republic indicates that he is at present in San Luis Obispo county. The Republic, as quoted by the Santa Maria Times, says:

"On Thursday night there was lively times in the town of Santa Maria. A member of the Salvation Army made his appearance on the street in the early part of the evening, warning the people of the city of the plains that hell was not far off and advising them to prepare to meet their fate. While he was talking a lecturer on Infidelity was holding forth in the hall. In the mean time the citizens became rattled and having laid in a supply of stale eggs, they went vigorously to work and ran the two cranks out of town."

The "lecturer on Infidelity" referred to was S. P. Putnam, and it is unnecessary to say that there is no truth whatever in the foregoing quotation. The next issue of the Times contained this:

"MR. EDITORS: A quotation from the S. L. O. Daily Republic in the last issue of the Times, purporting to give the result of a Liberal lecture delivered in Santa Maria by Samuel P. Putnam, editor of the San Francisco FREETHOUGHT journal, must have been wilfully or sadly misinformed of the treatment of the above-named gentleman by the citizens of this place, who are not given over to acts of hoodlumism. The audience that greeted Mr. Putnam was a large and intelligent one, nearly all of whom remained attentive and respectful listeners of his sledge-hammer arguments to the end.
SANTA MARIAN."

So it seems that Truth has its boots on in San Luis Obispo county.

MARY BAIRD FINCH writes to the Truth Seeker as follows: "The Truth Seeker should claim the honor of being father or sponsor to FREETHOUGHT. What a paper it is!—"a perfect gem!" we hear on all sides. Long may they wave, one on the eastern, the other on our western shore. They are the beacon lights to the orient and to the occident." The relation of FREETHOUGHT to its older contemporary is somewhat like that of the third person of the trinity to the rest of the godhead—"of the father and of the son; neither made, nor created, nor begotten, but proceeding."

JUDGE GREEN, of Oakland, has recently delivered an opinion on the subject of Spiritualism. It was the case of Hannah Traver, who claims to be a "sensitive" medium, examined as to her sanity. The judge said:

"The physicians upon their oath decide that Mrs. Traver is not insane, and that she is entitled to her discharge. In this I concur with them. I am not a believer in Spiritualism, so called; I do know, however, that there are a great many people who do believe in it, and many who are considered level-headed. If we were to consider this belief an evidence of insanity, and people were to be committed for it, we would have to enlarge the insane asylums. In this case I believe that while this person may be off on this subject, she is not insane."

If only the legal distinction between offness and insanity were clearly defined, Judge Green's decision might stand as a monument of judicial wisdom.

No English writer touching upon American customs has excited more amusement than the woman who says in the Nineteenth Century magazine that in San Francisco murder and divorce are of daily occurrence, and that religion and morality are unknown. The statements that the natives of the city wear pigtails, and that the street cars go up and down hill at the same speed without propulsion, would serve equally well to illustrate the accuracy of the author's observing powers. San Francisco lacks prudishness, but the "maiden tribute" business has not yet, as in some centers of English population, attained the distinction of a local industry.

MR. STONE'S FRATERNAL GREETING.

OAKLAND, April 29, 1888.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: Allow me to send greeting through FREETHOUGHT to Brother Woolsey and say, "Give us a shake." I also want the name of the 100th man, and of the man who will join us if he possibly can, so I can shake hands with them too. If Ranford Worthing is a real estate man, that offer of a corner lot in San Diego to the one who will send in the most subscribers to FREETHOUGHT should send every Freethinker who visits San Diego in search of investments to his office first of all. I know he is the first man I should call on. I suggest that he put it up and let us all raffle for it, making the tickets $1 each, the one who wins it to have the privilege of naming as many subscribers as the money obtained will pay for at your club rates. If this suggestion is approved by him, you may put me down for one ticket.

You say right. Mr. Schou and I talked the matter over before making the offer. We felt that singly or both together we could do almost nothing; but we fully believed there were one hundred and fifty men on the Pacific slope who would willingly give from twenty to one hundred dollars each if they knew that by so doing they could place FREETHOUGHT in such a position as to make it an assured success, if we could only find out who they were.

I still believe, as you say Mr. Schou does, that we shall find them. The paper would probably live without our help, but what good can it do with only a few subscribers? If its subscription list is 2500 the first year it will be 5000 the second, and simply as a business proposition you could not afford to do otherwise than make it better and better with the money all the time.

Truly,

H. P. STONE.

MR. PUTNAM'S LECTURE HERE.

On the evening of May 27, the last Sunday in the month, Mr. S. P. Putnam will deliver a lecture in Irving Hall; subject, "The American Republic." Tickets will be printed and can be obtained at this office.

In conjunction with the lecture Mr. Putnam will endeavor to secure the organization of the San Francisco and Oakland Secular Union, if the Liberals of the two cities feel inclined to unite in that way.

MR. PUTNAM lectures at Sacramento May 6, and at Stockton May 13.

C. B. REYNOLDS has returned to Phoenix, Arizona, to meet a clergyman in debate.

ALFRED BRADLAUGH TOMSON, corresponding secretary of the Utah Secular Union, has forwarded to FREETHOUGHT an extended report of the work of Dr. J. L. York in that section. A long series of meetings have been held, ending with a sociable at which resolutions were passed and a gold-headed cane presented to Dr. York in recognition of his valuable services.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

There are droughts in Cuba that will lessen the sugar product from twelve to twenty per cent.—The Alarm, the Chicago Anarchist paper of which Albert R. Parsons was the former editor, and Dyer D. Lum his successor, has suspended publication.—Dr. Clemence S. Lozier, the woman suffrage advocate, died suddenly at her home in New York on the 27th of April.—Fred Gebhardt, Mrs. Langtry's "Freddy," has purchased three thousand acres of land in Lake county, in this state. He will make it a breeding farm for horses.—This news comes late: Miss Easterday, an Ohio lass, was reprimanded for unbecoming conduct in Sunday-school, on Easter Sunday, whereupon her mother rose up and thrashed the superintendent.—The New York aldermen have taken the matter of raising the flag on the City Hall out of the hands of the mayor, where it formerly resided, and placed it in their own.—Mr. Caine, the Utah delegate in Congress, declares there is no further disposition among the Mormons to violate the anti-polygamy statute.—The Prohibitionists of Iowa have nominated a state ticket. The platform adopted at their convention last week favors woman suffrage and advocates a stringent Sunday law.—Concerning the union of the Northern and Southern Presbyterian churches the Louisville presbytery has passed a resolution to the effect that until the Northern brethren are ready to organize the colored people into separate churches the agitation of the question of uniting had better be dropped.—At the President's reception on the 27th there were present delegates of a religious convention, the Boston baseball team, many of the ballet of a theatrical troupe, and the chorus of an opera company. A religious crank, who informed the ushers that he was "owned by God and the Bible," was shut out.—Mortality statistics show that there were 127 deaths in San Francisco last week against 109 for the corresponding week last year.—An English brewer has willed $150,000 to the United Presbyterian church.—The governors of the thirteen original states, with the exception of Massachusetts, met in Philadelphia last week to take steps toward preparing a fitting memorial of the one hundredth anniversary of the United States constitution. The governor of North Carolina and the governor of South Carolina were in attendance, but their conversation is not reported.—Cincinnati is in the throes of a new Sunday law, and the people have not yet made up their minds whether they will pay any attention to it or not.—Senator Stanford is reported to have said in an interview that the talk of his candidacy for the presidency is all nonsense, and that he does not wish to be considered as such.—The San Jose floral fair opened magnificently last Saturday evening.—Several severe earthquake shocks frightened the inhabitants of the interior on the 28th ult. They were felt at Stockton, Nevada City, Truckee, and other places.—The emperor of Germany survived the recent crisis in his health, and is on the mend and in excellent spirits.—The steamer Belgic came in Saturday last with 623 Chinese on board.—It is estimated that 65,000 teachers will be represented at the coming educational convention in San Francisco.—A Roman Catholic college is in process of erection at Petaluma, and has reached the third story. The claim is made for it that it will be an "imposing" structure. Imposition is the most prominent feature of all Catholic institutions.—Gladstone has an article in the Nineteenth Century magazine in defense of orthodoxy.—The Jewish Times denounces the statement of the Central Baptist that ten thousand Jews have been converted to Christianity in the present century as "false, wilful and malicious."—The Rev. Edgar L. Hermance, of White Plains, N. Y., committed suicide in the pulpit last Sunday by shooting himself in the head. He was in trouble over the matter of his salary.—The Chicago Times will send a party of hunters into the southwestern part of Texas to discover and round up the last of the wild buffaloes.—Melville W. Fuller, of Illinois, has been named by the president to the Senate for chief justice of the United States.—A meeting, composed of Irishmen and Englishmen, held at Aldershot, England, on Monday, condemned the pope's decree, and resolved to found a branch of the Home Rule organization, and to cease contributions to Peter's pence.—The fine ocean steamer, Queen of the Pacific, plying between San Francisco and Southern ports, sprung a leak last Sunday and sank at the wharf at Port Harford. No lives were lost.—Madam Diss De Bar, the alleged fraudulent medium, is held for trial in $5,000 bonds.—There have been great freshets along the Connecticut river, in New Hampshire and Vermont.—In the forty-eight hours ending at noon last Monday 10,000 immigrants landed at Castle Garden, New York.

A LETTER FROM SAN JOSE.

On the 22d instant S. P. Putnam, president of the Secular Union, gave two lectures in this city. The following notice, which appeared in the Mercury of the 23d, will show what was done:

ED. MERCURY: I take it upon myself to give you a brief outline of the lectures of Mr. Putnam at Turnverein Hall, Sunday. The afternoon lecture, on "Dangers Ahead," was ably handled. I wish every citizen in San Jose could have heard it. He proved that as a nation we are not acting in accordance with the Constitution of the United States, and gave numberless reasons for the necessity of organizing auxiliaries to the American Secular Union, whose fundamental basis is the Nine Demands of Liberalism, which demand a total separation of church and state. He quoted from Franklin, who said, "We hold that the only guarantee of religious or civil liberty is the absolute divorce of church and state;" from James A. Garfield, who said, "The divorce between church and state ought to be absolute;" from George Washington, who said, "The government is in no sense founded on the Christian religion;" from Grant, who said, "Keep church and state forever separate." He proved that danger threatens our government, and that we should be up and doing. The evening lecture, on the "Glory of Infidelity," was a masterly effort. I will not attempt to give you a synopsis, as it would occupy too much space. I will merely say that he stated that "the title of Infidel is one that has been bestowed upon us by the Christian world. We do not call ourselves Infidels; we call ourselves Freethinkers, but we are willing to accept the title they have given us," etc. At the close an organization was effected, and the following temporary officers were elected; President, Mr. Woodhams, of Santa Clara; secretary, Mrs. R. H. Schwartz; committee on by-laws, Messrs. Magenheimer, Titus, Pobritz, and Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Swartz. All felt that they had spent a profitable day.

MRS. R. H. SWARTZ.

The committee appointed a meeting for Sunday evening, April 29, and that evening found them in their places, with the exception of Mr. Woodhams, who was unavoidably detained at home. R. H. Schwartz was appointed in his place. The constitution and by-laws presented were satisfactory, but some additions were found necessary. A committee of three was appointed to draw these up. Mr. Vostrovsky, Miss Anna Vostrovsky, and Mr. Scheneman compose this committee. The money was raised to send for the charter, and the secretary was authorized to attend to the matter at once. It was decided to call this organization the Secular Union of San Jose. The dues were fixed at fifty cents the first month, and twenty-five cents per month thereafter. Adjournment was taken to Wednesday, May 9.

MRS. R. H. SCHWARTZ, Sec'y.

San Jose, April 30, 1888.

Left Desolate.

A little while you tell me, but a little while,
And I shall be where my beloved are;
And with your eyes all large with faith, you say,
"Thy dear ones have not journeyed very far."
"Not very far." I say it o'er and o'er,
Till on mine ear mine own voice strangely falls,
Like some mechanic utterance that repeats
A meaningless refrain to empty walls.
"Not very far." But measured by my grief,
A distance measureless as my despair,
When, from the dreams that give them back to me,
I wake to find that they have journeyed there!
"Not very far." Ah me! the spirit has Had its conjectures since the first man slept;
But oh the heart, it knoweth its own loss,
And death is death, as 'twas when Rachel wept!
—Chambers's Journal.

"Is Mr. Anthony Comstock present?" inquired the speaker, pausing a moment. "No," came from the audience. "Then, friends and fellow citizens," went on the orator, raising his voice until the rafters rang, "the sentiment I have just uttered is the naked truth."—New York Sun.

SERVETUS.

Among the historical associations of the places a tourist visits those are most thoroughly vivified in which he previously had the deepest interest. And so, among all the memories that cluster around Geneva, those of Calvin, Voltaire, Rousseau, and Servetus are apt to stand forth in boldest prominence. The careers of the first named have been amply set forth, but poor Servetus has hardly had his share of notoriety. Be it my privilege to pay a tribute to this pure-minded Spaniard—scholar, physician, geographer, and proto-martyr at the hands of the reformed religionists.

Servetus quitted his student life to take service with the confessor of the Emperor Charles V., with him visited Bologna and Augsburg, and thus not only saw the great world, but came into contact with distinguished thinkers. Leaving the employment of the confessor, he had some intercourse with the Swiss reformers, and wrote his book on "Trinitarian Errors." He did not take his stand as a Unitarian pure and simple, but held to the divinity of Christ and the Holy Ghost. It is in attempting to define this Trinity in other terms or from another point of view than that expressed in the Athanasian or Nicene creeds that men became befogged. While Servetus would not assent to a Godhead in three persons, going so far as to term such a God a three-headed Cerberus, he yet conceived Christ and the Holy Ghost as modes, forms, or manifestations of deity. In fact, while attempting rigorous and hair-splitting definitions, he wanders off into the realm of Pantheism and vague, nebulous statement. This difficulty of defining God in terms of human speech is like undertaking to measure the ocean by cupfuls. The only wonder is that any one should attempt it, seeing that the scriptures themselves say, "Who, by searching, can find out God?" The Quakers were both reverent and wise, perhaps, in this respect, the wisest of the sects, as they refused to define the Godhead in other than scripture terms.

Returning from Augsburg to Paris, Servetus met Calvin there and discussed these matters, but did not convert him to his misty views on the Trinity. Hard and fast definitions are perhaps more congenial to the Calvinistic mind than such as those of Servetus, which reverently leave God, so to speak, undifferentiated.

Leaving Paris, Servetus went to Lyons, and, taking the name of Villinovanus, he edited, with credit to himself and profit for the distinguished printer for whom he worked, a fine edition of Ptolemy's geography. Here he formed the friendship of an able physician, who recognized his ability and persuaded him to study medicine. To do this he returned to Paris, and, being an apt scholar, he soon himself became a lecturer on this subject.

About this time he formed the conviction that the baptism of children was an error, his views on this subject telling heavily against him, at his fatal trial in Geneva, in the minds of his judges, who could more readily discern this heresy than disentangle fine-spun controversies about the Trinity. Driven from Paris by the jealous antagonism of other medical teachers, he took service with the archbishop of Vienne, France. About this time he edited a second edition of Ptolemy for the same printer, which was an improvement even on the former, and an edition of the Bible with notes. It was at this period that he made the discovery of the circulation of the blood, for which he must be forever famous, at least in the annals of medicine. He distinctly states the passage of the blood from the heart to the lungs, and its return to the heart, and hints at its flow from the heart again through the arteries and its return by the veins.

It was at Vienne that he secretly printed his great book, "The Restitution of Christianity," which possibly he fondly hoped would put him in the front rank of the Reformers, or at least bring them to his views of the Godhead. The whole edition was cautiously shipped to Germany to be sold there, and a copy reached Calvin at Geneva. Calvin, having an antipathy for this author of a rival doctrine, found means to surreptitiously denounce Servetus to the Catholic authorities at Vienne, desiring thus to demonstrate the abhorrence of the Reformers for Unitarianism. The inquisitor pounced upon Servetus, though sheltered in the employ of the archbishop, and he was tried and condemned. Knowing the punishment was the terrible death by fire, Servetus adroitly effected his escape, and went to Geneva, expecting safety in secrecy if not open toleration there. But his presence became known to Calvin, at whose instance he was arrested and put on trial. His cause was taken up by those who were opposed to the harsh rule of the French reformer, and, buoyed up by these partisans, Servetus defied Calvin in as bitter and contumelious terms as Calvin used towards him. This kind of vilification was the usage of the era, the arsenal of the fathers being drawn upon for opprobrious epithets. The grounds of accusation were several times changed at Calvin's dictation, who was tempted by every motive, perhaps personal vindictiveness included, to insure Servetus's condemnation. If he was eager to clear his skirts of the taint of Unitarianism by informing on him to the Romanists in France, it was still more incumbent upon him to secure his conviction when in his own territory. Again, for the perpetuation of his own power, it was necessary to crush Servetus, because the cause of the latter was championed by the party seeking to dethrone Calvin in Geneva. One of the Italian reformers at this juncture happened to write to Calvin of the appearance of Unitarian doctrine among the convents; and the Swiss Protestants of the other cantons also urged his condemnation as essential. Thus every consideration peculiarly conspired to embitter Calvin and impel him to that fiery sacrifice of his theological and personal antagonist which is the burning brand on his character. That Servetus could have supported himself intellectually so admirably during this trial is most remarkable, for not only was he horribly maltreated while in prison, but he was deprived of those advantages of meeting his opponent—such as counsel, books, time for preparing answers, etc.—which were essential to his defense. These were particularly necessary seeing, as mentioned above, Calvin several times changed the grounds of his accusations. Not only did Servetus bear up most wonderfully under the hardships of his prison life, but he replied with surprising courage and ability to the attacks and contumely of Calvin. In fact he was so able that he almost slipped through Calvin's fingers, and would have done so but for his Anabaptist views and the pressure Calvin was able to bring to bear upon his judges.

At last Calvin succeeded in forcing the court to pronounce his condemnation, and it would constitute a grand theme for some painter to depict Servetus, a physical wreck, brought up one morning, all unconscious of his fate, before the judges, gathered at the door of the Hotel de Ville, to hear his awful doom. Stunned and agonized by this sudden and unlooked for ending of his trial, and knowing full well the exquisite agony he was to endure, Servetus for awhile broke down. But, returned to prison for an hour, his nobility returned to him, and he sent for Calvin, who came rejoicing in the hope that he might give in his recantation before he endured the stake. It was not, however, to recant his well matured opinions, but that he might before he died apologize for the harsh words that he had hurled at him, that Servetus called for Calvin. Disappointed of his triumph and unmoved by his opponent's affecting apology, Calvin left him to his fate, but sent some of his preachers to embitter his last moments by reproaches as he went on the road to Champel. To add to his torment green wood was placed on the funeral pyre. Servetus was chained to the stake and the torch applied. Let us draw a veil over the sickening scene, thanking our fate that such an execution cannot be inflicted upon us. That such punishments were congenial to this gloomy era is shown by the fact that the waters of some of the springs of Europe were recommended as beneficial to persons who had been tortured on the rack. Think what a distance, greater than that of time, separates us from the possibility of such torture inflicted for religious opinions conscientiously and devoutly held.

It was under the influence of such feelings of gratitude that I walked out with an intelligent physician from India, one fine afternoon, to Champel, which is on the edge of the built up portions of Geneva, in the same month that Servetus met his fate for giving voice to convictions similar to those now extensively held in Christendom. It was October 27, 1553, that Servetus died at the hands of men whose tenets (viz., that a vindictive God pursues the predestinated soul through æons with unmitigated torture, each moment of which is to be worse than those last ones of Servetus) now seem horrible and blasphemous. But always men have personified God according to their own ideals. As we walked out in the clear bracing atmosphere of the lovely Alpine scene I imagined Servetus as gazing at almost the identical view that met our eyes: the beautiful Lake Lemman to the east, the Jura mountains to the north, the Mount Blanc range to south, and the rolling landscape to the west. Who can realize the agony of this lonely man, hounded to the last by his persecutors, going to a bitter death in the vigor of his intellect, and yet courageous to the end and spurning the invocations to recant. He died! but shall we not put up some memorial to witness to the respectful sympathy of an age that resents the cruel doctrine and persecuting spirit of Calvin? Yes! Though the exact spot is not identified where his cruel taking off was effected, yet the vicinity is known. Not far from where his spirit took its flight is a hospital, fit type of his humane nature. Here, in these grounds, let the memory of the martyr and distinguished physiologist be commemorated by a simple tablet to be erected by the unsolicited subscriptions of his admirers and sympathizers. NOTE.—An excellent book on this subject has been published by Dr. R. Willis, of London, entitled "Calvin and Servetus." Dr. Willis was attracted to study the career of Servetus from having been called upon to edit the literary remains of Harvey, and while engaged in this work found that Harvey had been substantially preceded in his discovery of the circulation of the blood by Servetus. Dr. Willis's book is based on the exhaustive labors of H. Tollin (pastor of the Huguenot church of Magdeburg), who has for thirty years made Servetus's life a study, and has published about forty studies on him, after having traveled in his footsteps over Europe. "Servetus's system of Doctrine," in three volumes, "Luther and Servetus," "Melancthon and Servetus," "Bucher and Servetus," "The Discovery of the Circulation of the Blood," "Harvey and his Predecessors," "The Character of M. Servetus," (which has been translated into English, French, Hungarian, Italian and Spanish) indicate the thoroughness and industry with which Mr. Tollin has executed his work. The following inscription has been suggested for the memorial, and it would seem as if Calvinists, Catholics, Jews, Pantheists, Unitarians, and even Atheists (if indeed such exist) could unite in erecting a monument to bear such a simple inscription as is proposed:

A LA MEMOIRE
de
MICHEL SERVET,
MORT SUR CETTE PLACE,
Victime de l'intolerance religieuse, a monument a ete elevee au nom de le liberte de conscience du xix siecle.

[Translation.]

To the memory of Michael Servetus, who died on this spot, a victim to religious intolerance, this monument has been erected in the name of the liberty of conscience of the 19th century.

WHAT THE DEVIL HAS DONE.

All the progress of the world, all the development from barbarism to civilization, from fig-leaves to broadcloth and velvet, from oxcarts to railroads and steamboats, from tents to palaces, came from the knowledge man gained through the fall, and the need which at the same time came upon him "to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow." For is it not work that brings out the powers of mind and body, as it is evil resisted that makes the character grow strong? Without the devil there would have been no fall; without the fall there would have been no knowledge of good and evil, no necessity to work, no evil to be resisted; and without this knowledge, without this necessity to work, without evil to be resisted, there would have been no progress, no civilization, no development of man's own mind or soul. And is there any intelligent man in our modern world who would exchange his knowledge, his freedom of will, his power of self-development and progression—signs that tell him he may reach yet higher; that he is neither an animal nor a puppet, but a being akin to God—for the inane and childish delights of the Garden of Eden?

Is there any man who would give up the comforts of his own house, the comfort of his hotel, his traveling accommodations, his telegraph by which he can communicate with the uttermost parts of the earth, his telephone that enables him to converse with an acquaintance miles distant, his warm furs in winter and cool linen in summer, his books, his pictures, his newspapers, his wonderful discoveries in the great world of art and science—is there any intelligent man who would exchange these earthly goods, these tokens of his progress, these evidences of his freedom of action and creative brain, for the ignorance and uncivilized life of the Garden of Eden and the delight of living without work, in harmony with lions and lambs?

And if we look at the matter rightly, should we not give the devil his due and feel greatly indebted to him—power of evil though he be—for the part he has played in man's development? For if he had not tempted Eve what would man be now? If he did not still tempt us, how could we ever grow strong? And surely a strong and beautiful character, though it be developed only through trial, temptation, and suffering, is more to be desired than a life of aimless ease, in which there is no progression, no development, and only such pleasures as are common to bird and beast?—Louisville Courier-Journal.

THE MODERN CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

All history must be accepted with a great deal of allowance and uncertainty. Even the most recent is full of error. The history of our late war is given by many authors, and by all in different terms and colors. There is no one great event but each has his own version.

Ancient history is still further from reliable truth. Its dawn is full of fables, ghosts, demons, gods and demi-gods, miracles and prophecies without end. The further you go back the more they abound, but even at this day history is not accepted as demonstration for any great truth. Science refuses merely historic statements. Law will not listen to them. They demand something more; the sworn testimony of those who were there, of what they saw and heard. They must be well informed, impartial, and have no motive or purpose for misstatement.

They do not accept the testimony of Mormons as to the life and character of Joseph Smith. They are not content with the evidence of Spiritualists as to the work of their mediums. Indeed, we find men of all sects and parties ready to mislead, to distort, and invent facts to draw other men over to their opinions and interests.

Ghosts, miracles, and prophecies have vanished into thin air. In the light of modern science, newspapers, and general intelligence they have no existence. Italy and Ireland are full of holy places—wells, churches, images, and locations memorable for miraculous appearances and effects. America has none. Discovered, located, and named by a practical and sensible people, we have not one foot of holy ground in this vast republic.

The Christian religion began with Jesus Christ, almost nineteen centuries past. The first records of his life, the four gospels, are the only evidence we have of his existence. Accepting them as narratives of an actual life, and casting out all that modern science rejects, because it is not proven, it is improbable, it is impossible, as we think, and incapable of proof, we find these facts remaining:

That he was of very poor parentage; was without rank, learning, or property; about thirty years of age he began to preach; he was wise, eloquent, and loving; he attracted crowds to hear him; he was the friend of the poor. He taught these things: "God is your father and mine; we are all brethren; call no man master; there is none good but God; love ye one another; do as ye would be done by; forgive as you would be forgiven; sell that ye have and give to the poor; lay not up treasures on earth; suffer little children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven; it is not God's will that one should perish; who denieth one of them bread or water, denieth it to the Father in heaven; unless you believe and do these things, ye cannot be my disciples; lay not heavy burdens on men's shoulders; make no long prayers; blessed are the meek, the peacemakers, and all those who hunger and thirst after righteousness, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven."

These words are truly sublime and beautiful. As a message from God they would be worthy of their origin. Coming from a man they lift the author to the very pinnacle of human greatness. Christ is worthy to sit with the foremost of mankind. In moral excellence he has no superior. But he is not alone in his glory. Before him the same things were taught; and since, they have been elaborated, refined, and more accurately and practically explained and enforced.

Yet his character was not without fault. His wine exploit at the marriage feast is not defensible. His conduct to the fig-tree is not that of a philosopher, and his standing dumb before Pilate is scarcely becoming in a brave man.

As a man he commands our love and admiration, and makes us wish with Desdemona "that heaven had made us such a man." As a God, or the Son of God, or in any manner allied to the Eternal Mind of the Universe, he fails utterly. We cannot conceive of such a relationship. But be he what he may, his word and actions called around him many zealous followers. They proclaimed his greatness and his doctrines. They understood him to preach communism. They had all things in common, and no man called that his own which was his own. They had love feasts, and clung to each other with great affection.

As time rolled on we find two things appear in their ranks. They began to magnify the character of Christ and to worship him, and in the same degree to neglect the practice of his precepts. As the church grew, deacons and bishops appeared. The commune was laid aside. Christ was gradually exalted into a prophet, an evangel, the son of God, and God; and all the while his precepts were disregarded, and gradually dropped out of sight.

Organization brought rank, the bishop. Strife ensued. The love was lost. And as early as the second century we find Christians murdering each other about the rank of Christ, whether he were a prophet or God, and at the same time neglecting all that he commanded them to do.

Three hundred years after his death, the bishops were called father. They had seized a supreme power in the church. Christians were no longer brethren, they called the bishops pastors and masters, and forms and ceremonies, long prayers, and fees for the bishops took the place of brotherhood, common property, and good works.

Then the emperor of Rome, Constantine, in great trouble, pretended to become a Christian, and made his throne secure by an alliance with the bishops. We do not learn that the brethren were consulted; the bishops carried the church over to the side of the emperor.

Thus secured on the throne, he desired to make the alliance more perfect. He called the Council of Nice. The delegates were not elected by the brethren. The emperor called the bishops and of them only such as he chose. The bishops presumed to represent the church, and to give it away to the emperor.

The Council of Nice met soon after the year 300. The bishops composing it were neither good, wise, just, nor peaceable men. As compared to this council the convention that framed the Constitution of the United States were saints and angels. These last deliberated wisely and kindly. We are not aware that any offensive words were spoken; and surely no serious quarrels arose. The Constitution they produced will command the admiration of mankind to the end of time.

On the contrary, in this Council of Nice they quarreled, fought, beat, and assassinated each other in their disputes about the sacred books and the creed to be established. There was no freedom there. The obstinate minority were put out of the way by violence. Their history will tell you so much.

This council, thus constituted, declared what the Christian religion should be. It selected the books of the Bible. It fixed the creed. It made the trinity. It declared Christ the son of God. It made the bishops lord bishops and entire masters of the church. They swore to support the emperor, and he swore to support them. When their work was finished the emperor made proclamation "that the council had declared the true, and only Christian faith; that all Christians were commanded to receive it without question; that all who should question it should die the death, and their books be burned with fire."

Thus was the religion of Jesus changed into the religion of Rome. Christ was nominally exalted, and made God; while all his teachings were trampled under foot and forever put aside. The sham took the name, the shadow, and rejected the substance.

The bishops have risen all the time from that day forth, into archbishops, cardinals, and popes, and the people, the brethren, have sunk into children, servants, slaves, without a voice in the church, or the right to think for themselves. The bishops are everybody, and everybody else is nobody.

The Protestant churches have undone some of this clerical aggrandizement. But they have never gone behind this Council of Nice, and questioned its decisions. The Bible as the word of God, has no support except this corrupt council. The dogma of the Trinity came from the same source. The whole scheme of church organization and clerical supremacy began here.

The imperative duty of belief was in the spirit of the imperial proclamation. All speak of the empire, despotism, dictation, and death and hell for unbelief and Freethought. The religion of Christ was set aside, and the religion of Rome took its place. Every precept was reversed:

The bishops became pastors and masters; the disciples were no longer brethren; the pope became holy father; the church piled up wealth; the poor starved; the children were neglected; they said long prayers; they invented useless ceremonies; they preached salvation for belief and for vain and empty ceremonies; they ceased to be doers of the word; they became allies of kings, and enemies of the poor.

The Roman Catholic church was organized like a great army, with lay brothers, priests, deacons, archdeacons, bishops, archbishops, cardinals, and pope. They taught this religion of Rome as the religion of Christ, and they succeeded in converting the ignorant multitudes by their persistent reiteration.

Other religions have done the same, and with about the same results. The numbers attached to each indicate pretty well the time they have been at work, and the perfection of their organization; but by no means the amount of truth attached to each. Thus we find:

Name.	Time at work.	Numbers.
Bhuddists, .....	3,000 years,	500,000,000
Christians, .....	1,900 "	400,000,000
Mohammedans, .....	1,200 "	200,000,000
Protestants, .....	300 "	150,000,000
Methodists, .....	100 "	20,000,000
Mormons, .....	50 "	200,000

It will be seen here that Christianity, as it is called, has made no miraculous progress. Buddhism and Mohammedanism have kept pace with it for the time they have been at work. The minor branches of Christians have numbers proportioned to their age and Mormonism and the Salvation Army have achieved a success equal to their age.

But each and all of them are at war with the Republic, its freedom of thought, its government by the people, and its no punishment for honest opinions. They all have clergy by the grace of God; they all command belief; they all punish unbelief; they are all on the imperial pattern. The great republic cannot accept the decision of the imperial Council of Nice as to the character and religion of Christ. It has no good reason to reject them all. It has no confidence in the emperor; none in the bishops called by him; none in the conduct of the majority; none in the method of enforcement.

We call for a new trial of all the issues. We deny that that council had any right to decide for us. Our fathers, our scientists, our jurists all declare that it committed the gravest errors, which we hold to be irrational, unjust, and destructive of all liberty and manhood. The learned world calls for a new trial, and is rejecting the whole scheme in all the great centers of intelligence. Were a council of learned and representative men of Europe and the United States to meet now to do over all the work of the Council of Nice, they would not sustain that council on a single point. They would break down the whole system and with one voice declare:

That the mind is and must be free, as the only guarantee of freedom, virtue, and happiness; that no opinion can be a crime; that it would be utterly unjust for either God or man to punish mere opinions; that all religion is error that teaches any of these things.

The Sublime Height.

If you want prohibition in all its purity and grandeur, let liquor alone, and it will never molest you or make you afraid.—Santa Ana Standard.

"THE HOLY SABBATH."

In the fifteenth chapter of Acts we read of a council of Apostles and Elders convened especially to determine what should be required of Gentile converts, and the decision was that they should "abstain from the pollutions of idols, and from fornication, and from what is strangled, and from blood." But Sabbath-breaking is not mentioned, and apparently never thought of.

So the fourth question must receive a decided negative.

If Christ had intimated that a new Sabbath was to replace the old one, the evangelists would probably have heard something of it, and mentioned it in their narratives. Let us see. Matthew says: "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week" (Matt. xxviii, 1). This was written, according to Christian chronology, six years after Christ's ministry, and he says the Sabbath was the seventh day of the week, ended before "the first day of the week" began. Mark xvi, 1, reads: "And when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome had brought sweet spices that they might come to anoint him, and very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came to the sepulchre at the rising of the sun."

It seems they had waited till the Sabbath was past, and then came to perform the rites on the first day of the week, a thing they could not do on the Sabbath. This was written twelve years after Christ's crucifixion, yet Mark speaks of the Jewish Sabbath as being the only Sabbath known.

Luke, writing twenty-three years after Christ, says: "And they returned and prepared spices and ointments, and rested on the Sabbath day according to the commandment."

What commandment? Undoubtedly the Mosaic commandment, as there was no other on record (Luke xxiv, 1).

John, the disciple whom Jesus loved, writing more than sixty years after the death of his master, speaks of "the first day of the week," but says not one word about any sacredness attaching to it, and John would have known if Christ ever intimated anything of the kind.

Sunday Sabbatarians try to torture the language of John (Revelation i, 10) into a recognition of the sacredness of the first day of the week, and foolishly assert that the words "Lord's day" refer to Sunday, or the first day of the week. By turning to Exodus xx, 10, 11, and Mark ii, 28, you will see how much truth there is in the assumption. They read: "But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." "Therefore the Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath." A desperate case with unscrupulous men always insures desperate measures.

Having shown that the apostles and evangelists did not institute the Christian Sabbath, and knew nothing of anyone else having done so, we now proceed to the consideration of:

5. "If the apostles did not institute the Christian Sabbath, did the fathers of the church do so?"

Justin Martyr (A. D. 140) said to some learned and zealous Jews: "You Jews think when you have passed a day in idleness, you are very religious. Our God is not pleased with such things. There was no need of Sabbaths before Moses, so there is no need of them since Jesus Christ."

Ireneus, Tertullian, and Eusebius held similar views, and taught that the Sabbath, as mentioned by Moses, signified only the appointment of a day to be observed afterwards by the Jews, but by none others.

And they say that there is no evidence that the patriarchs in all their 2,500 years ever observed it, or were required or expected to do so. Ireneus said: "Abraham had faith and was called the friend of God, yet neither was circumcised nor observed the Sabbath."

St. Cyril, bishop of Jerusalem, A. D. 345, forbids his converts to observe the Sabbath and says: "Henceforth reject all observance of the Sabbath." Athanasius says: "We keep no Sabbath." Epiphanius says: "The Jews have their little Sabbath, but we our great Sabbath, which is, rest from our sins." According to St. Jerome, all days are alike to a Christian. St. Augustine plainly declares that there is no obligation on a Christian to keep any Sabbath and says: "The observance of that kind of a Sabbath which consists in the observance of a single day is no longer a duty for the faithful." St. Chrysostom also says: "For what purpose then did he add the reason respecting the Sabbath, but not in regard to murder? Because this commandment was not one of the leading ones, but a kind of a partial and temporary one. And for this reason it was abolished afterwards." Here the "silvermouthed saint" speaks positively of the Jewish Sabbath being abolished, but no word escapes him of the establishment of a Christian Sabbath in its stead.

The apostles wrangled over the observance of the Sabbath, but it was always the Jewish institution they referred to. The phrase, "the first day of the week," occurs in the New Testament eight times, but a holy character is never attributed to it. The word "Sabbath" occurs about thirty times in the New Testament but it never once refers to the first day of the week.

You may search the Bible from the words, "In the beginning," to the "Amen" of Revelations, and you will not find the word Sunday in it.

The evidence is voluminous and all-conclusive that the fathers of the church regarded the Jewish Sabbath as no longer binding, but did not regard the first day of the week as a substitute for it.

That this is true is evident from the official utterance of the holy Catholic church, as set forth in the eighth canon of the second Council of Nice—the only authoritative dictum of the church on the subject. It reads as follows: "Whereas, some deceived persons, coming from the religion of the Hebrews, have appeared to deride Christ, our God, feigning to become Christians, but denying him in secret, and secretly observing the Sabbath, and doing other Judaic action," etc.

So the "Universal Christian Church" is not responsible for the Protestant Sabbath.

This brings us to inquire whether the Reformers may not be responsible for our present Puritanical Christian Sabbath.

Colonel Ingersoll once said that "Calvin was as near like his God as he could be, and enjoy good health," yet in Book 2, Chapter 8, of Calvin's "Institutes" occurs this passage: "The fathers frequently call the commandment for the Sabbath a shadowy commandment, because it contains the external observance of a day which was abolished with the rest of the figures at the advent of Christ. * * * Christians, therefore, should have nothing to do with a superstitious observance of days." He further wrote, "Neither do I regard the septenary number that I would bind the church to its observance. And truly we see what such a doctrine has profited, for those who adopt it far exceed the Jews in gross, carnal, and superstitious observances of the Sabbath."

That was Calvin in 1550, but to-day he could not win a fourth-class prize in a Presbyterian Sunday-school.

Martin Luther—once considered pretty good Protestant authority—said: "As regards the Sabbath or Sunday, there is no necessity for keeping it. If anywhere the day is made holy for the mere day's sake; if any set up its observance on a Jewish foundation, then I order you to work on it, to ride on it, to dance on it, and to do anything that shall reprove this encroachment on the Christian spirit of Liberty."

Philip Melancthon embodied in the "Augsburg Confession" the following: "They who think that the observance of the Lord's day was appointed by authority of the church, instead of the Sabbath as necessary, are greatly deceived, * * its observance, nor any other day is of necessity. There are extant monstrous disputations respecting a change of Sabbath, which have sprung up from a false notion that there should be worship in the church like to the Levitical worship. They dispute about holy days, and how far it is lawful to work on them. What else are disputations but snares for men's consciences?"

Archbishop Cranmer said: "The Jews were commanded to keep the Sabbath day, but we Christians are not bound by such commandments of Moses' law."

William Tyndale, who translated the Bible, and suffered martyrdom, says: "As for the Sabbath, we are lords over it, and may yet change it to Monday, or any other day of the week as we see need, or may make every tenth day a holy day. Neither need we any holy day at all, if the people might be taught without it."

John Milton writes: "If on the plea of divine command they impose upon us the observance of a particular day, how do they presume without the authority of a divine command to substitute another day in its place?"

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed I hand you $2, which you will please pass to my credit for one year's subscription to FREETHOUGHT.

I am real proud to see that you are meeting with good favor, and trust that your journal may grow and prosper.

I shall render you all the assistance possible, and in case you get in a "tight" let me know and I will come to the rescue.

Yours very truly, LOUIS C. GILMORE.

Inconsistent.

[Refused publication at the Union Record office, Sacramento.]

If it is right for the church to allow migratory lecturers to lecture and exhibit in their churches for the purpose of advertising their business, why will she not allow ethical, liberal, and scientific lecturers there without any restrictions or qualifications?

A cause must be weak if it must seek protection from the church in order to impose upon the credulity of the people. At the same time it can give the church no credit or strength. In this age of the world charlatanism, or anything else that is not pure and good, can no longer be imposed upon enlightened people, notwithstanding it seeks shelter under the wings of the church.

The unwary, the uninformed, should not be imposed upon by the sanction of the church.

Large for its Size.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have received two or three copies of FREETHOUGHT, and to say that I appreciate it is stating it very mildly.

It is just the kind of a young rooster one might have expected, being hatched from a Truth Seeker egg. I think FREETHOUGHT is just as good for its age and just as big for its size as any of the Liberal papers—and they are the best in the world. When I commence lecturing this fall, which will be about September 1, I will try to secure subscribers for you, and all the Liberal papers, giving subscribers their choice, as I am friendly towards all of them.

I inclose 10 cents for Mr. Stevens's pamphlet, "God in the State." May you meet with the success you deserve.

Fraternally yours, GEO. H. DAWES.
Pittsville, Wis., April 12, 1888.

Mr. Woolsey's Word to Liberals.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I hand you three additional names which I wish you to send sample copies of FREETHOUGHT to.

And I wish here to say a word to all friends of humanity, and especially those who receive sample copies of FREETHOUGHT, founded and established at San Francisco in the month of January, 1888, for the purpose of free discussion and education to such as will heed its voice and unstop their intellects and thus welcome the new gospel—newer now than when first uttered, because of the blindness and unwillingness of those held by old customs and preconceived notions to unloose the bonds that bound them.

It is much easier to go along with the current than to stem the tide or row up stream, and it is only those that brave the flood who are the rescuers of those unable to save themselves. Christ was a bold reformer and struck blows right and left against rigid traditions in his day. The true Christ of to-day is one who loves the race and is swift to see the signs of the times giving warning; who advocate science and nature's morality as against so-called Christian morality; equal taxation, and secularization of all public offices and trusts, and a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people," and not for any god or ruler in the skies; who believes in inalienable and individual rights, among them "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," which in these later days are sought to be perverted to the glory of mammon and not man, and woe be to those by whom the offense cometh. So say I, and so should all the people say anew.

Now, a word to the wise is said to be sufficient. Will the friends who receive these sample copies ponder a moment and see if they can afford to be without this Freethought paper from one of the great marts of the world; news of the week, both religious and secular, and the "News and Notes" written by the editor, Samuel P. Putnam, who, as the apostle of liberty and humanity, gives such a glowing description of all places visited, and not only the places but the principal and leading people of each place, and leaving nothing untold peculiar to it. Thus you get a weekly history of everything stirring and important connected with this wonderful land, and all for the meagre sum of 3 cents each week. So please forward the ducats and make glad the hearts and hands interested.

We wish to introduce this magazine to the Freethinkers of the Pacific coast and to make it easy for them to take both FREETHOUGHT and this magazine we will send it to any subscriber of FREETHOUGHT at one-half price.

We intend the magazine shall voice the best thought of Liberalism in this country. Each number contains 48 pages, is printed on heavy tinted paper, and is got up in a style that makes it an ornament to any Freethought centre table. Each number contains several likenesses of distinguished Freethinkers with a short sketch of their lives. And remember that any subscriber of FREETHOUGHT can have it a year for $1.

The following are the names of some of the distinguished Liberals who will, from month to month, contribute to the columns of this magazine: Robert G. Ingersoll, T. B. Wakeman, Thomas Davidson, Wm. Emmette Colman, James M. McCann, Frederick May Holland, Helen H. Gardener, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Allen Pringle, J. M. Peables, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, A. B. Bradford, S. H. Preston, Courtlandt Palmer, Harry Hoover, Lyman C. Howe.

TESTIMONIALS.

I am greatly pleased with the Freethinkers' Magazine, and wish it the greatest success.—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Without doubt the Freethinkers' Magazine, as now published, is by far the handsomest journal in the Liberal field. No matter how many Liberal papers a Freethinker may be taking, he cannot afford to be without the magazine.—C. P. Farrell, Colonel Ingersoll's publisher.

I beg to congratulate you and your readers on the splendid appearance of the Freethinkers' Magazine. Nor is the mental part behind the mechanical. It must surely prosper, as it certainly deserves to.—Allen Pringle.

I think the magazine grows better and better with age. I like its Liberal spirit. I believe it will live. I shall do all I can to help it.—Judge G. W. Lewis.

The Freethinkers' Magazine is the only thing of its kind in the world, and should be taken and read—every word read—by every Liberal in America.—Moses Hull, in New Thought.

The Freethinkers' Magazine is a clean Liberal journal, whose editor does not trim his sails to the breeze of any crank who makes war upon society.—John W. Truesdell.

I like the spirit manifested by the editor of the Freethinkers' Magazine, in allowing all sides a hearing through its columns.—Clara Watson.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. A. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

...IN THE...

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

...FOR...

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument Mr. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of Justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MAY 12, 1888

THE selection of Col. R. G. Ingersoll by the New York legislature as the eulogist of Roscoe Conkling was a fitting choice. A great speech was demanded, and none could have delivered a greater one than Ingersoll's.

THE Rev. Dr. Scudder cleared up the mysteries of spirit phenomena last Sunday by explaining that one-half of them are produced by sleight-of-hand, and the other half by diabolical agencies. It is believed that the former half is more frequently met with.

THE California Spiritualists' Campmeeting Association holds its fourth annual gathering at Lake Merritt Park, Oakland, from June 3 to July 1. The remark concerning the comparative number of souls saved at campmeetings is believed not to apply to the Spiritualist variety.

THE Adventist paper, the Signs of the Times, comes out flat-footed like this: "In an article in an Oakland daily paper, a Catholic priest has the unblushing effrontery to claim that the Catholic church wrote the Bible! And he actually expects that sober people will give him credence. The next thing we know, some of the priests will be claiming that the pope of Rome made the world."

THE Catholic Monitor thinks that the parties who allowed the Freemasons to lay the cornerstone of the new court house at Los Angeles are deserving of public censure. The Monitor may be right, but to be consistent it should condemn also the officiating of Catholic priests at public ceremonies. The hocus-pocus of Masonry is as appropriate on such occasions as the hoc est corpus of Romanism.

DR. MACFARLANE, in a paper read before the State Medical Society, following Maudsley, made the statement that Catholic saints were often insane rather than inspired. He said: "During the dark ages many religious lunatics were canonized. The material for manufacturing saints was abundant for several centuries. St. Simon, for example, lived for thirty years on the top of a tower only three feet in diameter, and stood for a whole year on one leg, the other being covered with ulcers. Had he lived during our time, he would have been sent to an asylum for the chronic insane." Beyond doubt this is so, and the time will come when any man claiming to be the spiritual guide and dictator of his fellow-men will be set down as the impostor that he is. The pope of Rome, for instance.

SINCE the sinking of the Queen of the Pacific, it has transpired that the disaster was predicted by Medium Slater, of this city, whose words are now recalled in full and their significance understood. Like other truthful prophecies, this one lacks the merit of having been made public previous to the event which it foretells.

THE Greek Catholics have just celebrated Easter Sunday. Among the ceremonies incident to the occasion was the "triple kiss." The bishop kissed the clergy, once on each cheek and then on the mouth, and saluted members of the congregation in the same style, after which the kissing became general. Roman Catholics regard the Greek Catholic's Easter Sunday as a bogus celebration of the Lord's resurrection, which it probably is; and the Greek Catholics return the compliment with an equal chance of being right.

THE simultaneous suspension of three Labor papers is chronicled. The Press, of Winsted, Conn., may not have belonged strictly to this class, but it was unorthodox in politics and religion, and almost everything else. The Alarm, of Chicago, was Anarchistic, and died from lack of support, coupled with opposition in its own ranks. The People, of San Francisco, was not upheld by the workingmen of this city, and could not live. It is a noteworthy fact that Labor papers are invariably shortlived. Is there an "old established" Labor journal in the country?

NEWS AND NOTES.

THE beautiful valley of Livermore, with its wide-spreading fertile fields and vineyards, is an open place for Liberalism. The churches linger like shadows, and do not seem to have a great deal of power in the community. They have to depend on the unbelievers to run their finances, and while the ministers attend to the praying business, the sinners have to take up the collection and rent the pews. The churches to-day are run on the combination plan, and "pool issues" with those upon the "broad way." The "narrow way" is lacking in funds.

THERE is always a good welcome at the Livermore House, and if it should entertain "angels unawares" the angels could not complain. They would be well taken care of, and we, not being angels, enjoyed the same experience. Our comrade and "mine host," Mr. F. Gambs, knows how to give the true soldier grip; Mrs. Gambs makes the grace of hospitality that banishes homesickness from the stranger's path.

JAMES Beazell, mayor of the city, introduced me at the lectures. He is a herculean representative of Liberalism. All the children like him, and he is the most popular man in town, for he has a bright good-morning for everybody, and believes with Ingersoll that "the time to be happy is now, and the place to be happy is here."

Theodore Gorner is one of the bravest officers in the Free-thought army. He has not the slightest hesitation in speaking his mind, and he is thoroughly respected in the community. He knows how to do business, and the Christians understand this, and the value of integrity. Church members like to trade where they get a dollar's worth for a dollar. It will be a good thing when every Freethinker takes a bold stand. This boycott of honest independence should be declared off. Mr. Gorner's example is a bracing one. "Who would be free, themselves must strike the blow."

Our good old friend M. S. Palmer keeps the fire of youth still. He gave excellent recitations at all our lectures. He still looks forward. With the snows of age are the flowers of youth.

George Bastian, from the old country, brings to the republic the earnest devotion of one whose freedom is the result of his own toil. We had a delightful visit at his home. His wife, once in the ecclesiastical fold, is now a dweller with him in nature's temple.

Mrs. S. Berry, of San Francisco, daughter of Mr. Gambs, aided our lectures with charming music; and our thanks are due to her and our veteran friend Palmer for adding the beauty of art and romance to the discussions of truth and labors for justice.

Mrs. Kate Gorner, T. W. Cone, Herman Keiner, Hans Mathissen, W. Jordan, Mrs. G. E. Jordan, Chris Schmidt, I. C. Van Horn, A. A. Fargo, I. F. Meyers, Jos. Wilkenson, Henry Lots, John Damas, Joseph Damas, C. W. Moton, John Bouquet, Thos. Potvine and Thos. S. Golehan, with names already given, are of the Secular Union of Livermore, which was organized on Monday evening, April 30. Thus the ranks are forming, the promise grows, and we go marching on.

After the preliminary meeting on Sunday afternoon, friend Gorner with his family took me over to the grove where a Sunday picnic was going on with music and dancing. This I quite enjoyed, and hope that the dark shadow of ecclesiasticism will not drive away these festive occasions, where men, women, and children, on the bosom of the sparkling earth, have more of heaven than it is possible to have on the "golden streets." It is a bright phase of California life, these free out-door joyous gatherings. But as "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," so also it is the price of happiness. The churches hate these picnics; they hate these simple human joys, where fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, lovers and sweethearts, can be happy without the prayers of the priest, and they will try, whenever the power comes to them, to banish these blossoms and music from the pathway of toil.

Our lectures were well attended Sunday and Monday evenings. There is a splendid element of Freethought in Livermore. Mr. I. F. Meyers was elected president of the temporary organization and Mr. Theodore Gorner, secretary.

Without doubt, in this valley where nature is so bountiful; where the vineyards glitter with fruit, and flowers make sweet the air, and purple hills adorn the glowing horizon, and the warm sun brings the summer's smile; here I think humanity will have its happy homes and social joys,

"When truth shall be the monarch of the world,
Its stainless banners o'er fair lands unfurled."

May 1, 1888.

INGERSOLL AND GLADSTONE.

People who hoped with any degree of confidence that the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone's reply to Colonel Ingersoll's objections to Christianity would be a crushing one are by this time eating a diet of disappointment. Mr. Gladstone's effort is in print. It appears in the North American Review for May, and occupies twenty pages of that magazine. The distinguished writer takes unnecessary pains, it would seem, to dissociate himself from his opponent. He wants it distinctly understood that he is not replying to the man, but to the matter. Of the man he denies any knowledge; of the matter he says it is divested "of that calmness and sobriety of movement which are essential to the just exercise of the reasoning power in subject matter not only grave but solemn."

It is because he deems the subject of momentous importance that Mr. Gladstone is induced to criticise the matter. And such a criticism! It may be called fair and candid, but it is heavy, wearisome, and befogging. Its points, if it has any, are buried beneath a mass of cumbersome phraseology, parenthetical references, and quotations from foreign languages. It is difficult to follow, and the reader must read and reread in order to grasp its meaning. Were it an overwhelming answer to all the colonel has ever written, it would lack effectiveness for the reason that it lacks clearness. One of its sentences is a dose for an adult.

In the June number of the Review Colonel Ingersoll is expected to reply. This will be the most profitable result of Mr. Gladstone's intervention in the Ingersoll-Field discussion.

THE CLUBBING LIST.

This list does not hasten to take to itself the impetus characteristic of a boom, but it grows. We have the following pledges:

A. H. Schou	pledges 50 names and	- - -	$100.00
H. P. Stone	" 10 " "	- - -	20.00
N. Woolsey	" 10 " "	- - -	20.00
N. D. Goodell	" 10 " "	- - -	20.00
W. H. Pepper	" 5 " " pays	- - -	10.00

Mr. Schou, of Oakland, is well known to all connected with the Liberal movement in this vicinity. He has already brought FREETHOUGHT about twenty-five subscribers. His pledge is like the dollar with a gold basis, that can look the world in the face and say, "I know that my redeemer liveth." He will furnish the names and the money so soon as nine others take upon themselves a like responsibility.

Mr. Stone everybody knows who has read this paper. He lives in Oakland and takes occasional excursions into the surrounding country for the purpose of making sundry wise and judicious investments in real estate with a rising inflection as to value. He desires that his list shall reach one hundred, but thinks he will fulfil his pledge whether ninety-nine others do or not. That the ninety and nine will materialize while the present year is yet young, he has never ceased for a moment to confidently maintain.

Mr. Woolsey is a solid man of San Bernardino county, and writes a stirring letter. He took time by the forelock and bought land. It is now worth a thousand dollars an acre. He wants to do something for the cause and has seized this opportunity.

Mr. Goodell, of Sacramento, has just celebrated his golden wedding, and all the best people of the capital were there to congratulate him. He is the architect of numerous handsome structures, and of his own fortune as well. A pioneer in the state, he is likewise a pioneer of Freethought. He is widely known and as widely respected.

Mr. W. H. Pepper resides in Petaluma, a place with churches enough for a town of many times its size. A ten-dollar check voices his sentiments more eloquently than our gifts would permit us to do.

It is certain that those who join this club will find themselves in the best of company and highly connected. They will at the same time give a grand impetus to a good cause. FREETHOUGHT has an uphill journey before it, over an unpopular and neglected road, at the entrance of which the church has erected the sign, "No thoroughfare." We shall see.

We hope that those who think of coming into this list will make their intention known at an early date. Every name added now has the effect of half a dozen later on. There will be no rest given anybody who reads this paper until this list is full.

HOW TO GET A CORNER LOT.

Mr. Ranford Worthing, of San Diego, has generously offered a corner lot, 50x100 feet, in that city to the person procuring the largest number of subscribers to FREETHOUGHT between May 1, 1888, and May 1, 1889. The premium is a valuable one. Subscriptions will be taken at the following rates:

One subscription one year.....	$2.00
Two subscriptions one year.....	3.00
Three subscriptions one year.....	4.00
Four subscriptions one year.....	5.00

MR. PUTNAM'S LECTURE HERE.

On the evening of May 27, the last Sunday in the month, Mr. S. P. Putnam will deliver a lecture in Irving Hall; subject, "The American Republic."

In conjunction with the lecture Mr. Putnam will endeavor to secure the organization of the San Francisco and Oakland Secular Union, if the Liberals of the two cities feel inclined to unite in that way.

Tickets at 25 cents each are printed, and can be obtained at this office.

A YEAR ago a spasm of piety struck New York city; the saloons were all closed on Sunday, and thirsty people went to New Jersey for beer. Now New Jersey has an attack of Sunday-closing, and last Sunday the residents crossed over to New York to irrigate. Thus what is a crime on one side of the Hudson, may be committed with impunity on the other. There is an absurdity about these Sunday laws which attaches to no other form of legislation.

ORTO WETTSTEIN's name as a dealer in jewelry has been before the Liberals of this country for a number of years. A good many have patronized him, and have found his goods as represented, and his prices low. We can recommend him to the patronage of our readers with the utmost confidence.

MESSRS. HARMAN AND WALKER, of Valley Falls, Kan., have been reindicted. The defects in the quashed indictment having been remedied, the prosecution will now endeavor to try the case on its merits. The trial ought to result in a speedy, decisive, and everlasting acquittal.

THE Boston Herald announces solemnly that Ingersoll has reached the honor of having Mr. Gladstone for an opponent. As though Gladstone were a greater man than Ingersoll. Nevertheless the honor was not sought by the colonel. It was thrust upon him.

IN connection with the various plans to extend the circulation of FREETHOUGHT we would be pleased to hear from all who are willing to be one of a thousand to send in their subscriptions at the regular rates.

Mr. Putnam lectures at Stockton May 13; Bakersfield May 20, and San Francisco May 27.

WANTED.

We want the names of Freethinkers to whom sample copies of FREETHOUGHT may be sent. The reason why a great many Liberals have not subscribed to this paper is that they have never read it. Names of probable subscribers are therefore respectfully solicited.

A GOLDEN WEDDING.

Wednesday, May 2, was altogether a memorable day. It saw the office of this paper closed at 4 P. M., and the writer, with Mr. Putnam, going to Sacramento to attend the golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. N. D. Goodell. The journey was a pleasant one. Anybody accustomed to exclusively Eastern scenery will find sufficient novelty in the landscape of this country. The hills here are not necessarily covered with rocks or trees. They are great knolls, smooth and rounded and rolling away voluptuously like the curves of a well-turned human body. While I was engaged in preparing this description of the hills the night closed down and limited my vision to the inside of the car.

At Sacramento a little bobtailed street car was kindly held in waiting for us, and we bowled off uptown, taking in many well-dressed people on the way. At O street the car was emptied, as everybody was going to the golden wedding. Mr. Goodell lives in a large house, which had a light in every window, and Japanese lanterns illuminated the surrounding grounds. We drifted into the house with the crowd, launched our hats in a sea of other hats with a vague wonder how we were ever to find them again, and joined the stream of people who were swaying and surging through the parlors. Flowers were everywhere scattered about. They hung from every peg and decorated every doorway. In the front parlor, under a golden satin canopy festooned with smilax, stood the bride and groom of a half century, smiling and greeting the hundreds who filed past them. It would not be appropriate to call them an aged couple. Mr. Goodell stands straight and sturdy. Seventy-four years have fallen from him as they have fallen from the mountains; they have left him gray but rugged. Mrs. Goodell seems to have forgotten to grow old. Time has been good to her. He has not chilled or weakened the warm, firm grip of her hand or taken the brightness from her eyes. So they made a radiant couple standing there in the light under the canopy of gold.

Behind them was a bank of marigolds and orange blossoms. A basket of flowers bore the following:

The night is fair:
The storm of grief, the clouds of care,
The wind, the rain, have passed away;
The lamp is lit, the fires burn bright,
The house is full of life and light,
It is the golden wedding day.

All California's capitol was gathered there. The bench, the bar, and even the pulpit, were represented—the latter by a meek and spectacled parson, who looked as if he would like to be happy if it were not sinful to do so.

A presentation took place shortly after our arrival. Mr. Goodell is more than a "Forty-niner," having lived in the state for over forty years. He belongs to the Society of California Pioneers, and scores of his brother pioneers were there to celebrate the occasion and to present him with twelve spoons of solid gold and a pair of napkin rings of the same precious metal. The president of the Pioneers made the presentation speech.

He said that it was fitting on an occasion like this to congratulate Mr. and Mrs. Goodell on their long and happy married life in the state of California. He told them that it was fifty years to-day since Mr. Goodell took the lady by his side for a partner and promised to love, honor, and obey her. He believed that Mr. Goodell had fulfilled that obligation. Hence his old comrades of '49 came there to congratulate them both and to present this souvenir of the occasion. Saying which he placed the velvet case containing the gold spoons and gold napkin rings in Mr. Goodell's hand.

There was a trifling tremor, perhaps, in the hand and voice of the recipient as he took the costly gifts and returned his acknowledgments. He spoke as follows:

MR. PRESIDENT AND BROTHER PIONEERS: Where can I find language to express to you our gratitude in a becoming manner for this magnificent present? Should I say that we did not expect any present from you I should say what is not true, for we did expect some slight token of your regard, but such a beautiful and costly present as this we never dreamed of nor expected; but let me assure you we most sincerely thank you with our full hearts. We also thank all others who have brought presents here to-night, all of which are costly and beautiful. Be assured, my friends, that you have taken us entirely by surprise, and we most sincerely thank you one and all, and more particularly we thank you for coming here to-night to help us celebrate our golden wedding. Fifty years ago to-night I took this young lady to be my wedded wife. I took her for better or for worse, and be assured I have found her better all through fifty years. I have never found her worse, and, what may appear strange to some, we have never had a quarrel, although our religious ideas are as opposite as the poles. She enjoys going to church and prayer meeting, and I like to have her do so because it is her pleasure, and it is her pleasure to know and see me happy in my Freethought views. Fifty years, I said, we have lived together, almost forty of which we have lived in this city. There was not a wooden house in it when I arrived here, all cloth houses and tents. There were no more than a dozen or twenty women, perhaps half a dozen children and five or six thousand men. Having lived in Sacramento through its good and evil fortunes—through fire and flood—I mean to spend my closing days where I have witnessed such eventful changes, and I do not believe a happier spot can be found on earth.

Judge Curtis was called upon for some remarks, and delivered an eminent opinion upon marriage as an ordinance of Almighty God. Mr. Goodell received the judge's admonitions quietly, and called for a few words from Brother Putnam. Mr. Putnam made a speech that wove itself in with the wreaths and flowers quite harmoniously.

After the speeches came refreshments. The Pioneers presided over the department of good cheer. There was plenty of fresh cold water for those who preferred that beverage to lemonade. "The clustered spheres of wit and mirth" also gave of their juice, and the wine of Kentucky was not withheld. A long table bore all the solid refreshments that could be asked for, and twice as much as even the five hundred present could consume. No one was allowed to go away unfilled.

The departure of the guests at a late hour gave opportunity for an inspection of the presents. There were many hundred dollars' worth of them, and they might tempt almost any one to start in for a fifty years' race in double harness with the prospect of gaining them at the end of that time. The dozen gold spoons, made to order in San Francisco and presented by the Pioneers, shone luminously from their satin-lined case. A gold watch from the ladies of the Congregational society was ticking away merrily as though it knew it was starting in to measure off the second half century of the hosts' union. The Women's Christian Temperance Union left a handsome gold pin, enameled, with the letters W. C. T. U. on a badge of white ribbon. This was regarded with much curiosity by the Pioneers.

Among the floral gifts, of which there was no end, appeared a ship built of flowers, with gold and satin sails bearing the names of the family in gilt letters. Hundreds of congratulatory letters and telegrams came. Two letters were from as far away as Massachusetts. One read as follows:

BELCHERTOWN, MASS., April 20, 1888.

BROTHER DUDLEY: Your card informing me and my wife that your golden wedding reception will occur May 2, is received. Be assured that it would give us the greatest satisfaction and pleasure to be there and participate with you in that glorious occasion, that happens only once in a life time. This pleasure we must forego, as it will be impossible for us to be present. But our warmest greetings and hearts' best affections will go out towards you and your noble and accomplished wife who has shared your joys and sorrows, prosperity and happiness, for half a century. Your children may well rise up and call you blessed. Fraternally yours, ASAHIEL GOODELL.

The second said:

HOLYOKE, MASS., April 27, 1888.

MY DEAR AUNT SARAH AND UNCLE DUDLEY: My greeting to you on this fiftieth anniversary is not as from sister, brother, or friend of the so long gone time, but from the son of a much loved elder sister who first learned to love and respect you as the friends of the orphaned children of that sister. I shall never forget the kindness of the reception or the parental affection we met at your hands. To the three children who were not strangers to privation and want you opened your generous hearts and homes. We may together rejoice that your kindness brought no regrets and that the bread then cast upon the waters has ever returned to you full measure in the consciousness of worthy deeds bestowed on the needy. The lapse of so near a half century of busy life has only served to strengthen the feeling of gratitude, unexpressed, perhaps, and which we trust was excused in thoughtless childhood. I would most gladly accept your kind invitation now if practicable and hope to meet you again sometime, but if not in time will surely strive to do so where partings never come. From your affectionate nephew,

J. SANFORD WEBBER.

It was nearly one o'clock when the hospitality of the house relaxed sufficiently to allow of our departure. Then, in the best of spirits, and moistened outwardly by a copious rain, we made hurried steps to the station. Mr. Putnam remained in Sacramento to lecture, and I returned to this city by the 4:30 Oregon train, which arrives here at half past seven in the morning. I shall invite all the Pioneers, and the Congregational Society, and the Sacramento W. C. T. U. to my golden wedding. M.

I ATTEND A SEANCE.

Since Mr. George Chainey returned from Australia he has visited this office several times, and the conversation on each occasion has turned upon the subject of the occult. Mr. Chainey has explained that the person occupying my clothes, sitting in my chair, and eating the meals that I pay for, is not the undersigned, but an astral person who uses this poor weak body as an instrument. He points out that I do not think; I only think I think. He also says a great deal more which I have not the flow of language to repeat, and one of his suggestions was that I should visit a medium, see proofs of psychic power, cultivate my solar plexus, and put myself generally in the way of receiving a subjective illumination. He named Mr. Fred Evans, of this city, as a medium through whom some remarkable manifestations had occurred, and my interest was thereby excited to such a pitch that I at once offered myself as a subject for a free sitting. I communicated with Mr. Evans, and he very kindly replied that he would be pleased to afford me an opportunity to witness such phenomena as showed themselves through his presence.

It was May 1, at 10 A. M., that I called at the residence of Mr. Evans, 133 Octavia street. He was engaged at the time, and I had an opportunity to sit in the parlor and look at spirit pictures and read excerpts from a work by A. J. Davis in relation to the Beyond. When Mr. Evans came to conduct me to the seance room, I observed that he was a slight young man of one hundred and forty pounds or thereabouts, not over twenty-five years old, I should say, with hair nicely combed, and an uncertain moustache. He is altogether unpretentious and puts on no unnecessary agony for the purpose of showing that the spirits are working. We went into a small room. The curtain was up and the blinds open, so it was as light as any room. With the end to the wall on one side of the room was a table, covered with green cloth that reached to the floor on the side I saw of it, and at which Mr. Evans seated me. He sat at the other side. I could not look under the table. When I was composed Mr. Evans took two slates from beneath the table, spat upon them profusely, and wiped them off with a sponge or cloth. Then he placed one standing up edgewise on the table before me with the request that I should put my hands on each side of it, to hold it in that position and impart magnetism to it. He touched one corner with one finger. When the first slate had become sufficiently charged with my powerful magnetic force, another was treated in the same way. The two were then placed together, with small particles of slate-pencil between them, and a strong rubber band snapped around them by Mr. Evans. To the best of my knowledge the slates at this time contained no writing upon their surfaces. To the best of my belief they did, as Mr. Evans did not touch them again, and when they were opened later on they were covered with writing. But I am getting ahead of events.

Mr. Evans next handed me a lead-pencil, and placing a small piece of white paper on the cover of a magazine which occupied the table, asked me to write three names of dead friends who might be supposed to take an interest in me. I did according to directions. Mr. Evans could not see me write the names, as he was at the time reading about "Robert the Devil" in FREETHOUGHT, and had his eyes turned another way.

Following further directions, I folded the paper bearing the names, and slipped it beneath the rubber band round the slates. To keep the magnetic flow uninterrupted I put my hand on the slate and held it down. Mr. Evans kept his seat opposite. His hands were below the table, and his eyes looked toward them the greater part of the time. Soon some slight taps came from under the slates, and Mr. Evans said this indicated that the spirits were present. Shortly after this he picked up a pencil and wrote, bottom upward, on a paper pad, the words "Jennie Wallace." This was one of the names I had written on the paper. Mr. Evans's next move was to write "sister," bottom upward as before, on the pad. I should have been surprised to see the word "sister" if I had not recollected that when writing the names I wrote first Jennie Macdonald as far as "Macdon" and then drew my pencil through the last word and wrote Wallace.

Mr. Evans soon apprised me that one William Pierce was there in spirit. I did not recognize William, though he was further described as having a lame leg. But it seems Mr. Pierce came only through courtesy, as he was accompanied by another spirit named Leland, the initial of whose first name was T. This was correct, and to give Mr. Leland an opportunity to communicate, Mr. Evans tossed a bit of pencil upon the carpet and laid a slate over it. Another spirit named T. Grattan soon appeared and was similarly afforded writing materials. Three slates were thus laid upon the carpet. If when they were laid there I had been asked if they contained writing, I should have declared that they did not. At the end of twenty minutes the two slates that I had been holding down were taken apart. They were covered with a letter reading as follows:

DEAR GEORGE: I cannot express my joy in seeing you here this morning. I know you often doubt the possibility of spirit return. But it is true or I would not be here to say it. I have met many loved ones here who you knew when on earth, and they all join with me in sending love and best wishes to you. Always do to others as you would be done unto. Remember according to your character and disposition on the Earth, so shall you build your home in the spirit-world. As you sow so shall you reap. Do the best your circumstances will allow, angels cannot do more. I can see a bright future before you, and will do all I can to make your stay on earth happy. I feel happy in knowing we shall all meet again. With love to all loved ones left behind, I subscribe myself the happy spirit of your loving and waiting sister-in-law. JENNIE WALLACE M.

I do not understand why the words "in-law" follow "sister" at the close of the above communication. I was holding the slate down at the time I mentioned the relationship, and Mr. Evans had no way of knowing it before I told him. The message is in no sense what I should expect one to be from the person it is credited to, and I do not recognize the handwriting as hers. I told Mr. Evans it was my sister-in-law, but I did not give him that information until after the slates were in my possession.

The first slate on the floor opened cordially:

God bless you.

I am glad you have come here this morning to investigate this grand truth of spirit return. I have found an happy home in the spirit world, and my only regret is in leaving loved ones behind. Give my love to all at home. I will give you further Proof of my identity soon.

T. C. LELAND.

Except the name at the end, nothing in this communication suggests T. C. Leland. He would know that any communication he chose to make to me would be treated with confidence, and there are matters about which I should be pleased to learn his opinion. He would never say "an happy home." The communication is not in his handwriting.

Upon the fourth slate was this:

I am so glad to see you here to-day, and with the assistance of other kind spirit friends I am enabled to give you these few lines as a test of spirit Power. I wish to assure you that you will receive Pleasant news in a few days that will benefit you love to all from the happy spirit of
T. GRATAN.

The peculiarity of this communication is that it is written in colors. It occupies twelve lines running across the slate, no two lines of which are of the same hue. Mr. Evans assured me that only ordinary slate-pencils were furnished the spirits to write with.

T. Gratian, or Tom Gratian, was a compositor on the Truth Seeker, and died of consumption four or five years ago. I think if he had written that communication, he would have said something about the days when he and I used to row a pair-oared gig on the Harlem, and beat all the scrubs; or he would have mentioned the scrapping matches we had with gloves in the Truth Seeker office. He was a six-foot Irishman, and one of the best compositors I ever knew. The communication is written in backhand, a style Tom never affected. He was a remarkably fine penman, and took a prize for penmanship at a school in Brooklyn.

The fifth and last slate said:

George, my boy, I am with you in spirit, and will try and bring other members of our family here to communicate with you.

JAMES MACDONALD.

This was extra. The other names were those I had written on the slip of paper, but I never heard of James Macdonald. One of my paternal ancestors would have signed his name McDonald. I introduced the Mac and small d some fifteen years ago. I had two "middle" names and wished to get rid of some of the five capital letters, and began with the D. There may have been a James Macdonald back in Scotland somewhere, but I never heard him spoken of.

When I had read all these, Mr. Evans gave me his consent to bring away the slates, which I did, and they are now to be seen at FREETHOUGHT office.

If anyone were to ask me who wrote these communications, I should have to say I do not know. If asked for an honest expression of belief, I would be obliged to say I think Mr. Evans wrote them. The handwriting of each differs from all the others at first sight, but there are characteristics running through them all. For instance, in that signed by Mr. Leland, the word Proof has a capital P. In Gratian's letter Power and Pleasant are capitalized. These are the only words in the four communications having an initial P. In Mr. Evans's letter accepting my application for a sitting the words "Pleased," "Phenomena," and "Presence" (the only words in his letter having an initial P) are capitalized. The handwriting of the communication signed by James Macdonald is identical with Mr. Evans's in his letter to me. The capital I is exactly the same through the four communications and in the letter.

The mysterious thing about the affair is how the medium got between the slates to do the writing. At the time the slates were put in my possession I had written no names and had thought of no names. I did not know I was expected to write them. But the truth is that one of the names written by me appeared on a slate which no one but myself touched between the time I wrote the name on the paper and the time the slates were opened. I do not know how it was done, yet I state but the facts. M.

An advertisement of the Independent Pulpit appears in another column. The Pulpit is a 24-page monthly magazine—pages about the size of those of FREETHOUGHT—with cover. It is ably edited by J. O. Shaw, and has many good writers among its contributors. By an arrangement with Mr. Shaw we will take subscriptions for the Pulpit in connection with this paper, sending the two—FREETHOUGHT and the Independent Pulpit—for $2.80. Separately the price of the Pulpit is $1.50, and it is well worth that sum. We hope many will take advantage of this offer.

THE ABOLITION OF RUM.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have for some time been threatening to make a descent upon your readers, and at length the letter of Mr. Crum, in your issue of April 21, has moved me to begin depredations.

I am perhaps the only Liberal lecturer on the platform who is an advocate of the complete abolition of the liquor traffic, and yet I think there is not a more bitter opponent to the Prohibition party in the United States than myself. This declaration may sound "inconsistent" to Mr. Crum; it may place me among the ranks of the "non-genuine" in his estimation. However that may be, I reiterate that is my position, and yet I claim to be as genuine a Liberal as Mr. Crum himself.

Now let us examine his statements. He says: "All genuine Liberals abhor prohibition. Why? Because it is persecution, and there can be no compromise between the two." Presumably the "two" means liberty and persecution. This is an argument against the principle of prohibition, not only in the liquor traffic but in everything. It is precisely the ground taken by the philosophical Anarchists, who claim that there can be no compromise between liberty and authority; that majority rule is quite as oppressive and unfair as minority rule; that society has no more right to force one man to be good than that one man has to force society to be bad. To quote from one of its prominent lights:

Nor does the Anarchistic scheme furnish any code of morals to be imposed upon the individual. "Mind your own business" is the only moral law. Interference with another's business is a crime, and the only crime, and as such may be properly resisted. In accordance with this view Anarchists look upon attempts to arbitrarily suppress vice as in themselves crimes. They believe liberty and the resultant social well-being to be a sure cure for all the vices. But they recognize the right of the drunkard, the gambler, the rake, and the harlot to live their lives until they shall freely choose to abandon them.

How Mr. Crum may look upon the three last classes I am unable to say, but it is plain that he recognizes interference with the right of the drunkard to live his life, as a piece of "persecution." Viewed in this light Mr. Tucker is right and all law is persecution, since all law is prohibitory. To discriminate in favor of one vice over another is to endeavor to make "a compromise between the two."

But is Mr. Crum prepared to occupy that ground? Let us see. He has referred us to the eighth demand of Liberalism; I now refer him to the fourth:

We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book, or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

Why was this demand for prohibition made? Because the religious people have no right to read their Bibles? Not at all. Because it is a crying-out infringement of the liberties of others. That is the rock on which I ground my claim for the prohibition of the liquor traffic. I agree with Mr. Tucker that every man or woman has a natural right to sink himself or herself into the blackest mire of brutality and bestiality if it be his or her own free will; that every human being has a natural right to benumb his faculties, deaden his conscience, belie his better nature, bedaub his mind with filthy and impure thoughts and acts, so long as in the exercise of this right he does not infringe upon the rights of others. But the fact remains that the moment this individual brings his degrading practices in contact with society he begins a steady encroachment upon the liberties of others. The saloon system is a standing encroachment upon the rights of a very large majority of the people. Having lived neighbor to a saloon, through necessity, for several months, I can "speak by the card" when I say that however trivial it may sound it was a very decided infringement upon my rights to be kept awake until eleven, twelve, and two o'clock in the morning by banjo-thrumming, hiccupped songs, drunken jangles and half-tipsy arbitration, week in and week out. It is a very decided offense against the good nature of society to be met at every turn by the sickening sight of besotted, bleary-eyed, staggering, carousing, peace-disturbing men and women. And it is excessively aggravating to be told that the majority of the people must not interfere with the machine which keeps turning out these imbeciles, idiots, and possessed demons, because it will be interfering with the "personal liberty" of some "temperate" individual who "merely takes a glass now and then." I am at a loss to understand what the "temperate" use of an unadulterated poison is; I fail to comprehend how any one can use strychnine or prussic acid temperately. And I think if everyone understood the nature of alcohol, really as deadly a poison as either of these, there could be no longer this nonsensical talk about the beneficial results of "moderate drinking." You talk about the rights of the individual; pray has the unborn child no rights? Have those who take upon themselves the responsibility of procreation no obligation towards the future being to fulfil? Has the mother who "takes a little wine in the morning for the sake of her health," as ordered by the doctor, a right to force an abnormal appetite upon her child? Yet it is done—even as I write a dozen instances of that very nature, which without any of my seeking have fallen under my notice, spring into my mind. To speak of the instances where this terrible inheritance has come from a drinking father would open up a much wider question, involving still greater problems.

But let the opinion of Mr. Crum and others regarding the right of man or woman to perpetuate their destroying appetites rest where it may, and their opinions concerning the "temperate" use of intoxicating beverages be what they may, it is a vain endeavor to side-track the issue to instance the invasion of the personal liberty of the "temperate drinker" as an argument against the prohibition of the liquor traffic. That is where the opponents of our principle continually dodge the question. We are not fighting individuals, we are fighting a system—the saloon system. It is a national curse, a public nuisance. And if in the endeavor to abolish this nuisance—this machine which keeps grinding out imbeciles, inebriates, and lunatics—the public makes it hard for the "moderate drinker" to obtain his morning dram, that is not the concern of the public.

I am well aware that there is too much legislation in this country; there is too much "compromise" between rascality and helplessness upon our statute books. No one would be more glad than I to hail a condition of society so perfect that it "would need no fetters of tyrannic law." I look upon a state of absolute liberty as the highest possible ultimatum. But I look about me and see the cumbrous machinery of the government turning its crushing power on thieves, "gamblers, drunkards, rakes, and harlots," filling our almshouses, prisons, reform-schools, houses of correction, and other public institutions of like nature, the while the great seal of the state is being affixed to the license of the damning cause of much of this large misery, and I think it is a pretty rotten state, a very feeble and imbecile state, which imposes these wrecks upon the public which is to be taxed for their support, yet dares not turn its engines against the cause for fear some one will cry out, "Our town won't receive any more benefit from the liquor tax, and you are invading my personal liberty;" and I see plainly that so long as this nation spends $900,000,000 for throat baths, and the rate of inebriation is increasing twice as fast as the rate of population, the privilege of uncurtailed natural liberty would be "pearls cast before swine." It would not work.

It is useless to say "a great many are driven to drink by other and greater social villainies." That doesn't help the matter; keep on pegging away at the other villainies all you like, but don't excuse the liquor curse on that ground. Don't do it; the liquor resort never helped the greater evils—never.

As for natural and Christian morality, I am quite sure nature never made it moral for a man to put poison in his stomach, while, on the contrary, Christianity does—in the Lord's supper.

I presume I have called down upon myself a perfect hailstorm of personal liberty resentment; but I will try to bear up bravely and do my best to support my position until convinced that I am wrong, by impartial argument, or some abler champion takes up the cause. Very respectfully, VOLTAIRINE DE CLEYRE.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD'S FREETHOUGHT comes regularly and promptly from San Francisco every week, and we would advise those of our friends who say they miss in the Truth Seeker Mr. Putnam's poetic "News and Notes," and George Macdonald's enjoyable articles, to add the paper to their list of Liberal journals. The paper is worth four dollars a year, but can be had for two.—The Truth Seeker.

THEOLOGY IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

To the use of the Bible as a text book merely, on a par with other text books, and subject to the same free handling as other text books, I have never objected, nor had occasion to object, for the simple reason that no one has ever proposed such a use of it. Those who demand its use in the schools demand that it shall be used as the word of God, and in no other character. But how is its use in that character exclusively to be secured? By making it compulsory upon teachers to introduce it to their scholars in that character, and punishing those teachers who present it in any other light. Therefore, I say the question is whether the state should enjoin the use of the Bible in the schools and authoritatively declare it to be the word of God. I have tried to show cause why the state should not do this. I have impugned the competency of the state to decide any such question. I have maintained that it is not the business of the state—under our system of government at least—to decide such questions.

No one has ever told me by what authority, or by virtue of what illumination, the state in this province is able to certify that the Bible which it prescribes for use in the public schools is the word of God. One of my former opponents said he did not wish the state to certify or dogmatically assert any such thing. But if the state does not do it then we have this situation: Every teacher may present his own view of the Bible to his scholars, and may, if he likes, express the opinion that it is a purely human work and one abounding in errors. If a teacher who advanced these views would be liable to lose his place, then we have the flagrant injustice of a certain standard of opinion being tacitly set up which the authorities have not the courage openly to proclaim. If it be said that the people generally are of opinion that the Bible is the word of God, I ask, as I have asked before, should the vox populi be decisive in a question of this nature? If the vox populi undertakes to decide questions of science and criticism, and not only to prescribe text books for the schools, but to prescribe the opinions that teachers are to hold in regard to those text books, our educational system will soon be in queer shape.

My able opponent assumes that I object to all religious teaching in the schools, and he joins issue with me, therefore, upon that point. He says, in an eloquent passage, that "the best moral results cannot be attained without the distinct recognition of the living God, in whom we live and move and have our being, without whom not a sparrow shall fall to the ground, . . . who so loved the world that he gave his only-begotten son," etc. This language comes home to us, doubtless, with all the force of long familiarity and of many blended associations; but when we come to consider it calmly and dispassionately as the language in which teachers are to address their pupils in our public schools, does it seem altogether suitable? It is certainly the language of sentiment, of emotion, but is it language that represents demonstrable truth? What we know about sparrows and many other tribes of animals—not excluding man—is that, as a matter of fact, they die from time to time by thousands and tens of thousands of cold and starvation. It may have a soothing effect upon some minds to picture to themselves an infinite father quiescently surveying the horrors of an Irish, an Indian, or a Chinese famine; and, if so, I should be the last to wish to deprive them of such a satisfaction. I only think that, before we expatiate upon God's care for sparrows, the great facts and laws of animal life should be faithfully presented; otherwise there may be a shock to faith when, at a later period, those facts and laws become known. The study of nature reveals no special care for sparrows any more than for sparrow-hawks. It shows us that there is no cessation in the struggle for existence, and that those who survive do so at the expense of weaker competitors. To speak candidly, I do not see how, in teaching children, we can make anything of the conception of the divine interest in sparrows unless we make our appeal exclusively to emotion, and discourage to the utmost all reflection upon the facts of the case. Then with regard to God giving his son, I would ask with all seriousness to what order of truth this belongs? Is it a truth of history? If so, what degree of certainty attaches to it as such? Is it as certain as that Caesar was assassinated, or that Alexander overthrew the Persian empire?

Supposing it to be a tolerably well attested fact of history, what blame will be incurred by one who, being a little more exacting on the score of evidence than the majority of people, finds himself unable to believe it on the evidence offered? The Rev. Mr. Macdonnell says that the teacher who ignores this truth in his teaching "makes a grievous mistake." If the teacher is to teach it, how are the scholars to receive it? In silence and submission or in a spirit of reflection and inquiry? Will the teacher be prepared to explain just what believing on the son means, and how such belief saves people from perishing, and what perishing means, and what eternal life means? I do not see why a thoughtful pupil should not be at liberty to ask, in a respectful manner, any questions whatever bearing on the subject; nor do I see why, in the event of his asking such questions, he should be obliged to be satisfied with any answers that did not come home to his intelligence. If the teacher were explaining the movements of the earth, a scholar would be highly approved for showing his interest in the subject by asking questions. Nothing, indeed, is more helpful to a teacher who has any real knowledge to convey to his scholars than to have questions asked in regard to those points which his explanations have not made quite clear. Why should it be otherwise in the case supposed? But if we imagine a conversation opened such as continually takes place in school upon other topics of study, what view of "belief on the son" is the teacher going to take? To believe on a person is not a usual phrase in English outside of the Bible, and a teacher might be asked in the first place to explain the use of the preposition.

I know that faith in incantations is not altogether a thing of the past, and I quite believe that there are some, perhaps many, who simply want the teacher to utter some pious words at the opening of the school, leaving the scholars to take them—so far as they listen at all—in whatever conventional sense they may be accustomed to apply to them. The effects, I may remark, of the incantation plan are visible on every hand—visible in the shocking ignorance of Biblical phraseology, Biblical history, Biblical everything on the part of people who hear the Bible read, if not daily, at least once or twice a week their lives through. To my mind it is little short of miraculous how amazingly small a tincture of Biblical knowledge is to-day possessed by thousands who, if they followed with the least shade of interest the Bible readings given in their hearing, would necessarily have a most extensive acquaintance with the sacred writings. My critic himself speaks of "the ignorance of the contents of the Bible which is now so lamentable." He might have said phenomenal as well as "lamentable," for it is phenomenal; and the only explanation I can offer is that to a vast number of people, old and young, Bible readings are regarded as mere incantations—the utterance of words which by some intrinsic virtue quite independent of their meaning, are expected to work good results, and the mere listening to which—quite independently of any effort to catch the sense—is in itself a meritorious act. I have thought of the matter a good deal, and I know of no theory except the incantation theory that will explain the facts.

It is a great satisfaction to have to deal with a candid opponent. Had the Rev. Mr. Macdonnell not been a candid man, and a brave man too, he would not have admitted, as frankly as he has done, the truth of my statement that many persons have little idea how repugnant much that is contained in the Bible is to the instinctive morality of children. The explanation he gives of the fact has the merit of familiarity, but I fail to see that it has any other. Christ himself, he observes, has told us that many things were suffered in earlier times on account of the hardness of men's hearts. Alas, alas! that won't do. It is not the hardness of men's hearts that troubles us in the Bible history; it is the distinct attribution to the deity of the worst deeds that the book records. Who hardened Pharaoh's heart? What had the hardness of men's hearts to do with the punishment inflicted at an earlier period upon the unfortunate Egyptians on account of an act into which their king was directly led by the duplicity and cowardice of the Father of the Faithful? What had the hardness of men's hearts to do with the smiting to death of well-meaning Uzzah? What had the hardness of men's hearts to do with the express commands given by Jehovah to the Israelites to wage a war of utter extermination against the unhappy inhabitants of Palestine?

When Saul was not hard-hearted enough to cut the trembling Agag down in the place where he stood, who was it that rushed forward and hewed the wretched captive in pieces before the Lord in Gilgal? It was Samuel the priest of the Lord and utterer of his counsel. What had the hardness of men's hearts to do with the slaughter of some scores of thousands of King David's subjects for the offense committed by the king in numbering the people? If it be said that God was not the author of these things, but that the hardness of men's hearts was such that they required to have these deeds of cruelty and caprice attributed to their God in order that they might fear him at all, it becomes a serious question how far a book which records such enormities and represents God as having either wrought them himself or enjoined them on others is profitable reading for the children of to-day.

Let me first answer one question put by my respected opponent, and I have done. He wants to know whether I would approve of any religious element in the education given in the public schools. My answer shall be brief: I don't believe that one human being can instruct another human being about God. The man who undertakes to demonstrate God, in any sense of the verb "demonstrate," undertakes more than he can accomplish. We recognize physical laws as operative in the universe of matter, and moral laws as operative in human society; and it is doubtless natural to the great majority of minds to refer such laws to God as their author. But all that is open to our study is the orderly succession of cause and effect in the universe. In this direction we can make unceasing progress; and my idea is that the most religious education of all would be one in which a constant effort would be made to unfold the laws of the universe, and to deduce therefrom the highest lessons they are adapted to teach, with a view to keeping alive and vigorous the correspondence between outward law and inward obligation. Under such an education I believe that whatever thoughts of God were of a nature to elevate the mind and purify the heart would spontaneously suggest themselves. We should then have done with incantations, and all progress in knowledge would be progress towards the perfecting of human nature.—W. D. LESUEUR, in the Canada Educational Monthly.

WHAT IS OUR NATIONAL RELIGION?

Does this question astonish you, reader? If it does, you may know something of the writer's feelings when, with all sincerity, it came from the lips of a guileless son of old Britannia.

A young Englishman of Irish extraction called at my sanctum a few evenings since, and after listening to questions of English politics—including church disestablishment—discussed according to American ideas by the company present, proposed the above query, and looked toward me for an answer.

With equal simplicity, and much less perception than my guest, I answered, "My dear sir, we have no national religion in the United States. Our Constitution prohibits such an alliance. Our government is Secular."

Seeming as much astonished at my answer as was I at his question, the young observer explained: "I have observed that in the appointment of army chaplains the authorities favor the Episcopal church; indeed, I do not know of a single instance where any other sect is thus favored. You are aware too," he continued, "that the Episcopal ceremony is used as a burial service at the graves of soldiers buried with military honors. Besides which, in official circles I have seen much preference shown to that church, while little attention was paid to others."

After catching my breath, my first thought was that the young man, being so recently a subject of her majesty and not yet being initiated into an understanding of our peculiar American institutions, had unconsciously tortured our policy of toleration into a rudimentary establishment; but, as the more serious facts of the case began to dawn upon the horizon of my dull comprehension, I reflected for a moment, gathered my energies, and replied: "Alas! too true, my friend. Your premises are correct, and your conclusion, if not literally warranted, is practically true. We have, it seems, a state religion."

Now, my dear friends, this is the impression we make upon observing foreigners who come to this country expecting to find a government free from church rule. This is the manner in which we are permitting our Constitution to be outraged to please the pious. We have been giving silent consent to a fraud we despise; and have suffered it to continue through fear of that ghastly old skeleton—orthodoxy. It is a shame, and a stain upon the fair names of the "fathers of our republic," that such desecration of our "charter of liberty" is suffered. Only think of such a squandering of the public money as the following: "Thirteen superannuated army chaplains were on the retired list in 1887," according to a report given in Gen. John A. Logan's "Volunteer Soldier," "who draw from the government an aggregate salary of $23,040 per annum."

If the truth was known how utterly useless, and really injurious these hypocritical drones are to the army and navy, Secularism would certainly become the popular watchword. I have questioned many old soldiers, who have served at posts where chaplains were stationed, about the moral influence they exerted. Invariably the answer would be, "Supremely degrading." With scarcely an exception these divinity dispensers, I find, rank lower morally than the most dissipated officers with whom they associate, and are not at all troubled with crowded halls where they discourse on the beauties of heaven.

The Liberal press, including the very politic but plucky little American Sentinel, has done much to stir the people to a sense of these unwarranted religious encroachments upon their civil rights. Our lecturers are doing noble work, yet there is much still to be done before we can expect to reap beneficial results.

The American Secular Union, with its allied societies, offers the best means of successfully counteracting these monstrous frauds imposed by the church. Let us see rivalry, selfishness, and jealousy given back to the church, where they belong; and let all true Liberals join in a vigorous campaign against the arch-enemy of liberty.

ROBERT THE DEVIL.

THE CREATION OF MAN.

Ackordin' to the holy Munchausen, God made the heaven and the earth, includin' the oceans, and the sun, moon, and stars, of which there is said to be billions of 'em, some of 'em ten times larger'n the sun, in six days by the clock, and then took a rest; and I think he had a rite to, it bein' no fool of a job to work off in six days.

Where God got the stuff to make all these things of the H. M. don't say, not bein' posted, I s'pose; but it seems to me it was wuth tellin' of, where the rubbish yard was located that he got the material from.

After God got the earth into the shape that suited him, which it did, 'cos he said it was good, he made the critters and birds and fishes, each after his kind, which, considerin' there wasn't no kind for a model, rather nonplusses me, as the editor of Gabe's Horn says when he's bothered. But no matter, after he got 'em all done, and the snakes, fleas, bed-bugs, etc., he tho't of something, as he looked the job over—something to make the whole thing perfect.

And what was that something? Well, it was something in his own image, only of different stuff, you know. Well, he went to work and made something in his own image—the H. M. says—and called it man. And he made it out of dirt, and said it was good, and of course he ought to know. And he made him male and female, so the first chapter of the book says; but the second chapter, takin' up the thread of the narrative, goes on to say it over agen, only more so.

The second chapter says he formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, which he forgot to do in the first chapter; no triflin' omishen, as any one may see, 'cos man wouldn't amount to much without the breath of life into him. Thinkin' his image would have too soft a thing of it alone, God made him a helpmeet, to make it interestin' for him, and then the circus commenced, and has been growin' more extensive ever since, and varigated, so to speak.

And this helpmeet he made out of one of the man's ribs—why not out of dust, I dunno. It was done when the man was asleep—so the book says—but I think he must a been dosed, 'cos men, 'less they're offle tuff, don't sleep sound enuff to have a rib cut out and know nuthin' about it. And when the man seen her he called her wo-man. Profetick soul! he knowed she would bring wo to his kind, but he cottoned to her all the same; and all men from that time on has; many on 'em wishin', too late, that they hadn't, I gess; what she thinks I dunno.

Now this is all history, sacrid history, to be sure; but for all that to be treated with more or less respeck, the less the better, p'raps, but still with respeck, you know, if you've got any to spare. If you can't treat it respectful, treat it as respectful as yer can, 'cos sacrid history has got some feeble rites which we are bound to respeck, seemingly if not more so.

As God knowed what man would pan out to be, 'specially old Skinner, editor of Gabe's horn, I've allus wondered what he made him for. Makin' him in his own image would seem to look 'sif he made him for company like, but barrin' a preshus few that he traveled with, in sacrid history times, man didn't appear to be no company for God, 'specially the Sodomers and other tuffs; which he fired and brimstoned, and knocked out through Joshua, and other generals, of blood and iron, which he was in with.

Lions, tigers, and fast hosses and things, and clams, oysters, and turkeys, &c., and all other animals and birds and fishes, seem to be a success as far as I know, but I'm blest 'f I think man is, as far as heard from, which God must a known, if he's the God he's cracked up to be; and so, what did he want to make man for? Sacrid history says of them early days, that there wasn't a man to till the ground, and we mite think that was the reason God made man. But what was the need of tillin' the ground, when critters and birds could git their livin' by walkin' or flyin' for it? If the ground had got to be tilled—what for I can't see—and man had to be made to till it, then that knocks in the head the talk that the cuss of labor, and earnin' our bread by the sweat of our brows, was bro't onto us by the fall of man from grace in the Garden of Eden, don't it? Besides, it makes it out that man wasn't tho't of until it bust on the Lord that the ground must be tilled, which wasn't tho't of in the fust place, which makes out that God didn't have the plan for the whole job in his head when he started in, which shows he wasn't omnishence, which is all-knowin'.

In readin' the sacred histry of the creashen, I fale to see where the need of man comes in. The lions and tigers didn't yearn for him, 'cos they'd never knowed the joys of man meat, and other critters, birds, and fishes had no use for him. It must a been that it struck God—it's plain God in the fust chapter of the fust book of sacred histry, but Lord God in the second and third chapters, and simply Lord in the fourth chapter—after he'd made all the critters, that something in his image would be the cheese, bossin' the critters round, and so he made man; and how thund'rin' sick and tired of him he got by the time Moses turned up!

To come down fine, it seems, from all that the parsons say, that all man was made for was to work in this world to save himself for the next, when, if he hadn't been made, he'd a had no need of savin' himself, bein' all hunkidori as it was. And when you come to think that only about ten in a million will save themselves, and reside with God in the fucher, the 999,990 failin' to ketch on to the salvation train and takin' up their quarters with the devil hereafter, it seems that the makin' of man was a blunder and a crime, don't it? That's about the size of it in my eyes.

Mr. FREETHO'T editor: I didn't show this pece to the editor of Gabe's Horn, but send it to you as straight's the blizzards 'll let it go. I'll bet the rooster 'll say, when he sees it, "Robert, that pece would have just suited the columns of Gabriel's Horn." But he's a snide and a chump, and n. g.

ROBERT THE DEVIL, of Gabe's Horn.

SENATOR BERRY, of Arkansas, tells his friends of a trial for assault in his state, in the course of which a club, a rail, an axe-handle, a knife, and a shot-gun were exhibited as "the instruments with which the deed was done." But it was also shown that the assaulted man defended himself with a revolver, a scythe, a pitchfork, a chisel, a hand-saw, and a dog. The jury, Mr. Berry says, came to the conclusion that they would have given a dollar apiece to have seen the fight.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Business.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Having noticed in your issue of April 21st your club rates for FREETHOUGHT, I send you the names of five subscribers. Inclosed please find $6.25 in payment for the same for one year.

Yours respectfully, J. E. HAMMOND.
Silverton, Oregon.

Profitable for Instruction.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I am more than pleased with your ably edited paper. I never peruse it without feeling profited and instructed by so doing, and will do all in my power to increase its circulation. Wishing you all manner of success, and that FREETHOUGHT may find its way into and gladden many a home as it does mine, Fraternal yours,

Currinsville, Or. B. C. HERRING.

Good Luck!To the Editors of Freethought:*

Inclosed find postal note for my year's subscription to FREETHOUGHT. I wish I could send you a hundred subscribers instead of one, but I have been so busy that I have not had time to read my paper, much less get subscribers. As soon as I get over my rush of business I will see if I can get you a few new subscribers. Success to your enterprise. Your friend,

A. K. COWARD.

Artesia, Cal., April 28, 1888.

A Good Judge of Literature.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I have received several copies of your Freethought journal. I like them. They are splendid, and I think I will become a subscriber. I read them and hand them to my neighbors. I will do all I can to get names for your valuable paper. I take the Truth Seeker and think it is splendid. Those illustrations by Heston are worth more than the price of the paper.

Long life to FREETHOUGHT. Yours for truth and liberty,

W. N. PUTNAM.

Fossil, Or., April 22, 1888.

Mr. Dungan in Clover.To the Editors of Freethought:*

From my delightfully romantic and luxurious forest retreat in the Sonoma mountains, on the charmed banks of the Russian river, where the sweet carols of birds and the perpetual blooming of flowers fill the air with perfume and melody, I write for that radiant sunburst—FREETHOUGHT. I did not have time to make arrangements for its weekly visits, but now I am settled for a time and have sufficient leisure to read its bright pages.

Best wishes for you and all connected with the good work.

S. D. DUNGAN.

Guerneville, Cal.

From Clackamas County, Or.To the Editors of Freethought:*

Inclosed find $2. I prize FREETHOUGHT more than any other reading we get, and we take several papers.

Myself and family had the pleasure of listening to Mr. Putnam at Eagle Creek last summer, and we are looking forward to and expecting a treat on the coming Fourth of July.

I have tried in years past to be a consistent church member, but failed, because I could not believe the teachings of the Bible; still I was afraid to own even to myself that I doubted it, but a friend loaned me "Exeter Hall," and when I had read it, off dropped the scales which had partially blinded my eyes, and since that time I have been steadily advancing into the light of reason.

We purchased several books of Mr. Putnam, which, after reading, we kept in circulation, among others Miss Gardener's "Men, Women, and Gods."

Now, hoping that you may prosper, and make a grand success of FREETHOUGHT, and that you are both well and happy, Truly,

MRS. L. A. LACY.

On the Economic Question.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I am not an extreme Henry George man, any more than an admirer of Fourier, Cabot, St. Simon, and other would-be organizers of social Utopias. But I am for the "under dog." I am for the weak who are mercilessly crowded to the wall; for the poor, whose sweat is curiously enough distilled into the rich man's champagne.

It is—as my late and ever lamented teacher in Freethought, Professor Johannes Scherr, says in his "1848"—undoubtedly a convenient arrangement to belong to the class of biggest taxpayers. It may, under certain circumstances, even become meritorious. Of course, "disquieted and turbulent" heads who have no earthly show ever to take up a residence on Murray or Nob hill, may harbor the heresy that the really biggest—that means the heaviest—taxpayer is ever and everywhere the poor man, the populace. But such financial-political heterodoxies are once for all to be relegated to the tabooed region of "destructive tendencies," and to be "corrected" if need be. Yet however convenient and meritorious citizens the leading members of the tax-roll may be—and sometimes prove themselves to be, as in the cases of Stephen Girard, Peter Cooper, and a few more white ravens among the black flock of the wealthy—it will hardly be disputed that, were there no light tax-payers, or even none who were not tax-payers at all, we would, instead of riding in sumptuous Pullman coaches, be compelled to indulge in the primitive sylvan pleasure of quadruped locomotion and miscengenation with our cousins, the apes. (That's rather strong, but it's Darwin and Du-Chaillu.)

Everything good, beautiful, great; everything that rendered man-beasts, man-men; everything that built and preserves, honors and adorns human society came from the poor man; only from the poor man, always and everywhere. No palace ever gave birth to a redeeming idea; a liberating thought; an invention ameliorating human existence; a discovery influencing the world's destinies, or a jubilant lightning flash of genius. The prophets, saviors, and messiahs have always and everywhere been "poor devils." We only know of one prince who was touched by mankind's misery—Sakyamuni Buddha—and he felt that he had to become a poor man before he could become a savior. Even the illustrious carpenter of Nazareth, the great revolutionist and emancipator of slaves, belonged neither to the heaviest nor even to the moderate taxpayers—what a shocking example for the worthy bank presidents who superintend the Sunday-schools of his alleged churches!

Every projector, architect, and builder on the structure of the future is a sworn enemy of the present, and must be such. But inasmuch as this building work is a painful and a laborious undertaking; inasmuch as the business of humanizing and enlightening your fellow-men is by no means as easy and remunerative as the coupon-cutting trade, no reasonable person would expect those heaviest taxed idolaters of comfort to participate in the former. St. Augustine and St. Calvin say that some are predestined to salvation, the others to damnation. To these are allotted labor, trouble, and hardships; to those idleness, joy, and luxuries—thus says the experience of thousands of years.

This is the "divine order of things." Only fools run their heads against the granite of this fact; wise men take it as they take the facts that fire burns and snow feels cold—as something "of course," something there can be no question about.

Summa summarum: He who possesses a long, wide, and warm blanket has an easy thing of it to be comfortable; and he who is snugly covered need not kick out with his feet or fight with his arms to get a little warmed. LEO HÆFELI.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

...IN THE...

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

...FOR...

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument MR. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions. It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MAY 19, 1888

COLONEL INGERSOLL is always his own successor as the greatest of living orators. His eulogy of Conkling will be surpassed only by some future utterance of the man who pronounced it.

THERE is perpetual talk of war between the European powers, and predictions of immediate hostilities alternate with reported signs of the permanent establishment of peace. The probabilities, doubtless, are against war. The nations do but murmur, snarling at each other's heels.

A GRATIFYING interest is felt in the coming meeting of the National Educational Association, when thousands of teachers from all over the country will be in this city and compare notes. After all, education is the savior that is best redeeming this world. Education makes Freethinkers.

It is noticed that all the Irish orators, in condemning the pope's rescript and declaring that Irishmen will resist it, are careful to add that in spiritual matters they still acknowledge his authority. In this the Irish spokesmen are the blind leading the blind. The pope has as much right to interfere in politics as in religion. Spiritual despotism is as bad as any other, and political freedom that does not carry mental liberty with it is half-slavery at best.

A PAPER published in Oakland called Echoes desires to have the God question settled. It says that whereas the existence of God is not definitely known, nor his habit, personality, or even sex, therefore it invites "this silent God to speak; this invisible God to become apparent; this lonely God to take up his abode among humans; this wealthy God to be generous." Echoes will reverberate a long time before its request will be answered by the great echo that men call God.

DELIBERATIONS are said to be proceeding between the railroad men of this vicinity looking to the abolition of the Sunday picnic train. These gentlemen have discovered that the Sabbath excursion is immoral in its tendency, as it carries a large hoodlum element into the suburban resorts, to the great discomfort and disgust of residents. It is generally charged that the railroad managers are hypocritical in this pretext of serving morality by ceasing to serve the public. When the enterprising hoodlum isn't hoodling at the suburban resorts he is doing worse in the city, and the city rejoices to have one day measurably free from him. Besides, if the Sunday picnic train did not run he would take some other. What the public demands of the railroads is not that they should discuss moral measures, but that they should fulfil their obligations and reduce their rates of fare so that the train-robber will have an even chance with them of getting something out of the passengers.

THE Rev. J. F. Hannon, of the Centenary Methodist church, is vaulting into public notice. Last Sunday he preached on "Reading." He found fault with the human tendency to attend more strictly to bodily than to spiritual wants. He dared to say that there are mothers and daughters in San Francisco who "pay more attention to fat, yelping poodles than to their immortal souls." "Without books," said the Rev. Mr. Hannon, "we become an intellectual China, with its sealed ports and walled boundaries, doomed to decay and rot with the dry-rot of stupidity and ignorance—doomed to become the pity of heaven and the mockery of hell." To avoid such a fate the reverend gentleman would have us read moral magazines and reviews, and he would not object to good novels. As an ensample of the latter he recommended Bible stories—that of the Prodigal Son, for instance. It is fortunate that Mr. Hannon thus particularized, as about nine out of ten of the Bible writers would be under indictment if they should put their "novels" upon the market the present season.

NEWS AND NOTES.

The golden wedding bells were making melody when I came to Sacramento; age was again like dreaming youth; fairy land was gleaming and roses and orange blossoms adorned the palace of joy. My good friends Mr. and Mrs. N. D. Goodell were young again and love was as bright as when fifty years ago it breathed its happy song. The pages of FREETHOUGHT have already been illuminated with the golden wedding, and its readers have congratulated our noble veteran and pioneer that a life of usefulness, independence, and energy has passed the golden gateway, and with unbowed head and still lovely bride, among flowers and happy faces, sees the diamond portals of the continued journey.

The hours are always pleasant at the Goodell mansion, especially in this most charming season of the year, when spring is on its radiant throne, when the grass is green, the blossoms countless, and winds musical. The shadow of theology is not here, and Christianity becomes the golden rule.

Sacramento grows steadily along. It is a quiet city. It seems to abhor the boom or anything of an exciting nature. It sticks to business. It has only two daily newspapers, and they pursue the even tenor of their way with scarcely a head-line. The world moves on in an easy, happy, dignified manner, and there is very little to disturb an after-dinner nap. Sacramento is one of those places where it always seems afternoon. Even the earthquake passes by with scarcely a recognition.

The capitol building is one of the finest in the country. It is a harmonious structure and greets the eye like a picture. It is imposing in its simple magnificence. The grounds about it are handsomely ornamented, and in the moonlight and electric light the white walls and columns and domes and trees and grass and level walks make an attractive scene.

I lectured on Sunday evening at Pioneer Hall. The audience was not large. I did not expect it to be. In Sacramento the work is slow. The Liberal element is largely indifferent. It allows the "stream of tendency" to take the place of personal effort. The necessity of organized action is not yet realized.

However, good friends were present, and I am not discouraged at the outlook. If only a few are gathered together the fire burns, and hope grows and the to-morrow becomes brighter.

Sunday morning I attended the Unitarian church. The prayers and hymns were not according to my mind, but the discourse by Mr. Massey was excellent. It was an eloquent exposition of the gospel of evolution—that things somehow tend to the better, and man, struggling with innumerable forces, can "hope on, hope ever." This sentiment is universal and belongs to no religion. Even the pessimist has hope. If this is the worst possible universe, then we have the consolation that we are at the bottom of the ladder and can't go any lower, and if we move at all it must be a climb. If there were a God there would be no need of any hope. We should be so happy in the present that there would not be the slightest care for the future. I believe in the gospel of hope simply because I don't believe in any other. To look on the bright side of things is philosophy and common sense. It is theology which cultivates the dark side.

I was pleased to meet with my co-worker, L. C. Hill, of Myrtle Creek, Oregon, who purposes to make California his home. Also Mr. L. C. Wood and A. D. Oakley, of Folsom, who came twenty miles to attend the lecture; Mr. and Mrs. Felker and daughters, and others, who, whether few or many, are for Freethought.

Monday was a delightful day, a May day indeed, such as the poets of New England dream of and sing of, but never realize until the month of June. In California we have the May time in the month of May—all the glory, all the beauty that is so resplendent in the pages of romance.

This day was a perfect day. The sky was soft Italian. The atmosphere was brilliant after the rain, like an ethereal diamond. The broad green fields rolled away spangled here and there with groves, while the remote horizon glittered with the snowy range of the Nevadas. Through this enchanting scenery I went the pilgrim's way behind a good horse, which is an improvement upon the old way of traveling afoot and alone. The point of destination was the big ranch of Owen Thomas Davis, where he is monarch of five hundred acres and more, and wields the sceptre of the strong arm and inventive brain. Hidden in a grove and orchards of peach-trees, his house was found after various windings through the highways and lanes. Towering over the roof was a vast cottonwood which Mr. Davis himself planted in 1856, when he first settled in this country, and built his fireside with scarcely another dwelling to be seen. The railroad now passes by his door, with a hundred cars a day coming and going. We were warmly greeted by his wife, a staunch Freethinker too, and never was a day more cheerily passed than amid this rural felicity. After dinner we took a sleigh-ride to the strawberry patch, which includes about thirty acres. Runners instead of wheels are used for the transportation of the fruit boxes, and hence our sleigh-ride in the May time. The strawberries were luscious, the largest I have ever seen. To pluck them red ripe from the bosom of the green leaves is the enviable way to eat the strawberry. All the exhilarating flavor is thus preserved. We seem to be eating the sunshine itself.

Mr. Davis has his own inventions for ditching, watering, etc., and he keeps his farm in a high state of cultivation. He is one of the pioneers of this country, has made his own fortune, and although an unflinching Freethinker who rattles the clergymen terrifically and breaks them all to pieces; still, like the Biblical patriarch, "Father Abraham," he can look upon his own broad lands, herds of cattle, bands of horses, full barns, fruit, and grain, all of which he owes to his own genius and perseverance. So it isn't the saints, after all, who inherit the earth. The good Infidel has his portion, and if he does as well in the next world as in this, he won't fret at having lost the opportunity to play on a harp.

So with golden wedding, work and play, with the wealth of springtime in sky and earth, meeting many friends, our visit to Sacramento and vicinity makes memory and hope the allies of joyful progress.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

THE CLUBBING LIST.

The opportunity is still afforded those who are able to join the clubbing list that we have been laying before the readers of FREETHOUGHT for the past few weeks. Why not go ahead at once and make up the one hundred names? Almost every Freethinker knows of ten persons who would read the paper if sent to them. Those who cannot recall that number of names know that the price of ten subscriptions, or less, if applied to this paper would go toward the spread of Freethought, and so do good.

We do not know of a single valid excuse that any Liberal with $20 to spare can offer for not joining this club.

A ROYAL PREMIUM.

As will be seen from Mr. Ranford Worthing's letter, the premium he offers to the person procuring the largest number of subscribers for FREETHOUGHT within the next year is one worth working for. It is nothing less than a corner lot, size 50x100 feet, in the city of San Diego; value, $300.

All who propose to work for this premium should notify us at once, so that an account may be kept of the number of subscribers each sends in. Our rates are as follows:

One subscription one year.....	$2.00
Two subscriptions one year.....	3.00
Three subscriptions one year.....	4.00
Four subscriptions one year.....	5.00

Getters up of clubs may make their own arrangements with subscribers. They can charge them the full price of $2, and thus realize a commission of 75 cents on each one; or they may make their commission smaller by charging the subscriber less. Our offer is to send the paper in clubs of four and upward for $1.25 each per year.

We hope there will be one hundred starters in this race for the corner lot, and that the one meeting with the poorest success will get at least a dozen subscribers. The one who succeeds best will receive a triple reward. He will get the commissions, he will win the lot, and he will have the satisfaction which comes from the performance of a noble work.

THE COMING LECTURE IN SAN FRANCISCO.

As has been previously announced, Mr. Putman will lecture at Irving Hall, 139 Post street, this city, on the evening of Sunday, May 27. His subject will be "The American Republic."

In conjunction with the lecture Mr. Putnam will endeavor to secure the organization of the San Francisco and Oakland Secular Union, if there appears to be a disposition on the part of the Liberals of the two cities to unite in such a way.

Tickets at 25 cents each may be obtained at this office.

MR. WORTHING'S WORD.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Allow me to send a hearty "shake" to Brother Stone, of Oakland, and say that I am not a real estate agent, dealer, or speculator, only a real estate owner with an earnest desire for the promulgation of freedom from the enslaving thralldom of the church; for the broadening of men's minds to a condition where they can comprehend the operations of nature, and thereby be lifted out of the degradation that a belief in God necessarily produces; for the elevation of the race above the low plane that a belief in the forgiveness of sins naturally places it in; and for the substitution of humanity to man for the curse of a brutal and fiendish imaginary system of future rewards and punishments.

FREETHOUGHT seems to me to be the best exponent of my ideas that I have ever read, and without any expectation of gain, or hope of reward, I stand ready to give the lot, which is worth $300 to-day, in any way that will furnish the largest number of readers of FREETHOUGHT for the next year.

In my letter I gave a hint to the editors to suggest some other way, if they could, by which the desired result (the increase of their readers) might be reached; but I see the novelty of my proposition so completely astonished them that they are not quite sure whether or not they are dreaming yet. This is not strange to me, as I have before shocked people with propositions that made them wonder if I was sane, and being an original inventor and a thorough investigator of everything from the ground up it is not strange that I should do some things a little different from the great majority.

In deciding how this lot shall be given, let us take into consideration the question whether or not a man who subscribes and pays for a paper will be more likely to read it than if it is sent to him gratuitously.

There are plenty of Freethinkers in California and the other states to support a very strong organ, if their lukewarmness and timidity can be overcome, and it is my desire to offer an inducement in the best possible way to accomplish this end. I am open to conviction, and solicit criticism and discussion on the question.

RANFORD WORTHING.

San Diego, Cal., May 7, 1888.

THE press dispatches report that a committee headed by Sergius Schevitch, "the Anarchist," waited on Mayor Hewitt, of New York, last Monday and asked for his intervention in the brewers' strike. The description of Schevitch as an "Anarchist" shows how reliable press definitions are. Schevitch is a Socialist—as far from an Anarchist as an Atheist is from a polytheist. But that is not the point. Mayor Hewitt advised the men to go back to work, and they demurred on the ground that they would be called "scabs." Thereupon the mayor expressed his opinion that a "scab" is a moral hero who refuses to surrender his individual liberty. This is a bold proposition, and will win Mr. Hewitt no votes from the trades unions. It will, however, serve to awaken thought. The ideal state of freedom would be that condition in which each man should possess an acknowledged right to put a price upon his own service, and should, if he so chooses, sell that service for one cent per diem. And all the powers, civil and military, should protect him in the exercise of his rights.

THE following narrative, from the Kansas City Times, is necessarily either true or false:

"SENECA, KAN., May 5.—Two well-to-do farmers named Primley, who live about thirteen miles north of this place, rode into town this morning with the details of a terrible visitation of divine wrath upon the head of a farm hand employed by them. The story is positively asserted to be true in every particular and runs thus: The Primleys and the farm hand, Althaus, on Thursday afternoon became involved in a violent discussion concerning the taking of the sacrament, when Althaus exclaimed in a loud voice accompanied by an oath: 'You fellows think when you take the sacrament that you are swallowing Jesus, feathers and all.' No sooner had he uttered the words than he became madly insane, rushed about with frightful groans, and despite the efforts of the Primley brothers escaped, and is supposed to be hiding in the woods along the Nemaha river."

Many sensational stories of the foregoing kind have been published from time to time, and in no instance has one of them, upon investigation, been discovered to have the slightest foundation in fact. They belong to the family of the Pious Lie.

It is not our fault that patrons do not receive the Field-Ingersoll Discussion. Our order for a hundred copies has been in the hands of the publisher for the past six weeks, and the bill for them has reached us, but the express companies, or whoever has the work in charge, have failed to deliver the order. The delay is most annoying.

NEXT to the names of subscribers we desire the names of those likely to become such upon receipt of a sample copy of this paper and a persuasive invitation by letter. This is our only way of introducing FREETHOUGHT to the people of the country, and the co-operation of subscribers will be of great assistance to us. We are already under a debt of gratitude to friends for favors of this sort, and they will please accept our thanks.

LITERARY NOTES.

SECULAR THOUGHT of May 5 is the first issue printed by the Secular Publishing Company, 38 Adelaide street East, Toronto, Ont. The type is new and handsome and the press-work superior. We take great interest in Mr. Watts's remark that he will shortly express his opinion as to what the American Secular Union should be.

JOSIAH P. MENDUM, of the Investigator, has issued a new edition of "A few Days in Athens." It is printed in excellent workmanship on heavy paper. The book is the translation of a Greek manuscript discovered in Herculaneum, translated into English by Frances Wright. It is in the form of a philosophical, but entertaining, narrative. Price 75 cents.

"A SUPPOSED Colloquy between the Pope of Osceola and that Person Designated by him, Heathen High Priest," is the title of a neatly-printed pamphlet written by somebody and sent to this office from somewhere. More definite information as to its authorship is not given. Nevertheless it makes lively reading, and the pope is left where Dr. Field was when Ingersoll got through with him.

THE Freethinkers' Magazine, issued by H. L. Green, is a monthly publication of much merit. It contains contributions from some of the best Liberal writers, and is illustrated with likenesses of prominent Freethinkers. Well printed on good paper, and with a tasteful if sober cover, the magazine will be sent to new subscribers the remainder of the year for $1. The regular price is $2 per annum.

Of the four leading articles announced to appear in the Popular Science Monthly for June it is difficult to decide which will be most valuable. Edward Atkinson will talk about the "Surplus Revenue;" George Harley, M. D., will tell of the effect of alcoholic liquids on moderate drinkers; Alfred C. Lane will appear as a "Geological Tourist in Europe," and M. L. Gutode will write on "Whistles, Ancient and Modern."

ONE of the most vigorous writers who contributed to the New York Truth Seeker in its young days, a dozen years ago, was "Sam" Preston. By way of a new magazine called Thought of the Times, S. H. Preston editor, we observe that Sam is still at it and as vigorous as ever. Then he was an iconoclast; now, having, as he believes, knocked out the gods, he is advocating the improvement of the human stock. His magazine is clean and bright. Monthly, $1 per annum; address S. H. Preston, 1398 Broadway, New York.

J. G. HERTWIG is the author and publisher of three pamphlets we have just received. "Sunday Laws," price 10 cents, shows that all such laws in this country are null and void, as they violate the Constitution granting religious freedom and liberty of conscience. "Woman Suffrage," price 10 cents, asserts that woman suffrage, endangering the happiness of family life, is impracticable and not demanded by the majority of the women of this country. In all other respects it advocates equal rights of man and woman under the law. "American Money," price 15 cents, suggests a paper currency for this country consisting of gold and silver certificates secured by deposits of gold and silver coin to be made by the people with the government. It also advocates the coinage of an honest silver dollar, equal in its bullion value to the gold dollar. Price of the three pamphlets sent to one address, 30 cents.

JAMES H. WEST, of Duluth, Minn., the first of the year announced a journal to be published by him entitled The Progressive Pulpit, which was to be, if we recollect accurately, an Independent Religious Journal. The publication has appeared with regularity, but its name is the much better one of The New Ideal, a Journal of Independent Modern Thought. Mr. West is best known as a poet and religious meditator—somewhat of a Buddha. His "Uplifts of Heart and Will" are the best religious reading we have ever seen. The New Ideal gives ten pages of sober and thoughtful discourse, among which we find the following:

FREETHOUGHT, a weekly of 12 pages, hails from the Pacific Coast—published by Putnam & Macdonald, San Francisco, at $2.00 per year. Both the editors are men of ability, and at the present time Mr. Putnam, who is a poet and lecturer of no mean order, spends much of his time here and there through his state, speaking to appreciative audiences the new and nobler thought of the age. This is the activity of Liberalism—for which the world waits. And in the paper's prospectus the editors say in substance, "We mean to deal with realities; yet we wish to express hopes and aspirations as well. The glorious side of life we would emphasize so that every hearthstone may be brighter and better."

"God in the State." By E. A. Stevens, Secretary of the American Secular Union. pp. 22. This pamphlet would be a surprise to many, for it contains a surprising bill of particulars. Every one interested in preserving in the United States the absolute separation of church and state, as designed by Washington, Jefferson, Paine, and Franklin when these four "fathers of their country" wrote their bill of rights and outlined the Constitution, will here find much of fact setting forth the need for an outspoken position to-day in the matter. The growing attempts of late, on the part of certain formalists, through national societies, newspaper organs, and petty persecutions, to enforce an "established religion" on the government—attempts becoming more and more powerful of late, because not yet in receipt of the practical rebuke which the mass of the population has quietly in store for the movement when the necessity arises—these frequent and increasing attempts, as in this pamphlet concisely set forth, need, to say the least, to be intelligently understood by all; and the present essay will do much towards bringing light to many. Published by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco. 10 cents.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Ex-Mayor Andrew J. Bryant fell from a ferry boat last week Friday, and was drowned. It is not known whether his death was intentional or accidental. His recent conduct had caused remark and he was not in prosperous circumstances.—A fire on Berry and King streets, this city, did $100,000 damage in a few minutes on the 11th.—The Rev. George McDuffy, colored, was hanged in Greensboro, Ga., May 11. He had a wife, but shot his rival in the affections of another woman.—Wiggins, the Canadian weather prophet, predicts that California will have a severe earthquake before October.—Archbishop Lynch of Toronto, Can., is dead.—On the 21st of August next there will be a national contest between stenographers at Caldwell, on Lake George, N. Y. The prize will be $500 for the stenographer who will write the greatest number of words per minute over 250. San Francisco will be represented in the contest.—Julia Ward Howe lectured in Irving Hall this city, May 10, on Longfellow and Emerson. She was pleased to speak highly of both.—M. E. Billings, of Waverly, Iowa, the man who collocated the "Crimes of Preachers," has been sentenced to life imprisonment for murder.—It said that in 1880 there were only five thousand Jews in Jerusalem, and now there are thirty thousand. Thousands have fled to that city from Russian persecution, and Jerusalem is becoming a brisk business place in consequence.—The coroner at Los Angeles has been called upon to investigate the death of a child of a member of the Holiness Band, which recently died under the faith cure treatment, the parents having refused to call a physician.—The new coaches of the Mount Hamilton Stage Company arrived in San Jose May 10, and a grand drive through the city and suburbs was had. Thirty ladies filled the coaches. The new service to the Lick Observatory began next day. Plans for a new hotel by the Mount Hamilton Stage Company on top of the mountain are in the hands of an architect.—Gladstone has received a memorial signed by 3,730 dissenting clergymen, expressing their sympathy with him.—The pope's condemnation of the boycott in Ireland is causing a good deal of trouble. The priests do not know whether it may be safely enforced on the congregations or not, and it has not been generally promulgated.—The Democratic state convention assembled at Los Angeles on Tuesday.—The Rev. Father Facinetti insisted on calling upon Mrs. Miller, of this city, and Mr. Miller struck him. The priest had his assailant arrested.—Dillon, the Irish "patriot," has been sent to jail for six months. He was convicted of inciting tenants not to pay rent.—The Rev. Mr. Ulsh, preaching at Westcliff, Col., is involved in a scandal, and one woman has horsewhipped another on his account.—The Senate has passed the International Copyright bill. The act takes effect July 1, 1888.—Dr. Lyman Abbott will probably become permanent pastor of Plymouth church, in Brooklyn, in which Beecher formerly preached.—The will of Roscoe Conkling, which has been probated, bequeaths all his property to his wife and her heirs, and leaves her sole executrix.—The secretary of the treasury accepted bonds to the amount of $691,900 on the 12th.—Floods on the Mississippi are spreading destruction along the banks.—Michael Davitt says that the Irish people will resist the pope's decree condemning the "plan of campaign."—The emperor of Germany is one day reported much worse and another day much better. Meanwhile he is growing weaker, and the hope of his ultimate recovery is given up.—There were 104 deaths in the city last week, against ninety-three for the corresponding week of last year. Seventy-one of the deaths were males; twenty-one infants. Sixteen died of consumption and eight of pneumonia; two were homicides and twenty-four deaths occurred at public institutions.—Littlewood won the six-days' walking match at New York last week. He made 611 miles, and Guerrero, the Mexican, made 589.—At Nogales, A. T., May 12, six train-robbers attacked and robbed the south-bound train on the Sonora Railway, about 10 o'clock at night. They killed the fireman and fatally wounded the conductor and one passenger. The robbers got only $139.65 Mexican silver. The way bills and letters were saved.—Headed by their pastor, the members of a Holland Reform church in Grand Rapids, Mich., last week mobbed the workmen on a railroad track being laid past their meetinghouse and tore up the rails. The police dispersed the mob, and the rails were relaid under police protection. When the first dummy was run over the road the church-members assailed it with a volley of stones. A deacon was arrested and lodged in jail.—Mrs. Ida A. Gordon, wife of Thomas Gordon, a grain dealer of Indianapolis, administered a fatal dose of poison to their child last Saturday; then cut her own throat with a razor. The woman was partially demented, and her infirmity was intensified by excitement over "Christian science," of which she was an ardent student.—The new Chinese treaty, which prevents emigrating Chinamen from returning to this country, has had the effect of stopping almost completely the outgoing of Mongolians.

INSTRUCTIVE CORRESPONDENCE.

From the Truth Seeker.

MY DEAR BROTHER: One object I have in writing this letter to you is to draw a little information from the fountain of your experience. You are two years older than myself and have been an editor much longer, and I presume you have met many people of diverse views and have found it necessary to agree mainly with them all. I think I am doing pretty well in that direction myself, but I would like to inquire what course you pursue when your harmonious communings with an anti-smoker have brought him almost to the subscribing point, and a jovial patron enters and offers you a fifteen-cent cigar. Supposing you have just agreed with a Prohibitionist that the saloons must go, and a jolly German interrupts the proceedings by inviting you to join him in a glass of beer, "steam oder lager?" You may communicate the information here sought in a letter marked personal, and I will not publish it.

GEORGE E. MACDONALD.

San Francisco, Cal.

THE SECRET IMPARTED.

DEAR BROTHER: Trusting to your promise not to print the information I give you, I will tell you how we manage things here when the dilemma you describe falls upon us. You know that the tendency of industry in this century is toward a division of labor. Formerly, a shoemaker took a hide from the tannery and made a pair of shoes complete, all by himself. Now, some score of workmen are employed on a pair of shoes, each making a part. In the newspaper office, too, where I learned how to wash rollers, set type, and, when the proprietor was out, take subscriptions gracefully, as though I were doing the man a favor by receiving his money, the editor was his own foreman, clerk, stone-hand, proofreader, reporter, cashier, business manager, and occasionally his own typesetter and pressman. You remember Julius Morse, don't you, with his limber knees, large, round spectacles, and piety of the Episcopalian stripe? But times have changed since then, and, conforming to the stern law of evolution, the printing of even a great moral paper, the biggest and best Liberal journal in the world, is accomplished by a division of labor. Lurking somewhere in the gray matter of your young editorial brain there is doubtless a vision of that printing-office up in New Hampshire, where one of the partners is a heretic, takes the Truth Seeker and FREETHOUGHT, holds office among the Odd Fellows and a commission as lieutenant of the militia company, while the other one belongs to the most popular church, teaches a class in Sunday-school, attends church picnics and agrees with the ministers of all denominations. The first gets all the printing of the worldly and wicked ones, while the latter gathers in the patronage of the saints. The scheme works well; I have admired it often, though the wicked partner, who is your and my friend, assures me that the pious work doesn't pay—the church folks are such professional beggars, he says, that they expect to get their work done below cost. I have known them to get a whole edition of a pamphlet for less than the Truth Seeker pays the compositor. But this partner expects to get his reward above, and as the articles of co-partnership call for an equal division of profit, I don't see but that the heretic has got to be saved anyway. The treasures these two young men are laying up in unpaid-for job printing for the churches will amount to an enormous sum. Well, that's the way Mr. Somerby and I work it between the Prohibitionists and the anti-tobacco folks, and the jolly souls who follow the example of Old King Cole. I believe there are no two points of political or social economy upon which the editor and business manager of the Truth Seeker agree. But you know how harmoniously we get along, illustrating the ecumenical council motto, In diversity there is unity, or words to that effect. When a Prohibitionist comes in and wants to subscribe on condition that we make the paper an annex to the Voice, he is got into a corner by the B. M., who agrees thoroughly with all he says, and then he takes his subscription without a wink. I keep out of sight. But if that intending supporter comes in shouting high license, denouncing all sumptuary laws, and swearing he will drink "ein lager" when he pleases, and resist to the death any attempt to circumscribe his personal liberty, he is directed to the editorial sanctum, where he meets a warm welcome, but gets water to drink. The non-smoker, too, tarries below, buys books, and finds a ready response to all his condemnation of the vile weed which picks your pocket, burns your clothes, and makes a chimney of your nose. Parenthetically, I may remark that the poet who penned that must have meant cigarette-smokers. Who ever knew a cigar-smoker to inhale powdered hydrocarbon gas and exhale it through his nose? But when some merry companion like McArthur sends to this office a bundle of manuscript, laid flat, and express paid, accompanied by a box of Perfectos, Cuban made, the whole tout ensemble, as it were, gets up to the editorial rooms with no hindrance to speak of. The manuscript is carefully laid on a broad window-sill. If you search the inner recesses of your mind you can guess what becomes of the Perfectos.

I advise you to likewise divide your labor with Mr. Putnam. Let him sign the pledge not to use any of the wine so plentiful in California, and solemnly swear not to smoke cigars. Then you can be happy, for all the naughty but good things will fall to you, and you can use them with a clear conscience, knowing how much you are contributing to Mr. Putnam's welfare. The cigars you smoke will not hurt him, and the wine you drink will not make his nose red, while, perhaps, if it is good, it will save you from an attack of dyspepsia. The scheme is a great one, and to put it in successful operation it is only necessary to get the consent of Mr. Putnam. Try it.

Return, please, my thanks to all the Truth Seeker subscribers you meet who send their compliments here. Tell them that if they will come to New York I will take them up to Central Park and show them the obelisk. Yours always,

YOUR ELDER BROTHER.

GOD IN THE STATE. By E. A. Stevens, Secretary of the American Secular Union. San Francisco, Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st. Price 10 cents.

This is the first pamphlet issued by the firm mentioned above. If they do all their work as well as they have done this they are pretty sure of success.

Much has been written on the subject of this pamphlet, but nothing more able than this. Every Spiritualist and Liberal, in fact, everybody who believes in keeping our government secular, should read and circulate this pamphlet.—New Thought.

ONE of the most useful propagandist pamphlets published of late is GOD IN THE STATE, by E. A. Stevens, the earnest secretary of the American Secular Union. It contains 22 pages of solid and, particularly at the present time, valuable information which every Freethinker should possess. Friend Stevens has done his work thoroughly, and we hope that he will be rewarded by knowing that his brochure has an extensive circulation. On the first page he quotes the amendment adopted at a convention of the National Reform Association, held at Pittsburgh in 1874: "We propose such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as will suitably acknowledge Almighty God as author of the nation's existence, and the ultimate source of its authority, Jesus Christ as its ruler, and the Bible the supreme rule of its conduct, and thus indicate that this is a Christian nation, and place all Christian laws, institutions, and usages on an undeniable legal basis in the fundamental laws of the land." In a masterly manner Mr. Stevens shows the folly and errors contained in the above orthodox effusion. We cannot too strongly recommend this pamphlet, which is published by Putnam & Macdonald, San Francisco. Price 10 cents.—Secular Thought.

INGERSOLL'S TRIBUTE TO CONKLING.

On the evening of May 9, thirty-five hundred people crowded the Academy of Music at Albany, N. Y., to listen to the oration of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll in memory of ex-Senator Roscoe Conkling. More than a thousand persons were turned away from the doors. The ceremonies were under the auspices of the New York Senate and Assembly. Colonel Ingersoll said:

Roscoe Conkling, the great man, orator, statesman, lawyer, and distinguished citizen of the republic, in the zenith of his fame and power, has reached his journey's end; and we are met here in the city of his birth to pay our tribute to his worth and work. He earned and held a proud position in public thought. He stood for independence, for courage, and, above all, for absolute integrity, and his name was known and honored by many millions of his fellow-men. In the presence of death a good man judges as he would be judged. He knows that men are only fragments; that the greatest walk in shadow, and that faults and failures mingle with the lives of all. In the grave should be buried the prejudices and passions born of conflict. Charity should hold the scales in which are weighed the deeds of men. The peculiarities, traits born of locality and surroundings—these are but the dust of the race; these are the accidents, drapery, clothes and fashions, that have nothing to do with the man except to hide his character. They are the clouds that cling to the mountains. Time gives us a clearer vision; that which was merely local fades away, words of envy are forgotten, and all there is of sterling worth remains.

Roscoe Conkling was a man of superb courage. He not only acted without fear, but he had that fortitude of soul that bears the consequences of the course pursued without complaint. He was charged with being proud. The charge was true. He was proud! His knees were as inflexible as the "unwedgable and gnarled oak;" but he was not vain. Vanity is a vane that turns, a willow that bends with every breeze; pride is an oak that defies the storm. The one is weakness, the other strength. This imperious man entered public life in the dawn of the reformation, at a time when the country needed men of pride, of principle and courage. The institution of slavery had poisoned all the springs of power. Before this, ambition fell upon its knees; politicians, judges, clergymen, and merchant princes bowed low and humbly. Slavery was a bond and pledge of peace, of union, and of national greatness. The temple of American liberty was finished, but the auction-block was its corner-stone.

At last the conflict came. The hosts of light and darkness prepared to meet upon the fields of war. The question was presented: Shall the republic be slave or free? The Republican party, which had triumphed at the polls, quailed in the presence of rebellion. Hoping to avoid war, they were willing that slavery should become immortal. An amendment to the Constitution was proposed, in effect that no subsequent amendment should ever be made that in any way should interfere with the right of man to steal his fellow-man. This, the most marvelous proposition ever submitted to a congress of civilized men, received in the House an overwhelming majority and the necessary two-thirds vote in the Senate. The Republican party, in the moment of its triumph, deserted every principle for which it had so gallantly contended, and, with trembling hands of fear, laid its convictions on the altar of compromise. The old guard, numbering but sixty-five in the house, stood firm as the three hundred at Thermopylae. Thaddeus Stevens refused to kneel; Owen Lovejoy refused to surrender; and on the edge of disunion, in the shadow of civil war, with the air filled with sounds of dreadful preparation, while the Republican party was retracing its steps Roscoe Conkling voted No. This puts the wreath of glory on his tomb. From that vote to the last moment of his life he was the champion of rights. Staunch and stalwart from that moment he stood in the front rank. He never wavered and never swerved. He battled for life, for the rights of slaves, the dignity of labor, and the liberty of all. He guarded with a father's care the rights of the hunted, hated, and despised. He attacked the savage statutes of the reconstituted states with a torrent of invective, scorn, and execration. He was not satisfied until the freedman was an American citizen, clothed with every civil right; until the Constitution was his shield; until the ballot was his sword. Others wavered, but he stood firm; some were false, but he was proudly true, fearlessly faithful until death.

Roscoe Conkling was an absolutely honest man. He uttered the splendid truth that "the higher obligations among men are not set down in writing signed and sealed, but reside in honor." He was an ideal representative, faithful and incorruptible. He believed his constituents and his country were entitled to the fruits of his experience: to his best and highest thoughts. No man ever held the standard of responsibility higher than he. He voted according to his judgment, his conscience. He made no bargains; he neither bought nor sold. To correct evils, abolish abuses, and inaugurate reforms, he believed, was not only the duty but the privilege of a legislator. He neither sold nor mortgaged himself. He was in Congress during the years of vast expenditure, of war and waste. When the credit of the nation was loaned to individuals; when claims were thick as leaves in June; when the amendment of a statute by the change of a single word meant millions, and when empires were given to corporations, he stood at the summit of his power, the peer of the greatest, a leader tried and trusted.

He had the tastes of a prince, the fortune of a peasant; yet he never swerved. No corporation was great enough or rich enough to purchase him. His vote could not be bought "for all the sun sees or close earth wombs," or "profound sea hides." His hand was never touched by any bribe, and on his soul there never was a sordid stain. Poverty was his priceless crown. Above his marvelous intellectual gifts, above all place he ever reached, above the ermine he refused, rises his integrity, like some great mountain peak, and there it stands firm as the earth beneath, pure as the stars above. He was a great lawyer. He understood the framework, the anatomy, the foundations of law; he was familiar with the great streams and currents and tides of authority. He knew the history of legislation, the principles that had been settled on the fields of war. He knew their maxims, those crystallizations of common sense, those hand grenades of argument. He was not a case lawyer, a decision index, or an echo; he was original, thoughtful, and profound. He had breadth and scope, resource, learning, logic, and, above all, the sense of justice. He was painstaking and conscientious, anxious to know facts, preparing for every attack, ready for every defense. He rested only when the end was reached. During the contest, he neither sent nor received a flag of truce. He was true to his clients, making their case his. Feeling his responsibility, he listened patiently to details, and to his industry there were only the limits of time and strength. He was a student of the Constitution. He knew the boundaries of federal jurisdiction, and no man was more familiar with those great decisions that are the peaks and promontories, headlands and beacons of the law. He was an orator, earnest, logical, intense, and picturesque. He laid his foundation with care, with accuracy and skill, and rose by "cold gradation and well-balanced form" from the corner stone of statement to the domed conclusion. He filled the stage; his audience was his. He had that indefinable thing called presence. Tall, commanding, erect, ample in speech, graceful in compliment, Titanic in denunciation, rich in illustration, prodigal of comparison and metaphor, his sentences, measured and rhythmical, fell like music on the enraptured throng. He abhorred the Pharisee and loathed all fraud. He had a profound aversion for those who insist on putting base motives back of the good deeds of others. He wore no mask, he knew his friends; his enemies knew him. He had no patience with pretense, with patriotic reasons for unmanly acts. He did his work well, and bravely spoke his thought. Sensitive to the last degree, he keenly felt the blows and stabs of the envious and obscure—the small blow of the weakest; but the greatest could not drive him from his convictions. He would not stop to ask or give explanation; he left his words and deeds to justify themselves. He held in light esteem the friend who heard with half-believing ear the slander of a foe. He walked a highway of his own, and kept the company of his self-respect. He would not turn aside to avoid a foe, or to greet or gain a friend. In his nature there was no compromise. To him there were but two paths—the right and the wrong. He was maligned, misrepresented, and misunderstood, but he would not answer. He knew that character spoke louder far than any word. He was as silent then as he is now; and his silence, better than any form of speech, refuted every charge. He was an American, proud of his country, that was and ever will be proud of him. He did not find perfection only in other lands; he did not grow small and shrunken, withered and apologetic, in the presence of those upon whom greatness had been thrust by chance. He could not be overawed by dukes or lords, or flattered into vertebraless subservency by the patronizing smiles of kings. In the midst of conventionalities he had the feeling of suffocation. He believed in the royalty of man, in the sovereignty of the citizen, and in the matchless greatness of this republic. He was of classic mould, a figure from the antique world. He had the pose of the great statues; the pride and bearing of the intellectual Greek, of the conquering Roman; and he stood in the free air as though in his veins there flowed the blood of a hundred kings. And as he lived he died. Proudly he entered darkness or the dawn that we call death. Unshrinking he passed beyond the horizon; beyond the twilight of the purple hills; beyond the utmost reach of human harm or help, to that vast realm of silence or of joy, where the innumerable dwell; and he has left with us his wealth of thought and deed—the memory of a brave, imperious, honest man, who bowed alone to death.

RELIGIOUS TOLERANCE IN EUROPE.

A residence abroad gives an observant and thoughtful American a more just estimate of the progress of rationalistic thought than he can gain at home: he appreciates how dense has been the barbarism in which, in so many respects, the human mind has been and is lying. He learns the truth of the saying that "man is a warlike animal," but comes to know that even war has had its uses, as well as priestcraft. But more than ever he learns how hard it is to peel off these and many other things, which, though once helps to infant social condition, are now terrible hindrances. Through war, the most vigorous types of man were selected to propagate themselves and to rule. Through forms of religion, better morals were inculcated and the people lifted to higher creeds. The very conservatism that has preserved these things has been helpful to humanity; for there are very few races of men even yet capable of self-government.

The union of church and state, which to our eyes has produced such hideous evils, has conserved the measure of liberty which had been attained, by giving solidarity to the state. The optimist will say that on the whole there has been not only progress, but wonderful, astounding progress; and that progress is still the direction the world is taking. While no intelligent man should become a reactionist, he may yet well pause before he would pull down the scaffolding (by which I mean the forms of religion) which yet is necessary to uphold the feeble morals of humanity; and the strong rule of a central government, the losing of whose hold might permit horrible anarchy to have sway. Given the conviction that the people are not competent for self-government, the inevitable conclusion is that a strong government of a monarchical form is essential to prevent rapine and the dissolution of the social bond. Only last month Bradlaugh's bill for the abolition of oaths passed the House of Commons, but it is a question whether these delegates of the people are not in advance of their constituents on this subject. Here is an advertisement taken from a London paper this year, which is notorious evidence that the advanced English nation thinks it quite the proper thing for such a one as a licentious Lord Lonsdale to have at his disposal the power to sell the right to an Anglican priest (we would call him a Protestant Episcopal clergyman) to perform the religious functions of certain congregations—the presentation of the pastorship, or advowson, being within his gift.

FOR SALE, ADVOWSON, in Suffolk. Diocese of Norwich. Population 330. Large rectory house, in good order, glebe house and 32 acres. Net income £356. Endowments for charitable purposes £120 per annum. Photographs may be inspected, and further particulars obtained from Clark, Woodcock, and Ryland, No. 11 Lincoln's-inn-fields, W. C.

Now if the British people are not shocked by such an advertisement, whereby is offered to the highest bidder the religious ministry of a church—a parish whose total population is glowingly set forth to be only 330 souls, so that it is evident the incumbent can have a jolly lazy time—if, I say, the British are not ready to pull down an established church in which such things are permitted, we must not be surprised at the slavish adherence of Catholics to the faults of their system.

A drunken Irishman in my employ who could not even read was yet a bitter Protestant. John was caught up by a Methodist excitement, and joined class. Under a good deal of feeling and with great interest in this fine fellow (which he was, barring his drinking habits), I went to his class leader and said, "I hope John will make an intelligent profession of his faith."—"Oh, well," said Mr. McGuire, "you mustn't expect too much intelligence of people who ain't intelligent."

Well, now, that is what is the matter with too many people over here. John would not perhaps have burnt a Catholic to death, but I think he and others like him in a time of excitement would have been quite ready to beat one to death, and this statement is proved by the treatment of the Catholics a year or so ago in Belfast by the Orangemen; by the treatment of the Jews in Germany and of the Salvationists in England. These things prove that religious tolerance is by no means understood over here; much less is the reasonable rule of the majority in politics understood. Even the intensity of partisan politics of fifty years ago in the United States would be perhaps incomprehensible to the young people of to-day. I say nothing of the bitterness of feeling which crushed out all Union men in the South, and which was felt toward Copperheads in the North, because then we were embittered by war. But I do say that that bitterness and attempts to crush out adversaries by lawful and unlawful means, would perhaps render Europe a scene of internecine warfare, if the strong hand of monarchical government did not hold the people in check. The Swiss are competent for self-government, and the British also, for they have been trained to it for centuries; perhaps the French and the Scandinavians are, but I much doubt if any other nationality in Europe is. We must not expect too much political intelligence from people who are not intelligent on political matters. But progress is being made everywhere and with great rapidity; therefore without being reactionary one may be wisely conservative, and always hopeful of the best.

EXAMPLES TO AVOID.

In the words of the poet, "the lives of great men all remind us we can make our lives sublime," but of late we are reminded by the doings of great men that they may as carelessly trifle with their lease of life as ordinary folk. In the early part of April, ex-Senator Conkling was for many days making a close fight with death and finally succumbed to inflammation of the ear resulting from exposure to a blizzard of March 12. He was a robust man, rather beyond the prime of life, who doubtless exulted in the vigorous long walk he took in the face of the storm, but it was a very incautious and impolitic thing for him to do, putting him on a par with those people who are not credited with sense enough to go in when it rains. From across the sea the cable brings the news of the death of Matthew Arnold, an English poet, at the age of sixty-six from disease of the heart. He was aware of his weak heart, having been cautioned by his physician not to indulge in any sudden or severe exertion, but in a too happy mood and feeling his oats, as it were, he ran and jumped a fence and soon after fell dead. It is quite probable that had he been content to hold himself to the pace of an old man, he might have lived ten years longer. Very few are built on the one-horse chaise principle, and those of us who would live long and prosper would do well to learn our limitations and live within them.

Another recent ill-fated example of recklessness was that exhibited by ex-Governor Dorsheimer, who, tempted by the balmy weather of Savannah, Ga., about the first of April, went driving without an overcoat, was taken with pneumonia, and died in a few days. Thus quickly was the life snuffed out of a man of robust body, large frame, and vigorous constitution, though at the time a little below par from overwork.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

"THE HOLY SABBATH."

Dr. Paley says: "The opinion that Christ and his apostles meant to retain the duties of the Jewish Sabbath, shifting only the day from the seventh to the first, seems to prevail without sufficient reason, nor does any evidence remain in the scriptures that the first day of the week was thus distinguished in commemoration of our Lord's death."

Erasmus, Zuingle, Bucer, Knox, Beza, Grotius, Jeremy Taylor, Barclay, Penn, and a host of other lights of the church, were of the same opinion; the testimony being limited only by lack of time to take it.

We will put but one more witness on the stand:—

Archbishop Whately thus testifies: "There is no injunction to sanctify one day in seven throughout the whole of the Old Testament."

"We never hear of keeping holy some one day in seven, but the seventh day, the day on which God rested from his labor. Surely if we allow that the tradition of the church is sufficient to change the express command of God, we are falling into one of the most dangerous errors of the Romanists. But in the present case there is not even any tradition to the purpose. It is not merely that the Apostles left us no command perpetuating the observance of the Sabbath, and transferring the day from the seventh to the first.

"Such a change certainly would have been authorized by their express injunction, and by nothing short of that; since an express divine command can be changed or altered only by the same power, and the same distinct revelation, by which it was delivered.

"But not only is there no apostolic injunction—than which nothing else would be sufficient—there is not even a tradition of their having made such a change. Nay more. It is abundantly plain that no such change was ever made by them."

If, then, it be demonstrated that there is not a particle of authority in the Christian scriptures, the example or teaching of Christ, his apostles, the church fathers, the reformers or divines, the question may arise: "How came we to have a Christian Sabbath at all, and an arbitrary law enforcing its observance?"

6. Its origin. From the time of Christ forward, the institution of the Sabbath—so far as observed at all for three hundred years—was only held sacred by those mongrel saints, half Jewish, the other half Pauline, Apollonian or Christian as chance or caprice dictated, but it was the seventh day of the week and not the first that was observed.

Neander says: "They know little about religion who do not know that the seventh day of the week did remain and was observed as the Sabbath for three hundred years this side of our Savior's passion." Constantine the Great (A. D. 321) becoming the head of the church—by murdering all his relatives that stood in his way—added a heathen title to it, borrowed from the pagan calendar, and changed the time from the seventh to the first day of the week. He decreed: "That on the venerable day of the Sun all judges, all towns people, and all trades people should rest, while those in the country, including all agricultural people, could continue their work as on other days." And from that date it has been called Sunday, not in commemoration of Christ crucified, but in idolatrous observance of the day of the sun, as it had been for ages before in the Roman empire.

From Constantine to Martin Luther, the institution had but little history. The holy Catholic church had but little use for it, and less consideration. The Reformation had no respect for it; nor was it until the fiery zeal of Puritanism in the 16th century resurrected its dry bones and clothed them with the flesh of bigotry and fanaticism that it had any consideration as a Christian institution.

The first English statute imposing any restraint or duty upon the observance of the day was passed in 1558 during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and that law required all persons, who had not a reasonable excuse, to resort every Sunday and other holiday to the church for divine service and worship.

A FREETHOUGHT MAYOR.

I ran up to Racine some weeks ago to see my friend M. M. Secor, mayor of that extensive and beautiful manufacturing centre, widely known as an outspoken Liberal, and for many years a subscriber to the Boston Investigator and a vice-president of the American Secular Union. Mr. Secor served as the executive of Racine some years ago, but the burden of his enormous trunk business compelled him to retire. Its citizens do not forget that during his former term Racine laid its first street-car track, paved its first streets, and built its beautiful city hall; and when the work was liable to stand uncompleted for lack of funds, Mayor Secor drew his check for about $20,000 and pushed the work to speedy completion, trusting entirely to the honor of the city for his pay. The beautiful illuminated clock which adorns the city hall tower is the gift of Mayor Secor to the city of Racine. It is little wonder that he has lately been re-elected under peculiarly gratifying circumstances, more as a popular and unsought expression of the honor and esteem in which he is held and as a condemnation of his cowardly would-be assassins, than from any political aspirations on his part.

Mr. Secor is the very embodiment of nervous energy—an immense battery of electric and intellectual force, as any one who sat in his office would see from his manner of disposing of his money and mail and conducting his vast business. It is evident that he taxes his mentality to its utmost, and I am pleased to learn that his business will soon be transferred into a corporation, when Mr. Wifel, his brother-in-law, and others will divide his burden by taking upon themselves the care and control of separate departments. In addition to present duties he is building a fourth large factory. I had the pleasure of meeting in the office his daughter, Miss Louise Secor, a most charming young lady—the possessor of both beauty and intelligence, and a thorough-going Freethinker, who in time past made telling retorts to her Christian teacher's invitation to attend church.

A pilgrimage through the various factories and store-houses revealed such a labyrinth of trunks of all sizes, colors, quality, and in every stage of the process of evolution, that it was simply bewildering—tons of hardware and trimmings, acres of leather and lumber and other supplies representing a vast amount of invested capital. To the writer, the most cheering circumstance was the cordial greeting Mr. Secor had for any of his two hundred workmen with whom we came in contact. There was something truly democratic about it. Mr. Secor's business motto is "what is worth doing is worth doing well," and his trunks are justly celebrated for the thoroughness of their construction. Some years ago he took in his employ as bookkeeper a countryman who, when he left the house of his benefactor, had an unusual amount of money for a man of moderate salary, and started in business as a rival of Mr. Secor, to which the latter paid little or no attention. Failing to perceptibly injure his former employer, he concocted a fiendish attempt to assassinate Mr. Secor. It will be remembered that about the time of the Haymarket tragedy in Chicago, Mr. Secor's life was attempted by a dynamite bomb placed so as to explode when he would drive his carriage into his lawn. This dangerous bomb fortunately, by some means, exploded and injured the would-be assassin, who, it was pretty clearly proven, was the hired instrument of his rascally rival, and who is now serving a term in state prison. The chief culprit is still at large, through some legal technicality, but the people of Racine have just passed their vote of condemnation on him and that of confidence in the energy and honesty of the city's benefactor, M. M. Secor.

E. A. STEVENS.

PERFECTLY CONSISTENT.

"I think you will at once admit that the Bible is a good book; that it has exerted a moral influence on the race, and that it is unlike any other book, in that it is perfectly consistent in all its parts, never contradicting in one place a statement made in another."

Thus writes a "state evangelist," and asks a reply.

Now I do not admit that the Bible is a "good book," though I acknowledge that the good woven in with its sayings, by the aid of millions of teachers and preachers and of law and popular opinion, has probably caused it, in the past, to exert a moral influence far above that with which its own intrinsic merits would endow it.

But one could take its immoral, base, and cruel sentiments, and continually inveigh against them for age upon age and make it out one of the worst of books, far easier than it has been made to play the role of the best of books.

It is simply a conglomerate medley of fables, legends, poems, history, and theology, gathered up here and there and massed into one volume and voted by a corrupt priesthood to be called a holy and divine book. Could the masses have it in its original form it would be at once condemned as immoral, vulgar, and horribly obscene. Even as it now is, with all the doctoring which has been dared to be done to it, no person can be found who has enough reverence for it to enable him to read certain passages of it aloud to a mixed audience of men and women.

As to contradictions, if you call black white and ice boiling water, probably you may see consistency and unity in all its parts. Take, for instance, the following passages and make them harmonize:

"Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer," and "If any man come to me and hate not his father . . . and brethren."

"All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." "He that hath no sword let him sell his garment and buy one."

"Resist not evil. Bless them that curse you." "Whosoever shall not receive you nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or that city shake off the dust of your feet."

"But those mine enemies, which would not that I should reign over them, bring hither and slay them before me" (Luke xix. 27).

These are only a few of hundreds of palpable contradictions and inconsistencies. Take Christ, your great boss hero of the old Jew book, and what is his real character? I think any unbiased reader would call him a ranting fanatic who cursed all who did not believe in him and accept him as guide, ruler, and king. That he did not love his enemies or do good to them is proved by innumerable passages. He not only wanted them murdered but desired to see it done right at his feet, that he might gloat over their dying agonies. When he was in a tight place he could be a very Uriah Heep for humbleness, but it was only an outward semblance whereby he could gain the better his own ends. He strolled about like a tramp, living on the honest industry of others. This is the true Bible picture of him when divested of the false glamour a false priesthood has invested it with.

Despite the millions of money, the tireless efforts of millions of its worshippers, and of law and public patronage, the old book is now nearing its end as a divine record, rule, or guide. As a relic of the past it will always have its value. But as the people's book it is past its prime and is fast losing its prestige. If a scholar, a naturalist, or a scientist should refer to it as proof of some disputed point in art, nature, or philosophy, he would be considered almost ridiculous by any modern thinker.

It is a useless labor to try longer to prop up the old mythology or the book that built it. Cast it all away and work for human welfare and human progress. Work for the good of the race, here and now. Work with tongue and pen, and thy whole self, for good work is the life and light of the world.

Not in indolence shall man advance,
But by his own endeavor, power, and glance,
By character, by labor's changeful zest,
By all his being struggling for the best;
And he shall work in sacrifice and love;
Like serpent wise but harmless as the dove;
Seeking with skilful hands for all things good;
Yet not for self but for the multitude;
So shall the rich reward o'er-bloom the whole,
And every home be jeweled bountiful;
While each one shall be free in wise control,
The voice of all shall in one mandate roll,
Of noble government and serene desire.

FREETHOUGHT, published by our friends, Putnam & Macdonald, in San Francisco, comes regularly to hand. Until this week our lecturing and other engagements have prevented our reading the paper as attentively as we would desire. However, we have just gone through several numbers, and the result is that we sincerely congratulate the editors on producing a good Free-thought journal. It is, of course, well edited and its "get up" is "correct." It ought to, and no doubt will, do good work in the West. The poetical fervor of Putnam and the solid practical ability of Macdonald are just the alliance required in the management of a Secular paper. We wish our hearty co-workers every success.—Secular Thought.

AFTER the lecture at Irving Hall, on the 27th, a fine oil painting 22x28 inches in size, painted by Mrs. K. Faust, will be disposed of for the benefit of Uncle John Dukenfield, 78 years of age, who is still suffering from an accident sustained some two years ago. Tickets will be sold on the picture at 25 cents each, the drawing to be held on the above date. The painting hangs in FREETHOUGHT office.

THERE is a town in Mississippi where the law is enforced in a rather peculiar manner. A man who ran a blind tiger under the nostrils of the law, reformed suddenly and announced that he had become an evangelist. The next day he was arrested for preaching without license.—Arkansas Traveler.

Liberty.

O Liberty, so great, so grand !
 Thy meaning hath no bound
 Except in infinite command,
 The same wherever found.

To do what's right in every case
 To every one around,
 At any time in every place,
 Let liberty abound.

The creeds of parties have been read,
 But they do not supply
 The many millions to be fed,
 Who on their strength rely.

Then write for them another creed,
 The creed of Liberty,
 Which will supply their urgent need
 In their adversity.

Let senseless tyrants bend the knee
 To those the true and brave,
 Who raise the cry of liberty
 And dig the tyrant's grave.

Let men do right in every case,
 Co-operate with good,
 Then all may have a happy place
 And be supplied with food.

Let blessed hope and good design
 Drive crime into the sea,
 Let kings and tyrants all resign,
 And hail our jubilee!

L. C. HILL.

CORRESPONDENCE.On the Trail.To the Editors of Freethought:

April 11 I took the steamer for Astoria, where I arrived without mishap and proceeded to make arrangements for some Liberal lectures, but found I would have to pay $5 per night for giving illustrated, scientific, and Freethought lectures (who ever heard of such a thing before in free and intelligent America ?); besides, I was asked $7.50 per night for the use of "Liberty Hall," built and owned by Spiritualists. Well, after traveling from the Atlantic to the Pacific, I found out that "liberty" did not mean liberty, and that you cannot speak in "Liberty Hall" unless you take out license just the same as the sixty-one saloons that fill up over half of the business places of this city at the mouth of one of the biggest rivers of our country. Verily this city of "Salmon" by the sea needs more "spirit communications," more educative lectures, and Freethought culture to uncap the skulls of these city officials and let in a few shimmering rays of light from the sun of wisdom upon their gelatinous brains. St. John, the apostle of the Prohibitionists, came to Astoria while I was here, receiving $50 for his lecture, delivered in saintly, orthodox style, but it cost just 50 cents at the door to hear him. Another new thing under the sun! Great is St. John the Second! By invitation I went up into upper Astoria and gave two lectures in a hall over a saloon, to good audiences, which were well received, and seed was sown for a harvest for future gathering.

Here at Astoria, I met Wm. Chance and wife, who were all that the name Liberal indicates.

Comrade Chance has been either city marshal or postmaster for twenty-one years, and has sold and given away thousands of dollars' worth of Ingersoll's and other Freethought literature. Our brother may have "come by chance," and truly is chance, and takes his chance of a through ticket to the everglades of the Infidel's paradise, never expecting to get a harp or a crown for the deeds done while here in the body. A more friendly greeting or genial welcome I never met than at the home of these two whole-souled, contented, and happy Liberals.

I went by steamer up the river to the lumbering and salmon fishing town of Skamockawa, where I labored a week leveling up the brains and warming up the hearts of its rough but jolly, whole-souled, non-orthodox, hardworking pioneers, who are liberal to a fault, both with money and in religion. They all took hold and helped seat and fix up a hall over the sleeping room where the mill men "bunked."

I found comrades Thornburg & Brooks, of the Skamockawa Hotel, and owners of the principal store, meat market, etc., Ingersoll men to the core, with no use for the "blood of the lamb," fat cows, steers, pigs, etc., for it was all allowed to go off in the turbid waters of Skamockawa creek, where its atoning powers were all lost, judging by the cuss words I heard from the boat of some angry fishermen a little further down the stream.

I met a goodly number of our ungodly folks here, all noble and true—the Brookses, father and son, Thornburg, the Browns, Bowmans, and others whose names I fail to recall.

Skamockawa is a queer town with a queer name. The main street is a creek or slough twenty feet deep, and the farmers and loggers come and go in their boats to do their trading. It looks strange to an "inland man" to see the farmers' wives and buxom daughters coming, rowing a boat to bring in their butter and eggs and take back their groceries, calicos, ribbons, and "sich," evidently not afraid of the "rolling deep" or the flowing tide.

The lands here along the Columbia river and this creek are overflowed twice a day when the tide from old Pacific comes this way, so that the business houses, residences, etc., are all built up on stilts or piling, and the dash of the waves underneath shakes and jars the building. I was well remunerated for my labor here. I again took boat for Cathlamet, in a rainstorm, amid the many good-byes of the Skamockawaites. Long may they live. D. C. SEYMOUR.

A Contribution to the Cause.To the Editors of Freethought:*

I suppose I am one of the delinquent subscribers to your valuable Freethought journal, but I have been away from home since last fall, and did not learn of your new enterprise until quite recently. Inclosed herein find $5, for which please place my name on your list of subscribers for two years. The other dollar give to the poor, and as I have never witnessed a single case where men started a newspaper in a strange place with one dollar ahead, I feel that you are no exception to the general rule; so this money is sent for the success of FREETHOUGHT.

Yesterday I read the Gospel of Nicodemus, on the Infancy of Jesus, as laid down by Voltaire. How we have been humbugged by those Biblical writers! To me the "Arabian Nights" are far more beautiful, and a thousand times more reasonable. Still I feel that those ancient writers are not to blame. They wrote to suit the place and time wherein they moved. But it is the believers in divine inspiration in the nineteenth century that I blame. If I had the power I would kick them all into heaven, just where they want to go. But I am satisfied if there is a hell, God would send them there to learn, since Adam learned more by his fall than by anything else. AMEDE BESSETTE.

Red Rock, Montana Ter.

A Letter from Topolobampo.H. W. Faust:*

DEAR FRIEND—We have the finest crop of barley I ever saw. Our crops are looking very well. We have all the vegetables we want, and will soon have green corn. We are now threshing beans. We had bad luck with our potatoes. I took a ton last August. They were mostly planted, but a rain came and flooded the ground, and so we lost most of them. Another difficulty we had to encounter was the imperfect seed sent to us. Some of our crops we had to plant over two or three times. But we have done very well.

I am glad to learn of the efforts being made by you in San Francisco in the move for a vessel. I think it will come by and by.

We have not purchased any land yet, that we certainly know of, though the word has come of the purchase of 15,000 acres about ten or fifteen miles above Vegaton. We shall know soon. We have as much as we can do at present, in preparing shelter and saving our crops here. We had a visit from Canedo, governor of Sinaloa. He was much pleased with us and took quite an interest in our movement. After his return, he sent us Spanish school-books, slates and other supplies for our school, which were very desirable.

Our colonist are all well and much pleased with the country. The young people are to have a picnic to-day under a large and magnificent banyan tree, and have invited me to go with them. Fraternally, E. J. SCHELLHOUS.

Prose Poems and Selections. It contains, besides the celebrated "Decoration Day Oration," and all the famous tributes, many other gems selected from the speeches, arguments, lectures, table-talks and day-to-day conversations of the author. Fine steel portrait and autograph facsimile. Price, in cloth, beveled edges, gilt back and side, $2 50.

Photographs of Col. Ingersoll. Cabinet, 40c.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. A. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

ARGUMENT

...BY...

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL,

...IN THE...

TRIAL OF C. B. REYNOLDS,

...FOR...

"BLASPHEMY,"

AT MORRISTOWN, NEW JERSEY,

Stenographically Reported and Revised by the Author.

Handsome 8vo, 86 pp., beautiful type, fine paper. Price, cloth, 50 cents; paper cover, 25 cents.

In this argument MR. INGERSOLL again shows his great forensic powers. All his heart and brain are in it. It is one of his greatest productions: It is his chosen field of intellectual combat, and we see him as the splendid champion of human liberty and the rights of man. His love of freedom and justice, hatred of tyranny and chains, sympathy for the oppressed, misguided, and enthralled, his courage and candor, have in this Argument full scope of expression, and he makes grand use of the opportunity. Such a flood of light—of eloquence, legal learning, logic, pathos, poetry, and patriotism, is not often poured out in a Court of justice.

The many calls for this argument in complete and accurate shape have led to this publication, as revised by Mr. Ingersoll himself. All other publications are the merest fictions—reprints from meager and misleading newspaper references.

Lawyers and advocates will find this the model of an address to a jury; statesmen and politicians a clear exposition of Constitutional rights and powers; and intelligent, patriotic, and free men and women everywhere, a Magna Charta of their rights.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - - MAY 26, 1888

A WRITER in a Los Angeles paper says he is "told that Colonel Ingersoll is the subject of ecclesiastical criticism." We are prepared to say that the information is reliable.

It is learned from Rome that the Irish manifesto condemning the pope's interference with politics causes no apprehension at the Vatican. Why should it? The pope knows his hold upon the superstitions of the Irish people, and he knows that so long as his spiritual authority is conceded his political power will be undiminished. He is a foxy old impostor.

THE conventional Sunday-school angel has received a shot from Art. Dan Beard, the artist and critic, in a lecture before the Art Students' League of New York, a week or so ago, the Sun says, "dwelt upon the absurdity of giving to the artistic angel the wings of a bird, showing by drawings the impossibility anatomically, and the absurdity artistically, of the conventional angel." Let the winged angel go. The angel without wings will still hold its place against all adverse criticism.

LAST winter the Chronicle printed an article on the Lick Observatory with the following head: "A Lick Trust Toy—Blundering Work on the Observatory—In Charge of Amateurs—Some of the Errors in Construction—A Shaking Pier and Useless Floor." We observed at the time that the shakiness in the matter was probably confined mainly to the Chronicle's sensational yarn; and now that paper volunteers the statement that "the buildings are the most thorough and complete that engineering skill, profiting by all the great observatories of the world hitherto built, could devise." The Chronicle is late in telling what everybody was convinced of all the time.

ONCE in a while, and even more frequently, something occurs to indicate that the aim of providence is not always to point a moral or adorn a tale of divine wrath. A case in hand is that of Elder James Quinter, for twenty years editor of the Gospel Messenger at Huntington, Pa., and president of the Normal College of that place. Elder Quinter attended a conference at Harter's Grove, North Manchester, Ind., and last Sunday he led in prayer. While upon his knees on the rostrum, in the center of a large tent, surrounded by an audience of three thousand people, his voice suddenly died away, and he fell forward lifeless. In his case it was apoplexy. If he had been an Infidel, divine providence would be accredited with the honor of being his assassin.

SALADIN, editor of the London Secular Review, in commenting upon the degraded condition of the families of boatmen along the English canals, says: "I do not wish to drag ethics down to depend absolutely upon how many cubic feet are devoted to its action; but I say truthfully and mournfully, there is no accommodation for morals." There is a chance for a broad application of this remark. Given a world in which want should be as hard to attain as plenty now is—a world in which no penalty should be attached to pleasure, where the following of the natural inclinations should lead to the greatest amount of happiness—and depravity could not exist. The fact is that now it is extremely difficult to be as good as you know how to be, and the reward, except an ideal one, is meager. "Honesty wears a rag; rascality a robe. The loving, the tender, eat a crust; the infamous sit at the banquets." The rooms are all filled when virtue asks for lodging.

NEWS AND NOTES.

For a change I went by river to Stockton. Leaving San Francisco at six o'clock, the steamer swept into the broad harbor, with its many islands, and winding shores adorned with farm houses, villas, and villages; and, as amid the rolling clouds the golden sunset glistened on the tall heights of the city, the waters, and the encircling shores that could be seen for twenty miles away, a gorgeous picture was presented to the view. As the boat sped up the bay and river, one could watch for hours the ever-varying scene, until the starlight took the place of sunlight and the faint moon, a silvery ribbon, was shining in the infinite dome.

Just as the sun rose over the horizon we landed at Stockton, the outlet of the vast San Joaquin valley, with fine residences and an air of steady industry that indicates a substantial growth and a brightening future. It is the county seat of San Joaquin county, which is in the heart of central California. The great San Joaquin river flows through it from north to south.

The county contains about 900,000 acres of tillable land. The soil is varied, consisting of sandy loam, black adobe, sandy red clay, and alluvial swamp land capable of the highest cultivation. There is no better section of California for the production of the choicest varieties of grapes. The bottom lands raise, without irrigation, alfalfa, potatoes, hops, corn, peanuts, flax, hemp, jute, chicory, vegetables, and all kinds of small fruits. The wheat lands can be made to produce almonds, apricots, pears, prunes, peaches, figs, etc. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars has been raised for the courthouse, and it will be one of the most imposing structures in the state. The San Joaquin Valley Agricultural Society has just completed a superb pavilion.

Stockton is the natural distributing point for a large territory.

The Southern Pacific railroad passes through the center of the county. A narrow gauge runs to the foot-hills of the Nevadas from Lodi, fourteen miles north of the city.

The San Joaquin river is navigable at all seasons for large steamboats. During the winter and spring months it is navigable for 150 miles south of Stockton. The tide rises and falls two feet at Stockton, and the waters of the channel are constantly in motion. Water for domestic purposes is procured from a depth of sixty to ninety feet.

Stockton is a city of 18,000 inhabitants, and is a manufacturing center. It is the principal grain storing point of the state, having a warehouse capacity of 150,000 tons. There is promise of natural gas for fuel. Coal from the celebrated Mount Diablo mines can be landed at $4 per ton. It will be seen that Stockton and the vicinity has many advantages, and in the race for prosperity will not be behindhand.

The Liberals of Stockton are always at the front. Their Paine celebration was one of the biggest of the year. The Avon Theatre was crowded, and hundreds turned away who could not gain admission. As it happened on Sunday evening the clergy were dreadfully rattled, and one young preacher got up an anti-Paine meeting for the occasion. But all the same he adjourned at 8:30 and with his whole flock went over to the Infidel gathering. It was too much for them. They wanted to know what was really going on.

W. F. Freeman, having traveled the world over, finds nothing better in all religions than the declaration of Paine: "The world is my country, to do good my religion." He is cosmopolitan in his ideas, but earnest in devotion to Freethought. Again I enjoyed the hospitality of his delightful family, where there is not a particle of superstition nor bigotry, even in favor of Freethought, but that generous Liberalism which embodies all that is of human interest.

My friend Gage met me first of all, but not early enough, as one year ago, to attend church, and so we had to forego that privilege and, instead, attend the baseball match, where the crowd goes every Sunday afternoon, much to the displeasure of the clergymen, who have preached against it and prayed against it, but to no avail. Their own church-members go and have a good time and cheer the combatants, and are not one bit afraid of the bonfires of the hereafter. This is the second baseball match I have seen. The first was in Chicago when my friend O'Neil won the colors. I don't get much time to see these brilliant sports, but evidently they make people happy. They stir the blood, and are quite a relief to the solemnity of the ecclesiastical games, which are played solely for the "benefit of the clergy."

Mr. Charles Haas gave me a glimpse of the beautiful country about Stockton. He has a ranch of two hundred acres, in the cultivation of which he finds recreation from the routine of business. He has planted this season twenty acres to grapes, and some of the cuttings of this year are bearing fruit—an extraordinary yield. Hitherto most of the land about Stockton has been devoted to wheat and barley, but it is now being rapidly transformed into vineyards and orchards.

Returning from my Sunday excursion I enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Haas and friends, and Mr. and Mrs. Gage, and so the time for lecture came on with every moment filled with pleasure.

The Avon Theatre was quite well filled. The audience was appreciative. At any rate, it stayed until I was through, and many friends remained to bid welcome—Mr. and Mrs. Loomis, who dip deep into Platonic thought, but forget not that the flower of philosophy is action; Mr. and Mrs. Pope, who came nearly twenty miles to attend the lecture; Mr. Fowler, the Chess brothers, R. M. Conley, Wm. Shine, W. G. Barr, I. W. Smith, H. T. Mozur, Geo. W. Blazo, and others.

Fourteen miles from Stockton is Lodi, in the midst of the great watermelon patch and rapidly improving fruit lands. Since I was here last year a great fire has burnt almost all the houses on the main street, mostly wooden structures. Fine brick blocks are now being built, and in every respect Lodi has a go-ahead appearance. Dr. Gordon, Mr. George Hogan, Geo. F. Cluff and sons, Mrs. Cluff, formerly of The Cyclone, one of the brightest reform papers in the state, now the Lodi Weekly News; her sister Mrs. Laura DeForce Gordon, whose eminent legal ability is well known; these make Lodi a very attractive spot for the Liberal pilgrim. A fair audience was present in the evening, and it only needs continued work to put Freethought at the front in this community. My friend Gordon is always busy, but he is ever ready to generously advance the cause. Mr. Geo. F. Cluff took me over a wide circuit of country on Tuesday morning, and I had an opportunity to see its abundant resources and promise. There is plenty of water, but even without irrigation the land produces well. Some of the wheat fields, even this dry season, with half crops all over the state, will yield about thirty bushels per acre. This is the result of deep plowing. Another dawning industry of this place is silk culture. Mrs. Cluff and sons are making experiments. I saw hundreds of worms at work weaving the cocoon, and there is no reason to doubt the success of the enterprise.

So Stockton and Lodi have many of the advantages of this world, and one need not travel across the Jordan to find a better country. The charming scenery, the equable and healthful climate, the productive soil, and central location make San Joaquin county one of the most desirable portions of California.

THAT CORNER LOT PREMIUM.

Those who desire to possess themselves of an inner angle of Mr. Worthing's real estate in San Diego have an opportunity to do so by gathering in subscribers to FREETHOUGHT. The offer of a $300 premium, which is the largest premium we ever heard of, is naturally a trifle staggering, and we are just beginning to regain sufficient composure to treat the subject with ordinary calmness. These large plans require mature deliberation in order to appreciate their magnitude. Suppose from one hundred to five hundred persons should make the experiment to see what they can do toward winning this prize. Suppose some found they could obtain but two or three subscribers each; nothing would be lost, and considerable would be gained. Others could get ten, fifteen, twenty, or twenty-five; and perhaps twenty-five would win it—perhaps a smaller number. No doubt the person who gets the lot will be surprised when he realizes how cheaply it has been won.

The aggregate of all these individual endeavors would be something startling. It would particularly startle the church power to realize that a Freethought journal had the largest circulation of any weekly on this coast. And that is what we are here for.

Let all who can do so make a bid for this prize.

MR. WENDLING, CHRISTIAN CHAMPION.

Geo. R. Wendling has been lecturing at Los Angeles on religious subjects, and on a recent evening he spoke of the life and labors of Voltaire. The lecture, as reported, doubtless by Mr. Wendling himself, in a local paper, oppresses the reader with a deep sense of fatigue. At one juncture he startled his hearers with the proposition: "And did it ever occur to you that all of the great Infidels were homeless, restless, vagrant men?" The thought is a striking one, and of course there is a meaning behind it or Mr. Wendling would not have put it forth. It means that Infidelity gives a man a disposition to wander, but we do not recall any conspicuous examples to illustrate it—save one. We do remember reading of a man said to have lived some eighteen hundred and fifty years ago. He had no permanent address, not even a boarding house. He had no father, and he repudiated his mother. He strolled over the hills of Palestine calling upon people to leave their homes and follow him, saying that those who refused to do so were unworthy to be his disciples. Mr. Wendling will recognize this description as applying to a person called Jesus Christ; and we would like to inquire what inference he draws from the fact that Christ was a vagrant.

Another of Wendling's assertions is this, that Infidelity destroys reverence, which he illustrates as follows:

"The Liberal League of Chicago were intending to place a statue in one of the parks of that city to Paine, but let them write the word Thomas in letters so large that they would span the city, and yet to the succeeding generations the man would be known as simply Tom Paine. In after years a few followers might say Robert, but the great majority would always say Bob Ingersoll."

Here is another case in which Mr. Wendling by his illustration proves exactly the opposite of his proposition. Freethinkers venerate the memory of Thomas Paine. They do not speak of him as "Tom" Paine. No Freethinker who respects himself and respects the great champion of Freethought will allow himself to habitually refer to Ingersoll as "Bob" Ingersoll. The fact that Christians use these terms merely shows, not that Freethinkers are deficient in reverence, but that Christians are lacking in common politeness. Thomas Paine's services to this country placed every patriot under obligation to him. Colonel Ingersoll's gifts of eloquence and genius, and his example as a man and an American, make him the pride of the nation, the ideal public and private citizen. Both men are above attack and above pious insult. They dignify the names they bear. A meaningless nickname does not hurt them: it simply gives us the measure of the one who uses it.

Something more than small, mean slurs upon Freethinkers is needed to raise the humbug called Christianity into any near relation to truth.

THE CLUBBING LIST.

When we next publish the names of those who have enrolled themselves in Mr. Stone's list, we shall put that of Mr. John Riggan, of Los Angeles, among them if he does not object. He has more than paid for the distinction.

Mr. Nathan Woolsey, of Messina, has made his first payment and forwarded the names.

Mr. Stone has his word of encouragement in another column. He announces his intention of winning Mr. Ranford Worthing's $300 corner lot in San Diego. The fact that others have expressed the same determination gives the matter an aspect of interesting uncertainty.

Concerning the Clubbing List we will say, as we have said before, that there are one hundred Liberals in our mind who could join it with no further inconvenience than would be involved in writing us to that effect, and appending their signatures to the necessary slip of paper. They will ultimately do this, of course, for the sake of repose if for no other reason; because until they do so, we shall continue to rasp their consciences as with a file.

FREETHOUGHT LECTURE IN OAKLAND.

We go to press in season to apprise our Oakland friends that Mr. S. P. Putnam lectures at the Medical College Hall, Clay street, Oakland, on the evening of Friday, May 25, at 7:30 o'clock, subject, "Science and Theology." The Zither Club of Oakland will afford entertaining music.

Mr. Putnam goes to Oakland upon this occasion, at the invitation of Mr. Schou, to fill the lecture engagement left vacant by the unexplained absence of Mr. Reynolds.

NEXT SUNDAY EVENING'S LECTURE.

At Irving Hall, 139 Post street, next Sunday evening, the 27th, Mr. S. P. Putnam will deliver a lecture on "The American Republic." It is hoped that every reader of FREETHOUGHT in the city will be present, and as many more as can be persuaded to attend.

Tickets at 25 cents each may be obtained at this office or at the door of the hall. The lecture will begin at 8 o'clock.

MR. STONE'S EARNESTNESS.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I am very much pleased with the letter of Brother Worthing in your last issue, for it seems to me he feels just as I do in regard to this matter, and exactly voices my sentiments when he says he has "an earnest desire for the promulgation of freedom from the enslaving thralldom of the church," and it has the true Liberal ring when he says, "Without any expectation of gain, or hope of reward, I stand ready to give the lot, which is worth $300 to-day, in any way that will furnish the largest number of readers of FREETHOUGHT for the next year."

My $20 club list does not seem to grow very fast, and whether I succeed in getting it up or not, I now give you and your subscribers notice that I am going for that corner lot in real earnest, and if I don't win it, it will be because I can't find Liberals enough who will read the paper and take sufficient interest in it to pay the whole or a part of the subscription price. I believe, as Mr. Worthing suggests, that those who pay something for it will be more likely to read it.

With me the case stands just this way. I have never yet done anything for the promulgation of Liberal ideas, nor am I capable of doing much. I can neither write nor speak in a manner to instruct Liberals or convert bigots, and, to tell you the truth, I have no ambition or desire to try to do either; and yet I have an intense desire that the one class should be instructed and the other converted. I know of no other way to accomplish this so successfully as by helping to build up a strong Liberal journal on this coast, that shall have an audience of thousands listening to its teachings every week, and one that shall command the respect even of its enemies; one that will be a great, though silent, educator, continually doing the work of many lecturers, and one whose work will continue when its present proprietors and readers shall have no further personal interest in it.

The temptation is terribly strong to say more, but I will resist it, for I believe those who would be influenced by what I would say will understand my thought without its being further expressed. This will be the last your readers will hear from me until you can inform me that the club of one hundred has been worked up by you, or until they are informed that I have won the corner lot in San Diego.

H. P. STONE.

Oakland, May 19, 1888.

C. SEVERANCE, of Los Angeles, writes to the Times of that place to say: "The histories of the world may be searched for records of oratory, and the present may bring forward its greatest orators, but Ingersoll stands pre-eminent among the dead and the living. There has been but one Shakespere, there is but one Ingersoll; and, though most of this generation, with eyes blinded by bigotry and prejudice, refuse to recognize his genius and greatness because of his enmity to popular creeds and mind-enslaving superstitions, the future will do him full justice, and millions who are yet to wake from the silence of a past eternity, and come upon the scene of action, will find the world better and more humane because of his having lived. In his eulogy of Conkling is found one of the grandest tributes ever given a worthy and deserving brother man; and all he uttered in his peerless and unapproachable manner being stamped with truth and heartfelt sincerity, it stirs and thrills the reader, though thousands of miles from the sound of his voice. It was a master effort, and adds another increase to his growing fame, which has spread the circuit of the world and made his name immortal. Long live Colonel Ingersoll! whose words once applied to another are fully merited by himself: 'He is the grandest combination of heart and brain beneath the flag.'" These are our sentiments eloquently expressed.

We should have taken pleasure in being with our subscribers W. S. Ray and Captain Jenks on board their new steamer, the Julia H. Ray, when she was launched last Saturday morning. Only failure to receive the card of invitation in season prevented it. Everything, we are glad to learn, passed off successfully, and the Julia H. showed herself to be an able boat. She will make trips from Noyo to San Diego, from there to Hueneme, and thence to this port, under the command of Captain Jenks. Good luck to her!

WATSON HESTON's cartoon in the Truth Seeker of May 12 is a good one. It illustrates the text (Ex. xxiv, 10, 11), "And they saw the God of Israel. And upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand; also they saw God, and did eat and drink." The picture gives a tent marked "Greatest Show on Earth!" into which the children of Israel are passing. A prophet plays the grinding organ at the door, and the ubiquitous monkey does the tight-rope act from the top of the centre-pole to the ground. It is great.

THIS remark from a private letter of one of the best known Liberal writers in the country is encouraging: "FREETHOUGHT is making friends at a more rapid rate than has any new paper I know of for the last thirty years, and I have had a chance to know."

THE American Idea, published at Liberal, Mo., promises to give its readers, in forthcoming numbers, a history of the Bouton spiritual manifestations which converted so many residents of Liberal, including Mr. Walser. The history will be written by the fraud Bouton himself.

THE Sacramento Daily Bee republishes in full the account of the Goodell golden wedding which appeared in FREETHOUGHT for May 12.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Louise Michel, the woman Anarchist of Paris, who was shot at and wounded while delivering an address, appeared in court the other day and asked that her assailant might be acquitted, which was done.—A dispatch from Rome says: A party of anti-clericals came into collision with a religious procession at Banca Wednesday, May 16. A fight arising, the military was called out and the soldiers were compelled to fire upon the mob. Several persons were killed.—The lady managers of the Children's Hospital and Training School for Nurses have footed up their accounts and found that the three readings given in this city by Charles Dickens, Jr., netted the hospital $550. The ladies paid Mr. Dickens $750 and half his expenses.—The London police report the discovery of a Clan-na-Gael conspiracy to assassinate somebody. Further details and early arrests are promised.—The floods on the Mississippi are abating, but many people are left destitute.—The emperor of Germany is improving. Dr. McKenzie says there is a possibility of his recovery.—Frank Marsden, the well known dramatic author, committed suicide at New York last Saturday. Family troubles caused the act.—A great charitable and educational institution is soon to be founded in San Diego. One hundred acres of the public park in that city have been donated as a site for the projected establishment, $750,000 having been pledged. Work has already been commenced, and it will not be long before an institute will be completed, comprising a gymnasium, lecture room, concert hall, parlors, library, employment bureau, debating clubs, class rooms, and ultimately a manual training school, kindergarten, domestic training school, and a higher technological department.—Nearly a million slaves are liberated by the new emancipation law in Brazil. All the slaves now on coffee plantations are required to remain there until the next coffee crop is gathered, but in the meantime they are to receive a small rate of wages from their former owners, and shall not be locked up in their quarters as formerly. The owners receive no compensation for their liberated slave.—There were 118 deaths in San Francisco last week.—The Sunday-school of the First Presbyterian church picnicked last Saturday on Angel Island. Goat Island, of course, would have been less appropriate for the Presbyterian lambs.—The fund for the national monument to General Grant at New York grows very slowly. At least $120,000 will need to be added to the $130,000 already raised before the projected memorial can be erected.—The war scare in Europe is made the basis of a demand on the part of the chiefs of the war and navy departments of England for an appropriation of $60,000,000 to be used in providing national defenses.—Senator Stanford will go to Europe for his health.—Benjamin M. Lawrence and his son, Franklin, mixed in the Diss de Bar investigation as "Dr. Lawrence & Son," have decided to sue the New York papers for libel, placing the damages at $800,000.—Josie Mansfield, the woman whose relations with James Fisk brought him to his death at the hand of Stokes, died in Beverly, N. J., last week.—Religious services at the Congregational church in Knoxville, Tenn., were diversified last Saturday by one of the members being fatally shot by another, whose wife the victim had slandered.—A Hartford, Conn., Sunday-school teacher named Ida Spaulding is to marry her Chinese pupil, Wah Lee. Mr. Wah has cut off his pigtail and dresses like a human being.—Owing to the new law, last Sunday was a dry day in St. Louis, and many people left the city to enjoy the privilege of drinking beer.—The question whether or not Mr. Blaine is a presidential candidate remains unsettled. The last report says he has withdrawn his name, but does not decline to run. This makes the matter interesting to those who like to study the indefinite.—Immigration to this country from Europe continues to be large. More than 1900 landed at New York last Saturday.—San Francisco sports are jubilant over the defeat of Bruiser Glover, of Chicago, by Slugger McAuliffe, of this city.

OBSERVATIONS ON AFFAIRS IN NEW YORK.

Mayor Hewitt's "simple Christian," District Attorney Fellows, is not quite so popular as last November. Since January, not a criminal has been convicted as indicted. The courts have reprimanded the district attorney office for its stupidity and for its neglect. On the 7th not a case on the calendar in the recorder's court was ready. It has failed to subpoena witnesses. It has sent brainless clerks into the courtroom to argue law points with our most astute lawyers.

No attention is paid to the trial of Kerr, as no one expects a conviction. For carelessness, indifference, and criminal neglect the like was only seen in the days of Oakey Hall. The removal of Fellows is already hinted at. He has not a single qualification for the office—in intellect, or legal attainment, or moral responsibility.

It is generally thought that ex-Mayor Grace is the original Jacobs in this aqueduct investigation. It is a Democratic melee. It is Democratic dirty linen that is being washed. On dit the president is behind Grace, and that both are interested in Governor Hill's political death. Grace wants the nomination for governor, and Hill wants, no one knows just what—the governorship, or perhaps Cleveland's scalp. Smart as he is, he has doubtless overreached the mark this time. The factions are in for a "monkey and parrot picnic." The leaders are almost to a man opposed to the president, but they have got to eat crow this fall.

The agriculture department places the condition of winter wheat at 73, against 86 last year. The spring wheat in the Northwest is not all sown. The wheat crop for '88 is going to be a short one, and if any accident happens to the spring crop, we will not have out of this crop a bushel for export, east of the Rocky Mountains. The farmers are going to get better prices for their labor this year.

The public is just waking up to the fact that Ingersoll's eulogium on Conkling was a masterly production. On this occasion the public was stupidly indifferent to the words of a great orator on a great man. It took time for the beauty and potency of this oration to percolate and captivate. It has done both. It is generally thought Ingersoll had Blaine in his mind. There was nothing in common between the great senator and the "statesman from Maine." Conkling may have been arrogant, but he was honest.

Our legislature has adjourned after an almost useless session. The governor has vetoed the high-license bill. The Democratic members made it a party measure, and forced Hill to stand in with the rum party. Of course the Prohibitionists will run their own ticket this fall, thereby increasing the strength of the rum power. Just at this moment Hill is a thorn in the side of the administration. His power is an unknown quantity. Is he friendly to Cleveland? Is he ambitious for a renomination? If he was less a sphinx and more of a prattler, Washington would be delighted. But David keeps his counsel and worries his enemies. The governor was educated in the Tweed school, and does know something about the boys and their methods. There is no hypocrisy about him. He does not prate about civil service, and violate its spirit while talking, as Cleveland is doing. He is a politician, but an avowed one.

The administration is not meeting with great success in its attempt to infuse a speculative mania into Wall street by its bond purchases. The occupant of the White House is anxious for a revival of business, knowing full well that dull times will work against his re-election. But while threatening the manufacturer with bankruptcy by his free trade heresy, the speculator will not nibble at his worm. There is nothing in the situation to buy stocks on. Money is cheap and may be cheaper still, but we have seen Wall street go to the "bow-wows" on cheap money. At the present moment, the situation of the wheat crop does not indicate any surplus for export. If we have not the wheat to settle the balance due Europe, why, gold must go, and what would happen if we should ship $75,000,000. People are inclined to hug the shore, instead of spreading the canvas, but they may be tempted by temptation. The administration will warble sweet songs, will spread snares, to lure on and entrap the unwary. The exigencies of the Democratic party demand it.

The death of young Hatch is a solemn warning to men poaching on other men's property. Here was a man with a beautiful wife and four young children, not satisfied with his own. It seems the Pacific Coast has had some experience with this same woman as Libbie Stowell. There is nothing sweet about her reputation. Hatch we had known for years. In business a more honorable man never breathed, but he was an opinionated man and vain of his personal beauty. His house stands high in Wall street.

The Schofields and Ferris are objects of suspicion. The Hatch tragedy is still uppermost in the public mind, and will be thoroughly investigated. There is a mystery here. The testimony of the detective of the Coleman House has caused the arrest of Ferris. Why did he want this detective to see Hatch and Mrs. Schofield together? Was it to blackmail Hatch?

The weather is unusually cold, and spring backward.

New York, May 15, 1888.

PROHIBITION ESSENTIALLY ECCLESIASTICAL.

The discussion of Prohibition has been carried on somewhat extensively in the pages of FREETHOUGHT. It has been called the "burning question." It certainly needs to be thoroughly understood.

There is no question that the National Prohibition party is a church party. It is in favor of the authority of Almighty God in the Constitution of the United States. There is no question that the majority of Freethinkers are against Prohibition. A few earnest Liberals are Prohibitionists, but they do not represent the general conviction of the Freethought party. Why is this? There must be some logical and natural reason why these tendencies exist—why Prohibition becomes ecclesiasticism, and why Freethought becomes anti-Prohibition.

It is not because Freethinkers are in favor of intemperance or immorality. No one for a moment will make any such assumption as this. The reason lies in the very nature of Prohibition. It is essentially ecclesiastical. It is moral legislation and not municipal. No Freethinker can consistently be a Prohibitionist.

This is not a question of sentiment. It is a question of logic—of the "pure mathematics" of reform. A fair examination will show beyond a doubt the irreconcilability of Prohibition with the principles of universal liberty. It is not simply an infringement of personal privilege. It is a deadly assault on essential rights.

The first question to be settled is in regard to the function of the state. What is the state?

George Washington answers this: "The state is not persuasion, it is force." That is, the state is the organized physical force of society. It is not therefore a moral instrumentality, but a physical instrumentality. Its function therefore is purely physical. It can operate only in the domain of force. All moral legislation is therefore utterly wrong. The state is not organized for the moral welfare of the community. A paternal government is a despotism.

The state is simply a piece of machinery for a purely negative purpose; namely, the repression of crime. The state exists radically for no other reason. The existence of crime is its sole justification. If there were no crime there would be no state—no compulsion. All would be free and voluntary. The existence of a state under such circumstances would be a tyranny. It would be thoroughly unjust.

The state is a municipal, a police power—that, and that only. It is a necessary evil for the repression of a far greater evil.

What is crime? The forcible invasion of individual rights. Nothing else is crime. A violation of morality is not necessarily a crime. Immoral conduct is not always criminal conduct.

That conduct only is criminal which is a sheer physical invasion of individual rights.

This, then, is the function of the organized physical force of human society; to resist the physical or forcible invasion of rights. It is force against force; orderly, social force against disorderly criminal force. But the action of force must always be of its own kind. Physical force cannot by any possible transformation become a moral power. The state is force—physical force, and it can only be used against force. This is an undeniable principle of Freethought.

The further question now to be discussed is this: Is liquor selling a crime; that is, is it a forcible invasion of individual rights? The answer is simple and decisive. It is not a crime. There is no physical force used in the matter at all. The selling is voluntary, the buying is voluntary, the drinking is voluntary. There is not the slightest possible ground, therefore, for the state to interfere.

The only possible way that the Freethought Prohibitionist can justify state interference is to show that liquor selling is a crime.

It is averred that alcohol is a poison. On this point there is a profound difference of opinion among the highest authorities. It is a question that never can be settled, except by a vote of the majority. But if the majority vote can make alcohol a poison, it can as easily make Atheism a poison. Such questions must be decided by absolute knowledge, and not by opinions, however positive. Opinion should not be the foundation of a law, but fact.

Even if alcohol is a poison its sale cannot be prohibited. The state cannot prohibit the sale of any poison; it can only regulate the sale. But regulation is one thing and prohibition is another. To absolutely prohibit the sale of any unadulterated article, poison or anything else, is an act of tyranny.

Again, even if alcohol is a poison, that does not make wine, beer, or other liquors poisons. Alcohol is only one element with many. It is in almost all we eat and drink. There would be mighty poor living in this world if everything that contained alcohol was prohibited. Pure alcohol is not sold in saloons, and is not used as a beverage. So even if alcohol were a poison and its sale could be prohibited, that would not justify the prohibition of the sale of wine, beer, etc.; for these are not purely alcohol. Therefore it is impossible to show that the selling of wine, beer, etc., is a crime. It is absurd to maintain that it is a crime. Well, then, let us make it a crime, says the Prohibitionist.

Here is the gist of the whole question: Can a crime be made? It cannot. No law can make a crime any more than it can create a truth of mathematics. Crime is natural. It is made by the circumstances of the case, and not by statute. The statute can simply express law, the natural law; it cannot make it. If it is asserted that the majority can make law—create crime—then liberty is dead. If the majority can make one thing a crime, it can make another a crime. The minority is at the mercy of its dictation. If it can make the selling of liquor a crime, it can make the giving of liquor and the drinking of liquor a crime. If it can do this, it can make opinion a crime; it can make Atheism a crime. If legislation can create crime, it can make blasphemy a crime; Sabbath-breaking a crime; non-church going a crime; kissing one's wife on Sunday a crime. There is no logical stop anywhere, if it is granted that legislation can constitute an act a crime which in the nature of things is not a crime. Liquor selling is not a crime and cannot be made a crime except by the arbitrary voice of the majority. But to make by legislation artificial crimes of acts which are not naturally crimes, is contrary to every principle of Freethought. Liquor selling is not therefore a natural crime; it cannot be made an artificial crime. What, then, is the last resort of the Liberal Prohibitionist? It is the affirmation that liquor selling is the cause of crime.

This is not so. The distinction between cause and occasion of crime must be noticed. Liquor drinking never was the cause of crime; it is only the occasion. The match is not the cause of the explosion of gunpowder, but the occasion. Matches are lighted, but there is no explosion until the gunpowder is touched. But the cause is in the nature of the gunpowder. Millions of glasses of wine and beer are drank without any act of crime whatsoever, or any desire for crime. Sometimes, however, the intoxicating liquid comes in contact with a nature previously bad or diseased, and so occasions an explosion; but the real cause existed before a particle of liquor was touched. Only a small part of the crime of this world is occasioned by liquor. That which makes most crime is slavery, ignorance, and superstition. It is said that the percentage of crime among clergymen is greater than in other classes, and yet they are not addicted to drink. But even if liquor drinking were a cause of crime the state could not deal with it. The state can deal with the crime—not with the cause. If the state is granted one inch of authority beyond that of repressing crime, the fatal seed of despotism is planted in legislation. The state must stick to its business. If the drinker becomes a nuisance, restrain him as a nuisance, not as a drinker. If the noise of a saloon disturbs, the noise must be stopped, not the saloon. The state must keep strictly to its function. It must not do evil that good may come. The organized physical force of human society is such a tremendous factor that not even the slightest deviation from its original function should be allowed.

Intemperance is a fearful evil. So is the despotism of the state. In the anxiety to destroy the one, let not the other be made more powerful.

What makes intemperance? It is the misery of life—the struggle of life; the lack of joy; the lack of ideas, of thought. It is the emptiness of mind, the weariness of body. It is the intellectual slavery of the world; false social conditions; the degradation of labor.

Freethought is the noblest ally of temperance—temperance based on ideas; on knowledge; on liberty; on the exercise of all the faculties; the cultivation of the whole man. The state cannot deal with the disease. It cannot penetrate to the root of the matter. The infinite variety of human conduct and motive is beyond its reach. The state is negative, not constructive. It is for repression, not education. It is not the instrumentality of Freethought. There should be no application of force except when absolutely necessary. Prohibition is force—force used for moral purposes—and therefore it becomes by its very nature an ecclesiastical despotism.

THAT PILLER OF SALT AFFARE.

I've allus wondered why the Lord didn't want Lot and his wife to look back when he sent 'em flyin' out of Sodom, which city he dosed with fire and brimstone, 'cos he didn't like the way the Sodomers whooped it up on their stampin' ground.

It don't seem to me that it was 'cos he didn't want 'em to see the horrors of the conflagrashun, but wished to spare 'em the orfle site of people rithin' in the flames, 'cos the party that was bilt so he cood rain fire onto a city and burn up all the peeple, men, women, and children, and cattle and poultry, not lettin' a nussin' goslin' escape, shakin' brimstone over 'em while they was burnin', to maké it more interestin' for 'em, doin' this without any pangs and compunkshuns, wasn't the party that was bilt for considerin' the feelin's of two people, when he didn't care for the bodily torment of thousands which he was puttin' through a course of fiery sprouts seasoned with brimstone; not much, he wasn't!

Then what was it he corshuned 'em not to look back on the flamin' city for? What did he want'er rob 'em of the grand but orfle site for? It coodn't a been that he tho't they mite, like hosses will, run back into the flames, 'cos he'd orter knowed that mankin' ain't bilt that way, and besides he cood a stopped 'em. Then what was the p'remptry order given for? I'm blest 'f ever I cood make it out, and it's allus been a puzzler for me. Sometimes, for a mint, I have tho't that the Lord did want'er spare 'em the horrors of the site, but I give it up the next minit, when I come to think how reckless he allus was with fire and brimstone, and fluds and famines, and uther perogatives of a god, includin' plegs of lice and locusts and things. I gess we've got to set it down to a sudden freak of the Lord's, and let it go at that. He seemed to be fond of givin' strange orders at times, seemingly only for the sake of bein' obeyed, with red hot penalties if he wasn't.

Well, anyhow, they got the order and moseyed off, presumably on the dubble quick, but hadn't got far 'fore the old woman felt a hankerin' for a site of the burnin' city behind her, which got to be so strong, finally, that she coodn't resist the temptashun and looked, takin' the chances of what mite happen to her. Alas! the chances was orfle, as you all know, she bein' turned into a colum of salt! Poor old woman! What an orfle punishment that was, jest for disobayin' an order which was only a noshun, the disobayin' of which coodn't a hurt nobody!

There's one redeemin' feecheer about that transformation scene, it was done presto, change! quick as litenin', prob'ly the old lady never knowin' whether she was struck by litenin', or run over by a frate train! She was snufft out like a candle is; like a wurm when you tread on it, and the fust thing she knowed she didn't know nuthin'!

It was a paneless deth, and beat dyin' with the hydrofoby higher'n a kite, but it was deth all the same, and she wood rather lived, it's dollars to cents! Then agen it was ruff on the old gentlemen, robbin' him of his side pard so sudden; but as there's no account of his takin' on over the affliction—p'r'aps, after all, he didn't care much—I don't know why we shood.

It allus was a wonder to me that, as the old folks took their two dorters along with 'em, the gals didn't look round rether than the old lady. She'd oughter knowed the brash ways of the Lord, when he was disobayed, better'n the gals, and gone on, eyes front, if she'd had to bite her tung till it bled, to keep 'em so. I think she was very indiscreet, to say the leest. But then agen, if she didn't have will enuff to kurb her curiosity, was she to blame for it? God made her will and curiosity, makin' the latter the strongest, and knowed—well, of course he knowed that this thing was to come off from the start, and how cood it be otherwise? It seems to me if God knows everything ahead, that it can't be different, and everybody's got to do what's lade out for 'em, and ain't to be blamed or prased for what they do!

I'd like to know how long old lady Lot lasted as a piller of salt, exposed, as she must a been—no God-ridden cuss wood a dared to put a shed over her, for fear of God's rath, and no others wood, of course—to all sorts of weather, 'spesh'ly rain. And I'd like to know if she kept her shape in salt, same's in the flesh, or if she was simply a round piller of salt? And I'd like to know if the old gentleman ever went and put flowers and reaths onto her? I don't s'pose he did, 'cos he was so stuf with God wurship that he tho't it was all rite that she shood be made into a moniment of salt, the only instance on reckord, I gess, where a person stood up after deth as his own moniment—if some cood they'd last longer'n Mrs. Lot did, I'll bet, there bein' so much brass into 'em!

Poor Mrs. Lot! How I have weeped over her untimely end as a live woman! How many salt tears I've shed, and she vith-out a shed to cover her salt! It makes me sick to the stum-muck now, to think of it! For her there's no rest quiet cat in pece, which means peceto her ashes, 'cos she drizzled away to brine, and didn't make no ashes! There's more'n the rain that wood a kept her from lastin' very long, and that was cattle, which every one of 'em that come along wood a had a lick at her—they're orful fond of salt, you know! What a sad end of human womanhood, to be licked up by cows and camels and things!

Alas! Alas!

It seems when 'Squire Lot got away from Sodom he went to a small place near by, the Lord givin' him his word that he woodn't trouble the place for his (Lot's) sake; but the old man, God-fearin', as he was, feared to trust his God, and skipped with his dorters for the mountains, where he lived in a cave, and thereby hangs a tale told only in the sacred book, see Genesis xix, 31, 36. Suffis to say that the proceedin's was beastly in the extreme, and enuff to make a dog sick to think of 'em! Only in the sacred book is sech story's permitted to be circulated in respectable circles; and fortunat it is, said book bein' more for show than use, the readin' more honored in the breech than in the observance!

It is only fare to say that 'Squire Lot was lush at the time of these extraordinary proceedin's, and didn't know what was goin' on, his oldest dorter puttin' up the job; but, in the eye of the law, nowadays, his bein' lush ain't no excuse for him; so he must suffer in the estimashun of some folks, perticklerly the probishunists. After this Lot vanishes, the Lord appearin' to have no further use for him.

I didn't show this pece to the ed. of Gabe's Horn, 'cos he's a blowin' chump, and send it on to FREETHOUGHT.

ROBERT THE DEVIL, of Gabe's Horn.

LILIAN'S STORY.

The criticism may be raised by Lilian's contribution this week that it is not the customary time of year for Christmas stories. We may remark, however, that great works are never postponed on account of the weather, being not for the season but for all time. The title of the present narrative is

POOR MAY'S CHRISTMAS.

BY A. LILIAN ANDREWS, AGED 10.

"Oh! Oh!! Oh!!!!" said Mary Mathew as she looked in her little purse. Her father had promised to fill her purse with money to spend for Christmas. The Mathews' were very rich. They lived in a large house.

Mary looked again. She found fifty dollars in her purse. "I shall go shopping to-day." She ran to the window and said, "Yes, it is a fine day." Just then she saw poor little May Mason.

Mrs. Mason washed Mary's clothes. Little May was bringing some clothes. Mary ran to the door. "Come up to the nursery, May."

"I can't, I have to go right home."

That afternoon Mary went out. She bought a lot of things. Just as they were going home Mary said, "Mama, I am going to buy something for May. She never gets any toys."

"All right," said her mother.

So May got two dolls—twin dollies; the only difference was one had light hair and the other brown. She got a bed for them; a set of chairs and a sofa; a set of dishes with colored putty for food; a kitchen, and a lot of dresses and hats for the dolls.

May went to bed and cried because she thought she wouldn't get any toys, but when she awoke she saw her dresses. She was glad; found a velvet dress and a nice velvet coat and cap, and a nice warm dress for every day. But when she looked at the alcove of the window, she cried, Oh! Oh! Oh! Oh! Oh! Oh! O—h!! and she hugged each doll tight in each arm and ran to show them, and found her mother had a new silk dress and a nice bonnet and cloak; her father had a dress suit, and best of all an invitation to go to the theatre, and turkey and lots of nice things for dinner. And so May did have a nice Christmas after all.

SOME time this week the trustees of the James Lick estate will convey to the Board of Regents of the State University the Mount Hamilton Observatory. The buildings are all completed, the magnificent telescope is in position, and everything ready for immediate occupancy. The instruments in the observatory alone cost upwards of $200,000, while $590,000 have been expended for the erection and equipment of the observatory. The ground on which the observatory stands, most of which was granted by the government, comprises 1,900 acres. The new hydraulic ram, used as an additional power to raise the movable floor of the dome, is found to work without the least noise or jar. Owing to the intense dryness of the atmosphere the slate roofs on the buildings are beginning to crumble. Workmen will soon be engaged to replace the slates with copper, which is expected to prove more durable. The sum of $20,000 a year has been set apart by the Regents for the maintenance of the observatory.

AFTER the lecture at Irving Hall, on the 27th, a fine oil painting 22x28 inches in size, painted by Mrs. K. Faust, will be disposed of for the benefit of Uncle John Dukenfield, 78 years of age, who is still suffering from an accident sustained some two years ago. Tickets will be sold on the picture at 25 cents each, the drawing to be held on the above date. The painting hangs in FREETHOUGHT office.

A RECENT statement in a magazine article in regard to the Indian doctor was: "He kills oftener than he cures, but his faith is strong." Developments of every day occurrences would seem to indicate the appropriateness of applying this assertion to the modern Christian scientist.

ON nurse's lap, a naked, new-born child,
Weeping thou sat'st, while all around thee smiled.
So live that, sinking to thy last long sleep,
Calm thou may'st smile while all around thee weep.

IMPORTANT.

As it is necessary for the secretary to possess the most accurate data of all Liberal Leagues or auxiliary Secular Unions which have been granted charters within the past three years, whether those organizations are now in working order or have through any cause discontinued, I therefore urge upon the secretary or president (or any member in the absence of the proper officers) to forward me at the earliest possible moment (and not later than July) the fullest possible answers—consistent with brevity—to the following questions:

1. When were you organized?
2. How often do you meet, if at all?
3. What is the character of your programme?
4. Who are, or who were, your best officers? If your organization has discontinued, what was the principal cause of your disruption—indifference, financial embarrassment, or orthodox persecution?
6. Have any steps been taken to revive your organization?
7. Would you like to be represented in the next annual congress, either directly or by proxy?
8. Will you call a meeting for that purpose?
9. How many of your members subscribed for Liberal papers?
10. Send me names and present address of your members?

To those where no organization has ever been effected:

1. What Freethought lecturers have been among you?
2. Have they urged your people to organize, or asked your financial assistance in behalf of the American Secular Union?
3. Have they antagonized the organization, officers or its work?
4. Do you believe in maintaining the most priceless heritage of American liberty—religious freedom—as expressed in the Nine Demands?
5. Can you assist in the advancement of this movement better than by either contributing for the diffusion of its literature or by organizing your neighborhood?
6. Will you take steps to call your Freethought friends together?

Send to me for leaflets.

"THE HOLY SABBATH"

In the year 1594 Dr. Nicholas Bound, an English Puritan divine, wrote a book claiming that the Sabbath was of divine origin, and that at the resurrection of Christ all laws regulating it were miraculously transferred to the first day of the week, and made obligatory forever.

Dr. Bound taught that to do any servile work, or throw a quoit, on the first day of the week, was as great a sin as to kill a man, and to attend a feast was as great a crime as for a father to murder his little child. "It behooveth," he says, "all kings, princes, and rulers that profess the true religion, to enact such laws and to see them diligently executed, whereby the honor of God in hallowing these laws may be maintained. And, indeed, this is the chiefest end of all government, that men might not profess what religion they list, and serve God after what manner it pleaseth them best, but that the parts of God's true worship might be set up everywhere, and all men compelled to stoop unto it."

This meek and lowly follower of the Prince of Peace, it is said, was as mild mannered a man as ever cut a throat or scuttled a ship; and to his influence may, in a great measure, be attributed the severity of the Sunday laws passed during the reigns of Charles II. and William III.

But it was in Scotland during the latter part of the 16th century and the first quarter of the 17th that his baleful influence took deepest root. At this time the clergy were supreme masters of Scotland, and punished violation of Sunday—now called "the holy Sawbath"—with great severity. Whipping and branding with red-hot irons were not only inflicted on men, but on delicate women, and both on the same woman at the same time.

This fanatical bigotry had its reflux influence in England, and our Pilgrim fathers, thoroughly imbued with it, brought over the deadly plant in the "Mayflower," when, taking root in virgin soil, it flourished, watered and nurtured by Puritan piety, and attained its full efflorescence.

By referring to the "Records of the Governor and Company of the Massachusetts Bay in New England," we find the first Sunday law passed April 17, 1629: "And to the end the Saboth may be celebrated in a religious manner, we appoint that all that inhabit the plantacon, both for the gen'l and ppculer employments, may surcease their labor every Satterday at three of the clock in the afternoone, throughout the yeare, and that they spend the rest of the day in catichising and pparacon for the Saboth, as the minister shall direct."

This, you will observe, had reference to "Satterday," but when they came to legislate on the "the holy Sawbath" itself, they did not fail to out-do their Scotch predecessors. It was a crime for a man to kiss his wife, or a woman to kiss her child. The more miserable people could make themselves, the more pious they were esteemed, and the better God felt over it.

Having traced the history of this horrible nightmare of society, we now come to inquire: Who are responsible for it and interested in its perpetuity?

Fortunately that question is easily answered. Jesus is reported as having said: "The Sabbath was made for man." But is that true? Napoleon I. said: "Religions are invented, not in the interests of the many—the people—but in the interests of the few—the priests." So with Sabbaths—Sundays included. They were made by the priesthood, for the priesthood; for the aggrandizement of the sacerdotal class, and not in the interests of the people at all.

The history of ecclesiasticism shows that the priesthood was the real governing power, and that they never scrupled to use any means that would secure their ends. That the Sabbath was regarded by them as a potent means of maintaining their supremacy, is seen at a glance.

In order to control the masses it was necessary to teach their superstitious dogmas, and in order to do this an opportunity must be manufactured, and this was most easily accomplished by forbidding people to work or amuse themselves one day in seven. So that, having nothing else to do, the people might "voluntarily" attend church and listen to homilies on obedience to God's anointed messengers—the priests.

In Scotland during "the kirk's" supremacy, it was made the duty of the roundsman to visit every house in the parish, and every person who could not furnish a valid excuse for non-attendance at church was fined.

In Massachusetts in 1629 everything was conducted "as the ministers shall direct," and in 1635 a law was passed imposing "fyne and imprisonment on dyvers psons who absent themselves from church meetings upon the Lord's day."

In the year 1644 the clergy recommended that, "any sin committed with a high hand, as gathering sticks on the Sabbath day, be punish'd with death," and young girls were publicly whipped for walking in the streets or fields on Sunday. Innocent women were stripped to the waist, and, thus exposed to public gaze, were beaten with stripes until the blood ran down their backs and bosoms; the ears of men were cut off and their bodies beaten to a jelly, and the law specifically declared that "every Quaker, he, or she, that shall herein a third time offend, they shall have their tongues bored through with a hot iron."

But why continue these citations. Enough has been quoted to show that the clergy were the power behind the throne, and the magistrates were simply their tools. So it is to-day. It is the clergy who stand behind the scenes, pull the wires, and make the silly, jack-in-the-box legislators dance at their will.

Under the specious pretext of a pious interest in the temporal welfare of the poor laboring man the wily priesthood would enforce a day of idleness and prevent a day of recreation, so that the flock may be driven into the fold and sheared.

The dishonest clergy, like a lying nurse, continue to tell their bugaboo stories of an angry God, and their silly dupes, like scared children, are afraid to uncover their heads, or they would at once see that nature nowhere "esteemeth one day above another," and, the Sunday Sabbath of the priesthood is an unmitigated fraud and lie.

RELIGION.

What is it? To quote Webster's definition entire would only muddle the question. This word seems to have been derived from the Latin word ligo, to bind, or religo, to rebind, and signifying a vow to the gods. Those familiar with the poems of Homer will remember how common were these vows in ancient times, when dangers threatened. The following sentence from Webster's definition is significant: "The practice of moral duties without a belief in a divine lawgiver and without reference to his will or commands is not religion." The legitimate inference of this sentence is that morality and religion are two very different things, and the same inference may be taken from the conduct of religious professors; for they certainly practice as few of the moral virtues, especially those inculcated in the scriptures, as almost any other class in the community. They do not hesitate to take usury and increase, so emphatically forbidden in the book that professors of the Christian religion insist is the inspired word of God.

This book is the foundation of the Christian religion, beginning with the first chapter. We hear it asserted from the pulpit week after week, and reiterated almost daily by the press, that this world was made in six days and only six thousand years ago. Those who make these statements now know that they are not true. Then why do they make them? We might as well ask why the religious teachers of Galileo's time insisted that the world was flat, when he proved it to be a globe. What faith can we put in the teachings of religious professors who knowingly falsify the truth as they do when they say this world was created in less than a week? This assertion is not the result of ignorance, as it might have been in Galileo's time, for Christian teachers of these days know enough of the science of geology to be able to satisfy themselves of the truth of what the creator has written upon the rocks, and that requires no interpretation. Geology proves that millions of years were required to prepare this earth for man's abode; and yet Christian teachers threaten us with eternal damnation if we refuse to believe their infernal dogmas and senseless nonsense, the object of which is to enable the few to hold the many in servile bondage.

It may be said, however, if falsehood can be justified, that religion has probably been the avant courier of civilization. This was the case in the islands of the Pacific Ocean. First the missionary came, and soon the trader followed him, and the same process of civilization is now taking place on the African continent.

Quantrefages, in his natural history of man, says: "In primitive ages, savages lived by hunting and fishing. The first step was the domestication of animals, the next the cultivation of the soil; and then wars that hitherto had been merciless became more merciful when prisoners could be utilized to till the soil;" and he significantly adds, "Thus slavery began." But this never could have been, at least it could not now be continued, unless men were converted to believe that God would reward the obedient slave in another world for the injustice and wrong he had been compelled to suffer in this world. But for this superstition, which we call religion, there never would have been, neither would there be now, a slave on the earth. And here the question arises, Has not this deception been practiced long enough? Is it not indeed time to free the souls and bodies of mankind from the thralldom in which they have been held for untold ages?
