SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JANUARY 5, 1889

THE newspapers continue to announce the early arrival of Colonel Ingersoll at the Hotel Palomares, Pomona. It is safer to wait until something further is ascertained before addressing him at that point.

WHEN Jackson, the dusky pugilist from Australia, overcomes the champion of the Pacific Coast, and fifteen colored converts to the Baptist church are dipped into the Hudson river in winter, who shall say that the African race is not coming to the front in science and religion?

THE Alta-California makes this argument: "Two Chicago clergymen have proved to their own satisfaction that dancing is wrong, because men never dance with men. Yes, and we suppose, by parity of reasoning, that marriage is wrong because men never marry each other."

A JAPANESE newspaper man sets a good example. Being challenged by another editor to fight a duel, he declines on the ground that duelling is a "relic of barbarism" and invites his challenger to continue the discussion of the question at issue. Thus does calm philosophy impose a muzzle on the dogs of war.

THE Washington Territory people are agitating for the admission of the territory among the states. Simultaneously they must adopt a constitution, and it behooves the Secularists to be on deck. Let them see that, in the new constitution, ecclesiastical property is not exempt from equal and impartial taxation. The constitution of California is a good model in this regard.

A SISTER of Charles Sumner, dying at Hyde Park, Mass., made a bequest for the benefit of Spiritualism, and General Butler, on behalf of other legatees, is trying to break the will. The contestants claim that, on account of her belief in Spiritualism, Miss Sumner was not of sound mind. The judge in the case has reserved his decision, but before deciding a belief in Spiritualism to be prima facie evidence of insanity he should consider in what regard such belief differs from belief in any other form of supernaturalism, and whether a testator's belief in Christianity has ever prevented miracle-mongers from getting money bequeathed to them. If a belief in the unknowable were a proof of mental aberration, the majority of people would be subjects for the lunatic asylum.

ENGLISH Radicals do not approve of Gladstone's letter recommending international arbitration on the position of the pope toward Italy and the question of the restoration of his temporal power. Such a proposition would excite ridicule if it came from anybody but Gladstone. It is equivalent to asking other nations to intervene in settling the questions at issue between the United States government and the Mormons. The only sensible attitude for governments to adopt toward the pope is to ignore him and let him paddle his own canoe.

ONE of the most bigoted preachers in Oakland is the Rev. Dr. Horton, Presbyterian. In a recent sermon he made a general attack upon the regents of the California University, none of whom are so unfortunate as to be Calvinists, and upon the Rev. Dr. Stebbins, the Unitarian, in particular. He charged that the whole University was dominated by Unitarianism. The Rev. Dr. Stebbins has replied, denying the allegation and advising Dr. Horton to take a year's schooling in some young ladies' seminary where good manners are made a specialty. One fact is settled, these Christians do love one another!

NEWS AND NOTES.

STELLA, W. T.—There are only two houses at Stella, but it is a rallying-point for the Liberals. They come from the water and from the land. Even if another deluge should appear, my audience would be assured. No orthodox deity can drown them out. Mr. and Mrs. H. Lawson and family, two boys and four girls, gave cordial welcome in the big house, in which there is a splendid hall, dedicated to Freethought and to humanity. Good audiences were present Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon and evening. On Saturday evening, after the lecture, the organ and violin made melody for dancing feet. There is plenty of hospitality in this genial mansion on the banks of the Columbia. On Sunday morning the sunshine came forth in beautiful array over the waters and the distant winding shores. From this point one can look over the vast river for fifteen miles, and a glittering picture is presented when the sun marches forth from the pavilion of clouds. Friend Lawson has been a pioneer in this land for about a quarter of a century, and his strong arm has made the shadowy forest bend, and the light of civilization has advanced. His hearthstone is a cheerful rendezvous for the clans. F. C. Schornhorst, "Uncle Fred" as they call him, joined our company, and, like an old soldier, has much to say of battles fought and won, and the flame of enthusiasm is undimmed. Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Anderson are of the frontier ranks, and gave the sparkle of good fellowship to our camp-fires. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Howard, stalwart Liberals, are building for the glory of the future as well as the present. They have ten children, and in their faces we read that "the thoughts of men will broaden with process of the suns." All the way from Cathlamet come our good friends Sheriff Albert and his wife, Mrs. Lida Albert.

Wherever they are the torch of Freethought blazes against the night of superstition. From up the river, friends Kettinger and Bonar made advent on Sunday morning. Lawrence Bonar is a veteran of the Mexican war, and has been on the coast since 1851, and many a varying fortune has been his, but brain and heart are still for the flag of freedom. Mr. Kettinger from early days has been a prominent business man on the coast, and has done much to develop its industries. I have received a cordial invitation to visit Cedar Landing, his and Mr. Bonar's home, to lecture, and I hope to do so. All along the banks of the Columbia are the bivouacs of liberty, and nowhere do I find more sturdy supporters. James Jarrel, W. M. Anderson, D. F. Howard, John Sanstrom, H. Lawson, S. S. Parsons, A. Herring, and others whom I met at Stella are of the "good ship's crew," and, storm or sun, "onward we'll go."

Monday was a beautiful day, almost like spring in softness and splendor. With the kindly farewell of my host and companions of this happy fireside, Stella, on the green lowlands, with the wooded heights and columned pinnacles behind, and the shining, commerce-laden ocean-stream in front, is indeed a star—a star of hope for the "good time coming." Marvelously bright were the river, the lands, the sky, the gorgeous clouds, and the blue-white mountain tops in that lovely December day. It was like a palace fair, a dream of enchantment sweeping by, like the jeweled waters, with ever-changing lustres. The boat sped on. Mt. St. Helens and Mt. Flood, in superb magnificence, rivaled the sun with their kingly foreheads, and flashed back its rays with diamond-like effulgence. Amid the balmy air, sweet as "mild September," I watched the wonderful panorama until shining Portland opened its gateways, and its busy and muddy streets made a motley conclusion to the brilliant journey.

I met Friend Nice, of Waterford, near Cathlamet, on board the boat. He is a subscriber of FREETHOUGHT, as also of the Truth Seeker and Investigator, and this is pretty good evidence that he wears our colors like a "captain true."

NORTH YAMHILL.—Immediately on my arrival at this place, where Freethought has ever had a glowing home, I was met by Robert Laughlin, and the first thing he told me was that Rev. J. A. Campbell, of Hillsboro, was on hand to meet me in debate, and that the hall was full awaiting the onset of the adversaries. I was pleased at this announcement, for a debate, conducted in a gentlemanly manner, is certainly a benefit, and this I never refuse. Arrangements were at once made for discussion. I was to lead off the first night with an hour's speech. Mr. Campbell was to follow with an hour's reply, and I was to close with a twenty minutes rejoinder. On the following night Mr. Campbell was to open on the same terms, and I was to reply. So it was fair play all around. The hall was crowded both nights. I opened with the "Nine Demands of Liberalism." I know this was rather hard on my opponent, for he found it difficult to reply, so self-evident was the truth of my propositions even to a Christian's mind, and he wandered several times from the question, as he himself confessed. However, I deemed it good policy to discuss the question of rights as precedent to all questions of belief or non-belief. My opponent was not exactly prepared for this issue. On the following night Mr. Campbell chose his battle-ground, which was "The Divinity of the Bible." Mr. Campbell is a vigorous speaker, and from the standpoint of Christianity makes his points quite effectively. I find the Campbellite theory of inspiration is like that of the Unitarians. In fact, I judge the Campbellite theology to be conservative Unitarianism, with the rite of baptism added as a necessary formula. Mr. Campbell loudly affirmed that he was not orthodox, and did not care a cent for the "doxies." It was the Bible, "the grand old Bible," that he stood for. He did not defend the orthodox theory of inspiration, namely, that the Bible is the revelation of God. He simply said, "The Bible contains a revelation." There is a radical difference in these theories, which I pointed out in order to demonstrate the heresy of my opponent. To be a revelation and to contain a revelation are affirmations of the Bible widely apart as the poles. If the Bible only contains a revelation, and revelation is that which the unaided human reason cannot discover, then my opponent is logically in total ignorance of the revelation. He cannot find it in the Bible without another revelation or "the infallible pope." In order for the Bible to be of any use as a revelation, it must be in itself a revelation, so that every word is an expression of the divine mind. If it only contains a revelation, which revelation is undiscoverable by human means, the believer is no whit wiser than the skeptic. I urged this point and others which it is impossible to give in these News and Notes. Some of the reverend gentleman's arguments were original. He said that motion is the result of the contact of substance with substance. If so, then God could have no motion unless a substance hit him somewhere in the immensities of space. He said that language comes by hearing. The first man must have heard, or he could not learn to talk. Ergo, he heard God. If so, then God must have human organs. If he has human organs he is subject to the limitations of man. Ergo, he must learn by hearing. Who in the beginning talked to God, and who gave him speech? The first record of talking in the Garden of Eden is the truthful declaration of the "Old Serpent." The devil, then, must have given man "parts of speech" along with other benefits. The debate created great interest in the community. It has set many to thinking, and of the result I have no fear.

North Yamhill has been famous for its liberal element. No revivals have ever flourished here. The parsons have had hard lines in the saving of souls. The school-house is stronger than the church. The Laughlins have penetrated the community with Liberal ideas. The father came in early days, a vigorous representative of American progress. His posterity, children and grandchildren, now number about four hundred. Some have drifted within the church borders, but with a Liberal mind. The ancestral independence is manifested in the descendants of this grand pioneer.

F. Hauswirth and his family are thoroughgoing radicals, and it was a pleasure to meet with these generous friends. Mr. Hauswirth knows all the weak points of orthodoxy, and his keen way of presenting them gives little comfort to the supporters of the faith.

I was pleased also to greet G. R. Higgins and family around the fireside. My friend is always ready to do his level best for Freethought and this world's golden age.

I was sorry that our well-known Liberal comrade, Mr. Lee Laughlin, was obliged to be away on jury duty, but his hearthstone made genial welcome, and Mrs. Lee Laughlin blends the Secular spirit with the noble hospitality of her home.

Geo. Laughlin, Robt. Laughlin, member elect to the legislature, with the record of a Secularist, Ivan Daniel, G. W. Sappington, W. T. Kutch of Carleton, and others, steady-going Liberals, always for square dealing and Freethought, will keep this country on the road of progress, and the outlook will ever be bright.

Mr. Fred. Sappington, Miss Wills, and others, furnished some lively and entertaining music for the meetings, and the arena of debate was softened with the amenities of art. Even the soul of the theologian was made merry by the sprightly notes.

North Yamhill, amidst a stately country, with gardens and orchards, and rich farms and elegant dwellings, and the sunlight of reason so flooding the churches, that even the Christmas tree is loaded with gifts of freedom and humanity—this shall be a pleasant land for memory and hope.

McMINNVILLE.—W. T. Booth, A. J. Gant, and friend Richardson, who came down to the North Yamhill debate, were companions of my journey to their home, McMinnville, now the county seat, with a superb court-house in process of construction, and with every indication of business and educational prosperity. The Baptists have a college here, and the orthodox have thus a good deal of the inside track. But the Liberal element here is not of the kind to surrender. The battle is going on notwithstanding the heavy orthodox guns. The Rev. Mr. Campbell was invited to engage in the debate at McMinnville, and he did so. The intellectual combat was continued on about the same lines as North Yamhill. On the first night the discussion was held at the opera house. A large audience was present. The subject this time was, "The Religious Conspiracy." I could not get my opponent to define his position. He said that he had no fight with the Romish church. He will probably find out some day that the Romish church has a fight with him and his church, even to extermination.

The second evening we debated at the Campbellite church, which was full. The ladies of the place were exercising their privileges of the leap year, and a gorgeous leap year party was in progress at the opera house, and so the Infidel was obliged to deal his blows in the very sanctuary of the Lord. The Infidel did not feel any the worse for the contact. Whether the church will recover is a question of time. I was much struck, as were many others, with the points made in rebuttal by my opponent. He spoke of the "monumental institution" of the Jewish Passover, and that its origin and continued celebration were proof of the divinity of the Bible. I answered that if it were granted that a traditional history of nearly seven hundred years was of any value, the Passover only made memorable the transactions of a cruel and savage deity, abhorrent to all civilized ideas of God. It celebrated the butcheries of a monster. According to the story, thousands of innocent children, the first-born of the Egyptians, were slain ruthlessly by the angel of the Lord, and in order that the angel might have the chance to thus massacre, God hardened Pharaoh's heart so that he would not let the children of Israel go. Was there ever the celebration of a greater crime than this? My opponent answered that God made the children of the Egyptians, and therefore they were his property, and he could slay them at his own sweet will, and no wrong was committed. The father can slay his own offspring! To what logic one is reduced when he undertakes to defend the divinity of the Bible. Besides, said my opponent, God by killing them was taking the "first-born" right up into the abodes of glory, and therefore it was a good thing. They were snatched from a world of sin and suffering to a paradise of bliss. I should like to have the testimony of the "first-born" on this subject, and see if they enjoyed the transit from earth to heaven. According to this, the "destroying angel" beats Moody at soul-saving a hundred to one. Does the Bible anywhere declare that all those whom God slays go to heaven? If so, then there is a host out of every tribe and nation which no man can number. According to this declaration, the Rev. Mr. Campbell is almost a Universalist.

I cannot note other points. The debate went pleasantly off, and if circumstances are ever favorable will be renewed sometime. So long as clergymen and Christian champions confine themselves to the real issue, and discuss ideas and principles, I consider it a good thing to debate, but have no use for those who resort to personalities. Silent contempt is the only defense against their rottenness. To answer them is to give some notoriety to that which will die of its own filth.

After the lecture I went to the leap year party and enjoyed the music and dancing and lunch, and the "reign of beauty" and "woman's rights," until midnight's solemn hour, when I meandered to the land of dreams, but many of the others did not go home till morning.

Rev. Mr. Campbell subscribed for FREETHOUGHT. He obeys the scriptural injunction, "Be ye wise as serpents."

The fires blaze at McMinnville, and "the morning star is coming." Only a few are at the front, but the world moves with every wind and tide. My friends, the Booths, the Olds, the Fords, Brooks, Wallace, of Amity, Richardson, the Garrisons, etc., give cheer and ardor, with their sympathy and appreciation, and I hope that my wandering way will sometime turn again to these happy firesides and shining fields.

SILVERTON.—Saturday morning I was obliged to be up at six o'clock, and through the trailing mists, and deep down gulfs of mud, pull across the country twelve miles to Ray's Landing; cross the Willamette, whose tumbling billows, from the passing of a steamer, rocked the boat; land on a bank of slime; climb anything but a "golden stair" to reach the station, and then found the car I was to take half a mile off. Finally I started, and the train, by sticking to the rails, which it does not always do, brought me, after many twistings and turnings, to Silverton, where our banners are always glistening in the sun. Silverton is becoming widely known as a battle-point. The debate of eight days, just held, has been an admirable vindication of Secular principles. The Freethought cause is stronger than ever, while the church that started the fight with such a flourish is almost dead. It can't support a minister. Warm greetings are always here, and the friends of my first visit are the same staunch friends to-day. The Freethought temple stands, and the rays of reason go forth. The earnest purpose has won the victory. The Silverton Secular Union still holds its commanding position. I lectured on Saturday and Sunday evenings to good audiences. The Christians stayed away. Scarcely one was present. Silence is their policy now. On Sunday evening a concert was given by the Silverton band, H. L. Allen, leader. The music was excellent. It was a delight to listen to these inspiring strains. Music is ever of the free-born mind. It is the constant aid of progress. Truth is for joy, it is for music and poetry; and Freethought would garland the pathway of man. The Silverton Secular Union transcended all expectations in its gorgeous Christmas festival. I remained to deliver an address and read a poem vindicating the right of Freethinkers to this happy day, for it is not a church festival, but a pagan festival, and celebrates the return of the sun, not the birth of Jesus. It is an astronomical holiday, and was not adopted by the church until some hundreds of years after Jesus's time. It is pre-eminently natural and humanitarian in its origin, and should be accepted by Liberals as a festival day, especially for the sake of the children, who delight in these joyous occasions. Let the fountain flow, but with the sun's bright beams, and not the tinsel of the church. It was a supreme success. Nearly a hundred children were present. The hall was crowded to overflowing. After the reading of the poem, published on another page, a dozen little girls, dressed in white, tripped upon the platform and sang, with wonderfully entertaining effect, the Christmas song. Then the curtain rose and Santa Claus appeared, with the shaggy face, and glittering snows upon his back, and the three-masted boat of Liberty, laden from stem to stern, and wreathed to topmost spar with glistening gifts. A thousand dollar's worth hung on that radiant ship, flashing o'er the brimming eyes of the children. There were dolls—one as big as a baby—and guns, and carriages, and jewels, and laces, and vases, and books, and albums—one of which, with streamers of red, white and blue, and two starry flags above, floated to the hands of the Freethought Pilgrim, and in FREETHOUGHT's sanctum it shall blaze its crimson glory, to mingle with the blossoms from 'Frisco Bay. It took the united efforts of about a dozen young ladies to distribute these many gifts, and it was a rippling stream of smiles and laughter from beginning to end. There were also songs and recitations by some of the little girls, rendered with delightful skill and effect, and older ones could not do any better or display a brighter intelligence. When these brilliant exercises were over, then the "children of a larger growth" had their fun, and music and dancing and supper lasted until the small hours of the night. The hall should have been twice as large to accommodate all the attendants at the festival. This will be a bright landmark in the annals of the Silverton Union. It is evidence of a grand and growing life.

I spent Christmas with Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Mount, and the day was one of enjoyable rest. My friends have thirteen children and are youthful still in feeling and hope. Their ample fireside will indeed keep things lively for years to come, and reason and humanity will always be ahead. I was fortunate to spend a Merry Christmas where father and mother and children, down to the little baby, make such jovial company.

I enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. Ames. The Christmas tree grows abundantly around this hearthstone of liberty. Mrs. Ames's gift was a deed of house and lot where the family circle gathers. This was a good deed and good Secularism, which makes the wife queen of home. A hundred other friends of this glorious Secular Union give a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year all along the way.

At six o'clock in the morning, Wednesday, I am off for Portland, where I say good-bye to friend Beal, who gets the gold of life spite of all fortune; O. Jeldness, who, I hope, will make the jeweled veins of earth float our victorious banners; my friends the Saunders', Mrs. Seymour, Mrs. Carrie E. Haight and the boys, Mrs. Graham and children, from Los Angeles; and I find that friend Niles received a wondrous Christmas present, a boy weighing ten pounds, born Thursday, Dec. 20, and his name is Harrison. So say the Walla Walla papers. Comrade W. J. Taylor, M. D., and wife also greet me, and give the generous farewell.

Thursday, December 27, I leave Oregon, where the misty air makes promise of green and glorious harvest fields, amidst a day of rare loveliness; resplendent pictures on every side—Mt. Shasta sending down its benediction from silver masses of cloud, the vast forests gorgeous in the mellow December light, the rocky walls gemmed with white cataracts, the tall pinnacles bathed with gold of floating mist, and earth and heaven glittering with the heraldry of the new year that's "coming up the steeps of time."

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

OUR REGARDS.

We send out from the headquarters of FREETHOUGHT a Happy New Year to the many thousand friends who will read this paper.

To all the workers in the field—the lecturers, the writers, those who advance the cause of mental liberty.

To all our Liberal contemporaries—to the Truth Seeker, the Investigator, Secular Thought, the Independent Pulpit, Truth, Lucifer, Liberty, Fair Play, and the Ironclad and Progressive Age.

To our brethren across the water—the Secular Review, the Freethinker, and the National Reformer.

To Colonel R. G. Ingersoll.

To Secretary Stevens and the American Secular Union.

To President Westbrook and Girard college.

To Otto Wettstein and his Freethought Badgepin.

To all the other officers of the Secular Union.

To even the ministers. During 1888 the spread of Freethought has made them unhappy. May 1889 reconcile them to the progress of enlightenment.

To the Great East, greeting.

To the Great West, greeting.

Peace on earth to men of good will.

To all the sons of industry, to all the sons of wealth, to all the toilers of the sea, good health.

To all mankind, to the whole earth, to the universe,

Our regards.

"GIRARD'S WILL AND GIRARD COLLEGE THEOLOGY."

The first thing those should do who contemplate assisting in the fight to restore Girard College to secularism, is to read the work entitled as above. Then their contribution to the cause will be doubled.

The work is by Dr. R. B. Westbrook, president of the American Secular Union, and gives, as its title indicates, the substance of Girard's will, and sets forth how that will has been violated by the introduction of theology into the college which Girard founded. The book may be ordered from this office; price, $1.

NEW DOCTRINE RESENTED.

The Jews have long borne uncomplainingly the responsibility for the crucifixion of Christ, and have rather appeared to enjoy it. Judging from the actions of some Hebrews in Omaha, Neb., they even resent the offices of any one who would take that responsibility from their shoulders. Last Saturday, it is reported, Rabbi Alexander undertook to prove that the whole story of the crucifixion was a myth, and that Jesus Christ never met the ignominious death described in the New Testament. The report states that at this the congregation were so enraged that they advanced upon the rabbi with violent intent, and that the latter barely saved himself by a hurried exit through the back door. The flock then proceeded to argue the matter among themselves, a general fight ensued, and the church furniture was circulating freely through the air, when an officer entered and placed all he could get hold of under arrest and charged them with disturbing the peace.

We must say that the account reads very much like fiction, but it may not be such. The Jewish race played a far more important part in the scheme of salvation than they are generally accredited with, and may well decline to be cleared of participation in it. If they had been liberally inclined people, tolerant of the belief of others, the plan of redemption would have fallen through, and become inoperative. It was a part of the plan that Judas should act as betrayer, and that the Jews should be the complainants. Otherwise Christ might have died a natural death, and there would have been no atonement. It was, in old days, regarded by the Jews as a meritorious act to offer something as a sacrifice. It is no wonder, then, that these modern Jews should not wish to have their ancestors robbed of the credit given them by sacred history. On any other theory it would be difficult to account for the extraordinary conduct of Rabbi Alexander's congregation.

THE BIBLE AS A SCHOOL BOOK.

President Cook, of the State Convention of Teachers at Sacramento, made the following recommendation in his address:

"Introduce the Bible into the schools in the least objectionable manner as soon as public sentiment and boards of education will allow. Try to live by its best and purest teachings and induce your pupils to do the same."

Concerning this the committee chosen to report upon the address said:

"The committee submits that discussions upon the use of the Bible in the schools have been so bitter, and the opinions of prominent educators are so widely divergent, that we feel it inadvisable to comment or disprove."

The majority of the delegates were less conservative than the committee, and there was no lack of protests against any action of the convention in favor of introducing the Bible in the schools, but they appear to have compromised finally by agreeing to say nothing for or against it. The Bible in the schools question seems to possess a remarkable vitality, and its advocates are irrepressible. Fortunately, the Hebrew-Christian book of mythology is not now used in our schools, and there is little chance that it will be. The Roman Catholics are opposed to it, and so are the Constitution and the Secularists. The situation is, at present, as regards the Bible, quite satisfactory, and any attempt to change it will undoubtedly meet with defeat, as it ought to, but the religious hymns and ceremonies now employed should be dispensed with. Give the children only secular education at public expense.

"It is because the teachings of the Christian churches of to-day strike no responsive chord in the great bosom of humanity," says Henry George, "that modern Christianity is dying like a vine severed from its root." The correctness of this view depends upon what modern Christianity is. The more liberal Protestant churches strike no responsive chord because they are hypocritical. They preach one thing and profess another—that is, they preach liberal ideas and profess orthodoxy. The Catholic church, however, is as popular as at any time among the ignorant, the superstitious, and the unscrupulous. If this church represents modern Christianity, then modern Christianity is in a fairly prosperous condition. Its rival, the Salvation Army, is the only branch of Protestantism that arouses enthusiasm, and perhaps this army is really best entitled to be called the representative of modern Christianity. It and the Catholic church offer so much more superstition for the same amount of money that all other sects are as good as excluded from the harvest fields of ignorance.

POPE LEO's latest encyclical complains that "the tendency of the age is toward material interests, and that the tendency is strengthened by worldly pride, an evil press and the drama, the demoralization of the arts and the changed education in schools, Materialistic and Atheistic teachings obscuring true notions of right. Secularism, Nihilism, and Communism, it says, are also the outcomes of this addition to material things." Considering that the pope is reaching out his wrinkled and palsied hands to grasp the sceptre of temporal power in Italy, his wail over the tendency of the age toward material things gives his encyclical letter a copious dash of hypocrisy.

THE Protestants of New Jersey are adopting a doubtful method of discouraging Catholic parish schools. The trustees of the Normal College of the state are considering the preparation of an amendment to the state constitution prohibiting the establishment of schools, the purpose of which is to withdraw pupils from the public schools. This means parochial schools, of course. The government prohibits competition in the matter of letter carrying, so that it is possible the prohibition may be made to extend to rivalry in teaching, but it would be a questionable stretch of legal power. The death of Catholic encroachment lies in the Demands of Secularism.

DURING a debate in the French Chamber of Deputies last week a member attacked the government for going to extremes in secularizing the schools. Premier Floquet, in reply, declared his warmest approval of everything that had been done to secularize the schools. The republic, he said, desired to free education from all religious influence. Floquet's speech was received with enthusiastic applause, and a motion to print and placard it throughout France was carried. When shall the enthusiasm of the American people be aroused by the head of the nation advocating the complete secularization of the schools of this country?

SOME pastors, when dismissed by their congregations for ministerial conduct, proceed to organize an independent church. Others sue the trustees for damages, while others, still, express their dissatisfaction by a personal assault upon their accusers. The Rev. Fred Bell, of Columbus, O., adopted the latter method. The character of the pastor being discussed by the congregation in his presence, one Elder Flynn remarked, "Fred Bell, I have in my pocket evidence that proves you a genuine fraud."— At this the Rev. Mr. Bell suddenly siezed Elder Flynn, and, bearing him down in a pew, choked him until he was black and blue in the face. So, in one way or another, Christianity proceeds upon its triumphant march.

THE Rev. Joseph Sasia, of the Jesuit Order of California, has been lecturing on Galileo, his object being to show that the great astronomer was not persecuted for teaching scientific truth. He clinches the matter with the worn-out assertion that "Galileo was not persecuted for being a good astronomer, but for being a bad theologian." In Galileo's time (1632) to affirm the revolution of the earth was heresy, and no good theologian believed in it. Galileo was therefore prosecuted as a "bad theologian," as any good astronomer was bound to be. Catholics endeavor to draw attention from the main point by quibbling about the cause of his persecution, as though the fact that he was a heretic could make his trial and torture before the Inquisition any the less infamous.

BROTHER McCORMICK, of the Catholic Monitor, is just "catching on" to the beauties of alliteration. Behold:

"Intolerance stops at nothing in order to achieve its mischievous and malignant aims, and it is not at all unlikely that the Methodist preachers of Boston, whose brazen throats blared forth blasphemy and bigotry for weeks before the Boston election, taught their female tools the trick of voting for every officer on the ticket, when they were not entitled by law to commit any such crime. Are Methodists proud of their disreputable deeds in this diabolical direction?"

"Diabolical direction" was never equaled by the man who invented this cheap style of rhetoric.

THE freshest joke of the season is made by our occasional correspondent, Mr. C. Severance, of Los Angeles. He is a carpenter, and relates that he has within a week beaten the best six days' record walking for work. Mr. Severance adds: "The thought has struck me several times that if Jesus Christ found it as hard to obtain carpenter work as I have, his going to preaching may have been a necessity on his part instead of a desire to save the world."

THE citizens of Massachusetts, through Senator Hoar, petition Congress to adopt a constitutional amendment prohibiting the interference of any religious sect with the common public school system. There are but two sects that aim at this, the Catholic and the Protestant. The Massachusetts petition is designed to prohibit Catholic interference.

AFTER attending the lecture by B. F. Underwood in Oakland, and making a speech highly complimentary to the lecturer, the Rev. Geo. Sweeney is now engaged in "answering" Mr. Underwood's attacks upon the strongholds of Christianity. Mr. Sweeney is sometimes spoken of as the Talmage of Oakland.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS, whose advertisement appears on another page, will be with us for a year. He has for a long time been before the Liberal public, and we have heard no complaint that he does not do what he promises. A better indorsement could not be written.

OBSERVATIONS of the eclipse at many points were highly successful, and promise important results to science. The obscuration began at 12 M., and by way of a New Year's day reform, the eclipse wore off at 3 P.M.

AN unusual legal proceeding is in the courts of Rondout, N. Y. The action is brought by Rev. Mr. Wolfberger, against Isaac and Jacob Kingsburg, to recover $30 for services rendered as rabbi in saying prayers for the repose of the soul of the father of the defendants, who died a few months ago. The defendants claim that the services were of no value; but if no religious services were paid for until their value had been demonstrated, it is to be feared that the clergy would starve to death.

MR. A. F. HOYT, of El Monte, will please accept from us the compliments of the season and our thanks for a New Year's gift of $4.

B. F. UNDERWOOD's lectures in Stockton were well attended, and reported at length in the Stockton Express.

OBSERVATIONS.

George Macdonald, of FREETHOUGHT, says that it was only a few days ago that he learned there was in this country a German Freethought society called the Turnerbund. Which leads to the thought that he was also oblivious to the existence of the Good Templars.

I take the foregoing from E. C. Walker's Fair Play to illustrate how easy it is to destroy the meaning of a statement by misquoting it. I did not say that it was "only a few days ago that I learned there was in this country a German society called the Turnerbund." I heard of the Turnerbund fifteen years ago. My remark was that I did not know that there existed in this country a large organized body of German Freethinkers, "in whose Declaration of Principles the Nine Demands of Liberalism are embodied." I maintain that it is possible to know of the existence of an organization without knowing what is contained in its Declaration of Principles, especially if the Declaration is printed in a foreign language. The platform and statutes of the Turnerbund embodying the demands was adopted at the National Convention in May, 1888.

A short time ago Mr. Walker misquoted the editor of the Truth Seeker, and had to explain. In the course of the discussion that followed he compared the editor to some Catholic gentleman named O'Flanagan, and now he apologizes for that. If Mr. Walker would be a little more careful about his quotations he would not so frequently be called upon to humiliate himself.

I am in receipt of a postal card from Mr. Moses Hull, of Chicago, upon which he takes occasion to remind me that he is no longer a resident of Des Moines, Iowa, and that his journal, New Thought, is now published in the city distinguished for its generosity toward Anarchists in the matter of rope for artistic hanging purposes. I refer to Chicago, whose methods of eliminating undesirable elements are unsurpassed by any to be found outside of St. Petersburg.

I trust that Moses is prosperous now, but I well remember the time when he was not thus. The card I have just mentioned was written by Mr. Hull himself. The familiar handwriting awoke pleasant memories, and the memories thus awakened proceeded to get up and clothe themselves in the garments of the past. This figure of speech is something I thought up myself. As I said, or was about to say when I interrupted myself, I knew Mr. Hull away back in the era of my type-setting days. He had at that epoch just retired from the editorial alembic of a journal called "Hull's Crucible." It appears that he had put all his money into the Crucible and melted it. At any rate, he went to work at the compositor's case in the Truth Seeker office. He did not at that time present any of the outward and visible signs of prosperity. Reformers do not, as a rule, carry those signs conspicuously displayed. But clothes do not make the man, so it is no disparagement of Mr. Hull to say that his habiliments, at or about the date under consideration, needed renovating. There was an autumnal aspect suggested by them, something like a New England cornfield in November, and his shoes were a pair of corporations without souls. He worked early and late, and did his best, but he was never cut out for a printer. He had an empirical system of punctuating, and dividing, and justifying, that was quite consistent in itself, but it did not harmonize with the theories of the proof-reader. There was a legend among the boys that the marginal notes on his proof-slips first suggested to Colonel Ingersoll the title of his lecture on the "Mistakes of Moses."

But if Mr. Hull could not set as much type as the rest of us, he knew another game that was worth two of ours. He could make a speech that people were willing to pay for. The "wickedest man in New York" heard of him, and gave him ten dollars a night to conduct the prose portion of his sacred concerts. Moses earned his money. I attended the services myself. The sermon was eloquent, and the concert as sacred as any.

Pretty soon hard times lifted with the subject of this memoir. An orator like Mr. Hull could not be overlooked by the politicians in a presidential campaign. Consequently, our compositor dropped his stick and took to the stump. Somebody said he got a hundred dollars a week. Any way, the next time the boys saw him there had been a transformation. Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of Moses—new beaver, new broadcloth, gold watchguard. A coin just out of the mint would look rusty beside him. The slickest dressed parson in New York never wore a whiter tie. The printers who had made humorous remarks about Hully Moses at the case lost popularity, and their jokes went out of circulation.

Since that time, I judge, Mr. Hull has not been afflicted with adversity. I like to think that virtue is rewarded, because that leaves more of an opening for me. If all the good died young I should long since have passed away, and should not now be enjoying so salubrious a climate as that of California. I expect that Mr. Hull's era of prosperity began when he learned that the theories advocated in his Crucible had no indorsement strong enough to support them. He has had a checkered career and has made a record. With one-half his experience, I believe I could write an autobiography that would sell readily at a high price.

I have just read a work by Edward Bellamy entitled "Looking Backward." It is interesting not alone for its ideas, but because its chunks of political economy are strung on a thread of romance. But there is nothing new under the solar eclipse. Every idea in "Looking Backward" is expressed or suggested by "Rational Communism: The Present and the Future Republic of North America," by "A Capitalist," published by the Truth Seeker Company in New York in 1885. "Rational Communism," too, is a greater and bolder work, and enters fields of reform that "Looking Backward" is careful to avoid. Perhaps I take a greater interest in "A Capitalist's" book because I read it several times before it was published, and because I am acquainted with the author. I am sure that the fact that he is a Freethinker and puts the religious reform nearly the first in the list, should make me so. The two books are of the same size and price (fifty cents), but "Rational Communism" contains a considerable excess of reading matter, as it does of fact, argument, and history. A perusal of Bellamy, if it convinces the reader, will make him a Socialist. "A Capitalist" makes him an all-around reformer, and a Socialist or Communist to boot. Thoughtful people will read both books—"Rational Communism," first as a study; "Looking Backward," for recreation. Then, I suppose, they will go on in the same old way, and set both authors down as dreamers. But the people of his day thought that Columbus was a dreamer until America materialized.

I notice that a band of pilgrims are soon to leave New York to visit Palestine. I never hear of this kind of an excursion without wanting to go along. The religious pilgrim to Palestine gets all his ideas of the country from books before he goes, and does not view it with his own eyes. The books and tradition have given the resort a fictitious value. They describe it as a land flowing with milk and honey, and the reader would take it for another Santa Clara Valley if he believed all the liars. About the first veracious writer to visit Palestine was D. M. Bennett, and his account of what he saw there removed considerable of the gloss. But he made the mistake of dropping into the unnatural Biblical style of chronicling his experience in "the land of Yahweh," so that it was never quite satisfactory to me. Many writers who might otherwise have told the truth about Palestine have been hampered by their reverence for holy ground.

They stand on a rock "which possibly has been pressed by the feet of our savior," and their senses leave them. They view their surroundings with the superstitious awe that seizes a Catholic when he sees a piece of the true cross or any bit of wood so described. I am confident that I should not be affected in that way, and so sometime I am going to take a Bible and a sun umbrella and journey to the holy land as a special correspondent of this journal. The letters will be written in my most cheerful vein, and the subscription price of FREETHOUGHT will not be increased. Putnam has his eye on Australia when his ship comes in, but if a sufficient amount of misguided capital ever misses some more deserving person and finds its way into my retentive grasp, my trunk will be checked for Jerusalem. HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Delegates from all the counties in Washington Territory met at Ellensburg on January 3 to frame a state constitution and memorialize Congress for the speedy admission into the Union. The sentiment of the people is unanimously in favor of admission.—There were 102 deaths in San Francisco last week against 147 for the corresponding week of 1887.—The annual export of coal from Vancouver island mines was 400,000 tons, chiefly to San Francisco.—In spite of the fact that speculation ceased over a year ago, the real-estate sales in Los Angeles county have amounted to over $60,000,000 since that time; the assessed wealth of the county has increased over fifteen and a half millions, and $8,000,000 worth of building has been done.—All the judicial recounts that have been in progress in this city have been finished. In the mayoralty contest O'Donnell gained 322 votes. Of these, 190 were taken from Pond and 104 from Story. The Democrats, therefore, says the Examiner, had the advantage of the Republicans in the stealing in the proportion of about nine to five.—It is reported that the vineyardists of California are somewhat alarmed over the prospective dearth of Chinese laborers.—Leong Sing, a Chinaman who murdered his uncle, was hanged at the San Francisco county jail last week. He took death stoically, and the ministers in attendance failed to terrify him concerning his future fate.

The Bristol, one of the finest of the Long Island Sound steamers, burnt at her wharf at Newport, R. I., on the 30th ult. She was valued at $300,000.—The Anarchists met in Chicago last Sunday and Mrs. Parsons made a speech despite police prohibition.—Fifteen colored imbeciles were baptized in the icy waters of the Hudson river at Nyack, N. Y., last Sunday.—Father Bernard J. Donnelly, assistant pastor of the Catholic church of the Epiphany, New York, has been relieved from his priestly functions, having become insane. He imagines himself to be vicar-general of the diocese.—While a Christmas entertainment was being held in the hall at Last Prospect, Pa., the hall collapsed and 300 people were hurled from the second to the first floor. Fortunately few were injured.—The Methodist ministers of Columbus, O., have passed a protest against the ball with which it is designed to celebrate the inauguration of Harrison.—Father Hecker, at one time associated with Emerson, Hawthorne, and others in the famous Brook Farm experiment, and afterward a Catholic priest, died in New York last week.—The president granted a pardon to the Mormon Bishop A. A. Kimball, convicted in the First District court of Utah of adultery, and sentenced to eight month's imprisonment. The president's action is based upon representations that the prisoner is in an advanced stage of consumption, and would not survive in his present surroundings.—Ten years ago Priest F. C. Jean was removed from the pastorate of a Catholic church in Dubuque, Ia. He now sues his bishop and others for $30,000 damages, charging conspiracy to injure him.

The emperor of Germany enjoys a salary of $750,000, besides a big income as king of Prussia. Nevertheless he asks for a raise of $350,000.—Work on the Panama canal continues, although on some sections labor has been reduced. Altogether, 2,000 men have been discharged within the past two months, owing to disputes between the Canal Company and the contractors. The highest authorities consider the total suspension of work as very improbable. There are now about 9,000 laborers actually engaged on the works.—The death of General Loris Melikoff, the well-known Russian officer, is reported from Nice.

YULE-TIDE.

The Summer's glory passes into Autumn's weighted sheaves;
The harvest gold is gathered midst the falling of the leaves;
The woods grow bare, the wing of bird dims in the southern sky,
And from the north the icy winds the whitening fields sweep by.

The clouds of gloom, the frost, the rain, make winter's doleful sway,
While in the heavens the circling sun wanes further day by day;
The morning and the evening seem to mingle in the air,
And night's long shadow crouches in the noonday's pallid glare.

No prayers can stay the steady march of that bright sun away;
No God is in the heart of it to give the kindlier ray.
Still to the distant goal it swings—the blind earth weeps in vain;
Not all its thousand altars can one warm sunbeam regain;

But when the utmost bound is reached, and Nature's course is made,
Behold the bright, returning orb through winter's deepening shade;
Though winds may blow, and icy breath the tempest's rack may bring,
Still in the sun's high journey flows the music of the spring.

It is coming nearer, nearer, to caress the eager earth;
In every wandering sunbeam is the sweet bud's happy birth;
The lengthening days begin to dawn with skies of blue and gold,
And from the mount's white pinnacle the streams are sparkling rolled.

The ranks of green are waving fair, the seed is scattered far;
The furrowed lands are smiling to the morn and evening star.
The birds are singing clearly, they sing of summer's crown;
They sing of roses' perfume, and the grasses freshly mown.

Thus the heart of man is gladdened with the Christ that nature gives;
'Tis the earth that is resurgent and with newer glory lives;
'Tis the sun that marches wondrous from the regions of the night;
'Tis the spring, with wings exultant, makes the miracle of light.

The promise to the heart of man is not from one sublime;
The life of all makes beauty in the gathering wealth of time;
Not Jesus is alone the Christ, but every good and fair,
Each baby face gives Christmas to the mother everywhere.

Each birth is music midst the pains that woman bears for love;
Each hearthstone finds in children's joy the star that shines above;
And glorious youth forever is the world's redeeming grace
From death, eternal shining on the pathway of the race.

So this festival is ours, not the church's or the creed's;
It stands for nature's bounty, for sunshine, and good deeds;
It stands for bright fraternity, for childhood linked with age;
It stands for hero's lustre upon truth's immortal page.

It stands for all that life can mean of struggle and of gain;
It stands for earnest purpose, though the darkness may remain;
It stands for help, midst suffering, that kindly hands can give;
't stands for all the worthiness for which a man can live.

Then let the chimes ring merry, through the shadows of the night;
We will change the gloom to glory with the years' melodious flight;
We will look to coming morning, we will hope and work for day;
With the heart of love and brain of light, and the dark shall flee away.

Give the gifts to happy children; in their faces' pure delight
Is the future's sparkling promise of the triumph of the right;
These are angels of our progress, and the music of their mirth
Is the message sounding ever of a paradise on earth.

This joy-day is for union, not the churches' narrow faith
Of one Christ, or one savior, of one martyr's crown of death.
In the world's broad field of battle do a million saviors shine;
All deeds of love, from age to age, declare the Christ divine.

In every mother's heart upflames the martyr's glorious fire—
The sacrifice—surrender to the helpless one's desire;
This is the noblest God of all—the crown amid the thorn;
The crown of joy, the crown of hope, o'er life's unceasing morn.

Man and Nature, mingling forces, make the heaven that we see—
This is the warp and woof of all the pictured tapestry;
Then let us weave, from day to day, the brightest and the best,
And make the world more beautiful, and every hearthstone blest.

Ever onward, is our summons, midst the fortunes of the strife,
Let the snows of age greet spring-time in the bloom of children's life;
Whate'er betide, be youthful still, and when the sun goes down,
In the gathering stars and darkness hail to-morrow's golden crown.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

BEFORE THE TURNVEREIN.

On Wednesday evening, January 9, S. P. Putnam will speak before the San Francisco Turnverein, in the Hall at 323 Turk street. Subject, "The American Republic." Admission free.

CALL FOR A STATE LIBERAL ORGANIZATION.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality, as such, shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely Secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The undersigned citizens of California, realizing that the safety of Republican institutions is imperiled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed by the least interference of the State in matters of religion, and believing, with the Founders of the Republic, that "Eternal vigilance is the price of Liberty," hereby invite the Freethinkers and Liberals of California to meet in Convention at Irving Hall, San Francisco, Sunday, January 27, 1889, at 10 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of forming an Auxiliary Association of the American Secular Union, to help secure throughout the country practical compliance with the above Demands of Liberalism:

NEW YORK LETTER.

The collapse of De Lesseps's Panama Canal has set every tongue wagging, "Didn't I tell you so?" There is more truth than poetry here. The belief was undoubtedly general that this old man would ultimately fail, for in no other way can the apathy of the American people over this work be explained. If there ever had been any prospect of success, the Monroe doctrine would have come to the front. There has been no letting down on this distinctively American idea. The stronger we become, the stronger hold this old notion of the elder Adams and Monroe has on us. Every observing man has, for the past two years, seen the handwriting on the wall. De Lesseps has made a plucky fight, but the inevitable was too strong for him. That our government will permit France to complete this work, no one in the East credits. "America for Americans" is a growing, not a fading, sentiment. The resignation of De Lesseps caused for a day some little apprehension in Wall street of financial trouble in Paris. This is possible, but not probable, as the holders of the Panama securities are of the middle classes, scattered all over France. The securities have been paid for, and are held as investment. Panics are caused by big losses falling on a few large operators, or moneyed institutions. In this instance the loss falls on a multitude of people. Such a state of affairs in this country would not cause a ripple of excitement in Wall street. Of course Frenchmen are different from other people, and one never knows just how to take them.

Of late Europe has been drawing on us for millions of gold. The bears in the Street are greatly exercised over it, and are predicting woes unnumbered. We are rich in gold, and can spare a few more millions without doing more than putting the rate of money up to 6 per cent. The continual coining of silver, and the extracting of gold from our mines, have reduced our dependence on Europe. We are as independent of her financially as we are politically. She rather looks to us. The ill-repute of our railroad securities is no reflection on our financial condition. The country is as solid as a rock. Our merchants are conservative, our banks are full of money. There has been no ballooning, except in building railroads into jungles, deserts, and waste places. The tonnage moved shows conclusively that our people are actively engaged in their daily pursuits. The profits may be small, but that matters little so long as every one is busy.

Every man, woman, and child in New York is preparing for Christmas. The stores are made more attractive than ever; foreign marts have been ransacked for novelties to please the eye, and from the rushing of the female portion of Gotham success seems to have been achieved. Macy, as usual, has his holiday show in his Fourteenth-street windows. It is a great attraction to children. Our "gin-mills" are decked outside with festoons of evergreens. Their multitude on some avenues presents an appearance at once grotesque and attractive. If the inside is as festive as the outside is attractive, Christmas will be jolly there.

Some of our cranks are rejoicing over "Mrs. Diss Debar," whose term of imprisonment on Blackwell Island expired on the 17th. Old Luther Marsh is said to be cured of his infatuation. How such frauds exist is a mystery, or, we should rather say, how a sensible man becomes their dupe is a mystery. Luther R. Marsh for years was one of our brightest lawyers, and the last man to be caught by such a woman. She must be a woman of magnetism, of intellect; nevertheless our courts have branded her a fraud. The Fox sisters have confessed that Spiritualism was a fraud at its birth. This confession ought to end this craze, but it seems to enrage that class of people known as Spiritualists in this part of the East.

Mrs. Diss Debar has asked through her lawyer, John D. Townsend, to see her children. This, Eldridge Gerry, president of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, refuses. This seems cruel, it may be just. That she is an adventuress the court, I take it, has settled, but that she is devoid of love for her offspring, I cannot believe. The Society, I think, frequently goes to extremes, and consequently at times is unjust. Gerry inherited a fortune from a miserly uncle. He is a kid-glove philanthropist.

EUDORUS.

New York, Dec. 19, 1888.

A THEOLOGICAL PARADOX.

That a house should seem to stand and the people continue to live in it as though nothing had happened, and this after all of its foundations had been removed—this is the paradox which I have in mind. And it is one of so striking a nature that one will hardly find it true in any other domain except that of theology. So remarkable a sight as this is worth looking at. Let us, therefore, consider it a little and see what lessons it may have for us.

The theological structure which orthodox Christianity has erected is clear-cut in outline, bound part to part, and thoroughly consistent with itself. As now we examine a few of the main features of the "plan of salvation," all this will appear.

1st. This world—a province of God's universal kingdom—is in a state of rebellion. Every man, woman, and child is born into this rebellious condition. The state of nature is one of alienation from God and all good. No matter how good a man may be, in the ordinary sense of the word, he is a rebel; and this fact taints all that he is or does. And until he "throws down the arms of his rebellion," no natural virtues can at all avail to put him in right relations to God.

This is perfectly reasonable on this governmental theory of the world. Sir Harry Vane's virtues did not make him any less a traitor to the king. So it is rational and logical for Mr. Moody to say: "Morality don't touch the question of salvation." Of course not, on the basis of this supposed theory and the supposed facts.

2d. God, against whom this causeless and wicked rebellion has been raised, has a perfect right to choose as to what terms he will require as the condition of forgiveness. Man, who deserves only death, has nothing to say on this subject.

3d. In order to maintain the majesty of his government and the inviolability of his laws, God is under the necessity of making such a public example of his hatred of sin, as well of his love, as will justify in the eyes of his intelligent creation his extending a free pardon to rebellious man. To this end the second person of the Trinity takes on human nature and suffers the penalty of the broken law. This secures the double end of vindicating God's justice and displaying his forgiving love.

4th. Now he is free to pardon all those who accept this offering as made on their behalf. And they have no right to complain if pardon is refused on any other terms.

5th. On this theory the church is made up of those who have accepted these terms. Such persons become the nucleus of a growing army of loyalists. It is their business to fight against whatever tends to continue this rebellion and to do all they can to induce God's enemies to lay down their arms.

9th. Those who become loyal are the willing subjects of God's kingdom, and so entitled to share God's final victory and the blessings of his heaven. Those who remain rebellious are followers and friends of Satan, the leader of God's enemies, and must expect to share his ultimate defeat and the pains and penalties of his prison-house.

This is the general scheme of things on which all the activities of the orthodox church are based.

Now, everybody knows that the entire foundation of this whole theological structure is the story of the garden of Eden and the fall of man. If man has not fallen, then this world is not a rebellious province of God's great kingdom. If man is not fallen, all the talk about providing terms or conditions of forgiveness is uncalled for. If man is not fallen, there is no need of the stupendous miracle of an incarnate and crucified God. If man is not fallen, the radical distinction between the church and the world breaks down. If man is not fallen, the popular dreams of heaven and hell are only dreams and do not accurately represent the future destiny of man and woman.

How stands this question then? Plainly, thus: In no civilized country, to-day, is there a boy or girl of fourteen years of age who has not the means of knowing that the story of the fall of man has no more reasonable basis of belief than have the stories of Hercules. Not only has it no rational support, it is beyond question disproved. That is, another story as to man's origin and nature is so thoroughly established that, but for theological bias, no intelligent person could be found who would think for one moment of questioning it.

Even the biblical support for the story of the Fall is almost wholly confined to the theological discussions of one man, Paul. The older and greater prophets say nothing about it. It appears in the Old Testament only after the contact of the Jews with the Persians, at the time of the captivity. For all competent scholars know that the early parts of Genesis, containing the story, were not composed until the time of or after the captivity. This, then, is a Pagan, Persian legend, and only that. It is a Pagan way of trying to account for the sorrows and evils of life. According to the orthodox theory, Jesus was God coming to earth to save man from the results of the fall, and yet, curiously enough, he does not seem to know anything about it.

But even though the Bible were full of it, from beginning to end, still we know, on other grounds, that it is not true. A belief in the Ascent of man has taken the place of a belief in his Fall in the minds of all free and competent students.

Of course it is to be expected that all those who still believe the story of the Fall should keep on in their endeavors to "save" people after the old methods. But now comes the wonder of our theological paradox. Those who still believe this story are not nearly enough to continue the activities of the churches on their present basis. Thousands of persons who do not believe it at all any longer still help to continue all these old activities just as though nothing had happened. Many among those who do this are ministers; that is, they have seen the entire foundation of their theological house taken out and yet go on living in it, and asking others to come into it for safety, as though they still believed it founded on the everlasting rock. And yet it ought to be plain, to even the feeblest intellect, that if this race of ours is not a fallen one, then—whatever else it may need—it does not need to be "saved from the effects of the Fall."

Let us now note two or three great evils that result from this paradoxical condition of affairs.

1st. It is kept up at a terrible cost of the sincerity of those who are even "silent partners" to what must hereafter be only a pretense, though ever so "pious" a one.

2d. Only less serious than this is another evil. If a physician thinks a patient is ill of a certain disease, of course he will treat him for that. But should he find out that the disease was of entirely another character, what would he do? And what would people be justified in saying if he should keep on doctoring him for the first supposed disease? If the human race has fallen, and the old theory about it is true, then, of course, a certain method of treatment is rational and helpful. But if it has not, and the old theory is not true, then the old treatment is not only injurious, but it stands square in the way of such a course of medicine as might put the patient on his feet. Consider, therefore, the waste of time, of money, of thought, of devotion and enthusiasm, that has been going on for a thousand years. That the world has gradually been improving is no justification of these theories. For, in the first place, it has improved more rapidly by as much as these old beliefs have become less and less influential. And, in the second place, patients often improve in spite of, and not because of, their doctors. And, in the third place, during the periods of the most rapid improvement, a thousand other agencies have been at work, through the activity of thousands who had rejected the old beliefs.

If only all the intelligence, the time and the money of the civilized world (which are now wasted on the old methods) could be directed to finding and curing the real evils of the world, the long dreamed of "kingdom of God" (the real kingdom of man) might be brought to pass in a single century. In the nature of things there is no reason why this old world should not become a garden, filled with intelligent and happy peoples.

In giving up the dreams and legends of the past, nothing is lost but illusions; and what is found is "the truth that"—in old theological phrase—"is able to make men wise unto salvation." And this salvation is from the real evils that destroy human happiness and human life, and not from shadows.—M. J. SAVAGE, in the Open Court.

A WOLF IN WOOLEN.

The world is kind to ministers and priests as a rule. There are in the United States about one hundred thousand of them who, with their families, are supported by the people. Their churches to the value of about $700,000,000 pay no taxes, and the people allow themselves to be taxed to make up the deficit caused by the omission to tax this vast amount of property. In return for this the ministers, as a rule, are quiet, peaceable, human: men who do what they can to make death painless and matrimony sweet. They are ready to take money from all sources, and never refuse it because of the opinions of those who give. But in the reverend Clark Braden is found a minister who, while he lives upon the social body, vilifies and maligns all that portion of it that does not recognize in him a being sent of God to denounce and destroy all beliefs that do not comport with his own. It is nothing to him that the Constitution of the United States guarantees to all freedom to entertain unmo'ested whatever opinions they may. He arrogantly assumes the right to traduce all men and women who do not confess him and Christ. It is apparent at times that he does not even consider the claims of Jesus upon the sympathies of the world in his vaulting ambition to be considered a divine being himself. Nothing is safe from his vile tongue. Such being the case, it is worth while that the public should know the truth in regard to this man. Having put on the livery of heaven, it is well enough to know that he is using it as a cover under which to serve the devil of his own meanness. In a debate which he recently held with Mr. B. F. Underwood in Oregon his emphasis was always laid upon scurrilous assaults upon men and women who do not accept the Bible as an infallible guide in life. His treatment of his opponent was such as might have been expected from a rough, a bully, or a blackguard. His introduction of his false, malignant, and diabolical attack on R. G. Ingersoll and his daughters into the debate (by attempting to advertise his "Ingersoll pamphlet") was a piece of audacious impudence that could not be excelled by a desperado who should force himself, pistol in hand, into the company of ladies and gentlemen, entirely justifying Mr. Underwood's severe language that the author of that pamphlet was "a mean vilifier and an infamous liar." Mr. Underwood protested against the sale or advertisement of this pamphlet from the platform during the debate, and as soon as the moderators came to understand its character they sustained Mr. Underwood in his "point of order," and Braden was compelled to respect the decision, and he made no further reference to the pamphlet during the debate. His attempts to convert his opponent's introduction of Darwin's doctrine of "Sexual Selection" into obscenity were the low and vicious acts of a guttersnipe. What is he, and why has he thus attempted to smirch better people than himself? Let his own church answer these questions in part. In August, 1876, "The Church of Christ," at Perry, Pike county, Ill., published a letter "To the Christian Brotherhood, wherever scattered, greeting," signed by the five elders of the church—M. B. Chenoweth, B. F. Dorsey, Joseph S. Chenoweth, A. Dorsey, and J. M. Browning. Referring to a tract, charging "our leading preachers as lewd and licentious men," and containing "most false, and slanderous" statements, written by Clark Braden, the church, through its elders, says:

Had we known its character, and that Clark Braden was its author, no letter of commendation would have gained him admission to our fellowship. We claim, therefore, that he imposed upon our ignorance in this matter when he sought and obtained our confidence and fellowship; and that consequently he is not, and never was, rightfully a member of this congregation. Under these circumstances we do not feel at liberty to bring him to an account before the bar of the church, even for wrongs and misdemeanors committed since coming among us, which we deem amply sufficient in themselves to warrant us in withdrawing our fellowship, if it existed, unless he repent of his wrongs.

The letter concludes by saying:

Until Clark Braden disavows the sentiments of the aforesaid pamphlet, acknowledges his wrong for thus slandering the church and the preachers, and sets himself right before the congregation for his conduct here, we must hold him as an enemy of the church and to the cause which we plead, and as wholly unworthy of a place among us, either as a member of the body or a preacher of the blessed gospel.

The Apostolic Times, a Disciple paper, August 3, 1876, said editorially:

We do not hesitate to declare that the author of such a tract deserves to be not only censured but excommunicated by the congregation to which he belongs, and repudiated by the entire brotherhood unless he gives evidence of sincere repentance. . . . If one who has obtained membership wrongfully deports himself wrongfully, and does things worthy of expulsion, as the elders in this case affirm of Mr. Braden, then the reasons for expulsion are multiplied and the right to expel, though not increased, becomes much clearer.

Braden declares that he forced the above-named gentlemen to retract their statement, but one of them, Mr. B. F. Dorsey, was subsequently written to from Salem, O., and from Meaford, Ont., asking if the charges against Braden had been withdrawn. Following is an extract from one of Mr. Dorsey's replies:

You ask if the inclosed charges still hold against Braden? I answer, They do. You then if ask Braden's character is good in this community. I answer, it is not by any means.

In the other letter Mr. Dorsey wrote (August 10, 1880):

You ask the question if the five elders of the Christian church in Perry have retracted their statement made by them Aug. 9, 1876, addressed to the Christian Brotherhood in reference to Clark Braden. They have not retracted anything they have published or said concerning Clark Braden.

The original of these letters can, if necessary, be produced.

The Rev. L. L. Luse, of Nebraska, says:

I have had business transactions with a large number of men in a great many different states—men of all characters and professions—but for pure meanness, unlimited trickery, uncalled for and foolish lying, the like of Clark Braden I have never known.

WILBER, NEB., April 6, 1887.

MR. EDITOR: Friday of last week was a cold day for the Rev. Clark Braden. He and the Rev. L. L. Luse have been making Wilber their headquarters for settling a little unpleasantness existing between them for the past two or three years. First, Rev. Luse had Rev. Braden arrested for selling mortgaged property. Then Rev. Braden had Rev. Luse arrested for perjury. Then Rev. Luse, in a civil suit, obtained judgment against Rev. Braden for about $150, and seized Rev. Braden's grip-sack, or trunk, containing some old clothes, boots, and Braden's lectures, all of which were sold at sheriff's sale. Then Rev. Braden, on the oath of Christian minister, had another warrant issued, and sent the sheriff all the way to Pennsylvania and had Rev. Luse again arrested for perjury. He was tried and acquitted, and at the instance of Rev. Luse, the sheriff seized Braden's overcoat to apply on aforesaid judgment; and Braden failed to prove himself a Christian by not even offering to give his other coat also.

H. KILGORE.

As long ago as 1871 Braden was in trouble with his own brethren. Owing to his malignant denunciation of some of them, it was said that he was "insane." It was then that he wrote to B. F. Underwood advising him how he should proceed to defeat Elder J. S. Sweeney, Braden's clerical brother, in debate. Following is an extract from the letter:

If you have not met Rev. J. S. Sweeney, you will find him weak on history, historic evidences, sciences, the position that the Bible is an outgrowth of pre-existent paganism and was built up like all other books of religion. He is sharp, pert, and declamatory, but superficial in education, not well read, and retails second-hand what he uses. If you will press these points on him and frequently press on him that he does not answer them, you will defeat him. He will fail in what we debated in our first and second propositions also. Review what you have presented on his attention, and you can defeat him. Should you feel like reminding him of our debate, do so FOR ME. This is between us, remember.

Braden's attack on Colonel Ingersoll is so malignant that it defeats itself. No intelligent person can glance through it without being convinced that its object is not to tell the truth, but to gratify a personal spite. Fortunately the pamphlet itself contains a statement that explains Braden's attitude toward the colonel. On page 5 Braden says: "In this volume we intend to publish the full text of every lecture as he delivers it." That is to say, Braden started out to write a biographical sketch of Colonel Ingersoll, then to steal his lectures, make a "volume" which should serve to advertise "Clark Braden" in connection with "Robert G. Ingersoll," being shekels and fame to the impecunious, disreputable priest, and set him up in business. The object was to steal the fame of the great Freethinker for the name, fame, and profit of the little Christian. But the publisher of Colonel Ingersoll's lectures happened to possess copyrights upon them, and the Rev. Clark Braden found his game blocked. Then he turned in rage and vomited his poverty-stricken bile upon the colonel and his family in this pamphlet, hoping to excite the colonel's anger to such a degree that he would either reply to Braden or kick him, or do something that would bring him before the public in connection with Ingersoll. However, the colonel has never paid the slightest attention to the fellow's filth, the scheme to advertise himself has been a failure, and his pamphlet has proved a poor investment. His attack on the character of Colonel Ingersoll's daughters is vice defiling virtue, sin defaming innocence, hideousness slandering beauty. It could have been produced only by a person whose nature is corrupt, whose heart is that of a hyena, whose tongue is that of a cobra, whose imbecility marks his reptilian tendencies. No man possessed of the remotest instincts of a gentleman would be guilty of such an act, and no gentleman will uphold him in it, even if it were true. But what is his authority? A man in Chicago told a man in Galva, and in the course of time Braden heard of it, and in order to "get even" with Colonel Ingersoll for not allowing him to steal his lectures and make his "volume," his low, ghoulish nature prompts him to publish it in this pamphlet.

Such is the man who is put forward by the Christian churches to defend Christianity against Freethought. But the churches of Oregon will soon learn, as the churches of other states learned long ago, that the caress of this man is worse than his kick. His defense of Christianity is more to be dreaded by the church than the influence of Freethought. The viper will ever sting the hand that warms it.

Braden's "evidence" presented against prominent Liberals is hear-say, gossip, and envious tattle, and it would not be admitted as relevant in any court of justice. But his mean, dastardly course opens the door for the introduction of matter upon the other side, and as Braden is put forward as a Christian minister of good character and standing, it is proper to weigh his attack on Freethinkers by the estimate of those who know him. Such being the case, it can be said that there is better evidence to prove that Braden has been guilty of disgraceful and disreputable conduct in private life than any that Braden produces in his pamphlet to sustain his reptilian attack upon Colonel Ingersoll and his family. There is better evidence to prove that this reverend, Clark Braden, has been known as a petty thief than is any of the testimony introduced into his pamphlet to prove his charges against Colonel Ingersoll.

In the recent debate this "meek and lowly" charged that Colonel Ingersoll had been engaged in returning fugitive slaves, and when asked for his authority said:

"It was old Mr. McGee."

"Where did he live?"

"At a town in Illinois."

"What was his first name?"

"He is dead."

"Oh, he's dead, and you can slander Ingersoll in his name with impunity!" exclaimed Mr. Underwood.

There is positive evidence to prove that this man who slanders innocent young women was disowned and denounced by the Campbellite church in Perry, Illinois, for the publication of a slanderous and lying pamphlet attacking some of his brethren in the church. There is positive evidence to prove that he is often reckless, untruthful, and malicious in his statements. There is positive evidence to prove that he will not pay an honest debt.

Now, therefore, Braden's attack on Colonel Ingersoll and his estimable daughters, when examined in the light of its author's character, is seen to be the work of a man who, for a quarter of a century, has borne a bad name—a man who has been called a thief, a slanderer, a liar, and a brutal husband. What the statements of such a man are worth the public can readily understand.

OREGON.

INGERSOLL'S REPLY TO CARDINAL MANNING.

From the North American Review.

VIII.

If the real pope is the vicar of Christ, the true shepherd of the sheep, this fact should be known not only to the vicar, but to the sheep. A divinely founded and guarded church ought to know its own shepherd, and yet the Catholic sheep have not always been certain who the shepherd was.

The Council of Pisa, held in 1409, deposed two popes—rivals—Gregory and Benedict—that is to say, deposed the actual vicar of Christ and the pretended. This action was taken because a council, enlightened by the Holy Ghost, could not tell the genuine from the counterfeit. The council then elected another vicar, whose authority was afterwards denied. Alexander V. died, and John XXIII. took his place; Gregory XII. insisted that he was the lawful pope; John resigned, then he was deposed, and afterwards imprisoned; then Gregory XII. resigned, and Martin V. was elected. The whole thing reads like the annals of a South American revolution.

The Council of Constance restored, as the cardinal declares, the unity of the church, and brought back the consolation of the Holy Ghost. Before this great council John Huss appeared and maintained his own tenets. The council declared that the church was not bound to keep its promise with a heretic. Huss was condemned and executed on the 6th of July, 1415. His disciple, Jerome of Prague, recanted, but having relapsed, was put to death, May 30, 1416. This cursed council shed the blood of Huss and Jerome.

The cardinal appeals to the author of "Ecce Homo" for the purpose of showing that Christianity is above nature, and the following passages among others are quoted:

"Who can describe that which unites men? Who has entered into the formation of speech, which is the symbol of their union? Who can describe exhaustively the origin of civil society? He who can do these things can explain the origin of the Christian church."

These passages should not have been quoted by the cardinal. The author of these passages simply says that the origin of the Christian church is no harder to find and describe than that which unites men—than that which has entered into the formation of speech, the symbol of their union—no harder to describe than the origin of civil society—because he says that one who can describe these can describe the other.

Certainly none of these things are above nature. We do not need the assistance of the Holy Ghost in these matters. We know that men are united by common interests, common purposes, common dangers—by race, climate, and education. It is no more wonderful that people live in families, tribes, communities, and nations, than that birds, ants, and bees live in flocks and swarms.

If we know anything, we know that language is natural—that it is a physical science. But if we take the ground occupied by the cardinal, then we insist that everything that cannot be accounted for by man, is supernatural. Let me ask, by what man? What man must we take as the standard? Cosmas or Humboldt, St. Irenæus or Darwin? If everything that we cannot account for is above nature, then ignorance is the test of the supernatural. The man who is mentally honest, stops where his knowledge stops. At that point he says that he does not know. Such a man is a philosopher. Then the theologian steps forward, denounces the modesty of the philosophers as blasphemy, and proceeds to tell what is beyond the horizon of the human intellect.

Could a savage account for the telegraph, or the telephone, by natural causes? How would he account for these wonders? He would account for them precisely as the cardinal accounts for the Catholic church.

Belonging to no rival church, I have not the slightest interest in the primacy of Leo XIII., and yet it is to be regretted that this primacy rests upon such a narrow and insecure foundation.

The cardinal says that "it will appear almost certain that the original Greek of St. Irenæus, which is unfortunately lost, contained either the word, or some inflection of one, which signifies primacy."

From this it appears that the primacy of the bishop of Rome rests on some "inflection" of a Greek word—and that this supposed inflection was in a letter supposed to have been written by St. Irenæus, which has certainly been lost. Is it possible that the vast fabric of papal power has this, and only this, for its foundation? To this "inflection" has it come at last?

The cardinal's case depends upon the intelligence and veracity of his witnesses. The fathers of the church were utterly incapable of examining a question of fact. They were all believers in the miraculous. The same is true of the apostles. If St. John was the author of the Apocalypse, he was undoubtedly insane. If Polycarp said the things attributed to him by Catholic writers, he was certainly in the condition of his master. What is the testimony of St. John worth in the light of the following? "Cerinthus, the heretic, was in a bath-house. St. John and another Christian were about to enter. St. John cried out: 'Let us run away, lest the house fall upon us while the enemy of truth is in it.'" Is it possible that St. John thought that God would kill two eminent Christians for the purpose of getting even with one heretic?

Let us see who Polycarp was. He seems to have been a prototype of the Catholic church, as will be seen from the following statement concerning this father: "When any heretical doctrine was spoken in his presence he would stop his ears." After this, there can be no question of his orthodoxy. It is claimed that Polycarp was a martyr—that a spear was run through his body, and that from the wound the soul, in the shape of a bird, flew away. The history of his death is just as true as the history of his life.

Irenæus, another witness, took the ground that there was to be a millennium—a thousand years of enjoyment in which celibacy would not be the highest form of virtue. If he is called as a witness for the purpose of establishing the divine origin of the church, and if one of his "inflections" is the basis of papal supremacy, is the cardinal also willing to take his testimony as to the nature of the millennium?

All the fathers were infinitely credulous. Every one of them believed, not only in the miracles said to have been wrought by Christ, by the apostles, and by other Christians, but every one of them believed in the Pagan miracles. All of these fathers were familiar with wonders and impossibilities. Nothing was so common with them as to work miracles, and on many occasions they not only cured diseases, not only reversed the order of nature, but succeeded in raising the dead.

It is very hard, indeed, to prove what the apostles said, or what the fathers of the church wrote. There were many centuries filled with forgeries—many generations in which the cunning hands of ecclesiastics erased, obliterated, and interpolated the records of the past—during which they invented books, invented authors, and quoted from books that never existed.

The testimony of the "Fathers" is without the slightest value. They believed everything—they examined nothing. They received as a waste-basket receives. Whoever accepts their testimony will exclaim with the cardinal: "Happily men are not saved by logic."

THE FORUM.

The entertainment arranged by the Forum Quartette for the evening of Dec. 12, was a splendid artistic, if not a financial success, and to Mr. Frank Stillman, the organist, and our leader, Mr. Card, are due the thanks of the organization for the creditable programme.

Miss Deal, our former organist, also a very accomplished pianist, who adds delicacy of interpretation to her efforts, kindly assisted, receiving a merited recall. In fact, to abbreviate this notice, I might state that all the numbers were so exceptionally well rendered that they were encored. Prof. Geo. A. Vinton, director of the Chicago Musical and Dramatic College, and one of our active members, whose inimitable character impersonations are a whole entertainment in themselves, added much to the strength of the programme. Mrs. Emma Ma Dan's solo was rendered with the evenness of quantity, easy phrasing, and melodic grace of a voice naturally true to pitch, possessing sweetness and power. Miss Hattie Allen and Mr. Stillman's difficult piano duo was performed with the masterly dash of a pair of virtuosos, and the young lady admirably sustained her artistic reputation in the solo which followed.

The songs of Messrs. Haverson and Hayes were admirably sung, and brought down the house. The professional lady whistler, Miss Bigelow, was very fine, but it was scarcely necessary to add such expense to so excellent a programme.

The recital of little Florence Segner was a novelty. When her father mounted the platform with an immense easel we were full of expectancy to know what this clever little six-year-old was going to do. It turned out to be an original poetic version of "Mary's Little Lamb," with thirteen large crayon drawings depicting the thrilling situations of the tragic story. Mr. Segner's illustrations and the little lady's recital will be a cherished memory of the altogether pleasing performance.

THE LIGHT-BEARER.

Moses Harman, the much-persecuted editor of Lucifer, occupied the rostrum at the Forum last Sunday, and though the first time he had ever essayed to address a public gathering, delivered a very able lecture from his point of view on the Eighth Demand of Liberalism, entitled "Christian vs. Natural Morality." A very interesting and animated discussion followed, participated in by Judge F. C. Russell, C. S. Darrow, Moses Hull, the celebrated lecturer, Wm. Holmes, H. E. Bartholomew, and the writer.

PREMIUMS.

Attention is called to the premiums for new subscribers to FREETHOUGHT offered on another page. A good many of our friends have worked for the paper and done their best, and have refused all offers of reward in the form of a commission. The premium list of books is enticing; we would like to see a thousand readers take advantage of it.

RENEWALS.

This is the season for renewals, and we are reminded of that fact both by the large number sent in and by the large number that have not as yet reached us. We have had a year's trial before a jury of our patrons. The verdict, which will come in the form of renewals, is due. We trust that the jury will be unanimously in favor of giving us another year.

SAMPLE COPIES.

This issue is sent to several thousand persons who are not subscribers. FREETHOUGHT earnestly endeavors to find favor in the eyes and minds of all Liberals. It seeks also their patronage. Reader, if you find FREETHOUGHT a paper that promises to give you your money's worth during the next year, subscribe, and it will visit you every week. The subscription price is $2 per annum. Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors. DR. FELLOWS.

THE large choir at the Moody meetings draws well, and a patient public listen to the wearisome twaddle of the revivalist as a penance.

THE colored man continues to distinguish himself in the field of religion, a convention of Catholic negroes having just been held at Washington. It is getting so now that when a chicken is missing there is no way of determining whether it has gone to line the ribs of a Baptist minister or a Catholic priest.

THE Bulgarian monk who is preaching to interested workingmen in the northern part of the state may be a fanatic, but he is sound on some questions. For instance, he denounces the popular churches for begging the hard-earned wages of the poor to build costly edifices and pay high salaries to their preachers. This is worthy the attention of working people.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Catholics have been occupying a public school building for parochial school purposes, but the Protestants raised such a rumpus that the Rev. Mr. Sheedy, the priest in that parish, has decided to vacate. The Catholics should now retaliate by driving Protestantism out of Pittsburgh's public schools. The catechism has as much right in the schools as the Bible.

THE Rev. John Dowie, faith-healer, is trying to make Job out a liar. It will be remembered that the prophet declared that "the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away." For this Mr. Dowie would substitute, "The Lord giveth and the devil taketh away." If somebody will take the Rev. John Dowie away we will give him due credit, whether it is done by the Lord or his great adversary.

NEW JERSEY has a law, passed in 1770, which makes it a crime for any one to attempt to pass himself off on the public as the messiah, and a man has just been arrested for violating it. He refused to give bail and demanded trial, saying that God would be his counsel and defense. Readers of the Bible will recall that a man in Palestine, termed the messiah, once went to trial with similar confidence; and that at the last moment he was moved to exclaim, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

AMONG the claims made for the Catholic church by Cardinal Manning in his discussion with Colonel Ingersoll was the one that the church had abolished demonology. Ingersoll showed that the claim was untrue. Now two Catholic priests of San Francisco tell an Examiner reporter that all priests are at ordination invested by the bishop with the power of exorcism, or casting out devils. It seems, further, that there is still in the Catholic church an order called the Order of Exorcists. The priests explain that Spiritualism is of satanic origin, and that mediums are "possessed."

MRS. MARY H. MCGLYNN, who married Frank McGlynn, a brother of the former coadjutor of Henry George, has sued for a divorce in the San Francisco courts. Frank McGlynn is a well-known and reputable real estate dealer of this city. Mrs. McGlynn, who is a Catholic, charges that her husband scoffs at the pope; ridicules the Jesuits, will not go to church, and has made their home a house of blasphemy. She further avers that he is an Atheist. In view of which she demands an absolute divorce and a division of the estate. If this case were investigated it is probable that a priest would be found back of it who will get a good share of the estate in return for a dispensation permitting a Catholic woman to obtain a divorce.

NEWS AND NOTES.

I thought to strike golden sunshine when I arrived in California. But the skies were misty and the streets muddy in Sacramento in the dim light of Saturday morning, December 29. It had been raining persistently for over a month. The old inhabitants say that this is a remarkably damp season, but that the wet weather gives promise of a big crop. In some places, however, there has been so much rain that seed cannot be planted. The next day after my arrival the skies became clear and brilliant, and it looks now as if the sunny days are ascendant, and if so, all the valleys and hills will be ready for cultivation. Yes, gloriously the sun shines forth on Sunday and on New Year's day, and the mud disappears with marvelous rapidity. It does not stay long upon the soil of California when Apollo rides through the heavens in his unclouded chariot. I spent New Year's at the home of N. D. Goodell, where every season flows along with bright serenity. When the rains descend the fireside is blazing still with cheerful glow. Also I met Mr. and Mrs. O. T. Davis with greetings of the new year, and R. Butterfield and others, who look forward and not backward, and "lend a hand." So the old year passes with happy memories and the new year comes with splendid hope. Looking over the months of labor, and thinking of the many friends and homes along the way from sea to sea, where "mountains kiss high heaven;" where broad rivers flow, plains spread to the blue horizon, harvest-fields ripple like summer's ocean, and orange blossoms mingle with golden fruit—from the varied scene touched with the spirit of progress, where life and thought prevail, rich with nature's pomp—inspirations come to clearer work in the ever-broadening pathway of mankind. The world is better to-day than it was yesterday, and it will be better and happier to-morrow than it is to-day.

In the wide future there's a golden age,
 Richer than ever gleaned on poet's page;
 Where all that's excellent on earth shall thrive,
 And the pure, generous soul alone shall live;
 Where weakness, misery and narrow thought;
 The stupid pleasures that are sold and bought;
 The heart that's false, the spirit insincere,
 The dark ambition and the soul of fear—
 All these shall vanish in its vivid light,
 And happy homes shall sparkle on the sight.
 Oh, there are prophecies of this bright time,
 In many a burning word and thought sublime;
 We feel them when the gorgeous spring-time flows,
 When summer murmurs to the golden close;
 We feel them in those deep and mystic days
 That flash and gladden in October's haze;
 And winter's pure and sparkling lengths of snow
 Unfold its fairy visions in their glow.
 Thus nature blooms upon the stream of love,
 It's rich with joy below, around, above.
 The universal being flames in all—
 In constellations huge and feathery ball.
 Within, without, to purity, and life,
 The perfect wonder shines above the strife.
 The earnest purpose makes the future bright,
 And paradise is found in doing right.

On New Year's I witnessed the darkening of the sun. The eclipse was nearly total at Sacramento. It was a magnificent spectacle when the sweeping orb left only a little rim of light along the vast firmament. One bright star was visible to the naked eye, shining through the fleecy clouds that floated in the upper heaven. It seemed like a sleepless watcher over the pale couch of the king of day, a maiden fair who would not desert the discrowned monarch, dimmed by the insolent, ungrateful moon, which would never wear its silver jewels save for the smiles of the genial Phœbus. The sun eclipsed by moon! What a story of human life in that majestic symbol—nature repeating the tragedy of genius!

The clouds hung in strange, wild splendor around that desolate scene. A pale brilliance, mingling with deep, dark gulfs, as if there were a sunset in the middle sky, made the view intensely pathetic. There never was a picture more infinitely suggestive. The wandering eye saw masses of color changing like lightning on a sea of darkness. The supreme moment, when the rim of light was tiniest, overshadowed like a pall. Around the defeated sun the clouds rolled in midnight gloom. Then suddenly the light increased, as if by some magic touch, and the ghastly glare turned to golden flame. The mighty sun appears victorious, regains its diadem, and woos once more the earth, and covers it with sparkling robes.

Early on Wednesday morning I seek the Golden Gate. I read of blizzards in the East—of blinding snows—but here are the flowers of spring, the beautiful, verdant swards, and shining waters. It is like New England in June, this January morning in California. The hills are simply dazzling in their bright array. No snow, no ice, but expanses of living green.

Once more voyaging the broad bay, the regal city of the West greets the eye; once more the thronging multitude makes pictures of varying life; once more the music of the superb boat mingles with the flashing tide, then grates against the busy wharf. Once more I am in FREETHOUGHT office, where, twelve months ago, scarcely a single subscriber was on the books, and now the number is among the thousands.

"The boundless future pours its ample dower Upon the toil and struggle of to day."

On Sunday afternoon I meet again the Liberal friends of Oakland. I lecture at Odd Fellow's Hall, on "The Religious Conspiracy." A fair beginning has been made; lectures will be given at the same place for the next two Sunday afternoons. Friend Schou, the "deacon" of our "Big Church," the church of Humanity, the church of Science, was present to carry on the practical business arrangements of the meetings, and he is always ready to do this with the same enthusiasm as when a member of the Methodist church. The prospects are favorable for progressive work in Oakland. Our welcome was all that heart could wish. Considerable interest was awakened by the subjects presented, and the dangers that threatened the Republic, especially the attitude of some of the labor organizations of this country; for instance, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, which, by vote at its last national gathering, pledged its support to the Blair Sabbath bill, and therefore to the union of church and state. Labor organizations should not thus allow themselves to be hoodwinked into such ecclesiastical schemes. Sturdy protests are being made against such indorsements of Sabbath legislation, and I hope there will be a thorough agitation among working people on this point, so that they can understand this Sabbath-in-the-state business to be an enemy of the rights of labor.

The clergymen of Oakland are in quite a hubbub over "Robert Elsmere." Sermons have been preached pro and con, and discussion waxes loud, and many side issues have been introduced. The interest justifies a lecture upon "Robert Elsmere," which I shall give next Sunday afternoon. This is a representative book, and although it does not represent Freethought, nevertheless it is a valuable ally, and has given orthodoxy a staggering blow. No wonder the priests are excited over its marvelous popularity. This is a sign of the times, but it does not betoken the "second coming of Christ." I shall endeavor to show the value of this book, and also its limitations.

The meeting in San Francisco on Sunday evening was indicative of success. It was the largest audience I have yet addressed in this city. There is growth. This is all that we can hope for now, but it is a prophecy of what will be "in the long result of time."

GOOD DEEDS.

The Silverton Secular Union has contributed, by collection, $9.20 to the American Sentinel, which is pushing forward the Sunday Remonstrance Petition with untiring determination. In this fight now forced upon the Liberals by the American Sabbath Union and Senator Blair's bill, the Seventh Day Adventists are persistent and courageous allies, and we join hands heartily with them. They have already secured ten thousand signatures in Oakland, and their agents are busily at work throughout the land. Let every subscriber of FREETHOUGHT send for a copy of this Remonstrance and secure names. The supporters of Senator Blair's bill claim fifteen million names upon their petition. The action of the Silverton Secular Union is a good one to follow. This Union, also, by the efforts of its lady members has raised $50 for a Library fund. The like should be done at every possible point. A Freethought library is a constant and widening influence.

M. J. Kettering, of Ranier, Oregon, has contributed $1 to the Hacker fund. We would like to see more of these good gifts for our veteran friend. Many to-day enjoy the fruits of his strenuous toil. In "News and Notes" from Stella, our friend Kettering's name, by a typographical error, has changed to "Kettinger." Perhaps there is nothing in a name, but we desire our generous comrade to be titled as he really is, for he is a well-known citizen of the Northwest. R. Butterfield, of Sacramento, gives $5 for the Girard will case, with the remark "that there is more in his pocket for the same purpose, when needed." Friend Butterfield is as hopeful now as in his younger days. He is not the kind to get rich, for he has too much philosophy, but if he ever does get a hold upon the golden treasure of this earth it won't go to the making of harps, or the mansions and streets of the New Jerusalem, but to the building of a Freethought hall in the capital of the state.

The Girard will case is of the utmost importance. To understand this thoroughly one should read Dr. Westbrook's book on the subject. Copies are for sale at FREETHOUGHT office, price $1.

LIBERALISM EAST AND WEST.

The "Truth Seeker Annual for 1889" is a publication of unusual importance. Its illustrations are good; its calendar is most valuable; its review of "Freethought in the United States, 1888," written in thunderous Gladstonian sentences, is complete and comprehensive, if we except its failure to record the birth and growth of a Freethought journal in San Francisco; its symposium on "Liberalism" is the greatest and best addition to Liberal literature made for many years, and the collocation entitled "Ingersoll and Shakspeare" is nothing less than wonderful.

But the chief feature of the Annual is the Symposium. The editor submitted a series of fourteen questions to the leading Freethinkers of the country, and twenty-four replied. The fourteen questions cover a great deal of debatable ground, but perhaps the one the answers to which will be of most interest to the readers of FREETHOUGHT is this:

"Where are the most Liberals, and in what section of the country is the best work for Liberalism being done?"

Colonel Ingersoll answers as follows:

"The most Liberals are in the most intelligent section of the United States. Where people think the most, you will find the most Liberals; where people think the least, you will find the most bigots. Bigotry is produced by feeling; Liberalism, by thinking—that is to say, the one is a prejudice, the other a principle."

James Parton answers none of the questions, but, as he says, merely sends the thought that came into his mind when he read them.

Charles Watts replies that according to his experience, there are most Liberals and best work done in Grand Rapids, Mich.; Chicago, Ill.; Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, Pa., and in Toronto and the Lower Provinces, Canada.

Capt. Robert C. Adams mentions Canada and Boston.

J. D. Shaw finds most Liberals among the reading classes.

J. H. Burnham believes that both the East and the West offer interesting fields.

Mrs. E. D. Slenker names New York and Boston as the best points for Liberalism, though not in proportion to population.

Thus three writers locate the center of Liberalism in the East, and four are non-committal. Now let us quote the seventeen others. They answer the question where the best work is being done for Liberalism in this way:

Helen Gardener: "In the West and Northwest."

S. P. Putnam: "The West."

E. A. Stevens: "In the West."

Parker Pillsbury: "In and west of New York."

F. M. Holland: "In the Northwest."

E. B. Foote, Jr.: "West of the Mississippi."

Lucy N. Colman: "The West."

L. K. Washburn: "In the Western states."

Ella E. Gibson: "In the West."

Susan H. Wixon: "In the West."

John Peck: "The grand prairies of the West."

W. S. Bell: "In the wide West."

E. C. Walker: "The Pacific Coast, the territories, and Texas."

Mattie A. Freeman: "In the West."

Juliet H. Severance, M. D.: "In the West."

John R. Kelso: "I would prefer the Pacific Coast."

G. H. Dawes: "North Central and Pacific states."

Out of twenty writers, therefore, who express an opinion, seventeen agree that the best work for Liberalism is being done in the West. It is certainly high praise to the workers in this section; but a few years ago, before the American Secular Union had sent its secretary through the country to lecture wherever an audience could be found, this verdict would not have been given. Since that time, however, and especially during the past year, there is little doubt that the West has been the scene of the greater activity in Liberal work. The Truth Seeker and the Liberal Club in New York; the Investigator and L. K. Washburn in Boston; E. A. Stevens and the Local Secular Union in Chicago; Charles Watts and Secular Thought in Toronto, Canada; the Pennsylvania Liberals, and others, are doing magnificent service. The lecture and newspaper work in the West has heretofore been done largely by non-residents. Now that this state of affairs is changed, still greater results may be looked for in the future.

TO THE LIBERALS OF CALIFORNIA.

The Call for a convention of the Liberals of this state, and the meetings in the month of January, point to work of vital importance in the growth of the Liberal party. It is hoped that every Liberal in this state will feel an interest and responsibility in this endeavor for a union of Freethought forces. This union is necessary, for, without doubt, a determined effort will be made for larger ecclesiastical authority in state and national legislation. It needs but slight study of the signs of the times to discern a gathering storm. Six million signatures have been attached to a petition in favor of a National Sabbath law, and the Romish church, by the attitude of Cardinal Gibbons, with its seven millions of membership, is committed to this usurpation of rights. There can no longer be indifference. One cannot withdraw from the state. Its strong arm is over all the land. The rich and the poor alike must obey its mandate. No true American can affirm he has nothing at stake in such a crisis. It won't do to say that tyrannical laws will not be passed. Such laws are already on the statute books, and Freethinkers and Christians alike have been imprisoned in consequence. It is the illusion of some that the republic, like the king, can do no wrong. But in a republic there can be despotism and a disregard of justice, and unless every citizen is instant to note and remove all infringements upon personal liberty, there is danger. If Liberals would devote a little time to these matters they would be aroused to most earnest action, and their voice would be heard.

United action is needed against combined ecclesiastical encroachments. The State Convention is for this purpose. It is a call for the maintenance of human rights. It is a call to bring the administration of our government to the simple and sublime principles of the Declaration of Independence. Our platform is a platform of rights. It has no creed of belief or non-belief. However important belief and the understanding of the truth and the triumph of knowledge over ignorance may be, first and foremost, beyond the truth or falsehood of any belief, is the right to hold a belief. Rights transcend beliefs. To believe the right is indeed of infinite moment, but the right to believe is even greater than this, for the right to believe is the shining road to every glorious truth.

The summons is not to the defense of any creed, but to the defense of liberty and justice. If it were merely a matter of creed, Liberals might be justified in a do-nothing policy. One might say, I care not what my neighbor believes. It concerns me not whether he prays good Lord or good devil. I am indifferent to the intellectual and moral condition of others. Each must find truth or error in his own way. Thus the free-and-easy Liberal might declare, and if there were no question of rights at issue there would be no urgency of disapproval. But the richest, the most cultured, the most self-reliant Liberal is under the dominion of the state. Unless he becomes a disembodied spirit he cannot escape this universal power. So long as he has houses and bank stock and a body; so long as he desires work and play; so long as he must eat and drink, and clothe himself; so long as he is in this world, a man among men, he is under the control of the state. He is a citizen in the state. He is subject to the laws of the state. His personal liberty is constantly in jeopardy. He may be selfish in regard to creeds. He may not care to make people wiser or better. But he cannot be careless in regard to rights. If he has the spirit of a man he must stand for his rights. He cannot surrender them. No man can. The most indifferent must defend his rights, or suffer personal degradation.

This is the question of to-day: human rights. When liberty is established truth will win the day, but if liberty is destroyed then truth is lost in the shadows of tyranny.

A bold attempt is being made by the Christians of this land to revolutionize the government—to unite church and state—and under the forms of democracy to make one of the greatest despotisms in the world. The principles of the fathers of the republic, of Washington and Jefferson, are to be repudiated, and it is to be declared that this nation is founded upon the Bible, and only believers in its divine revelation can enjoy the privileges of citizenship.

There is no doubt of a wide-spread conspiracy for the establishment of religious authority. A majority of the people are not in favor of this, but a determined and bigoted minority will sometimes overcome a careless and indifferent majority and practically rule. Measures are often adopted which the best part of the people do not desire. They are lobbied through by the pertinacity and secret workings of religious zeal. The existence of the Salvation Army, the power of the Roman church, the numerous revivals, all proclaim that the spirit of superstition is prevalent, and where there is superstition there are the conditions of tyranny. This tyranny has already lifted its head in the councils of the nation, supported by fifteen millions of the adherents of the church.

There should be no delay, but action at once. The Liberals of California should not be backward in this matter. Already there has been a noble response. Many, however, do not see the necessity of effort. We urge these to a careful consideration of the tendencies of the time, and to realize that, being citizens, they cannot escape the dangers of citizenship—that they cannot be independent of superstition so long as superstition creeps and crawls and hisses, even in the very Senate of the United States, and makes the laws of the land, and imprisons the advocates of liberty.

To those who have shown an interest in this united action; whose names are signed to the Call, and whose generous support has aided the advance of Freethought, we say, do not let your efforts slacken in this important undertaking. The victory will not be won for years to come. It will never be won unless we agitate, and enlighten the people. We must do our best constantly. The battle for human rights will never end until the whole earth is free from the shadow of superstition.

All Liberals of California and the Coast must, therefore, have a vital interest in the success of these January meetings. Success here is success all along the line. It will give a vast impetus to Liberalism throughout the West, and help organize at other favorable places. In this metropolis the heart-beat of reform will create forces of advance in every direction.

In conclusion, friends will realize that this far-reaching work cannot be done without the sinews of war. It is necessary to secure one of the best halls in the city, and to advertise largely. There are thousands of Liberals to be reached, who can only be reached by widely-scattered notices and newspaper reports. There are no half rates for Liberals. We have to pay for all that we get, and full price. We must attract public attention to our work. We hope that generous donations will still come in. The cost of hall and advertising for these January meetings will be about two hundred dollars, not counting the services of individuals who must devote themselves almost exclusively to this undertaking. The liberality already displayed is an earnest of continued supply, and from now on the enterprise will be vigorously pushed. From all parts of the state the names of Liberals give greeting and promise. Let each contribute what he can to this forward movement, and the banners of Freethought will not "pale their ineffectual fires" when the bloody sceptre of orthodoxy would tower over the flag of the republic.

IN OAKLAND.

There will be a lecture in Oakland by S. P. Putnam next Sunday afternoon, January 13, at 3 o'clock, in Odd Fellow's Hall, corner of Eleventh and Franklin streets. Subject: "Robert Elsmere." Come all. Admission free.

PREMIUMS.

Attention is called to the premiums for new subscribers to FREE-THOUGHT offered on another page. A good many of our friends have worked for the paper and done their best, and have refused all offers of reward in the form of a commission. The premium list of books is enticing; we would like to see a thousand readers take advantage of it.

RENEWALS.

This is the season for renewals, and we are reminded of that fact both by the large number sent in and by the large number that have not as yet reached us. We have had a year's trial before a jury of our patrons. The verdict, which will come in the form of renewals, is due. We trust that the jury will be unanimously in favor of giving us another year.

ABOUT this time, when the bigots are agitating for a Sunday law, there should be a large circulation of Harry Hoover's "Sabbath Imposture." Price 10 cents; fifteen for $1.

THE MEETINGS.

The series of Liberal meetings at Irving Hall, this city, opened most auspiciously last Sunday evening with the Freethought element of San Francisco represented by a large and warmly enthusiastic audience. Contributions to the expenses of the work now amount to $80.75, donated as follows:

Next Sunday evening, January 13, "Evolution and Creation."

We have recieved many inquiries and some orders for the Ingersoll-Gladstone discussion in book form. The discussion has not yet appeared as a book, but undoubtedly will at an early day, when we shall be able to furnish it and to fill deferred orders.

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD's philosophical novel, "Robert Elsmere," which so disturbed the orthodoxy of Mr. Gladstone, and which still continues to give the clergy great uneasiness, may be ordered from this office. Price 50 cents; 665 pp.

It is rather remarkable that the publications in this city calling themselves newspapers should have known nothing about the lecture at Irving Hall last Sunday night. It is explainable only on the theory that reporters who were not at some prize fight were attending the Moody revival.

"ROMAN RULE AND RUIN," the series of articles on the history or the Catholic church, by Z. Shed, which recently appeared in FREETHOUGHT, is now issued in pamphlet form, together with the poem, "Our Father in Heaven," by Charles Stephenson. The price of the pamphlet is ten cents; four for 25 cents; ten for 45 cents; twenty-five for $1.

ANTHONY COMSTOCK, of New York, secretary of the Vice society, has got himself into hot water. Last week he caused the arrest of a saloon-keeper named Gus Junker, for violating the law against lotteries. Junker had two marine views exposed in his saloon, and was about to raffle them for the benefit of Joseph Sellner, who recently lost two children, whose wife is dying, and who is in destitute circumstances. Junker explained that he would not make a cent by the raffle, but that it was simply an act of charity, but Comstock insisted upon his arrest and that of his barkeeper. Justice Ford paroled the prisoners. The Germans are denouncing Comstock, Junker being president of one of their large societies.

MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL, of Kansas City, Mo., has entered the Liberal lecture field. Mrs. Krekel is one of the ablest women in this country, and is capable of doing a vast amount of good work. Liberals anywhere who engage her for lectures will have their highest expectations more than fulfilled. Address Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel, 1101 Charlotte street, Kansas City, Mo., for subjects and terms.

THE Greek church in this city, of which our correspondent, Brother Vladimir, is bishop, celebrated last Sunday, the 6th, as Christmas, and next Sunday will be observed as New Year's. Greek Catholics, by retaining the Old Style calendar, are nearly two weeks behind the age, but their Christmas has the same origin as that of other sects. It commemorates the resurrection of Baldur, the Scandinavian sun-god.

MADAM DISS DEBAR, of New York, recently released from prison, whither she was sent for obtaining money under false pretenses, now announces that she will lecture with Archbishop Corrigan as her patron. Her claim to the friendship of the archbishop is denied by Catholics, but it seems unfortunate that so harmonious a combination should be broken. The madam and the prelate are both in the same line of business.

It is charged by Freethinkers that the reason why people remain Christians is because they never reflect upon the subject of their faith. That view is now confirmed by the Rev. Joseph Sasia, of this city. In his sermon last Sunday he stated that Catholics continue faithful because they "do not fall into the pernicious habit of forming their own opinions on theological matters, which habit is the main cause for Infidelity."

GERMAN Freethinkers are active. A Freethinking School Society (Der Freisinnige Schulverein) was organized in Chicago last month. Its object for the present is the establishment of secular schools on Sunday. Discarding the Bible as unfit to be put into the hands of children, it proposes to teach as substitutes history, science, and political economy. Similar organizations are perfecting in New York, Milwaukee, and other points, and are the outcome of a resolution passed at the last annual meeting of the Northwestern Turnerbund.

OBSERVATIONS.

Last Sunday evening I had the pleasure of attending a Freethought lecture where I was not called upon to either pass the hat or to put anything into it. My happiness, therefore, was unshadowed. The lecture was delivered by Putnam, at Irving Hall, before an audience of some three hundred persons—the largest that he has ever addressed in this city, excepting at the Paine celebration. Putnam lectured in Oakland Sunday afternoon. I did not attend, and he is at this time engaged in writing a report of the same in his usual able style, which appears elsewhere. Before entering the hall I spent a few moments gazing pensively upon the large pink posters attached to the bulletin boards, whereon I had previously engrossed the date and hour of the lecture. Then I went in. A gentleman on the stage was drawing a stream of melody from a violin, down which went floating musical bubbles from the piano, played by a lady. Applause greeted the overture. Mr. Schou introduced the orator, and there was more applause, in which I joined to some extent myself. Mr. Putnam spoke on "The Bible and Modern Thought." The audience appeared to be much entertained. Only one man, an old settler, dropped asleep, but when the orator casually referred to the great city of San Francisco, he aroused himself long enough to applaud, and then reposed again as he had previously done.

It would be outside the province of these Observations to report the lecture, except to say that it went off most successfully.

I used to like to hear Putnam lecture years ago in Science Hall, New York, when he first left the pulpit, and since that period he has been adding new features to his oratory, and has picked up many scientific facts that have developed during the intervening time, so that, as a lecturer, he excites my admiration now rather more than he did then. To those who want to hear a good discourse I can conscientiously recommend this young man. The foregoing notice is unsolicited and written without hope or promise of reward. Otherwise, it would be much more glowing.

Not the least attractive part of these meetings is the splendid vocal and instrumental music furnished by Mrs. L. Rutter and Mrs. S. Cook, and Messrs. Priore, Stout, Ely, and Cook.

The lecture was so good and sound, and closed with poetry so grand, that many persons gathered round to grasp the speaker by the hand; who on each one beamed bland and bright, and took occasion to explain that on the following Sunday night he hoped to beam on them again.

A letter has just reached me from a valued subscriber in Salt Lake City, which gives an account of some lectures that have just been delivered there by a man who professes Liberalism; who was engaged by the Liberals of Salt Lake City, last year, to speak for them. He was there last year, and gave general dissatisfaction. On his return recently he came quietly, as though fearful that his footfalls might arouse unpleasant memories. The correspondent writes sadly that the professed Liberal lecturer is the same as at his first visit; that he heaps obloquy and contempt upon those who fail to see beauty in his primitive methods. Nothing pleased him. Not only the churches, but the press and the Liberal element of the city fell under the lash of his vindictive tongue. And in return the churches despised him, the press ridiculed him, the Liberals renounced him, and there was none so poor to do him reverence. In years past I have heard this man spoken of as an able orator, and as a man capable of doing great good for Liberalism, being witty and magnetic, though a trifle coarse and clownish at times. As age fell upon him his wit degenerated to harlequinry, his magnetism dropped from him as a leaf, and now before the public that once admired him he rattles the loosely-articulated skeleton of his former genius. With kindly words his friends admonish him that his glory has departed, but he rejects them and their well-meant services, and in sorrow they leave him to work his own destruction, and their place is filled by the thoughtless and ribald, who, having lost their own respect, have no respect for others. So they come to laugh and jibe at the inanities of the age, the squeak and jibber of senility. The old man hears them and imagines they are laughing with him instead of at him. Egged on by their applause, his eccentricities increase. He descends to coarseness; they laugh louder, and he becomes vulgar. But one of his former traits remains. He still enjoys the clink of coin, and his avarice drives from him the last friend who overlooked all else. In early days a preacher, the intolerance born of bigotry now reappears. Insufferable in his egotism, impatient of criticism, wise in his own conceit, with misdirected zeal he makes enemies of former friends, and makes them the enemies of one another. Illiterate to the verge of ignorance, incapable of a deep thought or a pure one, given to tattling, gossiping, and misrepresentation that amounts to lying, he stands as a sad example of reversion from the higher type of a Liberal to the lower one of an irresponsible ranter. I do not give his name; let that stand for the respect which it once inspired. Let his later days and the ill he seeks to do go into oblivion with the memory of his vanished worth.

There are not many pieces of literary work of rarer value than that performed by the collocutor of the article in the "Truth Seeker Annual" entitled "Ingersoll and Shakspeare." The article is not signed, but I can think of no one likely to be its author except a young man named W. L. Colby, who has been in the Truth Seeker office, off and on, for the past eight or ten years. Colby and I went to school together in Westmoreland, N. H., in the winter of 1874. He was about a dozen years old, and had more devilry in him on week days and more piety on Sunday than any other boy I ever saw. His sanctimonious countenance, as he marched up the road to the white meeting-house, with a Sunday-school book in his hand, was altogether too angelic for a sinful world like this. It was strange that he should have been suspected of participation in all the cussedness going on in the neighborhood, but such was the fact, as I state with regret. At school he was not the teacher's favorite scholar. He had a faculty of absorbing his lessons at a glance, and when not glancing he cut monkey-shines. He had nothing to do but know as much as the teacher did, and that was too easy. He longed for diversion, and he found it in all the absurd devices known to Satan. Suspicion fell upon him, but never conviction. His face, when the teacher's eye rested upon it, wore a Sunday-school expression, beatific as the divinely illumined countenance of a cherub. He had a big head, a slim neck, loose joints, and dangling arms and hands.

Colby went from Westmoreland to Virginia, where he picked up a little knowledge of type-setting, and then came to the Truth Seeker office. He developed the highest skill as a compositor, investigated proofreading and mastered it, got to be a book worm, and made literature a midnight study. He has many peculiarities; writes "backhanded," with pen pointing toward his left elbow, begins the writing of figures on the line and proceeds upward, wears a seven and three-eighths hat, weighs above two hundred pounds, holds Socialistic views, and carries an encyclopedia of booklore in his head. If he possesses the faculty of utilizing the proceeds of his study, he may enrich our literature with much pleasing and instructive work.

It is the almost unanimous verdict among the contributors to the "Annual" Symposium, that Liberals should organize. It strikes me as strange, though, that no one proposes two organizations—one for the workers and another for the kickers. The latter have been active if not effective. They appear to agree that any organization not run by themselves has no right to exist, and if they are sincere in their convictions they certainly ought to reap what benefit they can from co-operation and united effort. There is one distinguished lecturer who holds that apart from its officers, its members, and its supporters, the Secular Union is a "sham." He should proceed at once to form a society which, without any of these, would still remain a powerful organization. Such a society, having no head, collecting no funds, and doing nothing, would not alone be above reproach, but it would solve the ontological problem of "pure being." Let the kickers organize. The fun would be worth double what the expense would amount to. M.

ONE DIES EVERY SECOND.

New York Mail and Express.

Here are some interesting facts about the people who compose the population of the world:

There are 3,064 languages in the world, and its inhabitants profess more than 1,000 religions. The number of men is about equal to the number of women. The average of life is about thirty-three years. One-quarter die previous to the age of seventeen. To every 1,000 persons only one reaches 100 years of life, says the Golden Argosy. To every 100 only six reach the age of sixty-five, and not more than one in 500 lives to eighty years of age.

There are on earth 1,000,000,000 inhabitants; of these 33,033,033 die every year; 91,824 every day, 3,730 every hour and 60 every minute, one every second.

The married are longer-lived than the single, and, above all, those who observe a sober and industrious conduct. Tall men live longer than short ones. Women have more chances of life in their favor previous to fifty years of age than men have, but fewer afterward.

The number of marriages is in the proportion of 75 to every 1,000 individuals. Marriages are more frequent after equinoxes—that is, during the months of June and December.

Those born in spring are generally of a more robust constitution than others. Births are more frequent by night than by day, also deaths.

The number of men capable of bearing arms is calculated at one-fourth of the population.

Fear not in any tongue to call Upon the Lord—he knoweth all.
But if he answereth my plea
He speaketh one unknown to me.

THE PUTNAM-CAMPBELL DISCUSSION.

The discussion between S. P. Putnam and the Rev. J. A. Campbell at this place (North Yamhill, Or.) lasted two nights. The first night Mr. Putnam spoke for an hour on the Nine Demands of Liberalism, showing plainly to any candid mind the gross injustice of the non-taxation of church property, the tyranny of Sabbath laws, the unfairness of putting the Bible in the public schools, of the government employing chaplains in the army, navy, and senate, and the decree for fast and thanksgiving days. The speaker showed in a clear and logical manner that the law is force, and that thus to compel the Freethinkers, Jews, and non-believers to help support these theological institutions is a palpable wrong; that it was in a manner uniting church and state, which is a violation of the Constitution of the United States. The folly of administering the oath in courts and other places was explained.

J. A. Campbell followed, and for nearly an hour leveled his theological gun (a loud-mouthed piece) at the Freethought camp. When the smoke cleared away could be seen the Freethought lines standing out in bold relief, not a line broken nor a life lost. The shot aimed at Colonel Ingersoll went hissing and crashing through the rank and file of the army of the church. Then Mr. Putnam closed with twenty minutes time, in which he spiked the theological gun. There was nothing to do but to reinforce his previous remarks, as his opponent had missed the mark, having wandered from the subject under discussion. The argument was clinched. Freethought gained a victory.

The second night Mr. Campbell led off for an hour in defense of the divinity of the Bible and the Sabbath. He said the Sabbath, the passover, and circumcision were monumental institutions, and attempted to show that Jehovah had the management of the whole affair, and that the Bible is a revelation from God. Then came Mr. Putnam with a reply, showing that of some of the books of the Bible the authors were not known; that none of the books of the Bible were written earlier than eight hundred years before Jesus Christ lived; that Moses lived some fifteen hundred years before Christ; that for the seven hundred years previous to the writing of the books there was nothing but tradition—stories—consequently the Bible cannot be relied upon. He said matter and motion were eternal, that all matter was in motion. History and science did not support the Bible. The four gospels were written so long after the life and death of Christ that there was but little reliance to be placed in them. The Bible contradicts itself; there are two Sabbaths and two modes of being saved. Could any Christian be found who would sell all that he had and give it to the poor? He showed the impropriety of some of Christ's teachings, and demonstrated that the axioms and teachings of Freethought were far superior.

Then followed Mr. Campbell with a reply of twenty minutes, in which he used such words as "false," "ignorance," and other unpleasant expressions. Mr. Putnam used no such language. He acted the perfect gentleman. Mr. Campbell, after using all the time allotted to him in ineffectual argument, stated that he could read page upon page of history corroborating what is said of Christ in the Bible, if he had the time. He evidently said this to mislead, or why did he not read it while he was denying that matter was always in motion? He said that matter was sometimes at rest, which, he said, was called "inertia." Does not the reverend gentleman know also that when matter is in motion, to continue so is called inertia? Does he not know that when Mr. Putnam stated that the stand, the diamond, was in motion he did not mean motion through space, but motion of the particles composing them? Does he not know that matter is constantly changing? Does he not know that this is effected by the moving of particles? What is there that will forever resist the tooth of time?

Large and attentive audiences were present. The writer believes that the discussion, together with the Freethought literature sold, going into many homes where it has not gone before, will be the means of doing much good. One more victory for mental liberty!

CALL FOR A STATE LIBERAL ORGANIZATION.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality, as such, shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely Secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The undersigned citizens of California, realizing that the safety of Republican institutions is imperiled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed by the least interference of the State in matters of religion, and believing, with the Founders of the Republic, that "Eternal vigilance is the price of Liberty," hereby invite the Freethinkers and Liberals of California to meet in Convention at Irving Hall, San Francisco, Sunday, January 27, 1889, at 10 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of forming an Auxiliary Association of the American Secular Union, to help secure throughout the country practical compliance with the above Demands of Liberalism:

ANOTHER SECULAR UNION VICTORY.

Three years ago Samuel P. Putnam, as secretary of the American Secular Union, led a gallant fight against the trustees of the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art and Natural History, for the opening of that institution on Sunday, and the interest then awakened has never slumbered; and although the smoke of battle passed away and the enemy's position seemed well-nigh impregnable, time has proved that Putnam's artillery was so well directed that it has finally compelled his opponents to surrender, so far as to allow the museum to be open from 12 to 6 on Sundays. This is a boon for which the toilers of New York should sincerely thank the American Secular Union.

STATISTICS AND CRIME.

As our government goes to the expense of gathering statistics upon which it is presumed legislation may be based, and as the United States census is about to be taken, we hope that some questions may be inserted which will accurately give the influence of theologic training. For instance, that criminals shall answer as to whether they had religious training and of what character. Then it would be easy enough to show that the institutions which furnish pro rata to the population the largest amount of criminals could not well claim exemption from just taxation of their property on the ground of their moral influence. Can't some of our friends move in this matter?

We had a very brilliant lecture Sunday evening from the former principal of the high school, now a young attorney, P. J. O'Shea, and the Herald admits it was the most brilliant defense of that secular institution—the Sunday paper—yet given. The Tribune seems to have given only his most conservative utterances, though none of the papers gave his best, for he went extensively into the question of ecclesiastical persecution and spared none. The Tribune says:

Attorney P. J. O'Shea lectured on the Sunday newspaper at a largely attended meeting of the Secular Union. In course of his remarks the speaker said: "In the publication of a newspaper not only are there copyright fees but the paper is taxed about 33 per cent of its value; those metals that so largely enter into the manufacture of the paper as high as 40 per cent, and the ink with which they are printed 20 per cent of its value. Surely, if an institution like the church escapes the just burdens of taxation, because, as alleged, it teaches men to be moral, what will be said of the Sunday newspaper? The American newspaper—chaste, bold, honest, able, affectionate, impatient of restraint, its myriad hands extending not indeed over our northern continent alone, and unifying it, but including the whole planet, and even penetrating the abysses of the infinite in its efforts to satisfy the great mind of man. With its stories, its poetry, its humor, bringing gladness wherever it goes. In its criminal department warning us by the experience of others of the dreadful consequences of crime or of ill-advised marriages. In its political department showing the citizen his duty to his country, but in all its pages contributing to the happiness and well-being of society. Its moral teachings have superseded those of the pulpit. It sways the people not indeed with tortures and persecutions and burnings, but through the spirit of rationalism. It instructs the politicians and statesmen, and warns them that 'behind the apparent custodians the real custodians, the people stand, menacing, silent.' I may well say of the Sunday newspaper that he who carefully reads it avoids the saloon, the gambling-house. Surely, then, if any institution in the country should escape its share of the public burden of taxation it is the press. When the question was asked by the Roman governor in reference to Jesus: 'Why, what evil hath he done?' the Jewish ministers cried out the more, saying, 'Let him be destroyed,' and when the question is asked, 'What evil hath the Sunday newspaper done?' the Chicago ministers have no reply to make but 'Away with it; away with it. Let it be destroyed.'

At the conclusion of the lecture resolutions upholding the Sunday newspaper were unanimously adopted.

Brother Smith's is the kind of an epistle from a Corinthian we are most happy to receive, believing that it is more worthy to be incorporated in the grand gospels of common sense than both o. Paul's, giving evidence of a gentleman of culture, a student of history on whom the lesson is not lost, and a Liberal of broad ideas of nature and humanity.

My good friend Moore, a sturdy Secularist, whose 76 eventful yet triumphant years have not cooled his ardor for liberty, for his brain is as clear and his heart responds as patriotically as when championing the anti-slavery cause, enrolls among Americans who do not propose to be ruled and duped by myths and dreams. Brother Moore is delighted with the work we are doing and propose to do, and renews his stock in the organization, which in his estimation is completing the true foundation of American freedom.

John D. Powers stands as firm as the granite hills of Vermont for secular liberty, and though surrounded by superstition, can be depended on to keep our banner bright, and did not forget the American Secular Union when sending for his holiday presents to our treasurer-jeweler of Rochelle, Brother Wettstein.

Owen Thos. Davies is another life member who openly maintains his Liberal convictions, and more—much more—sustains them too. Living in that beautiful garden of the world seems to lure men from the solemn absurdities of the past, and they become ardent soldiers under the flag of mental liberty. The name reminds us forcibly of

"Arthur and Merlin of yore,
Of Griffith and Conan and Owen Glendour;"

for it is of decidedly Welsh flavor, and if he possesses the sterling characteristics of that race, we can have no more essential ally.

Brother Pepper has kept his nurseries for thirty years in Petaluma, and the name and occupation are suggestive of buds and blossom, of luxurious flowers and fruit-laden vines, and when to this is added that inimitable climate which we hear so much about, what wonder that the genial spirit of freedom asserts itself where intellect abides.

From the sparkling Southern orator and brave Texan Secularist, J. D. Shaw, of Waco, we have received a contribution of $5 worth of his able pamphlets: "The Bible—What is it?" "The Divinity of Christ," "Studies in Theology," "A Myth Exposed," and a renewal of our subscription to the Independent Pulpit, which is booming the Secular Campaign as a political movement, and grows brighter every issue. May Brother Shaw live long and prosper is the sincere desire of the secretary.

From Portland friend Neunert sends generous words and practical help. He is a stalwart iconoclast who is ever ready to stand by our colors.

The first contribution from any Union to the present secretary was, I believe, received from San Jose, and we have a tender regard for this active host because of their confidence and esteem.

Emmetts is fortunate, for Jas. Wardell is enthusiastic; has built a fine hall entirely alone, and will donate it to the Liberals if they will organize and make a success. Wish someone would do that for Chicago. He redeems the pledge of these gentlemen made to his friend Putnam. He says he would give $100 a year to keep a Liberal lecturer, not a "crank," who would organize in his neighborhood. He says a Liberal crank is worse than a preacher crank. To his generous associates we tender our grateful salutations.

In Frederick, Md., it seems there are still those who, like Barbara Fritchie, possess the pluck to shake the flag in the face of ecclesiastical rebels with brave defiance. However, may

"Peace and order and beauty draw Round the symbol of light and law,"
And ever the stars in love look down
On Aaron Davis of Fredericktown.

Brother Conley is the kind of a man from which heroes are made. He says: "We have a hard fight for our rights. They may take our lives, but our liberty—never!"

A brave standard-bearer is Brother Rockwood of San Pasqual. He is willing to bear the brunt of the battle, and there will be no retreat at that point.

Utah is looming up for mental liberty, and Charles de La Baume is a courageous captain of our struggling band.

Fresno's active Freethinker is Joseph Lee, who does not propose to give up to ministerial dictation.

Brother Howard is the inspiration of the splendid trinity at Volo, Ill., who sent $6 as a new year's gift for the secretary. They will forgive me if I turn it into the fund, I know. My sincere salutation to this right royal trio.

Friend Corbet is anxiously watching the progress of mental freedom; is a great reader and a deep thinker. He is a true Liberal.

W. O. Williams is enthusiastic for reform, and will keep our secular flag floating.

Henry McElsander, of Eagle Creek, is willing to pull against the stream, whether the current is favorable or not.

Katie Kehm is the brilliant young pagan school "marm" of Iowa, who may soon enter the lecture field, and would be sure to win fame, if not fortune.

Our philosophic friend Jost is our earnest sentinel at Ogden, whose work evidences the higher inspiration—humanity.

The president of the Utah Wool Growers' Association, Chas. Crane, takes no stock in the Lamb's book of life.

Brother Leitch is a worthy worker, who puts his shoulder to the wheel in his Wisconsin community.

Luke Wm. Gallup, another golden state Secularist, sends words of cheer and financial aid.

S. Brewer is a careful student who forwards $1 for the Girard fund.

A. D. Cornwell, of Bristol, is one we are glad to greet. He is not afraid to express his opinions. An honest man we always welcome.

Brother Geeting's new home is McKeesport. He was our active representative at Washington, Ind.

To all our friends a Happy New Year. E. A. STEVENS.

THAT RELIGIOUS AMENDMENT.

Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, says the Chronicle, has presented an amendment to the Federal Constitution, concerning the establishment of a national educational system, the provisions of which are briefly as follows:

Section One provides that no state shall ever make or maintain any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

Section Two makes it obligatory on every state to establish and maintain a system of free public schools for the education of children "in the common branches of knowledge, and in virtue, morality, and the principles of the Christian religion," but with an inhibition against the teaching of sectarian tenets, beliefs, ceremonies, or observances.

Section Three provides that the United States shall guarantee to every state the support and maintenance of such a system of free schools as is provided for in the previous sections; and Section Four provides that Congress shall enforce the amendment by legislation when necessary.

It will be apparent that the proposed amendment is at variance with the spirit, at least, of the existing First Amendment to the Constitution, which declares that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion." Undoubtedly the purpose of that amendment was to forbid any such union of church and state as has obtained in Great Britain and other countries, and the Blair amendment does not, in terms, interfere with it; but can it be denied that it seeks to do indirectly what cannot be done directly under the Constitution? Where an article of the organic law provides that a certain thing shall be taught in the common schools of every state in the Union, is it not a mere evasion to say that it is not an establishment of that particular thing by authority of law?

Suppose, for example, that the Constitution forbade the recognition by the state of the laws of mathematics. Would not an amendment which directed that the multiplication table be taught in every common school in the land, at the same time pledging the United States to the support and maintenance of such schools, be a repeal, or at any rate a palpable evasion, of the prohibition against mathematics?

Without seeking to enter upon any polemical discussion, it is beyond controversy that the "principles of the Christian religion" must involve the divinity of Christ; for so far as the purely ethical doctrines are concerned, they are common, to a greater or less degree, to all religions; and may, indeed, be found in certain philosophical systems which lay no claim to being considered religions at all. Senator Blair, then, would have every common school in the United States teach children between the ages of six and sixteen that Christ was divine. But if this be done, how can the conclusion be avoided that the United States has adopted a state religion? and what becomes of the rights of those of her citizens who believe otherwise?

The question is a serious one and it cannot be left for decision solely to those who already believe in the Christian religion. They have, under the law, every right to believe; but their neighbors, who may be fire worshipers, or Mohammedans, or Agnostics, have, under the same law, an equal right to disbelieve; and the question is, whether it is consistent with the idea of a government which has always disavowed any union between church and state to insist that all the children of the nation shall be instructed in the principles of any religion, no matter what its intrinsic value or claims upon the world may be. Virtue and morality are one thing, the principles of the Christian religion another; and it behooves us to pause and reflect before we consent to such an innovation in legislation as the Blair amendment proposes.

NEW YORK LETTER.

There is evidently a race between our papers to print the most pages on Sunday. The Tribune, on Monday morning, claimed that it published the equal of 150 to 155 columns to the World 130; the Times, 104; the Herald, 100; the Sun, 110. Horace Greeley never boasted of the quantity in his paper; his pride was in its strength of ideas, its purity of diction, its cleanness. A lesser man multiplies its columns and dilutes its quality. The elder Bennett would spend thousands of dollars to give his readers the earliest news. In this he was boastful, but he never uttered a word about the size of the Herald. Raymond was careful of the quality of the Times; he never gave a thought about the quantity. To-day we get an increase in quantity at the expense of the quality. When the two Jews came from the West to this city, the one starting the Journal, the other buying the World, they introduced unclean journalism into our papers. The cleanness of our papers has in a great measure departed. The Post and the Times are as clean as a hound's tooth. Thousands of fathers will not allow the Journal, World, or Herald to enter their homes, fearing some nasty tale will meet the eyes of their children. Even "the Tribune, founded by Horace Greeley," is not entirely free from such nastiness. During the divorce suit of Colin Campbell, it printed a letter from Lady Colin to her husband, which was unfit for publication. It was the wounded cry of a girl who found herself wedded to a man whom decency ought to have forbidden to marry. From wife to husband it was proper enough; but to the world it was otherwise—it was filthy. The avidity with which the Journal and World are read by our dudes and sewing-girls is alarming for our morals. We notice you are going to increase the size of FREETHOUGHT; we hope not at the expense of its quality. The glory of our press long since passed away. In place of Horace Greeley we have Whitelaw Reid; in place of William Cullen Bryant we have Godkin and Horace White; in place of Manton Marble and Hurlbut, we have a Hungarian Jew; in place of Raymond, Geo. Jones; in place of James Gordon Bennett, the late Rev. Hepworth. All gone except Charles H. Dana, and with them the strength, potency, and influence of the papers they founded and made powerful.

One of the heroes of the war has just died—Col. Chas. Custer. At the outbreak of the war he entered the Seventh, and with it went to the front as a private. On his return home he was appointed a lieutenant in the regular army, and served through the Peninsular campaign; then Gov. Morgan appointed him colonel of the 134th New York regiment. At the age of 22 he commanded a brigade at Gettysburg. He was as genial as brave, a favorite with all.

Father Hecker—the founder of the Paulist fathers—was one of the best men that ever trod our streets. His goodness was proverbial. He was a brother of the Heckers, the millers. He built up a large church on the west side, and did immense good among the people of his faith. We honor the man, although we do not accept his theology.

Mrs. James Brown Potter is at Palmer's, late Wallack's. A crowded house greeted her. The papers are still hostile to her; they see little merit in her work. They may be right, but thus far they have not been able to convince the public. As an amateur she was pronounced a success. Why, the moment she became a professional, did she lose her cunning? The swells of New York stand by her, and snap their fingers in the faces of the critics.

There has been quite a little spurt in stocks the past few days, based on a rumored settlement of the rate war in the Northwest. The officers of those roads are said to be speculators per se. If they have agreed to stop this fight there will be a further advance in prices.

Christmas Day was a delightful one, as balmy as a day in October.

FAITH.

The professed Christian says to the unbeliever, "I have two chances to your one for future life and bliss. If I am right, I gain all, while you lose all. If I am wrong, I lose nothing." Yet according to Paul, "If the dead rise not at all, then are we of all men most miserable." All superstitious people make the same plea. It was made before Christna of India, two thousand years before the Christian Era. The Catholics make it against the Protestants; the Protestants make it against each other, and they all make it against unbelievers. According to Christian doctrine, thieves, libertines, and murderers, by having faith, become blameless and innocent, while the unbeliever is held responsible for all crimes, as though he did commit them, and is consigned to eternal perdition. Crime is indeed the first step into heaven: "The greater the sinner the greater the salvation." Says Martin Luther in "Table Talk," "A man may commit adultery and murder a thousand times a day; if he only has faith enough in the Lord Jesus he shall be saved." "Great is the mystery of godliness (without controversy)."

What is this faith? It is to believe in the Bible as God's infallible word and revelation to mankind through a priesthood. It is to believe that God made everything out of nothing, about six thousand years ago, and that he always was, without anywhere to exist, or without anything to do, until he commenced the work of creation. It is to believe God had a son about eighteen hundred and eighty-eight years ago, who was at least part Jew, and whom fanatics now want to crown king of this republic and the nations of the earth. This son was as old as his father (God), and he became God, and his mother was the mother of God.

It has been proven by practical demonstrations that the Bible does not contain one truth out of a million statements. The churches, instead of making the races of men better, engender sectarian hatred and strife. If there is to be a future state of existence, the Bible nor any other book proves or disproves it. It will be agreeable to laws, conditions, and circumstances, regardless of Bibles, priests, or prophets. L. C. H.

THE WOMAN OF THE WEST,

Rose Eytinge in Belford's Magazine.

The woman born and reared in the West is a grand and goodly type of womanhood. She is strong and keen and comprehensive; she is full of life and grace and freedom; she is quick to feel an injury, and she is quite equal to being her own avenger.

Her eye is keen and her tongue is sharp, but her heart is warm and her hand is open. She is always ready with her sympathy and prompt with her help.

Her business ability and executive talent are of a very high order, as a proof of which is the fact that some of the finest cattle ranches and most extensive and most prosperous sheep runs are owned and managed by women.

I have now in my mind the case of a woman born in Ohio, who, ten years ago, in this city of New York, was earning $5 or $6 a week, with which sum she supported her mother and her father's brother, a semi-invalid old man.

At the time I speak of, when this woman was about nineteen years of age, she obtained, after much difficulty and delay, a grant of a quarter section of government land, to which her dead father had become entitled through his services in the rebellion.

The land was located in Oregon. She sent her old uncle out to take up the land, and she pinched and saved and sent to him from time to time, almost dollar by dollar, money with which to hire help to clear a space in the timber and to put up a log house.

As soon as this poor shelter was provided for them she took her mother and went out and lived on the land. As she could, from time to time, she bought stock, and so she crept on, step by step, until now she has a good home and barn, and last year she cleared from the stock she had raised, and from the sale of her crops, several thousand dollars.

And what this woman has done hundreds of women are doing every year.

And if many of these women have not got much education their sons and daughters will have. It is well with the land that breeds such women, and it is well with the men of the land who have such mothers.

MENTAL CONTAGION.

Error, like truth, flourishes in crowds. At the hearth of sympathy each finds a home. The fanatical lead, the saner follow. When a person of nervous temperament, not strongly independent in thought and action, enters a spiritualistic circle, where he is constantly surrounded by confident believers, all eager to have him share their sacred visions and profound revelations, where the atmosphere is replete with miracles, and every chair and table may at any instant be transformed into a proof of the supernatural, is it strange that he soon becomes one of them?—hesitatingly at first, and perhaps yet restorable to his former modes of thought by the fresh air of another and more steadfast mental intercourse, but more and more certainly and ardently convinced the longer he breathes the seance atmosphere. No form of contagion is so insidious in its onset, so difficult to check in its advance, so certain to leave germs that may at any moment reveal their pernicious power, as a mental contagion—the contagion of fear, of panic, of fanaticism, of lawlessness, of superstition. The story of the witchcraft persecutions, were there no similar records to deface the pages of history, would suffice as a standing illustration of the overwhelming power of psychic contagion. To fully illustrate its importance in the production of deception would require an essay in itself. It enters at every stage of the process and in every type of illusion. It has least effect when deception is carried on by external arrangements, by skillful counterfeits of logical inferences; its power is greatest where the subjective factor in deception is greatest, more particularly in such forms of deception as have been last described.—Prof. JOSEPH JASTROW, in the Popular Science Monthly.

SUGGESTIONS.

A correspondent who orders one thousand copies of E. A. Stevens's pamphlet, "God in the State," for distribution, asks the following questions—not for the purpose of criticism, nor necessarily expecting an answer, but merely as suggestions:

Why does not the American Secular Union send this pamphlet ("God in the State") to the president of the United States, to all members of Congress, to judges of the Supreme Court, to all other judges and lawyers, to city councils, to the Vanderbilts, Depews, Goulds, etc.?

Why do they not adopt the distribution of Freethought literature, as the principal method of work, on the plan of missionary societies? The country ought to be fairly flooded with such reading matter.

Why does the A. S. U. not solicit membership and make the conditions known?

Why do they appeal to individuals for the two thousand dollars needed in the Girard case, instead of raising this amount by equal taxation of the members?

Circumstances Alter Cases.

A traveler called at a hut in the vicinity of Denver, Col., and requested some dinner. The lady, her spouse being absent, refused to supply his necessities for money or the love of humanity.

"Very well," said the hungry traveler as he turned his footsteps from the inhospitable abode, "you will want nothing to eat to-morrow."

"Why not?" inquired the woman.

"Because," answered the weary man, "the Indians are digging a tunnel at Devil's Bluff lake, and they are going to turn all the waters of the lake into the valley, and you and all the rest of the people are to be drowned."

Upon this intelligence the old lady hurried off to the priest to inform him that a flood was to overflow the valley, and to ask what was to be done in the sad emergency.

The priest endeavored to quiet her fears by telling her that God had promised that he should never send another flood upon earth.

"But," exclaimed the affrighted woman, "it isn't God that's doing it—it's the cursed Indians."

"In that case," said the priest, "you'd better git." And she got.

Professor Seymour on the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Our first stopping-place to lecture after leaving your city was Antioch, not the old Bible Antioch, but the new one, in Contra Costa county, Cal. We arrived about midnight at the depot; nearly a mile from the town, and no hack, dray, hotel, or person to be seen. The only alternative was to shoulder our gripsack of books, take our heavy roll of maps and paintings in the other hand, and tramp through the sea of mud to the sleeping "burg" shadowed forth in the distance. I used to like to travel long lonesome roads at "midnight's solemn hour" with bright-eyed "sweethearts," in my younger days; but this ramble, loaded down with radical and Freethought literature, through the muddy lanes of this straggling hamlet, did beat sheol. I found cover at last in the "Palace Hotel," but the "palace" ended where the sign did, for it was a very plain affair. About the only ornament or fine furniture the hotel contained was mine hostess, who weighed a good many pounds over two hundred.

Antioch contains about 500 people, is very finely located, near the confluence of the San Joaquin and Sacramento rivers at the head of San Francisco bay. The town is dead, dead, dead; yet it finds life enough to support thirteen saloons, one large distillery, three floss houses (churches), five stores, one newspaper, and three Chinese "washee men." I gave three lectures here in Page's hall to very fair audiences, considering that it rained all the time. Antioch is about like those other ancient towns that Lot had to vacate because there were not enough righteous men in them to save them. There were no Liberals here, and if God should speak from Mount Diablo (near here) saying that if I could not find three Liberals he would let loose that shower of fire and sulphur again, I would shout at the top of my feeble voice, "Let her go, Gallagher," and rapidly perambulate toward the mountains, with (luckily) no wife to be transformed into a "salt lick" for the herds of Contra Costa county. Our Putnam should come here and give the "New God" the and "Glories of Infidelity." It is stony soil, but "one glory" might take root. Antioch is the home of Lois Waisbrooker, who has so long, by tongue and pen, fought the battle for mental liberty; but her fire is almost out; her fearless paper is silent in death—died because planted in such barren soil, with but few to appreciate the grandeur of her ideas, which, if carried out, would do more to save the world in a hundred years than Joseph's boy, born in a manger, has done in two thousand. Lois is most thorough her life's work, but the bread she has cast on so many waters by her lectures, books, and Foundation Principles, will ultimately "help fill the world with joy." Well, I left some copies of FREETHOUGHT where possibly they might stir the muddy pool of orthodoxy and whisky.

Our next stopping-place was Turlock, about one hundred miles south. This is a small but pretty place of 250 inhabitants, and very liberal, many being Spiritualists. We found a most hearty welcome at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Mitchel, who are broad-gauged and liberal in all their views, and refined and highly cultivated people. Mr. Mitchel has several hundred thousand acres here in a body, with water from the Sierra Nevada running over it for irrigation. He has oranges and most of the other fruits, and his wheat fields are too large to ride around in a single day. This is wholesale farming for a certainty—plows with eight horses or mules in January, going in every direction, while the pastures and fields are most beautiful in their green carpeting of waving grass and grain. I could not help thinking, as I looked over this rich domain of nature's wealth, of the thousands of lovely homes this tract would make if divided into ten acres each, and donated to the worthy landless and homeless ones who have fought the battles for wealth and homes, and lost, and now are wanderers with no place to rest or call home.

I did not lecture in Turlock for the reason that Professor Dutton had just finished a course of four lectures; so after a brief visit of twenty-four hours, and greatly enjoying the social treat of a chat on the great questions of the day with Mrs. Mitchel (Mr. Mitchell was away), Mrs. Adams, Miss Gerty Fuller, and many others, I again whistled off-brakes, and rolled on to Visalia, Tulare county, where I now am, among FREETHOUGHT readers and Kaweah colonists. I go to-morrow forty-nine miles into the grand canyons of the Sierra, on the Kaweah river, to the colony's lands, and to take a look at the giant forest. They have trees there forty feet in diameter, and a third of a thousand feet in height. They have a pure marble canyon, and a young Niagara for a water-power, and scenery that rivals the far-famed Yosemite, of Merced county, of this state. But I will not anticipate. I have found a delightful home here at Visalia, with comrade Watson and wife, who keep the co-operative rendezvous, for all the comers and goers, for the co-operative colony's lands above mentioned. I met here Mr. Kimberly, wife, and babies, just landed from Kansas; Mr. Wheeler, Mr. Christie, and others, all comrades in this little army that is being organized to try to solve the great economic question of homes for all, and plenty for each, with no rich landlords or poor serfs, but all alike entitled to use and enjoy the air, the earth, and the water, which "Mother Nature" certainly intended all her creatures should do. Co-operation evidently must make all equal, if they ever are to become so. I find these people, so far, all Freethinkers and Liberals, jolly, and thoroughly in earnest. It is much better to evolve by co-operation than revolution, and the millions of the wage serfs will watch and wait anxiously for the result. D. C. SEYMOUR.

Visalia, January 3, 1889.

The Deserted Village.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I return Call for State Convention with the lonely signature of "me and myself." Del Mar is busted—gone up the wooden works of the flume, so to speak. I mean the people, not the town. The big hotel and some forty handsome cottages, together with resort, etc., are still here, but the people, that life-giving necessity in towns that aspire to greatness, have "jumped" the town. All that are left, and who daily attend its funeral, are the landlord, express agent, postmaster, and one lonely merchant. Even the "Iron Duke" has taken to the hills, never to return. The "Temple of Learning" still stands majestically on its solid foundations, while the little Presbyterian spook house (which cost $3,000, but in which no sky-pilot racket has yet aroused the slumbers of a single spook, or echoed the wail of the whangdoodle) stands like a lone sentinel guarding a cemetery—of dead ideas, which it fittingly represents. Don't know who is going to pay the taxes on the thing, and I would be willing to have the taxes knocked off of all churches if they were as dead as this one. If Christ ever buys a ticket over the California Southern railroad, he will not lay over at Del Mar. All of this deadness of which I write is not the result of a "busted" boom; some say the stampede was caused by busted morals, or words to that effect. I do not know the cause of the stillness, but Del Mar is as dead as the Methodist hell. Not even another Infidel besides your wicked scribe is left to "whoop her up." You doubtless begin to "catch on" why it is that I am alone calling for a state convention from these parts. If I fail to attend I will send a proxy in the shape of a greenback, which proxy will exercise more influence than if I were there and left said proxy at home. H. L. SHAUG.

Spiritualism.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Professor Philbrook asserts, affirms, and declares that man is only a galvanic battery, and his mind only an electric phenomenon. Accepting this plain and plausible explanation, my "electric phenomenon" impels me to remark that I was somewhat interested in Mr. Ranford Worthing's communication on "Spiritualistic Frauds." He frankly admits these phenomena claimed by Spiritualists actually occur, but denies that the cause which they claim for these manifestations is the correct one. For years their occurrence has been a settled fact with me, and not yet having a better explanation than the spirit theory, that is still accepted. Now if we can get so-called Materialists to admit these strange things do occur, we have taken a long step forward in solving the problem as to their cause. For while they are scoffed at and derided, and some are so conceited as to think their opinion alone can settle the fact that they do occur, little effort will be made to discover the truth or falsity of the spirit theory. H. S. Olcott, a believer for twenty-three years in Spiritualism, now explains some of the spiritualistic phenomena, by saying that the soul of the living medium can, unconsciously to his physical self, ooze out and by its elastic and protean nature take on the image of any deceased person whose image it sees in a visitor's memory. He further claims that in India he has met individuals who, with a knowledge of subtle laws and forces, were able to will the production of phenomena which he once supposed was dependent on spirits. This statement coincides with Mr. Worthing's opinion that electro-magnetism, or some unknown force, is the basis of all these extraordinary phenomena. Now Mr. Olcott holds that centuries of study and investigation among the Hindoos has placed them in advance of other nations in respect to knowledge of these forces; but as these phenomena have taken place where ignorance reigned supreme regarding these subtle laws, such facts, with me, go to sustain the spirit theory. I have known of mediums for physical manifestations that lacked intellectual brightness, and have sometimes thought the bigger the fool, the better the medium. Now, if such people have a knowledge of these secret forces, which wiser ones are unable to discover, where and how did they gain that knowledge? If, as they invariably claim, they are passive instruments in the control of some intelligent force, who and what is this force if not one or more spirits of deceased mortals? For one, I am ready to accept some other explanation when it can be demonstrated; but the phenomena are undeniable, and nothing is open to doubt but the cause. What is it?

The Church and Marriage.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In a recent number of your paper, in speaking with regard to religious teachers performing the marriage ceremony, you say that the state should at least require them to use a ceremony prescribed by the state. That would be an improvement on present conditions, but I would most earnestly suggest that this authority should be taken from the priesthood altogether. The state owes no allegiance to the church. Then why should the state give this authority to the leaders of church societies and not to the leaders of other societies—Old Fellows, Masons, Temperance Societies, etc.?

Marriage is a contract of one man and one woman with the state, and none but state officers, or those who have authority from the state to administer oaths, should be allowed to celebrate, in the name of the state, a marriage of one man and one woman. In view of recent efforts of the church to get control of both the national and state governments, it is high time strong efforts were being made for the complete separation of church and state.

The church, almost from its earliest history, has exerted an evil influence among men; has perverted the powers of nations and led them to cruel wars; has sowed the seeds of enmity and bitterness among societies which resulted in the most revolting persecutions. And in every age of the world, since the church has had an existence, has it hurled its curses against the Infidels, or the men of free thought, the very men to whom they owe the blessings of the liberties they at present enjoy. Yet to-day they would trample us under their feet if they could, and then, when that was done, turn to the persecution of each other again, for the tendency of church influence is unprogressive, is backward to cruel despotisms; consequently, it becomes us, the liberty-loving people of the country, to break the hold the church has on the state to-day. If the church cannot live without state and national aid, let it die.

Good Prospects.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have been out in the mountains all the fall prospecting, and am glad to say I have been successful in discovering some fine gold quartz properties. All contain good pay ore, and next year I will make some money. Nor will I forget the last born, good paper—FREETHOUGHT. I greatly admire your journal. I like it for its fullness, its radicalness—it cannot be too radical for me. Regular "Bradlaugh sledgehammers" are needed to down the monster superstition and imposition. You are doing splendid work, and I heartily congratulate you for hitting 'em hard, including the pope in particular. Very respectfully, CHAS. F. BLACKBURN.

A Bible to Sell.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Since reading FREETHOUGHT I have come to the conclusion that the Bible is a put-up job on man, and a doubly put-up job on woman. We'll sell our Bible cheap. I formerly resided in New York and in Brooklyn, and have heard the great man Henry Ward Beecher; also Talmage. Henry Ward Beecher got to disbelieve the Bible; preached no hell, and had he lived until now would have stood side by side with Colonel Ingersoll.

Talmage, no doubt, is the worst fanatic of the age. He says much about obscene literature. Why, then, does he not go for the Bible, the most filthy book published? He now preaches to woman; in short, wants her to save him and his kind. He sees the end, but expects to die before the collapse. The days of Christianity, Talmage and all, are numbered. I hope to be in San Francisco during January. We expect to hear Ingersoll, Putnam, and others. Yours respectfully, H. J. MAY.

Saint Paul on the Marriage Question.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Dr. Murdock's translation of the ancient Syriac version of the New Testament, called the Peshito, published in 1850, has the following rendering of 1 Cor. vii, 36:

"But if any one thinketh that there is reproach, on account of his maiden [daughter], because she hath passed her time, and he hath not presented to her a husband, [and] it be fitting that he present her; let him do what he desireth, he sinneth not; let her be married."

The brackets are Murdock's own, and the Peshito is the more reliable version.

A New Year's Greeting.

To the Editors of Freethought:

With the end of the year terminates also my double subscription to FREETHOUGHT. I am well pleased with Vol. I., and its fifty-two visits have given much pleasure to my wife and myself. We are glad of the assurance that it will come to us as many times more. With this end in view and as an appropriate New Year's greeting and token of goodwill and good wishes, I inclose $4 to pay for two copies for another year. That FREETHOUGHT may brighten all the weeks of all the coming years is the sincere wish of yours very truly, PREACHER—"Attendance falling of somewhat, isn't it, sexton?" Sexton—"Yes, sir; they are all going over to Pastor Down's church." Preacher—"There's evidently got to be something done." Sexton—"Suppose I spread a report about your having kissed a leading member of the flock." Preacher—"Er—some purely fictitious story would—er—do just as well, I think." —Judge.

A NEAT story (says the Bendigo Advertiser) is told of a Catholic priest down South, whose sermons are usually of a practical kind. On entering the pulpit one Sunday morning he took with him a walnut to illustrate the various Christian churches. He told the people "the shell was tasteless, that was the Wesleyan church; the skin was nauseous, disagreeable, and worthless, that was the Presbyterian church." He then said he would show the holy Roman Apostolic church. He cracked the nut, and found it rotten! Then his reverence coughed violently, and pronounced the benediction.

If the Freethought meetings at Irving Hall continue to grow in attendance Mr. Moody may have to vacate the Mechanic's Pavilion to satisfy the demands of Liberalism.

In their attempt to organize the German-American citizens of the country into a total abstinence prohibition party, the Chicago Teutons will find themselves unpopular, to say the least. In the true sense of the word, the Germans are among the most temperate people on earth.

WHEN Mr. Moody has worked up the public of San Francisco to a proper state of receptivity toward religious truth, Revivalist Sam Jones will come to the city as his successor. Meanwhile the gathering of the Freethought hosts will go on. The battle may as well be fought here as elsewhere.

MR. SPRINGER, of Illinois, has introduced a bill in Congress providing for a national marriage and divorce law. This is a proper companion of the national Sunday law. With our religion and morals thus placed in the care of the Congress at Washington, local legislatures may as well adjourn sine die.

THE progress of evangelical work has been temporarily suspended in Albuquerque, N. M., by the exposure and arrest of the Rev. J. W. Sanders for ministerial conduct toward a girl of sixteen summers. Mr. Sanders declares that it is a case of mistaken identity, but until he shall be able to demonstrate his theory he will remain in jail.

THE state of New Hampshire is revising its constitution in such a manner as not to discriminate against Catholics. Article VI. of the constitution at present empowers "towns, parishes, bodies corporate, or religious societies" to "make adequate provision, at their own expense, for the support and maintenance of public Protestant teachers of piety, religion, and morality." It is now proposed to strike out this article and let the following stand in its place: "Every religious sect or denomination demeaning themselves quietly and as good subjects of the state shall be equally under the protection of the law, and no subordination of any one sect or denomination to another shall ever be established by law."

IN 1886 the Rev. Waldo Messaros, Presbyterian, was tried in Philadelphia for indecent assault on a female member of his congregation, and his ministration there ended in a scandal. Nevertheless he is still thought good enough to preach the gospel, and he has just been installed as pastor of a congregation in New York. If the Rev. Mr. Messaros repeats his Philadelphia experience in New York, he may expect to be made a bishop later on.

ATTEMPTS are being made to stir the Lick trustees into activity. These trustees, it is charged, are in a state of repose except when drawing their salary. The City Hall statuary is not erected, nor are the public baths for which many thousand dollars were bequeathed. There are numerous bathing establishments in this city to which admission is charged, and the Lick trustees will escape the unpleasant suspicion of being in the pay of the proprietors of these institutions if they will proceed to use the funds in their possession for the purpose designed by James Lick.

NEARLY one hundred years ago, that is, April 30, 1789, when George Washington was inaugurated president of the United States, meetings were held in the churches of New York, in which city the inaugural ceremonies took place. The people regarded it as a sort of religious occasion, and the clergy of New York now issue an address to the ministers throughout the country asking that similar incantations may be performed on the one hundredth anniversary of the event. To show how superstition has sunk into the background during the past century it is necessary merely to note that Harrison's inauguration will be celebrated by a ball, and none but a few ministerial fossils are found to protest against it.

NEWS AND NOTES.

The lecture at the Turnverein Hall Wednesday, January 9, was most cordially received. Our German radical friends are entirely in sympathy with the Demands of Liberalism. They are for advanced thought and the separation of church and state. They believe in a sound mind in a sound body, and that fine physical development is necessary to civilization. The hall was full, the music inspiring. Chairman Schroeder introduced the speaker with a ringing speech. He insisted upon the need of action, that in the present condition of affairs Liberals cannot afford to be indifferent. The address of the evening was upon the Nine Demands. The attention and interest of the audience in the matters discussed are evinced by the fact that our energetic ally, Emil S. Lemme, secured in a few minutes a list of over twenty subscribers for FREETHOUGHT. I have not addressed a meeting where more encouragement has been given to the Secular work than here.

On Saturday evening friend Thurston and myself ventured on a pioneer excursion to Ocean View. This is one of the suburbs of San Francisco, formerly known as San Miguel. It is pleasantly situated, although not by any means a busy point. It seems as if eventually it might be an elegant place of residence. It is only a little way from the city. The ocean views are delightful. The white sails glitter in the distance, and the blue immeasurable expanse stretches from the shore, whose soft declivities are radiant at this season with robes of green. The gardens, too, are ornamented with flowers. They bloom in the sunny atmosphere. If the three-cornered shanty were removed and the electric light substituted, there would be a vast improvement in one's first impression of the place. Col. Geo. Thistleton of the "Jolly Giant" arranged for a lecture at Wolf's Hall. Not a large number were out. By a misunderstanding circulars announcing the meeting were distributed at Coleman, instead of being delivered to the residents of Ocean View. Many of the prominent citizens were not notified of the lecture. The few that were present however, made an appreciative audience. H. L. Heath, Benjamin Rayner, A. M. Fairchild, Miss Julia Caldwell, Frank Caldwell, Mr. and Mrs. Woodville, Mrs. Whalen, Mr. Daniel McDonald, Mr. David Hughes, Frank Hale, Wm. Simmons, Max Grace, Mr. Reed, Chas. Henderson, Thomas McDonald, Mr. Baldwin, etc., are among the friends of this suburban post. McDonald and Baldwin still belong to the church, but they are too fair-minded to refuse to grant Freethinkers the same rights they demand for themselves. Mr. Hughes is an old friend from Toronto, a member of the Canadian Secular Union, and a staunch Freethinker. Colonel Thistleton is a Mexican veteran and was also in the late war at the front. He is a born fighter. He enjoys the smoke of battle, whether of the cannon or of the press. He has a cozy little home overlooking the sea, and lives an independent life. His wife is as good a radical as he, and his children, all girls, are in the ranks. Around his fireside was genial entertainment. The inhabitants of Ocean View are largely Roman Catholic. They took pains to have an entertainment of their own at Murphy's Hall, over the way, and thus the faithful were kept within the fold.

Sunday morning was simply gorgeous. Hardly a cloud was in the sky. All the land and sea were shining in the floods of radiance. Over the beautiful bay the editorial staff journeyed to the silver shores of Oakland. Happy refreshment attended the Freethought trio at the home of friend Haelke, where music mingles with the merry feast. After dinner the editors visited the Pacific Press establishment, one of the largest and busiest in the state. Here they run at full steam on Sunday, while the churches carry on business of another sort. The place, however, is silent as the tomb on Saturday. A Sunday law is certainly an interference with the religious rights of these people. They are Biblical Christians—Adventists—and keep the commandment as laid down in the Bible. From force of circumstances, these Christians are strenuous advocates of a secular government, and an invaluable aid to the agitation for the demands of Liberalism. It was quite refreshing to see this big establishment so lively on the Holy Sabbath. May it continue to flourish and be a thorn in the side of orthodoxy. On this very Sunday the Evangelical clergymen of Oakland preached upon the "Holy Sabbath" and petitions were largely signed for a state Sabbath law. Thus the issue is being forced upon the people of California.

Odd Fellows' Hall was nearly full to listen to the lecture upon "Robert Elsmere." An abstract of the lecture is given in another column. The increased attendance and interest are quite encouraging. The new and old friends I greet, the generous support, make the path of labor—if not the path of fortune—a path of rejoicing.

The largest audience yet was present at Irving Hall on Sunday evening. The movement is evidently forward, and the prospects are bright for the State Convention. I believe we shall have one of the largest conventions on the continent for Freethought and Secular government. The enormous activity of the churches at the present time, the Blair Sabbath bill, the American Sabbath Union, the Religious Amendment Association, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, pushing forward the petition for Sabbath laws in California—all these "signs of the times" which point backward, and not forward, must arouse Liberals to the necessity of organization. There must be a State Union to successfully oppose these ecclesiastical encroachments. There could not be a more opportune time for united effort.

A beautiful gift is before me—the Memorial Address on Roscoe Conkling, by Robert G. Ingersoll. The gift is more precious by the inscription on the first page: "To Sam'l P. Putnam, Esq., from his friend, R. G. Ingersoll, Jan. 5, '89."

I have two other gifts from the same generous hand, and they are inscribed, strange to say, as follows: "Rev. Mr. Putnam, from his friend, R. G. Ingersoll."

It can't seem possible that I ever was a "Rev." But I have before me the autograph of Ingersoll to that effect and I must admit it, but what a change in mental horizon between the first gift and the last! I don't think death itself could make a transformation more utterly wonderful. And he whose genius hath given such grace to this life hath put, also, the flower of beauty upon the breast of darkness. Listen to the magnificent peroration: "And as he lived he died. Proudly he entered the darkness, or the dawn, that we call death. Unshrinkingly he passed beyond our horizon; beyond the twilight's purple hills; beyond the utmost reach of human harm or help; to that vast realm of silence, or of joy, where the innumerable dwell, and he has left with us his wealth of thought and deed; the memory of a brave, imperious, honest man who bowed alone to death."

S. P. PUTNAM.

AN UNJUST DECISION.

Old John McGuire, of New York, died some time ago while attending one of Dr. McGlynn's Anti-poverty meetings. He owned a lot in Calvary cemetery, a Catholic burying-ground, but was refused burial there because, being a disciple of McGlynn, he had not died in the faith. His family brought suit to compel the church to give him the right of sepulture, and on January 7 a decision was reached in the supreme court. Judge Beach, presiding, refused to interfere, upheld the action of the church, and dismissed the case. He claims that the matter is not one for judicial interference, but for appeal to the ecclesiastical authorities.

Probably Judge Beach knows the law. No doubt the instrument conveying the burial lot to Mr. McGuire was of such a nature that it could be revoked at the will of the church. Nevertheless the decision is unjust. A man who buys a cemetery lot to be buried in, and pays for it, has a right to be laid there after he is dead. If the law does not secure him in that right it should be changed.

SOME of the names attached to the Call for the State Convention may appear misspelled as printed in FREETHOUGHT. It is hoped that signers will overlook any such errors, as proper names, often written under unfavorable circumstances, furnish the printer with the severest trial incident to his profession.

THE GIRARD COLLEGE THEFT.

Stephen Girard was born near Bordeaux, in France, in the year 1750. At the age of fourteen he left home to be a cabin-boy on a trading-vessel. In 1778 he became a citizen of this country by naturalization, having married a Philadelphia lady the year previous. His wife bore one child, a daughter, who soon died. During the last twenty-five years of her life Mrs. Girard was insane, dying in 1815. Girard's death occurred in 1831, when he was in the eighty-second year of his age. He had amassed an enormous fortune, and by the provisions of his will gave hundreds of thousands of dollars for charitable purposes, besides endowing the college which bears his name with $2,000,000 and forty-five acres of land in the city of Philadelphia upon which the college stands. The residue of certain portions of his vast estate inure to this college, so that it now has an annual income of more than a half a million dollars. The whole Girard College estate is worth $20,000,000. The college grounds and buildings are worth $10,000,000.

What Girard's religious views were, if he had any, nobody will ever know. That he was an admirer of the French Freethinkers is shown by the fact that some of their works were found in his library and that four of his ships were named after Voltaire, Helvetius, Montesquieu, and Rousseau. It may be stated here that Girard's fortune was made in the marine traffic.

The clause in Girard's will over which there has been an endless amount of controversy is as follows:

"I enjoin and require that no ecclesiastic, missionary, or minister of any sect whatsoever, shall ever hold or exercise any station or duty whatever in the said college; nor shall any such person ever be admitted for any purpose, or as a visitor, within the premises appropriated to the purpose of the said college. I desire to keep the tender minds of the orphans, who are to derive advantage from this bequest, free from the excitement which clashing doctrines and sectarian controversy are so apt to produce; my desire is, that all the instructors and teachers in this college shall take pains to instil into the minds of the scholars the purest principles of morality, so that on their entrance into active life, they may, from inclination and habit, evince benevolence toward their fellow-creatures and a love of truth, sobriety, and industry, adopting at the same time such religious tenets as their matured reason may enable them to prefer."

Has this provision of the dead philanthropist's last will and testament been carried out?

To begin with, there has been erected in the center of the College grounds a church building called a chapel. It is of ecclesiastical architecture, such as characterizes the English or Protestant Episcopal church. Now the style of building recommended by Girard was not ecclesiastical; it was Corinthian, and his college is the finest specimen of Greek architecture in the country. In erecting an ecclesiastical edifice the trustees made their first departure from the design of the great philanthropist, their first breach of trust. The chapel is a sectarian building.

In this building—this chapel, or church—religious exercises are held every Sunday. And what is Sunday but a sectarian institution? It is observed by some of the sects, and not observed by others sects. The holding of meetings on Sunday is a recognition of a sectarian day. It is a recognition of Sunday as the Sabbath, the same as the holding of religious services on Saturday would be a recognition of that day as the Sabbath. Here, then, we have a second feature of sectarianism enforced by the trustees of the college. The beneficiaries of Girard's bequest are taught that Sunday is a holy day.

Further in the direction of sectarian instruction is the "Manual for the Chapel of Girard College." This manual should have been called a ritual. In it are special services for Sundays, Christmas, Good Friday, Easter, and other "holy days." By how many of the sects of the Christian and other religions are Good Friday and Easter celebrated? Not by one in ten. They are therefore sectarian days. The observance of them is a sectarian rite. The manual itself is a violation of the will; its liturgy is another. But the rest of the manual is even worse. It contains numerous forms of prayer, nearly, if not all, taken from "The Book of Common Prayer of the Protestant Episcopal Church." They are all orthodox. For instance, the orphans are taught to pray that departing souls may be "cleansed in the blood of Christ." In addition to being sectarian, such a prayer is barbarous. Thus the sectarian doctrine of the vicarious atonement is taught.

The sectarian dogma of a virgin-born savior comes next in a "responsive hymn," thus:

"When thou [meaning Christ] tookest upon thee to deliver man, thou didst humble thyself to be born of a virgin."

The sectarian dogma of the "second coming" is also inculcated:

"We believe that thou shalt come to be our Judge."

Next we have inculcated the sectarian incarnation theory, i.e., the dogma that Christ was God:

"The God incarnate! Man divine!"

The sectarian dogma of redemption follows. The explanation of the presence of thousands of children in heaven is given:

"Because the savior shed his blood

To wash away their sins:

Bathed in that pure and precious flood,

Behold them white and clean."

That mathematical absurdity, the trinity, glaringly sectarian, is represented by the lines:

"God in three persons, blessed trinity!"

"Glory to the three in one," etc.

The dogma of a hell is included in this stanza:

"Buried in sorrow and in sin,

At hell's dark door we lay,

But we arise by grace divine

To see a heavenly day."

Everybody knows that the dogmas of cleansing blood, redemption, miraculous conception of Christ, the second coming of Christ, the incarnation of God in man, and, above all, the trinity, are rejected by all the liberal sects and are held only by the orthodox. There is, therefore, as much reason why these doctrines should be combated as inculcated, in a non-sectarian course of teaching.

So much for sectarianism. The whole Sunday exercises reek with it. In fact, all the religion taught there is sectarianism, as is all that is taught anywhere.

Take away sectarianism and you take away religion. Religion that is not sectarian does not exist. Girard knew this. He knew that if he excluded the teaching of sectarian dogmas he would exclude the teaching of all dogmas. This was recognized by Daniel Webster. It was recognized by the heirs of Girard, who endeavored to break his will on the ground that "the foundation of the college upon the principles and exclusions prescribed by the testator is derogatory and hostile to the Christian religion, and so is void, as being against the common law and public policy of Pennsylvania."

That Girard intended to exclude all religion is shown further, not only by the provision that none but the "purest principles of morality" should be instilled, but also by the very preachers who co-operate with the trustees in their fiduciary unfaithfulness. One of these preachers not long ago remarked, in his discourse, that the founder of the college "never contemplated or intended such a service as then and there engaged their attention!"

Girard was a friend and admirer of Thomas Paine, yet one of these preachers, in a sermon delivered in the chapel, took occasion to ridicule the teachings of Paine, and to designate those who celebrate his birthday as "fanatical long-haired men and short-haired women."

To sum up: the college which Girard endowed for the purpose of educating the destitute youth of Philadelphia, and giving them an education free from superstition, has been turned into a theological seminary for the teaching of the grossest absurdities of the orthodox religion. It is submitted that the first principle of morality is common honesty. The trustees of the college are guilty of gross violation of their sacred trust, and if the institution is ever brought back to the use for which it was intended, the provisions of Girard's will touching the age of pupils should not debar these trustees from the privilege of attending and learning something about the principles of morality, at least as far as they refer to the question of honesty. The trustees are disregarding the will, and they know it.

NOTE.—The foregoing facts concerning the superstitious incantations imposed upon the orphans who receive the benefit of Girard's philanthropy, are drawn from the work entitled "Girard's Will and Girard College Theology," by R. B. Westbrook, LL.D., President of the American Secular Union. Those who desire a full examination of the subject should consult this work. It may be obtained at the FREETHOUGHT office. Price, $1.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE MEETING FUND.

When the Irving Hall gatherings were proposed, it was suggested in FREETHOUGHT that as the meetings were to be free the Liberals throughout the state might wish to pay the expenses of hall rent, etc. The opportunity was embraced, and $97.25, contributed as follows, has been paid or pledged:

The rent of the hall for the six nights, including the Convention and Paine celebration, is $112.50. Collections from the audience have amounted to $34.80, and about $33.75 has been expended in stationery, advertising, and music, up to date. The Oakland meetings are sustained by the collections taken, but the speaker has in no instance received anything for his services except the satisfaction of sowing good seed in fertile soil.

GRAND INTERNATIONAL CELEBRATION OF PAINE'S ANNIVERSARY.

It is now decided to have an international celebration of Paine's Anniversary, January 29. This is fitting for one who declared, "The world is my country." Addresses will be made in English, German, Bohemian, French, and Italian. J. Schueneman-Pott will speak in German—one of the most brilliant speakers in that language. Our bright and generous ally of San Jose, J. Vostrovsky, will be asked to represent the Liberals of the land of Huss. Able representatives will be found of the land of Garibaldi and of Voltaire. If Ingersoll is on the coast on this auspicious occasion he will be asked to represent the nationality of Shakespere, Paine, and Lincoln. Patriotic songs will be sung. San Francisco is a cosmopolitan city. It should have a cosmopolitan celebration.

THE ISSUE AT HAND.

The following speaks for itself:

"The California Woman's Christian Temperance Union' has recently prepared a petition to the legislature for the enactment of a Sunday law. This petition is prepared for the signatures of both voters and non-voters in separate columns, and a large number of subscribers has already been obtained. Mrs. M. E. Congdon of this city, who is superintendent of the department of legislation, etc., in the Union, has charge of the circulation and presentation of these petitions. She said yesterday to a Chronicle reporter that party and sectarian lines were ignored, and a strong showing in favor of the object was confidently expected. The working-men were signing the petition very numerously. The Temperance element in the community was nearly unanimous in its favor, and the churches of all denominations but the Seventh-Day Advent would work for it. The women of the Union were in earnest in this matter, and with another month of hard work would be able, she was sure, to roll up a memorial which the legislature would not venture to treat with disrespect. Copies of the petition, she added, had been sent to all the pastors in the state to secure signatures in their congregations and return to her for presentation."

It is no use for the Liberals of California to say that this Sabbath conspiracy will not succeed. It will succeed unless we organize at once and work against it. Every orthodox clergyman in the state is enlisted for this war. In every city and village, and by every wayside, this matter will be pushed. Wherever there is a church spire this petition will find busy supporters. Let the Liberals of California unite. It is folly to do nothing while the churches are putting forth every effort.

THE order of exercises at the Convention will be as follows: The Convention will open at ten o'clock Sunday morning, January 27, with an address, by Samuel P. Putnam, on "Freethought Organization—Its Necessity and its Methods." After the address temporary officers will be chosen—president, secretary, and treasurer, and committees appointed to draft constitution, resolutions, nominate permanent officers, etc. Sunday afternoon and evening addresses may be expected from prominent Liberal speakers. Monday afternoon there will be a business session. Monday evening speeches and business, and Tuesday evening, music, poems, and addresses in memory of Thomas Paine. From ten to twelve o'clock Tuesday evening there will be a sociable and dance. The following are expected to be present and address the Convention: J. Schueneman Pott, Judge J. W. North, Hon. A. Schell, W. F. Freeman, Laura DeForce Gordon, Mrs. R. H. Schwartz, Miss Ada Ballou, B. F. Loomis, Professor Seymour, Prof. A. P. Bouton, Mrs. Scott-Briggs, and others.

If a "special dispatch" to the San Francisco Examiner is to be relied upon, the Canadian Parliament is under the thumb of the pope of Rome. This is the dispatch:

"MONTREAL, January 11.—A sensation has been created in religious and political circles over the assumption by Cardinal Taschereau of precedence in the provincial Parliament over the lieutenant governor. Parliament opened yesterday. Cardinal Taschereau and the clergy had been sent invitations to attend, being assigned to the first seats on the floor. His eminence resented this and writing to the usher of the black rod, demanded a position on the throne, and claimed, as a prince of Rome and according to the rules of the church, precedence over even the representatives of the queen. The speaker of the Senate and Premier Mercier held a hurried consultation, and word was sent to his eminence that what he demanded would be given. A hastily constructed throne was erected on a dais beside the queen's throne, and directly under the royal arms, and this was occupied by Cardinal Taschereau and a bodyguard of prelates yesterday when Parliament opened."

Canada needs a Secular Union, and needs it badly.

"RATIONAL COMMUNISM" is one of the wise books of to-day. It is written by a Freethinker and humanitarian—by one who has had a varied experience of life, who knows the struggle of life and the success of life. It is a beautiful picture of what may be in the evolution of the American Republic. Every Liberal should read this book, not necessarily to agree with all the profound suggestions of the author, but as a stimulus to discover the best practical method to secure the noblest and happiest co-operation of mankind. The generosity of the author is illustrated by the fact that he has made a New Year's gift to FREETHOUGHT of seventy-five copies of this book. Those who want to help FREETHOUGHT and get their money's worth can do no better than purchase this attractive volume. Price per copy, paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

BARON HIRSCH, a wealthy Jew living in Paris, conceives that the messiah for whom the Jewish people have been waiting for untold years has come at last. His notion is that the messiah is not an incarnate person, but a sort of dispensation, said dispensation being the fusion of the Jews with Christians, to be brought about by co-education and intermarriage. Baron Hirsch offers $20,000,000 to the governments of Russia and Austria for the founding of schools for Jews and Christians alike. The general belief among Jewish theologians is that Baron Hirsch is not a friend of Judaism, and that his plan is impracticable. As one rabbi remarks, Jews and Christians sometimes reach a common belief, but that belief is Freethought.

THE Japanese might be willing to accept Christianity, says the Rev. J. Honda, before the Methodist ministers' meeting, if only one sect of Christianity should present its claims to their attention. Mr. Honda is a missionary, and reports that the quarrelling of the various sects of Christianity in Japan makes the natives suspicious that the whole thing is a humbug; hence Mr. Honda recommends joint effort on the part of all sects. But it won't do. It will be no gain to Protestantism if the Romish church captures Japan, nor any gain to the Romish church if the Protestants convert the whole island. These outposts of missionary effort are prizes to be contended for by the differing sects, and no united effort can be expected. Meanwhile the Japanese are right in setting them all down as humbugs.

THE idea of Evangelist Barnes concerning hell is that it is a crucible, where men's sins are burned away and the soul chastened, and when the inmate of purgatory has been sufficiently punished

Mr. Barnes thinks he will be transported to a seat in heaven. The sufferer's condition may be alleviated while in hell, and Mr. Barnes prays to go there to lighten the burdens of the damned. This is a charitable theory, and is as good as any other that is not true. Mr. Barnes's desire to go to hell is original, and if he can make himself useful there no one will object to his having it gratified.

MEDIUM COLBY's libel suit against the Chronicle has come to an unsatisfactory termination. Mr. Colby has all along assured his friends that he could produce the original Parson Rains who robbed the mail train at Hearne, Texas, and served a term of imprisonment for the crime. When the case came before the commissioners, as reported by the Chronicle, he failed to exhibit the parson, but was himself positively identified by the mail agent and the postmaster at Hearne as the man they had known as Rains and who committed the robbery. Mr. Colby is now out of town.

As examples of the tenacity of religious delusions may be mentioned the almost daily reports of cures performed through prayer. The latest case is that of John Wright, of Pine county, Ga. For three years he has prayed for the restoration of his sight, which he lost in 1885. The other day, so the report says, it came back. The only way to prove that prayer did it is to prove that his sight would not have returned if he had not prayed. As such proof is impossible, the eyes have it, so to speak, and the prayer-cure theory prevails.

"ROMAN RULE AND RUIN" is an excellent and timely pamphlet by Z. Shed. It gives a real history of Romanism. The authorities cited are of the highest order. It is valuable for reference in controverting the claims of the church to "inexhaustible fruitfulness in all good things." The poem, "Our Father in Heaven," is a powerful and dramatic production. It is, we might say, "logic on fire." Price per copy, 10 cents; four copies for 25 cents; ten for 45 cents; twenty-five for $1.

IT appears from the New Year's celebration held in the Russian church last Sunday that the Greek Catholics begin their era with January 13, the anniversary of the day when Christ was circumcised and "received upon his person the mark of the children of Abraham." If somebody will now establish the celebration of the day the son of Joseph was vaccinated, the calendar will be enriched with another red-letter day of transcendent importance.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM will lecture next Sunday afternoon, January 20, at 3 o'clock, in Odd Fellows' Hall, corner of Eleventh and Franklin streets, Oakland. Subject: "The Glory of Infidelity." Music will be furnished by Mrs. L. Rutter, Miss Clare Haelke, and Miss Laura Haelke. All are invited. Seats free.

AN attractive feature of the successful meetings at Irving Hall is the music furnished by Mrs. L. Rutter, Mrs. S. Cook, Mrs. Albert Stout, Mr. Ely, and Prof. A. Priore. Their services will be secured for the Convention and Paine Anniversary.

MR. PUTNAM will lecture Sunday evening next, at Irving Hall, on "The Religious Conspiracy." Every Liberal should make an earnest effort to attend and induce others to attend. The subject is of the utmost importance. Seats free.

THE "Sabbath Imposture," a pamphlet by Harry Hoover, 10 cents per copy; six for 50 cents; fifteen for $1.00.

OBSERVATIONS.

More lectures. A lecture before the Turnverein to enthusiastic Germans, from whom a plea for human liberty calls forth applause like an earthquake. A lecture before a hall full of the elite of Oakland. A lecture at Ocean View that looks out upon the unbounded Pacific. A lecture in Irving hall crowded to the door with San Franciscans. Attendance on these has been my joyful experience since the last issue of FREETHOUGHT lifted its light upon a world groveling in the dust of superstition.

Allow me to get down off this high rhetorical pedestal and remark that these are lively times. I did not get out to Ocean View, but I understand the lecture went all right, though the audience went wrong. Colonel Thistleton explains the absence of the multitude by saying that a lady in the neighborhood met with a severe accident which cast a gloom over the entire community. The lady in question was bottling some beef-tea. The tea was hot, the bottle cold. The latter exploded, and a piece of it carried away a fragment of the lady's nose. The neighbors turned out as one man and one woman to offer their sympathy and to look for the missing fragment of nose, with a view to replacing it where it belonged. The search was without result up to the time of the lecture, and only a few persons, indifferent to the pride a Roman nose, gathered to listen. Such are the unforeseen difficulties which the cause of reform has to contend against at this frontier outpost.

I took much pleasure in visiting Oakland on Sunday. The trip across the ten miles of bay is a sail through a picture gallery. The views on a sunny day are illuminated like those Mr. Reynolds and I used to throw on the screen with a stereopticon, and spectators are permitted to look at them without being obliged to listen to any explanatory remarks. At Odd Fellows' Hall I heard with profit the lecture on "Robert Elsmere." As the orator proceeded to outline his premises, I listened eagerly; as he drew his conclusions, my attention became more marked; but when he reached the climax of his argument, and, soaring still higher upon the silver-tipped pinions of eloquence, announced that a collection of six dollars was necessary to pay the hall rent, my emotion exceeded control, and I broke forth into enthusiastic applause. I am quieter now.

If somebody should observe that the meeting held on the same evening at Irving Hall surpassed anything known in the history of San Francisco, I should see no reason to throw doubt upon the statement. Half an hour before the lecture began Mr. Chess, formerly of Monrovia, entered, cast his eye over the assemblage that filled all the chairs, and said that remarkable phenomena were becoming frequent when there were no good seats to be found at a Liberal lecture in a hall that held a thousand. I met here the striking combination of Mr. Furgason and Mr. Pingree. Mr. Furgason stopped growing when he was six feet and seven inches in height, or seven feet and six inches—I will not risk my veracity upon the assertion that it is not the latter. Mr. Pingree looms to the altitude of five feet. He refers to Mr. Furgason, familiarly, as "Shorty." The twain walking together gives Mr. Pingree the appearance of a tug taking an ocean steamer out through the Gate. Mr. Furgason tells the story that he was one evening upset from a boat into the Missouri river, and that it took him nearly all night to swim ashore. I have never been able to understand why he did not have the presence of mind to wade.

If an author would be famous let him also be incomprehensible. I do not often begin an article in this abrupt manner, but the above thought struck me, and I deemed it best to set it down before I forgot it. Accompanied by the compliments of the author I have just received a pamphlet, with an orange peel cover, entitled, "Facettes of Love: from Browning," by Dr. Daniel G. Brinton. It contains an address delivered "at the opening of the Browning Society of the New Century Club of Philadelphia," and is published by request—that is to say, the author requested the printer to put it in its present form, and the latter complied. The word "facettes" means little faces, as seen, for example, on the surface of a diamond badge pin. "Love" is a term found in the dictionary. Browning is a contemporary English poet, with a yearning for the obscure. Dr. Brinton resides at Media, Pa., and is vice-president of the Browning society, hereinbefore mentioned. With this definition of terms, let us proceed. The society meets for the purpose of studying Browning. If any one desires to understand Browning, he has got to be studied, there can be no dispute about that. People read Tennyson, and Ingersoll, and Thomas Paine, and know at once what the authors are talking about, but Browning and the Bible need investigation and commentary, and societies are formed for those purposes. Many people have vague ideas which they are unable to express. They come across expressions like those to be found in Browning's poems, which do not stand for anything in particular. They put their ideas into the poet's words, and are happy. Vagueness is married to obscurity in blissful union.

Browning would never do for a lexicographer. He says of love:

Centuply angled o'er a diadem.

I do not understand the above. What did the gem angle for, and what luck did it have? What did it expect to catch? Shiners, may be. The gem can have no reference to the letters forming the initials of my name. This extract does not readily yield to study. We pass. Says one of Browning's "lofty women:"

There have been moments, if the sentinel,
Lowering his halbert to salute the queen,
Had flung it brutally and clasped my knees,
I would have stooped and kissed him with my soul.

That is all clear until we read the last line. What the queen might have meant to say was that, if the man had been guilty of the violent conduct described, she "would have stopped and kicked him with her sole." And the verdict of the world would have been that she served him right.

I would like to go through Browning, and breathe new meanings into his poetical compositions, but I have no time. Many of his expressions are objectionable. One heroine says:

Well, if none of these good things came,
What did the failure prove?
The man was my whole world "all the same," etc.

Except for the laws of rhythm, which even Browning sometimes observes, the foregoing would probably have appeared as "all the samee," which belongs to the Dictionary of Slang, and can have no place in these columns except in quotation marks. Browning will not become popular here on the coast until he learns to express himself in plain and chaste language.

In his book, "Looking Backward," Edward Bellamy sets forth that in the year 2000 everybody's house will be connected by telephone with a central music station, and only professionals will perform upon musical instruments. There is a man at my boarding house who, I expect, wishes that year of grace had arrived. Few persons love music more passionately than myself. As Shakspeare has well said, those who have no music in their souls are fit for delinquent subscribers. I have at home a tin flute with which I sometimes while away the hour waiting for breakfast, and I notice that the bell rings earlier now than it did before I inaugurated the practice. The innovation is due to the influence of the man above mentioned. I heard him freeing his mind to the landlady recently. He said that when the calliope that comes with the circus goes whooping through the street he had noticed that dogs with an ear set to music point their snouts into the air and howl. He did not know whether they did thus because they were pleased or otherwise, and he would not say that the music of my flute was wholly disagreeable to him. He only knew that when he heard it he just wanted to sit up and howl. He told the landlady that it was the inexpressible sadness of "The Last Rose of Summer" performed by a man who had had nothing to eat that morning which affected him in this way, and so he hoped she would get breakfast ready as early as she could. This tribute satisfies me that I have obtained the highest power possible to me until I can grasp the harp which awaits me in the Ineffable Hence.

I expect that I am the only person in a position to do so who has never asked Colonel Ingersoll for an indorsement, a preface, an advertisement, or a contribution. I take no credit for this fact. I merely concede to myself the possession of a certain sapience by which I was enabled to perceive in advance that I would not have got them any way. I never met the colonel but once, and he has probably forgotten the occasion. Nevertheless I have fared well at his hands. I obtained, I believe, the first communication from him ever contributed to the columns of the Truth Seeker. It was a number of years ago. The editor of the Truth Seeker was away on a vacation, and I kept his chair from getting rusty at 33 Clinton place. One evening I took a trip to Long Beach, where Colonel Ingersoll and family spent the hot weather. Putnam happened to be there, and called attention to me. The colonel absorbed my hand in his broad and comprehensive palm, transferred me to the notice of his family, drew me into a big chair beside the one he occupied, and gave me a large and fragrant cigar. He was kind enough to address numerous remarks to me, and as I could see that the little circle gathered around cared more for what he said than anything I could call to mind to discourse about, I allowed him to proceed without interruption. I noted that his conversation was much like his addresses and his printed articles, being full of fine figures and wise sayings. I did not go there to interview him, nor did I solicit anything, as Mr. Putnam will bear me out in saying; but ere I went away an interview was promised me for the Truth Seeker, and the promise was kept. When the editor returned from his vacation I greeted him with the cordiality due from one brother to another who has been absent, but when he asked me what matter I had selected for the succeeding issue, there was a slight trace of hauteur in my manner as I replied that I expected to publish a somewhat extended interview with my friend Mr. Ingersoll, whom I had recently met at the beach. The editor did not club me, but he suppressed my introduction to the interview and published a much better one written by himself.

I hear that there are persons who make the colonel's life burdensome at times—cranks, impostors and beggars. It is not always fortunate to be great and good, and well-fixed financially. These things make a man a target for the malicious, the mendacious, and the impecunious.

The mail brings to this office a memorial volume containing the "Proceedings of the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York, in relation to the Death of ex-Senator Roscoe Conkling, held at the Capitol, May 9, 1888," with the Memorial Address by Robert G. Ingersoll, delivered before the State Legislature. It is an elegant volume; the address is magnificent, and I have read it a half dozen times, but after all I turn to the fly-leaf and read there, the last thing before laying the book aside, the inscription written in a strong, masterly hand, "To George E. Macdonald, Esq., from his friend, R. G. Ingersoll, Jan. 5, '89." We have books for sale at the office of FREETHOUGHT. This one is not in the catalogue. M.

LITERARY NOTES.

CHARLES WATTS's definition and defense of Agnosticism is given in a ten-cent work—"Agnosticism and Christian Theism: Which is the more Reasonable?"

THE "Truth Seeker Annual and Freethinkers' Almanac" for 1889 has already been mentioned in FREETHOUGHT. It may be obtained at this office for 25 cents; by mail, 30 cents.

L. K. WASHBURN's latest published lecture is, "Was Jesus Insane?" issued by the Truth Seeker Company, price 10 cents. His conclusion, supported by many quotations from scripture, is that Christ was more insane than divine.

THERE will always be rebels against the authority of those who seek to make men good by law. Such is Mr. G. A. Lafayette, who prints a 14-page pamphlet on "Personal Rights vs. Prohibition." We are not acquainted with the author's address or the price of the pamphlet.

"WHY I Am an Agnostic", is a manual of Agnosticism written by "Saladin" and Joseph Taylor, and published by W. Stewart & Co., 41 Farrington street, London, E. C. It goes rather deeply into metaphysics, and professes to set forth the Agnostic faith. If we may judge from the writers on the subject, Agnosticism is coming to be a religion, in which case, we fear, it will fall into disrepute as a term among Freethinkers.

PAUL CARUS, editor of the Open Court, publishes a 26-page pamphlet entitled "The Idea of God." It is an attempt to put the new wine of the author's conception of the universal being into the old bottles used in past ages, and succeeds as well as any we have seen made in that hopeless direction.

"INFIDEL DEATHBEDS," by G. W. Foote, editor of the London Freethinker, is a 98-page pamphlet giving the circumstances surrounding the deaths of some 65 Freethinkers, wherein it is shown that the "idle tales of dying horrors," so far as they relate to unbelievers, are pure fabrications. Price 50 cents.

"CHRISTIANITY: Its Origin, Nature, and Influence," is discussed by Mr. Charles Watts, editor of the Toronto Secular Thought, in a pamphlet of 31 large pages, price 15 cents. Mr. Watts is doing good work in Canada, especially by his pamphlets, which are always sound and argumentative and calculated to convince whoever reads them.

A most valuable little book is Andrew Jacobson's "Bible Inquirer; or, A Key to Bible Investigation." It contains one hundred and fifty propositions from the Bible, all of which are contradicted by other propositions, and gives many thoughtful commentaries on the scriptures. Price 25 cents. Address A. Jacobson, 1209 No. 18th st., Omaha, Neb.

SCIENCE, "a weekly newspaper of all the arts and sciences," published by N. D. C. Hodges, 47 Lafayette Place, New York, begins the new year with twenty pages instead of sixteen, its former number. This paper is gradually working itself into popular favor. Professor Boaz, the map-maker, keeps abreast of modern discovery, and appears to know more about geography than anyone else. The contributed articles are from the highest scientific authorities, as are also the editorials; and the detail work in the form of book reviews, electrical notes, and paragraphs, done by our old friend Henry J. Thomas—the kind of work that counts on the subscription list—all this makes Science the best paper of its class. Subscription price, $3.50 per year.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

There was a lecture at Irving Hall, this city, last Sunday evening, by S. P. Putnam. The hall holds 800 or 1,000 people and it was full. Mr. Putnam also lectured before the Turnverein on Wednesday evening, Jan. 9. A great crowd and tremendous enthusiasm were in attendance. On Saturday evening Mr. Putnam addressed an intelligent audience at Ocean View, and on Sunday afternoon he discoursed in Odd Fellow's Hall, Oakland, to a full house.—Charles Dudley Warner, one of the editors of Harper's Magazine, will winter at Pomona.—The $800,000 appropriation for a post-office site in San Francisco has been agreed to.—A man who was injured in the elevator accident in the Brancroft building has sued the company for $102,500.

The plea of Washington, New Mexico, Montana, and Dakota for admission as states is favorably met by both parties in Congress.—There is a report that Plymouth church in Brooklyn, N. Y., is in a bad way financially, but Dr. Abbott, the present pastor, denies it.—The wife of Jay Gould, the millionaire, died last Sunday in New York.—Powderly asserts that the men who are organizing an opposition to the Knights of Labor offered to sell out to him for $100.—Many lives were destroyed by cyclones in Reading and Pittsburgh, Pa., last week. Many buildings collapsed and afterward burnt.—There does not appear to be any American ships of any consequence engaged in the world's carrying trade. Statistics of the grain trade during the past year, which William E. Ferguson, the statistician and grain shipper of the Produce Exchange, has collected and tabulated show that of 754 vessels which carried grain from New York during 1888 to feed hungry Europe there were only three which bore the stars and stripes and they were the old steamers Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Illinois, owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The three American ships carried in five cargoes. Two of them made two trips with a total of 167,335 bushels of grain, during the year. British ships carried during the same time 15,974,492 bushels, and against five American cargoes there were 471 British. —The Mormons will hold a world's convention at St. Joseph, Mo., in April. —Investigation of the New York appraiser's office discloses that many millions have been stolen by officials. —Railroad men report that the Interstate Commerce act has worked beneficially during 1888. —The Illinois State Federation of Labor met on the 9th and appointed a committee to call upon Governor Fifer and ask him to pardon the three Anarchists now in the state penitentiary. —A National German-American Prohibition League was organized in Chicago last week. Its object is to create a sentiment among German-Americans in favor of total abstinence and legal prohibition. —James G. Blaine, Jr., has begun an apprenticeship to learn the machinist's trade in the railroad shops at Waterville, Me. —Judge Tully, of Chicago, has decided, very justly, it appears to us, that the police of that city have no right to interfere with peaceable assemblages, whether of people calling themselves Socialists or Anarchists, or others. If the police had understood this, as they should have understood it, previous to May 4, 1886, the Haymarket tragedy would never have occurred. —President Cleveland has transmitted to Congress an important message on the relations of this country with Germany as regards the usurpation of power by Germany in the Samoan Islands. The warship Trenton is off for the scene of action. —It is now understood that George Chainey—the Orthodox, the Unitarian, the Freethinker, the Spiritualist, the Theosophist, and the Gnostic, in turn—has joined the Christian Scientists in New York. Mr. Chainey appears to be a sort of Wandering Jew in the world of religious thought.

AMONG THE WORKERS.

W. F. JAMIESON has just closed his engagements in Nebraska, and is announced for a week's lectures in Shenandoah, Iowa. He has given lectures in Lowell, Newbold's, Newark, Bloodgood's, and Wilber; with the best attendance at Wilber, where the clergy were thrown into a panic—one of them making a ferocious assault on "Tom Paine" and Infidelity—but none of them with courage enough to meet the "Infidel" in joint debate. Mr. Jamieson can be addressed at Shenandoah, Iowa.

Mrs. MATTIE P. KREKEL (widow of the late Judge Arnold Krekel), of Kansas City, Mo., is prepared to lecture on the following subjects:

1. Evolution of Thought and Progress of Ideas.
2. Religion vs. Theology.
3. The Unity of Ideas.
4. The Brotherhood of Prophets.
5. Religion and Church of the Future.
6. Natural Morality Superior to Theological Restraint as a Safeguard to Society.
7. The Decay of Protestantism.—The Cause.
8. The Ethical Movement.—Culture.
9. Mental Emancipation.
10. Cause and Cure of Crime.
11. Woman's Equality before the Law.
12. Women as a Social Political Factor.
13. Marriage.—The Home.
14. The Divinity of Motherhood and Fatherhood.
15. The Rights of Children.
16. The Relationship of Poverty and Crime.
17. Am I my Brother's Keeper?
18. Religious Amendments to the Constitution.
19. Thomas Paine as a Patriot and Reformer.
20. Thomas Paine, one of the World's Saviors.
21. The Modern Inquisition.

Address, for terms, etc., L. B. Leach (business manager), Wamego, Kan.

PREMIUMS.

Attention is called to the premiums for new subscribers to FREE-THOUGHT offered on another page. A good many of our friends have worked for the paper and done their best, and have refused all offers of reward in the form of a commission. The premium list of books is enticing; we would like to see a thousand readers take advantage of it.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Hewitt is out. Grant is in. Has New York lost or gained by the change? This question, later on, will be an interesting one. We are apt to think the ex-mayor's political career is closed. There is a possible career before Mayor Grant, although we doubt it, with his surroundings. The "Bald Eagle of Westchester" got left in his contest for speaker of the Assembly. Cole served last year acceptably to his party, and has been re-elected this. We hear of no measure likely to be introduced at Albany this winter, of any stirring importance, except the Saxton bill of last year. This was passed at the last session and vetoed by Governor Hill. There is a general demand that some safeguard be thrown around the ballot box. This is not confined to either party, but whether such a measure can be made non-partisan is questionable. The usual idiotic bills to suppress intemperance will doubtless be introduced. This is to be expected. Just at the moment politics in this state are as mild as a June morning. Business at the exchanges opens dull with the new year, and prices have receded a little. The feeling is hopeful. The Western railroads have not settled their differences, although they are in process of being adjusted. Money is flowing back into Wall street. The enormous sum received in dividends, etc., has got to be reinvested. Where will it go, into stocks, bonds, real estate, or manufacturing? This was some $80,000,000—a nice new year's present. There is not much poverty here, is there? Trade with our merchants is dull, as usual, at this time of the year. The unprecedented warm winter has been serious to our retail shops. Your boasted California winters bear no comparison to the last month. I know whereof I speak, for I have lived in your state. I know your climate from Marysville to San Bernardino. Of course we shall pay for these balmy days—cyclones and a late spring. The coming year promises to be one of activity with the legal fraternity. Governor Hill has assigned Judge Daniels to hold a special oyer and terminer in this county. Johnny Fellows can no longer shirk the responsibility of trying the boodle aldermen. The Governor will in a few days name seven of the judges of the Supreme Court to hold an annex Court of Appeals. This court is some three years behind in its work. These two courts ought to clean the docket within the next two years. Our best lawyers have a year of hard work before them. In this town, lawyers, like clothes, are fashionable for a season, and then cast aside. It was only a few years ago that William Fullerton, Robert Sewell, John D. Townsend, John Graham, David Dudley Field, figured in every large case, but to-day no one hears their names in connection with law. Field kept Gould and Fisk out of Sing Sing. John Graham has saved many a poor devil from the hangman's halter. Fullerton was unable to trip up Bessie Turner on the Beecher trial. A new set have come to the front, no more learned in the law, no more skilful in handling a case, no more effective before the jury, but the fashion of the hour. Choate, Colonel Ingersoll, Bourke Cochran, and Elihu Root have the call. They will play their hour on the legal stage, and then be set aside for other new comers. Not one of these can cross-examine a witness as Fullerton can, or argue a point with Dudley Field, or influence a jury by their eloquence as old John Graham has a hundred times. They are simply fashionable—nothing more. It is the same with our doctors. Dr. Fordyce Barker has for years been the physician of our swell families. He is no more skilful than the Flints, father and son, or Gourley, or Crane, or Thomas, or hundreds of other doctors. He is the pet of the Astors, and socially one of the most delightful men in New York. I have ample reason to bless him. He has saved the lives of some of my dearest friends.

Judge Andrews has refused to enjoin the "Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children," to return to Mrs. Diss Debar her children. The court still holds that she is morally incapable of taking care of her offspring. I understand that her "Serene Highness" has not seen the general since she returned from Blackwell's Island, having been informed by the spirits that one of the Cæsars, who reigned over Rome some nineteen hundred years ago, had divorced her from her so-called husband.

CALL FOR A STATE LIBERAL ORGANIZATION.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality, as such, shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely Secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The undersigned citizens of California, realizing that the safety of Republican institutions is imperiled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed by the least interference of the State in matters of religion, and believing, with the Founders of the Republic, that "Eternal vigilance is the price of Liberty," hereby invite the Freethinkers and Liberals of California to meet in Convention at Irving Hall, San Francisco, Sunday, January 27, 1889, at 10 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of forming an Auxiliary Association of the American Secular Union, to help secure throughout the country practical compliance with the above Demands of Liberalism:

"ROBERT ELSMERE."

[Abstract of a lecture delivered in Oakland, Sunday, January 13, by Samuel P. Putnam]

This is a representative book. It is a photograph of English literary and religious life. It is not profoundly original. It can lay no claim to genius. It has learning, tact, skill, fine description of character, keen dissection of motive. Its graces of language are abundant. It abounds with the "sweetness and light" of Matthew Arnold. It is permeated with his philosophy. However, it touches no depths, and reaches no grand heights of human experience. In many respects it is superficial and unfair. It has a narrowness of outlook. It is pre-eminently of the "broad church," and not of universal humanity. It is pervaded with the ecclesiastical spirit, but that spirit stripped of its ignorance and barbarity. It is a novel written with a purpose, and such a novel cannot be supremely excellent. Genius writes to please itself, not to convert the world. Genius sees all sides, and is absolutely impartial. It has no favorite dogmas, no favorite personages. It simply reports. It puts no emphasis and indicates no preference. "Robert Elsmere" is a partial book. It has a dogma at the root of it. It is written in the interest of faith. It stands for a particular belief. Still it is an immensely helpful book. To thousands of minds it is a brilliant and beautiful gospel. It is indeed a wonderful story of human thought. It conveys a vast amount of information. It is deeply interesting from beginning to end. It is a book to be read by every one who desires to be conversant with the spirit of the age.

It is an anti-orthodox book. It wields the polished sword of Saladin. It deftly cuts to the very heart of the ancient faith, and inflicts a wound from which it will not recover. It deals with the church, not from the standpoint of science, but of literature and history. The hero is not swayed at all by the spirit of science. He does not study nature, but simply man. He does not reject Christianity because of the unscientific nature of its dogmas, but because of the lack of testimony, because it has really no valid history. This method of attack will influence a greater number than the purely scientific attack. Science is not yet thoroughly popular. Very few are deeply trained in its principles. Very few understand what science really is. The general results of science are accepted by the world, but the process by which these results are reached is hardly known. Robert Elsmere is not a man of science, but a literary critic. It is the new philosophy of history that compels him to abandon Christianity. Admitting that Christianity is a possible religion, and it is a possible religion to the Theist, the question over which Robert Elsmere struggles is this, What evidence is there that this possibility is a fact? His historic acumen declares that there is no evidence at all. Hence he must renounce Christianity, not because its doctrines in themselves are absurd, but because they have no basis of fact. They are not parts of history, but simply myths. This method of attack from the point of history is absolutely necessary to the destruction of Christianity. When intelligent minds realize that the "gospels" are not history, that the witnesses are untrustworthy, that in fact there are no witnesses, but only hearsay, Christianity as a special religion must be surrendered, and only the elements of a universal religion will survive. In this regard "Robert Elsmere" is a potent foe of orthodoxy, and in the lines of Theism will do a most effectual service for mental progress.

"Robert Elsmere" is a radical Unitarian book. It retains simply the humanity of Jesus. It affirms his real existence and transcendent excellence. This is the dogma of Unitarianism and the dogma of Robert Elsmere, and this dogma is a limitation. The idea is a beautiful and consoling one, and a multitude of minds cannot go beyond it. They can surrender the supernatural divinity of Jesus, but not his real existence. They like to believe that this gentle martyr once lived, the ideal man of the race. But there is no more evidence of a "historic" Jesus than of a "divine" Jesus. To believe in the real existence of Jesus is as much a matter of faith as to believe in his divinity. This is the last fond superstition of Christianity. There is no valid testimony that Jesus ever lived in this world. Not only his miracles, but his very existence, are mythical, and if we accept the records they do not by any means demonstrate the perfection of Jesus. Many harsh and cruel sayings are attributed him, and his teachings are not always in harmony with the highest wisdom. The "New Brotherhood of Christ" according to Elsmere cannot be a universal and permanent fraternity. It is founded upon a sentiment, not reality. It represents a dogma, not simple humanity.

"Robert Elsmere" is a theistic book. It protests as ardently against Atheism as against orthodoxy. Its Theism is of a very impalpable sort. It does not affirm a personal God, but

"One far off-divine event
To which the whole creation moves;"

and it is this "event" that gives Robert Elsmere hope in his strenuous toil. He depends upon something above and beyond humanity. Jesus is to him the expression of this hidden divinity of nature. Elsmere is an optimist, and believes that God, or goodness, is the beginning and end of all things, that goodness is absolute, while evil is relative, and in the long run the ally of goodness.

This is a beautiful belief, but is after all a dogma, a sentimental creed. It is merely assumption, and is not in accordance with facts. To our experience goodness and evil are both relative, and one seems to be as strong as the other. Now one triumphs and then the other, and there is no more assurance of the ultimate triumph of the good than the ultimate triumph of the evil. Poetically we can picture the glorious triumph of the good, but scientifically this cannot be maintained. There is no knowledge or intuition in the matter. We simply do not know, we can only hope.

But all hope and all victory must spring entirely from our humanity. Man is his own providence. He must subdue nature. He cannot trust it. Civilization is the result of eternal combat with nature's force. Nature will not save man. There is no God in nature. As Ingersoll says, the very logic that dethrones the God of the Bible on account of the cruelties ascribed to him, also dethrones the "God of Nature," for the "God of Nature" is as cruel as the "God of the Bible." If we say that infinite goodness cannot command destruction of men, women, and children, even so we must say that infinite goodness cannot do these things which nature is constantly doing. Nature is infinitely destructive. Everywhere there is a field of battle. Man must save himself. There is no God on the throne of a universe in which such horrors occur from day to day. It is as logically consistent to believe in the God of the Bible as to believe in the God of nature. This is the gist of Butler's famous argument. The only answer to Butler's Theology is Atheism, and this will be the answer of man in his highest intellectual career. Science is absolutely non-theistic. The author of "Robert Elsmere" does not approve of Atheism, or Secularism, and her treatment of these is superficial. She seems to think that Atheism is a deformity or a weakness. I regard Atheism as the grandest altitude of the human mind. It accepts the situation frankly. It is not negation. It is an advance in human thought and power. It is self-reliance. It is progress. "The Squire" in "Robert Elsmere" is not by any means a representative of Atheism. He is depicted as all head and no heart, a kind of intellectual monstrosity. But Atheism does not dim the hope of man or make less warm his affection. The skies are as beautiful, the earth as lovely to the Atheist as to the Theist. He recognizes whatever there is of delight and magnificence. He recognizes the nobility of love, the lustre of heroism, the joy of endeavor. The Atheist does not lose heart because he disbelieves in God. He is not necessarily a cynic. The glory of humanity does not depend upon the glory of divinity. Not one virtue of man ever originated from the virtue of a god. Secularism is essentially humanitarian. It cultivates hopefulness, sympathy, fraternity. It stands for energy, foresight, and all the noblest possibilities of the race. It discards no fact, no truth. It accepts all science, all human faculty, all intellectual power. Theism is a faint, vague hope. It has no evidence any more than Christianity. It does no good. It creates feebleness rather than strength. It gives a false reliance. Whenever God has been depended upon for any result there has been an absolute failure. Amidst the play of cause and effect the deity has been an eternal shadow. Not one event in the history of the world can be traced to a divine mind.

As Ingersoll says, "Robert Elsmere" is a conservative book. It does not go to the root of the matter. It glances by the greatest of problems. It does not plunge into the great sea. It discovers no new world.

It speaks of a new religion. No new religion can be made at this day. Religion is not the offspring of civilization. Civilization needs no religion. It simply tolerates religion. Disraeli in one of his novels declares that all men of sense have the same religion. What religion? inquires one. "Men of sense never tell," is the philosophic reply. The secret is, men of sense have no religion. They want no religion. Charles Sumner said that he never had a particle of religious feeling. Sumner is a representative man. The reformer, the worker, the genuine enthusiast, the poet, the artist, need no religion. Religion has no meaning in the ever advancing world of science. Religion originates in the shadow of barbarism, not in the light of knowledge. It is good and bad, as any passion is good and bad, but it is essentially passion. When it comes, it comes spontaneously. To create a new religion by conscious human effort is impossible. It is the dream of the child, but the man cannot reproduce the dream. He can simply remember it. As well affirm that the race must have a new childhood as to affirm that it must have a new religion. As Santa Claus disappears with childhood, so every religion on the face of the earth must disappear as mankind approaches maturity.

What is Mrs. Ward's remedy for the ills of life, for poverty, for wrong? Simply out-door relief, as Ingersoll says; simply charity. After reading this magnificent book we close it with a sigh, and wonder that it comes to this lame and impotent conclusion. It accepts society as it is. It accepts the riches of the rich and the poverty of the poor. It proposes no change. The rich shall be kind-hearted and patronizing. The poor shall be thankful that the rich are so charitable. This is the new gospel of Elsmere. It is the old church remedy. It is charity, it is not justice. It is not science. It is not liberty. Immense wealth and miserable poverty are to continue. Aristocracy is to continue. Ranks are to continue; splendid mansions are to continue, and the crowded tenement houses. The rich are to aid the poor—gracious ladies are to visit the poor, noble aristocrats are to give gifts to the poor. This is the millennium. It is the same old regime. It is the same old ideal. It is chivalry—but it is not democracy. Feudalism remains. The iron system keeps right on. It is only placed in charge of a few good-natured millionaires, who are to try to run it, if possible, for the benefit of the masses. The masses are to be quietly grateful, but underlings still. "Robert Elsmere" strikes at orthodox religion, but not at the orthodox system of social relations. It does not, like "Looking Backward," and "Rational Communism," grapple with the mightiest problems of life, and point out some adjustment by which there shall be neither riches nor poverty, but happiness for all. The book is not a picture but a photograph. It gives no new perspective. It is a faithful reproduction of actual life to-day in cultivated English circles. It shows the mental struggles that are constantly going on.

It shows how dead orthodoxy is to the intelligent mind, that it has no vital hold upon the world at large. Catherine, with all her noble qualities, is a pitifully ignorant woman. She scarcely reads or thinks. She is much like a machine in her intellectual movement. Her heart is broad and generous, but her brain is like the brain of a child. This is orthodoxy to-day. Only the narrow-minded can believe in its dogmas. The heart of the orthodox believer may be sympathetic. There may be charity and good works because of a noble temperament, but the brain is paralyzed. It wants no living thought. It dreads inquiry. It dreads discussion. It clings to the past. It turns from the future. It denounces liberty. It abhors progress.

Orthodoxy desires to rule. It brooks no opposition. It has no regard for the rights of a Freethinker. It would chain science and education to its car.

The spirit of to-day, the spirit of literature, of science, is opposed to orthodoxy. These are now its potent enemies; art and genius are no longer with it. The living books of to-day are not orthodox. Orthodoxy finds no response in the popular heart. Who, to-day, of cultivated men and women in the church, or out of it, believes in total depravity, eternal hell-fire, vicarious atonement? Even orthodox clergymen are compelled to preach the simple humanity of Christ, and rely upon that simple humanity for the success of their labors. They let dogmas alone. They won't do for this era of science and humanity. Within the church itself Robert Elsmere will have a vast and beneficial influence. The pulpit may thunder against it, but the pews will welcome it. It comes as Christ came—not to the priests but to the multitude. The priests will crucify it, but the common people will accept it gladly. It is a breath of fresh air, of nature and humanity, amid the cold shadows of the church. If it had been a better book—a deeper book—even its splendid literary excellence might not have made it so popular as it is. It gives the bright sunset colors of Christianity. It retains all the good that is in the venerable religion, while orthodoxy

And dies among its worshippers.”

It is a book for all to read. The radical Liberal will find its pages full of interest. Unsatisfactory in its results, the processes which it unfolds of mental evolution are intensely dramatic. It is a fascinating book. It is an honest book. It is a book that gives information. It helps to spread the gospel of “sweetness and light.” Thousands will find in its brilliant pages a stimulus to advanced thought, to broader outlook and gentler belief.

A CHESTNUT FROM JERUSALEM.

Profane history is full of lies, but the champion liar is the fabricator of sacred history. For at least ten years past there has appeared in various newspapers a translation of a pretended document said to have been found engraved in Hebrew on a brass plate, in the ruins of an ancient city, in Italy, now called Aquila.

The New York Sun of Nov. 8 reprints the document from the London Tablet, with a certificate of its undoubted authority, both editors apparently unaware that it is a stale and blasted chestnut. It purports to be the death sentence of Jesus Christ, pronounced by Pontius Pilate, and dated “in the seventeenth year of the reign of the Emperor Tiberius, on the 25th day of the month of March.”

Now, March 25, in the seventeenth year of Tiberius, was Sunday, A. D. 31. Another printed copy says March 24, which was the Jewish Sabbath; and another copy says March 27, which was Tuesday. But the four Evangelists tell us that Christ was crucified on Friday (which from time immemorial was hangman's day), and three of them fix it on the great Passover day, while the fourth says it was the day before. And the fourth gospel is right as to its not being on the Passover, because the Jews never allowed any trial or execution on that holy day, and for some reason they never celebrated the Passover on Friday.

None of the sacred writers tells us on what year the crucifixion took place, but astronomical science assures us that between A. D. 28 and 35 inclusive, the only year in which the Passover could have fallen on Friday was A. D. 30.

And in regard to the day of the month we know that the Passover never occurred earlier than March 26.

Another thing to be noted in regard to this pretended discovery is the discrepancies of date in the printed copies. The Sun has it in 1280; another copy says 1810, another 1820, and still another 1200.

Aquila is situated 58 miles northeast of Rome. It was built on the ruins of an ancient city by the Emperor Frederick II., who reigned from 1215 to 1250. If the discovery was made in 1280 it was thirty years after his death. If it was in 1200 it was fifteen years before he was crowned, and when he was only six years old. Frederick led a crusade to Jerusalem in 1228. The brass plate is said to have been preserved in the sacristy of the Carthusians, inclosed in a box of ebony, where it was found by the commissioners of arts in the French army that invaded Italy in 1859. If such a plate really exists it is as contemptible a fraud as the golden plates that Joseph Smith pretended to find in 1827, and whether it was the work of a Carthusian monk or a French savant is quite immaterial; it is a Christian forgery all the same, like all the pretended historical records relating to the death of the late Lord Jesus Christ, in the reign of Tiberius.

HISTORICUS.

MY “MURCHISON” LETTER.

Perhaps the readers of FREETHOUGHT who have been so stirred up over that biblical quotation in Nov. 13th issue—“But if any man thinketh he behaveth unseemly toward his virgin daughter, if she be past the flower of her age, and need so requireth, let him do what he will; he sinneth not; let them marry”—feel they are entitled to some sort of an apology from me for not mentioning that it was taken from the revised pages; all the same I am not going to apologize at all. I incline to think the stirring up has benefited them, inasmuch as they may in the future be more careful to peep into the recesses of such several woods as are before them before jumping to the conclusion that neither one contains the “b'ar telled on.”

The fact is, I thought it unnecessary to notify a reader of FREETHOUGHT that my quotation came from the revised New Testament. I believed such wide-awake students would know such a plain statement could not come from among the ambiguous texts of the Old Book; and rather hoping to set theology agog and give it a chance to deny, I claimed to quote from “the Bible.” I did quote from “the Bible,” did I not? If the Old and New Testaments conjoined form a “Bible,” then I had full authority to say, “The Bible says thus.”

I have no doubt Prof. W. F. Jamieson wrote a very telling letter (as he always does), and it is a pity to have its basis cut away so entirely no eyes save those of FREETHOUGHT's editors had the pleasure of observing the structure thereof previous to its toppling over. I for one sincerely regret its loss—especially the Jesuit part of it. He might work that up by itself, methinks, and serve on a fresh plate. I do not quite agree with him in thinking the last estate of the Bible worse than the first. I like a sentence to express just what it means, with no chance for conjectural disputations, and the new version has tried to clear away the cobweb ambiguity existing throughout the old. There is no doubt that the mooted verse in 1 Corinthians means just the same in the old version as in the new, but it requires the two succeeding verses to undo its vagueness, as witness: 1 Cor., chap. vii, verse 36: “But if any man thinketh that he behaveth himself uncomely toward his virgin, if she pass the flower of her age and need so requireth, let him do what he will, he sinneth not; let them marry.” Verse 37: “Nevertheless, he that standeth steadfast in his heart, having no necessity, but hath power over his own will, and hath so decreed in his heart that he will keep his virgin, he doeth well.”

Verse 38: “So, then, he that giveth her in marriage doeth well; but he that giveth her not in marriage doeth better.” If Paul had meant several masculine connections of the virgin instead of one, the pronoun “he” would have been handled to give the texts the proper distinction; but he does not mean now a lover, now a father, and now a husband, any more than by the “she”—feminine personal—he means “wife” in lieu of “virgin.” No; the masculine pronoun “he” signifies one male individual. What sort of a male individual? Lo! “He that giveth her in marriage doeth well.” Who but a virgin's natural guardian, her father, giveth her in marriage? It is needless to suppose his substitute might on occasion fill the bill, for Paul is not talking of substitutes, he does not even hint at one; he talks of a “man” who “thinketh he behaveth himself uncomely toward his virgin” who has passed the flower of her age, about whose “need” his mind is exercised. Or, baser still, is it the “man's need” the honorable Paul is so solicitous about? Verily, it must be, if the text means anything, and the feelings of the lady are, as is usual in the "chivalrous" Bible, of no account. She is past "the flower of her age," is an old maid who has done nothing to lift the "curse" off her race; so not being "steadfast in his heart" to consecrate her to God and to "holy deeds," and having no "power over his own will," he, the father, the natural owner of this over-mature virgin—may "do what he will," he may marry her—his own daughter.

So the old version, obscurely disclosing all this, is, to my mind, worse than this new version that comes forth with the law plainly worded. "If any man thinketh he behaveth unseemly toward his virgin daughter, if she be past the flower of her age, and need so requireth, let him do what he will, he sinneth not; let them marry." The plain text, whose meaning cannot be falsified for the entrapping of honest minds, is the Liberal's best ally. All hail to the plainly worded new version! and I wish the "committee" would get out yet another version on the same principle, for the honest translations the sooner good people will have their eyes opened.

Evidently Paul was too anxious to establish his church to meddle with men's vices. He dared give some good advice though, such as, "He that giveth her in marriage doeth well," and "he that hath power over his own will" and "giveth her not in marriage doeth better," or "the unmarried woman careth for the things of the Lord that she may be holy both in body and spirit." That last, we understand, is the "doeth better" part of the business; yet if the father concludes his "need" is more pressing than the Lord's, "let him do what he will; he sinneth not;" he "doeth well" to marry her. So the difference between "doing well" and "doing better" is before us as clearly defined as Paul could put it. Do as you please and you "do well;" do for the Lord's glory and you "do better." Hell-fire is for heretics. Paul was politic or nothing. He made "holiness" easy by adapting his creed to the inclinations of those whom he hoped to manipulate into paying church-members. Is not that so? What other conclusion can one accept after reading chapters like unto the vii of 1 Corinthians?

Like G. E. M., I am heartily proud of the candid fight which Liberals accord the Bible. However great an enemy it may be, and has been to humanity, it should be met in open field without the prejudice of one untruth; it contains so much of degenerating cant, folly, vice, worldliness, that misrepresentation would appear like becrased superfluity. For my part, I want to see every line of it pulled to pieces, the truths sifted out, and crammed down the universal throat, fact after fact, until all the old superstitious pabulum that has so long kept human brains and human blood afroth with dyspepsia-like morbid taint is thoroughly purged from the system.

M. E. C. FARWELL.

Vineland, N. J., Dec. 11, 1888.

POVERTY AND HENRY GEORGE.

Allow me the use of FREETHOUGHT's columns in giving an opinion for which I have been asked.

We all know that poverty, here and abroad, is largely due to causes which society ought to remove, like saloons, lack of practical education, legal support of monopolies, and belief that poor people ought to be content with the lot to which God has called them. But there are many who are poor because they are idle, intemperate, and extravagant; and to tell them, as is sometimes done in Anti-poverty meetings, that society is to blame for their sufferings, is to do both them and society harm. And it is also to be remembered that we differ very widely in natural fitness of mind and body for making money. For present purposes I will make four classes, though the distance between members of the same class may be greater than that between this class and the next. Class first will contain those people who would have become rich even if they had started poor; class second, those who can support their families in comfort on their earnings alone, but not become wealthy; class third, those who must endure many hardships and privations in order to support their families on their earnings; class fourth, those who cannot do even this. The members of class first and class second make more money than their neighbors because their services are worth more to the race. Who would dare to ride on a railroad where nobody is employed who has ever before earned a dollar a day? Society is like a steamer where the captain, pilot, engineer, and other officers are paid more than deck-hands, because if these latter were to get all the best places, the vessel would never get into port. It is no more certain that two and two make four than that nearly one-half of every community will always be below the average in strength, skill, common sense, acuteness, energy, and every other gift which has a market value. Raise the average as high as you can, you will always find some below it. Those of us who have less than the average capacity for making money, and no other means of support, are necessarily poor, and our poverty is not going to be agitated out of existence. There is no more possibility of making all men equally comfortable than equally tall. My neighbor makes money faster than I can, because his talents are more useful to our race. To compel him to support me as comfortably as himself, would be to rob him of his just reward; and to prevent him from earning more than I do, would make him a cripple and a slave.

Poverty will never vanish entirely, but it will continue to diminish, as it has done for centuries. Poor people in the United States are taxed much too heavily on their food, clothes, tools, and dwellings. Both parties have proposed plans for altering our tariff, and I should be glad to see some change made in the direction advocated with great brilliancy and glowing philanthropy, in his newspaper, "The Standard," as well as in his book, "Protection or Free Trade," by Henry George. His plan of reducing all taxes, both local and national, to one on land, seems liable to fatal objections, however. Our national revenue could not be raised in that way, for the Constitution declares that direct taxes shall be apportioned according to population, and the states which stand low in average wealth of citizens will not allow themselves to be overtaxed. Local taxes can be laid nowhere more justly than on churches, banks, factories, club-houses, hotels, saloons, and costly mansions. The plan of letting a man spend millions on such structures, and pay no higher taxes than if he had put up a cheap cottage on the same land, does not look like a new gospel for the poor. Is this to be done in order to enable the state to confiscate all the land? Confiscation without compensation is robbery. Is this the only way to save our free soil from being monopolized by individuals? No monopoly of land could be so oppressive as to have it all held by the state, for then the government would have despotic power. I am against reforms which require the sacrifice of individual liberty.

FRED. MAY HOLLAND.

ROBERT THE DEVIL.

Yesterday was the fust time in a week that the editor of Gabe's Horn didn't strike me for a dime when I went into the sanctum for copy, and the reason was 'cos it was pay day, and he didn't have the cheek. But I struck him for seventy cents he owed me, lent to him at ten cents at a time.

Did he see me? Not much, the skin—more'n that, he's a Skinner. What did he do but ask me if I couldn't wait a day or two, as he had got to use all his pay, but would have some more in a day or two when he got a divvy on some stock, he said. I didn't like to, but I said I could wait. You see, I don't wanten git out with him, 'cos I wanten make my dabue in Gabe's Horn some day, and besides, he gives me tickets to moral shows once in a while, when he can't sell 'em, and don't kick hard when he misses cigars and oringes and things, 'cos he dasn't, yer know.

When I said I warn't in no hurry for the spondulix, he smiled like a hippertamus when you chuck him a cabbage, and praised the peces I'd rit, and hoped I would yet rite in a more subdude tone for the delection—or some such thing—of the readers of Gabe's Horn, who would admire my genus, he said, but who crave less exhilaratin' pabalum, or something like that, or words to them effects.

I told him I'd got another literary effort about my clothes, and he ast to see it and I showed it to him. He looked at the name of it, and said I'd oughter have something available for our columns in that pece, and he'd be pleased to examine it, smilin' a twenty-inch smile of gratification and insomnia as he put the pece in his desk for fucher reference, he said. Then he gimme some copy, and I scooted for the composin' room. As usual, I got the pece back at night, with a ritin' on it sayin' "A remarkable compersishen, but too florid and agnostick for the columns of Gabriel's Horn. The riter will yet be heard from in our columns, when comes the millennium. In the meantime let him effervess in the Devil's Tattoo, a paper devoted to worldly affairs." This is the pece:

THE CAIN AND ABEL AFFARE.

When Mr. Adams was bounced outer the Eden ranch, he went into the farmin' biz; but where he got his plows, and harrers, and rakes, and sythes and things the Lord only knows, and he doesn't tell in his book—forgot it, I s'pose, or thot it warn't of no consequence. In the history of the Adams family at that time—I wonder if the garden of Eden was anywhere near Quincy, Massychoots, where lots of Adamsses live, and where the two presidents of that name come from? In the erly history of the Adamsses Cain and Abel was born, and in two verses of the history they are grown up and farmin' and keepin' sheep, which is makin' mitey quick time!

Cain russled with the soil and rased cabbages, pertaters, and rooty bagers, and things, and Abel, kind of dudish, rased lams and sheeps, cuttin' wool not bein' so hard work as cuttin' hay. In them days the Lord made folks offer burnt sacrifices to him, to show they was square up and up for him and didn't vote for the devil, and 'cos he must a liked the smell of burnt meat. The wust of it was, the Lord allus wanted a good fat sheep roasted, though as long as he didn't eat it, I don't see why cat and dog meat wouldn't a smelt just as well burnin' as sheep meat. But the Lord was perticler, and wouldn't hays no cat and dog meat in his, but must have ram, lam, sheep and mutton or nuth'n.

Well, Abel had lots of sheeps, and one day burnt a lam for to tickle the nostrils of the Lord, who was well pleased when he smelt the burnin' meat, and told Abel he was a daisy, or words to that effect; and Abel went off home with a plume in his hat, so to speak, feelin' proud, yer know, and puttin' on frills.

Then Cain, who didn't have nuthn' but vegetables to offer, bilt a fire and put on 'taters, turnips, and rooty-bagers and things, thinkin' the Lord would like the smell of them and call him a brick. But the smell didn't suit the Lord, and he didn't say, "Bully boy, Cain;" and Cain got on his ear, and he and the Lord had some words about it, and then he scuttled off to find Abel, who was puttin' on more frills than a stud hoss, which made Cain madder 'n a hornet!

Now, I don't blame the Lord for not likin' the smell of burnt cabbages and things—I wouldn't like it myself—but when Cain offered the best he had in his line of business, and things he mite a sold for spot cash, prob'ly, what did the Lord want to crush out his spirit for by showin' he didn't like the smell? Why didn't he say, "Cain, my boy, you are doing the best you can, but between me and you and the lamp post, I ain't fond of the stink of burnt vegetables. Here, my boy, here's a quarter. Go buy a lam of Abel, and then you can do the handsome. But no, he soured on Cain and Cain soured on him, and I don't blame him, for it was enuff to break up any young feller, to be set down on when he tho't he was doing the handsome, as it was.

Cain hadn't oughter slugged Abel, and knocked him cold, that's a fact, 'cos men was scarce then, and come high; but he was mad as thunder, and madder when he saw Abel puttin' on scollops; and there's no knowing how sassy and insultin' Abe mite a been. He mite a called Cain a mudlark, a snoozer, a chump, a damphool, a son of a gun, or any of them gems of sass that gits a feller's back up, and ketched one on the jugler in Cain's outburst of rage. We don't know, and never shall know, what made Cain lose his head, and had oughter let him down easy as we can, 'cos ther's no knowin' when any of us mite strike fatally from the shoulder, when mad clear through.

I allus had a good deal of sympathy for Cain, 'cos I allus tho't that sluggin' match was owin' to the way the Lord had treated Cain, who picked out the best cabbages and things he had for the offerin', no doubt, and if I had been on a jury to try Cain I'd a stuck for a 'quittal, even if the other eleven had been obstinat enuff to vote and stick for conviction. Yes, I allus spoke more insorrer for Cain than in anger, and if any body wants to git up a monument for him I'll subscribe ten cents any day, and don't care who knows it.

S'posin' a father—not a heavenly father, but an earthly father—had two sons, and one was a lickder dealer, and give the old man a barrel of whiskey, and the other was a shoemaker, and give the old 'un a pair of shoes. And s'posin' the old un should say to the fust one, "Tom, you're a dandy, right after my own heart! You've done the handsome—shake!" And should say to the other, "Dick, you're a chump! You're n. g. Git away to yer cobbler's shop and waxed ends, yer no company for me!" S'pos'n, eh? What would you think of such a father? Would you vote for him for city father—alderman? I'll bet yer wouldn't!

But that's the way the heavenly father served Cain, and I have allus weeped tears of sorrow for Cain whenever I weeped for him at all—honest Injun! I never tho't it was fair, the way the Lord went back on Cain's cabbage offerin', being the best heads he had. I don't know how much teer water I've weeped for Cain, but I'm done weepin' now, bein' struck jes' now with the question: "Who knows if this Cain and Abel affare is true?" And the anser comes back, "Nobody!" and I said, "That's so," and I wiped my weepin' eyes for ever! I shan't come down for no monument to Cain!

Mr. FREETHOUGHT editor, what's 'the reeson, yer 'spose, why the editor of Gabe's Horn wouldn't print this pece? Seems to me its a charitable vue of a case that never was p'r'aps; don't you?

To the Editors of Freethought:

As I cannot be present at the coming Convention I herewith send you a little of the "yellow slave" ($5), dug out of these golden hills, to help roll onward the glorious work. Use it in any manner that you may deem best to help on the good cause. Hopeful for Humanity,

The Coos County Contingent.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Before this year is numbered with the past it behooves us, on its last day, to put on our thinking caps to find if there be anything left undone that should have been done. I have concluded to devote part of the day to that purpose, and, among other things, find that FREETHOUGHT should be remembered.

I delayed my own subscription expecting to see other friends. Please renew subscriptions as per six names inclosed. They all want FREETHOUGHT. Find, also, cash for the same.

I am pleased to find that our Advent friends are sniffing the "dangers ahead," and are taking active steps to avert them if possible. We could ask no more than they are doing, in their petition to Congress against the Blair educational amendment; and what surprises me most is that they are ahead of us in this move. It behooves us now to put our shoulders to the wheel and help all we can. We are working up a Paine celebration at Myrtle Point and expect to make a grand success of it. It is something new for this section, and we expect it will cause some to think and others to talk, and possibly some will blaspheme at us Infidels for taking so much liberty in a Christian country. My best wishes go with you and FREETHOUGHT.

Yours fraternally, J. HENRY SCHROEDER.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - JANUARY 26, 1889

THE Examiner, the best of the city dailies, got there last Sunday evening, and gave the Freethought meeting at Irving Hall as much space as it devoted to the Moody revival exercises at the Pavilion.

WE beg the religious editor of the Chronicle to give us the name of the "president of a prominent Infidel club in Los Angeles" who has been converted under the revival labors of the Rev. Mr. Cleggett.

MR. MOODY declares that "the man who will not swear in the presence of his wife, but does so outside, has more respect for his family than for his God." In our opinion the man thus described knows exactly where his respect is due.

THERE are more than a hundred Presbyterian ministers in the East who have applied for pulpits in Southern California. Whether this is due to a desire on the part of the ministers to save the country or to let the country save them is uncertain. The climate in the southern part of the state ought to be good for parsonitis.

THE effulgence of "Lewis the Light," a religious crank who cherishes the delusion that he is the messiah, has been shut in from the world by the walls of the insane ward of Bellevue Hospital, New York, whither the courts have committed him. The real name of this nineteenth century savior is Greensdale, and he was formerly a resident of San Francisco. There was no commission de lunatico inquirendo down in Judea.

THE French Catholic parochial school at Haverhill, Mass., is in trouble with the city school committee because it does not comply with the law. The law is that the English language must be the vehicle of instruction in all schools, public or private, and that United States History shall form part of the curriculum. In this school, which has two hundred and fifty pupils, two-thirds of the instruction is in French. A French history of Canada takes the place of a history of the United States. The teachers are ignorant of the methods in vogue in the American public schools. The priest in charge has declined to bring his school up to the requirements of the law. The school committee has ordered the truant officers to carry out the law, that is, to bring into court all parties who send their children to the unlawful school. There seems to be questionable stretch of legal authority in this case. In schools supported by private money parents should certainly be permitted to choose in what language their children shall be instructed.

THE Rev. J. C. Smith, of Otis, Mass., is an ardent sporting man, and has driven the winning horse in several local races. He replies to his scandalized parishioners by saying that he has found worse men in the pulpit than on the sulky, and that horses pay better than preaching. The Rev. Mr. Smith will be commended for his frankness if for nothing else.

A PETITION is in circulation asking that the women of this state be permitted to vote in school elections under the same restrictions imposed upon male citizens. There is a small colored party in this movement. The proposed legislation will give native women a vote, while foreign females must take out naturalization papers. At the first election following the passage of the act the Protestants would have a clean sweep. Nevertheless the bill ought to pass.

THE scheme of removing Professor Woodrow from the Theological department of the University of South Carolina, as the Chronicle observes, has not worked happy results. The professor held that evolution did not conflict with orthodox Christianity. Now the students have taken his part, and the injustice done him has caused a great revival of interest in Darwinism, and Huxley, Tyndal, Wallace, Haeckel, and other writers are eagerly read. The faculty have evidently sowed the dragon's teeth.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Lodi is in "the great watermelon belt of California." Land in the vicinity is worth from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty dollars per acre and is constantly increasing in value. Lodi is about forty miles from Sacramento, and one hundred miles east of San Francisco. The orange-trees, magnolias in blossom, and violets greeting the sun show the mildness of its winter climate. All the semi-tropical fruits can be raised here. The silk industry is successful; cotton and the tea plant flourish. The Mokelumne river, by means of machinery, irrigates vast quantities of land. It is an attractive spot, and is destined to be one of the wealthiest portions of the state.

It was bright, sunny weather during my campaign here of Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, the 16th, 17th, and 18th inst. Not a great many were present at the lectures, but the company I met was so genial and forward-looking that I do not feel discouraged, although I was in hopes of greater results. The battle is not by any means over, and disappointments are often in the way of reform. Mr. and Mrs. John Robinett expect to make Lodi their home, and they are always strong allies. Freethought is to them the enthusiasm of humanity.

Geo. F. Cluff and sons, who edit that lively paper "The Valley Review," don't keep their guns spiked for fear of consequences. They are doing a splendid business.

There are three women who are now admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the United States, Mrs. Belva Lockwood, Mrs. Laura de Force Gordon, and Mrs. Ada M. Bittenbender. The second of this illustrious trio, Mrs. Gordon, is famous on the Pacific Coast, and has a wide reputation for legal acumen and forensic ability. She is indeed one of the remarkable women of the day—is not only a lawyer of first-rate capacity, but a reformer and thinker of broad and generous mind. She has practical genius and believes in improving the world in every direction. She has done much to develop the agricultural resources of this state. Her house is in the midst of a well-cultivated garden, where nearly every variety of fruit and vegetable has been produced. She and her sister, Mrs. Cluff, are constantly trying experiments, and have demonstrated the almost boundless fertility of the soil; that the wealth of the tropics and the orient can mingle with the best productions of a northern clime. Cotton can grow with the wheat; the silkworm can spin his shiny thread; the orange and lemon and pomegranate can thrive with the walnut and the almond and the olive. The tea plant and cassia and ginger tree will increase alongside the potato and the watermelon.

It was a delightful privilege to be entertained at this home, and to come in contact with this unceasing spirit of reform and progress. It was a pleasure also to meet with Mrs. Powers and her son, Dr. Powers, who are earnest humanitarians. Dr. Powers was the first child born in Virginia City, and the breath of freedom comes by natural inheritance. Mrs. Powers, like D. M. Bennett, was in her early years among the Shakers, and in a certain sense she still regards herself as belonging to the "family." I quite enjoyed studying this remarkable phenomenon of modern religious life. The Shakers are a gentle, quiet, happy, and orderly people. Their superstition is of a very mild sort. They do not believe in the union of church and state. They believe entirely in persuasion. They recognize a natural order and a spiritual order. In the natural order marriage is allowed. In the spiritual order it is freely renounced. There is no compulsion. Those who are brought up in these communities can go out into the world any time they desire. The Shakers believe in the absolute equality of the sexes. Their theology, in the abstract, is something like that of Theodore Parker. They adore both the fatherhood and motherhood of God. They deny the trinity but affirm the duality of the deity. He is masculine and feminine. They discard the "rib-story" and "miraculous conception." The Bible is not infallible, but simply a record of spiritual manifestations. Jesus is not God. Neither is he identical with the Christ. He is only a manifestation of the eternal Christ, as was also Mother Ann Lee. They do not accept vicarious atonement, and heaven and hell are declared to be conditions and states of the soul. They worship with music and dancing. Practically Shakerism is founded upon the phenomena of Spiritism, and Elder Evans declares that among these communities there were phenomena similar to what occurred at Rochester with the Fox sisters, seven years before the "rappings." Mother Ann Lee was evidently a "medium" and all along the history of this sect are manifestations of a power like that of modern Spiritualism. A curious folk the Shakers are—a placid, contented people. There are now eighteen families in the United States, with a membership of ten thousand. In agricultural skill they are unsurpassed. No one works hard. They have plenty of leisure. There is always something to do, but when one is tired he can rest to his heart's content. The law of attraction prevails. There have never been any law suits in the families. No police officers, no courts are required. Pure good will and frank confession settle every difficulty. All property is common, as with the early Christians. The one who brings ten thousand dollars to the community wealth is no better treated than the one who brings nothing. Here is thorough equality. When one wishes to depart he is given the exact amount he puts in, without interest. The Shakers are quite an inventive people. They originated the drying of sweet corn for food, over fifty years ago. They were the first who instituted the raising, papering, and vending of garden seeds in the present style. They first manufactured medicinal vegetable extracts for market. They were the first to raise and manufacture broom brush into brooms. The first buzz saw was made by the Shakers. They invented the planing and matching machines for dressing flooring and ceiling lumber. They were the inventors of cut nails and metallic pens. The Shakers show a good record in the way of making an earthly paradise.

The three sunny days at Lodi, where the white frost came every night, while the violets and the roses and the marigolds bloomed in the morning radiance—these days of labor have been joyous with bright companionship and the learning of something new about the ever-flowing, ever-changing ocean of humanity, more wonderful than any god ever dreamed of or "revealed" by priest or magician.

Sunday afternoon was somewhat threatening, but a good audience was present at Odd Fellows' Hall, Oakland, and I discoursed on "The Glory of Infidelity." When my friend Schou was posting up the notices, some religious looker on so marveled at the title that he remarked in bewildered tones, "He must be drunk." If this astonished individual had come to the lecture, he might have discovered that Infidelity means the exact opposite of his exclamation. It is the sober second thought of the intelligence of mankind.

Irving Hall was thronged again on Sunday evening, although the rain did come down a bit. I spoke on "The Religious Conspiracy." Everything now points to a most interesting convention. The issue is at hand. It is both state and national. The Liberals must meet it.

IN MEMORIAM.

I was pained beyond measure while at Lodi to receive a telegraphic dispatch from my friend W. S. Rodgers, of Boulder Creek, urging me to be at the funeral of his wife. I could not go. Alas, how death mingles with life, and our most joyous moments are ever in the shadow. I remember the home on the mountain among the great trees, a home of peace and comfort, of quiet, sweet life. It is a lovely picture, the mother and the children, and the father strong in life's battle, for noble affection makes flowers and sunshine for his arduous toil. The bright and beautiful spirit is gone. The home is desolate. The shadow deep has fallen. The heart is breaking, and tears are like rain. Death is remorseless. Humanity, glowing with sympathy, alone can aid in this awful hour. Over land and sea let this broad sympathy extend. Mingling with the memory of the dead let there be the tender consolations of the living.

A copy of the Salt Lake Tribune just received also announces the death of Mrs. Sarah M. Pratt, the wife of the late Mormon apostle Orson Pratt, aged 72, at the residence of her son Arthur Pratt. Mrs. Pratt withdrew from the Mormon church in obedience to intellectual and moral conviction. She brought up her children to shun the creed of the church. I met her and her family when in Salt Lake City, and found them all in sympathy with broad and liberal ideas. Orson Pratt was one of the brightest intellects in the Mormon church. He was the theologian and the philosopher of that body. Whatever his religion might be, in the world of pure thought he was a keen and brilliant mind. Mrs. Pratt was a woman of great fearlessness and independence, and it was no slight thing for her to break with the Mormon church for the sake of herself and her children. It was a heroic act, and bravely and beautifully did she stand by her womanhood and her conscience. Says the Tribune:

"She voluntarily gave up all that is very dear to many women for a principle. She gave up everything except her womanhood and her children, and chose to walk alone through life, under such a ban as the Mormon chiefs were able to put upon her in the long ago, rather than make a compromise with what she believed wrong. No one not familiar with the methods that prevailed here of old, knows what the course of this woman involved to her. An absolute despot ruled at the time, and he knew that his only hold on power was through the superstitious fears of this people. His word was absolute law, and he was unscrupulous as to the means adopted to execute his edicts. Yet this delicate woman braved his wrath. When every door and window had ears and the very winds seemed to have voices to carry anything like words of revolt against wrong, this woman was wont to gather her children around her in the middle of the room, and in whispers explain to them the falsehood, the shame, the sin, and the disloyalty that had crept into this thing called here a creed, and to beseech them for the love they bore her, and for the sacrifices they owed to duty, never to cease to repudiate the thing. She knew every leader; she knew which were sincere and which were corrupt; she knew that the founder was irrevocably tainted, and she was brave enough to tell what she knew. With a pure woman's clear instincts she instantly detected how much of this creed was good and how much was of the earth earthy; she saw that, tested in any crucible, either of religion, justice, patriotism, or even common sense, the system as practiced here must either be readjusted or abandoned, or it would bring unspeakable sorrow and distress upon this people, and so she denounced it. She did it, too, when hedged about with distresses and terrors, but she never quailed. Surely she has earned her rest, and when Utah, redeemed, shall begin to build monuments in honor of those who were real martyrs for the sake of principle, one of the first to be upreared should be to the memory of Mrs. Sarah M. Pratt."

Thus the roll of the shining dead increases. We recognize the invisible world, the world of thought, the world of hope, the world of aspiration. This world is constantly growing, ever broader, ever higher, ever grander. From hero and martyr, from love and virtue, from all the fountains of the living present, from childhood, youth, and silver age, this world doth ever grow in majesty, in solemn wonder, in constellated glory. It is for the heart of man struggling with a thousand evils. Its "mystic unfathomable song" touches the spirit to earnest and sublime endeavor. Its countless stars from vast centuries of fleeting life pour their mild, inspiring rays on ceaseless toil, and thus more beautiful, more glorious, becomes each appointed task in the glistening fields of time.

THE PAINE ANNIVERSARY.

An attractive program has been prepared for the Paine Anniversary, consisting of music, short speeches, and recitations. The evening's entertainment will terminate with a sociable, and it is hoped that the attendance will be large. Especially is it desirable to bring out the ladies and the families, and make the sociable a success. Admission to the hall is free. Gentlemen who dance will suffer a tax of twenty-five cents.

The first feature of the Paine celebration will be the address delivered by Hon. A. Schell Sunday evening, January 27. Mr. Schell is an able speaker and deserves a crowded house.

THE CONVENTION.

The program for the convention has been arranged, as far as possible, to expedite business and to have a full expression of opinion. It must be understood that this convention meets for a definite purpose. It is called to help to carry out the Demands of Liberalism. At this time there is especial need of a union of our forces. There are now pending in Congress two bills known as the "Blair Educational Amendment bill" and the "Blair Sunday Rest bill." The American Sentinel says: "Not less than fifteen millions of names have been presented to Congress as petitioners in favor of the latter bill by the American Sabbath Union. The names consist of about seven or eight millions gathered by the friends of the bill, and the counting of seven million two hundred thousand Roman Catholics, because Cardinal Gibbons signed the petition."

The principal leaders of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and Prohibition party are in favor of this "Sunday Rest bill." The General Assembly of the Knights of Labor have indorsed this bill by unanimous vote. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, in convention assembled, have also indorsed the bill.

It is evident that the nature of this church movement is not understood by the working people, or they would not thus indorse it. Therefore there is necessity for agitation and for enlightenment. The Freethinker must stand by his colors. There never has been any greater danger to liberty than now. The point of co-operation for the ecclesiastical parties is the "Sunday Rest bill." That bill is for the protection of the churches. It is to build up their power. It is to give them absolute control of one day in the week.

The "Sunday Rest bill" is absolute tyranny. It is a degradation to American citizenship. It is a practical union of church and state.

The issue is being forced in our own state. Hundreds of petitions are circulating for a Sabbath law in California.

Liberals can exercise a vast influence if they will act together. Without doubt all will be desirous of harmony at the convention. Outside issues must be avoided. There are many important questions in which we are all deeply interested, but these questions cannot be discussed at the convention. In concentration there is strength. It is by limiting the work to be done that the work is made successful. Good speakers will address the convention. Time forbids lengthy and elaborate lectures. What is needed are speeches that go at once to the point, that will arouse to action, that will kindle enthusiasm for liberty and justice. A bright, strong, harmonious convention will be invaluable aid to our cause. It will give a universal impulse. It will interest thousands.

It is by co-operation that the great work of Liberalism is to be done—co-operation throughout the state. By combining resources public meetings can be held at the most favorable points. If one cannot have lectures in his own vicinity, he can help to sustain lectures at other places in the state. The co-operation of friends has made possible a series of most important meetings in San Francisco during the last month. This could not have been done simply by local aid. The experiment is worth trying elsewhere, at Sacramento, Los Angeles, etc. The friends at these places cannot bear the whole burden, but friends throughout the state can do so, and in the end all would be benefited.

The Convention will open on Sunday morning with an address on "Organization, Its Necessity and Its Methods." To co-operate effectually it is necessary that we should know one another personally. In order that there may be this acquaintance the meetings on Tuesday night will close with a sociable and dance. The object is not merely a good time, but to cultivate those friendly associations by which reform becomes imbued with the spirit of fraternity.

Our German fellow-citizens are among our strongest allies. In the issue that is being forced upon the country they will be upon the side of Liberty. F. Schueneman-Pott will speak for this great body of coadjutors, at the Paine Anniversary.

THE MEETING FUND.

The following friends have taken advantage of the opportunity offered them to contribute toward the expenses of the meetings at Irving Hall. The amount paid and pledged is $109.50, or $3 less than the rent of the hall.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS AND THE SUNDAY BILL.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In the issue of January 12 appears something from which the casual reader might infer that the labor unions are in favor of and indorse the Blair Sabbath bill. As one who is, first of all things, interested in promoting the cause for which labor is fighting, I shall protest against any such sentiment gaining a foothold. The fact is, no organization can be more absolutely Secular than are the various labor unions. Their obligations are simply promises on the honor of the man or woman, with no sort of oath or mention of deity. The discussion, even, of religion is prohibited in all their meetings. They are organized for and pay strict attention to purely Secular business.

Individual members of these unions are much like individual members of other organizations. No doubt there are members who would like to see a Sabbath forced upon all their brothers. This has as little relation to the union as has the stealing of a horse by a Methodist, or the shooting of his business partner by a member of the American Secular Union,

Again, in our ranks are doubtless many with leather heads who, when approached by the leather-tongued disciple of the Sabbath bill, can be stretched on a number 6 block and their names secured on a petition for the bill. Straightway their adherence is paraded in the columns of some such paper as the Advance, and warped into meaning that the labor unions are in favor of an absurd Sabbath law. Now I submit that the Advance is mighty poor authority on labor unions. Probably not one member in ten of any labor organization ever read a line in the Advance in all his life.

After all is said and done, I shall still believe that the disciples of that bill have at present got the cinch on those of us who oppose it. When they approach a man who is working 365 days in the year and show him that this bill gives him every seventh day; that he will no longer be in danger of losing his job if he tells his employer on Saturday night that he shall play with his children on the morrow, they have a powerful argument for winning that man. When the opposition tells him of the danger lying hidden in the measure he thinks it is working in the interest of his his employer who wishes to enslave him every day. If you play the demagogue and tell him he will be the richer at the end of the year by working every day, he will use the knowledge obtained at his Union and show you most conclusively that you are, economically, wrong.

How then, shall he be approached? From my experience with the workman I shall say, offer him something in place of the Sabbath bill that shall have as much attraction for him, and at the same time protect both him and yourself from the subtle dangers of the bill you oppose. He sees something to be obtained from this bill, and the fatal weakness of the opposition lies in its declaration for things as they are.

Oakland, Cal.

EUGENE HOUGH.

It cannot be doubted that Mr. Hough is right in regard to the general sentiment among intelligent working people. They want a Sunday, but they do not want a church day. They do not want a holy day, but a holiday. No just law can be passed forbidding work or play upon Sunday. If one wishes to work on Sunday he has the right to do so. It is simple tyranny to say to any man in this republic that he shall not labor on any particular day of the week. Arrangements for Sundays can be made by employers and employees without resort to ecclesiastical legislation.

It is evident, however, that a large number of workmen are in favor of enforcing the Christian Sabbath, and so are in favor of the union of church and state. They are in favor of tyranny and the subversion of human rights. Such is the position of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. It has placed itself on record as in favor of an ecclesiastical Sabbath. If it is a non-political body then it has most flagrantly violated its fundamental law. It has taken sides upon a political question of vast importance, and, worse than this, it has taken the un-American and the un-democratic side. It has allied itself with superstition and barbarism.

Every Liberal, every Freethinker, who belongs to this Brotherhood should indignantly protest against this hasty and ill-advised action. Are the Brotherhood in favor of a union of church and state? Are they in favor of ecclesiastical tyranny? Are they in favor of religious legislation? Do they wish to subvert the Constitution? Do they wish to place themselves on record as opposed to the Declaration of Independence? Yet this is what the Brotherhood has done. Are the Freethinkers who belong to this organization to tamely submit? Are they to thus allow their dearest rights to be insulted? The Brotherhood has joined hands with the priests of this country to enforce a priestly rule. In the Journal of United Labor, the organ of the Knights of Labor, Nov. 29, it is declared that at the General Assembly of this order, the Blair Sabbath bill was unanimously indorsed. If, as Mr. Hough says, the vast majority of working people are opposed to this bill, why do they not say so? Why do they allow these indorsements to go forth? The representative of the God-in-the-Constitution party was allowed a two hours' address before the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and the Knights of Labor. The representatives of the American Secular Union had no chance to express the other side of the question. The church party had it all its own way, and the church party was unanimously indorsed by these labor organizations. A great blunder has been committed. If these organizations ally themselves with the church, their usefulness is over. Never can labor achieve its rights except by a recognition of universal rights. The only way to protect labor is by a most sacred regard of the liberty of all. If these organizations commit themselves to Sabbath tyranny they commit themselves to death and dishonor. Let there be a wide discussion of the matter. Let the working people think about these things and speak out. Private remonstrance will not do. There must be a public reversal of this untimely action. The influence of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers and of the Knights of Labor, by a public resolution, is given to the God-in-the-Constitution party; it is given to the political power of the churches and priesthood; it is given to the subversion of American liberty. Will the Liberal members of these organizations thus allow themselves to be led into public approval of a tyranny worthy of the middle ages?

THE volume of the writings of Horace Seaver announced some time ago is at hand. It is published under the title of "Occasional Thoughts," and makes a 12mo book of 230 pages. Mr. L. K. Washburn, the compiler, writes the preface. This volume, if it bore the name of no author, would be of the greatest worth as a fountain of philosophical suggestions and a source of ideas that may be studied and enlarged upon by the reader, to his permanent advantage. But as a volume containing the best thoughts of a man like Horace Seaver, who has stood at the front in a fifty years' battle for Freethought, the book possesses a value which it could not draw from any other circumstance. There is therefore a double reason why this volume should be precious to Freethinkers. They cannot open it without striking some worthy sentiment expressed with clearness and power, and they can never look upon it and not feel a sense of thankfulness toward the man who has done so much to make this country free to believers and unbelievers alike.

THE Oakland clergymen are unable to reach an agreement on the Sunday question. The Rev. Dr. Bothwell takes ground publicly in favor of healthful recreation after divine service, in the parks and suburban gardens, while Rev. M. Clapp, of the East Oakland church, contends that Sunday recreation, as well as labor, is Sabbath-breaking and against the law of God. We can only implore these reverend gentlemen to take the advice of Paul and be fully persuaded in their own minds, and to let all others do the same, without attempting legal interference.

MOODY reports that since his last visit to this coast, ten years ago, he finds the condition of things very much improved; and a correspondent of the Weekly Star inquires if that improvement is because Moody stayed away, and if so why he did not continue the good work by prolonging his absence.

OUR immigration-law tinkers are again at work. There is now a bill in Congress proposing to exclude Anarchists and Socialists—it is a wonder that Atheists were not included. The Ford

Commission reports the bill and has this to say of the excluded classes:

"These persons do not come here to uphold and maintain our form of government. Their object and purpose is to destroy and tear it to pieces. They hold any law in contempt which does not meet with their individual approbation, and believe disobedience to it is perfectly justifiable."

If this were to be applied impartially, what would be done with Roman Catholics? The Catholic "does not come here to uphold and maintain our form of government." His object is to "destroy and tear it to pieces." Why is not the Fenian included in the prohibition? Why are Communists omitted? Why is the Coolie ignored? Is the Ford Commission competent to deal with the question anyway?

It may be truly said that Mr. L. K. Washburn, of Revere, Mass., has filled a long felt want. He has compiled a song or hymn book "of the highest moral sentiment, united with the choicest music," and "perfectly free from all sectarianism." It is called the "Cosmian Hymn Book." It has 258 songs, nearly all accompanied with music. There are Hymns of Nature, of Humanity, and of Freedom; Liberal Hymns, Miscellaneous, Funeral, and Doxologies. Without controversy, this is the best hymn book ever published. It ought to be in the families of Liberals where the children can learn the songs as they grow up, instead of the Sunday-school inanities now sung by the rising generation. The price of the book singly is $1.50, but in large quantities it may be obtained much cheaper.

SABBATH legislation now threatens not only the nation as a whole, but the state of California in particular. The clergy of the state are circulating petitions asking the legislature to enact a Sunday law, and they are obtaining many signatures. To offset this movement anti-Sunday petitions have been printed and may be obtained at this office. Send for them, circulate them, and return them promptly, so that the legislature may be addressed at once after the Sabbath bill is introduced.

THE Methodist ministers of Cleveland have decided to answer "Robert Elsmere" by ignoring it entirely. This is similar to the ostrich's method of eluding pursuers by burying its head in the sand. It is to be wondered at that nobody has had the wisdom to suggest that "Robert Elsmere" is immoral and therefore a proper object for the attention of Anthony Comstock. He is generally the first resort in cases of this kind.

THE Woman Suffragists are holding a convention at Washington, and Senator Blair, of religious amendment notoriety, is at the front in favor of the movement. He wants the Republican party to make universal suffrage a plank in its platform. The women should fight shy of this man. He is after their votes for his Sunday law.

RENEWALS.

This is the season for renewals, and we are reminded of that fact both by the large number sent in and by the large number that have not as yet reached us. We have had a year's trial before a jury of our patrons. The verdict, which will come in the form of renewals, is due. We trust that the jury will be unanimously in favor of giving us another year.

PREMIUMS.

Attention is called to the premiums for new subscribers to FREETHOUGHT offered on another page. A good many of our friends have worked for the paper and done their best, and have refused all offers of reward in the form of a commission. The premium list of books is enticing; we would like to see a thousand readers take advantage of it.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The San Francisco Post-office bill has been signed by President Cleveland.—This is from the Tulare Register: "Word has reached us of a very exciting scene in one of the churches in Porterville last Sunday. It was at the forenoon service of Reverend Fillingham, a Presbyterian minister, who recently located here. In the midst of his discourse the pastor suddenly ceased and began throwing books and chairs at the congregation, creating the greatest consternation in the house. Several persons rushed forward, and after a desperate struggle succeeded in overpowering and binding the unfortunate man, who had so suddenly become a raving maniac. He was taken to Visalia, where he was pronounced insane. During the struggle in church he informed his captors that if he had his Henry rifle they would not find it so easy to secure him. The eccentric actions of the man have for some time been the subject of comment."—The mortuary report of this city for last week shows that there were 116 deaths, as against 173 for the corresponding week last year. There was one death from smallpox, 22 from phthisis, and 14 from pneumonia.—The adoption of the Australian system of voting is recommended by the Labor organizations of this state.—Mrs. Elsie Reynolds, the medium whose recent trial at San Diego excited so much interest, has returned to that city and is doing a good business.—The recount of the ballots cast in San Francisco is progressing without material results.—Alvan G. Clark, of Cambridge, Mass., the manufacturer of the great lenses for the Lick telescope, is in Los Angeles, to which place he has been summoned by the trustees of the University of Southern California. They wish to consult him regarding the manufacture of a forty-inch lense for a telescope to be erected on Wilson's peak, in the Sierra Madre range, east of Los Angeles.

A bill is before Congress proposing to prohibit the admission into the United States of any idiot, insane, pauper, or one likely to become a public charge, or one who has been legally convicted of crime, or who is a polygamist, Anarchist, or Socialist, or who is afflicted with any loathsome disease, or has entered into a contract, expressed or implied, oral or written, to perform labor or service for any person, firm, company, or corporation in the United States, whose passage has been paid on promise of labor. It also provides that alien labor shall not be admitted to labor for a time with the intention of returning, ministers of the gospel excepted.—Religious differences are disrupting the Knights of Labor. It is stated that the Catholic Knights in the Pittsburg, Pa., district will refuse to pay any more dues, and thus, becoming delinquent, will be dropped from the rolls of the order. The primary cause of their dissatisfaction is that, at an annual meeting of the district assembly last week, the Protestants captured every office.—Archbishop Corrigan, of New York, has sent a circular to all the priests of his diocese forbidding them to give absolution to any who attend the Anti-Poverty meetings of Dr. McGlynn.—There are no new developments in the Samoa affair. United States warships are on their way to the islands, and a collision with German forces is possible.—Another supposed good man is now shown to have gone wrong. The late Henry P. Marshall, of New York, died short in his accounts as the treasurer of the Episcopal Missionary Society for Seamen, $12,000, and St. George's church, of which he was a trustee, $40,000 more.—"General" Thomas Moore, late commander of the Salvation Army forces in America, has been removed from office. His financial transactions were irregular.—Lieutenant Zalinski's dynamite gun, designed for the Italian government, was tried at Fort Hamilton Saturday last, and threw two shells, one containing 180 pounds of explosive gelatine and dynamite and the other 500 pounds of the same explosive. The first shot went 950 yards and threw a great column of water 100 feet into the air. The second shot went a distance of 1,400 yards. A large mass of water was raised ten feet and a column of water went more than 100 feet high. Either of these explosions would blow any ship out of the water.—The sheriff of Valencia county, N. M., who was missing, had squandered $10,000 or $15,000 of public money.—Deacon Cooper, of the Christian church at Fort Dodge, Ia., has been suspended by his church for illicit liquor dealing.—A bill entitled "An act to prevent monopolies" is in the New York senate. It is aimed at trusts, and embodies the principles laid down in Judge Barrett's recent decision against the sugar trust.

The new White Star Steamer Teutonic was launched last Saturday morning at Belfast, Ireland. She is the largest vessel afloat, being 582 feet long and of nearly 10,000 tons burthen.—It is reported that the Arabs have broken up the missionary station at Zanzibar and killed the missionaries.—Mme. Ilma di Murska, the once great singer, died in poverty at Munich Jan. 17.

OBSERVATIONS.

Sunday evening, while the howling Salvationist stood in front of the old Adelphi Theatre on California street, with a lantern in one hand and the love of God in the other, and ejaculated froth over the surrounding spectators, I took my way to Irving Hall. I was early, but the crowd was ahead of me, and the best I could do was to take a seat in the back part of the room. Prof. A. Priore was deducing music from the violin, with piano accompaniment, in a way that left the A. Posteriori method without an advocate. Mrs. Rutter sang the "Last Rose of Summer" better than I can play it, and there were vociferous cheers when the orator of the evening took the platform. It was an enthusiastic assemblage. It appeared rather strange to me that there were not more ladies present. There is room for reform in this direction. An audience that is not half women does not represent our great movement. Still we rejoiced in the presence of fifty or a hundred ladies, and submitted to the absence of the others with the best grace possible. An Examiner reporter, present by invitation, gives a brief synopsis of the lecture in another column.

These meetings are growing in interest and profit, as evinced by the increased attendance and the diminished number of plugged nickels found in the collection. An unidentified pool check can be obtained at this office upon delivery of the ten-dollar gold piece for which it was dropped into the hat by mistake. It is a source of recreation to the reflective mind to observe the conduct of persons who attend Freethought meetings and get more thought than they can assimilate. They seem to lack sufficient judgment to stay away, but they can tell when they have enough—and when they get it they go out.

It seems that the legal authorities of Pennsylvania, stimulated by Anthony Comstock, have decided that Sadie Bailey Fowler's romance, "Irene," is unfit for circulation. I wish I had known that before I read the book two or three years ago. I should then have perused it with a greater interest. As it was, I found the narrative rather dry. Mrs. Fowler is not a great novelist. She ranks with Amelie Rives, but her book is not so morbidly immoral as the "Quick or the Dead." The trouble is that Mrs. Fowler's ethical standard is too high for the comprehension of believers in Christian morality.

Years ago Bret Harte wrote a story called "The Luck of Roaring Camp," and took it to a religious publishing house to be put in type. The proprietor of the establishment was a deacon in an orthodox church and of unblemished piety. He objected to Harte's manuscript because, as he claimed, it was unfit for his young lady copy holder to read, and liable to demoralize her. But it afterwards transpired, and became notorious, that this deacon, though a married man, was sustaining ministerial relations with the same young lady copyholder, who had been placed in his charge by her parents in the East. Worse still, he deserted her. Then she exposed him; his wife got a divorce and half his property, and left him. This is about the style of men that join churches and societies for the suppression of vice, and can't sleep nights on account of their solicitude for other people's moral welfare. The chances are greatly in favor of the morality taught in "Irene" being much better than that practiced by any one who favors its suppression.

Last Sunday, while being entertained at the house of Mr. Carl Broneer in Oakland, I looked over an old-fashioned autograph album that had the yellow complexion which age gives to paper.

It appeared to have been the property of Dorcas J. Rice, and contained many quaint sentiments poetically expressed. Under the date of Oct. 9, 1842, I found the following:

ACROSTIC.

Delightful theme as e'er engaged the tongue,
Or more sublime than ever poet sung,
Remote from bigotry and slavish fear,
Conjoined with love and all that men hold dear,
Are modest virtue, pure in every sense;
Sincerity of heart, benevolence,
Justice and kindness join to make the sum,
As all the graces harmonize in one.
Now the result of all is happiness—
E'en bigots here must surely this confess.
Rejoice, then, now that we have found the road,
Immortal bliss in ever doing good;
Contented in its lot, does not repine;
Enrobed in truth the graces ever shine.

Salubria, I. T.

ABNER KNEELAND.

"I. T.," stands for what was Iowa Territory forty-seven years ago. The acrostic was written by Mr. Kneeland, founder of the Boston Investigator, less than two years before his death, and when he was more than seventy years of age. The handwriting is good—much above the average, and underneath the signature is a neat and proper flourish. Dorcas was Abner's daughter, I believe, the mother of Mrs. Broneer. Mr. Kneeland was one indeed who "found the road," and "immortal bliss in ever doing good." That satisfied him, and he departed to the islands of the blessed, to the land of the Hereafter, with honors upon his head which are not dimmed to this day.

It will take me a long time to become reconciled to the way Mr. W. R. Colby, the medium, has disappointed me. I never believed that he could write between slates screwed together without removing the screws, and I never felt more like a wooden-headed idiot than when I was sitting at a table with him waiting for the letter that was sent but never came. He was at the time under suspicion of being a Baptist minister, and I felt for him. He called frequently at the office, and was as agreeable a man as I ever met. A visitor to the city had presented me with a box of cigars that he had got swindled on. He confessed that they made him sick. I gave Mr. Colby one of these, and he never complained; said he always smoked that brand. He confided to me a history of his life, and made it clear to me that he never was in Texas, where Parson Rains had committed his depredations. Furthermore, he assured me that he could produce Parson Rains in proper person. The result of his suit against the Chronicle shows that he is a humbug. He produced Rains sure enough, but Rains was Colby, as two men who had known him in Texas testified. Yet, even now, I do not believe Colby is more than half bad. He was a Union soldier, and his enemies admit that he was courageous in battle and tender-hearted and helpful in caring for the wounded. He enlisted as a private and returned as a lieutenant. He has kept himself poor by giving his money to people in distress—so says the record. He seems to have lacked the ability to resist temptation, drifting with the current of necessity that knows no statute book or moral obligation. The theory of Stephen Pearl Andrews must be true, that men have a double nature—one half good and the other half bad, one conflicting with the other, and each achieving and suffering alternate victories and defeats. Colby's better nature was in the ascendant when I met him, so I find it difficult to think of him as the fraud that his profession made him.

SUNDAY NIGHT'S LECTURE.

From the Examiner.

Samuel P. Putnam addressed an enthusiastic audience at Irving Hall last night on the subject of Freethought. He spoke of a deep-laid plan to make the schools sectarian, and cited the case of Pittsburg, where he said in the public school building a Roman Catholic school was maintained, and other examples to show that there was real danger.

"Christians," said he, "have no more right to introduce the Bible in the schools than Freethinkers have to make a text book of the 'Age of Reason.'"

Senator Blair's Universal Sabbath bill was analyzed and condemned. He did not, he said, find fault with the idea of a day of rest, but the religious features and the clauses prohibiting secular amusement or work was an infringement of personal rights. Theology he spoke of as the "science of ignorance." The Religious Amendment party was roundly denounced as desiring a union of church and state. The American Sabbath Union, he said, was allied to this party. The presidents and principal officers of the Women's Christian Temperance Union are vice-presidents of the Religious Amendment organization. This party desires to amend the Constitution of the United States so as to have the laws administered by only Christian officers, in accordance with the principles of the Christian religion. The temperance unions and the Prohibitionists, he said, had his sympathy and approval in their temperance work, but they were ecclesiastical organizations, and so he objected to them.

The Religious Amendment party was not dangerous alone, but the co-operation of the other organizations made it formidable.

In conclusion Mr. Putnam said he did not wish to interfere with any man's belief, but he did not want any one to interfere with his.

He called a meeting of the "Freethinkers' Convention of California" for next Sunday morning at 10 o'clock.

EVERY SENSIBLE MAN'S VIEW.

The sheet-anchors of a free republican government are freedom of speech and freedom of the press; but liberty of conscience and liberty of thought would be of but little value if unaccompanied by the liberty of utterance and the freedom of expression. Just what the political doctrine of "Anarchy" may be, or by just what particular mode the Anarchist proposes to accomplish results, we do not understand. Perhaps they are desirable and perhaps they are not; perhaps they are founded in philosophy, high intelligence, humanity, and the most admirable principles of political economy, perhaps they are not. We must permit the leaders of this party and the teachers of this faith to present their views to our intelligence before we condemn them; we cannot permit a judicial or executive censorship to come between Anarchists and intelligent citizens to silence the argument when being made. All we have the right to demand in the name of organized government is, that it shall proceed to no illegal extremities, nor take one unlawful step in an illegal direction. Anarchists who talk and write in reason may be heard; Anarchists who throw bombs must be hanged. We know of no reason why a policeman should have greater authority to prevent an Anarchist band from talking than a Methodist camp-meeting from praying. We do not regard Socialists as any more or less responsible for utterances than Roman Catholics or Mormons, and we would be just as jealous of a church as a political organization if it took a step in the direction of subverting the law, and we would punish with equal impartiality and severity all illegal acts by whomsoever done. Let the Anarchists and Socialists of Chicago know that they are at liberty to advocate any political measure however absurd, but that they cannot perform any illegal act however rational. Hence, we are glad to be informed of the decision of Judge Tuly of the circuit court of Illinois, restraining the Chicago police from improper intermeddling with the meetings of the Arbitr Bund.—Argonaut. AMONG THE WORKERS.

W. S. Bell writes: "I am going to start on a lecture trip to the West next April, and would like to say a word or two to the Liberal brethren who may be interested in my lectures. My line of travel will be via St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Leadville, Salt Lake City, Sacramento, to San Francisco. I would like to have many opportunities to ring my liberty bell, on or near this line of travel, as I shall not, in all probability, return the same way. From San Francisco I shall follow in the footsteps of my illustrious predecessors, Dr. York, S. P. Putnam, C. B. Reynolds, and B. F. Underwood, in my tour through Oregon, Washington territory, and parts of Idaho. I would like to get into correspondence with our Liberal friends on this route from Chicago to Seattle at once, to arrange for lectures. W. S. BELL, Chicago, Ill., 248 State street."

CALL FOR A STATE LIBERAL ORGANIZATION.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality, as such, shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely Secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The undersigned citizens of California, realizing that the safety of Republican institutions is imperiled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed by the least interference of the State in matters of religion, and believing, with the Founders of the Republic, that "Eternal vigilance is the price of Liberty," hereby invite the Freethinkers and Liberals of California to meet in Convention at Irving Hall, San Francisco, Sunday, January 27, 1889, at 10 o'clock A. M., for the purpose of forming an Auxiliary Association of the American Secular Union, to help secure throughout the country practical compliance with the above Demands of Liberalism:

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

PRES. WESTBROOK ON GIRARD COLLEGE AFFAIRS.

To the Directors and Members of the American Secular Union:

At the last annual Congress of your association a resolution was adopted asking me to furnish "a brief report on the status of affairs as to Girard College and to suggest if possible a practical method that might be made use of to reform the abuse of Christian domination and to restore this institution to conformity with the expressed purposes and wishes of the founder, Stephen Girard."

I have delayed my answer to this call in order to thoroughly investigate certain preliminary questions regarding the proper remedy and course of procedure in bringing the case before the civil courts. After much hard work, with occasional consultations with eminent lawyers in Philadelphia, I have fully settled this question in my own mind.

It would be manifestly unwise to give aid and comfort to our opponents, and embarrassment to ourselves, by a full disclosure of our case until we are ready to file our papers and to actually open the judicial contest. The case could not fail to become a most "notable" one, involving several important questions which have never been clearly settled by the courts.

My conclusions may be summarized as follows:

1. There is without doubt a good cause of legal action against the trustees of Girard College for the violation of the express conditions of the Will of the founder. The proper policy is not to attempt to set aside the Will, but to enforce a strict conformity to its provisions.

2. Although the subject is primarily a local one, it is a matter of public interest throughout our entire country as involving questions bearing upon similar trusts already created and that may hereafter be established. Philadelphians should undoubtedly, and must necessarily, take the lead in this contest, but there are many reasons why they should ask and receive the countenance and financial aid of all friends of right and justice throughout the entire land. The interest manifested by the American Secular Union is worthy of all commendation, and the offers of pecuniary aid from several of its members and friends are highly appreciated.

3. The success of a law-suit is always contingent. Rufus Choate once said, "Divine prescience itself could not possibly foretell the possible finding of a petit jury." The same is true with regard to judges. We may fail in the first court. We have more hope in the supreme court of Pennsylvania, and still more in the supreme court of the United States. I believe that we should succeed in one of the higher courts. It is worth the effort, and great good could not fail to come out of the full exposure of sectarian fraud and bigotry.

I am happy to say that public opinion is growing rapidly in Philadelphia and all over this country, against the palpable perversion of Girard's Will, and the courts are bound to feel this influence. The Darmouth College decision could not possibly find favor in our supreme court to-day, and Judge Storey, if on the bench now, would be ashamed to make the concessions he made in the Girard Will case forty years ago, on questions not really before the court. While the courts of Massachusetts are wrangling over the Andover theological trust, it is high time that the courts of Pennsylvania were waked up on the Girard College perversion.

4. I have by no means abandoned my purpose to have the trustees of Girard College arraigned at the bar of justice, unless they speedily change their policy in the matter of the moral instruction of the orphan students, but the preparation of the case is not the work of a day. It may take several months to settle the numerous principles of law and practice. No money is needed at the present time beyond what I am willing to pay out of my own pocket. When needed I will not hesitate to ask for it with the assurance that it will be forthcoming. I find Liberals of all classes, as well as many persons "professing and calling themselves Christians," interested in this matter, not excepting the Jews and Freemasons, of which latter fraternity Girard was a prominent member and a generous benefactor. It would be bad policy to "rush" this case. It will "keep," and our views are growing in public favor every day.

5. There are other matters that are larger and more urgent than the Girard will case, and to these I recommend the American Secular Union to devote its attention for the present. I specially note the joint resolution now pending before the Senate of the United States, introduced by Senator Blair, of New Hampshire. It has just enough sugar coat to make the Jesuitical poison go down palatably. Girard College has only about 1,300 pupils, while there are, or ought to be, more than 13,000,000 children in the public schools of the United States. The sectarian fight between Romanists and Protestants over "religion" in our public schools will have to be settled by Secularists and on the secular principles of our government.

The people of this country, if properly warned, will never establish a religious sect (Christianity) under the thin disguise of not doing it. But "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," so let the American Secular Union labor diligently to increase the number of local auxiliaries and for the present give its best energies to the "Nine Demands," and in every consistent way encourage our Liberal papers and lecturers. Ultimate success is certain, for "ever the truth comes uppermost, and ever is justice done."

Finally, allow me to make a practical suggestion. Progressive Liberals are called iconoclasts—"destructive critics," tearing down without an effort to build up. There is too much truth in this charge. If we object to the present system of moral instruction in Girard College and in our public schools, we are bound to show "a more excellent way." What we want is a carefully prepared scheme and manual for general use in schools, showing how "the purest principles of morality" can be taught, utterly ignoring theological dogma. Why should not the American Secular Union offer a prize of $1,000 for the best treatise on this subject? I would divide it thus: say $500 for the best, $300 for the second best, and $200 for the third best; the awards to be made by a carefully-selected committee. Such a work is greatly needed, and the copyright would soon pay all expenses of premium and publication. I have the plan thoroughly matured in my own mind, but can only give this hint here. This letter is already too long, and for further information, as to my views, I must refer inquirers to my book, "Girard's Will and Girard College Theology."

ATTACKING THE TRAINING SCHOOL.

An attack was made in the circuit court yesterday on St. Mary's Training School for Boys, at Feehanville, and an injunction is sought to prevent the county from making another contract with the school for paying in a certain sum per capita for each dependent boy. The complainants are Edward A. Stevens, secretary of the American Secular Union, and John M. Stiles, taxpayers, who sue on behalf of themselves and any other taxpayers who may choose to share the expenses. They make St. Mary's Training School and its board of directors, the county of Cook, the board of county commissioners, and County Treasurer George R. Davis, defendants.

The complainants proceed on the recent decision of the supreme court in the case which County Attorney Bliss brought against the Chicago Industrial School for Girls, wherein the court held that that institution was sectarian, and that the Constitution prohibits the payment of money to such. They say that the school is an institution under church control within the meaning of Section 3, Article 8, of the Constitution, and that its officers propose to get from the county a contract by which it shall pay $8 a month for small boys, $7 a month for large boys, and $9 a month for cripples, as it has been doing. That the county commissioners are willing to aid and abet this intent, and that the county treasurer intends to pay the money if the board of commissioners make the contract.

Messrs. Stevens and Stiles say that the proposals involve a violation of the public trust reposed in the commissioners and county treasurer, because they are contrary to the constitutional provisions. It is asserted that among the religious denominations of the world the Roman Catholic church, which is the particular church dominating the training school, has particular prominence, is a church of the most elaborate and powerful sort, and is provided with an organization of the most efficient description, and is able to sway its members in the most unqualified manner. It is alleged that in conducting the training school the officers proceed with the object of subserving the interest of the Roman church and that the boys for whose support the county pays are trained in the Catholic form of worship. The complainants say that the present contract with the county expired December 31, and that, though the officers of the school and the county commissioners know the supreme court decision, they will enter into another contract unless restrained by the court. The court is asked to enjoin the defendants from making any contract, and also to restrain the training school from suing the county.—Chicago Tribune, Sunday, January 13.

TWO CREEDS.

When the Athanasian Creed was written no one knows. By whom it was written is equally in doubt. It received its name from Athanasius in the fourth century, not because he wrote it, but because he indorsed it. This creed is still professed by Roman Catholics and by Episcopalians. Those who can read it and preserve their gravity can do nothing less than weep over the Cathartic Creed printed in the adjoining column. The latter possesses the advantage of authenticity, having been written by a young man employed in the New York Truth Seeker office several years ago:

THE CATHOLIC CREED.

1. Whosoever will be saved, before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic Faith.
2. Which faith, except every one do keep whole and undefiled, without doubt he shall perish everlastingly.
3. And the Catholic faith is this: that we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity.

4. Neither confounding the Persons, nor dividing the substance.

5. For there is one Person of the Father, another of the Son, and another of the Holy Ghost.

6. But the Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost is all one, the glory equal, the Majesty co-eternal.

7. Such as the Father is, such is the Son, and such is the Holy Ghost.

8. The Father uncreate, the Son uncreate, and the Holy Ghost uncreate.

9. The Father incomprehensible, the Son incomprehensible, and the Holy Ghost incomprehensible.

10. The Father eternal, the Son eternal, and the Holy Ghost eternal.

11. And yet there are not three Eternals, but one eternal.

12. As also there are not Three Incomprehensibles, nor Three Uncreated; but one Uncreated, and one Incomprehensible.

THE CATHARTIC CREED.

1. Whosoever shall be saved, before all things it is necessary that he hold the Cathartic Faith.

2. Which Faith, except every one do keep in a hole or on file, without doubt he shall perish perpetually.

3. And the Cathartic Faith is this: that we conceive of a circular Triangle and a three-cornered Circle.

4. Neither rounding the angles nor dividing the circumference.

5. For there is one angle of the Barrel, one of the Bung, and another of the Bunghole.

6. But the head of the Barrel, of the Bung, and the Bunghole is all one, the hoops within, the staves external.

7. Such as the Barrel is, such is the Bung, and such is the Bunghole.

8. The Barrel is solid, the Bung solid, and the Bunghole solid.

9. The Barrel liquid, the Bung liquid, and the Bunghole liquid.

10. The Barrel gaseous, the Bung gaseous, and the Bunghole gaseous.

11. And yet there are not three gaseous, but one gaseous.

12. As also there are not three liquids nor three solids, but one liquid and one solid.

13. So likewise the Father is Almighty, the Son Almighty, and the Holy Ghost Almighty.

14. And yet they are not three Almighties, but one Almighty.

15. So the Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Ghost is God.

16. And yet they are not three Gods, but one God.

17. So likewise the Father is Lord, the Son Lord, and the Holy Ghost Lord.

18. And yet not three Lords, but one Lord.

19. For, like as we are compelled by the Christian verity to acknowledge every person by himself to be God and Lord; so are we forbidden by the Catholic religion to say, There be three Gods, or three Lords.

20. The Father is made of none: neither created nor begotten.

21. The Son is of the Father alone; not made, nor created, but begotten.

22. The Holy Ghost is of the Father, and of the Son; neither made, nor created, nor begotten, but proceeding.

23. So there is one Father, not three Fathers; one Son, not three Sons; one Holy Ghost, not three Holy Ghosts.

24. And in this Trinity none is afore or after other; none is greater or less than another: but the whole Three Persons are co-eternal together, and co-equal.

25. So that in all things, as is aforesaid, the Unity in Trinity, and the Trinity in Unity, is to be worshipped.

26. He therefore that will be saved must thus think of the Trinity.

27. Furthermore, it is necessary to everlasting salvation, that he also believe rightly the Inca nation of our Lord Jesus Christ.

28. For the right faith is, that we believe and confess that our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is God and Man.

29. God of the Substance of the Father, begotten before the worlds; and man, of the substance of his mother, born in the world.

30. Perfect God, and perfect man of a reasonable soul and human flesh subsisting.

31. Equal to the Father, as touching His Godhead: and inferior to the Father, as touching His manhood.

32. Who although He be God

13. So likewise the Barrel is empty, the Bung empty, and the Bunghole empty.

14. And yet there are not three empties, but one half empty.

15. So the Barrel is full, the Bung full, and the Bunghole full.

16. And yet there are not three fulls, but a one little too full.

17. So likewise the Barrel is awful, the Bung very awful, and the Bunghole awfully awful.

18. And yet not three awfals, but one rather queer-looking, nevertheless.

19. For like as we are compelled by geometrical verity to acknowledge every angle by itself to be both Bung and Hole, so are we forbidden by the Cathartic religion to say there be three Bungs or three Holes.

20. The Barrel is made of staves, neither headed nor hooped up.

21. The Bung is of the Barrel alone, neither present nor absent, but forgotten.

22. The Bunghole is of the Barrel and the Bung, neither bored nor cut nor punched, but extracted.

23. So there is one Barrel, not three Barrels; one Bung, not three Bungs; one Bunghole, not three Bungholes.

24. And in this Trinity none is ahead nor astern nor abreast of another; nor as great nor as little as another, but the whole three angles are mysteriously rectilinear and quadrilateral.

25. So that in all things, as is aforesaid, the circular Triangle or the triangular Circle is to be worshipped.

26. He therefore that will be shaved must pay the barber.

27. Furthermore it is necessary to everlasting salvation that he conceive rightly of the tripartite Bung.

28. For the truth is that we believe, or profess to believe, that the Bung is both Plug and Hole.

29. Plug, of the substance of the Barrel, which is within it, and Hole, of the substance of the Bunghole, which it surrounds.

30. Perfect Plug and perfect Hole, of a three-cornered square round shape, on disembodied spirits subsisting.

31. Equal to the Barrel when touching the Barrel-head, and inferior to the Barrel when touching its Bungholiness.

32. And although it be both and man, yet He is not two, but one Christ.

33. One, not by conversion of the Godhead into flesh, but by taking of the manhood into God.

34. One altogether, not by confusion of substance, but by unity of Person.

35. For, as the reasonable soul and flesh is one man; so God and man is one Christ.

36. Who suffered for our salvation, descended into hell, rose again the third day from the dead.

37. He ascended into Heaven, He sitteth on the right hand of the Father, God Almighty, from whence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead.

38. At whose coming all men shall rise again with their bodies, and shall give account for their own works.

39. And they that have done good shall go into life everlasting, and they that have done evil into everlasting fire.

40. This is the Catholic faith, which except a man believe faithfully, he cannot be saved.

Plug and Hole, yet it is neither, but a veritable Bung.

33. Made, not by inserting the Barrel into the Bunghole, but by pulling the Bunghole out of the Barrel.

34. Not by desultory and spasmodic jerking, but by a union of persons, and a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together.

35. For as the reasonable cat and dog is one sausage, so Bung and Hole is one Barrel.

36. Which is used as an Ash-Barrel, descends into the cellar, and rises again to the third story.

37. It descends to the sidewalk, sitteth on the thumb-hand side of the lamp-post, whence it shall be dumped when the ash-cart cometh.

38. At whose coming all men shall close their eyes and take no account of the dust.

THE BLAIR EDUCATIONAL BILL.

As the United States Constitution now stands, there is a total separation between religion and the state; but when the proposed Amendment shall have been adopted, there will be a union. Which of these shall we favor? is the question before us. The Amendment to which we refer is sometimes called the "Blair Educational Amendment," but it would more properly be called the "Church and State Amendment," or the "Blair Religious Amendment" to the Constitution of the United States, because that is what it really is.

The Amendment is as follows;

ARTICLE.

SECTION 1. No state shall ever make or maintain any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

SEC. 2. Each state in this Union shall establish and maintain a system of free public schools adequate for the education of all the children living therein, between the ages of six and sixteen years inclusive, in the common branches of knowledge, and in virtue, morality, and the principles of the Christian religion. But no money raised by taxation imposed by law, or any money or other property, or credit belonging to any municipal organization, or to any state, or to the United States, shall ever be appropriated, applied, or given to the use or purposes of any school, institution, corporation, or person, whereby instruction or training shall be given in the doctrines, tenets, belief, ceremonials, or observances peculiar to any sect, denomination, organization or society, being, or claiming to be, religious in its character; nor shall such peculiar doctrines, tenets, belief, ceremonials, or observances, be taught or inculcated in the free public schools.

SEC. 3. To the end that each state, the United States, and all the people thereof, may have and preserve governments republican in form and in substance, the United States shall guaranty to every state, and to the United States, the support and maintenance of such a system of free public schools as is herein provided.

SEC. 4. That Congress shall enforce this Article by legislation when necessary.

This amendment to the national Constitution has been presented by Senator Blair, and is now pending in Congress. It is a singular sort of document, though hardly any more so than was to be expected in the promotion of the purpose which underlies it, i.e., the establishment of a national religion. The proposed Amendment is just about as flatly self-contradictory as any proposition could be. Section 1 reads:

No state shall ever make or maintain any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

The first sentence of section 2 reads:

Each state in the Union shall establish and maintain a system of free public schools adequate for the education of all the children living therein, between the ages of six and sixteen years inclusive, in the common branches of knowledge, and in virtue, morality, and the principles of the Christian religion.

That is to say, no state shall ever make or maintain a law respecting an establishment of religion; but every state in this Union shall make and maintain laws establishing the principles of the Christian religion. And to make assurance doubly sure, section 3 declares that

The United States shall guaranty to every state, and to the people of every state and of the United States, the support and maintenance of such a system of free public schools as is herein provided.

And that is to say, the United States government pledges itself that every state shall establish and maintain the principles of the Christian religion. This proposed Amendment, therefore, at one stroke, establishes Christianity as the national religion, because it declares that every state shall maintain the principles of the Christian religion in the public schools, and the nation is pledged to see that this is done. Therefore there must be a national decision of some kind declaring just what are the principles of the Christian religion. Then when that decision shall have been made, every state will have to receive from the nation just those principles of religion which the nation shall have declared to be the principles of the Christian religion, and which the nation will have pledged itself shall be taught in the public schools of every state. In other words the people of the United States will then have to receive their religion from the government of the United States and no longer from the Bible, as their own conscience, enlightened by the spirit of God, may dictate. Therefore, if Senator Blair's proposed Amendment to the national Constitution does not provide for the establishment and maintenance of a national religion, then no religion was ever established or maintained in this world.

But how shall this national decision be made as to what are the principles of the Christian religion? It would seem that the second sentence of Section 2 makes provision for this. It declares that no "instruction or training shall be given in the doctrines, tenets, belief, ceremonials, or observances peculiar to any sect, denomination, organization, or society, being, or claiming to be, religious in its character; nor shall such peculiar doctrines, tenets, belief, ceremonials, or observances, be taught or inculcated in the free public schools."

As therefore no religious tenets, doctrines, or beliefs can be taught in the schools, except such as are common to all denominations of the Christian religion, it will follow inevitably that there shall be officially called a national council of the churches to decide what are the principles common to all, and to establish a national creed, which shall be enforced and inculcated by national power in all the public schools in the United States. And that will be the establishment of a national religion. And that is exactly what Senator Blair's Constitutional Amendment assures, so surely as it or anything similar to it shall ever be adopted.

Another important consideration is this: Under this Amendment the teachers in the public schools will have to inculcate the principles of the Christian religion. Who are to compose the examining board that shall pass upon the qualifications and orthodoxy of teachers? Assuredly none but the leading theologians in the churches. This will require that such a board shall be stately convened to deal out what shall have been decided by each successive council to be the principles of the Christian religion.

It was in this way precisely that the thing was worked in the fourth century and onward. Constantine made Christianity the recognized religion of the Roman empire. Then it became at once necessary that there should be an imperial decision as to what form of Christianity should be the imperial religion. To effect this an imperial council was necessary to formulate that phase of Christianity which was common to all. The Council of Nice was convened by imperial command, and an imperial creed was established, which was enforced by imperial power. That establishment of an imperial religion ended only in the imperious despotism of the papacy.

As surely as the complete establishment of the papacy followed and grew out of that imperial recognition of Christianity in the fourth century, just so surely will the complete establishment of a religious despotism after the living likeness of the papacy, follow and grow out of this national recognition of Christianity provided for in the Constitutional Amendment proposed by Senator Blair, and which is now pending in Congress.—American Sentinel.

SOME OPINIONS ON LIBERALISM.

We take the following article from the Truth Seeker because, on the whole, its suggestions are excellent. It points, we believe, to what must ultimately become the main object of Liberalism: defensive warfare against the church as a political organization, and resistance to ecclesiastical encroachment. In this work we must seek the co-operation of all who favor the Nine Demands of Liberalism:

The general principles of Liberalism are right. They are easily proved. Every fact in nature is a testimony against church dogmas and creeds. As a whole the facts of history furnish evidence against church organization. Yet organized Liberalism makes slow progress. Why?

The church is well equipped for war. Her social and business influence is a thousand times more than a match for our arguments—facts. She makes it a social and financial object for men and women to pay tribute to her. It is in her power to injure those who refuse to do so. Where necessary she uses that power. Against such power and influence right, justice, and truth are of little moment. The majority of people never reason beyond dollars and cents. Church theology and church organization are not the same. We see very few pious or even religiously inclined people, but many who want to be called Christians. Men do not fear the hell of theology, but organized church power they do fear.

The church is constantly doing little things to attract people. It builds up its power by catering to the weakness of human nature. The influence of music, women, and social gatherings are its elements of strength; the preaching is of little or no account. Not one in twenty of the average church-goers discusses the sermon, but nine-tenths of them can remember all the social appointments announced from the pulpit. The best minister of an orthodox church is not the man of great ability and learning, but the one of great social qualities, of whom the ladies will say, "Isn't he lovely!" Efforts made against Christian belief are in a great measure lost; the efforts that count are those directed against the organization. In Liberalism the church has but a feeble opponent. At best it is an unequal fight, but the odds might be reduced. Liberalism has been so long showing up the follies of religion, etc., that it has not found time to criticise itself. A battle cannot be won by simply attacking the weak points of the enemy; our own weak points want to be strengthened. It is important that we look to ourselves, and tell our faults right out "in meetin'." The word Infidel is not a good one; its use is a detriment to the cause. Referring to it in a public address, the writer used about the following language: "I have thought the epithet Infidel might be made popular as the name of the great movement in religion that is to lift the human race from the slums of error, and place it on a basis where knowledge and not belief will guide its destinies; but am now satisfied that the prejudice against 'Infidel' is too deep-rooted to be overcome, and for the good of the cause shall discontinue its use." We can throw this word overboard to the advantage of our cause, and not sacrifice a single principle. Let us avoid its use, and employ the better and more popular term Liberal. Many will acknowledge themselves Liberals who shun the idea of Infidelity.

Many of our Liberal writers do not treat Spiritualism with proper respect. Spiritualists are Liberals. They are progressive, and can always be depended on as anti-church people. We need strength. Lose sight of their theories regarding spirit return; that is not all there is to Spiritology. Extend the hand of Liberal friendship. Do not be guilty of saying, "Thou lunatic," for there is a chance that they may be right. If they are, the great principles of our reform will not be injured thereby.

Unthinking men and women judge of the merits of a cause chiefly by the men who are its leaders or advocates. Thus the church takes great pride in pointing out the good and prosperous leaders in the church. This is not argument, but it has more weight than a thousand sermons on the masses who are not capable of reasoning. Its force is doubled if a comparison fails to show equally substantial men in the Liberal ranks. Now, the church is strong and can stand the strain of a great many drawbacks. She has her dishonest preachers, deacons, etc., and the prayer-meeting always brings out a crop of cranks. But she is not troubled thereby. But among Liberals, few in number, a bad egg spreads its disagreeable odor over us all; and much to our hurt. I remember but one or two Liberals of any prominence who have proved dishonest. Our record is clear in that respect.

Religion develops lunatics and cranks in great numbers, but Liberals do not set them up as representative Christians; while the church always makes a great splurge over an unbalanced Liberal. They make him appear at his worst, and claim him as a representative of the cause. It goes that way among the people much to our reproach.

A word further on this subject. Cranks are generally made by getting one particular idea into their brain and harping on it so much that they lose interest in everything else. Then, also, men often take up some theory which seems so plain to them that they think the world only needs its attention called to it and it will adopt it. They promulgate it; try to reform the world; the world 'doesn't reform, but laughs the reformer to scorn—treats him with derision. His idea is perverted, motive misunderstood, character maligned. He essays to defend himself, talks extravagantly and without judgment, broods over his wrongs, imagines he is a great reformer, begins to adopt all kinds of uncouth theories, and almost before he knows it develops into a modern crank. Now, if such men, as is often the case, make Liberalism a hobby, they do so to its everlasting injury. They prevent many people from joining the ranks. To lose them would be gain. They have the right to advocate their peculiar idea. They can please their fancy with the thought that they are great reformers; but morally they have no right to give the impression that the ideas they have form any part of the great principles of anti-churchism. Liberals should make an effort to keep such men under cover. Make them think they were born "five hundred years too soon," when in fact they belong to the Shakspearean age—anything to keep them quiet—unless they cease to associate their anti-modern theories with advanced Liberalism.

As I have said, we have but little to fear from church creed or Christian belief, but everything to fear from their organization.

We have a great battle to fight with that. We have just one point to assault that promises a victory for us. Our entire force must be concentrated on this one issue. That this issue is presented to us is lucky, because it makes it necessary for Liberals to unite on a single issue—the one thing we need. The Blair bill is a desperate attempt by the church to attach itself to the government. Such a thing never has been attempted in the United States before; and the traditions, the spirit and letter, of our Constitution being radically opposed to it, it hardly seems possible that the bill can become a law. Yet a fight must be made against it; and it is a great opportunity for Liberalism to form an organization that will become popular. Rightly managed, "the flag above the cross" can be made the popular battle-cry the country over.

Organization for some special object, with due regard to social requirements, will accomplish more in one year than ten years of disorganized, hit-and-miss arguments on a thousand different subjects. I do not mean to exclude the minor matters, but, having a chief object to be attained, keep it as the rallying-point. Now, as a closing summary, I set down the following as necessary for the progress of our cause:

1. The word Infidel must be expunged from our vocabulary.
2. The friendship and co-operation of Spiritualism must be courted.
3. The cranks must be controlled.
4. The creeds of the church must be left to die of their old age, and our efforts directed against the organization.
5. Our organization must be more thorough—with some live issue—some definite object to be attained.

Is it possible that we are powerless and must sit supinely down and let Congress pass that contemptible Blair bill? Is it possible that the people of the nineteenth century are gullible enough to let a stupid pack of imbeciles bind them in fetters? I am a poor talker and no letter-writer, but I'll be damned if I don't think something ought to be done. Sound the alarm! Seven millions of names petitioning Congress to pass a Sunday law, and hardly a dissenting voice! I told a friend to-day that I had my doubts as to the people of the United States being capable of self-government, and if this Blair bill passes Congress I shall say emphatically they are not.

I am more than pleased with FREETHOUGHT. It is such a brilliant, and newsy journal that it is eagerly—yes, I might say almost impatiently—waited for each week. A Long List of Signers to the Call.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I herewith return the petition for a Liberal Organization with seventy-five names. I could easily secure five hundred had I been able to make a canvass; but not having the time to spare I have only presented it to those whom I have met in the ordinary routine of business—with the exception of a few days when it was in the hands of Dr. H. M. Johnson, of Alpine, and C. W. Garland.

San Diego has not less than five thousand Liberals of the different sorts, but they are not, as a general rule, aggressive. The leading men and public officers of the city and county are largely Agnostics, but are unwilling to say so by signing the Call, for two reasons: A portion of them, for business reasons, will not take a prominent part in the agitation, and many of them do not indorse all of the Nine Demands. These latter vary, but on an average indorse about seven of them, giving a variety of reasons.

I have not had the courage to ask the signers for contributions of money, for we are all land poor here, with no surplus of money. Still the confidence in the future of the town is so great that no one will sell a lot so long as he can borrow, beg, or earn enough to live on until the depression, consequent upon the boom of last year, subsides.

I am in hopes to be present at the meeting Jan. 29, as I am anxious to see the cause forwarded as fast as possible, knowing that the gospel of intelligence versus ignorance and superstition ought to be promulgated on every favorable occasion, and that when religion becomes aggressive it must be met in kind.

Movements in San Jose.

To the Editors of Freethought:

As you have visited our city on several occasions I believe you will feel interested in some of our movements here. At the time you addressed us considerable interest was awakened, but of late it seemed as if we were all dropping off into a sort of Rip van Winkle sleep; but we have been most thoroughly aroused by the voice of N. F. Ravlin. Mr. Ravlin was for five years the pastor of the Baptist church in this city. During that time the church structure was destroyed by fire, but through his energy was soon rebuilt. In the intervening time the society held their meetings in the California theatre. Large and commodious as this theatre is, it proved too small to hold the crowd that thronged to hear their pastor. Mr. Ravlin continued to grow and grow until the pulpit grew too small for him, so about three years ago he stepped down and out of his prison house into the broad fields of progressive thought. His growth is simply marvelous. Mr. Ravlin is the possessor of strong magnetic powers, combined with a great heart, and a deep earnestness in the uplifting of humanity. His stay with us depends on the support he receives here, and the outlook is most promising. On Sunday evening last the California theatre was filled as in the days of yore, and his lecture listened to most attentively. At times you could have heard a pin fall. His subject was this: "Does the wide-spread development of modern Liberal thought portend good or evil to the human family?" The speaker expressed his pleasure at meeting so many of his old friends, etc., then entered upon his discourse. He said: "The greatest duty of every one is to provide for the development of his own nature. The subject of my discourse this evening," he continued, "will be a consideration whether the spirit of modern Liberalism is beneficial to that development or not. All of you are aware of the changes that have taken place during the last fifty years. Old barriers have been broken, old landmarks swept away; the creeds and dogmas of sectarianism are being laid aside. Men demand a religion as wide as the world, and a love that is as abundant as the air we breathe. The spirit influences the clergy as well as the people. Hundreds of young clergymen are beginning to lay aside their swaddling clothes and are preparing to come out of their cradles. The people, however, have far outgrown the clergy. The power that is to regenerate the world is a power that is to be found outside the organized institutions of the day. It will be just as possible to replace the railroad with the old stage coach as to replace the Liberalism of to-day with the old doctrines. Freedom is in the air and a longing for it in every human heart. Put your ear down to the earth anywhere and you will hear it throbbing with the tramp of the millions of men and women who are pressing forward to the glorious goal of liberty and universal enfranchisement. I have stated the affairs of the age just as they are without comment. I do not know whether you will think these things good or evil. It is to discuss this question that I am here to-night. There is nothing too sacred to be criticised by the spirit of the age; we bring everything to the test of reason; there is a flood of reason rising, and upon it we will be borne on to fortune. The orthodox preachers say the moral man will be sent to hell: this is an insult to every man.

"A friend of mine was lying on a sick bed near unto death. He had lived a moral life, was a good man. An orthodox minister went to see him, and on coming away told the man's wife that he was sure to die, and sure to go to hell. This is orthodox consolation. Fortunately, the man had a reason and courage, was not afraid, so no harm was done; but consider how terrible such a religion must be to every timorous soul. Be not afraid of this breaking up of old things. If you lose your idols you are not worse off than I am, for I have given up my old faith and I do not regret it. I was on the Pacific Ocean at the time of the eclipse of the sun. I watched the waves as they rose and fell, with the winds tumultuously high. I felt that I would like to control those waves which rose so high, for I feared that the ship I was on would be wrecked; but when I remembered that the ocean rolls from pole to pole and a third of the way around the world, I decided that I would not try to interfere with it. So with you, my friends. You are on the ocean of truth, which is rising with a great tidal wave. The Pacific Ocean is as a dew-drop on the tip of a rose leaf compared to this great ocean of truth. You have nothing to fear; do not be alarmed. It will bear you safely on to wider and nobler havens than you have hitherto seen. Modern Liberalism heralds the coming day when man will be friendly to man, and when all society will be reorganized. It is the animating genius of the soul in this world, and foretells a glorious immortality of progress."

These, and many other good things, were received by us at this lecture. I hope we shall have his brave, ringing words at our State Convention.

LILIAN'S STORY.

After much solicitation, Miss Andrews has consented to furnish the readers of this journal with a continued or serial story. Announcement of this event was inadvertently omitted from our last, but perhaps an announcement loses none of its attractiveness when accompanied by its fulfilment, as in the present case. If the interest of the readers in this story proves as strong as we anticipate, our facilities for supplying the demand thus created will be severely taxed. We have not read any chapter of the novel except the first, and are not, therefore, prepared to state its moral. Our impression, however, is that Lilian will show, before the narrative closes, that subscribers whose time is out, should hasten to renew. The title of our story is the suggestive one of

CHAPTER I.

"I don't think one of us ought to go and live with uncle, for when mother died she told us to stay together," said Anita.

There were ten of the Parkers. Their mother and father were dead four years, and they had used all the money that had been left, and their uncle had offered to take one of them to live with him. But they did not want to part. There was Anita, who was the oldest. Bert was next; then came Grace and Ted; then the twins, Bessie and Jessie; then Mabel and Frankie, and Baby Maisy, who was four and a half; and there was their little cousin, who was one and a half. They lived in a little house with five rooms in it. The house was in the woods.

"I don't think one of us ought to go to live with uncle," said Anita.

"We will have to tell him no," said Bert.

Before the next day, when uncle Bert came, they had had a meeting and decided what to tell him.

The next morning their uncle rode up to the door, and said:

"I can't stop a minute."

"Well," replied Anita, "we have decided that——"

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - FEBRUARY 2, 1889

THE CALIFORNIA CONVENTION.

There has been a Liberal Convention in the air for the past two months, and last Sunday it materialized at Irving Hall, San Francisco. It opened at 10 o'clock A.M., with some two hundred and fifty persons present, and an amount of enthusiasm that needed only to be gently stirred to manifest itself in vociferous cheers. The delegation from the country was large. Owen T. Davies left his ranch at Brighton to run itself; Mr. John Jones from Inyo county allowed his Round Valley mill to clatter away without his attention; W. H. Pepper, of Petaluma, let his nursery grow or otherwise while he came to the convention; from the Red Mountain vineyard of Stanislaus county the Hon. Abram Schell brought himself and better half; R. F. Grigsby's mine at Calistoga was for a season minus its expert; Messrs. Schou and Haelke and Broneer and Arper and others from Oakland and the outlying districts of Alameda county, crossed the bay in the gorgeous sunshine; and so, with the many not here mentioned, there was a representative gathering. The city, of course, furnished the majority of those present.

The meeting came to order to listen to an address by S. P. Putnam on "Organization: Its Necessity and Its Methods." The speaker defined briefly the meaning of Freethought, its purpose, and its general policy. He spoke substantially as follows, being frequently interrupted by applause:

"Freethought represents the new era of humanity. It stands for the highest civilization, and must take the place of the religions of the world. Its objects are three-fold—moral, intellectual, and political.

"Freethought means truth, all the truth that is possible to the human mind. Freethought also means living truth—truth applied. It is virtue. It is morality. It is social development. It is sweeter, happier homes. It is broad, beautiful human progress.

"Freethought is also political, not in a party sense, but representing the fundamental life of the Republic. All are citizens in the Republic—and therefore the Republic must stand for absolute liberty and justice. There must be a total separation of church and state. The union of these is the greatest tyranny.

"Intellectual and social advance depends mainly on local societies. Each society must have its independent life and work according to its environment. There is no authority in Freethought. Attraction is its law. Spontaneous work is the most successful work. The American Secular

Union must be limited in its objects. It can not embrace all of life; it is essentially a political organization. Intellectual and moral improvement as such must come by other associations. Membership in this organization does not preclude membership in any other organization. There is no belief or non-belief in the articles of agreement. The Union is simply for the defense of rights, and for no other purpose—and there can be no more important purpose than this. The Spiritualist, the Materialist, the Liberal Christian, the Jew, the Agnostic, the Deist, all can work in harmony upon this universal platform.

"The existence of antagonistic organizations, the Religious Amendment party, the American Sabbath Union, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the enormous assumptions of the Romish church compel Liberals to unite for common protection."

At the close of his address, Mr. Putnam read the Anti-Sabbath petition, and urged that everybody should sign it. He then announced that the election of temporary officers was in order, and he would name first, as president, a man who had always been identified with reform, not only on this coast but in the East and North; who would bring to the position the result of years of experience in state and national work. He spoke of Judge J. W. North, of Oleander.

As soon as the name was mentioned it became apparent that the president of the California State Liberal Union was elected. The judge took the chair amid hearty applause. Those who had been at a loss to know who should be the standard bearer of the new movement got over their doubts at once, and placed themselves in an attitude of expectant attention. Judge North is a man above sixty years of age, tall, silver-haired, with dignified bearing and a countenance which kindness and intelligence combine to make unusually attractive. "All my life," said Judge North, in his address, "I have been a reformer, but I never knew a time when work for reform was more necessary than now. Influences against freedom are perpetually at work; at present they have taken on a fresh degree of activity. It is worthy of our attention when six millions of Protestants present a petition to Congress asking for national legislation in favor of a religious Sabbath, and when by the act of a cardinal seven millions of Catholics are enrolled as indorsing the movement. Now," said the judge, "I take pride in saying that I am a Free-thinker. It is a happy and proud confession. We seek to infringe on the rights of no man, woman, or child. We have never sought to curtail the liberties of Christians. The question now before us is, Shall we permit them to curtail ours? It is through the services of Freethinkers that the liberty established by our fathers has been in a measure preserved to us. Let it be our duty to defend that liberty and hand it down to the children that shall come after us. We are proud, therefore, to call ourselves Freethinkers. The word is not always popular, but for myself, I glory in that name. Freethought is the only valuable thought—the only thought that is worth anything. If in any court it can be shown that an act is performed under compulsion, that there was not freedom to act otherwise, then the act becomes null and void. So with a thought; without freedom it is invalid. It is for the freedom which makes thought valid and genuine that we are laboring.

"Freethought has before it two kinds of work—destructive and constructive; and while upon the latter there cannot be laid too much emphasis, the former is none the less necessary. Somebody must deny falsehoods. Gentler natures, like Whittier's, say no pleadingly; stronger ones must speak their word of dissent positively and aggressively, to arouse the indifferent to the necessity of action. We must say no! The weeds must be pulled, that a better growth may follow. We begin to-day a work that is to last for generations. Not in our day shall we see the realization of all that perfect liberty of thought demands. And if we are few, we have this to encourage us: the enlightened minds of the world are with us; nature is with us; and all history, all experience, and all facts are our faithful allies.

"Before the assault of these superstition will ultimately disappear, but work is necessary. It must be done not only at all place, but at all time—everywhere, every month, every week in the year. Just at the present time the Sunday is given over to the ministers by general consent; they own it, or claim to, and the religious people look with horror upon any service that is not a religious one on that day. It is left for Freethinkers to vindicate the words of Christ, "the Sabbath is made for man, not man for the Sabbath." Each individual is lord of the Sabbath, to deal with it as he will. The nonsense that we must observe it at the dictation of priests is a nonsense that the human mind should get rid of with the least possible delay."

If the amount of satisfaction this address gave to the members of the convention could be measured by the warmth of its reception, it was great. There were fervent responses from different parts of the hall frequently, and applause from all parts constantly.

The next business was the election of a temporary secretary. This officer was found in the person of Mr. Emil S. Lemme, a young man of unlimited enthusiasm and untiring energy as a worker. Mr. Lemme went into office by a unanimous vote.

It seems almost unnecessary to say that the treasurership fell to the lot of Mr. A. H. Schou, of Oakland. Mr. Schou has been financier at all the meetings held here and in Oakland, and he will have charge of the sack of the California State Liberal Union. This by virtue of a unanimous vote.

After the adoption of an order of business as outlined in the bills, Mr. Putnam said he would introduce a feature not included in the program. He proposed a collection for general purposes, which was taken up with most gratifying results.

A pleasing surprise followed in the address of the ex-Rev. J. E. Higgins, who was introduced as an evolved preacher. Mr. Higgins said this was new business for him. It had been some years since his orthodoxy began to desert him, and in those years he had drifted in uncertain waters. The great questions of human duties presented themselves, but he had given up the old solution, and saw no new one until, within a comparatively short time, he found it within the realm of absolute Freethought. Mr. Higgins stated that he was now convinced that man had not only created all Bibles, but also all the authors of all Bibles. Every deity, every book, every bad thought, every good sentiment, all had their origin in the human mind.

The speaker gave no credit to Christianity for the civilization of the world. What we do know is that religion has always impeded progress; what we do not know is how infinitely better off the world would now be but for the retarding influences of Christianity. On the score of cruelty and brutality there is little choice between the two sects. Catholicism has persecuted to the extent of its ability, and the crimes of Protestantism have been bounded only by its power. The Puritans came to this country to establish religious liberty, and were its worst violators. The old Adam and the old serpent is in them all.

Mr. Higgins made an excellent impression. He is still a young man, and ought to do a good deal of work for the cause. He certainly has the ability and the will. At the point occupied by this paragraph the meeting adjourned.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON.

When the convention came to order in the afternoon the hall was about half filled, and there was another pleasant surprise in store. The Turnerbunds of this coast were having a convention also, and they sent to the Liberal organization their delegates bearing words of greeting from our German co-workers. The delegates were invited to seats on the platform and introduced by the president. The greeting sent was as follows:

To the Convention of the Liberals of California assembled at Irving Hall:

At the convention of the delegates of the Turners of the Pacific Coast, held this day at the Hall of the San Francisco Turnverein, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That we send our greeting and express our sympathy to the Liberals of California in their efforts in behalf of Freethought and personal Liberty, and in their opposition to oppressive and sumptuary legislation; and that we, the Turners of the Pacific Coast, hereby express ourselves to be in full accord with the aims and objects of the Liberals of California.

Resolved, That we will give our aid, by word and deed, to the cause of organizing a branch of the American Secular Union on this coast.

Resolved, That this meeting give three hearty cheers to the Convention of Liberals assembled at Irving Hall.

Signed,

F. ATTINGER,
W. SCHROEDER, } Committee.
ERNEST BRAND,

January 27, 1889.

Anything so handsome as this merited a response. One was therefore prepared by S. P. Putnam and read at once. This is it:

Resolved, That the California State Liberal Union declares its cordial co-operation with the purpose of the Turners of the Pacific Coast, to maintain personal liberty, and in the fraternal greeting of this body to the Union recognize a cheering expression of public sentiment in favor of true we American Republicanism.

Resolved, That the California State Liberal Union extends to the Turners of the Pacific Coast the hand of fellowship as to soldiers of humanity battling for the same great cause of justice and progress; and under the same flag will stand side by side for the Constitution as it is, for equal rights and impartial liberty, in a nation where church and state are to be forever separate.

At this moment there was a good deal of enthusiasm. The greeting was accepted and the response indorsed by a unanimous rising vote, and three rousing cheers, led by the chairman, went up for the Turners and their delegates. Messrs. Schou, Lund, and Putnam were appointed a committee to bear the response to the Turnerbund.

A committee had been previously appointed for drafting articles of organization, the members being N. D. Goodell, J. E. Jones, J. Vostrovsky, John Robinett, and Geo. E. Macdonald. Such of the committee as were present agreed on the following:

PREAMBLE AND CONSTITUTION OF THE CALIFORNIA STATE LIBERAL UNION.

Realizing that the safety of Republican institutions is imperiled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed by the least interference of the state in matters of religion, we hereby organize the California State Liberal Union to help secure, throughout this state and the United States, practical compliance with the principles of the American Secular Union and the Nine Demands of Liberalism.

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.—The name of this organization shall be the California State Liberal Union.

GENERAL OBJECT.

ART. II.—Total separation of Church and State.

SPECIFIC OBJECTS.

ART. III.—As a means to accomplish the General Object we indorse the following

DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM:

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.

2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.

3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.

4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.

5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.

7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality, as such, shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.

9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely Secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

MODE OF WORK.

ART. IV.—The means employed to secure compliance with the foregoing Demands shall be Lectures, Conventions, and Agitation through the rostrum and Freethought press.

MEMBERSHIP.

ART. V.—All persons indorsing the Demands of Liberalism, and desiring to forward those principles, may become members of this Union by signing these articles.

OFFICERS.

ART. VI.—The officers of the California State Secular Union shall consist of President, Vice-Presidents, Secretary, and Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of nine members, who, together with the President, First Vice-President, Secretary, and Treasurer, shall constitute a Board of Directors, who shall be intrusted with the general management and control of the Union.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

ART. VII.—The officers shall be elected annually, and shall hold office until their successors are elected.

DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

ART. VIII.—The duties of officers shall be those generally pertaining to the President, Secretary, Treasurer, and Board of Directors.

Any one can see that there is little new or original in the foregoing production. The Demands of Liberalism, especially, are familiar to all; nevertheless each of the nine paragraphs was cheered, and the Preamble and Constitution were adopted without dissent. Except that a reporter who borrowed the document to copy it put it in his pocket and disappeared, it would doubtless have been numerous signed upon the spot.

Judge North delivered the address of the afternoon. He reviewed the Sunday business thoroughly. Having been in the legislature he knew something about the way the ministers work on the members. He said that the Republicans were humbugged by the clergy into believing that the people of the state were enthusiastic for a Sunday law, but the Republicans did not sanction a religious day. The people, however, understood it to be such, and their delusion was fostered by the Democrats, who made an anti-Sunday issue and carried the state. The speaker thought the Republicans would probably let the question alone after their experience with it, and the Democrats are not likely to change their position.

"If," said the speaker, "I should ask the question where the Sunday observance originated, there are doubtless many, even in this audience, who cannot tell. In a congregation of Christians there would probably be none who know. We know that the Old Testament Sabbath is Saturday. In the New we find that the apostles met on the first day of the week to celebrate the resurrection of Christ, but it was not a Sabbath, and they attached no holiness to it. This originated with Constantine, who appointed the pagan day of the sun as a Sunday for Christians and pagans, as he favored both. Constantine was impartial toward pagans and Christians, and the coins of the realm had Apollo on one side and Christ on the other. The Sunday was as much for one as the other, though Constantine was so much a pagan that when he died the pagans deified him. The early Christians did not keep Sunday. Martin Luther had no reverence for it, and told his congregation to ride on it and dance on it. Christ or the apostles never heard of it.

"There is a longing among Christians for power, Protestants equal to Catholics. They want to put into the Constitution their creed and their God and his son. When this is done every man who swears to uphold the Constitutions wears at the same time to support the Christian religion. This is defended by members of the National Reform party, who openly hold that none but Christians are fit for either office or citizenship. But supposing one creed is true, who shall decide which? As there are at least two hundred creeds taught in this country, we know that one hundred and ninety-nine must be wrong. But only five per cent. of the people of this country profess any creed at all, and these five per cent. have the audacity and presumption to dictate legislation for ninety-five per cent. Think of the result of putting God and Jesus Christ in the Constitution as rulers of the nation. Of course neither God nor Christ could be expected to administer affairs. The carrying out of their supposed will would be left in the hands of the priests as mouthpieces, and we should have a hierarchy. Our fathers, when they established this government, did the best they could for liberty; but they could not abolish slavery. It cost a million lives to do that. We imagine we have a divorce of church and state, but we have not, and the question is whether we shall bring about a peaceful separation, or whether religious domination, like slavery, shall go down in blood.

"They tell us that if religion is a good thing, we cannot have too much of it in the state. History teaches otherwise. Another thing, Christianity is not based upon sufficient evidence to support its claim. Darwin rejected it for this reason. Mr. Moody will say that all the Bible is true, to the dotting of an i and the crossing of a t; if not, we should build a monument, heaven high, to Paine and Voltaire! The other evening Mr. Moody made the statement that the gospel of St. Mark was written twelve years after the events occurred which he professed to describe. A dozen educated clergymen, who knew that the statement was false, sat upon the platform, but they made no protest. Are these clergymen honest? These same clergymen know that they are not preaching Christianity as taught by Christ. Draper says that Christianity came from Africa, and that Augustine, a man whom neither Jesus nor the Apostles ever heard of, had more influence in settling the tenets of Christianity than any other person. They know that in the Bible there is no mention of a spiritual fall until Paul invented it. The penalty imposed upon Adam and Eve was physical merely. God threatened Adam and Eve with death as a penalty for disobedience—that is, for becoming wise. Satan assured them that no such penalty would be inflicted upon them; but that, on the other hand, they would become enlightened. The story makes Satan the first champion of knowledge, and God the first champion of ignorance. It also makes Satan a truthful character, as God afterwards admitted when he said that the man and woman had become as gods, knowing good and evil. The penalty upon the man was labor, upon woman pain; not the slightest reference to any such thing as a fall, a dogma now repudiated by the most enlightened clergymen of the present time. The clergy are aware that there is no truth in the miraculous birth and origin of Christ. They know that the genealogies given of him in the New Testament are worthless, as they are contradictory, and at best give merely the genealogy of Joseph, who was not related to Jesus at all. These dogmas with regard to Christ are what the National Reformers wish to incorporate in the Constitution, and every man who swears to support the Constitution will be obliged to take an oath to support these myths and absurdities. It is time for honest men to speak out."

The foregoing is but an imperfect synopsis of Judge North's excellent address. A great many hearty rounds of applause which it evoked must be taken without mention.

Mr. Schell, of Knight's Ferry, speaking briefly on the Sunday petition, said there should be a closer scrutiny of the six million signatures presented to Congress. Nobody heard of this petition until it was suddenly sprung upon the country with this great number of names attached. Mr. Schell said he believed half of them were forgeries, copies from town records, gravestones, and check lists. The matter should be investigated.

Mr. Thomas Arper, of Oakland, thought the movement to put Christ in the Constitution would be opposed by the common sense of the public. Christ is dead, defunct, and long since deceased. If we are to have a king, the people will insist upon putting in a live man.

Mr. Putman made the remark that all present would be given an opportunity to subscribe for FREETHOUGHT.

Mr. Faust suggested that every person should improve the occasion to sign the anti-Sabbath petition.

Prof. W. H. Holmes, who seemed to be a stranger to all present, made a ringing speech, and everybody wanted to know him at once. He said that the history of the church was a struggle for power. At this day intelligent mountebanks Moodyize the people, and seek to incorporate their creed in our fundamental law. But this is not a Christian nation. The school-master has been abroad, and one day the teachings of Thomas Paine will supersede those of the crucified Nazarene. It is written on the brains of millions of people that thought shall be free, and this organization is necessary that it may be so.

The convention at this point took a recess until evening.

SUNDAY EVENING.

This was the biggest audience yet assembled. The number in attendance was estimated at nearly one thousand. Every corner was full. Before the regular exercises commenced Mr. Schou introduced the Misses Haelke, of Oakland, for a piano duet. Mr. Putnam read the articles of organization adopted in the afternoon, and invited those who wished to become members to sign them. Eighty-four signatures were put down at once. Mrs. S. Cook and Prof. A. Priore gave an admirable piano and violin duet.

Judge North was too much fatigued by his hard day's work to preside at this meeting, and Mr. Putnam occupied the chair, introducing the Hon. A. Schell, the orator of the evening, who spoke thus on "Thomas Paine:"

"It is said that Justice is one of the attributes of deity, and the people, impressed with the truth of this, all over the land, in this broadest and grandest country the sun has ever shone upon, are at this time in meetings assembled to do justice to the memory of Thomas Paine. Justice may be slow in emerging from the grand center of public opinion, but it is sure to come. It may slumber for nearly a hundred years, but it awakes at last. Galileo was denied burial in consecrated ground, was thrown into prison to rot to death, for asserting an immortal truth, and it was not until long after his death that his friends were permitted to erect a splendid shaft to his honor, in the city of Florence, the home of his brilliant achievements for science. So with Thomas Paine. It is now eighty-one years since his death, and to-day, from all the centers of humanity between the two great oceans the voice of eulogy reverberates through the halls of civilization in commemoration of the anniversary of Thomas Paine.

"Thomas Paine was a potential factor in the dark days of the Revolution, on the side of liberty and freedom. From his lips first fell the magic words, 'Free and Independent States of America'—words that electrified a continent. When Trenton and Princeton were in the hands of the Hessian; when the column of independence which had been so recently erected by our ancestors seemed to totter to its base; when a formidable and victorious fleet of our enemy hovered upon and menaced our sea coast; our women and children butchered and massacred by the merciless savage, stimulated into increased ferocity by a premium on scalps; when gloomy forebodings overshadowed the land like a pall; our soldiers, naked and starving with hunger, and who could be tracked over the frozen ground by the blood from their wounded feet, flying in dismay before a victorious enemy—it was then that the inspiring pen of Thomas Paine wrote the undying and imperishable words that will live in the heart of every American patriot while freedom shall have a friend and tyranny an enemy on earth.

"The cannon of Washington were not more formidable to the British lion, on the field of battle, than the pen of Paine was to the cross of St. George in the palace of the king.

"I must here relate what Colonel Ingersoll said in tribute to his memory. He said that he got a letter from a man living in Pennsylvania whose father was an old Revolutionary soldier of the name of Martin, which stated that an old Presbyterian minister, named Crawford, used to come to his house, and he sat by the fire and got to talking about Thomas Paine, what a wretched and infamous dog he was; and whilst he was in the midst of his conversation this old soldier rose from his seat and walked over to the preacher, and said to him, 'Did you ever see Thomas Paine?' 'No.' 'I have. I saw him at Valley Forge. I heard read at the head of every regiment and company a letter of Thomas Paine. I saw Thomas Paine write on the head of a drum, sitting at the bivouac fire those simple words that inspired every patriot arm; and I want to tell you, Mr. Preacher, that Thomas Paine did more for liberty than ever a priest did that lived in the world.'

"The great crime of Paine was his unbelief in the inspiration and revelation of the Bible, and he wrote his 'Age of Reason,' which, like a dynamite bomb, shattered the claim for the divinity of the Bible into a thousand fragments."

The speaker read many letters written by Paine's compatriots, eulogizing his services. He closed as follows:

"Borrowing my ideas from one of nature's noblest orators, I beg leave to say in conclusion that you all know that a clock ticks second by second, in a dull, patient, humdrum sort of way, till the hand reaches the sixtieth minute, and then it strikes a new hour born. What if each day should be marked at sunrise by a louder striking of a clock to tell us that a more important minute was reached? What if the commencement of a new year should always be told to us by the vibrations of some mighty bell far up in space that sounded only on the first of January, touched then on the hand of omnipotence. And now suppose that when anything very important was about to happen in the world, when a new year of hope and joy for a nation or mankind was to come, a mighty timekeeper away up in the stars should ring out, so that men could hear it and say, 'Hark! a new hour, one of God's hours, has struck in the belfry of the heavens.' This would be grand. But time does mark the great seasons of the world's history by a mighty clock. In fact, every nation is a large dial-plate and behind it are the works, and below it is the pendulum, and every now and then its hands mark a new hour. Our Revolution was such a period, that is the glory of it. The English government had oppressed our fathers. It tried to break their spirit. It was for several years a dark time, like the season before sunrise. But the old-time piece kept ticking and ticking, the wheels kept turning calmly on, until about 1775. Then there was a stir and a busy clatter inside the case; the people couldn't bear it any more. A sixtieth minute came and all of a sudden the clock struck. The world heard the battle of Bunker Hill—one! the Declaration of Independence—two! the surrender of Burgoyne—three! the siege of Yorktown—four! the treaty of Paris—five! the inauguration of Washington—six! and then it was sunrise, and we live in the forenoon of that glorious day.

"Ladies and gentlemen, let us be proud, glad, joyous, and grateful for this opportunity of celebrating the anniversary of Thomas Paine, the man who had so much to do with the ticking and striking of that good old clock in the days of the Revolution. Let us hope that the time-piece will remain unimpaired for centuries to come, and that it may strike many times again to mark the new hours for humanity, for kindness and good will to the memory of Thomas Paine."

At the close of Mr. Schell's remarks, S. P. Putnam essayed a few observations leading up to a collection, but was interrupted by the receipt of a bouquet from some of the ladies. This caused him to lose for the moment the thread of his discourse, but he soon recovered himself and effected the point which he set out to make. Violin and piano music followed, succeeded by a piano and zither duet by the Misses Haelke. The young ladies received an ovation, and gave a zither duet as an encore. Then as a closing feature of the evening's entertainment, Mrs. Rutter led in the National Anthem, "My Country, 'tis of Thee," in which the audience joined with a will.

Adjournment was then had until Monday afternoon.

MONDAY AFTERNOON.

The Monday afternoon session was well attended, and lively beyond all precedent. The meeting opened by the reading of the following resolutions:

1. That this convention affirms the Nine Demands of Liberalism to be the sole basis and platform of the CALIFORNIA STATE LIBERAL UNION, and all persons, without regard to religious belief or non-belief, are invited to become members.
2. That the bills now pending in the National Congress known as the "Blair Educational bill" and the "Blair Sunday Rest bill," contemplate a practical union of church and state, and that their passage would be in direct opposition to the principles of the Constitution, and a violation of the rights of American citizenship.
3. That the effort now being made by the clergy and religious organizations in California to effect, by petitions to the legislature, the passage of a state Sabbath law should be vigilantly opposed by the Liberals of the state, and that petitions against such a law should be circulated for signatures and presented to the legislature.
4. That the Board of Directors of this organization be instructed to take such steps as in their judgment will prove most effective in preventing the passage of this law, and be prepared to oppose the contemplated Sunday enactment, by argument before the legislature of the state if necessary.

5. That the Liberals of California be solicited to contribute a fund of one thousand dollars ($1,000), or more, to be used during the coming year for legislative work, for the distribution of documents bearing on the Demands of Liberalism, and for the support of public meetings in the interest of the same general objects at important points.

6. That in furtherance of the foregoing resolution the Board of Directors be instructed to arrange for a series of lectures at Sacramento while the present legislature is in session, in order that public sentiment may be aroused and made effective against any action looking to the passage of a State Sabbath law, or any legislation opposed to the Demands of Liberalism.

7. That this convention condemns past appropriations of public moneys for the support of sectarian institutions, whether Protestant or Catholic, and protests against the appropriation of any further funds for the support of such institutions.

8. That as, in the words of General Grant, religion is for the family altar, the church, and the private school, this convention condemns the introduction of any religious ceremonies in the public schools, either in the form of prayers or hymns; and that it recommends the exclusion of all mention of the Bible as an inspired book, of the deity, or of any deified personage, as such, from the text books used in the public schools of this state.

9. That the success of Liberalism depends on work, both destructive and constructive; on plucking out the weeds of error and planting and cultivating the germs of truth; on not only demolishing the temples of darkness and superstition, but also on the rearing in their places of more beautiful temples of liberty and light.

10. That we urge upon all lovers of true liberty the importance of assembling themselves together for lectures, for reading circles, science classes, and ethical associations, and in every way possible cultivating the intellect and filling the minds of people with correct knowledge.

11. That this convention heartily indorses the present work and methods of the American Secular Union, and pledges moral and pecuniary support to the national organization.

The resolutions were taken up and passed singly until the fifth was reached. Here Mr. W. F. Freeman, of Stockton, supported by a well-worded speech a motion to strike out the words "one thousand dollars." Mr. Freeman's amendment was amended by Mrs. Scott-Briggs, who moved to insert the words "or more" after "one thousand dollars." The resolution was supported in a speech by S. P. Putnam, who explained its purpose, and it passed without dissent as above printed.

The eighth resolution was discussed by Messrs. Freeman and Arper. Mr. Freeman objected to the words "prayers or hymns," as implying that prayers and hymns were used in the schools of the state. He did not believe they were, and objected to being party to an unjust implication.

Mr. Thomas Arper spoke to the resolution as read. He had knowledge of the fact that the Lord's prayer was sung in the state normal school.

Mr. Freeman said if such was the case he would withdraw his objection.

The resolution was thereupon passed unanimously, as were also the three following.

Then came a firebrand in the form of this resolution introduced by Mr. Thomas Curtis:

Resolved, That this convention advocates compulsory education for every child in the state and emphatically denies the right of parents to educate their children in sectarian schools or colleges, thereby training them as willing tools of priestcraft when they attain citizenship. As the state has to bear the responsibility of bad citizenship, that same responsibility entitles the state to see to it that every child shall be fairly educated for good citizenship.

An uncertain quiet succeeded the reading of the above. Mr. Curtis took the floor. He said the community, not the parent, was the custodian of the youthful mind, and therefore should prescribe what education it may receive.

Mr. Arper followed, favoring the resolution.

Mr. G. W. Thurston opposed it, as making a bad matter worse.

Mr. Henry Kline said that all he asked of the state was to let him educate himself. Paine and Voltaire were self-educated men. He opposed all compulsory education, whether religious or secular.

Prof. W. H. Holmes said that he understood that this organization was broader than any mere sectarianism. It was organized for the protection of rights. Let it not narrow itself by opposing the rights of others.

Mr. Curtis spoke again against granting Catholics the privilege of educating their offspring in their own faith.

Mr. Putnam here intervened to say that the discussion was wasting the time of the convention. The Nine Demands could not be stretched to cover this question. It was a side issue. Personally he was in determined opposition to the resolution. It stultified all the declarations previously made by the convention in favor of equal rights and impartial liberty.

Mr. A. Schell moved that the resolution be tabled, which was done with great emphasis.

Next came the election of officers. The committee on nominations reported the following:

President, J. W. North, of Oleander; Secretary, Emil S. Lemme, San Francisco; Treasurer, A. H. Schou, Oakland.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.—Ranford Worthing, San Diego; W. F. Freeman, Stockton; Philip Cowen, Petaluma; William Schroeder, San Francisco; W. S. Rodgers, Boulder Creek; John Robinett, Nipomo; Mrs. Kate Parker, Anaheim; J. E. Clark, Los Angeles; L. Magenheimer, San Jose.

These nominations were heard with cheers, but the convention received something of a setback when Judge North stated that owing to the infirmities of age and feeble health, he must ask to be excused. His sympathies were entirely with the organization, and from the expressions he had noted he was gratified to observe that he enjoyed the sympathies of those present. He was grateful for the honor, even though he must decline it. The California Liberal Union needed a younger man, one with the vigor to work. Such a man, he knew, was there upon the platform, and he therefore begged leave to nominate, as president of the organization, Mr. Samuel P. Putnam. The nomination was seconded by a dozen voices, and passed unanimously.

Mr. Putnam was rather more surprised than when he received the bouquet on the previous evening. He responded briefly by saying that he accepted the position because he welcomed the work. He would much rather that some one else received the honor, but he would put on the harness and do the work according to the best of his ability.

The officers of the California State Union are therefore:

President, Samuel P. Putnam, San Francisco.

Secretary, Emil S. Lemme, San Francisco.

An interesting address by Prof. D. C. Seymour ended this session.

MONDAY EVENING.

There was another big gathering. The petitions against the Sabbath laws were read, as were also the articles of organization, and signatures were attached to both. Mrs. Rutter gave the "Star Spangled Banner" and the audience sang the chorus.

Mr. Low was the first speaker. He observed that the "Star Spangled Banner" suggested to him what the religious people were endeavoring to do under that banner. They are combining to deny to unbelievers the liberties which that banner guarantees to all. Mr. Low did not believe much generally in petitions. He didn't believe in praying to public servants. He would prefer the term used in the platform of the Liberal Union: "We demand." Nevertheless, as there are petitions on one side there must be petitions on the other. Imagine what confusion would ensue from the adoption of the Blair amendment introducing the teaching of the "principles of the Christian religion" in the schools. No two persons fully agree on what those principles are. Supposing one finds that the principles as taught do not harmonize with his views. He puts an injunction on the teacher and takes the matter into court. The teacher is called upon to state the source of the principles which he teaches as those of the Christian religion. He attributes them to God. This at once raises the question of the existence of God and of revelation. Nothing can be proven, and the case must be thrown out of court. It can not be adjudicated upon, and the amendment would not be worth the paper it was printed on. Christianity, said Mr. Low, had nothing to do with morality. So far as salvation is concerned, morality avails a man nothing. If the principles of Christianity included virtue and morality, the mention of them as separate principles would have been unnecessary in the amendment. Mr. Low's address gave great satisfaction.

The next speaker was Miss Ada Ballou, the lady who painted the great picture of Thomas Paine which has adorned the walls of the FREETHOUGHT office during the past year. The picture rested on a stand at the back of the stage. To say that Miss Ballou looked perfectly lovely is to use an expression which will be perfectly understood by all and heartily indorsed by those who saw her. She began her address by referring to two statues which she saw in Australia of Burke and Wilkins, pioneers in that country, who laid down their lives for the land of their adoption. There was a likeness between these men and Thomas Paine, who, though a foreigner, sacrificed much for this country of ours. Paine was not a soldier. The country could find better use for him than to put a musket in his hands. It needed his inspiring words, for not muscle alone wins the battles of the free. Miss Ballou related how on a recent Sunday she stood before the monument reared to the memory of Francis Scott Key, author of the "Star Spangled Banner." From this statue her thoughts turned to the man who reared it, and who, while remembering the singer of the "Star Spangled Banner," did not forget the source from which that banner drew its stars. He remembered the music of the spheres, the celestial notes hung upon the bars of night, and through the instrument which he placed on Mount Hamilton we read the song of the heavens.

The speaker said that in the Centennial year, when the celebration was about to take place in San Francisco, a committee of gentleman called upon her and asked her to paint something suitable to display on the line of march. The time was limited, but she painted a portrait of Thomas Paine. The committee were afraid. They thought if it were exhibited on the street it would provoke expressions of disapproval and the picture would be shot at. "I went down in the morning," said Miss Ballou, "and with the help of a friend got the picture in the street. I went to the committee and returned their money, and said, 'This picture is mine now, not yours, is it not?' They answered, 'Yes.' I then waited upon James Lick, who lay gasping on what proved to be his dying bed. I stated my case—that the picture of the man whose motto had been 'The world is my country, and to do good my religion' could have no place on the street that day. He asked me to have it brought up that he might see it. Upon its being brought he, with tears in his eyes, eulogized the patriot of the past, and he himself ordered that the picture be placed where the thousand of people must see it. I need not say it was not fired at, nor did it provoke any expressions of disapproval; and when the procession marched through Montgomery street, those who would not look at this picture of a patriot were obliged to march under it."

Miss Ballou's speech was cheered often during its delivery, and tremendously applauded at its close.

The veteran Freethinker, Thomas Curtis, followed. He related the workings of a Sunday law in Philadelphia years ago. Speaking of the attempt to inaugurate the Puritan Sabbath in California, he said that the price of liberty was eternal vigilance. In a community of thieves the door must not be locked once a year but every night. So in an orthodox community the Christians must be watched all the time. Mr. Curtis told a story of a minister in Ohio who got his pay in rye. This minister one day asked a deacon how the people liked his sermons. The deacon replied that a good many of the parishioners were kicking about the doctrines enunciated. "Well," said the minister, "you just go around the parish and find out what they want, and whatever they want I will preach, for by Jerusalem, I've got to have that rye." Mr. Curtis said the ministers of to-day were like the Ohio dominie, and preached not as they believed but as the pews dictated.

Professor Holmes, a gentleman who was educated as a clergyman in the church of England, spoke on Thomas Paine. The professor has a ringing voice, and a ready fund of facts and arguments, so that when he speaks the air is full of music. His address was brief but pointed and telling.

It was half past ten when the audience was dismissed.

THE PAINE ANNIVERSARY.

If the previous meetings were to be spoken of as a great success, as they were, what shall be said of that held on the 152d anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine? It needed no advertising—the air was full of it, and when eight o'clock on Tuesday evening arrived, there was not a vacant seat in Irving Hall. A few minutes later, extra chairs and camp stools were required.

The Misses Haelke gave a piano duet as an overture. The first number on the programme was a song, "Die Thrane (The Tear)," by the German singing societies. They were a few minutes late, and the interim was occupied by Mrs. Rutter, who led in "The Red, White, and Blue," the vast audience swelling the chorus into a volume of sound that filled all the space overhead. There was still a brief vacancy, and Mr. Putnam improved it with some impromptu remarks. Few, probably, suspected that he was talking against time, though such was the case; and when the singers came none but those aware of the circumstances saw anything remarkable in the way he overleaped a hundred years in the history of the republic, and turned a disquisition on the universal aspect of Freethought into an address of welcome to the choristers of the Turnverein. He did it, however, without a break, and when some forty representatives of the land of Schiller and Goethe gathered upon the platform, it looked as if the whole speech had been prepared to lead up to this event. The singers got an ovation before they sang a note. Then the leader elevated his baton, and one of the most beautiful songs ever written came from two score manly voices with an effect that no orchestra could equal. An encore followed in response to tremendous applause.

The first regular speaker, Mr. F. Schueneman-Pott, delivered an address in German, and those who understood that language testified that it was magnificent. A zither solo by the Misses Haelke, so the musical critics of the daily press state, proved the most enjoyable event of the evening, and was repeated. S. P. Putnam read a poem on Thomas Paine. W. F. Freeman, of Stockton, in the absence of Mrs. Gordon, made an excellent address full of practical suggestions. Mrs. Scott Briggs read a brief paper and a poem written by Captain Scott. A statement of the receipts and expenses of the convention, by S. P. Putnam, showed that financially, as otherwise, the lectures, convention, and celebration had been a success, and the proceedings came to a close with "Auld Lang Syne," sung by the audience. The hall was then cleared for dancing, and for two hours hilarity had the floor. Nearly one hundred couples joined the grand march, and afterwards executed various intricate figures, under the direction of Professor Burdick.

Nobody left the hall without stopping to confide to somebody else the opinion that this was the finest Paine celebration ever known. Mr. F. Schueneman-Pott testified that in all his experience he had never met such an audience on an occasion of this kind.

It is hoped that the Paine celebrations everywhere were equally successful.

Nearly everything else is crowded out of this issue of FREETHOUGHT to make room for the report of the convention and celebration. We do not believe that any complaint will arise from this fact, for since the starting of this paper no event has occurred of greater importance than these Liberal meetings. We only wish that we had more space, so that all the addresses might be printed in full. The amount of resources developed and talent displayed has surprised the old residents. Previous to this convention, few words of encouragement were spoken concerning it. Friends gave their money and their hope and good wishes, and those who could do so came in from various parts of the state. Some came from as far as Oregon.

The three preliminary lectures did much for the success of the convention. The attendance on these lectures increased weekly. The daily press was at first non-committal, and said nothing. Then it fell in line, and the meetings were well reported. Sunday night, the 27th, a thousand were present. At the opening of the convention Sunday morning, three hundred representative Freethinkers met to transact the business of the convention, and there was harmony throughout.

If anything in the outcome of this convention is to be regretted, it is that the health of Judge J. W. North forbade him to accept the position of president. For that office he would have been the unanimous choice. But he chose to leave the responsibility for the shoulders of a younger man, and the convention concurred. If he could not be president, the next best thing was to accept his judgment as to who was best fitted for that position.

The election of secretary and treasurer cannot fail to give satisfaction, and the executive committee is made up of the energetic workers of the state. So also of the list of vice-presidents. Already a long roll of members is obtained, and if all who signed the call for the convention join them, as steps will be taken to give them an opportunity to do, the California Liberal Union will have a membership of more than a thousand. Here is a splendid working force. So far, therefore, as the convention is concerned, the movement is successfully inaugurated, and if the energy hitherto displayed is maintained the result will be correspondingly great.

NEWS AND NOTES.

On Thursday evening, January 24, I had the pleasure of lecturing before the Liberal Spiritual Association of this city. The hall was full and the greeting most fraternal. I spoke on the theme, "Christianity a Failure," and a failure it is indeed—an intellectual, humanitarian, and moral failure. Professing to be a divine revelation, it gives no particle of proof, either of the existence of God or the immortality of the soul. It proclaims the brotherhood of man, and yet is divided into five hundred different sects constantly at war. It promised "peace on earth, good will to men," and yet its pathway is made bloody with the death of millions. The statistics of crime prove that five hundred Christians to one Infidel enter the jails of the land. A most lamentable failure Christianity has been and still is. My Spiritual friends were in entire harmony with my discourse, and show themselves to be good allies in the cause of Secular principles; and on the platform of justice and liberty we join heart and hand. These meetings at 909½ Market street, St. George's Hall, are held every Thursday night and are conducted with excellent spirit. It is a good place for Liberals to attend. Truth is infinite and there is always something to learn. Our philosophy should embrace the whole universe.

The convention has been a superb success. Friends have come from all parts. Our office has been thronged with genial visitors. We have had a gala time. The speeches have been splendid, the audiences enthusiastic, the attendance large. The business has gone along with just enough sparkle of discussion to make things lively and attractive. There is harmony and Liberals are ready to work.

All this is written down elsewhere, at length. I will only give one of the bright moments of the convention, when the delegates of the Turners of the Pacific Coast sent their committee to give fraternal greeting. There was a glorious and tumultuous applause in honor of these sturdy allies. It was a magnificent expression of comradeship. As member of the committee of response I had the privilege of bearing the resolutions of the California State Liberal Union to the delegates of the Turners. I shall not forget the welcome our committee received from that representative body. The resolutions were greeted with thunderous applause—and the Teutonic cheer, heard on fields afar, like the breakers of the sea, sweeping to victory, made the hall ring with the voice of fellowship. The children of the land of Goethe and Schiller lift up the banners of freedom over the land of Washington and Paine, and, in consecration to Liberty, universal brotherhood is proclaimed. Our German friends will be noble coadjutors in the impending conflict.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

THE SUNDAY LAW PETITION.

The petition which the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the clergy are circulating bears at its head the words:

"Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work."

Also:

"Hallow my Sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God."

Following is the petition:

"To the Honorable, the Senate and Assembly of the State of California:

"Greeting: We, the undersigned, residents of—, in the county of—, State of California, in view of the dissipation and demoralizing influences arising from the desecration of Sunday in the State, earnestly and respectfully petition your honorable body for the enactment of a Sunday law that shall give laboring men a day of rest; prohibit the carrying on of all unnecessary business; prohibit barbarous, unseemly, and noisy amusements, such as theatres, processions, concerts, games; and also the opening upon Sunday of all places where intoxicating beverages are sold; also providing, by proper legislation, for the enforcement thereof."

On the back of the petition the following argument is printed: CALIFORNIA THE ONLY STATE IN THE UNION WITHOUT A SUNDAY LAW.

[EXCEPT THE STATE OF NEVADA]

We propose to have one; to that end will you kindly see that this is printed in the local papers in your place, and get editorials in favor of it, and distribute the papers with the same largely, and send for Petitions and secure all the signatures possible?

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., December 1, 1888.

Dear Friends:

The repeal of the Sunday law has robbed us in this State of our day of rest—the kindest gift of God to the toilers of earth—the sweetest day of the week to the worker, and every virtuous home.

How long shall we remain in bondage to Sunday desecrations, open saloons, and all the orgies consequent upon these wicked practices on God's holy day?

Let us have one quiet rest day in seven, when all men shall close up their secular business, or such as is not necessary to be carried on during that day.

That each may have a day with their families and worship God in accordance with the dictates of their own consciences, uninterrupted by noisy street parades emanating from open saloons, or where intoxicating drinks may be sold and drank on the sacred Sabbath.

Unless the Sabbath is observed, we are on the way to Spanish bull-fights after the Lord's Supper, and the riot and doom of Gomorrah in the end.

The Sabbath was ordained by God at creation, expressly to minister to man, this noblest being, and his immortal interests.

Let us keep the window of the Sabbath open between earth and heaven, lest earth become the vestibule of hell.

The hand lifted against it is feeling for one of the central pillars that prop the temple of American liberty.

Let the Sabbath be overthrown, and other moral restraints would soon fall with it, and Paris, Babylon, Sodom, would soon finish the story.

Let the American Sabbath, radiant with more than natural sunshine, brighten onward into earth's millennial rest and glory.

If we want to diminish crime, pauperage, and taxation, to lighten the people's burdens and to increase their power to bear them, then stand fast by the American Sabbath. It is the common law of our land; let it be of our hearts also.

That which demoralizes and debauches the people ruin the nation.

The Christian Sabbath has done more for America than all her fertile soil, her fine climate, her rivers, lakes, forests, gold-mines, or coal.

It has civilized and ennobled her men, purified and exalted her women, and taught her children to revere the name of their country next to that of their God.

We appeal to you in behalf of "God and Home and Native Land," to petition the Senate and Assembly of the State of California to grant to the people of this golden land a Sunday Law, that shall give to rich and poor alike a day of rest. A day in which we can serve God according to the dictates of conscience.

By way of examining this argument, let us call attention to the heading, "California the only State in the Union without a Sunday law." Why was that heading placed there, since immediately under it are the words in greatly reduced type "except the state of Nevada?" If Nevada has no Sunday law, then the previous statement loses all force.

"The repeal of the Sunday law has robbed us in this state of our day of rest." How? In what manner? There is no law compelling any one to abstain from resting on Sunday or any other day. There is no law on the subject whatsoever. The statement quoted, therefore, is a falsehood.

The question "How long shall we remain in bondage to Sunday desecrations?" belongs under the same general head. No one is required by law to desecrate Sunday, and there is therefore no bondage. As the American Sentinel says, it is the veriest cant, designed to arouse the sympathy of the legislatures for the poor women of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, who find it impossible to take their much-coveted rest on Sunday because there is no law compelling them to!

There is one way for these women and others who sympathize with them to escape all the evils they fear. Let them go to church on Sunday. The law will protect them in so doing. In the church there are no saloons, no intoxicants except sacramental wine, and no bull-fights.

The absurdity of this Sunday petition is that the signers quote biblical authority for the observance of Saturday as the Sabbath while they ask the legislature to pass a law compelling the people of the state to keep Sunday. God, according to the record, has hallowed one day. Constantine, the Roman cut-throat, appointed another. These people ask our legislature to ignore God's day and to consecrate the day appointed by a barbarous emperor.

Such is the inconsistency of the movement. The real devilry of it lies in the endeavor to force a holy day when people who do not believe in it.

GUILELESS PAUL.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In the issue of November 10, I observe an error of biblical interpretation into which you have unconsciously fallen, and which appears to be copied from John E. Remsburg. The passage referred to is 2 Cor. xii, 16, "Being crafty I caught you with guile," and is quoted in evidence that Paul practiced untruthfulness and dissimulation, which, for all I know, he may have done; though the charge will have to be sustained, if at all, on grounds extraneous to this verse. The word translated "crafty" is panourgos, from pas, all or every, and ergo, to work. The meaning of the compound panourgos is working in every way. The translation "crafty" is used because one of the old meanings of the word was skillful, dextrous; it is allied to the word handicraft. Crafty is now used almost exclusively in an evil sense, but in the time of King James was frequently employed in a good sense. The word "guile" presents no real difficulty when taken in its proper connection with verse 13, "For what is there wherein ye were made inferior to the rest of the churches, except that it be that I myself was not a burden to you? forgive me this wrong." The wrong he had done, if wrong it could be called, was in not giving the churches the privilege of supporting him, whereas he believed that, generally, churches should support their ministers. See 1 Cor. ix, 6-12; Gal. vi, 6. The true exposition of the passage is found to be something like this: "Being handicrafty (for Paul was not only an apostle but a tentmaker also), I succeeded in making converts of you by the guilty method of supporting myself rather than being a burden to you, as the law declares is proper, while I did it." This is a species of guilt to which none can object. C. L. ABBOTT.

Estelline, Dak.

We do not believe that our correspondent's defense of Paul will stand the test of examination. The word "crafty" is used four times in the Bible, always in the sense of cunning, tricky, or deceitful. "Guile" occurs ten times with the same meaning; and both words are passed by the revisers without modification or comment. In this the Bible is supported by the dictionary. Paul may have meant to say that he worked in all ways, as the clergy of to-day pull every string with a convert or a dollar at the end of it, but there is no evidence that in the mechanic arts he was a jack-of-all-trades. After Paul had admitted, in his epistle to the Romans, that he felt justified in lying for the glory of God, there is nothing to be surprised at in his confession that being crafty he caught the people of Corinth with guile.

A COMING INFLECTION.

The Rev. Samuel Jones is conducting a revival at Los Angeles, and as he is shortly to visit San Francisco, it is well to find out, from his record there, what we are to expect when he arrives. The Los Angeles Times and Tribune evidently went into the work of reporting his sermons with a determination to make them read as well as possible; but the reporters appear to have abandoned the attempt, and later on put the revivalist in cold type without giving him the benefit of their superior knowledge of English grammar.

We clip one of Jones's stories from the Times:

I said on one occasion, in the morning after breakfast, Wife said to me: "Husband, I wish you would go down to the home of Virginia Wykell and see her. She is in deep distress, and her child is very ill." I said, "I will go." I walked down to their home, rang the bell, the servant opened the door and carried me in the family room, and there was a poor, sad, wornout mother, as she sat with a little suffering child in her arms. She was my schoolmate. I was the schoolmate of her husband, then the most dissipated, the worst debauched man I almost ever saw in my life. And when I sat down and began to talk to her, I said, "Virginia, I believe God is going to take this little one, too." He had already carried five little ones from that home to the skies. And she said, with the tears running down her cheeks, "It looks as if it could not live at all." Then I said to her, "Virginia, did it ever occur to you that God was doing his best to save your poor husband?" And the tears ran down her cheeks and spattered on the face of her sick child, and she said, "Oh, if God can by this means save my poor husband, I am willing to give them all up, though it breaks my heart." I knelt and prayed with the mother and the sick child, and then I walked up town and went to her husband's office. He was out, and I started on the hunt for him, and directly I saw him coming across the square. And as he approached me I gave him my hand, and looking him in the face, I said, "John, dear old fellow, we were raised together, and have known each other nearly all our days. I am just from your home. It is the saddest home I ever saw in my life. Your wife is sitting there with that dying child in her arms. O John," I said, "I asked your wife didn't she suppose God was taking your children from you to reform your life. John, in the name of all that manhood prizes, John, look me in the face; won't you surrender your heart to God and lead a better life?" I saw the tears start down his cheeks; he grasped my hand tighter, and said, "Pray for me; I am the frailest man; I want to be good; pray for me." That man to-day is mayor of my city whenever he chooses to be, and the leading member of the Methodist church and one of the most consecrated men in our city.

If any more barbarous character has ever been ascribed to God than this story gives him we have not heard of it. Imagine a heavenly father contemptible enough to sacrifice the lives of five innocent children, through sickness and suffering, in order that a drunkard might reform and join the Methodist church. Why did not God take the man—the guilty party—instead of the children?

Another of this revivalist's gems glitters like this:

"Whenever you see a preacher 'gadding' around, he cannot preach much. Many a preacher's got into trouble by 'boggling' around. If I have a sick member of my congregation, and he ain't any good, I ain't going to see him. I ain't going to pray and ask God to spare his life. If he is a good Christian, I will do anything for him. I once visited a sick brother, and he asked me to pray for him. I said: 'No, I can't pray for you.' He asked why. I told him he never was a good Christian, and I wasn't going to play any pranks on God by offering up a hypocritical prayer for him. I said: 'You neither pray nor pay.' He said: 'Brother Jones, would you like a load of corn.' I said I could use it. 'Well, if I did nothing more, I made a load of corn that morning.'"

The Times gives a report of an evening meeting:

"Mr. Jones, after the opening hymns had been sung, prayer said, and the usual collection taken up, advanced to the front of the platform and, taking off his handsome fur-trimmed overcoat, announced that he would say a few words on the text: 'I will live in the faith.' He then delivered the usual jumble of anecdotes, slang witticisms, appeals to God, and comments on his actions with which he 'revives' the unconverted. As usual, he started away as far as possible from the original text, and fully sustained his reputation for religious buffoonery. He told the following story: 'Now, see here, you ol' fellers, listen. Me and my wife once had an ol' sewing machine sent us in a box, and it got smashed all up to pieces, and I didn't know if it was a sewing machine or a patent harvester, it was so broke up. 'Well,' I says, 'let's wait er while.' By'n'by comes along a little book that tells us how to piece her up again. Why, I tell ye I made her run all night, and my wife she could just sew and tuck and hem and fell and bang—no, by the way, she couldn't bang on it. That's the way with God's work. The little good book comes along and all's right—all's explained.'"

The arguments of unbelief are thus answered:

"I have known men who have been in the church for years and then left it and become Infidels. I had rather be any convict in the penitentiary of any state than an open avowed Infidel."

Mr. Jones will find a much larger number of men of his belief than of Infidels in the penitentiary of any state. But to proceed:

"I put Christianity and Infidelity together here and I say, 'Christianity, what have you done?' 'I have come into the world on a mission of mercy. I have founded orphan asylums. I have brought peace to many a soul.' 'Infidelity, is that true?' 'Yes, that is so.' 'What are you doing, Infidelity?' 'I am fighting Christianity.' 'I had rather be a convict than have a job like that.'"

Let us indeed put Christianity and Infidelity together, and ask them what they have done and are doing. Infidelity has put out the fires of religious persecution and lit the torch of progress. It, too, has founded orphan asylums. It has redeemed men, so far as they are redeemed, from the curse of superstition. What is Christianity doing? It is fighting Infidelity.

Another inspired paragraph:

"Here's Bob Ingersoll sitting on the train of this nineteenth century of progress, and he says, 'I believe I'll pull the cord. I'll get a joke on God; I'll pull it,' and he pulls the cord and before his laugh died out here comes God's lightning express of judgment and eternity crashing into the train and hurls 50,000,000 of souls into perdition."

This would indeed be a railroad accident worth reporting, but it can be averted. Let God put the brakes on his lightning express. Nothing could be simpler.

An elegant definition of Infidelity:

"What is an Infidel?—just a great big old mouth going round talking. Did you ever see a mute that was an Infidel? I defy you to find one. If a man has no mouth he can't be an Infidel, and the only way to argue with an Infidel is to mash his mouth, and then he's done for."

Did Mr. Jones ever hear a pot speak of a kettle as a brunette? Where, let us ask, would Mr. Jones stand as a revivalist without that noisy mouth of his? Since he defies the world to produce a mute who is an Infidel, we shall take pleasure in doing so. If he will apply to this office we will furnish him with the address of a mute Infidel whose silence is more sensible, not to say more eloquent, than all that Mr. Jones has ever said. We give the reverend gentleman the credit of proposing the sole practicable way of answering the Infidel—that is, to "mash his mouth." The gag has always been a favorite argument with the church, and is the only effective one in its possession.

The Los Angeles papers say that on the third night Jones began to repeat himself, and it is presumable that his sermons there will be inflicted upon us here. It is strange that slang and blackguardism should be necessary to the promulgation of the teachings of Jesus Christ. Moody, now with us, is an unlearned man, but he is something of a gentleman. The Rev. Samuel Jones, like Moody, is unlettered, but unlike him he can not be called a gentleman without so extending the scope of that word as to include those who willfully and habitually violate the truth.

ERNST SCHNABEL, of San Jose, one of its most popular business men and liberal minded citizens—a true American and supporter of Secular and Freethought principles—died at his residence, January 25. The San Jose Mercury says: "He was the friend of all worthy enterprises, and assisted greatly the progress of the community. Those who were in need of sympathy or aid never appealed to him in vain. He gave to the poor with a liberal hand and contributed freely to public and private charities. His death will be sincerely mourned by many friends and admirers of his open and Liberal views and principles, but those upon whom the blow falls with a heavy hand are the widow and four children. The latter are Edward, late of Los Angeles, but now here; Emma, wife of George Koenig, and Ernst and Erna, younger children. Mr. Schnabel was a member of Germania Lodge, No. 116, I.O.O.F. of San Francisco, and of the Teutonic Association of that city."

HEAVEN.

How natural it is for children to imitate their parents! and just as naturally the parents copy after their forefathers. Children carefully preserve the broken fragments of chinaware, and on the shady side of the house, or in some big box, set up house-keeping by themselves. It is because they are children and instinctive with apehood. True, they leave off playing with bits of brightly colored china, because they now procure such goods in unbroken form, but they received from their parents certain traditions which were but fragments when their fathers received them from their forefathers, and they have never been able to exchange the old fragmentary bits of tradition for anything better.

Heaven is a highly colored bit of ancient, barbarous tradition. How few people try to think about this glittering bauble in any serious way. Such people are like a child in the first moments of being weaned. There is nothing you can give him in its place. You cannot reason with him or coax him. He is wronged, deeply wronged, and he is going to fight it out on that line. Unfortunately, the order of nature is against him. Our tender-hearted Christian friends are in much the same predicament. To attempt to show them that heaven is a tradition is like robbing them of all they hold dear. The moment you begin to lift the veil from those commonly called sacred subjects, the believer is alarmed, if not offended, and seeks to retire, saying, "Oh, I cannot reason with a man who don't believe in anything."

The idea of heaven is faint and obscure in the believer's mind. "Where is heaven?" He don't know, but he begins to tell you what he believes about it.

The writers of the Old, as well as those of the New Testament, supposed that heaven was very close to the earth, and this nearness of heaven to earth shows the childishness of their thoughts. The Greeks had Mt. Olympus as the residence of their gods, while our heaven is more obscure and less poetic.

While theology teaches that God is everywhere, the Bible represents his home as heaven. The idea we get is that sometime he can diffuse himself infinitely, and as occasion demands can contract or call in his personal outskirts and retire into heaven. Let us take a specimen picture or two from holy writ: "And the Lord came down (from heaven) to see the city and the tower (Babel) which the children of men had builded" (Gen. ii, 5). It would seem from this that while God was not very far away, he could not see just exactly what was going on at the tower of Babel. The good people of that region, or their great-great-grandfathers, had been cheated out of certain claims upon heavenly estates by a flood, and to prevent another flood from robbing them or their posterity from mansions in the skies, they projected a plan of building a tower that would reach up to heaven, and from its top they intended to step over into the New Jerusalem, without even so much as a "by your leave, sir." The idea was a good one, and it seems it would have been crowned with a glorious success if it had not been for the confounding of their languages. Those were times to try men's souls, when heaven was almost within their grasp, but snatched away before their very eyes.

I find another instance much like this in Gen. xviii, 21, where we read: "And the Lord said, Because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is grievous, I will go down now and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come up unto me, and if not I will know."

In this instance the omnipresent is going to a place where he never had been before. The omnipotent had to make an especial effort to see something he had never seen before, and the all-wise must make a short journey down to earth to find out the correctness of some reports that had come to his ears respecting certain irregularities among the Sodom and Gomorrah people.

What we read about Jacob's ladder is as good material as any of the rest of it: "And he (Jacob) dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven, and behold the angels of the Lord ascending and descending on it" (Gen. xxviii, 12). This account may be rejected by some very close critics on account of the angels climbing a ladder, when their proper way of ascending and descending was to fly. But it will be well not to jump too hastily to conclusions, as it is barely possible that this occurrence may have taken place in the moulting season of the angels, when they could not fly.

While these Bible writers have very much to say about heaven, they have remarkably little information to give us concerning the home of the sacred Santa Claus. We have such phrases as, "And lo! the heavens were opened," and "Lo, a voice from heaven, saying." We have to conclude that either heaven was very near at hand, or the voice must have been thunderous loud, and if the heavens opened, it must have been on self-acting and closing principle.

"For the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door and sat upon it." How did the writer know this? Did he see the he, she, or it (as the angel may have been) roll away the stone? How did he know that it was an angel? How did he know that the angel came from heaven? How could he possibly tell where he, she, or it came from? Heaven may be a bright place and full of light, but the manner in which this writer spreads out the New Jerusalem before us envelopes it in darkness, thick darkness.

We find only a few instances where any attempt is made to give us facts regarding any particulars of heaven that may have been witnessed by mortal man. Yet we have a few such. For instance, Stephen, after he had made a great speech, among other things said: "Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the son of man standing on the right hand of God."

The writer of the gospel called Mark gives some other person credit for seeing into heaven: "So then, after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God." It is hardly worth while to call attention to the fact that Stephen saw Jesus standing and the other party saw him sitting. Of course, he could not be expected to remain in either position all the time.

It greatly puzzles us that these writers can write so much about heaven and yet give so little information; and besides, we cannot imagine how they could find out even what they did. They certainly had very long sight. For even if heaven is not far away, yet it was too far away for God to see what was going on at the tower of Babel, or in the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, and I suppose it was just as far from heaven down to Sodom as it was from Jerusalem up to heaven.

I fear that these people let their imaginations run away with them in regard to their ideas and facts about heaven, as they did respecting dreams, visions, trances, miracles, witches, devils, angels, and many other gross superstitions. Heaven and hell must pass away, but mankind must be exalted and glorified.

W. S. BELL.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Some thirty years ago the charity ball was first given for the aid of the "Nursery and Child's Hospital." From that time the fashionable element has taken it under its wing, and given a yearly ball. The last was as monotonous and stupid as public balls are apt to be. The same gilded butterflies in undress were present as a third of a century ago, although they may be the children or grandchildren of the then belles. The same families were represented on both occasions. The same laudable objects in view, to add to the hospital funds, to show their fine feathers. Change has not invaded this conservative festivity. Flowers and decorations are considered personal affairs, as of yore. Decorum is the marshal of the evening; hilarity and real fun the exception. If it is mirth to sit hours in a box, or to move stately through a dance, there is mirth at the charity ball; otherwise not. The Astors, the Cuttings, the Rhinelanders, the Schermerhorns, the Schieffelins, the Beeckmans, the Hoyts, the Lentilhons, the Motts, the Wilmerdings, the Livingstones, the Havemeyers, the Kingslands, the Vanderbilts, the Griswolds were there. It goes without saying that the ladies were as beautiful as fine clothes and Recamier could make them. Financially and socially the ball was a success, but we notice a mixture in the boxes. The grand march was headed by Mrs. William Astor and Elbridge Gerry. The music was furnished by Gilmore's band and Bernstein's orchestra, the former playing for promenading and the latter for dancing. The women seemed happy, the men bored. Men go this ball to please their wives, to the French ball to please themselves.

The press was simply brutal in its criticisms of Mrs. James Brown Potter's Cleopatra. From its tone one would judge there is some hidden motive in its savagery. It bristled all over with bitterness. These same papers commended her as an amateur. Why this change? This question is hourly asked. No one expected to find in her the exquisite pose, the heroic action, the finished technique of Ada Rehan. The public demands fair treatment. This, it has decided, has been denied her, and to emphasize this feeling it crowds Palmer's nightly to see her. This nightly greeting is an earnest of the contempt of the public for our dramatic critics. I think Mrs. Potter can afford to pay them to write her down. These asses know all there is of art, and would like to make their dictum a finality, but unfortunately for them our people know these fellows, and knowing, condemn them.

Lillian Russell contends that she cannot wear tights at the Standard without danger to her health. She is reported assaying that her shapely legs will not stand padding with lambs' wool, as some other legs will. Who can blame the fair star for determining to preserve her beautiful symmetry. "A thing of beauty is a joy for ever." So she breaks her engagement with Duff, and goes to the Casino. Aronson is willing. Duff objects, hence the courts are appealed to. The opera is a fair success this season. Lord Fauntleroy is still drawing full houses at the Broadway. Daly is as popular as in former years. Such pains to please is taken by no other manager. The reward is success.

The Agricultural Department issued its last report for '88, on the 12th. It makes the crop of corn 1,987,790,000 bushels, valued $677,561,580, or 34.1 cents per bushel. The crop of wheat 414,868,000 bushels, valued $384,248,030, or 92.6 cents per bushel against 68.1 last year. On this side of the Rocky Mountains wheat has been pounded down to 100¢ in Chicago. The bears are aggressive. The situation does not look to me bearish. For food and seed we need 340,000,000 bushels; we have already exported 52,000,000 bushels, leaving out of this crop only 22,868,000 bushels to be exported, to go into the next crop as we went into this, with an increase of 1,700,000 in our population. Thus far England has taken no wheat from the Atlantic coast. She has supplied her wants from India and Russia. The former is about barren of wheat, and the ports of the latter are closed by ice. To this country she must look.

REASON AND RELIGION.

All truth is reasonable. If any truth is unreasonable it is just like error, and hence the difference cannot be known. If all truth is reasonable, it follows that whatever is unreasonable is untrue. How can we know what is true but by its conformity to facts? Reason, therefore, cannot be dangerous, as without it man would not be worth a groat.

All history, whether in the Bible or out of it, must be tested by its conformity to fact.

If the position I have taken be correct, then reason is the square, the rule, the measure, the scale by which to try everything, religion not excepted. Reason, therefore, is our crucible, and truth, like gold, will not suffer by the crucible.

I now propose to assay Christianity by the crucible of reason and hence I must begin at the foundation. If the foundation be rock the house may stand; if it be sand it may be washed away.

The chief corner-stone of the building is the doctrine that Adam and Eve committed an offense against God by eating fruit that grew on the tree of knowledge, instead of being satisfied with the fruit of ignorance which God preferred they should live on; for the fruit of all the trees of the garden permitted to them would not make them wise above the brutes. The interdiction of God shows that he preferred ignorance to knowledge, for he went and told his companion—probably his wife, as he had said before, Let us make man in our own image, male and female—Behold man has become like one of us, to know good and evil. As if it was a matter of regret or surprise.

Christianity holds that the turpitude of this offense was imputed to all the posterity of man to the end of time. The penalties, to use the words of the Presbyterian confession of faith, are, "Adam and Eve being the root of all mankind, the guilt of this sin was imputed, and the same death in sin and corrupted nature were conveyed to all their posterity; and they were defiled in all faculties and parts of soul and body."

Here arises a question of justice: Whether a mere moral offense of a parent can be charged to a child born a thousand years after the offense was committed. If the ancestor was hung for his crime shall the children through all time be hung for the same offense? Is there a shadow of justice in subjecting little babes of to-day to sickness, pain, and death because Adam and Eve ate an apple from the only tree that bore the fruit of knowledge of right and wrong. And then how hot must the anger have been kindled to damn a whole unoffending race from birth to death, not only in this world but to subject them to eternal pain in some other; and all because Adam and Eve aspired to rise above the dumb animals and ate the fruit of the only knowledge-bearing tree in the garden. Could a debt of five dollars be justly collected from a man now, whose great-great-grandfather had died insolvent to that amount? If our condition of total depravity is what the churches say, we have struck bottom; we can get no lower, for there are no degrees to the word total.

Ask any judge or lawyer whether punishment could be justly inflicted upon a babe for the sin of an ancestor. "The son shall not bear the sin of the father."

But what could God expect now from a totally depraved race? If he got the first soul of them, it must be by main strength.

God tried several ways to restore mankind to a higher condition. On observing that men began to multiply and that good fair daughters were born to them, he sent his sons—for he controlled everything—to take wives of the daughters of men, and the sons of those wives became mighty men in the land and men of renown, and there were giants in the land in those days. But on looking around he saw men were wicked, their thoughts were evil continually—what could he have expected?—and concluded that hybridizing was too slow a process, and the prospect was so discouraging that he became sorry that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him to his heart.

It seems, too, that he was sorry he had made the animals and creeping things, as if he didn't know at the beginning what he was doing or would do. If he had said he was sorry he had cursed man, it would seem to have been a little more consistent. But Noah found grace in the sight of the Lord, and this suggested to him that he might improve the race by evolution, and, therefore, he saved Noah and his family by whom to colonize the world anew. So the world rolled on some four or five hundred years, but the race did not improve as desired; so the Lord made another choice, Abraham and Sarah, both nearly a hundred years old, mature physically and ripe mentally, to secure best results. Isaac was born and in process of time had two sons, Jacob and Esau. But the Lord loved Jacob and hated Esau before they were born—both innocent alike. The Lord then chose Jacob, and from Jacob's four wives sprung the twelve tribes of Israel. When Jacob's family had multiplied to three-score and ten the Lord removed them to Egypt, probably to educate them. He kept them there four hundred and thirty years. And we don't read of his giving any attention to any other people of the world. He meant to make them a success. Then he brought them across the Red Sea and kept them in the wilderness forty years. During that time we read of no schools among them, and from their conduct while on their way to Palestine we judge they had not made much progress in the knowledge of justice.

On their way from the wilderness to Palestine they raised an army of twelve thousand men and pitched into Midian and killed all the men and took the women and little boys captive, and took them to their camp, separated all the young women and girls from their mothers and little brothers. The girls numbered thirty-two thousand. All the mothers and little brothers were killed on the spot. The men killed in battle, and mothers and little boys, must have reached fifty thousand. Were not those people as much the offspring of God as any people, and he as much their father as he was of any? Was that slaughter the result of infinite love? But farther on they came to Jordan, where were the cities Jericho and Ai. God planned Joshua's battles for him, and Joshua destroyed those cities and people, men, women, children, and babes. And all this to recover a people from a depravity with which God had cursed them. With God's special assistance Joshua passed through the country, killing as he went, to let the people know that there was a God in Israel whose name was in their constitution, and himself president. He gave them their laws, and conducted them for hundreds of years. So much for a people controlled, guided, and governed by infinite power, love, and wisdom. Taking that people as an example of perfect government, I will vote for our own in preference.

But time rolled on, and the kingdom of God was divided and called the kingdoms of Israel and Judah; and a war arose between them, and a battle; many thousands were left dead on the field. Follow out the history of that people and notice the results of an infinitely wise government. God had tried, by hundreds of thousands of sacrifices, to reconcile the people to himself, and sent off their sins into the wilderness on the heads of goats, but all in vain. He saw by this time that something more efficient must be done, and made up his mind to make one more trial with them, not as a people but as individuals. Had he been willing to confess his mistake in cursing a whole race, and rectified it, he might have saved three-fourths, if not more, of mankind. But he thought he would try one more expedient that would exhibit so much love and mercy that all men would be drawn unto him. So he concluded to beget a son and make him the offering. So he took a man's wife and begat a son as the substance of the sacrifice, and that sacrifice was to be made to himself to appease his anger. Anger for what? Could he be angry with a people for being what he made them? He himself had imputed to them a crime they had never committed—that of eating an apple from a knowledge-tree before they were born—and then inflicted upon them all the agonies of this life, and death itself, as though they had been really guilty. Who had the most occasion to be angry? God's anger for that false yet imputed offense had lasted four thousand years.

The second essential stone of the Christian building is redemption. God looked about and found a young married woman and begat a son by her, on purpose to kill him and make people believe that somehow he would make amends to God and rescue mankind from unjust penalties. How could penalties be justly inflicted on persons for an offense committed before they were born? The Roman definition of justice is, "rendering to everyone his due." Can a babe be justly punished for an offense it never committed? If it can, then the Christian religion may be true. To recover mankind from the curse of such a law, Jesus was born and died. It is said he died to vindicate the justice of God's law. Can that law be just that inflicts distress upon a child for the moral offense of its father? How could the death of Christ prove the justice of a law that punished the innocent? All orthodox churches hold that Christ consisted of two whole, perfect, and distinct natures, the godhead and manhood, very God and very man, yet one Christ; and that that Christ died for man. Everybody knows that a very God could neither suffer nor die, and, therefore, it was only the manhood that did die; and could God be appeased by the death of one man? If so, the death of a thousand would have greatly overpaid him. It is evident that thousands have suffered longer and more severely than he did, and died for themselves at last. Where is there a man, woman, or child, who is not suffering, to-day, the curse of the law, although Paul says Christ hath redeemed us from it? If Christ has in fact redeemed us from the curse of the law, and the redemption price paid and receipt acknowledged, should not the prisoners be honorably discharged; and especially babies who have never committed a personal offense? Can a babe be justly held under execution after full payment and satisfaction has been made? If the offense of Adam was imputed to us unto condemnation, ought not the righteousness of Christ to be set to our credit to the full amount—debt and interest with damages? A. B. PIRKARD.

RELIGIOUS LEGISLATION.

At the concluding meeting of the Christian Ministerial Association of California, held in San Francisco on the 3d instant, "The Lord's Day" was one of the topics discussed. It was subdivided thus: The authority for and proper manner of its observance; The religious value of a day of rest; Are Sunday laws beneficial and desirable? The published report of the meeting says: "R. N. Davis, of Napa, read a carefully prepared paper showing the traditions and customs of the early Christians in the observance of the day. He did not approve of legislating with a view of compelling men to observe Sunday. The Lord's day being a spiritual institution, civil laws have no jurisdiction with reference to the manner of its observance."

In this Mr. Davis has expressed the correct view in regard to Sunday laws. Sunday is a religious institution, and legislation regarding Sunday is religious legislation, no matter by what other name it may be called. A civil law enjoining a religious act is a law concerning religion and regulating its exercise, notwithstanding all that Sunday-law advocates have said to the contrary; and all liberty-loving citizens, of whatever religious belief, do well to oppose such legislation.

But Mr. Davis was scarcely consistent, for "legislation to close saloons on Sundays he considered right, and he believed in legislating to restrain the wicked citizen, and for the preservation of law and order, in order that the preacher might have an opportunity to reach the citizen who is liable to be tempted." So says the report.

We have no word to say in favor of liquor selling; but to single out Sunday and close saloons upon that day simply that men may go to church instead of going to the saloons is entirely beyond the proper sphere of civil government. But the plea may be made that the saloons ought to be closed on Sunday, not on religious grounds but because more men being idle upon that day more men patronize them. Then it ought to be extended to all holidays. The real truth is that men advocate Sunday closing of saloons because of a religious regard for the day, more than because of opposition to liquor selling. And such laws tend far more to the exaltation of Sunday as a religious institution than they do toward the suppression of the liquor traffic.—Signs of the Times.

"GOD BLESS BOB INGERSOLL."

"Every night before I sleep I say, 'God bless Bob Ingersoll,'" said a young lady to a Sun reporter recently. "Why? Well, I'll tell you.

"Everything has been going wrong with me lately. I've been what you would probably call 'playing in hard luck.' I've lost all my money, my income has been stopped, and I've been for the first time in my life thrown on my own resources entirely. I tried everywhere to get employment. I am willing to do anything, but everywhere I have been confronted with the question: 'What experience have you had in this line?' Not having had any, it has been simply impossible for me to get a start even—and it sounds funny to me when I say it—even at tying up bundles. No one knows, no one can realize until she is thrown into the world unexpectedly, how hard, oh, how hard it is for a woman to get employment in this great, big, dear old New York.

"Failing at every turn and getting poorer and poorer, I went to a clergyman whom everybody knows, and whom I had known in prosperity personally. Going around among the stores was bad enough, but this was worse. Still, I had known him, and I was now cordially received until I had made known the object of my call, and then I was informed very sweetly that 'we have so many members of our own congregation to assist, you know, that really I—well—I'll talk it over with the ladies of our society, and will see if we can't recommend you to some place,' etc. And this was about the result with them all.

"By this time I was in actual need, when the thought occurred to me to go to the opposite extreme and see Robert Ingersoll, a total stranger to me. I knew he couldn't kill me, and was sure I would at least be politely treated. I was shown into his private office with my heart beating furiously, my brain in a whirl, and without an idea of what I should say first. We shook hands, and showing me to a chair opposite to him, he said: 'Sit down, please, and let's see what the trouble is,' with such a kindly, cordial smile that I was at once at ease, and told him plainly just what a predicament I was in. He watched me closely and questioned me shrewdly, and then kept people waiting while he gave me a lot of his precious time and just such friendly, fatherly advice as I have been yearning for. I could have just hugged him, while my eyes were full of tears. I felt already rich with his earnest sympathetic words, but before I left he voluntarily helped me substantially. Then he came way out to the door with me, and, after asking me to let him know how I got along, his last words were, as he shook my hand: 'Good-bye; success to you—and, yes, I'll say God bless you.'

"I think I've got a little start now, and that's why I say every night before I sleep, and a thousand times a day, 'God bless Bob Ingersoll.'"

OUR GOOD WILL RETURNED.

From the New York Truth Seeker.

In sending out its New Year's regards—which the Truth Seeker is happy to receive and more than willing to return—San Francisco FREETHOUGHT converts the benediction of the heavenly host into this: "Peace on earth to men of good will." From a human point of view this paraphrase is an improvement. Men of bad will—mean fellows, the liars, the pharisees, the bigots, the defamers, the hypocrites, those trying to injure their brethren—don't deserve much peace, and, if we ever prayed, we should pray that they didn't get any. California, by the way, is coming along to the front in Liberalism. In San Francisco, this month, and in Oakland across the bay, meetings are being held every Sunday, and the outcome of the 'Frisco gatherings will be the formation of a state organization. Over five hundred Californians have signed a call for that purpose, and on Sunday, the 27th, the largest auxiliary of the American Secular Union in the country will hold its first meeting. The object is to "help secure throughout the country practical compliance with the demands of Liberalism." California is generous, and having forced its own churches to pay taxes proposes to aid its sister states. This activity, we imagine, is due to FREETHOUGHT, which shares the prosperity it has helped create, and comes out enlarged to sixteen pages, printed very neatly, and edited with ability, discrimination, poetic fervor, and humor. George Macdonald is the presiding office genius. Mr. Putnam bubbles all over with poesy, but has a hard, logical side nevertheless, as the ministers he has met on his ten months' lecturing tour, in which he reached as far as New York, can testify. Their paper is a credit to themselves and the cause, and they deserve all the good fortune that has befallen them since the big-hearted California Liberals took them into the family.

GOD AND PROHIBITION.

In spite of all the Bible says in favor of the use of wine and other stimulating beverages, the Prohibitionists believe, or profess to believe, that God belongs to their party. The following exalted sentiments are written by a correspondent of the California Prohibitionist, who seems to be unable to separate a political question from a religious one:

"The past year I shall never forget. It reminds me of old slavery days. Prayers and blood gave us the victory. God heard the cry of all good Christians, and the result was a speedy and terrible answer to our prayers. I am not a bit discouraged concerning the future of Prohibition. Our God is not asleep; neither has he gone on a journey. Oh, how grieved I am at the course of my old California Christian Advocate! It seemed so designing for it to publish on the eve of the election just where all our bishops stood upon the question of voting. Had all our bishops and pastors been conscientious before God, whose servants so boldly they profess to be, may I ask what may have been the result of our last election. I firmly believe Fisk would have been elected. Our M. E. church alone could have carried the day. How can the voters of our church look their Judge in the face? How can they ask him to bless their work, and grant them a blessed outpouring of the spirit on their pastors? All eyes are upon their actions; truly, no eye but God's can look such men into contrition; but unless they do repent, bishops and all, God will not smile upon their labors for him. He will say: 'My sons, I can do without you. I must have holy humanity-loving men to do my work.' I cannot keep these thoughts to myself longer. God, whose I am and serve, help me, his child, to stand out boldly and faithfully for him! Thousands of our W. C. T. U. are hurt and some grieved at such lack of faithful trust in our brothers in Israel. Nevertheless, I believe God will yet give us the victory."

A RHYME OF THOMAS THE DOUBTER.

When the Master had finished the story of the sower and the seed, And had shown his disciples the lesson of rock and wayside and weed, Then up spoke Thomas the Doubter, and his brow was furrowed with thought—

He had seen a darker problem in the lesson that was taught.

"Master," said Thomas the Doubter, "when the seed sown is the word

I can see the meaning right plainly of the lesson we have heard.

"But, Master, say that the sower were God and the seed were men,

And some of them fell by the wayside, what were the lesson then?

"For I see men daily, my brothers, like the seed of which you spoke,

And among the thorns fall many, and the thorns spring up and choke.

"And some of them, good Master, fall where the soil is scant,

And they perish there for the absence of the life for which they pant.

"It is easy," said Thomas the Doubter, "for those on good soil cast,

For they have their joy of living and the harvest at the last:

But those who fall by the wayside, in thorns and on stony ground,

Are they like the seed-grain scattered by a careless hand around?"

But the Master was silent and mournful, and his brow was furrowed with thought,

And there lay on his soul a burden which Thomas the Doubter had wrought.

GOOD WORK.

W. F. Jamieson has aroused an interest in Shenandoah, Iowa, which has stirred the city from one end to the other, and the churches all against him, including the college. The Post says:

Shenandoah was a busy town Tuesday evening last. A crowd gathered in the City Hall to form a new building association in this city; at the Congregational church, Rev. Wickersham preached to a good congregation a week of prayer sermon; in the Knights of Labor hall, Prof. W. F. Jamieson spoke on "Objections to Freethought—Met and Refuted," to a good-sized audience; and the Free Methodist church was crowded with a large audience attending the revival there. This would indicate great mental activity in this community.

H. S. Holcomb, a live, earnest, Liberal, wrote to Mr. Jamieson to be sure to give at least a week to the Liberal work in Shenandoah. The Post again speaks of the result:

The mental, moral, and spiritual forces of this community were in a state of violent agitation this week, as they were affected with the week of prayer services and sermons, Prof. Jamieson's Freethought lectures; the stirring revivals in the Christian and Free Methodist churches; and the grandly impressive Odd Fellows Installation services. After all this, we ought to be a very wise and good community.

Mr. Jamieson's address is Shenandoah, Iowa.

B. F. UNDERWOOD will lecture at Denver February 3, and at Leadville from February 5 to 10 inclusive. He has just finished a course of lectures at Salt Lake City, and has spoken also at Provo City, Payson, Kaysville, Murray, Peoa, and Kamas, Utah.

ABOUT this time, when the bigots are agitating for a Sunday law, there should be a large circulation of Harry Hoover's "Sabbath Imposture." Price 10 cents; fifteen for $1.

FREETHOUGHT, published at San Francisco, Cal., by Macdonald & Putman, seems to be in a prosperous condition. It has just added to its dimensions, put on a new dress, and is filled with first-class Liberal literature. There was a great want for a good Liberal paper on the Pacific coast, and we are pleased to see the want so admirably filled. Every Liberal on the coast should subscribe for it.—Freethinkers' Magazine, Buffalo, New York.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - FEBRUARY 9, 1889

F. SCHUENEMANN-POTT and Samuel P. Putnam will address the citizens of Stockton next Sunday evening in regard to the Sabbath question and the union of church and state.

THE Freethinkers of New England held their Paine celebration in Paine Hall, Boston, and for the first time in fifty years Horace Seaver, editor of the Investigator, was unable to be present, by reason of sickness.

NEW YORK has a rebellious priest in Dr. McGlynn, and Detroit has one in Father Kolansinski, who has established an independent church. Kolansinski's congregation go with him, and all are declared excommunicated.

THERE is one consolation for Freethinkers. When the National Reform party and other bigots have put God in the Constitution and crowned Jesus Christ king of this nation, there will be no further petitions for Sunday laws and religious enactments. Then if people want anything of the administration they can consistently do nothing else but go down on their knees and pray for it.

A DAILY paper heads one column "Christ the Savior," being the report of a sermon. In an adjoining column is the caption, "Collins the Lamb," over the report of a court trial. To avoid misapprehension it is proper to state that while Savior and Lamb are one person by a conversion of reasonable human flesh into mutton, yet Christ and Collins cannot be made one individual by any confusion of substantives. This fact should be borne in mind and not permitted to escape the memory.

ONE section of the "Blair Sunday Rest Bill" provides that "no action shall lie for the recovery" of pay for service rendered or labor performed on Sunday," and when so paid, whether in advance or otherwise, the same may be recovered back by whoever shall first sue for the same." That is to say, after this bill shall have become a law, anybody may sue for the recovery back of salaries paid for service rendered on the first day of the week. Here is a chance for somebody to do a good business recovering the salaries of preachers, who render and perform almost their entire services on Sunday.

MR. A. D. CRIDGE lectured Sunday evening before the Single Tax society on "The Bible, the Church, and the Land Question," showing by quotations from the Bible that Henry George's theory is the true one. The fact that Mr. Cridge is a Freethinker does not lessen the force of a biblical argument upon his hearers, but it is rather remarkable for a speaker to attempt to prove a proposition that he believes in by other propositions in which he has no confidence whatever.

THE Examiner pointed out that the Mechanics' Pavilion, where the late revival was held, had not sufficient means of exit in case of fire. This was an underhanded attempt to draw popular attention from the danger from fire in another world, of which it is Mr. Moody's business to warn people. Let the Examiner take notice that if Christianity, which it professes to believe, is true, the subsequent home of the San Franciscan has a very wide entrance, no exits at all, and a most inefficient fire department, although conflagrations are perpetual.

A CORRESPONDENT inquires the origin of the legend "In God we trust," found upon the coins of the country. So far as we are informed, the inscription originated with the God-in-the-Constitution party, and first appeared on the coins in 1866. Under date of January 25, of that year, the Rev. Francis Vinton, writing to the Rev. T. P. Stevenson, secretary of the National Christian Association, said, "It is gratifying to observe the pious acknowledgment of God on the public coins." There was no legal authority for the innovation, except such as was vested in the mint master who struck the coins.

THE CALIFORNIA STATE LIBERAL UNION.

The convention of the Liberals of California was a representative gathering. The numbers and enthusiasm show the growth of advanced ideas. No national Congress has had better attended meetings. Without doubt, the audience at Tuesday evening's celebration was the largest in the country. From twelve to fifteen hundred people were present. At the first Paine celebration in this city, only forty-eight were present. Evidently we have come to a shining land-mark of progress. But the gain will count but little unless we go forward. We must not linger over the past, but strive for the future. With each success the demand becomes greater. The California State Liberal Union is organized to do something, and it is hoped that every Liberal will accomplish what he can. The first thing is to increase the list of membership. Two thousand, at least, should be upon the rolls. Over a thousand names were upon the call. These are practically members of the Union. Arrangements will at once be made to circulate copies of the articles of organization over the state so that signatures can be received at every point.

Arrangements also should be made throughout the state for lectures—especially upon the Sabbath question, which is now pending before the people and the legislature, and concerning which there should be unceasing agitation. Let every one interested see what can be done in his community. Have one, two, three, or more lectures if possible. By conferring at once, a series of lectures could be arranged throughout the state, so that time and travel might be economized to the best advantage. It costs so much for railroad expenses on a lecture tour embracing so large a territory as that of California that it is necessary it should be known immediately at what places lectures can be given, in order to map out a line of travel embracing the most points.

Where lectures can not be given on account of the fewness of Liberals and local resources, then contributions can be sent to the State Liberal Union to aid the work at important places. There are many places where lectures are not available at present. Let not, however, the Liberals of these places do nothing. Let them mass their forces, and have lectures at one or several strategic points under the auspices of the State Union. Sacramento, for instance, just now is the most important of these points. The State Sabbath bill this session will come before the legislature. It must be met by the power of public sentiment. Large popular meetings held at Sacramento will exert a great influence. Held under the auspices of the Union and representing the Liberal sentiment of the state, these meetings will have a much more than local effect. The Secular movement throughout the country will be advanced.

There will also be need of legislative work and the distribution of documents, and pamphlets treating on the question at issue should be sent to every member of the legislature. This can be done most effectually by the State organization.

The State organization is to exercise no authority whatsoever in regard to local action. That proceeds independently. But for general purposes there must be co-operation. This is the strength of the churches to-day. They join forces. In this matter of a Sabbath law they are joining hands. The Liberals must do the same thing. The alliance of the Turners with the Union is a matter of supreme importance, and through that alliance a great deal can be accomplished for the secularization of the state, and for freedom and progress. If all who are in sympathy with Liberalism will thus heartily unite there is no question of success.

The convention representing this fraternity of advanced thought opens glorious opportunities for work, and consolidation of forces. We look with pride upon the prestige which it gives to Freethought now, but in the growing future we seek the greatest result. A beginning has been made. We have struck hands; we know one another better. We can strike a heavy blow against superstition and tyranny. There is now not one but a thousand hands and hearts for Freethought and victory.

NEWS AND NOTES.

I had the pleasure of a sitting Saturday evening, the 2d inst., with Dr. L. Schlesinger, of the Carrier Dove. I wrote off the names of persons living and dead, upon paper. These were rolled up and placed in my hat and passed to the doctor under the table. He selected, out of all the names, the name of the dead person—also by the same process the relationship and the place of death. The operation to me was simply remarkable. I can not explain how it was done. I do not deny the phenomena which the medium declared were present to him, but the line of distinction between fact and opinion is very subtle. The phenomena are facts, but Spiritualism is still a theory, it is an explanation of facts—and as an explanation to me is not satisfactory. Dr. Schlesinger, however, is an able exponent of the theory and developer of the facts.

I was at Slater's on Sunday night. The hall was crowded. At least fifteen hundred people were present. It was an intelligent audience. How many were believers I don't know. Slater is a vivacious, dramatic, skillful delineator. Like Barnum, he is a clever showman, whatever the truth or falsity of his tests. He makes himself at home with his audience, and mingles amusements with solemnity. Good humor prevails, and as he says, "We come here not to have long faces, but the jolliest times possible." To the outsider the tests were quite astonishing, but possess no scientific value, for nothing was done but what might have been done by purely human means, and so long as I am persuaded that the dexterity of man can do these things I shall not believe that the spirits do them. According to the tenets of science, until the possibilities of all known causes have been exhausted there should be no resort to an absolutely new cause, especially a cause of such magnitude as that of a "world of spirits." Now the possibilities of human cleverness, dexterity, manipulation, magnetism, electricity, mind-reading, have not yet been exhausted, and therefore I shall stick to our living humanity as the source of the phenomena. It has not yet been demonstrated that living man can not do the phenomena ascribed to spirits, and until that demonstration comes there is no logical necessity of a resort to a superhuman cause.

It is a sign of the times that such vast numbers attend these seances. Spiritualism as compared with Christianity is a revolutionary and progressive force. Slaterism is opposed to Moodyism. It does not base itself on authority, but upon one's free judgment concerning facts. There is no appeal to fear. It is a genial enthusiasm. Slater in his lively prelude made a few telling thrusts against orthodox revivalism. Moody's doctrine is that if I don't believe just as he says, I'll be damned. Slater's doctrine is "Go as you please, you'll get there all the same."

RELIGION IN CALIFORNIA SCHOOLS.

California made a good move when it took the printing of school books into its own hands instead of letting some big firm of publishers get rich at the expense of the school children. But in the preparation of matter for text books care should be taken to stick to facts and to exclude statements for which there is no foundation. For instance, in one of the reading books used in this city, we find the following

CHRISTMAS HYMN.

"The aged man forgets his years,
The mirthful heart is doubly gay,
The sad are cheated of their tears,
For Christ the Lord was born to-day."

The wrong of teaching children this kind of fable comes from the fact that Christ is not the Lord, and never was, and that if he ever lived, there is no reason to believe that he was born on the 25th of December.

The introduction of this teaching in the schools is an official declaration by the state of California that Christ is the Lord and that Christmas is his birthday. In other parts of the Reader items of history relative to the state are given, and pupils are left to infer that what is said of Christ is as authentic as the genuine historical matter. In later years he will, of course, learn to separate mythology from history, but the mixing of the two is mischievous and worse than useless. What if the Reader should state that George Washington was born on the Fourth of July, 1776, and that under the administration of James G. Blaine he held the office of postmaster at Milpitas. So far as historical accuracy is concerned, the statement would be as correct as that quoted about Christ, but the pupil would have to unlearn it nevertheless.

We submit that even the state of California is not competent to decide that Christ was divine, or that he was born on the day when his alleged nativity is celebrated.

AN ANXIOUS INQUIRY.

We would like to inquire of the authorities by what right the sale of FREETHOUGHT is prohibited upon the streets of San Francisco. Boys with their arms full of other papers are permitted to vend their wares without molestation. Why should the old man whose only income is that derived from the sale of FREETHOUGHT be driven off the sidewalk by every ruffianly policeman he meets?

SAMPLE COPIES.

We send out with this week's paper a large number of sample copies of No. 5 of FREETHOUGHT, containing the report of the convention. If those who receive these samples will kindly subscribe, or distribute them to people likely to do so, our object in circulating them will be accomplished. Per year, $2.

The balance of $45.65 is Mr. S. P. Putnam's pay for a month's work in this city and Oakland—eight lectures in all. Others have worked hard for little or no reward, and the result in the magnificent meetings held shows what may be accomplished by endeavor on the part of a few and financial co-operation on the part of many.

THE Chronicle's attempt to illustrate the Liberal convention was successful from an artistic point of view, and the pictures were well executed, but the controversy over whom they were intended to represent is not settled to this day.

MR. HASSETT opens his reply to Fred. May Holland on the land question with the assertion that Mr. Holland's opinion is deserving of no respect. In this Mr. Hassett errs. Mr. Holland is a scholar and a thinker, and whatever he says on any subject is worthy of respectful consideration.

CARDINAL GIBBONS preached last Sunday to the 628 prisoners confined in the Maryland penitentiary at Baltimore, about four-fifths of whom, it is estimated, are Catholics. We base this estimate upon figures found in the Municipal Register of the San Francisco House of Correction. Of this institution there were, in 1886-7, 462 inmates—332 Catholics, 127 Protestants, and 3 classed as Infidels (presumably heathens). To carry the gospel to convicts is much like shipping coals to Newcastle.

THE beauties of the argument in favor of the California Sunday law were not all pointed out last week. The signers of the petition set forth that:

“Unless the Sabbath is observed, we [the signers, ladies of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union] are on the way to Spanish bull-fights after the Lord's Supper, and the riot and doom of Gomorrah in the end.”

It is not easy to imagine the Woman's Christian Temperance Union meeting to celebrate the Lord's Supper, and then adjourning to attend a bullfight, but if our legislators think they are likely to do it, they should act in the matter at once. “The riot and doom of Gomorrah” is even worse. Let us inquire what that riot was. We turn to holy writ, and find that the inhabitants of Gomorrah were guilty of unnamable vices. Are the ladies of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in earnest when they threaten to repeat the offenses of the Sodomites and Gomorrahites, unless the legislature passes a Sunday law? Is there not some sort of moral suasion that will induce them to refrain? If not, our legislators must arouse themselves to the fact that they are confronted by a great issue, and proceed accordingly.

DR. HARCOURT, of the Howard-street Methodist Episcopal church, wants a Sunday law, but no Puritanical Sabbath. He says:

"I do not believe in worshipping the Sabbath. Now, while I hold that it is a good thing for a man to go to church on the Lord's day, I would take away from no man his liberty of choosing his own way of spending this day of rest, while he interferes with no other man in his enjoyments. If he who is shut up six days in the office, the store, the factory, says, 'I love the country, the seaside, the fresh air, and I am going to spend my Sabbath there,' I do not blame him, but in my heart say, 'The Lord go with him.'"

This is exactly the kind of Sunday liberty the state enjoys at present, and Dr. Harcourt's argument entirely disproves his proposition that a Sunday law is needed. There was a pleasing incident in this reverend gentleman's last Sunday exercises. Speaking of the Puritans, he said: "I am glad they lived;" but before the enthusiasm aroused by this utterance had subsided he remarked, "I am also glad they are dead."

THE Pacific Coast agent of the National Sabbath Union is the Rev. Dr. A. J. Nelson, pastor of a Methodist church in this city. He claims fourteen millions of signers to the Sabbath petition. As sympathizers with the movement, the Rev. Mr. Nelson mentions the following persons and organizations:

Cardinal Gibbons,
President-elect Harrison,
National Committee on Education and Labor,
Knights of Labor,
Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers,
National Reform Association,
Woman's Christian Temperance Union,
The Christian Community generally.

There is no way of determining the number of signers to the Sabbath petitions, but the dispatches from Washington state that every Congressman's desk is loaded with them. General Harrison is in a compromising position. He has allowed his name to be used as vice-president of the Sabbath Union, without protest. Meanwhile anti-Sabbath petitions are being numerous signed, but if they prove unavailing with Congress, there is still some hope left that when the proposed amendment comes before the people of the country, it may be defeated. With Sunday laws in all but two states of the Union, however, that hope may be small; for if the people will submit to state Sabbath enactments why should they vote against a national law? Taking one consideration with another, the outlook is uncertain.

RENEWALS.

This is the season for renewals, and we are reminded of that fact both by the large number sent in and by the large number that have not as yet reached us. We have had a year's trial before a jury of our patrons. The verdict, which will come in the form of renewals, is due. We trust that the jury will be unanimously in favor of giving us another year.

OBSERVATIONS.

Life has been worth living, regardless of expense, during the past month. I have attended about a dozen meetings, and heard a good many eloquent addresses from the platform, but the platform addresses, in point of absorbing interest, in some respects fell behind those delivered here in the office. We have had many visitors. The first man to arrive from the country was Captain Campbell, of Marshfield, Oregon. He was at every meeting. Then came Mr. John E. Jones from Round Valley, Inyo county. His hair and beard are white as frost, but he is the picture of bodily and mental vigor. Mr. Jones met here Mr. Owen T. Davies, of Brighton, whom he had lost trace of for thirty-eight years. Both are from Wales; both have been members of the Mormon church; both rebelled against the authority of Brigham Young, and left Utah at the risk of being shot. Each has achieved a competence, and it would be hard to say which is a Freethinker the greater number of hours in the day. Their meeting here was an incident that neither of them will ever care to forget.

N. D. Goodell, of Sacramento, was present for a day. I wish he could have stayed longer. He is a veteran whose services entitle him to a rest, but I don't see how we could spare him from the army. Perhaps he likes the armor, for he keeps it on, and is always ready for a new campaign.

W. F. Freeman, of Stockton, is another old-timer. He sees all the difficulties ahead, but welcomes every new sign of advance. He works so quietly, and does so much without making any noise, that I have to refer to the subscription list to realize that he has sent in a subscriber for nearly every week of the past year.

With due respect to my esteemed partner, I wish Judge J. W. North, of Oleander, had accepted the office of president of the California State Liberal Union. I never knew a man who I thought was better fitted for a president of this or any other Union, whether of individuals or of states. He is one whose counsel is sought by those needing good advice in large affairs. He reminds me of the man whom we used to call the Nes or of Liberalism in the East—Elizur Wright. As first vice-president his wisdom will have much to do with shaping the course of Liberalism in this state.

I thought to make a list of the visitors at the office and to say something about each one, but as I count the list it extends to such length that I have to give it up. Otherwise I would like to outline my impressions of them all. There is Mr. R. F. Grigsby, of Napa, a hearty, jovial man. He was at the dance, and though he did not participate, he purchased two tickets—one so he could see Mr. Putnam dance, and one so that Mrs. Grigsby might enjoy the same spectacle. He says it was the best investment he ever made. Mr. Philip Cowen, of Petaluma, is also on the list. He is a twinkling-eyed philosopher who points every moral with a good story. Also Messrs. Pepper and Parker, of the same place. Mr. Pepper has a philanthropic plan on foot to donate to the state a valuable tract of land for a non-sectarian school for boys. He is quiet and sedate. Mr. Parker is also a worker at all times and places. A staid Vermonter, nothing suits him better than a dance, which he moves through with an accuracy unknown to modern schools. I should say something about Mr. G. W. Thurston, who maintains, with an eloquence which I always applaud, that in no age or country has there ever been produced so great a man as Thomas Paine. Mr. Thurston worked hard for the Convention. He distributed thousands of circulars, and advertised it in the highways and by-ways by word of mouth. There is no estimating the value of his services in a hundred different ways. Though a man of austere self-respect, I have no doubt he would have been willing to make a sandwich of himself and walk the streets bearing a placard before and behind, if such a proceeding were necessary to the success of the meetings. I give great credit to such workers, and all the more freely because it is a kind of honor which I have not the heart to achieve.

There was present through the convention one figure toward which my eyes always turned with sorrowful sympathy. This was W. S. Rodgers, of Boulder Creek. He sat apart and alone most of the time, thinking, I suppose, of the wife who but a week ago, back among the giant redwoods of Santa Cruz, had lain down to that sleep in which all who find it rest forever undisturbed. Mr. Rodgers told me about the twelve years he and his wife lived together, growing every year into better understanding and a deeper love; watching over their children, and having no misgivings except that one of these children might be taken from them. They never worried about the possibility of either of the parents going first, until the shock came. "Before this," said Mr. Rodgers, "I thought that the world was a good one to live in; that, on the whole, there was more of joy than of sorrow. But now I don't know. A thing like this offsets all the pleasures of life. I am lost and desolate." I could say nothing. I never heard a word spoken that could lessen grief—it wears itself out at length. Belief in a meeting hereafter is no solace. Looking back upon the associations of the past, and forgetting that they cannot be renewed, may furnish momentary relief, but the grave is here, and no man has looked into what is beyond it.

It is hoped that we shall hear often from the Hon. Abraham Schell through the press and platform. His address on Thomas Paine merited the encomiums it received, which were many. There are not enough men like Mr. Schell, wealthy, talented, influential, and at the same time fearless of consequences, and perfectly independent. Those who would like to read Mr. Schell's address will find it in the Carrier Dove of February 2.

There are a number whom circumstances prevented from attending these meetings. We all wanted to see Mr. John McGlashan, of Ukiah, as well as Thomas McCowan of the same place, and John Robinett, of Nipomo. Likewise Mr. Vostrovsky and Samos Parsons and Mr. and Mrs. Schwartz, and the ex-Rev. Ravlin, and others from San Jose. Everybody was inquiring for Ranford Worthing, of San Diego. We should have been glad to see the Parkers, of Anaheim; Alf Burgess, of National City, and H. L. Shaug, of Del Mar. If Robert Gunther had left his island at Eureka and been with us, he would have received a hearty welcome, as would hundreds of others whom I call to mind without mentioning their names.

Somebody who attended the Paine celebration carried away an overcoat that belonged to Dr. Franz Kuckein, of 315 Geary street. Its early return is solicited.

The sonorous voice of Prof. D. C. Seymour being impaired by a cold, the full benefit of his address was not enjoyed except by those near the platform. It is said that when his vocal organs are in good order, he makes the firmament resound. Professor Seymour came all the way from Tulare county to attend the convention.

Members of the clerical profession who indorse the sentiments enunciated in the following memorial should issue it in blank form for circulation:

To the Honorable, the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

GREETING AND BENEDICTION: Your Honorable Body (or Bodies) is (or are) doubtless aware that a Bill under the name and title of the "Blair Sunday Rest Bill" is now pending before your Honorable Body (or Bodies) providing for the prohibition of all Secular work upon the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday.

Now we, citizens of the United States, having reached (and some of us passed) the age of discretion, would solemnly move that the said Bill be amended, before passage, by striking out the word "Secular."

And for the following reasons: We, who comprise a large body of citizens (forming a profession), known as priests, preachers, dominies, sky-pilots, and ministers of the gospel, by the provisions of the said Bill, as it now reads, would be wholly deprived of the blessings of the proposed legislation.

It is notorious that we, members of the aforesaid sacred profession, numbering some 80,000, many of us moral, are now, habitually, in a most shameful manner, compelled by our employers to perform services upon the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, in the way of preaching, praying, and reading hymns, to the utter disregard of the Lord's day, to the total demoralization of the community, and to the manifest peril of our souls.

On that day when all nature sleeps, when rivers forget to run down to the sea, when mankind rest (and womankind if they get a chance), when the gin-mill is accessible only by means of the side entrance, shall we, respectable (and often moral) citizens of this republic, be forced by a tyrannical congregation to work ourselves into a copious perspiration hammering the cover off the word of God? In the name of home and foreign missions, we protest.

Let us have a United States Sabbath, when no citizen under the bright shadow of the Ship of State and the broad ægis of the American fundamagoozlum, shall be compelled to earn the sweat of his brow by labor performed upon the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday.

We are excited and we mean business. Give us a rest, and pray that we may give you one.

In the bowels of Christ, THE CLERGY OF THE U. S.

I made some off-hand remarks a few weeks ago about Moses Hull, editor of New Thought, in which I gave sundry scraps of his history as I knew it. I relied on the charity of Mr. Hull to say nothing about mine, and I am pleased to see that my confidence was not misplaced. Mr. Hull says that he will wait until I am six feet underground before throwing the bright light of publicity upon my career. That suits me, because what is said of a person after the funeral cannot hurt his feelings, but it was a narrow escape; and as the lightning of good luck seldom strikes twice in the same place I am not going to tempt fate any further. Therefore I shall have nothing to say of the way Mr. Putnam and some others danced at the Paine celebration. They might retaliate. He received a bouquet when he was on the platform, and a good deal of applause at one time and another all through the convention; and then, when the dancing came on, he took the belle of the ball for a partner, and got an ovation. There are some people who would take the earth as a matter of course if it should be offered to them. I thought the best dancing was done by Mr. Thurston. He had a stand where he sold books, and when the spirit caught him he came in front of the table and danced a solemn breakdown, afterwards returning to his former position and resuming business. The incident remains in my mind with more distinctness than any other I can now recall.

I have received the following letter:

NEW YORK, January 27, 1889.

DEAR SIR: In the valuable paper you publish I have seen the "Sinaloa Colony Club" mentioned. If it is possible will you be so kind as to let me know something about that organization? What is the object? Are they Liberals? Are they Spiritualists? Yours for truth and Liberalism, 234 East 59th street. GEORGE KORNACHER.

The Sinaloa Colony Club is a body of people residing at or near San Francisco, who feel an interest in the co-operative experiment being made at Topolobampo, state of Sinaloa, Mexico, and who meet once a month to hear news from the colony. The club has some forty or fifty members. H. W. Faust, 618 Harrison street, San Francisco, is president. The members are Freethinkers, many of them being subscribers of FREETHOUGHT. Some are Spiritualists, some Christians; others Anarchists, Socialists, or Communists. Some of the members have faith in the ultimate success of Topolobampo as a co-operative colony; others are not so hopeful, but all are interested in the experiment.

I had the pleasure of attending the meeting of this club last Sunday, at 39 Fourth street. There were about fifty persons present, the majority of whom spoke the German language. The proceedings consisted of reading of letters from Topolobampo and other points; a general discussion of the question of co-operation, and the payment of dues. Before the meeting dispersed it was photographed by Mr. Otto Sinz, with the best-looking people in the center. Mr. Putnam and myself were on the outskirts. Further particulars may be obtained of President Faust, or of John W. Lovell, 14 Vesey street, New York. M.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Joaquin Miller has presented the city of Oakland with fifteen acres of land to be used as a public park.—The Young Men's Christian Association of Petaluma, Cal., after a brief struggle of three or four months, has disbanded and sold its property at auction.—A swindler calling himself J. C. Morris visited Oakland a few days ago and induced a number of ministers to advance him from $10 to $25 each for the purchase of cheap clothing. The Oakland ministers thus far known to have been swindled are Revs. Gray, Sturtevant, Atkinson, Chapman, Penny, Merrill, Fleenor, and Hobart. The fellow got the money and never appeared again, but he sent the ministers a few yards of cheap goods in return for their cash.—The opening of the new railroad extension from Ukiah to Cloverdale is promised for March 1. It is now open between Cloverdale and Hopland.—A bill providing for an $80,000 lighthouse at the mouth of Sinslaw river, Oregon, has been favorably reported to Congress.—There were 114 deaths in San Francisco last week against 146 for the corresponding week in 1888.—The Sharon will case is up again for adjudication in Judge Sullivan's court. There is an injunction on the plaintiffs forbidding them to reopen the case, and all who take part in it are liable to arrest. It is a queer matter as it stands.—A grove of 30,000 orange trees is to be planted near Pomona, says the Chronicle.—Commissioner Wright, of the Department of Labor, at Washington, has submitted a report which relates entirely to the subject, "Working Women in Great Cities." The average weekly earnings by cities shows that women in San Francisco get the highest, with $6.91, and Richmond, Va., the lowest, $3.93. The average weekly wages, computing all the cities examined, is $5.24.—The defunct Archbishop Alemany left $15,000 worth of property in San Francisco, which he wills to the Dominicans.—The exhibition car, "California on Wheels," now at Chicago, has been visited to date by 73,000 people, and the enterprise is proving so pronounced a success that it has been decided to keep it on the road for six months instead of three. Time will thus be allowed for a very thorough tour through the New England and Southern Atlantic States. Further than this, a proposition will be made at the next meeting of the Executive Committee of the State Board to transfer the exhibit, thoroughly renovated of course, to England, there to make a tour which shall include the rural districts as well as the cities.

It is authoritatively stated that upon retiring from the presidency Mr. Cleveland will practice law in New York, having already associated himself with a firm of lawyers in that city.—The general car-drivers' strike in New York and Brooklyn is attended with collisions between the strikers and the police, and some blood has been shed. On Monday no cars were moving in Brooklyn.—The legislature of Nebraska has agreed to submit to the people of the state a constitutional amendment providing for either high license or total prohibition.—Property worth $3,000,000 was destroyed by fire in Buffalo, N. Y., February 3.—Pennsylvania is expected soon to vote upon a prohibitory amendment to its constitution.—The Supreme Court of Pennsylvania has released John W. Keely, of motor fame, from custody. Keely was some time ago committed by the Court of Common Pleas for contempt in refusing to explain the workings of his motor to experts appointed by the court. Judge Paxson, in discharging Keely, concluded that the order of the court commanding Keely to exhibit and explain his motor was prematurely made because the case was not fairly at issue.

The New York Herald publishes a London edition, and all the newspaper men of the world's metropolis are agitated by the magnitude of American enterprise.—A police inspector was killed at Gweedore, county Donegal, Ireland, last Sunday, while in the act of arresting a priest.—There is but slight danger of war between this country and Germany over the Samoan question. Things have cooled off visibly within the past week.—Crown Prince Rudolph, of Austria, was shot dead last week by a man whose wife he had seduced.—Fourteen persons were killed and fifty injured, fifteen fatally, by a railway accident in Belgium, on Sunday.—It is stated that Sir Julian Paunceforte will be appointed British Minister to the United States.—William O'Brien, the Irish editor and agitator, was lodged in jail Jan. 31, to undergo his four months' sentence. He refused to remove his clothing and don the prison garb. The wardens did it by force, after a fierce struggle. His beard was shaved off in the same way. The struggle so exhausted him that the wardens thought he was going to die, and summoned a priest.—The Rev. Arthur Cornyn was found dead in his study at Strathboy, Ont., February 1, with a bullet hole in his head. It is not known whether it was an accident or suicide.

THOMAS PAINE.

[A poem read by S. P. Putnam at the Paine Celebration in San Francisco.]

Forward the hero presses to bold strife;
Ready to venture still his dearest life
For that which makes the world most good and fair;
Ready for man and truth to do and dare.

O heroes shining on the ways of time,
Valiant and strong, resplendent and sublime,
How the wide world is lighted with your fame,
Touched by the wonders of your spirit's flame.

'Tis ye that harnessed forces wild and rude;
Before the secret wealth of chaos stood
And wrenched the crown that each and all may wear—
The sovereign glory that the weakest share.

And ye have trod the land of Greece elate,
Fronted the beast and scorned the tyrant's hate;
Built in the glowing air the city's pride,
And o'er the tossing seas new lands descried.

Fair Italy hath been your bounteous home;
Sweet inspirations from its heavenly dome
Have made you strong as the Olympian gods—
Your blood has nourished its immortal sods.

England has been your glory and your woe;
There have ye suffered, quenched your lightnings' glow,
Amid the shadows of the scaffold grim;
There have ye perished with your hope still dim.

O heroes, many are your words and deeds,
Throbbing in sword, in lyre, in bitterest needs
Of cruel war, in artist's fire divine,
In him who flung the plummet and the line.

And in this band, amid the foremost throng,
Worthy the poet's ardor and his song,
In star-like majesty, o'er bigot's bane,
We welcome and we honor Thomas Paine.

O royal soul! O reckless genius grand!
Spurning thy safety, quick to give thy hand
To truth and freedom; where they led the way
Still wouldst thou follow, though all thundered nay.

O beautiful the hope that poured its star
In this new world, across the ocean's bar;
Glittering against the dark of ancient years
Man's way seemed opening into golden spheres.

Yet still the tyrant's chain and minions ruled,
And olden custom the weak heart befuddled,
And Liberty went stumbling, blind, though strong—
Men feared to break the fetters linked so long.

Until the master mind the secret blazed;
Out-rayed the new, and the old structure razed;
Rung the glad word that launched the future's weal;
Flung wide the doors with magical appeal.

O flag we love, that floats upon the air
In constellated glory, ever fair,
With streaks of ruddy dawn and flashing light—
Of human hope the emblem broad and bright—

Tossing and heaving over land and sea
As if the heart of heaven out-bloomed in thee.
O happy flag! the grandest in thee wrought
Was born of Thomas Paine's far-reaching thought.

And when the storm of revolution rolled
O'er wretched France, he was the leader bold
Who, 'mid the tumult, saw the eternal right;
He fought the despot, but with justice' might.

For when the unshackled hand would slay the king,
As if he too were but a senseless thing,
Brave Paine defended him though dungeon's gloom
And death itself appeared his certain doom.

Despot and slave have rights no law can take,
No crime can strip of and no fortune shake;
And for these rights Paine dared to speak, to die,
Not for a friend alone—but enemy.

Still more than this; he saw the deadly hold
Of superstition, and the darkness rolled
Upon the mind of man by holy lies;
The stupid incense rising to the skies.

And though the wisest dared not speak their mind,
So deeply did the cruel fetters bind,
Yet Paine, the bravest, struck the blow that still,
With sweep of ages, hath new power to kill.

He hath been cursed, he will be blest to-day,
For truth and freedom make their conquering way.
Truth may be harsh, but it is joy sublime;
Lie e'en for virtue, and it is a crime.

All honor, then, to him whose faithful pen
Made truth so homely, yet so rich to men.
He would not write like courtier or a slave,
And so the priesthood cursed him to his grave.

But 'tis not ended yet; the battle cry
Is sounding on, the flag floats in the sky.
Falsehood is losing all its charms and power—
Flees with the night and dreads the morning's hour.

Forward we look and greet the happy years
That, garlanded with truth, dispel our fears
And make us patient 'spite the wrongs we see,
For they must vanish, many though they be.

But while we gather hope and fresh delight,
And walk with bounding step to some new height;
While cheering prospects open far and wide,
Melting to glory in the still untried,

Let us think dearly of the wondrous past,
Its life flows with us—with our fate is cast.
It is an impulse most divine and high,
In heart, brain, muscle, skill, and energy.

The past hath gifted us with mighty prize,
Out of its toils, its pains, and agonies,
And as we gaze upon its silent years,
Sinking before the brilliance that appears

From the far quickening bosom of to-day,
Amid its stars that shine with vivid ray,
Flooding our path with still uncounted gain,
Is the heroic, noble, splendid, Paine.

THE SILVERTON CELEBRATION.

Yesterday your correspondent drove twelve miles through the Oregon mud, to the little city of Silverton, to attend the Paine celebration of the Silverton Secular Union. Readers of FREE-THOUGHT will remember that the great "Christian champion," when he was around here last fall, loudly proclaimed the death of this Union, and even went so far as to preach it a funeral sermon in Silverton. But that institution has proved a very lively corpse, having had another "funeral" on Christmas (when their hall failed to hold all the people who came), and another yesterday evening, when some two hundred people were present, notwithstanding the bad condition of the roads.

The exercises consisted of a couple of short addresses, music, recitations, singing, more recitations, and music. They do these matters up in shape in Silverton (at least the Seculars do), and the audience appeared to be duly appreciative.

After exhausting the programme, the president announced that the "obsequies" would be repeated one year hence; and the hall chairs were then moved to one side, and those who chose proceeded to trip the light fantastic. It isn't everybody who can dance at their own "funeral," and keep it up year after year.

The dancing festivities were elegant, refined, and in good style. The music was superb; and altogether the scene as it appeared from the stage (where your correspondent sat, with other old "sinners") was sufficient to have given the average orthodox preacher the horrors.

The Silverton Secular Union is in good shape, and prospering. The result of the Underwood-Braden debate is all that they could reasonably desire, and Liberals all over the country are well pleased. The orthodox will never repeat the experiment here. Their "champion" has departed for pastures new, and

ROME AND THE SCHOOLS.

[From an address by Mrs. Scott Briggs at the San Francisco Paine Celebration.]

We are here to-night not so much to honor an individual, as to pay respect to that cause and those principles he so well illustrated, and through and by which the world is better off to-day. The one great principle of his life, illustrated in all his writings, and by his every act, was Liberty; liberty for man, liberty for woman, liberty for child. The personality of our being demands the freest exercise of thought and action in harmony with Liberty. There can be no true liberty with that man or woman who is bound down by a creed. Where patristic authority takes the place of reason, the grandest gift to man; where the priest or the church or the creed binds the consciences of men, they are slaves to that extent. Yet, in his encyclical letter, Leo XIII. has the effrontery to propose that "the state must profess some one religion, and the Catholic being that which alone is true, should be professed, preserved, and protected by the state; and false doctrines should be diligently repressed by public authority." "I anathematize," continues the pope, "all who maintain the liberty of the press, and all advocates of the liberty of speech, which is the liberty of perdition. The absurd and erroneous doctrines, or ravings, in defense of liberty of conscience, are a most pestilential error—a pest of all others most to be dreaded in the state. I anathematize those who assert the liberty of conscience, and of religious worship, and all such as maintain that the church may not employ force."

Is it not time, men and women, that we awaken to the necessity of keeping in our minds the Declaration of Independence, and the principles which the one we meet to honor taught? Would it not be well to have the time that is now occupied reading the Bible in our schools given to teaching our children the principles he set forth? Do you realize the successful endeavor of a Catholic board to Romanize the literature of the public schools of Boston? If so, arouse to action, and with voice and pen, as did Thomas Paine, strike ecclesiasticism blows full in the face. Strike it with all the force and energy engendered by the knowledge that the Jesuits of the Boston school board have driven truthful history out of the public schools of Boston, and substituted in its place false history; they have driven out every standard, authentic, and truthful history of any part of the Christian world, or era of Christian civilization, that is not colored in the interests of the papacy and the church of Rome.

In the history in use by the Boston school board, containing four hundred and twenty-nine pages, thirty lines are devoted to the life of Abraham Lincoln, and forty to Archbishop Hughes; twenty-eight to George Washington, and thirty-seven to Father Peter de Smet. All that is truthful in history, that does not redound to the glory of the Roman church, is suppressed. Rome has let loose its Jesuits upon our common schools, with the deliberate intention of destroying them. Witness the following facts: In the city of Brooklyn, where, thirty years ago, there were only 35 parochial schools, there are now 90. In the city of Manchester, N. H., there are more children attending the parochial schools than the public. In Chicago, one year ago, the schools were closed for Good Friday. These facts indicate clearly the efforts being made throughout the land.

THE LIBERAL SPIRITUALISTS.

The Liberal Spiritualists meet every Thursday evening in Fraternity Hall, 909½ Market street. On Thursday evening, January 24, the exercises were of unusual interest. Our commodious hall was well filled with that class of earnest souls who fully appreciate a live subject and good speaking and singing. The meeting was called to order by our affable chairman Mr. A. A. Stout, and opened with vocal music by a trio consisting of Mrs. Rutter, Mrs. Cook, and Mr. Ely; Mrs. F. B. Stout, pianist. The solo singing by Misses Margie and Nettie Cohn was fully appreciated.

Mr. S. P. Putman delivered an address upon the subject, "Is Christianity a Failure?" Mr. Putman is a clear and logical reasoner, and speaks with earnestness, pathos, and power, eliciting repeated and well-merited applause. The speaker reviewed Christianity from the time of Constantine down through the ages, until the Christian church had been divided and subdivided into nearly five hundred different sects, proving that its pathway had been deluged with human blood. Mr. Putman held the audience spellbound for about one hour, and his closing words were heartily cheered by the audience.

The chairman then called on our well-known friend Mr. C. Fair for a short speech. We regret not having space to report these speeches in full. Every Thursday evening the meetings are held at this hall.—Carrier Dove.

A SECULAR REVIVAL IN MINNESOTA.

For some time Brother Marlett, whose duties take him to Minneapolis every week, has been on a still hunt for Liberals to inaugurate a Secular society in that city, and he discovered a number who were finally drawn together and became enthusiastic for organization. Foremost among them was John Maddock, a stalwart Freethinker, physically and intellectually, and who, I heard, held down the ministers of Minneapolis, through the press, occasionally hiring a hall or opera house to reply to some particularly erroneous or malicious sermonizer.

Messrs. Greaves and Lownd, both bright, intelligent business men, took hold of the question with enthusiasm, and their importing and jobbing house, on Nicollet avenue, has been alive with Liberal work. Partners and half brothers, they are one in sympathy with the American Secular Union, and propose to firmly plant the standard of Universal Mental Liberty in the fairest city in Minnesota.

Some preliminary meetings having been held, and Brother Marlett offering to secure my transportation over the Wisconsin Central line, so that I could more thoroughly explain the attitude, purpose, and object of the American Secular Union, an invitation was sent, to which I gladly responded.

Friday night, the 18th, we whirled out of Chicago, and I found to my surprise that the Wisconsin Central can boast of as creditably equipped a road as any in the Northwest, although it has only been in operation two years.

Yesterday afternoon we passed through St. Paul en route to Minneapolis, and the first thing to attract my attention was the fur overcoats in which men were attired, giving them the appearance of perambulating bears, or stuffed buffalo robes out on masquerade. The children, even, wore toboggan suits on the streets.

As it is seldom you obtain a favorable impression of a city from the railway tracks, I charitably kept that fact in mind in reference to St. Paul. High on one promontory could be discerned the palatial residence of some magnate, whose towers, like minarets, ambitiously pointed upward; but looking down, your eyes meet the "flats"—a sort of scooped-out gully—where shanties seem to have been thrown with particular regard to promiscuity. No two stand at the same angle. The inhabitants, I understand, pay $1 per month for the ground rent, and throw up their own shanties, which appear more like pig-pens than habitations for human beings.

A short ride, and we are in Minneapolis—a modern marvel—a city scarce more than a score of years old—a young suburban stripling, which has far eclipsed in progress its ancient saintly sister, but the saints are generally getting left, so that St. Paul cannot expect to be made an exception.

We had little time to more than take supper and get shaved (as no barber is permitted to compete with the Minneapolis ministers in shaving the public on Sunday), before the business meeting in the handsome parlors of the Eastman block.

Brother Greaves being secretary of an association which meets here, he secured these luxurious quarters for the Liberals. A handsome silk flag was nailed above a gilt cross, signifying the Secular Union motto.

Here, among those assembled, we met an old acquaintance, W. G. H. Smart, formerly of Boston, who has been in a sort of monastic retirement in Dakota for the past four years, one of the ablest writers on economics I have known. Readers of the Index, Investigator, and other Liberal journals will well remember him. He responded to the call for secular workers. Mr. Geo. Davis, author of a new theory on the origin of "Life and Species, and their Distribution," was there to be enrolled.

Dr. and Mrs. Van Damm were active participants in the formation of the society, and are Liberals of a highly intellectual order.

Mr. Curtis, who acted as temporary secretary, is one of the grand old guard of the Liberal League, as is also Mr. Macomber, whose years have impaired neither his health, mind, nor enthusiasm. Years ago he shook up the judges of this city by refusing to swear, and the agitation which followed doubtless resulted in the favorable law which Minnesota has since adopted. Mr. West was formerly a reader of the Truth Seeker, which accounts both for his interest and heresy. I was also introduced to a young Mr. Stevens, who, I hope, will to some extent follow my example.

Mrs. John Maddock is an earnest, cordial, motherly matron, anxious that her two charming daughters—whom I will name Artemis and Aphrodite, as I know no others—shall learn something of the moral lesson of nature, from which there is little fear they will ever backslide. They are brimful of brilliance and vivacity.

By some misapprehension, the committee on whom devolved the duty of reporting a name, constitution, etc., had reported in favor of naming the organization the "Radical Club."

However, after a brief exhortation, showing the demand of a national organization to combat the encroachments of church and state, the committee magnanimously and unanimously withdrew their report, and the Secular Society of Minneapolis, a regularly chartered auxiliary of the American Secular Union, with by-laws and constitution drawn up in accordance therewith, was soon an accomplished fact. The meeting remained to a late hour and listened to the secretary, who, in an informal manner, related what the national organization had accomplished in the past, what it was doing now, and the work it had outlined for the future.

The next day Brothers Maddock, Lownd, Marlett, and the writer dined at the Windsor, where I learned some of the remarkable history of Brother Maddock, which would furnish ample material for a first-class romance, as fact is, after all, stranger than fiction. When a boy in his teens he was on a British transport before Sebastopol, and helped to carry the wounded to and from the hospital at Scutari. After that he was in the British naval service, and has seen nearly every country and every clime on the globe, affording opportunities for personal observation and comparison, which are a rich mine of wealth to the person of active mind. He still believes that truth ever sails to windward.

As an afternoon lecture had been arranged I had the pleasure of greeting Bro. H. C. Draver, whom we appointed as the executive member for Minnesota, and who had come down from Stillwater. Brother Draver is a young man of unusual intellectual attainments, a graduate of the Freethinkers' Academy at Milwaukee, and thoroughly alive to the secular interests. As a clerk in a large manufacturing institution he is doubtful that he can spare the time for the duties, but his desire is good. I had intended to give my lecture on Romanism, but, by request, gave "Reasons in Refutation of a Personal Creator," at which Mr. Maddocks presided. I prefaced my remarks, however, with the attitude of the American Secular Union, and gave those present to understand those were not necessarily the views Secularists were expected to subscribe to, as that organization, outside the Nine Demands, represented no special beliefs, but the rights of all.

The leading paper of Minneapolis, the Tribune, devoted a column to the lecture.

The Tribune's report of the evening lecture was both cordial and complimentary, and it is evident that one paper in Minneapolis is beyond the pale of bigotry and prejudice; or, I should say, its reporter is.

Quite a number responded to the speaker's invitation to join the Secular Union, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Brockman, the latter of whom I had the pleasure of meeting in Chicago; also, Mr. Corbett, with whom I had corresponded. The audience very generally came forward to sign a protest to the Blair Sunday bill.

Bright and early Monday morning Mr. Maddock drove up to the hotel to show me the glories of Minneapolis, and when Brother Lownd had invested me in a fur-lined overcoat, it was concluded I was like Ajax, ready to defy the elements. It was gray, frosty, and misty, and it required no great stretch of the imagination to conjure up phantoms of Ossian's heroes doing battle in the heavy-hanging snow-clouds, or seeking fir-trees for spears, under the ghostly guidance of some Fingal of the North.

I paid no attention to streets or location as we drove past beautiful temples of superstition, massive marts of trade, the finest hotel (said to be) in this country, and palatial residences where, twenty years ago, the wolves in plenty prowled, and possibly nightly howled. When Mr. Maddock went there nineteen years ago, only a few shanties occupied the splendid main avenue, with a drive as fine as a boulevard. The residences being erected are particularly fine—largely of the castellated order, having towers and turrets, miniature battlements and embrasures.

Can the imagination take in a panoramic generalization from the landing of the persecuted and persecuting Pilgrims on the rock-bound coast of Plymouth—men who fled from death at the gibbet by religious persecution, whose spirits are to-day manifest in this grand marvel of the western world? How little these Pilgrims knew—in spite of blue-laws or witch-burning—that the great broadening continent, stretching out thousands of miles, would, through that great underlying law—necessity—sweep away their tenets as they would have swept out cobwebs. The stroke of the first axe made by willing but unskilled hands foretold the aggressive efforts of man the conqueror. The clearing of the way for this westward empire made man more and more conscious of his powers and capacities.

We halt on one side of the mighty Mississippi, whose voice and motion is very pacific, and my worthy guide endeavors to explain how this great river has been harnessed up to do in never-ending toil the work of these vast flour mills. Another mill-race is being made, so we look into the rocky cavity, which suggests Byron's lines:

"To gaze on the torrent that thundered beneath."

As this was not the great Pillsbury mill, Brother Maddock, who holds the responsible position of purchasing agent of this vast institution, the greatest milling interest in the world, hastened me over the river, to the A mill, claimed to be the eighth wonder of the world, because it grinds about 10,000,000 bushels yearly; has a capacity of 7,000 barrels daily; makes more flour than any two mills on the globe; could feed two cities as large as New York; and that 200 cars are required every day to take wheat into and flour and offal out of the three great mills of Chas. A. Pillsbury & Co., whose combined capacity is daily 10,000 barrels.

I was astounded to learn that wheat ground in this mill goes through 175 different processes. Brother Maddock took me from floor to floor, explained minutely the machinery, but the building itself was so filled with a continuous, monotonous, subdued whirring sound, that I could comprehend little of what was said. He showed me the turbine wheels, the power gearing, the conveyors, separators, cyclone sifters, bolters, and every conceivable device, but when I got through I couldn't tell whether I was a sifter, a conveyor, a separator, or a grinder, or what not, but the whirr, whirr, was omnipresent. Machinery, to my mind, is very much of a muddle.

Out of a trap-door at the roof we went to behold the beautiful city at our feet, but I considerably refrained from concocting any scheme to carry it back to Chicago, and left the whole business untouched for the Minnesotans. They may consider it a narrow escape, especially the owner of a fur-lined coat.

One marvel of the mills I should have mentioned was that everything seems to work automatically. They have an automatic fire-service which will deluge the floors whether any one is in the building or not. Elevator doors close automatically, machinery fills the sacks and barrels, and the only labor left for hand-work is nailing up the barrel heads, and the way they do it is wonderful. Fast as the eye can follow the hammer, down goes a nail, and one stroke is enough. Great skill and accuracy is attained in this.

I regretfully learned that Fort Snelling was only five miles distant, and as Major Forwood was stationed there, I felt doubly sorry I could not meet one of our vice-presidents.

At 1:15 my train was ready, and though the opera-house was burning down as we passed through the city of the saint, I could not stop to save it, as the Paine anniversary was fast approaching, and various important work was awaiting. Well pleased with my visit, I hope that Minneapolis Liberals will present an unflinching, undaunted front, and that besides the pleasant memories of my sojourn, a grand purpose shall have been given a splendid impetus.

THE SINGLE TAX.

An opinion, to be of value, should evidence some familiarity with the subject under discussion. The opinion of Fred. May Holland (FREETHOUGHT, January 12) is lacking in every essential that would entitle it to respect. Mr. Holland can best parallel himself by advocating, under the title of Cleveland's delusion, the right of freedom in trade, using as his own the arguments that swarm thick in Democratic campaign literature, and charging Cleveland with the proposition that "a tariff is not a tax." The fact that he wrote "by request" does not lessen the offense of his exposure.

In a criticism of the theories of Henry George we are led to infer that George is lame, because he overlooked certain notorious facts: that men differ widely in natural fitness of mind and body; that poverty cannot be agitated out of existence; that it is no more possible to make all men equally comfortable than equally tall; that the man whose talents are useful to the race should not be robbed of his just reward for the support of his idle neighbor; that confiscation without compensation is robbery; that government monopoly of land is inadvisable; that there should be no sacrifice of individual liberty. Now these are fundamental propositions with Henry George, as Mr. Holland will confirm after a careful reading of the writings he mentions by name, in which they are repeatedly affirmed, almost word for word.

All wealth is the result of the application of labor upon land. The distribution of this unit, wealth, is to wages and rent. One increases as the other decreases. The landowner, as a landowner, cannot in any sense be considered a producer. He merely forestalls and monopolizes the passive factor in production. In his capacity as landowner he is the idle neighbor who robs of his just reward the man whose talents are useful to the race. He confiscates without compensation the fruits of the useful man's toil, and the word robbery properly characterizes the legalized act.

The product of labor being the source of both wages and rent, an expenditure of rent—confiscated goods—cannot but be detrimental to the community. The action of taking goods from one crowd of laborers and handing them over to another crowd in return for services, virtually compels the first crowd to support the second. Tangible things produced by the second crowd flow not to their real owners in equity—the first crowd—but to the landowners. These tangible things—houses, stores, etc., reflect a value on surrounding land. Ground rent rises; wages decline; an increased number can and do live off rent—live off their fellow laborers—and are employed either in ministering to the luxury of landowners, or in producing things to which the landowners will hold title, and which will further add to land values. Every repetition of effort makes matters worse, and widens the gulf between landowners and laborers.

If the landowners would throw into the sea the slice taken off as rent, and the demand of the first crowd for stores, houses, etc., should determine the direction of the labor of the second crowd, and if—what then? This is only a question.

Everything now tends to the centralization of land into the hands of a few. Every labor-saving invention adds to the number of idle men. Two men after one job will not result in high wages. One-tenth of the workers in the United States are continually in enforced idleness and competing for work with another tenth employed. All wages are based on the lowest form of labor, grading upwards. One-fourth to one-half of every crop is given up as rent—wasted, as shown. Industry is clogged at every turn by monopoly of the gifts of nature and of the opportunities created by social growth. Suffering men are denied the gratification of their wants through the injustice of a society that permits their birthright and its possibilities to be appropriated by a few, and individual liberty to toil (and retain the full result of exertion) must be sacrificed, and natural rights cannot be restored and a moral wrong corrected by a tax that would compel each man to pay to the community, for its general good, the exact value of all privileges growing out of itself and exclusively used by him because of "a fatal constitutional objection"—because an eighteenth century convention majority knew it all, and we must still be steered "by hands that long ago were dust." Go to! Take a lesson in "amendment" from the friends of God-in-the-Constitution.

But it is when Mr. Holland proposes a partial remedy that he gets right down to brass tacks as an economist: "Poor people are taxed too heavily on food, clothes, tools, and dwellings. . . . Local taxes can be laid nowhere more justly than on churches, banks, factories, clubhouses, hotels, saloons, and costly mansions." When Mr. Holland says: "Raise the average as high as you can, you will always find some below it," the proposition passes as readily as if he had said that six and two are eight. There are certain axioms in the science of political economy that are now accepted without demonstration, and this is the sense of one of them: a tax on the products of human labor tends to restrict production, while the demand remains unchanged. Lessened production and steady demand raise the price until the consumer pays the tax and a profit on the tax. Now, if banks, loans, and mortgages are taxed, the tax is added to the rate of interest or forms an item in the calculation of discount or commission, and is paid by the last user of the money. If factories are taxed, the people who buy food, clothes, and tools will pay the tax. There is no product of human labor free from the element of monopoly on which a tax can be fastened so that it will not be shifted to the user or consumer. A tax on hotels is paid by the boarders. And a tax on any of the things mentioned by Mr. Holland discourages their production, and thereby lessens the demand for labor.

A tax on land values, or on any other monopoly privilege or franchise, cannot be shifted. A tax on land values is simply the taking of a portion of the premium which the landowner compels the tenant to pay for a privilege. He now extorts all that the tenant will pay; an attempt to get more would be ineffectual unless surrounding land went up to his figures, which general advances would merely demonstrate that it was time to increase the tax.

Upon what authority is it stated that the "idle (lazy?), intemperate, and extravagant are told in Anti-poverty meetings that society is to blame for their sufferings?" Archbishop Corrigan couldn't do worse than that.

A few words of warning. It is the arguments of Holland economists that incite men to do murder. In anticipation of another "opinion," it is pertinent and proper to remark that the C. L. James theory of the action of a hen and a half (Truth Seeker, January 5) is not accepted by a certain body of men as an inspired exposition of philosophical Anarchy.

Anaheim, Cal., January 27.

JAMES B. HASSETT.

MAX O'RELL relates this experience in the Forum: On board the steamer we had a party of Americans who passed seven days of the voyage in playing poker. The smoking-room rang from morning to night with the oaths that they uttered every time that they threw a card on the table. They were so fluent with them that they hardly used the same twice in an hour. Their stock seemed inexhaustible. On Sunday, after breakfast, a young lady sat down to the piano, and began playing hymns. What happened then? Our poker party gathered round the young lady, and for two hours sang psalms and holy tunes to the edification of the other occupants of the saloon. I was dumfounded. In France we have men who swear, and also men who sing hymns. But I believe that the Anglo-Saxon race alone can furnish men who do both with equal facility and gusto.

THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY.

The Infidel is he who is unfaithful. Unfaithful to what? To that which is established, accredited; to that which almost everybody believes to be right. He is the unfashionable thinker; the minority of one. He is the ripple where all else is smooth. He is the out-door man—the outré man—the centrifugal force. He goes off like a comet—and then again like a cannon. He is the man who will not be a commodity. He has no market value. He cannot be used, for he will not stand still long enough. He cannot be bought or sold, for nobody knows where to put him. He has no abiding-place. He is a pilgrim and a stranger in the midst of ease and comfort. He is not of the ninety and nine—but is a lost sheep in the wilderness. He is the element of unexpectedness in human affairs, the horror of Mrs. Grundy and the despair of the fashion-plate maker, for he will adopt no style. The world is afraid of him; it tries to get rid of him; it laughs at him; it sneers at him; it trembles at him. It kicks him and cuffs him; knocks off his hat and tears his coat; sets the police upon him, starves him, crucifies him, and then builds him a monument and call him a hero.

We can understand the Infidel still better—for he is a many-sided fellow—by a description of his opposite, the orthodox.

The orthodox is he who stands straight up and down to what is; who knows nothing beyond, sees nothing higher nor better; whatever happens to be the style is his god. He is a brick in the edifice of custom and stays just where he is put. He is static, not dynamic. He has no motion. To stir is to him the greatest of crimes. He has a ramrod of a creed run through him from head to foot, and he cannot bend in the least; if he does, it kills him. He dies of too much air. He catches cold at every fresh breeze; and so sneezes at every new reform, which, in return, like a polite stranger, cries, "God bless you!" The orthodox belongs to the ninety and nine. He has no notion of running away. He cuddles about the fireside. He always sticks where there is good living. He never favors a change of diet, since he lives on beef-steak and plum-pudding. He takes things as they are because he wears broadcloth. His chronometer is a gold watch; and he has no other means of knowing the time. He is not a star-gazer. He never takes an eagle's flight. His feet are planted on the firm soil. He knows that the earth is flat, and he cares not a fig for anything that is beyond the horizon. He will not ride in a palace car until the dust of ages has settled somewhat upon it. He will not use Edison's light or the telephone until they have become antique. I think he would be opposed to fresh butter and eggs if it were possible. He would prefer to eat them old if he could. The only new thing he believes in is the "new birth," and he believes in that because it was foreordained from the foundation of the world, and is therefore as a matter of fact one of the most ancient of occurrences. The orthodox is entirely in favor of monotony. He is thoroughly devoted to the frog-pond. He admires its glassy stillness. Such, he thinks, should be human life.

The Infidel is the exact opposite of all these. He is unfaithful, infides, to everything that the orthodox holds sacred. Of course he has to suffer the consequences and be held guilty of all sorts of bad conduct; for the orthodox are in the majority and can tell their story with but little contradiction.

There are two ways in which we can look upon the glory of Infidelity—as a spirit and as a result. The most important use of Infidelity lies in its spirit, and yet it is the spirit of Infidelity that is most utterly condemned.

Infidelity in its results oftentimes becomes after a while orthodox; that is—a fixed, up-and-down accepted belief. In that event it is sufficiently glorified by orthodoxy itself—while at the same time the spirit that made such a belief possible is declared to be the spirit of the devil.

Infidelity is history in the making, and is called Satan. After it has become made, then it is called God, and all the world admires its brilliancy.

Orthodoxy can see no glory in the raw material, but it will worship anything that is made, even if it is a golden calf.

I purpose first of all to illustrate the glory of Infidelity, not in its results merely as crystallized in popular opinion, but in its method—its constant process by which forevermore the world is kept fresh and beautiful.

It is not simply what Infidelity has given to the world of hard won and accepted truth that constitutes its greatest merit, but the spiritual impulse which it continually puts into human effort.

It is not merely our opinions that are valuable, but the way in which we hold them. It is the mind that is in our opinions which make them of advantage. Opinions are useless unless they are forged from the heat of our own personality, unless they are the direct result of our mental power. A man may wear liberal opinions as one wears a suit of clothes—but for all that, his body, his soul, may be rigidly orthodox. Some people get these opinions as one does a dinner, by ordering from a bill of fare—he simply consults his taste, or perhaps the waiter, alias minister, who serves with immaculate apron and white necktie.

Such opinions may be very nice and after a fashion progressive, but a million of them would not stir the world. The opinions that uplift, that create, that build into the new, are not those that we take in, but those that we pour forth from our own activity.

The spirit of Infidelity makes this sort of opinions possible. It is the spirit of question, of doubt, of denial. It is the spirit that will not allow mankind to be at rest; to take things complacently. It compels orthodoxy, the established, the popular, to hold its own by continual struggle.

Since the world began the orthodox has not enjoyed a comfortable nap. Like St Paul, he has had a thorn in the flesh, and that thorn is the Infidel, who is always on the challenge and waves the red flag, and the orthodox bull is obliged to be mad and prepare for the onset—he cannot wander in green pastures and lie down by the still waters. The Infidel has not allowed anything to be accepted on faith. He has opposed faith wherever he has found it and compelled it to its defense. Upon every iron creed he has written his interrogation mark, and to rub that out has destroyed the creed. It is the Infidel who has kept things agoing. He makes truth a dear possession. It must be held at the point of debate. Even error has had to bestir itself and show some sort of inventive genius; it could not lazily hold its empire. It must fight for it at least, and so the Infidel gives to error whatsoever honest zeal it has.

It is the Infidel that brings the earthquake whence fairer possibilities may arise—in this, at least, that it brings stagnation to an end. It tumbles the frog-pond into a sparkling rivulet.

It is the Infidel with his perpetual denial that gives to truth its infinite value, namely, that it be held by the force of constant intellectual activity. Admitting that the work of the Infidel is simply negative; that he gives the world no new truth, he is yet a blessing in disguise, in this: he puts truth to the test; he makes it a living thing, he compels it to proof, so that they who have it, have it always fresh and beautiful, for it must always manifest itself to be the truth. It cannot rely on any past demonstration, for the questioner is ever present, and will ever insist upon fresh arguments; and so the human intellect is forever on the alert. The Infidel allows it no vacation. It must ceaselessly prove the truth of every iota of truth it holds. Truth would be almost as useless as error if one could hold it without proof. It is the Infidel who compels proof, and so he keeps the old truth ever new, because, like the new, it must continually demonstrate itself.

The Infidel thus benefits even the errorist, by making him some sort of a thinker. If one hugs error to his bosom he must give "some reasons why," and it is better for him to be obliged to give reasons, even if poor ones, than to hold it with blind stupidity. One may show some sparks of intellectual life in the defense of error, and that is infinitely better than nothing. Indeed, it is better to defend error vigorously than to hold the truth inactively. Better draw the sword for error than let it and the soul rust for want of something to do. Action is what the soul wants, and action in support of a mistaken notion is preferable to inaction. If one is so certain of the truth he holds that he needs no intellectual activity to still maintain it, then that truth to him is dead—a dead certainty; and a little live error would be preferable, as a living ass is better than a dead lion. It is the Infidel who gives a bright uncertainty even to truth itself, and one is never quite sure that he is right, and so is constrained to search and reason and justify. The Infidel keeps him all the time on the lookout. He can't ride along with closed windows. He must see something of the universe, even if he sees it askant.

JAMIESON'S CAMPAIGN.

W. F. Jamieson was engaged to deliver a week's course of lectures in Shenandoah, Iowa. The engagement lengthened into three weeks, including lectures in the vicinity, and a debate with one of Iowa's greatest preachers, Elder D. R. Dungan. The whole country in southwest Iowa was aroused to a high pitch of interest. The marshal remarked that he never saw the opera house so crowded. The Post says:

The great religious controversy between W. F. Jamieson, the Free-thought lecturer, and the Rev. D. R. Dungan, president of the Bible School of the Drake University, of Des Moines, began Monday night last at the Opera House in this city, when an overwhelming audience filled every seat on floor and in gallery and every inch or foot of standing-room in that large auditorium. The moderators agreed upon were Rev. T. W. West, Jerry Brown, and W. G. Makinson, who, with the debaters, promptly appeared upon the stage at the appointed time. As the debaters took their seats they were the observed of all observers, every eye being especially riveted upon Jamieson, who had thus openly the cool hardihood to appear in public and question the generally accepted belief by arguing that "Disbelief in the Bible is a benefit to mankind, and advances civilization," which was the subject of that evening's debate, and which was to constitute the subject of each succeeding debate thereafter until Thursday evening. Mr. Jamieson is a man of medium height, with brown hair, mild dark eyes, and dark brown whiskers. He has good address, is well and deeply read, using plain and forcible language to convey his ideas and thoughts. His voice is gentle, but on occasions, as the thought inspires, rises and swells with great power and volume. He is a keen, caustic reasoner, arguing from his standpoint with a precision, method, and logic which proclaim him an expert in the field of debate. He showed good feeling and good sense when he reproved a part of the audience, Monday night, for applauding a remark of his, saying that he and his opponent did not approve of it or allow it in their debates; that this was not a political meeting.

The Rev. D. R. Dungan, who appeared, like Paul, for the defense of the gospel, is a gentleman apparently about fifty years of age, about the same height as his opponent, but heavier set. He, too, is a self-poised man, armed at every point, and endowed with a command of language capable of reflecting every shade of thought from the purely ridiculous to the grandly sublime. He has a voice of great compass and inflection with which to give expression to the creations of his active brain. Well read in every department of scripture, literature, and science, Mr. Jamieson finds in him "a foeman worthy of his steel." It would be well for all Christians if they could, like him, give as good a reason for the faith that is in them. He is neither ashamed of his Lord and master, nor the glorious cause of evangelizing the world in which he is engaged, and confesses Christ before men with such sacredness of devotion to his cause, as to command the admiration of all who hear him. In this argument he had the negative.

Thursday evening, and for five sessions thereafter, the subject of debate is: "Christianity is true." In this debate Mr. Dungan will have the affirmative and Mr. Jamieson the negative.

The interest in these debates increases as they proceed, and the miserable weather we have been having does not seem to dampen the ardor of the attendants.

Mr. Jamieson afterwards challenged all the clergy of Shenandoah. They were silent, except in their pulpits, where they declared that God, in the judgment day, would accept it and "poke the Bible under his nose!"

Liberals in Iowa, Illinois, and Michigan should write to W. F. Jamieson, Shenandoah, Iowa.

THE BIRTHDAY PARTY.

W. S. Ray's birthday party was enjoyed at his elegant residence, 239 San Jose avenue, Tuesday evening, February 5, by numerous friends. Mr. Ray says this is his sixteenth birthday. No wonder he feels young with such a happy fireside, even if bright children are there to greet him with the rest. Mrs. Ray is a charming hostess. A brilliant company was present. About eleven o'clock, music made welcome entertainment in the moonlight. And the supper was exquisite. The dancing and melody continued till the merry morning. May there be many returns of the auspicious day. Mr. and Mrs. Ray take fortune at its best, and the ships "come in from Spain" storm or shine. Jovial sea captains were present, and the breath of old Neptune was in the delightful atmosphere. Among them were Captain Jenks and his wife, and Engineer Little of the Alameda, and Mrs. Little, who make FREETHOUGHT fly over the broad Pacific. The occasion was one of heart and hope, with hosts of friends; and though the "Julia Ray" has sunk to the depths, the flag will float again. The ship of home and love is staunch and true, and

Youth and pleasure meet
To chase the glowing hours with flying feet.

DEATH OF MRS. W. S. RODGERS.

Mrs. Cleo E. Rodgers, wife of Supervisor W. S. Rodgers, of Boulder Creek, died at that place Thursday morning, after an illness of but six days. Mrs. Rodgers was a highly respected young lady and leaves many friends who mourn her loss, while her husband is almost distracted. Besides her husband, Mrs. Rodgers leaves seven children.

Unusually pathetic and sad were the circumstances of the burial of Mrs. Cleo Rodgers, wife of Supervisor W. S. Rodgers, of Boulder, which took place on Saturday afternoon at I. O. O. F. cemetery. The remains were brought to Boulder from the Rodgers ranch, some distance above, to be placed upon the train for Santa Cruz. Scarcely had the cortege arrived there when word was brought that the infant, only a week old, had died suddenly. The body of the babe was brought to Santa Cruz by carriage, the casket re-opened, the child placed upon its mother's breast, and the two laid to rest together.

At the grave Bart Burke read a selection from Robert Ingersoll, and the choir sang the hymn, "One Sweetly Solemn Thought." Many friends came down by train from Boulder, and many from Santa Cruz also attended the last rites.

Mrs. Rodgers left six motherless little ones, all quite young, a fact which renders all the more severe the crushing blow to an esteemed citizen of our county.—Santa Cruz Courier-Item.

SAUL AND THE WITCH OF ENDOR.

In the days of that more or less recalcitrant monarch, Saul the king of the Jews, there might have been discovered at a certain time, by any one caring to look the matter up, much weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth in the witch circles of Endor and outlying territory.

This was at the time when his royal nibs, tired and fagged out in hunting the sprightly and elusive David, sought relief in the excitement of witch hunting, bagging more dames of accredited supernatural powers to the square acre than all the combined dude fox-hunting clubs of Gotham and vicinity, in their ridiculous hunts, ever bagged of foxes, counting every hunted aniseed bag, a fox.

When his royal nibs raided the nocturnal riders of the fiery, untamed broomsticks, and sweepers of cobwebs from the corners of the moon, that they might have the much-prized ghostly light of Luna as they sped through the circumambient, none of the heretofore favored guild escaped that failed to find secure cover before the royal huntsman and his myrmidons got on to the game, so to speak.

Of those who escaped the cycle of this grand hunt, or round-up, as I may say, was one who has since become famous all through Christendom, owing to the fact that she was sought out by this same royal huntsman for the purpose of a professional tete-a-tete, without malice prepense, or even later on, when he undoubtedly wished she had been bagged in the raid, or that he had not found her at home when he called.

This old dame, and nocturnal rider of the ash or white pine steed, rendered forever famous by that seance with his royal nibs, thereby getting honorable mention in the sacred book, is known to all the Christian world as the "Witch of Endor," previous patronymic unknown, uncalled-for, and uncared-for. As the "Witch of Endor" she will probably go down to as much posterity, if not more, as she has come down to at present, if nothing interferes with the multiplication process, which is honor enough for any witch of the first water, even; and of this grade she proved herself to be on that ever-memorable occasion.

Now, this old dame, or beldame, if you like; this ancient cowboy of the skies, so to speak, and, from the fact that the wildest broomstick had no terrors, for her; this old prognosticator and prestigitator, if I may be permitted to use the term, had it in solid for Saul, make no mistake; not on her own account, but on general principles, say—on account of his late raid on the sisterhood of witches most bewitching, as understood, reducing the confraternity to a very small quorum, as it were.

To be sure, this very greatly reduced competition made business more remunerative to the few survivors of the hunt, but this wasn't the way she looked at it. She knew that she had escaped the fate that had befallen many of her sisters by a fluke, as it were, and that she would have been numbered with the witches that had been, but were not, had she been taken in the net; and for this, together with the fact that the king had prosecuted her guild, did she have it in for him solid, rejoicing in her heart when he called on her, well-knowing that he came with fair and not with foul intent, as far as she was concerned, at least.

Now this old wrinkled dame, who had told and foretold and performed much and greatly beyond the ken and power of mortals of the regulation stripe, well knew that his royal nibs was in a bad way—in an exceedingly tight place, so to put it, and she meant to give him a roast if it lay in her power; and as the day was more than ordinarily frigid when her powers failed the summons of her will, it was a pretty sure thing that Saul was in for the roast.

When his royal nibs had paid the now advanced fee, thanks to his late raid, in spot cash, saying he wished to see and have an interview with Samuel, the venerable and wrinkled dame laughed inwardly and deeply down, with ghoulish glee—the roast, you see, was au fait accompli! See and have a chat with Samuel, eh? Why, of course His Majesty should—why not? The fact that Sam was a defunct of several year's standing was no bar to the interview as desired by his royal nibs, were she around, and she thought she were if she knew herself, and she thought she did, particularly so at that moment, with the enemy of the sisterhood of respectable witches within the charmed and mystic circle of her arts as black as hell—no, this won't do, will it? Hell is a deeply, brightly glowing red. Let me say, as black as Erebus, the original of blackness, and yet, as hell defined by some lexicographers.

You all know the outcome of that visit of Saul to the aged and wrinkled dame of mysterious powers, the interview being set before you in the sacred book in all the cold and naked realism of a stern and rock-bound coast, so to speak, and Comstock moving not upon said nakedness! You have seen, or can see, the stage picture, but how many of you ever went behind the scenes, in imagination even? How many of you ever suspected that this queen, maybe, of midnight revels high in ether, astride her fastest and most fiery broomstick, had it in deep and solid for Saul? Not one of you, for marbles, but gorged the ghostly grill, nor sought to go behind the records, as it were.

Every one of you supposed this dame of destiny devoted to the dizzy dollar, but I am telling you it was vengeance, not lucre, that moved her to bring the erst saintly but now defunct Samuel from his downy couch—down in the mud, you know—to a tete-a-tete with Saul! Not all the silver Saul could swipe from Syria would then have tempted her to serve his royal nibs, foregoing vengeance sweet! No; on vengeance bent was she when first she sighted Saul that evening in her parlor dim, and well she knew that she would have it. Doubt not the power that can raise the dead can e'en control the dead when raised!

The shrewd and skinny dame saw Sam in private, just from his oozy bed, before she showed him up to Saul, and straightway and forthwith commanded him to give it seething hot to Saul! in short, give him to understand that, on the morrow, he and all his sons should sleep the sleep Saul's fathers then were sleeping; she to shape events accordingly. To give it to him thus, was Sam, on pain of her displeasure, failing—and what a dance could she have led the dead-head, Sam, nightly bouncing him from bed and breaking up his rest! But Sam failed not; to tell the truth, he couldn't; she had him psycholog ically fixed, as it were, or something like, you know; and you all know how the celebrated interview between the dead prophet and live king terminated—of course you do.

Oh, how the ghoulish glee must quick have rolled itself in surging waves within the spare and leathery anatomy of Endor's champion witch, when Saul went sprawling to the floor, and yelled and vomited in very fear! Oh, how? Well, I should smile! You couldn't have bought the old dame out for dollars or doubloons upon a desert piled a hundred deep, for vengeance was hers. She knew the royal duffer's goose was cooked, or would be on the morrow, and better still, she knew he knew it, too! O double vengeance sweet, or vengeance doubly sweet, but none too sweet for Endor's witch, immortalized!

I have always thought it remarkable that Saul, when his craven fit subsided, did not cry out, in littleness of soul, "What ho, there, without, villains! Slay me this caitiff witch!" But he didn't; he went moodily home and made his will, and, on the morrow, before the set of sun, slept peacefully with his fathers; he shuffling off his mortal coil, the tide of battle running all awry with him, by thrusting a sabre into his bowels, harikari fashion! Sic transit gloria mundi!

There's a moral here, for kings: When witch hunting, hunt them to the last fell witch, or failing, abdicating at once.

ST SLOKUM.

Who Did It?

To the Editors of Freethought:

Will you, or some one else, through your paper, be kind enough to answer the following?

When, and why, and by what authority, was the inscription, "In God we trust," first placed upon our coins, instead of the old national motto—"E Pluribus Unum?"

It seems to me that the change, by whomsoever made, was little else than an overt act of treason against our government, and that if there is not enough of patriotism and respect for our national Constitution still remaining among the American people, they should see to it, that the odious and treasonable inscription is suspended and the old national motto, "E Pluribus Unum," restored.

Of dangers all, that menace freedom's cause,
"In God we trust" has least respect for laws.
In gold we trust—our faith is common sense,
For gold is truth, and not a vile pretense.

The legend bold, which on our coins appears,
Will be the battle-cry in coming years,
When creeds and craft unite in holy hate,
And pious bigots seize the helm of state.

When constitutions shall protect no more
The rights, for which our fathers fought of yore,
Then priests and princes as before shall reign,
Nor earthly power our liberties regain.

A New Ally.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I address an audience here of more than a thousand persons, every Sunday evening, in the California theatre. In the city where, for nearly five years, I was the honored pastor of the Baptist church, I now stand in the forefront of Freethought, as its exponent and defender. The masses are moved. They hail the rising dawn of liberty of conscience, and freedom from the shackles of ignorance, and the oppression of superstition.

The days of priestly domination are numbered. The evolution of rational thought upheaves and scatters to the winds old obsolete theories. Humanity, burdened and torn and bleeding, is coming to the front at last. Men are coming to recognize that the best and only service they can render to God is by love to serve one another. Fraternally,

Inclosed find $5 50. I wish to give five dollars toward the expenses of the Liberal meeting held in San Francisco, and for the 50 cents please send me a copy of "Robert Elsmere." I also inclose remonstrance to any religious legislation by Congress with 69 names attached; the Adventists have already sent up one with 84 names. The Adventists are fully alive to the evils which will result from a union of church and state, and are straining every nerve to defeat the Blair bill and constitutional amendment. The Liberals (here), on the contrary, seem to pooh-pooh the idea of Congress passing such a law. Of course men whose knowledge of history goes no further back than the American Revolution cannot realize the evils likely to result if the church should ever be able to dictate laws, and have the whole power of the government to enforce them.

It appears by the published list in FREETHOUGHT that 913* Liberals signed the call for the meeting in San Francisco. By a little figuring it will be seen how easy it would be for that number to maintain a flourishing auxiliary, without feeling the burden, if each one will give 5 cents a week ($2.10 a year). That would be a grand total of $2,373. One cigar a week, or one glass of lager a week the less, is all that some would feel it. I shall keep my subscription to FREETHOUGHT paid up so long as it is published.

A. H. HOYT.

*About one hundred additional names to the call were received too late for publication before the convention, so that the total number on the roll is not less than one thousand.—ED.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I rejoice in what you are doing on the Pacific coast, and bid you "good speed!" I hope you may have a very successful convention. Philadelphia, Pa. Cordially, R. B. WESTBROOK.

From Judge Brewer.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have just received the first number of volume II. of FREETHOUGHT, which reminds me that my subscription must be up. I have been greatly pleased with the paper the year past.

Hoping you may be abundantly supported in your able and promising efforts to represent our cause on the Pacific slope, I inclose two dollars in currency for renewal, and wish you a prosperous and happy new year.

S. BREWER.

Ithaca, New York.

To the State Convention of California.

Illinois Secularists send glorious greetings to their brethren of the Occident, who have been aroused into enthusiasm by the penetrating rays from that Torch of Reason—FREETHOUGHT. To its editors—Putman and Macdonald—we desire particularly to forward fervent fellowship and gratitude. If the material were as accessible as the spiritual, many of us would be with you, but although a vast continent divides, we (figuratively at least) clasp hands in bonds of friendship, love, and truth.

May the Golden State Secularists become a power for the primal principle of American freedom—the absolute divorce of church and state—and lead the van in the matter of organization, as they have already done in reforming the laws. Sincerely and fraternally,

Chicago, January 22, 1889.

A Fair Laborer.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I received the anti-Sabbath petitions and the pamphlets in due time, and I am succeeding real well in getting signatures for the petition, and I hope to have a very large list of names.

I sent to R. D. Allen, of Silverton, Oregon, a short time ago, and procured blank petitions for the taxation of church property in this state, and I succeeded in getting 93 signatures for it, right here in our neighborhood. Liberals must be patient, and work step by step for the Nine Demands of Liberalism.

Wishing you great success in the publication of your most valuable paper, I remain yours for U. M. L., MISS ELVA DAVIDSON.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - FEBRUARY 16, 1889

THE Rev. Samuel Jones received $2,500 in cash for his three weeks' services in saving souls at Los Angeles. As the Santa Ana Standard remarks, "it was a big price for the souls, but cheap enough for Sam."

LET us pass the hat for the pope! Last year he received from "Peter's pence" $1,500,000; from interest on capital invested abroad, $500,000, and from other sources about $100,000—besides $400,000 in cash jubilee gifts. The old man is totally dependent upon the charity of the Christian world!

MR. JAY COWDRY, a faith-healer, while lecturing in West Haven, Conn., last week, illustrated his remarks in a most infelicitous manner. After reading several pages of manuscript he launched forth the assertion that a thorough Christian scientist could defy death at any time. He had no sooner made the remark than he fell back in a swoon and expired in a few minutes.

A PENNSYLVANIA statesman last week introduced a bill into the House prohibiting the custom of treating, and making it a penal offense punishable by a fine for any one to treat another to intoxicating liquors, or to invite another to drink with him. The penalty proposed is a fine of from fifty to one hundred dollars. It is not understood that the bill is aimed at the administration of the sacrament.

THE revival meetings of Mr. Moody here in San Francisco, being free to the public, were attended nightly by four or five thousand people. This fact is pointed to by the Chronicle as a "good answer" to those who assert that Californians care nothing for "religion, art, literature, and culture." A few nights after Moody had vacated the Pavilion that structure was leased for an exhibition by a lot of ruffians called pugilists, and although an admission fee of one dollar was charged, no less than seven thousand persons are said to have been present. This was an audience as large as Moody's, and proves just as much for "religion, art, literature, and culture" as the attendance at the revival did. That is, it proves that San Francisco is a good place for shows.

At a meeting in London to discuss the question of "Artisan Atheism," the bishop of Rochester presiding, a member of the Secular Society offered the reflection that "whereas in early Christian days one person fed five thousand, it now took five thousand to feed one." The bishop, who enjoys a salary of $15,000 per annum, denounced the remark as "insolent incivility." Nevertheless, it was a good hit.

ACTING, as he claimed, under the command of God, a crank named Reed stabbed Father Ashfield, a Catholic priest, to the heart last Monday morning at Memphis, Tenn. The murderer is evidently insane; and any man who believes that God ever gave commands or commandments to the human race suffers from a species of insanity that the world will not be free from until the last priest is dead. Those who teach that God governs in the affairs of men, and are killed in obedience to a supposed order of God, simply reap what they have sown.

A LECTURE IN OAKLAND.

Miss Ada Ballou will lecture on "Moodyism and Revivals" at Odd Fellows' Hall, Oakland, next Sunday evening at 7:30 o'clock. Admission free; all are invited.

NEWS AND NOTES.

The anti-Sunday Law meeting held at Avon theatre, Stockton, the 10th inst., under the auspices of the Turn Verein Society and the Liberal League, was a success in numbers and influence. There was a large attendance. Addresses were made by Fred Schuenemann-Pott and S. P. Putnam. The former has hosts of friends in Stockton, friends of the East and the West; old Philadelphia friends, some of whom he had joined in the golden bonds of marriage long ago. It was a pleasant reunion. The mists were just rolling away when we arrived in Stockton, at one P. M., and in the shining afternoon, friends Haas and Wagner gave us a drive over the beautiful city, visiting the comrades of my eloquent co-laborer. His speech in the evening was heartily applauded. Our German friends especially were enthusiastic. In their own tongue they heard the ringing words of liberty and reason. Those who could not follow the whole of the admirable discourse could catch its telling points and brilliant oratory. Fred Schuenemann-Pott seems to be still in the prime of life, although he has labored over thirty-five years in this country in the cause of advanced humanity—already having done good work in his native land. He is still vigorous for the work, and ardent as youth for the glorious future of the world's republic. He is a representative man, whose learning, thought, and experience are moulded into polished sentences, whose splendid eloquence is charming even in an unknown language. He is thoroughly radical, sincere, humanitarian, and progressive.

After the meeting, the petitions and the demands of Liberalism and Articles of Organization of the California State Liberal Union were numerous signed.

Later, at the Turn Verein Hall, there were social festivities for an hour or two. Mr. and Mrs. Schou, of Oakland, were with us, and Mr. Holly, of San Francisco. It was a delightful merry-making. Toasts were drank to the Turn Vereins, the Secular Union, the American Republic, to the Freethought women of Stockton, and the honored visitors. Short speeches were made by F. Schuenemann-Pott, W. F. Freeman, Mr. Schou, S. P. Putnam, Mr. Holly, Mr. Hewins of the Stockton Mail, and Mrs. Freeman. Mrs. Freeman, as the only lady orator, made the hit of the evening with her witty rendition of the Liberal faith.

Thus the spirit of fraternity grows bright with happy memories; golden hopes are in the sky. Amid festival hours the heart of humanity grows stronger.

I was surprised to meet my old friend and fellow soldier, Mr. Ryan of the Independent, formerly of the Evansville, Ind., Tribune. He was with me ten years ago when Chainey and I were both Unitarian ministers, and the star of Ingersoll came across our way and made forever impossible any further compromise with the olden faith. Mr. Ryan stood by Chainey through the contest, and was expelled from the Freemasons on account of his active sympathy. It was a pleasure to shake hands with this brave and true comrade. Alas! that Chainey, like a meteor, should wheel around the whole circle and fall again upon the desolate shores of theology. It seems almost like a dream, a fairy tale, when I think of those events of ten years back, for I do know that Chainey was thoroughly sincere when he left the church, and we were heart and soul together in that momentous time.

But the temperament of Chainey is the temperament of the mystic. He is essentially of the faith order. He is a bundle of feeling, and the master feeling sways his destiny. He is absolutely ignorant of science and the methods of science. He is incapable of consecutive thought. Like Hamlet, he is "a wave of the sea." His reconversion to Christianity has no meaning whatever, any more than the changing wishes of a child. He is a kind of typical man, and pictures much of the surface feeling of to-day which has not attached itself to the unchanging results of science.

However, I shall never forget the bright, fresh, glorious feeling and splendid hope with which we turned from the old ecclesiastical walls, to the boundless fields of humanity, ever broadening to me, so that the shadow of deity is forever lost. The forward beaming face of science, looking to golden immeasurable dawns, like the face of Memnon, forever breathes music to a struggling but ever advancing world.

PERSECUTION OF SWEDISH FREETHINKERS.

The persecution of Freethinkers, says the National Reformer, has been going on in Sweden for some past. At the present moment a young man named Viktor Lennstrand, the founder of the Swedish Freethought Society, is lying in prison at Malmo, for the high crime of lecturing against Christianity; and his colleague, Alfred Lindkvist, has only just left the jail, after suffering a month's imprisonment for translating and publishing a Freethought pamphlet.

Lennstrand was condemned to three months' imprisonment, and is likely to receive a second sentence when he faces a second prosecution, already commenced against him. The English Freethinkers are raising a fund to help their Swedish brethren pay the costs of trial, and to furnish the imprisoned man with food.

BOGUS PETITIONS.

The American Sabbath Association has been for some time parading an alleged list of "over fourteen millions" of signers to a petition "praying for the passage of a Sunday-rest law." It has been contended by the opponents of the measure that the claim to so many signers was fraudulent. Now comes the Congressional Record (as quoted by the American Sentinel) giving the exact number of individual signatures to that petition. And what is that number? Is it fourteen millions? No! Is it fourteen thousand? No! Is it fourteen hundred? No! It is precisely four hundred and seven (407).

What is to be thought of the honesty of the members of a body who report fourteen millions of signatures when they have only four hundred and seven? They explain themselves thus:

The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, the Home Missionary Society of the Baptist church, the General Assemblies of the Presbyterian church (North and South), and the synod of the Reformed church, five denominations, represent 5,977,693. The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers number 20,000. Knights of Labor, 219,000. The Presbyterian General Assembly, North, 722,071. The convention of Christian Workers, 450. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, 185,521. The Roman Catholics, for whom Cardinal Gibbons speaks, 7,200,000.

It now only remains for the Sabbath Association to procure the signature of General Harrison, who is said to favor the bill. His name might stand for the whole people of the United States, and the fraud of claiming sixty-five millions of signers, while no more ingenious than the present fraud of claiming fourteen, would be sufficiently stupendous to excite the admiration of the most indifferent.

NO LOVE LOST.

For fear it might in some way be identified with the Liberal movement inaugurated in San Francisco, the Golden Gate, a local Spiritualist paper, says:

"We have no sympathy with that so-called Liberalism that does nothing but deride and denounce the things which millions of other people are disposed to regard as sacred—the Liberalism which at the same time does nothing itself for the uplifting of the race. The mighty charities of the church, misdirected and sometimes hurtful, as they no doubt are, are vastly more beneficial to those that practice them than is the practice of no charity at all. The church teaches its members to give, and they do it with a lavish hand, as the many costly church edifices of this and every other city bear witness; while Liberalism, with its multitudes of followers, gives nothing but emptiness to the world; and its champions, save and except an occasional mighty genius like Ingersoll, are often obliged to go to bed hungry."

We would say in behalf of Liberalism that it has no sympathy with any doctrine, whether it is called Spiritualism or some other ism, that upholds fraud and superstition simply because they are regarded as sacred. The notion that religious dogmas are sacred and therefore not subject to criticism or ridicule is becoming somewhat effete, not to say played out. It is a hypocritical pretense. If there be a God, if there be a future life, and angels and spirits and hobgoblins, their existence is a scientific fact, and no more sacred than anything else. Since these beings are beyond our reach, they are indeed less sacred to us than earthly things should be. Opinions and beliefs are like persons, they should be respected only when worthy of respect.

The doctrine of promiscuous giving is pernicious. The proper place for money which can not be expended for some worthy purpose is in the pocket of the man who earned it. Compare the charities of Liberals with the charities of superstition. Which is worth most to mankind, Girard College or the chapel built on the grounds? The Smithsonian Institute, or the Catholic university at Washington? The observatory on Mount Hamilton, or the Maclay theological seminary in Los Angeles county?

Possibly Liberals give less than Christians, but they generally know how to place their money where it will do the most good.

When the Golden Gate asserts that "Liberalism gives nothing but emptiness to the world," we can merely dissent from the statement and pronounce it untrue. Liberalism at least gives the world liberty.

It is nothing against the worthiness of a cause that its champions do not grow rich upon the credulity of the superstitious. The advocates of Liberalism are not sent to jail for obtaining money under false pretenses. They do not exhibit the spirits of the departed, for a price. They are denied this source of revenue. They do not mystify with legerdemain and hoc est corpus; and though they may retire at night supperless, they thank fortune for a bed. Many Spiritualists are not wealthy, but some of them are intelligent enough to know that reform is not always profitable, in a pecuniary sense, to the reformer, and do not judge of the value of a doctrine by the amount of money it puts in the pockets of its advocates. Intelligent Spiritualists are Liberals, because they know that but for the influence of Liberalism their mediums would in all likelihood be hanged for witchcraft.

If there are genuine spirit mediums, this criticism does not lie against them. They are not responsible for the fraudulent ones. No attack upon Spiritualism is here intended, but in replying to a general condemnation of Liberalism by a Spiritualist it is in no wise unfair to mention the weaker places in the armor of the attacking party, and to endeavor to turn aside the point of criticism.

CHURCH EXEMPTION IN OREGON.

The petition to the legislature of Oregon, asking that the ecclesiastical property in that state be no longer exempt from just taxation, received about eight hundred signatures, and has been presented, and referred to a committee. Mr. Laughlin, of Yamhill, has prepared a bill covering the ground of the petition.

There is little chance, it is feared, that the bill will pass this session. The legislators know the power of the orthodox, but they have not as yet become acquainted with the strength of the Secular element. Their action will be watched and recorded, and data will be gathered for proceedings at the next election.

AS TO RENEWALS.

We do not desire to be importunate, and would not urge our readers to undue haste in renewing, but business partakes of the nature of business. Some, possibly, cannot afford to renew; others desire a little time; others still may not know when their subscription is out, and others, again, can renew at one time as well as another. We would be glad to hear from all of these, and upon receipt of advices from them will make arrangements satisfactory to all parties concerned.

MANY questions were sent forward to be answered by Mr. Moody at one of his performances in this city last week, among them these two: "What is the unpardonable sin?" and, "Is waltzing immoral?" The first he answered readily; the unpardonable sin was committed by those who accused Christ of having a devil in him. Concerning the waltz, Mr. Moody said he did not know what a waltz was; he had never seen one. It is astonishing how much information theologians possess about unknowable things, and how unsophisticated they are when everyday matters come under consideration. We are glad to know, however, that we have never committed the unpardonable sin, and that the danger from that source has passed its crisis.

SENATOR BLAIR has reported to the Senate from a Select Committee in favor of the Woman Suffrage bill. The report, after reviewing the history of the Woman's Suffrage movement and making some comments upon the denial of the right of suffrage to women as an injustice equal to that of chattel slavery, concludes as follows:

"Unless this government shall be made and preserved truly republican in form by the enfranchisement of woman, the great reforms which her ballot would accomplish may never be; the demoralization and disintegration now proceeding in the body politic are not likely soon to be arrested. The corruption of the male suffrage is already well-nigh a fatal disease. A republican form of government cannot survive half slave and half free. The ballot is withheld from women because the men are not willing to part with one-half of the sovereign power. There is no other cause for the continued perpetration of this unnatural tyranny. Enfranchise woman or this republic will steadily advance to the same destruction, the same ignoble and tragic catastrophe, which has engulfed all male republics of history."

There is a good deal of "glittering generality" about this report, and the reasons given for according women the ballot are not very sound. They do not touch bed-rock. The reason why women should vote is because it is right and just that they should have a share in governing themselves. Voting by all sorts of people produces a muddled state of affairs at best, and Woman Suffrage might make things worse; but we should do right and take the consequences.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Herald has interviewed Cardinal Manning, of England, on American affairs. In reply to the question whether he could see any harmful results produced by the Sunday newspaper, the cardinal said:

"I certainly can in one respect; that is as regards divorce. In this and other matters of morality I recognize in America a decided tendency to, as I call it, go to seed. I fear that in America freedom of divorce has done much to break up domestic life, and it certainly requires but slight observation to see that in the observance of Sunday you have already drifted far, far away from the usage of your forefathers. Yes, I fear that America morally is going to seed, and her Sunday newspapers must have had something to do with it."

The direct connection between the publishing of a newspaper on Sunday and the freedom of divorce may be apparent to Cardinal Manning, but we doubt if anyone else can see it. The Catholic church, as is well known, makes marriage a prison from which those who are lured into it can escape only through the grave. There is, however, one thing noticeable—the priests are careful to keep out of it.

In answer to an inquiry by Mr. Lyman Smith, of Los Angeles, we would say that the words attributed to Judge North in his address at the late convention: "But five per cent. of the people of this country profess any creed at all," should read, "But five per cent. of the people of this state profess any of the evangelical creeds." Authority for the judge's statement, as corrected, will be found in a work entitled "Our Country," compiled by the Rev. Josiah Strong, D.D., and circulated by the American Tract Society. According to this work some twenty per cent. of the people of the country are members of evangelical or Protestant churches.

LAST Sunday one hundred pious members of the Marion county, Ind., Tippecanoe Club called upon General Harrison and presented him with an expensively bound Bible. A minister made the presentation address, and it is reported that the president-elect was "visibly affected." In reply Mr. Harrison said:

"I shall lean upon you and upon that great company of God-fearing people whom I represent. God bless you, every one. May the consolation of this holy book fill your lives with peace, and make the last the best day of all your honorable lives."

The indications now are that during the next four years this country will sustain the character of a large Sunday-school with the occupant of the White House as its beloved teacher. Give out the Golden Text and let the services proceed.

On February 6 Colonel Ingersoll delivered a funeral address over Mrs. Mary Hewins Fiske, the dramatist and author. The services were held in Scottish Rite Hall, New York, which was crowded to the doors. The dispatch says: "Colonel Ingersoll told in eloquent words the story of a waif adopted by Mrs. Fiske a short time before her death, and which was named by the deceased Philip Herne. The oration closed with the words, 'We pray thee, Mother Nature, that thou wilt take this one and hold her in thine arms as she held and pressed against her generous throbbing heart this abandoned babe. We ask no more.' A quartette from Dockstader's Minstrels assisted in the musical portion of the services."

THESE statistics, claimed to be accurate, are of interest to those who view with misgivings the growing power of the Roman Catholic church: "In the archdiocese of San Francisco there are 93 Catholic churches, 52 stations, 52 chapels, 4 Catholic orphan asylums, in which are kept 1350 children; 26 theological students, 6 colleges, 26 academies, 25 parochial schools, which are attended by 10,000 children, and 178 priests have the care of 200,000 souls." According to the foregoing figures more than half the inhabitants of San Francisco belong to the Catholic fold.

OBSERVATIONS.

I do not know whether I ought to feel gratified or otherwise over the amount of encouragement I have received respecting my proposition to visit Palestine as a correspondent of FREETHOUGHT, and to write a series of cheerful and at the same time veracious letters from the holy land. There are two obverse aspects to the case, or at least one obverse and the other reverse. If those who do not want me to go take that view because they desire a continuation of my services as the editorial crank of this engine of reform, then I have reason to rejoice that my feeble labors have not wholly fallen short of appreciation. If, on the other hand, they do not imagine that I would prove an exalted success as foreign correspondent, wandering among the graves of the prophets and patriarchs, there is less cause for elation on my part. I was in a similar state of uncertainty on a previous occasion when a gentleman in Chicago told me, on my way west, that if I found business on the coast a failure and desired to return, he would send me the means to stay here. Touching the Palestine trip, a man in Oregon writes rather indefinitely. He had previously forwarded twenty-five cents for a book which he failed to receive, and now informs me that I may keep the two-bits and go to Jerusalem or to hell with it; he will not dictate which. Of course, in my position, I must abide by the verdict of the majority. The change of destination is a thing I had not thought of, but I accept the amendment. I shall meet many of my friends there, and hope to see all of them later. So here's my heart and here's my hand, to share with you that happy lot, where saints clad in asbestos stand and never know that it is hot.

Somebody asked an Eastern editor if he indorsed all the communications printed in his paper, and he replied no, that he did not. He added that he had to stretch a point occasionally to indorse what he wrote himself. I do not often have to dissent from my own remarks, but sometimes I am unable to concur in the conclusions of my partner, Mr. Putnam. Last week Mr. Putnam related his experience with Dr. Louis Schlesinger, and gave it as his opinion that the medium possessed no supernatural powers. Here I demur. Dr. Schlesinger is the business manager and advertising agent of the Carrier Dove, a Spiritualist organ, which, while it may be a more ably conducted paper than FREETHOUGHT, does not enjoy a circulation much if any larger than this journal. Notwithstanding this fact, however, Dr. Schlesinger is able to fill his paper every week with from ten to sixteen pages of advertisements. From my experience, as well as from the experience of others, I am prepared to assert that something outside of ordinary human endeavor is necessary to such a result as that. Furthermore, Dr. Schlesinger runs a printing-office in the old St. Ignatius church on Market street, and within the past week, at his solicitation, I gave him a contract to print some envelopes. He charged $5 for a job that Mr. Hinton, on Clay street, does habitually for $2.25. I hold that no man not supernaturally endowed could have collected so much money for so small an item. I am not naturally credulous, and I claim that my mind is to a certain extent devoid of superstition, yet when I am confronted by the stupendous, the miraculous, and the unearthly, I think I am sufficiently candid to admit the fact. Unbelief has its province. It is useful in its place, but it becomes little less than absurd when it sets itself in opposition to the higher capabilities of the human soul.

There is a chaplain in the Senate of California, and it is presumed that he performs his duties with regularity, yet I have never seen but one mention of his efforts. On Tuesday, January 5, as reported by the Examiner, he spoke as follows, his remarks not being addressed to the chair:

O God of wisdom, of truth, and justice, reveal thyself in our midst to-day. Let thy spirit fill every heart and inspire every thought and action; give grace unto these, thy servants, that they may do their whole duty. Give them grace to withstand every temptation to evil; give them wisdom to legislate for the public good, and thy name shall receive the glory forever. Amen.

I am of the opinion that these prayers should be published regularly for promiscuous circulation. They are at present heard only by the persons who happen to be in the senate chamber when they are delivered. The people of the state pay for these prayers, $5 per prayer, and they have a right to know what they are getting for their money.

From a cursory glance at the prayer quoted I should hardly say it is worth $5, as prayers go. Its invitation to the deity to accept the liberty of the floor is graceful, but, I believe, unauthorized. The motion should have originated with a member of the Senate. To say that the legislators are servants of God is to ignore a large and intelligent body of residents of California to whom the senators look for their salary. Again, in order to withstand temptations to do evil our lawsmiths are not so much in need of grace as of conscience and common honesty. Furthermore, to pray that they may be given wisdom to legislate for the public good is an implication that they cannot perform their duties without help from extraneous sources; whereas, the supposition is that they knew their business or they would not have been elected.

These defects I note in the prayer under discussion, but maybe the chaplain can do better, possibly worse. I believe that, as before stated, these prayers should be printed regularly. They are official; they are the voice of California addressed to the throne of grace. As a citizen of California I want to know what we are praying for. I will cheerfully give space in this paper for all the prayers delivered in the legislature of the state, if Chaplain Bane will kindly forward me a transcript of his remarks.

Does anybody know an irresponsible imbecile in Anaheim of the name of Henry Aull? He has addressed a communication to this office in which he improves the opportunity to say that non-religionists have committed the greatest atrocities against human life recorded by history, and that his experience on the road of life corresponds with the following: "Romanists are the most superstitious, ignorant, and honest. The other schools of religionists are more treacherous and dishonest, and more treacherous as they become more Liberal, until the straightout Infidels are reached, who are the most treacherous and unreliable as a class." Mr. Aull closes with the remark that "it would likely be throwing the pearl of metaphysics before swine" for him to "go into details." I would like to inquire what metaphysics has to do with the question? It appears to me to be a simple matter of statistics. Why not introduce the figures? About four years ago the editor of the New York Truth Seeker collected as many Reports of the religious condition of jails, reformatories, penitentiaries, and other "lock-ups" as he could get hold of. The number of convicts given in them was 44,034, of whom 16,431 were "Romanists." The population of the country from which these convicts were drawn was less than one-sixth Catholic, but these one-sixth of Catholics committed more than one-third of the crime. Among the 44,034 prisoners there was one avowed Infidel. I have myself had more or less acquaintance with Roman Catholics. Some of them are ignorant and some are not; some may be honest and trustworthy, but I do not recollect meeting one who was thus. The nominal Protestant, who does not say much on the subject of religion, represents the average of honesty; the Romanist is below him, the Freethinker above. The Sunday-school Protestant, the Y. M. C. A. man, will bear watching every day in the week. He is the man who skips with the funds. I conclude that the matter stands like this: Religious belief makes a person neither honest nor dishonest, but the honest or dishonest person accepts the religion best fitted to him, as water finds its level. An ignorant and unthinking person, with no principle or conscience of his own, makes a good Catholic—that is, Catholicism is adapted to such a person. The same kind of a person makes, also, a good Protestant, because Protestantism is likewise adapted to him. Whether he belong to one church or the other is a matter of education and circumstance. There are more ignorant and dishonest people in the Catholic church than in the Protestant because it began with that kind, and has always discouraged improvement. Besides, the low and vicious are, as a rule, the most prolific, and 999,999 out of every million Catholics are born of Catholic parents. The offspring generally resemble the parents, so that the race perpetuates the religion by producing subjects to which it is adapted.

The church offers the world a code of morals more or less perfect, accompanied by a system of religion. It declares that its religion is of greater necessity to salvation than its ethics; that a man's belief is of more account than his works, and that he must believe anyway and be moral if convenient. Of course those who find it easier to believe than to be moral, accept the religion.

The Freethinker, on the other hand, offers a system of ethics the practice of which, he insists, is necessary to the greatest good of mankind. He calls attention to the various forms of religion, and says, "Believe these things if you choose, but first of all be honest, be charitable, be just." As a consequence he has often been imprisoned for his opinions, but seldom for his acts.

It is plain enough to me, and I hope I make it plain to the readers of these lines, that the advocates of a religion which makes belief of more importance than works will attain greater distinction in piety than in morality; and that a counter-system, represented by Freethinkers, who judge and commend people for what they do instead of what they profess, will serve to make mankind better in fact rather than in theory. The nub of religion is this: Believe or be damned. The kernel of Freethought is as follows: Behave or be condemned. In my opinion there can be but one answer to the question which of these precepts is best calculated to promote good behavior, and that answer is furnished by the statistics already quoted. M.

A new religious sect has made its appearance in New Brunswick, which claims to "aim at diffusing throughout the world love for one's neighbor and at bridging over the chasm which divides the rich from the poor." It will not prove a success. The religion of the other sort is altogether too popular for the reform to get a foothold.—Sunday Gazetteer.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

There are said to be 6000 idle laborers in Los Angeles.—A labor convention composed of delegates from the trades unions of this city and state met in Metropolitan Hall last Sunday. Socialists were not recognized. The convention meets again next Sunday.—Governor Waterman has approved the bill providing for the proper sanitary condition of factories and workshops and compelling employers in mercantile establishments to supply seats for saleswomen.—Adley H. Cummins will lecture at Irving Hall, Tuesday evenings, February 26, March 12, and 26, on "Among the Gods and Goddesses," "The Semitic Race," and "The History of Liberty."—The Rev. D. M. Canright of Otsego, New York, formerly a prominent Seventh-day Advent preacher, is now lecturing in Healdsburg against the doctrines of that church—the speedy coming of Christ and end of the world, the annihilation of the wicked, the sacredness of the Saturday, feet-washing as a Christian ordinance, like the Lord's Supper, etc.—A dispatch from Pomona states that a remedy has been found for the disease which has been ravaging the grapevines.

The Haverhill school matter, that has attracted so much attention in Boston, was taken up by the Catholic Central Association in Cleveland, Ohio, last Sunday, and will be denounced at a general meeting to be held next Sunday. Bishop Gilmore opposed the action of the Boston Protestants very vigorously in an address in which he said: "I deny the right of the state to come into my house with the presumption or the actual violation of just law. I deny the right of the state to coerce the citizen to educate his child, or to send his child to school. I admit, however, the right of the state to make education a condition for the exercise of the rights of citizenship, but I hold that the citizen is free to prepare himself for that or not, as he pleases."—It is reported that the Knights of Labor are about to return to absolute secrecy, so that members of the organization will be totally unknown.—The New York and Brooklyn car-drivers' strike was a failure.—Somebody has donated $20,000,000 to found a great Baptist university in New York. The report that John D. Rockefeller, president of the Standard Oil Company, is the donor is denied by Mr. Rockefeller.—Two faith-healers prayed for a sick man at Ireton, Iowa, and he recovered. The healers were arrested for practicing medicine without a license, but the court held that it was no crime to pray for an afflicted person, and the accused were acquitted.—Woman suffrage was defeated in the Dakota House of Representatives by a majority of 4 votes.—A New York theatre manager who advertised to put "Robert Elsmere" on the stage, has concluded not to do so since Mrs. Ward, the author, protests that the public "would not bear to hear the most intimate and sacred speculative problems discussed behind the footlights."—A bill to submit a prohibitory amendment to the people of Massachusetts has passed the House of Representatives by a large majority.—The wife of John L. Sullivan, the pugilist, has joined the Salvation Army.—The Woman Suffrage bill has been favorably reported to Congress from the Select Committee.

During recent political riots in Rome, the mob secured plunder to the value of $300,000.—The prison authorities having the custody of O'Brien, the Irish editor and agitator, deny in toto the charge that he has been subjected to rough treatment.—Pasteur announces that he has found the true germ of diphtheria, but has not as yet discovered the principles that will neutralize the virus.—The New York Catholic News states that Gladstone resigned his contemplated visit to Rome at the express wish of the Italian government. Signor Crispi has brought all the influence he could command to make Gladstone change his mind or return to England without visiting Rome. It was feared that Gladstone might sanction an appeal to the nations and give countenance to the scheme which it is known the pope has in view.—It is said that the government of Canada will put the annexation question to popular vote.

DEATH OF A NOTABLE REFORMER.

I have received two letters informing me of the death of W. Frey, the well-known Russian expounder of the Religion of Humanity and Communism.

Russians abroad who think of some day returning to their native land find themselves much safer working under an assumed name. Under the name of Frey he was well-known in Liberal circles, and in the history of altruistic settlements in this country the name Frey will always be better known than that given by a Russian priest at the christening ceremony.

Frey was an outspoken Liberal, and on all questions held most liberal opinions. Apprehending in his native land the ways and means by which a few captured the bodies and minds of nearly a hundred millions of people; conceiving the order, or rather disorder, which rendered the enslaved a means for the continuation of their own enslavement, as an honest man he openly attacked that system, and, as an educated man, easily discovered that the Christian religion was the cause of his countrymen's sufferings.

The union of church and state in Russia is strong. At one time the church was stronger, and the state did its biddings. Now the adverse is the case. Still the state could not possibly hold on and be despotic as it is had not the church in Russia that influence which the pope of Rome is so anxious to establish for it all over the world. When one knows this he naturally, though mistakenly, concludes that the same power could be directed to good as to evil. If religion has the power to so lowly enslave people, the same power can be brought about to highly elevate them. One might as well use the same logic in regard to despotism. It seems that Frey was in that sense a religionist, that is to say, he had no belief, but considered religion as a means; and for his having selected Positivism with its Religion of Humanity as an appendage in preference to the other thousand religious systems, he forever established for himself the admiration of those who though differing from him yet highly respected him.

The communistic colony in Kansas having failed as such, he for some time absorbed himself in literary works. He contributed articles of advanced character to the Liberal press in Russia and other countries. During that time, his main work on Religion of Humanity first appeared in the Index in this country, and shortly afterwards it attained a large circulation in pamphlet form. In 1882, when thousands of unfortunate Russian Jews came to this country, Frey grasped the opportunity for establishing another communistic settlement. He did not seem to rely much on an individual convert. One in a community, no matter how altruistic he may be, must be crushed to the wall, and always serve as an example of what man should not be; while if the converts all live in a community of their own, altruism benefits everybody alike and serves as an example to other communities as to what man should be. He thus argued with some young Russian Jews who had received a high education, and soon the scheme of colonization was agreed upon. He naturally supposed that these educated young men would be competent to judge as to qualification for memberships in the future from among the thousands of Russians who then had been thickly arriving. And they made the mistake of taking in nearly everybody rather upon the amount of destitution and promise to abide by the regulations of the community, than upon the amount of education and conviction of their belief in Positivism. In this way a lot of trash, some even devoid of common rules of decency, crept in. The settlement was known as New Odessa, and was located in Oregon. For nearly three years it struggled along. The trash one by one left the premises and promises as soon as the outer world afforded them an opportunity to live as their brainless heads liked best. The educated held out to the last, but were finally compelled to disperse as a settlement, came to San Francisco in a body, worked and assisted each other till they secured means enough to leave for New York, where they are at present engaged in a co-operative business, still adhering to Positivism and hoping for its ultimate victory.

Frey lived in New Odessa for some time, and fearing its fall, went to London, England, where a large organization of Positivists exists, with a view of receiving aid for the settlement. Then and there he delivered a speech which, when published in pamphlet form, bore the title "How Positivism Could Compete with Socialism." It was severely handled by Socialists in this country, and I too had a letter published on the subject in the Denver Labor Enquirer. Frey asked for assistance to enable him to go among the educated Russians and preach Positivism. I thought the Russians were in need of another kind of preaching. He thought that he could establish successfully a colony of Russians with communism, religion, vegetarianism, and a dozen of other isms, all as one code of ethics. I thought, one ism at a time.

In 1883, as assistant secretary of the Portland, Oregon, Auxiliary Liberal League, I was authorized to issue a Call for a state convention with a view of establishing auxiliaries all over the state. I addressed one circular to Frey at New Odessa, and expressed hope that he would endeavor to place the whole settlement as an auxiliary. In reply he expressed sympathy with the movement, and thought that in one sense the colony was an auxiliary already, but that while Liberals and Socialists were trying to change law, he and his adherents were trying to change man, who would subsequently establish the law we were aiming at politically in our Nine Demands.

Whatever difference of opinion there may have existed, Frey was a Freethinker. To the progress of mental liberty he contributed much. His deeds were manly. His god was Reason. His religion was that of Humanity, at the shrine of which he was praying and at the altar of which he was sacrificing most of his years. His death is a great loss to the Liberals of the world, for he had a heart that contained an equal amount of sympathy for every man, woman, and child on earth.

CO-OPERATION AND INDIVIDUALITY.

[Abstract of an address before the San Francisco Sinaloa Club, February 3, by Samuel P. Putnam.]

Co-operation is necessary to civilization. The solitary man is the savage man. He is the victim of nature. The solidarity and the continuity of the race are the conditions of conquest. It is by combination of effort, not only of the present with the present, but of the present with the past, which has made and kept the splendid instrumentalities of progress now in the world. The railroad, the telegraph, the steamship, would be impossible without this oneness of purpose in humanity. The highest flights of genius have never been made except by a common impulse. Genius, invention, art, are the direct fruits of the fraternity of the race.

Co-operation will exist in the nature of things among civilized beings. The form of co-operation to-day is mainly for the benefit of the few, and not of all. The blood of millions is drained to make magnificence for a favored class.

The co-operation of the future, of the highest civilization, should be for the benefit of all. The humblest, the weakest, should share in the glowing harvest. But co-operation should not destroy individuality. This is the great problem: to unite the race, not as machines, but as infinitely diversified men and women. Unity attained at the expense of individualism is not a gain. To cut off the wants, desires, and varied aptitudes of men in order to make harmony, is by no means the ideal society. The ideal society is where everyone is himself, expresses himself, chooses his own career, makes his own fortunes, while, at the same time, heart and hand are joined so that the same wealth and joy flow to all.

The problem is infinitely difficult, and must be realized in all its magnitude before any experiments can be successfully made. It is easy enough to unite submissive men and women, to unite those where one is master and the rest slaves, where there is a religious bond that supports authority. It is easy enough to join harmoniously those who have few wants, few desires, few ambitions. But the life of civilization is in the multiplicity of wants, of desires, of ambitions. To combine so that no want, no desire, no passion, no ambition, is sacrificed, but the whole individual is preserved—this is the problem, and this problem has never yet been solved and is far from solution. But the paradise will not evolve except by its solution. Stephen Pearl Andrews, one of the wisest and best and broadest minds of the century, has done more than any other philosopher to solve the problem, and has given hints of the greatest value. But it never can be solved by pure thought, only by many and manifold experiments, and every experiment, even if a failure, is of priceless value. Everyone who joins a co-operative colony is in a sense a martyr to the world's scientific advancement. He is submitting to an experiment, at cost, frequently, of heart and hope. But the problem must be solved, or the highest life of man is unattainable.

In the heart of the old civilization there is compulsion—compulsion of state, compulsion of society, compulsion of public opinion. There is enormous tyranny. It permeates every sphere. None can escape its power. Very few dare to exercise natural rights. The punishment is too great. Mrs. Grundy is too powerful. The drift of civilization is to destroy individuality. Even the favored few who roll in wealth become dummies, and obey a will not their own.

In the heart of the new civilization there must be freedom, absolute individuality, co-operation, not of suppression but of expression. Society should not be a vast machinery, but an ocean of ever changing life and lustre; each man free, each woman free, not stripped of any passion or power or genius, but every faculty intense and full, and creative of noblest possibilities. This is the ideal society, the new civilization, based on freedom, on individuality, on diversity—yet in diversity manifesting the sublime flower of excellence, all for each, each for all; where the least shall be an inspiration to the greatest, and the greatest shall be bound in love and service to the least.

THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY.

Orthodoxy must thank Infidelity for keeping it a "live corpse." The life of orthodoxy to-day consists not in itself but in its efforts at defense. It shows its greatest activity in refusing to be buried. How ingenious and really interesting are the defenses of Orthodoxy, from Bishop Butler down. Even "Paradise Lost" was written to "vindicate the ways of God to man," and thus answer the Infidel, and surely if it were not for the devil "Paradise Lost" would be a very uninteresting book. We must thank Lucifer for all the poetry there is in it. It is so with most orthodox productions; they are attractive only when fighting the devil. It is the Infidelity they seek to overthrow that gives them lustre. The army of the Lord would be a very dull affair if it were not for the wicked unbelievers that compel it to be in motion and keep its armor bright. It is really an intellectual pleasure to read many of the defenses of popular theology. Their authors ransack heaven and earth and all the fields of philosophy and science and history in order to find arguments. The brightness of Infidelity compels orthodoxy itself to be bright, or it would go by the board; and indeed, so strong have been some of the arguments of the Infidel, so taking and persuasive, that with a sort of daring despair orthodoxy itself has seized upon and turned them to its own support. The sword of Saladin has been wielded by the Christian warrior.

So Infidelity is really a sort of baptism to orthodoxy. It keeps it in motion, and so, to a certain extent, an object of interest. Suppose that all attacks upon Christianity should cease; that it could live simply and solely on what it is in itself and beheld by its adherents as safely and complacently as a government bond, how stale, flat, and unprofitable it would become. The sermons would be duller than ever. Everybody would fall asleep. Like Cain, they would go to the land of Nod, and probably find out how he got his wife. Of course, there would be no need of missionaries, and so there would be no collections; and it must be admitted that a collection is one of the most animating parts of a religious service. How dead many of the churches would be without a collection! Christians would hear the discourse, go home, eat their dinners and be profoundly satisfied. They would not discuss anything, for there would be no need of discussion. Everybody would say yes, and close his eyes in peaceful slumber. There would be no more revivals. The lost sheep having been brought in, all excitement would be over, and the happy hundred would have nothing to bleat about, and so they would lie still, and the shepherd could shear them to his heart's content. All the bright intellects that now get a living by their replies to the Infidel would have to take a country parish and live on donation visits. Wouldn't they heartily pray that the Infidel might come again that they might cudgel him and live in clover? There's nothing pays better to-day than a brilliant attack on Infidelity. It puts money into the pocket. The more Infidelity there is the fatter some Christians grow, for they earn their bread and butter by saying bright things against the unbeliever. In fact, take Infidelity away, and Christianity would lose its virility; it would become a shadow; it would have nothing to live on except ghosts, and that is mighty poor living even for Christianity. One good stout Infidel is worth them all; and I do say that Ingersoll has given more vitality to Christianity than all its legion of ghosts and clergymen; for he has compelled it to think and put its best foot forward and behave itself, and strip itself of a thousand incongruities, and be decent and respectable. Ingersoll has compelled Christianity to put in a new appearance, and present a more civilized aspect, except when under the patronage of Judge Black, when its ancient blackness reappears, and the old barbarian flouts in his naked deformity. Generally, however, in answer to Ingersoll, Christianity has put on a suit of clothes of the 19th century style, and declared that is not quite so bad as the unbeliever and Bible affirm that it is, and for putting on this respectability and modern finish and decency of apparel, and improved looks generally, it must be obliged to the Infidel, who would not let it successfully remain in its old savage manners and dirt. It has had to be shampooed and shaved, and take a Turkish bath and be rubbed and oiled and combed before it could be in a condition to meet the Infidel in a fair and square fight. Christianity, like a cub, has had to be licked into shape, not by its mother, Ignorance, but by its foe, Skepticism. If the religion of Christianity goes down it must be grateful to Infidelity for compelling it to prepare for a respectable demise. Only think what a miserable affair it would be to-day if it had not been continually polished off by the Infidel; and if there is any gold in Christianity it is the Infidel who will at last release it from its false surroundings, and make it valuable in the progress of the race, for it is the Infidel who compels analysis, discrimination, judgment, and selection.

Thus, in every period of history, it is the Infidel who has kept the world to its best thought. His doubts have come by the million, and like electric batteries have startled the most obtuse. The world may hate the Infidel, it may scoff at him and make him an outcast; it may destroy him, but it must answer him. In a thousand ways his questions present themselves. Immortal as the gods, they will not down. Like the tiny snowflake, they start here and there in the heights of human thought, and the avalanche will follow.

The Infidel is a perpetual disturber, I grant. Without him all would be calm, and orthodoxy would have a lovely time. But in that case the world would perish, for there would be nothing to desire and nothing to search for, and hence no action. Universal dullness would sit upon the throne and decay succeed. Disturbance and change are the conditions of life, and the Infidel is the source of these, and he is thus a supreme necessity. As the ice must melt and break in order that spring may come, so the rigid creeds must ever melt and break in order that new processes may come, that new skies may bend over man's advancing way. It is the Infidel, the unbeliever, the skeptic, who brings the ever-changing breeze and the swift currents by which the old is broken down and its hidden life revealed and made illustrious.

The word of the Infidel is the living word, because it is the questioning word. It is the word that evokes, because it is the word that investigates. It is the denial of the truth that makes the truth most precious; for not to accept truth is the highest life, but to prove that it is the truth. The orthodox asks for no proof—he simply accepts. The Infidel demands proof, and it is this which sets the world's brand on fire, and it is this which constitutes the glory of Infidelity.

So much for the spirit of Infidelity. If nothing but a spirit—a negative force—it has been a wondrous help to progress. Let us now look at its positive results, at what out of its spirit it has contributed to the world's advancement.—(To be Continued.)

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

R. B. WESTBROOK, LL.D., PRESIDENT.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary 241 Wash. Boulevard, Chicago

AGAINST THE BLAIR BILL.

[From the Chicago Tribune, February 4.]

"Christ himself was a Sabbath-breaker," said E. A. Stevens, secretary of the American Secular Union, at Aurora Turner Hall, yesterday afternoon. About 800 persons had gathered at the call of the Aurora Turnverein to raise their voices in a protest against the bills introduced in the United States Senate by Senator Blair, one providing for the enforcement of the Sunday as a day of rest and religious worship, and the other proposing a constitutional amendment adding instruction in the principles of the Christian religion to the curriculum of the public schools.

Petitions were circulated and signatures obtained asking Congress "not to pass any bill in regard to the observance of the Sabbath or Lord's Day, or any other religious or ecclesiastical institution or rite, nor to favor in any way the adoption of any resolution for the amendment of the National Constitution that would in any way give preference to the principles of any one religion above another, but that the total separation between religion and state, assured by our national Constitution as it now is, may for ever remain as our fathers established it."

Copies of a protest already adopted by the Aurora Turnverein were distributed. The document set forth:

The rights of conscience are inherent, inalienable, above and beyond all compacts and statutes. They are not and cannot be subjects of legislation. The right of free thought, speech, and action, on all subjects of belief, limited only by the same right in others, is absolute in every intelligent being. Any abridgment of that right, followed to its logical sequences, will destroy society itself. The great and only object of government is the enforcement, not the abridgment, of personal rights. Religion has only to do with man's conscience. It is entirely beyond the jurisdiction of the state. It does not belong to the state to fix and enforce penal sanctions for the violations of laws and obligations which it did not and cannot create or for which no authority is conferred. The powers of the United States government are purely secular. The Constitution prohibits expressly the right to pass any law respecting the establishment of any form of religion.

The meeting was presided over by Adolph Rhein, first speaker of the Aurora Turnverein. A lengthy address was made by E. A. Stevens. He confined himself to the subject in hand, while those who followed him, Jens L. Christensen and Frederick Engelhardt, the proxy justice from Jefferson, attempted to ridicule religion in general and Christianity in particular. Mr. Stevens gave an account of the recent meeting of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, where the propositions of Senator Blair were advocated by a number of ministers, and opposed by a lawyer in behalf of the Secular Union.

The arguments of the religionists, he said, were mainly secular, dwelling on the necessity of a day of rest. "It is a clear case of false pretenses," he said. "It is an attempt to smuggle through Congress a law abolishing inalienable rights and to subordinate the state to the church."

A Sabbath law was universal, he went on, because that which was right in itself was always right, and that which was wrong in itself was always wrong. It invaded the sanctity of personal rights and the right to make contracts and receive compensation for performing them. The less cautious of the Sabbatarians showed that their real purpose was to drag the state behind the ecclesiastical juggernaut and crush by the law what they could not accomplish by moral suasion or logic. Christ was executed by the Roman law because he demanded the total separation of the secular from the religious government. God was outside of the jurisdiction of the legislature of the United States.

Mr. Stevens submitted the following resolution, which was adopted unanimously:

Whereas, the ecclesiastical party by being exempt from a just share of taxation on their property have grown rich and arrogant through this dangerous discrimination, confirming the assumption that, having been granted this unusual privilege, the state considers them a necessary part of it; and

Whereas, Their ungrateful return is seen in attempts to sap the foundations of our state and national life through the enforcement of their mind-debasing dogmas, and by limiting the citizens' mental liberty, seeking to accomplish by force of law what they have utterly failed to do through the power of reason and logic; therefore,

Resolved, That this mass-meeting hereby demands that the General Assembly of Illinois enforce in matters of religion or irreligion the rule of "privileges for none, justice for all," by so amending the exemption laws as to tax all church property in the state.

Mr. Christensen repeated the criticisms of the Old Testament, and said that even the New Testament was not a fit subject for instruction. Christ himself behaved undutifully towards his parents, and was not a good example to children.

Mr. Engelhardt said that religion was the ally of the privileged classes, and it had been decreed that it should be forced on the toilers even if it had to be done with the policeman's club. The same interests were now back of the present attempt to force religion on the people that burned Huss, made Galileo retract, crucified Christ, and even quite recently brought about the death of seven men who opposed themselves to the process of reducing the masses to ignorance, stupidity, and slavery.

EULOGIZING PAINE.

The one hundred and fifty-second anniversary of the birth of Thomas Paine was celebrated last night at Princess Opera House, 558 West Madison street, by the Chicago Secular Union. The hall was handsomely decorated with American flags, and upon the walls a number of selections from Paine's writings were displayed in large type. "The World is My Country. To Do Good is My Religion," "Do Justice, Love Mercy, and Endeavor to Make Our Fellow Creatures Happy," and "Free Thought Will Give Us Truth" were the most prominent.

The program consisted of vocal and instrumental selections, with several brief speeches on the life and character of Thomas Paine. The president of the Secular Union, Mr. E. A. Stevens, said it was fitting that they should celebrate with love and gladness the natal day of the truest friend the people ever had. Paine was a glorious patriot, a statesman whose principle was higher than diplomacy, and whose devotion to justice and freedom was above and beyond all selfishness.

Professor George A. Vinton, of the Chicago Dramatic and Musical College, said Paine spoke like an oracle from heaven. He loved liberty, not only for himself, but for all mankind. He hated bigotry and oppression, both in church and state. Professor Vinton also gave as a recitation the well known poem, "The Queen's Touch."

Mrs. M. A. Freeman also spoke in eulogistic terms of Paine. "He did not believe in hell," she said. "He believed in a heaven here. He did not come to save a few sects, or even a nation, but the whole world. He preached eternal salvation for all."

Musical selections were rendered by J. H. McNab, Frank Pearson, C. P. Thompson, Mrs. Anna Orvis, and Joseph May. Short addresses were also made by William Thompson, B. H. Marlett, and Judge F. C. Russell. Refreshments and dancing followed the formal program.—Chicago Inter-Ocean, Jan. 31.

Among the musical numbers, those worthy of special mention were the charming soprano solo, "Vive l'America," by Mrs. Anna Orvis, who kindly volunteered her services; the splendid rendition of the "Skipper of St. Ives," by the leading bass of the Apollo Club, F. Pearson, Esq., and the creditable piano performance of young Master C. E. Thompson. As a matter of course the director of the Chicago Dramatic College, Prof. Geo. A. Vinton, gave his recital in faultless and effective style.

Of the eulogies, the best were Mrs. Freeman's, Thompson's, and Marlett's, the two latter carrying off equal honors as to quality of composition. The former's delivery was remarkably fine, easy, and unconstrained, which may be attributed to Professor Vinton's tuition. Judge Russell is too metaphysical and philosophical a thinker to be specially felicitous as a eulogistic orator. He has more depth than dash.

Following, is a portion of Mrs. Freeman's oration:

In the old Book it reads: "And I will put a lying spirit into the mouths of my prophets to deceive the people." In one of the editions of the sacred volume are given what purport to be the last words of eminent Freethinkers—their fear and repentance. Among these is a short sketch of Thomas Paine. The misrepresentations embodied in it, the untruthfulness, are evidence that according to the passage quoted from Holy Writ the compilers were true prophets of the Lord.

Among Paine's opponents there were none grand enough to grasp the meaning of his philosophy, to conceive even an outline of his life. "Doing justice, loving mercy, and endeavoring to make our fellow-creatures happy." That was the man. That was the life he lived. That was the simple faith he died in. Had he need of more? Should his death bed have been one of terror? What phantom wrong could have been evoked at that last hour? Doing justice? Justice has no Nemesis to torture him who does her will. Loving mercy? The dew from heaven falls not lighter than peace on the white soul of the compassionate man. Endeavoring to make our fellow creatures happy? An ambition worthy of a god. He should have died as Socrates died, calmly, sweetly, at peace with all the world. He should have died as a Christ died, forgiving the hands that hurt him. He, too, came to save the world. He did not believe in a hell; he believed in a heaven here. He would not accept eternal torture for one poor, wretched human being.

Paine was a patriot, but the world was his constituency. He did not come to save Ireland, Germany, Russia, or France. He did not come to save a few sects—Methodists, Baptists, or Catholics. He came to save the world. He knew eternal justice demanded that the world should be saved and he refused to accept anything short of eternal salvation for all.

An Englishman by birth, yet the history of America could not be written without his name. He knew no nationality. He came to save the people, the whole people. To save them from poverty, from superstition; to lift from their bowed necks the cruel heels of tyrants, to take from their poor, patient hands the chains of oppression. He hated the tyrant everywhere. He denounced injustice. He scorned the sycophant. With pitiless power he tore the mask from the face of royalty. Reason laughed at the exposure—the poor pretense of "divinely anointed." The head of the king could never more be made to touch the clouds. His glory had departed. He lay prone in the dust, henceforth and for ever, a poor Baal, a priest-made thing at the people's feet, for Thomas Paine had written the "Rights of Man."

He never sacrificed principle for policy. He never stopped to ask, "Is it popular? Does it pay?" He did what was right, assured that the right must ever pay. He spoke what he thought, for he felt that truth only is eternal. And because he did this his name will endure so long as men love justice, and honesty is more admired than hypocrisy. He was never on the popular side. The republic glowed and burnt, an all-consuming fire, alone in that active brain. His great heart held the grand ideal. He bent all the energies of his wonderful will to impart to others a conception of his daring dream: Jefferson, Franklin, Washington, one by one, caught the spirit of his inspiration, and the Revolution was a reality. The people had been born. Washington is called the "Father of his Country." Thomas Paine was the incarnation of its Liberty.

Amid the red glare of the downfall of the Bourbon reign, the intrepid soldier and statesman is found again facing the fearful forces of despotism. The effete monarchies of Europe tremble. Through a thousand centuries Christian civilization has tortured the people, robbed them, beat them with cruel blows into a white heat of fury. Now it looks on dismayed at the madness of the wretched canaille. Even the loving persuasion of Paine was powerless to arouse their reason. The elements would not be stilled; the storm would not be hushed. When the sky cleared the scene was like fair fields laid waste by wind and hail. The grandest and best, as well as the weakest, had gone down. Nature is pitiless in her progress. To give vent to a volcano a continent must tumble into ruins.

The life of Paine is a lesson for all time. It illustrates how great a work can be accomplished by one individual. His dream, it is true, has fallen far short of realization, but it has left its impress upon the ages, for love of liberty must exist so long as the footfall of man is felt on the green earth. The work he began must go on. He did not, he could not accomplish all. A thousand battles are to be fought. Wrong is on every hand. There is not a noble deed of the past but that may be emulated to-day. Tyranny, superstition, monopoly are advancing—terrible forces over the rights of the people. No need to look back and sigh for glory. The Thermopylae is here. See to it, O young American, that you as readily as Spartan hero defend the pass to liberty. No need to long for the days of Valley Forge. A great army is now marching through the land, loyal as yet to the flag—men, women, and little children. Their feet are bare and bleeding; their clothing tattered and torn; they cry for bread, and stretching their hands toward the eternal hills, they beg for coal. This army grows larger year by year. It is becoming a terror. See to it, young American, that you do something for this army of destitute fellows. Its existence is a danger. Sure destruction comes to the land whose people are too wretched to be trusted in its defense. This is a Christian civilization, we are told. Let Christianity have the glory of this wretchedness. The idea of the Freethinker—the humanitarian—has no eternal misery here nor in the hereafter. The greatest happiness to the greatest number; Christianity the greatest misery to the greatest number. In that eternity whose limit is boundless only the few are to be saved, the vast, vast majority to be damned. All Christian civilizations have been modeled on that plan. And when a nation has been made thoroughly Christian the people have been most thoroughly wretched.

To save them—the people—from this wretchedness, is the work of the American Secular Union—the separation of Church and State. To do this is to eventually realize the glorious life-work of Thomas Paine.

Here are a few excerpts from Thompson's tribute:

Paine needs no praise, but if justice were done him we shall write one of the grandest epitaphs dedicated to man. . . In the name of humanity his fervid words in freedom's cause burned deep into the tyrant's heart, and shook the foundation of the bastille of oppression. His "Rights of Man," "Crisis," and "Age of Reason" will hold their kingly throne as long as reason lasts and justice reigns. . . Few of the brilliant phrase-coiners live up to them, but he who uttered one of the grandest of recorded sentences: "The world is my country, to do good my religion," lived up to it in its broadest sense. To him humanity had no narrow bounds, and no limitation of state, town, or country fettered him like a caged, sweet warbler, or a chained slave. . . Nothing so inspires the soul, which touches the strings of justice, mercy, and love, as the thrill of joy and the tenderness of pity, which gives such an impetus to our higher selves as the contemplation of a life spent in the interests of humanity. A life where chagrin and anguish have been borne with fortitude that a grand purpose may be accomplished. . . Liberty, justice, and equal rights are not yet respectable. Mental freedom is an outcast, is spurned with contempt, and the minds of the majority are still bound and riveted by the shackles of superstition. Mental liberty is below par, and mental slavery is the passport of the day. . . When Paine receives his just deserts then truth will not be dressed in rags, nor liberty hunted round the world.

While the entertainment part of the program, owing to the unavoidable absence of some of the promised talent, was not quite up to our usual standard, the quartette sang, "Tell Me, Flora," with splendid effect, and during the dance intermission, the Le Paige sisters, Ella and Maud, gave their Highland Fling and Sailor's Hornpipe. They performed by special invitation at the actor's benefit at Minneapolis Opera House, a couple of weeks ago, when W. J. Florence made them a present of his special souvenir, his little hatchet, emblematic of his relationship to the historical cherry-tree chopper in the matter of veracity. We never before had a ball where everyone seemed to so thoroughly enjoy themselves, and where such happy abandon and good fellowship prevailed.

PAINE ANNIVERSARY IN COOS COUNTY, OREGON.

As is by this time well known by Mr. Putnam, there are staunch and true Liberals in Coos county, Oregon. Chief among these it is fair to mention Hon. H. S. Hazzard of Empire city, J. D. Garfield of Marshfield, E. Bender of Myrtle Point, the five Schroeders of Hall's Prairie, H. B. Nichols of Coquille city, Thomas Lowe of Randolph, and Titus V. Nichols of Bandon.

There was a Paine anniversary celebration held at Myrtle Point on the evening of the 29th of January, 1889. Bender's hall was filled to overflowing by substantial and respected citizens of Coos county, members of the Coquille Secular Union, and others.

That indefatigable and earnest worker in the cause, J. Henry Schroeder, Esq., of Arago, local president of the Secular Union, had as usual attended in the best manner to all arrangements. P. O. Childstrom, formerly of Bandon, now a resident of San Francisco, presided. Hon. H. S. Hazzard delivered the oration, which was a masterly and highly able eulogy and defense of Thomas Paine, occupying about an hour and a quarter's time, and which was most attentively listened to by the large and appreciative audience.

The Myrtle Point brass band, of which Mr. E. Bender is leader, and the numerous Schroeders its chief body, discoursed instrumental music throughout the evening in its usual able, artistic, and pleasing way, and Miss Schroeder, accompanied on the piano by her father, J. Henry Schroeder, rendered a couple of selections of most sweet-voiced song. The evening's entertainment terminated with a sociable, and dancing was kept up by the younger ladies and gentlemen present till early dawn.

All in all, the Paine celebration in Coos county, Oregon, for 1889 was a decided success. The credit for this rests first with J. Henry Schroeder, who, with his usual faithful work, good arranging, and popular manners, brought the people out, and then saw to it that everything went off smoothly and entertainingly. The Liberals of Coos are to be congratulated that the cause is in the hands of such able management, and that it is represented by its principal and foremost worthy and substantial citizens. Brother Putnam may well take considerable credit for the good seed sown here about two years ago and subsequently.

The world moves. Mankind is slowly but surely becoming free.

A SPECIAL meeting of the Topolobampo group will be held on Sunday, February 17, at 618 Harrison street, San Francisco, at 10 A. M.

TWO FALSE CLAIMS OF CHRISTIANS.

Asylums for the insane, for the blind, for the inebriate—these and a thousand other good things are the outgrowths of the teaching of Christ. The teachings of Infidelity are guilty of none of these good things.

The above extract is taken from the writings of a minister, and, although it is an old libel on truth, there are many people who take it for granted as a fact. Why? Because it comes from one who has had a call from their God to tell what they suppose is the truth; also, because they read theological literature with theology-dimmed spectacles, whereas if they would take the trouble to examine the claim set up by this so-called holy man and religious books and papers, they would learn that they do not always state facts. The average parson loves to be continually shouting, "Christianity is the mother of morality; Infidelity teaches immorality and crime. Civilization is due to Christianity. Christianity fosters education by building colleges and schools. Science is indebted to Christianity for its advancement." I would like to see just one parson who is honest enough to come out squarely and substantiate one or all of those claims by facts and figures.

Our reverend's claim that asylums, hospitals, and one thousand more good things are the outgrowth of the teachings of Christ—that Infidelity is guilty of none of those things, will not bear the light of investigation. Let us see what are the facts of the case: hundreds of years before Christianity there were asylums for the insane in Egypt and the Indies; Greece had homes for the poor, for the refugees, and she had hospitals for the sick. Hundreds of years before the Christian superstition had sprouted; hundreds of years before the mythical Jesus, an emperor of India established hospitals in every town in his empire. These hospitals existed for hundreds of years. Where were the outgrowths of Christianity at that time? In Mexico and Peru charitable institutions were maintained throughout those countries. Rome always attended to the wants of her poor. Were the corn laws of Caius Gracchus, for the benefit of the poor, the outgrowths of Christianity? Except in a few monasteries, where were your hospitals for fifteen hundred years? Where were your boasted asylums for fifteen hundred years? The first asylum for the insane that we have any record of was built in the seventh century by the Mohammedans. The first asylum built in a Christian country was in Spain, seven hundred years later, built by a monk for the purpose of protecting the poor unfortunates from the insults of their Christian neighbors; so says the historian. Where were your boasted schools for fifteen hundred years? Until Robert Owen, an Infidel, set an example in New Lanark, there was not a school fit to be called a school for children, in England. Colleges and schools, during these fifteen hundred years, were scattered all over Pagan lands. History will tell you that education and sciences were forced into Christian countries at the point of the Pagan lance. The ancients looked upon insanity with awe, and it was considered sacred. They cured their insane with flowers, music, and kindness. How did Christians treat their insane? From the time of the first Christian asylum down to the eighteenth century, the keepers for the insane were chosen for their brutal strength and brutal natures rather than for their moral and intellectual qualities. The asylums were hells of torture. In England the first measure to reform the institution for the insane was made by Dr. Franklin in 1750. He was followed in his good work by Dr. Pinel, in 1792, who liberated 53 patients at the Bicetre, from chains with which they were bound. In 1793 a commission was appointed by the House of Commons, whose investigations revealed a most horrible state of affairs. They revealed the fact that it was the custom, when lunatics were taken to Dublin, to tie them to the back of a cart, and force them to walk the entire distance. About one in five lost an arm by that treatment. It was found that in one asylum, where there were twenty-three patients confined, the building was one room, 16x21 feet, and seven feet high; no window, no means of ventilation; the door opened opposite a pig-sty and dung heap. The room had six cells; three had floors and three had none. The bedsteads were wooden boxes, six feet long by two and a half feet wide, to which the patients were chained, like wild animals, and treated worse. Straw was all they had to lie upon. That straw was not changed often. The commission reported that the patients were so dirty that a close examination was impossible. How is that for an outgrowth of Christ? How does that compare with Pagan treatment of their insane? How does our Christian parson like the style of treatment of the insane by Christians down to the latter part of the eighteenth century? Are you not proud of your distinctly Christian institution for the insane? We will give the devil his due. Christians are welcome to the glory. Freethought was muzzled in those days. It is a fact that no honest person can deny that Freethought has spread rapidly since the latter part of the eighteenth century, and since that time more regard has been paid to humane treatment of the insane. Out of the one hundred or more institutes for the insane in the United States how many were built by the church? For instance, how many were built and kept up by the Campbellites? The asylums are state, national, and city institutions, and the Infidel pays his proportion of taxes for their maintenance. It is a significant fact that the most Christian countries have the largest per cent. of insane; and another fact, which our parsons do not love to inform their flocks, is this: the insane asylums have a very large quota of Christians crazed by the outgrowths of the teachings of the religion of "believe or be damned." The Moodys, Sankeys, and other emotionalists are furnishing more candidates for the asylums, so that the supply will not run short. Christianity has not built enough asylums in the United States to contain the insane crazed by its teachings.

"The teachings of Infidelity are guilty of none of these good things" (building asylums, hospitals, and a thousand more good things). Let us puncture that theological bubble. An Infidel, Peter Brigham, gave $3,000,000 for establishing hospitals for the sick in Boston; James Smithson, an Infidel, gave $500,000 to found the Smithsonian Institute; Stephen Girard, an Infidel, left $6,000,000 to establish an orphan's college in Philadelphia; James Lick, an Infidel, gave more than $1,000,000 for benevolent and scientific purposes; John Redmon, an Infidel, gave $400,000 to supply and keep free beds in the hospital of Boston; Robert Owen, an Infidel, gave $500,000, and devoted his life to the interest of the poor; Wm. Maclure, an Infidel, gave $500,000 to help the poor men of Indiana; Peter Cooper, an Infidel, gave a large amount to benefit humanity; Henry Seibert, an Infidel, gave $500,000 to science and charity; and many other Infidels have given money and time to benefit and make the human family better.

I would like to ask our boastful parsons to inform me if there is any priest or preacher who gives as much to charity as R. G. Ingersoll. "What has Infidelity done for charity?" is a taunt that is unjust and dishonest, emanating from those who are either ignorant or bigoted. This may seem harsh to the sensitive ears of the parsons, but any reader of history can arrive at no other conclusion. Asylums, hospitals, and colleges were established hundreds of years before Christianity. There were no asylums built in Christian countries for fifteen hundred years. The Mohammedans instituted asylums hundreds of years before Christians did. How weak and puerile are the vaporings of priests who endeavor to hide the truth for the mythical Christ's sake! It is curious how some parsons who, outside of their religion, are candid and honest, will wilfully misrepresent facts when their religion is at stake. St. Paul, and some of the early Christian fathers, taught that it was no sin to lie for Christ's sake. Consequently, our parsons have a precedence to pin their bad habit to—a habit that is an outgrowth of a religion that has a license for crime. I would like to see one parson that would give credit when credit is due, and substantiate claims by facts, not fiction.

THE Golder Gate Bohemian Club held its annual reunion and ball last Saturday evening at Union Square Hall, San Francisco, and through the courtesy of Mr. J. Vostrovsky, of San Jose, who always attends, the occupants of the editorial chairs of FREETHOUGHT were enabled to be present. The Bohemians are not numerous, but they make a select company. The Korbel Brothers, and Mr. Baloun, and Dr. Proshek, and many others, are representative citizens. Mr. and Mrs. Vostrovsky enjoy a wide acquaintance among their countrymen, and there was none present among the ladies more popular than their vivacious daughter. The music was good; the happy little children had no end of fun; and with all the handsome men and pretty women in bright dresses, and flags and banners, and patriotic airs, and sociability, nobody could help enjoying himself, and nobody wanted to.

It is easier for a camel to get through the eye of a needle than for the savage to get through his need for an idol.—Puck.

ON the 1st of January, FREETHOUGHT, published by Messrs. Putnam & Macdonald in San Francisco, was enlarged from twelve to sixteen pages. We are glad to see this evidence of success on the part of our friends on the Pacific coast.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

THE Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, of New York, who favors high license, has been formally denounced by a prohibition convention as "a traitor to his church, his God, and his country." This leaves nothing to be said, except that his clothes don't fit him.—Ex.

"WE deem it most unjust," says the editor of the Hastings, Mich., Plaindealer, "that the laborer shall be prohibited from earning wealth on the Sabbath to pay interest, and at the same time capital be allowed to work on that day." The editor of the Plaindealer therefore prays that the legislature may so amend the Sunday law that mortgages and other interest obligations shall not draw interest on the first day of the week.

FORTUNE-TELLERS are punished with some six-months' or two years' imprisonment. How is it the law allows schemers to found a "Lord's treasury" by promising immortality to the geese who bring their money to it? It looks as if in America, as in England, swindling may be practiced with impunity in the name of religion. One meets with just as many cases of the adroit blending of the worship of God and mammon.—Max O'Rell.

B. F. UNDERWOOD has spent the month of January lecturing in Utah. He concluded his engagements in the territory with a lecture on "Radicalism and Conservatism" in the Opera House in this city, Sunday evening. His lectures here have been of a high order, and his work has done much to undo the bad impression created for "Liberalism" by most of the rant that has been given here of late under that name. As a clear, calm, logical, candid, broad-minded reasoner, Mr. Underwood has made a marked impression upon his hearers in Salt Lake, and when he comes this way again he will doubtless receive a hearty welcome. His lecture of Sunday evening was highly enjoyed by a large and enthusiastic audience.—Salt Lake Tribune.

REGARDING the expunging of the word Infidel from our vocabulary, as proposed by "A Liberal," I consider his view erroneous. It reminds me of the struggles of the Campbellites to "expunge" that, to them, objectionable appellation. The more they kicked the tighter it stuck, and their success has always been conspicuous for its absence. Let us not repeat their follies. "Infidel" is derivative of fides, faith; the prefix in signifying without—without faith. And I am pleased to know that Liberals are very generally without faith in the dogmas of Christianity, and are therefore Infidel to that doctrine. And I, for one, am not ashamed of the name. So far as orthodoxy is concerned, I am an Infidel with a big I. Let the orthodox make the most of it.—F. S. MATTESON.

A SOMEWHAT eccentric parson in southern Virginia was intending to preach from the text, "And the spirit of the Holy Ghost descended like a dove." It occurred to him that it would illustrate the text forcibly to have a dove let down with a string from the ventilator above the pulpit just as he uttered the words. So an old negro servant was brought to the church on Saturday and sent up in the garret to rehearse letting down the dove. It worked to perfection, and on Sabbath morning the old darkey was again sent to the garret before the opening hymn. The preacher reached the words, "And the spirit of the Holy Ghost descended like a dove," but the dove didn't descend. The text was repeated, and still no dove appeared. A third time the parson repeated the words, and then glanced up at the ventilator to see what was wrong. Slowly the ventilator opened, and in the space appeared a woolly head. "Say, massa!" said the darkey, "Ise 'fraid de

How does the Roman Catholic church stand now in the Dominion? It is owner of five million acres of land—making it the biggest landed proprietor on the American continent—with 900 parish churches and 300 convents, and an annual revenue of something like $12,000,000; paying no taxes, making the laws, compelling the courts of the Dominion to do its will, yea, standing as it does on the statute books above the law, blindly obeyed by more than three-fourths of the inhabitants of the province of Quebec, you can easily understand what a power for good or evil is this institution. It will infallibly destroy all vestige of liberty in this country unless wise legislation be speedily instituted to curtail its special privileges.—Alastor, in Toronto Secular Thought.

No; the United States don't want to annex Quebec. New England has enough of Canadian Catholics within her borders to-day. They have driven the New Englander out of his woods, the shoemaker from his shop, the Massachusetts girl from her loom, and the honest Yankee laborer from the farm. They are given over to religion and rum, to horse-trading and wife-beating. They have none of the virtues of the French Frenchman, but all his vices. The men are thoroughly bad; the women worse, and the boys and girls are a little smarter in evil-doing than their parents, readily assimilating the cuter wickedness of the Yankee. We have seen these Canucks in all their glory in New England towns, and it is this race in Quebec who make it possible for Cardinal Taschereau with his "bodyguard of prelates" to insult by his preposterous claims every decent man in the neighborhood. The politicians are afraid of the priests because the latter own the majority of voters body and soul.—The Truth Seeker.

IN commenting upon the late address of the pope before the Sacred college, America, a Chicago paper, remarks that "this address of Leo XIII. possesses the deepest interest for Americans. It is a notification to the 7,200,000 Roman Catholics in the United States that their supreme allegiance is due, not to the Republic, but to the pontificate. If this claim were merely the garrulous utterance of an old man, jealous of the authority and the prestige that has departed from his office, Americans could afford to dismiss it with a smile. But it is the expression of the pivotal dogma upon which revolves the mighty system of Roman supremacy over its children among the children of the earth. It is the doctrine subscribed to by over eight thousand priests, and preached by them to over ten thousand congregations, to over seven million American citizens. Worse than this, it is the un-American theory inculcated by alien teachers in 2,700 parochial schools to over five hundred and thirty-seven thousand American children."

A GENTLEMAN who "has been through all the various stages of what is called charity work," assures the Churchman that "there is no fraction of any percentage of meritorious mendicancy in New York." In other words, there are no beggars who deserve help. "Yet," adds the Sun, "the charitable societies are competing with each other in the creation and encouragement of pauperism, while in many cases the really deserving and self-respecting poor endure distress in silence, so that charity must search to find them out. There is something radically wrong about this whole business, and it has its origin in the multiplication of the professional philanthropists. They are the men and women who make a living out of dispensing other people's alms, and who seek to magnify their office by collecting and distributing as much money as possible." These private societies of professional ecclesiastical reformers ought all to be done away. Let the state take care of those who cannot or will not work, and not turn them over to men whose interest lies in making paupers who are to be used as levers to pry cash out of the pockets of good-hearted people. The state might find a way to make those who will not work reconsider their determination, but the incentives of the charitable societies are all in the other direction. Honest destitution should be aided tenderly; wilful wretchedness should be treated as a crime. It is undoubtedly true that professional philanthropy encourages pauperism more than it relieves actual distress.—The Truth Seeker.

WHEN Robert Ingersoll presents himself at the gate of paradise, and St. Peter sees that good, open face, radiant with happiness, the doors will be thrown wide open to let him pass, and the saint will say:

"Come, Robert, come in. Thy happy face pleases me. We have just let in a cargo of long-faced folk—Presbyterians, I'll be bound, and it does one good to look at thee. Thou hast done thy utmost to stifle the hydra-headed monster Superstition, and to destroy the infamies which are in circulation on the subject of the Lord. Come in, friend, thou hast loved, thou hast been beloved, thou hast preached concord, mercy, peace, love, and happiness; come, take thy place amongst the benefactors of the human race."—Max O'Rell.

THE antiquity of the different versions of the Golden Rule stands thus: Golden Rule by Confucius, 500 B.C.: "Do unto another what you would have him do unto you, and do not to another what you would not have him do unto you. Thou needest this law alone. It is the foundation of all the rest." Golden Rule by Aristotle, 385 B.C.: "We should conduct ourselves towards others as we would have others act towards us." Golden Rule by Pittacus, 650 B.C.: "Do not to your neighbor what you would take ill from him." Golden Rule by Thales, 464 B.C.: "Avoid doing what you would blame others for doing." Golden Rule by Aristippus, 365 B.C.: "Cherish reciprocal benevolence, which will make you as anxious for another's welfare as your own." Golden Rule by Sextus, a Pythagorean, 406 B.C.: "What you wish your neighbors to be to you, such be also to them." Golden Rule by Hillel, 50 B.C.: "Do not to others what you would not like others to do to you."—The Agnostic Journal.

Believe In Man.

Believe in man, nor turn away.
Lo! man advances year by year;
Time bears him upward, and his sphere
Of life must broaden day by day.
Believe in man with large belief,
The garnered grain each harvest time
Hath promise, roundness and full prime
For all the empty chaff and sheaf.
Believe in man with proud belief,
Truth keeps the bottom of her well,
And when the thief peeps down, the thief
Peeps back at him, perpetual.
Faint not that this or that man fell;
For one that falls, a thousand rise
To lift white Progress to the skies;
Truth keeps the bottom of her well.
Fear not for man, nor cease to delve
For cool, sweet truth, with large belief.
Lo! Christ himself chose only twelve,
Yet one of these turned out a thief.

A Biblical Opinion of Man.

Wife—The Bible says much in favor of women, John. I thought that the Israelites kept their women in the background, but if they did, the Bible, which is their history, doesn't.

Husband—Humph! The Israelites did well by keeping their women in the background; that's where women should be.

Wife—But still the Bible says that—

Husband—Oh, I know there are a few women mentioned in the Bible—there was Jezebel, she was a woman.

Wife—Yes; and there was Ahab; he was a man. And there was—

Husband—It is no use talking, Mary. The Bible is a history of men. Women are mentioned only incidentally as they had influence on the actions of men. The book says little about women compared to what it does about men.

Wife (musingly)—You may be right, John, now when I come to think of it. There is one thing, at any rate, it says about men that it does not say about women.

Husband (smilingly)—I thought you would come to your senses, Mary. What is it the book says about men that it does not say about women?

Wife (placidly)—It says all men are liars.

Then the husband arose and put on his hat and went to see what kind of a night it was.—London Tid Bits.

A WOMAN'S CATECHISM.

The following questions and answers are from the Woman's Journal:

Who inculcate purity of heart, and yet are so confined to the sentiment of sex that they decide from the shape of the body, instead of attributes of the soul, in admitting candidates for the ministry? Ans.—Clergymen.

Who are so obstinate in their self-conceit, and so fond of doing all the talking, that they will not allow a word from any representative of the majority of the church? Ans.—Clergymen.

Who require women to promise obedience in the marriage service? Ans.—Clergymen (except among the Methodists).

Who point the way of humility, courtesy, and self-denial to women, but refuse to lead the march? Ans.—Clergymen.

Who love the topmost seats in every place? Ans.—Clergymen.

CONSTANTINE'S SUNDAY.

The National Reformers have a great deal to say about American institutions, the American Sunday, etc.; but the fact is, the movement is wholly un-American. In a speech the other day, the editor of FREETHOUGHT made the following point, which we think is exceedingly well taken:

"Constantine, the Roman emperor, who lived over three hundred years after Christ, first instituted the observance of Sunday as the sacred day—the Sabbath; and we of the nineteenth century are compelled to adjourn the celebration of our national anniversary, the Fourth of July, when it comes upon a Sunday, in recognition of Constantine's Sabbath; and every time we do so, our flag is trailed in the dust before the edict of a Roman emperor."

The whole National Reform movement is but an effort to Romanize America. There is only one error in the above, and that is, that Constantine instituted the observance of Sunday as a sacred day. Although he issued the first law that ever existed in regard to Sunday, its observance as a sacred day was unknown till long after Constantine's time. His law was like the one the National Reformers want; it was not designed to make men very religious, only to make some of them appear so outwardly.—American Sentinel.

OLD BUT ALWAYS GOOD.

Not many years ago Professor Huxley had a little tilt with Samuel Wilberforce, bishop of Oxford, who blandly asked him, in the presence of a large audience, "Is the learned gentleman willing to have it go forth to the world that he believes himself to be descended from a monkey?" Professor Huxley arose and replied in his quiet manner: "It seems to me that the learned bishop hardly appreciates our position and duty as men of science. We are not here to inquire what we would prefer, but what is true. The progress of science from the beginning has been a conflict with old prejudices. The true origin of man is not a question of likes and dislikes, to be settled by consulting the feelings, but it is a question of evidence, to be settled by strict scientific investigation. But as the learned bishop is curious to know my state of feelings upon the subject, I have no hesitation in saying that, were it a matter of choice with me (which clearly it is not) whether I should be descended from a respectable monkey or from a bishop of the English church, who can put his brains to no better use than to ridicule science and misrepresent its cultivators, I would certainly choose the monkey!"

MRS. GLADSTONE is quoted as saying that her husband considers it one of his most sacred duties to do his utmost to check the flood of Infidelity that is sweeping over England.

LILIAN'S STORY.

We apologize hysterically for keeping our readers in suspense by allowing the continuation of Lilian's narrative to remain unprinted for two weeks. It now proceeds:

PARKER & CO.

BY A. LILIAN ANDREWS, AUTHOR OF "ONE PENNY," "NELLIE'S MONKEY," AND OTHER TALES.

CHAPTER II.

"None of us will go to live with you; we do not want to part." "Oh! you don't, eh? Well, you don't hear of me again." With that, Uncle Bert road away.

Anita stood looking after Uncle Bert. Then she went into the house and told the others all about it.

CHAPTER III.

The next day Anita called a meeting to decide what they would do to earn a living. Bert said, "Take in sewing."

"No, that wouldn't be nice," said Grace.

"I know how to earn a living, teep a tandy store and sell tandy," said Baby Maisy.

"That would be just the thing; we know how to make candy, and we could sell it to Mr. S. Steward.

A Veteran In Need.

To the Freethought and Liberal Friends everywhere:

I have just received a letter from Professor J. H. Cook, of Columbus, Kansas, stating that he is 74 years old, helpless with a lingering incurable disease, in a lone house and no money; has been living on 5 cents a day all winter, with no friends or relatives to appeal to, and too sensitive to apply to the authorities. I have known Brother Cook well and long. He is a life-long worker for our glorious cause of driving out superstition from the minds of humanity. He has lectured and written much, but is now old and feeble and in pressing want. Will not the friends of Humanity and old wornout lecturers send him something to help him along? He is worthy and noble, and should not be forgotten in his time of age and great need. Let each and all do what they can.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

Always With Us.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have been absent from home most of the time during the past three months, and too busy to take a hand in the convention, which I hoped to be able to do, but I wish to have you put me down as a member of the Society, and inclose my mite towards paying expenses. I also inclose five dollars to renew my subscription to FREETHOUGHT and keep alive a few others that I sent in last year, until I can have further time to see if the parties become voluntary subscribers. There must be fifteen or twenty of them in all, and I may be able to continue them all or send you as many new ones during the present year.

I was much disappointed that my little scheme for securing one thousand subscribers at full rates failed so entirely of the response I expected it would receive, for I believe in co-operation, and while it would come heavy on one or two to give any real material help by themselves, a hundred men could do so easily, without its being burdensome at all to any of them.

I do not suppose it would be worth while to renew the proposition, but if any one else will make one as good, requiring the expenditure of no greater amount of money, they can put me down as one of the number to join the club. I suppose the paper in its enlarged form will be as much in need of help as ever, and I certainly feel that it is more deserving of support than it was at the beginning. Truly, H. P. STONE.

For a Free Sunday.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I feel like writing a few lines for the good of the cause and your encouragement. Yesterday I received FREETHOUGHT of January 26. It is the best copy yet; glad you are getting enthused on the Sunday question. That is right. We have a great work to do, and I shall expect much from FREETHOUGHT. Through my instrumentality we had a meeting at the school-house last Sunday. There was a general turnout and much interest. We had the Blair bill read and discussed; there was not one to defend it. We are nearly unanimous here for a free Sunday, though occasionally I run across a bigot. Outside of our valley it is different. In Escondido, eight miles away, which is our trading-point, there are six churches and many bigots, though the churches have few, and some no attendants, and base-ball is the principal attraction. My man told me that there were more at the base-ball ground last Sunday than at all the churches, and many went from church to the ball grounds. Petitions have gone up from there, both to the state legislature and Congress, for the Sunday law. I have been circulating the remonstrance, and find no trouble in getting an overwhelming majority, but it takes more time than I have to spare, and it is so little understood, and so little being done in other states, that it looks as though the people will not realize what is being done until they are bound hand and foot.

It is astonishing to see the ignorance manifest on the subject. The churches have worked so secretly that the outside world is perfectly ignorant of what they are doing, and our best men are surprised that any one is so simple as to think that there is any possible chance of the Blair bill passing Congress.

I asked one of our best men to sign the remonstrance. He laughed at me; said it was absurd to think Congress would pass the bill; said there was no possible danger; said he had not heard a word of it, and thought it strange, if there was danger, that there was not a paper to warn the people. I told him that as sure as he sat supinely down and stuck to it the bill would pass, and for him to remember my words.

But I think it is our duty to warn the people, and if the worst comes we can not blame ourselves. I am circulating Harry Hoover's "Sabbath Imposture" and the American Sentinel. Last Sunday I subscribed five dollars for ten copies for circulation (six months), and am going to do as much for FREETHOUGHT. So please send me as many copies every week as you can afford, for six months, for five dollars, and I will try to place them where they will do the most good. Send also another dollar's worth of "Sabbath Imposture," and one copy of FREETHOUGHT to the subscriber whose name is inclosed. You may think it is rather reckless in me to offer FREETHOUGHT as a gift to all Christians who will read it, but at the present rate it will take a long while to discourage me, though I am pretty well satisfied you will have some of them as permanent subscribers at the end of the year.

I see by the papers that a great number of preachers want to come to California. Now, if there can be one good one found that would preach Liberalism, at a moderate salary at first, we could keep one employed in this county. Can you send us one? A prophet is not without honor save in his own country, you know; we will have to import one, I suppose.

I like FREETHOUGHT better than any other Liberal paper published, for I can circulate it among my Christian neighbors without offense to them. They can none of them find much fault with it. I wish you much success in your laudable undertaking. B. B. ROCKWOOD.

Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours res. respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - FEBRUARY 23, 1889

THE police of San Francisco are suppressing the bands of religious exhorters who draw crowds on Sunday in the vicinity of the ferry. Sabbath-breaking has got to go down, law or no law.

JUDGE MAGUIRE'S book, "Ireland and the Pope," should now jump into a large circulation. It has fallen under the papal ban, been duly damned by Leo XIII., and placed in the Index Expurgatorius.

THE readers of the London Saturday Journal have decided by a vote of four hundred thousand that the Hon. W. E. Gladstone is "the greatest living Englishman." Curiously enough, the same voters express the opinion by a majority of thirty thousand that Irving the actor is a greater man than Spurgeon the preacher.

THE latest religious canard is that Colonel Ingersoll has been blackballed by the Player's Club, an organization of New York actors. The truth is that Colonel Ingersoll has not applied for membership in the club and therefore there was no blackballing. No man stands higher than he in the estimation of the histrionic fraternity.

POPE LEO has rushed into print with another allocution, in which he recommends that the powers of Europe should make common cause with the church of Rome. He reports that his negotiations with Russia are progressing toward a satisfactory conclusion. Russia and Rome are adapted to each other like the jaws of a wild beast, and when properly hinged by a treaty it will be a dark day for anyone who gets between them.

A BRIEF telegram from Panama tells of the death, at that place, of Dr. H. J. Purdy, of Seneca Falls, N. Y. Dr. Purdy was a regularly graduated physician, and went to Panama to practice his profession, but at the instigation of rivals he was arrested as a quack and thrown into jail. His friends at home were notified, and proof of his good standing was furnished the proper authorities at Washington, but before the diplomatic red tape could be unwound, Dr. Purdy was dead. If we are correct in our surmise, Dr. Purdy was a long-time subscriber to the Truth Seeker. We met him in the office of that paper shortly before he left for Panama. This outrage on an American citizen comes directly from the absurd and unjust laws by which one school of physicians, called regulars, are able to suppress another school whom they call quacks. Dr. Purdy was not a quack, but if he had been the action of the authorities at Panama would be none the less execrable. There is a good deal of quackery in medicine, but it is as nothing compared to the quackery in law.

THE order of the Pennsylvania railroad company that no freight except that of a perishable character shall be transported on Sunday is a satire on the custom of calling Sunday the Lord's day. If Sunday were the Lord's, and if he had any respect for it, he would be likely to see to it that no loss came from its observance. It is by the working of the laws of nature that perishable things decay, and if the Lord objects to Sunday labor he might reasonably be expected to let nature off at twelve o'clock on Saturday night.

THE finger of the priest is in every department of the municipal government of New York. At the request of Archbishop Corrigan, the commissioners of charities and corrections have resolved to institute an inquisition into the religious belief of all the sick who go to the public hospitals for medical treatment, and brand a cross upon the coffins of all who die Catholics. A portion of the potter's field has been "blessed" by the archbishop, and metropolitan paupers will hereafter have their obsequies attended to by the firm of Corrigan & New York, undertakers.

NEWS AND NOTES.

I have been to hear Sam Jones. Mr. and Mrs. Schou, of Oakland, and N. D. Goodell and family, of Sacramento, were with me, and I felt that I should not be so carried away with the merriment of the occasion as to be brought forward to the anxious seat.

Sam Jones is a unique character. There never was anything like him, and never will be again. Nature broke her mould in forming him. The combination is a rare one. There have been comedians in the pulpit, but never such a minstrel show as Sam Jones. He plays the "end man" to perfection. His jokes are "chestnuts," but he has a wonderful cute way of cracking them. As comedy, Sam Jones is a supreme success. No one can deny that. His hits are palpable, and so is his accent. If Sam Jones were on the stage with the tambourine I should enjoy him without dissent. But the idea of combining his jokes and slang with the solemn, awful, tremendous doctrine of orthodoxy and eternal damnation is something that one could not realize without an actual experience. The idea of cracking a joke with Calvin and St. Paul, and heaven and hell and the great white throne as a background, is simply inconceivable. I have no doubt that when Sam Jones passes the golden gates he will chuck St. Peter under the chin and say, "How are you, old feller?" and he will give Gabriel a poke in the ribs, and sauntering to the central throne will say to the archangels, "I will see you later;" and if he should happen to meet Lucifer no doubt will announce, "You make me tired." Sam Jones caricaturizes. He can't help it; but that Christians should accept the caricature for the reality is somewhat strange. Outside of pure comedy Sam Jones is a fool. He don't know anything. He has no theology, no philosophy. His religion is simply feeling. He is without thought or logic. He is absolutely unworthy of intellectual respect. He is a show and nothing more.

Sunday afternoon I addressed the Progressive Spiritualist Society at Washington Hall. Judge Collins presides here, and he is one of our remarkable men. He is a thoroughgoing reformer, and has original plans for the amelioration of society which are worthy of consideration. He thinks that the state as it now is should institute methods of co-operation, and loan money and give lands for that purpose. He is opposed to what he calls "the invisible brigandage," where the strong, shrewd mind overcomes by superior mentality the lesser gifted. He claims that this mental brigandage is as bad as the same reckless use of physical force to gain advantage; and I think that in the finer civilization of the race the idea of Judge Collins will be paramount. To use the strong mind without conscience will be considered as bad as to use the strong arm without conscience.

Judge Collins is a Spiritualist, and fifty-two years ago, before the Fox sisters were at all known, had ample evidence to his own mind of what he calls the spirit world. I do not accept the theory, but the facts are nevertheless remarkable.

I took occasion in my address to emphasize the anti-theological work and its absolute necessity to the advance of all reform. That no method of reform can be successful without intelligent men and women to carry it out, and the highest intelligence is impossible without the rejection of theology. An ex-priest who has had some rough experiences in the church of Rome, and since in his battles with its adherents, Mr. Houbert, also spoke burning words for liberty. He is a radical Spiritualist. Judge Swift then entertained the audience with bright, witty, and earnest remarks. The judge is also a Spiritualist, but he has a mighty deal of common sense mixed with his mystical faith, and he made a rattling good plea for reform and downright work for humanity. Mr. Johnson took up the cudgels for the church. He seemed to feel sorry that he had left it, and evidently felt like a lost sheep. He was not satisfied with Spiritualism except as it was tacked on to Christianity. Mr. Johnston is what I call an orthodox Spiritualist. He wants the new wine in the old musty bottles. He had better take a few lessons of the reformer Jesus, not of the "Christ Jesus." There is a world-wide difference between the two. Dr. Mead closed the discussion with an announcement of his clear-cut Infidel views. "It is time," he said, "to declare that orthodox Christianity is a fraud and in the way of progress." This was received with applause.

The Spiritualists are good Freethinkers, and as we differ in regard to the quantity of life, and not the quality, there is no profound discord. We have the same ideas of virtue, justice, humanity, and these ideas don't change in the hereafter. The man who lives forever cannot be different morally from one who lives for a day. The length of being does not change the nature of well being. Therefore so long as we are in the body, we can shake hands with the Spiritualist, and go ahead, and if death is a door we won't stop going ahead when we get there.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

WASHBURN'S "Cosmian Hymn-Book" is advertised in this issue. Orders should be sent to the author.

MISSION WORK IN CHINA.

There are, says the North China News, no less than forty Protestant bodies competing for converts in the Chinese empire, and not long since, in Hankow, one Protestant church accused another of stealing its converts. Dr. Williamson states the case thus:

"First. To begin with, we have the church of England with her Thirty-nine Articles, her Prayer Book and her formularies, all translated, and she is striving and hoping to impose them in all their entirety upon China. Again, we have the Presbyterians with the Westminster Confession, their longer and shorter catechisms, their system of church government also translated, equally zealous and sanguine in their endeavor to lead the Chinese to adopt their system. Further, we have the Methodists with their elaborate organizations, the Congregationalists with their form of government, the Baptists with theirs, the Lutheran church seeking to produce in China a fac-simile of itself, nothing less or more, the American Episcopal church with a like aim. And so with other denominations. What a spectacle to thoughtful Chinamen! And there are many such. No wonder they say to us: 'Agree among yourselves, and then we may listen to you.'

"But this is not the worst of our divisions. We have three branches of the Episcopal church, eight different sects of Presbyterians, six sets of Methodists, two Congregationalists, two Baptists, besides several other minor bodies, all acting independently of each other, and in addition to all we have the Inland Mission, many of whose members belong to our own denomination, but the bulk of whom disclaim creeds and systems; and unless the leaders of that mission receive special guidance from God it will become neither more nor less than another sect."

The News comments: "But to come to details. We need not recapitulate the forty various missions, from the oldest in China, the London Missionary Society, which dates from 1807, to the latest, the Church of England Zenana Mission Society, which only appeared on the scene last year. It must seem strange to a Chinaman who takes the trouble to inquire at all to know that while thirty-nine missions tell him that Sunday is the Lord's day there is one, the Seventh Day Baptist, founded for the express purpose of promoting the observance of Saturday. What is an inquirer to do too, if he proposes to judge by results? For we cannot expect him to be able to dissect creeds and formularies, and of course each missionary will tell him that his own is the desirable church. He will find the largest society.

"And another disheartening point is that the work done does not increase with the number of workers. Even if the number of missionaries did not increase at all from year to year their converts ought to, for every year the shepherds ought to know their work better, and the sheep that they gather into the fold ought to remain in it and attract others to it. But the proportion of sheep to shepherds decreases with the increase in the latter. In December, 1887, there were 1030 foreign missionaries with 32,260 communicants, or an average of 31.3 communicants a head; while in December, 1888, there were 1123 foreign missionaries, with 34,555 communicants, or an average of something under 30.8 ahead; and it is probable that the returns are more complete in the latter year. The schools have nearly kept pace with the increase of missionaries, for there were nearly 13.3 scholars to each missionary in December, 1887, and nearly 13.2 in December, 1888."

This shows indeed a remarkable state of affairs—the more missionaries, the fewer converts. To these figures let us append the admission of the New York Observer (Presbyterian), and submit the case to the Christian world without comment. The Observer says: "We are compelled to believe by the stern array of facts and figures that at the end of this boasted century of missions, while not three million, nominal and real, have been won to Christianity, in pagandom, heathen and Mohammedan, are 200,000,000 more than there were at the beginning of the century. Thus the votaries of these faiths increase seventy times faster than the followers of Christ. The church is outstripped on its own methods. They evince in these modern days a propagandism and aggressiveness far superior. The necessity in the foreign field cannot be overtaken on the present line of church work."

IMPORTANT TO SUBSCRIBERS.

We send out this week intimations to those whose subscription to FREETHOUGHT has expired, and ask that recipients give the matter their immediate attention.

To those who want the paper continued, but are not at present prepared to remit, we will send it for a while on credit if they will communicate with us setting forth the state of affairs.

Subscribers who intend to renew, and can renew at once as well as later on, are kindly solicited to do so.

Those who do not intend to renew should notify their postmaster to that effect, and cease taking the paper from the post-office or carrier. There is a law under which pay for a paper may be collected for the time it is received by the subscriber. We do not believe in a law of that kind, and shall not take advantage of it. The man who does not intend to pay for his paper, but continues to receive it, is not an acquisition to the cause worth having. He should stop the paper at once, and cease his professions of Liberalism and honesty. When notified of his delinquency he no longer has an excuse for allowing it to continue.

In a reasonable length of time after this notice, we shall be obliged to remove from our list the names of those who fail to remit or to communicate with us.

We ask each subscriber to do what he considers right in this matter.

BLIND AND VICIOUS LEADERS.

The "Knights of Labor," a paper published at Chicago, is, we presume, a representative organ of the body of workingmen from which it derives its name. As such its utterances are to be taken as in a measure official. Otherwise no self-respecting Freethinker would pay the slightest attention to what the "Knights of Labor" has to say about the American Secular Union and the Blair Sunday bill. We quote from the "Knights of Labor" of February 9. Speaking of the members of the American Secular Union it says:

1. "They delight in calling themselves Freethinkers and claim to be organized for the purpose of propagating the principles of free thought. As if there was any restraint upon free thought, or that people were prevented from thinking as they please or even expressing their thoughts so long as they do it with a proper regard for their neighbors.

2. "In order to incite the opposition of that class of small fry and narrow intellects who go into spasms at the mention of the name of the despised Nazarene the members of this so-called free thought brigade substitute the 'Lord's Day' wherever Sunday is mentioned in the bill.

3. "To mystify the workingman they say the bill provides that the employer need not pay for work done on Sunday.

4. "These so-called free thinkers are terribly afraid if the Blair bill is passed it will compel them to read the Bible. The bill won't have any such effect, but what if it did? Are their intellects so terribly weak that they are afraid they will become unbalanced if they are compelled to read of the struggles of humanity in its attempt to attain the infinite? These individuals who sleep with a copy of the 'Police News' or the 'Days Doings' under their pillow are afraid their morals will become corrupted by reading the poetry of Solomon's songs. Will the story of Jesus, whose broad humanity, magnificent individuality, and heroic self-sacrifice has no parallel in the history of worlds, damage the intellect of these free thinkers if they should be compelled to read it?

* 5. "Mr. Blair's bill is for the purpose of giving a day of rest, recreation, and proper enjoyment of one day in seven to fifteen or twenty millions of overburdened and overworked people, for the hewers of wood and the drawers of water. A careful study of its provisions will convince any one with as much brains as a chippy that it will not interfere with anybody's 'personal rights.'"

The foregoing comprises about half of the article in question, and it is the less abusive half. Blackguardism and idiotic misrepresentation can reach a depth where reply can not be made except in kind, and it is not our purpose to touch that level. We have numbered the statements of the "Knights of Labor" for convenience in replying.

1. It is claimed that the members of the American Secular Union delight in calling themselves Freethinkers, "as if there was any restraint upon free thought." Supposing there is no restraint upon free thought, is that any reason why people should not be Freethinkers? There is no law forbidding a person to be a Knight of Labor, yet many delight to call themselves such. The Knights of Labor are in favor of resting upon Sunday, yet there is no law compelling them to work.

2. The American Secular Union does not substitute the "Lord's day" wherever Sunday is mentioned in the Blair bill. The Blair bill itself is entitled "A bill to secure to the people the enjoyment of the Lord's Day commonly known as Sunday, as a day of rest, and to protect its observance as a day of religious worship." The protest circulated by the Secular Union is against "any bill in regard to the observance of the Sabbath, or Lord's day." The brief quotations, without comment, prove either that the editor of the "Knights of Labor" has not read the Blair bill, or that he is a deliberate liar.

3. Section 5 of the Blair bill performs the same service for the editor as the previous quotations. The section reads, "That it shall be unlawful to pay or to receive payment or wages in any manner for service rendered, or for labor performed, or for the transportation of persons or of property in violation of the provisions of this act, nor shall any action lie for the recovery thereof, and when so paid, whether in advance or otherwise, the same may be recovered back by whoever shall first sue for the same." If this does not "provide that the employer need not pay for work done on Sunday," what does it mean?

4. The Freethinkers have no such fear as regards the Blair Sunday bill. The editor has confounded this bill with the Educational Amendment bill. "But what if it did" compel them to read the Bible? Well, it would be a legal outrage—that is all. Between the Bible and the Police Gazette or the "Knights of Labor" every citizen must be protected in the right to choose for himself. If he likes the Gazette best it is nobody's business but his own, and need not, indeed, excite much surprise. These Freethinkers know as much about Christ as their critic, and we leave it to any candid judge to say whose intellect has suffered most damage from that or other source.

5. There is a bald untruth in the statement that the Blair bill is to give anyone recreation. "Recreation" is expressly mentioned in the bill and prohibited. The words are, "nor shall any person engage in any play, game, amusement, or recreation." True, the qualifying words, "to the disturbance of others," are added, but they might as well have been left off, as there are now laws regulating public disturbances every day in the week.

The object of the Blair bill is, as its title distinctly states, to make Sunday a day of religious observance. Workingmen will have the same chance to rest then as now, no more and no less; but on the other hand they will be deprived of the liberty to work on Sunday if they wish to. They will gain nothing, but they will lose their liberty. Like the dog in the fable, they will wear the marks of the collar, but, unlike the dog, they will get neither food nor care in return.

The case has been stated over and over again, but how long will it take to make the dupes of the priests and demagogues understand that without any Sunday law they are at liberty to work or rest as they choose, and the government protects them in doing either? To force a man to work on Sunday is tyranny, and to force him to rest is equal tyranny. Let him alone!

We have expressed surprise that the Knights of Labor should indorse this Blair Sunday bill, but if their leaders are all as wooden-headed and as maliciously dishonest as the editor whose statements we have shown to be falsehoods, there is no longer cause for astonishment. When the blind lead the blind both may be expected to wallow in the same gutter.

THE GOOD WORK SHOULD GO ON.

The large meetings of San Francisco Liberals, the successful Convention, and the organization of a California State Liberal Union, with practically one thousand members, have drawn the attention of Liberals everywhere to this coast. Rejoicings and congratulations reach us from all directions.

With the eyes of the whole country upon us, therefore, it behooves us to do something. It is one thing to organize; and another thing to promote the objects of the organization; one thing to pass resolutions, and another thing to keep them. The fifth resolution passed at the Convention is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Liberals of California be solicited to contribute a fund of one thousand dollars ($1,000), or more, to be used during the coming year for legislative work, for the distribution of documents bearing on the Demands of Liberalism, and for the support of public meetings in the interest of the same general objects at important points."

Upon the carrying out of this resolution depends at least the beginning of a movement to practicalize all the others. During the present year the president of the California Liberal Union will make a lecture tour throughout the state. Going upon his own responsibility he can touch only at places where traveling expenses are assured; other points, where the field has not been opened, must necessarily be passed. If, however, the Liberals of California should decide to have the state thoroughly canvassed, and that the present is the best time for the work, a portion of the thousand dollars might be devoted to that purpose. Distances in a state like California, covering an area seven hundred miles long and two hundred wide, are necessarily great, and traveling expenses are a large item. With these expenses assured by a state fund, lectures could be given in every county.

In collecting the fund of one thousand dollars there should be no delay and little outlay of money. The Liberals understand that it is to be raised if possible, and they should not wait to be personally solicited, or put the organization to the labor and cost of addressing each one separately by mail. Another thing, the fund is to be used, according to the resolution, during the coming year. It should therefore be raised at once. As a method for this end, we suggest that the representative Liberals in every locality procure from the secretary the blank form (mentioned elsewhere under the heading of "Membership in the California Liberal Union"), procure signatures, and solicit contributions.

The fund might be raised in this way without anybody paying more than one dollar.

As before remarked, we have an organization and an object. If the object is to be attained the organization must be enlarged and supported and invested with life. Every member ought to give it something, if no more than a nickel. If he can't give that, he can at least talk about it to his neighbor.

PROFITABLE CHURCH PROPERTY.

The Protestant Episcopal church of St. Thomas, in New York, is one of the wealthiest corporations of that city, and every pew is owned by some rich person. No strangers are admitted, and such as find their way there by mistake are ordered out. That is the way the matter is explained by one of the managers in an interview with a Sun reporter. It seems to entirely do away with the plea that churches are for the public good, upon which plea they are exempt from taxation in New York.

The most remarkable disclosure made in the interview, however, is that many of the pews in St. Thomas's church are the property of certain persons and their heirs in perpetuity. These are leased to other persons for a certain sum per year, and people who never attend the church get from $12,000 to $15,000 annually for the rent of their pews. The thing has been going on for over thirty years, and nobody could complain except for the fraud by which this valuable property is exempt from public burdens. The wealthy people have a right to their club-house, but it is meaner than smuggling for them to dodge their taxes on the ground that the club is a religious one.

THE LECTURE TOUR IN CALIFORNIA.

It is not possible at present to make out a definite list of appointments, but the following is about the route and dates for Mr. Putnam's lectures. Friends will please note, and those who desire his services write at their earliest possible convenience:

March 2, 3, Livermore. March 5, 6, 7, Grass Valley.
March 10 to 17, Sacramento and vicinity. March 24, Pomona, Los Angeles, and vicinity. March 31 to April 14, San Diego, National City, San Pasqual, San Jacinto, and vicinity.
April 21, Anaheim and vicinity. April 28, Oleander and vicinity.
May 5 to 12, Raymond, Grub Gulch, Fresno Flats, and vicinity. May 19 to June 2, San Francisco, Calistoga, New Sanel, Boulder Creek, San Jose, and vicinity.

MEMBERSHIP IN THE CALIFORNIA LIBERAL UNION.

The secretary is prepared to send out, to all parts of the state, forms for the signatures of those wishing to become members of the California State Liberal Union. It is a blank sheet with Preamble and Constitution printed at the top, and anyone may become a member by signing it. About one thousand signed the Call for the Convention, and the same signatures should be obtained to the Constitution. Address Emil S. Lemme, office of FREETHOUGHT, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco. Inclose 4 cents in stamps when practicable.

SHALL THERE BE A LOCAL UNION?

A series of meetings preliminary to the formation of a local Secular Union will be inaugurated on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, March 3, in St. George's Hall, 909½ Market street, San Francisco. Prof. Herbert Miller will deliver a discourse on the "Old and New."

AT SACRAMENTO.

S. P. Putnam speaks at Pioneer Hall, Sacramento, next Sunday night, the 24th. The lecture will be a review of the Rev. Sam. Jones.

THE death of Mrs. Amy Post, of Rochester, N.Y., calls one of the good old mothers in Israel to her final rest or reward. She has earned both. Says New Thought: "She had been a life-long reformer, beginning as an abolitionist and an underground railroad station keeper. She kept in her house, for more than a dozen years, an average of one hundred and fifty runaway slaves each year. She boasted to her last that she never turned a tramp or any other person hungry from her door. Her house was a rendezvous for reformers of every school. She was an abolitionist; and we believe was turned out of the orthodox Quaker church because of her abolition principles; she was a woman suffragist; she belonged to the American Peace Society and was a Spiritualist through and through. The last time we saw Amy Post was at the Bennett reception in New York, at the time D. M. Bennett was released from the Albany Penitentiary, where he had been unjustly sentenced. She then spoke a few eloquent and truthful words." Mrs. Post was eighty-six years of age.

"If I could only know that the Christian religion is true, how glad I would be," says many a soul who is struggling in the quagmire of sin and unbelief. But we may know this. Jesus gives an infallible, yet simple test, which all may put to the proof. It is this: "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself."—Signs of the Times.

Our Adventist contemporary's test is not so simple as it looks. On the contrary, it is vague and indefinite. The simplest and most straightforward test given in the Bible is found in Mark xvi, 17-18: "And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." Try this experiment, poor doubting sinner. If you succeed you may be certain you have struck the combination.

WE acknowledge the receipt of a photograph of the Bailey monument at Mt. Olivet Cemetery, Nashville, Tenn. This monument marks the last resting-place of "William Shreeve Bailey, born February 10, 1806; died February 20, 1886, aged 80 years and 10 days. One of the bravest pioneers of abolitionism for chattel slavery, and of Freethought for mental slavery. Though often outraged and martyred for his principles, he was never conquered, suppressed, nor discouraged. He rests in the peace and honor so nobly won." Mr. Bailey was, in his later years, editor of a little Freethought paper, published in Nashville, called the "Liberal." The stone which thus briefly tells the story of his life has been erected by "his Hellenic friend, Photius Fisk." It is well that the memory of these old heroes should be perpetuated in the land they have helped to make free.

WE have three little leaflets that will do good by circulation. They are: 1. "Nameless," a poem by Voltairine de Cleyre; 2. "Two Creeds," the Catholic and the Cathartic, the latter creed being an amusing parody on the former; 3. "The Theft of Girard College," setting forth briefly the provisions of Girard's will touching sectarian teaching, and showing how those provisions have been violated. Any of these leaflets, 10 cents per dozen; 50 cents per hundred.

THE Rev. Dr. Sprecher, formerly of San Francisco, woke up the ministers of Cleveland, Ohio, the other day by giving them a sharp talk on evolution. "The attitude of the clergy," he said, "was antagonistic to the results of scientific research, particularly in regard to the theory of evolution now commonly accepted; and in arraying itself against what are considered established scientific results the church loses its hold upon a large proportion of all the people." This was given to the clergy at a ministers' meeting, and an effort was made to choke off the speaker, but he held his own and came out with flying colors.

It is becoming quite the popular thing nowadays for Liberals to wear the Wettstein Freethought Badge-pin. Reference to our advertising columns will give the various prices and styles of this attractive ornament, any of which may be ordered from this office.

THE Rev. Num Sang, a Chinese Methodist minister of San Jose, is in trouble for running a fan-tan game on his premises. There is much regret in Chinese religious circles.

THE Agnostic Journal, London, is republishing "Roman Rule and Ruin" from the columns of FREETHOUGHT.

THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY.

In the realms of truth, of morality, and of art we shall find that Infidelity has been a most noble power.

Many a new truth has been discovered by the inquiring spirit of Infidelity, truth which could have been discovered only by disputing the established belief. That which is cannot always be a basis of that which is to be. One must oftentimes be unfaithful to the past in order to be faithful to the future, as in the old Hindoo mythology, there must be the destroyer as well as the creator and redeemer, and the first is as divine as the last; as beautiful and as godlike. Infidelity has been but another form of fidelity, not to the actually attained but to the infinitely possible. All great reformers have been Infidels. No man has made this world better without, in the eyes of some, making it worse. He has had to be disreputable; to be the dregs and offscourings; to go to the bottom of things, in order to lift them up. One cannot revolutionize society from the top; there is where the conservative floats in assured triumph. The upheaval must come from the roots. The true prophet is not a fashionable preacher. He must plunge into the wilderness and flout the holy of holies in the well-built temple, beneath the golden roof. But the wilderness becomes the seat of a new temple and a more glorious empire. How often the Infidel builds better than even he himself knows! What unexpected truths are revealed by his searching spirit! What undreamed of progress made! The Buddhas and the Christs of human history, what builders they were out of their mighty unbelief! How valiantly they fought and destroyed the ancient gods and put new ones in their place, to be in their turn destroyed by nobler Infidels still; but the gods they made were an improvement on the old gods, they were wiser and gentler, they demanded less blood and sacrifice.

Every new thought has had to win its way against custom. It has had to go naked and have no place to lay its head. It has been born in a manger and traveled to the cross. Every new thought has been a tragedy. Only the Infidel would receive it, and give it room to grow. Many a forlorn band of unbelievers has held the world's best hope. Miserable outcasts, they have borne the ark of man's coming glory. Curses are heaped upon him who brings the rough gold of the future's wealth. He is pelted with mud; yet the gold is made into shining temples. Infidelity has ever been the door to progress; it may grate harsh thunder, but that thunder swells into the music of man's noblest growth. The Infidel may be a beggar, but he wears the crown of all the ages to come. He may be an outcast, but he carries the infinite treasury of the new. He may die in poverty, but he leaves behind in the invisible air the riches of his dauntless spirit. He may be tossed about, like a shell upon the sea-shore, by careless hands and feet, but, like that shell, he bears within his bosom the music of the endless sea of time. Not only does he keep the world's brain on fire by his constant questionings, but he turns that fire into new and beautiful shapes by which humanity is guided into vaster realms. His skepticism has been the beginning of philosophy and hung its fresh and golden fruit over the sepulchres of the past. The face of Infidelity has ever been set towards the dawn; it has never turned to the midnight and sought consolation there, like faith. It has not yearned for the setting sun of yester eve however beautiful; it has not dreamed of a golden age in the dim past; it has not looked back to Eden; it has ever looked to the front; it has pressed on amidst darkness and difficulty; it has borne the banner of eternal progress. It has climbed the hills; it has hailed the morning; it has pointed the first finger to new and splendid hopes. Faith has cherished the past, but doubt has conquered the future. Faith has sat in the quiet shadow of remote achievement, but doubt, with restless foot, has leaped to perilous victory. Faith dreams, but doubt acts; faith broods, but doubt discovers; faith prays, but doubt builds. It rolls back the ancient heaven; it constructs the infinite world of Copernicus, templated with constellations and torched by countless suns.

Such is the work of Infidelity is the realm of truth. Behold, also, its achievements in the field of man's moral endeavor. It is generally thought that even if Infidelity enlightens the head it does so at the expense of conduct, and is liable to create a moral interregnum, if no worse. Infidelity is looked upon by many as a sort of knowledge that overturns the foundations of society and lets the devil of human passion go free. It is admitted that Infidels are wise, but it is denied that they are good. Infidels are supposed to be Lucifers—light-bearers—who are above obeying the commandments. They give up the customary and the fixed, and being free in mind are loose in character. But I affirm that Infidelity has ever been a moral as well as intellectual protest.

It has been for the conscience as well as for the brain. I affirm that all along the path of progress man's moral nature has been the greatest of Infidels, it has been the most sturdy in its unbelief. There has been denial, not simply for mental liberty but for moral advancement. Of course Infidels have been called sinners, and have borne the label because their opponents have been in the majority and could call names and make a dictionary to suit themselves, but they, the Infidels, have been sinners after the fashion of Emerson. Some body said he was going to hell. "Don't whisper it then," said Father Taylor, "for if you do, you will turn the tide of emigration that way." Infidels have ever been the best of company. They are always good neighbors and ready to lend a hand. As a general thing one had rather trust an Infidel than a church member. The former will pay without a note—from a sense of honor—but the latter not always. When the latter thinks that only God is a witness he will cheat like the devil. It does seem to help a man's manhood to deny deity, the less he depends on him the more he depends on himself. When he loses faith in divinity then he has a greater faith in humanity.

Now it is preached, even by some Freethinkers, that the orthodox is moral. He may be dull, but he is admitted to be pious. Therefore, some Freethinkers support the church, because it's a good institution, it keeps people straight. Intellectually they deny, but practically they conform. They support the minister because they think that he sets a good example. He wears a white necktie, and therefore his character is stainless. He is a guide-post and it pays to keep him whitewashed and in good order. I consider this shallow spectacular morality of mighty little value. No matter how nice it looks upon the outside, it is too often a whited sepulchre full of dead men's bones. Infidelity, however rough its appearance, carries within its breast the jewel of a finer morality. It is the nurse of a better living. It has been the eternal baptism and regeneration of the race to higher, grander modes of conduct.

There are two ways of considering morality, one as a system of rules and regulations, the other as an ever-growing life.

The one is the mere shell of morality, ever breaking and ever forming; while the other is the very soul of morality.

Now the orthodox is the one who is devoted to the mere shell. He obeys certain rules and regulations. Duty, to him, is like the counting of so many beads. It is a formula and a task; it is a ceremony and a routine. The orthodox does what is right, like a horse in a treadmill. It is the same everlasting round. There's nothing new. It's the same liturgy from day to day; like the old deacon's prayer—the same each morning, of interminable length, beginning with the creation of the world and ending with the judgment scene. One of his little boys, after listening, a hot summer's day, about half an hour, became tired and was anxious for the close and asked his brother, near by, if "father wasn't most through." "Oh, no," was the reply, "he hasn't got to the Jews yet." Orthodox morality is very much like this prayer, it is a lingo of the past. According to the orthodox, the highest duty of a man is to set an example. He must always be on dress parade. He must study his good looks, he must be careful of appearances, and think of what people will say.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

A large procession of unemployed workingmen paraded the streets of Los Angeles on Sunday.—News from Samoa is chiefly of the manufactured sort. There are but slight indications of war over Samoan affairs.—San Francisco has a new revivalist in the person of the Rev. A. J. Bell, who has been doing evangelical work in the state for some time. He lacks the clap-trap style necessary to great success in his line of business.—Judge O'Connor, of San Jose, has donated $50,000 to the Catholic University at Washington.—Adolph Sutro closed the gates of his park at the Cliff House last Sunday, and placed the ladies of the Pioneer Kindergarten Association in charge, with the right to ask an admission fee of 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children. There were some two thousand visitors.—The Rev. J. D. Flenner, late pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church at Boise, I. T., who was found guilty by the Boise Methodist Episcopal conference of falsehood, misappropriation of church funds, and improper intimacy with two lady members his church, one of whom was a married woman, has appealed to a higher tribunal. This body, called the "Trier of Appeals," consisting of twenty-one ministers from three neighboring conferences and presided over by Bishop Warren, of Denver, Col., has been in session at Portland, Or., and sustained the action of the Idaho conference and deposed Mr. Flenner from the ministry. He has always been considered a good minister, but appears to have been utterly incapable of understanding what the rights of others were in regard to money or anything else.—The city council of Tacoma, W. T., has raised the liquor license to $1,000.—There appears to be need of an investigation of the prison management at San Quentin. Very damaging facts against Warden McComb have gained publicity.—The legislature of California will send counsel to Washington to defend the Scott Exclusion act before the Supreme Court.—A fund is to be raised for the purpose of erecting a monument to Robert Burns in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco.

Preacher John Elmsler, of Elizabeth, W. Va., went home drunk on the 15th inst., killed his wife with a heavy poker, and then brained his two daughters and the hired girl.—A Catholic pilgrimage to Rome and Jerusalem starts from Jersey City, N. J., February 21.—A girl ran a bicycle 624 miles in six days at the contest in New York last week.—A thousand Catholics held an indignation meeting at Cleveland, Ohio, last Sunday and denounced the action of the Harverhill, Mass., public school authorities who have interfered with the rights of Catholics in the matter of education.—The Salvation Army were rotten-egged, and otherwise shamefully ill-treated at Helena, Mont., last week.—Two Scandinavian sisters who were going to Salt Lake to marry the Mormon elder who converted them left him at Cheyenne, Wyo., on Sunday, and he was thrashed by their brother.—It is reported that many wealthy women are joining the Salvation Army in New York.—The Mormons were defeated in the recent election in Ogden, Utah, and the city passes under gentile rule.—Orders have been issued on the Pennsylvania railroad that no freight except perishables shall run out on Sunday.

Ernst Nechen, the German geologist, died at Berlin, February 16, aged 88.—Dispatches from Central America report a violent earthquake in Costa Rica, with the destruction of the city of San Jose, and the loss of 200 lives.

OBSERVATIONS.

There are many American citizens who believe in what they call a "strong foreign policy." They want the flag "respected," and if a foreigner puts a bullet through the mainsail of some old scow whose owner hails from the United States, they are in favor of declaring war immediately with the nation under whose flag the said foreigner is sailing at the time, and unless such a step is taken they begin at once to abuse the administration. These citizens are patriots. They stand upon the shore with a chip on their shoulder, looking out to sea and waiting for a shot from some foreign man-of-war to knock the chip off. Such spare funds as they have to devote to the cause of freedom they send to Ireland to promote the cause of home rule. Meanwhile, the native of Ireland slips ashore at Castle Garden, selects the office best suited to his choice, and immediately begins to conduct the affairs of the country. He inaugurates his career by getting appointed to the "force," and in the city of San Francisco he distinguishes himself by suppressing the sale of a paper that opposes the alien religion which he brings with him. During this time the patriot's eyes are cast seaward, and his brow is wrinkled with regret that we have not a stronger foreign policy. It seems to me that what is more necessary just now is a vigorous domestic policy that will protect the rights of citizens at home as well as abroad.

Uncle Samos Parsons, from San Jose, came in to see us one day last week. He said he had called to blow us all up. There must be a reform in the get-up and editorial policy of FREETHOUGHT, or he would knock the props out from under the office, and drop the whole business into the cellar. First, the paper should be printed in bigger type so he could read it. He was eighty-five years old day before yesterday, and his eyes had begun to fail him. Second, the pressman should be instructed to use more ink, and jam it on harder. Third, there must be a black line between the columns, so he would not read clear across the page. Fourth, print clear to the edge of the paper, and don't waste so much space in margins. Fifth, get cheaper paper. It was a waste of good material to print such slush as Putnam and I wrote on forty-eight pound stock. Sixth, and most decidedly, stop grumbling and finding fault with your friends. If anything doesn't suit you, let it pass. Direct your criticisms toward the enemy.

I have not received so much good advice before since I entered journalism, and it is not the less gratefully accepted because I see no way to act upon it. Mr. Parsons is one of the grand old veterans in the cause. He carries the accumulated burdens of eighty-five years with as light a step as most men of sixty. He enjoys an annuity, which he draws regularly and distributes, or "sprinkles," as he terms it, among the workers for Freethought. So he lives only for the cause. A thousand men like him would keep the flower of Liberalism in perennial bloom.

A short time ago I made reference to my habit of performing upon a tin flute every morning before breakfast, with the effect of noticeably hastening the preparation of the morning meal; the receipt of the following card is my excuse for recurring to the subject now:

OFFICE OF THE MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
No. 129 E. 28TH STREET, NEW YORK, January 29, 1889.

I send by this mail a tooter that may be new to you. Try it on your boarding-house. It will give all hands an appetite for an early breakfast. Try it and send me a testimonial. Give it as a premium with your paper if it works well.

E. B. FOOTE, JR.

The article referred to as a "tooter" has arrived. It is a pink wooden tube, with a diaphragm in it. The inventor calls it a Kazoo. The performer, if he does not value his life, puts one end of the tube in his mouth and "hums" in it, as children do through a comb folded in paper. The sound is distressing, and altogether too solemn for this joyous world. It might be appropriate at a Chinese funeral, except that there would be a danger of its waking the corpse. I have prepared a reply to Dr. Foote reading thus:

"DEAR SIR: Your favor has come to hand—and mouth. I have used the tooter according to your directions. The result is all that I expected, and even more. You may forward me one gross. I want them for delinquent subscribers. The people at the house are preparing a testimonial for you. The testimonial is composed mainly of dynamite, and is so arranged that when received by you it will explode and lift the roof off your domicile. I remain yours in hope."

This is a strange city. I suppose that in proportion to its size it has more Roman Catholics in it than any other city in America. It also has more Chinamen, more prostitutes, more dives, and more vice generally. In some blocks every house is occupied by fallen women, who blazon their names on their doors, and who loll head and shoulders out of windows, and talk with one another across the street. Underneath business houses the city is catacombed by dives, the walls of which are hung with obscene pictures; where obscene songs and jests are retailed from the stage, and where drunken men and tipsy women mingle their debaucheries in the thinnest shadow of concealment. Almost in sight of this office, near the centre of the city, is a huge assignation house, the proprietor of which publishes a paper to advertise his business, and the paper is hawked and sold openly upon the streets. The police are blinded with bribes and see none of this iniquity.

All of which I should prefer not to mention, for to name these things is to soil good paper; but I wish to call attention to the strange fact that while, with the tacit consent of the authorities, every abomination is permitted the freedom of the city, there is not freedom for the sale of this paper, FREETHOUGHT. It has but one salesman on the street, an old gentleman of the name of Ketchum, and he has been repeatedly driven from the sidewalks and public squares, and threatened with arrest, by the Roman Catholic ruffians who wear the uniform of police officers. Naturally he does not desire to be arrested. Few persons do. He has no money to pay fines, and Mr. Putnam and myself have none to invest in that way for him. I would not like to be arrested myself, and Mr. Putnam thinks he would prefer his mattress on the floor of the office to the hard beds and active vermin of the station house. It is a case where we have to submit. The old man must conceal his copies of FREETHOUGHT under his coat and dodge the policeman. But I am prepared to say, after due reflection, that I protest.

Listening, a few days since, to the reading of an article which covered a score of pages of foolscap, and which was at its close offered for publication in this journal, I was led to recall the way I once saw D. M. Bennett retaliate on a manuscript fiend. It was while Mr. Bennett was conducting his discussion with the Rev. G. H. Humphrey through the Truth Seeker that the man brought his manuscript in, and insisted upon reading it. He was permitted to do so, and Mr. Bennett listened patiently, though I do not think he remained awake during the hour required for its delivery. Those who knew Mr. Bennett will remember that he had a habit of dropping asleep frequently at his desk while writing or reading, and it was the recuperation thus gained that enabled him to work about eighteen hours out of twenty-four. When the paper was finished, the writer wanted the listener's opinion of its availability for his columns, but instead of replying Mr. Bennett took down from its pigeon-hole a bundle of "copy" that would have filled a small wheelbarrow, and remarking that he had just written something which he thought would interest his visitor, began reading it aloud, pausing now and then to make a correction, or to insert some new thought that struck him. The day was Sunday, and Eighth street was quiet. At first the visitor leaned forward and listened with a show of eagerness, responding occasionally by an expression of approval; but gradually, as page after page was read and turned over on the growing pile, his attention relaxed. He took an easier position in his chair, and assumed an attitude of deep thought. Finally, a restful expression stole over his countenance, and he slumbered. Mr. Bennett read on and on, till, stopping to write a longer addendum than usual, he, too, grew drowsy.

The sun shone warm through the window, the flies hummed, in the sanctum; the pencil dropped from the writer's hand, and reader and listener slept. The editor woke first, picked up his pencil, finished his addendum, and read on, unconscious of the other's somnolent state. The visitor, thus aroused, glanced appealingly at the oblivious reader, then at me anxiously, consulted his watch, thrust his manuscript in his pocket, and stole away just as Mr. Bennett was about to yield himself once more to sleep. I made some remark about the patentable character of that method of standing-off ambitious writers, but Mr. Bennett did not seem to appreciate the joke. He merely observed that it would be a good while before that man would get anything published in the Truth Seeker.

"THE STORY OF AN AFRICAN FARM."

This is not exactly a novel. It is not constituted with a plot. It is a series of sketches and an essay. It has neither beginning, middle, nor end, like the ideal novel—like that of a Fielding—where every character and incident goes to the making of the denouement. It is a transcript of life, after the fashion of Homer's Iliad. There is no selection of material for bright effects. We come into the traveled road. We go along a certain way. Many faces and incidents appear. Then we leave the road, and the panorama passes. Such is "The Story of an African Farm." It is a book of revelations. It is not for the market. It is not a sermon. It is not a lecture. It is an outpouring. It is terribly sincere. Nothing is kept back. It is the confessions of a noble heart, inexpressibly sad, and inexpressibly comforting to those who have had a like experience. It is a book that many have longed to read, an absolutely earnest, deep, radical, far-reaching book, compared to which a book like "The Quick or the Dead" is mere foam on the river. It is like the sea itself, of which the author says:

"It is not like the sky and stars that talk of what has no beginning and no end; but it is so human; of all the things I have ever seen only the sea is like a human being; the sky is not, nor the earth. But the sea is always moving, always something deep in itself is stirring it. I can hear it in the day and in the night; the white foam breakers are saying that which I think. I walk alone with them when there is no one to see me. I lie down and watch them with my eyes half shut. The sky is better, but it is so high above our heads; I love the sea."

This is a woman's book, and the author is a woman of genius like De Stael, George Sand, Mary Woolstonecraft, and like Sappho and Hypatia. Compared to this "Robert Elsmere" "is as moonlight unto sunlight, and as water unto wine." In "Robert Elsmere" the author seems to stand outside of the characters, and to dissect them with marvelous skill—the skill of the potter, but not of the creator; the skill of a Bulwer, but not of a Shakespere. "The Story of an African Farm" is intensely personal; the heart of its author quivers in its lines, in its words, in its pictures, its portraiture. "Robert Elsmere" is a building—a temple of exquisite beauty. This story is a river, a sea, a stream of fire.

Yet the author can individualize and depict characters with the felicity of a Dickens. Old Otto, Bonaparte Blenkins, Gregory Rose, Tant' Sannie, Piet, Vander Walt, are exquisitely sketched. The painting is to life, with the realism of a Zola. Every stroke tells; the subtle irony and humor are infinitely amusing.

Waldo, the two strangers, Lyndall, are not characters, rather portraiture, or masks—vague, changing faces, behind which the authoress lurks, and, with but little effort at concealment, speaks. It is rather incongruous, but the effect is charming. There is no description, no revealing of characteristics, but a swell of pent-up thought, a bursting forth of uncompromising feeling. The author throws the characters aside with reckless audacity and takes their place with the unique expression of her own genius. Like the author, we let the contradiction go; and enjoy the discourse without any repugnance to the fate of the characters who are thus incontinently translated into the author's self.

In Lyndall the tragedy of woman's life is expressed; of the high, the noble, the aspiring woman, who longs for freedom and for purity—to be herself—-independent yet affectionate, so that every act is her womanhood's most holy choice.

"Can man be free while woman is a slave?"

Yet to strive for freedom is infinite suffering. It is martyrdom; it is death. In Lyndall there is the cry of the woman whose chains cut deep, who feels there is no escape, that beauty is but a curse, and wisdom folly. Love lies bleeding, indeed, in the heart of this tortured girl. Therein is the deepest tragedy of existence—the tragedy of man and of woman—for when woman suffers and is debased man suffers and is debased also. Man's love cannot be free and highest until woman's love is equally so.

The descriptive portions of this book are wrought out with the fidelity of a Dutch painting. Nature itself is pictured; not an imitation. Things are not smoothed over. The actual homeliness is displayed, and so the actual beauty, the light and color, are of the real scene—of the African farm itself. The imagination is employed not to invent, but to report. The following is an unfolding of the gospel of Nature, of science, as compared with the "gospel" of theology, of the supernatural. It is one of the finest pieces of description in the English language. Every word is a gem. It gives the key-note of the whole book:

And now we turn to Nature. All these years we have lived beside her, and we have never seen her; now we open our eyes and look at her.

The rocks have been to us a blur of brown; we bend over them, and the disorganized masses dissolve into a many-colored, many-shaped, carefully-arranged form of existence. Here masses of rainbow-tinted crystals, half-fused together; there bands of smooth gray and red, methodically overlying each other. This rock here is covered with a delicate silver tracery, in some mineral, resembling leaves and branches; there on the flat stone, on which we so often have sat to weep and pray, we look down, and see it covered with the fossil foot-prints of great birds, and the beautiful skeleton of a fish. We have often tried to picture in our mind what the fossilized remains of creatures must be like, and all the while we sat on them. We have been so blinded by thinking and feeling that we have never seen the world.

The flat plain has been to us a reach of monotonous red. We look at it, and every handful of sand starts into life. That wonderful people, the ants, we learn to know; see them make war and peace, play and work, and build their huge palaces. And that smaller people we make acquaintance with, who live in the flowers. The bitto flower has been for us a mere blur of yellow; we find its heart composed of a hundred perfect flowers, the homes of the tiny black people with red stripes, who move in and out in that little yellow city. Every bluebell has its inhabitant. Every day the karroo shows us a new wonder sleeping in its teeming bosom. On our way to work we pause and stand to see the ground-spider make its trap, bury itself in the sand, and then wait for the falling-in of its enemy. Further on walks a horned beetle, and near him starts open the door of a spider, who peeps out carefully, and quickly pulls it down again. On a karroo bush a green fly is laying her silver eggs. We carry them home and see the shells pierced, the spotted grub come out, turn to a green fly, and flit away. We are not satisfied with what Nature shows us, and will see something for ourselves. Under the white hen we put a dozen eggs, and break one daily, to see the white spot wax into the chicken. We are not excited or enthusiastic about it; but a man is not to lay his throat open; he must think of something. So we plant seeds in rows on our dam wall, and pull one up daily to see how it goes with them. Alladeen buried her wonderful stone, and a golden palace sprung up at her feet. We do far more. We put a brown seed in the earth, and a living thing starts out—starts upward—why, no more than Alladeen can we say—starts upward, and does not desist till it is higher than our heads, sparkling with dew in the early morning, glittering with yellow blossoms, shaking brown seeds with little embryo souls on to the ground. We look at it solemnly, from the time it consists of two leaves peeping above the ground and a soft white root, till we have to raise our faces to look at it; but we find no reason for that upward starting.

We look into dead ducks and lambs. In the evening we carry them home, spread newspapers on the floor, and lie working with them till midnight. With a startled feeling, near akin to ecstasy, we open the lump of flesh called a heart, and find little doors and strings inside. We feel them, and put the heart away, but every now and then return to look and to feel them again. Why we like them so we can hardly tell.

A gander drowns itself in our dam. We take it out and open it on the bank, and kneel, looking at it. Above are the organs divided by delicate tissues; below are the intestines artistically curved in a spiral form, and each tier covered by a delicate net-work of blood-vessels standing out red against the faint blue background. Each branch of the blood-vessels is comprised of a trunk, bifurcating and rebifurcating into the most delicate hair-like threads, symmetrically arranged. We are struck with its singular beauty. And, moreover—and here we drop from our kneeling into a sitting posture—this also we remark: of that same exact shape and outline is our thorn tree seen against the sky in midwinter: of that shape also is delicate metallic tracery between our rocks; in that exact path does our water flow when without a furrow we lead it from the dam; so shaped are the antlers of the horned beetle. How are these things related that such deep union should exist between them all? Is it chance? Or, are they not all the fine branches of one trunk, whose sap flows through us all? That would explain it. We nod over the gander's inside.

This thing we call existence; is it not a something which has its roots far down below in the dark, and its branches stretching out into the immensely above, which we among the branches cannot see? Not a chance jumble; a living thing, a One. The thought gives us intense satisfaction, we cannot tell why.

We nod over the gander; then start up suddenly, look into the blue sky, throw the dead gander and the refuse into the dam, and go to work again.

And so it comes to pass, in time, that the earth ceases for us to be a weltering chaos. We walk in the great hall of life, looking up and round reverentially. Nothing is despicable—all is meaning full; nothing is small—all is part of a whole, whose beginning and end we know not. The life that throbs in us is a pulsation from it; too mighty for our comprehension, not too small.

And so it comes to pass at last that whereas the sky was at first a small blue rag stretched out over us, and so low that our hands might touch it, pressing down on us, it raises itself into an immeasurable blue arch over our heads, and we begin to live again.

This is a Freethought book. It accepts no particle of theology. It stands by fact and experience. It does not try to make things better than they are. It is called a pessimistic book. This does not make it any the less helpful. It is simply a brave book because it will not declare that all is lovely, here or hereafter; because it will not say all is well when to say so is a lie and a fraud. All is not well. But not the less nobly are we to live—not the less strenuously, not the less courageously. Always there is beauty, splendor, attainment for the daring soul. We need not be wretched; though God is dead, the good survives. For him who learns to "labor and to wait," as our author happily says, "there will always be something worth living for while there are shimmery afternoons." Again, "Ah, life is delicious; well to live long, and see the darkness breaking and the day coming. The day when soul shall not thrust back the soul that would come to it; when men shall not be driven to seek solitude because of the crying out of love and sympathy. Well to live long and see the new light breaking."

"The Story of an African Farm" is a companion book to "Robert Elsmere," because, like "Robert Elsmere," it tells what is going on in the vast realms of to-day's thought. It is a book of history, not merely of imagination. It is a living part of the nineteenth century. It is taken out of its throbbing heart and brain. It is not "made up;" it is the storm and whirlwind, and sunshine and repose, of veritable existence. S. P. P.

THE STOCKTON MEETING.

From the Daily Independent.

The meeting was open by President Freeman of the Liberal League, who said the object was to counteract the influence of religion in politics, the tendency of which was to abridge liberty. He made but few remarks, and those to the same point, closing by offering a preamble and resolutions which, he said, had been approved by the Liberal League and the Turn Verein:

Whereas, Liberals of all shades are jealous of any interference with the civil and secular liberties of the citizen by any legislation on the subject of religion; and,

Whereas, There is an earnest movement on foot in this state, having for its purpose the securing from the state legislature now in session the passage of a Sunday law which, if passed, would seriously affect the freedom and well-being of the citizen and the whole people, besides being productive of religious and political discord, and would be the stepping-stone to future legislation in the direction of the practical union of church and state; therefore, as liberty seems to be the most precious jewel of our political world it must, like all other precious things, be ever watchfully guarded. Be it therefore

Resolved, That we are unqualifiedly opposed to the passage of any Sunday law bill, believing that all law having for its purpose the well-being of the people should be made upon a strictly secular basis, like the laws of Nature, knowing no Sunday, no fast days, nor other holy days of the religious calendar. In conclusion, be it

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our county representatives at Sacramento, requesting of them a careful consideration of the subject when it is brought before their several legislative bodies, and that these resolutions be attested by the secretaries of the societies of the Turn Verein and of the Liberal League of the city of Stockton.

W. T. Jones moved their adoption and the motion prevailed without opposition.

President Freeman then introduced Schuenemann-Pott, of San Francisco, who spoke in German. He prefaced his speech by saying he should confine himself to one principal point, the God idea in government. The present movement was one to mobilize the Liberal forces in opposition to those who would impose their opinions upon others by legislative acts. This idea, he said, had already gained too much ground even in the Federal government, which had stamped it upon the coins of the country even down to the nickel, to wit: "In God We Trust." He considered this idea in nearly all of its bearings, in a vein of keen satire, with many sentences as forcible as Ingersoll's, but less abrupt, and awakened a great deal of applause and laughter at his sallies, some of which would shock the orthodox believer and might subject the speaker to the penalty of blasphemy if, as Ingersoll says, the geography had not been in his favor. He could understand the God idea in monarchies, where the monarch depends upon bayonets to maintain his divine right to rule, and where church and state are united. There they permitted no dogmas to be questioned, yet no one would accept them if they were not so well backed by the police. There it was "God with Us," and here it is "In God We Trust," and what was enforced yonder these "God-we-trust" people would enforce here if they dared. That it was contrary to the genius and spirit of our institutions did not count with those zealots who pursued the idea. They would reverse even mathematical axioms and make us believe that three times one are but one. He sketched the many and various deities from remotest mythology to the present, and asked, "Which god?" The God of the Jews and the Christian God he described as the bachelor God, and God with a family, and Jesus, the crown prince, and asked which of these. Then there was the Protestant God and the Catholic God. The first was an autocrat, and the other had a vast cabinet to help him, yet the autocrat had to content himself with the assistance of a few angels singing hallelujahs! In which of these gods do we trust? Who were included in that we? The Liberals? No, by no means, and here the speaker employed a word that showed how closely a remnant of the religious habit clung to him. "Bewahre," he cried, an exclamation that usually appears: "Gott bewahre" or "God forbid."

If we were to have a national "God we trust" or a godly trust, he insisted that the chief monopolist of this trust should be duly elected, or rather chosen after a sufficient competitive examination a la civil service. The phrase was a lie, hypocritical cant. Where did they get the authority to stamp this lie upon the coin of the republic? As an emblem of our faith it was no nearer truth than would be "Whisky we drink," or "Poker we play."

Another view of it was the "trust" part. How did we trust God? We didn't loan him anything, give him a credit on our books, or deposit our money with him. Perhaps it is the coin that trusts. Trusts what? That it may not be clipped, sweated, counterfeited, or stolen, perhaps. The idea was the height of absurdity. This republic does not trust in God. It does not depend upon any god. It is grounded on the sovereignty of man; on the manliness of its men. A republic and a church did not and could not endure or tolerate each other. The God idea is a monarchical idea. Thrones on earth are but the mirrored reflections of the throne above. The republic has none of it; wants none of it; will tolerate none of it.

Mr. Pott closed his speech, which was couched in the choicest of German, with a poetical peroration that awakened great enthusiasm, and earned for him very hearty applause.

From the Stockton Express.

Mr. Putnam's lecture, being in English, was more generally understood, and contrary to general expectation, it was not an anti-religious discourse. Had a stranger been there, and not understood the exact state of affairs, he would have come to the conclusion that Mr. Putnam was simply a dissatisfied Christian, who was fighting against an innovation. He did not ask for evidence of the Trinity. He made no war on the mother's prayer. He razed no sacred pile. He fagoted no man who dared to think different from him. But, in language that never once reached vociferation, he made a fervent plea to be allowed the privilege of thinking for himself. While according religious rights and liberties to all men, he was loth to submit to guardianship. He was not willing that any person but himself should do the reasoning for Samuel P. Putnam.

In substance he said that the question is not one of belief or of unbelief, but interests the Christian and the Infidel alike.

The only challenge made by Mr Putnam was with regard to the Mosaic Sabbath being a day of worship, he claiming that the account as written by Moses indicates that the day was a fete day, a celebration, something akin to the Fourth of July, a day of commemoration, and not a time set apart for gloom and repentance, and that it applied to strange gods as much as to the Jewish deity.

"The Sabbath is the rich man's day," he said, "for the passing of the Sunday law would stop the street cars, and the excursion boats, and not the coaches of the aristocracy. It would stop the Sunday newspaper and the Sunday train, and compel the patrons of the latter to lie over at inconvenient points. It is the law for tramps, by which they may, under certain conditions, sue for wages that have been earned and paid to honest men."

The lecturer created quite a burst of laughter in reading the petition of the W. C. T. U. to the California legislature. While the import of the document was plain, the phraseology was imperfect, and in one flight of rhetoric the collective word "we" indicated that if not legally restrained, the signers—the W. C. T. U.—would take in the sacrament and a Spanish bull fight during the same day.

The speaker called attention to the California State Liberal Union, claiming that the organization had neither creed nor unbelief, but that it was open to Spiritualist and Deist, to the Jew and to the Materialist. Its Nine Demands were but the demands of justice, he said, and they asked for the abolition of the chaplain, an officer who received $1 a minute for a five minutes' prayer. They asked for the non-exemption of church property from paying taxes. They asked for the doing away of the judicial oath, but not lessening the penalty attached to making false statements before the courts. They asked for justice only, but justice in its fullest sense.

The speaker concluded his address by the rendition of "Men of Thought and Men of Action, Clear the Way." He was at home with his subject, and did not break when, from time to time, the pro-Sunday law portion of his audience would get up and leave the room. One of his finest characteristics, and a trait which the gentleman himself has, perhaps, never given a second thought, is that he never yells at his audience as if they were deaf, but holds them by logic, keeps them clinging to his softly-spoken words, in wait to hear what is coming next.

ANOTHER OPINION OF HENRY GEORGE.

After reading the opinion held by Fred. May Holland, of "Poverty and Henry George," for which, he says, he has been asked, I am impelled to ask space for an answer to the gentleman's arguments, for which I have not been asked. To begin: after ascribing numerous undoubted reasons (or rather causes) for the poverty which exists, the gentleman makes use of the following words: "But there are many who are poor because they are idle, intemperate, or extravagant, and to tell them, as is sometimes done at Anti-Poverty meetings, that society is to blame for their sufferings, is to do both them and society harm." The gentleman is mistaken in supposing that the idle or the intemperate are ever told by the advocates of the single tax that society is to blame for any portion of the misfortune or misery which falls upon them as a necessary result of addiction to those vices. The poverty and misery which we claim as the fruits of bad and illogical social laws are the involuntary poverty and its attendant misery which those who are not idle, nor intemperate, nor extravagant, are forced to suffer in consequence of the fact that natural opportunities, which are the common birthright of all, are allowed to become the property in fee simple of a few, upon whose terms these opportunities must be used, if used at all. This, we claim, is the cause of involuntary poverty, and the only cause which compels men who are able and anxious to work to tramp the streets in vain search for employment which is not to be had, even at a price which would be insufficient to maintain them in the county almshouse. In regard to poverty which results from idleness and intemperance, it may be said that while we are sorry that there are so many belonging to this class, we recognize the fact that such vices are largely engendered by the difficulty of finding work, which enforces idle periods during which men lose ambition, and fall into intemperance, frequently from the discouragement arising from their knowledge of their friendless and helpless condition. The gentleman thinks that it is entirely owing to superior ability that some get more than others for their services, which leaves out of the question entirely the fact that thousands who are just as capable as those who succeed fail to get an opportunity to prove what is in them, because opportunities are restricted by being held out of use by those who, like dogs in the manger, will not use them themselves nor allow others to do so, except on their terms.

Society, the gentleman says, is like a steamer, on which the captain, pilot, and engineer are paid more than deck hands, because they are worth more; which is not to say that the natural capabilities of the captain, pilot, and engineer are necessarily superior to those with which the deck hands are endowed. If the deck hand had been afforded the same opportunities which the captain enjoyed, from the cradle up, he might have become commodore of a fleet. This is one of the results which ensue from treating land as private property. Some are born with absolutely no right to a foothold in the country of their birth, because some are allowed by the laws to hold that which is the common heritage of the race. This fact handicaps those who start with only their natural abilities, because in order to get an opportunity to display and render effective those gifts they must get some world-owner to employ them.

If taxation were assessed only on land values, the inducement to hold land idle for speculative purposes would be largely diminished, and if that tax took for the people the entire value which accrues to land by the mere presence of the people, no one would find profit in seizing more ground than he could use. This elimination of speculation would open up natural opportunities which are now closed, and give everybody a chance to employ himself, thus relieving him from the necessity of finding an employer, as a condition precedent to going to work. This method, when fully in operation, would give the laborer the full results of his labor, which would shortly put all but the impotent and the lazy in the position to educate themselves and their children, and then people would select suitable occupations more frequently than now, because it is now not so much the question what a boy is best fitted to do as it is of what can he get to do. He has no time to waste hunting some special occupation, for his necessities compel him to take the first thing which offers, for fear that before another chance comes he will have starved to death.

The gentleman seems to misunderstand the meaning of the assertion that all men are born free and equal, for he appears to think that those who advance that proposition intend to convey the idea that all men are born with the same stature and strength, and with the same amount of grey matter in the brain. Equality, as used in the phrase quoted, applies simply to natural rights. "We hold these things to be self-evident, that all men are born free and equal, and with the same right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," is about the phraseology of a well-known document not entirely unknown to Americans. Now, how can one have the same right to his life, his liberty, etc., unless he has also the same right to that which alone is capable of supporting life, to wit, the land? If he must make terms with some landowner previous to starting in the pursuit of wealth, it seems clear that he is living on the landholder's terms, in other words, he is paying some one who has no greater right to any given opportunity than he himself has, for the privilege of living at all. What kind of liberty would you call that?

The gentleman is evidently in error also in regard to the object aimed at by Mr. George's single tax scheme, for he says: "My neighbor makes money faster than I can, because his talents are more useful to the race. To compel him to support me would be to rob him of his just reward; and to prevent him from earning more than I earn would make him a cripple and a slave."

The gentleman should have formed some clear conception of what Mr. George advocates previous to an attempt at criticism. His method smacks too strongly of the system pursued by theologians, when dealing with that ornament of his race and time, Thomas Paine. Scarcely one of them considers it necessary, as a preliminary, to read what Mr. Paine wrote. The gentleman seems to have thought knowledge of what Mr. George wrote equally superfluous. Mr. George does not advocate the imposition of any restriction upon what any one can make by the use of superior talents; he simply holds that no one should be allowed to make themselves wealthy by holding the land idle. He does not entertain the idea that any one should be forced, or expected, to support anybody, or that any should be restricted, or prevented, from earning as much as, or more than, any one else. He merely demands that no one shall, by the monopolization of the element from the products of which all must live, obtain any portion of the earnings of another, except he renders an equivalent, which quid pro quo, we claim, we do not get, for that portion of the product of our labor which we are forced, by existing laws, to give to the landholder for the use of a privilege which belongs, ethically, to him, only in the same proportion that it belongs to us.

Poverty, the gentleman thinks, will never vanish entirely, but will continue to diminish, as it has for centuries. What authority has he for supposing that poverty is, or has been, decreasing? Does not the existence of the ubiquitous tramp argue that poverty is increasing and not diminishing? Why! the word which denominates that product of modern civilization has not got into the dictionaries yet, except, perhaps, in the supplement. Poverty is not decreasing.

The gentleman thinks that Mr. George's plan of levying taxation on land values (not on land, as the gentleman says) is open to fatal objections, one of which he thinks is that states which stand low in average wealth would not allow themselves to be overtaxed. Suppose that the law-making power should decree that taxation for the support of the general government shall be derived by taxing the several states directly, in proportion to the population, what possible redress would any recalcitrant state possess? Of course, the representatives of any state could, and possibly would, oppose, to the extent of their power, any change in methods of taxation which they considered detrimental to the interests of the most influential of their constituents, but the measure, once it became law, would have to be submitted to. It is not states which pay taxes, it is the people that pay them, and the land-value tax would fall upon the poor very lightly, and upon the rich with correspondingly increased weight; the rich would recalcitrate, of course; they always do when any project is on foot to compel them to pay in proportion to their ability, but why would direct taxation cause any more opposition when levied for national than for state or local purposes?

The gentleman thinks that taxes can be laid nowhere so justly as on churches, banks, factories, saloons, hotels, and costly mansions, and thinks that the plan which would allow a man to spend millions upon such structures, with no greater charge for taxes than if he had erected a cheap cottage on the same land, is not in consonance with common sense, and cannot be considered as being, to any great extent, like a new gospel to the poor. Let us see. It is to the interest of the poor that every inducement should be offered for the promotion of building, because much building makes increased work for them, and their wages are likely to be more, when the demand for their services is great, than it would be if the demand were small. Therefore, to remove taxation from those things which the poor produce, such as churches and various other structures mentioned by the gentleman, is but another term for promoting the industries from which the poor derive their support. And to tax them, what is that but a fine and a penalty put upon those who use their capital in productive enterprises, and a direct premium offered them to induce them to use their means in investments that cannot be reached by taxation (unless they choose to reveal them to the assessors, which, by the way, very few of them do)? If a man is such a ninny as to occupy a valuable site, which is suitable for a large bank, hotel, or a costly mansion, with a cheap cottage, he should pay as much in the one case as in the other, because he has the privilege of putting the ground to better use, and if he cannot, from lack of pecuniary resources, do so, he has no use for such valuable land, and should seek humbler quarters, just as a man who cannot stand the strain of paying for a superior suite of apartments at a crack hotel should seek accommodations more in accordance with his means. The cases are identical. The hotel proprietor could not be expected to allow his impecunious guest to remain for what he could afford to pay, when he could rent the apartments for their value to others; and the holder of valuable ground should pay the value that opportunity would bring the community if it were put to its highest possible use. I would inform the gentleman that the single tax would not enable the state to confiscate all the land, any more than the present system enables it to confiscate all the houses, or other objects on which taxation is imposed. If the people choose to shift taxation from many things to one thing, how can that be called confiscation?

In conclusion, I would like to inform the gentleman that the single tax men are quite as firmly opposed to any "reform" which requires the "sacrifice of individual liberty" as he can possibly be. The single tax would require no such sacrifice, but would, on the contrary, reinvest the individual with all the rights of which he has been deprived, and place him in a position to make his bargains in the wage market, on equal terms with his employer, a position he has not occupied for many years.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

E.-O. Roscoe.

THE real point at issue is, not whether Zola's books are decent or indecent, but whether a government has a right to suppress indecent literature. And here I must state my conviction that they have no right whatever to say a word in the matter. No man should be restricted in his right to publish whatever he pleases; no publisher should be forbidden to sell (if he can) any book. Legislation against vice is folly, and has been proved so since the beginning of laws. It is never successful; on the contrary, it always promotes what it seeks to suppress. The innocence of ignorance is impossible in this world; the only possible innocence is that of knowledge and volition. . . . And my conclusion is, that corrupt freedom is better than enforced virtue—if so absurd a contradiction in terms can be admitted.—Julian Hawthorne, in America.

St. Peter (compassionately)—"No wonder you never heard of this place, my poor friend. You never had a chance. Come in."—Chicago Tribune.

MR. LAWLER, of Illinois, has introduced in the House of Representatives at Washington a concurrent resolution directing the public printer hereafter to drop the letters "ue" at the end of such words as "epilogue," and the letters "me" at the end of such words as "programme;" the letter "e" at the end of such words as "hypocrite;" the letters "te" at the end of such words as "coquette," and to substitute "f" for "ph" in such words as "phantom."

AFTER forty years of gratuitous and earnest labor in this blessed [temperance] cause, I am solemnly convinced that if it was left to the tender mercies of partisan politicians, it would be assassinated! God never ordained that conflicts with gigantic sins should be waged with carnal weapons alone, or under the command of Cæsar! I am also convinced that if all the time, money, and effort that have been expended on political movements had been expended in direct moral efforts to check the drinking usages, and educate the conscience and conduct, and teach to the young, lessons of abstinence, and make public sentiment against the diabolical and deadly drink-traffic, then our reform would be a hundred-fold stronger to-day.—Dr. T. L. Cuyler.

THE editor of the Garden City, Kan., Herald has received an invitation to attend the inauguration ceremonies at Washington, but is obliged to send his regrets. He says: "One thing that prevents us from going to the inauguration is a want of transportation, as well as the wherewithal with which to purchase it. A man can stand off the local dealer in groceries, but a story about a lame leg or a recent robbery in a lonely and sequestered spot on a cloudy and moonless night won't go with a railroad or post-office. We want Mr. Harrison and his wife, too, to understand that we had no unkind feelings toward them, and that we think the crowd that will gather at Washington will be ordinarily respectable, and that we are not absenting ourselves for any reason for which they are in any manner responsible. If we were to attend we should want to take in the ball and perchance shassey around with the girls in the mazy dance, whatever that is, but we should not look well in a linen duster and bare hands, yet, we are sorry to say, those things constitute a large portion of our wardrobe at the present writing. We trust our absence will not in any manner interfere with any of the proceedings. We sincerely hope that Mr. Harrison will not omit his address because we cannot be present to hear it. It is our desire that the ball should go on just as if we were to be there. Let nothing be omitted from the program. The committee have our thanks, and also the positive assurance that we will not be there."

MUCH of the wild and irreconcilable chronology of the Bible may be attributable to the fact that the "holy men of God" were not adepts in the writing down of numericals, and that they thereby bungled and stultified the facts with which the Holy Ghost "inspired" them. The non-arithmetical plight of the sacred scribes may be illustrated by the following episode in the experience of a certain Hibernian undertaker, who once got a job to make a coffin, the job to include painting the inscription on the lid. This he was too illiterate to do, but did not like to confess as much. By dint of following the written copy given him, he managed to get as far as "Michael O'Rafferty, aged—;" but, try as he would, he could not imitate the "28." At last he remembered that he could write "7," and that four 7's made 28. So he finished the inscription, aged 7777. When they came to bury Michael the coffin stood at the grave side, and the priest spoke somewhat as follows: "Ah, he was a fine lad, and he's lying there so still; taken away in the very prime of loife. Young, too, he was, only—" and here the priest looked down at the coffin plate to see how old Michael was. "He was only," said his reverence again, and put his glasses on and went nearer to see how old he really was. "He was only—" he continued; "he was seven thousand seven hundred and seventy-seven. Tare and ages! how did he escape the flood?"—Agnostic Journal.

THE Express of Saturday evening contained some interviews with "several" city pastors, promising in the headline, "Striking Evidences of the Good Work at the Pavilion." The Rev. Mr. Reed has the nerve to say that he does not approve of Mr. Jones's methods; for which he has the thanks of those Christians to whom it is gall and wormwood to have the sacredness of their religion dragged in the gutter; or, as the Herald has it, hawked about for the personal benefit of Sam Jones. Dr. Fay is reported as sharply criticising the clerical mountebank. But most affecting are the remarks of Dr. Cantine. Truly, evil communications corrupt good manners! Recognizing the efficacy of the Jones style, Dr. Cantine tells us that "for seventeen years he has had religion in his head, his heart, his hands, and his feet." He also says that he is "glad the emissaries of the devil are mad." Now, could not he emulate his friend still more and speak out—tell us to whom he refers as the "emissaries of the devil?" Also, will he please tell just how many times he has gone down into the congregation asking men if they were Christians, and got the reply "none of your damn business?" If he were only "at liberty to do so" he could tell us wonderful tales. Truly 'tis a pity the converted gamblers, saloon-keepers, and others of that ilk, should be so ashamed of their reformation! He speaks of these gentry in the plural; now if he will point out a few saloons that have been closed by the consciences of the proprietors it will be much more to the point. If he will give the address of some of those lachrymose gamblers we would like to interview them. Perhaps they have concluded, like another reformed gambler, that preaching will pay better, and we shall have competition in the revivalist field.—M. D., in the Los Angeles Times.

The Missionary Woman.

She went 'round and asked subscriptions
For the black Egyptians
And the Terra del Fuegians,
She did;
For the tribes 'round Athabasca,
And the men of Madagascar,
And the poor souls of Alaska,
So she did;
She longed, she said, to buy
Jelly cake and jam and pie
For the Anthropophagi,
So she did.

How she loved the cold Norwegian,
And the poor, half-melted Feejian,
And the dear Malacca islander!

She did;
She sent tins of red tomato
To the tribes beyond the equator,
But her husband ate potato,

So he did;
The poor, helpless, hopeless thing
(My voice falters as I sing)
Tied his clothes up with a string,
Yes he did.

A STATE convention of the Liberals of California met in this city January 27, and completed its work in three sessions. "Liberals" are what used to be "Infidels" in Abner Kneeland's and Thomas Paine's time, and the name of "Infidel" was considered by most people disgraceful, just as in orthodox communities the name of "Universalist" and "Unitarian" was. Now, however, there are quite respected and respectable people who openly say that they are Agnostics, that is, that they do not know whether revealed religion is true or not. Agnostics now would have been blacklisted as Infidels fifty years ago. "Liberals" are little more than Agnostics; for the furthest that it is logically safe for a man to go is, to say that about revelation and a future state he does not know. If he asserts that he does know that there isn't any, he is as bad as the Christian who asserts that he does know that there is. There are a great many persons in California who are in sympathy with this organization. And a great many more who may not accept all of their views, not even all of the "Nine Points," will at least be in favor of their enjoyment, on the same terms with other citizens, of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.—San Francisco Weekly Star.

AN EXPLANATION.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Your comment of February 9.—I have read after Fred. May Holland with pleasure and profit. My expressed disrespect for his opinions was confined exclusively to the one on single tax matters. If I had made a special study of astronomy, I should not be expected to respect an opinion regarding planetary motions if it contained evidence of being formed after a cursory reading of Genesis and the occasional observation of a single star.

If I hold in my hand a small book, I have no respect for an opinion that it is eleven feet thick. When Mr. Holland wrote, he had no more respect for my opinion than I had for his. Perhaps I am making fine distinctions, but they are not new ones. If this will not go as an explanation, call it an apology.

JAMES B. HASSETT.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

After penning my last letter from Visalia, I took "Halstead's Express" up the "Canyon of the Kaweah," to the lands of the colony. The Trail was a rough one. For about ten miles we rode along among the beautiful oak groves, fine orchards and vineyards, and across numerous water ditches, by immense farms, and across a very level country. After this we entered this wonderful mountain gorge of the Kaweah, which is a small stream, but with a fall of several hundred feet to the mile, which makes it one continual rushing torrent among the mighty boulders it has cut from these mountains of rock and granite. The scenery is most grand and sublime; ever changing as the traveler winds his way, sometimes along a narrow sandy bottom, often in a trail cut along high up the mountain side, but ever with the sound of the rushing, tumbling water of the merry river making weird but welcome music, to cheer him along this weary journey. There is, now here, now there, a little farm, hid away in these solitudes, that is like an oasis in the desert, a thing of beauty and a joy forever.

The best fruit in California is raised in the mountains. Cattle ranging up the rugged gorges and over the peaks who live all the year round without being fed, while the bees gather in the nectar of the gods. Verily, Kaweah is the land where milk and honey, beef and apples, and jolly co-operators may be found. We arrived at Mr. Halstead's ranch, consisting of between 800 and 900 acres, about sun down, and were kindly invited to stay with the happy old bachelor over-night, and sleep amid his bearskins, and by a roaring log fire, and see for once if "it is not good for man to live alone." Here we found the thriftiest looking orchard I have seen in the state, consisting of apples, peaches, mulberries, figs, and nuts of different kinds. After a rousing supper, plenty of stories and card playing and singing, we retired to dream of wildcats, mountain lions, cinnamon bears, and the future of this little but thoroughly in earnest colony that is being built up to prove the practicability of socialism or true co-operation. Here at comrade Halstead's ranch is the beginning of the road to the colony lands which reach from this point, cut along the sides of these often precipitous mountains, to the Giant Forests, some twenty miles away, up and up, some 7000 or 8000 feet, nearly to the snowy peaks where the big Redwoods grow. These sturdy, energetic Socialists, very few in number, commenced this road nearly three years ago, which engineers estimated would cost half a million, almost without a dollar, and now the mammoth trees are almost reached. A few weeks more and the long tiresome work of building roads, winding around rocky-mountain sides, will be over. Then for the mills that will soon be humming, away up in these almost inaccessible heights where wheeled vehicle has never rolled, and man but seldom trod. Then the long flume, of near forty miles, must be built to carry off the product of the mills, and water the gardens and orchards that will soon be planted in the little nooks and rich coves all along the line.

Early the next day we resumed our trip up this winding trail until we came to the tent city of Advance, where we found the most of these toilers for a better industrial system than competition can give or ever has given. I found all doing their "level best" to make the colony a success, undergoing many privations and hardships, often ragged and with little to encourage them that final success would dawn upon them. All seemed happy and jolly, healthy and true. Some of these brave and true fellows have never been out of the canyon since the work began two and a half years ago. Most of the men are leading a wild bachelor life. There is quite a number of finely educated and handsome young women (and room for a hundred more); also middle aged and elderly ladies, living here in their tents alone, drawing their time checks for labor done, the same as their male companions, and keeping "bachelor's hall" in true feminine style, with pictures and flowers, carpets and rugs, musical instruments, bright ribbons, and brighter eyes all around. Here these folks have lived for two years, far removed from the haunts of men, winter and summer, working and waiting for the good time coming. A more hearty welcome I never met than from the splendid families of J. H. Redstone, J. J. Martin, Mr. Evans, Mr. E. C. Miles, H. T. Taylor, Mr. Reed, A. W. Green, Mrs. Jennie Sturdevant, Mrs. Egli, Mr. Rodell, Mr. Weitnecht, and many single comrades, both men and women, whose names I fail to remember. Nearly all of these people were formerly residents of your city, but tired of the ceaseless strife, of cut-throat competition and bitter disappointments, have come away up among the crags of the Kaweah to carve out a home together for their old age. There is no creed here, no God worshiped, no religion but the religion of Humanity.

Advance city is some 200 feet above the river, but a water wheel sets in the rushing torrent and is attached to a force pump that sends the water up through iron pipes, all among the canvas houses, on the heights above, irrigating their flowers and gardens, etc. Deer and bear are often killed here; love is made, school sustained, children borne, theatricals occur, and life goes on, like the merry river far below and the perpetual sunshine above, telling that this natural life is nearer to the designs of nature than what is called civilization. There is room for hundreds more here, and all interested should write to E. C. Miles, treasurer, Three Rivers, Tulare county, or J. J. Martin, secretary, Visalia, California. I remained here two weeks, and could spend a lifetime here, among these true brothers and sisters, this gorgeous scenery, magnificent mountain water from melted snows, and clear sunshine. This climate is far better than in the valleys or near the sea.

Visalia, February 1, 1889.

A Leader Wanted in Oregon.

To the Editors of Freethought:

DEAR BRETHREN: As my year's subscription is about up, I inclose money order for $2.25 for FREETHOUGHT and "Freethinkers' Annual." I congratulate the Freethinkers of California for their success throughout the state, which success is mainly due to FREETHOUGHT and its enterprising managers and editors. The California Liberal Union, with Putnam as president, will be a blazing meteor in the heaven of Freethought; and may it never lose its lustre and its shining glory. I wish Oregon was in the hands and under the control of a Putnam for a while. According to "News and Notes," we have good material here, but lack a leader. With success to FREETHOUGHT, I am yours for U. M. L.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - MARCH 2, 1889

THE apostolic benediction comes high, and Judge O'Connor, of San Jose, is probably the only lay citizen of California who has one in the house. It cost him a $50,000 donation to the Catholic University at Washington.

OUR president-elect, General Harrison, has been "visibly affected" again, this time by the last Sunday sermon of his Indianapolis pastor, who feelingly alluded to Mr. Harrison's departure for Washington. The whole congregation, as in duty bound, overflowed its banks and wept moistly.

MR. CHARLES WATTS, of Toronto, has been lecturing in Salt Lake City to large audiences. The religious scamp Braden was in the city at the same time, and we are somewhat surprised to learn from the Tribune of February 19 that the two have engaged in a debate. Braden is such an unscrupulous and habitual liar that discussion with him is totally worthless.

THE clerical profession has received a new recruit lately in the person of "Billy" Frasier, a somewhat noted light-weight pugilist. There is no doubt of his success. The notoriety of Sam Jones, Sam Small, Dwyer, Sawyer, Gough, and other converted ruffians, shows that for effectiveness in revival work a bad reputation is of more value than a long and arduous term in a theological seminary.

A SPECIAL report prepared by Commissioner Wright of the department of labor shows that throughout the country, in the past twenty years, marriage has been a failure in 328,716 cases, that being the number of divorces granted. If some statistics could be obtained as to the number of cases in which the single state has proved unsuccessful, there would be some chance of getting at the real value of marriage as a modifier of human misery.

SOME of the wealthy New York churches having excluded strangers and poor people from the sanctuary, the Rev. Wong Jock San, priest of a Chinese joss house on Mott street, throws open the doors of his temple and invites all wayfarers to enter. He has given the following to the press: "You can just say that if the Christian churches don't allow them to pray or praise the Lord in their sanctuaries they can come right into this temple of 'Joss' here. It is built with much wealth and is kept as neat as we know how. They can come here and worship as long as they please and at any time they choose, and pray as loud as they want to to any God they have a fancy for, all free of cost. We have no castes here nor any religious differences. Every one, so long as he or she is a human being, regardless of their condition of life, is welcome. Religion is about the cheapest thing we have among us. Why should we deny it to anybody?"

At the Methodist pastors' meeting last week the Rev. C. F. Eltzholtz read a paper on "Our Foreign Element and What to Do with It," in the course of which he said that "a Philadelphia judge had the good sense to refuse to naturalize a man who was a professed Atheist, and said truly that there were already too many of that class in the country." It is evident that if the Protestant clergy could have their way they would exclude from citizenship all foreigners who show themselves to be impervious to evangelistic influences.

NEXT SUNDAY'S MEETING.

Prof. Herbert Miller will inaugurate a series of Liberal meetings in St. George's Hall, 909½ Market street, beginning next Sunday, March 3, at 3 o'clock. The subject of the first lecture is the "Old and New."

It is hoped that these meetings will be well attended and supported. If successful, the outcome will be the organization of a Local Liberal Club.

NEWS AND NOTES.

The campaign at Sacramento has opened with excellent promise. Pioneer Hall was filled to overflowing, and nearly as many went away for want of standing room as remained. About four hundred were present. It is hoped that a larger hall can be procured for the next lecture. The interest in the work of the Liberal Union is evidently growing. My subject at this first meeting was, "The Rev. Sam Jones Reviewed." I presume the subject drew some curiosity hunters. If Sam Jones were "Sam Jones" and nothing more, he would not be worthy of review. But since he is indorsed by the church and clergymen with scarcely an exception, his methods and ideas become the methods and ideas of the popular religion, and are to be criticised as such. Sam Jones's theology is of an entirely new order. In all my studies I have never come across the like. He says that God loves the meanest man in Sacramento as well as he loves the best man, and perhaps a little better. Who the meanest man may be it is difficult to tell. It is possible that he may be one of the largest contributors to the coffers of the Rev. Sam Jones. In that case, it is no wonder that the God of the Rev. Sam Jones loves the meanest man with surpassing affection, but the God of Jones is not the god of this universe. God is goodness, and goodness cannot love meanness. It hates it always and everywhere. Love can only love the lovable, the noble, and the beautiful. But the noble and the beautiful are not always in outward adornments and respectability. The true saint, the true nobility, is not inside the churches any more than outside, and according to the old legend, the strolling player is apt to be the noblest saint, though he might never utter a single prayer or claim a single virtue, but does good unconsciously, "without making any fuss about it," as Charles Dickens says. The noblest virtue is that virtue which never plumes itself as virtue.

The Rev. Sam Jones declares "love cannot save." This is a new theology. Human love cannot always save because it is always limited in power, but God is not limited, and therefore he can save. Thomas Paine gives about the best definition of deity there is: "The Deity is a being whose power is equal to his will." If man's power were equal to his will, then man would be a god. Whatever God wills he can do. If therefore he loves the meanest man, then his love will make the meanest man the best man; he will not leave him in his meanness. If, as Sam Jones says, God loves the sinner in hell as well as the angel in heaven, then he will save the sinner in hell. Infinite love and infinite power must in the end make nothing but goodness and beauty. It will not love the evil, but will destroy it.

The Rev. Sam Jones says he would rather be the worst criminal in the state-prisons of the land than an open, avowed Infidel; that is, he would rather be a robber, a thief, a murderer, a ravisher, than an honest man who dares to speak his mind; rather be a human fiend than Thomas Paine, whose genius first set the stars of glory in the flag of our Republic; than Jefferson, who penned the Declaration of Independence; than Humboldt, who read the secrets of the universe for the benefit of all; than Darwin, who has revolutionized modern thought; than Ingersoll, whose words and life have given hope and courage to thousands. Sam Jones is either a fool or a knave, and no Christian who has a spark of intelligence can indorse his outrageous statement, for every Christian knows that the honest, outspoken Infidel is a trustworthy and honorable citizen, and that the world is filled with the glory of his deeds. The Infidel does not fight anything good in Christianity, its humanity. It fights only its inhumanity, its cruelty, its evil, its error, and its superstition. Let Christianity or the Bible or the church declare anything that is really good, really for the happiness and beauty of this world, for civilization and progress, and the Infidel will most cordially accept it. The Rev. Sam Jones's definitions of Christianity and Infidelity are as false as it is possible for charlatany and ignorance to give. It is astonishing that intelligent Christians will indorse this man who seems so familiar with the slum and nothing else. He says there is more swearing in the city of Sacramento than in any other city. How does Sam Jones know this? With whom does he associate. I have heard but very little swearing in Sacramento. Had I been with Sam Jones I might, however, have heard a good deal more, as he evidently has. He seems to have a wonderful capacity for seeing how bad the word is. I would commend to his notice the words of his Master, "Judge not, that ye be not judged."

I shall be at Livermore next Sunday. The friends there are quite active. The community is Liberal, and I believe Livermore will be one of the best points along the line.

I shall be at Sacramento again Sunday, March 10, to discuss the Sabbath law, now pending in Congress and in the California legislature. The proposed law in California makes it a crime to buy a ticket to a theatre or any place of amusement. Is California ready for such an iron despotism as that? It was intended, without doubt, to put the bill through without debate. It is well for Liberals to be on the lookout.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Sacramento, February 25, 1889.

THE QUESTION.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed please find Remonstrance against the Blair Sunday bill, signed to the margin by workingmen. All these are men, citizens of California, and voters who work at manual labor for their living. Some of them are compelled to work seven days in the week in order to "hold down their jobs." They recognize the iniquity and the danger lying in the proposed law, hence give their names in remonstrance. All of them desire, aye, yearn for a day for rest and recreation. They don't care whether it is Sunday or Wednesday, but they want one day in seven for their own—a relief from the grind of toil for maintenance. What are you going to do towards aiding them to secure this just end? Are you going to content yourselves by threatening them with the hell of an enforced observance of the Sabbath?

EUGENE HOUGH.

Oakland, Cal., Feb. 17, 1889.

Mr. Hough's question is one worthy of consideration, but, as we view the case, it must be considered apart from the question of securing by law a day of religious observance and enforced idleness. The right of a man to work upon Sunday is as good as his right to work upon any of the other days of the week, and his right to rest upon that day or any other must also be recognized. It is a thing to be arranged, not by the state, but between himself and his employer. The state must merely see to it that no forcible compulsion is used. How to secure one day of rest and recreation in seven is a question of ways and means with the workingman, but we do not profess to see far enough into the labor problem to outline the method by which this is to be done in all cases. Many men are glad to work an extra day for the sake of the increased pay, or to make up for time they may have lost, from choice or otherwise, during the week. A Sabbath law, if enforced, prevents them from doing so, and their rights are violated.

But the particular Sunday bill that we are objecting to now is the Blair bill, which is aimed more specially at Sunday recreation than at Sunday work. It is therefore not to be wondered at that the workingmen who want a day of recreation fill the remonstrance petition to the margin with their signatures.

THE CALIFORNIA SUNDAY LAW.

A bill has been introduced in the California Senate and Assembly entitled "An Act to add three new sections to the Penal Code, to be known as Sections 299, 300, and 301, respectively, relative to Sunday amusements where liquors are sold, and keeping open places of business on Sunday." Both the Senate and Assembly referred the bill to a Committee on Public Morals. Here are its provisions:

"299. Every person who on Sunday gets up, exhibits, opens, or maintains, or aids in getting up, exhibiting, opening, or maintaining any bull, bear, cock, or prize fight, horse-race, circus, gambling-house, or saloon, or any barbarous and noisy amusement, or who keeps, conducts or exhibits any theatre, melodeon, dance-cellar, or other place of musical, theatrical, or operatic performance, spectacle, or representation, where any wines, liquors, or intoxicating drinks are bought, sold, used, drank, or given away, or who purchases any ticket of admission, or directly or indirectly pays any admission fee to or for the purpose of witnessing or attending any such place, amusement, spectacle, performance, or representation, is guilty of a misdemeanor.

"300. Every person who keeps open on Sunday any store, workshop, bar, saloon, banking-house, or other place of business, for the purpose of transacting business therein, is punishable by fine not less than twenty nor more than one hundred dollars.

"301. The provisions of section three hundred do not apply to persons who on Sunday keep open hotels, boarding-houses, barber shops, baths, markets, restaurants, taverns, livery stables, or retail drug stores, for the legitimate business of each, or such manufacturing establishments as are usually kept in continued operation."

It will be seen that section 299 aims at a separation of music and beer on Sunday—that is, it forbids all sorts of entertainments where intoxicating drinks are sold. The word "where" is not very definite. It does not indicate whether these entertainments are prohibited in states, towns, localities, streets, buildings, or rooms where intoxicating fluids are dispensed, and it might be construed to mean either.

The same section makes it a misdemeanor to buy a ticket to the theatre on Sunday. The idiot who inserted that provision ought to be canonized.

Section 300 would shut up all the stores—that is to say, it would allow the Roman cutthroat Constantine, who established Sunday as the Sabbath, to lock the doors of every mercantile house in this state once a week. An act of that kind bears absurdity on the face of it.

The third section, by exempting taverns, would give rise to the same fraud that was practiced in New York, a few years ago. Every saloon keeper will put the word HOTEL, in small letters, on his door, and go on as before. Then our wise men at Sacramento will have to decide the great question how many beds it takes to constitute a hotel. All of which absurd and ridiculous travesty upon legislation come from the efforts of fanatics to make a distinction between Sunday morality and week-day morality.

FREETHOUGHT AND THE LABOR QUESTION.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I can distinctly remember the time when, like yourselves, I considered priestcraft and other forms of sky-piloting a cause; but of late years some closer observations have completely convinced me that they are an effect. Nothing that I have seen of late comes as near conveying my idea in a nutshell as those few lines contained in your paper, and contributed by my personal friend Severance, of this city, viz.: that "if Jesus Christ found it as difficult to make a living at the carpenter trade" as he does, "it is quite as likely that he went to preaching the gospel of necessity as through a desire to save the world." I mean to say that if we had our natural rights, all could make their living without resorting to any such devilish means as to impose on and profit by the superstitions of the people. And again, were it not for poverty, or the fear of poverty, which is the most dreadful fear we know of, pious knaves could not get a hearing, and consequently would soon look around for some honest way of making a living. All religions are based on and fortified by fear. By disposing of this greatest of all causes of fear, therefore, the foundation of the whole business is gone, and the remainder would shrivel like a tree with the earth removed from around its roots.

You may say it is out of your line to deal with the question of poverty. If so, that settles affairs between you and me. While I have never, personally, suffered real poverty, and don't expect to in the future, yet I deem the industrial question, or the social problem, the problem before us, the one which is of such dimensions as to include all others; and when you get ready to edit your paper somewhat on the plan of the Standard, by Henry George, the Twentieth Century, by Hugh O. Pentecost, or the London Democrat, by Wm. Saunders, you may count on my subscription. Los Angeles, Cal. Very respectfully, S. BYRON WELCOME.

The foregoing letter will serve as well as any of the many we have received for the text of a few remarks on the division of labor. It is an accepted maxim that the jack-of-all-trades is the master of none, and the principle holds just as good in the domain of reform as in that of industry. No man can learn all trades; no journal can be the organ of all trades; likewise no editor can be an all-round reformer, and no paper can advocate all reforms and do justice to any of them. The chosen work of FREETHOUGHT is for religious liberty, and the papers mentioned by our correspondent choose to advocate a certain theory as to land tenure. This is a most proper division of labor, for the reason that the editors of FREETHOUGHT profess to be familiar with the subjects they are called upon to discuss, while they do not claim to be experts on the land problem. On the other hand, Mr. Henry George seems to have a reason for the faith that is in him on the question of a single tax, but so far as we are aware, in all his writings and addresses, the God-in-the-state issue is assiduously dodged. Mr. George evaded expressing himself on the Nine Demands of Liberalism during his campaign in New York city when the editor of the Truth Seeker pressed him for a reply, and we have personally heard him defend Sunday legislation.

Our friend Welcome thinks that the single-tax and associated questions involve all others. We do not see it so. It is not clear to us how the shifting of taxes from house values to land values would materially modify the desire of fanatics to enact Sunday laws and put God in the Constitution, or how it would guard our common schools against the attacks of Rome. Instead, it appears more reasonable that to lift the burden of taxation from the poor man's garden patch and impose it on the several hundred millions worth of church property in the country might temporarily draw the attention of religionists from other people's affairs to their own.

If Henry George were to emphasize the Nine Demands of Liberalism, and transform the Standard into an organ of the American Secular Union, he would probably lose about one-half of his support, and for us to become an advocate of the single-tax theory would be equally disastrous to FREETHOUGHT. We might gain a Welcome at Los Angeles, but we would soon wear out our welcome elsewhere. The industrial question is a mighty big one, and Henry George represents but one phase of it. His rivals are the advocates of competition under the present system, besides the Socialists, the Communists, the Anarchists, the Knights of Labor, and numerous Labor parties. He may be mistaken. We do not know. We certainly have not confidence enough in his theories to give up the advocacy of Freethought for the sake of promulgating them.

If our correspondent holds that there is no need of the advocacy of Freethought and Secularism, he is justified in declining to read this paper. If, however, he believes in agitating the question of religious liberty, he should not refuse to support it simply because it does not attempt to expound the universe editorially.

THE LECTURE TOUR IN CALIFORNIA.

It is not possible at present to make out a definite list of appointments, but the following is about the route and dates for Mr. Putnam's lectures. Friends will please note, and those who desire his services write at their earliest possible convenience:

March 2, 3, Livermore. March 5, 6, 7, Grass Valley.
March 10 to 17, Sacramento and vicinity. March 24, Pomona, Los Angeles, and vicinity. March 31 to April 14, San Diego, National City, San Pasqual, San Jacinto, and vicinity.
April 21, Anaheim and vicinity. April 28, Oleander and vicinity.
May 5 to 12, Raymond, Grub Gulch, Fresno Flats, and vicinity. May 19 to June 2, San Francisco, Calistoga, New Sanel, Boulder Creek, San Jose, and vicinity.

On the 21st inst. Representative O'Donnell presented in the House of Representatives an enormous petition against the Blair Sunday bill, bearing the signatures of 230,000 people, chiefly Seventh-day Adventists. On the same day Senator Stockbridge, of Michigan, presented to the Senate an immense package of petitions in favor of the law; number of signatures not specified. If this latter petition suffers from analysis as badly as the "fourteen million" which were reduced to 407 actual signers, it may turn out to be one part petition and ninety-nine parts religious literature or some other variety of waste paper.

THE New York Evening Sun claims to have evidence that Grover Cleveland is a Spiritualist. There are many able men against whom a similar charge could be made, and who would not care to deny it.

MR. BLAINE, of Maine, by way of providing for the future, has purchased a pew in the new Presbyterian church at Washington. Mr. Harrison has a slip in the same church. We are entering upon an era of national piety.

PETER ECKLER, of New York, has just published the "Confession of Faith of a Savoyard Vicar," translated from the French of Jean Jacques Rousseau, to which is added "A Search for Truth," by Olive Schreiner. The two make a 128-page book, selling in cloth for 50 cents; paper, 25 cents. It is a very handsome publication.

THE only oral debate ever engaged in by Colonel Ingersoll is published in the New York Truth Seeker of February 16. His opponents were the Hon. Frederick H. Coudert, a Roman Catholic, and Gov. Stewart L. Woodford, a Protestant. The debate, in pamphlet form, under the title of "The Limits of Toleration," is sold by the Truth Seeker Co. at 10 cents per copy.

THE Rev. W. C. Bowen, principal of the Bordentown, N. J., Female College, has nearly emptied his school by talking too plainly to the girls on the subject of morality; and the institution is likely to be closed. The Rev. Mr. Bowen now probably sees his mistake. If he had merely been accused of ministerial conduct toward one or more of his young lady pupils his school might be the most flourishing seminary in New Jersey.

SOME LITTLE MATTERS OF BUSINESS.

HORACE SEAVER's book, "Occasional Thoughts," is for sale by Putnam & Macdonald. Price, $1.

OBSERVE Mr. L. K. Washburn's announcement of the "Cosmian Hymn Book" on page 144 of this paper.

THE "Sabbath Imposture," a pamphlet by Harry Hoover, 10 cents per copy; six for 50 cents; fifteen for $1.00.

BEAR in mind that we club FREETHOUGHT with the Independent Pulpit and send the two papers to one address for $3 per year.

FINE photographs of Colonel Ingersoll, obtainable at FREETHOUGHT office, are sent postpaid for 40 cents; likenesses of Paine, 25 cents; Putnam, 25 cents.

WE have for sale three pamphlets by J. D. Shaw, editor of the Independent Pulpit, namely, "The Bible—What is It?" 25 cents; "The Divinity of Christ," 15 cents; and "Studies in Theology," 10 cents.

THE American Sentinel is a paper devoted wholly to advocating the separation of church and state. It is published weekly at $1 per year. For sample copies address the Pacific Press, Oakland, Cal. Subscriptions taken at this office.

ALL other things being equal, Liberals should patronize Liberals in business. Lawyer Chilstrom, whose card appears in our advertising columns, is a gentleman of superior ability and a trustworthy attorney. Those who have to go to law, or need legal advice, will find him a powerful advocate.

THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY.

The Infidel, of course, has very little regard for this kind of morality. He considers it a theatrical display, as a seeking for applause, as ending in mere stage effect. It only lasts until the curtain is rung down.

Respectability may, to a certain extent, be morality, but morality in itself is something infinitely more.

In its essence it is life, an ever-flowing current of sublime endeavor; it is an aiming for the largest; it is the soul seeking its loftiest expression. It transcends all rules and regulations and breaks them with impunity when the life so demands. It cares not for example, but for harmony; not for convention, but for progress; not for commandment, but for impulse. In other words, morality is motion, it is not crystallization. Now by the very nature of his being, by the power of his unbelief, the Infidel is committed to a constant moral endeavor. This is the purpose of his Infidelity. He seeks freedom because he seeks life. He seeks the new because the new gives life. It is very seldom that one bears the pains and burdens of a declared Infidelity unless he is animated by this moral desire. The merely intellectual Infidel too often keeps things to himself in order to enjoy the comforts he may have. The world is full of such Infidels. They are in the churches—not in the pews only, but the pulpit. These are they who love the loaves and fishes, and who pat orthodoxy with an approving smile. Thousands of Infidels do this because only their intellect is touched, but the very moment the moral nature is aroused this conformity becomes impossible. Then the Infidel must speak his burning thought. Then he must give up his nice conventionality. I affirm that it is one's moral nature that makes him an out-and-out Infidel, and the expressed Infidelity of the world is the result, almost always, of intensity of conviction—it is the laboring for an ideal. I resent the imputation that one is ever an Infidel for the sake of license, because one can have more license if he is orthodox, for with the orthodox

"Long as the lamp holds out to burn
The vilest sinner may return."

One can act like the devil all his lifetime and go to glory from the scaffold. If I wanted a free-and-easy time I should certainly be orthodox. I'd join the church and say my prayer. I should have more bread and butter, more beefsteak and plum pudding, more wine and cake. The orthodox minister has a jolly time of it. He has the best spring chicken, both "new and old," killed for his especial benefit. And now the chickens have found this out. Recently in Arkansas a preacher made a call upon one of his parishioners. As he entered the door a chicken flew up on to the rafters and knocked down a musket. The musket went off and killed the preacher. The papers reported that it was clearly a case of self-defense.

Surely there's no temptation to be an Infidel to the mere pleasure-seeker. Infidelity commits one to hard work, to sacrifice. It's no child's play. It isn't a pastime or a picnic. It's labor, it's struggle, it's plain living. If mere animal satisfaction is sought, the church will give one a bed of roses; not only heaven in the next world; but plenty of patronage and gold in this.

As in the case of one of the Indian chiefs who was dying, and a Spanish priest was sent for to administer consolation. The writer was asked to interpret between them, and thus describes the conversation:

Chief.—"To what sort of a country do the Christians go after death?"

Priest.—“Into a noble country.”

Chief.—“Is there sufficient pasture for all cattle?”

Priest.—“There is plenty.”

Chief.—“Have they plenty of guano and of ostriches there?”

Priest.—“Any amount.”

Chief.—“Are there lions in that place?”

Priest.—“Yes, millions.”

Chief.—“Are they able to hunt and catch the lions?”

Priest.—“Only those who die good Christians can catch the lions.”

Chief (stooping down to the visitor, in a very low voice).—“Have they got brandy there?”

Priest.—“Brandy! yes, without any end.”

Chief (falling back on his pillow).—“I die a Christian!”

It is one's conscience that compels him to be an Infidel!—the best within him. He cannot choose. Like Luther he must go though a thousand devils were in the way. He must go because in Infidelity he sees the brightest hopes of man; the gospel of the future; the religion of humanity; the moral perfection of the race. It is a question not of logic only, but of manhood.

Furthermore, out of unfaith have come some of the grandest forms of art. It seems as if here the Infidel could be of no service, for art is assumed to be the expression of faith. It is said to feed upon the past, to cling to what is; and this, in a sense, is profoundly true. Art abhors disturbance; it dreads chaos; it delights in association; it flings its roots to the primal life of man. Therefore there is a natural spirit in art that turns from innovation, for beauty is so dear a thing, dearer even than the truth, that when we once have attained it, we hardly dare venture its loss for the sake of something better.

So we could hardly expect to find the Infidel in the realm of art. And yet we do, and protests against old forms of beauty come from the art instinct itself. Art revels in order, but many a genius sees in the new a sublimer order than what is built up in the old, and so they are Infidel to the old, not for the sake of truth only, but for the sake of beauty. They are lured on by visions of delight.

Such an Infidel was Lucretius, who produced the most magnificent poem in the Latin language, whose greatness is not yet appreciated because it was the expression of such advanced ideas. Such an Infidel was Voltaire, who was even more revolutionary in literature than in theology, and along with him Hugo, who revolted against the old classical school of France, the formalities of Racine and Corneille, and made possible the new French literature of the romantic school, where human passion is seen in such breadth of light and color, and such a wealth of genius is revealed, which would not be possible under the old regime.

Lessing, also, was an Infidel. How sternly he battled against the literary orthodoxy of his day, and upset favorite rules, and made way for Goethe and Schiller, who poured undreamed-of music from the heart of man. Goethe was the prophet of the new, because he saw in the new more glorious forms of beauty than in the old. Shakespeare, also, was the outcome of Infidelity, for only by the violation of established rules were his plays possible. If Shakespeare had written according to the orthodox canons of his day, how much of his genius would have been sacrificed. He was true to nature, but in being true to nature he was untrue to orthodox art. In the beginning of the present century, what was it that gave new splendor to English literature? It was the revolutionary spirit. Byron's poetry was simply destructive, yet what a power it was, what a regeneration! It heaved with fierce disturbance, it beat with the storm. But even more profound than Byron's unfaith was Shelley's, who carried the art of poetry to its loftiest expression. His music is simply marvelous, his light and color unequalled. Shelley was the poet of Infidelity. He was a declared Atheist. He despised faith. He hurled his anathemas against God. He, the most passionate, the most tender, the most delicate spirit that ever came upon this planet clothed with brilliant genius—he was an Infidel, not by the cold dictates of his head, but with the warm impulses of his heart. It was grand and lovely visions that made him an unbeliever. He penetrated the secret of the restless heart of man. He knew what he yearned for in his troubled soul—something more beautiful than had ever yet touched his toiling spirit. He had faith in man in all his wanderings and changes. And so he could bravely sing:

“We know not where we go or what sweet dream
May pilot us through caverns, strange and fair,
Of far and pathless passion, while the stream
Of life our bark doth on its whirlpools bear,
Spreading swift wings as sails to the dim air;
Nor should we seek to know, since the devotion
Of love and gentle thoughts are heard still there
Louder and louder from the utmost ocean
Of universal life, attuning its commotion.”

Such another poet is Walt Whitman, voicing the mighty life and music of this new world, in forms of art that seem chaos to the worshiper of the old standard. It is he who cries,

“We must not stop here,
However sweet these laid up stores, however convenient this dwelling,
we cannot remain here;
However sheltered this port, and however calm these waters, we must not anchor here.
We will sail pathless and wild seas,
We will go where winds blow and waves dash and the Yankee clipper speeds under full sail.”

And like the poetry of Byron, Shelley, and Whitman is the music of Wagner. How it has had to fight its way, and what a victory it has achieved! We would not give up the sublime symphonies of Mozart and Beethoven, but what a new glory we find in Wagner! What a sweep of melody! What harmonies never listened to before! And this new world of music has come by a noble scorn of established dogmas.

Thus Infidelity, by its spirit, is a lasting benefit to man, and we see its splendid results in truth, in morality, and in art. Its fruits are many and manifold.

The Infidel loses his life to-day, but he finds it to-morrow. The world's outcasts become in the hereafter its mightiest gods.

They who serve the present flout at him who serves the future, but the Infidel will not curse them in return. All he asks is the privilege to think and to give to their children the benefits of his earnest toil.

The true Infidel is he who accepts no finality. He will always inquire, for he will always believe that there is a new and better way. Infidelity, therefore, is not a passing phase of humanity, but a permanent necessity. There must be eternal search and eternal questioning. We cannot be wound up like a clock and set agoing right every morning, however nice such an operation might be. We must guess our way and forever make mistakes and forever rectify with new and vaster outlooks.

No matter how good or true our opinions may be to-day, we must hold them in the spirit of inquiry. We must hold them as living and not as dead; if living, then we must hold them as subject to change, for change is one of the laws of life. If we live not then we change not, if we change not then we live not; and if our opinions change not then are they lifeless, and if lifeless let them be buried. That which changes not is already in its grave-clothes. Somebody blamed a philosopher for changing his mind. "Why," said he, "that is the difference between a man and a jackass." A jackass can't change his mind, but a man can. It is a human privilege.

If the time ever comes when the opinions we set forth to-day are formulated into a creed to be imposed, without questioning, on humanity, then I hope some glorious Infidel in the far future will come along and smash them to pieces. We wish the opinions we express to be forever questioned. In that way only will their real worth be forever illustrious. I always expect to be an Infidel, because I always expect to ask questions.

I rejoice in the empire that has been won by the perpetual doubts of man.

The old Roman, when he looked upon his country's magnificent conquest and majestic power, was proud indeed to say, "I am a Roman citizen."

And when I look upon the empire of Infidelity, blazing along the track of human progress, revealing new continents with fresh and golden fruits, fountains of joy and heights of splendor, then indeed am I proud to say, "I am an Infidel." S. P. PUTNAM.

OBSERVATIONS.

The California flea will never cease to be the subject of the poet's pen. He will also for some time, it is probable, continue to form the subject of the ordinary citizen's profane speech. There is a good deal of Atheism in this state, and in my opinion the flea is responsible for the greater part of it. No man or woman of sense can feel one of these little devils skating about upon the epidermis, and occasionally digging in his heels, and still believe in the existence of a benevolent ruler of the universe. Many a beautiful thought of mine has taken wings, never to return, when I have been obliged to pause in some poetic flight to partially disrobe and interrupt the progress of a flea which was making its way into my vitals.

The appended poem was written and handed to me for publication by a man who was once a clergyman. He was graduated at an Eastern theological seminary, and came West with the word of God in his mouth. How beautiful upon the mountains were his feet as he sped forward to convey the glad tidings to those who sat in the darkness of occidental Agnosticism. The fact that this clergyman made an anti-religious address at the Convention in San Francisco last month, and intends shortly to go into the Freethought lecture field, tells the rest of the story. With the exception of a belief in future retribution expressed in the closing line of the poem printed below, he has renounced the last tenet of orthodoxy and is the blankest kind of a blankity-blank Atheist.

PULEX IRRITANS

There's a little ubiquitous cuss
That delights on my carcass to nuss.
Oh, my! how I wish I might catch him;
But of all of the insects or bugs
That ramble at will o'er our mugs,
Or cause us most numerous shrugs,
Not one in alertness can match him.
Forever eluding my grasp,
He leaves me impatient to rasp,
With the nail on the end of my finger,
The spot where he got in his work
(At which I am sure he's no shirk),
Inserting his dagger or dirk,
Or whatever he has for a stinger.
To-day, on the back of my hand,
As if he were lord of the land,
One sat in serene contemplation;
He just took no notice of me,
That galloptious, voluptuous flea;
And not in the least did he see
His risky, exposed situation.

In the meantime, expecting a bite,
I raised 'tother hand for to smite,
Just thinking how sure I would swat him;
None the less, notwithstanding, although,
The force of my lightning-like blow
Was enough to have smashed him, I know,
When it got there he wasn't, Dod rot him!

As I saw by that fellow so bold
Myself had been mightily sold,
I sat for a moment quite solemn;
But soon in my spirit grew vexed,
Harrassed, and annoyed, and perplexed,
Reflecting that probably next,
That elastic, rantankerous cuss
Would be vexing my spirits much wuss,
Staking claims on my vertebral column.

If ever the critter I catch,
My brain I will conjure, to hatch
Some plan for his extermination.
Just what it will be, I don't know.
On the whole, I had best let him go
To his chances of getting below,
In the orthodox scheme of salvation.

I have read about a traveler in the holy land, visiting the city of Damascus, and trying to find the house where Simon, the tanner lived. He was guided by St. Paul, who put it on record that Simon resided on the street which is called "Straight." The traveler, whose name was Twain, found the street remarkably crooked. He therefore concluded that the term "straight" was used ironically, and credited St. Paul with the only humorous remark to be found in the Bible. This is a mistake. We have all read about the man who looked into the muzzle of a gun, and the result of whose experiment is briefly related in the words, "His funeral was numerously attended." That joke is not found in the Bible, but there is one in 2 Chronicles xvi, 12, 13, just like it. It refers to Asa, and says, tersely, "In his disease he sought the physicians. And Asa slept with his fathers." St. Paul or any other modern humorist has not been able to improve on the delicate sarcasm of that remark.

A ROMANCE OF THE INEFFABLE YET-TO-BE.

When Etheldina Perkins entered this life her mother departed it. Etheldina was too young to realize the gravity of the situation when they held her up to receive the mother's last glance of affection and to hear her last words, which were as follows: "In heaven I shall meet my babe again."

So the old lady passed, and Etheldina picked up her hand and played it. At the age of eighteen she accepted her first offer of marriage. The young man was not robust, nor prepossessing, but he had an affection for her, was a Sunday-school teacher, and was not hearty enough to be bad. Besides, Etheldina dreaded to become an old maid, and thought it best not to take any risks on everlasting things. So they were joined economically, but securely, in the bonds of wedlock. Marriage did not diminish the husband's affection, but his health failed rapidly, and almost before the bloom was off his wedding clothes, and while his wife was still an interesting curiosity to him, he slipped his wind and passed on. His last words were: "In heaven I shall meet my blooming bride again."

But Etheldina's husband had not lived in vain, and ere he lay many months in a coffin, the same minister who performed the wedding ceremony was called upon to christen his posthumous son. It is not our province to give an autobiography of the son or of Etheldina. We would only say that she clung to life tenaciously, and outlived her boy, who died at the age of sixty, and crossed the Jordan. He had loved his mother dearly, and this was his last utterance: "In heaven I shall see her aged and angel face once more."

Twenty years later. The scene changes. We are now in heaven. Waiting just inside the pearly gates are three persons. The first is a young woman; the second is a young man, and the third is a gray-haired patriarch of sixty. They are Etheldina's mother, husband, and son, but as neither knew either of the others on earth, they are not aware of their relationship. Yet they enter into conversation. The white-haired son of Etheldina addresses Etheldina's maternal parent, who is his grandmother, and says:

"My daughter, whom await you?" And she replies:

"A baby girl, too sweet for anything."

"And you, my son," he asks of the young man, who, he is unaware, is his father, "what denizen of the earth would you greet, if you could?" The young man, Etheldina's consumptive husband, answers:

"My blooming bride, and the babe she bore me after my body was dead."

Ting-a-ling! ding-dong! whang-bang! crash! The gates fly open to the sound of trumpets and the dulcet strains of celestial kazoos. A saint has come to her reward and to join the loved ones gone before. All eyes upon the gateway hang. The figure of an old woman draws near. It is Etheldina, aged ninety-nine. She approaches the trio whom we have described; her eye rests upon the man of sixty, and she totters to his breast, crying, "My son, my son!" He holds her at arms' length, and muses: "I had a mother who looked like her, but she was not so old, so wrinkled, so decrepit. Well," addressing the ancient female, "you may be my mother, but I am somewhat disappointed in your appearance."

Etheldina, the aged, turned to the young man, and would have clasped his neck, saying, "Greet me, my husband!" but he pushed her withered arms away, and said, "I do not recognize you. Your countenance is unfamiliar. I had a bride, but she was young and blooming. I have waited all these years for her and cannot accept the substitute."

The old man looked on, and murmured, "Well, I'll be shot! If the old lady's eyes do not deceive her that youngster is my father. I object."

So Etheldina sought the young woman, and pleaded: "There is none to welcome me among my kindred; will not you, a stranger, at least give me your sympathy?" Then her tone changed to one of surprise. "On earth," she remarked, "I cherished a miniature of my angel mother who died when I was born. It was the living likeness of yourself. Tell me, is your name Perkins?"

"It is," responded the young woman. "It is Rachel Perkins, and I resided at Molunkus, Maine, United States of America."

"Then you are," cried Etheldina, "you are the mother who gave her life for me." And she made a break for the maternal bosom.

But Rachel, too, drew away. "No," she said, "the daughter whom I await was a beautiful babe, too sweet for anything. You are a healthy looking orphan."

And the old man ejaculated: "I am blowed! This kittenish creature, who calls herself Rachel, is my grandmother!"

And the young man said, "Rachel is my mother-in-law. I lived happily on earth without a mother-in-law, and among the improved conditions of this locality I will try to exist a while longer without taking one on board."

Thus the four people who were bound on earth by the ties of affection met in heaven as strangers. The young man swore by the sacred river that he did not propose to have a wife old enough to be his great grandmother. He would, of the two, prefer the mother-in-law.

The young woman said it would be a fine commentary on her age to introduce to her friends a daughter turned ninety-nine.

The old man declared with emphasis that no boy of twenty-five could pass himself off on him as his father, and set himself up over his elders—not if he knew it. As for Rachel, his grandmother, when he felt like adopting a female child to bring up he might think of her.

The aged Etheldina, for want of consolation, wished she were dead, and then, when she remembered that she was dead, grieved that she had ever been born. Said she: "I was comparatively happy on earth, despite its grief and death. I never knew my mother, so I did not weep for her. When my husband died I wore the widow's weeds, and my sorrow wore out with them. My son was with me three score years ere he passed on, yet time reconciled me to losing him, and I was glad to live and contented to die. Life is like everything else, one may have too much of it. This heavenly addition is what I call a superfluity."

Here Etheldina wept outright; Rachel joined her, and both men used language unbecoming angels.

"Move on, move on!" said an archangel in brass buttons, "you are obstructing the thoroughfare." So with tears and execrations they passed along to join the great host of the disappointed. And on all sides of them there was the sound of wailing and gnashing of teeth. Everywhere other Rachels were weeping for their children, and would not be comforted. M.

ON IMPARTIAL TAXATION.

President Westbrook, of the American Secular Union, has addressed the following letter to the members of the Pennsylvania legislature:

The subject of a new revenue law is soon to come before your honorable body, and I venture to call your attention to a few points bearing upon this subject.

Thirty-eight years ago the commissioners of the county of Philadelphia, aided by the city solicitor, presented to our state legislature a memorial upon the subject of the laws exempting certain property from taxation. The amount of property then exempt in this county, at a very low nominal valuation, was set down at $10,586,415. According to well-known figures, found in official reports of the United States, regarding the average annual increase of the value of church property, these figures would now probably reach $50,000,000 or more. The amount of property now exempt from taxation in our entire state probably exceeds $200,000,000, and might reach $300,000,000. I have no official figures on this subject from our commonwealth, but I notice that in New York the State Board of Assessors estimate the amount of property in that state exempt from taxation as exceeding $500,000,000, and in Pennsylvania the figures cannot be very much less.

Allow me, gentlemen, to call your attention to the following suggestions:

I. Our existing laws exempting church property from taxation undoubtedly conflict with the third section of our bill of rights, which provides that "no man can of right be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry against his consent."

The exemption of church property from taxation virtually compels tax-payers to support, against their consent, all places of religious worship so exempt. True, this is done indirectly, but the result is the same as if the tax-payer were compelled by direct legislation to support churches with which he may have no sympathy and whose dogmas he may abhor. He is compelled to contribute to church support just as much as his own tax is increased in consequence of the exemption of church property from taxation. If these unjust tax-laws are continued, tax-payers should carry their grievances to the courts for judicial relief, and sooner or later it will be done.

II. Our present laws exempting certain property from taxation are unjust and oppressive, and should be repealed. They impose a tax on the many for the benefit of the few, and practically, in some instances, on the poor for the benefit of the rich. It is said that property exempted from taxation is public property devoted to the public good. This is only in part true. Moreover, multitudes of tax-payers not only do not believe that the dominant churches teach a sound morality, but instead certain dogmas of the dark ages which logically have an immoral tendency.

The Rev. Dr. Wayland, in his Political Economy, well says:

All that religious societies have to ask of the civil government is the same privileges for transacting their own affairs which societies of every other sort possess. This they have a right to demand, not because they are religious societies, but because the exercise of religion is an innocent mode of pursuing happiness. If it happen accidentally that others are benefited, it does not follow that they are obliged to pay for this benefit. It cannot be proved that the Christian religion needs the support of civil government, since it has existed and flourished when entirely deprived of this support.

If the old American axiom be true, that "where there is no representation there should be no taxation," it is equally true that property exempted from taxation is not entitled to protection. As has been shown, tax-payers are not only "compelled" to "support" institutions and societies which pay not a dime for the maintenance of municipal and state authorities for preserving life and property, but they are liable to a further special tax to pay to exempt property-holders for property destroyed or injured by a mob or riot. Of this injustice Philadelphia and Pittsburg have had more than one example.

No system can be just based upon a principle of injustice. A religion that is true does not need pecuniary aid from the state, directly or indirectly. The church would grow in public esteem if it would voluntarily practice justice and right and refuse to accept state aid through tax laws which violate every principle of equity and honesty.

Senators and representatives of this great commonwealth, the question of the taxation of church property has got to be met soon, and you might as well deal with it now while you are wrestling with the important subject of taxation. President Grant, in his message (1875), thus treated this subject:

In connection with this important question, I would also call your attention to the importance of correcting an evil that, if permitted to continue, will probably cause great trouble in our land before the close of the nineteenth century. It is the acquisition of vast amounts of untaxed church property. In 1850, I believe, the church property of the United States, which paid no tax, municipal or state, amounted to $87,000,000. In 1860 the amount had doubled. In 1870 it was $354,483,587. By 1900, without a check, it is safe to say, this property will reach a sum exceeding $3,000,000,000. So vast a sum, receiving all the protection and benefits of government, without bearing its proportion of the burdens and expenses of the same, will not be looked upon acquiescently by those who have to pay the taxes. In a growing country, where real estate enhances so rapidly with time as in the United States, there is scarcely a limit to the wealth that may be acquired by corporations, religious or otherwise, if allowed to retain real estate without taxation. The contemplation of so vast a property as here alluded to, without taxation, may lead to sequestration without constitutional authority, and through blood. I would suggest the taxation of all property equally.

President Garfield put on record a similar voice of warning. In Congress, June 22, 1874, he said:

The divorce between church and state ought to be absolute. It ought to be so absolute that no church property anywhere, in any state, or in the nation, should be exempt from equal taxation; for if you exempt the property of any church organization, to that extent you impose a tax upon the whole community.

The old Democratic party, true to the principles of Thomas Jefferson, declared in its national conventions of 1876, 1880, and 1884 against everything looking to a virtual union of church and state, and the Republican party has explicitly and repeatedly done the same thing. Will not our statesmen of all political parties in our grand old Keystone commonwealth examine this subject of impartial taxation and promptly wipe out the public wrong of the exemption of church property from equal taxation with other property? The people are ready for such a reform, and if not voluntarily made by our legislature the vox populi will soon be heard in no uncertain tones.

ST. MARY'S SCHOOL CASE.

Judge Horton decided this morning that no injunction could issue restraining the Board of County Commissioners from executing a contract with St. Mary's Training School for the care of dependent boys. The suit was begun by Edward A. Stevens, as a taxpayer, who claimed that the school was a sectarian institution under the control of the Catholic church, and to pay such an institution public money, for any purpose, was in contravention of the constitution of Illinois. The school presented a bill of $2343 to the county, and also solicited a renewal of the contract for another year by which the county would pay it $7 a head for each boy per month. The judge said that the averment that the school was such that the payments of public funds would be in violation of the constitution was made in the bill, but that was not sufficient to sustain an injunction. There was no averment that any warrant had been drawn on the county treasurer, or any appropriation made by the county board which he might pay if disposed, and the court had no power to enjoin the board from exercising the authority and discretion vested in it by the constitution. Nor could the court, on the complainant's allegation that they believed the board would do so and so, and assume or presume that the board, in the exercise of such authority and discretion, would do an illegal act. The county board was a co-ordinate branch of government, and the court could not interfere to divest or control its action in the future. Neither was there any reason why the court should restrain the school from presenting a claim to the board whether it was sectarian or not. It would have to assume that the board was about to do an illegal act, and it could not do that. There was no averment that any warrant had been drawn against the county treasurer, and hence to enjoin him again involved the same assumption, viz., that the county board would do an illegal act. The court said the bill was prematurely filed and dismissed it. He intimated that payment to the school could only be enjoined after payment was ordered by the county board. The complainants appealed.—Chicago Evening Journal.

HORTON "HAD TO."

I was informed that when Judge Tuthill made his silly decision a year ago in a similar case, a friend in the legal fraternity was so surprised that he inquired why in the world he had made such a fool of himself. He testily answered, "I had to," and broke away from his questioner. The Romish church works in such mysterious ways its wonders to perform, and Horton "had to." If this decision was any criterion of the court's legal acumen we should think he did not know enough to "pound sand in rat holes," as it were. Horton assumes the injunction was premature, as the court had not acted upon the bill; had not a chance to exercise its discretion. Yet they have contracted with the Feehanville school for years, and this bill was for the payment of the last quarter of 1888, accruing under a contract for that year, and before the temporary injunction was issued the county board had instructed their attorney to draft a new contract for 1889. This wise and noble judge pretends to assume that the county treasurer has a right to exercise judicial power—to refuse payment on a bill passed by the board if it is illegal. He has no more right to refuse to pay a bill properly audited than the man in the moon.

We have taken an appeal to the appellate court, where we can reasonably look for a similar bluff, owing to the personnel of the court, but Judge Russell proposes to earn a solid and substantial victory in the Supreme Court of Illinois, and they will have to reverse their own decision, if we do not.

One thing makes me sure the Romanists are feeling somewhat shaky is the fact that the grand jury were solicited to visit Feehanville (or St. Mary's Training School), for the first time on record, and make a column of a whitewashing report as to the excellence of the accommodations of the institution, which was duly printed in all the papers. While there is, I believe, two sides to that story of their accommodations, that is not the question at issue. It is whether there is any binding force in the constitution of the state of Illinois or not.

ROBERT INGERSOLL THE BUILDER.

In a recent number of the North American Review, under the title of "The Combatants," the threadbare view of this unique personality is again set forth.

"He does not build." "Destruction is not needful." "The destroyer is not useful to his fellow man"—and all that follows in the train of propositions such as these.

That pulling down is both useful and necessary, as a part of progress, is too evident to need further elaboration than can be furnished by every thoughtful brain the moment the statement is made; but of Robert Ingersoll the iconoclast much has been written; of Robert Ingersoll the builder, little. I propose to consider him—what the world owes him, what he has given the world.

This view of his character and work was presented anew to my mind by the death of Courtlandt Palmer and the glowing funeral oration over his dead friend by this most brilliant of living orators.

It recalled the last time I had seen the two men together, when Courtlandt Palmer was so happy and so proud that, at last, he was able to introduce to the Nineteenth Century Club this matchless orator, his revered friend, in the hope that the club might learn to comprehend the mental and moral grandeur of the man.

In his introductory remarks, Mr. Palmer spoke of the fact that France had come to know the value of her three Freethinker stars, and had recorded in imperishable form their names and fame.

To these three names, Rousseau, Voltaire, and Hugo, now held by France as benefactors of the human race, Mr. Palmer added that of Robert Ingersoll.

This so aroused the ire of one of the debaters who was to follow (and who, by the way, was the same who wrote the article in the Review, just spoken of) that his already inflamed professional jealousy—for he is a member of the bar of which Robert Ingersoll is so conspicuous an ornament—that he forgot to discuss the subject of the evening, and made a personal onslaught that degraded the debate from the high plane upon which Courtlandt Palmer had planned, and Colonel Ingersoll had opened it, to one of personality and invective.

And he, a Roman Catholic, in order to do full justice to his jealousy and fear of Colonel Ingersoll, was forced into the rather ludicrous position of praising Voltaire.

Voltaire—the man who spent his entire life in fighting what he called "l'Infame"—Roman Catholicism! The man who gave to that faith its death wound in France. The desperation of this his Catholic eulogist can be estimated from this outlook only. He asserted then, and bases his article on the same idea, that Colonel Ingersoll builds nothing, has done nothing, will leave nothing of worth to the world.

I was reminded of all this at Courtlandt Palmer's funeral, where all Christian creeds alike were shamed to silence, where Ingersoll stood uttering the noblest sentiments and most inspiring, helpful, brave, and tender words, of which the clergyman who followed him was forced to say, "nothing can be added."

I wondered then if Mr. Coudert and others who repeat, parrot-like, that Ingersoll "tears down, but builds nothing;" that he is simply an iconoclast, and that iconoclasts, at best, can do no good—I wondered then if it were nothing to free the human mind from fear at such a time as this; if it were nothing to give a man so truly to himself that he could meet and bravely face the ills of life, the mystery of death, with the calmness, the philosophy, and the hopefulness with which Courtlandt Palmer died.

And I realized that this is just what Robert Ingersoll has done for thousands of us.

There are thousands of good men and women, in America alone, who owe to him a mental freedom from the lash of fear and doubt, and terrors of a future life, that none who have it would sell for all the wealth of all the worlds in space.

Is this "nothing of worth" to do for his fellow men?

But for the faith of such as Ingersoll no man who had a heart within his breast, and loved the dead, could stand by Courtlandt Palmer's grave and keep his reason.

There is no Christian creed on earth that leaves one single ray of hope for such a man as Courtlandt Palmer was. Not one.

The "consolations of the Christian faith" are endless pain and anguish for such as he.

His life was helpful, brave, and gentle; but since his brain rejected all that could have saved his soul from endless hell if Christian creeds are true, where is the consolation? Where the blessing?

Is it nothing of worth to free the human mind from monstrous creeds like this? From dogmas that a fiend alone could fully comprehend and not go mad?

Another debt we owe to Robert Ingersoll the builder is this:

He has enriched the English language by his matchless eloquence, and placed where they can never fade the sparks from freedom's brain.

By the simple force of his ever-varied, ever-glowing forms of speech, he has compelled a hostile audience to hang with eagerness upon his every word, and forced a world to listen and assent to nobler thoughts and braver, truer words than anything the church can comprehend.

He has extorted from the believer the reluctant recognition and confession that a good and noble life does not depend on religion; that morals are independent of belief, and above it, and by his own example, and his matchless family life, has laid that ancient lie forever in the grave.

That is, he has compelled a recognition of worth for worth's own sake and forced the old fictitious standards completely to the wall.

This fact was never so fully illustrated as in the public comments on the life and worth and death of so outspoken and active a Freethinker as was Courtlandt Palmer.

Before Robert Ingersoll had broken the chain, and, by the irresistible ability of his own rich nature, compelled respectful attention, an honest expression of opinion on so-called sacred subjects, the comments on the life and death of unbelievers took quite a different tone.

The change is simply marvelous. It is due to Robert Ingersoll.

The minds of all who come within the influence of this man's tongue or pen or life (and who does not at first or second hand?) are freed from chains that held them to the little narrow paths of thought and sympathy laid out by mental pigmies, who, clinging still to all the blunders made in the morning of the world, follow the direction of the designing and the cruel, who know their source of power. It is nothing to have done this?

He has made intellectual honesty and an exchange of thought possible, wherever a basis of mental integrity existed to build upon; and he has given to liberty of thought a new meaning and to personal honor and dignity a crown of gems.

He has laid the foundation and erected the palace of a beautiful character on worth and not on faith; he has taken the fear of hell from the human heart; he has destroyed devils; he has depopulated heaven of its vindictive gods and its canting hypocrites, and left the dead in the arms of love and mercy.

Is it nothing to have done this?

Is it not a building fair to see?

He has given the final blow to impudent authority, clothed in the purple of pretense, with stolen jewels in its cruel hands, and has erected a throne for personal dignity of character and individual development on the highest plane of reason and of love.

He has taught that to make others happy is to redeem one's self.

He has made the cruelty of abused power look so hideous that even the Catholic church shrinks from a glimpse of her own portrait, and is forced to engage new counsel to defend the character she has given her God—or to invent for her a new and better one.

He has planted firmly in the breasts of men the fact that tenderness is not weakness; that justice cannot exist without liberty; that love is the highest law, and that the golden rule was never so little understood and practiced as by those who impudently profess to be its originators.

This in his capacity of ethical teacher and leader; but as a great lawyer he has taught his profession certain much-needed lessons as well.

First, that professional jealousy may go the lengths of slander and detraction, it may even enlist the cruel power of organized superstition, and still fail of the highest worldly success as against a generous, lofty, honorable, and outspoken rival, who owns his own brain and will not sell his mental freedom to purchase a clientele.

He has shown that pretense is not necessary to success; that, in spite of creed and dogma, people who want an honest and able lawyer do not necessarily look for him in the vestry, and that they are eager to place their affairs in the hands of a man who frankly says he does not believe in hell and is not restrained from misappropriating their money or selling out their case by a desire to escape damnation.

His Catholic critic said in my hearing that this is all that keeps him honest, and that he would commit murder freely if this fear were not within him.

Let us hope that he is better than he thinks he is.

Robert Ingersoll the builder has laid a firm foundation upon which his profession can build with the knowledge that it is not necessary, then, to lie about their belief in—nor even by silence seem to sanction—a popular superstition, in order to succeed even in the overcrowded, jealous, merciless conditions of life in New York, where the struggle for fame and money makes merchandise of the heart's best blood and sells to the highest bidder many a noble aspiration—wringing the heart of love to pay the debt of Shylock.

He has proven by his own life, to all, that a life of integrity, generosity, tenderness, and love are not dependent upon the shifting sands of religious belief; but are the high-tide marks of character.

That, and that alone, is a building invaluable to the world, and places its architect not only as a possible fourth in the galaxy of stars spoken of by Mr. Palmer, but as high above them all as his personal life, and the joy and love he has given his family and his friends, is above that of the other three.

To the cause of Liberty and Love he has brought not only the precepts of his predecessors, but the example of a matchless life, as free from the ascetic barrenness against which their lapses from virtue were an unwholesome protest, as it is from the lapses themselves. The value of such a life, in such a teacher, is beyond computation, not only for the present, but for the future generations, who must fight to the end the battle against the authority of organized superstition in its tireless effort to keep shackles on the human brain.

To have a brilliant intellectual leader is fortunate; but to have that leader a personal example, above reproach, is to have our bible illustrated by the brush of genius, our score interpreted by a Wagner.

Voltaire and Rousseau, with all their ability and splendid intellectual achievements, failed to gain a victory over themselves.

Their greatest admirers cannot defend, with pleasure, some of their acts as showing an exalted sense of justice toward others and of moral obligation to be true.

Hugo lacked tenderness and generosity, and his personal egotism was painful; but Ingersoll's faults—and even those who love him and know his splendid nature are not blind to these—are never tinged with hardness toward the less gifted nor with a disregard of the rights of others.

Not only his wonderful brain, but his marvelous heart, is a heritage to the world.

To compare his public work with that of the three stars of France would take time and discrimination, however much the estimates may differ; but to compare his life with theirs, to weigh his personality, would leave the French trinity a long way below, no matter who held the scales.

What Ingersoll is, as well as what he says, is a part of the building he will leave to the world; and if history can produce his peer, taking both his brain and heart, his home life and his public work into the estimate, it has not yet written the record of the man.

No Buddha, no Christ of any country, not even a matchless Shakespeare, can enter such a contest.

He stands alone in history a peerless example of the results of his own precepts that Reason, Liberty, and Love are the highest law, the only torches that lead to exalted character.

This is the building that Robert Ingersoll will leave the world. Match it who can.

HELEN H. GARDENER.

A BEAUTIFUL TRIBUTE.

The funeral of Mrs. Mary H. Fiske, a talented journalist and dramatic author, took place in New York, the 7th instant. It was attended by hundreds of actors, actresses, artists, and journalists. The services were simple and impressive. Dockstader's Quartette sang "The Lost Chord," and Mme. Julia de Ruyther—"Never Again," after which Col. Ingersoll delivered the following tribute to the deceased lady:

MY FRIENDS: In the presence of the two great mysteries, life and death, we are met to say, above this still, unconscious house of clay, a few words of kindness, of regret, of love and hope.

In this presence let us speak of the goodness, the charity, the generosity, and the genius of the dead.

Only flowers should be laid upon the tomb. In life's last pillow there should be no thorns.

Mary Fiske was like herself. She patterned after none. She was a genius, and put her soul in all she did and wrote. She cared nothing for roads, nothing for beaten paths, nothing for the footsteps of others—she went across the fields and through the woods and by the winding streams and down the vales and over the crags, wherever fancy led.

She wrote lines that leaped with laughter and words that were wet with tears. She gave us quaint thoughts and sayings filled with the "pert and nimble spirit of mirth." Her pages were flecked with sunshine and shadow, and in every word were the pulse and breath of life.

Her heart went out to all the wretched in this weary world, and yet she seemed as joyous as though grief and death were naught but words. She wept where others wept, but in her own misfortunes found the food of hope. She cared for the to-morrow of others, but not for her own. She lived for to-day.

Some hearts are like a waveless pool, satisfied to hold the image of a wondrous star—but hers was full of motion, life, and storm.

She longed for freedom. Every limitation was a prison's wall. Rules were shackles, and forms were made for serfs and slaves.

She gave her utmost thought. She praised all generous deeds, applauded the struggling, and even those who failed.

She pitied the poor, the forsaken, the friendless. No one could fall below her pity, no one could wander beyond the circumference of her sympathy. To her there were no outcasts—they were victims. She knew that the inhabitants of palaces and penitentiaries might change places without adding to the injustice of the world.

She knew that circumstances and conditions determine character; that the lowest and worst of our race were children once, as pure as light, whose cheeks dimpled with smiles beneath the heaven of a mother's eyes. She thought of the road they had traveled, of the thorns that had pierced their feet, of the deserts they had crossed; and so, instead of words of scorn she gave the eager hand of help.

No one appealed to her in vain. She listened to the story of the poor, and all she had she gave. A god could do no more.

The destitute and suffering turned naturally to her; the maimed and hurt sought for her door, and the helpless put their hands in hers. She shielded the weak, she attacked the strong.

Her heart was open as the gates of day. She shed kindness as the sun sheds light.

If all her good deeds were flowers the air would be faint with perfume. If all her charities could be changed to melodies a symphony would fill the sky.

Mary Fiske had within her brain the divine fire called genius, and in her heart the "touch of nature that makes the whole world kin."

She wrote as a stream runs that winds and babbles through the shadowy fields, that falls in foam of flight and waste, and laughing joins the sea.

A little while ago a babe was found—one that had been abandoned by the mother, left as legacy to chance or fate.

The warm heart of Mary Fiske, now cold in death, was touched.

She took the waif and held it lovingly to her breast, and made the child her own.

We pray thee, Mother Nature, that thou wilt take this woman and hold her as tenderly in thy arms as she held and pressed against her generous throbbing heart the abandoned babe. We ask no more.

In this presence let us remember our faults, our frailties, and the generous, helpful, self-denying, loving deeds of Mary Fiske.

THE INFIDEL'S HOPE.

Does he then indulge in a hope? What is that hope? Not that of the criminal who, with the noose about his neck, expects to be turned into an angel of God, as one of your own poets hath said, "In the jerk of a lamb's tail," at the same time his victim is where the climate is the same all the year round, and no storm doth "sweep the wintry sky." The Infidel does not hope to skin into the Elysian Fields on some other man's good behavior; nor because he believes in three Gods, or a million of Gods; nor because God had to perform the somewhat extraordinary feat of killing part of himself in order to calm his angry passions, which had been aroused because his first adventure in manufacturing did not pay good dividends. Neither does the Infidel hope to have his joy inexpressibly heightened by the great spectacular exhibition of God's love, namely, millions broiling and sputtering on the great gridiron down below. He does not expect to stand in line with the angelic hosts on the battlemented heights, and sweeping with his spy-glass the vast fiery expanse, suddenly exclaim, with rapture in his eye, "Holy Jesus, there's my wife," and then, giving his harp an extra twang, "God knew what was best for wifey." The unspeakable joy of such heavenly bliss the Infidel relinquishes to the Rev. Jonathan Edwards and others like him. The Infidel would not be contented in heaven while any body else was suffering down there; not even his mother-in-law. He would not be in heaven a minute, before he would pass his hat for a collection to send a barrel of lemonade to hell; and next he would suggest to God to despatch a Sunday train to hell to take the folks out on a pic-nic; and he would not rest till he had made the infernal, howling wilderness such a desirable place that the angels would all swap their harps for town lots.

What does the Infidel hope for? He hopes to cast from the attic chamber of his inmost being the owls and bats and wasps' nests of orthodox belief; to drive away the nightmare of error, the mists of superstition, and let the light of intellectual and moral liberty awaken his soul to a new and glorious sunlit splendor; to kill out the baneful weeds in the mental garden, that the seeds of love and peace and every germ of good may have room to sprout, and grow, and blossom, and ripen the fruit of fair humanity. He hopes to help clear the way of the obstacles that block the wheels of progress; and to cast up the highway on which the car of science shall speed her way, bringing rich gifts to the world. He hopes to hasten the day when the vast amounts of time, labor, and capital now expended in nursing superstition shall be made to support every art and device by which this world shall become a happier home for man. While cherishing this hope, he need deny no hope beyond the grave that is worth the hoping, and if the dream of individual immortality has a basis in reality, the hopes and aspirations above named can be no hindrance, but helps to enjoy the companionship of any being or beings worthy of human recognition beyond the veil.

THE BIBLE IN FAVOR OF DEBATE.

I.

A promise made some time ago I now fulfil—to write a series of articles to show that the Christian's book requires debate.

It has already been shown in my pamphlet, "Is Controversy Dangerous?" that no truth has ever been injured by freedom of speech. What men have supposed was truth has suffered when, through controversy, it was shown to be counterfeit, so closely resembling truth as to require very close scrutiny to detect its falsity. If mankind would examine doctrines, theories, hypotheses, opinions, as carefully as they do bank bills, "it would fra many a blunder free us."

Our Christian friends, who everywhere claim the Bible as their "chief witness" in the path of duty, may hardly be prepared for the overwhelming testimony which it gives in favor of debate. Indeed, some have unwittingly opposed debate as contrary to Bible teachings. They have not carefully read their own Bible, else they never could make so serious a mistake. Let us then grapple with the subject at once. "Come now, and let us reason together, said the Lord" (Isaiah 1, 18).

Is there any doubt that this text is an encouragement of debate? Does this talking on the part of one mean a submissive silence on the part of the other?

"Let us reason together." Compare thought with thought, think, analyze, speak. This is the advice of the text, is it not? I know that all preachers have not looked at the matter in this light. But they are not always right. They will tell you so themselves. I hope I may satisfy their minds in this brochure that as sure as they make the Bible their guide, they are under as much obligation to debate as to preach.

Said that distinguished Christian and scientist, Lieutenant Maury, "In my investigation of natural science, I have always found that whenever I can meet with anything in the Bible, on any subject, it always affords me a fine platform on which to stand."

"The Bible is our only guide." "Whatever is taught in the scriptures is to be believed; whatever is there enjoined is to be obeyed."—Watchman and Reflector.

Taking the Bible, then, as a platform, let us determine whether or not it teaches that we humans down here in this world are expected to converse with each other, to argue, to debate, to controvert, to overthrow each other's errors, and help one another to clearer views of truth.

I feel sure that the Bible does demand debate at our hands.

If I succeed in convincing you, my Christian brother, or sister, that this is a fact, then what is your duty? If you believe, with the religious journal just quoted, that the Bible is your guide; whatever it teaches is to be believed; whatever it enjoins is to be obeyed—this is what the Christian believes—what, then is your duty in reference to debate? Let us look at both sides.

I have known some ministers to represent the Bible as opposed to debate, quoting such passages as Isaiah, lviii, 4: "Behold, ye fast for strife and debate, and to smite with the fist of wickedness."

To argue from that text that the Bible is against debate is as unreasonable as to claim that it is against fasting. "Is it such a fast that I have chosen?" (v. 5.) Debate, like fasting, like speech itself, may be corrupted; but who thinks, therefore, that there should be no more fasts, and that speech should be interdicted? A debate, accompanied with strife and "smiting with the fist of wickedness," ought to be condemned by every man who loves the well-being of society. Debate is not quarrelling, although some short-sighted mortals rarely express a difference of opinion without creating an "unpleasantness"—impressing hearers with the conviction that "such" a "debater" conceives it to be his duty to engender mere strife, to smite an opponent with the "fist of wickedness." Such a one has mistaken his calling, the arena of debate is not the ring of the pugilist—a pity that some so-called debaters have not learned this lesson; and because they have not, superficial observers have had their minds poisoned against debate. It is a part of my pleasant task to rescue it from the odium, unmerited, with which, in some quarters, it is surrounded.

W. F. JAMIESON.

WAS JOHN A ROMANCER?

One of Ingersoll's strongest arguments, to my mind, and one which had a great influence in "converting" me, was that every nation and race of people made their religion, hereafter, and God according to their own habits, customs, and surroundings, and of course their God granted them favors and each was his chosen people. Even in the United States, though all profess to believe in the same Being, each religion endows him with different attributes, and all worship differently, thus making their own views the views of God.

The fortune-tellers of old, commonly called prophets, were much like their brethren of to-day in that respect. They flattered and cajoled, and if the money did not come in fast enough they hurled denunciations of woe upon their superstitious hearers.

But in all their predictions we cannot find any mention of things unknown to them at that time. A true prophet who had never heard of China or seen a Chinaman, but who claimed to be in a trance and see the Chinese, should be able to describe their habits and appearance correctly to prove his prophecy afterwards correct.

In the "inspired" Revelations we have a wonderful account from John of what is to take place when this little planet comes to a full stop. He says he was in the spirit or in a trance, and the Son of Man appeared and unfolded what was to come like a panorama. Certainly John had a good memory to remember it all.

But when we analyze all these predictions we find that John was simply giving a rehash of what he saw in his every-day surroundings, perhaps colored by a Jules Verne's imagination.

Nothing in the hot climate of Palestine was so precious as rivers or pools of water; nothing so good to eat as young lamb; nothing that killed so well as a two-edged sword, or protected from as a shield or armor; their priests dressed in long robes of pure white, and had seven large candlesticks upon their altars; their kings sat upon white thrones; the trumpet blew the Jews to battle; their cities had large high walls around, and of course had to have great gates and keys; their public documents were written upon parchment and were closed with large seals; gold and diamonds and precious stones were their chief means of barter and ornamentation; their principal musical instrument was the harp, and the Jews always played them, waved palms, and sang hosannas at their religious festivals.

All these John saw in every-day life, so we find them all in heaven.

If John were alive to-day, and being possessed of the Spirit, were to go to Goat Island in San Francisco, or Staten Island in New York harbor, no doubt his heavenly ideal would be different. He would probably see angels fighting with Krupp guns in various uniforms and ships of war; instead of candles, electric lights would be substituted; the Heavenly Gazette would take the place of sealed parchment documents; the telegraph and railroads would be there, and perhaps a Spring Valley Water Company supplying water at high rates, and instead of angels going about thinly clad in white, John would probably dress them in Prince Albert suits and ulster overcoats.

But I never could understand why it is that in such an honest place as heaven is supposed to be they require keys to lock things up and have to seal their documents from prying eyes.

And then their warfare! The Jews fought, so of course the angels must. In one chapter of Revelations we have a vivid account of the agony the poor devils were in for want of water, and how piteously they called upon the rocks to fall upon and kill them. Of no use, they could not die twice.

Then we get an account of the devils getting into heaven, and after a lively tussle with swords the devils were finally ejected and old Satan chained up.

Will any divine explain why they fought with swords when they could not kill?—neither angel nor devil could die twice. Was it a mimic warfare, or were they fighting for amusement? Like plays and novels, of course the angels win and the arch villain is foiled; but as so few enter the kingdom of heaven, a person would naturally suppose that the devils, being in a large majority, would soon get away with the angels.

It reminds me very much of a Spiritualistic circle I attended, when the medium, also in a trance, gave us a graphic description of the wonders of spirit land. Amongst other things she saw a heavenly Mississippi steamboat sailing along, when all at once it burst up, blowing passengers and all into fragments. Her audience were thrilled. I, however, being a little skeptical, asked, "But how can spirits, having no substance, be hurt or killed—they cannot die twice." "Oh," answered she, apparently non-plused, "their spiritual bodies came together again and then the steamer went on its way!" In that case I would not mind being blown up every day; nor, if a devil, would I care how often I had a set-to with the angels to vary the monotony.

I really think John had larger imaginative powers than Jules Verne or the prophet Joe Smith. But as to the accuracy of his statements, I quite coincide with Martin Luther, who, on the authority of Davidson, said that he did not consider Revelations prophetic nor apostolic and thought it was almost on a level with the fourth book of Esdras, which last he proposed to throw into the river Elbe. There was no objection to anyone believing it to have been written by the Apostle John who desired to do so. As for himself (Martin Luther) he did not believe it, but considered it a dumb prophecy. And Martin Luther placed Hebrews, James, Jude, and Revelation in an appendix to his New Testament as of inferior authority.

SINCLAIR TRIMBLE.

San Francisco, February, 1889.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

After the meeting of the State Convention of Liberals at San Francisco, I took the steamer, Mary Garratt, up the bay and river to Stockton, then out by rail to this place in Stanislaus county. Oakdale is finely situated on or near the Stanislaus river, in a beautiful grove of live-oak trees, and contains some fifteen or sixteen thousand population. The land is very sandy, but rich, and will produce anything if irrigated. This is a quiet town and seems to have a very intelligent people, with many fine and cozy homes scattered around among the trees. I soon engaged the Union church, the largest and finest in the town, and scattered my handbills everywhere, which resulted in giving a full house the first night.

My course here consisted of ten lectures, and nearly all were greeted by a full house. There are three churches, but these intelligent people are ready for evolution and science, Freethought and Liberalism. I met here Mr. Baker, editor of the Oakdale Graphic, Sunday-school superintendent, etc., who is a true rustler and live worker in any cause that interests him. His help and influence were much appreciated by your humble correspondent. Mr. Baker has a very interesting family of grown sons and daughters that are earnest workers for the good time coming and a good time now. The Rodden brothers and families, merchants, also gave me a hearty welcome, and worked for our success right royally. Mr. Crawford and wife gave us their hearty approval.

Mr. Woods and wife, mine hosts of the White House hotel, are broad-gauged Liberals whose religion is "One world at a time" and ever do your level best. Mr. Woods and lady know how to make a pleasant home for the tired traveler, and I shall not soon forget all their good will offerings to me and mine. May their shadows never grow less for a hundred years. I also made acquaintance with the Ames family, who live just out of town—a mother and three sons who are all true Free-thinkers and grand workers for the "cause that lacks assistance, for the wrongs that need resistance and the good that they can do." Mrs. Ames and sons are lately all the way from Maine and are building up a beautiful home here among the evergreen oaks of this fine valley. I also made friends with Mr. Ackers and daughter, who are not on the ship of Zion, but paddle their own canoe along the river of life, trusting to Mother Nature to land them aright on the other side of Jordan. Friend Ackers is a full team, a great worker, and enjoys life well enough to want to live a thousand years, and believes in a good time now. His accomplished daughter received the most votes, as the most popular young lady, for the fine volume I offered, entitled "Heads and Faces, How to Read Them." Mrs. Ackers I did not have the pleasure of meeting. Mr. Sprouls and Mrs. Sprouls, who keep the restaurant (and finely kept it is too) where this unworthy worm of the dust, your correspondent, took his hash, with their two refined and highly educated and attractive daughters, were among the many who gave us a cordial welcome to Oakdale; Mr. Perry, also, of the White House, and very many others, both in town and country, whose names we have forgotten. The lectures were a success and all invited me to soon return.

Casting Out Devils.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Our Campbellite Christian minister, J. T. Sharard, has for a few Sundays been treating us to comments on the miracles of Christian healing and casting out devils. A few Sundays since he gave us a thrilling account of a crowd and rush that followed Christ into a house, until the jam caused suffocation, so that one invalid being brought on a bed could not possibly find entrance. Notwithstanding, his bearers were not to be foiled. Seeing a step-ladder by the wall of the house they ascended to the house top. He described the flat roof composed of rafters, brush, straw, and dirt, through which an excavation was made (of course tumbling dirt, sticks, and straw on to the heads of the crowd below), and the bed let down by ropes at the four corners, upon the heads of the crowd.

It occurred to me, here was an opening for considerable labor saving. As those four men came tugging their load over the plains through the scorching sun, why did it become necessary for so much work to be performed to render this man's faith effectual? Could he not have been healed while on the way and sent home rejoicing, instead of scrambling up the wall and being dumped on the heads of the crowd? But the grandest feat of all was casting out the legion of devils from the "man of the tombs," who could not be bound with chains. This devil must have been possessed of Herculean power, probably equivalent to that of a locomotive.

Mr. Sharard did not inform us whether the patient had been subjected to medical treatment or not, but it is fair to presume emetics and cathartics had all failed. Otherwise he would Jonah like have heaved the monster up; although it might have been at the sacrifice of all the hogs on the ranch. Therefore, it may be he concluded on this stroke of policy, rather than run the risk of being minus pork, for a year or two, the better policy would be to intrust his case to a regular expert and thereby save his bacon.

The speaker, in his usual happy and fluent style, gave a quite extended history of the belief of the ancients in the immortality of the soul and in its progress in the hereafter, through the endless ages of eternity. After death, the souls of great men or great heroes take up their abode in correspondingly heroic animals, such as the lion and other favorite animals; then with a correspondingly downward descent through the lesser esteemed animals, as the hog, dog, coyote, and on down to fleas and mosquitoes; thus illustrating the doctrine of transmigration, or metempsychosis.

Except speaking a little disparagingly of the flea and mosquito department, the speaker left us to infer he indorsed the transmigration doctrine right through. Notwithstanding, this demonology, or doctrine of devils, is to me a profound mystery; therefore I should be obliged to adopt the language of Paul when speaking of godliness, namely, Great is the mystery of devilism.

T. McC.

P. S.—How did the "man of the tombs" hold his grip while the legion was being dragged out of him by locomotive power, and what became of the devils after the swine were choked to death?

Jamieson's Campaign.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I should have acknowledged the receipt of sample copies of your paper long ago. If I could find one word that would express the compound and concentrated praise of all who have so justly commented it, I would write that word and then underscore it thrice. There is an inadequacy in language sometimes to represent our meaning; so here, in trying to represent the excellence of FREETHOUGHT, I find that it is like strapping a ton weight on one poor little don—no, broncho. Perhaps you have noticed that a certain humorist in a late issue of that excellent journal, the Truth Seeker, wishes to know who J. K. P. Baker is, and where Irwin, U. S. A., is. Well, Prof. W. F. Jamieson has succeeded in making the discovery, and can now give said humorist a satisfactory answer. He gave the first lecture of his course, "Objections to Infidelity Met and Refuted," last Wednesday evening in the town hall to a large and appreciative audience.

At its conclusion, another was announced for Thursday evening; but it was so stormy that we thought the audience would be too small to justify a lecture, and so the professor remained my guest, two miles from the little village. It was a mistake on our part, for a large audience, much larger than the previous one, gathered in the hall and remained till after eight o'clock, eager to hear him. Considering that a revival meeting is now in progress, and a great effort being made to build another church, also that there is no Liberal organization here, the lecture success is something phenomenal.

Snohomish, Wash.

Yours for the right, J. S. MARTIN.

The Crafty Paul.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The passage in 2 Cor. xii, 16, "Being crafty I caught you with guile," is the same in the Douay version, save one word, viz., "took" for "caught." And in the Peshito, or ancient Syriac version, it is translated by Dr. Murdock, "Like a cunning man, I filched from you by craftiness." The Syriac is doubtless the most correct version. HISTORICUS.

Why the Sale of "Freethought" is Suppressed.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The pop's Irish who interfere with your newsman are only the minions of church and state. They want blazes knocked out of them.

DR. ANDREW D. WHITE will conclude, in the March "Popular Science Monthly," the subject of "Demoniacal Possession and Insanity," which forms one of his "New Chapters in the Warfare of Science," now publishing in that magazine. The forthcoming article will tell how the Roman Catholic, Lutheran, and Calvinistic clergy vied with each other in exorcising and persecuting the unhappy victims of insanity, and how medical science slowly introduced more humane treatment and finally drove back superstition from this part of the great battle-field.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully, J. R.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - MARCH 9, 1889

THE opponents of the Sunday law bill in California did not work in vain. The bill was refused a second reading and dropped dead in the Senate.

It is feared that Queen Victoria did not carefully read Ingersoll's reply to Cardinal Manning. The Paris Figaro alleges that she is a convert to the Romish faith.

WHEN the new post-office is built, it is hoped that the delivery of mail will be accelerated. Something over five days is now required for FREETHOUGHT to go from the post-office to Montgomery and Washington streets, a distance of one and a half blocks.

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD, the author of "Robert Elsmere," has written another book. We have not learned its title or its motive, but if she cures Robert Elsmere of the intellectual rheumatism that struck him when he got as far as Unitarianism, and makes a Freethinker of him, her second book will be more valuable than the first.

THE Blair Sunday Rest bill was referred by Congress to the Committee on Education and Labor. The California legislature put the state Sunday bill in the hands of a Committee on Public Morals. This shows that our lawsmiths are not clear in their minds where such a bill belongs. The Committee on Public Nuisances ought to have a chance at it.

LAST week the Examiner had a report of a sermon by Father Fasanotti, under a startling heading to the effect that heathen may be saved, and that even Protestants may indulge a faint hope of ultimate salvation. The Rev. Father Fasanotti hastens to correct the erroneous statement, and says: "It remains always a fact and a doctrine of the church that 'out of the church there is positively no salvation.'"

OLD man Pecci, the Italian impostor who does business as Pope Leo XIII., celebrated the seventy-ninth anniversary of his birth on March 2. In response to the congratulations of the cardinal his alleged holiness made a grumbling speech in which he complained that his loss of temporal power made it impossible for him to perform his full duty as head of the church. The pope occupies the position of a man with opportunities to do a a great deal of good, yet who is doing the cause of progress and liberty more harm than any other man in the world.

THE dispatches say that during the closing hours of Congress, that is, on Sunday night, Senator Blair presented a petition from Philadelphia for a constitutional amendment against religious or sectarian education in public schools. This is a queer business for Mr. Blair to be engaged in. We had supposed that his hobby was the bill for instruction "in the principles of the Christian religion."

CATHOLICS multiply like the fishes in the sea. The Boston Pilot says: "Hoffman's Directory gives the total of American Catholics at 8,157,676, but says that in every diocese there are parishes that fail to report. We believe that the estimate made recently by a careful Catholic writer in the New York Sun, and which reckons the Catholics of the United States at a scant 12,000,000, touches the true figure more nearly than the other estimate given above." The total number of parochial schools is 3,070, and the attendance 585,965.

THE complaints regarding the prevalence of immorality in Alaska come chiefly from the missionaries there, and Governor Swineford says that two or three of these are responsible for all the vile slanders upon the white people of Alaska which have been sent broadcast through the country. The governor has reported to Congress upon the matter, and concerning one missionary he says: "I can but express the earnest hope that either the government or the Board of Home Missions may be able very soon to find a field far remote from Alaska, in which the peculiar talents and altogether questionable methods of Rev. Dr. Sheldon Jackson can be more profitably employed."

NEWS AND NOTES.

Auburn bears out the poetic significance given to it by Goldsmith. It is a beautiful village, not upon the plains like Goldsmith's Auburn, but among the foot-hills, and the scenery about it, of wooded heights and deep ravines and shining orchards, is lovely. Deep down in the canyon is seen the winding American river, and far off against the horizon flashes the Sacramento, and the snow-capped mountains are in the blue distance over the lofty hills. The climate is unsurpassed. June days are in the bosom of winter. The skies are luminous, the roses bloom, the grass glitters as on summer's breast, and the almond-trees dance to the wind with silvery blossoms. One can sit in the warm, refreshing atmosphere and look upon fairy pictures.

Auburn is one of the oldest mining towns in the state, and its former picturesqueness has not disappeared. The streets are irregular and the business portion of the place has still the frontier look. But the village spreads out capaciously, and elegant dwellings and lawns and beautiful gardens appear, and almost in a moment the mining town becomes like an elegant suburban city.

A few years ago Auburn had almost ceased to grow, for the mining industries had waned, but of late it has begun to increase owing to the fertility of the soil, and the healthfulness of the climate. The once vacant spaces between Auburn station and the "old town" are now being filled up with handsome dwellings and business houses, and the "two ends" are one city of about three thousand inhabitants.

There is abundance of water for house, irrigation, fire, sewer, and manufacturing purposes. All kinds of fruits and berries flourish. It is the home of the orange, olive, and vine.

The Sierra Normal College and Business Institute is established here. It is liberally conducted and flourishing. Auburn is the county seat of Placer county. It is 36 miles from Sacramento, 126 miles from San Francisco, and at an elevation of 1300 feet. At the State fair, 1886, Placer county carried off the first prize for the best quality and greatest variety of deciduous fruit, and at the citrus fair held at Sacramento a year ago, its exhibitors received premiums for the best oranges.

Placer county is named from its rich placer mines. When these became exhausted many miners remained and engaged in the growing of fruits, with the raising of cattle and sheep. Lands near the railroad are held at from $30 to $100 an acre, and at a distance of eight or ten miles from $15 to $30 an acre.

The lectures were not very successful in point of numbers, but a beginning has been made, and I am sure of a much larger attendance next time. Many difficulties were in the way as usual in towns where Freethought lectures are given for the first time. In spite of all I have found good friends and much encouragement.

My persistent ally, O. D. Storrs, needed the "seven leagued" boots for the work that he has done. He has walked and talked almost without end to get the people out. He is heart and, as he says, "sole" in the cause. I don't think anybody has put more shoe leather and grit into it than he has, and notwithstanding all unfavorable surroundings he "made the raffle." He is a Grand Army man, and can lead the forlorn hope. A better soldier never was, and it will be "forward march" so long as he has a breath of life. Not only will he foot the highways and byways, but also the bills, with the same generous enthusiasm.

The Kaiser boys, Lewis and Henry, are already known for valuable work, and it was a pleasure to meet these fearless supporters. Through thick and thin they stand by the colors, and will always keep things lively for Freethought. To them, "The dream of youth is manhood's noble fire."

I found a cordial and delightful friend in Dr. J. C. Hawver, who is widely informed, and amid professional cares enjoys the "sweets of divine philosophy." He is not iconoclastic—is a builder, but doesn't see that the church is the friend of progress. He believes thoroughly with Ingersoll that "every demonstrated fact drives a superstition from the brain and a ghost from the sky."

A. Keller showed me his magnificent collection of minerals, for which he has received several medals. The enthusiasm of his life is to discover these beautiful treasures, every one of which is a testimony against the Bible with "crystal clearness" and "rainbow tint." No one better understands than Mr. Keller the nature of our soil and its varied capabilities.

O. V. Newton is an original philosopher. He doesn't believe in civilization, but in nature, in which view there is much truth, for about three-fourths of our present civilization is artifice. Friend Newton is a believer in the spiritual powers, and that by their influences hereafter we shall have a better chance to be ourselves. I have no objection to these spirits that are on the side of nature and against theology.

Mr. A. Radcliff is also an ardent Spiritualist, but also a Liberal, and he was one of my most cheerful coadjutors. He has a clear insight into the situation and is an unflinching opponent of ecclesiastical authority in the state.

Freeman of Freeman's Hotel is a jolly landlord and knows how to make his guests comfortable. Mr. and Mrs. N. B. Mikesell of the Arlington are genial entertainers, and believe in making this world as happy as possible. Their religion is to give to the traveler the best they have.

Mr. and Mrs. Butterfield, Mrs. Bancroft, Mrs. Newton, are among the agreeable acquaintances made in this sunny land, and so, with the kind friends here, the work, although not as yet popular in its results, is of such promise that I shall rejoice to visit again this field of fruits and flowers and transparent skies.

Our friends at Livermore are now well-known for their liberality and progressive spirit. There is no better place in the world for the growth of Freethought. Nature smiles here in her sweetest attire, and one can't think much of a "world beyond" when the present world is so enchanting. Livermore is in the heart of a broad valley which just now has its garniture of bursting green; and mingling with the verdant landscape are the orchards and vineyards which display signs of abundant harvest, if only the rain will fall.

My honorable friend, Jas. Beazell, was on hand to greet me as I landed from the cars, and I found comfortable welcome at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jordan, whose fireside knows no shadow of superstition. Hovering around is the bright little Ada, six years old, a picture of perpetual motion, whose childish fancies are woven by fairy fingers, and not by dark theology. Happy childhood! how beautiful it is, flowing untouched by the sombre shadows of the church.

The hall was full on Saturday evening. Hon. Jas. Beazell presided. It always does me good to look at this man, for it seems as if he could bear the weight of the world on his broad shoulders, and his kindly nature makes every one feel at home, and so the meetings were conducted in the spirit of neighborly hospitality. I gave my lecture on "The Religious Conspiracy." At the close our almost four-score-old philosopher, whose age is still bright with the spirit of youth, M. S. Palmer, recited that beautiful poem, "Nameless," which was received with universal applause. The burning thought of the ballad was fitly rendered with grace and skill.

Sunday morning—a perfectly lovely morning, the skies and earth shining with burnished beauty as if I were in the chamber of some mighty palace of gold and silver—friend Jordan drove me out to the noble residence of Mr. and Mrs. N. Lueders. This farm is one of the best in the valley—six hundred broad acres, as neatly kept as a garden. The horses and cattle revel in big barns and ample yards and sunny pastures, and the grain is just putting forth its million verdant spires; and round the house the roses and violets bloom and the orchards wave with snowy clouds. Amidst these elegant surroundings Freethought finds no gloom of ignorance and fear.

From thence we traveled to the "house on the hill" where our comrade, C. H. Symmes and wife, and four bright children, live amid an ever-varying picture of delight. One can look over the whole valley from this lofty eminence. Pleasanton is glittering, just against the swell of hills, and beyond the mountains tower in magnificent array, Diablo crowning the glittering spaces. Sweeping backward the eye catches Livermore glancing among the trees and smooth declivities. A glorious panorama on every side, of industry, of art, of wealth, of nature, of splendid sky, of teeming field, makes the heart of the observer thrill with delight.

In the afternoon of Sunday there was a meeting of those who are in favor of organization. Enough were present to give promise of a good strong society, and a committee was appointed to arrange for future work. I believe that an excellent Liberal Union can be formed here. I had a crowded house in the evening, and spoke upon "The Sunday and the Sabbath." The audience represented the best portion of the community, and its attention and appreciation were indeed an inspiration for the cause. A large number of ladies were present, and their support and intelligence will certainly give moral and social prestige to the Liberal Union.

I feel highly encouraged with the generous and numerous friends I find here—so many that I cannot name them in "News and Notes." But they are in my memory and make hope for arduous toil.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

AGAINST PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The attitude of the Catholic church toward the American common school does not change. At the dedication of a parochial school building in Pittsburg, Pa., last Sunday, Bishop Kane, of Wheeling, said:

"The great problem that confronts us to-day is the same as that which confronted the people in apostolic times. There were schools then, but they were pagan schools, and the only way to counteract their effect was to establish Christian schools. That is what the Catholic church is trying to do in America now."

There is no legal objection to Catholics founding "Christian" schools. They may have one or more in every town in the country if they wish, so long as they support them by private and voluntary contributions. The infamy of the Catholic movement is that it seeks to use the public school fund for the propagation of Roman superstition.

THE BLAIR SUNDAY BUSINESS.

Every time there is a lull in the proceedings of Congress, somebody presents a petition for the Sunday Rest bill. Last Saturday night Senator Cameron brought such a petition into the Senate, but it was accompanied by one against the measure. The presiding officer himself contributed a petition from the citizens of Kansas protesting against the passage of any bill for the observance of Sunday.

The California Senate has set the national body a good example by refusing to listen to the second reading of a Sunday bill. The Senate at Washington should follow that example if the matter comes up at the next session.

RELIGION AND MARRIAGE.

A sad example of what religion can do toward wrecking human happiness was afforded by a recent tragedy in this city. A shop-girl named Emma Bennett, a Christian, for some time associated with Emanuel Davis, a Hebrew. They expected to marry each other, but it turned out that Davis's parents would not permit the young man to marry a "gentile," and he so informed Miss Bennett. The girl brooded over the matter for a short time, and then procured a pistol with which she attempted Davis's life, and afterward took her own.

The case has excited a great deal of remark. Nearly all the clergymen insist that religious differences should be observed in contracting marriage, but it is generally admitted that the more religious member of the family is apt to make the most trouble. The devout Protestant, Jew, or Catholic does not hate a co-religionist any the less for being such, but he hates those of another religion more.

A GENEROUS PROMISE KEPT.

To the Editors of Freethought:

It now gives me much pleasure to redeem our promise made some time ago, of co-operating with Mr. Stone in his unselfish efforts to establish FREETHOUGHT on a self-sustaining basis. Inclosed is cash for ten full yearly subscriptions to be sent to the friends whose names are inclosed.

I am exceedingly sorry to see, by your editorial notice to subscribers, that many are neglecting to renew as promptly as they should. One would think every Liberal would be glad to give at least two dollars per year towards popularizing the rational ethics of Freethought; and what more practical way can be found than to build up our Liberal press? This carelessness of the necessities of the hour is another emphasis of the utter indifference of the many, and should spur the few who are interested on to redoubled efforts for the success of this movement now so well begun.

My noble wife was by my side when this promise, which I now redeem, was made, and was with me heart and mind in all our little efforts to increase the circulation of FREETHOUGHT. Its success and our promise are doubly sacred on this account. Consider it as much from her as myself, and believe me, Boulder Creek, Cal. Yours always, W. S. RODGERS.

THE Rev. Samuel Jones, now in San Francisco, continues to give utterance to the enlightened sentiments previously noted in FREETHOUGHT. In his sermon Sunday morning he said: "God is no respecter of persons in his love, but loves one man as much as another. God loves the worst man in San Francisco as much as the best; the most wicked sinner as much as the most saintly. Sometimes I think that if there's any difference God loves the sinner better'n the Christian." Another gem—it is old but it should be kept before the people: "Yes, I would sooner be a convict than one of these men who declare themselves Infidels." According to Christian theology, Mr. Jones is right, as convicts generally go from the gallows to glory, while honest Infidelity is the highway to hell.

CONGRESS has adjourned without doing anything about the new post-office site in San Francisco except to appropriate $800,000 to pay for it. This is quite agreeable to us. The present post-office is but a few blocks distant, while any new site likely to be chosen will be located a mile or two from our office. This fact should be taken into consideration by the commission, though it probably will not.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT is doing a great work for the poor children who come under her charge as member of the school-board. In a recent number of the National Reformer she says: "I have some 2,900 small creatures now eating away merrily every week, and there will be over 3,000 pairs of jaws going next week. I peeped in at one of the 'dinner centres' the other day, and a right pleasant sight it was to see a second relay of over a hundred mites munching away at good pea soup, with bread and jam to follow. Some were hatless, and their clothes were thin enough, but they will face the cold better with their poor little stomachs full of warm food instead of aching with emptiness. And there are people who would let them ache, because their parents are improvident."

THE officious Henry C. Bowen, editor of the New York Independent, attended the inauguration ceremonies at Washington, carrying with him the Bible on which Washington was sworn when he first took the oath of office as president, and wanted General Harrison to use it. The general, however, had an old Bible that he carried through the war in his saddlebags, and used that; over which circumstance the religious people indulge in the usual amount of twaddle. It would have been in much better taste if the president had left his fetich at home, and had simply affirmed upon the honor of an American citizen that he would perform the duties of his office to the best of his ability.

OUR legislature has just passed a law making it a misdemeanor for any person to obtain any food or accommodation at an inn or boarding-house without paying therefor, with the intent to defraud the proprietor or manager thereof, or to obtain credit at an inn or boarding-house by the use of any false pretense, and after obtaining credit or accommodation at any inn or boarding-house, to abscond and surreptitiously remove his baggage therefrom without paying for his food or accommodations. This looks like a reversion toward the custom of imprisoning for debt.

SAN JOSE, we believe, has the first Church of Humanity in the state. It was organized last Sunday with the following officers: President, O. F. Alley; vice-president, J. W. Miller; secretary, Mrs. R. H. Schwartz; treasurer, Dr. Bentley. The pastor of this church, of course, is N. F. Ravlin, a clergyman who recently drifted from his orthodox moorings at San Diego, and who now preaches the gospel of Liberalism as revealed through common sense. The Church of Humanity starts with a membership of two hundred, and with every prospect of success.

PROF. J. H. COOK, of Columbus, Kan., writes to thank Professor Seymour for his kind and sympathetic words, but says that he is not in want, and does not at present require financial assistance. He suffers, he says, from conditions that money cannot remedy.

SAMOS PARSONS has forwarded $10; Henry Kaiser, $1; L. R. Titus, $2; A. Derming, $1, and Frank Butler, $1, to start a fund for propaganda work through the California Liberal Union.

OBSERVATIONS.

Mr. Ketchum, who earns his daily bread by selling copies of this paper on the street, has no end of trouble. The other night, when he went home, some unknown person assaulted him, hit him behind the ear with a club or other weapon, again in the face, on the forehead, and in the ribs, and left him in a bruised and battered condition. No policeman was in sight, his story told at the station house aroused no interest, and his stock of papers were sprinkled with gore so profusely as to be unsalable. The victim thinks that the universe is conspiring to take his life, but he accepts things philosophically. A skilful doctor I sent him to pronounced his injuries not necessarily fatal, and gave him a prescription for application to his contused parts. When he found that the prescription would cost a dollar and a half, he concluded he could get more comfort out of the money if he invested it in Voltaire's Romances. He had more faith in that than in medicines. I let him have the volume at reduced rates, and he went home to read and await developments. The philosophy of the book pleased him, but he found that his injured side would not admit of his laughing at its witticisms, and he had to postpone its perusal. He thought a police surgeon might help him, and visited one. The official sawbones, in his examination, hurt him so much worse than his original assailant that he got no place there, and left in disgust. Then he thought of vengeance, and consulted Attorney Chilstrom. He has never seen his assailant, to his knowledge, but has his suspicions; also his assailant's hat. Suspicions and a hat are so poor material to open a case with that the lawyer does not see his way clear to a conviction, and the professor is so fearful of accusing some innocent party that he hesitates to swear out a warrant for anybody's arrest. That is the way the matter now stands. A sympathizing friend, whose name is not disclosed to me, has placed funds at Mr. Ketchum's disposal to pay the cost of such legal proceedings as may be necessary, but it is not probable that any will be begun. Mr. Ketchum is one of those eccentric persons called cranks by an unappreciative world, and, as is well known, cranks have no rights that other cranks are bound to respect. Being something of a crank myself, I can see how hopeless his case is.

A week or two ago I prepared and printed a petition, to be signed by the clergy, offering such an amendment to the Blair Sunday Rest bill as will free ministers and priests from the burden of Sunday toil, by striking out the word "secular" from the bill. The petition has been extensively copied and reprinted in the secular press, but I am disappointed that the religious papers and the clergy themselves do not take hold of it with a stronger hand. If that bill passes and becomes a general law, sixty or seventy millions of people will be allowed to sit around idle on Sunday, while eighty thousand preachers do all the work. Under the circumstances, how would it do to pass a supplementary law that no clergyman shall perform any religious services during the week? If there is to be enforced Sunday rest for the world's people, it is no more than fair to enforce week-day rest on God's people. A lop-sided bill like Blair's condemns itself.

The Liberal lecture by Professor Miller, last Sunday, was not largely attended, but those who came were quite satisfied with the discourse. Mr. Miller is still a young man, probably under thirty-five. He is a student of Herbert Spencer, and a scholar and thinker. He ought to be encouraged while his enthusiasm is warm. New York, Chicago, and other cities have their ethical and Liberal societies, and yet they do not need them any more than San Francisco does. It will not be to our credit if we allow the East to get ahead of us from an ethical point of view. I cannot imagine anything more desirable in the way of a regular weekly meeting than can be had by keeping Professor Miller on the platform, supplemented with singing from the Cosmian Hymn Book, and a collection by Mr. Schou to pay running expenses.

The appended synopsis of Professor Miller's last Sunday discourse gives an insight into the instructive nature of his remarks:

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

Man is a very old creature. Fifty years ago the average educated intelligence of our race assented to the chronology of Archbishop Usher, itself based upon the middle-age scholarship of Scaliger and others, which was engrafted upon King James's translation of the Bible, and ascribed an antiquity to man of four thousand years. But the science of these fifty years has shown this antiquity to be comparative youth. Geology and archaeology have removed man's genesis unknown centuries of centuries into the mists of the past. Relics of his art upon reindeer bones found in the caves of Southern France declare his existence there in a pre-glacial epoch, and an antiquity of 250,000 years. Even then his physical development was perfect, and he had made considerable mental advance, as much as many savage tribes of to-day. Our own discovery has infinitely enlarged the horizon of man's action in time, and the law of evolution indicates that the stage of humanity was preceded by untold ages of development out of lower species. We have been compelled to readjust and enlarge all the standards of our history and growth under the guidance of a new law which explains with reason and consistency the development of the universe. The Usherian chronology, which made the creation of the world coeval with that of man, has shriveled into feeble contempt when compared with the magnificent æons which geology and evolution show have passed since the solar system began to pass from homogeneous star dust into planets and suns. The stage of time has been so stretched out as to become a large part of eternity, and almost wearies the intelligence which has explored it to retain a comprehensive grasp upon its extent.

The primitive man, whom we faintly see far down the lengthening corridor of antiquity, has left some records of himself in his rude stone tools, in the bones of animals that bear his marks, in his own bones preserved in earth's paleologic strata. He was homogeneous in the simplicity of his occupations, his government, his knowledge and his beliefs, but he held within himself the promise and the potency of the future, the power of intellectual growth. If he may fairly be represented by the lowest savages of our day, the Australian and the Terra del Fuegian, the distance he has climbed the mountain of intelligence is plainly shown by the physical increase of the great organ of intelligence in the most highly developed modern races. The brain of the modern Aryan (European or American) is farther removed in weight, quantity, and complexity from the brain of the Hottentot and Australian than is theirs from the brain of the chimpanzee, one of the highest anthropoid apes. The difference between the highly developed modern and the primitive man is legible in his body, as well as in the vast differentiations of employment, polity, science, art, social organization, religion. To track out man's history in each of these great departments of thought and action is a delightful and inexhaustible task. To know at least their outlines is necessary to approximately understand ourselves; but it is the last of these which touches us most nearly in its relation to Freethought and the objects of Liberal organization.

The religion of the primitive man was derived from his dreams and his imagination. It was entirely simple and natural in its origin, and was only a belief that the common forces of nature, the sun, wind, fire, rain, etc., had a personality like his own, though more powerful, to be propitiated for its favors, and feared for its injuries. As men organized into tribes and nations, religion was organized into mythologies. As man increased in understanding and reflective power polytheism became monotheism, which has long been the religion of the leading Aryan and Semitic nations, yet among great masses of these peoples, still tinged with ancient polytheism. Each nation has pictured its own personality in its ideas of its Gods, and monotheism has been no exception to that tendency.

The Supreme Ruler has been and is yet to the majority a highly idealized human intelligence. Only in the last crucible of philosophical analysis is it found that the nature of the supreme power must in its eternity and infinity be unknowable to man, and no terms or qualities of the one can be ascribed to the other. Yet this exception may be made, that that portion of the infinite and eternal that has become known by the mind in the time and space that it has conquered, are knowable, and so far infinity and eternity are knowable, as are the parts of a whole, but the whole is of necessity unknowable by the finite.

With the fading away of faith in a revelation, proof of immortality has become impossible. This has filled many men with sadness, some with bitterness and despair. Evil has seemed to them to preponderate and the forces of the world they have declared pessimistic.

But the last word is not spoken. The growth of human intelligence has not ceased. It may go as far beyond its present attainments as those attainments exceed its beginnings. The average of life has been increased; it may be lengthened indefinitely. Many secret doors of nature are yet unopened. Death may become intelligible, or avoided till welcome. And though life is cruel and has daily tragedies, it has many joys and satisfied appetites. Though the old faiths and the certainty of a future life have faded, the great human virtues remain—fatherhood, motherhood, brotherhood, patriotism; the desire and delight of knowledge, of work, of giving, remain to inspire and strengthen. It is better to face the truth than to go backward with falsehood; for though the air in which she walks be keen, man's accumulated experience assures him that it is wholesome.

The speaker closed with an appeal to Liberals to consider not only the destructive attitude they must take towards false thought, but the much larger constructive work they have to accomplish by substituting the laws and system of science and nature, in the place of the mistaken religious and social systems, against which they contend.

Mr. Schou arose to say that there was apparent need of greater encouragement than this first meeting had received. Remarks on that subject would be to the point.

Mr. Thomas Curtis and Mrs. Scott Briggs gave their impressions, and Mr. John Beaumont moved the appointment of a committee to visit local Liberals and see what they would do. Mr. Schou, Professor Miller, and Mr. Beaumont were thereupon named as the above committee for rustling purposes. They will make personal calls at or about this date, and friends are requested to receive them cordially. The next meeting will be duly announced in these columns.

Has anybody ever remarked the disparity between what dentists advertise to do and what they actually accomplish? I have, or had, a molar tooth that has caused me trouble and expense ever since I became of age. Ten years ago I requested a New York dentist to extract it. He looked at it, hammered it with the butt end of an iron crochet hook, said it appeared to be a pretty firm tooth, and thought it ought to be filled. I let him fill it. Two days later another dentist unfilled it, touched it with carbolic acid, and said it would probably never trouble me more. A large majority of the doctors of dental surgery doing business in New York afterwards had an introduction to that tooth. They filled it with gold, zinc, amalgam, sludge acid, and slickin's. It always ached. I dosed it with the essential oil of all the aromatic spices, with all toothache drops, anodynes, and ready reliefs. Still it ached. The other day going up Market street I saw an advertisement of Dr. Onion's electric method of extracting teeth without pain. I applied. The doctor assured me blandly that his method was so painless as to be a positive luxury. He examined the tooth, probed it, hammered it, stuffed it with cotton, and then inquired if it "ached" me. At that moment I could not say whether it ached or not. Galvanic pains shot through every bone in my head, and I said I didn't know, but I would like to have him apply his painless process and extract the tooth. "You better have it filled and save it," he suggested. I wouldn't do it. Then while I reposed, thinking he was getting his battery ready, he introduced his forceps, crushed the tooth to atoms, and dropped some fragments on the stand. He then came back for the rest, and proceeded to strew the office with comminuted particles of my osseous system. At the end of the seance I took occasion to inquire if the method just exemplified was the one advertised as painless. Dr. Onion replied that the electric apparatus was a little out of order and that I owed him one dollar and four bits. I was relieved to find I was in his debt. I had feared he owed me something, which I would not be able to collect, for contributing enough of my remains to start an anatomical museum with. The method of Dr. Onion might do for people with powerful nerves, but I shall not submit to it again so long as I can find a hammer and cold-chisel and good strong men to manipulate them.

Re my proposed trip to Palestine, or elsewhere, I have received a communication from my friend A. C. Nicolaides, of Spokane Falls, Wash. Let me here say that I got the word re from the English papers. It is used interchangeably with anent, and I do not know what it means. Mr. Nicolaides writes thus ornately:

If you will accept my preponderance, I will vote for you to go to — I as opposed to the holy land. The divines of this locality have consigned me to the fiery pit, and I would like to have some truthful person precede me and write a veracious description of the place, so that I may prepare myself for my father's mansions. The clergy pretend to tell what kind of a place it is, but between you and me, I believe they are uninformed if not untruthful. To whichever place you conclude to go, I will help to give you a good send-off.

Thus the encouragement augments. A great destiny is before us. As from Mount Pisgah's lofty height we view the future as a dream, we see a band of spirits bright climb from the waves of Jordan's stream. We see them shiver on the banks, in moistened clothes without a drier, while further on are ranks on ranks of parsons gathered round the fire. We hear no hallelujahs sung, celestial anthems fail to swell; the pilgrims cry, as with one tongue, "If this is heaven, what is —?" But I anticipate. I am at present unprepared for the contemplated trip, not having as yet been measured for my asbestos ulster. M.

HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

C. R. Bennett, secretary of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, has arrested a man at Portland, Or., named Isaac E. The motion was defeated.—General Rosecrans has been placed on the retired list of army officers.—Governor Ross, of New Mexico, has issued an address to the people of that territory, asking them to call meetings, formulate memorials, and in every way appeal to Congress to give New Mexico a school law that will save her from ignorance and barbarism. BOOK REVIEW.

YONE SANTO: A Child of Japan. By E. H. House. Price, 50 cents.

This is the book which the Missionary Society tried to suppress, but didn't. It should be widely read. It is entirely different from "Robert Elsmere," or "The Story of an African Farm," but in its way it is a most powerful attack on Christianity. It is written from the standpoint of free or universal religion. Its spirit is that of Thomas Paine—"The world is my country, to do good my religion." It shows that religion in all races and all beliefs is equally as good in the one as in the other. There is really no need of any change of heart or of creed to be morally better. Yone Santo is just as good, just as noble, as a pagan as she would be as a Christian. The author recognizes the universal element in Christianity, but he seems to disregard as of little value its special elements. The missionary work is shown in its true colors—simply as an absolute failure. His criticisms, without doubt, are founded in truth, and that is why they cut so deep. No wonder that the Missionary Society endeavored to keep the book out of print; but it is a sad commentary upon the independence of the American public that a great publishing house was obliged to go back on its contract in order to placate the inquisition of the Missionary Society. The book, however, is published, and is the ally of Freethought.

The literary quality of the book is of the first order. The character of the "Child of Japan" is beautifully drawn. It is a flower of genius—delicate and lovely. The story is absorbing. The knowledge shown of human nature is deep. The old doctor is a sort of radical Puritan—a man of the world—but with noble conscience.

The book does not contain the observations of the ordinary traveler in Japan, but the results of the almost life-long residence of a keen philosopher and brilliant story teller. Of this book Helen H. Gardener says:

It is a plea and a protest so strong, so simple, so tender, and withal so gentle, that, although it claims to be but the story of one little maid in a distant land, it is the story of many little maids in every land. This American gentleman, this gentle American, has done a brave thing, a good thing, and a much broader thing in its scope than I believe he himself has fully understood, and he has done it so well that I for one feel that he has extended to me a personal favor. In the person of his sweet little heroine he has fought for us all—for every woman of every country. It is the new chivalry, and we are to be congratulated that the knight who breaks the lance for progress and fair play is so well equipped for the battle. I would not have it inferred from what I say that the book is either a theological treatise or an equal-rights argument. It is simply and solely, so far as its rank goes, a story. It is no more an argument than was "Adam Bede," or "Bleak House." It is no more a theological treatise than the "Scarlet Letter," but the missionary board took exception to it as it appeared in the Atlantic Monthly, and found means to frighten Houghton, Mifflin & Co. into submission to their desires to see the book suppressed. But the story of this outrage is told most effectively by its gifted author in a postscript to the book itself, and a most striking commentary it is upon free speech and free press in this country.

GOD AND MAN; a Philosophical Inquiry into the Principles of Religion. By the Rev. Henry Truro Bray, M. A., B. D., LL.D., Rector of Christ Church, Booneville, Mo.

This is a brave book and a learned book. It is worth reading for the quotations it contains, especially from ancient authors, pertinent to the subjects discussed. It is seldom that a clergyman is so clear and candid. He does not seem to be afraid of facts.

His belief, however, is founded, not upon the facts, but upon sentiment. And this he willingly confesses. He takes the only reasonable position which the theologian can take to-day, namely, that he believes in God and immortality simply because these beliefs are not yet actually disproved by the reason of man. He gives up the demonstration of them. He believes simply because he wants to believe; because there is no absolute evidence against believing, and so he is at liberty to follow his desire. The attitude of modern theology is thus different from ancient theology. Formerly the theologian undertook to prove the existence of God and the immortality of the soul. Modern theology wisely refrains from this task, as our author does. His argument is about this. Almost all men believe in God. It is a pleasant belief; it has some moral motive. Seeing therefore that science does not peremptorily forbid the belief, but allows "the deep heart of man" to disport itself somewhat at will in the realms of the unknown, is it not therefore a valid belief? The author is not always conscious of this mode of reasoning, but that is about what the book means. He looks at all the unfavorable facts in the history of the Bible, the church, the world, but declares that so long as there is no actual disproof of his beloved dogmas he will cling to them. If one reasons this way consciously his belief really amounts to nothing, for God and immortality cease to be realities the moment one clearly perceives that the foundation for the belief is only in the sentiments, and that the intellect gives no voucher. Our author is so strongly theistic in the very temperament of his being, that he can confront any array of unfavorable facts without much unsettling of his faith. He can afford to be candid simply because his feeling is his voucher, and not his intellect. This book is worth reading by the Freethinker on account of the admissions which it makes and the wealth of knowledge which it displays. Coming from the source it does it is a somewhat surprising book. It shows about the position of advanced minds in the churches to-day, but the multitude of believers generally will look upon it as heretical. However, the position is the position of every enlightened Christian who knows that there is not one particle of evidence in favor of God and immortality; that the only evidence of his belief is the universality and earnestness of the belief; that it is the result of inherited associations and sentiments. The pure intellect is absolutely dumb upon the question. The only hope of theology to-day is in the agnosticism of science. So long as science says "I do not know," so long will the human heart leap the barriers and build its air castles in the unknown. Dr. Bray is a born theologian, but he is also a gentleman and a scholar. S. P. P.

"THE STORY OF AN AFRICAN FARM" is for sale at this office. Price, 20 cents.

SOMEbody has kindly mailed us a copy of an address delivered in Paine Hall, January 24, 1884, by the Hon. A. Schell, on "The Will of Stephen Girard," published by J. P. Mendum. It is an eloquent and stirring defense of the non-religious provisions of the document which forms its subject.

J. M. WHEELER, of London, England, is preparing and publishing in parts a "Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of All Ages and Nations." Part I., containing thirty-two pages, is at hand. It goes as far as Bauer (Bruno), the German biblical critic. When completed the work will be of the greatest value as a book of reference.

LOUIS WAISBROOKER holds that usury and land monopoly must go, or all freedom must go, and she sets forth her reasons therefor in a ten-cent pamphlet with the title "Facts and Figures for Workingmen." That interest is a severe burden to borrowers is quite plain, but how borrowers can be persuaded to cease paying it, is a question not easy to answer.

MR. SINGLETON W. DAVIS, of San Diego, offers the world a new religion in a 64-page pamphlet called "Sketches of the Scientific Dispensation of a New Religion." The title signifies, according to the author's definition, "the superseding of mysticism by scientific method, and of chaotic superstition by a rational system of utilitarian religion." Mr. Singleton desires to bring about a coalition between science and religion, so that the benefits of both may be utilized. He has our best wishes for his success. The author prints and publishes his pamphlet and sells it for 25 cents. His address is 916 Third street, San Diego.

THE NEW IDEAL COMPANY, of Boston, are publishing some excellent pamphlets under the running title of "The Modern Essayist," issued monthly. No. 1 of the series is an essay on

"Herbert Spencer; His Life, Writings, and Philosophy," by Daniel Greenleaf Thompson. Mr. Thompson is the successor of the late Courtlandt Palmer as president of the Nineteenth Century Club. He is an able and pleasing writer. No. 2 of the "Modern Essayist" deals with "Solar and Planetary Evolution," by Garrett P. Serviss; No. 3, "Charles Robert Darwin; His Life, Works, and Influence," by John W. Chadwick. These pamphlets are handsomely printed and sell for 10 cents per copy.

PROGRESS AND POVERTY.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I am sorry to see that a man cannot criticise "Progress and Poverty" without being told that his opinions incite men to murder, and are not entitled to respect. Is such language the fruit by which we may judge the book? Its title, by the way, and the statement in the introductory (pages 8 and 9), that "the tendency of what we call material progress is to still further depress the condition of the lowest class," show that Mr. George has not taken much notice of the real causes of poverty. That he also fails to recognize the right of owners of land to compensation is plain enough from every page of the chapter devoted to denying their claim (chapter III of book VII). How can any one consistently take any other ground who holds, like both Mr. George and Mr. Hassett, that private ownership of land is robbery? I have only to add that the gentleman to whose speech at an anti-poverty meeting in Boston I referred, was invited to lecture there again, and also to stump New York in co-operation with Mr. George. I do not feel bound to bring his name into a controversy which has taken this form. FRED. MAY HOLLAND.

A WOMAN REMONSTRANT IN THE FIELD.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Pursuant to the call for action in the matter of remonstrances to Congress against the Blair Sunday bill, Mrs. Mary A. White, of San Diego, has entered the field, and in addition to circulating a petition—to which she has hundreds of signers—has commenced to lecture. She spoke here March 3 in the Louis Opera House on "Constitutional Liberty versus Sunday Laws." The lecture was a good one, and well attended considering the short notice. Mrs. White has a commanding presence, is fine looking and a good speaker, with an analytical and logical mind. She writes well, and in a tour through the state, which she proposes to make, will do yeoman service for the cause.

6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.

A VALENTINE'S VISIT.

In the third century a priest of Rome wanted to interfere too much with the secular pleasures of the pagans, for which, it is asserted, he was beaten with clubs and then beheaded. His martyrdom secured canonization, and the day of "solemn remembrance" of his terrible death has, through the perversity of human frolic and passions, been turned to produce the very mirth-provoking propensities which this saint was trying to suppress. Alas for human irreverence! To think a monk's bones merely develop more monkery must be excruciating to the saints.

Wanting a couple of days' vacation I dropped in to Rochelle, Ill., and discovered our worthy Materialistic philosopher, whose admirable articles are such severe specimens of logical reasoning, perusing—just think of it—a valentine! While about to tell him of my willingness to enter into a solemn covenant not to mention the matter to Mrs. W., he took me into his confidence, as I will my readers, and gave the whole matter away. It is as creditable to the recipient as to the sender, and being something of a paraphrase on the Paley argument, will be read with profit and pleasure by the FREETHOUGHT family:

MY WATCH.

TO OTTO WETTSTEIN, ROCHELLE, ILL. BY JOSEPH HAIGH.

Twelve months ago I bought a watch
 From Wettstein of Rochelle,
 And ever since it's pegged away
 And kept time very well.

Ten thousand pulse-beats every hour
 Ring through its tiny veins,
 And are so accurately made
 It neither lags nor gains.

The case is made of purest gold,
 The front is French plate glass,
 The springs are of elastic steel,
 The wheels of finest brass.

In heat or cold, by day or night,
 No moment does it miss;
 There is no man or living thing
 Can run as true as this!

A Freethought badge is on the chain,
 The chain is on the stem,
 The watch is like a thing of life,
 The "charm" a little gem.

One well may ask which greatest is,
 The watch, or man who made it?

The man needs food to make him go,
 The watch no thing to aid it.

Man made the watch and God made man—
 That's what the preachers say—
 Two wonderful machines they are,
 As all their parts display.

But which machine is most perfect?
 We'll let the experts tell
 Which best admits of skilled treatment,
 When sick, to be made well.

If man could be withdrawn apart,
 Repaired, and rendered clean,
 'Twould be a grand improvement on God's wonderful machine.

Till we can separate man's parts,
 To clean and then attach,
 The preference, in fairness, must Be given to the watch.

Chebanse, Ill., St. Valentine's Day, 1889.

At his residence I received a hearty welcome from his charming and accomplished wife, a cordial salute from Mr. Frank (who, being in the local bank, acts as deputy treasurer of the American Secular Union), the same from Otto, junior, and his pretty sister, Olivia. Their delightful home abounds in gems of literature and the recherche in art, for art is another of Brother Wettstein's weaknesses.

Next noon Brother James A. Greenhill, of Clinton, Iowa, a life member, who has been on a European tour, was passing through Rochelle, homeward bound, and was prevailed on to partake of the good cheer at the Wettstein home and un-reel some of the rich reminiscences he had recently acquired in the land of his birth—of Burns's birth place; of his visit to Abottsford; his week in London, and his pilgrimage to the tombs of Darwin, Dickens, and others in Westminster, and to other places of intense interest. As his friends at Clinton had prepared a reception, we had to bid him good-bye on the next train.

Brother Wettstein's store is filled with a finer and costlier assortment of diamonds and jewelry than is found in an ordinary country jeweler's, but, as he is now entirely dependent on Liberal patronage of the entire country, he has to carry a large assortment, the local trade—though he has lived here over thirty years, has largely assisted in the town's development, and possesses an unblemished reputation—having abandoned him because he could not be coerced into hypocrisy and thus into the church. This proves how they love their neighbors as themselves. Before leaving I exchanged my Freethought badge-pin for a fac-simile in a scarf adornment—something that can be seen. Wish that more would thus show their colors, and on our travels many enjoyable acquaintances might be acquired.

THE BLAIR BILL AGITATION.

Last Sunday afternoon I spoke, at two Turner societies, on the Blair bill. Notwithstanding there was not the slightest mention of Anarchy or Socialism, many of the vile sheets of Chicago have determined to dub all the Blair bill meetings as Anarchistic assemblages. We are getting signatures to the protest. At each of these mass meetings my resolution was adopted demanding the adoption of a law taxing all church property. E. A. STEVENS.

SECULARISM IN SALT LAKE CITY.

Secularism has just scored a great and, we believe, a lasting triumph in this city, far exceeding the expectations of its most sanguine adherents. The quiet, dignified, and scholarly way in which it has been presented by Messrs. Underwood and Watts has inspired almost universal respect, and the impression that had hitherto prevailed among some classes that our representative men were superficial and inclined to treat the important questions at issue in a flippant and undignified manner has certainly been dissipated. Many persons of education and refinement outside of our faith have in the most earnest and cordial way spoken of these two worthy representatives of modern thought in very flattering terms.

Mr. Underwood gave four scientific lectures in the Opera House in January, which would have been a brilliant success but for the parsimony of the proprietors in trying to economize on fuel at the expense of the comfort and health of the audiences.

The place was so uncomfortable that it was found necessary to adjourn to the Federal Court room, where the lectures have since been given.

Mr. Charles Watts followed with four lectures also, and from the first had large and enthusiastic audiences. He has a strong, pleasant voice, and his evident training for the stage has added a charm to his oratory that places him amongst the foremost in his profession. His language is lucid and logical, and he never fails in impressing his audiences with his earnestness and candor. He is gentlemanly and dignified in his deportment, and he always commands the respect of his auditors, although many may differ with him on the questions at issue.

Mr. Watts has just finished a four night's debate with the notorious Clark Braden, which resulted in an overwhelming defeat of Braden and the church militant. The religious element of this city did not seem to be acquainted with Clark Braden or his antecedents, neither were they willing to be enlightened by one not of their faith, but were determined to indorse him as their representative. This they made one of the necessary conditions of the debate.

Although Mr. Watts was ready to meet any respectable and honest opponent, he at first objected to have anything to do with Braden on account of his previous history and conduct. After much solicitation upon our part, however, Mr. Watts consented to debate upon the written understanding that he was discussing with the representative of the Christians of this city, and that Braden should retract, also in writing, a false and malicious statement that he had two years ago caused to be printed and circulated about Mr. Watts. Both these conditions were complied with. Braden had in his plausible way related to the various ministers of the city how he had pulverized the anatomy of every Liberal lecturer in the field; that the scalp of Underwood was now hanging from his belt, that he had driven Putnam from the field, that Ingersoll did not dare to meet him, and that time and opportunity were all that was needed to chain Charles Watts to his chariot wheels. This was quite enough; he must indeed be a man sent of God to be able thus to wipe out Infidelity from amongst our people.

The presiding ministers of the Presbyterian and Methodist churches sent our society a challenge for Mr. Watts to debate "Christianity vs. Secularism" with their champion. Arrangements being completed, the discussion commenced on February 19 and lasted four nights. Each speaker had two speeches of thirty minutes every evening.

The first two evenings Braden affirmed, and used manuscript that surely must have been written for some other proposition than the one under consideration, as many portions of it were irrelevant and not at all suited to the question under discussion. It was evident throughout the debate that Braden was no match for his opponent, although some of the church members seemed at first sanguine. This feeling, however, was of short duration. One very noticeable feature of the matter was the fact that while at a meeting of all the ministers of the orthodox churches in the city Braden was unanimously indorsed by that body, but very few indorsed him by their presence after the first night. Their every action from that time indicated that they were not proud of their champion. It was really pitiable to hear him repeat, evade, and dodge the questions at issue. He is an "artful dodger," and that is all that can be said for him. As one paper stated, "The debate was finished last night, but Braden was finished the first night." A very good illustration of the estimation in which he is held by the church people here can be shown by referring to a lecture given by him in the church where the debate was held, the night following its close, on "The Fallacies of Infidelity." There were present twenty-two persons, including the writer. The lecture was tame, consisting of the most exaggerated assertions regarding the character and teachings of Secularism and Secularists, and laudations of the great ability and wonderful attainments of Clark Braden.

We wish to state that the ministers who arranged the debate for Braden have the thanks of our society for the spirit of fairness and cordiality with which they conducted their part of the program; there was not the slightest ill feeling exhibited, and everything went off in the most harmonious manner. They kindly offered us the choice of churches in which to hold the debate, and the Methodist was accepted. Mr. Watts was congratulated by the ministers for the masterly way in which he presented his side. Good feeling prevailed, and we have no doubt that beneficial results to Secularism will follow. Full houses greeted the disputants each night, and great interest was manifested throughout.

Salt Lake City, Utah.

MR. WENTWORTH DISCOURSES.

The people of San Pasqual recently held a meeting in the schoolhouse for the purpose of discussing the Blair Sunday Rest bill. Mr. Hiram Wentworth, of Escondido, was one of the speakers, and the following is a portion of the language which he used on that occasion:

Now for these Christians. They promised to give us their reasons, drawn from the Bible, for believing the Blair bill must become a part of our national law; but they have only proved to us what we already knew—that hunting for reason in the Bible is like fishing for trout in a swill-barrel. They have gone back to barbaric times and explored the dreary wastes of chaotic prophecy till they have found an old superannuated nightmare, which they have driven by divine strategy into the invisible corral of faith, where she is now being groomed by Senator Blair, and will, we are told, after she has received the sacred rite of extreme unction, be put into the Constitution of the United States. The venerable old beasts of the Bible have been put to the torture. We have seen their tails twisted and we have heard them prophesy. Our benighted minds have been enlightened in regard to the future of the Blair bill by a gorgeous display of prophetic moonshine. These supernatural idiots are trying to shift the responsibility of the Blair kid from the arch traitor who begot it to the God whom they profess to love—which I regard as a very fair specimen of Christian consistency. Compared with eating the flesh and drinking the blood of their redeemer, this foul crime is shorn of its enormity and almost ranks as a virtue. The present outlook seems to justify the prediction that the Advents will leave no stone unturned to make themselves appear criminally pious and stupidly ridiculous while opposing the Blair bill; therefore I cheerfully give the devil his due in advance by admitting, as a foregone conclusion, that this mountain of stupidity will labor persistently and unwittingly to establish the almighty disgrace of dog spelt backward, till it brings forth its inevitable mouse. The desperate folly and sublime stupidity of these Bible students forcibly remind me of the old blind negro who was found with an extinguished lamp in his hand hunting in a dark cellar at midnight for a black cat that wasn't there. They take Bible nonsense and palm it off for divine, infallible prophecy with as much brazen assurance as the Irishman who picked up a government blanket: "Och, this is moine, sure. U. for Patrick, and S. for McCarthy. I've found my blanket at last."

To a man with long hair, the position which these bobtailed Christians assume concerning the Blair bill seems not only ridiculously absurd, but in flat contradiction to their religious professions. If there is an Almighty God, and the Bible is God Almighty's word, and in God's word it is predicted that the Blair bill must become a part of our national law; then it logically follows that whoever tries to defeat the Blair bill, tries to make God out a liar, and that is just what these bobtailed Christians are trying to do. Hypocrisy! thy name is Christian. Inconsistency! thy name is Advent. Thou art opposed to the Blair bill. Whatsoever ye ask, in Christ's name, shall be given. Why not ask for the head of Senator Blair on a charger. It makes an Infidel tired to hear you whine about the Blair bill when you could have both the treachery and the traitor destroyed just by asking for their destruction.

It is not the style of a good orator to tear his subject all to pieces the moment he gets hold of it; but I have no time to-day to amuse you by playing with my victims as cats often do with mice before devouring them. At some future time I propose to dissect for your amusement and instruction some of the whited sepulchres in our midst who set themselves up as public moral teachers, but who would consider it much less disgrace to be guilty of theft, adultery, or rape, than to appear before an audience in shabby attire. A man who prefers dishonorable deeds to honorable rags, is eminently qualified for the kingdom of heaven. God promises to forgive every species of crime which men are guilty of, except that of sinning against the Holy Ghost—which appears to consist in disobeying the imperial mandates of fashion. The thief on the cross was unconditionally forgiven and immediately snatched up to glory. The man who attended the marriage supper, without having on a wedding garment, was bound hand and foot, and cast into outer darkness, to weep and wail, and gnash his teeth. He had committed the unpardonable sin!

As I was about to bid Mr. R—an affectionate farewell, something over a year ago, he told me confidentially, before his family, at the dinner table, that I had the most cheek of any man he ever saw. Knowing him to be good authority on cheek, and a man above suspicion of flattery, I could but regard his unsolicited and impassioned confession as highly complimentary to myself, and at once wrote it plainly on the tablet of my memory, where it will always remain. But it must be borne in mind that there are several kinds of cheek, and that while I have an inexhaustible supply of that variety which prompts a man to speak or write his thoughts plainly and fearlessly whenever occasion requires, I am conspicuously destitute of that kind which preaches the stupid guesswork of ignorant barbarians as the inspired word of an all-wise God, and am filled with painful disgust at the cheek which prompts a man to stand and grin at an audience for half an hour, like a cat eating cheese, without saying anything. That is stupidity trying to identify itself.

One man is overstocked with ideas, but has no way of getting them to market. Another man has every facility for conveying ideas, but, unfortunately, has none to convey. Some men who have no ideas of their own, and are incapable of originating ideas, appropriate the mental coin of other people by the U. for Patrick, and S. for McCarthy process, and having inscribed the trade-mark of a thief upon it, pass it off as their own. One enterprising genius imagines he has a talent for reading, and persistently insists on putting his victims either to sleep or to flight by reading to them in a slovenly manner what no one but B—is anxious to hear. One man in 60,000,000 has an unlimited supply of original ideas, and has first-class facilities for conveying them. His name is Ingersoll. I don't know whether he has more than four fathers or not; but in all probability one of his forefathers was Demosthenes. There has been a great improvement in oratory, however, since the time of Demosthenes; consequently, Ingersoll does not find it necessary to fill his mouth with cobblestones before making a speech. An orator who has a poor memory should always read his piece, instead of speaking it. By this plan he will avoid the necessity of stopping at short intervals to use a stomach pump in consequence of having swallowed the wrong sentence. A good policy for one who is afflicted with a painful constipation of ideas and a chronic diarrhoea of words, is to speak only when he is spoken to. By observing this rule he will avoid making his ignorance known to all men, as comparatively few will ever speak to him. But a man who has an abundance of ideas and is perfectly at home with "Webster under the bridge," can speak whenever he pleases, and take the confectionary of applause wherever he goes.

We have three little leaflets that will do good by circulation. They are: 1. "Nameless," a poem by Voltairine de Cleyre; 2. "Two Creeds," the Catholic and the Cathartic, the latter creed being an amusing parody on the former; 3. "The Theft of Girard College," setting forth briefly the provisions of Girard's will touching sectarian teaching, and showing how those provisions have been violated. Any of these leaflets, 10 cents per dozen; 50 cents per hundred.

We have for sale three pamphlets by J. D. Shaw, editor of the Independent Pulpit, namely, "The Bible—What is It?" 25 cents; "The Divinity of Christ," 15 cents; and "Studies in Theology," 10 cents.

THE "Sabbath Imposture," a pamphlet by Harry Hoyer, 10 cents per copy; six for 50 cents; fifteen for $1.00.

THE portrait of Miss Olive Shreiner, the author of "The Story of an African Farm," in the February number of the Book Buyer, is the first that has been printed. Miss Schreiner contributes some interesting autobiographical notes, which we reprint: "My father was a German, born in Wurtemberg. He studied at Basel, and went to South Africa as a missionary. My mother is English, the daughter of a Presbyterian minister, and for generations my ancestors have been strict Puritans. I was born in the heart of South Africa, on a solitary mission station. I was many years old before I saw a town. My father died many years ago. My mother has become a Roman Catholic, and is living in a convent in South Africa. I came to England for the first time seven years ago, and then published the 'African Farm,' which I had written in Africa. The first English edition was published in 1882.

I have made stories ever since I could remember; long before I could write I used to scribble on sheets of paper imagining that I was writing them. I began 'An African Farm' when I was almost a child, but left it for some years before I finished it."—Argonaut.

A STORY without much of a moral comes from Hungary. It seems that at a village dance the pastor of one of the churches was dancing with a comely young woman, and at the conclusion of the waltz he bent over and kissed her pretty lips. But the fair dancer had a lover who saw the affair, which, by the way, was entirely in public, and he thereupon knocked the indiscreet clergyman down. A friend of the latter at once struck the angry lover on the head with a stick and dropped him dead on the spot. There is a moral in this story somewhere, but it would require too much time to point it out.

It is sad to think that when Col. Robert G. Ingersoll leaves this "mysterious life to enter the equally mysterious hereafter," there will be no one in this world, which he loves so well, who can be called upon to speak at his grave with the same profound eloquence with which he has so often moved people to tears. Colonel Ingersoll's funeral oration at the bier of Mary Fiske was a garland of beautiful words wrought with an eloquence that was of the music of angels. It charmed the ear while it moved to tears many who have stood beside graves time and again without giving vent even to a sigh.—Telegram.

ARRANGEMENTS have been made for a public discussion in Cleveland, Ohio, March 21, 22, and 23, between B. F. Underwood and Dr. C. S. Bates, rector of the Euclid avenue Episcopal church of that city. Dr. Bates is one of the most popular clergymen of Cleveland, and the discussion promises to be one of much interest. The propositions which will form the basis of the debate are the following: 1. "Some of the teachings of Christianity are detrimental to the welfare of mankind." Underwood affirms. 2. "The Bible contains special revelations from God to man." Bates affirms. 3. "The miraculous is both possible and probable." Bates affirms.

THE Power of Religious Emotion.—The sun had already sunk in the west when the convict returned to his native village. During the many years of his confinement he had harbored but one idea—that of revenge. As he neared the old school house (which, by the way, he had made up his mind to fire) a bell from a distant spire began its slow and solemn peal. A feeling which the convict had not felt for many years filled his breast. He stood rooted to the spot, and tears, hot tears, moistened his cheeks. When the bell had ceased its tolling, he hastily wiped his eyes with the back of his calloused hand and exclaimed: "My heart is softened; I will not shed blood to-night—I will rob instead!"—Life.

THE following dispatch shows that the ecclesiastical tyrants are determined to exercise whatever power the present state of the law gives them, and that Liberals will recognize none too soon the fact that there is yet a tough battle for freedom to fight: "MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 29.—Axel Paulson and Rudolph Goetz, who skated a twenty-mile race on Sunday afternoon, were to-day arrested, and, with W. W. Wettelson, manager of the affair, fined $50 for violation of the Sunday ordinance. Several newspaper reporters were also arrested, but secured a suspension of sentence. This is the beginning of a war on Sunday amusements. The word has gone out that the theatres will be closed next Sunday."—Secular Thought.

POLYGAMY starts with the great advantage of the support of Revelation. For whereas (as all searchers of the scriptures are aware) the practice of polygamy is frequently recommended in the sacred writings, it is nowhere condemned, except (and then more by way of caution than of prohibition) in the single case of bishops, who, being usually elderly (and in those days invariably poor) men, were advised to content themselves with one wife. In fact, I take it, upon a calm and dispassionate view of the subject, that monogamy must be regarded as a politic concession made by the early Christianized Jews to the Pagan Romans. It was, in fact, a sort of give-and-take, or compromise. The Pagan Roman found himself with many gods but only one wife. The Christianized Jew had many wives but only one God. They "split the difference," as Artemus Ward would have said, and the result was "Christian marriage."—London Truth.

IMAGINE a popular preacher in a London pulpit, with a grave old gentleman sitting at the foot of it, waiting as it were, with a landing net for plagiarisms, and informing the congregation whenever he caught one. "That is Shylock's," he said at the third sentence; at the seventh, "That is Tillotson's." The preacher, who knew that there were plenty more to come, was in a pretty state; if he did it again he made up his mind to speak to the man. "That is Blair's," came out at the tenth sentence. "Fellow," said the preacher, leaning over the pulpit, "if you interrupt again you shall be turned out." The old gentleman looked round on the congregation with the same calm confidence of recognition as before, and, without moving a muscle of his countenance, observed, "That's his own."

AN interesting and instructive portrayal of an unsatisfied life was given at Boston last Sunday, in a lecture by George Chainey (formerly of San Francisco), from the text: "For there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Relating his religious experience, Mr. Chainey said he was first a Methodist minister, but becoming full of doubt he broadened his views and entered the Unitarian ministry. Soon he came to the point of Infidelity, and then went through Spiritualism, Theosophy, Rosicrucianism, hermetic philosophy, and esoteric culture, but the further he went in these lines the more unhappy he became, and his search for a new faith and peace brought him finally back to the good old way, and in his joyous relief he exclaimed, "I will go unto all the world and preach this gospel."—Palmer, Mass., Journal.

THE city of Jerusalem is growing in size and population at a remarkable rate. Its growth is all the more surprising because neither its situation nor its trade is favorable to an increase; it lies among a not very fertile group of mountains; it has next to no commerce, and it has no manufactures. Nevertheless, new buildings are rising daily; churches, gardens, and institutes of various kinds are filling up the formerly desolate neighborhood to the distance of half an hour's walk beyond the limits of the city. The Hebrews are to the front as builders. Their houses spring out of the ground like mushrooms—uniform, ugly, one-storied, plentifully supplied with windows, but with no manner of adornment. The Rothschilds have completed a new hospital. Close beside it there is a new Abyssinian church. The Russians are also great builders. They have erected a new church, consulate, lodging-houses for pilgrims of the orthodox national churches, and a hospital. Near to the Russian group stands the "German House," for German Roman Catholics, from the top of which the German and the papal flags float side by side. The Russians have also built a high tower upon the Mount of Olives, from whose summit the Mediterranean and the Dead seas can both be seen. The Greeks and Armenians are also busy builders, but they provide for the bodily rather than the religious demands of the pilgrims. The former build cafes and bazars, the latter set up shops.—Washington Post.

IN what other country than America could such an anecdote as the following be told? It is the most typically American story I heard in the United States, says Max O'Rell. It came from Chauncey Depew, it is said. But, for that matter, when a good story goes the round of the states, it is always put down to Mr. Depew, Mark Twain, or the late Artemus Ward. A new minister had been appointed in a little Kentucky town. No sooner had he taken possession of his cure than he set about ornamenting the church with stained-glass windows of gorgeous hues. This proceeding aroused the suspicions of several parishioners, who imagined that their new pastor was inclined to lead them to Rome. A meeting was called, and it was decided to send a deputation to the minister to ask him to explain his conduct and beg him to have the offending windows removed. The head of the deputation was an old man of Presbyterian proclivities, whose austerity was well known in the town. He opened fire by addressing the reverend gentleman thus: "We have waited upon you, sir, to beg that you will remove those painted windows from our church as soon as possible. We are simple folks, God's own light is good enough for us, and we don't want to have it shut out by all those images——" The worthy man had prepared a fine harangue and was going to give the minister the benefit of it all; but the latter, losing patience, thus interrupted him: "Excuse me, you seem to be taking high ground; who are you, may I ask?" "Who am I?" repeated the good old spoke man, "I am a meek and humble follower of Jesus, that's what I am, and —— you, who are you?"

THE STATUE TO GIORDANO BRUNO AT ROME.

A noble life-sized statue of Giordano Bruno is to be erected in May next in the Campo de Fiori at Rome, on the very spot where he was burnt alive by the order of the papal Inquisition on the 16th of February, 1600.

The completion of this undertaking, which has had the general support of the Liberals of Europe, has been delayed for several years by local opposition in Italy, but finally the consent of the Roman municipality has been obtained by an overwhelming majority, and the monument to the great proto-martyr of Freethought, modern science, and philosophy will be inaugurated in May with a becoming celebration.

We have been appointed for the United States of America upon the International Committee, and requested to assist in raising funds to secure this noble act of historic justice. Already $400 have been contributed through this Committee by Liberal Americans, but we desire to send a much larger sum, and have promised at least $1,000, which will be about one-tenth of the total cost.

The Committee will be pleased to have the number of subscribers as numerous as possible, so that subscriptions of $1 will be appropriate, though larger sums will be gladly received. All contributions will be publicly acknowledged and forwarded. The time is short, and necessity of immediate action is urged by the committee at Rome.

Please to subscribe and send at once to our treasurer, T. B. Wakeman, 93 Nassau street, New York city.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, } New York, Feb. 8, 1889.
40 WALL STREET,
T. B. WAKEMAN, ESQ., Treas., Bruno Monument Committee:
My Dear Sir: It gives me great pleasure to inclose my check for one hundred dollars ($100).

I shall never be quite satisfied until there is a monument to Bruno higher than the dome of St. Peter's.

Yours very truly, R. G. INGERSOLL.

The following compilation of facts and figures will interest those who are curious about the odd things of the old book. The Bible contains 66 books, 1889 chapters, 33,173 verses, 773,692 words, and 3,586,489 letters. The word "and" occurs 46,287 times, the word "Lord" 1855 times, "reverend" but once, "girl" but once—in the third chapter and third verse of Joel; the words "everlasting fire" but twice, and "everlasting punishment" but once. The middle verse is the eighth verse of the one hundred and eighteenth Psalm. The twenty-first verse of the seventh chapter of Ezra contains all the letters in the alphabet except the letter "j." The nineteenth chapter of Second Kings and the thirty-seventh chapter of Isaiah are alike. The longest verse is the ninth verse of the eighth chapter of Esther. The shortest is the thirty-fifth verse of the eleventh chapter of St. John, viz.: "Jesus wept." The eighth, fifteenth, twenty-first, and thirty-first verses of the one hundred and seventh Psalm are alike. There are no words of more than six syllables.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Liberalism on Coos Bay.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Thinking a few words from this out-of-the-way place would be of interest to your readers, I take this opportunity to write you. Since I wrote to FREETHOUGHT last summer some advancement has been made in the cause. Paul A. Smith stopped with us during the month of October; his lectures were well attended; he is a good speaker and a man of advanced ideas; he is a Spiritualist, but a rational one, taking no stock in orthodoxy of to-day.

This town has a Universalist church which Brother Smith dedicated to the use of humanity; eleven years before, while he was a preacher of that denomination. Many of his old associates are still living here; two or three have grown out of the old faith and have become Liberal; the others are standing just as he left them eleven years before. I had all I could do to get consent for him to occupy the church. It was crowded. Many said they came to see if he had changed in his views much. That lecture fixed it; he was accused of blasphemy and the church refused him for future use. So Masonic Hall was occupied. He always had good houses; spoke to places on the river and on Coos Bay, to full houses, and we hope he will come again.

The Liberals are looking anxiously for the coming of S. P. Putnam this coming summer. Many names have been added to our list since he was here last summer. I well remember his coming down the river in a small boat with the rain pouring down "like suds;" yet we had a good time, many coming in small boats in the rain. It is a hard rain that keeps a genuine Liberal from a meeting of that kind.

I will not give you a description of our Thomas Paine celebration held at Myrtle Point, as Brother P. O. Chilstrom has done that, only it was a good turn-out and a success.

I see by last FREETHOUGHT that the cause of Freethought has a new ally in N. F. Ravlin. I listened to Mr. Ravlin in San Diego over a year, nearly every Sunday. He is a Spiritualist, but also a rational one, taking no stock in frauds or the isms that have fastened themselves to so many Spiritualistic societies of California.

Your paper FREETHOUGHT grows better day by day. Although I am a Spiritualist, and have been for eighteen years, I like your paper for its rational views, its work for humanity, comprehensive and so easily understood. When the Golden Gate started I hoped that we would have a representative paper on this coast, but have been doomed to disappointment. It in no way compares with FREETHOUGHT. Fully two thirds of it is given up to "ads" of fraudulent mediums, talks on reincarnation, theosophy, obsession, faith cure, and "Oriental Band of Sun Angel Order of Light by Sadie," all of which benefit no man, but serve to disgust the inquirer.

Some Criticisms.

To the Editors of Freethought:

DEAR SIR: A friend has recently sent me several numbers of FREETHOUGHT, and I like it so well I want to express my appreciation; but I also want to find a little fault. The paper is alive all the way through, and Mr. Putnam's jottings are the brightest, breeziest ones I ever saw.

The paper is also, generally speaking, liberal, in the best sense of the word, though not liberal (or thoughtful) enough to extend its New Year's greetings to its Spiritualistic co-laborers and exchanges, some of which are certainly as truly liberal as itself.

As an individual Spiritualist I also want to protest against the idea of being patted on the back and taken into any "Secular" or other "Union" or on to any platform that is not "Liberal" and strong and broad enough to give a hearing to all the "cranks" in the world. I say if they are visionary or "imagine" they are "great reformers" when they are not, by all means invite them onto our platforms and give them a hearing in our publications, and then from the plenitude of our wisdom show them wherein they are wrong, and if we cannot do it alone let us invite the churches to come up and help.

They will be just as likely to help as they will be now to come out and hear us, for when they see us fighting all the "cranks" and irrepressible men and women who "imagine they are reformers," they will be sure to think we are on their side (I wouldn't like to say what I should think about it) and they will come out to help, and then we shall get them sure.

As to the word Infidel being "expunged from our vocabulary," I don't see any necessity for it. It hasn't meant anything for a long time past more than a disposition to give the poor bread instead of tracts.

I don't see what kind of people "Liberal" can have been among to have found the word Infidel so unpopular. I have found it a great deal more popular than Liberal, principally, as I think, because it has a little backbone in it, and isn't so afraid of not being "respectable."

However, it makes little difference to me what name the organization in which I work carries. It is the thing itself, and not the name, of which I am proud or ashamed; and I readily admit as a Spiritualist that we are not a success as an organization, and if the Secular Union or any other organization can show us how to be a success in that particular, as we are in others, or can "extend the hand of fellowship" in such a way as to put us on an equal footing with themselves, without any sneers regarding us as a people, or regarding our "theories" (facts), I for one should be glad to co-operate with them, but I am quite certain that the mass of Spiritualists are too Liberal to co-operate successfully with such illiberal liberals as "A Liberal" unless he can extend the dimensions of his platform, which I for one will be happy to have him do. Cordially and sincerely yours,

MARY E. PRESTON.

Unfairness Toward Spiritualists.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Many of our Liberal papers (or rather Materialistic) do not treat our Spiritualistic friends with fairness and due respect. Whenever they have occasion to mention Spiritualism or its philosophy it is done with a sneer and overwise knowledge, ridicule, and sarcasm. Fools, lunatics, ghost-hunters, sky-pilots, etc., may sound smart and wise to some folks, but it will never help to spread Freethought, nor liberate the minds of the people. So-called cranky and loony Spiritualism has done more in the last thirty years to free the people from priestcraft and its domination than all other theories or systems of thought combined. Many of our best scholars and thinkers of the age are its adherents. Spiritualism is not and cannot be a religion, nor simply a belief, but a scientific truth in harmony with natural law and the eternal order of things. Yours,

Brodhead, Wis.

E. P. HASSINGER.

From Oregon.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Permit me to express my great satisfaction at the cheering condition of the Liberal cause, as shown by the organization of the California State Liberal Union. No one but a lonely resident in an orthodox neighborhood can realize the far-spreading influence of these Secular organizations. The Silverton Secular Union has cooled the fires of hell around me very much, and now comes another cool stream of salvation from away off in California, and the tone of the local church bigots is very sensibly modified. "Gloria in excelsis."

I should be very sorry, however, to believe that Mr. Thomas Curtis's "compulsory education" resolution was any more than a "josh" run on the Union to see how Liberals stood on the question. And I cannot believe that any well informed Liberal would be in earnest in so "stultifying all the declarations previously made by the convention in favor of equal rights and impartial liberty." I prefer to think that Messrs Curtis and Arper were "just a funnin'." I am also pleased that Mr. Putnam was made president.

We had a little joke on Mr. Putnam when he was first here, that will bear telling, although it should have been seen to be appreciated.

While at Stayton Mr. Putnam and half a dozen others, including yours, etc., were in the hotel parlor, and there came in a long characteristic specimen of a Campbellite preacher, evidently on hostile mission bent. Argument soon grew promiscuous and lively. To the evident surprise of the "divine," the "Infidel" did not wither away before the august majesty of his presence, and presently, as his kind are wont to do, the preacher made some idiotic remark, and Putnam laughed. "Humph!" snorted the preacher, "any fool can laugh;" and then we all laughed except the preacher.

A little Secularism is being gotten in before the people here through the debating clubs. The ever ubiquitous "whisky question" furnishes occasional opportunity; and last Saturday night the question, "Resolved, That the signs of the times indicate the downfall of the government," gave yours, etc., a chance to show, as well as he could in ten minutes, the danger of such downfall through the operations of the "God-in-the-Constitution" party and its allies. The people listened with great attention, and the opponent speakers ventured hardly a criticism; and I took two orders for Paine's "Age of Reason" that night. Another result will probably accrue, which is, that yours, etc., will be booked to debate against the crowd, at a neighboring club, the question, "Resolved, That church property should be exempt from taxation." I am to take the negative, of course, and have I don't know how many opponents. Perhaps there is a big job on hand, but I will do as the boy said by the nest of hornets, if I can't "take" them I'll "devil 'em awhile anyhow." Respectfully.

F. S. MATTESON.

Aumsville, Or.

Braden in Boise City.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The champion of free grace and hell-fire has been here, the spirit of inquiry is extinct, the questioner has been silenced, and orthodoxy is triumphant! Oh, yes! We're cast adrift in a very small boat, without sail or rudder; the captain has been killed, the first and second mates are in irons, the log-book is overboard; we are surrounded by soul-hungry sharks and the old gospel tub is almost out of sight, with sails spread for the kingdom.

We have heard fanatics talk on their pet subject before, but Braden takes the cake. He can utter more lies to the square inch of manuscript than could Munchausen to the square mile of territory, and it is very apparent to the observer that the churl knows he is a liar from the vindictiveness of his assertions. He endeavors to overcome opposition by calling his opponents hard names and answers the inquirer by epithets and abuse. For example, he asserted that the "Infidel was either a keeper or a frequenter of bagnios, a gambler, or the proprietor of gambling halls." This is contrary to what all parties assert who know anything of the matter. If the statistics could be taken it would be found that gamblers are the most superstitious class on earth, even going so far as to induce some old hag to get a handful of earth (at midnight) from some new-made grave in order to "hoodoo" their opponents at the card table. It was amusing to hear Braden's assertion in this town, where there are more than one of the depraved class of women who, in order to secure a quasi-respectability, have united with the church; and, do not forget it, their money is just as acceptable to Yahveh as was the sacrifice of virgin purity to him or his brutal soldiers in ancient days. If the church wants to be vindicated and win over sensible people to its support, it should send forth a champion imbued with some of the instincts of a gentleman.

He read a question (which he claims to have received from some one in this town) in regard to the mother of Christ. It is my firm belief that said question is some of his stock-in-trade, to be produced on any and all occasions. It was an indecent question, and it took an indecent man to read it to a congregation of average men and women. I shall not believe the question was received by him at this or any other place on his unsupported say so. He asserted that Infidels search the "holy scriptures" only to gather up the filth—buzzards gathering carrion—while the "Christian" was a beautiful humming-bird gathering honey! Why is the filth and the carrion and all the rot and abomination there, O champion of a pure deity? I am afraid you might be shot for an ungainly dodo which could neither run nor fly, and which is extinct, as your species is also rapidly becoming. Humming-bird Braden! O immaculate conception! When he is making some of his wildest assertions he will halt to inform the audience, "I've held the chair in this college," "I've been principal of that school," "I've had thirty years' experience," and I'm somebody, and that does settle it. Well, the bigots of the town drank in his sewage as if it were nectar—that is, some of them; but with the best church people I am inclined to think he rather overdid his side of the question. With some I know such to be the case, and I find more Freethinkers since he was here than before. At least they are more outspoken. The Adventists went with him swimmingly until he abused them most outrageously on the Sunday question.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - MARCH 16, 1889

"If Freethought hasn't run into free love in New England, then I don't know what I'm talking about."—Rev. Samuel Jones.

That is just it, Mr. Jones. You don't know what you are talking about; and what is worse, your ignorance is invincible.

THE Presbyterians of Carpenteria, Los Angeles county, are raising a building fund for a chapel. One method adopted is to give to it the money received for eggs laid on one Sabbath in each month. The projectors of this scheme are not troubled with the question whether or not the laying of eggs on Sunday is a desecration of the day. They rest in the comfortable assurance that if there is any sin connected with it, the responsibility is on the hen.

WE should judge that the new Unitarian church at Spokane Falls, Wash., under the pastoral charge of the Rev. Mr. Wheelock, has wide doors. According to its declaration, it recognizes "no Atheism but rascality and no Infidelity but the violation of the golden rule." It regards divine providence as identical with the order of the universe and welcomes to its fellowship all who desire to associate for the promotion of moral culture and the well-being of mankind.

THE new president has laid down a strict rule that there shall be no Sunday business transacted at the White House. He inaugurated family worship last Sunday. His postmaster-general, John Wanamaker, who is also a Presbyterian, conducted a Sunday-school and Bible class in Philadelphia. From the outlook now, if the Blair Sunday bill ever reaches the president he will sign it with both hands. Meanwhile Mr. Wanamaker will make it sultry for Freethought literature in the mails if he ever gets a chance.

THE article in this issue by W. S. Bush, Esq., is timely and will be of interest to many readers, especially those of Washington. The constitutional election of that coming state will be held in May. It is a fitting time to cast aside partisanship, and vote only for men who are friends of equal rights, of equal taxation, of a Secular constitution; friends of labor, and men who can neither be bought nor bribed by corporations. Mr. Bush, now of Seattle, was formerly in the law office of Colonel Ingersoll at Washington, D. C.

THIS is the latest reported utterance of the Rev. Samuel Jones, now doing his master's work in San Francisco. "Ingersoll is a blatant, blab-tongued fool. Why, a fly can sit on his nose and kick him in both eyes and he wouldn't know it. Bob has no brains, for he can see through a gimlet hole with both eyes at once. Agnostics an' fools—if they want to be so, let 'em set and fan themselves with their ears." It is really becoming necessary that some one should throw a shovelful of ashes over Mr. Jones, and carry him out on two chips.

"RELIGION and the drama may be becoming intertwined, but Christianity and the drama are not and never can. The drama is part and parcel of the world, and the Christian is commanded to 'love not the world, neither the things that are in the world; if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him.'"—Religious Exchange.

We read in holy writ that God himself so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son for it, and the son so loved the world that he gave his life to redeem it. We are, furthermore, enjoined to be perfect as the father in heaven is perfect. If man is to be as God, and if God loves the world, how can man leave the world outside his affections? Is it possible that there can be inconsistencies in religion?

NEWS AND NOTES.

Grass Valley is a prosperous mining town of old standing. The country round about is rich in ore, and the deeper the hammer penetrates the earth the more wealth is discovered. There are extensive mills, and the iron machineries crush the quartz with giant hands, ever busy and pounding with the relentlessness of fate. Enormous quantities of gold have been taken from the yellow bosom of the hills, and still the glittering stream rolls on. There is also a good farming country near Grass Valley and fertile fruit lands. Beautiful sceneries stretch away, pine groves, rocky mounds, verdant vales, and, beyond, the snowy Sierras. The city has the air of active growth.

Mr. and Mrs. Van Hoeter are among our first generous allies at this place. They placed "Van's Opera House" at the service of the lecturer, and so the flag will fly, storm or shine. These friends do not place their light under a bushel. It shines for all, and in their happy home on the hill the Secular Pilgrim has a royal welcome.

Taking all things into consideration, the attendance at the lectures was favorable. There is a large orthodox element in Grass Valley. There is a Catholic institution which receives ten thousand dollars a year from the state. The Cornishmen at the mines are mostly of the Methodist persuasion and very religious. However, the mountain air breathes liberty, and there are enough to give vital power to Freethought.

Quite a number of signatures were received for the State Liberal Union, and thus a nucleus is formed for permanent work.

Wednesday morning—glittering sun and sapphire skies being the order of the day—Henry Hanssen, with his snug little team and cheery presence, helped me to spend the day "visiting," as we used to call it "down in New England." The first home we struck, redolent of flowers, and carpets of green and budding trees, was Thos. Lee's, with his bright Infidel wife and children, and boys all in the pioneer ranks, learning in the school of nature the sweetest lessons of life. Round the circling hills, in a broad winding valley, we next arrive at the cosy cottage of Mr. and Mrs. Russel, where the little baby of three months is lord of all he surveys. The last time I was here Mr. Russel was on a sick-bed, but now he greets the sun with the music of health. A pleasant hour I spent with these Liberal friends. Then, bowling away over the intricate roads, we came to Hanssen's own ranch close by the Idaho mine, where my comrade works, puts in his leisure time on his homestead, and when the spirit moves, takes the pen in hand and expresses the music and philosophy of life. Thus, with his children about him, he mingles the darkness below with the sunshine above.

We stop at the New Eureka, where Mr. Weldon is working, with fair prospects of a rich vein. He is working, I believe, under the guidance of the spirits, but for all that, his "faith" has an element of common sense.

Striking across country, we reach the vineyards of our rightly-named veteran, Thomas Paine, who has the spirit of the glorious hero in his advancing age. He was chairman of my lectures. Though over seventy years of age, he retains the fire of youth, and is ready for frontier service still.

Our stalwart Liberal, H. G. Leeman, was hard at work when we found him. With unflinching toil he wins the life of independence, and has no favors to ask of king or priest.

The golden sunshine was over all the hills when our day's journey was ended, but it was a journey that would give inspiration for labor and for hope.

All the way from Chicago via England and "round the world," I find Geo. A. Gymer a strenuous and broad Freethinker and Spiritualist. In reply to misleading statements, he has written some excellent articles on Freethinking in the Grass Valley "Evening Telegram." He intends to make Grass Valley his home, and will be a valuable supporter hereafter.

George A. Cooper and others came from beyond Nevada City and gave good cheer to my labors.

Mr. Cossler L. Horton, whom friend McCowen of Ukiah will recognize as a soldier of Freethought, H. C. Zahlf, and others are of the guard that will never fall back.

Mrs. Brady and professor Adams furnished excellent music for the lectures, for which they have the thanks of our Liberal friends.

Grass Valley is not all that I wish, but there is light and warmth amidst its difficulties, and so the promise shines and the welcome glows, and I expect to again do battle along these freighted hills. The gold of Freethought will shine forth only by patience and hard blows.

The flag floats at Sacramento rain or shine. With such good friends as N. D. Goodell, R. Butterfield, P. Haseler, Thos. Owen Davies, there will always be "A midnight darkness changing into gray."

The rain simply poured on Sunday evening, but it was such a good thing that we had no complaints to make. About a hundred were out, and so I am not discouraged. "The Sunday and the Sabbath" was the subject of my discourse. The Turners here are helping the cause of Freethought, and heartily join hands. Mr. Butterfield addressed their meeting Wednesday last and was received with warm congratulations, and substantial aid was given. This union of our forces is of the highest importance, and will exert a splendid influence for Secular government.

I went on Sunday morning to the Unitarian church. Rev. Mr. Massey is doing good, strong work here, and I rejoice that this Liberal form of religion is laboring so effectively for broad and generous ideas of man and his destiny. Mr. Massey gave a Temperance discourse, and it was full of sound sense. He does not believe much in legislation, although he recognizes its value when not the result of fanaticism. He is more in favor of regulation than prohibition. He recognizes that the use of alcohol is not altogether injurious, but has its medical benefits. To drink is not in itself a sin, as St. Paul declares. Saloons are not a cause, but effect. The cause of so much misery is deeper, the ignorance of the people, and mainly the desire to have the advantages of life without doing honest work to attain them. Sumptuary laws are unwise and any interference with personal liberty is unjustifiable. The strongest instrumentality against intemperance is education, knowledge, and the bracing atmosphere of cultivated faculties. If all those in favor of temperance would take the position of Mr. Massey, much more would be accomplished for genuine reform. Mr. Massey is a man of earnest convictions, of learning and literary power, and his work in Sacramento is of the highest order.

I had the pleasure after Sunday evening's lecture of attending a session of the Critic Club at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Judge Armstrong, where there was indeed a "feast of reason and a flow of soul." Mrs. Armstrong is a delightful hostess, and the vivacity of her nature leaves no one an excuse for dullness. The Critic Club is composed of choice spirits, and art, literature, philosophy, and science scintillate in a brilliant social atmosphere. The Capital of California does not lack for elegance and culture.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

LOCAL LIBERAL SOCIETIES.

The following resolutions were passed unanimously at the late convention of the California State Liberal Union:

"The success of Liberalism depends on work, both destructive and constructive; on plucking out the weeds of error, and planting and cultivating the germs of truth; on not only demolishing the temples of darkness and superstition, but also on the rearing in their places of more beautiful temples of liberty and light.

"We urge upon all lovers of true liberty the importance of assembling themselves together for lectures, for reading, science classes, and ethical associations, and in every way possible cultivating the intellect and filling the minds of the people with correct knowledge."

All great movements, religious, political, or social, have won success by thorough organization. This is in accord with a law of nature. Nature is structural. For the permanence and healthful efficiency of the California State Liberal Union, local societies must be organized and maintained. These local organizations will bring together men and women of Liberal thought in every community. These are more than are now suspected, but they are unassociated, and, so far, ineffectual. Association will encourage the timid, restrain the violent, harmonize extremes, and develop wisdom.

The watchwords of Freethought are liberty, reason, science; liberty our protection; reason our course; science the ship on which we voyage. These watchwords proclaim clearly to the world our purposes. "I have taken all learning for my province," said Lord Bacon nobly; and no less must be the aim of the Liberal movement. It is a reaction against the falsity of the old. It must embrace the whole truth of the new to succeed and endure. We cry out against the inanities and falsities of the churches, and we have something to substitute.

Man is a many-sided creature, and on the more sides we touch him strongly, the more strongly we shall hold him. He loves philosophy, politics, science, art, work, pleasure, all in turn, or, when possible, in combination. He is a social creature, and likes to get his knowledge and his pleasures in company with his fellows.

Liberal societies having these purposes in view have then to consider methods:

1. NAME.—It may be an Ethical Society, as that of Felix Adler, in New York, or William Salter, in Chicago, or a Church of Humanity, or a Liberal Society, or Club. The name does not so much matter if the purpose is clear.

2. OFFICERS.—The usual President, Secretary, and Treasurer, of course; a Board of Directors or Trustees, and always, when practicable, a Chief Lecturer or Teacher, a man of ability and education, who shall give his whole time and energy to the work, and be liberally supported in it. This is essential to permanent success. Liberalism rejects the churches. It must substitute something equally strong and stronger than their methods to attract and hold humanity. In every community the church has its paid representatives to maintain its teachings and manage its affairs. Liberalism must do the same if it would compete successfully with the church. That is a plain business principle. Continuity of supervision and incessant attention to detail is essential to the success of any enterprise. There is no danger that this Chief Teacher will confine right liberty of thought or bar the wheels of progress. He will not be appointed by divine ordination, but elected by human suffrage, which can always determine the benefit of his services.

3. MEETINGS.—Sunday is our day of greatest leisure. We want it hampered by no Sunday laws of enforced observances and prohibitions of enjoyment, but by common present and probably future consent, ordinary business will be then wholly or partially suspended. It seems the most convenient day for public meeting in some hall or appropriate place. The exercises should be popular, attractive, and interesting: music, the best procurable, instrumental and vocal; readings or recitations from the great thinkers, poets, writers; an address on some topic, religious, moral, social, literary, scientific, by the chief teacher or an invited lecturer. Such might be a program that would instruct the intellect and please the sense. The meetings would also occasion mutual knowledge, pleasant friendships, common action, beneficent to the individual and to the community. They should be weekly, when practicable, for the sake of continuity of impression upon the community. In connection with them classes might be organized for the instruction of children and young people in the true history of religion and the principles of liberal thought and moral action.

4. GENERAL WORK.—Whatever affects the welfare of the community. With organized classes for literary, scientific, or artistic instruction, debating clubs, etc., the society can bring its force to bear most strongly upon the educational and intellectual broadening of its members, and it undoubtedly will. Organized sub-societies of men and women may study and act upon the social and moral questions of the day—poverty, disease, vice, labor, household living, charity, the innumerable social questions which daily demand intelligent adjustment. Other activities better experience will suggest.

It may be said that this proposed plan of organization and method closely follows that of the church, and that is largely true. By carefully studying the wants of humanity the church learned for a time to satisfy them. An organization that purposes to take her place has a perfect right to profit by her experience. Fas est et ab hoste doceri—it is well to learn even of an enemy. "To know the best thoughts of the best minds," said Matthew Arnold, "is the best education." To use the best methods of the past, with the intelligence of the present, will insure a successful future.

Now for the application of these remarks. The Liberals of San Francisco and vicinity have at present an opportunity to organize a society after the methods above outlined. Of course the first necessity is a speaker and worker who will devote his time and strength to the building up of the organization. Fortunately such a one is at hand in the person of Prof. Herbert Miller, a young man of the broadest education, of liberal mind, and with an earnest enthusiasm for the new movement. Like many other reformers, Professor Miller has passed from orthodoxy to so-called liberal Christianity, or Unitarianism, and thence to science and Freethought. If his experience as an Episcopal preacher was of no value to him mentally, it gave him at least a thorough knowledge of the methods of organization, and that knowledge he is anxious to apply where it will do good instead of harm.

The time to improve an opportunity is when it presents itself. A meeting is called next Sunday evening, March 17, at Crusaders' Hall, 909½ Market street, at 7.30 o'clock, to consider the important question of a permanent Liberal organization, and all friends of the movement are asked to attend.

A FOOL AND HIS POLLY.

The Chronicle one day last week remarked, referring to the Rev. Samuel Jones:

"It is gratifying to observe that the tendency is not very strong in San Francisco to mistake slang and bad grammar for religion. The general impression of the outside world favors the idea that society in our city is underdone, not to say raw; but the ill success of those who try to pass off noise and rowdiness for something better seems to point conclusively to the existence of a more correct tone and better taste than some of our censors can boast."

If would be gratifying if the implication of the Chronicle were correct—that the people of San Francisco do not patronize the Rev. Samuel Jones—but the fact is that two or three thousand persons listen to him daily, and applaud his vicious, untruthful, and often idiotic utterances. Why should any sensible or intelligent human being clap his hands when such a statement as the following is made? It is from Mr. Jones's last Sunday sermon:

"Man is not a sinner because he is an Infidel, but he is an Infidel because he is a sinner. If he will quit sinning he will quit doubting as naturally as a man eats."

As nearly as we can gather from Mr. Jones's rambling discourse, he uses sin as a synonym for immorality, dishonesty, and intemperance, and therefore the words quoted are equivalent to saying that all unbelievers are immoral, dishonest, or intemperate—which is a lie on the face of it.

The next sentence declares that when a man quits sinning he quits doubting. How would that statement apply to the great Freethinkers of the world? How would it apply to Colonel Ingersoll? How to Ralph Waldo Emerson, to Theodore Parker, to James Parton, or Herbert Spencer—men who have exemplified all the virtues known to the purest code of morals, and yet have rejected Christianity as untruthful? Compare the lives of these men with the lives of Christians, of preachers, of priests, bishops, and popes.

It is evident that Mr. Jones gets his "facts" from his brother preachers and repeats them without pausing to think whether there is any foundation for them or not. But there is little to be gained by replying to "Sam" Jones—much less by abusing him. As the psalmist observed, "though thou bray a fool in a mortar yet will not his foolishness depart from him."

A PREACHER ON CHURCH, STATE, AND DIVORCE.

When a minister talks sense we take pleasure in quoting him, and are therefore pleased to lay before our readers the words of the Rev. Dr. Harcourt as reported by the Chronicle from his last Sunday sermon. Said Mr. Harcourt: "The laws of the church and the laws of the state are not co-ordinate or identical, and I do not believe as some do that facility of divorce, especially when accompanied by the liberty of remarriage, will tend to lower the moral tone of society. I believe as John Milton said, that 'honest liberty is the greatest foe of dishonest license.' The state, therefore, does well to make provision for the well being of its subjects."

After speaking of the dangers and the degradations that grow out of a united church and state, he dwelt at length upon the causes for which a divorce may and should be granted: "Adultery, extreme cruelty, willful desertion, willful neglect, habitual intemperance, and conviction of felony. The popular cry is heard on all sides of the great evils of divorce. It is about time for us to look at the many evils of the other side. There is a bondage that is often worse than death. Emancipation from this is godlike. What I am astonished at is not that so many married people get along so poorly, but that under all the circumstances they get along so well."

Mr. Harcourt is evidently one of those preachers who, while not always right, are still willing to admit that the majority of questions have two sides.

Mr. Putnam will be at Fresno Flats, Grub Gulch, and vicinity the first week in June. About the middle of June he will begin his Oregon trip, taking in Silverton, Canby, Molalla, Hillsboro, Shed's, etc. About the third week in July he will be in Coos county, Or.

Those desiring lectures will please write at their earliest convenience, addressing this office.

A CANADIAN legislator has offered a novel method of settling the question of annexation of the dominion to the United States. He has given notice that he will, at the earliest opportunity, move the adoption of resolutions by the Dominion Parliament looking to the annexation of the New England states to the Dominion of Canada. His resolution recites that the experiment of a republican government has proved a failure, and that there are strong indications that a dissolution of the Union is imminent, to be followed by the spread of Anarchy in the United States, and therefore that Canada will welcome such of the New England states as wish to return to their allegiance to the crown of Great Britain. With the Eastern states annexed to the dominion the capitulation of the rest of the country can be only a matter of time; but when New England joins Canada we may expect to see China annex California.

In some respects Japan sets this country an example worthy of emulation. Viscount Mori, the minister of education, declared, not long ago, his disbelief in the national gods, and forbade the teachings of religion in public schools. Meanwhile the Congress of the United States has just been asked to so amend our Constitution as to provide for the teaching of the principles of the Christian religion. It is true that Mori was assassinated by a Shintoo fanatic, but he died a brave man's death. America should call upon some representative man to invoke a similar immortality by denying our national fetich and opposing superstition in the schools. It is safe to say, however, that our politicians are not that kind of men.

FIRE by religious enthusiasm, Mrs. Pauline King, a middle-aged colored woman, of Springfield, Ill., has just finished a forty-days' fast. She had a vision in the latter part of January, during which she was ordered by the Almighty to abstain from food for two-score days. Now that the fast is ended Mrs. King says she is going forth as an evangelist, to which work she has received a "call." Providence should now have the presence of mind to give Mrs. King another vision and impose upon her about forty years of silence. But things of that kind never happen. The mouths of fanatics are invariably "opened."

THERE are about half a dozen religious "charitable" institutions in the District of Columbia supported by public appropriations. Inquiry has recently been made as to the drawing of the color line by these institutions, and it is found that some of them refuse to receive colored orphans. Here is a good chance for the state to assert itself. The government knows no distinctions based upon "race, color, or previous condition of servitude," and neither should any institution which it supports. The state should settle the matter by withdrawing its support. The institutions would then be at liberty to receive or reject anyone they chose.

THE Freethinkers' Magazine for March contains excellent likenesses of the Board of Directors of the American Secular Union—Judge R. B. Westbrook, president; E. A. Stevens, secretary; Otto Wettstein, treasurer; Mrs. M. A. Freeman, chairman of the Finance Committee, and E. B. Foote, Jr., of the Executive Committee. The magazine contains a large amount of valuable reading matter. Mr. Green has placed a number of copies on sale at this office at 25 cents each.

WE have three little leaflets that will do good by circulation. They are: 1. "Nameless," a poem by Voltairine de Cleyre; 2. "Two Creeds," the Catholic and the Cathartic, the latter creed being an amusing parody on the former; 3. "The Theft of Girard College," setting forth briefly the provisions of Girard's will touching sectarian teaching, and showing how those provisions have been violated. Any of these leaflets, 10 cents per dozen; 50 cents per hundred.

OBSERVATIONS.

Advices from the interior of the state inform me that Professor Seymour is making himself unpopular in religious circles. The professor carries with him a variety of skulls and other human remains, along with charts showing the effect of tobacco and red-eye on the popular anatomy, and when he spreads these out before the multitude and dilates upon them in a deep bass voice, his hearers are visibly affected. The professor has likewise made some phrenological observations and is a physiognomist to a great extent. He gives character readings at his lectures, and says that when he gets his hands on a man's head or smells his breath, he knows about how much truth it is safe to tell about him. The cause of phrenological accuracy is often damaged by some bad man coming to the anxious seat to have his head felt of. In such cases if the professor sticks to science he is in danger of being shot at. If he doesn't tell the truth the subject is likely to denounce him as a fraud, and he therefore has to go ahead in a general way, using words which arouse the subject's admiration, though they may not get home on the intellect. His favorite victim is the local preacher, or pious citizen, and he hasn't any consideration for the weaknesses of either. I am daily expecting to hear complaints from them, but if they let him have their churches to talk Freethought and science in, under the thin disguise of phrenology and temperance, it seems to me that the joke is on them.

I derived much pleasure last Sunday evening from attending a meeting of the San Francisco Turn Verein, of which I am a member. The occasion was a "Schau-turnen," or exhibition, by the active boys, girls, and young men belonging to the organization. The reason why I take so much interest in the Turners is because they are all Freethinkers. They represent the idea of a sound mind in a sound body. About thirty-five boys, the oldest possibly fourteen, every one of them as straight as a picket, as they say in New England, gave an exhibition of juvenile activity that awoke my admiration at once. The little shavers posed, inverted themselves, pyramided, and evolved like professionals. Even the little tots of girls swung light clubs with the rhythm of a song. I could not help comparing this exhibition with the ordinary Sunday-school, where the children learn the old lies, and repeat like parrots the twaddle about Joseph and Jesus and the holy old sinners of Bible days.

The young men vaulted and tumbled, and put heavy weights about with metrical precision, and sang noble songs, Conrad Flach, the instructor in gymnastics, looking on the while with justifiable pride. Secretary Lemme, of the State Liberal Union, wore the badge of committee, as did also Mr. Schroeder, Henry Maret, and Joseph Schweitzer, whose names mingle in the subscription list of FREETHOUGHT. And every Turner had a wife or mother, or sister, or schatz present, who gave the kind of applause that is worth winning. The affair ended, of course, with a grand ball. The best performers of the evening received prizes, and will go to Cincinnati to compete in the games of the North American Turnerbund.

Eminence as a musician is a precarious thing. More than sixty years ago, when the Marquis de Lafayette revisited America, a boy named Charles Snyder sang before him and astonished that patriot with his wonderful voice. Many years later the Marquis heard the same singer at the Royal Opera House in Paris, and gave him a lyre set with diamonds. From Paris Snyder went to Milan, Naples, Venice, Florence, and Rome, singing under the stage name of Henry Ashton, and achieving wealth and fame. An American manager heard of him, and went to Europe to listen to his voice, the result of which was that Ashton came to America under a three years' contract. Here he sang for a long time with Jenny Lind the Swedish Nightingale, but suddenly he disappeared from the stage and was heard of no more.

The other day an old man of three score and fifteen came into FREETHOUGHT office, and when he had recovered his breath said that he was Charles Snyder, of Oakland. Somebody had kindly sent FREETHOUGHT to him during the past year. He admired it greatly, though unable to pay for it, and he wanted it continued while he lived, which he did not expect would be many months. Old age was pulling him down, and asthmatic consumption helping it along. Mr. Snyder observed that the time had been when he had more money than he knew what to do with. He earned it fast and banked it. This led to the story that he was Henry Ashton, Jenny Lind's great tenor. "I had forty thousand dollars in the bank," said the old man, "but the bank broke and I lost it all. I had a voice like a silver bell, so clear and strong that I often surprised myself with my own music. A cold contracted at Cincinnati grew into typhoid pneumonia, and neither my health nor my voice ever came back to me."

Mr. Snyder was also a good pianist, but a sore on the inside of his hand left that member contracted and half useless, so that he could not play at all. Except for a pair of bright eyes shining from a face drawn sharp with consumption, there are small remnants of life left in his once active body. However, his mind is clear and his speech intelligent, though his voice is muffled and limbs feeble. He lives in an attic room of the Sunnyside House, in Oakland, and subsists on the offerings of charity.

I gave Mr. Snyder a cup of coffee from the café concealed under the editorial desk, and he ate with fortitude a small cake which our novelist Lilian had learned to make at the cooking school. He then went upon his way refreshed and cheered. In years to come, when my performances upon the flute are forgotten, I may need a kindly hand myself, and I like to cast my bread upon the waters.

I have just received from Brother H. L. Green, editor of the Freethinkers' Magazine, a cordial invitation to forward a good photograph of myself for publication in his monthly. There are reasons why I cannot accede to this request. Though born of poor but respectable parents—whose qualities, particularly the former, I have inherited in a marked degree—I was gifted at birth with great personal beauty, my only consolation for not having been born wealthy. It was not my choice to be created thus, but the selection was made for me, and it is too late now to go behind the decision of the electors. I do not like the notion of entrusting the portrayal of my countenance to the hands of an engraver. No camera has ever been able to do me full justice, and the highest effort of the photographer has produced at best but a mere "study," as it were. The engraver cannot finish the portrait. For the completed work the great public must refer back to the original, to be found at 504 Kearny street, top floor, a young man with red whiskers, smoking a short pipe, and giving his best thought to the world for a salary of one dollar per diem.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Abundant rains have assured good crops in California.—John F. Swift, of this state, will represent the present administration in Japan.—The Citizen's ticket won in Oakland last Monday, and Glascock was elected mayor.—San Diego and Los Angeles, according to reports, have been half depopulated by the rush to the Santa Clara gold fields in Lower California, but the rush has collapsed, and the deluded gold seekers are already returning.—Salvationist Holmes, in jail at Sacramento for the crime of incest, is said to be trying to starve himself to death. There is little hope that he will succeed in the laudable endeavor.—There is so much dissension in the ranks of the patriotic Irishmen of San Francisco, that St. Patrick's day will be celebrated by three different divisions of Hibernians.—If all the appropriation bills passed by the California legislature are signed by the governor the citizens of this state will be taxed some $5,000,000 in the next two years, exclusive of school tax.—Four men are under arrest at Bakersfield, under suspicion of being the Pixley train robbers.

The queen has approved the appointment of Sir Julian Pauncefote to be British minister to the United States in place of Lord Sackville West, recalled.—The estate of the late Isaiah Williamson, of Philadelphia, amounts to between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000, exclusive of the $2,500,000 for a mechanical school. The money is willed to the decedent's relatives.—Chinese residents of Milwaukee, Wis., have been mobbed, and if the charges against them are true hanging is too good for them. The mongolian wretches are accused of debauching boys and girls.—The forty-second annual report of the board of emigration commissioners shows in substance that during the year 1888 the total number of passengers from all foreign ports landed in Castle Garden, New York, was 370,822 (237,856 males and 132,966 females). The nationalities chiefly represented were: Irish, 44,300; English, 38,355; German, 78,145; Russian, 33,052; Swedish, 37,934; Italian, 43,927.—John Ericsson, the great naval inventor, died at New York last week, in his 86th year.—Six thousand weavers struck for higher wages at Fall River, Massachusetts, last Monday.—The prison officials of New York are experimenting with electric methods for the execution of criminals.—An attempt was made on Sunday to burn out a party of thirty Italian laborers employed at the West Troy, N.Y., arsenal.—Robert Garrett, the demented railroad millionaire, is on his way to Mexico with much improved health.—A lot of new war ships are to be built for the American navy.—Congressman Townshend, of Illinois, died last week.

It is not safe to believe any of the war "news" from Samoa. There is no reason to believe that any fighting has been done between American and German men-of-war, and the Nipsic still floats.—A German paper has been suppressed at Bremen for attacking Bismarck.—Henry George is in England, meeting with enthusiastic receptions.—Several French legislators will be prosecuted for their connection with the patriotic league.—The warfare between the peasantry and landlords of Ireland was reopened March 11 with bloody results. While Creach, a county Clare landlord, and his sister, were driving to church, they were ambushed and fired upon by unknown persons. Both were badly wounded.

SAFEGUARDS OF THE SUFFRAGE.

Washington Gladden discusses, in the February Century, the above topic. He says the first question is to "determine who shall vote." That the first condition of popular government is education. That as a large proportion of the foreigners who emigrate here are ignorant of the country and its laws, the number of ignorant voters is increasing. That they, and the millions of ignorant negroes who vote, have reduced the average capacity of the voter, so that "the average American citizen is not a proper person to exercise the suffrage." Tested by the same rule of thumb, the average morals of the American citizen might be said to be lowered, so that he is not a proper person to belong to a church. Or, if the morals of Christian ministers is to be scaled by a similar rule, the average might raise some doubt as to their capacity for political rights. For years, in many of the states, ministers were debarred from office because of their unfitness to deal with political matters. The serious question is whether their admission to active politics has not reduced the intelligence of the average voter.

Mr. Gladden then turns to the suppression of the negro vote in the South, and considers it "one of the natural consequences of extending the suffrage to people who are unfit to vote." He brushes aside the results of the war so far as they were in favor of human freedom. When it closed, the rebel element refused to vote or hold office in the Southern states, because the colored man was held their equal in rights, and they hated the rule of the northern man who recognized that principle of law and worked in good faith to build up free states in the South. In the reconstruction of the Southern States, provision was made for free public schools. Northern aid was also generously tendered to educate the southern colored people. When the ultra Southern element determined to control the state governments they secured power by intimidation and fraud. The Liberal reconstruction legislation was repealed. Northern men have been discriminated against. Force and violence have been as effective to suppress the white vote as it was to suppress the colored vote. They are determined in no event to allow their opponents to control. Such men oppose an educational test. They know, too, that the fourteenth amendment forbids it, and that the moment they enforced such an enactment they would lose a proportionate representation in Congress.

Mr. Gladden deplores bribery, and yet he must know that the bribers and their agents would pass the educational test for voters. So would the officers who make false returns. If the heavy hand of government is to fall upon any citizen, it should be on the educated voter, who considers everything fair in politics, and justifies fraud, bribery, and violence, so that his party may win the election. What is needed is more virtue in the educated voter—more honesty, more courage, more manliness. If ministers take an active part in politics, let them denounce those who perpetrate election frauds, instead of justifying them on the plea that the voters were ignorant. Let them follow the example of Theodore Parker in the days of the fugitive slave law. Or, in a more recent case, when the Supreme Court of the United States struck down the civil rights law, and the lawyers and statesmen acquiesced almost without a murmur. Robert G. Ingersoll reviewed the decision in a bold and masterly address, which was unanswerable.

The opponents of equal suffrage for all adult citizens would deny others the same political rights which they claim for themselves. Some claim that the test should be educational; others that it should be the payment of a property tax, on the ground that those who pay the taxes alone shall say how they shall be expended; others would discriminate between native and foreign-born citizens, giving the preference to the former; still others would base it on sex, irrespective of the personal or property rights of women, or of the laws which regard the wife's personality as merged in that of the husband, or of those which declare that the husband and wife shall be equal in their property and family rights.

Mr. Gladden, however, disposes of the whole question of suffrage by the assertion that suffrage "is not a natural right which can be justly withheld from no man. But this is a popular superstition. Suffrage is not a natural right. . . . Natural rights are not subject to restriction and limitation." In this territory, one of the grave charges brought against woman suffrage was that they used it too effectively in connection with their services as jurors, to put down liquor selling, gambling, and licentiousness. Hence the vicious element combined to take it away, and they took it away on account of this intermeddling with the vices of men. If the suffrage of preachers is not a natural right, but simply a privilege granted by the party in power, they cannot complain if the vicious element hereafter takes it away. If suffrage is not a natural right, the party in power may so restrict it that only a very few of the so-called wisest and best can vote or hold office at all.

"Natural rights are not subject to restriction and limitation." Hence as suffrage is so subject, it is not a natural right. This rule of Mr. Gladden's will cut down natural rights to a very small list. The right to do business, to acquire and hold lands, to convey them, is subject to restrictions and limitations of various kinds. Is it not a natural right? These limitations are based on the principle that one person should not use his rights to property in such a manner as to injure another. Society has fixed the age of majority as the period when the citizen, male or female, is considered capable of making and enforcing contracts. The same rule is adopted in regard to voters. It is a proper regulation of a natural right in each case.

The fundamental principle on which our government is founded is that the civil and political rights of all adult citizens are equal, and that both are natural rights which belong to every citizen of adult age. The professional man who denies this shows that he is ignorant of the fundamental principles of our government. He, at least, should not decry the intelligence of the patriot who is driven out of the despotisms of Europe. The education of such ministers has not educated; nor has their study of theology taught them justice. Prejudice has warped or deadened their sense of right. The republic is in danger from the sophistries of such men, who force themselves to the front as the leaders of thought, quite as much, if not more, than it is from the ignorance of the colored voter, from the vote of the foreigner who speaks broken English, from the patriot who comes here to escape the despotisms of Europe.

The principal opponents of municipal suffrage for women, in Massachusetts, were the editor of the Congregationalist, of Boston, and another minister. They concede to women the right to obey their husbands, to fear God, and to serve the church and the priesthood by acts of benevolence and charity. As a recompense, they will be entitled to eternal happiness hereafter.

Of course it is the duty of women to visit the slums, to erect hospitals and asylums for the victims of the lust of men, and society will vote them thanks as ministering angels. If, however, they demand the right to vote, so that honest and fearless men may be elected to office, and the tide of violence, poverty, and crime may be stemmed, the keepers of the slums, and the self-styled pillars of society, including many of the priesthood, are shocked at the impropriety of women mingling in politics.

Fortunately, the emancipation of women from authority is progressing. They are fast learning to think for themselves in matters of religion, and in duty to themselves, in spite of clerical influences. In the recent school election in Boston they voted almost unanimously for Rabbi Schindler for school trustee, although he is a radical in religion. In the school elections in Great Britain Mrs. Ashton Dilke and Mrs. Annie Besant were elected members of the school board by large majorities.

Irrespective of the question of how women have voted in this territory heretofore, or how they may vote hereafter, I am in favor of giving them equal political rights with men. If a woman has a right to sell liquor under the same terms as those required of men, she has the same right to protect her business by the ballot a man has. On the other hand, the wife of a drunkard, who spends the joint earnings of himself and wife in saloons, and makes himself and family a charge upon private benevolence or public charity, has a right to help regulate the liquor traffic, so that it may not produce such results. This includes the right to vote for men who will pass proper laws and for men who will enforce them.

In the selection of men for delegates to the constitutional convention, those only should be selected who are pronounced friends of equal rights, and are in favor of equal taxation of all property except public property, who are pledged to the absolute separation of church and state, and to protection of labor against capital.

LILIAN'S STORY.

We continue this week the publication of Lilian's thrilling romance.

PARKER & CO.

By A. LILIAN ANDREWS, AUTHOR OF "ONE PENNY," "NELLIE'S MONKEY," AND OTHER TALES.

CHAPTER IV.

"What will we call ourselves? 'Parker & Company' is a good name," said Grace.

Just then Tom came in.

"I guess we had better keep a shop of our own, Anita," said he.

Anita: "Yes that would be better."

Tom: "I looked at a real nice little store"

Anita: "How much rent?"

Tom: "$5 per month."

"Cheap enough."

"Yes, we will have it. But I have a good plan," said Anita. "You know father's hotel. Mr. Parker had kept a hotel in the woods. It was near the cottage. Well I was thinking of having summer boarders."

"Yes, yes," said all the others.

"All right, I will tell you more. There is a large hall down stairs, and I can keep a cooking school." Anita's plan was settled upon, and she was selected to appoint every one and give him his work. "Tom, Grace, and I will keep the hotel. Evenings I will teach cooking. Grace, Tom, and Ted will make candy. Ted will tend store. Bessie, Jessie, and Mabel will make beds, Frankie will go with Ted and do errands, and Maisey will help Bessie, Jessie, and Mabel."

"The baby, what will she do?"

"She'll be taken care of."

OUR UNITARIAN FRIEND.

The Rev. Eli Fay, of Unity church, Los Angeles, on February 10 made a brief reply to the question, "Is the creation of man a failure?" Any but the gentlest criticism of his sermon would be unkind. If the preachers would all talk like Mr. Fay, and practice what they preach, the life of the American Secular Union would be shorter than that of a snowball in the red-hot hands of Satan.

The fabled fall of Adam and Eve is exposed to a smooth contempt. The childishness of the story is shown to be equaled only by its cruelty. Encouraged by a being created by their God, they gratified their natural desires, and for this offense "they were cursed above all cattle and above every beast of the field." "Every human being to be born into the world fell under the concentrated wrath and curse of God. Never was a military campaign planned and entered upon that proved so overwhelmingly disastrous as was God's first encounter with the devil. Not a vestige of the original plan remained; the entire field was swept bare; Paradise was an appalling ruin." . . . "With profound reverence for God, . . . it may be said that dealing with one man and one woman who stood as the federal head of unnumbered thousands of millions whose eternal destiny for weal or woe would be determined by a single word or deed—as it were by the turn of their hand, God was bound, without the slightest hesitation I declare, God was bound to succeed—by all the ineffable glories of heaven, and all the hopeless agony, the black despair of hell, morally, morally bound to succeed." . . . "The great creeds of the orthodox church assume that he did not succeed."

And then to make amends what a trivial scheme was adopted, what an infinitesimal effort of an infinite God, and that after 4000 years of contemplation of his error. "He went to the cross in the person of Jesus Christ as his only means of recovering what he lost through his own want of foresight and care—lost through the surprising cunning of his great enemy against whom he had erected not the slightest fortification or stationed a single picket."

"Gladly we turn from this whole system of theology, which in its drafts upon the imagination, its assumption of the incredible, surpasses all heathen mythology; and we begin with the postulate that there is one God; the life of all life; the soul of all souls; the source of all things." . . . "Those who listen to me know that I am not at all in sympathy with the views of Robert Ingersoll, . . . who holds that . . . at death we drop into absolute nonentity." As to matters of this life the expressed views of Mr. Fay are in all essentials exactly in accord with those of Mr. Ingersoll. The disagreement of views respecting a future life is plain enough, but it cannot be the disagreement that Mr. Fay has in mind, because Ingersoll's views have been misstated. Ingersoll confesses his lack of knowledge and owns his incompetency to discover differences in synonyms. To him the assumptions of credulous orthodoxy and the postulations of the Deist are of equal value. He knows the limits of his knowledge, and neither affirms nor denies the existence of a God, and nowhere does he claim that "at death we drop into absolute nonentity." The drop is to him a mystery, and the constitution of his mind is such that the addition of another mystery, or God mystery, to the list merely adds confusion to ignorance and is in no way satisfactory or convincing. What he has said in substance a thousand times is this: "We do not know, we cannot say whether death is a wall or a door, the folding forever of wings or the spreading of pinions to soar." A postulate—"a thing assumed without proof"—of a God cannot successfully controvert what Ingersoll does not assert, nor does it in any manner tend to establish the existence of an infinite intelligence.

Mr. Fay holds that "Agnosticism empties the heart of all grand inspiration; makes impossible the eager, onward, upward gaze that carries us over many of the rough places of the world, destroys all high and sacred incentive, and dissipates the delightful, waking dream that our manifold and marvelous development, and all of our exquisite sensibilities here, are prophetic." Of what? Immortality? A postulation of the obscure and indistinct leads to a waking dream, and the dream becomes a prophecy of an incoherent and indefinite hope! What's the matter with the naked hope unhandicapped of an assortment of specially manufactured illusions? Agnosticism is not necessarily devoid of a hope of immortality, and the hope is just as vigorous as a tramp in the unknown as it would be riding around in elegance under a white parasol on a creature drafted from the imagination. Is a knowledge of the limits of knowledge less inspiring or less elevating than a faith in what we cannot comprehend? Paraphrasing Mr. Fay, "the more we positively know, the worse we become!" Is that logic?

Cardinal Newman is held up as one of the horrible examples of a belief in the orthodox God: "A face the saddest, the most anxious, the most care-plowed I ever saw, indicating that all true inspiration, all buoyant hope, all natural brightness and joy long since departed from his heart, says: 'Nature is out of joint with the purposes of God.' Is it wonderful that he is sad?" Perhaps not. But as the opposite of this description fits Ingersoll, I fail to see where it adds force to Mr. Fay's argument.

Mr. Fay is satisfied with the nebular hypothesis and subscribes to the theory of evolution, but he places a God before both. Is it not a childish idea of God that "he may be trusted to finish the work so quietly begun, and so unostentatiously and yet so successfully prosecuted?" That is, he must practice before he can become perfect, and after awhile, with man's assistance, he will be able to produce a man that is a real man; and as man is progressing towards perfection his "creation" is not a failure.

There are times when Mr. Fay forgets about God, and talks about man just as an Infidel would talk. And his religion is not that of the club and the fagot. His sermon is published in pamphlet form for free distribution, and those who read Robert Elsmere literature will find it worth perusal.

Anaheim, Cal., Feb. 25.

JAMES B. HASSETT.

IS THERE NO EVIDENCE?

The clergy of San Francisco have been invited and pressed to present the evidences of their faith, in a tangible form, before the best minds in our city, and in the presence of opposing counsel, to object, to rule out, and to show its inefficiency. The form suggested is highly practical, and well calculated to illustrate and enforce each point. It is that of a court, with counsel on each side, and a learned judge to rule out whatever is not in order, not admissible, or does not make a sufficient proof.

No acceptance has been received. The clergy decline the ordeal. They doubt their ability. They doubt the aid of God or the holy ghost. They doubt their own ability to attain a triumph. They manifestly doubt the facts of the case, and dare not lay them before the people. At a meeting of one of their conferences they seem to give all away, and to admit that in such an examination they have nothing to show, nothing to say, no hope of making out a case for their religion. One of them, in a recent conference, said in relation to this matter: "The Christian religion has no such evidence to offer. It is a religion of authority and emotion. It speaks to be believed, felt, obeyed, and not examined. They who hesitate are lost. They who examine are never satisfied. Those who require proof only go farther and farther away. Hell is yawning for all. The church offers a free pass to heaven, to those who come and ask no questions. But it has nothing for the doubter who must have a reason, who questions the authority of those who offer him an estate for nothing."

Very good. If such is the attitude of the church, then the Salvation Army is the only open door. It requires no knowledge, no proof, no demonstration that it is true. It is simply an alarm, like an alarm of fire in your house; you must get up and run, and find out after whether he who cries fire is honest and truthful or not.

But this attitude for religion will not suit the republic and the coming century. We have discarded all authority for truth. The Constitution of the United States declares that all men are free and equal, and each must think for himself. There can no longer be religion by imperial edict, act of parliament, or papal letter. All must rest on such broad evidence as will speak to the general mind. This emotional religion is akin to emotional insanity. It is not favored in our courts, or among our people.

Those who yield to it are not regarded as safe, reliable persons. Even in a fire, to run and scream, regardless of the facts in the case, and jump out of the window when you might as well go by the door, is the act of an insane rather than a sound mind. And if we are to take religion on the jump, as it were, without examination or facts, we are confronted with another difficulty— which to take. If emotion, and not reason, must decide, how shall we select or resolve whether Christ or Mohammed or Confucius shall be our guide? The emotions of all speak for their own side, and on this basis all men shall follow forever the religion of their fathers. But this cannot be. For the first time in this world all the nations of the earth confront each other with their forms of government, religions, and domestic modes and manners. Mankind will select the best of all from each, and sometimes make a new pattern contrived from several or all.

In government, without any common understanding, man has evolved to monarchy, as a rule. It is the first form of organization for human society. But time has evolved better patterns, and the whole world is bound to gravitate to the better plan.

Slavery followed monarchy. It was a little varied in different states, but the rule in all. Yet it must disappear. Justice and reason have condemned it to oblivion, and it must die. In a thousand years it will be a relic of the barbarous past. Religion has followed the same role. It was a natural product of the human mind, and in all climes, all races, and all conditions it has reached pretty much the same essence. These are the simple elements of all the religions of the world:

God is a father, king, despot, who must be implicitly obeyed. The priest is his agent, with his authority, and must be believed.

God will bless those who believe and obey, and curse those who do not.

Beyond this world there is a hell for unbelievers and rebels, and a heaven for those the church approves.

If you want heaven, and would avoid hell, believe and obey, and honor and pay the preacher.

Here Jehovah is God, and Christ the great priest. There Allah is God, and Mohammed is his prophet. In other places the names and forms and observances are all changed, but the simple principles above set out are never changed. They are common to all the religions of the world that have ever been connected with the state. Not before, as a rule. Christ taught no such doctrine. It was only when the Christian religion was wedded to the Roman empire that it took on all the ingredients of a perfected state religion. Now, like the monarchy and slavery, this form of state religion must cease. It will do so slowly, as the human mind reaches up to a higher plane. But there will be no going back. There can be none. Our fathers, in their Constitution, utterly excluded all these elements of state religion, and in express terms declared them untrue. It is written there as plainly as word could say: God is not a despot or king, but only the father in heaven. He has not appointed any man to be his agent or mouth-piece. God will bless all those who do right, the brave and the free, and curse none, only with the consequences of their own acts. All men shall think for themselves, and seek their own happiness in their own way. There is no need to believe any man. Obey no man. And pay and honor no man only as you believe him to deserve them. Every American citizen shall believe as seems to him best, and no opinion shall be a crime.

Compare this with the elements of religion above set out, and you find a flat contradiction of every line. And our people are being educated up to the Constitution of their fathers. As monarchy is dead among us by their act, so will this effete religion of the past die out. It is not rational, and it will soon cease to be emotional. We have no emotional monarchists now. But France has thousands who are crazy for a king. Germany has those who worship the Brandenburgers, and Russia regards the czar as God's anointed. But all this must pass away. Emotions that are irrational cannot rule mankind much longer. All must be swept into the waste-basket, monarchy, slavery, and religion that will not bear investigation. It is idle to imagine any other course. And indeed the process is well on its way in the United States. The churches do not break, but bend gracefully before public opinion. No one ventures to teach the hard-shell dogmas of a hundred years ago. They are all simply dropped, one by one, and they must all go. The church of the republic must harmonize with the republic. We can no longer keep apart. Truth is not a contagious pestilence to be quarantined against. There is no truth that is dangerous and injurious to mankind, and there is no error that can be salutary. There can be no religion of value that will not bear investigation. If men cannot believe it after a close inspection, the assent of the ignorant and emotional is of no value.

If, after a well ordered trial of all the allegations in court, it could be said that religion had made out its case, and there was ground for a rational belief in it, what a source of pride it would be to our churches, and in all future time what a book of reference the record would become!

If it should be found to be utterly groundless, as many very sensible people now hold, can the clergy learn it too soon? Would it not guide them to such changes as the age demands?

Should they decline this opportunity, what are we to think of them? Do they believe that the religion of God cannot stand the strain of public debate? Alas, what weakness! Rather is that the true light that knocks at the doors of the churches and is kept out by orthodox adherence to antiquated error. There is no danger that error should prevail. "Who ever knew truth put to the rout in a fair and open encounter?"

We hope to see our clergy enter the arena with all their power and zeal. Organize your defense with your best men and your best material and forms. The enemy is at hand, well armed and confident. And this consolation will remain above all, that the exploding of one religion is only to lay the foundation of a better. Human history has no record of a people abandoning a good religion to take on a worse. All our changes have been for the better. Let us not leave for the next century what should be done in this. H. THE CHURCH OF HUMANITY.

At the dedication of the New Church of Humanity at San Jose, March 3, M. N. F. Ravlin thus explained the object of the organization:

The Church of Humanity is organized as a living rebuke to the narrow, uncharitable exclusiveness of sectarianism. How much of the Christ-spirit, and to what extent does sympathy for humanity in its abyssal depths dwell in the various "isms" of the day? Who sways the scepter of power, Jesus Christ or Mammon, the god of this world?

How many people in San Jose possess the spirit, keep the commandments, and daily follow the example of Jesus? I fear not one. Jesus said unless a man forsook all that he had he could not be his disciple. Of whom is this true to-day? He says, "If a man come to him and hate not his father and mother, his wife and children, his brothers and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be his disciple." Who meets the requirement, taking the scripture just as it reads? Jesus says: If you have two coats give one of them to him who has none. Who does it? He commands you to love your enemies and to love your neighbor as yourself. Do you know any one who does either? He says that unless you deny yourself, take up your cross and follow him daily, you cannot be his disciple. Now the whole requirements which Jesus Christ himself lays down are sufficient refutation of the modern idea of salvation by faith alone.

It is a well-known, undeniable fact that these conditions of discipleship are not met. Vast numbers of people calling themselves Christians live in self-indulgence, deny themselves nothing they have the means to obtain, follow their own whims and notions, and pay no heed whatever to the commandments and teachings of Jesus. People who come so far short of meeting the requirements of him whose name they have assumed should cultivate a more charitable spirit toward others, and be more sparing in the use of opprobrious epithets.

The Church of Humanity is organized in the defense of Free-thought, of private judgment, of personal liberty, of free speech, of equal rights, of impartial justice, of the equality of the sexes before the law, and of the claims of suffering humanity throughout the world. It is organized to defend no dogmas, to spread abroad no theories of religious belief, to formulate no creed, and to establish no sect. Yet, in the spirit of a broad charity, it accords to all people everywhere the right to any form of belief, to any creed or system of doctrine that they may think proper to adopt, and that they should be protected therein so long as they do not infringe upon the rights of others.

The church of Humanity is organized to labor for the betterment of the condition of the masses, to lighten the burdens of the "heavy laden," to comfort such as mourn, to give bread to the hungry, clothing to the naked, and, as far as possible, find employment for the unemployed. Its mission is to inculcate the vital principles of right living in this world in conformity with the ethics of the "Golden Rule." "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." This is the very quintessence of true theosophy and of true Christianity as well. Had no other doctrine ever been inculcated the world had long since been redeemed, and never would human blood have been shed by reason of any differences of opinion in religious matters. Humanity, everywhere over the whole earth, would welcome the religion of the Golden Rule. There is no race so barbarous, so benighted, that its application would not elevate, educate, civilize, and redeem. Were the Christless, soulless formalities of religious belief now dominant in Europe to be supplanted by the simple, pure, guileless religion of the Golden Rule, not a nation but what would disarm at once and universal peace and prosperity would be assured for all time to come. The starving millions of earth would be fed. Her countless thousands of unemployed men and women would have remunerative employment. The constantly increasing army of mental, moral, and physical wrecks would rapidly diminish, and the insane asylums, poor-houses, and prisons would be converted into industrial schools or manufacturing establishments.

This plain, simple, unvarnished religion is what humanity needs, and it is the only idea or type of religion that can ever be made world-wide and of universal application. It is the great essential of all religions. Everything else in the line of dogmas and isms could be sacrificed and the world lose nothing—absolutely nothing. It is on non-essentials that the so-called Christian world split and divide, and over which they have so long wrangled. It is the height of folly to suppose that the great world of mankind can ever be brought to embrace a religion whose votaries agree not among themselves, and whose views of truth are irrational and conflicting. To think, speak, and act right toward all people in every relation in life is all the religion this world needs. It is exactly what Christ taught and illustrated by his example. It is a religion which we preach and which the Church of Humanity is organized to promulgate. It is not a religious belief, but practice. Are other churches laboring to elevate humanity? So are we. Do they seek to save men from sin? So do we. Are they interested in the cause of temperance? So are we. Are they in the love of truth and good? So are we. Do they preach charity? We try to practice it. Do they delight in love and wisdom? So do we. Wherein lies the difference?—in external forms and ceremonies, and in speculative theories concerning God and Christ and man's existence in the eternal world. The old theology we reject. It is useless to fill the old bottles of dogmatic belief with the new wine of spiritual truth. The bottles have neither the strength nor capacity to hold the wine. Send them to some junk-shop of theological relics and put the wine into new bottles, new modes of thought and new forms of expression. In so far as the Bible teaches spiritual truth, in harmony with science and reason, we accept it. But we do not regard it as a book of infallible authority, nor do we believe the holy spirit of truth had anything to do with dictating or inspiring all that it contains. The idea is absurd that a book should be called a revelation from God to man, and yet the chief excellence of that revelation lie in the fact that man cannot comprehend it, and as far as it is understood it becomes worthless as a revelation, and when fully known is to be thrown away as good for nothing. Strange logic. We have no use for a revelation that can never be understood or comprehended. We may know the truth, and as we know be correspondingly free. We do know and fully comprehend the ethical teachings of Jesus.

We lay no claim to superior knowledge, but we do believe in eternal progress. The man who never changes his views upon any subject never progresses, and never adds to his very limited stock of knowledge. No man, four or five hundred years ago, could look upon truth from the standpoint we now occupy. What revelations and what discoveries since John Calvin's day! He considered it impious foolishness to talk of the earth being globular in form and revolving upon its axis, as we now know it does. Who would think now of quoting Calvin as standard authority in astronomical science? And why regard him as authority in religious matters? If he was so far from the truth in his conceptions of the earth and its movements, what reason is there to suppose that he is any nearer the truth in his conceptions of God, of eternity, and of heaven and hell? Yet "Calvin's Institutes" are standard authority in many a theological seminary to-day. He is honored as the founder of Presbyterianism, and students for the ministry imbibe his teachings and go forth to retail them to the world as the truth. Election, predestination, and foreordination, the unalterable eternal, decrees of an omnipotent personal God. Cling to Calvinism, ye who will. Abide in the cemetery of the dead if you must. Become fossilized automatons if that be your highest ideal of a man. But lay not the flattering unction to your soul that you can fether the lightning bolts of thought, retard the wheels of progress, or impede the "grand march" of destiny. Humanity, invited to come up higher, shakes off the bondage of her past oppressions, and in her might stands forth appareled in her royal vestments of liberty and freedom for evermore. Woe betide whatever stands in the way of her upward movement. Nations will be convulsed, thrones will topple into ruins; scepters, broken in twain, shall pass away, and the very foundations of the earth be moved, but humanity, long crushed and bleeding humanity, her day of deliverance has dawned at last, and ere the present cycle of evolutionary progress ends, she shall in all her kindred, nations, and people be eternally free.

THE BIBLE IN FAVOR OF DEBATE.

II.

Why, says one, I supposed the Bible is unqualifiedly against debate. Romans i, 29, 30, 31, classes it among wickedness, covetousness, maliciousness; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity; whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful, proud, boasters, inventors of evil things, disobedient to parents, without understanding, covenant-breakers, without natural affection, implacable, unmerciful."

Yes, and I read further, that they which do "such things are worthy of death." Romans i, 32.

Now, does any one suppose that the penalty of death ought to be passed upon a man who debates? The victims would be few, perhaps, during an "off year," but in a regular presidential campaign the "slaughter of the innocents" would be immense. Even religious disputants are safe, for the book, it is seen, teaches no such thing. When debate is spoken of on its own merits alone, like truth, love, wisdom, the testimony is just the reverse. It favors debate, and does so in the strongest language. Now read that chapter, Romans i, every paragraph, and you will discover, what perhaps has escaped your notice, that even truth itself was perverted by the people against whom Paul aimed his criticism; love, truth, natural affection were all perverted by them.

From such texts as, "Lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults" (2 Cor. xii, 20) many Bible readers have drawn their conclusion that debate is frowned upon by the Bible.

In America, every four years, there are "debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, swellings, tumults." If you think there is not, get nominated for an office, and you will learn that all your relations that were not hanged died in the poorhouse.

But, notwithstanding these evil associations, who is willing to exchange American liberty for Russian despotism? Where would religious and political freedom be, had it not been for debate in Congress, and throughout the United States?

What would have become of Martin Luther's Reformation if the opponents of religious debate had succeeded in placing the gag on free speech? The glory of America is her freedom of debate, glorious in spite of abuses and evil associations, and when the same freedom permeates the churches, "the world will be the better for it." Shall we abandon truth because it is intermixed with error? Shall we give up any good thing because it may be put to a bad use? If so we will surrender our stomachs!

It will be a surprise to many of my readers when they discover, as they follow me through these pages, with what unanimity the Bible writers were committed, unreservedly, to freedom of debate. King Solomon, reputed to have been the wisest man that ever lived, urged it in these words: "Debate thy cause with thy neighbor." Proverbs xxv, 9.

Isaiah was so fond of discussion, and so sure that he would be victorious, that he said, "The Lord God will help me; therefore shall I not be confounded; therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed. He is near that justifieth me; who will contend with me?" Isaiah i, 7, 8.

Some of my Christian brethren remark that there is nothing in the way of anybody contending for the truth. They insist that those who wish to controvert what the ministers of Christianity teach are at liberty to do so—can hire a hall for that purpose. They are confident that it was never meant by the Bible that debates should be brought into the church. Why not? Is it not the prime object of debate to elicit the truth? Can there be a more sacred pursuit than truth seeking? Is there any spot on earth too good to find whatever is true? The old prophet, just quoted, says, "Let us stand together;" not one in yonder church and another in this hall. "Who is mine adversary," says Isaiah, "let him come near to me."

I have heard the objection that it is not the place of a minister of the gospel to step down from the pulpit into the arena of debate. Why not? Any reason for that? Any Bible for it? I think not. The minister is only a man, liable to err in judgment, as we all are. But would it be proper for preachers of the gospel to argue with the multitude? To debate with men whose standing is not equal to theirs? If they are superior, better educated than the mass of the people, which I admit, in what way does their culture excuse them from debating? Their lord and master was not above controversies with the "common people." Among the old prophets and teachers a rule was, "They that forsake the law praise the wicked; but such as keep the law contend with them." Proverbs xxviii, 4. "The wicked flee when no man pursueth; but the righteous are bold as a lion." (v. 1).

Job believed it proper to debate with God himself. "I would order my cause before him, and fill my mouth with arguments. I would know the words which he would answer me." "The righteous might dispute with him." Job xxiii, 4, 5, 7. "How forcible are right words! but what doth your arguing reprove?" Job vi, 25.

W. F. JAMIESON.

SLAIN BY A FANATIC.

The Japan Mail of the 18th of February contained the following details of the assassination of Viscount Mori, formerly so well known in this country.

Viscount Mori died at the comparatively early age of forty-one. The son of a gentleman of Satsuma, he received an excellent education, and while acting as charge d'affaires at Washington, he was fortunate enough to arrange the postal convention between his country and the United States, for which service he received considerable credit. He afterwards served as minister plenipotentiary in Peking and in London, and while in the latter city, his close friendship with Herbert Spencer, Darwin, Huxley, and other leaders of modern thought permanently impressed his character, and completely broke down his faith in the ancient creeds of the Orient.

He neither felt nor could simulate any respect for the supernatural elements of religion, and on a visit to the shrines of Ise two years ago he allowed his mood to become conspicuous by entering the principal shrine without removing his boots and by raising a sacred curtain with his cane. In the eyes of many Japanese Shintoism and imperialism are synonymous. They hold that the emperor derives his divine right to rule from the Shinto deities, his ancestors, and any semblance of disrespect to the latter constitutes, in their eyes, a direct menace to the sovereignty of the Tenno. Among such zealots Nishino Buntaro, the deceased minister's assassin, was conspicuous. Highly educated, gifted with considerable intelligence, and, though small of stature and weakly built, capable of strong effort when under the influence of excitement, his passionate reverence for everything appertaining to the imperial house was constantly noticed by his companions. At what time he came to a knowledge of the story of Viscount Mori's doings at Ise we cannot certainly tell. Last autumn he paid a visit to Ise himself, and it is conjectured that his object in doing so was to obtain confirmation or contradiction of the tale.

Returning to Tokio, he lodged with several compatriots in Imagawa-koji, but none of them appear to have suspected his design until after it was accomplished. There is no difficulty in understanding how a man of Nishino's temperament may have been roused to frenzy by the thought that a prominent minister of state had openly showed his contempt for the holiest shrine in Japan, and may have thought that the day appointed for the emperor to voluntarily divest himself of a portion of his divinely endowed power was precisely the time to proclaim by some signal and shocking act that the ancient faith remained as inviolate and as inviolable as ever. It is said that after Viscount Mori was struck down, the only words he uttered were a reproof to those who killed his assassin.

The minister when stabbed grappled with his assailant, and the guard running forward at the moment of the struggle, and imagining that Nishino was even then endeavoring to do the viscount an injury, thrust him in the back and then nearly severed his head from his body as he fell.

Later papers say that the body of the murderer was given by the police authorities to a couple of outcasts, who proceeded to bury it after disfiguring it beyond recognition.

INFIDELITY AND CHARITY.

From the Examiner.

Mr. Sam Jones, preacher—SIR: In making your comparison Sunday afternoon between Infidelity and Christianity, you tried to depict all Infidels as destroyers, tearers down and non-supporters of good institutions, such as orphan asylums, etc.

Did you ever hear of a man named Stephen Girard? He was an Infidel, and did more towards helping poor and friendless orphans than you have done or ever will do. He founded an orphan institute, and rightfully forbade the entrance or interference of any preachers or priests in the management of the orphans; knowing that, if trained up to a mature age with unwarped minds, they would be above religious superstition; and we do not hear of this institute turning out any worse men than any of the church-founded colleges.

James Lick was an Infidel, and contributed more to the progress of science, that great iconoclast, that destroyer of religious superstition, than any so-called Christian of California.

Colonel Ingersoll is an Infidel, and a kinder husband and father and a greater giver to charitable purposes I dare say Mr. Sam Jones himself is not. He is no reformed drunkard. Neither has Mr. Jones been able to answer the masterly arguments of Mr. Ingersoll. The United States is full of Infidels. What would the world be without them? We have tried religion in past years, and we know what it is. You Christians are behind the age. Thomas Paine was an Infidel, and the day will come when his name will be honored by all true Americans, even when Mr. Jones's name is heard no more.

Why you should apply names of disrespect to Infidels I do not know. Probably, you either try to mislead the people, or trust to their ignorance in these matters, as a great many of them are. A priest in one of the churches of San Francisco a few Sundays ago said that members of all churches—the Protestant, Mohammedan, pagan, etc.—could enter heaven if they were conscientious in their belief.

If that is so, we Infidels trust to get there by conscientious disbelief. But I don't believe there is any such place.

You said also that God loves us mortals even in hell. If that is so, and he can look and see Infidels burn when he has the power to prevent it, I don't care for his love, and would prefer to burn in hell than be an occupant in heaven with such a tyrant. I don't think you preachers believe such stuff either.

AN EXPLANATION.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Your reply to the attack on the Union by the "Knights of Labor" came near being my first intimation of its publication, for in this community it is scarce ever heard of, and you are wasting valuable time refuting what no one has read. The paper is kept up for political blackmailing purposes, and its attacks are considered compliments in this community. When a member of the K. of L., this whilom editor was expelled to my knowledge from one assembly and shortly after barely escaped serving this state in a suit more suggestive than fashionable for swindling operations.

In my speeches at mass meetings on the Blair bill I did not fail to refer to the fact that this attempt at religious tyranny was indorsed by Powderly, and Powderly was indorsed by Cardinal Gibbons, and Cardinal Gibbons wore the bloody insignia of Rome. From this article, it looks as though I hit about right.

Dr. Matteson's Debate.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Yesterday evening your correspondent went, as per arrangement, to Oak Ridge school-house, to debate, against that society's speakers, the question, "Resolved, That the property of religious associations should be exempt from taxation," your correspondent having the negative. Arrived at the seat of operations, I learned that there were to be religious services at a church-house a mile or two off, where a new preacher was expected, and per consequence some of the club's speakers, and a goodly portion of the audience, were not expected to materialize at the school-house. The debaters available were young and inexperienced, uninformed on the subject, but game, and agreed to "give the old man the best they had." A fair audience of the young people of the neighborhood assembled in the school-house (boys become voters, husbands, and fathers; and girls become housewives and mothers, in the near future), and the "services" began. The first speaker argued that religious associations were beneficial to the community, but were poor and "could scarcely pay their preachers now," and therefore could not pay their taxes. This was, of course, readily answered. The next speaker regretted the absence of their "main speaker," who would have "floored me directly; but there was no help for it now." He argued that church property was public property, the same as state houses, school-houses, etc., and being built and used for the benefit of the public, should be exempt. Another easy reply.

The third speaker said that he had heard me speak at Silverton at the S. S. U. meeting, and wanted to know what I was doing, "going around the county making Infidel speeches." Said that I did not believe in God, the Bible, nor religion. Anyone can believe what they like if they only try hard enough. Churches are dedicated to God, and government therefore had no right to tax them. Wanted to know who these people were who demanded that church property be taxed. Some people would argue anything. "Men will argue that the world is flat, and where do they get their argument from, I would like to know." Thought it right that Catholic-church property be taxed, but not others.

Of course all this was easy to reply to. The term Infidel was explained, and the distinction between Infidel and Secular shown. In explanation of my religious belief, I stated that of Thomas Paine, my Agnostic position, and defined the term. I also explained that I accepted whatever, in the Bible, appeared to my mind to be reasonable and good, but rejected the claim of its being the "Word of God," or in any sense anything superhuman. I rejected the doctrine of "original sin;" of "total depravity;" "the fall of man;" the deluge, Jonah and the whale, the overshadowing of the ghost and the story of Christ generally, and the doctrine of "believe or be damned;" asserting that no one had any control over their own belief, but must believe or not, as reason and information dictate. My opponent then asked that I prove that. I replied by asking him if he could believe himself a negro, if he only tried hard enough. This brought down the house with laughter. (To cause laughter is as good as argument sometimes.) The young man replied that he thought he could, upon a pinch, if it became necessary. I then asked him if he thought that by trying hard enough he could convince himself that he was a woman. Uproarious laughter followed, and the young man surrendered. I then said that I did not believe, if he would stand and face a looking-glass, he could even convince himself that he was good-looking, if he had any confidence in the glass. Again the negative had the laugh, if not the argument. As the preacher at Stayton said to Mr. Putnam, when the latter laughed at his remark, "any fool can laugh."

The debate over, I went home with one of my opponents and remained over the rest of the night. He is a genial man, has a charming wife and four nice little ones, and my visit was pleasant if not profitable. But some seed is sown. Those young people heard a little of the new gospel of humanity and progress, and some of them will think and inquire. The procession moves steadily on, and its ranks increase.

I learned next morning that the expected preacher failed to show up at the church-house, and so the effect was simply to lessen the attendance at the debate. It is said to be "an ill wind that blows nobody good."

Aumsville, Or., March 3.

F. S. M.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

After two weeks' hard work on the rostrum at Oakdale, I bade the many friends I found there adieu. We arrived a little late for dinner at the old quaint town of Knight's Ferry, one of the oldest mining towns in the state, and at one time said to contain 10,000 inhabitants, but now not numbering over four to five hundred people. The bed of the river, the bottom lands, the bluffs and hills all around, have all been dug over and every spoonful of dirt carefully washed for the "filthy lucre." Many a fortune has been made and lost here in days gone by. Away up 500 to 1,000 feet high upon the sides of these Red mountains I found a fine water ditch, carrying to its full capacity the precious fluid, around the precipitous rocky cliffs, often across yawning gulches and deep wide canons, being carried over in flumes and troughs that make one dizzy to look at. Verily the limpid water is the god of this country, for without it the glittering gold could never have been separated from the earth, and now the still more golden orange that is to be seen on many a hillside (and they grow here to perfection), could not be raised except for the water that is poured down to the heavily-laden trees from the ditch far above. These oranges are said to be the finest in the state, being entirely free from rust and smut, and the flavor cannot be excelled even at Riverside. The "forty-niner" little dreamed, as he toiled here for the bright gold dust, that forty years later the orange and the fig, the almond and the raisin, would grow on the ruin he had made—even a better fortune than the one he had delved for. I found a splendid home at the fine hotel kept by Mr. and Mrs. McLoughlin, called the "Ferry House." Mr. McLoughlin is an old miner of Scotch descent, and has spent most of his life in California. He has made and lost much by Dame Fortune's fickle moods, but yet works these shining sands occasionally for the glittering pelf. Mac and his wife know how to entertain the tired and hungry pilgrim, and with their three bright and winsome babies, their home is indeed a "traveler's rest." I gave here three lectures in the little brown church under the hill to very good audiences, and everything went smooth as a marriage bell. A Miss Rose Voght, the school teacher, gave us some delightful music on the organ. After the second lecture was over a Mr. Duncan was called for, for a character reading. I found him away above the average biped in mental calibre, in fact, a royal head, or, as I read it off to the audience, a magnificent knowledge box, capable of delivering an oration on any occasion; a man that would make and lose many a fortune and die poor. I found Mr. Duncan had a big flat place on the top of his head and thus declared him to be the worst skeptic in town, one who would wear his trousers out everywhere else sooner than on the knees—which was declared to be all correct. I found here a poor demented creature, living alone in an old deserted hotel, a Mr. Smith, who spends his time making life-size models out of clay and other material. They are terrible-looking things, yet he names them Cleopatra, Apollo, etc. I paid a visit to the fine orange grove of Kaspar Voght, the finest in this part of the state. Mr. Voght showed me trees, eighteen years old, that raised him 2,000 oranges to the tree. These, at two cents each, give an income of $40 per tree. I saw trees, not three feet high, full of big navel oranges that sell readily at five cents each. Mr. Voght's trees are still pretty well filled with the golden beauties, although he has been picking fruit for the last two months. Two acres of trees, twelve to twenty years of age, well taken care of, would support any ordinary family in comfort and style. It is a business that requires constant attendance and a large amount of water in the dry season. I think I have never seen a more beautiful sight than a large orange grove full of the ripe fruit, and all in blossom for the new crop. It beats by far an orthodox heaven for artistic beauty. Its aroma, its evergreen shade, its luscious bunches of golden fruits—there is nothing finer. We made a stop here of only four days, when that royal good fellow, Freethinker, and subscriber to FREETHOUGHT, H. Ackers, drove up from Oakdale, and took us in his coach and four, and whirled us away further towards the snowy peaks to new fields of labor.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

"Robert Ingersoll the Builder."

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have just received No. 9, volume II., of FREETHOUGHT, and am well pleased with it. Allow me to express my approbation of the article "Robert Ingersoll the Builder."

If I were where I could speak to the lady who has written such true and noble words of him I could do nothing less than take off my hat and thank her. I appreciate what she has written. Perhaps not fully, but my heart grows big while reading her article much the same as when I read his writings. I am one of the thousands who thank him from the fullness of my heart when I read his "matchless" thoughts. I hate a lie because of its meanness. I love the truth because of its goodness. And I suppose that is about why I love Robert G. Ingersoll, and hate some traits of my own character. But it is not of myself that I would write. There is an attraction, an intellectual satisfaction, a solid human comfort, received from the thoughts of Mr. Ingersoll that outranks anything that has ever been painted in words. Many people have said some things well. He has said and done many things very well. Yes, Miss Gardener, he is a builder. He has destroyed forests of superstition and built in their places magnificent temples of Freethought. But, in speaking of him, I would not detract from the goodness of others. There are many who are doing good work in life. There are many more who could do much better if they were free from the superstitious fear that enslaves them mentally. It restricts their thoughts, and circumscribes their opportunities. They live and act in a narrower sphere than is due their humanity, and our heroic builder constructs most excellent public highways, beaming with love and hope and light, along which we may travel without fear. Thanks to the lady who has the courage of her convictions.

J. C. WEYBRIGHT.

A Young Lady Worker.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed I return you the anti-Sabbath petitions with 143 signatures attached. About two-thirds of the people to whom I presented the petition were in favor of it. The people here in general are quite Liberal minded, though there are very few outspoken Infidels.

Any one that is in favor of a Sunday law is either tyrannical or ignorant of the injustice there would be in such a barbaric, superstitious law. If the national Sabbath bill passes, America is doomed.

My friend Miss Orlie F. Saunders, of Portland, gave me quite a number of FREETHOUGHTS to disseminate, and when I was procuring signatures for the anti-Sabbath petition, I took them and other Freethought publications with me, viz., the "Boston Investigator," "Truth Seeker," "Ironclad Age," "Lucifer," and "Fair Play," and left a copy of some Liberal paper in nearly every house that I visited, and I hope that by so doing I have helped to advance the "light of reason" in this vicinity.

The pamphlets that I obtained from you, entitled "Sabbath Imposition" and "Self-Contradictions of the Bible," are just splendid, and should be read by everyone. I wish I was able to order one hundred copies of them to disseminate in this locality. Yours most respectfully, Oswego, Oregon.

JONAH.—A Serio-Comic Tank Drama.Dramatis Personæ:

JAHVEH, Lord of Blissville.

JONAH, a chump and sorehead.

SAILORS, on shipboard.

THE WHALE, or "prepared big fish."

THE GOULD, a remarkable specimen of the genus Legenaria.

THE WORM that brought the gourd to grief.

*Scene: Asia Minor or Major, or contiguous territory.ACT I.*SCENE 1.—Half-way House on the road to Joppa, a seaport. Jonah on the lee porch of the tavern smoking a pipe.

[Enter Jahveh peering about.]

JAH. Ah, Jonah, just the man I'm looking for.

JONAH (unshipping his pipe). 'S that so? Al-lus find me here at the tavern, Milord. Beats cañiel tendin' all to thunder! What's up, Milord?

JAH. Great Nineveh is up against me, Jonah, And unto that great city thou must go And warn the people that they surely must Stop monkeying with their brass gods, and stop Their high jinks generally, or the devil Will be to pay—on them I'll jump and make It hot for every mother's son. Give them Fair warning, Jonah.

JON. Warnin' nothin', Milord. I'd warn 'em, not warn 'em, right on the jump. Burn up the city and give them the grand roast!

JAH. Go to, Jonah; go slow and draw it mild For yet awhile. I feel in gracious mood At present, and would give them fair a chance. Given fair warning, and perchance they'll melt And run their brass gods up into some form Of household goods, as andirons and such, And we be happy yet. Arise now, Jonah, And get thee into Nineveh at once.

JON. (sotto voce). Not much. Catch me. I'll put for Joppa and ship for Tarshish. Warn them duffers at Nineveh? Not I, b'gosh!

JAH. Well, Jonah, art thou going?

JON. Yes, Milord.

JAH. Then it were well that thou went quickly.

JON. Yes, Milord. I'm off.

[Disappears behind the tavern and scoots along the back road to Joppa, Jahveh looking dumfounded, but holding his peace and making no sign.]

ACT II.SCENE 1.—Gale at sea. Ship in distress. Jonah in the bilge sleeping the sleep of the just.

Though run the seas full mountains high, he dreams of the sweet by and by.

[Enter the mate and cook and captain bold, the bosen tight and midshipmite, and crew of the Nancy brig.]

CAP. Avast there, ye land lubber! Open your glims, shake out the reefs in your gabber and call on your God to save the ship, if he can. Hustle lively, my lad, or we'll all go down to Davy Jones's locker!

JON. (sitting up and rubbing his eyes). Hello! What's the racket? Thunder! What's the matter with the shallop? She's pitchin' and plungin' like a mad heifer.

CAP. Matter enough, ye landlubber. Who be ye, anyhow? And what d'ye come aboard for? Draw lots, lads, for overboard. That'll tell who the Jonah is.

JON. Ha! how'd you know my name?

BOSEN TIGHT. Lot falls on him, cap'n. (How strange!—Dramatist.)

CAP. Serves him right. Over with him.

JON. Yes, I'm a poor orphan. Chuck me over. But it will be all right, for the Lord will preserve me. The sea will go down, and I can swim ashore. I love and fear the Lord (the cheek of him, after scooting away as he did), and he sent this tempest because I skipped out and didn't obey orders. Chuck. I trust in the Lord.

CAP. Over with the duffer!

[He is thrown overboard, the sea immediately falling flat, everything then being lovely and the goose hanging high.]

SCENE 2.—The whale's interior. Pitch darkness.

Jonah sloshing about in lamp oil up to his knees.

JON. Whew! What an infernal stink. This room never's been aired since it was built, and I'll bet on't. Gosh! how dark tis here. Dark! that aint no name for't. It's blacker'n black cats in black cellars at black midnight. Blacker'n the character of a feller's political rival. Thunder! what's that? It shakes this old hoss mackerel from stem to stern. Oh, I know—he's blowin' off. If he'd only blow me off; I'm dryer'n a religious weekly. Whew! I wonder how long I've got to paddle round in this lamp oil? The good Lord might 'a had a lantern here.

'Spose the blackness of darkness of this stinkin' oil tank is to punish me for skippin' out and not goin' to Nineveh. Well, they'd ought to be roasted there, as Sodom was. Gosh! I've struck ile here; if I could only scull the critter ashore, high and dry. Ha! I'd supply all Joppa with oil, and set up a tavern of my own, with lashin's of grog. Wonder how long I'm in for't, anyhow? Where'm I goin' to sleep—whew! Can't lay down on the floor, I should be drowned in oil.

Thunder, but it's hell here! How she rolls. I'm gittin' sea-sick, too. O Lord, send this big fish ashore—high and dry, 'cos I'd like to scoop in the oil—and I'll go to Nineveh by fast express (limited), and warn the galoots there of comin' wrath. They that observe lying vanities forsake their own mercy. That isn't me, O Lord! Let me out of this and I'll make Nineveh howl—that is, I'll tell 'em you will if they don't rally round our flag, O Lord! Oh! phew! faugh! but this is the father of all stinks and blackness! If this fish doesn't cast me up soon I shall cast up myself and become of the fish fishy! Whew! but this beats the worst dive in the slums of Joppa, and I know where the worst of 'em is. O Lord, let me see daylight and smell fresh air once more and I'll cry against Nineveh even as the soft-shell clam man cries out—I will, O Lord, sure pop! Ha! what's this? It seems to be a sort of hammock of whalebone. O Lord, thy mercy can't be measured in a quart cup. Here goes for a snooze. Watch over me, O Lord, and let the quality of this stink be strained to my nostrils, or I shall asphyxiate.

[Gets into the hammock and sleeps the sleep of just men made perfect.]

SCENE 3.—The Joppa coast, three days later.

A whale appears on the beach and vomits forth a man. It is Jonah, who, with tears in his eyes, watches the whale as it scuttles off into deep water. That tavern becomes a thing of the invisible Beyond. Jonah squats on the sand to reckon upon his losses, by reason of losing the whale. Nineveh recedes, as does the tavern that was to be, and Jonah begins to sigh for the delights of the tavern that is, but a large voice brings him up with a round turn, as it were.

[Enter Jahveh, with a stern rock-bound expression of countenance.]

JAH. Why sit ye there cross-legged like a Turk, And mooning, Jonah? Up and unto the Great city, Nineveh, and preach ye there The preaching that I bid thee.

JON. (Hustling to his feet, and bowing deferentially). Yes, Milord. I was just a-goin' to start—soon's I'd got a breath of fresh air. It was awful in that oil tank!

JAH. Better than feeding fishes in the sea, Eh, Jonah—better far than sinking in The soup!

JON. Gosh! Yes, Milord. It beat bein' in the salty soup; but that stinkin' oil, knee deep, warn't no slouch of a soup—faugh! But thanks, awfully, as the girls say. Shall I start for Nineveh now, or go home and change my togs, Milord?

JAH. (suspicious of him). Get thee out at once. I will remove the smell thy raiment from, That on thy journey hence may not offend Olfactories fastidious. Get hence, And go thee unto Nineveh, and fail Me not, lest it go hard with thee.

JON. Yes, Milord, I'm goin' now—this minute. Good day, Milord.

[Exeunt on the road to Nineveh.]

ACT III.SCENE 1.—Nineveh. Jonah shouting like a house afire (if the comparison be allowed) to the inhabitants. Warning them of the wrath to come in forty days, unless a new leaf is turned over.Much to Jonah's disgust, he wishing to witness a barbecue on a grand scale, the new leaf was at once turned, every one in the city, from king to cowboy, turning for all he was worth. A fast was proclaimed, and all, including cows, camels, sheep, geese, etc., went into a heavy state of sackcloth and ashes, the king wallowing in the ashes of sandal wood to the queen's taste, and vice versa, probably. Yes, Nineveh fasted and, in sackcloth, wallowed in the ashes! It was a tremendous come down for the Ninevins, but it was better, they thought, than "going up," as understood. For the time being, it was sic transit gloria mundi with them, and sick transit and rapid with the disgusted Jonah for the country beyond the walls. No barbecue, no torch!SCENE 2.—Open country outside the walls of Nineveh.

[Enter Jonah, sore-headed as a bear shot in the ear.]

JON. The idea of the Lord repentin' of the evil he said he would do unto them duffers! He'd oughter socked it to 'em, that's what he'd oughter done. He makes me tired. I'd better die than live. If he'd only give that city a roast, it would be something worth livin' for to see. But no, he repents, bah! (Applies a pocket pistol to his lips and lies down in the sand and goes to sleep, to be rid of his troubles. Awakes in the morning, and lo and behold, a luxuriant gourd, grown up at his back, waves its foliage over, and protects him from the fearful blaze of the sun.)

Jonah is "exceeding glad of the gourd," he forgets or purposely omits—probably the latter—to thank the Lord for it; for he has a notion of staying there to watch the city, hoping the Lord might change his mind and sock it to Nineveh. While he was trailing up the vine, to get the most good out of it, an unfortunate calamity occurred which put a stop to his labor of love. A monster and many-jointed worm, with a mouth on him like a Connecticut pie-biter, and teeth like those of a buzz saw, attacked the gourd near the earth, and the growth of the night went down in the breath of the morning, withering like a pie in an overheated oven. This unexpected calamity broke Jonah all up, and he wept as the wog wog weeps for its young, and wanted to die—it is supposed that he cursed somewhat, from what occurred later on.

[Enter Jahveh, looking benignantly on Jonah.]

JAH. Dost thou do well to get thee on thine ear For this the gourd, eh, Jonah?

JON. Yes, I do well to get me on mine ear for this the gourd, Milord!

JAH. Hast pity for the gourd which cost thee naught,

Which thou didst not e'en cause to grow, but which Came up at night and perished in the morn?

JON. Yes, because it was a bully gourd, Milord—blast that worm!—and better than an umbrella to keep the sun off—whew! it's blasted hot here—because I didn't have to hold it.

JAH. Thou wouldst have spared the gourd, eh, Jonah?

JON. You bet, I would.

JAH. Then Jonah, should I not spare Nineveh, The city great wherein are more than six Score thousand persons who do not know B From a bull's foot, in matters righteous; Also much cattle?

Reader, this is the end of this more or less interesting tank drama. Abrupt, I am aware, but then the Holy Queer thus abruptly saws off the interview between the two principal characters in real life, and for the writer to prolong the agony by drawing on his imagination for extension, would be nothing less than impious.

How Jahveh and Jonah parted, whether in love or in anger, and what became of the hero of that insufferable oil tank, the H. Q. should have told a curious posterity, I think. In my humble opinion, whatever that may be worth, Jahveh calmly but firmly soured on Jonah and left him very suddenly and severely alone; at all events, that last interview was very suddenly and severely sawed off by the H. Q., and what became of Jonah will never be known. The probability is, that he went back to that tavern on the Joppa road, and there, with the dregs of society and of demijohns, ended a life soured by disappointment and lees of wine. It doesn't matter, anyhow. For one, I don't care what became of him. He was no company for me. Selah! SFS:OKUM.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - MARCH 23, 1889

THE California Legislature has adjourned and left the capitol. The people, who suffer from the raids on the treasury are now looking around to see if anything else is left worth mentioning.

THE priest at Ixmiquelpom has excommunicated El Pensamiento, a newspaper of Zimapan, state of Hidalgo, Mexico. The excommunication even applies to the animals owned by its editors. This is the Christianity of our sister Republic.

"THE way to get the best of an Infidel," says the Rev. Samuel Jones, "is to close his mouth. Don't listen to him. If you can stop his talking, you've got him." We can recommend Mr. Jones's advice as worthy the acceptance of all evangelizers. You may "get" an Infidel by keeping him quiet; but one thing is certain, if you let him talk he's got you.

POPE LEO has "specially" blessed Miss Caldwell, who endowed the Catholic University at Washington, D. C., with a gift of $800,000. Judge O'Connor, of San Jose, gave the same institution $50,000, and received therefor only a plain, every-day apostolic benediction. Orders for blessings in every style are taken at the Vatican from $10 upward. The patronage of fools who desire to be parted from their money is especially solicited.

Two members of the British Parliament are severely attacked by the London Times for joining with the Radical clubs in the welcome to Henry George. The Times says: "George's doctrines come as near spoliation as anything that has been proposed by a man with a character to lose, since the French revolution." We are interested to know what opinion of Mr. George will be expressed by Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, the Freethinking member of Parliament.

THE Rev. Mr. Curtis, pastor of a Presbyterian church in this city, scored a good point last Sunday against the inconsistency of Sabbatarians who would suppress all Sunday labor, yet who "go to church with their car fare in one hand and a hymn-book in the other." Mr. Curtis says that the necessity of Sunday cars and boats could be obviated by people going to some church nearer home. The right of Christians to dictate to the public how it shall travel on Sunday seems to be taken for granted by our enlightened clergymen.

FROM the Chronicle's report of the Rev. Samuel Jones's sermon, Sunday last: "Mr. Jones was particularly severe on soldiers. He said that any soldier who would swear would steal a sheep, then he would steal a bee-gum, and then— But what he would do then, according to Mr. Jones, cannot be told in a newspaper." Where, then, was C. R. Bennett, Anthony Comstock's agent for this coast? If obscenity is to be suppressed, why not begin with its most popular exponent?

THE New York Citizens' Committee to aid the Confederate Soldiers' Home at Austin, Tex., has engaged Col. R. G. Ingersoll to deliver a lecture, for the benefit of the fund, at the Academy of Music next Sunday. The committee is in receipt of the following communication from Admiral Porter:

"The Confederate veterans are, as of yore, our fellow-countrymen and, in regard to any hostile feeling between northern and southern soldiers, the latter have long since forgotten it. Out of the conflict sprang many good qualities which we might otherwise have not possessed—humanity, sympathy, and magnanimity of feeling for those who warred against the Union. The North is full of prosperity, and the South, under the new order of things, is rapidly following in her footsteps. The stars shine brightly for us all, and, having secured a perpetuation of the Union, it behooves us of the North to assist those who are now overwhelmed with adversity. This is the best way to make a united country. There should be no North, no South, but one nation, over which the stars and stripes should wave forever."

If the soldiers who fought in the war have forgotten the animosities which it engendered, it is, perhaps, time that the politicians should become reconciled.

NEWS AND NOTES.

ROCKLIN.—Rocklin not a very large place, but the breath of improvement comes with the rattle of the locomotive and the beautiful and fertile country in the vicinity. There is a round-house here, and so the otherwise quiet village has a busy and somewhat tumultuous appearance, for the railroader is always on the "go" whether at work or at home.

The bounteous rains came down, and everybody was rejoicing. It was a pleasure to watch the broad and cloudy skies, ever changing; now with white, fleecy masses, and depths of blue intermingling; and then rolling into mountainous crags and precipitous glooms belching forth torrents of rain; or again, vast mists seem floating over field and wood and dropping showers like gentle tears; or at night the shimmering moonlight sweeps in glistening floods, and the streets are sheeny, in the dim glare, with spreading waters. Day after day the stormy march rolls on, with wondrous music on the window pane and roof and battling trees, with glittering pennons of sun-glints here and there, and great masses of gold and rainbow colors which the storm king seems to fling forth as pledges of the brilliant harvest lurking in his pavilion of gloom. These have been grand days, picturesque days, days of majesty and power, for each threatening cloud brings hope, and the earth grows radiant with every tempestuous stroke. When the sun does come forth, what royal garniture will greet his way! How the hills will flash their green heads, and the plains wave their verdant splendor!

So I cared not if there were but few at the lectures. I wanted it to rain, rain, rain, as everybody else did, for there were "millions in it" for the farmers of California; more than in all the gold of the hills. However, I had good audiences, and appreciative audiences, and I have enjoyed my work and sojourn in this lively little hamlet. There are some staunch Liberals here, men and women both, few, but enough to give a noble encouragement for future efforts.

Especially have I been delighted with meeting the Kaiser family, who are heart and soul for freedom, and generous and open as the day. Every evening they were at the lectures, coming six and seven miles through the pouring rain, and, besides, bearing the brunt of the expenses for the lectures. They make a regiment in themselves, almost. There is the father and seven boys, and it does one's heart good to associate with these jovial and valiant comrades. The father, John Kaiser, came from Switzerland in 1837, with the breath of those glorious mountains of liberty in his heart and hope; although, at first, he was a devoted Methodist. He was in Ohio and Missouri for a number of years, and finally, twenty-two years ago, came to this country and took up land and began to cultivate it—two thousand dollars in debt at the time, he says. After eight years he had secured a comfortable home and paid his debts, but one night all his houses and household goods were swept away by fire—five thousand dollars' worth; but he began again, and to-day he looks over a broad expanse of two hundred and eighty acres, all his own, ornamented with vineyards, wheat field, orchards, amidst pastures and woodlands, every inch of it worth a hundred dollars an acre. It is in the centre of the recently organized citrus colony, the object of which colony is to combine for irrigating and improvement purposes. Oranges, lemons, and limes of superior quality can be raised in this section, and really there is no country in the world that can surpass this in beauty and fertility. Mr. Kaiser has been one of the foremost pioneers in developing its splendid resources. I had the pleasure on Wednesday of visiting his home, a charming place amidst fruitful hills and vales. His wine-cellar is fire proof. The product of his vintage is of the finest flavor and has taken several premiums. His farm is capable of raising almost every kind of fruit, vegetable, and grain. He has horses, cattle, and sheep. He has demonstrated that this soil, once considered almost worthless, is capable of varied cultivation and use.

His four sons, John, Charles, Henry, and Lewis, whom I met, and who with their father were at the lectures every night, keep up the spirit of work and progress. Henry flings art into his arduous out-door employments and is a painter of no mean skill, and will achieve something in the future. I felt thoroughly at home among these loyal spirits, who have not a particle of superstition left, but are bright, progressive, and earnest. The other brothers, Sam, Fred, and Jake, and Miss Mary, the daughter, who lives at Carson City, I did not see, but I expect that all have the same bright inheritance from the land of Tell, of lofty and liberty-loving humanity.

Thus the fellowship of Freethought is broadening and deepening. Thus we begin to know each other better, and power increases. The veterans of our cause have had to work alone, many of them, while the churches have been united. But now the forces are gathering for the new and brighter era. Through wide lands the spirit of fraternity prevails, and many firesides mingle light and glory for the advancement of the human race. I have found a comfortable resting-place at the Western Home Hotel, Rocklin, and Frank Tall, the proprietor, always takes good care of his guests, and so the stormy days have passed with genial surroundings.

Nature is a very whimsical providence. She comes in the "nick of time" but stays too long. A universal vote, I think, would declare that there had been plenty of rain, and that fair weather was in order; and it rolled off so beautifully on Saturday afternoon, and the spanking north wind drove on so delightfully, and the masses of white cloud melted into such gorgeous depths of blue, that it did seem that Sunday night would be all that one could wish in the way of moonlight and starlight and clear heavens; but alas! to the far-seeing prophet the signs were unfavorable—the storm rolled off against the sun, and when morning came the sun pushed before it the vast and lowering mists, and by evening the rain and winds were roaring; and I did not expect a baker's dozen at the lecture. But Pioneer Hall was nearly full. I was happily disappointed. The appreciative audience gave hope and courage. There is a large element of Liberalism in this capital city, and it gradually increases in power and prominence. With the stalwart friends always ready to aid, the future here is for Freethought and victory. The series of lectures has opened the field for larger and more fruitful work, and I go to other parts of the advancing line with heart warmed with beams of undying promise.

Saturday night I viewed the closing scenes of the California legislature. There was a vast hubbub, and what was going on it was pretty difficult for the outsider to detect. There was a rush of business and presentation speeches. A gold watch and gold-headed cane and diamond ear-rings formed a part of the brilliant display. It gave an air of social festivity to the august assembly. On the whole, they are a pretty good-looking set of men, and as honest as the average of humanity. I do not believe in these charges of corruption. I believe that all, the governor included, are trying to do the best they can in the midst of a big muddle. The very nature of politics, as now conducted, is confusion. How can there be wise legislation when such haste is necessary? Nearly a thousand bills were introduced this session. Who can judge what is right or wrong in all these? One thing seems plain to me—that there should be no legislature at all and the people be left to look after themselves, as in the old mining days; or the legislature should be in session almost constantly, and its members be paid, not by the day, but by the year—and well paid, and so be expected to do their duty faithfully. As it is now the work is but half done. How can the manifold interests of the state of California be properly looked after in a session of sixty days? It is simply an impossibility. No member can properly inform himself concerning the questions presented, and much of his legislative action must be guesswork, or the result of the dictation of committees or newspapers. The fault is not that legislators or office holders are dishonest. They are fair representative men and reflect the general conscience and intelligence of the community. The system is wrong. If we must have a legislature, pay its members well, and for a year's service, if need be, and let what work is done be well done. If any railroad, steamboat, or other business and private corporation were run in the same fashion that state affairs are run, such corporation would be bankrupt in six months. Democratic government is still an experiment, and it will take some centuries to make it a successful experiment; and as one can't do everything in a lifetime, the Demands of Liberalism make the choice battle-ground for to-day.

I had a short visit Saturday afternoon with my friend Avery, who keeps the Unitarian Sunday-school on its bright and vigorous way. It is really a pleasant gathering, and the children get at the musical and sunny side of things, and obtain from kindly associations the power to do good with pleasure, and not with fear and trembling. Friend Avery can put deep philosophy into cheerful labors.

I also, under the pilotage of friend Butterfield, wandered into the weird curiosity-shop of Dr. Light, who has a genius for almost everything. He has ransacked the bosom of the earth and sea, and his treasures are indeed beautiful and remarkable. They show the wonderfulness of nature and the long history of man, whose footsteps are still found in the dusty chambers of the gathering soil of ages. Amidst these relics of physical life are strewn bits of philosophy, and the following struck my fancy as containing the gist of all the commandments. On the walls of his office the doctor keeps these lines:

"The Lord helps every man who helps himself:

But the Lord help the man who is caught helping himself here."

That is what I should call much in little.

The doctor is an old-timer, and has had many an adventure upon the frontier, and his "shooting cane" has done effectual service. This is a cane which, apparently harmless, is loaded like a gun, and can be discharged to the very great surprise of one's assailant. It is a convenient walking-stick in a new country. Telling some of his encounters to a company of preachers, one of them solemnly asked the doctor if "he thought of his soul when he was face to face with death." He answered, "No, I didn't think of my soul then, and I haven't thought of it since. And," continued the doctor, "if I had stopped to pray to God to help me I should have been a dead man."

I have two little sparkling coins before me, one-dollar gold pieces of date 1849 and 1851. These were given me by Thomas Paine, of Grass Valley, as mementos of old days. I shall carry them with me on my pilgrimage, and so always have a dollar or two for the blows of fate. As long as these two "angels" are with me I shall never be "dead broke," and their face shall always be a reminder of my good friend of to-day, and of the star of the Revolution.

Thus treasures gather all along the way for heart and hope, and I leave Sacramento and the faithful allies here with memory of happy toils that point to a splendid future.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"ONE of the pleasures of living under a government like that of Austria," says an exchange, "was illustrated shortly after the death of Prince Rudolph. A printer's apprentice, who had heard considerable of the unpublished gossip about the affair, was so careless as to repeat some of the stories in the hearing of a person who was so ineffably contemptible as to report the matter to the authorities. As a result the boy is now serving a sentence of six months' imprisonment at hard labor for having dared to whisper aught against the royal family." This ruling would condemn the subjects of the greater majority of royal families to absolute silence, unless such subjects were hypocrites. The character of royalty is generally of the kind that will not admit of any but adverse mention.

THE LOCAL SOCIETY.

All the Liberals in the vicinity are asked to attend the meeting next Sunday evening, March 24, at the hall of the San Francisco Turn Verein, 323 Turk street, at 7:30 o'clock. Professor Miller will deliver an address and a permanent organization will be formed.

OUR PIOUS ADMINISTRATION.

We are entering upon four years of National Piety. The president and his secretary of state have secured pews in a Presbyterian church at Washington; orders have gone forth that no business is to be transacted at the White House on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday; Postmaster-general Wanamaker will visit Philadelphia once a week to take charge of his Sunday-school; and Mr. Procter, secretary of the war department, it is reported, has abolished the Sunday dress parade of the boys in blue.

It will be a most edifying spectacle for the people of this country to behold their representatives bowing themselves down before the contemporary fetich, and participating in the incantations of Presbyterian superstition-mongers. We shall all take pride in knowing that our state buildings are locked every seventh day by the Roman hypocrite and cut-throat who made Sunday the Sabbath fifteen hundred years ago. Likewise shall we be glad to know that the same barbarian assumes command of our army on that day. The people of Washington who have enjoyed listening to the band on Sunday will gladly forego that pleasure when they come to realize that the musicians' souls are taken out of jeopardy by the new order. The Washington Post hints that the arrangement is directly in the interest of the liquor traffic, because when the soldiers are off duty they will imbibe more than when they have to drill or mount guard.

But Postmaster-general Wanamaker's position will be the most critical. Every Sunday he will be found at church endeavoring to teach morality from a book which, under a fair construction of the postal laws, would be condemned as unmailable by the department of which he is the head.

Fortunately we are able to say that these men do not represent the sentiment of the American people. There are a lot of devout old women who admire piety, but the average citizen does not, to use his own expression, care a "damn" for it. Society—the snobs, the dudes, and the dead-beats—go to church, and the ignorant and the imitative follow their example. Public men, in our day as in all other days, simply conform to the popular error.

INTERESTING REMINISCENCES.

Gen. W. T. Sherman, in the North American Review for March, gives some most interesting reminiscences of early times in this state. He says:

"In 1846 the United States declared war to exist with Mexico, and I, as a lieutenant of C. Q. Tompkins's company of the Third Artillery, was sent in the U. S. storeship Lexington to California, around Cape Horn, 198 days buffeting with the winds and waves, yet arriving, January 29, 1847, at Monterey, the most speedy and convenient route possible at that day. There was no city of San Francisco then. Our orders were to occupy and hold Monterey, the capital of Alta, or Upper California."

"In 1847, only forty-two years ago, there was no such thing as a mail in California. Letters came straggling by chance ships from China, Valparaiso, Callao, and the Sandwich Islands. The adjutant-general of the army, afterwards from Washington, sent across land, by Kit Carson, F. X. Aubrey, and Roubideau, a few official letters once a year by way of Fort Leavenworth, Santa Fe, Los Angeles, etc., starting usually in September of each year and reaching our headquarters at Monterey in May of the following year. That was the surest and most expeditious way we in California could receive letters from our Eastern friends in 1847, 1848, and part of 1849."

In the days spoken of by General Sherman, San Francisco was known as Yerba Buena. Captain Folsom was quartered here, and established a semi-monthly mail between Yerba Buena and San Diego, with three intermediate stations—Monterey, "Dana's" (Nipomo), and Los Angeles. This was the first mail-route ever established on the Pacific coast.

"California, from 1848 to 1888," says General Sherman, "passed through all the phases of civilization which England did in the past thousand years. In 1846 it was an outlying Mexican province. At that time there was not a shod horse in California, not a tavern, hotel, or a common wagon road. We traveled by trails, on horseback, sleeping by the roadside, eating jerked meat, or game shot with our rifles; and now California has better hotels, better markets, more convenient appurtenances for travel, than London, Paris, or Vienna, and as good stores, factories, and machine shops. When I first rode into Yerba Buena, now San Francisco, in 1847, I could not command a roof, a common meal, or even buy oats, barley, or hay for my tired horse. Now anybody can obtain a good carriage, hotel, and room as luxurious as can be found in the world."

Old San Franciscans will read with pleasure and pride these resuscitated memories of an era that preceded by many moons the time when the water came up to Montgomery street.

WHAT IS THE DIFFERENCE?

Freethinkers are often criticised for using the phrase "the Christian superstition" when referring to what is commonly known as the Christian religion. But what is the difference, except, as has been said, that religion is superstition in fashion, and superstition is religion out of fashion? The Christian religion has gone out of fashion so far as Freethinkers are concerned, and it is therefore quite proper, under the definition, to refer to it as superstition.

But can Christian scholars themselves distinguish between the two? To show that they cannot so distinguish, note the various translations of Acts xvii, 22. The common version has it:

"Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious."

The Unitarian version gives this rendering:

"Ye men of Athens, I perceive that ye are exceedingly addicted to the worship of demons."

Archbishop Newcomb thought it should read thus:

"Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are somewhat too religious."

And the eminent theologian, Dr. Lardner, translates the text as follows:

"Paul, therefore, standing up in the midst of the Areopagus, said, Ye men of Athens, I perceive that ye are in all things very religious."

If Paul's language was as indefinite as the translations of it, it is no wonder that the men of Athens did not understand him and told him they would see him later. As Robert Taylor observed, "these various translators discovered more than they meant to, namely, that religion and superstition are convertible terms."

THE "Sabbath Imposture," a pamphlet by Harry Hoover, 10 cents per copy; six for 50 cents; fifteen for $1.

THERE is a law on the statute books of this state which forbids church corporations to hold land, except such as is occupied by buildings used for religious purposes. The Catholic church evades the law by putting its real estate in the hands of the archbishop. The church, in the name of P. W. Riordan (archbishop), has for a long time held a tract of land at the corner of Sixteenth and Dolores streets, this city, part of which is a burying ground, and has hitherto prevented the opening of Sixteenth street. Two years ago the Board of Health got the best of the church by condemning the property as a nuisance and enforcing its sale, which has just been recorded, the city being the purchaser. The remains of some five hundred persons will have to be exhumed. People owing burial lots are powerless to protest, and cannot recover. But the church is all right. It was paid for the property in lots, and now it gets the money for the entire tract.

SECULAR THOUGHT, of Toronto, Canada, a most excellent Secular journal, has a Sustaining Fund to meet the financial deficiencies incident to its publication. The Independent Pulpit, another good Freethought periodical, published at Waco, Texas, has an Extension Fund for general purposes, and the Rev. or ex-Rev. Hugh O. Pentecost's Twentieth Century derives much of its circulation from gift subscriptions. We are pleased at these evidences of co-operation everywhere among reformers, and for the encouragement of the patrons of other Liberal journals, we propose shortly to publish a few communications from our friends in the West and East to show how the readers of FREETHOUGHT stand ready to see it through any difficulties it may encounter. The encouragement extended is almost as surprising as gratifying.

THE Rev. Joseph Bloom, a young Englishman who recently resigned the pastorate of the Free Will Baptist church at Oswego Falls, N. Y., because of some difference with his congregation, and joined the Close Communion Baptists, has been arrested for stealing a horse and sleigh from a livery stable keeper at Oneida. He denied the charge, but, nevertheless, was taken to Oswego, where he had sold the animal, and was fully identified. He was held in $1,000 bail to answer. When events of this kind occur it is appropriate to sing that good old hymn:

"Am I a soldier of the cross,
A follower of the lamb,
And shall I fear to steal a horse
Or blush to ride the same?"

THE press gives the Seventh-day Adventists credit for 250,000 signatures to the remonstrance petition against the Blair Sunday Rest bill. This in the face of the fact that the Seventh-day Adventists of the whole country do not number more than 25,000 all told. These Adventists have been wonderfully active in the matter, but it is doubtful if any of them secured any more signatures than Mr. John W. Abbott, of New Cambria, Kan., who forwarded a petition bearing the names of one thousand voters.

THE Independent Pulpit, published by J. D. Shaw, at Waco, Texas, enters upon its seventh volume. It has a new title letter in six-line pica Hogarth style, and offers inducements to subscribers which should give it a wide circulation.

ONE result of the recent storm was the blowing down of a school-house in San Diego. The dispatch relates that the teacher and one of her pupils, the latter a daughter of our friend Ranford Worthing, were severely hurt.

NEW YORK for one year—during the mayoralty of Abram S. Hewitt—enjoyed the luxury of freedom from Irish control, Mr. Hewitt having declared that while he held the position of mayor none but the American flag should be raised on public buildings. Last fall Mr. Hewitt ran for a second term, but was rejected. A Romanist succeeded him, and on Monday, St. Patrick's day, the Catholic rag waved again over the city hall.

"A YOUNG man named Varnham, who has been an Infidel lecturer, has been quite successful as a revivalist recently in Lincoln, Placer county, and is an applicant for licensure by the Bay Congregational Association. At his examination he stated that he had never studied theology and did not think he ever should."—Chronicle.

Varnham—Varnham! The name is unfamiliar to us. Does anybody know this distinguished iconoclast?

THE German government suppresses about one newspaper per week. Last week it was a Bremen journal which had attacked Bismarck. This week it is the Volke, a Socialist organ, published in Berlin. Bismarck may tinker with the rights of man for a few years, but they will outlive him and assert themselves when he is remembered only for his brutal abuse of power.

THE applications for places in the consular service reveal the fact that there are a great many clergymen in the country who want to go to Jerusalem at government expense. The salary is good, the duties are light, and the surroundings are "sacred." We move that all clerical applicants for the position of consul to Jerusalem be given the portfolio in perpetuity.

OBSERVATIONS.

About forty people threaded the intricacies of the entrance to Crusaders' Hall, on Market street, last Sunday evening, to attend the meeting called to organize a local Liberal Union. There were some things to prevent a larger attendance. In the first place, it rained hard and the streets were muddy. In the next place, none but a natural-born discoverer could find the particular hall where the meeting was held. Crusaders' Hall is one of a dozen or more in the same building, and is approached through a long series of ante-rooms, where a visitor might get tangled up and turned around, and unless he had a good deal of confidence in himself he would in a short time be glad to find the door he came in at, and escape through it. Mr. Derming acted as pilot for awhile, but got lost, and a man who went to look for him did not reappear. A third trouble arose from the numerous other meetings held simultaneously in the various halls. Mr. Walker, who went from the cellar of the building to the roof before he found a familiar face, reported that overhead a large assemblage of Japanese people were celebrating some sort of heathen rite. In another room a spiritual test medium held forth, and her audience sang the "Sweet By and By" and "Nearer, My God, to Thee," most of the evening. From still another direction could be heard the voice of the single tax advocate, setting forth with fervid eloquence the theory that gold should be exempt from the burdens of wealth, but that the hole which it came out of should be taxed. How many meetings were scattered about elsewhere I did not learn.

At 8 o'clock it was decided that all who intended to be present had either arrived or been lost, or that some other meeting had absorbed them, and Mr. Schou called the audience into the front seats and introduced it to Professor Miller. The professor gave a thirty-minutes' address on the subject of organization, and read an editorial on "Local Liberal Societies" from last week's FREETHOUGHT. At the close of Professor Miller's remarks the question of organization was raised, and deferred until such time as the weather would permit more ladies to attend. Only two were present, and a unanimous sentiment prevailed that the number was too small. Mr. Schou spoke briefly, and appeared inclined to take up a collection, but was restrained, and abandoned the project gloomily. Adjournment was had early to give the people a chance to join in social converse, which they did. Everybody had a good time looking at Mr. Furgason, of Oakland, who is so tall that no one would be surprised to see him reach up and gather in a handful of stars on a clear night. Mr. Pingree was there too, so that the occasion was a success. The next meeting will be held at the Turners' Hall, 323 Turk street, on Sunday evening, March 24, and no excuse will be accepted from those who fail to attend.

1 "We have to record," says the London Freethinker of February 24, "the death of Tom Mead, the well-known Shaksperian actor. Mr. Mead died on Sunday at Islington. He was a histrion of the old school. He played leading parts with Phelps at Sadler's Wells, and gained a high reputation for intelligence and conscientiousness. Latterly, he served under Irving. Mr. Mead was an earnest Freethinker who always avowed his heresy. He had many friends, but we fancy not a single enemy."

I used to see Mr. Mead occasionally in New York. He attended one of the festive occasions of the Liberal Club, and gave us the best recitation I ever heard—except that of Mr. Watts, entitled the "Maniac"—his subject being Shakspeare's "Seven Ages of Man." Some critics thought Mead as great as Irving. Theatrical managers are known by the company they keep, and certainly Irving must have realized this when he retained Tom Mead.

This Palestine pilgrimage is really taking a serious form. I cull the appended expressions from the New York Truth Seeker of March 9. The editor thus says:

"This is a pleasant resolution to receive concerning a well-beloved brother:

LONGMONT, COL., Feb. 22, 289.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: In compliance with a resolution of the Longmont Secular Union, we address through you the Liberals of the United States and Canada. We do this for the purpose of inaugurating, if possible, some plan by which that rising light of Liberalism, George E. Macdonald, the spicy associate editor of FREETHOUGHT, may, in the interest of our cause, be sent around the world, as was D. M. Bennett, a few years ago, to make and to publish in book form the observations of the journey; the books to be furnished at cost to the parties who subscribe the funds necessary to the carrying out of this undertaking.

We, therefore, invite all who are interested in this matter to correspond in regard to it with us and each other through your columns.

JOHN R. KELSO, Committee. {
GEORGIANA RICE,
ETTA D. KELSO.

"There are several leagues of territory intervening between this office and the generous person of our only brother, but still we feel that he is nearer than he would be if he were wandering around the streets of Jerusalem, turning over ash barrels and peering into dark corners looking for signs of our risen Lord, and we cannot say that we indorse this scheme very heartily. That his book, or books, would be worth several times the cost we willingly grant. The "Innocents Abroad" would be nothing to them. But the effects of such a trip are too far-reaching. After his explorations the Sunday-school maps would all have to be changed and another committee appointed to revise the New Testament. The economy of the theological world would be disturbed, and the old gentlemen up here in the Bible House might get excited. It wouldn't do to unsettle their geographical and historical convictions on biblical subjects. The lunatic asylums are not numerous enough. Better let George stay where he is, though if it is determined to send him out of the country, we know a few good people who ought to be willing to contribute heavily."

The Longmont brethren and sisters awaken within me a most lively sense of gratitude, for I am not one of those suspicious persons who would detect in their pleasantly-worded communication a covert scheme to get me out of the country. I calmly await the decision of the public appealed to. Let the agitation proceed, but the fact should not be overlooked that the people of Palestine and other sterile precincts of the occident may deserve to be considered in connection with the enterprise. Who knows what sort of a reception a man wearing a Wettstein badge-pin would get from the uncircumcised and unspeakable barbarians of Asia Minor? Some good Mohammedan might set me down for a new kind of Jower (I speak phonetically, meaning Giaour), and eviscerate me with his cimeter. Of course, in such case, the joke would be on the Mussulman, but that would not obtund the grief of my surviving relatives. And then who, in that arid land, would see that my grave was kept perennially verdant? These contingencies are to be provided for, as I do not wish to do anything to strain the diplomatic relations between the United States and Judea. All the members of our new administration are sprouting wings for angels, and trouble with the birth-place of the savior might retard their development. Far be it from me to do this, because the sooner these men are angels the sooner will they be truly happy.

The following poem by Richard Realf under the title of "Indirection," has occupied the columns of the paper for the past half-dozen years and perhaps more—I have known it for that length of time. Now it has been forwarded anonymously for publication in FREETHOUGHT:

Fair are the flowers and the children, but their subtle suggestion is fairer;
Rare is the rose-burst of dawn, but the secret that clasps it is rarer;
Sweet the exultance of song, but the strain that precedes it is sweeter;
And never was poem yet writ, but the meaning outmastered the meter.

Never a daisy that grows, but a mystery guideth the growing;
Never a river that flows, but a majesty scepters the flowing;
Never a Shakespeare that soared, but a stronger than he did enfold him;
Nor ever a prophet foretells, but a mightier seer hath foretold him.

Back of the canvas that throbs, the painter is hinted and hidden;
Into the statue that breathes, the soul of the sculptor is bidden;
Under the joy that is felt, lies the infinite issues of feeling;
Crowning the glory revealed, is the glory that crowns the revealing.

Great are the symbols of being, but that which is symbolized is greater;
Vast the create and beheld, but vaster the inward creator;
Back of the sound broods the silence, back of the gift stands the giving;
Back of the hand that receives, thrill the sensitive nerves of receiving.

Space is nothing to spirit, the deed is outdone by the doing;
The heart of the wooer is warm, but warmer the heart of the wooing;
And up from the pits where these shiver, and up from the heights where those shine,

Twin voices and shadows swim starward, and the essence of life is divine.

I put the poem in here at a venture. I can generally tell when anything is adapted to our columns, but I do not feel very confident about the foregoing. It has a good jingle and the heading fits it. "Indirection" gives no clue to the meaning of the poem, and the poem does not furnish a definition of its title. I do not deny that I admire the work. I have no doubt that it was written to amuse, or instruct, or, more indefinitely, to "edify." It seems to be composed of a series of declarative sentences. The reader gets a good grip on the first part of each line, but the last part dematerializes, and leaves him nothing to hang on to. He wobbles along back to the beginning of the next verse, and then slides off again into space.

I would like to have some authority on poems tell what department of verse this poem belongs to. It starts off in a pastoral way that has gained it admission into some of the agricultural journals, but does not sustain that character throughout. It is slightly epic, somewhat tragic, and eminently elegaic. Yet it is neither epic, nor tragic, nor elegaic, but esthetic. It seems further to be pervaded, more or less, with theosophy and metaphysics. It may be a cryptogram, a study of which would reveal that the Lord's Prayer was written by Dr. Monroe, of the Iron-clad Age. Perhaps it is a bugle call to the conflict, and may be some action is necessary at once. Perchance it demands a reply. If it is an attack on our climate, I will take the responsibility of casting back its aspersions in the teeth of the maligner of innocence. Again, has it any reference to the delinquent subscriber in his relations with the editor? As thus:

—Back of the gift stands the giving;
Back of the hand that receives thrill the sensitive nerves of receiving.

These lines shadow forth vaguely that sometime the writer has published a paper, and has felt the intoxicating joy of opening a communication from a backward member in a doubtful district, and finding inclosed payment in full of all arrearages and one year in advance. I have sometimes had my nerves worked upon in this way, and have found a series of saltant excursions over chairs, tables, counters, and other occupants of the room, the only sedative that would diminish the preternaturally increased action of the liver and restore me to a fit condition for further literary effort. M.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

It is understood that a branch of the Young Men's Christian Association is to be established adjacent to the State University at Berkeley, for the "benefit" of the students.—Railroad blockades on the Oregon line caused by the recent rains necessitate the carrying of mails for Oregon and Washington by way of Ogden.—The Socialists of San Francisco celebrated, on March 18, the anniversary of the Paris Commune of 1871. Addresses were made by P. Ross Martin, Messrs. Rudinger, White, and others. About 300 people were present.—Judge Hoadley, as counsel for Chae Chang Ping, has filed with the clerk of the United States Supreme Court his brief in the suit brought to test the validity of the Chinese Exclusion act.—Professor Hilgard, of the California University, is mentioned as the probable assistant secretary of the national department of agriculture.—The government of China has, for the first time, been compelled to make an appeal to the citizens of America for aid in relieving the suffering of her subjects from floods and famine. It is expected that the sum of $20,000 will be contributed by the Chinese of this city.—Harry Holmes, the Salvationist in jail at Sacramento for the crime of incest committed upon his seven-year-old daughter, committed suicide by starving himself, and was found dead in his cell March 16.—Peter L. Wimmer and Cornelia Tracy, of Valley Center, San Diego Co., were married March 8, without the services of priest or judge. The contract which made them husband and wife reads as follows: "Recognizing the eternal laws of mateship and the natural need of the right relation between the sexes, we, Peter L. Wimmer, Jr., and Cornelia Tracy, by these presents make known to the world that we hereby bind ourselves to each other as man and wife, and mutually pledge to each other love and fidelity for life."—The exodus from San Diego to the Santa Clara mines has not wholly ceased, although the "rush" is ended. Late reports from the gold fields are not of a cheering nature.

Ex-President Cleveland has gone on an excursion to Cuba.—George Francis Train again announces his retirement from active participation in the affairs of this world.—Great damage has been done by storms on the New Jersey coast.—United States senators think their salaries should be raised from $5,000 to $10,000 per annum.—Six hundred men were thrown out of work by the recent fire in the Anaconda mines near Helena, Mont.—Beecher's country home at Peekskill, N. Y., has been sold for $75,000.—The Rev. Justin D. Fulton, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was recently denied the use of a Baptist church in Richmond, Va., on account of his utterances in favor of race equality and the obliteration of the color line.—The Rev. Mr. Cunningham has been conducting a revival in the neighborhood of Braxton Courthouse, W. Va. He started a crusade against some unpopular people in the vicinity, with the result that a gang of his converts tore down eight dwelling houses and drove the inmates away. Twenty-five of the fervent Christians are under bail to await the action of the grand jury.—The legislature of Arizona has enacted a Sunday Closing law.

William O'Brien, the Irish editor and agitator, now in jail, is offered his liberty if he will promise not to agitate any more, but refuses to accept freedom unless it is unconditional.—Boulangier has made an address in self-defense, denying that his party contemplates a monarchy, and explaining that the goal toward which they are marching is a non-parliamentary republic, which shall be a protector to the weak and lowly and be preoccupied with the interests of the people, respecting the liberty of individuals, and above all the liberty of conscience.—New Zealand settlers, living in the neighborhood of Poverty bay, have had a great scare lately over the threatened uprising of Te Kooti, a Maori fanatic. The man claimed to be the savior of his people, and was at the head of a considerable force of natives, when the government troops prevented his advance.—The missionaries captured by the native insurgents at Zanzibar have been released upon the payment of $3,000. In addition to the ransom money the Germans surrendered twenty-two slaves which had fallen into their hands.

HUMANITY'S GAIN FROM UNBELIEF.

Charles Bradlaugh, M. P., in the North American Review.

As an unbeliever, I ask leave to plead that humanity has been a real gainer from skepticism, and that the gradual and growing rejection of Christianity—like the rejection of the faiths which preceded it—has, in fact, added, and will add, to man's happiness and well-being. I maintain that, in physics, science is the outcome of skepticism, and that general progress is impossible without skepticism on matters of religion. I mean by religion, every form of belief which accepts or asserts the supernatural. I write as a Monist, and use the word "nature" as meaning all phenomena, every phenomenon, all that is necessary for the happening of any and every phenomenon. Every religion is constantly changing, and at any given time is the measure of the civilization attained by what Guizot described as the juste milieu of those who profess it. Each religion is slowly, but certainly, modified in its dogma and practice by the gradual development of the peoples among whom it is professed. Each discovery destroys in whole or part some theretofore-cherished belief. No religion is suddenly rejected by any people; it is, rather, gradually outgrown. None see a religion die; dead religions are like dead languages and obsolete customs; the decay is long, and, like the glacier-march, is only perceptible to the careful watcher by comparisons extending over long periods. A superseded religion may often be traced in the festivals, ceremonies, and dogmas of the religion which has replaced it. Traces of obsolete religions may often be found in popular customs, in old-wives' stories, and in children's tales.

It is necessary, in order that my plea should be understood, that I should explain what I mean by Christianity; and in the very attempt at this explanation there will, I think, be found strong illustration of the value of unbelief. Christianity in practice may be gathered from its more ancient forms represented by the Roman Catholic and the Greek churches; or from the various churches which have grown up in the last few centuries. Each of these churches calls itself Christian. Some of them deny the right of the others to use the word Christian. Some Christian churches treat, or have treated, other Christian churches as heretics or unbelievers. The Roman Catholics and the Protestants in Great Britain and Ireland have, in turn, been terribly cruel one to the other, and the ferocious laws of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries enacted by the English Protestants against English and Irish Papists are a disgrace to civilization. These penal laws, enduring longest in Ireland, still bear fruit in much of the political mischief and agrarian crime of to-day. It is only the tolerant indifference of skepticism that has repealed, one after the other, most of the laws directed by the Established Christian Church against Papists and Dissenters, and also against Jews and heretics. Church-of-England clergymen have in the past gone to great lengths in denouncing non-conformity; and even in the present day an effective example of such denunciatory bigotry may be found in a sort of orthodox catechism written by the Rev. F. A. Grace, of Great Barling, Essex, the popularity of which is vouched for by the fact that it has gone through ten editions. This catechism for little children teaches that "dissent is a great sin" and that Dissenters "worship God according to their own evil and corrupt imaginations, and not according to his revealed will, and therefore their worship is idolatrous." Church-of-England Christians and dissenting Christians, when fraternizing amongst themselves, often publicly draw the line at Unitarians, and positively deny that these have any sort of right to call themselves Christians.

In the first half of the seventeenth century, Quakers were flogged and imprisoned in England as blasphemers, and the early Christian settlers in New England, escaping from the persecution of old-world Christians, showed scant mercy to the followers of Fox and Penn. It is customary, in controversy, for those advocating the claims of Christianity to include all good done by men in nominally Christian countries, as if such good were the result of Christianity, while they contend that the evil which exists prevails in spite of Christianity. I shall try to make out that the ameliorating march of the last few centuries has been initiated by the heretics of each age, though I quite concede that the men and women denounced and persecuted as Infidels by the pious of one century are frequently classed as saints by the pious of a later generation.

What, then, is Christianity? As a system or scheme of doctrine, Christianity may, I submit, not unfairly be gathered from the Old and New Testaments. It is true that some Christians to-day desire to escape from submission to part, at any rate, of the Old Testament; but this very tendency seems to me to be part of the result of the beneficial heresy for which I am pleading. Man's humanity has revolted against Old Testament barbarism, and, therefore, he has attempted to dissociate the Old Testament from Christianity. Unless Old and New Testaments are accepted as God's revelation to man, Christianity has no higher claim than any other of the world's many religions—if no such claim can be made out for it apart from the Bible. And though it is quite true that some who deem themselves Christians put the Old Testament completely in the background, this is, I allege, because they are outgrowing their Christianity. Without the doctrine of the atoning sacrifice of Jesus, Christianity as a religion is naught; but unless the story of Adam's fall is accepted, the redemption from the consequences of that fall cannot be believed. Both in Great Britain and in the United States the Old and New Testaments are forced upon the people as part of Christianity, for it is blasphemy at common law to deny the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments to be of divine authority, and such denial is punishable with fine and imprisonment, or even worse. The rejection of Christianity intended throughout this paper is, therefore, the rejection of the Old and New Testaments as being of divine revelation. It is the rejection alike of the authorized teachings of the Church of Rome and of the Church of England, as these may be found in the Bible; the creeds, the encyclicals, the prayer-book, the canons, and the homilies of either or both of these churches. It is the rejection of the Christianity of Luther, of Calvin, and of Wesley.

A ground frequently taken by Christian theologians is that the progress and civilization of the world are due to Christianity, and the discussion is complicated by the fact that many eminent servants of humanity have been nominal Christians of one or other of the sects. My allegation will be that the special service rendered to human progress by these exceptional men has not been in consequence of their adhesion to Christianity, but in spite of it; and that the specific points of advantage to human kind have been in ratio of their direct opposition to precise Biblical enactments. Take one clear gain to humanity consequent on unbelief—i. e., the abolition of slavery in some countries, the abolition of the slave trade in most civilized countries, and the tendency to its total abolition. I am unaware of any religion in the world which in the past forbade slavery. The professors of Christianity for ages supported it; the Old Testament repeatedly sanctioned it by special laws; the New Testament has no repealing declaration. Though we are at the close of the nineteenth century of the Christian era, it is only during the past three-quarters of a century that the battle for freedom has been gradually won. It is scarcely a quarter of a century since the famous emancipation amendment was carried to the United States Constitution; and it is impossible for any well-informed Christian to deny that the abolition movement in North America was most steadily and bitterly opposed by the religious bodies in the various states. Henry Wilson, in his "Rise and Fall of the Slave-Power in America;" Samuel J. May, in his "Recollections of the Anti-Slavery Conflict," and J. Greenleaf Whittier, in his poems, alike are witnesses that the Bible and pulpit, the church and its great influence, were used against abolition and in favor of the slave-owner. I know that Christians in the present day often declare that Christianity had a large share in bringing about the abolition of slavery, and this because men professing Christianity were Abolitionists. I plead that those so-called Christian Abolitionists were men and women whose humanity—recognizing freedom for all—was, in this, in direct conflict with Christianity. It is not yet fifty years since the European Christian Powers jointly agreed to abolish the slave trade. What of the effect of Christianity on these Powers in the centuries which had preceded? The heretic Condorcet pleaded powerfully for freedom, while Christian France was still slave-holding. For many centuries Christian Spain and Christian Portugal held slaves. Porto Rico freedom is not of long date, and Cuban emancipation is even yet newer. It was a Christian king, Charles V., and a Christian friar, who founded in Spanish America the slave-trade between the Old World and the New. For some 1,800 years almost all Christians kept slaves, bought slaves, bred slaves, sold slaves, stole slaves. Pious Bristol and godly Liverpool, less than one hundred years ago, openly grew rich on the traffic. During the ninth century Greek Christians sold slaves to the Saracens. In the eleventh century prostitutes were publicly sold in Rome as slaves, and the profit went to the church.

It is said that William Wilberforce was a Christian, but, at any rate, his Christianity was strongly diluted with unbelief. As an Abolitionist, he did not believe Leviticus xxv, 44-46; he must have rejected Exodus xxi, 2-6; he could not have accepted the many permissions and injunctions by the Bible deity to his chosen people to capture and hold slaves. In the House of Commons on the 18th of February, 1796, Wilberforce reminded that Christian assembly that Infidel and anarchic France had given liberty to the Africans, whilst Christian and monarchic England was "obstinately continuing a system of cruelty and injustice." Wilberforce, whilst advocating the abolition of slavery, found the whole influence of the English court and the great weight of the Episcopal bench against him. George III., a most Christian king, regarded abolition theories with abhorrence, and the Christian House of Lords was utterly opposed to granting freedom to the slave. When Christian missionaries, some sixty-two years ago, preached to Demerara negroes under the rule of Christian England, they were treated by Christian judges, holding commission from Christian England, as criminals for so preaching. A Christian commissioned officer, member of the Established Church of England, signed the auction notices for the sale of slaves as late as the year 1824. In the evidence before a Christian court-martial a missionary is charged with having tended to make the negroes dissatisfied with their condition as slaves, and with having promoted discontent and dissatisfaction among the slaves against their lawful masters. For this the Christian judges sentenced the Demerara Abolitionist missionary to be hanged by the neck till he was dead. The judges belonged to the Established Church; the missionary was a Methodist. In this the Church-of-England Christians in Demerara were no worse than Christians of other sects. Their Roman Catholic Christian brethren in St. Domingo fiercely attacked the Jesuits as criminals, because they treated the negroes as though they were men and women, in encouraging "two slaves to separate their interest and safety from that of the gang," whilst orthodox Christians let them couple promiscuously and breed for the benefit of the owners, like any other of their plantation cattle. In 1823 the Royal Gazette (Christian) of Demerara said: "We shall not suffer you to enlighten our slaves, who are by law our property, till you can demonstrate that, when they are made religious and knowing, they will continue to be our slaves."

When William Lloyd Garrison, the pure-minded and most earnest Abolitionist, delivered his first antislavery address in Boston, Massachusetts, the only building he could obtain in which to speak was the Infidel hall owned by Abner Kneeland, the "Infidel" editor of the Boston Investigator, who had been sent to jail for blasphemy. All the Christian sects had, in turn, refused Mr. Lloyd Garrison the use of the buildings they severally controlled. Lloyd Garrison told me himself how honored deacons of a Christian church joined in an actual attempt to hang him. When abolition was advocated in the United States in 1790, the representative from South Carolina was able to plead that the Southern clergy "did not condemn either slavery or the slave-trade," and Mr. Jackson, the representative from Georgia, pleaded that "from Genesis to Revelation" the current was favorable to slavery. Elias Hicks, the brave Abolitionist Quaker, was denounced as an Atheist, and less than twenty years ago a Hicksite Quaker was expelled from one of the Southern American legislatures because of the reputed irreligion of these Abolitionist "Friends." When the Fugitive-Slave law was under discussion in North America, large numbers of clergymen, of nearly every denomination, were found ready to defend this infamous act. Samuel James May, the famous Abolitionist, was driven from the pulpit as irreligious, solely because of his attacks on slave-holding. Northern clergymen tried to induce "silver-tongued" Wendell Phillips to abandon his advocacy of abolition. Southern pulpits rang with praises for the murderous attack on Charles Sumner. The slayers of Elijah Lovejoy were highly-reputed Christian men.

Guizot, notwithstanding that he tries to claim that the church exerted its influence to restrain slavery, says ("European Civilization," Vol. I., p. 110):

"It has often been repeated that the abolition of slavery among modern people is entirely due to Christians. That, I think, is saying too much. Slavery existed for a long period in the heart of Christian society, without its being particularly astonished or irritated. A multitude of causes, and a great development in other ideas and principles of civilization, were necessary for the abolition of this iniquity of all iniquities."

And my contention is that this "development in other ideas and principles of civilization" was long retarded by governments in which the Christian church was dominant. The men who advocated liberty were imprisoned, racked, and burned, so long as the church was strong enough to be merciless. The Rev. Francis Minton, Rector of Middlewich, in his recent earnest volume on the struggles of labor, admits that "a few centuries ago slavery was acknowledged throughout Christendom to have the divine sanction. . . . Neither the exact cause nor the precise time of the decline of the belief in the righteousness of slavery can be defined. It was, doubtless, due to a combination of causes, one probably being as indirect as the recognition of the greater economy of free labor. With the decline of the belief, the abolition of slavery took place." The institution of slavery was actually existent in Christian Scotland in the seventeenth century, where the white coal-workers and salt-workers of East Lothian were chattels, as were their negro brethren in the Southern States thirty years since, and "went to those who succeeded to the property of the works, and they could be sold, bartered, or pawned." There is, says J. M. Robertson, "no trace that the Protestant clergy of Scotland ever raised a voice against the slavery which grew up before their eyes. And it was not until 1799, after Republican and irreligious France had set the example, that it was legally abolished."

(To be Concluded.)

THEORY AND PRACTICE.*

Nothing, perhaps, shows so plainly as the history of Christianity how little theory and practice harmonize in human life; how little pains is taken, even by those whose calling it is to uphold established doctrines, to apply their natural consequences to practical life. The Christian religion, no doubt, as well as the Buddhist, when stripped of all dogmatic and fabulous nonsense, contains an admirable human kernel, and precisely that human portion of Christian teaching—in the best sense social-democratic—which preaches the equality of all men before God, the loving of your neighbor as yourself, love in general in the noblest sense, a fellow-feeling with the poor and wretched, and so forth—precisely those truly human sides of the Christian doctrine are so natural, so noble, so pure, that we unhesitatingly adopt them into the moral doctrine of our monistic natural religion. Nay, the social instincts of the higher animals on which we found this religion (for instance, the marvelous sense of duty of ants, etc.) are in this best sense strictly Christian.

And what—we may ask—what have the professed supporters, the "learned divines," of this religion of love done? Their deeds are written in letters of blood in the history of the civilization of mankind during the last eighteen hundred years. All else that differing church-religions have accomplished for the forcible extension of their doctrines and for the extirpation of heretics of other creeds, all that the Jews have been guilty of towards the heathen, the Roman emperors towards the Christians, the Mo-hammadans towards Christians and Jews alike—all this is outdone by the hecatombs of human victims which Christianity has demanded for the spread of her doctrines. And these were Christians against Christians—orthodox Christians against heterodox Christians! Think only of the Inquisition in the Middle Ages, of the inconceivable and inhuman barbarities committed by the “most Christian kings” of Spain, by their worthy colleagues in Frankfort, in Italy, and elsewhere. Hundreds of thousands then died that most horrible death by fire, simply because they would not bend their reason to pass under the yoke of the grossest superstition, and because their loyalty to their convictions forbade them to deny the natural truth that they clearly discerned. There are no deeds more hideous, base, and inhuman than those that at that time were committed—nay, are still committed—in the name and on account of “true Christianity.”

And finally, how do matters stand with regard to the morality of the priests who announce themselves as the ministers of God's Word, and whose duty is therefore above all others to carry out the saving doctrines of Christianity in their own lives? The long, unbroken, and horrible series of crimes of every kind which is offered by the history of the Roman popes is the best answer to this question. And just as these “vicars of God on earth” did, so did their subordinates and accomplices, so, too, have the orthodox priests of the other sects done; never failing to set the practice of their own course of life in the strongest possible contrast to those noble doctrines of Christian love which were constantly on their lips.

The Shipman's Tale.

Listen, my masters! I speak naught but truth.
From dawn to dawn they drifted on and on,
Not knowing whither nor to what dark end.
Now the North froze them, now the hot South scorched.
Some called to God, and found great comfort so;
Some gnashed their teeth with curses, and some laughed
An empty laughter, seeing they yet lived,
So sweet was breath between their foolish lips.
Day after day the same relentless sun,
Night after night the same un pitying stars.
At intervals fierce lightnings tore the clouds,
Showing vast hollow spaces, and the sleet
Hissed, and the torrents of the sky were loosed.
From time to time a hand relaxed its grip,
And some pale wretch slid down into the dark
With stifled moan, and transient horror seized
The rest who waited, knowing what must be.
At every turn strange shapes reached up and clutched
The whirling wreck, held on awhile, and then Slipt back into that blackness whence they came.
Ah! hapless folk, to be so tost and torn,
So racked by hunger, fever, fire and wave,
And swept at last into the nameless void—
Frail girls, strong men, and mothers with their babes!
And were none saved?

My masters, not a soul!
O shipman, woful, woful, is thy tale!
Our hearts are heavy and our eyes are dimmed.
What ship is this that suffered such ill fate?
What ship, my masters? Know ye not?—The World!

CORRECTLY STATED.

It is a poor commentary on the intelligence of San Francisco people that the Mechanics' Pavilion should be crowded by thousands eager to listen to the talk of the revivalist mountebank, Sam Jones. This man's motives may be of the best, but his narrow-minded bigotry, his sectional prejudices, and his coarse language are a disgrace to the sacred profession to which he claims to belong. He surpassed himself yesterday in his abuse of Californians, his sweeping charges against San Francisco morality, and his bitter attacks on New England. His statement that Freethought in Boston had ended in free-love was as foul a lie as his statement that every other place in San Francisco was a saloon or an assignation house. San Francisco does not lay any great claim to superior virtue or morality, but it is free from the vices of cant, hypocrisy, and false-witness against its neighbors, of which Sam Jones convicts himself every time he opens his mouth.—Chronicle.

A. D. Swan heads the list of last month's contributors with a life passage fee. Brother Swan is a studious reader and deep thinker, possessing ability also as a writer, and is brave enough to express his earnest convictions, even though unpalatable to some who, in his view, are too positive on matters purely speculative. Not regarding rashness of expression as the only demonstration of radical Liberalism, he believes a little more modesty would better become the philosophical inquirer. Severely practical, his secular principles are therefore of the most robust order, for believing in our rights he takes pleasure in sustaining them. Brother Swan is a “promoter” of scientific inventions, and as a recent illustration of his status where best known, he had just thirty days to organize a company of $50,000 to manufacture a combination lock for general purposes, requiring no key. Brother Swan has had a remarkably varied life and has been an extensive traveler. He takes great comfort with his violin. We imagine that a couple of years ago friend Swan mistook the writer for a loud and aggressive advocate of violence and disorder. He has got over that.

Capt. Robt. Davis is one of the benefactors of the Liberal cause. “One of the most generous men I ever met,” a friend informs me, and a man of culture. We are happy to learn that the work of the Union has won his confidence and support, and we hope he will yet have reason to be proud of his connection with the movement, to which we heartily welcome him. His letter says: “Inclosed find money order for $10, which please accept as a slight token of my appreciation of your recent and present labors in the cause of Freethought, as well as an encouragement to persevere in the good work.”

R. F. Grigsby had just returned, full of enthusiasm, from the grand convention in San Francisco, when he wrote Brother Wettstein for some jewelry, and considerably inclosed an X. Brother Grigsby rejoices over the wonderful results FREETHOUGHT has accomplished on the coast, and says “Samuel P. Putnam is a good, whole-souled worker, and is doing a grand work in waking up the people.”

Alliance is an important Liberal centre, and R. G. Smith, a thorough-going worker, is the man at the helm in that community. He forwards the amount pledged by their delegates at the last Congress, and reports the Union in splendid working order. At their Paine ball they had ninety-four couples, and a handsome surplus is now in the treasury. In one-set danced the venerable Mrs. Bailly, a life-long Liberal of ninety years, her daughter, granddaughter, and great-granddaughter. Quite a unique quartette. Brother Smith is now busily engaged in defending Paine's memory in the local press. Alles Alliance!

Reuben Wright, secretary, forwards $10 for Mollala Secular Union, in far-off Oregon. This band of brothers was the first to respond to my appeal for funds after accepting the secretary.

ship, and consequently I hold it in grateful remembrance. Their secretary hopes the good cause may be pushed forward as far in the present year as it was in the past." We'll try. Reuben is "all right" on secular matters.

G. H. Hauschild is the worthy host of the Herman House, at Victoria, Texas, and we sincerely hope his generosity to the Union will be the means of his making many valued friends among the Secularists of the South. His can be a pleasant "propaganda by deed."

Mrs. Olds, one of our lady vice-presidents, is a ceaseless worker for the Secular cause, and a most generous helper. She sent me $5, which I think was to be credited to others, but having mislaid the letter cannot give credit where she desired it. Mrs. Olds has our hearty thanks, and we have the money.

Clarence Hensley is waking up his community in Colorado, and organized the Pine River Secular Union. Bravo Hensley. Now, Denver next?

Brother Greenhill, a life-member, did not forget the Union on account of his foreign tour, and before reaching home left a donation. As he is quite an astronomer let him find out whether Taurus is not the solar biological sign of Senator Blair and whether the "Bull" is on the ascending or descending node.

F. H. Nichols forwards an annual membership, and sends for some of the pamphlets of Judge Waite.

Brother Zimmer desires to be enrolled among those who comprehend the baneful influence of our time, and are working to remedy this state of things.

The only one of those who forwarded their donation to the Truth Seeker, I am acquainted with, is Mrs. Reicherter, of Valley Falls, Kansas, a most energetic and intelligent worker in the Freethought vineyard. To the rest of the friends we tender our sincere thanks.

MISSIONARIES NOT WANTED.

The following is from the Choya Shimbun, a Japanese newspaper:

The Christian people of Europe and America seem to hold the silly idea that there is nothing so perfect and free from blemish as Christianity, and that all other creeds are absurd and heretical. They believe Christianity to have been mainly instrumental in elevating mankind to the present pinnacle of civilization, and that its aid is all that is required to lift any people from the deepest mire of barbarism to the same dizzy height. They despatch missionaries at great expense to all parts of the world, with the idea that this will insure them special favors from the Almighty in a future life, and also with the benevolent intention of enabling others to enjoy similar benefits. In this respect their unselfishness is a most laudable quality, and compares very favorably with their usual proneness to the worship of self-interest. But this subject calls for thorough discussion, not for mere superficial treatment. It may not seem that this country can suffer loss, however numerous may be our missionary visitors, but the matter is not merely one of profit or loss. The question of honor is also concerned. European and American missionaries are sent here because a belief is entertained that Japan is a miserable, uncivilized region, still under the baneful influence of paganism; and in welcoming the missionaries with gratitude our countrymen undoubtedly encourage this idea. Could any more insulting estimate be formed of Japan? Could anything be imagined more despicable than such servility on the part of Japanese? Would they accept from a foreign power, a sum of money in commiseration of their poverty-stricken condition? The sending of missionaries to this country is but slightly different, and yet they are accepted without shame! If the Japanese do not make some return for this kindness, they are ungrateful; if they do, then the interests of this empire come into the question. However viewed, the dilemma is a difficult one. Some say that if we accept Christianity, the adherents of that religion in Europe and America will reward us by establishing schools and hospitals here, and in other ways conferring benefits on us. But surely Japan is not so poor that she is unable to attend to her own educational and sanitary affairs. If any one doubts that the sending of missionaries to this country is a flagrant insult to it, let him imagine the result if the German people were to send missionaries to England, France, or the United States. Their presence would certainly not be tolerated. In the very nature of things, therefore, missionaries are essentially despatched by civilized to uncivilized nations. We do not advocate the rejection of the missionaries; we understand and appreciate the kind intentions of our European and American Christian friends, but we hope that while rendering such appreciation the Japanese will not forget what is due to the honor and interests of their country.

AN UNRELIABLE HISTORIAN.

Ever since last summer the religious press has been circulating a story purporting to be an account of a meeting between Colonel Ingersoll and Jo Cook at a summer hotel. The story as given by the religious editors is an absolute falsehood, but it has Cook's indorsement, and enables us therefore to measure that fellow's regard for truth. This is the latest shape the traveler's tale has taken:

A statement is in the papers to the effect that Joseph Cook and Robert G. Ingersoll recently met at a hotel near Lake George, and that the latter used profane and indecent language. Particulars are given, and there is little room to doubt the substantial accuracy of the report, and the world thus sees a side of this blasphemer's character which is not often on exhibition. He is evidently capable of using the most ungentlemanly and brutal language. He even threatened Mr. Cook in these words: "You are a—liar and a dirty dog, and I have a half a mind to give you a licking." Mr. Cook stepped up to him at once and said: "You will never have a better chance than now. Put your fingers on me and I will have you arrested in three minutes." The coarse Infidel then slunk away, still muttering vulgar and profane words.—New York Advocate.

When we read the above, we clipped it and sent it to Mr. Cook to know the truth of the statement; to which we received the following reply: "Entirely correct. The quotation of Ingersoll's is only one small part. You are safe in using it (this extract).—W. J. SHELDON, secretary to Joseph Cook."

As the story is given here by the Advocate it is a lie pure and simple, and Cook in indorsing it makes himself a liar without mitigating circumstances. In the Truth Seeker of October 27, 1888, we printed the truthful version of the incident upon which Cook bases his lie. Cook had been trying to meet Colonel Ingersoll, and at last found a gentleman—he hotel manager, we believe—who offered to introduce him. When the two approached Colonel Ingersoll, the latter turned away and said he did not desire to know Mr. Cook. Thereupon Joseph bellowed out in his coarse manner that as Colonel Ingersoll had been so badly defeated by Mr. Gladstone, he probably felt sore toward Christians. Colonel Ingersoll paused long enough to say that that was not the reason, but that he declined to know Mr. Cook because that individual was a liar. One witness of the meeting reports that the colonel added, "and a coward." He then walked away, leaving Cook very much embarrassed.

That is all there is to the story. Neither party uttered an oath, and no further conversation ensued. In indorsing the Advocate's account as "entirely correct," Cook has revealed his own dishonesty. His word cannot be taken, and his indecency of statement is very good evidence that Colonel Ingersoll was quite right in declining to permit him to be introduced.—The Truth Seeker.

A CERTAIN politician holding office now in Washington comes from Gilead, —, and he is proud of his native town. It is told of him that on one occasion a visiting clergyman preached in the village church, and during the course of his remarks, he exclaimed: "Is there no balm in Gilead?" Mr. Blank jumped to his feet at once. "Of course there is," he sung out, to the horror of the congregation, "but you can't get it on Sunday."—Washington Critic.

FIFTEEN years ago, Berlin had but 800,000 inhabitants, and church accommodations for only 25,000 persons. Since that time the population has doubled, and yet but one church has been built. In one district of the city, there is but one church to every 70,000 people, and in another, there is but one church to 140,000 people. And although each of these churches has a pastor, with several assistants, the deficiency in the pastoral provision and care of the people is correspondingly great. This state of affairs the Lutheran Observer attributes to general Sunday desecration.

I HEAR a rattling good story that occurred in one of the best known hat establishments of this city. Enter a well-known man-about-town, who hands his hat to an attendant to be ironed. While standing bareheaded at the counter, in comes Bishop Potter. The latter, mistaking the club-man for one of the shop-walkers, gives him his hat, with the inquiry: "Have you a hat like this?" The club-man in the coolest possible manner takes the hat, turns it over, examines it closely, looks at it inside and out; then in slow and measured tones remarks: "No, I have not," and he adds, reflectively, "if I had, I am d——d if I would wear it."—New York Truth.

SENATOR BLAIR doesn't want government employees to be required to work on Sunday, and he is a very active worker for the passage of a law which will make it a misdemeanor for anybody to work on that day. But he evidently knows that where no law is there is no transgression, and so until his bill becomes a law he is free to use Sunday for business. This is shown by the fact that he was in his place in the Senate during its session March 3, and in a lull in the business proceedings presented another petition in favor of his Religious Amendment bill. Sunday must be observed by everybody, if its advocates have to work all day Sunday to accomplish their object.—Ex.

THE Christian Statesman of January 24, 1889, says that Free Masonry always boasts of its "historical descent from the Eleusinian mysteries and the sun-worship of ancient times." Will the Statesman kindly inform the public where Sunday laws, which it so much favors, came from, except from the sun-worship of ancient times? Does not the Statesman know that the first Sunday law that ever was, was to enforce the observance of "the venerable day of the sun," and that it was issued by a downright sun-worshiper? If it does not know this, or does not believe it, will it please tell us what other historical descent Sunday laws have than from the sun-worship of ancient times?—American Sentinel.

NOTWITHSTANDING repeated denials, the Christians are still circulating the story that Colonel Ingersoll's daughter Eva visited the Catholic cathedral, and was so impressed with its magnificence that she at once became a Christian. After circulating for fifteen or sixteen hundred years a gospel which is entirely false, we cannot be surprised that the lovers of the Christian religion should push along a little lie like this, but it is surprising that any Freethinker should hear "with half-believing ear this slander of a foe," and think a denial necessary. Liberals should have more confidence in each other's integrity of purpose and mind, and especially should yarns about Colonel Ingersoll and his family be taken with a large amount of salt. It is safe to deny instantly and point-blank any story to their discredit, from whatever source it may emanate.—The Truth Seeker.

FIVE weeks more and three men must stand at the bar of the United States Court in Topeka and fight for their liberty because a paper, with which they were then more or less directly connected, nearly three years ago, contained a letter from a correspondent, a letter in which the correspondent told of a most horrible case of rape, and vigorously denounced the foul wrong. And this is America in 1889! Suppose these innocent men are fined, imprisoned, their business destroyed, their mothers, companions, children, heart-wrung—what then? What cares this mighty government, with right hand strong to torture the man of thought and humanity, with left hand weak in the defense of the oppressed, and the restraint of the ruthless wrong-doer? What care those who sit in the seats of power? What care the inquisitors who live, vampire-like, upon the blood of their victims? Who dare expect justice in this age?—Fair Play, Valley Falls, Kansas.

THE house where Paine was born has been in my memory entirely renovated, the front having been cased with white bricks, and a vinery erected at the back. Early in the year 1888 the whole was razed to the ground, and the site is now occupied by a shrubbery, inclosed with iron palisading, and entered by a pair of iron gates, leading to a gentleman's house recently built. The shrubbery would afford to the admirers of Paine an excellent site for the erection of a lasting monument to the memory of the great man. At present the pious inhabitants of Thetford would scout the idea as a flagrant impropriety; but perhaps a future generation may some day see fit to do him justice. The school where he was educated still remains upon the old foundations, and during the last ten years has undergone complete renovation. And after more than twenty years misappropriation of the funds, a new scheme was established, under which there appear some signs of prosperity. About thirty scholars are now being educated. As to Paine's ex-military teacher Knowles, I can give no information, further than that he was the appointed teacher at that time. Nor can I give any information as to his mother, Frances Cocke, who is said to be the daughter of a solicitor of that name. No trace of such a family remains.—S. OLDMAN, Thetford, Eng., in the National Reformer.

THE BIBLE IN FAVOR OF DEBATE.

III.

I think it was the Rev. Dr. Buck, author of "Buck's Theological Dictionary," who said, "the divine writings, many of them, are controversial, the Book of Job, and Paul's Epistles especially. The ministry of our Lord was a perpetual controversy, and the apostles came at the truth by much disputing." This is the language of a Christian scholar. When we turn to the New Testament we find his declaration well sustained. Paul was one of the greatest debaters of his time. It is said of him (Acts ix, 29) that he "spoke boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus."

Still, there are some, having entertained the opinion that the Bible does not encourage debate, an opinion which they probably obtain from listening to teachers who ought to have studied the subject better, and misled the people less, who will maintain that the clergyman in his pulpit speaks "boldly," like Paul, "in the name of the Lord Jesus," and that is probably what is meant by the writer of Acts in Paul's case, preaching sermons, not engaging in disputation. But this will not avail; for in the same text it is said, "Paul disputed against the Grecians," even when he knew "they went about to slay him." He was ready for disputation at the risk of his life. Free speech has become more widespread since that time, and, in this country at least, a man or woman can dispute against the popular religion without much risk of the death penalty.

In his arguments Paul did not always have his audience in his favor; frequently against him, it would seem. Speaking of his opponent, "Alexander the coppersmith," he told Timothy "he hath greatly withstood our words" (2 Tim. iv, 15).

To show that he had a regular debate, speech-about, I quote the next verses, where Paul says, "At my first answer no man stood with me, but all men forsook me." "Notwithstanding (and every religious teacher should take special notice of this) the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me."

The smiths were naturally enough opposed to Paul—their business was liable to be overthrown, ruined, if Paul succeeded. Hence, by the very "law of self-preservation," a powerful instinct in man and beast, they assailed Paul. Their uppermost thought, seemingly, was not what is true, but what is dangerous!

"Demetrius, a silversmith," was another of Paul's opponents. As related in Acts 19, "There arose no small stir about that way," "Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people;" an "uproar;" the smiths exclaiming, "Our craft is in danger;" (Acts xix, 27) a rush with Paul's traveling companions into a theatre, "the whole city was filled with confusion;" the debate went on; some "cried one thing and some another." They needed "Rules of Debate," and a board of moderators. The town-clerk made a speech, and a very sensible one it was. Read the nineteenth chapter of Acts. More orderly than that theatre-assembly are the debates of our time, thanks to the growing enlightenment diffused by education, and science, and debate.

An objection is sometimes made to debate, that it stirs up the people.

Let us always admit the truth, when it is seen. This is true. But anything almost is better than "intellectual death," as Tyn-dall uniquely expresses it. This profound thinker and scientist further remarked, "A thinking being ought to scorn such base repose."

The early disciples never hesitated to oppose the popular religion of their day through fear that the sea of ignorance would be lashed into a foam by the winds of controversy. Paul's religious opponents also "stirred up the people" (Acts xvii, 13). And his associates were charged with having "turned the world upside down" (Acts xvii, 6).

To the credit of the Jews it appears that Paul was allowed to speak in their synagogues, and he "reasoned with them out of the scriptures" (Acts 17, 2). When he visited Ephesus "he went into the synagogue, and spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing, and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God." "Disputing daily in the school of one Tyrannus. And this continued by the space of two years" (Acts xix, viii; 9, 10).

Why should not all the Christian churches be as free as those synagogues? Why should not their doors be thrown wide open to debate? Would the truth suffer?

I cheerfully acknowledge that, in a few instances, I have been invited to debate in churches—Congregational, Baptist, Disciple, Universalist, Methodist, Presbyterian. I bear my Christian opponents no ill-will because they do not think as I think. I respect an honest, earnest Christian who antagonizes my Freethought; but I do like to have him do so openly, manfully. If the time ever comes when I can see that Christianity has the truth, I will work for it. But my conviction is the other way. Twice in my life-time, I have, through debate, modified my views, and hope to never live long enough to be ashamed to change a false opinion for the truth. It was not weakness in Paul to change his religion. It is weakness to embrace a weak doctrine in early youth and cling to it all through life.

This same Paul said, "We can do nothing against the truth." If, therefore, you say that truth will be injured by debate you set yourself in direct opposition to the Bible.

I want to take away the last prop of an objection against debating even in synagogues and churches. It is this: when Paul "reasoned with them" it was the same as the clergyman does who reasons with his congregation in the form of a sermon, not by disputing or debating. I will kill the objection at once, "Therefore disputed he in the synagogue with the Jews, and with the devout persons" (Acts xvii, 17). He did not confine his efforts to synagogues; but disputed in the market daily with them that met with him." In the Thessalonica synagogue he reasoned with the Jews "three Sabbath days" (Acts xvii, 1, 2). "Certain philosophers of the Epicureans, and of the Stoics, encountered him" in his daily market-place debates. According to the report, his opponent employed very weak arguments; for, calling a man a "babbling," as some did Paul; "a setter forth of strange gods," was no answer to anything he said. "Some mocked." Such argument lacks logic. Others charged him with being guilty of "new doctrine," a weighty objection with the superficial; "thou bringest certain strange things to our ears." Paul kept right on, from city to city, "and he reasoned in the synagogue every Sabbath, and persuaded the "Jews and the Greeks" (Acts xviii, 4). Debate, then, does change people's views. He persuaded some. Those who said, "We will hear thee again on this matter" (Acts xvii, 32) exhibited a truth-seeking disposition; and as a further result of the debate, "certain men clave unto him, and believed."

PROFESSOR HUXLEY has written a racy reply to certain criticisms of Agnosticism made at the Church Congress of 1888, and to a recent deliverance by Frederic Harrison, who attempts to prophesy on this subject. The article contains an account of how the name Agnostic originated, and explains why Agnosticism, as Professor Huxley conceives it, can not have a creed. It will be published in the April "Popular Science Monthly."

The Rev. George Chainey.

To the Editors of Freethought:

A clipping which appeared in your columns relative to George Chainey served to illustrate some of the peculiarities of human nature. The changes and conditions through which Chainey has passed are as numerous as they are remarkable; and now we behold him again at the foot of the cross with the eye of faith fixed upon the throne of grace. Once more the imaginary joys of an orthodox heaven give peace to his soul, and his troubled spirit finds rest in the bosom of the church, where doubt is discouraged because of the comfort derived from a faith that has no connection with facts. Hope has been characterized by Ingersoll as an inveterate liar; and blind faith, which is simply a pleasant delusion, is cherished by many with the same tenacity with which a man clings to hope when under sentence of death. A man with Chainey's emotional nature, and his weakness for sympathy and approval, was never intended for an iconoclast or a rugged pioneer in the search for truth. His natural place is in the pulpit, back to which he has drifted after buffeting the waves of hardship and facing the storms of contention. There he can find pleasure, profit, and popularity, by dispensing the flowers of rhetoric and dealing out fancy, gilt-edged platitudes that mean nothing and offend nobody. It is the parson's legitimate province to please his hearers, and strengthen their belief in accepted doctrines, regardless of science or of truth; for the "dead calm of ignorance and faith" is what fills their souls with peace and makes life satisfactory. It is much easier to find success financially where one preaches to please instead of to reveal the truth; and as Chainey has never found such a sinecure as the pulpit during his mental mutations, it is not surprising if the law of necessity had something to do with causing him to retrace his wandering steps. However, he has got back, and now let us hope that between the blessed consolation derived from faith in Christianity, and the afternoon pastoral visits, the unsatisfied yearnings of his soul may be fully and completely relieved.

C. SEVERANCE.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

We left Knight's Ferry, with its beautiful slopes, orange groves, and deserted mines, and journeyed on over mountain and valley, by fine ranches and over wild stretches of waste and rocks, until we came to Chinese Camp, another old mining town on a hill, and consisting of quite a village, once evidently a thriving city, as there were many brick blocks and buildings and fine residences, the most of which now are deserted and falling into ruins. We found, however, a finely-kept hotel and took dinner accordingly. We passed on through another old deserted ruins of a once fine town, called Montezuma, and arrived at "Jintown" after dark, and soon, being thoroughly tired out with the ride over these rough mountain roads, were snoring the bazoo of the righteous, dreaming of what might have been if these "diggins" had only held out till our arrival, for this country has all been dug over, and left nearly deserted. We found "Jintown" very largely Catholic, and mostly a mass of ruins, that told of the "mighty past," when the search for gold was at its height. The town is finely located in a little valley all surrounded by green and rolling hills. Every foot of the valley has been dug over and over again, sifted and washed until the glittering ore has all been found. We arrived at Sonora, the county seat of Tuolumne county, in time to give a lecture at the M. E. church to a fair audience. Many members of the church were very badly shocked at our "awful" over and under dressed life-size-colored paintings showing humanity inside and out, in health and disease; also, the big medicine man and Ashantee women and the gorillas. Why, it was just awful to thus desecrate the "temple of the Lord" by turning it into a show.

The next day being Sunday, only two dozen came to church for fear of those "orful" things hanging on the wall, but I had the permit from the pastor to put them up and keep them there until I got through. I found the reverend gentleman a young man of 23, lately from Pennsylvania, and a very intelligent young man and well educated. He gave me the use of the church free, and did all he could to make my stay pleasant and remunerative. By invitation from him, I occupied the pulpit Sunday evening, in his place, and gave my lecture, "The Evidences of Immortality, What are They, Scientifically Examined?" I think I never saw an audience so quiet and still for an hour, afraid, evidently, I was going to tear into pieces their idol of worship. I realized I was close to a slumbering volcano, so I was careful of the language I used, but I gave them evolution pure and unadulterated.

After I was through, the pastor, who occupied the seat in the pulpit with me, gave a short speech, praising very highly my humble effort, hoping the audience had been benefited as much as he had been by the lecture. I gave only three lectures in Sonora, and passed on to pastures more green. Sonora is a place of 2,500 people, situated in a little narrow valley, beautifully surrounded by the mountains. It has but one principal street, and that is very narrow and crooked, perhaps a mile long. Water is brought here some 70 miles for mining and family use. The soil here seems to be of a red formation, and looks like brick dust. There are holes here in all parts of the city running out into the hills, made to find gold. Here is located the famous Bonanza mine, called the richest mine in California, perhaps in the world. Out of this mine one day lately there was taken $85,000. One day while we remained they took out $30,000. In removing an old post or prop a short time ago, $12,000 in crude gold was found under the post within an inch or two of the bottom of the post, and yet it had stood there many years. The gold is found mostly embedded in quartz rock, which is brought out of the mine and crushed in a mill. This famous mine is simply a tunnel running away under the mountain. Many millions have been taken out from under these hills, and still there is more. I saw just as many poor people in Sonora as in other towns. There are plenty of men that have been here thirty and forty years, that have worked for some one until they got some money, then lived on it while they mined for themselves, and have nothing yet.

Most all kinds of fruits grow finely here. Everybody seems happy and contented, and all will swear that there is no place like California. It is very dry now; there has been very little rain for six weeks, but they had nearly a foot of snow a few weeks ago. I find the climate and the atmosphere very much more agreeable than down in the valley or near the coast.

I met with one old man that claimed to be 110 years old; said he had been living here entirely alone for thirty-eight years, mining by spells all this time, but has never struck it rich yet. I thought of the verse, "Pity the sorrows of a poor old man" whose trembling steps had borne him to the gold mines of California.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

Woman Suffrage.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I had always supposed that Liberals were opposed to female suffrage. Looking over a back number of FREETHOUGHT, I was somewhat surprised to find an editorial remark, or, if I may be allowed the phrase, bit of abstract reasoning, which seemed to favor that crafty and insidious delusion. I have no desire to criticise or find fault with the chosen cause and policy of your paper, which accords with my views, except perhaps in this one instance. If an adverse opinion may be allowed, I desire to say that I believe any and all changes in governments should be based upon experience, and not upon utopian schemes or abstract ideas. I believe in accordance with the great charter of American liberty, that "all experience has shown that mankind are not disposed to change their existing forms of government for light and transient causes, or while existing are sufferable." I believe that womankind, especially American women, have no just or reasonable cause of complaint. I believe that a conspiracy exists, having for its object the establishment of church supremacy; and that frightful dangers are gathering around us, much nearer than people generally care to believe. I can conceive of no danger so fatally threatening to the existence of our government as the enfranchisement of women. Female suffrage, whatever may be its claims or pretenses, means mischief—it means revolution—thorough and complete. It means that the elective sovereignty of the nation shall be controlled by the priesthood and the church. It means church supremacy, the union of church and state. The following may seem to illustrate some of my not altogether popular notions in the matter:

'Tis said that once the women warlike grew,
And all the males among their infants slew:
Could vault astride, and curb the fiery steed:
Could bend the bow, and swift the arrow speed.
But now grown weak, the women of our land,
To rule the strong, obey the priest's command.
"The gods make mad all whom they would destroy,"
And for the task the weaker sex employ.

J. C. P.

He Loved Jesus.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Just opposite from the East Chicago police station, in Chicago, there were held, three years ago, Salvation Army meetings, for or to what purpose I do not know, or care, but wish to relate an incident that occurred.

Among others who found "life everlasting" and did not know what to do with it, was an old Swede, a confirmed drunkard and vagrant. One evening at an experience meeting (a place where they show a lamentable lack of experience) he, among others, was called upon to tell of the priceless jewel he had found. He was no orator; his calling forbade that (it was calling at places where beer kegs were left and draining them of the sediment remaining), but what he lacked in oratorical powers and rhetoric he made up for in volume of voice and earnestness. He harangued awhile in his own peculiar style, if not to the instruction of his audience, to their satisfaction. But he wound up with these inspired words: "I kaint talk so good English as some of yo's fellers, but I luv Jesus better dan any God dam man on de Nort Side!"

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - MARCH 30, 1889

THE American Sabbath Union has agreed upon next week as a week of special prayer for the better observance of Sunday. There is something quite appropriate in the first of April being chosen for these incantations.

HIEROPHANT OLCOTT, the Theosophist, of India, is lecturing in Japan. He takes the position that Buddhism is superior to Christianity, which may or may not be true. Of two great evils the least is often difficult to detect.

THAT is a shrewd scheme which the Young Men's Christian Association at Berkeley have in hand. The project is to build a $50,000 hall near the University, and invite students to attend the religious exercises to be held therein. If the plan carries we may expect shortly to hear that the regents have been asked to accept the hall as a theological annex, the state thereafter to pay the expense of sustaining it.

It is reported that "the seizure by the Berlin police of the Volks Zeitung has created a great sensation and a legal decision upon the right of the police to suppress the paper is awaited with considerable interest." Germany is different from America. The police here might suppress a Socialistic or Anarchistic paper and no one would feel any interest at all in the event except the editor and a few of his followers.

THE union of church and state in England brings about the ridiculous farce of a civil court trying a bishop for offenses against ecclesiastical rules. The criminal is the bishop of Lincoln, who has prayed toward the east or west, or worn or omitted to wear the chalice, we are not certain which. Ecclesiastics are protesting, but, as a Catholic paper puts it, "a church that is a creature of the crown must obey the crown."

THE participation of women in politics at Detroit, Mich., does not have the demoralizing effect which some have feared. It is recorded that "the utmost courtesy was shown to those women who turned out to register in order to be able to vote next month. In many registration places the judges prohibited smoking. Two saloon-keepers removed the place of registration from their saloons to respectable quarters near by, and no unseemly conduct was indulged in by any man while the women were registering." Respectable citizens who in order to register their names as voters have been obliged to enter all sorts of disreputable places will wish that something of this kind might strike San Francisco.

It will not be safe for the heavenly chariot to swing too low during the next four years or Mr. Harrison will climb aboard and the United States will be without a chief executive. A Washington letter in the Chicago News states that every morning after breakfast the president and his family assemble in the parlor, where the general reads a passage of scripture and kneels in prayer. We should have more confidence in the backbone of a man like Lincoln, who could keep his legs straight all the time, and, when occasion required, do a good piece of robust swearing.

SUNDAY MORNING AT 10:30.

That is the hour set for the next meeting of the Liberal Society. It will be held at 323 Turk street, and it is important that all friends should be present, as officers are to be elected, a constitution adopted, and all the preliminary business of a permanent organization transacted. Sunday morning, March 31, 10:30 o'clock, 323 Turk street.

If time is afforded Professor Miller will deliver an address on "The Evolution of Religion."

NEWS AND NOTES.

LEMOORE.—The valley of San Joaquin opens broad, bright, and beautiful after the plentiful rains. Miles of glistening green stretch on either side of the speeding cars. Every face wears a cheerful aspect, for wealth is in the sparkling scene.

Far off the gray-blue mountains gleam, whose tops float away in white and misty shrouds, and what is sky and what is earth can scarcely be distinguished in the glittering horoscope.

At half past eight Tuesday evening I arrive at Lemoore; changing cars at Goshen. The first to greet me was the gray-haired veteran, Dr. Seth Morse, who takes all the blows of fortune with uncompromising spirit. He has been for long years in the harness, and done effective service. There is nothing in death, or heaven, or hell, to appall his sturdy mind.

He piloted me through the dim streets to the mansion of Dr. Hamlin, where everything was comfortable and the welcome was generous. I could not feel otherwise than at home with this pleasant-faced philosopher. He is a radical of the radicals, but a kinder heart there never was, whose charity is universal. No one would go from his door without some kind of hospitable aid.

After a good night's rest, the sparkling morning came. After breakfast I took a look at Dr. Hamlin's ten-acre lot, where almost everything is beginning to grow. A lovely home is in prospect, amidst fruits and flowers. The doctor has a printing establishment on his domain. He can set type, and many a Freethought pamphlet has he made up and published for the benefit of the world, without money and without price, and the thoughts are such as, spoken from an honest heart and clear mind, will certainly agitate for good. The doctor is a kind of many-sided genius, and takes to things naturally, and, in a quiet way, he extracts about all the goodness there is in nature and humanity.

I then dropped over to the little homestead of Dr. Morse, where he lives in "single-blessedness." He has a cow, as gentle as a lady, which he wouldn't sell, I guess, for its weight in gold; also a calf, a pig, and chickens, and with these, and grapevines, and fruit-trees, he labors in the gray and gold of life's evening. He showed me his library, where the philosophers and poets shine forth, supreme among them Shakespeare, and from these treasures flows the magic splendor that brings to age immortal youth.

In the afternoon another genial friend of philosophic years, Dr. Moore, drove me for miles over the surrounding country, which is one vast landscape of beauty and delight. A few years ago it was a treeless and apparently barren desert, but irrigation has performed marvels, and far as the eye can see are groves, alfalfa fields, flowering orchards, and the whole country for scores of miles in every direction presents a variegated picture of industry and improvement.

Dr. Moore is one who has studied deep into the problems of life. He has written articles on the money question that have excited wide attention. He believes that a good money system would do more for man's happiness than all the five hundred religions that now beset him, and I think he is right. Our good doctor, once a Materialist, is now a Spiritualist, and he reasons well, a priori, in the Platonic spirit, for immortality. He has also had many personal experiences which are impressive. He was a friend of "Old Ben Wade" in his palmy days, and Ben himself was a pronounced Spiritualist before the doctor had reached his present conclusion.

Fox and Sweetland are most cordial supporters of Freethought, and they are not afraid to do business under the flying colors of their own honest belief. It is a pleasure to meet with such outspoken Liberals.

Captain Nelson brings the breath of ocean itself into his breezy independence. He always gives where it will do the most good and with a free hand. He has not a particle of superstition in head or heart.

And it was pleasure also to meet Mr. Joel A. Fox, an old Antislavery veteran, with charming reminiscences of the "Western Reserve." He is as bright as a dollar, to-day, although he is seventy-three years of age, and I can imagine what a rustler he must have been on the underground railroad thirty odd years ago.

W. M. Gill, editor of the Lemoore Leader, is from that hot-bed of Liberalism and orthodoxy, Kirksville, Mo., where so many debates have taken place. Mr. Gill himself brings the broad and strenuous spirit of our friends of Missouri to this Golden West. Dr. T. W. Helm, S. I. Kidd, A. S. Cunningham, George Foster, and many others whom I met here have made my short stay exceedingly agreeable.

Goodman's Hall was crowded. There was not even standing-room. It was an intelligent and appreciative audience. It was representative of the best elements in the community. The lecture was earnestly listened to, and in fact everything was so harmonious between speaker and hearers that it was arranged to have two more lectures at Lemoore Sunday afternoon and evening of April 28.

About thirty signatures were received for the State Liberal Union at the close of the lectures.

The Adventists are somewhat strong here, and they have been giving the other Christians a lively tussle on the Sabbath question. They work like beavers against ecclesiastical legislation.

L. Gilroy, of Visalia, was in Lemoore long enough to give a good hand-shake. He couldn't stop for lecture, but promises to arrange for Visalia on my return trip. He is one of the most popular officials in the county, and is right up to business.

Whom should I meet on Thursday morning, as I was starting off, but H. W. Faust, of San Francisco. He is on an expedition to his ranch, about thirty-five miles off, with Mrs. Faust, and as they have no house built they intend to camp out and "rough it" for a week or two. I think they will have a delightful trip and find the possibilities of a garden of Eden somewhere in this valley.

Lemoore and the railroads don't hitch together at present, but the place is bound to grow. The railroad through it is really the original Southern Pacific route, but it has never been completed. It was built the present distance to secure the land grant, and not for public convenience. When it is put through it will likely be the main line from San Francisco to Los Angeles, for it is a much shorter route than the present one.

I look forward with pleasure to my return to this lively town, and the many expressions of good will I have received give earnest of a splendid welcome.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

FREETHOUGHT AND MORALITY.

Orthodoxy and Christianity cry out against Freethought that it is dangerous to the social well-being of the state and the individual. They declare that Freethought means loose living; that if belief in a revelation is abandoned there will be no restraint upon action; that if the voice of God has not spoken to men in the Bible, then the world has no moral rudder, and that the ship of humanity will be soon dashed to pieces by the storms of doubt upon the sharp rocks of passion and vice. This cry of priesthood and ultra-conservatism is the chief reason why men's ears are closed against the voice of reason. This has always been the cry of expiring religions. It is the chief obstacle in the path of knowledge. Men's judgments are shaken by the uproar of the ecclesiastical tom-tom endeavoring to prevent the inevitable eclipse of its faith, and by the threat of social ostracism and public odium which is hurled against those who dare to think for themselves. Even many who are convinced of the falsity and purely human origin of all revealed religion are not willing to cut themselves away from its guidance, or advise others to a like course, because they are not quite sure of a prosperous voyage upon untraversed seas. They think the world has done very well under the teaching of Christianity. Will it do equally well under that of science and reason? That the world has done well under the teachings of Christianity is partly true and partly false. It is true where the noblest teachings of Christianity have prevailed—its principles of brotherhood, of mutual help, of tenderness and human sympathy; it is untrue where other teachings of its teachers have been enforced—the claims to government and temporal power, cruel persecution and torture of opponents within the church itself, so-called "heretics and schismatics," the early representatives of later Infidels, the unending disputes about the meaning of its own dogmas and the methods of government, the now clearly proved falsity of many of the dogmas themselves; in these things Christianity has not done well to the world.

But Christianity is a powerful and thoroughly organized religion. It is the nominal religion of the most intelligent races. It is interwoven with the whole structure of European and American society. Daniel Webster declared that Christianity was the law of the land. Its churches are to be found in every village; its corporate wealth is enormous; its teachers are intelligent, skilful, and persistent; its influence is everywhere, is strong and determined. True, its beliefs are much more lightly held than formerly, and some are even disowned by nominal members, under the influence of the inroads of science and reason. Its own laws have been relaxed because they cannot be enforced, and its very teachers have become affected by the voices of truth that are thundering in their ears from the new heavens and the new earth. Geology and astronomy have moral lessons that cannot be ignored. But even the disaffected are loth to break away from the familiar. They talk of a gradual change and reform from within, not realizing that the acknowledgment is self-destructive; that admit a little of the sunlight of truth and the whole fabric of their dreams must dissolve like a snow-palace.

Sloth, cowardice, the ties of affection, the uncertainty of the future, are weights upon the action of a man whose eyes have opened to his delusion.

Shall he brave the ban of social opinion, the remonstrances of friends, the pleadings and tears of a wife or mother, possible loss in business, to identify himself with a cause that is looked at askance by the community, is denounced by the clergy, and promises more thorns than roses to his treading? Will he be at sea in conduct, and unguided by any moral beacons? This is the question we propose to answer.

LIBERAL WORK IN SAN FRANCISCO.

What promises to be a successful Freethought movement was inaugurated last Sunday evening by the meeting in the Turners' Hall. The Freethinkers of the city have, it is said, organized Liberal societies on three previous occasions, the result in each case being a failure at the end of a short time. These various defeats, however, do not dim the hope which the present favorable circumstances have raised, that a Freethought society, founded on a broad, humanitarian basis, well officered and supported by a good membership, can be made a permanency in the community.

Last Sunday's meeting was well attended, and much interest was manifested. The committees chosen will report a constitution and by-laws, and make nominations for permanent officers, at the next meeting, to be held at the same hall, 323 Turk street, Sunday morning, March 31, at half-past ten o'clock.

ROMAN RULE.

The infamy of state recognition of religion is shown by the holy war now raging in Canada. Some time ago the Parliament at Quebec voted $400,000 for reimbursing the Jesuits, whose estates had been confiscated by the imperial government. Cardinal Taschereau objected that the present Jesuits are not the heirs of the Jesuits who owned the property, and the legislators weakened to the extent of paying the $400,000 over to the pope.

Now a strong reactionary sentiment has sprung up, and the Protestants are demanding that the government reverse its action in paying the pope this $400,000. The government, however, being under the thumb of Cardinal Taschereau, cannot be expected to do anything of the kind; and it would do no good if the action were reversed, since the pope has got the money, and the people may whistle for it.

Canada must have a cowardly and dunderheaded legislature, or else the majority of her politicians are rascals. No honest statesman will temporize with the church power; and we make this assertion in advance because there is a prospect that America will yet have the same experience that is afflicting Canada. When that time comes the supply of political rascals will be found as plentiful in the States as in the Dominion.

ANYTHING FOR AN ISSUE.

There are two methods by which political popularity may be achieved. The first is the positive method of toadying to the church, and the other is the negative one of decrying an unpopular cause. The latter method has been largely employed, it would seem, by the politicians of Chicago. In a recent address Judge Grinnell said:

"The eager desire of party leaders to obtain and retain office keeps Socialism and its attendant evils alive. In Chicago Anarchism is exaggerated out of all proportion to its power, for no good purpose, and some members of both political parties seem inclined to act so as to catch this element. In my opinion, the talk about Anarchists during this last winter has been a willful, wicked exaggeration of their power, an injury to the fair name of Chicago and a serious detriment to its business interests, and I confidently believe the purpose of such exaggeration was purely political."

It is possible that in Judge Grinnell's remarks may be found the reason why the political sheets of Chicago denounce the anti-Sabbath meeting of the Secular Union as "Anarchistic gatherings."

RELIGION AS A BUSINESS.

Some of the New York Episcopalians are protesting against the conducting of churches upon the strictly business principles recently outlined by Sexton Williams, of St. Thomas's church. Mr. Williams explained that strangers and poor people were not welcome, nor even admitted to the sanctuary over which he has charge. A circular emanating from the Association for the Advancement of the Interests of Labor was distributed last Sunday in many of the Episcopal churches, attacking the pew-rent system in vigorous language. It sets forth that "a man poverty-stricken in spirit, but rich commercially, is preferred as a church officer to a man poor in worldly goods, though rich in spiritual possessions. There are numerous instances daily before our eyes of men holding high places as church officers who would not long retain them were spirituality the test of office. The rich and impious occupy the choice places, while the poor and destitute are relegated to obscure corners, and sometimes even denied admission. Thus the church becomes in reality a clubhouse, with nothing religious about it but the saint's name. If it could be known openly in how many parishes at this moment the influential and managing men are secretly discussing how to get rid of their minister because he is not paying well in pew rents, a peal of alarm would rise to the ears of God."

Leaving out the pious imprecation of the circular, its language is substantially correct, resembling very closely some remarks which we made several weeks ago. The rich churches are merely club-houses, differing from the latter only in hypocrisy and in not paying their just taxes for the protection accorded them by the municipality.

GULLING THE IGNORANT.

A Catholic priest named Henneberry, the other evening, dealt out the following unmitigated bosh to a congregation in the "church of the Sacred Heart." He was talking about the duties which the Catholic owes to the priest, and said:

"Who, when death comes, is the Catholic's best friend? Father and mother may be there, third hands may be ready to hold the weary head, but what is all this to what the priest does? He can give the parting soul freedom to the realms beyond. His hands reach beyond the grave. He, by his holy offices, can do what no one else can. He is surely the Catholic's best friend. And when we think of this, is it not strange that we should have to speak of the Catholic's duty to his priest?"

"If you hire a laborer and fail to pay him for his ordinary work, what is thought of you? Yet the priest does more for you than any laborer can. It is on this account that the church holds you are in conscience bound to contribute liberally and cheerfully for the maintenance of the priests and church. And whatever you do, you can never begin to do anything like as much as the priest has done for you. So you should be generous in your contributions and not wait to be asked to give what you should give without the asking."

It is a belief in this kind of humbug that makes the devout Catholic go down into his pocket for his last nickel, and give it to the church. What are laws against obtaining money under false pretenses worth if impostors like the priests escape their penalties?

THESE lines are on a granite slab over a grave in an old burying ground in this city:

"Remember not, O Lord, our Offenses, nor those of our parents,
Neither take thou vengeance of our sins.
Thou shalt bring my soul out of Tribulation, and in thy mercy thou Shalt destroy mine enemies."

Whose ashes rest beneath this pious anthem—those of some saintly person? Not much. The rest of the inscription reads:

"Sacred to the memory of the late deceased, James Sullivan, who died by the hands of the V. C., May 31, 1856, aged forty-five years."

The above James was more popularly known as "Yankee" Sullivan, a notorious bruiser and ruffian, and "V. C." is an abbreviation for Vigilance Committee.

A SHORT time since an appeal was made in these columns by Prof. D. C. Seymour in behalf of J. H. Cook, of Columbus, Kan. Mr. Cook declines to receive anything, and Professor Seymour wishes it explained that he judged from Mr. Cook's letter to him that the latter was in great need, so he made the appeal, besides forwarding five dollars which he needed himself. This is to set Professor Seymour right before the public.

DR. PARKER, the London divine who, we believe, was one of the competitors for Beecher's empty pulpit, has established a series of "talks to workingmen." The workingmen listen to him, but they are not convinced. On the other hand, they ask the clergy some puzzling questions. They say, "Why do not those rich Christians who live on our labor share their surplus wealth with us?" "You clergymen take no interest in our affairs," said one; and a third came straight to the point by saying, "You have pointed us to another world, and have seized the good things of this for yourselves." It is useless for the clergy to profess to be the friends of the working man. They can only be his superior or spiritual adviser, so long as he believes in them. Then he will set them all down as parasites.

THE Presbyterian ministers at their last Monday meeting discussed the question, "What is the Greatest Enemy of Christianity at the Present Day?" They were unable to agree, the Rev. Dr. Bell holding that it was the natural enmity of the human heart, while the Rev. Mr. Alexander named Rationalism; the Rev. Mr. Dobbins, intemperance, and Bishop Vladimir, the disunity of the church. None of the ministers got at the exact truth of the matter, which is that Christianity is its own greatest enemy, in that it teaches doctrines which the reason of the present day is constrained to reject.

THE Prince of Wales has been traveling on the continent in company with women of shady reputation, and the papers have called attention to the scandal. The Rock, a pious sheet, reproves the secular press for being too anxious to search out these failings of the prince, and is ready to overlook them. But what rends the Rock is to learn that his royal highness failed to observe Sunday in the manner prescribed by the church. This, it holds, is "more sad than a violation of good taste, for it was a violation of the Sabbath of God."

A CLAIRVOYANT of San Francisco has complained that only three out of the fifty-four people in her profession, namely, mediums, astrologists, and fortune tellers, are made subject to the yearly license of one hundred dollars. She says nothing about the preachers. This clairvoyant's name is Lulu Hurst, and her complaint has got her into trouble, as she herself has not paid the license prescribed by law.

A PROJECT is on foot to build in this city a structure to be known as "The People's Church," erected after the fashion of a theatre and open to all denominations. Several years ago a similar project was carried out under the Rev. Mr. Kallock, of unpleasant memory, and resulted in the Metropolitan Temple, since given over to all sorts of entertainments, including that of John Slater, the Mediumistic Wonder.

B. F. UNDERWOOD has just had a debate with the Rev. C. S. Bates, D.D., at Cleveland, Ohio. Mr. Underwood's reference, per Secular Thought, to his visit to this office while in San Francisco is duly appreciated by all parties concerned.

It is a trifle singular that the dispatch from New York should fail to say something about the presence of Colonel Ingersoll at the meeting held to raise money for the Confederate Soldiers' Home at Austin.

OUR editorial on "Freethought and Morality" is from the opening portion of Professor Miller's Sunday evening address. It will be completed.

OBSERVATIONS.

The neat hall of the San Francisco Turn Verein contained none too many seats to accommodate the attendants at last Sunday's Liberal meeting. This was the third attempt to hold such a meeting, and it was also the first really successful one. It would have had a large accession of members of the Turn Verein but for the amateur theatrical entertainment in the large hall.

Professor Miller called the meeting to order formally and drew attention to the necessity of choosing a temporary president. I had in my mind the proper person for that position, and also an ornate effort with which I intended to nominate him. The effort eluded me at the critical moment, but I flatter myself that I got the name of "Mr. P. O. Chilstrom, Esq.," before the assemblage in an effectual manner. At any rate, Mr. Chilstrom was elected, and assumed the chair. Mr. Henry Breuer became secretary by the same process, and Mr. Schou treasurer. Afterwards two committees were appointed—on organization, Herbert Miller, A. H. Schou, G. E. Macdonald; on nominations, J. Beaumont, H. W. Walker, W. H. Eastman, and another whose name I have forgotten. At this point the president inquired what it was proposed to do, and in a few well-chosen words delivered in a sweet, silvery tone of voice I stated that we proposed to open a subscription list, and see how much we could raise. My address created the most intense interest, and I expect to receive an invitation to visit the place again shortly and bring my relatives with me.

At the conclusion of my remarks Mr. Holmes arose and related impressively how he happened to be present. He had received a postal card inviting him to attend, and in response thereto he had done so. The card specified distinctly a Liberal Meeting, and yet here we were asked to subscribe Money for something which we knew nothing about. Before he would pledge a dollar he desired to know, in fact, whether this was a scheme gotten up for the private benefit of somebody, or whether there was a bona fide intent to advance the cause of Liberalism.

The Chair invited Professor Miller to give an outline of the proposed work, and the professor delivered an address on "Freethought and Morality" lasting forty minutes. It was a well-considered address and evoked applause. The Chair then read an editorial from FREETHOUGHT on "Local Liberal Societies" which afforded a very good answer to Mr. Holmes's search for information.

Mr. Thomas Curtis said that there would be no beneficial results from holding meetings where one man did all the talking and the audience all the listening, as he should not attend. The Chair reminded Mr. Curtis that as the society had not yet been formed upon the basis to which he objected, criticism was scarcely in order. Mr. Curtis did not prolong his address.

Mr. Schou took up a collection with marked cheerfulness, and Secretary Breuer passed a subscription paper among the auditors. Something more than $100 is pledged for the support of the meetings, and the outlook is now favorable. The next meeting is at the same place, 323 Turk street, Sunday morning, March 31, at 10:30 of the clock.

I discover from a paragraph in the papers that Amrita Lal Roy, the Hindoo printer who formerly worked in the Truth Seeker office, is now editor of a paper in Calcutta called the "Hope." He has also published a little volume entitled "Reminiscences of Three Years Among the Americans," in which he says:

At this date I cannot help comparing the conduct of these so-called "Infidels" with that of the pious Christians of New York, to whom I had applied for a situation on my arrival in America—very much to the prejudice of the latter. Nor can I refrain from acknowledging with gratitude that by few persons in New York were the peculiar circumstances in which I was placed so considerably recognized, or so much facility for making my way given to me as by the Infidels of the Truth Seeker office.

I expect that the facility for working his way referred to is the "case" that was accorded him in the corner of the composing-room, where he made slow and painful endeavors to acquire the art of setting type. Henry George, John Swinton, Colonel Hinton, and James Redpath were Roy's intimate friends. Besides these, he had the confidence of Leo Hartman, the Nihilist, who left Russia because the government wanted him about $50,000 worth for conspiring to blow the czar into small fragments. If Roy had been a good hypocrite, like some of his countrymen who have visited America, he might have fared much better than he did at the hands of religious people. The fact that the Christians gave him the cold shoulder in America shows that they like the heathen best in his native lair.

The Ethiopian race does not produce a great many Free-thinkers, but it contributes at least one to the population of San Francisco. His name is Lord A. Nelson—presumably Lord Admiral—and a more creditable-looking citizen does not walk the streets of the city. Nelson is about six feet in height, straight, and broad shouldered. The best clothes to be had are none too good for him; no one wears a finer beaver or whiter linen. Not far from forty years ago, he was born in the bondage of chattel slavery, in Missouri. The underground railroad brought him out of that, and his good sense emancipated him from the mental bondage in which so many of his race are held. Mr. Nelson is a candy merchant, and in his white uniform may be found on any pleasant day at the corner of Market and Battery streets. He says that he wants to see a temple of Freethought built in San Francisco, to be called the House of Humanity, where men and women of all faces can come together and be taught science and morality with no intermixture of superstition.

The ex-Rev. J. E. Higgins, who made his first Freethought address before the state convention of Liberals last January, would like to go into the field in the interests of the cause, but his opening campaign does not encourage him. About a month ago he was impressed with a belief that the people of Humboldt county, particularly at Eureka and along the Eel river valley, would take kindly to a secular advocate; and so, with high hopes, an assortment of books, and a mind stored with useful precepts struggling for utterance, he took the boat for Humboldt bay. It was measly weather and rough water. When he reached Eureka it was raining, and it continued to rain for two weeks. Mr. Higgins said the chance of getting any hearers was awful slim. The only hall to be had would cost $10 per night, and nobody seemed to want lectures any way. On account of the rain and mud he couldn't even get around to sell books. He spent a good deal of his time with the veteran Robert Gunther, who owns an island in the bay and lives on it, and while the rain fell they talked over the prospects and discussed the great questions which occupy the attention of the human mind. Mr. Higgins also found some listeners at the hotel where he stopped, and had lively tilts with them; but all this wasn't business and didn't promise any business, so he took to the water again and came plowing back to San Francisco. He reports that the boat sailed most of the way on her gable end, and that the water frequently rose higher than the roof. The incessant motion of the vessel gave him a sensation of nausea, traces of which had not entirely disappeared when he reached this office and turned in his stock of books, which he desired to realize on. He was not exactly discouraged, but confessed that a series of experiences of that kind would not have the effect of elating him to any dangerous extent.

I have long known that Mr. James West, editor of the New Ideal, was a poet of distinction, but I was unaware of his humorous qualities previous to the receipt of the following communication:

DEAR BROTHER IN DEMOLITION: I hope you are prospering. I thought yours was an excellent and creditable paper until my own was started.

I often make observations myself in a facetious vein, but since coming in contact with Mr. West's superior humor, I have not felt like trying to say anything sarcastic.

The appended letter was not immediately understood when it reached me last week.

PUTNAM & MACDONALD: Knowing you believe in work, and as ours is work, not preaching, I thought you would lend us a helping hand, either by advertising our work or in any way which seems best to yourselves.

Respectfully,
Shalam, Las Cruces, N. M.

MRS. NEWBROUGH.

A small magazine, which came a few days later, explained the letter. The magazine is entitled "The Castaway; a Monthly Publication in the Interest of Foundlings, Orphans, and other Homeless and Uncared-for Babies," published at the Faithists' Infants' Home, New Orleans. From the publication it is learned that Dr. J. B. Newbrough, the author of the New Bible called Oahspe, has founded, at Las Cruces, N. M., a home for foundlings, who are to be raised vegetarians and faithists. The infants are first to be fed, and afterwards taught that a certain character called Jehovih is their heavenly father. The remainder of the creed of the faithists I am unfamiliar with. I have seen copies of Oahspe, a large book costing some $7, and resembling the Hebrew scriptures in many respects. Dr. Newbrough wrote it—that is to say, he type-wrote it, under alleged inspiration. There were times, he claims, when he was in the spirit, and on such occasions he would seat himself before the type-writer, and turn off a chapter or two of Oahspe. Those who wish to believe that the book has any other source than Dr. Newbrough's fertile imagination are at liberty to do so. I merely allow that question to lie alongside without hoisting it aboard. In my opinion, however, all claims of inspiration and spiritual control are fraudulent or delusive. I have no objection to thus advertising Dr. Newbrough's home for foundlings and uncared-for babies, as I might sometime want to go there myself, but if he would drop the imposture of a divine revelation he could secure a more hearty indorsement from the undersigned. It is about time that people should give up humbugs, and a humbug should be rejected as decidedly when it attempts to introduce itself in the name of humanity as when it comes under the patronage of the devil.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

A Cucamonga man who has been to the Santa Clara mines in Lower California has returned home and mortgaged all his property in order to invest in the mines. Opinions vary as to the richness of the new diggings, but general belief condemns the whole business as a "fake."—Mr. Mason Long, who a short time since was the proprietor of a large gambling house in northern Indiana, spoke from a Presbyterian pulpit in this city last Sunday evening. Mr. Long retired from the faro business $52,000 ahead, and will now devote himself to gospel temperance and the extirpation of the gambling habit.—Alvan Clark, of Cambridgeport, Mass., who manufactured the Lick telescope, expects soon to go to work on a still larger glass to be placed on Wilson's Peak in Los Angeles county. It will be forty inches in diameter, and one-half stronger than the Lick lens.—The Yuba county grand jury recommend raising the liquor license to $1000.—The San Francisco Daily Examiner's free labor bureau has in four weeks provided situations for more than 1000 applicants.

Mrs. Parsons made an inflammatory address at an Anarchist meeting in Chicago last Sunday. The country is still safe.—There is talk of a new White House for the President's family at Washington.—There was a meeting in New York last Sunday in aid of the Confederate Soldier's Home at Austin, Tex. Colonel Ingersoll was announced to speak, but the dispatches do not chronicle his presence.—The Rev. Sam Small will enter politics and run for Congress from Atlanta, Ga.—Whitelaw Reid's appointment as minister to France was opposed in the Senate, but a majority confirmed it. Reid is editor of the New York Tribune.—The weavers' strike at Fall River, Mass., has failed, and the usual number of looms are running.—Evangelist Yatman, who has just returned to New York from a trip through the West, is now busy with a scheme which he is pleased to call a college on wheels. He proposes to obtain a number of Pullman cars and arrange sections in them for men who are to receive students in the work of evangelization. He intends to take the cars and men over the entire world, preaching the gospel wherever they go. The experiment will first be tried with fifty students. Mr. Yatman says he already has fully 1000 applications.—Justice Stanley Matthews, of the U. S.

Supreme court, died at Washington March 22, aged 65.—The Rev. Horace L. Wheeler, a fashionable young clergyman of Newton, Mass., has resigned his pastorate because his congregation would not permit him to dance.

John Bright, the English statesman, died March 27, aged 77.—Bismarck talks peacefully on the Samoan question. Except in the newspapers there have been no serious indications of war.—The people of Havana, Cuba, gave Mr. Cleveland an enthusiastic reception on his arrival, March 23.—The London Standard's Shanghai correspondent says: The number of deaths caused by the famine in Shantung is appalling. Many of the inhabitants are committing suicide through despondency, there being still three months to wait for the harvest.—It is understood that the French agent at the Vatican, in obedience to instructions from his government, made a complaint to the pope of the support which is given Boulanger by the French clergy. In reply the pope is reported to have said it would be impossible for him to interfere in the matter.

HUMANITY'S GAIN FROM UNBELIEF.

Charles Bradlaugh, M. P., in the North American Review.
Concluded.

Take the further gain to humanity consequent on the unbelief, or rather disbelief, in witchcraft and wizardry. Apart from the brutality by Christians towards those suspected of witchcraft, the hindrance to scientific initiative or experiment was incalculably great so long as belief in magic obtained. The inventions of the past two centuries, and especially those of this nineteenth century, might have benefited mankind much earlier and much more largely but for the foolish belief in witchcraft and the shocking ferocity exhibited towards those suspected of necromancy. After quoting a large number of cases of trial and punishment for witchcraft from official records in Scotland, J. M. Robertson says: "The people seem to have passed from cruelty to cruelty, precisely as they became more and more fanatical, more and more devoted to their church, till, after many generations, the slow spread of human science began to counteract the ravages of superstition, the clergy resisting reason and humanity to the last."

The Rev. Mr. Minton concedes that it is "the advance of knowledge which has rendered the idea of satanic agency, through the medium of witchcraft, grotesquely ridiculous." He admits that "for more than fifteen hundred years the belief in witchcraft was universal in Christendom," and that "the public mind was saturated with the idea of satanic agency in the economy of nature." He adds: "If we ask why the world now rejects what was once so unquestioningly believed, we can only reply that advancing knowledge has gradually undermined the belief."

In a letter recently sent to the Pall Mall Gazette against modern Spiritualism, Professor Huxley declares "that the older form of the same fundamental delusion—the belief in possession and in witchcraft—gave rise, in the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth centuries, to persecutions by Christians of innocent men, women, and children, more extensive, more cruel, and more murderous than any to which the Christians of the first three centuries were subjected by the authorities of pagan Rome." And Professor Huxley adds:

"No one deserves much blame for being deceived in these matters. We are all intellectually handicapped in youth by the incessant repetition of the stories about possession and witchcraft in both the Old and the New Testament. The majority of us are taught nothing which will help us to observe accurately, and to interpret observations with due caution."

The English statute-book under Elizabeth and under James was disfigured by enactments against witchcraft passed under pressure from the Christian churches, which acts have only been repealed in consequence of the disbelief in the Christian precept, "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." The statute 1 James I., c. 12, condemned to death "all persons invoking any evil spirits, or consulting, covenanting with, entertaining, employing, feeding, or rewarding any evil spirit," or generally practicing any "infernal arts." This was not repealed until the eighteenth century was far advanced. Edison's phonograph would, two hundred and eighty years ago, have insured martyrdom for the inventor; the utilization of electric force to transmit messages around the world would have been clearly the practice of an infernal art. At least, we may plead that unbelief has healed the bleeding feet of science and made the road free for her upward march.

Is it not also fair to urge the gain to humanity which has been apparent in the wiser treatment of the insane consequent on the unbelief in Christian doctrine that these unfortunates were either examples of demoniacal possession or of special visitation of deity? For centuries, under Christianity, mental disease was most ignorantly treated. Exorcism, shackles, and the whip were the penalties, rather than the curatives, for mental maladies. From the heretical departure of Pinel, at the close of the last century, to the position of Maudesley to-day, every step illustrates the march of unbelief. Take the gain to humanity in the unbelief, not yet complete, but now largely preponderant, in the dogma that sickness, pestilence, and famine were manifestations of divine anger, the results of which could neither be avoided nor prevented. The Christian churches have done little or nothing to dispel this superstition. The official and authorized prayers of the principal denominations even to-day reaffirm it. Modern study of the laws of health, experiments in sanitary improvements, more careful application of medical knowledge, have proved more efficacious in preventing or diminishing plagues and pestilence than have the intervention of the priest or the practice of prayer. Those in England who hold the old faith that prayer will suffice to cure disease are to-day termed "peculiar people," and are occasionally indicted for man-slaughter, when their sick children die, because the parents have trusted to God instead of appealing to the resources of science.

It is certainly clear gain to astronomical science that the church which tried to compel Galileo to unsay the truth, has been overborne by the growing unbelief of the age, even though our little children are yet taught that Joshua made the sun and moon stand still, and that for Hezekiah the sun-dial reversed its record. As Buckle, arguing for the morality of skepticism, says:

"As long as men refer the movements of the comets to the immediate finger of God, and as long as they believe that an eclipse is one of the modes by which the deity expresses his anger, they will never be guilty of the blasphemous presumption of attempting to predict such supernatural appearances. Before they could dare to investigate the causes of these mysterious phenomena, it is necessary that they should believe, or, at all events, that they should suspect, that the phenomena themselves were capable of being explained by the human mind."

As in astronomy, so in geology, the gain of knowledge to humanity has almost solely in measure of the rejection of the Christian theory, a century since almost universally held, that the world was created six thousand years ago, or, at any rate, that by the sin of the first man, Adam, death commenced about that period. Ethnology and anthropology have only been possible in so far as, adopting the regretful words of Sir W. Jones, "intelligent and virtuous persons are inclined to doubt the authenticity of the documents delivered by Moses concerning the primitive world."

Surely it is clear gain to humanity that unbelief has sprung up against the divine right of kings; that men no longer believe that the monarch is "God's anointed," or that "the powers that be are ordained of God." In the struggles for political freedom, the weight of the church was mostly thrown on the side of the tyrant. The homilies of the Church of England declare that "even the wicked rulers have their power and authority from God," that "such subjects as are disobedient or rebellious against their princes, disobey God and procure their own damnation." It can scarcely be necessary to argue to the citizens of the United States of America that the origin of their liberties was in the rejection of this faith in the divine right of George III. Will any one, save the most bigoted, contend that it is not certain gain to humanity to spread unbelief in the terrible doctrine that eternal torment is the probable fate of the great majority of the human family? Is it not gain to have diminished the faith that it was the duty of the wretched and the miserable to be content with the lot in life which Providence had awarded them?

If it stood alone, it would be almost sufficient to plead, as justification for heresy, the approach towards equality and liberty for the utterance of all opinions achieved because of growing unbelief. At one period in Christendom each government acted as though only one religious faith could be true, and as though the holding, or, at any rate, the making known, of any other opinion was a criminal act deserving punishment. Under the one word, "Infidel," even as late as Lord Coke, were classed together all who were not Christians, even though they were Mohammedans, Brahmans, or Jews. All who did not accept the Christian faith were sweepingly denounced as Infidels and, therefore, hors de la loi. One hundred and forty-five years since, the attorney general, pleading in our highest court, said: "What is the definition of an Infidel? Why, one who does not believe in the Christian religion. Then a Jew is an Infidel." And English history for several centuries prior to the Commonwealth shows how, habitually and most atrociously, Christian kings, Christian courts, and Christian churches persecuted and harassed these infidel Jews. There was a time in England when Jews were such Infidels that they were not even allowed to be sworn as witnesses. In 1740, a legacy left for establishing an assembly for the reading of the Jewish scriptures was held to be void because it was "for the propagation of the Jewish law in contradiction to the Christian religion." It is only in very modern times that municipal rights have been accorded in England to Jews. It is barely thirty years since they have been allowed to sit in Parliament. In 1851, the late Mr. Newdegate, in debate, objected "that they should have sitting in that House an individual who regarded our Redeemer as an impostor." Lord Chief Justice Raymond has shown how it was that Christian intolerance was gradually broken down: "A Jew may sue at this day, but heretofore he could not; for then they were looked upon as enemies, but now commerce has taught the world more humanity." Lord Coke treated the Infidel as one who, in law, had no right of any kind, with whom no contract need be kept, to whom no debt was payable. The plea of "alien Infidel," as answer to a claim, was actually pleaded in court as late as 1737. In a solemn judgment Lord Coke says: "All Infidels are, in law, perpetui inimici, for between them, as with the devils whose subjects they be, and the Christians, there is perpetual hostility. Twenty years ago the law of England required the writer of any periodical, publication, or pamphlet under sixpence in price to give sureties for eight hundred pounds against the publication of blasphemy. I was the last person prosecuted, in 1868, for non-compliance with that law, which was repealed by Mr. Gladstone in 1869. Up till the 23d of December, 1888, an Infidel in Scotland was only allowed to enforce any legal claim in court on condition that, if challenged, he denied his Infidelity. If he lied and said that he was a Christian, he was accepted, despite his lying. If he told the truth and said that he was an unbeliever, then he was practically an outlaw, incompetent to give evidence for himself or for any other. Fortunately, all this was changed by the royal assent to the Oaths Act on the 24th of December. Has not humanity clearly gained a little in this struggle through unbelief?"

For more than a century and a half the Roman Catholic had, in practice, harsher measure dealt out to him by the English Protestant Christian than was, even during that period, the fate of the Jew or the unbeliever. If the Roman Catholic would not take the oath of abjuration, which, to a sincere Romanist, was impossible, he was, in effect, an outlaw, and the "jury-packing," so much complained of to-day in Ireland, is one of the survivals of the old, bad time when Roman Catholics were thus, by law, excluded from the jury-box.

The Scotsman of January 5, 1889, notes that, in 1860, the Rev. Dr. Robert Lee, of Greyfriars, gave a course of Sunday evening lectures on Biblical Criticism, in which he showed the absurdity and untenableness of regarding every word in the Bible as inspired, and adds:

We well remember the awful indignation such opinions inspired, and it is refreshing to contrast them with the calmness with which they are now received. Not only from the pulpits of the city, but from the press (misnamed religious) were his doctrines denounced. And one eminent U. P. minister went the length of publicly praying for him, and for the students under his care. It speaks volumes for the progress made since then, when we think that, in all probability, Dr. Charteris, Dr. Lee's successor in the chair, differs, in his teaching, from the Confession of Faith much more widely than Dr. Lee ever did, and yet he is considered supremely orthodox, whereas the stigma of heresy was attached to the other all his life.

And this change and gain to humanity are due to the gradual progress of unbelief alike inside and outside the churches. Take, from differing churches, two recent illustrations. The late principal, Dr. Lindsay Alexander, a strict Calvinist, in his important work on "Biblical Theology," claims that "all the statements of scripture are alike to be deferred to, as presenting to us the mind of God." Yet the Rev. Doctor of Divinity also says: "We find in their writings [i. e., in the writings of the sacred authors] statements which no ingenuity can reconcile with what modern research has shown to be the scientific truth." At the last Southwell Diocesan Church-of-England Conference, at Derby, the bishop of the diocese presiding, the Rev. J. G. Richardson said of the Old Testament that "it was no longer honest, or even safe, to deny that this noble literature, rich in all the elements of moral or spiritual grandeur, given—so the church had always taught and would always teach—under inspiration of Almighty God, was sometimes mistaken in its science, was sometimes inaccurate in its history, and sometimes relative and accommodatory in its morality. It resumed theories of the physical world which science had abandoned and could never resume; it contained passages of narrative which devout and temperate men pronounced discredited both by external and internal evidence; it praised, or justified, or approved, or condoned, or tolerated conduct which the teaching of Christ and the conscience of the Christian alike condemned." Or—as I should urge—the gain to humanity by unbelief is that the "teaching of Christ" has been modified, enlarged, widened, and humanized, and that "the conscience of the Christian" is, in quantity and quality, made fitter for the ever-increasing additions of knowledge of these latter and more heretical days.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH.

DIVINE AND HUMAN.

We have advanced beyond the idols of the past; but our century is not without its idolatry. Though we no longer set up a piece of carved wood or hammered gold, and worship it as divine, we hold that a book is divine.

When a book is made holy it is time for mankind to abandon it. The worst tyrant of earth has been what men have called, "divine authority." The right of kings, the right of priests, has been a divine right, and the world has been a slave to this lie for thousands of years. This age wants what is human; it has had enough of what is called divine. The sword of the throne, the torture of the church, and the text of the Bible have all been used in God's name to rob man of his rights and cheat him of his dues.

It was a line of divine writing that was used to hang witches. The Catholic church has killed thousands upon thousands of men, women, and children in the name of its God, and legions perished during the holy (?) crusades with this benediction: "It is the will of God," pronounced upon them by their murderers.

A great many who came to help the world have not only been baptized in the Jordan of the church, but drowned there. I cannot see that it makes assassination sacred to say grace over your victim.

It will take a great many years to clear the divine name of the reproach which Christianity has brought upon it. There is no blessing in it to-day for a large part of the world. It is not a word to rally men with.

I have no objection to hearing the word "God" used in a right sense, but it is not food nor medicine. Men cannot eat, drink, nor wear it. I do not think this word comes very often into man's life. When it is used as a key to what we do not know, or offered as an explanation of the mystery of nature, no moral objection can be urged against it, but it cannot be put out to interest, and it does not help man to get a living.

When times are hard, and men are in want, they are told to "trust in God," but this is only confessing that it is of no use to trust in man. When men are hungry they want something for their stomachs, not for their souls; and to refer man to God when he is suffering the pangs of hunger is a pious way of helping along starvation. I do not know how it is with the rest of mankind, but for myself the last door that I would knock at for something to eat, or drink, or wear, expecting assistance, would be the door of God. It is the utmost of cruelty to bid those in want to depend upon Providence. It is the last insult of religion.

Let us tell the truth! Providence has no hand to help us, no arm to reach us, no way to come to our relief. He is neither "butcher, baker, nor candlestick maker;" in other words, he is nothing that man should be.

I do not like the word "Providence." It is a mean, shuffling word, underneath which man hides his coldness, his cruelty; his inhumanity. I would like to see the man that ever got any satisfaction out of Providence. I would like to see the person that ever sat at the table of Providence and had enough to eat. Of course the church will say: "Man does not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds out of the mouth of God." A bill of fare with only "the words that proceed out of the mouth of God" for a dinner or a supper, would have no more temptation for a Christian than for an unbeliever. There is no use to misrepresent the matter. The truth is, if man gets down, man must help him up, or he will never get up; if man is starving, unless his brother man feed him, he will never be fed. Angels are not running cooking schools to-day, nor is bread made in heaven and given away on earth. There are no ravens engaged in carrying food to the Elijahs of this century. The word "Providence" is made to cover a multitude of selfishness, and it is time that men ceased to hide behind the name of a God to excuse their lack of sympathy and charity. The meanest God that man has ever made is this deity called Providence. He is the God of disappointment—a divine deception.

L. K. WASHBURN.

WAS JESUS THE MESSIAH?

The following is condensed from one of a series of articles from the pen of the Hebrew scholar Rabbi Wise, editor of the American Israelite, entitled "A Defense of Judaism vs. Proselytizing Christianity."

The Christian church believes that the sixty-six chapters of Isaiah were written by the and the same Isaiah. And yet the same church which reads these unequivocal declarations of the prophet against all kinds of polytheism, trinitarianism, and any and every kind of redeemers or saviors, points almost exclusively to the same Isaiah—and this is done in the gospels—for oracles that predicted the miraculous birth, life, work, and death of Jesus Christ. Those good people, clinging to their subjective knowledge, have no idea how paganized they are in theory and practice, and how self-contradictory their allegations are, whenever they attempt to prop the evangelical story by passages from the Old Testament. But we, who labor not under the burden of that subjective knowledge, consider it an irrevocable truism that the prophet Isaiah could not possibly intend by any of his prophecies to predict the coming of any son of god, any divine messiah or supernatural redeemer or savior, person of the trinity, or any other superhuman being.

Isaiah (chapt. vi) and Ezekiel (chapt. i) describe their sublime visions of the "Throne of Glory." They inform us that they saw there seraphim, cherubim, etc., all in the plural number—poetical figures with wings of fantastic shapes, colors, and movements. But they saw no son of God anywhere. If such a conception had ever been in their minds, they would have seen it in their prophetic visions just then and there. If they did not see him, we certainly could not. William Gesenius and other Christian expounders of Isaiah, Psalms, and other such books, have given up the idea of finding messianic predictions in those books, but the conversionist has his own canon of exegesis, and clings to old errors because he can do no better. If Isaiah, for instance, did not predict that particular messiah, there not only exists no biblical proofs that he was a messiah at all, but the gospel itself must contain at least as many errors as it has references to that prophet.

Isaiah vii, 14, is translated in the English Bibles, "Behold a virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and shall call his name Emanuel." In Matthew i, 23, it reads, "Behold a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emanuel." This, says Matthew, refers to the son of Mary, although none before him nor any of the gospel writers after him ever understood it so; none referred to this supposed prophecy besides Matthew; and, what is still more surprising, Jesus knew nothing of this miracle, never refers to it, and calls his mother, vulgarly, "woman," and Mary also evinces no knowledge of it, and calls him Joseph's son (Luke ii, 48-50).

If we say that but two words in the translation of that verse are correct, we do not exaggerate. Let us see:

Ha-Almah does not mean "a virgin;" it means the maiden, or this young woman.

Harah does not mean "shall conceive;" it means she is with child, as is evident from the parallel passage, Genesis xvi, 11; hence she was no virgin.

Vetoleth is not in the future tense; it is the present participle, feminine gender; not "she shall bear a son;" it means (as the next verb proves) "and thou (woman) bearest a son" (now or shortly hereafter).

Vekafath does not mean "and she shall call;" it means "thou (woman) callest his name."

Emanuel is not Jesus; he is not called so anywhere. The translator, following Matthew, makes that verse all in the third person, while the whole verse is actually second person feminine. A woman standing before him is addressed by the prophet, as also the situation there in Isaiah shows. Ahaz the king of Judah is threatened with an invasion of his capital by the kings of Israel and Syria, which was about ten to twelve years prior to the fall of Samaria. Ahaz wants to call to his assistance Tiglath Pileser, king of Assyria, and did finally do so, which the prophet Isaiah justly opposes, because he dreaded the invasion of Palestine by that warlike king and nation, and his apprehension proved to be well grounded, for a few years later Assyria overthrew the kingdom of Israel, and Sanherub would have captured Jerusalem if he had not lost his army under its walls. All this is clearly sketched in 2 Kings and 2 Chronicles. Isaiah tries to dissuade King Ahaz from his scheme of purchasing the assistance and invasion by the Assyrian, and tells King Ahaz that God gives him a sign, that both countries which now distress him and threaten him with invasion will be depopulated. And that sign which the prophet gives him, that those kings will not conquer his land, according to Matthew, should come to pass more than 700 years later! Is not this too absurd? Therefore the passage reads as said: A young woman, perhaps the queen, being in an advanced stage of pregnancy, standing before them, the prophet says: "This woman will give birth to a son"—and this was the sign—whom she might call Emanuel, "God with us," for he will not permit those two kings to conquer this country.

The irrefutable proof for this conception of the matter is the beginning of Isaiah viii, where it is narrated that the same sign was given before two high-ranked witnesses, as the king refused the prophet a sign. Then follow the prophecies, viii, 4, the same as in vii, 16. Then, viii, 18, he refers to both cases, that the signs given had been fulfilled literally, as predicted; therefore his prophecies are to be believed in preference to the necromancers and sorcerers that most likely advised the king contrary to Isaiah's predictions.

In the same connection a number of oracles follow after each other, all in reference to the Assyrian invasion. King Ahaz disobeyed the prophet, sent an embassy with heavy sums of money to Tiglath Pileser (2 Kings xviii, 8, 9), who invaded Syria and decimated it. Now, the prophet announces his oracles as to the consequences of this invasion, which will not end with the overthrow of the two kingdoms of Israel and Syria, hitherto Judah's protection against Assyria, but Judah also will be invaded and hard pressed by the enemy, whose friendship King Ahaz bought so dearly; but Judah will not perish, it will be saved by the successor of King Ahaz, the then crown prince Hezekiah, in reference to whom he says what the English version renders: For unto us a child will be born, a son will be given, and the government shall be on his shoulders, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

This, of course, according to Matthew, must refer to the messiah that should come 700 to 750 years after that, although the prophet always speaks of the present distress, and of one who should deliver Judah from the power of the invader (Sanherub).

The whole, however, is another abuse and misrepresentation of scriptures for dogmatic purposes. The verbs are in the absolute past tense, can only be translated in the past tense; "a child was born to us, a son was given to us;" they can refer only to a person born long before those words were spoken, and cannot be tortured to refer to one to be born 700 years later.

To whom did the prophet refer? To one who will take the government upon his shoulder, which could only be the crown prince Hezekiah, who was then from twenty-three to twenty-five years old. He, the prophet believed, will change the pernicious and God-defying policy of his father, Ahaz. He will be heir to the destructive consequences of his father's policy; the Assyrians will invade, overrun, and distress the land, but by the merits and piety of this prince the country will be saved at last, and then he will be called "Wonderful." Why will he be called so? Because he will be "a mighty strong counsellor" (in time of national distress), "master of the booty" (in time of war), and "a prince of peace" (after the invader shall have been expelled). The English translators bring out "counsellor and mighty god," contrary to the sense and spirit of the whole Bible, which never calls any man a god; contrary also to good grammar and the Massoretic accents.

So frail are all the references of the New Testament to the Old, where the attempt is made to prop Christology by the oracles of the old prophets in Israel. If you even admit their unreasonable construction of those passages, it proves nothing in favor of the messiah that it does not also in favor of Alexander the Great, who was a son of Apollo, or any other Roman or Greek who was a son of some God, as cases of that kind were not rare, even in the time when Mary conceived of the Holy Ghost, as you can see by Josephus (Antiq. xviii, iii, 4) in the story of Paulina and Dicus Mundus in the time of the Emperor Tiberius; and before that Olympus was full of gods enamored of beautiful women. There is no reason whatever why Almah must refer to Mary and not to some other damsel selected by some God as his earthly bride. The hero of Isaiah ix, 5, may just as well be Simon the Maccabee, Agrippa I., or, by a little stretch of the exegetic canon, Cæsar, Charlemagne, Napoleon I., the late Emperor William, the present emperor of Austria, the king of Italy, some emperor of China, or a sultan of Zanzibar.

THE GREAT MAN, JOSEPH COOK.

Strolling about over the Union as I have for the past four months, I have had the pleasure of seeing and communing with a number of men, all prominent in some line, and thinking that their personal appearance as it struck me might be of interest to the reader, I have reluctantly consented to write some impressions of a few under the general title of "Eminent Men Whom I Have Saw."

Joseph Cook, as the greatest man we have on the face of the earth to-day, according to calculations made by himself, would naturally come first. He is a grand man, engaged in thinking thoughts all the time, of which he is the theme. He occasionally takes a day off, during which he curses the newspapers in an earnest way, and then he goes back to hover over his porcelain nest-egg of thought.

Joseph Cook might have a good deal of fun if he would just oversee the universe daytimes and let some one else do it at night, but the slightest irregularity in the habits of a planet will bring Joe out of bed in an instant. He worries all the time for fear that a new-laid planet will wander away into the brush and get lost.

He dreads to die, not so much on his own account, but because he wants to be spared to those who are so poorly prepared to get along without him.

When he is colicky and fretful, it is not that he cares a cent about it personally, but because he is all the time afraid to die and leave the universe in the hands of the creator. He has been accustomed for so long to go around with a long-nosed oil can searching for a hot journal in the solar system that he actually believes himself to be largely responsible for atmospheric conditions and astronomical phenomena.—Bill Nye.

ATTENTION is called to the advertisement of "Yone Santo" on the last page of this paper.

IS MODERN CIVILIZATION A FAILURE?

This question is important on account of the claim of the Catholic church, that she has been the best friend of the poor, as well as on account of the position of Henry George. Before quoting him, however, I must express my sincere gratitude for his noble efforts to suppress the purchase of votes, and protect the poor against a tariff which taxes them in order to make owners of mines and factories rich. I am sorry to have been supposed to attack him in a sentence which refers only to Socialists and Trades-Unionists, and does not mention his name. If what I did say of him was incorrect, full justice has been done him by other contributors. I do not see, however, that I have anything to take back, especially as "Progress and Poverty" says, "We must make land common property" and "confiscate rent" (in other words, "that part of the produce which accrues to the owners of land or other natural capabilities by virtue of their ownership"), "put all taxes on the value of land," and make no compensation to the land owners on whom all taxation would fall (pp. 295, 402, 148, 392, 329, and 384). I am told that I ought not to call this unjust until I study the book; but how long would a woman have to study the Bible before she could tell if she ought to be in subjection to her husband? The only way to know if either of these holy books is infallible is to compare its assertions with historical facts and moral laws. "Progress and Poverty" is a chain of arguments; and we test a chain by trying to break a link. I care much less about the prophecy that owning land in common will remove pauperism (p. 414) than I do about the fact that it has not been able, after many centuries, to do so in either India or Russia. What it did for people in the middle ages we shall see presently.

The title "Progress and Poverty" is expanded into assertions "that material progress does not merely fail to relieve poverty—it actually produces it," makes it take "a darker aspect," and has a tendency "to still further depress the condition of the lowest class," and that one "would make an infinitely better choice" in preferring to be born a foreign savage rather than among the lowest classes in Great Britain (pp. 7, 8, 9, and 257). We are also told that among the elements of material progress are "improvements in knowledge, education, government, police, manners, and morals, so far as they increase in power of producing wealth." The whole view so far resembles Rousseau's, which is said to have been calculated to make men want to go on all fours, that I am glad to see that it is sustained by no better evidence than this: "As the result of much investigation, Hallam says he is convinced that the wages of manual labor were greater in amount in England during the middle ages than they are now." If we take the last word literally, we must suppose that Hallam communicated through some Spiritualist medium; as he died twenty years before the book was copyrighted. Probably we have only a reminiscence of a passage in his "Middle Ages" (published eighty-one years ago) about the buying of bread and meat by farm-hands, at a time when wheat was more than twice as dear as at present, and all wages lower. And here Hallam admits an important fact, which seems to me to be set aside arbitrarily on page 8, namely, that the poor have been much benefited by new inventions and reductions in the price of manufactured articles.

In the middle ages there were no street-lamps, side-walks, public schools, railroads, steamers, street-cars, stoves, chimneys, wooden floors, post-offices, fire-engines, sewers, sewing machines, matches, savings banks, or newspapers. Such clothing as a modern tramp would take as a gift was a luxury for the rich and noble, as were glass windows, clocks, watches, books, medical skill, white bread, meat at this season, fresh fish—except on the coast—most of our fruits and choice vegetables, pepper, and other spices. Authors who wrote seven hundred years ago tell us of charities by which "poor persons were plentifully fed, each having a loaf and two herrings." This was in Lent, when eating almost anything else was at the risk of one's life, unless he could afford to buy an indulgence. Capital punishment for this offense was inflicted in Catholic countries as late as the last century. In the beginning of the twelfth century we read that in England during nineteen years, the rich men "plundered and burned all the towns; that well thou mightest go a whole day's journey and never shouldst thou find a man sitting in a town, nor the land tilled. Then was corn dear, and flesh, and cheese, and butter. Wretched men starved of hunger." At that time laborers were generally serfs; and the poor had no more protection from the laws against cruelty and lust than if they had been slaves. During the middle ages life was only half as long on the average as at present; famine was frequent; war went on perpetually; and pestilence found it easy to sweep away one-third of the population. Less than five hundred years ago travelers found the English peasants living in huts with walls of uncemented stone, and no floor, chimney, or windows, and with only a bull's hide for a door. Their food was mainly peas and coarse meal; for many of them never ate bread. Tramps were numerous in the sixteenth century, when they were whipped, branded, sold into slavery, and even hung. Mr. George himself says that a man was obliged to work a whole week, three hundred years ago, to buy a bushel of wheat. How much worse off people were in England a century later, especially in prisons, than at present, Macaulay has shown plainly. Wages there have risen about fifty per cent., and prices fallen another fifty since the reform of the tariff in 1846. In not one of the fifteen years, of which the last was 1885, were there so many vagrants arrested in London as in 1831; while the population of England became twice as great. The Encyclopedia Britannica shows that one-eighteenth of the English were paupers in 1846, but thirty years afterwards it was only one-thirty-third. Thomas Paine, near the conclusion of the "Rights of Man," estimates that, a hundred years ago, when there were few factories in England, and much less of material progress than at present, one-fifth of the people were unable to support themselves without charity. This would make the proportion of paupers to population about six times as large as it is to-day.

The French nobles in the last century were allowed to shoot down mechanics for sport, drive over children in the street, and take women from their husbands by force; while the peasants starved in trying to live on grass. Our own workingmen are far better off than those in less free and enlightened ages and lands. Our pauperism is largely due either to immigration or to our giving too much money to beggars and too little attention to industrial education and other reforms which have actually proved beneficial.

Thus I feel bound to stand up for modern civilization and free institutions, as blessings to all our people, and most so to the poor. I have written freely because I know that loyalty to the Liberal cause requires us to insist on the real worth of the world and age in which we live. There is my faith.

NEW YORK LETTER.

The trial of Kerr drags on. No one pays the slightest attention to it, as no one expects a conviction. District Attorney Fellows has turned the case over to three boys in his office to contend with Judge Noah Davis, the best lawyer in this state, and Colonel Ingersoll. Davis is attending to the law part of the trial, and Ingersoll will doubtless do the summing up. At the time John R. Fellows was running for the office he now occupies, there was an ugly rumor in circulation that Kerr contributed $100,000 for Fellows's campaign. We simply repeat the rumor. We know nothing about it. We have, however, nothing but contempt for Fellows. A man who gambles, gives his note for his losses, and then pleads the gambling act, we consider a cur. With gentlemen, a gambling debt is a debt of honor; as sacred as the chastity of his wife, but with this Arkansas traveler it was otherwise. We cannot exactly reconcile Davis and Ingersoll's attempt to shield a criminal from punishment for a retainer with justice. I don't believe there is a man in this city who does not believe that Kerr is guilty of bribery. I don't believe either of them believes he is innocent. If he escapes Sing Sing it will be owing to them. The state will be defrauded of its just due by the connivance of these men, if he is acquitted. Has a lawyer the moral right to cheat the state, by aiding a criminal to escape just punishment? If I aid a criminal to escape from the jurisdiction of the court, I shall be punished. Why has a lawyer more rights than a layman? I mean moral rights.

The deeper the market stand is probed, the nastier it grows. Our city comptroller, Meyers, is not in an enviable position. He seems anxious to cover up this rascality. No reputable market man was able to secure a stand in this new market with pay for it. Who got this money? Some of it has been traced into the comptroller's office. I don't think any one suspects Meyers of taking it, but he seems determined to shield the men who did take it. Meyers is a red-headed Jew, whose reputation was a little soiled by a business transaction some years ago. Somehow he was forced on the Democratic party by County Democracy. Young Nicoll is the special counsel for the corporation department, and is showing his usual ability and energy.

There is an investigation going on at Albany, which is going to hurt a good many politicians of both parties. Speaker Cole is severely wounded. The committee he appointed were evidently not appointed for their fitness to superintend such work, but for their pull on their parties. There was a steal. The ceiling of the assembly hall was not constructed according to the contract. This committee knew this and permitted it. The contractor has skipped. The committee appointed by the assembly to investigate this business has employed Clarence Seward as its counsel. No man is better equipped for such work than Mr. Seward. He has had great experience in this line.

The early spring has given our merchants a good trade. Collections, however, are poor. The small crops of wheat and the low price of corn have left the West poor. There is reported to be a little better feeling in the iron trade, but there is a decided weak feeling in coal. The mild winter has left the coal companies with large supplies on hand. Either there must be a reduction in production, or a reduction in price. There seems to be no good reason for bulling the coal stocks. Wall street is stupidly dull. The public has boycotted it. The bears attempted to make capital out of the flurry in Paris, but it "did not work."

EUDORUS.

AMONG THE IGNORANT SINCERE.

A reader of FREETHOUGHT, strolling about the city, fell among the Salvationists, and thus relates what happened to him:

I went into the hall and took a front seat. It is the first time I have taken the front seat in anything for years. By the time the services began the hall was very well filled. Behind me sat an old man who, from time to time, uttered a fervent and sincere "Bless the Lord;" and three or four seats further back was a young man who shouted "Glory," in season and out. Songs were sung which justified eminently the epigram of Voltaire, to the effect that "that which is too foolish to be said, is sung." Weak-voiced confessions were then indulged in by several of the audience. Some must have been exceedingly funny, for the preacher and those who were with him on the dais, smiled appreciatively. Some benevolent power, probably foreseeing that I should be a witness of such an affair as I am describing, compassionately weakened my hearing a year or so in advance, so I was spared. The finale was approaching. The man in gray asked that all those who felt they were saved should come forward. The small number of those who remained after this request must have saddened his Satanic majesty somewhat. Another demand that all who wanted to be saved step forward, lessened still more the number of old Nick's victims. The devil was certainly getting the worst of it. Poor fellow! I, at least, did not desert him. Seeing that there were still a few unregenerated left, some of the saved ones set to work to bring them to a realization of the horrible state they were in. I was leaning languidly on my right hand when the young man who had made himself so conspicuous by shouting "glory" approached me, bent down, and whispered something in my ear. Surprised, nay, dumfounded, I thought that "Infidel" and "damnation" were so clearly written on my brow that I would escape all attempts of this kind. After I had recovered somewhat I answered.

"Louder," I said.

Mr. Glory repeated, but again I failed to hear him.

"Louder," I answered.

"Are you a Christian?" he shrieked, nearly bursting an artery.

"No," politely.

"Do you want to be one?" softly.

"Eh?"

"Do you want to be one?" fortissimo.

"No," socially.

"Why not?"

I made a rather lame reply.

"Don't you want to be saved?" he asked next.

"From what?"

"Going to hell. That's where all like you will go."

"Why?"

"Because you are a sinner."

"How do you know?"

"I know it."

I was in a fair way to succumb to such irresistible logic, when he began on another tack.

"God says that we are all sinners. He says that you are a liar; that I am a liar."

"He's another," I answered, brilliantly resorting to the tu quoque argument.

He repeated the charge, and I was wondering whether I ought not to spill his gore, even though he was only Jehovah's proxy. But I am nothing if not civilized, besides which the humorous side of the affair could not possibly escape me. I asked the young spouter to show me the passage in which the Infinite Pound-master classed me with Ananias. He looked in vain, but pounced upon a verse to the effect that I had made him out a liar. As this was just what I had done, I was, of course, highly satisfied. I next declared, in my usual modest manner, that I was about as virtuous a fellow as I had ever met and could not, therefore, understand why belief in the "Holy Q'eer" was necessary to my salvation. Mr. Glory replied that there were many things I could not understand, except by faith. "The Lord is infinite, and you are finite." Of course this argument was a boomerang, and I made the proper use of it. Seeing that I was incorrigible, he withdrew, much to my relief.

Now for reflection: I am of the opinion that where the lowest class is concerned, Freethought has no show as against orthodoxy. A divine avenger and rewarder appeals powerfully to the ignorant mind, which is incapable of comprehending systems founded upon pure reason. "Education is the remedy," say many. But how are the children of our modern helots to obtain it if, as soon as they are able to walk, they are sent out into the streets, or to the workshops, to earn the salt with which to sprinkle the family mess of potatoes?

Each of us has his Dido's ox-hide—too often an ass-hide—within whose limits we flatter ourselves to have gathered everything that will conduce to plenty, morality, and knowledge. No one remedy, however, will replace want with plenty, brutality with humanity, vice with virtue, and ignorance with knowledge.

A multiplicity of causes brought about the "miseries of existence," although it is quite possible they may be all embraced in the one word, Ignorance, as Buddha taught. PANURGE.

The San Jose Church of Humanity.

To the Editors of Freethought:

As the "Church of Humanity" deserves more than a passing notice, I will give a detailed account of its workings; but first let me correct one statement in your notice in FREETHOUGHT, March 9. You mention Mr. Ravlin as "a clergyman who recently drifted away from his orthodox moorings in San Diego." N. F. Ravlin was for five years pastor in high standing in the First Baptist church of San Jose. Under his ministrations the church was very prosperous and became the most popular church in San Jose, but during all this time the clear-sighted ones could see that he was "drifting away from his orthodox moorings," and when the time came that he cut loose, and was fairly launched on the vast ocean of progressive thought, no pastor in this city held a higher place in the esteem and hearts of his people. I shall never forget the last morning that he stood before his congregation. He did not do as most ministers do, play upon the feelings of his people before uttering his last farewell, but when the choir arose to sing the closing hymn and broke down in tears at the third word, the pent-up feelings of pastor and people burst forth, and there were but few dry eyes in that house. Finding that the church would not allow freedom of thought or speech, too honest to assume what he did not feel, he turned his back on all that stood in the way of progress. During the past three years his experiences have been varied, at many times exceedingly trying, but never for a moment has he swerved from his purpose or regretted that he has been true to his convictions. Now he has returned to the very spot where he broke loose from his fetters. He says: "My old conceptions and I have parted company forever. I could never return to them any more than I could to the cradle in which my mother rocked me. I have never been so happy before, and I do not admit for one minute that I am less useful. If there are any that think I have backslidden, they will find, if there has been any sliding, it has been forward, not back. In proportion as people are intelligent they drift away from sectarianism. You cannot cramp the expanded soul. We are blamed because we do not remain children; that we grow to manly stature. We grow as naturally as the seed germinates and springs up. We have left old conditions forever; it is impossible to return to old ways of thinking, to the servitude of the past, to fetters and bonds."

I have said more about Mr. Ravlin than I had intended, but it will give you a faint idea of the man whom we are proud and happy to have secured as a speaker for the Church of Humanity. At the organization meeting the following preamble and resolution were adopted:

"Whereas, There are a great many people in this city who are non-attendants upon the services of any church; and

"Whereas, It is impossible for these people to accept the commonly received beliefs of Christendom without doing violence to their sober reason, their enlightened judgment, and their honest convictions; and

"Whereas, It is the desire of many to meet together for mutual improvement, to cultivate the intellectual and spiritual faculties, and to encourage one another to every good word and work; and

"Whereas, It is important to vindicate and reaffirm the right of private judgment, the freedom of speech, and to maintain an open door for the promulgation of Freethought; and

"Whereas, Much more effective work can be done in the cause of Humanity by co-operation and association; therefore,

"Resolved, That we do now proceed to organize a society, to be known as the 'Church of Humanity,' by the election of proper officers, and the appointment of committees.

The officers elected were, as you have stated, O. F. Alley, president; J. W. Miler, vice-president; Mrs. R. H. Schwartz, secretary, and Dr. Bentley, treasurer. The following committees were appointed:

Committee on constitution and by-laws, Mrs. L. Champion, W. W. Battles, N. F. Ravlin; committee on enrollment, Mrs. P. A. Simons, Mrs. R. H. Schwartz, William Foss; committee on finance, William McMeekin, L. Srimton, William Foss; committee on music and entertainment, R. H. Schwartz, Wm. McMeekin, H. A. Crawford; committee on relief, Mrs. J. J. Crawford, Dr. Helen J. Underwood, Mrs. D. M. Woodbury, W. D. Pollard, L. S. Orcutt, O. F. Alley. A floral committee is to be added.

A series of socials are to be given. Everything is moving on swimmingly. Never was so much interest manifested in a movement in this city. Nothing has ever happened here that is hurting the church element as this; many of our prominent citizens are taking an active part, and there is no doubt that this Church of Humanity is going to be the grandest power that has ever existed in the state.

In the evening, at the California Theatre, Mr. Ravlin defined the mission of his new organization, as you have it published in FREETHOUGHT of March 16. Thus has been inaugurated the first "Church of Humanity" in the world. It covers the whole field. It embraces everything that pertains to humanity; there is room upon its platform for the whole world—"no creed, no dogmas, and perfect liberty of thought."

MRS. R. H. SCHWARTZ.

Professor Seymour On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Our next place for lectures was Columbia, four miles north from Sonora, where we found the remains of what was once a populous mining city of 10,000 or more people, but now numbering only a few hundred. There are still quite a number of fine brick business houses, but very little business is done. It seems like walking the halls of the Montezumas, so deserted are the streets, and dilapidated the buildings. We found a fine hotel—the Conlin House—which also contained a good opera hall where we gave four lectures to very fair audiences.

Columbia is in a little valley, very beautifully located, with "lovely" sloping hills surrounding it. Ten thousand acres, more or less, have been dug over for gold until it looks like some immense city of the dead. Huge limestone and marble rocks, varying in height from ten to forty feet, almost cover the ground, in some directions, as far as the eye can reach. A few men are still here, crawling around between, and digging under these huge stones hunting for the "root of all evil." These huge rocks, before the discovery of the "dust," were covered with a rich, red soil, but the gold hunter has washed every panful of it over and over again and sent it down the flumes to the valleys and bay below. To look over these fields of desolation and ruin reminds one of the exhumed city of Pompeii. Men have often come in here to the banks with seventy-five to one hundred pounds of gold dust which they sold at prices varying from $16 to $19 per ounce. No small fortune that! Huge iron pipes, a foot or more in diameter, run around among the rocks and up over high hills and bluffs, looking like immense black serpents crawling over the country. These pipes bring, from forty miles further up the country, the precious water that washes out the gold, irrigates the gardens and orchards, and fills the water troughs. Right here, where so many millions of wealth have been taken out, I heard and saw more poverty and cry of hard times than in any place I have visited in the state.

From Columbia we descended some two thousand feet by a road cut in the side of the mountain to Parrot's Ferry, across the Stanislaus river, which I could have waded most any where but which I had the pleasure of paying 75 cents to be ferried over. The scenery here is magnificent and grand in the extreme. As we climbed the mountain on the northern side of the river we came soon to the Kiota Creek, where we left our team tied to a tree and descended some thousands of feet to view one of the greatest curiosities of nature—a natural bridge over the Kiota Creek, varying in height above the rushing torrent from twelve to forty feet. This bridge covers the creek for a distance of two hundred and forty feet up and down the stream, while on its under side it has all the appearance of a cave. An "old bach," a splendid specimen of the genus homo, by the name of Barnes, has owned and lived here for thirty years and made quite a palace of this cave under the bridge. He has erected a dam some ten or twelve feet high just above the bridge to stop the big boulders from "floating" down into his "den;" also another dam right under the middle of the bridge, which forms a beautiful waterfall and cascade. The roof of this cavern, which is the under side of the bridge, is covered with formations—stalactites, etc.—wonderful to behold. This is a favorite camping-place for thousands who come here every summer to rest awhile from business. The "old bach" is about as much of a curiosity as his cave, or bridge—his house is always open and latch-string hanging out. Once when he came home, after a short absence, he found pinned to his door the following original poem, evidently penned by some fair damsel of uncertain age, who would like to share his love and cave:

I say, old Bach, why don't you match
With some Calaveras maiden fair,
If just for you she might come, too,
And dwell here in your lonely lair?

The life you lead must be sad, indeed,
Compelled to sleep by yourself alone;
Now don't think twice, take my advice,
And ask some maid to share your home.

The "old bach" answered as follows:

Good wives are very hard to find,
And, what is harder still,
The cash is what the women want—
A want that's hard to fill.

Show me the girl with cash in bank,
With plenty there for two,
Then she can have this poor old crank,
His cave, and home, and body too. —L. A. BARNES.

I found Mr. Barnes a Freethinker who says he is as happy as a "quail on toast," and expects to live and die right here. He has a fine head and a merry eye that twinkles with a true business air when he calls for his regular 50 cents for showing this really great wonder of California.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

Organize and Incorporate.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I see by your valuable paper that Professor Herbert Miller is about to inaugurate a series of Liberal meetings in your beautiful city. Always when I see such announcements made, I feel that the interest attending the bringing together of Liberals for merely talk is not sufficient inducement to be of long duration. Myself and others at one time, some forty years ago, organized in the city of New York what we called the Independent Order of Liberals. We made it a benefit society. At one time we had several hundred dollars in funds, and even at that, the interest looking us in the face, we could not keep up our organization. Organize, organize, and come together, not only to talk, but to help one another, and prepare such organization, under legislative enactment, to receive and hold donations of such persons as Mr. Courtlandt Palmer, whose eyes might have been opened to such a course of proceeding had there been an opportunity offered. Yours truly, P. H. FOSTER.

COMPETITION AND CO-OPERATION.

From a Letter.

If the millions of money, and the months and years of time that have been lost in strikes and lock-outs in recent decades—thus keeping up the wage system and competition, without thought of a better system—had been thrown into the one single and simple direction of the co-operative colony, by starting as many such colonies as the funds so wasted (or not much better) could have enabled the workmen to start, then this country would have already entered the era of the new civilization, which, nevertheless, is as certain to come as to-morrow's sunrise; but which coming is delayed because those most interested in it—the millions of wage workers—do not as yet see the path, and that the only path, that lies before them, leading to truly free and dignified labor.

It is idle to look to politics alone, and the multiplication of laws, for an escape from the labor troubles. Thirty-eight states and a national congress are piling up new laws at a surprising rate each year. Eleven thousand bills were presented to the House of Representatives in the recent session of Congress, only three thousand of which could receive attention—so to call the necessarily hasty consideration given to each of these three thousand. Many of these laws are restrictive and prohibitory; others are permissive; and yet others are regulatory. As to the restrictive and prohibitory, many of these are, no doubt, necessary, and even imperatively so, as things now are, in our disorderly, competitive semi-civilization. But it does not seem to be quite the right thing to hedge up a community with an ever higher rising wall of legal "Don'ts." With endless new inventions and discoveries of Nature's forces; with increasing population, and new industries ever arising, matters grow more and more complicated every year; and we think to straighten out these complications and industrial tangles by more and more laws; complications and tangles which arise simply because our industries are without proper organization, but at loose ends everywhere and all the time. We live under the despotic rule of an intense individualism. Every person, every firm and corporation, goes its own course, regardless of others, as far as it can. It is "everyone for himself and the devil take the hindmost." We obey the injunction expressed in the couplet,

"Those must take who have the power,
And they may keep, who can."

THE editor of the Deadwood Roarer attended church for the first time last Sunday. In about an hour he rushed into the office and shouted to the telegraph editor: "What in blazes are you fellows doing? How about the news from the seat of war?" "What news?" Rustle 'round, you fellows, and get the facts, or the Snap Shot will get a beat on us. Look spry, there, and run an extra edition if necessary while I put up a bulletin board 'Great English Victory in the Soudan.'"

The Burden of Interest.

Lois Waisbrooker holds that usury and land monopoly must go, or all freedom must go, and she sets forth her reasons therefor in a ten-cent pamphlet with the title "Facts and Figures for Workingmen." That interest is a severe burden to borrowers is quite plain, but how borrowers can be persuaded to cease paying it is a question not easy to answer.—FREETHOUGHT.

So long as "class legislation" makes certain kinds of property (such as gold and silver) "legal tender" in the payment of debts, including taxes and duties, and so long as these laws punish by forced levy and sale of goods, those who fail to provide themselves with the aforesaid privileged class of property—sometimes called "money"—just so long will it be impossible for the borrower to be relieved from the burden of interest. Interest (usury) is unnatural. It is a wholly artificial arrangement by which the capable and the cunning contrive, by class legislation, to live at their ease and grow wealthy by exploiting the less cunning and the less fortunate.—Lucifer.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - APRIL 6, 1889

OWING to his numerous engagements on the coast, Mr. S. P. Putnam will be unable to extend his lecture tour farther east than Montana and Idaho.

THE Rev. Samuel Jones has got through with San Francisco. He received $1,200 for his services, and claims to have converted twelve hundred people. If lies were feathers he might put wings on all of them.

B. F. UNDERWOOD has just closed a most interesting discussion with the Rev. Dr. Bates at Cleveland. We judge from reports in the local papers that the clergyman did the shouting and Mr. Underwood the debating.

PATRICK EAGAN, an Irishman and a Roman Catholic, will represent the United States government in Chile. Both by his nationality and his religion he is better fitted to represent the politicians than the people.

TRINITY church, this city, has been condemned as unsafe by the fire department, and the members are indignant. They regard their chance of escaping fire in this world as much better than the fire wardens' in the hereafter.

KATE FIELD, the lecturer, is fighting the Prohibitionists on the ground, among other things, that the Bible opposes prohibition. This will not count. The Bible is on both sides of every question, which fact is regarded by religious people as proof of its divine inspiration.

A NUMBER of young ladies of Redding, Shasta county, have formed an association whose constitution forbids them to marry any one who uses tobacco, who drinks anything stronger than light wines, or who is not a member of the Young Men's Christian Association. Girls who would join an association of that kind do not deserve any better husbands than the ones they are likely to get.

LAST week a most unique and, so far as is known, unprecedented church celebration was held in Alameda, being the "tin wedding" of the Congregational church, which was organized and, as the ecclesiastical phrase has it, "wedded to Christ" March 25, 1879. Tin articles of ornament and kitchen furniture were presented in great profusion and suspended around the church. The presence of the bridegroom is not mentioned in the reports of the proceedings.

FAREWELL TO THE REV. SAMUEL JONES.

O Jones, when first you came to preach to us
From Sacramento and Los Angherlus,
We knew your fame as a religious liar
Was great as your supporters could desire.

We knew your mastery of dialect
Was all that any critic could expect;
We were familiar with your repertoire,
And the inherent powers of your jaw.

But when we heard you were we all surprised—
Our highest hopes are more than realized.
You are a sample of that vaulting pride
Which, missing saddle, 'lights the other side.

Perhaps you really do more good than harm,
And we have viewed your pranks without a'arm.
Yet, Jones, good-bye—if say good-bye we must;
We shall not see your like again, we trust.

SUNDAY MORNING AT 10:30.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held in the hall of the Turn Verein, 323 Turk street, Sunday morning, April 7, at 10:30 o'clock instead of evening.

NEWS AND NOTES.

SAN JACINTO AND PERRIS.—All day long I had to remain at Goshen, and this scripture appellation became to my mind quite melancholy and tedious. At sundown the express thundered along, and through the wide spaces of night I sped to the city of the Angels, glittering in the freshness of morning, not with the halo of paradise, but the splendor of the nineteenth century. Here I met old friends again—J. E. Clark, S. Calhoun, C. Severance, Eugene Riggin, good John Riggin—going on to a hundred years with the sweet philosophies of life, and thoughts that sparkle with eternal youth—and from these generous comrades all the future brightens. My Portland friends of last golden autumn are now, this silver spring-time, in Los Angeles—Mrs. Saunders, Mrs. A. W. Graham, Miss Orlie, and the three boys, Azro, Harry, and Jo, the latter with plenty of what orthodoxy avers to be "total depravity," but which nature declares to be her sublimest virtue, irrepressible energy and wilfulness, which will one day make them triumphant soldiers of this world.

My friend Ward gave me a delightful drive over the far-spreading metropolis. Though the boom has gone, life flows on, and the city is magnificent still. Mr. Ward took me to his factory where iron pipes are made for the distribution of water. He ha invented a black oily liquid in which the pipes are dipped and the iron is kept from rust, and the water flows through with absolute purity. It absorbs nothing from the glassy and oily surface. This is a most important invention. The water can run through the pipes with the crystal clearness of the fountain itself.

Saturday morning I leave Los Angeles for San Jacinto. The new railroad, built since I was here before, brings me into this brilliant valley, or rather series of valleys, with wide vistas, vast wheatfields, on whose bosom, where softest summer gales are blowing, the snow-capped mountains look benignantly down and greet the violet and the rose with diamond lustres.

Warm hearts are here, and though business is dull, I find plenty of intellectual stimulus. The captain greets me at the Glendale House, and there is not a dull moment when he is round. Friend D. W. Perkins has Freethought to his very fingers' ends, and can talk philosophy by the hour. He is well posted and knows the annals of science from Humboldt to Huxley, and he does make the orthodox dance to many a lively tune of heresy. He believes in progress and humanity with the whole energy of his being. Sunday morning he and the captain and myself attended the Congregational church to hear a blind preacher, blind from eighteen months of age. He read with raised letters, and gave a very good discourse on the "heavenly wisdom." He seemed to think that "heavenly wisdom" was all the wisdom there is, and that worldly wisdom didn't amount to anything. The next day friend Perkins tackled him at the hotel and told him that if it had not been for worldly wisdom he never would have been able to read his own Bible; it is worldly wisdom, not "heavenly," which has made the means of education for the blind. The preacher didn't take to his logic at all, and finally declared that he had rather be a villain than a blasphemer. Thus it is every time, the worst crime in the eyes of a Christian is to disbelieve—better lie and steal. Such is the morality of "heavenly wisdom."

I had good meetings Sunday afternoon and evening. There were not a great many present, but that is not always a cause of discouragement. The quality of the audience was invigorating; that kind which will make the seeds of thought grow to noble and beautiful fruitage. Still the future opens to unbounded promise, though the present is limited. J. B. Vernon is also a staunch supporter of our flag, always ready for the march, and a generous companion. Henry Chester is of the stalwart band, and with such we have "a heart for any fate."

J. P. Vawter, N. O. Hansen, S. Durett, Henry Durett, and others are also enlisted in the ranks of Freethought. I was sorry not to see all Liberal friends here. Some were away, some on the sick list, some at the gold mines. Good luck to them, and I hope to see them later.

"Grandpa Todd" has gone from silver age to the gray silence of death. Let the flowers bloom over him, for the virtue of his life is undying hope.

Monday afternoon, in the gorgeous sunshine, Chas. W. Clark took me over to Diamond Valley. This valley is rightly named. On every side emerald lustres, mingling with brown and gray and yellow, are like the melting rays of an immense jewel. Up at the farther end we reach the domicile of P. A. Clark, where trees of all kinds do flourish, the orange, the apple, the pomegranate, the prune, the peach, etc. In this nook there is a warm place for fruits.

Friend Clark is big as of old, and as cheerful, although under the weather with a severe cold and threatened pneumonia. He is on the mend, I am glad to say. Mrs. Clark and the little girls and the baby vie with the sunshine in health and happiness. Especially does the baby keep things lively. He knows his rights, "and knowing dare maintain." I had the pleasure of meeting Professor Vail, an original thinker, author of the ring theory of the earth's formation. Like Saturn, the earth once had rings. It is a wonderfully interesting theory and has many facts in its support, and I should not wonder if that was the way many of the appearances of the planet's surface came about. They are not upheavals, but down-fallings from the breaking and dissolving rings.

A baker's dozen was at the meeting in the evening, but it went off pleasantly, and Mr. Pickering, my Mormon saint, thought my ideas on the separation of church and state pretty sound.

Professor Livingstone is still the schoolmaster and stands on the rock of Universal salvation, and so has a sunny face for the Freethinker.

The next day, Tuesday, was absolutely perfect. The morning passed away like a dream to me, sitting on the porch, drinking the balmy gales, looking down the radiant valley, lifting eyes to the mighty mountains over walls of sapphire and seas of green. It was a picture as entrancing as the eye or heart could enjoy. It folded in bright forgetfulness all the ills of life. It was an intoxication of splendid color and marvelous form.

Amidst the first gold of the afternoon, just shivering down from the wings of evening, the "angel" from Pleasant valley came, John E. Stuart, and he took me to the other side of the rocky buttes that trend into the valley; and there from his modest residence as beautiful a scene stretches as ever could be looked upon among the snowy Alps or by glancing Rhine. One could gaze almost a hundred miles away, and every moment, as the lights and shadows changed, a new revelation was in the air. Mrs. Stuart is the gentle schoolmistress of this happy dale. The school-house is two miles off, and morning and evening she drives to and from amidst nature's loveliness, and books and study thus take a dewy freshness. The children like her so well that they will not let her lay down the rule, and she must still exercise its genial authority.

The school-house was full. Pleasant Valley has quite a Liberal colony. There are Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Deming, Jas. S. Deming, Martha Deming, always staunch and true; W. D. Clark who, like some tall mountain, is not a bit fretted by the gusts of orthodoxy. E. Larsen and family, the Akers, a dozen of them or more, and of the best quality, John, George, Bertha, etc.; George and Susan Spittler, T. D. Hamenway, J. L. Cye, and others; and I am sure that my pilgrimage here will always be like a visit to Beulah land. Nature and humanity could not be more kind, more noble, and more hospitable.

Early on Wednesday morning I am speeding down the shining valley to Perris, where I lecture in the evening.

A full house greets me, and the orthodox are set on fire. After the prayer-meeting they crowd around the doors of the hall, and as soon as my discourse is over a rattling discussion begins, but the Christians are soon routed and retreat to the realms of faith. A good opening is made in this lively burg, and future work is most promising.

Our wheel-horse of reform is A. L. Reynolds, and he is indeed a persistent and self-sacrificing worker. He gives all he can to a cause that is the inspiration of his life. He has wonderful mechanical skill, and has invented a sun water-lifting apparatus which strike me as being a most valuable natural power. It is something new, and I hope our bright young friend has got a fortune in it. To use the sun to pump water with is a most excellent arrangement, and better than any Christian miracle so far.

The Reynolds' make quite a regiment in themselves at this point, and they are for Freethought by "a large majority."

I was glad to meet my sturdy ally Mr. Reed again, and to see that he is getting the better of Father Time and the infirmities of the flesh. Liberalism is to him the best of medicine and he "bates no jot of heart or hope."

Mrs. Reynolds and W. R. Sargent furnished most excellent music for the occasion, for which I must express my thanks. They gave that inspiration which makes labor most joyful.

J. Herbert, Jonathan Foster, John A. Peron, are enrolled in the ranks of Freethought. So cordial has been my reception at this place that I hope to be able to return in a few weeks and organize.

Within three miles of Perris are gold mines, now being operated, more valuable, it is said, than those lately discovered in Lower California.

The country about Perris and San Jacinto is of good quality. There is promise of abundant harvest this year. Lands are held from thirty to sixty dollars an acre. When the boom is over and hard work begins, and homes are built up, these valleys from Perris to San Jacinto will form one of the finest portions of the state. From point to point there will be one continuous garden.

March 28, 1889.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"MADE MAD BY RELIGION."

Perhaps no more than the average number of religious lunatics have been developed within the past week, but we do not always take the trouble to record them. We now note three.

First. Mrs. Ellen Kavanaugh, of Bernal heights, a few days ago attempted to drown herself in Islais creek. She was rescued, and while being conveyed to the receiving hospital explained that on account of her sins the savior was chasing her with the intention of casting her into the flames of hades. She had prepared for the same by jumping into the creek.

Second. Mr. John Schlapfer, a Salvation Army warrior of this city, awoke the family with whom he was boarding by resorting to the backyard in his night clothes and announcing in a loud voice that he was the Rev. Samuel Jones. He then commenced a sermon, after the style of the aforesaid Jones, upon the sins of the community, at the same time brandishing a revolver. His landlady and her daughter expostulated with him, whereupon he took several shots at each, fortunately missing them. In some way or other he received a bullet in his own leg. The commissioners sent him to the insane asylum.

The third and most serious case is reported by a telegraphic dispatch from Jackson, Mo., reading as follows:

"Sheriff John Husky, of Bolinger county, has placed in jail Amanda Lasater, charged with murder, and her husband, Monroe, as an accessory. The husband recently became a religious lunatic, claiming to have received from God a command to preach, but first to offer his fourteen-months-old child as a sacrifice. He made his wife strangle the infant, claiming that the Almighty promised to resurrect the child on the third day. When Lasater was arrested he had been carrying the dead infant in his arms for two days."

All these mad acts are traceable directly to the religious teachings of the day. The doctrine of hell fire made Mrs. Kavanaugh crazy. The revivalism of Jones upset Schlapfer's reason, while the blood atonement and a belief in the resurrection drove Lasater and his wife to infanticide.

Freethinkers are often criticised for dwelling upon the crimes committed in the past in the name of religion, and the criticism may or may not be just. We do not believe it is; but surely every humanitarian should oppose with all his might the teaching of insane delusions that bring lunacy and murder to our very doors.

DON'T DO IT.

One hundred years ago April 30, at New York, George Washington was inaugurated the first president of the United States. The clergy of that time, as of all other times, took advantage of the occasion to make themselves conspicuous by holding religious incantations in their churches. The celebrating, by the church, of any civil or secular event is a most inconsistent proceeding, because the kingdom of Christ, the alleged head of the church, is not of this world, and it is to be presumed that he takes slight interest in the inauguration of temporal rulers; but if Christians wish to be inconsistent—if they wish to celebrate events of not the least importance to them as Christians—they have a perfect right to do so. They ought, however, to be moved thereto by their own volition, and they ought not to seek to impose their ceremonies upon others who do not wish to join them.

The following self-explaining telegram affords us occasion for these remarks:

"Hon. Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States, Washington, D. C.: The committee on the centennial celebration of the inauguration of George Washington as president of the United States respectfully asks that you issue a proclamation calling upon clergymen to hold special services of thanksgiving in the churches throughout the country at nine o'clock on the morning of April 30, the same hour at which services were held in the churches of this city on the morning of Washington's inauguration, one hundred years ago.

"HAMILTON FISH, President,
"HUGH GRANT, Chairman."

The gentlemen signing the above communication are, first, a respectable old puritan—one of the gold-headed cane brigade, whose names are always before the public, as a "committee of one hundred"—and, second, a Roman Catholic politician whose church has made him the mayor of New York. Their request that the president call upon the clergymen to hold religious services on this or any other occasion, shows that neither of them has very definite notions of the functions of the chief magistrate, or of republican forms of government. In a country like Russia, where the head of the nation is the head of the church, there would be nothing out of the way in the ruler calling a religious meeting, but in America the case is different. President Harrison, with due regard to his exalted position, has no control over the clergy as preachers of the gospel. He can no more call upon them, by virtue of his office, to hold meetings on a certain day, than he can call upon the auctioneers to hold their auctions at a specified time in honor of any public event. Why is not President Harrison asked to call upon mediums to hold seances, by way of evoking the patriotic sentiments of Spiritualists? Why should there not be a proclamation urging conventions of Free-thinkers on April 30?

This request of the Centennial Committee reduces to an absurdity as soon as examined. We say to General Harrison: Don't do it. Indeed, we go further, and demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.

The president of this republic should not lower his dignity by proclaiming anything not authorized by law. If he has the right, as president, to appoint a religious meeting, he should have the authority, as chief magistrate, to enforce attendance at it. A proclamation with no authority behind it is, in the language of the revised Bible, "vanity and a striving after wind."

A SECTARIAN CONSTITUTION PRESERVED.

At the election in New Hampshire, March 12, several constitutional amendments were passed upon by the people of that state, among them one prohibiting the manufacture or sale of liquor; and another amending the bill of rights, making the same non-sectarian. Both were defeated. Article VI. of the constitution empowers "towns, parishes, bodies corporate, or religious societies" to "make adequate provision, at their own expense, for the support and maintenance of public Protestant teachers of piety, religion, and morality." It was proposed to strike out this article and let the following stand in its place:

"Every religious sect or denomination demeaning themselves quietly and as good subjects of the state shall be equally under the protection of the law, and no subordination of any one sect or denomination to another shall ever be established by law."

The defeat of the non-sectarian amendment shows that bigotry—or Puritanism, which is the same thing—is not yet dead in New Hampshire. It is equivalent to a declaration by the people of the state that "every religious sect or denomination demeaning themselves quietly and as good subjects of the state" shall not be equally under the protection of the law—a declaration that would seem to be somewhat out of place in this country. We are at a loss to understand how people bigoted enough to vote against this amendment ever allowed an opportunity to pass for prescribing by law what the minority should drink. Of course every Protestant who cast a ballot in favor of Article VI. as it stands knew that he was opposing Catholicism, and the fact that he voted oftener against Catholicism than against whisky indicates which of these two evils he regarded as most dangerous.

There is an evil, however, which has shown itself to be more dangerous than either rum or Rome, and that evil is religious bigotry of the particular sort that the New Hampshire people have just displayed.

THE NATURAL GROUNDWORK OF MORALITY.

Matthew Arnold declared that "conduct is three-fourths of life," and that assertion our own experience affirms. The conduct of man toward his fellow-man has been determined by his necessities, by his passions, by his sympathies, somewhat by his religion, but much more by his surroundings. The primitive man, like the modern savage, put no more restraint upon his passions than his environment necessitated, was cruel, lustful, lazy, thievish, false, with occasional exceptions and alternations of generosity, industry, honesty, and truth. Man has gone into the practice of virtue under the influence of long education. Modern morality is the result of human experience, and not of any divine revelation. Men found that they could not exist in communities without the practice of some self-restraint. At first, probably, man's hands, like Ishmael's, were against every man, but it was quickly found that a union of numbers gave greater security for food and protection against wild beasts, and that to maintain fellowship violence must be restrained. The natural affection of family ties strengthened this feeling. As personal property was acquired, respect for ownership was demanded, and to allow theft would have led to quarrels that would have broken up the young community. As men and women paired, the natural jealousy of the male demanded that there should be no intermeddling with his mate, and the choice, which at first was temporary, grew by the perception of mutual advantage to be permanent, and from polygamy, in the highest races, to monogamy. Falsehood, which was the natural refuge of the weak, and an instrument of power to the strong, became discredited as its disadvantages of uncertainty and injury were increasingly felt, and truth became an ideal which men wanted from others, even though they were not always willing to yield it themselves, especially where general advantage was concerned. These fundamental virtues have grown as naturally as man's intellect and knowledge. Religion had nothing to do with forming them, and they have been as highly developed among heathen as among Christian nations. Religion has frequently given them her sanction, and with her ready assumption claimed them exclusively as her own, but they were all developed out of the necessities of man's environment, and seen to be necessary to the stability of his social organization. The practical part of the Ten Commandments: Obey thy parents; thou shalt do no murder; thou shalt not commit adultery; thou shalt not steal; thou shalt not bear false witness, were all drawn from the Egyptian laws, and are found incorporated in the code of all heathen nations, Greek, Roman, Hindoo, Persian, Chinese, and had nothing to do with divine inspiration in Egypt any more than on Sinai or in Judea.

All human virtues have been of slow growth and have come from small beginnings. In the race at large the advance has been steady, with occasional relapses and long periods of infinitesimal progress. In some parts of the human family the growth has been but slight, in others unequal, in others it has been arrested. Because of the variety of morality practiced in different tribes and nations, a French writer has said that "morality is geographical." Some tribes, which have no regard for chastity, are honest and truthful, as are some of the hill tribes of India. The morality which communities have practiced among themselves has had no bearing toward strangers. To deceive, defraud, and rob a stranger was praiseworthy. Stranger and enemy are the same word in the Latin tongue. When a ship was driven on a foreign shore, in those days, the ship was plundered and the crew enslaved or killed. Practices which we abhor were common among our ancestors. In Cæsar's days the British tribes practiced polyandry: one woman had several husbands, usually brothers, with whom she lived alternately. We have sprung from moral mud, as our bodies have evolved from ocean's ooze. Irregularly, uncertainly, when closely looked at, the moral advance of mankind has gone forward, but, like the tide, it has risen with intelligence and experience.

Great impulses have at times swept over a part of the race and lifted it higher, morally, in a century or two than it had climbed in many previous. These impulses have been usually due to a great teacher, a Moses, Confucius, Buddha, Jesus, who has gathered together the highest teachings of his day, the previous possession of a few, and by his genius and the intensity of his personality, has flung the precious grain broadcast to take root and bear richly in the hearts of the masses.

The personality of genius is a tremendous force. It gathers within itself the unformulated, half-expressed thought of a race, and makes it general. It absorbs the suspended moisture of the atmosphere, and sends it down in a fertilizing rain. It changes the unvalued, slight, uncorrelated stuff into a magnificent garment of strong texture and artistic hue. Jesus did not create the morality that he taught, but he vivified it by his personality. The golden rule had been taught hundreds of years before him by Greek and oriental philosophers and teachers. He gave it a more general and positive influence by the strength of his personality, throughout the great occident, which has been the most affected by him. Bishop Butler says many of Jesus's views were mistaken, but his conception of God as love has given a softer, milder tone to men's thoughts of the supreme power, has kept them hopeful, helped them to endure patiently much wretchedness, and made them kinder to each other. We, with our wider knowledge, are beginning to doubt whether this conception of God is quite true, though we still hope; but yet we feel that brotherly kindness is still the best rule of action.

The moral teachings of Buddha, 600 years before Christ, are quite as advanced in moral tone. Listen to this: "To give alms and live righteously; to help one's relations, and do blameless deeds; to cease and abstain from sin; to eschew strong drink; not to be weary in well doing; temperance and chastity; a mind unshaken by the things of the world, without anguish or passion, and secure—these are the greatest blessings." So Buddha taught, and the writings of sages—Chinese, Hindoo, Greek, Egyptian—for hundreds, even thousands of years before Christ, are full of equally lofty moral teachings. Jesus united these teachings to a noble conception of divinity, and made that universal which had before been particular. He gave to the multitude the esoteric doctrine of the few.

RENEW.

We urge upon our subscribers who are in arrears the necessity of renewing promptly if they desire a continuance of the paper.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY celebrators are popularly regarded as Irish patriots, but it seems that their celebrations, in this city at least, are for the glory of the church. They had a balance of more than three thousand dollars left from their last pow-wow, and it is to be turned over to the Youth's Directory, which is a Catholic institution. Meanwhile pauper Ireland stretches out her hand for aid. But the Irishman carries his "bull" habit into every department of life. He looks out for the next world before he pays any attention to this.

SOMETHING is wrong with the orthodoxy of Bishop Billing, of Bedford, England. He recently astonished his hearers at Eastbourne by a proposal to introduce dancing as a form of social recreation in popular religious and semi-religious clubs. He went a step further and urged that the church should not object to cards and billiards at workingmen's clubs and institutes. He did not think that this would lead to gambling for money. The bishop offered a still more remarkable opinion on the question of recreation when he said that on some occasions, as an alternate necessity of circumstances, he would sooner close a church than a workingman's club.

We clip the following from an Iowa paper:

John Stone Kneeland, an eccentric farmer and Freethinker, died in Farmington in April, 1881, and early in May following, his will was admitted to probate. He had no faith in a hereafter, and requested the following inscription to be placed on his tombstone:

An honest man has gone to rest,
To rise or sleep as heaven thinks best;
If there's another world he lives in bliss;
If there is none, he made the best of this.

A copy of the will can be seen at the county clerk's office at the court house in Ft. Madison."

THE members of the American party should read a pamphlet entitled "Church and State," published by H. L. Green, and then expunge from their platform the seventh plank recommending the reading of the Bible in schools. The pamphlet (see advertisement in this paper) bears the name of "Jefferson" as its author. Those, however, who are familiar with the writings of the Hon. A. B. Bradford, of Pennsylvania, are likely to come to the conclusion that the present work is the product of his able pen.

JAMES LICK left some money for the Pioneers and for the Academy of Sciences. Both societies have already received large sums, and it is claimed that when all of Lick's other legacies are provided for, these two societies, as residuary legatees, will receive about $500,000 each. They have therefore begun suit to compel the trustees to pay over these sums, and will probably get the money.

NATURE has spoken her word on the Samoan problem, and hostilities between this country and Germany are, for the moment, suspended. Perhaps over the bodies of one hundred and forty human beings sacrificed to the spirit of conquest which men have inherited from the wild beasts, the politicians of the two countries will be willing to keep closed mouths until they can talk of peace.

No Peace to Make.

Near a small village in western New York, there lived, a few years ago, an eccentric old man who was known as "Uncle Nat." Just what his religious belief was seems not to have been known, but he was honest and upright in every way.

"Uncle Nat" lived mostly by himself, after the death of his wife, and indulged in a good many peculiarities of dress and manner, better calculated to amuse than to impress his neighbors, until a time came when it was evident that he must, for once, go over to the majority. News reached the village that it was thought he would die in a very short time, and this seemed to develop a very unusual interest in the good man's spiritual welfare. A certain orthodox minister of the place repaired to the house, and after viewing the queer surroundings, and taking in the situation to the best of his ability, proceeded to discharge his assumed duty of arranging matters on a satisfactory basis between the dying man and his alleged God. "Mr. W.," said he, "have you made your peace with God?" "Uncle Nat," fixing his failing eyes, full of surprise and disgust, upon the impertinent stranger, replied: "I never had any trouble with God." That ended the "conference meeting," and the weary old man was left to die without further annoyance.

SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

P. O. CHILSTROM, Esq., PRESIDENT.
 HENRY J. BREUER, Secretary.....938 Howard street, San Francisco.
 GEO. E. MACDONALD, Assistant Secretary, 504 Kearny st., " "
 A. H. SCHOU, Treasurer.....677 25th street, Oakland.
 VICE-PRESIDENTS:
 Wm. H. Eastman, Mrs. Emma Reguin, E. S. Lemme.

ORGANIZATION.

The attendants at last Sunday's Liberal meeting got down to business at the start, and stayed there with persistency for about two hours. Temporary President P. O. Chilstrom occupied the chair and evoked order. Professor Miller, as chairman of the Committee on Organization, presented a constitution and a set of by-laws, which, as finally adopted, were thus:

ARTICLE I.—NAME.

The name of this organization shall be the SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

ART. II.—GENERAL OBJECTS.

The general objects shall be the same as those expressed in Articles II. and III. of the California State Liberal Union, of which Union this Society shall be a local branch.

ART. III.—SPECIAL OBJECTS.

The special objects shall be those suggested by the following resolutions, unanimously passed at the first convention of the California State Liberal Union:

"The success of Liberalism depends on work, both destructive and constructive; on plucking out the weeds of error and planting and cultivating the germs of truth; on not only demolishing the temples of darkness and superstition, but also on the rearing in their places of more beautiful temples of liberty and light.

"We urge upon all lovers of true liberty the importance of assembling themselves together for lectures, for reading, science classes, and ethical associations, and in every way possible cultivating the intellect and filling the minds of the people with correct knowledge."

ART. IV.—MEMBERSHIP.

All persons in sympathy with the objects of this Society, being duly proposed and elected, are entitled to membership, after signing the constitution and paying $1 initiation fee. Ladies, however, shall be admitted free.

ART. V.—OFFICERS.

The officers of the society shall consist of a president, three vice-presidents, secretary, assistant-secretary, and treasurer, and a board of five managers to have the general management and control of the society.

ART. VI.—ELECTIONS.

The officers shall be elected annually.

ART. VII.—AMENDMENTS.

Amendments to this constitution and by-laws may be made at any regular meeting by a two-thirds vote of qualified members; provided that notice of the proposed amendment shall have been submitted in writing at the meeting immediately preceding.

BY-LAWS.

SEC. 1.—Meetings.—There shall be regular Sunday meetings, to be held at an hour and place agreed upon by the society. Music and an address shall, when practicable, form a part of these meetings. The address shall be followed by a debate, if desired, which shall be limited as the society may direct. The ordinary business of the society shall be transacted at these meetings.

SEC. 2.—The duties of the officers of the society shall be the usual duties of such officers.

SEC. 3.—Committees shall be appointed upon public work, social affairs, etc., as occasion for such shall arise.

SEC. 4.—"Roberts's Manual" shall be the parliamentary guide in all matters not covered by this constitution and by-laws.

There was but little debate on these articles, except by way of explanation. The committee on organization reported that the list of available names for such a society had been canvassed and discussed. Some favored the Church of Humanity, but others objected to the word church on account of its ecclesiastical associations. The word "secular" did not cover the whole ground. "Liberal" had been attached to several organizations in the city, which were defunct, and the committee were not unanimous on the question of a resurrection. Finally, "Freethought" was suggested, and the discussion closed so far as the committee were concerned, and the name was agreed to by them.

The meeting adopted the title without dissent. Article II. includes "the total separation of church and state" and the Nine Demands, which Professor Miller read. The article was spoken to discursively by a gentleman in green goggles, and pointedly by Mr. H. L. Knight. The first speaker did not bring his remarks to a head. Mr. Knight's centered on the Declaration of Independence, and the principles of our revolutionary fathers. The article was accepted.

Article III. comprises the resolutions introduced by Judge North at the state convention, and it may be stated that those resolutions have afforded the inspiration for the present organization. They were supplemented, on motion of Mr. W. H. Eastman, by an article on social gatherings, and accepted unanimously.

The fourth article originally contained a provision for monthly dues of twenty-five cents, but experience seemed to have convinced the majority that the expense of collecting dues was greater than the proceeds, and the provision was expunged.

The next article passed as read, as did also the two succeeding. The by-laws met with no opposition.

Chairman Lemme, of the Committee on Nominations, reported the following:

President, P. O. Chilstrom;
 Secretary, Henry J. Breuer;
 Asst. Secretary, G. E. Macdonald;
 Treasurer, A. H. Schou;
 Vice-President, Wm. H. Eastman.

On motion of Professor Miller, election was made by viva voce vote.

The choice of the committee for president was unanimously indorsed. In accepting the office of president, Mr. Chilstrom thanked the meeting for the honor conferred, and made the remark that it was sometimes the custom for officers to take a position and then, when their names had been spread upon the minutes and printed in the papers, to relapse into a state of inactivity. Such was not his intention. There were duties attached to the office of president of a Liberal society and he proposed to discharge them. Mr. Chilstrom's brief address was heartily applauded.

The above assistant secretary then arose to place upon the list of vice-presidents the names of Mrs. Emma Reguin and Mr. Emil S. Lemme. These, and the other candidates, were thereupon elected without trouble.

On motion of Mr. Wm. Schroeder, those who desired to become members of the San Francisco Freethought Society were invited to sign the articles and pay their initiation fee. The motion became popular at once, and a good list of members ensued.

The next question was that of engaging a permanent lecturer and organizer, and paying him a salary. The mention of a salary aroused the opposition of the gentleman in green goggles, who maintained that all labor for the cause should be done voluntarily and without remuneration. Mr. H. L. Knight spoke of the inauguration of a Freethought movement in England fifty-eight years ago, in which he participated. The Freethinkers there believed that the laborer was worthy of his hire, and paid a salary to those who devoted themselves to the work. Mr. Knight appeared to express the sentiment of the meeting.

Mr. Schou moved that Professor Herbert Miller be engaged as permanent lecturer. The assistant secretary explained the situation to the effect that about $250 had been subscribed for the support of the meetings, mainly through the efforts of Mr. Miller. It was proposed that Mr. Miller be authorized to solicit further subscriptions and to collect them, he to retain $100 per month as his salary. The society could not pledge Mr. Miller this amount except upon the condition that he should secure its subscription and collect it.

Professor Miller replied that the amount of salary which he desired had been correctly stated. He intended to do the work of organization as thoroughly as possible, and it was therefore necessary that he should devote the whole of his time to it.

Under these conditions the motion to engage the professor was carried by a rising vote, none but the gentleman in goggles opposing.

A few minor items of business were dashed off, and the audience adjourned jubilantly, to meet again Sunday evening, April 7, at 8 o'clock, in the same hall, 323 Turk street.

I should not close this report without mentioning the remarkably fine music furnished by young Mr. Schultheis, who has kindly consented to play the piano for these meetings. A choir is also to be organized if possible, and singing from the "Cosmian Hymn Book" will form a pleasant feature of future exercises.

THE SINGLE TAX.

In the New York Standard of February 23, J. B. Johnstone asks: "If under the single tax the renter will pay rent to the government, will it not be as hard for him to raise the money to pay it to the government as it was to pay it to the individual?" In the Denver Arbitrator of the same date the editor says: "If the single tax will not give us practical 'free land,' it is no good." And in the same paper, correspondent Edgeworth, exposing "single tax fallacies," objects to the proposition that "a tax on land values cannot be shifted upon others by the payers," because "in the long run the producer of values alone can pay any tax; . . . labor eventually foots all bills."

In making a bunched and indirect reply I will try hard to be clear, and my effort will be of greater avail if readers will in thought deal with the things signified by the technical terms, and not split hairs over the dictionary definition of words. Land signifies the earth in a state of naked nature—including light, air, water, coal, natural gas, etc. Labor is the individual application of energy to land, or to those things (everything) which primarily came from land. All wealth is the result of this application; and wealth is then distributed as rent, the price paid for the use of land, and wages, the reward of labor.

Capital consists of the products of labor that are set apart to be used in the production of more wealth. The interests of capital and labor are of necessity mutual. When capital is allied to monopoly there is antagonism to labor, but it is an antagonism of monopoly, not of capital.

A narrow use of the word taxation tends to confusion. The "single tax" plan is so called for lack of a better term—a term both terse and comprehensive. The "single tax" is in reality no tax at all. It is a gift.

The landowner, as a landowner, produces nothing. Labor produces everything in the shape of wealth. Rent comes out of the product of labor, and the greater the rent the less the wages. Taxation, using the word in its popular sense, comes out of the product of labor, because there is no other source. Labor pays it all, Mr. Edgeworth.

Imagine three concentric circles around the center of a city. Beyond the outside circle the land is free and unoccupied. Labor applied there will retain its whole product as wages. And wages of all kinds will depend upon wages on the free land, scaling upwards. On the belt bounded by the outer circle and the next one it is possible to secure a greater net result by application to the land, not on account of superior fertility, but by the saving of labor in hauling things to and from market, by the economy that results from concentrated labor, and by the social advantages in general. For all of these advantages the landowner can and will exact a rent which will almost absorb them, because if he wholly absorbed them, there would be no inducement for laborers to work that particular land. In the next belt the operation is on the same plan, and all increase of product due to improved facilities still goes to the landowner, net wages remaining at a level. In the central area are the choicest business sites. Their value is due principally to location. Both the merchants and their employees are laborers, variations in wages here as elsewhere being in a measure due to difference in capacities of hand and brain. Wages still hold to the general level, and rent takes off all the increased product. It is as if "wealth" were represented by a mountain with its apex over the city center and its base over-lapping the outer circle. Saw off the mountain near its base, and the portion below the cut will represent wages; the portion above the cut will represent rent, increasing in volume and intensity as it nears the city center.

Under the present system the pile above the cut—rent—is almost entirely an economic waste. It is primarily caused by the active presence and competition of laborers, but instead of being participated in by them, it is appropriated by the landowner. If laborers desire any of those things which are already in existence as constituents of the pile called rent, they must, after applying themselves productively, first give up a portion of their product as rent, and with the residue satisfy their wants by exchanges of equivalents. By the very fact of their application they not only swell the existing pile of rent, but they incite speculation and traffic in their future necessities, which in turn raises the price of land above the normal rent line, and thus hampers and retards production.

On the other hand, considering laborers as a unit, they virtually work twice for the same thing, after the manner of Jacob. Laborers produced the first things, and laborers produced the second things, which are now in the hands of land-owners.

The economic waste that results from landowners, their dependents, and servants living off the substance of labor is thoroughly insignificant when contrasted with other evils of the system. The ever-present prospect of increased population, of new labor-saving appliances, and of further facilitation of the processes of productions and distribution of wealth leads the landowner to discount the future by demanding an 1899 price for 1889 land. This checks production at once, and throws laborers out of the checked industry. Temporarily restricted in the production of equivalents, they have nothing to exchange for the things they need, which things are being produced by other laborers. This throws out of employment a second crowd of laborers, and makes matters worse. The operation is repeated until an army of idle men is the result. As labor must necessarily get employment on any terms, as capital wastes while idle, and as the landowner takes less when he can't get more, recovery is slowly brought about by a slight reduction in "boom" rent, and by a decrease in wages and a smaller interest to legitimate working capital. But labor and capital never fully recover their former proportion of production.

It is a general principle of taxation that taxes on the products of labor diffuse themselves and are paid by consumers. But this is not true of the taxation of ground rent. It is clear that labor has already been taxed the amount represented by rent. Labor has been taxed all it will consent to pay for the privilege of using land of high productive qualities. If an attempt were made to tax it more, it would resort to less productive or free land. This first tax on labor, the landowner's tax—rent—stands out in bold relief and is easily identified. It consists of tangible things that have been taken from laborers. If the state will now tax into its treasury these tangible things, the upper part of the mountain, they can be made to diffuse themselves equitably among the laborers. The effect will be that each laborer will receive, less the expense of collection and distribution, the full reward of his exertion. What more is wanted?

Mr. Johnstone has applied to exceptional cases for a general rule, and has obscured the fact that production comes first. Out of production rent is taken. If rent, the value of privileges, is paid to the government, it creates a fund that belongs to all, whereas, under existing conditions, this fund is appropriated by economic parasites, landowners. If there is any difference between the single tax and practical free land, it is not noticeable. And I do not understand how the "free-land" people propose to shut off the operation of the law of rent. Civilized people will continue to congregate in communities. A central location in the community will always be more desirable and more valuable than an equal area on the outskirts. If the state, for the general good, should make a charge for central "use and occupancy," it would be following the single-tax plan exactly. And if it failed to make such charge, it would not be doing justice to the suburban population whose very presence made the central location desirable and valuable. JAMES B. HASSETT.

THE Christian church controversy at Seattle between rival factions of the congregation was settled in the district court last week, Judge Burk's decision being based upon the principles of the church as set forth by its founder, Alexander Campbell. This gives the church property to the faction opposed to the recent pastor, Mr. Moss, whose followers have but little moss on them, and will establish another church and worship their God as conscience dictates. The victorious, more aristocratic and creed-bound faction will, as one of them told a reporter, "proceed to worship God according to law," and the rules laid down by Campbell. In the meantime wicked "Infidels" are wondering what God's opinion of the whole affair is. Such disturbances as this among his "very elect" are not calculated to aid in securing passengers to heaven over the Campbellite route.—Snohomish Eye.

ROME DOMINANT IN THE DOMINION.

Canada is on the threshold of a crisis fraught with danger not only to English interests, to Protestant supremacy, to Freethought and progress, but which also menaces our republic. It may be that, in the not distant future, the intensely loyal Tory Protestant will be pleading for annexation to the United States, rather than remain under the medieval rule of Rome. In this matter we should see the warning to all Americans to take time by the forelock, and keep the state and church for ever separate.

The France of Progress is on the banks of the Seine, the France of Bourbonism and bigotry lies uncomfortably close on the banks of the St. Lawrence.

The province of Quebec represents all that is illiterate and retrogressive, owing to the overwhelming influence of the Ultramontanes, the chief organ of which, L'Elouard, floats at its head the white banner and golden lilies of the house of Bourbon.

The Quebec provincial parliament has recently granted the Jesuits $400,000 as indemnity for lands taken generations ago. But what excites the antipathy of the Protestant portion of the entire dominion is that this same bill has a clause which leaves the disposition of this money thus obtained to be distributed subject to conditions to be made by the pope. Protestant Ontario is alarmed, and their folly in religious matters is growing quite apparent. A movement is on foot to compel the Dominion Parliament to annul the above grant, but the province of Quebec has there a sufficient representation to score a victory, for on matters pertaining to the church there is no division among the representatives from this province, which has a guaranteed representation of sixty-five members, regardless of the matter of population, and which cannot be changed. So far back as 1759 a grant was made to the Romish church of Quebec of 2,117,000 acres, which of course has been immensely enhanced by diplomacy, shrewd bargaining, solicitation, and the natural increase of value.

This province has, in round numbers, a population of 1,300,000, over 1,000,000 of whom are native-born French Canadians, and there are not more than 250,000 English-speaking people, and their ranks are steadily decreasing. The French Canadians are bound together by strong ties of race, religion, language, and laws, to which they cling with the tenacity of ignorance, and look upon the English in the light of intruders.

After Wolf's victory at Quebec, the British government guaranteed them, by the treaty of Montreal, their laws, their language, and their religion.

As the first "emigres" to Canada were from Normandy and Brittany, and were conspicuous for conservatism, ignorance, and religious devotion, it is safe to say that their descendants have not lost their hereditary earmarks. England acceded to the concessions and made them rather reluctantly, but it was an exigency of the times, as England felt rather uncertain as to other provinces, and after all it served as a wise diplomatic move, for had it not been for this fact, instead of resisting the gallant Montgomery, they would have opened the gates of the citadel and joined the revolution of the thirteen states.

The laws prevailing in that province are only slightly modified from those in vogue under Bourbon rule in France. Several of the old seigniorial systems still exist, a system by which vast tracts of land are held by the "lord of the manor," or the church, and rented out to the peasants or "habitats," as they are called. As these French Canadian provinces were early settled by religious orders, who received vast trusts to aid them in propagating their faith and in Christianizing the Indians, and when it is known that the church in Quebec is still supported by the tithe system now prevailing in England, but which has been abolished in most Catholic countries, a faint idea can be had of the wealth of the Romish church in Quebec. According to the tithe system every Roman Catholic family must, by law, pay a fixed percentage on their crop to the church, but a Protestant who occupies the land is exempt. As the church is a banking and money-lending Shylock in Quebec, when a farm comes into market it takes care that it is occupied by one who will put coin in its coffers. If a new parish is made by the bishop of the diocese, and a new church erected, an ecclesiastical assessment is levied which takes precedence over all mortgages. In fact, the Jesuits, who are being driven out of old France are flourishing and fostered in the new, for Quebec is more Catholic than Italy or Spain. Among the laboring and agricultural classes not more than seven per cent. can read, and scarce any can write. But their fecundity is wonderful, and they increase with astounding rapidity, families of from ten to twenty being quite common. The clergy encourage early marriages, strongly punish infanticide, and accommodate their people with foundling asylums and lying-in hospitals, so that they increase in greater ratio than their Protestant competitors.

The power of the papal hierarchy in Quebec can be conjectured from the following estimate of its wealth:

Annual tithes on 200,000 farms	$700,000
" taxes on families not owning land	300,000
For masses, baptisms, marriages, funerals, pew rents, and objects of piety	2,000,000
Legacies, solicited gifts, mortmain property, over	3,000,000
Taxes imposed to construct and maintain churches	2,000,000
Grant from province (charity)	250,000
Total	$8,250,000

This is, of itself, a tolerable annual tax on 1,359,027 inhabitants, of whom 1,170,718 are Catholics, and 178,309 of other denominations, thus showing that no special inducement has been offered non-Catholics to settle in that section. In Quebec the Romish church owns:

800 churches of a value of	$37,000,000
500 parsonages, palaces, etc.	900,000
12 seminaries	600,000
17 colleges	850,000
259 boarding schools and academies	600,000
80 convents	400,000
69 hospitals and asylums	5,000,000
Total	$45,350,000

It also owns the greater part of numerous towns and villages, with lands, stores, houses, and invested capital in large quantities, and the bulk of all this wealth is exempt from taxation, while the government of Quebec recently went out of office declaring itself bankrupt and unable to liquidate its indebtedness. The bank of Montreal is the wealthiest monetary institution in Canada, but the order of St. Sulpicians alone can discount that great financial institution. But the visitor to Canada must not be surprised to hear le bas Canadien pere, whose sons and daughters find employment in the States, and send their earnings to enable him to pay his tithes, loudly declaim against annexation.

The aggressive attitude of Rome is illustrated by the fact that at the opening of the Provincial parliament Cardinal Taschereau persisted in demanding a seat beside the vice-royal representative, and in taking precedence as a prince of the church of Rome.

Furthermore, to crown the climax, a resolution was adopted by the provincial parliament requesting the queen of England to intercede for the restoration of the temporal power of the pope in Rome. Dare she do it?

As an indication of French Canadian exclusiveness Father Dowd, of Montreal, recently announced from the pulpit that, acting under orders from the vicar-general, he was directed to condemn the Catholic order of Foresters of Illinois (with headquarters in Chicago), and to prohibit the congregation from joining the order or encouraging those who desired to extend its branches into Canada. His objections were based on the fact that it was a foreign organization and did not allow interference on the part of the clergy. He warned them against joining these interlopers, and requested those who had joined to sever their connection forthwith.

These ultramontanes do not regard with favor the tricolor of republican France, but are unanimously in favor of a restoration of the old French monarchy, which was always a strong protector of the church. There is little doubt that much of the plotting and turbulence tending to wreck or weaken republican rule in France, is hatched by the Jesuits in our neighboring city of Montreal. For it is one of their dreams that on this continent they will yet found a French monarchy, which will be supported by a strong ecclesiastical power. Their orators and journals boldly declare this as their desire.

To the United States the French Canadians are the "Chinese of the East," for, being hardy, sturdy, and frugal almost to penuriousness, they find no difficulty in getting employment, and they form already no inconsiderable portion of the population of Dakota, Michigan, Wisconsin, and Minnesota. As Professor Goldwin Smith once remarked, "If it were not for a copious emigration to the United States the people of Quebec would be in a chronic state of starvation." Their conservative, non-assimilating tendencies are strongly marked in the characteristics of the cities they have settled, Detroit, St. Louis, or New Orleans.

When this element mingles with that of the Catholic Irish, among whom intermarriages are frequent, and combine, the United States will have a problem on its hands more serious and important than the Mormon question. These minions of the papacy will use all their combined power, as citizens, to destroy freedom, and vote, at the beck of the clergy, to disrupt this republic, as they are attempting to do with our sister republic of France. The only salvation of the United States is in the Nine Demands of the American Secular Union.

With all these ecclesiastical aggressions—Romish and Protestant—clearly proven, we still meet with so-called Freethinkers who throw back their heads, and with eyes portraying the intelligence of a hog, offer as an explanation for not doing anything, supporting nothing, not even subscribing to a Liberal paper, "I'm a Freethinker who thinks for himself, and lets everybody else do their own thinking."

It is such silly, inane, asinine utterances of professed Infidels—all talk and no practice—which fills us with more contempt for them, who crawl under our tent, than any foolish capers of the sincere, earnest Salvation Army devotee.

ROBINSON CRUSOE AND JESUS CHRIST.

Robinson Crusoe is not more mythical than Jesus Christ. The shipwrecked sailor and the Nazarean savior are alike fictitious characters. There have been numerous prototypes of both. Alexander Selkirk lived alone on an uninhabited island, and this fact occurring in the life time of Daniel Foe (alias Defoe) furnished the groundwork of the popular novel. So the fact of a person named Jeshu being stoned and hanged for sorcery a hundred years before Pontius Pilate was governor of Judea, became the groundwork of the story of Christ crucified, as told by the Evangelists.

The Jewish Talmud contained fragments of the history of the Jesus who suffered death in the reign of Queen Alexandra, and the story is amplified in the Toldoth Jeshu legend, which, though a travesty, is far more truthful than any of the Evangelical fictions. The former being written by a Hebrew, does not make the fatal blunder of putting the trial and execution of Jesus on the holy Passover day, nor at a period when the Jews were deprived of all power to execute sentence, or even to try an offender. Crucifixion was the Roman method of execution; stoning and hanging the Jewish.

In vain have the church historians sought to verify the gospel stories by contemporary Jewish and Pagan records. The passage in Josephus concerning Jesus Christ has long been given up by Christian scholars as a forgery; and with it goes the interpolation about James, the brother of Jesus. Many a James and many a Jesus lived in those days, but no Jesus "who was called Christ," as the corrupted passage in Josephus now reads.

So also the paragraph in Josephus concerning John the Baptist is another Christian forgery.

The forger of the passage concerning Jesus Christ is supposed to be Eusebius, the first church historian, who lived in the fourth century. The other passage, about John the Baptist, was first noticed by Origen, who lived in the third century.

But now, alas! the question is, did either Eusebius or Origen write the works attributed to them? The learned Jesuit Hardouin, who died in 1729, attempted to prove that all the writings of the so-called fathers were systematic forgeries by the benedictine monks after the revival of learning. And to the critical reader of the fathers of the church there is much to support the suspicion that few if any of their writings are genuine. "There are no manuscripts, except the sacred scriptures, more than four hundred years old," said Hardouin. This the aged Jesuit wrote just before he died. Four hundred years before 1729 goes back to 1329, and the Jesuit further tells us that the system of forgery began about the year 1350, and flourished until about 1480, when the invention of printing interfered with the profits of the scholarly but impious fabricators.

Unfortunately for Hardouin's work, it was written in Latin, according to the custom of scholars in his time, and has therefore remained a sealed book since its publication in 1766, hidden on the shelves of great libraries. Christian scholars not only do not hunt after that kind of literature, but they do not want to find it. Of course not, for who expects them to adduce evidence against the venerable institution that affords them subsistence? Hardouin, it is true, was a Catholic, but he hoped to put down the Protestant heresy by proving that the only sure foundation of Christianity is the New Testament and tradition. Nor did he, peradventure, begin to suspect that what the holy evangelists wrote was both fiction and forgery. Or if, perchance, he did harbor such a thought, he never would have dared to publish it, for he knew too well what he had to suffer during the last twenty years of his life for propagating the opinion that not only all the works of the so-called fathers were forgeries, but that very few of the Greek and Latin classics were genuine. HISTORICUS.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Kerr was acquitted, as I intimated. Colonel Ingersoll's summing up was happy and contained several good points. There was no special interest taken in the day or the event. Had there been any thought of conviction the colonel would have had a larger audience. This, doubtless, ends the boodle case. If this man was not guilty, why should those poor devils be exiled? Why should not Sayles recover from the city the bail he forfeited when he skipped to Canada? There is no doubt about the utility of the Broadway road. It was long needed. It is popular. The charter could have been sold for $2,000,000. This the city lost, but the people have the road.

There is quite a move in the way of building new places of amusements. A large music hall is to be constructed on the corner of 7th avenue and 57th street. Andrew Carnegie is the head and front of this movement. The want of such a hall has long been felt. Harrigan is to build a new theatre; corner of 37th street and Broadway has been mentioned as the site. The American Opera is looking for a home. Fifth avenue is considered none too good for it. We think it doubtful if this project is carried out. The American Opera, somehow, has been unable to get a foothold with our people. The German has succeeded the Italian in popularity, but just how long this music will retain its position we don't think is debatable.

It now looks as if the Madison Square Garden scheme would go through. It is reported that nine thousand shares have already been placed among our rich citizens. The plans of construction are settled and the architect selected. The building will be a mixture of Italian and Spanish renaissance, the former predominating. The projectors are ambitious of making it the great center of attraction, so far as music and the drama are concerned. They propose commencing the erection on the first of May.

In a former letter I spoke of Mayor Grant's opportunity of winning a reputation. I am extremely happy to state that thus far we have not heard a single word unfavorable to his honor. The test is to come in May, when he has the appointment of a large number of the heads of the departments. A success at the city hall will make him a formidable candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor. Has he any ambition in this direction? Can he, and will he ignore Dick Croker, or will Croker ignore self for the future of Tammany Hall? The mayor seems to be determined that the wires shall go underground. He is pushing rapid transit to the front. He is unwilling to yield up our streets and parks to Jay Gould. But he has a pet scheme of his own.

Erwin Davis, Esq., has just sold a lot of pictures; among them was the famous "Joan of Arc," by Bastian Lapage. It brought $23,400, and goes to the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Lapage, your readers will remember, was one of the distinguished painters of France. Our museum is fortunate. Gifts are flowing in constantly. The Wolfs gift forced a large addition to the building. That gift was the inspiration of later ones. It is certainly becoming the center of the great works of modern artists. Here you can find the very best works of Gerome, Detaille, Lapage, Carot, Schuyler, Rousson, Meissonier, Diaz, Merlé, Rosa Bonheur, Constant, Kock, Millais.

Comptroller Meyers has suspended Chief Clerk McAdam, who is in contempt of court. Ludlow-street jail is yawning for him. McAdam has "withdrawn for the moment from public observation." His counsel says he is absent only to give him time to prepare papers for his case. Meyers has testified before the market committee. He is extremely ignorant. This is not to be wondered at. An officer is not supposed to know all the details of his office. He must trust to his clerks in many matters. If they betray his trust the only thing he can do is to kick them out.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In your issue of March 23 I notice "J. C. P." opposes woman suffrage. He believes all changes in governments should be based upon experience and not upon abstract ideas. The opposition to woman suffrage comes from a professed adherence to the common law of England, or rather to that portion of the common law which was derived from the ecclesiastical courts. Prior to the time of William the Conqueror the priest and the alderman sat side by side in the courts and exercised ecclesiastical and civil jurisdiction. The chancellors for a long time after that were prelates. The law of wills and estates, and those defining the rights of men and women, were based upon what may be called "church" law—the very same law which held republican ideas to be treason against the king, and freedom of thought to be a crime punishable with death. Our revolution was based upon the abstract idea that all men—women as well as men—were equal in civil and political rights. Women did vote in the Quaker province of New Jersey at the time of the formation of the Constitution. Freethought is based upon the equality of rights. It maintains that no man shall dictate to another how he shall think, or punish him for thinking differently from himself. It must, by the same logic, be maintained that every voter has the right to vote according to his convictions of right. The voter is to be changed by reasoning and not by disfranchisement. If the Freethinking man is unwilling to allow a woman to vote for fear of church supremacy, he should insist on disfranchising every man who belongs to a church.

Animals Possessed by Satan.

For hundreds of years this idea of diabolic possession was steadily developed. It was believed that devils entered into animals; and animals were accordingly exorcised, tried, tortured, convicted, and executed. The great St. Ambrose tells us that a priest, while saying mass, was troubled by the croaking of frogs in a neighboring marsh, and that he exorcised them, and so stopped their noise. St. Bernard, as the monkish chroniclers tell us, mounting the pulpit to preach in his abbey, was interrupted by a cloud of flies; straightway the saint uttered the sacred formula of excommunication, when the flies fell dead upon the pavement in heaps, and were cast out with shovels! A formula of exorcism attributed to a saint of the ninth century, and which remained in use down to a recent period, especially declares insects injurious to crops to be possessed of evil spirits, and names among the animals to be excommunicated or exorcised, mice, moles, and serpents. The use of exorcism against caterpillars and grasshoppers was also common. In the thirteenth century the bishop of Lausanne, finding that the eels in Lake Lemman troubled the fishermen, attempted to remove the difficulty by exorcism.

Did any one venture to deny that animals could be possessed by Satan, he was at once silenced by reference to the entrance of Satan into the serpent in the garden of Eden, to the transformation of Nebuchadnezzar, and to the casting of the devils into the swine by the founder of Christianity himself.—Dr. ANDREW D. WHITE, in the Popular Science Monthly.

How to Live without Eating.

Being animated by an earnest and sincere desire to benefit humanity and relieve suffering, I am about to disclose the means by which one can live without eating. It is said on good authority that one thousand families in this city are on the verge of starvation; and from reliable sources it is learned that hunger is known and felt by thousands in every city in our land, while those women who make overalls for six cents per pair in Chicago can safely be included in this number. Therefore there is need for relief, and with the knowledge I have gained from reading Christian Science, Mental Science, and Spiritual Science literature, I feel that I can reveal important information; and the wonder grows upon me as I query, why it has not been given to the ignorant and uninformed masses in exchange for the great American dollar before now, by some of the sapient but avaricious leaders in the above-named science. As all these schools of instruction unite in declaring that "matter has neither sensation nor substance," that "God fills all time, place, and space," which makes an empty stomach an utter impossibility and hunger only a mental delusion, we see at once the only permanent source of relief. It is to deny the reality of hunger, and to hold the image of your stomach before you, filled with God! Nothing is more simple, and it don't cost you a cent; and surprising though it seems, it can be done without "karma" or "chemicalization!" Many when treating themselves for this dismal delusion will prefer a formula to assist them, and knowing none better than Helen Wilman's, I would suggest that hers be adopted. When feeling sick she talks to her mind thus: "Can God be sick? No! Then I am not sick," and immediately she is well. By changing this to read: "Can God be hungry?" etc., a splendid formula is at once constructed; and now, dear reader, without money and without price, I freely give this metaphysical knowledge to an ignorant world wrapped in the wretched delusion of gross and tangible matter.—C. SEVERANCE, Los Angeles, Cal., in New Thought.

THE ladies of the W. C. T. U., and others who have been so active in working up a sentiment in Congress in favor of a strict Sunday law, must have been greatly shocked when they saw in the daily papers that the United States Congress held an all-day Sunday session on the 3d inst. Even Senator Blair, who is the most fanatical old granny in the bunch, was in his seat taking part in the "desecration." His Sabbath bill commanded so little respect that it was never reported on by the committee to whom it was referred.—Sunday Gazetteer.

OLD Philetus Sawyer, the genial senator from Wisconsin, who can tell a good story as well as any of them, amused his colleagues in the committee-room of pensions, the other day, by referring to the smartness of a local preacher near his home, who, he says, is as sharp and shrewd at a bargain as he is prompt to attend to the spiritual requirements of those in affliction. This preacher was called upon once to attend a funeral, and on returning home remarked, with no small satisfaction, that he had "improved the time by making $15 in a wood trade while the mourners were viewing the corpse." This little lumber story reminded one of the Nebraska senators of one of the most powerful and effective revivals that ever occurred in the West, at a little town in his state, not a thousand miles from Omaha, where every male inhabitant, with a single exception, was converted. The inhabitants of the town were, as a rule, wretchedly poor. The president of the railroad company, on the line of which the town was situated, touched with sympathy for their condition, approached one of the principal men and inquired if they ever had any preaching out in that section. "Preaching?" said the person addressed. "Oh, yes; we had a great revival here last winter, and all got converted but one man, who said he could not join the church until he had stolen timber enough from the railroad company to fence his farm." After this honest confession the president of the railroad company never attempted to detect the thieves. It was useless. One of the favorite hymns sung by these good converts, the senator says, was the well-known one beginning: "Blest is the tie that binds."—New York Tribune.

Professor Seymour On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

From the Natural Bridge I went, through a rough but fine country, to Murphy, where I found a splendid hotel kept by Mitchlet Bros. I engaged the Union church here and gave five lectures, but, owing to its raining night and day, the audiences were small.

Murphy is delightfully situated in a little valley only fifteen miles from the big trees—those wonders of the world. Think of a tree or log lying on its side being higher than a two-story house, or thirty to thirty-five feet, yet such is the fact. I went up on a high hill here to visit those wonders of this country, if not of the world, the Coral Caves. They were discovered three years ago by A. J. Mercer, who, being very tired, sat down on a rock to rest, and while there noticed that a little way from him the weeds and grass were violently moved by a current of air, while there was no wind blowing. Going to the place and holding his hand down he found a strong current coming out of a little hole in the ground partly covered by a rock. This he overturned and found an opening large enough to crawl into. He soon secured lights, ropes, and help, and explored this, before unknown cavern, for many thousand feet. Mr. Mercer immediately took the claim, as it was government land, and has been offered $10,000 for it. He has cleaned it out and put in thirty-two pairs of stairs, that lead you up and down its intricate passages until you would be lost indeed without a guide. There are probably a dozen rooms or chambers, and in some instances the passage from one to the other is a tight squeeze for a portly skeleton like your correspondent to crawl through. The rooms are small and irregular, with very uneven floors, but the formations overhead and on the walls are the most wonderful and curious I ever beheld. It looks like some confectioner's grotto all covered with the sweets of his art. The "Miner's Blanket" and "Angel Wings" are two stalactite sheets several feet in length and width, not over a half-inch in thickness, and of a creamy white that our candle shone through most beautifully. We tapped on them gently and they gave forth most musical notes. No words can possibly give one an idea of the weird beauty and solemn grandeur of these caves. The temperature always stands at 50 degrees, so it is warm and comfortable. Mr. Mercer has the rooms all named—"The Crystal Grotto," "The Organ Loft," "The Bride's Chamber," "The Coral Grotto," etc. Mr. Mercer has found quite a number of Indian skeletons, bear remains, and many others.

My friend and comrade, on this trip, H. H. Acker, picked up here in the streets a small chunk of gold washed out by the heavy rains. Murphy has still some fine mines owned by a Boston company, superintended by a Mr. Morse, who was educated for a priest, but now is a stirring and live radical. I met here several Liberals. I also found in this out-of-the-way place that historic person who was said to have been crucified nineteen hundred years ago at Jerusalem. He is keeping store here at Murphy. I looked but could see no wounds in his hands, but saw him take a "nip" at the bar several times. His sign, "Christ's Store," I thought, ought to bring all the good folks to trade with him, but I could not see that he was better patronized than the other merchants. I "came to Christ" several times while in Murphy, but I am the same doubting Thomas as of yore. Our next move was ten miles to Angel's Camp, the smartest mining town in the county, where we found another fine stopping-place at the Angel's Hotel. I naturally expected the residents would all have wings, but I found nothing spiritual about the place, except what was retailed over the counter at 15 cents a glass. I rented, here, Dolling's Hall and gave four lectures, but the rain was almost incessant, so very few women or children would come out, and, as the hall would hold five hundred people, it seemed rather lonesome. But we drove the Liberal stake and made our claim good, so Putnam or some one else will find the ground staked out. There is a sixty-stamp mill here that makes a noise like an earthquake and thunder combined. Miners are down four hundred feet digging out the quartz nuggets full of gold which this mill soon pulverizes, and then washes out the "root of all evil." A two hundred stamp mill is to be built near here soon, then there are a number of smaller mills close by; so this is emphatically a mining town. There is a very large foreign element in all these old mining towns, and the Catholic religion seems to prevail. Nearly every other door is a dram shop, but everything goes on quietly and peaceably.

I notice many large over-shot water-wheels, some thirty to fifty feet high. The water to run them comes from the ditches high up on the hills. These wheels are used for various purposes, but principally to drive mining machinery.

I found Otto Dalling, mine host of Angel's Hotel, a sterling Infidel, all the way from "Bingen on the Rhine," who did all possible to make our stay here pleasant and profitable. Otto is a rustler from away back and has made a fortune, and will make two or three more yet before handing in his checks. I met Mr. Love, who keeps the livery stable, another old white-headed veteran of Freethought, who studied phrenology forty years ago in Fowler & Wells's office in New York.

The churches, at least the Protestant ones, have very little support anywhere in California, outside of the cities. I have attended their meetings in nearly every town I have traveled through, and they seldom have more than twelve to fifteen persons present. At Sonora the Methodist minister told me his only salary was the collections made with the hat, and only one man a member in a town of 2,000 people. I think they are in the sere and yellow leaf. The people are mostly Freethinkers, but have no enthusiasm and would hardly go to hear a Freethought lecture, or anything else. I notice the dog fights and minstrel shows always draw. Our Oregon folks are a long ways ahead in Liberal work and energy. I shall probably travel that way again this summer.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

A Clergyman Answered.

[The following letter, which explains itself, was offered for publication to the local editor at Salmon City, Idaho, but was returned to the writer.]

TO THE REV. O. W. MINTZER, Sir: To you, as a follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, I wish to make a few remarks.

I consider it my duty to refute and denounce some of the assertions expressed by you in your sermon at the church last Sunday evening. First, you said that unbelief was the cause of the dark ages. On the authority of history I meet your assertion with a direct negative. No unbeliever, no Infidel, has ever gained the notorious distinction of having burned people to death for mere opinion's sake. To the believers, the Christians, belongs that "honor." It was the holy Inquisition (believers in God) that delighted in stoning, burning, racking, and torturing people to death, in the name of your God, for the glory of your God, and, I presume, as he made no demonstration against such infamy, to the pleasure of your God.

I challenge you to name one unbeliever, one Infidel, one Atheist, that ever even persecuted a man, woman, or child for their religious belief or non-religious belief? The cause of the dark ages was superstition, or supernatural doctrines advocated and enforced by priestly impostors.

Second, you accuse unbelievers of "trying to remove God," and are thus the cause of immorality. Now if you really believe there is an infinite, omnipotent God, how foolish it is to talk of his being removed by men. What folly to speak about the finite removing the infinite! Do you pretend that you can help "God" being removed? Does the "infinite Omnipotence" need any of your help? Is your God so weak that you have to help fight the Infidels? Why do you have such a God? When you offer your prayers and send up your supplications to your God, dictating to him what to do and what not to do, is it because you think he does not understand his work, that he does not know his business? If you know a thing you can prove it. What is the least you will take to prove there is a God?

You complain about seeing beautiful women sink in the dens of vice among the heathen Chinese; and at the same time you pretend to believe in a God that "doeth all things well." Can you not see all kinds of evil, crime, and cruelty going on in the world and also that your "God" does no more towards preventing it than if he were a dead "God"? Is it not better to have no "God" than one who does no good? Sir, if you would like to see less evil in this world, the advice of an Atheist is: Stop talking about God, and try to help man; stop preaching about Christ, and speak for justice among men; stop telling about "heaven" and attend to the things of earth. And stop teaching theology and show the beauty and satisfaction of a moral life.

The infamous doctrine of yours, that your religion offers an "atonement for all sins," is simply a premium upon crime. I regard the doctrine with supreme contempt. The prisons and penitentiaries are full of pious criminals this day who boast of having a religion that "forgives their sins." Such horrible teaching is an inducement for immorality. It is the worst form of license.

As an unbeliever, of the Bible as the word of God, as a believer of the book as the word and work of men, and some of them very ignorant men, and as an Infidel to all error, I shall speak my honest thoughts with no fear of your brimstone hell nor any desire to ever become a resident in your orthodox heaven. Of the two places, I would rather go to hell; for, according to your religion, I would meet there such splendid, good men as Humboldt, Darwin, Ingersoll, and Herbert Spencer, all unbelievers; while in your heaven, according to your doctrine of "various atonement for all sins," I would meet such fiends as the tyrant Constantine, the assassin Guiteau, the impostor Brigham Young, and the hundreds of murderers (all believers) who are jerked by the gallows to the bosom of Abraham. No, sir, I don't want to go to heaven. As Putman says: "I prefer a hell of honest men to a paradise of angelic shams! I resent the imputation that one is ever an Infidel for the sake of license. And I affirm that it is one's moral nature that makes him an out-and-out Infidel or Atheist. You know, or ought to know, that one can have far more license if he is orthodox, for with the orthodox—

Long as the lamp holds out to burn
The vilest sinner may return.

"One can act like the devil all his life time, and go to glory from the scaffold. If I wanted a free-and-easy time I should certainly be orthodox. I'd join the church and say my prayers. The orthodox minister has a jolly time of it; plenty of beefsteak and plum-pudding, wine, and cake; even the best spring chicken, both new and old, are killed for his especial benefit."

But enough. I say seriously, "There's no temptation to be an Infidel to the mere pleasure-seeker. Infidelity is a sacrifice for the sake of truth, morality, and humanity. It commits one to hard mental work. It's no child's play. It isn't a picnic. It is labor and a hard struggle. It is one's conscience that compels one to be an Infidel. He must go because in Infidelity he sees the brightest hopes of man: the gospel of the future, the religion of humanity, of justice, the moral perfection of the human race. It is a question not of reason only, but of manhood."

Come now, and let us reason together (said the Lord, Isaiah 1:18). This is the advice of the text, is it not? Then why not banish the clouds of superstition and let the sunshine of truth enlighten the intellect, and use the sacred light for the good of humanity? Yours for goodness without a "God."

CHARLES F. BLACKBURN.

This and That.

To the Editors of Freethought:

NO. 10 OF FREETHOUGHT, is a "feast of fat things" to a lover of truth and progress. I am glad to learn that the "Sunday law" has met with reverses. Brother Putnam's Notes never fail for spicy variety, an optimistic aspect and inspiration of aspiration. I have read the synopsis of Professor Miller's Sunday discourse, over and over with great pleasure. In all my scientific reading I have never read a clearer, more comprehensive statement of the origin, age, and progress of man through cerebral growth in form, size, and quantity of brain, to which I will add quality also. What were all the utterances from the pulpits of "Frisco," that Sunday worth to humanity, compared with the broad utterances of Professor Miller, of nature's saving, elevating truth? All hail! Brother Miller's scientific salvation of man, and his work of constituting the prospective great temple of Humanity and the kingdom of man. I do hope he will be sustained and encouraged to spread the light of his scientific and luminous brain from benighted and priest-ridden San Francisco. Brother Miller, I reach out my heart and hand to you; "shake."

I also reach my hand to Hiram Wentworth, whose wit, sarcasm, irony, and truth uttered at San Pasqual met with a hearty response from me. I hope he will use his "cheek," his kind, and his talents to spread the truth that is in him. He has something to say, and I hope he will keep saying it.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America
BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

GUARD THE RIGHT.

No. 105, COSMIAN HYMN BOOK.

Tune, "America."

1. Nature has made us free,
True to our liberty
We guard the right
True hearts to wait are strong,
So be our vigil long;
While lives on earth a wrong
We guard the right.
2. By those who wore the shield
On life's grand battlefield,
Guarding the right,
By those grand heroes dead,
Martyrs, who burned and bled.
Faced death and shame and dread
Guarding the right.
3. While creeds dwarf heart and brain
With superstitious bane,
We guard the right
While men are slaves to lies,
While hopeless prayers arise,
While truth is sacrifice,
We guard the right.
4. We will at wrongs protest,
Weakling or slave oppressed,
We guard the right.
While this world's sufferings plead,
We pledge heart, voice, and deed,
Serving the human need,
We guard the right.
5. Onward each patriot,
Earth is our common lot,
On, toward the right.
Ours is to dare and do,
Ours to be firm and true,
Till freedom's fight is through,
On, toward the right.

"I AM humble," said the preacher; anything is good enough for me," "I believe you," said the listener, "I have heard your sermons."—Epoch.

A THIEF in Carlisle, Pa., stole ninety-one Bibles before he was—well, he isn't caught yet, but before anybody missed anything. If the beggar had stolen euchre decks the loss would have been discovered the same day.—Brooklyn Eagle.

If the custodians of the law intend to compel our mediums to pay a license for practicing their spiritual gifts, why not include Dr. McKenzie and Sam Jones, and all others who earn their living by dealing in spiritual matters. Let us have fair play.—Golden Gate.

A STORY is told by Dr. Aird, moderator of the Free Church of Scotland, respecting a minister who in the old days of patronage was forced upon a congregation at Alness. He was coldly received, but calling one day upon an old elder, he took a chair in spite of his gruff reception. In order to meet an awkward pause he took out his snuff box. "Oh," said the elder, "ye tak snuff, dae ye?" "Oh, yes," was the reply. "Weel," said the elder, "that's the first sign of grace I've seen in ye." "How's that?" "Dae ye no read o' Solomon's temple," replied the elder, "that a' the snufflers were of pure gold?"

THE new Japanese constitution provides for a house of peers—partly hereditary, partly elective, and partly nominated by the mikado—and a house of commons of 300 members. Suffrage is given to men over 25 who pay taxes to the amount of $25 yearly. Liberty of religion, freedom of speech, and the right of public meeting are guaranteed.

DR. RIORDAN, Catholic archbishop of San Francisco, says that the people of the United States are drifting "into deism. The religious bodies outside the Catholic church are suffering greater losses than we have to bear. On the whole, we are holding our own. It is, I think, beginning to be generally recognized that the time is coming when we shall simply have two forms of belief face to face—deism and Catholicism."

Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.
DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton, Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology. Price, 50 cents.

A Modest Creed.

From whence I come, or whither go,
My creed is this, I do not know;
Into this creed all others flow.

I am a flickering spark of mind,
Vast darkness is before, behind—
Darkness to me, for I am blind.

Lo, in a blade of grass there dwell
Dread mysteries I cannot spell,
Higher than heaven, deeper than hell.

Things were, and are, and are to be;
I peer not into mystery,
And cry, made bold through fear, "I see!"

Things were, and are, and go their way,
Whether they govern or obey;
With them I go and cannot stray.

"I do not know;" all thought sublime,
All prophecies of former time,
But hide this pearl in seas of slime.

And I, who neither fear nor trust,
Holding this creed because I must,
Shall not be mocked, alive or dust.

—George Horton, Chicago Herald.

Some of Jefferson's Maxims.

The only security for all is a free press.
Is uniformity of opinion desirable? No more than of face and stature.

An honest heart being the first blessing, a knowing head is the second.

It is error alone which needs the support of government. Truth can stand by itself.

Bigotry is the disease of ignorance of morbid minds; enthusiasm of the free and buoyant.

Were we directed from Washington when

It is better to keep the wolf out of the fold than to trust to drawing his teeth and claws after he has entered.

I have sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the minds of men.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - APRIL 13, 1889

WE urge the single-tax advocates to give their own class papers a living chance. If the cause is to be advocated in the columns of FREETHOUGHT, what field is left for Mr. George's Standard and Pentecost's Twentieth Century?

SUNDAY picnics are again in full swing, with all their immoral accessories. They are the outcome of Sunday idleness, yet the religious people want a law to make work on Sunday a crime. What seems to be needed is sufficient police influence to make the hoodlums respect such laws against disorderly conduct as are now on the statute books.

PUBLISHERS of struggling Freethought journals can congratulate themselves that they are not much worse off than their brethren of the religious press. In an address before the Baltimore Methodist Conference last month the Rev. Dr. Mendenhall, editor of the Methodist Review, said there was not a religious review in the United States that is self-supporting.

THE burial of the disreputable suicide, Prince Rudolph of Austria, in consecrated ground and with the solemn hocus pocus of the Catholic church, has not yet ceased to be pointed to by non-Catholics as evidence that royalty and wealth can purchase anything it wants from the pope. It is against the law of the church for suicides to have the benefit of its rites, or for families to intermarry, yet both of these barriers were overthrown in Rudolph's case and he was accorded all the pious mummary his surviving relatives were willing to pay for.

JAPAN has but recently adopted a constitution guaranteeing liberty of speech and press, and the government is now subjected to adverse criticism for suppressing half a dozen newspapers. What is remarkable in this case is that the suppressed journals are religious organs. Their offense consisted in applauding the murder by a Shinto fanatic of the Agnostic Viscount Mori, minister of public instruction, who placed himself under the ban of religion by desecrating a Shinto temple to the extent of keeping his shoes on when he entered it. One of the papers suggests that the fate of Mori should be visited upon all who commit similar offenses against the gods. In view of the cause of their suppression, the prohibited publications receive meagre sympathy.

FURTHER details of the horrible crime from religious insanity, which occurred on Saturday, March 30, in Bollinger county, Mo., have been received. Monroe Lasater and wife have for two years been affected with a peculiar religious fanaticism. Meetings full of fanatic fervor were held on the night previous to the murder. One occurred in Wayne township, and Mr. and Mrs. Lasater labored under intense excitement. They went home about midnight and continued their frenzied religious ravings until Saturday afternoon. Then they became possessed of the idea that they must sacrifice their only child, an eighteen-months old girl, as an offering to God. They claimed to be acting under a revelation from God. Lasater told his wife that he must officiate as crucifier. After prayer and other proceedings the wife seized the infant in her arms and squeezed it until life was extinct. It was then stripped naked and they drove a spike through each hand, nailing the corpse to a tree. The man and his wife were lodged in jail.

SUNDAY MORNING AT 10:30.

All the Liberals of the city and vicinity are invited to be present at the meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society next Sunday morning, 10:30 o'clock, 323 Turk street.

Last Sunday's address by Professor Miller was on the "Evolution of Religion." At the coming meeting he will discuss the evolution of the God idea. While it may be somewhat inconvenient for Liberals to attend these Sunday morning gatherings they should be willing to sacrifice something for the good of this growing movement.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Coming from Perris through the wild Temecula Pass at Oceanside, the broad Pacific greets the view, blue and splendid as the gleaming sky itself. To my agreeable surprise, I here met Mr. and Mrs. Frank Knowles, of the St. Cloud Hotel, formerly Del Mar. If any traveler of any creed whatsoever wants a delightful dinner, let him go to the St. Cloud. It is said that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach. The "inner man" here will certainly find ample satisfaction, while everything is as pleasant as refinement and good taste can make it. At Del Mar, amidst the sunlight just twinkling into the gold of evening, I was whisked off to Thermal Heights, where among flowers and green fields, with mountains and seas like jewels along the horizon, the waves forever beating music up the shining shores, the Secular pilgrim finds what is delightful in society and nature. Mr. and Mrs. Shaug and family and the surroundings of a happy home make the days pass by like summer's radiance. It is wonderfully exhilarating to look upon the beautiful flowers—a mass of brilliance mingling with the rival glory of the sun. Mrs. Shaug cultivates the flowers with a poet's enthusiasm, and has added to the ranks of beauty a new attraction, named the Hattie L. by florists in honor of herself. It is a delicate and brilliant flower.

I spent two days at Thermal Heights in that kind of absolute rest which invigorates both mind and body. The panorama of life constantly unrolled with exquisite and gratifying prospects. I roamed over to John Meklensek's ranch, where he is making earth bring forth its bounty. He believes in Freethought, and that the busy hand is the divinest assurance of happiness and success.

I was in hopes to see other friends, but somehow or other time went too fast.

Shadow is always amidst sunshine. During my stay Mrs. Shaug received a telegraphic despatch announcing the death of her father, Marcus Gill, of Iowa. He has lived a long and honorable life, a Liberal-minded man, to whom death could come as no terror. The sympathy of all is with Mrs. Shaug in this natural sorrow, which has with it the memory of a parent's noble worth.

Saturday afternoon I come to San Diego, beautiful city by the sea. The boom has departed, but heaven still smiles upon it, and its future is by no means without promise.

The new railroad has been completed to El Cajon Valley, and is to be pushed on to strike the Southern Pacific and pass through Utah at Frisco and Salt Lake City and join the Union Pacific at Ogden. This will bring San Diego in direct connection with the great East, and in time will give it a wonderful impetus. The town at present is at a standstill, but is not retrograding. Property is held at good prices. The advantages of the place are many. The soil is excellent and can produce almost everything. Water is plenty. There is no question of the prosperity of this country, but it will not come by speculations in real estate, but by wise labor. As a residence city, San Diego is unsurpassed in the wide world. The sceneries on every side are magnificent. The mountain prospects are lovely and sublime, and hold within their bosom fertile valleys, minerals, and wealth of waters. The ocean views beneath wide skies and brilliant clouds, adorned with the elegance of Coronado beach, are of enchanting beauty and variety. The Coronado Islands lift their blue summits thirty miles away. Table Mountain glistens where the Mexican ranges and plains skirt the vast sea.

I am at the house of Randford Worthing. I find he is of the old New England stock, from Maine and Massachusetts. He was Lieut.-Colonel in the army, a mining engineer since the war in Colorado and other parts of the West, and has had an adventurous and prosperous career, meeting the ups-and-downs of life with genuine Yankee grit. He is among the leading citizens of San Diego, and popular with all parties. He is fearless in expression of opinion and keeps his colors of Freethought at the front. His elegant and hospitable home has the genial flavor of intellectual and social New England, and the delightful associations of the East mingle with the splendors of this new world of the Pacific Coast. Although in the prime of life Mr. Worthing is a grandfather, and four generations gather around his fireside. Mr. Fisk, the venerable great-grandfather, is of the pioneers of the old Granite state, and although verging to eighty years, is on the sunny side of life and keeps step to the music of youth. My labors are in the midst of kindly entertainments and attractions that give delight to the swiftly passing days.

The attendance at the lectures was better than I expected, for many of our friends who were here last year have been scattered far and wide. I was greeted by a fair number in the afternoon at the Lewis Opera House, and in the evening at Lafayette Hall. Mr. Worthing, Mr. Garland, Mrs. Mary A. White, and others, by their energy and good will, have gathered our forces together as far as possible. I was glad to meet F. W. Bradley, always ready with a good word, and never afraid of his colors. There is a splendid element of Freethought in San Diego, and I am in hopes of a strong organization soon. What is needed is the attractive power which can only come by growth and civilization. I presume, with the ignorant masses, that hell fire is a very potent motive, and if ignorance is to prevail hell fire will continue to burn on and crowd the churches. Our organization, however, must be the result of free and harmonious life. There can be no machine work about it, only natural co-operation, like the beautiful forces of nature itself. So we hope on. Every new thought is our ally, and every triumph of science our moral power. My friend Garland is a fervid Spiritualist and claims to be a little farther along than myself, but on the same lines of advancement. He believes in matter as well as mind, and that the glory of this world is as necessary as that of any other. Hence he is a rattling worker for Freethought, and is an invaluable aid in the progressive movement. Mrs. Mary A. White is always at the front with the enthusiastic nature of the "sunny South." Born in South Carolina, she gave up its Presbyterianism and slavery at the same breath, and has always been a strenuous advocate of liberty. She is heartily in favor of co-operation and wants to build up a Freethought colony; and there are splendid opportunities in this land of sunshine, and millions of untouched acres waiting only the swift march of harnessed mountain streams to bloom with imperial magnificence. I was delighted to meet with that brilliant advocate of woman's rights and human rights, Mrs. Clara Foltz, who is in entire sympathy with the constructive methods of Freethought. She is not only a representative of her sex but of humanity also. She has the broad brain as well as fervent feeling. Her eloquence is the eloquence of good sense as well as poetic enthusiasm.

Malcolm Matheson, president of the San Felipe and Desert Land and Water Company, is also a Liberal, and his plan for the irrigation of thousands of acres of desert land, opening them to civilization, seems to me a practicable enterprise. If successful it will do wonders for this southern country. He is a man of experience, has traveled all over the hills and valleys, and knows what he is about. I hope myself, sometime, to visit the "back country," for, from all accounts, it is a world of beauty and grandeur.

Mr. and Mrs. Rowe and daughter are also at this frontier post. Election day I drove with them from the hubbub of politics into the beautiful suburbs of San Diego. I tried to find my old friend Wm. Allen, but he was not at home. The Rowes enjoy life with the philosophy and poetry of common sense, and take fortune as she comes, with smiles or frowns, for the best that she can give.

Mr. and Mrs. Bidwell make health and joy with the fleeting years. Mr. and Mrs. Wright, formerly of Napa, are also here. Mr. Val Fink is in the Freethought ranks. Samuel McHenry has gone to the land of gold, and I did not get a chance to see him. I hope he will find some big nuggets. I came across Henry Chester, now of San Jacinto. He is a jolly comrade and a royal friend. I find he is a New York boy, and knows all about that mighty metropolis. He got his education at the night schools of Cooper Institute. He made and lost a fortune in New York before he was twenty years old, and then started for the West. He landed about five years ago in San Diego with five cents in his pocket, and left it a year since with over $5,000 cash. He is a Freethinker with every fibre of his being, and believes in the golden rule with heart and hand. He succeeds by hard work, and no gold eagle ever gets pinched that passes through his hands. I was also pleased to meet with Mr. and Mrs. Lockwood and their daughter Miss Lentium, who is a brave little Freethinker and likes FREETHOUGHT and "News and Notes;" and so I hope her youth will ever be a dawning fair to nobler days and that womanhood may be as happy as childhood's happy morn.

I lecture here next Sunday afternoon and evening and so shall have more to say of San Diego and friends in future "News and Notes." The days are so beautiful, the sun so exhilarating, the ocean pictures so alluring, that I find it difficult to take my pen in hand to write. I want to be on the go all the time. I would not object to a pair of angel wings that I might fly over these enchanting scenes. I can dream that I am in Italy or Greece, and that these islands are the jewels of the blue Ægean sea; and sky and mountain do blend with marvelous felicity and excite the whole being to a kind of musical delight—as if the ocean were some mighty artist with its thousand fingers touching earth to immeasurable melodies.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

April 5, 1889.

• THE ARROGANCE OF PIETY.

It is perhaps fitting that on the thirtieth day of April, 1889, the people of the United States should celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the inauguration of Washington. There is little objection to the day being proclaimed a legal holiday, though it might be said that when the American citizen desires a "day off" his native intelligence may be safely trusted to admonish him of the most fitting time; but when a political office-holder takes it upon himself to dictate the proper season for religious worship, and, ignoring the fact that religious worship is looked upon as little more than superstitious mummary by a respectable portion of the community, requests the people to repair to places of "divine worship" and perform the incantations peculiar to the Christian and Hebrew superstitions, it is the duty of those who do not believe in confounding the offices of church and state to enter their emphatic protest.

The honorable Presbyterian gentleman who, through the dispensation of an alleged providence and the judicious use of a large campaign fund, was last fall elected to the office of president of the United States, has issued a proclamation as follows:

"A hundred years have passed since the government which our forefathers founded was formally organized. At noon on the 30th day of April, 1789, in the city of New York, and in the presence of an assemblage of heroic men, whose patriotic devotion had led the colonies to victory and independence, George Washington took the oath of office as chief magistrate of the new-born republic.

"This impressive act was preceded, at 9 o'clock in the morning in all the churches of the city, by prayer for God's blessing on the government and its first president.

"The centennial of this illustrious event in our history has been declared a general holiday by the Act of Congress, to the end that the people of the whole country may join in commemorative exercises appropriate to the day.

"In order that the joy of the occasion may be associated with a deep thankfulness in the minds of the people for all our blessings in the past, and devout supplication to God for their gracious continuance in the future, the representatives of the religious creeds, both Christian and Hebrew, have been memorialized by the government to designate an hour for prayer and thanksgiving on that day.

"Now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, president of the United States of America, in response to this pious and reasonable request, do recommend that on Tuesday, April 30th, at the hour of 9 o'clock in the morning, the people of the entire country repair to their respective places of divine worship to implore as a favor of God that the blessings of liberty, prosperity, and peace may abide with us as a people, and that his hand may lead us in the paths of righteousness and good deeds."

With regard to worship the American citizen occupies much the same position as with regard to holidays. When he wants to worship he knows where to go and what to do, and any interference in the matter from any other person can be characterized only as an impertinence. Religion is not a national affair, and the office of president does not constitute Mr. Harrison, ex officio, the religious adviser of the people, as he would appear to imagine that it does. The president is popularly, though erroneously, termed the "servant of the people." Imagine a servant issuing a proclamation calling upon the members of the household to "repair to their respective places of divine worship" in honor of a previous incumbent! The impression might be expected to prevail that such a servant had exceeded his function, or that he aimed to magnify the importance of his own position.

We shall have no fault to find with Mr. Harrison's political administration. We are unable to discern that one administration differs materially from another, except in the length of the messages to Congress, and the superior or inferior piety of thanksgiving proclamations. And as the politicians write the messages and the ministers the proclamations, the main responsibility resting upon the president is that of signing them. The messages are state papers and the forwarding of them to Congress forms a part of the chief magistrate's official duties. The proclamations, however, belong to the time when rulers governed by "divine right," and when all their utterances were supposed to come from heaven. To borrow a phrase, they are an echo of an echo, after the original voice has lost its authority.

A GENEROUS GIFT REJECTED.

A dispatch from Petaluma, published in the daily press of San Francisco, says:

"William H. Pepper, a wealthy nurseryman, offered recently to donate to the city a lot worth $5000, providing the city trustees would erect upon it a building for kindergarten purposes to cost at least $3500, the school to be under charge of the board of education. It is understood that a wealthy gentleman of this city offered to erect the building and give $3500 more for the support of the school. The board of education presented the matter to the board of city trustees and requested it to submit to the people the question of accepting it and voting the necessary funds at the coming city election. The trustees refused to do this, and in consequence Petaluma will lose the donation."

Mr. Pepper is a well-known Freethinker, one of whose cherished plans is the founding of a school where useful knowledge may be imparted unmixed with superstition. We are not acquainted with the conditions upon which the above gift was offered, but the purely secular character of the education to be given was doubtless one of them. No one can believe that the city trustees have acted wisely, but they were much more honest in rejecting the trust than they would have been in accepting and then violating it, like the trustees of Girard College.

Mr. Pepper deserves the greatest credit for his good intent, but it will not take the Christian world long to forget his generous offer and to declare that Freethinkers have never done anything for charity.

THE Health Monthly announces that presses have begun "the tremendous job of printing a new edition of ten thousand copies of 'Plain Home Talk.'" We are glad to hear it. "Plain Home Talk" is the medical "Age of Reason."

A QUEER SECT.

There is a congregation of religious people in San Francisco bearing the remarkable name of Christadelphians, and their creed, if they may be said to have one, is about as remarkable as their name. They meet every Sunday on Eddy street.

These queer people have no church organization, consequently no church officers, and no ordained ministers, all preaching being done by lay members. They deny a future existence, but affirm the second coming of Christ; and they believe that when he comes it will be with a sword, and as a conqueror to whom every knee shall bend. He will judge the quick and the dead, and those who have accepted the Christadelphian faith will be saved and enjoy an immortality of the flesh, while all stiff-necked contemners shall be annihilated. They, of course, prove all this from the Bible.

These Christadelphians appear to be a harmless sect. There are only forty of them in the city. They all work for a living, and they believe that the doctrine that it is more blessed to give than to receive applies to those who preach the gospel. We wish them well, even though we shall not be among the forty when the final collapse comes, and they alone occupy the peninsula of San Francisco.

THE HIGHER VIRTUES.

The higher human virtues—benevolence, kindness, temperance, self-government, unselfishness—have been a matter of growth in humanity, as well as the lower and ordinary ones of obedience to parents and public law, common industry and honesty, abstention from bloodshed, from theft, from forbidden unchastity. These higher virtues were not possessed by primitive man, nor are they by the lowest savages to-day. We have seen how the common virtues grew out of the necessities of man. The higher are the legitimate offspring of the lower. They are no part of a divine revelation, save of the perpetual revelation which attends humanity's development. Benevolence to man at large springs out of the natural affection of the family relation extending in widening circles as the family enlarged into the tribe and the nation. Interest has assisted affection in the development of this trait. It was not for the advantage of the tribe that any of its members should suffer for lack of food, lest they should be unable to meet their enemies in full strength in the day of war; as to-day it hurts the well-being of a nation that any large proportion of its population should be in want, lest they create internal disturbance, or heavy burdens be laid upon the well-to-do for their support; therefore, good statesmanship is always looking for employment, which means a sufficiency of living, for all the men of a nation.

Self-control, control of temper, of appetite, of passion, have sprung in like manner out of perception of advantage to self and to the community. The temperate man has his faculties always clear for action, and gains the respect and confidence of his fellows by that restraint. Self-government implies aptitude for the government of others; it is essential to successful government.

Unselfishness, preference for the welfare of another before one's own, altruism as Herbert Spencer calls it, is in many of its aspects one of the noblest virtues of man. It has been claimed as the special product of Christianity, though it was quite as strongly inculcated by Buddha, but undoubtedly Jesus laid great stress upon it and was fully imbued with its teachings. It is the extension of the principle of motherhood to humanity at large. The mother will give all, even her life, for her child. Shall man do the same for his fellow-man? The virtue has its humiliations. When pushed to non-resistance of violence, as taught by Jesus: "He that smiteth thee on the one cheek, turn to him the other also," "He that taketh away thy coat, give him thy cloak also;" this teaching has never been much followed by Christians themselves, and would be impossible to the preservation of society. The strong would simply trample on the weak, and justice would become a mockery. A few sects like the Quakers have endeavored to act fully up to this teaching of non-resistance, and have done so to a considerable extent in private life. But in truth their property and their persons have always been protected by the laws of the nations among whom they lived. Non-resistance logically carried out would simply mean the rule of tyrants, the abandonment of freedom, slavery, the poverty of the masses, all the old evils from which man by constant resistance has in some degree delivered himself. Experience and common sense have taught man that he must struggle and fight to maintain his hold on life and any fair proportion of its enjoyments. Equal and exact justice is the ideal that he would see enforced, but this cannot be even approached without eternal vigilance and contention, and with non-resistance as a principle the powers of nature would quickly crush man, and the ruthless and cruel would ride rough-shod over the ignorant and unprotected.

Wise devotion to humanity, on the principle of resisting wrong, has wrought great good for the race. It has made free nations and destroyed slavery, it has rendered free speech possible and overthrown false religions. Such men as Winkelried and Hampden, Washington and Lincoln, Wilberforce, Lloyd Garrison, Luther, and Paine, would not be reckoned as the world's benefactors to-day if they had acted on the principle of non-resistance instead of gloriously battling against tyranny, slavery, and superstition, and winning the thanks and gratitude of millions.

In criticising Christianity we by no means forget our debt to it, nor would it be fair to do so. Though easy to demonstrate that moral development has in no wise depended on divine inspiration, there being no instance in which divine revelation can be established as a fact, it must and should be conceded with gratitude by our race that the present high moral standard has largely resulted from the pure and lofty teaching of men who have sincerely believed in a divine revelation; and this is but natural. The world has believed in a divine revelation for thousands of years. The true and the false have been closely interwoven in the intellect. Clearer truth has always been of gradual discovery. Man is constantly sloughing off the outworn skins of error. He leaves them behind as does a crab his last year's shell. The new shell cannot remain in the old. The crab would be disabled by it, so he goes out from it. So man leaves his outworn beliefs. Some cry out that it is a shame and a danger to leave the old shells. But he cannot stay and be cramped and fettered. Nature drives him to throw off that for which he has no farther use. Man's mind is often like our bay of a morning, here a track of sunlight and there a line of fog—truth and error side by side—but gradually the fog dissolves. And in the life of man noble action has often shone by the side of intellectual mistake—in the same mind a belief in the trinity, predestination, and hell, coexistent with earnest and lofty principles of action.

H. M.

FREETHOUGHT has received for the California State Liberal Union: From Judge J. W. North, $10; R. F. Grigsby, $5; San Jose Secular Society, $5; Daniel Macdonald, $3; L. R. Titus, $2; J. M. Smith, $1.

COLONEL INGERSOLL did not address the meeting recently held in the Academy of Music, New York, for the benefit of the Confederate Soldiers' Home at Austin, Texas, as it was announced that he would do. He is one of the committee to raise money for the Home, and gave a large donation. The committee, as we learn from the Truth Seeker, received the following letter from a religious person named Mackay:

"I would feel my sympathies drawn to an object so worthy as this, but the promoters must be blind to the plainest sign of the times when from the Christian people of New York they expect contributions to this cause—and they will get little help from any other—while heading their enterprise with the greatest enemy of Jesus Christ this country has ever seen, namely, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll. Nothing will be blessed by his touch, and it is regretted that the work is to be even colored by his assistance, far more, begun and directed."

Mr. Mackay is one of those sensitive persons who would rather see a human being suffer than relieved by anybody who does not enjoy his religious belief. There is a certain parable which might be quoted for the benefit of people like Mr. Mackay. It is to be found in the twenty-fifth chapter of the gospel according to Matthew, and sets forth that he who assists his fellow-man shall go into life eternal, while gentlemen who fail to feed the hungry or clothe the naked "shall go away into everlasting punishment." A man with Colonel Ingersoll's chances under this ruling need not worry so much for himself as for such pious citizens as Mackay, who think that almost any excuse is good enough for not putting their hands in their pockets.

SEVERAL weeks ago telegrams from Victoria, B. C., gave details of the destitution and approaching dissolution of W. R. Colby, the slate-writing medium and lecturer on Spiritualism, who was charged by the Chronicle with being identical with William Rains, a Texas mail robber. He sued the Chronicle for libel but left for Victoria in a hurry pending the trial. Upon being informed of his illness and poverty several of his friends in this city prepared to send him aid, but first took the precaution to write to Victoria concerning him. In a letter from that city to Captain Shepherd, president of the Oakland Society of Spiritualists, says a daily paper, it is stated that Colby is not in need, and that he is in a normal condition as to health. The writer was inclined to the belief that Colby had prompted the telegrams in order to stir his friends to send him relief. There seems to be no one left in San Francisco, even among the Spiritualists, who is ready to defend Mr. Colby against the charge of fraud.

THE San Francisco public is suspicious that somebody made a large "boodle" out of the recent revival meetings conducted by the Rev. Samuel Jones. Those who watched the affair, says the Chronicle, are confident that the collections amounted to fully $8,000. At one collection $1,000 was raised; at another, $500, while several were taken that went well into the hundreds, and meetings were held every day for a month. Mr. Jones himself received the sum of $1,500 and the expenses of himself and family, for his month's arduous labor. The committee who had charge of the enterprise, however, profess to have come out $200 behind.

THE Leadville, Col., Freethought Association issues its Declaration of Principles in handsome form. This association meets twice a month; H. S. Kent is secretary, and A. L. Heister president. It extends this invitation: "To all who desire to join us in promulgating the religion of morality, humanity, progress and intellect; who are not afraid to speak as they believe, and act accordingly; who believe in to-day and to-morrow, and not in yesterday or nineteen hundred years ago, and for whom the spectre of a dead superstition has no terrors, we extend a cordial welcome."

THE New York Times has made so much sport of the pious Postmaster-General Wanamaker that that functionary has withdrawn from its columns the post-office advertisements regarding the departure of foreign mails. The discipline has proved ineffectual, as the Times rebelliously proclaims:

"We shall continue to print the foreign mail announcements, since they are a convenience to the readers of newspapers, and we shall persevere in our endeavors to get out of Wanamaker as much harmless amusement as possible during his term of office. There is a world of fun in him."

Possibly if the Times keeps its eyes open it may find a way of extracting innocent amusement from other members of our Presbyterian administration.

THE discharge of Herbert Beecher from the Custom House at Port Townsend calls attention to the manner in which political influence does its perfect work. For Henry Ward Beecher's services in Grover Cleveland's campaign this appointment for Beecher's son was secured. Beecher's son was also counsel for the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, and again through the influence of the clergyman Cleveland's signature to the "shocking" literature bill was secured, under which Anthony Comstock became more than ever the censor of press and mails.

BISMARCK declared the other day that "in his opinion the guarantee of peace was to be found not only in the monarchical institutions of the country, but also, and in an especial degree, in the monarchical sentiments of the German people." There were in this country, previous to the Revolution, persons called Tories who entertained opinions similar to those expressed by Bismarck. But that was a hundred years ago, and those opinions have long since ceased to command respect. Possibly less than a century will place the German chancellor's views in the same category.

It is expected that another charge of immoral tendency will be made against the climate of California. G. W. Reed was, a short time since, president of the Young Men's Christian Association in Mansfield, Ohio. A few weeks ago he came to Los Angeles, entered upon a debauch, forged his mother's name to various checks, and landed in jail the other day too drunk for articulate speech. The meteorological department should set itself at work to gather statistics as to the moral effect of a dry climate upon persons of the religio-bibulous temperament.

THAT natural impatience of unjust restraint which is the salvation of mankind from tyranny is illustrated by the working of the Sunday-closing law in Wales. The authorities report that under the act drunkenness and immorality have largely increased. The restrictions imposed seem to encourage defiance of the law and intoxication is far more common on Sunday now than before it was put into operation. Lord Aberdare, who encouraged the passage of the act, admits with sorrow that it is doing more harm than good, and now urges its repeal.

THE friends at Anaheim will have lectures by S. P. Putnam on the 15th, 16th, and 17th of this month. Mrs. Kate Parker writes that they are to have a matinee at 3 P.M., picnic style, followed by a dance in the evening, and that a good time is looked for.

AMONG the appropriations made by the last California legislature was one of $16,000 for the purchase of the plates and copy-right of a school entomology. No provision was made for printing the book, and there ought to be none. The tax payer might reasonably protest against being plundered by the state in the name of a special science that not more than one in a thousand takes the slightest interest in (even if he knew the meaning of the word used to designate it) or would ever have any use for. The -ologies, including theology, should be left to the private school and the church.

"THERE is no stopping-place for exact reason and exact regard for truth but in Agnosticism. It seems to me that all traditionalists ought to go into the Roman Church, and all rationalists ought to become Agnostics."—Ex-Rev. H. O. Pentecost.

We find the above copied without rebuke in the Golden Gate. Does it indicate that Spiritualism looks toward Agnosticism, or the other way?

To Joshua.

O Joshua, God's chief of staff and leader of his army,
The odor of thy memory is not exceeding balmy;
Thou wert, most incontestibly, a man of "blood and iron,"
And blood in running rivers shed, all in the cause of Zion!
When carnage red raged high a-field you then were in your glory,
But, ah, those red campaigns of thine make up a dreadful story!
Your massacres were horrible, but Jahveh stood your sponsor,
And with a craving hot for blood of course you kept right on, sir;
You fought a-field and eke by siege, and many cities "carried,"
Too short the day, at your command both Sol and Luna tarried!
And Jahveh hurtled hailstones down, as big as watermelons,
On those who took no stock in him, and so were godless felons.
Ah, Josh, thou wert a bloody one, a hustling Holy Terror!
But say, that fake about the sun—weren't that an "inspired" error?

Good Material in California.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed you will find 50 cents, for which please send me "Yone Santo, a Child of Japan."

We are having through the local papers here a lively three-cornered fight on the common school question, wherein I find FREETHOUGHT an able assistant, and am well pleased with it independent of that. I hope you may prosper and find lots and lots of loyal aid in your efforts to convert that farther western country. You must have good material out of which to build a grand army of Freethinkers, judging by the facts that California legislators have had the good sense and justice to enact a law to tax religious property the same as other property of equal value.

My best wishes go with you to the utmost point to which your efforts of conversion can possibly attain. Yours truly, D. D. LAKE.

Central City, Col.

Dr. Field Discredited.

To the Editors of Freethought:

We have recently discovered in this county a new loophole that the Campbellites, or at least some of them, skulk out through when cornered. When the "Champion" was here he sold a few bottles of his odoriferous musk in pamphlet form, and some of his admirers, by means of daily baths in the pungent fluid, became almost as skookum (Chinook for strong) as himself.

To one of those who had thus been "washed in the blood of the lamb" I read Dr. Field's manly and generous tribute to Ingersoll in his Open Letter in the North American Review, and several extracts from it and the second letter, giving the lie to the "Champion's" malicious slander. The purified took the dose like a little man without protest. A few weeks after he was rehearsing some of those slanderous statements of the "Champion" when a Liberal friend, who was present when I read Field's statements to him, cited him to that fact. "Well" said the washed sheep, "I have my doubts whether a preacher ever wrote that." It is pretty hard to believe that a preacher can be a gentleman, and perhaps that was what was the matter with the sheep. TOM SAWYER.

OBSERVATIONS.

The meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society, last Sunday morning, lacked the reassuring presence of Mr. Schou and several others who have previously attended. Some uncertainty as to the time of the meeting was doubtless caused by the announcement in one column of FREETHOUGHT that it would be held at eight o'clock in the evening, and in another that 10:30 A. M. was the accepted hour. The first notice had been printed before it was discovered that the hall had a previous engagement, and the press had to be stopped to make the necessary change in the other announcement. Affairs were further complicated by the press breaking down and delaying the mailing of the paper about eight hours.

Under the above uncertain conditions the hall was not crowded when President Chilstrom rapped upon the table and concentrated the attention of the meeting on such business as might be before it. Secretary Breuer perused the minutes of the previous occasion in an audible tone of voice, and the same were accepted. At the invitation of the chair Professor Schultheis came in contact with the piano, and executed a complicated and interesting selection. The instrument was entirely at the mercy of Mr. Schultheis, and he appeared to be able to make it do or say almost anything he regarded as appropriate. The music trickled from one end of it, roared from the other, vaulted from the top, and poured from the keyboard like a cataract. The fingers of the performer's right hand scampered over the treble part, and chased one another hither and yon, while those of his other hand played leap-frog with the noisier notes located at the extreme left. Towards the close both hands made the attempt to hit all the keys at once, accomplishing the feat with ease, and Mr. Schultheis retired amid applause.

Professor Miller followed with an address upon the "Evolution of Religion." He took the position of Spencer, that religion began with ancestor-worship, and developed thence into polytheism, from which has come such a degree of monotheism as we now enjoy. The address was in every way a worthy one. The speaker, it might be said, "laid the foundation with care, with accuracy and skill, and rose by 'cold gradation and well-balanced form,' from the cornerstone of statement to the domed conclusion;" and this conclusion was that all gods and all religions spring solely from the imagination, and that the rational human mind must arrive finally at the conception of an eternal energy, whose methods we may observe, but whose origin and objects are for ever unknowable.

The lecture was well adapted to the intelligent audience that heard it, and elicited favorable comment.

Mr. Schultheis played another piece upon the piano before the meeting broke up. Next Sunday morning's gathering will be held in the same hall, at 10:30. After that a hall will be secured where evening meetings may be had. While the beautiful spring and summer weather (peculiar to California) prevails, indoor attractions are at a discount. The sun without such radiance pours, the sky above them beams so fair, that people wander out of doors to breathe the semi-tropic air. Not all the songs in measured staves, nor lofty flights of oratory, are as the music of the waves, nor eloquent as nature's story. So to provide a pleasing way to gratify our taste for roaming, we'll have excursions while 'tis day, and hold our meetings in the gloaming. The next one, however, will be held at 10:30 A. M., as aforesaid.

A paper published at Brisbane, Australia, contains a copyrighted article with a large heading, entitled, "Evans's Seances Exposed—Bursting his Bubbles," etc. It tells how a visitor to one of Mr. Fred. Evans's seances discovered the method by which writing is made to appear, without human intervention, upon slates that were previously perfectly clean. The article fills about a dozen columns, and is therefore too long to quote. The conclusion, however, is given in these words:

HOW THE TRICK IS DONE.

Procure ordinary school slates, but No. 2 of Faber's make is the best adapted for the purpose. A film of papier mache, or thin slate, must be made to fit the slate exactly, inside the framework. The writing or drawing having been done on the slates prior to the seance, the mask or film is then fitted on the slate so as to act as a cover, and it may, of course, be marked and cleaned as much as the sitter wishes. The mask can be removed in any way and at any portion of the seance the performer wishes.

This certainly would account for the mechanical portion of the phenomena which occur in Mr. Evans's presence, but what may be called the psychic part is left a mystery still. I had a sitting with Evans about eleven months ago, and have several slates covered with the writing then procured. He might have used the false cover successfully in my case except for the reason that slates previously written upon could not have borne the names written by me after the slates were placed in my possession and after Mr. Evans had ceased handling them. I find by reference to the report of my sitting with Evans, published in FREETHOUGHT of May 12, 1888, that two slates were fastened together with a rubber band and laid before me on the table; that afterwards I wrote several names on a slip of paper which I placed beneath the rubber band around the slates. When the slates were taken apart they contained one of the names written on the paper. If I had written the name before the slates were fastened together, Evans might have transferred it to the slate, but as he did not touch the slates between the time I wrote the name and the time he took the slates apart, he evidently did not put the name there during that interval. I am ready to admit that the slates spit upon and wiped might have had a false face concealing a previously written communication, but I fail to discern how the communication happened to be signed by a name that was not written by me until after the slates had left the medium's hands. That is what the Australian exposure fails to expose, though it is quite ample to explain the rest of the proceedings.

Three other slates scattered about upon the floor might have been previously prepared, signed as per the names written by me on the slip of paper, and then fitted with the false cover, spit upon and swabbed off. I do not know whether they were or not.

I will, however, present a formula for the slate-writing act which, in connection with the false covers, will meet all exigencies. It is as follows: Give the sitter a hard pencil, a slip of thin paper, and a pad to rest it on while he writes the names of deceased friends. After he has written the names they will be legible beneath the top leaf of the pad, providing you have placed a piece of duplicating paper in the right place. This method, of course, provides you with the desired signatures, which you may attach to previously written communications on slates held in your lap. The sitter may suspect what you are doing, but he can't prove it without raising a rumpus, and that is not what he is there for. If he uses the pad, as he will nine times out of ten, you may allow him to slip the paper under the rubber band around the slates. If he does not use the pad you should do the slipping yourself, adroitly substituting another piece of paper for his, and retaining the one he has written on for future reference. Make him hold the slates down hard with both thumbs. Impress upon him the necessity of this, for Satan finds mischief for idle hands to do, and the sitter might look between the slates or examine your paper if his hands were at liberty. Now lay his list of names on your knee, where you can see them, and attach them to the previously-written communications; adjust the false surface over the whole, spit on it in plain sight, swab it off, drop it in your lap, and put the slate, face downward, on the floor. Repeat this three or four times, until the necessary number of slates are scattered about. Then gather them up confusedly, and while the sitter is reading them, substitute two others, inclosed in a rubber band, with his list of names under it, for the two which he has been holding down. When he gets around to open them he will be astonished; or ought to be, and he will identify them as the ones he has held by the fact that the list of names he wrote is under the band!

This is my explanation of Mr. Evans's performance so far as I have seen it. It supplements the Australian method, and the two together eliminate all necessity for anything more than ordinary dexterity. The Australian gentleman who furnishes the scheme given in the first part of this Observation—and who was one of the subscribers to the fund that took Evans to the antipodes—has repeated the trick before fifty persons who had been notified previously that it was a trick; yet he escaped detection, and had some difficulty in convincing his audience that he was unassisted by supernatural aid. His communications and drawings are said to be much superior to those produced by Evans. The exposure had such an effect on Mr. Evans, it is said, that he broke several engagements in order to cut his stay in Brisbane short.

There is still another mode of explaining Mr. Evans's phenomena. It is that the spirits of departed persons return and do the writing, extracting sufficient force from the medium to enable them to accomplish that feat. I submit both theories for what they may be worth. I shall not quarrel with any one who accepts the spiritual explanation, and I presume no one will be offended with me for suggesting the above physical hypothesis.

The gentleman who makes the alleged exposure of Mr. Evans's slate-writing phenomena has fathomed his other manifestations also, and not only duplicates them as mysteries, but afterwards explains what we call the modus operandi (when we speak in Latin); and furthermore he does them so much better and so much cheaper than Evans can do them that the medium's business has been permanently broken up in Brisbane. All of which I state with regret.

I have shown the appended poem to our printer, and he thinks it should be published.

THE EFFICACY OF PRAYER.

Old Deacon Stackpole was a boastful man,
And at the period of which I'm treating
He was a pious Presbyterian,

Although he never prayed outside of meeting.
He had one boast which emphasis he laid on,
"He never see'd the b'ar he was afraid on."

Now Stackpole was a citizen of Maine,
And occupied a log-house in a clearing,
A Sabbath's journey down a lonely lane
Without a neighbor anywhere in hearing.
And bears roamed in the wild and woody dell
Thick as mosquitoes are in San Rafael.

One day the deacon, wandering in the wood,
With gun in hand, courageous as a lion,
Ran on a bear in an aggressive mood,
The biggest one he ever had sat eye on—
An old, white-whiskered, hibernating grayback,
Who'd trod the forest undisturbed from 'way back.

Bear looked at deacon, deacon looked at bear,
And in a moment, growing somewhat bolder,
He cocked his aged flintlock piece with care,
And brought the butt thereof up to his shoulder.
He pulled the trigger, but she ne'er exploded,
For it had been a six-month since 'twas loaded.

Thereat the deacon, very much dismayed
And thinking to be tackled by the bear,
Went on his knees in terror, and essayed
To elevate his voice in way of prayer.
If it must be a bear and deacon tussle
It stood the deacon well in hand to rustle.

He first gave thanks that he so long was spared,
And owned, with full, impartial justice meted,
So often had he been by sin ensnared
His earthly race had long since been completed.
He felt to praise that wonderful forgiving
Which still permitted him among the living.

In such a strain the deacon tuned his lay,
And then as follows ended up his prayer,
"If, Lord, to help me you can't see your way
I ask you, don't for Christ's sake help the bear;"
Unclosed his eyes, while to the spot still rooted.
A coward, like himself, the bear had scooted!

We had a pleasing little seance in this office last Tuesday morning. Mr. Paul A. Smith dropped in with his two traveling companions, the Hofstad brothers, who have a faculty of telling what other people are thinking about, and then finding the object of their thoughts. After a few moments spent in talking over the prospects in different localities, Mr. Smith remarked that if I would fix my mind on some particular object, one of the Messrs. Hofstad would find it. Somewhat skeptically, I let my intellect dwell upon the lower-case b box in the printing-office adjoining. Mr. Hofstad thereupon grasped my hand and started for the composing-room. He immediately went to the particular case I had in mind, and thrust his fingers into the box containing the lower-case b's, but the multiplicity of them confused him, and he did not call the experiment a success. His brother tried the same with similar results. Mr. Smith and the two gentlemen then left the room; I took the top off my mucilage bottle and placed it underneath the cover of a type-writer, and then asked the mind-reader to return. The elder one placed my hand on his forehead, dropped it, and in less time than is required for me to pen these remarks, raised the type-writer cover and picked up the hidden object, which he handed me with the utmost confidence that he was right.

The next experiment seemed more remarkable. The gentlemen left the room and went out into the hall. A young lady carried a piece of erasing rubber into the printing-office and placed it in the "change" pocket of a printer's coat. As soon as she was out of the room the wily typographical artist removed his coat and concealed it. The Hofstad brothers were then called off their perch on the balusters in the hall. One of them took the young lady's hand, led her into the printing-office, and hunted up the coat. As she did not know the location of the garment, this was rather more singular than the previous test. Having secured the coat, Mr. Hofstad deliberately emptied the pockets, with the exception of the little "change" pocket, the aperture to which escaped his eye. He declared, however, that the object was in the coat, underneath the lining, which he did not feel at liberty to remove.

I judge that this variety of phenomena comes under the head of thought transference, or rather thought appropriation. In the case of the rubber eraser the thought-appropriator doubtless found the coat by accident, and by appropriating the thought of the person whose hand he held discovered that the coat contained the object he was looking for. I believe that the Hofstad brothers possess a sixth sense, more rare, but not perhaps any more wonderful, than the five that other people have. M.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The Oakland High School building was destroyed by fire on the 6th. Loss, $33,000.—Reports from all parts of the state show that grain, fruit, and feed promise a greater yield than has ever been known.—Judge Swift delivered an address before the Independent Spiritual meeting in Washington Hall, Sunday evening, upon the "Illegality of Mediums' License," in which he stated that the recent action of the board of supervisors in levying a tax upon mediums, astrologers, seers, and clairvoyants was unlawful, and urged his hearers to contest the matter in the courts.—The collector of customs at Port Townsend, W. T., has been notified by telegraph to drop Captain Herbert Beecher from the rolls from the 15th inst. Captain Beecher is a son of the late Henry Ward Beecher. Secretary Daniel Manning appointed him a special agent of the treasury department with headquarters at Port Townsend. When Gardner, the opium smuggler, was arrested at Ogdensburg, N. Y., a year ago certain papers in connection with Beecher were found in his possession. This and other matters were brought to Secretary Windom's attention, and after a full investigation he decided on Captain Beecher's dismissal.—A big scheme is on foot to connect San Jose with San Francisco Bay by means of a ship canal. It will cost millions, but the projectors hope to get an appropriation from Congress.—Mrs. Ellen Holladay, the second wife of the late Ben Holladay of pony express fame, died April 5 at Portland, Or., after a lingering illness.—Judge Lawler dismissed the charge of murder against William J. Harrington, the politician who was accused of killing David Donohoe in the rooms of the Republican County Committee last October. Harrington was also charged with having wounded Fire Commissioner Martin Kelly, and Antone Christianson, when Donohoe was killed. Both these charges were also dismissed.

James Redpath, who recently returned from Ireland, spoke at the Anti-Poverty meeting in New York last Sunday night. Among other things, he said the rental of Ireland has been reduced $25,000,000 a year through the work of the Land League, and the Irish in America have contributed three-fifths of the money invested by Parnellites.—The Latter-Day Saints are holding a world's conference at St Joseph, Mo. One thousand delegates were in attendance last Sunday.—The Mormons at Salt Lake City have made Wellford Woodruff president of the church.—The U. S. Warship Pensacola sank in the dry dock at Norfolk, Va., during a violent storm on the 6th. She will be pumped out and raised.—It was reported last week that the actor Edwin Booth had suffered a stroke of paralysis at Rochester, New York. At last accounts he was recovering, but had a severe headache!—The New York Musical Union is endeavoring to prevent the landing of strolling European musicians at Castle Garden.—The war between the temperance people and the saloon-keepers of River Falls, Wis., has taken a new turn. A saloon-keeper has had three clergymen and two others arrested, on a charge of false imprisonment. The five men signed an indictment against Saloon-keeper Druke some time ago. Druke was beaten in the justices' court, but appealed the case. In the higher court the case was dismissed on a technicality. Now Druke prosecutes the party for false imprisonment.—John A. Kasson, William Walter Phelps, and George H. Bates will go to Berlin as commissioners on Samoan affairs.—Women played a very important part in the municipal election in Kansas, April 2, voting in large numbers. At Rossville the women elected their ticket. At Leavenworth, Susan B. Anthony made a heroic fight for her brother, D. R. Anthony, for mayor, but he was defeated by a large majority; 4,000 women voted. Oskaloosa has again elected women officers by a sweeping majority. At Cottonwood Falls Mrs. Minnie Morgan was elected mayor, with a full council of women.—Wou Kwang Pei, formerly of the Chinese embassy at Washington, advocates the expulsion of every American in the service of China as a reprisal for the exclusion of Chinamen from America.—Since the suspension of work on the Panama canal over 8,000 laborers have been sent from the isthmus. There are still over 3,000 persons on the line of the works who are in a destitute condition. Some deaths from starvation have already been reported, and it is feared that many more will occur if prompt measures are not taken by the West Indian governments to send the people back to their homes.—The Royal Geographical Society has received a letter from Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer. The contents consist chiefly of a report on the geographical results of Stanley's march.—The Rev. Charles Sidney Hurd, lately of the Parmenter-street Unitarian chapel, Boston, committed suicide in London last week by taking opium. Hurd wrote to the Rev. Stopford Brooke asking pecuniary assistance, which the latter promised. At the inquest a letter from Hurd to Brooke was read, which concludes: "The sole way by which I can escape my difficulties is through the gates of death. I am the most unlucky mortal on earth. Give my body to a medical school for dissection."—Many Nihilists have been arrested at Vilna in Russia. It is learned that the bombs discovered at Zurich were intended to be used during the czar's visit to Berlin. Thirteen more arrests have been made in Zurich in connection with the discovery of the secret bomb manufacturing there.

PROFESSOR HUXLEY AND AGNOSTICISM.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.
From the North American Review.

In the February number of the Nineteenth Century is an article by Professor Huxley, entitled "Agnosticism." It seems that a church congress was held at Manchester, in October, 1888, and that the principal of King's College brought the topic of Agnosticism before the Assembly and made the following statement:

But if this be so, for a man to urge as an escape from this article of belief that he has no means of a scientific knowledge of an unseen world, or of the future, is irrelevant. His difference from the Christians lies, not in the fact that he has no knowledge of these things, but that he does not believe the authority on which they are stated. He may prefer to call himself an Agnostic, but his real name is an older one—he is an Infidel; that is to say an unbeliever. The word Infidel, perhaps, carries an unpleasant significance. Perhaps it is right that it should. It is, and it ought to be, an unpleasant thing for a man to have to say plainly that he does not believe in Jesus Christ.

Let us examine this statement, putting it in language that is easily understood; and for that purpose we will divide it into several paragraphs.

First.—"For a man to urge that he has no means of a scientific knowledge of the unseen world, or of the future, is irrelevant."

Is there any other knowledge than a scientific knowledge? Are there several kinds of knowing? Is there such a thing as scientific ignorance? If a man says, "I know nothing of the unseen world because I have no knowledge upon that subject," is the fact that he has no knowledge absolutely irrelevant? Will the principal of King's College say that having no knowledge is the reason he knows? When asked to give your opinion upon any subject can it be said that your ignorance of that subject is irrelevant? If this be true, then your knowledge of the subject is also irrelevant.

Is it possible to put in ordinary English a more perfect absurdity? How can a man obtain any knowledge of the unseen world? He certainly cannot obtain it through the medium of the senses. It is not a world that he can visit. He cannot stand upon its shores, nor can he view them from the ocean of imagination. The principal of King's College, however, insists that these impossibilities are irrelevant.

No person has come back from the unseen world. No authentic message has been delivered. Through all the centuries, not one whisper has broken the silence that lies beyond the grave. Countless millions have sought for some evidence, have listened in vain for some word.

It is most cheerfully admitted that all this does not prove the non-existence of another world—all this does not demonstrate that death ends all. But it is the justification of the Agnostic, who candidly says, "I do not know."

Second.—The principal of King's College states that the difference between an Agnostic and a Christian "lies, not in the fact that he has no knowledge of these things, but that he does not believe the authority on which they are stated."

Is this a difference in knowledge, or a difference in belief—that is to say, a difference in credulity?

The Christian believes the Mosaic account. He reverently hears and admits the truth of all that he finds within the scriptures. Is this knowledge? How is it possible to know whether the reputed authors of the books of the Old Testament were the real ones? The witnesses are dead. The lips that could testify are dust. Between these shores roll the waves of many centuries. Who knows whether such a man as Moses ever existed or not? Who knows the author of Kings and Chronicles? By what testimony can we substantiate the authenticity of the prophets, or of the prophecies, or of the fulfilments? Is there any difference between the knowledge of the Christian and of the Agnostic? Does the principal of King's College know any more as to the truth of the Old Testament than the man who modestly calls for evidence? Has not a mistake been made? Is not the difference one of belief instead of knowledge? And is not this difference founded on the difference in credulity? Would not an infinitely wise and good being—where belief is a condition to salvation—supply the evidence? Certainly the Creator of man—if such exists—knows the exact nature of the human mind—knows the evidence necessary to convince; and, consequently, such a being would act in accordance with such conditions.

There is a relation between evidence and belief. The mind is so constituted that certain things, being in accordance with its nature, are regarded as reasonable, as probable.

There is also this fact that must not be overlooked: that is, that just in proportion as the brain is developed it requires more evidence, and becomes less and less credulous. Ignorance and credulity go hand in hand. Intelligence understands something of the law of average, has an idea of probability. It is not swayed by prejudice, neither is it driven to extremes by suspicion. It takes into consideration personal motives. It examines the character of the witnesses, makes allowance for the ignorance of the time—for enthusiasm, for fear—and comes to its conclusion without fear and without passion.

What knowledge has the Christian of another world? The senses of the Christian are the same as those of the Agnostic. He hears, sees, and feels substantially the same. His vision is limited. He sees no other shore and hears nothing from another world.

Knowledge is something that can be imparted. It has a foundation in fact. It comes within the domain of the senses. It can be told, described, analyzed, and in addition to all this, it can be classified. Whenever a fact becomes the property of one mind, it can become the property of the intellectual world. There are words in which the knowledge can be conveyed.

The Christian is not a supernatural person, filled with supernatural truths. He is a natural person, and all that he knows of value can be naturally imparted. It is within his power to give all that he has to the Agnostic.

The principal of King's College is mistaken when he says that the difference between the Agnostic and the Christian does not lie in the fact that the Agnostic has no knowledge, "but that he does not believe the authority on which these things are stated."

The real difference is this: the Christian says that he has knowledge; the Agnostic admits that he has none; and yet the Christian accuses the Agnostic of arrogance, and asks him how he has the impudence to admit the limitations of his mind. To the Agnostic every fact is a torch, and by this light, and this light only, he walks.

It is also true that the Agnostic does not believe the authority relied on by the Christian. What is the authority of the Christian? Thousands of years ago it is supposed that certain men, or, rather, uncertain men, wrote certain things. It is alleged by the Christian that these men were divinely inspired, and that the words of these men are to be taken as absolutely true, no matter whether or not they are verified by modern discovery and demonstration.

How can we know that any human being was divinely inspired? There has been no personal revelation to us to the effect that certain people were inspired—it is only claimed that the revelation was to them. For this we have only their word, and about that there is this difficulty: we know nothing of them, and, consequently, cannot, if we desire, rely upon their character for truth. The evidence is not simply hearsay—it is far weaker than that. We have only been told that they said these things; we do not know whether the persons claiming to be inspired wrote these things or not; neither are we certain that such persons ever existed. We know now that the greatest men with whom we are acquainted are often mistaken about the simplest matters. We also know that men saying something like the same things, in other countries and in ancient days, must have been impostors. The Christian has no confidence in the words of Mohammed; the Mohammedan cares nothing about the declarations of Buddha; and the Agnostic gives the words of the Christian the value only of the truth that is in them. He knows that these sayings get neither truth nor worth from the person who uttered them. He knows that the sayings themselves get their entire value from the truth they express. So that the real difference between the Christian and the Agnostic does not lie in their knowledge, for neither of them has any knowledge on this subject, but the difference does lie in credulity, and in nothing else. The Agnostic does not rely on the authority of Moses and the prophets. He finds that they were mistaken in most matters capable of demonstration. He finds that their mistakes multiply in the proportion that human knowledge increases. He is satisfied that the religion of the ancient Jews is, in most things, as ignorant and cruel as other religions of the ancient world. He concludes that the efforts, in all ages, to answer the questions of origin and destiny, and to account for the phenomena of life, have all been substantial failures.

In the presence of demonstration there is no opportunity for the exercise of faith. Truth does not appeal to credulity—it appeals to evidence, to established facts, to the constitution of the mind. It endeavors to harmonize the new fact with all that we know, and to bring it within the circumference of human experience.

The church has never cultivated investigation. It has never said: Let him who has a mind to think, think; but its cry from the first until now has been: Let him who has ears to hear, hear.

The pulpit does not appeal to the reason of the pew; it speaks by authority and it commands the pew to believe, and it not only commands, but it threatens.

The Agnostic knows that the testimony of a man is not sufficient to establish what is known as the miraculous. We would not believe to-day the testimony of millions to the effect that the dead had been raised. The church itself would be the first to attack such testimony. If we cannot believe those whom we know, why should we believe witnesses who have been dead thousands of years, and about whom we know nothing?

Third.—The principal of King's College, growing somewhat severe, declares that "he may prefer to call himself an Agnostic, but his real name is an older one—he is an Infidel; that is to say, an unbeliever."

This is spoken in a kind of holy scorn. According to this gentleman, an unbeliever is, to a certain extent, a disreputable person.

In this sense, what is an unbeliever? He is one whose mind is so constituted that what the Christian calls evidence is not satisfactory to him. Is a person accountable for the constitution of his mind, for the formation of his brain? Is any human being responsible for the weight that evidence has upon him? Can he believe without evidence? Is the weight of evidence a question of choice? Is there such a thing as honestly weighing testimony? Is the result of such weighing necessary? Does it involve moral responsibility? If the Mosaic account does not convince a man that it is true, is he a wretch because he is candid enough to tell the truth? Can he preserve his manhood only by making a false statement?

The Mohammedan would call the principal of King's College an unbeliever, so would the tribes of Central Africa, and he would return the compliment, and all would be equally justified. Has the principal of King's College any knowledge that he keeps from the rest of the world? Has he the confidence of the Infinite? Is there anything praiseworthy in believing where the evidence is sufficient, or is one to be praised for believing only where the evidence is insufficient? Is a man to be blamed for not agreeing with his fellow-citizen? Were the unbelievers in the pagan world better or worse than their neighbors? It is probably true that some of the greatest Greeks believed in the gods of that nation, and it is equally true that some of the greatest denied their existence. If credulity is a virtue now, it must have been in the days of Athens. If to believe without evidence entitles one to eternal reward in this century, certainly the same must have been true in the days of the Pharaohs.

An Infidel is one who does not believe in the prevailing religion. We now admit that the Infidels of Greece and Rome were right. The gods that they refused to believe in are dead. Their thrones are empty, and long ago the sceptres dropped from their nerveless hands. To-day the world honors the men who denied and derided these gods.

Fourth.—The Principal of King's College ventures to suggest that "the word Infidel, perhaps, carries an unpleasant significance; perhaps it is right that it should."

A few years ago the word Infidel did carry "an unpleasant significance." A few years ago its significance was so unpleasant that the man to whom the word was applied found himself in prison or at the stake. In particularly kind communities he was put in the stocks, pelted with offal, derided by hypocrites, scorned by ignorance, jeered by cowardice, and all the priests passed by on the other side.

There was a time when Episcopalians were regarded as Infidels; when a true Catholic looked upon a follower of Henry VIII. as an Infidel, as an unbeliever; when a true Catholic held in detestation the man who preferred a murderer and adulterer—a man who swapped religions for the sake of exchanging wives—to the pope, the head of the universal church.

It is easy enough to conceive of an honest man denying the claims of a church based on the caprice of an English king. The word Infidel "carries an unpleasant significance" only where the Christians are exceedingly ignorant, intolerant, bigoted, cruel, and unmannerly.

The real gentleman gives to others the rights that he claims for himself. The civilized man rises far above the bigotry of one who has been "born again." Good breeding is far gentler than "universal love."

It is natural for the church to hate an unbeliever—natural for the pulpit to despise one who refuses to subscribe, who refuses to give. It is a question of revenue instead of religion. The Episcopal church has the instinct of self-preservation. It uses its power, its influence, to compel contribution. It forgives the giver.

Fifth.—The principal of King's College insists that "it is, and it ought to be, an unpleasant thing for a man to have to say plainly that he does not believe in Jesus Christ."

Should it be an unpleasant thing for a man to say plainly what he believes? Can this be unpleasant except in an uncivilized community—a community in which an uncivilized church has authority?

Why should not a man be as free to say that he does not believe as to say that he does believe? Perhaps the real question is whether all men have an equal right to express their opinions. Is it the duty of the minority to keep silent? Are majorities always right? If the minority had never spoken, what to-day would have been the condition of this world? Are the majority the pioneers of progress, or does the pioneer, as a rule, walk alone? Is it his duty to close his lips? Must the inventor allow his inventions to die in the brain? Must the discoverer of new truths make of his mind a tomb? Is man under any obligation to his fellows? Was the Episcopal religion always in the majority? Was it at any time in the history of the world an unpleasant thing to be called a Protestant? Did the word Protestant "carry an unpleasant significance?" Was it "perhaps right that it should?" Was Luther a misfortune to the human race?

If a community is thoroughly civilized, why should it be an unpleasant thing for a man to express his belief in respectful language? If the argument is against him, it might be unpleasant; but why should simple numbers be the foundation of unpleasantness? If the majority have the facts, if they have the argument, why should they fear the mistakes of the minority? Does any theologian hate the man he can answer?

(To be Concluded.)

WE never feel quite sure we have done our best. There is always an ideal a little ahead of us that we are striving for. We only reach it to find another and still superior one yet beyond it. These unsatisfied reachings are the spur to better and still better lives. They keep us from being too self-sufficient or arrogant, by making us realize our shortcomings as well as our successes.

THE idea of the Lenten season is good, and should control us all the year round. Self-study, temperance, character building are worthy occupations for us to be engaged in. But the Lenten season of the current Christian church is a stupendous humbug, unworthy the respect of any one who venerates sincere piety and despises sham and hypocrisy.—The Twentieth Century.

THE BIBLE IN FAVOR OF DEBATE.

HENRY GEORGE AND F. M. HOLLAND.

IV.

Who is there that does not respect, if not admire, the man or woman full of courage in proclaiming a conviction? It is not necessary to share a man's views in order to praise his heroism.

During the leisure moments of some week, read the book of Acts, and you will see for yourself that it is full of debate.

It is to be regretted that a more kindly, genial spirit was not manifested in those early disputes on the ever-interesting subjects of religion and philosophy. That must be a poor article of religion which will sour a man's disposition to such an extent that he cannot bear to be contradicted; and it is pseudo science that refuses to review its own field of exploration.

We must, however, charitably consider the dark times when the debates we are now considering took place. This will prepare us for the story of Stephen, the first Christian martyr, a disciple of Jesus Christ, and a celebrated debater. Did you ever reflect upon it, that he lost his life while in the very act of vindicating the freedom of debate? "There arose certain of the Synagogue which is called the Synagogue of the Libertines, and Cyrenians, and Alexandrians, and them of Cilicia and of Asia, disputing with Stephen" (Acts vi, 9). "And they were not able to resist the wisdom and the spirit by which he spake" (v, 10). They could not answer his arguments. What then? They charged him with "blasphemy," a common accusation made by the superstitious, ignorant devotee against the profoundest thinkers of the ages, benefactors of the race. Cruel irony! that this same weapon has been employed by thousands of those who are the admirers of Stephen. Usually the charge is false, as in his case. "We have heard him speak blasphemous words against Moses, and against God." "This man ceaseth not to speak blasphemous words against this holy place, and the law." He afterwards made a long speech before the council which was evidently considered more blasphemous than anything charged against him by false witnesses. His opponents were shocked; "when they heard these things, they were cut to the heart, and they gnashed on him with their teeth." But when Stephen added, "Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the son of man standing on the right hand of God," that was too much. "Then they cried out with a loud voice, and stopped their ears," characteristic of people who do not believe in hearing both sides. They stoned him to death, a martyr to debate.

The early disciples of Christ were willing and anxious to debate, even with death staring them in the face.

Nowadays his disciples are not in the least danger of death; but do not often debate. In fact, they appear to be on the other side of the question.

There are a few noble exceptions. There are thousands of true men and women in all Christian denominations who love religious liberty, not only for themselves, but for all mankind. They are entitled to our profoundest respect.

It is so strikingly true, as Rev. Dr. Buck observes, "the ministry of our Lord was a perpetual controversy, and the apostles came at the truth by much disputing," that, if I referred to all the instances, it would be necessary to quote nearly the whole book of any one of the first four writers of the New Testament.

"Came at the truth by much disputing." That is the grand object of debate tersely told.

When Jesus was but twelve years old he was found in the temple, "sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions" (Luke ii, 46). This embodies the quintessence of debate: "Hearing them, and asking them questions." This lesson has never been learned by the great body of the churches throughout Christendom; and, as a matter of course, they do not practice what they have not learned. I am sorry to say it; but it is true, the churches do not encourage free inquiry, asking questions. Well has a scientific writer said, the "qualities which men of science set forth as the requisites for walking within the veil of science" are "a candor that will look on all sides of a case, and listen to every objection—consecration to truth as the primary object." The world is deluged with religions that do not do this.

W. F. JAMIESON.

Mr. Holland expresses his sorrow that a man cannot criticise "Progress and Poverty" without being told that his opinions are not entitled to respect. This seems to me to follow too closely the theological method to be worthy of so eminent an iconoclast as Mr. Holland. Will he contend that an opinion or a criticism should be accorded respect, unless it is an intelligent one? He calls attention to pages 8 and 9 and claims that they prove that Mr. George has taken very little notice of the real causes of poverty. Let us see what Mr. George says in regard to the real causes of poverty, in order that we may estimate the justice of Mr. Holland's assertion. We will not stop with pages 8 and 9, as Mr. Holland unfortunately did, but will note what the author has to say in that regard in its entirety. On page 7 Mr. George shows the prodigious increase in wealth-producing power, which has been brought about during the present century, and says: "At the beginning of this marvelous era it was natural to expect, and it was expected, that labor-saving inventions would lighten the toil and improve the condition of the laborer; that the enormous increase in the power of producing wealth would make real poverty a thing of the past." Will Mr. Holland say that this expectation was not a legitimate one? Will he contend that it has been fulfilled? Will he claim that poverty is not more intense than it was at the beginning of this century? Will he show what are the real causes of poverty, and thus enable us to judge between himself and Mr. George? Mere assertion ought not to be employed by those who call themselves liberal.

On page 9 Mr. George says, "It is true that disappointment has followed disappointment, and that discovery upon discovery, and invention after invention, have neither lessened the toil of those who most need respite, nor brought plenty to the poor." Will Mr. Holland commit himself to the statement that the above is not true?

Again Mr. George says on the same page that "from all parts of the civilized world come complaints of industrial depression; of labor condemned to involuntary idleness; of capital massed and wasting; of pecuniary distress among business men; of want and suffering and anxiety among the working classes. Will Mr. Holland show what, in his opinion, causes all this, if it be not the fact that opportunities are held out of the reach of those who only need those opportunities to abolish their poverty?"

Mr. George goes on to show that this poverty exists in all countries that are civilized; in monarchies and in republics; under protective tariffs and under revenue tariffs; where the currency is gold and silver, and also where the people depend upon the paper mill for their money, and adds, "That there is a common cause, and that it is either what we call material progress, or something closely connected with material progress, becomes something more than an inference, when it is noted that the phenomena we class together and speak of as industrial depression are but intensifications of phenomena which always accompany material progress, and which show themselves more clearly and strongly as material progress goes on?" Will Mr. Holland claim that all this is not true, and if so, will he show wherein it is false?

Again, "where the conditions to which material progress everywhere tends are most fully realized—that is to say, where population is densest, wealth greatest, and the machinery of exchange and production most highly developed—we find the deepest poverty, the sharpest struggle for existence, and the most enforced idleness," says Mr. George. If Mr. Holland can show that this is not true, he may possibly show that Mr. George has not taken much notice of the real causes of poverty, but not otherwise.

What science treats of poverty and its cure, if political economy does not, and what political economist of any time, gives evidence of deeper thought or more radical research than does the author of "Progress and Poverty?"

I might quote reams, almost, from Mr. George's writings on the subject of poverty, but it is not necessary. Every one who has read his works is perfectly aware of the depth of logical reasoning and thought of their author, and it is only in a general and indefinite way that any one ever attacks them. All the criticisms of "Progress and Poverty," which it has been my lot to see, have proceeded on the plan pursued by Mr. Holland. In his first essay he proposed some difficulties as seeming to him unsurmountable, but he neglects to notice the answers to those objections, which have been printed in your sheet. Why has he not continued the line of argument he started out upon? Were the grounds upon which he based his objections to the single tax so very slender that he can find nothing further to say upon those points?

Mr. Holland thinks that Mr. George fails to recognize the right of owners of land to compensation. Compensation for what? Does Mr. Holland really understand the object the single tax has in view? It would really seem as if he did not. The single tax to be levied on land values would not be confiscation, as the gentleman seems to think. It simply means that all other taxes shall be abolished, and that owners of land shall pay to the community, in lieu of other taxation, such a sum per annum as their particular holdings may be worth. Suppose that instead of land values, house values were solely to be the objects of taxation, would the gentleman contend that compensation should be accorded to house owners for the taxes so paid? When was compensation ever given any tax payer for the taxes he paid? What compensation, for instance, is given those who pay the protective taxes? The fact is, tax payers have never had, and have never expected, compensation for taxation. Why then should they have compensation for taxes levied on land values any more than they should if levied on anything else?

If Mr. Holland will demonstrate the right of the owner to own the land, we will be obliged to him, for it is something which we have never seen accomplished, and which we believe cannot be done. If he cannot show that the owner has such right, how can he claim that the landlord would be entitled to any compensation whatsoever, even though we desired to confiscate the land he does not own, instead of merely levying taxes upon it?

The chapter Mr. Holland cites is devoted to showing that no individual has the moral right to own one foot of the earth. If Mr. Holland can prove that this claim is not well founded, he will prove at the same time that private property in land is not robbery.

In regard to the advocate of the Anti-poverty doctrine who Mr. Holland says gave a speech at a meeting in Boston, during which the speaker claimed that the single tax would abolish every kind of poverty, whether arising from idleness, vicious habits, or what not, it may be said that if the speaker was not good enough to quote, he was not good enough to mention at all, and there seems to be no valid reason for his hesitancy to bring the gentleman into a controversy which has directly to do with the subject of his cited address, and into which he has been brought by Mr. Holland for the purpose of showing that the single-tax advocates believe in and teach something that they do not believe in nor teach. It seems not improbable that the hesitancy exhibited by Mr. Holland in introducing his authority for his statement, may arise from the same motives as those which actuated the respectable Mrs. Gamp when she refused to produce the hypothetical Mrs. Harris.

E. O. ROSCOE.

THE project of raising a monument to Giordano Bruno has roused at once the ire of antagonists and the researches of the friends of Freethought. A Catholic writer has even ventured to question the fact whether he was ever martyred at all, and, as our readers know, Mr. Foote recently replied to calumnies and mis-statements which found their way into the Scottish Review. But others have looked into the question, and it has been found that the fact of his martyrdom, beyond being testified to by Caspar Schoppius, a converted Protestant, who was in the service of Pope Clement VIII. and in Rome at the time, is notified in an official publication called the Avviso di Roma of Feb. 19, 1600, which records that this "heretico obstinatissimo" was burnt, and said that he died a martyr, and willingly ["et diceva che moriva martire, et volentieri"]. It has also been discovered that Bruno's birthday, which has been variously dated from 1548 to 1550, was on the 21st of March, 1548. So Freethinkers have a new anniversary to insert in their calendar.—London Freethinker.

MORALITY IN SCHOOLS.

In the discussion of our common schools, by the convention of teachers recently met in this city, the question of morality in the schools seems to have been uppermost in the minds of these instructors of youth. With one voice it was conceded that morality was an essential ingredient in child education. Morality must come from some source. Shall it rest entirely with the parents; or shall it come from the teachers?

If with the parents, it will not rise above their moral condition. In that case it might be objectionable. Many parents are as little fitted to impart moral instruction as grammar or mathematics. Neither their habits nor their principles are worthy of attention or copy. In many cases, however, the parents are entirely reliable; and their religious principles forbid that their children should be diverted from the groove the parents have selected for them, either in habits, morals, or religion. All of these might well be left to the parental care, aided by the church to which they belong.

But by far the larger class of our children belong to parents who are not themselves exemplary moralists, or are so absorbed in business that they would greatly prefer to have some better mind direct their children in the way they should go. To the children of such families, it is a sort of moral suicide to forbid the school to enter upon the region of morals, giving only a mental power for right or wrong; but no key to the one or the other, and no heart tendency in either direction. It cannot be advisable. It is not advisable. The common school of the republic should direct the mind to the highest inspiration for good, the heart to the side of right, and the habits to harmony with the best models of mankind.

How this is to be done becomes a most absorbing and intricate problem. Who shall set up the moral code? Where shall we find it? Where shall it begin and end? Who will guide us in this matter?

We have many volunteers in this field. And they are not volunteers merely. Some of them claim a right to dictate, to take the field, to exclude all others, and to take control of the young mind of the republic, for themselves, their faith, dogma, and habit. Some of them would abolish the common school rather than forego their right to dictate. They may be classed as follows:

First, the Roman Catholic clergy. They declare that the education of youth rests with them alone. Where they are in the ascendant they claim an entire control of education from the ground up. Parents have no rights the church is bound to respect. They take the money of the people, establish the priestly school, and say, that or none. In the republic, being in the minority, they affirm that the government has no right to do the same thing, and educate the children to republican principles. They say the Catholic church has rights. Catholic parents have natural rights, and to take their money for schools, and their children to be educated to the principles of the republic, and without their religion, is an outrage, an imposition on them, a robbery of their pockets, and a persecution of their faith. They must control the schools, or have a part of the funds, and schools of their own.

These claims are inadmissible. Indeed, as to the right of the church, or the parents, they answer themselves, and defeat their own argument, by the fact that when in power they do the very thing they declare we have no right to do. They take the money of all, establish Catholic schools, and declare that the parents have no rights at all that the church is bound to respect. We cannot admit these claims. We cannot take their advice. The republic has an indefeasible right to preserve itself, to educate its children in republican principles, and make patriots of them, against all the world. If there are any parents here who object to that course, they are not of us, not well affected to the republic, not really American citizens, and should really have no voice in our affairs.

Second, our Protestant clergy put in a claim to be the moral instructors of our schools. They want the Bible as the standard, and the Bible morality as the text.

But there is difficulty here also. It is not possible to sever Bible reading from sectarian religion, or Bible morals from Bible religion; or indeed to say of any act, or form of government, or law, or practice that it is strictly Bible morals, without doubt.

The Bible does not set out a moral science. It is not a system of morals. Those who accept it as the "word of God" are not agreed about its doctrines or commands in any one thing. Moral science is something apart from all religion. It is the science of living well, long, and happily. It is the same in all lands; it cannot say one thing in China, another in Italy, and another in the United States. It speaks to all men alike, and tells the same story in all lands and climes. If we wanted to teach moral science in our schools, we would go to the chair of moral philosophy at our University for the text book; and not to any sectarian college, to the Bible, or to any form of faith.

Religion is not moral science. It simply gives its assent to certain existing forms of life, or as modified by the religious teacher. In Russia it teaches autocracy. Bishop Vladimir here relates that in the year 998, a czar of Russia ordered all his people to be baptized in the Greek church, and it was so. The bishop to-day sees no impropriety in this infamous order. Such is Bible morality in Russia. In Italy the pope whines incessantly for his lost throne, as a Bible and Christian right. In our own land the Bible and its morality were the main stay of slavery. Even now, Bible Christians are denouncing the Constitution of the United States because it does not enthrone God, Christ, the Bible, and the persecution of heretics.

Whatever branch of morals you desire to teach, no certain guide can be found in the Bible, or in the Christian church. They have no moral system, no moral science. On government they are all at sea, and veer all the way from perfect freedom to autocracy and slavery.

On marriage, the Bible and the churches give out no certain sound. From Catholicism to Mormonism there is every shade between. We could not make up a moral code from any or all of them.

Yet we have one pretty safe and certain guide; and it should come to the front as a moral code, almost as a religion, that is safe, sound, reliable, almost everywhere accepted by our people, and infallible, if the words of man may ever be so. The constitution of the United States, of our own state, and the most of the statutes passed under them, constitute a moral code the nearest perfect known to man; and a religion that, if fully understood, and fairly practiced, leaves little further to be said or done, to live well on earth and be assured of all that is to come. See how it would read to our children, and what a fine moral guide it would be!

All men and women are by nature free and equal, in rank, rights, and deservings.

There is no distinction but worth, talent, goodness, and usefulness.

All laws must be just and equal to all, and protect all alike.

All are free to live, think, speak, write, and vote as they please; and to seek their own happiness in their own way, not interfering with the same rights in others.

When we do so meet each other that interference is unavoidable, we should be just and generous that we may have peace.

The females of our race should be an especial care to all. To them true manhood demands that we be more than just; and true gallantry that they know us only as friends and protectors.

That we may thus live in perpetual peace, government has made laws for our guidance in all disputes, and appointed tribunals to hear and determine the right.

It is a sacred and patriotic duty to observe these laws; to abide these decisions; and at all times to do more, and to be better than the law requires of us.

The wisest among us are elected by the people to make laws to determine the rights of property, of husbands and wives, parents and children, employers and employed, and all forms of human conduct; when conduct becomes crime, when it becomes nuisance; how far liberty may go, and what no man may do. It is the duty of all good people to abide these rules; to be better rather than worse than they command; and in no case to require correction for falling short.

The law may not be the best; nay, it may even be bad; and good and wise men may seek to amend it, and vote to do so. They may sometimes feel it necessary to denounce and defy the law, refuse obedience to it, and follow a higher law of their own conscience. But all such should have good reason to believe themselves superior to their fellows, and be ready to take all the consequences of disobedience.

The young, the mediocre, all that are less than first-class minds, should hesitate to adopt such a course, and rather conform to the opinions of those about them.

Thus, the wisdom of the nation has decreed that a man should have but one wife at one time; that they should make public their intent to be man and wife, and enter into a covenant to be to each other as such, till death, or to a legal divorce. The law has settled the terms of that covenant, and the conditions of its end. All persons will do well to follow the letter of the law in this regard. Let no temporary opinion, as of Mormonism, or any other ism, induce you to act in conflict with it. It is safest and best to keep yourself under the protection of the law. You are perhaps not wiser than society. At least, if you must be a law unto yourself, wait until your judgment is matured, and you are sure you may go alone.

And whether as child, teacher, scholar, husband, wife, or parent, seek to be better than the law requires. You may not be criminal, if you are no better, but you cannot claim to be good. Goodness and virtue, generosity and affection, demand more than the law.

A moral text book in this vein, pursuing the Constitution and the law, might be acceptable to our schools, and objectionable to none who are worthy of a voice in what the schools of the republic should be.

At a regular meeting of the Nineteenth Century Club, New York, on the 9th of November last, a resolution was passed appointing a committee to prepare and publish a memorial volume to the founder and first president of the club, and to solicit subscriptions to defray the expenses. This volume is now ready for publication. The book will contain the funeral orations, the addresses delivered at the memorial meetings, and essays and letters since received. It will consist of about 200 pages, octavo, heavy Holland paper, and richly bound in levant morocco. This edition, upon which no pains or expense will be spared to make it worthy of the club and of the occasion, will cost $5 per copy. For those who desire it an edition, handsomely bound in cloth, will be supplied at a cost of three dollars per copy. As frontispiece there will be a portrait of Courtlandt Palmer. As the committee have decided to print only such copies of the memorial volume as are ordered in advance, it is desirable that no time should be lost in notifying John H. Beach, 25 East 57th street, of the number of copies and the kind of binding which may be desired.

PROTESTANTS in the state of Maine have been stirred into a remonstrant condition by a bill before the legislature to so amend the by-laws of the State Reform School that Catholic boys in that institution may receive instruction in their own faith. The priests desire permission to teach their catechism without the presence of Protestants, to celebrate a mass once a month, to establish secret confession, communion once in three months, and confirmation once a year.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above drier is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street. Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast. G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - , APRIL 20, 1889.

DR. HARCOURT, pastor of the Howard-street Methodist church, is censured by his brethren for condemning revivals. He denounces reliance on perambulating evangelists as "the sin of the clergy." Dr. Harcourt may be right. As Ingersoll once remarked, a fire that has to be blown continually to prevent it from going out is a poor fire to keep warm by.

"Don't prophesy unless you know" is sage advice. Some time ago John Slater, the Mediumistic Wonder, predicted that the city of Santa Cruz would suffer great loss by fire April 14. Nothing of the kind occurred, and instead of a fire it rained heavily. Mr. Slater continues to prophesy, all the more acceptably because his dire prognostications fail of fulfillment.

THE Methodists are the prime movers in the scheme to build a People's church in San Francisco, to which Senator Stanford is reputed to have offered a contribution of $100,000 on condition that as much more shall be raised for the purpose. The alleged intention is to make the church undenominational. If the members of other churches can be caught with this kind of Methodist guile, no doubt the church will be built.

LAST week we noted the insane act of a father and mother in Missouri, who crucified their infant as a sacrifice to God. Prince Law, a Georgia negro, took a different course, and April 12, near Savannah, killed his five-year-old son as a sacrifice to the devil. He is of course a religious lunatic. It is strange that these fanatics, when in a sacrificial mood, are never possessed with the notion that they themselves would make an acceptable offering. An example of this sort is badly needed to give the custom of sacrificing its most beneficent impulse.

GERTRUDE ATHERTON, the Argonaut correspondent, has offended Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the poet, by writing that the latter is "a little mouse-colored woman, who needs a conspicuous dress to be noticed. Her only good feature is a sensitive mouth. She is very thin, and in a dim light looks quite young." Mrs. Wilcox rebukes Miss Atherton, and Miss Atherton, in self-defense, says that her style is that of all Western writers. Miss Gertrude Atherton, by the way, is one of that class of female hacks who secure readers by being as indecent as their publishers will permit.

WHEN the Rev. Samuel Jones was at work on the hardened sinners of Kansas city, Mo., he effected a remarkable conversion in the person of John T. Lee, a reporter, and Lee followed him thereafter. We mention the circumstance now, as we are reminded of it by the fact that Mr. Lee has just been sentenced to thirty days' imprisonment for getting drunk and stealing a coat.

"TOBACCO," says the Prohibitionist, "is the next enemy the reformers of our country must engage. It has now come to be so that a person cannot walk along the streets without having offensive smoke puffed into the face at nearly every step." The Prohibitionists will doubtless begin the great work of suppressing tobacco by getting a law passed making smoking on Sunday a penal offense. In this labor they will not be deterred by the consideration that other people have the same right to smoke that they have to refrain from it. Such a thought as that never strikes the natural-born suppressionist.

SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of this society will be held in Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, above Powell, at 8 o'clock Sunday evening, April 21. An address will be delivered by Professor Herbert Miller. All are invited.

NEWS AND NOTES.

The meetings at San Diego, Sunday afternoon and evening, April 7, were largely attended and full of hope and promise. This brilliant city is weathering the hard times with undaunted pluck, and is bound to sail the seas of happy fortune. A generous welcome it has for the Secular Pilgrim, and for the new thought and spirit of the age. Sunday evening the hall was not only crowded, but overflowing, and many were obliged to stand and many went away for want of room. I believe that the elements here will soon crystallize, and San Diego be one of the banner cities of Freethought. This country will develop surprisingly during the next few years. It has those resources which, in the end, must prevail and create a fair and flourishing commonwealth. San Diego county is twice as large as the state of Massachusetts, and will one day be as rich and magnificent.

The spirit of the people at large is the spirit of Liberalism. The churches flourish, of course, but they don't rule, and are obliged to accommodate themselves to progress, or the pews, like the pulpit, will become a vacuum.

My delightful visit with Mr. and Mrs. Ranford Worthing was one of the charms of Freethought labor. The shadow of orthodoxy is not present, but all that is sweet and attractive in the old New England life radiates in the novelty of these Western shores. This cordial home, with its four generations of eager life, blends youth and age like the Mayflower itself on its voyage to freedom. The grandsire voted for both Harrisons. Whom the baby will vote for is, no doubt, written in the stars, but it looks happy enough now, as king of all it surveys, never to be troubled with the whirl of politics.

I also enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. James Bidwell, and in their home, too, Freethought is like the sunshine. Mr. Bidwell is of the old Investigator line, and has borne our banner many a year. While resident in the Sandwich Islands he introduced the Investigator to the notice of the king, who became a subscriber to it, and thus showed more sense than kings commonly do. Mr. Bidwell took me over to Coronado Beach and around and over the big hotel, which is, indeed, a noble structure. It presents an imposing appearance from afar, and is a picture of elegance and comfort on closer view. The gardens are gorgeous with flowers. The boundless ocean is before, with its vast waves beating upon the strand in endless music. This place is like a paradise, with its ever-changing views, its bright and pleasant company, its beautiful parlors, and grand hall where entertainments of all kinds are nightly going on, while the eye can never tire of the wonderful panorama of sea, and mountain, and soft blue sky. With a good bank account, one can enjoy immortality here a thousand times better than twanging a golden harp.

Saturday my friend Percy Goodwin gave me a drive through National City, Paradise Valley, and on to the Sweetwater dam. This is a marvelous piece of engineering, and contains untold wealth for this section. Six billion gallons of water are stored away—enough for a three years' supply. The vast reservoir is now full and the water is tumbling over the rocky battlement like white streamers on the wind. The Sweetwater Valley is becoming a choice location. The lands are held at five hundred dollars an acre, with water privilege. Returning we passed through an orange grove on Whitney's ranch, where oranges were hanging by the thousand, mingling with the blooms whose perfume filled the air. Meandering our way over hill and through dale, the road, which seemed fair enough at the beginning, became lost in tall grass and ended against a wire fence. Although the circus was in town it was not a part of our program to join the procession and jump a wire fence, so we were obliged to pick our way back again to the main line over the encircling hills. Climbing the rugged sides, entrancing prospects lay at our feet, and never could artist's pencil find more fascinating things to delineate. The sunset was just flinging its intense color all along the broad breast of the mountain, at whose base spreads the beautiful lake, held by the Sweetwater dam, glittering into the bosom of the lowlands, edged with brilliant green and scattered grove, while in the very centre of the picture the dam, massive as an ancient castle, gorgeous like Solomon's temple and a million times more useful, appears like a painted crimson and golden wall against the mass of waters that roll behind. In conjunction with this beautiful prospect of mountain, lake, stream, field, and grove, over to the left stretches Spring Valley, along whose edge threads the Cuyamaca railroad, reaching to El Cajon Valley, circled by the great flume high upon its rim, where, also, an immense force of waters is gathered for irrigation and manufacturing purposes, while supplying the city of San Diego with pure, sweet, mountain water. It will thus be seen that "the back country" is not lingering on the path to empire, but mountain answers to sea with summons to civilization.

Dr. Lewis Post, ninety-two years of age, is still a stalwart pioneer. Only a little while ago he took a ninety-mile trip into the mountains, to push forward an enterprise of stupendous magnitude, of which the originator is our Liberal friend Malcolm Matheson. Its object is the storing up of waters flowing from the eastern slopes of the Julian and Cuyamaca ranges of mountains. Thousands of acres of nice fruitlands lying in level valleys will thus be rendered productive in a tropical climate, and the desert will blossom like the rose. Dr. Post has laid in for a long life. He is a sturdy Prohibitionist and declares that before he dies he will help elect a Prohibition president. He certainly will have to drink of the fountains of immortal youth. I wish I had a lease on life like the doctor, and could live until a Prohibition president was elected. The doctor, nevertheless, is a Liberal, take him all in all, and a Spiritualist too, and he says he has been dead several times, but the spirits have raised him—not the distilled, but the invisible. He is grandfather to Louis F. Post, our bright and notable reformer in New York city; and so the blood of freedom runs on from generation to generation, whatever may be the fate of spirits, wise or otherwise, whether of the still or the unseen world.

Among other good allies are Mrs. W. A. Dorris of the New Carleton, where the traveler can sojourn in real comfort. Mrs. Dorris is a genial hostess, but she is not at all disposed to patronize the "religious racket," and when, on Sunday morning, some of her guests desired to know the way to church, she answered that she really couldn't tell them, for she had never attended any of the churches in San Diego. This is a good Freethought record. In this case ignorance is bliss. When all women are equally sensible, Moody and Sam Jones will have but little to do.

Singleton W. Davis has given some "Sketches of the Scientific Dispensation of a New Religion" well worthy of perusal. Taking his definitions of religion, he is not far out of the way, though I do not admit all of his conclusions. But he presents his matter in an original way and makes religion harmonious with reason and progress.

My friends, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hartley and family, are in the ranks yet, with good cheer that lightens toil. George Middleton keeps a repair shop where he mends all articles, he says, but I don't believe he will ever undertake to repair orthodoxy. Even the Almighty has not been able to keep it in good order.

I must thank the members of the San Diego Choral Union for the excellent music they furnished—Ranford Worthing, Miss Addie Dick, Mrs. Lottie Low, Mr. Wm. O'Farrell, Dr. C. C. Gorham. Much of the success of the lectures was due to their generous assistance. Miss Dick's father was Sheriff Dick in Illinois where Abraham Lincoln used to practice law. He was present at the "almanac trial," when Lincoln saved his client from hanging by referring to the almanac. The prosecution swore that it was a moonlight night. The almanac showed that there was no moon on that night, and the almanac won the day and saved the boy.

I can't mention all that stand by the flag in this goodly city, and who are more than friends of a day—who are for the storm as well as the sunshine of Freethought. There are the Rowes, and the Lockwoods, Val Fink, F. F. Wright, James K. Stevenson, John Goldring, Richwood Swaile, Wm. J. Grier, Dr. A. C. Smith, A. C. Yonkin, Miss Daisy and Miss Rosa Smith, Mrs. Violet Lewis, Mrs. Ida E. Butler, F. W. Bradley, Isaac D. Snedecor, Geo. Conrad, H. T. Boerlin, Mr. and Mrs. Shead, Miss Julia Blodgett, Mrs. R. E. Davis, Miss Nellie Dorris, Mr. and Mrs. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Rumple, Anna F. Smith, Miss Lilla M. Rowe, Mrs. Susie Mantle, Miss Maggie O'Rourke, Mrs. D. E. Young, Dr. Gould, W. E. Kidder, and many others; and surely with all these of bright youth and stalwart age there must be golden days for Freethought. With the material prosperity of this sunny clime will flash the inspirations of Liberalism. I notice a reverend who has signed the articles of organization of the California Liberal Union—Rev. W. H. Noster, of Del Mar. I have not the pleasure of his acquaintance, but he is on the right road, and he must shake hands with friend Shaug.

My thanks are due to C. W. Garland for his untiring efforts in behalf of the lectures. When there is any business to be done he is the one to make it lively. A better comrade I have not met.

Mrs. Mary A. White and Mrs. Clark are also co-workers who show that woman outside of the church is much better than woman inside of the church. Mrs. White has the courage to stand upon the platform and speak for Freethought, and she has fervor and wit enough to make a bright and graceful speaker.

I had the pleasure of meeting friends Wm. Burgess, and Dr. and Mrs. Babcock, of National City. It wasn't so that I could lecture at this place. Times have changed since I was here last. But National City only sleeps. It will greet the morning with coronet of progress still.

Coming up to Escondido Monday afternoon, I had the company of friend Smith, from the banks of the "Little Jimmie," where his farm of thousands of acres stretches over hill and dale like a garden of Eden. I did not have a chance to visit his home while at Del Mar, for the recent rains made the "Little Jimmie" roar along quite threateningly. However, Mr. Smith was present at my Sunday evening's lecture at San Diego, and so the loss was partly made up, but I regret that I did not have an opportunity to meet his family, where everything is so enjoyable and the welcome so warm. But, as friend Shaug says, I brought the rain with me, and so I had to suffer the consequences. The very moment he saw it announced that I was coming he told his wife that it would rain, and, in fact, they had the biggest rain of the season.

I just had time Monday night, as the train stopped at Del Mar, to shake hands with Shaug, and then on for Oceanside and Escondido.

B. B. Rockwood greets me as I land at Escondido and, after a hasty supper, I proceed to Thomas-Cravath Hall, where an audience somewhat larger than a year ago is present, but the only ladies are those whom Mr. Rockwood brings with him from San Pasqual. There is a Methodist college at Escondido and, like a big magnet, it seems to draw the backbone out of Freethinkers, and they are afraid of the boycott. Not a majority belong to the church, but the atmosphere is depressing. However, a few attend the lectures, and there are signs of progress. Mr. Rockwood is one of those who never give up. He has been on the frontier line too long to be overcome by any slight difficulties. So this lovely Escondido shall not pass altogether into the hands of the enemy. It rained, also, and that gave some an excuse to stay away, and two or three prayer-meetings were under full headway.

With moonlight, and starlight, and vast clouds overhead, and now and then an April shower, we take our journey over the range of hills into the peaceful San Pasqual valley; and beneath the arch of midnight—the triumphant moon sailing above the clouds and flinging its silver splendor on the running stream and its embracing trees, and the circling fields and ramparts of intertwining hills—we reach our friend's embowered home, and a happy rest I have of it until the morning is half-way up the shining heavens.

Mr. Rockwood, who has battled with nature until she has put on her best mantle of harvest and greeted him with smiles, has been no less strenuous and victorious in his combat with orthodoxy, but orthodoxy has not, like nature, translated itself into fruitful fields and orchards, but has grimly fled and howled. Mr. Rockwood has a fine library of books, and a stream of books and pamphlets and papers is constantly going the round of the neighborhood, and the church is kept upon its defense. Sometimes these books are burned; they disappear suddenly, but Mr. Rockwood keeps up the supply, and the best ammunition of the Liberal camp is constantly on the go. Mr. Rockwood has enlisted for the war, and slowly and surely he presses on the stronghold of the enemy, and the ranks of Freethought from year to year enlist the inquiring and progressive minds. Mrs. Rockwood is a staunch Liberal. She was one of the two ladies present at my lecture at Escondido, but it didn't disturb her a bit to be, thus, one of the unfashionable few. The world moves when women is enfranchised by the royalty of her own thought.

Mr. Rockwood's ranch is a delightful place. Here is happiness in this beautiful valley, if one knows how to reach it. The sun shines brightly down, and the enclosing hills, mingling like vast billows and holding in their bosom green and flowery retreats, shine with ever-changing lustres from morning to evening. The garden with its ranks of flowers, the orchard, the vineyard, the little city of bees on the verdant slope, the grove of eucalyptus trees, the band of horses, the fat cattle in the shining pastures, the tumbling mountain stream—these make a picture of infinite variety and delight, and here the hours pass pleasantly by with genial friends, and happy children going to school or playing in the radiant grass. Friend Rockwood is a philosopher as well as soldier, and having won the fight, enjoys the fruits of age with tranquil thought.

The meetings were well attended. Our Advent friends were out. When it comes to the church and state question, they are heartily with us, but on the religious question there is much diversity. They take the Bible without question. They believe that Satan is the prince of this world and has things mostly his own way. Sometime Jesus is going to take away his empire, but the "Advent" is constantly delayed. It seems to be difficult to understand the mathematics of the Bible. However, our Advent friends are Liberal minded, and are drifting unconsciously forward. Being in the minority they know what it is to exercise backbone, and backbone is the germ of all Infidelity, of that unbelief which means better hope and knowledge.

I have given two lectures in this valley, in the school-house, and have enjoyed the brave little company of Freethinkers who keep the waves of civilization beating on these rocky heights. I know of no place where one can drink more of the broad spirit of nature and humanity.

Comrade Elbert Ward is fearlessly radical, and makes a good "deacon" in the Church of Humanity, and can perform whatever "religious service" is required with neatness and dispatch. He is not afraid to put his hand to the plow.

Miss Cora B. Ward, his daughter, has not the slightest hesitation in declaring that she is a good Infidel, whatever may be the opinions of others. She proposed several Bible questions to the lecturer on the second evening which elicited many important facts for the consideration of searchers after the truth. These thoughtful inquiries added quite an interest to the discussion of the subject, "The Bible and Modern Thought."

There are few, but enough in this bright valley to make it a choice spot for practical Freethought work.

Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Bates, Joseph Jagger, John Judson, W.

B. Furgeson, D. Trussell, Wm. F. Furgeson, E. Enas, and others are Liberals that, with their families, will help build for this sunny spot the beautiful temple of Humanity.

I lectured at Escondido Friday night again, and there was increased attendance, except this time there was only one lady instead of two. This shows that our path is not one of flowers, but is beset with many unreasoning prejudices which only time can remove. There are many places where Freethought is looked upon as being born of the devil.

M. Smythe and C. Holdendorf are in the ranks of the Union. A. K. Craveth is a prominent business man who generously aids the cause. The use of Thomas-Cravath hall was given for the lectures. The larger part of the business men here are Liberal in thought, but do not think it best to meet the orthodox sentiment which is strongly entrenched in half a dozen churches and the imposing college on the hill.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown of the Escondido Hotel are genial entertainers, and the hotel is one of the best on the coast. Every tourist should make it a point to visit its lofty eminence, where miles of most lovely country are spread before the eye, an enchanting prospect—a broad rolling plain with a green carpet and elegant dwellings, swelling into soft and noble and varied table lands and rocky summit, over which the gales of ocean blow with sweetness and refreshment. There cannot be a finer location for homes. The soil is good, water is plenty, the best of fruits can be produced. The climate is healthful, and in the bosom of the hills, where the rocks seem to be the only tenants, many a delightful dale is found, where the sun kisses the genial earth, and flowers and grass make promise of more luxuriant fruitage.

I come down to Oceanside Saturday morning, and have a few minutes at the St. Cloud Hotel, with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Knowles. About five million dollars is to be expended to construct a dam for the waters of the San Luis. This will irrigate a splendid country. Oceanside therefore has its "boundless future." As a sea-side resort it cannot be surpassed. The ocean and the sun are all the time weaving beautiful pictures in the soft and cooling atmosphere. Summer and winter there is pleasure here, tropical noons and northern nights, the fervent heat mingled with delicious breath of the Arctic current that drops perpetually on this favored coast. And when the weary traveler alights from the dusty car he must look for the St. Cloud Hotel just across the way, and there he will find the best that is going.

"THOU SHALT NOT KILL."

Some of the clergymen of Texas appear never to have heard of the above commandment, or else they do not regard its restrictions as binding upon the cloth. Below is an interesting dispatch taken from a morning paper:

"NAVASOTA (Tex.), April 9.—The ministers of this section have adopted vigorous Christian methods in dealing with delinquents. On Sunday morning, the Rev. J. N. Lawson, a minister actively engaged in promulgating the gospel, shot and killed a negro named Daniel McLeod, who had stolen several articles from him. A second tragedy has occurred near Yarborough station. The Rev. Hall Miller was conducting a Sunday school, and while praying an intoxicated man named Richards entered the school and disturbed the meeting. There was an altercation between the preacher and the disturber, and the Rev. Mr. Miller went home, but soon returned with a shot-gun, and fired its contents into Richards's side, killing him instantly. The dead man was possessed of great strength, and was very brutal."

When preachers commit deeds of this sort it is about time for them to abandon their claim of allegiance to the prince of peace. It is not recorded that the master went heeled, or resorted on any occasion to the six-shooter or shot-gun. His neglect in that regard, however, has been amply atoned for by his followers.

CONSERVATIVE PIONEERS.

The late James Lick left a munificent sum of money to the Society of Pioneers in this city, with which, after his death, a large brick building costing several hundred thousand dollars was erected on Fourth street, just south of Market. This building contains a hall of a seating capacity of about six hundred, which the builders fitted up with the regardlessness of expense which usually characterizes the handlers of other people's money. The will of Mr. Lick provided, it is understood, that regular lectures of a scientific, literary, or historical character should be given in this hall, but that it should never be used for religious meetings. Whether the latter clause of the will has ever been violated we do not know, but we should not be surprised to learn that it had been. The fact that Mr. Lick was a Freethinker appears to have wholly escaped the memory of the committee having the building in charge.

Last week the members of the San Francisco Freethought Society were casting about for a permanent meeting-place, and it naturally struck them that no more appropriate hall could be found than the one built with the money of the Freethinker James Lick, who has shown his admiration for the great apostle of Freethought, Thomas Paine, by building him a Memorial Hall in Boston. The secretary of the Pioneer Society was therefore waited upon by Professor Miller, who stated his object in calling and gave the name of the organization that desired to hold its meetings in Pioneer Hall. The secretary expressed doubts that the hall could be engaged by a Freethought society. It had been refused the Spiritualists. He would, however, consult the committee. The next day Professor Miller called again and received the ultimatum of the said committee, which was that Pioneer Hall would not be leased on Sunday night for such a purpose!

The manger being thus occupied, of course the matter is settled. Several interesting questions nevertheless arise. It is pertinent to ask, for instance, why the Pioneers accepted the money of James Lick if they had not sufficient respect for his opinions to allow them to be advocated in the hall which that money built. Do the Pioneers object to receiving the money of Freethinkers now? and if so, why did they take it then? What has brought about the change of sentiment? Do they think they have received all the money from such a source that their consciences will allow them to accept? Finally, do they for a moment suppose that they would ever have had a hall built with James Lick's money if he had suspected that so soon after coming in possession of it they would close its doors against the advocates of a cause which James Lick did so much to promote?

Perhaps a reasonable explanation of the refusal of the Pioneers to let the Freethought Society occupy its hall is that its musical exercises might not harmonize with the concert nightly conducted by a prior lessee who runs the "Pioneer Liquor Saloon" in the same building.

MORALITY OF FREETHOUGHT.

The heirs of the ages, we reject nothing of the past that has helped to uplift humanity, pagan or Mohammedan, Hebrew or Christian. All below us, back to the stone age, is the pedestal on which we stand. It is built of human virtues, squared by the hand of time. Our impulse to action is higher than that of the past, not lower, as our enemies affirm. Our morality makes no bargain with heaven, for it does not believe that possible. It acts from a higher principle than the Christian, with no thought of reward in the other world. We have stepped beyond the false incentives of religion and find the air purer and more wholesome.

Freethought has always elevated, not lowered, humanity. All great reformers have been Freethinkers, freer thinkers than their predecessors, than the men of their day. Their reforms have been the result of free thinking. Because they freed their minds from the cords of custom, they bettered custom. Because they would not be hampered by the teachings of the past, they improved upon the past. Because they rejected the slavery of opinion, their thoughts became stars and suns that gave light to following generations. The free thought of Buddha rejected caste, and the millions of India gave him reverent and grateful worship. The free thought of Jesus taught that love was a higher principle of action than ceremonial obedience or fear, and the hearts of men have responded for nearly twenty centuries to his teachings. The free thought of Luther recoiled against the superstition and corruptions of medieval Christianity and led the intelligence of Europe to revolt successfully against the tyranny of Rome. The Freethought of Robert Ingersoll is awakening men to-day from their intellectual indifference and acquiescence in the mythology of the Bible, and is breaking the chains of social slavery which dogmatic Christianity still strives to bind upon public opinion. Every man who has helped to lift higher the veil of ignorance that has obscured human intelligence has been a Freethinker.

No one has yet grasped the perfect truth, nor ever will. The finite cannot grasp the infinite. The truth has been of gradual discovery. The great thinkers, philosophers, and teachers have each added something new to the treasure-house. None of them have known all. Though believed infallible in their day, their mistakes have been discussed since. We do not proclaim the perfect truth, for we cannot, but the nearest approach to it that we know. But at least we will not declare as true that which we know or suspect to be false.

It is here that we criticise the morality of the churches and declare our own purer. They maintain as divinely inspired a farrago of Hebrew mythology. Its absurdities, its impossibilities, have been shown again and again. Its impossible miracles, its Jonah, its flood, its Adam and Eve, its creation, are at the opposite poles to reason and science, and rank with the like tales of Greek, of Hindoo, of Chinese mythology. But with obstinate and deluded persistency the church still maintains the truth of these old-world fables, tries to give them a naturalistic interpretation, to reconcile them with science, dodges, splits hairs, uses all the arts and evasions of the advocate, is thoroughly dishonest, and inconsistent in the methods of her defense. For she cannot abandon these old fables; they are a part of her system. If the Old Testament goes the New must go with it, and the whole structure of her heaven-claimed power must fall like a house of cards.

But this intellectual dishonesty is thoroughly immoral. The truth is hidden and falsehood defended; and the dishonest advocates pose as the sole possessors and defenders of a pure morality!

We will not dwell here upon the infernal tortures of mind and body which the church has in the past inflicted on those who differed from her teachings; on her Inquisition, her burnings, her racks, her thumbscrews, her excommunications; these the church of to-day fiercely deprecates as the unhappy violence, the mistaken zeal of an earlier age—though the church would still be burning if men had not freed themselves from her domination. For the spirit of the church to-day, both Catholic and Protestant, is a persecuting one. It is intolerant of criticism and opposition. It would force all opinion into the same mold, and maligns and ostracizes those who will not follow its teachings. There is an Index Expurgatorius at Rome, and a Protestant pulpit forbids the reading of "Robert Elsmere" in America, and an American missionary society prevents a great house from publishing "Yone Santo."

"FREETHOUGHT" IN BOUND VOLUMES.

We have a few copies of FREETHOUGHT, Volume I., 1888, substantially bound in half calf, which we will sell at $2.50 per volume. As the number is very limited, those who desire the first year of FREETHOUGHT in this form will need to apply early.

THE health of poor old Joachim Pecci, who is Pope Leo XIII. during business hours, is failing rapidly. This is gratifying to several ambitious cardinals who live in hope of sometime occupying the papal throne.

SAYS the Chronicle: "New Hampshire has demonstrated that bigotry is not dead, by passing a law excluding Catholics from office. The prevalence of toleration has been so general in this country that this action of the New England state seems like an anachronism." It is true that the passage of a law excluding members of any religious sect from office would be a display of bigotry, but New Hampshire has not passed such a law. The voters of the state merely declined to adopt an amendment guaranteeing equal protection to members of all religious denominations. However, Catholics should not complain, since they do not believe in toleration themselves, and have never advocated it except when in a minority.

DR. HORATIO STEBBINS preached last Sunday on the council of Christians called by Constantine in the year 325. In his sermon this statement occurs:

"After the great Constantine had conquered his world, he saw at midday in the clear sky the sign of the cross, with the words, 'By this sign you conquer.' Then he knew the world should be ruled by another force than the sword, the force of love and charity."

We have seen Dr. Stebbins, and conversed with him as a man speaketh to a friened. He is not an imbecile nor a lunatic. For which reason we do not believe that he believes a word of what he says about Constantine's remarkable vision. He was merely preaching.

"A PREMIUM ought not to be put upon evangelists who draw large crowds curious to listen to the recital of their evil ways, in words so fetid that some Anthony Comstock should cause their arrest, and consign them to the same cell with those who are guilty of vending obscene literature."

The foregoing words are not from some Freethinker's criticism of the Rev. Samuel Jones: they were spoken by one of the most influential clergymen of this city in his sermon last Sunday. They are perhaps more weighty on that account, because inspired by "Christian" charity.

THE Boston Traveler remarks: "Whatever may be said for or against the Irish people, there is certainly one respect in which they may challenge the admiration of the world, namely, in matrimonial fidelity. In the recently issued tables giving statistics on the subject of divorce our own country leads in having granted nearly half a million divorces during the twenty years past, but there have been but eleven divorces throughout the length and breadth of Erin during that period." The fact that the Irish people secure few divorces is not an argument in support of their marital fidelity, because the Catholic church, which is the Irishman's church, forbids divorce and forgives adultery. Naturally, therefore, divorce statistics have nothing to do with the case.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The steamer Alameda, which arrived last week from Sydney, via Samoa, brought the details of the recent marine disaster at Port Apia, in which the German and American warships were wrecked. The former news is merely repeated, that a most violent storm sprung up March 16; the vessels dragged their anchors, and fouled and disabled one another, and then drifted helplessly upon the reefs.—Some of the gold-hunters who went to the Santa Clara gold diggings now want Lower California annexed to Upper, as a convenient way of getting back into the state.—Engineers are surveying for a railroad between Golden-dale and Pasco, W. T.—The convention of Baptists at Sacramento adopted resolutions favoring prohibition of the liquor traffic.—H. W. Foster's wife sued him for divorce at Los Angeles. He had disturbed prayer meetings which she and several members of the holiness band were wont to hold daily or thereabouts in the Foster home, and had told some of the holiness ladies that if they did not keep away from his house he would switch them out. The divorce was asked for on account of these actions of Foster, but was denied.—A slight earthquake shock visited various parts of the state last Sunday evening.—Campana, the pedestrian, better known as "Old Sport," now drives a huckster's wagon in San Francisco.—The French citizens of this town will celebrate the fall of the Bastille, July 13, 14, and 15, with fireworks, cannon, and oratory.—Ex-Senator Jeremiah Lynch has issued a pamphlet fiercely attacking Buckley, the political "boss" of San Francisco.—The centennial of Washington's inauguration will be duly celebrated in this city April 30, although the full programme has not been outlined by the committee.—Our local Presbyterian synod will make an excursion to New York next month to attend the Presbyterian General Assembly. Metropolitans are warned to look out for high jinks.—The new state of Washington, it is announced, holds its election May 14, and a constitutional convention at Olympia July 4.—The building of the projected Fresno and Pine Ridge railroad is considered assured. Local capital will be employed.—Col. J. P. Jackson, formerly a journalist, has been appointed sub-treasurer of the U. S. mint at San Francisco.—The United States grand jury for Washington territory has found eleven indictments against Herbert F. Beecher, ex-treasury agent.—Robert Dunsmuir, the coal-mine king, died at Victoria, B. C., April 12, of paralysis.—A Sunday-law agitation is on at Dixon, Solano county.—Whittier, Los Angeles county, is selected for the site of the new state reformatory.

There is a considerable rush of immigrants to the Oklahoma lands in Kansas. Rival claimants sometimes settle their disputes by killing one another.—The steamer Danmark, of the Thingvalla steamship line, is supposed to have been lost in the mid-Atlantic, with 700 persons on board.—Kasson, Phelps, and Bates have sailed for Europe. They are commissioners to Berlin on Samoan affairs.—Whitecaps attacked Road Supervisor John Ainsford, of Madison township, Ind., the other day, but were met with a shotgun, and several of their number sustained severe wounds, which led to their identification and arrest.—Very few persons have any idea of the size of the army of civil service employees of Uncle Sam. The blue book, which consists of two volumes of 2200 pages, shows that 140,825 people are on the government pay rolls, in addition to those in the army and navy. Of the whole number of civil employees one-ninth are women, and fully one-third of those in Washington are of the gentler sex.—Meredith Stanley jumped from the famous high bridge over the Kentucky river, last week, a distance of 285 feet, into 12 feet of water. He was but slightly injured.—The son of President Harrison is under bonds charged with libeling Colonel Crosby, formerly governor of Montana.

The London Weekly Dispatch says: William O'Brien has entered a libel action against Lord Salisbury for certain remarks made by the latter in his recent speech at Waterford.—Sir Julian Paunceforte, the new British minister to the United States, is on his way to Washington.—The French Senate is trying Boulanger for conspiracy.—Another attempt on the life of the czar of Russia is reported, his majesty being struck by a fragment of a shell. The Russian authorities observe great secrecy in the matter.—Kossuth, the Hungarian patriot, who is now at Turin, has suffered another relapse, and his life is despaired of.

OBSERVATIONS.

The San Francisco Freethought Society had a very successful and well-attended meeting last Sunday morning, Counsellor P. O. Chilstrom, president, occupying the chair. Quite a number of people from out of town were enabled to be present, some from as far away as Oregon. Among the latter were Captain Campbell and Mr. J. D. Garfield and wife, of Marshfield, and Mr. Hunter, author of a patriotic poem which he recited in this office on the day of his arrival. Also Mr. Freeman Parker, of Petaluma, and Mr. H. F. Ebers, of Ingrams, Sonoma county. I was pleased to meet Mr. J. B. Hassett, of Anaheim. He is a gentleman of good looks and intelligence, notwithstanding his unique ideas with regard to taxation on land values.

President Chilstrom called the meeting to order, and Professor Schultheis performed a solo on the piano. Secretary Breuer being absent, the reading of the minutes of the meeting fell upon myself with a dull thud.

The committee on the hiring of halls reported through Professor Miller. The professor related that the committee had conceived the idea of getting a good hall, agitating through the press and by means of circulars, and so attracting public attention as to make the movement a large one at the start. With this object in view he had called upon the keepers of Pioneer Hall, stating his object and the nature of the society. The proprietors of the hall declined to lease it for that purpose, and he had recourse to 421 Post street, where he found a hall in all respects as good, and with the added advantage of a Liberal in charge.

It was voted, after brief discussion, that the hall be engaged for one month, and the next meeting will be held there.

Through the instrumentality of the assistant secretary as much as anything else, copies of a sheet bearing a dozen songs from the "Cosmian Hymn Book" were distributed through the audience, and the business of singing one of these was next taken up. Professor Schultheis evoked an accompaniment from the piano, while the audience sang. Barring a slight preponderance of bass, the general effect was satisfactory.

Professor Miller delivered an address on "The Gods." It was somewhat in the nature of a funeral discourse, the subjects of the professor's remarks having long since passed away. He began with the oldest gods known to history, and gave brief eulogies of each. It appeared from what was said that the less people knew the more gods they had. The gods practiced the system of economy known as the division of labor, one or more being detailed to preside over each of the various departments of industry. Those were good times for gods compared with the present, when many people believe in no more than one—a sort of Jack-at-all-trades and master of none. Professor Miller's address showed much familiarity with the subject, derived from a close study of epitaphs in numerous theological cemeteries.

After another song, such as had not done so were invited by the president to sign the membership roll. Eleven new names were thus added to the list, at one dollar each, and several unidentified dollars were cast into the treasury. Mr. H. F. Ebers, of Ingrams, felt called upon to drop in a gold eagle, and other visitors helped the cause along. The organization now has thirty-five members in good standing.

It is expected that the Freethought Society will find a permanent home at Union Square Hall, where also a series of revival meetings will be held by Putnam on the Sunday evenings of next month.

A correspondent of the Ironclad Age has placed the editor, Dr. Monroe, in nomination for a journey around the world, and especially to the holy land, and I arise to second the motion. I would further suggest that the United States consulate to Palestine is, so far as I know, as yet unfilled. Dr. Monroe is a citizen of Indianapolis, presumably personally acquainted with President Harrison, and he is also a deep student of Biblical history, which fact should recommend him to the favor of the administration. I do not believe there is any good reason why Dr. Monroe should not represent this country in the holy land. His expenses, it is understood, would be paid by the government, and a small salary is attached to the office. The entrance of the editor of the Ironclad Age into Jerusalem, mounted after the fashion of his distinguished predecessor, and bearing his portfolio in one hand, and a quart bottle of the Blood Feeder in the other, would be, I conceive, rather more triumphal than any other entrance known to history. It would also be calculated to evoke the enthusiasm of the natives, and to win their respect for American institutions.

It is not my business to intervene in the discussion now being carried on by correspondents over the matter of woman suffrage. It is not my especial concern whether women vote or not. I am of the opinion that that question is to be left to the women themselves. There are a good many women who were in the country before I came to it; I certainly have no control over them. There are many at present unknown to me: they live in remote parts. From my corner of this ten by fourteen sanctum I do not feel qualified to send forth an authoritative statement that they shall not participate in the affairs of the community in which they reside. After the obsequies attendant upon my lamented demise shall have been concluded, further women will doubtless take an interest in the welfare of the country. I do not wish any of them to feel that they are restrained from saving it, if so disposed, by any act of mine. I am pretty confident that, if woman voted, we should feel all the evils of foolish legislation, but as the world has been afflicted by the same thing through male suffrage, I do not regard that as so strong an argument against woman's enfranchisement as it would be if men had always voted judiciously. But men, we hope, are gradually growing wiser and learning to use the ballot with more discretion. I say I hope so, for I am not sure that they are. It is very safe to predict that sooner or later women will vote. They may not vote wisely at first, but they will improve with practice. It might be well, then, to set them at it as early as possible and have the agony ended. If there is to be war, let it come in our day, in order that our widows may enjoy the blessings of peace and a pension.

I had the good luck last week to gain admittance to the lecture hall of the Pioneer building, and to hear the address of the Hon. T. H. Hittell on the discovery of Humboldt bay. I call it good luck, first, because the lecture was interesting and instructive; and second, because not everybody is permitted to attend these lectures. I imagine that James Lick had it in view to provide popular free lectures for the instruction of the masses, and the lectures are free, it is true; but the person who is not the fortunate possessor of a ticket might as well attempt to gain entrance by knocking his head against the wall as by going in at the door. So it is said. A lot of tickets for each lecture are printed, and members distribute them where they choose.

The audience at the Hittell lecture was largely composed of old men and elderly ladies. The presiding officer announced the speaker in a perfunctory manner, and the latter read his manuscript in a scarcely audible voice. The old Pioneers nodded their heads approvingly as they caught occasionally from the lecturer the name of some place with which they were familiar, but there was no stir and no applause. The lecture ended abruptly, without peroration, summing up, or even "in concluding."

An old pioneer whom I am acquainted with gives it as his opinion that the Pioneer society does not take any great interest in literary exercises. The lectures, he intimates, are given merely to avoid violating the will and thus losing the property. Anything that will pass under the name of a lecture is considered good enough provided it is cheap. The society has a half million of money, the income of which would suffice to engage the best speakers the world can produce, but the lecture course is conducted with the greatest economy.

The moral is that Freethinkers should do all the good they can with their money while alive and able to direct its use. This is about as evident in the case of James Lick as in that of Stephen Girard. M.

THE LECTURE TOUR.

Following are the dates of S. P. Putnam's lectures as at present determined:

Los Angeles, April 21,	San Francisco, May 5, 12, 19,
Lemoore, April 28,	Boulder Creek and vicinity, May,
Visalia, April 29, 30,	20, 21, 22, 23, 24,
Oleander, May 1, 2, 3,	San Francisco, May 26.

Mr. Putnam will be at Fresno Flats, Grub Gulch, and vicinity the first week in June. About the middle of June he will begin his Oregon trip, taking in Silverton, Canby, Molalla, Hillsboro, Shed's, etc. About the third week in July he will be in Coos county, Or.

Those desiring lectures will please write at their earliest convenience, addressing this office.

"Lewis the Light," the religious crank who has for months made trouble in the churches of New York, has realized that he cannot convert the world. He has given up the idea, and requests the charities commissioners of Brooklyn to send him back to British Columbia, where his wife, as a barber, can support him in ease and comfort.

We heartily agree with F. J. Gould, of London, England, that "it is better to dream of a noble God than to believe in a bad one," as he states on the title page of his little book called "Ecce Deus; or, a New God," published by Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street; but we are not quite so sure, as he states elsewhere, that "the skeptic yearns for a God." However, the "New God" which he describes would be a desirable substitute for any of the old ones. Price one penny.

A WELL-PRINTED and bound volume comes from the open Court Publishing Company, of Chicago, entitled "The Psychic Life of Micro-Organisms: A Study in Experimental Psychology," by Alfred Binet. It is translated from the French. A micro-organism is one of those beings which by reason of their extreme smallness and simplicity of structure represent the lowest stages of animal or vegetable life. They consist of a single cell. Mr. Binet contends that even these primitive forms of life possess a mind of some sort, or that "psychological phenomena begin among the very lowest classes of beings, and are met with in every form of life from the simplest cell to the most complicated organism." People interested in the study may find the latest scientific utterances on the subject in Mr. Binet's book. Price 75 cents.

PROFESSOR HUXLEY AND AGNOSTICISM.

BY ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

From the North American Review.

It is claimed by the Episcopal church that Christ was in fact God; and it is further claimed that the New Testament is an inspired account of what that being and his disciples did and said. Is there any obligation resting on any human being to believe this account? Is it within the power of man to determine the influence that testimony shall have upon his mind?

If one denies the existence of devils, does he, for that reason, cease to believe in Jesus Christ? Is it not possible to imagine that a great and tender soul living in Palestine nearly twenty centuries ago was misunderstood? Is it not within the realm of the possible that his words have been inaccurately reported? Is it not within the range of the probable that legend and rumor and ignorance and zeal have deformed his life and belittled his character?

If the man Christ lived and taught and suffered, if he was, in reality, great and noble, who is his friend—the one who attributes to him feats of jugglery, or he who maintains that these stories were invented by zealous ignorance and believed by enthusiastic credulity?

If he claimed to have wrought miracles he must have been either dishonest or insane; consequently, he who denies miracles does what little he can to rescue the reputation of a great and splendid man.

The Agnostic accepts the good he did, the truth he said, and rejects only that which, according to his judgment, is inconsistent with truth and goodness.

The principal of King's College evidently believes in the necessity of belief. He puts conviction or creed or credulity in place of character. According to his idea it is impossible to win the approbation of God by intelligent investigation and by the expression of honest conclusions. He imagines that the Infinite is delighted with credulity, with belief without evidence, faith without question.

Man has but little reason at best; but this little should be used. No matter how small the taper is, how feeble the ray of light it casts, it is better than darkness, and no man should be rewarded for extinguishing the light he has.

We know now, if we know anything, that man in this, the nineteenth century, is better capable of judging as to the happening of any event than he ever was before. We know that the standard is higher to-day—we know that the intellectual light is greater—we know that the human mind is better equipped to deal with all questions of human interest, than at any other time within the known history of the human race.

It will not do to say that "our Lord and his apostles must at least be regarded as honest men." Let this be admitted and what does it prove? Honesty is not enough. Intelligence and honesty must go hand in hand. We may admit now that "our Lord and his apostles" were perfectly honest men; yet it does not follow that we have a truthful account of what they said and of what they did. It is not pretended that "our Lord" wrote anything, and it is not known that one of the apostles ever wrote a word. Consequently, the most that we can say is that somebody has written something about "our Lord and his apostles." Whether that somebody knew or did not know is unknown to us. As to whether what is written is true or false, we must judge by that which is written.

First of all, is it probable? is it within the experience of mankind? We should judge of the gospels as we judge of other histories, of other biographies. We know that many biographies written by perfectly honest men are not correct. We know, if we know anything, that honest men can be mistaken, and it is not necessary to believe everything that a man writes because we believe he was honest. Dishonest men may write the truth.

At last the standard or criterion is for each man to judge according to what he believes to be human experience. We are satisfied that nothing more wonderful has happened than is now happening. We believe that the present is as wonderful as the past, and just as miraculous as the future. If we are to believe in the truth of the Old Testament, the word evidence loses its meaning: there ceases to be any standard of probability, and the mind simply accepts or denies without reason.

We are told that certain miracles were performed for the purpose of attesting the mission and character of Christ. How can these miracles be verified? The miracles of the middle ages rest upon substantially the same evidence. The same may be said of the wonders of all countries and of all ages. How is it a virtue to deny the miracles of Mohammed and to believe those attributed to Christ?

You may say of St. Augustine that what he said was true or false. We know that much of it was false; and yet we are not justified in saying that he was dishonest. Thousands of errors have been propagated by honest men. As a rule, mistakes get their wings from honest people. The testimony of a witness to the happening of the impossible gets no weight from the honesty of the witness. The fact that falsehoods are in the New Testament does not tend to prove that the writers were knowingly untruthful. No man can be honest enough to substantiate, to the satisfaction of reasonable men, the happening of a miracle.

For this reason it makes not the slightest difference whether the writers of the New Testament were honest or not. Their character is not involved. Whenever a man rises above his contemporaries, whenever he excites the wonder of his fellows, his biographers always endeavor to bridge over the chasm between the people and this man, and for that purpose attribute to him the qualities which in the eyes of the multitude are desirable.

Miracles are demanded by savages, and, consequently, the savage biographer attributes miracles to his hero. What would we think now of a man who, in writing the life of Charles Darwin, should attribute to him supernatural powers? What would we say of an admirer of Humboldt who should claim that the great German could cast out devils? We would feel that Darwin and Humboldt had been belittled; that the biographies were written for children, and by men who had not outgrown the nursery.

If the reputation of "our Lord" is to be preserved—if he is to stand with the great and splendid of the earth—if he is to continue a constellation in the intellectual heavens, all claim to the miraculous, to the supernatural, must be abandoned.

No one can over-estimate the evils that have been endured by the human race by reason of a departure from the standard of the natural. The world has been governed by jugglery, by sleight of hand. Miracles, wonders, tricks have been regarded as of far greater importance than the steady, the sublime and unbroken march of cause and effect. The improbable has been established by the impossible. Falsehood has furnished the foundation for faith.

Is the human body at present the residence of evil spirits, or have these imps of darkness vanished from the world? Where are they? If the New Testament establishes anything, it is the existence of innumerable devils, and that these satanic beings absolutely took possession of the human mind. Is this true? Can anything be more absurd? Does any intellectual man who has examined the question believe that depraved demons live in the bodies of men? Do they occupy space? Do they live upon some kind of food? Of what shape are they? Could they be classified by a naturalist? Do they run, or float, or fly? If to deny the existence of these supposed beings is to be an Infidel, how can the word Infidel "carry an unpleasant significance?"

Of course it is the business of the principals of most colleges, as well as of bishops, cardinals, popes, priests, and clergymen, to insist upon the existence of evil spirits. All these gentlemen are employed to counteract the influence of these supposed demons. Why should they take the bread out of their own mouths? Is it to be expected that they will unfrock themselves?

The church, like any other corporation, has the instinct of self-preservation. It will defend itself; it will fight as long as it has the power to change a hand into a fist.

The Agnostic takes the ground that human experience is the basis of morality. Consequently, it is of no importance who wrote the gospels, or who vouched or vouches for the genuineness of the miracles. In his scheme of life these things are utterly unimportant. He is satisfied that "the miraculous" is the impossible. He knows that the witnesses were wholly incapable of examining the questions involved, that credulity had possession of their minds, that "the miraculous" was expected, that it was their daily food.

All this is very clearly and delightfully stated by Professor Huxley, and it hardly seems possible that any intelligent man can read what he says without feeling that the foundation of all superstition has been weakened. The article is as remarkable for its candor as for its clearness. Nothing is avoided—everything is met. No excuses are given. He has left all apologies for the other side. When you have finished what Professor Huxley has written, you feel that your mind has been in actual contact with the mind of another, that nothing has been concealed; and not only so, but you feel that this mind is not only willing, but anxious, to know the actual truth.

To me, the highest uses of philosophy are, first, to free the mind of fear, and second, to avert all the evil that can be averted, through intelligence—that is to say, through a knowledge of the conditions of well-being.

We are satisfied that the absolute is beyond our vision, beneath our touch, above our reach. We are now convinced that we can deal only with phenomena, with relations, with appearances, with things that impress the senses, that can be reached by reason, by the exercise of our faculties. We are satisfied that the reasonable road is "the straight road," the only "sacred way."

Of course there is faith in the world—faith in this world—and always will be, unless superstition succeeds in every land. But the faith of the wise man is based upon facts. His faith is a reasonable conclusion drawn from the known. He has faith in the progress of the race, in the triumph of intelligence, in the coming sovereignty of science. He has faith in the development of the brain, in the gradual enlightenment of the mind. And so he works for the accomplishment of great ends, having faith in the final victory of the race.

He has honesty enough to say that he does not know. He perceives and admits that the mind has limitations. He doubts the so-called wisdom of the past. He looks for evidence, and he endeavors to keep his mind free from prejudice. He believes in the manly virtues, in the judicial spirit, and in his obligation to tell his honest thoughts.

It is useless to talk about a destruction of consolations. That which is suspected to be untrue loses its power to console. A man should be brave enough to bear the truth.

Professor Huxley has stated with great clearness the attitude of the Agnostic. It seems that he is somewhat severe on the Positive Philosophy. While it is hard to see the propriety of worshipping Humanity, as a being, it is easy to understand the splendid dream of Auguste Comte. Is the human race worthy to be worshiped by itself—that is to say, should the individual worship himself? Certainly the religion of humanity is better than the religion of the inhuman. The Positive Philosophy is better far than Catholicism. It does not fill the heavens with monsters, nor the future with pain.

It may be said that Luther and Comte endeavored to re-form the Catholic church. Both were mistaken, because the only reformation of which that church is capable is destruction. It is a mass of superstition.

The mission of Positivism is, in the language of its founder, "to generalize science and to systematize sociality." It seems to me that Comte stated with great force and with absolute truth the three phases of intellectual evolution or progress.

First.—"In the supernatural phase the mind seeks causes—aspire to know the essence of things, and the How and Why of their operation. In this phase, all facts are regarded as the productions of supernatural agents, and unusual phenomena are interpreted as the signs of the pleasure or displeasure of some god."

Here at this point is the orthodox world of to-day. The church still imagines that phenomena should be interpreted as the signs of the pleasure or displeasure of God. Nearly every history is deformed with this childish and barbaric view.

Second.—"The next phase or modification, according to Comte, is the metaphysical. The supernatural agents are dispensed with, and in their places we find abstract forces or entities supposed to inhere in substances and capable of engendering phenomena."

In this phase people talk about laws and principles as though laws and principles were forces capable of producing phenomena.

Third.—"The last stage is the Positive. The mind, convinced of the futility of all inquiry into causes and essences, restricts itself to the observation and classification of phenomena, and to the discovery of the invariable relations of succession and similitude—in a word, to the discovery of the relations of phenomena."

Why is not the Positive stage the point reached by the Agnostic? He has ceased to inquire into the origin of things. He has perceived the limitations of the mind. He is thoroughly convinced of the uselessness, and futility, and absurdity of theological methods, and restricts himself to the examination of phenomena, to their relations, to their effects, and endeavors to find in the complexity of things the true conditions of human happiness.

Although I am not a believer in the philosophy of Auguste Comte, I cannot shut my eyes to the value of his thought; neither is it possible for me not to applaud his candor, his intelligence, and the courage it required even to attempt to lay the foundation of the Positive Philosophy.

Professor Huxley and Frederic Harrison are splendid soldiers in the army of progress. They have attacked with signal success the sacred and solemn stupidities of superstition. Both have appealed to that which is highest and noblest in man. Both have been the destroyers of prejudice. Both have shed light, and both have won great victories on the fields of intellectual conflict. They cannot afford to waste time in attacking each other.

After all, the Agnostic and the Positivist have the same end in view—both believe in living for this world.

The theologians, finding themselves unable to answer the arguments that have been urged, resort to the old subterfuge—to the old cry that Agnosticism takes something of value from the life of man. Does the Agnostic take any consolation from the world? Does he blot out, or dim, one star in the heaven of hope? Can there be anything more consoling than to feel, to know, that Jehovah is not God—that the message of the Old Testament is not from the Infinite?

Is it not enough to fill the brain with a happiness unspeakable to know that the words, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire," will never be spoken to one of the children of men?

Is it a small thing to lift from the shoulders of industry the burdens of superstition? Is it a little thing to drive the monster of fear from the hearts of men? ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

LET THE EAGLE SCREAM.

The following is Governor Waterman's proclamation concerning April 30. The religious cant which disfigures President Harrison's utterance on the same subject is conspicuous by its absence in this model document:

SACRAMENTO, March 30, 1889.

To all whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas, on April 30, 1789, the first president of the United States, George Washington, was inaugurated in the city of New York, this date, as the formal beginning of the present government of this country, marks a period in the history of the government of the people by and for themselves; and as such it is appropriate that the centenary anniversary of this date be observed by the people of this state.

Now, therefore, I, R. W. Waterman, governor of the state of California, by virtue of the authority conferred upon me by the constitution and laws of this state, do hereby declare Tuesday, April 30, 1889, the centennial of the foundation of the constitutional government of the United States and the inauguration of President Washington, a legal holiday, and request that each citizen within the confines of this state refrain from pursuing his usual vocation and so observe the day that he may the better appreciate the blessings and glory of American citizenship.

Given under my hand and seal on the day above written.

R. W. WATERMAN, Governor.

AN INFIDEL'S VIEWS ON MOODY AND JONES.

From the Daily San Diegan, April 8.

Samuel P. Putnam, the Freethought advocate, spoke to a large audience yesterday afternoon at Lafayette hall, and the frequent applause which greeted his remarks attested the presence of many who were in sympathy with the speaker's views. He reviewed the evangelists Dwight L. Moody and Sam Jones, and their methods, as follows:

The success of Moody and Sam Jones is somewhat marvelous. They indicate a profound disintegration and change in Christianity. They are novelties in religion, and novelties are in demand to-day in religion as well as in art and literature. The people want something new, and even orthodoxy itself has been obliged to change front. It has come down from its former solemn and imposing position, and has put on a common business suit—and, in the case of Sam Jones, the cap and bells of the clown. Moody and Sam Jones are indications of progress in this sense—they indicate that Christianity as a part of human thought, of intellectual doctrine, is going to the wall. It depends no more upon reason. Science has declared against it. It must succeed now by a play of sentiment—by music and the paraphernalia of popular assemblies. It must become a circus in order to attract attention. The churches are empty, theology is at a discount, Calvinism is put upon the shelf. The gospel of Jesus to-day runs to the show house. It quits the cathedral and the altar and revels in the pomp and circumstance of theatrical sensationalism.

Sam Jones two hundred years ago would have been burned by the Puritan fathers as a heretic. His quips and cranks would have been his death sentence at the court of Cotton Mather. The descendants of the Puritans now welcome him as a bright and shining light, and in the cracking of his jokes they see the divinest fire of the gospel. This shows that the heart of Christianity is dead—that it has become a farce—and its triumph now depends not upon the glory of its message, but upon shrewd business management. Christianity is at present conducted like any other show. It is money, it is advertisement, it is display bills, the bulletin board, the drum and fife, the cornet, the chorus, that now give it prestige.

Moody abhors a process of reasoning. He will have nothing to do with argument. If one wants to ask questions he must stay away from his meetings. There is no inquiry unless one first of all absolutely believes in Jesus. It is a sin to disbelieve. Only a bad heart rejects the Bible. One must take it all, bitter and sweet alike.

"Down upon your knees—accept Jesus," is the ultimatum of Moody and Sam Jones. To follow Jesus is the supreme virtue—and yet, do they follow Jesus? Jesus says, "Take no purse or scrip," but Moody and Jones take $1,000 per week. Jesus says, "Blessed be ye poor," but Moody and Jones do nothing without pay. Jesus says, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth," but Moody and Sam Jones own houses and lands. Jesus says, "The Son of man has not where to lay his head," but Moody and Sam Jones put up at the best hotels. What a contrast between the evangelist of to-day and the evangelist of eighteen hundred years ago.

Believe or be damned is the cry. Believe what? Believe that all mankind are totally depraved? That sin and death came into the world by the act of one man? That through him, and not by any act of their own, millions of the human race are eternally condemned? That there is no salvation by right doing, but only by the blood of Jesus? That honesty and charity avail nothing without a surrender of reason? That God treats all men as if they were but vessels of clay, to be moulded into honor or dishonor according to his arbitrary will?

One must believe that this God is so vacillating that it repented him that he had made man, and so he drowned the whole human race, save eight souls only; that this God is so infinitely angry that he must kill his own son in order to forgive the best man that ever lived; and if this best man should happen to have an honest doubt he cannot be forgiven on any terms; that the countless generations of men who have never heard of this plan of salvation must suffer everlasting perdition; that so long as heaven stands the fires of hell will burn; that heaven itself will be only a mere spark in the midst of infinite horrors; for strait is the road and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it; and finally one must believe that the inhabitants of heaven will be so stripped of human affection, of love and tenderness, that they can look upon the endless sufferings of those who are dearest to them here—father and mother, brother and sister, wife and child—and turn from that awful view and thank God for saving them while damning others.

Moody says that men disbelieve the Bible because they want to steal. But the Bible says: "The cattle and the spoils of that city Israel took for a prey unto themselves, according unto the word of the Lord which he commanded unto Joshua" (Joshua viii, 27).

The Bible of to-day is practically but three hundred years old. Before that time there was no general agreement as to the canon of scripture. The early Christian churches and Christian fathers differed in their collections of the sacred writings. Martin Luther rejected five of the books of the present Bible. He said that Esther was full of "heathen naughtiness;" that the epistle of James was "an epistle of straw;" that Hebrews was not written by Paul or any apostle, and had no apostolic authority, and that the book of Revelations was almost bad enough to be thrown into the river Elbe.

This same Bible says—Jesus says—"These signs shall follow them that believe: In my name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents, and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them. They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover (Mark xvi, 15-18).

Do these signs follow Moody and Sam Jones? Do they cast out devils? Do they drink poison and not be hurt? Will they take up the rattle snake? Do they cure the sick? If not, they cannot be true believers, or else Jesus told a lie.

To believe the Bible, as Moody believes it, is childish folly. It is to believe that this world was made in six days of twenty-four hours each; that the sun rolls round the earth; that woman was made out of the rib of man; that God showed his back sides to Moses; that Jonah lived in the whale's belly, as if it had first-class hotel accommodations; that David was a man after God's own heart, and yet was guilty of adultery and murder; that Jesus, although miraculously born, was the son of David.

Sam Jones says that love cannot save. This is because the one who loves is weak and limited. But God is all-powerful, he is infinite, he can make his love victorious. Therefore, if he loves all, he can make all happy; he can put out the fires of hell; he can make the mean man a good man. If the love of God penetrates to hell, then hell will be changed into heaven. The God of the Bible says: "I make peace and I create evil." Is God the author of evil? Does he make all the suffering in the world, the crime, the agony, the injustice? If so, is he worthy of worship? Is God weak and partial like man? Is he like the heathen's idol—a wooden god—and can do nothing? Is he only able to sit on a great white throne and be worshiped, while the tide of wrong prevails, and he lifts no hand against it? If God is all-loving and all-powerful, he must make a perfectly happy world.

What is the Deity? It is a being whose power is equal to his will. If the power of man were equal to his will, man would be a God. If the power of God is not equal to his will, he ceases to be God, he is a limited being. If there is an infinite love in the universe, there must be, as a result, infinite beauty, infinite heaven. If there is an eternal hell, it is because the evil is as powerful as the good, and the devil is the equal of God—or else God and the devil are copartners.

I do not object to a belief in God. But if one believes in God, let him believe in a glorious God, a beautiful God, who is not satisfied with mere worship while there is any suffering or wrong in the universe; who will not rest one day in seven or any day while there is any shadow in the brightness of heaven. Believe in a God who delights in perfection, beauty, joy, the triumph of the good in every star, in every world.

One can worship only perfection. A perfect God is perfect power, perfect wisdom, and perfect goodness, and a perfect God can only make a perfect world. If the world is imperfect, if there is evil and suffering in it, then God is either imperfect and so no God at all, or out of imperfection he will make perfection, and all evil shall bloom to good, and discords shall flow to streams of unclouded harmony. If we believe anything let us believe that which is noble, inspiring; that which makes hope and joy. If one must have a religion, let it be a religion of happiness and progress, not of terror and despair.

The Rev. Sam. Jones says: "I would rather be the worst criminal in this land than an open, avowed Infidel."

Is "open, avowed Infidelity" any worse than concealed Infidelity? Is it the avowal that constitutes the crime, the expression of an honest opinion? Is the Infidel innocent so long as he keeps silent or plays the hypocrite? Is Sam Jones willing one should be an Infidel if he won't say anything about it? Is he careless of one's opinion so long as he contributes to the finances of the church? It is not criminal to disbelieve, but it is criminal to say one disbelieves. It is the "open, avowed" Infidel that Jones considers so bad; that is, the honest Infidel, the brave Infidel, the Infidel with the courage of his opinions. The coward Infidel, the weak-kneed Infidel, the indifferent Infidel, is not the particular detestation of Sam Jones, but the open, avowed Infidel, who dares to stand in a minority of one; who, in obedience to his own conscience, declares the truth as he understands it. Sam Jones says he would rather be a murderer, a robber, a ravisher, than an honest, brave, and independent thinker. He had rather be a criminal than Thomas Paine, whose genius first set the stars of glory in the flag of the American republic; than Thomas Jefferson, who penned the Declaration of Independence; than Humboldt, who revealed the splendor of the cosmos; than Darwin, who has revolutionized modern thought; than Huxley, the laureled teacher of science; than Iggersoll, whose words of fire have given hope and joy to millions, and wreathed the darkness of the grave with the noblest flowers of sympathy. Sam Jones had rather be a criminal than these illustrious thinkers, of whom the civilized race is justly proud.

Infidelity is not afraid of any comparison with Christianity, either in spirit or in result. Infidelity is the moral and intellectual baptism of the world. Infidelity is analysis, judgment, and selection. It takes out of Christianity, out of all religions, all Bibles, and all churches, everything that is good. It accepts whatever is conducive to man's happiness. It rejects no truth and no fact.

Religion is not the basis of goodness, but a sound temperament and a benign education are. People are good, not as Christians, as Jews, as Pagans, but as men and women, obeying natural laws and living for humanity's sake. I honor the genuine virtues of the Christians, but those virtues are not the product of Christianity, and the good Christian would be just as good if he had never professed religion or joined the church.

The Christian is good for the same reason that the Infidel is good—because it is natural to be good, because it is wise to be good, because it is daily happiness to be good, because one had rather be good than evil, as the flower had rather bloom than fade away, as the wave had rather sparkle in the sun than roll in darkness. People are good because it is beautiful to be good, joyous to be good, healthful to be good.

Hell never yet made a moral man; nor heaven either; but simple, honest, earnest, downright humanity.

The record of Christianity on the temperance question may be seen in the following bill of expenses, incurred at the ordination of a pastor in 1784. It may be found in the Rev. W. H. Daniel's history of "The Temperance Reform."

Christianity is simply the creature of circumstances. It is the reflection of its age. It is good or bad according to its surroundings. It has no innate force. It is nothing but fashion and style—and Moody and Jones are only the style, like bangs and corsets. They are mere "forms" of Christianity, but not new forces. They are a kind of "transformation scene" in the drama of its decay.

Christianity looks to the past—its whole gospel. It has nothing for the future.

Freethought is for the future. Every virtue of the past it accepts, but it believes in eternal struggle and eternal progress. Every gain is but a step to something nobler. Freethought is as comprehensive as the universe. It accepts no limits. Liberty, science, and humanity are its glorious watchwords. In the search after truth it finds unceasing inspiration. To translate truth into life is its constant goal. It would cultivate every virtue, it would enrich every faculty. It believes that that is sacred which ministers to humanity, which makes this world better and happier. It would make a heaven here on earth. It insists upon personal responsibility, and that every man shall do his duty. It stands for equal rights and impartial liberty. It believes in the brotherhood of man. It maintains the dignity of labor—that all should work—for in work is the sovereignty of life. It would lend the helping hand. It would establish justice rather than charity, for with justice there would be no need of charity. It believes in the home, in the family, in fraternity, in co-operation. It believes in good health and cleanliness rather than godliness. It declares that the humblest should have a share in the golden harvest of the race; that poverty is a curse; that the poor are not blessed, and therefore it strives to abolish poverty.

Christianity looks to the moon, which has lighted up some little night of time, but Freethought looks to the glittering sun, and to the broad and boundless day of unending advancement.

THE EVENING SERVICES.

In the evening Lafayette Hall was again crowded by an enthusiastic audience, waiting the appearance of Mr. Putnam. Miss Addie Dick presided at the piano and rendered some fine music in the interim. The singing was exceptionally good, with Randolph Worthing as leader, and Mrs. Lottie Low, Miss Dick, Wm. O'Farrell, and Dr. Gorham, as singers. Mrs. Low has a magnificent and well-trained voice.

Mr. Putnam was in a most happy mood. He first announced that his object was not to tear down and destroy churches, but to defend the cause of Liberalism against the false charges made against it by certain representative ministers. He held the closest attention of the audience to the close.

LITERARY NOTES.

R. STALEY, corner of Wood street and Fourth avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa., publishes and sells at ten cents per copy "The Drama of the Nineteenth Century" by Voltairine de Cleyre.

No. 4 of the Modern Science Essayist, published by the New Ideal, Boston, is the "Evolution of the Earth," by Lewis G. Janes. It is a scholarly and clear exposition of the subject.

MR. M. E. TAYLOR, of Fort Calhoun, Neb., presents FREETHOUGHT with two small pamphlets. One is called "Reflective Musings; or, The Picture of Humanity as Reflected in the Mirror of the Ages;" the other, "The World is Growing Better," the latter being a poetic essay. The works sell for ten cents each.

AN attractive pamphlet has reached us containing the oral debate between Colonel Ingersoll, the Honorable Frederic Coudert, and Ex-Governor Stewart L. Woodford, of New York. This debate has already become famous, and its preservation in pamphlet form adds another to the many good deeds which the Truth Seeker Company is constantly performing. Ten cents.

ROBERT C. ADAMS'S "Pioneer Pith" is a book of one less than a hundred pages, but it contains more of value than the Bible from Genesis to Revelations, and more than numerous other books of many times its size. It is the author's aim to condense the main facts of Rationalism into a small compass, and he has succeeded within the limits of twenty brief chapters. Captain Adams has previously distinguished himself as a writer on Free-thought subjects, and the present pamphlet does not detract from his reputation. (Published by the Truth Seeker Company. Price 25 cents).

MONEY talks, and Mr. Israel W. Groh offers a reward of $5000 to the person or persons who will make it possible for excursionists to visit the Garden of Eden and identify the spot by the description given in the second chapter of Geneses. Mr. Groh embodies the above offer in a ten-cent pamphlet published by the Truth Seeker Company entitled "Did Man Fall?" The author's remarks upon the general subject are pertinent and interesting.

We have previously noticed the "Profession of Faith of a Savoyard Vicar," by Jean Jacques Rousseau, published by Peter Eckler. The argument is Deistical but non-sectarian, though the writer involves himself at times in such a manner that his only way of escape from the logical conclusion that should follow his own premises is to quit the subject or refer to the inscrutable ways of providence. Many Notes of value are made by the editor. The price of the pamphlet is 25 cents in paper, and 50 cents in cloth.

"A VOICE crying in the wilderness" is what Mr. Frederick Gerhard calls his book, the title of which is "The Coming Creed of the World." Mr. Gerhard clings to the belief that religion and science harmonize in some inscrutable way, but that a faith "more sublime and blissful" than Christianity is to be found and adopted by the race. The book is published in very cheap form, for though it contains upwards of 500 pages the price is only $1.25. Persons desiring copies should address Frederick Gerhard, Hoboken, N. J.

Professor Seymour on the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

As our friend and comrade for the last month, Mr. Acker, had to leave us at Angel's Camp, I engaged a livery rig to take us over to San Andreas, the seat of Calaveras county, where we arrived in time for a late dinner. I engaged Homes's Hall for a course of four lectures. San Andreas is an old mining town like all the rest in this part of the country; the streets only 20 to 25 feet wide and very crooked and poorly kept. There seems to be very little business here except gambling and whisky drinking. There is no mining here at present and the rust of ages seem to be accumulating over this little hamlet. I gave in San Andreas four lectures to rather small audiences, but Freethought seed was scattered that will no doubt bring forth an abundant crop in the future. One evening, while lecturing, we were badly disturbed by a hoodlum element in the audience, which we reprimanded in no light manner, when about a dozen "smart Alecks" ran out doors, making all the noise they could, and when out, pelted the house with rocks and gravel. The people of the town, both in and out of the house, took it as a matter of course and did not seem to dream that such hoodlumism was a shame and disgrace to the town. The owner of the hall told me there was hardly a whole window in the building and that everything that came along was served in about the same manner, stoned out of town, but I gave my regular course notwithstanding. The devil is certainly loose in San Andreas—if not for a thousand years, at least for a holiday. I think a small orthodox hell, red hot, is needed here to scare this wild element down a little, and help the city government. I met some very pleasant people here. Messrs. Getchel and Severy, editors of the Calaveras Prospect, are gentlemen with big heads and level, full of fine quality of brains and good sense. They are doing a good work, and are helping the town much by their energy, morality, and temperance.

They deprecated very much the disgraceful hoodlumism of the town. I found them both Freethinkers and grand-hearted fellows generally. They are making their paper a power in the county and really have more brains than most of the rest of the people put together. Mr. Homes, our landlord, is also a broad-gauged Liberal who says just what he thinks—without fear of God, man, or the devil. He knows how to keep a good hotel, tell a good story, bluff off tramps, turn a nimble sixpence, and expects when he dies that will be the end of him, and don't care if it is. There is no orthodox foolishness about him. He is an old fortyniner and is here to stay. San Andreas is very prettily located in a little valley and the hills and mountains all around are "just lovely."

"The babbling brook, the nodding flowers,
The lowing herds, and sunset hours"

Paint nature in all her beauty. The people seem to have forgotten that another era has dawned, that it is '89 instead of '49; that the world has gone ahead while they have slept a Rip Van Winkle sleep, and thus been left far behind in growth and education. They need a moral earthquake to arouse them from their lethargy or to bury them up entirely, while a new generation takes their place.

How to Cook a Revival.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The Evangelical Alliance has just closed a three week's attempt at a revival, but failed to revive for reasons I shall endeavor to explain. A friend and I took it upon ourselves to cook that revival, as I have done before, by putting on our most sanctimonious look, going to church, walking forward, and taking a front seat; listening to the preacher with the most marked attention, and both eyes, as it were, riveted upon his, and at the same time thinking, "What lies, what lies!" which is not hard to do by any intelligent woman or man. By so doing we break that magnetic influence which some men possess so powerfully, and as a result there is no excitement; and revivals without excitement amount to naught. There were seven preachers here, and they preached, prayed, exhorted, threatened with hell in its worst form, and went through the audience, pulling and hauling, but all to no avail. One of them came to me one night with the most heavenly smile and inquired,

"Are you a Christian?"

"No, sir."

"Have you a desire to be?"

"No, sir."

"Do you not want to make peace with God?"

"I never had any racket with him, and have nothing to make peace about to the best of my knowledge."

With that he left me, saying he was not here to argue.

I almost failed to remark that the heavenly smile had changed to one of the blackest faces it has ever been my misfortune to see. I think a great amount of good might be done by Freethinkers by looking after the revivals in their localities.

Shall Women Vote?

To the Editors of Freethought:

In your late issue, I noticed a very curious article on "Woman Suffrage" by W. S. Bush. I have no desire to "dictate to another, how he shall think." I do propose, however, to resist the abstract notions, the visionary schemes and sumptuary innovations, which have ever been the prolific source of political and domestic troubles. I will only refer the writer of the article referred to (who is presumably a Prohibitionist) to the declarations of principles and the woman suffrage planks contained in all the late Prohibition platforms, both state and national.

In another number of your paper (March 16) this same writer says:

"However women may have voted heretofore, or may vote hereafter, I am in favor of giving them equal political rights with men."

I am unable to understand why some people calling themselves "Infidels and Liberals" should favor a deliberate and openly acknowledged priestcraft movement—a scheme avowedly for the purpose of placing our government in the hands of the clergy and the churches—a scheme so palpably fatal to the religious liberties and personal freedom which they now enjoy, and for which they profess to be so strenuously contending.

A lady correspondent of FREETHOUGHT, in the same issue (March 16), makes the following very sensible remark: "When a national Sunday law is passed, America is doomed."

Well, "E. E. D." may rest assured that when women are enfranchised a national Sunday law will be passed, and whatever other laws may be needed for the establishment and maintenance of churches, and to compel absolute submission to church authority.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street.

Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

LIVE NOBLY.

No. 194, COSMIAN HYMN BOOK.
Tune, "There is a Happy Land."

1. While on this earth ye stay
Oh, nobly live;
Strive ye from day to day,
Some joy to give;
Some hopeful word to speak,
Fresh strength to give the weak,
By constant effort seek Nobly to live.
2. Turn ye with generous heart.
To those who need;
Eager to sow some part
Of life's good seed.
Forego mere selfish gains;
Think ye of others' claims;
Make e'en your simplest aims.
Noble indeed.
3. Listen to conscience voice,
Thy surest guide;
Its teachings make thy choice,
By them abide;
Walk ye with earnest feet
Holding all duty meet;
So shall contentment sweet
Walk by thy side.
4. And when the end draws near,—
The dreamless rest,
All labor finished here,
Ended all quest,
Calmly turn ye to sleep
Though loving hearts shall weep;
Immortal they shall keep Thy noblest, best.

He Was Lacking in Faith.

A lady who was a firm believer in the cure of everything by the mind, or, rather, the non-existence of all pains and maladies, has a little boy who complained of a terrible toothache. She took him to a scientist to be cured, and remarked to that lady as soon as she had entered the room:

"My boy thinks he has a terrible toothache, Mrs. Scientist, and I have brought him to you to be cured of it."

Having brought her attention to the case, Mrs. Scientist said:

"Now, my little boy, you must look me right in the eye. (A pause.) Now you haven't any toothache."

"Yes, I have, too!" shouted the boy.
The scientist smiled patiently, and tried it over again.

"You must look me right in the eyes and try to forget your toothache," said she. (Then there was another steadfast pause.)

"Ah, now you haven't any toothache."

"Yes, I have, too," screamed the boy again.

The practitioner went through the process once more with fresh persuasion. The boy seemed inclined to be quiet this time.

"Well, I guess you haven't any toothache now, my boy," said she.

"You lie," said the boy, quietly.

He was taken away, toothache and all.—Boston Transcript.

In the letter of an ex-school teacher who is now traveling in Europe I read one of the most remarkable arguments on record. The lady is a staunch Presbyterian and, of course, would yield no letter of the law even for the sights of Continental Europe. On account of much rain the stay of the little party at Pompeii was limited and, most unfortunately, included Sunday. The lady in question of course could not think of such a thing as walking out and seeing the sights on Sunday. But the close Proximity of the ancient city was an undoubtedly an awful temptation. But she finally argued that Pompeii is only a grave-yard, after all, and so she could take her walk, and not break the letter of the law. But the surprising thing about it is that one with such artfulness should unite such candor as shown in the confession.—Minneapolis Tribune.

The old-time rush light was even dimmer than parlor gas. Still, the young men of those days were well satisfied with it, and didn't call early to avoid the rush.—Terre Haute Express.

The Singing Sands.

When down the length of Athabaska's lake
The north wind sweeps,
The brown shore-shallows into singing break,
A voice of music rises from the deeps.
It is the singing sands—the pebbled keys
That from their caves
Respond in faint and haunting melodies
To the long touches of the fingering waves.
Elf-tones that waken only when the wind
Blows from the north;
No sea breeze cool, no zephyr sweet as Ind,
No breath of plain or hill can draw them forth.
Thus life has singing sands that only sound
To the cold wind of pain;
Sweet airs of joy and peace in fragrant round,
Search for the secret of the voice in vain.
But when the north wind blows and high the seas
Of suffering roll,
From the deep waters come the melodies—
The sands of patience singing in the soul.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - APRIL 27, 1889.

THE California Christian Advocate is authority for the statement "that at some church socials in this state wine is used by young men and women until they are too drunk to walk home."

IN June next we may expect a visit from the Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, secretary of the American Sunday Union, who will lecture and labor in the interest of that association. Mr. Crafts will get a respectful hearing, but, judging from the record of our last legislature, there is in California a strong feeling against restrictive Sunday measures.

OUR too-good-to-live postmaster-general, Brother Wanamaker, gives country postmasters to understand, by means of a circular, that they will "find it profitable" to represent the Philadelphia dry-goods house of Wanamaker & Brown among the people of their vicinage. Postmasters whose term of office is about to expire may cast an anchor to windward by heeding the warning and rustling for customers.

IT is gratifying to be able to say that not all the members of the San Francisco Pioneer Association are in favor of excluding the Freethought Society from the hall built with the money of James Lick. Some have even said that were the matter left to them they would rent the hall to this society for the mere cost of gas and janitor. In our opinion the body of James Lick would not turn in its grave if the hall were offered free of any charge whatsoever.

AT the Congregational Club last Monday Rev. Dr. Pond read a paper on "Retribution a Law of Nature," which aroused strong opposition on the part of a portion of the members. He argued that the divine retribution was not special and supernatural, but, in each and every case, the outworkings of a natural law of cause and effect. Professor Dwinell, of the Pacific Theological Seminary, opposed the speaker, and said that natural law was not all. The personal element in retribution must not be ignored, as the result would be to rule God out of the universe. The Rev. Joseph Rowell remarked that Mr. Pond's was the exact line of argument employed by Atheists and Infidels—exalting the reign of law and ignoring a personal God who loves and hates. There was no place for the doctrine of blood atonement in that scheme.

For one, he was sick and disgusted with the tendency of the age to exalt natural law at the expense of a personal God. Other speakers supported the view of Mr. Rowell, as it is quite natural and necessary that they should do, the question whether this universe is governed by a law or by a will involving nearly the whole difference between rationalism and theology.

THE Rev. W. H. Thomas, the most popular preacher in Chicago, comes as near Agnosticism as any clergyman ought to and retain his pulpit. In a recent sermon he said: "I question whether or not it is possible for man and the human intellect ever to stand without the possibility of a doubt with reference to God. I never saw an argument tending to prove the existence of God that did not need another argument to uphold the first. Reason tries to show God and fails. It is the heart that perceives God, but doubt will ever remain on the part of the understanding." This is exactly equivalent to saying that there is no evidence at all for the existence of God, because the seat of all perception is the brain, and the heart can no more perceive God than the liver can perceive Satan.

SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of this society will be held in Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, above Powell, at 8 o'clock Sunday evening, April 28. An address will be delivered by Professor Herbert Miller. All are invited.

NEWS AND NOTES.

SANTA ANA AND ANAHEIM.—Here, they say, is the garden of the world, and when one looks over the shining landscape, glittering with all variety of color and splendor of foliage, where the warm air is tempered with soft ocean gales, where the snowy mountains frame the expansive prospect, one might think this were Paradise indeed, and need go no further to find the fountains of immortal youth. If one could live forever, here certainly is the golden opportunity, where sky and earth blend in loveliest pictures, and the blood keeps responsive rhythm to the music in the air.

I come again to the hospitable home of D. Edson Smith, where oranges star the dark green grove, and orchards hang thick with blossoms, and the hundred hens wander amid the white and crimson and yellow flowers. All is delightful, only amid the changing light floats the shadow of death's mystic change. The fair spirit of love and generosity, the devoted wife, is gone over the dark stream, which in the eyes of hope gleams to shores of infinite beauty. My friend Edson is confident of the immortal glory, but the glory is present here in memory's entrancing thought. Life is rich for what has been, and what may be is ever woven with the silver threads of love.

I pass delightful days in this sunny, fruit-embowered home, where the treasures of books are about, and where the mind has exultant communion. My friend is ever busy, and nature gives him her secrets without stint, and he seems to know her intricate ways by heart. He has become a constant correspondent of the Rural Californian, and if one wants to get useful hints and information about farming and gardening in this country they will find them in his suggestive articles. He is still earnest in the Liberal cause, and time and sorrow give to life a deeper meaning, but not less courage and enthusiasm.

Comrade H. A. Newman is just the one for the frontier line. He has plenty of good cheer and go-ahead, and with such invigorating allies one can keep up the fight always, and if there should happen to be difficulty and hard work we would have a jolly time around the camp-fires, and the stars would shine and the dawn would come with a heart for any fate.

Noah Smithwick is a noble octogenarian, and the flame of youth is in his blood. He can still march on, and "lend a hand." He has not the slightest idea of going upon the retired list.

D. M. Baker of the Santa Ana Standard finds no chains upon his editorial throne. He believes in the Demands of Liberalism, and purposes to express his honest conviction. His paper is open to the discussion of whatever interests humanity, and is a popular and wide-awake journal.

My friend H. Goepper takes things easy now after a life of successful labor. He is worthy of the fortune he has made by his pioneer experience. He is for Freethought always, and is ready for his share of the soldier's duty.

With these and other friends I found a joyous welcome, and the campaign went on with flying colors. The audiences were twice as large as when I was here before, and I received over fifty names for the Liberal Union. Our friends are quite encouraged at the manifest improvement. The Salvation Army made a prodigious effort to drown us out, and such a discord of drum and cornet and howling voice I have seldom heard. They came right in front of our hall on the street and poured out all their thunders, and it was difficult for my speech to be heard. Of course the Christians thought they had a right to disturb our meetings, but without doubt if it had been the other way they would have summoned the police officer. We bore the infliction with equanimity, and finally they subsided, and "silence became music" and we pursued the even tenor of our way. The same tactics were adopted on Sunday afternoon, but I rather think that by Sunday evening they had learned a little wisdom, for they were comparatively quiet.

The appreciative audiences that greeted me were an agreeable surprise. The best people of the place were present, and evidently Freethought is beginning to find its true place. It is recognized by the intelligent community as the coming gospel.

Many of our Liberal friends here are Spiritualists, but they are staunch co-workers for the Secular Republic, and the thought of immortality does not make them less alive to the fact that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." I expect that in "the Summer-land" justice and freedom will be the result of continual struggle.

Mrs. Florence E. Porter and Emil Goepper furnished some excellent music for the Sunday evening meeting, and perhaps this was the charm that disconcerted the onslaught of the Salvation Army. It was quite a contrast to their turbulent hymn, and the delightful strains smoothed the way for "Evolution and Creation." Garden Grove sent quite a delegation Sunday afternoon—Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Townsend, Mr. and Mrs. Walling, L. K. Mead, and others.

Mrs. Frances Shelley makes the pilgrim happy at her hospitable board, and while she rejoices in spiritual things she is not at all deficient in material things. The poetry of the one has quite a relation with the excellence of the other, and we return thanks not to the "Lord" but to the gentle hostess.

I must also remark that friend Edson's bachelor meal was exquisite. The cream was superb, and the "flapjacks" simply gorgeous—of the genuine Yankee flavor, and with cream and syrup made a breakfast fit for the gods, if the gods know enough to work for a living, and get up early in the morning.

Space does not permit me to mention all the good friends of Santa Ana and vicinity. They will make a staunch company in this thriving and beautiful place. Times are dull, but the city is improving. Elegant buildings are going up, and while the waves of the boom no longer fill the air with glistening colors, the solid business life rolls on, and Santa Ana has an assured future. It is in the midst of a rich and noble country; and wealth and enterprise are bound to find a home in this genial clime.

So amidst radiant hopes and radiant skies I leave this charming spot, and through glistening fields, where the rattling machinery cuts the green ranks in the soft and slumberous noon-time, I arrive at the orange-skirted domicile of L. and K. Parker, well-known to Liberals throughout the country for their ardent Freethought. They seem in youth's bright flush, and yet since I was here last they have had their golden wedding. Mrs. Parker is not afraid to say that she is sixty-nine years of age, and has been the mother of ten children. She can sit a queen indeed in the household, and her life's history goes blooming on to the sunny infancies of grandchildren. Mr. Parker is a vigorous campaigner, and has always been at the front. He used to walk five miles of a morning to his work, mow till sunset, and then walk back the five miles, and receive for his day's wages fifty cents. That was the beginning, and his beautiful and luxuriant farm is the reward of his own energy. He made it out of the cactus plain. He has, I reckon, about the best orange grove in California. It is in excellent condition and brilliant with fruitage. Its green and golden chambers have the wealth of a mine.

The churches are quite numerous in Anaheim, and don't want Freethought to have a chance, but the tide moves in spite of them. Our friends secured Music Hall, a new and elegant building recently completed, and here we held the fort for three days, and the meetings were fully attended and successful beyond the hopes of any. There has been a change for the better since I was here. My closing audience was three times as large as the same of last year. The Anaheim brass band discoursed alluring music in the moonlight in front of the hall, and thus added greatly to the attractiveness of our gathering. The audience increased right along, and the Liberal work has a recognition unknown before.

On Sunday afternoon there was a "conference meeting." Mrs. Parker was chairman, and she made it go off with music and eclat. She herself made an eloquent speech, detailing her own experience in the church and out of it. She began in the Methodist church on "probation," and her probation continues unto this day, for she has never applied for confirmation. Mr. I. H. Parker, of Orange, joined in with some reminiscences of how he was a "bad boy" and on that account had chosen to be a minister, but the leaven didn't work, and in due time he was bound out to be a carpenter. However, he became a member of the church. When a few years since he offered his resignation he was told that the church would not accept his resignation, but would expel him if he desired. He carried the case to conference, which directed his resignation to be accepted. This was the last straw, and he has bid good-bye to the old craft forever. Mr. Chas. Baker, of Orange, also made a good impromptu speech as to what Liberalism may be. His daughter, Miss Jessie Baker, gave a fine recitation, and Miss Trinna Parker, daughter of I. H. Parker, followed her with equal success. Miss Lottie, granddaughter of Mrs K. Parker, Mrs. Florence E. Porter, and Emil Goepper of Santa Ana, entertained with brilliant instrumental pieces, and so the afternoon meeting on Wednesday, which was a kind of experiment, was a fortunate experiment; and these gatherings will be continued in the future. There is plenty of musical and literary talent in Anaheim and Orange to make them interesting and profitable. Such meetings are of especial value to young people and should be encouraged wherever possible.

On Wednesday evening after the lecture there was a sociable and dance. A large number remained in orderly and joyous assemblage, and old and young joined in the mazy march. The ladies furnished coffee and cakes, and the band did itself credit as it poured forth its enlivening strains. At midnight sharp all went home to merry dreams.

Thus the camp-fires at Anaheim have been burning brightly; and the banners of Freethought have been "full high advanced," and I leave this garden-spot of the South with the golden dawn in its lustrous sky.

Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Bates are wide awake and earnest as ever, and it is a pleasure to meet such friends whom no fortune can make less devoted to the cause. Along the dusty highway of Secular work, mind and heart find happy rest in their embowered home, where the sunshine of life makes beautiful the shadow.

S. Littlefield is always in the midst of business, both for himself and for the public, being one of the chief officers of the county; but he took time to give me a jaunt over the prosperous country. He has nearly two hundred acres in orchards and vineyards and groves, and they appear in fine condition. His home is surrounded with tropical luxuriance, and presents a delightful picture of fruit and flower. Mr. Littlefield is a staunch supporter of Liberalism, and gives generous aid to the cause. He is one of the prominent citizens of Anaheim, and in the front in enterprises for its business and agricultural advancement.

T. A. Darling, station agent of the Southern Pacific, is not always able to attend the lectures, but he keeps the world moving just the same. He has established a railroad reading-room, and anything like that is in favor of Freethought and a better world. My friend E. A. Pullen shook out about the first panful of gold in California at Placerville, but he believes that the shining particles should be kept floating right on, and he has enjoyed life in so doing. But he keeps the gold of Freethought, and the heart is rich. N. Bittner, leader of the band, and all the band boys, have my hearty thanks for the good music they furnished.

I had a pleasant call upon T. H. Reiser, the proprietor of the hall, one of the old citizens of the place. The hall is one of the finest in the state and is quite an addition to the appearance of Anaheim. Mr. Reiser believes in making this world as near to paradise as possible. Miss Annie Hartman, his niece, was present at all the meetings, as were many other intelligent ladies, who though not exactly pronounced Freethinkers are like the author of "Robert Elsmere" in favor of the gospel of "sweetness and light."

Mrs. A. L. Tucker is mistress of about a thousand little chickens as "lovely as angels," and sometimes they become angels before they have a chance to get "into the soup." They die young, but those who survive are dainty contributors to man's happiness. When it comes to real life, a chicken is better than a cherub.

The Orange people came over in goodly numbers—Mr. Joel B. Parker and wife and daughters, Chas. Baker who came sixteen miles from the canon to stand by the colors, Miss Jessie Baker, I. H. Parker, and Miss Trinna Parker, Judge Smith, who danced on holy week, though a member, I believe, of the Episcopalian church, Miss Maud Strickland, M. A. Handy, Mr. Woodruff of the editorial fraternity, and others. Orange has quite a large element of Freethought, and I hope to be able to lecture there on my next trip.

Karl Fossek, Charles Pamperl, Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Bell, J. G. Shoemaker, R. Ludke, H. P. Larsen, John Meredith, W. M. McFadden, Alex Henry and family, John Turner, O. Warling, C. H. Turner, Peter Skorup, Louis Schorn, E. Barr, H. Hayward, Mr. and Mrs. Greeley, and others are among the generous friends of "lovely Anaheim," where nature's golden heart is beaming, where soft blue mountains answer to the shimmer of the flowing sea, and sea and mountain "knit the seasons four into one flowery band."

Santa Ana and Anaheim have lifted high the banners of Freethought, and have given a splendid impulse to heart and hope.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

CENTENNIAL COMMEMORATION.

The following recommendation has been issued by the officers of the American Secular Union:

To the members of the American Secular Union, and to all Liberals, Deists, Agnostics, and Free-minded Citizens of the United States.

The president of the United States, in response to the requests of "representatives of the religious creeds, both Christian and Hebrew," has recommended that on Tuesday, April 30, at nine o'clock in the morning, "the people of the entire country repair to their respective places of divine worship to implore the favor of God that the blessings of liberty, prosperity, and peace may abide with us all as a people." Arrangements are accordingly being made by church organizations of all creeds to meet at the appointed hour for prayer and thanksgiving, and, in the words of Cardinal Gibbons, "to pray that the spirit of patriotism which burned in George Washington may continue."

This is preeminently a proper occasion for those who do not classify themselves either as Christians or Hebrews, but who are Americans and lovers of their country, to testify their appreciation of the blessings of liberty, to express their gratitude to those brave, noble, and broad-minded statesmen who, without the trammels of church or creed, devoted their lives to the founding of the republic; to manifest patriotic devotion to "the foundations of liberty, law, and order" as laid down by the framers of our Constitution; and to reassert their purpose to contest in behalf of secular principles every attempt at invasion of that Constitution by the adoption of "the principles of the Christian religion," or its nullification by the enactment of unconstitutional laws for "the promotion of religious worship." While recognizing the glorious success of our first century we must cherish and continue the traditions of the revolutionary fathers who laid the basis of a purely secular republic, a government, in the words of George Washington, "not in any sense founded on the Christian religion;" nor can we safely ignore the dangers with which our future success in the enjoyment of a free government is threatened at the beginning of its second century.

We, officers of the American Secular Union, therefore, recommend the branch organizations, and others similarly minded, to meet at the appointed hour on April 30, to proclaim their allegiance to our secular, republican form of government, and to renew pledges for its maintenance.

R. B. WESTBROOK, Pres't. A. S. U., Phila., Pa.

E. A. STEVENS, Sec'y. A. S. U., Chicago, Ill.

E. B. FOOTE, Jr., Ch. Ex. Com. A. S. U., New York.

This proclamation has the right ring. It calls upon the people to meet, not as Christians or Hebrews, or members of any other religious sect, but as American citizens, and in that capacity to testify their appreciation of such blessings of liberty as not God but a republican form of government has enabled them to enjoy.

The Liberals of New York city will have such a gathering, and it will probably be addressed by Colonel Ingersoll. With a few more days to spare, and more time for preparation, we might have held a meeting in San Francisco that would show the public where patriotism and true republicanism reside.

ACTIVITY NECESSARY.

We hope all our subscribers and readers realize, as we do, that we must depend largely upon them to extend the circulation of FREETHOUGHT. We obtain many new subscribers from sample copies judiciously distributed, but by far the larger number are gathered in by old subscribers who take sufficient interest in the paper and the cause it represents to canvass their localities and to always be upon the lookout for recruits. It is not supposed that every reader of FREETHOUGHT can obtain a new one. Experience shows that they cannot; but every one can try it—make the attempt, and accept the result philosophically, whatever it may be. Many of our friends have paid for a number of subscriptions in advance, and then set themselves at work to secure the subscribers afterwards. This is a good plan, because it gives them a personal interest in the matter, so that they work harder and also with greater success.

It is necessary to the continued publication of any paper that its subscription list be constantly added to, and FREETHOUGHT is not an exception to that rule. It seems to us that every Freethinker in the West should take an active interest in supporting a Freethought paper. Many plead the lack of time to read it as an excuse for not subscribing. No earnest Liberal will do that. If he cannot pay for a paper, he is excusable; otherwise, not. If he cannot spare the time to read it, let him send it to somebody with more leisure; but so long as any Freethinker has a dollar left after paying for the physical necessities of life, he should devote that dollar to the support of his principles. Let him ask himself the question, Should Liberalism be advocated? If his answer is Yes, he cannot escape the responsibility of aiding that advocacy. If his answer is No, he is like those Christians who believe in the moral maxims of religion until the point is reached where it becomes necessary to practice them, and then go the other way. We see the Salvation Army parading the street in uncouth attire and singing words too foolish to be spoken. We laugh at them, but at the same time their earnestness and devotion to what they believe to be a good cause call for a modicum of our respect. We wish that all professed Liberals exhibited enough earnestness and devotion to awaken an equal amount of the same feeling.

There is need of a more distinct line between Christians and non-Christians. Those who believe the old lies; those who believe in priestly authority, in intolerance and superstition, should stand upon one side, while those who oppose them should define their position by placing themselves on the other side. If it is hypocrisy for one to profess to believe that which he does not believe, it is almost equal hypocrisy for him to conceal his true sentiments. A Freethinker who does not avow himself as such, in his own day and generation, is not worthy to be called one if afterwards it should be discovered that he rejected the superstitions of Christianity. The open and avowed Liberal, with the courage of his convictions, is the Liberal who gains the respect of all whose respect is worth having. The timid doubter does not amount to much; the disbeliever and denier makes his influence felt. And, after all, the true test of the genuine Liberal is this: does he speak his honest thought; does he read the honest thoughts of others; does he support the Liberal press and platform? Unless he does this you cannot depend upon him; his pretensions as a Freethinker when talking to a Freethinker are apt to turn into professions of faith in the presence of a believer, and the next revival is likely to number him among its converts.

There is nothing truer than that where a man's treasure is, there is his heart also; and it is equally true that a man's heart does not go far in any direction if he is not willing to send his money with it. These considerations ought to be brought before all Liberals, and indifferent Liberals ought to be shown that they have a duty to perform. In fact, every disbeliever in Christianity should oppose it, and the best way to do that is through the press. They should therefore support the Freethought papers, and extend their patronage in all directions where they conceive that good work is being done. We hope that our present subscribers will take pains to learn the views of persons in their neighborhoods, and in all cases where possible impress upon them their obligations as Freethinkers. The result would be many additional subscribers to FREETHOUGHT.

THE AMAUROT CLUB.

The San Jose Mercury of April 14 contains a report of the organization of a new society called the Amaurot Club. Its members, numbering six, are all new comers in that city. The chairman, Mr. F. B. Vance, in defining the purposes of the society, said that it was devoted solely to the discussion of such subjects as are included in pure philosophy. "We believe," he observed, "that science has taken a more dominant place in the intellectual world than rightly belongs to it. We are told that no belief is rational whose foundations cannot be counted, weighed, and measured. In other words, physics claims for itself the right to bring all creeds and theories into its courts, and to try them by such evidence and such methods as it dictates. It excludes everything not physical, on the ground that it is either unknowable or unverifiable. We object to this assumption. We will exclude from our discussions all subjects which can be determined by an appeal to authority or decided by physical tests. We will seek to attain reasoned truth, with the understanding that it is of much more importance to us that it should be reasoned than that it should be true."

Another member, Mr. W. B. Foster, said he feared "that the excluding from our debates all matters which can be determined by appeals to authority or decided by physical tests will leave the field open to mere matters of taste, and in many cases we will waste our time in vain attempts to seek a solution for matters of opinion which, after all, are the results of the differences in individuals." To set Mr. Foster right the chair qualified its remarks by saying: "I have defined philosophy as 'reasoned truth,' and mere matters of taste would be excluded on the ground that they are not reasoned."

Miss L. C. Elliott here intervened to say with some asperity: "I do not know whether the tastes of men are reasonable or not; for I have never been a man, but I am sure the tastes of women are. For my part I can give more reasons for my taste than for anything else, and I believe you will find that women generally are as rational, even in their ribbons, as in their religion."

The chair smoothed matters over by saying that this issue might be passed for the present, but it would certainly arise later on as a subject for the application of pure philosophy. The meeting then went into executive session, and passed a resolution that the subject for discussion at the next meeting should be "The New Christianity."

We are rather sorry that the Amaurot Club did not choose this city for its home, or that we have not one like it here. The deliberations of a society which excludes all subjects that can be decided, and cares more for the merely reasoned than for the actually proved, would have a soporific and thus beneficial effect upon the over-stimulated and nervously-excitabile population of San Francisco. It is believed that the Amaurot Club is for the propagation of Christian Science, which, beyond dispute, is quite outside the trammels of scientific demonstration.

NATURAL MORALITY.

To keep men from a knowledge of the truth is a crime well nigh as great as to keep food from their mouths, but it is a crime that the church is constantly committing.

Misrepresentation and defamation are favorite weapons with the church. She teaches her disciples that an Infidel is a thing of horror, and both his principles and his character are blackened. What can be said of a church that maintains a public liar like the Rev. Sam Jones upon the platform to declare that "Freethought means free love?" Says Professor Huxley, in a recent article: "I verily believe that the great good which has been effected by Christianity has been largely counteracted by the pestilential doctrine on which all the churches have united, that honest disbelief in their more or less astonishing creeds is a moral offense, indeed a sin of the deepest dye, deserving and inviting the same future retribution as murder and robbery. If we could only see in our view the torrent of hypocrisy and cruelty, the lies, the slaughter, the violation of every obligation of humanity, which have flowed from this sewer along the course of the history of Christian nations, our worst imaginations of hell would pale beside the vision."

And yet Christianity declares that her morality alone is pure; that it is all noble, and all beneficial to mankind. Is exclusion from the truth generous? Is denunciation of honest unbelief kind? Is the social ostracism of intellectual opponents humane?

No! A thousand times no! The morality of Christianity as to-day practiced by the majority of its adherents and as taught by its accredited leaders, is faulty and often cruel, and is far inferior to the noble morality of Freethought. That morality teaches that to face the truth manfully, though opposed by the command of tradition or the suggestions of convenience, is an honest necessity of the mind; to do good to mankind without expectation of reward either in this world or in any other (of which we know nothing) that may come hereafter, is our loftiest duty; and to be charitable to the opinions of all men, which we seek to change only by appeals to reason, experience, and science, and never by threats of an unknown God's displeasure here and the eternal torments of an imaginary hell in the future, which both reason and science prove is but a fiction of the past. Is not that a better and purer morality than that of the churches? Is it not a standard to adhere to, which cannot lead men far astray? It accepts the best of the moral laws of the past and discards only the mistaken and the wrong. It rejects nothing that is well proved, and its stability is as well assured as is the intellectual progress of man. Disbelief in one or all of the dogmas of Christianity is common to-day through large tracts of human thought, and the lives of such men are not worse but better. For the life of a man must be always better when he replaces the false by the true. If disbelief in its dogmas should suddenly become general throughout Christendom, it would not greatly affect its morals. The laws of nations would not be changed nor social stability shaken. Man is not going to destroy his carefully evolved social structure on account of an ecclesiastical creed. Many believers conscientiously think, because so taught, that they would be utterly at a loss, in a blank chaos, without their supposed divinely approved rules of action. But they are utterly mistaken. Ethical rules remain unchanged if approved by human experience. The structure of human morality is well erected and in its main outlines is not subject to change. The fear that it will fall to pieces if a supposed divine construction is disbelieved comes of ignorance. Divinity has had no more to do with its construction than with all other things, and that is through the operation of natural law and evolution. This strong and steady frame of society is too well founded to be shattered because an ecclesiastical bubble breaks. The tree of human life is nourished by the elemental forces of the universe, and they alone can destroy it.

Human action is constantly falling short of its ideal. We must daily ask pardon of our better selves and of others for our weaknesses and mistakes. But it is not necessary to call upon or to receive aid from a fancied divine power in order to do right. Priesthood, to maintain its rule, to make itself the means of approach to divinity, has always declared this necessary, and that good deeds unconsecrated by itself and its God were not good and were worth nothing. The solid sense of mankind rejects this arrogant and absurd doctrine.

If we fail to attain our ideal, it is the fault partly of environment, partly of temperament. Both can be improved by our own force and the force of others. Human nature has struggled up from low beginnings to its present powers. It is still imperfect, as judged by its conceptions of itself, but it improves. I mourns bitterly over its own shortcomings, but the fault of a day should not be made to sadden and cripple a whole life. Man is often too harsh in judgment, forgetting his own need of pardon. "With malice toward none, with charity toward all," were the noble words of a great man, and, in the most of his religious thought, a Freethinker—America's second father, Abraham Lincoln.

H. M.

A BAD MAN SHOWN UP.

The Rev. G. W. James, of Long Beach, a temperance seaside resort in the vicinity of San Pedro, is furnishing the papers with all the scandal they want, and rather more than decency will permit them to publish. The Rev. Mr. James is an eloquent Methodist preacher, a vegetarian, and has been known as an advocate of what he calls "social purity." The first exploit that gave him public notoriety was whipping his wife and threatening to kill her. During the investigation of this charge the material for several others was unearthed. Among these is one for adultery, and another for misleading female members of his congregation, and a third sets forth that he was instrumental in instituting improper relations between his elderly sister and his eighteen-year-old son.

Thus another shining light of Methodism goes out temporarily. It is too much to hope that he is permanently extinguished, but if he were, the world would be the better for it.

"FREETHOUGHT" IN BOUND VOLUMES.

We have a few copies of FREETHOUGHT, Volume I., 1888, substantially bound in half calf, which we will sell at $2.50 per volume. As the number is very limited, those who desire the first year of FREETHOUGHT in this form will need to apply early.

THE arguments of counsel for the American Secular Union, represented by E. A. Stevens, against the granting of public funds to the Catholic institutions of Chicago are printed and may doubtless be obtained by addressing Secretary Stevens at 16 Union Park Place, Chicago.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH thus pays his respects to the distinguished English statesman: "John Bright is dead. In 1880, on June 21, in the House of Commons, he spoke for my conscience and honor as none other spoke, and I, with uncovered head, pay most grateful and most reverent tribute to his memory."

It appears that Jews are incompetent as jurors in Sweden. M. Lennstrand, the Freethinker prosecuted for blasphemy on two counts, was acquitted of the charge on one and convicted on the other. He is now to be retried on the former count, as it has been discovered that there was a Jew on the jury which acquitted him, and the verdict is set aside.

It has just been decided by a Kansas City judge that base ball playing on Sunday is illegal in Missouri. There is a section in the Sunday laws of that state which exempts "members of a religious society by whom any other than the first day of the week is observed as a Sabbath." The base ball players of Missouri should join the Seventh-day Adventists.

PROF. J. O. SPENCER, of the Anglo-Japanese College in Tokio, Japan, said in an address before the Methodist ministers' meeting last Monday, that the great need in that country now was Christian men and women to demonstrate the worth of Christianity in their real Christian living. Professor Spencer ought to know that America is not blessed with any great number of the class of people which he desires to transplant to Japan. If there are any we can't spare them.

WE would like to have Mr. W. H. Burr, the historian's, opinion upon the following letter, said to have been written by the Father of His Country to one William Livingston, the last royal governor of New Jersey. If authentic it will appeal powerfully to the sympathies of many American citizens on the morning following the festivities of April 30:

"O William, what a glorious time we had last evening. I am paying the penalty, however, this morning, as my swollen head will attest. How does your head feel? After leaving you, called on the fair Virginia. She is one of God's fairest creatures. But I am trying to paint a picture. The ablest artist could not reproduce yours.

"As a brother, GEORGE WASHINGTON."

WE learn from the Independent Pulpit that the Liberals of Denison, Texas, have organized under the name of the Denison Philosophical and Social Club, with T. V. Munson as president. Concerning Liberal organizations the editor of the Pulpit remarks: "These organizations may not all be permanent; indeed, some of them may be short-lived, but that does not argue against them. Every effort of the kind does some good even though, for want of perpetuity, it be branded as a failure. All progress is by effort and experiment, and the path of experience is full of so-called failures. But even a 'failure' may be a success in disguise, that is, if by it some needed information and experience be the outcome."

THE Swedish Freethinker Lennstrand is of the stuff that martyrs are made of. He was lately imprisoned for blasphemy, and upon his release from Malmo prison on March 1, he commenced lecturing in that town on the very subjects for which he had been imprisoned. From Malmo he went to Copenhagen, where he lectured with great success. From Copenhagen he proceeded to Helsingfors, but there the police-master dissolved the meeting before the termination of the lecture. After this he lectured again in Malmo, Norrkoping, and Orebro, but was once more prosecuted for lecturing in Norrkoping. He then delivered two lectures at Linkoping, and was further prosecuted. On March 17, he addressed an open-air meeting of 10,000 persons at Stockholm, and was received with prolonged cheering, renewed again and again when he declared that even if he were condemned to life-long imprisonment, Freethought would at last be triumphant.

THE compilation of Horace Seaver's writings under the title of "Occasional Thoughts" has won the following words of commendation from Col. R. G. Ingersoll, and richly deserves them too:

"MY DEAR MR. SEAVER: I have just finished reading 'Occasional Thoughts,' and cannot refrain from telling you the great pleasure the reading gave me. You are so candid, so kind, and so-sensible, that I do not see how any one can read the book without falling in love with the author. You have done a noble work—you are no 'summer soldier,' no 'sunshine patriot,' but a good, brave fighter in the battle's front, and I honor you with all my heart. I do hope that you may live for many years—long enough to see the result of your labors, long enough to see the commencement of the harvest. You have won the respect of the noblest, and I honor myself by subscribing myself your friend, R. G. INGERSOLL."

It is good to put on record this tribute from one brave soldier to another. The aged editor of the Investigator may rest from his labors with the consciousness that he has won the praise of the greatest man America has produced.

SOME of the men who help to make the laws of England are about as blind to the rights of unbelievers as those who are elected in America. One Colonel Sandys, a member of Parliament, thus replies to a constituent who had asked him to support Mr. Bradlaugh's bill to abolish religious prosecutions:

"You, like many others, are misled by an artfully designed title to the bill—which in this case conceals the true evil character of the measure. The object of the bill is to do away with the penalties of the law—which at present exist against the Atheist and the blasphemer—and if passed would allow the country to be flooded with blasphemous and Atheistic publications, without any power to punish those who did so. It is practically a bill to effect this, brought in by the Atheist Bradlaugh. Further comment is needless, and it is for this reason that I shall endeavor to get it rejected. In a Christian land there should be no legislative sanction for the Atheist and the blasphemer to ply their accursed trade and to demoralize and degrade the people of this country by their writings and speeches."

Colonel Sandys's opinions are much like those of the Rev. Jonathan Edwards, who, speaking of Atheists, declared that there was "nothing out of hell" that he would not as soon tolerate.

THE "Christian Champion" Braden was announced for a series of lectures in Davenport, W. T., and delivered the opening discourse. The Lincoln Times tells why he did not proceed: "Braden was to have continued his lectures through this week, but at the close of his acrimonious diatribe Sunday night he had the hardihood to put it to a vote as to whether or no he should complete the course. It must have struck a chill to his marrow when only a meagre few reluctant hands in the audience went up inviting him to remain. The result of the ballot convinced him that he had stumbled upon an intelligent audience that could show enough self-respect to sit quietly under one such lecture, but that had the hardihood to announce that they wanted no more of it, and so he cancelled his other dates."

A FREETHINKER who has given a good deal of work and money to Liberalism in his more prosperous days, but who now, through an unlucky turn of fortune's wheel, is in poor circumstances, would like to get a chance to work for some Liberal. He is in the prime of life, a born lumberman, and a thorough horseman. He belongs to the G. A. R., and carries with him a recommendation for industry, sobriety, and honesty signed by the most prominent people in the city where he has resided. He can refer inquirers to the best-known Liberals on the coast. Address: William Jay, care of FREETHOUGHT office.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

San Francisco does not yet get the $800,000 voted by Congress for the new post-office site. The requisite words "and is hereby appropriated" were carelessly omitted from the bill. The matter therefore lies over until the next Congress.—Last Sunday there was a well-attended meeting of German citizens at Turn-Verein Hall, at which resolutions were adopted to the effect that the Turn-Verein Society will parade in a body on Centennial Day. They also decided to give a free literary entertainment at their hall on the evening of the 30th instant.—A specimen with $1,200 worth of gold in sight has been taken out of the Santa Clara, L. C., mines, and is on its way to San Francisco. So a Pasadena man reports.—Laura De Force Gordon, of Lodi, addressed, last Sunday, the first of a series of ten Sunday afternoon meetings arranged for by the Tacoma, W. T., Woman Suffrage Association.—The common council of Santa Cruz has raised the liquor license from $120 to $200 per annum.—It is said that F. M. Pixley, editor of the Argonaut, will be the orator of the day at the centenary celebration, April 30.

The passengers on the abandoned Danmark were taken aboard the steamship Missouri, and landed in safety. The loss of the Danmark was caused by her engines breaking down eight hundred miles from Newfoundland.—Last Sunday, the striking car-drivers of Minneapolis, aided by their friends and sympathizers, mobbed the cars, stoned the police, and tore up the railroad tracks.—It is reported as probable that freight cars coming into this country over the Canadian line will be made to pay duty on their value. There are said to be three thousand Canadian-built cars now in use on roads in the United States.—Sir Julian Pauncefote, Lord Sackville West's successor as British minister to the United States, arrived in New York last Sunday.—"Boomers" are crowding the recently opened Oklahoma lands in the Indian territory, and quarrels between the new arrivals and previous occupants are of frequent occurrence. The craze over these Oklahoma lands is inexplicable.—Five Mormon missionaries were severely whipped, tarred and feathered, and driven from Dale county, Ala., last week. Their offense was preaching their creed, and forming a colony to go to Utah.—A great fire destroyed property on the North river, New York city, between 59th and 65th street, April 19, to the value of more than $3,000,000.—Postmaster-General Wanamaker is charged with using his official position to advertise his private business. He has a big clothing establishment in Philadelphia.—The mayor of New York is clearing the street of telegraph poles. The wires will have to be put under ground according to an ordinance passed several years ago, but never enforced.—Michigan has adopted a law prohibiting the manufacture, sale, keeping for sale, or giving away of cigarettes, or any substance in the form of cigarettes containing narcotic elements, and even going so far as to inhibit rice paper or any paper designed for cigarette wrappers.

It is now reported that the Panama canal scheme is sure to collapse, and that the machinery along the big ditch will be abandoned to rust and ruin.—Yellow fever is raging at Rio Janeiro, causing one hundred deaths per day.—A Catholic congress met on Wednesday at Madrid, Spain. The object of the congress is to pronounce in favor of the restoration of the temporal power of the pope and the extension of the influence of the church in the schools.—Hundreds of people are dying of starvation in Hungary.—Parnell has sued the London Times for $500,000 damages. The Times admits the libel, and asks the court to adjudicate.

OBSERVATIONS.

The meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society last Sunday evening was one of the most interesting yet held. Union Square Hall is centrally located, has a fine entrance, and offers easy chairs for the visitor when he is inside. Professor Sanders, the proprietor, is himself a Freethinker and regards with approval the society's choice of quarters.

President Chilstrom was prevented by business from being present at the meeting in question, so that Vice-President Lemme was called to the chair, and discharged the duties of that position with energy and efficiency. Secretary Breuer divulged the proceedings of the previous meeting as spread upon the minutes by his assistant, and after some singing from the "Cosmian Hymn book" Professor Miller entered upon his discourse on "God." The lecture was a continuation or conclusion of the two previously given, and was pronounced the best of the series. It traced the gradual civilizing process to which the deity had been subjected; the method of his retirement from active participation in the affairs of this world, and the substitution of the law of cause and effect in the place of divine providence. The speaker stated that the alleged laws of God had become a dead letter, and might be neglected with impunity, except in cases where their violation involved the infraction of some natural law, the penalty for which followed as a consequence. Professor Miller's address, as on other occasions, showed deep thought and careful arrangement, and was in all respects worthy of the hearty appreciation evinced by his auditors.

The Chair extending an invitation to those present to offer remarks upon the general outlook, Professor Seymour responded with some advice as to how attractive meetings might be afforded. The lecture of the evening, he said, was learned and thoughtful, but it appealed only to thinkers. Amusement should be provided for those not in the habit of exercising their reflective powers. He observed that somebody "standing on their head" would often draw a crowd where more intellectual efforts failed of that result. The professor did not authorize the committee to announce himself as a volunteer for such attracting purposes.

Mr. Parker, of Petaluma, spoke briefly on the subject of music, recommending that a choir be formed to meet and rehearse previous to each meeting. His own forte lay in solo parts, accompanied by the violin. He often sang light or comic songs, and had been rebuked therefor by religious people. He contended, however, that in the ultimate analysis nothing could be more ridiculous than the average religious hymn, and he had never been guilty of anything quite so frivolous as the songs in the Moody and Sankey collection.

Professor Sanders offered some remarks upon the lecture, saying that so good a discourse should have been listened to by as many people as could be brought within the sound of the speaker's voice. It was worth a dollar of any man's money.

Mr. Schou arose with some timidity, and said that if the audience would promise not to offer violence he would propose a collection. The matter was put to a vote and resulted in the complete triumph of the mover, who thereupon collected a hatful of coin.

Young Mr. Schultheis managed the piano while the audience, led by the Chair, united in singing hymn 105, and at a later hour than usual the meeting adjourned.

I may say that personally I was not present at the above meeting, the facts concerning which I gather from others who were there. On Sunday morning I was led to believe that plenty of fish might be caught near Sausalito, and investigated the subject. After helping to pull a large boat two and a half miles against the violent tide that rushes through the Golden Gate, holding a line over the edge of a boat for six hours without getting anything but a bite and a bad case of sunburn, I became convinced that my informant was in error. The waves in the Gate on a fresh afternoon run about twelve feet high, and the motion which they impart to a boat is confusing to a person who has not enjoyed the gentle undulations of an earthquake for several weeks. When I reached the hall that night it was easy for me to realize that I was not in a state of mental receptivity, and I therefore returned home when my services as usher were no longer required.

I may have done injustice in these columns to the mediumistic powers of Mr. Fred. Evans, and to repair any injury to so distinguished an instrument of the angel world I append an account of one of his Melbourne seances, written by himself, and published in the Golden Gate newspaper :
