Last Sunday evening I gave a seance to the Victorian Society of Spiritualists, at the Horticultural Hall, which was very successful. The hall was crowded to excess, people being turned away. I came a little late and found a great difficulty in getting in the hall at all, it was so completely packed. A committee of three was selected by the audience. The slates used were washed in a bucket of water and wiped dry and clean by the committee and held by these gentlemen until the writing was procured. During the seance, a gentleman arose in the audience and requested me to use the slates brought by him. I told him to come on the platform, where I found he had sealed slates. I explained to him that he must open the slates and show them to the committee so that they could see that the slates were clean and that there was "no put-up job." This he reluctantly agreed to, after which he held them in full view of the audience, and, soon began to hear the pencil moving between the slates. He became somewhat nervous, and when he opened the slates and found the inner surface filled with writing he seemed thunderstruck; but quickly recovering his composure he stated that the slates had been given to him by Professor Baldwin, the "spirit exposé," and privately marked, with the request that they should be brought to me for a seance. This announcement "brought down the house." On the committee opening their slates they were found to contain about eighty messages addressed to the different members of the audience, all of which recognized.

It is to be remembered that this account is written by Mr. Evans's own hand. If I had written it myself I would not ask any one to believe it without learning more of the details.

Most enlightened people believe in evolution, and I have always regarded it as sufficiently reasonable to constitute a good working hypothesis. Yet, alas ! how few are able to define evolution correctly. I came across a definition of it the other day, by Mr. Spencer, and attempted to commit it to memory, failing in which I committed it to paper. Evolution, then, in plain language, is the integration of matter and concomitant dissipation of motion, attended by a continuous change from indefinite, incoherent homogeneity to definite, coherent heterogeneity of structure and function, through successive differentiations and integrations.

No one is qualified to discuss evolution until he can let go of that sentence volubly.

The Truth Seeker is working the business end of a boom, the object of which is to land the undersigned in a far distant country. Here is a letter published in the last issue of that paper received up to date :

TULE LAKE, Ore., March 21, 1889.

MR. EDITOR : We take this occasion to say to the Liberals of Longmont, Col., that we are in favor of sending G. E. Macdonald on that proposed trip around the world, if he wants to go, and will help to furnish the funds. Yours truly,

WILLIAM TERRILL,
C. L. DOEBLER.

Messrs. Terrill and Doebler's letter is, like the San Francisco Post-office bill, slightly non-committal as to funds, but if I go I will help to furnish them to any extent short of hypothecating a badge pin. Another writer in the same paper says :

CANFIELD, Col., March 17, 1889.

MR. EDITOR : I think the suggestion of Colonel Kelso and others, that the Liberal friends subscribe and advance a sufficient fund to pay the expenses of George E. Macdonald to Palestine, is both good and timely. George E. Macdonald has that Artemus Ward style of humor which Americans so highly appreciate. The next few years is likely to be a period of comparative political quiet, and if the scheme could be worked up, and George could be induced to go, it might turn out to be quite a boom for the Liberal cause, Liberal papers—and to the traveler himself, if he should succeed in finding any of the chariot wheels lost by Pharaoh in the Red Sea.

GEORGE X. YOUNG.

It is quite safe to liken my feeble attempts at amusing the public to the uproariously solemn mirth of the late Mr. Ward, since that writer is dead, but I am not very sure of political quietude during the next year. If the piety of our administration continues to increase as it has been doing since inauguration day, the country is likely to be surprised by the spectacle of several Washington politicians ascending into heaven in a pair of Postmaster-General Wanamaker's ready-made pants. In such event I should like to be present.

The next letter is more serious. Mrs. Denton, widow of Prof. Wm. Denton, of honored memory, writes to the Truth Seeker :

WELLESLEY, Mass., March 18, 1889.

MR. EDITOR : I am very glad that you have no word of encouragement for the proposed plan of sending your brother George on a trip around the world.

There is not the slightest doubt that, were he to accomplish the undertaking as proposed, we should receive from him a charming history of his travels, a delightful picture of the people he met and the places he visited. But can the Radicals of the country afford the risk which such an undertaking involves—the risk of losing him and his services for ever? Have they not lost too heavily in this way already? The active brains of D. M. Bennett and William Denton were never more needed among us than they are at the present time, but their places among us are empty. While they were eagerly gathering materials with which to enrich the world's storehouse of knowledge, the poisonous vapors of those far-off shores were silently stealing from them the only ready medium of communication between their intellects and our own, and the knowledge they had there gathered lies buried in their graves. And what assurance have we that the life of the brilliant editor of FREETHOUGHT would be exempt from the poisoned shafts which so cruelly robbed us of their aid? No! We need him here. Let us keep him with us while we may. It was, no doubt, needful that, with you and the Truth Seeker established in New York, he and Mr. Putnam should establish themselves and FREETHOUGHT in San Francisco, in order to maintain a proper balance of forces between the eastern and western portions of the continent. But what good reason can we have for consenting that any of our "bright, particular stars" shall sink from our horizon and disappear behind "the waters of the great deep?" I confess that I discern no reason that appears at all worthy, and I am therefore glad that you do not encourage it.

Cordially yours, E. M. F. DENTON.

Leaving out the unmerited praise contained in these letters, I most heartily thank the writers for the compliment they pay me in thinking that my correspondence from abroad would be worthy the large outlay of money involved. Published letters from the Old World are always read with interest, but I doubt if mine would have the value set upon them. Besides, my absence would call Mr. Putnam from the field to the sedentary life of an editor, printer, and proof-reader, relieved only by such outdoor work as is included in the function of porter and errand boy. In the lecture field Mr. Putnam earns not far from one hundred dollars per month, which he devotes—I might say sacrifices—to the publication of FREETHOUGHT. I am not sanguine enough to suppose that my letters from abroad would be worth that sum to this paper or any other. Indeed, I do not think they would be of any greater help to the paper or the cause, if as much, than are Mr. Putnam's "News and Notes" from the places he visits in this country. Add to these the work he is doing as a lecturer, which he could not do as an editor, and the balance is largely in favor of the present writer letting well enough alone and standing by the FREETHOUGHT ship as long as the united efforts of both officers at the pumps can keep her afloat. My first reference to a trip to Palestine was not made with the expectation that anything practical would come of it. Since it has now taken that aspect I must point the movers to the above obstacles, which seem to me insurmountable. Nothing, however, can diminish my gratitude to the Longmont friends and to the others who have seconded their motion or for equally flattering reasons opposed it.

G. E. M.

LILIAN'S STORY.

The closing portion of Lilian's narrative, which we give below, is not less interesting than previous chapters had led us to expect that it would be. Stephen Parker, the promptly renewing subscriber, is one of the noblest characters known to fiction, and we may admire him none the less because he is but the beatific ideal of a juvenile and inexperienced writer who has never been brought to a conception of the meaning of the word eternity by waiting through long eons of time for the remittances of delinquents to arrive.

PARKER & CO.

BY A. LILIAN ANDREWS, AUTHOR OF "ONE PENNY," "NELLIE'S MONKEY," AND OTHER TALES.

CHAPTER V.

The next day, Anita, Grace, Bessie, Jessie, and Maisy cleaned up the hotel. All the linen was fresh as ever. Tom advertised the hotel in the New York Star. By Wednesday, the 11th of June, the house was full of people. Anita had thirty scholars for cooking.

One night in July a very rich young gentleman sat thinking of a little sister, whom he was separated from when she was only two years old. A man once came to his house to stay over night and had stolen him. His name was Stephen Parker. As he sat thinking, his eyes fell upon an article in a paper called FREETHOUGHT. He picked it up and read the article. Here it is:

THE PARKER HOUSE.

A young girl, Anita Parker, aged 18, and her brother, Tom, aged 16, are keeping an excellent hotel to support a family of 11. Her father is dead. His name was Richard S. Parker.

Stephen Parker packed his satchel and started for the Parker house. Anita had a picture of him when he was stolen and recognized him. The others he had never heard of. All the Parkers are very rich, but the hotel is kept. Stephen Parker renews his subscription to FREETHOUGHT promptly every year because it brought good news.

THE END.

LIBERAL LECTURES.

S. P. Putnam, president of the California Secular Union, lectured at Music Hall on Monday evening upon the subject "The Sunday and the Sabbath," to a large and appreciative audience. Mr. Putnam is an excellent speaker and is thoroughly earnest in his work. His definition of the difference between Sunday and the Sabbath was drawn with interesting detail, and his argument would be difficult to dispute as viewed from the standpoint of Liberalism. Mrs. Parker made a short address at the close of the lecture. Several names were added to the roll. On Tuesday evening Mr. Putnam lectured upon "Robert Elsmere." His discourse was most interesting and instructive. His gradual departure from orthodoxy to Freethought was likened to the experience of Robert Elsmere, and was followed with absorbing interest by the large audience. The speaker at times became eloquent and handled his subject with masterful ability throughout. Yesterday afternoon a conference of one hour was held, in which many spoke of their "experience." Last evening Mr. Putnam lectured upon "The Inspiration of Liberalism," after which the floor was cleared for dancing, which was continued until a late hour.—Anaheim Gazette, April 18.

DOES DR. HARCOURT READ "FREETHOUGHT?"

From FREETHOUGHT March 2, 1889.

The notoriety of Sam Jones . . . and other converted ruffians shows that for effectiveness in revival work a bad reputation is of more value than a long and arduous term in a theological seminary.

From Dr. Harcourt's Sermon, April 14, 1889.

So great is the admiration for this type [the Sam Jones type] of revival preachers displayed by so many weak-minded people as to encourage the belief that they regard a life of vice and dissipation to be a much better preparation for a first-class evangelist than the entire curriculum of the most renowned university or school of theology.

THE LECTURE TOUR.

Following are the dates of S. P. Putnam's lectures as at present determined:

Los Angeles, April 21,
 Lemoore, April 28,
 Visalia, April 29, 30,
 Oleander, May 1, 2, 3,

San Francisco, May 5, 12, 19,
 Boulder Creek and vicinity, May, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24,
 San Francisco, May 26.

Mr. Putnam will be at Fresno Flats, Grub Gulch, and vicinity the first week in June. About the middle of June he will begin his Oregon trip, taking in Silverton, Canby, Molalla, Hillsboro, Shed's, etc. About the third week in July he will be in Coos county, Or.

Those desiring lectures will please write at their earliest convenience, addressing this office.

Colonel Ingersoll's Story.

"I'll tell you a story, boys," said Colonel Ingersoll, while waiting for the Kerr jury to come in on Friday afternoon.

Colonel Fellows, Lawyer Bird, Mr. Kerr, and the reporters leaned forward expectantly.

"During the gold days in California," continued the colonel, "it was the law that the holder of a claim should be liable to lose it if he let it remain idle ten days in succession. Well, there was one fellow who had been working faithfully, when he fell sick and had to take to his tent. Another fellow came along and jumped his claim. The first man pleaded and argued, but the other was not to be moved. So when the first man recovered he sued the interloper.

"The case came up before the justice. He was very sorry, he told the plaintiff, but the law was absolute on the question, and the defendant could not be ousted. No sooner had he finished than the plaintiff jumped up and hit the defendant a stinging blow behind the ear. The defendant fell over and the plaintiff jumped on him and began to pummel him soundly. The constable ran up and was trying to part the fighters when the judge arose, and, pounding on the desk, yelled to the constable:

"—— you, sir, leave them alone! The law is the law, but if the gentlemen want to compromise they mustn't be interfered with."

The colonel's way of telling it was as good as the story.—New York Sun.

ONE Sunday morning, Mr. Moody, the revivalist, entered a Chicago drug store, distributing tracts. At the back of the store sat an elderly and distinguished citizen reading a morning newspaper. Mr. Moody approached this gentleman and threw one of the temperance tracts on the paper before him. The old gentleman glanced at the tract, and then, looking up benignantly at Moody, asked: "Are you a reformed drunkard?" "No, sir, I am not!" cried Moody, drawing back, indignantly. "Then why in h—— don't you reform?" quietly asked the old gentleman.

PHILOSOPHICAL ATHEISM.

Spiritus, Psyche, animus, nor less
 Nor more than names, the primal man gave breath.
 It seemed to him self's inner, finer dress,
 In which it came at birth and went at death.

Our science has dissolved this robe of air;
 Life was before breath heaved the new-born chest;
 The exhaled breath but waste of life's repair
 Expelled as a used, unwelcome guest.

Some deem the ether spirit's inner robe;
 That the light-bearer is thought-bearer too,
 And that it does not need the frontal lobe
 Which it did build, and daily does renew.

I know it were a pleasing thought, indeed,
 To think of spirit clothed in warmth and light,
 Its movements rapid as the sunbeam's speed,
 Its course as dazzling as the lightning's flight.

Its contact with the thing it loves complete—
 An interpenetration each in each—
 No fatal consequences to defeat
 Love's raptures ere the promised goal we reach.

To think that universal thought indwells,
 Its vesture these pulsating ether waves,
 That penetrate the brain's gray, throbbing cells,
 Can feel the wants our hungry being craves;

Can help us in our utmost pressing need
 And wills our highest weal, as father kind,
 And loves to grant us what we wisely plead,
 This, sure, were succor to the grief-struck mind.

These fond illusive fancies once were mine—
 The child's inheritance from childish age—
 This universal father, named divine,
 Now seems but fetich of the twilight sage.

Birth of the fancy of the dreamy East,
 Brahm, phantom spirit of the cosmic whole,
 Still lingers in the vision of the priest,
 And mystic fount of life and thought and soul.

But science says the only thought I know
 Is product of a working, wasting brain,
 Renewed by rich red blood in ceaseless flow,
 Refreshed by sleep, and free from pressure's strain.

Wide gulf between the ether and the brain—
 The felt, and that unknown to finest sense.
 For me imagination strives in vain
 To join in thought divergence so immense.

The All is heartless bleak inanity,
 It hears no prayers, is blind to falling tears,
 To praise or blame it were insanity,
 For what to it our few or many years?

I stand in awe, but cannot praise or blame
 A power that clothes the fertile fields with grain,
 But wraps the garnered product round with flame,
 That only gives that it may take again.

If we consider nature in her scope
 She seems indifferent and nothing more.
 She's neither misanthrope nor philanthrope,
 But ananthropic to the very core.

She owes her form and attitude to-day
 To unconditioned, all-persistent force;
 Behind the scene I see no free will's play,
 No pilot's hand and eye to guide her course.

This ceaseless change, this flux and flow of form,
 Is outcome of this endless energy.
 It shapes the clouds that frown above the storm,
 And plies the loom that weaves life's tragedy.

To us no help can come from yonder sky,
 No spirits hovering round can hear our cry,
 No heart, save human, feel our sorrow's sigh,
 No hand, save human, wipe a weeping eye.

In human sympathy is found alone
 Such solace as may come to life's sad lot.
 By kindly eyes, by speech's balmy tone,
 By clinging hands upholding, strength is brought.

Is this life all? Then let us pitch it high.
 What beauty, sweetness, strength the germs inclose,
 May each unfold in fruitage ere he die,
 And leave a fragrance like the withered rose.

DAVID BOYD.

THE SUBJECTION OF WOMAN.

The conservative Protestants and most of the Catholic clergy oppose woman's enfranchisement. They uphold what is called the common law of England. This common law is not founded on the customs and usages which existed prior to the conversion of the English to Christianity. After St. Augustine came to England and founded the Catholic church the priesthood claimed equal rights with the civil officers, and exclusive jurisdiction over the relations of the sexes and the morals of the people. In a short time the ecclesiastical law of England was moulded in conformity to the teachings of the fathers of the Catholic church. Tertullian wrote: "Woman thou should'st ever be clothed in rags and in mourning, appearing only as a penitent, drowned in tears, and expiating thus the sin of having caused the fall of the human race. Woman, thou art the gate of the devil; it is thou who hast corrupted those whom Satan dare not attack face to face; it is because of thee that Jesus Christ died."

Another father of the Latin church, St. Jerome, is not less extravagant: "Woman, given over to herself, is not slow to fall into impurity. A woman without reproach is more rare than the phenix. Woman is the gate of the devil, the road to iniquity; the sting of the scorpion, in a word, a dangerous species." "Woman has no comprehension of goodness," adds Saint Gregory the Great.

Saint Augustine authorized every husband to slap his wife in the face. The Council of Toledo, in the year 400, allowed a married clerk, whose wife had sinned, to confine her in the house, to make her to fast, and to chastise her, without however attempting her life.

The canon law also permitted husbands to inflict correction on their wives, and this was not a cause for separation unless the correction exceeded its legitimate limits.

The Council of Macon, in 581, asked of itself whether woman has a soul or not. The Council of Carthage decreed that a woman could not receive any ecclesiastical order, and however holy and learned she might be she could not baptize or even speak in the church.

The Council of Nantes, in 650, decreed she could not approach the altar or touch the sacred vessels, nor wait upon the ministers of the church, nor burn incense.

By the canon law it made bigamists, heretics, the excommunicate, the incestuous, and women, incapable of benefices and offices. The canon law forbade women to become surety for another, or to act as arbitrator.

Women could not bring an accusation, unless it might be in order to pursue the remedy for an injury done to her. Her accusation never had any validity against an ecclesiastic. She could neither plead nor act as attorney in a judicial proceeding, nor testify in court, nor act as judge. According to the canon law a woman's deposition was unworthy of credence. The reason for this legal incapacity of women is found in the following precepts of the church and the canon law: "Woman was not created in the image of God, hence she ought to veil her face." "It was Adam who was betrayed by Eve, and not Eve by Adam. It is then just that man should be the master of woman that he may not fall again through the wiles of woman." "The law demands that women shall be subject to men, and that they shall be almost as their servants."

The early Christian church of England recognized the right of abbesses to hold church property, to act as the head of religious institutions, and to sign charters on a footing with the abbots; but when foreign prelates, after the time of William the Conqueror, came in and assumed the position of high justiciar, or lord chancellor, they modified the ancient English common law so that women were regarded as inferior to men, and a married woman as civilly dead.

Lord Coke, following the rules of the ecclesiastical law, ruled strongly against the rights of married women. It was enough for him to find a scriptural text which sustained the subjugation of woman to man.

Every conservative judge who reveres Coke, and every ecclesiastic who can find a scriptural text justifying the subjection of woman, is opposed to recognizing the equality of woman in civil and political rights with man. They insist that the married woman must submit to the husband, must depend upon him for protection and support, and would restore in this territory, if they could, the ecclesiastical common law of England.

In the early years of this century, women were sold at the shambles of Smithfield, England, and at other points as cattle are sold, for a few pennies, a drink of rum, or a piece of tobacco. We have outgrown such barbarities in this country. At the same time many men are so illiberal that they are ready to join hands with the priests and with the church to keep women in political and civil subjection.

In contrast with these ideas are the declarations of the following statesmen and philosophers:

In 1790, Condorcet, in his treatise on the admission of women to the rights of citizenship in France, says: "Now, the rights of men result solely from the fact that they are rational beings, susceptible of acquiring moral ideas and reasoning on those ideas. Women, having the same qualities, have the same equal rights. Either no one individual of the human kind has true rights, or all have the same, and one who votes against the right of another, whatever be that other's religion, color, or sex, from that moment forfeits his own."

Herbert Spencer says: "However much the giving of political power to women may disagree with our notions of propriety, we conclude that, being required by that first prerequisite to greater happiness, the law of equal freedom, such a concession is unquestionably right and good."

Abraham Lincoln says: "I go for all sharing the privilege of the government who assist in bearing its burdens, by no means excluding women."

Thomas Paine says: "The right of voting for representatives is the primary right by which other rights are protected. To take away this right is to reduce man to a state of slavery, for slavery consists in being subject to the will of another." W. S. BUSH.

Seattle, W. T.

NEW YORK LETTER.

Our self-constituted Centennial Celebration Committee is not having the sweetest time in the world. These gentlemen may be the most patriotic men in the Union, and the most self-sacrificing in this town, still the bulk of people are displeased with their actions, and accuse them of I-am-ism. I think the president is the only one they have consulted, but then he is rather an important personage in this to-be show. They snubbed our legislature, but were brought up to a sharp corner by proposed legislation at Albany. They are now quarreling among themselves. Stuyvesant Fish and Ward McAllister are having fist-cuffs on paper. It now looks as if Ward would be "froze out"—the immortal Ward of our noble four hundred. We are now asking with bated breath if the common herd—the "hewers of wood and drawers of water" of this patrician band of the four hundred of our noblest of all—will be permitted to view the great work of this god-like committee. For an ordinary man to obtain a ticket to the ball is as impossible as for a sinner to enter our Father's house. None but those who are able to stand Ward McAllister's inspection as to blue blood need apply. The ladies to open the ball have been selected by this select committee. The bluest of blue blood only has been considered—i. e., as interpreted by this band of patricians. The descendants of ante-revolution days may, however, be surprised to see in this list the name of Mrs. William Astor, whose ancestor, old Schermerhorn, and her husband's, John Jacob Astor, came to America long after the close of the revolutionary war. As this is a centennial affair the natural thought is, that none but the descendants of revolutionary sires should participate in it prominently. But how can New York celebrate anything without an Astor? We are toadies, we don't deny it. We worship money, we glory in it. Some of our "swells" are the sons of swill mothers, but what do we care if pigs were the pets of those old Dutch women so long as those sons are our Knickerbockers, the members of our noble four hundred? There stands our monument of fame. The pigsty of a century ago is a brown-stone front to-day.

There is a row in the Manhattan Club. Last month there was an election of governors. The contest was bitter and when the result was made known, fraud and forgery were freely charged. Even names have been mentioned; these I forbear repeating lest I might do an injustice. I cannot believe they are culpable. An investigating committee has been appointed. A bitter feeling exists in the club. The outcome no one can predict. These club rows generally are of short duration, and are of a purifying nature. This club is less political than the Union League. I have several times found its cuisine superb, and should regret exceedingly to see a shadow fall on it. I have many warm friends among its members. Its influence on politics ought to be good, as well as great. All our Democratic leaders in the city are found there. Mayor Grant will soon be called on to show his mettle. City Chamberlain Ivins has placed his resignation in the mayor's hands. A number of the heads of the departments' terms end on May 1. Grant will be measured by these appointments; this is the event of his official life. It is to be hoped he will think only of the city's good.

Business drags. There is no snap in any line. A dull summer is predicted. Winter wheat is looking well. The spring is some three weeks earlier in the northwest than last year, which promises a larger acreage of spring wheat. Wall street has not yet discounted this hope. There seems to be no power able to lift the stock market.

EUDORUS.

New York, April 19, 1889.

THE MONUMENT TO GIORDANO BRUNO.

As a general rule, I do not favor the tendency to hero-worship as expressed in the desire to erect monuments to those who trod the thorny path of persecution for our welfare, feeling that by carrying forward the thought and work of their lives, we by emulation accord them the highest possible recognition. But all rules have exceptions, and the most notable exception in history is that of the grand proto-martyr of Freethought, Giordano Bruno. My reasons why Liberal Americans should honor Bruno's memory are:

1. No true recognition has ever been given the bravest hero who ever died to benefit man.
2. The popular mind—especially in America—concedes to Galileo the honors which properly belong to Bruno, as the first public advocate of the plurality of worlds.
3. This projected monument involves the conflict between the papal and Secular power which has been waging in the Eternal City since the pope was stripped of his temporal power, and the erection of the monument will be a mortal offense to the now toothless lion that wags his impotent jaws in the seat where his predecessors sat who made fuel of Bruno's body to stop Freethought in Italy.
4. It will be a warning to those who desire to transplant the waning Romish power into the more fertile soil of our American republic that we know something of its history and diabolical acts wherever it has held sway.

It is a shame that the name of Galileo—after his inglorious recantation—is yet more familiar, and attracts greater attention and esteem as the first public advocate of the Copernican system of astronomy, than that of the intrepid martyr who preceded him to a terrible but honorable death at the stake—Giordano Bruno.

The sixteenth century was an epoch of marvelous intellectual activity—a revolt against the long-continued mental thralldom which preceded it. Never before had so many fertile brains thrown broadcast their thoughts; but the meteoric figure which now looms up higher than all his contemporaries is that of the fearless young orator, Bruno. He not only was the first during the Christian era to publicly advocate the plurality of worlds and show that the stars were suns shining by their own light, but he purposely placed that theory in the most obnoxious light before the allpowerful ecclesiastics, by adding the assumption of their habitability and his own philosophical deductions thereon. This knight-errant of the now modern philosophy antedated Galileo over thirty years, and it was charged that the professor of Padua was reviving the heresy for which Bruno was burnt. Bruno anticipated many of the most "advanced" solutions of modern science, and he is still the source from whence several celebrated thinkers draw their inspiration at the present day.

It was fit that Bruno should have been born in the village of Nolau, under the flames and amid the thunders of Vesuvius, for the mere question of erecting a monument to the memory of this linguist, orator, philosopher, satirist, dramatist, and poet, has so agitated the Eternal City that it is now mooted that the holy father may move to Madrid. At last the municipal council of Rome has granted permission for the erection of this long-deferred tribute to the Freethought martyr on the Campo de Fiori, the sacred spot where the noble Bruno was burnt.

As the whole world was benefited by his dauntless life and honored by his heroic death, the monument has an international character, and American Freethinkers are asked to contribute their quota. Let it be done quickly and generously, for the money is needed at once if the work is to be finished in May. Many will remember that the project was started some four or five years ago, but was delayed and additional expense incurred because of the refusal of the municipality to allow the monument to be erected. Among the European contributors were Victor Hugo, Herbert Spencer, Ernst Haeckel, Ernst Renan, Emile Castelar, Professor Buchner, and other eminent individuals in science and letters. The American committee are Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, Thaddeus B. Wakeman, Daniel G. Thompson, Thos. Davidson.

I am informed that the students of Rome had a grand procession on the day the decision was announced that the monument might be erected.

At fifteen years Bruno entered a convent of the Dominican order, but soon rebelled against the rules; later on, his imaginative and speculative mind began to work, and the walls of his narrow cloister became too circumscribed. He had been a close, indefatigable student; was master of many languages. Finally he began to disbelieve the dogmas of the church, and he found means of escape. He had studied books, now he studied men and nature more. Lecturing before universities in Geneva, Toulouse, Lyons, Paris, Berlin, or London, wherever he spoke he was at first greeted with outbursts of applause, but this was generally succeeded by shouts of fury and maledictions, for he was sure to be followed by the wily officers of the church. Nevertheless, he boldly proclaimed his "impious heresy" on the spot where Servetus was burnt and Vanini met his martyrdom. London was his only place of safety, and there he did the larger portion of his writing, and becoming the fast friend of Sir Philip Sidney, dedicated to him his "Spaccio dell Bestia Triumphante." The intellectual atmosphere of London chilled the fervid Freethinker. He wandered back to the continent, was offered the hospitality of a Venetian "nobleman," and this despicable host, through his priestly confessor, betrayed his guest to the officers of the Inquisition. Bruno was as bold, audacious, and unflinching before his accusers, as he was brilliant in propounding his philosophy. Add to his learning his extraordinary beauty of person, his gallant bearing, his black, kindling eyes as eloquent as his speech, a face of classic delicacy of outline, and what wonder his Romish persecutors dreaded his influence? He must be made to recant—that would be a triumph for the church better than his death. For seven long, weary years this man was kept in a dungeon, with no books, no companionship but the regular visits of his tormentors to see if he were ready to say the one word between him and the blue sky—recant. But this damp and death-dealing dungeon could not subdue the heroic soul of Bruno. When finally brought for the last time before his accusers, standing chained before them, arguing still on his theories with an eloquence almost irresistible, until condemned to that most diabolical of deaths, he only turned with supreme indifference on his executioners, and said: "This sentence gives you more alarm than it gives me." He felt himself at this supreme hour stronger than all the power of Rome. Contemplate such a character if you can without the throb of enthusiasm!

Most men may by circumstances be taught to be valiant, but it is generally when the blood is stirred by the cannon's roar, the rattle of musketry, and the clash of battle; but to meet a most horrible death with a smile, as Bruno did, is the concentrated essence of heroism. The Christian martyrs were buoyed up by fond hopes of heavenly rewards. Not so Bruno. He expected nothing, hoped for nothing, and still he met his fate—the most adverse and terrible. This was the year of the Romish jubilee, when the holy city was thronged with pilgrims from all over the world, and the burning of Bruno was one of the attractions for this crowd of worse than cannibal Christians. See this valiant Freethinker, to whom life might mean so much, led to the stake! No consolation of companionship, supported by no followers, gladdened by no approving smile, inspired by no kiss, refreshed by no tear, here is a picture of sublime heroism never equaled in history. Bruno died that truth might live. Will American Liberals do themselves and their cause a perpetual honor by aiding this monument? E. A. STEVENS.

We Give it Up.

To the Editors of Freethought:

It is not my purpose to intrude spiritualistic facts into the columns of a Freethought paper; but your explanation of the Fred Evans slate writing prompts me to say a word for the writing occurring in the presence of Dr. Stansbury, who is now in this city.

I called on the doctor and his pleasant lady last Monday, and engaged a sitting for the next morning. We were unknown to each other. I had seen them at an evening reception over a year ago, but they did not remember me, and I would not have recognized them. The doctor did not know the names of my former friends.

When washing the slates, which process I watched critically, he asked if I desired to write the names of the friends with whom I wished to communicate. This I declined, saying I would be glad to hear from any one who desired to write for me. Then he put some small pieces of pencil between two slates. He held them by one end, and I the other, above the table. In a few seconds I could hear the scratching of a pencil and feel the slate vibrating in my hand; but I held my grip firmly, looking at the doctor all the while. In fact, we were talking as unconcernedly as though nothing was going on.

In a few minutes the writing ceased. Then I opened the slates and found six messages, written with different colored pencils, and five faces sketched with pencils. To these messages were appended the names of three of my dearest friends, one being my daughter, another her father, my former husband, neither of whom were known by any one in California. How did Dr. Stansbury get those names? The other messages were of matters of which the doctor knew nothing, pertaining to my business.

Then his telegraphy was equally remarkable. The key board of his instrument is inclosed in a box, on the lids of which he holds his hands when the message is being "ticked out" by the machine. Not understanding telegraphy, I could not translate the sounds; but the first message was from my nephew, a telegraph operator who had been accidentally killed in St. Louis eight years ago. "Your nephew was named George Hunt," the doctor said, as soon as the sounding ceased. Then George gave, or purported to give, me messages from seven other friends, which were very satisfactory. Dr. Stansbury now finds him to be a superior operator; and so he was. How did Dr. Stansbury know it? I had never mentioned his name to a living person in California. This slate and these messages I have in my possession. But no one need take my word for it. Let them apply to Dr. Stansbury and test the matter themselves, if they so desire. If not, there is no offense.

Being a radical Liberal, I believe in freedom before anything. Yours for scientific truth.

MARY A. WHITE.

San Diego, Cal.

P. S.—By the way, Samuel P. Putnam has been here and given us four grand lectures. His audience steadily increased while here, and when he comes back it will be difficult to get a hall large enough for him. Colonel Ingersoll will have to look to his laurels if Mr. Putnam continues in the field. Old orthodoxy was never stirred up as he has stirred it on his last visit. We are hoping to have him come again.

M. A. W.

WOMAN to beggar: "Now, I am giving you this bread for God's sake." Beggar to woman: "Well, for Christ's sake, put a bit of butter on it."

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street.

Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.

G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address, Putnam & Macdonald.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—THE NEW AMERICAN PARTY,

A CRITICISM BY "JEFFERSON."

Price, 10 cents.

Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents.

Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

Holy Willie's Prayer.

O Thou, wha in the heavens dost dwell,
Wha, as it pleases best thyself,
Sends aye to heaven, and ten to hell,

A' for thy glory,
And no for onie guid or ill
They've done afore thee—

I bless and praise thy matchless might,
Whan thousands thou hast left in night,
That I am here afore thy sight,
For gifts an' grace,
A burning an' a shining light,
To a' this place.

What was I, or my generation,
That I should get such exaltation?
I, wha deserve such just damnation,
For broken laws,
Five thousand years 'fore my creation
Thro' Adam's cause.

When fra my mither's womb I fell,
Thou might hae plunged me into hell,
To gnash my gums, to weep and wail,
In burning lake,
Where damned devils roar and yell,
Chain'd to a stake.

Yet here I am a chosen sample,
To show thy grace is great and ample;
I'm here a pillar in thy temple,
Strong as a rock,
A guide, a buckler, an example
To a' thy flock.

O Lord, thou kens what zeal I bear,
When drinkers drink, and swearers swear,
And singing here, and dancing there,
Wi' great and sma':

For I am keepit by thy fear,
Free frae them a'.

But yet, O Lord! confess I must,
At times I'm fash'd wi' fleshly lust,
An' sometimes, too, wi' warldly trust
Vile self gets in;
But thou remembers we are dust,
Defil'd in sin.

* * * * *

May be thou lets this fleshly thorn
Beset thy servant e'en and morn,
Lest he owre high and proud should turn,
'Cause he's sae gifted;
If sae, thy hand maun e'en be borne,
Until thou lift it.

Lord bless thy chosen in this place,
For here thou hast a chosen race;
But God confound their stubborn face,
And blast their name,
Wha bring thy elders to disgrace,
And public shame.

Lord, mind Gawn Hamilton's desarts,
He drinks, an' swears, and plays at cartes,
Yet has sae monie takin' arts,
Wi' great an' sma',
Frae God's ain priests the people's hearts
He steals awa'.

An' when we chasten'd him therefor,
Thou kens how he bred sic a splore,
As set the world in a roar
O'laughin' at us;
Curse thou his basket an' his store,
Kail an' potatoes.

Lord, hear my earnest cry an' pray'r,
Against that presbyt'ry o' Ayr;
Thy strong right hand, Lord, make it bare
Upo' their heads;
Lord weigh it down, and dinna spare,
For their misdeeds.

O Lord my God, that glib-tongued Aiken,
My very heart and saul are quakin',
To think how we stood sweatin', shakin',
An' swat wi' dread,
While he wi' hingin lips gae snakin,
An' hid his head.

Lord, in the day of vengeance try him:

Lord, visit them wha did employ him,
And pass not in thy mercy by 'em,
Nor hear their pray'r:
But, for thy people's sake destroy 'em,
And dinna spare.

But, Lord, remember me an' mine
Wi' mercies temp'ral an' divine,
That I for gear an' grace may shine,
Excell'd by nane,
An' a' the glory shall be thine,
Amen, Amen. —ROBERT BURNS.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond.....	$5, 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond".....	14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,

PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church.
Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools
Price, 5 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months, 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35. for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
" Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.5
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.5
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.7
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see next column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular, readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible; instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" medical valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Temperance and Prohibition, THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.
Cloth, 75 cts.

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

Address this office

"Nature's Work is Done."

When half of Nature's work was done,
Just formed the stars, the glowing sun,
And softly blushing skies;
And wide across earth's dewy lawn
Gleamed the first glances of the morn,
And flowers began to rise;
Clad in her robes of tender green
Delighted Nature viewed the scene,
Pleased with each novel form;
And from each sweetly blooming flower,
From hill and vale and shady bower,
She called some lovely charm.

She took the balmy violet's blue,
The sweet carnation's mellow hue,
Rich with the tears of night—
Though the young beams of rising day
Had melted half those tears away
In its first stream of light.

And now in majesty arrayed,
Her last, her fairest work, she made
Almost a seraph's frame;
To animate this form was given
A gentle spirit sent from heaven,
And Woman was her name.

Hark! hark! she speaks, and silver strains,
Melodious, floating o'er the plains,
A thrilling joy impart;
A nightingale has caught the tone
And made that melting voice his own,
That vibrates on the heart.

Fair Nature cast her glance around
The glowing sky, the flowery ground,
The day diffusing sun;
On woman last, her beauteous child,
She gazed, and said, with accents mild,
"Now Nature's work is done."

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed Address, DR. K. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.

DR. FELLOWS.

Wm. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY.

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

TELEPHONE No. 655

P. O. CHILSTROM,

(Rogers & Chilstrom.)

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Commercial Business and Collections a Specialty.

Office, 415 Montgomery St., Rooms 9, 10 & 11,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Twentieth Century.

Devoted to Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.

HUGH O. PENTECOST, Editor.

Contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday Addresses of the Editor before Unity Congregation.

It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.

Its columns are open for the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories. Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription one dollar.

Sample copies free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe."

Address
Twentieth Century Publishing Co.,
No. 4 Warren street, New York.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY
NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,
NURSERYMEN.

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit
and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.

Special Attention Given to Planting
and Caring of Orchards
and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal

"ELIJAH!" "Yes, sir." "The country has apparently heard of the appointment of the great Irish patriot, Mr. Patrick Egan, to the Chilean mission." "Yes, sir; it has, indeed." "It will be a long time, Elijah, before Grover Cleveland can distance us, if he did attend the last anniversary meeting of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, I flatter myself."—Puck.

THEY were passing under the elevated railroad, and the din was almost deafening. "This bustle makes my head ache," she said. "Probably," observed he, "if you were to wear a smaller one—" "Sir!" she indignantly cried, "I mean the noise confuses me." "I beg your pardon," stammered he.—Time.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald,
504 Kearny st. San Francisco

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA.

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or The Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

YONE SANTO,

A Child of Japan.

BY E. H. HOUSE.

The Book that the American Missionary Society tried to Suppress, but Didn't."

A Splendid Story, and an Unsparing Exposure of the Missionary Business in Japan.

PRICE, 50 CENTS.

PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton, Revue on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology. Price, 50 cents.

THIS WORLD.

No. 116, COSMIAN HYMN BOOK. Tune, "Harp that once through Tara's Halls."

1. How much there is that's beautiful In this fair world of ours!

The verdure of the early spring,
The sweetly blooming flowers;
The brook that dances in the light,
The birds that carol free,
Are objects beautiful and bright,
That everywhere we see.

2. The fairy spell that childhood wears,
Its artlessness and truth;
The light that lives within the eye,
And in the smile of youth;
The impress on the manly brow,
Wrought with a shade of care,
That tell of high and noble thoughts—
How beautiful they are.

3. And life—how much is shed around
To bless and cheer us here,
When energy and strength are found
Its lesser ills to bear!
Although a cloud may sometimes rise,
A shadow sometimes rest
Upon our earthly pathway, still
'Tis beautiful and blest.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Millman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration Itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—

"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to
L. K. WASHBURN,
Revere, Mass.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 18.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - MAY 4, 1889.

THE Chronicle honored itself, but must have surprised the public, by publishing last Sunday a portrait of Thomas Paine among those of other Revolutionary heroes.

J. CHRIST is the name of a man who keeps a wayside house on the San Bruno road, San Francisco. When he turns water into wine the process is not regarded as miraculous.

It sometimes costs more to get missionaries home from heathen lands than it cost originally to send them out. The Revs. Taylor, Edwards, and Hooper, who were captured by Bushiris and held for ransom, have been released on the payment of £1,000, the sum demanded by their captors, in default of which the cannibals of Zanzibar would have eaten them. As an exchange remarks, it is a high price for meat.

AFTER all that the Spiritualists have said and done in defense of Theosophy, Madam Blavatsky's letter to the national Theosophical convention at Chicago denouncing Spiritualists as enemies and "blind worshipers of illusionary phantoms of the dead" sounds rather inconsiderate, not to say ungrateful. Believers in the philosophy of Spiritualism might retort by saying that Theosophists are as a rule blind worshipers of Madam Blavatsky.

THE writer of "Undertones" in the Chronicle says, with reference to the Samoan wrecks: "And every now and again the storm sweeps ships and men out of existence, the earthquake shakes down our buildings, the flames carry everything before them, and when the storm and the earthquake and fire are over, a still small voice seems to whisper to trembling mankind, 'I am still here.'" It is some comfort to know that the author of the "still small voice" is still here. From his inactivity when he might make himself useful it is sometimes inferred that he has taken to the woods.

WHENEVER the queen of England devotes a penny to any charitable object the event is telegraphed across the Atlantic at considerable expense to publishers of American newspapers, and Anglomaniacs sing "God Save the Queen." As an instance Victoria recently sent £50 to the families of a number of fishermen drowned during a severe gale, and toadying newspapers gushed over the circumstance with the usual amount of drivel. All authorities agree, however, that the queen is penurious as a miser, and what she gives to charity comes not from her heart, but from an allowance of £13,000 made annually from the government for eleemosynary purposes.

LAST week in San Francisco was not destitute of exciting events. One hoodlum shot another dead upon the street; a pugilist met his death in a slogging match; a prize fight between a white and colored ruffian convulsed the community; several non-fatal shooting scrapes, involving more or less scandal, took place; a woman was decapitated by a horse-car; a policeman who had committed murder was found guilty of manslaughter; and during the whole time a revolting case of blackmail occupied the attention of the courts. The reversion to old-time lawlessness suggests the necessity of old-time methods of repressing crime.

MR. S. P. PUTNAM

Will lecture in San Francisco, Sundays,
May 5, 12, 19, and 26, 1889,

—AT—
UNION SQUARE HALL

421 Post Street.

SUBJECTS:

SUNDAY EVE., MAY 5, "The Past and The Present."

NEWS AND NOTES.

Norwalk pursues the even tenor of its way. It lies in the sunshine, and the waves of speculation have seldom dashed upon its shores. Nevertheless it is a balmy spot and all kinds of fruits flourish in its broad meadows, edged with eucalyptus groves. So far as producing is concerned, these lands are as valuable as any in California. The village has not grown much since I was here two years ago, but the look is ahead. One would not think that this little burg could give much of a Freethought assembly, and perhaps if I depended simply upon the "town" I might not have had a baker's dozen, but the country is well settled all about, and from this rural territory our supplies are drawn.

The orthodox under the championship of the South Methodist church endeavored to "freeze" us out, or perhaps warm us out, by a series of revival meetings. They had imported a kind of "Sam Jones" from Georgia who could make the rafters ring with thunder tones. They also gathered in a choir of young people, and everything on their side was "joy and festive." The meeting-house was full, and some conversions made, and it did look as if they had the "swim." But our hall was crowded along side the sanctuary itself, and it was a drawn battle so far as numbers were concerned. Such increased interest was manifested in Freethought that three lectures were given instead of two, and the audiences were larger each succeeding evening. I have not had the inspiration of hope and progress anywhere more than in this unambitious hamlet.

There is a large sprinkling of Liberals in Norwalk, but, as is generally the case, a few have to do all the work, but the work proves effective and the results are favorable, and more will be ready to bear the burden hereafter.

Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Coward and family make a goodly host for the Liberal cause—down to the baby, who has made its advent since my last visit, and has no shadow of orthodoxy amidst its smiles and tears. Mr. Coward has been proof against many a boycott, for he has never kept his Liberal opinions in the background. A few years ago it was proposed to keep him off the election board because he was an Infidel, but nothing of that kind is thought of now, and he is one of the officials of the county and has the privilege of taxing church property to its full value. Mrs. Coward is equally a whole-souled Liberal, and the children partake of the natural air of liberty.

I also had generous entertainment at the ranch of Samuel G. Baker. Mr. Baker is a philosopher who has left professional life for the felicities of agriculture, but he has brought with him a fund of information which is quite remarkable. He has studied the human body with keen observation, and through the body discovers the laws of mind, and there is not much orthodoxy, although there may be a sprinkling of religious sentiment, in his theories of man's origin and destiny. He came from England thirty years ago, and opened up this land when it was comparatively a wilderness, and has made a beautiful homestead. Mrs. Baker is entirely outside the orthodox fold, but lingers amid the dreams of immortality, which were born before orthodoxy, and will outlast all its ghostly heavens. Dreams are wise if one will dream only of the good and happy. The atmosphere of Freethought prevails in this hospitable home, and my two days' sojourn was one of absolute comfort, where the flowers bloom and the tall trees make shadow and music.

The orthodox had their big choir, but we had our enchanting strains also, and Professor S. Holdgate held our fort by the magic of his martial reveille. He is a genius in his way, and a Liberal to the core. He can make the tumult of delightful sounds flow in exquisite harmony. He was assisted by Miss Philips and Professor White, and so, in the musical contest, the piano and violin came out ahead of the "psalms and hymns." At any rate, the hearty applause of the audience testified that our banners were in the front, dancing to the bugle notes.

James Hay, the village blacksmith, is the good counsellor of all. When Christians cannot agree among themselves they ask friend Hay to help them out, and yet they say he is going to the bad place. Nobody in need ever goes to Hay's shop without getting a lift.

Over forty names signed the roll of the California State Liberal Union. We are rolling up a membership of two thousand, nearly, and still they come.

O. D. Thompson, Sen., came all the way from Los Angeles to the lectures, and it is good to meet this genial veteran who has the enthusiasm of youth in his nature still. Mr. and Mrs. O. D. Thompson, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Vance, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Sproul—and in Mrs. Sproul I found a far-off cousin, for whose father came from Massachusetts where the genealogical tree doth flourish—E. A. White, of Anaheim, F. Sievert, Geo. W. Carpenter and family, Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Johnston, and others are on the Union roll, and Norwalk will not be in the rear of the grand army.

The meeting at Los Angeles Turnverein Hall, Sunday evening, April 21, was a grand success. Nearly a thousand people were present, and the audience was appreciative of the points made concerning the theology of Moody and Sam Jones. At the close of the lecture it was decided to have a second meeting on Monday evening, and this was largely attended. What is needed at Los Angeles is a month, or three months' campaign. There are thousands of Liberals in this city, but, as it is, a few must do all the work, raise money, and take the chances. Without doubt, by continued effort, an audience of two thousand could be gathered here for Sunday evenings, and eventually a powerful society be maintained. When once the necessity for work and organization is presented there are hundreds who will cordially respond, and when the links of association are made they will grow as life itself grows.

There is no doubt that Los Angeles will be a great commercial center. It has the elements of a solid prosperity. It has a fine surrounding country upon which to build. Business is no more dull than in the majority of cities East and West. It is the contrast with the extraordinary rush of the last few years that makes it seem as if the bottom had dropped out. But the bottom is not dropped out. There is plenty of material yet for a flourishing city. Railroads will make this a large depot of exchange. When the beautiful valleys and foot-hills are well cultivated this will be a vast industrial point, and eternal spring and summer will still make attractive to the tourist and dweller alike the land of the vineyard and orchard, luxuriant field and musical grove in whose shadow shimmers a cool retreat from tropic suns.

So the "Queen of the Angels" shall be for reform, for progress, for beauty, and all the old saints shall be redolent of fair humanities.

My sturdy ally, J. E. Clark, keeps whirling the electric batteries of thought in his "little church round the corner," and the sparks fly. The Liberal spirits find this a useful rendezvous, and from the gatherings here much is achieved. The churches endeavor to bring the "providence of God" to bear upon the uncompromising Freethinker, and break up his business, but so far have not succeeded.

I was quite delighted, on Saturday, to meet here our bishop of Troy, Robert Wade, who used to keep things going lively "down East" where orthodoxy bears some of its heaviest guns. I remember when we called upon one of his "canons" or "deacons," Peter Granjean, of Cohoes, N. Y., wending our "pastoral" way over the fair hills along the banks of the Hudson, and now we have met again in the campaign on the other side of the continent, where, over thirty years ago, friend Wade struck these golden shores. Since then he has returned and lived for many years in Troy, N. Y., but now he comes to his first love, and I guess he will stay. He likes California. Mrs. Wade is with him, and has been here for several months. Our friends are from Old England, but their hearts beat true under the starry flag to the genius of the land of liberty. They will be a merry addition to our forces on the coast, for they know how to "drive dull care away" and make the most of fortune's smiles.

Our bright and thoroughly self-sacrificing worker, C. Severance, beats against wind and tide with cheerful endurance. He is a good comrade as ever was, and knows what the battle of life is. His philosophy is wrought from experience and not from fancy. His brilliant articles in our various Freethought journals show that he is a keen thinker concerning passing events. He writes from the standpoint of the independent working man, and represents, in the tremendous struggles of modern civilization, the heart and mind of a vast multitude. To every earnest man and woman there are problems of infinite significance. Life is a greater tragedy than death itself to many as they sweat and toil in the fields of time. Friend Severance touches these world-problems with the courage and comprehension of sincere conviction.

B. A. Stephens, whom I met at San Diego, is an enthusiastic field officer of reform. He was determined to have a big meeting at Los Angeles, and he succeeded. He was ably seconded by Severance and Clark—and without the patience and generous labors of these men I should not have had so splendid an audience in Turnverein Hall. For days they walked the streets to interest Liberals and to raise funds. The success was beyond all expectation, and a great vantage ground is gained for future endeavors. Mr. Stephens was once a clergyman himself, and he understands the business methods of orthodoxy, and these business methods, unlike theology, are based upon hard common sense, and can be adopted, many of them, in the Freethought movement with good results. My thanks are due to Mr. Stephens for his entiring efforts.

I was glad to meet again our ardent Prohibitionist Liberal, Mr. Bruce, who is now settled in Los Angeles in the service of Uncle Sam and Dan Cupid. I don't understand how he can be a Prohibitionist, but he is a splendid go-ahead Freethinker, and has his own ideas and sticks to them. He promises a "red-hot" article for FREETHOUGHT when the spirit moves, which will be welcome.

S. Calhoun still buffets fortune, and would have been a millionaire if it hadn't been for the boundless generosity of his heart. It is better than gold, however, to greet these magnificent pioneers of the coast. Friend Hudson runs the Express on good Liberal principles, and landed me, safe and sound, at the Southern Pacific station.

I enjoyed the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred. S. Luce, on the heights which overlook the city. Mrs. Luce is still a member of the Christian church and likes Christianity in a vague sort of way, so long as it presents its good-natured side. But when the minister preaches against Freethought, without much regard to facts or justice, she becomes anti-Christian, and frankly admits that those outside the church are better than those inside of it, and has the courage of her opinions, and is not afraid to speak the plain truth, though baptized into the fold. In fact, she is a Freethinker in the best meaning of that word.

Mr. Luce, although a young man, is quite a veteran in the cause, and has done good work, especially in the press, with articles of spicy information. He believes that Freethought has a future and his highest hopes and activities are for this cause.

The little girl, Essie Ingersoll Lacy, with her bright eyes and smile, proclaims that she is true to her name, and is born for the sunny downs of freedom. She doesn't like the Sunday-school, but she does like the singing-school and the dancing-schools, and calls them "glad tidings."

John Riffin is nearly eighty years of age, but he was at the lectures both nights, and so in him the gray of evening is the white of dawn. He says that life has been serene to him, and when it is over he will have nothing to regret. He has taken good care of John, and John has repaid the benefit with a happy and generous life. So the account is square, and the sickle of death will cut a golden sheaf. Calmly, gently, like a little child, our friend passes on to the inevitable without a shadow on his silver pathway. The evening is like the morning. Eugene Riffin, his son, also gives good greeting to the secular pilgrim with the grip of the true Californian, which means a warm heart and a healthy brain.

Colonel Voss is staunch as ever for the flag. He and Mr. Clark are the pioneers in our cause here, and are as ready as ever to push on in spite of difficulties. Colonel Voss is one of the most prominent men in the city, and ranks high in his profession. Like a loyal soldier he can bear the brunt of the battle through defeat to victory.

Mr. E. Lemme, father of Secretary Emil Lemme; the Schroeders, L. Lichtenberger, L. Schlegel, Thomas Cotton, Harlow Gilbert, and many others, good and true, have warmed my heart and brightened hope, and made the heavens ruddy with the fires of advancing day.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Piny were present from Pomona, where the Christians have just triumphed, and forced their iron rule under the flag of prohibition. If Liberals do not perceive the animus of this ecclesiastical party they are blind indeed. Our friends promise that Pomona shall fall into line when next the campaign opens, which will be about November.

I went Sunday morning to the church of Rev. Dr. Fay, Unitarian preacher. He is pretty radical and broadly humanitarian. The form of the old theology was, however, present, and I felt the shadows of it upon me. I wondered how it was that I had once been satisfied with this childish optimism, which is a dream and nothing more. The phrase, "Let us worship God," uttered so solemnly, had no meaning to my heart. It was as far off from present hope as the still more orthodox one, "In Adam's fall we sinned all." Dr. Fay is undoubtedly doing a good work. He is eloquent and earnest, and preaches a gospel of real humanity. He must, alas! have his fling at Ingersoll, with true clerical assumption, as if Ingersoll were only an iconoclast, and did not represent whatever is noble and lovely in nature and man and woman. I wonder if these apparently intelligent and Liberal clergymen ever read Ingersoll, and realize the splendor of hope, of joy, of life which he gives on every burning page.

Mr. Glover has fitted up a hall in his own house, and Miss Susie Johnson is lecturing there Sunday evenings.

Dr. Taylor lectures Sunday evenings at Good Templar's Hall, 108 N. Main street. Unfortunately, his note, left for me at the hall, was misplaced, and I did not read its contents until Tuesday morning, too late to give notices at my lectures. Dr. Taylor announces a grand union picnic of friends of Liberalism from Los Angeles, Santa Ana, and other Southern California towns, at Santa Barbara and Summerland, on Saturday and Sunday, May 11 and 12. Round trip tickets, $3; inquire of Dr. Taylor, 27 E. Pine street, Los Angeles. Readers of FREETHOUGHT please take notice.

I must tell friend Wilson, of Davenport, W. T., that I met his sister and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Rieman, at Los Angeles, and they are on the roll of Freethought and give greeting. Our friends can shake hands in the broad domain of "News and Notes."

After the lectures I spent a few days with Grandmother Saunders and her family at Verdugo, and rested to my heart's content while the hot days rolled by over shining hills and plains, and the cool nights came with flickering stars and wandering sea-breeze. Tuesday we all went on a picnic, with the unclouded heaven to charm our way. There were the boys, Azro, Harry, and Joe—young America all. Percy Seymour, of the doughty line of Professor Seymour; Albert Ward, the Hercules of our party, who guarded us from all danger, and piloted through rough and thorny ways; Mr. Godfrey Paterson, Miss Orlie, Mrs. A. W. Graham, and Mrs. Saunders. Over the broad tablelands we voyaged, with sunny prospects on every side—glittering hills, flowery vales, groves jeweled with fruit and bloom—past Garvanza to brilliant Pasadena—through Orange avenue, adorned with the glory of the season; handsome dwellings on either side, in the midst of roses, lawns, and magnificent trees—on to the bosom of the hills and woods, where the dashing rivulet winds. Underneath a big tree we encamp, while the unloosed horses seek refreshment in the glade. The first thing, of course, was dinner, and by a happy coincidence all were hungry at the same time. The first thing the children did after dinner was to take off their stockings and shoes, and plunge into the brook, scaling and tumbling off the rocks, and darting about like so many fishes, as if they were born to the water, and the sands were their native element. I could only think of Ingersoll's exquisite rhythm, "O rippling river of laughter," as I watched their countless pranks. What would we do without this world of golden infancy forever breaking on the shores of our darker experience. How their tiny fingers, and lithe limbs, and floating tresses wave for us the most sweet pictures of content, and life is glorious because the child is forever born. We were all "under age" that happy afternoon, while the sun was sinking to its gorgeous couch. When it touched the rim of the encompassing hills the harnessed horses bore us again to the uplands, from nature's solitude to the harvest fields of man. Winding up the long, broad hill for hundreds of feet, a most entrancing and majestic prospect lay before us—in the misty, splendid twilight, the arrows of the sun faintly glimmering over the stealing ranks of clouds, that seemed to think now was their time to conquer the bright sky-god. Far off the sea tide could be discerned, and beyond this the Catalina Islands in dark, purple robes, while the cities of Santa Ana, Anaheim, Los Angeles, dotted the immense expanse—a vast, breathing picture, a hundred miles one way and thirty the other, with every variety of form and color in its superb magnificence. It was like a mighty jewel sparkling and fading upon the tawny breast of night, as if the day, by its magic, would woo the night to tenderest kisses and softest stars.

So the days have gone and inspirations have come, and hopes and memories delightful are in the varied rest and activity of this April week, and it greets May with smiles surpassing all tears. The rainbow is on the cloud, and the winds make music in the palaces of morn.

I shall return again November next, after my Northern trip, and Los Angeles, Santa Ana, Orange, Anaheim, Norwalk, Pomona, Perris, San Jacinto, San Pasqual, San Diego, and southward, must keep the camp-fires all ablaze, and fling their thousand darts upon the tumbling walls of superstition.

I have received from a staunch friend of Liberalism who in better days never failed to do his part generously, an appeal for a chance to do work with some well-to-do Liberal. He writes:

"I understand how to take care of horses and drive them; would make a good coachman or a good hand to oversee livery business. I also know how to scale logs or lumber. I served Uncle Sam from April '61 to August '65, and contracted during my service disease that will last as long as I live—for which the government grants me the munificent sum of six dollars per month. I am able to be up and around all the time, but cannot work where I have to stoop or lift much."

I can vouch for the honesty and steadfastness of my friend. We have been comrades together in good fortune. Now that ill luck has come, I want generous Liberals to help him to work that he can do. He does not want charity, but an opportunity to labor as his physical ability will allow. He is a man of skill and intelligence. From a natural pride he does not wish to give his name publicly, but those who desire to communicate with him can write directly to me.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

April 27, 1889.

APRIL 30.

A CENTENARY ODE.

From the windows of the office, looking down upon the street,
I reviewed the vast procession upon centenary day,
At the junction where the Kearny road and California meet,
As the marchers turned the angle in a military way.

I was joined in this diversion by some patriotic friends,
Who improved the gorgeous outlook which the corner here affords,
For to gaze upon the soldiers that our local station lends,
And the hifalutin officers with silver-plated swords.

Mr. Schou came in from Oakland in his holiday attire,
And when he saw the people from the window where he sat,
He observed that a collection was the height of his desire,
But we forcibly prevented him from passing round the hat.

Freeman Parker, Petaluma, who can sing a lively song,
Or manipulate the violin with pliant finger-joint,
Brought a pretty little maiden friend of his with him along,
To witness the procession as it passed a given point.

Brother Miller, an expounder of the scientific truth,
Who addresses our society on every Sunday night;
Mr. Walker, who, though aged, still preserves the heart of youth,
And who brought an opera glass with him to stimulate his sight.

And printer, editor, and staff, from thought of labor free,
For several brief but happy hours held sills of windows down,
And waved their hats and handkerchiefs in patriotic glee
While the wind blew through the whiskers of the genial Mr. Browne.

There were wide platoons of officers to keep the highway clear,
And cavalry and infantry, and sailors from the deep,
Artillery of gatling guns, with batteries in the rear,
Which made a noble spectacle as one could wish to see.

There were pioneers and native sons, and veterans of the war,
And miner camps and vaqueros and schooners of the plain,
The members of the Turnerbund and gallant Schuetzen corps,
With numerous Grand Army posts formed into line again.

The banners wave and hughes blow, the drums make stirring sound,
The people cheer as many feet keep step to martial time,
Distinguished citizens ride by, salaaming all around,
And the hucksters sell bananas by the dozen for a dime. M.

A REPUDIATED ORGAN.

Some time ago a paper published in Chicago under the name of the "Knights of Labor," George E. Detwiler editor, made a vicious attack upon the American Secular Union on account of that organization's opposition to the Blair Sunday bill. We pointed out wherein the "Knights of Labor" was not only mistaken but deliberately dishonest. The editor after many days rejoins as follows:

"The so-called FREETHOUGHT newspaper ought to change its name to 'Free Mud.'"

As an organ of the body of workingmen called the Knights of Labor, the paper "Knights of Labor" might be worth replying to, but that it has no influence with that organization appears from the appended item:

"At a meeting of District Assembly 24, representing the various branches of the Chicago Knights of Labor, a resolution was adopted, unanimously, warning the public against the alleged labor organ which attacked the Secular Union some weeks ago. The resolution reads:

"Whereas, It has become notorious that a certain publication is palming itself upon the public as the official organ of the Knights of Labor and organized labor generally; therefore be it

"Resolved, That District Assembly 24 does hereby notify and caution all whom it may concern that the publication known as the 'Knights of Labor' published in this city is repudiated, and is not the official organ of the order in this district."

We have to decline changing our title as suggested by Editor Detwiler. It would be an infringement, as, under the circumstances and according to the technical language of the day, the "Knights of Labor's" name is mud.

A PROUD DISCIPLE OF CALVIN.

When the Rev. J. M. Foster, a National Reform agitator, lectured in Indianapolis a short time ago, the Sentinel, of that city, said that "he seemed to be the incarnation of John Calvin." Instead of repudiating the character ascribed to him the Rev. Mr. Foster appeared to regard the comparison as flattering to himself, and said: "We do not object to that. It is no reflection on the sentiments advanced."

In saying this Mr. Foster doubtless relied upon the ignorance of the public as to the character of Calvin, who was one of the most infamous persecutors that ever lived. Fairly tried and justly dealt with, he would have been hanged for murder. Every Freethinker is familiar with the great crime that blackened Calvin's character forever—the burning at the stake of Michael Servetus, of which he afterwards boasted in a letter to the Marquis de Poet, dated September 30, 1561. In this letter he said: "Above all, do not fail to rid the country of those zealous scoundrels who stir the people to revolt against us. Such monsters should be exterminated, as I have exterminated Michael Servetus, the Spaniard."

Servetus was not Calvin's only victim. Garrido, in his "History of Persecution," asserts that "the history of Geneva, during the twenty years that followed the return of Calvin, composes one of the most blood-stained pages that is presented to us by the chronicles of intolerance. In it we find even sorcery punished by a fiery death. During the space of sixty years, the archives of that city show one hundred and fifty instances." Mr. J. M. Wheeler, a writer for the London Freethinker, has made a partial list of those who were persecuted for their religious opinions under Calvin's rule. Here is the record:

"Jaques Gruet, whose great crime in the eyes of Calvin was having written in one of his books the words Touties folies (all follies). Accused of heresy and blasphemy, he was tortured and put to death by order of Calvin at Geneva, July 26, 1547.

"Giovanni Valentino Gentilis, of Cozenza, an Italian heretic who fled to Geneva to avoid persecution. At the instigation of Calvin he was thrown into prison. Fear of sharing the fate of Servetus made him recant. He was afterward beheaded at Berne.

"Antoine d'Argilleries, who was at first a Jacobin monk and afterwards a Protestant preacher, was tortured several times, and afterward decapitated and his head nailed to the gibbet (1561), for having eight years previously taken the part of Servetus against Calvin at Pont de Veyle.

"Giovanni Paolo Alciati, of Savigliani, took refuge in Geneva, whence he was obliged to fly. Calvin obtained against him a decree of banishment.

"Giorgio Biandrata also had to fly to escape the anger of Calvin, who heard of his anti-Trinitarian views.

"Matteo Gribaldi, a jurisconsult, who took the part of Servetus, was ordered to quit the town. Beza, with Christian charity, said that the plague which took him off in 1564 took the place of executioner to this heretic.

"Other Italians who were banished from Geneva were Hyppolyte de Carignan, Nicolo Gallo, Baptisto Gustiniani, Silvestro Telio, and Fausto Zucchi.

"Jerome Bolsec, a physician of Lyons, who followed Calvin to Geneva, was imprisoned, and after long detention banished for differing from Calvin on predestination.

Guillaume du Bois was imprisoned, put into irons, made to stand in shirt and barefoot; and banished for having said that Calvin had retracted one of his writings.

"Thivent Bellot, tortured and banished for having refused to take oath. "Guillaume Guanier, of Paris, banished under pain of the lash, after having had a dogmatic discussion with Calvin.

"Matthew Antoine, condemned to cry mercy and perpetual banishment under pain of the lash (1556), for having said that heretics should not be burnt.

"Sebastian Castellio was also deprived of his ministry and banished for the same offence, and for having maintained that Solomon's song was sensual.

"Toussaint Mesquin, of Dompierre, condemned to go barefooted in shirt, and banished under pain of being hung, for having attacked the doctrine of predestination.

"Antoine Narbert, printer of Dauphine, condemned to have the tongue pierced with a hot iron, and banished under pain of decapitation, for having reviled Calvin when in a state of drunkenness.

"Denis Billonet, of Boussac en Berry, a printer's corrector, condemned to be whipped through the town, and marked on the forehead with a hot iron, and banished under pain of death for having spoken ill of the holy predestination of God."

Although the list of persecutions here included is far from complete, it is sufficient to brand the name of Calvin with everlasting infamy, and none but those who still believe, as the Rev. Mr. Foster evidently does, in the extirpation of heretics, would without protest allow themselves to be likened to the Presbyterian fiend of Geneva. It is perhaps because the Presbyterian conception of God makes him a monster whom no human power could ever equal that the Presbyterians revere the character of John Calvin, who, as Ingersoll once remarked, was as near like the God of the Old Testament as his health permitted.

A CHICAGO judge and jury—the judge a Presbyterian minister and the jury four Presbyterian elders—finds that Mrs. Kinnehan is guilty of blasphemy, apostasy, and heresy, and therefore worthy of expulsion from the church. Mrs. Kinnehan recently joined the Beekmanites, a religious sect who worship the Rev. G. J. Schweinfurth as Christ. She has stated in public that she believed Christ had appeared on earth in the person of Schweinfurth and worshiped him as such. She was fully satisfied of the fact, and there was nothing that could change her views. What probably caused all the trouble was the woman attending a secret prayer meeting and interrupting the regular exercises by speaking about the new Christ. Three of the male Beekmanites were present, and they also attempted to speak, but were ejected by one of the deacons, who became so excited that he kicked the men out. At the trial Attorney William Marshall, prosecutor, stated the charges: That the woman on trial had stated her belief that Christ had reappeared, and that she worshiped him in the person of the Rev. Mr. Schweinfurth. To the charges, one and all, Mrs. Kinnehan pleaded not guilty. She refused to have any counsel appointed to defend her, saying that she was able to defend herself. When asked to swear she refused to do so, and opening her Bible read passages showing that it was proper to swear not at all. She said, however, that she had been taught by the preaching of the church that Christ was coming on earth, and was now fully satisfied that Schweinfurth was Christ. Nothing could change her views. The jury found the defendant guilty as above. Schweinfurth, the alleged Christ, came to Chicago a few years ago not worth a nickel. He now has one of the finest farms in that section of the country, and is worth over $50,000. The messianic business pays better in Illinois than it did in Judea.

RELIGIOUS circles in Eureka, Humboldt county, are badly exercised just now over one thing and another. Dr. Schlesinger, of the Carrier Dove, is loose among them, mystifying the elect with his spiritual phenomena; and, added to this disturbing element from the outer and satanic side, the Rev. R. D. Clark has just delivered a trenchant sermon in the Baptist church in opposition to the effort now being made to establish Sunday observance by United States law, denouncing it as an attempt to unite church and state, and as obnoxious to the principles of religious and civil freedom. The citizens were so highly pleased with the Rev. Dr. Clark's position that they invited him to repeat the discourse in the opera-house, which he did before a crowded assemblage.

ONE of the most despicable bills introduced into the Albany N. Y., legislature during the late session, says Dr. Foote's Health Monthly, was one amending the penal code, and providing that a person not authorized by law to practice medicine or surgery in that state should make no attempt to cure or heal disease in any manner, either with or without the administering of medicine, any one doing such a kindly deed being liable to action for misdemeanor and to fine and imprisonment. Dr. Foote adds: "We have the pleasure to announce that the bill has been 'tabled indefinitely.' We wish that all the medical bills might be thus disposed of, for they have but one object in view, and that is to establish medical monopoly."

POSTMASTER-GENERAL WANAMAKER has issued an order that hereafter the post-office department be closed on Sunday to clerks and all employees, except the required watchmen, engineers, and firemen. This out of respect for the Lord's day, though it is difficult to discern wherein the work of a clerk is a greater violation of the Sabbath than that of the men retained on duty. If Jehovah cannot appreciate the compliment of closing the post-office department of a great country like this, to the extent of protecting the property involved without the assistance of watchmen and firemen, he is not worthy of the great honor done him.

CONCERNING the marine disaster in Apia harbor the Christian Statesman newspaper says: "While the war ships of Germany and the United States were lying facing each other in the harbor at Samoa, God blew upon them, and in one night scattered and destroyed them." And we are called upon by a presidential proclamation to thank this monster instead of indicating him.

LAST Sunday evening's meeting of the San Francisco Free-thought Society was well attended, and the exercises were perhaps the most interesting of any yet held. Further notice will appear later. There is no inauguration day next week.

It gives us pleasure to note that Messrs. Harman and Walker, of Valley Falls, Kan., have been acquitted of the Comstock charge. The verdict is a righteous one, and a short term of duress for their accusers would be equally so.

WARRANTS on the criminal charges against the Rev. Mr. James, of Long Beach, were duly served, and he was locked up in jail. He found bail in the sum of $500 and is still at large with a big pistol in his pocket.

SUMMERLAND, near Santa Barbara, where the Spiritualists are forming a colony, has already sixteen permanent residents, with several new buildings contracted for. May 9, a grand pilgrimage of the faithful begins from this city, and the new land of promise will be the scene of a "pentecostal picnic."

THE Liberals of Oregon will hold a State Convention at Silverton, Marion county, June 22 and 23. Mr. S. P. Putnam will be present to present the necessity and methods of Liberal organization.

AN aged man in clerical garb is reported to be selling improper books around town, the Bible among the rest.

BOOKS.

We have for sale at this office, among other works:

"Yone Santo," see advertisement.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible." 15 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Annual" for 1889. 25 cents.

"Liberty and Morality," by W. S. Bell. 15 cents.

"The System of Nature," by Baron D'Holbach. $2.

"Robert Elsmere," by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Price, 50 cents.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

Judge Maguire's "Ireland and the Pope," a history of papal intrigues against Irish liberty. Price, 50 cents.

Taylor's "Diegesis," by the Rev. Robert Taylor. A discovery of the Origin, Evidences, and early history of Christianity. $2.

"Looking Backward," a socialistic romance which has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin of Industrial Slavery," by Edward Bellamy. Price, 50 cents.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Philip A. Bell, editor of the Elevator, the organ of the colored population of San Francisco, died on the 26th. He was eighty-one years old, and during the abolition days was associated with the famous anti-slavery agitators.—It is estimated that the natural products and manufactures of California this year will be worth $400,000,000. According to this, the people of the state will earn an average of $400 each.—The ship Richard P. Buck, from Philadelphia to San Francisco, burned to the water's edge near Bermuda. Loss, $200,000.—Dr. F. A. P. Barnard, late president of Columbia College, New York city, died April 27, of paralysis, aged eighty years.—A girl at Los Angeles is suing a man named Every for seduction and breach of promise. She is from Missouri, and according to her testimony Every gave her a Bible, exhorted her to be a good Christian, wronged her, and then ran away. Every is a pillar of the church.—Four years ago Alfred S. Porter, a law student at Portland, Or., fell heir to $50,000. A short time ago, at Richmond, Va., he lost his last $500 in a game of poker, and committed suicide by shooting himself through the head.—Pioneer and patriot Philip A. Roach died in this city, April 27, at the age of 69 years. He had a long history as a public man, politician, and journalist.—The Samoan commission has arrived at Berlin and had a pleasant interview with Bismarck.—One pugilist killed another by a blow over the heart at the Cremorne Theatre, in this city, last week.—Morality has received a boom in San Pedro. A committee of citizens has tarred and feathered a Lothario in the name of the Lord.

The St. Louis express train jumped the track near Hamilton, Ont., last Sunday morning. Two cars telescoped and took fire, crushing and burning seventeen persons to death. A dozen others were badly injured.—Secretary of State Blaine is seriously ill with muscular rheumatism.—The Theosophists are holding a national convention at Chicago.—The conference of the ministers of the Anglican, Presbyterian, and Methodist churches, held at Toronto, Ont., to consider the question of the organic unity of all Protestant bodies closed with a recommendation that the churches appoint delegates to another convention to be held next year.—An anti-Jesuit meeting was held at Montreal April 25. The whole question was considered and the action of the Dominion government and the provincial legislature freely discussed. The impression seemed to be that a crisis was at hand, and that it became Anglo-Saxons to prepare for a blow which it was felt must come. Charlton, member of Parliament, said that there was no hope of preserving intact the French language and institutions. If the present state of affairs continued the church of Rome would soon possess two-thirds of the estate of the province.—H. B. Spofford, the historian, died at Rutland, Vt., April 23.—George Francis Train professes to be fasting. He still occupies his seat in Madison Square Park, New York, and is more than ever an object of curiosity.—Connecticut will submit a constitutional prohibition amendment to a vote of the people. A similar amendment has but recently been overwhelmingly defeated in New Hampshire and Massachusetts.—Mrs. Josephine Kirkham, sister of General Drake, of Des Moines, the founder of the Drake University, was arraigned in the police court of Chicago, April 25, for shoplifting. Her husband is editor of the Christian Advocate, and pastor of the First Christian church. She confessed her guilt and was not prosecuted.

Henry George preached his single-tax doctrines in Glasgow, Scotland, last Sunday, to one of the largest gatherings ever held in that city. A Presbyterian clergyman conducted the religious portion of the services, and church choirs sang hymns.—Ex-Mayor Hewitt, of New York, is in London, and some of the admirers of his independent attitude toward the Irish vote talk of giving him a public banquet.—Dispatches from St. Petersburg say that arrests of Nihilists are constantly being made. The police of St. Petersburg believe that dynamite bombs secretly manufactured at Zurich, Switzerland, have been conveyed to Russia, and that the plotters are awaiting a favorable opportunity to use them.—A considerable falling off is reported in the income for the past year of the Scotch United Presbyterian church. In 1887 the total sum contributed was £100,232, but in 1888 the amount was £96,307.

ANOTHER ONE.

We learn from the San Antonio Daily Express of the existence of another converted Infidel. He is lecturing in San Antonio, and the following is the opening paragraph of his speech, as reported by the Express:

I was an Infidel for twenty years and taught disbelief in the Christian religion under the auspices of the central organization. I have been the friend and follower of Ingersoll. I have been in the prize-ring, and it was for an offense against the laws of Canada that I was imprisoned. It was in that jail in Canada that I realized the wrong of my past life. I was changed, and the change was brought about through the influence of the little tear-stained, thumb-marked Bible which my mother sent me.

He goes under the name of J. S. Merriman, and now makes a speciality of preaching to the poor. We have not the slightest doubt that he has been in jail, and if lying were a criminal offense we have no more doubt he would be there again. When and where did the central organization of Freethought employ him, and when and where did he enjoy the high honor of possessing the friendship of Colonel Ingersoll? Places and dates are quite important in conversions of this sort.—The Truth Seeker.

Hebrew and Christian Marriages.

When a Jew marries a Christian girl she has invariably a good time; but when a Christian marries a Jewess she has a hell upon earth very soon after marriage, even though he be an ignorant pauper and she a highly cultivated woman, coming from good stock and financially well endowed. A Jew rarely regrets having married out of his faith, but a Jewess, always.—Public Opinion.

THE London correspondent of the Washington Star recently cabled the following item: "Mrs. Ward has already received £2,000 from the sale of 'Robert Elsmere.' She plumes herself that she has given the heaviest blow to Christianity that it has received in this century."

Eureka!

To the Editors of Freethought:

At last I have made a raise of a subscriber. Inclosed you will find $2.00, for which send FREETHOUGHT to address given.
Eureka, Cal. ROBERT GUNTHER.

A Good Book.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Please find inclosed post-office order for "History of Christianity." I like the work very much. Many thanks. Yours for truth and reform,
Goshen, Utah. JOHN W. WHITE.

A Helping Hand.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Please send me FREETHOUGHT for March 16, containing the article, "Is There No Evidence?" I see there is not much chance to call these Christians out. The Catholics we have reason to fear, so perfect is their organization and so great their number. I must help you a little. Please receive $5. Yours with respect,
Woodstock, Vt. JOHN D. POWERS.

An Opening Offered.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Find inclosed $5.00 for inclosed names of subscribers. I am trying hard to get readers for you. I know it is discouraging to you, but I hope you will keep up courage for the balance of this year. Then if the people don't want FREETHOUGHT any longer, I'll give you a job on the ranch.
Grass Valley. THOMAS LEE.

Vorwaerts!

To the Editors of Freethought:

You will find inclosed $2.00 as renewal of subscription to FREETHOUGHT. I am very much pleased with it; it is doing lots of good in a good cause. Keep right on. We will in time drive out all ghosts and gods. I have been an Infidel or Freethinker for forty years, and can see a great change in that time from former superstition.
Nooksack, W. T. CHARLES SHEA.

Always Welcome.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I am very sorry to have delayed sending my subscription, but circumstances have prevented me over which I had no control, yet I think you will agree with me that it is better late than never.

I must say that I think the paper is growing better and more interesting all the time. I am so glad to note the good Mr. Putnam is doing through his lectures, and think he must have a constitution like iron to be able to work as he does. You both have my sincere wishes for your success.
Springwater, Ore. MRS. L. LACEY.

Woman Suffrage.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I notice in your issue of April 6 a short criticism by W. S. Bush on the communication of "J. C. P.," who opposes woman suffrage.

This is a question of very great importance as to the equality of human rights and "equal and exact justice to all men of every rank and station," of course all mankind.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal," etc. "That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men deriving there just powers from the consent of the governed."

Now women, being subjects of government, if it fails to secure equality of these inalienable right to them, just in that proportion are they deprived of equal and exact justice and governed without their consent. To my mind the principle of equality of rights involved in this question is only a part of the main proposition reversed or disputed; therefore, by divesting ourselves of any little prejudices we may have in store, we may readily conclude that no argument is needed in the case.

Ukiah, Cal.

T. MCC.

THE Sunday bill which Senator Tillman introduced into the Arkansas legislature, and pushed through the senate, failed to pass the house.

BRANDT AND PUTNAM.

On Sunday evening, April 7, Mr. S. P. Putnam spoke in San Diego on the subject of Moody and Jones and their methods of revival work. His lecture was reported in the Daily San Diegan and reprinted from that paper in FREETHOUGHT of April 20. The San Diegan of April 10 contains a reply by the Rev. John Brandt, and on the 18th printed a rejoinder by Mr. Putnam. The Rev. Mr. Brandt's reply would fill about five columns of FREETHOUGHT. We reproduce the main portion of his argument:

BRANDT'S REPLY TO PUTNAM.

I seldom turn aside from my duties to notice such a production of Infidelity as this speech of Mr. Putnam's. I do not arise simply to defend the methods of work and preaching of the Rev. Mr. Moody and Sam Jones. I put my pen to the paper to expose the claims of Infidelity as set forth by Mr. Putnam. In the beginning, let me state that this claim that Christianity "must become a circus in order to attract attention, and that churches are empty, and that the gospel of Jesus has run to the show house," is as false as it is bold and presumptuous. During the last four years, according to the New York Weekly Independent, the gain in churches in the United States has been 3,831 a year, or 10½ a day, while the increase in membership has been over 1,000 a day. There are now in the United States over 140,000 churches, 100,000 ministers, and 20,000,000 members. Do not these figures speak volumes in favor of the vigor and vitality of the churches?

He speaks of Messrs. Moody and Jones abhorring reasoning and having nothing to do with arguments. Neither of these men make any pretensions to argue with Infidels. They know that the masses believe that Jesus is the only savior, and they urge people to accept and obey him as such. In reading this harangue of Samuel Putnam, I can't see any process of reasoning in it. It is following the style of most all Infidels, aiming to ridicule the Bible and those who advocate its teachings. In it are several things which I shall briefly notice, with the hope that some unsettled or skeptical minds in the city will carefully read and digest them. The first is the fallacy of the statement of Mr. Putnam that "science has declared against Christianity." Several years ago I carefully examined the biographies and records of all the great inventors, discoverers, authors, and founders of the sciences which have done so much to revolutionize things since the dark ages, from Schwartz, the inventor of gunpowder, in the thirteenth century, down to Fulton, Herschel, and Davy, and I am confident that nine-tenths of the greatest scientists are those who are on the side of God and the Bible. Among these scientists who have been remarkable for their homage to the Bible we name Faust, the inventor of the art of printing; Schaffer, the inventor of the casting of metallic types; Columbus, who discovered the new world in 1492; Copernicus, who discovered the present system of the universe; Kepler, who greatly advanced the Copernican system; Galileo, who discovered the gravity of the air and invented the pendulum; Descartes, the founder of the Cartesian philosophy, etc. All testify that true science and religion are associated both in theory and practice. All testify that they nowhere conflict, all testify that the teachings of true science, in reference to the universe—the earth with its furniture, the sea with its inhabitants, and the starry-gemmed heavens nowhere conflict. These scientists, who have brought to light so many great truths, sprung upon the world so many great inventions, and burst forth with so many remarkable discoveries, embellish Christianity with a cloud of witnesses, which show what palpable folly it is, on the part of Putnam, to say that science conflicts with Christianity.

Another statement made by Putnam, which I shall prove to be false, is "the Bible of to-day is practically but three hundred years old." There is in existence to-day, Syriac, Italic, Ethiopic, and Coptic translations of the New Testament, made during the second century; some of them made within but a few years, after the death of John. We have in existence writings of Barnabas, Clement, Justyn, Ignatius, who were cotemporary with some of the apostles, especially John. Irenæus and Origen were of the next generation. Take the New Testament scriptures out of existence and almost the entire book can be produced from authors of the second and third century.

Mr. Putnam, in closing his address, boldly asserts that "Infidelity is not afraid of any comparison with Christianity, either in spirit or in result." Let us then make the comparison. Christianity has its origin in God, and its standard is the revealed will of an infinitely powerful, wise, good, holy, and loving father. Infidelity has its origin in blind, irrational matter and force. Its highest standard is that of selfishness and of the brutes. Christianity comes to the front and says that man is the son of God. Infidelity turns its back upon all that is true and good, and says that man is the son of a monkey. Christianity elevates man and exalts him high above the brute creation; Infidelity degrades man, and drags him down to the level of the brute creation. Christianity has a love of God and wisdom for its model; Infidelity has a monkey of beastly and vehement passions, with canine teeth and ferocious appetites for its model. Christianity reveals God as the creator of the universe and of the bodies and spirits of men; Infidelity places the present state of things to the happenings of chance, or the evolutions of matter. Christianity has for its basis, love to God, love to our fellow-men, and purity in the private life; Infidelity has for its basis, selfish struggles, free love, and the absorption of the intellect in matter and force. Christianity teaches that philanthropy and devotion to others is in accordance with the supreme law of God; Infidelity teaches that the acts of the martyr and the philanthropist are criminal, and that personal gratification is the highest good. Christianity teaches that the universe is governed by an allwise God; Infidelity teaches that all things are governed by fate, force, blind matter, and necessity. Christianity teaches that man has a spirit, created in the image of God, while Infidelity teaches that mind is a part of matter, and spirit a part of force. Christianity teaches us to reach forth unto those things which are before, and press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus; Infidelity teaches us to look backward and downward, and to confine our thoughts to the study of irrational matter. Christianity says that we came from God and shall return to God; Infidelity says that we came from blind matter, and shall sink into blind matter. Christianity reveals a beautiful and bright future to all of its followers, while Infidelity hangs a dark curtain at the close of man's life, beyond which there is impenetrable darkness and annihilation. Christianity teaches that there is a judgment, and that all men will be held accountable for what they do; Infidelity claims there is no accountability nor responsibility. Christianity claims that "God's eye is over the righteous, and his ear open to their cries," while Infidelity says that prayers are vain and that special providence is a belief of superstition. Christianity reveals the origin, facts, nature, effects and consequences of sin; Infidelity claims there is no sin nor evil. Christianity teaches that by faith and obedience to Christ we have forgiveness of sin, and a hope of eternal reward; Infidelity laughs at this, and leaves man in gloom, doubt and error. Christianity teaches that God abhors sin, warns man of future events; while Infidelity declares that it is all a cheat and delusion, and for man to continue in rebellion and indifference. Christianity presents Jesus as the captain of our salvation, precious in his character, precious as a teacher, savior, comforter, and leader; Infidelity hoots at these claims, laughs at his miracles, and denies his divinity. Christianity satisfies the wants of man, meets his longings after immortality and fills the desires of his soul; Infidelity leaves these wants, longings, and desires unsatisfied. Christianity gives to men a perfect system of worship, a church perfect in all of its organization and offices; a religion perfect in its rules, designs and promises; Infidelity says that this religion and the church is all a fallacy and superstition. Christianity teaches us to hold dear the sacred ties of husband, wife, parent and child; Infidelity shivers these sacred ties, and says, "Let us have free love."

Mr. Putnam boasts of the liberties and triumphs of Infidelity; but let us note the real triumphs of Infidelity, skepticism, and Materialism. It banishes the hope of immortality, places darkness in the grave, wraps the future in eternal gloom, and takes away all hope of that life beyond the skies. It steals all of its truths from Christianity, assumes and contradicts them. It levels man to the grade of the frogs, reptiles, and fishes, and identifies him with the vilest of beasts. It poisons the family ties, breeds dissension, creates social warfare, supports the saloons, fosters vice, and makes man his own God. It robs man of virtue, eternal truth, and sinks him into everlasting ruin. It shrinks his conscience, removes the fear of punishment, and cuts the anchor and casts away the only hope in death. With its merciless hand it would tear away from the heart the blessed Bible and the sweetest consolation. It would sink into nothingness that for which tens of thousands of men were martyred, and which has given hope to millions of the treasures of the earth. Infidelity makes creation, existence, and eternity all a myth. It denies that religion were it banished from the world would be the greatest calamity which could befall the human race. It opposes Christianity, which was proven to be true by the astounding miracles by which it was established; by the scores of prophecies which were fulfilled in Jesus, the Christ; by its rapid progress in the world in the face of the hottest antagonism; by the humble, patient, and self-sacrificing friends who advocated it; by the excavations of buried cities; by science, reason, truth, and by its fruits.

In conclusion, allow me to say to Mr. Putnam and his followers, that if you will let Christ into your hearts, you will be made truthful, temperate, meek, generous, and forgiving. Let him into your heart, and your sins will be pardoned, you will have comfort in sorrow, peace when others are disturbed, and the blessed hope of immortality in the darkness of the tomb. Will you do this, or will you continue your course of sin, speaking and working against truth, the Bible, God, angels, Jesus Christ, the holy spirit, hope, peace, the purest and best people on earth, and the highest interests of civilization, and the only safety in death, judgment and eternity?

JOHN BRANDT.

PUTNAM'S REJOINDER.

I desire to offer a few words in answer to the Rev. John Brandt, who criticises my lecture of Sunday, April 7.

He says that the membership of the Christian church to-day in the United States is 20,000,000. Will he assert that all these are Christians according to the tenets of his own church? Do they accept his creed or his method?

But granting the number, what is the conclusion? Is it not that Christianity is a religion with no more vitality than Mohammedanism to-day, and gains no more adherents? It has been in the world 1800 years. According to my reverend critic, it has had the "Bible, God, angels, Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit," on its side, and yet with all these advantages unbelief is ahead two to one in the nineteenth century. According to my opponent's statement, in the United States there are 40,000,000 non-Christians to 20,000,000 Christians. These figures are not very favorable to Christianity.

When I said that "science had declared against Christianity" I was not speaking of the opinions of scientific men, but of science itself—the organized knowledge of man to-day. I suppose my critic understands the difference between the opinions of scientific men and science itself. The opinions of scientific men are both favorable and unfavorable to religion, but that does not settle the question. The fundamental doctrine of Christianity is the fall of man from a perfect state about six thousand years ago. The falsity of this doctrine is the falsity of Christianity itself. I affirm that science to-day has absolutely declared against the truth of this doctrine.

It is strange that my critic must "carefully examine the biographies" of men of science to discover whether they are Christians or not. According to Christ's own teachings, a Christian should be "a burning and a shining light." He can't be a very good Christian whose biography must be "carefully examined" to discover that he is one.

The inventor of gunpowder is claimed to be a Christian. I don't wonder at it. Jesus said, "I came not to bring peace, but a sword." Any destructive element is according to Christianity. Gunpowder is just what it wants for the killing of heretics. My reverend critic can have the gunpowder men. The gospel needs his invention.

Copernicus "discovered the present system of the universe," but he was afraid to publish his great work on account of the Christian church. Galileo was compelled to recant; Bruno was burned at the stake. Do these testify that there is no conflict between science and religion?

I said the Bible of to-day is only three hundred years old.

That statement is true. What is the Bible? A collection of books—not one book. This collection was fixed by the church about three hundred years ago. Before the Council of Trent there was no general consensus as to what should be the sacred collection, or canon. Martin Luther did not accept the Bible of to-day—only a part of it. Not a manuscript of the second century is in existence to-day, and not one of the old manuscripts contains the Bible as it is to-day. Read Professor Stowe's history of the Bible. The origin of the present collection will thus be seen.

My reverend critic says: "Take the New Testament out of existence and almost the entire book can be produced from the authors of the second and third century." I grant this. What does it show? Not that the four gospels were written before the second and third centuries, but afterwards; that unknown writers culled the gospel stories, etc., out of the authors of the second and third centuries, and attached the names of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John to those cullings. The Rev. John Brandt helps to demonstrate the very position which I myself take, that the gospels were written or collated about the close of the second century, or the beginning of the third, and he cannot claim that the canonical scriptures, as now arranged, antedate the Council of Trent, which took place in the sixteenth century.

Rev. John Brandt speaks of the good things in the Christian religion. I do not deny them. I wish to give Christianity all the credit it deserves. As a human religion, a natural religion, as a part of human development and life, let its good qualities and good deeds be known.

The issue between Christianity and myself is not that it has done no good things, or has no good precepts. The issue is this: That Christianity, with whatever good it has done, is not a perfect religion, is not a divine religion. It is an imperfect human affair and is not fitted supremely for the highest progress of man. Jesus says, "Take no thought of to-morrow." That is not good teaching. Jesus says, "Love your enemies." That is simply impossible." Jesus says, "Blessed be ye poor," and "ye have the poor always with you." The reformer of to-day does not accept these as the highest thought of the world. The spirit of to-day, of a true civilization, says, Poverty is a curse, poverty is wrong and it can be removed out of the way.

Christianity is simply one with many religions—good and bad like all. We accept the good and reject the evil, and go on to better things.

The Rev. John Brandt's trade against Infidelity is simply a tissue of falsehood. I challenge him to prove any one of his statements about Infidelity or Freethought.

Freethought accepts all the truth that is possible to the mind of man. It accepts science—and if science says that man originated from the lower forms of life it is not ashamed to acknowledge the real state of the case. Its standard is not that of selfishness but universal happiness. It declares for self-respect and the dignity of human nature. It has not passion for its model, but elevated reason. It absolutely repudiates chance and affirms the eternity and majesty of law.

Freethought stands for the noblest love between man and woman, for it makes woman the equal of man, and the queen of her home. Freethought lifts us to the stars, and to the beauty and grandeur of eternal nature. It does not deny God, but affirms if there is one, he must be living and glorious here and now, and is not afar off upon some throne. Freethought does not deny immortality, but makes the immortal life, whatever it may be, one with this life, a minister to its glory. Freethought declares the nobleness of the moral law, and that liberty means personal responsibility to the law, and that the law cannot be broken with impunity.

In conclusion, allow me to say to the Rev. John Brandt and his followers that if you will become Liberals and Freethinkers you will let humanity into your hearts; you will be made truthful, temperate, generous, and just. Let Freethought into your hearts and you will have manliness in sorrow. With every honest doubt you will have an honest conviction. You will have the light of virtue in the darkness of the tomb; you will obey the golden rule and do unto others as you would have others do unto you; you will not persecute for opinions' sake. You will not misrepresent those who think differently from you. You will not be narrow-minded, bigoted, and sectarian. You will sympathize with all mankind. You will see truth everywhere. You will cultivate the sentiments of humanity. You will recognize the supremacy of reason. You will look to the past and reverence all its shining virtues. You will look to the future and strive for higher heights of being. Be an Infidel, a Freethinker, and you will avoid error, superstition, ignorance, and tyranny. You will delight in wisdom, in beauty, in truth, in goodness, and you will be ready for any judgment that may come in this world or any other; and you can front God or the devil with a clear conscience and exultant mind.

I cannot in my limited space answer all your attacks, and I therefore challenge you to a public debate before the people of San Diego at any time that will suit the convenience of us both. If your religion is so perfect, if it is divine, if it will help a struggling humanity, you certainly ought to be willing to meet me on the platform. There could not be a more favorable opportunity for the spread of the gospel, for the conviction of sinners, and for the destruction of the unbelievers. I sincerely hope that you will be ready for a public discussion of the all-important questions touched upon in your article and in my reply.

Anaheim, April 16, 1889.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

A STORY OLD ONCE MORE RETOLD.

Old Adam, who lived in the garden of yore—
You have heard of the gentleman often before—
The first one, was he and only one, too,
Had all his own way, if this story is true.
As he was the only, of course he felt lonely,
I never shall wonder he was so, will you?
Solitary confinement, authorities say,
Is a hard mode of punishment even to-day.

'Tis further affirmed that the creator found
The judgment of Adam was "tolable" sound;
So first he suggested, for helpmeet, a beast,
But none seemed to suit Father Adam the least.
I think it was lucky that Adam was plucky,
In those early days on his rights to insist.
What he wanted was either the best or the worst—
A rebel was Adam, you see, from the first.

Then a sleep fell on Adam, a sleep without fear,
For his bed was of roses, his conscience was clear;
As he'd never been tempted, he'd never done wrong—
No wonder his sleep was both heavy and long.
But he now was loser, this innocent snoozer,
For out from his side a rib was unstrung.
From this "dig in the ribs" was made, we are told,
A helpmeet for Adam most fair to behold.

For once in his life, I suppose, he was charmed;
With love and affection his bosom was warmed.
Where all their surroundings were lovely and good,
And bounteous nature supplied them with food,
Those two lovers were gay in their innocent way,
And gladly I'd leave them in this happy mood.
But now comes the sequel, alas! even then
They had one commandment, though now we have ten.

Next chapter begins with the tale of a snake—
Among wonderful narratives this takes the cake.
There's only a fish story bigger than this;
Jonah took an advantage of Moses, I guess—
As he was the latest, he gave us the greatest.
A judge at a picnic would get in distress,
If Moses and Jonah were there in disguise,
Which one of these fellows should gobble the prize.

The snake in this story, they tell me, could speak,
He'd no introduction, but plenty of cheek.
He spoke to the woman and told her what she,
By eating an apple, of wonders could see.
The woman, believing, knew not of deceiving,
She ate, and gave Adam the forbidden tree,
And both of them now from their slumber awoke
But alas! 'twas too late, the commandment was "broke."

Imagine our parents with sorrow and fear
Awaiting the moment when God should appear!
And now he approaches, colossal, sublime,
And both of them freely acknowledge their crime,
But, merciful never, he cursed them forever,
Cursed mother and child till the end of all time;

Sent them forth from the garden, and now upon guard,
Stands a cherubim there with a scintillant sword.

My friends, I'm not here at all to talk shop,
But to point out a moral to you ere I stop:
When next you select from a nice bill of fare
Of one certain dish you should always beware.
It may taste very good, but it is understood,
It brought to the world all our troubles and care;
You ask what of sorrow and sin was the cause—
'Twas a nice looking spare rib and cold apple sauce.

REASONS FOR NON-ATTENDANCE.

A communication recently appeared in the Salinas Index, in which the writer, a prominent clergyman, expressed a desire to know why people do not attend church. As he, with evident sincerity, requested replies, by letter or otherwise, I answered his question substantially as follows:

REV. MR. BLANK, Dear Sir: I do not attend church because, after many years of honest, earnest effort, I found it impossible to believe its creed. You profess to inculcate morality, but offer the reward of eternal happiness for credulity—you call it faith—and make uprightness of conduct a secondary consideration. I have heard many of your profession—yourself, I think, among the number—assert that a man of exemplary character who is not a believer in Christianity is worse than a criminal. Should you hear a Mohammedan make an assertion of like character, would not his bigotry disgust you? An intelligent honest person must have evidence upon which to found a belief upon any subject, evidence not being subject to our control. Are we responsible for our belief? Yet your God punishes not for our conduct that we can, but for our belief that we cannot control. Your answer to this, doubtless, is that in rejecting the Bible we reject evidence on which you do, and all might, base a belief in Christianity. If it is, as you claim, the word of God, you are right. You say it was written by inspired men. Were the members of the council at Nice, that decided by ballot what it should and what it should not comprise, inspired? Were the venal, illiterate monks—its sole custodians for centuries—inspired? Do you think that yourself and Father Gilhooley would agree as to which version, Catholic or Protestant, contained the greatest amount of inspiration to the square inch? I remember, when a child, reading passages in it that shocked my sense of justice as well as decency. Not long since I read an extract from a sermon by the noted divine, Talmage, in which he stated to a presumably enlightened congregation in the city of Brooklyn that the angels assisted Noah in embarking the animals, snakes, and insects. Remembering some of the experience of my boyhood, my sympathy was with the angel that managed the polecat department.

You say the angels rejoice at the conversion of a sinner. Is their rejoicing greater over a convert to a Roman Catholic or Protestant faith? And if the latter, at the present ratio of increase, in our country, of the former, won't it be some time before the angels have much of a picnic? You also inform us that the devil was once an angel. Did sin really originate in heaven? Was there a time when God was not supreme in his own residence? The New Testament you claim to be especially inspired. According to that, God became so angry with the people of his own selection that he caused, or permitted, a portion of himself to be put to death to appease the wrath of the remaining fraction. The fraction that was killed—being about one-third—although of the same age as the other two-thirds, you call the Son of God, though it was still another fraction, the Holy Ghost, that visited Mary, and of whom Joseph is presumed to have reason to be jealous.

Here I will admit that I find one charitable feature in the Christian religion. I believe no creed ever required its subscribers to understand this trinity. The holy inquisitors, even while listening to the agonizing shrieks of their helpless victims, admitted, that to require the human brain to understand the Christian problem that three times one make but one, was a cruelty they could not sanction. Implicit faith was all they demanded.

My brain is so fashioned that what to you is doubtless reasonable, even sacred, is to me impossible and absurd. I concede your right to accept, simply claiming the right to do that which my reason compels—reject. Are you equally tolerant? In a class at school is it the stupid boy that asks questions? Is it the bright one that manifests the greater faith? Is skepticism invariably wicked, or only when a doubt of your creed is expressed? If I ever learn that my God damns a man for exercising his reason, I will never take up another collection in his behalf.

The above are some of my reasons for rejecting Christianity and consequent non-attendance of church, which you are at liberty to make public. But I presume you will be governed by the inflexible rule of the church in suppressing investigation and consign this to the flames. The time is not long past when the writer would have been subjected to the same purifying process. Grub Gulch.

A. W. POOLE.

NEW YORK LETTER.

In my last I spoke of trouble in the Manhattan Club. The name of the man suspected has been for several days hawked round by the newspapers. It is Bernard Casserly, a brother of California's late United States senator. Mr. Casserly is a kind-hearted but a weak man. This is a serious charge. If true, he is ruined socially; if untrue, an untold injury has been done him. We cannot believe there is any truth in this report. It was a factional fight. The older members wished to make the club more social in its nature; the younger more political in its scope. They wished to make it a power in politics, as the Union League is. The old men carried the day. This club was organized as a political club, but some ten years or more ago it was on the verge of bankruptcy. A few members came to the rescue, and the club was filled with men of both parties. This action is said to have saved the club. These men naturally feel that their work should be recognized. There is an ugly feeling in the club; but time will doubtless calm it down. President Cleveland has been elected an honorary member.

The sale of the Duke of Durcal's pictures was a perfect failure. There were several reasons for this. An impression got abroad that they were poor specimens of the old masters. Some even asserted that they were mere copies. The chief reason was the want of appreciation of the old masters by our citizens. There is too much shoddy in the circle of our rich men to appreciate such works. They want pictures of brilliant colors and pleasant subjects. There is indeed little in the old Dutch school to please such an eye. The somberness of them borders on repulsiveness to the ordinary person. There is something in Murillo that chills the fancy. It takes a cultivated taste to dote on such subjects. The success of former sales must have inflamed the fancy of this Spaniard. The press has hardly treated him fairly. The duke will doubtless give New York in the future a wide berth. He has no reason to love her.

As I intimated in my last, Ward McAllister is out of this centennial celebration. He has made his bow and gracefully retired. The public got very tired of this wrangle, and would not shed a tear if Stive Fish should step down and out. The work of erecting stands is being rapidly pushed. The queer thing about these stands is that the seats are even now in the hands of speculators. I understand this is denied by the committee of arrangements, but there is a leak somewhere. There are to be over seventeen thousand seats on all the stands. Another question has arisen, i. e., who is to preside at the banquet. McAllister says that Commodore Gerry is anxious for the honor. There seems to be but one proper person for that seat, and that is Mayor Grant. The mayor if not an orator. The route of the procession has been changed, so as to include Union square.

The mayor took the bull by the horns yesterday morning by directing the commissioner of public works to cut the wires and remove the poles of the Western Union Telegraph Co., and Brush electric light. The work commenced at once, and is pushed forward to-day. Thus the long-desired riddance of this nuisance is beginning to materialize. The Western Union threatens to hold the city responsible for any damage. This company will discover that it does not own our streets. The city is ready to lock horns with it in a legal tussle. The electric companies have been the most defiant, but they are inclined to be a little more meek to-day. Their wires have not only been removed but carted away by the city, thus revenue and property melting away at the same time.

"The proponents rest" were the startling words uttered yesterday in the surrogate court by Elihu Root, Judge Hilton's lawyer in the Stewart will case. The contestants had rested after a struggle of about a year. It goes without saying that the court and the counsel for the heirs were astonished. What does it mean? Why does Judge Hilton hand his case over to be argued before the court without putting on the stand one single witness? Has he no evidence to rebut the charges made against him by the witnesses for the plaintiffs, or does he think that Joe Choate has not made a case worthy of combating? Whatever the motive, it was a surprise, and is causing universal talking. The summing up is to be on May 20. Here is an opportunity for Mr. Choate to show if he is really a relative of the brilliant Rufus. No young man in New York is growing faster in public estimation than young Root. The fact that Judge Hilton selected him for his leading counsel in this contest, involving as it does millions of dollars, is proof enough of his extraordinary ability. Wall street continues dull, general trade slow, and the business man disgusted.

New York, April 17, 1889.

EUDORUS.

THE BIBLE IN FAVOR OF DEBATE.

v.
Concluded.

Jesus, his disciples, his apostles, were found vindicating truth and freedom: "The truth shall make you free;" "why, even of yourselves judge ye not what is right?" Both hearing and asking questions. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." Question, question, question! Ask; seek to know; demand the why and the wherefore. Jesus said "answer me;" the Pharisees "began to question with him;" "the scribes questioning with them;" "questioning one with another;" "they asked him;" he answered. Such is the language of the New Testament. The book abounds with these expressions. Truly, his ministry was a perpetual controversy. Oh that there were a "perpetual controversy," in a loving spirit, good will toward everybody, in the church and throughout the world—the primary object, Truth.

We are informed that Jesus debated with the "devil" himself and vanquished him. He was in favor of meeting in controversy with all sorts of persons. Matthew tells us (xxii, 46) "No man was able to answer him a word, neither durst any man, from that day forth, ask him any more questions." This was after he had been disputing with his religious opponents, the Pharisees. They heard that he had put the Sadducees to silence. A lawyer tried his hand at it; but what became of the lawyer the history does not state. When a lawyer has nothing more to say, the debate is closed as far as he is concerned. It appears to me that it is the duty of every believer of the Bible to silence the Sadducees, the Infidels, the Agnostics, the Freethinkers of this day; but it sometimes looks as if the Christians are the ones that are silenced, and "durst" not ask them any more questions!

What, then, is the duty of the clergy of our land? Should they not put to flight the Infidel hosts by fair, manly debate? Whenever a lecturer visits your town, discoursing against Christianity, and who invites criticism, what better opportunity for the religious teachers to bring forward the evidences in favor of the inspiration of the Bible and the superiority of Christianity over every other system? Far better than the regular one-sided Sunday sermons, for this reason: hundreds of thousands of Freethinkers seldom go to church; not because they are not in favor of hearing both sides, but because that is just what they do not hear at church. Here, then, is the minister's opportunity: if the Infidels will not go to the preacher, let the preacher go to the Infidels. And he should go in a kindly manner, inviting, and if need be, challenging Freethinkers to produce their reasons against Christianity and the Bible, and submit to searching criticisms by the defender of the Bible and the Christian religion in joint debate. Acrimony, bluster, offensive personalities on the part of either lecturer or clergyman should be ruled out of order by the people and the board of moderators.

While disputants should not be expected to overlook error, nor to show the least mercy to dangerous or injurious teachings advocated by either, in the opinion of either; yet, toward each other and the audience, the greatest courtesy should be manifested. Debuters should never lose sight of the fact that the better class of people expect them to be gentlemen. Let them expend their earnestness on the proposition involved. No one but a bungler or novice abuses the defendant's attorney. I have had the pleasure of holding many debates where both sides, while doing their best to show that "our side" is right and "yourside" wrong, nevertheless manifested throughout a cordial good will that made such intellectual encounters blessed helps to truth-winning and charity-begetting. But there have been times when I have met opponents, religious teachers, too, who supposed that by showering me with epithets, raining maledictions on my head, pelting me with invective, somehow, in some mysterious manner, unknown to the logician, they were thus making progress in demolishing my positions and establishing their own! I regret to say that some Freethinkers are not a whit better.

My opponent has a right to hold up my positions in plain sight, and to ridicule them to death if possible. He has a right to irony, sarcasm, mirth, pathos. They are the flashing, shining weapons in the arsenal of everlasting truth. It is the free use of those, as well as sober, solid argument, that makes debate intensely interesting. "Ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints" (Jude i, 3).

That is it, "earnestly contend;" not angrily, hatefully, but earnestly; not for mere personal mastery over an opponent. That is ignoble. Be earnest, but contend nevertheless. If any religious teacher cannot contend good-naturedly, it is exceedingly doubtful whether he ever had a call to preach—and I think I have shown by an abundance of texts that no man can preach Bible and leave debate out. According to the Christian's own standard Jehovah is in favor of debate. So were the prophets. Job favored it. Solomon unequivocally in favor. Christ's teaching is saturated with it. Paul was full of debate. Stephen vindicated it to his last breath.

If my representations are not true, let them be answered. If they are true, let it be frankly confessed.

No one can practically believe the Bible who refuses to cast his convictions into the crucible of controversy. W. F. JAMIESON.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURES.

The distinguished Freethought orator, S. P. Putnam, entertained the people of Santa Ana last Saturday and Sunday, with three of his elegant lectures upon "The Great Religious Conspiracy," the "Origin of the Bible," and "Evolution." Excellent audiences greeted him at each meeting, and the attention paid him was the best evidence of the deep interest people feel in the development of truth and the progress of science. His lecture on "Evolution" was a model of profound thought and study, and indicated the cultured intellect of the eminent thinker and reasoner. Mr. Putnam is a believer in the natural and constitutional rights of the people in every respect. He attacks no man's creed or religion, but like a true knight, has the courage and manhood to defend his own against the corrupt assaults of a debased, superstitious, tyrannical priesthood. His eloquence is of a high order, while his language is as pure and chaste as Addison's. His facts are indisputable, and his logic convincing. Our only regret is that he could not remain long enough to give a full course of his lectures, and we sincerely hope he may come again soon and stay longer. At the close of his lectures he called for a list of signers to the Liberal Union who propose to fight all Sunday-law aggressions and all encroachments of the church upon the state. Seventy-five persons, all voters, we believe, responded, and the prospect is that ere long Santa Ana will have a strong, healthy organization of its own. In union there is strength.—Santa Ana Standard.

Do not fear to let reason lead wherever she wills. Whoever is afraid to follow his mental wanderings in any direction will never find the highest truths.—ELMINA.

QUERY.—What is an Agnostic? Answer.—An Atheist with a tall hat on.—London Freethinker.

IT IS DEAD, FOR EVER DEAD.

You say you have no proof the dead will live again. Well, you see no proof that the little flower that withers and dies the first season will live again the next; but it does. Is what I now write produced by mind or matter?—A.

Our friend "A." must remember that the little flower never does revive again. The rose drops its petals and it is for ever dead. No succeeding spring time can revive it. The bush may live; the root may live, but the rose is gone. New roses may come, just as new generations of men and women come to take our places, but the dead are always dead.

Pull up the bush by the roots and burn it, and then all will be dead, and no more roses will come upon it. Sweep every human being from our planet, and probably no more would ever inhabit it. Or, if a new race was evolved from the animal kingdom, it might differ materially from our own. We would be for ever gone. Death ends the ego. Personal identity is extinct. We may leave footprints behind us—or leave written or printed ideas—mind impressions, but ourselves are annihilated.

I do not say there are not "sensitives," who may be able to get in "rapport" with a something we leave behind us, just as mediums profess to do, but it is not fully proven to my satisfaction, though there are things I cannot explain or understand the why and wherefore of, and yet I do not think so many people are deceivers or deceived, so I wait and remain expectant.

What "A." was writing was produced by matter. Mind is simply matter in motion—a form of force, just as are light and heat. Whatever is, is natural, and according to law, according to what is compelled by causes and effects which run back into the never-beginning past and will continue into the never-ending future.

We are the outcome of all that past—an evolution from the protoplasm of the infancy of life upon our planet; or of one of the epochs that evolved new forms of life after some cataclysm that may have destroyed the former existences upon our earth.

Life is one of the qualities or properties of matter, matter in motion—organized matter—just as butter is a part of milk, and milk is evolved or produced from hay, grass, and corn through the chemical and natural forces of the cow.

Mind and matter are one and the same thing, just as ice and water are. But all matter is not mind, nor is all water ice; but under proper conditions any portion of water will become ice, and any portion of matter will become mind. Change and interchange is the great universal law of all nature.

What to-day is ourselves may have been a portion of a billion other living, organized identities, millions of times over and over, and may be so again, but it never can be ourselves more than once. A snowball broken up and made over is never the same snowball again. Old forms and old identities are perpetually passing away, and new ones take their places. Thus, through all endless ages new hopes and new ambitions, new joys and new pleasures, are fresh and fair to new and fresh identities. Let us then cherish and appreciate the now, for it only is ours. Tomorrow is our children's, and the next to-morrow our children's children's.

AUNT ELMINA.

An idea of the size of some California trees may be gained from the fact that John W. Coleman, general manager of the North Pacific Coast railroad, has been asked by a number of people living along the line of that road to change the road-bed above Duncan's Mills for a distance of some one hundred yards so as to run the track through the trunk of one of the large redwoods in that neighborhood. Mr. Coleman is considering the proposition with much favor.

W. F. JAMIESON requests us to say that he will be at liberty to accept calls for lectures and debates anywhere on the Pacific coast after November 1. Arrangements can now be made with him by addressing him at Coryell, Colo.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street.

Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.

G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address, Putnam & Macdonald.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—THE NEW AMERICAN PARTY,

A CRITICISM BY "JEFFERSON."

Price, 10 cents. Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents. Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

Provincial Bigotry.

Says the Charlottetown (New Brunswick) Examiner: A scene which is, perhaps unprecedented in our courts, occurred in the county court on Saturday last, at the trial of an action of trover for the value of a cow alleged to have been illegally seized under execution against Ewen Stewart, of Brackley Point Road, and claimed by his son, Walter Stewart. In support of the plaintiff's claim, a witness was called named Peter Stewart, whose oath was challenged on account of his infidelity. The following are the questions put to him by the judge, and his replies thereto:

"Do you believe in the deity?"

"No, not in the ordinary acceptation of the term."

"Do you believe in the trinity—God the father, son, and holy ghost?"

"I do not."

"Do you believe in the Bible?"

"I believe the Bible is a history."

"Do you believe it is the inspired word of God?"

"I do not."

"Do you believe in rewards and punishments after death?"

"I expect no reward after death for any good I do, and no punishment beyond the grave."

The next witness called, whose name was William Roberts, was also objected to, and interrogated in the same way. He replied substantially as follows:

"I do not believe in the Bible. I do not believe in God the father, the son, and holy ghost. I can't say that I believe in any God. I do not believe in heaven or hell, nor in the doctrine of rewards and punishments after death."

These men were both middle-aged, and appeared to be intelligent. After this declaration of their faith, or rather want of faith, Judge Alley refused to allow an oath to be administered to them. In doing so he expressed himself in emphatic terms regarding their views, and stated that if they adhered to them through life they would doubtless have good reason to believe in hell before the end of their existence. This incident shows that our home missions afford a good field for evangelistic effort.

Worship.

Wide open stood the church's doors,
And hundreds crowded there,
Bedecked in Sunday finery,
Because the day was fair.

A stranger strolling by the place
Approached and bowed his head,
And to the sexton, gray and grim,
He reverently said:

"Methinks 'tis well the people should
Upon the Sabbath day
Collect in numbers such as these
To contemplate and pray.

"How noble is the thought, my friend,
That those from far and near,
The rich and great, do congregate,
In humble supplication here."

The sexton wiped his weeping eyes
And sadly turned away;

"The president, you know," he said,
"Comes here to church to-day."

—Washington Critic.

A WRITER in the Fortnightly Review is independent enough to deny the immorality of cannibalism and say that a good way to dispose of the defective, aged, and dependant classes would be to eat them. Hygienists have often said that the character of a man depends upon what he eats. If this is true, the cannibalism of the defective classes would have a deteriorating effect upon those who ate them. We are agin it.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
12 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, 85, 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
12 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond" 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address: PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.4
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros.' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. - Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see next column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: a graduate of three universities and retired after 50 years' practice. He writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE, Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" medicine. Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

A NEW FEATURE Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling work for AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25; Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50; difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Temperance and Prohibition, THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

Cloth, 75 cts.

Address this office

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

How to Live.

So should we live that every hour
May die as dies the natural flower—
A self-reviving thing of power;

That every thought and every deed
May hold within itself the seed
Of future good and future need.

—Lord Houghton.

A Home Question

A Detroit boy surprised his father the other day by asking:

"Father do you like mother?"

"Why, yes, of course."

"And she like you?"

"Of course she does."

"Did she ever say so?"

"Many a time, my son."

"Did she marry you because she loved you?"

"Certainly she did."

The boy looked the old man over, and after a long pause, asked:

"Well, was she as near-sighted then as she is now?"—Detroit Free Press.

A CLERGYMAN was absorbed in thought a few Sundays ago, just before divine service began, when he was approached by the organist, who asked, "What shall I play?" "What kind of a hand have you got?" responded the absent-minded clergyman.

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY. Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right.

Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.

DR. FELLOWS.

Wm. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor.

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY.

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

TELEPHONE No. 635

P. O. CHILSTROM,

(Rogers & Chilstrom.)

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Commercial Business and Collections a Specialty.

Office, 415 Montgomery St., Rooms 9, 10 & 11,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HUNCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

Twentieth Century.

Devoted to Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.

HUGH O. PENTECOST, Editor.

Contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday Addresses of the Editor before Unity Congregation.

It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.

Its columns are open for the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.

Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription one dollar.

Sample copies free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe."

Address
Twentieth Century Publishing Co.,
No. 4 Warren street, New York.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY
NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,
NURSERYMEN.

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit
and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.
Special Attention Given to Planting
and Caring of Orchards
and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box 0,

San Jacinto, Cal

An Atheist's Grave.

Gus M. Seltzer died a few days ago at China Grove, Rowan county, N. C. He was a pronounced Infidel, believing in neither God nor a future of any kind. Two years before his death, knowing his demise to be imminent, he went to a tree near the yard, and under it marked a place for his grave, giving instructions as to how it was to be dug and his mode of burial. He wanted a layer of cedar brush at the bottom of the grave, to be filled up with dirt. He said that when decomposition set in the sap of the tree would draw him up the limbs, and he could perch on the tree and view the surrounding scenery of ages to come. Seltzer was perfectly rational to the last.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald,
504 Kearny st. San Francisco

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA.

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or The Infidel Teacher 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENNER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

YONE SANTO,

A Child of Japan.

BY E. H. HOUSE.

The Book that the American Missionary Society tried to Suppress, but Didn't.

A Splendid Story, and an Unsparing Exposure of the Missionary Business in Japan.

PRICE, 50 CENTS.

PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 304 Kearny Street, San Francisco.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton, Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology. Price, 50 cents.

Selfish Praying.

As Satan passed through heaven from
A walk on earth one day,
The Lord looked up and questioned him,
"Didst hear my creatures pray?"
"Ay, Lord, I heard their prayers resound
Where'er I listening stood,
But, by my soul, not one of them
Prayed for his brother's good."

Then looked Jehovah fire and flame,
And spake this fierce decree—
"Who makes a selfish prayer is thine,
The others come to me."
Then all that night on heaven's walls
The Lord and Satan stood,
To see how many sons of man
Would pray for a brother's good.

Alas, they watched there many an hour,
And yet there came no sound;
The poor, they prayed for pennies, and
The rich, they prayed for pounds;
The ugly prayed for beauty, and
The awkward prayed for grace;
The old ones prayed for youthful looks
To hide a wrinkled face.

The limping prayed for healthy joints,
The red haired prayed for brown,
The short ones prayed for longer legs,
The tall to be cut down.
The brown-eyed prayed for blue ones,
The cross-eyed prayed for straight,
The fat ones prayed for melting down,
The lean ones prayed for weight.

The doctors prayed for sickness, and
The undertakers death;
The captives prayed for sunshine, and
The phthisicky for breath.
The maiden prayed for lover's vows,
The soldier prayed for war;
The beggar prayed for horse to ride,
The drunkard prayed for "more."
The sick man prayed for break of day,
The thief for longer night;
The miser prayed for more of gold—
The blind man prayed for sight.

At last there came a tearful voice
Up to the starlit sky—
"Oh! may my uncle's soul this night Rest with the Lord on high."
"There's one for me," Jehovah cries,
"Not so!" the Devil said,
"He's heir to all his uncle's wealth,
He wants the old man dead."

Just then there came another voice
In supplicating tones—
"Oh! may the grave be late to close O'er neighbor David's bones."
"There's surely one for me at last!"
But Satan cried, "Not yet!
He merely wants the man to live
Until he pays his debt."

And so they waited till the stars
Went out at break of day;
Then Satan seized his bag of souls
And sped his homeward way.
Upon high heaven's glittering wall
Long had they listening stood,
But not a mortal all that night
Prayed for his brother's good.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—

"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to

L. K. WASHBURN,

Revere, Mass.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 19.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 11, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - MAY 11, 1889.

THE Grant Post, G.A.R., of Brooklyn, N. Y., has distinguished itself. Anthony Comstock, the Vice Society's spy and scavenger, applied for admission and received thirty-seven blackballs. Comstock was sutler's clerk with a bad record as an accountant.

It is learned from the Alta California that the local courts of Pittsburg, Pa., have ruled that it is disorderly conduct to distribute heterodox tracts on the streets. We join the Alta in its prayer that these wise courts will now tell us just what orthodoxy is.

THE Roman church is willing to run the state, but the state cannot by any means run the church. The Catholics of San Francisco met in their churches on inauguration day, not because the president recommended it, but in obedience to the commands of Archbishop Riordan, who, in his circular, utterly ignored the presidential proclamation previously issued.

THE Rev. W. A. Cuddy, who was chaplain of the legislative assembly of Arizona which has just adjourned, has sent to the treasury department for deposit in the conscience fund the sum of $22.50, being part of the salary paid him as chaplain. His motive for this action is explained by him as follows: "I cannot see that it is right for the rulers to take the people's money and pay it out to some hypocrite to stand up before a legislative body and pray for pay." The Rev. Mr. Cuddy is accused of being insane. It looks so.

SOME time ago FREETHOUGHT contained a review of a book entitled "God and Man," by the Rev. Dr. Henry Truro Bray, of Booneville, Mo. Dr. Bray had found after many years' study of the scriptures that he could not subscribe to various doctrines which the Episcopal church imposes on its members, such as vicarious atonement, eternal punishment after death, the resurrection of the dead, and the making of belief in the divinity of Christ an essential part of faith. He embodied these and other Liberal ideas in his book; then he called the attention of his bishop to the articles of the Episcopal creed which he had violated, and calmly requested to be deposed. The bishop at once complied with Dr. Bray's request, and expelled him from the ministry, but he had the good grace to say that the preacher showed "true manliness in his conduct." He might have added that there were many occupants of Episcopal pulpits to whom the same compliment could not be truthfully paid.

SCHWEINFURTH, a religious impostor of Chicago, whose claims as a messiah have been previously mentioned, is threatened with a suit for damages for having alienated wives from their husbands. His followers are mostly women, who submit to his pretensions as the savior and to his claims as a man. The principal opponents of Schweinfurth are members of other churches, and profess to worship his predecessor who declared that any who would not desert their families and follow him were not worthy to be his disciples.

MR. S. P. PUTNAM

Will lecture in San Francisco, Sundays,

May 12, 19, and 26, 1889,

—AT—

UNION SQUARE HALL

421 Post Street.

SUBJECT

SUNDAY AFTERNOON, MAY 12, "A Review of Moody and Jones."

ADMISSION FREE.

LECTURE AT 3 P. M.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Lemoore, named after my good friend Dr. Lee Moore, again gives cordial welcome, and I wander into pleasant pathways, amidst its fruitful and sunny scenes. There seems to be congregated here, by some mystic attraction, a choice company of intellectual spirits, of broad and varied experience, where Freethought might produce its richest results. The delightful hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. B. K. Sweetland made a cheerful retreat from laborious days. Mrs. Sweetland dwells in the large atmosphere of the two worlds that mingle with happy faith. But the visions of the hereafter do not make less beautiful the fields of today. So in this gentle home, where the tall trees shade the grass and flowers, I had a sojourn both restful and invigorating.

I was a bit under the weather with a cold when I arrived, but Dr. Moore was my guardian physician and put me on the way to health again. He seems to know just what to do for the ills that flesh is heir to, and has a comprehensive understanding of the material man, though his philosophy pierces to the invisible. Sunday morning there was quite a symposium of thought among our company, and many points of view made alternating lights upon problems of origin and destiny. My friend W. S. Cunningham is a Positive Materialist, but of the ideal order and recognizes the ever-abounding mystery of being. W. M. Gill, of the Lemoore Leader, drinks deep, it seems to me, of the Hegelian spirit and philosophy, which is forever alluring to the human mind, and Dr. Moore revels in the ideas of Plato and applies the brilliant metaphysics of the Greek to modern hope.

Starting from his primal propositions of the finite and infinite as the two great realities of the mental world, his reasonings seem to be both mathematically and poetically true. Man is finite, but since he has the capacity to grasp the principles of the infinite, in him also must be the element of infinite and therefore of immortality. Since man can grasp eternal truth, there must in his very nature be a reality which corresponds to his sublime vision. The power to understand is the power to be, and knowledge proclaims the measure of existence. Wonderfully interesting these thoughts are, and along the boundary of life they fling enchanting pictures and the shores of time glisten where the unknown sea forever breaks.

Sunday afternoon and evening the meetings were well attended. In the evening the hall was filled to its utmost capacity, the enthusiasm was manifest, and Freethought evidently has a home in this prosperous community. Mr. W. S. Cunningham acted as chairman in the afternoon, and W. M. Gill in the evening, with pleasant introductions for the speaker. Mr. Geo. S. Foster and J. H. Fox were also on the stage. From Hanford Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Jenkinson, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Ford, Mr. E. J. Cole, A. F. Jewett, and others were present. They are ready for the work at Hanford, and will arrange for a lecture there when the fall campaign opens.

Again I had the pleasure of greeting Dr. Hamlin, who believes in the sunny side of things, but is always ready for pioneer work. Dr. Seth Morse was on hand also, and the enthusiasm of youth glows in the heart of age. Capt. Thos. Nelson makes the ship of humanity move on, be it sunshine or storm. Allen Fox returned from San Francisco in time for the last lecture. His son, a brilliant scholar, has been compelled to relinquish his studies on account of threatened blindness. A career of exceptional promise is thus early clouded, but I am glad to hear that recovery is now hopeful, and our "bright band of youth" will not lose this talented worker. All our heart and hope are with him for a restoration of health.

And many other friends I might mention in this pleasant burg, E. Hill, Frank B. Fox, John Thompson, Lucien Bee, Geo. S. Poster, of the ranks of FREETHOUGHT, S. I. Kidd, A. S. Cunningham, etc. About forty names, "good and true," are on the roll of the Liberal Union, and so Lemoore will be one of our bright landmarks, and all the glowing colors of thought of this world and of the "summer-land" shall mingle with its jeweled expanses of fruit, and flower, and grass, and orchard bloom, to the blue and white ramparts of the distant hills.

Monday, I go over to Visalia. Unfortunately, the lectures were not well advertised, and many Liberal friends did not know of them, and so I did not have a large attendance. Besides, the Pawnee Indian Medicine Company was in town, at the magnificent new Armory Hall, and was evidently the "town talk" before my arrival. It had exhibited for several evenings, and was billed for a week more. However, it was a good show. I found my old friend, F. P. Burgess, brother of Alf. Burgess, in management of the affair, with C. A. Burgess and H. E. Burgess, and I had with them a pleasant visit. The Burgesses know Indian life by heart, for they have been brought up in it. It is a matter of experience, and if the aborigines have any good thing I guess those apt scholars have taken it for the good of the world. Mrs. R. M. Longshore, M. D., was also lecturing at Armory Hall, and teaching women much of the gospel of good sense and wise fashion. She is an attractive speaker. Longshore and Burgess are names well and favorably known in the Liberal ranks.

I also had the pleasure of meeting James J. Martin, of Kaweah Co-operative Colony Company, located in Kaweah Canyon, and the giant forest of Tulare county. It was organized August, 1886. It is conducted upon different principles than other co-operative or communistic colonies. An endeavor is made to profit by past experience, and secure a thoroughly democratic institution. I like Mr. Martin. He seems to have a clear head and to understand the work in which he is engaged, with an earnest belief in its success. The affairs of the colony are carefully conducted, and so far as theory is concerned it seems to be an arrangement for co-operation that skilfully guards against the disasters of other experiments.

It was a gratification and repayment of other disappointments to strike hands with Thos. Jacobs and his brother Morpheus, who are on a ranch of four hundred acres about two miles out from Visalia, and I spent Tuesday night with them, and in the early morning light roamed over their splendid fields and orchards and vineyards, in whose bosom fortune waits the hand of labor. Our friends know how to mingle muscle and brain, and they will make a paradise of the broad domain. Liberals, too, they will keep the wheels of progress in motion, and make the harvest of earth contribute to the harvest of man in the golden days to come.

Chas. G. Wilcox made my stay as pleasant as possible, and did all he could for the success of the lectures. He drove me about the city and surrounding country, and I had a chance to see the fertility and beauty of the neighborhood, and the promise of growth for this handsome city. Amidst the stately oaks it has a comfortable and attractive look, and if it could once get on to the line of railroads it would have a prosperous career. There is no more beautiful town anywhere in the state.

A. E. Redstone, Zane Stuben, Jas. Evans, P. Hollenbeck, and others are among the Liberals of this place who are willing to be counted, and whether good fortune or ill fortune betide, the welcome is generous, and hope is brightened.

Wednesday morning I pursued my journey, and about noon find myself beneath the trees and amidst the many-colored flowers that surround and adorn the home of Judge North. Here I find papers innumerable that reflect the vast and diverse currents of the day, for Judge North is comprehensive in his intellectual sympathies and wants to know everything that is going on, and he has the newest thing in orthodoxy as well as the newest thing in Freethought, and in his retreat of philosophic and honored age he has not let anything pass by of interest to any human being. He has a library in which one can revel for days, it is such a rich and copious selection of the best thoughts of the time. Judge North has done a good work in Oleander. From twenty-five to thirty lectures have been given during the past season. There is marked improvement in the community. The brightest literature and science of to-day are welcome here. There was good attendance at my lectures. The interest increases. Judge North works with the same energy for Freethought to-day as he did forty years ago for anti-slavery, when he plunged into the great conflict for freedom, and the orthodox Christianity of New England gave him but cold comfort. He has had vast experience with the clergy of this country, and knows their weak points when it comes to a question of genuine reform and progress. It is a great privilege to spend a day or two with one who has been so intimately in the midst of our national struggle and touched elbows with heroic leaders in heat of battle. Mrs. North has borne the woman's part, whose gentleness and refinement have been mingled with unswerving loyalty to the truth, however stern. This fireside gleams with memories that make glorious the hopes of the future.

Thursday evening, J. E. Dickenson, of Easton, took me over to his colony, and in the schoolhouse near by we had a small meeting, much like what they used to have in the pioneer days of anti-slavery. Not a dozen were present, yet we held the fort, and the roll of Freethought was enlarged, and again was made.

The next day I spent in sunny contentment at Mr. and Mrs. Dickenson's home, where I found plenty of Freethought and scientific literature. My friends came from Illinois. They are young yet, with one little girl, who is evidently a straight up-and-down Freethinker, bright as May itself, and sings all day long—no cloud of superstition in the sunny ripple of life. In the warm sunshine of the morning Mr. Dickenson drove me over the colony lands, which present a beautiful appearance, they are so neatly kept and show such signs of thrift and comfort. The lands are divided mainly into twenty-acre lots, and these are generally planted to orchards and vineyards, and afford a fair living to the busy dwellers. There are several churches scattered through the colonies, but I guess Freethought will hold its own.

Among Mr. Dickinson's coadjutors are Chas. Eckard, Fred E. Rogers, B. F. Otto, W. Eckard, etc., and there will always be a guard of liberty here, though two churches confront the schoolhouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Dudley and family are of the Investigator band and were with us on Friday night at Oleander.

Captain McLaughlin is an earnest Liberal, and, had time permitted, I should have enjoyed a visit with him and his family, for they all sail under the banners of the republic of liberty.

J. D. Galloway and F. J. Galloway are ever ready to lend a hand and keep the lights blazing and the bells ringing. M. F. Estes, W. Brooks, A. C. Bryan, Mr. and Mrs. Hardie, and others to the number of about thirty are on the roll of the Liberal Union. Friends S. E. Hopkins, C. W. Glazier, and Chas. Ochs were present from Fowler, and propose a lecture at that point at some future time. Mr. and Mrs. G. P. Fernald are also among our progressive friends of Oleander. So this rural community has responded with goodly number to the Liberal summons, and the golden dawn is in heart and hope.

Saturday I see a few friends in Fresno—W. T. Riggs, Chas. Burks, Geo. E. Church, Firman Church, etc. Arrangements could not be made for lectures at this flourishing city. The almighty dollar, for the time being, takes the lead, and the country is ahead of the city in intellectual activity. But the element is in Fresno and it will not always be dormant. In calmer times something more than gold will glitter in its busy atmosphere.

I had just time to shake hands and talk a moment with our sturdy and generous supporter, Wm. A. Fisher. He has a pile of Freethought books which are seldom idle, but go the rounds and keep the electric currents sparkling. Mr. Fisher is a thorough man of business, but his heart is aglow for the "good time coming," and he likes to do his share of humanity's gain.

I also met Dr. Rowell, who has been all round the world, and is one of the most well-known and popular citizens of Fresno, and he has not circumnavigated the globe without taking in many a new thought, and observing the "mighty stream of tendency."

I have thus finished my trip through Southern California, and I must say there is a vast improvement. Everywhere I have had larger audiences than before. Freethought is becoming recognized as a power, as a part of the world's history, and people desire to understand its purpose; and as they understand they see that it is the truth and life. What is needed is organization, fellowship, and practical work; and this I look for with ever-increasing hope. Toil has been made pleasant along my varied journey. There is happy memory of a beautiful world; magnificent pictures of sea and plain and mountain; a fruitful land where peace and plenty reign, and where humanity, filled with a thousand activities, gleams to nobler virtues and fairer joys.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

THE SOURCE OF AGNOSTICISM.

If Prof. Thomas H. Huxley, popularly supposed to be the father of Agnosticism, will read the New Ideal for May, 1889, he will learn something to his advantage. In that journal the ex-Rev. Francis Ellingwood Abbot writes as follows:

"The German [form of the] theory [of Universals] recognizes the Universal as the Concept and the Word, but denies it altogether as the Genus,—denies it, that is, as a reality in a real Nature known by Man, yet independent of him. It teaches that the Individual Thing in Nature, even if it exists, cannot be known either in itself or in any of its real relations, internal or external. It teaches that the Universal is absolutely nothing but the work of human reason, has no real existence except as the Concept and the Word, and, as such, has nothing to do with the individual things in themselves, which cannot possibly be known to exist. It teaches that the Concept and the Word have no ultimate origin but Man, and that the notion of real intelligible genera in Nature, existing independently of Man, is a monstrous fiction of mere untutored imagination or 'common sense.' Hence the German theory, teaching the Mere Ideality of the Universal in the Concept and the Word, completely extinguishes, merges, or absorbs the Genus in the Concept or Idea, and has long been fittingly denominated CONCEPTUALISM or IDEALISM.

"In this German theory of Universals lies the deep, secret, and generally unsuspected source of all modern AGNOSTICISM, a result which was uncritically accepted, ready-made, by Spencer and Huxley from Hamilton and Mansel, borrowed by Hamilton and Mansel from Kant and the post-Kantian Idealists, and originally developed by Kant out of Hume and other adherents of Scholastic Nominalism."

Concerning this much misused word Agnostic, Professor Huxley declares that "it simply means that a man shall not say he knows or believes that which he has no scientific grounds for professing to know or believe." Professor Huxley further says that when he reached intellectual maturity and began to ask himself whether he was an Atheist, a Theist, or a Pantheist; a Materialist or an Idealist; a Christian or a Freethinker—he found that the more he learned and reflected, the less ready was the answer, until at last he came to the conclusion that he had neither art nor part with any of these denominations except the last. The one thing in which the most of these good people were agreed was the one thing in which he differed from them. They were quite sure they had solved the problem of existence, while Professor Huxley was quite sure he had not, and he had a pretty strong conviction that the problem was insoluble. "This," says the professor, "was my situation when I had the good fortune to find a place among the members of that remarkable confraternity of antagonists, long since deceased, but of green and pious memory, the Metaphysical Society. Every variety of philosophical and theological opinion was represented there, and expressed itself with entire openness; most of my colleagues were ists of one sort or another; and, however kind and friendly they might be, I, the man without a rag of a label to cover himself with, could not fail to have some of the uneasy feelings which must have beset the historical fox when, after leaving the trap in which his tail remained, he presented himself to his normally elongated companions. So I took thought, and invented what I conceived to be the appropriate title of 'Agnostic.' It came into my head as suggestively antithetic to the 'gnostic' of church history, who professed to know so much about the very things of which I was ignorant; and I took the earliest opportunity of parading it at our society, to show that I, too, had a tail, like the other foxes. To my great satisfaction, the term took; and when the Spectator had stood godfather to it, any suspicion in the minds of respectable people, that a knowledge of its parentage might have awakened, was, of course, completely lulled."

We do not believe that Professor Huxley, when he adopted the word Agnostic as defining his de-bons-non condition, had the least suspicion of what interpretations were to be put upon his new label.

A Mr. Samuel Laing, an English gentleman who is described as "an earnest student, a disciplined thinker, and an enlightened Agnostic," has written an Agnostic creed concerning which Mr. Huxley confesses: "When I consider his creed and compare it with the Athanasian, I think I have, on the whole, a clearer conception of the latter." What then will he say when he learns from Mr. Abbot that by becoming an Agnostic he has merged the Genus in the Concept and is a mere Scholastic Nominalist? We do not see any way open to him but to plead guilty to the Rev. Dr. Wace's charge, and acknowledge himself an Infidel.

LOS ANGELES CRITICISM.

The Los Angeles Tribune contains a report and criticism of Putnam's lecture there that is full of gems. We quote:

"After a few brief attacks on the methods of the two evangelists, the speaker diverted his remarks from them and launched forth into a harangue of invective diatribes and ridicule of the Christian religion, and soon revealed the real animus of the lecture, the Atheistic extreme of Freethinker's attitude toward Christianity."

A harangue of invective diatribes is potent language, but the critic might have strengthened his statement by calling the lecture a diatribe of invective harangues. Furthermore, says the Tribune:

"All the mouldy, utterly discredited postulates which the more intelligent Freethinkers discarded long ago as unworthy and vulnerable weapons were rehashed."

No wonder the Tribune condemns a rehashing of vulnerable weapons. Vulnerable is defined by Worcester as that which may be wounded, and any weapon susceptible of that process is not fit for hash. Again:

"At no time did the speaker's utterances rise to the dignity of coherent argument, or his sallies of wit merit the bursts of laughter and applause which greeted them."

This is a charge which certainly cannot be brought against the Tribune's criticism, especially the following:

"There was absolutely nothing in the speaker's remarks to redeem them from the sheerest empyricism and commonplace."

There is no such word as "empyricism" in the language, but if one were to be invented it could mean no more or less than "combustion," and we have never heard any of Mr. Putnam's remarks that specially needed redemption from that state. The speaker aggravated his offense still further:

"Philanthropy was exalted as the consummate achievement of the best in human nature. Not even the emasculated religion of the less radical wing of Freethinkers was commended."

If Mr. Putnam continues to exalt philanthropy at the expense of religion it may become expedient to withdraw him from the field, as we all know, or should know, that it is much more commendable to be pious than to be good. In conclusion:

"Numbers of people got up and left the room before the close of the lecture, and the speaker did not retain the attention of the audience as it looked at first like he would."

Graphic and full of fine detail work. The people "got up" before leaving. They did not crawl away on their stomachs or work themselves toward the door in their chairs, as it might be inferred that they did if we were not assured that they "got up." Then the beauty of diction—"like he would." A writer bound by the rules of syntax might have said "as though he would;" but our critic knows no such trammels. In fact, we might say that he does not appear to know anything.

JOHN BRANDT, PREACHER.

The Rev. John Brandt has replied to S. P. Putnam's challenge to debate. He writes to the Daily San Diegan as follows:

"Let Samuel P. Putnam, the advocate of Infidelity, state the propositions which he would like to have publicly discussed, and furnish satisfactory credentials as to his character and scholarship, then we can arrive at a conclusion."

JOHN BRANDT."

The Rev. Mr. Brandt appears to forget that he has already acknowledged the advocate of Infidelity a foe worthy of his steel by his long reply in the Daily San Diegan of April 10, and that he himself has stated the propositions which he is challenged to defend on the public platform. After wasting so much ink it is now rather late for him to introduce the questions of scholarship and character, the first of which may be judged from his opponent's published works and lectures, and the latter by his position among the Liberals of the coast. The Rev. Mr. Brandt has evidently reached the only conclusion that it would be safe for him to arrive at, namely, that he doesn't want to debate, and that he will evade the issue by any subterfuge, no matter how unmanly or inconsistent.

THE HELPING HAND.

About March 1 of this year was a critical period in the life of FREETHOUGHT. The publication had exhausted the capital originally invested in it, and had eaten up some $1,500 earned by Mr. Putnam in the lecture field during the previous fifteen months. Opportunities for the publishers to engage in better paying work presented themselves, while prospects in the present enterprise were anything but bright. A brief computation revealed the fact that unless more than the regular revenue from subscriptions and sales were realized, the paper would not succeed. The weekly expenses of publishing FREETHOUGHT are as follows:

Composition.....	$30.00
Paper.....	15.65
Presswork.....	6.00
Folding and fastening.....	3.50
Expressage on paper and forms.....	2.00
Postage on FREETHOUGHT.....	1.50
Rent of office.....	3.50
Stationary, postage stamps, etc.....	5.00
Office assistant.....	7.00
Incidentals, sample copies, etc.....	5.00
Total.....	$79.15

This computation, it will be seen, does not provide for the salaries of the publishers, which, at a most moderate estimate, would increase the total to $100 per week, or $5,200 per year. To realize that amount at least 2,600 subscribers at $2 each are necessary. We have now about 2,000, many of whom have taken the paper at club rates of $1.25, while some are gift subscribers at $1. Each additional subscriber would of course increase the expense, but the returns for such advertising as we are able to obtain would cover the cost of 600 more.

The total receipts from subscribers left the paper, March 1, 1889, some $2,000 behind. This sum had been made up from Mr. Putnam's earnings, from loans, and from gifts, the loans and gifts amounting to $500. It is not to be wondered at that with these figures and facts before them the publishers felt a slight degree of discouragement, especially Mr. Putnam, who had worked hard for over a year, earned a good salary, spent nothing, and yet found himself in debt. We believed, however, that the Liberals of the coast, and to a great extent throughout the country, desired a continuance of the paper: that they would be willing to sacrifice something for its support, and that enough to warrant us in going ahead would be readily subscribed. We desired to secure a publication fund of $2,000 annually. We therefore communicated with about one hundred trusted friends and patrons, asking their advice in the matter and soliciting their co-operation. Rather more than one-half of these have replied, and we give their answers below: M.

From J. Larsen, San Francisco.

GENTLEMEN: Yes, if I can. I like to hear Putnam speak. He is boss.

From Mr. DeBarry, San Francisco.

GENTLEMEN: I cheerfully join the one hundred. Draw on me for $20.

From H. L. Shaug, Del Mar.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: Yours received. I am with you sincerely.

From P. A. Clark, San Jacinto.

FRIENDS: Put my name on the list. Shall be glad to do what I can. Truly yours.

From R. Butterfield, Sacramento.

MR. PUTNAM: I pledge you $20; will make it a hundred if necessary. Always with you.

From Robert Gunther, Eureka.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: I inclose $20 to help make up deficiencies. Fraternally yours.

From William Sims, Mill City, Or.

EDITORS OF FREETHOUGHT: Depend upon me for $20 Oct. 1. Of course the paper must be sustained.

From E. T. Webber, Denver, Col.

PUTNAM & MACDONALD: Depend upon me for my quota. Keep the ball rolling, and I will remit when called upon.

From J. A. Garfield, Marshfield, Or.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: We will think the matter over. You can certainly depend upon us for a helping hand.

From Herman Arnold, Shedd, Or.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: I will pay $20 per year for the next five years for the support of FREETHOUGHT. Yours truly.

From A. Rosenow, Walla Walla.

DEAR SIR: It gives me only pleasure to pledge the assistance suggested. Inclosed find money order for $20. Yours very truly.

From N. D. Goodell, Sacramento.

FRIEND PUTNAM: Of course I shall stand by you. The paper must be sustained, no question about it. Put me down for my share.

From John E. Jones, Round Valley.

DEAR FRIENDS: Until FREETHOUGHT becomes self-sustaining I am with you (if alive), not for five years but for seven times five. Yours truly.

From Mrs. Eugenie Robinett, Nipoma.

FRIENDS PUTNAM & MACDONALD: I send the pledge suggested. Mr. Robinett is absent, but I know he will concur. Your sincere well wisher.

From A. K. and M. J. Olds, McMinnville, Or.

FRIENDS PUTNAM & MACDONALD: FREETHOUGHT must by all means be continued, and you may add our names to the $20 list. Your sincere well-wishers.

From a Friend in Oregon.

DEAR FRIENDS: If my assistance can do any good, count on me for the proposed amount, and accept accompanying $20. Your friend and a Liberal.

From D. Buckingham, Raymond.

FRIENDS: In behalf of the cause I will stand for one of the one hundred. Times are dull, but FREETHOUGHT must live. You have our best wishes as well as our support. Yours with respect.

From L. K. Washburn, Revere, Mass.

DEAR FRIENDS: Mr. Photius Fisk has given me $20 to forward you. Your paper must not stop, and I think you have adopted the right method to keep it going.

From Freeman Parker, Petaluma.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: I hand you $20 and the names of a few subscribers. I may obtain more. Anyway, accept the amount for the support of FREETHOUGHT.

From S. Calhoun, Los Angeles.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: I will make no flattering promise, but you may depend upon me to do all that could reasonably be expected. Fraternally yours.

From James Greenhill, Clinton, Iowa.

FRIENDS: Notwithstanding that you are so far away I freely promise the support mentioned. The cause is one everywhere, in San Francisco or in Turkey. Your well-wisher

From Judge Heydenfeldt, San Francisco.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: I agree to become one of a hundred who will each pay $20 a year for the next five years to insure the continued publication of FREETHOUGHT.

From J. A. Smith, Hudson, N. Y.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: Without large means, and with the future uncertain, I dare not pledge anything beyond the present, but I will give $20 to FREETHOUGHT this year.

From S. B. Cathcart, Marshfield, Or.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: The paper must be made a success. If the proposed method of sustaining it meets with approval count on me to do what I can. Yours for U. M. L.

From H. L. Wilson and Peter Selde, Davenport, W. T.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: We inclose you $20, and will keep it up for four or five years. May others do the same that you may keep on in the grand work. We are yours fraternally.

From H. F. Ebers, Cazadero.

FRIENDS PUTNAM & MACDONALD: I inclose a check for $20. I hope there are Liberals enough on the coast who will do the same, and enable you to continue in the good work. Truly yours.

From Philip Cowen, Petaluma.

FRIENDS: Without making any pledges for my executors to quarrel over, I am with you for one year, and while alive and able shall always certainly feel like doing something for FREETHOUGHT.

From a Friend in Trinity County.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: Your proposed plan for the support of FREETHOUGHT has been mentioned to me. Put my name on the guarantee fund, but never mind about mentioning it in the paper.

Conversation between O. T. Davies and S. P. Putnam.

Mr. Davies.—"I hear you are taking subscriptions of $20 a year. Here are twenty dollars for my share this year."

Mr. Putnam.—"But you hold our note for $100."

Mr. Davies.—"Damn the note."

From L. Geiger, Hudson, N. Y.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: To make a long story short, accept $100, my share for five years in advance. Inclosed also find $3, renewal of my subscription and for "Ireland and the Pope." Yours most respectfully.

From S. Littlefield, Anaheim.

GENTLEMEN: The banner of FREETHOUGHT must be kept waving in the trade wind of human progress, and all Liberals should cheerfully contribute to its support. Herewith find $20. Wishing you a prosperous future, I remain yours very truly.

From C. C. Rodgers, Boulder Creek.

FRIENDS: I am not very "flush," but shall endeavor to raise $20 for the coming year to support FREETHOUGHT. Mr. A. A. Sporeland, of Boulder, will stand in for $10. Hoping for your success, I am truly yours.

From Ranford Worthing, San Diego.

DEAR FRIENDS: I very cheerfully make the pledge of $20 per annum for five years, and as soon as San Diego gets on her feet again will make it a hundred rather than lose the paper. FREETHOUGHT must live. Truly yours.

From W. B. Gray and Frank Schunemann, Pasco, W. T.

DEAR SIR: We will stand in together for $20. If this is satisfactory, you may rely upon us. Though not of large means we are always willing to help in a good cause. Inclosed find $10, and notify when yearly subscription to paper is due.

From B. B. Rockwood, San Pasqual.

FRIEND MACDONALD: Please find inclosed check for $20, my contribution for the maintenance of FREETHOUGHT, I expect to do much more than this for the maintenance of Liberal principles. You are publishing a glorious paper. Yours truly.

From the Hon. A. Schell, Knight's Ferry.

MESSRS PUTNAM & MACDONALD: Your note is received. Let me assure you, gentlemen, that there is nothing in the world to which I would contribute more cheerfully. Put me down one of the hundred, and find check inclosed for $20. Yours truly.

From Ed. Wegner, Sonoma.

GENTLEMEN: I send you $20 and will do so for the next four years if alive and able. It would certainly be a great misfortune to the Liberals of California, and much to their discredit, if they can't keep one Liberal paper alive. Hoping for success to the last, yours most truly.

From John Riffin, Esq., Los Angeles.

MY DEAR BROTHERS: I hasten to inform you that it will give me pleasure to be one of one hundred to contribute to the continued publication of FREETHOUGHT $20 annually in advance during five years, if I survive. Inclosed I send $2 for a new subscriber. Fraternally yours.

From W. S. Rodgers, Boulder Creek.

DEAR FRIENDS: I inclose you $20 for ten subscribers. As to the proposed $20 a year, I say emphatically, Yes; I will do it.

The $20 I now send is separate and apart from this agreement. I have lost so much already that is dear to me that I cannot let FREETHOUGHT go too. Yours sincerely.

From Drs. E. B. Foote, Senior and Junior, New York.

FRIEND PUTNAM: If the Liberals over the country come to time you may count on us for $10 each this year. Another year, if you should need our help, let us know. We certainly want to see FREETHOUGHT sustained on the Pacific coast. It is one of the brightest papers that come to this corner.

From Thomas Rattan, Encinitos.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: I am a Spiritualist, and if assured that FREETHOUGHT would treat Spiritualists with respect, I might entertain your proposition. [We have many Spiritualists among our subscribers, and as yet none have complained that they are not treated with perfect fairness.—Ed. FREETHOUGHT.]

From Richard H. Bliss, Camptonville.

FRIEND MAC: I heartily and cheerfully say Yes! to your proposition—namely a contribution of $20 a year for five years, with only the proviso that I live five years and can get enough of the "yellow slave" to make my pledges good after settling bread account. Inclosed find money order for $20. Fraternally yours.

From D. W. Smith, Port Townsend, W. T.

EDITORS OF FREETHOUGHT, Dear Friends: I am glad you wrote to me. It won't do to let the paper stop, and I now pledge you the sum mentioned, $20 a year for five years, and you can draw on me for the amount at any time. I inclose $2 for my subscription for 1889. Port Townsend is progressing—almost a Boom. Yours truly.

From O. Geldness, Spokane Falls, W. T.

PUTNAM & MACDONALD: It will be a pleasure to me to add my mite to the support of FREETHOUGHT, and I hereby pledge myself to pay $20 per year for the next five years, to be applied to the publication of the paper. To me it seems that the value of such a journal as FREETHOUGHT on this coast can hardly be over-estimated. I forward you herewith $20. Very truly yours.

From L. C. Geertson, Salmon City, Idaho.

MY DEAR FRIENDS: Yes, you may put me down as one of your $20 subscribers. Your noble paper shall not go down so long as I can help it. The subscribers I secured last year speak in high terms of FREETHOUGHT. They like it better than any other paper they take. We are gaining ground all the time, and what is best of all, what we gain we will hold. With my best regards.

From G. A. F. de Lespinasse, M.D., Orange City, Iowa.

GENTLEMEN: I will do as you suggest. You have sunk two thousand dollars for the benefit of humanity, but I think it will be hard to find one hundred who will sink $20 a year without hope of return. There are a few who pay the piper, and the rest enjoy the dancing. I am in favor of fair play and each paying for what he gets. If there were life in Liberalism according to the greatness of its objects, the Coast alone ought to give you all the support required. However, you have my word and promise and I will stick to it, whatever others may do. Fraternally yours.

From A. W. Smith, Denver, Col.

DEAR MR. PUTNAM: I am not surprised at your statement. My only surprise is that you have done so well. You must not let FREETHOUGHT go down—it would be a lasting disgrace for the Liberals to allow it. We look to the Pacific states for backbone to help us in this sparsely settled country. When I made the other remittance it was my intention to give the same amount every year until the paper was self-sustaining, so you may count on me for $50 this year also. I don't see why you and Macdonald should give all your time and talents even to the best of reforms. Wishing you abundant success I, remain always your friend.

From John McGlashan, Ukiah.

FRIENDS MACDONALD AND PUTNAM: Inclosed I send you $20— as a subscriber to the FREETHOUGHT fund. There certainly must be on this coast alone enough and many more Liberals and Freethinkers to sustain and uphold your paper. The fact is, we can't afford to let it stop. It must go on. There must be no such word as fail. It is doing much good, and I have reason to believe that it will ultimately become a fixed and permanent feature of our California energy and perseverance, established under many trying and disadvantageous circumstances. With my warmest sympathy and best and kindest wishes for every success, believe me yours ever.

From R. F. Grigsby, Palisade Mines, Calistoga.

FRIENDS PUTNAM & MACDONALD: Your kind favor of February 20 came duly to hand, and has had the earnest consideration of myself and wife. We sincerely sympathize with you in your desire to see FREETHOUGHT and the cause of Liberalism a grand success on the Pacific coast. We realize that the Liberals have a great deal more at stake in the success or failure of our cause than many of them are aware of, and if they could only be brought to understand the real situation, they would respond heartily in the support of our papers and our organizations. The people must be educated; they must be made acquainted with the principles of Freethought, then they will become supporters of our organizations and our papers. We know that FREETHOUGHT cannot be maintained without means, and until it is self-sustaining its friends must support it, and their reward must be in the advantage their children will receive more than for the present. Our ancestors fought that we might be free, and we must keep up the glorious fight. If all could join in the common cause the burden would be light, but we are aware that many cannot do more than they are now doing; consequently I propose, as the best plan to assist the publication and circulation of FREETHOUGHT, that one hundred representative Liberals shall each pledge themselves for the sum of twenty dollars per annum to the support of FREETHOUGHT; that in return they receive ten copies of the paper, for which they will procure subscribers, or circulate them where they are most likely to do the greatest amount of good for the cause of Liberalism, thereby giving the paper the required aid necessary to its existence, increasing its circulation, which will make it self-sustaining, and making a larger number of people acquainted with our principles. On this plan many of our friends could, by a little pains, procure one or more subscribers. We must not let FREETHOUGHT go down. I am ready to be counted one of the one hundred who will pledge either ten subscribers or $20 coin, as the case may be. I hand you herewith my $20. As ever, yours in Freethought and Universal Liberty.

To FRIENDS: I think it will be recognized by all that in making this statement and calling for a guarantee fund of $2000 for the support of FREETHOUGHT, Mr. Macdonald and myself do it for the sake of the cause, and not for any pecuniary advantage. Neither of us is obliged to continue in this movement, for there are opportunities of work vastly more profitable. We continue in the enterprise because we like it, and would rather engage in it than anything else; because it is something that makes life worth living. We shall remain at the post so long as we can do so, keep out of debt, and not starve.

I want every Liberal to act in this same spirit. I want nothing as a matter of charity. FREETHOUGHT is not a beggar. It stands upon its merits and nothing more. It proposes to give value received for all money contributed. What is it worth? That is the simple question for our subscribers and for Liberals to decide. It is unquestionable that this journal is a most powerful instrumentality for organization and progress. It is needed upon the Coast. The vast gain in the past year is due mainly to the influence of the paper. It has brought our forces together and created fellowship and unity of action.

I desire every Liberal to ask himself frankly, What is this progress worth to him as an individual. Of course there are many outside of the churches, non-Christians, who have no idea of anything beyond themselves and their own little circle. This is all right for any who are thus constituted. But there are Freethinkers who sympathize with the affairs of the world, whose delight is not simply in themselves, but in the progress and glory of the race to which they belong; who desire to see advancement, liberty, justice, and civilization; to whom the value of life comes from the fact that the individual is blended with the universal. To these Liberals I make this statement. It is worth something to them to see things grow better and brighter; to see mankind improve; to see superstition and error destroyed; to see the way open for larger and more beautiful attainment. Life is richer to them because of this wealth of thought and hope.

The question, therefore, is plainly stated. It is a business proposition from the standpoint of universal manhood. Not from the standpoint of bread and butter, of competition, of money-making, but of the ideal world, of that which gives the best and sweetest meaning to labor and enjoyment. What is this paper worth to the cause, and through the success of the cause to any one individual? If it is worth nothing, then give nothing.

But if it is worth something, a factor in your life that is a real benefit, then is it not a matter of justice to put your shoulder to the wheel and help what you can?

The proposition to raise above and beyond the subscriptions a guarantee fund of $2000 a year for the next five years is the best and wisest proposition that could be made. It settles the question at once and places FREETHOUGHT upon a solid basis. Its success is thus absolutely assured.

The response has been most generous. Nearly one thousand dollars has been pledged by less than fifty of our friends and subscribers. Besides these fifty who promise $20 per year, there are from one hundred to five hundred who can pay five or ten dollars per year. Of course the large majority can only pay the regular subscription price, and from these we ask nothing more. We do not want any to give who would feel it a burden to give. But there are those who can give as well as not. It is by these that we expect the guarantee fund to be supported.

I would like an immediate answer from all who will join the good company who so staunchly support our labors. Let it be settled at once upon what we can depend, so that we can go on with renewed hope. We care not for any losses in the past if only the future of the paper is provided for. We can work on a small salary if only we are able to keep out of debt and see that the paper will not die. Each friend by doing what he can will give this assurance of undoubted victory. FREETHOUGHT will grow more powerful year by year, will gain a subscription list of from three to five thousand, and be self-supporting, and Freethought societies will spring up and be moulded into one grand association.

To friends who hope for this, who believe in this, and the accomplishment of which will be an added wealth to life, we make this statement and ask for their co-operation. Several who cannot give $20 per year have already agreed to give five and ten dollars per year. Who will join this number of two hundred, and thus make the guarantee fund of $2000 an absolute certainty, and the great work on the Pacific Coast one of undiminished hope and advancement? SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"The Truth Seeker Annual" for 1889. 25 cents.

S. P. PUTNAM has received invitation to the following places in Oregon and Washington, where he will lecture from June to October. The dates will be announced next week. Mr. Putnam has also received numerous invitations from other places, in Montana, Idaho, Utah, Colorado, and the East, but will not be able to accept until next year: Talent, Silverton, Stayton, Mills City, Coburg, Turner, Lebanon, Canby, Molalla, Oswego, Hillsboro, Forest Grove, North Yamhill, Eola, Shedd's, Arnold's Grove, Astoria, Stella, Stark's Point and vicinity, Coos Co., Arago, Coquille, North Coos River, Marshfield, Bandon, etc., Kalama, Davenport, Rosalie and vicinity, Dayton, Union, Baker City, Prairie City, Hamilton, Fox, Lone Rock, Monument, Fossil, Linkville, Brownsboro, Buckley, and Olympia.

ABOUT this time many letters written by George Washington are being republished. We supply a deficiency by printing the following:

"ROCKY HILL, Sept. 10, 1788.

"THOMAS PAINE: I have learned since I have been at this place that you are at Bordentown—whether for the sake of retirement or economy I know not. Be it for either or both, or whatever it may, if you will come to this place and partake with me I shall be exceedingly happy to see you at it. Your presence may remind Congress of your past services to this country; and if it is in my power to impress them, command my best exertions with freedom, as they will be rendered cheerfully by one who entertains a lively sense of the importance of your works, and who with much pleasure subscribes himself

Your sincere friend,
"GEORGE WASHINGTON."

WE receive regularly the ex-Rev. Hugh O. Pentecost's Twentieth Century, of which, we understand, the Hon. Frederick Cyrus Leubuscher, LL.D., is business manager. The paper is of the same age as FREETHOUGHT and is three-fourths as large. Mr. Pentecost formerly believed in God and Christianity; he now believes in Henry George and the Single Tax, and assumes an Agnostic attitude toward the subjects of his former faith. Whether his last state is worse than the first is a matter of opinion, but there can be no dispute about his earnestness and ability. The last number at hand contains an attractive advertisement of FREETHOUGHT.

A WEALTHY real estate dealer of Birmingham, Ala., recovered from a chronic disease last summer while undergoing the "faith cure." He at once became a monomaniac on the subject, advertised that he could cure all diseases by faith, neglected his business, wrote a book on Christian science, and finally became a raving maniac. Last week he was sent to the lunatic asylum, a total wreck. The saying that the cure is worse than the disease generally finds an illustration when the Christian science method is faithfully tried.

ATTENTION is directed to the Call of the Silverton Union for a State Convention of the Liberals of Oregon, to be held June 22 and 23. Oregon is one of the foremost states in the matter of Liberalism, and the convention, doubtless, will be largely attended and influential for the secularization of the state.

A CALL was issued for a meeting of Los Angeles Liberals last Sunday night to organize an auxiliary Secular Union, but owing to the prevalent rain the response was small, and the election of officers was deferred until next Sunday.

To acknowledge we are wrong, to correct a mistake, to accept the opinion of another when convinced he is right, are marks of good judgment and wisdom.—ELMINA.

OREGON STATE CONVENTION.

To the Liberals of Oregon:

The members of the Silverton Secular Union, of Silverton, Oregon, hereby cordially invite all the Liberals of Oregon to meet with them in mass convention at Silverton, June 22 and 23, 1889, for the purpose of organizing a state association on the basis of the Demands of Liberalism, to co-operate with the American Secular Union. The association thus formed is to represent no intellectual creed, but simply equal rights and impartial liberty. It is to be organized in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the words of General Grant—"Keep the church and state forever separate."

All in favor of these great ends, so necessary to the preservation of Republican and Democratic institutions, are solicited to be present for fraternal co-operation. In union there is strength.

J. W. McCLURE, President of Silverton Secular Union.
R. D. ALLEN, Secretary.
MRS. CARRIE FITZGERALD,
H. D. MOUNT,
E. WOLFARD, } Executive Committee.

OBSERVATIONS.

The past week afforded San Francisco more dampness than the city had seen before at this season of the year since the water came up to Montgomery street. It rained from Friday to Tuesday, and at this writing there is a fair prospect of more. Sunday the baseball games were ruined, picnickers got soaked, and the city generally reminded me of a large stew, with a few men and women floating around as oysters. About three hundred tickets to Mr. Putnam's lecture were sold, but not more than one-half of them were presented to Mr. Walker, who was stationed at the hall door on Sunday night to gather them in. One hundred and fifty intelligent people make a good audience, but four times as many ought to have been present, considering the preliminary work that was done. Every inducement was offered people to come, short of paying their carfare, with the success above noted.

P. O. Chilstrom, Esq., president of the San Francisco Freethought Society, presided. Professor Schultheis not being present to encounter the piano, the breach was filled by Dr. Franz Kuckein introducing a gentleman who played with great skill and taste.

Mr. Putnam received a warm greeting, as I could tell from my position in the ticket office, where the sound of applauding hands was distinctly audible. The lecturer spoke on "The Past and the Present." Somewhere during his trip to the southern part of the state Brother Putnam had contracted a cold that impaired his voice slightly at the start, but its effects wore away rapidly, so that at the close I was ready to agree with Mr. Perkins, of the Weekly Star, that one does not often hear a better lecture.

The pecuniary loss which might have resulted from the lack of a large audience on this occasion—owing to the threatening weather—was luckily averted by the activity of Mr. H. W. Walker, Mr. Lemme, and others, who disposed of a great number of tickets previous to the lecture. Mr. Walker, being at leisure otherwise, was especially lively in the good work. Mr. J. A. Williams, too, distributed circulars gratuitously, and sold dollars' worth of books for the benefit of the cause. In spite of obstacles, therefore, the event was an all-around success.

Next Sunday afternoon, May 12, at 3 o'clock, Mr. Putnam, in the same hall, will make some critical remarks about the Revival Methods of D. L. Moody and the Rev. Samuel Jones. Admission will be free to all, and everybody is invited to attend.

The meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society on the evening of April 28 was pleasant and well attended. The brilliantly-lighted hall was just comfortably filled, and the little alcove at the farther end, framing Vice-President Eastman with its red-plush upholstery, presented a picture calculated to please the most critical eye. The high and spacious chairs, provided with comfortable backs and arms, give the sitter a sense of importance and magisterial dignity. There was to be heard the buzz of social intercourse between ladies, and the gruffer notes of male philosophers swapping opinions. This, however, was interrupted by the Chair calling the attention of the audience to the purpose for which it had assembled, and after Secretary Breuer had read a selection from the minute book, Mr. Gustave Schultheis elicited a series of harmonious notes from the corner where the piano stood. A little unfinished business ensued, followed by the singing of one of the noble songs with which the Cosmian Hymn Book abounds, and then Professor Miller gave his discourse with the appropriate title of "Heaven." The speaker outlined the various notions of a future state that have been held by different peoples, all of whom believed that in heaven they would pursue the pleasures of which they were fondest on earth. Some Indian tribes held that the man would have the best chance in the happy hunting-grounds who improved the present by stealing the most horses and taking the most scalps. The Mohammedan heaven was filled with beautiful women of easy virtue; otherwise, it was much like the Christian conception. A description of Dante's and Milton's heavens was given. In one paradise spoken of trees bore fruit twelve times per month, a statement which drew from an auditor the reluctant confession that it beat Los Angeles county. Heaven, the speaker said, had been variously located in the west, in the south, under the earth, and above the earth. Discovery had driven it from all earthly points, and astronomy had driven it from the sky, until it existed nowhere but in the imagination.

I had intended to report this lecture somewhat at length, but at a critical moment Secretary Breuer borrowed my pencil, and it has not been returned up to the time of going to press.

Previous to the discussion which was to follow, the Chair introduced Mr. W. Alfred Pingree, of the firm of Pingree & Furgason, who made some entertaining remarks upon a banjo. Mr. Pingree wore a handsome rose in his buttonhole, and tossed his instrument about, without interrupting the tune he was playing, in a manner that would have demonstrated the presence of spirits if the room had been dark.

Mr. J. L. Hatch made a felicitous speech. He spoke of his acquaintanceship with the late James Lick, whom he visited when upon his dying bed. Mr. Lick announced himself a Materialist without expectation of a future life or desirous of one. Mr. Lick spoke regretfully of the fact that there was no Liberal organization in the city which he might aid with his means. If such had existed he would gladly have donated it $50,000 for a hall. Mr. Hatch reported that he had been making some inquiries into the refusal of the Pioneer Association to rent their hall to the Freethought society. The secretary of the association, with great lack of candor, as he thought, had informed him that it was none of his business, but he should look further, and believed that the case was not hopeless. Mr. Hatch alluded to the Washington centenary, and said that if any one had reason to celebrate that event it was the Freethinkers, as Washington was a Liberal amid what Henry Ward Beecher would describe as the "costive conservatism" of his day. So were the other Revolutionary heroes to a great degree.

Mr. William Paddon spoke upon the God idea, saying that to believe that any personal intelligence governed the aggregate of matter was absurd and unprovable, and that so long as men looked for all their happiness in another world, regarding this as simply a vale of tears, they would neglect the highest duties of the present life.

Mr. H. L. Knight, speaking of heaven, said that all intelligent people were in the habit of speculating more or less on what might be the future state. He did so himself sometimes, when he had nothing else to think of. Perhaps even the brute creation did the same. We did not know. It was a harmless amusement, but had been perverted by a class of men called priests, who formed their crude notions of heaven ages ago, and had ever since declared it a heresy to either deny the accuracy of their conceptions or to form any others. It was as though the man who invented the wheelbarrow had declared that vehicle to be the ne plus ultra of all inventions, and had punished by death and torture any improvement upon his primitive conveyance. If there had always been Freethought, the dreams of a future life which men have indulged in would have been a blessing instead of a curse. Mr. Knight added some patriotic remarks concerning the fathers of the Republic, who rejected all popes, kings, and gods when they wrote the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Thomas Curtis, a man who has grown old and wise in the cause of Liberalism, was the next speaker. He said that in spite of the action of the fathers of the Republic, in rejecting kings, popes, and gods, there are thousands of wealthy dudes in the country who toady to royalty; the pope of Rome and his priests, practically rule in the politics of America, and the descendants of revolutionary sires aim to get their phantom deity recognized in the Constitution. A hypocritical Catholic archbishop of San Francisco issues a circular extolling the character of George Washington, a member in high standing of the Masonic fraternity, which order has been damned and anathematized by every pope for the last three hundred years. According to the archbishop, Washington was called of God to effect American freedom and preserve the blessings of religious liberty; while according to the popes the father of his country is doomed to everlasting perdition. Mr. Curtis added that the idea of heaven grew out of human vanity. Every Christian believes that the son of God died for him, and that he is the especial object of omnipotent solicitude. It is by feeding this vanity that priests rule the people.

An unnamed gentleman, following, rebuked the mass of mankind for using the word "I," whereas it should be "we," since there are two persons, the physical and the mental. I failed to catch the exact direction of the speaker's general drift.

I should not fail to record that during the exercises, Mr. Schou, the treasurer, moved that a collection be taken up, and that the motion was carried without a dissenting voice, the audience responding as generously to the measure when carried into effect as when it was put to vote. Three new members were added to the roll, and the meeting adjourned.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The Union Iron Works of this city has the contract to build a heavy armored war vessel of 54,000 horse-power at a cost of $1,628,950.—The city trustees of Petaluma have passed an ordinance raising the retail liquor license to $100 per quarter, and granting such licenses only on the recommendation of ten taxpayers and the filing of a one-thousand dollar bond that the applicants will not permit gambling or dice-throwing and that the saloon will be closed up at midnight and not be open before five o'clock. The penalty for violation of the ordinance is a fine of $300 and the forfeiture of the license, half the fine to go to the informer. The ordinance will close about forty saloons and leave five open.—The woman suffragists of Washington Territory are making a vigorous campaign for the purpose of having a clause inserted in the new state constitution favoring the ballot for women. Laura de Force Gordon, Matilda Hindman, and other noted speakers are stumping the territory to this end. Probably a separate article on the subject, to be voted on by the people when the constitution comes before them, will be adopted. The constitutional convention meets in Olympia July 4. The election for members takes place on the 14th of this month.—Heavy rains have damaged and benefited crops in this state in about equal proportion.—Miss Dykes, the Missouri girl seduced by Deacon Van Every, of Los Angeles, won her suit for damages, the jury giving her a verdict of $15,000.—The young wife of the Rev. Dr. Sprecher, of San Diego, has run away from him. He is fifty and she is seventeen. Sprecher's former wife secured a divorce last summer.—Dwight Hackett, editor of the Napa Reporter, who mysteriously disappeared a short time since, turns up in Chicago.—Samuel Brannan, the well-known California pioneer, died at Escondido, May 7. He was seventy years of age. Mr. Brannan was at one time the wealthiest and most popular man in California, and did much for the interests of the state.

David G. Croly, the well-known New York journalist, is dead.—Last Sunday's killing record: William Tansor killed his infant child at Chicago, Illinois. William Gilmore killed his wife and committed suicide at Albany, Georgia. Two men were killed and several seriously injured by a railro collision near Jamestown, D. T. Prof. Matchett was shot dead by George Skene near Galena, Ill. Mayor Douglass, of Covington, Tenn., was killed by a negro he was attempting to arrest.

—Many of the people who went to the newly-opened lands at Oklahoma, I. T., are leaving the best way they can. Thousands are destitute and disgusted.—George Francis Train, after sixteen days' fast, delivered a lecture last Sunday evening in New York. It was a rambling and incoherent discourse, and failed to hold the audience.—A Polish priest was assaulted on the street of Manistee, Mich., last Saturday morning by one faction of his church, and a general riot resulted, in which men and women participated. The militia had to be called out to quell the riot. The fire department was also called out and turned the hose upon the mob. After nearly drowning several of the rioters peace was restored. The sheriff attempted to arrest the leaders and was attacked by the women, several of whom were knocked down. Ten rioters have been jailed and a guard stationed at the priest's house to prevent trouble. The riot grew out of financial troubles in the church.—The Australian election law, with modifications to suit the locality, has been adopted by both houses of the Missouri legislature, and awaits the governor's signature.—There were symptoms of another Anarchist scare in Chicago last week, but no disturbances ensued. William H. Barnum, chairman of the National Democratic Committee, died at New York May 1.

Citizens of Paris celebrated, last Sunday, the one hundredth anniversary of the meeting of the States-General, May 5, 1789. During the ceremonies an anti-republican fired a shot at President Carnot, but no damage was done.—Considerable excitement was caused in the trial of the Times-Parnell case, London, by Parnell's deliberate admission that some of his statements made in the Commons were total falsehoods. The hardihood of Parnell surprised the audience and elicited hisses.—The great world's fair, at Paris, was formally opened last Monday.

IN CONCLUSION.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I take the hint. The single-tax puzzle has monopolized too many of these columns, where I should not have introduced it if Mr. Roscoe had not asked me for my opinion. He then used compliments very different from those in which he has since indulged. His style is peculiarly pointed in regard to a certain lecturer, about whom he says: "If the speaker was not good enough to quote, he was not good enough to mention at all." I will quote some of his exact words. I am not the only one who distinctly remembers his saying, though not in the hall, "The only virtuous member of society is the tramp." Why not? When a tramp comes to the last gate, and Peter asks him how many times he has broken the ten commandments, he need only reply, "That's played out. Henry George has proved that nothing is so bad as owning land. I never took any part in that robbery. I never even encouraged it by paying any of the robbers a single cent for rent. All I want is a copy of 'Progress and Poverty';"

"Then I can read my title clear
To mansions in the skies."

F. M. HOLLAND.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURES.

San Francisco, May 12, 19,	Grub Gulch, May 29, 30, 31,
Boulder Creek, May 20, 21, 22,	Fresno Flats, June 1, 2, 3,
Santa Cruz, May 23, 24, 25,	New Sanel, June 6, 7,
San Francisco, May 26,	Ukiah, June 8, 9, 10,
Raymond, May 28,	Covelo, June 13, 14, 15, 16.

Appointments for Oregon and Washington, extending from June 22 to Nov. 1, will be announced next week.

LIFE spent alone is worthless. Life spent for only one or two is small and narrow in its results. A broad, all-embracing life, that takes in humanity as a whole, is the true philosophy.—ELMINA.

THE GOD IDEA.

The Christian idea of God is compounded of that of the Bible and that of the creeds. The Biblical idea of God is a patchwork of violently-contrasting colors, such as it might be expected would be found in a number of pamphlets written by different authors at widely different periods. The Old Testament idea is that of a national God, the God of the Hebrews. The body of the Jews did not think of him otherwise. He was their God, and the God of no one else. Some of their prophets and priests, with more extended vision, declared him the God of the whole earth, and that there was none other except him. This conception belongs to the later period of the Jewish people, and was taken up and carried on by the Christians.

The Hebrew God was in his original conception a war-god, jealous, merciless to his enemies, changeable, not always successful, demanding constant bloody sacrifices, insatiate of praise and glorification. The Christians could not ignore or deny these features of his character, for "all scripture is given by inspiration of God," and the Old Testament conception must be received. But, in accordance with advancing thought, they invented another side for his character. He was declared to be a father of men and a god of love. As Jesus was his son, he also was a god, and a third god, the Holy Ghost, was likewise developed, who, however, to preserve the idea of unity, was fused with Jesus and the father, into the Trinity, a three-in-one God. This same conception of a supreme triune god was common to Peruvians, Egyptians, Hindoos, and Babylonians. This conception is still maintained by all Christian churches, Catholic and Protestant. It is embodied in the so-called Apostle's Creed, which creed has been recited in concert by all the members of the Evangelical Alliance in convention assembled, and is one of the creeds of the Catholic church. This same conception of God is expressed yet more strongly in the Nicene creed, which is found in the Prayer Book of the Church of England. Both of these creeds are also adopted by the Catholic church. The Apostle's creed is sufficient for my purpose, and is as follows:

"I believe in God, the Father Almighty, maker of heaven and earth;

"And in Jesus Christ, his only son, our Lord, who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried; he descended into hell; the third day he arose from the dead; he ascended into heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God, the Father Almighty; from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead.

"I believe in the Holy Ghost; the Holy Catholic church; the communion of Saints; the forgiveness of sins; the resurrection of the body; and the life everlasting."

This creed represents the faith of all Christians about the nature of God, for it is a creed which they all accept, with very few exceptions, which they are obliged to accept to become members of the church. Let us look at it in detail.

"I believe in God the Father Almighty." A father? We shall see about that presently. But that is certainly a nobler conception than of God as a god of battle, giving orders to kill men, women, and children. The Christian, while he upholds the Old Testament as inspired, is obliged to maintain both ideas, which are entirely contradictory—that of a savage God and of a mild God. That is the result of trying to reconcile primitive crudity and civilized reflection; of declaring that the ideas of both are true; i. e., that black and white are the same.

"Maker of heaven and earth." Yes, certainly, but not of the whole world. Ideas of heaven were crude and limited in the days when this creed was made.

And in Jesus Christ, his only son, etc. Here follows a recapitulation of the chief miraculous events of Jesus's life; his conception, birth, and death (which was natural), his descent into Hades, his resurrection, ascension, and a prophecy of his future coming to judge the world. The Nicene creed declares more distinctly than the Apostles' the unity of Jesus with God the Father. He is said to be "God of (or out of) God, begotten, not made, being of one substance with the Father," and by him "all things are made."

It need not be said that all this is impossible to the scientific mind. Can the Infinite power have a son? Can it inclose itself in the body of a man? Can a child be conceived or born save by the ordinary course of nature? Is there any satisfactory testimony that a dead man has come to life? Can the body of a man go up through the air and disappear. And if Jesus's body went to heaven, where is heaven? These things are impossibilities to us.

The whole story and the creed are easily explained, however, if we remember that at the time when the creed was formulated the idea of incarnation was a familiar one. The Hindoos believed that their god Vishnu had nine incarnations. According to Greek mythology, Jupiter appeared as a bull, as a swan, as a man, and the other gods often appeared in human form. The gods, too, had children by the daughters of men. Hercules and Esculapius were the sons of Jupiter, Romulus of Mars, Æneas of Venus. The idea of sonship to a god was a familiar one to that imaginative, unscientific age. That explains how this creed came to be formed, but it does not explain why it is still believed by a great majority of the people of Europe and America, and subscribed to by all members of the Christian church. That is because the leading minds of the Christian church have always declared and insisted that this mythology about Christ is true, though all other mythology is false, which it so exactly resembles. This creed has been bound with iron bands upon the thought of Europe for nineteen centuries. Man has been compelled by fire and by sword to declare its truth. This creed has cramped the thought of centuries and dwarfed the intellectual stature of man. Yet on the day of Easter the churches of this city and nation have been crowded with worshipers and sight-seers to honor a feast that declares the resurrection of a god-man from the dead. Surely there is little difference between heathen and Christian as to the fables of their religion, or the nature of the god in whom they have chosen to believe. Certainly men delight in the figments of their imagination and prefer picturesque self-deception to the clear light of reason and truth.

To be sure there is excuse. The mind of man has been terrorized. It has been kept in slavery by priesthood and government, by church and state. But the bonds of that slavery have been relaxed. Its terrors can no longer be enforced upon the body in this world. They can only be thundered and threatened from the pulpit for the next. The mind of modern man is free to accept the truth, and shall he not do so? Shall the nineteenth century continue to believe the fables of the first? Shall a Semitic god be any longer forced upon the knowledge of to-day? Is it not a shame to his intelligence and a disgrace to his reason that holds to-day belief in a trinity, and the miraculous events of the life of Christ as happening to his god? Shall he accept a false creed because it is respectable? Shall he believe a lie because society approves of it?

In every encounter of the champions of Freethought with the champions of orthodoxy the latter bite the dust. Gladstone has ridden a double tilt with Huxley and with Ingersoll, and in each he has been unhorsed. Laymen, doctors of divinity, and bishops fall before their lance. Yet with incredible stolidity, the former declare themselves the victors, and their followers are assured that they have won the battle. Some men may be ground and re-ground in the mortar of logic and not abandon their folly. Such are the teachers of Christian doctrine, of those childish stories and subtleties of an unscientific age.

But there is more of this creed, adopted nineteen centuries ago and obligatory on all Christians to-day: "From thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead." This judgment, with its attendant eternal punishment, has lain like a nightmare on the Christian mind all these centuries. And yet it is all a fiction. The idea of a future judgment is common to all the Babylonian, Egyptian, Greek, and Mohammedan religions, and if true for one is true for all. The ground of evidence is the same in each—that is, the evidence is worthless. Judgment, or punishment for sin, which is broken law, goes on constantly under the operation of natural law. That an infinite being will come from some distant place in visible form to sit upon a throne and judge mankind is as childish a belief as that the same infinite became a child. Such beliefs may do for the infancy of thought, but they are unworthy of its manhood.

"I believe in the Holy Ghost." This is the third person of the Trinity, a somewhat vague personality, which it has always been rather difficult to separate and outline, even in ecclesiastic thought. He is the convincer of sin; there is a sin against him which is deadly; his agency converts men to a belief in Christianity. He is a comforter, an indefinite presence that acts mystically upon the soul. The Nicene creed declares his attributes a little further. He is "the Lord and giver of life, who proceedeth from the father and the son, who, with the father and son together, is worshiped and glorified." The Greek church does not allow this procession from the son, and does not commune on this account with the Roman church, and this difference of doctrinal opinion has led to much bitterness of feeling and mutual excommunications and revilings.

Such is the Christian definition of God by its creeds, adopted from fifteen to eighteen centuries ago, which it has never changed, which it refuses to change, and yet requires all its members to agree to. In the presence of modern knowledge this conception appears so unreasonable, so artificial, so unscientific, so plainly the invention of imagination, that the minds of intelligent Christians are constantly troubled by the struggle to believe it in the face of reason and truth. If I have dwelt strongly upon this definition of God, it is because this definition is the substance of Christianity, the leading principles from which all others proceed—the fountain head of faith.

I am aware that there are many other conceptions of God among Christians themselves, that there are many other ways of thinking about him, and so, it has been said, almost as many ideas of God as there are persons, each person's idea differing somewhat. I do not quarrel with that. Each one has a right to his individual opinion. Thought must be free. But I find fault with Christianity for obliging its members to accept a definition of God which reason condemns as stultifying the intellect, which Christianity refuses to change, though it has been proved again and again that its conception is unphilosophical, unscientific, and utterly devoid of proof.

HERBERT MILLER.

A MODERN WHITFIELD'S FATE.

The town of Waverly, O., is all torn up. Nothing in the history of that peaceful village has ever created such a sensation and scandal as that which the other day attended the untimely discovery concerning the youthful pastor of the town, the Rev. Mr. Luck.

Mr. Luck is twenty-four years old, and his diploma from the Antioch Theological Seminary was granted within the past year. Two or three months ago the good people of Waverly had their first opportunity to listen to the Rev. Mr. Luck. He had come to the town leading a band of revivalists, and his tremendous torrent of eloquence at once made itself felt. He possessed a marvelous gift of oratory. The second sermon he preached carried away his hearers. They thought a second Whitfield had come upon the earth, and Mr. Luck's fame at once spread into seventeen counties, and from far and near great throngs came to hang upon the gifted preacher's burning words.

The good people of Waverly could not let so great a treasure escape them. They promptly issued a "call" to the Rev. Mr. Luck, at a fine salary, and he settled in their midst.

The young Whitfield was handsome, had fine elocutionary powers, a commanding figure, and for one so young great dignity of manner. It was not surprising that the young females of his flock went wild over him, and that jealousies and heart-burnings arose that nearly broke up two sewing circles and the young ladies' visiting committee to the poor of the parish. What might have happened further will never be known, for a most untoward accident cut short the brilliant career of the Rev. Mr. Luck.

One night about two weeks ago he was announced to deliver a sermon upon "Conscience." The church was packed to overflowing. For more than an hour he held his congregation spell-bound with graphic descriptions, beautiful metaphors, and wondrous flights of eloquence. Half the vast congregation sat agape and marveled that one so young could be so gifted.

But among the Rev. Mr. Luck's hearers on that occasion was a meddlesome newspaper man, gifted with a memory—a memory with a big M. He thought he had heard that sermon, or read it, before. Ere the last sound of eloquence had died upon Mr. Luck's luckless lips, that meddlesome man with a memory was streaking it for home, where he had a pile of scrapbooks. In an hour he had found the identical sermon; it was one preached by the Rev. Talmage on September 28, and published in a Cincinnati paper of the next day. Confronted with the sermon in cold type, Mr. Luck at first expressed surprise and anger, then equivocated and then confessed.

And still further, to add confusion to confession, the young Whitfield stole from the town between two suns—never stopping to draw the remainder of salary due him, or bid his sorrowing parishioners farewell.

Hence it is that the good people of Waverly gather in their accustomed haunts and whisperingly consult and ask themselves, "Is life worth the living?"—Examiner.

HEAVEN ON EARTH—A BUSINESS VIEW.

As it has now been concluded, at least among a large class of thinking people, that an existence hereafter is very problematical, and is rather a creation of the imagination than resting on any substantial basis, it devolves on us to see if we cannot supplant this old and cherished hope with a better and more tangible one; for, after all, there is a feeling in the human mind that we are placed on this earth to enjoy life, and if we do not, we should find out the reason why. It may be that disobedience is the true reason of our "fall." But disobedience to what? Doubtless it is a disobedience to some implanted instinct which we have suppressed or perverted. The Bible idea may not be far wrong.

Other animals follow out their instincts when not interfered with. Bees and beavers are models of industry in their way. "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways and be wise." We cannot pervert the instincts of these animals. We may destroy them, but we cannot change their nature. We may steal away their provision for the dark days, or we may destroy the elaborate architecture of their homes, and they will sicken and die, or flee away elsewhere from their persecutors.

It is different, however, with human beings. Man is created perfect, or at least perfectly adapted to meet the various contingencies of life, but his natural instincts and inclinations, which are all good in themselves, may be perverted by his education and surroundings.

First, we have to eradicate the idea which has been so persistently inculcated, that this life is mainly a vale of tears; that man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward; that he is naturally depraved, and cannot hope to enjoy happiness on this earth, for he has only an inheritance of sin. Or, as the old song of the poet has it—

Few are thy days and full of woe,
O man of woman born.

All these doctrines should now give way to more cheerful anticipations of life; to a career of success in good works; to a peaceful solution of all difficulties. All the miserable debates and strifes of the present day should vanish before the dawning light of the new era, when the wicked shall cease from troubling and the weary be at rest.

Without a question we are at present in a new phase of society, such as never before existed in the history of man. Like a wave from the broad swell of the Pacific it has rushed in upon us unsuspectingly, and left us in amazement and alarm. But there is no need for consternation, the situation may be summed up in a few words.

About a century ago, more or less, an ingenious man, named Watts, so perfected the steam engine as to adapt it to useful work. That is, he made it so that it would turn a wheel with a force equal to the power of several horses, and from this circular motion, oscillating, reciprocating, eccentric, and other motions could be derived. Hence, by putting a strap around its principal or drive wheel, motion was communicated to any machine with which it was connected. Here a new power was born into the world.

Then a man named Arkwright, a barber by trade, conceived the idea of uniting a number of spinning-wheels together in one machine, and by applying the steam engine to move it, cotton, woolen, silk, or other thread was spun and reeled in vast quantities, at once superseding the old grandmothers' spinning-wheels over the country.

Before long, yet another invention was brought forth—that of the cotton gin, by Whitney, which separated the cotton fibre from the seed. Factories for spinning thread, and power looms for weaving, having been established, the new career of machinery was fairly entered upon. The rural population was drafted into the cities by the prospect of gain and high wages, until finally the supply of candidates for city work exceeded the demand, and has so continued down to the present day.

In the meantime inventors were at work applying the power of steam to almost every conceivable purpose; notably to transportation on railroads by locomotives; to steam vessels, first on rivers, and finally on the ocean. Indeed, it may be stated that a more complete revolution in human affairs, ramifying throughout the whole social structure, was never before effected in in so short a time, or in any time. Talk of political or religious revolutions, of change of dynasties, or remodelling of constitutions, all these fall into insignificance in comparison with the effects of this little mechanical invention.

The wonderful results of mechanical invention, great as they have been, are nothing in comparison with what may be effected in the future. So far it has been confined principally to manufacturing—to spinning, weaving, to transportation by land and sea, and other objects outside of agriculture. In the latter department it has been used only to a limited extent. But there is a great future before it in this direction. Whether it be by steam or other motive power, the field, in the line of agriculture, is illimitable.

The soil, as it is presented to us, in its raw and uncultured state, gives but scanty results to the husbandman. Only a small portion—not a thousandth part—of the soil is active in giving fertility; the rest is inert. But the inert portion is a fund on which we may draw to increase the fertility as we wish. In the most fertile soils an almost undiscoverable portion only is in that disintegrated and soluble state requisite for the foods of plants. But when we have the "power" at command we can reduce the whole soil to a fertile state.

As we make the soil more perfect we also improve the quality of its productions. We may have fruits whose points of excellence will as far exceed the best of the present day, as the latter exceed the crude, sour, and woody productions of early days.

With superior food, to what excellence may not man attain, physically and mentally? What length of days and enjoyment of life, when all this is combined with unity of interests? There is something worth striving for; something to animate our ambition. When the architect of the Taj Mahal, at Delhi, India, had finished the great work, combining the perfection of art with the exuberance of nature, with justifiable pride he sculptured on the palace walls, "If there be Paradise on earth, it is here, it is here!"

LOOKER ON.

BOOKS.

We have for sale at this office, among other works:

"Yone Santo," see advertisement.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible." 15 cents.

"Liberty and Morality," by W. S. Bell. 15 cents.

"The System of Nature," by Baron D'Holbach. $2.

"Robert Elsmere," by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Price, 50 cents.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

Judge Maguire's "Ireland and the Pope," a history of papal intrigues against Irish liberty. Price, 50 cents.

Taylor's "Diegesis," by the Rev. Robert Taylor. A discovery of the Origin, Evidences, and early history of Christianity. $2.

"Looking Backward," a socialistic romance which has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of Industrial Slavery," by Edward Bellamy. Price, 50 cents.

Professor Seymour With the Ghosts.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Last Sunday evening I was one of twenty-eight to sit in Mrs. Reynolds's seance for spirit materialization, and having paid my dollar, the same as the others, I am free to write what I please, and speculate on what I saw. I found Mrs. Reynolds a fine, tall, well-proportioned woman, of rather prepossessing appearance, but with a very weary and worn look, as if her burdens were greater than she could bear. The little room was packed full of intelligent men and women, all eager to see and hear the voyagers from the land "beyond the river." The cabinet was a very simple affair, being a mere curtain of black in one corner of the room, with solid plastered walls and floor well carpeted and nailed down. This cabinet was not over three feet square and eight feet high, and open at the top. At the hour of eight the door was locked and the light turned low, yet leaving light enough for one to see all around the room. Mrs. Reynolds was seated outside the cabinet, dressed in an ordinary brown alpaca dress. After a few minutes of song the medium went into the cabinet, and in about one minute a form, dressed in white and surrounded by several yards of lace or mosquito netting, came out and called up several of the circle, whom she embraced and kissed as if glad indeed to meet them once more. I noticed several of those so called up were very much affected at seeing what they believed were their loved dead, back again apparently alive and well. Tears and endearing expressions were plentiful and excitement seemed at a high point with all. After several apparitions had thus come and gone, all females, and about the same height and size as the medium, one emerged several feet from the curtain, calling for her baby, holding out both hands; then, stooping down, she seemed to pick up a baby from the floor beside one of the sitters and returned to the cabinet hugging and kissing, as only a mother can, her baby child. It was not a living child, I am sure, but I could not tell whether it was a doll or rag baby made up for the occasion. After this what appeared to be a child partly came out and talked to some other children in the circle, calling them up to be kissed—the medium could have deceived us in this by being on her knees, but I do not know. I was not over four to six feet away, but would not hazard an opinion. Then a form came out away from the cabinet, dressed in white, and sang, in a loud clear voice, several verses of a spiritual song, showing that spirits must have good vocal organs at least.

I noticed that when the sitters were called up and embraced the spirit forms, and patted them on the back the concussion sounded like patting flesh and bones, instead of a spiritual nothing. Your humble correspondent here asked why no male denizens from lands ethereal put in an appearance, when a large-sized, full-formed man, dressed in black or very dark clothes and having black whiskers and very full face, opened the curtains. He did not come outside, but stood and sang in a loud, clear masculine voice, "Scattering Seeds of Kindness." He sang the piece through, stopping only once to go back into the cabinet to "get more strength." This male spirit is said to be Mr. Groff, the medium's control, but I noticed the voice seemed to be very much like the medium's, both in singing and answering questions. There seemed to be another control also, called Effie, that claimed to have been born in Washington, D. C., but died at birth some 29 years ago. Effie was a very jolly spirit, and sang very finely for us several times, and gave us an original conundrum: "Why cannot a fly see in the night time?" We all gave it up as too scientific for mortals still on this mundane sphere, when Effie came to our relief by giving us the solution: "Because they have left their specs on the wall in the day time;" which brought the house down. Then the dear angel asked us to spell needle. We asked her to spell it, when she spelled it "Neidle." Being told that needle had no i in it, she laughed, and asked what use a needle would be with no eye in it. Thus we were outwitted by the spirit from angel shores.

I was very much in hopes to be called up by some of the forms, as it does not often happen that a Melican man has a chance to be hugged and kissed by females from "the summer land," but my most ardent wishes were not to be gratified. I got nothing better than the cold shoulder, while many had the unspeakable felicity of holding to their breast lovely beings, draped in snowy white, claiming to be "loved ones gone before," just back from the shadowy land. I thought over all the acts of my life to see why I should thus be left in sheol, though others, apparently no worse looking, should be thus crowned with heaven's choicest blessings. I think I shall try, from this on, to be a better man, at least to improve my looks, for it is hard, it is terrible, to be thus slighted.

At the close of this very interesting (to some) seance, two full female forms came from the cabinet for a minute, bade us all a kind good-bye, kissed their angel hands to us, and disappeared. But almost immediately out came the medium dressed as she had gone in. I went directly into the cabinet, but there was absolutely nothing there but the chair which the lady had occupied.

If there is any such thing as genuine spirit materialization, this may be one, but as Mrs. Reynolds is said to have been exposed many times in this city and other places, it becomes necessary to watch with both eyes open. The medium said before she began, that she did not tell them it was spirits, they were at liberty to think of it what they pleased. This of course released her from any chance of prosecution if a cry of fraud was raised, or of obtaining money under false pretenses; which is, of course, only good business tact. I have never been much of a believer in materializations, and I will not attempt to pass an opinion on this. I would merely advise everybody to investigate for themselves.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

Pious Impertinence.

"The right of private judgment" is a fundamental principle of Protestantism. But for that "right" there could have been no Protestantism. And yet several of the ministers of the most prominent churches in this city are in the habit of warning people of the awful sin and danger of attending my church, and some of them have gone so far as to visit Unitarian families, and utterly disregarding the one cardinal principle of Protestantism they have labored to win such families from the church of their choice, and their children from my Sunday school. And in the prosecution of this discreditable work such representations have been made of the general character of Unitarianism, and of my preaching, as to brand with unaccountable ignorance or downright hypocrisy and double dealing some of the Los Angeles clergy who are quite too pious to observe the golden rule or to attend to their own business. Poaching on another's preserves is regarded as about the meanest of all the varieties of dishonesty and low cunning. My people have the same "right of private judgment" as have Baptists, Methodists, or Presbyterians, viz., without molestation, insult, or "pious impertinence" to hold the faith and attend the church of their choice. And if, hereafter, their rights are recognized, well. But if not, I will publish the names of the "pious poachers," with those of the witnesses by whom I will sustain the very serious charge I hereby make.—ELI FAY, in Los Angeles Times.

"The right of private judgment" is a mighty good thing, and I hope Dr. Fay won't limit it to Unitarianism, because that is the last step between Christianity and Infidelity. But don't he warn it to his fellow disciples of the meek and lowly Jesus H. Christ! "How beautiful it is for brethren in unity to dwell," and what a successful tendency thus to do is derived from exercising "private judgment" on the word of Gaud.

C. SEVERANCE.

Washington as he Was.

The centenary of Washington's "inauguration" suggests reflections of seriousness. There are two George Washingtons—the actual and the ideal. They were equally deep, but the former was choke-full of the old Adam. He swore like the army in Flanders, loved a bottle like a brother, and had a truly colonial reputation as a lady-killer. He was indeed a singularly interesting and magnetic old boy—one whom any sane and honest lover of the picturesque in life and character would deem it an honor and an education to have known in the flesh.

AMBROSE BIERCE.

THERE have been many unusual raffles in Detroit, Mich. Not long ago the Rev. Dr. O'Reilly raffled off his horse, grown old and gray in the service of the preacher and land leaguers. Detroit now steps forward and takes the palm for the first and only raffle of a church on record. It is the old frame building of St. Albert's parish; tickets, $1 each. It is a large structure, and the raffle has thrown the Poles into a high state of excitement. Tickets are going like hot cakes. The lumber will make cottages for a dozen Poles, and the lucky man will probably become wealthy and build houses out of the timber.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35. for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.4
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see next column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of half a million to be the most popular, readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible; instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, knowing new means by which they may be cured; approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati; thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men; everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and a NEW FEATURE, just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. work for

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, $1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Temperance and Prohibition, THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Cloth, 75 cts.

Address this office

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application.

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

Dr. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.

DR. FELLOWS.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond" 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,

PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

Wm. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY.

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

TELEPHONE No. 635

P. O. CHILSTROM,

(Rogers & Chilstrom.)

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Commercial Business and Collections a Specialty.

Office, 415 Montgomery St., Rooms 9, 10 & 11,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma St., cor. 5th, S. F.

Twentieth Century.

Devoted to Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.

HUGH O. PENTECOST, Editor.

Contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday Addresses of the Editor before Unity Congregation.

It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.

Its columns are open for the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.

Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription one dollar.

Sample copies free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe."

Address
Twentieth Century Publishing Co.,
No. 4 Warren street, New York.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY
NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,
NURSERYMEN.

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit
and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.

Special Attention Given to Planting
and Caring of Orchards
and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal

Magazine editor—"Really, miss, we have more poems on hand than we have room for, and it is not worth while to examine any more." Fair writer—"O, I know this will suit. It is a poem of passion and has been condemned by Anthony Comstock." "My gracious! Mr. DeClerk, draw the lady a check for $500."—Washington Critic.

Desperate Husband—"Do you mean to say you would object to a divorce from such a woman as I have described?" Priest—"I would. In our church marriage can be divorced by death only." "Very well. Please direct me to the nearest gunshop."—New York Weekly.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald,
504 Kearny St. San Francisco

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA.

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or The Infidel Teacher 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

YONE SANTO,

A Child of Japan.

BY E. H. HOUSE.

The Book that the American Missionary Society tried to Suppress, but Didn't."

A Splendid Story, and an Unsparing Exposure of the Missionary Business in Japan.

PRICE, 50 CENTS.

PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 304 Kearny Street, San Francisco.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walfs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton, Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology. Price, 50 cents.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street. Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.

G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents.

Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—

"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to

L. K. WASHBURN,

Revere, Mass.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 20.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 18, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - MAY 18, 1889.

THE Rev. Dr. Driver, of Portland, Or., has got as far East as Chicago, and has there entered a debate with Mr. Charles Watts, of Toronto, on the relative merits of Secularism and Christianity. Dr. Driver is a famous Infidel smasher, in his own opinion, but is likely to experience a diminution of self-conceit before Mr. Watts gets through with him.

THERE is no doubt that the Rev. George Jacob Schweinfurth, of Chicago, is mistaken in believing that he is the messiah sent by heaven to save the world, but we have no sympathy with the lawless White Caps who threaten him with tar and feathers and roasting alive. Mr. Schweinfurth has purchased guns and dogs and is ready for the regulators, and we hope he will annihilate the first man who enters his premises with felonious intent.

THE ex-Rev. Mr. Pentecost, editor of the Twentieth Century, has tried his hand at definitions. He says that "the name Liberal describes a number of persons who are about as illiberal as it is possible for human beings to be." Mr. Pentecost, by the title of his paper, assumes to be a hundred years ahead of the rest of the world, so that we must make some allowance for the difference in chronology. His statement about Liberals may be true in the twentieth century, but intelligent and honest people of the nineteenth century know it to be false.

THE Maharajah Dhuleep Singh, formerly of India, sends the Pall Mall Gazette a letter addressed to Queen Victoria, in which he asks her to restore him his great diamond, the Koh-i-noor. He says:

"It will be useless for me to demand the restoration of my kingdom, swindled from me by your Christian government, but which I hope shortly, by the aid of Providence, to retake from my robbers. But my diamond, the Koh-i-noor, I understand, is entirely at your disposal. Therefore, believing your majesty to be 'the most religious lady' whom your subjects pray for every Sunday, I do not hesitate to ask that this gem be restored to me, or else that a fair price be paid for it to me out of your privy purse."

There is something touching in the unsophisticated simplicity of this Indian rajah. The queen is a most religious lady, certainly; she is the head of the church; but even a heathen in his blindness should know that religious professions have no bearing on justice. Justice is left for the next world, and according to Christian doctrine Maharajah Dhuleep Singh will get his in sheol.

THE ruling of Judge Ross, of the United States Court at Los Angeles, in the case of Frederick Goodhue, a letter carrier charged with robbing the mails, seems to give postmen most extraordinary powers. Goodhue, it appears, was suspected of theft, and decoy letters addressed to "M. A. Dauphin, New Orleans," and containing money for lottery tickets, were deposited in the mails. These Goodhue appropriated, and the marked bills were found upon him. Judge Ross, in his charge to the jury, instructed them to take no cognizance of the counts of the indictment having reference to the taking of the decoy letters, as these were not put in the mails in the regular course of business, and were consequently not intended to leave the Los Angeles post-office; they were therefore not letters in the eye of the law, and the defendant could not be prosecuted for taking them out of the mailing case.

MR. S. P. PUTNAM

Will lecture in San Francisco, Sundays,
May 19 and 26, 1889,

—AT—
UNION SQUARE HALL

421 Post Street.

SUBJECT

SUNDAY EVENING, MAY 19, "Liberty and Authority."
ADMISSION FREE. LECTURE AT 8 P. M.

ANOMALIES OF THE SITUATION.

At the utmost possible estimate there are only twenty million Christians in the United States.

Over against this twenty millions there are forty millions who are non-Christians; persons who do not attend Christian churches, who do not believe Christian doctrines, who do not want Christian legislation, who are totally indifferent to the Christian name.

This is an astounding fact on the assumption that Christianity is a divine religion, that its founder and supporter is God. It has existed for eighteen hundred years, and yet in the most civilized portion of the globe it can claim only one-third of the population. How long will it take Christianity to subdue the world at this rate?

Considered as a divine religion Christianity is a stupendous failure. Considered, however, as a merely human religion it exerts a marvelous power.

These twenty millions rule the country against the real wishes of forty millions of people. Practically this is a Christian nation. Church property to the amount of one thousand million dollars is exempt from taxation. If this property were taxed like other property it would yield an income to the public treasury of $25,000,000 a year. Twenty million get the benefit of this; forty million get no benefit at all, yet these forty millions pay, without protest, over sixteen million dollars for the support of the churches. Who shall say, in view of this fact, that Christianity is not a powerful religion?

In the army and navy, in the legislatures of the several states, chaplains are appointed and the government is compelled to pay hundreds of thousands of dollars to support them. Who will say that Christianity is dead when it can thus command the treasury of the United States?

The celebration of Washington's Centenary was highly colored and adorned with religious paraphernalia, and yet only a third of the people had any regard for such an aspect of the celebration. Two-thirds of the people cared no more for these ceremonies than for a Chinese gong—would rather not have had them—and yet the Christians had their own way in the matter as if they were the whole people.

In every state except California and Nevada there are Sabbath laws. The people don't want these laws. They are foreign to American institutions, and yet one-third force them upon the other two-thirds, and the two-thirds silently submit. Christianity may save but a few souls, but when it comes to government it lays its hand upon all. As a system of redemption it comes to a lame and impotent conclusion, but as a political machine it is about the most triumphant of the day. It cannot be ignored, however much we may despise its dogmas. Christianity would be voted down to-day, two to one, if there were an honest expression of the opinions of everybody, but as a matter of fact it is king in the Republic, and it dictates the conduct of sixty millions of people.

Forty millions of people in this country are thoroughly non-Christian, yet out of these forty millions how many take any active part in maintaining their own rights or the rights of others? It is popularly supposed that this is a Christian country. It is a non-Christian country. The non-Christians, if the issue were simply made, could sweep the polls from the Atlantic to the Pacific. This is a nation of Liberals and Freethinkers, yet, strange anomaly, its government is still the government of the Christian church. The president must still take the oath, the Senate and House of Representatives must pay for chaplains and listen to their prayers, railroads must stop running on Sunday, the Christian Bible is read in the schools, and the public treasury overflows into the coffers of the church. This is not to be wondered at if Christians were in the majority. But they are not. They are in the minority.

The subscribers of all the Freethought and Liberal journals in the country do not number over fifty thousand. These subscribers represent a reading population of two hundred and fifty thousand, out of forty millions, in essential sympathy with Liberal ideas. Only one out of one hundred and sixty of the non-Christians reads a non-Christian paper. Only one out of eight hundred takes a non-Christian paper. Of these fifty thousand not more than ten thousand are in active working sympathy with Liberal organizations. These ten thousand are the actual representatives of forty millions of people. Upon their shoulders the whole burden of reform lies. They stand for the opinions of two-thirds of the American people. The impression seems to be that there are about fifty nine million nine hundred and ninety thousand Christians in America, and about ten thousand non-Christians. But these ten thousand Freethinkers are not thus isolated. Back of them is a mass of forty millions intellectually in accord with Freethought. It might be better if there were only ten thousand Freethinkers. The issue would then be sharp. As it is now, only one out of eight hundred of the Liberals of the land takes any lively interest in the conflict between Christianity and civilization. Those in favor of civilization and against Christianity allow Christianity to win the day, so far as political power is concerned, and practically turn the cold shoulder to the few who are in the heat of the battle on their side.

It does seem strange, when we think of it, that these ten thousand must toil and sacrifice, must meet social ostracism, business losses, and political failure; be regarded as fanatics, wild enthusiasts, disturbers of the peace, and "Infidels," when, as a matter of fact, they represent the ideas, the life, the sentiments, of a vast majority of the people who would stand side by side with them if the issue could be distinctly and universally comprehended.

There is no question that Christianity is intellectually defeated—that, as a "divine religion," it is put upon the shelf. Science has labeled it "superstition;" but as a governmental power, as a social tyranny, Christianity is still victorious. As a machinery of despotism it is unequalled. It is the greatest instrumentality of oppression in the world. But it is so subtle, so all-pervading, that its victims don't seem to realize that it is such a complete master.

The situation points out two lines of work. The ten thousand, the guard of freedom, must not simply contend against Christian usurpation, but they must rouse the vast number who, intellectually, are non-Christian, to the importance of maintaining their rights and dignity; of treating Christianity not as if it were an effete religion to be simply ignored, but as a living tyranny, the more terrible because dead at heart. Christianity is not simply a doctrine, it is an institution wonderfully organized for conquest and power. It is a vast bread-and-butter-making machinery, and for that reason there will ever be an immense motive for its continuance, and especially for its political prestige. There will be, for years to come, a hundred thousand persons too lazy to work for a living, or too lazy to think for a living, but always ready to preach for a living; and these, as one man, will devote every energy to the predominance of Christianity.

These one hundred thousand represent the concentrated force of Christianity; they are the guard of despotism, the representatives of twenty millions of Christians.

The forty millions of non-Christians are represented by ten thousand pioneers. The representation is unequal, and for that reason Christianity triumphs. There are one hundred thousand to ten thousand, in the lists of battle. The one hundred thousand are thoroughly disciplined and urged on by the overmastering desire for self-preservation. They are backed up by the wealth and plaudits of the millions of Christians who delight to do them honor. The ten thousand pioneers of freedom are scattered, have but little fellowship, and the millions whom they serve treat them with cold indifference. Instead of earning a living at their task, like the one hundred thousand clergy who are opposed to them, they sacrifice both time and money for their cause.

In the world of ideas it is forty million non-Christians to twenty million Christians. In society, in government, it is one hundred thousand Christians to ten thousand non-Christians.

It will be a long time, therefore, before the intellectual defeat of Christianity will result in its political overthrow.

The greatest danger is through indifference; that Christianity will triumph, not because it is a divine religion, but, being a human religion, animated by a human motive—the desire for power and good living—it will achieve success because non-Christians, although in vast majority, are too careless of the rights and liberties of themselves and others.

BOUND volumes of FREETHOUGHT for 1888 may be had for $2.50.

THE TURNERS AND THE LIBERAL UNION.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Pacific Turn Bezirk, held in San Francisco, May 8, 1889, the following resolution was unanimously passed:

"Resolved, That a circular embodying the Constitution of the California State Liberal Union be sent to each district of this Bezirk, and that a postscript be forwarded to each member of the Bezirk, setting forth the exact purposes of the said Union, and urging them to become members of the same; also recommending them to become subscribers for the paper FREETHOUGHT published in this city."

The Turners of the Pacific Bezirk number, we believe, some fifteen hundred or more, nearly all of whom are Freethinkers. Their Declaration of Principles embodies the Demands of Liberalism, and they are in full sympathy with the objects and aims of the American Secular Union. We hope that the recommendation of the Executive Committee will be generally followed. They will find a warm welcome among the constituency of FREETHOUGHT.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION.

The Rev. George B. Starr, superintendent of the Central Bible school for home and foreign missions, complains to the associated press that the Seventh Day Adventists are being horribly treated in some parts of the South. He has received from Elder M. G. Huffman, of that sect, for transmission to the general conference at Battle Creek, Michigan, the following letter, written at Alpharetta, Milton county, Georgia.

"Brother D. Conklin, of Michigan, who, with his family, has lately moved into this neighborhood, has been reported to the grand jury and a bill found against him for working on Sunday, and all he did was to cut a few sticks of wood to build a fire, just what I have seen many others doing since I came to this state. The penalty for violation of any portion of the law in this state is very severe. They have what is known in this state as a chain gang, where those who violate the law are taken, and ball and chain fastened to one leg and they are made to work on public roads and railroads, and those who are put there are many of them treated worse than brutes. Many have been whipped to death, and doubtless if he should be taken there for working on Sunday, he would be compelled to work on the Sabbath or be whipped. What is your advice? Should we be beaten in the circuit would you take the case to the supreme court? And if so, can you help us? We are all poor here."

Those who desire to see this sort of persecution become general all over the country will petition Congress to pass the Blair Sunday Rest Bill, for that is exactly what the bill is designed to bring about.

A TYRANT DEAD.

The great foe of freedom in Russia, Count Demetrius Tolstoi, died May 7, and with him died one of the worst tyrants known to this century. He was a bigot in religion, and consequently a foe to every reform. In 1865 he was made chief procurator of the holy synod and a year later minister of education. He ruined the career of thousands of young men, continually supplied the ranks of the Nihilists with fresh recruits out of the intellectual classes of society, and did more than any one else in the way of suppressing the free expression of public opinion in the Russian press. During the fourteen years of Count Tolstoi's administration the Golos of St. Petersburg alone was submitted to no less than twenty-two different penalties, such as prevention from publishing advertisements, suspension of sale in the streets, and the suppression of that paper for periods varying from two to six months at a time. All these penalties were applied by the minister of the interior at the request of Count Tolstoi in order to check the steady denunciation on the part of that paper on questions of popular education. He declared that he was going to eradicate all liberal notions from the heads of the growing generation, and he hesitated at no act of tyranny to effect his object. He was once deposed, but when the new czar came into power he was reinstated and celebrated his accession to power by a ferocious onslaught upon the Nihilists. He established a police reign of terror throughout the empire and arrested great numbers of suspects, particularly in the universities. He was especially active in the exile of "suspected" persons to Siberia. He also shackled the press soon after his accession to office. He suppressed some of the leading papers, completely crushed all independent political thought, and died the most unpopular man in Russia.

Men like Tolstoi make more Anarchists and Nihilists than all the police of the world can suppress, and no one can regret it when death ends their capacity to do evil.

THE SUSTAINING FUND.

We hope that our patrons and well-wishers have carefully read and considered the list of letters and accompanying statements published in last week's FREETHOUGHT under the heading of "The Helping Hand." The affairs of this paper are therein accurately stated, together with the necessities of the situation. In order to carry on the publication of FREETHOUGHT as it should be carried on—sending out sample copies, publishing tracts and leaflets, extending the movement in every direction—about $2,000 per year is needed more than we are likely to get from subscribers during the next few years. The paper is worth $2 per year to every subscriber—this is unquestioned. The question is, Is it not worth something for the Liberals of the Pacific slope and elsewhere to have the paper circulated as an advocate and an organ of the Liberal party? Those who think it is will join the friends whose words of encouragement were printed in this paper last week, if they can afford it.

We have taken especial pleasure in printing the list of letters mentioned, because they are a sort of vindication. They vindicate Liberalism from the charge that its advocates lack generosity. To be sure, the vindication is vicarious—a few pay the money and the rest point to them with pride and take their proportion of credit for the liberality displayed—but the record is there, and the accusation that Freethinkers are niggardly is refuted. That is worth the cost. These letters, furthermore, indicate that to some extent this paper has won a place in the great hearts of the Liberals of the West. They show that FREETHOUGHT is accepted by representative Freethinkers, and that its discontinuance would leave a want unfilled. Its death would be regarded as a kind of suicide. Were we to allow it to die without laying the state of affairs before our readers, they might say that it was a case of involuntary starvation. So believing, we have taken the present course, and if we have not very much overestimated the interest felt in the cause of Liberalism, the response will be such as to make any further appeals of the kind unnecessary.

THE Pittsburgh Truth announces that R. B. Westbrook, Esq., president of the American Secular Union, is now engaged in writing a book of profound research on the "Secrets and Suppressions of Sacerdotalism," which will, it is said, be found to be the most radical work of this century.

ABOUT once a month a story appears through the medium of the religious press to the effect that a daughter of Colonel Ingersoll has joined the church. Sometimes it is particularized to the extent of describing the circumstances under which the conversion occurred. Pious people who have accepted the yarn as evidence of the workings of divine grace will be pained to read the following by Miss Eva Ingersoll in reply to the questions of a New York World reporter:

"Neither my sister nor myself has ever attended service. Once Mr. Carnegie invited us to hear Henry Ward Beecher. It was in the evening, and the address he delivered was the only one we have ever heard. Another time we went to Dr. Collyer's church, to attend a friend's wedding, and that is the extent of our knowledge of churches. I never had any desire, somehow. I have been told that the music might be entertaining, but I am sure that it can't compare with operatic music, and we go to some opera or concert three or four nights in the week. I have read a great many sermons, but never was sufficiently pleased or interested to care to hear one. Our parents are not responsible for our attitude. Indeed, sister and I are more radical than they. Father has always told us that he wanted us to realize the greatest happiness in life, and advised us to examine for ourselves and act in accordance with our convictions. We have had books of all kinds and all sorts, and friends to exchange ideas with. Father has read with us, and together we have looked up references, localities, and proofs, but the more we know about Christianity, the less admiration we have for it. My grandfather, you know, was a Congregational minister, but most of our relatives have been extremely Liberal. They all believed in religion, and so do we, but neither they nor we are Christians. We were never taught prayers as children, but when old enough to reason, mother selected the prayers that are considered most beautiful and touching, and told us, as she always did in making selections of poetry and prose, to read them carefully and learn the ones that pleased us. None pleased me especially, and I didn't commit any of them to memory. I could not see the wisdom of praying for or against things I knew were beyond human influence. And I never prized a Bible as most girls do, not even in silver or ivory covers. I don't like the book, because there are too many improbable and impossible things in it, and, worse than that, it abounds in cruelties."

ACCORDING to a report in the Chronicle, there is one member of our police force who has advanced farther than the theory of descent warrants in identifying human beings with their great prototype, the monkey. The report referred to says:

Officer O'Rourke testified in Judge Rix's court yesterday that he had caught Signor Ricardo in the very act of "sousing the creature in a horse-trough, your honor."

"Don't you believe him judge," interrupted the prisoner. "I no souse the monkey. I—"

"Shut up! Who is this person?" inquired the judge, indicating the man who had interrupted the testimony.

"That, your honor, is Ricardo, the man that soused the creature."

"Please, judge, you listen to me. The monk—"

"Sit down. What has a monkey to do with this case? What is it all about anyhow?"

"He's charged with cruelty to children, your honor."

"Children! Laprista, the monkey; not the child, the monk—"

"Sure, your honor, I caught him sousing the creature in the water, and I charged him with cruelty to children, and—"

"Case dismissed." And officer and organ-grinder left the courtroom.

Officer O'Rourke probably got his notions of man's relationship to the lower animals from reading the remarks of the Rev. John Brandt of San Diego.

SAYS Charles Bradlaugh in the National Reformer: "What a large number of people whom I do not know seem at different times to have defeated me in debate! The Rev. W. Sharman writes me that a Mr. R. Jamieson boasts of having performed this feat at Paisley. A Mr. Dumas Ducrew says that he also did likewise at the Hall of Science. I must be a very poor debater to permit so many almost unknown persons to continually get the best of me in this promiscuous way." Some of the many Freethought lecturers in this country who have been "defeated" by Christian Champions (on paper) can realize what Mr. Bradlaugh's feelings must be.

ON Powell street in this city is an institution called the Presentation convent, the inmates of which, under the rule of their society, can emerge only at death. Up to the present time the portion of their schools termed the cloister has never been entered since the day of dedication by any but themselves. There have been occasions when nuns, with relatives in this city, were dying, but not even the mothers could enter the cloister to see them. There are now in this convent on Powell street many nuns who have not been outside that institution for twenty years. It is now understood that Archbishop Riordan contemplates breaking the inclosure and permitting the prisoners to emerge in order that they may engage in the calling of other "sisters," i. e., that of begging for the support of the church. Certainly the convent should be opened, and if Archbishop Riordan finds his intention in that direction weakening, the city authorities might help him. It is questionable whether people have a right to surrender their liberty, even voluntarily, under a superstitious delusion.

A GIRL named Drexel, an heiress worth $6,000,000, has entered the convent of the Sisters of Mercy at Pittsburg, Pa. If she finds the life of a nun agreeable, after a six months' trial, she will "take the veil" and thereafter be dead to the world, and the church will get the income of her wealth. Miss Drexel is one of three sisters who inherited $17,000,000. In case either has an heir, the heir inherits their property. If all die without issue, the estate goes to the Catholic church. One of the sisters is already married, and good citizens can only hope that in her case at least nature will do its perfect work.

THE Freethinkers' Magazine for May is unusually attractive. It opens with the Hon. Abram Schell's splendid address delivered in this city on the last anniversary of Paine's birthday, and contains, also, articles by Helen H. Gardener and Nellie Booth-Simmons. The likeness and biography of the editor of the Truth Seeker will be viewed with interest. The Magazine is published by H. L. Green, 143 Main street, Buffalo, N. Y. Specimens may be seen at the office of FREETHOUGHT.

B. F. UNDERWOOD will deliver a course of four lectures on Evolution, under the auspices of the Secular Union at Spokane Falls, W. T., beginning May 23. His subjects are "Evolution and Law versus Creation by Miracle," "The Proofs that Man Ascended from Animals," "The Evolution of Morals and Religion," and "The Errors of the Mosaic Account Shown by the Facts of Science." Mr. R. Sharpless is secretary of the Spokane Secular Union.

WE trust that the enlargement of the London Freethinker from eight pages to twelve is a sign of increased prosperity consequent upon an extended circulation. The Freethinker is full of wit and wisdom and deserves unbounded success.

It seems that the announcement of the acquittal of Messrs. Harman and Walker, of Valley Falls, Kan., was premature. At last accounts the case still hung fire.

RINGING WORDS.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Your letter in regard to the affairs of FREETHOUGHT received some days ago. I am exceedingly glad of such good report, and I feel that the paper must and will succeed. Surely our Liberal friends will be satisfied with nothing short of this. The deficit of two thousand dollars per year incurred in its publication should be easily made up by the Liberals of the West, and the success of the paper thus assured. If they fail to do it, it will be a blot on the fair name and fame of our golden state.

I presume you have at least sixteen hundred subscribers. With a little unanimity how easy and what a light burden it would be on each to raise this amount. A contribution of $1.25 from each would do it. If one thousand of them would each pay two dollars cash for an extra copy to do a little missionary work with among friends the problem would thus simply be solved. But as it is not practicable to get so many to pull together at once, you have made the proposition to one hundred interested Liberals to each contribute twenty dollars per year until the paper is on a self-sustaining basis. This you say will cover the present annual deficiency. I think that in view of the fact that you editors are giving your whole time and talent, you have made a very modest request to those from whom you have a right to expect assistance in the hour of need. I am a poor man, but I wish the privilege of becoming one of this one hundred. You write that about fifty have already promised to contribute the required amount to this fund, making one-half the deficit assured. Now I am not putting money into this enterprise to have it swallowed up in a failure, and if necessary I will make a motion that if the hoped for one hundred do not respond favorably, each of those who do, add enough to his subscription to make up the amount and double the proposed amount from each if necessary. The only dividend I ask is the success of the paper. To paraphrase a little, let our motto be: FREETHOUGHT must and shall be preserved.

Let us resolve to keep the flag above the cross in the great empire of the Pacific states. Let us do what we can to leave to our children and all those who shall come after us the blessed inheritance of a free press, free schools, free speech, and free thought. That is to say, that our two great educators, the press and public school, shall always teach our people, young and old, to always speak frankly and fearlessly their best and truest thoughts to their fellow-men. It will be a better and grander legacy than lands or gold. If we are to build high the blessed temple of humanity, we must have as its very foundation stone a strong and vigorous Freethought organ right here in our midst. Now is the time to act. Shall we build on this solid rock or not? I have a faith, and my faith is this: That the Liberals of the Pacific Coast will decide this question in the affirmative, and so, with a strong and abiding faith in humanity, I remain yours always,

W. S. RODGERS.

Boulder Creek, Cal.

ANOTHER GOOD LETTER.

FRIEND PUTNAM: I have been in receipt of your letter of the 7th about an hour. To be sure I will be one to give twenty dollars per year rather than have FREETHOUGHT go under. I would give one hundred per year if able, or one thousand if needed, for what good is money unless to use to enlighten and help up our brother man and sister woman? How people can withhold money and see the ignorance and suffering that is all about us, is past my comprehension. Could they once enjoy the pleasure in giving (where worthily bestowed) their purse strings would ever be open when they had it to spare.

The question should be who needs it, not who has it. Hoping all who can will drop into line, and send you twenty dollars per year, and those who cannot give that, will smaller sums, until our pet FREETHOUGHT is on a solid basis, I will inclose my check for twenty dollars, and say good-night with the wish that like the Boston Investigator, and Truth Seeker of New York, FREETHOUGHT will have such a place in the affections of the people that they cannot part with it. Yours,

San Francisco.

SCOTT BRIGGS.

OBSERVATIONS.

When I reached the hall where Mr. Putnam was to lecture last Sunday, I had prepared myself by anticipation for a most enjoyable occasion, but it proved to be more than an occasion. It was an Event. The auditorium of the large hall at 421 Post street was filled with well-dressed young men and fluttering young women, and old men, and women that never grow old. There were also enough in the gallery to keep it from looking overcrowded with seats. Many were doubtless attracted thither by the poster at the door, executed by myself and edited by Mr. Putnam and Mr. J. A. Williams. Formerly there was in front of the hall a bulletin board as large as a barn door, and I made a sign to fit it. My sign read as follows: "Moody and Sam Jones; their Revival Methods Examined, by the Celebrated Freethought Orator," etc. The board, however, was blown down and broken by the wind, and an Italian gentleman gathered up the fragments, which he carried home for kindling-wood. A smaller one was left, but my sign wouldn't go on to it; hence the editorial work of Putnam and Williams, who condensed it to "Moody and Sam Jones Examined," in which form it contained a suggestion of anatomical dissection, and passers-by came in to view the remains.

At quarter past three President Chilstrom called the meeting to order, and surprised previous attendants by announcing music by the quartette. The quartette itself was a second surprise, and the music it afforded constituted a third. I am not acquainted with its members, except Mr. Hannaford, the basso, but I learn that the others were the Misses Wheeler, of Oakland. All possessed fine and well-trained voices, and the opening selection was admirably fitted for the time and place. It took the big audience by storm, so that a recall was unanimous. "The Beautiful Sometime" appeared to be the refrain of the second piece, and when it ended President Chilstrom appropriately remarked that sometimes we were favored with beautiful music, and that this was emphatically one of those occasions. He then introduced the speaker.

Mr. Putnam's lecture on Moody and Sam Jones has appeared in FREETHOUGHT, but a lecture is one thing and a speech is another; and when the speech is a good one, delivered before a responsive audience, a lecture in cold type, however free from typographical errors, is comparatively a frigid and formal thing. I judge a lecture by the extent to which it renders me oblivious of the flight of time. When I find myself fingering my watch-chain assiduously I know that I am not thoroughly interested. If I take the watch out and consult it at the end of fifteen minutes, I realize that I am being wearied; and when I am moved to wind the timepiece up, the lecturer need not extend his remarks for my benefit. They will fall upon a dull, cold ear. This statement prepares me to give my measure of appreciation for the address in question by simply saying that I did not know how long he had been talking when the speaker observed that he would not dwell further upon the subject. Then I looked at the clock, and found that it was an hour and a half later than when the exercises began. After the lecture another song was promised, but a collection for general purposes intervened, and the fact that the audience stood the collection for the sake of the song shows the attracting power of the quartette.

The claims of the San Francisco Freethought Society being presented, several new members put their names upon the roll. One of the best pleased men present was Mr. Robert Wade, of Troy, N. Y., who applauded every good point made by the speaker, patronized the collection hat generously, and above the buzz and bustle of the dispersing crowd he could be heard whistling melodiously the "Harp that Once Through Tara's Hall."

Quite an interesting incident of this gathering was the meeting between Mr. Putnam and Mr. I. G. Gardner. They were in the army together, in the same company, Putnam as captain and Gardner as lieutenant. They last met twenty-five years ago, when the captain had become a theological student, and the lieutenant a Presbyterian deacon. Last Sunday Mr. Gardner chanced to pick up one of the bills advertising the lecture, and, being a Free-thinker, he attended. The name of Putnam called up memories of his old army comrade, but he hardly expected to find the theological student expounding Freethought. It proved, however, to be the same man, and the greeting was of the actively cordial nature characteristic of meetings between Captain Putnam and his friends. Mr. Gardner reports that Putnam is nearly the same man he was a quarter of a century ago, and just about as pious.

Next Sunday evening the Society meets again at the same place, 421 Post street. The quartette promises more of its excellent music, and Mr. Putnam will discourse upon "Liberty and Authority."

I have just received a circular from somewhere in Washington Territory, indorsed with a scrawl on the back as follows:

I mail you this to make liars and cowards happy. BRADEN.

This devotion of Mr. Braden to the happiness of his constituency would be touching if it did not in so marked a manner include himself.

One paragraph of the circular reads thus:

BACK-OUTS.

Representatives of Infidelity have backed out of debate, when Mr. Braden was selected and indorsed to meet them in debate, as follows: Putnam, president of the Infidel League of America, seven times; Ingersoll, three times; Underwood, six times; Jameson, twice; Watts, three times; Billings, twice; Pike, Sanborn, Chainey, Walser, Fishback, Stewart, Wright, Remsburg, Bell, Shaw, and Carrington, once each; the Spiritualists of Alliance, Ohio, once; C. B. Reynolds, vice-president of the American Infidel League, backed out of debate in Phoenix, Arizona, in the most cowardly and disgraceful manner—thirty-six back-outs; thirty-three by Materialists and three by Spiritualists.

When Mr. Braden is tired of parading these names before the public he might arrange a new list, and put mine among them. I met him once in this office, and did not debate with him. The only reason why there was not a lively discussion is because I did not know who he was. I now challenge the Rev. Mr. Braden to mortal combat, and give him the choice of weapons. Hear my war-song:

I am a terror—
Don't you forget it.
The glare thou beholdest
Streaming through heavens
In flashes of carmine
Is my red whiskers
Blown by the cyclone,
Amazing the nations.
Thou art a blow-hard,
Reverend Braden,
And thus single-handed,
Unto the combat,
Gauntlet or gospel,
Here I defy thee!

A report of a Manhattan Liberal Club meeting which I see in the New York Star causes me to regret my absence from the scene of my former usefulness. It seems that on the evening of May 3, T. B. Wakeman, Esq., delivered a Socialistic, or Positivistic, lecture before the club. The title is not given, but there is no doubt it was "The Higher Integration," or words to that effect. Mr. Wakeman took the ground that our present system of government is defective. He advocated the abolition of the president, and the placing of the ruling powers in the hands of a central body. The report states that these ideas were received by the audience with "roars, hisses, and groans," and that a man named Eccles "thought Mr. Wakeman should be driven out of town." Mr. Wakeman replied amid a confusion of hisses and cheers. The radicals hooted, and the speaker said they had no more reason than brutes or hop-toads. A half a dozen men and women tried to speak; one of them said a viler, more indecent, or more illogical address was never uttered. The society should brand it as such. The session ended in wild disorder.

Such is the painful report that comes across the continent from Manhattan Isle. If it is true, the Liberal Club of to-day is not the Liberal Club that lives in my memory along with recollections of peaceful assemblages, over which Mr. Wakeman presided as the tall trees of Calaveras county preside over the lesser giants of the forest. Nothing disturbed the meetings then except when Robert Blissert or Herr Oppenheimer evoked a smile by saying that the man with a badge-pin was a liar, or when Mr. Vaughan arose to say that people often printed things in the papers which they would not care to enunciate on the sidewalk, the subject of their remarks being present. Once I remember an intoxicated gentleman strolled in and attempted to address the meeting from the floor. Then Mr. Wakeman tapped the stand gently with his gavel and said: "The gentleman is out of order. Unless he subsides the Chair will ask the assistant secretary to land him in the street." I do not recall the exact details of what followed; I only remember that the meeting was not further interrupted. At the time of which I speak I was the assistant secretary.

I regret exceedingly that inharmony should have disturbed a meeting of the club, but my sorrow over that circumstance is a joy compared with the deeper grief felt when I realize that I was not there to write a truthful account of the proceedings, and lay it before the readers of the Truth Seeker.

I wrote, awhile ago, about a visit I enjoyed from Mr. Charles Snyder, of Oakland, an old man who lives upon the memories of the past and the charities of the present. The world knew him in his day of fame as Henry Ashton, leading tenor to Jenny Lind, the Swedish Nightingale, but of late years he has lived alone in an attic room, an object of solicitude to a few benevolent persons. Last week, while riding with a friend on the San Leandro road, he was thrown from the buggy and severely hurt, and on Thursday they took him to the Alameda County Infirmary, suffering from his injuries and asthmatic consumption. So the old man passes into the valley. Kings praised him and multitudes applauded him while his one gift lasted; now that has left him he has but the two with which nature endows us all. For

Two gifts perforce she has given us yet,
Though sad things stay and glad things fly:
Two gifts she has given us—to forget
All sad and glad things that go by,
And then—to die.

The editor of the Ironclad Age is buried in deep grief, and this is why he weeps:

G. Washington Macdonald, of the 'Frisco FREETHOUGHT, once wrote a book entitled, New England and the People up "Thar." He admits that an edition of near one hundred copies of that work has been sold since its first appearance in 1879. A copy of this book lies near where this is written, and the writer views it regretfully for the reason that there are so many more on a shelf near by. Having read it when it first appeared and being enthused by its drollery and quaint style the writer hereof was carried off his feet (this is hoss talk) and ordered a job lot, seeing no reason why the demure and staid passengers on his craft might not relish and be allowed a little dry humor after their return from church on Lord's day. But the unappreciative crowd had been so long fed upon a hark-from-the-tombs-a-doleful-sound literature that they seemed to dread anything lively. Hence this stock of 10-cent New Englands. Hence this stuck merchant. Hence these tears.

I have for a long time viewed with alarm the increasing cynicism of Dr. Monroe, but there is good cause for it. With the Bible circulated at the rate of a million copies per annum, and "New England and the People Up There" turning yellow upon his shelves, why should not the philosopher exclaim, "What fools these mortals be!" I often make the remark myself.

GOD AND THE MINISTERS.

At the Congregational Club, Dr. Cruzan presiding, Rev. Joseph Rowell, of the Mariners' church, controverted the views expressed in Dr. Pond's paper of the previous week in favor of the reign of law in the matter of retribution for sin. Mr. Rowell lamented that some professed Christians were agreed with Infidels in banishing a personal god from the world and substituting for his reign that of impersonal law.

He cited numerous scripture texts in which God is spoken of as a God of vengeance, and claimed that all the sufferings and troubles of men in this life came as directly from the hand of God as his mercies and his blessings. So with future punishment. "I will tread upon them" (the wicked), God had said, "in my anger and trample them in my fury." He proposed to take the inspired statement of scripture rather than the fancies of men. Some approved the views of this paper, others strongly opposed them. Dr. Cruzan, the chairman, spoke earnestly in opposition and said he would leave his pulpit to-morrow and go back to the compositor's case rather than preach a God of wrath and vengeance.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The inclosed slip, containing a report of how "ministers meet" nowadays, I cut from this morning's Chronicle.

Mr. Putnam, in his most excellent lecture of last Sunday evening, referred to the fact that intelligent, educated clergymen of to-day lack the backbone to stand up for honest conviction, when it runs counter to the old faiths and dogmas of the church.

The slip referred to adds, perhaps, to the proof of such fact, but it also shows that there may be and are good, clean-cut exceptions to the rule.

Dr. Cruzan (who, by the way, is a liberal-minded, intelligent, and learned man, according to what I know of his history) is not the only clergyman who, in the process of evolution in human mind conceptions, has found himself standing squarely opposed to the narrow, superstitious dogmatism of his church.

All this simply shows that the heaven is working; that the final disintegration of the olden church is inevitable, and is progressing in the exact proportion that the Liberals of the civilized world are rearing the new church—the Church of Humanity.

San Francisco, May 10.

P. O. CHILSTROM.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Reports from seventy-two different localities in California, with an estimated population of 701,950, give a mortality of 885 for the past month, a per centage of 1.18 per 1000 in the month, or of 14.16 in the year, being the lowest annual per centage ever reported.—The trial trip of the cruiser Charleston, built at the Union Iron Works of this city, is reported to have proved that the ship is better than the contract called for.—The Rev. L. Walker, of the Walker mansion fame, and at one time secretary of the Golden Gate Fair Association, has been made a defendant in the divorce suit instituted in Oakland by his wife, Ella S. Walker, who has got tired waiting for that gentleman to return to California. He disappeared in 1886 and has not been seen since. At that time it was reported he was short several thousand dollars, which had been entrusted to his care by the fair association, and his departure was caused by this state of affairs. At one time he was pastor of the First Methodist church of San Francisco.—Rev. Oscar Clute, pastor of the Unitarian church in Pomona, has been informed of his election as president of the Michigan Agricultural College at Lansing, Mich. Mr. Clute was formerly professor there until his health gave way and he came to California. He is now a well man and will accept the position offered him. The salary is $5,000 a year.—Gen. Nelson A. Miles has been asked to deliver the oration in San Francisco on Decoration Day.—The Rev. S. P. Anderson, pastor of a Baptist Church in St. Louis, reached this city the other day, and was immediately lodged in jail, charged with forgery and embezzlement. He brought $500 with him belonging to the church. The governor of Missouri refused to issue extradition papers, and Anderson was set at liberty.—The Supreme Court has decided that the Chinese exclusion act is valid.

A complimentary dinner will be given Walt Whitman, the poet, in Camden, N. J., on his seventieth birthday, May 31.—A gang of robbers got $29,000 from Army-Paymaster Wham at Fort Grant, Ariz., last Saturday. The pay-wagon was ambushed, and the clerk, paymaster, and eight soldiers were wounded—four fatally.—Whitelaw Reid, the new minister to France, has arrived in Paris.—At the convention of Southern Baptists in Memphis, Tenn., H. P. McCormick, missionary to Mexico, said that an orthographical distinction might be made between papal and pagan fields, but in reality there was no difference. He thought Catholicism was a menace to his native country as well as to Mexico.—Preparations are already being made at the United States Naval Observatory for viewing the total eclipse of the sun which takes place Dec. 22, of this year. The astronomers will have to go to the west coast of Africa, where the totality of the eclipse will last three and a quarter minutes.—The thermometer in New York May 10 registered 92 in the shade. Great damage by a terrific storm was done in New York and various parts of the East.—Bishop, the mind reader, is dead.

There is a movement in Paris to erect a statue to Thiers, the French statesman, atheist, and advocate of religious liberty.—The pope is suffering from the effects of the sirocco which has been prevailing in Rome.—Count Tolstoi, Russian minister of the interior, is dead.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL AND HIS CRITICS.

The champions of debate, who were so ready to "answer Ingersoll" two or three years ago, seem to have abandoned the task with much unanimity. Their reasons for doing so are quite apparent to the public. Those who have attempted to answer him now seem entirely willing to leave that task to others.

Attorney-General Black, who entered the list so much like Goliath of Gath, and proposed to deal with Ingersoll, not as an equal in discussion, but as a policeman deals with a culprit, "retired from the contest a sadder and a wiser man."

The Rev. Dr. Field, admonished by the experience of the attorney-general, undertook the task in the manner of a gentleman; and bore himself like a gentleman throughout the discussion. He was probably as confident at the beginning as was Mr. Black, otherwise he would not have challenged Colonel Ingersoll to the discussion, in an "open letter" in the North American Review. To invite an opponent to a discussion in such a journal is like an invitation to meet him in the world's forum; for that review is read wherever civilization is known. Yet the experience of Dr. Field was much like that of Mr. Black—no one claims that he won any laurels. But the friends of Ingersoll eagerly circulate that discussion as one of the very best of Freethought documents.

The next champion brought forward against Ingersoll was, to our surprise, the great English statesman, Mr. Gladstone. Why it was that the cause of Christianity did not seek another champion in America we can only conjecture; but there seemed to be great confidence that Mr. Gladstone would win a victory. But the churchmen were doomed to another disappointment, and no one claims that Mr. Gladstone did any better than his predecessors. He touched the subject very cautiously, and only reviewed one of Mr. Ingersoll's letters in the Field-Ingersoll discussion, when it was expected that he would criticise both. And even in that one he contented himself with discussing Ingersoll's manner, without attempting to refute his argument.

Cardinal Manning then approached the subject, but with still more caution than Mr. Gladstone. He wrote a long article of twenty-nine pages for the North American Review, and entitled it "The Gladstone-Ingersoll Controversy," but, with sudden discretion, confined himself to the claims of his own church, and does not once mention either Gladstone, Ingersoll, or the controversy. His effort may have satisfied the less intelligent of his own church, but the general public seemed to regard his letter as a very weak one. Ingersoll's answer was such as the cardinal will not be likely to invite a second time.

This seems to have closed the efforts to "answer Ingersoll," for a time, and as all these discussions were published in the North American Review, the public were left to read and ponder on them at their leisure. In this connection two facts are worthy of note. One is that none but the friends of Ingersoll have sought to circulate these printed discussions; the friends of his opponents seeming entirely willing they should not be read. The other is that, during these discussions, the North American Review quadrupled its circulation. The colonel now appears to be a favorite contributor to that journal, and whatever he writes is read with eagerness.

A new kind of criticism is now coming to the front; and the Liberal ministers, who have generally been spared by the colonel, are attempting to "estimate" him. The latest effort of this kind is by the Rev. Mr. Wendte, Unitarian minister of Oakland, in a published sermon entitled "A Unitarian Estimate of Robert G. Ingersoll."

It is an encouraging feature of the times that a minister can take "Robert G. Ingersoll" for a text, and that without making his whole discourse to consist of denunciations. This minister gives him about five pages of genuine praise, and only about eighteen pages of condemnation. Who shall say that this is not doing well for a minister?

In referring to the Field and Gladstone controversies, Mr. Wendte says of Ingersoll, that, "in the keenness of his logic, the weight of his proofs, and especially in the effective way in which he exposes the fallacies of his antagonists, and compels them to make notable admissions and qualifications of their first statements, Mr. Ingersoll has decidedly the best of these discussions, and may be said to have come off with flying colors."

Again he says: "With Mr. Ingersoll's denial of the supernatural origin and infallible authority of the Bible, the arrogant claims of hierarchical priesthoods, and the irrational and immoral character of certain of the prevailing beliefs of Christendom, we are in substantial sympathy. We share his hatred of all insincerity, cowardice, and sluggishness of thought in the sphere of religion. We cheerfully recognize the freshness and vigor with which he presents his arguments, and the truly remarkable force, eloquence, brilliancy, and wit with which he impresses his convictions on his hearers. His manly presence and forcible delivery are sufficient to outweigh certain defects of manner and language, while his evident earnestness, exuberant spirits, ready wit, and shrewd management of his audiences, make him almost irresistible to the average mind."

Here is an amount of praise that hardly any other man in America could win. Such "thorough sincerity, truth, wit, logic, earnestness, eloquence, and resistless effect on the minds of his audiences," would seem to leave little to be desired to render him a perfect champion of truth.

But here the eulogy terminates, and severe condemnation begins. This almost perfect model of "sincerity" is accused of "sophistry;" his "eloquence" becomes "vulgarity;" his truth is supplanted by "profanity;" his admirable "earnestness" becomes "intemperate statements;" his "logic" becomes "harsh denunciation," and instead of being "almost irresistible to the average mind," Mr. Ingersoll's method "does not make converts, or produce a deep impression on the hearts of men." And so, in Mr. Wendte's opinion, this champion of truth, that "came off with flying colors" in discussions with the brightest men in England and America, has become a vulgar and unsuccessful denunciator. This reverend critic does not tell us where to find this vulgarity, profanity, distortion, or harsh denunciation; and so we are left to find it where we can. As he has referred to the discussion with Dr. Field, let us look there for specimens of these grave offenses.

Dr. Field, having a personal acquaintance with Colonel Ingersoll, and knowing all about his style and manner, sought the discussion by addressing to him an open letter in the columns of the North American Review. In the first sentence of that letter he says: "I am glad that I know you, even though some of my brethren look upon you as a monster because of your unbelief." In reply to this unpleasant statement did Colonel Ingersoll indulge in any of the offenses for which he is charged? Let us see. He begins by saying, "I answer your letter because it is candid, manly, and generous." When proceeding to the argument he says:

"The first question that arises between us is as to the innocence of honest error—as to the right to express an honest thought. . . . You do not regard me as a monster. 'Some of your brethren' do. How do you account for this difference? Of course your brethren—their hearts having been softened by the Presbyterian God—are governed by charity and love. They do not regard me as a monster because I have committed an infamous crime, but simply for the reason that I have expressed my honest thoughts. Has religion had control of the world so long that an honest man seems monstrous?"

"According to your creed, the same being who made the mind of man inspired the Bible's every word, and gave it as a guide to all the world. Surely the book should satisfy the brain. And yet there are millions who do not believe in the inspiration of the scriptures.

"No Presbyterian ever stood higher in the realm of thought than Humboldt. Yet he not only rejected the religion of your brethren, but denied the existence of their God.

"Certainly Charles Darwin was one of the greatest and purest of men—as free from prejudice as the mariner's compass—desiring only to find amidst the mists and clouds of ignorance the star of truth. No man ever exerted a greater influence on the intellectual world. His discoveries, carried to their legitimate conclusion, destroy the creeds and sacred scriptures of mankind. Yet Darwin was an honest, thoughtful, brave, and generous man.

"Compare, I beg of you, these men, Humboldt and Darwin, with the founders of the Presbyterian church. Read the life of Spinoza, the loving pantheist, and then that of John Calvin, and tell me candidly, which, in your opinion, was a monster?"

Here we have a fair specimen of the manner in which Colonel Ingersoll meets the arguments and offensive epithets of his opponents. Do we find any of the "vulgarity," "sophistry," "hate," or "profanity" that Mr. Wendte complains of?

Take another example:

"You draw a distinction between what you are pleased to call superstition and religion. You are shocked at the Hindoo mother when she gives her child to death at the supposed command of her God. What do you think of Abraham or Jephthah? What is your opinion of Jehovah himself? Is not the sacrifice of a child to a phantom as horrible in Palestine as in India?"

Again, he says:

"You have laid down a rule by which superstition can be distinguished from religion. It is this: 'It makes that a crime which is not a crime, and that a virtue which is not a virtue.'

"Let us test your religion by this rule:

"Is it a crime to investigate, to think, to reason? Is it a crime to be governed by that which to you is evidence, and is it infamous to express your honest thought? Is credulity a virtue? When you condemn men to everlasting pain for unbelief—that is to say, for acting in accordance with that which is evidence to them—do you not make that a crime which is not a crime? And when you reward men with an eternity of joy for simply believing that which happens to be in accord with their minds, do you not make that a virtue which is not a virtue?"

He thus brings his opponent face to face with his own theories, and, by simple questions, demonstrates their absurdity. Is this "a cruel handling of other people's cherished beliefs?" Is this "vulgarity," "profanity," or "harsh treatment?" He strikes heavy blows, but does not violate the rules of courteous debate. Even Dr. Field himself does not complain of this.

But since so much is said of the "harsh," "cruel," and "unjust" treatment by Colonel Ingersoll of the beliefs of others, let us take the worst case, and that most complained of, in the entire discussion.

In regard to the sin of "unbelief," and persecution for difference of opinion, he says:

"You will admit that he who now persecutes for opinion's sake is infamous. And yet the God you worship will, according to your creed, torture through all the endless years the man who entertains an honest doubt."

"Your creed transfers the Inquisition to another world, making it eternal. Your God becomes, or rather is, an infinite Torquemada, who denies to his countless victims even the mercy of death. And this you call 'a consolation.'"

That this is a severe indictment of the orthodox religion, there is no doubt; but is it not true? And if true, should it not be plainly stated in debate? Let us see if it is not true.

All orthodox Christians believe that "he that believeth not shall be damned;" and that "he that doubteth is damned." They also believe that damnation is eternal torment. So far they will not dispute the truth of the colonel's statement; but do they call this theory of damnation "a consolation?"

The church that adopts the theory of Christianity as now taught, adopts it as a whole. It speaks of it as "good news"—"the glorious gospel of the Son of God." This "gospel" teaches eternal punishment, as well as eternal rewards. Colonel Ingersoll is here discussing the Presbyterian creed, with a Presbyterian doctor of divinity. The Presbyterian creed extols the justice of God in the eternal punishment of the "non-elect," quite as much as it does his grace in the salvation of the "elect." The one is called his "glorious justice;" the other "his glorious grace." Of this doctrine "of predestination," the Presbyterian creed says: "So shall this doctrine afford matter of praise, reverence, and admiration of God; and of humility, diligence, and abundant consolation to all that sincerely obey the gospel." (See Sec. 8, p 31, of the Confession of Faith.)

Here we have it in language that cannot be mistaken. The creed calls this doctrine of "predestination," by which a certain number are to be saved, and all the rest are to be eternally damned—not only “a consolation,” but an “abundant consolation;” and affords “matter of praise, reverence, and admiration of God.”

Now, when Dr. Field became a Presbyterian minister, he professed to believe this creed; so long as he remains a Presbyterian minister, he gives every one reason to believe that he still accepts this creed. Colonel Ingersoll was therefore fully justified in saying “the God you worship will, according to your creed, torture through all the endless years the man who entertains an honest doubt. . . . And this you call a ‘consolation.’”

Here is no “distortion” or “caricature,” but the plain, unmistakable meaning of the Presbyterian creed.

This reverend critic, not only assumes to judge Colonel Ingersoll unsparingly, without referring to the evidence; but he also assumes to judge of his audiences. He says: “But it may be urged that while Mr. Ingersoll’s method has little attraction for cultivated and thoughtful persons, it is very effective with another class of minds not likely to be reached by sober reasoning and refinement of manner. No doubt he draws his hearing mainly from this last named class.” One is almost tempted to inquire to what class Mr. Wendte imagines that he himself belongs? His talk sounds very much as though he belonged to the “New York four hundred,” or to some other very select “set.” The idea! that a man who has an intellect that can cope with the ablest men of the world “has little attraction for cultivated and thoughtful persons!” In all this long list of censures and condemnations, Mr. Wendte thoughtlessly treads in the footsteps of those who have always denounced philanthropists and reformers, so long as their cause was unpopular. Those who considered themselves the very elite of “thoughtful” and “cultivated” people brought these same accusations against Garrison, Theodore Parker, Wendell Phillips, and Charles Sumner, for many years. Even the mild and gentle Emerson, whom Mr. Wendte holds up as a model for Ingersoll, did not escape the coarse abuse of the clergy, for long years, while he was doing his very best work.

In England, neither the sublime work of Clarkson, nor the polished eloquence and culture of Wilberforce, could protect them from the almost unanimous abuse of the clergy for forty years. It would seem reasonable to expect that the ministers of our time, at least the liberal clergy, should learn something from history and not go on following the example of the “scribes and Pharisees,” whose bloody record of eighteen hundred years is still fresh on the pages of history.

Yet Mr. Wendte thinks that “Ingersoll’s method has little attraction for cultivated and thoughtful persons.” He ought to know that it takes this very class to fully appreciate him. The ignorant and unthinking excel even Mr. Wendte in their condemnation of him; while he has a larger hearing among the “cultivated and thoughtful” classes than any reformer of the past century.

Has it never occurred to Mr. Wendte that the most “thoughtful and cultivated” men of the world are in full accord with Colonel Ingersoll? He worships at the shrine of such cultured and thoughtful men as Humboldt, Lyell, Darwin, Herschell, Laplace, Spencer, Huxley, and the noble army of their co-workers. The men of science, of all Europe, Great Britain, and America, are the men whom Colonel Ingersoll most delights to honor, while the opponents of science are, in every instance, the opponents of Ingersoll. Mr. Wendte has made the grave mistake of publicly attempting to “estimate” a man who is too large for him. But when the dove attempts to sit in judgment on the eagle, we can hardly expect it to do justice to the nobler qualities of the larger bird.

J. W. NORTH.

MR. ARTHUR B. MOSS is again a free man. It will be remembered that last year the London School Board, of which Mr. Moss is an official, passed a resolution forbidding him to lecture or write in the interests of Freethought. This resolution has now, on the invitation of Mrs. Besant, been rescinded by a large majority. We congratulate Mr. Moss on the gratifying result of his courageous action, and which was largely due to the skillful advocacy of Mrs. Besant, who, by the way, is doing much excellent work as the representative of the Tower Hamlets.—Watts’s Literary Guide, London.

AN ECHO.

The San Diego Union and Daily Bee prints this oracular paragraph:

As age creeps on and Bob Ingersoll approaches the span of years allotted to the life of man, he appears to be less blasphemous. He is heard less often on the rostrum, and much of his old-time virility is lacking. Age brings wisdom, even to the chief Agnostic.

This is the latest echo of a cry that resounded from all the Christian pulpits about a year ago, and was taken up by all the Christian journals. Col. Robert G. Ingersoll (the person we suppose the Union and Bee means) was reported weak and feeble physically, and it was asserted that there was a growing disposition on his part to lay down his arms, and even to join the church. The subject was brought to Colonel Ingersoll’s attention by the editor of the Truth Seeker, and the great Agnostic had this to say: “I do not think the Christian press has been very solicitous about my health. Neither do I think my health will ever add to theirs. The fact is, I am exceedingly well, and my throat is better than it has been for many years. Any one who imagines that I am disposed to lay down my arms can read my reply to Dr. Field in the November number of the North American Review. I see no particular difference in myself, except this: that my hatred of superstition becomes a little more intense; on the other hand, I see more clearly that all the superstitions were naturally produced, and I am now satisfied that every man does as he must, including priests and editors of religious papers.” The editor of the Union and Bee ought to be satisfied with that reply, but if he is not we might say to him this much: that whatever blasphemy the colonel may have uttered, if there is such a thing as blasphemy, he stands to a little more strongly than ever; that if he is heard less often on the rostrum, he is heard more frequently and widely in the magazines and papers; and if he lacks any of his former virility Dr. Field and Mr. Gladstone and Cardinal Manning and the rest of the Christian world have not found it out. Age brings its wisdom to Colonel Ingersoll as to other men, and the wisdom is shown in a more and more intense hatred of superstition, which superstition, if we are not mightily mistaken, includes the larger part of the Christian religion.—The Truth Seeker.

SATURDAY THE SABBATH.

Before us lies a Mexican Spanish newspaper, published in San Francisco, the date line of which reads as follows:

“San Francisco, Sabado, Mayo 4 de 1889,” which, being translated in English, is, San Francisco, Sabbath, May 4, 1889.

It means this, that while neither Mexicans nor Spaniards observe the Sabbath of the Lord, they know no other name for the seventh day of the week but Sabbath. May 4 was Saturday, and we here have the witness of the language of a nation to its right to the sacred title of “Sabbath.”

But this is not the only witness. Before us hangs a chart of the week designed by Rev. W. M. Jones, a London antiquarian, assisted by Prince Lucien Napoleon Bonaparte, which shows that the regular succession of the days of the week are the same in 160 different languages and dialects; and 108 of these recognize Saturday, the seventh day, by the name of Sabbath. Fifty-two of these languages are European, the remainder Oriental and African. We have the united testimony of the Japhetic, the Semitic, and the Hamitic races to the right of the seventh day to the title of Sabbath. Let no one say in the face of this testimony that we cannot tell which the seventh day is, or which day is the original Sabbath. This language proof is the testimony of the ages.—Signs of the Times.

WEALTH AND DEBT.

The affairs of the world are so ordered that wealth and debt generally go together. This is contradictory of the popular impression, which is that debt and poverty are associated, rather than debt and wealth; but this latter is not correct, and a very little reflection will show its lack of reason. The poor man or the poor community cannot borrow; the wealthy one can and generally does. It may be a real or only a supposed necessity of wealth to borrow, but in most instances of individuals the man who has the capacity to make a great deal of money has the capacity, also, to use profitably a great deal more than he has. One-third of the land is generally mortgaged in every prosperous country, and in California it is a common saying that the richest farmer always has the largest debt. How true this theory is as to nations has been shown by Mulhall in his "Balance Sheet of the World" where he compares the wealth and debt of the richest European nations. These are the figures as they were supposed to stand in 1880 :

	Ratio per Inhabitant.	Do. per Cap. of National Debt.
Holland.....	£283	£26.2
Great Britain.....	260	23.7
France.....	201	18.0
Germany.....	135	13.0

Holland is the richest country in proportion to population and has the heaviest debt. Then come England, France, and Germany, and in every case their relative rank in wealth is their relative rank in debt.—Exchange.

THE SUMMER AND FALL CAMPAIGN.

S. P. Putnam has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Silverton.....	Or., June 22, 23,	Pomeroy ..	W. T., Aug.....	26,
Stayton.....	" " 24,	Union.....	Or. " " 29, 30,
Mills City.....	" " 25, 26,	Baker City, "	Sept.....	1,
Turner.....	" " 27,	Prairie City, Or, and vicinity,	Sept.
Eola.....	" " 28,	4, 5, 6, 7, 8,
Canby.....	" " 29, 30	Fox Valley.....	Or., Sept. 9, 10,
Molalla.....	July 3, 4,	Long Creek.....	" " 11, 12,
Kalama.....	W. T., " 6, 7,	Hamilton.....	" " 14, 15,
Starks Point, W. T., and vicinity,		Monument.....	" " 16, 17,
July 9, 10, 11, 12, 13,		Hay Stack.....	" " 18,
Astoria.....	Or., July 14,	Lone Rock.....	" " 19, 20,
Stella.....	W. T., " 15, 16, 17,	Fossil.....	" " 21, 22,
Oswego.....	Or., " 18, 19,	Hillsboro, Or., Sept., 25, 26, 27, 28,
Arnold's Grove.....	" " 20, 21,	North Yamhill.....	Or., Sept.....	29,
Coos county, Or., July 22 to Aug. 4,		Forest Grove.....	" " 30,
Coburg.....	" Aug..... 7, 8,	Talent, Or., and vicinity	Oct. 3, 4, 5,
Lebanon.....	" " 9,	6, 7,
Olympia.....	W. T., " 11, 12,	Linkville.....	Or., Oct. 11, 12, 13,
Buckley.....	W. T., " 13, 14,	Sacramento.....	Cal., Oct. 20,
Davenport, " " 17, 18,		San Francisco.....	" " 27,
Rosalia, W. T., and vicinity, Aug. 19, 20, 21, 22,		Los Angeles and vicinity the month of November,
Dayton.....	W. T., Aug. 24, 25,	San Diego and vicinity the month of December.

ELDER EVANS ON CHURCH AND STATE.

Mrs. Ada M. Bittenbender, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, lately sent to Elder F. W. Evans, of the Mount Lebanon, N. Y., Shaker Community, some matter concerning the Blair Sunday Rest bill. Following is Elder Evans's reply. It is printed in the Shaker Manifesto :

Your Sunday legislation I do not approve. "This is not a Christian government," Washington declared; and I fully agree with him. It is for all people on earth, and is designed to secure the inalienable rights of all.

Every day of the week is a Sabbath to some religious order of people. Each religion has its prophets, its bible, its creed. Do you not see that the province of government is to secure to all what all have a right to, without interfering with the reserved rights of any one? And above all religious people should be just, and give to those whom some erroneously and slanderously call Infidels—like Paine, Jefferson, Washington, and Lincoln—the honor and credit of being the founders of our government and authors of our Constitution. To use the powers of the government against those who were its authors and founders would be high treason against Divine Providence and humanity at large. "Shall not the judge of all the earth do right?" Abraham asked in astonishment, the God of Israel; and I ask, shall not those religious people who claim to be, of all others, the servants of the living God, be the first to do justice to the Rationalists, who, in the nobility of their souls, framed a Constitution that secured even to their most bitter, fanatical enemies—the Christians so-called—the same freedom of faith and liberty of conscience that they themselves desired to possess and exercise without let or hindrance? If we love our religious enemies, and do right by them, will there be any danger of our wronging others?

Shakers make as high a religious profession and claim to be as spiritual as any other denomination. They live celibate lives; own their land in common; use no alcohol or tobacco; will soon (all of them) eat no meat; do not fight; dress plain; and labor to provide things honest in the sight of all men. Yet they bless such men as Ingersoll, for the truth he holds and the good he does, and the evil he refrains from doing: in other words, for the self-denial he practices, and because he loves his fellow-men; they judge him by his deeds, not by his belief.

Church and state governments generate inquisitions. The highest form of human hate is when men and women—whilst tormenting their fellows with religious persecutions, and even killing them—think they are doing God good service. Does the Infidel believe in such a God, or love his worshipers? Will murder, in any of its forms, convert him? Is that overcoming evil with good? I hope you reforming women will "make haste slowly," and keep clear of Babel priests and church and state legislation. Respectfully,

F. W. EVANS.

MR. BRADLAUGH'S BILL DEFEATED.

The effort to repeal the English laws against blasphemy has been unsuccessful. The bill for this purpose came up on Friday evening, April 19. Mr. Bradlaugh thus tells the story of his fight:

"Friday was an evening of trouble. The Blasphemy Law Repeal bill originally stood first after Supply, and I hoped that it might have been reached about 8:30 or 9. But it was not till about twenty minutes to 11 I was called on. Unfortunately for the measure great prejudice was excited, even amongst members favorable to the bill, by the production of a large number of illustrations from the Freethinker, a bundle of which had been brought down to the House by Mr. Samuel Smith, and the sight of which brought member after member to me, saying that unless I repudiated such publications they could not vote for the repeal of the blasphemy laws. The feeling was so strong that the government, which had not issued any whip, directed the government tellers to tell against me, and thus deprived the bill of any possible chance of support from the Conservative ranks.

"To the forty-seven who, against great pressure, voted with me, I on behalf of those yet outlaws tender my earnest thanks. Now some of the battle must be taken up outside. If Freethinkers desire the repeal of the Blasphemy law, they must bring it forward at every election, and urge it not only on the members who were hostile, but still more on those who stayed away. I thank, too, the branches of the National Secular Society, and the friends who have petitioned in favor of the bill. I regret that there are many branches which have done nothing, and many friends who have made no sign. Specially thankful acknowledgment is due to the Guild of St. Matthew and to its warden secretary. The rejection of the bill by three to one shows that the fight for repeal will be a very uphill one."

A LITTLE MIXED.—In an English country church the curate had to give out two notices, the first of which was about baptism, and the latter had to do with a new hymn book. Owing to an accident he inverted the order and gave out as follows: "I am requested to announce that the new hymn book will be used for the first time in this church on Sunday next; and I am also requested to call attention to the delay which often takes place in bringing the children to be baptized; they should be brought on the earliest day possible. This is particularly pressed on mothers who have young babies." "And for the information of those who have none," added the rector, in gentle, kindly tones, and who, being deaf, had not heard what had been previously said—"and for the information of those who have none, I may state, if wished, they can be obtained on application in the vestry immediately after service to-day. Limp ones, one shilling each; with stiff backs two shillings."—Chicago Mail.

ORGANIZATION IN LOS ANGELES.

A meeting of Los Angeles Liberals was held in Little Turn Verein hall, Sunday night, the 5th instant, and a preliminary organization was effected. A constitution and by-laws were adopted. Election of officers was postponed one week. The hall has been engaged permanently. It has a seating capacity of 200. A clause in the constitution requires that all applications for membership shall be in writing, and, if reported favorably upon by an investigation committee, shall be decided by ballot. The organization is based on the Nine Demands; all other isms and subjects are barred out. It is intended to carry on a vigorous campaign in the way of entertainments, lectures, and the distribution of liberal literature, and help in the formation of similar organizations throughout Southern California. B. A. Stephens will address the meeting May 19 on the objects of the organization.

EFFECTS OF RELIGION.

The San Jose Mercury of recent date says: Robert Johnson was yesterday examined before Judge Reynolds in regard to his sanity. The evidence disclosed that Johnson is a native of Norway, 46 years old, unmarried, who has been in California off and on for fifteen years following the occupation of a painter. His insanity consists in the belief that he is under the guardianship of spirits. He acts at times in a wild and boisterous manner, using incoherent words. The attack appeared about a week ago. His insanity is believed to have been caused by attending religious services of an emotional character. The doctors decided that he was afflicted with acute mania.

A Zuni Genesis.

A writer in the Overland Monthly tells the idea of creation prevalent among the Zuni Indians of New Mexico: The earth was then small, compared with its present size, and even the night, which was constant, had neither moon nor stars; so with a view to getting these conveniences a council was held embracing the remaining tribes, to discuss the making of these and a firmament in which to place them.

As the meeting closed, each tribe had by common consent its allotted part to do in the creative work. The work was divided into three parts and the Navajos claimed first choice, having been first in the new world. They chose that of making the sun; but as they were not builders, the Zunis kindly helped them by building their workshops.

This done, the Navajos shut themselves up with tools and materials, and went about their work in good earnest. The Zunis built the heavens, then made the moon and put it in place. The Pueblos made the stars, and the three tribes worked with a will, regretting, however, that the Americans had shirked their share of the labor.

The Navajos at last finished making the sun, and the Zunis helped them hoist it, one Zuni going up with it. The moon was hoisted in the same manner, and the two Zunis were left aloft to act as the guardians of the two created lights; and as the world grows yearly, these two Zunis move their charges further back into the heavens, that their distance as first placed may remain the same. One of the Zunis, however, proves less competent than the other, for though sun and moon were intended to give equal light and warmth, having been made alike, a difference is made because the Zuni in control of the moon holds it too far from earth, so that we do not get its full force. It is due to his slothfulness also that the face of the moon is sometimes covered and allowed to grow dim, for the moon changes constantly; while the greater watchfulness of the sun guardian keeps his charge always at full brilliancy.

The Pueblos had the stars all made and ready for distribution in the form of fishes, bears, birds, and woman; but a coyote, looking them over, said impatiently:

"Why trouble so about those stars? Why not stick them up anywhere?"

And bounding upon the heap, he kicked his rear limbs heavenward, scattering the stars promiscuously from horizon to horizon; and the Pueblos concluded to let them remain so.

Improvident Marriages.

Loud are the cries against the "sweating" of men and women; deep is the pity for the poor little children who come to school shoeless and dinnerless; but few are the denunciations of improvident marriages and imprudent parents, wherein lies the root of these other evils we lament so strongly. How rashly people do rush into the married state is so well known that it hardly needs illustration; but a case I heard of the other day is to my mind so shocking, I feel obliged to give it publicity. A friend, who has lately been appointed registrar of marriages, attended a Roman Catholic church to register a wedding taking place there. After the ceremony he asked for the usual fee, 7s. 7d.; the wedded couple turned out their pockets, and between them they could only muster seven pence! And it is such people as these who can recklessly marry, without even sufficient means to pay the expenses of the marriage ceremony, who provide the world with ten or a dozen destitute and miserable children to grow up as best they can; too often, alas! in crime.—HYPATIA BRADLAUGH BANNER, in the National Reformer.

Sabbath-Breaking in Nevada.

Last Sunday our local, who was over at Lake Washoe fishing, made the following report: He found the shore of the lake lined with anglers, and a careful poll of the crowd resulted as follows: Episcopalians, 24; Presbyterians, 20; Methodists, 16; Baptists, 12; Catholics, 30; men of no religious belief, 6.—Ex.

ANOTHER of Dr. Andrew D. White's remarkable papers on "The Warfare of Science" is among the contents of the May "Popular Science Monthly." This article is devoted to "Diabolism and Hysteria," and contains accounts of the dancing and other manias of several centuries ago in Europe, and the witchcraft-delusion in this country, for which many innocent persons met their death, showing that these epidemics originated in nervous derangements, and were magnified and distorted by religious superstition.

THE beauties of an established religion are illustrated in the following clipping from the New York Independent:

A catechism, prepared by the Rev. F. A. Gace, Anglican vicar of Great Barling, England, and widely circulated, contains the following:

"In what light ought we to consider dissenters?—As heretics.
"Is their worship a laudable service?—No; their worship is idolatrous.
"Is dissent a great sin?—Yes; it is in direct opposition to our duty to God.

"Why have not dissenters been excommunicated?—Because the law of the land does not allow the wholesome law of the church to be acted on.
"Is it wicked to enter a meeting house?—Most assuredly."

THE following is cut from an article by the Rev. John Robertson, Stonehaven, published in the People's Journal:

"The devil is powerful, but he is not all-powerful. He is not almighty. He is a creature, and Christ is his creator."

Assuming the reverend gentleman to be well-informed on this subject, then but for Christ there would have been no devil.—National Reformer.

SEVERAL numbers of FREETHOUGHT, of San Francisco, have recently reached us. It is a capital journal—very racy and very readable, and we wish the enterprising proprietors, Messrs. Putnam and Macdonald, a large measure of success.—Watts's Literary Guide, London.

MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL lectures in Pennsylvania and Ohio from May 10 to June 10, and parties desiring her services may address her at Pittsburg, Pa.

W. S. BELL will speak in Oakland June 2, and in San Francisco June 9, if arrangements can be made.

NEW HAMPSHIRE leads in divorces, having had one to every ten marriages in the last five years.

THE ex-Rev. Mr. Ravlin, of San Jose, is doing some excellent preaching.

A Spiritualist and a Liberal.To the Editors of Freethought:

Please send me your paper, as I like it very much. Being what is called a Spiritualist, I cannot but be Liberal. Your paper is bound to do a world of good to reform the old superstitions, and I say, Success to your noble undertaking.

F. W. TOEDT.

Hamburg, Iowa.

Truth Clearly Revealed.

This world is one continued fathomless harmony in one common fundamental uniformity of inexhaustible laws, from time to time, to this position in which we live, to pass into the future states to be known state leaving what is far beyond human ability to solve.—Azusa News.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Presuming that you are still groping in doubt and darkness regarding the immortality of your soul, I commend the reading of the above clipping; and would ask, after its perusal, if you can longer doubt or deny this "sacred" truth so clearly revealed.

C. SEVERANCE.

Congratulations from the East.To the Editors of Freethought:

It rejoices me to read of your grand success in the far West. I see the West is much more Liberal than the East. You made a good move when you located in San Francisco. I am satisfied that if the liberty of our government is sustained it will be through the Liberal element and the Liberal press of the country.

We have had no lectures here this winter, the money pressure has been so heavy. Yours for success,

WM. LINDSEY.

Ottumwa, Iowa.

A Recruit for the Field.To the Editors of Freethought:

If I live it is quite possible I shall enter the lecture field next fall and work on the Pacific coast during the winter, possibly on Spiritualism, but certainly on subjects which involve absolute Atheism as to the god or gods of anybody. I am now sixty-four—never made a speech on anything till after fifty, but hope I may be able to do something before I die to make men and women happier and better here, no matter what they may believe as to the there. If I go into the field my efforts will be extemporaneous. I can shoot straighter and harder that way, off-hand, than to take a rest, as it were.

JOS. WOLFF.

Boulder, Col.

Wishing Every Success.To the Editors of Freethought:

I have received from your office one sample copy of FREETHOUGHT and several sent me by Liberal friends. I hope it will meet with success. I think you and George the right men for establishing a Liberal journal on this Coast. You know George and his badge-pin were always favorites with me. I like his style, and hope when his ship comes in he may make a tour of the world—including the holy land—and, like D. M. Bennett, cause the bones of the saints to rattle in their graves.

I inclose $2. Put me on subscription list. Wishing FREETHOUGHT every success, I am yours for truth,

A. O. BRUCE.

Wawona, Cal.

Colonel Kelso and his Books.To the Editors of Freethought:

Reader, some one once said: "Beware when God sends a thinker on to this planet." God, good, or evolution has sent Col. John R. Kelso, one of the deepest, highest, broadest thinkers, to teach the false teachers and misleaders of a blind and ignorant world to beware of the coming light of a true cosmogony (which will dissipate godism, popery, and priestcraft, as the approaching morning sun drives ghosts home to churchyards). His brain is a fountain of facts and truths, which he has superior power to connect and weave into a chain and web of logic and philosophy; and to analyze and discriminate between the false and the true.

He is, to my mind, an approximation to a master world builder. His "Universe Analyzed" is "a feast of fat things" to the scientific humanitarian. In the light and truth of the grand cosmogony he unfolds and pictures, how puerile, impotent, absurd, and inhuman is the God and creation assumption; and how insignificant this pigmy earth, with all its man-made systems and selfish schemes; a mere speck on the map of the universe. I would that space permitted me to review it in detail.

His book, "Spiritualism Sustained," does sustain Spiritualism from orthodox testimony, if not from scientific; and is a complete demolisher of orthodox absurdities, with a master's logic and nature's advocate.

His "Bible Analyzed" is an extensive, learned, masterly display of facts, figures, critical acumen, and logical expose and show-up of the assumptions, absurdities, sophistry, falsehood, and inhumanity of popes, priests, kings, despots, and authors to make the Bible an infallible authority, guide, and savior to a blind, ignorant, credulous world. Reader, however wise you may be, buy and read Kelso's books, and you will be still wiser and richer.

J. H. COOK.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURES.

San Francisco, May 12, 19,	Grub Gulch, May 29, 30, 31,
Boulder Creek, May 20, 21, 22,	Fresno Flats, June 1, 2, 3,
Santa Cruz, May 23, 24, 25,	Hornitos, June 4,
San Francisco, May 26,	New Sanel, June 6, 7,
Raymond, May 28,	Ukiah, June 8, 9, 10,
	Covelo, June 13, 14, 15, 16.

Appointments for Oregon and Washington, extending from June 22 to Nov. 1, will be announced next week.

OREGON STATE CONVENTION.To the Liberals of Oregon:

The members of the Silverton Secular Union, of Silverton, Oregon, hereby cordially invite all the Liberals of Oregon to meet with them in mass convention at Silverton, June 22 and 23, 1889, for the purpose of organizing a state association on the basis of the Demands of Liberalism, to co-operate with the American Secular Union. The association thus formed is to represent no intellectual creed, but simply equal rights and impartial liberty. It is to be organized in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the words of General Grant—"Keep the church and state forever separate."

All in favor of these great ends, so necessary to the preservation of Republican and Democratic institutions, are solicited to be present for fraternal co-operation. In union there is strength.

J. W. MCCLURE, President of Silverton Secular Union.

R. D. ALLEN, Secretary,

MRS. CARRIE FITZGERELL,

H. D. MOUNT,

E. WOLFARD,

} Executive Committee.

BOOKS.

We have for sale at this office, among other works:

"Yone Santo," see advertisement.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible." 15 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Annual" for 1889. 25 cents.

"Liberty and Morality," by W. S. Bell. 15 cents.

"The System of Nature," by Baron D'Holbach. $2.

"Robert Elsmere," by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Price, 50 cents.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

Judge Maguire's "Ireland and the Pope," a history of papal intrigues against Irish liberty. Price, 50 cents.

Taylor's "Diegesis," by the Rev. Robert Taylor. A discovery of the Origin, Evidences, and early history of Christianity. $2.

"Looking Backward," a socialistic romance which has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin of Industrial Slavery," by Edward Bellamy. Price, 50 cents.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street.

Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.
G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.
Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—THE NEW AMERICAN PARTY,

A CRITICISM BY "JEFFERSON."

Price, 10 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.
Price $1. Address, Putnam & Macdonald.

Kickers and Cranks.

Der kicker vas von lively man,
Who make a fuss vene'er he can,
Und raise der vind mit vordy fight
Ven eferydings vas not youst right.

How beoble like to kick at him!
But who would keep der world in trim,
If he discovered not a flaw,
Und kicked on eferydng he saw?

Und dere's dot krank, who's always round
Und helps to make der world turn round;
His field of usefulness vas great,
Dough oft he lifs in low estate.

Ven e'er der kicker has his say,
Der krank invents some petter way;
Der kicker kicks ven dings ain't right,
Der krank prings petter dings to light.

Und so der two goes hand in hand,
Und raise a rumpus in der land;
Yet, if der world gif dem no thanks,
I'll boom der kickers und der kranks.
—Boston Globe.

Christian Science.

An Auburn (Idaho T.) parson, skeptical as to the mind cure, contributes the following anecdote, which he declares to be the actual experience of one of his personal friends.

This man had been troubled with dyspepsia for a long time and had tried various remedies unavailingly.

"Why don't you try the mind-cure?" asked his wife, who was a believer.

"Pooh!"

"At any rate it will do you no harm."

"You might try it just to please me, if for no other reason, I should think."

At length the man, Joans I will call him, yielded to his better-half's importunities, as a good husband should have done, and went to Boston to see a mind-curer.

He was received in a barely-furnished room by a large woman and told her what his errand was.

"Please take off your coat," said she.

He obeyed.

"And your vest."

Off went the vest.

She pointed to a broad wooden bench without any back.

"Now," said she, "I want you to sit down on that bench with your back against mine, for five minutes. Brace firmly against me and keep your mind perfectly passive. Think of absolutely nothing."

The man sat down, she sat down, and the treatment went on.

Joans found that to keep his mind vacant and inactive was more easily said than done. Thoughts would come popping in. He rapidly grew uneasy. The five minutes seemed to be half an hour in passing.

"That will do," said the woman, finally, "How do you feel now, sir?"

"Feel? I feel like a confounded fool," said Joans.

"D. V." Out of Date.

There is quite a change, says a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, in the religiosity of the people since the time when every man who expressed a determination to do a specified action added reverently, D. V.—Deo volente, or God willing. At the opening of navigation on the Hudson recently a gentleman telegraphed to a friend in Albany that he would "be there on Thursday next, D. V." The merchant did not understand the letters; had never seen them before in such a position, and could make nothing of it. He consulted all his neighbors in vain. At last one of them had a bright thought, and he cried out, "I've got it. D. stands for Drew and V. for Vibbard. He means he'll get here on Thursday by the steamer Drew or by the Chauncey Vibbard." The merchant went home ashamed of his dullness.

Evil to Him Who Evil Thinks.

George (fixing parlor stove)—Why, the dam—

"George," exclaimed his mother, reprovingly.

George—Pshaw the dam—

"Why George," screamed his sisters, "how can you—"

George—Why, hang it all, I was only going to say that the d—

Lizzie—How can—

George (continuing desperately)—That the damper is turned off and there is no draught. What's the matter with you all? —Epoch.

"THUMP-RATTLTETY-BANG" went the piano. "What are you trying to play, Jane?" called out her father from the next room. "It's an exercise from my new instruction book. First steps in music," she answered. "Well, I thought you were playing with your feet," he said, grimly; "don't step so heavy on the keys, it disturbs my thought."—Munsey's Weekly.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond".....	14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address

PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best-filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc, worth $35 for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.4
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" " Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" " Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see next column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, knowing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and a NEW FEATURE, of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Fello's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding. MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Temperance and Prohibition, THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Cloth, 75 cts.

Address this office

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

As She is Spoke in Boston.

Miss Bostonese—When I was in my diminutive years I accompanied my respected sire on a westward tour, and while sojourning at a caravansary we viewed the famous Freckled Finale, the aboriginal chieftain.

Miss Gotham—Freckled Finale! Oh, you mean the Indian Spotted Tail.

Miss Bostonese—Yes; but he is never mentioned by that name in Boston, you know.

THE Boston Post says in praise of Wana-maker that he "began life without a dollar in his pocket." It might truthfully have gone further and stated that he began life without a pocket.—Utica Observer.

MR. N. PECK—"I never spoke cross to my wife but once." Thompson—"Quite remarkable that."

MR. N. PECK—"Not so very. See this scar?"—Terre Haute Express.

WHILE Christians are to be as harmless as doves, they are also to be as wise as serpents. And they are too. In many churches the collection is taken up before the sermon begins.—Boston Courier.

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an eternal Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fello's, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fello's, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right.

Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.

DR. FELLOWS.

Wm. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor.

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY.

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

TELEPHONE No. 655

P. O. CHILSTROM,

(Rogers & Chilstrom.)

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Commercial Business and Collections a Specialty.

Office, 415 Montgomery St., Rooms 9, 10 & 11,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY, SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

Devoted to Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.

HUGH O. PENTECOST, Editor.

Contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday Addresses of the Editor before Unity Congregation.

It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.

Its columns are open for the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.

Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription one dollar.

Sample copies free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe."

Address
Twentieth Century Publishing Co.,
No. 4 Warren street, New York.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application.

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY
NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,
NURSEYRMEN.

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit
and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.

Special Attention Given to Planting
and Caring of Orchards
and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal

"MADAM," reproachfully remarked the tramp to whom the young housewife had given a couple of cold biscuits of her own make. "I have asked ye for bread and ye have given me a stone." And the next instant she gave him a brick.—Terre Haute Express.

"CONDUCTOR," said the nervous passenger, "who is that desperate-looking devil at the other end of the car? I never saw a man carry such an outfit of guns and knives before." "Don't be uneasy," replied the conductor, reassuringly, "he is a minister of the gospel on his way to Oklahoma, where he will hold open-air services."—Lincoln Journal.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald,
504 Kearny st. San Francis

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA.

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or The Infidel Teacher 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

YONE SANTO,

A Child of Japan.

BY E. H. HOUSE.

The Book that the American Missionary Society tried to Suppress, but Didn't."

A Splendid Story, and an Unsparing Exposure of the Missionary Business in Japan.

PRICE, 50 CENTS.

PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 304 Kearny Street, San Francisco.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Father

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton. Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology. Price, 50 cents.

DO A GOOD TURN WHEN YOU CAN.

No. 98 COSMIAN HYMN BOOK.

Tune, "Do they Miss me at Home."

1. How little we think as we travel
Through life's ups and downs day by day,
What good each might do for his neighbor,
Did all of us go the right way!
How many a poor fellow whose talents
To elevate science would tend,
Is lost to the world's gaze for ever,
And all for the want of a friend!
And all for the want of a friend!

REFRAIN:

Then stretch forth your hand like a brother,
For remember that life's but a span,
'Tis our duty to help one another,
And do a good turn when we can.

2. Some boast of their wealth and connections,
And look with contempt upon those
Of a lower degree—quite forgetting
The means by which they, perhaps, rose.
So be kind to the poor and the lowly;
Ne'er utter a word that's untrue:
Prize the maxim which says "Act to others
As you would they should act unto you!"
As you would they should act unto you!"

REFRAIN.

A LADY teacher not a thousand miles off was instructing a young class in the meaning of different words, principally by illustration. At length "husband" was reached. To make it clearer for them she says: "Suppose that I should get married, what would it be that I would have?" For a few moments their little heads were busy trying to comprehend what it would be, when one bright little fellow with his countenance beaming with satisfaction at having solved the problem, shouted out: "A baby, ma'am."—Fort Collins Courier.

THE editor of the Martinez Gazette appears nervous regarding his future state. In Wednesday's issue of his paper he says, referring to the warm weather: "This is the beginning, but where will be the end?"—Concord Sun.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—

"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to
L. K. WASHBURN,
Revere, Mass.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION: Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 21.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, MAY 25, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - MAY 25, 1889.

REFERRING to the large salaries of clergymen the London Freethinker makes the apt point that "Jesus died on the cross, and the preachers live on it."

SIGNOR GIOVANI AMICI, secretary to the central committee for the monument to Giordano Bruno, announces that the inauguration of the monument in the Campo di Fiori, Rome, is finally fixed for Sunday, June 9.

SPAIN is another Mexico. A Freethinker in Moron has been sent to prison for a week and fined heavily for not taking off his hat as the priest passed through the street bearing the holy ghost in a piece of wafer. Time was when such a thing might have happened in California.

THE two sisters of Pigott, the forger of the Parnell letters, are nuns in Ireland. They have just heard, to their great relief, that their brother confessed his forgeries and received absolution the Sunday before his flight. This gives Mr. Pigott entrance into the New Jerusalem, and affords cause of rejoicing to all the angelic hosts.

IN the May number of the Forum, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps states the truism that "it is an undecorated fact that if Jesus Christ were to enter almost any of our influential churches to-day he would be shown into the back gallery, and he could not obtain admission into our parlors without a letter of introduction to our 'sets.'"

THE Chronicle calls upon the law to suppress the Rev. Mr. Schweinfurth, the man who is regarded and worshiped as the latest messiah by a lot of women in Illinois. When Schweinfurth's predecessor was on earth the multitude cried, "Crucify him." It is a sign of progress toward religious liberty that the claim to messiahship is no longer regarded as a capital offense.

THE Los Angeles Porcupine gives authority for the statement that George Washington is among the canonized saints of the archiepiscopal see of Guatemala, Central America. Notwithstanding Washington was a Deist and a Freemason, and therefore under the anathema of the church, it is evidently only a question of time when the Catholics will claim him as one of them, as in the case of St. Patrick.

A LONDON correspondent says: "The unanimous decision of the Court of Appeal in Lady Sandhurst's case has finally settled the legal question against the right of women to sit in county councils. The judges decide that the act expressly enfranchising women as electors has the effect, in the absence of any further statement, of disqualifying them as candidates. This is another instance of the legal dictum to the effect that the words in an act of Parliament implying man include women when disability or punishment is concerned, but exclude women when privileges are conferred. 'He' means 'she' when the question is one of going to jail, but 'he' means only 'he' when it is a question of going to the ballot-box."

MR. S. P. PUTNAM

Will lecture in San Francisco, Sunday, May 26,

—AT—
UNION SQUARE HALL

421 Post Street,

Subject: "The Church and the Centenary."

ADMISSION FREE.

LECTURE AT 8 P. M.

RELIGIOUS PAUPERS.

New York city this year appropriates the sum of $1,142,232.61 for charitable purposes. Of this amount $510,092.38 is devoted to so-called non-sectarian institutions, while $632,130.23 goes to the different sects for the support of their various institutions. The Jews get $60,000; the Protestants, $31,814.63; the Catholics, $540,325.60. It appears from these figures that more than one-half of the entire sum devoted to charitable and benevolent purposes in New York is paid over to religious bodies and by them used for teaching their peculiar religious tenets, and that nearly one-half of the entire sum goes to Roman Catholics. If these sums are apportioned to the sects according to the ratio of pauperism among them, then there are nine Roman Catholic paupers in the city to one Jew, and about eighteen to one Protestant. Or if the Roman Catholics get one-half of the entire sum, then it is to be inferred that Roman Catholics afford one-half the paupers.

The New York Catholic Protectory, in other words a prison for depraved boys of Catholic parents, alone draws $254,000 from the city fund. As it gets $2 per week for each inmate, this would provide for about 2,500 boys. The rival of the Protectory is the non-sectarian Juvenile Asylum, which takes care of youthful criminals who are not of Catholic parentage. This latter institution gets $112,500, less than one-half what the Protectory receives. If it cares for juvenile delinquents at the same rate as the Protectory, it can have but one-half as many, or one-third of the whole, so that the Catholic church would appear to furnish two-thirds of the entire quota of youthful criminals.

In reading the list of Roman Catholic charitable institutions a striking peculiarity is noted which we have never seen mentioned, namely, that the Catholic church provides no asylum for the insane, for idiots, or for incurables. Among the public charities of New York is the New York Asylum for Idiots, a State Lunatic Asylum, and an Asylum for Insane Criminals. The Catholic church has none of these institutions. She cares for the helpless merely as an investment. Her wards are a source of profit to her, not alone because she is paid a round sum by the state for caring for them, but because they remain Catholics and add to the strength of the church. She cannot use the insane, the idiotic, and the helplessly incurable, and she will have nothing to do with them.

The sectarian institutions of New York are samples of what may be found all over the country. They are in the hands of Christians, and by Christians used for purposes of propagandism. Even benevolent institutions founded by Infidels are in Christian hands and used for the same purpose. And because of this fact the charities of the country are placed to the credit of religious people, while Infidels are taxed to support them. There ought to be a reform in this matter. Not a dollar of public funds should be paid to any institution in which the Christian religion is taught. If sects desire to establish hospitals, colleges, or asylums, they have the undoubted right to do so, and they are bound in justice to support them with their own money. They claim to be charitable. Withdraw state support from their institutions and see how long before those institutions will pass into the hands of the state, where they belong. When the church stands on her dignity and refuses aid from the state she will be entitled to the credit she now claims. Until then she will remain a pauper as much as the unfortunates whom she uses as a lever to raise funds with.

ABOUT GALILEO.

The Catholic Monitor has just found space to reprint a sermon delivered some months ago by Bishop Kain, of Virginia, in which the attempt is made to show that the church never opposed science or learning, and that, particularly in the case of Galileo, the Tuscan philosopher, she encouraged astronomy rather than otherwise. There is, of course, much room for dispute as to what really happened to Galileo while in the hands of the Inquisition. It is universally admitted, however, that he recanted his astronomical theories under pressure, and that he was imprisoned by order of Pope Urban. Bishop Kain makes the following statement:

"The true causes of Rome's interference were Galileo's persistent attempts to act the theologian, and twist the sacred scriptures into an argument favoring his scientific speculations; and his open disrespect for ecclesiastical authority. The church was unwilling to permit the universally received and literal meaning of holy writ to be set aside, and a novel and seemingly far-fetched construction placed upon its words, without an absolute necessity; and all lovers of God's sacred word must applaud her action.

It is difficult to discern how Bishop Kain has strengthened his case by restating it in this form, since persecution, or "interference," as the bishop terms it, is equally as infamous when directed against freedom in religious discussion as when used to discourage scientific investigation.

The church has been forced into exactly the position which Bishop Kain ascribes to Galileo—that the earth is round instead of flat, and that it revolves around the sun; and that theologian who can most skillfully "twist the sacred scriptures into an argument favoring Galileo's scientific speculations" is regarded most favorably by the church. The pope of Rome, to-day, if he were to utter anything upon the subject, must say exactly what the Tuscan philosopher was tortured and imprisoned by the pope for saying three hundred years ago.

CHICAGO'S RELIGIOUS UPHEAVAL.

The religious waters of Chicago have been stirred to their very depths during the past few weeks. Mr. Moody, the evangelist, held revival services there the first part of the month, with the Rev. Dr. Driver, of Portland, Or., to assist him in his work. Dr. Driver, it is well known, makes a specialty of answering Infidels, and a public invitation was issued to all skeptics to come and have their doubts removed while they waited. This invitation Mr. E. A. Stevens clipped from the newspaper where it appeared, and pasted it upon a courteous communication to D. L. Moody, notifying him that a delegation from the Secular Union were anxious to ask some questions which stood in the way of their accepting the scheme of salvation. At the appointed time the delegation visited the Tabernacle where Brother Moody held forth, and Mr. Jehu Barr handed up the letter. This was in the morning, and Mr. Moody, after announcing the contents of the letter, said that as it was sprung on them somewhat suddenly he would have to defer its consideration until evening. The Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston, was passing through the city, and he had been invited to speak that morning.

The Rev. Mr. Cook was present and at once exhibited himself. For three-quarters of an hour he stamped about the platform, abusing Freethinkers, especially Colonel Ingersoll, and denouncing all opponents of Christianity as "cancer-breeders." Secretary Stevens reports that he was obliged to hold some of the Secular Unionists in their seats to prevent them from arising and throwing Cook's lies back into his face. To the honor of Mr. Moody be it said that he himself put an end to Cook's harangue. He arose and told the reverend from Boston that he wanted no more of that kind of talk. Said he:

"There are honest Infidels as well as honest Christians. I would give more to convert one of those than a hundred others. These people have been invited here and I don't want them abused. It is not right. Were I an Infidel, I would not sit and listen to such abuse."

The audience, even the Christian portion of it, applauded these words. Cook inquired idiotically, "Was I abusing anybody?" whereat the whole house laughed in derision. Moody and Cook faced each other, and a set-to between them appeared imminent, but Cook retired. Mr. Moody subsequently invited the Secular delegation to the platform, where its members were introduced to the brethren of the church.

In the evening the Secularists were again present, and were accorded seats on the platform. The brethren prayed for them, exhorted them, and then trotted out their champion Infidel smasher, the Rev. Dr. Driver, to answer the questions. Dr. Driver is another Braden, wordy and adroit, but he could not answer the questions so they would stay answered. The Secularists were not allowed to debate. They kept quiet until a question was replied to, and then shot out a comment or a text that left the query as it stood before, unanswered and unanswerable.

At the close of Dr. Driver's labors, Mr. Stevens announced that Mr. Charles Watts was in the city, and that twenty Chicago clergymen had declined to meet him in debate.

As announced last week, Mr. Watts and Dr. Driver were finally brought in contact for a four-nights' discussion at the Princess Theatre. Reports of the debate have reached us through the medium of the Chicago dailies. It is the old, old story. The Freethinker argued, the preacher exhorted. Mr. Watts pressed his opponent to stick to the text and to debate the proposition. Dr. Driver shuffled, evaded, and got angry. The audience jeered, and the preacher became abusive. Then he was hissed. He slandered all the prominent Freethinkers and their families, out-Bradening Braden. Mr. Watts offered to forfeit $500 if he could not prove that Dr. Driver was a deliberate falsifier, to which the clergyman replied by adducing other statements equally untrue. Among other things Driver asserted that Ingersoll had no moral character except such as he inherited from Christian parents, and that his children had none at all; that he had met the president of the American Secular Union upon the streets of Portland, Or., so drunk that he was unable to stand, and that Paine Hall, in Boston, had been sold for taxes. Mr. Watts of course answered the reverend's falsehoods as they should have been answered; but if a clergyman has the hardihood to lie in this way when in the presence of an opponent who can correct him, it must be left to the imagination to conjecture the extent of his misrepresentations when no one is at hand to expose them.

The more we see of these debates with unscrupulous preachers, the less are we impressed with their utility. No Christian can defend his creed against the arguments of unbelief, and every intelligent Christian is aware of that fact. Clergymen like Driver do not debate for the sake of argument. They enter contests of this kind merely for the opportunity of retailing their slanders. This is their deliberate intention at the outset, and they have the same advantage over a self-respecting opponent that a skunk introduced into a parlor would have over the other occupants. It becomes a question whether it pays to assemble the company for the sake of introducing the skunk.

A COMRADE GONE.

"Frederick W. Hirst, well known among Union Pacific men as agent for that road at Echo for several years, died at his home on the 19th, after great suffering, from a cancer which first appeared on his tongue. He leaves a wife and two small daughters. Hosts of friends will mourn his loss, while their hearts will go out in sympathy for his bereft family, to whom he was most devoted. For weeks, while he suffered the severest pangs and was unable to speak and tell of his sufferings, he bore all with resignation and remained conscious to the last. Peace be to his ashes."—Salt Lake City Tribune.

It is with deepest sadness that we read this record of our friend's death. We have known him for years, and always known him as a true man, a man of few words but of honest acts, a man generous in his disposition, and of cultivated and earnest mind. At North Platte, Omaha, and lastly at Echo, he was always the genial companion, always a strenuous thinker, with the courage of his convictions, but of gentle and reticent temperament. He was a student of nature, a keen observer of her lovely and sublime forms, a reader of her secrets written upon the pages of her rocky calendar. He has been quite a contributor to the records of science. He has not lived in vain. To the world and to his friends he has rendered the service of humanity. We shall hold in honored remembrance our comrade. Death cannot rob us of his virtue, of his truthfulness, of his sincere and noble work. That remains in our life and hope to come. To his family, to his wife and children, whose home is thus so deeply darkened, the grand army of freedom gives its heartfelt sympathy, and would place upon his grave the flower of love's deathless tribute.

S. P. P.

BOUND volumes of FREETHOUGHT for 1888 may be had for $2.50

A FRIEND INDEED.

DENVER, COL., May 18, 1889.

MESSRS PUTNAM & MACDONALD: Please find inclosed draft for sixty dollars ($60) as a contribution to the FREETHOUGHT fund—$10 from my brother, G. C. Smith, of Sanborn; $50 from myself.

Hoping you will get all the funds needed to continue your excellent paper, I remain your friend,
AUSTIN W. SMITH.

[No verbal thanks can convey our gratitude for this generous gift. From East to West, FREETHOUGHT has been helped by its friends, whose good deeds speak eloquently for themselves. We can but falter our appreciation, and bend more strenuously to the task of making ourselves worthy of support. Mr. Smith is one of four who have each turned one hundred dollars, and more, into the treasury of this paper. The others are N. D. Goodell, of Sacramento; L. Geiger, of Hudson, N. Y., and Owen T. Davies, of Brighton. A list of friends too long to enumerate here, but who are always remembered, have contributed out of their devotion to the cause. Surely Liberalism opens the heart, and its apostles build for themselves memorials nobler than granite shafts, and enduring as the hills.—Ed.]

UNDER the laws of California any building may be held for the pay of workmen employed in constructing it. Thus if a contractor fails to pay his workmen, the owner of the building is responsible. The Superior Court of San Francisco is shortly to determine a case growing out of a suit against Archbishop Riordan connected with the repairs upon a church. The church was repaired by one Joseph Binet at a cost of $10,000, but Binet went into insolvency without satisfying the workmen under him. The latter now seek to establish their claims directly against the church instead of against the insolvent contractor. Riordan contests their claims and refuses to recognize them. The suit is of interest because it is to determine whether law can be enforced against the Catholic church.

ONE of the saddest of recent deaths is that of Allen Thorndike Rice, editor of the North American Review, and appointed U. S. minister to Russia. Mr. Rice was still a young man, not quite thirty-six years of age, but he had achieved a brilliant reputation, and had a still brighter future before him had he lived. Perhaps the reason why Freethinkers most honor him is because he opened the columns of his magazine to the free discussion of religion pro and con. His motto was Tros Tyriusque mihi nullo discrimine agetur—"the Trojan and the Tyrian shall be treated by me without distinction"—and he was true to it. There are so few editors of popular periodicals of which this can be said that Mr. Rice's example shines with peculiar lustre.

THE Orthodox Russian church on Powell street was gutted by fire last Monday night. This is the church presided over by Vladimir, bishop of Alaska and the Aleutian Islands, whose article on Roman Catholicism in this paper last year was a most valuable contribution to Freethought literature. It is claimed that the fire was of incendiary origin, as the congregation is divided into two factions, each one accusing the other. It is fortunate for the members that their church stood in San Francisco instead of St. Petersburg. When such a thing happens in the Russian capital it comes to America as a Nihilist plot to kill the czar, and a delegation of "suspected" persons is sent to Siberia.

FREETHOUGHT has received $5 from Mr. W. H. Pepper, of Petaluma, for the California State Liberal Union.

MR. M. A. GAULT, of the National Reform Association, in a recent speech, pointed out four ways by which this may be made a Christian nation. These four ways are as follows: First, agitation; second, petition; third, by the ballot; fourth, by the sword. In justifying the use of the last-named method he goes on: "Don't think we are advocating war; but if we are not faithful in the use of these other means, as it was with the anti-slavery question, after they had agitated and petitioned and used the ballot, they drew the sword; so shall we, as a last resort, be compelled to use the sword and the bullet." A little such-inflammatory talk as this led to the hanging of four Anarchists in Chicago a year or two ago.

B. F. UNDERWOOD will give a course of four lectures at Spokane Falls, W. T., May 23, 24, 25, 26. He will revisit Oregon and California. In reply to requests to meet Rev. I. D. Driver in debate, Mr. Underwood authorizes us to say he will discuss with him or any other representative minister on the Pacific Coast, where arrangements can be made.

So far as the old parties are concerned, there appears to be no politics in the Sunday movement. A man who has circulated petitions in three states against the Blair bill reports that Democrats and Republicans sign them in about equal numbers. The Prohibitionists, however, almost to a man, refuse to sign the protest.

THE thousand dollars asked of American Freethinkers for the Bruno statue at Rome has been raised, with $52.50 to spare. None of the American committee can so arrange as to be present at the inauguration of the statue, but the country will probably be represented by Judge Stallo, U. S. minister to Italy.

WE fail to see why the Secularists of Chicago, as reported by the Herald, should have offered a vote of thanks to Dr. Driver at the close of his discussion with Charles Watts. It suggests that if Driver had slandered a few more prominent Freethinkers, they would have given him an ovation.

WE call attention to Judge North's excellent article in this paper on "Ingersoll and His Critic," and trust that no one will overlook it on account of its length. All who read it will wish it were longer.

THE SUMMER AND FALL CAMPAIGN.

S. P. Putnam has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Silverton.....Or.,	June 22, 23,	Pomeroy ..W. T.,	Aug.....26,
Stayton....."	" 24,	Union.....Or.	" 29, 30,
Mills City....."	" 25, 26,	Baker City,"	Sept.....1,
Turner....."	" 27,	Prairie City, Or., and vicinity,	Sept.
Eola....."	" 28,	4, 5, 6, 7, 8,
Canby....."	" 29, 30,	Fox Valley.....Or.,	Sept. 9, 10,
Molalla....."	July.....3, 4,	Long Creek....."	" 11, 12,
Kalama.....W. T.,	" 6, 7,	Hamilton....."	" 14, 15,
Starks Point, W. T., and vicinity,		Monument....."	" 16, 17,
July 9, 10, 11, 12, 13,		Hay Stack....."	" 18,
Astoria.....Or.,	July 14,	Lone Rock....."	" 19, 20,
Stella.....W. T.,	" 15, 16, 17,	Fossil....."	" 21, 22,
Oswego.....Or.,	" 18, 19,	Hillsboro, Or.,	Sept., 25, 26, 27, 28,
Arnold's Grove.."	" 20, 21,	North Yamhill...Or.,	Sept.....29,
Coos county, Or.,	July 22 to Aug. 4,	Forest Grove...."	" 30,
Coburg....."	Aug.....7, 8,	Talent, Or., and vicinity	Oct. 3, 4, 5,
Lebanon....."	" 9,	6, 7,
Olympia...W. T.,	" 11, 12,	Linkville.....Or.,	Oct. 11, 12, 13,
Buckley...W. T.,	" 13, 14,	Sacramento.....Cal.,	Oct. 20,
Davenport, "	" 17, 18,	San Francisco....."	" 27,
Rosalia, W. T., and vicinity,	Aug.	Los Angeles and vicinity	the month
19, 20, 21, 22,		of November,
Dayton...W. T.,	Aug....24, 25,	San Diego and vicinity	the month of December.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

What the seismic experts pronounce the most violent shock of earthquake felt in these parts since 1868, occurred last Sunday morning at three o'clock. It lasted more than two minutes, but did no material damage.—The discovery of natural gas is reported from Petaluma.—The weather was very hot in some portions of the state last Sunday. At Los Angeles the thermometer reached 94 in the shade.—A young California soprano, named Sibyl Sanderson, is surprising Paris with her marvelous voice.—The salvation army of Oakland is split by a quarrel over finances. The seceders charge embezzlement, and rival clans conduct competitive services on opposite street corners.—The fine sidewheel steamer Alaskan, belonging to the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, was wrecked off the coast of Oregon May 16. About twenty lives were lost. The ship was valued at $330,000.

After a mob at Forest City, Ark., had killed a negro last Saturday, they discovered that he was innocent.—Cincinnati, O., is in the throes of a Sunday closing crusade. Five saloon-keepers were arrested on the 19th for test cases.—A new steamer of the Hamburg packet line has just made the voyage from Hamburg to New York in eight days, making an average speed of more than 380 miles per day.—The Rev. John F. Hooper, of New York, whose wife got a divorce in California last year, has added to his reputation by eloping with a young woman.—The Rev. Peter Van Etten was arrested at Toledo, O., last Saturday, for swindling a widow out of $4,000.—In the thunderstorm which passed through Pennsylvania and Ohio May 19, a Methodist church at Rouseville, Pa., was struck by lightning and burned to the ground.—The wife and mother of mind-reader Bishop, who died last week, charge that he was merely in a fit or trance and that the doctors killed him in making the autopsy.

—Capt. Jas. Chester, Third Artillery U. S. army, went crazy over a belief in devils, and attempted to drown himself in New York bay last Saturday morning. He believed himself "possessed," and took to the water to rid himself of the demons.—A flourishing Mormon church in Clay county, Ala., has been broken up by the citizens of the neighborhood, and the elders in charge of it have been warned to leave the county without delay. The Mormon elders have been proselyting that county for five years, and have made many converts. They established a church about a year ago and have been holding regular services since. Most of the elders have left and the others will follow. They carry most of their converts with them.—A new scheme of transportation is to be introduced between New York and Boston, whereby it is said that large packages of mail and even cars containing passengers can be whisked from one place to the other, a distance of 230 miles, in less than an hour. An experiment with the new machine was held in Boston in the presence of many scientists, including Prof. A. E. Dolbear of Tufts College, who announced that he was thoroughly satisfied with the success of the system. The machine consists of a magnetic car hanging from a single rail. With one-horse power, it is said that one ton can be thus transported 1440 miles a day at a cost of 30 cents.

—Rev. John E. Russell, D. D., Professor of Biblical Theology (New Testament) in the Yale Theological school, has tendered his resignation. The resignation is generally attributed to a difference of opinion in reference to the "Andover controversy," the professor, it is stated, siding with the Andover professors.—The residence of George Bancroft, the aged historian, at Washington, is either a prison or a hermitage. The old man is not supposed to be any longer able to take care of himself, even in conversation, and so the members of his household stand between him and all callers. He is not permitted to see any one except his physician and a few intimate friends.—A fire in St. Sauveur, a suburb of Quebec, on May 16, destroyed $600,000 worth of dwellings, and left 5,000 or 6,000 people homeless.

Mrs. Maybrick, a niece of Jefferson Davis, has been arrested at Liverpool, Eng., for poisoning her husband.—More plots to kill the czar of Russia are reported, and hundreds of "conspirators" have been placed under arrest.—The abolition of the House of Lords was debated in the British Commons May 17.

The champions of the peers defended them by pointing to the great success of the American Senate.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL AND HIS CRITIC.

The Rev. Mr. Wendte, in "estimating" Colonel Ingersoll's audiences, says: "If you carefully scrutinize the character of the audiences attending his lectures you will find it made up in great part of persons, mostly men, who are already in sympathy with his view of the question, or are indifferent to any view of it."

Let us see if this intended depreciation is not rather a compliment. When it is said of any church, that the congregation are mostly women, it is understood that the preaching does not attract thoughtful men. If Ingersoll's audiences are mostly men, it is an indication that men like his lectures better than they like preaching. In saying that "his audiences are, in great part, already in sympathy with his views, or indifferent to any view," Mr. Wendte is saying no more than he can say of his own audiences, and of every audience in every church in the land. So this criticism does not hurt either Ingersoll or his audiences. But did it ever occur to Mr. Wendte that Ingersoll's audiences are very large? That when he speaks thousands flock to hear him, and that when he writes millions read his productions? If all these audiences are mostly men who are already in sympathy with his views, certainly Agnostics are very numerous.

He dwells at some length on Ingersoll's "leading his audiences to think lightly of sacred things."

This is a theme which priests of every age have worn threadbare. "Sacred things" and "reverence for sacred things," have been the burden of their song from year to year, and from age to age. Ignorance has been awed by it, youth has been frightened by it, manhood has been wearied with it, and old age has been shadowed by it. Every generation has heard it from the cradle to the grave. And what are these "sacred things?"

The "sacred office," the "sacred priesthood," the "sacred scriptures," the "holy church," the "holy land," the "Holy Father," the holy sacraments, the "sacred relics," the "sacred creeds." Each minister is a "Reverend," and of course must be "revered." Now, who does not know that in all this perpetual harping on "sacred things," the priests themselves as a class have, in every age, disregarded the "sacred rights of humanity," the "sacred rights of conscience," of "reason," and of "liberty?" Things "sacred to humanity" are ignored, while "sacred superstitions" bear rule over oppressed and wronged humanity. When priests will revere the sacred rights of conscience, reason, thought, and speech, then will they be able to command more respect for their sincerity when they dwell on "sacred things."

Again he says: "A want of reverence for what is above us; for age and station, superior knowledge, character or service, is one of the crying evils of our day." This language could be addressed to the clergy of Christendom with more propriety than to either Colonel Ingersoll or his audiences. When have the ministers spared, much less "revered," age, station, character, service, or superior knowledge, when they were identified with unpopular truth or human progress? Have they ever revered the "superior knowledge" of the scientists, from the time of Hypatia to the present day? Did they respect character or service in the great Humboldt, Herschell, or Sir Charles Lyell? Did they, as a body, have any reverence for the noble "services" of Garrison, Phillips, Gerrit Smith, and their valiant compatriots, who for forty years maintained the unequal fight for liberty and "human brotherhood?" Did not the clergy of the North even take sides with the oppressors so strongly that the churches were called "the bulwark of American slavery?"

Colonel Ingersoll, on the contrary, has ever been a bold champion of liberty and of "human brotherhood." Was it Ingersoll or the ministers who lacked in reverence for really "sacred things?"

When ministers, with solemn countenances, undertake to impress the people with the "sacredness" of ancient absurdities, antique fictions, and monstrous dogmas, it is not strange that both Ingersoll and his audiences laugh at the absurd farce. Nor is it strange, when they became the enemies of science and human progress, and seek to perpetuate superstition, despotism, and slavery, that both Ingersoll and his audiences should denounce them.

Again Mr. Wendte says: "This method of intellectual bullying is unwise in a reformer, because it makes few or no converts."

It is a cheap way of disposing of an intellectual giant to call him a bully. The weakest of men can do that. The champions in all reforms have received such treatment from those who could answer them in no other way. General Grant was accused of something like bullying when he took Fort Donaldson. After he had demanded an "unconditional surrender," General Buckner complained of his "ungenerous and unchivalrous" terms; but he surrendered all the same. And now, only a few days ago, General Buckner was in New York helping to celebrate the birthday of General Grant. And in his speech on that occasion he said he would not be true to the Southern people if he did not say, "We love the memory of General Grant." He further said: "It is fortunate for the country, particularly for the South, that we did not succeed in the late contest." He found General Grant, though a hard fighter, a generous friend to those he had conquered.

Let those who complain of the "intellectual bullying" of Colonel Ingersoll, take courage; for though he may require of them an "unconditional surrender," they will find him a generous friend to the vanquished, and one of these days they will be celebrating his birthday, and congratulating themselves that he fought them out of their errors.

Mr. Wendte not only blames Ingersoll for his severe language against the ministers, but also holds him responsible for the sins of the ministers against him. "Read," he says, "the controversial replies to Colonel Ingersoll that have appeared in the newspapers, or been fulminated from the pulpit; and observe the bitter, personal, arrogant, and uncharitable tone which distinguishes most of them. Yet for this sad display of bigotry and temper Mr. Ingersoll is largely responsible." How convenient it is to saddle upon Ingersoll the sins of both parties! Of course Mr. Ingersoll must be held responsible for Mr. Wendte's hard words too. He seems to think that by blaming Ingersoll for their "display" of "bigotry and temper," the ministers are largely excused for cherishing those qualities.

He next talks of "the age of fire and sword in religion," and of "the old dispensation of fear and hate;" and tells us that the "creeds" and "pretensions of the churches" are about the same now as then, but that "the spirit of the age has changed;" and then says, "This increasing tendency of the age, so beautiful and hopeful, Colonel Ingersoll would have us arrest and make impossible."

Now is it possible that Mr. Wendte really believes this accusation against the man he has just now called "our fellow reformer," "the general drift of whose efforts is to emancipate the human mind from the thralldom and superstition of the past?" The man with whom he declares himself "in sympathy" in denying "the arrogant claims of a hierarchical priesthood?" He seems to become a good deal mixed in this effort to estimate Ingersoll. At one moment he is in sympathy with him in all his aims, and only differs with him about his "manner." He then accuses him of wishing to "arrest" the beneficent "spirit of the age."

Through whose influence has "the spirit of the age" been changed, while "the churches and creeds," as he tells us, are much the same as in "the age of fire and sword?" The simple truth is, the people outside the church have had to "arrest" the church in its career of "fire and sword," and to compel it to advance a little in civilization. This work has been done in every age by those whom the church has called Infidels. Reformers have always been Infidels in the opinion of the church. Ingersoll is doing more of this work in our time than any other man. What wonder that he is denounced?

While the ministers and churches were laboring to prop up slavery with the Bible, they denounced Garrison and his associates as Infidels, as they now denounce Ingersoll. But when Arch deacon Farrar visited this country, and wrote an article for the North American Review on "Christian work in America," and named five persons whom he thought most conspicuous in that work during the past generation, Garrison and four of his friends were the only persons named. The wise and discreet "scribes and Pharisees" of that generation were not thought worthy of being mentioned. Is it not barely possible that same future "dean of Westminster" may come over here, and find in Ingersoll a better Christian than any of the reverend critics that now assail him?

Not content with passing judgment on Ingersoll and his audiences, Mr. Wendte goes still further out of his way to condemn the Investigator, Truth Seeker, FREETHOUGHT, and many of their readers. It is hardly probable that the reverend gentleman, when he undertook to "estimate" Colonel Ingersoll, intended to sit in judgment on so many of his fellow-citizens. But the ministerial spirit seems to have gotten the better of him, as it has often done with greater men than he.

In the early days of the Antislavery reform, the great and good Dr. Channing, in a conversation with Samuel J. May, found fault with Garrison and his associates, as Mr. Wendte now does with Ingersoll and other reformers. He acknowledged that the cause was a good one, but found fault with the "manner" of its advocates—particularly with the harshness and denunciatory language of Garrison; and added that "if more discreet men would take the lead, more good and influential men would become interested in it." Mr. May turned to him with great earnestness and said: "Dr. Channing, if the wise and discreet men, like yourself, who admit the excellence of the cause, but who only find fault with its advocates, would only come forward and lead it, there would be less reason to complain of want of wisdom in its leadership. But while you stand aloof and find fault, we have to do the best we can with the leaders we have." Dr. Channing, who was great enough to admit his fault when he saw it, paused reflectively and then said, "That is a just rebuke; I feel it deeply." From that time till his death Dr. Channing was a co-worker with Garrison and his friends. I respectfully commend the example of Dr. Channing to the Rev. Mr. Wendte.

After dealing out his judgments so liberally on the earnest workers for truth, he next proceeds to instruct us in the better way; and in this he recommends much that he saw and admired in Ingersoll at the commencement of his sermon, but which he now seems to have forgotten; and finally thinks we should be willing, after having spoken the truth, "to wait God's own time to bring it to fruition."

Whenever ministers are disturbed by the advocates of unpopular truth, they generally want them "to wait God's own time." This phrase was so common forty years ago when the Abolitionists were disturbing the repose of the churches, that it seems quite like old times to meet with it again. But the opponents of slavery thought that "God's time" was "now;" and the nation soon learned that they were right about it. That phrase that so tried our patience when uttered by sleepy ministers in those old days, I had hoped never to hear again; and certainly never expected to hear from a liberal Unitarian.

The next offense charged is that Ingersoll is bitter on the churches. Here, as in other accusations, no specifications are given. But any one, who is at all acquainted with the character of the churches, can readily imagine what might be said. The reformers of all ages have had to speak severely of the churches. None have spoken more severely than Jesus; and with such an example the professed followers of Jesus should not be too eager to complain of Ingersoll. But there are Unitarian ministers of our own time who are quite as severe as Ingersoll. Let us hear but one of them. The Rev. J. W. Chadwick, minister of the Second Unitarian church of Brooklyn, in his sermon on "The Rise of Man," says: "The morality of the church ought to shame the market, and it falls below it. A man may do that as a preacher, and still keep his pulpit, for the doing of which, as a stockbroker, he would lose his seat. Before the church can save America it must itself be saved. Before it can purify America it must itself be purified." A church of such a character should not put on airs of injured innocence when Ingersoll tells but a part of the truth about it.

Against Ingersoll's view of the value of education in redeeming the world Mr. Wendte says: "An education often makes a man all the more powerful for mischief. Those rascally churchmembers, whose frands and misdeeds Colonel Ingersoll and his school so love to adduce, probably received more aid in their villainy from their public school education than their church connection," etc.

Is it necessary to depreciate the value of our public schools, and even to uphold the Catholic view of them, in order to make out a case against Ingersoll? Before taking so dangerous a position he should read the reports of our National Bureau of Education, and learn the great value of even a little "public school education" in lessening crime. He may there learn [from nearly all the states] that "one-third of all criminals are totally uneducated; and four-fifths practically uneducated." "That the proportion of criminals from the illiterate classes is at least ten times as great as the proportion from those having some education." He will learn "that nearly one-third of the crime in New York is committed by the illiterate six-hundredth part of the population. It is too bad that, at this late day, the clergy should need instruction as to the value of our public schools. This fact is harder on the churches than any accusation of Ingersoll. And yet the ministers seem always ready to give themselves a good certificate of character. Mr. Wendte says of them, that "no vocation contains so large a number of intelligent, faithful, and self-sacrificing men."

We have seen what Mr. Chadwick thinks of them; and Henry Ward Beecher said they would "equivocate and prevaricate about their doctrines as no tradesman would be guilty of doing in regard to his wares." Theodore Parker thought they were "neither better nor worse than men in the other professions." And any one who will notice the record of ministerial offenses in the daily papers can judge for himself how much they surpass other men in morals. No one doubts that there are multitudes of good men in the church, and in the ministry; and no one with his eyes open can deny that, in every age, many—very many—of them have been corrupt, cruel, and false; and in every age, as a body, they have been persecutors, and steadily opposed to reform and human progress. With these facts, spread all over the pages of history, they should not boast too much of their own righteousness. The Yorkshireman, when urged by his minister to "self-examination," replied, "I cannot do it sir. It lifts me up so that other people have no chance." The clergy, in these days, seem to experience the same difficulty as the Yorkshireman, but do not seem as ready to confess it.

The assumption that Colonel Ingersoll does not know "what the orthodox pulpit really teaches," when so many of their sermons are scattered broadcast in the secular papers, as well as in the religious journals, is about equivalent to saying that the best posted man in America, on religious topics, does not inform himself. Such an assumption needs no answer. When a man goes into court he is bound by his own statements put on record. When ministers and churches are on trial before the public for their pernicious teachings, they are bound by what they publish to the world as a statement of their belief. We need not ask Phillips Brooks, John Hall, Heber Newton, or Dr. Duryea; we know as well as they do what their churches profess to believe. If they do not believe as they profess to believe they have another sin to answer for.

But why is a Unitarian minister so eager to have Colonel Ingersoll and his friends think well of orthodoxy? He does not believe in it himself, why should we? Why does he come to the defense of Jonathan Edwards? Ingersoll cannot hurt him. He was dead and buried long before Ingersoll was born. But when we remember to what an insane extreme that man dwelt on the "awful vengeance of God," and "the fires of hell that would course through every nerve, and vein, and artery of the damned; burning both soul and body; fire just like our fire, only that it would not consume;" and when we remember the terror he inspired by his horrible descriptions, and the agonies he brought to the hearts of mothers who were uncertain as to the fate of their children, it is difficult to conceive of language too strong to apply to him. And if he gets nothing worse than the hatred of Ingersoll in punishment for his sin, he may deem himself fortunate.

Mr. Wendte's labored effort to defend the horrible doctrines of John Calvin from the shafts of Ingersoll, to find "a noble side" to the "doctrine of hell," of "election and reprobation," and "infant damnation," seems a strange task for a liberal Unitarian. Could he not find better work to do than protecting the very worst of old errors that he does not himself believe one word of? These doctrines, so dishonoring to God, and degrading to men, have brought terror and anguish to human hearts through all the ages. If Ingersoll can do anything to dispel this horrible nightmare, and let sunshine into human hearts, in heaven's name let him do it. Unitarians can be better employed than in fighting Ingersoll while he fights error.

He next comes to the defense of the Bible. Now the difference between the Unitarian and the Ingersoll view of the Bible hardly amounts to the shadow of a shade; and yet Mr. Wendte gravely undertakes, somewhat after the orthodox fashion, to vindicate the Bible against what he assumes is Ingersoll's view of it. At first he agrees with Ingersoll in rejecting entirely the orthodox view; and then turns and praises it after the orthodox fashion. He says, "The Bible is a great book, with a wonderful history and surpassing influence."

The same may be said of half a dozen sacred scriptures; several of them much older than the Bible. He says: "Upon it have been founded states and empires, constitutions and codes." He might say with equal truth that "upon it have been founded despotism, slavery, polygamy, and the Inquisition." He says: "Three world-historic movements have sprung from it—Judaism, Christianity, and Islamism." The fact is, Judaism produced the Old Testament, and was not produced by it; Christianity produced the New Testament, and was not its offspring; Mormonism is built on the whole Bible more than either of them. In saying this there is no wish to detract, or deny anything that is genuinely good in the Bible. Many extol the Bible far above its merits, many would set it down too low. Probably Colonel Ingersoll judges of it quite as correctly as any of his critics. The Bible is finding its true position, through modern criticism, and there it must remain.

His recommendation of Emerson as a model reformer will do well enough for those who are like Emerson. But men like Ingersoll could no more work after the manner of Emerson than David could fight in the armor of Saul. Every man who is worthy of the name will preserve his own individuality. There is a diversity of gifts. Emerson did his own work in his own way, and did it grandly; no man of his time could have done it so well. Ingersoll has done, and is doing, his work, in his own way; and he too is doing it grandly; no man of our time could do it so well. His manner is his own, and his critics, fortunately, can not change it. Let them rest content; they will be celebrating his birthday one of these years, and digging marble for his monument.

J. W. NORTH.

"JOHN WARD, PREACHER."

This book is evidently written out of the heart's inspiration. Indeed, its author belongs to the Episcopalian church, and actually intended to write an orthodox novel, and, like Milton, "vindicate the ways of God to man," but when she got into the heat of her story the story mastered and swept her away upon its tide of heterodox feeling; and she was compelled by the flame of her genius to write one of the most passionate and at the same time the most thoughtful and radical attacks upon the popular religion that has been made by any book of the day.

This fact, that it is a sort of unconscious, unpremeditated attack, written by a nominal Christian, only makes it the more effective and enjoyable. The book would entertain simply as a novel. It has the sunshine of humor all the way through to relieve its sombre shades. In intellectual power, in imagination, in genius, it is fully equal to "Robert Elsmere," but it is not by any means the same kind of a book. It is written from a radically different standpoint. "Robert Elsmere" deals with history—this book deals with doctrine. "Robert Elsmere" shows the weakness of Christianity as to its historical testimony. "John Ward" is the sword of Saladin striking with shining blade at the very heart of its theology. Gladstone refused to review this book because, he said, it was not an attack upon Christianity, like "Robert Elsmere." Mr. Gladstone is a queer Christian if he thus looks at it. Voltaire, Gibbon, Thomas Paine, never made a keener onslaught upon Christian faith. This is simply an Agnostic book. The heroine becomes an Agnostic. She is more radical than Elsmere. She does not preach Jesus at all, nor immortality, nor God. She is a heathen Stoic, and accepts life with sad sincerity, relying only upon the strength of her own womanhood. The author attacks mainly hell-fire, but in attacking that her woman's heart has so overborne her that she sweeps away every vestige of doctrinal Christianity. This is an intensely human book, and only humanity maintains itself upon its burning pages. Theology goes by the board. Many Christians will read and sympathize with the book, not knowing what it really teaches.

The innate barbarity of the Christian religion was never so skillfully unveiled as in the character of John Ward—a gentle, a noble man—a lovable man in his honesty, in his sincerity, in his adoration for his wife—but made a savage man, a brute, by the overmastering demands of his diabolical creed. Yet, if Christianity is true, John Ward did the right, the wise thing. It was his duty to tear his wife from his heart and sacrifice his affection to his faith. John Ward was tremendously in earnest and accepted the whole logic of the Christian belief.

This is a most readable book. It is not what its name might betoken, a grim book, a controversial book. It is first of all a genuine story, a story of human loves and human interests, delightfully woven together, with soft and brilliant pictures of romance. It treats of real things, of real folks. Humor and tenderness mingle with the sorrows of life. The tragedy, like Shakespeare's tragedies, takes place in a world of beauty. P.

PAINE'S DEEDS RECALLED.

I had the honor of an invitation to the various displays in New York, and occupied a seat on the platform at the literary exercises that took place in front of the sub-treasury building on Wall street. I heard the eloquent oration of Mr. Depew, and I was surprised that a man who is usually so just and correct in his views and remarks should have omitted the name of Thomas Paine, and should have said nothing of the important part which he acted in the war of the Revolution. That Mr. Depew made no allusion to the political writings of Paine is indeed surprising.

Thomas Paine was one of the master spirits in the great struggle, and helped as much as any man to bring it to a successful and triumphant conclusion. This was admitted by his most distinguished contemporaries. In a letter to Richard Henry Lee, of Virginia, Washington says:

That Paine's "Common Sense" and many of his "Crisis" were well-timed and had a happy effect on the public mind, none who will turn to the epoch at which they were published will deny.

Major-Gen. Charles Lee, when "Common Sense" first appeared, wrote as follows to Washington:

Have you seen the pamphlet, "Common Sense?" I never saw such a masterly, irresistible performance. It will, if I mistake not, in concurrence with the transcendent folly and wickedness of the ministry, give the coup de grace to Great Britain. I own myself convinced by the arguments of the necessity of separation.

General Lee, speaking of the wonderful effects of Paine's writings, said that "He burst forth on the world like Jove in thunder."

Dr. Benjamin Rush, a member of Congress, and a signer of the Declaration of Independence, said:

"Common Sense" burst from the press with an effect which has rarely been produced by types and paper in any age of this country.

George Washington wrote to Paine:

ROCKY HILL, Sept. 10, 1783.

DEAR SIR: I have learned, since I have been at this place, that you are at Bordentown—whether for the sake of retirement or economy, be it for either or both, or whatever it may, I shall be exceedingly happy to see you here.

Your presence may remind Congress of your past services to this country; and if it is in my power to impress them command my best exertions with freedom, as they will be rendered cheerfully by one who entertains a lively sense of the importance of your works, and who, with much pleasure, subscribes himself, Your sincere friend, G. WASHINGTON.

Thomas Jefferson, in a letter to Paine, said:

You express a wish, in your letter, to return to America in a national ship. Mr. Dawson, who brings over the treaty, and who will present you this letter, is charged with orders to the captain of the Maryland to receive and accommodate you back, if you can be ready to depart at such short warning. You will, in general, find us returned to sentiments worthy of former times. In these it will be your glory to have steadily labored, and with as much effect as any man living. That you may live long to continue your useful labors, and reap the reward in the thankfulness of nations, is my sincere prayer. Accept the assurance of my high esteem and affectionate attachment.

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

John Adams, in a letter to Paine, said:

It has been generally propagated through this continent that I wrote the pamphlet "Common Sense." I could not have written anything so manly and in so striking a style.

JOHN ADAMS.

George Washington again writes to Paine:

A few more such flaming arguments as were exhibited at Falmouth and Norfolk, added to the sound doctrine and unanswerable reasoning contained in the pamphlet "Common Sense," will not leave numbers at a loss to decide on the propriety of a separation.

Again Thomas Jefferson writes:

No writer has exceeded Paine in ease and familiarity of style, in perspicuity of expression, happiness of elucidation, and in simple and unassuming language.

James Monroe says, in writing to Paine:

It is not necessary for me to tell you how much all your countrymen—I speak of the great mass of the people—are interested in your welfare. They have not forgotten the history of their own Revolution and the difficult scenes through which they passed. The crime of ingratitude has not yet stained, and I trust never will stain, our national character. You are considered by them as not only having rendered important services to our own Revolution, but as being, on a more extensive scale, the friend of human rights. To the welfare of Thomas Paine the Americans are not, nor can they be, indifferent.

JAMES MONROE.

Thomas Paine was always on the side of human freedom. He spent the greater part and the best part of his life in defense of the rights of man. If he committed errors in life they were on the side of humanity. Read the history of his life, and the part he took in the war of the Revolution, and you will concur with me that the man never lived to whom we are under greater obligations for the success of our glorious independence, and the liberty which we now enjoy.

The American Revolution was a great epoch in the history of human freedom, in which Thomas Paine took such a conspicuous part. It elevated man to a higher, nobler, and surer plane of liberty. And the history of our country cannot be written with the name of Thomas Paine left out.

Mr. Depew did great injustice to the memory of Thomas Paine when he left his name out of his great centennial oration.—HON. A. SCHELL, in the New York Sun.

A SYMPOSIUM ON EVOLUTION.

In the Edinburgh Review for April, 1888, in the course of an unfavorable criticism of the Life and Work of the late Charles Darwin, these words occur:

Darwinism grew up like Jonah's gourd, and like that same climbing plant it is destined to wither. For the overwhelming majority of men of common sense amongst us desire to uphold morality, to strengthen conscience, and to develop the higher qualities of our human nature, and when they at length wake up to the full meaning of that to which they have too hastily adhered, they will with no less speed utterly discard it. Nor will they want leaders among the men of science of the future. Pure Darwinism has had its day; it is becoming "old fashioned," and, like every other heresy, has given birth to children destined to be its destroyers.

When I read these words, it seemed to me that the writer was either entirely mistaken in his view of the passing away of Darwinism, or had greatly exaggerated its decadence among scientific men. Neither was it the theory of "natural selection," nor any subordinate hypothesis in the system of Darwin, which the reviewer had in mind exclusively, but he evidently intended to give the impression that the whole scientific position commonly associated with the name of Darwin is being slowly but surely abandoned by naturalists. To find out whether this view of modern scientific thought was correct or not, I took the liberty to address half a dozen eminent scholars in this department, selected at random from American colleges. I called their attention to this article from the Edinburgh Review, especially the words I have quoted, and asked their opinion on this question of fact: Is there a tendency among scientific men to abandon the general theory of evolution, or the subordinate theory of natural selection? In other words, what is the consensus of opinion on this subject? Let it be remembered that the gentlemen who so kindly replied to my inquiries, with the liberty of making public their views, were speaking only of this question of fact, and not of their own opinion of the truthfulness of Darwin's theories.

From Prof. Benjamin K. Emerson, Amherst College, Amherst, Mass.

Professor Tyler and I have certainly heard nothing which could give rise to such a statement. And I still think it true that the great majority of naturalists, ourselves included, think that evolution has come to stay.

From Prof. Othniel C. Marsh, Yale College, New Haven, Conn.

When the second half of the century began, the accumulation of scientific knowledge was sufficient for the foundation of a doctrine of evolution which no authority could suppress and no objections overthrow. The material on which it was to be based was not preserved alone in the great centers of scientific thought, but a thousand quiet workers in science, many of them in remote localities, had now the facts before them to suggest a solution of that mystery of mysteries, the origin of species.

In the first decade of the present half-century, Darwin, Wallace, Huxley, and Spencer were all at the same time working at one problem, each in his own way, and their united efforts have firmly established the truth of organic evolution.

If, however, I may venture to answer briefly the question, What of evolution to-day? I can only reply: the battle has been fought and won. A few stragglers on each side may still keep up a scattered fire, but the contest is over, and the victors have moved on to other fields.

As to the origin of species, once thought to be the key to the position, no working naturalist of to-day, who sees the great problems of life opening one after another before him, will waste time in discussing a question already solved. This question, so long regarded as beyond solution, has been worked out by that greatest of naturalists, whose genius all intelligent men now recognize, and whose recent loss the whole civilized world deplores.

In this [Embryology and Palæontology], and all other departments of natural science, the doctrine of evolution has brought light out of darkness, and marks out the path of future progress. What the law of gravitation is to astronomy, the law of evolution is now to natural science. Evolution is no longer a theory, but a demonstrated truth, accepted by naturalists throughout the world.

From Prof. Henry S. Williams, Cornell College, Ithaca, N. Y.

In reply to your questions I may say that I am of the opinion that the majority of scientific thinkers to-day believe that there has been a gradual progressive evolution in the history of the organisms that have appeared on the earth. And that during this evolution the principle of "natural selection" has had a considerable effect in determining the survival of those organisms which have survived.

From Prof. Frederick G. Wright, Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio.

Your letter of inquiry concerning some points respecting Darwinism was awaiting me on my return from a short trip in the Sioux Reservation west of the Missouri River in Dakota, where the interests both of missions and of science were subserved in the same expedition. I can do little more now with the time at my command than to give you hastily the impressions regarding the subject which possess my mind. I should say:

That the majority of naturalists now do accept some theory of evolution.

That they have been led to this position largely by Darwin's influence.

That few scientific men would accept all of Darwin's subsidiary theories. But—

That the theory of natural selection is received as shedding great light on the processes of evolution, and that it is not likely ever to be discarded.

From Prof. William North Rice, Wesleyan University, Middletown, Ct.

First as to evolution in general. There has been no ebbing and no halting in the tide of opinion toward evolution. If scientific men say less about evolution than fifteen years ago, it is at least in part because they no longer think it worth while to discuss a question on which they are all agreed. The scientific men who do not believe in evolution are merely individual exceptions. Scientific men do discuss the methods and limits of evolution, but the truth of the evolution theory in general they simply take for granted. No scientific society would care to hear an argument for evolution, for the subject has passed that stage.

In regard to natural selection the history has been different. When the "Origin of Species" was first published, it was so vastly more reasonable than any other evolutionist work that had ever appeared, that men took it for granted for a while that natural selection was the only form of evolutionary theory that was worth considering. Evolutionists all believed in natural selection as the one all-important law. Anti-evolutionists thought any objection they could bring against natural selection was an objection to evolution in general. This state of things changed in time, and a school of evolutionists arose who relegated natural selection to a comparatively subordinate position among the known and unknown laws concerned in evolution. That natural selection is a true principle in nature I think no one has ever doubted who really understood what natural selection means. The only question is in regard to the limits of its efficiency, and the degree of its importance relatively to other laws known or unknown. My own belief is that at present the tide of opinion is setting in the direction of a higher estimate of the importance of natural selection.

From Prof. Lucien M. Underwood, Syracuse University, Syracuse, N. Y.

In reply, then, to your two questions, more specifically I would say that, as far as America is concerned, the doctrine of derivation of species, which is one important branch of the doctrine of evolution, is generally believed by scientific workers. So far as I know the English and German schools of science, the same is true there. Dr. J. W. Dawson, of Montreal (McGill college), is the only man of prominence as a scientist in this country, so far as I know, who opposes the doctrine. Among leading scientists who favor it are, among geologists, Joseph LeConte (University of California), Alexander Winchell (University of Michigan), J. D. Dana (Yale), N. S. Shaler (Harvard), J. S. Newberry (Columbia), W. N. Rice (Wesleyan); among zoologists, A. S. Packard (Brown University), A. E. Verrill (Yale), Alpheus Hyatt (Boston Institute of Technology), Alexander Agassiz (Harvard), D. S. Jordan and J. S. Kingsley (University of Indiana), S. A. Forbes (University of Illinois), B. G. Wilder (Cornell), W. K. Brooks (Johns Hopkins), H. N. Martin (Johns Hopkins), S. F. Clark (Williams), H. W. Conn (Wesleyan), E. B. Wilson (Byrn Mawr), C. V. Riley (United States Department of Agriculture), R. Ridgeway (United States Museum), etc.; among botanists, G. L. Goodale and W. G. Farlow (Harvard), N. L. Britton (Columbia), J. M. Coulter (Wabash College), V. M. Spaulding (University of Michigan), J. C. Arthur (Purdue University), C. R. Barnes (University of Wisconsin), C. E. Bessey (University of Nebraska), B. D. Halsted (Iowa Agricultural College), etc.; among palæontologists, O. C. Marsh (Yale), E. D. Cope (Philadelphia, Pa.), L. F. Ward (United States National Museum), etc.; among anthropologists, E. S. Morse (Salem, Mass.), F. W. Putnam (Salem, Mass.), J. W. Powell (United States Geological Survey), O. T. Mason (United States National Museum), etc.

There may be many teachers of zoology or botany, etc., in colleges like ———, for instance, where the ideas of science work in college and scientific teaching are those of half a century ago, who still hold to the old doctrine in regard to the matter. As they are not practical workers, and, consequently, never publish anything, and almost never meet with scientific bodies, nothing is known of their beliefs, and their opinions usually amount to as much as those of any other parrots.—REV. J. A. FAULKNER in Christian Union.

It is expected that President Harrison will shortly promulgate a general order abolishing Sunday morning inspections in the army. There is some doubt, in the minds of officers in command, about the moral influence of Sunday idleness upon the soldiers.

CONCEPTIONS OF DEITY.

The effect of the word god upon man has been chiefly to create feelings of fear and actions of folly and cruelty. Man stands before the unknown with awe and dread. That is instinctive, because the result of experience. The savage looks upon the blackness of night with apprehension. His eyes, which in the light foretell him of danger, cannot pierce it, and a wild beast or an enemy may spring upon him defenseless. The rain wets him, the cold pinches him, the storm breaks great branches from the trees and hurls them upon him; even the usually kindly sun has times of fierce, raging heat; every force of nature which touches him has its unkindness and cruelty, and as long as he does not understand these forces he fears them, dreading injury. It seems to man at times as if the forces of nature were hostile, and were trying to kill him. In the end they do kill him. That is one side of it. The other side is that nature keeps him alive and gives him forces to fight with, and that using them he enjoys the fight at times, and wins on the whole, and keeps winning.

But when the savage makes a god, his first god, his father's ghost, as he does not know much about it, for he cannot see it, and does not know just where it is, or what it is doing, he is rather afraid of it. He offers it food and clothing, and a fire, and anything else that he thinks it needs—through what feeling? Affection? Partly, no doubt, but affection quickly fades, and the offerings are continued much more through fear, for the ghost may injure him. His imagination endows the creation of his imagination with extraordinary powers. It is unseen, like the wind, but the wind is strong. The ghost may keep the deer from his arrow, or the fish from his hook, or breathe hot fever on him, or stir up his enemies to attack him. His general state of mind is fear lest he offend it.

Much more, if it be a chief ghost, of yet greater power—a lord of battles, like Jehovah, very jealous and merciless to his enemies—can the prevailing feeling with which he is regarded be anything but fear?

And the usual feeling toward the Christian God has not been greatly different. Jesus taught that he was a god of love, but the Augustinian and Calvinistic theology did not leave much of that quality in him. The doctrine of predestination, that God selected a few individuals for eternal happiness (though rather a starved and uncomfortable sort of happiness to our notion) and condemned the rest of the world to eternal torture in flame, could not but excite the direst apprehension, and we must not forget that it was Jesus who taught that his god of love would do this very thing; that he would separate the sheep from the goats, and that the latter would depart into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels.

Is not the feeling of Christians about their god to-day chiefly one of fear? Does not the Christian mother teach her child that if it does wrong God will be displeased and make it sick, or even kill it? And the child, if it be at all sensitive or imaginative, will look up at the sky, where it is told that God lives, a great crushing something which seems all around it, and makes its heart beat and its breath flutter; or an eye seems to be looking sternly from the darkness, and the child hides its head to shut it out.

And, when older, when men and women, it is the sentiment of fear that is chiefly appealed to, to induce us to become disciples of this God, to join his church. Sam Jones threatens Protestants with hell fire, fresh and hot, and plenty of it, and a creeping forever through chambers of darkness, and other fictions of his fertile brain; and the Catholic church never lets purgatory and hell out of the sight of its members, and ever presents itself as the representative of God, to threaten or punish, grant or withhold forgiveness, and determine salvation. The personal qualities of the Hebrew Jehovah still cling to the Christian God. He is jealous and angry, and must be praised and prayed to constantly or ill will come of it. Theologians lay it down learnedly and philosophically in their articles, that God has "neither body, parts, or passions," but they constantly contradict that conception in the pulpit, where God has a great deal of passion and mental qualities (which are a part of the body) that are by no means creditable.

This feeling of fear with which man has usually regarded his God has led him constantly into foolish, pitiful, cruel, and useless acts. Can anything be more useless and absurd than to offer food and clothes to a ghost, an airy spirit from the fancy wrought? Or blood, or incense, or oil and wine to a god who can have no senses, and cannot eat or taste, or do anything with these uselessly wasted things?

And what infinite cruelties have been committed in the name of God! Rivers of human blood have flowed around altars, bodies have been tortured with every art that ingenuity could devise, minds have been kept upon the rack of uncertainty and apprehension for years, lives have been wasted in useless penances and ascetism; the whole human family has suffered agonies untold because of this imaginary creature—God. If to-day the name were rejected from the vocabulary of nations, the name and the idea, and the religious beliefs consequent upon it, it would confer an incalculable benefit on mankind. If man were compelled to endure for the future what he has endured because of this name in the past, and is still suffering to-day, it would be a sad outlook for the world.

It is said that Edgar Saltus, the author, being asked lately, "What is your favorite character in fiction?" replied, "God." The witticism may seem audacious, but it strikes straight at the heart of a great imposition. The history of the word God shows that the thing signified by it has been a gigantic sham. This idol of the imagination has lacked life quite as much as idols of wood or stone. He does not sit in the heavens, he does not punish men now or hereafter, he does not want to be praised or prayed to. You need not be afraid of him; for there is no such He. When you try to express the infinite in any likeness to humanity, bodily or mental, you are trying to put the universe into a pint bottle. You are attempting an impossibility. If man will rid himself of this nightmare God, which has oppressed him, he will breathe more freely, see more clearly, think more calmly, and act more reasonably.

HERBERT MILLER.

OREGON STATE CONVENTION.

To the Liberals of Oregon:

The members of the Silverton Secular Union, of Silverton, Oregon, hereby cordially invite all the Liberals of Oregon to meet with them in mass convention at Silverton, June 22 and 23, 1889, for the purpose of organizing a state association on the basis of the Demands of Liberalism, to co-operate with the American Secular Union. The association thus formed is to represent no intellectual creed, but simply equal rights and impartial liberty. It is to be organized in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the words of General Grant—"Keep the church and state forever separate."

All in favor of these great ends, so necessary to the preservation of Republican and Democratic institutions, are solicited to be present for fraternal co-operation. In union there is strength.

J. W. McCLURE, President of Silverton Secular Union.
R. D. ALLEN, Secretary,
MRS. CARRIE FITZGERELL,	} Executive Committee.
H. D. MOUNT,
E. WOLFARD,

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.

The honor of being the pioneer in the total abstinence movement in the United States has been claimed for the Bennington (Vt.) Journal of the Times, printed in 1827; but Judge Thomas Hertell, of the Marine Court of New York, a radical Free-thinker, an Atheist, came out in favor of total abstinence as early as 1818, in a large pamphlet entitled, "An Expose of the Causes of Intemperance and the Means by Which it May be Obviated." He also wrote and published other documents advocating the principles, with his characteristic earnestness and fearlessness. The reason that his name is not more widely known in connection with the early history of the Temperance Reform may be found in the fact of his opposition to Sunday laws and other puritanical legislation, and his advocacy of his "Infidel" views. He did not believe that the cause of temperance could be promoted by legislation, but he had great faith in argument, persuasion, and example.—B. F. UNDERWOOD.

OBSERVATIONS.

Still the meetings grow in size, and still the interest augments. Mr. Putnam's lecture last Sunday evening drew a full house to hear the speaker's opinion about "Liberty and Authority." The exercises opened with a zither duet by the Misses Haelke of Oakland. Whenever these young ladies perform a piece before an audience, the excellence of the first always secures a unanimous call for another. There is something peculiarly inspiring in the music of the zither. It has an awakening effect which no silver bell calling the waiting boarder to a late breakfast can equal. The listener feels it in his wrists where the radial arteries betray the afflux of the vital fluid. There are also various other nervous phenomena connected with it which I might describe, but when two pretty girls and two responsive zithers are in conjunction, it is best to let phenomena rest and resign ourselves to the pleasures of sight and hearing.

The quartette followed with so fine a song that the applause evoked by the first stanza was hushed only by the beginning of the second. The three ladies have fine voices, one singing the soprano, another the alto, and the third the tenor parts, while Mr. Hannaford occupies a background of deep bass. Better vocal music than is afforded by this quartette could scarcely be heard in the city.

So the opening exercises passed off pleasantly, and President Childstrom introduced the lecturer, who, as before mentioned, spoke on "Liberty and Authority." Mr. Putnam made a strong plea for liberty of thought as opposed to the authority of traditions, or Bibles, or ecclesiastics. Even science could not set itself up as authority and enforce its teachings upon those who felt that they had good reason for rejecting them. But while throwing aside the authority of all these we could not free ourselves from their influence. The past must always exert its influence upon us, and according as it influences us we lean toward certain beliefs, which become convictions if approved by reason. The discourse was full of striking points calculated to engender thought by addressing the intellect more than to excite enthusiasm through the emotions. Nevertheless the applause was frequent and hearty. Whenever I hear Mr. Putnam address an audience nowadays, my mind always reverts to his advent as a Freethought lecturer in New York, where he read his remarks in a sermonizing way to a half dozen people who attended more to encourage him than for any other purpose. And it is gratifying to see the speaker improve as the cause grows; to see the manuscript discarded; the orator at home upon the platform, and the audience multiplied by a hundred. It is encouraging even though we realize that the orator must chase three recreant buttons and a latchkey about the recesses of his wealthiest pocket in order to catch a nickel.

After the lecture the members of the Freethought Society held a business meeting. When this society was organized, it installed Professor Miller as stated lecturer or teacher. The professor was to devote himself to the work of organizing and collecting means for the support of the meetings, out of which means he should be authorized to retain one hundred dollars per month for his services. Some of the members were inclined to doubt that so large a sum could be raised, but Professor Miller was sanguine and wished a chance to try. At the end of a month the professor had joined the doubters, and reported a feeling prevalent among Liberals that one hundred dollars a month was more than the cause could bear at the start. He had been able to collect but eighty-six, and the prospect for that amount the following month was not bright.

Upon motion the treasurer was instructed to make up to Professor Miller the $14 deficit, and he was released from his engagement. Professor Miller thanked the members for their generosity, as he did not feel that the society owed him anything or that he had any claim upon it. Everything was harmonious. The professor will probably resume his work as teacher, lecturing only as freedom from other engagements will permit. The society had grown greatly attached to its lecturer, whose scholarly addresses have contained much instructive matter. The experiment proves, however, that the tastes of San Francisco Liberals run toward short speeches and discussions, after the fashion of other Liberal Societies, and the programme will be changed accordingly.

Several new names were added to the roll of the society, which now has a membership of nearly sixty, and the meeting adjourned for a week.

This is a tolerably busy season for the Secular pilgrim. Last Sunday afternoon he addressed the Mediums' meeting on Market street. I was not present, but Mr. J. A. Williams, who attended, reports that Putnam was afraid of hurting somebody's feelings, and so did not let himself out, while his auditors appeared to be suspicious that his remarks contained some sort of spiritual heresy, and repressed their enthusiasm. A medium present affirmed that Mr. Putnam was inspired by Dr. Benjamin Rush, whose spirit was plainly visible near the speaker. The Pilgrim left San Francisco Monday afternoon for Boulder Creek, where he spoke that evening and the two following. The next three nights he is announced at Santa Cruz, Sunday afternoon at San Jose, and Sunday evening in Union Square Hall, San Francisco.

My very much esteemed friend, Mr. Thomas Curtis, of this city, contributes the appended poem on unbelief. The writing of poetry I have generally regarded as a weakness incident to youth and inexperience, and so believing I have looked forward to the time when I should have outgrown the habit. Mr. Curtis is well along toward three score and ten, and the fact that he still retains the poetic faculty shows that when a man has once been to Parnassus the mountain is likely to come to him off and on during the term of his natural life:

UNBELIEF.

Whenever a priest with a solemn face
Stands up to preach in a holy place,
And says that God damns sinners' souls,
By roasting over red-hot coals,
If they don't believe that three is one,
In spite of multiplication—
And mathematics cannot conceive it—
Don't you believe it.

When he tells the story of Adam and Eve;
That the serpent both of them did deceive,
And all the world was left forlorn
Five thousand years before they were born;
Eating an apple the cause, no doubt,
For which the devil will bowl us out;
At the risk of being damned if you don't receive it,
Don't you believe it.

If he says that God has planned a way,
By hiring priests to preach and pray,
To pluck poor sinners out of the flame,
If they'll only believe this Christian game;
That the killing of Christ is the only road
By which we can reach the divine abode,
And no one else can ever achieve it,
Don't you believe it.

Although he may shout and rant and rave,
And frighten the timid he comes to save,
Until they're ready to pay the scamp
For a chance to take this heavenly tramp,
And each one feels himself a cheat,
Or a celestial dead beat;
However cunningly they weave it,
Don't you believe it.

But when some man without pretense
Makes an appeal to common sense,
And says God stands at the open door
Of heaven, alike for rich and poor,
That human brotherhood remains
In spite of sorrow, sins, and pains;
Even if you don't perceive it
You may safely believe it.

Christ was only an earnest man,
Trying to find some useful plan
By which the poor might hold their own
Against the knaves with power o'ergrown.
For then, as now, the truth was writ,
"Scribe and Pharisee, hypocrite."
This gospel's true, so do not leave it,
But preach and believe it. —THOMAS CURTIS.

I am always pleased to hear from the preachers, even though

I cannot do much to help them. A city clergyman writes thus, addressing the undersigned:

To you as a beloved member of my flock, greeting in the Lord!
Three years have elapsed since our infant church held its first Palm Sunday and Easter service, and the Lord that was with us in the beginning is with us still in the precious fulfilment of all His promises. Again we greet King Jesus in the joy of his triumph; may all our hearts be brought completely beneath the sway of his sceptre. Our church is unfinished and a debt of about $3,696 on the building forbids all hope of its completion. In the name of the Lord our Helper, this obstacle must be removed; this promissory note (so kindly given) must be cremated. Let me preach you a little sermon which blessed of the Lord will not bring little results.

The writer here drops into figures that show his church wants money, and he gives several reasons why I should subscribe something; the last of which I quote:

Death is on our track, and do we not want to see the completion of this mansion of our Father's house on earth before our eyes rest with rapture upon the heaven-built walls?

Our author further solicits my name on his subscription books, as the Lord has prospered me. These are his closing words:

Now this is what I ask you to do, and I will promise to work with all my might, not accepting any vacation till the church is completed, and besides will pledge myself to get from persons outside the church enough money to put the plastering on the entire auditorium, and besides will try to do as much as last year in getting help from our friends outside our membership. Read, meditate, pray. Your faithful servant in the gospel,
OLIVER C. MILLER, Pastor of First Lutheran Church.

This is the second time since I came to San Francisco that I have been asked to assist the church. Last year a brace of black-hooded sisters called to inquire if I could not spare them something to help pay the taxes on their institution. I declined then, and I may as well say now that it will be useless for others to come here or to address me for similar purposes. The rapure of resting my eyes on the "heaven-built walls" will be just as great if I never see the First Lutheran church completed, and I am not going into any scheme that will deprive the Rev. Mr. Miller of his vacation. If there is any time when pastor and people are happy it is when the preacher goes off on his annual toot. M.

INTERNATIONAL FREETHOUGHT CONGRESS IN PARIS.

The General Council of the International Federation of Free-thinkers, and the Committee of Organization, elected last year at Paris, issue a notice announcing that the Universal Congress of Freethinkers will be held in Paris, from 15th to 22d of September, 1889. Communications or inquiries may be addressed to the secretaries of the General Council, Emile Gorissen, 150 Rue Rogier, Brussels; Napoleon Navez, 323 Rue de la Province (Nord), Antwerp; or to the secretary treasurer of the Paris Committee, E. Pasquier, 6 Rue de Jarente, Paris.

BOOKS.

We have for sale at this office, among other works:

"John Ward, Preacher." $1.50.

"Yone Santo," see advertisement.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible." 15 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Annual" for 1889. 25 cents.

"Liberty and Morality," by W. S. Bell. 15 cents.

"The System of Nature," by Baron D'Holbach. $2.

"Robert Elsmere," by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Price, 50 cents.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

Judge Maguire's "Ireland and the Pope," a history of papal intrigues against Irish liberty. Price, 50 cents.

Taylor's "Diegesis," by the Rev. Robert Taylor. A discovery of the Origin, Evidences, and early history of Christianity. $2.

"Looking Backward," a socialistic romance which has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of Industrial Slavery, by Edward Bellamy. Price, 50 cents.

Commendation.

To the Editors of Freethought:

"The Helping Hand" in the issue of May 11 was quite a surprise to me. I didn't think the paper was a source of much profit to its publishers or more than paid expenses; but that its publication absorbed all the earnings of Mr. Putnam, notwithstanding which its continuance was still a loss to you, was a revelation I was unprepared for. I am glad you have come out as you did and made the condition of things known, otherwise I would never have been any wiser. As patrons of the paper, we have a right to know of its troubles. The paper must never go down. It would be a lasting disgrace to all Freethinkers to allow it. All honor due to the big-hearted Liberals who so generously came to the rescue. Their names deserve to be published; we all want to know who they are. Under the circumstances I will never accept the paper at club rates. I owe to it 75 cents which I will send with the very first remittance.

I am unable at present to join in the guarantee fund, but will bear in mind what I owe Liberalism, and as soon as possible will be found ready and willing to do my whole duty to the cause of Freethought.

In the early spring I thought I would be unable to renew my subscription, but you kindly proposed to continue me the paper, for which please accept my doubly given thanks. I remain yours,
Fresno, Cal.

L. FOURNIER.

Women Should Vote.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In FREETHOUGHT of April 20 appears an article entitled "Shall Women Vote," by "J. C. P.," in which he quotes a remark of mine, "When a national Sunday law is passed, America is doomed," and adds that I "may rest assured that when women are enfranchised, a national Sunday law will be passed, and whatever other laws may be needed for the establishment and maintenance of churches, and to compel absolute submission to church authority." I do not think myself that the majority of women are qualified to vote at present. They have had no experience in that line, and have paid but very little attention to politics. They must be educated; they must be evolved up to the position that men now occupy in political thinking, and the best way to set them to thinking on this subject is to get them interested, and the best way to get them interested is to allow them to vote. No doubt they may make some great mistakes in voting—men have done the same—but they will become wiser by experience. Women as a majority may vote for church and state, as "J. C. P." says, but should they be debarred of their natural rights for fear they will vote unwisely? No, no. It is just and right that they should vote. It is just and right that women should stand side-by-side with men—co-equal in all mental achievements. Of course woman is not equal to man in physical strength, but nevertheless she is equal in mental capacity. It is only education and environment that makes the majority of women appear as though they are intellectually inferior to men. It would make women in general more independent and intellectual if they were given equal rights. I am glad, though, that women did not vote at our last presidential election, for no doubt they would have been held accountable for "our" present "pious administration." I agree perfectly with W. S. Bush, of Seattle, W. T., and I read his able article in FREETHOUGHT of April 27 with much appreciation. Yours for justice and progress,

ELVA E. DAVIDSON.

Oswego, Or.

Women and Politics.

To the Editors of Freethought:

It is gratifying to learn (as a FREETHOUGHT correspondent informs us) that "conservative Protestants and many of the Catholic clergy oppose woman's enfranchisement." It is to be hoped that this opposition springs from patriotic motives and common sense, and that it is based upon the great fundamental principle—namely, "The law of nature pervading the law of the land."

If it will not be filling too much of your valuable space with individual opinions, perhaps the following "bad-rock" reasons for opposition to woman suffrage may be worthy of notice:

First, Because sovereignty is the life principle of all governments—a self-sustaining power which rests upon the strong arms and physical strength of men, and men only. Or, as Alexander Stephens defines it,

"Sovereignty is that innate attribute of power, which corresponds with the will and power of self-action, and is by its very nature indivisible."

Second, Because the dependence and helplessness of women and children constitute the weakness of the land, and the ballot in the hands of weakness would be a mockery and a sham.

Third, Because the division of "paramount authority," or a surrender of law-making power to incompetent, unwilling, and irresponsible persons, or to that mischievous class of women known as the "W. C. T. U.," backed by the "clergy," would inevitably result in revolution and a "reign of terror," or render our government such as Alexander Hamilton once predicted it would be, "A frail and worthless fabric."

And finally, Because the true and sensible women of our country, knowing their weakness, and looking to the stronger sex (as they should do) for protection and support, do not ask for prerogatives and authority which they have no power to sustain.

When these political propositions have been refuted, it will be soon enough for others of a moral and social nature.

J. C. P.

Turlock, Cal.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURES.

Boulder Creek, May 20, 21, 22,	Fresno Flats, June 1, 2, 3,
Santa Cruz, May 23, 24, 25,	Hornitos, June 4,
San Francisco, May 26,	New Sanel, June 6, 7,
Raymond, May 28,	Ukiah, June 8, 9, 10,
Grub Gulch, May 29, 30, 31,	Covelo, June 13, 14, 15, 16.

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality, as such, shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely Secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

The Average Man.

A type-writer girl thus expresses herself in the Indianapolis Journal: "I get sick of men and their ways. They are messy; they sling paper all over the office, and loiter about on the desks and chairs in such undignified attitudes. They smoke and chew. We have fourteen drummers who come into our office, and only one of the fourteen has ever had the courtesy to ask me if cigar smoke is offensive to me. Then, they are silly; they talk such nonsense as sixteen-year old girls wouldn't be guilty of. It is all about neckties, new hats, ballets, good dinners, and so on. If you think man is the superior animal, you just spend some time in a business office with assorted sizes of him, and you will see. I am beginning to believe that a trashy dime novel is better society than the average man, and equally improving."

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

FOR SALE

An interest in a Factory for manufacturing
The Best Fanning Mill
On the Coast.

Upward of $5,000 invested in Patent
Right, Factory, and Stock. Ready sales and large profits.

WANTED: A man to take an active part in the business—a splendid chance
for an energetic man—a Liberal preferred.

We refer you to S. P. Putnam, editor,
who is personally acquainted with us.

Address, Box 269,
East Portland, Or.

"MODERN THOUGHT,"

—Devoted to the—

SPIRITUALIZATION OF HUMANITY,

Published Monthly by
CHARLES FILLMORE,

JOURNAL BUILDING, KANSAS CITY, MO.
$1 Per Year—Sample Copy Free.

Christian Science, Metaphysical, Theosophical,
Spiritual, and all kinds of reform literature
for sale.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mill.
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm " " "Diamond" 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy.
Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,

PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN AHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS,
the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author.
Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Farmer John's Soliloquy.

I mout as well acknowledge, 'taint no use o'
beatin' round,
I've done a heap o' thinkin', plowin' up this faller ground,
An' suthin's been a painin' an' achin' me like sin—

I reckoned 'twas dyspepsy or malarly creepin' in.

At last I got my dander up, an' to myself sez I,
The biggest fool in natur's him that tells hisself
a lie;

I've been lettin' on 'tis malarly, an' my stummick, when I know

It's my conscience that's a hurtin' an' worryin' me so.

I've been a shirkin' this here thing for thirty years or more,

An' I orto had this shakin' up an' settlin' down afore.

I've been honest fur as payin' goes, not a penny
do I owe,

But the kind o' cheatin' that I done was the kind that didn't show.

My mind goes back to Hanner, when I fetched her here a bride—

No apple bloom was sweeter, an' she nussed to my side

Like she thought she had a right to, an' could trust me without fear,

For the love I never hinted at for more'n thirty year.

There was churnin', bakin', bilin', there was nussin' an' the rest,

From long afore the sun riz 'till he slumbered in the west,

An' when the rest of us was done, an' lollin'
round on cheers,

Hanner was recuperatin' with her needle an' her shears.

But when the life was ebbin' from that faithful, patient heart,

I had to face the music—I hadn't done my part;
An' I couldn't help a-thinkin', watchin' out that weary life,

That there's other ways o' killin' 'cept a pistol or a knife.

It sounds like sacreligion, but I knew just what she meant,

As I whispered, "Fly to meet me when my airthly life is spent,"

"I'm tired, John, so tired, but I've allus done
my best,

An' I may feel more like flyin' when I've had a spell o' rest."

—AMY HAMILTON.

A Popular Jail.

According to the Santa Cruz Surf the jail at that town is so popular that men climb over the fence to get in. It says: "When the prisoners were fed yesterday morning there were ten. During the day there were nine and later in the afternoon there were ten. An investigation was made. The tenth man was discovered to be a tramp, who climbed into the jail at meal times and went out again after getting a full stomach. This, connected with the fact that a man incarcerated for being a common drunk, and the fact that a man in jail for beating his wife, having had a quarrel with a fellow-prisoner, climbed out and went a mile to the sheriff's house in the dead of night to tell the sheriff that the other fellow had punched him in the stomach, will make our jail famous."

BRIGHT boy (to visiting pastor): "Now try it on me. Ma says you can put any one to sleep in five minutes."

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California
that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all
the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmermann, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street.

Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.

G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our pres-ent system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought,
and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated, "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him.
Price, 15 cents.

Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC
SCHOOLS.—THE NEW
AMERICAN PARTY,

A Criticism by "Jefferson."

Price, 10 cents.

Address

PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address, Putnam & Macdonald

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc, worth $35 for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see next column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.'"

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and a NEW FEATURE, just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Fellows' Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25. Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50; difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Temperance and Prohibition, THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics

Cloth, 75 cts.

Address this office

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

Morning in San Luis Obispo.

The New York evening Post has a correspondent in California named Harriet Winthrop Waring, who writes from San Luis Obispo as follows: "The morning was like a virgin, newly waked, fresh, tender, dewy, and golden fair. Its breath grew fragrant and warm under the kisses of the sun, its whole heart throbbed and stirred. The earth was filled with movement, flutter, incense, and rapture. Who would sleep while such things wake?" Turn on the hose!

PRECAUTION: First deacon—Have you ever heard the Rev. Mr. Goodman, who exchanges pulpits with our pastor to-day? Second deacon—No. First deacon—Well, I have. I think, Brother Passbasket, we'd better vary our regular custom this morning and take up the collection before the sermon.—Chicago Tribune.

THE "religious destitution" of the United States army has roused the sympathy of the Baptist Mission Society. It is to be hoped the Western troops will be well supplied with tracts as soon as possible, as they are very handy in lighting pipes from a camp-fire.—Post.

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors. DR. FELLOWS.

Wm. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor.

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY.

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

TELEPHONE No. 655

P. O. CHILSTROM,

(Rogers & Chilstrom.)

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Commercial Business and Collections a Specialty.

Office, 415 Montgomery St., Rooms 9, 10 & 11,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.

OLIVER HUNCKLEY - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

Devoted to Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.

HUGH-O. PENTECOST, Editor.

Contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday Addresses of the Editor before Unity Congregation.

It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.

Its columns are open for the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.

Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription one dollar.

Sample copies free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe."

Address
Twentieth Century Publishing Co.,
No. 4 Warren street, New York.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY
NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,
NURSEYRMEN.

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit
and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.

Special Attention Given to Planting
and Caring of Orchards
and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal

THE teacher in a Sunday-school once asked a little girl what would happen if she broke one of the ten commandments. "There would then be but nine," was the prompt reply.

A MAN pre-empted a claim down in the eastern end of this state in the so-called "rain belt," lived, or rather existed, on it a year, subsisting on what he could lay his hands on and using cattle chips for fuel. Thoroughly disgusted with the outlook he vamoosed the ranch a few weeks ago. One of his neighbors, not knowing of his departure, went on a visit to him the other day and found the shanty tenantless and the following announcement tacked on the door: "300 miles to wood, 300 feet to water, 10 miles to hell." "God bless our home."—Greeley, Col., Sun.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puitan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald

504 Kearny st. San Francis

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA.

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or The Infidel Teacher 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENER,

Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

YONE SANTO,

A Child of Japan.

BY E. H. HOUSE.

The Book that the American Missionary Society tried to Suppress, but Didn't."

A Splendid Story, and an Unsparing Exposure of the Missionary Business in Japan.

PRICE, 50 CENTS.

PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 304 Kearny Street, San Francisco.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton, Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology. Price, 50 cents.

Christianity Condensed.

Heaven is the home of an orthodox ring.
Where a divine enigma reigns as king,
Where whitewashed souls from this mundane shore,
Shall sing hallelujah forever more.

Hell is a boiling brimstone pit,
Where poor damned souls forever sit,
And burn, and bake, and roast, and fry,
And are gnawed by worms that never die.

Mankind may avoid that fiery flood
By bathing within the Nazarene's blood,
They can find it where tickets for heaven are sold,
Then walk over hell on a bridge of gold.

No Atheist, Infidel, Pagan, or Jew
Shall ever acquire the precious boon;
None but an orthodox rosewater few
Shall dance with the angels in heaven's saloon.

Divine Indifference.

If such a heaven there be,
If earth and air and sea,
If all around, beneath us, and above,
Thrill with the eternal pulse of Love;
If universal life,
With Godhead, and with Gods be rife,
Why mock they man's persistent prayer,
Why groan and fret we thus forever and in vain,
Why find our woes no echo there,
And our tremendous pain
Awaken but indifference and disdain?

"MA," said Bobby, "is it wrong for little boys to tie tin-kettles to dogs' tails?"
"Decidedly wrong, Bobby; I hope you'll never do such a thing as that." "No, indeed, ma," replied Bobby, emphatically; "all I do is to hold the dog."—Harper's Bazar.

AGENT—Has the religious press much show in this community? Old citizen (in a whisper)—Well, the parson is all right, but they do say that Deacon Pusley is mighty fond of huggin' women when he gets a chance.—Washington Post.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—

"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to
L. K. WASHBURN,
Revere, Mass.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.
12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 22.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 1, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JUNE 1, 1889.

A VISION OF WAR.

[At this memorial season no apology is needed for reprinting on our first page Colonel Ingersoll's great sunburst of oratory, "A Vision of War." It surpasses, in our opinion, all other combinations of ideas and words in the English language. Hardly anything in the records of human speech approaches it in grandeur—certainly nothing to be found outside Colonel Ingersoll's own productions.]

The past rises before me like a dream. Again we are in the great struggle for national life. We hear the sounds of preparation—the music of boisterous drums—the silver voices of heroic bugles. We see thousands of assemblages, and hear the appeals of orators. We see the pale cheeks of women, and the flushed faces of men; and in those assemblages, we see all the dead whose dust we have covered with flowers. We lose sight of them no more. We are with them when they enlist in the great army of freedom. We see them part with those they love. Some are walking for the last time in quiet, woody places, with the maidens they adore. We hear the whisperings and the sweet vows of eternal love as they lingeringly part forever. Others are bending over cradles, kissing babes that are asleep. Some are receiving the blessings of old men. Some are parting with mothers who hold them and press them to their hearts again and again, and say nothing. Kisses and tears, tears and kisses—divine mingling of agony and love! And some are talking with wives, and endeavoring with brave words, spoken in the old tones, to drive from their hearts the awful fear. We see them part. We see the wife standing in the door with the babe in her arms—standing in the sunlight sobbing. At the turn of the road a hand waves—she answers by holding high in her loving arms the child. He is gone, and forever.

We see them all as they march proudly away under the flaunting flags, keeping time to the grand, wild music of war—marching down the streets of the great cities—through the towns and across the prairies—down to the fields of glory, to do and to die for the eternal right.

We go with them, one and all. We are by their side on all the gory fields—in all the hospitals of pain—on all the weary marches. We stand guard with them in the wild storm and under the quiet stars. We are with them in ravines running with blood—in the furrows of old fields. We are with them between contending hosts, unable to move, wild with thirst, the life ebbing slowly away among the withered leaves. We see them pierced by balls and torn with shells, in the trenches, by forts, in the whirlwind of the charge, where men become iron with nerves of steel.

We are with them in the prisons of hatred and famine; but human speech can never tell what they endured.

We are at home when the news comes that they are dead. We see the maiden in the shadow of her first sorrow. We see the silvered head of the old man bowed with the last grief.

The past rises before us, and we see four millions of human beings governed by the lash—we see them bound hand and foot—we hear the strokes of cruel whips—we see the hounds tracking women through tangled swamps. We see babes sold from the breasts of mothers. Cruelty unspeakable! Outrage infinite!

Four million bodies in chains—four million souls in fetters. All the sacred relations of wife, mother, father, and child trampled beneath the brutal feet of might. And all this was done under our own beautiful banner of the free.

The past rises before us. We hear the roar and shriek of the bursting shell. The broken fetters fall. These heroes died. We look. Instead of slaves we see men and women and children. The wand of progress touches the auction-block, the slave-pen, the whipping-post, and we see homes and firesides and school houses and books, and where all was want and crime and cruelty and fear, we see the faces of the free.

These heroes are dead. They died for liberty—they died for us. They are at rest. They sleep in the land they made free, under the flag they rendered stainless, under the solemn pines, the sad hemlocks, the tearful willows, and the embracing vines. They sleep beneath the shadows of the clouds, careless alike of sunshine or of storm, each in the windowless palace of Rest. Earth may run red with other wars—they are at peace. In the midst of battle, in the roar of conflict, they found the serenity of death. I have one sentiment for soldiers living and dead: Cheers for the living; tears for the dead. R. G. INGERSOLL.

NEWS AND NOTES.

BOULDER CREEK.—Among the mountains, the big trees, the glorious sunshine, Boulder Creek stretches in rural felicity. The hum of the waters and the saw-mills here and there make just enough music to indicate that the world is moving, while in the deep and radiant shadows one can linger and forget the stormy hours of life. In this heart of nature orthodoxy cannot wave its banners altogether triumphantly, and fashion is not yet supreme, and the honest thought can come to the surface without being pounced upon as contrary to custom, and executed in the high court of "the powers that be." It is a luxury to dream within these giant forests, whose vernal chambers are carpeted with green and decked with infinite variety of flower. Sometime in the course of a hundred years Boulder Creek will be a handsome village, but it will take a long time to demolish the stumps of the mighty redwood and smooth the hills for vineyards and gardens like those that hang over the sparkling Rhine, but really there is no lovelier place than amidst these superb farms of rugged nature, and there is no hurry for civilization to complete its work.

My friend C. C. Rodgers, who bears the ills that flesh is heir to with the equanimity of a philosopher, gave me hearty welcome in his domicile, and Mrs. Walser and the children joined in the fireside greeting. Rodgers has surrounded his home with a gay assembly of flowers, whose ranks have doubled in splendid retinue since I was here last. A good rest I had, and if I were under the weather when I came, the home-like repose and good cheer and the glowing sun would bring the pulses of health into play.

The meetings were well attended from beginning to end, increasing in numbers, and evidently there is deep and strong growth in Liberalism in this place. I was gratified to meet my friend Palmer of Livermore, at the station, who makes age happy with philosophic travel, and he joined forces and gave some of his amusing and instructive recitations at the lectures; also Charles Orr entertained us, who is a fine elocutionist, and E. A. Walser furnished the music for the dancing which made an agreeable close to the intellectual work. There has been a mingling of the grave and gay, which not only paints the future with hope, but makes the halls of memory a picture of flowers.

W. S. Rodgers keeps the work going on grandly. He puts his shoulder to the wheel without any reservation of forces. If there is any such thing as the religion of Freethought, my friend has it in heart and brain, the genuine enthusiasm which lifts one into the noblest fields of action. The loss of a dear wife since I was here before has put "sorrow's crown of sorrow" into his life of earnest labor. A gentle spirit has passed away, but the home life still continues, and the shadowed fireside holds the jewels of love and memory.

Other men at this point have made my sojourn as agreeable as the sunshine of the unclouded skies. In fact, there are more in the ranks of Freethought here than I can keep track of in News and Notes. I remember that they are genial comrades, that it was a pleasure to greet them, but I cannot think of all the names. If every place could summon as many to the flag as Boulder Creek, the way of the Secular Pilgrim would be sunny indeed.

I gave three lectures at Boulder Creek, and on Thursday went from the mountains to the sea. Santa Cruz fronts the boundless ocean, and the view from its beach is beautiful indeed, where the white billows roll in endless music. Santa Cruz is advancing quite rapidly, and in time will be one of the most elegant resorts in the country. It has many fine buildings, and during the summer its streets are crowded with busy pleasure-seekers. There is quite an orthodox fashion about the town. The atmosphere is not favorable to Freethought. The lectures were the first I have given here, and the gathering on Thursday evening was not large. On the second evening the attendance was greatly increased, and I was sorry on account of there being no Sunday morning train for San Francisco that I could not remain and lecture on Saturday evening. I lectured in Unity church. This was once the church edifice of the Unitarians, and in the early days of Santa Cruz this body of heretical Christians was quite flourishing. It has disintegrated since, but the church remains under the control mainly of the Spiritualists, and is thus a rallying place for Liberals and advanced thought, and Santa Cruz is not altogether given over to orthodoxy. The waves of modern thought beat in unison with the waves of the sea. It was rather discouraging, I must confess, when I saw my audience for the first time, but when we came together and discussed matters and got warmed up, and found who was on the side of Freethought, things brightened considerably, and our friends at this point have concluded to keep the battle going. Undoubtedly there is a large Liberal element in Santa Cruz, and with means and opportunity it might be made a growing influence.

At the quiet Taylor House I found comfortable quarters, and the host and hostess were of my own spiritual fraternity, and so the "inner man" was well satisfied. Freethinkers will find this a good home when they come to bathe in the sea-surf. I was pleased to meet Col. Edward Sumner, Mrs. Taylor's father, a veteran of ninety-three years, who walks as straight as a soldier, and will evidently reach the century goal. His old age seems to be as sunny as youth. My friend, W. H. Baxter, is a "captain true" of our pioneer forces. He is a worker, and if success does not come it is because it is impossible. He is not afraid to stand by his colors, and there is always good cheer with such a generous soldier, with whom every fortune of war can be fairly met.

The beginning is half the battle, they say; and in this case I believe it is so. Certainly it was a gain to strike hands with such a staunch co-worker as J. H. Curtis. In the gathering of our clans he was among the first to respond with a hearty good will. He is a kind of hermit philosopher, living in the mountains, independent both of king and priest. But he keeps pace with the current of civilization, for all the best Liberal journals and books find their way to his cabin, and he revels in the cream of life. He has been on the Coast from pioneer days, and is ready to do any labor and to make any sacrifice for a cause which to him is better than wealth.

D. M. Locke, on the roll of FREETHOUGHT, also gave good support. I was glad of the opportunity to meet with one who is so thoroughly in earnest, and who so well understands the principles of Liberalism. We bunked together, and so had a chance to cultivate acquaintance, which I appreciated. When we eat together and sleep together there is a pretty good opportunity to exchange ideas with profit. Mr. Locke reads about all that is going, and I guess he peruses almost every Liberal paper and book.

J. C. Shannon, Dr. Chamberlain, G. W. Hobbs, A. Martindale, A. B. Hagerman, C. T. Villard, D. J. Page, Geo. P. Fox, Mrs. Sarah K. Baxter, Mrs. Jennie Morse, Mary J. Ware, R. G.

Tuttle, Mrs. J. L. Grover, Mrs. F. R. Currier, S. Miller, and others are of our company organized here, and I am sure with such brave and true men and women there will in the future be a genuine victory for Freethought.

Mrs. L. N. McCann, wife of Judge McCann, is a woman whom the Liberals of Santa Cruz delight to honor. A member of the Congregational church, and a zealous and popular worker in all religious undertakings, it required no little courage to stand forth and reject the theology of Christianity. Mrs. McCann has done this, and not only this, she has become a teacher and exponent of a sublimer faith. She is at present a theosophist, but broadly and deeply Liberal and progressive, and is exerting a fine influence for advanced thought in Santa Cruz:

I have thus, in my first series of lectures, found an inspiring comradeship, and I was sorry that I could not stay longer in this delightful place, where nature is so attractive, where the freshness and glory of the sea will sometime find fitting response in the glowing heart of humanity. I, however, said good-bye to my friends with a promise to return, and the flag shall float on, like the shining waves that gleam to sun and star.

I was disappointed on arriving at San Jose not to see my genial friend Vostrovsky, for I had sent the lightnings ahead to announce a change of programme. These did not do their duty, but lingered with orthodox slowness, and for the moment I was a lonely traveler indeed. I floated to the shady and stately residence of L. Magenheimer, and found a cool retreat from the dusty highway. In the afternoon we drove over to Santa Clara, and I had the pleasure of seeing again John H. Dibble, whose generous hospitality I have before enjoyed. Santa Clara is still under the shadow of the cathedral, and only a few, like friend Dibble, dare to stand the brunt of the battle. Returning, we met our bishop—not of the church, but of humanity and this world—S. A. Bishop, who is the right kind of a bishop. In the evening we dropped into the superb hotel Vendome, and the architect, J. Lencen, guided us through its glittering and stately halls and corridors. There is a most magnificent grove and sward in front of the hotel, and in the softly-shining electric light it stretched away like a luminous fairy land. This hotel has a most home-like appearance. The big fire-place strikes the eye as one enters, and around it ladies and gentlemen throng as in a drawing-room. The hotel has capacity for three hundred guests, and is full all the time.

Sunday morning we drove over to the Willows. Where the orchards bloom and the cherries drink the sunshine, is the home of our untiring worker, J. Vostrovsky, and here we greet our friends once more, after varying fortunes. Also, we visit our friends Mr. and Mrs. Polak, and see the bright baby, a born Freethinker—Frank, who bears the honors of his ancestry with smiling face.

A pretty good congregation was present in the afternoon. Miss Anna Vostrovsky and Mr. Schubert favored us with some excellent music, which made a good beginning for my review of Moody and Sam Jones. On the whole our movement is progressing at San Jose. N. F. Ravlin, from the standpoint of Liberal Spiritualism, is doing an effective work, and there is a large attendance at his evening lectures. He attacks orthodoxy with uncompromising radicalism. However, he still retains in his service some of the religious forms. He pronounces a benediction, and they sometimes sing "Nearer my God, to thee; nearer to thee."

L. R. Titus, A. R. Woodhams, and others, still answer to the roll-call, and it was a pleasure to greet these open-hearted comrades, who do their level best for the cause, without fear or favor, and keep the good cheer all along the line.

Joseph Lee, of Fresno, was present, too, and he is one of those who never fail to give a helpful welcome. So I found splendid allies. I was sorry not to meet our co-laborers, Mr. and Mrs. Schwartz, who are such ardent advocates of Liberalism.

San Jose, the Garden City, blooms with morning lustre of thought and hope, in the glory of its flower and fruit.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

CHRISTIAN CHAMPIONS.

If what we said last week about the profitless character of discussion with unscrupulous clergymen needed any confirmation, it is furnished by the experience of the Walla Walla Liberal Club with the notorious Braden. It seems that Braden challenged C. B. Reynolds to a public discussion, and that Mr. Reynolds accepted upon condition that Braden should be indorsed by the clergy of the community as a worthy representative of Christianity, and that personalities should be ruled out. The indorsement was furnished; Braden agreed to be decent, and the debate began. To show how much regard Braden has for his own word it is only necessary to call attention to the following from an editorial report in the Walla Walla Daily Journal, a professed Christian paper. It refers to the second night's discussion, and the editor says:

"During the course of Mr. Braden's remarks he called forth a storm of hisses by his uncomplimentary remarks about beer-guzzling Germans generally, and about Mr. Reynolds in particular. He answered not according to the Golden Rule, but flung back an insult which would better have befitted a bully in the prize ring than one who professes to be an expounder of the doctrines and precepts of a divine being."

On the fifth night Braden became so outrageous that Mr. A. Rosenow, moderator, arose and declared that he would not retain his seat and hear himself continually abused and insulted. The conditions of the debate were that there should be no personalities. Those conditions had been persistently violated, and he begged leave to resign. Mr. Reynolds, also, stated that the bounds of forbearance were overreached, and he would not invite further insult to himself and the Freethinkers of Walla Walla by continuing the discussion. He therefore respectfully withdrew. The Daily Statesman tells what followed:

"Mr. Braden then endeavored to continue his address, which was anything but becoming under the circumstances, and was met with hisses, shouts, and general uproar. Order being somewhat restored with difficulty, Mr. Braden again began a bitter tirade upon his gentlemanly opponent, but the audience left as fast as convenience would permit. The discussion is now ended. Many there are who think the cause of Christianity in Walla Walla has not been benefited by the conduct of Mr. Braden."

At its meeting on the following Sunday the Walla Walla Liberal Club passed resolutions justifying Mr. Reynolds in his course; and the Daily Statesman printed the appended letter from a Christian:

"To the Editor of the Statesman:

"I am one of those who, although not believing in the teachings of Mr. C. B. Reynolds, yet admire him as a gentleman and indorse his withdrawal from the debate on Saturday night. I was ashamed of Mr. Braden's remarks, and blushed to think that the Christians of this community were guilty of the folly of placing him in the position of their champion. I am a church-member, but am thankful in my heart that this man Braden was not indorsed by me. I can now fully understand why Mr. Reynolds positively refused to enter into any discussion with this man, unless he was indorsed by the Christian ministers of this community. That this indorsement was given is truly a misfortune to Christianity. Braden's action has brought strife in the city among friends. His action, instead of doing good, has accomplished much harm that it will take many, many years of urgent Christian endeavor to eradicate. In all charity I say it, he is too much of a bully, too little of a gentleman; he wants to carry his point by vindictive, high-handed personalities, rather than by reason or persuasion. His action is an insult upon the intelligence of the community, and although I was one of those who were anxious to have the debate commence, I must also fully admit that it was a great misfortune to have this man Braden champion the cause of the churches. We were very unfortunate in the matter, and to say that Mr. Reynolds, as a man, showed much more the spirit of a true Christian than the much-professed champion of the cause of Christ and the welfare of the souls of the people, is but giving justice where justice is due. Mr. Braden's action has caused a bitterness, a vicious and revengeful feeling in the bosoms of church people hitherto unknown in Walla Walla, and only yesterday I heard a kind and gentle mother use such cruel and vindictive threats toward Mr. Reynolds, that shame and sorrow caused a deep sigh to come from my heart, and involuntarily I asked myself the question: 'Can such be the teachings of the Bible?' I am one of the Christians of this city that does not indorse Mr. Braden in his actions."

It is a strange circumstance that, after eighteen centuries of triumph, Christianity finds its forlorn hope in such men as Clark Braden and the Rev. I. D. Driver—men who have lost all regard for truth, and who rely upon falsehood and bullying to give them the victory they cannot win by argument. There are doubtless many uninformed Christians who think that their religion can maintain its claims to credibility at the bar of public discussion. It is the duty of honest clergymen to inform these that they are mistaken; that there is no evidence to support the doctrines of the Christian church; that those doctrines are to be accepted upon faith or not at all, and that the oftener Christianity appeals to facts and reason the oftener will it suffer defeat. Let honest clergymen take this course, and they will avoid the humiliation of indorsing champions of the Braden-Driver stripe, who are not fitted either by their intellect or their conscience to speak for any class of people calling themselves enlightened or respectable.

THE REASON WHY.

The Alta California, in deprecating the discussion of religious questions, says:

"We are not aware that there is much profit in such discussions. The church, under whatever form, or by whatever name and ritual it may be known, is always subject to the merely human tendencies of the organized body which controls it. With this tendency it is useless to make uncomfortable and disquieting quarrel. Reformers appear from time to time to correct these merely human abuses, and the masses finally follow them, taking advantage of the simpler dressing in which they array the ever-present religious idea. But all who know the history of the intellect know that beyond the vision and below the horizon lies a time in which the Reformation itself will require reformation, for just the same reasons that made it a necessity. But, meantime, the great universe, the inscrutable physical mystery, the architecture beyond the design of any power that may be seen and measured, moves on in order undisturbed by human contention over its causes; and its testimony renews, generation after generation, that faith in things unseen which is the essence of the religious idea. Why heat the blood and disturb the soul with the acrimony of discussion, and why seek to destroy, rather than reform the church, which is the concrete expression of that idea? And why, again, should the church, resting at last on a foundation as sure as that which underlies the universe, so distract itself over the quips of the infrequent believer in a world of chance and the gospel of haphazard?"

If the editor of the Alta California will carefully read the literature of FREETHOUGHT he will soon discover why Free-thinkers oppose the church. He will see that they oppose it, first, because they believe it to be a gigantic fraud, and that it teaches as truth what reason and observation pronounce untrue. If we take the Protestant church we find it worshiping as a fetish a book which sanctions as many vices as virtues, and which has been the bulwark of crime and tyranny for hundreds of years. We discover that the Protestant church is a vast machine for the inculcation of superstition. True, it is "subject to the merely human tendencies of the organized body which controls it." It has no other tendencies. Take from the church what man puts into it and there would be nothing left, the church, like God, being made after the minds of human beings. There is not the slightest ground for believing that the ministers of any church preach the word of God, as they all pretend to do. They preach from a certain book, written by men, many of them ignorant. Other men put a certain interpretation upon that book, and call it a creed. No two men could draw the same meaning from the Bible, no two could write the same creed, and no two preachers understand the creed alike. The result is that wrangling, disputes, and crimes form the chief part of the church's history. People outside the church have to some extent civilized the institution, but so long as it exists upon its present basis it has inherent in it all the possibilities for human misery which it contained at the start, and they crop out from time to time just to the extent that circumstances will permit. In order to justify its existence the ministers of the Protestant church must show, first, that there is a God; second, that God wrote a book; third, that the Bible is that book; fourth, that they have that Bible as originally written by God; fifth, that they understand the meaning of the Bible; and sixth, that they are authorized to expound it. If they cannot prove the first of these propositions, they certainly cannot prove the others, and the whole superstructure of the church is without foundation.

So far as the Catholic church is concerned, there has been no Reformation. What is called the Reformation was a breaking away of the more civilized portion of the Catholic church, the Protestant church being the result. The old church remained the same and is the same to-day. No reformation can touch it. Total and complete destruction is the only means that can rid humanity of the Romish curse. It is a mass of superstition from the ground upward; it is founded upon fraud, exists upon fraud, and practices fraud. There is no good in it. Can there be a better reason than this why we should "seek to destroy, rather than reform," the Catholic church?

We would assure the editor of the Alta that the church is not distracting itself "over the quips of the infrequent believer in a world of chance and the gospel of haphazard." Such a believer is necessarily in full accord with the church itself, since it is only under the reign of "chance" that miracles could occur, and a prayer-answering God could give us nothing but "haphazard."

What the church distracts itself over is the discoveries of modern science, the results of modern criticism, and the enlightening processes of Freethought. The Christian believes in the immanence of a divine will, i. e., caprice. He believes that the sun and moon stood still at the command of Joshua, and that to please a petty Jewish king the sun moved backward upon the dial. This is chance and haphazard. The Infidel knows that the universe is governed by law; that cause is followed by effect, and that every effect is preceded by an efficient cause. He knows that everything is as it must be, that the orderly procession of events precludes the possibility of chance, and that there is no haphazard in nature. This is science, and between it and the church there will be irrepressible warfare until the church is demolished or becomes a temple of the living truth.

THE RUSSIAN BROTHEL.

Judging from the facts that have come to light concerning the Russian church in this city, it is rather more than a pity that the fire which gutted the structure on Powell street last week was not allowed to obliterate the entire edifice. It seems to be settled that the fire was the work of an incendiary, the object being to destroy certain books and records intended for use against criminals in high places, and that the murder of Bishop Vladimir was likewise contemplated. These facts were stated on the day after the fire by a man named Gopchovitch, and on the following night Gopchovitch was murderously assaulted.

The Russian church was established here about the time of the purchase of Alaska by the United States. At first its membership was mainly Greeks, but these have been driven out by Russians and Alaskans. The present Bishop Vladimir is the third high church dignitary who has been at the head of the society. Both his predecessors were murdered, Bishop Kedrolevsky in 1879, and his successor, Bishop Neston, a few years later. The murders, it is confidently believed, were committed by the directors of the society, who had misappropriated its funds and turned the church into a brothel. The priests appear to have been a lecherous lot—gamblers, thieves, drunkards, and the fathers of illegitimate children. People who profess to know assert that Bishop Vladimir's life is in danger. They say that he recently expelled from the church a man who was suspected of an attempt to poison him, and that he abandoned a contemplated trip to Alaska because he discovered that the same man would be aboard the ship he had selected for the voyage.

Out of all the rumor and scandal it is difficult to select the truth, but these facts seem to stand undisputed: That the Russian church in San Francisco is little else but a detective agency, and that while the clergy pretend to be devoting their time to the saving of souls, they are acting as spies for the home government; that the priests are ambitious, dissolute, and immoral, and live riotously upon the funds contributed by their ignorant dupes and the Russian government; that they quarrel among themselves for the spoils of office, and do not hesitate at murder or arson when either is necessary to success or revenge.

The Russo-Greek church in San Francisco is, in fact, about what the church of Rome was when Martin Luther visited that city in the sixteenth century.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, June 2, at 8 o'clock. An address on "Voltaire and Freedom" is to be delivered by Hon. F. B. Perkins. All are invited.

It seems rather strange that there should need to be a "Presbyterian Church North" and a "Presbyterian Church South." That is, it would seem strange if Christians were sincere in their profession of fellowship for all races. But while raising funds to send missionaries to heathen lands, the Presbyterian church and the Methodist church both split over the question of fellowship with the negro in this Christian country. Why is not a colored man's soul worth as much in Alabama as in New Guinea?

We see no cause to doubt the justice of the decision that the Rev. Mrs. Ellen Rinkle, a regularly ordained minister of the United Brethren church, is competent to perform the marriage ceremony. It is, of course, an absurd law that every minister of the gospel should be, ex-officio, a public officer, but so long as it applies to men, there is no reason why women should be excepted.

The action of the authorities of the Catholic church in condemning Galileo for teaching the Copernican system of astronomy is paralleled by the Southern Presbyterian synod of elders, who, in the case of Professor Woodrow, decide that evolution is a fallacy and a heresy. This shows the inconvenience of being bound by dogma. The Presbyterians had to decide one way or the other, and they choose to make themselves ridiculous by deciding against evolution rather than to indorse it at the expense of their creed and Bible.

The number of children in the public schools of San Francisco has increased only 300 in eight years, while the population has grown 100,000, and people are looking about to see where the leak is. Some declare that the census is wrong, and abuse the census-takers. Those, however, who have watched the growth of Catholicism in the city know that the parochial schools have withdrawn the attendants from public institutions.

The Rev. Charles Spurgeon, son of the distinguished London divine, preached in San Francisco last Sunday. As Mr. Spurgeon during his trip to the Yosemite had paid ministerial attentions to another man's wife and been threatened with a thrashing by an angry husband, his arrival here was attended with considerable ecclat, and he drew a large audience to listen to his sermon on salvation.

The American Catholic pilgrims to Rome and Jerusalem were stoned and insulted at Trieste, notwithstanding that Trieste is a Catholic city. The papers say, too, that the missiles were thrown by the co-religionists of the pilgrims. It is only the vigilance of the secular officials that keeps the Christians of the different sects from cutting one another's throats.

MR. GLADSTONE did not set the world a Christian example when he caused the arrest of a cabman who upset him in the streets of London. Under the doctrine that the other cheek must be turned when one is smitten, he should have invited the jehu to take a drive at him in the opposite direction.

THE demurrer in the case of Harman and Walker, Valley Falls, Kan., has been overruled, and the case will go to trial.

W. S. BELL, of Chicago, lectures in Odd Fellows' Hall, Oakland, Sunday, June 2.

BOOKS.

We have for sale at this office, among other works:

"John Ward, Preacher." $1.50.

"Yone Santo," see advertisement.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible." 15 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Annual" for 1889. 25 cents.

"Liberty and Morality," by W. S. Bell. 15 cents.

"The System of Nature," by Baron D'Holbach. $2.

"Robert Elsmere," by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Price, 50 cents.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Colonel Forsyth, one of the leading raisin producers of the United States, has just returned from a careful inspection of all the raisin-growing districts of Europe, and says that California raisins, in addition to supplying the American market, are destined soon to take a large share of the London business.—Reno, Nev., had a quarter-million fire on Sunday last. Many residences were destroyed and families left homeless.—The town of Haywards, Alameda county, is torn up over revelations concerning a prominent church-member named Bullock, whose seventeen-year-old daughter charges him with her ruin. The girl asserts that her father has sustained criminal relations with her ever since she was eight years of age.—Professor Le Conte, of the California State University, will take a year's vacation, his first protracted rest in forty years.—Preparations are being made for a grand celebration of the Fourth in San Francisco.—The Rev. A. Diedrich, of Portland, Or., acted the good Samaritan towards a destitute young man named Schneider, two months ago, taking him in and boarding him, and the villain repaid his kindness by criminally assaulting the clergyman's two daughters, aged seven and nine. Schneider is in jail.

The discovery of the body of the missing and murdered Dr. Cronin, of Chicago, is one of the sensational developments of the past week. Cronin, who was an Irish-American, and prominent in the home-rule movement, was killed by persons unknown, and his body stripped and thrown into a sewer, where it was found by workmen.—Dr. Tanner, the faster, states that he has so disciplined his body that he can enter the trance state at will, and is to allow himself to be buried for four weeks in that condition. His object, he claims, is to call public attention more directly to the dangers of burial alive, and the uncertainty of all so-called signs of death, except decomposition.—The Sunday law in Cleveland, Ohio, had the effect of closing the front doors of saloons in that city last Sunday, but there was no difficulty in obtaining admission at the side entrances.—The Rev. Henry Greenfield Schorr, the young assistant rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of Baltimore, committed suicide last Sunday. Business troubles are given as the cause.—A half-dozen of the robbers who attacked and plundered Army-Paymaster Wham in Arizona, a short time since, have been apprehended. Some of the miscreants are said to be Mormons.—Laura Bridgeman, deaf, dumb, and blind from two years of age, made widely famous by Charles Dickens in his "American Notes," and also by many public references to her wonderful intelligence, died May 24 at the South Boston Asylum, where she has long dwelt, aged sixty.—The trustees of the Hartford, Conn., Theological Seminary have voted to open all courses of the institution to women on the same terms as to men. It is the first institution of the kind in the country to undertake theological training for women.—Mormons from Utah and Idaho are settling in the British possessions north of Montana.—Appropriations for pensions this year amounted to $88,400,000.

Robert Lincoln, our minister to England, has reached his field of usefulness and has presented his credentials to the queen.—Dr. Mackenzie, physician of the late Emperor Frederick, is about to bring suit against the Times and Steinkopff, proprietor of the St. James Gazette, for publishing a letter written by Steinkopff, in which he accused Dr. Mackenzie of conspiracy while treating the emperor.—Mr. Gladstone was knocked down by a cab in the streets of London last week. He immediately regained his feet, caught the cab, and had the driver arrested.

The Straight Tip.

The Iron Mountain Railway, a branch of the Missouri Pacific system, has given notice that all unnecessary Sunday trains, both passenger and freight, will be discontinued on that road after May 1. It does well. Any railroad that is in the habit of running unnecessary trains on any day in the week ought to discontinue them if it wishes to make any money.—American Sentinel.

"Looking Backward," a socialistic romance which has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin of Industrial Slavery," by Edward Bellamy. Price, 50 cents.

OBSERVATIONS.

The fourth and last of Mr. Putnam's course of lectures occurred, as announced, last Sunday evening. Mr. H. W. Walker was divided against himself on the question whether the meeting was larger than the previous one or not, but he voted unanimously that the lecture was the best of the series.

Professor Schultheis opened proceedings with a piano solo of great merit, and then the choir took up the refrain and gave two surpassingly fine songs. Mr. Schou presided, and introduced the "pilgrim and stranger," Brother Putnam. Mr. Putnam had lectured only eight times during the preceding week, and but once that day, and he was therefore comparatively fresh. The lecture was a new and original one which I had not previously heard. It dealt with the church in national affairs, particularly its monopoly of the proceedings on the centenary of Washington's inauguration. It reviewed the services of Paine, Jefferson, and other unbelieving fathers of the Republic, and contained allusions to Mr. Depew's oration and its failure to do justice to the author-hero of the Revolution. The speaker showed how various forces had combined to dissipate the old theology of the church, and how the church, feeling its influence over the human mind slipping from it, seeks to exercise political control through ecclesiastical laws. The audience was wide awake and enthusiastic, and expressed its appreciation by applauding with gratifying frequency.

The choir sang again, and Mr. Schou voiced the sentiment of all present when he stepped upon the stage and gave a large Alameda county bouquet to each of the singers.

An attractive programme is prepared for the meetings of the Freethought Society during June. On the 2d Mr. Perkins lectures on "Voltaire and Freedom;" on the 9th, Mr. Bell speaks; on the 16th, J. L. Hatch; on the 23d President Childstrom points out "Our Destiny," and on the 30th, Mr. Thomas Curtis will give us his deepest thought on "Matter and Life." The proceedings of each meeting will be noted in FREETHOUGHT under the head of Observations.

An article in another place includes a letter by George Washington, showing that the father of his country had the true commercial spirit, and also a taste for the spirit which is denominated ardent. Some of his state papers are regarded as the best specimens of a simple and lofty style, while the following poem, addressed to a young lady, indicates that he could touch the harp gently as occasion might require:

Oh Ye Gods, why should my Poor, Resistless Heart
Stand to approve thy Might and Power.
At Last Surrender to Cupid's feather'd Dart
And now lays bleeding every Hour
For her that's Pityless of my grief and Woes
And will not on me Pity take
I'll sleep among my most inveterate Foes
And with gladness never wish to wake
In deluding sleepings let my Eyelids close
That in an enraptured dream I may
In a soft, lulling sleep and gentle repose
Possess those joys denied by Day.

A man whose attention was taken up with swapping off bad negroes for good rum could not be expected to spend much time studying up the rules of grammar and versification, but he should have written better poetry than that, or none at all. It is understood that Washington was jilted by the young lady to whom the above poetry was addressed, which proves that ever the right comes uppermost and ever is justice done.

A correspondent of a daily paper suggests that California establish a state lottery like that of Louisiana. From a home-industry point of view, the suggestion is a valuable one. In spite of laws against lotteries, and the general sentiment against gambling, there is no doubt that a large majority of the people of this state try their luck monthly in the Louisiana lottery, tickets in which are often at a premium, and the San Franciscan buys them as regularly as he pays his rent, often more regularly. It is estimated that a half-million dollars a month goes from California to Louisiana twelve times per year. Occasionally somebody draws a prize, but it is of no value to him in the majority of cases, for the reason that he almost invariably invests it in more tickets, which prove to be blanks, or spends it riotously. The outgo is six million dollars annually; the return (perhaps) one million, and the balance of five millions represents a pecuniary leakage which must seriously affect the prosperity of the state. The law is powerless in the matter, since people buy the tickets with the greater avidity, because the sale is surreptitious. As the correspondent alluded to says, were California to establish a local lottery, this vast sum would remain in the state. I suppose that twenty-five per cent. of the receipts would pay the expense of conducting the scheme; fifty per cent. might be devoted to prizes, and the remainder might be appropriated for the salaries of legislators, including the chaplain, and other public improvements.

The morality of lotteries is not considered in this connection, except so far as may be involved in the remark that a lottery here is as moral as elsewhere, and that a lottery conducted by the state does not differ essentially, in point of wickedness, from the lotteries carried on by the churches.

MAY 30.

I see them bearing their flowers to-day
To the spot where the heroes sleep,
And I think of an unmarked soldier's grave,
Where Virginia's breezes sweep.
And I wonder if some one plucks a flower
By the rivulet of Bull Run,
And lays it above the dust of him
Who made me a soldier's son.

The day that is gone we live no more,
But I close my eyes and think,
As the chain of memory stretches back,
And I follow it link by link.
And, spanning eight and a score of years,
I return to a Christmas day
When the streets are full of marching men
And the air with their banners gay.

But I have sight for only one,
A man with a bearded face
And a kindly eye, and a firm, strong tread,
As he walks in a forward place.
I watch the train move out of town,
With its smoke and its clanging bell,
And the smoke takes form of clouds of war,
And the clang is a funeral knell.

He wore the blue as a soldier should,
He was honest and true and brave;
He gave his life for the nation's life,
And his pay was a soldier's grave.
A random shot, and above his corse
On rushes the battle's tide,
And while the stars shine out that night
They bury him where he died.

So I watch them strewing their flowers to-day
On the spot where the heroes sleep,
And I think of an unmarked soldier's grave
Where Virginia's breezes sweep.
And I wonder if some one plucks a flower
By the rivulet of Bull Run,
And drops it above the dust of him
Who made me a soldier's son.

G. E. M.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURES.

Raymond, May 28,
Grub Gulch, May 29, 30, 31,
Fresno Flats, June 1, 2, 3,
Hornitos, June 4,

New Sanel, June 6, 7,
Ukiah, June 8, 9, 10,
Covelo, June 13, 14, 15, 16.

THE two articles on "Agnosticism," in "The Popular Science Monthly" for April and May, will be followed by two more in the June number. One of these is by Professor Huxley, in rejoinder to Dr. Wace and the bishop of Peterborough; the other, by Mr. W. H. Mallock, is entitled, "Cowardly Agnosticism," and criticises Professor Huxley's objections to the above phrase.

Taylor's "Diegesis," by the Rev. Robert Taylor. A discovery of the Origin, Evidences, and early history of Christianity. $2.

Judge Maguire's "Ireland and the Pope," a history of papal intrigues against Irish liberty. Price, 50 cents.

HOW MARY ALICE WAS CONVERTED.

BY HELEN H. GARDENER.

When the usual winter "revivals" began in Greenville, the various denominations decided to combine in the attack upon Satan, and mass their forces in the Methodist church; they were to divide the spoils, so to speak, afterward.

This seemingly innocent arrangement looked perfectly fair to the general public and to sinners at large, but the Baptist and other clergymen shook their heads in private and showed a marked dis-relish for, albeit they consented to, the pooling system. They had had experience before. It may not be easy to explain to some persons, but it is, nevertheless, a fact that, having been wrought to a state of religious exaltation or frenzy in a given church, it is within those same walls that the convert tends to cast his lot thereafter, and while a few go, with their friends, back to the church to which they are accustomed, the many cling to the one where Satan was put to flight after a vigorous struggle and charge all along the line.

The decision to mass forces at the Methodist church had come only after a vain attempt to conduct (the previous year) three revivals in the town at the same time. The opinion of the public became so divided as to the relative "power of the Spirit" at the three places that the discussion of the real subjects at issue were lost sight of.

The ungodly hinted that the visiting "boy preachers" and local clergymen were spending more thought on trying to beat the number of converts at the other meetings than on anything else, and the night after the Baptists announced forty-two souls saved the rival clergyman (Methodist), it was said, had boldly claimed fifty-one as his harvest up to that time. The weight of evidence appeared to be on the Methodist side, and certainly the volume of sound was there; albeit the ungodly hinted that certain of the noisiest converts were "stock," as it were, and had been saved each winter with the utmost regularity.

Hints of this nature were so frequently thrown out that it became evident that something had to be done. So when Brother Salter announced that the following Sunday he would open the revival at his church, by a sermon on "The Lamb's Book of Life," he created quite a stir in the congregation by adding that since conferring together the various clergymen had decided to forego revivals in their own churches, and would request their own congregations, and all sinners more or less closely allied thereto, to repair nightly to the Methodist church, where all the preachers would be for the next three or four weeks, or as long as the power of the Lord was manifest in their midst.

Brother Salter spoke as if the "power of the Lord" traveled about from place to place, with all its belongings, and tarried here or there according as invitations were pressing.

He exhorted his flock to welcome and detain, as long as might be, this Power, and it was hinted by the bald-headed old scoffer in the choir that he had clearly intimated that he meant to give his rivals a point or two that might hereafter result in more additions to their own flocks and a greater number of brands plucked from the burning, if they but followed his example.

But all this was merely the prelude to the revival which almost swept the town of sinners of mature years and left only the hopelessly skeptical or the palpably too callow for the brethren to work upon. Each denomination disliked to be outdone by a rival, therefore pastoral visits were made, and deacons and "mothers in Israel" urged every man, woman, and child who had ever attended their own meetings to go to the great combination revival the following week, as it was to be the last, and a special effort was to be made to increase the number of converts very greatly, so that there might be a fair division afterward, when they were formally taken into the various churches.

Mary Alice and her friend Isabel were the only two lambs belonging to one of the Sabbath-school classes who had not, previous to this last week, gone up for prayers, and after weeping and praying and wrestling with the Lord night after night announced themselves saved, and been made objects of great rejoicing forthwith.

The "mourners' bench" was so crowded by wretched "seekers" wedged in between men and women who knelt by them to talk with, pray over, and weep for them, that it was no unusual thing to see one of the elders or deacons give a sort of flying leap in order to get past one group and to another.

The church was filled with groans and the sound of weeping. "Amen!" "Praise the Lord!" "Come down now, dear Lord!" "Bless his holy name!" and such other ejaculations, were so mingled with sobs and groans, and cries of "Save me!" "Save me!" "I'm lost! lost! lost!" that the nerves of a stronger person than poor little Mary Alice might well have been unstrung by the prevailing excitement. The child became terrified. She had not been allowed to attend such a meeting before; but her mother, a timid woman, had been wrestled with that day, and half convinced that she might really be standing between the child and some possible good for the future. She had, therefore, allowed her to go with her friend Isabel and an older sister.

Groans, cries, shouts, prayers, and exhortations were inextricably mingled in the group about the mourners' bench. One preacher was crying out, "Thank God, another sinner saved!" "Plucked from the burning! Escaped from hell-fire!" while other despairing souls that failed to feel that thrill of nerve and sense that follows on excitement and overwrought nature, felt themselves abandoned, indeed, of the Lord, since this was their third or fourth or even tenth night at the "altar," and still they were conscious of no change.

Each exultant cry of conversion filled them with new terror, and numbed sense and paralyzed hope. "Is my name written in the Lamb's book of life? Ask that, sinner; ask now!" shouted one above the noise and tumult. "I must know now! Now, Lord!" "Is mine there?" "Look, Lord, look!" shouted others.

The idea swept like a fire across the surcharged congregation wedged tightly together, in air so vile and close that hysteria was superinduced as an inevitable consequence.

"Is mine?" "And mine?" "Is mine, Lord?" "O God, look, look!" shouted one old clergyman. "Make me sure Lord; quiet my soul. Look, Lord, look in the G's!"

The old man's name was Gifford, and in spite of the air, the tumult, the religious frenzy, in spite of all, there was a smile which was almost an audible flutter as it passed over the congregation. Some one saw how fatal this would be, and struck in, "Come, ye sinners, poor and needy, weak and wounded, sick and sore." The old hymn caught the nerves of the vast body, and the volume of sound that swelled on the air almost drowned the groans and shouts of the newly-converted or still wretched "seekers." Mary Alice and Isabel stood pale and trembling, too young to have been subject to the slight touch of comedy which had almost broken in upon the solemnity of the occasion.

Just then one of the clergymen, a tall, thin, dark, and terrible looking man, bent over the two children, took both their small, trembling hands in his, and asked solemnly, "Do you want to go to hell?"

The poor, trembling little wretches disclaimed any such desire as well as they could, with the tears fast coming to their eyes and their little throats dry and stiff.

"All of your Sabbath-school class are saved. Only you two repel the Lord. Only you two grieve his holy spirit. Do you think he will forget you? He is looking at you now, now!" and his explosive voice made Mary Alice almost jump out of her small boots, while Isabel fell to weeping bitterly.

"He is touching your wicked heart at last," said he, addressing Isabel. "Come while there is yet time. Come! come! come! The gate of hell yawns for you. This may be your last chance, come!"

Both children were now in floods of tears and wholly unable to think at all, while he half led, half carried them forward to the "mourners' bench" (now somewhat thinned out) amid the applause and gratulations of the entire congregation. The children were at once made the subject of a long and loud and orally punctuated prayer by Brother Gifford, who, all unconscious of how perilously near he had brought the tense nerves of the congregation to laughter, now wrestled with the Lord in supplication that he might give these two "precious lambs one more chance to flee from the wrath to come—that they might cease to do evil and learn to do well from this time forth, even forever more."

But the moment they had found themselves freed from the terrible face and voice of the dark clergyman, who had made personal inquiries as to their desire in regard to a future abode, their healthy young nerves reacted and the strangeness of the situation so distracted their attention that they forgot to cry.

But presently Isabel fell to again and wept as though her poor little heart would break; thereupon Mary Alice's sympathetic soul joined in, and the brethren, feeling that both were truly "under conviction" and fairly on the road to salvation, left the two small sinners alone while they wrestled with older and less sensitive culprits.

By and by their sobs ceased, their tired little eyes closed; both children slept peacefully, kneeling there at the "throne of grace," with their curly heads resting on their diminutive arms, and they on the velvet-cushioned railing.

At last all of the other seekers were assisted to their feet, but these two knelt on. "Praise the Lord! Thank his holy name!" said the dark clergyman, fervently. "At last! At last!"

He felt that these two had been hard to reach, but now their "conviction" was deep and sure. He bent down between them, and the first words of his dreaded voice awoke the two children, who sprang to their feet, forgetting how or why they were there. They both essayed to smile in a polite and propitiatory way.

"Has light come? Do you feel at peace with God?" inquired the dark clergyman.

"Yes, sir," said they, and smiled again.

Then there was much rejoicing and hand-shaking, and it was announced that two more vile sinners had found Christ: The children felt that some way they had done a very good thing, indeed, and began to experience that sense of elation which praise from their elders is sure to produce in a sensitive child. Their little faces were radiant. Many shook their hands, kissed them, and otherwise showed their approval of the new course they had adopted. "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name" was sung lustily, in which the two little voices piped up, and were much commended therefor.

The next day, Isabel and Mary Alice were of the opinion that they ought to feel very different from their old, wicked selves; but somehow they were unable to be quite sure that they did. They thought that they should have lost all taste for play, and were shocked that dolls and "hide'n coop" still had attractions for them. This they set down as a snare for their feet, laid by Satan himself, who they had no doubt was on their track at that very moment. They concluded it would be safest to sit down with their backs against the doll house—as he could not then come up suddenly behind them—and they could then give their minds to thoughts of the next world.

"Wasn't it beautiful last night?" said Mary Alice, with a distinct shiver.

"Mm," noncommittally, from Isabel.

"Do you think God's as glad as they said, 'cause we are n't going to hell now?"

"Of course he is! How you talk!"

Mary Alice felt crushed; but by and by she recovered, and asked quite seriously, "What did you cry about last night, after he stopped talking to us, I mean, up at the mourner's bench?"

"I couldn't think of anything to cry for at first," confessed Isabel, "but afterward I thought of poor, dear little Nellie at home, and then I had to cry. I always do. What did you?"

"'Cause you did. I always have to if anybody else does," Mary Alice replied quite simply. There was a pause. Then she asked in an awestricken tone,

"Do you suppose our religion's good if we got it that way? You bein' sorry 'cause you had a idiot sister at home and me bein' sorry 'cause you was sorry 'cause you had a idiot sister?"

"I don't see how anybody could have anything worse to cry about than that," replied Isabel, hotly. "My mother says it is the sorriest thing in the world, and besides, she cries about it, and I guess she knows what's good to cry about."

"Is that what she cried about when she got religion?" inquired the persistent Mary Alice.

"I don't know. Guess so," said Isabel.

"Let's ask her, and—" began Mary Alice; but Isabel broke in,

"Well, you can if you're a mind to, I sha'nt. I've got my religion now. The preacher said so, an' I'm goin' to join the church next Sunday and get it over. Then I guess ole Satan'll let me alone. He don't know I was cryin' about Nellie."

"That's so," said Mary Alice, much relieved, and the following Sunday they were "taken in on probation," with the promise of full membership in six months if they did not backslide in that time. They did not, and are now "full members in good and regular standing"—converted through the influences of an idiot in the family and a fanatic in the church.

BUDDHISM AND CHRISTIANITY.

Christianity teaches a belief in a personal—therefore necessarily finite—creator, endowed with infinite attributes; as omniscience, omnipresence, etc.

Buddhism (by which term we mean the esoteric form included in theosophy) denies creation and affirms eternal evolution, recurring in cycles, obedient to intelligent laws. These laws, upon ultimate analysis, resolve themselves into the great unknowable first cause, in which personality finds no place. It thus far entirely agrees with the deductions of science.

Christianity recognizes only soul and body.

Buddhism divides man into several principles, which manifest through the body as a vehicle.

Christianity teaches salvation through the grace or favor of its personal God.

Buddhism relies upon individual exertion, only aided by advice and guidance.

Christianity teaches the forgiveness or remission of sin through personal intercession and favor.

Buddhism teaches Karma, or the eternal relation of cause and effect, on the moral and spiritual planes as surely as upon the material. It recognizes no forgiveness; only expiation.

Christianity denies evolution.

Buddhism strongly affirms it; and is here again in accord with science.

Christianity denies reincarnation, or the repeated return to earth of the evolving monad, or soul.

In Buddhism this is a basic belief.

Christianity recognizes in Christ a personal savior; an incarnation of its personal creator.

Buddhism affirms that Christs, Buddhas, and other avatars are only glorious developments of the spiritual power potential in every human soul.

The Christian believes his single experience in matter of however brief duration is followed by an eternal heaven or hell, as the case may be.

Buddhism teaches innumerable post-mortem states, each exactly corresponding to the deserts of the personality, and created by it according to immutable law, and each ending with ultimate rebirth.

If we now examine into a few only of these differences with closer attention to detail, we shall be still better able to judge of their respective merits.

The personal Jehovah of the Christians seems to be an immeasurably inferior conception to the Parabrahm of the Buddhist, or the Ain Soph of the Kabalists. As painted in the Old Testament, he is simply a magnificent man. Instead of the text as it now stands, it might, with greater justice, read: "And man created God; in the image of man created they him." The Jewish Jehovah is infinitely superior to man in some respects, infinitely worse in others. He creates man and "repents" of his act and, like a disappointed inventor, destroys his imperfect designs. He delights in blood and suffering, is offended with Cain, who offers the pure first-fruits of the fields, and is pleased with Abel's carnivorous cruelty in sacrificing the firstlings of his flocks. He directs his chosen people, when fighting with their enemies, to slay the strong and vigorous, the aged and weak, the mother and babe, with an inhuman and appalling mercilessness, and only excepts from the massacre the young and lovely virgins. He promptly betrays his people into the power of their enemies if they offend or disobey him. He leads them into temptation and deals out fearful punishments if they yield. He is jealous of his worshippers, revengeful toward his enemies, merciful and kind only to those who love and obey him. He is unstable in his decisions, repenting now of his love and again of his anger. He is to be revered, feared, and obeyed precisely as men in ancient days revered, feared, and even worshiped their mortal rulers.

In Buddhism, on the contrary, there is no personal interference. The personality is under the action of an impersonal law, of which it is folly to predicate justice or injustice. If we set certain causes in action certain effects will result; if we originate a different set of causes, still other effects will follow—all in accordance with fixed and unchangeable law, entirely disconnected in either case with any desire to punish or reward, or feeling of love or anger toward us. We have the most perfect freedom of choice in our actions. The evolutionary impulse, however, compels us to choose daily and hourly, and such choice is moulding our future destinies and preparing the conditions of coming existence.

Again, in the Christian dogma of the forgiveness of sin, reason sees the grossest injustice. The murderer, who sends his victim unprepared into eternity, and consequently into hell, rarely fails in reaching heaven himself. He has the opportunity for personal intercession and consequent forgiveness. Forgiveness is Christianity's fatal defect. Protestantism looks with horror upon the alleged sale of "indulgences" by the Catholic church during the Middle Ages, and yet forgiveness is an ever-present, entirely gratuitous indulgence. Sin is enjoyed with little fear indeed, if immunity is assured in the form of future pardon.

The effect of this dogma has always been viewed with distrust by scientific moralists. More than a hundred years since, a writer upon this subject, while speaking of the tendency of the Greeks and Romans to attribute their action to angelic or demoniac influence, says: "St. Paul adopted the still more comfortable doctrine of grace, which served full as well to emancipate the consciences of the faithful from the shackles of practical morality."

If it be true, as Buddhism and science both affirm, that there is no cause without its corresponding effect, then the far-reaching consequences of this error become at once apparent. Lulled into fanciful security by the false mirage of promised forgiveness, the soul indulges in acts which can not but produce terrible effects in physical and mental suffering.

Compared with this tenet, the Buddhist doctrine of Karma, or the conservation of force upon the moral plane, is infinitely superior. It satisfies both reason and justice. "As ye sow, so shall ye reap." It bars favor and precludes accident. No soul is lost because of circumstances over which it has no control. There is ample opportunity in its successive material incarnations. Nature permits it to try again, and again, and again. The rich and nobly-born are now reaping the Karma of past lives, and perhaps creating new, which will land them at their next rebirth in the lowest slums of poverty. So is the eternal balance ever struck. No error is possible, for our own hands enter each item in the great book of accounts.

Nor will the Christian belief in a single incarnation of the soul bear the light of reason or justice. To examine one point alone is sufficient. All its various sects, without exception, teach that newly-born babes, especially if they are baptized, go directly at death into eternal paradise. The Christian father, then, who first baptizes and then destroys his infant, would be acting with perfect consistency. If he permits it to live, he risks for it the awful peril of its succumbing to the temptations of life and so losing its soul. If, on the contrary, he takes its life, he assures its happiness forever. It is obviously unfair to the poor, tempted "grown-ups" that babes should be saved simply because they are fortunate to die before they have an opportunity to fall. The fact agrees but poorly, too, with the leak-stopping dogma of "original sin."

In truth, reincarnation guided by Karma—which, in another respect, is the magneto-molecular affinities generated by the ego during the material phases of its existence—is the only key to much that must otherwise remain a mass of hopeless contradictions and inconsistencies. The single birth brings man, with no will or volition of his own, upon the earth plane. His bodily traits and his social conditions are forced upon him; or, worse still, are a mere matter of shame. He may be born Prince of Wales or a Hottentot. In either case he must accept the prescribed formula of "faith," after which both prince and blackamoor spend a "never-ending eternity" side by side, twanging harps in praise of him who has so graciously "saved" them.

How great a contrast this last is to the Buddhist doctrine of an ever-becoming, an eternal progression, until, at some period so distant that it eludes even the imagination, man shall become one with the creative wisdom and energy which bade him forth on his cycle of evolution.—JEROME A. ANDERSON, M. D., in the Argonaut.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON AND THOMAS PAINE.

The San Jose Mercury magnifies Alexander Hamilton as the "Father of the Constitution," resents any attempt to belittle the greatness of his character, and says that "next to Washington he will always stand in the history of the Republic."

It is true that the framework of the Federal Constitution, adopted by the Convention on the 17th of September, 1787, was constructed by Hamilton, a delegate from New York. But such was the imperfection of the instrument that it became a Herculean task for Hamilton to induce the States to ratify it, and his own state, New York, held off until July 26, 1788, before it gave its consent, while North Carolina did not ratify it until November 21, 1789, and Rhode Island until May 29, 1790.

Nor would the constitution of 1787 have been adopted at all, but for the understanding that a series of amendments, already outlined, to make it more republican in its character, would speedily be adopted.

Those amendments, twelve in number, were accordingly submitted at the first session of the Federal Congress, in 1789, and ten of them were ratified in the course of a year. Without those ten amendments the Constitution would have proved a dead failure. And those amendments are almost a literal repetition of articles contained in the bill of rights prefixed to the constitution of the state of Pennsylvania, adopted in 1776, which were framed by Thomas Paine. A complete copy of that bill of rights will be found in Paine's "Dissertation on Government." It is true that Paine does not distinctly say that he drew up the said bill of rights, but the evidence that he did is conclusive, not only from his treatment of the subject but from the style of the document itself. It contains sixteen articles, the first one of which is as follows:

That all men are born equally free and independent, and have certain natural, inherent, and unalienable rights, amongst which are, the enjoying and defending life and liberty; acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety.

This article is substantially repeated in the second paragraph of the Declaration of Independence, which has been proved to have been drafted by Paine. And to show that the two contemporary papers had a common author, the word "independent" in the above bill of rights was originally written in the draft of the Declaration of Independence, but was stricken out by Congress. And not only that, but other changes were made in the same paragraph, which, as reported, conformed more nearly to the articles of the Pennsylvania bill of rights.

Should it be asked, "Why did not Paine claim the authorship of the said bill of rights?" the answer is he was not that kind of a man. Most people think that he was as open an agitator as Henry George. On the contrary this very "Dissertation on Government," published in 1786, is the first literary work to which he signed his own name. For eleven years he had been the most successful pamphleteer ever known (to say nothing of the Letters of Junius, which he had previously written in England from 1769 to 1772), and yet all his essays up to 1786 were anonymous, his usual signature being "Common Sense." Nor did he avow himself the author of another essay until 1791, when he defended the "Rights of Man" against the assaults of Edmund Burke on the revolutionists of France. After that he became known to the public as a political writer, just as "Boz" became known as Dickens. But yet Paine continued to use the signature "Common Sense" down to the last years of his life, rarely signing his own name to an essay. He was one of the most secretive and philanthropic men that ever lived, and what was still more extraordinary, from first to last he steadfastly refused to receive the profits on the publication of his writings, which always had an immense sale.

W. H. BURR.

Washington, D. C., May 17, 1889.

RELIGION.

"The leading error of the human mind, the bane of human happiness, the blind guide of human reason, is religion." Thus spoke one of the ancients two thousand years ago, and the truth of his assertion is made apparent not only by history, but by present conditions. Religion has enslaved the mind of man and cursed his existence from the very beginning of the race, and as ignorance and fear must have surrounded and encompassed him at that time, the origin of religion is plainly evident. Knowing nothing of natural laws, and fighting for existence against the destructive forces of nature; finding good and evil in every condition of life, no wonder ignorance led to superstitious beliefs, and a God to be worshiped and a devil to be feared found birth in his brain and became the basis of all religions. But the question now rises, How much longer is mankind to be enslaved by the crude superstitions of remote and ignorant ancestors? Isn't it about time that reason, based upon known facts, should supersede the fears of ignorance as a rule for human action? Hasn't the progress of mankind been retarded long enough by the worshiping of an unknown God, and the degradation of reason by the exaltation of faith, alias credulity? It would seem so; and yet the attempt to perpetuate religion, and to engraft its senseless doctrines upon the minds of the people, is the life work of numberless fanatics and the persistent endeavor of many good but deluded enthusiasts.

If religion was of any practical benefit to the world, it would have some reason for deserving perpetuity, but while the fact confronts us that it is an unmitigated curse, the most desirable thing about it is its extinction. Religion depreciates the value of this life and exalts the importance of the next, of which it knows absolutely nothing. Natural desires are denounced as sinful, and to crucify the flesh is supposed to give God pleasure, in return for which the reward of such will be great in heaven. Consequently this world is not good enough for religious people, and they pine and whine for spiritual things where the soul can bask in the sunshine of glory, and imaginary possibilities will be realized in place of present realities. To one who retains his reason and takes a practical view of existence as we now find it, nothing seems more nonsensical and idiotic than to neglect the present for an unknown future; and while residing in a material world and occupying a body of flesh and blood, I for one purpose to seek happiness and pleasure in sensible instead of spiritual dreams. That physical comfort is the basis of all happiness is an undeniable fact; and none but religious fanatics will attempt to live a spiritual life in a material world. You can't do it, for conditions are not right; and all efforts to neglect or suppress, to stamp out or rise above the laws of matter, are evidence of pure and unadulterated foolishness. As our pet superstition, Christianity, seems losing its grip on the minds of the people, an attempt is being generally made to replace it with theosophical teachings, which are inseparably connected with Buddhism. Though Theosophy denies being a religion with creed and code, it does advance all the idiotic and impractical theories of Oriental religions. The "killing of desire" is one of the leading articles in the April number of the Theosophist published in India and widely circulated in this country, and the hobby of theosophy is to develop spirituality by holding matter in contempt, and persistently trying to crush out every natural desire—to "shift the centre of consciousness" and become a spiritual what-is-it? Says the brilliant writer under the head of "killing desire," there are two plans for so doing; one is to kill it by ignoring it whilst still remaining in its sphere, and the other is to rise above it entirely. This latter process he declares cannot be explained in words, but "must be grasped if at all by the intuitions." Just so! and thus is another startling truth revealed to an ignorant world from far-away India, where two religious sects were created from one, because of inability to agree on these important questions: "May salt be preserved in horn by the monks for future use?" "May solid food be eaten by them after the hour of noon?" "May fermented drinks which look like water be drunk?" "May seats covered by cloths be used?" Colonel H. S. Olcott is now engaged in the important work of uniting these two halves of the Buddhist church, and in a late address for that purpose, he says: "Does it seem worth while that the vast Buddhist family should be estranged from each other for such questions as these?" That they have been, shows conclusively what senseless imbeciles religion produces.

The poorest people on the face of the globe, the most servile, abject, and the most destitute of energy, ambition and progressive characteristics, are found in India; and still their religion, which, in connection with climate, has made them what they are, is considered desirable for other nations; and a writer clamoring for a universal religion thinks their Buddhism would fill the bill. Says he: "It is unnecessary to attempt to describe the benefit that would result from the establishment in the United States of a universal religion for the masses. America is ripe for it, and only needs the earnest efforts of a few brave, self-sacrificing souls who will stand firmly by their convictions, to bring it to successful issue." Let us hope he is as much mistaken regarding possible success, as he is in regard to the need of such a religion, and I believe he is. What the masses really want is better food and more of it; comfortable homes and the necessities of physical existence. Their "spiritual welfare" is not bothering them much, and if the mind of childhood could escape the influence of a mercenary priesthood, whose business is to pervert reason and distort the intellect, religions of all kinds would cease to prevail. The world has never known a religion that did not hold this world in contempt; that did not denounce nature and nature's laws, and strive to demonstrate that bodies of flesh and blood are an injury to man's spiritual nature; that to be pure he must rise above the flesh and everything material. I have no patience with that class of lunatics who find nothing in this world as it should be, and who regard it as sinful to eat a square meal of victuals; whose idea of purity is impotence and poor health; whose idea of spirituality and consumption is synonymous, and whose idea of life is a stagnant pool without a ripple on its surface.

I have no wish to crush one natural desire, or to become too "pure" for my body and earthly surroundings; I want the good things of this life, and propose to have them when I can; and keeping constantly in mind the fact that temperance in all things is conducive to health and happiness, I will try to complete the journey to the grave without religion and free from unsatisfied yearnings for heaven.

This world is good enough for me when conditions are right, and the duty of mankind is to regulate conditions for human happiness here and now, and not try to become a spiritual being until nature makes the change.

C. SEVERANCE.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Miss Susan B. Anthony is in this city, says the Indianapolis Journal, a guest of Mrs. May Wright Sewall. Miss Anthony has just returned from Kansas, and her conversation with the reporter yesterday was, of course, upon the theme of woman suffrage. "The work," said she, "is going on in Washington territory very earnestly, our endeavor being to get delegates elected to the constitutional convention of a character to firmly establish woman suffrage in the state's constitution. They had woman's suffrage in that territory, but the Democratic judges appointed by Cleveland declared that the legislature had no right to extend suffrage to women. This was an absurd decision, but it served to keep the women from voting. We want the adjective 'male' left out, so that any citizen twenty-one years old may exercise the right of suffrage.

"During the past winter there have been municipal suffrage bills before the legislatures of nine different states. Some of these came near passing, but not quite. I have not done much traveling during the past few months. I have been in Arkansas. I had a series of meetings there last February. The suffrage question is almost entirely new there, but I felt that all the people there needed was speakers to enlighten them, and that when they had knowledge of the subject the people in time would be with us. The legislature of Missouri has just given women school suffrage. This makes sixteen states where women have a right to vote on school questions. Indiana and Illinois have not come into line, neither has Ohio. In nearly all the states women may be elected to the school boards, and in many of the northern states they are elected. In Kansas the counties have women on such boards. I left Leavenworth last Saturday night. I was there through the city election—the third election at which women have had an opportunity to vote. Nearly all over the state it was the law and order ticket—whether the prohibition law should be enforced.

"There are 283 places called 'cities' in Kansas. In 1867 the legislature passed a law giving women the right to sign or withhold signature from liquor dealers' petitions. The liquor interest went to work and had a law passed that in cities of the first and second class it would not be necessary to get women's names to the petitions. After this they again went to the legislature, and had settlements of 250 and more made cities. Now the whole state is under the rule of women, and they have the absolute control of all laws for the suppression of the social vices. They hold the balance of power, and are learning to use it. There are three cities where women have full official boards, absolute control, mayor and common councils, etc. These places are Oskaloosa, Cottonwood Falls, and Ross-ville."

WASHINGTON AND PAINE.

Philip Schaff, "D. D.," LL. D., in a recent article on George Washington, says of the "father of his country:" "He made no mistakes; there are no black spots on his reputation."

Now, while Washington was a great and wise man, justly honored not only in America but throughout the civilized world, he was not perfect, and neither his private nor his public life was without "mistakes." The real Washington, like the real Lincoln, was very human; neither was faultless. Both are entitled to our respect and gratitude because of their high character and great services; but it is not necessary to ignore their limitations and deny their mistakes in order to invest them with superhuman qualities.

The following letter by Washington to Capt. Job Thompson, dated "Mount Vernon, 2 July, 1766," is alone enough to show that Washington was far from perfect:

SIR: With this letter comes a negro (Tom), which I beg the favor of you to sell in any of the islands you may go to, for whatever he will fetch, and bring me in return from him:

One hhd. of best molasses.

One ditto of best rum.

One barrel of lymes, if good and cheap.

One pot of tamarinds, containing about 10 lbs.

Two small ditto of mixed sweetmeats, about 5 lbs. each.

And the residue, much or little, in good old spirits.

That this fellow is both a rogue and a runaway (tho' he was by no means remarkable for the former, and never practised the latter till of late), I shall not pretend to deny, but that he is exceedingly healthy, strong, and good at the hoe, the whole neighborhood can testify, and particularly Mr. Johnson and his son, who have both had him under them as foreman of the gang; which gives me reason to hope he may, with your good management, sell well, if kept clean and trim'd up a little when offered for sale.

I shall very cheerfully allow you the customary commissions on this affair, and must beg the favor of you (lest he should attempt his escape) to keep him handcuffed till you get to sea, or in the bay, after which I doubt not but you may make him very useful to you.

I wish you a pleasant and a prosperous passage, and a safe and speedy return.

In eulogizing Washington, Schaff gratifies his priestly spite by reviling the man whose pen, during the Revolution, was as powerful as the sword of Washington. He says:

Even Washington in his lifetime had his revilers and slanderers. Tom Paine, the Infidel, had the impudence to bark against this cathedral, and to publish this attack against the president: "As for you, Mr. Washington, posterity will be at a loss to decide whether you are an apostate from good principles, or whether you ever had any." Where is Tom Paine now, and where will the modern advocate of his Infidelity be in the next generation?

It is true that Paine wrote a letter reflecting severely, and no do doubt unjustly, on Washington; but the letter was addressed to Washington, and while he was living. It was written, too, when Paine was stung to indignation by the indifference to his fate shown when he was in a French prison by Washington's administration. He had rendered this country great service during the Revolution, and he felt keenly the neglect of Washington when the latter could by his influence have aided him. What Jefferson afterwards did, and what Monroe wrote, are well known. Washington's course in this matter is fairly open to censure, but it does not justify the strong language which Paine used. But if Paine erred in thus writing Washington under a sense of neglect and ingratitude, what shall be said of Schaff's article—written to praise one patriot and at the same time to disparage the character and ignore the services of another, because of his religious belief?

"Where is Tom Paine now?" His memory is cherished by millions, and every year his character and services are better understood and appreciated, and it is probable that his praises will be spoken in every land where liberty is loved, long after the name of "Philip Schaff, D.D., LL. D.," has ceased to be known among men. Within half a dozen years, one Christian minister has quoted Paine's statement of his religious belief as "true religion," and another has claimed him as a representative of the "best and most enlightened Christianity" of this century. Paine's "Infidelity" was no finality, but it was clearly in the direction of truth, and he was a brave pioneer in religious as well as in political reform. The orthodox clergy still hate him, and allow no opportunity to pass without abusing him. "A live ass may kick a dead lion."—B. F. U., in the Investigator.

OREGON STATE CONVENTION.

To the Liberals of Oregon:

The members of the Silverton Secular Union, of Silverton, Oregon, hereby cordially invite all the Liberals of Oregon to meet with them in mass convention at Silverton, June 22 and 23, 1889, for the purpose of organizing a state association on the basis of the Demands of Liberalism, to co-operate with the American Secular Union. The association thus formed is to represent no intellectual creed, but simply equal rights and impartial liberty. It is to be organized in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the words of General Grant—"Keep the church and state forever separate."

All in favor of these great ends, so necessary to the preservation of Republican and Democratic institutions, are solicited to be present for fraternal co-operation. In union there is strength.

J. W. McCLURE, President of Silverton Secular Union.
R. D. ALLEN, Secretary,
MRS. CARRIE FITZGERELL,
H. D. MOUNT,
E. WOLFARD, } Executive Committee.

Good Friend Parsons.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I see by your late issue that it takes money to run a Freethought paper—more than I was aware of. Your friends have come forward generously to your aid; and now, as you are still on praying grounds, you may put me down for $10 per year.

San Jose.

SAMOS PARSONS.

Practical Work.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I am truly thankful that the paper will be sustained. We cannot do better than to send a gift of two or three or more papers to those we think would read them. By so doing spread the Liberal ideas on progress and give the superstitions of the past a thorough airing. Find $5 inclosed.

But keeping the paper alive is not all that is needed. We need local organization, and must sustain meetings, or we soon lose the interest that our workers in the lecture field create by a course of lectures.

We have eighteen names pledged to sustain meetings in Santa Ana, Orange, and Anaheim—50 cents monthly, due the first of the month. When but few turn out it does not pay to hire a hall; so during the summer we will meet at the parlors or gardens of believers, and thus save a little sum to pay speakers that may visit us. I do wish that some of the reverends would get up courage to debate with friend W. F. Jamieson, as I really think he could do a mighty work on this coast face to face with clergymen. Our Presbyterian, Rev. Elliot, is said to have answered Putnam after he left. I did not hear it, though one who did declared it was an easy thing to do. But my guess is that it will be a hard thing for those who heard Mr. Putnam, to forget the telling points he made on "Robert Elsmere." I find that the uncharitable Christians prefer to shun out-spoken Liberals rather than converse with them. But all we have to do is to assert our respectability by our lives and work to make the Nine Demands popular, and cultivate our social natures by meeting to sing, recite, and read, interspersed by short speeches, which will make us all wiser and more capable to meet our opposers and sustain our ideas with dignity. Above all let us learn to avoid error and search for truth.

Anaheim.

K. PARKER.

"The Universe Analyzed."

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have just read this excellent work, by John R. Kelso, and desire to express a few thoughts upon its merits.

Such a work is much needed at the present time, when old and ignorant ideas of the creation are being changed to a knowledge of the true laws of the formation of worlds through evolution.

It is time the world had a new genesis, as all religions are based upon a cosmos, and erroneous conceptions of the universe and the laws governing it, when thus perpetuated, are hardest to dislodge from the mind.

That "the universe is eternal," must be admitted, and this is far less difficult than to conceive of a god or gods existing in an eternal vacuum before creation began.

It is all-sufficient to reason from the known to the unknown in the contemplation of infinity. This is so plainly shown in this work that a child might grasp the idea, and thus be far better fitted in after years to solve other problems of existence than when taught the absurd ideas of Bible chronology and anthropology.

I fail to see why so lucid an author rejects the word "duration," as its application to time is the same as the measurement of distance to space. Without a sense of duration one would need be in space where there were no revolving worlds to measure time. We need the word duration, or its equivalent, in speaking of this fragment of time, and of the unfolding of our little solar system, though we are unable to grasp the infinity of duration, or of infinite space, yet we can measure both in a limited sense.

The religion of humanity, which is to supersede all creeds in the near future, will be based on the right understanding of the universe and the laws governing all formations and sentient life.

This book is of much value in assisting the mind to discover errors of past teachings and to find the truth.

L. HUTCHINSON.

THE SUMMER AND FALL CAMPAIGN.

S. P. Putnam has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Silverton.....Or., June 22, 23,	Pomeroy ..W. T., Aug.....26,
Stayton....." " 24,	Union.....Or. " 29, 30,
Mills City....." " 25, 26,	Baker City, " Sept.....1,
Turner....." " 27,	Prairie City, Or, and vicinity, Sept.
Eola....." " 28,	4, 5, 6, 7, 8,
Canby....." " 29, 30	Fox Valley.....Or., Sept. 9, 10,
Molalla....." July 3, 4,	Long Creek....." " 11, 12,
Kalama.....W. T., " 6, 7,	Hamilton....." " 14, 15,
Starks Point, W. T., and vicinity,	Monument....." " 16, 17,
July 9, 10, 11, 12, 13,	Hay Stack....." " 18,
Astoria.....Or., July 14,	Lone Rock....." " 19, 20,
Stella.....W. T., " 15, 16, 17,	Fossil....." " 21, 22,
Oswego.....Or., " 18, 19,	Hillsboro, Or., Sept., 25, 26, 27, 28,
Arnold's Grove.. " 20, 21,	North Yamhill...Or., Sept.....29,
Coos county, Or., July 22 to Aug. 4,	Forest Grove...." " 30,
Coburg....." Aug.....7, 8,	Talent, Or., and vicinity Oct. 3, 4, 5,
Lebanon....." " 9,	6, 7,
Olympia...W. T., " 11, 12,	Linkville.....Or., Oct. 11, 12, 13,
Buckley...W. T., " 13, 14,	Sacramento.....Cal., Oct. 20,
Davenport, " " 17, 18,	San Francisco....." " 27,
Rosalia, W. T., and vicinity, Aug.	Los Angeles and vicinity the month
19, 20, 21, 22,	of November,
Dayton....W. T., Aug....24, 25,	San Diego and vicinity the month of December.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

FOR SALE

An interest in a Factory for manufacturing
The Best Fanning Mill
On the Coast.

Upward of $5,000 invested in Patent
Right, Factory, and Stock. Ready sales
and large profits.

WANTED: A man to take an active part in the business—a splendid chance
for an energetic man—a Liberal preferred.

We refer you to S. P. Putnam, editor,
who is personally acquainted with us.
Address, Box 269,
East Portland, Or.

"MODERN THOUGHT,"

—Devoted to the—

SPIRITUALIZATION OF HUMANITY,

Published Monthly by
CHARLES FILLMORE,

JOURNAL BUILDING, KANSAS CITY, MO.

$1 Per Year—Sample Copy Free.

Christian Science, Metaphysical, Theosophical,
Spiritual, and all kinds of reform literature
for sale.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5.60
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond" 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy.
Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN AHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS,
the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author.
Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Nature's Religion.

What precept prompts our minds within to dwell
Upon the themes beyond our mortal view?
Can one become profound enough to tell Things which the wisest never dreamed they knew?

'Tis said, without a hope for future life
(A future state which many claim to know),
Our functions here would be in constant strife,
Our dwelling dark and dreary here below.

With those let hope inspire who are inclined,
For well some solace in them found a place;
And those who know that state may lead the blind—
A nobler duty ne'er was given grace.

What's dark and drear in life's simplicity?
What, though our path be cropping out with thorns?

In Nature rough are gems of rarity;
Philosophy our task of life adorns.

With reason high enthroned and truth our shield,
With right within and duty for our guide,
Are we not armed, then, for the battlefield—
To conquer Fear and banish Error's pride?

These weapons crown with vict'ry human life,
E'en though in bliss eternal we are laid;
They cause us to be men in manly strife,
And, for our cooling comfort, make the shade.

To Superstition let us bid adieu,
And reason out our way as best we can;
There is naught else for us that we can do
And still remain and be an honest man.

If from Effects to Cause we cannot trace
Phenomena most grand, or spirical,
'Twere better far to turn an honest face
Than credit thought of any miracle.

And would it not be best to never know
The causes Nature's mighty hands display,
Than be the victim—savage is the blow—
Of false, though pious, teachings of the day?

The Light of Science, Progress, and the Truth,
Is at command to aid us to divine
The better way to live to age from youth.
Oh, may that light of noon-day ever shine!

Humanity's a field of broad domain,
Where Mercy, Love, and Charity may dwell;
It demonstrates this life were not in vain,
Impelled to duty needs no Heaven nor Hell.

O Freedom, open wide thy pearly gate!
Let Reason stand emblazoned on thy throne!
Enlightenment and truth necessitate
Thy presence and thy counterpart at home.
W. W. BURGESS.

A LAWYER of Temple Court was looking over some papers his German client had brought, and every signature had a menace in it, as it stood: "A Schwindler." "Mr.
Schwindler, why don't you write your name some other way; write out your first name, or something? I don't want people to think you are a swindler." Vell, my Got, sir, how much better you think that looks?"
And he wrote: "Adam Schwindler."

SIR CHARLES BOWEN told a story at London, of a nameless American town. The town contained three places of worship. All three were crowded Sunday mornings with worshippers. One Sunday, however, the devout people of the three churches found the pulpits empty, and they dispersed without hearing the sermon. The explanation was given by a fun-loving young lady who had addressed to the clergymen an anonymous note, containing this sentence: "Fly;
all is discovered." They fled.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California
that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard
of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all
the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition
at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street.

Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.
G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country,
pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.
Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption
that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought,
and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10
cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him.
Price, 15 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC
SCHOOLS.—THE NEW
AMERICAN PARTY,

A Criticism by "Jefferson."

Price, 10 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address, Putnam & Macdonald

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35. for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see next column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE, Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular, readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible; instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, knowing new means by which they may be cured; approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati; thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men; everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and A NEW FEATURE, Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Temperance and Prohibition, THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D., A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics. Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas. Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question. Cloth, 75 cts. Address this office

TONY.—"That minister must have been very brave to help save those girls at the fire." Bony.—"You think so, eh? He just stood below and held the ladder."

Good Minister.—"Yes, children, we all have besetting sins. So have I, like the rest. Now what do you suppose is my besetting sin?" Bright Boy.—"Talking."

A LITTLE boy was told at Sunday-school that when he died he would leave his body here. After returning home he was much troubled in regard to it and questioned his parents. His mother explained by saying: "You will take all the good with you but leave all the naughty here below." He thought a moment, and, looking up said: "Well, I guess I'll be awful thin when I get there."

TALMAGE says: "The church, if it would do its duty, could convert the world in ten years. It has the men and the money." "Perhaps so," says the Independent, "but it must turn over a new leaf of generosity very soon if it is going to undertake so great and speedy a task. The Brooklyn Tabernacle last year, with 4,126 members reported, gave $151 to home missions, and $138 to foreign missions."

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours res, ectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors. DR. FELLOWS.

Wm. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY.

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

TELEPHONE No. 635

P. O. CHILSTROM,

(Rogers & Chilstrom.)

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Commercial Business and Collections a Specialty.

Office, 415 Montgomery St., Rooms 9, 10 & 11,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corner Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma St., cor. 5th, S. F.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

Devoted to Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.

HUGH O. PENTECOST, Editor.

Contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday Addresses of the Editor before Unity Congregation.

It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.

Its columns are open for the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories. Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription one dollar.

Sample copies free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe."

Twentieth Century Publishing Co.,
No. 4 Warren street, New York.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY
NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,
NURSEYRMEN

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit
and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.

Special Attention Given to Planting
and Caring of Orchards
and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal

Food for Thought.

The pretty town of Orange is a perfect example of the ravages caused by that phase of fanaticism—prohibition. From a live, busy, bustling town it has become as quiet as the grave. Will some one rise and explain why it is, that the minute prohibition is enforced in a community, from that minute a lingering death is experienced? 'Tis true, 'tis pity; and pity 'tis 'tis true.—
Los Angeles Commercial Bulletin.

JINKS: "Do you suppose a man with a family can live on $1 a day and be a Christian?"

Blinks: "Of course. He can't afford to be anything else."

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Others of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald
504 Kearny st. San Francis

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA.

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or The Infidel Teacher 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLECKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

YONE SANTO,

A Child of Japan.

BY E. H. HOUSE.

The Book that the American Missionary Society tried to Suppress, but Didn't."

A Splendid Story, and an Unsparing Exposure of the Missionary Business in Japan.

PRICE, 50 CENTS.

PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 304 Kearny Street, San Francisco.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Mallet, Linton, Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology. Price, 50 cents.

Coppered the Contribution Box.

'Gene Carter broke out again the other night at the spread of the Supper Club over at Weber's. He told a story about a friend of his who was afflicted with a hair lip. This man was a thorough sport, and with him everything comes under the head of sporting. He was spending Sunday in an Eastern city, and he took a notion to pass the time by going around and seeing what the inside of a church looked like. He listened attentively to a powerful sermon, and then he noticed the vestryman coming along his aisle with the collection plate. Every one appeared to put something on this plate, and our hero pulled out a big roll of ones and twos, shucked off a dollar and laid it on the plate when it was passed him. He watched the vestryman make his trip, and his eyes followed him as he returned up the aisle with the contributions. As he passed the pew in which Carter's friend sat the latter could contain himself no longer, so he called out in a hoarse, hair-lipped whisper: "Hi, there—did I lose?"—Chicago Herald.

"My son," said the father, after relating the story of the Prodigal son, "tell me which of the characters in the narrative you are most inclined to sympathize with?" "Well, papa," replied the child, "I think that I should be disposed to sympathize most with the calf."

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—

"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to

L. K. WASHBURN,

Revere, Mass.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.
12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 23.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 8, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - - JUNE 8, 1889.

THE courts of Sidney, N. S. W., have decided that a Sunday paper cannot recover pay for advertisements, as the contract is illegal and void. A fair construction of this ruling would make it impossible for a clergyman to collect his salary.

THE National Secular Society, of England, holds its annual gathering in London June 9. Charles Bradlaugh will preside, which prevents him from being present at the unveiling of the Bruno monument in Rome, occurring on the same day.

THE discussion of the Sunday question announced to take place between Elder Jones of the Seventh Day Adventists and the Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, secretary of the American Sabbath Union, has fallen through. Elder Jones is ready and anxious for the fray, but Mr. Crafts is not.

REPORT has it that Medium Colby will return from his sojourn in the north and renew his warfare with the Chronicle. Mr. Colby is charged with being Parson Rains, of Hearne, Texas, and pleads not guilty. It is a question in which the general public has to a considerable extent lost its former interest.

WHEN the people of Japan adopted a constitution guaranteeing "liberty of the press" they evidently did not know what the phrase meant, as one journalist and two printers have just been sentenced to long terms of imprisonment for criticising the emperor. There seems to be left in Japan a remnant of the delusion that an emperor is more than a man.

THE pope shows his fear of trouble at the unveiling of the monument of Bruno, whom his predecessor burnt at the stake, by ordering that on the day of the ceremony all the papal guards and police shall keep within the grounds of the Vatican, and that those on furlough return immediately. He needs to guard his palace against the people of his own city who know him best.

OUR commissioners to Berlin are reported to have effected a treaty with Germany and England restoring home rule to Samoa. Germany and America are to have a counsellor on the islands, and England's representative will act as arbitrator when the others fail to agree. So far as Germany is concerned, therefore, we may look for peace, but who can hope to see our home politicians agree over the question whether the policy adopted is that of Bayard or Blaine?

THE Rev. John H. Hooper, of New York city, being guilty of lying and contumacy, besides bearing a bad reputation generally, has been deposed from the pulpit and expelled from the church. Concerning his experience somebody asked, "The ministry does not pay very well, does it, Mr. Hooper?" He replied, "They give you hell for pay." Theological students may thus take warning.

THE dinner and celebration at Camden, N. J., last week in honor of Walt Whitman's seventieth birthday was a well-timed tribute. Whitman's poetry is of the robust order, so plain that everybody knows what it means, and so natural that it touches every heart. He holds the mirror up to men, and perhaps that is why the Comstock crew, seeing themselves reflected, denounced him as coarse and obscene.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, June 9, at 8 o'clock. An address on "Liberty and Morality" is to be delivered by W. S. Bell, of Chicago. All are invited.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Raymond, with half a dozen houses, lies at the foothills of the Nevadas, the railroad terminus, where passengers, after paying a dollar for breakfast, take the coaches for Yosemite. Every day there is a stream of travel quite varied and interesting in aspect. Raymond, although small, concentrates in itself much of the life of California. The "old settlers" are here, and where half a dozen are gathered together there is no monotony. Something is going on. Unique characters present themselves. There is a study for the philosopher and the painter, which becomes quite dramatic at times as one watches the picturesque movement. The iron horse here strikes the solitude of the immense hills, and hesitates to go farther. The wood-chopper, the miner, the railroad-men, the village-blacksmith, the forty-niner, the "wreck of humanity," the prosperous adventurer, the sturdy farmer of a thousand or ten thousand acres, the stage-driver, the herder, congregate in this straggling hamlet with some new feature every day. Mingled with these is a perpetual ripple of fashion from all parts of the world. Outwardly, Raymond might seem intensely dull in the hot shining days to the habitant of the Palace Hotel or Fifth avenue, but from the standpoint of universal human nature, this little corner of the world teems with novel admixtures of the world, the flesh, and the devil. It coruscates with real life. There is no artifice and no hypocrisy. There is no "upper crust" or crust at all. It is motion continually, "wave running on wave" from morning to night.

I found friend Buckingham at the old post, just where I found him a year ago, and working away like a philosopher, although he is almost three score and ten. He couldn't be idle, and will never rust out. He is the same ardent Freethinker as ever, and a generous contributor to the sinews of war. He believes in the glorious future of Freethought; that the battle is to be fought and won for Liberty and progress. So at his carpenter's bench he touches the deepest heart of life and hope, and enjoys the wealth of honest thought.

Judge Maxwell is also our coadjutor, whose broad shoulders can bear almost any burden. He does not hesitate to do his share when called upon, and give the hand of welcome; and so the way of Freethought becomes pleasant in this rugged country.

George Bates decorated our hall with the star-spangled banner and the portraits of Ingersoll, etc., and thus added much to the enjoyment of the occasion. The spirit of beauty breathed amid rude surroundings.

Edward Fenney was chairman of the meeting. The hall was about full, which was as much as we could expect from the scattered population. The lecture was well received, although I guess pretty near half the audience were Christians, but of the Liberal sort that like something new now and then. I could not ask for more appreciative listeners. After the lecture, from about ten to one o'clock, the mazy dance was pursued, and the strains of the violin supplemented the philosophy of Freethought, which of course is a part of the cheerful "religion of humanity."

McKee, Bowen, Green, Judge Woods, and others I was glad to greet again. The day I spent here was in some respects as "good as a show," for these pioneers put much sport and humor in their day's work.

Mr. and Mrs. Leonard still entertain the traveler, and good things are not lacking on this "verge of the vast wilderness."

On Wednesday morning I climb the wide and rolling hills, about twelve hundred feet, to Grub Gulch—a name indicative of plenty to eat. It was named from the fact that in old days the miners could always make here a "grub stake," whatever might be their luck in other directions. The weather is hot here as at Raymond, the thermometer running up to 100 and 106, but the atmosphere is so dry that it is quite endurable, and in the shade with a little breeze it is comfortable, and when night comes on there is a marked change and one needs a blanket and can sleep comfortably until morning, and the mornings are quite fresh and attractive with bright sunlight and songs of birds. This is a cosy and really handsome place near the heart of the Sierras. There are many trees, pine and oak, scattered over the encircling heights, where the grass is still green, and here and there are vivid openings in which a most beautiful picture is presented of the distant blue plains, quivering in a golden sheen, in a frame-work of glittering sky and many folding wooded hills. One must sit still and take it quite easy during the middle of the day. The slightest motion will make one sweat. But when the sun drops behind the hills, and his flaming arrows soften in the breezy twilight, and the hot clouds turn to luminous palaces of exquisite color, and the stars peep forth, there cannot be a more lovely place than this mountain gorge. Soft sceneries extend and break into far-off splendid vistas. The grandeurs of the mountain prospects are not displayed, but there could not be anything more enchanting than these lustres of tree and rock and grass and mingling declivities, which to the wandering eye unexpectedly disclose to remote panoramas which seem to reach a hundred miles away.

I find friend A. B. Anderson to be about the biggest Freethinker I have struck. He is nearly a seven-foot Kentuckian, but every inch of him is for humanity and progress. He keeps the hotel at this place, and everything is comfortable. He is a pioneer, well-known over the state as a man of influence and independence. He is always ready to put his shoulder to the wheel. The Christians expect to meet him in heaven, notwithstanding his heretical views, for they recognize that he would make a good member of society. I have no doubt that friend Anderson is as sure of heaven as any of the believers, for he is ready to lend a hand to any that deserve it, which is the most certain way to win salvation whatever or wherever it may be.

I was pleased to meet our most radical ally, A. W. Poole, formerly sheriff of Placer county, and deputy United States marshal, who has had much experience of early Californian life and its rough and oftentimes romantic events. He has never depended on "Christian faith" to carry him through his arduous labors. He overflows with energy, and it would be impossible for such a man to tie to anything less than universal humanity and common sense. It is good to greet a comrade who won't let the grass grow under his feet.

Capt. J. W. Smith is also in our ranks here, and a "true blue" Liberal. His wife is a Christian, but declares that she will not be outdone in liberality by the "other side," and has generously aided our meetings with music and musical instrument. So the rainbow of peace shines over this mountain home. There is no quarreling. All agree to disagree. This is quite delightful, and has made my labors exceedingly agreeable. When all Christians are like some of our Christian friends here, and shake hands with the Reformer and Freethinker, there will be a pretty good millennium for this world.

Mr. and Mrs. Stubbs are staunch friends of progress. Mrs. Stubbs has had a remarkable experience. She was educated in the Catholic religion. Her family are of the orthodox church, and it was simply a great struggle, with but little support and sympathy, to break away from these strong associations and be a Freethinker. But it was done, although with many tears; which shows how brave woman can be for the truth when the issue is fairly made.

Mr. and Mrs. P. McCarthy, if they are not exactly Freethinkers, are right good Liberals and are ready to welcome truth from any source, and prefer the substance rather than the fashion. It is a pleasure to meet with such intelligent and genial people.

Mrs. Hawks, my good Methodist friend, came every night with her three children. She said she wanted to know what was going on, and wanted her children to know too. She wasn't afraid to hear and judge for herself, and she desired her children to enjoy the same privilege. That is the method of Methodism that I like.

I had the fortune to visit the Gambetta mine, and make the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. John Haley, who live in a snug little cottage, with portico embowered with vines and shaded with trees. It is one of the loveliest resting spots I have found. The winds play gently through, the hum of the mill mingles with the bird songs, flowers attract the eye, and books and papers from all over the world; signs of gentle luxury contrast with wild views, and through the woven green lattice is flashed one of the loveliest scenes of the hills and plain. My host is liberal both in heart and mind. He is main owner in the Gambetta and directs its operations. It is one of the best paying mines about. Mr. Haley believes in Ingersoll and thinks it will take about five hundred years for the world to appreciate all that he has done. I spent a delightful half hour with this genial friend, who has been all over the world, a traveler, a man of business, and who has made something both for himself and humanity, by his labors and skill, and has learned from nature the noblest wisdom of books.

The lectures were well attended, and where all the people came from I can hardly tell. The music had something to do with it. They have a band here, and an excellent one for so small a village. I don't believe any village of its size can boast of so fine a company of musicians. Walter Mills, and his two sons Walter and John, only ten and twelve years of age, Walter Smith, Messrs. Trojohovich and Josovich, are those who contributed so much to the success of the lectures. After they had discoursed music, in the cool night air for a while, Mrs. Smith and Mr. Poole and his son Charles Poole, gave some delightful songs, and so with the eloquent and stately introduction given by Mr. Anderson, the chairman of the meeting, I had just as good a "send off" as any clergyman ever could have with his troops of angels and archangels, and I felt like doing my level best, and I hope I did. It seems to me that we had a pretty good camp-meeting.

I shall have to put off further remarks until next week. I am still at Grub Gulch and living on the fat of the land;—but the mail coach is lumbering down the hills. Mails are such uncertain affairs in this country that one must avail himself of the first chance or he will be apt to get left. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

INHUMAN FANATICS.

The Law and Order Society of Pittsburgh, which desired to arrest the speakers at the last Congress of the American Secular Union held in that city, has again come into disgraceful prominence. Last Sunday night a benefit performance to aid the Pennsylvania flood and fire sufferers was advertised to take place at one of the Pittsburgh theatres. The fact came to the knowledge of the Law and Order Society, and the performers were notified that they would be arrested if they appeared upon the stage. There are some Christians who appear to be as heartless as their deity.

"CRAZED BY RELIGION."

Twice have these words appeared in the daily papers of San Francisco during the past week, and twice has revivialism borne the fruit of insanity. Miss Annie Larsen, a girl of twenty, attended the revival services of D. L. Moody, and was "converted." She spent her time thereafter, day and night, praying for forgiveness of her sins. She threw her whole force into the work, and when her screams for mercy disturbed the neighborhood, the commissioners of insanity sent her to Napa. Another young woman, Mary McDonald, has the same history. Conversion a few weeks ago produced violent religious dementia. She imagined herself possessed of the keys of heaven, which angels were endeavoring to wrest from her. She was also committed to the Napa insane asylum.

There is need for a revival of common sense among the people of this world. Why do not all the doctors, all the editors, all the public men, rise up and inform those within the reach of their voices and influence, that this Christian superstition is a delusion; that there are no gods, no devils, and no angels; that there are no rewards and no punishment beyond this life; that the churches and all other ecclesiastical institutions exist upon false pretenses, and that religion is only ignorance touched with insanity? All sensible people know that such are the facts. Then why not recognize the truth and have done with this harvest of maniacs?

A RECREANT DEITY.

If ever the God whom the world worships as the controller of all events had an opportunity to intervene for a good purpose, that opportunity was presented at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, last week. Thousands of people of that city went about their accustomed ways unconscious that a vast volume of water was about to burst upon and overwhelm them. The deity that watches the sparrow's fall had no eye for those beings whom he had created in his own image. He gave no warning, and twelve thousand lives were the cost of his negligence. Then when the disaster fell he stretched forth no helping hand. Flood and fire, woe and desolation, and no aid from the source from which, the Christians tell us, all good things come. Who knows how many prayers went up from the struggling mass of humanity that drifted away to death upon the Johnstown flood? We cannot tell, but we know those prayers were not answered. And while thousands of his children were being sacrificed, this God, if we accept the the Christian picture, sat idly upon a jasper throne somewhere above the clouds, and saints of all the ages stood before him twanging golden harps and singing the praises of his mercy and glorious justice.

It seems to us that there is nothing in the universe quite so useless as God, unless it is the impostors who pretend to be his mouthpieces.

LATEST advices state that the demurrer in the case of Harman, Walker, and Harman, of Valley Falls, Kan., has been overruled by Judge Foster, and the defendants must stand trial on the charge of "obscenity"—a charge so absurd, so unjust, and so infamous, that no one who has read the matter complained of can dwell upon it and keep his temper. It is quite easy to see how ignorant bigotry might formulate the complaint against these men, but it is discouraging and irritating to realize that any man with sufficient shrewdness to get a seat on the bench could be so unscrupulous as to entertain it. We do not much wonder that the Harmans and Walker are Anarchists.

SEVERAL weeks ago the corner stone of a public school was laid at Pleasanton, Alameda county. The Masonic order in the town participated. A few days later Rev. Terence Caraher, the Roman Catholic priest of Misson San Jose, in a letter to the press denounced the Masons, asserting that the order was opposed to the church and to American institutions. A member of the Masonic order replied and arraigned Father Caraher for his communication, saying that he was not even an American citizen, and had no shadow of justification in his attack upon Masonry. The discussion had the effect of bringing the priest into court to take the oath of citizenship.

MR. W. H. SNYDER, formerly attorney-general of Pennsylvania, has been stopping at the Palace Hotel. He is a friend of President Harrison, and to a reporter who interviewed him he asserted that Mr. Harrison is still a devout believer in the efficacy of prayer, and prays regularly every day. We do not believe that this testimony to the piety of our chief executive will raise him greatly in the estimation of sensible people. Piety and rascality, "simple faith" and intellectual inferiority, are so suggestive of one another that the world is losing confidence in the value of religious professions.

THE New York Sun says that the Nineteenth Century Club is not likely to long maintain its existence. It is becoming evident that Courtlandt Palmer, the founder and first president of the club, was necessary to its life. He gave to it his time and means; his suggestive mind furnished it with interesting themes for debate, and his extensive acquaintance with men of thought and learning enabled him to secure speakers who could entertain and instruct. New York "society" will wait long for another Courtlandt Palmer to give it something to think about besides the inanities with which it is accustomed to amuse itself.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE, the tailor, has closed his store on Stockton street for a week or two, and gone to Cazadero, in Sonoma county, for a vacation among the trout. Before he went away he called on FREETHOUGHT to have his address changed, and to leave a gold piece as a token of good will. If Mr. Noble finds a man in Cazadero wearing a Freethought badge-pin, he may know it is Mr. H. F. Ebers, like himself a staunch supporter of the cause. We commission each to extend the courtesies of the occasion to the other, and charge the same to us.

"THE Pope's Death Imminent" is the startling headline in last Sunday's papers. If Pope Leo XIII. is about to die we hope he will see the propriety, before his death, of acknowledging that his claim to infallibility is a sham; that he has no authority for his title of vicar of Christ, and that the church over which he presides is a vast political machine for destroying liberty and augmenting the powers of designing priests. With such a confession upon his lips he might die in such peace as no sacrament can bestow.

FREETHOUGHT acknowledges with gratitude the receipt of a cheering letter and a lift of $10 from Capt. Robert Davis of Lunenburg, Mass.; also some good business advice, four subscriptions, and a gold eagle from Mr. Philip Cowen, of Petaluma; and a pleasant call and $20 from Mr. N. B. Parnell, of Tracy. Mr. R. Blackburn, of Colusa, who took the fourteen-dollar diamond charm, and paid five dollars on his subscription is remembered. To all those who have lent a hand—Thanks.

THE Carrier Dove, our able Spiritualist contemporary, warns the public against investing in the Summerland lots, near Santa Barbara, without careful inspection. A correspondent of the Dove reports that the projected "Summerland" is the most unsightly place he ever saw, though he has been in nearly every state in the Union, while another affirms that the people of Santa Barbara look upon the scheme as a huge swindle. There are doubtless two sides to the matter.

THE great disaster at Johnstown, Pa., was not without its "miracle." The Catholic church of the Immaculate Conception was wrecked by the flood, yet a large number of persons testify that when an entrance was forced into the ruin the statue of the Blessed Virgin was found to be untouched and unsullied as on the day it was made! It is a devil of a miracle, and a most useful one, that preserves a graven image and lets ten thousand people drown.

Is suicide to become epidemic among clergymen? Last week we had to report the death of the Rev. Mr. Schorr, of Baltimore, by his own hand. This week it is the Rev. William F. Gage, of Hartford, Conn., who, on June 1, ended his life by jumping from the fourth story of a hotel. A Catholic priest in New York, named Greenfield, killed himself May 25.

WE indorse the course of Frank Bean, of Van Horn, Iowa. He was attacked by White Caps in the name of the Lord, and standing at his door with a piece of iron two feet long he laid out six members of the mob in rapid succession. If more people would follow the example of Mr. Bean, these self-constituted custodians of morality would soon retire from office.

A young lady of Santa Barbara who is interested in the construction of a new Methodist church recently wrote to Grover Cleveland and President Harrison asking for funds. She offered, in return, to send some pretty moss pressed upon a card. Both Cleveland and Harrison responded, the former with five dollars and the latter with ten cents.

WE observe the name of friend Oliver Hinckley among the incorporators of an extensive carriage company in this city. Mr. Hinckley's card will be found in our advertising columns, and we hope whenever readers of this paper want a good rig at a moderate price they will call upon him.

PREACHER BULLOCK, of Haywards, who went away from home suddenly two weeks ago when charged with criminal conduct toward his daughter, was found worshipping in a Seattle church the following Sunday evening. His course illustrates that, in his mind at least, religion has nothing to do with morality.

LAST week was full of excitement for our contemporary, Mr. Choynski, of Public Opinion. Mr. Choynski himself was arrested on a charge of libel, and his boy Joe came out second best in a prize fight. The case of each is to be retried, and may the best man win.

THERE are said to be about two hundred and fifty thousand Indians in this country, nearly twenty-nine thousand of whom are church-members. From this it appears that a larger percentage of Indians than of white men join the church.

ALTA: "It is just discovered that many of the Bibles distributed by missionaries in China are used in the manufacture of shoe soles. Well, they benefit the Chinese sole, after all." Rats!

MR. FRANK KNOWLES apprises us of the formation of a Secular Union at Des Moines, Ia., with a membership of thirty and cheering prospects.

MR. A. H. SCHOU reports a well-attended and very enjoyable lecture at Odd Fellow's Hall in Oakland last Sunday evening by W. S. Bell.

OREGON STATE CONVENTION.

To the Liberals of Oregon:

The members of the Silverton Secular Union, of Silverton, Oregon, hereby cordially invite all the Liberals of Oregon to meet with them in mass convention at Silverton, June 22 and 23, 1889, for the purpose of organizing a state association on the basis of the Demands of Liberalism, to co-operate with the American Secular Union. The association thus formed is to represent no intellectual creed, but simply equal rights and impartial liberty. It is to be organized in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the words of General Grant—"Keep the church and state forever separate."

All in favor of these great ends, so necessary to the preservation of Republican and Democratic institutions, are solicited to be present for fraternal co-operation. In union there is strength.

J. W. McCLURE, Pres., S. S. U., R. D. ALLEN, Secretary,
MRS. CARRIE FITZGERELL, H. D. MOUNT, E. WOLFARD,
Executive Committee.

OBSERVATIONS.

The last meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society reflected lustre upon the cause, the hall being filled to the doors with an intelligent audience. Mr. F. B. Perkins, the lecturer of the evening, proved to be a most engaging speaker, and "Voltaire and Freedom" was handled with all the skill that comes from familiarity with the subject and ability as an orator. Mr. Perkins is a big man, with broad shoulders and a broad mind, and he is one of the ripest scholars I have ever met.

In the absence of President Chilstrom, Mr. Lemme took the chair. As an opening Professor Schultheis wandered over the piano until he had found all the notes of some great composer's overture, and then proceeded to fill the hall with them.

Mr. Perkins at the outset explained that in an hour he could say but very little of what there was to be said about Voltaire, but he would devote himself to answering some of the current lies concerning this greatest man of his century. Like others who made themselves unpopular in religious circles, Voltaire was the object of unending abuse. It almost seemed as if Judas Iscariot had been given a rest since Voltaire came on the stage. He was as much a Protestant as Martin Luther, yet by Jesuitic strategy the Catholic church had succeeded in convincing Protestants that he was their enemy, and the Protestants mistakenly joined in the hue and cry against him. Catholic cunning and Protestant stupidity had thus combined to do injustice to the greatest of Protestants. Voltaire's attack, the speaker said, was not directed especially against the deity, for he believed in a God. He did not oppose the spirit of Christianity. His phrase, "écrasez l'infame" (crush the infamous), had no reference to Jesus Christ, as his enemies endeavored to show. The grammar of the French language forbade that it should be so interpreted. What Voltaire fought was the French or Gallican church of his day, and Mr. Perkins, by a brief summary of the facts about that institution and the men at the head of it, made it quite apparent that Voltaire was justified in his course. The lecture closed with a number of anecdotes illustrating the wit and genius of the great satirist.

Upon invitation from the chair Mr. G. L. Henderson addressed the meeting. His remarks were complimentary to the lecture, which he characterized as an apotheosis. Mr. Henderson looks scarcely older than he did a dozen years ago. He still holds the Positivist philosophy, exalts the heart as more worthy of admiration than the head, and regards woman as the highest product of evolutionary processes. His contact with nature at Yellowstone Park has rendered his style a trifle freer than used to be allowable in the Liberal Club, and he likes to make the wild western eagle scream.

Mr. Schou could not be present at the meeting here outlined, and the need of a collection made his absence much repined. But Brother Walker worked this side, and Brother Williams that, and soon a merry grist of coin fell jingling in the hat, while Mr. Schultheis improvised sonatas in B flat. The thanks of the society to the speaker are returned, and credit for their services is due to all concerned.

About everybody in San Francisco has seen an old gentleman who goes about the streets bareheaded, selling papers and peddling a two-bit pamphlet entitled "Conversations or Street Dialogues with Father Elphick." The pamphlet is not worth any more than the author charges for it, and it contains about what a man who has nothing valuable to impart to the world might be expected to write. Father Elphick's hobbies are that the head should never be covered by a hat, that no meat or cooked food should be taken into the stomach, and that none but white clothing can be safely worn. He does not smoke or chew tobacco, or drink anything but water, and he has lived for eighty-one years. I met him a few days ago. He walks with a cane, is bent half double, and has a bald spot on his crown. He looks nearer ninety than eighty. His habits of life may be conducive to longevity, but after reading his pamphlet I am convinced that if inordinate vanity were fatal, he would have died young.

Our religious contemporary, the Golden Gate, announces with some display a gift of land worth forty thousand dollars, for the advance of spiritual truth as represented by the above paper. I speak of the Golden Gate as a religious contemporary because I notice in it of late a tendency toward the use of the pious phraseology peculiar to religious prints. The donor of the $40,000, Mrs. Sleeper, is spoken of by the editor as a "grand soul;" he accepts the "sacred trust" with a "prayerful heart;" assures Mrs. Sleeper of a "shining abode" among the "immortals;" says her generosity crowns her "as with an aureole of the life divine," and in other ways socks sanctity into his composition regardless of expense. Furthermore, Editor Owen says: "We have the positive assurance of our spirit friends and guides" that "other noble hearts will be opened in due time to aid in this grand work." Then he invokes: "In thine own time, blessed immortals, not ours—we wait and trust." This is beautiful and restful, but forty thousand dollars would pay for a good many yards of it at market rates for pious resignation.

Mr. G. L. Henderson, from Yellow Stone Park, Wyoming, made FREETHOUGHT a call the other day, and seeing him revived memories of old times. In May, 1876, Henderson & Brown, coal and real estate dealers, rented the building at 141 Eighth street, New York, and christened it Science Hall. Shortly afterward D. M. Bennett moved the Truth Seeker into some upstairs rooms, the Liberal Club came in from Plympton Hall where it had previously met, and the place became the general Freethought headquarters. During the previous winter Mrs. A. C. Macdonald inaugurated some Sunday night meetings on Broadway where Prentice Mulford lectured. Mr. Bennett also delivered there his lecture "An Hour with the Devil." Mr. Henderson picked these meetings up where they broke off, and transferred them finally to Science Hall, and out of them sprang a society called the First Congregation of the Religion of Humanity. Associated with Messrs. Henderson and Brown were T. B. Wakeman, Porter C. Bliss, Henry Evans, Ed. King, Edward Searing, Charles Codman, Courtlandt Palmer, Augusta Cooper Bristol, and others whose names I do not recall. I have heard Courtlandt Palmer say that his connection with the members of this society changed him from a conservative to a Liberal thinker. The society was exclusive. It would not admit D. M. Bennett to membership, and I believe some protested against having the Truth Seeker in the same building. Their objection to Bennett was his tolerance toward Spiritualism, and Stephen Pearl Andrews was excluded on the same grounds. An old German doctor named Habel became interested in the religion of humanity. As he appeared to understand it, Positivism meant what some call social freedom, as the discussion of marriage formed a good part of the proceedings of the society. When Dr. Habel died he left the First Congregation of the Religion of Humanity about five thousand dollars and his library. I have never seen his will, but I have heard that the money was to be used in agitating for the removal of moral taint from illegitimate children.

Messrs. Henderson and Brown soon established a paper called the Positive Thinker to advocate the doctrines of the First Congregation, etc. The type for the paper was set up in the basement under Science Hall by Mr. Henderson's son and daughters, who thus learned the trade. The outward and visible appearance of the Positive Thinker was decidedly amateurish, and when the youngsters had got so they could do their work fairly well, the paper died.

Mr. Henderson soon afterward left New York. The First Congregation continued to meet, but, as near as I can remember, it over-exerted itself in endeavoring to readjust the props under our social institutions, particularly the institution of marriage, and dissolution set in. At the last roll-call, several years ago, less than a quorum responded. As I said, Mr. Henderson left New York. Then the Truth Seeker moved away; the Liberal Club found new quarters; Hugh Byron Brown was lost in matrimony, and secluded himself in the rural felicity of Long Island; and Science Hall as a Liberal headquarters became a memory.

It takes but a few years for scores of prominent figures to pass from view. If the friends of a decade ago were to meet again in Science Hall, how many distinguished ghosts would be among them—Bennett, Andrews, Leland, Palmer, Eyans, Bliss, Mc-

Watters, and many others. It was almost like meeting these once more when Mr. Henderson dropped in the other morning, for they seemed to accompany him, and I was glad to be with them all again. M.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The most appalling disaster of the century overtook the people of Johnstown, Pa., on Friday, May 31. Swollen by floods, a large reservoir above the city burst its dam, and the whole town was swept away. The loss of life is placed at 12,000. The floating houses and driftwood became massed in several places and caught fire, and many persons perished in the flames. The loss of property can hardly be estimated. The floods at other places caused fearful damage and loss of life. The mines at Mt. Carmel, Pa., were flooded and 6,000 miners thrown out of work. At Carlisle the loss reaches $200,000. Harrisburg was half under water. Eighteen people were drowned at Elmira, N. Y. A general appeal for aid for the sufferers has gone out, and will be met both by the people and the government. Governor Waterman, of California, issues a proclamation calling meetings for united action.—Dr. J. M. Bowers, who has been in the county jail for two years under charge and conviction of poisoning his wife, whose life was insured for $17,000 in his favor, has been granted a new trial.—Bishop Vladimir of the Greek church in San Francisco issues a public appeal for funds to repair the church building recently damaged by fire. As the church is a Russian state affair, it may be well to let Russia stand the expense of rehabilitating the sanctuary.

The captain of the steamer Caroline Miller, from St. Marc to New York, reports that his ship was fired at by a Haytian iron-clad, May 15.—There is little new light on the Cronin murder mystery. The inquest was held last Monday.—On May 29 a certificate for a pension was granted to Philip Flood, formerly a private in Company E, Forty-second Ohio Volunteer Infantry. The amount of arrears allowed by the Pension Office in his case is $15,289, his disability dating back to November 14, 1862. This is the largest first payment on record in the Pension Office.—The coroner's jury in the case of Bishop, the deceased mind-reader, found that the cause of his death was coma, and that the doctors acted in good faith, though hastily. The doctors were discharged.—A party of male and female Mormon missionaries is creating great excitement in the vicinity of Tuscola, Ill. They have broken up families, separated husbands and wives, and induced several young ladies to travel with them.—H. Melville Fay, the well-known spirit medium and husband of Anna Eva Fay, has just died in a hospital at Cleveland, O., of cancer of the tongue.—The Connecticut House of Representatives has passed a bill giving women the right to vote on the question of the sale of intoxicating liquors.—John J. L. Plunkett and his wife Mary, the high priest and priestess of Christian Science in New York, have just divorced themselves and Mrs. Plunkett has taken another husband.

The police raided the houses of the leaders of the miners' strike at Dortmund, Germany, the other day, and seized a number of letters and a considerable amount of money. The men whose homes were invaded are accused of being socialist agitators. The editor of the Westphalia People's Gazette has been arrested on a charge of instigating strikes in the mining regions.—An unfounded rumor of the death of the pope caused great excitement in Rome last week.—The unearthing of another "assassination society" is reported from St. Petersburg.—Lord Dunraven's new yacht, built to contest for the America's cup, is proving herself a very fast boat, but the general belief is that she cannot beat the Volunteer.

Mr. Tucker's Editorial Policy.

From "Liberty."

The editor is at the helm again, as well and sound as ever, and determined to pursue his original editorial policy of pleasing himself first, whether he pleases his subscribers or not.

B. F. UNDERWOOD's address during June will be Silverton, Oregon, care of Dr. J. W. McClure.

PROFESSOR LADD'S BOOK.—"WHAT IS THE BIBLE?"

A volume with the above title, published by the Scribners, within the past year, is a compendium of a larger work in two volumes, by the same author, George T. Ladd, D.D., Professor of Philosophy in Yale University.

The question which is the title of this work will be a surprise to many Christians as well as Freethinkers: to Christians, because it opens a question which they had thought settled centuries ago; and to Freethinkers because the question is opened by an orthodox doctor of divinity of Yale College. Many other surprises meet us in the perusal of the work, and very pleasant ones too, in the form of candid concessions on points where heretofore we have been accustomed to meet only offensive dogmatism.

The author does not claim to be an unbiased investigator. He says in his preface that "the purpose of the book is apologetic. It is written in the interest of faith." Yet he frankly admits that "the seeker for a satisfactory answer to the question, What is the Bible? cannot too early learn that, strictly speaking, no answer to this question can be gained solely by the Bible itself." He says "this book, indeed, appears before us as one, but it is really a collection of books separated by centuries of time with respect to the date of their origin. Moreover, it was centuries before the collection itself became united into a whole by the action and usages of the Christian church. Even the writer of the latest of these books had, therefore, no Bible as a whole before him upon the nature of which he might be inspired to give us a declaration from God."

Here is an admission that for more than four thousand years the world was left without a Bible. Why should the heavenly father leave his children so long without a revelation of his will, if that book is such a revelation, and so essential to their salvation?

He says that "the question, What is the Bible? is a question of fact." "The place of first consideration in the entire discussion is given to the facts. And the facts must, at all events, be frankly, fearlessly, and constantly kept in view." And yet, he says, "it is as Christians that we begin this examination; and as Christians, with faith confirmed, enlightened, and enlarged, we expect to finish it."

He now enters upon his investigation with this preliminary statement: "From the necessities of the case, no general view of the origin and nature of the Bible could precede the time when the different separate writings of which it is composed had all been finished and collected into a canon of sacred scripture. A theory of the inspiration of the Bible in the sense we are accustomed to attach to these words, could not originate, therefore, until some time after the Christian era. Nor have we any means of telling precisely what the biblical writers themselves would have thought, in answer to the modern question, What is the Bible?" (Ch. i, p. 17).

This statement narrows the field of investigation, and brings it within historic time. It also leaves out of the discussion, not only the whole Jewish people who lived prior to the collection of the sacred canon, but also Christ and his apostles; the writers of the New Testament, as well as the old, and also the early Christian fathers. None of these had a Bible.

And now, after all these are left out, who is to answer the question authoritatively, and tell us what is the Bible? We have got past the time when men were supposed to have written by inspiration, and can now look only to men not inspired. And here he asks the question, "How much consideration shall be given to Jewish, and early Christian writers, outside of the Bible, upon the question of its origin and nature?" To this he answers: "The opinion of Jewish rabbi or Christian bishop is in no case an authoritative opinion" (p. 18).

He now comes to the consideration of the unauthoritative "views of the uninspired Jewish and Christian writers," and thinks that "perhaps their chief value consists in this, that the study of them shows what influences operated upon the minds of the men who, without being by any means fully aware of the meaning of their action, were really engaged in fixing the canons of the Old and New Testaments."

And here, to a person of ordinary understanding, the argument of the reverend doctor becomes exceedingly attenuated. He makes it rest on, not only uninspired, unauthoritative opinion, but on the work of "men who, without being by any means fully aware of the meaning of their action, were really engaged in fixing the canons of the Old and New Testaments."

Here we are taught, by an orthodox doctor of divinity, that the Bible was collected, constructed, and the sacred canons "fixed" by uninspired men who did not know what they were doing! What an admission is this, by a doctor of divinity, writing "in the interest of faith!" How much "faith" can people have in the sacredness of the Bible after learning this fact?

And yet, after these damaging admissions, he says, "We proclaim ourselves among those who believe in the perpetual inspiration of the church of God. And indeed without believing heartily in this, no one can intelligently believe in holy scripture" (p. 19).

And here the question arises, How comes the book to be "holy scripture," which is constructed by uninspired men, who were unconscious of what they were doing? Where does the "holiness" come in? And again, if the men who "fixed" the canons of the Old and New Testaments were not inspired, and "the church of God is perpetually inspired," were these men members of the "church of God?" If not, how happens it that men, not of the church, and "uninspired," have constructed the "holy scriptures" for the church?

And now, after having been told by the author that "the theory of the inspiration of the Bible originated after all the books were written and collected," and that we have no means of knowing what the writers thought of their own work and that the books were collected and "the canon fixed" by uninspired men, we are now told that "the earliest outside view, as it were, of the inspiration of any of the Old Testament scriptures is to be found in the Old Testament Apocrypha" (p. 20).

As the Apocrypha is rejected as authority by all Protestants, this oldest authority for inspiration is no authority. After devoting some pages to the Apocrypha and the Talmud, neither of which is accepted as authority by Protestants, he introduces Philo, a learned but fanatical Jew, who believed strongly in the inspiration of Moses and the Mosaic law, but who did not value so highly the other Jewish writings. He never accepted Christianity. The value of his opinion may be estimated by the fact that he believed not only that the law of Moses was all perfect truth; but also that all truth was contained in the law of Moses. Professor Ladd's estimate of these authorities is given in these words: "In Philo, as well as in the Talmud, we find little genuine wheat after much beating of straw."

So far, then, he has introduced no real authority in support of the inspiration of the Bible. He next introduces Josephus, another learned Jew, who was born A.D. 37. He, like Philo, had fantastic ideas of inspiration, and particularly of the inspiration of Moses. He also thought that many others, of his own time, were inspired, and that he himself had inspiration of a high order. But Professor Ladd seems to place no value on the opinion of Josephus.

He then turns to "the fathers of the ancient Christian church," and after referring to their differences, and their agreements, he says: "As to the nature of the Bible, however, no one well-developed doctrine exists in the ancient church." . . . "What is now understood as biblical science did not exist; the time for a comprehensive and well-established doctrine of the origin and nature of its sacred writings had not yet arrived in the history of the church" (p. 29).

After referring, at considerable length, to the conflicting views of the fathers of the first two centuries, as to the Old Testament, and its curious allegorical interpretation, he says: "Thus Origen could speak in the highest terms of the inspiration of the Hebrew Bible, in every jot and tittle of its contents, and yet also speak of 'scandals and offenses and impossibilities' as cleaving to its letter."

He also says: "Some of the heretical writings of the age went so far as to make a direct attack on the trustworthiness of the Hebrew scriptures. We find the 'Clementine Homilies,' for example, complaining of the prophecies of the Old Testament as obscure, foolish, inglorious; the so-called Mosaic laws are affirmed to have been written five hundred years after Moses (although it ought not to be said in public that those chapters were added so late to the Bible, lest the unlearned multitudes be disturbed)" (p. 31).

It seems that there were differences of opinion as to the character of the so-called Mosaic writings even at that early day; and that the allegations of these so-called "heretical writings" were in exact harmony with modern biblical scholarship. After stating that the fathers quoted from the apocryphal books as "divine scriptures," he says, "We see, then, that the ancient Christian church had no developed doctrine of sacred scripture; no one self-consistent view with respect to its details" (p. 36).

"Of the New Testament writings, however, the church took a more fresh, untrammelled, and distinctively Christian view" (p. 36). And yet, he says, "practical and dogmatic considerations finally triumphed over those which had regard rather to truth as ascertained by free and scholarly inquiry."

After alluding to the allegorical and fanciful interpretation of scripture by Athanasius, Eusebius, Ambrose, and Basil, he comes down to Augustine and Jerome, "the two names most prominent in the latter part of the sixth century, and for centuries afterward." He says: "The influence of Augustine upon the development of the doctrine of sacred scripture was indeed deservedly powerful; but it was in many respects very bad. He looked on the Bible, not chiefly as a devout Christian scholar does, but rather as does the dogmatist interested in using it to secure certain practical ecclesiastical ends. No error must be admitted to have occurred in the canonical writers; faith will totter if the authority of the divine scriptures wavers" (p. 39-40).

So it seems that Professor Ladd is only following the example of Augustine when he "writes in the interest of faith."

Of Jerome he says: "The scholar Jerome undertook the laudable but then extremely difficult task of translating the Old Testament into Latin from the original text, rather than from the obscure and debased text of the Greek version. The same prejudice then existed against having traditional errors corrected which has always existed, and which exists even now. It is not strange, therefore, that the work of Jerome was done in a timid and vacillating way" (p. 41).

Up to this point—the end of the sixth century—we have found no answer to the question: What is the Bible? and no evidence of its inspiration that Professor Ladd seems to consider of any value. From this point, until the time of the Reformation, the opinions of Augustine seem to have controlled the church. During these centuries "the cause of biblical study made almost no progress."

Of the Reformation, in the sixteenth century, the professor says: "It was not the reading of the Bible by the people which produced the Reformation; it was the Reformation itself which procured the reading of the Bible" (p. 45).

What, then, produced the Reformation? The professor tells us in the preceding sentence: "The love of learning was now increasing and spreading abroad."

At this point we may pause for a retrospective view of the world and of the church. According to Bible chronology, the world had existed and the human family had lived upon it more than five thousand years. According to the teachings of science, in which the church now professes to believe, the world had existed at least forty-eight millions of years; and the human family had lived upon it not less than two hundred and fifty thousand years. And yet, after much talk about a revelation, and a Bible, the revelation was not at all understood by the professed church of God, and "there was no settled, well-defined view of the Bible." The church had ruled kingdoms and empires, temporally and spiritually, for a thousand years; during which time it had suppressed science, and put to death the most distinguished of its teachers. It had caused the death of millions in its bloody wars, and kept the people in such ignorance that those terrible years are still characterized as the Dark Ages. And now, when the "love of learning" begins to produce a "reformation," the church, eager as ever to suppress knowledge, burned at the stake in Rome, the noble Bruno, for no other offense than the teaching of science. Thousands have since shared his fate; and though the power to persecute has, in a great degree, been taken from the church, its war on science is still kept up, and the Bible is still its weapon. This Bible, this "revelation from God," this "sacred scripture," by whose authority the "infallible church" has burned and butchered millions of innocent victims, is still so little understood that the most educated of the clergy, in our oldest institutions of learning, in the most enlightened branches of the church, are still groping their way through ancient legends of Jewish and Christian mythologies, asking and trying to answer the question: "What is the Bible?" So far we have no answer to the question, from Professor Ladd. We have learned that the Christian church has constructed a book which they call the Bible; and that they are now inquiring into the character of that book.

In future numbers I will try to give the results of the professor's work in trying to solve this difficult problem.

J. W. NORTH.

THOMAS PAINE AND "HIGHER CHRISTIANITY."

To the Editors of Freethought:

Verily the world moves in spite of its creeds and dogmas. That the "heretics of one age become the saints of another" is being verified in Thomas Paine. A sprightly and Christian correspondent of the Daily Union of this city, Mrs. Calhoun, said, in a recent letter from New York, that mere patriotism was not ennobling, there being nothing elevating in the sentiment, "My country, right or wrong," and she longed to see the time when the people would rise to the "higher Christianity" of "the world is my country, to do good my religion."

No one will dispute that this sentiment is a good deal higher than ordinary Christianity; but it is not probable, from her previous writings, that Mrs. Calhoun would have quoted it in that connection had she known its author. But it is a hopeful sign to see Christians aspiring to something higher than the old-time Christianity; and where could they find these higher sentiments better portrayed than in the writings of Thomas Paine? The civilization, which they boast their religion has produced, is due entirely to the "higher" kind, of which Paine was one of the grandest exponents. As to the old low-caste specimens, of which they are very justly getting to be ashamed, their influence has never been elevating. "As a man thinks so is he," hence, those who think their God is a cruel monster do not lack much of being that way themselves. It is natural that they should.

An example of the hardening effect of Christian belief came under my observation this evening, though it was not the first, by many. A refined and agreeable minister of the gospel called with his good lady to see my daughter-in-law, and, she being absent, I undertook to entertain them till she returned. The gentleman amused himself with a newspaper, while I tried to kill time with his wife. Pretty soon he laughed outright, then read aloud the item of news which had amused him, and then his wife laughed with him. It was about a man in this city who had been divorced from his wife, but was so attached to his two little children that he obtained permission from the court to visit them at their mother's home. On Sunday afternoon he went to see the children and found the house empty and the family gone, he knew not whither.

How an incident so sad could create pleasure in the minds of respectable and apparently amiable people, I could not imagine; yet such was the case. Seeing that I did not smile, the lady said she had no sympathy with "that sort of people." Why should she care for God's reprobates? Those who are to sing psalms in heaven with their friends frying in hell, must begin the hardening process here; and they do. It is a natural consequence of their belief, to be either callous or miserable.

The "higher Christianity" of Thomas Paine would have a humanizing influence on "followers of the Lamb" like these, though I can't see where the Christian part comes in.

Take courage in your work, Mr. Editor, you are helping to spread that "higher civilization." We don't accept the word Christianity. It has a bad record, and we repudiate it. Yours for honesty and truth,

MARY A. WHITE.

San Diego, Cal., May 23.

BOUND volumes of FREETHOUGHT for 1888 may be had for $2.50

HOSPITALS NOT CREATIONS OF CHRISTIANITY.

Christians are very apt to claim all the good things of the world as the results of their religion, but sometimes we are compelled to prove to them that there were good things before the days of Jesus of Nazareth. This matter of hospitals is certainly one in which they must stand aside and allow "them of old time" to bear the palm.

Hospitals are evidently the outgrowth of dispensaries, and we are told that as far back as the eleventh century B. C. the Egyptians had medical officers who were paid by the state and who attended in some public place to prescribe for the sick who came there. These were qualified men, for at this early date there was a College of Physicians, and only those who were licensed by this college were allowed to practice. Some of these were specialists for the eyes, the teeth, and the brain.

In Athens, in the fifth century B. C., we have the first mention of the word hospital, though dispensaries were common before that time into which patients were received, and in which doctors paid by the state sought to relieve the sufferings of humanity.

The Romans had public physicians at an early date, though for a long time they prided themselves on not having copied the Greeks in this particular. In the early days, every house was thrown open in times of sickness or accident.

"For the Romans were like brothers,
In the brave days of old,"

and hospitals were not needed where such free hospitality was exercised.

We may suppose, from a remark in the Bible, that the Jews had one hospital, for incurables; for Uzziah retired to a "several house" when he was pronounced to be afflicted with leprosy.

The Mexicans had hospitals in all their principal cities, which were well supplied with every necessary food and medicine, and even with surgical appliances, the study of anatomy being a necessary part of the curriculum of the men and women doctors who attended these institutions.

But to those who know anything of the life of Buddha, and who have heard anything of the precepts of self-sacrifice and benevolence that he taught, it will be no surprise to find that India is the home of the hospital, as the aim of this great teacher was the endeavor to solve the way of saving men from disease and death. About 324 B. C., King Asoka commanded his people to build hospitals for the poor, the sick, and distressed, at each of the four gates of Patua and throughout his dominions. Of these, Fa Hian, a Chinese pilgrim, writing about 400 A. D., speaks as follows:

The nobles and landowners of this country have founded hospitals in the city to which the poor of all countries, the destitute, the cripples, the diseased, may repair for shelter. They receive every kind of help gratuitously. Physicians inspect their diseases, and according to their cases order them food and drink, decoctions and medicines, everything in fact which may contribute to their ease. When cured they depart at their own convenience.

Another Chinese pilgrim, writing in 648 A. D., mentions a multitude of these establishments. This open-handed generosity to the "poor of all countries" is a contrast to the deeds of the teacher of Galilee, who announced that he had not come "save to the lost sheep of the house of Israel," and seemed to grudge the cure of those of other nations, though (according to the story) it cost him but a word to effect such cure.

The first Christian hospital was built by a Roman lady named Fabiola, in the fourth century A. D., so that it took some time for Christianity to begin to develop this good fruit, though Egyptians, Greeks, and Hindus had long before shown the value of it.

Respecting insane asylums the record is as little in favor of Christianity. The Egyptians and Greeks cared for the insane in the precincts of some of their temples; the Mohammedans in the seventh century built asylums for the insane at Fez, while the first Christian asylum we hear of was built at Valencia in Spain in 1409. These pagans and unbelievers treated their insane patients with kindness, and sought to relieve them by diversions. It was left for Christianity to devise the mediæval modes of cure, the prison, the chain, the rack, the stake, combined with every form of abuse that ingenuity could devise. This was in the palmy days of the church, when she had full sway. Now, reason and science once more assert themselves, and the modern followers of Hippocrates and Galen, having no belief in demoniacal possession, have no need to resort to the violent and abusive methods devised by ignorant priests for driving the demon out of his supposed quarters.

These items are sufficient to prove that, in the care of the sick and insane, Christians have no right to ask, "What have unbelievers done for the world?"—M. EMILY ADAMS, in the New Ideal.

OUR CENTENNIAL.—THE OTHER SIDE.

Was it not the object of the Centennial to depict, in a graphic, striking manner, the present actual condition of the whole people of the United States as a republic, after a hundred years of experiment, and to contrast it with the monarchical systems of government in the Old World?

In those governments, the greatest good of the fewest number is sought, and perpetuated by inheritance, regardless of intrinsic worth on the part of the individual office-holder or the property possessor; these having been originally obtained by the sword, war, and maintained by laws framed by the conquerors regardless of inherent primitive rights. The king ruled by divine right, which the war-priesthood proclaimed, and the kings and priests divided the spoil. The priests diverted the attention of the common people from earthly things by pointing them to their imaginary heavens. They affirm that woman is the source of all evil to the human family, and that the man should rule over her by divine appointment, as a punishment for introducing sin into the world. And the kings and their aristocracy, under priestly inspiration and at their instigation, in the mean time, take entire possession of the land of the nation, of woman (half the population), and of the mass of the people. The landless people they divide, using one-half as soldiers to keep the other half in subjection, and to maintain their power of possession. In both church and state, it was authority for truth, not truth for authority.

The American Revolution was preceded by an earthquake and a heaven-quake (Napoleon's "war of ideas"). Thomas Paine, Franklin, Jefferson, and their peers, were Infidels to the infidel systems of civil and ecclesiastical governments of the Old World. These constitute "the great whore of Babylon, with mystery written on her forehead." Governments, they proclaimed, were instituted for the good of the people; the greatest good for the greatest number; and by the people and for the people; vox populi, vox Dei—the voice of the people being, henceforth, the voice of God. The "Age of Reason" was written and published in place of orthodox mystery and authority. The primordial "Rights of Man" followed; these existed before any government; and "Common Sense" was next in order, and then came the Declaration of Independence—"The Crisis," that brought on the revolution. It succeeded, and a government was established, based theoretically upon the "inalienable rights" of human beings—that all men were created free and equal, and possessed of certain inalienable rights, and government should acknowledge and enforce those rights. Jefferson said, "No man has right to land only in usufruct." No person could believe or disbelieve any proposition, as they willed, or because of authority of either church or state.

The inherent rights of men and women are equal, and there should be equality of the sexes in the family, in society, and in governmental affairs. In the earthly order, woman should have entire control of the sexual relation pertaining to reproduction. In that order education should be universal. Each child born should be equally educated as a citizen of the republic. There should be no monopoly of knowledge, for knowledge is power. And in a republic all the sovereign people should be taught morality—self-supporting industry—hygiene. There would be no place for army, navy, doctors, or lawyers. No priests or millionaires. No poor and no criminals.

Paine said, "The most formidable weapon against error is reason; and I trust that I shall never use any other." "I believe in one God and no more; and I hope for happiness beyond this life." "I believe in the equality of man, and that religion consists in endeavoring to make our fellow-creatures happy." A government that was purely secular, conserving the freedom of conscience of sects, and non-sects; from the Infidel founders to the most fanatical Shakers, no sooner was this entirely secular government established than the Catholic and Protestant priesthood united, like Pilate and Herod, to oppose and subvert it by introducing their Gods and Christs into the Constitution, as they introduce poisons under the name of medicine into their own physical systems. The evils that remained after the government went into practical operation—unlimited land possessions, chattel slavery, wages slavery, woman's subjection and disfranchisement, and other forms of wrong, like class-education—brought on the Civil War, costing thousands of lives and millions of property. Now the priesthood of the old heavens and earth are seeking to subvert the "reason" and "rights" of the American people, contrary to their "common sense," and a second "crisis" is impending.

The Centennial has shown up one side of the great American republic—the wonderful prosperity and astonishing social and pecuniary success of the class-educated part of the United States; a class educated in the common schools, then in high schools, academies, and colleges, and, finally, in the military institutions of the miscalled republic of the United States, at the expense of the laboring part of the population, who are the wealth-producing majority. These are left in ignorance and poverty, to become either the chattel or wages-slaves of the non-producing, class-educated part of the population, who had "taken away the key of knowledge" from their fellow-citizens. "Knowledge is power." And thus they became the ruling powers of the state—legislators enacting laws, and then lawyers to interpret those laws, by means of which they monopolized the life-elements of the nation—the land, the money, and the labor of the uneducated men, women, and children of this "boundless continent."

Whilst the governments of the Old World are "founded in force and fraud," beginning with force, the American government is founded in ignorance, and then perpetuated by fraud and force; it ends in a large army and navy, as exhibited in the grand display in the streets of New York and its adjacent waters. The pomp and pride, and glittering display of dress and of music—in war to drown the cries of the wounded; in peace, to captivate the uneducated and ignorant, and render them willing slaves to their educated brothers, who had taken away the key of "knowledge," destroyed their "reason," robbed them of the "inalienable rights" of man—the elements of existence, by which alone life and liberty can be maintained or the pursuit of happiness be successful.

Washington declared that this was not a Christian but a secular government. His private secretary was Thomas Paine, who said, in the crisis of the Revolution, "These are the times that try men's souls." Paine hated war like a Quaker; and the orthodox, war-Christians of all denominations—Catholic included—in both armies, hated "Tom Paine," as they opprobriously termed him, slanderously calling him Infidel and heretic, because he believed in the "Age of Reason," in the "Rights of Man," in "Common Sense," in the equality of men and women, who should be equally represented in making and executing all the laws, social and governmental; and who said, "I believe in one God and no more."

THE SECOND CENTENNIAL.

Let us have another Centennial, wherein shall be brought out, to the blaze of day, the dark side of the picture of the great American republic. In our great cities, Jefferson declared, the people would be piled one upon another, and would devour one another, as under the old-world rule. Is it not true? He said, "No man has right to land except in usufruct." If carried out, there would be no great cities or "cancers on the body politic."

If there be a skeleton in our national house let it be exhibited; let us see things as they are. Take off the covering that is over all people, and the veil that is spread over the face of all nations. Let us have an exhibition, by processions, of the uneducated and robbed classes of society. Empty the slums, pauper houses, hospitals, tenement-houses, jails, and prisons, bringing out the poor and tramps. Give them appropriate emblems, banners, and mottoes. The fifty or a hundred thousand fallen women, with a like number of needle women, would make a grand display, with their friends escorting. Then the landless men, who have become soldiers and sailors from necessity, who learn to kill their fellows that the rich may feed and clothe and shelter themselves.

Let the "City by the Sea" ask Whittier to write another ode; he knows how to do it. His heart is not turned to stone; it is in the right place. The theme would inspire him, and the Shakers would indorse him.

(Elder) F. W. EVANS.

Mt. Lebanon, N. Y.

"BEDROCK REASONS."

To the Editors of Freethought:

In your issue of May 25, 1889, "J. C. P." sets out his "bed-rock" reasons for opposition to woman suffrage. He says that sovereignty rests upon the strong arms and physical strength of men only. The natural corollary from this that sovereignty rests only in the arms and physical strength of the strongest—that is, as Senator Ingalls claims, "might makes right." That was the basis of absolute despotism, but is not the basis of republican government. William the Conqueror relied upon the strong arm of his retainers to sustain an absolute despotism. There was a concession to the old form of choosing kings by a popular vote. Suffrage was not, at that time, accorded to the whole people, nor to those bearing arms or capable of bearing arms. Commutation of military service was the rule, and he who commuted did so because his land was charged with the military service. Unless he owned land he owed no direct military service to the king. In this country the army and navy are paid by the nation to do its fighting. The police of the several states are paid by their respective governments to do police duty. If fighting is to be based upon the ability to fight or to compel submission to law, then the soldiers and the police alone should vote. This is not the rule of republics, nor is it a reasonable rule.

His second assumption, that the weakness of the land is due to the weakness of women and children, has no relation to the question of suffrage. Physically weak men, old men, paralytic men, provided they can reach the polls, are permitted to vote. Yet in a foreign war or any domestic riot these men would be as helpless as the women, if not more so.

His third point is that the ballot should not be surrendered to "incompetent, unwilling, and irresponsible persons," chief among whom he places the W. C. T. U., backed by the clergy. If this were a good reason for stripping one class in the community of all political rights, why not strike down the class of irresponsible men who vote under the direction of saloon keepers, and of political bosses who stop at no measures to carry an election, and who profess to have the vote of their respective districts for sale to the highest bidder?

If it is the right of an Agnostic or an Atheist to vote according to his views of right, he must concede to others the same liberty of thought and action. The despotisms of the church, by which Freethought was suppressed and the doctrine of heresy declared treason against the state, and punished by confiscation of property, by excommunication on the part of the church, and by being branded as a villain and an outlaw, forfeiting liberty, property, and all the rights of freemen, were based upon the same doctrine of expediency as "J. C. P." contends for—that the community has a right to decide absolutely what is for its best interests, and to invade personal rights to secure the so-called best good of the community.

As I am not a prohibitionist, nor a church-member, I am not defending the right of the clergy, or their followers, to dominate over the state, to suppress Freethought, to make it a crime to be honest, nor am I willing to take the other position that for fear this may come to pass, Liberals should unite to strip Christians of their political rights, or disfranchise the women of this nation for fear that they will tyrannize over Freethinkers.

In New Orleans the female teachers of the public schools had no protection in regard to the payment of their wages, while the male officials took care to use whatever public money there was for the payment of their salaries.

If "J. C. P." will read a late article in "The Journal of United Labor," showing the condition of the working girls of Chicago, who are compelled to work at starvation wages and are forced almost to prostitution to keep body and soul together, he will see the manner in which we protect women where they have the power. It is all very well to talk of chivalry, but the employing class in this country have no chivalric ideas. They protect their female employees exactly as the slaveowners protected their slaves, and in the same spirit—to obtain the most work for the least pay, and with utter disregard of the health or morals of those they employ.

Many of the members of the W. C. T. U. feel these wrongs and outrages upon their sex, and they desire the ballot so that it may be a shield against these wrongs. It is true that they have made prohibition one of the leading features of their work. It is equally true that many of their members also acknowledge that other measures are needed. And whether prohibition is to be the law of this country or not, is a question to be decided by male votes as well as by the votes of the females. It follows as inevitably in their work, as it has in other reform work, that they will come to think and act for themselves, that they will not be blind followers of clerical leaders. It is enough for us to accord equal rights now, and to trust to the advance of intelligence and honesty to secure to all equal rights in the future. W. S. BUSH.

Seattle, W. T., May 27, 1889.

THE WATTS-DRIVER "DEBATE."

It seems that the recent meeting between Mr. Charles Watts and the Rev. Mr. Driver, at Chicago, was not a debate, after all, notwithstanding Dr. Driver was announced with a flourish of trumpets as the great "answerer" of Infidels and skeptics. E. A. Stevens writes:

After Mr. Watts arrived in Chicago, Dr. Driver said he would not debate, that he had conscientious scruples against discussion; but if Mr. Watts would lead off for an hour each evening, he (Driver) would follow him. His conscience was not troubled, however, at such manifest unfairness. Merton Smith, who represented D. L. Moody, finally agreed that half-hour speeches should be allowed, in which Mr. Watts could say what he pleased and Dr. Driver could use his time as he chose. This gave the Christian champion all the advantage, but we consented, as Mr. Watts could well afford to concede everything, and then, metaphorically, wipe him out. The four nights discussion were reduced to three at Dr. Driver's request, he pleading indisposition and fatigue.

Large and intelligent audiences attended each session, and on some occasions the opera house was fairly packed. It was quite a task to enforce the rule demanded by the Christians, that no demonstrations of approval or disapproval be made, as they were the most frequent violators of it.

The learned doctor of divinity is quite an interesting emotional orator, a student, and connected with a theological university at his home; he is adroit in his discussion, but is no debater, and his greatest ingenuity was evidenced in his evasion of the questions Mr. Watts put to him.

It would be utterly impossible in a single short article to summarize the discussion, or to do anything like justice to Mr. Watts's magnificent championship of secular principles. Thoroughly armed at all points, he is perfectly impervious to the aimless shafts of his orthodox adversary. He is a great compendium of secular history and philosophy, and the skill of his methods is almost marvelous, for his mind and tongue are trained to work in rapid unison, and he is ever ready to clinch with logic and reason the points of his opponent, and to this is added a well-tempered satire that cuts like a Damascus blade. Through the greater part of the discussion he preserves a courteous suavity, and, it might be said, an "insinuating smoothness," but before he closes he marshals his facts and descends on his unfortunate adversary like an avalanche, sweeping all before him.

The lectures delivered Sunday afternoon and evening drew large houses and were applauded to the echo. Both were scholarly productions, evincing a breadth of culture and depth of research strongly contrasting with even the most distinguished doctors of divinity that the Christians could put forth. A large portion of the orthodox element were of that class who, "convinced against their will, are of the same opinion still." It may be there were a few open to conviction, and still possessed of sufficient intelligence to discern the difference between rationalism and emotionalism. Such must have been impressed with Mr. Watts's forcible arguments. Several new members have been added to our roll of honor, so we know "we have not labored in vain, nor spent our strength for naught."

A resolution of thanks was unanimously tendered Mr. Watts for the ability with which he championed our cause, and the intellectual treat his lectures had proved.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL MANUAL.

One of the most important questions of the times, which must very soon be met by the American people, is that of moral instruction in our public schools.

How to teach children the purest principles of morality without teaching them sectarian dogmas, is a matter involving the very existence of our free public-school system.

Individuals cannot, with propriety, insist that their peculiar religious tenets shall be taught to those children whose guardians do not accept such doctrines, and they have an undoubted right to object to anything being taught in a free unsectarian secular school to which any patron can reasonably make objections.

Recent events in Boston, Chicago, Pittsburg, and other places, show that a bitter controversy on this subject will soon convulse our entire country, and a wise policy requires that some common scheme of moral instruction shall be suggested to our state schools, which shall be acceptable to all.

In a recent Symposium got up by the editor of the Christian Register of Boston, on the main question, "Can morality be taught in our public schools without sectarianism?" a large number of the leading educators of our country of different denominations, including Hebrews, answered in the affirmative. We, who believe it can be done, are bound to show how to do it. With this in view, I venture to make the following practical proposition:

I will contribute $100 to raise $1,000, to be offered as a prize for the best practical scheme, in the form of a manual, or other device, for the use of teachers in our public schools, showing how the purest ethics can be taught without teaching such doctrinal tenets as could justly be offensive to either Catholics or Protestants, Jews or Liberals.

This pledge of $100 is conditioned upon the pledge for this object of the total sum of $1,000.

When the whole amount of $1,000 is promised, the subscribers shall have a friendly conference in person, or by proxy, to arrange details and select a committee to act as judges upon the papers submitted, and to award the prize.

Several personal letters have been sent out containing the above proposition, and the following pledges have been promptly made:

R. B. Westbrook, Philadelphia, Pa.....	$100 00
G. E. Swan, Beaver Dam, Wis.....	100 00
Joseph Sedgebeer, Painesville, O.....	100 00
L. Geiger, Hudson, N. Y.....	100 00
W. H. Forwood, Fort Snelling, Minn.....	100 00

We now need $500 more. I earnestly appeal to all patriots, and especially to members and friends of the American Secular Union, to subscribe this amount of money at once. We prefer subscriptions of $100 each, but smaller amounts will be accepted. Let us have at least three more of $100 subscribers. Let the balance be made up by $50 and $25 pledges. Progressive thinkers are often called iconoclasts and destructive critics—tearing down without an effort to build up. There is too much truth in this charge. If we object to the present system of "religious" instruction in our public schools, and in Girard College, and other institutions that should be free from sectarianism, we are bound to show a more "excellent way." The ecclesiastical war between Romanists and Protestants over "religion" in our state schools will at last have to be settled by Secularists and on the Secular principle. Persons holding to the Nine Demands of Liberalism must lead in the great work. Moreover, we Liberals need just such a manual as we propose for use in our own families and societies, to place side by side with Washburn's "Cosmian Hymn Book" and Bierbower's "The Virtues and their Reasons" and other similar works. Let us now vindicate ourselves from the slander that we are indifferent to the question of morals and that we are mere agitators and theorists. Let us do something for the permanent good of the world.

We hope to have the proposed subscription filled within one week from the time that it reaches our friends through our Liberal papers. Responses may be addressed directly to the undersigned.

R. B. WESTBROOK,
Pres. Am. Sec. Union, 1,707 Oxford street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A FREETHINKER'S MODEL RANCH.

If anyone in California wants to know how to make a living and lay up money on the products of ten acres, he should spare the time to visit the beautiful little home of D. Edson Smith, out on the west side of town. He settled there six years ago in the tall mustard, and went to work to make a comfortable home. If ever a man succeeded, he is that man. We visited his place this week, for the first time in two years, and saw his theories of farming demonstrated. Every species of fruit-tree, nut-tree, and shrub of value on the coast is growing, flourishing, and bearing splendid crops of the best varieties in existence. Between the trees he has every species and variety of the best garden vegetables growing all the time. But he takes care of his ground, and it grows richer all the time. While he raises nearly everything he eats, he always has a large surplus to sell, which pays for his groceries, clothing, etc., and leaves a bank account in his favor besides. His berries are the finest, his larger fruit the best, and his vegetables the nicest that come to the Santa Ana market. He keeps a fine cow, a horse, and two or three hundred chickens. All are put to the best use and are made profitable. Everything he touches prospers. The only secret is that he works. He neglects nothing. Everything is attended to promptly and in the best possible manner. No half-tended stock, no sickly, drooping chickens, no trouble or clouds, no fits of despondency, flourish or grow on his ranch. All is sunshine, hard but agreeable work, and prosperity. The secret is, he toils while others do not. He toils while others play. He improves each shining hour while others sit around and wait for something to turn up. His ten-acre ranch is the model of Southern California, and is worth a visit from all who visit the valley. Lastly, it is not for sale.—Santa Ana Standard.

WHAT THE SECULAR UNION IS DOING.

Charles Watts, editor of the Tronto Secular Thought, bears witness to the activity and efficiency of the American Secular Union in the appended editorial from his paper:

• During our recent visit to Chicago we availed ourselves of the opportunity presented of ascertaining from official sources the nature and extent of the excellent work being accomplished by the American Secular Union. For thirty years we have been in favor of Secular organization, inasmuch as we regard it as being the most effectual means of gathering together and consolidating the elements so very necessary to the success of our movement. Seeing the valuable service now being rendered to our cause by the American Secular Union we are, more than ever, impressed with the advantages of organized effort. Not only is the Union a centre of the great Freethought party of the United States, but in its associated capacity it has special facilities for inaugurating and carrying out measures of reform which cannot be so readily done by individual effort. The Union is now engaged in the formation of branch societies throughout the continent, making a legal protest against the dangerous encroachments of the Roman Catholics, endeavoring to regain the Girard gift which has been wickedly stolen from us by orthodox Christians, and seeking to secure a manual on moral teachings, apart from theology, for the education of the Secular youth. This is the programme of the Union, and its forms a record of practical work which is as creditable to the organization as it will be useful to all Secularists. It appears to us from our personal knowledge that this organization is deserving of the active support of every person who desires to aid in obtaining the triumph of justice, freedom, and mental liberty.

The secretary of the Union, Mr. E. A. Stevens, is undoubtedly a hard worker who is determined not to allow "grass to grow under his feet." Evidently his heart is in the cause, to which he heartily devotes his time and energy. From what we saw during the five days we were in Chicago his powers of endurance would seem to have no end; early and late was he at his office attending to his manifold duties. We sincerely hope that his devotion to and zeal for the cause will meet with that appreciation which they deserve.

We were exceedingly gratified at the promising condition of the Chicago local Secular Society. It is based upon a sound principle, and has the advantage of having the alliance of "young blood and old heads." While the younger members of the society—both ladies and gentlemen—are able and active, they have the supreme advantage of the great experience and freely-rendered services of such well-tried workers as Mrs. Freeman and Mr. Jehu Barr. The society combines rational amusement with intellectual discipline, the great secret of success in such a movement as ours. Not content with having lectures on Sundays, singing, dramatic, and debating classes are held during the week, and thus the co-operation of old and young, male and female, is secured. If these advantages were possessed and judiciously used by all Freethought societies throughout this vast continent, Secularism ere long would be even a greater power in our midst than it is at present.

A Woman's Plea.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In FREETHOUGHT of May 25 were several letters concerning "Women and Politics," and I would ask the liberty of answering the one by "J. C. P." First let me say to him that sovereignty may be the life of all governments where the bayonet is the principal power; as, for instance, it is to-day in Russia. There was once a time when everything was ruled by brute force and only those that were the strongest survived. If men were not endowed with the passions that Nature has given them, women would have been laid beneath the club and our human race would have been extinct.

But in the nineteenth century in a land over which Liberty waves her stars and stripes, and the people claim to be governed, not by sovereignty and the bayonet but by the laws of equity and virtue, I say woman has the same right in the voice of such a government as man has, by reason of her being an intellectual and moral being.

Again, I would like to ask "J. C. P." if the ballot would be any more of a mockery and sham in the hands of an intelligent and moral woman than it is in the hands of an ignorant negro or Chinaman. I think that "J. C. P." has somewhat of that old spirit that was shown in the Dark Ages when representatives of Christianity in grand council discussed the possibility of woman having a soul, as they thought that she was too uncleanly and un-sacred to have one. How absurd it is to us now to think of women as mere things. Please let "J. C. P." remember, too, that all women are not "W. C. T. U's," nor are they all staunch followers of the "clergy." I wonder, as does Elva Davidson, in her letter last week, if we would have succeeded in getting a more pious president or postmaster general than we have now, if the women had voted. Our president will not even read a letter on Sunday, and Wanamaker is entirely too spiritual to have an existence long on this material globe.

Do you not know that the religion and virtue taught at the mother's knee has far more influence over the child than the ministers and school-tutors combined? Lincoln always said if it had not been for his mother's virtuous training he would never have issued the Emancipation Proclamation.

The age of tyranny is past; we are now living in the age of reason, equity, and virtue, and if we want to further advance our civilization from the bonds of superstition and ignorance, let woman step in with her virtue and intelligence and be a co-partner with you. Give her first a chance to use her influence for good; you don't know what she might do. The woman of to-day is not the woman of yesterday. She sees more and more that it is necessary that she too must be interested in these great reforms of our day which so greatly concern the welfare of each and all of us. Give her a chance, I repeat; give her the ballot and then see what the woman of to-morrow may be. I don't doubt that at first there might result an eruption in our government, as the common result of evolution, but it would be as an earthquake on this mighty earth of ours. It would shake you up for a little time, do a little local damage, make you think something terrible was going to happen, then quietly pass over, and all be for the best of our nation and civilization, finally.

BESSIE VON H. TING.

Pomona, Cal.

BOOKS.

We have for sale at this office, among other works:

"John Ward, Preacher." $1.50.

"Yone Santo," see advertisement.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible." 15 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Annual" for 1889. 25 cents.

"Liberty and Morality," by W. S. Bell. 15 cents.

"The System of Nature," by Baron D'Holbach. $2.

"Robert Elsmere," by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Price, 50 cents.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

Judge Maguire's "Ireland and the Pope," a history of papal intrigues against Irish liberty. Price, 50 cents.

Taylor's "Diegesis," by the Rev. Robert Taylor. A discovery of the Origin, Evidences, and early history of Christianity. $2.

"Looking Backward," a socialistic romance which has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin of Industrial Slavery," by Edward Bellamy. Price, 50 cents.

S. P. PUTNAM'S LECTURES.

Fresno Flats, June 1, 2, 3,
Hornitos, June 4.

New Sanel, June 6, 7,
Ukiah, June 8, 9, 10,
Covelo, June 13, 14, 15, 16.

THE SUMMER AND FALL CAMPAIGN.

S. P. Putnam has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Silverton.....	Or., June 22, 23,	Pomeroy ..	W. T., Aug.....	26,
Stayton.....	" " 24,	La Grange, Or.....	Aug.....	29,
Mills City.....	" " 25, 26,	Union.....	Or.....	30,
Turner.....	" " 27,	Baker City, "	Sept.....	1,
Eola.....	" " 28,	Prairie City, Or, and vicinity,	Sept.
Canby.....	" " 29, 30	4, 5, 6, 7, 8,
Molalla.....	" July 3, 4,	Fox Valley.....	Or., Sept. 9, 10,
Kalama.....	W. T., " 6, 7,	Long Creek.....	" " 11, 12,
Starks Point, W. T., and vicinity,	Hamilton.....	" " 14, 15,
July 9, 10, 11, 12, 13,	Monument.....	" " 16, 17,
Astoria.....	Or., July 14,	Hay Stack.....	" " 18,
Stella.....	W. T., " 15, 16, 17,	Lone Rock.....	" " 19, 20,
Oswego.....	Or., " 18, 19,	Fossil.....	" " 21, 22,
Arnold's Grove..	" " 20, 21,	Hillsboro, Or., Sept., 25, 26, 27, 28,
Coos county, Or., July 22 to Aug. 4,	North Yamhill.....	Or., Sept.....	29,
Coburg.....	" Aug.....	7, 8, Forest Grove.....	" " 30,
Lebanon.....	" " 9,	Talent, Or., and vicinity	Oct. 3, 4, 5,
Olympia.....	W. T., " 11, 12,	6, 7,
Buckley.....	W. T., " 13, 14,	Linkville.....	Or., Oct. 11, 12, 13,
Davenport.....	" " 17, 18,	Sacramento.....	Cal., Oct. 20,
Cheney.....	" " 19,	San Francisco.....	" " 27,
Rosalie.....	" " 20,	Los Angeles and vicinity	the month
Sprague.....	" " 21,	of November,
Pasco.....	" " 22,	San Diego and vicinity	the month of
Dayton.....	W. T., Aug. 24, 25,	December.

MR. GEORGE H. DAWES, of Pittsville, Wis., will start toward Oregon in July, and would like to make lecture engagements on the route on or near the line of the Northern Pacific railroad. Mr. Dawes has been engaged by Mr. F. Hauswirth, of North Yamhill, Or., to teach a private school, and will lecture on Sundays.

"THE Dawn" is the title of a new eight-page monthly journal emanating from 36 Bromfield street, Boston. It is intended to be an organ of the Christian Scientists.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

FOR SALE

An interest in a Factory for manufacturing
The Best Fanning Mill
On the Coast.

Upward of $5,000 invested in Patent
Right, Factory, and Stock. Ready sales
and large profits.

WANTED: A man to take an active part in the business—a splendid chance
for an energetic man—a Liberal preferred.

We refer you to S. P. Putnam, editor,
who is personally acquainted with us.

Address, Box 269,
East Portland, Or.

"MODERN THOUGHT,"

—Devoted to the—

SPIRITUALIZATION OF HUMANITY,

Published Monthly by
CHARLES FILLMORE,

JOURNAL BUILDING, KANSAS CITY, MO.

$1 Per Year—Sample Copy Free.

Christian Science, Metaphysical, Theosophical,
Spiritual, and all kinds of reform literature
for sale.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
11 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
11 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5.60	6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 60
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond" 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy.
Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
PUTNAM & MACDONALD,

504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS,
the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author.
Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Freethought "America."

Here we a temple raise
On Truth's eternal base
To Liberty;
A temple whose fair dome
Shall point the nations home,
Whose motto bids them come,
The truth makes free.

Oppressor and oppressed
Finding one common rest,
Shall hither come.
Loud let your heralds ring,
Till bond and free shall sing,
Till the last wanderer bring
His tribute home.

See mighty Babel rise,
High towering to the skies
On Shinar's plain;
So superstition's throne,
With thousand tongues unknown,
Has bid the nations own
Oppression's reign.

But in this building fair,
Which we to truth uprear,
The praise shall be
The never ceasing song,
Of the enfranchised throng,
Borne all the earth along,
"The Truth makes free."

Now let us strike the lyre
In strains yet clearer, higher,
To Liberty.
Sing universal good,
Sing the great brotherhood,
Shout over hill and flood,
"The Truth makes free."

Here would we bring to thee,
Transcendent deity,
A priesthood tried.
Priest, hero, statesman he,
Redeemer all must be,
Whose sacred ministry
Can here abide.

THOMAS CURTIS.

Milton's Infirmary.

Teachers hear so many queer answers to their questions, especially in history, that they do not often try to recall them; but one teacher relates an answer which he thinks worth recording.

Having in mind Milton's blindness, the teacher had asked a pupil in history:
"Was John Milton afflicted with some great afirmy?"

"Yes sir," said the scholar, promptly.

"What was it?"

"He was a poet."—Youth's Companion.

An Ungodly Family.

Miss Travis—Ah, Johnny, I have caught you with a fish-pole over your shoulder!
I shall go right and tell your father. Where is he?

Johnny Dumpsey—Down at the foot of the garden diggin' the bait.—Free Press.

THE Southern Presbyterian Assembly had decided that the evolution hypothesis is no good; that it is a lowpotheris in fact, and no proper person will have anything to do with it.—Alta.

A most remarkable piece of journalistic enterprise is reported from Oklahoma.
The first man to die a natural death in that territory was a newspaper man.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California
that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard
of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all
the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition
at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street.

Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.
G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country,
pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.
Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption
that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought,
and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10
cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him.
Price, 15 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC
SCHOOLS.—THE NEW
AMERICAN PARTY,

A Criticism by "Jefferson."

Price, 10 cents.

Address

PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address, Putnam & Macdonald

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see next column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of half a million to be the most popular readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made available to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and a new feature, of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling. AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. work for KOEHLER writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Fellows' Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding. MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Temperance and Prohibition, THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics

Cloth, 75 cts.

Address this office

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

Miners and Millmen Attention!

BEHM'SCentrifugal Pulverizer,

Guarantees to work One Ton

per hour of the Hardest

Quartz to a 40-Screen.

—ADDRESS—

H. W. WALKER,

ASSAYER,

109 Montgomery Block, San Francisco.

In replying to this advertisement, mention Freethought.

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right.

Yours respectfully,

J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.

DR. FELLOWS.

WM. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor.

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY.

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

TELEPHONE No. 655

P. O. CHILSTROM,

(Rogers & Chilstrom.)

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Commercial Business and Collections a Specialty.

Office, 415 Montgomery St., Rooms 9, 10 & 11,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY - - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

Devoted to Secular Religion and Social Regeneration.

HUGH O. PENTECOST, Editor.

Contains, besides crisp and pointed editorials and contributions from a corps of able writers, the Sunday Addresses of the Editor before Unity Congregation.

It is the only so-called "Liberal" paper that advocates radical social regeneration.

Its columns are open for the absolutely free discussion of all religious and economic theories.

Twelve pages. Issued weekly. Annual subscription one dollar.

Sample copies free. All subscribers will receive a copy of Mr. Pentecost's book, "What I Believe."

Address
Twentieth Century Publishing Co.,
No. 4 Warren street, New York

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY
NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,
NURSERYMEN.

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit
and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.
Special Attention Given to Planting
and Caring of Orchards
and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal

The Parson's Thrilling Climax.

The Rev. G. R. Palmer, of Augusta, one of the members of the conference, told while in town a story of a brother whose eloquence was of the soaring style. He was accustomed to attempt the most ambitious rhetorical flights; sometimes he completed them all right and sometimes he didn't. Not infrequently he lost command of his vocabulary at a critical moment and the result was disastrous to his metaphor.

One Sunday he was pronouncing a glowing eulogy on a departed saint. He raised him in a stately and resplendent progress step by step to the pearly gates. He almost had him safe in heaven when he hesitated and seemed at a loss.

"And brethren," said he—"and brethren, he went in as slick as a mouse!"— Lewiston Journal.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald
504 Kearny st. San Francis

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA.

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or The Infidel Teacher 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

YONE SANTO,

A Child of Japan.

BY E. H. HOUSE.

The Book that the American Missionary Society tried to Suppress, but Didn't.

A Splendid Story, and an Unsparing Exposure of the Missionary Business in Japan.

PRICE, 50 CENTS.

PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 304 Kearny Street, San Francisco.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton, Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology. Price, 50 cents.

Ownership.

Old Farmer Boggs of Boggy Brook
Went to the country fair,
And with his wife he strolled around
To see the wonders there.
"That horse," he said, "Gray Eagle Wing,
Will take the highest prize;
But our old Dobbin looks as well
And better to my eyes.
He is, I know, what folks call slow,
It's far the safest way to go;
Some folks, perhaps, might think it strange,
I really should not like to change.

"And those fat oxen, Buck and Bright,
Don't have so large a girth,
Nor match like them, just to a hair.
But I know what they're worth.
They're good to plow and good to draw;
You stronger pullers never saw,
And always mind my gee and haw;
Some folks, perhaps might think it strange,
I really shouldn't want to change.

"That Devon heifer cost, I heard,
A thousand dollars." "Now,"
Said Mrs. Boggs, "my Crumple Horn
Is just as good a cow;
Her milk, I'm sure's, the very best,
Her butter is the yellowest;
Some folks, perhaps might think it strange,
I really shouldn't want to change.

"Those premium hogs," said Mrs. Boggs,
"My little Cheshire pig
Is better than the best of them,
Although he's not so big.
And that young Jersey is not half
So pretty as old brindle's calf,
Nor is there in the poultry pen
As Speckled Wings so good a hen!"

As Farmer Boggs to Boggy Brook
Rode homeward from the fair,
He said: "I wish my animals
Had all of them been there;
And if the judges had been wise
I might have taken every prize!"

A REVOLUTIONARY joke: "Are those our men?" asked Major Pitcairn, as a squad of soldiers approached along the road near Concord. "No, sir," replied Colonel Smith; "they are minute-men." General Washington believed that it was to this that the British defeat may be attributed.—Harper's Bazar.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—

"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC).

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to
L. K. WASHBURN,
Revere, Mass.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.
12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION. Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 24.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 15, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JUNE 15, 1889.

QUEEN VICTORIA sends her sympathy to the homeless and bereaved people of Johnstown. Sympathy is consoling, but it butters no parsnips.

It must discourage the preachers of San Francisco to realize that John Slater, the Mediumistic Wonder, draws a larger congregation every Sunday than can be found in any church in the city.

THE nun's cloister of the Presentation convent on Powell street is to be broken by Archbishop Riordan, and the inmates will go out to do "charitable" work. Said charitable work consists mainly in begging funds to pay taxes and other expenses of Catholic institutions.

"HEAVEN was merciful that the fire was allowed to occur in the daylight." Such is the remark of the Examiner concerning the Seattle holocaust. Perhaps so; but it would have been a rarer exhibition of mercy, and more to the point, if heaven had had the presence of mind to send a smart shower and put the fire out as soon as it started.

THERE is about to be a Catholic revival in the State prison at San Quentin. Father Chappa and some other priests will hold religious exercises in the prison during the week preceding June 23, and on that day Archbishop Riordan officially participates in the services of confirmation and communion. There is a lot of good material for Catholics in San Quentin, as also there is a lot of good material for San Quentin among those who already belong to that church.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Signs of the Times, an "Advent" paper, reports that the natives of Pitcairn Island, in the Polynesian archipelago, observe Saturday as the Sabbath. The correspondent believes there is something remarkable in these heathen "embracing the truth," and adds: "Truly the Lord has gone before us, and has done a work that is a marvel indeed." This circumstance reminds us of another. Some years ago missionaries leaving San Francisco for one of the Southern Islands conducted services regularly every seventh day while making the voyage, and neglected to take note of the twenty-four hours gained by crossing the meridian, so that their day for worship fell upon Monday. They therefore observed Monday as the Sabbath, and the natives still adhere to the custom. Possibly the missionaries who converted the Pitcairns came from the other direction and introduced Saturday by a similar error. It often transpires that what is termed an act of providence turns out to be only a fluke after all.

PRESIDENT HARRISON has issued an order abolishing all Sunday duties for soldiers except the parade for personal inspection. We fail to see any good reason for this exception. A parade for personal inspection is as much a violation of the Sabbath as a dress parade with music by the band, and reducing Sunday labor is only compromising with the deity. If Sunday is the Lord's day, Christians should observe the whole of it, and trust in providence to repair any damages that may arise from such observance. Until they do this their faith in God will be open to doubt.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, June 16, at 8 o'clock. An address entitled "A Defense of the Agnostic Position" is to be delivered by J. L. Hatch, Esq. All are invited.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Robert Laramore met me at Grub Gulch Saturday morning, and I not only said good-bye to friends, but was greeted by a comrade who has kept the flag afloat among the hills for many a day. Grub Gulch is a somewhat homely name, but it suggests to my mind, at present, beauty of scenery, agreeable labors, cheerful companions, and a bright to-morrow. So I can declare, All hail, Grub Gulch; a diamond in the rough, where nature and humanity have many a glorious sparkle beneath the sun and stars.

Among the big hills we roll along, broad sceneries opening to mighty heights, shaggy forests and wide ravines and canons. At noon we reach Fresno Flats, a snug little village in the midst of trees, with green fields around, a babbling brook winding alongside, and thirsty teams resting beneath the cool branches—for no matter how hot the sun pours down, in the shade the breeze is always gratefully felt. We draw up at the Mt. Raymond House, and the genial host and hostess, Mr. and Mrs. Downey, offer a welcome retreat from the dusty road. Fresno Flats is not so lively as it used to be in the old mining days, and when the stage coaches to the Yosemite used to travel this way, but still it is not dead, though somewhat out of the way. The prospects are that the railroad will strike it some day, and then it will renew its vitality.

It is not a very good place for preachers. About three-fourths of the people are Freethinkers, or looking in the direction of Freethought. I realized that I was in the midst of friends, and that the campaign would go off with flying colors. The seed had been planted, and the harvest was shining. Robert Laramore and others have kept books and papers on the go, avant couriers of the dawn, and so I found a good lead in the heart of this mountain land. The golden sunset, after the sweltering afternoon, came with soft effulgence over the vast peaks and gentle vale, and my evening's work was such as to give courage, and not exhaustion. The audience was of the inspiring sort—full of keen appreciation. These were the first Freethought lectures given in the place, but the community to which I spoke was alive and well-informed. I discoursed on "The Demands of Liberalism," and there were many Christians present who were sensible enough to agree with all that I advanced. Judge Johnson and Mr. Cobb followed the lecture with remarks to that effect. I lectured Sunday afternoon with the thermometer at nearly 100° to a fair audience, on "The Bible and Modern Thought." At its conclusion Mr. Cobb, a fervent Baptist, announced that he would like to have an opportunity to answer me in the evening. I assured him that he should have all the time he desired. This arrangement brought forth a crowded house. After I had given my review of Moody and Sam Jones, Mr. Cobb followed with a genuine camp-meeting fiery exhortation. I did not find much argument in it, but, as usual, a stirring appeal to the emotions. The main point made was the "safety argument," namely, if Infidelity is true the Christian is all right, but if Christianity is true the Infidel will be in a terrible fix. I answered by saying that if the religion of Rome is true my friend would be in just as bad a fix as myself, for in that case he would have to go below with me, for the religion of Rome would condemn the Baptist to hell without even a chance of immersion hereafter to cool his heretical body. "We shall have to go down together," I said, "and you are no more secure than I." Just as I remarked this the chair in which my friendly opponent sat, by some mysterious hitch, struck a hole in the floor and with a sudden motion he seemed to be disappearing. I told him not to be in a hurry about going to the nether regions, as I certainly should not follow at present. When friend Cobb recovered his upright position he affirmed, without oath, that he guessed he would stay. The practical illustration of the "safety argument" was highly entertaining to both sides of the assembly. The debate went off with cheer, and our friends all feel that a gain has been made, and that the next time there will be a rousing gathering. The opening guns have been very effectual. Judge Johnson has promised to bring on a Methodist elder to defend the faith, and I shall certainly be there when the flowers come in the spring-time.

Robert Laramore has some good allies in this rural fortress—Ambrose Taylor, T. G. Hodge, D. S. Meyers, S. W. Westfall, C. A. Lee, Geo. Merritt, J. W. Johnson, Geo. Bagsby and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Thurman, Mr. and Mrs. Phelps, Mrs. Meyers, Mrs. Westfall, and others. This frontier post touches the very heart of civilization and has something of the metropolitan life in its intelligence and progressive spirit. This is a characteristic of many of the villages of the coast. Where half a dozen houses are gathered together there is a hint of urban advancement and style, while in New England such a hamlet would have the gravity of tombstones.

I was sorry not to meet Joe Crane. Everybody says he is a good fellow. Albert McMillan was there, however, from the mining-camps, having traveled forty miles on Sunday to be present. He has been, with Joe Crane and other prospectors, to the headwaters of King's River, where a beautiful valley, something like the Yosemite, discloses itself. In this valley a mighty mountain rears its splendid brow. The enthusiastic discoverers named it Mt. Ingersoll, and may this name abide worthy of Nature's noblest forms. Near is another peak of lesser magnitude, and this they called Putnam's Butte. Now that is delightful. What greater honor could be expected in this short and fleeting life? I suppose it is a pardonable vanity to desire that kind of association. It smacks of happy fortune. Alf Hagerman, in the big forests of Santa Cruz, also gave the revolutionary appellation of the Secular Pilgrim to the largest redwood at present known in the county. The trees and mountains thus combine in joyous alliance. I do not deny that there is a sort of exhilaration in these remembrances of ourselves on the vast and awful pages of nature.

Monday morning I bid good-bye to Fresno Flats. I have a warm place for it in my heart, and for the splendid company here of Freethinkers—uncompromising in thought but hospitable to all diversities of creed.

Artist Brown, I was pleased to meet, who takes nature in her royal garniture of absolute reality and not in the cold mists of theological fancy.

George Hull, a veteran of the hills and plains, took me over to Mariposa, thirty miles away. This was my only way to reach Hornitos, where friend Ralph Barcroft has kindled the fires. It was a long day's journey in the hot sun, and we had to climb and descend several ranges of the Chowchillas. The views were sometimes quite dizzying as they stretched in magnificent depth. I could sometimes look sheer down into an immense gulf where the trees at the bottom seemed like little specks, and I shrank back as if I might tumble from the battlemented highway into the vast space.

Our horses tug along, and at three o'clock, up the winding Mariposa rivulet, we reach the little straggling county seat. The first thing that struck my eye was the somewhat imposing Catholic church on a hill—a white building with steeple—and for a moment I was, in fancy, away back in New England and imagined I was journeying into a quaint village like Westmoreland, on the Connecticut, where the first thing that one beholds is the church on the highest summit. But New England has no such places as Mariposa and Hornitos. These mining towns, when the rush of business is over, do present a most dejected, yet at the same time sprightly, aspect! You might think they were three thousand years old, there is such an air of decay about the vicinity. The buildings burnt down are seldom rebuilt, and being massively constructed, some of them with iron doors and shutters, and clay walls, they appear supremely ruinous. Mingled with these are tumble-down shanties, neatly kept gardens, handsome cottages, beautiful trees, verdant ranges along the rugged hillsides—signs of progress, of a still tumultuous and picturesque frontier existence. These "ragged edges" of civilization are among the most interesting spots in the world. It is like an epitome of the ages. All the strata are here. It does look, sometimes, as if California was the most ancient of dwelling places, and that some of these mines were worked in pre-historic eras.

My comrade, Hull, is a genuine worker and a Democrat all over. I have already met those who have voted for the two Harrisons. His record is just the other way. He has voted against the two Harrisons. He sticks to his colors through thick and thin. He rustled around Mariposa, secured Good Templars' Hall, and advertised the meeting by personal effort. For such short notice, a very good and appreciative audience was assembled. I had a chance to make acquaintance with some Liberals, and the next time I visit this country no doubt the attendance will be far more numerous. The ranches round about are quite thick with Freethinkers. Among them Sam Hogan is a leading citizen and stands up to be counted every time. He lives about six miles from Mariposa, and could not be notified, and I was greatly disappointed not to meet him. Dr. J. T. Turner, Jas. H. Lawrence, S. G. Harris—of the Mariposa News—Jacob Lambert, B. O. Marston, J. A. Ridgeway, and Peter Gordon I found to be of our side, with ready service. I believe the majority of the people are for Freethought. Mr. Ridgeway and Mr. Marston are Spiritualists, but I was delighted to work with such obliging co-laborers. The few hours I spent at Mariposa are fruitful, I hope, of better endeavors in the future.

Early Tuesday morning the stage rattles along for Hornitos, and at noon I arrive at this place of checkered career, where the contrasts of life are almost as intense as in San Francisco itself. The Mexican, the Chinese, the Indian, the American, contribute to the varied scene. Prosperity is side by side with ruin.

Friend Barcroft is a radical Liberal. It did me good to see him, for he is earnest and genial. In the comfortable-looking hotel, which is neatly kept, I avoided the burning rays of the sun and rested to my heart's content. The clouds began to roll over the sky, and the freshening breeze was a luxury indeed. The original name of Hornitos was El Infernillos—the little hell. This was changed to Hornitos, which means the little oven, which is also appropriate, for one might be pretty well baked in its noonday radiance. There is a quantity of gold about here still, and after a good rain many shining particles can be discovered in the middle of the streets. Without doubt mills will be built and the mining industry resumed. Mariposa county is mostly covered by the immense Fremont grant, and the complications and changes of ownership have prevented individual enterprise. Mr. Barcroft has erected a mill, and the outlook for like undertakings is favorable. The riches of the country have not by any means been exhausted.

There was a pretty good number present at the lectures, but the sultry weather and the fact that harvest was ready and must be gathered without delay, prevented those who lived on the ranches from coming. Mr. J. D. Craighan, of Merced Mills, six miles distant, and others put in an appearance in spite of the busy season. There is only one church at Hornitos, the Catholic, and that has only an average attendance of four, including women and children. In the roll of honor of our stalwart friends at this point are H. Deagle, Mr. Brooks—who acted as chairman at the meeting—Chas. Arthur, W. S. Thomas, John Redman, Geo. Beele, R. Arthur, John Branzo, T. H. Branzo, Chas. Pearson, G. Gaghand, A. Bauer, Frank Ocese, J. B. Littlefield, John Lemoile, A. G. Black, Jas. Bauer, E. F. Sylvester, R. S. Welcome, and N. A. Bailey. These friends have generously contributed to the work, and have made my visit to this isolated camp a very entertaining one, and in saying good-bye I hope to see them all again.

After the lecture I was obliged to take a private conveyance and midnight ride to Merced. It was a somewhat wild and weird journey. The foothills make what are called "hog-hollows." The roads, in consequence of washouts, are many, and it is difficult, even in daylight, always to choose the right one. No houses or trees are to be seen, and if we get off the track there is nothing to do but to camp out "till morning doth appear." Once off the highway it is almost impossible to regain it. In fact I believe that midnight road is as hard to travel as Jordan.

Twice the horse got off the main line, and the upheaval of the carriage betokened the danger of a smash up altogether into some bewildering gully.

The prospect was not at all cheering. I guess my guide, Mr. H. M. Daigle, used up about all the matches he had, to discover the lay of the land. The moon was down and the stars were dimmed with clouds. But friend Daigle is one of the kind that never give up, and after various mistakes and turnings back and seeking a more excellent way, we finally emerged to the open plain, and then we could guess the route easily. The sun was just getting up and winking his eyes when we arrived at Merced. It is thus to be seen that Infidelity is no picnic. I have not got over the ride yet, and jotting these notes I feel a great inclination to sleep—as if an orthodox sermon were being dinned into my ears. I will, therefore, pronounce the benediction.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"THE POWER OF PRAYER."

One of the stories that come from Johnstown, Pa., is that the Rev. Dr. Beam and two hundred Episcopalian parishioners took refuge in a hall on the upper floor of a brick building. Friday evening, when the flood was at its height, and they saw staunch houses toppled over and shattered, and the giant sycamores, hickories, and elms torn from their beds and tossed about like chips, the Rev. Beam called for prayer, and all were rescued.

To make this story good the account should state in what manner the Rev. Dr. Beam and his parishioners were removed from their dangerous position. If the brick building proved sufficiently staunch to withstand the force of the waters, then it would be difficult to trace the rescue to a direct intervention of providence. They would have been saved whether they had prayed or not. If, on the other hand, the building was swept away and the Episcopalians were suspended in the air until the flood subsided, and then dropped carefully on a dry spot, a miracle has occurred worth telegraphing across the continent.

There were of necessity two classes of persons who stood in danger from the Johnstown deluge—those who prayed, and those who did not pray. If all who prayed were saved, and all who did not pray were lost, something is demonstrated as to the efficacy of prayer. Otherwise, nothing of value is afforded in that direction. And it is impossible to believe that among the five thousand lost, none had the presence of mind to offer up a prayer. One late item says:

"The baggage of Annie Chism, of Nashville, Tenn., was found. She was a missionary, on her way to Brazil for the Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist church."

Miss Chism was lost on the train covered by the wrecked houses which massed themselves against the railroad bridge. Undoubtedly she prayed, since her calling as a missionary made it a part of her business to do so. Again, a large part of the population of Johnstown was composed of foreigners, the so-called "scum of Europe," mostly Catholics, and it is well-known that the Catholic involuntarily utters a prayer when frightened, as he does a curse when angered. Yet thousands of these lost their lives. From all accounts, therefore, the only case where prayer proved of any avail was that of the two hundred Episcopalians who were gathered in a brick building which presumably was not wrecked.

The efficacy of prayer has been taught for so long that even skeptical persons might be caught praying in an emergency, as drowning men catch at straws. And if by coincidence one prayer out of ten millions is apparently "answered," the whole world hears of it, while the unavailing prayer is never mentioned. The church is like the lottery companies, which advertise every lucky draw, and say nothing about the millions of blanks.

The late Charles Stephenson expressed in a few lines the whole truth with regard to this matter:

"From the earliest dawn of Nature's birth,
Since sorrow and sin first darkened the earth;
From sun to sun, from pole to pole,
Where'er the waves of Humanity roll,
The breezy robe this planet wears
Has quivered and echoed with countless prayers.
Each hour a million knees are bent,
A million prayers to heaven are sent;
There's not a summer beam but sees
Some humble suppliant on his knees;
There's not a breeze that murmurs by
But wafts some faithful prayer on high;
There's not a woe afflicts our race
But someone bears to the Throne of Grace;
And for every temptation our souls may meet
We ask for grace at the Mercy Seat.

* * * * *
The beams smile on, and heaven serene
Still bends, as though no prayers had been;
And the breezes moan, as still they wave,
When man is powerless, heaven cannot save."

THE BRUNO STATUE UNVEILED.

The ceremony of unveiling the statue of Giordano Bruno at Rome, Italy, took place on Sunday last. Thirty thousand persons, including students and deputations from various parts of Italy, marched in procession through the principal streets. The removal of the canvas covering of the statue was the signal for deafening cheers. The ceremonies were witnessed by the syndec of Rome, government officials, and a large number of senators and deputies. Deputy Bovio, in an oration, eulogized the martyr and declared that to-day there was born a new religion of free thought and liberty of conscience which would be worse for the papacy than the loss of its temporal power. The proceedings throughout were orderly, and King Humbert congratulated the ministry on the absence of disturbance. The memory of Garibaldi was also honored with imposing ceremony.

While these exercises were in process, his holiness the pope passed the time in seclusion. It is reported that he refused to see anybody, and passed three days absorbed in prayer in his private chapel. Four hundred telegrams arrived at the Vatican deploring the unveiling of the Bruno monument. All the ambassadors accredited to the Vatican met Sunday evening in the pope's chapel.

There has been something of a change in Rome during the past three hundred years. On the 17th of February, 1600, by order of the Inquisition, Bruno was burnt at the stake as a heretic, a Freethinker, and all other heretics secluded themselves. To-day, by order of the Freethinkers, a statue is raised to Bruno, and it is the pope of Rome who goes into seclusion. Then the church was supreme; it was the state, the law, and the gospel. To-day "the vicar of God has been pushed from the throne of the Cæsars, and upon the roofs of the Eternal City falls once more the shadow of the Eagle."

In the erection of this monument the Freethinkers of America have borne their part nobly. The committee called for $1,000 from American Freethinkers, and before the date of the inauguration of the statue $1,120 had been raised, while nearly $50 remains in the hands of the American committee, received too late to be available.

So Bruno is avenged. For teaching the truth the church put him to death as a heretic. She thought she had ended Bruno and heresy at the same moment, but out of the ashes of the man rises a statue that will stand or be renewed when the Vatican is in ruins, and the heresy which he taught rises up to confront Catholicism and to extirpate it. The pope exists to-day in Rome only by virtue of that toleration which he denied to Bruno, and denounces that religious freedom to which he owes his own life. It is no wonder that shame counseled him to conceal his face on the day when Bruno was honored.

THE SUNDAY LAW IN GEORGIA.

It appears that Mr. Day Conklin, of Forsyth county, Georgia, has broken the so-called Sabbath. Following is the indictment found by an intelligent grand jury:

STATE OF GEORGIA, }
Forsyth County. }

The Grand Jury, in the name and behalf of the citizens of Georgia, charge and accuse Day Conklin, of the county and state aforesaid, with the offense of misdemeanor for that the said Day Conklin, on the second day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight, in the county aforesaid, with force and arms did unlawfully, then and there, pursue the work of his ordinary calling upon the said second day of December, eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, which was then and there the Lord's day, by cutting timber and clearing lands and by digging and other work then and there, did said work and said cutting timber and said clearing and said digging, not then and there being work of charity, and not then and there being work of necessity, the said Day Conklin then and there being a tradesman, the said Day Conklin then and there being an artificer, the said Day Conklin then and there being a workman, the said Day Conklin then and there being a laborer, the said Day Conklin then and there being a farmer,

Contrary to the laws of said state, the good order, peace, and dignity thereof. Forsyth Superior Court, February, term, 1889.

GEO. R. BROWN, Solicitor-Gen.

We understand that the trial of this case is set down for August next. The law of Georgia provides that any person who shall upon the Lord's day (commonly called Sunday) "pursue the business or work of his ordinary calling, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor;" and that all moneys arising from fines imposed for such offenses shall be used for the purpose of establishing and promoting Sabbath-schools in the county in which the offense is committed. This is a good enough union of church and state to satisfy the people of Georgia, the law being of the double back-acting kind that not only secures the sanctity of Sunday but puts money into the treasury of the churches.

The indictment found against Mr. Conklin, charging him with resorting to "force and arms" in clearing lands of timber, is almost equal to the effort of Justice Van Orden, the Boonton official who accused C. B. Reynolds of "contumaciously reproaching the being and existence of God and the scriptures as contained in the books of the New and Old Testaments." What the people of Forsyth county need is not so much a Sabbath-school as a common, every-day institution where the rudiments of learning can be "then and there" imparted to their grand jury and solicitor-general.

"THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY," one of Mr. S. P. Putnam's best lectures, is published in a handsome pamphlet. The price is 10 cents, and the work may be obtained by addressing this office.

BOUND volumes of FREETHOUGHT for 1888 may be had for $2.50

OREGONIANS, RALLY!

It is hoped that many Liberals of Oregon will gather at the Convention to be held at Silverton, June 22 and 23. The importance of state organization cannot be overestimated. The growing work of the Liberal party will not be fully accomplished without this unity of effort. There is legislative action on hand, besides constant agitation and enlightenment among the people. In addition to this there should be the cultivation of the spirit of fellowship. We need to become acquainted, to see each other, to have a broad fraternity.

The people of Silverton have shown their earnestness in this matter. They have labored nobly in the cause and with splendid success. There could not be a better place for a meeting of this kind.

Besides the hall which they have built for Universal Mental Liberty there is a beautiful grove in the vicinity where there will be plenty of room for all. I suppose arrangements will be made for a basket-picnic on Sunday, June 23. Let friends from far and near come and make this a festival for Freethought. Such joyous gatherings are of great benefit. They give inspirations that will not be forgotten, and open the future with promise and enthusiasm.

This Convention will undoubtedly mark an era of great progress in the Liberalism of Oregon. The advance within the last two years has been most encouraging. To continue this advance the field of effort must broaden. Local societies through a state organization can make their influence far more deeply felt.

Let every Liberal of Oregon who realizes what can be done for the future, who sees the importance not only of individual but of social growth, and of state and national co-operation make an earnest effort to be present at this Convention and aid in its success. Oregon should be in the front rank in the glorious work for liberty and progress.

S. P. PUTNAM.

THE half-way, temporizing method of dealing with the woman's rights question leads to some ridiculous results. A case in point has just arisen in Montana. During the session of the last legislature of that territory, a bill was passed giving women the privilege of practicing law in Montana. Judge Blake in the District Court at Helena, June 8, rendered a decision in a case where a lady, Miss Knowles, as a deputy constable, served a garnishee on the Northern Pacific railroad to secure payment of a judgment obtained by a grocery firm against a woman to whom the company owed a certain amount of money. His decision in brief is that women may not hold offices in the territory except where the statutes specially provide that they may, and as the law only makes women eligible to school offices, all appointments conferring upon them the right to act as notaries or constables are void. The judge held that Miss Knowles was not a person in the eyes of the law and therefore unfit to perform the duties of a constable. The female lawyer bill was passed solely in the interest of this lady, but opened the doors for women with legal propensities from any section in the United States. Since the accession of Governor White, however, quite a number of women have been appointed notaries public in the territory, and the decision of the chief justice inferentially makes their commissions null and void.

It may surprise some to learn that Massachusetts, whose capital is the seat of modern culture, is the most illiterate state in the Union. The fact is due to the Roman Catholic element, which has taken possession of the large cities and towns.

OUR Advent friends across the bay think that the great disasters of the present time foretell the early coming of the savior. They say we have "reached the time when there is already upon the earth 'distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth.'" We wonder what the Adventists would have thought of Noah's flood. That event occurred thousands of years before the "savior" came upon earth, and nearly two thousand years have since elapsed without bringing the "day of redemption." Christ himself was pretty strong in the faith that the end of the world was near at hand, when he said on a certain occasion that there were some in his audience who would not taste of death till they saw him return with his kingdom. Nevertheless, all who heard the remark have since been gathered to their fathers, and sixty generations have followed them without seeing the son and his cabinet. If Christ's own prophecies so signally fail, what confidence can his disciples have in theirs?

DR. VOELKEL, the editor of the New Free Religious Sunday paper, of Magdeburg, Germany, has been indicted for blasphemy. The blasphemy consists in his having said that even the manner of Christ's death is in doubt, since in the opinion of some he was hanged upon a tree. Just how blasphemy can be made out of that remark it is hard to see, as the cross is called a tree several times in scripture. Acts v, 30, says, "The God of our fathers raised up Jesus, whom ye hanged on a tree." Acts x, 39, has "whom they slew and hanged on a tree." Acts xiii, 29, says "they took him down from the tree." First Peter mentions the tree again. If Peter and Paul were residents of Magdeburg, they would have to be indicted along with Dr. Voelkel. As the London "Freethinker" observes, "such prosecutions are a scandal to the government which institutes and the people which tolerates them."

THE editor of the Golden Gate replies to the aspersions upon himself with regard to the Spiritualist colony, Summerland. He says that one of the correspondents of the Carrier Dove has revised his opinion since writing the condemnatory letter, while another wishes to depreciate the value of Summerland because he has lots for sale himself. Mr. Owen further intimates that he is pleased with the controversy, since it will have the effect of keeping an undesirable element away from the colony.

JUDGE FOSTER, in handing down his opinion overruling the motion to quash the indictment in the case of Harman and Walker, says: "It seems to me that the first two of the articles set out are per se obscene and indecent in a publication for general circulation." The opinion of Judge Foster in this matter is about as valuable as would be the opinion of a man, in whose family color-blindness was hereditary, on the question whether a chameleon was blue or green.

AN Oakland exchange remarks: "On a recent Sunday a young man in this city had one of his feet crushed while attempting to leave one of the local trains. It might be supposed at first thought that this circumstance would furnish an argument for some of our zealous Sunday advocates, but perhaps its force may be destroyed by the fact that the young man was returning from church at the time of the accident."

MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL, one of the most eloquent Liberal lecturers in the field, is about to make a tour to the Pacific coast.

This is a rare opportunity for the Liberals of this section to avail themselves of the services of one who is so well fitted, not only to defend our cause, but to educate in its constructive principles. Mrs. Krekel is an earnest student, and an admirable speaker. It is hoped that all Liberal societies and communities will arrange for a course of lectures by this able advocate. The voice and genius of woman are needed in our work, and this representative of her sex should receive a most generous and cheering welcome.

THERE is no call for Brother Pierce, editor of the Pittsburgh Truth, to be exercised over the warning sent out by the business manager of an Eastern journal of Freethought and Reform, wherein the Liberal public is advised to withhold its support from "experimental sheets." Truth is not the paper that is meant.

WE have a few copies of the Truth Seeker Annual for 1887. It contains all the Sunday, oath, and blasphemy laws now in force in the different states and territories. Price, 25 cents.

OBSERVATIONS.

As at the previous meeting, the hall where the San Francisco Freethought Society met last Sunday evening was crowded. No imaginative reporter, such as they have in Oakland, where two hundred can be counted as two thousand without exciting comment, has endeavored to mislead the public as to the actual number present, which was from one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five. Vice-president Eastman presided, assisted by Mr. Schou, and a volunteer pianist gave W. S. Bell, the lecturer, a fine musical send-off, for which Mr. Bell thanked him cordially on behalf of the audience.

I had never heard Mr. Bell lecture before, and had a notion that he was rather more serious than he proved to be. He is a great joker and kept his audience in the best of humor. I could not laugh much myself at many of his jokes, because my parents taught me in my youth a certain veneration for age, but I enjoyed the reunion. The antique never loses its charms. Mr. Bell's lecture was upon "Liberty and Morality," which is an admirable array of illustration and argument against the efficacy of what are called "moral laws." The speaker characterized the Sunday law as an attempt to enforce a false religion in the name of morality. Blasphemy laws came under the same head. Prohibitory laws were likewise objected to. In these matters of morality each must act according to his best knowledge and reason. There was more virtue in a wrong act committed with good intentions than in a right act performed under compulsion. Mr. Bell's lecture is printed in a pamphlet and sells for 15 cents.

Mr. Thomas Curtis offered some entertaining remarks on the subject of prayer, which the lecturer had also touched upon. He said the orthodox prayer was something after this fashion: O Lord, you are the greatest and most powerful of all gods. We are miserable, defiled, and undeserving sinners. You have given us many things in the past which we were unworthy of. We are worthy of nothing in the future, yet we ask to be blessed in every way. We deserve to be damned, but are confident that we shall be saved; and for this miscarriage of justice we will repay you with glory and praise until you can't rest.

A man whose name I am not acquainted with next secured the floor. I managed to escape before he had got far into his speech, and others of the audience whom I have seen since have taken me earnestly by the hand and congratulated me upon my good luck. It seems that this society, like other societies maintaining a free platform, is destined to suffer martyrdom unless something is done to repress the ubiquitous bore. It is a cruel thing to call an audience together, treat them to a good lecture and an entertaining after-speech, and then let loose a rambling brawler who will talk the room empty during the first half of a ten-minute address. The whole effect of a meeting is spoiled, as the benefit of a good dinner is destroyed by taking an emetic immediately after eating it. The San Francisco Freethought Society has a good start. There is no lack of entertaining speakers to make its meetings interesting, but the protuberant gabblers will have to be frowned upon with a club if it expects to hold its audiences.

NEXT Sunday evening the lecture is by Mr. J. L. Hatch, and the subject will be "A Defense of the Agnostic Position." Mr. Hatch is an able speaker, formerly a clergyman, and now the religious editor of one of the leading dailies of this city. It is safe to predict an entertaining address, a full house, and plenty of intelligent enthusiasm.

MR. Geo. E. Blaine, formerly of Ohio, has been in San Francisco for a week past. He is at present a resident of Mexico, and has his paper addressed to Guaymas in the state of Sonora. Mr. Blaine is superintendent of a new railroad now in process of construction from Guaymas to Topolobampo. From Topolobampo the road goes, I believe, to Aquiabampo and Alamos, and thence to Deming, Texas. The road will shorten the distance from New York to Honolulu by about eight hundred miles. A Chicago company with a capital of twenty-two millions or some such fabulous sum is backing the enterprise. The scheme was inaugurated on the 16th day of last April by a big dinner given to the officials of Mexico at an expense of forty dollars per plate or thereabouts, and work is going on. Mr. Blaine has effected the purchase of a steam barge in San Francisco to carry rails; also numberless million feet of timber for bridges, and other supplies amounting to thousands of dollars. The projected road is subsidized by the Mexican government to the extent of twelve thousand dollars per mile in Mexican bonds, negotiable in Europe nearly at par, and things are booming. Mr. Blaine is a good talker, and as I am somewhat interested in the Sinaloa colony at Topolobampo I made inquiries of him concerning the prospects of that venture. He said the prospects were not so bright as an ardent supporter of the Credit Foncier ought to wish. The large concessions of land which the colony expected to get were conditioned upon the construction of a certain amount of railroad. The colonists themselves have not sufficient capital to build the road, and now that the present road is to be built the colony's road will not be necessary, and they will find it difficult to secure the capital needed to build and stock it. In reply to questions about the value of property now owned by the Credit Foncier company, Mr. Blaine said he did not think it was very great. The land is good, but needs to be irrigated. A company with large capital might dam the Fuerte river and divert its waters to irrigate the colonists' lands. The Fuerte, however, is a turbulent stream at certain seasons, and the dam would be very costly. He did not think the colonists were prepared to construct it.

THE outlook, therefore, for the Credit Foncier of Sinaloa seems rather dim. The railroad, upon the construction of which Mr. Owen depended to make the settlement an important point between New York and Honolulu, has been superseded by another which strikes the coast twelve miles away, and the key to the situation is thus lost. Mr. Owen's contemplated road would be comparatively valueless if built, and it is a good way from being built. The colonists upon going to Topolobampo relinquish the title of American citizens and become subjects of Mexico. Their success now depends upon raising fruit and grain for the market, and the raising of these depends upon irrigation, which at present is impossible. Again, Mexico affords no market—the people are too poor to buy. Furthermore, Americans cannot compete with Mexican laborers, who are content with eight dollars per month, and a little corn. The climate, too, is against the American laborer. It is hot. They tell of a man who died in Mexico and went to hádes, and the first opportunity he had to communicate with earth he sent for a pair of blankets. Moreover, the Mexican government taxes its subjects about as it pleases. During a late unpleasantness the poll-tax went up to two dollars a week. The resident could pay it or have his property confiscated. If he had no property, he could pay it or go into the army. He might desert from the army, but if caught he would be stood up against a wall and shot full of holes.

SUCH are a few of the adversities which confront the American in Mexico. Mr. Blaine says that he entertains the kindest feelings toward the colonists, and will be glad to give them opportunities of earning a livelihood on the new railroad; but, being a cousin of James G. Blaine, and an ardent patriot, he advises against leaving what he calls the best country under the sun to take up a permanent residence in so undeveloped a locality as Topolobampo.

The readers of the San Francisco Chronicle had a chance to weep over a story told in that paper June the 8th. It came from Fresno. A woman appeared in court with her little girl. The father of the girl had never been married to the woman and refused to have anything to do with her because her character was bad. The woman denied all charges, and protested that she was a lady and had brought her children up as they should be. To test the matter the judge turned to the little girl and inquired if she could say her prayers. "Then," says the Chronicle, "ensued a most touching scene. The little girl without a word climbed from her chair, knelt on the floor of the courtroom, with the policeman, spectators, judge, and her father and mother around her and, folding her tiny hands and lifting her eyes to heaven, she made the grandest defense of a mother's word possible. Slowly, but distinctly, and without a tremor in her voice, the innocent little darling, born with the stain of shame upon her and discarded by her father, lisped in childish accents the Lord's Prayer. As she proceeded, utterly oblivious to her surroundings and thinking only of him who said, 'Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not,' as she uttered that prayer which many in the room had not heard for years, strong men bowed their heads and sobbed aloud." When the strong men and other spectators had wept all the fire-buckets full the judge had sufficient presence of mind to fine the father fifteen dollars and dismiss the court.

The editor of the Chronicle shared the prevailing emotion and overflowed thus:

That was a striking scene in the Fresno court on Friday when a three-year-old girl bore testimony to her mother's good training by saying her prayers in court. The question turned on the character of the mother, who had been abandoned by the man she had been living with. Though not a wife in name, she claimed to have fulfilled all a wife's duties, and it was to disprove the assertion that she was not a good mother to her two young girls that she besought the judge not to believe such charges. This judge had a touch of Solomon's wisdom, for he settled the disputed question by asking the little one to say her prayers. With childish earnestness and unconscious of the singular surroundings she knelt and repeated the Lord's Prayer. That settled it and established the mother's claim as the most eloquent advocate could never have done it.

Sunday-school stories are generally a trifle weak in the knees, and the present one is not an exception to the established rule. Investigation shows that this woman, whose name is Bayswater, kept a dive a few years ago on Brannan street. She sold that out and hired a saloon at 310 Townsend street, which she now runs. It is a dirty place, frequented by street women and their consorts. Upstairs this Christian mother maintains several soiled beds for the accommodation of herself and patrons. Mrs. Bayswater is a Catholic, and probably does not know the Lord's Prayer, which scrap of ancient literature was taught the little girl by an old woman in the mother's employ.

It is a matter for regret that Mr. Owen Thomas Davies, of Brighton, has not a voice as clear as his intellect. If he had he would be the best biblical debater on the Coast. He likes to lie in wait for the ministers. He lets them have their say, and then lays them out cold and dumb. He was in the office one day this week, and it cost him in the neighborhood of twenty dollars before he could get away. He paid for four or five subscriptions to FREETHOUGHT, left five dollars for the State Liberal Union, and renewed for the Independent Pulpit and Secular Thought, which journals will please take notice and send their bills. Mr. Davis goes to the root of Christianity, and yanks the fibres out of the subsoil. He entertained me with a story about a minister who wanted to convince him of the efficacy of the atonement. Mr. Davies had a twenty-dollar piece in his pocket, and to cut the oration short he told the minister he would give him the coin if he would point out the passage in the account of Christ's life or death containing any reference to an atonement. The preacher confessed that it could not be done. "All right," said Mr. Davies, "I knew you couldn't. I merely wanted to test the matter so I might tell you that every time you preach the doctrine of the atonement you preach what you know to be false." The clergyman has never called on Mr. Davies to collect the money.

I find by research that Mr. Davies was right, though I had not seen his statement put so boldly before. The doctrine of the atonement is much like the dogma of the infallibility of the pope. It is an afterthought, and was not formulated, as now taught, until the beginning of the twelfth century, when the festive Anselm sobered off long enough to jot down his notions on the subject.

The gospel account makes it appear that Christ was an unwilling sacrifice, and that except for the treachery of Judas and the bigotry of the mob he might have died a natural death. He thought himself a son of God, and believed that the family would stand by him. He was mistaken. The execution proceeded without interruption, and, as the spectators remarked, though he professed to save others he could not save himself. It seems to be a fact, verified by every page of history, that men who have trusted in God have invariably had their confidence abused.

M.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

A great fire at Seattle, June 6, destroyed some $15,000,000 worth of property and left thousands of people homeless. The city will be rebuilt at once in brick instead of wood. Surveyors have remapped the burnt district, everybody who is willing to work has been given a job, and loafers are warned away. Eight thousand people are fed daily at two large tents provided for the purpose. Relief funds for the Eastern sufferers are divided with Seattle. San Francisco has raised nearly $100,000 for the charitable work, and much more is to be done.—The Rev. C. H. Smith, formerly of the Dorchester Pilgrim church, Boston, whom his congregation has mourned as dead for three months, turns up in San Francisco under an assumed name. He was arrested last Sunday, to be detained until the Boston authorities were heard from.—The California Spiritualists' camp-meeting opened last Sunday in the tent on Van Ness avenue near Market street with a good attendance.—Jules Tavernier, an artist well-known on this coast, died suddenly in Honolulu on the 18th ult.—The boycott on the United States Brewery's beer is declared off by the Brewers' Union, terms satisfactory to all parties having been reached.—The Rev. Simon P. Anderson, of St. Louis, who was arrested for forgery upon his arrival in San Francisco a few weeks ago, and afterwards released, is now in jail in St. Louis. He forged the church secretary's name to an order for money, collected the funds, and went on a vacation.—The people of Oleander last week notified the Rev. G. W. James to vacate the colony. Mr. James distinguished himself at Fresno about a year ago by his lectures on social purity, and subsequently went to Los Angeles, where he assumed the duties of the pastorate of the Methodist Episcopal church, from which he was expelled. James, it will be remembered, further distinguished himself while watching over his flock in Los Angeles by permitting his young sister to live with his stepson and beating his wife. He was ordered to leave Los Angeles, which he did about three weeks ago, going to live with his father at Oleander.—Revised estimates of the loss of life in the Johnstown flood place the figures at less than five thousand. Nearly 2000 bodies have been recovered. The work of clearing away the wreckage is being carried on by several thousand men.—There is now a well-grounded suspicion abroad that Dr. Cronin, of Chicago, was not murdered—that the body found was not his. It is stated as a certainty that the clothes discovered belonged to another man. A deeper mystery than ever seems to envelop the whole affair.—Lloyd S. Brice is mentioned as the probable successor of the late Allen Thorndike Rice to the editorial chair of the North American Review.—Leonard Swett, the well-known lawyer of Chicago, died last Saturday aged 63. He was at one time a law partner of Abraham Lincoln, and made the speech nominating the martyr president in 1860. He performed the same service for Judge Gresham in 1888. He also did much toward securing the nomination of General Grant.—Chief Arthur of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers announces himself opposed to strikes, and advises the engineers to submit to a reduction of wages rather than rebel. Murmurs of dissatisfaction are heard among the members of the Brotherhood.—The Stewart will case has been compromised by Judge Hilton surrendering about $5,000,000 to Mrs. Stewart's heirs.—Henry George is in Paris, and is attracting much attention. A conference of single-tax advocates was held on Tuesday. An influential French committee, including seven deputies, eight or nine municipal councillors, and a large number of well-known writers on economic subjects co-operated in the meeting; the chiefs of the different schools of land reform of Germany, Holland, Switzerland, Belgium, and other continental countries were present, besides representatives from Great Britain, France, the United States, and Australia.—The managers of four French papers have been sentenced to imprisonment and fine for "insulting" the administration.—It is rumored that our government is not satisfied with the Samoan agreement, as the treaty still awaits official signatures. No further concessions are to be expected from Germany.—The Bruno monument was unveiled in Rome last Sunday in the presence of a vast concourse of people from all parts of Europe.—The massacre of hundreds of Christian converts by Mahdists is reported from Abyssinia.—Queen Victoria has forwarded her sympathy, through Minister Pauncefoot, to the Johnstown, Pa., sufferers.

PROFESSOR LADD'S BOOK.—"WHAT IS THE BIBLE?"

II.

In pursuing the inquiry, "What is the Bible?" Professor Ladd expresses his views with such frankness and force, that condensed statements in his own language will perhaps be the best and briefest presentation of his views. Of the time of the Reformation he says: "The views taken of the Bible were formed in the heat of the most intense partisan controversy."

"It is most important to notice that the theological teachers of the Reformation plainly distinguished between canonical scripture and the 'word of God' which it contains" (p. 47).

Luther is quoted as follows: "The law of Moses, as such, has no applicability to Christians; even the observance of the ten commandments is obligatory simply because they give the natural moral law," etc. "We will neither see nor hear of Moses, for Moses was given only to the Jewish folk, and does not extend to us heathens and Christians." "Go to the Jews with your Moses, I am no Jew; leave me unperplexed by Moses." "He rejects as faulty and mistaken, not only certain passages of scripture, but even entire books, as respects their religious doctrine." "He declares that he can not make out that the book of Revelation is the product of the holy ghost, and affirms that any one may call him a 'fool' who can make James and Paul square; while the epistle of the former is in his estimation a 'right strong' one. He also made light of Jude" (p. 50).

"In their conflicts with Roman Catholicism on the one hand, and with unbelief on the other hand, the Protestant theologians, from about 1600 A.D. to 1750 A.D. were not content with the view of the Bible taken by the early and great reformers. These theologians regarded the absolute infallibility and equal inspiration of all parts of the Bible as a necessary assumption of faith" (p. 54).

This assumption "so remained until overthrown, for although marks of its influence still abound everywhere, as a compacted opinion it is now defended by no biblical scholars, and but few theologians whose judgments are entitled to respect."

"Baxter rejected the view that all parts of the Bible are alike infallible and important" (p. 61).

"Philip Doddridge also did not consider that the inspiration of the biblical books excluded all errors, unless it were of the kind called 'plenary'; and he did not even consider that all the New Testament was written under this 'plenary' inspiration. Inspiration is to be assumed to be 'plenary' in the case of the apostles; but in their case only when there is no evidence to the contrary" (p. 62).

"The progress of research into the real nature of the Hebrew and Greek texts of sacred scripture could not fail to discredit the post-Reformation (i.e. the infallibility) theory of inspiration; for the textual criticism made it obvious that infallibility and certainty in no respect belong to any text recoverable by us. The following question is then inevitable: If God did not intend to preserve a perfectly certain and errorless verbal form of holy scripture for the use of his church, why should he create such a form at the first?" (p. 64.)

There are several other "inevitable questions" that arise in the mind of a candid investigator, at this point in the discussion; and the author of this book, if he had started out to write "in the interest" of truth, instead of "the interest of faith," in other words, if he had not reached his conclusion before he commenced his investigation, would naturally have inquired: Why should a perfect and infallible God wish to give to his creatures an imperfect and fallible revelation of his will? If "God's word" is contained in the Bible, as the professor claims, who put it there? If the Bible contains a revelation from God, and is necessary for human salvation, why was the world left so long without it? He says that "the teachings of geology are true, as to the antiquity of the earth." Now geology teaches that this earth is many millions of years old, and that the human race have inhabited it two hundred and fifty thousand years. No Christian claims that the Bible is even two thousand years old. Now why should the human family be left without a Bible, which is so necessary for their salvation, two hundred and forty-eight thousand years, and then the book, when received, be so imperfect and uncertain that, within the last two thousand years, men have not been able to find out what it is? If men should succeed so poorly in their work, would they not be called failures?

Again he says, "The result of more than a century of inquiry into the authorship of the separate writings of sacred scripture has shown that a number of them have undoubtedly been ascribed by ancient usage to the wrong persons."

"We have seen that the non-Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch in its present form was known to Richard Baxter."

"What difference does it make," asked Luther in his "Table Talk," "if Moses did not himself write the Pentateuch?"

He speaks of "the effect of scholarly opinion as to the impossibility or improbability of connecting various other books of the Bible—Isaiah, Ezra, Nehemiah, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Daniel, Canticles—with the persons whose names tradition has selected as their authors." Also "of the fact that certain books of the Bible were admitted to the canon doubtfully, and were at first and for a long time regarded as belonging decidedly to an inferior rank" (p. 67).

He says that all who have studied the Bible as literature, "within the past century have abandoned the theory of its plenary and verbal inspiration." "The current theological argument has become changed in a way most astonishing... the modern defense of scripture admits without a question that geology is right, and then tries to show how the words of Genesis may possibly be understood so as to accord with the undoubted conclusions of physical science."

He says, "It is no longer possible to demonstrate that the earth does not move around the sun by simply appealing to the narrative of the miracle in Joshua; or to disprove the conclusions of geology as to the antiquity of the earth, and the slow process of its formation, by pointing out that Moses teaches the creation of all things in six days of twenty-four hours."

He admits that the "traditions of the earliest things of the earth and of humanity—traditions of the creation, of the fall, of the flood, etc., of the people which surrounded the Jews—have a common origin with the narratives in the earlier chapters of Genesis." Also that while "the use of the Bible has vastly increased, at the same time the weight of emphasis has been slipping off from the dogma of its inspiration." The post-Reformation theory [i.e., plenary inspiration] has tottered and fallen." "But no equally elaborate and self-consistent doctrine of sacred scripture has arisen to take its place. Certain impressions which entered into the theory—impressions both true and false—are still profoundly influential; they largely determine that view of the Bible and its right uses which guides the unlearned Christian of to-day. But what are the lessons of the facts of history? How shall we shape our answer to the question, 'What is the Bible?' in view of the opinions held by the church of Christ in all the centuries of its experience with the Bible? We reply with the following summary of conclusions" (p. 70):

1. "No elaborate doctrine of the nature of sacred scripture has yet been constructed and adopted by the Christian church at large."

2. "History shows that certain untenable opinions, foreign to the essence of biblical religion and uncongenial to the spirit of true Christianity, have repeatedly forced their way into the doctrinal views of the church, regarding the Bible."

3. "It is not truly Catholic doctrine that the Bible is the word of God."

4. "An exceedingly unstable condition of opinion in answer to the question, 'What is the Bible?' no doubt still exists."

5. "The Christian church has always regarded it as the most priceless and indispensable office of sacred scripture to be a witness to the person, doctrine, and work of Christ. So far as the Old Testament is concerned, the precise nature of this witness has been much disputed."

6. "It is this work of the holy spirit, in gradually making God known to men as their father and redeemer, which has given us the Bible. The Bible is the authentic record of this revelation."

7. "It follows, then, that the Bible has always been regarded as an authentic and authoritative source of Christian doctrine."

8. "Preaching, exhortation, and paraphrase, have always largely taken the place of sacred scripture."

9. "At no time, except during the post-Reformation period, has the inspiration of the authors of sacred scripture been regarded as specially different in kind from that possessed by other believers, or as given to them solely for the purpose of fitting them to compose an infallible Bible."

We have now reached the close of the second chapter and the author has taught us several important lessons. He has taught us:

That the narratives in Genesis about the creation, the fall, the flood, etc., had a common origin with the traditions of several heathen nations.

That Moses did not write the books ascribed to him, and that many other books of the Old Testament are of unknown authorship.

That geology is true as to the age of this earth, and not Genesis.

That the old theory of the plenary inspiration of the Bible "has tottered and fallen," and that no equally elaborate doctrine has arisen to take its place.

That untenable opinions in regard to the Bible have frequently forced themselves into the doctrines of the church.

That the Bible is not the word of God.

That an unstable opinion in regard to the Bible still exists.

That the writers of the Bible were not inspired differently from other believers.

And still he calls the Bible "sacred scripture," "holy scripture," and tells us "it is the work of the holy spirit" in revealing God to men "that has given us the Bible," and that "the Bible is the authentic record of this revelation."

These assumptions, so completely in conflict with his previous statements, and so wholly unsupported by any proof, he leaves with us, presumably to show that he is still writing "in the interest of faith."

In the third chapter he aims to give us the views of the biblical writers themselves as to their own inspiration. He says "the reference of Jesus to certain passages of the Old Testament are simply for illustration, and not to vouch for their historical truth, or for their inspiration."

As to the book of Jonah, to which Jesus referred, he says: "A narrative in which a man is represented as composing a poetical prayer, surrounded with water, his head bound with seaweed, and drifting with marine currents, while inside a monster of the sea, was surely never intended by its author to be understood as literal history. The book of Jonah was written as an allegory" (p. 84).

Again he says, "Not one word in the entire Bible can be found to warrant the theory of a peculiar or peculiarly infallible inspiration given to any one in order to fit him for the work of writing" (p. 98).

Again, in reference to Paul's advice concerning marriage, he says, "In this case we notice that the advice of Paul was governed by his erroneous impression that the second coming of our Lord was then just at hand. That Paul and the other apostles, during at least the earlier years of their ministry, held this erroneous impression, their writings most abundantly show" (p. 100).

Here is a frank admission that all the apostles were laboring under an "erroneous impression" as to the second coming of Christ. And when we remember that this "erroneous impression" was given by the positive assurance of Jesus himself, Matt. xxiv, 30, 34, the question naturally occurs, Was not he, too, mistaken?

Again he says, "In common with all the previous authors of the Bible, the authors of its latest books never give us a hint that they regard themselves or one another as gifted with any special form of infallible inspiration as writers of sacred books. Nor does their language warrant the conclusion that they would have held any dogma of verbal inspiration as applying to these Christian writings."

If none of the writers of the Bible were specially inspired; if Jesus and all his apostles were mistaken, and if their successors in the Christian church have been teaching and perpetuating these "erroneous impressions" and mistakes, for eighteen hundred years, is it not about time for the people to do their own thinking?

J. W. NORTH.

ELIZABETH CADY STANTON'S REMINISCENCES.

To state the idea of conversion and salvation as then understood, one can readily see from our present standpoint that nothing could be more puzzling and harrowing to the young mind. The revival fairly started, the most excitable were soon on the anxious seat. There we learned the total depravity of human nature and the sinner's awful danger of everlasting punishment. This was enlarged upon, until the most innocent girl believed herself a monster of iniquity and felt certain of eternal damnation.

Then God's hatred of sin was emphasized, and his irreconcilable position toward the sinner so justified that one felt like a miserable, helpless, forsaken worm of the dust in trying to approach him, even in prayer.

Having brought you in a condition of profound humility, the only cardinal virtue for one under conviction, in the depths of your despair you were told that it required no herculean effort on your part to be transformed into an angel, to be reconciled to God, to escape endless perdition. The way to salvation was short and simple. We had naught to do but to repent and believe, and give our hearts to Jesus, who stood ever ready to receive us. How to do all this was the puzzling question. Talking with Dr. Finney one day, I said:

"I cannot understand what I am to do. If you should tell me to go to the top of the church steeple and jump off, I would readily do it if thereby I could save my soul, but I do not know how to go to Jesus."

"Repent and believe," said he, "that is all you have to do to be happy here and hereafter."

"I am very sorry," I replied, "for all the evil I have done, and I believe all you tell me, and the more sincerely I believe the more unhappy I am." With the natural reaction from despair to hope, many of us imagined ourselves converted, prayed and gave our experiences in the meetings, and at times rejoiced in the thought that we were Christians, chosen children of God, rather than sinners and outcasts.

But Dr. Finney's terrible anathemas of the depravity and deceitfulness of the human heart soon shortened our new-born hopes. His appearance in the pulpit on these memorable occasions is indelibly impressed on my mind. I can see him now, his great eyes rolling round the congregation and his arms flying in the air like a windmill. One evening he described hell, and the devil, and the long procession of sinners being swept down the rapids of Niagara, about to make the awful plunge into the burning depths of limpid fire below, and the rejoicing hosts in the Inferno, coming up to meet them, with the shouts of the devils echoing through the vaultless arches. He suddenly halted and pointing his index finger at the supposed procession, he exclaimed:

"There, do you not see them!"

I was wrought up to such a pitch that I actually jumped up and gazed in that direction to which he pointed, and the picture glowed before my eyes, and remained with me for months afterwards. I cannot forbear saying that although high respect is due to the intellectual, moral, and spiritual gifts of the venerable ex-president of Oberlin College, such preaching worked incalculable harm to the very souls he sought to save. Fear of the judgment seized my soul. Visions of the lost haunted my dreams. Mental anguish prostrated my health. Dethronement of my reason was apprehended by friends. But he was sincere, so peace to his ashes! Returning home, the night after, I roused my father from his slumbers to pray for me lest I should be cast into the bottomless pit before morning.

To change the current of my thoughts, a trip was planned to Niagara, and it was decided that the subject of religion was to be tabooed altogether. Accordingly our party, consisting of my sister, her husband, my father, and myself, started in our private carriage, and for six weeks I heard nothing on the subject. About this time Gall and Spurzheim published their works on phrenology, followed by Combe's "Constitution of Man," his "Moral Philosophy," and many other Liberal works, all so rational and opposed to the old theologies that they produced a profound impression on my brother's mind. As we had these books with us, reading and discussing by the way, we all became deeply interested in the new ideas. Thus after many months of weary wandering in the intellectual labyrinth of "The Fall of Man," "Original Sin," "Total Depravity," "God's Wrath," "Satan's Triumph," "The Crucifixion," "The Atonement," "Salvation by Faith," I found my way out of the darkness into the clear sunlight of truth. My religious superstitions gave place to rational ideas based on scientific facts, and in proportion as I looked at everything from a new standpoint, I grew more and more happy day by day. Thus with a delightful journey in the month of June, an entire change in my course of reading, and the current of my thoughts, my mind was restored to its normal condition.

I view it as one of the greatest crimes to shadow the minds of the young with these gloomy superstitions; and with fears of the unknown and unknowable to poison all their joy in life.—Woman's Tribune.

THE NEW STATES' CONSTITUTIONS.

The Truth Seeker of June 1 contains this sound advice to the Liberals of the Northwest:

Once again we urge the Liberals of the four new states in the Union, Washington, Montana, and North and South Dakota, to be vigilant in seeing that religion does not gain a permanent foothold in the organic law of their states. Delegates to Constitutional Conventions have been selected in Montana and the two Dakotas, and in South Dakota the Sioux Falls constitution has been adopted. This constitution, so far as it relates to the right to worship, or to write, speak, or publish opinions, is exceedingly good, and under it perfect "toleration" of all religions is secured. But we know how easy it is for legislatures to pervert constitutions, and the Liberals in this state as in the other three should endeavor to secure more liberty, and also justice.

They should insist that the Constitution shall provide that no person shall be denied any civil or political right, privilege, or capacity, on account of his religious principles, or lack of religious principles.

They should insist that the Constitution shall prohibit the exemption of any property not owned by the state, county, or town, from taxation.

They should insist that the Constitution shall prohibit the legislature and all state officers from employing ecclesiastics to perform any of their so-called "sacred" functions for which the state has to pay.

They should insist that the Constitution shall debar the legislature from setting apart any day as a holy day, or from passing any law affixing penalties for laboring or playing on any of the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year.

They should insist that the Constitution shall prevent the legislature from enacting blasphemy laws.

They should insist that some Constitutional provision shall be made to prevent any money raised for the use of the common schools from being given to schools maintained by churches or for religious purposes, or wherein any religion is taught.

If these things are not insisted upon, the Liberals will find that they are the sport and plaything of the church, and that religion is riding them roughshod, to the detriment of their pockets and the complete loss of self-respect and religious independence. The churches know how to work their points, and they will have men and money from the East without limit. They have got all but one of the states under their thumbs, and secured almost everywhere a practical union of church and state, and will strive mightily to secure the new states. It rests with the Liberals to defeat them, for the "practical politicians" will not oppose an element which influences so many votes.

A Poem from Grub Gulch.

Appended is the narrative of Noah and the ark,
With the lion and the tiger all a-roaming in the dark,
The polecat and the rattlesnake, hyena, and the lamb;
But the sinful little babies did Jehovah drown and damn.
The angels aided Noah,* yes they rounded up the boar,
The polar and the grizzly bear, and countless thousands more.
I can't enumerate them all, but they drove them, great and small,
Up the gang-plank to the steerage where each creature had his stall.
The gorilla was unruly and quite difficult to please—
Looked and acted much like Kearney when he's "cussin" the Chinese—
So they put him in the steerage, but the sportive little skunks
Monopolized the cabin, where they had their choice of bunks.
The angel with the hornets' nest stubbed his toe and fell—
The inmates went exploring round, and Noah shouted, "Hell,
You haven't paid your passage; go aboard some other ark;"
But every buzzing insect made a stinging, sharp remark;
Insisted on their lawful rights, and wouldn't be ignored,
And made themselves familiar with every one on board.
Mrs. Noah very badly fared, with her abundant muscle,
For scant and thin was her attire and innocent of bustle.
Beasts, birds, and reptiles, all embarked, then tight was shut the door,
The angels pulled the stoppers out and down the waters pour.
It rained about a foot an hour, a somewhat soaking shower,
And thus did the Creator manifest his love and power.
The mothers with their babies, as they sought for places drier,
Climbed on the roof of village church and clustered round the spire.
But all their struggles were in vain, the water rose still higher,
For God had doomed them all to drown; then, everlasting fire.
The ark was drifted by the tides on top of Ararat,
Its occupants then issued forth quite destitute of fat,
For they had been almost a year on very scanty ration—
What they lived on I cannot tell, unless 'twas ventilation—
And Captain Noah, when safe ashore, so overjoyed was he,
He planted vines and made red wines, and had a royal spree.
Now here you have the story as I find it in the book,
Where you may find it also, if you have a mind to look;
And if you don't believe it you're forever damned in hades
With all those drowned mothers and their wicked little babies.
Now if I had been Jehovah, the truth I'll dare to tell,
I'd surely drowned the devil, and then closed the gates of hell.
I'd save the coal and sulphur, extinguish all the fire,
Of each damned soul I'd make a saint, with seven-octave lyre.
Don't think I'd be quite happy though, on the great white throne,
If now and then came up from hell an unbeliever's groan.

Grub Gulch, Fresno Co.

A. W. POOLE.

*See sermon of Rev. Talmage.

BOOKS.

We have for sale at this office, among other works:

"John Ward, Preacher." $1.50.

"Yone Santo." 50 cents.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible." 15 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Annual" for 1889. 25 cents.

"Liberty and Morality," by W. S. Bell. 15 cents.

"The System of Nature," by Baron D'Holbach. $2.

"Robert Elsmere," by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Price, 50 cents.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

Judge Maguire's "Ireland and the Pope," a history of papal intrigues against Irish liberty. Price, 50 cents.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Kaiser Henry.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed please find money order for $5 toward maintaining FREE-THOUGHT. I have returned blank with signatures for the California State Liberal Union. With best wishes, I remain your friend, Loomis, Cal.

HENRY KAISER.

For the Cause.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I inclose $1 to help the cause. Accept it and send FREETHOUGHT for six months to some poor person who cannot afford a paper; or use it in a way you think will do the most good. With best wishes for your success in the good work. Yours truly, S. J. WILLIAMS.

Milwaukee, Wis.

November 3, 1870.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Will you be kind enough to give me the date of the killing of Mr. Crittenden by Laura D. Fair on the ferry boat between Oakland and San Francisco, as I have had a dispute in regard to the time? Are Laura D. Fair and Laura de Force Gordon one and the same person? [No.—Ed.] Inclosed find $2 for my renewal. Yours for justice.

J. S. MARTIN.

Aunt Elmina's Plea.

Dear Friends:

At last, after weeks of uncertainty and anxiety, Judge Foster of the United States Court has handed down his decision in the Harman, Walker, and Harman "obscenity" case, overruling the motion of counsel to quash the indictment. It is now almost certain that the trial will take place at the next term of court. I hope every friend who writes to me for books or papers will add 10 cents to my dime fund for the defense. I want it to grow and increase till it counts up into the hundreds.

I am proud of each name, of each donor, and feel disappointed at each mail that fails to bring at least one dime toward so good a work. Blessed be the cheerful and timely giver. Yours hopefully,

Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

ELMINA D. SLENKER.

A Want Filled.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I took notice of a little article at the head of the "Odds and Ends" column in the Truth Seeker of April 27, from the Jewelers' Weekly, where it says a scarf-pin shield that will protect its wearer from entanglement with a girl's hair would be a boon to mankind. Since ninety-nine per cent of all the girls are more or less religious, or creed-bound to some extent, I recommend all young men that have a mind of their own, and are not afraid to use it, to purchase one of Otto Wettstein's Freethought scarf-pins, price $4; can be had at Otto Wettstein's, Rochelle, Ill., or at Putnam & Macdonald's, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal. And I will assure them that it will act as a good preventive from becoming entangled in girl's hair. Try it! Yours for science and humanity,

LEWIS KAISER.

"Yone Santo—The Child of Japan."

To the Editors of Freethought:

We have just been reading the above work, and it makes us wish that intelligent thinkers who have not the fear of the church before their eyes would visit and get at the heart of all so-called heathen civilization. Not only the church direct, but governments called Christian, steadily oppose the truth's being told.

The large-hearted George Eliot, in her memorable letter to Harriet Beecher Stowe, says: "Toward all Oriental people with whom we English come in contact, a spirit of arrogance and contemptuous dictatorialness is observable." We wonder if Mrs. Lewes (George Eliot) sensed the real cause of this arrogance.

From whence does it come if not from the claims of the Christian religion? How can a people who are considered Christians par excellence, national in their religion, and the leading Christian nation of the world, be otherwise than arrogant under the very false idea than they are the guardians of the only religion through which mankind can be saved, all others being false and their advocates under the displeasure of the ruler of the universe? "We are God's favorites," is the natural language of such ideas. Mrs. Lewes farther says: "There is nothing I should more care to do, if it were possible, than to arouse the imagination of men and women to a vision of human claims in those races of their fellow-men who most differ from them in customs and beliefs."

"If it were possible!" repeats the author of "Yone Santo," from whose postscript we take the above, and then proceeds to say: "If any doubt (as to the difficulty) were imagined to exist, the testimony of those who, during a score of years, have striven to protect the foremost of Asiatic nations from the consequences of injurious foreign association would confirm the fact. Official influences have steadily opposed them, and powerful interests have united to counteract their endeavors."

Now mark the next sentence: "In no part of Europe is it generally recognized that a highly intelligent and progressive Eastern empire is held in subservience, and deprived of its inherent rights by sheer force unjustly and cruelly exercised."

And what is to be the result? The following statement tells the tale.

"The Japanese rulers are well aware that an assumption of Christianity, as a state religion, would smooth away many of their international complications. It is a scandal to the enlightenment of the nineteenth century that the recognition of a nation's inherent rights should be more or less dependent upon a mere formal declaration of faith, but such is the fact."

Can anything demonstrate more fully the infernal nature of that system known as Christian, as manifest wherever it obtains power? An intelligent nation deprived of its rights by a combination of Christian thieves, because not acknowledging as ruler of the universe the hideous monster, the Christian's God.

Why not send a representative of Freethought to Japan, and give him plenty of time to study the domestic relations and the scholarship of that people, and whatever else it might be well for your readers to know? As to "Yone Santo," the power of the church was brought to bear to prevent the publication of the story in book form, but happily, Christians do not own all our publishing houses, though could they succeed in getting their God in the Constitution, they would suppress such as refused to do their bidding.

Send for "Yone Santo," read it, learn it, and thus aid in emancipating the human mind from the control of priestcraft. LOIS WAISBROOKER.

Theological Imposition.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I wish to pay my respects to theologians by calling them, one and all, from the pope of Rome down to the Mormon howler and spouter, the most arrant lot of pretenders on the face of the globe. I do not believe there is a perfectly honest man among all these thousands of "advocates of the supernatural" unless it is among those who are so ignorant of this natural world that we might term them natural born and persistent fools. It seems to me these men—these advocates of supernatural dogmas—have no desire to know the truth nor any fear of believing a lie. Nor is that all, they apparently take much delight in getting others to accept their mind-degrading superstition so that they (the priestly impostors) may keep humanity in mental bondage. They teach, for instance, "the existence of an omnipotent, merciful God." Let us see about this reputed merciful God. If such a being exists, who is responsible for all the evil and injustice in the world? Who is responsible for all the innocent suffering and agony in this world? Do you say there is no evil, injustice, and suffering? How about the thousands that have gone down to a watery grave in ships sunk by the merciless storm? Did God lend a hand? How about the thousands of innocent people burned to death in burning houses? See a lot of children fall with the roof into the flames and fire, and then think of this omnipotent merciful God. Something over a year ago I saw this statement in a paper: A mother goes to the well after a pail of water; she takes her child along, a bright little baby girl. And going down the trail through the grass and flowers she sets the baby down a few moments while she draws the water. Suddenly she hears a heart-piercing cry from her little darling; she looks up and sees a large eagle flying away with her babe. The bird is already high in the air. Look, ye godly! a helpless babe and a helpless mother. Away the little one is borne in the sharp claws of the huge bird to the top of a neighboring barn. There the baby's eyes and its little heart were torn out and eaten by the eagle. Only a portion of the dead child's body was recovered. Think what must have been the feeling of that woman—worse than a thousand deaths! Did the merciful God show his mercy? Did he ever show any mercy? Can a "nonentity" be merciful? It won't do. This "merciful-God" doctrine is false, and the impostors who teach the lie should be exposed whenever and wherever possible. Why worship a God that does no good? Why waste millions of money on this nonentity in building churches and paying priestly pretenders for telling us falsehoods? Down with the churches and away with the priests—to some asylum where they cannot do so much harm! The world is far better without them. The truth is all that is wanted to make us free. Religion means slavery. Its very foundation is imposition and superstition.

It is nonsense and folly to talk about the supernatural or of its existence while the boundaries of the natural are not known. According to science and reason, this is a natural world, and is governed by immutable law. It is a degradation of the human intellect to lose time in prayers to the nonentity known as God. Nature is seen to do all things of itself without the meddling of the gods. It is proof against miracles. For all things there is a natural cause, and to hear theologians spout about the miraculous and the supernatural makes me tired. They labor simply to promote imposition and for the conservation of superstition. The world has had too much of it, it is time to strike down the false and lift up the true. True men and women, with the sceptre of science, morality, and reason, those emblems will lead to happiness and victory.

We want no more priestly imposition and theological pretension! We want no more God, devil, hell, and heaven. The truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, will do. More than this means evil.

And I say again, it were better to have no God than one that does no good. During my own short life on this globe I have seen too much suffering and evil to believe that an omnipotent, merciful deity exists. The existence of evil and injustice goes to show that the doctrine of Christianity—of all religions that teach the existence of an infinite and merciful God—is false. The facts are against them; and facts are what count. When religion is the cause of the killing of such splendid women as Hypatia, and the cause of the burning of such splendid men as Bruno, two of the noblest martyrs that ever lived or died, I for one consecrate the last drop of my heart's blood, and the last thought of my brain, to expose the priestly impostor and destroy his imposition of superstition. It must be done for humanity's sake. A religion that sanctions all crimes, that burns men to death for telling the truth, as it did with Giordano Bruno, I say it is a fraud as false as hell. There is no worse book in existence than the so-called Holy Bible. It upholds all crimes, cruelties, and evils, polygamy, tyranny, slavery, murder, human sacrifice, and all the list of unjust doings conceivable by the degraded minds of priests. Read its bloody record, and then consider its so-called "divinity."

What think you of a God that accepts as righteousness the punishment of the innocent and the pardon of the guilty? This triple-headed monster of Christianity is an imposition that should be scorned out of mind. It is a delusion unworthy of any consideration. Let the sun of science shine on the clouds of superstition and see how quickly they disappear. Then look upon the solid earth in the light of science and reason, and who but a theologian will say that this world is not worth our most earnest endeavor to make it better? Yours for the truth,

Salmon City, Idaho.

CHAS. F. BLACKBURN, Atheist.

A Word from Brother Watts.

Messrs S. P. Putnam and Geo. E. Macdonald are doing good work on the other side. Mr. Putnam is working hard in the lecturing field, and judging from his long list of engagements, which we print in another column, his activity is appreciated throughout California. Mr. Putnam is an earnest and persistent worker, and is deserving of all success possible upon the platform. His co-worker, Geo. E. Macdonald, confines his labors to the editorial duties of FREETHOUGHT, each number of which bears marks of his unique ability and experience. We hope and believe that the efforts of these two determined workers will be adequately rewarded.—Secular Thought.

Taylor's "Diegesis," by the Rev. Robert Taylor. A discovery of the Origin, Evidences, and early history of Christianity. $2.

OREGON STATE CONVENTION.

To the Liberals of Oregon:

The members of the Silverton Secular Union, of Silverton, Oregon, hereby cordially invite all the Liberals of Oregon to meet with them in mass convention at Silverton, June 22 and 23, 1889, for the purpose of organizing a state association on the basis of the Demands of Liberalism, to co-operate with the American Secular Union. The association thus formed is to represent no intellectual creed, but simply equal rights and impartial liberty. It is to be organized in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States, and the words of General Grant—"Keep the church and state forever separate."

All in favor of these great ends, so necessary to the preservation of Republican and Democratic institutions, are solicited to be present for fraternal co-operation. In union there is strength.

J. W. McCLURE, Pres., S. S. U., R. D. ALLEN, Secretary,
Mrs. Carrie Fitzgerald, H. D. Mount, E. Wolfard,
Executive Committee.

THE SUMMER AND FALL CAMPAIGN.

S. P. Putnam has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Silverton.....	Or., June 22, 23,	Pomeroy ..	W. T., Aug.....	26,
Stayton.....	" " 24,	La Grange, Or.....	Aug.....	29,
Mills City.....	" " 25, 26,	Union.....	Or.....	30,
Turner.....	" " 27,	Baker City, "	Sept.....	1,
Eola.....	" " 28,	Prairie City, Or, and vicinity,	Sept.
Canby.....	" " 29, 30	4, 5, 6, 7, 8,
Molalla.....	July.....	3, 4,	Fox Valley.....	Or., Sept. 9, 10,
Kalama.....	W. T., " " 6, 7,	Long Creek.....	" " 11, 12,
Starks Point. W. T., and vicinity,		Hamilton.....	" " 14, 15,
July 9, 10, 11, 12, 13,		Monument.....	" " 16, 17,
Astoria.....	Or., July ... 14,	Hay Stack.....	" " 18,
Stella.....	W. T., " 15, 16, 17,	Lone Rock.....	" " 19, 20,
Oswego.....	Or., " 18, 19,	Fossil.....	" " 21, 22,
Arnold's Grove.....	" " 20, 21,	Hillsboro, Or., Sept., 25, 26, 27, 28,
Coos county, Or., July 22 to Aug. 4,		North Yamhill... Or., Sept.....	29,
Coburg.....	" Aug.....	7, 8,	Forest Grove.....	" " 30,
Lebanon.....	" " " 9,	Talent, Or., and vicinity	Oct. 3, 4, 5,
Olympia... W. T., " " 11, 12,		6, 7,
Buckley... W. T., " " 13, 14,		Linkville.....	Or., Oct. 11, 12, 13,
Davenport, " " " 17, 18,		Sacramento.....	Cal., Oct. 20,
Cheney... " " " 19,		San Francisco.....	" " 27,
Rosalie... " " " 20,		Los Angeles and vicinity	the month
Sprague... " " " 21,		of November,
Pasco... " " " 22,		San Diego and vicinity	the month of
Dayton.... W. T., Aug.....	24, 25,	December.

Eternal Fitness.

According to the Church News (Catholic), the ruins of the tower of Babel have been turned to some account at last. The Carmelites of Bagdad have recently erected a statue of the Virgin Mary on the highest portion of the wall which remains standing. Considerable doubt formerly existed in the minds of many antiquarians as to whether the tower of Babel in reality ever had any connection with the ruins which now go by its name, and some have gone so far as to state that even the site of Babylon (supposed to be the ancient Babel) is at present unknown. But of course this difficulty is now all cleared away by this action of the Romish church. In her supreme wisdom and infallible judgment she has forever decided the matter by celebrating the mass on the spot, and then setting up the statue of the "blessed lady," as before referred to. Well, so be it. Inasmuch as Babel means confusion, and the name is perpetuated in the Greek word Babylon, we can conceive of no more appropriate place for the great mysterious Babylon, the mother of harlots, to set up her idolatrous shrines, and practice her iniquitous mysteries than she has found in this instance.—Signs of the Times.

"Looking Backward," a socialistic romance which has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin of Industrial Slavery," by Edward Bellamy. Price, 50 cents.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—
"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—
ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS
(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to
L. K. WASHBURN,
Revere, Mass.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mill.
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,
Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5. 60
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond".....	14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy.
Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Exceptional and Sad.

Elder Thompson, the famous Universalist preacher who died some years ago, was once asked to marry a couple whose religious views were at variance with his own. After the ceremony the bridegroom expressed his entire satisfaction with the service. "I don't see," he said, "that you could have done it any better if you'd believed in a hell." A little theological discussion followed, in which Elder Thompson advanced the idea that "a man gets his hell in this world." Two years after Father Thompson met the man again.

"You remember you married me?" the man said.

"Yes."

"And that I said I hoped it would be just as happy a marriage as if you believed in a hell?"

"You said something like that."

"And that you said some folks got all their hell in this world?"

"I might have said so."

"Parson, you was right."—Lewiston Journal.

"Christian Science."

The returns from Salida, Colorado, where a young woman under charge of Christian scientists has just died from the effects of typhoid fever, confirm the position taken by the Times that the so-called Christian science should be confined to colds in the head, or warts, or corns, or mild cases of constipation.—Kansas City Times.

THERE is a grim humor about some of Judge Lynch's executions. A bank president in Southwest Texas made away with all the funds under his charge, and then posted on the door of his institution, "Bank Suspended." That night he was interviewed by a number of depositors, who left him hanging to a tree with this notice pinned to his breast: "Bank President Suspended." Bank suspensions will not occur very frequently in that locality.

"You need rest," said the doctor, "and you must have perfect quiet." "All right," replied the patient, "I'm glad enough to hear it; I'll go into a monastery right away." "Won't do," said the doctor, shaking his head, "too much excitement. You go to Southern California."—Burdette.

"LET us not waste our time," yelled the temperance lecturer. "Let us not waste our time in dealing with the small saloons and grogshops. Let us go to the fountain-head. Let us go to the brewery, my friends." "All right," chimed in an old soaker from a back seat, "I'm with you."

BISHOP.—"Miss Autumn, I hear you are an earnest student of the Bible. What, in your opinion, is the most interesting line of Holy Writ?" Miss Autumn (promptly)—"Behold, the bridegroom cometh."

THE Oswego Record has found the most fanatical Baptist on record. He is an editor and insists that the paper on which he prints his ideas shall not be sprinkled.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street.

Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.

G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents.

Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC
SCHOOLS.—THE NEW
AMERICAN PARTY,

A Criticism by "Jefferson."

Price, 10 cents.

Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address, Putnam & Macdonald

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine-artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent. below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see other column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.'"

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25. Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50. Difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Temperance and Prohibition, THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics

Cloth, 75 cts.

Address this office

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

Miners and Millmen Attention!

BEHM'S

Centrifugal Pulverizer,

Guarantees to work One Ton

per hour of the Hardest

Quartz to a 40-Screen.

—ADDRESS:—

H. W. WALKER,

ASSAYER,

109 Montgomery Block,

San Francisco.

In replying to this advertisement, mention Freethought.

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY. Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right.

Yours respectfully,

J. R.

REMARKS.—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.

DR. FELLOWS.

Wm. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor.

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY.

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

TELEPHONE No. 655

P. O. CHILSTROM,

(Rogers & Chilstrom.)

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Commercial Business and Collections a Specialty.

Office, 415 Montgomery St., Rooms 9, 10 & 11,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11, POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St
N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton, Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology.
Price, 60 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY
NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,

NURSERYMEN

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit
and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.
Special Attention Given to Planting
and Caring of Orchards
and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box O,

San Jacinto, Cal

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA.

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or The Infidel Teacher 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

VILLAGE parson (entering country editor's office): "You promised to publish my sermon on Monday, but I do not find it in the latest issue of your paper." Editor: "I sent it up. It surely went in. What was the name of it?" Parson: "'Feed my lambs.'" Editor (after searching through the paper): "Ah—yes—um—Here it is. You see, we've got a new foreman; he has put it under the head of 'Agricultural Notes,' as 'Hints on the Care of Sheep.'"

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History, of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document. The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscoan. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

The Devil Went a-Fishing.

The Devil sat by the river side—
The stream of Time where you'll always find him—

Casting his line in the rushing tide
And landing the fish on the bank behind him.

He sat at ease in a cozy nook,
And was filling his basket very fast;
While you might have seen that his deadly hook
Was differently baited for every cast.

He caught 'em as fast as a man could count—
Little or big, it was all the same.
One bait was a check for a round amount;
An assemblyman nabbed it and out he came.

He took a gem that as Saturn shone;
It sank in the water without a sound,
And caught a woman who long was known
As the best and purest for miles around.

Sometimes he would laugh, and sometimes sing,
For better luck no one could wish,
And he seemed to know to a dead sure thing
The bait best suited to every fish.

Quoth Satan, "The fishing is rare and fine;"
And he took a drink, somewhat enthused—
And yet a Parson swam round the line
Who even the most tempting of baits refused.

He tried with his gold and his flashing gems,
Hung fame and fortune on the line,
Dressing-gowns with embroidered hems;
But still the Dominie made no sign.

A woman's garter went on the hook.
"I have him at last," quoth the Devil, brightening.

Then Satan's side with laughter shook,
And he landed the Parson as quick as lightning.

Time to Stand Pat.

Mr. Gunsaulus was telling a group of the bibliomaniacs there was nothing so beautiful in a house as a bevy of bright children. "I have a very lovely family," said he. "I hold, as the sinful would say, a bobtail flush."

"What's that?" asked the Hon. Charles B. Farwell, the well-known collector of Bibles and psalm-books.

"We were talking about children," said Gunsaulus, "and I was saying that in our family we have a bobtail flush—four girls and a boy."

Thereupon everybody laughed—everybody except the sage of East Pearson street.

"No," said Mr. Farwell, smiling sadly, "it is evident that you have had no experience in the ways of the world, otherwise you would not make so erroneous an application of terms. You do not hold a bobtail flush: you hold four of a kind—four queens and a jack—a powerful good hand, sir, and I should advise you to stand pat."—Chicago News.

MINISTER (making out record of baptism and in doubt about the date)—"Let me see; this is the 23d, isn't it?" Interested Mamma—"No, sir; it is only the fifth, and two of those are dead."—Minneapolis Tribune.

It was a Connecticut boy who surprised his teacher in reading the other day by his interpretation of the sentence "There is a worm; do not tread on him." He read slowly and hesitatingly, "There is a warm doughnut; tread on him."

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

Prometheus. A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald
504 Kearny st. San Francisco

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 25.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 22, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JUNE 22, 1889.

THE American exhibitors at the Paris exposition are making this country ridiculous by refusing to have their goods looked at on Sunday.

A NEWSPAPER paragraph furnishes the information that Professor Huxley's third daughter, Mrs. Albert Eckersley, has come over to Mexico to live, her husband being engaged in railroad building there.

THERE are two hundred and seventy-five women ordained to preach and preaching in this country. These are the females, but nearly a hundred thousand women of the other sex are in the same business.

THE following describes a character well-known and admired by American Freethinkers: "Mrs. Annie Besant has great popularity and influence among the Radicals of London. There is a wonderful magnetic attraction about her. Her face in repose can hardly be called handsome, but when animated, her dark, Irish eyes flash fire, and, as one of her lady friends once said, 'She has one of the sweetest smiles I have ever seen.' Her short, curling hair, and the somewhat peculiar attire which she affects, add to her individuality."

IT may be all right for the clergy to assert that disasters are sent upon wicked people in punishment for their sins, but it would be interesting to have them explain why the Methodist excursion train in Ireland was wrecked and a hundred of its passengers killed, half of whom were children. It was supposed that when God put his son to death for the redemption of the world he had done with punishing the innocent for the sins of the guilty. In view of recent facts and clerical utterances concerning them, the atonement doctrine needs remonetizing.

A HEBREW newspaper of Paris has made a careful computation of the number of people in the world of that faith, with the result that the total is given as being 6,300,000. Of this number there are no fewer than 5,400,000 in Europe, the remainder being thus apportioned: Asia, 300,000; Africa, 350,000; and America, 250,000. Taking Europe, the bulk of Hebrew element is in Russia, nearly 300,000, and of these a large portion (768,500) are in the old kingdom of Poland. Austria has 1,644,000 Hebrews, of whom 688,000 are in Galicia (Austrian Poland) alone. The other European countries come in the following order: Germany, 562,000; Roumania, 263,000; Turkey, 105,000; the Netherlands, 82,000; France, 63,000; Italy, 40,000. The prophecy that the seed of Abraham should be as countless as the dust of the earth is as far from fulfilment as the average Bible prediction.

POOR Pecci! Advices from Rome, says a London dispatch, indicate that the pope is still greatly depressed over the demonstration at the unveiling of the Bruno memorial. Speaking to one of the officials at the Vatican he said that the event was even sadder than were those of 1870, when only the temporal power of the pope was attacked. The present demonstration was an attempt to destroy the pope's spiritual authority, the only power now left him.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, June 23, at 8 o'clock. An address entitled "Our Destiny" is to be delivered by P. O. Chilstrom, Esq. All are invited.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Hopland is in the land of hops, and hence its name. There are two Hoplands now, the old Hopland across the river where the stages used to stop, and the new Hopland where the railroad-station is built; and there is a kind of gentle rivalry between these points, enough to make things appear quite animated in this beautiful valley. Sanel means Round Valley, and is the old Indian name. Massive and imposing hills extending into lovely prospects are on all sides, and the verdant fields and groves of oak intermingling present a magnificent picture amidst the bosom of the mountains. At present only about a dozen houses, including station, blacksmith-shop, stores, and school-house, are at Hopland, but a hotel is about to be built, and other improvements are going on, and undoubtedly this will be a very handsome village one of these days where the whistle of the locomotive has just been heard against the rock-ribbed and wooded heights. A little way from the station are the Duncan Springs in a hollow of the mountains, and around these springs, this summer, from one hundred to two hundred families are to camp. It is a delightful resort. The waters sparkling with bubbling gas from the heart of earth possess excellent medicinal qualities. The road winding over the vast hills to this embowered spot affords splendid views of the valley and its inclosing walls of green and gray, ranks of trees and frowning precipice. A little way off, down the Russian River and overlooking its crystal stream, is "The Lover's Leap," an enormous rock twelve hundred feet high with battlements sheer down to the banks of the river. From hence, it is said, the Indian maiden flung herself to death because she was robbed of her own true love and was to be forced into hated bonds with another. A romantic story in unison with the grand and desolate scenery.

The days passed in this still, somewhat secluded vale, were days of pleasure and contentment and happy labor. The meetings were well attended, the school-house was nearly full, and in fact there was the largest attendance to the lecture of anything that has yet taken place in the valley. It was a surprise to us all to see so much interest in Freethought.

John C. Weybright and family open their hospitable doors, and here I found the "true hearts" of freedom's band. There is no breath of superstition in this liberty-loving home. Mrs. Weybright has the honor of being the pioneer in the path of progress. Mr. Weybright did once believe in prayer and a God who numbers the hairs of the head and watches the sparrow, but he has now come to the conclusion that man is the only providence worth counting on. He is an enthusiastic Liberal, and devotes himself to the advancement of the cause. He sees the responsibilities of those who have flung off the old superstitions, and that the world must receive the benefit of new ideas. To him and to his family Freethought is "the consecration and the poet's dream."

There are others here ready to advance the cause with "heart and hand." John Huntley, among the old inhabitants of the coast, like most of the advance guard of civilization, has very little faith in the churches. His contact with nature and man in this rugged and progressive country has knocked theology to "innocuous desuetude," and science has been his teacher. His son, Wm. Huntley, a lawyer, is a cultivated and earnest thinker, and does not find even in the precedents of law the highest idea of justice. Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Lawrence who have been living about a year on Uncle Sam's domains among the foothills under the shadow of Duncan's Peak, and who are now to become residents of the village, are friends whom to meet is a pleasure, for they look to the morning light also. Mr. and Mrs. L. I. Long were in Mendocino county among the first, and are well-known among the people of this section. Mr. Long is originally of the "Old Granite State" like myself, and I guess he has not lost any of the backbone of those lofty and magnificent hills that encircled the homes of Yankee land. A. H. Thomson, T. J. Fairbanks, Wm. Bolton, Mary L. Higgins, J. J. Hale, Lucy Hale, A. G. McCain, L. N. O'Neil, and others are the comrades of this post who will keep the colors flying. There are no churches as yet to vex the landscape in this happy valley. I hope a Freethought Hall next to the school-house will be the first to ornament these green and wooded slopes, and shine forth from tree and rock with the radiance of unclouded science.

I was agreeably surprised to meet at Cloverdale Mrs. Eugenia Wheeler Clark, who, with her sisters, aided so generously our San Francisco meetings with music. She is now, I believe, among the "footlight flashes" of the theatric world, and is worthy of a brilliant success. I hope, however, these gifted sisters will enliven again our Freethought assemblies, for what is better than music to make the pulses of freedom glow. The world of art must touch to glory the world of thought and struggle. Success to our friends, and crowns of roses upon the mimic stage where life's ideal answers to the heart of hope.

Saturday I come to Ukiah. When I came here before it was by stage from Cloverdale, a distance of thirty miles. The mountains have now been tunneled along the Russian river, and Ukiah is the terminus of the railroad and is improving rapidly. My friends McGlashan and McCowen meet me at the station. They are our "standbys" here, and without them I fear that little would be done for Freethought in Ukiah. But they don't give up, although they might, with honor, be enrolled upon the "retired list." But, as the young men have not yet come forward, they keep in the ranks, as they have for nearly fifty years back, and so Ukiah is in the line of battle yet. It will be remembered that this is the place where the kerosene lamp was flung at my head by an ardent Christian. The Christians of this community sustained his action and cleared him of all crime, although his reckless act endangered the lives of many. I suppose this was a warning to the Infidel never to come to Ukiah again. The disciple of the "meek and lowly Jesus" who flung the lamp has disappeared with the funds that belonged to others, and it is generally hoped that he has "left his country for his country's good."

The court-house, which is open to meetings of all kinds, was engaged for the Freethought lectures, as before, and it was widely advertised that the lectures would be given in this place, but on my arrival I found that the sheriff had changed his mind and refused to let the court-house be used, on the ground that he feared a disturbance and the destruction of property under his care. Our friends were obliged at an additional expense to procure another place of meeting—Reed's Opera House. Mrs. Reed, the proprietor, did not seem to share the fear of the sheriff, as there was no danger of any disturbance.

The Christians have learned something since I was here last, and have had enough of violent measures. Their method is now the "conspiracy of silence," and to keep as many away from the lectures as possible. To a certain extent they have succeeded. The audiences have not been so large as I hoped for. The churches had a mass meeting on Sunday night in behalf of the sufferers by the flood—not Noah's, but the last one, but both, of course, under the auspices of their God—and I rather think that this meeting was arranged to keep the multitude away from the Freethought lecture. However, there has been no retreat so far as our columns are concerned. Although there are six churches, we don't propose to give them, altogether, the inside track. The future is the battle-field, and our ammunition will last just as long as that of the ecclesiastics. The series of lectures closed on Monday night with a fair audience—some increase on the audience of the night before—and so a gain has been made. There are many Liberals in this place, but they are either indifferent or are afraid of the ban of the churches. The churches are pretty strong, especially the Catholic, which is, of course, something of a political factor. It is in towns like Ukiah that one realizes the tyranny that churches will exert when they have the opportunity. It is just about large enough and small enough for everybody to know everybody's business, and so the clergy can exercise a close surveillance over the community, and if they feel disposed can hurl the anathemas of the church at those who are in open rebellion. In a larger place the churches cannot exercise the social and business influence they do here, and are much more harmless. Since Ukiah is bound to grow it will undoubtedly emerge from this provincial aspect, and with the influx of travel there will come larger ideas and ampler freedom.

Friend Mewhinney, of Pomo, Potter's Valley, was with us for awhile, but could not remain to the end. The farmers are all busy now with the harvest, and this keeps quite a number away from the lectures. Mewhinney is thoroughly outspoken for Liberalism, and is a stalwart ally always. So there is "the Old Guard" in Ukiah—a few "open and avowed Infidels" who are well known and honored in the community, and therefore the Christians are compelled to show outward respect, and acknowledge the intellectual and moral force of the Secular party. I have hope for the future. This is a beautiful spot. The surrounding hills are lovely. The valleys between are exuberant with fruits and grain. The Russian river winds along like a sparkling ribbon. The mineral springs are near. There are many attractions for the tourist as well as for those in search of home and comfort. Ukiah is on the road to prosperity, and the whistle of the engine is always the note of reform.

On Sunday I enjoyed the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. McGlashan. Mrs. McGlashan is of the broad, liberal Christian school, extracting all the virtue of the venerable religion and leaving out its sectarian dogmas. It was delightful to behold our friend's fireside glow with hope and joy, where the silver light of morn is in the golden eve.

Among the Liberal citizens of Ukiah, who are well known in the community, are B. B. Fox, one of the town trustees, whose indefatigable labors have helped much to beautify the city; Mr. Forse, the stage agent, who for twenty years has given satisfaction to the traveling public by his gentlemanly way of doing business, always in favor of "equal rights and impartial liberty" to man, woman, and child; D. Crocket, of the Davy Crocket stock, for thirty years a resident of this county—"Be sure you are right and then go ahead" always makes a stalwart Freethinker; W. M. Hillman, the miller, who never takes too much toll—no theology in his grindstones; J. Donahue, formerly sheriff and now real-estate agent; W. M. Proudfoot, also a live business man; Thos. Caruthers, Judges Sewell and Manon, members of the bar, known throughout the state; Senator Yell, the handsomest man in the Senate and a brilliant politician; E. Gulsdorf, banker; J. N. Stanley, sheriff—the ablest detective of the state, and one of the most popular men in his party. I don't wonder he did not have sufficient confidence in the Christian believers to let the courthouse be used for my lectures, for in the case of Hamilton the sheriff was obliged to foot the bills for damages, while Hamilton, who flung the lamp, so far as I can find out, never paid a cent and went "scot-free." It is to be hoped that the locomotive, the agent of civilization, will thunder a few ideas of justice into the barbaric, theologic horde of this place. One man, a clergyman, on the jury that acquitted Hamilton, said he was "glad of a chance to strike a blow for the Lord." Hamilton has also struck a blow for the Lord by "blowing in" about twelve hundred dollars of public money, and skipping with "angel wings." I don't blame the sheriff for his refusal. It is the system and conditions that are at fault. It is that the Christians, some of them, are still swayed by the bloody dogmas of the Bible. However, they are improving. Nature and civilization are knocking out inhumanity and the monarch of the skies. The reign of the republic is coming.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

DELINQUENTS.

We have to remove from our list the names of many subscribers who fail to either renew or to order their paper stopped. This is done with regret, because we wish to retain all who are interested enough in FREETHOUGHT to read it. Our list is steadily lengthening, as increased bills for paper, printing, and postage show. Many copies are needed to fill applications for samples, and we are obliged to cut off the delinquents in order to supply this demand. We cannot afford to send the paper free, but it is difficult to understand how any sincere Liberal can take a paper and not pay for it. Reader, if you have received notice that your subscription has expired, please renew—or let us hear from you. If you cannot renew, drop us a card to that effect, that we may forget and forgive, and part friends.

"SABBATH" OBSERVANCE.

The following comes to us from New York:

"In line with the policy inaugurated by the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad, and followed by the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern, Michigan Central, Bee Line, and other roads operating in connection with the Vanderbilt system, to discontinue, as far as practicable, all labor on their railways on the Sabbath, an agreement has just been reached to close all the city ticket offices in Buffalo on Sunday, beginning with June 9. This will give a large number of men an opportunity to attend church and secure a well-earned rest, and the railways interested are entitled to great credit for this movement. The example should be followed in every city in the United States.

"Owing to the arrival of delayed trains it may be found impossible to close the depot ticket offices, but there is no reason why the city ticket offices of all the railways in the country should not be closed on Sunday.

"Chicago and Buffalo have adopted the 'Sunday closing' rule. What city will be next to have its name placed on the new roll of honor?"

This is accompanied by the appended note:

"To the Editors of Freethought:

"The above item would doubtless be of interest to many of your readers, and is sent you in the hope that you may find room for it in your columns, and thus aid the movement to discontinue, as far as it is practicable to do so, labor in connection with railways on the Sabbath day.

"Very respectfully yours, GEORGE H. DANIELS,

"General Passenger Agent, N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R.

"New York city, June 6, 1889."

Mr. Daniels is right in thinking that the above matter will be of interest to our readers. Like ourselves they are interested in noting the various manifestations of hypocrisy in connection with the Sunday-closing movement. This shutting up of a few city ticket offices is a very insignificant beginning compared with what must be done if all labor connected with railways is to be discontinued on Sunday. It amounts to nothing, in fact, so far as reducing the total amount of work is concerned, for Mr. Daniels takes care to inform us that the depot offices will be kept open. Thus people desiring to purchase tickets on Sunday will be submitted to the inconvenience of going to the depot for them, so that while the ticket seller from the city office is attending church or resting, the clerk at the depot is doing double duty. The work done, therefore, is not lessened; it remains the same plus the inconvenience to passengers just noted. Exactly how the "railways interested are entitled to great credit for this movement" it is hard to see, since the professed reduction of Sunday labor is not effected.

But there is another side to this Sunday-closing business. The railways of the country are for the convenience of the traveling public, and because they are conveniences the roads receive valuable franchises, large concessions of land, and often subsidies. They ought, then, to be run for the benefit of the people, and not suspended out of regard for Sunday, or for the purpose of increasing church attendance. The public has a right to insist that trains shall be run in such a manner as to best accommodate those who support them.

The cessation of Sunday labor would doubtless be profitable to the railroad employers. They would save the wages of their men on Sunday and could crowd two days' work into the following Monday; but how about passengers forced to lie over at way-stations? How about perishable freight? Would people be willing to wait over Sunday for their mails?

The plea of the Sunday closers is that laborers need one day of rest in seven, and opponents of the measure are accused of being enemies of Labor. It may be quite true that one day of rest in seven is desirable, but that does not make it necessary for all to rest on the same day; and as long as there is in the country a great army of the unemployed it will always be easy to find men to relieve those who have religious scruples against Sunday labor.

Before leaving the subject we would like to inform Mr. Daniels that Sunday and Sabbath are not interchangeable terms. Sunday is the first day of the week, and the Sabbath is the last. Men engaged in conducting railroads should devote themselves to increasing the efficiency of their service and ministering to the comfort of their passengers. If they do this faithfully their reward will be great, even though they run their trains on Sunday and the Sabbath too.

RELIGIOUS IMPOSTORS.

The Chronicle says:

"The extent of public credulity cannot be measured, if we are to judge of it by the success of the Rev. George Schweinfurth, of Rockford, Ill. This vulgar mountebank, who claims to be Christ, not only has obtained from his dupes a fine house and other property, but he maintains in his mansion nearly fifty women, thirteen of whom he calls angels. When he journeys from one place to another, visiting the members of his church, he wears a crown and carries a portion of his harem in a large coach. His rank imposture and his mercenary character have been laid bare, but these exposures do not appear to damage him. As the number of his dupes increases his own pretensions grow, and his latest announcement is that he is 'the Almighty himself.' A good dose of tar and feathers and a lively ride on a sharp rail would probably be the best way to test his divinity. If it didn't humble his spiritual pride it would probably free Rockford from his presence."

We have not the slightest sympathy with this Schweinfurth, and regard him as a religious impostor, but it is hardly worth while to make war on him so long as religious impostors with a million times more influence, and therefore a million times more dangerous, are gulling the public with their supernatural claims. Let us take only one of them—the pope of Rome—and see whether in comparison with him this pigmy Schweinfurth is, after all, entitled to rank as a religious impostor.

It is charged that Schweinfurth has a fine house and other property. Has he as fine a house as the Vatican palace? Has he as much "other property" as the pope, who is the richest man in Europe? Not a millionth part.

Next, "he [Schweinfurth] has fifty women." What is that beside the nunneries of Catholicism. What is it to even a single convent in San Francisco to which the priests of the city carry keys, and which they enter at will? Does Schweinfurth's offense consist in calling his concubines "angels" instead of "sisters?"

All are familiar with the mercenary character of the pope. His income is millions, and he continually asks for more. As in the case of Schweinfurth, "these exposures do not appear to damage him."

It is said that the Rockford impostor's "pretensions grow." How about the pope's? Did not his pretensions "grow" when he declared himself the vicar of God, when he claimed temporal power over the earth, and when finally he put on the robes of infallibility touching matters of salvation? If Schweinfurth's claims are as pretentious as these, he is indeed an impostor.

The Chronicle ought to have learned from history that its proposed method of testing divinity—namely, "tar and feathers and a lively ride on a sharp rail"—is no test at all. A mob tried a similar test eighteen hundred and fifty years ago on a man whose claims were similar to Schweinfurth's. They crucified him. His failure to save himself was regarded as evidence of imposture, and he was forced to cry aloud, "My God, my God! why hast thou forsaken me?"

If "the extent of public credulity cannot be measured," judging by the success of Schweinfurth, how can it be estimated judging by the success of the pope? Compared with the extent of Christian superstition the Rockford delusion is a mere shadow in the presence of Egyptian darkness.

SHALL IT BE DONE?

To the Editors of Freethought:

Shall the opportunity to put a state into the Union of States, constitutionally and forever protected from the deadliest and most subtle foe to all that is dearest and most sacred to all men who love righteousness and purity, be allowed to pass, and not return again for years to come?

In the galaxy of states, South Dakota may be made the Polar Star of constitutional prohibition.

To all the states, and to all the tribes and all the clans of temperance, we make our appeal. We make it in the language of Deborah, to the tribes and clans of Israel, and we say: "Up! This! this and no other is the day."

The Philistines of rum will soon fill all the plain. It is the plan and purpose of these hordes of rum, who would keep us in bondage to their trade, to concentrate their forces upon us; to pour in their treasure, to overwhelm us by the magnitude of their efforts. Not a state in the Union, not a den of infamy, not a place of vileness will refuse to respond.

Shall not every state, and every church, and every society in like manner, in support of the cause, in contrast, so infinitely noble, so measurelessly grand and higher, come to the help of South Dakota?

But why especially to the help of South Dakota? The reason is obvious. Here, of all places, the promise of success for the friends of temperance, and the friends of God and man is brightest.

Therefore, the rum power will do its best. Therefore, we must do our best.

South Dakota will do its best, or, perhaps not its best, for no state has ever yet done this.

But, when all is considered, South Dakota will do better than ever yet any state did. She will stretch every nerve, bend every energy, and according to her ability pour out her money. Already the money is coming from counties and cities, towns and hamlets, churches and societies.

We request that pastors of all churches take collections for our aid on Sunday, June 30.

All individuals who feel inclined to assist in carrying on this great work in securing the admission into the Union of the first state coming in as a prohibition state, will forward any amount to be devoted to this purpose, to Hon. F. H. Hagerty, treasurer of the Non-Partisan Constitutional Prohibition Organization, Aberdeen, Dakota.

V. V. BARNES, Yankton, President.

W. F. T. BUSHNELL, Huron, Secretary.

We have no objection to giving the foregoing appeal publicity through our columns, though we are not in favor of constitutional prohibition. It can scarcely be a legitimate function of the state to prescribe what people may use as a beverage, or what they may not, and certainly it is not our business to interfere with the citizens of South Dakota in that regard. To express the hope that no unnecessary liquor may be used in the new state is a most virtuous sentiment; but to say that none shall be sold, and that those who do sell it shall be subject to fine or imprisonment, is another thing. The people of South Dakota should make their constitution as short and simple as the necessities will permit. It should be a political instrument, not a moral treatise. It should recognize no religion, exempt no private property from just taxation, provide no special laws for Sunday, and place no restrictions upon personal freedom. The people are responsible to themselves for the abuse of liberty; the constitution makers will have done their duty when they have so framed their bill of rights as to guarantee that liberty.

No doubt the members of the Non-Partisan Constitutional Prohibition Organization are inspired by an honest desire to do good, but they make the mistake of thinking that constitutions are for the invasion of natural rights instead of for their protection.

LAST year Mr. Ranford Worthing, of San Diego, offered a corner lot worth $300 to the person who would get the most subscribers to FREETHOUGHT before May 1, 1889. Rather strangely, the entries for the contest were few, and while it stimulated some to activity, nobody seriously endeavored to win the prize. The workers were unselfish enough to do what they could without hope of reward. Mr. Worthing has therefore changed his benefaction to a direct gift to FREETHOUGHT. He writes:

"DEAR FRIENDS: Inclosed please find $20, my yearly payment on the paper. Sorry I could not send it sooner. With kind regards,
"Yours, RANFORD WORTHING."

There is a world of encouragement in a brief letter like this, and we feel deeper thanks than we are able to express.

J. D. SHAW says, in the Independent Pulpit: "We congratulate the great West in having such a paper as FREETHOUGHT, and we congratulate the managers in being patronized by such a liberal and public-spirited constituency. It is rarely the case that a strictly reform journal can be established without the voluntary aid of sympathizing friends. The plan set on foot by the friends of FREETHOUGHT comprehends an annual subsidy of $2,000 for the next five years. Christians often sneer at us with the remark that 'Infidels will not back their judgment with their money,' but we are gradually coming to believe that they are as much mistaken about that as they are about who wrote the Bible."

THE Rev. Dr. Hannon, of San Francisco, declares that the recent disasters at Johnstown and Seattle "are terrible and startling messages from God," warning men to be prepared for death and the glories of heaven. If God is as careless of our welfare in heaven as on earth, the gain will not be great. Stronger dams and more efficient fire engines now are worth many years of pious preparation against fire and damns of another sort hereafter.

THE Liberals of North Yamhill, Or., will celebrate the Fourth of July with a meeting, and have secured Mr. B. F. Underwood as the orator of the day. Mr. Underwood will remain in North Yamhill two days after the Fourth and lecture Friday and Saturday evenings. The Freethinkers of the vicinity are specially anxious that church-members should be present.

A NOTE from Coquille City, Or., informs us that Prof. D. C. Seymour is at that place, doing well and feeling well. He will resume "On the Trail," at no distant day. Oregonians are apprised that his address for the summer is 100 South First street, Portland, and that he will answer calls to lecture without money and without price anywhere a hall can be provided.

MRS. MATTIE P. KREKEL, who stands with the first and best woman lecturers on Freethought, starts west from Pittsburg, Pa., July 10. She desires lecture engagements at Denver, Colorado City, and Salt Lake if practicable. Those desiring her services will address her at 438 So. 24th avenue, Omaha, Neb.

ON the walls of Andrew Carnegie's library is the inscription:

"He that cannot think is a fool,
He that will not is a bigot,
He that dare not is a slave."

There are some persons who are accurately described by either of these three lines. They make the best of Christians, particularly Roman Catholics.

THERE is a contention between the Twentieth Century, Hugh O. Pentecost's paper, and Henry George's Standard. The Standard repudiates Socialism, while the Twentieth Century maintains that Georgism is essentially socialistic. Mr. Pentecost apparently has the best of the argument.

A SNOHOMISH subscriber writes us that he takes the Truth Seeker as his Old Testament and FREETHOUGHT as the New. He doubtless takes some other journal as an Apocrypha. There are a number that would fill the bill.

DR. STOCKHAM's work on "Temperance and Prohibition" is for sale at this office. Cloth, 50 cents; paper covers, 25 cents. All temperance people, and especially all Prohibitionists, ought to read it.

THE little Pundita Ramabai, says the Alta, has gone home to Hindoodom with the $100,000 she received in this country, and has started a school that has three pupils.

THE San Francisco Turn Verein's literary entertainment for the benefit of the fire and flood sufferers last Sunday night netted nearly $400 for the good cause.

ALL the Liberals of the West and East will send greeting to the Oregon Secularists in convention assembled at Silverton June 22 and 23.

"JOHN WARD, PREACHER," has been issued in paper covers and can now be furnished for 50 cents.

W. S. BELL left San Francisco for Coos county, Or., last Wednesday.

BOOK NOTES.

Charles Watts, editor of the Toronto, Ont., Secular Thought, issues a second edition, revised and enlarged, of his "Glory of Unbelief." Price 10 cents.

"Greeley" is a monthly journal of Natural Science published by Jos. M. Wade, Dorchester, Mass. It is largely given over to the effete science of astrology.

Henry Replogle has republished in leaflet form from Fair Play a touching little story by Bessie Emerson, late companion of J. William Lloyd. It is called "Vacation: One of Life's Shadows."

J. M. Wheeler, of London, is publishing a "Biographical Dictionary of Freethinkers of all Ages and Nations." It is issued in parts, six of which are out, though but one, the first, has reached this office.

The novel by M. C. O'Byrne which has been published as a serial in Secular Thought is brought out in book form by Ellis, Moore & Bangs, 39 Melinda street, Toronto, Ont. In paper it sells for 50 cents; in cloth, $1.

No. 7 of the Modern Science Essayist, published by Brother James West, of the New Ideal, contains "The Descent of Man" by E. D. Cope, Ph.D.; and No. 8 "The Evolution of Mind" by Robert G. Eccles, M.D. These are really excellent publications, and the price, 10 cents, makes them accessible to all.

A new monthly paper has been started at Minneapolis and St.

Paul, and christened "Reason." It has sixteen quarto pages and devotes itself to "literature, religion, and philosophy." It appears to be Unitarian so far as it is denominational, and fights religious legislation with all the strength of its powerful editorial corps. One dollar per year.

The National Constitutional Liberty League of Boston has collected the "Recent Editorial Utterances of the American Press" on the subject of the medical monopoly established by the "regular" physicians, and published them in pamphlet form. Send ten cents for the same to J. Winfield Scott, Hotel Glendon, Boston, Mass.

Dr. M. R. Levenson has addressed an open letter on "Constitution-Making" to the members of the Constitutional Conventions of North and South Dakota, Washington, and Montana. Dr. Levenson is the well-known advocate of Proportional Representation and the Referendum. The pamphlet may be had for 15 cents by addressing the author at 23 West 73d st., New York.

The Teacher's Outlook is the title of a fat magazine which emanates from Des Moines, Iowa, the Rev. W. G. Todd editor. It will deal with civil, political, industrial, and scientific questions, and the first number indicates that these will be viewed in the light of an intelligent and Liberal mind. The business management of the Outlook is unique—teachers by purchasing a certain amount of stock are entitled to have an article published once a year.

The veteran G. J. Holyoake has begun the publication of an "occasional magazine" which he calls "The Universal Republic." As its title indicates, the object of the publication is to put the welfare of the whole under the control of everyone, or the "federation of the world" into a single republic. Only the first number of this magazine has reached us. It is published at 6 Salisbury Court, Fleet street, London, Eng., at the price of two-pence per number.

Robert Park, M.D., has added a new word to the nomenclature of religious beliefs. The word is "Eufidelity," and Dr. Park says that it means the "positive aspect or status of the intellect in view of the Agnostic philosophy." That is to say, it is the "assimilation of Agnosticism and the harmony thereof with the facts of man's emotional and devotional nature." Eufidelity is a religion, and as a first contribution to it Dr. Park has written a pamphlet on "Faith as an Intellectual Function," which is published by Watts & Co., London.

A deep-down philosophical work is Dr. Paul Carus's "Fundamental Problems," issued in a very handsome book by the Open Court Publishing company of Chicago. Dr. Carus opposes Agnosticism, and would substitute Positive Science. In the place of mysticism he claims to put clear thought; and throws overboard both materialism and supernaturalism for a "unitary conception of the world." No dogma, but religion; no creed, but faith—such is the outline of the work attempted by our author. How well he succeeds each must judge from a perusal of "Fundamental Problems," the price of which is $1.

A large and handsome volume is the "Life of Albert R. Parsons," by Lucy E. Parsons, his wife. Parsons was one of the Chicago Anarchists who were put to death in November, 1887. It is mainly a compilation of matter printed at the time the case was before the public, omitting any details that would serve to connect the incidents into a history of the offense, the trial, and the execution. Nevertheless it is a valuable work, and shows how, even under a Constitution guaranteeing liberty of speech, men may be hanged for unpopular utterances. It is worthy of note that Parsons and his fellow-victims now stand perhaps higher in the estimation of the public than the men who were most instrumental in effecting their execution.

"Saladin," editor of the London Agnostic Journal, throws the light of his subtle intellect upon the question, "Did Jesus Christ Rise from the Dead?" in a substantial pamphlet of 64 pages with that title. He takes for a text the statement in 1 Cor. xv, 14, "If Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain," and proceeds to show up the possibilities of the resurrection story as told in the gospels. It is anomalous that in the nineteenth century it should be necessary to demonstrate by argument that a dead man could not by any possibility come to life again, but the resurrection is one of the dogmas of the Christian church, and there are said to be some who believe it. There are two propositions concerning Christ's resurrection, one of which must be accepted after reading Saladin's work; namely, If he was dead, he did not rise; or, If he rose, he was not dead.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Preparations for an extensive celebration of the Fourth of July in San Francisco are being made, the city bearing all the expense. Joaquin Miller is to be the poet. Trouble is expected with the musicians, who demand $8 per day, while the celebration committee are resolved to pay but $6.—Ninety-seven deaths were reported in this city last week against 113 for the corresponding week of 1888. The falling off is attributed to the improved sanitary conditions.—Reports from the vineyard districts promise an unusually large crop of grapes.—San Francisco continues to send money to Seattle and Johnstown, and other cities of the coast are responding generously. It is a noticeable fact that many liberal donations are from Chinese citizens.—A railroad smashup at Saulsbury Station, sixteen miles from Sacramento, June 15, killed a trainman named Wilson and severely injured many others.—Seattle people announce that business there is "bent but not busted," and have gone to work at rebuilding. The banks report that their vaults stood the test well, and business is being carried on in temporary quarters.—The Horticultural Association, of Pomona, after personal inspection, say that the apricot crop there will be fifteen per cent larger than ever before.—The Academy of Sciences has petitioned the Superior Court to dismiss the cross-complaint of the School of Art in the application to construe the will of the late James Lick. The School of Mechanical Art claimed to have an equal interest with the California Pioneers in the $540,000 alleged to be in the hands of the trustees. The Academy of Sciences claims that the Art School has no interest in it.

Alexander Sullivan, the Irish agitator, is under bonds charged with complicity in the Cronin murder at Chicago. Opinion is divided as to his guilt.—Lightning knocked the steeple off a Catholic church in New York city last Saturday. Reports from the northern Atlantic states indicate extensive damage to property and life by the storm.—A handsome monument to Chester A. Arthur was unveiled in the cemetery at Albany, N. Y., on the 15th.—At the Territorial convention of women held at Cheyenne, Wyo., a resolution was adopted requesting the coming constitutional convention to incorporate a woman's suffrage plank in the constitution.—President Harrison has given $300 to the flood sufferers.—The bursting of a dam flooded Belletown and Uniontown, Kan., last Sunday, destroying life and property.—The Rev. John E. Cookman, a noted Methodist preacher, of New York, has left his church and joined the Episcopalians. The difference in the salary is not stated.—John Gilbert, the veteran actor, died June 17.—Prohibition was defeated in Pennsylvania last Monday by 165,000 majority.

It is reported from Ireland that the Cronin murder is a serious injury to the Irish cause.—The recent labor conference at Paris was largely dominated by Henry George's single-tax to the exclusion of Socialism.—The Samoan Commission has completed its work at Berlin, and Commissioner Phelps is on his way home.—Lord A. P. Cecil, the evangelist, was drowned in the bay of Quinte, near Adolphustown, Ont., June 13.—A Methodist Sunday-school excursion train was wrecked near Armagh, Ireland, June 12, and nearly one hundred people were killed.

J. J. McCabe's Centenary Address.

Mr. J. J. McCabe delivered a centennial address at Albany, N. Y., which was printed in the Boston Investigator of May 22. The address evoked the following letter:

Dear Mr. McCabe: Your address is excellent both in matter and in spirit. You have the true American idea, which, I trust, is destined to become the universal idea. Your speech was capital.
Newburyport, Mass., May 24, 1889.

JAMES PARTON.

OBSERVATIONS.

The ghastly work done by the Freethought-society killer at the meeting of June 9 made itself felt on the attendance at the last meeting, June 16. I refer to the tedious address of the man with a raucous voice, who, on the first date mentioned, rambled on about god-knows-what for a period of twenty minutes. Nevertheless last Sunday night's gathering was attended by a fair audience, numbering seventy-five or upwards. President Chilstrom occupied the chair, and a fair sprinkling of ladies brightened the occasion with their presence.

At 8:15, in default of Mr. Hatch, the orator chosen for the occasion, Mr. Thomas Curtis was called upon. Mr. Curtis is always prepared to speak entertainingly on any subject relating to Freethought. He was making splendid headway when, after a few minutes, Mr. Hatch came and relieved him.

Mr. Hatch's subject was "A Defense of the Agnostic Position," and he handled it so ably that I have asked for his manuscript to reproduce in these columns, and no doubt it will be laid before the readers of FREETHOUGHT next week.

At the close of the address, which lacked nothing except length, the subject was opened to discussion. Mr. Curtis resumed the floor to put a cornice and roof on his previous remarks, and to decorate the structure with a few flourishes.

The president invited further discussion, with a warning that speakers would be careful to confine themselves to the subject of Agnosticism. As no one responded immediately, I took occasion to inquire if, in the opinion of the Chair, a collection for current expenses would come under that general head. The Chair ruled that it would, and the motion prevailed.

The great disintegrator, the man with the raucous voice, was on deck, and made his usual speech while the audience dissolved. I may here say that Professor Schultheis was not present; he was at the Turners' hall playing for the benefit of the Johnstown sufferers. This was commendable. Flood and fire are cruel visitors, but there are others sufferings quite as keen as those inflicted by the raging elements, and among these I count the pain of listening to the speaker aforesaid. Professor Schultheis's skill as a pianist, if he had been present, would have served to lift the audience from a depth of deep woe.

Next Sunday night, June 23, President Chilstrom promises an address on "Our Destiny." As Mr. Chilstrom is a comparative stranger to many of the Liberals of the city, and quite reserved withal, so far as the expression of his opinions is concerned, a great degree of interest attaches to this occasion.

I am aware that the greater part of what I write in these observations is calculated to sooth instead of to lacerate the feelings of the general reader. My remarks last week concerning the statements of Mr. Geo. E. Blaine touching Topolobampo affairs, I fear, have had a contrary effect, and expressions of opinion that reached me shortly after the paper was out almost induced me to publish a retraction. But the first day of this week a man came in to tell me how much he appreciated the aforesaid statements. He said his name was Christie; that he was himself what they call in Mexico a Topolobampo sufferer, having lived in the colony as long as he could. Mr. Christie expressed it as his opinion that the future of Topolobampo was chimerical, and that, like heaven, it must be accepted on faith, the said faith involving a firm belief in the delusion that Albert K. Owen was a little tin god on wheels.

Mr. Christie had scarcely closed the office door on departing before it was opened again, and a man entered, wearing a light suit of summer clothes and a high and broad sombrero. He wore also an attractive rosette of green and red ribbon pinned upon the lapel of his vest; his face was tanned by tropic suns, and he had the earnest look generally of the enthusiast who sees bright prospects just ahead. I inquired if he lived in San Francisco. He said he did at present, but Topolobampo was his home, and he was just from the sunny land of Sinaloa. His name he gave as H. Patrick. Said he: "I want to get several copies of your last paper. There's an article in it that made me laugh, and I want the other colonists to see it. The man that wrote it don't know anything." I acknowledged the cold and formal accuracy of the statement, and he further said that the vaunted railroad company amounted to nothing. They had cut a few bushes, and scraped away a handful of dirt, and there they had stopped. The proposed route was ridiculous. They might build the road from Guaymas toward Topolobampo, but the Credit Foncier company owned all the land bordering on Topolobampo bay, the only harbor in the vicinity, and the railroad company couldn't touch it without the colonists' consent. On the other hand Mr. Owen's road would be commenced in September and put through from Topolobampo to Fuerte in short order.

Mr. Patrick then went away. He was in the best of spirits, joyous, jubilant, enthusiastic, and did not look in any way like a sufferer. If all that I hear is true, and I don't dare to doubt it, Mexico will shortly be furnished with railroad lines to all points, with twenty minutes at every station, allowing ample time for meals.

Some men are born tired, and never work,
Some men occasionally take a day off at their own expense,
Some have had a holiday involuntarily thrust upon them.
The latter is my case exactly, I sing of the latter.

It is morning, sanctum I sit at my desk, I open letters.
I see stamps for a sample copy, and occasionally a dollar bill,
But not often, or a postal note.
The door opens, I grasp my Editor's Companion, a sash weight of twelve pounds avoirdupois,
But it is not a book agent, a tract distributor
Or the man who remembers when the water came up to Montgomery street.

I let the sash weight hang by its string, pendulous, vibrant.
My visitor is the Captain, he has plowed the sea, the large imperious waves;
He offers me a ride in a buggy along the water front, to the Union Iron Works, the Potrero.
I accept the offer, I enter the buggy, the tires of which are loose, the shafts rattle at the axle.
The horse is foundered in the forelegs, spavined in the rear, fifteen years old and upward.

We go along the water front, the ships above us projecting their bowsprits landward.
It is wash day on board, the sailors' red flannel shirts hang in the fore rigging,
The street is lined with gin mills to the westward, the doors open,
To the east stretches the bay over toward Oakland—
Rum upon one side of us, and water upon the other,
Shall we turn to the right and get drunk as a fiddler
Or to the left and be drowned in the water?

We go ahead straight as circumstances will permit,
We reach at length the Union Iron works, the Potrero.
In the offing lies the Charleston; with a smokestack large as the trees in Santa Cruz county.
(She is a cruiser, while the trees are Santa Cruzers, as I remark to myself suppressing a shriek of laughter.)
Here is a steam dredger, diving, dredging for mud,
Not for the sake of the mud, but for the hole left when the mud is gone.

Charleston, I salute you! you are for a plaything—
The big boys who run our government will have fun with you.
For the people who pay for you it is not so funny.
Here in the dry dock is the Victoria, having the mud scraped from her bottom.

Ah, there, Victoria, I greet you. Wait for me, I will not hurt you.
Here is the Rev. St. So-and-so, laid up for a new gilguy, (Rev. St. is the abbreviation shortwise, comprehensive, used by the papers for revenue steamer.)

Over yonder is the San Francisco—steel scantling and clapboards of red iron,
She will make another plaything for the boys who run our government.

Here is the City of Puebla, we hitch our horse and go aboard of her.

The men are scraping the machinery, cleaning her engines for the next trip,

Other men are covering her boilers and steam pipes
With Magnesia Sectional Covering, made of asbestos and magnesia,

It conserves the heat, renders the interior of the ship comfortable,
Establishes a temperate climate in the midst of equatorial latitudes.
It is light, dry, artistic, and totally impervious to fire.

When I die I shall order a suit made of magnesia sectional covering.

It will rob death of its sting and the grave of its victory.
I look at the ship all I want to. I discover that she is hollow.
Then the captain takes me back to the office,
Before going up-stairs he treats me to a glass of lager bier.

I am not writing this poem for a dollar and a half, nor to fill up space,

I have just been reading Walt Whitman, and this is the result.
This is the result of a ride to the Potrero, and a perusal of "Leaves of Grass."

Some day I shall have a monument on account of this poem.
Some day the litterateurs will hold a dinner in Camden, New Jersey, in honor of my birth.

So I am not writing for the present, but for the future, not for a dollar, but for glory.

Some people have no poetry in them, but I am full of it.
I do not believe the ocean is chiefly beautiful on account of the clams you can dig on the seashore.

I look upon the statue of liberty as an emblem.
It symbolizes freedom lighting the world by the electric system,
It is not intended, as some suppose, to represent a young woman, just retiring, in the act of turning off the gas.

I started out for a holiday in San Francisco, and bring up, metaphorically, in New York harbor.

Many other have gone that way, literally, crossing the isthmus, working their passage. M.

THE FEMALE SUPERIOR.

There are some truths that need a continual reiteration for years and years before the general public will see and accept them.

The idea that the female is the superior organization—the last, best, and most complete of all life's children—is one of these facts that the world has not yet granted a place in its list of accepted propositions. Nevertheless, it will one day be found there, and it is the duty of all who see things as they actually are to help the world to so recognize them.

Nature's forces always work for the creation of the female; motherhood is the great end to be gained; all births would be of females were the conditions of the best possible, and virgin generation would rule.

The male is merely a case of arrested development. Among bees and ants the main body of the workers are all undeveloped females. Girl-babies have more vitality than boy-babies. Women outlive men as a rule. More males are usually born because it is so rare that all the forces work in harmony for the highest results, but in the struggle for life women come out victorious. In the 50,000,000 of people in this country, there are about 882,000 more males than females, because more males are born. But of the centenarians there are 1,409 men and 2,607 women. The males begin ahead in numbers and continue so till they are in the 16th year, then the girls are more numerous, and continue to gain in supremacy of numbers till death levels all.

This superiority of woman is no degradation to man. He is all he is, no matter how superior woman may be. Woman is all she is, even were there a race of angels still superior to her. The whole study of plant-life proves the superiority of the female, and proves that inferior conditions produce more males—more arrested developments in proportion to complete specimens. The Scientific American says: "In some investigations made with a view to determining the conditions under which male or female individuals are produced in the case of dioecious plants, Dr. Höffman has found that in most, if not all the cases he examined, dense sowing increases the proportion of the male plants produced; and this results from an insufficient supply of nutriment. As a general law the production of male plants is promoted by the want of an adequate supply of food when in an embryonal condition."

Is it a wonder that, long crushed beneath a dominant male power, woman now begins to see her worth and her rights, and to demand them? To ask for at least political and financial equality; to stand free and erect and independent?

"Oh, the joy of manly selfhood!

To be servile to none, to defer to none, not to any tyrant known or unknown;

To walk with erect carriage, a step springy and elastic;

To look with calm gaze or with flashing eye;

To speak with a full and sonorous voice out of a broad chest;

To confront with your personality all the other personalities of the earth."

ELMINA.

MR. DENNER.

From "John Ward, Preacher."

Mr. Denner had failed very perceptibly since the day before. He looked strangely little in the great bed, and his brown eyes had grown large and bright. But he greeted the rector with courteous cordiality, under which his faint voice faltered, and almost broke.

"How are you to-day, Denner?" his friend said, sitting down on the edge of the bed, and taking the sick man's hand in his big warm grasp.

"Thank you," replied Mr. Denner, with labored breath, "I am doing nicely."

"Has Giff been here this morning?" asked Dr. Howe.

"Yes," the lawyer answered. "He has gone home for an hour. Mary takes excellent care of me, and I felt I was really keeping him too much from his aunts. For his stay is limited, you know, and I am afraid I have been selfish in keeping him so much with me."

"No, no," the rector said, "it is a pleasure for him to be with you; it is a pleasure for any of us. Poor little Lois is dreadfully distressed about you,—she longs to come and nurse you herself; and Helen,—Helen came last night, you know,—she wants to be of some use too."

"Oh, well, now, dear me," remonstrated Mr. Denner feebly, "Miss Lois must not have a moment's uneasiness about me,—not a moment's. Pray tell her I am doing nicely; and it is really of no consequence in the world,—not the slightest."

"Yes," Mr. Denner ended, folding his little hands on the counterpane, "it is worth while to have had this indisposition (except for the trouble it has given others) just to see how good every one is. Gifford has been exceedingly kind and thoughtful. His gentleness—for I have been very troublesome, doctor—has been wonderful. Like a woman's; at least so I should imagine."

The rector had clasped his hands upon his stick, and was looking intently at Mr. Denner, his lower lip thrust out and his eyebrows gathered in an absent frown.

"William," he said suddenly, "you've seen the doctor this morning?"

"Yes," Mr. Denner answered, "oh, yes. He is very kind about getting here early; the nights seem quite long, and it is a relief to see him early."

"I have not seen him to-day," said Dr. Howe slowly, "but yesterday he made me feel very anxious about you. Yes, we were all quite anxious, William."

The lawyer gave a little start, and looked sharply at his old friend; then he said, hesitating slightly, "That—ah—that was yesterday, did I understand you to say?"

Dr. Howe leaned forward and took one of Mr. Denner's trembling little hands in his, which was strong and firm. "Yes," he said gently, "but, William, my dear old friend, I am anxious still. I cannot help—I cannot help fearing that—that—"

"Stay," interrupted Mr. Denner, with a visible effort at composure, "I—I quite understand. Pray spare yourself the pain of speaking of it, Archibald. You are very kind, but—I quite understand."

He put his hand before his eyes a moment, and then blindly stretched it out to his friend. The rector took it, and held it hard in his own. The two men were silent. Mr. Denner was the first to speak.

"It is very good in you to come and tell me, Archibald. I fear it has discomposed you; it was very painful for you. Pray do not allow yourself to feel the slightest annoyance; it is of no consequence, I—ah—assure you. But since we are on the subject, perhaps you will kindly mention—how—how soon?"

"I hope, I trust," answered the rector huskily, "it may not be for several days."

"But probably," said Mr. Denner calmly, "probably—sooner?" Dr. Howe bowed his head.

"Ah—just so—just so. I—I thank you, Archibald."

Suddenly the rector drew a long breath and straightened himself, as though he had forgotten something. "It must come to us all, sooner or later," he said gently, "and if we have lived well we need not dread it. Surely you need not, of all the men I have ever known."

"I have always endeavored," said Mr. Denner, in a voice which still trembled a little, "to remember that I was a gentleman."

Dr. Howe opened his lips and shut them again before he spoke. "I—I meant that the trust in God, William, of a Christian man, which is yours, must be your certain support now."

The lawyer looked up with a faint surprise dawning in his eyes. "Ah—you are very good to say so, I'm sure," he replied courteously.

Dr. Howe moved his hands nervously, clasping and re-clasping them upon the head of his stick. "Yes, William," he said, after a moment's silence, "that trust in God which leads us safely through all the dark places in life will not fail us at the end. The rod and the staff still comfort us."

"Ah—yes," responded Mr. Denner.

The rector gained confidence as he spoke. "And you must have that blessed assurance of the love of God, William," he continued; "your life has been so pure and good. You must see in this visitation not chastisement, but mercy."

Dr. Howe's hand moved slowly back to the big pocket in one of his black coat-tails, and brought out a small, shabby prayer-book.

"You will let me read the prayers for the sick," he continued gently, and without waiting for a reply began to say with more feeling than Dr. Howe often put into the reading of the service,—

"Dearly beloved, know this, that Almighty God is the Lord of life and death, and of all things to them pertaining; as"—

"Archibald," said Mr. Denner faintly, "you will excuse me, but this is not—not necessary, as it were."

Dr. Howe looked at him blankly, the prayer-book closing in his hand.

"I mean," Mr. Denner added, "if you will allow me to say so, the time for speaking thus has passed. It is now, with me, Archibald."

There was a wistful look in his eyes as he spoke.

"I know," answered Dr. Howe tenderly, thinking that the Visitation of the Sick must wait, "but God enters into now; the Eternal is our refuge, a very present help in time of trouble."

"Ah—yes"—said the sick man; "but I should like to approach this from our usual—point of view, if you will be so good. I have every respect for your office, but would it not be easier for us to speak of—of this as we have been in the habit of speaking on all subjects, quite—in our ordinary way, as it were? You will pardon me, Archibald, if I say anything else seems—ah—unreal?"

Dr. Howe rose and walked to the window. He stood there a few minutes, but the golden June day was dim, and there was a tightening in his throat that kept him silent. When he came back to the bedside, he stood looking down at the sick man without speaking. Mr. Denner was embarrassed.

"I did not mean to pain you," he said.

"William," the rector answered, "have I made religion so worthless? Have I held it so weakly that you feel that it cannot help you now?"

"Oh, not at all," responded Mr. Denner, "not at all. I have the greatest respect for it,—I fear I expressed myself awkwardly, —the greatest respect; I fully appreciate its value, I might say its necessity, in the community. But—but if you please, Archibald, since you have kindly come to tell me of this—change, I should like to speak of it in our ordinary way; to approach the subject as men of the world. It is in this manner, if you will be so good, I should like to ask you a question. I think we quite understand each other; it is unnecessary to be anything but—natural."

The clergyman took his place on the side of the bed, but he leaned his head on his hand, and his eyes were hidden. "Ask me anything you will. Yet, though I may not have lived it, William, I cannot answer you as anything but a Christian man now."

"Just so," said Mr. Denner, politely—ah—certainly; but, between ourselves, doctor, putting aside this amiable and pleasing view of the church, you understand,—speaking just as we are in the habit of doing,—what do you suppose—what do you think—is beyond?"

His voice had sunk to a whisper, and his eager eyes searched Dr. Howe's face.

"How can we tell?" answered the rector. "That it is infinitely good we can trust; 'Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard'—He stopped, for Mr. Denner shook his head with a fine sort of impatience.

"If you please, doctor!"

The rector was silent.

"I have wondered about it often," the other continued. "I have expected—this, for some days, and I have wondered. Think how strange: in a few days—almost a few hours, I shall know all, or—nothing! Yes, the mystery of all the ages will be mine!" There was a thrill of triumph in his feeble voice. "Think of that doctor. I shall know more than the wisest man that lives,—I! I was never a very clever person, never very wise; and yet, here is a knowledge which shall not be too wonderful for me, and to which I can attain."

He held up his little thin hand, peering at the light between the transparent fingers. "To think," he said slowly, with a puzzled smile, "to think that this is going to be still! It has never been any power in the world; I don't know that it has ever done any harm, yet it has certainly never done any good; but soon it will be still. How strange, how strange! And where shall I be? Knowing—or perhaps fallen on an eternal sleep. How does it seem to you, doctor? That was what I wanted to ask you; do you feel sure of anything—afterwards?"

The rector could not escape the penetrating gaze of those strangely bright brown eyes. He looked into them, and then wavered and turned away.

"Do you?" said the lawyer.

The other put his hand up to his face a moment.

"Ah!" he answered sharply, "I don't know—I can't tell. I—I don't know, Denner!"

"No," replied Mr. Denner, with tranquil satisfaction, "I supposed not,—I supposed not. But when a man gets where I am, it seems the one thing in the world worth being sure of."

Dr. Howe sat silently holding the lawyer's hand, and Mr. Denner seemed to sink into pleasant thought. Once he smiled, with that puzzled, happy look the rector had seen before, and then he closed his eyes contentedly as though to doze. Suddenly he turned his head and looked out of the window, across his garden, where a few old-fashioned flowers were blooming sparsely, with much space between them for the rich, soft grass, which seemed to hold the swinging shadows of an elm-tree in a lacy tangle.

"The warm precincts of the cheerful day," he murmured, and then his eyes wandered about the room: the empty, blackened fireplace, where, on a charred log and a heap of gray ashes, a single bar of sunshine had fallen; his fiddle, lying on a heap of manuscript music; the one or two formal portraits of the women of his family; and the large painting of Admiral Denner in red coat and gold lace. On each one he lingered with a loving, wondering gaze. "'The place thereof shall know it'"—he began to say. "Ah, doctor, it is a wonderful book! How it does know the heart! The soul sees itself there. 'As for man, his days are as grass; as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth. For the wind passeth over it, and it is gone; and the place thereof shall know it no more'—no more. That is the wonder of it! How strange it is; and I had such plans for life, now! Well, it is better thus, no doubt,—no doubt."

After a while he touched the little oval velvet case which lay on the table beside him, and, taking it up, looked long and earnestly at the childish face inside the rim of blackened pearls.

"I wonder,"—he said, and then stopped, laying it down again, with a little sigh. "Ah, well, I shall know. It is only to wait."

He did not seem to want any answer; it was enough to ramble on, filled with placid content, between dreams and waking, his hand held firm in that of his old friend. Afterwards, when Gifford came in, he scarcely noticed that the rector slipped away. It was enough to fill his mist of dreams with gentle wonderings and quiet expectation. Once he said softly, "'In the hour of death, and in the day of judgment'"—

"Good Lord, deliver us!" Gifford finished gently.

Mr. Denner opened his eyes and looked at him. "Good Lord," he said, "ah—yes—yes—that is enough, my friend. Good Lord; one leaves the rest."

Miss Ruth was in a flutter of grief and excitement. "I'll come, of course. I—I had rather hoped I might see him; but what will Deborah say? Yet I can't but think it's better for him not to see two people at once."

Mr. Denner greeted her by a feeble flourish of his hand. "Oh, dear me, Mr. Denner," said she, half crying, in spite of Gifford's whispered caution, "I'm so distressed to see you so ill, indeed I am."

"Oh, not at all," responded Mr. Denner, but his voice had a strange, far away sound in his ears, and he tried to speak louder and more confidently,—not at all. "You are very good to come, ma'am," and then he stopped to remember what it was he had wished to say.

Miss Ruth was awed into silence, and there was a growing anxiety in Gifford's face.

"Ah,—yes"—Mr. Denner began again, with a flash of strength in his tone, "I wished to ask you if you would accept—accept"—he reached toward the little table, but he could not find the leather case until Gifford put it into his hand—"if you would be so good as to accept this; and will you open it, if you please, Miss Ruth?"

She did so, with trembling fingers. It was a daguerreotype of Mr. Denner; the high neckcloth and the short-waisted, brass-buttoned coat and waistcoat showed its age, as well as the dimness of the glass and the fresh, boyish face of the young man of thirty.

"What—what was I speaking of, Gifford?" said Mr. Denner.

"You gave my aunt Ruth the picture, sir."

"Oh, yes, just so, just so. I merely wished to add that I desired to present it to Miss Deborah's sister,—though it is of no value, not the least value; but I should be honored by its acceptance. And perhaps you will be good enough to—to convey the assurance of my esteem to Miss Deborah. And Gifford—my friend Gifford is to give her the miniature of my little sister."

"Yes," said Miss Ruth, who was crying softly.

"Not that I have—changed my mind," said Mr. Denner, "but it is not improper, I am sure, that Miss Deborah's sister should give me—if she will be so good—her hand, that I may say goodbye?"

Miss Ruth did not quite understand, until Gifford motioned to her to lay her little hand in that feeble one which was groping blindly towards her.

Mr. Denner's eyes were very dim.

"I—I am very happy," he murmured. "I thank you, Ruth;" and then, a moment after, "If you will excuse me, I think I will rest for a few moments."

Still holding Miss Ruth's hand, he turned his head in a weary way toward the light, and softly closed his eyes.

Mr. Denner rested.

"THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY," one of Mr. S. P. Putnam's best lectures, is published in a handsome pamphlet. The price is 10 cents, and the work may be obtained by addressing this office.

PROFESSOR HUXLEY'S LIFE AND AIMS.

Why I was christened Thomas Henry I do not know, but it is a curious chance that my parents should have fixed for my usual denomination upon the name of that particular apostle with whom I have always felt most sympathy. Physically and mentally I am the son of my mother so completely—even down to peculiar movements of the hands, which made their appearance in me as I reached the age she had when I noticed them—that I can hardly find any trace of my father in myself, except an inborn faculty for drawing, which unfortunately in my case has never been cultivated, a hot temper, and that amount of tenacity of purpose which unfriendly observers sometimes call obstinacy. My mother was a slender brunette of an emotional and energetic temperament, and possessed of the most piercing black eyes I ever saw in a woman's head. With no more education than other women of the middle classes in her day, she had an excellent mental capacity. Her most distinguishing characteristic, however, was rapidity of thought. If one ventured to suggest that she had not taken much time to arrive at any conclusion, she would say: "I cannot help it; things flash across me." That peculiarity has been passed on to me in full strength; it has often stood me in good stead; it has sometimes played me sad tricks, and it has always been a danger. But after all, if my time were to come over again, there is nothing I would less willingly part with than my inheritance of mother-wit. I have next to nothing to say about my childhood. In later years my mother, looking at me almost reproachfully, would sometimes say: "Ah! you were such a pretty boy!" whence I had no difficulty in concluding that I had not fulfilled my early promise in the matter of looks. In fact, I have a distinct recollection of certain curls, of which I was vain, and of a conviction that I closely resembled that handsome, courtly gentleman, Sir Herbert Oakley, who was vicar of our parish, and who was as a god to us country folk, because he was occasionally visited by the then Prince George of Cambridge. I remember turning my pinafore wrong side forward in order to represent a surplice and preaching to my mother's maids in the kitchen, as nearly as possible in Sir Herbert's manner, one Sunday morning when the rest of the family were at church. That is the earliest indication I can call to mind of the strong clerical affinities which my friend Mr. Herbert Spencer has always ascribed to me, though I fancy they have for the most part remained in a latent state.

My great desire was to be a mechanical engineer, but the fates were against this, and while very young I began the study of medicine under a medical brother-in-law. But though the Institute of Mechanical Engineers would certainly not own me, I am not sure that I have not all along been a sort of mechanical engineer in partibus infidelium. I am now occasionally horrified to think how very little I ever knew or cared about medicine as the art of healing. The only part of my professional course which really and deeply interested me was physiology, which is the mechanical engineering of living machines; and, notwithstanding that natural science has been my proper business, I am afraid there is very little of the genuine naturalist in me. I never collected anything, and species work was always a burden to me; what I cared for was the architectural and engineering part of the business, the working out of the wonderful unity of plan in the thousands and thousands of diverse living constructions, and the modifications of similar apparatuses to serve diverse ends. The extraordinary attraction I felt toward the study of the intricacies of living structure nearly proved fatal to me at the outset. I was a mere boy—I think between thirteen and fourteen years of age—when I was taken by some older student friends of mine to the first post-mortem examination I ever attended. All my life I have been most unfortunately sensitive to the disagreeables which attend anatomical pursuits; but on this occasion my curiosity overpowered all other feelings and I spent two or three hours in gratifying it. I did not cut myself, and none of the ordinary symptoms of dissection poison supervened; but poisoned I was somehow, and I remember sinking into a strange state of apathy. By way of a last chance I was sent to the care of some good, kind people, friends of my father's, who lived in a farmhouse in the heart of Warwickshire.

I remember staggering from my bed to the window on the bright spring morning after my arrival and throwing open the casement. Life seemed to come back on the wings of the breeze, and to this day the faint odor of wood-smoke, like that which floated across the farmyard in the early morning, is as good to me as the "sweet South upon a bed of violets." I soon recovered; but for years I suffered from occasional paroxysms of internal pain, and from that time my constant friend, hypochondriacal dyspepsia, commenced his half-century of co-tenancy on my fleshly tabernacle.

[Presently he became a surgeon in the navy. At Hasler he was under Sir John Richardson, and he afterward served in the Rattlesnake under Captain Owen Stanley. It was this voyage which induced him to begin writing upon scientific subjects.]

During the four years of our absence I sent home communication after communication to the "Linnean Society," with the same result as that obtained by Noah when he sent the raven out of his ark. Tired at last of hearing nothing about them, I determined to do or die, and, in 1849, I drew up a more elaborate paper and forwarded it to the royal society. This was my dove, if I had only known it. But, owing to the movements of the ship, I heard nothing of that either, until my return to England in the latter end of the year 1850, when I found it was printed and published, and that a huge packet of separate copies awaited me. When I hear some of my young friends complain of want of sympathy and encouragement, I am inclined to think that my naval life was not the least valuable part of my education. Three years after my return were occupied by a battle between my scientific friends on the one hand and the admiralty on the other, as to whether the latter ought or ought not to act up to the spirit of a pledge they had given to encourage officers who had done scientific work by contributing to the expense of publishing mine. At last the admiralty, getting tired, I suppose, cut short the discussion by ordering me to join the ship. Which thing I declined to do, and as Rastignac, in the "Pere Goriot," says to Paris, I said to London, a nous deux. I desired to obtain a professorship in either physiology or comparative anatomy; and, as vacancies occurred, I applied, but in vain. My friend Professor Tyndall and I were candidates at the same time, he for the chair of physics and I for that of natural history in the University of Toronto, which fortunately, as it turned out, would not look at either of us. I say fortunately, not from any lack of respect for Toronto, but because I soon made up my mind that London was the place for me, and hence I have steadily declined the inducements to leave it which have at various times been offered. At last, in 1854, on the translation of my warm friend, Edward Forbes, to Edinburgh, Sir Henry de la Beche, the director-general of the geological survey, offered me the post Forbes vacated of paleontologist and lecturer on natural history. I refused the former point-blank, and accepted the latter only provisionally, telling Sir Henry that I did not care for fossils, and that I should give up natural history as soon as I could get a physiological post. But I held the office for thirty-one years, and a large part of my work has been paleontological.

The last thing that it would be proper for me to do would be to speak of the work of my life, or to say at the end of the day whether I think I have earned my wages or not. Men are said to be partial judges of themselves—young men may be, I doubt if old men are. Life seems terribly foreshortened as they look back; and the mountain they set themselves to climb in youth turns out to be a mere spur of immeasurably higher ranges, when with failing breath they reach the top. But if I may speak of the objects I have had more or less definitely in view since I began the ascent of my hillock, they are briefly these: To promote the increase of natural knowledge and to forward the application of scientific methods of investigation to all the problems of life to the best of my ability, in the conviction which has grown with my growth and strengthened with my strength, that there is no alleviation for the suffering of mankind, except veracity of thought and of action, and the resolute facing of the world as it is, when the garment of make-believe, by which pious hands have hidden its uglier features, is stripped off. It is with this intent that I have subordinated any reasonable or unreasonable ambition for scientific fame which I may have permitted myself to entertain to other ends; to the popularization of science; to the development and organization of scientific education; to the endless series of battles and skirmishes over evolution; and to untiring opposition to that ecclesiastical spirit, that clericalism, which, in England, as everywhere else, and to whatever denomination it may belong, is the deadly enemy of science.—THOMAS H. HUXLEY, in Our Celebrities.

A Centenary Yankee Doodle.

DEDICATED TO UNCLE SAM, APRIL 30, 1889.

Yankee Doodle came to town, a looking for the dandy
That figures in the church to-day to steal the money handy.

CHORUS.—Yankee Doodle, doodle doo, Yankee Doodle dandy,
A lookin' for the parson, too, that hides the money handy.

Said Yankee Doodle to McGlynn, How great is devil master?
He's broad and strong, in Christian wrong the world is sinking faster.

And A. A. Hodge of Princeton said, We'll serve our "common master;"
The Catholics and Protestants, they stick just like a plaster.

We'll rout the Constitution out, and fill you with disaster;
We'll tear the flag, and bring the pope, and he shall be your pastor.

We'll take the children by the ear and lead them to destruction,
And fill the schools with arrant tools, for liberty's reduction.

You cannot know our mind and soul, you cannot see our action;
For like a skunk runs in its hole, we'll hide our Christian faction.

Oh! herds are here to join the fight, the ghost of Cesar's aching,
To show the people might is right—the country's ours for taking.

We'll cut and slash George Washington and LaFayette and all them;
And Thomas Paine, and Franklin, too, you'll see how we will gall them.

They made a home for those that roam, the emigrant so weary;
Our fathers came to bless their name, beside the fireside cheery.

Church tyrants have a devilish god, made up of their idea,
And they prop it up with scourge and rod on the people's backs, that's clear.

And so it crushed the countries old, and they flew here for shelter;
Their grief and pain can ne'er be told, in Christian bloody welter.

Ye spirits now of '76, ye heroes now come under;
Our fighting god is on a bust, he'll lick you all like thunder.

The Constitution he will bust, if once he gets his foot in;
God feels a grudge, you know he must, for his name they didn't put in.

George W. was afraid of him, and the stupid, bloody people,
Who fix up God to steal our bread, and give us church and steeple.

Yes, George he was afraid of it, this buzzard of creation,
That hovered with its dark'ning wing, and struck it from the nation.

Poor Uncle Sam is low and sick, queer god and taffy candy,
His stomach wants to throw it up—help! quick, now all be handy.

The time may come, no blood-stained hands, then Uncle Sam may praise us;

Our eagle may not scream in vain, for freedom's light to raise us.
And Yankee Doodle, doodle doo, our country's native dandy
May look in vain to find a priest, that's hiding money handy.

O Power supreme, unseen, unknown; O nature's sweetest pleasure;
Come make each happy heart thine own, in wisdom's loving measure;
And to all people let us be a sister or a brother,
And to our country's liberty, a father and a mother.

CHILD (of) UNCLE SAM (initials) C.U.S. (S.)

ADAM AND EVE.

ADAM—"Well, here we are out in the wilderness. Those cherubs say they will never let us back again into the garden."

EVE—"I don't see how we could have acted so if we had not been possessed by Satan."

ADAM—"Oh, why didn't you think of that before? What a splendid excuse it would have been! Plea of sudden insanity and spectral hallucination! Defendants acquitted! Why, we might have been feasting on apples and cocoa-nuts at this moment, instead of having to hunt for acorns among these accursed thistles."

EVE—"Do you know, Adam, I am not sure that we are really so much worse off than we were. We were getting lazy, and sickly, and almost stupid in the sleepy garden. It won't hurt us to have to run about, and use our wits a little. Besides, there are our new clothes."

ADAM—"Oh, yes, a new dress is worth more than Eden to you. It isn't to me."

EVE—"But really now, haven't we gained something? Better have knowledge in the wilderness than ignorance in paradise, say I."

ADAM—"Well, at all events, I know enough to rule you. You had your own way in the garden, but now you are put in subjection to me. That's some comfort."

EVE (aside)—"We shall see about that. I ate the wonderful fruit before you did. I know how to take care of my rights, and so will my daughters."

F. M. H.

MR. WENTWORTH'S CRITICAL DISCOURSE ON ORATORY.

The following remarks were made by Hiram Wentworth before the San Pasqual Debating Society, Saturday evening, May 19:

The mild, brief punishment I am about to inflict upon you will be administered with a careful disregard of the rules laid down by the volunteer critic at our last meeting. According to his instructions, a speaker must not stop to bite off the first sentence of his speech before he begins to chew on the second. If he gets confused, and can't think of what he wishes to say, he must keep saying something; and if he can't say anything, he must keep in motion—keep his oratorical machinery revolving like a windmill. One would suppose from the flippancy and self-assurance with which he laid down the law for speaking, that he was the inventor of oratory, and had secured a patent for it. A person whose constant occupation is the teaching of children (supposed to be his inferiors) is liable to become very pedantic—to imagine that any precept laid down for speaking, reading, or writing which is not in harmony with his own style, is necessarily incorrect—to presume that the scope of his mighty intellect takes in those peculiar talents and qualifications which school teachers always should, but seldom do, possess, rendering his important services indispensable to the community in which he earns his salt; and to employ the inexhaustible resources of his stupidity in trying to convince his patrons that Nature, in the performance of her manifold duties, by some strange oversight failed to develop his bump of self-esteem, in consequence of which he is now prodigally wasting the godlike abilities of a statesman on the desert air of a school room. Probably Nature's inexcusable mistake, which has brought such dire disgrace on our sorrowing teacher, was made in my favor; for I have more self-esteem than I know what to do with. It is something I have no earthly use for; and I am very sorry that Nature was so criminally careless as to rob him of what he prizes so highly to overload me with that which I cannot appreciate.

But I have wandered from my subject—his last week's criticism. I can see no reason why a speech should not conform to the same rules of punctuation as a written composition—why the tongue of a speaker should be allowed more license in the art of expression than the pen of a writer. The younger members of this society naturally look up to the older ones, and especially to their teacher, for correct precepts, as well as faultless examples, in all that pertains to its exercises, and they ought not to be disappointed or misinformed. Any one who tells them they must speak fluently before they can speak correctly, is not good authority on speaking. The proper way to do anything is to do it correctly first, and expertly afterward. My advice to them would be: Never attempt to convey an idea to others before it is completely formed in your own mind; and when you attempt to convey an idea, if any word necessary for its clear expression fails to put in its appearance at the proper moment, don't keep saying "something," nor try to get it in by the windmill process, but stop right in your tracks till it comes. If you were writing, the necessary space could be left blank for the time being; but that dodge should not be used in speaking. Your opponent might fill up the blank with something that might not suit you.

In preparing a speech pay more regard to strength and symmetry than to length and ornament. A good speech may be spoiled by being overloaded with ornaments, as trees are frequently broken down and ruined by trying to bear too much fruit.

When you have expressed an idea on paper, examine it critically to be sure you have used the best words the dictionary affords, and not one word superfluously. Put every idea firmly in its proper place, so that your opponent cannot pick it out and cut your throat with it.

In delivering a speech always bear in mind that improper gestures are worse than none at all. It is much better to stand with your hands in your pockets, or on your hips, or with your arms folded, than to employ them as though you were fighting hornets or killing snakes.

Avoid all affectation, and deliver your speech in the same conversational manner as if you were at home talking with your friends. Don't be afraid to administer a rebuke to either foe or friend, provided it is well deserved; but whenever you take a bull by the horns, be careful not to forget that the horns belong to the bull.

In conclusion I will add: There are those who come here week after week to be amused at the expense of others without taking any part in the exercises themselves, and then go away and complain that there are no good speakers in San Pasqual. To these I will say: Graciously condescend to give us one good example in speaking, and if none of us are able to imitate it, I will guarantee that some of us will make a splendid failure in trying to.

Putnam in Hopland.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Mr. Putnam arrived safely on the noon train of the 6th, and was duly taken to our heart and home. It was the first time we met with him, but we knew him of old through the books and papers. His meetings have been a success here. There were about thirty people out to hear him the first evening, and over fifty the second evening.

There has been a general good feeling aroused in our vicinity, and I was surprised to see so much Liberal thought among us. I had noticed a great lack of church enthusiasm, but was not aware of so much willingness to hear the other side of the question. Considering the small number of people living hereabouts, the attendance was very good.

Being comparative strangers here ourselves, there was no organized effort to secure a large attendance. The bills were posted and scattered about the country, however, and I drove Mr. Putnam around and introduced him to a few of the older and more prominent people of the vicinity. So that, with the little we could do to introduce him, his work will prove useful. I noticed that he sold several of his useful and entertaining books each evening, and that he got quite a list of names to the roll. At noon to-day he will leave us to fill his appointment at Ukiah.

I shall try to be up to hear one of his lectures there. I hope to hear of a more graceful reception for him this time, than he got before. If that most Catholic community attempts its fire-argument again it may result in something more sanguinary to the movers of the crime. People who will shield the perpetrators of such deeds as the hurling of a burning lamp at an opponent in cool and manly debate should be held up to the scorn and contempt of enlightened mankind. I offer no libel upon the community. I only refer to those who planned the contemptible business, and those who helped to shield him from the consequences of it afterwards.

J. C. WEYBRIGHT.

West Hopland, June 8.

BOOKS.

We have for sale at this office, among other works:

"Yone Santo." 50 cents.

"John Ward, Preacher." 50 cents.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible." 15 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Annual" for 1889. 25 cents.

"Liberty and Morality," by W. S. Bell. 15 cents.

"The System of Nature," by Baron D'Holbach. $2.

"Robert Elsmere," by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Price, 50 cents.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—

"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—

ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS

(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to

L. K. WASHBURN,

Revere, Mass.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,

Manufacturers and Dealers in

PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping

PAPER BAGS, TWINE.

Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills

414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.

PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond" 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy.

Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address.
PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

The Better Part.

Better to know the truth, that maketh free,
Than revel in the treasures of the dead;
Better to open thine own eyes and see
Than blindly trust to what men may have said.

Better than dreams of heaven's future bliss,
Or phantom pictures of another life,
It is to live thy future life in this—
Bring heaven down into this vale of strife.

Better to touch with gentle hand a heart
That hath been wounded in the shade of death,
Than from the sinful turmoil stand apart
And gaze enraptured and with bated breath

Into a vision land that fancy weaves
Beyond the clouds that deck eternity.
Better than painting angels on the leaves
Of book or sermon, tale or homily

It is to show that angels walk the earth
Clad in the flesh of pure humanity;
To open well-springs in a land of dearth
And prove man's strength in his infirmity.
—HARVEY REESE, in the London Freethinker.

Not a Serious Matter.

"You had a most glaring typographical error in your paper this morning, Col. Shedgore," remarked the school teacher, as he dropped into the editorial sanctum and took a seat on a pile of exchanges.

"Ha!" exclaimed the colonel, glaring at the cowering form of his proofreader and assistant at the table in the corner, "where was it?"

"About half way down the 'Religious Miscellany' column——"

"Shucks!" said the Texas editor, considerably relieved. "I'll bet $500 I haven't a subscriber that'll ever see it!"—Chicago Tribune.

The Bad Little Boy.

A small boy, with an unlighted cigarette in his mouth, approached a reverend gentleman on K street yesterday and asked him for a match.

"No, sir," said the holy man; "most certainly I will not give you a match to light that thing." And then, softening his tone somewhat, he added: "My boy, don't you know that those cigarettes will drag you down to hell?"

"Well," said the boy, looking squarely into the minister's face, "I wish they'd hurry up an' do it. I could git a light down there."—Washington Post.

An Old Maxim Changed.

The Canadian legislature has struck a vein of economy. It has discharged a chaplain whose salary is $400 per year, but resolutely maintains its dignity by retaining an usher of the Black Rod at $1,350. This looks like a case of spare the rod and spoil the chaplain.—Chronicle.

Defective Terminology.

A highly esteemed contemporary said the other day: "Bring southern youths north occasionally, and northern maidens south, and let the 'work of conciliation' go on." The idea may be well enough in its way, but that is not the term given it by the medical books.—Sacramento Bee.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmermann, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street.

Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.
G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.
Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC
SCHOOLS.—THE NEW
AMERICAN PARTY,

A Criticism by "Jefferson."

Price, 10 cents.

Address

PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College, Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT
WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc, worth $35. for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.
Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see other column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice. He writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE. Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" media- Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling. Agents who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. work for

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding. MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Temperance and Prohibition, THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.
BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D., A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics to force in settling the liquor question. Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by Cloth, 75 cts. Address this office J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

Miners and Millmen Attention!

BEHM'S

Centrifugal Pulverizer,

Guarantees to work One Ton
per hour of the Hardest
Quartz to a 40-Screen.

—ADDRESS:—

H. W. WALKER,

ASSAYER,

109 Montgomery Block, San Francisco.

In replying to this advertisement, mention Freethought.

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, etc., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.
Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, Dr. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY. Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]
Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.
DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors. DR. FELLOWS.

Wm. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY.

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

TELEPHONE No. 655

P. O. CHILSTROM,

(Rogers & Chilstrom.)

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Commercial Business and Collections a Specialty.

Office, 415 Montgomery St., Rooms 9, 10 & 11,

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HUNCKLEY - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOESMade to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED, 375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton, Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology.
Price, 50 cents.THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....	$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....	35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....	6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY
NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,

NURSEYRMEN.*Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.*Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit
and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.

Special Attention Given to Planting
and Caring of Orchards
and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA.Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary
Jones, or The Infidel Teacher 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.Address, E. D. SLENKER, Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va."How Blest the Righteous!"Boggs—"I understand that the scene at your uncle's deathbed was a very sad one."Joggs—"Yes, very. Shortly before he died he asked us all to leave the room that he might commune with his god, and when we returned he was still communing with it."

Boggs—"You say 'it.'"

Joggs—"Yes; he was taking a tearful and touching farewell of a big roll of greenbacks."THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science.
The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months.
50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History, of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 16th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including various notes, by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages.
Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 60.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S 6

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATIONOn the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,Dr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Didot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2A Short History of the Bible.Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C.
Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

A Lesson from Baseball.

To witness a ball game is liveliest fun,
To note all the fumbles and flies,
While discussing the chances for making a run
And each oft-occurring surprise.
But the play that receives the attention of all
More than all other features besides,
Is when the base runner resorts to a fall,
And reaches his base on a slide.

Here's a particular lesson which all may apply
To the every-day contest of life.
It teaches that those who most vigorously try
Are the players who win in the strife.
If with safety we'd claim all life's bases, we must Lay our personal comforts aside,
And, though we dislike to, go down in the dust,
And reach our fond goal on a slide.

—Omaha World.

Poetry and Prose.

In the odorous afternoon,
Of a drowsy day in June,
Darling little baby lies,
Crooned to sleep with lullabies.
Look! he smiles—on pinions white,
Hovering o'er him in their flight,
Does he see the heavenly train?
No—he only has a pain.

A HARTFORD clergyman tells this anecdote: Early in life, while occupying another charge, he invited a clergyman whom the unregenerate would call conceited and dull to preach in his pulpit. During the sermon our Hartford preacher dozed away in the sweet old way till he was suddenly called on to conclude the service with prayer. Accustomed to regard himself as the humblest of his creator's instruments, and forgetting that he had not delivered the sermon, he began with, "We beseech thee to accept the weak and feeble effort that has been addressed to thee, and more richly to endow thy servant in the graces he so greatly lacks."

LECTURER on phrenology (cautiously to a man selected by audience for free examination)—"Married, I presume?" Man—"Yes." Lecturer (with confidence)—"Many of the protuberances, ladies and gentleman, which we find upon the heads of persons in various walks of life may be passed by as having no phrenological significance, as in the case of the gentleman whom I am now, etc."—Chicago Tribune.

SAID a good brother in a meeting here the other night: "Before I was converted I used to go to the circus, and it took me a week to get over it. Now I ask your prayers for strength to enable me to keep away from Barnum's show that is coming soon, though I confess I should like to see the animals!"—Westfield (Mass.) Times.

VISITOR—"Who's your wife's doctor, uncle?"—Uncle Silas—"Oh, she allus has one o' these 'ere blamed prohibitionists." Visitor—"Why, what do you mean? I thought she was a homeopathist." Uncle Silas—"Wall, 't amounts ter the same thing; they don't neither on 'em b'lieve in takin' nothing."—Judge.

AN Iowa farmer, who believed in having two strings to his bow, put up in his garden this sign: "Boys, don't touch these melons, for they are green and God sees you."—Christian Intelligencer.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

Prometheus. A poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald
504 Kearny st. San Francisco

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 26.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JUNE 29, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JUNE 29, 1889.

LAST Sunday must have been a proud day for Archbishop Riordan. He conducted the mummeries of the Catholic church in the prison of San Quentin, and found that six hundred out of the thirteen hundred convicts were of his faith.

THE Argonaut's article on the Bruno monument and the papal church was excellent, and able, and long, but late. It came after the movement had been inaugurated, the subscription opened, the funds raised, and the statue erected.

COLONEL SHEPARD says that "by fire and water the Almighty is instructing the American people." From the remarks of those who profess to speak for the Almighty we had judged that a good deal of his instruction came in the form of wind.

SEVEN hundred dollars has been subscribed in support of Judge Westbrook's proposition to offer a prize of $1000 for the best school manual to show teachers how to teach morality without teaching religious dogma. The prize is worth working for.

THE selfishness of the American and English exhibitors at the Paris Exposition in refusing to show their goods on Sunday, has received a merited rebuke. On a recent Sunday a crowd of French workmen, who had no opportunity for visiting the exhibition during the week, removed the canvass from the goods and allowed spectators to look at them. The authorities were sensible enough not to interfere.

QUEEN VICTORIA is given credit for cabling to President Harrison assurances of her distinguished sympathy for the flood sufferers in Pennsylvania. The charges for cable service were paid by the English government. Her son, the Prince of Wales, did better. Being in Paris when Buffalo Bill gave his benefit performance, he bought two tickets to the entertainment. The sultan of Turkey sent $1,000 to Johnstown.

It is well to inform the secular press that its speculations as to Pope Leo's successor partake of the nature of vanity and a striving after wind. The Catholic Monitor rises to say that when the cardinals meet to elect a pope their councils will be presided over by the Holy Ghost, who will make all necessary nominations, the cardinals merely ratifying the will of heaven. The Monitor intimates that the above Holy Ghost knows its business and will put the right man in the right place.

THE Meriden, Conn., crockery firm, of which our friend and patron, N. F. Griswold, is the head, have put their business in a co-operative joint stock company, with a dozen of the old employees as shareholders. The capital stock is $50,000, divided into 2,000 shares. The three members of the original firm hold the balance of the stock, while the rest is divided among twelve employees, who thus become members of the firm and participators in its profits. This is practical co-operation.

THE Evening Post notes that the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Oakland has begun a crusade against cigarettes. A petition is to be presented to the council to prohibit their sale in that city, and the Post hopes to see a law passed suppressing cigarettes altogether. We have rarely seen a more foolish proposition than this. The cigarette—or the cigareet, as the editor of the Post would doubtless mispronounce it—is a disagreeable thing. So is a bad cigar; but the right to sell them is just as valid as the right to sell a pipe or to give away a glass of water.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, June 30, at 8 o'clock. Mr. Thomas Curtis will lecture on "Matter and Life Illustrated by Example."

NEWS AND NOTES.

Tuesday afternoon, June 11, the stage takes me from the Palace Hotel, Ukiah, towards the vast summits which, in the warm, dazzling atmosphere, are clothed in floating blue garments of thin mist that just begin to shine with the mellow gold of evening. The scenery about the road winding through valleys and alongside the steep and wooded hills is varied and attractive, and the journey of eighty miles by stage to Round Valley and Covelo is not quite so fatiguing as it might be without such refreshing prospects and constantly new views. The turnpike to Willets, or Little Lake, is comparatively well kept, and the twenty-five miles between there and Ukiah was traversed with comfortable rapidity. There were immense hills to climb, but broad expanses spreading before the eye at every turn, great gulfs beneath, and shining bare peaks above made the ascent quite entertaining, and I felt in no hurry as we passed from charming scene to scene. Only one passenger was on the coach besides myself, Mr. Duffey, of San Francisco, and as he had been over the route many times he was able to post me in regard to points of interest. Occasionally a house appeared amidst the trees and meadows hemmed in by the mighty hills. My traveling companion knew all about those who lived in them and their history far back to pioneer days. Human nature, like the hills themselves, and the sheep pastures and cattle ranges, acquires in this peculiar country a picturesque novelty, unknown anywhere else on the continent. Romances might be written of vivid and startling occurrences. A forsaken blacksmith-shop was pointed out, in front of which one man killed five men immediately after his own brother had been shot. In less than ten minutes after the shooting began six corpses lay on the ground—an awful record of the fierce passions of frontier life.

At Willetts, a village of about three hundred people and one church, we took supper. The shadow of orthodoxy is evidently upon this remote hamlet. I wondered if any Liberals were about, or if it were possible for a Freethought lecture to be given beside this gloomy sanctuary. Perhaps sometime it may be done, for the world moves. Leaving Willetts, the sunset sank into a brilliant moonlight, and we traveled far on into the corridors of the night, the foliage glittering about our pathway as we swept beneath the forest arches. At midnight's solemn hour, in the heart of the shimmering landscape were seen the twinkling of distant human habitations. Suddenly the driver uttered an unearthly yell more piercing than a trumpet tone. In imagination I could see the drowsy postmaster leap from his momentary couch in answer to that piercing summons. He was ready to change the mail as we drove up to his dimly-lighted office, where the decisive shout had preceded us by about ten minutes. The name of this place is Cahto. Four miles beyond is Laytonville, our stopping-place for the night, or morning rather. We arrive at about one o'clock, and with but little ado I tumble into bed and sleep until daylight. At seven o'clock, behind a couple of dilapidated white horses that looked like death itself, I start for Covelo, twenty-six miles away, eight hours ride over about the biggest hills, I think, I ever yet traversed by coach or afoot. In winter it is impossible to travel these roads except on horseback. Only a few months in summer can the stage run. It is a magnificent drive, however. Such superb scenes I have seldom witnessed. I seemed to be climbing right up to heaven on the lofty back of the hills, up—up—on a vast stairway, till I was actually dizzy as I looked down into the enormous amphitheatres at my feet, not one but a dozen amphitheatres widening into mingling precipices, forests, and canyons for a hundred miles. Black Rock, a thousand feet high, towers in front, while Berger Creek dashes a thousand feet below in glistening cascades through Bear-Pen Canyon. Half way between Black Rock peak and the bottom of the abyss is a beautiful green sward, like a cultivated field, called One-Eyed Elk Opening, because an elk with one eye shot out yielded up the ghost on this particular spot. Opposite to this is Suicide Rock, a frowning mass of stone overlooking the rugged valley. I do not know that anyone committed suicide here, but there really could not be a more appropriate place for such a tragedy. The solitary dramatic scenery, uniting the beautiful with the terrible, not a dwelling to be seen, not a sign of human presence, this might be a fitting frame-work for the grave of the sorrowful spirit who had found every door shut except the door of despair. Climbing, or, one might almost say, soaring with slow eagle's flight over the mountain-top, the two white horses becoming a pair of ghostly wings, slowly flapping in the gorgeous sunlight, this wonderfully suggestive panorama disappears, and another equally sublime and impressive opens upon the other side. In its centre, like a glittering silver thread, with here and there strings of bubbling jewels, flows the Eel River from the heart of the far mountains. Our horses begin to put on somewhat the appearance of life as they glide down the fluctuating hillsides to the river, which is so deep that we are obliged to cross by ferry, which has been built this last season. Formerly the horses had to swim the stream. Crossing, we mount the last range, higher than any yet, and from its top, about the middle of the afternoon, Round Valley appears in its delightful quietude. This valley is a round valley indeed, from eight to ten miles in diameter. It is charmingly rural—a luminous summer-land in the midst of the wildest mountain scenery. Green pastures mingle with golden harvest fields and shining orchards. The multitude of trees, like a grand army breaking ranks, is scattered over the plain in troops, in single file, or like grand solitary sentinels. In a cluster of oak and cottonwood and balm of gilead, Covelo is distinguished, named after a fortress in Switzerland. Switzerland itself could boast of no more majestic or gentle scenery, grandeur and softness combined, than greets the eye within this vast encircling horizon, untrodden hills frowning upon rose-embowered homes. On the outskirts of the village are the stately residences of some of the cattle kings of the country, who for nearly half a century have lorded it over vast ranges, dividing the mountains among themselves with imperial edict, and forcing those who desired homesteads to vacate or sell out. This is a great sheep and cattle country. Colossal fortunes have been made, and a kind of feudal authority established, and some blood has been spilt. One of these tragic affairs occurred the day before I entered the valley. A wealthy stockman was killed by a homesteader. There are two sides to the matter, of course, but it shows the tumultuous state of society. There are, I believe, more law suits to the square mile in this county than in any other part of the state. Judge Whitney had one hundred and twenty cases on the docket the last term. This is the contribution of Round Valley to the court-business for one session.

However, there is improvement. The good old days of the land-barons are passing. Settlers are coming in. Values are increasing. Homes are multiplying. Some anticipated trouble at the lectures. But nothing has occurred, although a few of the Christians feel pretty bitter to think that an Infidel should dare to cross the mountains and scatter the seed of progress and knowledge in this hitherto secluded spot. There is one church here, the Presbyterian, and it has ruled without opposition, has had strawberry festivals, raffles, lotteries, and everything else its own way. It don't want to be disturbed. The last minister they had was a pretty good fellow, they say. He would look on at a dance and play ball on Sunday when church was over. I do not think the present incumbent would do anything of the kind. He is pre-eminently a proper minister. He sits opposite me at the hotel table, and I can vouch for his clerical conduct. He is of unbending dignity, and truly represents the creed. He is perfectly satisfied with foreordination, and that the number of the damned cannot be made greater or less by any human endeavor. He will play upon the golden harp with unequivocal delight.

Some of the Christians have expressed their abhorrence of Freethought by plastering mud over the bills announcing the lectures. Whether their mud-slinging will amount to anything else remains to be seen. I understand that two clergymen have been imported from Ukiah to speak on Sunday evening. Whether they have brought any kerosene lamps with which to enforce their argument I do not know. But the free spirit of nature, of humanity, and civilization is not wanting in this mountain land. A majority of the people are undoubtedly Liberal. Many are indifferent, some are afraid, but there are a few willing to let their convictions be known, who believe in honest doubt, and desire to make the world better than it is, not by superstition, but by truth.

Ira C. Hoxie was the first to greet me, and it was by his earnest correspondence that I was induced to enter this remote field. I felt there must be some good where so much enthusiasm for Freethought was exhibited. Mr. Hoxie is an old citizen, honored by all. He is postmaster, and will continue so if the good will and confidence of his neighbors, Republican and Democratic alike, is of any avail. He stands frankly by his convictions, but has not an unkind word for those who think differently. He is willing to be of the "forlorn hope" if that is the only way to victory. No present defeat would chill the ardor of his spirit.

Mr. Louis Lobree, merchant, is also a staunch supporter, and with him his wife, who has no particle of superstition and delights in progressive ideas. The little children, too, who came to the lectures, drink in the spirit of liberty. The baby is in dreamland most of the time, but I don't believe it is haunted by any ghosts. It is a pleasure to meet with these generous allies, who take life with such cheerful and intelligent minds.

Mr. H. T. Tanney is also ready to take the "laboring oar" and row up the stream, and his wife has no fear of standing at the post of duty, or doing pioneer work if necessary. They are both old friends via the columns of the Truth Seeker. They brought the children also, and so Freethought spoke to the coming generation, whose bright looks are a promise of the "good time coming."

P. A. Duell is the sturdy farmer who can make the wilderness blossom like the rose. From nature's heart he takes only the true and progressive—the sunlight, and not the darkness. He is well-known for his pronounced Liberalism, and is big enough to stand all the assaults of the enemy. He is a comrade whom one can tie to, and find no signs of failure in head or heart.

Mr. Frank Youree, proprietor of the Rink Hall, generously donated the use of the hall for the lectures. He himself is Liberal-minded, believes in listening to both sides, and giving to all parties fair play. This is everything that can be desired for the progress of Secular ideas. If people will come and hear, half of the battle is won.

I find pleasant sojourn at the Gibson House, where Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Buell make entertainment for the traveler. Although not pronounced in Liberalism, and kindly disposed to all creeds, they have a pretty broad faith in this world, and are much more in favor of giving a good square meal than of saying grace.

John Beaumont is here, and he has made more than a "Sabbath day's journey" to be on hand. He is not afraid to ask for subscribers to FREETHOUGHT whenever he gets a chance. It gives renewed courage to meet so uncompromising a supporter. He has added quite a number to the list of FREETHOUGHT, and with such energetic campaigners there's hope, no matter how rough the way, or how many falter when the real fight comes on.

My young friend Wm. Whitney has helped to make my stay enjoyable. He is in the ranks of Freethought, with more backbone than some soldiers of older growth. He is the right kind of a young America, who sees something more in life than old women's tales and Sunday-school picnics. I was sorry not to make the acquaintance of Dr. Geo. J. Brown, who was away on my arrival. He is a staunch Liberal and ready to be counted.

And so are others—Andrew Dick, Ezra Smith, N. J. Purcell, H. N. Barney, Judge Whitney, Attorney Chambers, etc. I have found warm-hearted friends in this isolated land over which the dreamy future hovers with many a bright possibility. This land is indeed as rich as Canaan. It flows with milk and honey. Almost every fruit can be raised. The soil and climate are excellent. It has a coal mine which may, some day, attract the iron horse. The sheep and cattle make this their home. Some of the best horses in California have been reared in this valley. A flour mill has just been put up with fine machinery. The Indian Reservation is close by, and the war dance mingles with the light of civilization, but the whoop has died away upon the hills, and the fierce son of the forest is as gentle as the sucking dove. Quietly Covelo pursues the path of advancement.

My friend Hoxie at one time owned half of the village and yet he was not so very much of a monopolist, for he only owned his own dwelling and the livery stable. I took dinner with him on Sunday. He has a pleasant family, of scriptural dimensions. I do not remember now how many children he has, and he sometimes forgets, but they are all, down to the jolly baby, bright, healthful, and not much in the shadow of the old faith. They belong to the new. Hoxie has seen many ups and downs, but he has always been a true philosopher, whether camping on the cold mountain, driving a pack-mule, herding sheep, or sorting Uncle Sam's mail. He doesn't expect to be rich, but he means to have a good time in this world, and not cross any bridge until he gets to it.

As to the lectures, they were well attended, considering that the old women of both sexes were on the alert to keep the faithful away, and the weak-kneed Liberal—and with considerable success. I did not have as large audiences as I expected. It was a constant struggle to maintain our own, but I gave the four lectures. The audiences were good in quality, and representative of the most cultivated portion of the community. John Beaumont, who knows the proclivities of the county, wondered that I ventured into such an unpromising land. But the deed has been done and I am well satisfied with the result. Our friends on this wilderness line have blazed the pathway of progress splendidly. They have shown indomitable pluck, and not on any account would I have missed my visit to this beautiful valley, where the heart is beating to the music of a golden to-morrow. I thank my friends here for their courageous ardor, and all along the line they shall find a responsive cheer to their gallant movement.

Monday morning, in the sunshine glittering like a diamond everywhere and making the mountain-tops all aglow, and the foliage like overarching jewels, and the caverns of the forest like soft, radiant chambers where one might dream, beneath the whispering pines, of the new gods and fairies of love which man's exalted brain shall make for his brighter generations, through the vast panoramas—the sweeping hills, the deep-down gulfs of green and gray, the silver shining rivulet, the crystal fountains, the spangled fields—I ascend and descend and wind along from Covelo to Laytonville, where I arrive in the middle of the afternoon, scarcely wearied with the long ride, so attractive were the scenes of the journey, far and near, now narrowing to shady vistas, and anon spreading a hundred miles away. I must thank my companionable drivers who entertained me, their only passenger, with stories of the olden time—of war and hunt, of Indian and bear, of heroism and crime—legends mingling delightfully with the unique and charming pictures of the winding way. E. A. Robinson and W. M. Smith are the names of my genial companions, and I shall always remember my trip with them over the mountain land, and especially the fact that they divided their lunch with me, and supplied the place of a hotel with generous comradeship, for all the way from Covelo to Laytonville there is not a single place for the traveler to meet the wants of an ever-increasing appetite.

All night long, in the glorious moonlight and splendid dawn, I ride from Laytonville to Ukiah. Occasionally I nod and almost tumble off my seat as the wagon gives an extra jolt where the winter floods have left their hollow imprint. Nature's most alluring visions and sweetest face cannot keep the wakeful spirit always in the eyelids. They will droop and emulate the moonlight that "sleeps upon yon bank." As we drew on through the vast arches, toward the chambers of morning, the picture was certainly one of ineffable glory. On one side glowed the brilliant evening star and opposite the still more lustrous morning star, and between hung the argent, paling moon, for right beneath it the sea of dawn was beginning to flame. All around were the huge hills, the shaggy forests, and vast valleys sweeping down towards the ocean that, only a few miles away, was faintly glittering in the gathering mist.

J. O'Neil was my traveling companion from Cahto. He has been living in Humboldt county and now returns to Hopland, where his sons live, who, I think, are of our Liberal host. At any rate my veteran friend said that the ministers had been trying all the year to get him to join the church but he would not. So he is on the right side,

I just had a hand-shake with McCowen as I passed through Ukiah. Tuesday evening at sunset I arrive at San Francisco, just in time to hear the songs of the Salvation army in front of FREETHOUGHT office.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

RELIGION, POLITICS, AND CRIME.

There is a painful cowardice on the part of the daily press regarding the Cronin murder in Chicago, and the secret of it is that the criminals are Catholics and politicians. Mr. Alexander Sullivan, under bail charged with complicity in the murder, is a man with as vile a reputation as could be well imagined. His record includes an arrest for arson, two defalcations in federal offices, one murder and an attempt at another, and an indictment for embezzlement of funds raised for the cause of Ireland and lost at gambling. Sullivan and one Eagan owned a large Irish vote, and sold it to the highest bidder, in return for which Sullivan received the shekels and Eagan the office. These men are prominent in a secret society called the Clan-na-Gael, the object of which is divulged only when some one who incurs its ill-will is put out of the way by murder.

In view of all these facts, it is surprising that any American newspaper could be found to defend a man like Sullivan; but not only are such papers found, but those which dare to speak against him are the exception. As before stated, the reason why this is so is because Sullivan is a Catholic and a politician. The only non-Catholic in the outfit is one Woodruff, and upon him all the abuse is heaped, while Sullivan and his co-religionists are defended against every accusation, whether true or not.

The Cronin murderers are classed with the Anarchists, but they do not deserve that distinction. The Anarchists did not assassinate. When the Anarchists were accused every wild and extravagant tale told against them was paraded as the truth; they had no defenders among those who now plead in behalf of Cronin's alleged assassins. They were not Catholics and they had no political influence, so far, at least, as the accused men were concerned. There were Catholic Anarchists, but they were never arrested. One of these, a man of such violent speech that he was dubbed "Dynamite" Ducey, belonged to the Catholic church, and boasted that that fact gave him indemnity from arrest, as undoubtedly it did. Sullivan may be innocent, though his record is against him. There certainly ought not to be in this case a manufactured public sentiment sufficient to acquit him if guilty, as in the case of the Anarchists there was a public sentiment that would have hanged them whether guilty or not.

"WHY PRIESTS SHOULD WED."

In 1887 the Rev. Justin D. Fulton, D.D., of Brooklyn, N. Y., wrote a book with the above title, and gave his manuscript into the hands of the printers. The firm who had taken the contract to publish the book soon found that they were liable to prosecution if they went on with the work, and refused to proceed, which action left the Rev. Mr. Fulton in the unenviable light of the writer of matter unfit for publication. In his dilemma Dr. Fulton appealed to Anthony Comstock, and that functionary assured him that if he attempted to sell the work he would undoubtedly be prosecuted. Dr. Fulton thought it a shame that the barbarities and immoralities of the Catholic church could not be shown up unless a writer was ready to stand fine and imprisonment, but he was forced to submit. Nevertheless he got the book out, expurgating it somewhat, but leaving the facts about as they stood before, while much that the author wished to say is all the more apparent because covered up.

This book has been before the public for a year, and in spite of the fact that no book-seller who has a Catholic customer would dare to expose it for sale on his counters, it has reached a circulation of twenty-five thousand copies. Nothing, probably, since Boccaccio, has so completely exposed the interior workings of the confessional and the nunnery. Catholics ought to read it. It shows up the moral aspect as Judge Maguire's "Ireland and the Pope" does the political aspect of the Roman church. The price, $1.50, is calculated to keep it out of the hands of those who might be injured by it, if such there are. We shall be glad to help circulate the work.

THE EVIL AT THE ROOT.

The Chronicle is always in favor of violent measures. Last week we noted that the editor desired that the Rev Mr. Schweinfurth, of Rockford, Ill., should be ridden upon a sharp rail by way of testing his divinity. We pointed out then that such a test would destroy any professed divinity known to the world, as the physical test was tried upon Jesus Christ, who failed under it. Superstition cannot be overcome by persecution, but people may be convinced by argument and demonstration that there is no such thing as divinity, nor ever was. Then they will cease to believe in the Rockford savior or any other savior, and supernatural claims will need no refutation because no one will accept them.

This week the Chronicle would turn its engine of destruction against the "faith-cure charlatans," and recommends that a law be passed to reach them. This is another case where the law could do no good, but on the contrary would do a great deal of harm. To persecute fanatics is to propagate fanaticism. The way to get rid of this faith-cure charlatanism is to go at the root and destroy the credulity upon which it is founded. It is just as reasonable that faith should save the body as that it should save the soul. Let it be made known to all men and women that faith is a delusion, that all those in the faith business are impostors, and short work would be made of the particular impostors whom the Chronicle condemns. They are all tarred with the same stick, however, from Lourdes and Knock to Allègheny City and Los Angeles, and the material on which they feed is the superstition taught in every church. Destroy the superstition and the faith-cure will die a natural death. Laws on the subject would not be just, even if they proved effective.

THE CHEERFUL GIVER.

One of the most steadfast Freethinkers on this coast is Mr. H. L. Shaug, of Del Mar. When it was proposed that those who could afford to should make up a guarantee fund of $20 each to insure the continued publication of FREETHOUGHT, Mr. Shaug wrote briefly: "I am onto it."

Another communication just received is as follows:

To the Editors of Freethought:

This being pay day all around, with me, to the various Infidel papers, magazines, etc., of which I am a patron, you will please find inclosed $22—$20 to redeem my pledge to FREETHOUGHT, and $2 for yearly subscription. I trust that this will make me solid, financially, for the ensuing year, and cancel all my former arrangements made with the band on high, for harps, hallelujahs, crowns, halos, and any or all of the paraphernalia in stock and for sale on the corner of St. Gabriel st., N. J. (New Jerusalem) that I may have had, or acquired by heredity or force of superstition during my infancy. I bequeath the same to the Revs. Jones, Moody, Braden & Co., for their own use and benefit; and let them "bust."

H. L. SHAUG.

At this dull season of the year with us, when people are thinking more of saving their crops than anything else, these "extras" fill a want that is keenly felt, and Brother Shaug is hereby assured that he has put us under a debt of gratitude that will never be canceled, though we might be able to repay it with interest.

OUR LOCAL SOCIETY.

The meetings of the Freethought Society at Union Square Hall are drawing very good audiences, considering the lack of advertising or any special endeavor to crowd the house. The hall is not large, but it is filled. There are able addresses and lively discussions, good music on occasions, and pleasant greetings and acquaintanceships. The only thing, in fact, that these meetings lack is sufficient financial support to defray the necessary expenses. The hall rent, which amounts to $20 per month, is now raised by the uncertain method known as a collection. This, perhaps, is the best way practicable to collect the coin, but people sometimes become careless of the necessities of the occasion, and omit to contribute as generously as they should. For instance, last Sunday night an audience numbering eighty or one hundred contributed $3.15. This is not flattering to the generosity of those present. A meeting that is worth attending is worth supporting with a donation of two-bits. We suggest, by way of experiment, that visitors who can afford it contribute that amount and help along the cause.

A SUGGESTION TO FRIENDS.

If those who have made up their minds to do something toward the support of FREETHOUGHT, and who have not as yet put their intentions into practical effect, can find it convenient to do so now, while the dull season is upon us, their help will be doubly acceptable.

THE POPE AND BRUNO.

Pope Leo continues to wail over the Bruno statue. In his latest allocution, after bemoaning the general drift of things, he says:

"Such a pitch has now been reached that in this city, before our very eyes, wicked men have been suffered to inflict a lasting insult on the religion of Jesus Christ by raising a statue (an honor due only to virtue) to an apostate."

His holiness, it will be seen, speaks of those who raised Bruno's statue as "wicked men." Why did he not give his opinion of those who burnt the philosopher at the stake? One would judge from his remarks that honoring a man was a trifle more execrable than murdering him. He also regards the monument as an insult to Jesus Christ. It seems to us that Christ and Bruno, if they should meet in the great elsewhere, might extend the hand of sympathy to each other. One was an apostate Jew, the other an apostate Catholic, and both were put to death by religious bigotry. Fortunately for the memory of Bruno there is no mitered harlequin calling himself pope, who pretends to speak in his name. It is no wonder that Leo XIII. does not like to have the statue before his eyes. He must feel something like a murderer haunted by the ghost of his victim. From present appearances, however, he will have to stand it or emigrate.

WHAT can equal the cruel deceit of parents who teach their children that a heavenly father holds them in the hollow of his hand? Says the Twentieth Century: "A pitiful story comes from the Johnstown disaster. When a mother put her little Bessie on a slight raft to float away on the flood, rather than have her drowned like a rat in the house, the little one said: 'Mamma, you've always told me God would take care of me. Will he take care of me now?' The mother said: 'Yes, dear, God will take care of you.' And then the child floated away and was drowned, with thousands of others." There are a hundred thousand men in the United States who draw salaries for no other service than preaching this stupendous fraud, and they will keep doing so as long as fools pay the salary.

THE errant George Chainey has turned up in England. The editor of the Agnostic Journal says: "George Chainey, of America, has called upon us—a man of strongly individualized physiognomy and singularly eloquent eyes and mouth. Misled by certain American journals, we stated some weeks ago that Mr. Chainey had 'found Jesus;' but he assures us that he has not found that personage, and that he has not even looked for him. Mr. Chainey is engaged upon a work dealing with Joan of Arc, and is in good health and equable spirits." We don't believe there is any good authority as to Mr. Chainey's religious status, not even Mr. Chainey himself.

THE Chicago Secular Union, we note, has presented its worthy president, E. A. Stevens, with a beautiful and valuable gold watch as a token of appreciation for his efficient labors. The compliment is deserved. Those who have the welfare of the cause at heart could wish for no better consummation than that a man like Mr. Stevens might be raised up in every city in the Union as a standard-bearer of Liberalism. No other word will express it. He is a hero.

WE have not received our valued exchange, the Golden Gate, for two weeks, and the suspicion is harrowing us that we have said something that has caused Brother Owen to take FREETHOUGHT off his list.

THE Carrier Dove thus states the six theses of Spiritualism: "1st, Fatherhood of God; 2d, Brotherhood of man; 3d, Continuity of life; 4th, Spirit communion; 5th, Personal responsibility; 6th, Eternal progression." Fortunately there are no penalties for disbelief in any of the above propositions.

THE Beacon, a small paper devoted to "free thought, free speech, and social reform," is published at San Diego, J. D. Steell, editor. It seeks to reform our defective political system.

"THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY," one of Mr. S. P. Putnam's best lectures, is published in a handsome pamphlet. The price is 10 cents, and the work may be obtained by addressing this office.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

Archbishop Riordan conducted services in the San Quentin Penitentiary last Sunday. He found 600 Catholics for a congregation.—California wines are having a hard fight for first place in New York. Owing to high railroad charges across the continent, French wines can be imported, duty paid, so as to undersell the California product.—A girl at Rincon, near Pomona, has begun suit against a wealthy rancher to recover $1,500 damages for kisses inflicted upon her against her will by the defendant.—About a month ago a bale of hay dropped upon the head of James B. Hill, breaking his neck. The doctors made an incision in the back of the neck and removed two of the vertebrae—in spite of which Mr. Hill is alive at the present writing, though likely to die at any moment. The case has attracted much attention.—A fire believed to be incendiary destroyed over $50,000 worth of property in Vancouver, W. T., June 22.—The total amount of money collected in San Francisco for the Johnstown and Seattle sufferers up to June 23 was $76,484. Of this sum $50,000 has been sent to Pennsylvania, and $20,000 to Seattle.—The Rev. Dr. Phillips Brooks, the great Boston preacher, is in the city. He reports that Christianity is progressing in the East.—Last week there were only 90 deaths in San Francisco against 120 for the corresponding week in 1888.

Twenty-five thousand people are living on charity at Johnstown, Pa. It is believed that some of these are impostors, and the commissaries are to be reduced.—The coming prize fight between Sullivan and Kilrain is attracting public attention to a disreputable extent.—Bob Younger, the bank robber and bandit, under a life sentence at Stillwater, Minn., is seeking release on account of his health. He is said to be nearly dead with consumption.—There are no new developments in the Cronin case at Chicago, except that the pope is reported to have condemned the Clan-na-Gael.—The wife of ex-President Hayes suffered a stroke of paralysis and died Tuesday, June 25.—The convention of the North American Turnersband at Cincinnati is attended by about 1200 delegates.—President Harrison and family are at Cape May.—Rhode Island has rejected its prohibitory amendment.—The four men who robbed the Atlantic and Pacific express last April have been sentenced to twenty-five years each in the Territorial prison of Arizona, at Yuma.—Simon Cameron, the Pennsylvania senator, is near death.—Arizona and New Mexico are agitating for statehood.—Father Marcil, who with his congregation of 700 was sometime since excommunicated by Archbishop Ireland at Red Lake Falls, Minn., has decided to go to Rome and argue his case before the pope.—Three hundred and forty-five Mormon proselytes landed at Castle Garden June 20, on their way to Utah.—The Rev. William E. Howard, of New York, convicted of grand larceny in connection with the Electric Sugar Refining Company frauds, has been sentenced to nine years and eight months' imprisonment at hard labor.

Mr. and Mrs. William E. Gladstone will celebrate their golden wedding July 25.—Inventor Edison is the lion of the Paris exposition. His electrical devices occupy one-third of the entire space allotted to America.—Mgr. Persico, according to the Pall Mall Gazette, reports to the pope that he has proofs of the intention of the Irish to kill him should he return to Ireland.

OBSERVATIONS.

Last Saturday morning I received a note from P. O. Chilstrom, Esq., mailed in Santa Rosa, stating with deep regret that he was unable to so control circumstances as to be with us the following Sunday evening and deliver his address before the Freethought Society on "Our Destiny," as previously announced. Thus it happened that Mr. H. L. Knight was applied to and kindly consented to occupy the platform. On week days Mr. Knight fills the editorial chair of the Political Record, a paper devoted to politics simplified, purified, and dignified. He was attending to these processes when I dropped in on him Saturday afternoon and engaged him to speak. Mr. Knight has an active brain that is always thinking up things to say, so that he needs no preparation for a lecture. He merely connects his thinker with the organs of speech and lets the ideas emerge.

Vice-President Eastman presided, and previous to the literary exercises Professor Schultheis played "Il Trovatore" on the piano. There is no need to say that he played it well. I might remark, however, that Mr. Schultheis is a music teacher, and that if friends of the society can see their way clear to put pupils under his tuition they will be returning good for good. He attends these meetings and offers his services voluntarily whenever his engagements will permit, and a little patronage from those who are benefited by his generosity would be a most appropriate expression of thanks.

Mr. Knight opened his address by saying that he had been fifty-eight years in the Freethought ranks, having inaugurated the propaganda at a tender age. When he was a boy hell was a reality, and infants not a span long were going there daily. He had lived to see the idea of hell pass, as a picture fades and disappears. Mr. Knight made a good Freethought speech and everybody was with him until near the close, when he declared his earnest belief in the existence of a "personal, wise, just, and good God," and in a life beyond this, which would be happy or unhappy according to the deeds done in the body. He said: "Among the advocates of Freethought, pure and simple, God has a vast majority. For all the eloquence of Ingersoll, and the science of Huxley and Buchner, but few have yet resigned themselves to live without God in the world. Atheism is lonesome, and you may count its votaries on your fingers, almost; and however confident Atheism may be that it alone is rational, there are Deists who do not fear the ordeal of debate, but will stand up against the foremost for a Father for this world, a God for man to worship and adore. Yes, a personal God, who knows himself, the universe, and man, and delights to see them all happy in doing what is just and right."

The speaker then proceeded to argue for the existence of "a human soul that will not die with what we call death, but live again to know that God approves of it, and to be happy in that thought." Such thoughts as these, Mr. Knight believed, ennobled and inspired mankind to the highest purpose of human life. In conclusion Mr. Knight said that he was prepared to maintain the foregoing propositions in debate with the ablest tongues and pens. He did not wish it to be understood that Atheism was the sole refuge of Freethought. "God and Liberty" was not yet an obsolete phrase. He was for God and Freethought, one and inseparable, because God is for Freethought, and Freethought would never fail to illustrate and vindicate God. He, the speaker, was getting along in years and approaching the end of this world. He could have no object in misrepresenting himself, and didn't wish to deny his maker whom he expected to meet soon.

During its delivery Mr. Knight's address evoked numerous ironical comments from persons in the audience, and at its close a general feeling was prevalent that somebody ought to set him right. A collection intervened, however, interspersed with music by Mr. Pingree, and then the Chair said the question was open to discussion.

Mr. Paddon led in the debate. In his view the notion that a personal God ruled the aggregate of nature was most absurd. He saw no evidence of any such ruler, but even if there were one we could not regard him as "good, wise, and just." A good God would not permit the suffering which we see all around—the disasters by fire and flood. A wise God would not allow ignorance to be the rule and knowledge the exception, as experience shows to be the case; and a God who would let the good perish and the wicked survive—who would allow the innocent to suffer for the guilty—was not in any sense a just God, but, on the contrary, one of the worst monsters of which the human mind could conceive.

Mr. Thomas Curtis was a trifle sarcastic in his criticisms of the speaker. He said he had not been in the field so long as Mr. Knight, but he had labored for fifty years in the cause of Free-thought, and if in that time he had got no farther away from orthodoxy than the speaker of the evening, he should think he had lived in vain. There were two methods of thought in vogue. One was to ascertain facts, and upon them to build a theory; the other was to start with a theory and hold to it regardless of all facts which might contradict it. The latter method had been adopted by Mr. Knight. Mr. Curtis intimated that Mr. Knight had misstated the truth with regard to universal belief in God and a future life. There were tribes who had no such belief, and there were religions which did not teach it as set forth by the speaker. Buddhism, for instance, which had more followers than any other religion, was without a supreme being and did not teach any life beyond this earth. When the soul left this world it entered nirvana or nothingness. Brahmanism, another great religion, had no personal deity or personal immortality. Thus Mr. Knight's conclusion drawn from the alleged universal belief in these things was without foundation. Mr. Curtis went on to say that Mr. Knight was indeed growing old. He was in the sere and yellow leaf mentally as well as physically. As the bodily powers decayed the mind relaxed. It felt no longer capable of grappling with the problems of life, and so surrendered itself to the teachings of childhood and amused itself again with the fairy tales which beguiled its infancy.

Mr. Knight was invited to close the discussion. He replied that he had not heard anything to change his belief. For ignorant man to question the ways of the all-wise was like a savage criticising the mechanism of a locomotive. As he previously remarked, he would like to meet the ablest Agnostics and Atheists in discussion and settle the question. A listener here opened the debate by asking Mr. Knight a question, and the Chair was obliged to adjourn the meeting in order to induce the disputants to break away.

This was decided, by all competent to judge such questions, to be the liveliest meeting as yet held by the San Francisco Free-thought Society. There was a touch of the Liberal Club about it.

I am sometimes concerned to know what the eastern part of the country is going to do for Freethought lecturers if some way is not soon devised to check the exodus toward this coast. In 1887, when Mr. Putnam and myself took a pilgrim car for San Francisco, there was but one solitary "Ingersoll of the West" between Puget Sound and the Gulf of California, and he was at that time enjoying a vacation. The changed aspect of affairs now attracts the attention of all. First came Mr. C. B. Reynolds, who shortly returned for Mrs. Reynolds, also an able lecturer, and both have located at Walla Walla. Then came Mr. B. F. Underwood, of Chicago, who is making his second visit within the year. Prof. W. S. Bell got the Western fever, and came later. He promises to locate permanently. Mr. Geo. H. Dawes, of Pittsville, Wis., will be abroad in Oregon shortly as a school-teacher, and he is prepared to lecture evenings and Sundays. Prof. W. F. Jamieson, too, announces that after the first of November he will fill engagements on the coast. Nor is this all. The eloquent Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel, of Kansas City, is to be with us later on. Furthermore, circling about among the hills and other natural scenery, will be observed this summer the altitudinarian form of Professor Seymour on the trail of intemperance and superstition. I might add, ong passong, as they say in England, that Mr. Putnam has about seventy-five or eighty engagements ahead of him.

This alarming drift westward in '89 is not wholly without a precedent, since there is said to have been a trend of emigration hitherward in '49, but that was a mere tendency compared to the present rush, which leaves the eastern borders at the mercy of the enemy, except for the presence of Mr. L. K. Washburn and the original Ingersoll of the East, with possibly a few nonprofessional lecturers. I once thought, in view of the infrequency of Infidel exponents on the coast, that I might myself renounce the pleasures of life, take vows of poverty and chastity, and, secluding myself in the lecture field, become dead to the world. The necessity for this appears no longer to exist. The want is supplied. The timbered country of the West is full of John the Baptists, and I am looking every day for Putnam to get a call to go East and establish a lecture route along the Atlantic coast. The pioneer work might be arduous at first, but it is the province of the reformer to make the sledding easier for those who come after him.

M.

PROFESSOR LADD'S BOOK—"WHAT IS THE BIBLE?"

III.

On page 135 the author says of the Hebrews: "There is not a particle of evidence to show that they had any other information concerning the truths of nature than such as belonged to all their contemporaries."

"The Biblical writers show no signs of having been inspired so as to be errorless when treating of physical matters; they make the mistakes incident to their times." And here occurs one of his curious inconsistencies. He says: "The biblical writers know no more than others, of the order, laws, and resultants of physical causes; but they know that Jehovah is the creator and Lord of the world, and that all things execute his will in righteousness and grace toward Israel, the people of the covenant, and toward the people of the whole earth."

He does not inform us how they know any more about "Jehovah" than of "physical causes;" or how he comes to know that they know. And yet he assumes the fact with great positiveness. He also assumes God's dealing "toward Israel, the people of the covenant," and "toward the people of the whole earth." It is not easy to see what difference the "covenant" makes, when he deals with "the people of the whole earth," the same as with "Israel."

This, however, is only a digression, and he immediately returns to his candid admissions as follows: "The discussion of this cosmogony (that of Genesis) began as early as the attempt to establish the Copernican theory of the solar system. It has now become a comparatively mild debate as to how far geology and Genesis can be reconciled. In all such debate the main conclusions of geology are usually not for a moment questioned by the disputing parties; the inquiry is simply raised and argued as to how far Genesis may be interpreted so as to accord with these conclusions" (p. 136). It would seem that this admission covers the whole ground. If the "sacred," "holy," and "inspired scriptures" have taken so humble a position as to only aspire to be in "accord" with uninspired science, it would seem about time to stop talking of their "sacred," "holy," and "inspired" qualities. When orthodoxy surrenders its very citadel, it should no longer make a pretense of resistance. As to the biblical account of the flood the author says, "Everything about the narrative shows that its author held only the prevalent conceptions of his time" (p. 147).

"The moral and religious doctrine and bearings of the narrative should be recognized without the painful feeling that the trustworthiness and inspiration of the Hebrew Bible must be vindicated by showing the scientific infallibility of the Hebrew writer" (p. 148).

Might not the same thing be said of Greek or Roman mythology as of Hebrew mythology? The "moral and religious doctrine of the narrative" of "Mother Hubbard and her dog" have been drawn by an ingenious writer, without any attempt "to establish its inspiration," or its "scientific or historic infallibility." That Genesis and many other books of the Bible are fiction, is now well known to all scholars; why not tell the truth boldly?

In regard to the miracles of the Bible he says: "The record of every miracle is a historical affair. It must be tested by the rules by which we judge of all history. . . . Each miracle may, therefore, properly be regarded as a special case requiring a special examination" (p. 156).

"The biblical miracles are not to be regarded as violations or even suspensions of the laws of nature."

"Not a few of the biblical miracles merely represent themselves as what we should now call extraordinary combinations or exaggerations of ordinary physical forces" (p. 158).

"Still further, the Bible never represents its miraculous occurrences as though they came about in an absolutely supernatural or wholly arbitrary way" (p. 159).

"The titles by which the biblical miracles are called in the biblical writings do not, of themselves, signify much more than that these events are unaccustomed and notable or astonishing" (p. 160).

"Nor would the essential value of the biblical miracles and the offices they serve be destroyed if the time should come when investigation should discover how those miracles came about" (p. 165).

"Let it not be forgotten, however, that it is necessary to establish the truthfulness of each of these narratives on grounds that are valid for each, and according to the rules of historic inquiry."

"But the record of a miracle is not itself necessarily a miracle. Even the inspired writer, when recording a miracle, may be subject to all the conditions which occasion mistakes in other historical writings." . . . "The Bible, however, nowhere claims for itself perfect freedom from all historical error" (p. 184).

With these concessions we may well ask, what is left of the reliability of the record of Bible miracles? According to these conditions not a miracle of the Bible can be substantiated. Yet as the professor is writing "in the interest of faith" he still thinks there are some miracles, and that they are "wrought by the power of God." But any thoughtful reader who will study his chapter on biblical miracles will, I think, come to the conclusion that the author is trying to let the church down easy from an untenable position. In fact, this seems to be the aim of the entire book.

J. W. NORTH.

A CHRISTIAN LIE.

Ministers tell the people that God is their "loving father;" that he looks after them with tender care, and lo! a Johnstown disaster comes to prove that all that they have been telling the people is false—cruelly, selfishly false. The plain truth is this: There is no power outside of man that cares for man.

Whether there is a God in the universe or not is an open question, but whether there is a God who is a "loving father" to man, is not an open question. That question has been settled in the negative thousands of times. We challenge the Christian church and all of her priests and ministers to show one act of their God that manifests the love of a human parent. If God exists he is indifferent to man's fate; indifferent to his enjoyment or suffering.

This last terrible calamity affords a sufficient illustration of the divine lack of love or lack of power. Here was a city of nearly twenty thousand human beings. Above this city was a body of water four or five miles long and over one mile wide, held in its place by a dam of earth which had become weakened by heavy rains. In a moment, without a sign, this dam gave away and thousands of human lives were lost in less than an hour. Was God watching over the people of Johnstown with tender care? Was he performing the part of a "loving father" to those poor people who, without a word of warning, were drowned and crushed by the mad waters of that awful flood?

The pulpit, in the face of this horrible disaster, should blush with shame to speak of God's "watchful care over the lives of men." How can the Christian explain the absence of his God at this place of danger? How can he reconcile his faith in God's providence with the facts of the Johnstown horror? He will ask us to believe that "God's ways are past finding out." No, they are not. We have found them out.

And the people are finding out the ways of the pulpit too. Such ways are not to the credit of humanity.

It is nothing less than lying for a Christian minister to tell his poor dupes that God "watches over their lives," and will "preserve them from temptation and danger."

Why not tell the truth? Why not admit the facts? What good does it do man to tell him this Christian lie that God is his "loving father?" We know better, and history has a thousand sad pages, stained with human tears, that support this knowledge.

L. K. WASHBURN.

TOO LIBERAL LIBERALS.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have read nothing lately so fully in accord with my sentiments as the article by Chas. F. Blackburn, which appeared in FREETHOUGHT, June 15. I fully agree with him in saying that the pious frauds and fashionable vagrants, called "ministers," who are eating out the substance of the land, and impoverishing thousands, should be exposed on all occasions.

It seems to me that Liberals generally are too Liberal. They are too liberal with people who will not reason honestly, or discuss religious matters with any degree of fairness. They are too liberal in giving serious attention to assumptive and fallacious reasoning, and to creeds and doctrines based upon the unknown and unknowable. They are too liberal in their estimate of a class of professional impostors, who live in idleness and luxury upon the hard earnings of honest and unthinking labor—a prey upon the sympathies and superstitious fears of women, and the artlessness of innocent and confiding children. The country just now seems to be overrun with these puling mendicants, and every little town is fully supplied with what might be called reverend "dudes."

This little burgh boasts of having the "boss" hand-shaker—a confidential gossip-monger among the unsuspecting and good natured people of the place. Another little town has a clergyman who rides a $140 bicycle—physicians having recommended bicycling as "a healthful exercise for ministers." What's the matter with the saw-buck and the buck-saw? Another clergyman lately published a card, thanking friends for presents as follows: "Ham, eggs, butter, cakes, fruits, and many other edibles too numerous to mention." No wonder the good man was, as he said, "too full for utterance."

J. C. P.

Turlock, Cal., June 15, 1889.

RELIGION AND LABOR.

It is a fact that religious bodies and organizations generally cut down wages, particularly of printers. The Second Adventist printing concern in Oakland pays its printers but little over half Union rates. And the Typographical Union of this city remonstrates with the Y. M. C. A. for having its work done at a notorious "rat" concern here, which gets women to work six months for nothing, and then (as a rule) turns them loose, to make way for a fresh batch. Turning them loose may, perhaps, be understood in more senses than one; for after their little means have been exhausted in a supposed acquisition of a supposed lucrative handicraft, what can they do (if without means) but "turn loose?" And that may be precisely what Jacob Bacon, better known as "Deacon Pork," desires, though it may be premature to assume it as one of the purposes for which the Y. M. C. A. was organized. Intelligent men, however, should be held in some degree responsible for their acts; and if, by encouraging "rat" offices, the Y. M. C. A. promotes prostitution, its members have no right to plead the baby act to shield themselves from criminality.

It may be that the Y. M. C. A., the Second Adventists, etc., consider starvation as a promoter of piety, taking for their text: "Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked." And kickers are especially objectionable in such organizations. "Fasting and prayer," too, are associated as concomitants; and if people won't fast and pray of their own accord, why not (the Y. M. C. A., etc., may reason) compel them to fast, so as to compel them to have a good foundation for prayer, and thereby save their souls? And as for the suffering of their miserable bodies from empty stomachs and crowded quarters, that is a trifle which should not be permitted to interfere with such grand projects of salvation as the Y. M. C. A. and the Second Adventists. Suppose a few hundred thousand persons are annually driven to prostitution and crime by low wages; what is that when thereby the Y. M. C. A. can acquire solid real estate and the other concern get people to keep Saturday, instead of Sunday, holy? Perish the thought that the physical welfare of a few million "mudsills" should block the realization of such brilliant results! Inspired by such reasoning, the Y. M. C. A. will doubtless turn a deaf ear to the request of the Typographical Union, and continue to patronize Deacon Pork's "rat" concern.—Weekly Star.

DR. WESTBROOK ON INFIDELITY.

The following protest in the Freethinkers' Magazine was called out by the published remark that "the president of the American Secular Union is not orthodox in his Infidelity:"

What is Infidelity, and who may with propriety be called Infidels? The words "infidel" and "fidelity" are from the same Latin root, fidelis. In the former the prefix in (not) is used, while in the latter it is omitted. The original, fidelis, means "faithful," from fides, faith. The word faith does not primarily and necessarily refer to what one believes, but to his fidelity to whatever he believes. The more comprehensive and practical meaning of the original word relates specially and primarily to the matter of faithfulness to a trust or contract, and hence, in the language of the law, adultery is denominated "infidelity," because it is a violation of the marriage contract. By palpable perversion of language, and doubtless out of deference to ecclesiastical bigotry and arrogance, lexicographers have added to the original and real philological meaning of the word an arbitrary and utterly unjustifiable definition, founded entirely upon the puritanic usus loquendi, and applied it to the matter of a creed, what one believes regarding the dogma of a single sect as to the infallible inspiration of its doubtful scriptures—doubtful as to their origin, doubtful as to what they really teach, and equally doubtful as to the real character and teachings of the alleged founder of the sect. Against this perversion I firmly protest and refuse to be called an Infidel until I shall have been proved unfaithful to a trust. According to the real meaning of the word, I would as soon be called a defaulter as an Infidel. In my judgment, independent investigators and Freethinkers have not been wise in tacitly accepting an opprobrious name without an earnest denial and an indignant retort. No class of men on earth are more free from infidelity than those who are vilified as Infidels by those to whom the stigma properly belongs. In behalf of the Rationalists and Liberals of the world, I flatly deny that they are Infidels, and boldly retort by charging the rankest infidelity upon the paid, professional Christian clergy, with few exceptions, in that they are unfaithful in the search for truth, often suppress it when they happen to find it, and as frequently suggest the false, and even unfaithfully and dishonestly preach what they know to be false. Such men are the real Infidels.

I close with a kindly hint to some of our rationalistic writers and speakers who sometimes use the expression "orthodox Infidelity," or similar words. Herein I think our Homers are caught nodding! Has it come to this, that there are men in our Liberal ranks who are not only willing to be stigmatized as Infidels, that is, as defaulters and unfaithful persons, but tacitly admit that they belong to a sect having a "shibboleth" or standard of orthodoxy like other sects? Can it be true that some Freethinkers cannot tolerate free thinking? Let Liberals beware lest they fall into the secret snares of the narrow bigots who "profess and call themselves orthodox Christians!" Let Freethinkers have no tests of "good and regular standing" except those of moral character, manly honor, and mental freedom.

R. B. WESTBROOK.

A Parable Read.

A laborer at the Dundee harbor lately told his wife, on awakening, a curious dream which he had during the night. He dreamed that he saw coming toward him in order four rats. The first one was very fat, and was followed by two lean rats, the rear rat being blind. The dreamer was greatly perplexed as to what evil might follow, as it has been long understood that the dream of rats denotes coming calamity. He appealed to his wife concerning this, but she, poor woman, could not help him. His son, a sharp lad, who heard his father tell the story, volunteered to be the interpreter. "The fat rat," he said, "is the man who keeps the public house, that ye gang till sae often, and the twa lean anes are me and my mither, and the blind ane is yersel', father."—Scotch Paper.

BOUND volumes of FREETHOUGHT for 1888 may be had for $2.50.

DISILLUSIONIZED.

The people of Johnstown have lost all their faith in providence. Many of them have thrown away their Bibles, and since the disaster have openly burned them. They make no concealment of this.

During the flood one of the most upright and devout merchants in town was rescued as by a miracle. He was floating on the roof of a house which was whisked around with frightful rapidity. At every revolution part of the roof was knocked away until but a few shingles were left, to which the merchant clung with desperation. Just as he was sinking his slight raft was thrown near enough to a window to permit some friends to seize him by the hand. It was with considerable difficulty that he was dragged in and revived.

As he was lying on the bed a clergyman who was present dropped on his knees and earnestly began to pray. "Leave me," cried the merchant. "This is no time to pray or thank God. I never want to see your face again."

A lady who had lost her husband and four children was gathering together the relics of her home when she came across the family Bible, containing the record of her birth, marriage, and the births of her children. A stranger happened to pass, and tearing the records out she proffered the book to him. The man happened to be a clergyman. "Do you realize, madame, what you are doing?"

"Perfectly," was the reply. "I have no further use for that book. I have always tried to be a consistent Christian woman. I brought up my four girls as strictly as I was brought up, but I cannot read that book any more."

The clergyman thought the loss of her family had turned her head and called the next day. She refused to see him. He sent some of her friends to see her, but after explaining the circumstances she refused to enter into any argument.

Nor are these the only instances. The prominence of these people makes these cases all the more discussed, and many of the survivors—particularly those who had to fight for their lives, who saw their houses dashed to pieces and their loved ones perish before their eyes—only follow their example.—Chicago Times.

PIETY IN THE POST-OFFICE.

Our postmaster-general Wanamaker seems to be running his department in the interest of the Protestant church and general piety. He holds that a man who swears is not as good a man for a public servant as a man who belongs to the church and is too big a hypocrite to express his sentiments in fervent language. Such at least is the doctrine he followed in choosing a postmaster for Portsmouth, N. H. In selecting this office the plum fell to a Mr. Locke. Everyone had supposed that Colonel Sides would be appointed and his name was repeatedly urged upon Mr. Wanamaker. Colonel Sides uses profane language now and then. He contracted the habit while in the army, and it has been aggravated since then by the varying disappointments of New Hampshire politics. Mr. Wanamaker heard of this weakness of the colonel's and said he could not appoint such a man. He also objected to the names of several other well-known politicians, because they were not supported by the Sunday-school element. Before he appointed Mr. Locke Mr. Wanamaker wrote to the secretary of the state Young Men's Christian Association, asking about his church connection. Mr. Locke was thereupon indorsed by five ministers as the favorite of the religious element of the city. Mr. Locke got the appointment at once, although Colonel Sides was the almost unanimous choice of his party, and the Christians are jubilant. It is evident that piety counts heavily with this administration.—The Truth Seeker.

PROF. W. G. SUMNER contributes to "The Popular Science Monthly," as the opening article of the July number, a discussion of the question, "What is Civil Liberty?" in which he reviews the ideas of liberty that have prevailed, and the relations that rights and duties have borne to each other in the past, and points out the tendencies that threaten civil liberty in the present.

A MODIFICATION.

Mr. H. O. Pentecost, of the Twentieth Century, now says:

"Seeing how my recent statement that some Liberals are very illiberal has offended some Liberals I am sorry I said it; not because it is not true, but because I dislike to hurt anyone's feelings. I supposed that everyone knew it, including the editors of the Liberal papers, and it is surprising to notice the asperity with which the statement has been resented by my brother editors of the Liberal sect."

We are glad to observe that Mr. Pentecost is hedging. The way he puts his statement now is not the way he put it originally. It was printed this way:

"The name Liberal describes a number of persons who are about as illiberal as it is possible for human beings to be."

In this original form the plain reading is that all persons described as Liberals are illiberal. In his new form the meaning is that some Liberals are illiberal.

Liberal editors may be supposed to possess as complete knowledge of Liberals as Mr. Pentecost—a recent recruit, who will have difficulty in persuading the public that he did not sit before the mirror when he wrote his definition of Liberal—and therefore that they did not agree with Mr. Pentecost may be taken as fairly good evidence that he spoke hastily and without sufficient information. His last statement, that some Liberals are illiberal, is without doubt correct. We know a few ourselves. But that is no basis at all for the sweeping assertion made by Mr. Pentecost.—The Truth Seeker.

The Oldest Bank Notes.

The oldest bank notes are the "flying money," or "convenient money," first issued in China 2697 B.C. Originally these notes were issued by the treasury, but experience dictated a change to the banks under government inspection and control. The early Chinese "greenbacks" were in all essentials similar to the modern bank notes, bearing the name of the bank, date of issue, the number of note, the signature of the official issuing it, indications of its value in figures, in words, and in the pictorial representations in coins or heaps of coins equal in amount to its face value, and a notice of the pains and penalties of counterfeiting. Over and above all was the laconic exhortation to industry and thrift: "Produce all you can; spend with economy." The notes were printed in blue ink, on paper made from the fibre of the mulberry tree. One issue, in 1399 B.C., is still carefully preserved in the Asiatic Museum at St. Petersburg.—Albany Times.

A Lesson of History.

The most vigorous and determined effort to regulate the conduct of the people, directed by the genius of one of the strongest men the world has ever known and supported by a victorious army, the Puritan commonwealth of England, was a conspicuous failure; and it is now admitted that the English people made greater progress in civil and religious liberty and the capacity for self-government under Charles II. than under Oliver Cromwell. The lesson is as valuable to-day as it was two centuries ago.—Providence Journal.

A Picture of the Moon.

A gentleman of this city recently sent one of Taber's enlargements of a photograph of the moon taken at the Lick Observatory by the great telescope to a member of the Royal Astronomical Society in London. The recipient acknowledges its receipt and speaks in the highest terms of the work of the telescope. The photograph is the best the astronomer has ever seen.

THE Altruist is a monthly paper, partly in phonetic spelling, and devoted to common property, united labor, community homes, and equal rights to all. It is published by the Altruist Community, whose members all live and work together, hold all their property in common, and both men and women have equal rights in deciding on all their business affairs by their majority vote. Fifty cents a year; specimen copy free. Address A. Longley, editor, 2 N. 4th st., St. Louis, Mo.

BIBLICAL WINE.

In commenting on the miracle at Cana, Archdeacon Farrar contrasts the "genial innocence of Christ's system" with the "crushing asceticism of rival systems." By way of reconciling this discrepancy desperate efforts are made to uphold the astonishing theory that the oinos of the gospel was not fermented wine, but syrup. The ruler of the feast at Cana, it seems, expressed his surprise that the best syrup had not been produced till the guests had well drunk; the accusers of Christ in calling him a winebibber meant only that he was a syrup drinker; it was on syrup that the Corinthians got drunk at the celebration of the Lord's supper; Paul advised his friends to take a little syrup for the stomach's sake, and the same apostle enjoined the church in electing deacons not to choose those who were given to excess in syrup! To such paltering with what every one educated enough to be a clergyman must know to be the truth we rather prefer the preacher who said boldly that if Christ were again to come on earth and persisted in celebrating the Eucharist with wine he would have to be excluded from his own church.—GOLDWIN SMITH, in Macmillan's Magazine.

THESE items are from the Guernsey Advertiser:

Sydney Smith told a story of Lady Cork being so moved by a charity sermon that she borrowed a guinea of him to put in the plate. But she forgot to put it in, and also to repay the money. Of a right reverend bishop he remarked, "He is so like Judas that I am quite converted to a belief in the apostolical succession."

In a small hamlet in the south of England, where old customs were kept up, it was usual for the minister never to commence the sermon until the arrival of the squire. On a certain Sunday a new minister preached, and, not knowing the rule, commenced. "When the wicked man—" He was suddenly interrupted by the clerk springing up and exclaiming, "Please, sir, he has not come yet."

The curate of a Devonshire village has been distinguishing himself in a novel way. He was called in to privately baptize a child, which was unhappily illegitimate. On learning the fact, this nineteenth century pharisee would not pollute his delicate fingers by touching such a tainted piece of humanity but called for a spoon, and therewith poured the consecrated water upon the child as it lay in its cradle. He then poured the water away and threw the basin on the stones to break it, but as it proved too tough he attacked it with a broom, and so succeeded in smashing it.

THE SUMMER AND FALL CAMPAIGN.

S. P. Putnam has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Silverton.....Or.,	June 22, 23,	Pomeroy ..W. T.,	Aug.....26,
Stayton....."	" 24,	La Grange,Or....	Aug.....29,
Mills City....."	" 25, 26,	Union.....Or.	".....30,
Turner....."	" 27,	Baker City,"	Sept.....1,
Eola....."	" 28,	Prairie City, Or, and vicinity,	Sept.
Canby....."	" 29, 30	4, 5, 6, 7, 8,
Molalla....."	July....3, 4,	Fox Valley.....Or.,	Sept. 9, 10,
Kalama.....W. T.,	" 6, 7,	Long Creek....."	" 11, 12,
Starks Point, W. T., and vicinity,	July 9, 10, 11, 12, 13,	Monument....."	" 14, 15,
Astoria.....Or.,	July ... 14,	Hay Stack....."	" 16, 17,
Stella.....W. T.,	" 15, 16, 17,	Lone Rock....."	" 18,
Oswego.....Or.,	" 18, 19,	Fossil....."	" 19, 20,
Arnold's Grove.."	" 20, 21,	Hillsboro, Or.,	Sept., 25, 26, 27, 28,
Coos county, Or.,	July 22 to Aug. 4,	North Yamhill...Or.,	Sept.....29,
Coburg....."	Aug.....7, 8,	Forest Grove...."	".....30,
Lebanon....."	".....9,	Talent, Or., and vicinity	Oct. 3, 4, 5,
Olympia.....W. T.,	".....11, 12,	6, 7,
Buckley...W. T.,	".....13, 14,	Linkville.....Or.,	Oct. 11, 12, 13,
Davenport, "	".....17, 18,	Sacramento.....Cal.,	Oct. 20,
Cheney..."	".....19,	San Francisco....."	" 27,
Rosalia..."	".....20,	Los Angeles and vicinity	the month
Sprague.."	".....21,	of November,
Pasco....."	".....22,	San Diego and vicinity	the month of
Dayton....W. T.,	Aug....24, 25,	December.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Testimonial.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Find $2 to apply on my subscription. I like the paper; more than that, I just admire it and hope I shall be able to take it as long as I live.
Yours truly,
Santa Barbara. MRS. L. P. LANGLEY.

Another Friend.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Put my name in your list of friends to FREETHOUGHT. I will give $5 each year for the support of the paper for five years, provided I live that long.

The Liberals of this coast ought not to claim for themselves much liberality if the only paper they have should be allowed to die for the lack of support.
San Jose. MRS. CHRIS SCHOFIELD.

Needed In the East.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed you will find $2 for one year's subscription to your paper, which I think is the best I have yet read. It is with pleasure that I read of the progress you Liberals are making in the West. Your paper is just what we need here in the East—a paper that is an enemy to superstition and a friend to humanity. I shall do all that I can to support it.
Norfolk, Conn. CHAS. W. RENZ.

A Little Token.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have a moment's time this, the Lord's day, to send you a little token [$5] of my appreciation. The books were received and a few distributed. I am charmed with your paper. There is an appearance of business about it. It is not filled with the quarrels of old women and sore-headed men. I want something new. Organization and power is what I want to see—some institution whereby Infidels who die and have money to bequeath may be assured it will be properly handled.
Babylon, N. Y. Yours truly,
P. H. FOSTER.

Our Fair Young Ally.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I send you herewith $2 for another new subscriber. I am doing all I can to increase your subscription list, and sincerely hope that all other Liberals on the Pacific coast are doing the same. I wish I could join your noble list of $20 contributors. I am not able to, but I assure you that my sympathies are with you.

As I happen to have both the books that you offer as premiums for one subscriber, I will inclose $1.50 for a small sized Freethought Badge-pin, and you can let my premium (50 cents) go to pay the balance due on the pin.

With best wishes for the success of FREETHOUGHT, I remain yours most respectfully, Oswego, Or. ELVA DAVIDSON.

Jones on Moral Questions.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Rev. Sam Jones has departed from your midst, and as he pronounced his work their good, the general wish must be that it remain as he left it, in which case he might well be grateful to the good powers that inspired and sustained his efforts. He claimed to have converted ten thousand souls to ways of virtue; but he said in his last address that "there are some church members so good that they are good for nothing," in which saying there is a great deal. Now, if those ten thousand converts should turn out to be such passive Christians, they had far better remained in their former state, wherein their active wickedness was a perpetual inspiration to actively-disposed Christians to uplift their erring fellow-mortals. Mr. Jones said, too, that "no living man had any right to an opinion on a moral question." In that case, what would become of morality? If the statement be true, then we have equally no right to an opinion on an immoral question. Opinion of a thing is what sanctions or condemns it; it is either right, or it is not right, and if the public dare not say which, who is responsible for its results and consequences? Mr.

Jones's utterances are suited to the thoughtless sinner, but they cannot all be reasoned upon without injuring their logic. Minds that can be alarmed are not going to examine very closely the thing that causes their fear if it relates to their future state of being. When we become thoroughly civilized we shall not play upon the superstition of men to win their bodies to right living; we will dissipate ignorance and sin by enlightening the understanding and assisting reason. M. PULSFIER.
San Jose, Cal.

It Will Bloom in the Spring.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed find $2 for the renewal of my subscription to FREETHOUGHT. I will promise to send $10 additional to my subscription next spring when I renew. At present this part of the state is suffering from a reaction caused by the recent craze for wildcat town lots, and it is difficult to sell any kind of farm produce at a profit. Everything is down to bed-rock prices. I read your statement of the financial condition of FREETHOUGHT. I admire the manly independence of your words when you say "FREETHOUGHT is not a beggar." Of course not, and there is no call for you to work for nothing. If there is a change here for the better (in business), I will do more than I said above. I admire FREETHOUGHT and shall always renew my subscription promptly.
El Monte. Yours truly,
A. H. HOYT.

A Life Sub.

To the Editors of Freethought:

A copy of FREETHOUGHT has arrived. Inclosed find $3, for which send me your paper one year, and one each of Kemsburg's pamphlets.

I would like to be one of the number to give you from five to twenty dollars per year, but at the present time I am unable to do so and trust you will take the will for the deed. Like many others in St. Paul, I invested heavily in real estate, and now I can lie awake nights and hear the interest grow. I see by the labels that several night-blooming mortgages that I planted last July are about ready to pick. They are as healthy and robust as any I have seen this year, and look as though they might go on several years longer carrying the same large, dark-green wad of interest they have been wearing in the past.

I am very much pleased with FREETHOUGHT, and hope he will continue to grow right along until he is able to take care of himself and parents. You may count on me for a life subscriber; and I will help you all I possibly can—if "my ship comes in." Fraternally,
St. Paul, Minn. JAS. L. MCKELVEY.

The Hornitos Priest.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I notice the statement in a late number of FREETHOUGHT that "there is only one church in Hornitos, the Catholic, and that has an average attendance of four, including women and children." I am sorry to say it is too true. Don't misunderstand me, please. I mean it is too true that we have a church conducted on the so-called Catholic plan, and I am sorry that even four should attend it. Were the church closed it would be far better for the morals of our little town. Let me explain. A few years ago the attendance was very large. A reverend holy scamp officiating in it had the wisdom of the snake. He took people by their foibles. He introduced music. A bevy of our most respectable young ladies, mistaking his intentions, lent their fresh young voices and musical talent to what they thought a good cause, regardless of any denomination. Soft strains of delicious melodies weekly filled the little church and it was not large enough to accommodate all. All of a sudden the reverend scamp found it necessary to emigrate. Ugly rumors as to his "morals" were spread over the country, and the general feeling was decidedly adverse to him.

His successor is nobly supporting the precepts of the Roman Catholic church: Per fas et nefas—"Tell a lie to find the truth," "Do as I say and not as I do," etc. He made his debut by insulting women, trying to scare money out of his congregation by selling property not his, i.e., lots in a public grave yard, and when refused payment and ordered out of doors, he threatened to desecrate a grave by exhuming bodies! A priest who preaches charity, poverty, abnegation, and brotherly love, and goes to church with a revolver stuck in his hip pocket, insults women, and refuses burial to dead Christians, is a fit representative of a God who threatens to chuck a fellow into eternal fire for the unheard-of crime of not receiving the sacrament of baptism—instituted by whom? By a renegade Jew who improved upon a religion by baptizing the founder of it.

No wonder the congregation is limited to four. When the Mexican people, the most fanatical nation on earth, desert their church, there must be something rotten in its principles.

HENRY M. DAIGLE.

Hornitos, Cal.

The Watchword.

To the Editors of Freethought:

When Mr. Putnam was lecturing here at Boulder Creek, I told him that some of these times I would send in $5 for the benefit of FREETHOUGHT and for the crushing of organized superstition. Now $5 is only one crusher, if I was able I would send in more than one, but I am in hopes that every well-wisher of liberty will send in at least "one crusher," and show the world that ignorance and superstition can be driven from the field. It is strange that a bigot will sacrifice more of his wealth to defend his prison cell than a Freethinker will to defend his freedom, but, nevertheless, such is the case. If the Liberals of the United States would rally, and each one would sacrifice as many nickels for the cause of Freethought as each bigot sacrifices for the cause of bigotry, they would be astonished at the result. This would break the chains of thousands of unfortunate slaves, and drive idle impudence into consternation.

To tell an editor of a Liberal paper to have courage in his good work accomplishes as much as if a steam-engine was told to have courage in its good work. It needs fuel, not flattery, and the same holds good for the Liberal editor. For this reason I would say to the Liberals of this coast: Rally to the support of FREETHOUGHT, and make it the watchword and standard of glory.

J. D. KAUFMAN.

Boulder Creek, Cal.

Once More on the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Bidding all friends adieu in San Francisco, May 28, I took the iron trail for a more congenial climate than that of California during the hot summer months, and sped away for the cool forests and bays of Oregon and Puget Sound.

The first day out from Sacramento I noticed in the seat in front of mine a heavenly-looking man and woman, with far-away dreamy looks in their eyes, and very pale faces. The man had long, curly hair, while the woman's was short. Their dress was also peculiar, the woman's being similar to a Catholic nun's; the male biped wore a long duster coming nearly to the ground. As the "cut of their jib" was the way we used to hear "them Spiritualists" rated, viz., "short-haired women and long-haired men," I was about to "scrape acquaintance" with them, when suddenly the train came to a halt, and "Upper Soda Springs" was called out. The place lies close to the foot of Mt. Shasta, and in less than one minute the train was emptied, and its human freight was standing around a very large fountain where the sparkling soda water boiled up from the earth. Nearly all had their tin cups or mugs, and were dipping and drinking as if it was the last chance of getting "the waters of life." There are no man-made, poisonous syrups here, but the genuine compound from nature's laboratory, far transcending in flavor and healthfulness the swill of the drug stores. This spring water is quite sweet, and after drinking, the carbonated gas, or whatever it may be, comes up from the stomach, causing the olfactories to tingle with the effervescence. "All aboard!" shouts the ticket puncher, and with a cupful apiece we all take our seats again in the hot and dusty cars. Directly "twenty minutes for dinner" is called out, and we stop at Sissons, nearly 3000 feet above the sea. Here we are all surrounded by the snow banks of the grand old Shasta peaks, the highest being near 15,000 feet, and apparently one immense mountain of snow. The air was so clear that the snow on all sides seemed to be but a few rods away, yet long miles intervened between us and "nature's winding sheet" around these glorious peaks. This is one of the grandest rides on the continent in the hot days, first up the long, winding canyon of the Sacramento river, then a draught at the basin of the good old Mother Nature for her ice-cold soda, then through the great forests of redwood and fir as we climb up the base of Shasta, and last into the embrace of her eternal snows. While others were filling up "with the hash of mortals," your humble correspondent was feasting at the table of the gods, and drinking in inspiration from the crags and peaks and drifts of Shasta. We are right in the mighty forest. But a few acres have been cleared, but quite a town has sprung up, and 75 cents pays for a good dinner. But amidst all this natural beauty and grandeur, which needs a poet's pen dipped in the fire of inspiration to describe it properly, I heard some strains of "Oh, How I Love Jesus, Bless his Holy Name," and going to the platform of the rear car, there I found my heavenly-looking, long and short-haired friends holding a camp-meeting, first singing some thread-bare hymn, then an urgent exhortation to come to the Lord and be washed. None seemed to want to be washed, for all kept in the background, but the secret was out. My quondam friends were not mediums for angels to come back through and make their earthly racket, but were Salvation Army folks, bent on plunging us all into the pool of blood drawn from "Immanuel's veins." However, nobody was ready for the crimson bath. The old iron horse snorted; the man that feels best when he makes the passenger feel the worst shouted again in his peculiar sweet and melodious voice, "Get aboard," and we were soon over the line in Oregon.

My first appointment for lecture was at Talent in Rogue River valley. I found here quite a large organization of Liberals and Spiritualists, with a fine large hall built and paid for and dedicated, as its name over the door (U. M. L. Hall) indicated, to universal mental liberty. I gave three lectures here in this fine hall for Freethought, and the house was full each time. I met here my radical Spiritual friends, Mr. William Breese and wife and sister, Miss Rossette Waters, Mr. Terrell, wife, and daughters, Mr. Dean, and many others whose names I cannot now recall, but all noble specimens of Freethought and modern Liberalism. Talent is one of the few oases the itinerant lecturer finds as he travels in the desert of superstition and ignorance.

Mr. Breese is one of nature's noblemen, and very enthusiastic upon Spiritualism, the land and labor problem, the marriage question, etc. His wife and sister are equally as great workers for the good time coming, and speak right out their principles, hit or miss; are both fine mediums with no fraud attached, and yet are not Spiritualists, thinking the phenomena may be yet all explained by the laws of psychology, magnetism, etc. They have a beautiful and happy home, to which they make all tired and weary lecturers welcome. I found Dr. Schlesinger of the Carrier Dove here, but just leaving. Mrs. Waisbrooker of Foundation Principles was here for a month some time ago. Professor Bell will be here soon, and later S. P. Putnam.

My last day at Talent was spent away up in the mountains and giant trees of an Oregon forest, my friends having gotten up a little ride and picnic for my benefit, and away up nearly to the clouds, among the gushing springs and mighty boulders, we had an oyster stew and a strawberry festival with plenty of choice music. The violin and cornet made music fit for the spheres, while the echoes from the crags and mountain sides took up the glad refrain. As the shades of evening drew on, our camp-fires were put out, both hind wheels of our wagon locked, and we descended once more to the "haunts of men," tired out with our rambles in the upper air.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

BOOKS.

We have for sale at this office, among other works:

"Yone Santo." 50 cents.

"John Ward, Preacher." 50 cents.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible." 15 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Annual" for 1889. 25 cents.

"Liberty and Morality," by W. S. Bell. 15 cents.

"The System of Nature," by Baron D'Holbach. $2.

"Robert Elsmere," by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Price, 50 cents.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

Judge Maguire's "Ireland and the Pope," a history of papal intrigues against Irish liberty. Price, 50 cents.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—
"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—
ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS
(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to
L. K. WASHBURN,
Revere, Mass.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm " " Diamond* 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy.
Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.
12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

The Theological Cauldron.

A PARODY ON ACT IV, SCENE I, "MACBETH."
Dramatis Personæ: Three demons of darkness.—The Devil's Grandmother.

SCENE: The infernal regions; in the middle a boiling cauldron.—Thunder.—Enter three demons of darkness.

FIRST DEMON: Thrice old Balaam's ass hath brayed,

SECOND DEMON: Thrice and once the serpent hissed,

THIRD DEMON: Satan yells: 'Tis time, 'tis time; FIRST DEMON: Round about the cauldron go.

In the poisoned entrails throw,
Great Jehovah's wrathful froth—
Which will do to start our broth—

Blood of Jesus, half a gill,
Certain cure for every ill;

Kidneys of the holy ghost,
Scamp who (c)harm'd St. Mary most.

All the triune godhead's rot
Boil thou first i' the charmed pot;

ALL: Double, double toil and trouble,
Fire burn and cauldron bubble.

SECOND DEMON: Adam's navel, Eva's tongue,
Done with lectures short and long;

Little skunk from Noah's ark,
Lice from Egypt caught i' the dark;

Brimstone from Gomorrah's plain,
Fingers of the first-born slain,

Lump of salt from Lot's wife's arm
Adds perfection to our charm;

Quail and manna, tempting, sweet,
Which the Jews refused to eat;

Skull of Moses, fairly sound,
Which Old Nick at last has found;

Tears of wretched Job, laid low,
Which Mephisto caused to flow;

Blubber cut from Jonah's whale,
And from Abraham's ram, the tail;

For a charm of powerful trouble
Like a hellbroth boil and bubble.

ALL: Double, double toil and trouble,
Fire burn and cauldron bubble.

THIRD DEMON: Tripe from stomachs of the
Which we drove into the brine, [swine]

Root of fig-tree, bare and bad,
Cursed by Christ when he was mad;

Dried up fish-tail from the place
Where five thousand once said grace;

Murderer's scalp, who, tired of vice,
Went with Christ to paradise;

Hand that wrote upon the wall,
And the Duke of Alva's gall;

Crooked nose of wandering Jew,
Spittle of the "chosen few,"

Frog and toad from Irish bog,
Which St. Patrick sent agog;

Bladder of St. Antony,
Toes of popes kissed reverently,

Bits o' skin from monk and nun
Who on earth had lots of fun—

Fan away the awful smell
With a wing of Gabriel—

Add thereto a deacon's chawdron
For the ingredients of our cauldron.

ALL: Double, double toil and trouble,
Fire burn and cauldron bubble.

SECOND DEMON: Cool it now with Calvin's
Then the charm is firm and good. [blood,

[Enter the Devil's Grandmother, speaking to the three demons.]

Well, you are gentlemen, every inch of it,
Though born and bred i' the brimstone pit;

My grandson wished me to come and see
'Bout this theological potpourri.

Your master, indeed, has his hands quite full,
For business is brisk, though it never was dull;

Just now he is gaining many recruits
From theological institutes,

As well as in churches of every color—
Thanks to dear Darwin and the almighty dollar.

My blessings upon you! And now, my boys,
After our labors come pleasures and joys,

So now about the cauldron sing,

Like elves and fairies, in a ring
Enchanting all that you put in.

Music and a song: "Black spirits and white," etc. The Demons dance and then vanish with the Devil's Grandmother. H. L. HAELEKE.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street.

Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast. G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.
The Present and the Future

Republic of North America
BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—THE NEW AMERICAN PARTY,
A Criticism by "Jefferson."

Price, 10 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.
Price $1. Address, Putnam & Macdonald

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc, worth $35. for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

est Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see other column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.'"

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular, readable, because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible; instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" media valuable to invalids, knowing new means by which they may be cured; approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati; thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men; everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 36 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE, of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 } Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 } difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Temperance and Prohibition, THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Cloth, 75 cts.

Address this office

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

Miners and Millmen Attention!

BEHM'SCentrifugal Pulverizer,

Guarantees to work One Ton

per hour of the Hardest

Quartz to a 40-Screen.

—ADDRESS;—

H. W. WALKER,

ASSAYER,

109 Montgomery Block, San Francisco

In replying to this advertisement, mention Freethought.

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counselor," getting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY. Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press; but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right.

Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors. DR. FELLOWS.

Wm. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor.

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY.

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

TELEPHONE No. 656

P. O. CHILSTROM,

(Rogers & Chilstrom.)

ATTORNEY AT LAW,

Commercial Business and Collections a Specialty.

Office, 415 Montgomery St., Rooms 9, 10 & 11,
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.
N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton, Revine on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology.
Price, 50 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

USINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
RESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
ANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application.

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

F. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,

NURSEYRMEN.

Catalogs for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit
and Ornamental Trees and Vines.
Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.
Special Attention Given to Planting
and Caring of Orchards
and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA.

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary
Jones, or The Infidel Teacher 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,

Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

Woman's Lot.

Flossie is 6 years old. "Mamma," she asked one day, "if I get married will I have to have a husband like pa?"

"Yes," replied the mother with an amused smile.

"And if I don't get married will I have to be an old maid like Aunt Kate?"

"Yes."

"Mamma"—after a pause—"it's a tough world for us women, ain't it?"

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science.
The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors
of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social,
and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months.
50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History, of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes, by Guizot, Wenck, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Didot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"The Glory of Infidelity" was one of the poet-secretary's happiest efforts, and ranks with the best speeches of the Congress.—New York Truth Seeker.

Putnam's "Glory of Infidelity" is one of the ablest defenses of Freethought to which I have ever listened.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

The lecture was "The Glory of Infidelity." No man or woman could hear it without being inspired by the heroic Infidel manhood and womanhood coming down to us as a rich inheritance through the dreary ages of the past, and pointing with glorious hope to the "New Heaven and Earth."

J. F. BECK.

I believe I express the unanimous sentiment of all when I say that for a lecture of its character, Mr. Putnam has never been surpassed and seldom equaled on our platform—a platform famous for the talent it affords. "The Glory of Infidelity" fairly bristles with good things, and each sentence is an epigrammatic Secular sermon.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary American Secular Union.

—PRICE 10 CENTS.—

Address PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

The Mystery Solved.

"What is that, mother—that curious thing
Ambling the streets with a languid swing;
With a spiketail coat, a fancy vest,
An eye-glass dangling on its breast;
With dog-skin gloves and funny hat
And such poor, thin legs and a stomach flat?
Eerie and weird it looks to me.
Oh, mother, what can the creature be?"

"Oh, hush, child, hush! 'tis no goblin rude—
'Tis only a harmless stage-door dude."

"But what is a dude, oh, mother, dear?
How did they make a thing so queer?
Did it grow while we were fast asleep
Like the little billygoats or the sheep?
Has Barnum got one in his great show?
When it rains or snows where does a dude go?
It walks like a chicken—can it fly?
Will you tell me about it by-and-bye?"

"There's little to tell my child; I think It's Darwin's original Missing Link."

—To-Day.

TEACHER—"Name some of the most important things existing to-day which were unknown one hundred years ago."
Tommy—"Us."

ANGRY subscriber to editor—I'm mad all the way through, an' I want my paper stopped." "Yes, sir, do you want to pay what you owe?" "No; I ain't mad enough for that."

THE clergyman in an English town, having published the banns of matrimony between two persons, was followed by the clerk reading the hymn beginning with these words: "Mistaken souls who dream of heaven."

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

Prometheus. A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald
504 Kearny st. San Francisco

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 27.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 6, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JULY 6, 1889.

OREGON.—ANOTHER STATE SECULAR UNION ORGANIZED.

Pursuant to the call of the Silverton Secular Union, the Liberals met in State Convention at Silverton, Saturday morning, June 22. C. Beal, of Portland, was elected temporary president, and R. D. Allen, of Silverton, temporary secretary. The following committee were appointed:

Committee on Organization: B. F. Underwood; J. H. Olds, of Lafayette; Mrs. Carrie Fitzgerald, of Silverton; B. F. Hyland, of Corvallis.

Committee on Resolutions: Samuel P. Putnam; R. D. Allen, of Silverton; J. K. Sears, of McCoy.

Committee on Nominations: J. W. McClure, of Silverton; J. T. Ford, of Independence; H. Arnold, of Shedd.

Committee on Finance: L. Ames, of Silverton; Robert Scott, of Scott's Mills; Mrs. J. H. Olds, of Lafayette.

In connection with the preliminary organization was celebrated the second anniversary of the Silverton Secular Union, organized June 22, 1887.

An address was delivered Saturday morning by Samuel P. Putnam on "Liberty and Authority." Saturday afternoon B. F. Underwood spoke on "The Absolute Importance of the Separation of Church and State." The Silverton Secular Choir and the Silverton Trombone Band furnished music for the occasion. A large number were present, and between the morning and afternoon exercises there was a basket-picnic in the grove.

In the evening there was a sociable at the hall, under the auspices of the Silverton Union, which was a gratifying success.

Sunday morning the Convention was called together at the hall.

The Committee on Organization reported the following articles of organization, which were unanimously adopted:

CONSTITUTION OF THE OREGON STATE SECULAR UNION.

PREAMBLE.

Whereas, The Constitution of the United States, from beginning to end, in spirit and in letter, is framed in accordance with the principle of the total separation of church and state; and the Treaty with Tripoli, signed by George Washington as a part of the supreme law of the land, declares emphatically that "the government of the United States is not in any sense founded on the Christian religion;" and

Whereas, Notwithstanding these facts, the administration of the national government, and the administrations and constitutions of the several state governments, maintain numerous practical connections of the state with the church, thereby violating the spirit of the United States Constitution and the glorious traditions which dedicate this country exclusively to the natural rights of man; and

Whereas, The welfare and peace of the republic, the equal religious rights and liberties of its citizens, and the most precious interests of civilization, alike require that all the political and educational institutions of the nation which are supported by taxation should be more faithfully conformed to the spirit of its fundamental law:

Therefore, We, the members of the Oregon State Secular Union, convened at Silverton, Or., June 23, 1889, hereby associate ourselves together as a permanent organization, and adopt the following

CONSTITUTION.

Name.

ARTICLE I.—The name of this association shall be "The Oregon State Secular Union."

General Object.

ARTICLE II.—The general object of the Union shall be to accomplish the total separation of church and state: to the end that equal rights in religion may be established, protected, and perpetuated.

Specific Objects.

ARTICLE III.—As means to the accomplishment of this general object, the specific objects of the Oregon State Secular Union shall be

1. To urge the adoption of such measures as are necessary to effect the complete secularization of the government in all its departments and institutions, state and national, and shall secure to every American citizen the full enjoyment of his opinions on the subject of religion, whatever they may be, without molestation, disability, or deprivation of any political or civil rights.

2. To advocate the equitable taxation of church property; the total discontinuance of religious instruction and worship in the public schools; the repeal of all laws enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath; the cessation of all appropriations of public funds for religious institutions or purposes of any kind; the abolition of state-paid chaplaincies; the substitution of simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury for the judicial oath; the non-appointment of religious fasts, festivals, and holidays by public authority; the practical establishment of simple morality and intelligence as the basis of purely secular government, and the adequate guarantee of public order and prosperity; and whatever other measures or principles may be necessary to the total separation of church and state.

3. To promote the formation and multiplication of local Secular Unions throughout the state in accordance with the provisions of this Constitution, in order to secure through state and municipal action the accomplishment of the various special reforms above enumerated.

4. To defend through the courts, by the combined efforts and means of the Liberals of the state, any citizen whose equal religious rights are denied, or who is oppressed, on account of any opinions he may have held or expressed on the subject of religion.

5. To promote, by all peaceable and orderly means, active propaganda of the great principles of religious liberty and equal rights, to encourage lectures and the circulation of literature advocating the principles of this organization.

6. In all other proper and practicable ways, to promote the final emancipation of the state from the control of the church, and to foster the development of that natural intelligence and morality which constitute the necessary and all-sufficient basis of secular government.

Membership.

ARTICLE IV.—Any person in sympathy with objects of this organiza tion may become a member by signing the Constitution. Any person who shall pay twenty-five dollars or more into the treasury shall be entitled to a certificate as a life member. All the persons present as members at the Convention at which this Constitution was adopted are hereby declared permanent or charter-members of the Oregon State Secular Union.

Annual Congress.

ARTICLE V.—The Annual Congress of the Oregon State Secular Union shall be held at such time and place and with such sessions as the Board of Directors may announce; and public notice of the Congress shall be given at least one month previously. Conventions of the Oregon State Secular Union may be held at such places and times as the board of directors shall appoint. All charter-members and life-members of the organization shall be entitled to seats and votes in the Annual Congress.

Officers.

ARTICLE VI.—The officers of this organization shall be a president, four or more vice presidents, a secretary and assistant secretary, a treasurer, a board of directors, an executive committee, and a finance committee. All these officers shall be elected at the annual Congress, and shall hold their offices for one year, or until others are chosen in their stead. The board of directors shall have power to fill any office of the Union that may be left or may become vacant before the meeting of the Annual Congress succeeding their own election.

President.

ARTICLE VII.—The president's duty shall be to preside at the Annual Congress and other Conventions of the Union, and at the meetings of the board of directors; and to countersign all orders upon the treasury duly drawn by the secretary.

Secretaries.

ARTICLE VIII.—The secretary's duty shall be to keep the records, complete lists of members, and other papers of the Union, and also of the board of directors; to report promptly to the board of directors all facts communicated to him by the secretaries of local Unions, and to prepare a careful condensation of the same for the Annual Congress; and to conduct such correspondence as usually pertains to his office. It shall be the duty of the assistant secretary to assist in this work under the secretary's direction.

Treasurer.

ARTICLE IX.—The treasurer, after giving security satisfactory to the board of directors, shall receive and hold all funds of the Union, subject to orders duly drawn by the secretary and countersigned by the president. He shall report the state of the finances of the Union at every Annual Congress, and oftener if required by the board of directors or finance committee; and upon the election of a successor he shall deliver to him all the property of the Union that he may hold.

Board of Directors.

ARTICLE X.—The president, secretary, treasurer, chairman of the executive committee, and chairman of the finance committee, shall constitute the board of directors, which shall be intrusted with the general management and control of the affairs of the Union from year to year. They shall make a full report of their doings on the first day of each Annual Congress. All appropriations from the treasury shall be by vote of the board of directors.

Finance Committee.

ARTICLE XI.—The finance committee shall be composed of three members, elected by the Annual Congress. It shall be their duty to devise ways and means for raising such funds as may be needed for the successful prosecution of the work of the Union, and to carry them into execution with the help of the board of directors.

The chairman of the finance committee shall be elected as such by the Annual Congress, and shall be ex-officio a member of the board of directors.

Amendments.

ARTICLE XII.—Amendments to this Constitution may be made at any Annual Congress of the Union by a three-fourths vote of the qualified members present. But no amendment shall be made, unless the proposed amendment shall have been published together with the required public notice of the Annual Congress which is to act upon it.

The only difference in regard to the articles of organization was as to whether there should be a membership fee or not. It was decided that there should be no fee or assessments, but that the funds of the organization should be raised by voluntary contributions. Mr. L. Ames, of Silverton, and Mr. J. W. Tiffany, of Salem, announced their intention of becoming life members, and without doubt others will follow their generous example.

REPORT OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE.

L. Ames, chairman of Finance Committee, reported that while the Silverton Secular Union was ready to pay all the expenses of the Convention the books were open for the names of friends who desired to aid, and Mrs. J. H. Olds was appointed to receive subscriptions. The report was adopted and cordially responded to, and without further appeal the necessary funds were raised to pay the expenses of the Convention.

The business session was adjourned, to meet in the afternoon at the grove.

Samuel P. Putnam then delivered an address on "The Church and the Centenary."

Music by the Silverton Secular Union Choir.

At the business meetings of the Convention, Sunday afternoon and evening, the following Board of Officers were unanimously elected:

C. Beal, of Portland, President.

VICE-PRESIDENTS:

J. Henry Schroeder, of Arago; B. F. Hyland, of Corvallis, J. D. Garfield, of Marshfield; H. Arnold, of Shedd; J. T. Ford, of Independence; W. J. Dean, of Talent; Moses Hurd, of Newport; John Settle, of Lebanon; F. S. Matteson, of Aumsville; W. J. Booth, of McMinnville; B. W. Dunn, of Lafayette; H. B. Nicholas, of Portland; H. B. Holland, of Salem; J. C. Snodgrass, of Eugene; A. K. Olds, of McMinnville; Mrs. Carrie Fitzgerald, of Silverton; Wm. Sims, of Mills City; G. Trullinger, of Union Mills; O. B. Vose, of Ranier; H. McElsander, Eagle Creek; Wm. H. Breese, of Talent; P. Britt, of Jacksonville; O. Coolidge, of Ashland; W. F. Benjamin, of Roseburg; Jas. Laird, of Dora; Judge Low, of Bandon; T. J. McClary, of Stayton; Miss Elva Davidson, of Oswego; Wm. Chance, of Astoria; Mrs. Carrie E. Haight, of East Portland; Jas. Cleaver, of Prairie City; Mr. Schrum, of Burnt Ranch; J. L. Baisley, of Baker City; Judge Schofield, of Baker City; R. D. Allen, of Silverton; Judge E. C. Brainard, of Union; Robert Scott, of Scott's Mills; Mrs. S. C. Todd, of Forest Grove; W. C. Clow, of Hillsboro; F. Hauswirth, of North Yamhill; G. W. Tiffany, of Salem; Mrs. Laura Bennett, of Corvallis; Wright Forshay, of Silverton; Mrs. H. D. Mount, of Silverton; Hon. R. C. Geer, of Silverton.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Lee Laughlin, of North Yamhill, Chairman; Reuben Wright, of Molalla; B. W. Huffman, of La Grande; J. W. McClure, of Silverton; J. H. Olds, of Lafayette.

FINANCE COMMITTEE.

L. Ames, of Silverton, Treasurer; O. Jeldness, of Portland; Mrs. M. J. Olds, of McMinnville.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

1. Resolved, That all American citizens, whether orthodox or heterodox, Christian or non-Christian, possess an equal natural right to hold, to utter, and by all orderly and peaceable means to propagate their private religious opinions; that they all possess an equal right not to be taxed directly or indirectly for the support of religious opinions they do not hold, of religious societies of which they are not members, or of religious services they do not personally approve; that they all possess an equal right to employ their time, and the whole of it, as they judge fit, just so long as they commit no positive trespass on the equal rights of others; that they all possess an equal right to enjoy for seven days in the week all public libraries, art galleries, museums, parks, gardens, or other institutions and facilities for the support of which they are taxed—and not to be debarred from such enjoyment on Sunday because a part of the people do not choose to avail themselves of these things on that day; in fine, that they have an equal right to live under a government which shall respect all men's private religion, but favor no man's.

2. Resolved, That so long as the church insists on retaining its present political privileges in violation of justice, liberty, and equal rights, it is guilty of oppression, sets an example of public unrighteousness, renders its social influence immoral to that extent, and thus helps to demoralize the community at large.

3. Resolved, That the principle of state secularization means that the free state has its own sufficient basis in the laws and needs of human nature, totally independent of the church; that this basis is the social necessity of maintaining equal rights in religion, genuine morality in politics, and educated intelligence in all the citizens, and that this object is defeated by permitting the church, or any other organization, to usurp its own authority in any degree.

4. Resolved, That we affirm the immense moral importance of the principles of state secularization, and the moral obligation of all good citizens, irrespective of their religious creeds, to join heartily in the movement to carry it more consistently into practice.

5. Resolved, That the Secular Union movement has nothing whatever to do with the Christian religion as such, either to favor or oppose it; that it is directed simply against certain glaring political usurpations of the church; certain actual and greivous interferences, by it, with the state; that the purpose of this movement is eminently positive, defensive, and constructive, not negative, aggressive, or destructive, since it only seeks to carry out more faithfully the principle of divorce between church and state on which the Constitution was founded, and thus fulfil Washington's idea of a purely Secular state.

6. Resolved, That the Bible, being regarded as a book of sacred character and of religious authority by only a part of the people, is to all intents and purposes a sectarian book: and we protest against the permission of its use in the public schools on pretense of its being a non-sectarian book, as a manifest evasion of the truth and a wilful disregard of the equal religious rights of the people.

7. Resolved, That we would most scrupulously respect the right of church-goers to enjoy their Sunday worship unmolested and undisturbed, and we ask them to respect the equal right of those who do not choose to join them, to enjoy their own Sunday in equal freedom.

8. Resolved, That for the purpose of popular education in the principles of state secularization, it is urged that meetings be held, wherever possible, to promote this object: that good literature in regard to the subject be circulated, and that, when practicable, arrangements be made for lecturers competent to expound and defend the principles of state secularization. Furthermore, it is recommended that an effort be made to sustain in this state a permanent lecturer to speak wherever meetings may be called, in favor of the objects of the Oregon State Secular Union.

9. Resolved, That all those journals that are devoted, or that give prominence to the advocacy of the total separation of church and state are entitled to the thanks of this Union, and that the support of all such journals is earnestly requested and urged as a means of promoting state secularization.

10. Resolved, That no funds of this Union shall be devoted to the propagation of any mere religious belief or non-belief, or to any object except that for which the Union is formed, namely, the secularization of the state—or the separation of church and state.

11. Resolved, That the board of directors be instructed to arrange for an annual convention, to be held in Portland during the coming fall or winter, and are authorized to use the funds of the Union to secure the use of available hall and the service of competent speakers, and to advertise widely the meeting and its objects, and thereby arouse a general interest in the subject.

12. Resolved, That the Liberals of the state of Oregon be earnestly requested to raise the sum of three hundred dollars to defray the expenses of the next Annual Convention, to be held at Portland.

The directors, by vote of the Convention, were also authorized to purchase and distribute one thousand copies of FREETHOUGHT containing the report of this Convention. It is urged upon every Liberal of Oregon who receives a copy of this report, to cut out the Constitution and secure as many signatures to it as possible, and forward the same to C. Beal, president, Portland, or J. K. Sears, secretary, McCoy.

In regard to life memberships, it is suggested by L. Ames, chairman of the finance committee, that the payment of the $25 be made by installments of $5 each. This course has been adopted by the national organization and will undoubtedly be adopted by the Oregon Union. All who pay $5 or more to the $300 fund for the Portland convention will be credited with that amount and, when the $25 is paid, will receive a certificate of life membership. It is hoped by this arrangement that at least one hundred Liberals of Oregon will be enrolled for life membership before the meeting of the Portland Convention.

The Convention throughout was harmonious. A great step has been made in advance. The presence of Liberals from abroad evinces general and increasing interest. Under the auspices of the Silverton Secular Union B. F. Underwood delivered, on Sunday afternoon, an address on "The Relations of State Secularization to the History and Progress of the American Republic."

On Sunday evening, after the business of the Convention was completed, and it was adjourned to meet at Portland, Mr. Underwood and Mr. Putnam made addresses on the practical work of Secularism. Mr. Underwood referred to the fact of his being in the state nineteen years ago, and read a letter sent by a friend to the Boston Investigator detailing the situation of affairs. Contrasting that with the present it was seen that there had been a wonderful advance in the Liberal cause, and, although there was still a great work to be done, and bigotry was firmly entrenched, the promise of final success was never brighter than at this moment.

The thanks of the Union and of the Convention are due to the Silverton Trombone Band, and to the Secular Union Choir, for the excellent music furnished at all the meetings.

Pres. J. W. McClure gave the benediction, and the Convention and Anniversary closed with happy memories and increasing hopes.

R. D. ALLEN,

Sec. S. S. U. and Temporary Secretary of the Convention.

NEWS AND NOTES.

Glorious Mt. Shasta dawns upon the view in all variety of wonderful, sublime, and snowy altitudes, as the train goes curving along its mighty base. In the golden afternoon, the gorgeous cloudlands hovering over the vast heights, we climb and descend the Siskiyou into the sparkling Rogue River valley, stretching away in the splendor of harvest fields to the wild boundary of hills where waves the primeval forest. Another night and Willamette Valley, blooming with summer's wealth, enriches the morn. At Silverton there's music in the air, and from far and near the people gather, and the second anniversary of the Secular Union shows no diminution of interest and hope. In connection with this celebration is held the state convention of Oregon Liberals. The secretary's report will be found upon another page. In the morning an address was made on "Liberty and Authority." Then came a delightful basket picnic in the grove. There were very few Christians around this year and all signs of theological combat disappeared. The Secularists had fairly won the day and could enjoy in peace the fruits of their own perseverance. In the afternoon Mr. Underwood gave an excellent discourse on the importance of state secularization. It was an admirable treatment of the subject. In the evening there was a sociable and dance, and the Secular Pilgrim became involved in the mazy whirl. Sunday morning the articles of organization were adopted and the State Secular Union was launched, I believe, upon a successful voyage. I gave a lecture on "The Church and the Centenary." The meeting was at the grove in the afternoon. Mr. Underwood gave an interesting elucidation of the principles of political Secularism as illustrated in the growth of the republic, from the Revolution to the present time. Sunday evening there were addresses on the practical work of Secularism. Everything was bright and harmonious and both the anniversary and the convention have made a noble impulse for Freethought. Friend Nelson was with us, from Stark's Point, W. T., a stalwart representative from the other side of the Columbia river. I hope that many of our Washington friends will join in the convention to be held at Portland next fall.

There was a good number present from various parts of the state—enough to make the convention a representative gathering. Silverton, not being on the line of travel, could not afford facilities for a large gathering from the outside, but there could not have been a better place for the preliminary convention. The heart of Silverton would give a life of its own, whatever the attendance from abroad.

The forward look is now to Portland.

Monday morning, with friends of Silverton, I attend the funeral services of Mr. O. A. McConnell, conducted by B. F. Underwood. A large number of friends were present. Mr. McConnell has lived in this neighborhood—Butte Creek—for thirty years, a man of pronounced individuality, but respected by all. He never kept his Freethought views to himself. He suffered intensely for months before his death, and it came as a glad release. To him it was rest, indeed peace and joy.

The funeral services were impressive and beautiful, without prayer, without religion, but manly, human, natural.

Mr. McConnell was buried on his own farm, on a lofty mound, by a grove where the sunshine falls. If the spirit could look forth from this palace of rest, by sunlight and starlight, in dawn and evening, a sweet picture would greet the face of death—the valley, the hills, the beautiful woods. A noble couch this, for our heroic friend, who suffered as men seldom suffer from dread disease. Fall, sunlight, upon his grave with peaceful smile; let the songs linger in the overshadowing branches, while the flowers of love and memory grow upon the lofty tomb. Here death shall be forever hallowed by nature's sweetest ministry.

At noon we travel on to Marquamville, a little bit of a place hedged in by melancholy woods, and it does seem when you get there as if you were absolutely cut off from the rest of mankind. Only a dozen houses, a few acres of plain, and interminable forests can be seen. A lecture was to be given in the afternoon by Mr. Underwood. Our little party camped beneath the trees where the platform and benches were built for the occasion. Having eaten an early breakfast, and journeying a number of miles, it may be imagined that our appetites would put a premium upon any kind of eatables, and certainly a better dinner was never devoured beneath the broad canopy of heaven. The remains of sardine boxes will testify to the activity of the market.

After awhile quite a number gathered together to listen to the lecture on "The Truth of the Bible." About half the assembly were Christians. Hon. T. W. Davenport was chosen chairman, and made a very excellent address. Mr. Underwood's lecture was thoroughly appreciated. Some of the Christians, however, found it hard to digest.

Tuesday morning I journey to Waldo Hills, to the ranch of Mr. and Mrs. Blair Forward, where I spent the day, for it happened that Stayton and Mill City could not fill the programme, and so I could throw off the harness in happy contentment. I took dinner with Mrs. Colby, the "grandma" of the family, eighty-three years of age. She is from away down East, originally, and the dish of pork and beans was a Yankee dish indeed. I felt that Boston could only be a few miles away, and I fancied that Bunker-Hill monument was shining through the clump of trees. Mrs. Colby is of the Edwards family, and the blood of the arch-theologian is in her veins, but not a great deal of his gloomy sermons. She likes the Liberal lectures, but won't admit that she has yet given up the old faith. Her granddaughter, Miss Mary Forward, is altogether out of the ancestral creed, and does not hesitate to join the Secular Union. If Jonathan Edwards could look upon his sixth generation I do not think he would sleep very quietly. He would find that heresy was getting the better of his family theology. Farewell the theology, but welcome the descendants of this mighty old king of terror.

Thursday morning, "a southerly wind and a cloudy sky," between showers we journey. Forward march, to Turner. We arrive in time for the camp-meeting before dinner, and we accordingly endeavor to listen to an orthodox sermon. The preacher promised to be short as it was a cold day, but he spun his matter out so interminably that in order to have a hot dinner we were obliged to leave him somewhere about his sixteenthly or seventeenthly. The gist of his discourse was that people at the present day were getting altogether too smart to believe the gospel of Christ. There was so much truth in this that I was satisfied to hear no more.

I lectured in the afternoon, but only a few were out, though I had almost as large an audience as the preacher did at the camp-meeting.

I was going to lecture in the evening, but a terrible accident prevented—simply heart-rending in its horror, and it was impossible for me to lecture or for friends to listen, for two of our own number were the victims, Mr. and Mrs. H. B. White, aged 76 and 72, Liberals of the Spiritualist faith. They were with us at the afternoon lecture, kindly, ardent, interested in the work, and looking forward with pleasure to the evening meeting. On the way to this meeting their horse became frightened, leaped and overturned the carriage against the fence, and both Mr. and Mrs. White were hurled violently against it. Mr. White was terribly lacerated, but in spite of his awful injuries he hastened to the side of his insensible wife, and cried for help. Help soon came and they were borne to the hotel. Up to the time of writing Mrs. White has been unconscious, nearly twenty-four hours, and it is feared that she is dying of internal injuries. Mr. White has borne his sufferings with wonderful fortitude. A little while ago I said good-bye to him. I could not look upon his face. It was almost torn to pieces. It looks as if both were doomed to death—death sudden and terrible. It breaks the heart to think of it.

Yet barbaric Christians say this was a "special providence." This is what God did to prevent the Infidel lecture.

Next to loving and honoring our suffering friends, and giving them our heart-felt sympathy, is the luxury of hating a God like that.

This has been a strange week indeed, full of startling contrasts. The extremes of life, of joy and sorrow, have been reached, the rosy dawn, the midnight blackness. The very fountains of light have flowed by the face of despair. Life could not have been more beautiful, nor death more terrible, than I have witnessed in these few days. Noble thoughts and inspirations have come, the joy of human fellowship, the grandeur of what will make the world a paradise, and with these the infinite sadness of death, the awful tragedy that no word of man or God has ever made any the less crushing, and never will. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

TO THE OREGON LIBERALS.

Will every Oregon Liberal who receives this copy of FREETHOUGHT cut out the Constitution of the Oregon State Secular Union, paste it upon a sheet of paper, and secure as many signatures as possible in his neighborhood and forward to C. Beal, president, Portland, or to J. K. Sears, secretary, at McCoy? It is hoped that every Liberal in Oregon, and all who can in Washington Territory, will arrange to attend the great Convention in Portland on or about October 18, 19, and 20, during the Mechanic's Fair, when there will be half fare on the railroads, and other accommodations for the traveling public. This Convention will be of vast importance to the future work of Secularism in the Northwest. Will not every Oregon Liberal also send his contribution at once to the fund for the expenses of the Convention? It will cost at least three hundred dollars to secure a suitable hall and competent speakers, and to widely advertise. Let not the hands of the board of directors be tied for the want of a little money. Notice the suggestion embodied in the secretary's report concerning honorary life memberships—that the $25 need not be paid at once, but by instalments of $5, and that all who contribute $5 to the present fund can be credited with that amount for a certificate of life-membership. At least one hundred Oregon Liberals should enroll as life members. Also two thousand signatures should be attached to the Constitution between now and the Portland Convention. There never was a better time to advance the cause and make it influential. All contributions can be placed in the hands of C. Beal, president, Portland; A. F. Neunert, treasurer, Portland; J. K. Sears, secretary, McCoy, or L. Ames, chairman of the Executive Committee, Silverton. All contributions will be acknowledged in the columns of FREETHOUGHT and a report of the expenditures of the Convention will be duly made.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL MANUAL.

When next Judge Westbrook reports on the matter of the thousand-dollar prize for a manual of instruction in morality without religious dogma, we hope to hear that the full amount has been raised. Up to the time of the latest report the following persons had subscribed:

R. B. Westbrook, Philadelphia.....	$100
G. E. Swan, Beaver Dam, Wis.....	100
Joseph Sedgebeer, Painesville, O.....	100
L. Geiger, Hudson, N. Y.....	100
W. H. Forwood, Fort Snelling, Minn.....	100
W. H. Pepper, Petaluma, Cal.....	100
Hudson, N. Y., Liberals.....	50
Drs. E. B. Foote, New York.....	25
F. C. Mende, Philadelphia.....	25

This manual, provided one is produced worthy of the high price offered for it, will be the most valuable addition of the century to school literature. The substance of secular morality at present is summed up in the precept, "Be good and you will be happy;" goodness being defined broadly as doing as one would be done by. This, however, forms a most insufficient moral code, and he who should attempt to put it in practice on all occasions would probably in a short time be ready to pronounce it a very fallacious one. We know that the best men have generally been unhappy martyrs, and that those who have done as they would be done by have often lived and died in misery. Religious people have noticed this. They have seen that there is slight attempt at justice in this world, and they have therefore placed the reward of virtue in the next. Their faith in the correctness of any course of action is not shaken if it turns out disastrously, as they hold that at some future time the judge of all will retry every case and deal out rewards and punishments with unerring wisdom. This is a serious thing for secular moralists to contend against.

Again, there are certain ideas of morality now prevalent in this country, and everybody of intelligence knows that about half of them are false; but it is safe to predict that the writer who tells his real opinion about them will himself be denounced as immoral and his work rejected by the public, even though a broad-minded committee might accept it. Thus difficulties will confront the secular moralist from many directions, and the codifier who produces a work which shall answer all the requirements of true morality and at the same time stand the test of public conservatism will certainly earn the money offered. We are heartily in favor of the experiment, and those who contribute to its success are entitled to great praise. It will be generally admitted that at present there is no written code of morals worthy of acceptance in its entirety. We hope the present effort will supply the deficiency and result in formulating one. In Margaret Deland's wonderful story of "John Ward, Preacher," there is a character called William Denner, who, when about to die, was able to say that he had always endeavored to remember that he was a gentleman. Perhaps a life modeled after that of Mr. Denner would be as high a type as could be taught by any manual of moral instruction.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, July 7, at 8 o'clock. Professor Teutschel will lecture on "Volapuk."

THIS number of FREETHOUGHT will reach a thousand people who are not subscribers. All are invited to subscribe. Single subscriptions are $2 per year, but in order to get new patrons we will give two subscriptions for $3; three for $4, or four for $5. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco.

WE prefer to take renewals in clubs at $1.50 rather than to lose subscribers who cannot afford more than that amount, but those who are interested in supporting the paper, and are able to do so, will not object, we are sure, to paying the full price, $2 per year.

THE proceedings of the National Secular Society's Conference, held at the Hall of Science, London, June 9, are reported in full in the National Reformer of the 16th. Mr. Bradlaugh was re-elected president by a unanimous vote, and Mr. R. Forder secretary. There were many able addresses and no want of enthusiasm.

A NEW JERSEY school teacher named Corkery, in charge of the South Amboy school, read the thirty-eighth chapter of Genesis to his one hundred and fifty pupils last week Friday. He then tore the page containing the story of Judah and Tamar from the book and said: "That gilt-edged volume, now disfigured and labeled the 'Holy Bible' on its back, may be accepted as an authoritative standard of truth and piety in our churches, where hypocrites and thieves abound, but as a text-book of devotion and godliness it is altogether out of place in a public school." Mr. Corkery's resignation has been tendered and accepted.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The new Catholic Cathedral of the Holy Sacrament was dedicated at Sacramento last Sunday. It is the most gorgeous and costly temple of superstition on the coast.—Talmage is coming to San Francisco in July or August.—Sarah Althea Hill Sharon Terry is to appear on the platform as a lecturer. She will make her appearance first at the Grand Opera-house, this city, within a few weeks, and tell the story of her numerous wrongs.—A gang of counterfeiters are working this coast, and considerable spurious coin is in circulation.—The typographical Union of San Francisco forbade its members to parade on the Fourth because non-union bands were employed by the committee.—A half inch of rain fell in some parts of the state last week.—During the fiscal year now closing 1,114,160.69 ounces of gold—648,839.50 ounces fine and 465,325.19 ounces crude—were received at the United States Mint in this city. The amount of coin turned out during the present year was $23,733,955 40, and during 1888, $25,701,284 80.—The notorious Chae Chan Ping goes back to China on the next steamer.

The power of the Jesuits in Canada seriously threatens the supremacy of the English government in the dominion. Annexation to this country may be favored as a last resort by the anti-Catholics.—Dr. John McInery, an agent of the Irish revolutionary organizations, is missing from New York, and the Clan-na-Gael is under suspicion of murdering him.—The Cronin case is not likely to come to trial until August.—Dr. McGlynn spoke at a big Anti-poverty meeting in Cooper Union, New York, last Sunday night. Among other things, he said he had arrived at a state where he was not afraid to be called a Socialist or an Anarchist.—The men employed by Andrew Carnegie, the great iron manufacturer of Pittsburg, have decided to strike against the scale of wages offered by the firm.—John J. Plunkett, the Christian science healer, of New York, has begun suit for divorce against his wife, who recently married another man.—Archbishop Corrigan will probably be made a cardinal soon. It is claimed that Cardinal Gibbons is unpopular with the pope on account of his patriotic sentiments.—The funeral of General Simon Cameron, the Pennsylvania senator, who died on the 26th ult., was held at Harrisburg last Saturday.—The governor of Michigan has signed the Local Option bill. This bill practically means prohibition in over one-half of the counties in the state.—Maria Mitchell, the noted astronomer, died at Lynn, Mass., June 28.—According to the new city directory Chicago has a population of over 900,000.—The report of the chairman of the Morgue Committee at Johnstown shows that some 2400 bodies have been recovered. Property losses of nearly $6,000,000 are reported.—A few nights since an attempt was made to burn the Odd Fellows' Hall in Hindsboro, Ill., because a number of preachers said to be Mormon elders have been holding meetings in it.—Thos. E. Sherman, eldest son of Gen. W. T. Sherman, has become a priest.—Wm. Walter Phelps, late Samoan commissioner to Berlin, has been appointed minister to Germany.

In defiance of the government proclamation forbidding the holding of Nationalist meetings, several were held in various parts of Cork, Ireland, last Sunday. William O'Brien, the editor, was again arrested. The mob stoned the police.—It is said that the pope will decline to interfere in the matter of complaint of some Irish bishops against harsh treatment of Land Leaguers in prison, on the ground that it is their own fault, they having disobeyed the decree against boycotting.—The North German Gazette, published at Berlin, charges that Switzerland promotes the dissemination of social-democratic ideas among the young men of the country. It says that Anarchists having no credentials are allowed to remain in Switzerland without any effort on the part of the authorities to identify them.—Mrs. Mackay has brought action claiming £5000 damages each from the Manchester Examiner and the London Echo for libel in stating that her mother was a washerwoman.

"Looking Backward," a socialistic romance which has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin of Industrial Slavery," by Edward Bellamy. Price, 50 cents.

OBSERVATIONS.

Tim Sheedy, of Brewersville, Ind., has stopped his paper. He was never a voluntary subscriber, as FREETHOUGHT was ordered sent to him by Andy Derming, who paid for it. Mr. Sheedy is a Roman Catholic—to speak euphemistically, one of Pecci's Milesian's—and he writes:

Your paper has not changed my views in the least. I am firmer in the Catholic faith now than I was when I first read your paper. Now Gentlemen you will do me a favor not sending your paper to me any longer as I do not find any connecting link between the principles of the paper & my own.

DO NOT SEND A Nother Copy and Oblige TIM SHEEDY.

Mr. Sheedy's case is hopeless, but his finding no connecting link between the principles of this paper and his own is easily explained. Such a link does not exist. If it did I would hunt it up and pulverize it, or perish with a fractured spine. Nor is there anything strange about Mr. Sheedy experiencing no change of views after reading FREETHOUGHT for a year. A goat might eat an oil painting by Landseer and not thereby become one of the superior creatures depicted by the artist. Still if Mr. Sheedy finds himself a firmer Catholic now than he was when he first read FREETHOUGHT, I can see no reason why he should stop reading it so long as it costs him nothing. If an occasional reference to the pope as a humbug increases his confidence in the pope, and if he desires to have that confidence increased, then this is just the paper he ought to take, even though he should have to pay for it himself. The trouble with Sheedy is that he has not an analytical mind, and, being a Catholic, he wouldn't know what to do with it if he had one.

Dr. F. S. Matteson, of Aumsville, Or., will please accept thanks for a large and fine bird in a stuffed state, but otherwise in good condition, which reached this office on Saturday last through the kindness of Wells, Fargo & Co. I have not yet decided what kind of a bird it is. It stands some eighteen inches high, has mild glass eyes of amber hue, red cheeks, a greenish-blue necktie and white collar; a brown chest-protector, lilac wings, and a tail a foot and a half long, printed in two colors. It is dead, though it appears to have lost none of its beauty by the sad change. It is supplied with a portable rostrum to which its feet are attached by means of a wire passing upward through its legs. This rostrum I have fastened to the top of the frame surrounding the picture of Mr. Putnam. I have decorated the same with a pair of American flags captured by Captain Putnam at Silverton, and from the neck of the bird depends a card inviting the public to subscribe for this journal. The effect is unique, but pleasing. And the gorgeous bird is standing on his four-by-six-inch landing, o'er the photograph of Putnam, just inside the office door, and all visitors who enter pause when they have reached the center of the room and stand bewildered on the editorial floor; and, their vision upward raising, spend a few rapt moments gazing, for such brilliancy of plumage they have never seen before. And a deep and awful mystery fills them when I tell its history—what it is and where it came from—and they wonder more and more, while in admiration rooted, how a thing that's not webfooted could have grown so rare and radiant on the Oregonian shore.

Mr. Thomas Curtis gave an excellent lecture before the San Francisco Freethought Society last Sunday evening on "Matter and Life." The audience was a trifle late, but it arrived there similarly and filled the hall. Professor Schultheis played and Mr. Lemme presided over the festivities. Since Mr. Robert Wade moved to Berkeley he has not attended the meetings, and is much missed. He does not fail, however, to make his weekly contribution. Mr. Schou came over from Oakland; and Mr. Beaumont, of Trinity county, was present. Mr. Beaumont is the philanthropist who went twenty-five miles on horseback from Harris to Covelo to relieve Putnam when he heard that the Secular Pilgrim was on his way to Round Valley. From his knowledge of Covelo Mr. Beaumont thought Putnam would have to walk back to Ukiah. He therefore collected subscriptions to the amount of fifteen dollars, which he placed in an inner and started for the field of action.

But I digress. Mr. Curtis began by saying that the scientist dealt only with facts, and made no pretense of expounding the unknowable. Herein science differed from philosophy, and also from religion, which latter began where science ended, and had the most to say of that whereof it knew the least. Any theologian would give you all the particulars in cases where science is dumb. The chief objection to accepting the conclusions of theology was that they were wholly unsupported by facts, and contrary to reason and probability. Mr. Curtis dwelt upon the law of the correlation of force, and the universal law of cause and effect, which precluded miracles. He spoke of the coal formations, which had conserved the sunlight, so that the gas that now illuminated the room was a reappearance of the light that fell upon the earth perhaps millions of years ago. Mr. Curtis's interpretation of the first verse in Genesis—"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth"—was accepted as worthy of general adoption. The beginning, he said, was unknowable, God incomprehensible, and creation an unexplainable process. Nobody could understand how nothing should cease to be nothing and become something. The inspired statement was therefore equivalent to the following: In the unknowable the incomprehensible performed the inexplicable on the heaven and earth. The speaker closed by exhorting his hearers to carefully examine all alleged facts, and when convinced that they had the truth to stick to it unmindful of consequences.

The lecture occupied a short hour, and was followed by a collection, during the taking of which Mr. Pingree played the piano as well as he could.

The floor being open for remarks, Mr. Knight arose to criticize such arguments of the lecturer as had cast doubt upon the existence of a wise and just God. He had not time to go deeply into the matter. If he had, he intimated, he might leave the audience uncertain as to the truthfulness of some of Mr. Curtis's statements.

Mr. Lund followed, offering the proposition that whatever is right until opposed and shown to be wrong, and spent his ten minutes in this field of optimistic speculation.

A stranger, who did not give his name, pursued an elusive point for the allotted time without catching it, though he convinced the audience that his intentions were good.

After the literary exercises a business meeting was called to act upon the resignation of President Chilstrom, whose business has called him back to Oregon. Upon motion the resignation was accepted with regret. Vice-President Eastman moved the election of another president, and nominated Mr. Thomas Curtis. Mr. Curtis declined and nominated Mr. Macdonald. Vice-President Eastman moved instead the election of some person of ability. Mr. Macdonald moved that in view of the efficiency of the present vice-presidents the motion to elect a president be laid upon the table, which was done.

Treasurer Schou reported that the treasury owed him something over $7. An affluent member thereupon contributed ten dollars, and the financial soundness of the society was re-established at once.

The programme for July offers the following attractive features: July 7, lecture on "Volapuk," by Professor Teutschel; July 14, "Persecution," by Hon. F. B. Perkins; July 28, "Travels and Views Abroad," by H. W. Faust and a stereopticon; July 28, "Co-operation for Liberals," by C. F. Burgman. Providence permitting, Professor Schultheis will play an overture at each meeting, and Professor Pingree will perform the interlude regardless. All are invited.

Christian Spiritualists.

Spiritualism claims 20,000,000 adherents, which is certainly a very moderate estimate, for there are hundreds of thousands in the so-called orthodox church who are Spiritualists in all but name; that is, they believe the fundamental doctrines of Spiritualism. Thousands in all the churches believe that their departed friends are their guardian angels, watching over them and shielding them from a thousand unknown and unseen dangers, and influencing them in some mysterious way for good. Such persons are to all intents and purposes Spiritualists.—Signs of the Times.

PROFESSOR LADD'S BOOK—"WHAT IS THE BIBLE?"

IV.

The seventh chapter of Professor Ladd's book is devoted to "The Histories of the Bible." He does not tell us, as W. Robertson Smith does, that "all Hebrew history is anonymous." He does not write as a calm, unbiased investigator, whose sole object is to discover the truth and proclaim it. He writes as one who has arrived at a great deal of truth, and is honest enough to tell it, and yet he seems all the time anxious lest the truth, when known, shall impair faith. He writes "in the interest of faith," and tries to let the church down easy from an untenable position. After repeatedly telling us that "the Bible writers have no higher inspiration than all believers;" that "there is no evidence to show that they were specially inspired to write books;" that "they did not consider themselves, or each other, specially inspired;" that "they obtained their facts from tradition, or from manuscripts like other writers," yet he keeps talking of "the inspired scriptures," and the "inspired writers."

On the 186th page he tells us, for the first time, how to detect inspiration in the Bible. He says, "If the writers of these histories show by the very character of their writings that they worthily enter into the divine spirit and intent of the events they record, this is of itself enough to warrant us in speaking of their inspiration." "It is the form of the history, in part, which gives to it such wonderful moral and religious dignity." "For the form is that which the writer of every history imparts to his materials. In this way, then, we may derive a general argument for the inspiration of the writers of biblical history" (p. 186).

He says on the previous page, "The thoughtful reader of the biblical history, from its beginning with the narrative of the creation and fall of man to its close in the founding and first propagation of the Christian church, can not fail to be impressed with its dignity of character."

This spreads his argument for inspiration over the entire book; and yet he immediately says: "The Bible nowhere, either directly or indirectly, makes any claim whatever to an historical infallibility, to a freedom from mistakes, for the writers of its histories."

He then goes on to say, "Not a doctrine of the Christian faith, not even the true, useful, and sufficient doctrine of holy scripture, is in any way dependent upon the historical infallibility of the Bible."

It is not easy to see how a "historic religion," as he tells us Christianity is, can be entirely independent of the accuracy of the historic facts upon which it is based. If Christianity is based on the theory of the "fall of man" and "redemption by Christ," then the "infallibility" of the record of those events would seem to be essential to the very existence of that religion. And yet the professor wipes out the whole story of "creation and the fall," by discrediting the first eleven chapters of Genesis. "The view which the Bible takes of the first pair, as formed from the soil, or from clay, and as existing in happy innocence, was widely disseminated in antiquity" (p. 196).

"The picture of the Garden of Eden, or place where this life began, is also a traditional one and seems not to have originated on Palestinian soil."

"Eden has wandered over the face of the earth from Scandinavia to the islands of the south sea, and has recently been relegated, by an elaborate argument, to the north pole. Even in the Old Testament itself appear traces of the tradition which puts this garden of the blest in the northern mountains" (p. 197).

"Nowhere else in the entire Bible do we find narratives the genuine historical character of which is more doubtful, and the moral and religious value less obvious, than those of the fourth, fifth, and early part of the sixth chapters of Genesis" (p. 198).

"There can be no doubt, then, that the first eleven chapters of Genesis contain a large amount of material the historical character of which it is difficult or impossible to establish. This material is in many particulars strikingly like the traditions current among surrounding nations" (p. 200).

"We must remember, however, that the narratives of the first eleven chapters of Genesis all antedate the time of Abraham" (p. 201).

"It is not likely that we shall ever know precisely what are the facts with respect to the first beginnings and early stages of Old Testament religion; or even to what extent some of the larger portions of certain Old Testament historical writings can have their historical character vindicated" (p. 208).

"The reader should hold loosely by any opinion as to the perfect truthfulness of these writings."

In regard to the New Testament he says: "It is undoubtedly those narratives of miracles which the gospels contain that have given the principal grounds for denying the historical character and substantial historical accuracy of the gospels at large."

It would seem from this that the professor does not value miracles very highly as evidence of historic truth. And when we learn from other authors that it is not until A.D. 130 that any mention is made of those miracles by any writer, they may well be discredited.

Again he says: "The existence of discrepancies and of historical errors in the gospels is to be acknowledged in the most fearless and frank manner, whenever it is pointed out" (p. 221).

"That it is perfectly impossible to construct a chronology of the life of our Lord in harmony with the accounts of the Evangelists, the whole course of such efforts has made as clear as such a matter can be" (p. 222).

Of the conflicting genealogies of Christ in Matthew and Luke he says: "But it is impossible to harmonize the two genealogies throughout unless we adopt the absurd assumption that all our Lord's ancestors from David onward had two names" (p. 223).

Any effort to harmonize them would seem to be useless, when both of them terminate in Joseph, who according to those gospels was not the father of Christ. In view of this fact, what do the genealogies or their harmonizing amount to?

As to the discrepancies and errors in the Bible, and the effort to vindicate the truthfulness of all of it, he says: "For the true view of the Bible it is comparatively unimportant whether such reconciliation and vindication can be effected or not" (p. 224). And almost immediately he tells us that "Christianity is a historical religion; it centers and grounds itself upon a historical character—upon a person who lived and taught and died here upon the earth, in the presence of men and at a definite period of human history" (p. 225).

"Old Testament religion, considered in itself and also as preparatory for Christianity, is a historical religion" (Ibid).

"Hence," he says, "the supreme importance that we should have a full and trustworthy historical picture of who Jesus was; of how God made the world ready for his coming and for the reception of his truth; and of how he actually manifested himself to those selected and inspired followers who knew him best. History and doctrine are joined in fact and in fate within the biblical narratives. God has joined them together; man cannot put them asunder" (p. 225).

And yet he tells us upon the next page that "the earliest histories of the sacred scriptures, like all other most ancient historical composition, begin in traditions which it is very difficult to verify, and in which it is impossible always to separate the true from the false. The earliest Hebrew traditions so closely resemble those of certain other ancient nations as to show some common root. The primitive method of composing history among the Hebrews was not such as to guarantee that care had been taken to arrive at what we should now consider strictly historical truth" (p. 226).

He further says: "We have no claim to historic infallibility set up within the Bible, or even to unusual freedom from errors of a historical kind. Neither does it appear that God has ever revealed to men the exact character and order of past events where no record of the events themselves has been kept. For their facts the sacred authors of the biblical histories appear always to have been dependent upon the ordinary resources" (p. 227).

He closes this chapter by telling us how to tell inspired writing when we see it, and what the inspiration amounts to.

"The histories of the New Testament—pre-eminently by the gospels, but also the book of Acts—show by their very nature that they were written by men who had the gift of the Holy Ghost. So to enter into the spirit and form of the gospel, and of the life and doctrine of him who is the gospel, as do the writers of these histories—this is to be inspired. In what their inspiration consisted, both the prologue of Luke's gospel and the closing words of John's gospel suggest, but that it was not thought of by themselves as giving any guarantee of historical accuracy without a diligent search and careful handling of their historical material, the language of Luke's prologue plainly implies" (p. 228).

Here we have, in his own words, the opinion of an orthodox doctor of divinity in the largest orthodox university in America, as to the sources, reliability, inspiration, and accuracy of Bible history.

1. It has its origin in "traditions" common to the Hebrews and the surrounding nations. These traditions of the heathen nations have long since been discarded as "mythology." These same myths, handed down by the Hebrews, have become "sacred history."

2. The story of Eden is a traditional one, and did not originate in Palestine.

3. The Pentateuch, and Judges, Numbers, Jonah, Daniel, and Esther are discredited.

4. The New Testament contains many mistakes, its writers do not agree, and cannot be harmonized.

5. There is no inspiration that reveals a knowledge of past events, or guarantees historical accuracy.

6. The highest evidence of inspiration, is the spirit in which the writers of the gospels and the Acts pursue their work.

One or two facts will show how much this "inspiration" has done for the historic character of the New Testament.

It is stated in the religious encyclopedia of McClintock & Strong (eminent Methodist authors) that one of the Greek manuscripts of the New Testament, the celebrated "Cambridge Manuscript, Codex Bezae, is chiefly remarkable for its bold and extensive interpolations; amounting to some six hundred in Acts alone."

"Of the 150,000 various readings which Griesbach found in the manuscripts of the New Testament, probably 149,500 were additions and interpolations" (Waite's History of the Christian Religion, p. 188).

"Literary forgery . . . was practiced by the Hellenistic Jews as a regular trade" (W. Robertson Smith). J. W. NORTH.

THE REV. MR. GRIER'S FAMILY.

From "John Ward, Preacher."

Helen's face had relaxed into a happy smile; again the day was fair and the wind sweet. The garden below her was fragrant with growing things and the smell of damp earth; and while she sat, drinking in its sweetness, a sudden burst of children's voices reached her ear, and Ellen and the two little boys came around the corner of the house, and settled down under the window. A group of lilacs, with feathery purple blossoms, made a deep, cool shade, where the children sat; and near them was an old grindstone, streaked with rust, and worn by many summers of sharpening scythes; a tin dipper hung on the wooden frame, nearly full of last night's rain, and with some lilac stars floating in the water.

This was evidently a favorite play-ground with the children, for under the frame of the grindstone were some corn-cob houses, and a little row of broken bits of china, which their simple imagination transformed into "dishes." But to-day the corn-cob houses and the dishes were untouched.

"Now, children," Ellen said, "you sit right down, and I'll hear your catechism."

"Who'll hear yours?" Bobby asked discontentedly. "When we play school, you're always teacher, and it's no fun."

"This isn't playing school," Ellen answered, skillfully evading the first question. "Don't you know it's wicked to play on the Sabbath? Now sit right down."

There was a good deal of her mother's sharpness in the way she said this, and plucked Bobby by the strings of his pinafore, until he took an uncomfortable seat upon an inverted flower-pot.

Ellen opened a little yellow-covered book, and began:

"Now answer, Jim! How many kinds of sin are there?"

"Two," responded little Jim.

"What are these two kinds, Bob?"

"Original and actual," Bob answered.

"What is original sin?" asked Ellen, raising one little forefinger to keep Bobby quiet. This was too hard a question for Jim, and with some stumbling Bobby succeeded in saying—

"It is that sin in which I was conceived and born."

"Now, Jim," said Ellen, "you can answer this question, 'cause it's only one word, and begins with 'y.'"

"No fair!" cried Bob; "that's telling."

But Ellen proceeded to give the question: "Doth original sin wholly defile you, and is it sufficient to send you to hell, though you had no other sin?"

"Yes!" roared Jim, pleased at being certainly right.

"What are you then by nature?" Ellen went on rather carelessly, for she was growing tired of the lesson.

"I am an enemy to God, a child of Satan, and an heir of hell," answered Bobby promptly.

"What will become of the wicked?" asked the little catechist.

Bobby yawned, and then said contemptuously, "Oh, skip that—cast into hell, of course."

"You ought to answer right," Ellen said reprovingly, but she was glad to give the last question, "What will the wicked do forever in hell?"

"They will roar, curse, and blaspheme God," said little Jim, cheerfully; while Bobby, to show his joy that the lesson was done, leaned over on his flower-pot, and tried to stand on his head, making all the time an unearthly noise.

"I'm roarin'!" he cried gayly.

Ellen, freed from the responsibility of teaching, put the little yellow book quickly in her pocket, and said mysteriously, "Boys, if you won't ever tell, I'll tell you something."

"I won't," said Jim, while Bobby reponded briefly, "G'on."

"Well, you know when the circus came—you know the pictures on the fences?"

"Yes!" said the little boys together.

"Member the beautiful lady, ridin' on a horse, and standin' on one foot?"

"Yes!" the others cried, breathlessly.

"Well," said Ellen slowly and solemnly, "when I get to be a big girl, that's what I'm going to be. I'm tired of catechism, and church, and those long blessings father asks, but most of catechism, so I'm going to run away, and be a circus."

"Father'll catch you," said Jim; but Bobby, with envious depreciation, added—

"How do you know but what circuses have catechism?"

Ellen did not notice the lack of sympathy. "And I'm going to begin to practice now," she said.

Then, while her brothers watched her, deeply interested, she took off her shoes, and in her well-darned little red stockings climbed deliberately upon the grindstone.

"This is my horse," she said, balancing herself, with outstretched arms, on the stone, and making it revolve in a queer, jerky fashion by pressing her feet on it as though it were a treadmill, "and it is bare-backed!"

The iron handle came down with a thud, and Ellen lurched to keep from falling; the boys unwisely broke into cheers.

It made a pretty picture, the sunbeams sifting through the lilacs on the little fair heads, and dancing over Ellen's white apron and rosy face; but Mrs. Grier, who had come to the door at the noise of the cheers, did not stop to notice it.

"Oh, you naughty children!" she cried. "Don't you know it is wicked to play on the Sabbath? Ellen's playing circus, do you say, Bobby? You naughty, naughty girl! Don't you know circus people are all wicked, and don't go to heaven when they die? I should think you'd be ashamed! Go right up-stairs, Ellen, and go to bed; and you boys can each learn a psalm, and you'll have no supper, either—do you hear?"

The children began to cry, but Mrs. Grier was firm; and when, a little later, Helen came downstairs, ready for her ride, the house was strangely quiet. Mrs. Grier, really troubled at her children's sinfulness, confided their misdeeds to Helen, and was not soothed by the smile that flashed across her face. "They were such good children to study their catechism first," she interceded, "and making a horse out of a grindstone shows an imagination that might excuse the playing." But Mrs. Grier was not comforted, and only felt the more convinced of the lost condition of Mrs. Ward's soul.

DID JESUS CHRIST RISE FROM THE DEAD?

"And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain" (1 Cor. xv. 14).

"The writers of the New Testament have staked the truth of Christianity on the actual performance of a single miracle—the resurrection of Jesus Christ. If, therefore, this cannot be proved to be an historical fact, it is a mere waste of time and trouble either to attack any other of the miracles of the Bible, or to attempt to prove their truth. If Jesus Christ did not rise from the dead, all the other miracles which are recorded in the New Testament would not avail to prove that Christianity is a divine revelation" (Rev. Prebendary Row, M.A., "Historical Evidences of the Resurrection of Jesus Christ," p. 3).

Here the ark of the Lord is fearlessly brought out into the front of battle. The truth or falsehood of the Christian faith, by its defenders, is made to depend upon the fling of a die. And the die is hopelessly loaded to turn up, not to Christianity's support, but to its destruction. In short, the truth of Christianity is left to stand or fall by an appeal to the historical proofs of the resurrection of Christ, and they are so notoriously contradictory and unsatisfactory that they are utterly unworthy to be considered historical evidences at all. And, even if the synoptic writers agreed among themselves, which they do not, and even if they were supported by contemporary annalists, which they are not, the resurrection from the dead of Christ, or any one else, would not be established. The amount of evidence must be proportionate to the improbability of the event for which the evidence is adduced, and if every pen in the Roman empire in the reign of Tiberias had left it on uniform record that Christ rose from the dead, the fact would not be established. It would be more probable that every living historian should be mistaken, or even that every living historian should wilfully have lied, than that an event so utterly improbable, so subversive of all experience, should have taken place.

Accordingly, Christianity has elected to stand or fall by a myth so monstrously improbable that it is impossible to discuss it without insulting common sense and outraging the most rudimentary principles of experience and reason. He who discusses the probability of the resurrection of Christ as if it were a grave and legitimate subject for debate, is as demented and absurd as he who would gravely state it. If you set a reasonable thesis before me, O Christian, I will reason with you; but if you set before me a proposition so monstrously absurd that to seriously attack it would only be a logical burlesque, a pedantic mockery, you must not deem me disrespectful if, without noticing it, I pass by on the other side. But if, as in the case with the resurrection monstrosity, you insist on thrusting your devout imbecilities upon my attention, do not deem me discourteous if I reserve reason and criticism for higher purposes, and treat your puerile superstitions with ridicule and contempt.

Having no desire, however, to indulge in undue levity, I shall very briefly examine the "evidences," such as they are, for Christ's resurrection. I do so with pain, humiliation, and sorrow that human ignorance and credulity should make such a task possible, far less necessary. Jack and his beanstalk was just as suitable for the nucleus of a religious system as Christ and his cross; but the one has been taken, and the other left. Christ and his cross is the more blood-stained and crude legend of the two, and would, therefore, receive the readier acceptance by the barbarous mental and moral instincts of priest-manipulated ignorance.

The superficial Christolater must not consider me unduly flippant, when in the same sentence I link with apparent irreverence baby-tales for the nursery and the sacred truths of the church. Several such tales are unmistakably in both the nursery and the church. Astounding as it may seem to the unread hymn-howlers who put on their best millinery and crowd the chapel, the little Red Riding Hood story and the resurrection of Christ story are one and the same. The little Red Riding Hood version is the older, the resurrection of Christ version the more modern. The Jonah and the whale myth is yet another version; and in the gospel according to Matthew the Jonah and the whale story and the Christ and the resurrection story are made interdependent. I note in a contemporary a timely confirmation of the truth of the book of Jonah, and consequently also of the book of Matthew. I learn with pious satisfaction that the vexed question as to the precise nature of the "great fish" which swallowed Jonah is at last finally settled, for that upon one of the ribs of a whale, 117 feet eight inches long, captured in Simon's Bay, Cape Colony, has been found rudely carved the word "Jonah." The story, it will be observed, is very circumstantial as to the whale's dimensions. I could have borne with a somewhat more definite statement about the carving. Did Jonah affect old English, or Roman, or Akkadian, or do the tremulous characters indicate that the disobedient prophet was, at the period of their execution, partially digested or partially tipsy, or both?

*By Saladin, editor of the Agnostic Journal.

"As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matt. xii, 40), quoth the old book; and the statement has my firm belief. "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief" (Mark ix, 24). I believe that the statements as to Jonah and his whale and Jesus and his tomb are equally true; and I am so glad that the holy scriptures—every word of them inspired—brackets the two, so that they must stand or fall together. All that is wanted now to convince even the most skeptical, and thereby "save" the whole world, is a stone out of the holy sepulchre with the word "Jesus" scratched upon it by that hero, to amuse himself during the time he was dead. Then the rib with the word "Jonah" on it, and the stone with the word "Jesus" on it, can be packed up and sent to the British museum, or, better still—to Colney Hatch.

May I point out that the Jonah and the whale story is much older than the time of Jonah, is a solar myth found far back in the legendary dimness of Hindu mythology? (In the "Somadara Bhatta.") Hercules, too, and others prior to the time of Jonah and his post-type, Christ, were swallowed and emeticated. Montfaucon writes: "Some ancients relate to the effect that Hercules was also swallowed by the whale that was watching Hesione, that he remained three days in his belly, and that he came out bald-pated after his sojourn there." There are numerous versions of the same tale, a wolf on some occasions being substituted for a fish. The wolf is well known in ancient Scandinavian mythology to represent the destroying power. The story of Little Red Riding Hood and the wolf is simply another version, and an exceedingly ancient one, of the Jonah and Jesus legend. The story, Hindu in origin, is mutilated in the English version. In the original the little maid, in her shining red cloak (the sun), is swallowed by the great black wolf (night), and she comes out safe and sound when the hunters capture and cut up the wolf (morning). As Max Muller ("Chips," vol. ii, p. 260) observes: "The divine myth become a heroic legend, and the heroic legend fades away into a nursery tale."

Bunce ("Fairy Tales: their Origin and Meaning," p. 161) remarks: "One of the most ancient Aryan or Hindu stories was that there was a great dragon that was trying to devour the sun, and to prevent him shining upon the earth and filling it with brightness and life and beauty, and that Indra, the sun-god, killed the dragon. Now, this is the meaning of Little Red Riding Hood, as it is told in our nursery tales. Little Red Riding Hood is the evening sun, which is always described as red or golden; the old grandmother is the earth, to whom the rays of the sun bring warmth and comfort. The wolf, which is a well-known figure for the clouds and darkness of night, is the dragon in another form. First he devours the grandmother; that is, he wraps the earth in thick clouds, which the evening sun is not strong enough pierce through. Then, with the darkness of night he swallows up the evening sun itself, and all is dark and desolate. Then, as in the German tale, the night-thunder and the storm-winds are represented by the loud snoring of the wolf; and then the huntsman, the morning sun, comes in all his strength and majesty, and chases away the night-clouds and kills the wolf, and revives old Grandmother Earth, and brings Little Red Riding Hood to life again." We celebrate the swallowing up of Red Riding Hood in our pantomimes at Christmas; we celebrate the rising of Christ every Easter in our churches. The Red Riding Hood myth and the Jesus myth are really varying representations of the same solar principle. The more ancient and beautiful version we consign to our places of amusement; the more modern and repulsive version we relegate to our places of worship. And why? Because for ages the clergy have used the modern version to gull us with in their own interests, and they have managed to keep us very ignorant, and they burnt us if we offered to get in any way enlightened—and, as Carlyle says, we are mostly fools.

O. A. M'CONNELL.

FUNERAL SERVICES IN MEMORY OF A WORTHY MAN.

The friends and neighbors of Mr. O. A. McConnell gathered in large numbers at ten o'clock Monday morning at his home to do honor to one who for many years has been a respected citizen and neighbor.

At the beginning of the services Mr. J. E. Jacobs read the following:

"O. A. McConnell was born at Venice, Washington county, Penn., November 23, 1831; died June 22, 1889, aged 57 years and 8 months. He crossed the plains to Oregon in 1854; married his present wife, Martha A. Wolfard, in Siskiyou county, Cal., January, 1858. The family consists of nine children, all of whom are living."

B. F. Underwood then read an appropriate poem, followed with music by the Silverton Secular Union Choir. Mr. Underwood then delivered the following eloquent tribute:

FRIENDS: We are here to perform the last sad rite over the body of a comrade who has fallen in life's battle, a brother who was one of us, sharing with us the common experiences of life, of youth, and age, but whose joys and pains are now ended in the sleep that knows no waking. But yesterday his voice was heard amongst us; now he belongs to the "silent realm," the realm from which comes no word, no sound, not even the echo of a whisper or a sigh; a realm whose subjects far outnumber all the living, and over which silence reigns universally and supreme.

Our brother has passed through that final experience which sooner or later must come to us all. Death is as natural as life and none among all the living can escape it. It comes often as a friend to relieve us of pain, to release us from an existence which weakness and suffering have rendered only miserable. Superstition has invested death with terror, but there is, in truth, nothing terrible in death. Sad it is when it destroys youth, and puts an end to bright prospects and fond hopes, and when it deprives us of the presence of those who are near and dear; but there is nothing in death to dread when it is divested of superstitious fancies born of ignorance, servility, and fear. It is the living, not the dead—it is they who mourn departed worth, or who suffer the anguish of bereavement in the irreparable loss of companionship, in the sundering of relations, the most precious of all human ties—to whom death is terrible.

Our friends live with us, and in us, even after they have vanished from our sight. Their images are enshrined in our hearts, their words are cherished in our memories, the fragrance of their lives remains with us. A man lives but a few years and dies, ceases, so far as we can see, to exist as a personality; but the influence of his character and the effects of his life continue, a permanent contribution to the intellectual and moral life of the race.

The influence of the dead is incomparably greater than that of all who are alive. That influence, reaching far back, has determined the conditions of the present and made us what we are. All past generations live in us, as we shall soon live only in those who survive us as individuals.

Our brother was a man of stalwart qualities. He was honest, honorable, independent, and courageous. He commanded the confidence and respect of those who differed the most widely from him. Years ago, amidst perils and hardships, he came to this country, where he subdued the forest, made a home, and raised his family. In defense of his convictions, in opposition to popular religious beliefs, he maintained his own views with as much fearlessness as he encountered the obstacles he had to overcome.

in crossing the plains, fording the streams, and climbing the mountains, on his way to this valley. For this he should be honored, and he is by those who can appreciate sincerity, bravery, and self-sacrifice, regardless of speculative belief. His integrity, and fidelity to his convictions, his manly independence, and his influence as an intelligent and well-informed man who did his own thinking; these are the legacy he has left to his family, to his neighborhood, and to his race.

I can say nothing to assuage the grief of wife and children. Their tears are the eloquent expressions of nature, attesting the reality and the greatness of the loss which this family suffer in the death of a husband and father. I cannot say there is no cause for sorrow, no reason for grief. It is folly to speak thus to those who have closed in death the eyes of their dearest friend. The loss is real, and time only can heal the wound which such a death inflicts. But while it is human to feel, it is philosophy to rise above and overcome sorrow, and not allow it to crush us under its weight. The relatives here who mourn have the satisfaction of knowing that he who suffered so severely for weeks and months is now at rest, and that he left to them and to the world the priceless legacy of a manly and courageous life.

The body, followed by his family and a large concourse of friends, was carried to a neighboring mound, on his own estate, and lowered into the grave. With words of farewell by Mr. Underwood, and a parting song by the choir, with flowers upon the dust, beneath the trees and sunshine the remains were placed in the bosom of nature, in undisturbed repose. After pain and toil the cessation had come, which the heroic and struggling spirit had so long desired. His family has the sympathy of a large circle in the loss of a faithful husband and a loving father.

REMARKS AT THE GRAVE.

In this spot where our brother wished to be buried, amidst the sunshine, the trees, the songs of birds, we now consign his body to the grave prepared to receive it. This is the last act we can perform, the last tribute of respect we can offer to the memory of the dead. The friends of the deceased have the consolation of knowing that in this sleep of death, if there is no pleasure, there is no suffering. Suns will rise and set, moons will wax and wane, the seasons will come and go, and the busy world will move on to its destiny, but our brother will heed not the changes. Though the tramp of armies and the shock of battle shake the ground, or the earthquake bury this spot, the event will not disturb him whose body is now given back to Mother Earth, and whose soul survives in the lives of those who are better for his thoughts and deeds. Farewell, brother, farewell forever.

THE CHRISTIAN RELIGION.

It is called before the bar of public opinion for a new trial on all its claims. Man is free to think. In the republic, no man and no law can stand in the way of a free discussion. It must be in decent language, that is all.

This has not been the case in Christendom, since the Roman Emperor Constantine, after the Council of Nice, proclaimed, "Christians! The council has defined your God, your Bible, your creed, your bishops, and guides, in this world, and to the next, and the plan of salvation. It is for you to believe and obey. He who will not do so, let his head be stricken off."

This was the religion of Constantine. It became the religion of Rome and the popes. It is the creed of the Church of England, only with Henry VIII. for pope, and Parliament to settle the faith.

An effort was made to fasten it on the United States in the same way, and make heresy a crime. Our fathers listened to the arguments of all the churches, and finally said: "No! we are not satisfied that you have the truth, and we will leave it to our people to examine into it, and follow whatever they deem best. The proclamation of the Roman emperor is annulled, and all the laws of heresy and blasphemy that grow out of it. We are a free people. All laws must be just and equal to all, and all persons have the equal protection of the law."

What! have churchmen no privileges in the republic above others? Has the Bible no defense? Has religion no protection against science? Can we not silence an unbeliever? Must our religion become a matter of reason and discussion? Shall we have to prove it, or let it slide?

Yes, that is the exact status. Let truth and error grapple, and the best survive! That is the motto of the republic. Give them all a chance! Truth can never be worsted, and error should have no advantage. That is the Constitution and the law.

And all true Americans, all enlightened and generous lovers of freedom, are content with it. They would not change it. Were it not the law, they would make it so to-morrow. Scientists make no complaint. They have no fear but the truths of science will be heard without the force of law to sustain them.

Who complain of this entire freedom? Who want to make religion compulsory? Who want Congress to engage in fixing creeds, and settling catechisms? Who desire to see the president do as Constantine did? Not one! not even one, unless assured that he would adopt their catechism, and proclaim them the true church.

Suppose Harrison should do as Constantine did. Let him say to the people of the United States: "I have advised with such bishops and elders of the Christian church as I found to be learned and correct in doctrine. They tell me this is the true religion of God, of Jesus Christ, and of the Bible. They assure me that they were all divinely inspired to understand this thing, and there can be no mistake about it. You will find it all in the catechism and creed published herewith.

"And it is my pleasure that all men at once receive, believe, and obey said creed, etc.; that they lay aside, burn, destroy, and ignore all other opinions, books, papers, etc.

"And moreover, if any man refuse, or neglect to obey this command, let his head be stricken off; and his books and writings, if he have such, be made into a pile and burned."

What a fury our people would be in! What would become of Harrison? What should we say of him and his proclamation? Could religion be established in that way? Would that proclamation prove the truth of the creed? Would it prove one thing? Would we receive it as conclusive evidence? Surely not! No one would. Religious people would kick just as much as others—more.

Catholics, Mormons, in fact the whole line, would rebel, unless he declared them the true church. They might say the system was wrong, but they would say that the pope, or Joseph Smith, should be the one to make the proclamation. And so with all other sects. They would accept the plan if Mr. Harrison would only call on their bishops to advise and to adopt their form of faith.

But all free men would protest against the whole system, the assumption of any such authority, and the intolerable tyranny of such a course. No man would accept it, but at once defy both the president and his proclamation.

But in those days they did not. The army and the church backed the emperor. The men who refused to obey had their heads stricken off. It was the habit of the people to believe whatever the emperor said, and his religion became the religion of Rome.

It went to England, in fact all over Europe. It had the same proof, the word of the emperor. In course of time the pope of Rome assumed the place of the emperor. He became head of the church and the dictator of all religious opinion.

England seceded from him. But the king became emperor and pope. Parliament were his bishops. They did the same thing, made the same proclamation, and were obeyed in like manner. No proof was offered in any case, only the authority of the king and the parliament.

The same religion came with our fathers to America, and with the king's command. But it was far away, and the command was received with some variation. At length we formed a government of our own. Then came the churchmen and demanded a proclamation like unto that of Rome and England. They were divided, happily. Had they all pulled one way, all been Catholics, of the Church of England, or Methodists, or any other, they would have prevailed. But it was not to be. Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, Ethan Allen, and a host of others were there; and Thomas Paine. And they refused. They said, "These things need proving. The word of an emperor, pope, king, or priest is no proof. Let our people be free, and each man think as he pleases."

This was and is the law, from then till now. But not the practice. The people did not think, and in many places the bigots would not permit them to think. The courts, in their ignorance, supported the priests. Many were punished for blasphemy. The public mind was not up to the law our fathers had made. But all that has passed away with intelligent people. And now, Robert Ingersoll and others stand boldly forth and say: "You have no proof. We demand a new trial in the light of this age. Show us your evidence!" And they have none to show. The church, all the churches here in San Francisco, are invited, challenged, defied, to show their evidence. And they dare not make the attempt. They have not a man in all their ranks who dare stand forth and say, "I can prove the truth of the Christian religion!"

But it must be done, or they must retire. Our people will not rest content with a religion that has no foundation in science, history, common sense, or common justice. They must prove up or die.

H. L. K.

THE SUMMER AND FALL CAMPAIGN.

S. P. Putnam has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Molalla.....	"	July....3,4,	Baker City, Or..	Sept.....I,
Kalama.....	W. T., "	6, 7,	Prairie City, Or. and vicinity,	Sept.
Starks Point, W. T., and vicinity,		4, 5, 6, 7, 8,
July 9, 10, 11, 12, 13,			Fox Valley.....Or.,	Sept. 9, 10,
Astoria.....Or.,	July ...	14,	Long Creek.....	" " 11, 12,
Stella.....W. T., "	15, 16, 17,		Hamilton.....	" " 14, 15,
Oswego.....Or., "	18, 19,		Monument.....	" " 16, 17,
Arnold's Grove.. "	" 20, 21,		Hay Stack.....	" " 18,
Coos county, Or.,	July 22 to Aug. 4,		Lone Rock.....	" " 19, 20,
Coburg.....	" Aug.....7, 8,		Fossil.....	" " 21, 22,
Lebanon.....	" ".....9,		Hillsboro, Or.,	Sept., 25, 26, 27, 28,
Olympia...W. T., "11, 12,		North Yamhill...Or.,	Sept.....29,
Buckley...W. T., "13, 14,		Forest Grove....	" ".....30,
Davenport, " "17, 18,		Talent, Or., and vicinity	Oct. 3, 4, 5,
Cheney... "19,		6, 7,
Rosalia... "20,		Linkville....Or.,	Oct. 11, 12, 13,
Sprague... "21,		Sacramento.....Cal.,	Oct. 20,
Pasco.....	" ".....22,		San Francisco.....	" " 27,
Dayton...W. T.,	Aug.....24, 25,		Los Angeles and vicinity	the month
Pomeroy...W. T.,	Aug.....26,		of November,
La Grange, Or....	Aug.....29,		San Diego and vicinity	the month of
Union.....Or.30,		December.

THE NINE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall be no longer exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in state legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and in all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the president of the United States or by the governors of the various states, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that the simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality, as such, shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several states, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

IN reply to "Two Subscribers, we would say that church property is not exempt by law from taxation in this state.

THE election of Dr. Dods to a professorship in New College, an important denominational school in Scotland, shows that Scotch Presbyterianism is relaxing its rigidity. Dr. Dods repudiates the full inspiration of the Bible.

CONSIDERABLE matter which we should otherwise print is omitted from this week's FREETHOUGHT for obvious reasons. Thursday, our customary day for going to press, falls upon the Fourth of July, and the paper is pushed one day ahead.

THE body of an unknown man found in the bay last week was mistakenly identified as that of A. D. Cridge, a nephew of William Denton. Mr. Cridge was sufficiently alive to be present at the Single-Tax Society's meeting on Sunday night.

IF the present religious fight in Canada over the Jesuits' Estates act ends in a civil war it will certainly teach the Canadian government a needed lesson. Perhaps, too, the politicians and people of our own country may see in it a warning against permitting church encroachment.

WHILE Dr. R. H. Macdonald, president of the Pacific Bank, was conducting a prayer-meeting in the Silver Star House, the other day, some person stole a valuable horse-blanket out of his buggy at the door. The moral that goes with this incident is lost, and we do not know where to look for it.

THE Sunday law is being strictly enforced in Cincinnati. It cost the president of the Cincinnati base-ball club $20 for permitting a game to be played on Sunday, June 23, and a restaurant keeper had his case decided against him, though he sold no liquors. Probably when the people get tired of this sort of thing they will rise up and repeal the obnoxious law, which has no foundation in morals, common sense, or justice.

THE Lincoln Times, Davenport, W. T., says: "Mrs. F. C. Reynolds, the talented Freethought lecturer, delivered three lectures in this place during the week. The meetings were fairly attended, and all who heard her were greatly impressed with the almost unanswerable arguments of the lady. She is not only a fluent and very entertaining talker, but has made a study of her subjects and carries conviction with her logical arguments. It is to be regretted that she was not greeted with larger houses, but it is difficult to draw audiences where the attraction is nothing more than a lecture."

BOOKS.

We have for sale at this office, among other works:

"Yone Santo." 50 cents.

"John Ward, Preacher." 50 cents.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible." 15 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Annual" for 1889. 25 cents.

"Liberty and Morality," by W. S. Bell. 15 cents.

"The System of Nature," by Baron D'Holbach. $2.

"Robert Elsmere," by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Price, 50 cents.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

Judge Maguire's "Ireland and the Pope," a history of papal intrigues against Irish liberty. Price, 50 cents.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—
"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—
ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS
(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to
L. K. WASHBURN,
Revere, Mass.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond".....	14 00

"This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
PUTNAM & MACDONALD,

504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

The Tramp's Hint.

He shuffled in and took a chair,
Then fixed on us a stony glare—
We wrote away unheeding
Until the clock struck twelve, and then
We asked him as we dropped our pen,
"Well, sir, what are you needing?"

"Oh, nothin' much—I thought I'd call—
I see you kindly mention all
The folks your village visit.
And I thought 'twould help fill up if you Should give to me a line or two—
'Taint too much trouble, is it?"

"Just say we're gratified to state
That our old friend and college-mate,
J. Ebenezer Skinner,
Called at our office 'tother day,
Conversed awhile, and by the way,
Went home with us to dinner."

Not a Pleasant Outlook.

Little Bobby—"Ma, will I go to heaven when I die?"

Mother—"If you are a good boy you will."

"Will you go too?"

"I hope so, Bobby."

"And will pa?"

"Yes, we will all be there some time."

Bobby didn't seem altogether satisfied, and after some thought he said:

"I don't see how I'm going to have much fun."—Texas Siftings.

Dead to the World.

Towne—That's too bad about Dingley, isn't it?

Browne—How? What's that?

Towne—Joined the silent majority.

Browne—What! dead?

Towne—No, married.—Time.

A REMARK by Mr. Howell in the course of his late reading in Boston, at the Authors' Fund benefit, as to "How much easier it is to make one's peace with one's God than with one's wife," it seems to have especially tickled the risibilities of the clergy on the platform, for Bishop Potter is reported to have laughed until he was red in the face, and Bishop Coxe laughed until he cried.

THE man who is busy working doesn't have time to read up on the subject of capital and labor, and the man who puts in his time reading on that subject doesn't have time to work. That's why no one reaches a complete comprehension of the difficulty.

VOICE from the head of the stairs—"Mary, has the morning paper come yet?" Mary (who had begun saying good-bye to George)—"How shall I answer him, my dear?" George—"Tell him of course the paper hasn't come yet, as we are just going to press."

PARSON (returning from church to small boy with a pole)—"Do you know where the little boys go who go fishing on the Sabbath?" Small boy (with pride and animation)—"You just bet I do, and I ain't a-goin' to give the snap away, either!"

A THIEF lately stole a contribution box from a church. He went there to prey.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street.

Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.
G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.
Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC

SCHOOLS.—THE NEW

AMERICAN PARTY,

A Criticism by "Jefferson."

Price, 10 cents.

Address

PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton, Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology.
Price, 50 cents.

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

est Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see other column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice. He writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE. Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular, readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" media valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Kocher writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25; Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50; difference is in paper and binding. MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Temperance and Prohibition, THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Cloth, 75 cts.

Address this office

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

Miners and Millmen Attention!

BEHM'SCentrifugal Pulverizer,

Guarantees to work One Ton

per hour of the Hardest

Quartz to a 40-Screen.

—ADDRESS:—

H. W. WALKER,

ASSAYER,

109 Montgomery Block, San Francisco

In replying to this advertisement, mention Freethought.

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, etc., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, Dr. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, New Jersey. Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors. DR. R. P. FELLOWS.

Wm. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor.

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY.

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.
N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

USINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
RESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
ANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

F. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,
NURSEYRMEN

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit
and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.
Special Attention Given to Planting
and Caring of Orchards
and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA.

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or The Infidel Teacher 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLECKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

An Illustration of Faith.

"Now, Johnnie, can you tell me what faith is? You remember I explained it to you last Sunday."

"Faith is a belief in things unseen."

"Right. Now give me an illustration of the meaning."

"I believe der boys are havin' a great ball game in der church yard, but der windows is so blamed high I can't get a squint at dem."

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History, of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenzel, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Jr. Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $2.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"The Glory of Infidelity" was one of the poet-secretary's happiest efforts, and ranks with the best speeches of the Congress.—New York Truth Seeker.

Putnam's "Glory of Infidelity" is one of the ablest defenses of Freethought to which I have ever listened.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

The lecture was "The Glory of Infidelity." No man or woman could hear it without being inspired by the heroic Infidel manhood and womanhood coming down to us as a rich inheritance through the dreary ages of the past, and pointing with glorious hope to the "New Heaven and Earth."

J. F. BECK.

I believe I express the unanimous sentiment of all when I say that for a lecture of its character, Mr. Putnam has never been surpassed and seldom equaled on our platform—a platform famous for the talent it affords. "The Glory of Infidelity" fairly bristles with good things, and each sentence is an epigrammatic Secular sermon.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary American Secular Union.

—PRICE 10 CENTS.—

Address PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Franciscoan. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

A Story of Tolstoi.

Count Leon Tolstoi was taking a walk in Moscow last week, when he saw a policeman struggling with a moujik. The policeman got the best of it, and when the moujik was laid out in the mud Tolstoi rushed up, pushed the gorodovoi away, helped the moujik up, and turning back on the policeman, asked:

"Can'st thou read, my friend?"

"I should think so."

"Well, hast thou read the holy gospel?"

"Yes, I have."

"Well, how dare you forget that it forbids a man to strike his neighbor?"

The policeman hesitated a minute, and then collaring the moujik said to the celebrated novelist:

"And you, do you know how to read?"

"Yes," said Count Tolstoi.

"Read the police regulations?"

"No."

"Well, then," continued the policeman, as he formed the procession towards the station, "just go home and read them before going about in the streets interfering with people."—New Orleans Times.

A VERY small boy was recently present at a balloon ascension. As the gigantic, bird-like machine sailed up into the clouds with its human freight, the small boy pulled his mother's dress excitedly and exclaimed: "What will God say when he sees that a-coming?"

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

Prometheus. A poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald
504 Kearny st. San Francisco

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 28.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 13, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JULY 13, 1889.

THE news about the prize-fight crowded out the reports of last Sunday's sermons from the morning papers. The reading public will never know what it has lost or gained.

MODESTO is the godliest town in the state. It has less than three thousand inhabitants and supports eight churches. Cleanliness is nowhere near godliness, however, in Modesto, as the town is badly in need of waterworks and a sewage system.

SONS do not always turn out to the credit of their sires. Thus the son of General Sherman has become a Catholic priest. The religion of the general is much like that of Thomas Paine. Being asked what he believed he answered, "I believe in God almighty. That is as far as I have got."

A BALTIMORE dispatch announces that Cardinal Gibbons has received a beautiful present from Pope Leo XIII. It is a large golden and richly jeweled ostensorium, and was sent to the cardinal as a souvenir of the pope's jubilee. The dispatch does not say whether there was anything in it or not, but it is probably not so full as it was before the pope took it with him on his jubilee.

VICAR-GENERAL PRENDERGAST had a big audience at his lecture on the "Lourdes Miracles." He told the story of how a French peasant girl saw the vision of the Virgin up a gulch in the Pyrenees mountains, and how miraculous cures had been effected there ever since. The audience gaped and swallowed, and the daily papers laid a column of the drivel before their readers the next day. It is our opinion that if a brass jackass should get into a Catholic pulpit and hee-honk for an hour, every daily in the city would record its bray as gospel truth.

THE Examiner, of Monday, the 8th, says: "If a general European war should break out to-day, if President Harrison should be assassinated, the pope leave Rome, and Queen Victoria take up her residence in San Francisco, it would be interesting to see what column would first enchain the attention of newspaper readers to-morrow. It would be tolerably safe to bet that three out of four would look first to see how the Sullivan-Kilrain fight had turned out." This is a humiliating confession, all the more so because true. And the press is largely responsible for the deplorable amount of interest taken in prize-fights. It makes heroes of men on account of their brute strength, their agility, and their hitting powers; yet there is not a man in the world as strong as horse, as agile as a monkey, or with the hitting power of a mule.

MR. COLIN M. BOYD, of the supervisory finance committee, has proposed a scheme which will save the city of San Francisco about a hundred dollars per month, but it is doubtful if its results will be beneficial. Heretofore the commissioners of insanity have been paid for examination of persons suspected of lunacy, whether the patient proved to be insane or not. Mr. Boyd proposes that the doctors shall be paid only for commitments. From an economical point of view the proposition has everything to commend it, but it is nothing more nor less than a bribe offered the commissioners to find every person insane who is brought before them. Considering the liability of sane people to be condemned under the present system, it seems hardly necessary to adopt Mr. Boyd's scheme to populate the asylums.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, July 14, at 8 o'clock. Hon. F. B. Perkins will lecture on "Persecution."

NEWS AND NOTES.

The Oregon mist enveloped Woodburn, fold upon fold, and it did not look very promising for the first Freethought lecture to be given here. But I was happily disappointed. The few Freethinkers did their work well, and the hall was nearly full. A fair beginning has been made.

Mr. W. M. Cline and family, formerly of Silverton, are now residents of this thriving place, and it was mainly through their efforts that the campaign was opened. They are all thoroughly devoted to the cause, and not afraid of work or the avowal of principles. I had a pleasant sojourn in their new home, and I could not find greater encouragement than among these generous allies who contribute youth and enthusiasm to the advance guard.

The misfortune of sickness cast its shadow upon our effort. Mrs. Cline was seriously ill, and our heart-felt sympathy is with our good friends, and hope for health and brightness again.

Major Leonard and others aided in the enterprise, and evidently there is a favorable Freethought element in Woodburn.

H. E. Nelson, son of our friend Nelson, of Stark's Point, W. T., is now located here, and he is one who can be counted on every time for the colors.

From Woodburn I take my way to Canby, where the Methodist camp-meeting is in full blaze. The skies are cloudy, and in view of the unfavorable signs we hold our meetings in the school-house. We have a larger number than the big tabernacle at the camp-ground. Sunday morning I go to the camp-meeting. About one-half of the multitude linger outside, and seem to enjoy the sunshine and neighborly talk better than the sermons. The sermons have the old refrain. This morning it was on "Sanctification," and the "sanctified" ones were expected to come forward and stir up the sinners. But the sinners seem to be few and far between. They don't put in an appearance. Conversions are scarce. If one does emerge, however, they make the most of him, and give him credit for every possible enormity in order to make him a "burning and shining light." The other day the following confession was made, and the Amens came thick and fast: "I was a horsethief" (Amen! Amen!); "I have had murder in my heart" (Amen! Amen! from all parts of the house); "I have been on a drunk for the last three weeks" (Amen! Amen! Thank the Lord! etc.). The significance of these ejaculations was somewhat bewildering to the bystanders. Evidently the brethren felt they had got hold of a sinner of the first water. Hence the delight manifested.

In the afternoon I lectured in Lee's grove, and there was quite a large attendance. Owing to the uncertainty of the weather signs, there was not a great number from abroad, but enough for a good hand-shake. In the evening the school-house was full to overflowing, and many went away for want of room. The audience was twice that of the camp-meeting, although the ministers "volleyed and thundered." The result is quite encouraging. If the Freethinkers of Canby would club together and build a hall, they would be the commanding element in the community, and I look forward to the carrying out of such an enterprise.

L. P. Howard is one of our earnest workers at this point, and, take them altogether, from the grandfather and grandmother, who are still in the prime of life, to the little babies, the Howards make a regiment for Freethought. The babies are just as ready to stand up and be counted as the veterans, and are not at all afraid to express their sentiments upon the platform as well as elsewhere. I found them jolly coadjutors, both when asleep and awake. Beneath the trees and in the changing sunshine and cloud, Mt. Hood glittering magnificently through the vista, I pass a delightful day in this rural home, where labor mingles with cheerful thought and the inspirations of the glad to-morrow.

Mr. and Mrs. George Knight are also among our genial entertainers, and Miss Ella and Miss Laura, the children, are of our "band of hope," although Miss Ella, who has a bright genius for music, does play for the orthodox Sunday-school; but the next time, in the new hall, I expect she will make the strains vibrate for liberty and progress.

Down by the grove Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Lee and family keep the gentle fires of Freethought aglow upon the hearthstone. The grandmother likes to speak a good word for orthodoxy, but I guess that comes from a natural benevolence for the "under dog" in the intellectual fight, which of course is creditable to head and heart. The Lees are Liberal in every direction, and take in both worlds with a broad vision, and don't lose the glory of earth in the contemplation of summerland. The beauty of nature and the spirit of humanity blend in this forest temple.

Wm. Barlow, the orthodoxy of whose wealth is thoroughly recognized by the churches, is a staunch Secularist, and is ready always to lend a hand and keep the wheels of progress in motion. He proposes to give $50 for the new hall. Mr. Lee offers twenty. If others respond like this it looks as if the Church of Humanity would prevail. Dr. Knight is one of the "peculiar people." It is pretty difficult to tell which side he really belongs to. He attended all the lectures, and said he should watch me close, and catch me on the hip if possible. However, he didn't seem to find the occasion, and, take it all in all, it strikes me the doctor defends orthodoxy only in a Pickwickian sense, and I don't believe he expects to be an angel according to John Calvin or St. Paul.

Wm. Knight, Mr. and Mrs. Holmes, Mr. and Mrs. Dasheil, Mrs. May, and others are in the ranks of progress. W. W. Jesse and friends were present from New Era. Mr. Jesse says he has been dead and buried since I saw him last, having had a severe attack of typhoid fever, but he still remains in the flesh as large as life. George Johnson was present from Oregon City, and he has determined with the ringing of the Bell to make an attack on orthodoxy. Mr. J. E. Coates has taken to himself a better half since I was here, and all agree that this is both fair and Wright.

Tuesday I return to Turner. Our friend Mrs. White, who received such severe injuries, did not recover consciousness, and died on Saturday morning and was buried on Saturday evening. A bright life was suddenly quenched in darkness. Helpless to avert the dread disaster, the heart is still strong to revere the memory of one who has made so much sunshine for this world. Mr. White is recovering, and bears his sufferings with fortitude. Although 76 years of age he seems to have the energy of youth.

Uncle Small and Grandmother Small greet the pilgrim with Liberal cheer. Uncle Small is bound to hold the fort, if nobody else will. He doesn't take very kindly to the clergymen, but is willing to give them a square meal if they will pay the average price. He doesn't believe in supporting the churches, for he declares that he can do his own preaching if he wants any.

Dr. and Mrs. Matteson, of Aumsville, have worked faithfully to bring out the Liberal element in this land of orthodoxy. The Methodists and Campbellites have it about their own way. The audience was quite slim, but I am not discouraged. The Freethinkers might present a good front if all would show their colors. Many just now are afraid to do this. It is a matter of business to keep still and let the churches rule.

Wm. Sims stands for Freethought like the granite hills, and he was with us at Turner—always a generous pioneer.

The birds of the air shall tell who else was present at Turner. It should be sung, not written.

Molalla, with its splendid success, will give courage for a year's hard work. I arrive here July 3, and give an afternoon discourse to about two or three hundred, but the gala day is the Fourth of July, and I don't believe there was a grander celebration anywhere in the state. At dawn the thundering salute greeted the unfurled banners, and from mountains and woods far away, and streams and fields, wended the solitary horseman, the crowded wagon, the buggy with just room enough for two, the hack with always room for one more, the buckboard swaying like the wind, and vehicles of various sort. Some traveled on foot. All trooped to the magnificent grove where the gorgeous sunlight, from a cloudless sky, was softened and glorified in the thick green branches, and the glittering arcades made a cool retreat for the multitude. By ten o'clock two thousand had gathered together in the spacious forest—a bright, varied, cheerful gathering of men, women, and children—all intent on a glorious celebration of the nation's holiday. The Molalla Brass Band discoursed music whose martial strains floated with the starry banner.

Robert Divine gave a bright opening speech and then read the Declaration of Independence. That is the kind of a divine we want, one who never utters a prayer, but talks good sense. I then gave an address on "The Centenary of the American Republic." After that came music and dancing. President Trollinger gave me a seat at his table, spread upon the greensward, and the lunch proceeded to the entire satisfaction of all. In the afternoon the multitude again came together, and I addressed one of the largest assemblages of the campaign. A good many orthodox were in the crowd, but they took the matter presented without much ado. Afterward sounded the music for the young folks and dancing, which was kept up until the silver moon took the place of the golden sun. The old folks gradually dispersed. Everything was peaceable and a more enjoyable picture was never presented than these woods, alive with people, where not a single boisterous or quarrelsome word was spoken. I believe that this was the largest gathering, under the auspices of Freethought, in the country. The grove makes a most beautiful temple of nature and humanity. Near by is Wright's spring, the most sparkling water I have yet tasted. Our Molalla friends may feel proud of this superb gathering. The day was brilliant, and never was hope more shining for the hosts of Freedom.

A large number of names were received for the Oregon State Secular Union, and the work is thus going forward to ever larger results and broader fields.

Our Molalla friends intend to make Wright's Grove a central point for this section—to build a pavilion and accommodations for visitors. This delightful spot will be historic in the annals of Freethought. The verdant, delicious scenes shall feel the throb of freedom's undaunted soul.

If I begin with the Wrights and the Trollingers and the Klises and the Linns, where shall I end the bright roll of the hundred and more friends I met at this brilliant festival? To name them all would take quite a page of FREETHOUGHT, and so we must let the names rest in happy memory while the faces and the greetings shall be for hope—hope of the splendid future, when humanity "shall be good and great and joyous, and beautiful and free."

The forest sings along our pathway its hymns of cheer. The rivulet and the fountain sparkle to the answering flowers. The sky rolls away its clouds and gives its sweetest face of blue. And when the sunset comes the golden banners answer to our flag of freedom. And the silver moon, shining through the glorious roof of leaves upon the twinkling feet that keep time to merry strains, and the midnight stars hailing the white sea of dawn; these will make more beautiful the path of toil. And all of Nature's wealth and glory shall weave eternal promise for the struggling heart.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

A DEFENSE OF CATHOLICISM.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I am at a loss to understand why Liberals should continually turn their heaviest guns against the Catholics. From close observation and a life-time acquaintance with them, as well as other denominations, I am inclined to believe that of all the religious sects in the United States the Catholic is the most consistent and the most conservative.

It matters little to us what has been done in olden times, or what is still being done in foreign countries. The burning of "John Rogers" and Servetus is now nothing to us. If the Catholic clergy are plotting the overthrow of our republican government, and the establishment of a hierarchy in its stead—as many seem to think—it is no more than Protestantism is openly and boastfully attempting.

The Catholic bishops of the United States have frequently declared that no such conspiracy among them has ever existed, and that they, as a religious sect, have no desire or disposition to interfere or to meddle with governmental or national affairs. There is nothing in the history of Catholicism, in the United States of America, to warrant a denial of this assertion.

I hold that all religions (and especially the Christian), whatever forms they may assume, are dangerous to our liberties; and it seems to me that Liberals and conservatives have enough to do to watch and guard against the constant encroachments upon their liberties by the ignorant and howling fanatics of the Protestant churches. Much has been said of late about illiteracy among Catholics. This senseless outcry I believe to be false—lying statistics to the contrary notwithstanding. I am not prepared to say that the Catholic religion is not as good as the best, or that the Catholic schools are not as free from sectarianism as any other. I am not sure that Catholic education is not superior to the fussy, experimental, and bugological teachings of Protestant schools; or that Catholics as a class are not as intelligent, as law-abiding, and patriotic as any other. Let us give the devil his due.

J. C. P.

Turlock, Cal., June 30, 1889.

We believe that no Liberal has ever criticised the Catholic church for inconsistency or lack of conservatism. It is quite a consistent institution. It has always been consistently wrong. It has always advocated intolerance and has always practiced it. The church of Rome is likewise conservative. It is opposed to innovations, and therefore to progress. We differ with our correspondent, however, when he says it "matters little to us what has been done in olden times, or what is still being done in foreign countries." An institution is to be judged by its record rather than by its promises. We know that the Catholic church has ruined every country in which it has had the controlling power. As Ingersoll says, it reduced Ireland to a harp, Spain to a guitar, and Italy to a hand-organ. Ireland is still under the heel of the pope, who has always intrigued with her enemies; Spain is the most ignorant, superstitious, and Catholic country on the globe, and only since Italy pushed the vicar of Christ from the throne of the Cæsars has that nation been more than a mere "geographical expression." In America the church attacks about the only institution of which we have any reason to be proud, namely, the public schools. She has already captured every other citadel. Our politicians blacken the shoes of the pope's minions whenever ordered to do so. The Catholic vote is bought and paid for with political favors. Wherever there is a strong Catholic element, as in our large cities, government is corrupt, illiteracy is on the increase, and the prisons are crowded; and a majority of the corrupt, the illiterate, and the criminal are Roman Catholics, although that church claims only one-sixth of the entire population.

The burning of John Rogers counts against the Catholic church, and so would the burning of Servetus if the Catholic church had had anything to do with that crime. Murder on the record of a church forms as great a blot as it does on the record of an individual. The church still justifies the persecution of Galileo and the burning of Bruno, and shows no repentance over the infamies which have marked her entire career. She would repeat them all if she had the power.

Our correspondent's doubt as to the truthfulness of charges against the intelligence, loyalty, and patriotism of Roman Catholics would disappear at once if he would take the trouble to inform himself on the subject. It is notorious that parochial school training is vastly inferior to that of the public schools. Even Catholic parents are aware of this fact, and the greatest vigilance is necessary on the part of priests to keep them from withdrawing their children from church schools and sending them to the public institutions. In all competitive examinations, civil service and other, the pupils of parochial schools fall far behind. As to the law-abiding character of Catholics, the prison statistics are a sufficient testimony. Archbishop Riordan found six hundred of his co-religionists at San Quentin, June 23, 1889, and two hundred and fifty of them received the "sacrament." In the matter of patriotism Catholics differ from other citizens in that they own allegiance to the pope of Rome, a foreign potentate, instead of the government of the United States.

When Mr. J. C. P. has carefully digested these facts he will have no further excuse for being at a loss to know why Liberals should continually turn their heaviest guns against the Catholic church.

A RELIGIOUS DISCUSSION.

A very interesting discussion of orthodox religion has just been published in the columns of the Fresno Republican. It was opened innocently by Judge J. W. North, of Oleander, who addressed the editor of the Republican in order to call attention to the Rev. Minot J. Savage's striking article in the June number of the North American Review. The judge alleged that Mr. Savage had shown the "utter baselessness of the popular religious theories known as orthodox," and added that the article, coming from one of the ablest thinkers of the country, was fraught with deep significance.

There seems to have been no occasion for a reply to Judge North's letter, but the Rev. Martin Judy felt called upon to say something, and he supplied the public with the information that Mr. Savage had been assaulting evangelical Christianity for many years, and that if he should keep on for twenty years longer "he might have about as much effect upon it as a little child would have upon Gibraltar if it should attempt to demolish that fortress with its little fists."

Judge North replied by asking the Rev. Mr. Judy what constituted orthodoxy, and whether he had not recognized vast changes of front in religion within the past few years. During that time the church had given up many things which it had been heresy to question. Men who once lost eminent positions for their opinions had been reinstated and their views accepted. Once Genesis was the Gibraltar, but it had been demolished by science, and geology reigned in its stead.

The Rev. Mr. Judy, in rejoinder, asks "permission to pass over the alleged facts and take up," etc., etc. Judge North, in returning to the fray, says that the reverend gentleman's wish to "pass over the facts" reminds him of a man in the lower part of the state who used to say, "Laying joking aside and throwing facts in the shade, we will go on," except that Mr. Judy did not care to lay joking aside; he only wanted to throw facts in the shade. The judge then gives his authority for the facts previously stated, and implores Mr. Judy to consider them. But Mr. Judy, in his next letter, is as obdurate as ever. He desires to leave vexed questions to God, while he goes on preaching the gospel as he understands it, and drawing his salary. He goes back to the original figure of Christianity as a rock with Infidels hammering their fists against it. And then he withdraws from the discussion; and considering the small amount he accomplished his readers will probably wonder why he ever went into it.

Judge North, in conclusion, expresses regret that a discussion which was just approaching some important truths should have ended so suddenly, and intimates that if Mr. Judy had given his readers more facts and less dogmatism, and had appealed to reason instead of authority, he would have had more influence with the people at large.

This discussion, we learn, has attracted more attention than anything of the kind that has ever taken place in Fresno. With the consent of both parties we should be glad to republish it in full. Also anything further that either may have to say upon the same subject.

THE CHEERFUL GIVER.

The appended letters deserve recognition in eloquent thanks. The writers have placed us and this paper under the deepest obligation:

HUDSON, N. Y., June 23, 1889.

MESSRS PUTNAM & MACDONALD: I inclose twenty dollars toward sustaining the publication of FREETHOUGHT, and hope for you that success which, if dependent on your efforts, would be assured. Your ambition and enthusiasm in the cause will naturally incline you to continue the publication of FREETHOUGHT so long as there is a fair prospect of its becoming self-sustaining within a reasonable time, without which I would caution you to discontinue before allowing the paper to impoverish you.

Faternally yours,

J. A. SMITH.

Unfortunately, or fortunately, as the case may be, there is no chance for FREETHOUGHT to reduce the circumstances of its publishers. They are of the class who have everything to gain.

Another letter—this from an earnest, talented, and Liberal woman—reads briefly:

NIPOMO, July 2, 1889.

EDITORS OF FREETHOUGHT: Inclosed please find fifteen dollars, which, with what I sent before, makes the amount of my promised contribution for 1889. Wishing success to FREETHOUGHT, I am very truly yours,

MRS. JOHN ROBINETT.

Surely success ought to follow such encouragement.

An unexpected friend in the new state up north introduces himself laconically with this note:

ROSALIA, W. T.

TO THE EDITORS OF FREETHOUGHT: Inclosed please find twenty dollars. You will send FREETHOUGHT to my address and that of another sent herewith. The balance you can use as you please. WM. FISK.

To all these excellent friends, and to others whose helping hands have been extended, we again say, Thanks! They may have the satisfaction of knowing that it is through their sacrifice that FREETHOUGHT at present exists.

Then, again, here is a letter whose advice should not be overlooked. It is from W. F. Freeman, of Stockton, who sends two renewals and three new names, and writes:

"It won't do for you to be dependent on contributions. You must have a good paying list of subscribers, which can be secured to FREETHOUGHT by every present subscriber paying promptly his own dues and getting a new patron once or twice a year. A little money and effort from each would assure success and win deserved credit for Liberalism."

Mr. Freeman is one of those exemplary Liberals who follow the advice they give to others. He is an indefatigable worker for FREETHOUGHT, which is indebted to his efforts and influence for two score subscribers in Stockton and elsewhere.

Nothing could be better for the paper than that each subscriber should consider himself an agent authorized to solicit and forward subscriptions, reserving the expense incurred for posting, registering, or purchasing money orders. In this way our list would increase with constantly accelerating velocity.

In the foregoing letters friends have laid before them both example and precept. It seems to us that the example must prove contagious, and the precept be considered worthy of following by all who find it practicable. In that belief we ask our patrons to give the matter their serious attention.

BOUND volumes of FREETHOUGHT for 1888 may be had for $2.50.

THE people of North Yamhill, Oregon, celebrated the Fourth of July this year in a manner creditable alike to their liberality and their patriotism. A long procession, in which were thirteen young ladies dressed in white, and on horseback, representing the thirteen original states, marched to the music of a brass band to a grove near the village. Hon. Lee Loughlin, who presided, made an appropriate speech from the stand, and a young man read the Declaration of Independence. Patriotic songs by half a dozen singers, and the sweet strains of the band, made the woods vocal with music. Many had come from different parts of the state to hear the oration announced to be delivered by B. F. Underwood, and this was a prominent part of the celebration. There were present 4000 people. The oration was bold, direct, and dealt in a vigorous manner with current questions of a national character. It praised Paine for his great services, and spoke of the importance of the complete secularization of the state, and yet it gave general satisfaction, and was liked the better for being a departure from the old stereotyped Fourth of July oration. A barbecue, a base-ball game, athletic sports, and a trotting match on the race course, were among the features of the day. No accident and no disturbance of any kind marred the harmony of the celebration, which was enjoyed by old and young. An effort was made by the committee of arrangements to secure a minister to open the proceedings with prayer, in deference, no doubt, to the wishes of the religious element; but the effort was not successful and there was one celebration from which prayer was omitted, as it was from the Constitution of the United States. The affair is pronounced the most successful of the kind ever held at North Yamhill.

DR. WESTBROOK's article on "Infidelity" recently published in FREETHOUGHT and other Liberal papers sets forth the author's objections to that term quite learnedly. Nevertheless the world has elected to call us Infidels; Freethinkers have accepted the title, and there seems to be no help for it. There is nothing opprobrious about the word as generally understood and employed, and the many great names marshalled under its banner would redeem it if there were. In the ultimate analysis there are objections to almost any name unbelievers in Christianity could assume. Even "Freethinker" is ambiguous, since there can be no absolute free thought. People think according to evidence, which they cannot control, and free thought is as unthinkable as free will. He who would be a free thinker according to the original meaning of the words must throw off the influence of facts and experience, provided such a thing were possible, and form his conclusions without premises. "Freethinker," however, is a title that Infidels or Rationalists have chosen, and, as understood, it answers the purpose admirably. And, after all, if a consensus of the competent should decide that the word Infidel or Freethinker was inappropriate and objectionable, there would still be a large number of the most active opponents of sacerdotal encroachments who would declare that either was good enough to describe their attitude toward current superstition, and go on using one or both just the same.

THE pope has sounded an alarm of war, and announces his intention of leaving Rome for some place in Spain. A correspondent of the New York Herald says: "The pope, through the cardinal secretary of state, has sent a copy of his lately pronounced allocution to all the powers, accompanied by a note asking whether they will interest themselves in his condition or not. No decision will be taken until the result of this new note is seen.

I have reason to believe that the Italian government has foreseen and provided against the effect of this note with the powers. It is certain that all reports of the pope's departure are disseminated from the Vatican itself. They are, therefore, generally believed to be merely the means of exciting the attention of Europe, but I have reason to believe that in certain events his departure may really be decided upon." Catholics in this country place little dependence upon these rumors, as, should the supreme pontiff leave his present quarters, his title of bishop of Rome would be forfeited. A pope living outside of Rome would be like a president of the United States residing in a foreign country.

HENRY W. GRADY, of Atlanta, Ga., got off this piece of flapdoodle the other day before the graduates of the University of Virginia:

"Let it be understood in my parting words to you that I am no pessimist as to this Republic. I know that my country has reached a point of perilous greatness, and that strange forces not to be measured or comprehended are hurrying her to heights that dazzle and blind all mortal eyes—but I know that beyond the uttermost glory is enthroned the Lord God Almighty, and that when the hour of her trial has come he will lift up his everlasting gates and bend down above her in mercy and love. For with her he has lodged the ark of his covenant with the sons of men."

There are men on this coast who will bet dollars against doughnuts that Mr. Grady does not know what he is talking about.

THE Pacific Union, a paper "devoted to the interests of Laborers and Producers," takes the Twentieth Century across its knee and gives the editor a whaling for expressing doubts about the efficacy of prayer. There ought not to be two sides to a question so easily settled. If Mr. Hines, of the Pacific Union, believes that prayers are answered, let him make a test case and pray for something. If he can show that prayer brings the desired object, all skeptics will be put to rout. We believe, however, that Mr. Hines is sufficiently intelligent to know beforehand that he may pray at a mark the rest of his life and never hit it.

FAITH-HEALING has claimed another victim. Numerous deaths have occurred in East Los Angeles in families where "faith-cure" is practiced. Physicians are not called and sick persons are not permitted to receive medical care. The last case is that of the two-year-old son of the Rev. William Shepherd, of the Holiness church. The boy was taken sick with diphtheria, and no remedy except prayer being administered he died July 4. The parents are described as cultivated and intelligent people, and perfectly rational upon all questions except the efficacy of prayer.

WE are once more cheered by the weekly recurrence of our esteemed contemporary, the Golden Gate, the only Spiritualist paper on the coast with a forty-thousand-dollar bequest. By the way, the Gate still publishes its "form of bequest" for the use of those who wish to leave it money. Does it want the earth as well as the spheres?

THE Freethinkers' Magazine for July reports that its five-dollar sustaining fund is in a flourishing condition. We note among names of donors several who have extended the helping hand to FREETHOUGHT. May prosperity attend Brother Green and all his generous patrons.

THE faith cure kills two where it saves one. Ed. French, a wealthy real-estate dealer of San Diego, went crazy recently from mental excitement caused by attending "divine health-cure" meetings, and died July 4.

THE Blair Sunday bill in Kansas is to be discussed vigorously. The Rev. Mr. Gault has been employed by the Christians to champion the bill, traveling over the state for that purpose, and W. F. Jamieson has been sent for to follow Gault and challenge him for debate everywhere throughout Kansas.

"THE Glory of Infidelity," by that clear reasoner, Samuel P. Putnam, has been placed upon our table, and we find it an epitome of thought, embodied in twenty pages." So observes neighbor Choynski, of Public Opinion.

It is said that twenty-thousand copies of "John Ward, Preacher," have been sold since the work was issued in paper covers.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The business portion of Bakersfield, Kern county, and many residences were destroyed by fire last Sunday. The loss is placed at one million dollars.—Gen. W. A. Pile, who was known during the war as the "fighting parson," died at Monrovia, July 7, aged 61.—The military bandsmen who obeyed the order of the Musical Union instead of their superior officers, and refused to play on the Fourth, are undergoing court martial for mutiny.—Two millions' worth of property went up in flames from Ellensburg, W. T., July 5. The people left homeless appeal for aid.—A. Waite, editor of the Santa Ana Herald, fell dead as he arose from his bed Friday morning, the 5th. He was an old settler and pioneer newspaper man.—Five constitutional conventions are now under way in Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Washington, and Idaho.

Striking laborers in Duluth, Minn., assaulted a body of policemen last Saturday with clubs, stones, and firearms. They were repulsed with a loss of thirty killed and wounded, and quieted down.—Thomas Ewing Sherman, son of General Sherman, went through the mummery of ordination as a Catholic priest at Baltimore last Sunday.—Hailey, Idaho, was burnt out last week. Losses foot up nearly a half million.—The extension of Chicago's boundaries give the city a population of 1,200,000.—The Massachusetts Rifle Team, now in England, has won several matches from British marksmen.—The Conemaugh valley has been deluged again with floods and the temporary improvements swept away.

A dispatch from Rome says that the pope has indicated his preference for Cardinal Lavigerie as his successor.—Thomas P. Gill and Joseph R. Cox, Nationalist members of Parliament, were arrested in London Sunday. They afterwards left for Drogheda in charge of officers.—Wilkie Collins, the English novelist, has suffered a partial stroke of paralysis, and his condition is considered serious.—Many of the friends of Henry George are urging him to become a British subject and enter Parliament for a Scotch district.

BOOKS.

We have for sale at this office, among other works:

"Yone Santo." 50 cents.

"John Ward, Preacher." 50 cents.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible." 15 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Annual" for 1889. 25 cents.

"Liberty and Morality," by W. S. Bell. 15 cents.

"The System of Nature," by Baron D'Holbach. $2.

"Robert Elsmere," by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Price, 50 cents.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

Judge Maguire's "Ireland and the Pope," a history of papal intrigues against Irish liberty. Price, 50 cents.

"JOHN WARD, PREACHER," has been issued in paper covers and can now be furnished for 50 cents.

Taylor's "Diegesis," by the Rev. Robert Taylor. A discovery of the Origin, Evidences, and early history of Christianity. $2.

OBSERVATIONS.

Some weeks ago FREETHOUGHT printed a story from the other side of the Atlantic relating how an ignorant Irish mechanic put four 7's on a coffin to express 28, which was the age of the deceased. When the priest at the grave-side read the inscription he remarked pathetically that Michael was only 7777 years old, and then exclaimed, "Tare an' ages! how did he escape the flood?" The exclamation, I thought, contained the nub of the joke, but it seems I was mistaken, for the Argonaut now gives the yarn and winds it up with the words, "He was seven thousand seven hundred and seventy-seven years old."

This shows how easy it is for different people to have different ideas about what is really funny, and reminds me of the Methodist Bishop Huntington's attempt to repeat a joke in an article that he contributed to the Forum a few years ago. The pun, which was an old one, originally consisted of the sarcastic remark that when the Puritans landed in the New World they first fell upon their knees and then fell upon the Aborigines. The bishop, as I remember, put it forth in a new dress. He said they "first knelt in prayer and then fell upon the previous inhabitants."

Another case of the lost joke occurred when Mr. C. B. Reynolds and myself were giving stereopticon lectures. He had a picture labeled "Sunrise." It represented a little girl looking out of the window in the morning. In our rehearsal, when he was getting off his "cackle," as he called his descriptions, he said, "This represents sunrise, or daughter-rise." I added "if you wish me to particularize." He accepted the amendment, and that night gave it to the audience as "sunrise, or daughter-rise if you want to be particular about it." He thought the joke a success, but I felt as though my amendment had been lost before it got to the house.

Col. Elliott F. Shepard says the deity sent the flood upon Johnstown. The Rev. Dr. Nelson, and several other local parsons, make a similar charge. So it seems that those who have the most love for God are the first to accuse him. Another view of the matter is given by Elder Bartlett, a Seventh-Day Adventist, who repudiates the above hypothesis, and throws the blame on the devil, who, he avers, was present in proper person and superintended the disaster. And now, totally ignoring these able theories, the coroner's jury returns a verdict to the effect that the weakness of the dam caused the accident. In view of these conflicting opinions, a few indictments are in order. The accused parties should be brought into court and plead to the charge, so that an anxious world may know once for all whether the Johnstown horror was caused by Satan, Jehovah, or Jupiter Pluvius.

C. Severance, of Los Angeles, knows when to rejoice and when to weep. He is the carpenter who beat the six day's record walking for work, and then came to the conclusion that if times were as dull in Judea in the first century as they are in Los Angeles in the nineteenth, the probability was that the Son of Joseph went into the redeeming business not so much to save the world as because he could not get anything to do at his trade, and had to make a living some how. Mr. Severance is moved to write as follows:

REASON TO REJOICE.

EDITOR "M.": There is something so marked and characteristic about the style and expression of certain writers, that their productions can be instantly detected; and we do not have to read the article entire and signature attached to discover the author. As I read the "poem" on page 391 in FREETHOUGHT I was so forcibly struck with the Walt Whitman style, that, except for a few admissions made by yourself, I should certainly have thought him the author. I have no recollection of ever seeing such a close imitation; and when I encountered the line beginning, "Ah there, Victoria. I greet you," the close resemblance to his "rude, firm" style was so noticeable I shouted with joy. Here, said I, is reason to rejoice, for the mantle of Whitman (who will ere long "pass over" and cease to produce his abnormal poetry) has fallen upon one who bids fair to rival the original inventor of that kind. The Pacific Slope has risen equal to the emergency, and we behold a new candidate for fame immortal, with monument and dinner included. As an humble admirer of the "good gray poet," I greet you and salute you as a most worthy recipient of his mantle, which, though it has fallen a little more previous than usual, has done so none too soon to allay the fear that the supply of that kind of poetry was soon to be exhausted. Your first effort to supply the public demand is a grand success, and no "expert" can conscientiously say, as some of the unappreciative have said of Whitman's own productions, that "it is extravagant, paradoxical, hyperbolic, nonsensical, insane, dull, vile, nauseous drivel." The whole poem is so clearly comprehensive that its entire meaning is grasped even more readily than the following beautiful and touching lines from Whitman himself:

"I am old and young;
Of the foolish as much as the wise;
Regardless of others, ever regardful of others
Maternal as well as paternal;
A child as well as a man;
Stuffed with the stuff that is coarse,
And stuffed with the stuff that is fine."

But comparisons will only serve to show the superiority of your efforts, and not believing any more are necessary to establish that fact, I will close by hoping you will keep on until all who hunger for the style embodied in "Leaves of Grass" are fully sated. Thine truly, C. SEVERANCE.

I quite agree with Mr. Severance that my poetry is a good deal better than anything Whitman ever wrote. I am now engaged in critically comparing my "Farewell to the Rev. Samuel Jones" with fragments from Tennyson's "In Memoriam." If I decide that mine is the best, Whokeen Miller will be called on to defend his title of poet lariat.

The proceedings of the last meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society were deeply interesting. The little hall was full of people, mostly intelligent. Mr. Kellogg exercised the piano with musical results; Vice-President Eastman filled the chair with dignity and efficiency, and an increased number of ladies gave the assemblage the appearance of an enlightened congregation. Brothers Ferguson and Pingree, by being absent, disappointed those who are always glad to welcome a large Alameda county contingent, though others from Oakland were there as usual.

A song from the Cosmian Hymn Book having been sung by all who possessed a voice attuned to melody, the Chair introduced the speaker of the evening, Professor Teuschel, who spoke upon the subject of Volapuk, the newly-invented language designed to supersede Chinook, Pigeon English, and other commercial dialects now employed on the coast. The next to the last letter in the word volapuk is pronounced like a German u un-laut, and should have two dots over it. The sound may be produced in this country by arranging the mouth in proper shape for drinking out of a spring, and then saying "ee" in a calm tone of voice.

Professor Teuschel's accent indicates his German origin, and the way his name is spelled shows the necessity of a reform in current orthography. In opening his address the professor drew attention to the need of verbal intercourse among people of diverse vernaculars, and said there were three ways to accomplish it, namely, by the employment of interpreters, by learning foreign tongues, or by the adoption of a universal language. He considered the last method the easiest, and Volapuk had been invented to make it possible. Some have claimed that English is adapted for universal use, but he rejected that view. English grammar and orthography were irregular and inconsistent. A language whose spelling was so flexible that a word spelt Constantinople might be pronounced Jerusalem without violating the rules of orthoepy did not recommend itself for world-wide adoption. The author of Volapuk, the speaker said, is John Martin Schleyer, formerly a Catholic priest, but now retired from the church. Professor Schleyer knows fifty languages, plays nine musical instruments, and is a poet and journalist of ability. He has translated Volapuk into twenty-one languages, and publishes a paper that has a circulation of three hundred thousand copies. Professor Teuschel added that the news of his having lectured before the San Francisco Freethought Society would be communicated to the above journal and spread to all parts of the world. Volapuk is largely made up of existent languages, being one-third English, one-fourth Latin, and one-fifth German. The rest is original. The professor said that Volapuk was not calculated to replace any national tongue, but to be the language of commerce and travel and those having foreign correspondents.

Professor Teuschel offers to teach Volapuk to the members of the society free of charge if a class can be formed to study it. The printed grammar of the language costs fifty cents, and can be learned in a few hours.

Remarks upon the able and instructive address to which we had listened were opened by Professor Miller, who mentioned the large number of persons now speaking the English language, which he believed would one day be universal. The more obscure tongues and dialects were dying out and being superseded by the language of dominant races, particularly English. The lecturer, however, had convinced him of the practicability of introducing Volapuk, although he had come there prejudiced against it. It would prove vastly useful as a commercial medium of intercommunication, and he wished its teachers the greatest success.

Mr. Jones, a Welshman, said that English was gradually driving his native tongue out of existence, though his countrymen were making efforts to preserve it. He held that a common tongue among the less educated classes of large cities would be of great value, as it would put laborers of different nationalities on a better understanding.

Brother Schou said that previous to hearing Professor Teuschel he had put the lecture down as probably the worst of the season. Since hearing it, however, he had changed his mind entirely. He was in favor of almost anything in the place of English, which he had found it impossible to master. He had not been able to express himself intelligibly since he left Copenhagen. Spelling troubled him most. He wrote words the way they sounded to him, but, some way or other, his correspondents couldn't seem to understand what he was driving at. Mr. Schou is fast becoming a humorist, and will be elected to deliver a set address before long if his talent continues to develop at the present rate of speed.

Professor Teuschel closed the discussion, saying that it was for the use of persons in Mr. Schou's dilemma that Volapuk had been invented. He related a very interesting test to which the new language had been submitted in Europe. The editor of a German paper called the Echo took an extract from a scientific work, printed in German, and had it translated into Volapuk, in which form it was sent to two Volapuk students in each of twelve countries, with the request that they translate it into their native tongue and return their translation to the Echo. The two translations in all cases agreed with each other, and were, besides, better translations than could be made from the German direct to the other tongues.

The professor expressed his pleasure at addressing the Freethought Society, as he was sure of a thoughtful audience. The society, upon motion of Mr. Faust, gave the speaker a hearty vote of thanks for his excellent discourse.

At the next meeting Hon. F. B. Perkins will speak upon "Persecution," and attendants may be certain beforehand that they will listen to a thoughtful and highly literary treatise on the subject.

DURING the past few weeks B. F. Underwood has been lecturing in Oregon, at Portland, Salem, McMinnville, Lafayette, Silverton, Scott's Mills, Markumville, Ranier, North Yamhill, Forest Grove, and other points. He will remain in Oregon during July and August, speaking at several other places in the state. His address for July is North Yamhill, Or., care of Hon. Lee Laughlin.

W. F. JAMESON will deliver four lectures in Monte Vista, Col., Sundays, July 14 and 21. Freethinkers in Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas, and Missouri can now engage him to deliver a course of lectures. During the fall and winter he will lecture in the Eastern states. Address him at Coryell, Colorado.

CHRISTIAN UNFAITH.

We believe it was that noted divine Dr. McCosh, of Princeton College, who said the church had more to fear from a weak and illogical defense of its theories by foolish and inconsiderate preachers than from all the attacks of Infidels. The fact finds ample illustration in the following editorial in the Seattle press of the 20th inst. The editor says:

We see it stated that Johnstown sufferers have lost all faith in Providence, and that some of them have thrown away their Bibles.

This is all nonsense. Any system of theology that teaches that such an accident as the breaking of a defective dam was the "act of God" is rather "too thin" to respect man's faith in his maker. Common prudence would have suggested the strengthening of the dam, and had its suggestions been heeded this great calamity would have been prevented. "Water will run down hill," so says the old proverb, and it is very certain to do so when there is nothing to prevent it. The leaving of that body of water in its unsafe condition was the greatest act of criminal negligence the world has ever seen. Man must suffer for his own folly and neglect, and he ought to blame himself and not Providence. The man who violates the laws of nature must suffer the consequences, for there is a penalty attached to every infraction of these laws, and that penalty is always inflicted on saint and sinner alike. One of nature's laws says fire will burn, and the man who puts his finger into the fire will be very sure to get it burned. The citizens of that ill-fated valley had no right to believe and did not believe that the eternal laws of gravitation would be indefinitely suspended to shield them from the legitimate results from their negligence. Nor do they believe that this fearful affliction was the "act of God." Perhaps a few who have blunted moral conceptions and whose minds are crazed by grief, may have been guilty of using unbecoming language, but it is not probable that any great number of the people have lost faith in an overruling Providence. The people of Seattle might with greater propriety say that the burning of their city "was an act of God," for it was caused by an accident against which they had no means of providing, yet it would be criminal folly to claim that it was an unjustifiable act of Providence.

Here is a professed Christian (at least we infer so from his attempted vindication) who at one stroke wipes out of religious faith the idea of miracle, the foundation upon which the whole fabric of Christianity rests. - "Water will run down hill," will it? How about the water of the Red Sea, which stood like walls while the Israelites passed over "dry shod?" And that river whose waters rolled back when smitten by the prophet's mantle? Didn't water run down hill in those days? "Fire will burn," will it? How about the fiery furnace and the three Hebrew children? How about the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, where God sent Lot to warn the righteous of impending ruin? And there's the flood. Did not God send Noah to warn the people of the terrible affliction that was to come unless they departed from their wicked ways? Is there not now a God in Israel? Has he of whom it was said "not a sparrow falls to the ground without his notice" gone into a far country? And have the votaries of the church abandoned the belief in miracles? True, no prophet came to warn the citizens of Johnstown; no, not even the righteous among them, of a deluge as real and as terrible to them as was that which we are told covered the whole earth to the then inhabitants. No Lot came to Seattle to tell them to up and away while the Lord purified that fated city with fire. Nay more. The man who flew to warn the people of Johnstown of the coming flood was himself overwhelmed and drowned.

Is it not also written that to him who has faith "all things are possible, even to the removal of mountains?" Were there no prayers of faith at Johnstown? Can the surviving mothers of Johnstown forget the little girl who, with bended knees and hands and eyes raised to heaven, prayed to her maker from a floating roof while the torrent hurried her to destruction, and not feel that such a sight should move him who notices even a sparrow? Have these mothers blunted moral perceptions? That is what the Press says of them. In one breath it says water will run down hill, sweeping thousands to a watery grave, that fire will burn, though life and treasure melt before the flames, and in the next assures us of an overruling Providence. A religion such as the Press seems to advocate is like the play of "Hamlet" with Hamlet left out.

It is idle to prate of the negligence of the people of Johnstown. The many were doubtless ignorant of the danger. Fault or crime, if there be any, lies with the wealthy who kept the useless reservoir in existence for their own pleasure. But however this may be, the effect will be the same. Believers in all religions lose faith in the God who deserts them in their hour of trial, and the statement of the Press that God does not interfere with the laws of nature is equivalent to an admission that there is no God—at least of the kind the clergy have taught us to worship.—The Commonwealth.

DID JESUS CHRIST RISE FROM THE DEAD?

II.

But, to come to exoteric grounds. The first "evidence" of the resurrection I will allude to is that of the resurrected one himself. Christ ventured a prophecy in regard to his own death and resurrection; and, to support the resurrection story, the prophecy turned out false! Quoth he: "Behold we go up to Jerusalem; and the Son of Man shall be betrayed unto the chief priests and unto the scribes, and they shall condemn him to death and shall deliver him to the Gentiles, to mock and to scourge and to crucify him; and the third day he shall rise again." "The Son of Man shall be betrayed into the hands of men, and they shall kill him; and the third day he shall be raised again." "An evil and adulterous generation [Christ's polite and gentlemanly reference to his contemporaries] seeketh after a sign; and there shall no sign be given to it but the sign of the prophet Jonas; for as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of Man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth." Now, distinctly the "Son of Man" was not three days and three nights in the heart of the earth. I am quite well acquainted with the apologetic quibble of Christian theologians in regard to the Jewish mode of computing time, and that it is contended that the day on which Christ was buried and the day on which he rose from the dead should each be reckoned as a complete night and day. The Holy Ghost inspires Mark and John to disagree by full three hours as to the time of the day when Christ was crucified, and the other two gospels do not mention the hour at all. But all the four gospels seem to agree as to the hour when he gave up the ghost—namely, 3 P.M. of our time. We know when his grave was first declared to be empty; so, in order to determine how long he remained in the tomb, it is of the utmost importance to determine when he was buried.

According to the custom at such executions, Christ and the two thieves should have remained on their respective crosses till they expired, even if, as was often the case, they did not expire for several days. But, in this instance, the Sabbath of the Passover was at hand and it was unlawful for a body to be left on the cross on the Sabbath. The Sabbath commenced at sunset. If the culprits were not dead by that time, their death must be accelerated. The two thieves—who seem to have had more vitality than their fellow-sufferer, the "Son of God"—were found not to be dead, so their legs were broken, to put an end to their sufferings. Christ was taken for dead, so they did not take the trouble to break his legs; but a soldier wantonly pricked him on the side with a spear, and in conformity with the law, all three were taken down before the Sabbath began.

But after the Sabbath had commenced, "when the even was come," Joseph of Arimathea called upon Pilate to beg the body of Jesus. The time of the Passover was about the beginning of April, when sunset in Palestine would be from half-past eight to nine o'clock, in our time. The word translated "even" in Matthew and Mark means late at night, or at a late hour. Joseph of Arimathea did not go to Pilate till the even had come, and it would, no doubt, take him some considerable time to be introduced to the presence of Pilate, to present his petition, to go from Pilate's residence to Calvary, to obtain the body, to embalm it, and to carry it to the rock-tomb in the garden. Candor must compel the reader to admit that it would hardly be possible that Christ could be placed in the tomb before ten o'clock on Friday night, according to our time; and really the facts of the case make it more probable he could not be buried till close on midnight, or about three hours after the commencement of the Jewish Sabbath.

Having dealt with the hour of Christ's burial, let us advert to the hour when he was discovered to have left the sepulchre. This can be fixed with tolerable precision. Matthew's words are: "And late of the Sabbath day, when beginning to dawn towards the first from the Sabbath." The dawn would, in Palestine, at that time of the year, be about half-past three o'clock in the morning, of our time. "And when the Sabbath was past, Mary Magdalen and Mary the mother of James and Salome had brought sweet spices that they might come and anoint him. And very early, the first day of the week, they came into the sepulchre, at the rising of the sun." But when they arrived at the tomb, early though the hour was, Christ had already risen! No exertion or quibbling ingenuity can possibly, when the matter is thus candidly examined, demonstrate that Christ was in any imaginable sense three days and three nights in the grave. If Christ could make from ten o'clock on Friday night till half-past three on Sunday morning three days and three nights, he would perform quite as striking a miracle as rising from the dead. Neither did he rise on the third day from his burial. Taking it for granted that he had only just risen when the Marys reached the tomb—and, as I will show, he had risen many hours before that—he had been in the grave only twenty-nine hours and a half, which is not equal to a day and a half, inclusive of night, whereas there are seventy-two hours in three days; in other words, he did not, even on this hypothesis, remain half the time in the grave he had prophesied he would. It must be remembered, however, that he drew a parallel between his three days and three nights in the heart of the earth and the residence of Jonas for three days and three nights in the whale's belly, and I have no doubt he was quite as long in the heart of the earth as Jonas was in the whale's belly—perhaps even longer.

*By Saladin, editor of the Agnostic Journal.

And this is the sort of thing the Christian religion admits it is based on. It thereby concedes that it is a phantom, sitting on a shadow, eliciting the worship of fools. The Lord's other prediction in regard to his post mortem exploits is quite as unfortunate as his three days and three nights affair. He promised to one of the thieves that he should be with him that day in paradise. Now, from the Apostle's Creed—and surely it ought to know—we are informed that Christ did not go to paradise at all, but that "he descended into hell." When the crucified and broken-legged thief reached paradise, and could not find "the king of the Jews" there, but was told "he had gone to hell," he must have felt wroth that the Jew had gulled and deceived him. Hundreds of thousands since, O crucified and broken-legged thief, have had thy experience of this Jew! With all the piety and reverence that the subject deserves, may I ask if this Jew found hell too hot for him, that he returned before his time, thereby enrolling himself in the list of false prophets, and throwing ever since the necessity upon his hireling priests of attempting to juggle twenty-nine hours into the length of seventy-two.

But I think I am able to show, on incontestable evidence, that, if Christ rose at all, he rose on the very day on which he was buried. According to Matthew, a guard of Roman soldiers was placed at the entrance of the sepulchre to watch that no dead person came out, and that no living person went in. But Matthew admits that one night had passed before the guard was placed at the door of the tomb. If Christ rose at all, he rose on that night. Every one acquainted with Roman militarism, with its unbending and inexorable discipline, does not need to be assured that the smartest corpse that was ever laid in a tomb would not be able to pass a Roman guard without being reduced to the kind of corpse that does not require a sealed stone and a squadron of soldiers to keep it from rising. If Christ rose at all he rose before the soldiers walked sentry in front of his tomb; in other words, he rose on the very night of the very day he was placed in the tomb. The story of the Roman soldiers falling asleep is too feeble and clumsy to merit serious refutation; and that the soldiers were bribed to say they slept is, if possible, more preposterous still. The penalty for sleeping while doing sentry work would be death, and it requires a rather liberal bribe to induce a man to offer himself for instant execution. If there be any such bravo on record, I have not heard of him, and I cannot quite see what use the bribe for which he gave his life would be to him, even if he took it with him into his coffin.

The most extraordinary Roman soldiers that Rome ever heard of were those soldiers that were set to watch the tomb of Jesus.

They managed to fall asleep simultaneously in order to allow Jesus to pass unseen, and when they awoke for a bribe they deliberately committed suicide by admitting that they had slept—an admission that meant instant execution. Was ever invention so stupidly desperate and mendacity so recklessly absurd as that invention and that mendacity upon which rests the story of the resurrection, upon which the whole fabric of the Christian faith has elected to stand or fall? The base is too pureile to support a story told by an idiot for the purpose of imposing upon a fool. Being buried about ten o'clock P.M., and getting up and leaving the grave before sunrise the next morning, is Christ's way of "doing" three days and three nights. He had been only about six hours on the cross, and was a young and presumably healthy man of thirty or thereby. An ordinary man of his age would live as many days on the cross as he lived hours; for, no vital organ being injured, the sufferer hung by the hands and feet, first in pain, and then in stupor till he ultimately expired in syncope and exhaustion. A nail through each hand and a nail through each foot for six hours did not and could not kill Christ, or any other fairly strong man of thirty. Joseph of Arimathea's tomb, although attractive enough to induce a real corpse to remain there permanently, was not attractive enough to be the permanent residence of a person recovering from a swoon and finding that he was fairly well, thank you, except for certain pricks and scratches upon his hands and feet—troublesome enough in their way, but not sufficiently serious to keep him, at a safe distance, from laughing at the Roman soldiers keeping guard over an empty tomb.

It would require higher authority than that of Christ and his biographers to convince any classical scholar that he escaped from the tomb after the Roman guard had been set. That every soldier on the vigil slept at his post is one of the most incredible of the incredible statements we are expected to believe in order to be "saved." Go to the excavated streets of Pompeii, which lay for nearly two thousand years buried in scoria and lava. Vesuvius spoke in thunder, and belched hell. Multitudes, frantic with terror, were photographed by Death; and their imperishable presentments yet remain! But, amid the huddled and distorted masses of fleeing and panic-stricken men and women, there is one form that stands to this day erect in stone—one who from the iron lines of duty and discipline could not be forced by Vesuvian thunders, nor driven by Vesuvian fires; but who stood erect at his post, daring and indomitable, while the gulf of burning lava deepened and deepened around him, now reaching to his knees, and now to his unconquerable heart. That sentinel's petrified remains speak to us of the character of Roman militarism—of its sense of discipline and duty. This is the type of the man whom the writer of the gospel according to Matthew libels by alleging that he slept at his post. Let the stony lips of that exhumed sentinel of Pompeii speak. Their daring and triumphant silence proclaims that Matthew is a slanderer and Christianity a lie.

PUTNAM REVIEWED AGAIN.

On Sunday evening, June 30, at the Christian church in Ukiah, I was quite well entertained by Elder Sherard's review of Samuel Putnam's lecture on "Moody and Sam Jones" delivered at the opera-house on the 9th inst. The elder's discourse was delivered in his usual eloquent style, although his method is rather lawyer-like, presenting the most favorable points of testimony for his side of the question, and suppressing such as were unfavorable.

Withal, I must say I was agreeably disappointed at the gentlemanly manner in which he handled his subject (notwithstanding the discourse consisted largely of sharp criticisms, instead of sound logic), and its freedom from the vituperation or slanderous epithets so commonly dealt out to Freethinkers in theological discussions; and after all his sharp criticisms of Infidelity, on some points there appeared to be perfect agreement between him and Mr. Putnam. Mr. Putnam said it was truly marvelous how such men as Moody and Jones could succeed in gathering so large congregations, but concluded it was through the shrewd management of the church—"the church having put on a business suit." To all of which the elder readily gave assent; and as a "matter of course," he said, "she meant business." Here I will remark that my intention at the outset was not to review the reviewer at length, but just to make a few remarks as to the coincidence between the reviewer and the reviewed.

Now Putnam, in his lecture, adverted to some of the leading church doctrines, such as predestination, or election and reprobation, total depravity, etc., in other words, the Calvinistic creed, as at least being a branch, if not the foundation, upon which Christianity rests. And here again is a perfect agreement between the elder and Mr. Putnam, as the former said he "did not pretend to defend Calvinism."

Elder Sherard announces his subject for next Sunday evening's discourse—"Freethought, What is It?" Therefore, we will wait patiently for the conclusion in order to be able to determine how far the elder has progressed in his conversion to Infidelity.

Ukiah, Cal., July 5, 1889.

T. McC.

Queries for Believers.

If God devised the Christian plan
To save from hell poor sinful man,
And has the means to do the work
What causes him the job to shirk,
While Satan takes the most and best,
And you've hard work to get the rest?

If Jesus suffered on the cross
To pay for sin, to save from loss,
Poor sinners worthy to be crammed
In fires eternal with the damned,
How is it for two thousand years
The crowds still go with moans and tears?

"If peace on earth, Good will to men,"
Was sung by angel voices, when
Your Christ was born who came to save
The wretched marching to the grave,
Why do all Christian nations still Use rifles, swords, and guns to kill?

Why don't you tell the rich their sins
And show where modest virtue wins?
Why preach in fashion's temples grand
While those you talk to steal the land?
Their thievish plans so well succeed
Because religion hides the deed.

The gospel to the lost you preach
Should bring some help within their reach.
But all your claims to heavenly aid
Seems useless, unless money's paid,
And all your talk of "love to God,"
To common people sounds like fraud.

If Christ returned among the poor
As once you say he came before,
You'd crucify him now, as then,
Because he cursed fine gentlemen.
Our pharisees, like those of old,
Are ready to sell their souls for gold!

Vain queries these, we don't expect
Replies to get from "God's elect,"
But if this truth's once understood,
Mankind is saved by doing good,
Salvation's road is simple, plain;
These queries are not asked in vain.

—THOS. CURTIS.

RELIGIOUS INTOXICATION.

There is no doubt that human beings often become intoxicated, although they may be total abstainers. Indeed, asceticism in one direction often tends to excess in another, and we cannot conceal from ourselves certain dangers attaching to modern religious observances. Some mothers very rightly object to their daughters, for example, spending the whole of Good Friday in church without proper food or sustenance of any kind. One lady states that her daughter commenced at six o'clock in the morning, and remained in church until five o'clock in the afternoon. After an hour's interval she returned to the church again, and remained there until late at night. Recently a service, entitled "Tenebræ," has been started by certain of the clergy, which consists of the gradual extinguishment of all lights as the service proceeds, until the whole building is enveloped in darkness. Mothers, quite rightly, object to the youth of both sexes attending such services, and they regard them as calculated to reintroduce all the vice and evil attaching to revivalist services of the past times. What with communions from 5 A. M. onward, watchings, confessions, church duties, and the multifarious services which certain clergymen now endeavor to induce young ladies to undertake, the happiness of many families and individuals is becoming undermined.

For a clergyman who is bound by solemn vows to inculcate morality, sobriety, moderation, virtue, and a tender regard for others, to use his church for organizing and enforcing religious excess in every direction is to prove himself an unfaithful steward, dangerous to the best interests of young and old alike. If some check is not put to the unwholesome excitements fostered by certain of the clergy, many a daughter's health will be undermined, if her life is not ruined, through the influence of her so-called father in God. In the interests of morality, of sobriety, of health, of sober sense, and of the national life we protest against religious excess of all kinds, and we look upon the clerical intoxication here referred to as a social danger which, if unchecked, must soon result in the degradation of many of the rising generation.—London Hospital.

A RELIGIOUS WIND.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Your correspondent attended the Campbellite camp-meeting at this place, June 27, where about sixty or seventy people were collected to listen to a sermon by the Rev. Mr. Sicafoose. During the singing Mr. Putnam (who was to lecture at Turner on that afternoon and evening) and another gentleman and two ladies walked in, and took seats in the auditorium. Blessed is the Secular lecturer who is unknown to a Campbellite congregation. There is no flutter in the audience, and no craning of necks and staring eyes, as if Old Nick had just walked in, and Mr. Putnam and party attracted no undue attention. The preacher was a pleasant speaker, and from his assumed premises got along as well as such speakers usually do. But he was illogical, of course; and if Mr. Putnam had been going to follow him he would no doubt have been more cautious. For instance, the speaker told of a "great Infidel, one of the greatest minds of the age," who had renounced Infidelity and espoused Christianity. But he prudently withheld the name. Well, supposing so improbably a statement to be true, what does it prove? Simply no more than a Christian preacher leaving the church and going over to the Infidel does—no more. An apostate from Christ does not prove that there was no Christ. Neither does an apostate from Infidelity prove there was a Christ. The facts remain the same.

And when the preacher said that a man in his sins could resist God, so as to render it impossible for God to turn a man from sinfulness, although greatly desiring to do so, he probably depended on the ignorance and stupidity of his audience, that they would not see how silly it all was. How can man be able to resist an omnipotent God?

Had an Infidel made the statement, from the rostrum; that the Campbellites taught that man was more powerful in anything than God, what a howl of pious indignation would have gone up from Dan to Beersheba! But to require a Christian preacher to be logical would be equivalent to requiring him to be silent. Small wonder that the air around about here became so impregnated with piety that "the wind" tore down the notices of Mr. Putnam's lecture! But what is strange is the report that this "wind," in some instances, wore legs and trousers, and in another, it wore skirts. This same "wind" also appears to have done its work in the night, lest it should be "seen of men," very probably. If "Infidels" (Seculars) cannot improve on this sort of civilization they had best quit. But Secularism here is growing, steadily and surely. It has come to stay; and orthodoxy will no longer have entirely its own way.

S.

Turner, Or.

"Looking Backward," a socialistic romance which has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin of Industrial Slavery," by Edward Bellamy. Price, 50 cents.

TALMAGE A FAKIR.

Speaking of poor shows, I went to hear Rev. T. De Witt Talmage this blistering Sabbath afternoon. He was billed to speak to a "mass meeting of young men" at the Y. M. C. A. Hall. No ladies were admitted, so the public supposed that things unfit for publication would be said. The hall, therefore, was well filled.

Any clergyman earnest in his profession would have been inspired by such an audience. Mr. Talmage wasn't. He faced a couple of thousand men, mostly young, and instead of talking to them like a man, and pointing out the superiority of a life of self-restraint and cleanliness over one of self-indulgence and dirt, he put himself on exhibition as an attraction for more than an hour.

The Bible as a book was his theme. He said things about it that he knew were not true, and that every man with the merest smattering of knowledge of biblical criticism knew to be untrue. He has a dreadful voice—worn, harsh, and stridulous. Yet with this organ, as discordant as a keg of nails, he essayed flights of rhetoric rivaling the rainbow in gorgeousness. You could see that they were not spontaneous, nor even prepared for the occasion, but were bits of old refuse garreted in his memory.

He drew pictures. One of his chaste and reverent imagings was the Savior on the world's stage, with the Old Testament prophets as an orchestra—Moses leading—and the twelve apostles as footlights. The greatness of God was illustrated by Mr. Talmage posing as David wielding the baton and leading a grand choir composed of men at the bottom, angels at the top, and clouds and mountains—the latter endowed with musical rocks and cedars—between.

He even gave imitations of the varying tones in which the Almighty calls back sinners who have wandered from the fold, fifty, a hundred, and a thousand miles.

I never heard anything so blasphemous before, so cheaply and prosaically blasphemous. Talmage is an actor, but a very bad one. He is pitifully self-conscious. He knows he is a humbug, but in addition to that he has the egotism of a Guiteau. A more unpleasant person can't be fancied. But he understands the crowd and succeeds with it. He is the tank dramatist of the pulpit.—Evening Post.

THE DARKEY'S PRESENCE OF MIND.

Not long after the war a circus came to Montgomery. It was the first circus that had been there in a long time, and attracted an immense crowd, especially of the negroes. The most interesting feature of the entertainment was the balloon ascension. The negroes had never seen anything of that kind, and regarded the spectacle of a man sailing up into the clouds very much as they would have looked upon Elijah going up in his chariot of fire.

The balloon sailed away eight or ten miles, and came down in a field where some negroes were plowing. Terrified at the spectacle of a chariot coming down from heaven, they verily believed that the last great day had come, and, remembering all their shortcomings, fled away in terror of the approach of the awful judge.

One gray-headed and rheumatic old negro was unable to get away. He could follow the plow, but could not run, and the chariot came down upon him with terrible swiftness. In that awful moment his whole life rushed upon him, he thought of all the petty sins he had committed, and the ghosts of a hundred chickens seemed to rise up in judgment against him. But in that desperate emergency his mind did not desert him, and remembering that politeness always counted with his earthly master, he quickly decided to greet the Lord of heaven and earth in becoming style. As the aeronaut touched the earth and began to untangle himself from the meshes about his car the old darky, with an air of profound obeisance, removed the wool hat from his shiny pate, bowed low and said with pious unction:

"Mornin', Mars. Jesus; how you lef' your pa?"—Atlanta Constitution.

EXTRA copies of No. 27 of FREETHOUGHT sent to Oregon subscribers this week are for campaign purposes.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Never "Backed Out."

To the Editors of Freethought:

Never in all my life did I "back out" from a debate. I am aware that one of Gaud's ministers has published to the world that W. F. Jamieson "backed out," to use his euphonious term. There is not a syllable of truth in the assertion. I will send soon the testimony of two unimpeachable witnesses that it was Braden himself, not I, that "backed out." I never saw one of Christ's ministers yet that had either sense or logic enough to cause any robust Infidel to fly the track.

Coryell, Colo.

W. F. JAMIESON.

Still Remembered.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed find $2, for which please send FREETHOUGHT one year to address given. You see I don't quite forget you. I intended to have sent you something for the fund before this. I am very sorry Mr. Putnam could not come to Boulder this year. The money was all subscribed for three lectures, and I did most of the soliciting myself, and could have raised much more if necessary. I tell you what, there are very few real believers here at present—none, I think. They think they believe, but not one could stand the test that Jesus was alleged to have given in the seventeenth and eighteenth verses of the last chapter of Mark. At least, I will offer $25 each for all that can stand that test, and let me apply it, as long as my goods and chattels hold out. Success to you and the paper. I have a few more names that I hope to gather into the great fold of your subscription list before long. Yours fraternally,

Boulder, Col.

L. Z. COMAN, M.D.

Ukiah Sustains Her Reputation for Christian Charity.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I see that in Mr. Putnam's "News and Notes" of Ukiah lectures he omitted one incident worthy of mention. His lectures were previously announced through our town papers, and just two or three days before the arrival of the appointed time, I began posting our bills; but I soon discovered the remains of the most of them scattered around the streets. However, as our supply of printed posters became exhausted, I resorted to the pen for reinforcements, and so kept it up day after day—always keeping two or three ahead of this "vandalism" until Sunday, when I found it necessary to engage a scribe to perform the writing while I sedulously plied the bill sticking. But Sunday, about the warmest day of the season, the task proving too much for me, I was obliged, in the afternoon, to invest an extra four-bits for an additional bill sticker in order to keep pace with the "vandals;" so at the end of the race we came out victorious, some two or three ahead and nobody hurt. Thus you see, Mr. Editor, Ukiah is determined, at all hazards, to sustain the reputation so conspicuously earned on Mr. Putnam's former visit. T. McC.

Ukiah.

"Looking Backward."

To the Editors of Freethought:

I received the copy of "Looking Backward," sent to me but recently, and have read it with considerable interest.

It was a convenient way, and not altogether impossible, the author took to project himself so far into the future. And how fortunate to have relatives of his first love discover his resting-place!

I can follow his picture of the happy future of mankind, and realize its easy fulfilment, conditioned, of course, on the educational principle. It is the most perfect, liberal, rational, and natural of any solution of the labor and social questions I have ever seen. How hopeful his twentieth century! How real his dream of the nineteenth, where he walks the streets of the old Boston, and where he comes to the home of the first Edith, and explains to those at table the condition of society and the causes, the remedy, and consequent comfort, plenty, and happiness. What surprise, aversion, scorn, contempt, and hatred is aroused. And how certain just such pictures will haunt the memories of coming generations, if, indeed, this present one passes without a vivid realization of some such objective lesson.

While I do not feel competent to criticise the work without another, and perhaps more careful, reading, I cannot help noticing that the second

Edith seemed not to belong to either the educational or the industrial order of the twentieth century. At least, she seems not to have had anything to do except shop a little, and entertain her newly-found Silurian or centenarian. It seemed a little odd, too, that she should choose the less perfect man of the nineteenth century instead of one of the more perfect models of her own time.

It may be scientifically blissful for man to enjoy the advantages of the future embodied in a lady love, but how about the woman who chooses a looking backward course?

J. C. WEYBRIGHT.

Hopland, Cal.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

From Talent I had a long all-night ride to Roseburg, where my young friend, and prince of drivers, and a true-blue radical, Jimmy Laird, met me and took me to Coos county on the ocean. We passed through the beautiful valley of Looking Glass river, which is very fine, but, shades of Sheol! it was hot enough to make the fabled father of lies ashamed of his best efforts to bake sinners. After a dinner at the Half-way House we climbed to the cool ridge of the Coast Range, where the panorama of snowy peaks, immense forests, the distant blue Pacific, the valley behind, was inspiration enough for once, and I rejoiced that I was a Liberal gipsy bound for I knew not where. We started down the western slope, and soon we found we needed our overcoats, for the chill, damp winds from the ocean greeted us with a hurrah that soon cooled the fevered brow. We journeyed down the north fork of the Coquille, a wonderful gorge or canyon, in many places only wide enough for the wagon, and so rough and rocky was our road that it seemed impossible that our "bus" could go much further. A pilgrim needed ten hands and a pair of wings to keep from falling out, sometimes, on the rocks a thousand feet below, or in a cataract of water. I have been everywhere except "on the hard road to Jordan," but this flying and falling down "the trail" of the Coquille takes the cake. But "Jimmy the Laird" brought us through to his ranch at the end of the canyon, safe and sound, only if we had been beefsteak we certainly should have been tender from the pounding we took.

The Laird family made us welcome to their Freethought home, where the clouds and the mountain-tops often meet, while the walls of this cavern hem us in, and the sombre forest in all its dark beauty closes around us like a pall. Here it was cool enough for a fire in the huge fire-place in one end of the room.

All things come to an end; so did my first night on the Coquille. One day more of these lovely roads, that did beat hell, and I was at Coquille City, where I met my friends H. H. Nichols and T. P. Brimegar, who had everything all arranged for a course of five lectures in the fine new hall. My stay in Coquille was very pleasant and profitable, but there is very little Freethought yet developed. Nichols, Brimegar, and Harrington are alone and have to do picket duty by paying the bills and skirmishing all along the line; but they are square-toed and live workers, and swear that Freethought shall win if it "takes all summer."

Myrtle Point, further up the river, was the next place to be taken, and it surrendered the very first night by the brass band (it was Sunday) playing "Hail to the Chief," "Hail Columbia," or hail somebody. Any way, the band is a splendid one, and all fine, noble, true-blue Liberals, who gratuitously opened all my lectures here but one. I found two-thirds of the town Freethinkers, and took a good list of subscribers for FREETHOUGHT.

Myrtle Point is a new town, but growing fast, at the head of steam navigation, and finely located among the myrtle groves and fir forests of the upper Coquille. Here I was at home at the Myrtle Point Hotel with G. W. Majory, Jr., proprietor. Here the weary traveler is at rest, and the table groans with the fat of the land, all for $1 per day. Where is the "Melican man" that could ask for more? Mr. Ed. Bender is the merchant and postmaster; Orvill Dodge, architect and builder; H. Schroeder, farmer and miller; Frank Poore, the barber and painter of the Point; Joseph Whitesill, Chas. E. G. Dietz, druggist; T. G. Lowe, who keeps the Exchange, a neat quiet place to read the news, take a smoke, or "get a nip;" Dr. Flentze, the only physician "in the city," and a gentleman and a scholar too, he is, with a big practice; J. C. Brown, landlord, keeps the Lehnerr House, and is marshal of "the city." This is another "grotto of comfort," where everything is first-class and home-like, but no room for orthodoxy with its old-time foolishness. Mr. Brown and wife are rustlers from away back, and are not afraid to keep the banner of U. M. L. flying. All of these and many more are among new-found friends and sturdy helpers.

I gave three lectures here to good audiences, read the life lines, past, present, and future, of a large portion of the people, bade them a Free-thinker's adieu of "good be with you," and stepped aboard the little steamer Ceres, for Arago, to meet my big-hearted workers for the cause, J. H. Schroeder and wife and eleven sons and daughters, who have for twenty years been carving out a splendid home among the grand old forests of Coos county. I gave four lectures here in the pavilion and skating rink to good audiences, who came from all around in the bush, and one good brother and friend came ten miles from away up in his mountain home. McNorton is a "crazy Spiritualist," but we need a million more just as lunny, to help open the door for Freethought to come in. There should be no fight between Infidels and Spiritualists; they can stand shoulder to shoulder up to the dead line, and then if our brothers, "the Immortalists," can show us the way "over there," there will not be a single Agnostic or Infidel but will gladly enter into the joys of the summer land, Ingersoll not excepted. Our work is the same here, to batter down the wall of superstition and elevate humanity. This country is full of Freethought, and a more intellectual, intelligent audience I seldom find. Putnam and Reynolds have done a grand work here. Brother Bell follows me, and several others will come to Coos during the fall. This is a good country to immigrate to. Crops never fail, plenty of government land all around in the hills heavily timbered, close to navigation, healthful, rich soil, good fruit country; very seldom any ice or snow, plenty of coal, cheap lumber, and fish; cool summers, very few flies or insects; everybody prosperous; very few mortgages, no railroads, but ocean ports, and big wages paid in the mills and lumbering camps. What more could a man ask for? And then the flag of universal mental liberty is flung to the breeze in every town and hamlet. This is freedom's outpost.

D. C. SEYMOUR.

THE SUMMER AND FALL CAMPAIGN.

S. P. Putnam has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Astoria.....Or., July ... 14,	Fox Valley.....Or., Sept. 9, 10,
Stella.....W. T., " 15, 16, 17,	Long Creek....." " 11, 12,
Oswego.....Or., " 18, 19,	Hamilton....." " 14, 15,
Arnold's Grove.. " 20, 21,	Monument....." " 16, 17,
Coos county, Or., July 22 to Aug. 4,	Hay Stack....." " 18,
Coburg....." Aug.....7, 8,	Lone Rock....." " 19, 20,
Lebanon....." ".....9,	Fossil....." " 21, 22,
Olympia...W. T., ".....11, 12,	Hillsboro, Or., Sept., 25, 26, 27, 28,
Buckley...W. T., ".....13, 14,	North Yamhill...Or., Sept.....29,
Davenport, " ".....17, 18,	Forest Grove... " ".....30,
Cheney... " ".....19,	Talent, Or., and vicinity Oct. 3, 4, 5,
Rosalie... " ".....20,	6, 7,
Sprague.. " ".....21,	Linkville.....Or., Oct. 11, 12, 13,
Pasco....." ".....22,	Sacramento.....Cal., Oct. 20,
Dayton...W. T., Aug.....24, 25,	San Francisco....." " 27,
Pomeroy...W. T., Aug.....26,	Los Angeles and vicinity the month
La Grange, Or....Aug.....29,	of November,
Union.....Or. ".....30,	San Diego and vicinity the month of
Baker City, Or. Sept.....1,	December.
Prairie City, Or. and vicinity, Sept.
4, 5, 6, 7, 8,

One thing the Irish people should remember—that every advance they have made, every right gained has been from non-Catholic leaders, while on the other hand, every loss, every degradation has come from their connection with the Roman Catholic church.—American Citizen.

"I do not believe that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, and so the object of this movement is an effort to change that feature in our fundamental law." So said Rev. W. D. Gray, secretary of the Missouri National Reform Convention. And he was afterwards elected secretary of the permanent state organization—the Missouri Sabbath Association.—American Sentinel.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—
"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—
ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS
(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to
L. K. WASHBURN,
Revere, Mass.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!
Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,
Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond".....	14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,

PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

Plenty Left Over.

In a certain church in Ireland a young priest was detailed to preach. The occasion was his first appearance, and he took for his text "The Feeding of the Multitude." He said: "And they fed ten people with ten thousand fishes." An old Irishman said: "That's no miracle; begorra, I could do that myself," which the priest overheard.

The next Sunday the priest announced the same text, but he had it right this time. He said: "And they fed ten thousand people on ten loaves of bread and ten fishes." He waited a second or two and then leaned well over the pulpit and said: "And could you do that, Mr. Murphy?"

Mr. Murphy replied: "And sure, your reverence, I could."

"And how could you do it, Mr. Murphy," said the priest.

"And sure, your reverence, I could do it with what was left over from last Sunday." —Glendale Encinal.

The Boy Preacher.

Clerical man—"Can I get a job to raise a little religious enthusiasm in your church?"

Deacon—"Who are you?"

"I'm a boy preacher."

"What is your age?"

"Sixty-five."

"You won't do. We don't employ any boy preachers under seventy this year."

At a written examination in religious knowledge held the other Saturday in connection with the Glasgow Sabbath School Union, the following question received some most ludicrous answers: "What led to the expulsion of our first parents from the Garden of Eden, and what punishment was inflicted on them?" One lad—he was over fourteen years of age—evidently anxious to answer as concisely as possible (according to the instructions given on the paper) wrote in a bold school hand: "Because they didn't no good nor evil and they were to crawl on their bellies all the days of their lives." —London Freethinker.

It was a quiet Sunday afternoon and she was reading to him the proverbs of Solomon. He was rapidly getting an attack of temporary oblivion. "Aren't they wonderful, George?" she said. "Yes, indeed," he replied; "if he had only mis-spelled his words, what a Josh Billings he would have made!"

PHOTOGRAPHER—"My dear sir, can't you assume a more smiling countenance and throw off that jaded look?" Rev: V. V. Heighton—"Take me as I am. I need a vacation this summer, and these pictures are for distribution among my parishioners."

CALLER at minister's studio (to clergyman)—"You seem to be busy?" Clergyman—"Yes." Caller—"What are you writing about?" Clergyman—"Don't know; I am writing a sermon."

"Your money or your life!" Pedestrian—"I'm just returning from a church fair." Street Robber—"Beg pardon. Here's five cents for car fare."

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmermann, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street.

Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.

G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents.

Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC
SCHOOLS.—THE NEW
AMERICAN PARTY,
A Criticism by "Jefferson."

Price, 10 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.
Price $1. Address, Putnam & Macdonald

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology
Price, 50 cents.

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35. for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

est Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see other column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK" SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "A graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" media-Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Kechler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Fellows' Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25; Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, $1.50; difference is in paper and binding. MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Temperance and Prohibition, THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question. Cloth, 75 cts. Address this office

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

Miners and Millmen Attention!

BEHM'SCentrifugal Pulverizer,

Guarantees to work One Ton

per hour of the Hardest

Quartz to a 40-Screen.

—ADDRESS;—

H. W. WALKER,

ASSAYER,

109 Montgomery Block,

San Francisco

In replying to this advertisement, mention Freethought.

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY. Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully, J. H.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors. DR. FELLOWS.

Wm. W. NOBLE,

Merchant Tailor.

1222 STOCKTON ST.

Bet. Pacific and Broadway.

DRESS SUITS A SPECIALTY.

Kearny and Montgomery St. Cars pass by.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St
N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falschhood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

USINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
RESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
ANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.
TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,
NURSEYRMEN.

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit
and Ornamental Trees and Vines.
Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.
Special Attention Given to Planting
and Caring of Orchards
and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA.

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or The Infidel Teacher 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENKER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

An old parson in a country town in this state recently made this singular statement in the course of a sermon: "They are wrong to cry so against tattle of women. It is sometimes of use. I find an example in the New Testament. At Easter why did not our Lord Jesus Christ appear first to men? Why did he prefer to show himself first to women? Simply for this reason—because the news of his resurrection would be sooner spread."—San Francisco Wasp.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle st., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science. The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social, and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months. 50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10 cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History, of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenzel, Millman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 804 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 50.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 35 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Diderot. Two volumes in one. Price, $1.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"The Glory of Infidelity" was one of the poet-secretary's happiest efforts, and ranks with the best speeches of the Congress.—New York Truth Seeker.

Putnam's "Glory of Infidelity" is one of the ablest defenses of Freethought to which I have ever listened.

JOHN E. REMSEBURG.

The lecture was "The Glory of Infidelity." No man or woman could hear it without being inspired by the heroic Infidel manhood and womanhood coming down to us as a rich inheritance through the dreary ages of the past, and pointing with glorious hope to the "New Heaven and Earth."

J. F. BECK.

I believe I express the unanimous sentiment of all when I say that for a lecture of its character, Mr. Putnam has never been surpassed and seldom equaled on our platform—a platform famous for the talent it affords. "The Glory of Infidelity" fairly bristles with good things, and each sentence is an epigrammatic Secular sermon.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary American Secular Union.

—PRICE 10 CENTS.—

Address PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Freemen, Guard Your Own.

Rise, Freemen, rise, if manhood be not dead;
The world's great tempest darkens overhead;
Sorrow gloometh,
Tyranny resumeth;
They triumph; may be we shall stand alone.
Freemen, guard your own!

Their ruthless host is aided many-fold
By lying priests and peasant's vote controlled;
All freedom vanished,
All true men banished,
They triumph; may be we shall stand alone.
Freemen, guard your own!

We hate not Christ, but Christ has lost his voice,
Our nation yields to grey barbarian's choice.
By tricks and spying,
By craft and lying,
And murder, was man's freedom overthrown.
Freemen, guard your own!

Rome's greatest scheme is how to capture power;
The priests now laugh, and reckon for the hour
When unrelenting
Can kill dissenting,
Till none are left to fight; till truth's outdone.
Freemen, guard your own!

Rise, Freeman, rise; put on your armor bright,
And guard thy heart; the source of every light.
Why waste they yonder
Their idle thunder,
Why stay they there to guard a foreign throne?
Freemen, guard your own!

J. GEO. SCHWALM.

A CINCINNATI saloon-keeper the other day paid a dollar for a sealed envelope containing directions that would enable him to sell more beer. When he opened it he found on a small card the words, "Don't sell so much froth."

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Faber.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

Prometheus. A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald
504 Kearny st. San Francisco

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 29.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 20, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan. 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JULY 20, 1889.

THE government has totally suppressed the Lutheran Church in Russia. This is one of the beauties of a union of church and state which the National Reform Association and the Roman Catholics are endeavoring to effect in this country.

IN commemorating their national holiday on the 14th our French citizens should not have neglected to make a prominent note of the fact that California is the only state in the Union except one whose laws would have permitted them to have their parade and other festivities on Sunday. The fall of the Sabbatarian Bastille is worth celebrating.

TO PROMOTE the advancement of knowledge the Daily Examiner gave a Paris Exposition ticket to the best scholar in our public schools. In pursuance of the same object the Examiner last Saturday devoted a half column of space to the ceremony of laying the corner-stone of the Lick Academy of Sciences, and two columns (illustrated) to a prize-fight.

THE laying of the corner stone of the new Academy of Sciences building to-day was remarkable in that neither prayer nor praise constituted a part of the ceremony. Of course the Academy knows its own business. But it seems to us that this is taking considerable chances in an earthquake country.—Daily Report, July 12.

The Report errs in saying that neither prayer nor praise constituted a part of the ceremony. It is true that prayer was very appropriately omitted, but all the speakers paid glowing tributes of praise to James Lick.

IN a letter to the editor of the London Agnostic Journal, the ex-reverend, ex-Infidel, ex-Spiritualist, ex-Theosophist, ex-Gnostic George Chainey defines his present religious belief. He says:

"In America the majority who have the name Freethinkers are merely No-thinkers. As a party, they think I am fickle and changeable, when every step I have taken has been impelled by one unchangeable purpose—to seek the truth in love. When I gave my lecture in Paine Hall, on the strength of which they reported me an orthodox Christian, I stated distinctly that I was a Buddhist and a Mohammedan as well as a Christian, and that I had no more fear of being called such, because, with Emerson, I saw that Jesus Christ belonged to the true race of prophets. He saw with open eye the mystery of the soul."

Mr. Chainey may possibly think he is searching for the truth, but he is looking in the wrong direction to find it. Buddhism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism, which he professes to have embraced, contain about all the errors the human mind is capable of falling into.

COL. ELLIOTT F. SHEPARD, president of the National Sunday-Law Association, owns a controlling interest in the Fifth avenue stages, which he refuses to run on Sunday. The American Catholic News explains why. It says: "The truth is that there is no money in running the Fifth avenue stages on Sunday; so they are employed in Central Park, where the demand on 'the day of rest' is greater than the stages run there on week days can accommodate."

SECULAR THOUGHT, Charles Watts's paper, published at Toronto, Canada, has changed its color and the style of its heading, and promises to take a fresh hold and advocate Secularism more powerfully than ever. There is need of it in Toronto, as Mr. Watts reports that in that city on Sunday "all business is suspended, street cars are not allowed to run, newspapers are not permitted to be sold, and the pulpits have a complete monopoly of public attention."

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, July 21, at 8 o'clock. H. W. Faust will lecture on "Travels and Views Abroad," illustrated by stereopticon.

NEWS AND NOTES.

It is a beautiful day on the Columbia river, which sparkles with a million silver billows. The low, green islands shine along. The soft hills, wooded, and interspersed here and there with green and golden fields, and ornamented with half-hidden dwellings, embrace the beaming stream. The boat sweeps along with boisterous song. The overhanging canopy, packed with white clouds upon the horizon, or spreading off into glistening smoke, in which luminous mountains are faintly seen, the central dome an intense blue, glorifies the mingling pictures ever changing around this sea-like tide. The day is a glorious and dreamy spell. The heart forgets labor, and only beauty, joy, wonder, fill the immense expanse. It is a day for hope of the far and perfect splendor of humanity, when these sweet scenes of nature shall be transformed to living virtues; when the martyrdom of man shall give its crown of fire to his paradise of love and peace.

I spent a few minutes in Portland with friend Beal, whose silver age still looks to the dawn, though sorrow's darkest wing has dimmed life's fairest jewel. A daughter has become a star of memory, and is no longer the morning radiance. But the enthusiasm of his spirit is undiminished, and he is ready for the work and victory. He is planning for a noble convention in Portland next fall, and I believe his brightest anticipations will be realized.

On the lofty hill overlooking the Willamette is the home of Mrs. Carrie E. Haight, East Portland, and here, whether early or late, I always find a hearty welcome and the atmosphere of genuine Freethought. The picture of myself, referred to in last week's "Observations," underneath the gorgeous Chinese pheasant with outspread pinions, is the work of Willie Haight, who delights and excels in the creations of the artist. Friend Sutton, formerly, like myself, a clergyman, has found out that humanity is too good to be damned, and has concluded to preach no more sermons, but lend a hand in the harvest fields of real life. Lois Waisbrooker is also in this charming circle. She looks as if she might melt away at any moment into thin air, but she is a sturdy reformer and has not the slightest idea of passing over, for she has a pretty large contract of radical work on hand. She is writing a book, and in the meantime talks good sound sense to our Spiritualist friends, and persuades them to let the "other world" go, and do a little hauling and pulling for the car of progress here. Of course this is not quite so nice as holding communion with the spirits, but it strikes me that it is supremely beneficial all around, and that the good spirits on the other side will not feel neglected if we cease to "commune," and take the laboring oar. I hope friend Lois will not give up her mission of keeping the Spiritual "express train, through," on the track of this world, where it can occasionally stop "twenty minutes for dinner." We can't help getting hungry, and tired, and sleepy, even if we are immortals, and there are times when it is a great deal better to eat than to pray. I therefore shout amen to this ardent, uncompromising reformer. May her shadow never grow less.

Our friends the Hights have what I call a good thing in the way of a fanning-mill, although I do not know anything more about farming and fanning than Horace Greeley. However, I can tell the difference between wheat and oats, and that it is a desirable thing to separate them. This is what the fanning-mill does in a very neat and expeditious way, superior to anything else on the planet. Our friends want somebody to come in with one or two thousand dollars capital and help to put this invention upon the market. They have already advertised in FREETHOUGHT, but I feel like calling special attention to this matter, for I know my friends to be thoroughly reliable. I do not want one to go on my judgment, but I do feel like saying to any who read these notes, and desire to go into business with a capital of one or two thousand dollars, that here is a chance—that is, they can inform themselves about the matter and judge for themselves. The object of FREETHOUGHT is to bring friends together in social communication, and if any benefit can accrue from this, all right. We don't want to go it blind in theology or business. Of course I lay down no law for poker. I don't know anything about it. Therefore if anyone is looking about for a business opening I simply advise them to enter into correspondence with Mrs. Carrie E. Haight, East Portland, Oregon.

Of course I called at Charlie Saunders's "corner grocery" where everything is in apple-pie order, and our friend Charles is kept busy, and like a Liberal gentleman as he is, popular with all. I missed Grandma Saunders and Miss Orlie, and the others, but they are in the golden sunshine of California, and I will not see them until November. Professor Seymour promised to put in an appearance for the Fourth of July, but he didn't do it, and so I missed a hand-shake. I understand that Portland is progressing rapidly. Well, October will tell the story, and two thousand Freethinkers, in convention assembled, shall give the pledge of the glorious "good time coming."

Saturday I come down upon Kalama like "the wolf on the fold." The Christians are startled. They didn't know what to make of the Infidel. Did he have horns and hoofs, or what? They tried to keep him out of the Grand Army Hall, but it wouldn't do. The lecture on Saturday night was in the school-house, and Sunday afternoon and evening, in the Grand Army Hall. There were not a great many present at the lectures. Only a few Freethinkers are here. They are good, what there are, and mean business. The Christians are ignorant and prejudiced. Between the two extremes there is a big mass of indifference. But the ball has been set rolling and it will roll on. My friend Geo. G. Svensson is a host in himself. He keeps the world moving round about Kalama. He has the cosmopolitan spirit. He has been quite over the world in the navy of the United States, and he has come pretty near being eaten by cannibals. Therefore he is not afraid of the Christians. He has a fine library, and keeps copies of FREETHOUGHT and Liberal journals always on the go. He was the wheel-horse at Kalama, and right gallantly did he do his duty.

W. D. Close, of the Havana House, is a comrade true, post-commander of the Grand Army here, and a Liberal. I greet him as a fellow soldier, and if any pilgrim is drifted to Kalama I advise him to go to the Havana House.

John Lysons, of Carrollton; C. F. C. Hoffman, Chas. Hunter, O. T. Skolend, Victor Wisell, and others, are in our ranks of Freethought, and having entered for the war they propose to keep the flag a-flying.

Kalama was once a flourishing place, with three thousand inhabitants. Then came the fire-fiend, and blackened ruins took the place of the busy settlement. The railroad removed its shops, and Kalama received what is called a "black eye."

But it has too good a location to be permanently disabled. It is county seat of Cowlitz county. It has good farming lands about it, off from the river. It is a profitable shipping-point, in some respects better than Portland. It has a delicious climate. Just now the views about it are delightful, in the glittering morning and cool, golden evening. The river is a mile and a half wide here, and presents a magnificent appearance in the floods of sunset or the splendor of the moon. Some day a fair and prosperous village will shine along these verdant heights, and the shore will greet the mighty river with the music of progress.

I am on the river now, as my opening sentences declare, and, having just taken a recess and eaten a splendid dinner, I am in a very happy frame of mind. I enjoy the majestic scenery. The boat skims along like a bird. The river broadens. The sea is coming with its shining leagues. The sky is softening, for the sun is sinking to its gorgeous couch. The clouds begin to quiver with gold. There are preparations for a royal night of a thousand stars and the silver moon—when river and the ocean meet, and each shall strive to give to the other the jewels it has gathered, the one from the mighty mountains and plains, the other from where the orient and occident mingle their resplendent hues.

F. C. Scharnhorst, widely known for his liberality and interest in Freethought, met me at Kalama, and stayed through the campaign, and is now with me on the boat, going to Astoria, Stark's Point, Gray's River, and Barney's. He is a soldier from head to foot, and is bound to be at the front and stand by the guns through thick and thin. He glorifies old age with the martial enthusiasm of youth.

Astoria looms in view, a city by the sea, of boundless possibilities. On the varied hillsides its dwellings glitter. The broad stream stretches to Gray's River and Stark's Point. The mountains are luminous in rugged forms. Beyond the bar the mighty ocean sends its million waves to the golden west. A beautiful scene indeed it is—a wonderful immensity of blazing lights and colors, and vast expanses, and blue heights trembling in the glowing heavens.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

On the Columbia, July 8, 1889.

LET SECULARISTS BE ACTIVE.

The Constitutional Convention of Washington Territory was organized last week, and on Tuesday the committee began the consideration of the proposed constitution. The Ministerial Association is making an active effort to secure exemption of church property from taxation. Owners of private educational schools will insist that they are entitled to the same exemption, and the two classes will form a pool for mutual aid. The Young Men's Christian Associations, the trustees of orphan and other "homes" controlled by the various sects, will present their claims to exemption, and so will the managers of private hospitals.

The friends of justice should organize at once and circulate petitions for the equal taxation of all property not owned by the United States, the state, counties, cities, or other municipal subdivisions. The exemption of private property from equal taxation should be prohibited, and to secure this end all in favor of it should send in to the member of the convention from their own districts their protests against such exemption.

The session may last but thirty-five days, as by that time the appropriation for expenses will be exhausted. Prompt action is therefore necessary to secure the required provision.

The people of the other prospective states should also take the same course with regard to any movement for the practical union of church and state.

THE FALL OF THE BASTILLE.

The French people made a good choice when they selected the date of the demolition of their state-prison as a day of celebration. The Bastille was something like the Tower of London, where many an innocent person has been imprisoned. The secrecy connected with it and the strictness of its discipline caused it for centuries to be regarded with horror and awe, for the unfortunate person who once found himself immured in the Bastille generally left hope outside. No one was safe while the prison stood. Any person was liable to be arrested and conveyed to it, unknown to friends, unconscious of the offense charged, and without any other form of law than the lettre de cachet signed by the monarch or a secretary of state. These orders, historians say, were sometimes given on the request of a court favorite, or royal mistress, with blanks to be filled up with names as they chose, and thus became the instruments of caprice or malice.

Voltaire was among the many other celebrated persons who occupied apartments in the Bastille. He spent nearly a year there on suspicion of having been the author of satires which gave offense to the royal aristocrats. One old man named Latude languished in confinement more than forty-seven years before the benignant Louis XVI. opened the door of his cell and gave him his liberty. It was outrages like these that led to the destruction of the prison and finally to the Revolution.

On the 14th of July, 1789, upwards of twelve thousand people, armed with whatsoever they could lay their hands on, appeared before the Bastille and demanded its surrender. The governor at first feigned compliance with their demands and then suddenly opened fire on them. This settled the doom of the old fortress. The people brought cannon to bear upon its walls and carried it by storm. Their first act was to set free the prisoners; the next to massacre the treacherous governor and his garrison. So the Bastille fell, and the municipality of Paris gave orders for its complete demolition, which were carried out. On its site to-day stands a large column erected to the memory of the heroes of the Revolution of July, 1830.

The 14th of July is particularly a day of the people. The aristocrats do not celebrate it, as is shown by the action of the commander of the man-of-war Duquesne, now in this port, who not only held aloof from Sunday's celebration, but forbade his men to take part in the exercises.

THE ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The laying of the cornerstone of the Academy of Sciences calls to mind once more the generosity of its benefactor, the Infidel, James Lick. California is indebted to him for the finest observatory in the world, and San Francisco owes to him her prospective School of Mechanic Arts, future free baths, and some of the finest statuary that stands in her public places. Add to these and other gifts the Pioneer Hall and the Academy of Sciences, and the great work done by James Lick begins to be realized.

The address of President Harkness, published in another column, gives a very good history of the Academy up to date. We can only hope that the future management of the munificent gift may be according to the intention of the donor, so that the institution may be an honor to him as he was an honor to the state, the country, and the world.

RANFORD WORTHING's address on "Law and Government" is creating some discussion in the San Diego Beacon, in which paper it originally appeared.

"The people of Johnstown," says the San Diego Beacon, "are losing their faith in providence. Samuel P. Putnam's 'Why Don't He Lend a Hand?' is now in demand among the disillusionized sufferers."

We have nothing to do with the differences between our Spiritualist contemporaries; but when the "Sower" speaks of Dr. Schlesinger's paper as the "Carrion Dove" we cannot help saying that we wish things were otherwise.

Our subscriber W. H. Galvani, of Spokane Falls, celebrated the Fourth by issuing the first number of his Labor paper, the Northern Light, a four-page weekly journal. Brother Galvani appears to have all the ability and enthusiasm necessary to successful journalism.

We can heartily indorse the New York Truth Seeker in its tribute to Mrs. Mary W. Bennett, the widow of D. M. Bennett, contained in the following words: "Mrs. R. B. Hayes, wife of Ex-President Hayes, is dead, stricken with paralysis and living but a few days after the stroke. The religious papers are extolling her to the skies. The Advocate says: 'Those who only heard of her religious ways and the exclusion of intoxicating liquors from the White House may have thought her bigoted, but those who met her there missed not the wine, such was the unaffected grace of her bearing and the charm of her heartiness.' Say nothing but good of the dead, is sound charity, but we cannot forget that it was Mrs. Hayes's 'religious ways' that kept D. M. Bennett in a prison cell for nearly thirteen long months, and brought the keenest anguish to another woman whose unaffected grace of bearing more than equals any charm Mrs. Hayes may have had, and who in her silent sorrow proved herself a thousand times worthier the name of woman than Mrs. Hayes in her regal power, as wife of a president."

THE Methodist Episcopal Church Conference has presented a memorial to the Constitutional Convention of Montana praying the convention to incorporate in the new constitution a clause relating to the strict observance of Sunday. They also pray for a clause prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all intoxicating liquors or stimulants as a beverage.

THE "New Ideal" for July contains thirty-two pages the size of FREETHOUGHT, and all but two are filled by a report of the Free Religious Association Convention, held May 30. The addresses were exceedingly able and interesting, though the speakers, as a rule, did not display a very great amount of robust infidelity.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The centennial of the fall of the Bastille was celebrated last Sunday. In San Francisco some 10,000 people took part in the ceremonies. Many buildings were handsomely decorated, and there was a long procession with numerous bands of music.—Several bloody murders have occurred recently in Chinatown, in which Chinese were the assailants and the victims.—Three prisoners were suffocated by fire in the jail burnt at Jacksonville, Or., on the 12th.—Bakersfield is rapidly rebuilding, about 60 frame buildings being now erected or under way. Brick blocks are to go up on the principal streets.—Fresno lost $300,000 by three fires last week.—Seattle sends thanks to all who have contributed to the needs of her citizens, and the Relief Committee states that it has sufficient funds on hand to meet all requirements.—The Italian Chamber of Commerce of this city has received information announcing the establishment of a regular line of sailing vessels to run direct between the ports of San Francisco and Genoa, Italy.—Miss Kate Field, the "Apostle of the Grape," who was employed a few months ago by the state board of viticultural commissioners to further the wine industries of California in the East, has tendered her resignation because of the adverse criticism by Governor Waterman upon her methods of handling the funds placed at her disposal.—The body of Jas. C. Flood, the California millionaire who died in Europe, reached this city July 10, and was buried in Calvary cemetery.

The current report that Secretary of State Blaine has resigned is denied on high authority.—The town of Princeton, Butler county, O., was nearly blown away by a cyclone last Sunday. It had thirty houses, a sawmill, and a schoolhouse, all of which are gone.—The strike of Andrew Carnegie's men in Pittsburg, Pa., is settled.—Hadji Hassen Ghooly Khan, the Persian minister to this country, has gone home. He appears to be a low-lived reprobate, and public sentiment has proved too much for him.—The Rev. E. F. Flemon, a colored clergyman, was arrested at Pittsburg, Pa., at the conclusion of church services July 9, and charged with being an escaped murderer from South Carolina.—The Rev. Hudson Smith, who fifteen weeks ago mysteriously disappeared and finally reached San Francisco, has returned to Boston. He does not explain his absence satisfactorily, but it is believed he was mentally deranged at the time of his disappearance. He will probably resume his pastorate at the Pilgrim church soon.—Johnstown, N. Y., has been flooded by a terrific storm, and fifteen lives and much property lost.

Parnell and other Irish leaders have withdrawn from the commission investigating the Times-Parnell matter.—The pope has set the cardinals to discussing the best place for holding the conclave to elect his successor.—The London correspondent of the New York Herald says there is a split in the Liberal ranks in the House of Commons, one party being represented by Gladstone and Parnell and the other by Bradlaugh and Labouchere.—A number of bishops have petitioned the Vatican to elevate Christopher Columbus to the position of a saint on the anniversary of the discovery of America.

OBSERVATIONS.

It is announced in the Golden Gate that Fred Evans will return to San Francisco on the next trip of the Alameda. Mr. Evans informs the editor of the same paper that many times while in Australia he has been a medium for the production of writing between slates sealed and locked together. I am authorized to offer Mr. Evans the current price for psychographic phenomena if he will cause writing to appear on the inside of the two slates prepared for him before he went to the antipodes.

The Hon. F. B. Perkins spoke at the last meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society. There was good attendance and no diminution of interest. Vice-President Lemme occupied the chair, welcoming the audience cordially, and expressing his pleasure at introducing to them the lecturer of the evening, who would speak upon the subject of "Persecution."

Mr. Perkins was greeted with applause. He spoke with great earnestness and rapidity, and covered a vast amount of ground in his hour's address. Persecution, he said, was the only method ever used with any effect against the spread of Freethought. But persecution was not always of a religious kind. It was the obstinate following with an evil mind of an enemy with intent to make him uncomfortable. There was newspaper persecution, consisting of mean attacks upon some public man. There was industrial persecution, when employees were blacklisted and refused work. In speaking of the early Christian martyrs, Mr. Perkins said that they were not persecuted for being Christians, but because they appeared to be undermining the state. It was not bigotry but patriotism which led the Romans to oppose the Christians, who composed a secret society and were regarded as conspirators. The pagans were not proselyters, and were totally indifferent to the religious belief of others. All religions with a hell were bound to persecute. The hellist justifies his persecution by arguing that the brief agonies he inflicts upon his victim are nothing to the punishment he is saving him from, and if his doctrine were true, it was good luck for an unbeliever to be persecuted. The Christian church persecutes for self-preservation. It has no other argument. Its first campaign was against astronomy, and Copernicus, Galileo, and Bruno were its victims. Defeated finally in this branch of science, it attacked geology, but fared no better. Then came biology, and the church lost again. The next war, Mr. Perkins believed, would be in the domain of psychology—the doctrine of the soul. This followed as a logical sequence, since the warfare began with astronomy, or the outer field of science; narrowed to geology, or the earth; thence to biology, or man himself. In the narrowing process the human mind would be the succeeding stage of conflict. The result will be the wiping out of all revealed religion and miracles. In all these conflicts the church has persecuted to the extent of her power. Clement VIII. had the power to burn Bruno at the stake, but his baffled successor, Leo XIII., could only seclude himself and make faces at the Freethinkers who erected the statue of Bruno on the spot where he was martyred. Protestants were in no sense behind Catholics in the matter of persecution. "That infernal scoundrel, John Calvin," was as bad as any pope, and hell was not of the slightest use without Calvin in it. Christian persecution is not so deadly, but it is just as mean as ever. It breaks out now in some act like the throwing of a kerosene lamp at a Freethought lecturer, as occurred in Ukiah; or tearing down posters, or slinging mud, as happens at other places. The way for Freethinkers to meet persecution and ostracism, the speaker said, in conclusion, was by organizing for strength, and leading upright and blameless lives.

Mr. Knight, following, argued that the teaching of religion by authority was the source of persecution. The church believed itself the mouthpiece of God and was impatient of contradiction.

Mr. Curtis referred to the Garden of Eden as the first scene of persecution by a corporation consisting of the Father, Son & Holy Ghost. This corporation had "no body to be kicked and no soul to be damned," and it locked out and black-listed Adam and Eve.

Mr. Jones offered some remarks about the persecution at present inflicted on the people of Siberia.

Mr. Williams awoke a lively discussion by suggesting that the collection be dispensed with and that a number of members who could afford it should subscribe from twenty-five cents to a dollar a week to pay expenses. He found it impossible to get outsiders there the second time after the hat had been presented to them once.

Mr. Schou arose in defense of the hat, and argued his case with such eloquence and was supported so unanimously by other speakers, that when Mr. Williams's motion was put to vote it was hopelessly lost.

The next meeting will be addressed by Mr. H. W. Faust, who will illustrate his views with a stereopticon. It is easy to foretell a lively lecture and plenty of fun.

I notice that in the Investigator of July 3 Mr. W. S. Bell reports his success as a lecturer in this city and Oakland. He spoke twice here, of which events he observes:

I cannot say that my not lecturing oftener and getting more pay for what I did is in any way owing to cheap Chinese labor.

About his effort in Oakland he says:

Mr. A. H. Schou made all the arrangements for my lecture in this city. He very kindly introduced me to the audience, and also acted as master of ceremonies in the matter of taking up a collection. I am still further indebted to the gentleman for reporting my lecture through the columns of FREETHOUGHT as "a very enjoyable lecture," as I consider that quite a compliment.

Mr. Schou always makes the arrangements for Liberal lectures in Oakland. He also presides, as a rule, and passes the hat, but this is the first time he has tried his hand at reporting. Mr. Bell may well esteem it a compliment that an exception was made in his case.

Mr. Bell continues:

June 6 I addressed a small but very select audience in San Francisco.

It is now the Society's turn to feel complimented, but I am sorry to say that Mr. Bell's description of his audience applies also to the collection taken on the occasion, which amounted to only $9.30.

In my report of this lecture I must have implied that there were whiskers on some of the speaker's jokes, for he argues:

After all, it is a question of taste as to the kind of wit one prefers. There is the venerable and antique style, abounding in hoary hairs, and though classic yet flavored mildly with decay and somewhat forcibly reminding one of "chestnuts;" while on the other hand there is the fresh and verdant joke, ornate with pin feathers, and so mild in spirit as to be liable at any moment to die with the pip.

Of course it is all a matter of taste, but the poet has remarked, or is about to remark, that

There's nothing so bright as the new,
There's nothing so dull as the old;
Better a joke with a feather or two
Than a tale that has been thrice told;
Better be fresh with the morning dew
Than covered all over with mould—
Better by several fold.

I am always on the lookout for gems of speech, though sometimes I cannot grasp the thought which the author has clearly expressed. Thus I copy the following from the London Agnostic Journal. It is part of a book review written by the editor, who says:

It is professedly the intuitional reminiscences of the soul of its planes of past existence, and divine adumbrations of its absorption into the Absolute. The aim of individualized entity is to cease to heterogenize and to aspire to homogenize, and the golden rule of wisdom—nay, a rule which in this materialistic age should be written in diamonds—is laid down: "Truth is never phenomenal, but always metaphysical." The Absolute is sequently affirmed to be pure abstract thought; and, as I have frequently insisted, the process of psychic evolution is distinctly from self-externalization into pure subjectivity.

I have not time now to catch the meaning of the above, but I am camping on its trail and may overtake it. As a home sample of lucid expression I quote a gemlet from a pamphlet on the "Soul's Absolute Proclamation of the Existent System," by J. Alexander Strever, of San Jose. Mr. Strever remarks:

The relative of a condition is the present manifestation of the combination of atoms constituting that condition of nature's gradations, evolving in life's cohesion of the combinations of the conditions of nature's evolution of life's molecular gradations of combinations of soul's universal ascendancy, to eternally reconstitute the same condition of nature at the same point in the existent compass of nature's gradations of combinations in soul's involution of universal descendancy.

A man who has such mental illuminations as that might make himself conspicuous at the head of a torchlight procession if he could time his fulgurations so as to hit a presidential campaign.

Of a different style, but no less striking, is the Fourth of July oration of Mr. Hook, delivered at Concord, in the very heart of Contra Costa county. I will ask the reader to gaze upon this:

The breath of freedom fills our valleys, is wafted to the monarch of nature—Yosemite. Yosemite booms it to Shasta; Shasta bows and reflects it to Columbia; Columbia ripples and dances it to the pines; the pines murmur it to the eternal glaciers of Alaska. The glaciers, with tears of joy, weep it to the Yukon; the Yukon swells and surges it to the shores of Asia, down through the Indian Ocean, through the Red Sea, to the classic shores of the Mediterranean, upon the breath of the lotus-laden Nile to the roving Stanley, back on the breath of the simoon to the Eternal City. Mont Blanc catches its song, Switzerland and France join in the grand chorus. On through the olive groves of Spain to the gates of Gibraltar it battles and thunders until all Europe wonders, while it flies over the fields of England. Across the Irish Sea it sings a song of Hope at the door of the ever down-trodden son of Erin. There the thumb and finger of American science turns the screw that sends it tick! tick! beneath the Atlantic's roar—fathoms deep! Behold, it sits sparkling upon the finger-tips of "Liberty Enlightening the World!" which throw it to the far Sierras. The Sierras glance it to Diablo; Diablo shimmers it to Hamilton; Hamilton sights it to the stars; the stars, in the eternal space, sing it to the angels: "American Liberty still lives, and shall for all time!"

The effete monarchies of the Old World may produce philosophers who can solve the problem of the absolute; the seer of Santa Clara valley may voice the proclamation of the soul, but when it comes to spreading the American eagle the philosopher and seer have to weaken.

The God of day, whose chariot never stops,
Beams brightly from Diablo's mountain tops;
But 'tis the eloquence of Hook that spills
Effulgence over Contra Costa's hills.

ONE of the characteristic touches in Professor Huxley's article on "Agnosticism and Christianity," is that where he points out that the evidence of spiritists' miracles is far superior to that adduced for the invention of the cross, and then puts into a footnote "Dr. Newman's observations that the miraculous multiplication of the pieces of the true cross is no more wonderful than that of the loaves and the fishes, is one that I do not see my way to contradict." Professor Huxley, like Gibbon, puts some of his sharpest observations into footnotes.—London Freethinker.

WE have received a very neat little pamphlet entitled "The Glory of Infidelity," by Samuel P. Putnam, editor of FREETHOUGHT, and one of the best orators in America. We hadn't suspected that there was much glory in being an Infidel, but we will see what Mr. Putnam has to say about it. Anyone desiring a copy of this publication can obtain it by sending 10 cents to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco.—Brighton, Col., Register.

LECTURE DATES.—S. P. Putnam's lecture dates for the river are as follows: Coquille City, July 30; Randolph, July 31; Bandon, August 1; Myrtle Point, August 2; Arago, August 3; Fair Grounds, August 4, on which occasion a basket picnic will be held. The Coquille Secular Union will meet at Coquille City July 30.—Bandon Recorder.

ONE of the best of S. P. Putnam's lectures is "The Glory of Infidelity." He has now published it in an exceedingly pretty pamphlet, adding to it a poem on Thomas Paine, which sells for ten cents. Address Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco, Cal.—The Truth Seeker.

A FREETHINKER'S CONTRIBUTION TO SCIENTIFIC KNOWLEDGE.

LAYING THE CORNERSTONE OF THE LICK ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The ceremonies of laying the cornerstone of the future Academy of Science on Market street, near Fourth, in this city, took place Friday afternoon, July 12. By two o'clock, the hour set for the beginning of the exercises, about 350 people had seated themselves upon the platform prepared for them just inside the fence, and awaited the appearance of the president of the day. The officers of the academy and a number of invited guests took seats upon a platform on the eastern side of the grand floor of the structure. The northern side of the platform touched the massive cornerstone, which swung from a derrick over the hole prepared for it. Upon the platform were Messrs. Percy and Hamilton, the architects; S. W. Holladay, Judge Sawyer, President Harkness, C. F. Crocker, George C. Perkins, Dr. Behr, E. J. Molera, Irving M. Scott, and others. Prominent among the audience were many men well-known in scientific and political circles. Quite a number of ladies graced the occasion by their presence.

It was a few minutes after two o'clock when Colonel C. F. Crocker, president of the day, stepped forward to the table at the front of the platform, and in a brief address announced the object of the gathering. The building whose cornerstone was about to be laid was a lasting monument to the memory of James Lick, he said. The Market-street front will be used for stores and offices, and will show an ornamental facade which will make the building one of the most notable of the city. There will be an assembly-room large enough to accommodate four hundred people; a museum and a library will be among the features of the institution, and on the upper floors will be experimental rooms for the use of the demonstrators of scientific principles. The rentals of the building and the investment of other funds will yield the academy a larger income than is enjoyed by any other scientific institution.

Mr. Crocker introduced Irving M. Scott, who delivered the address of the day upon "The Development of Science."

ADDRESS OF HON. IRVING M. SCOTT.

Mr. President, Trustees, and Members of the Academy of Sciences: It is with no little diffidence that I attempt to address you at this time. The exalted character of your society—known and honored for its profound learning throughout the entire world—might well deter from the undertaking one more gifted by nature and ripe in scholarship than myself.

I am mindful, too, that the world will pronounce upon what is said and done here this day. The laying of the cornerstone of the edifice of the Academy of Sciences of San Francisco, constitutes an occasion of no ordinary moment; and, were the limiting veil of mortality drawn aside, who shall say that it would not discover as a most earnest participant the presence of him whose munificent bequest is its causa causans?

But whether this might occur—real or ideal—affects not our grateful remembrance of his magnanimous and generous deed.

This magnificent structure, whose cornerstone we this day lay, will be a monument—a Pharos, whose beams of light will not only affect the grand object of enlightening and elevating man adown the course of time, but will transmit to the latest posterity the name of James Lick as one of the greatest benefactors to science of his time.

The subject upon which I propose to speak on this occasion is "The Development of Science."

Philosophy teaches that all phenomena, whether physical, intellectual, social, or moral, are aspects resulting from the operation of law. Science itself is an exemplification of this form of government.

Euclid of Alexandria contributes to science a treatise on elementary geometry which has ranked as a faultless model of exact reasoning and standard of exact demonstration for nearly twenty-two centuries.

He was the author of several other works on mathematics, as "Conic Sections, Division, and Porisms." He is honored with the title "Father of Geometry." When asked by Ptolemy I. "if geometry could not be mastered by an easier process," he is reported to have answered, "There is no royal road to geometry."

Archimedes of Syracuse is esteemed the ablest of the ancient geometers. He also excelled in mechanics, theoretical and practical, as is attested by his brilliant discoveries in physics and his mechanical inventions. Thus he first determined the true theory of the lever, the method for the determination of specific gravity, invented the endless screw-pump, burning mirrors, catapults, and other engines for throwing projectiles. "Eureka! Eureka! and give me whereon to stand and I will move the world," will doubtless be repeated as long as language is spoken.

With respect to his mathematical achievements he determined approximately the ratio of the circumference of a cylinder to its diameter; the quadrature of the parabola; the solid contents of a sphere, and certain properties of the spiral, known as the Spiral of Archimedes. According to his direction, a cylinder inclosing a sphere was engraved on his tombstone. No advance in theoretical mechanics during the eighteen centuries intervening between Archimedes and Leonardi da Vinci seems to have been made.

Eratosthenes, contemporary with Archimedes, had the superintendence of the Alexandrian library. He determined the interval between the tropics to be eleven eighty-thirds (11-83) of the circumference of the earth; found the circumference of the earth fifty times the distance between Alexandria and Cyrene; ascertained that the verticals of terrestrial gravity converge; wrote "a complete description of the earth in three books—physical, mathematical, and historical, accompanied by a map of all parts then known;" considered the geological submersion of land, the elevation of ancient sea beds, the opening of the Dardanelles and the straits of Gibraltar. In his time no one competent to form an opinion doubted the globular form of the earth, nor the doctrine of its poles, axes, the equator, arctic and antarctic circles, equinoctial points, solstices, colures, and horizon. Eclipses no longer inspired the beholder with superstitious awe. Their true causes had been assigned, so that the periods of their occurrence could be predicted.

At this epoch, figuratively speaking, science was at its flood, not so much at Athens as at Alexandria. Here was the state institution, the celebrated museum, with its library, said to contain 700,000 volumes. Here concentrated the philosophers of the world. The institution numbered at one time fourteen thousand students. It embraced a garden of plants for the study of botany, a menagerie for the study of zoology, and "an anatomical school suitably provided with means for the dissection of the human body."

Also, for the study of astronomy, it contained instruments, as the equinoctial and solstitial armil, stone quadrants, astrolabes, and dioptras. On the floor a meridian line was drawn for the adjustment of the instruments.

The mind dwells with profound delight upon the scene thus presented to view, but saddens to contemplate the gloom that settles upon it. It is a glorious sunset succeeded by a night of many centuries, during which the fountains of science well nigh dry up, and its river ceases to flow perceptibly. The portals of nature, opened by the searchers after truth, are closed and guarded by the evil genii of war, patristicism, bigotry, superstition, and sorcery. War, as a python, crushed in its deadly folds the body, while hydra-headed patristicism repressed thought, perverted and enslaved the mind, that noblest and grandest of all existences. Patristicism, founded on the principle that the scriptures contain all knowledge permitted to man, became, on the decline of Greek philosophy, the self-constituted arbiter with respect to that knowledge and man.

In 1632 Galileo published a work entitled "The System of the World," whose object was to establish the truth of the Copernican doctrine. Its conclusions were unanswerable since they were based upon actual experiments. It furnished a store of facts for the use of other philosophers. We forbear to mention that the only argument adduced to controvert these facts were ipse dixit and persecution.

Kepler, availing himself of the experimental data furnished by Galileo and of other facts at his command, sought to determine the laws obtaining in the Copernican system—the laws presiding over the distances, times, and velocities of the planets.

In speaking of his effort he says: "I considered and reflected till I was almost mad." At length, after submitting guess after guess and hypothesis after hypothesis to computation, he deduced the following, known as "Kepler's Laws:"

1. The orbit of each planet is an ellipse with the sun in one of its foci.
2. The radius vector of each planet describes equal arcs in equal times.
3. The squares of the periods of the planets are proportional to the cubes of their mean distances from the sun.

The discovery of these laws relieved the system of eccentrics and epicycles and, so far as tested, fulfilled all the requirements. But as yet their truth was solved but in a partial manner.

Before considering their general solution, let reference be made to the state of philosophy, especially that of mechanics, so indispensable to its attainment.

Of fluxions or calculus it may well be said that "it is one of the greatest, most subtle, and sublime discoveries of this or perhaps any age; that it opens a new world to us and extends our knowledge, as it were, to infinity; that it carries us beyond the bounds which seem to have been prescribed to the human mind—at least, infinitely beyond those to which ancient geometry was confined."

The differential and integral calculus of Leibnitz is supplemented by the calculus of variations originating with La Grange. A knowledge of the calculus is absolutely necessary to thorough analytical research in the higher branches of physical science. Illustrative of its vast scope and inestimable value, let reference be made to the "Celestial Mechanics" of Laplace and to its worthy companion "The Analytical Mechanics of Benjamin Piérce," also, among the invaluable treatises on applied mechanics, to those of Weisbach and Rankine.

Geology, since the time of Avicenna, a thousand years ago, has developed into a noble and highly important science, embracing in its scope a knowledge of the changes that have occurred in the mineral, vegetable, and animal kingdoms. In a certain sense, therefore, it has become a cover-all for the sciences. It acquaints us with the structure of the earth from the time the erosion of its surface began. It reads in the earth's strata the unerring record of their formation.

It shows that mountains in some cases have emerged from the sea, and in others have sunk beneath its waves.

From the lessons learned of a particular formation embracing valuable treasures in one locality, it is enabled to direct the explorer to similar treasures on the discovery of a like formation in a different locality. It contributes largely to our knowledge of events that have occurred on the earth since the advent of man. As an instance, it shows by the excavating of pottery and other works of man in the valley of the Nile, that Egypt enjoyed a civilization of no inconsiderable advancement eight thousand years before the Great Pyramid was built and eleven thousand years before Herodotus, the "father of history," was born.

Experiment determines that heat, motion, electricity, galvanism, light, are convertible terms or forms of each other. Thus the heat generated by the combustion of carbon or other substance may be developed as mechanical power, electricity, light, or galvanism.

So, too, may the mechanical power of a stream of water be developed as heat, or transmitted as electricity to a point miles away and thence developed in the form of mechanical power, light, or other correlative form. Heat seems a form of energy, or in other words, heat is energy susceptible to change of form but not to destruction. It may exist as potential or dynamic energy.

"Throughout the universe the sum of these two energies is constant."

This new philosophy acquaints us with the methods of nature in effecting her works—brings us, as it were, into intimate companionship with her, so that without distrust she readily discloses those things which hitherto philosophy had held to be occult.

It enables us to measure and accurately determine the value of heat, light, motion, and electricity, in the known terms of foot pounds.

Its discoveries and inventions mark an epoch in the progress of science unsurpassed in importance by that distinguished by the immortal discoveries and inventions of Galileo, Kepler, and Newton.

In this philosophy is reached the highest development of science yet attained, eminently a union of the sciences. Other developments may, and not improbably will, be made of a still higher order. Indeed, there seems ample reason for anticipating that the Academy of Sciences of San Francisco will still further distinguish itself by its efforts in augmenting the flow of this incomparably grand and beautiful stream.

Dr. H. W. Harkness, president of the Academy, was next introduced. He spoke as follows:

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT HARKNESS.

On the 4th of April, 1853, a little band of lovers of science, seven in number, met in a small room in this city for the purpose of taking steps toward the organization of a society for the advancement of the natural sciences.

These men were Dr. Andrew Randall, Dr. Henry Gibbons, Dr. Albert Kellogg, T. J. Nevins, Charles Farris, Prof. T. B. Trask, and Lewis W. Sloat, all of whom are now numbered with the dead, the last to leave us being our lamented friend Dr. Kellogg. Seldom in civil life has there been an instance where results so important have grown out of the action of a body of men so few in number and most of them in such humble circumstances, for these men were the founders of the California Academy of Sciences, which after more than a third of a century of struggles and vicissitudes comes at last in assured prosperity to lay the corner-stone of its permanent home, to-day.

The early volumes of proceedings serve to show the character of our founders and their fitness for the work they had undertaken. With but few books of reference, fewer types for comparison, and beset by the cares and trials incident to the unsettled condition of society, they were still able to do much good work in their various lines of scientific research. In botany Dr. Albert Kellogg, whose love for the plants he studied was the passion of his life, has left an imperishable record as an honest and faithful observer. His merits are too well known to most of you to need recalling. Prof. T. B. Trask, many of whose notes and papers are found in our earlier volumes, was a geologist of marked ability, who, while most of the men of his day were eagerly engaged in the pursuit of wealth, was exploring valley and mountain in the interest of his favorite science. Dr. Henry Gibbons, another of the seven, was a careful observer in many lines of research, and is perhaps best known to science in connection with his meteorological records.

Time will not permit me to do justice to the many who subsequently became their co-workers. Special mention should, however, be made of the late Dr. William O. Ayres, who as an ichthyologist was undoubtedly the peer of any one of that period. His first paper, published in our proceedings in September, 1854, together with the many which followed, prove that his was a mind peculiarly adapted to scientific research, and his description of the fishes of this coast will always take rank as models of terseness and technical completeness.

Of the list of honorary members Drs. Torrey and Gray, especially the latter, were until the close of their lives, deeply interested in the welfare of our society and unwearied in their assistance to our local botanists.

Of the living members who were identified with the academy at an early period, a few are still actively engaged in scientific work. Dr. J. G. Cooper early contributed valuable zoological papers, and now, director of our museum, still continues his labors. R. E. C. Stearns, for many years an active and efficient member, is now employed and doing good work in conchology in the Smithsonian Institute in Washington. Of Dr. Hermann Behr, who, contributing papers to the academy in 1854, is still engaged in scientific work, too much cannot be said in praise. In his special branch of study (lepidoptera) he is the recognized authority on this coast, and in botany he is equally eminent. In addition to these branches of science, which would be sufficient to burden the mind of an ordinary man, the thoroughness of his early training and his extensive travel and varied studies make him a most valuable aid in other departments of science.

Our limits will not allow me to make mention of those who within the last twenty years have contributed by their scientific labors to the welfare of the society, and indeed it is hardly necessary, as their work is well known to you all.

For many years after its organization the society was much embarrassed by lack of funds, being unable even to pay the expenses of collectors, and so could not gather the material needed by specialists in their investigations, which from this cause were too often mistaken or incomplete. This was the more to be regretted as other and wealthier institutions, being able to employ agents, were eagerly collecting in this new field material of great scientific value which should have been retained within the museums of this state. A few years ago, however, Mr. Charles Crocker gave to the society the sum of $20,000, to be used in the promotion of original research. This timely gift has been in the past, and will continue to be, of incalculable benefit to the academy.

Another acquisition of great importance was the collection presented by Mr. Crocker and Senator Leland Stanford. This valuable donation will, as soon as we have room to display it, be of great popular benefit, not only as a means of education for the young, but as one of the city's chief attractions.

The meeting of the society, held February 17, 1873, will long be remembered as an eventful one in our history, for on that occasion General John Hewston presented to the academy a deed from James Lick conveying the title to the land upon which this building is now being erected. This was the first intimation of his intention to furnish it material aid, although the deed was subsequently withdrawn, that he might substitute another more in accordance with the needs of the society. This generous gift was supplemented by his making the Academy of Sciences one of the residuary legatees of his estate, and from this source alone we shall at no distant day be in possession of not less than $450,000, this being in addition to the land upon which the building is being erected.

We should be neglecting our duty if we failed upon this occasion to give expression to sentiments of gratitude to our benefactor, who has so munificently assisted us in our efforts to extend the boundaries of human knowledge.

Truly it may be said of him that in his many benefactions he has built himself a monument more enduring than marble, and so far as it was possible for one in his position to do, he has succeeded far beyond the hope of most of his fellow men in his effort to render his name immortal.

In yonder cemetery there stands a monument, bearing upon its face the name of him who sleeps beneath—that he was born, lived, and died—nothing more. His wealth sent beyond the seas, is in possession of those he never knew, and who will soon forget that he ever lived. Lichens have attached themselves to the stone, and are silently but surely at work to accomplish its destruction, and weeds and tangle hide the neglected grave. Now and again some passers-by will stop in an idle moment to read the brief story, until eventually the broken column disappears, and his name is lost to the memory of man.

Here, on the contrary, is a monument to one who is gone, which, while bringing blessings to countless generations yet unborn, will preserve his name among men so long as governments shall exist to protect the property he has so generously placed in our keeping.

The ceremonies were concluded by the laying of the corner-stone by President Harkness, with a trowel presented for the purpose by E. J. Molera.

The trowel was of silver and bore the inscription: "This trowel was used to lay the corner-stone of the California Academy of Sciences of San Francisco, July 12, 1889. Presented by E. J. Molera."

Dr. Harkness read a list of articles placed in the box imbedded in the corner-stone. Besides coins and newspapers, as usual, they included a photograph of James Lick; a picture of the new Academy of Sciences building; deed of trust of James Lick, dated September 21, 1876; three copies of the constitution of the Academy of Sciences, with names of members in 1876-81 and 1889; Directory of San Francisco for 1889; copy of Irving

M. Scott and Dr. Harkness's addresses upon the occasion of laying the corner-stone; proceedings of the academy in pamphlet form; memoirs of the academy, containing pictures of animals, plants, etc.; report of the Lick trustees; photograph of the great Lick telescope; formal recognition of the transfer of the Lick Observatory to the State University; register of the State University for 1887-88; meteorological reports of Oakland, by Dr. J. B. Trembley; portrait and biography of Governor Waterman.

Under the directions of J. W. Duncan, superintendent of construction, the stone was lowered into place, and with three hearty cheers for the Academy of Sciences, led by Geo. C. Perkins, the proceedings terminated.

HON. A. SCHELL AND THE ALBANY MINISTERS.

The Hon. A. Schell, the Red Mountain vineyardist, of Knight's Ferry, is now in Albany, N. Y., and the following letter which appeared in the Albany Times shows that there, as elsewhere, he is making it interesting for the clergymen:

"AN INTERESTING DISCUSSION."

To the Editor of the Albany Times,

SIR: Under the above head line you gave an account, under date June 24th, of a meeting held by the Protestant ministers of the city of Albany, at which they passed a resolution to read from their pulpits the names of all property owners who rent premises for liquor selling. For one, I propose to save them the trouble, for I am one of them. And while I rent my property under and pursuant to law, and pay taxes on the same, no threat shall deter me from exercising my personal privileges; nor have I any excuses or apologies to make to any of the ministers or any other persons of this city. To those who take exceptions to the exercise and enjoyment of my legitimate rights, I beg to say that their friendship I don't crave; their hostility I don't fear; their religion and principles I despise.

In the New York Sun of June 24 a statement appears to the effect that Mr. James Irvine, of Liverpool, was quoted in the house of lords as saying that 20,000 tons of bad rum and gin are sold annually to the natives along the west coast of Africa by "sincere Christians." If this statement be true, it appears that "sincere Christians" (say nothing about the insincere) are engaged in the liquor business as well as the saloon-keepers in the city of Albany, but not in the small way of the saloon, of selling by the glass, quart, bottle, or gallon, but by the ton. It takes sincere Christians to do a wholesale business in bad rum and gin. I venture to say there is not a saloon-keeper in the city of Albany who would sell bad rum and gin to the natives on the west coast of Africa unless he believes in the Christian religion.

Would it not be eminently proper for these reverend gentlemen to preach to, and pray for, and publish from their pulpits the names of the "sincere Christians" who are engaged in selling bad rum and gin to the natives in Africa? Would not these reverend divines act more consistently and command greater respect if they should first remove the beam in their own eyes, before they attempt to extract the mote that is in their neighbor's?

Are not these men attempting to ride a high horse with a slack rein when they meddle in secular matters? Had they not better preach more of repentance and a judgment to come to their brethren engaged in the African rum and gin business before attempting to deter men in the exercise of legitimate business?

How much taxes do these men pay into the treasury for the support of the municipal and state governments? I venture to say, not a dollar!

Are not these ministers aware that clerical interference in secular matters is distasteful to the great majority of the American people, and that they do more hurt than good to the cause they wish to advance? Few of them had good sense enough to oppose the resolution and decline to publish the names from the pulpit. The Catholic clergymen have much more good sense than the Protestant. They say: We are in favor of temperance, but not in favor of coercion; that coercion infringes upon the private rights of the individual. They occupy the popular side of the question, and are sustained by the universal sentiment of an enlightened secular community.

A. SCHELL.

Albany, June 27.

JEWISH RESPECT FOR JESUS.

I visited a neighbor yesterday, and found on his table ex-Rev. Hugh O. Pentecost's pamphlet, "What I Believe." I glanced at the index, then at a page here and there in almost each subdivision of the "hastily" written work, and though I was pleased with the apparent earnestness and openness of expression, yet I came to the (perhaps hasty) conclusion that Mr. Pentecost knew very little of the opinions of religious people, who are not Christians, about Jesus. He says in one place that Christ has the respect of those who are not Christians. By that he certainly could not mean unbelievers; they may have tears for Jesus who fell a victim to bigotry as well as they would have tears for Lewis the Light if he were killed by fanatics because of his claim of being "Jesus on earth again." The unbeliever, as a rule, is an educated, intelligent man; he knows that Jesus Christ, according to the Christian story of him, must have been either a lunatic or a fanatic—just what Lewis the Light is in our day. Jesus the Christ had words of sympathy for the poor, and hell in the next world for the rich. Lewis the Light advocates the abolishment of poverty altogether, and emphatically declares that the moment he gets a sufficient number of followers, he will establish hell for the rich on earth.

Lewis the Light is still alive, and commands no respect whatever for his divine claims. Would he command respect if he were killed by bigots and fanatics for his lunny utterances? Not at the hands of intelligent people, I should think.

Mr. Pentecost must have meant religious people other than Christians. Who are they in the civilized world? The Jews stand foremost among them.

The reader, I hope, understands that the title Jew in this age does not belong to a man who professes a certain supernatural belief. One acquires that title rather by the shape of his nose than by the form of his religious or anti-religious thoughts. I am a Jew, though an Atheist. I have met with hundreds of well educated Jews in Europe and in this country, and failed to find one that has any belief in supernaturalism. The so-called reformed Jewish synagogues, known as temples, are filled with Agnostics and outspoken unbelievers. The less religious the rabbi is, the higher salary he commands. Their sermons touch modern ethics rather than Old Testament morality. In fact, the old book is almost absolutely ignored. Wise words from the prophets or kings constitute the texts generally. I was once well acquainted with one rabbi in this country. He spoke on our Thomas Paine celebration, eulogizing the revolutionary hero of our independence as well as of religious thought. In the course of his speech he expressed a belief that in a century hence more temples will be erected to the memory of Paine than to that of Luther. The same rabbi, in a public discussion under the auspices of the local Liberal League, remarked that the Jewish custom of circumcision originated in a belief that it would prevent certain diseases of the body, and he was not scientifically prepared to say whether it would or not. He thought, however, that if it was not a preventive, it was barbarous.

In a private conversation the learned rabbi told me that the synagogue was supported by people who held about the same anti-religious ideas that I do. At this I became impatient, and retorted somewhat angrily: "What, then, do they keep it up for?" He smiled and thought that I was somewhat narrow-minded. He spoke long, very earnestly, as if to convert me to his ideas, which were that the synagogues were not for the purpose of raising religious Jews, but for preventing them from falling victims to Christian idiocy. I believe that he said the whole truth, and any intelligent non-Jew that would visit a Jewish temple and get acquainted with some of its few occupants would soon come to the same conclusion. That Jewish element cannot have much respect for Jesus.

It now remains to investigate the character of the orthodox Jew. In this country not every Jew that claims to be orthodox is really so. Most of them are shrewd business men, and a seat in the orthodox synagogue is part and parcel of their business transactions. Russia, Poland, and Galizien exhibit, however, a large number of really orthodox Jews. With the character of these Jews I am particularly well acquainted, and know exactly what respect they have for Jesus. In the first place, they call him a "bastard," and, according to their ideas, a child born out of wedlock is anathema itself. When an orthodox Jewish girl falls a victim to lust, and gives birth to a child, the relatives endeavor to murder it before the time which calls for the ceremony of "giving it a name in Israel." If they fail, the ceremony is performed in a way different from that other children enjoy, and a very bad, shameful in meaning, name is given. I was present at one such ceremony. The child was a boy. Generally the ceremony is performed in the synagogue, where as near as possible to the Holy Trunk, which holds the sacred scriptures, a platform is in each case erected, and a "seat of honor" for the child's guardian angel is placed to the right of it. In that case, the janitor, or Shamos, put up the platform in a back room, and had no seat of honor because an illegitimate was not supposed to be guarded by any angel. When the door opened and a woman appeared carrying the infant wrapped up in a pillow, the usual Barooch aboo ("Blessed be the new comer") did not greet the child. When the unfortunate infant was placed on the platform, it was discovered that the man who does the butchery, which often ends fatally, was absent. He had considered himself too holy and godly and declined to touch the anathemized flesh of a mamezor (illegitimate). There was a man in town who claimed to be able to perform that duty, but was not considered very skilled in it and therefore was never given a chance in regular cases. He was immediately sent for. When he arrived and was told of the object, he took offense at first and cursed the shamos for calling upon him, but afterwards agreed to do the bloody work.

After the wound is attended to and the flow of blood is stopped, the child is usually carried to the Holy Trunk, which is then open in order that the very scriptures may bear testimony to the ceremony of circumcision. One man holds the infant in his arms, and another, with a glass of wine in his hand, utters blessings, in the course of which he puts a few drops of the liquid on the lips of the child and declares its name "in Israel" to be so and so. In that case, however, the Holy Trunk was not bothered, the scriptures were not called upon to witness, the blessings were cut short, and the name was given with the words "in Israel" left out.

During the ceremony a man wrapped up in a white sheet of cloth with black stripes on, called talith, could be seen in the corner formed by the front wall of the synagogue and the Holy Trunk. His right hand in the shape of a half circle was placed in that corner and the head rested on it. He was the rabbi of the town. No circumcision was ever performed in that community without his having the pleasure of holding the highest office in the ceremonial workings. But then he stood absorbed in thoughts about the calamity that had befallen his flock. He took no notice of what was going on, and, a few minutes after the shameful and degrading ceremony was performed and the child was taken away, one of the synagogue staff approached and informed him that all was over. The rabbi then turned his face to the people present, wrung his fingers, and in a clear, distinct voice exclaimed, "O God, may we hope that it will not grow up to be a shame and disgrace to Israel."

I have related the ceremony, to which I was an eye-witness, not for the purpose of ridiculing those truly orthodox Jews. They may be very sincere and idealize the religious institution of marriage and think it proper to perform ceremonies over illegitimates in a degraded manner in order to impress the necessity of purity upon the minds of the daughters of Israel. The reader, however, may draw from it a conclusion as to how much respect a religious Jew (who must be orthodox, or he cannot be religious in the true sense of the word) can have for the illegitimate Jesus. No religious Jew on the face of the earth is supposed to believe that God's interview with Mary was the cause of the birth of Christ. As long as Christians show no natural father for Jesus, the Jew must call him a child of shame, and if religious, how much respect can he have for him?

Between the ages of four and eight I remember myself attending daily a Jewish orthodox school, called cheder (the ch has the German pronunciation). I was one of about a hundred boys and girls of my age. The teacher, called Melamed, had a half dozen assistants, and all of them were very cruel to us little ones. I was the happiest child in the lot; for my father had given strict orders, and accompanied them with extra pay, that unusual patience be bestowed upon me and that neither the hand of the Melamed, nor that of any of his assistants, should ever be raised for the purpose of striking me. Our occupation from early morning till the very sunset was that of praying. As not all of us knew all of the prayers by heart, one of the assistants usually led, and we followed. Curious prayers they were. For instance, when I wanted a drink of water I had to tell the assistant, who immediately called out for others who wished to drink, led us all to the barrel in the corner of the room, and in a loud voice said the prayer, which we all repeated thus: "Blessed thou art, O God, the creator of everything by thy word." Then we drank. When I felt the necessity of leaving the room in answer to the calls of nature I had to tell the assistant. As usual, he called out for others similarly inclined. We were led outside, and returned in a line to the wash basin, washed our little hands, and while in the process of wiping them repeated the prayer after the assistant, which generally took about five minutes. In English the prayer would read similar to this: "Blessed be thou, God, that created man with wisdom, with apertures and apertures, notches and notches, protuberances and protuberances, and gave him the knowledge of them, and the use of them," etc. The prayer, which is too funny for anything, and too long to be wholly translated here, can be found in any Jewish orthodox prayer-book and is adapted to both sexes. During the delivery of prayers the assistant would from time to time skin the noses or cheeks of inattentive little boys or girls, and every time he did that I delivered, in my mind, another prayer to God for having created my father with more money than others, for I childishly supposed that the only reason I was not beaten was because my father had much money to pay for it. I afterwards discovered that other children's parents were really rich, while mine were not; but the knowledge of this has only made me bless and love my father more than God, and I don't regret it. There is a day when the children are not required to repeat the objectionable prayer. That day is a holiday for orthodox Jewish children in Russia, Poland, and Galizien. It is also a holiday for the Christian world. It is the birthday of Christ—merry Christmas, merrier to little orthodox Jewish children than those of the Christians.

The belief is that on that day, which the orthodox Jews call Nittel, God is torturing Jesus in hell; that Jesus is appealing to his father's sense of mercy by referring to the good things he had done. He had been to Cheder, had the knowledge of the holy scriptures and other Hebrew books, had delivered many prayers, etc., but God is merciless, fries him in hell's fire, then brings him to life and fries him again, and continues the same the whole day till his revenge is satisfied. The orthodox Jew is very glad of God's occupation on that day, and as any indulgence in learning or prayer might divert the Almighty from his engagement and even remind him of some favorable circumstance in the life of Jesus, no true orthodox Jew dares open a book of Hebrew knowledge or utter a prayer. Even the children are prohibited from learning and praying—the only prohibition I, in my childhood, strictly complied with. These people are the most religious Jews on the face of the earth. Their respect for Jesus can be well imagined.

M. S. WARHAFTIG.

MR. BRADLAUGH's motion to abolish perpetual pensions has shown up the peculiar history of one of them. On the list is a small pension standing to the credit of a Scottish peer for the fulfilment of a sinecure office. For two generations not a penny has gone into the family coffers. This peer's grandfather, being in need of ready money, sold the pension to a Portsmouth money-lender, whose heirs and assigns draw it to this day.

THE London Agnostic Journal has struck a happy title for E. C. Walker's "Bible Temperance" which is now running through that journal. It is "Bible and Bung."

DID JESUS CHRIST RISE FROM THE DEAD?

III.

Those whom theology has made imbecile, when they find that they and their myths are being drowned in the river of reason, grasp at straws. I think I hear them exclaim, "Ah, but there is proof of his divinity in his being able to predict, quite apart from minor details, that he should rise from the dead at all." The prediction, I apprehend, was invented after the rise of the resurrection myth, in order to give that myth support. Nay, I feel disposed to assert that Christ himself was invented, in order to be the hero of this exploit and the necessary concatenation and thread of continuity to hold together an isolated number of incoherent and jumbled myths. But even if, as a person, he did exist, and even if he did predict he would rise up from the dead, what then? In his time, and in times antecedent to his, rising from the dead was quite common. In those days, it would seem, when any one felt his grave not quite comfortable, he had nothing else to do but to heave up the mass of earth and turf that lay above him, vault out of the ground, and walk to and fro over the land in his winding-sheet. Æsculapius, Apollonius, Thyaneus, and others, long before Christ's time, raised numerous persons from the dead. Æsculapius, having raised others, at length found it necessary to raise himself from the grave, and this feat was not found too difficult of accomplishment for Prometheus, Juno, Hercules, and Adonis. In the Hebrew scriptures Elijah raised to life the dead son of the widow of Zarepta; and Ezekiel, in the Valley of Dry Bones, out of a supply of osseous rubbish, created a whole army of living warriors. Christ himself reanimated the corpse of Lazarus, even after it was stinking; in fact, people who had left their grave under some pretext or other were, in the good old times of faith, nearly as common as blackberries. On the occasion of Christ's resurrection numbers of the dead got up from their tombs to see what was the matter, and walked about the streets of Jerusalem. But they appear to have discovered that there was nothing in particular going on after all, for they seem to have gone quietly back to their sepulchres, and nobody appears to have taken much notice of them. Where people are devout enough and ignorant enough, the dead are apt to rise; but where folk are neither devout nor ignorant, the dead are not at all troublesome; they are quite prepared to "rest in their graves till the resurrection," and even longer than that, where people are exceedingly knowing.

I need not say that there is no trace of the resurrection of this extraordinary Jesus in respectable and authentic history. The whole of the terrible event which forms the foundation-stone of the Christian fabric seems to have occurred on the quiet, and in the dark. Our whole historic (!) evidence of the event rests upon the slipshod and credulous twaddle of four pseudonymous, rambling, and illiterate documents, written nobody knows where or when, and which four documents are, beyond all hope of reconciliation, at variance with each other, as I shall presently show. "Oh!" I think I hear "the believer" say, "you have forgotten Paul. Even admitting that the four gospels were written long after the occurrence of the events with which they deal, and that they here and there contradict each other, what about Paul, who was actually a contemporary of Christ, and who vouches emphatically for the fact of the resurrection?"

I reply, when Paul was sane he did not vouch for the fact of the resurrection. He was a man with a trained intellect; and, as such, of course, regarded with the utmost aversion the credulous and vulgar dregs of the populace that committed their fanatical excesses in the name of an uneducated man of the mob, Jesus of Nazareth. Paul was a persecutor of the Christians. Paul, in the first century, regarded Christianity as I regard it in the nineteenth. Journeying to Damascus to attempt to do what I am attempting to do now, he had the misfortune to have sunstroke. He lay for some days raving, and at death's door, and when he got on his legs again he found himself a Christian. Like Paul before the event of his sunstroke, I am not a Christian; like Paul, subsequent to suffering from sunstroke, I may become a Christian—in fact, I should be quite likely to become one. I shall certainly never become a Christian while I am sane; but, like poor Paul, I may become one after I am insane—after, like him, I am suffering from what cerebral pathology calls pseudo-blepsis. Paul, moreover, and not Jesus, is the corner stone of Christianity. Allow me to congratulate Christianity upon resting upon a man who, while he was sane, bitterly persecuted it, and who could see no evidences for its truth till after he had suffered from sunstroke.

*By Saladin, editor of the Agnostic Journal.

For ten long years the disciplined and subtle intellect of Paul denied the resurrection, and regarded the whole of the vulgar and barefaced imposture connected therewith as a pernicious figment. But the subtle intellect was paralyzed by a sunstroke, and the poor semi-maniac, who survived the affliction, was disposed to believe in the man-god of the illiterate and the ghost-stories of the vulgar. "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago (whether in the body I cannot tell, or whether out of the body I cannot tell; God knoweth); such an one caught up to the third heaven. And I knew such a man (whether in the body or out of the body I cannot tell; God knoweth), how that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter" (2 Cor. xii, 2-4). This is the kind of stuff poor Paul could write after he became a Christian! "Whether in the body or, out of the body I cannot tell"—in other words, whether my head or my heels were uppermost I know not. This indicates the state of mental wreck to which he had to be reduced before he could be persuaded to believe that Jesus Christ rose from the dead. But for the sunstroke on the way to Damascus, the student of Gamaliel, the neo-Platonic thinker and subtle master of Alexandrian lore, never would have believed it. Never to speak of sunstroke affecting mentation and opinion, I know a staunch conservative who became a rabid radical immediately upon recovery from having his skull fractured with a poker; and I have heard the Marquis of Queensberry dilate upon how concussion of the brain ushered him into a new world. No man has read Paul's curious epistles more carefully than I have. They are a deeply instructive psychological study, in their weird conglomeration of metaphysics and madness. Paul has always been to me an interesting character—far more interesting than Jesus. A massive and disciplined intellect is attractive and imposing even in ruin; but I have little affection for the rant of the gospel of the gutter, whether in Capernaum or Birmingham, and the good intentions of fanatical and unlearned mechanics—and I care not whether the mechanic be called Jesus Christ or Richard Carlile—do not atone for the mischief of their ill-balanced evangel.

THE SUMMER AND FALL CAMPAIGN.

S. P. Putnam has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Astoria.....Or., July ... 14,	Fox Valley.....Or., Sept. 9, 10,
Stella.....W.T., " 15, 16, 17,	Long Creek....." " 11, 12,
Oswego.....Or., " 18, 19,	Hamilton....." " 14, 15,
Arnold's Grove.. " 20, 21,	Monument....." " 16, 17,
Coos county, Or., July 22 to Aug. 4,	Hay Stack....." " 18,
Coburg....." Aug.....7, 8,	Lone Rock....." " 19, 20,
Lebanon....." ".....9,	Fossil....." " 21, 22,
Olympia.....W.T., ".....11, 12,	Hillsboro, Or., Sept., 25, 26, 27, 28,
Buckley.....W.T., ".....13, 14,	North Yamhill...Or., Sept.....29,
Davenport, " ".....17, 18,	Forest Grove...." ".....30,
Cheney....." ".....19,	Talent, Or., and vicinity Oct. 3, 4, 5,
Rosalia....." ".....20,	6, 7,
Sprague....." ".....21,	Linkville.....Or., Oct. 11, 12, 13,
Pasco....." ".....22,	Sacramento.....Cal., Oct. 20,
Dayton.....W. T., Aug.....24, 25,	San Francisco....." " 27,
Pomeroy.....W. T., Aug.....26,	Los Angeles and vicinity the month
La Grange, Or.....Aug.....29,	of November,
Union.....Or. ".....30,	San Diego and vicinity the month of
Baker City, Or. Sept.....1,	December.
Prairie City, Or, and vicinity, Sept.
4, 5, 6, 7, 8,

'Tis summer, when the nights are warm,
And making love's the fad,
The hammock now has got the job
That the sofa formerly had.

—Lawrence American.

CORRESPONDENCE.

On the Trail.

To the Editors of Freethought:

From Arago I passed up the river to a small settlement called Norway, where they are mostly "Dunkards." I gave three lectures in a nice hall that was generously donated for the purpose, and to very good audiences, a large portion of them being persons who had attended my meetings at Myrtle Point and Arago. I stopped at the ranch of George Carl, who once dwelt on the Rhine away back in the faderland of Germany. Mr. Carl has a large family of interesting children and a beautiful home on the banks of the Coquille. His orchard of plums, prunes, and apples is immense, and loaded until in some cases the trees were breaking down with their luscious fruits. Dairy and fruits, sheep and hogs, lumber and babies, seem to thrive in this prolific soil, which but lately was covered with the myrtle and maple forests of a thousand years' growth. These farms are generally several feet under water two or three times every winter and spring, and everybody moves upstairs, and stock are taken to the hills, or in some cases upstairs too, where they have barns built for the purpose. These sturdy yeomanry do not seem to mind the annual baptisms from the muddy river, for it makes their farms richer each time of the overflow, and while the deluge is on they "git" in boats or long-legged, seven-mile rubber boots. It seems to me very healthful, with no malaria, and a very easy country to make a living in. People possess as much intelligence as though not living in this isolated region. I found my friend Carl a very intelligent man; in fact, he induced me to come to Norway, and worked faithfully to make the lectures a success. Also the McCloskeys, father and son, who keep the store and postoffice; A. H. Snyder and two sons, Mr. Myers, and many others, all good and splendid Freethinkers. George Carl, Jr., is a whole team in himself. There is no orthodox foolishness about these folks. They fear neither gods or devils, do not believe in faith or long-winded prayer; but good, honest, hard work, and "keep your powder dry" is their religion, and expect to die when their time comes, but not in the least afraid of sheol.

W. S. Bell, on his Oregon tour, passed me while at Norway, and lectured two miles below at Arago. "Our Put." will be here before the month is out, and later, Mrs. Krekel the "female Ingersoll" of Liberalism. So Coos county is cooing with Freethought, and the new religion is coming with the tide. My work here completed, I boarded the puffing "baby boat" Ceres, and steam away for Bandon at the mouth of the river, stopping over at Coquille to listen to the biggest Bell that has sounded its sonorous notes in these primeval forests. Comrade H. H. Nichols, one of the few living workers for truth, had advertised Mr. Bell's lecture thoroughly and procured a fine hall, but had a very meager audience to hear our illustrious Bell from Chicago. Mr. Bell is certainly a fine talker and very logical, and his stories and anecdotes do "beat all." He takes the cake for pith and fun, and I think he is bound to succeed on this coast, though he lacks the enthusiasm and magnetism of Mr. Putnam.

I arrived at Bandon by the "surging sea" the next day, and met those earnest workers for the cause, Messrs. Uptons, Tupper, Marshall and son, Titus Nichols, and Emil Wulschleger. All was humming, getting ready for the Fourth, and there seemed but little chance for ye comet "on the trail" to drive a stake or raise a flag—especially as a full fledged Baptist clergyman had two lectures already announced the coming nights on, "Fun and its Uses," and "Cranks and Crankism," with "music by the band," but the band failed to materialize. Nevertheless the Rev. Major Bateman, ex-superintendent of missions for this coast—the speaker—was on time, but had a slim audience at both lectures, and the contribution box only yielded up for his efforts $2.20—20 cents more than his hotel bill. The major's lectures were fine, radical, Freethought, and were really gems of sparkling Liberalism. He has no personal God, no located heaven or hell, believes in evolution, makes heaps of fun, plays the fiddle, eats yellow-legged spring chickens, hugs the sisters (at least I feel sure he does, for there is a merry twinkle in his eye, and he wears, I judge, a number 16 collar), has a big brain of fine quality, and is quite a power, but would not have his head felt before the audience. Why? Collar too large, and thereby hangs a tale untold which must not come out. This man is doing much good in helping "the brethren" out of the shell, and has much influence. He claims to have challenged Colonel Ingersoll in San Francisco. I like the major; he is a regular brick, and the best of company. I bided my time till this vicegerent of God was through, and had spoken his speak; then I hung on the wall of the same lecture room my Big Indian Medicine Man, the gorillas and the "belle of the Ashantee Islands," with "heads and faces" all complete, and proceeded to give out in allopathic doses evolution and orthodoxy, science and Freethought, truth and poetry, God's truth and the devil's religion, all from the big jug of reason, which always has the desired effect of purging out superstition. The audiences were small, but this is a very small town and very few people near. My contributions averaged nearly $4 per night; besides, I was busy through the day with Bandon's knowledge-boxes. Mr. Dalrymple, the professor teaching here, a two hundred pounder, with brains according, was the first one manipulated, and proved to be a grand radical thinker and general in the Freethought army. Bandon has three stores, two fine hotels, good wharf, several cosy residences, the finest of which belongs to Mr. T. Nichols, a subscriber to FREETHOUGHT and the Truth Seeker, and of course a true-blue radical, ready to meet the "pale rider" without fear and trembling. Bandon proper is located on a high bluff nearly level for several miles back from the ocean, covered with a dense growth of evergreens, while right on the edge of the bluff by the sea is a huge rock, perhaps covering an acre, and several hundred feet above the ocean and surrounding forest. This lookout, with the ocean constantly bombarding its rocky base, is one of the grandest I have ever seen. The ever-restless ocean rushing on to devour the land, thunders against the beach from the west, while millions of acres of the giant evergreen forest, almost untouched by the despoiling hand of man, roll away to the east as far as the eye can reach, finally climbing up the sides of the cloud-capped mountains until forest and hill, sky and earth, seem to meet with ardent embrace. The "silver thread of the Coquille," as seen in the distance, leads from the sea to the snows of the Coast Range. Here for a mile or more up and down the coast are hundreds of rocks standing in the water, from a few feet in diameter and in height, to those covering, perchance, an acre, and one hundred feet in height, like grim sentinels guarding the shore from invasion by expected foes. To watch the foam-capped waves roll in and break all over these giant monuments, reared by nature's hand, and listen to their sullen, angry roar, is music to your wandering "altitudinarian's" ears, weird and grand. Into and through one of these largest rocks the waters have cut a narrow channel just wide enough to walk in, while in the middle it has eaten out a cave some fifty feet long by thirty wide and averaging twenty feet in height. Here in this rocky dungeon, with the rushing, boiling waters on every side, I sat alone and communed with nature's God; I sang and shouted and read a poem, but all was lost in the din made by the elements. My bump of sublimity is away up, up, up, and I always feast in this grand commune with Mother Nature in her wildest moods. Nature, thou art all there is, thou art all in all, there is nothing beyond thee, nothing grander or greater; we worship at thy shrine only.

These rocks and caverns can be reached only at low water, and woe betide the man who would fall asleep to this rhythmic music, and be caught by the rising sea. After leaving the grim hole in the wall of rock I found a starfish on the beach with an oyster stuck fast to the center of the shell. I found one or the other was devouring his pard, and while bent over studying the phenomenon a huge wave came silently rolling in and nearly took me off my feet; it knocked off my hat and took it out to sea with the receding flow. I thought of D. M. Bennett in the river Jordan, on his trip around the world. I was alone. I retreated and waited for the hat to come ashore, for I had read in scripture or somewhere else, it matters little, that if you cast your bread upon the waters it will be returned to you, sometimes a hundred fold, and I could not see why hats should not do likewise. Well, it came back, and though only the identical one that went adrift, I was satisfied I had made the experiment, and was not hatless. I would not be laughed at for losing the covering to my 7 by 9 knowledge-box. As I walked back to my lodgings, a wiser but wetter student, I found a dead sea lion as large as a small cow. They are different from a seal, in being much larger and in having two flippers or legs behind instead of one like the seal. They seem to live among the rocks, and crawl all over them like the seals at the seal rocks of your city.

I gave three lectures here. The wind has blown almost a hurricane every day I have been at Bandon. It is very cool; we have a fire most of the time to sit by, and July too. This I think will make one of the grandest summer resorts on the coast, but must have a railroad, which is now nearly a hundred miles off. It is a most superb town site, with splendid water, air, fuel, and scenery; cheap land, plenty of government land very near, a small harbor and bay; fine fruit country; fine bathing, etc.

The eve of the Fourth I steamed back to Coquille City, and found a hearty welcome at Brother Harrington's cozy home. I joined comrade Nichols at the grand ball given by the old soldiers to increase their relief fund, danced with all the fair matrons and pretty girls that I could induce to take a pard so old and glum; then retired to dream of what might have been and what shall the morrow be. D. C. SEYMOUR.
Coquille, Or.

BIERCE ON CHRISTIANITY.

Among "the vagaries of people who pass through what is known as a revival of religion," the Chronicle mentions one zealous woman's action in throwing her parlor organ into the street, and another's in smashing her new buggy. These may be "vagaries." Possibly one may be truly religious while in possession of parlor organs and buggies. I do not say that one may not; I only say that the imagination which can conceive the founder of Christianity playing a parlor organ or driving a buggy would be an invaluable intellectual equipment to a man of letters. To be a Christian is, I suppose, to be like Christ—not merely to believe in him, but to act as he acted, to live as he lived, in all things possible to be as he was. Always and everywhere he taught the duty of poverty—taught it by precept, taught it by example, taught it so plainly, lucidly, bluntly, that more than eighteen centuries of ingenuity have not been able to pervert the meaning. Perhaps Christianity with all the modern improvements and conveniences is a better religion than the Christianity of Christ. As to that, having neither, I cannot say; it seems to me more "practical;" but if there is a reader of these lines who owns a parlor organ or a buggy or any other property in excess of his actual present need, I tell him plainly that he is not a Christian in the sense in which Christ was a Christian. There is not, in my judgment, a Christian living today. If there were he would be arrested as a lunatic or a tramp. —AMBROSE BIERCE, in the Examiner.

BOOKS.

We have for sale at this office, among other works:

"Yone Santo." 50 cents.

"John Ward, Preacher." 50 cents.

"Self-Contradictions of the Bible." 15 cents.

"The Truth Seeker Annual" for 1889. 25 cents.

"Liberty and Morality," by W. S. Bell. 15 cents.

"The System of Nature," by Baron D'Holbach. $2.

"Robert Elsmere," by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Price, 50 cents.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

Judge Maguire's "Ireland and the Pope," a history of papal intrigues against Irish liberty. Price, 50 cents.

Taylor's "Diegesis," by the Rev. Robert Taylor. A discovery of the Origin, Evidences, and early history of Christianity. $2.

"Looking Backward," a socialistic romance which has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of Industrial Slavery," by Edward Bellamy. Price, 50 cents.

The Minister's Vacation.

A man last Sunday was about to lay his hand upon the door of a church when a little girl in the street said: "You can't get in there, mister." "Why," he said, "Isn't this a church?" "Yes," said the little girl, "but the preacher has gone to Europe for six months and taken God with him."—Detroit Tribune.

RHUBARB BITTERS impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Try them. A. G. Wood, 323 Eddy st., S. F.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—
"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—
ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS
(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to
L. K. WASHBURN,
Revere, Mass.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond".....	14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy.
Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

How the Sunday Law Works.

First Workingman—"Let's go to the Art Museum."

Second Workingman—"Closed on Sundays, you know."

Third Workingman—"Well, let's take a ride in the stage up Fifth avenue."

Second Workingman—"Don't run on Sundays."

First Workingman—"Gad! then let's go in Von Bier's back door and fill up."

At John Wanamaker's Sabbath School.

"My dear little boy, I'm so pleased to see you poring over your catechism so diligently."

"Yes, 'm. Mr. Wanamaker says if I learn this lesson well, I needn't come next Sunday."

Lofty Aims Loftily Described.

The temperance people of the nation are intending to save the country in spite of the whining sycophancy of subsidized papers, or the tergiversation of political demagogues.—Pacific Union.

THE Widow Starveley—"I can't see, Mr. Houlihan, why you can't wait a couple of days for my rent. The papers say you sympathize with the poor of Ireland." Houlihan—"Huh. Do yez suppose that the people of this great, prosperous country are to be treated on the same basis as the down trodden Oirish."

SUNDAY-SCHOOL Teacher (to new pupil)—"We are taught by the Bible that when some one smites us on the cheek we should turn the other to him. Isn't that a beautiful sentiment?" "Yes, ma'am." "Now, if an enemy were to smite you on one cheek what would you do?" "I'd pound the top of his head off."

THE little boy was on his knees in his little night-dress saying his prayers, and his little sister couldn't resist the temptation to tickle the soles of his little feet. He stood it as long as he could, and then said: "Please, God, excuse me while I knock the stuffing out of Nellie."

My little two-year-old has added something new to the story of Joseph and his brethren. I told him the Bible version of the story, and he seemed much interested in Joseph's coat of many colors. When I had finished he said: "Papa, tell me about his pants."—Ex.

WILLIE—"Ma, do you expect to go to heaven when you die?" Ma—"I hope so." Willie—"Well, if St. Peter lets you take your slippers in he'll have to leave me on the doorstep—that's all."

THE man who was arrested while passing through Kansas for wearing a corkscrew suit and a bottle-green necktie was released under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce law.

St. PETER (to new arrival at the pearly gate)—Do you want to come in?
NEW YORKER—What's the limit?

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street. Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.
G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.
Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents. Address

PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC
SCHOOLS.—THE NEW

AMERICAN PARTY,

A Criticism by "Jefferson."

Price, 10 cents.

Address

PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology
Price, 50 cents.

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see other column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland; a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice. He writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.

Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and

A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Foote's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25. Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50. Difference is in paper and binding. MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Temperance and Prohibition, THE INDEPENDENT PULPIT.

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

A Magazine of 24 pp., devoted to

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed

Liberalism, Freethought, Secularism, and Ethics

to force in settling the liquor question.

Published monthly at $1.50 per annum by

Cloth, 75 cts.

Address this office

J. D. SHAW, Waco, Texas.

The Cry of the Dreamer.

I am tired of planning and toiling
In the crowded hives of men;
Heart-weary of building and spoiling
And spoiling and building again.
And I long for the dear old river
Where I dreamed my youth away;
For a dreamer lives forever,
And a toiler dies in a day.

I am sick of the showy seeming
Of a life that is half a lie;
Of the faces lined with scheming
In the throng that hurries by.
From the sleepless thought's endeavor
I would go where children play;
For a dreamer lives forever,
And a toiler dies in a day.

I feel no pride, but pity
For the burdens the rich endure;
There is nothing sweet in the city
But the patient lives of the poor.
Oh, the little hands so skillful,
And the child mind choked with weeds,
The daughter's heart grown willful,
And the father's heart that bleeds.
No, no! from the street's rude bustle,
From trophies of mart and stage
I would fly to the wood's low rustle,
And the meadow's kindly page.
Let me dream as of old by the river,
And be loved for the dream away;
For a dreamer lives forever,
And a toiler dies in a day.

—JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY.

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. K. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right.

Yours respectfully,

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.

DR. FELLOWS.

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.
OLIVER HINCKLEY - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.
Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma St., cor. 5th, S. F.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism. .

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based
the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny St., San Francisco, California.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY
NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,

NURSERYMEN.

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit
and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.
Special Attention Given to Planting

and Caring of Orchards
and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal

ORDER THEM OF ELMINA.

Little Lessons on Science, 40 cents; Mary Jones, or The Infidel Teacher, 20 cents; The Darwins, paper, 50 cents, cloth, 75 cents; The Clergyman's Victims, 25 cents; John's Way, 15 cents (the last four are Infidel novels); Diana—sexual advice for the married, 25 cents.

Address, E. D. SLENER,
Snowville, Pulaski Co., Va.

If some people should speak the truth, it wouldn't shame the devil so much as it would surprise him.—Puck.

PROUD FATHER—"Goin' ter start 'r church and Sunday-school, are yer? Well, I've got two mighty good boys wot'll do fer yer Bible class. They never told a lie in their lives—here they come now. Boys, where did you get that fowl?" The Good Boys—
"Stold it." Proud Father—"See, parson?
Er lie couldn't live in them boys' mouths."
—Munsey's Weekly.

THE OPEN COURT,

PUBLISHED BY

The Open Court Publishing Company,
Rooms 41 and 42, 175 La Salle St., Chicago.

P. O. Drawer F.

Edward C. Hegeler, Pres. Dr. Paul Carus, Editor.

The Open Court is a weekly journal devoted to the work of conciliating religion with science.
The founder and editor have found this conciliation in Monism—to present and defend which, is the main object of The Open Court.

The Open Court has for its contributors the leading thinkers of the old and new world.

Translations from the most prominent authors
of Europe have been procured, and efforts are made to present the very best and most advanced thought bearing on scientific, religious, social,
and economic questions.

Terms, $2 per year. $1 for six months.
50 cents for three months. Single copies, 10
cents. Sample copies sent free on application.

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY,

An important work by Gibbon, the historian. Comprising all that relates to the progress of the Christian religion in "The History of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and a Vindication (never before published in this country) of some passages in the 15th and 16th chapters, by Edward Gibbon, Esq., with a Life of the Author, Preface and Notes by the Editor, including variorum notes by Guizot, Wenzel, Milman, "an English Churchman," and other scholars. Handsome 12 mo., 864 pages. Cloth. With Engravings. Price, $1 60.

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL'S

GREAT CENTENNIAL ORATION

On the Declaration of Independence. Also, the immortal document, The Declaration itself, and the national anthem entitled "Land of Liberty." Price, 10 cents; 5 copies, 25 cents; 25 copies, $1.

THE SYSTEM OF NATURE,

Or, Laws of the Moral and Physical World. By Baron D'Holbach. A new and improved edition, with notes by Didrot. Two volumes in one. Price, $1.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"The Glory of Infidelity" was one of the poet-secretary's happiest efforts, and ranks with the best speeches of the Congress.—New York Truth Seeker.

Putnam's "Glory of Infidelity" is one of the ablest defenses of Freethought to which I have ever listened.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

The lecture was "The Glory of Infidelity." No man or woman could hear it without being inspired by the heroic Infidel manhood and womanhood coming down to us as a rich inheritance through the dreary ages of the past, and pointing with glorious hope to the "New Heaven and Earth."

J. F. BECK.

I believe I express the unanimous sentiment of all when I say that for a lecture of its character, Mr. Putnam has never been surpassed and seldom equaled on our platform—a platform famous for the talent it affords. "The Glory of Infidelity" fairly bristles with good things, and each sentence is an epigrammatic Secular sermon.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary American Secular Union.

—PRICE 10 CENTS.—

Address PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Not Used to It.

Musician—"I saw you among the audience at the Oratorio of 'The Creation' the other evening."

Eminent divine—"Yes, I felt that it was my duty to go and hear it; but it was dreadfully tiresome. Between the long drawn out recitatives, the endless repetitions in the arias and choruses, the hard seats in the hall, the necessity of remaining quiet all that time, and the cramped-up position in which I had to sit, I was nearly dead by the time they got through."

Musician—"You should sit among the congregation in a church for a while, and get hardened."

War Prices in Maine.

A dusty, shaggy stranger entered a Lewiston (Me.) barber-shop one day this week. The barber shaved his chin, trimmed his mustache and side whiskers, raked the clinkers out of his hair, washed his face, and after half an hour's hard work transformed him into a neat and respectable looking person from a condition in which he had the appearance of a vagrant.

"How much is the bill?" he asked, producing a plump wallet.

"Ten cents, sir," modestly replied the barber, wishing he had the cheek to say a quarter.

"H'm!" exclaimed the stranger, "I see you still keep up your war prices."

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1 00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1 00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

Prometheus. A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

A FEW DAYS IN ATHENS.

By Frances Wright. With a portrait of EPICURUS, the Greek Philosopher, and of the Author. Price, cloth, 75 cents.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald
504 Kearny st. San Francisco

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 30.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 27, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - JULY 27, 1889.

IN a recent speech Postmaster-General Wanamaker warned the people of his state that "God will count the prohibition votes in Pennsylvania." The Oregon Scout makes the remark that "the fellow who counts the other votes has the most work."

It seems that Mrs. Annie Besant has become a Fellow of the Theosophical Society. Theosophy means wisdom of God, and involves divine inspiration or illumination. The connection of Mrs. Besant, therefore, with a Theosophical society is one of the queer events of the century.

IN the English House of Parliament, July 22, the government committee on royal grants recommended that the Prince of Wales's quarterly allowance be increased by an addition of $45,000. Labouchere opposed it, and also the grant to the queen's granddaughter, but Mr. Gladstone voted for both.

THE Chautauquans at Long Beach are distinguishing themselves. Last week the Rev. Dr. Hirst lectured on "Education," and advocated the use of the Bible in schools and colleges. The Tribune reports that he "quoted Huxley and refuted his arguments." Mr. Huxley will probably be saddened when this intelligence reaches him from Los Angeles county.

THE Snohomish "Eye" says: "A religious fanatic at Palouse City killed his wife and two children and then committed suicide last week. He left a note stating that he did not want to live in this sinful world and that he could not leave it without his family, so he thought he would kill them too. He said he and all his family were going to heaven, where Jesus was, and that he first gave them strychnine, but could not bear the sight of their agonies, so he killed them with a revolver."

READERS of the works of Thomas Paine will remember that he once addressed a society of French people calling themselves Theophilanthropists. The members of the society were Deists. They believed in God, but rejected the Bible. According to the London Freethinker, the Theophilanthropists are by no means extinct. They were suppressed by Napoleon I. when he sought to be in favor with the Catholics, but they have held together in a quiet way and reorganized since 1872. They are now said to number over fifty thousand, mostly small proprietors in the provinces. They have a weekly journal, and have been holding the centenary of the establishment of their faith, which of course they believe to be the religion of the future.

MINNESOTA has a new law under which all executions must take place between the hours of 1 and 4 A.M. The law also provides that newspapers shall publish only a bare announcement of the hanging; but on July 19, when Albert Bulow was hanged for murder, the St. Paul papers contained full accounts of the execution. Prosecution will probably follow, and the result of this attempt to muzzle the press will be looked for with interest. New York has a similar law, and the papers are waiting for an execution in order to violate it.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, July 28, at 8 o'clock. C. F. Burgman will lecture on "Co-operative Liberalism."

NEWS AND NOTES.

It must be reported in the annals of FREETHOUGHT that the campaign along Gray's bay and river was a jolly and successful affair. There was plenty of fun mingled with hard work. All took hold with a will. There was no grumbling, however heavy the laboring oar. The boat sped on and the waters sang as if joyous with our own enthusiasm. To me it is ever a beautiful and varied picture of rippling, winding stream, majestic forests, boat-loads of happy people, blue sky bespangled with gorgeous clouds, birds singing in the branches, and bears crouching in the underbrush. A whole week was passed in intellectual and social enjoyment, and it seemed as if all the Freethinkers had made up their minds to have a grand festival occasion, and jubilant nature was no whit behindhand in the holiday march. She contributed flowers and songs and harvest-fields, and blue and golden days, and shining stars and lustrous moon.

The sun was just rising and glistening all over the expanse of river and sea Tuesday morning, July 9, when the steamer Rival bore me from Astoria to Gray's Bay, twelve miles distant. Hundreds of boats were tossing in the glaring beams, and for miles around the little white sails glittered like the wings of magnificent birds, in ceaseless bouyancy. Nearing Stark's point we were hailed by Comrade Nelson, of Crooked Creek. Transferring the baggage to his skiff, it was not long before we were in the arms of Crooked Creek. The watch-dog's honest bark greeted the stranger, and the humming of the bees on the hillside, and the cackle of a hundred chickens, told that our boatman's ranch was before us, where are to be found all the good things that a hospitable farm can afford, and Freethought places the banner above the cross. Mrs. Nelson and Miss Emma and Miss Ella have everything ready for the Gray's River trip. We leave behind the galaxy of dolls—twelve of them of various sizes and appearance, formed by Miss Ella into a harmonious Secular Union, with president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer, and speaker. The speaker is a black-eyed doll, and evinces in its glance more intelligence than some of the orators of the pulpit. Circling Gray's Bay and entering the river, at noon we are at the homestead of H. P. Anderson, in front of which spread the broad green meadows which he has cleared of forest. Here and there monstrous trunks of half-burned trees testify to the mighty giants that once waved on the banks. Quite a congregation gathered about the table—enough to make a good-sized audience of itself. Here we were joined by Mr. and Mrs. Foster, Mr. and Mrs. Hanson, Mrs. Feistel, P. C. Nelson, and others. At sunset we journey up the river, half a dozen boats full joining from various points, toward the little school-house hidden among the trees on the steep bank. It was a pleasant sight—the soft beams of sinking day, the green woods, the quiet river gently rippled by the lightly moving skiffs. The school-house was crowded; some Christians were present, and one nodded and shook her head with such alternate assent and dissent that it was proposed to furnish a pillow the following evening for the reclining and declining brow. Evidently there was food for reflection, although the digestion might not be all that was desired. On the next evening, Wednesday, the lecture was given at the same place and there were increased numbers. H. P. Miller and wife, and Nelson and Olson were present from Deep River. The next day we join forces and go to the upper school-house at Walker's and Ahlberg's. A lovely ride it was, in the dreamy afternoon, where one seemed to be traveling into the untrodden wilderness. From Walker's to Ahlberg's it is about two miles on the winding road. We were a pilgrim company indeed, men, women, and children. The little babies were not to be left out, but came right along to the lectures, as large as life. Ahlberg lives on Mt. Zion, I guess, a lovely place, back from the river, where the bees hum and the flowers grow profusely, and bright prospects extend before the eye. It seems to be in the midst of an immense solitude. We climb the hill and find a cheerful rest. A kind of beverage made of honey and hops was furnished by our gentle hostess. It is called beer, and Anderson says it is better than lager. I shall not venture to give my judgment. I have nothing to say against lager, but the honey and the hops can't be surpassed. The flavor is exquisite. After this refreshment and a supper the babies fell into line again, and the elders followed suit, and wended down the hillside, through the forest, along the sparkling stream, to the temple of learning on the height, opposite the parsonage. The minister was invited to attend and he came, a lively Methodist clergyman who knows how it is with the good things of life, so far as a Prohibitionist can know what a good thing is. He listened attentively to the lecture and took voluminous notes. The subject was "Moody and Sam Jones Reviewed." At the close of my lecture one of the Christian brethren, evidently of the "church militant," announced that my lecture would be replied to on Sunday morning by the clergyman present. I suggested that it would be a good time to reply immediately; that the platform was free and the preacher could have all the time he wanted. The said preacher declared that he was not ready for immediate action. He wanted time to show my contradictions, false assertions, etc. There was a somewhat beaming smile on the faces of the Christians at this willingness of their champion to answer when I was far away. They felt that the ground was theirs now, and the Infidel must be defeated. However, the end was not yet.

In the moonlight we travel down the river to Crooked Creek, and the midnight tour is quite delightful. All sorts of mysterious fancies float through the mind as we glide through the darkly gleaming spaces, water below, stars above, and the black forest on either side. An enormous mass of driftwood almost stops our voyage. Just as we approach this a bear is seen amid the branches making his way across. Friend Nelson was anxious to interview the bear and pointed the prow to his fleeting form. The bear evidently did not wish an interview, and I was myself heartily in favor of that conclusion. Not knowing much about the bear, it did not look desirable to scrape an acquaintance. I thought that friend Nelson was rather impetuous, but he seems to know what bears are, and is not afraid to meet them face to face. The bear was lost to view, and down the river we floated, while crackers and shad, with a little cold water that might after judicious investigation pass for "sea-foam," made the time flow merrily along. It is about three o'clock in the morning when we strike the blithesome creek and find a place to sleep. In the early forenoon a kind of cream called "egg-nogg" prepares me for the labors of the day. The first thing I did, after breakfast, was to help churn. This I did in consideration of the fact that Mrs. Nelson had gone sixteen miles the night before to attend the lecture. I do not suppose I would be a very successful dairyman if left to myself. Co-operation is the true way to make butter. In the afternoon the Andersons and Nelsons and Fosters were on hand, and over we went to Stark's Point. The man who owns the hall is so pious that he wouldn't let us dance in it, only lecture. He seems to be a good-natured man, attended the lecture, and did not appear violently opposed. The lecture was "Evolution and Creation." Friend Ahlberg and wife and baby came all the way down the river—twenty miles to and fro. This is quite a trip for a baby to make to a lecture. The little angels, wings and all, couldn't do any better. It is quite delightful to see the people so earnest in this matter and so ready to undergo any labor for the cause. Back, over the beaming waves and underneath the splendid moon, into the glistening shadows of Crooked Creek, we find rest again.

Saturday dawns with clouds and sunshine over the glittering rim of the ocean circling to the fair hillsides of Astoria. This day we go down to Barney's, round Rocky Point, and here they gather not only for the lecture, but for the dance; and I think this is a good way to mix the "grave with gay, the lively with severe." Mr. and Mrs. Butts are Liberals of the true type, and they make the Secular Pilgrim welcome to all that hospitable hands can give. The hall is filled with attentive listeners, except a preacher who happened to be present, but slid out when it became too hot for his orthodox backbone. We met many friends, and in every respect it was a delightful occasion. The music and the dance went whirling on until the merry morning mingled with the stars of the night. I had to go back up Gray's River with Anderson, for it was concluded that I had better make an extra effort and meet the preacher, on Sunday morning, who had advertised to annihilate the Infidel. Armed with the Presbyterian creed, I proceeded to confront my adversary. I knew that I could down him with the creed if nothing else. He tried to make it out that the creed was only a "remnant" of Presbyterianism, for he knew that the creed was a burden too great to be borne even by the Presbyterian church. We tried to keep our coming a secret from the "brethren," but some how or other it was found out, and everybody knew that there was to be some kind of a war at the school-house, and so they flocked from far and near, and the biggest audience of the season was on hand. My opponent, the preacher, is a young man like myself, not more than half a century old, and a typical Methodist clergyman—the Rev. Mr. Whitmore, formerly of Astoria, now of Eugene. He is sleek and bright, smooth spoken and quite a good talker. He has the points on his side pretty well mastered and handles them with lawyer-like skill of presentation. On the whole I think he did about as well as any of his side. I have listened to for some time, and I guess the Christians would have felt quite jubilant if their man could have had the last word. Evidently he wanted to have the last word, for instead of confining himself to my lecture he roamed over the whole universe and talked upon almost every conceivable subject—prohibition, dancing, Paine's death-bed, etc. In fact, he orated for two hours and a half. He evidently wanted to put us all asleep, but we kept awake and finally, at about two o'clock, he pronounced the benediction. I guess if he hadn't had a sore throat, for the benefit of which he was taking a vacation, he would have spun on until about four o'clock, and then the game would be up, for I was obliged to leave at that time to keep my other appointment. It was then announced that the Sunday-school would hold its session. Mr. Ahlberg protested against this and asked that I be granted an opportunity to reply. The women, however, were in favor of the Sunday-school. They said they would be through in half an hour, and I therefore announced that I would give my reply at half past two. The audience remained through the interval and I had my hour of reply. Mr. Whitmore's main objection was that I had misrepresented the doctrines of the church; that they were not near so bad as I had made them out to be. I confined myself mostly to answering this, and I read the Presbyterian creed and then passages from the Bible, and I think by the time I finished the audience were pretty well satisfied that I had not misrepresented the Christian dogmas. Of course Christians of to-day are ashamed of the creed, and ashamed of many things in the Bible, and they don't like to be reminded of these things, and they say that the Freethinker is like the buzzard searching for carrion. But I replied to this, that we are the surgeon who must search and cut out the bad things in order to preserve the good. My opponent attacked Bennett, Ingersoll, and Paine with the usual misrepresentations of the pulpit. I was glad of the opportunity to put the lie upon these assertions. I told the preacher that I had not the slightest objection to the good things that the Christians were doing. It was no argument in favor of their theology. It was simply an expression of their natural goodness, and they would do just as good things, and better things, if they were not Christians. He said Freethinkers did nothing for education. I referred to Girard College, and pointed out that when the Freethinker did give millions for Secular education, the churches robbed Freethought of the magnificent gift, and used it to build up their own creed directly contrary to the expressed wishes of the testator. I put as much of this sort of artillery into an hour's discourse as I possibly could. I gave the Christians all the hot shot there was in the locker, seeing they had provoked the contest, and meant to trick us out of a chance to reply. They played a shrewd game, and for the first two hours and a half swept the deck. But we had a few trumps left, and, when our turn came, took the odd trick and made the rubber. We led off with Presbyterian creed, and that demoralized them. It was as good as four aces.

In view of the extraordinary discourse of my adversary, lasting from half-past eleven until two o'clock, embracing every variety of subject that had no relation whatever to my lecture, I could not help telling the following story to illustrate the preacher's position: A farmer sent his boy out to set the old hen. When the boy came back, dad asked how many eggs were put under the hen? "One hundred and twenty," said the youth. "One hundred and twenty!" cried the farmer, "What's that for?" "Oh," answered Young America, "I thought I'd give the old hen a chance to spread herself." My clerical critic had his chance likewise, and he did "spread himself."

We had to hurry to the landing, for Astoria must be made by evening. We felt satisfied, and down the river the oars flashed bravely. And here let me put in a word for woman's rights, for the women as well as the men all through our river journeys took the laboring oar, and I don't believe the men could have kept to the front as they did if the women had not thus lent a hand. If woman can row, she certainly can vote. She can paddle her own canoe, and take a man along with her sometimes. We took a hasty but plentiful supper at Anderson's, and said farewell to our generous hosts—Andersons, Hansons, Feistels, etc. At the mouth of the river, our remaining company, the Nelsons, of Crooked Creek, and the Fosters, gave a rousing cheer for the week's campaign, and while they took their course homeward, Mr. John Nelson and Louis Olson, of Deep River, rowed me across to Barney's. Alas! my companions did not know what a wild-goose chase over the briny waters we were bound to make, and then at last fail the wished-for goal.

We were late at Barney's, and every fishing boat was out. No chance to reach Astoria that way. It was decided that we make our way by skiff round Harrington's Point to Elliott's, ten miles off, where we expected to strike the morning's boat from Astoria to Stella. We waited for the flood tide and then voyaged over the vast waste of waters. My companions had already rowed over twenty miles that day, and being at Barney's the night before had not slept any for about twenty-four hours. But they were bound to put me through, and bravely they bent to the task. It was about midnight when we passed the point into the neighborhood of Elliott's. We didn't know exactly where it was, and had to search along the shore for the wharf. At last we struck a scow, and got directions. There are only three or four houses at Elliott's, and all was dead silence when we got to the land. We tied the boat, and had to lift the luggage by rope about twenty feet in order to deposit it in the ware-house. We then proceeded to search for lodgings. We found a little house on the hill, and knocked. A lone voice inquired, "Who's there?" We gave our identity and our wants. The lone voice answered, "Go to the next house. The boys sleep there." So we stumbled down to the next house. We found the door unlocked, and went in and lighted the half-broken lamp. It gave light enough to show one bed. It was evident that we must sleep three together that night. So we stretched ourselves out spoon-fashion and floated off into the land of dreams, expecting that with morning's light all our labors would be over. We got up at sunrise, and looked about for breakfast. Nothing, however, put in an appearance, and it seemed as if we must go hungry until the boat appeared. It was nearing seven o'clock when the "gray-haired man of destiny" confronted us. Imagine our consternation when he informed us that no boat was due that morning on this side the river. All our night's voyage had been for nothing. How was I to get to Stella? If we had known it sooner we might have crossed the Columbia and taken the boat that went up on the other side. It was too late for that. We were in a pickle head over ears, and no breakfast, and the rain began to pour. All we could do was to tumble the baggage into the skiff, and row to Pillar Rock, four miles off. Perhaps I might get a fishing vessel to take me up to Stella. Arriving at Pillar Rock, it was found impossible to do this. Stella was thirty miles off, and no one would give up a night's fishing to take me there. A night's fishing is worth from twenty to twenty-five dollars. Where there's a will there's a way won't always prove true. There was no way for me. My friends had rowed twenty-five miles, and we were no better off than when we started. The ways of the Columbia steamboats are past finding out. There are two boats on this side every day except Monday. Monday, no boat at all. I am at a loss to know how this accommodates the public. At any rate, it didn't accommodate me nor the hundred and more people at Stella who were waiting for my lecture. I had to surrender to fate. I muttered a prayer or two, but the language of that prayer is inexpressible. I was in a canning factory at Pillar Rock, and as effectually canned up as the Columbia salmon itself. I had to submit. Nelson and Olsen, splendid companions, stuck by me as long as they could be of any assistance. We said good-bye, and hoped for better luck next time. However, no amount of bad fortune can dim the glory of the campaign up Gray's River, and as for the blows of fate, we will try and make up for them in the "sweet bye and bye."

All I could do was to take the boat for Astoria where, after a day's fasting, I got a good meal. I saw my friends George Rowe, A. W. Utzinger, and Wm. Chance and family, who always give the traveler welcome, and the same evening took boat for Stella where I arrived at midnight, just four hours too late for the lecture. People had come from many points. It was the largest gathering ever at the place. I would have given all the gold I had, and more too, to have saved this miscarriage. Alas! alas! if our foresight was only as good as our hindsight what a deal of bother might be saved. For the last two days I have been pursuing knowledge under difficulties. If I had known as much two days ago as now I would have snapped my fingers at fate and Providence. But it would take a divine foreknowledge to keep track of the ways of the Columbia-River boats.

I cannot close without expressing my thanks to the generous friends of Crooked Creek, Deep River, Gray's River, and Barney's Point who have done so much, not only to make the work itself successful and inspiring, but to make the way of the lecturer a most pleasant voyage, so that toil was sweetened with the delights of noble friendship and the genial home.

July 16, 1889.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

WE hope to hear that debates have been arranged in Kansas between the Rev. Mr. M. A. Gault and W. F. Jamieson. Gault is district secretary of the National Reform Association, and author of the following sentiment: "Don't think we are advocating war; but if we are not faithful in the use of these other means, as it was with the anti-slavery question, after they had agitated and petitioned, and used the ballot, they drew the sword; so shall we as a last resort, be compelled to use the sword and the bullet." Mr. Jamieson was one of the first to do battle against the National Reformers. He fought them as long ago as 1869, when the movement was started, and has been in the field ever since.

BOUND volumes of FREETHOUGHT for 1888 may be had for $2.50.

A PRAYER TEST PROPOSED.

FREETHOUGHT of July 13 contained the following paragraph:

"The Pacific Union, a paper 'devoted to the interests of Laborers and Producers,' takes the Twentieth Century across its knee and gives the editor a whaling for expressing doubts about the efficacy of prayer. There ought not to be two sides to a question so easily settled. If Mr. Hines, of the Pacific Union, believes that prayers are answered, let him make a test case and pray for something. If he can show that prayer brings the desired object, all skeptics will be put to rout. We believe, however, that Mr. Hines is sufficiently intelligent to know beforehand that he may pray at a mark the rest of his life and never hit it."

The editor of the Pacific Union takes the matter coolly and makes a proposition. He says:

"Our esteemed contemporary, FREETHOUGHT, possesses the merit of being exceedingly direct and practical in some of its suggestions at least. In its last issue it is pleased to notice the statements of the editor of the Union in reference to prayer, in a manner and tone which seem to indicate an advanced stage of conviction as to their truth and soundness. The intimation is given that if a little more aid can be afforded from the same source, the result will probably be the conversion of all the 'skeptics' in the country. That, indeed, would be a grand prize; one altogether worthy of a long seige at a 'Throne of Grace.' He wishes us to 'make a test case' for their especial benefit, and appears willing to abide by the result. Well, after 'prayerful consideration,' we have concluded to venture upon the experiment. The 'test' then, shall be this: We (remember, this don't include the manager, Brother Phillips) agree to pray for the space of two weeks that the editors of FREETHOUGHT may not write and publish anything foolish and absurd in the columns of said paper. The editors themselves are to be the judges. The only favor we ask is, that if we fail at any time during the experiment, the particular article evidencing such failure shall be plainly marked and sent to us, so that we may hold up. If no such evidence is given, then at the end of the time specified it shall be called a success, and thereafter we will all agree to 'pray without ceasing.' This we acknowledge to be a severe test, and will require faith on our part fully equal to a 'grain of mustard seed.'"

It strikes us that the Pacific Union wants to risk its money on a sure thing. We do not expect to publish anything "foolish and absurd" in the columns of FREETHOUGHT, and Brother Hines might as well have proposed to pray that the sun would rise every morning during the coming fortnight. Let him agree to marshal his forces and pray to God that the sun may not rise on San Francisco for a week, or that it may rise in the West instead of the East, or at night instead of morning. If the prayer took effect, the efficacy of that method would be vindicated. At the same time it would be a no more genuine miracle than if by the same process he should heal the sick, cause a blade of grass to grow, secure a new subscriber to the Pacific Union, or move a grain of mustard seed a hair's breadth. All these things are accomplished by other forces.

Let us have a fair test. Let Brother Hines pray that the circulation of the Pacific Union may double weekly until justice is done between man and man the world over; that the ghosts may vanish from the minds of men, and that the priests may cease to prey upon their superstitions. We will not insist upon his prayer being answered in two weeks; it will be glory enough if it is answered in two decades.

Being the judge in the case proposed by the editor of the Union, regarding the publication of foolish and absurd matter in these columns, we would of course have to decide in his favor as to the facts. After reading Mr. Hines's remarks, printed above, however, some of our readers might decide against him and contend that he had furnished us with the weapons for his own defeat,

A CODE OF MORALS.

Last year the Hon. John S. Hittell, of San Francisco, wrote and the Bancroft Company published a little book of fifty-one pages entitled "A Code of Morals." It is divided into five chapters, embracing Individual Duties, Social Duties, Industrial Duties, Political Duties, and Religious Duties. At the outset it can be seen that the author ignores all claims that morality is of divine origin. It is, he holds, a natural product of the human reason, and progressive in its development. We can trace its growth in history. We can see tribes in which it was creditable to rob or assassinate anyone belonging to another village; in which homicide was the only road to honorable distinction; in which cannibalism, human sacrifices at divine worship, hereditary slavery, unprovoked warfare for slaves and cattle, the ownership of nearly all the land by a hereditary nobility, despotic chieftainship, ecclesiastical persecution, and censorship of the press, were established institutions, and were not only considered politic and just, but were blessed by priests, as of divine origin, to last forever. These Mr. Hittell classes as evils, the overthrowing of which was an important step in moral progress. To aid in the general ethical welfare of our race, it is held, men should recognize the predominance of good in human nature. We should live a consistent life; choose a system suitable for the guidance of all men, and be true to it. We should shun asceticism, crime, and mean selfishness, and study justice and virtue. He confesses that the Golden Rule, "though the best epitome of the highest morality in a single sentence, is not sufficient for the moral guidance of humanity."

Pleasure, our author contends, governs us all:

"Do not assert that you live for others, or that you love your neighbor as yourself. You do not and cannot. If you have a high character, you may sacrifice your money or your life for them, but in such case the sacrifice is made primarily to your affection, and only secondarily to the object of your affection. The greatest and most generous sacrifices are also sacrifices to self, to a noble self-hood."

Furthermore:

"Do not allow others to dictate rules of conduct to you. Examine all the moral codes, including those of the Buddhists, the Stoics, the Christians, the Confucianists, the Epicureans, and the Utilitarians (most of these differ more in name than in spirit) and make a choice for yourself. Be your own man morally."

This warning is given:

"Be prepared to be maligned when you declare that your own enjoyment is the highest purpose and duty of your life. While blind to the weakness of their own positions, bigotry and superstition will grossly mistake and abuse yours, and even kind and learned genius will sometimes be unfair to you."

In his remarks on "Death" the author says:

"No other treasure is more precious to man than his self-respect, based on the consciousness of noble purpose and on the recollection of noble conduct; no other is so secure in its possession, for it cannot be taken away by the fickleness of fortune, as may wealth, office, and a circle of fashionable friends. Let your actions be sweet to-day so that there shall be no bitterness in your cup to-morrow."

Then the necessity of self-respect is advocated; also self-education, physical and mental. "Resist evil. Do not make a sheep of yourself for the benefit of the wolves. Do not encourage and reward violence by cowardly or meek submission."

We would like, if we had the space, to quote a hundred maxims of conduct and self-control. They are all good. Under Industrial Duties we come across sentiments concerning which there will be wide divergence of opinion. For instance, the following:

"Preserve your own industrial liberty, and respect that of others. Do not obstruct the free play of supply and demand. Do not hamper the career of business talent. Resist every association that dictates the prices of labor or merchandise; that demands as much employment and pay for the incompetent and careless as for the competent and careful workman; that prohibits work by the job; that forbids the strong and active workman to do more than the weak and idle; that commands laborers to beg rather than to accept living wages under the rates adopted by strikers; that depend on crime for the enforcement of their orders; and that organize a minority of toilers receiving high wages in conspiracy against a majority anxious to work for lower wages."

Here are Mr. Hittell's instructions as to the "Greatest Good:"

"Do not subordinate the welfare of the community to the greed or whim of any individual. Never let indulgence to the drone or the evil-doer outweigh justice to the community. Exterminate promptly the professional criminal, the Anarchist criminal, the insane criminal, the professional gambler, the sturdy beggar, and the habitual drunkard. Do not allow infants born blind, deaf, idiotic, monstrous, or seriously deformed to live."

The author opposes Communism, not because of its purpose, but because of its methods. It is a long and sudden jump beyond all governmental experience, whereas every advance should prove its soundness before its successor shall appear. Anarchy is condemned for the reason that it attacks all government, and destroys the only existing protection which the poor and weak have against the rich and powerful. "The most dangerous enemies of the poor are those demagogues who would like to bring on a destructive revolution, and who pretend that the hardships of poverty are mainly chargeable to the officials in power."

Among "Religious Duties" this is placed first:

"Do not despise your body. Do not degrade yourself by fasting, vigils, self-flagellation, or abstinence from any enjoyment that does [not] injure yourself or others. Do not sacrifice the certainties or neglect the opportunities of the world. Treat this life not as a mere probation or introduction to another, but as a sphere worthy of all your zeal and interest, as sufficient in itself to reward your highest ambition."

Certainly those are reasonable sentiments. The following might have been written by Thomas Jefferson:

"You may be told that this or that institution is of immediate divine origin, and must not be modified or destroyed by hostile legislation. If you will read the history of Egypt, Hindostan, Babylonia, Assyria, Persia, Arabia, India, Greece, Rome, Carthage, Gaul, and Utah, you will find that such claims have so often been made falsely that you will be somewhat suspicious. Demand conclusive proof of the divine origin. Remember the legal maxims that the more important the averment and the less consistent with ordinary experience, the stronger should be the proof, and that the evidence must be the best obtainable under the circumstances. It might be difficult to say what would be the best evidences that divine power could furnish to sustain its own work, but they would presumably include indisputable proof that the institution in question, unlike those of human origin, was perfect from the first, and had never suffered the least change by decay, growth, or reform; that the agents to whose care it had been intrusted had been perfect in their wisdom, learning, and justice; and that its influence had been beneficent in every direction. Until some institution can produce such evidence in its own support, you may without impiety legislate upon everything and reform everything."

As long ago as 1856, Mr. Hittell wrote a work entitled, "Evidences Against Christianity." It is just as strong, though not as effective, an attack on the Bible as that made by Thomas Paine in his "Age of Reason." The author speaks of the plan of salvation as "foolishness;" charges rightly that "no book on earth teaches so many conflicting dogmas as the Bible, and declares that belief in Jehovah is a superstition. For that reason we are rather surprised to find in the "Code of Morals" now under consideration the following:

"You are under no obligation to proclaim doctrines that, by the people around you, are regarded as criminal or injurious to the general welfare. If your neighbors accept false and debasing opinions, you can presumably do more good by teachings that will please and gradually elevate them than by offending them so that they would at once burn, banish, or avoid you."

At this point, it seems to us, our Homer nods. We are inclined to think that if we have a truth we are under a moral obligation to proclaim it. Socrates thought the same; so did Christ, Servetus, and Giordano Bruno; so, also, apparently, did Mr. Hittell in 1856. Any other method would put an end to progress.

But it is not to criticise Mr. Hittell's book, but rather to call attention to it, that this article is written. The Secularists of the country are contributing toward a fund of one thousand dollars to be paid for the best manual on moral instruction without superstition. The present work is in the same direction, and would certainly be of great help to those who might think of competing for the prize. It costs 25 cents.

It is hoped that friends of FREETHOUGHT will not allow their zeal to slacken until every available subscriber among their acquaintances has been brought into the fold. True, this is not the season for reading, owing to busy times and short evenings, but it is well enough to agitate and keep the matter before the people. Sow the good seed now, and gather the harvest in the fall. Every subscriber is authorized to act as our agent to secure new ones.

AFTER reading FREETHOUGHT for nearly a year Mr. A. J. Kalb, of Quincy, Ill., has made a discovery. He writes:

QUINCY, ILL., July 17, 1889.

Messrs. Putnam and Macdonald, Sirs: Please do not send the FREETHOUGHT to me any longer. I do not consider it fit to be in any family. I am ashamed for any person to know that I take it. I did not know its character before I took it. Yours respectfully, A. J. KALB.

Mr. Kalb is the proprietor and manufacturer of a chart of the Solar System, which he endeavored to induce us to advertise and sell. The chart is well enough astronomically, so far as we know, but it is covered all over with scripture texts and pious assurances which make it unreliable as a scientific guide. Hence we declined to handle it, and hence Mr. Kalb's alarming discovery.

TALMAGE has been to Johnstown and reports:

"The stories circulated about Johnstown people having lost their faith in God and given up the Christian religion because of this calamity, I denounce as false and scoundrelly. The pastors tell me there was one such case. On the contrary, there is more Christian devotion than ever before. Even Infidels pray. One of them the afternoon of the disaster, in the upper room of a house which was rapidly filling with water, was overheard to pray: 'O God, if you can give me any aid at this time I will be very much obliged to you.'"

Some years ago Mr. Talmage gave the world an electrifying story about an Ohio blasphemer who was suddenly turned into red-hot stone. Upon investigation by reliable parties the reverend gentleman was shown to be a liar of the first degree. His present performance sustains his previous reputation.

THE National Liberator advertises Bellamy's book, "Looking Backward" thus: "gnikooL."

THE Golden Gate replies to our query by saying that it does not want the earth exactly, "but we want enough of it for a four-story building for the uses of Spiritualism that may cost from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars. The forty-thousand-dollar donation is a glorious pointer in that direction." We hope to see the proposed building erected. It would be a temple of light compared with the orthodox church buildings, though such a structure as the Lick Academy of Sciences is more in keeping with our ideas of usefulness.

THE delegates to the Idaho constitutional convention give early evidence that a secular constitution is not to be looked for. The other day a delegate named Peffly moved that the payment of state funds to religious institutions or for chaplains in legislatures be prohibited, and the dispatches say that he was "well sat down on" by the convention. He also moved to strike out the preliminary incantation, "Grateful to Almighty God," but lost. Superstition appears to have won in the opening skirmish.

A GENUINE case of religious persecution is now staining the records of the Tennessee courts. A Seventh-day Adventist named King, who observes Saturday as the Sabbath, was at last accounts under arrest for cultivating his corn on Sunday. The Sabbatarian bigots would make Mr. King's fate the fate of all American citizens if they had the power; and they are reaching out after it.

MR. HENRY AULL, of Capistrano, Cal., writes:

"I am fully conscious that you are exactly like all the priests of superstition and the despoilers in our Secular affairs; that you don't want overwhelming refutation of your sophistry; that you only want lucre."

A man as wise as Mr. Aull should spell his name as it is pronounced—Owl.

THE former "Arbitrator," a Liberal and Reform paper published at Denver, Col., has assumed the size and form of FREETHOUGHT, and takes a new name, "The Individualist." Quaker Dyer D. Lum, the successor of Albert R. Parsons as editor of the Anarchistic "Alarm," writes for the new journal.

A CHRISTIAN and a Jew, farm employees of A. S. Hallidie, at Searsville, San Mateo county, had a religious discussion last Sunday. The Christian prevailed by the usual method. He drew a pistol and inflicted a wound upon his opponent which may prove fatal.

FROM a circular received we gather the information that James Vincent Sr., formerly of the American Nonconformist, is about to begin the publication of a new reform journal called the "Christna." It will probably be issued from Winfield, Kan.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The Catholics dedicated a school for girls at San Rafael last Sunday. The grounds and buildings cost $150,000.—The Rev. J. P. Dickinson preached at the Independent Presbyterian church Sunday night on "A Screw Loose." Those who heard the sermon located the loose screw in the preacher's head.—Maurice Walsh, a Cronin suspect, is being watched by the police of San Francisco.—John H. Wigmore, son of a San Francisco lumber dealer, has been appointed professor of law in the University of Tokio, Japan. Wigmore is a graduate of Harvard, and for the last few years has been practicing law in Boston. He is not thirty years of age, but was appointed on the special recommendation of President Elliot of Harvard, because of his eminent ability.—It is reported that a movement is on foot among the merchants who form the New York Chamber of Commerce to induce Congress to repeal the Chinese Exclusion act.—Electric lights have been set up in Chinatown to illuminate the dark places and prevent crime. The Celestials denounce the strange luminaries as "devil lights."—There is complaint of "extensive carelessness" in the distribution of the Johnstown relief fund.—The state Supreme Court has reversed the decision of Judge Sullivan, who decided the Sharon will case in favor of Sarah Althea, and gives the Sharon estate to Sharon's legitimate heirs.

A monument has been erected at Utica, N. Y., over the grave of Roscoe Conkling. It bears the simple inscription, "Roscoe Conkling. Born October 30, 1829. Died April 16, 1888." The monument is nine feet high and weighs about twenty-five tons.—The Sunday law is strictly enforced in Kansas City, Mo., and last Sunday the town was as dry as Kansas.—The Carson Appeal says forty ministers gathered in that city during the few days preceding the appearance of a company of pretty and scantily clothed women on the stage there last week.—The Law and Order League of Cincinnati, O., shut up the saloons on Sunday, and the saloon-keepers retaliated last Sunday by shutting up all kinds of business places. Fifteen arrests were made.—The Kanawha Valley, Virginia, was flooded by a cloudburst last week. Many people were drowned, and the loss of property reaches millions.—The State Prohibition Convention of Virginia met July 17 and nominated a full state ticket, at the head of which for governor is the Hon. Thomas E. Taylor.—Jay Mapes and Douglass Twell of Columbia College, New York, who have been studying at the University of Edinburgh during the summer season, have acquitted themselves with high distinction in the practical anatomy class of Sir. William Turner. The former obtained first place and the university medal, with 95 per cent of available marks, and the latter third place, with 93 per cent of available marks.—Mrs. Grant has received over $900,000 from the sale of General Grant's "Memoirs."

A Paris dispatch dated July 21 says: The Anarchists marched in procession to Pere-la-Chaise cemetery to-day and laid wreaths upon the graves of the dead Communists. Herr Liebknecht and others delivered orations at the tombs of Boerne and Heine. A band of Possibilists, headed by Mrs. Besant, also visited the cemetery and decorated the Communists' graves with wreaths, also placing upon them grasses plucked from the graves of the Anarchists executed at Chicago.—The Spanish government has forbidden any demonstration calculated to encourage the pope to come to Spain in the event of his leaving Rome.—The Whitechapel desperado known as Jack the Ripper murdered another woman last week. The police are unable to find the assassin.—The jury in the case of William O'Brien against Lord Salisbury for slander has returned a verdict in favor of Salisbury.

OBSERVATIONS.

A few weeks ago a caller at this office left with me a little book, that he had picked up somewhere in the mines, called "The Evidences Against Christianity;" written by John S. Hittell and published by the author in 1856. One corner of the book is burned away—perhaps some good Christian, at one period or another of its history, tried to cremate it—and its pages are discolored from being watersoaked. On the flyleaf the following inscription is still legible:

TO JAMES NISBET, from his deeply indebted associate, friend, and almost pupil,
THE AUTHOR.
San Francisco, Feb'y 29th, 1856.

Old residents inform me that James Nisbet was a journalist, well-known as editor of the San Francisco Bulletin in its best days, an able, upright man, who gave the paper a character it had never known before, and has not enjoyed since. He had the misfortune, one day in the year 1864, to embark on the steamer Brother Jonathan, from Puget Sound to this port. The vessel missed her course in a fog and went aground on the Crescent City reef, and only a boatload of her passengers reached the land. Mr. Nisbet lost his life, but it is told that while the ship was sinking he wrote his will on a slip of paper, which in some way was saved and admitted to probate. The Brother Jonathan had a large amount of money on board in gold and greenbacks, but none of it was ever recovered. Indeed, it was never learned what particular rock the ship struck upon, and the spot where she went down is unknown to this day. When the survivors went back to rescue their fellow-voyagers the Brother Jonathan had disappeared forever.

So the little book has a history and a tragedy associated with it, and I have put it on file as a relic. I wish that its distinguished author, who is evidently a Freethinker, would give the world the benefit of his later researches and conclusions.

Visitors to the hall where the Freethought Society meets sat in darkness last Sunday evening and watched the magic lantern pictures which Brother Faust threw on a screen at the end of the room. It was one of the few stereopticon exhibitions I had ever attended when I did not have a hand in running the show, and I was therefore much happier than usual. Mr. Faust took all the responsibility—hung up his screen, worked the lantern, and told what the pictures were designed to represent. If the janitor had been foresighted enough to provide seats for all the people who came, I should not have perspired so freely as I did in rustling for chairs.

Mr. Faust opened with a ship at sea, in which the audience were supposed to be en route for Egypt. After landing us in Alexandria previous to its bombardment, all hands took a spiel through the city. Then the pyramids and sphinx were visited, and other objects of deep interest. The route lay northwest to Italy, giving views in Pompeii. The famous exhumed bakery was shown, where the excavators found eighty loaves of bread in a good state of preservation. Mr. Faust did not avail himself of the sarcasm that some of the same loaves are now to be found on the tables of boarding houses. I once sprang that joke on my Troy audience and it took first-rate. In the course of an hour the voyagers sighted the Brooklyn Bridge, and then we got some California scenery in the shape of magnified fleas and flea eggs. Mr. Faust had been studying the manners and customs of the pulex irritans, and stated that a single flea would lay eighty eggs at a sitting, but omitted to estimate how many would be laid by a married one. The way he neglected opportunities of this kind convinced me that he was just the sort of man to sin away his hour of grace without taking advantage of the plan of salvation so freely offered to all. Some vinegar poured upon a glass and placed in the lantern cast the shadows of innumerable living organisms on the screen. Mr. Faust invited the audience to step forward and examine the same, and those who did so showed the people behind them how a man would look with a handful of animated ravelings crawling around and tying themselves into knots on his back. So the exhibition passed off quite pleasantly.

After the lights were turned on Vice-President Eastman spoke eloquently and at great length. His address referred to the collection, and resulted in nearly doubling the usual contribution. The Chair gave visitors to understand that strangers and those not in sympathy with the objects of the organizations were not solicited or expected to put anything in the hat, while for friends who desired to help the cause along no limit was prescribed.

There was no discussion, and no further exercises except the piece of music which Professor Joran played on the piano. Some went away before the close, though people that were wise stayed till the audience arose, and helped display its size; but there are those who'd not repose an hour in paradise.

Next Sunday evening Mr. Charles F. Burgman will address the society on "Co-operative Liberalism."

Sigismund Danielewicz and J. D. Steell, who started in together to publish the San Diego Beacon, got out five numbers. Then they discovered that they could not pull in the same harness. In No. 6 Mr. Steell says, "Although I have always held Mr. Danielewicz personally in the greatest esteem, I have found it impossible to reconcile myself to giving even a tacit countenance to his theories as to the proper solution of the social question." He therefore withdraws. Mr. Danielewicz is lonesome. The editorial chair looks big to him, and he feels small. The office is empty; his pen seems as heavy as a tamping-bar; and when the gloaming deepens into darkness, and the jabberwock whiffles through the tulgy wood, and the Salvation Army comes out, he doesn't conceal that he wants company. Nevertheless, he says, "personal friendship must not interfere with the grand cause of human progress," and he will "continue to battle on the lines which he has conceived to be the basis of universal harmony." The solitary editor and proprietor does not tell exactly where he stands, and from his mistaking "lines" for a "basis" I judge he has not as yet gained a very clear view of the field before him. There is also an apparent contradiction of terms in his declaration that he will "battle on the basis of universal harmony." If he has found such a basis he should invite universal harmony to come and sit on it.

But I merely wished to remark that if Messrs. Steell and Danielewicz cannot agree on the social question they made a great mistake in founding a paper to discuss social issues. If Mr. Steell is a Nationalist and Mr. Danielewicz an Individualist they are as far asunder as the east and the west. The whole field of social reform lies between them, and the nearer they get together the better chance there is for a scrimmage. When the Socialist and the Anarchist lie down together, the Anarchist will be under the bed.

It seems strange that Messrs. Steell and Danielewicz did not ask my advice on the subject before they started the Beacon. Then the "partnership heretofore existing" would not have had to be dissolved by Mr. Steell, and Mr. Danielewicz would not now feel that "something like remorse was creeping over him."

SUNDAY-LAW HYPOCRISY.

From A. T. Jones's Argument before the Senate Committee.

But the secret of the whole matter is this: As an argument for the Sunday law, these men assert that the great railroad corporations desecrate the Sabbath, and by persistently running Sunday trains, also compel the railroad-men to work and to desecrate the day. They at the same time assert that the men who own the railroads belong to the churches. If, then, the railroads compel their men to desecrate the day, and the owners of the railroads are church members, then who is it but the church members that are compelling people to desecrate the day?

Further than this, they quoted at Chicago the statement of a railroad president, that the roads "get more requests for Sunday trains signed by preachers" than they do from other people. But as the church members own the railroads, and the preachers request them to run Sunday trains, then who is to blame for the "desecration" of the day but the preachers and their own church members? Can't the preachers stop asking for Sunday trains without being compelled to do so by the civil law? In the Chicago convention last month—November 20, 21—Dr. Knowles, who is secretary of this National Sunday-law Union, said that by the influence of William E. Dodge, even after his death, the Delaware & Lackawanna Railroad Company had resisted the temptation to run trains on Sunday until the present year. But five hundred ministers met in conference in New York and used competing lines on Sunday, and by this the hands of the Sunday observance committee have been tied ever since. After that, when the Delaware & Lackawanna directors were asked not to run Sunday trains, they replied:

How can you come to us pleading for us to run no trains on Sunday, when your preachers by the hundreds on Sunday use our rival lines, which do run on Sunday? If your preachers ride on Sunday trains on other roads, we cannot see why they and other people cannot ride on our trains on Sunday. And if it is all right for these other roads to run trains on Sunday—and certainly ministers of the gospel would not ride on them if it were wrong—then we cannot see how it can be such a great wrong for us to run Sunday trains.

That is a very proper answer. No wonder the Sunday committee's hands are tied by it. And yet that very conference of five hundred preachers, assembled in New York last summer, took the first decided step toward the organization of the National Sunday Association, of which Dr. Knowles himself is secretary.

By these facts there is presented the following condition of things: (1) Church members own the railroads; (2) Preachers sign requests for Sunday trains; (3) The church members grant the request of the preachers for Sunday trains, and the preachers ride on the Sunday trains, and other church members go on Sunday excursions; (4) Then the whole company—preachers and church members—together petition Congress and the state legislatures to make a law stopping all Sunday trains! That is to say, they want the legislatures, state and national, to compel their own railroad-owning church members not to grant the requests of the preachers for Sunday trains. In other words, they want the civil power to compel them all—preachers and church members—to act as they all say that Christians ought to act. And they insist upon quoting all the time the commandments of God, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." But if they will not obey the commandment of God, which they themselves acknowledge and quote, what assurance have we that they will obey the law of Congress or state legislature when they get it, especially as it will rest entirely with themselves to see that the law is enforced? Will they compel themselves by civil law to do what they themselves will not otherwise do? The sum of the whole matter is that they want the civil power to enforce church discipline; and that not only upon themselves, but upon everybody else. The whole system, and all the pretensions upon which this Sunday law is demanded, are crooked.

"J. C. P." CONTINUES THE ARGUMENT.

The article published in your paper July 13, on which you have commented and styled "A Defense of Catholicism," was not intended as a defense of the Catholic religion, but simply as a defense of Catholics as a sect and a class, in contrast with the more dangerous element known as Protestants.

In your strictures on this, you bring grave charges against Catholics and the Catholic church. To one or two of those charges I think there is room for exception.

First. I am not convinced that "Catholics are opposed to progress" simply because "they are opposed to innovations," or that "innovations" are always on the side of "progress."

The sumptuary laws and prohibition deviltries which for many years have obstructed and prevented needed legislation, embarrassed the courts, and distracted our people are all "innovations;" and surely in these matters we have not progressed.

Second. I do not believe that the Catholic church is the only one which has "attacked our public schools."

How long since a convocation of the Protestant ministers of California almost unanimously declared in favor of the Bible in the public schools? You say that "Catholic school training is vastly inferior to that of the Protestant." Perhaps the distinction is in reference to quantity ("cramming") instead of quality; or to frivolous modern fine arts instead of the solid sciences.

"The public schools in danger" has for many years been the great political bugaboo, and the source of a vast amount of party clap-trap. It is now evident that our public school system, under Protestant management, is fast becoming a political machine, the control of which the Protestant clergy are strenuously endeavoring to secure, with a fair prospect of success.

I admit that "an institution should be judged by its record rather than by its promises." But will not the record of the Catholic church compare favorably with that of the Protestant since the establishment of the latter? If, as you say, "the Catholic church has ruined every country in which it has had the controlling power," cannot the same be said of Protestant churches?

Under Protestant government Ireland has been reduced to her present condition. In no country have crueller persecutions and outrages ever been committed than in the American colonies under Protestant rule; and even now, in many of our American states, Protestant piety has inaugurated sumptuary and oppressive laws and religious restraints upon personal liberty almost beyond endurance.

Nearly all the Protestant ministers in the United States have indorsed the following declaration of united religious and political principles, namely, "That we acknowledge Almighty God as the supreme ruler of the universe, to whose laws all human enactments must conform." These are now clamoring for a recognition of God in the Constitution; for a national Sunday law; for a national prohibition law, and a national compulsory education law. They are also asking for the exemption of church property from taxation, and, to secure the enactment of such laws, for the enfranchisement of woman.

From all this the Catholic clergy have stood aloof; nor have they ever attempted to influence, corrupt, or control our legislative bodies. Which then, to judge by their record, is the most dangerous, the Catholic church or the Protestant? J. C. P.

DID JESUS CHRIST RISE FROM THE DEAD ?*

IV.

Having dealt with Paul, who, demented though he was, was the only person with sufficient mental force about him, among all the early Christians, to plant deeply the roots of a new propaganda, I will revert to the resurrection evidence of the four evangelists. I at once admit that it is preposterous to adduce four such ill-attested documents, even if they agreed among themselves, in evidence for the occurrence of such a tremendous impossibility as the resurrection. To the mental temper of the thinkers of the present time, the resurrection of Christ would not be established if all the writers of the ancient world bore detailed and uniform evidence in its favor. On the lines of Hume's inexpugnable argument it would still be more probable that all those writers, knowingly or unknowingly, should bear false witness than that a dead man should rise from the grave. Accordingly, the mutually contradictory four gospels, standing alone, without even the veriest shadow of support from any contemporary writer, is ludicrously inadequate to establish that the resurrection took place. But here, arranged briefly and concisely (A Light to Lighten the Gentiles) are the "evidences" given by the unknown writers of the gospels:

"Luke (xxiii. 49) relates that, from the crucifixion to the death of Jesus, 'all his acquaintance, and the women that followed with him from Galilee, stood afar off' from his cross. Matthew (xxvii. 55, 56) and Mark (xv. 40, 41) name Mary Magdalene and other women as beholding the crucifixion 'from afar.' Whereas John (xix. 25, 27) declares that Mary Magdalene and the mother of Jesus, and her sister Mary, the wife of Cleopas, also the disciple whom Jesus loved, stood 'by the cross of Jesus.'"

"Pursuant to John (xix. 31-38), before Joseph of Arimathea besought Pilate's permission to allow him to take away the body of Jesus—which was most readily granted him—Pilate had, in compliance with the request of the Jews, given an order for the breaking of the legs of the crucified in order to ensure their speedy death, and thereby to hasten the removal of their bodies. Whereas, according to Mark (xv. 43-45), when Joseph, in the evening, applied for the body of Jesus, 'Pilate marveled if he were already dead,' etc.

"In Matthew (xxvii. 60) Joseph of Arimathea is described as laying the body of Jesus once for all 'in his own new tomb, which he had hewn out in the rock.' In John (xix. 41, 42) the sepulchre is not only not represented as Joseph's, but it is spoken of, not as a final, but as a temporary place of interment, because it was 'nigh at hand.'"

"Matthew (xxvi. 17-21), Mark (xiv. 12-18), and Luke (xxii. 7-16) place the passover before, not after, the apprehension, trial, crucifixion, death, and burial of Jesus, as does John (xviii. 28; xix. 14, 42)."

"In Matthew (xvi. 21; xvii. 23; xx. 19) and Luke (ix. 22; xviii. 33) Jesus informs his disciples of his approaching death and of his rising again 'the third day,' not 'after three days,'—i.e., on or after the fourth day, as in Mark (viii. 31; com. Matthew xii. 40). In Matthew (xxvii. 62-64) this flat contradiction does not appear either to have opened the eyes or to have puzzled the brains of the pharisees."

"Pursuant to Mark (ix. 31, 32) and Luke (ix. 44, 45; xviii. 33, 34) the disciples of Jesus understood not what he meant when he spoke of being put to death and of rising therefrom. After the death of Jesus the above alleged prophetic communication afforded his disciples no hope of ever seeing him again; but according to Matthew (xxvii. 62-66) the chief priests and pharisees both understood and acted upon it."

"In John (xix. 39, 40) Nicodemus and Joseph of Arimathea embalmed the body of Jesus, 'as the manner of the Jews is to bury.' In Mark (xvi. 1) and Luke (xxiii. 56; xxiv. 1) the women who beheld where the body of Jesus was laid prepared spices for the anointing it after the Sabbath."

"Pursuant to Matthew (xvii. 66), the chief priests and pharisees made the sepulchre sure by 'sealing the stone,' and placing a 'guard,' whereas according to all four of the evangelists, including even Matthew himself, the women apparently knew not of the stone having been sealed, and the body of soldiers placed to guard the sepulchre."

"In John (xx. 1) Mary Magdalene is the first to visit the tomb of Jesus. She sees, though it is 'yet dark,' that the stone has been taken away from it. In Mark (xvi. 1-3), when she comes at a later hour—'when the sun was risen'—to the tomb in company with two other women, she knows not that the stone has already been removed 'from the door of the tomb.'"

"In John (xx. 1) the first visit to the tomb of Jesus is made by only one woman, 'Mary Magdalene.' In Matthew (xxviii. 1) by two women, 'Mary Magdalene and the other Mary.' In Mark (xvi. 1) by three women, 'Mary Magdalene and Mary the mother of James, and Salome.' In Luke (xxiv. 1-10) by more than four women, among whom 'were Mary Magdalene and Joanna, and Mary the mother of James.'"

"In John (xx. 1), on the first visit to the tomb of Jesus no one is seen. In Matthew (xxviii. 2) 'an angel of the Lord' is seen sitting on the stone he had rolled away from the door of the sepulchre. In Mark (xvi. 5) 'a young man sitting on the right side clothed in a long white garment.' In Luke (xiv. 4) the women, on arriving at the tomb and entering therein, see no one at first, but shortly afterwards 'two men' appear standing by them in dazzling apparel."

"In John (xx. 2) Mary Magdalene informs Simon Peter, and the other disciple whom Jesus loved, of the Lord having been taken away 'out of the sepulchre.' In Luke (xxiv. 9, 10) Mary Magdalene and the other women tell 'the eleven' and 'all the rest' of what they had both seen and heard. In Matthew (xxviii. 8) Mary Magdalene and the other Mary ran to convey to the disciples the glad tidings. But in Mark (xvi. 8) Mary Magdalene and the two other women 'fled from the sepulchre,' and said nothing to any one; 'for they were afraid.' Mark xvi. 9-20, is generally admitted to be spurious."

"In John (xx. 3-8) Peter and the other disciple at first apparently doubt the truthfulness of Mary Magdalene's report. In Matthew (xxviii. 10-16) it is implied that the disciples both believed and acted upon the women's report. But in Luke (xxiv. 11) the apostles disbelieve the women, whose words appear in their sight 'as idle tales.' Verse 12 is by many eminent critics regarded as an interpolation."

"Pursuant to Luke (xxiv. 51) and John (xx. 17, 21, 22, 23), Jesus, on the day he rose from the dead, ascended to his Father, and on the evening of the same day he is described by John as imparting to his disciples the gift of the 'Holy Ghost;' whereas, according to the Acts (i. 3; ii. 1-4), there was an interval of forty days between the resurrection and the ascension, and a further interval of ten days before the 'Holy Spirit' was given."

If the four gospels in their details in regard to the resurrection had agreed, the whole affair would, I repeat, still be monstrously incredible to all fairly sane and educated persons acquainted with even the rudiments of the laws of evidence. Each of the four gospel writers was inspired by the Holy Ghost, and the Holy Ghost has taken the trouble to inspire each of them to tell a different story. If this fact does not establish the truth of the resurrection, it at all events proves that the Holy Ghost is versatile and inventive, and that, having inspired four different gospels, all equally true, and all contradicting each other, he is no relation of "Singlespeech Hamilton." For many centuries the mendacious absurdities and irreconcilable contradictions of Holy Writ were known only to the Christian priesthood and in their own interests they had the wisdom to keep the scriptures out of the hands of their dupes. The Reformation came, and the scriptures did get into the hands of the Christian dupes; but by that time they had been duped for so many centuries that they have practically elected to be duped for a century or two longer; so intractable is the human mind, and so insidious are the siren paths of error.

Protestantism got the "open Bible" into its hands; but it was a cowardly dolt that could not read it. It was, moreover, exceedingly busy at the poor, stale old business of begetting children and earning bread for them; so, to save itself trouble, it handed the scriptures over to its paid parsons, that they might do the reading thereof. These parsons found that it was expedient to read therefrom that Christ rose from the dead, for it is always

*By Saladin, editor of the Agnostic Journal.

"the horrible and awful" that takes with the multitude, who do their thinking by proxy. To keep up the deception, those parsons wrote laborious tomes to reconcile the irreconcilable and explain the inexplicable. The lay dupes did not over-clearly see how the irreconcilable was reconciled, and how the inexplicable was explained; but they believed that the parsons knew all about "the deep things of God," and that was enough. An array of learning acts on the vulgar like a spell. How could John Smith, the cheesemonger, doubt that Jesus Christ rose from the dead, when the Rev. Theophilus M'Hellcinder, D.D., had written eleven great volumes on the subject, nearly the half of them Latin, every page bristling with Greek, and every alternate page sacredly mysterious with heavy, square, black Hebrew, or awful with Accadian cuneiforms?

The common sense of ordinary mankind would long ago have rebelled against the array of Christian impostures but for Learning, whose business it has been to bewilder, not to enlighten, the poor beasts of burden upon whose backs it has ever mockingly ridden. Oh, when will the plainest man alive come to the conviction that about the mystery of life and the arcanum of death—about the blank before the cradle and the vacuity behind the tomb—he knows as much as did the most erudite priest that ever lived? How long will the multitude be juggled into supporting a class of charlatans who affirm that they know what they positively do not know? Because huge volumes have been written for falsehood, and splendid churches and cathedrals built to propagate superstition, how long will it be before the simple wayfaring man can be convinced that the right is on the side of a booklet like this, and that truth is indebted to the services of a pen like mine?

"Oh that the wise from their bright minds would kindle
Such lamps within the dome of this dim world,
That the pale name of priest might shrink and dwindle
Into the hell from which it first was hurled,
A scoff of impious pride from fiends impure;
Till human thoughts might kneel alone
Each before the judgment throne
Of its own aweless soul, or of the power unknown."—SHELLEY.

LAW AND GOVERNMENT.*

I can conceive of a state of society wherein "law and government" might not be absolutely necessary. If the golden rule was a practical law, we should need none other. If we had a creator perfect in attribute, through whose unerring hand we had passed as "clay in the hands of the potter," we should necessarily have been perfect beings, having been made by a perfect creator who could not make an imperfect thing "in his own image." But realizing the imperfect nature of the average being, we have to conclude that evolution and not creation is the natural and only law of our beings, and that the invention of creation is the result of the dense ignorance of benighted and undeveloped minds, or else the product of a base and deceitful schemer.

Having come to the unalterable conclusion that we cannot accuse a special creator of being responsible for the imperfections of humanity; and having satisfied ourselves that nothing perfect can be expected from a source subject to myriads of accidental combinations, and that no two human beings can think exactly alike, and that no two are subject to the same requirements, either mental or physical, we cannot expect any great amount of voluntary self-sacrifice for the public good.

Our tastes, desires, and demands are so varied that they cannot all be gratified without conflicting with those of others; and adding to these the various imperfections of humanity as the result of a mistaken policy and a vicious manner of reproduction, it is no wonder that "law and government" are necessary for the best interests of society.

It is probably true that a misconception of natural laws and a false sentimentalism have given us laws which are vicious in their application, and create crime where none would otherwise exist; but these are the result of ignorance, or the peculiar mental pabulum of our law makers, largely controlled by the sentiments of society.

*An essay read by Ranford Worthing before the Progressive League of San Diego, Sunday, June 16, 1889.

Religion, based upon ignorance and superstition, is largely responsible for the foolish and injurious laws upon our statute books; but thanks to an age of reason and science, we will soon produce a necessity for the abrogation of all bad laws.

But that we need laws for the guidance of the good-intentioned, and the control of the bad element in society, is unquestionable; and the only way to avoid the necessity of laws and government is to produce a state of society so perfect that generosity and unselfishness will be the predominating characteristics of its members.

The suppression of crime monopolizes nearly all our efforts at government, and our laws are entirely directed to the protection of government and people against the encroachments of those who seek to rob or destroy them.

This, at once, seems horrible to contemplate, when we realize that we are making laws against ourselves as a people, but then our lack of patriotism, or realization that each individual is or ought to be directly interested in the welfare of all, is astonishing. Government or law to the ordinary person appears to be a despotic master instead of a servant of the people.

We are apt to regard law as a monster octopus reaching out continually to deprive us of liberty and rights; and forget that we are only protecting ourselves individually and collectively by this means.

We have a variety of forms of government, and have ever had since the world was peopled. Among the earliest of which we have any knowledge is the patriarchal form, than which there is no better at the present time. It is not the form of government, but the character of the governors, that give us good or bad government; and a king or emperor with the proper sentiments in regard to humanity might give us the best possible government. But there being no different attributes in the make-up of kings and emperors from those of other men, it follows that they have to be restrained by laws as well as other people. This condition has brought about the gradual demand for the growth of republics, a government by the people; and to my mind the only perfect form of such a government is one simplifying it to such an extent that cognizance of all by all can be possible. The great extent of our country, the facilities for travel, and the absolute freedom of everybody to go and come when and where they please, furnish opportunities for the commission of crime that should be curtailed. Yes, I say the liberties of all persons with criminal tendencies should be curtailed; for no man has a right to endanger my liberties in the enjoyment of life and the pursuit of happiness by committing acts against my happiness; and it might produce happiness to a criminal to deprive me of my rights.

Now, if all the people were divided into communities, of say one hundred families, and each community allowed to make and execute its own laws by calling its members together through a public servant when necessities arise, nearly all necessity for laws or government would soon cease; for the characteristics of all would soon be known, and proper regulations made for all requiring special attention. This would lead to better breeding, as those found to be morally or physically deformed would not be permitted to reproduce their kind, and out of pure self-protection each commune would gradually improve its members until there should be a decidedly better aspect of humanity than now exists. To make it applicable to the nation it would only require sending a delegate of each commune to a meeting of county delegates who should in turn send one to a meeting of state delegates, and they one each to a United States meeting, to make and execute all the laws necessary. Again, all persons desiring to travel or remove from one place or community to another could be provided with passports which would give them the same standing in another place they held at home, thereby protecting all—stopping the free circulation of the criminally inclined incognito.

Some of you will say at once, this is despotism! I will say in reply that nothing but despotism, in one form or another, ever did or ever will protect the good-intentioned from the depredations of the evil inclined. And the purer and better the people the less despotic will their laws be. The tendency to natural improvement in the race by such a course would be so rapid that a few generations would astonish the most enthusiastic reformer. But as long as people without knowledge of the simplest laws of nature are allowed to herd together and steep themselves in crime and criminal reproduction; and when disturbed as a result of overt acts, to quietly and secretly steal away to some place where they are not known, just so long will we have a state of affairs that calls for redress and reform.

The advantages of the community plan can be given in detail to cover every necessity that can arise for law and government; and a study of it is desired in all its ramifications, which, we doubt not, will develop a knowledge of the capacity for improvement in the human family which will be astonishing.

Don't go about this study on a basis of "original sin," "total depravity," "atonement," or "special creation," but take human nature as developed through natural causes and effect. Observe what has been done through natural laws, and the "modus operandi" of evolution, and study the results. If you have the mental capacity for comprehending what you may observe, conclusions will be reached which will astonish the most sanguine, and prove conclusively that "law and government are necessary for the best interests of the people."

THE RECORD OF CHRISTIANITY.

In the Albany Times of July 2 the Hon. A. Schell has the following reply to a clergyman of that city:

In your edition of Monday I notice the assault of Dr. Dowling, of the Madison Avenue Reformed church, upon Infidelity, which I cannot allow to go unchallenged, and with your permission will attempt to answer. Dr. Dowling is reported as saying that "Christianity is an institution; Infidelity is destitution;" in effect, that the former is constructive, the latter destructive; that one contributes to the reformation, the other to the deformation of character.

I admit that Christianity is an institution—an institution in whose name every crime that figures in the catalogue of crime has been committed. The most fearful wars that have devastated the fair face of earth have been religious wars—one in Europe lasting thirty years—a period of time ten years in excess of the average duration of mankind at the epoch of the Reformation. It is estimated that more men were slain upon the field of battle, or died from the causes produced by the horrors of religious wars, than are contained in the present population of Europe.

To-day Christian Europe, from Moscow on the east to the Atlantic ocean on the west; from the British Isles on the north to the Italian peninsula on the south, is one huge camp of bristling bayonets, Krupp guns, and iron-clads that plow the internal and external waters of the world, ready at any moment to overwhelm man and his habitation in ruin. The inventive genius of man has been taxed in Christian Europe to the utmost by the invention of the most destructive implements of death. Ten millions of Christian soldiers, drilled and armed, stand ready at this moment for the field of carnage and slaughter. It appears to me that this aspect of affairs is a sad commentary on the reformatory and constructive character of Christianity.

Taking a charitable view of Dr. Dowling's comments, has he not unwittingly made a mistake? Is not the destructive side of the question more applicable and befitting Christianity than Infidelity? Christian Russia is on a still-hunt for the Afghans in Central Asia; and the Russian bear is aching for an opportunity to uncover his teeth to the British lion in India. Christian Austria is waiting for a favorable opportunity to advance her grenadiers to the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles. Bismarck is ubiquitous in the islands of the South sea, and scheming with other nations for the dismemberment of republican France, which is a continual menace to monarchy in Europe. Parliament has voted $500,000,000 to increase the English navy, insuring England the continued supremacy of the seas. Even Italy, aroused from her lethargy, is trying to advance the banner of the cross along the southern shores of the Mediterranean. Why, our own beloved United States of America is adding to our navy and building iron-clads as fast as possible to take a hand in the fray. "Sincere Christians," if accounts are true, are trying to subdue the natives of South Africa by sending them twenty thousand tons of bad rum and gin annually, and are "laying them out" by the thousands as cobalt lays out flies in fly time. I admit that "Christianity is an institution." How could it be otherwise, since Christ said: "Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I came not to send peace, but a sword." And the Christian nations of Europe are carrying out this mission to perfection.

I now come to the second branch of Dr. Dowling's discourse—that "Infidelity is destitution," to which I suggest the amendment, "destitution of crime;" and to test the sincerity and confidence of Dr. Dowling in his claims for Christianity, I will make him a proposition: I will give him $10 for every Infidel whom he will find, upon investigation, in the state prisons and penitentiaries of the country, if he will give me $1 for every one there who is not an Infidel.

Infidels did not burn five hundred "witches" in three months; nor roast Servetus over a slow fire at Geneva, but John Calvin, a distinguished Christian leader, did. Infidels did not murder five men and thirteen women at Salem for the impossible crime of witchcraft; but Cotton Mather, a Christian minister, did. An Infidel did not sign the death warrant of the innocent and inoffensive Mary Dyer, who was hanged on Boston Common for the crime of being a Quakeress; but Endicott, a Christian governor, did. Quakers were tied to the tails of carts and dragged to death through the streets of Boston by Christians, not by Infidels. Fires of persecution were lit up at Smithfield, and Latimer, Cranmer, and Ridley, three of the most distinguished churchmen of the age, were burnt at the stake, not by Infidels. I leave Dr. Dowling to say by whom. Infidels never invented implements of torture—the iron boot, thumbscrew, and rack; never put anybody into the inquisition; never hounded on the fiendish multitude that massacred twelve thousand Huguenots in France for the glory of God; never persecuted the Waldenses, Albigenses, and Anabaptists. Let Dr. Dowling tell us who did all these things.

The history of the church is the history of blood. If all the innocent blood that has been spilled in the name of Christianity since the days of Constantine were gathered up in one great reservoir, it would be sufficient to float the navies of the world. I admit that Christianity is an institution!

Christianity has been the bulwark of human slavery, compared with which all other crimes pale into insignificance; and in the Bible Christians find justification for this damnable crime.

Infidel France was the first nation in Europe to set the example of freeing her slaves, in the island of St. Domingo. Thomas Paine, whom the Christian church denounces as an Infidel, declared nearly a century ago that "man has no right to property in man."

The strongest opposition the abolitionists had to encounter in New England came from the Christian church. In the South rewards were offered for the heads of Garrison and Phillips; at the North they were denounced and treated with mob violence.

Garrison, Phillips, Foster, Pillsbury, Wright, and Brooke were all so-called "Infidels," and in advocating the abolition of slavery they ran the risk of death at the hands of members of the Christian church. If Mr. Dowling shall deny these facts, I will furnish him and the public proof of the most indubitable character in support of my statements.

A. SCHELL.

RIGHTS OF THE MINORITY.

An exchange prints an extract from the recent writings of Samuel P. Putnam, condemning in the strongest way the American servility to the authority of the majority. Mr. Putnam believes, and he is perfectly right in so believing, that the tyranny of the king has been exchanged in America for the tyranny of the majority. The prevalent idea here appears to be that the minority, as a minority, has no rights that the majority is bound to respect. Only let the majority pronounce upon a question, and it is supposed there can be no appeal from it except to another majority that future exigencies may create. Majorities have interfered in numerous and well-known instances with the rights of man, and hardly a protest has been uttered. Almost everyone immediately submits to the dictates of the multitudinous tyrant without a moment's question. This is all wrong. It ought to be understood that the rights of individuals are as sacred as the rights of an agglomeration of individuals. Surely the old idea that might is right ought by this time to have died the death of other musty and superstitious dogmas, and been succeeded by an age when universal justice displaces the old-time law of barbarous coercion.

Mr. Putnam makes out a strong case, however, to the contrary. He says that the only liberty of which America boasts is simply the liberty of the largest party. "Wherein," he asks, "is this liberty one whit better than the liberty of the Old World? What difference does it make to me whether I am compelled by two million votes or by the voice of a single despot? My slavery is just as unbearable and just as degrading. Indeed the tyranny of a majority is more oppressive than the tyranny of a king. It allows less resistance; it is more overwhelming and destructive of individual assertion. Why, it is as much as a man's life is worth to differ from his neighbors. He is regarded as either a fool or knave. I affirm that most of the liberty of which we boast to-day is a sham. It is liberty only in show, but not in reality. There are very few free men in the community—very few that will as sturdily defy the rule of a majority as they will the rule of a king. Now, I affirm that the majority has no business to legislate for me without my consent. In the domain of my individuality, where I trench not upon another, I am absolute master; and for any number of millions of voters to come into that domain and assert any kind of authority is as outrageous as for the Spanish Inquisition to do so at the point of the sword. This personal liberty, which is all the liberty that is worth martyrdom for, is not yet understood in this 'the land of the free.' Americans generally think that if they do not have a king to rule over them, there is no tyranny. The fact is, however, that in some things the Americans are more despotically governed than any other nation. They submit to more interferences with personal liberty."

This is a pretty strong way of putting the matter, no doubt; but it is not a whit too strong. We prate of our liberty and pity the poor Russians under their czar. For my own part give me the humane tyranny of a single despot who has his country's interests at heart, and whose sympathies can be awakened to the cry of despair, to the tyranny which is pitiless, heartless, and far more leveling and destructive—the tyranny of the irresponsible majority. This tyranny is generally void of reason, is composed and swayed principally by miserable, barbarous prejudices subject neither to humane instincts nor formulated arguments—is, in fact, a formidable car of juggernaut crushing out all justice and mercy. With Mr. Putnam I deny that there will be any genuine freedom until the rule of the majority is sent to limbo with that of kings; until every man is left to be a law unto himself, so far as he does not violate another's freedom. Of course with liberty there must be justice; but look at the legislation of the majority. How much justice do we find? We find not justice, but almost always selfish despotism. Justice can only come by absolute individual freedom; and in order to assert that freedom we must as sedulously defy the tyranny of a majority as that of an emperor—"ALASTOR," in Secular Thought.

W. F. JAMIESON returned to Monte Vista, Col., and gave three lectures, July 18, 19, and 20. He is making up his tour east. He will deliver a series of lectures in Hay Springs, Neb., and will give lectures in Grantfork, Ill., later in the season. He is invited to give several lectures at grove meetings in September at Kent, Ohio. Liberals who wish to avail themselves of his lectures should address him at Coryell, Col.

PROFESSOR HUXLEY reviews the main points of the controversy in which he has been engaged, in an article entitled "Agnosticism and Christianity," in "The Popular Science Monthly" for August. Some of Cardinal Newman's writings also receive a share of criticism.

"Looking Backward," a socialistic romance which has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin of Industrial Slavery," by Edward Bellamy. Price, 50 cents.

The Lectures at Turner.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Mr. Putnam has lectured at Turner. That community being very much "priest-ridden," the attendance was slim. There was one solitary Christian believer, however, who showed the courage of his convictions by attending the lecture, and then expressing his condemnation afterward. Such a man is worth something. He first listens, then talks. If talking leads to thinking and investigation, such a one is already half converted. He is worth more anyway than the professing Liberal whose moral courage is unequal to the task of bringing him out. There are many Liberals ("Infidels," if it please the Christian better) at Turner. They are not all outspoken, for fear of Christian persecution, perhaps. In this they err. Christianity governs only by fear and fraud. Those who she thinks fear her, she is most apt to persecute, if she sees in them liberal tendencies; and she is sharp to detect the "unbeliever." "Those who are not for us are against us," is a part of her cruel creed, and she persecutes those most who are most afraid of her. A Secular Union at Turner, with a good share of backbone in it, would soon cool off the little Campbellite hell in this place, and make a more salubrious moral climate, and lessen the smell of brimstone. Even the "wind" would be "tempered" to notices of Secular meetings, and would not blow them down so easily.

But the Christians showed even less moral courage than the Liberal. Not a soul (with the exception above noted) put in an appearance. Like the pope and his cardinals at the unveiling of the statue of Bruno, they kept out of sight. "The prudent man foreseeth," etc. Other Liberal lecturers will follow Putnam.

L. I. BERTY.

Turner, Or.

A Testimonial for Putnam.

Dear Friend Macdonald:

Mr. Putnam has been here and gone. He is a fine man. I like him. Every one who heard him here says the same. The lectures were something grand. Every earnest Liberal should try to hear that man.

Kalama, Wash.

GEO. SVENSSON.

THE SUMMER AND FALL CAMPAIGN.

S. P. Putnam has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Coos county, Or., July 22 to Aug. 4,	Fox Valley.....Or., Sept. 9, 10,
Coburg..... " Aug..... 7, 8,	Long Creek..... " " 11, 12,
Lebanon..... " "..... 9,	Hamilton..... " " 14, 15,
Olympia... W.T., "..... 11, 12,	Monument..... " " 16, 17,
Buckley... W.T., "..... 13, 14,	Hay Stack..... " " 18,
Davenport, "..... 17, 18,	Lone Rock..... " " 19, 20,
Cheney... " "..... 19,	Fossil..... " " 21, 22,
Rosalia... " "..... 20,	Hillsboro, Or., Sept., 25, 26, 27, 28,
Sprague... " "..... 21,	North Yamhill... Or., Sept..... 29,
Pasco..... " "..... 22,	Forest Grove..... " " 30,
Dayton... W. T., Aug..... 24, 25,	Talent, Or., and vicinity Oct. 3, 4, 5,
Pomeroy... W. T., Aug..... 26,	6, 7,
La Grange, Or., Aug..... 29,	Linkville..... Or., Oct. 11, 12, 13,
Union..... Or. "..... 30,	Sacramento..... Cal., Oct. 20,
Baker City, Or. Sept..... 1,	San Francisco..... " " 27,
Crocker City, Or., "..... 2, 3,	Los Angeles and vicinity the month
Prairie City, Or., and vicinity, Sept.	of November,
5, 6, 7,	San Diego and vicinity the month of December.

"THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY," by S. P. Putnam, is a brilliant sketch of the history, drift, and purpose of Dissent, showing it an indispensable prerequisite to intelligent affirmation. Price 10 cents; Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street San Francisco, Cal.—The Word.

REV. J. L. LEEPER, of Ft. Wayne, Ind., sent a letter on the 19th to Treasurer Thompson, of the Johnstown relief fund, asking him if the Ft. Wayne brewers had turned over any money. He stated that they held a picnic on Sunday for the Johnstown sufferers against the wishes of the city authorities, and wanted to know if the money would be accepted, and Mr. Thompson wired back that the committee "would not accept any contributions proceeding from Sabbath desecration under the guise of charity." Oh, how long is the world to be cursed with people like Rev. Leeper and Treasurer Thompson!—Pittsburg Truth.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—
"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—
ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS
(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to
L. K. WASHBURN,
Revere, Mass.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!
Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mill.
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,
Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5.....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond".....	14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.
12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

He Khant Stand It.

Hadje Hassan Ghooly Khan,
A most distinguished Persian man,
Took passage toward the western sun,
As minister to Washington.

Now Hadje Hassan Ghooly Khan
Goes back a most disgusted man,
Because the papers near and far
Fire endless jokelets at the Shah.

Some men might stand such wilful slight
Of Persian monarch's royal might;
Some men might smile at jest and taunt,
But Hadje Hassan Ghooly Khant.

A Faithful Executor.

A young Bostonian, reared beneath the brow of Beacon hill, and educated at Harvard, went to Texas and turned cow-boy. He rapidly caught the spirit of the country, and as rapidly shook off the outward semblances of tender-footed Eastern habit. Rough-bearded, leather-clad, sombrero as wide as the widest, 41-calibre Colts on his hips, he was wild as the wildest. Yet within his bosom still burned the flame of Boston culture and refinement.

One day he was riding with a stranger across the prairie. Turning his head suddenly—he was slightly ahead—he saw his companion make a suspicious motion towards his hip pocket. Without hesitation he drew his revolver and shot him. The stranger dropped like a log. The cowboy dismounted and looked at the body of the victim.

"I wonder if he was really going to shoot me?" he soliloquized. "I'll see."

Turning the body over, he discovered a flask of whiskey protruding from the pocket.

"Poor fellow!" he said in a tone of regret. "I've killed an innocent man, and a gentleman at that. He wasn't going to shoot me; he was going to invite me to have a drink. Well," he sighed, drawing his sleeve across his mouth, "the last wishes of the deceased shall be respected."

The Ship Was Saved.

"Captain," reported the officer, as he came up from below, pale with fear, "the water is gaining on us. We must lighten the ship!"

With the presence of mind that distinguishes the true hero from the craven in the hour of peril, the captain instantly called all hands on deck.

"Men," he said, and his deep voice rang out, clear and strong, over the wild waste of waters that threatened to engulf the stately vessel, "throw those things overboard!"

The sailors went to work with the energy of despair. In less than an hour they had thrown over the side of the vessel the private baggage of a traveling actress and three fashionable cases belonging to a London dude, and the gallant ship, with her leak now high above the water, bounded on her course like a thing of life. Her commander had saved her.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street. Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.
G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future
Republic of North America
BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.
Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC
SCHOOLS.—THE NEW
AMERICAN PARTY,

A Criticism by "Jefferson."

Price, 10 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.
Price $1. Address, Putnam & Macdonald.

Dr. Wood's Rhubarb Bitters

impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Ask your dealer for them. Agency with J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento street, San Francisco, Cal.

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see other column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.'"

It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE, Proven by the sale of half a million to be the most popular readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological look, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling. Agents who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Fello's Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25 Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 difference is in paper and binding. MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

Verbal Slips.

The verbal slips that a preacher or lecturer inadvertently makes are often remembered long after every thought in his address has been forgotten. They are often laughably funny.

A lecturer said: "I must beg you to give me your undivided attention; indeed, it is absolutely impossible that you could form a true idea of the hideous animal of which we are about to speak, unless you keep your eyes on me!"

A certain preacher, discoursing upon Bunyan and his works, caused a titter among his hearers by exclaiming: "In these days, my brethren, we want more Bunyans."

Another clergyman, pleading earnestly with his parishioners for the construction of a cemetery for their parish, asked them to consider the "deplorable condition of 30,000 Christian Englishmen living without Christian burial."

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts. Address this office

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY. Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fello, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Stimulating advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fello, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors. DR. FELLOWS.

The Shave Preferred.

They sat within the parlor dim,
And fretfully she said to him:
"I wish, dear John, that you'd behave;
If not, I wish that you would shave."

The Millennium Foreshadowed.

With rubber pavements, the use of electric cars, the abolition of the steam whistle in the city limits, the suppression of bell ringing in church towers, and the restriction of hucksters' cries, a city becomes far more inhabitable for well people and less intolerable for the sick.

A Chestnut Indeed.

"What was it," asked the Sunday-school teacher, "that first caused the downfall of man?"

"The forbidden fruit," replied the class in concert.

"That's right."

"And now what kind of fruit was it?"

There was a silent pause and then the offspring of a newspaper funny man spoke up:

"I don't know what it was then, but it's a chestnut now."

A MAN in a strange village reads a sign—"Ask your druggist for it"—reflects a moment, and says with a grin: "Ah, I see—a prohibition town."

GOD IN THE STATE.

By E. A. Stevens, Secretary of the American Secular Union.

—:O:—

This is the best presentation of the argument against God in the Constitution, ever prepared in a pamphlet of its size.

—:O:—

Price, 10 cents; three copies, 25 cents; eight copies, 50 cents.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald
504 Kearny st. San Francisco.

THE SABBATH IMPOSTURE.

BY HARRY HOOVER.

Showing that there is no authority for the Sunday laws, either Human or "Divine."

Price, 10 cents; three copies, 25 cents; eight copies 50 cents. Address this office.

ROMAN RULE OR RUIN.

BY Z. SHED.

A Summary of the atrocities committed by the Catholic church.

Price, 10 cents; four copies, 25 cents; ten copies, 50 cents. Address

PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

WHY PRIESTS SHOULD WED.

BY JUSTIN D. FULTON, D.D.

A startling book, particularly to those unacquainted with the character of the confessional. Price, $1.50.

Address this office.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.

OLIVER HUNCKLEY - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,
NURSERYMEN.

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.

Special Attention Given to Planting

and Caring of Orchards

and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box 0,

San Jacinto, Cal.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Mora's. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"The Glory of Infidelity" was one of the poet-secretary's happiest efforts, and ranks with the best speeches of the Congress.—New York Truth Seeker.

Putnam's "Glory of Infidelity" is one of the ablest defenses of Freethought to which I have ever listened.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

The lecture was "The Glory of Infidelity." No man or woman could hear it without being inspired by the heroic Infidel manhood and womanhood coming down to us as a rich inheritance through the dreary ages of the past, and pointing with glorious hope to the "New Heaven and Earth."

J. F. BECK.

I believe I express the unanimous sentiment of all when I say that for a lecture of its character, Mr. Putnam has never been surpassed and seldom equaled on our platform—a platform famous for the talent it affords. "The Glory of Infidelity" fairly bristles with good things, and each sentence is an epigrammatic Secular sermon.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary American Secular Union.

—PRICE 10 CENTS.—

Address PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

An Unsatisfactory Scholar.

Sunday-school superintendent—"I am pained to learn that two of the little boys of the school have absented themselves to-day in order to go fishing. You wouldn't go, would you, Master Norton?"

Master Norton—"No, sir."

Sunday-school superintendent—"Now, tell the rest of the scholars why you wouldn't go fishing on Sunday."

Master Norton—"Cause it's too cold yet to catch anything."

Holed and Cornered.

Wife—"I mended the hole in your trousers pocket last night after you had gone to bed, John, dear. Now, am I not a thoughtful little wife?"

Husband (dubiously)—"Well, er-ye-es, you are thoughtful enough, my dear; but how the mischief did you discover there was a hole in my pocket?"

Too Much of a Good Thing.

Rev. Mr. Russle—"I've succeeded in converting every man in this camp excepting one. Can't we together influence Hook-Nose Sam to turn over a new leaf?"

Gnawed Riley (the scout)—"Twouldn't nowise do, parson. Why, we wouldn't have a soul left to swear at th' mules."

JUSTICE is blind, but if you've got the money you can see the blind.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Stenker.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology. Price, 50 cents.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 31.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 3, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - AUGUST 3, 1889.

SOMETHING is to be hoped for from Washington Territory in the way of a Secular constitution. The committee on the bill of rights recommends that appropriations of public moneys to religious bodies for any purpose whatever be forbidden.

A SAN FRANCISCO parson has addressed a long communication to the supervisors requesting them to suppress the blowing of locomotive whistles within the city limits. When the ministers cease ringing their noisy church bells the public will have greater confidence in the sincerity of their desire to relieve the city of nuisances.

THE American Sabbath Union sent to the South Dakota Constitutional Convention a communication asking the delegates to insert in the constitution a provision protecting and encouraging Sabbath (Sunday) observance. The matter was referred to a special committee, which reported that the convention had no power to insert such a provision.

THE Weekly Star says: "At a prison reform convention held in this city several years ago, the then chaplain at San Quentin stated that all but five of the prisoners had experienced religion in some form and were believers. In the same speech he remarked that there were five inmates of that institution whom he was certain were innocent. One of the audience asked him if the five, who had not experienced religion, and the five of whose innocence he was certain, were the same individuals; and he replied that they were."

THE messianic delusion which is the foundation of Christianity has recently broken out in Georgia. Two negroes, each claiming to be a reincarnation of the deity, have been preaching among the ignorant blacks of Liberty county. One was shortly placed in an insane asylum, but the other, a man named James, secured hundreds of followers. He teaches the idea of human sacrifice. A dispatch from Savannah dated July 25 says: "Not only is paper money torn up and silver strewn broadcast, but human blood is now demanded as a sacrifice, a result of the story about Abraham offering up Isaac, told on Sunday. The four-year-old boy of Laura Roberts was taken by fanatics, who cross-cut his forehead and breast. His throat was cut and his ears split, the body then being thrown in a pond. The mother was a party to the butchery. She is a devoted follower of James, and accepted his orders for the sacrifice as of divine origin." Tragedies like this are exactly what might be expected from the doctrine taught; and the doctrine will continue to be taught as long as fools enough can be found to pay knaves for preaching it.

THE latest sensation from Rome is conveyed in the statement that "the Vatican and the Quirinal are doubly guarded owing to information of a plot to blow up both with dynamite. It is rumored that the departure of the pope will be forcibly resisted, and that the government's secret police watch the exits of the Vatican." This dispatch is probably about as true as one-half that come from the Vatican nowadays. The pope is an artful advertiser, and knows how to keep himself before the public as well as does the average actress who is robbed, assaulted, or divorced every six weeks.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, August 4, at 8 o'clock. Jerome A. Anderson, M. D., will lecture on "Good and Evil."

NEWS AND NOTES.

I rather thought there would not be many out on Tuesday evening, July 16, at Stella, on account of the disappointment of the previous day. But they came, nevertheless, from quite a distance about, and the hall was well filled. Friend Kiitering was present from Ranier, and brought good news of the work going on there. The ground has been broken, and the flag flies. Over from Tryon's, eight miles away, a faithful host came, although they had made the journey the night before in vain. They attended the three nights—Dr. and Mrs. S. H. Tryon, Mrs. Jennie Vase Graham, her father Mr. Vase, and Henry Boggess. They had to row over, and besides there were two or three miles of travel by land. Dr. Tryon lives about half-way up to heaven. I hope to visit him and the rest of these undaunted allies sometime, and I guess that will be about as near as I will ever get to the Celestial City.

H. Lawson and sons and family give the usual good cheer to the Secular pilgrim, and here, if anywhere, the star of freedom shines. On the porch we sit, and behold the broad river sparkling in the sun like a winding lake, the wooded shores and shaggy islands. These make a delightful and ever-varying picture as the gorgeous days of sunshine go sweeping on. Friend Scharnhorst is with us, who has been my companion through many travels in this watery world, and as long as he lives he is bound to keep to the front. To vary my boat-ride experiences, friend Lawson provided a ride on horseback, and up into the vast woods we go, climb the hills, and canter to the residence of W.

M. Anderson. He is so immersed in reading FREETHOUGHT that he does not notice our approach. We soon make ourselves known. Anderson has been in the country for nearly forty years, and has done a wonderful amount of work in clearing off the primeval forest. I went down to the logging-camp. The way the logs go into the river after they get started reminds one of sheol. I was tempted to take a ride on these bounding chariots, but concluded that I had not backbone enough for such a flying trip. If one could stand it, however, it would be an exceedingly fascinating journey, and the final immersion in the Columbia would be such a royal baptism that probably every sin would be washed away.

The attendance on the second evening was much larger than on the first, and in spite of the temporary disappointment a victory has been scored. I shall be here in October and give another lecture, and shall also lecture at Ranier and vicinity.

Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Howard are on the roll still, and with heart and hand "make freedom's glorious way."

Mr. and Mrs. Herring will pass muster at the judgment seat for good works if not for faith. When I landed in the silent midnight I found a rest and welcome in their hospitable home.

John Deneui, friend Parsons, and others are of our ranks also. Stella, star of Columbia, shines with hope and promise.

Thursday morning I again speed over the mighty river as if through a palace fair.

Kittering is with me as far as Cedar Landing, and here I strike comrade Lawrence, a veteran of the Mexican war, who struck the Oregon shore many a long year ago, and battled with the wilderness. He lives like Diogenes in philosophic leisure, and takes nature at first-hand.

Anderson was with me to Portland, and the Secular pilgrim found him a jovial companion, who knows how to mingle hard work with play, and understands the religion of good things.

At evening I go to Oswego, a kind of a little Pittsburg, on the banks of Willamette about eight miles from Portland. There are factories here, and huge volumes of smoke roll over the town. Miss Elva Davidson and Edgar L. Davidson meet me at the station, and pilot me to the school-house, which is a somewhat dingy-looking temple of learning, in the midst of a beautiful grove. The Christians kicked vigorously because the Infidel was allowed to lecture here. They think they own the school-house, and that it is for their special benefit. The minister in his Sunday's sermon expressed his deep sorrow that there was to be an "Infiddle" lecturer in the place. "Infiddle" is what the Christians now call us. Infidel has got to be so respectable a term that the "fiddle" is now resorted to. Well, there will be plenty of music in that for orthodoxy.

I gave the first Freethought lectures in Oswego. The audiences were not large, but faithful work has been done, and I believe that there will be progress in spite of the smoke and Christianity that now prevails. Oswego is in a somewhat germinal state. It has not yet been fully born. It is a straggling community, and has a seedy look. But these seeds may sprout. There are fine possibilities, and a handsome city may here adorn the banks of the Willamette. Therefore the field is worth cultivating. The country round about is excellent, with good farming and fruit lands, and delightful views of wood and dale, and mountains and lakes. It is a charming place for suburban villas. Undoubtedly as Portland grows there will be elegant residences here. Miss Elva Davidson is our champion worker at Oswego. She went to an Infidel lecture when she was only fifteen months old, and took it all in, and has been in the front rank ever since. She has made Oswego wheel into line, which has been no easy task. When youth thus gives its splendid enthusiasm to Liberty what an advance will be made. Miss Davidson is one of our youngest laborers in the field, but the work accomplished is worthy of a veteran. With such allies the future brightens to a glowing day.

Her grandfather, J. C. Davidson, has lived here for many years, and now there is quite a colony of the Davidsons—father and sons, grandsons and granddaughters, all in the army of Freethought. I enjoyed a delightful visit on the farm, where the harvest is in full glow and the days are brilliant. Mr. Davidson has sold seven thousand pounds of cherries this year, and they have been shipped as far as Chicago. They are the loveliest cherries I have tasted, and are worthy of paradise itself. If Mother Eve had only eaten these cherries instead of the apple, the human race might have been in a state of innocence yet. Mr. H. Gans introduced me at the meetings, and is not afraid to stand by his colors. He sells goods, and gives a dollar's worth for a dollar, but he doesn't propose to sell his principles.

Mr. S. C. Brown is one of our generous supporters here. He is a student of nature, in the broad sense, as well as in the sense of trying to discover and apply her curative qualities. He does not propose to be a "medicine man" after the old-fashioned theological standard, but in the glory of science. Facts, not fancies, are beneficial to both mind and body.

John Boles, John Confer, Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, H. S. Carter, etc., are among our friends in Oswego and vicinity, always ready to give the hand of welcome, and aid the cause.

D. Priestley, of Milwaukee, was also present, and joins the list of FREETHOUGHT. He reports some life in his neighborhood and chances for work in the future. He is ready to do his level best.

Oswego is by no means at the foot of the column, although the Christians have hitherto had the field to themselves. The pulse of progress is here, and the river flowing to the sea promises that humanity shall sometime reach the open ocean of unbounded truth.

Early on Saturday Morning we arise with the sun, and over the rugged hills find our way to Oregon City, where in the morning ray's leaps and flashes the glorious cataract—a mine of wealth, whose white banners are being translated into electric waves that shall roll onward the wheels of industry with radiant pulse.

The golden afternoon finds me at Shedd's, and B. F. Hyland, of Corvallis, and Herman Arnold, are at the station. We drive over to Arnold's ranch, and rest until evening. We meet in the school-house, and a pretty good number are present. This is the first Freethought lecture that the majority of the audience had ever listened to, and they paid good attention.

In the morning and afternoon of Sunday we hold our meetings in the grove. This was called Thompson's grove when the Methodists held their camp-meetings here, but now it shall be called Arnold's grove, for Arnold has bought the farm, and captured the grove. It is said that Thompson was driven into bankruptcy by having to supply too many clergymen with yellow-legged chickens at the camp-meetings. Now it will be a Freethought temple, and the chickens will not flutter, and all the remnant that is now found of the Methodist gatherings is an empty box marked "Hop Bitters." I believe this is the Prohibition drink, "for the stomach's sake." The grove is a lovely place. The sunlight mingles with the overhanging branches, and verdant roof and walls sparkle as if a thousand jewels were hung on the swaying leaves. Softly sing the innumerable branches, and the shadows dance on the bright, brown floor. The mossy pillars forming delightful arcades gleam in infinite variety. Nature's sweet spirit reigns in this spot, and humanity finds not "the dim religious light," but the richness and pomp of a living world amid delicious scenes. The meetings have been well attended. In the afternoon quite a large number were present from a distance, from Brownsville, Corvallis, etc. A beginning has been made which is quite auspicious. The busy harvest season prevented many from coming. The ball has been started, however, and it will keep on. The future is before us, and Arnold's grove will soon be known as of the most pleasant rendezvous of the Liberal host. Music and dancing will mingle next time with the more solid feature of the occasion. Arnold's grove is christened for freedom and for progress. In the morning I spoke upon the "Demands of Liberalism," and in the afternoon on "The Constructive Methods of Freethought." I could not ask for more attentive listeners than I found under this bright forest canopy.

Friend Arnold is one of our most vigorous campaigners, and Mrs. Arnold and all the family are stalwart Liberals. He is in possession of a noble farm—a half section, radiant with fruit-trees, groves, fields of grain, vines and flowers. He came to this country about two years ago, and people begin to find out that he has brought some new ideas with him. This is the first time Freethought has ever had a show about here. It has come to stay, and Arnold will keep the flag above the cross.

Mr. and Mrs. Hyland join us from Corvallis; also Mr. Harvey Sargent and wife and children, and they all make a bright company. Corvallis is bound to keep on the move. Friend Hyland put Lamberton Brothers on the list of FREETHOUGHT, for which our thanks are due. He keeps the papers and the books on the go, and I never meet him but he buys something, and puts it on the round of missionary work.

Mr. John Cushman and B. S. Martin, of Brownsville, report progress from their post, and I expect to be there sometime in October. The work brightens, the field broadens. Onward for Coos county now.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

July 21, 1889.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

OLYMPIA, W. T., July 22, 1889.—The judicial article of the new constitution is completed, and the lawyers in the convention smile at their success in providing for seventeen judges with good salaries. They insisted that only a high order of talent could be had by fixing salaries which would tempt lawyers of eminence to become candidates. They sneered at laymen, and at the statutes they had passed; and some expressed a supreme contempt for justices of the peace. It is a fact, however, that the lawyers in the late legislatures have composed the judiciary committees, and have had before them nearly every bill that has become a law. If they are full of faults the legal profession is to blame. But the lawyers, with singular inconsistency, have provided for the removal of judges by joint resolution of the legislature, which is not likely to have a majority of lawyers in its membership. The original draft of the section provided for such summary removal without notice to the judge, or a hearing on the charges against him. This was a glaring travesty on justice, perfected by thirteen eminent lawyers who eulogized their profession. A plain business man, a pioneer, and a Liberal—Edward Eldridge—who believed that every man should have a fair hearing, moved to amend by adding that no such officer should be removed until he had been served with a copy of the charges against him and had been heard in his own behalf; and this amendment saved the reputation of the convention.

The convention will probably submit no separate article on prohibition. What they will do in regard to woman suffrage is still uncertain. Combinations and trades seem to be on foot; and all interests in the line of progress may be trampled upon to subserve the ambition of those who are parcelling out the offices of the incoming state.

Yesterday Rabbi Levy, of Oakland, California, spoke in the Unitarian church at Tacoma. The pastor of the church, Mr. W. E. Copeland, stated, in giving the notices, that he had been requested to call for signatures to a petition for exemption of church property from taxation. He said that so far from asking people to sign it, he would ask them to petition for the taxation of church property. This called out hearty applause, and at its close Rabbi Levy said: "Let the church and the state be wholly divorced;" a sentence which was roundly applauded. To-day the petition of that congregation of Hebrews and Unitarians asking for the taxation of church property on the same basis that private property is taxed was presented to the convention and referred to the committee on revenue. This is a grand step in the right direction. Tax all private property, secular and religious. Lift the burden of taxation only from public property used for public purposes. Let your churches, your hospitals, Young Men's Christian Association palaces, private colleges, and the edifices belonging to private orders—even if a so-called benevolent order—pay taxes according to value for the support of the government. This is equality. This is justice. W. S. Bush.

PRACTICAL EXEMPTION OF CHURCH PROPERTY.

California is rightly called the most Liberal and secular state in the Union. It has no Sunday law, and no law exempting church property from taxation. Nevertheless in San Francisco churches are practically exempt. The Weekly Star calls attention to a statement in Thomas Magee's Real Estate Circular for April, 1887, which gives a list of the churches in this city, their respective assessed valuations, and the taxes paid during the preceding year. The aggregate valuation was $1,791,875, and the aggregate of taxes paid was $28,147.28.

The above valuation is made upon the theory that only the land occupied by church buildings should be taxed, since the buildings are of no value for other purposes. The same plea might be made in behalf of theatres, electric light plants, breweries, and ice factories, but we will let it pass, for the Real Estate Circular admits that the saleable value of the property is at least three times greater than its assessed value, or nearly $5,500,000.

So it seems that San Francisco has not much to boast of after all in the way of impartial taxation.

FREETHOUGHT has to pay taxes on every dollar's worth of property in its possession and every cent of money in the till. It is not exempt to the value of a ten-cent pamphlet. The editors, even, must pay two dollars per annum for the privilege of enjoying the climate. We pay this with such cheerfulness as we can command, but we would like to know if there is a clergyman in the city who can show a poll-tax receipt like the ones posted on the walls of this office.

There is great complaint of a shortage of public funds in San Francisco. The city cannot afford to pave its streets decently, and it has no money wherewith to remunerate its school-teachers, who must either wait a long time for their pay or get their orders cashed by Shylocks at a large discount. Meanwhile the church property of the city is "shy" about $60,000 per annum on its taxes. If there is a Christian in the world who can defend the justice of this sort of thing, we would like to know how he does it.

THE CALIFORNIA STATE LIBERAL UNION.

It is perhaps time for the Liberals of California to be looking forward to the next Convention of the State Liberal Union, which will doubtless be called in January, 1890. There has as yet been no strong effort made to raise the funds necessary for carrying on the work of the Union, but some contributions have been made. Treasurer Schou reports the following receipts and expenditures. The names of donors are given so that if any omissions have been made they may be corrected. Items of expenditure will be presented in the treasurer's report to the congress.

RECEIPTS.
Jan. 29, 1889,	Philip Cowen,	$5.00
" " "	A. H. Schou..	2.50
Mar. 6, "	Henry Kaiser,	1.00
" " "	L. R. Titus...	2.00
" " "	A. Derming...	1.00
" " "	F. Butler.....	1.00
" " "	Samos Parsons,	10.00
Apr. 3 "	R. H. Grigsby,	5.00
" " "	L. R. Titus...	2.00
" " "	D. Macdonald,	3.00
" 9 "	W. H. Pepper,	5.00
" " "	J. W. North...	10.00
" " "	J. M. Smith...	1.00
" " "	San Jose Union	5.00
		$53.50
		Expenditures as per vouchers, 46.65
Total, $53.50		Balance in Treasury, ... $6.85
		A. H. SCHOU, Treasurer.

To the Liberals of California:

The report of the treasurer of the California State Liberal Union indicates a spreading interest in the organized work of Liberalism. It was voted at the State Convention to raise one thousand dollars for the work. This probably will not be raised directly. Many lectures have been given throughout the state, the main object of which has been the advancement of the Union. The expenses of these lectures have been paid by local contributions and the money thus used practically for the purposes of the Union has not been placed directly into the treasury, and could not be, under the circumstances, without an amount of tape-work worse than useless. It might be said, therefore, that indirectly several hundred dollars have been raised for the Union. But there should be a general fund of at least two or three hundred dollars in the hands of the directors of the Union for campaign work. The whole state of California should be organized. The Liberals of every locality should be brought into the ranks and their influence placed on the side of Secularism. At present only those places can be visited where the community itself pays the expenses of the lectures, but in the organization of the state many places must be visited where the expenses cannot be paid wholly by the resident Liberals. In this case the general fund can aid. In this way all the Liberals of the state can help push forward the work in every part of the state. This is the object of a fund in the hands of the directors of the Union.

What is wanted mainly is an advertising fund. Moody and Sam Jones draw large crowds because they advertise effectively. If Liberals could do the same amount of advertising they would meet with the same success. Not having the funds they cannot do it. If fifty or a hundred dollars could be spent in advertising lectures at important places a permanent interest would be created which would render little advertising after that necessary. This lack of means to reach the masses might be supplied by the directors of the Union through a general fund.

It is hoped that Liberals who have a dollar or two to spare will place it in the hands of the treasurer of the Union. During the next four months the campaign will be carried on mainly in Oregon and Washington. November next the winter campaign will begin in California. If, in addition to local effort, the Liberal Union could join forces with a fund of two or three hundred dollars, so that pamphlets and documents might be distributed—and the work at various points be thoroughly advertised, especially in the local newspapers—a much greater result would be attained. By concentrating a little money in the hands of the directors of the Union it can be more advantageously used than by purely individual enterprise. The object of the Union is not to take the place of any individual or local effort, but to supplement that effort. It is hoped that in the early fall the amount required will be in the hands of the Union for this kind of assistance.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM,

President California State Liberal Union.

The following paragraph from an interview with the Rev. Matteo Prochet, of the Waldensian church of Italy, gives an idea of the size of the Bruno demonstration at Rome on June 9, and also of the way the people of Italy regard the pope. It is printed in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. Mr. Prochet says:

"The Italian people as a whole are opposed to the pretensions of the pope. The best practical illustration of this, perhaps, can be noted by speaking of the 9th of June last, the occasion of the inauguration of the statue of Giordano Bruno (who was a philosopher and was burned by order of one of the popes). In the procession were some nineteen hundred banners, representing as many different corporations [municipalities], and over one hundred bands from as many different places throughout the kingdom. The Italian press unite in saying that the number of people in Rome on that occasion was greater than for many, many years. These people were assembled there to witness the unveiling of that statue, and while those ceremonies were in progress the present pope was shut up in his palace, which was surrounded by his guards. An editor, in commenting on this, said: 'For once in my life I have spent a whole day in Rome without seeing a priest.' And why was it so? Not in my words but in theirs, 'because they were afraid of the people.' Now what of the king? In a plain suit of clothes and driving his own team he circulated among the great throng, cheered and admired."

There is more Freethought, evidently, in Italy than in America. In this country an anti-Catholic demonstration would be considered colossal if participated in by a thousand persons, and no public man, much less a president, would have the moral courage to show his face on such an occasion.

DR. FOOTE's Health Monthly states that in Ireland the clergy are petitioning that the traffic in ether be restricted, as it is being used there like alcohol, as an intoxicant. It seems, therefore, that if the Prohibitionists anywhere succeed in doing away with the manufacture and sale of alcohol, they will at once have to make the fight over again against such narcotics as ether, opium, and numerous other drugs.

ABOUT twenty progressive people of San Jose have organized a Nationalist Club. The present Nationalist movement is founded on the interest in political reform awakened by Edward Bellamy's book, "Looking Backward."

AN orthodox journal called the "Presbyterian" makes these remarks about the demonstration at the unveiling of the Bruno monument at Rome:

"The half Infidel and wholly radical mob made the streets of the ancient city resound with cries for 'liberty,' and the shoutings from afar must have entered into the ears of the dwellers of the Vatican. The time must have been one of sore trial to the followers of the pope and to the office of Inquisition, which still maintains a shadowy existence. It does not promise much for the genuine religion of Jesus Christ, but it was a disastrous day for the pretensions of the church which for centuries was dominant in the city of Rome."

It is well enough for the Presbyterians to crow now over the discomfiture of the pope; but some day the Freethinkers may erect a monument to Michael Servetus whom Calvin, the founder of Presbyterianism, murdered at Geneva. Then it will not be the Presbyterian's turn to exult.

THERE is a reign of terror among London booksellers. As a result of the imprisonment of Vizetelly for the publication of Zola's translations his firm has suppressed Henri Murger's famous work, and Chato & Windus have burned all their remaining stock of "Boccaccio," "Rabelais," and other mediæval classics. The so-called Vigilance Society, elated by this testimony to the scare it has created, is suspected of now considering a crusade against a well-known edition of the early English dramatists. There are some early Jewish records known as the scriptures which the Vigilance Society might turn its attention to when all milder forms of indecency have been suppressed.

In his letter from Oregon two weeks ago Professor Seymour mentioned the Rev. Mr. Bateman as having refused to allow his phrenological bumps to be examined. The professor surmised that the reverend gentleman knew his own faults and did not care to have them set forth in public, particularly those of a social nature, and the guess proves to be a close one. The Reverend Bateman was shortly afterward detected in adulterous relations with a married woman at Iowa Slough, and the neighborhood has grown too hot for him. The Bandon Recorder of July 20 tells the whole story.

His barbaric highness, the shah of Persia, now on a visit to London, receives no end of Bibles as gifts, and his daily mail is always largely composed of tracts intended to convert him from Mohammedanism. The proselyters are not greatly encouraged by a Liverpool clergyman who, on the Sunday of the Persian monarch's visit to that city, preached a sermon in which he said that Mohammedans were singularly free from the vices of drinking and gambling, and regretted that the Prince of Wales had led the shah out of the paths of virtue by showing him how to bet at the racetracks.

THE celebrated Concord (Mass.) School of Philosophy is no more. Its last sessions were held in the summer of 1887, and though there has been no formal disbanding, the leaders agree in stating that there will no more meetings. Many of the eminent speakers who were conspicuous in its foundation are dead, and no others can be found to fill their places. The institution was a school of metaphysics more than of philosophy, but it served a good purpose as an educator, and we are sorry to hear of its demise.

DAVID LATTIN, a brutal murderer and thief who now lies in the jail at Tacoma, was for five years a member of the Young Men's Christian Association at Spokane Falls.

A CHRISTIAN journal called "Forward," published in Philadelphia, makes the statement that "the building erected by Boston Infidels as a memorial of Tom Paine has been converted into a house of worship." This assertion is well known to be false, but it has its ground-work in the fact that Paine Hall was once leased to a religious body known as the "Day-star Baptist Society," which, after occupying it for some time, finally left the place owing over $300 for rent! To rent Paine Hall for religious purposes is a rare exhibition of liberality on the part of its managers, but prudence would seem to dictate that they take their pay in advance.

THE average religious editor talks nonsense. The editor of the Presbyterian, for instance, says that "the Agnostic who is opposed to a raid upon the Bible Society" is "an amusing specimen," thereby implying that the majority of Agnostics wish to suppress by force the circulation of the Bible. Just the contrary is true. Agnostics wish people to read the Bible, or such parts of it as are not indecent, and then, after comparing its statements with facts and with one another, decide for themselves whether or not it is the word of God. This is the very process that results in Agnosticism.

THE Waseca, Minn., Chautauquans have begun an action against the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage for $1,500 damages for failure to lecture before them last year as per contract. Talmage was in St. Paul July 28 and the Chautauquans took advantage of it to get service on him. It is told of Talmage that once in a fit of absent-mindedness he went to Baltimore to deliver a lecture when he had no engagement there. Perhaps he will plead the absent-minded act in the present instance.

THE defection of Mrs. Annie Besant from Atheism to Theosophy is regarded by Mr. G. W. Foote, editor of the Freethinker, as of sufficient importance to be treated of in a pamphlet, which he has written and published, entitled "Mrs. Besant's Theosophy." We regard the incident more in sorrow than in anger. As Ingersoll says, "It is touching when the learned and wise crawl back in cribs and ask to hear the rhymes and fables once again!"

THERE will be a meeting at the Free Library room, 841 Market street, on Thursday evening, August 8, 1889, for the purpose of discussing a system of co-operation elaborated and clearly outlined by Hon. John A. Collins. All who are interested in this important subject are earnestly invited to attend. Mr. Collins will be present and take pleasure in explaining this system, to which he has devoted much study and thought.

A CINCINNATI judge, in the case of a man arrested for selling ice-cream on Sunday, has decided that the law was not broken, as the use of ice-cream had grown to such an extent that it could easily be regarded as a necessity. The defendant was therefore acquitted. Thus another act is added to the Sunday-law comedy.

THE Rev. Mr. Harcourt charges that Mr. John Swett, late principal of the Girls' High School in this city, has been driven out of his position by the Roman hierarchy. We hope Dr. Harcourt will follow up the lead and expose the methods by which Rome controls our public school appointments.

VIKTOR E. LENNSTRAND, the Swedish Freethought lecturer, has been sentenced to six months' imprisonment, three months at Stockholm and three at Malmo, for the offense of publicly speaking at those places against Christianity.

OBSERVATIONS.

I desire to thank "Saladin," editor of the London Agnostic Journal, for his good words in his issue of July 6; and in order that the reader may see how much reason I have to be grateful I will quote what he says:

The Macdonald who was the father of our friend, E. M. Macdonald, of the New York Truth Seeker, and of G. E. Macdonald of the San Francisco FREETHOUGHT, was, under the Federal flag, killed in the battle of Bull Run. If, in some other world, his shade take interest in the affairs of this, he will feel proud of his sons, Eugene and George, who, though in their boyhood they had their father "stretched upon a bloody bier," have, two orphan boys, lived to attain to position and usefulness, and, in the vanguard of the human race, to carry forward a flag nobler than that under which their father died. I have long desecrated through the writings of the two brothers that they have heart as well as head; and, although the best qualities of both heart and head are necessary in the leaders of the world's forlorn hope, the latter can be dispensed with rather than the former. The last anniversary of the battle of Bull Run came round, and, away amid "California's pathless world of woods," the memory of the younger of the Macdonald brothers reverted to that gory struggle twenty-eight years ago, which, whatever its national significance, threw him upon the world as an orphan boy; and he composed the following elegiac lines, touching in their artless simplicity, and possessed of a literary excellence which makes us regret that the Freethought journalist has duties so exacting that they prevent the lyrical poet's more frequent communings with his lyre.

The lines referred to are those published under the head of "May 30" in FREETHOUGHT of June 1. The battle of Bull Run, at which Henry Macdonald lost his life, was fought August 28, 1862, and the recurrence of Decoration Day, May 30, recalled that event. A monument standing in Sullivan, Cheshire county, New Hampshire, bears this inscription:

HENRY MACDONALD,
of the 6th Regt.
Instantly killed in the Second battle of Bull Run,
August 28, 1862. Aged 35 years.
Buried on the battlefield.

The monument is a humble one, and it stands in an obscure place, but the men whose names and deeds it records bought their little meed of fame at so high a price that they will not be overrewarded if occasionally we tell the story how they fell.

The Misses Haelke, of Oakland, opened the last meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society with a gorgeous zither duet, and won the heartiest applause that has been heard in the hall since the present organization has occupied it. The attendance was large, all the chairs being filled; a late-comer sat picturesquely in a window, and three or four tried to enjoy the proceedings by putting their heads in at the door.

Herr Gottlieb Lemme presided fluently, introducing the speaker of the evening, Mr. C. F. Burgman, who discoursed on "Co-operative Liberalism." Mr. Burgman looked slightly clerical, and spoke rather solemnly than otherwise, but his voice had the ring of earnestness in it, and no one could doubt that he believed every word he said. The speaker opened with the remark that he had never before stood in the church of the Freethinkers. His audience might not agree with him, but he hoped to interest them in his subject. He had observed that the question of the existence of a God had occupied their attention at a previous meeting. With regard to that matter he would say that he did not accept the God of orthodoxy, for he did not believe that there was evil enough in the universe to justify the everlasting punishment of a single human being. If, however, by the word God was meant the force in nature which produced all the phenomena we behold, then he believed in it, and thought there was a purpose in everything. Superstition, the speaker held, was an effect, the cause being poverty and oppression. A poorly-fed, over-worked person could not be expected to have clear and healthy thoughts. Mr. Burgman attacked the land monopoly vigorously; also the monopoly of coal fields, and recommended that the government should own both. While there was land enough in the country for all and plenty of work waiting to be done, there ought not to be a tramp in existence. He believed that Christian Socialism was a move in the right direction, and invited Liberals to co-operate with the Eastern clergymen who are endeavoring to revive the economical teachings of Christ and to put them in practice.

Mr. Schou made his monthly report as treasurer. The society began the month fifteen dollars behind, but had gained on the debt, and a collection which he proposed to take up would undoubtedly square the account. The collection that followed justified Mr. Schou's anticipations, and proceedings were resumed.

Dr. O'Brock objected to Christian Socialism, or any other religious form of government. Socialism, or science, was for the people and happiness, while religion is for the priests and superstition. The Eastern clergymen who professed Socialism were merely hypocrites. The church's charity is the bones which she throws to the dogs. Dr. O'Brock speaks with the best intentions, but he failed to get his voice naturalized when he took out his papers, and still retains a strong alien accent.

Professor Miller complimented the lecturer as a man having the courage of his convictions. He took the ground that people who found fault with the government were growling at themselves, since they made it. If they desired anything it was their own fault if they did not get it. They must know, first, what they want; second, how to obtain it; and then have the resolution to accomplish the object sought for.

A stranger arose and inquired if this was anybody's meeting, and being assured by the Chair that the floor was open, proceeded to say that men did not combine for a specified purpose because they were reasonable beings. Bees, having instinct only, can work together harmoniously, but if they should stop to reason on the matter they would kick. One would make round cells, another would think square ones better, and so forth. The speaker believed, however, that the same reasoning power which led to diversity would ultimately bring about harmony when sufficiently enlightened.

The next speaker was a lady who announced that this was the era of woman, and that the wrongs under which the race suffers would not be righted until the ballot was wielded by female hands.

In closing the discussion Mr. Burgman replied briefly to Dr. O'Brock, who, he thought, had erred in confounding modern Christianity with the doctrine taught by Christ, whereas there was no similarity between them. Christ would probably take the Congregational church on the corner of Post and Powell streets and saw it up into cottages for poor people. Mr. Burgman indorsed the remarks of the lady who had preceded him. Women should have the suffrage and all other rights enjoyed by men.

At the next meeting Dr. Jerome A. Anderson will speak on the subject of "Good and Evil." The other lectures for August are as follows: Aug. 11, "The American House of Lords," by R. Guy McClellan, Esq.; Aug. 18, "Our Common Foe," by W. O. Howe; Aug. 25, "Truth, with Some Remarks About Lies," by the Hon. F. B. Perkins.

The Idaho Constitutional Convention adopted a preamble commencing with the words, "Grateful to Almighty God," etc., and a member who wanted the phrase left out was, according to the dispatches, well sat down on by the intelligent members of the convention. Of course, to religious persons, some incantation is necessary to every public document, as the cocktail is necessary to the toper before breakfast, but why should they dismiss the almighty with so few words? Our Connecticut forefathers, who bought their rum by the gallon, gave their constitution a good pious send-off. It was in the year of grace 1638 that the following able language first saw the light. The delegates to Connecticut's Constitutional Convention preambled thus:

Forasmuch as it hath pleased the Almighty God, by the wise disposition of his providence, so to order and dispose of things, that we, the Inhabitants and residents of Windsor, Hartford, and Weathersfield, are now cohabiting and dwelling in and upon the river of Connecticut, and the lands thereunto adjoining, and well knowing when a people are gathered together, the word of God requires, that to maintain the peace and union of such a people, there should be an orderly and decent government established according to God, to order and dispose of the affairs of the people at all seasons, as occasion shall require; doe therefore associate and conjoin ourselves to be as one publique state or commonwealth; and doe for ourselves and our successors, and such as shall be adjoined to us at any time hereafter, enter into combination and confederation together to maintain and preserve the liberty and purity of the Gospell of our Lord Jesus, which we now profess, as also the discipline of the churches, which, according to the truth of the said Gospell, is now practised amongst us; as also in our civil affairs to be guided and governed according to such laws, rules, orders, and decrees, as shall be made, ordered, and decreed.

There was something honest and straightforward in the way these old puritan bigots set forth their intention of using the state to bolster up religion, and they were consistent in going ahead and enacting the following laws:

If any man after legal conviction shall have or worship any other God but the Lord God hee shall be put to death.

If any man or woman be a witch, that is, hath or consulteth with a familiar spirit, they shall be put to death.

If any person shall blaspheme the name of God the Father, Sonne or holy Ghost, with direct, express, presumptuous or high-handed blasphemy, or shall curse in the like manner, hee shall be put to death.

The delegates at Boise City ought to diligently compare their preamble, constitution, and laws with previous legal instruments, and if they earnestly desire to do the handsome thing by the said God, they should adopt the constitution of 1638, with such minor changes as are made necessary by the difference in location. The rigmarole of that document is no more out of place than the one they have in their preamble.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The Astronomical Society of the Pacific Coast met in the library of the Lick observatory on Saturday last, with a good attendance.—One of the mutinous military bandsmen who obeyed the order of the Musician's Union and refused to play on the Fourth has been dishonorably discharged and sentenced to pay a fine of $50.—A son of Ambrose Bierce, being jilted by his promised wife, who eloped with another man, shot his rival dead and then committed suicide July 26.—The Rev. Dr. John A. Brooks, of St. Louis, who was the nominee for vice-president on the Prohibition ticket last year, lectured at Irving Hall on Prohibitionism last Saturday night. He had a small and not very enthusiastic audience. He said it was the smallest audience he had ever addressed in the United States.—Remarkably high temperatures have prevailed lately in the southern part of the state. On the 27th ult. the mercury stood at 102 in Pomona and 99 in Los Angeles.—The contract with the Union Iron Works of San Francisco for the construction of the coast defense vessel has been signed by Secretary Tracy. The contract price is $700,000.—A turtle nine feet long, four feet broad, and weighing 2000 pounds was captured off Pigeon Point last week.—Nearly five hundred acres of grain was burned near Merced July 24th. The loss reaches $5000.—It is decided that the Chinese Exclusion act cannot prevent the passage of Chinamen through United States territory.

Henry George is home from England. He reports a successful campaign for the single-tax idea in that country.—Chairman Jones of the National Greenback Committee has issued a circular in which he says that the Prohibition, female suffrage, and other questions foreign to the financial one will not be incorporated in the Greenbackers' platform.—Chicago suffered from a terrific storm on the 27th ult. It was the worst ever known in the city, immense damage being done to property, and many lives lost.—The Rev. Samuel Earp, of St. Andrew's church, Ann Arbor, Mich., has been removed to a sanitarium suffering from mental troubles. He is in debt for borrowed money to near the amount of $10,000, and there is poor chance of his creditors getting any of it.—Two women were whipped at Marion, Ind., July 27, by brutal "regulators" who accused their victims of gossip.—Cincinnati saloon-keepers defied the law last Sunday and kept their places open. The police made 150 arrests.—Great forest fires are devastating Montana.—The New York printers are threatened with a reduction of wages, but have resolved not to submit to a reduction of the scale.—George Francis Train has just completed his 100-day fast. He claims to have subsisted on a daily allowance of a half pound of chocolate-and-milk.

Boulangier lost in the late French elections.—The country between London and Liverpool, Manchester, Leeds, and other centers of England, was electrified last Sunday by the appearance of the Herald special Sunday newspaper train, the first newspaper Sunday train ever run in England. It consisted of a locomotive and five newspaper vans.—Louise, the eldest daughter of the Prince of Wales, was married to the Earl of Fife on Saturday last. There was a big splurge over the event.—The trial of the strikers arrested at Breslau, Germany, resulted in the conviction of thirty-two. Henkle, the ringleader, was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude and to be deprived of his civil rights for seven years. Nine others were sentenced to terms ranging from eighteen months to five years at hard labor, and twenty-two were sentenced to from one year to four years without hard labor.—Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone have celebrated their golden wedding.

LITERARY NOTES.

"Olden Times and Modern Chimes" by G. Minson was evidently published for the amusement of the author. Watts & Co., London.

"All About Shorthand" is told in a pamphlet issued by D. L. Scott-Browne, author of the American Standard system of phonography, 251 West Fourteenth street, New York.

"Stepping-stones to Agnosticism," No. III., is entitled "Our Brother Christ," by F. J. Gould. It contains 48 pages; published by Watts & Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet street, London.

"Vitapathy" is a little tractate with a whole volume on the title page. Inquirers can get all the information they want about vitapathy by addressing J. B. Campbell, Fairmount, Cincinnati, Ohio.

A "Co-operative Commonwealth" has been inaugurated in Grass Valley, Cal., and documents setting forth its purposes may be obtained by addressing the Integral Co-operation Central Phalanx at that place.

The "Prodigal Daughter," by Rachel Campbell, is published at the office of Lucifer, Valley Falls, Kansas. It is longer, more interesting, and just as moral as the biblical legend of the Prodigal Son. Price 10 cents.

The Thirty-fourth Annual Report of the Odd Fellow's Library Association gives us the credit of sending FREETHOUGHT to the library gratis. The credit belongs to Mr. C. E. Spofford, who paid the subscription price.

Dr. Richard Chenevix Trench's lectures on "English Past and Present" make two bulky numbers of the Humboldt Library. The subject of the lectures forms a most curious and instructive study. The two numbers sell for 50 cents.

A little bit of a tract entitled "Do the Scriptures Teach the Eternal Torment is the Wages of Sin?" is received from the Tower Tract Society of Allegheny City, Pa. To this query we can only reply that the teaching of the scriptures on the subject does not settle the question one way or the other.

Seven most excellent Lectures on Mediumship are given by Prof. J. S. Loveland in his book entitled "Mediumship," published by Moses Hull & Co., 675 W. Lake street, Chicago. They are entirely free from the metaphysical bosh of Theosophy, and if spirit life were an accepted fact they would be above criticism.

The Humboldt Library now issues from 28 Lafayette Place, New York, the headquarters of the Truth Seeker. No. 110 is "The Story of Creation," by Edward Clodd, price 30 cents, and No. 111 is "The Pleasures of Life," by Sir John Lubbock, price 15 cents. The Humboldt Library is one of the most beneficent literary institutions in the world.

E. B. Foote, Jr., M.D., reviews "Dr. Cyrus Edson's Plea for Compulsory Vaccination" in a 16-page pamphlet. Dr. Foote holds that vaccination as a prevention of small-pox is a medical superstition, and the fact that the proportion of deaths to small-pox cases is just as large now as it was a hundred years before vaccination was discovered goes a long way toward supporting his view. The pamphlet is obtainable, for about 10 cents, from the Murray Hill Publishing Co., New York.

We have received from the Theosophical Book Company, located corporeally at 110 Fremont street, Boston, a work entitled "Light On the Path," professedly "a treatise for the personal use of those who are ignorant of the Eastern wisdom, and who desire to enter within its influence." The book gives rules for disciples, among them the following: "Kill out ambition. Kill out desire of life. Kill out desire of comfort. Desire only that which is beyond you. Desire only that which is unattainable. Listen only to the voice which is soundless. Hold fast to that which is neither substance nor existence. Look only on that which is invisible alike to the inner and the outer sense." If the author had left the pages of his book blank he would have conveyed about the same amount of information to the public as he has by covering them with meaningless phrases.

The Lucifer Publishing Company of Valley Falls, Kan., issue the Arguments in Support of Demurrer to the Indictment of M. Harman, E. C. Walker, and Geo. Harman, under the Comstock Law, by G. C. Clemens and David Overmeyer, together with Judge Foster's Decision Overruling the Demurrer, in pamphlet form. Parties interested in this case, and all should be, may obtain the pamphlet by addressing either "Lucifer" or "Fair Play," Valley Falls, Kan., and inclosing 25 cents.

The best oral discussion of the Sunday question with which we are acquainted is printed in a large pamphlet of 191 pages by the American Sentinel of Oakland. It is the argument of A. T. Jones before the United States Senate Committee on Education and Labor at Washington, D. C., Dec. 13, 1888. Mr. Jones was given a "hearing" before the above committee to argue against the Blair Sunday bill. Senator Blair was chairman, and one side of the discussion was carried on by him. He interrupted Mr. Jones no less than one hundred and sixty-nine times in ninety minutes, but he found his match in the acute Second-Advent theologian, and if experience had taught him anything he would have kept quiet after the first half-dozen replies from his opponent. Elder Jones was contending not only for the freedom of conscience but for industrial liberty as well; for the Adventists religiously observe the seventh day and conduct their ordinary business on Sunday. A law making Sunday labor a misdemeanor would compel them to be idle on that day and rob them of one-sixth of their time. Mr. Jones had the Bible and common sense both on his side against the proposed bill, and he made the best use of his resources. The price of the pamphlet is 25 cents, and it may be obtained by addressing the American Sentinel, 1059 Castro street, Oakland, Cal.

PUBLICATION OF PROHIBITED OPINION.

To the Editors of Freethought:

In your kind notice of my "Code of Morals," you object to the rule there laid down, that there is no obligation to proclaim doctrines considered criminal or highly pernicious by the community in which one lives. Notwithstanding your objection, I still think I am right.

It would have done no credit to a Protestant to publish his religious opinions in Spain three hundred years ago, nor to an Abolitionist to proclaim his hostility to slavery in Mississippi thirty years ago. The speech that sends a man certainly and almost immediately to the stake does very little good. The cases cited are extreme, but they represent myriads of cases of Christian persecution, and they cannot be left out of consideration in laying down a general principle for human conduct. Other typical cases may be imagined, in which silence about unpopular religious opinions may be excused.

Fortunately there are many men who are so situated that without exposing themselves to great danger, they can safely publish their thoughts about prevalent superstitions. This class is so large, so learned, so able, so earnest, and so influential that the civilized world is moving with wonderful speed and momentum towards its intellectual emancipation from sacerdotal control. Let each do his best and not make unreasonable demands upon his neighbor.

Yours truly, JOHN S. HITTELL.

Editor Baker's Gratitude.

Our thanks are due Edson Smith and R. M. Hargrave for two watermelons, the best we have tasted this year. Come again, gentlemen.—Santa Ana Standard.

THE CHEERFUL GIVER.

BOULDER CREEK, July 24, 1889.

FRIEND MACDONALD: My friend Mr. Joseph Blabon, of Crescent City, Del Norte county, Cal., who is ever and always an earnest and enthusiastic Liberal, wishes me to notify you that he wants to be enrolled among the generous Liberals who are subscribing towards making up the annual deficiency in the publication of FREETHOUGHT. He cheerfully promises $20 per year for five years, and as an earnest of his promise incloses $20 to pay for 1889. I forward the same to you inclosed with this letter, which please find and duly credit to him. Wishing health and prosperity to yourself and FREETHOUGHT, I remain Yours most sincerely, W. S. RODGERS.

OLYMPIA, W. T., July 9, 1889.

FRIENDS: I herewith send $7—$5 to help the cause and the balance to apply on subscriptions.

Your well-wisher, GEO. COLLINS.

BOULDER CREEK, Cal., July 8, 1889.

PUTNAM & MACDONALD: According to promise I send you inclosed $5 toward paying my $10 per year. It is earned by hard work in the redwoods, but freely given in support of FREETHOUGHT; and long may it live, is the wish of

Yours sincerely, A. A. SPORELAND.

SAN JOSE, Cal., July 24, 1889.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: Inclosed please find $7.50, for which send Vol. 1, FREETHOUGHT. The balance use as you please. And you'll hear from us later on, perhaps.

Fraternally, L. R. TITUS.

SHEDD, Or., July 8, 1889.

MESSRS. PUTNAM & MACDONALD: Inclosed you will find check for $22—$2 for my next year's subscription, and $20 for first year's pledge to keep up FREETHOUGHT on this coast.

Yours, H. ARNOLD.

THE OREGON SECULAR UNION.

Dear Freethought:

I have just received the following able and suggestive letter from C. B. Reynolds. His experience in and devotion of soul to our great cause command my respect and admiration, and I will ask you to print his letter. Will the Liberals of Oregon and Washington canvass these and other points through our organ, FREETHOUGHT, and thus hold one of the sessions Brother Reynolds suggests, before our October convention?

WALLA WALLA, W. T., July 22, 1889.

C. BEAL, President Oregon Secular Union, Dear Sir: I congratulate you, and the friends at Silverton, on your success in inaugurating a state organization of Liberals in Oregon. With much patient and persistent entreaty, I have, ever since my advent in the Liberal ranks, urged the necessity of real, practical organization. I am confidently hopeful that Washington Territory will follow the lead of Oregon. As president of the organization—and knowing your great ability, influence, and zeal—I venture to make a few suggestions for your consideration, and urge—if after reflection thereon you approve—you will lay them before the practical, self-sacrificing workers of your state.

Ere there can be a genuine national organization there must first be a number of state organizations, whose accredited representatives or delegates shall constitute the national organization. Ere a state organization can be an effective reality it must be composed of properly authorized representatives or delegates from local societies. Hence it should be impressed on the mind of every Liberal in Oregon that it is to his or her personal interest and advantage to use all possible effort to establish local organization. But there is no possibility of success so long as we build only in the clouds. Specious platitudes and sophisms are poor foundation-stones. Every local society should be organized on strict business principles—on a pay-in-advance cash basis. Romantic visionaries, illiberal Liberals, unwilling to pay reasonable membership fee and at least fifty cents per month, in advance, to support their own local organization, are better counted out; they are barnacles, dead-weights, and, ninety-nine times out of a hundred, dead beats. A Liberal—worthy of the name and known as such—would never be counted out for non-payment. If we have an organization, let it consist of Liberals—those who have the pure and ennobling principles of Liberalism in their hearts, not mere Bible kickers, loud talkers, who have been expelled from churches on account of mean acts or chronic stinginess.

At the proposed Portland convention, avoid a Niagara of verbosity. Do not pattern after the A. S. U. so-called congress. We cannot afford to have the convention a mere candidating of lecturers.

Every lecture should be carefully prepared for the occasion, expound our principles, in clear and forcible manner state the aims and objects of our organization, and make eloquent appeals to the intelligent to investigate, and to Liberals to show the depth of their convictions by self-sacrifice in helping the cause.

PAYING SPEAKERS.

I have always regarded it as a grave mistake to have public begging at our conventions. Liberal workers—not lecturers—leave their homes and business, subscribe toward the expenses, pay their own fare and hotel bill, and then are humiliated by begging appeals, and, to save the cause, oft give more than they can afford.

Lecturers assume to be leaders. Let them for once lead in the way of a little self-sacrifice. The convention at Portland will benefit lecturers financially more than any others. Those lecturers whose services are especially required by the committee, as a matter of courtesy should be provided for or have their hotel bill paid. This is all they ought to expect. They are paid at all other times for speaking, they can well afford to attend and work at this most important gathering without exacting a fee.

Perfecting organization will result in much greater advantage to lecturers than to all others. I do not believe any of our lecturers are mere mercenaries. If any one of them is unwilling, for the cause' sake, to do all in their power to induce attendance, solicit contributions, pay their own fare there, and do just such work as the committee may require of them during the Portland convention, it will be evidence they are in the work "for greed and gain only." The sooner any such are exposed and given chance "to step down and out" the better.

REAL CONGRESS OF REAL WORKERS.

Above all, sessions should be arranged for, so that the real workers can meet and fully discuss and compare plans and methods of carrying on the work, all pledging to faithfully and zealously carry out the plan agreed on by the majority, thus securing a practical plan of action, so all can pull together and work in harmony.

Let us all strive to heal dissensions; unite for work; waive all questions of favor or disfavor of individuals, and earnestly endeavor to promote the greatest good to the greatest number. Washington is not now prepared to form a separate state organization. It would be greatly to the advantage of Oregon and Washington to unite and form a joint state organization.

Can I assure Liberals that there will positively be sessions devoted to discussions and adoption of a plan of work? If so, write me and I will try and prepare articles for our leading Liberal papers, to arouse interest in the coming Portland convention, among Washingtonians.

Do you not think it advisable to at once commence private appeals for contributions, so you can announce positively no collections at the convention?

Do not hesitate to call on me for any service in my power. If you wish I will write personal letters to every Liberal worker of Washington Territory, whose address I can obtain, urging their attendance, and remitting at earliest a contribution to your treasurer, toward the expenses.

C. B. REYNOLDS.

SECULAR WORK IN OREGON.

Miss Mattie Blaisdell, one of the intelligent and noble young ladies of Portland, is preparing a banner to be presented to the October Convention.

W. F. Miller, of Brownsboro, Jackson county, over three hundred miles away, sends us seventeen new members for the State Secular Union—W. F. Miller, Dolph Carlton, Maude Carlton, C. A. Burnett, W. H. Bradshaw, Mollie Brown, Prof. A. S. Haselton, Mrs. A. S. Haselton, of Brownsboro; John A. Obencham, Carrie C. Obencham, B. F. C. Edmondson, Asbury Beall, of Big Butte; W. S. Gray, H. C. Wright, G. W. Dick, H. A. Bondler, of Masonville; W. W. French, of Eagle Point. Brother Miller says, "I have read with interest the account of proceedings of the Oregon State Secular Union. I hope it will prove a grand success. For in unity there is strength. We cannot expect to gain a victory over the hosts of superstition without a concerted movement. Each Liberal in the state should open his mouth and pocket-book and make the Portland Convention such a success that it will strike terror to the hearts of the enemy. I pledge $5 on a life membership. There will be quite a delegation from Jackson county. I wish you and the new organization every success. I will carry out all orders to the best of my ability."

Now, my brave Liberal co-workers, who will speak next? As Hypatia and Bruno died for humanity and truth, so let us as bravely bear aloft the banner of universal mental liberty, and two thousand of us strike hands at the Portland Convention.

Portland, Or., July 24, 1889.

C. BEAL,
Pres. O. S. S. U.

DID JESUS CHRIST RISE FROM THE DEAD?

V.

The laborious pedantries and erudite puerilities of theologians have been directed to minimizing the discrepancies in the gospel narratives. Sufficient volumes have been written to impose upon the faithful, but not sufficient to minimize the discrepancies. Matthew alone was aware of the earthquake which opened the graves of the dead and sent them strolling about the streets of Jerusalem. Mark, Luke, and John have considered that a mere trifle, not worth mentioning; and, strange to say, this earthquake, with its post-mortem cantrips of the dead, was not considered a subject striking enough to elicit a single line from the pens of Josephus, Pliny, Suetonius, Tacitus, or Plutarch, all of whom were alive at the time of its alleged occurrence. The Holy Ghost inspired John alone to write that Jesus was pricked on the side with a spear, and to say that blood and water issued from the wound, which, if it prove anything, proves that Christ had suffered from dropsy. John, too, is the only writer that refers to the doubts of Thomas Didymus; and it is probable that, under divine direction, he invented Thomas Didymus first, and then invented the spear-wound for the said Thomas to put his fingers into. Matthew, Mark, and Luke had never heard of the spear-wound and Didymus, or they had considered them trifles quite beneath notice; just as three of the evangelists had never heard of the earthquake and the dead striding out of their graves, or else had considered earthquakes and the streets of Jerusalem trodden by the feet of corpses matters too trumpery to demand a single remark.

These are not the sort of points theologians apply to themselves to. They raise a learned dust, and, in cover of it, shirk the real issue. When they encounter a substantial difficulty they pass by on the other side, and write a hundred and fifty pages to prove the tremendous difference between the northeastern and southwestern side of a hair. This is more easily done than to account for John knowing nothing of the eclipse of the sun when "there was darkness over all the land for the space of three hours." Seneca and Pliny the elder, like John, knew nothing of this wonderful eclipse, although each of them, as remarked by Gibbon, "in a laborious work, has recorded all the great phenomena of nature—earthquakes, meteors, comets, and eclipses—which his indefatigable curiosity could collect. Both the one and the other have omitted to mention the greatest phenomenon to which the mortal eye has been witness since the creation of the globe. The difficulty still unresolved is this: How such events as those recorded in the gospels could have happened and escape the observation of the public at the time, and all notice at the hands of the historians of the period. . . . Now it is of this period the most wonderful events are related that have happened in the world since the (alleged) Mosaic age, and the account of them was first published in the second century after their alleged occurrence, when no living witnesses were alive to deny or affirm their reality. Fortunately there is a contemporary history of the time extant (Josephus) to which we can appeal, and which substantially denies these traditional averments. . . . Is it usual with historians to keep back the most wonderful, the most public, and the most important historical transactions?" (The Jesus of History and Tradition Identified, pp. 162-3.) All the learning and ingenuity of all the saints have never been able to explain satisfactorily how it is that, in giving the words which Pilate caused to be inscribed over the cross, all the four evangelists disagree, and how the disagreement is nearly as marked in their account of Christ's last words before he expired, and also as regards who the persons actually were who first visited his tomb after his sepulture.

The discrepancies of statement among the inspired writers, it is sometimes urged by the faithful, are not in essentials. I reply that the discrepancies and contradictions are palpable and glaring, and every item of information in regard to such a significant and tremendous event as the resurrection claims to be is essential in the last degree. If Christ rose from the dead, and if, on the establishment of this fact, Christianity elects to stand or fall, every scintilla of evidence is essential, and the suggestion of triviality in the minutest detail connected with an affair so momentous is profanity and mockery.

*By Saladin, editor of the Agnostic Journal.

If the resurrection story were within the bounds of probability at all, I should certainly deem it essential to know, without doubt, who first visited the sepulchre, and were, in consequence, the primary witnesses for the resurrection prodigy. Three of the gospel writers place Mary Magdalene among the witnesses, and John actually makes her the only witness—a magnificent specimen of "gospel harmony" and the uniform action of inspiration by the Holy Ghost! The account of a prodigy, per se, utterly incredible, is supported by evidence too puerile and absurd to be introduced into a respectable nursery tale. Am I expected to believe in an impossible event on the authority of a crazy creature like Mary Magdalene? Am I to believe that a man rose from the dead because a woman, who had been a prostitute, and perhaps still was a prostitute, said so? I refuse so to believe; and, if I am to be damned for my unbelief, I say, unhesitatingly, I will go to hell with my reason and my honesty rather than go to heaven without them.

What have I to do with the evidence of a poor hysterical being, who is said to have lived in an out-of-the-way part of the world nearly two thousand years ago, even if she were testifying to the occurrence of an event lying within the range of possibility? A weak, mad creature, out of whom "seven devils" had been "cast," testified that the conjurer, quite as superstitious and almost as ignorant as herself, who had "cast" the "devils" out of her, had risen from the dead; and I am expected to believe her or be lost! Undoubtedly it is upon the evidence of this hysterical and seven-times bedevilled lady of the pavement that the resurrection story, and consequently the whole superstructure of Christianity, principally rests. John, as I have said, makes her go alone to the sepulchre, and, although Mark sends her, accompanied by "the other Mary," whoever she might be, and Salome, he states that she (Mary Magdalene) alone saw the resurrected Jesus. The Christian system is based upon the myth of the resurrection; and the myth of the resurrection the principal witness is a half-crazy prostitute. Verily a glorious and credible creed! "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned."

As to the other witnesses besides the mad lady of the pavement, God knows who they were. Certain of them saw an angel sitting on a stone; others saw no angel, but saw a young man in white; others saw two men in glistening apparel, and others saw two angels. If, in a police-court, such contradictory evidence were given in regard to a street row, the magistrate would conclude that the witnesses were a pack of stupid, if not drunken, liars, and dismiss the case; but for many centuries these witnesses have been considered strong enough to bear the whole fabric of the Christian religion upon their shoulders, and to form the foundation-stone of a "scheme of salvation" affecting in the most intimate manner the weal or woe of untold millions of the human race.

THE SUMMER AND FALL CAMPAIGN.

S. P. Putnam has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Coos county, Or., July 22 to Aug. 4,	Fox Valley..... Or., Sept. 9, 10,
Coburg..... " Aug. 7, 8,	Long Creek..... " " 11, 12,
Lebanon..... " " 9,	Hamilton..... " " 14, 15,
Olympia... W. T., " 11, 12,	Monument..... " " 16, 17,
Buckley... W. T., " 13, 14,	Hay Stack..... " " 18,
Davenport, " " 17, 18,	Lone Rock..... " " 19, 20,
Cheney... " " 19,	Fossil..... " " 21, 22,
Rosalie... " " 20,	Hillsboro, Or., Sept., 25, 26, 27, 28,
Sprague... " " 21,	North Yamhill... Or., Sept. 29,
Pasco..... " " 22,	Forest Grove.... " " 30,
Dayton... W. T., Aug. 24, 25,	Talent, Or., and vicinity Oct. 3, 4, 5,
Pomeroy... W. T., Aug. 26,	6, 7,
La Grange, Or. Aug. 29,	Linkville.... Or., Oct. 11, 12, 13,
Union..... Or. " 30,	Sacramento..... Cal., Oct. 20,
Baker City, Or. Sept. 1,	San Francisco..... " " 27,
Crocker City, Or., " 2, 3,	Los Angeles and vicinity the month
Prairie City, Or, and vicinity, Sept.	of November,
5, 6, 7,	San Diego and vicinity the month of December.

THE LICK ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

To the Editors of Freethought:

The account given in your issue of 20th inst. of the laying of the cornerstone of the Academy of Science, in your city, is of the highest interest. And the scientific address, on the occasion, of Hon. Irving M. Scott, though brief, teems with suggestiveness: "Philosophy teaches that all phenomena, whether physical, intellectual, social, or moral, are aspects resulting from the operation of law. Science itself is an exemplification of this form of government." And in reference to the new philosophy—the transmutation and conservation of force—"It may exist as potential or dynamic energy, and throughout the universe the sum of these two energies is constant."

Oh, multiply these academies, each with a laboratory, and teach by demonstration this scientific, this true, knowledge in lieu of the false, and in one generation "good-bye" can be said to the metaphysical pseudo-science of the dreamy superstitions and dogmatic past, the benighting and debasing relics of barbarism.

Of all the institutions that have come down to us from the "good old times," not a single one is found to be in harmony with or adapted to the present modern conditions. Hence, the sweeping iconoclasm of the age to make room for new institutions or the radical remodeling of old ones.

And while, as to this iconoclasm of old institutions, there appears to be an almost general unanimity, yet with regard to two of them, classical education and class privilege, there is a great struggle by prejudiced conservatism to prevent innovation.

But utilitarianism and equality being the genius of the new orders, whatever remnant there may be of the exclusive or merely ornamental, must go.

The classical education of universities and colleges makes its recipients mere literary dudes, as helpless as they are conceited and snobbish. And being usually averse to labor or business they are entirely "out of touch" with the Industrialism of the age; for the many years devoted to the construing of Greek syntax and making and scanning of Latin verse is not calculated to make a man competent as to business capacity—the universal and imperative requirement. And though it may make him a so-called gentleman, it is inadequate to afford the necessary "tools" to sustain the rank. And the pretentious, aristocratic exclusiveness of these colleges, by ignoring sympathy with the masses, totally unfits their graduates to compete in or co-operate with the prevailing and growing democracy of the age. Their day is passed, let them go, to be replaced by local science academies, where all alike shall be taught a scientific education, one that shall be of practical importance. These will afford an opportunity for all to acquire a scientific education, the one that is alone useful, and therefore alone worthy of the name.

These academies shall be equal to West Point, whose scientific and disciplined graduates, being thoroughly practical, are infinitely superior to the classical omodahns, dudes, and literary dreamers of the old, people-despising colleges.

Hail, our pioneer Academy of Science! the most auspicious institution ever founded on the Pacific Coast, and full co-partner of the Lick observatory, they being, together, a living monument and the grandest in significance ever raised to perpetuate the memory of an individual, because the enlightened philanthropy and boundless munificence of this individual, James Lick, have been dedicated to the great cause of humanity. J. F. San Bernardino, Cal.

AN OREGON GREETING.

The Oregon Scout, of Union, Or., announces Mr. Putnam's lecture there in the following complimentary terms:

"The Liberal lecturer, Mr. Samuel P. Putnam, will be in La Grande on Monday evening next, and in Union on Tuesday evening. It is hardly necessary for us to call attention to the merits of Mr. Putnam as a lecturer, as he is well-known throughout the length and breadth of the country, and has visited our city annually for several years past. He is considered by competent critics to be one of the most eloquent and able speakers of the United States, and those who go to hear him may be sure of being well repaid for doing so. To those who differ with him in opinion he is ever courteous and kind, and though they should fail to be convinced by his logic, they cannot but be delighted with his brilliant oratory. No admission will be charged and no collections will be taken up. The people of Union and La Grande cannot do better than greet him with crowded houses."

MARRIAGE CEREMONIES OF THE BILQUA.

Mr. Ph. Jacobsen, in a letter to his well-known brother, Capt. A. Jacobsen, gives the following description of the marriage ceremonies of the Bilqua of British Columbia. An Indian who intends to marry, calls upon his intended wife's parents, and arranges with them how much he is to pay for permission to marry the girl. Among people of high descent this is done by messengers, sometimes as many as twenty being sent to call on the girl's father. They are sent by the man's parents before the young man is of age. In many instances both man and girl are not more than eight or nine years old. The messengers go in their boats to the girl's house, and carry on their negotiations without going ashore, where the relatives of the girl are standing. The messengers of the young man's parents praise his excellence and noble descent; the great exploits of his father, grandfather, and ancestors; their wars, victories, and hunting expeditions; their liberality at festivals, etc. Then the girl's relatives praise the girl and her ancestors, and thus the negotiations are carried on. Finally a number of blankets are thrown ashore by the messengers; and the girl's relatives protest, and maintain that the number is not sufficient to pay for the permission to marry the girl. In order to obtain their consent, new blankets are thrown ashore one by one, the messengers continually maintaining that the price paid is too great. Generally from twenty to fifty blankets, each of the value of about half a dollar, are paid.

After this the boy and the girl are considered engaged. When they come to be grown up, the young man has to serve a year to his father-in-law. He must fell trees, fetch water, fish, and hunt for the latter. During this time he is called Kos, which means "one who woos." After a year has elapsed, the marriage is celebrated. At this time great festivals are celebrated. Seven or eight men perform a dance. They wear dancing aprons and leggings, trimmed with puffin-beaks, hoofs of deer, copper plates, and bells. If the groom should be a wealthy man, who has presented to his wife many small copper plates, such as are used as presents to a bride, these are carried by the dancers. The singing-master, who beats the drum, starts a song in which the dancers join. The song used at the marriage festival is sung in unison, while in all other dances each dancer has his own tune and song. The first dancer wears a ring made of cedar-bark. His hair is strewn with eagle-down, which flies about when he moves, and forms a cloud around his head. The groom presents the first dances with a piece of calico, which the latter tears to pieces, which he throws down in front of each house of the village, crying, "Hoip!" in order to drive away evil spirits. These pieces of calico which he throws down in front of the houses have a lucky meaning, and at the same time express the idea that the groom, when he comes to be a wealthy man, will not forget the inhabitants of any house when giving a festival. The dancers swing their bodies and arms, stamp their feet, and show the copper plates to the lookers-on. Then the bride's father brings a great number of blankets, generally double the number of those he had received from the groom, and gives them to his daughter. The bride orders a few blankets to be spread before the groom. She sits down, and he puts his hand upon her head. Then the groom is given for each of the parts of his body one or more blankets. Finally he is given a new blanket. After the bride's father has given a blanket to each dancer and to the drummer, the villagers are invited to a great feast. At this time groom and bride eat for the first time together.—Science.

"Looking Backward," a socialistic romance which has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin of Industrial Slavery," by Edward Bellamy. Price, 50 cents.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Mrs. Krekel.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I wish to say to the readers of your paper that we had Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel with us the Fourth of July. She gave the best oration ever heard here, and I am not alone in thinking so. Even the Christians say the same, although they had a reverend here who gave an oration in the morning (Mrs. Krekel spoke in the afternoon) and who was considered the best speaker in the country until after Mrs. Krekel spoke. I never in my life saw an audience swayed so effectually. She gave us a lecture at night on the "Cause and Cure of Crime," to which ten cents admittance was charged. Many Christians went in and paid to hear her, although they were satisfied that she was an Infidel. A great many, in fact, a majority, of the crowd acknowledged that she made a far better speech than did the much petted parson. There was no comparison.

I wish to recommend Mrs. Krekel to the Liberals of the West as a lecturer who will give unbounded satisfaction to all the Liberals and but little offense to Christians. Any community wanting Liberal lectures cannot do better than to employ Mrs. Mattie P. Krekel. S. P. WOOD.

Red Oak, Mo.

In the County of Coos.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I would like to let your readers know how the cause of Freethought is progressing in Coos county. Dr. Seymour has been on the river about three weeks. He lectured a week in Coquille; then at Myrtle Point, Arago, and Bandon. He was well received at all of these places. He won many friends and did good work for Freethought. When he comes again there will be many to welcome him back and shake his hand. He is now over on Coos Bay at Marshfield and Empire. I hear good reports from him. He told me that he found many subscribers for FREETHOUGHT. Liberals will do well to engage him.

Then came W. S. Bell, who spoke at Myrtle Point and Arago, and here (Coquille). He had a good audience here; he only staid part of one day and one night.

We are making big calculations for Putnam and will give a picnic and dance at Arago when he comes. We have a fine new hall now in Coquille. Putnam seems to have the preference over all of the speakers. He was the first one that ventured into this forest and woke up the people. Since that time the fire has not died out. The meetings are becoming more frequent and better attended. Materialists and Spiritualists make common cause against the enemy of Freedom and Freethought and make a strong pull together.

H. H. NICHOLS.

Coquille, Coos county, Or.

Information Wanted.

To the Clergy of Hillsboro, Or.:

GENTLEMEN: The following questions in regard to the soul I respectfully submit to you for your erudite consideration. You who are specially called by your God to save souls for him; you who so profoundly and piously profess to know all of the mysteries of the soul; you who have been educated in the soul-saving trade, and who so continually interest yourselves in the welfare of souls; you who so dogmatically affirm the existence of souls—should be willing to answer any questions pertaining to the soul. You will therefore confer a favor by answering these questions through the columns of FREETHOUGHT. In answering these questions do not answer by simply saying yes or no, but give explicit answers supported by your best evidences. Let your answers be free from religious cant and ambiguous language. I am aware of the fact that some of the questions are of a leading character and out of the course of questions generally discussed in class-meetings and Sunday-schools. If you will kindly answer these questions I will gladly propound another installment in regard to the soul.

1. Where does the soul come from?
2. Is the soul an entity or nonentity?
3. Of what is the soul composed?
4. When does the soul enter the body, before or after birth?
5. In what part of the body is the soul located?
6. If the soul is located in all parts of the body what becomes of that part of the soul contained in an amputated part of a living body?
7. Is the soul an organization independent of the body?

8. Does the soul develop as the body develops?
9. Is the soul of an infant of the same size and weight as the soul of an adult?
10. Is the soul of a negro of the same color as the soul of a caucasian?
11. Is the soul of an idiot as well developed as the soul of an intelligent person.
12. When does the soul leave the body, at death or at the resurrection day?
13. If the soul leaves the body at death, where does it sojourn while waiting for the resurrection morn?
14. If a living person was placed in an air-tight jar, and the jar sealed hermetically, at death how would the soul make exit from the jar?
15. After leaving the body what direction does the soul pursue to reach its final destination?
16. What length of time does it require for the soul to reach its final destination?
17. Where and at what distance from the earth is the soul land located?
18. Has the soul the physical organs indispensable to mental action and consciousness?
19. If not, of what use would the soul be?
20. Is the soul sensible or insensible to pain?
21. Of what shape is the soul?
22. Of what color is the soul?
23. Does the soul retain its sex?
24. When and where are the souls made, or did they always exist?
25. We have five infallible witnesses to prove the existence of matter, viz., hearing, seeing, tasting, smelling, and feeling. By these five witnesses we prove the existence and the component parts of matter. Can you by the aid of these five senses prove the existence of souls?

Hoping, gentlemen, that you will give these questions your earliest consideration, I am yours,
W. C. CLOW.
Hillsboro, Or., July 9, 1889.

Giordano Bruno.

JUNE 9, 1889.

Not from without us, only from within,
Comes or can ever come upon us light
Whereby the soul keeps ever truth in sight.
No truth, no strength, no comfort man may win,
No grace for guidance, no release from sin,
Save of his own soul's giving. Deep and bright
As fire enkindled in the core of night
Burns in the soul where once its fire had been
The light that leads and quickens thought, inspired
To doubt and trust and conquer. So he said
Whom Sidney, flower of England, lordliest head
Of all we love, loved; but the fates required
A sacrifice to hate and hell, ere fame
Should set with his in heaven Giordano's name.

Cover thine eyes and weep, O child of hell,
Gray spouse of Satan, church of name abhorred,
Weep, withered harlot, with thy weeping lord,
Now none will buy the heaven thou hast to sell
At price of prostituted souls, and swell
Thy loveless list of lovers. Fire and sword
No more are thine; the steel, the wheel, the cord,
The flames that rose round living limbs, and fell
In lifeless ash and ember, now no more
Approve thee god-like. Rome, redeemed at last
From all the red pollution of thy past,
Acclaims the grave, bright face that smiled of yore
Even on the fire that caught it round and clomb
To cast its ashes on the face of Rome.

—Algernon Charles Swinburne.

LECTURES IN OREGON.

Mr. B. F. Underwood, of Chicago, addressed the Liberals of Forest Grove July 14, giving us two splendid lectures; subject, for afternoon, "The New Science and the Old Faith;" for evening, "Evolution versus Revelation."

Both lectures were fine, but the last was simply grand. It would be impossible to give your many readers any idea of the masterly manner in which the subject was handled.

At the close of his lecture he gave his audience a handsome compliment, by telling them that he gave them a much deeper scientific lecture than he at first intended "because he thought they would appreciate it."

On July 21 we had another Liberal meeting, and a very fine lecture from Mr. W. S. Bell, also of Chicago.

On the 4th of August we are to have a called meeting of the Liberals of Washington county to organize under the auspices of the "State Secular Union" as "the Washington County Secular Union" if that name suits the majority of the Liberals present. We are going to work for a boom in Liberalism.

MRS. SARAH C. TODD.

P. S. I noticed in FREETHOUGHT I had been appointed one of the vice-presidents of the Secular Union. I beg to assure the Liberals that I appreciate the honor very highly, and that I will do all in my power to further the cause of Liberalism.

Forest Grove, Or.

S. C. T.

A CONVERTED PRIEST.

The Rev. A. Jerome P. Matthews, for the past two years Roman Catholic priest at St. Mary's, Bath, has addressed a letter to the members of his congregation, from which we give the following extract: "To the members of St. Mary's Congregation, Bath. My very dear friends: I have to make an announcement which will be painful alike to yourselves and to me. It shall be very brief, for it is sad to me to part from you; it will be sadder for you to learn the cause. After long and anxious thought and study, I have arrived at the conviction that the Jewish and Christian scriptures, though possessing many excellences, are full of legendary and mythological statements, and that they possess no claim to, and manifest no evidence of, divine inspiration; that the Roman Catholic church has no claim to be regarded as a divinely constituted authority; that the Papacy is a human institution, gravely compromised to error and superstition, and therefore injurious to the spiritual and temporal welfare of mankind; that Jesus Christ, though a holy man and ardent reformer, was not the great God of the universe, but the son of Joseph and Mary; that neither demoniacal spirits nor a place or state of everlasting torment have any existence in fact, but originate in ancient mythologies. With these convictions, which I have striven against for a long time without success, it would be dishonest for me to continue as a priest, teaching only the pure theism of natural spiritual religion, which I profoundly believe and desire to promote. I therefore this day return to our excellent and kind bishop the sacerdotal faculties entrusted to me by his lordship." Mr. Matthews was ordained by Archbishop Eyre at Glasgow in 1876. His work as a priest has been chiefly at Plymouth and other places in the West of England, with the exception of some time passed in missionary labors near Newcastle-on-Tyne. It is said that "Mr. Matthews is an excellent preacher and an able controversialist. We understand that he intends seeking a Unitarian pulpit."—HYPATIA BRADLAUGH BONNER, in the National Reformer.

"The Glory of Infidelity."

These words form the title of a lecture by Mr. Samuel P. Putnam, which he has just published at San Francisco. They are words that to an orthodox Christian convey no meaning except blasphemy or all wickedness combined. And yet no man of common intelligence and candor can read this common sense lecture without admitting that it contains a great deal of truth that would benefit all to know, and unique no one in any respect whatever.

"The Infidel," says Mr. Putnam, "is he who is unfaithful. Unfaithful to what?" This is the question to decide whether Infidelity is good or bad, and the lecturer proceeds to answer it in eighteen closely-printed pages. He gives numerous illustrations to prove that while Infidelity is unfaithful to error, it is the harbinger or forerunner of truth, and hence is faithful to progress and improvement. The lecture is well written, and abounds in eloquent passages, as well as free and independent thought. It concludes as follows:

"The old Roman, when he looked upon his country's magnificent conquests and majestic powers, was proud, indeed, to say, 'I am a Roman citizen!' And when I look upon the empire of Infidelity, blazing along the track of human progress, revealing new continents with fresh and golden fruits, fountains of joy, and heights of splendor, then, indeed, am I proud to say, 'I am an Infidel!'"

This able lecture (price, 10 cents) is published by Messrs. Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny street, San Francisco.—Boston Investigator.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—
"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—
ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS
(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to
L. K. WASHBURN,
Revere, Mass.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery.

San Francisco.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
11 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5, 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm Diamond.....	14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy.
Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

What is the Lord Doing?

"His tender mercies are over all his works."

We are told by the teachers of creeds,
That the mercies of God toward man
Overflow with his sorrows and needs,
In accord with an infinite plan.
Is it true, and the evidence clear,
To a court and a jury, not lax,
This question's important, and fear
Should not close our eyes to the facts.

"All wise, Almighty, All good,"
The case of a fallen world suits,
And the doctrine is well understood
That "a tree should be known by its fruits."
For thousands of years we have tried
Oppression's hard rule among men,
We have cheated, and murdered, and lied.
What was the Lord doing then?

With Europe, its millions in arms,
With Africa, fighting, enslaved,
With Hindoo, and Chinese alarms,
Where is the nation that's saved?
His mercies are for all his works
Then in view of this terrible row
With Frank, German, Russians and Turks,
What is the Lord doing now?

Suppose that the Lord was to die,
And the devil to reign supreme,
Do you think that people would lie
Any more than they do with Him?
Would murder and thieving and crimes,
Under satanic ruling increase?
Would the rogues have more flourishing times
Than under this "Kingdom of Peace?"

Would churches more envious grow?
Would priests more their rivals o'erwhelm?
Would politics more vices show?
If Satan stood fast at the helm?
In view of such infinite wrongs,
With your Lord in his governing chair,
Away with your flattering songs!
What is the Lord doing there?

Let him curb in the mighty who try,
With tyrants, to rob and oppress,
Let him succor the needy who cry;
The sorrowing in their distress.
Humanity, sore, tempest-tossed,
Wants remedies here, he can send,
Poor comfort to those who are lost,
That all will be burned in the end.

—THOMAS CURTIS.

Satisfactory All Around.

"I don't want to break the law," he said, as he stood in the presence of Captain Starkweather at police headquarters the other day.

"You are very kind," replied the Captain. "What is your case?"

"My wife has skipped."

"Indeed."

"Yes; skipped out two days ago. As I said, I don't want to break the law. What is the customary rule in such cases?"

"Let her skip."

"I am not expected to pursue her and shoot somebody?"

"No."

"Thanks. She has skipped. Let her skip. If she returns I overlook and forgive. If she does not I marry the hired girl. Perfectly satisfactory, sir, all around, and I thank you for your kindness."

HUNTING in the dark is the quickest way of finding what you are not looking for.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street.

Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.

G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents.

Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC

SCHOOLS.—THE NEW

AMERICAN PARTY,

A Criticism by "Jefferson."

Price, 10 cents.

Address

PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., J.L.D.

Price $1. Address, Putnam & Macdonald.

Dr. Wood's Rhubarb Bitters

impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Ask your dealer for them. Agency with J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento street, San Francisco, Cal.

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35 for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see other column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities and retired after 50 years' practice. he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.'"

It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of
MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE,
Proven by the sale of half a million to be the most popular
Readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" medi
Valuable to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured
Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati
Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men
Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and A NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling work for AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr.
Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Felt's Health Monthly.
Standard Edition, $3.25 Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 difference is in paper and binding.
MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price, 50 cents.

Summary Editing.

Poet—"I have a few verses here, sir, which I should—"

Editor—"Certainly. Will you kindly drop them into the waste basket yourself. I am very busy just at present."

THE VOICE OF THE TIMES.

Addresses on the Social Question.

Clear, Concise, Sparkling, Helpful.

"Nationalism," by Edward Bellamy.

"The Earth for Man," by Col. T. W. Higginson.

"Christian Socialism," by Rev. W. D. P. Bliss, the Founder of the Order.

"Individualism," by Wm. Lloyd Garrison.

"Profit-Sharing," by Rev. N. P. Gilman.

"The Commonwealth of Man," by Frederic A. Hinkley.

"The Function of the State," by Edwin D. Mead.

"Nationalism," by Mrs. Abby Morton Diaz.

Addresses, also, by Dr. Edward McGlynn,

Rev. M. J. Savage, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney.

All just printed and to be had in this form alone.

Price for all, only 20 cents.

Address The New Ideal, 192 Summer st., Boston.

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts. Address this office

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, Dr. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully,

J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.

DR. FELLOWS.

The Innocence of Childhood.

Jim—"Say, Pete, what you watchin'?"
 Pete—"Jest you hold yer jaw and see. Do you see the guv'nor across the street?"
 "Yep."
 "An' see the minister coming down the street toward him?"
 "Yep."
 "Well, I jest slipped the euchre deck in the guv'nor's tail pocket, and when he meets the minister he'll stop to talk, and pull out his handkerchief to soak the sweat off'n his face. Then there'll be a rev'lution. Yip! Let's mosey; he's yanked the cards."

It Sounded Somewhat Personal.

A couple of Texas sheep-raisers, being in Austin, went to church. On emerging from the sacred edifice one of them said:
 "I say, Bill, that preacher was hitting at us."
 "You bet he was. He didn't talk about nothing except lost sheep. Got yer pistol?" replied the other.
 "Why certainly."
 "Then let's wait here till he comes out, and give him a chance to explain what he means by them personal remarks."

GOD IN THE STATE.

By E. A. Stevens, Secretary of the American Secular Union.

—:O:—
 This is the best presentation of the argument against God in the Constitution, ever prepared in a pamphlet of its size.

—:O:—
 Price, 10 cents; three copies, 25 cents; eight copies, 50 cents.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald
 504 Kearny st. San Francisco.

THE SABBATH IMPOSTURE.

BY HARRY HOOVER.

Showing that there is no authority for the Sunday laws, either Human or "Divine."

Price, 10 cents; three copies, 25 cents; eight copies 50 cents. Address this office.

ROMAN RULE OR RUIN.

BY Z. SHED.

A Summary of the atrocities committed by the Catholic church.

Price, 10 cents; four copies, 25 cents; ten copies, 50 cents. Address

PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

WHY PRIESTS SHOULD WED.

BY JUSTIN D. FULTON, D.D.

A startling book, particularly to those unacquainted with the character of the confessional. Price, $1.50.

Address this office.

THE ORDER OF CREATION,

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology
 Price, 50 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
 DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
 PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application.

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.

OLIVER HINCKLEY . . . SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

J. A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
 375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,
NURSERYMEN.

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice. Special Attention Given to Planting and Caring of Orchards and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools Price, 5 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"The Glory of Infidelity" was one of the poet-secretary's happiest efforts, and ranks with the best speeches of the Congress.—New York Truth Seeker.

Putnam's "Glory of Infidelity" is one of the ablest defenses of Freethought to which I have ever listened.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

The lecture was "The Glory of Infidelity." No man or woman could hear it without being inspired by the heroic Infidel manhood and womanhood coming down to us as a rich inheritance through the dreary ages of the past, and pointing with glorious hope to the "New Heaven and Earth."

J. F. BECK.

I believe I express the unanimous sentiment of all when I say that for a lecture of its character, Mr. Putnam has never been surpassed and seldom equaled on our platform—a platform famous for the talent it affords. "The Glory of Infidelity" fairly bristles with good things, and each sentence is an epigrammatic Secular sermon.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary American Secular Union.

—PRICE 10 CENTS.—

Address PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

A Church Committee Comes to Grief.

In conversation the other day, says the Hartwell, Ga., Sun, an old resident related this anecdote, which occurred some forty years ago: "On Shoal Creek there lived a number of old-time gentlemen with their antique notions of life, with the decanter of old liquors on the sideboard as the cornerstone of their far-famed hospitality and the mainstay of their domestic economy. Notwithstanding the universality of whisky drinking, the churches, as a rule, were more rigid in disciplining their members than they are now. Among those whose membership was at Shoal Creek, was Judge L., and, in an unguarded moment, he took 'too much' and was seen drunk. The next conference promptly appointed a committee to visit the brother, which committee consisted of Judge P. and Judge W. At the appointed day the committee went over to visit the offender, who gave them a hearty welcome, and all took a social drink, which was so often repeated during their stay that they forgot the object of their visit. The next conference called for a report on the case, when one of the gentlemen arose and said that they had labored with the brother and were satisfied. Judge L., who was present this time, made his statement, and finished with the remark that if he ever got drunk again the church would do well to send to him men who were not as fond of liquor as he was himself."

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walfs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarian.

Adami and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 32.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 10, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - AUGUST 10, 1889.

CHARLES BRADLAUGH says: "To me Theosophy is hardly on the level of Mormonism, and has only a very minor place among the world's delusions."

THE Rev. Mr. Crafts, who is stumping the coast in the interests of a national Sunday law, got a severe set-back in Oakland last Monday night. The Adventists and Freethinkers "packed" his meeting, so that when he brought out his Sunday-law petition for the audience to indorse, it was rejected by a vote of 102 to 98.

THE Supreme court of Pennsylvania has decided that a marriage solemnized on Sunday is null and void. We may next expect to hear of this same repository of wisdom and justice ruling that a murder committed on Sunday is invalid, and that the man who is killed must show up on Monday morning or be fined for contempt of court.

MANY cities are contending for the site of the Three America Exposition in 1892. New York wants it; so do St. Louis, Chicago, and Washington. San Francisco has not as yet put in its bid, but why not have the exposition here? We guarantee visitors open doors seven days in the week, which is more than the Sunday-law cities of the East can do.

THE Street Committee has refused the request of the Rev. Mr. Reiser to suppress the whistling of locomotives. As the law compels engineers to whistle when approaching the crossings, the committee decided to report that it was better to endure the noise than to have people run over by the cars. Perhaps that thought will be new to the Rev. Mr. Reiser.

ON the first day of the present month the people of Massachusetts and the surrounding country met at Plymouth and dedicated a monument to the memory of the Pilgrim fathers. It was wholly a religious ceremony, of which Scripture reading and the singing of hymns formed a large share. Mr. Breckenridge, of Kentucky, delivered the oration, in the course of which he affirmed that the great reason why we should honor the memory of the Pilgrims is because of their devotion to religious liberty and the separation of church and state. It is strange that this delusion as to the tolerant character of the settlers of New England should still exist in the minds of intelligent men. The fact is that the Pilgrims had not the slightest idea of religious liberty. They were narrow-minded, bigoted, and intolerant. They persecuted all who differed from them, hanged or banished Quakers, and drowned "witches." Perhaps they deserve credit for their courage and sincerity, but their record on the religious question is little less than infamous.

THE Denison, Texas, Sunday Gazetter reports and reflects: "After two months of prayerful conference of Baptists at Waco, the Rev. M. T. Martin, the popular Georgia evangelist, has been convicted of teaching heresy, and 'impeached.' He is, however, allowed to continue as a 'layman.' How he can be orthodox as a layman, and heterodox as a preacher, is not very clear, supposing him to be a conscientious man. The heresy of Mr. Martin appears to consist in the fact that he taught that assurance of conversion was necessary before baptism."

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, August 11, at 8 o'clock. R. Guy McClellan, Esq., will lecture on "The American House of Lords."

NEWS AND NOTES.

From Drain's to Scottsburg is a somewhat tedious journey. There was a young clergyman with us, however, and a man who could play "Yankee Doodle" with his jawbone, and so there was something to interest as we went up and down the vast hills. The varieties of human nature which one meets on a stage-coach help to while away the time. I pass the night at Scottsburg. The fiddle is brought forth and there is quite a merry-making. The next day, instead of the lumbering stage, the boat takes us down the sparkling Umqua. This journey is delightful. We pass through intricate palisades of hills. They are brilliant in the sunshine. Beautiful shades of green mingle with the brown and gray tints, and columns of white trunks shine amid the living forest. As we glide onward, from the unfolding heights in front new pictures flash in wonderful change. Then the hills disappear, the glittering wastes of sand fade into the misty horizon, the river broadens out, its stream touches the vast Pacific, and the innumerable waves, like careering horses, make a tumultuous splendor far as the eye can see. In faint brilliance the unmeasured ocean slowly rolls beyond. We disembark, and friend Jarvis becomes our charioteer. I had heard that he had been converted during the past year and joined the hardshell Baptists, but a few minutes' conversation convinced me that he was a Christian, if at all, after the fashion of Jim Bludsoe. I don't think he has any inclination "to loaf about the throne." I think he would rather drive the stage for an indefinite period. From the mouth of the Umqua to Empire City is a journey worthy of the gods. The mighty ocean plays its eternal symphony at our feet.

Its million waves rush in melodious strife, and pile to the front and rear of our way as if they would carry us to the caverns of the sea. The wreck-strewn shore, the ghostly mounds of sand stretching away into bleak forests, the sunshine lying in strange gleams of gold on cloudy headlands, while evermore the sea, as if unconscious of the desolation it makes, sings its wondrous song, gleams with soft and tender hues, ripples and dances as if in fairy halls, or thunders and surges with gorgeous billows, seeming now a queen with jeweled breast and lovely smile, and anon a monstrous beast, roaring, and tearing with white teeth, as if it would devour the whole land and we were but a morsel in its gigantic throat; these bewildering, majestic, grotesque, and entrancing scenes—sea and land and sky in awful contrast and subtle harmony—touch and impel the “sea within” so that our own thoughts answer in equal rhythm to the tumult and glory without, and we seem a part of the elemental grandeur, and not the victim of its relentless force. While we are dreaming as if we could dream forever, like Brahma himself, the horses, mindless of everything except the “tramp, tramp, tramp,” keep right on, and, thanks to their sturdy toil, in the gray of the evening the twinkling lights of Empire City, over the bay, greet our view. Leaving the stage and taking again to boat—stemming the tide with the muscular stroke of our oarsman—we find the landing-place, and a cozy supper with mine landlord of the Arago. Before I had finished the meal I had the unexpected pleasure of a good handshake with Professor Seymour, who, for a month or more, has been doing a fine business with the heads and hearts of the people here—feeling of their heads, and touching their hearts to Liberal impulses. Manipulating the bumps of the orthodox cranium, he manages to impart the electric shock of a few new ideas, and so the field is better prepared for the radical worker.

On Friday, July 26, friend Hazard drives me over to Marshfield. Hazard is a royal worker and has done almost all that has been done at Empire City, for the cause. Only a few seem disposed to stay by the colors, and a still less number are willing to help pay the expenses. I think Empire City will eventually swing into line, but time and patience are necessary.

At Marshfield there is always a noble welcome. Friends are many here. The churches, however, are making strenuous efforts, and two new edifices are being built, Catholic and Episcopalian. I lectured on Friday and Saturday evenings to good audiences.

Sunday is a gala day. There is a picnic on North Coos river. The steamer Bertha is chartered for the occasion, and early on Sunday morning it is filled with a merry company of old and young with capacious baskets that promise a luxurious satisfaction to the wants of the hungry man. Away we speed up the broad bay to the river, and soon we are interlocked in the bosom of the hills and voyaging through sublime and beautiful prospects. The steep hills rise on either side, occasionally a handsome dwelling appears, and a well cultivated farm. One might imagine that we were passing through Arcadia, where life flows on in peace and beauty, “where storms do never come, nor billows roar.” The sun shines in mellow radiance, the clouds float like silver, the gentle winds fan the brow, the starry banner tosses from in front of the little steamer that goes puffing on its slow and devious way. From point to point our numbers increase. As the steamer is crowded, boatloads are taken in tow, and as we near the point of destination there is quite a gay flotilla in the rear, which makes a magnificent procession along the watery path. We were due at ten o’clock, but it was after twelve before we reached Piper’s grove, nearly two miles this side of our campground. The tide was low, and in order to avoid snags, the boat had to pick its way rather carefully. Finally it got aground, and we were obliged to take refuge in the small boats and row up stream. Off we started, wondering if we would ever “get there.” It seemed as if we were enroute for the Celestial City, so many difficulties presented themselves. As we went up the river, Jemmie Hutchinson, who was disporting rather carelessly on the prow, tumbled headlong into the water. For a moment there was a pretty lively scrimmage. He could swim like a fish, and the way he went for the shore was a most interesting spectacle. We held our breath until he was safe, and then as he leaped dripping to the land, we could not help being amused at the happy outcome of the incident. This served as a spicy interlude. Pretty soon we struck an immense raft of logs. There was no going around or over. The rest of the way was a walking-match through brush, through briar, crossing the stream on logs, etc. The greatest problem was how to convey the eatables. It being near one o’clock, there was a general desire for an early dinner, but it seemed a prodigious task to lug those big baskets half a mile or so. By skillful management one boat was pushed by the raft, and into this the provisions were packed, and we went on our way rejoicing. Our destination, The Forks, was reached, and our friends of the “upper country” were present to greet us, and the tables and seats were ready. They had been waiting ever since nine o’clock for the boat to come, but in this case it was impossible to go against the tide. It didn’t take long to spread the table with plenty. Cathcart had prepared a “thoroughbred” chicken for the occasion, and in memory of old times, I enjoyed a part of the ministerial bird. When the good things had been disposed of without a dissenting voice, I gave a lecture on “Universal Mental Liberty,” which occupied the time until the flooding of the tide. We must take our departure then, or not “go home till morning.” So at half past four we are all on the boats again, and the homeward journey begun down the shining river, while the setting sun pours its golden rays over bank and stream. The tide is with us now, and we speed without delay. Day and night were mingling in glorious beauty—star and sunset gleaming as we swept into the bay and moored at the Marshfield wharf. The festival was a most successful one. All were happy and tired, and had a good night’s sleep. When Monday came it seemed to be a good deal like Sunday itself, it was so quiet like.

On Monday evening the series of lectures closes with a full house, and I feel well satisfied with the outlook here. There is progress. The ideas of Liberalism are being understood and appreciated. It is seen that they are not destructive, but constructive, and for elevation and enlightenment. I hope to see a Freethought Hall here. Marshfield is a pretty place, and the climate now is delightful, cool and refreshing. We can look forth upon the bay and sea, and encircling hills, forest-crowned, and the views are varied and attractive. Coos county has many resources. It has coal and timber in vast quantities. It has a fruitful soil along the streams and in the valleys. It is somewhat isolated, being sixty miles from the railroad. However, by steamer, it is only thirty-six hours’ ride to San Francisco. The harbor is a good one—the best on the upper coast, next to San Francisco and the Sound. It is expected that a railroad will be built from Roseburg to Marshfield. The Coast Range is rugged, and it will require skillful engineering to put the railroad through, but undoubtedly it will be done, and this county will become one of the most flourishing in the state. Empire City and Marshfield would make fine summer resorts. The heat is moderated by the sea breezes, and one does not suffer, while in the interior the thermometer is up to a hundred. There are many tourists sojourning at present. There are interesting geological records. I visited the wonderful collection of Mr. B. H. Cammann, at Empire City. He has spent years in accumulating these treasures of the land and deep—leaves, strange and beautiful, from the unmeasured years. Petrified trees and animals, agates, crystallizations, mosses of infinite variety and exquisite form and color, shells and stones colored as if by some master artist; all these have been gathered in the county and show that it is a marvelous storehouse of the relics of time.

My friend, Mr. F. Marks, has built a new business block, with a handsome town clock. He intends to finish the upper story into a hall and reading room which shall be for science and Freethought. This will be of great benefit to the community, and will help make potent its Liberal forces. I am enjoying the hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Garfield, who always welcome with generous spirit, and give courage to the toiler.

I forgot to make arrangements for the moonlight as I promised, but notwithstanding the darkness Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Hilborn and Mr. and Mrs. A. Worth came over the bay to the meetings. These Liberals will keep the flag flying in all sorts of weather.

Our North Coos River friends did nobly in the campaign, and I enjoyed meeting these generous allies; and my thanks are due them for their successful co-operation, to W. W. Glenn, Mr. and Mrs. S. B. Cathcart, John Bazzel, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. VanCamp, Robert Haskell, John Chambers, Mrs. Rook, J. R. Bunch, C. Landreth, W. D. L. F. Smith, and others. Freethought will flourish in these mighty solitudes and span the glittering forks of the Coos, so long as this splendid company are ready to "blaze the wilderness."

Mrs. S. M. Bates, Mrs. Mary McLeod, Mrs. F. Marks, Miss Blanche Bates, Mrs. E. W. Sprague, and others, are among the Liberal women of Marshfield who have the courage of their convictions and give the grace of art to intellectual toil, and see in truth the "fair humanities of a nobler world."

Judge Garrison, chairman of the meetings at Marshfield; Wm. Hall, who presided at our camp-meeting on the Coos river; Judge W. H. S. Hyde, W. G. Webster, H. Evans, S. J. Steckel, R. M. Hutchinson, D. M. Hutchinson, A. Hutchinson, and Jimmie, who can not only swim Jordan or any other stream, but talk Freethought; E. W. Sprague, Wm. Hunter, J. M. Arrington, the Rasmussen Bros., the Jacksons, Capt. M. Roberts, John Wilson, Wm. Gilmore, E. W. Guptel, G. J. Earl, S. Archer, and many others, are of the Freethought host in this vicinity, and they make our labors a pleasure indeed, with their goodwill and generous appreciation of all that is done. I have had an experience which enriches both thought and hope; and the sunshine, falling on the radiant hills and far shining sea and growing city, bears within its bosom the promise of world-wide progress; and the heart of humanity, like the mighty ocean itself, gives the glow and splendor of the bright and boundless day to come. SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

Marshfield, July 30, 1889.

"THERE are two personages," says the Rev. N. F. Ravlin, "who are accused of many things of which they are innocent. These two are God and the devil."

BOUND volumes of FREETHOUGHT for 1888 may be had for $2.50.

THE GLORY OF A FREE SUNDAY.

It is stated that the Rev. Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, field secretary of the American Sunday Association, being desirous of obtaining "a world-wide view of Sabbath observance," corresponded with more than two hundred persons residing in nearly every nation of the world, and asked this question:

"Where have you seen the best Sabbath observance?"

A San Francisco pastor answered:

"Among the Christian people of California."

When it is remembered that California stands almost alone among the states of this Union in having no Sunday law, such a statement as that of the San Francisco pastor is very significant. It shows that California Christians have at least the merit of sincerity, and it shows also that people who believe in Sunday observance will practice it as faithfully where there is no law compelling them to do so as where such a law exists, and even more faithfully according to the testimony quoted.

We are quite unable, therefore, to understand why the Christians of the state should desire a Sunday law. The Freethinkers certainly do not. It would be inoperative except for the purposes of persecution in special cases. Sincere religious people would not be affected by it, while the great mass of citizens who now spend the day in ordinary worldly pursuits would be converted into law-breakers. Nothing is more gratifying in its results than a free Sunday, such as that of California, where we see the devout voluntarily performing what they regard as their religious duties, while those who do not share the belief of their pious fellow-citizens spend the day as suits them best. There is no restraint above ordinary days upon either the devotee of religion or the devotee of pleasure; and each has the same protection under the law. This is practical religious freedom, and anything else would be ecclesiastical despotism.

GIRARD'S UNFAITHFUL EXECUTORS.

The daily papers during the past week have printed the information that the French heirs of Stephen Girard are about to bring suit in Philadelphia to recover property now valued at $13,000,000, which is held partly in trust by the city of Philadelphia and Mrs. Eugenia Girard, and partly by the state of Louisiana. The ground on which the suit is based is the alleged infraction of the terms of Girard's will. The most important provision of the will was that all the revenues accumulating in the hands of the municipal corporation of Philadelphia were to be applied to certain works of embellishment, charity, and police organization. Fifty-eight years have elapsed since Girard's death, and apart from a college which was established only seventeen years after his death, the city of Philadelphia has done nothing to carry out the intentions of the testator. There are about $2,000,000 of unemployed revenues accumulated. The parties to bring the suit are Miss Henrietta Girard, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Devars du Maine, of Paris. The former is the niece and the latter the grand-niece of Stephen Girard. They are both poor. The suit against Louisiana will be to recover two hundred and eight thousand acres.

From the perusal of Girard's will, which is published in Dr. Westbrook's work on "Girard's Will and Girard College Theology," we do not gather that the testator's French heirs stand a very good chance to get the property. The clause of the will relating to "embellishment, charity, and police organization" provides that if the city of Philadelphia fail to use the bequest as prescribed the money passes to the state of Pennsylvania; and if the state fail to apply the bequest to the purpose mentioned, the "said remainder and accumulations" go to the United States of America "for the purposes of internal navigation, and no other." Girard, apparently, designed that the money which he accumulated in this country should stay here, so that Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and the United States, stand between the trustees and the French heirs as conditional legatees. It is a great pity that the men whom Girard entrusted with the care of his immense wealth could not have had the honesty to dispose of it according to his last will and testament. Their unfaithfulness is particularly prominent in the way they have administered his estate as regards the college which he founded. He desired that the teachings in that college should inculcate the purest principles of morality with no admixture of religion, and the trustees have allowed a chapel to be built upon the grounds, and religious teaching has become a part of the curriculum. The trustees should be called to account, and that with the greatest possible dispatch.

THE AMERICAN SECULAR UNION.

OFFICIAL CALL FOR THE THIRTEENTH ANNUAL CONGRESS.

The next annual Congress of the American Secular Union will be held in Philadelphia, on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday, October 25, 26, and 27, 1889. It is deemed expedient to hold this meeting where our society was organized in 1876, and where the so-called "National Reform Association" has its headquarters, and has recently held an important convention, and for many historic and other reasons.

The general object of our Association not being well understood, it is therefore often misrepresented. It is deemed proper to here make a brief statement of its leading principles. While our federal and state constitutions are formed on the assumption of the total separation of church and state, yet both the general and state governments maintain numerous practical connections of the state with the church. Moreover, a large, wealthy, and influential organization exists, having for its avowed object the amendment of our federal and state constitutions, so as to recognize and enforce by law certain forms of religious belief and observances, and certain acts of legislation have actually been proposed and discussed in the United States Senate for virtually establishing a form of sectarian religion, especially in our public schools.

Against these innovations and perversions we are organized to protest, and to this end we advocate the equitable taxation of church property; the total discontinuance of religious instruction and worship in the public schools; the repeal of all laws enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath; the cessation of all appropriations of the public funds for religious institutions; the abolition of state-paid chaplaincies; the substitution of simple affirmation, under the pains and penalties of perjury, for the judicial oath; the non-appointment of religious fasts, festivals, and holidays by public authority; the practical establishment of simple morality and intelligence as the basis of purely Secular government, and the adequate guarantee of public order, prosperity, and righteousness; and whatever other measures may be necessary to the total separation of church and state.

To this Congress we cordially invite all true patriots, without regard to their individual religious belief or disbelief, who are willing to work for the maintenance of the Secular principle in our civil government, and to oppose the machinations of sacerdotalists, whether Catholic or Protestant, in their schemes to gain ecclesiastical supremacy, and destroy the mental and moral liberty of the free citizens of this most successful of all Secular civil governments, in ancient or modern times.

All charter and life members, all vice-presidents, all chairmen of state executive committees, and all duly accredited delegates from local Secular societies are entitled to seats and votes in this Congress. Each local society is entitled to send its president, secretary, and three other delegates. Annual members by payment of one dollar are entitled to seats.

Particulars as to the place of meeting, speakers, and their subjects, etc., will be announced hereafter.

R. B. WESTBROOK, President,

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary, E. B. FOOTE, JR., Ch. Ex. Com.

M. A. FREEMAN, Ch. Fin. Com. OTTO WETTSTEIN, Treas.

FAITH AND REPENTANCE.

A clergyman of Boulder, Col., who, through the kindness of a friend, has taken FREETHOUGHT for six months, writes us to discontinue—not because he does not like the paper, but for the reasons that he cannot afford to pay for it, cannot trespass on generosity, and does not like to run in debt. The clergyman, whose name is Campbell, continues:

"In my judgment, the two greatest sins now in vogue are debt and intemperance. I have read each number of your paper carefully including the ads., and while I cannot say that I have received any permanent benefit from it, I think it has done me no harm. It so happens that yours truly believes in God, heaven, and eternal life, and that the only way to get there is by that repentance and faith which Christ preached at Mark i, 14-15. I have never been on your coast, but I have read that yours is a wonderful state. Now, if you Californians have discovered a Yerba Buena, Vinegar Bitters, or other specific that will cure debt, intemperance, and the miseries of mankind, quicker and surer than the repentance and faith aforesaid, by all means trot it out. I know lots of folks that are suffering for it, and if Freethought is that yerb, then the Lord and all good people will bless the names of Putnam & Macdonald for spreading it. See?"

We can agree with our clerical correspondent to the extent of admitting that debt and intemperance are among the greatest evils now in vogue, but there is no ecclesiastical authority for calling them the greatest of sins. The seven deadly sins enumerated by the church do not include either of them. We know of but one honest way of curing a debt, namely, to pay it. We can assure Mr. Campbell that a debt which is paid will never cause him inconvenience provided he holds a receipt. The method to which he refers as laid down in Mark i, 15, "repent and believe the gospel," will not work. The repentance may be genuine and the belief sincere, but it will not buy land. As Ingersoll remarked, "If I owe Smith ten dollars, and God forgives me, that does not pay Smith." If faith and repentance would discharge debt, the Rev. Mr. Campbell should have felt no compunctions of conscience about accepting this paper on trust, as he undoubtedly exercises both these so-called virtues.

Neither will repentance and faith materially mitigate intemperance. Every toper repents while sobering off, and even the devils believe. True temperance consists in stopping when you get enough. Temperate habits must be founded on a robust self-respect, and a knowledge of the pathological effects of physical and mental intoxication. Freethought teaches the virtues of discharging obligations and maintaining sobriety in all the departments of life. It is indeed the Yerba Buena, the panacea, and the summum bonum. The "Lord and all good people" will please send their blessing by return mail.

WE have received notice of the death at Howard, Kan., of N. A. Buckingham, a Freethinker. Mr. Buckingham was forty-six years of age, a native of Essex, Conn. Previous to his death he requested that there should be no religious ceremonies at his funeral, and those who shared his unbelief saw that his wishes were respected.

IN consequence of threatened outrages to the Bruno statue, Adriano Lemmi, Grand Master of the Italian Freemasons, has ordered private detectives to watch in the Campo dei Fiori both day and night. This, says the London Freethinker, will be an occasion of crowing to the rival city of Naples, where there has been a statue of Bruno since 1865.

THE papers report that Mr. Henry Welger, who was last week placed in an asylum, is a Spiritualist, who deludes himself with the belief that the Almighty will transport him to a star. The report is probably an error. Mr. Welger is undoubtedly a Theosophist, and places too literal an interpretation on the Theosophical formula, "Sic itur ad astra"—"such is the way to the stars."

IN spite of the burning of Seattle through divine negligence the delegates at the Olympia Convention began the preamble of their new constitution with the words, "Grateful to the Supreme Ruler of the Universe." This acknowledgment was put on record July 31, and August 4 Spokane Falls, one of the finest cities in the territory, went up in flames. Some of the members of the convention argued that Providence would not appreciate the compliment which the others were trying to pay him, and now it looks as if they were right.

THERE is a suggestive remark in President Beal's report of Secular work in Oregon. He says: "If every Liberal would induce every other Liberal to take FREETHOUGHT, what a large amount of labor it would save in making up our convention." Every worker can appreciate the value of that suggestion, for it is well known that about the only Liberals who can be depended upon for co-operation are those who take a Freethought paper. It is the first step in Secular propaganda. A paper coming weekly keeps the reader informed of the progress made, and sustains interest in the work. We cordially invite the Liberals of Oregon to send in their names as subscribers to FREETHOUGHT.

A NEW YORK Spiritualist paper, the Celestial City, reflects upon the Summerland tract at Santa Barbara as follows:

"Far out on the Pacific Slope, hemmed in between a homely range of rugged, knotty, infertile mountains on the one hand, and on the other a dreary expanse of endless sea that has not even the activity of a surf, there lies a miserable, barren waste. Four consecutive months of each year no rains fall upon this parched, far-off land, while the sun's bright rays beat down and dry to pulverous dust the burning soil. Here is wanted to be established the new colony of Summerland, the future home of the Spiritualists of the world. No native fresh water is found within the border lines of this would-be city of the future. All the fresh water it gets for the irrigation of this unfruitful land is forced there through pipes, from a distance of four miles; and year in and year out has this sluggish soil sung its melancholy soliloquy in unison with the listless waters of the calm Pacific. To this forlorn and forsaken ragged edge of the western world are the owners and propagators of Summerland trying, by the wholesale suppression of all information relative to its disadvantages, to induce the people to come, trying to inveigle the innocent and the uninformed into giving up comfortable homes in the fertile fields of the East, and taking up their abode in this wretched colony."

To preserve the amenities, Mr. Owen, of the Golden Gate, denounces the Celestial City as "an unmitigated fabricator of mis-statements," and adds: "We might be pardoned if we expressed ourselves in shorter words."

OBSERVATIONS.

It was not expected that there would be a large attendance at the last meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society, because Dr. O'Brock had been allowed to harass the previous gathering, and the demoralizing effects of his ministrations usually last two or three weeks. Nevertheless, such is the self-sacrificing spirit of the Liberals of the city that nearly every seat was filled. Professor Joran gave a lively piano solo, and the Misses Haelke a piano and zither duet.

Dr. Jerome A. Anderson was down for an address. As he did not appear at eight o'clock there was a temporary suspense, which Professor Miller relieved by consenting to discuss the subject of "Good and Evil." He was doing well, and had got as far as Ormuzd and Ahriman, the Persian representatives of beneficent and malevolent forces, when Dr. Anderson came in and took his place. Dr. Anderson's discourse consisted of four or five pages of typewritten matter, which he read in about fifteen minutes. He took the ground that good and evil were relative terms. The cure for evil was obedience to divine law, and the practice of altruism. He argued that life was made up mainly of evil, but that death would work a glorious change, after which something better might be expected.

The address did not suit the audience very well, as most of the members of the society are Materialists. But plenty of good music and a collection brought repose, and then Professor Miller presented the scientific aspect of the matter. He said that a future existence was beautiful to contemplate, and a belief in it would be consoling if there were any evidence to support it. Obedience to law might also be beneficial, but we must not be too dogmatic about what the law really is. The preaching of Altruism for two thousand years had not increased the world's confidence in it to the detriment of self-reliance and self-help. We are in the midst of conflicting forces. Life is a warfare, with only occasional cessations of struggle, when the mind becomes oblivious to the outward turmoil by indulgence in pleasing hopes and aspirations, or when the senses are soothed by music, the perfect adjustment of sound and rhythm, like that to which we had just listened. Professor Miller was heartily applauded, and after this things were lively enough.

Mr. Faust arose to announce that Mrs. Briggs desired to address the meeting. Mrs. Briggs took the floor and said she was pained to hear such utterances as those of Mr. Miller. If any one was ignorant of a future life it was his fault, as there were many places in the city where the fact in the case could be demonstrated. Mrs. Briggs kindly pardoned the audience for smiling at this assertion, and related some spiritual experience, wherein Mr. John S. Verity, deceased, had spoken through Mrs. Higgs, medium, and denied that he was dead until he had his attention called to it. Those present showed him that he was using the vocal organs of a woman, was clothed in female habiliments, and in other respects differed essentially from a male. The speaker added that Theodore Parker and D. M. Bennett had also spoken through the same medium, thus demonstrating the future state. Mrs. Briggs said that if the Infidels thought they could get along without the co-operation of the Spiritualists they were much mistaken.

Mr. Thomas Curtis testified that he had known Mr. Verity in this life, and accounted him a man of good sense, but if death had so affected his intellect that he didn't know whether he was living or dead, his last state was worse than the first. Mr. Curtis said that as for himself, if he found as many foolish people in the next world as there were in this he should feel like committing spiritual suicide.

Mr. Burgman said that he had been thinking of something to say previous to Mr. Curtis's remarks, but the latter gentleman had confused him so that he had nearly forgotten it. If he were a Materialist, and if he believed there was no hereafter, that this unhappy world was the only one we were destined to occupy, he would commit suicide at once and be done with it. He did not believe that there was a person in the audience who had not faith in an after life, notwithstanding their seeming indorsement of the previous speaker. They were merely psychologized by his eloquence, not convinced by his argument. Such, indeed, was the maleficent influence of Mr. Curtis that Mr. Burgman had seen people whom he knew to be Spiritualists applauding his diabolical utterances. "You Infidels," said Mr. Burgman, "deserve all the abuse you get. You are more ignorant and illiberal than the Christians, and you don't want to be enlightened," or words to that effect.

Dr. Anderson, in replying to his critics, regretted that he was not an extemporary speaker, but he would do his best. His regret proved to be unfounded, for his closing remarks were much livelier than his opening address. It pained him, he said, to see the question of a future life held up to ridicule, and it astonished him to hear such ridicule applauded by the members of the Freethought Society, who thereby merely showed their ignorance.

Mr. Curtis got in the last word by saying that he ridiculed only that which was ridiculous. If what he had said was open to the same criticism, he hoped to be ridiculed himself.

Then the meeting was adjourned, but the discussion continued. Various members of the society expressed their opinion about the policy of discussing questions like Spiritualism, which were alien to the objects of Secularism. Mr. Lemme said it ought to be stopped. A promising Freethought organization in Los Angeles a few years ago was killed by just this sort of discussion and dissension. Mr. Beaumont said that the Spiritualists not only wearied him, but made him suffer. Mr. Schou said that the lecture did not amount to anything, but the collection was good. Mr. Eastman desired to know who selected the lecturers and who was responsible for introducing the present one. Mr. Furgason handed down the opinion, Mr. Pingree coinciding, that according to the declarations of the speaker there was no affiliation between Freethought and Theosophy. It is apparent that if the man who makes up the monthly programme puts any more Spiritualists on the list his resignation will be called for in no uncertain tones.

The next meeting will be addressed by R. Guy McClellan, whose subject is the "American House of Lords," having reference to the United States Senate.

A SIMPLE SAMPLE COPY.

I know a hardy mining man, who works with pan and pick
In the wilds of Yuba county, where the gold is rather thick.
Sometimes he finds the yield is good, and sometimes pretty slim,
But on a day when he was flush his pard presented him
With a number of this journal, and 'tis thus begins a tale
Of a simple sample copy that was sent out through the mail.

He liked the sentiments thereof, and pocketed the same,
And called upon the writer when he next to 'Frisco came.
He'd sold his dust for legal coin, in twenty-pieces bright,
And wishing to improve his mind, bought everything in sight.
It was a most surprising thing to make so large a sale
From a simple sample copy that was sent out through the mail.

When he'd purchased all he wanted of the books that were the best,
He bought a Freethought Badgepin for to decorate his vest.
He selected several dollars' worth, if all the truth were told,
And paid for everything he got in California gold.
There was never such a harvest, gathered from a miner's haul,
By a simple sample copy that was sent out through the mail.

Then he told me many stories of the mountain, mine, and wood,
Of early California days when times were always good,
But he quite forgot to leave his name or take his books away,
And I haven't seen the gentleman since that auspicious day
When he made so big a purchase, and I made so big a sale,
From a simple sample copy that was sent out through the mail.

There are many brilliant geniuses who set the world aflame,
And lucky dogs who make a stake at some ungodly game,
But good results are often reached by ordinary sense,
And valuable lessons taught at nominal expense.
So lively business may ensue, when other methods fail,
From a simple sample copy that is sent out through the mail.

There is a quite remarkable book published in this city under the name of the "Code of 1650," being some of the laws and regulations adopted by the people of Connecticut two hundred and forty years ago. I quoted briefly from the laws last week. They are enough to make the modern New England man ashamed of his predecessors, but if he had witnessed the judicial procedure of those days he would probably have been fined for contempt of court. A case tried May 1, 1660, was especially absurd. The record runs as below, to wit, in the following manner: "That Jacob Murline and Sarah Tuttle, being called, appeared, concerning whom the Governor declared, that the business for which they were warned to this court he had heard in private at his house, which he related to stand thus:

"On the day that John Potter was married, Sarah Tuttle went to Mistress Murline's house for some thredd; Mistress Murline bid her go to her daughters in another room, where they fell into speech of John Potter and his wife, that they were both lame, upon which Sarah Tuttle said"—well, Sarah made a remark which the case suggested. "Whereupon," continues the record, "Jacob came in, and took up or took away her gloves. Sarah desired him to give her the gloves, to which he answered he would do so if she would give him a kysse, upon which they sat down together, his arme being about her waiste, and her arme upon his shoulder or about his necke, and he kyssed her and she kyssed him, or they kyssed one another, continuing in this posture about half an hour, as Marian and Susan testified, which Marian, now in court, affirmed to be so."

The governor of Connecticut thought that sort of business ought to be stopped, and he therefore brought the parties into court. Mistress Murline testified that she had heard Sarah Tuttle's demoralizing remark, "but it was a matter of sorrow and shame to her," though she managed to repeat it without fainting. Her son Jacob, the offending youth, "was asked what he had to say to these things, to which hee answered that hee was in the other room, and when hee heard Sarah speak those words, hee went in, when shee having let fall her gloves, hee took them up and shee asked him for them, hee told her hee would if shee would kysse him. Further hee took her by the hands, and they bothe sat down upon a chest, but whether his arme were about her waiste, and her arme upon his shoulder or about his necke he knows not, for he never thought of it since, till Mr. Raymond told him of it at Mannatos for which he was blamed and tolde he had not laide it to heart as he ought.

"But Sarah Tuttle replied that shee did not kysse him. Mr. Tuttle replied that Marian hath denied it, and he doth not looke upon her as a competent witness. Thomas Tuttle said that he asked Marian if his sister kyssed Jacob and she said not. Moses Mansfield testified that he told Jacob Murline that he heard Sarah kyssed him, but he denied it. But Jacob graunted not what Moses testified."

The testimony all seemed to be in Sarah's favor so far, and her father accused Jacob of trying to steal away his daughter's affections. "But," says the report, "Sarah being asked if Jacob had inveigled her, she said no. Thomas Tuttle said that he came to their house two or three times before he went to Holland, and they two were together, and to what end he came he knows not, unless it were to inveigle her. And their mother warned Sarah not to keep company with him. And to the same purpose spake Jonathan Tuttle. But Jacob denied that he came to their house with any such intendment, nor did it appear so to the court."

Here the case rested and the governor took it upon himself to lecture all parties concerned. He "told Sarah that her miscarriage is the greatest, that a virgin should be so bold in the presence of others to carry it as she had done, and to speake suche corrupt words, most of the things charged against her being acknowledged by herself, though that about kyssing is denied, yet the thing is proved." Thereupon Sarah "professed that she was sorry that she had carried it so sinfully and foolishly, which she saw to be hateful. She hoped GOD would help her to carry it better for time to come."

Then the governor took the others in hand. He told Jacob that his carriage "hath been very evil and sinful so to carry it towards her; and to make such light matter of it as not to think of it (as he exprest) doth greatly aggravate. And for Marian, who was a married woman, to suffer her brother and a man's daughter to sit almost half an hour in such a way as they have related was a very great evil." Mrs. Murline was told that she should not have suffered such scandalous proceedings in her house.

"Whereupon," in conclusion, "the court declared that we have heard in the Publique Ministry that it is a thing to be lamented that young people should have their meetings to the corrupting of themselves and one another. As for Sarah Tuttle, her miscarriages are very great, that she should utter so corrupt a speech as she did concerning the persons to be married, and that she should carry it in such a wanton, uncivil, immodest, and lascivious manner as hath been proved. And for Jacob his carriage hath been very corrupt and sinful, such as brings reproach upon the family and place. The sentence therefore concerning them is, that they shall pay either of them as a fine 20s to the treasurer."

In this manner was the law vindicated, and morality received a lift from which it has never recovered.

I have received the following assurance of the ultimate damnation of myself and Mr. Putnam, which I acknowledge with thanks:

BOWLING GREEN, KY., July 24, 1889.

GEORGE E. MACDONALD & SAMUEL P. PUTNAM: Before I retire for the night I must express my wounded feelings by way of writing concerning the FREETHOUGHT publication. Diabolic is the subject. When God cursed the serpent he drove the man who identified himself with the subtlety of the serpent to deceive the woman to partake of the fruit of the tree God told Adam by eating thereof he should die. But he was obstinate and wilful and stiff-necked and hard-headed, and used the trait of the serpent and beguiled the innocent woman to partake of it; and he ate of it and then cast the blame on the woman whom God had given him. Now, God not only pitied the women, but did comfort her by telling her that her seed should bruise the stubborn head of her adversary, and his seed should bruise her heel; and that they did when they glorified in crucifying Jesus to death. But Jesus had received power over earth and heaven, over death and hell, and none but Jesus has the power to enter where God abides; there is no other name given but the name of Jesus to save penitent sinners. God says, "He that believeth shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be Damned."

Now, Mr. Putnam, you declare you are opposed to God and his son, our savior. You are laboring to overthrow God's cause. You are searching for imperfections to make the truth appear contemptible. Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved. Except a man is born again he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. Without holiness no man shall see the Lord. If a man disregards God in his heart and thought, God will give him over to a reprobate mind—to do, what?—to do just as free lovers and free thinkers do! They live like the brute that hath no understanding. But God made man capable of performing all what he required of him in his word, and therefore man is accountable for his disobedience, and thereby deprived himself and all his posterity of the divine knowledge and influence of the divine character; hence God drove the rebellious man from his presence, abandoned and depraved, and unless he repents he cannot be saved and in favor with God.

Mr. Putnam, unless you turn from your Infidelity and seek Jesus by a true and living faith, to take all the obstacles which lay between you and your maker, you will never obtain the hope of gaining the new heaven and the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness—where Jesus will reign victorious over every rival.

Macdonald, is it your choice to occupy your mind and your time on a subject to make your Damnation sure?

RACHEL BRUSH.

So far as I am personally concerned, damnation is not particularly terrifying, even when written with a large D. I have been damned so many times since I began cavorting in the field of literature that the point of the imprecation now glances off instead of puncturing my epidermis. I have always enjoyed the pleasure of damning back again, and I hope for that happiness beyond this life.

M.

"JOHN WARD, PREACHER," has been issued in paper covers and can now be furnished for 50 cents.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK.

The entire business portion of Spokane Falls, W. T., including nearly forty blocks, was destroyed by fire last Sunday night. The fire started at six p. m., and the firemen were unable to check it in the least. The loss may reach $10,000,000.—Three boys fishing from a rock below San Pedro point last Sunday were overwhelmed by a large wave, carried out to sea, and drowned.—Robert Tobin, colonel of the Third Infantry Regiment and attorney of the Hibernia Bank, was found dead in his bed on the morning of August 3. He is supposed to have had an attack of rheumatism of the heart.—The British schooner Black Diamond was seized by the U. S. revenue cutter Bush, July 11, for sealing in the Behring sea, and her skins confiscated. She was ordered to Sitka, but escaped and at last accounts was in port at Victoria, B. C.—William Ross, clerk in the Nevada Bank, ran away last week with more than one hundred thousand dollars in cash and notes. He was captured in British Columbia.—An amusing canard in the form of a letter from Mayor Wheelwright of Tacoma to the mayor of Boston, calling for women emigrants to Washington Territory, is said to have caused a flutter among Massachusetts spinsters. Mayor Wheelwright did not write the letter.—A fire started in the parsonage at Greenville, Plumas county, last week, burnt up a Methodist church and several other buildings.

The U. S. cruiser Boston ran on a rock in Narragansett Bay on the 3d and narrowly escaped sinking.—Robbers boarded a train near Kansas City, Mo., last Saturday and "held up" the passengers in a sleeping car, and robbed them of $175 in cash and two gold watches.—The pugilist Sullivan has been taken to the South to stand trial for prize-fighting.—Only six arrests were made in Cincinnati last Sunday for violation of the Sunday law.—Dr. Brown-Sequard, an eminent medical authority, professes to have discovered a method of rejuvenating old people. It is the juice of freshly killed mutton used as a hypodermic injection. Experiment shows that it is a very effective stimulant, but the medical men do not believe that it is the elixir of life.—Losses by the recent heavy rains in New York, Connecticut, and New Jersey reach nearly half a million dollars.—The Rev. Mr. Melby has eloped from Mankatee, Minn., with a young woman. He leaves a wife and children behind.

The emperor of Germany is visiting England.—Felix Pyatt, the French Anarchist deputy, died Aug. 4. He was 79 years old.—Fifteen hundred men were slain in a battle between the Egyptian troops, under English command, and the rebel dervishes Aug. 3. The dervishes were defeated.—Reports of persecution of Christians by the Mohammedans come from Albania in European Turkey.—England will send two expeditions of astronomers, one to Cayenne and one to the west coast of Africa, to view the total eclipse next December.

George Chainey as a Martyr.

Giving an account of his mental journeyings, Chainey says:

I lost my faith in humanity and became a pessimist, and resolved to give up all attempts at world betterment. Just at this time I was plunged, most unexpectedly to myself, into a series of occult experiences, that demonstrated to every sense the reality of the invisible world and of the spiritual life. I faced my old friends at their convention with a straightforward account of what I had found, but received in return mostly abuse. Stung at last by the ingratitude of some of it coming from those to whom I had been of great service, I struck back, giving blow for blow, and so widened the breach between us.

As a matter of fact, this "account," given at Cassadaga, was itself poisoned through and through with the most untrue statements concerning and the bitterest abuse of his late associates. The "ingratitude" was George Chainey's; the initiative in "abuse" was strongly taken by that gentleman himself, and the return "blow for blow" came, not from Mr. Chainey, but from those he had maligned. His right to follow his intellectual lights wherever they led him—his right to pass from the ranks of the Materialists into those of the Spiritualists—was and is unquestioned, but when he signalized his change of base by violent denunciation of those he left he put himself in the line of fire of the batteries of criticism, and his present posing as a martyr is a most ludicrous piece of anti-climax, to call it by a very mild name.—Fair Play, Valley Falls, Kan.

WASHINGTON AS A SLAVEHOLDER.

The Rev. Philip Schaff, D.D., LL.D., in an article on George Washington, written in May last, says of his subject: "He made no mistakes; there are no black spots on his reputation." In the same article Dr. Schaff attacked the character and motives of Thomas Paine, and inquired, "Where is Tom Paine now?"

In FREETHOUGHT of June 1, 1889, was published a letter written by Washington to Capt. Job Thompson, evidently a slave-trader, passing over to him a negro named Tom to be bartered off at "the islands" for various commodities, mostly rum. Dr. Schaff does not seem to regard that kind of commerce as a "mistake" or as a "spot" on Washington's reputation. In the appended letter by Daniel O'Connell, the Irish patriot, a different view of the matter is expressed. Considered as an attack upon Washington, it is as severe as anything ever written by Thomas Paine.

SAN JOSE, July 23, 1889.

To the Editors of Freethought:

I have before me a copy of the Clarksville Gazette, No. 25, volume 2, published at Clarksville, Tennessee, November 28, 1829. It is the property of Lyddall Bacon, an esteemed resident of this city, who has preserved it all these many years as a memento which marks the date of his birth. Thinking that you might wish to place it before the readers of FREETHOUGHT, I have copied from its columns the following interesting letter which was addressed to Daniel O'Connell, to the Cork Mercantile Chronicle:

L. R. TITUS.

DERRYNANE ABBEY, September 13, 1829.—SIR: I read in your paper of the 7th an attack upon me by an American citizen, for having taunted the memory of Washington with the fact that he was a slave-owner all his life, and only emancipated his own slaves by his will. Thus having had the use of slavery all his life, and paying this sole compliment to human liberty, that he condescended to allow its blessings to be enjoyed only when he could sustain no personal inconvenience from such enjoyment.

I acknowledge I threw this nettle on the grave of Washington, but I flung it with regret. It was extorted from me by the strong conviction I entertained that the vices of great men are doubly enormous—enormous, as they contradict the tenor of their lives, and enormous by the force of example and the species of palliation which they afford to vulgar criminals, whose vices are unredeemed by one single virtue.

But how has this unworthy citizen vindicated Washington? Why, he has not dared to deny the fact I stated, namely, that Washington had slaves all his life, and only emancipated them at his death. No, that would be too much even from an American slave-owner. But he has sought to diminish the crime of Washington by bringing a false charge against me, and by distorting the sentiments of others; and yet these miserable efforts to wash the only black spot in the character of Washington serve but to show the hopelessness of the effort, and to render the dark shade on his character more distinct.

He says Washington was educating his slaves into a fitness for freedom. He says this gratuitously. But what! Was Washington then so unlucky as not to have succeeded in finishing the education of his slaves until just the day of his own death? Had the slaves a kind of lease for a life of inaptitude for freedom, and was that life precisely like that of Washington? What a precious absurdity! No; every good and every generous man should with me regret this one fault of Washington; but he should admit that it was a deep, though I hope not a damning, spot on his otherwise stainless purity and simple majesty of character.

Washington was one of the greatest men the world ever produced. His patriotism was pure and disinterested. His love of the independence of his native land chaste and correct. He sought for constitutional liberty, not by turbulence and crime, but by adhering to the letter of the law, and to the spirit of the British constitution. Yet when the refusal of the advisers of the crown to listen to peaceful and conciliatory counsels drove him to the field, he made the boastful British rulers rue their stupid obstinacy; he won the laurels of liberty from the invaders of his native land, and he was the principal instrument in converting the land of his birth—oh, glorious destiny!—from being a dependent province of Britain, into an independent and a mighty nation.

It is—it is with unfeigned regret that I find one dark trait in his illustrious character. Nor should I have noticed it, but that my subject led to it, and that I deem it right to raise my humble voice to convince the haughty citizens of America that the slaveholding states are held in abomination by all those whose opinions ought to be valuable. Man is the property of man in about one-half of the American states; let them, therefore, not dare to prate of their institutions, or of their national freedom, whilst they hold their fellow-men in bondage. Of all men living, an American citizen, who is the owner of slaves, is the most despicable—he is a political hypocrite of the very worst description. The friends of humanity and liberty in Europe should join in one universal cry of shame on the American slave-holders. "Base wretches," should we shout out in chorus—"base wretches, how dare you profess love of national freedom, under the sacred fane of Republicanism, with the presence and sufferings of human beings, in chains and slavery?" We have no other mode of assisting our poor enslaved brothers in America, save by raising up the voice of public opinion in their favor, and to the eternal shame and infamy of their taskmasters.

Join with me, friends of freedom, friends of humanity, in consecrating to eternal infamy the owners of slaves in the republic of North America. Nothing can justify—nor whilst I live, shall the example of Washington palliate their crimes. But let us ever cherish the virtues of the illustrious Bolivar, the greatest, in my opinion, and the purest of patriots, who began his career of liberty by giving freedom to seven hundred slaves which were his own property. Blush, virtuous Americans, at this contrast with your great and glorious Washington, who, I repeat it, had slaves all his life, and only emancipated them as against his heirs. I am, sir, your obedient servant,

DANIEL O'CONNELL.

CALL FOR THE OREGON CONVENTION.

By virtue of the authority vested in us by the Oregon State Secular Union, we hereby call the FIRST ANNUAL CONVENTION of said Union to meet in Portland, Oregon, at Masonic Hall, on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, the 12th, 13th, and 14th days of October, 1889; the object being to secure the total separation of church and state.

The advocates of this measure in Washington Territory are invited to join their Oregon friends in this Convention.

Done at Portland, Oregon, this thirty-first day of July, 1889.

C. BEAL,	} Board of Directors.
J. K. SEARS,
A. F. NEUNERT,
LEE LAUGHLIN,
L. AMES,

SECULAR WORK IN OREGON.

Dear Freethought:

If every Liberal would induce every other Liberal to take FREETHOUGHT, what a large amount of labor it would save in making up our Convention! But the work shall be done and the subscribers shall be had—in Oregon, I mean.

J. Henry Schroeder, of Arago, Coos Co., is the first vice-president to respond. He will be at the Convention, and tenders his services freely.

G. W. Tiffany, of Salem, is the second vice-president heard from. He pledges thirty-five dollars, and will raise more when he returns from the seaside. He says: "With regard to our Convention in October, I believe it will be a grand success. We must have a fund pledged at the Convention of not less than five thousand dollars, to draw from for future work."

To Henry Weinhard belongs the honor of becoming the first Life Member of the Oregon State Secular Union by the payment of five dollars. This man means business. Let the ninety and nine more now stand up and be counted.

Flegenstein & Meier contribute four dollars, and John B. Garrison sends in two fifty. These gentlemen have more if the work proves to be efficient and honorable. A. F. Neunert, our treasurer, collected all the money that has been paid in, and has forty dollars more pledged. We shall have a large number of most excellent speakers, and it has been suggested that they hold a meeting every night after the Convention until the close of the Industrial Fair.

Edward Post, the proprietor of that tiptop hotel, the Gilman House, pays four dollars toward the Convention and has more if we mean business.

Homer B. Holland, of Salem, says, "Hope the good God will stay right with you, and guide you to success in your endeavors to tax church property."

C. BEAL,
President Oregon State Secular Union.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

OLYMPIA, W. T., Aug. 4.—The Constitutional Convention of this territory consumes a good deal of time in useless discussion of rules and points of order. The judges have been taken care of, and placed, by legislation in the Constitution, as far as possible beyond the control of the people. On the other hand, in every other article of the Constitution so far reported, there have been limitations placed upon the legislature. The politicians are afraid of the people. The lawyers, who want to be judges, are equally afraid of the people.

The efforts of the representatives of the farmers and mechanics to obtain constitutional provisions for their protection are met by a strong protest from the lawyers that such provisions are legislative, and will drive capital out of the territory. It is a mooted question whether they will not prevent the people from protecting themselves from railroad combinations and from foreign trusts, which are now attempting to control all the leading manufacturing industries of the country.

It is well known that such men as Senator Stewart are largely interested in the development of the mines of the states and territories. People would naturally think that they would be the foremost in standing by the principle that the mines in America should belong to the Americans. As a matter of fact, the great proportion of the mines now belong to foreigners. All the profits in mining go to swell the coffers of foreign bankers, or to support the noble spendthrifts of other lands. The influence of such men is shown in the proposal in Montana to tax mines at the government price per acre. In some states and territories the owners of a mine can estimate its value at whatever nominal figure they please, and exchange it for the entire capital stock of a mining company as full paid stock. This stock is sold outright to foreigners. The legal area of the mine is about twenty acres: the government price, five dollars per acres. It is perhaps capitalized at five millions, and sold to foreigners at a good figure. Why should these men be allowed to drain the country of its wealth, and pay taxes on only a nominal sum?

The Convention has met the churches and surrendered. At first the preamble had no mention of God. The Convention, by a tie vote, refused to adopt it, and referred it back to the committee. The majority of the committee reported the original preamble; the minority reported the following: "We the people of Waghington, grateful to the Supreme Ruler of the universe, do ordain the following Constitution." This was adopted by the votes of men who make no profession of religion, but declare that they are profoundly impressed with a belief that there is a Supreme Ruler. Deed is better than creed. The people will judge them by the provisions of the Constitution. They will ask whether those men were honest, just, or governed by self-interest in forming the instrument? If the Constitution does not protect the equal rights of the people, women as well as men, all the professions of religion and reverence for a good God will be treated as a livery of heaven stolen to serve the devil in. The majority did not pretend that they ordained the Constitution to secure the blessings of liberty. They were consistent in this, for almost to a man, that majority favor the disfranchisement of woman, because they are opposed to extending suffrage. They believe in limiting it, and will do so as far as they can.

When the question of railroad subsidies was under consideration, it was argued long and loud that they who paid taxes alone had the right to vote subsidies, and this was provided for in the subsidy clause. J. Z. Moore, of Spokane Falls, opposed it on the ground that they had no right to take private property for private benefit, at all, much less from the women who had no vote.

These men believe with Judge Jamieson, of Chicago, "that in the present condition of mankind, in which, for the public good, the principle of exclusion must be exercised, there is no such thing as a right of suffrage. Suffrage is not a right at all, it is a duty, a trust enjoined upon or committed to some citizens, and not to others." That is, at the North, "for the common good," women are not allowed to vote, and ought not to be allowed to vote in this territory. "For the common good" the colored vote of the South is suppressed, and these men make no protest because they hope the white vote will divide upon the question of a protective tariff.

No doubt these Constitution-makers are grateful, not to God, but to the voters who elected them, that they are in power, and can disfranchise the adult women of this territory under the pretense that it is "for the common good."

This phrase gives a new significance in view of the provision in the preamble, that "the right of petition and of the people to assemble for the common good shall never be abridged." "If the common good justifies the disfranchisement of woman, and the Constitution limits suffrage to males, no citizen will have a right to petition for equal suffrage, nor to hold meetings in advocacy of that principle or of any other principle which the majority pretends tends to interfere with the established order of society. Herbert Spencer, Tyndall, Huxley, and Ingersoll, will have no right to advocate their progressive views, if the old fogies have the reins of government in their hands, in the new state of Washington.

The indications now are that the committee on elections will confine suffrage to male citizens. They may submit a separate amendment to the people, but with the hope that it will be voted down. They are not willing to grant to others the enjoyment of the same rights they claim for themselves.

The committee on taxation have been besieged by the clergy to exempt church property. It is probable that they will leave the question open so that the legislature can do this. Some propose that church property be exempt, and that the property of every citizen be exempt to the extent of $200. This would limit the number of voters, where tax-paying is a qualification for voting. The provision will be adopted, if at all, for the purpose of gilding the pill of church exemption, or to make it easier to limit suffrage on the basis of being a tax-payer.

The Constitution will be lengthy, and the people will have no time to examine it before the election. The only safe rule for the voters will be to vote no on its adoption. W. S. BUSH.

THE SUMMER AND FALL CAMPAIGN.

S. P. Putnam has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Coos county, Or.,	July 22 to Aug. 4,	Fox Valley.....Or.,	Sept. 9, 10,
Coburg.....	Aug.....7, 8,	Long Creek.....	" 11, 12,
Lebanon....	" ".....9,	Hamilton.....	" 14, 15,
Olympia...W.T.,	".....11, 12,	Monument.....	" 16, 17,
Buckley...W.T.,	".....13, 14,	Hay Stack.....	" 18,
Davenport, "	".....17, 18,	Lone Rock.....	" 19, 20,
Cheney....	".....19,	Fossil.....	" 21, 22,
Rosalia....	".....20,	Hillsboro, Or.,	Sept., 25, 26, 27, 28,
Sprague..	".....21,	North Yamhill...Or.,	Sept.....29,
Pasco.....	".....22,	Forest Grove....	".....30,
Dayton....W. T.,	Aug.....24, 25,	Talent, Or., and vicinity	Oct. 3, 4, 5,
Pomeroy..W. T.,	Aug.....26,		6, 7,
La Grande, Or....	Aug.....29,	Linkville.....Or.,	Oct. 11, 12, 13,
Union.....Or.	".....30,	Sacramento.....Cal.,	Oct. 20,
Baker City, Or.	Sept.....1,	San Francisco.....	" 27,
Crocker City, Or.,	".....2, 3,	Los Angeles and vicinity	the month
Prairie City, Or, and vicinity,	Sept.		of November,
	5, 6, 7,		San Diego and vicinity the month of December.

"Looking Backward," a socialistic romance which has been termed the "Uncle Tom's Cabin' of Industrial Slavery," by Edward Bellamy. Price, 50 cents.

DID JESUS CHRIST RISE FROM THE DEAD?*

VI.

Desperate has been the advocacy of the clerical advocates who hold the brief of, to them, a lucrative superstition. All that sophisticated ingenuity could do has been done to establish an imposture that pays upon the occurrence of an event that never occurred. Some, Bishop Butler included, have resorted to almost preternatural quibblings, which prove, if they prove anything, that Christ rose and did not rise; that he rose, but in a sense widely divorced from common sense, and so mysteriously subtle as to be incomprehensible to all except a well-paid ecclesiastical defending the incantations by which he carries on his well-remunerated impositions. Others, again, among whom is the Rev. Prebendary Row, presume upon the dense ignorance of ecclesiastical history which characterizes the ordinary "believer." "It is evident," writes the Rev. Prebendary Row, with infinite reliance upon laical ignorance, "that, as far as the fact of the resurrection is concerned, St. Paul and his bitterest opponents in the church must have been agreed as to its truth." (Historical Evidences of the Resurrection of Jesus Christ, p. 19.) The reverend gentleman will remember that (quite conformably with being a Christian either in the first century or the nineteenth) Paul and Barnabas, two devoted followers of the "Prince of Peace," had a genuine Christian quarrel. "And the contention was so sharp between them that they departed asunder, one from the other." (Acts xv. 39.) Now, this Barnabas was a bitter enough opponent of Paul, and he did not believe in the resurrection of Christ as the Rev. Prebendary Row alleges Paul's opponents did. In the gospel of the apostle Barnabas it is asserted that "Jesus Christ was not crucified, but that he was taken up into the third heaven by the ministry of four angels, Gabriel, Michael, Raphael, and Uriel; that he should not die till the very end of the world, and that it was Judas Iscariot who was crucified in his stead." Thus the Rev. Prebendary's contention that Paul's opponents agreed with him in his hallucination in regard to the resurrection, is flatly disproved. It is highly probable that it was on this very point that Paul and Barnabas disagreed, and about which their "contention was so sharp." Color is lent to this conjecture by the fact that Barnabas denied that Christ was ever crucified, and consequently he could not be resurrected, whereas Paul, as if to emphasize the negative of the teachings of Barnabas, preached "Jesus Christ and him crucified."

Again, with unbounded reliance upon the ignorance of those whom he addresses, the Rev. Prebendary Row writes: "Our evidence is simply overwhelming that the greatest of all miracles (the resurrection) was implicitly believed in by the entire church within less than twenty-eight years of the crucifixion." (Historical Evidences of the Resurrection of Jesus Christ, p. 22.) This is utterly untrue. Barnabas preached Jesus Christ not crucified, and therefore, not resurrected. And, from the inception of the Christian myth, the sect known as the Basilidians sided with Barnabas in denying that Christ was crucified. They alleged that Jesus escaped the cross, and that Simon of Cyrene was nailed to it in his stead. The Koran, it may be remarked, follows Barnabas rather than Paul as to the resurrection myth. Speaking of Jesus, it says: "The malice of his enemies aspersed his reputation and conspired against his life; but their intention only was guilty: a phantom or a criminal was substituted on the cross, and the innocent Jesus was translated into the seventh heaven." I quote from the Koran, by way of implication, that the non-resurrection contention had not by any means been abandoned at the date at which the Koran was written, although I am quite well aware that the divinity of Christ and his resurrection had previously been settled by the votes of a church council. Is the Rev. Prebendary Row not aware that Tertullian speaks of the heresy of the Docetæ existing as far back as the days of the apostles? The Docetæ teach that Jesus died only in appearance, that it was a semblance or apparition of him that expired on the cross. "While the apostles were yet on earth—nay, while the blood of Christ was still recent on Mount Calvary, the body of Christ was asserted to be a mere phantom."

(Coterius Patres Apostol., ii. 24.) Does the Rev. Prebendary Row not know that Dr. Hug, in his "Introduction to the New Testament," describes the Ebionites as "a numerous body of early Christians, who denied the miraculous conception of Christ, and, with the Nazarenes, looked upon him as an ordinary man? They also denied that he suffered on the cross, and asserted that he had flown away to heaven." Is the Rev. Prebendary Row not aware that Mosheim expressly contradicts him, and says that "the prevalent opinion among the early Christians was that Christ existed in appearance only, and not in reality, and that his body was a mere phantom?" (Eccles. Hist., vol. i. p. 136.) Cerinthus, a contemporary of the Apostle John, unfortunately for the contention of the Rev. Prebendary Row, taught that Christ did not rise from the dead, but that he would rise at some future period. (Vide Lardner's Cred. of Gos., vol. iv. p. 368.) The Nicolaitans, referred to by name in Rev. ii. 6, held a similar doctrine. (Vide Greg's Creed of Christendom, pp. 127, 128.) Of over ninety different heresies which sprang up during the first three Christian centuries, the majority, in the first century at least, says Greg, "related almost exclusively to the person and nature of Jesus Christ, on which points we have many indications that great difference of opinion existed, even during the apostolic period. The obnoxious doctrines especially pointed out in the (fourth) gospel appear to be those held by the Cerinthus and the Nicolaitans."

In spite of the Rev. Prebendary Row's assertion that the resurrection fable was "believed in by the entire church," only a mere fragment of that church believed in it. The Corinthians, the Docetæ, the Nicolaitans, the Nazarenes, the Ebionites, the Valentinians, the Markosians, the Cerdonians, the Marcionites, the Bardisanites, the Origenists, the Hierakites, and the Manichees, all denied that Christ rose from the dead. How unbounded is the Rev. Prebendary Row's reliance upon the credulous ignorance of his readers! I, a heretical writer, have to take the trouble to state facts: not being a clergyman of the church of Christ, those to whom I appeal will not take my mere ipse dixit, and I have, accordingly, to place my facts before them, and ask them whether they are weighty enough to support my utter and absolute denial of the statement of the Rev. Prebendary Row, that, in its early days, the story of the resurrection "was implicitly believed in by the entire Christian church."

The divinity of Christ, the humanity of Christ (for there were, from the very early times, those that denied the one and those that denied the other), and his resurrection from the dead, were subjects of acrimonious dispute down to the first half of the fourth century. The bitter controversies were first authoritatively pronounced upon at the Council of Nice, assembled by Constantine in A.D. 325. It was this Council that first gave any preponderating weight to the doctrine that Jesus rose from the dead. The matter was put to the vote, among men who lived more than 300 years after the event they were called to decide upon; and, on a show of hands, Christ was found to have risen from the dead. The votes of an ignorant and flagitious priesthood were cast in favor of the statement of Mary Magdalene! With the partisan and narrow instincts of a Protestant divine, the Rev. Prebendary Row takes no notice whatever of this Council of Nice, deeming, perchance, that because he is disingenuous enough not to mention it and the anti-resurrection heresy it involves, I shall be inadvertent enough to forget it.

So far I have condescended to batter to dust these arguments of straw produced by the learned prebendary. I do not for a moment contend that they are worth the unanswerable and merciless contradiction I have administered; but I have dealt with them that the reader may see for himself the kind of arguments which the most learned and able controversialists of which the church can boast are constrained to present when they find it their duty to defend a doctrine so desperate as that of Christ's resurrection from the dead.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

Judge Maguire's "Ireland and the Pope," a history of papal intrigues against Irish liberty. Price, 50 cents.

*By Saladin, editor of the Agnostic Journal.

HO! FOR PORTLAND.

The Oregonian hits the nail squarely on the head and clinches it on the other side. This great Portland daily, with its large circulation and extended influence, is fearless in its presentation of facts and its pleas for justice. There is hope for the West when her secular press publishes the following leading article. And this is only one of many:

WHAT BIBLE?

The Idaho convention on Tuesday discussed the section of the educational article forbidding the use of sectarian books. We are glad to note that the convention refused a passage to the following amendment:

"Provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to forbid the reading of the Bible in the public schools, nor to enjoin its use."

There was a good deal of demagogue talk in favor of this amendment. To acknowledge the influence of the moral teachings of the Bible is one thing, while to make its reading part of the religious exercises in the public schools is quite another thing. If the Bible is to be read, what bible? the Protestant version or the Catholic, or both? the Old Testament which the Jew accepts, or the New Testament which he rejects? Would Idaho teach her children hostility to Mormonism by reading the Old Testament—redolent of polygamy and concubinage—or the monogamic teachings of the New Testament? How could any state expect logically to refuse to support the Roman Catholic parochial schools if it includes among the religious exercises of the common schools the reading of the Bible, that, to the Catholic, is not simply the "foundation of all morality and truth," but is a sectarian book?

Mr. Poe, of Nez Perces, declared that all our laws are founded upon the Bible. Does Mr. Poe think that the divorce laws which rule in nine-tenths of the Union and in England are founded upon the Bible? Does he find the faintest trace of any hostility to polygamy expressed in the Old Testament, even in the Ten Commandments, on which we base our laws which make bigamy, polygamy, and concubinage crimes? Does Mr. Claggett really believe that the Bible is "the foundation of all morality and truth?" Does he really believe that the morality and truth, for which integrity, truthfulness, justice, mercy, temperance, humanity, forgiveness of injuries, self-sacrifice, and obedience to conscience stand, had no evangelists before Christ, or no evangelists after Christ that never had a chance to know Christ?

The Bible has more than once been used to fortify human slavery and all the immorality and inhumanity that it implies; it has been used as the pedestal of the cruel theocracy of puritan New England; it is used to-day to justify polygamy by the Mormon; it is used to justify the sentimental, destructive doctrine of Christian socialism preached by Victor Hugo. So far from being the foundation of all morality and truth, it is a mixture of truth and error, and its ethics are in many places so execrable that they are not only not practiced but are under the ban of both the law and church in all Christian countries. The Bible is no more "the foundation of all morality and truth" than Plato and Aristotle are the foundation of all morality and truth—whether spiritual or scientific. The evolution of all morality and truth did not begin with the Bible nor end with it, and to pretend that it did is as historically untrue as it would be to say that all we know of applied natural philosophy began and ended with Archimedes, or all speculative science began and ended with Aristotle.

With such a mighty educator of the people wielding its influence in favor of justice, truth, and mental liberty, it is indeed a wise decision to have a grand rally of Liberals of Oregon and Washington at Portland, to perfect our organization, that we may help on in the good work, so as to have just claim to share in the glorious triumph of Freethought so soon to be achieved.

Walla Walla, W. T.

F. C. REYNOLDS.

FEMALE SUPERIORITY.

So you have another hobby—female superiority. Be careful you do not ride yourself to death on it. Would not female equality be better? I am very willing that women shall be equal to men, but when it comes to wearing the breeches all the time, I must oppose it. You must let us men have a little rulership at least.

W.

I am not trying to rule men, but trying to show that woman—as the mother of all, as the last full evolution of life-forces on earth, and really the apex of creation, so far as we have yet learned—is really physically, morally, and lovingly, the superior of man.

I am not taking one iota from man, but leave to him, of necessity, every noble quality, every high aspiration, and every mental qualification he has or may yet obtain.

I would take nothing from him that is actually his. To wrest from a usurper what he holds wrongfully is no crime or robbery. The power he has assumed over woman because of her helplessness during pregnancy and motherhood, and which he has used to bind her in life-long chains of servitude, compelling her to look to him as lord and master, ruler and monarch, is what must and will be forever and henceforth taken from him.

Why, even the Indian woman enjoys far more of natural and inalienable rights than our boasted civilization gives us, though Christianity has deluded us into believing that under her reign woman has been elevated to a condition far superior to that she ever enjoyed under any other form of belief.

To Christianity woman owes it that she is where she now is—a tool of priestcraft and a slave of slaves to husband, father, brother, and son. Christianity has robbed her of her right to the grand sovereignty of motherhood—mistress of all, guide, leader, and true friend of all.

All through its terrible reign priestly power has shut from woman every avenue of light and life that it possibly could, leaving to her only the church and a mythical future as a panacea for all her temporal wrongs, and, to crown the tyranny, boasts that it has given her a liberty no other form of civilization (!) ever allowed her.

But woman herself is coming to the front as her own deliverer. Idolizing her church still, but idolizing truth even more, she is slowly but surely learning how she has been duped and swindled by priestcraft.

Coming for the first time in business relations with the women of other nations, she finds that under other systems of belief women have rights that Christian women are denied. Even the despised Indian woman is the real head of the home, and the child belongs to the clan of the mother, who keeps her own name when she marries. A wife's kindred have a right prior to that of her husband, and, should he mistreat her, have the power to take her from him. She has power to select her own husband too, and should he prove idle, worthless, and lazy, the wife can leave him and take the lodge from over his head and go back to her kindred. The women do the work so as to leave the men free to hunt and go to war.

The Indian wife owns the home and all its belongings, she owns her horses and dogs, and can buy and sell as she chooses, while in most Christian homes the wife and mother owns nothing, not even her children and her clothes.

Is it a wonder that Indian mothers protest against coming under the gilded chains of Christian civilization, and cling to their own selfhood and self-ownership?

"O mother, O sisters dear!

If we are lost, no victor else has destroyed us,
It is by ourselves we go down to eternal night."

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

AND TIME ROLLS ON.

To the Editors of Freethought:

It has been a long time since I wrote you. One can hardly notice the time as it speeds along minute by minute, gathering into hours, hastening on into days, and folding its wings over the lapse of centuries. Last summer our valley was the same. Some new improvements have been added to our list; some have died; some been born, and some of our friends have moved away to take up their abode amid other people and other scenes. The same old hills with their woody ravines and sparkling brooks are here; the same cozy homesteads, environed with wild roses and fragrant with the perfume of an Oregon July. The same broad acres with a burden of waving hay, ready for the sturdy farmer's scythe and the harvester's sickle, are here. The sun tints the hills as he rises and blinks his eyes over the landscape, then paints in his lustre the western skies, and goes to bed just as regularly as if nothing had happened. But every day, yes, every hour, brings forth a new panorama for him somewhere on this broad earth.

We are on the list for a lecture on August 20. About one year ago Mr. Putnam was in Union and delivered a lecture to an intelligent and appreciative audience. Thus it goes. Year by year, with patient labor the time is coming when all these petty differences will be more amicably settled. The ones who so bitterly oppose the child of the nineteenth century will, some day not far distant, come and say, "I see it now." Men and beliefs are curious things. It will always be that minds will be at variance when it comes to this question of religion. The right will come carrying the laurels of its victory!

When we glance back for a moment and look at the old homestead, its shattered houses and disordered lawns, and think of her with silver hair who read the old, old Bible as regularly as she slept, and whose faith in its teachings were firm and and irresistible, whose hope knew no doubt, we can but feel like crying out in our despair, "she could not be wrong!" But this is one of the tender memories that bind heart to heart; this is what keeps the orthodox so strong, these very old recollections, tender and touching, but they should not hold down the mind in bondage—remember them, but with that affection that belongs not to the grand, austere tribunal of belief, but with the more touching reverence of the fireside ties! The main and principal means of gaining church members is by working and harrowing up the memory and recollections of the person. The question is not brought out to them philosophically and as a matter of right and wrong. In administering its doctrines to the people the church works up every point that has ever been known that could touch the sympathies of somebody and bring tears to the eyes. That is a wrong. If people can be washed into the church in a flood of tears, it is safe to say they can be washed out as easily. Let them be cool and look at this matter by the best view.

But as the world grows older and more enlightened these things will pass away. Some day, if you allow the indulgence, this will be a happier and more prosperous land. The evils that work such injury to-day will all be purged away, and peace will walk the vales where blood has run in rivulets.

"These struggling tides of life that seem
In wayward, aimless course to tend,
Are eddies of the mighty stream
That rolls to its appointed end."

La Grande, Or.

B. W. HUFFMAN.

VERY FEW CONVERTS IN INDIA

Canon Isaac Taylor has shown of late by striking statistical evidence, how very few converts English missionaries gather in for the money expended. Probably personal observation in India would induce him to write still more strongly than he has done. It must be said, however, that here, as elsewhere, statistics prove too much and too little. Hundreds of converts were made during the famine years who have since relapsed, but whose names go to swell the list of "native Christians;" hundreds, if not thousands, are put down as "under instruction," who, every one knows, come to the mission schools for the sake of the secular instruction given, but whom no one in his wildest moments expects ever to become converts. In the Madras presidency, where there are far more Christians than in any other part of India, only 10 per cent. of the pupils in the Protestant Christian schools are Christians, and a single conversion in twenty-five years suffices to throw a whole school into uproar. Still, since the young men and children attending these schools imbibe a higher and, indeed, Christian standard of morals, the missionaries must in justice be credited with an influence for good which cannot be expressed in figures. The living force and growth of Hinduism are evident in every part of India. The immense temple of Madura, for instance, with its stately halls and cloisters, its thousand columns, and its colossal monolithic deities and dragons, is not only thronged with worshipers, but is daily adding both to its structure and to its treasures. It has an annual income of 70,000 rupees, and the Nattukottai Chetties, a caste of native money lenders, are said to have lately spent £40,000 on the fabric. This temple illustrates the adaptive faculty of the Brahmins. Originally dedicated to Minakshi, the fish-goddess of the aboriginal Dravidian races, it was appropriated by the Brahmins, who overcame all theological difficulties by identifying Minakshi with Parvati, the wife of Shiva, and adopting her into their Pantheon. She is the presiding goddess at Madura, but she shares the homage of her worshipers with many gods, rishas or saints, and demons. Among the last-named is a former English collector—Mr. Rous Peter. He paid due respect to the goddess in his lifetime, and now a doorway in the temple is dedicated to his memory and periodically lighted up in his honor. In the north of India, the neighborhood of the holy land where Krishna spent his youth, is another scene of Hindoo religious liberality. A Guru or teacher from Madras, converted the Seths—the Hindu Rothschilds—from Jainism to a form of Vishnu worship called Sri Sampradaya. The family thereupon expended some £150,000 in the erection of a great temple at Brindaban, near Muttra, besides building a temple in the town of Muttra itself. They annually expend vast sums in the maintenance of priests and Brahmins, the instruction of boys in the Shastras or holy writings, and in feeding the poor.

HE WILL GET THERE.

From the Oregon Scout.

We announced last week that Samuel P. Putnam, the orator, would be in La Grande and Union on the 29th and 30th of July. We were mistaken in this. Mr. Putnam will be in La Grande on the 29th of August and in Union on the 30th. We were "off" in our statement nearly a month. Mr. Huffman, the post-editor of the Journal, sends us a printed list of Mr. Putnam's appointments, and adds:

"Paste this up for reference.
Don't git mixed agin;
Put'll be here bye and bye,
He'll come in thick or thin."

HEAR, HEAR!

From the Port Angeles Commonwealth.

Church property should not be exempt from taxation. The vast majority of the people of Washington are without the folds of the church, and their property should not be taxed higher than church property should escape free.

THE building of the great Congo railway in Africa has been hailed by many as an aid in civilizing and Christianizing the nations; but it is likely to prove more of a curse than a blessing. German whisky, English rum, and French brandy have already poisoned, it is said, one-fifth of the inhabitants of Congo Free State. This is latter-day Christian civilization. Christian England forces opium on China; Christian England, Germany, and France, educate the natives to drink that which will bring them under a worse slavery than they have ever known. Says an English journal: "From a philanthropic point of view, it would be better a thousand times over for the vast population of Central Africa to be converted to Islam and sobriety, than Christianity and alcoholism."—American Sentinel.

A Good Suggestion.

To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed is 10 cents for the "Glory of Infidelity." As soon as times get a little better I will try and see what I can do towards getting a few subscribers to FREETHOUGHT. Times are dull here now, and money is hard to get hold of. I have been doing my own thinking for twenty years, and I don't see but that I get along just as well and have as good health as during the twenty years when somebody else did it for me. I believe the quickest way to liberate humanity from superstition is to begin with the children. If Secular Sunday-schools could be organized all over this country it would be a great check on the propagation of superstition. Let us try to build a temple of our own in every town, and have our own preachers, and teach our children the religion of this world and the duties they owe their fellow-men. Teaching superstition to the young is like poison—it soon becomes a necessity. G. E. MOULTON.

San Luis Obispo.

Jamieson's Lectures.

Freethinkers often write inquiring why lecturers do not visit their towns. This is not always practicable, on account of distance to be traveled and expense. An opportunity will now be afforded the Liberals living in the towns along the line of the Union Pacific railway, to obtain courses of lectures by Mr. Jamieson. Any of the Liberals in Wallace, Kansas; Grinnell, Hays City, Russell, Ellsworth, Salina, Solomon, Abeline, Chapman, Junction City, Manhattan, Topeka, Lawrence, Burlingame, Carbondale, are cordially invited to correspond with Mr. Jamieson without delay. Address, Coryell, Col.

"Robert Elsmere," by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Price, 50 cents.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—
"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—
ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS
(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to
L. K. WASHBURN,
Revere, Mass.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!
Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mills
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,
536 CLAY STREET,
Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 10
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond, $5. 6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm Diamond* 14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

Probably He Did.

The maiden in a hammock lay,
The day was fair and bright,
The young man sat not far away—
Gazed on the pleasant sight.

The mesh her rounded form entwined
In soft embrace, at ease;
Each ripe perfection, clear-defined—
She wonders if he sees.

She turns half-round to catch his eye,
Moved by coquetry's law,
The hammock tips—the white skirts fly—
She wonders if he saw.

Sunset.

Fast-fading beams their glory throw
With varied hue from low to high;
The enlarging sun, as loath to go,
Leaves half his beauty in the sky.

The live-long day the sun has shone,
And power and life were in his rays;
But not until that sun's near gone
Men fix on him their wondering gaze.

And so with life: we live our day
Without a thought of how it is;
But when that life must pass away
We wonder on the thing we miss.

Needed Their Prayers.

Colonel Dick Wintersmith, sitting under the trees in front of the Ebbitt House the other day, says a Washington letter to the New York Tribune, related the following yarn:

"It seems that the congregation of a church in one of the southern counties of Virginia was one day greatly shocked upon learning that their preacher had departed under most discreditable circumstances. On the following Sunday nearly every one in the congregation was desirous of hushing up the scandal, and under great restraint many interesting conversations were held merely to prove that the members of the church could rise above sensational gossip. Just before the services were closed Brother Elijah P. Brookrod arose and said:

"Brethren and sisters. Since we last met in this house something which seems to have cast a gloom over this congregation has occurred. We were all much attached to our minister; in fact, we loved him, and now I propose we offer up a prayer for the wanderer."

"A sensational wave passed over the audience. Another brother arose, and, turning to Elijah P. Brookrod, said:

"I am astonished that you should desire the congregation to pray for our erring minister—you, above all others."

"Why?"
"Because he ran away with your wife."
"Yes, I know," Elijah replied, "and that is the reason why I think he will need our prayers."

Temperance and Prohibition,

BY G. H. STOCKHAM, M.D.,

Sets forth the merits of moral suasion as opposed to force in settling the liquor question.

Paper, 25 cts.; cloth, 50 cts. Address this office

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street. Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.
G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.
Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC
SCHOOLS.—THE NEW
AMERICAN PARTY,

A Criticism by "Jefferson."

Price, 10 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.

Price $1. Address, Putnam & Macdonald.

Dr. Wood's Rhubarb Bitters

impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Ask your dealer for them. Agency with J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento street, San Francisco, Cal.

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35. for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
Gold do., $5 and	.60	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes, and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.
Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see other column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, of Edinburgh, Scotland: "a graduate of three universities and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: 'The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive.' It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of

MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE.
Proven by the sale of half a million to be the most popular and readable because written in language plain, chaste, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made valuable to invalids, knowing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and a NEW FEATURE. Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling. AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. work for AGENTS Kochler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Fello's Health Monthly.

Standard Edition, $3.25 Same print and illustrations, the Popular Edition, 1.50 difference is in paper and binding.

MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Men, Women, and Gods.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents.

A Short History of the Bible.

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price. 50 cents.

Backed for a Place.

While the Salvation Army was carrying on the collection business in its usual vigorous fashion at Charles Street, Openshaw, on Sunday evening, a woman in the crowd was heard to say, "Well, it may be all right, but I don't know; however, here's a shilling." She didn't seem to regard J. C. as the favorite, but she backed him for a place.—London Freethinker.

THE VOICE OF THE TIMES.

Addresses on the Social Question.

Clear, Concise, Sparkling, Helpful.

- "Nationalism," by Edward Bellamy.
- "The Earth for Man," by Col. T. W. Higginson.
- "Christian Socialism," by Rev. W. D. P. Bliss, the Founder of the Order.
- "Individualism," by Wm. Lloyd Garrison.
- "Profit-Sharing," by Rev. N. P. Gilman.
- "The Commonwealth of Man," by Frederic A. Hinkley.
- "The Function of the State," by Edwin D. Mead.
- "Nationalism," by Mrs. Abby Morton Diaz.

Addresses, also, by Dr. Edward McGlynn, Rev. M. J. Savage, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney.

All just printed and to be had in this form alone.

Price for all, only 20 cents.

Address The New Ideal, 192 Summer st., Boston.

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY. Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right.

Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.

DR. FELLOWS.

Divorce in Five Countries.

If the wife of a Turcoman asks his permission to go out, and he says "Go," without adding "Come back again," they are divorced.

In Siberia if a man is dissatisfied with the most trifling acts of his wife, he tears a cap or veil from her face and that constitutes a divorce.

In Siam the first wife may be divorced, but not sold, as the others may be. She may claim the first child. The others belong to her husband.

Among the Moors if the wife does not become the mother of a boy she may be divorced with the consent of the tribe, and can marry again.

In the Arctic region a man who wants a divorce leaves home in anger and does not return for several days.—Toronto Mail.

Well Meant.

It is told of a pious, well-meaning man, that on one occasion, while offering up a prayer in Sunday-school, he referred to the superintendent in this manner: "And, God bless the superintendent, who has led such a long, tedious, Christian life."

GOD IN THE STATE.

By E. A. Stevens, Secretary of the American Secular Union.

—10:—

This is the best presentation of the argument against God in the Constitution, ever prepared in a pamphlet of its size.

—10:—

Price, 10 cents; three copies, 25 cents; eight copies, 50 cents.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald
504 Kearny st. San Francisco.

THE SABBATH IMPOSTURE.

BY HARRY HOOVER.

Showing that there is no authority for the Sunday laws, either Human or "Divine."

Price, 10 cents; three copies, 25 cents; eight copies 50 cents. Address this office.

ROMAN RULE OR RUIN.

BY Z. SHED.

A Summary of the atrocities committed by the Catholic church.

Price, 10 cents; four copies, 25 cents; ten copies, 50 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

WHY PRIESTS SHOULD WED.

BY JUSTIN D. FULTON, D.D.

A startling book, particularly to those unacquainted with the character of the confessional. Price, $1.50.

Address this office.

THE ORDER OF CREATION.

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology
Price, 50 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application,

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.

OLIVER HINCKLEY, - - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,
NURSEYMEN.

Catalpas for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice.

Special Attention Given to Planting and Caring of Orchards and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Others of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS

THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"The Glory of Infidelity" was one of the poet-secretary's happiest efforts, and ranks with the best speeches of the Congress.—New York Truth Seeker.

Putnam's "Glory of Infidelity" is one of the ablest defenses of Freethought to which I have ever listened.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

The lecture was "The Glory of Infidelity." No man or woman could hear it without being inspired by the heroic Infidel manhood and womanhood coming down to us as a rich inheritance through the dreary ages of the past, and pointing with glorious hope to the "New Heaven and Earth."

J. F. BECK.

I believe I express the unanimous sentiment of all when I say that for a lecture of his character, Mr. Putnam has never been surpassed and seldom equaled on our platform—a platform famous for the talent it affords. "The Glory of Infidelity" fairly bristles with good things, and each sentence is an epigrammatic Secular sermon.

E. A. STEVENS, Secretary American Secular Union.

—PRICE 10 CENTS.—

Address PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Life's Better Day.

We know the clouds shall break away,
The blue skies show instead;
The future bring a golden day
With sunshine overhead;
And gentle peace be sovereign then,
Where hope had almost died,
And life shall fill the heart again
Through trial purified.

Though dark the way for us and long
And keen the lurking pain,
Like an assassin hid among
Our hopes and pleasures slain;
There is a day for you and me,
If we the right pursue,
When present ills and pains shall flee,
And life begin anew.

Whate'er thine ills, let them be borne
With patient heart and will;
Though sharp the rough path's piercing thorn,
And steep the stony hill;
Do right when wrong would tempt, and spurn
Vile passions from your breast,
And doing good for evil, learn
To leave to time the rest!

JUSTICE—"You say that you did not know that you were violating the law. Ah, but, my dear sir, ignorance of the law is no excuse to any man."

PRISONER—"That is kind o' rough on both of us, ain't it judge?"

CRIER—"Order in the court."

THE king of Uriwandi has three wives, whom he pounds unmercifully when he gets drunk. His course is approved by Hoyle, we believe. A king full always beats three queens.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. A. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Walls and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Paper.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

Vol. II—No. 33.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 17, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - AUGUST 17, 1889.

DELEGATE PEFLY, of the Idaho constitutional convention, has the courage of his convictions. He objected to the recognition of God or any other ghost in the Constitution, but was voted down. When the convention finally agreed on a form of constitution, recognizing the Christian God, he refused to sign it. We admire his manliness and fidelity to principle.

SUNDAY idleness, or some other cause, is productive of rioting and bloodshed in this and other cities the first day of every week. The men who work on Sunday do not commit crimes, and they are one day's pay ahead of the idlers. Which, then, is best for the morals of the community, Sunday rest or Sunday labor? Until this question is settled, religious people should go slow with their Sunday idleness laws.

To gain the favor of some trade union or other, Secretary Windom has abolished the steam printing presses from the public bureau of engraving and printing, and substituted hand presses. The plea is that more men will be given work by the latter method. It is not believed that steam will be abolished in other departments of public work, but who knows? There are a good many demagogues in Washington.

A RAILROAD is to be built from Jaffa to Jerusalem, and Christian pilgrims to the holy land are protesting. The journey to Jerusalem has hitherto been performed upon donkeys, and the pious devotees argue that the new arrangement will do away with this feature so long associated with the history and traditions of Palestine, and be fatal to religious sentiment. There is a basis of reason for this plea. Abolish all the donkeys, and what would become of reverence for Palestine or the religion that started there?

THE approach of the year 1892, when the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus is to be celebrated, has set antiquarians at work to find out the nationality of the great mariner. The Jewish World newspaper says Columbus was a Hebrew, while the Abbe Perretti claims that he was, like Napoleon, a Corsican. We once heard a Catholic priest in Jersey City, N. J., affirm without fear of successful contradiction that the discoverer of America was an Irishman, but the fact that Columbus never got on the police force or ran for alderman is rather against that theory.

On August 15 and 16 there was a California State Sabbath Convention at the Young Men's Christian Association Hall, in this city. It is understood that Sabbath organizations are to be established in the various counties, cities, and towns throughout the state under the auspices of the American Sabbath Union. The bigots are beginning early, and their movement may grow to a respectable size before the legislature meets again, if it does not die in infancy.

SECRETARY McCoy, of the Young Men's Christian Association, has arranged with the Rev. I. D. Driver, of Portland, Or., to deliver a special course of three lectures on "Infidelity," for the benefit of young men, in Association Hall, this city, upon successive Thursday evenings in September. Driver is a man who rather outdoes Clark Braden as an off-hand liar, and the "young men" will receive about the same amount of benefit from listening to him that they would get from the bray of a perverted jackass.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, August 18, at 8 o'clock. W. O. Howe will lecture on "Our Common Foe."

NEWS AND NOTES.

Coquille is under the shadow of orthodoxy, and the Liberals are somewhat indifferent. Nevertheless an audience of nearly two hundred came together, and the outlook is better than before. Comrade Nichols is always on hand, and by his works shows that he has plenty of faith in the "good time coming." I enjoyed his hospitality. He has built his little cottage in a grove just outside of the village, and here with music and FREETHOUGHT the home-light brightens.

I enjoyed a refreshing drive from Marshfield to Coquille with J. D. Garfield, who takes pleasure in giving the Secular pilgrim the best that is going—be it horseflesh, or otherwise. The first one I struck at Coquille was P. O. Chilstrom, who happened to be on his way to Willamette valley. J. Henry Schroeder, who is bound to make things go, whatever the difficulties of the situation, was present, and of course there could not be discouragement with such efficient support. Cathcart was our body-guard from the bay to Coquille, and his fiery steed kept alongside, except when the smoothness of the road enabled Garfield to give the reins, and spin along at a three-minute gait, which is not bad for these hilly and crooked roads. There was quite a company from various parts to attend the lecture, and the movement here is forward, and not backward.

I had a peculiar experience on Wednesday morning. What strange attraction there is in the awful things of life. When a crime takes place the scene of it seems to draw one with a wierd magnitism. Coquille has just been agitated by one of the most fearful and extraordinary murders ever committed. Such an exhibition of brutality is seldom experienced, and this was the deed of a man who has lived in the community for many years, been respected, and who would not be believed guilty of such enormity if the evidence were not overwhelming, together with his own confession. In cold blood he killed a mother and a child, concealed the bodies, and waited for the return of the father to finish the bloody work. A desperate struggle ensued, like that of two wild beasts. Finally the attacked party escaped, and the alarm was given. The whole neighborhood was aroused. Hundreds of people thronged to the place, a search was made, and beneath the roots of a giant tree the bodies of the mother and child were discovered. For fear of lynching, the murderer was hurried at once to jail, with his wife, who was supposed to be an accomplice in these terrific crimes. Of this, however, there is no proof. Now that this crime has been made public, it is bruited that this same man has committed several murders in the past twenty years. Such cold-blooded malignity seems impossible. The motive to the present murder is shrouded in mystery, and altogether it is one of the most remarkable cases on record. I visited the place, and viewed the little cabin, the yard, blood-stains here and there, where the tragedy occurred, and the ghastly grave in the woods where the mother and child were burried. The sun was shining blithely in the branches, the sweet songs were in the air. Without doubt, the mother and child were happy that sunny morning, when the assassin crept upon their path. How swift and horrible the change, the attack, the death, the dragging through the woods, the burial, and all the shuddering details of the inhuman transaction. How the deep, dark problem of life and destiny presses upon the heart in view of the scenes of this pitiable tragedy. How can one be so cruel? Whence comes this devastating passion, and what will remove it? Where is the justice of the heavens and the love of God? Could any divine being, looking upon this infinite horror, have withheld his aid? No angel, no spirit came at the tortured mother's cry. Human love, after all, is the only remedy for human hate. Human justice must right human wrong. I could only feel, amidst the beautiful sunshine that was trying to cover up the dreadful terror, that in ourselves only is the providence of the good and just. We only can make those conditions—those divine conditions whereby the heart shall be made loving and noble, and these deeds of blood forever impossible.

In the afternoon, the steamer Antelope, Captain Dunham, a jolly steersman, takes us down the shining Coquille. R. H. Rosa, of Bandon, is on board, and Joseph Walser, of Randolph, and I have good company while the boat goes speeding on. I miss Judge Low at Randolph, but find other friends, and a fair audience greets me in the evening. Landlord Tennyson, of the Randolph Hotel, gives me pleasant entertainment, and gathers the people together with the sound of the bell. The hall was full. Randolph has only about a half-dozen houses, and I could not expect a large attendance. I gave the first Freethought lecture here, and the prospects for the future work are favorable.

Thursday afternoon I proceed to Bandon. I always like to come to Bandon, for here the sea spreads magnificently before the view. It dashes against the beach and the mighty rocks. You seem to be looking into eternity with a thousand enchanting pictures in the glowing horizon. There are a few staunch Liberals at Bandon, and Rosa's Hall was quite well filled. Comrade Tupper takes good care of me at the hotel. Upton introduces me at the meeting, and so Bandon comes and goes something like a pleasant dream, for I arrive there with the sinking sun, and depart with the early rays of morning. All the sunny forenoon I travel up the placid Coquille River. The immense forests are on either side. Now and then a house appears, with garden and green fields. It is an enchanting, dreamy journey. Nature's solitudes are about, with glimpses of civilization. The sunshine falls into the tracery of the lofty banks, and delicately tinted chambers open to the view. The waters dimple merrily, and flash the dancing beams in brilliant quivering colors.

At Coquille I land, and mine landlord, of the Olive House, furnishes the noonday meal. James Laird, Jr., finds me after my comfortable dinner, and drives me to Myrtle Point, where I arrive in the late afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Brown, whom I met at San Bernardino last year, keep the hospitable fires burning in the Lennherr House, formerly kept by Mrs. Brown's father, Mr. Lennherr, who was the first man to greet me at Myrtle Point when two years ago I was a traveler from the East. Mr. and Mrs. Lennherr have died since I was here a year ago. Mrs. Lennherr was a Catholic, but of gentle and Liberal mind, and her welcome to the heretic was always cordial. Whether in the bosom of the church or out of it, she would be worthy to enter the gates of Paradise. Mr. Lennherr was a staunch, enthusiastic supporter of Freethought, and his faith was undimmed by age or suffering. They both died within a week of each other, and upon their grave shall bloom the flowers of sweet memory. For many years they lived in this community, and friends and neighbors will not forget the virtue that is immortal though death may come.

My old friend, James Laird, who piloted me over the Coast Range, two years ago, is here, not so strong as when I first met him, but as jolly withal, and ever ready to make life happy in spite of misfortune and disease.

Ed. Bender, postmaster, and many other friends I find, and the hall is full. Dr. Easter of the Christian host is busy taking notes, and at the close of the lecture announces that he will answer me on the third Sunday in September. Quite a long way ahead, and the Infidel will be sure to be a long way off. I invited him to give a reply on Sunday evening, and announced that he could have an hour of my time in order to do so. He said that would not give him time enough to prepare. He does not seem to follow the injunction of St. Paul, to be ready to give a reason for the faith that is in him. It takes the doctor more than a month to get his equipments ready.

Saturday, through fields and woods and many gateways, the Lairds and myself penetrate to Arago, where the pavilion stands, and where the house of Schroeder stands, and where the flag floats to every breeze under heaven. Rain or shine, our friend Schroeder is at the front, the work goes on, and the harvest is bound to shine. Here in this handsome home, with the orchards and gardens about, the glimmering fields, and in the distance the line of hills and mighty forests, here one can find the noble inspirations of liberty, and feel that labor is not in vain—that there are hearts who will appreciate, that there are hopes that burn in undiminished lustre, and so one can plunge into the dust of toil and conflict, and hear the music of victory.

Quite a number were present Saturday evening at the pavilion, where I gave a lecture on "Evolution and Creation." After the lecture there was sociable and dance.

Sunday, August 4th, was a festival day, just what Sunday ought to be. Old and young were gathered together. The steamer Antelope brought friends from Coquille. The band was present from Myrtle Point, and a goodly company likewise. It was a lovely day. The sky was cloudless, and the sunlight gorgeous on field and wood and hill. The soft winds made music. Near the pavilion is a beautiful grove. Beneath this leafy canopy the martial strains poured forth. The children played ball and swung in the glittering atmosphere. The young men and maidens went skating in graceful curves over the smooth floor of the pavilion. At noon all gathered about the tables, furnished by the generosity of the Schroeders, and the physical man was well replenished. In the afternoon a large assembly listened to the lecture on "The American Republic."

In the evening the meeting was held at Myrtle Point, and by boat and carriage a large party went from Arago. The band was with us also, and thanks are due our musical friends for the inspiring entertainment which they gave. The hall was crowded. The Christian champion did not appear, and so I was obliged to occupy the entire time with a lecture on Moody and Sam Jones. This closed the series of meetings in Coos county. I find an increased attendance and increased interest. The Liberals are in the majority in this county, but for all that, many are still afraid to take an open stand. A few staunch pioneers do all the work, and without these strenuous allies the cause would lag indeed. Schroeder reports that eight have joined our forces since the beginning of the campaign two years ago, and these eight are of the bone and sinew of the land, and it means something when they take a stand for Freethought. McNaughton says that if I don't find him in the front ranks when I return, I may know that he is dead. I am satisfied of that. There are others just like him. They won't give up. I don't believe any place East or West has done more splendid work this year than Coos county. I am glad to announce that a woman is to make the campaign more brilliant than ever. Mrs. Krekel is to visit here about the middle of September, and I anticipate a noble welcome for this representative of woman's genius. Many will come out to listen to her eloquent voice who would not attend the lectures of a man. As woman is the chief supporter of the church, so I believe that woman eventually will do the most for the emancipation of the world.

S. B. Cathcart, who, from North Coos river, attended all the lectures, and was the last comrade to whom I bade farewell on Monday morning, is county surveyor, and has trodden almost every foot of the country, and knows its resources by personal examination. He is a good one to address in case anybody desires to understand the capacities and expectations of Coos county. This has many attractions. It has a lovely summer climate. Every day that I have spent here has been beautiful, as if made expressly for a holiday. This is an agreeable land for Liberals to inhabit. They will find congenial associations and ample promises of future prosperity. I wish I could mention by name all my good friends in this county, all the good comrades I have met. They are too numerous. They come by the score. I must thank them all together, every one of them, for their earnestness and cordiality and open heart and hand. Every labor has been made bright by these devoted supporters of Freethought, who have made these shining hills and streams and seem like a fireside glory, where warm and true companions of toil and pleasure are ever present. Monday morning the Laids, with a jolly company besides, take me over the dusty way and through gleaming solitudes of vast and verdant forests to the "Half-way House," the home of my ever-humorous pilot, who sees in nature and man that which makes for mirth, and not for misery. His house is ten miles away from any other residence. It is in the heart of a lovely amphitheatre. The lofty hills are ranked about it. The trees stand up like glistening spires. The huge boulders overhang, covered with radiant mosses. Here the night enshrouds with silver moon and stars, and we rest until the matin hour awakes with music and splendor. Tuesday morning is glorious. The mists roll over the hills softly, glittering with the sun's warm rays. The coast range is before our face. The east fork of the Coquille dashes along amidst vast rocks with gleaming banners. The trees, three hundred feet high, some of them, open into vast arcades that sink into depths of luminous green. The boulders seem like huge fortresses, and slowly we scale the immense heights. It takes five hours to reach the summit. Trees athwart the highway have to be chopped down in order that we may advance. When we do reach the top, how gloriously we dash down to the "Eighteen Mile House," where we get our dinner. With what splendid appetites we reach the goal. Mr. and Mrs. Bennett, of Marshfield, with their two children, Elsie, and Tom, who is every inch a young American, joined us at Laird's, and I had the pleasure of riding with them the latter part of the journey, and the spanking team bring me to Roseburg an hour and a half ahead of the stage. Mrs. Bennett and the two children are en route to New York and Europe. A good voyage to them all, and a happy return to the shores of the Pacific. I shall not soon forget our genial friends, especially Tom, who has learned to be a veteran traveler already.

Roseburg shines prettily on the view as we round the hills. The Liberalism here is of that vague order that seldom crystallizes to action. I was glad to meet with Benjamin, of the Plain Dealer, and to sit in the cozy parlor of P. La Motta, who has worked out his own salvation without any regard to the churches, and has found in Freethought a philosophy of life that makes duty a pleasure and gives a heart for any fate.

With a good-bye to friends, I take the midnight train, and through the sleepy hours travel on to the harvest of glory of the Willamette valley, refulgent in the morning's smoky beams.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

WHAT LIBERALISM OFFERS.

A correspondent of the New Ideal discusses the question "What Does Liberalism Offer the Workingman?" The writer finds that Christianity points to the sky and says: "My laboring friend, there is a land where no tramp-law exists! Your sufferings, your sorrows, your many disappointments, the endless hardship and oppression to which you have always been subjected, have all been necessary in order to properly prepare you for heaven. For your hunger here, we will give you the bread of life there. Garments of righteousness will be the reward for your nakedness. The many-roomed mansions shall be your compensation for lack of shelter and a freezing temperature. Best of all, you will have attained spiritual wisdom, and then all will be plain that you cannot understand now." It may be urged in Christianity's behalf that religion does not profess to make people happy in this world. Its mission is merely to save souls for some world hereafter; and it therefore offers the laboring men nothing but post-mortem salvation. But if Christianity could offer every workingman a house and a hundred and sixty acres of land, that would not prove Christianity to be true. A priest may give a dollar to a beggar, but that does not demonstrate his supernatural mission, and he could increase the amount to a million without strengthening his claim in any degree. Any prosperity that might follow a universal adoption of Christianity would leave the creation story, the fall, the redemption, the miraculous birth of Christ, and all other Christian dogmas, exactly where they are at present—in the category of myth and fable.

But what does Liberalism offer the workingman? It offers him just what it offers the capitalist, the politician, the priest, the king, and the pauper. That is to say, it offers him the truth so far as it has been discovered. Liberalism is not a nostrum. It is not a social or a political system. It bids the workingman to study, to think, and to express his thought. It will not stand in his way, as the church does, and tell him that certain social or political doctrines are heretical. It leaves an open field for the examination of all schemes for progress and the improvement of the race. It gives free scope to the mental faculties, by means of which all deliverance from evil must come; for it would be as reasonable to deny a pupil the use of the multiplication table in solving a mathematical problem as to restrict the liberty of thought in the consideration of any question that vexes the human mind. It might be asked what the multiplication table offers the workingman, and the answer would be that it offers him a method of reaching the truth. So it may be said of Liberalism that it offers the workingman and all others a method and a condition, the only ones through which anything like a satisfactory way out of difficulties can be found. If truth, fact, science, and freedom from the errors of superstition and the tyranny of priests, are worth anything to the workingman, then Liberalism has something of value to offer him.

THE FRUITS OF RELIGION.

The Australian "faith-healing" charlatan, Dr. Alexander Dowie, who was in this city several months ago, left here without having made a deep impression or doing any particular damage; but it seems that Los Angeles was not so fortunate as San Francisco. In that city Dowie did some extensive proselyting, and succeeded in indoctrinating a large number of people with his particular delusion. He taught that bodily ailments could be cured by faith, and that the services of physicians were totally unnecessary. This is of course the logical conclusion from ordinary Christian premises, because if there is a divine power who counts the hairs of the human head and watches the proceedings of sparrows, it is fair to presume that he would pay some attention to the bodily welfare of human beings. As a belief, this "faith" doctrine does no more harm than other superstitions; but the trouble in the present case arises from an attempt to put the preaching into practice, and the results have been fatal in many instances. From the daily papers we learn that the latest case is that of the nine-year-old boy of J. D. Hatch, of Los Angeles. The boy was taken down with diphtheria. The father, a "faith-cure" believer, allowed the case to run its length without calling in medical aid. The police authorities were notified, and investigation showed that the believers had been praying over the child, as is their custom, but did absolutely nothing to alleviate its sufferings. The little fellow was beyond hope, and died shortly after. All the indications were that he had been allowed to slowly choke to death through an ignorance worthy of the Dark Ages.

In this case there was no elaborate examination, but in a previous instance the coroner took pains to secure the fancies and beliefs of the "faith-cure" people. This was in the case of Howard Shepard, the two-year-old infant of the Rev. William E. Shepard, of the East Los Angeles Holiness church. Mrs. Shepard, the mother of the child, says the report, outlined the mode of procedure of the faith-healers in tones absolutely free from even the tremor of anguish which is supposed to be noticeable in the speech of the most callous parent within a day or two of her child's death. Her husband had been ill, she said, for two weeks from an unknown disease, when her little boy became sick. Several persons told her it was diphtheria, but being a believer in divine healing, she could not think of calling in a physician. As her husband grew worse she called in several sisters of her congregation, and their prayers were efficacious in the case of the man. With the child, the very first prayer uttered drove away a fever, but a relapse followed and the appeals to heaven did not have any force. Mrs. Shepard's refuge, when pressed to explain the tenets of her faith, was invariably the Bible, where she obtained ample justification for her conduct.

Miss Emma Boyer, a neighbor, to whose intervention with the Almighty the pastor believed his recovery largely due, went into the matter at greater length. She said that she was one of the charter members of the Divine Healing organization, and that she formerly was a Methodist. The Lord, she asserted, led her to pray at the child's bedside. She quoted from scripture as the fountain head from which the Divine Healers drew their inspiration, but in being sworn her partly paralyzed right arm added its silent testimony against the efficacy of her faith.

J. T. Patterson, another "divine healer," furnished a curious piece of testimony. All his life, he said, he had been trying to lead sinners to the path of rectitude. He came to the coast for the benefit of his wife's health, and was a firm believer in the power of a direct appeal to God for intervention in the affairs of man. He was called on to pray over the dying child. "But," said he, "I had received a presentiment from God above that he would do nothing for this child, and so of course I refused to say a word for it. One must have absolute faith in the power of God to heal disease, or it would do no good." He cited as an instance his own case. Years ago he was paralyzed in the right side of his head, so that his hearing was destroyed. He prayed, but not having just that degree of implicit faith that was absolutely requisite, his prayer was not answered. Finally, he went to bed one night convinced that he had been heard. "And that very night," said Mr. Patterson, "the Lord reached forth out of the darkness, took my head off my shoulders, cleaned out the disease, replaced my head again, and when I arose in the morning I found that my hearing had been restored." He broke down when asked what God would do with broken limbs, but quickly fortified himself with a scriptural quotation and hurled at his interlocutor the passage from the Bible which read that "the bones of the righteous should not be broken." A whole string of interested witnesses gave their testimony. All made the same protestation of faith in divine interposition, and all took refuge in passages of the Bible that lent support to their views.

The district attorney of Los Angeles, it is said, will endeavor to find some law to cover the case; but it is plainly to be seen that in doing so he will be merely trying to suppress an effect for which there is an adequate cause. As we have said, faith cure is a logical outcome of belief in God and the efficacy of prayer, and the only remedy for the present delusion is a thorough eradication of Christian faith and dogma from the human mind.

"JOHN WARD, PREACHER," has been issued in paper covers and can now be furnished for 50 cents.

THE MISSION FIZZLE.

Sincere promoters of missions will be surprised, and the schemers will be chagrined, at the report which Lieutenant Wood of the United States navy makes concerning Christianity in China. Wood has been much in China and the East, and is able to speak with authority on the subject; and he says that it is not extravagant to assert that the work of the missionaries in China and Corea has been absolutely without any result, except to hold them up to the ridicule of the natives. "It has before been stated, and I concur in the belief," says the lieutenant, "that there is not a Chinese convert to Christianity, of sound mind, to-day within the entire extent of China."

It is explained by the same writer that the converts we hear of in this country are merely menials employed about quarters of missionaries, who for a salary of four dollars a month become converts. But when they are discharged there is no further evidence of their change of mind. The missionaries do not mix with the natives to any considerable extent, and many of their meetings are not only conducted in English, but with the missionaries themselves as audience.

Such a thing as a Corean nobleman or a Chinese mandarin acknowledging the Christian faith, according to Lieutenant Wood, has never been heard of. The missionaries are looked upon about as the Salvation Army is in America, only with ten times the prejudice and contempt. A curious blunder made by them in translating the Bible into Chinese adds to this feeling. The missionaries located in Foo Chow, and learned the language of that locality, which they used in translating. But it so happens that Foo Chow Chinese differs as much from the language of the educated, in which Confucius is given to the people, as the negro dialect of Louisiana differs from standard English. All the people of China reverence this classical language of the country and, though some of them do not understand it, they want high-class literature or none. The Bible, therefore, is to them what Josh Billings's Almanac is to Americans, and no more.

Another thing that must strike an intelligent resident of China as remarkable is that missionaries should go to that country to convert its natives while ninety-nine out of every hundred Chinese in this country still practice their heathen rites. They will no doubt conclude, as many people here have concluded, that the mission movement is merely one of the numerous impostures by which the church wheedles money out of its dupes.

PRIEST GLEASON'S DOCTRINE.

The Catholic church has just finished constructing a $250,000 college in Oakland, and last Sunday the building was dedicated with appropriate mummeries. An address was delivered by a priest named Gleason, some of whose utterances are worthy of note. As reported by the Alta California he said:

"Those who believe in a purely secular education, being the majority, force upon the minority their will in this matter. It is illiberal and unfair, because it forces upon millions a system which they abhor. If these people claimed to be Infidels or Agnostics their reasoning would be logical, but as it is, they claim to be Christians, yet they forbid that Christianity shall be studied."

That is a lie, because the study of Christianity is not forbidden except in public schools; but what do the Catholics want? Do they want the religion of the minority forced upon the majority? As it is at present, the majority simply refuse to pay for teaching the religious dogmas of the minority—first, because they believe in leaving religion to the family and the church; and second, because they do not desire to have their children taught what is untrue. Mr. Gleason thinks this is illiberal and unfair. He however hopes for the day when the majority will be on the Catholic side. In that day there shall be no more secular schools. The public schools will be placed on a religious basis; the religious will be combined with the secular, and to this end all Americans are invited by Mr. Gleason to join the Catholics "in this battle to get control of these schools."

Mr. Gleason has a peculiarly Catholic notion of what is illiberal and unfair, and what is not. The maintaining of the secular schools by the majority he denounces as tyrannical; but when the majority become Catholic, then Christianity will be taught in every school, and those who do not like it may emigrate. Such is the Roman Catholic conception of a liberal government and religious freedom.

It has always been supposed that connection with some church was an indication of religious proclivities in a communicant, and that a person's failure to accept the means of grace argued a want of piety. That view is now shown to be wrong by Messrs. Nicolay and Hay, Abraham Lincoln's private secretaries, who, in endeavoring to demonstrate that Lincoln was a Christian, write in the Century Magazine for August:

"The fact that he was not a communicant of any church, and that he was singularly reserved in regard to his personal religious life, gives only the greater force to the striking proofs of his profound reverence and faith."

Thus it appears that there is no defense for a public man against the charge of being "religious." Whether he joins the church and professes religion, or not, it is all the same. If he is worth having, the Christians put in their claim. The fact is that Lincoln had no faith except in the sense of Tennyson's remark:

"There is more faith in honest doubt,
Believe me, than in half the creeds."

THERE is a sad announcement in the last issue of the Boston Investigator. It is this:

"For the first time in over fifty years, the Investigator goes to press without one line from the venerable editor, Horace Seaver."

Mr. Seaver is afflicted with dropsy, but it is hoped that he may recover, though his age is great. The world will never reach a condition in which it can afford to spare such men as the fifty-years editor of the Investigator.

MGR. THOMAS S. PRESTON said at New York that cremation is abhorrent to the practice and teaching of the Roman Catholic church; that it is an attack upon the doctrine of the resurrection, "the church holding that the self-same body which is buried shall rise again; and that the funeral of a Catholic whose remains had been incinerated could not be attended with any of the rites of the church." What, then, is to become of the early Christian martyrs who perished at the stake?

THE wisdom of the clergyman who declined to pray for rain while the wind was in an unfavorable quarter, is paralleled by that of a Chicago faith-healer who has refused to treat a man for dyspepsia because the patient will eat pickles. The faith which is popularly supposed to move mountains does not, it seems, have a similar effect upon the bowels.

OUR friend Barry, editor and proprietor of the Weekly Star, was called upon to appear before Judge Lawler last Wednesday morning and show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court. Believing that Judge Lawler is guilty, in his judicial capacity, of most corrupt practices, Mr. Barry has not been at all backward about criticising the court. Judge Lawler may be an upright jurist, but it looks the other way. Mr. Barry duly appeared, and after his counsel had filed a demurrer and moved to quash the indictment, the case was postponed until next Monday morning.

WE are glad to see that notice made of the Hon. John S. Hittell's "Code of Morals" has called the attention of Mr. Charles Watts to that excellent work. Mr. Watts will publish it serially in Secular Thought. We can send the "Code of Morals" to any address for 25 cents.

OBSERVATIONS.

Last Sunday night's meeting of the Freethought Society was a repetition of previous ones in point of interest, and the attendance was good. Mr. Eastman presided, Mr. McClellan delivered the address, and Mr. Schou received the offerings of the people. Before the exercises began a tall stranger who said he was from New Hampshire came in and inquired of Mr. J. A. Williams if the Freethought Society believed in God. Mr. Williams said he guessed some of the members were affected that way, and the man became communicative enough to divulge that he was a Methodist, that he had been but seven weeks in San Francisco, and that his brother was a preacher. He was presented with a seat and a copy of FREETHOUGHT, and requested to make himself at home. He listened to the proceedings with apparent enjoyment until the speaker chanced to remark that a Methodist was no better than a Catholic; then he went away.

Zither music for this occasion was furnished by the Misses Haelke, of Oakland, who, as always, played sweetly and harmoniously.

The speaker of the evening, R. Guy McClellan, Esq., took for his subject "The American House of Lords," and stated casually that he enjoyed the distinction of having been the first to apply that appropriate title to the United States Senate. The Chronicle of Monday morning gave a report of the lecture, and I will reproduce it here, not because I could not write as good a one myself, but because I desire to encourage the new departure which the Chronicle has taken in noticing our meetings. This, then, is the Chronicle's report:

"The American House of Lords," said the speaker, "means the Senate of the United States. For thirteen years during the first war with England we did not have that arrogant, aristocratic, useless, brainless body of millionaires known as the United States Senate. The Senate was a conservative body, and now, my friends, I do not like conservatism. Whenever I see a nation that boasts of being conservative, I make up my mind that nation is suffering from the dry rot. It was said that the senators of the United States were to be selected as the choice of the people. Who in the name of heaven ever heard of a United States senator coming before the people on election day? There have been great men, in years gone by, who were in the Senate, but this is not true of recent years. For the past twenty years no man west of the Ohio river has been able to get into the Senate of the United States unless he was a millionaire. Men of intellect, statesmen if you please, are cast aside for ignorant, illiterate, almost imbecile creatures, who, decked in golden robes, purchase their way into the United States Senate. There is not a man in this city who can get a little, petty office in the custom house or mint unless he have the sanction and signature of this body, which is an incubus on the nation.

"The senators, like the congressmen, should be elected by the people. These senators are aliens; they are never voted for, and they might as well be natives of Asia. Blank ignoramuses, who could not even address the Chair, have been sent into that body where men like Calhoun and Webster once sat. We must make our government of and for the people. If we must have this American House of Lords, reform the system now in vogue, and make them truly the representatives of the people."

This account omits Mr. McClellan's radical utterances on the foolishness of people who bow and scrape before phantoms called gods, and impostors called popes and priests, but it is good as far as it goes. Mr. McClellan was heartily cheered, and congratulated by many on the eloquence of his address.

When the Chair announced that discussion was in order Dr. O'Brock walked nimbly forward. I heard him say: "Der laist sbeaker in his eloquent address hass alluded to whot have we to comblain off." I then went outside and wandered through the corridors until silence denoted that Dr. O'Brock had either stopped voluntarily or been cut off by death. Those who remained in the audience sweat, as it were, great drops of blood.

Mr. Thomas Curtis, venerable but popular, spoke with reference to the subject under discussion. In the matter of senators buying their places, he said the fact that votes were bought shows that votes were for sale. In the popular mind money was stronger than justice. There is little hope for good government except in the gradual growth of man, the abolition of greed, and the teaching of honesty to the young by example as well as precept.

A business meeting was called by the Chair to consider the proposal to remove to a larger hall. Mr. Macdonald opposed moving because the present hall was conveniently situated for him to attend. Mr. Schou said the only objection to the hall, besides its small size, was the music in the hall adjoining, which made him want to go in there and dance. Mr. Curtis suggested that Mr. Schou be allowed to go and dance, provided he would pass the hat for the benefit of the society. Mr. Curtis did not want to move until we could move into Pioneer Hall. The proprietor of the hall, Professor Sanders, said that means would be taken to prevent the sound of the music from penetrating the walls and exciting Mr. Schou. There being no one to advocate removal, the matter was dropped.

I cannot close this brief and inadequate account of a very interesting event without calling attention to the appended note that I have received from Vice-President Eastman. I am therein practically called upon to acknowledge myself a sayer of what is not so, which, in accordance with my long-established custom, I cheerfully do:

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 10, 1889.

GEO. E. MACDONALD, Dear Sir: In the "Observations" appearing in FREETHOUGHT of this date, in the report of the Freethought Society of last Sunday evening, you say: "Mr. Eastman desired to know who selected the speakers and who was responsible for introducing the present one." It is true that I did, in the course of conversation, ask who selected the speakers, but it was not in a spirit of dissatisfaction with the meeting or the speaker, nor did I ask who was responsible for his introduction. I have not at any time objected to Dr. Anderson speaking before the society, but, on the contrary, I expressed a desire, both to Dr. Anderson and to others, that he should have an opportunity to present his views on Theosophy to the society, and, though dissenting entirely from the speaker's conclusions on spiritual questions, I considered that the meeting was a very interesting one, and could see no harm that would be likely to come from allowing Theosophists, Spiritualists, Christians, or the advocates of other delusions and superstitions, to present their ideas to an audience of Freethinkers where opportunity for reply and refutation was also given. Your "Observations," by attributing to me opinions which I had no thought of expressing, place me in a false position toward those to whom I have expressed opinions the opposite of those intended to be conveyed by you, and I feel that injustice has been done me in the matter, for which your love of sarcasm is responsible.

Respectfully yours,

W. H. EASTMAN.

Next Sunday evening, August 18, Mr. W. O. Howe, of Oakland, will speak on the subject of "Our Common Foe."

Visitors to this office may, if they will take the risk, see for nothing as remarkable a picture as many that are exhibited for a high price. I understand that it is designed by Dr. George Newcomer, of Cleveland, Ohio, and it represents nothing less than the moral and intellectual progress of man "from the low barbarian up to the angel or spirit of light." In the lower part of the illustration is one man in primitive attire enjoying a wrestling match with a "Soko," and another presenting a colored woman with a 'possum whose decease he has effected by means of a club. This, the author assures us, represents the "fashion of their day." The beholder is carried along from this instructive scene to others more pleasing. As man improves he adopts better clothes, until finally the ready-made coat, the boiled shirt, and the suspender are achieved. Soon legalized matrimony catches him, and when he dies he is given expensive burial. At death he is side-tracked among the clouds, where he continues to harass his successors by illuminating their craniums with streaks of light. Among these clouds he exists indefinitely without any visible means of support. Meanwhile the "loved ones left behind," to use an original phrase, are getting along toward a city composed of many valuable houses, every one of which has a cupola on it. When residents get enough of that kind of existence, as I understand it, they ascend to other heavens, "to mingle pleasantly with all the past and coming intelligences in the ages yet to come. Amen!"

Dr. Newcomer endeavors to give an idea of eternity in these poetical lines:

Yes, all systems might vanish, ten thousand timesten,
Reorganize worlds and go back then again,
But where is the end of Old Time, do you see?
No nearer, no nearer than just where you be!

In describing this illustration I have been greatly helped by a pamphlet which accompanies it, yet I feel that I have not done the subject full justice. Nevertheless, if what I have said shall enable some erring sinner to lead a different life, I shall not regret the time I have spent trying to find out what the picture means.

The editor of the Golden Gate and William Emmette Coleman have been criticising each other's language. Coleman used the words "ill health," which Mr. Owen says is "frightful English." Coleman shows that "ill health" is correct, but says truly that "frightful" can in no sense describe a grammatical inaccuracy. Having thus demonstrated Brother Owen's fallibility, Mr. Coleman proceeds to lay himself open to criticism, as, for instance, when he uses the words "well posted" in the sense of well informed. "Posted" or "posted up" is a colloquialism unworthy of a writer like Mr. Coleman. Again, Mr. Coleman says: "Dr. James A. H. Murray . . . one of the leading, if not the leading, philologist in England." He of course meant that Dr. Murray was one of the leading philologists of England, if not the leading one; but he took a very awkward way of saying it.

It is strange that these college-bred literary gentlemen should be so liable to err. Even Pixley, of the Argonaut, commits the solecism, "had it not have been," which is not much better than "I would of went," used by the pope's Irish.

In considering, recently, the case of the woman in Georgia who helped to sacrifice her boy for the good of her soul, I wrote:

Tragedies like this are exactly what might be expected from the doctrine taught; and the doctrine will continue to be taught as long as fools enough can be found to pay knaves for preaching it.

A paper in the southern part of the state endeavored to reprint the remark, and this is the result:

Sragedies like this are exactly what might be expected from the doctrine will continue to be taught as long as fools enough can be found to pay knives the preaching it.

There is some balm in the reflection that the editor meant well, and did not credit the above to FREETHOUGHT.

In his address last Sunday evening, before the Freethought Society, R. Guy McClellan made the statement that no man could get the lowest position in the custom house or branch mint of San Francisco unless he was indorsed by the ring which controls all elections and appointments, whether of a clerk or a United States Senator. I believe this statement is deplorably true. In fact, I have proof of it. I know a veteran soldier who served four years in the war. He fought in one hundred and eighty engagements on the Union side, and came home with an almost unparalleled record and an honorable discharge, but with disabilities fastened upon him from which he will never recover. By his energy and pluck he has several times placed himself and family above want, only to be thrown back again by ill health and reverses of fortune. His last streak of bad luck left him penniless, separated him from his family, and landed him in San Francisco without money, without influential friends, and without physical strength to perform hard manual labor.

The recent change of administration caused several vacancies in the branch mint at San Francisco, and this man thought that his record gave him a fair claim to fill one of them. So he laid his case before General Dimond, superintendent of the mint. He told of his record in the army during the war and in the Grand Army of the Republic since the war ended. He had a recommendation signed by all the best citizens, public and private, of his last place of residence, and to this was added the indorsement of ex-Governor Algie of Michigan. He also had a petition from a number of business firms in this city asking for his appointment to the position of guard at the mint, an office that pays a salary of about seventy-five dollars a month. Did he get the position? Up to date, no! Is he likely to get it? About as likely as I am to go to Palestine. M.

BRIEF HISTORY OF THE WEEK

Marshal Nagle shot and killed Judge Terry at Lathrop, last Wednesday for making a personal assault on Justice Field. —The police of San Francisco have begun a promising crusade against the practice of prize-fighting which has been carried on without interference for many years, to the demoralization of the community. —Francisco Lanterio, the defaulting ex-deputy auditor of Los Angeles county, fled to the mountains of San Bernardino county, but was captured. —The Salvation Army, so the chief of police reports, costs the city of San Diego more than any other organization, as an officer must attend every one of the meetings to keep the hoodlums quiet. The police find it easier to suppress the Salvationists than the hoodlums, and have ordered them to keep off the streets. The sympathies of the better classes are with the Army as against police and roughs. —Spokane Falls is rapidly rebuilding. —Truckee has a committee of "601" who are driving out toughs and other bad characters. —The frequent train robberies in the West should warn people against carrying large sums of money or valuables when traveling. —George Brown, of Grayson, Cal., got into jail last week for trying to shoot S. C. Hanscom, editor of the Modesto Herald. —"California on Wheels" will be back to San Francisco about Sept. 4. —The Idaho Constitutional Convention has completed its work.

The orphan asylum at Augusta, Me., was burned down on Sunday, the 10th. The building cost over $100,000. —The annexation of Hyde Park to Chicago relieves the locality from the workings of the state Sunday law, which has been a dead letter in Chicago for some years. —Old Lawyer Marsh, who was duped by the adventuress Madam Diss de Bar, has written a book to prove that modern spiritual phenomena are of the same nature as Bible miracles. —The Huns working at the Hecla Coke works, Greensburg, Pa., have been rioting in the interests of more pay. —Experiment demonstrates that the so-called elixir of life discovered by Dr. Brown-Sequard is an effective tonic. —The Massachusetts rifle team which went to England and won every shooting match entered, have returned, reaching New York Aug. 9. —Robert Healy, the Trappist monk who broke his vows thirty years ago, married, and was excommunicated by the pope, died at Anamosa, Ia., Aug. 10, aged 80. —President Harrison went to Bar Harbor, Maine, last week to visit Blaine. He got a cordial reception all along the route. —The great tunnel of the Cumberland Gap, which unites the states of Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia, was opened Aug. 8.

A serious insurrection of native Hawaiians took place at Honolulu the first part of this month. The king's palace was stormed and Kalakaua had to flee for his life. The Honolulu Rifles put down the rebellion, but there was considerable blood shed. —There is a strong movement in England for the reprieve of the Maybrick woman convicted and sentenced to be hanged for poisoning her husband. —The poet Tennyson celebrated the eightieth anniversary of his birthday on the 6th. He is about a year older than Gladstone. —The senate court of France has found Boulanger guilty of conspiracy.

ON THE TRAIL.

To the Editors of Freethought:

From Coquille city, on the Coquille, I staged it through the grand old forest of evergreens, circling around among the rocks and hills thirteen miles to Isthmus Slough, where the little steamer Coos took us all on board for Marshfield, the metropolis of Coos county. The Slough widened out into a beautiful bay and in an hour we were at our destination and very comfortably ensconced at the Blanco House. This is a fine little "city" of fifteen hundred people, a regular saw-dust town, which, some day not far in the future, the demon of fire will obliterate, as it is built up entirely of wood and very compact, while a large portion of the streets and lots are covered up one to three feet deep with saw-dust to keep out the tide waters and obviate mud, but it is rather a treacherous foundation to build a solid city on. "Nob Hill," close up behind the town, is not yet utilized for the "Nobs" to build on, but as the fast-growing business needs will soon absorb the low lands, the residences will begin to climb this bluff, which gives a grand view of the harbor and valley all around. At present a grave yard holds Nob Hill in undisputed sway. Why a cemetery is so often perched up on a fine hill to poison all the waters used by the people below is a mystery, for it can make no difference to the dead, laid away in their long, narrow home, where they are put; cremation ought to be the rule. This burying the dead up as near the sky as possible is evidently done to further the superstition of God and heaven being somewhere up in the clouds, so we must carry the dead in that direction. Let us keep the fine views for the living who can see and enjoy them, and either cremate or bury the departed in less sightly and useful places. This world is for the living who can utilize it.

I gave six lectures in Sentaekens Hall. Some evenings many went away because the hall was filled to overflowing, and the interest did not abate until the last lecture was given. Both newspapers spoke very highly of the lectures, one saying that Professor Seymour had accomplished the difficult feat of entertaining a large audience every night for a week. I found a very strong Liberal element here, and some regular workers and enthusiasts for the cause of "universal mental liberty." Mr. J. D. Garfield, the leading hardware and stove merchant, is the leader of Freethought, and talks it whenever the occasion seems to demand. He came here with only a twenty dollar piece, years ago, and out of the forest his big brain and iron muscle have carved a fortune. He has a large store, a big trade, an intelligent and beautiful wife, and children, all Liberals to the core. Mr. Garfield gets up all the lectures, entertains the speakers, and, if necessary, foots the bills, yet the other Liberals always do their part. Mr. George Webster, another whole-souled Freethinker, and believer in a good time now without regard to the future, and a leading dry-goods merchant, is like the Dutchman's wife, "wide out but not long;" weighs about 240 pounds, and has no expectation of "going up," either here or hereafter. Mr. Webster's help in making my visit pleasant and profitable was truly appreciated. Also friend, Garrison, Judge Hunt, Dr. Gussenhover, Lawyer Bennett, Mrs. Fannie M. Bates, Miss Blanche Bates—assistant postmistress—and Willie Bates—the gentlemanly assistant in Mr. Garfield's store—all took much interest in our work, and contributed much to its success. Mr. A. Wirth, wife and children, Mr. Hillborn and wife, all from over the bay, came, in skiffs, nearly every night, four miles or more, to be at the lectures, although it was extremely dark, damp, and foggy. These people's appreciation of my humble efforts I shall never forget; a more kindly and whole-souled folks I think I never met. Mr. Wirth, all the way from "Bingen on the Rhine," has only a few acres cleared and set to berries, and garden, from which he, by much hard labor, makes a living; no team but his boat, and yet this poor, honest, hard-working family of Germans finds means and time to take and read sixteen papers, many of them Liberal papers, and to row, every night for a week, eight or ten miles to hear Liberal and scientific lectures. Our cause of Freethought is safe in such hands and hearts as these. Mr. and Mrs. Hillborn, though getting old and feeble, and Mrs. Hillborn in very poor health, failed to hear but few of either my or Mr. Putnam's lectures—ten altogether. Think of these old folks crossing the bay, four miles wide, after eleven o'clock at night, dark and cold, going home after listening to a two-hours' discourse. Such strikers as these, from the wind-swept shores of the Atlantic to the golden sands of the Pacific, are what is building up the monument of "Universal Mental Liberty," and raising the "flag above the cross." We cannot fail to win with so much brain, and muscle everywhere enlisted in our glorious cause.

Mr. Putnam came in right away after myself, with equally as good success; gave three lectures in Marshfield and one on North Coos river, to which all the Liberals in Marshfield went and had a grand grove meeting and picnic dinner. "Put" strikes straight out from the shoulder at the monster of superstition which the church has fostered so long—the personal God idea—and is an orator, true and grand, of the sledge-hammer style. He is certainly doing a mighty work, and should be kept busy. My next place of work is Empire City. ● D. C. SEYMOUR.

AUSTRALIAN LETTER.

To the Editors of Freethought:

After considerable delay, which was incidental, I proceed to acknowledge the sample copy of FREETHOUGHT kindly forwarded by you. I was much pleased in reading it and also pleased in lending it, but not so much pleased with borrowers who passed it from hand to hand until I lost sight of it altogether for a time; and having neglected to register the address I was obliged to await its recovery, and now I am at a loss to know whether this, meant, as it is, for a public correspondence, is called for. Some time ago I wrote an article (or whatever you may please to call it) to the Truth Seeker, but not having received a copy of that paper I am in total ignorance as to its fate, and one don't like writing for the waste paper basket if he knows it, nor would any editor take the trouble to read matter repeatedly that was not fit for insertion. Besides, it would be a wanton waste of time and of what the egotistic might mistake for talent; and I may here say that if I don't receive a copy of FREETHOUGHT I can dream of waste paper baskets and matchbox factories until I shall have been convinced that it is more profitable to listen to other people's stories than to insist on having them listen to mine. There is one thing that may be prejudicial to my success as a newspaper correspondent: I pay but little attention to orthography and use any word which may be generally understood to express my ideas. I know that most people are partial to big words, but I never read the medical journal. As regards editors, may I ask whether it is the ideas or an unpopular style of expressing them that is the matter with rejected articles? If it is the former, the accompanying critique* is into the waste paper basket plump, for the ideas are not in accordance with orthodox Freethought.

Judging from the characteristics of the Australians, their great partiality to American literature and indeed American everything, it occurred to me that FREETHOUGHT might gain an extensive circulation in these colonies. It was this fact that suggested to my mind the idea of an Australian correspondent. If the eagerness with which they devoured the contents of the sample copy be an index to final results, it would bid fair for the little stranger. There is no Freethought writer so extensively read here as Ingersoll; his lectures are in the hands of almost every Freethinker, and they give ample testimony of their appreciation of his works through the Freethought press throughout the colonies. Even the clergy don't seem to denounce him from the pulpit in the same bitter manner as they do the local lecturers. If he should visit Australia he would have a grand reception among the Freethinkers, and if he delivered a lecture there is no building in Melbourne (and there are some pretty large ones) could accommodate the audience. The clergy would be there en masse.

Tecoma, Upper Yarra district, Victoria. F. W. HARRIS.

[*We are much pleased to hear from our Australian friend, and would be glad always to have him keep us informed of progressive events in the sixth continent. The "critique" referred to is upon the utterances of an Australian Freethought lecturer printed in "an old Infidel" sheet, and not of sufficient contemporaneous human interest to be worthy the two or three columns of space it would occupy. Something on a live topic would be quite acceptable.—ED. FREETHOUGHT.]

"THE CHURCH OF THE POOR!"

There is something astounding in the barefaced impudence with which the Roman Catholic church makes merchandise of charity. We said on a former occasion in these columns that this political institution is coining money for the building of its magnificent cathedrals by using its poor and unfortunates as pretenses to draw golden supplies from the public funds raised by taxation on non-Catholic property. Whenever in the future, and we hope it may be a near future, the American people shall be, by some specially glaring act of Roman rapacity, roused from their present, curious and almost criminal lethargy in matters of Irish Roman Catholic aggression on American supremacy in all departments of government, they will stare with amazement at the figures which will tell them how a political church can plunder a sleeping state.

That our pen may quickly reach the case of the Indians in our own country and in our own day we reluctantly forego, with all its allurements of intensest contrast between Roman Catholic malevolence, hypocrisy, avarice, and murder on the one hand, and Indian benevolence, innocence, generosity, and suffering on the other, the temptation to let it draw the harrowing outlines of the early domination of the Holy Roman church in the two Americas. By way of instantaneous stride from the coarse and brutal methods of the past to the suave and politic manoeuvres of the present, we will merely set forth briefly the case of the Protestant Oka Indians, who have been long struggling against the rapacity of the Roman church in Canada. Before the occupation of Canada by the English, the French king, under the canon law of the Catholic church, granted to a French Catholic order, called "The Seminary of St. Sulpice," the lands of the Oka Indians as a trust to be used for their conversion to the true church. The remarkable feature in the transaction is that the grant was not absolute, as under Roman Catholic doctrine any Roman Catholic sovereign has the right to take the possessions of any non-Catholic nation, especially if the taking be done in the interest of Holy Mother Church. Through all these generations all the legal documents pertaining to the lands of the Oka Indians have recited the fact that this religious order held the property in trust. But somehow, many of the tribe of the Okas became Protestants, and these have been long and severely harassed by the meek and lowly order of St. Sulpice, which now, although it assumes proprietorship over the land, offers to pay these Protestant Indians a few paltry thousands for their immensely valuable share in this property, and is making desperate efforts to force them away from the homes of their fathers. Fortunate Okas to have their struggle with the One True Church of God in this impious age! If it had occurred in the days of Pizarro, instead of being offered a golden compromise for their rights and the privilege of moving away from their homes, they would have been derided for their claims and burned to death for heresy!

Only a few weeks ago the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions held an annual meeting in Washington. The late plenary council of Baltimore organized a notable committee of bishops, among whom are the archbishops of Baltimore, San Francisco, and Portland, to occupy a position in which influence was required. Of this strongest Roman Catholic committee in America no less august a prelate than Cardinal Gibbons is the head. Before the committee was appointed by the great Catholic convention of prelates at Baltimore, the wife of General William Tecumseh Sherman and her brother, General Charles Ewing, instituted a bureau to look after the interests of the Indians and to represent these bishops before the government of the United States. In January, 1874, Bishop Bayley appointed General Ewing himself Catholic Indian commissioner. The bureau employs religious communities, who, of course, get only their food and raiment for their time, and have at present in operation about forty boarding-schools for Roman Catholic Indians in Arizona, California, New Mexico, Indian Territory, Indiana, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Dakota, and Montana, at the expense of the United States government. One of the directors resides at Washington for the purpose of making contracts with the government. This contractor, who represents the bishops, receives from the treasury of the United States from ninety to one hundred and fifty dollars per head per annum to maintain Catholic Indian children in boarding-schools. In 1884, the bishops received from our government for this business, $65,220; in 1885, $113,614; in 1886, $148,744; in 1887, $214,760; in 1888, $244,677; in 1889, $344,545. The contractor is expected to receive for the bishops for the year 1890, $431,930. So that, in only seven years, $1,563,490 of public money is delivered over to these influential Roman Catholic bishops, specially appointed on account of their influential positions to carry out a money-making scheme, devised by a Roman Catholic woman whose power is derived from being the wife of a general of the army.

It may not be correct to say that the scheme was devised by Mrs. Sherman or any other lay person. It was most probably devised by the powers which carried it out, and Mrs. Sherman was used on account of her influential husband. The church itself could not, as a matter of policy, make direct application to a non-Catholic government like ours for public money to be handled by the church as it handles all moneys, without accounting to any exterior authority, as it acknowledges none. The establishment of a go-between with a resident contractor is an ingenious and effective contrivance. The contractor gets from the government the utmost dollar for the support of each Indian child. The money goes to the bishops, and they employ unpaid labor, and thus reap as large a profit as possible from their pious business transactions with a government which derives its fund by taxing heretical property. To aid the bishops in their boarding-house business, there is a subsidiary society which raises money by private subscriptions for buildings, etc., so that all the money, from eight to twelve dollars per month, paid by the government to maintain Roman Catholic pickaninnies in boarding-schools goes direct to the bishops to operate the boarding-school business with pauper labor. Many a mechanic's boarding-house is run at three dollars per week at a profit when all the labor is paid for. And this is the institution which calls itself a church, and which claims the title of "The Church of the Poor," while her prelates are called princes, and our streets swarm with Roman Catholic white children, ragged, bare-footed, uneducated, and hungry.—Argonaut.

THE RELIGION OF CARLYLE.

Moncure D. Conway has contributed recently a notable article on Carlyle's religion. Mr. Conway knew the Sage of Chelsea intimately, and states that Carlyle was the most remarkable religious phenomenon he ever encountered. It is generally supposed that Carlyle, while not orthodox, was at least very friendly toward Christianity. Mr. Conway says that such was not the case; on the contrary, Carlyle was so bitter against Christianity that it "appeared as if he felt a sense of personal wrong." For some reason the sweeping, sometimes biting, skepticism of his conversation did not get into his books. One evening, talking of William Maccall, with whom John Stirling had a notable correspondence, Carlyle said: "I remember Maccall; I have lost sight of him, but remember a vigorous way of expressing himself. I recall his breaking out in conversation about elevating the people; 'What can you do for a people whose God is a dead Jew?' A fair enough question. If I had my way the world would hear a pretty stern command—Exit Christ!"

Mr. Conway gives a number of very interesting anecdotes, all illustrative of Carlyle's uncompromising position towards the prevailing superstition. I reproduce a few: Carlyle was invited to pass some days in a country town in Scotland with an old college-mate. They had been fellow-skeptics, and many a time had between them disposed of Christianity. But his old friend had become rich, the leading man in the town, and naturally a zealous supporter of the kirk. He invited the parsons and deacons to meet Carlyle at dinner. According to usage, the host said grace himself; it was a grace so long, unctuous, canting, that Carlyle could not stand it, but broke in with—"Oh, F—, this is damnable!" One Christmas evening he said: "I observed some folk at the corner a little drunker than usual this morning. Then I remembered it was the birthday of their Redeemer." Mr. Conway was present one evening when some one asked: "Mr. Carlyle, can you believe that all these ignorant and brutal millions of people are destined to live forever?" "Let us hope not," was the emphatic reply. He had never been in a church of any kind since the visit to South Place Chapel, when one day in the country he was persuaded by some ladies to go and hear a famous Methodist. He returned furious about the prayer, which he summed up in these words: "O Lord, Thou hast plenty of treacle,—send us down a flood of it!"—Alastor, in Secular Thought.

DID JESUS CHRIST RISE FROM THE DEAD?*

VII.

The flying to heaven is one of the incidents of the resurrection, the "evidences" for which I must deal with. Christ's original garment without a seam fell to his enemies; they cast lots for it. His next habiliments were grave-clothes, and these he left folded up (he had been a tidy sort of person) in the stone sepulchre, when he took it into his head to get up and have a stroll in the streets of Jerusalem. He had, for his stroll, neither his seamless coat nor his grave-clothes. When a person who has been three days dead and in hell thinks of taking a walk he evidently dispenses with clothes, likely as interfering with the physical grace and pedestrian agility he has determined to display. He was first seen by Mary Magdalene at daybreak, she "supposing him to be the gardener." Had the gardener been in the habit of strutting about naked in the presence of Mary Magdalene? To have seen him, or what she supposed to be him, in a state of nudity, seems to have caused no surprise to the quondam seven-deviled Mary.

The tragedy that solemnizes the bloody sweat of Gethsemane cannot impart a shadow of gravity to the screaming burlesque of the hero of the synoptic gospels eating a piece of broiled fish and then going to the top of Mount Olivet for a fly to heaven. The burlesque is badly done. The late H. J. Byron would have made Christ eat fifty swallows, and not a junk of salt fish, if fly he must. The faithful have no way out of the absurdity by urging that his body was not his body, unless they admit that his resurrection was a delusion and a juggle. The body had wounds, and ate fish. It left its clothes behind, too, in the stone sepulchre, as we are assured by Holy Writ; so it must have been a body, and nothing more, strutting about Jerusalem, as naked as Adam was before he arrayed his loins in a phillibeg of leaves. I do not know what the prudes of Jerusalem thought of the holy post-mortem can-can of a nude male god. Let us hope, in the interest of decency, that the resurrected one was arrayed in one of Mary Magdalene's petticoats. If he were not, of course the sooner he flew to heaven, or somewhere hotter, the better.

Where did he fly to? If he had only had a look through a telescope into the illimitable space into which he was about to plunge, he should have allowed Pontius Pilate to have re-crucified him, rather than have leapt off the disc of the earth into the measureless. Even if he flew at the rate of a thousand miles an hour, he must have felt tolerably exhausted before he reached his first station, the moon, 240,000 miles away. How his wounds would smart in the intense cold of the upper air, and how he must have shivered, even if arrayed in the Magdalene's warmest petticoat. How he must have searched about in the moon for, say, another piece of broiled fish, but had, most probably, to regale himself with a lump of brimstone from the crater of an extinct volcano; and after his recent three days in hell, brimstone must have been repulsive to him. At the rate of a thousand miles an hour, he has not yet reached certain of the more distant of the fixed stars which the telescope has revealed to us; and yet, on the furthest verge of telescopic revelation, we have not described a single vestige of the kingdom of heaven. So, if he and Mary's petticoat still hold out, and he has kept flying at the rate of a cannon ball, one thing is certain—he has not yet reached the kingdom of heaven. He was to sit at the right hand of the Father, and I should think by the time he gets there he will not be out of need of a seat—if, indeed, he have anything left to sit with.

*By Saladin, editor of the Agnostic Journal.

It is a pity that poor Jesus did not know a little more about the universe he had assisted Jah and the Ghost to "create." He, like many of his more intellectual predecessors, had utterly miscalculated the distance between earth and heaven. Heaven, in his day, was just above the clouds, and on the very shortest notice a god, however gouty, could step down upon the rim of the earth and meddle with the affairs of men. Hell, too, at that time, was just under the earth, and the earth was flat. The earth has since been discovered to be spherical, although its maker was not aware of the fact. Magellan sailed round the globe, and found no hell under it. Nay, more, not only did the earth cease to be flat, but it was found to have both a diurnal and an annual revolution; so that there was really no up and no down! So in what direction Christ flew all depended upon what time of the day he flew. What a pity he was not aware of this! Who knows that he did not fly off in the wrong direction altogether, and that certain of us, when we reach hell, may not find him sitting on the right hand of Beelzebub?

Moral—primus: When you "create" a world; make yourself acquainted with a few facts in regard to it; and do not consent to go and have yourself hammered to a couple of sticks till you know exactly what for, and feel quite sure that you know your way back to where you started from.

Moral—secundus: Men will believe and die in millions to maintain a fable too monstrously absurd to recommend itself to the credence of an orang-outang.

CALL FOR THE OREGON CONVENTION.

By virtue of the authority vested in us by the Oregon State Secular Union, we hereby call the FIRST ANNUAL CONVENTION of said Union to meet in Portland, Oregon, at Masonic Hall, on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, the 12th, 13th, and 14th days of October, 1889; the object being to secure the total separation of church and state.

The advocates of this measure in Washington Territory are invited to join their Oregon friends in this Convention.

Done at Portland, Oregon, this thirty-first day of July, 1889.

C. BEAL,
J. K. SEARS, A. F. NEUNERT, } Board of Directors.
LEE LAUGHLIN, L. AMES,

SECULAR WORK IN OREGON.

Mrs. Carrie E. Haight, of East Portland, vice-president, will take charge of the immense ball and sociable to be held on Monday evening at the close of the Convention. She is now selecting her assistants to help conduct it and introduce the multitude. The admission will be fifty cents a person.

W. C. Clow, of Hillsboro, is the third vice-president heard from. He says: "I am always on deck ready for action. A few of us, in this town, hold the fort and propose to hold it. I heartily agree with C. B. Reynolds. It is sound advice. Will send you a list of Liberals here, put the call in our local papers, and raise some money."

Elder T. H. Starbuck, of the North Pacific Conference of Seventh Day Adventists, writes: "We will send a representative of our denomination to address the Oregon State Secular Union at its meeting in October next."

D. R. Sutton, formerly a Baptist minister but now a rising Liberal in Oregon, went out into Portland, secured a pledge of $25 now, and $40 hereafter, and collected $15.50 as follows: Cash, $6.50; P. O. Chilstrom, $1; John Seligen, $1; Ed. Aliskey, $2.50; A. H. Devers, $2.50; Meier & Frank, $2.

Liberals, in Oregon and Washington, who read FREETHOUGHT, I wish to talk a moment with you. We have to pay fifty cents to the daily journal here for every seven words of a prominent notice of our coming Convention. Will you co-operate with me to save a portion of this expense, by having the call or a notice published in your local papers before the next issue of FREETHOUGHT, and write, or send me a copy of the paper, so I may know that it is done. Second: Invite every Liberal lady and gentleman you meet to attend the Convention. By this concert of action in our common cause we can make a good meeting, and in no other way.

C. BEAL,
President Oregon State Secular Union.

THE PRESERVATION OF MORAL PURITY IN CHILDREN.

I have a little boy of thirteen who will refuse listening to any of the vile talk of his playfellows, and never hesitates to tell his mother, or me, anything which may strike him as strange or suggestive of evil. When he was eleven years old, he happened to fall in with a lot of rough boys using very vile language and telling all sorts of indecent and obscene tales, causing my boy to feel an irrepressible curiosity about the sexes and the generative functions. He wanted an explanation and solution for his doubts, and I was compelled either to give him that explanation or let him go to other sources of information. Now, I am aware of the nature of such sources as are accessible to children, and I was afraid to trust my boy to them.

I obtained a number of books with drawing on the physiology of plants, animals, and man, and commenced with plants. I showed him a great many drawings of the generative organs of plants, calling his attention to the beautiful leaf-like shapes of these organs, and, more particularly, to the difference between these organs in the male and female flowers, the transmission of the pollen and the development of the seed in the female flower. I continued that part of the subject until he ceased asking questions upon it and said he understood the matter.

Then I proceeded to the lowest kinds of living creatures, and pointed out how similar their generative organs were to those of plants. In this connection the incident of contact between male and female presented itself so naturally that the boy almost found it out by himself. The progress from worms and mollusks to fishes, birds, and animals was now so natural as to require hardly any further explanation, the drawings of the generative organs being enough to explain everything to the full satisfaction of the boy. Before we had advanced to man, my boy told me, I need not go any further, he had seen enough of it and thought he understood it perfectly. I was very glad to hear him say so, and much more so when he told me that none of the boys who had ever spoken to him about such matters, really did understand the whole science of it.

Ever since the boy has been fully satisfied upon the subject. He will not listen to anything his friends will tell him upon these secret matters because he esteems their talk idle prating of ignorance. The serious instruction he received upon the subject caused him to receive it in a sort of scientific mood, excluding the possibility of frivolity and prattling levity. No doubt, therefore, this knowledge has eradicated that morbid curiosity with which the suggestions of his companions had filled him, and has thereby preserved him in all his innocence and purity of word and thought.

Another advantage of the scientific knowledge is this, that it gives to the boy the courage of his opinion. He need not now be afraid of being called a baby, and twitted about ignorance. On the contrary he is able to silence his opponents by the superiority of his knowledge. His strength has been increased by the study; his contempt of the ignorance, displaying itself in bad jokes and vile insinuations, has become very pronounced; and his determination to act up to his knowledge and be upright and pure, has grown much clearer and firmer.—A. H. HEINEMANN, in the Open Court.

GOD IN THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. Warner, chairman of the preamble committee, is to be highly commended for his excellent work and for the courage he displayed in refusing to put God into the preamble simply to gratify a lot of hypocrites who display more greed for spoils than gratefulness to the almighty. There is hardly any possibility of improving the preamble: "We, the people of the state of Washington, to preserve our rights, do order this constitution." It is brief and to the point; it is manly and admirable. The idea of adding "profoundly grateful to Almighty God," etc., is simply hypocrisy on the part of politicians, who think no more of God in dealing in politics than we think about the inhabitants of the sun when dealing with our fellow-men on this planet. If our Solons are disposed to be grateful to somebody while forming the constitution of Washington, let them add to the preamble,

"Grateful to our noble fathers for the sacrifices they made upon the altar of liberty and for the sacred inheritance of the freedom we now enjoy." There is something original in a preamble like this; there is some logic in associating the preservation of our rights with those from whom we inherited them; there is something in it that appeals to the heart of every free-man, whether he is religious or not; and, above all, there can be in it no hypocrisy or "shrewdness in driving a bargain to suit the temperance folks."—Northern Light, Spokane Falls, Wash.

The Moslem's Belief Similar to Christianity.

Every Moslem believes devoutly in a personal God, in an overruling Providence, in the mission and miracles of Christ, whom they designate as the messiah; in the duty of prayer, in the immortality of the soul, in a future state of rewards and punishments, and in the inspiration of the Bible. An educated Moslem, if asked why he does not become a Christian, may not improbably reply that, according to his own interpretation of the New Testament, he is one already. Thus, in a letter lately received from one of my friends, he styles himself "a Moslem and a Christian at the same time."

Though a most pious and sincere Mohammedan, he claims to be one of those "who profess and call themselves Christians," for whom we pray every Sunday that they may be led into the way of truth. They hold that Islam was the latest revelation, perfecting the Christian revelation, just as Christianity supplemented the revelation given to the Jews. Mohammed may be considered as a reformer of Christianity; like Luther he denounced certain superstitions that had grown up, such as monastic celibacy, the worship of images, of the crucifix, and of the Virgin Mary.

The Koran says that God gave the gospel to Jesus to proclaim, and that he put kindness and compassion into the hearts that followed him, but "as for the monastic life, they invented it themselves." "In the time of Mohammed," says one of my friends, "Christianity had become corrupt, as many of your own writers admit, and it was these corruptions that it was Mohammed's mission to reform. We reject the corruptions of Christianity. But we claim to have a final revelation, predicted by your own prophets, just as the coming of the messiah was foretold to the Jews, who nevertheless blindly rejected him, as you reject Mohammed."—Egyptian Note Book.

THE SUMMER AND FALL CAMPAIGN.

S. P. Putnam has the following lecture appointments in Oregon and Washington:

Cheney ... Or., Aug. 19,	Monument ... Or., Sept. 16, 17,
Rosalia ... " " 20,	Hay Stack ... " " 18,
Sprague ... " " 21,	Lone Rock ... " " 19, 20,
Pasco ... " " 22,	Fossil ... " " 21, 22,
Dayton ... W. T., Aug. 24, 25,	Hillsboro, Or., Sept., 25, 26, 27, 28,
Pomeroy ... W. T., Aug. 26,	North Yamhill ... Or., Sept. 29,
La Grande, Or. ... Aug. 29,	Forest Grove ... " " 30,
Union ... Or. " 30,	Talent, Or., and vicinity Oct. 3, 4, 5,
Baker City, Or. Sept. 1,	6, 7,
Crocker City, Or., " 2, 3,	Linkville ... Or., Oct. 11, 12, 13,
Prairie City, Or., and vicinity, Sept.	Sacramento ... Cal., Oct. 20,
5, 6, 7,	San Francisco ... " " 27,
Fox Valley ... Or., Sept. 9, 10,	Los Angeles and vicinity the month
Long Creek ... " " 11, 12,	of November,
Hamilton ... " " 14, 15,	San Diego and vicinity the month of December.

"The Glory of Infidelity," published by Putnam & Macdonald, San Francisco, at 10 cents, is written by Samuel P. Putnam, and admirers of the sensible and feeling style of this writer will no doubt want it. Here are the concluding paragraphs:

"I rejoice in the empire that has been won by the perpetual doubts of man.

"The old Roman, when he looked upon his country's magnificent conquests and majestic power, was proud indeed to say, 'I am a Roman citizen.' And when I look upon the empire of Infidelity, blazing along the track of human progress, revealing new continents with fresh and golden fruit, fountains of joy and heights of splendor, then indeed am I proud to say, 'I am an Infidel.'"—The Truth Seeker

The Progress of Man.

Hard was the lot of our fathers, the men of the early world,
 Beast-like, scratching the earth for a niggardly dole of her fruit.
 Wedged in the clefts of the hills, in the hollows of tree-trunks curled.
 Groping in glooms of the cave, starving on berry and root.

Shelterless, weaponless, weak, a haggard and wandering brood,
 Seared by the brand of the sun, by the whirlwind scattered and tossed.
 Buried in drifts of the snow, whelmed by the rivers in flood.
 Flayed by the scourge of the storm, scarred by the dagger of frost.

A wretched and barbarous race, unskilled, at the mercy of all,
 In haste to escape from its foes to the hiding-place of the dead;
 Hunted of hunger, and lean, whose life was a piteous crawl
 From the dark of the womb to the dark of the grave through the shadow of dread!

But we! we are cunning and strong, we have made all wisdom our own;
 We have mastered all arts, we have tools and raiment and roof overhead;
 We laugh at the shriek of the winds, we dance on the brute overthrown,
 With his skin we have clothed us about, with his flesh we have filled us and fed.

Our fathers, the cowering men of the caves, were the cave bear's prey;
 They fled him, we seek him; the snows with his blood, not ours, shall be dyed;

We follow his tracks through the drift, ha! ha! we spear him and slay;
 We feast on the fat of his ribs; we comfort our loins with his hide.

Oh, marvelous progress of man! oh, race of unspeakable craft!
 Oh, strikers of fire from the heart of the rock in a fortunate hour!
 Who have fitted the sharpened flint to the wonderful pine wood haft;
 In the day of your weakness and want, who dreamed of the day of your power?
 —H. D. Traill.

Prayers Recommended.To the Editors of Freethought:

Since prayers for cooler weather have been offered in the churches, quite a change is noticeable. Some years since, during a long dry spell, prayers for rain were ordered in the church, and sure enough the genial showers came. I am not disposed to question the efficacy of prayers in these matters—especially in cloudy weather. It is a well-known fact that the firing of heavy artillery will shake out the shining drops from the highest and thinnest clouds.

Why, then, upon the same principle, should not the reverberating clang of church bells, the heavy tones of the organ, the united voices of thousands, and the hoarse groans of prayer produce the same effect?

If rain can be so easily produced, why should our people be to so much trouble and expense in making ditches for irrigating purposes? If this one thing needful can be obtained by the mere effort of prayer, I would say at once "Let us all pray." But perhaps the temperance people will object to the use of distilled water, coming even from the clouds.

J. C. P.

God in the Washington Constitution.To the Editors of Freethought:

Inclosed find 25 cents for three copies of "God in the State." Through the efforts of the different church organizations and the trickery of toadying and unscrupulous politicians, a modified form of "him" or "it" crept into the constitution, and, encouraged by their success in this instance, "God's chosen people" are laboring day and night for a Sunday rest clause and the exemption of church property from taxation.

Liberals are unorganized on the Sound, and while a few are earnestly at work, the many look apathetically at the encroachments of the orthodox wire-pullers.

Talmage will be on the Sound in a few days—probably "imported at great expense" to assist God in running the convention.

B. F. Underwood will visit us in about a month, and it is to be hoped a joint debate of the questions of most vital importance to the new state can be arranged between him and Talmage, to take place at the capital.

The inclosed newspaper clipping will give you some idea of the state of affairs in the convention. Yours for truth, equity, and justice,
 Snohomish, Wash. C. H. PACKARD.

A Clergyman's Error.

In America, a nation of sixty million people, Infidelity has but one representative, and he shuns the light of oral discussion.—James Campbell, V.D.M.

Mr. Campbell, when he penned the above, was not aware that he was writing the most glaring misstatement. I am more inclined to think that he was ignorantly honest, than that he dishonorably wrote what he knew to be false, as the extract contains two statements that every intelligent person knows to be untrue. Mr. Campbell has often asserted that he was ready at any time to defend his religion and Bible against other denominations, and Infidels in particular. He has also publicly asserted that S. P. Putnam was no debater and that he dare not debate. About two months ago Mr. Campbell was challenged to meet S. P. Putnam in joint debate, the discussion to be held in Hillsboro some time in September. It remains to be seen whether Mr. Campbell will come to the front or show the white feather. He has now the opportunity of meeting three noted representative Liberals. They are all within gunshot, and he should not miss this chance to vanquish the Infidel. What a glorious opportunity to show to the godly people of Hillsboro with what ease the Infidel can be refuted. The question that agitates the people of this burg is, will he meet the Infidel? Echo answers, "It's doubtful." Liberalism has hundreds of representatives. Every Liberal invites discussion, and I ask the Rev. Mr. Campbell to prove his assertion. If he does not wish to meet representative Liberals in discussion the Liberals can accommodate him with debaters from the rank and file. It is incumbent on Mr. Campbell (if he will not meet Mr. Putnam in debate) to acknowledge that he was mistaken. I will conclude by requesting him to prove his assertion that "Liberalism has but one representative and that he fears oral discussion."

W. C. CLOW.

Hillsboro, Or.

The Priests and the People.To the Editors of Freethought:

Freethinkers of all ages have been the targets at which the wire-pullers for Jesus have fired their darts of superstition. These heelers care not how mean the act, or how much injury they cause, provided it is for Christ's sake. They improve every opportunity to insult the intelligence of one who does not believe in their creed. They will travel miles to attend a funeral, provided they can officiate, and console the living by telling them that God has killed their loved one as an inducement for them (the living) to love him. It is easier to frighten love out than to scare it in, and more in harmony with human passions; but God's ways are mysterious and past finding out. They introduce the hell-born doctrine of vicarious atonement, believe or be damned, come to Jesus or go to hell, and it matters but little what sin you commit while living if you only believe on Jesus, the last one of the sixteen crucified saviors. These virgin-born gods have always been a great source of trouble to mankind. They have been screwed into the imaginations of the credulous so firmly that nothing short of death will loosen their grip. They are the phantoms of the dreary and dark ages of the past. We have had Adonis, Bacchus, Hercules, Horus, Osiris, Mithra, Buddha, and now we have the mythical Christ. Who comes next? We have in the past enthroned and worshiped almost everything visible, from the sun down to snakes; our brains have been crammed with a host of imaginary monsters, heavenly humbugs, ghosts holy and unholy, all for the glory of God and to satisfy the avarice of the numerous heavenly wire-pullers. Our ancestors have been humbugged out of their senses by these theological side-trackers, but science is clearing the main track of their rubbish. Their crosses are now made to read, "Look out for the locomotive (when the bell rings)." We no longer shut our eyes to see God, lest he might play the same old trick he played on Moses. (Possibly, though, that is the reason why preachers shut their eyes when they address the throne of grace, fearing they might see his holiness and glory.) We no longer grow nervous over the incantations of the priests. The people have become sensible while the priests have remained fools.

H. L. SHAUG.

Del Mar.

In order to provide amusement and recreation for the parish, a Baptist church at Wolverhampton, England, has built an annex to its chapel, in which is a billiard-room, a smoking-room, and a bar for the sale of non-intoxicating drinks. The whole affair is controlled by the church officers and is well patronized and popular among the people. But the religious press denounce it bitterly and think the general adoption of such an innovation would be a calamity.

"The Story of an African Farm," a good Freethought novel, by Olive Schreiner. Price, 25 cents.

SOMETHING NEW!

—THE—
"COSMIAN HYMN BOOK."

—A COLLECTION OF—
ORIGINAL AND SELECTED HYMNS
(WORDS AND MUSIC)

For Liberal and Ethical Societies,
For Schools and the Home.

COMPILED BY L. K. WASHBURN.

Price$1.50

Address orders to
L. K. WASHBURN,
Revere, Mass.

S. P. TAYLOR & CO.,
Manufacturers and Dealers in
PAPERS!

Manila, Book, News, Hardware, Wrapping
PAPER BAGS, TWINE.
Pioneer So. Coast and San Geronimo Paper Mill.
414 and 416 Clay st., S. F.

W. M. HINTON & CO.
PRINTERS AND PUBLISHERS,

536 CLAY STREET,

Below Montgomery. San Francisco.

14 karat Gold Scarf Pin.....	$ 4 00
10 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 00
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin.....	2 75
14 karat Gold, small size Badge Pin with Diamond I, $5.....	6 00
10 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Large Badge Pin.....	4 00
10 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	3 00
14 karat Gold, Small Charm (for watch chain).....	4 50
10 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	5 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm (for watch chain).....	6 00
14 karat Gold, Large Charm "Diamond".....	14 00

*This is a full-bodied diamond, set so that it may be cleaned from the reverse side and never lose its brilliancy. Sent to any address, prepaid, and guaranteed as represented or money refunded, address,
PUTNAM & MACDONALD,
504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal.

VOLTAIRE'S ROMANCES.

A new edition, with numerous illustrations. "I choose that a story should be founded on probability, and not always resemble a dream. I desire to find in it nothing trivial or extravagant; and I desire above all that under the appearance of fable there may appear some latent truth, obvious to the discerning eye, though it escape the observations of the vulgar."—Voltaire.

12 mo., 448 pp., laid paper, with 67 engravings. Price, paper, $1 00; cloth, $1 50.

"Good-By."

We say it for an hour or for years;
We say it smiling, say it choked with tears;
We say it coldly, say it with a kiss;
And yet we have no other word than this—
"Good-by."

We have no dearer word for our heart's friend,
For him who journeys to the world's far end
And sears our soul with going; thus we say,
As unto him who steps but e'er the way—
"Good-by."

Alike to those we love and those we hate.
We say no more in parting. At life's gate,
To him who passes out beyond earth's sight,
We cry, as to the wanderer for a night—
"Good-by."

By Cold Gradation.

Heaven is not reached at a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.
We rise by the things that are under feet;
By what we have mastered of good and gain,
By the pride deposed and the passion slain,
And the vanquished ills that we hourly meet.
We hope, we aspire, we resolve, we trust,
When the morning calls us to life and light,
But our hearts grow weary, and, ere the night,
Our lives are trailing the sordid dust.
We hope, we resolve, we aspire, we pray,
And we think that we mount the air on wings,
Beyond the recall of sensual things,
While our feet still cling to the heavy clay.
Wings for the angels, but feet for men;
We may borrow the wings to find the way—
We may hope, and resolve, and aspire, and pray,
But our feet must rise, or we fall again.
Only in dreams is a ladder thrown
From the weary earth to the sapphire walls,
But the dreams depart, and the vision falls,
And the sleeper wakes on his pillow of stone.
—HOLLAND.

His Future Professson.

The Rev. Mr. Loftus stopped to talk with Uncle 'Rasmus.
"Good mornin', Brother 'Rasmus," he said. "That's a likely lookin' boy of yours. What's his name?"
"Melchi sadeck, sah."
"What are you goin' to make out of him?"
"A machinist, sah. He's allers 'ventin' suthin'. That other boy's name's Ab-salom."
"An' what are you goin' to make out of him?"
"A lawyer, I spec'. He argifies the life outen me."
"That boy over at the barn is yours, too, isn't he?"
"Yes, sah. His name's Shadrack Abend-nego. He's the laziest, ignorantest, do-nothin' in the township."
"And what are you goin' to make out of him, uncle."
"Well, sah, that's been a subjec' ob much serious momentum to me, and I've prayed a good bit ober it. I've made up my mind to make a preacher outen him. That's about all he's good for."
The Rev. Mr. Loftus walked away, rubbing the end of his nose in a contemplative manner.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

I hereby inform the fruit-growers of California that I have invented a Fruit Drier entirely different from anything I have ever seen or heard of. It is simple in construction, will be run by steam and, as I firmly believe, will remedy all the defects in other family driers—especially the Zimmerman, which I have used and understand well.

A model of the above dryer is on exhibition at J. H. Redstone's at No. 1509 Market street. Mr. Redstone will explain its construction, mode of operation, etc., to callers. He is also authorized to sell the same or organize a company to manufacture and sell said drier on this coast.
G. W. THURSTON, Sr.

RATIONAL COMMUNISM.

The Present and the Future

Republic of North America

BY A CAPITALIST.

A book advocating associate life as a remedy for poverty, vice, and crime. It deals with the present conditions of society in this country, pointing out their imperfections, and showing how it is almost impossible that the people should be other than poor and vicious under our present system. The remedy, the author thinks, is communal life, and he has drawn a vivid picture of the future Republic of North America, as it will be when society shall be organized on the principles of Rational Communism. The book is vigorously written. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.
Address, PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

J. D. SHAW'S PAMPHLETS.

The Bible, What Is It? A pamphlet containing eight chapters in refutation of the assumption that the Bible is a divine book of pure thought, and correct in all its utterances. Price 25 cents.

Studies in Theology. A clear exposition of the biblical story of man's creation and curse, theologically denominated "the fall." Price 10 cents.

The Divinity of Christ. Showing that none of the passages of scripture claimed to predict the coming of Christ has any reference to him. Price, 15 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

CHURCH AND STATE.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC
SCHOOLS.—THE NEW
AMERICAN PARTY,
A Criticism by "Jefferson."

Price, 10 cents. Address
PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

GIRARD'S WILL

—AND—

Girard College Theology.

An Expose

Of the perversion of Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest to Philadelphia by the Christian churches and Young Men's Christian Association.

By RICH. B. WESTBROOK, D.D., LL.D.
Price $1. Address, Putnam & Macdonald.

Dr. Wood's Rhubarb Bitters

impart a delicious flavor to all drinks, cure dyspepsia, promote digestion, and regulate the bowels. Ask your dealer for them. Agency with J. O. Scott, 655 Sacramento street, San Francisco, Cal.

WATCHFUL WATCH-BUYERS WILL WANT

WETTSTEIN'S

WELL GOING, WARRANTED WATCHES AND WATCH WORK.

Unequaled in quality and price. All carefully examined before shipment and accompanied by written guarantee. Order of WETTSTEIN, who has been established in the same town 31 years; who is an expert in his line, and who is not afraid to speak his honest thought.

LATEST IMPROVED AMERICAN STEM-WINDERS.—Three-ounce Silverine case, 7 jewels, $8; 11 jewels, $9.50; 15 jewels, $12.50; do., adjusted, $16.50. In 3-ounce Coin Silver case, $11, $12.50, $15.50, and $19.50. In 4-ounce case, $1 extra, and in 4-oz., dust-proof case, $2 extra. In best open-face, dust-proof filled Gold case, 7 jewels, $16; 11 jewels, $17.50; 15 jewels, $20.50; do., adjusted, $24.50; do., hinged back, inside glass cap, $2 extra; do., gold cap, $4 extra; extra fine engraved, $1 and $2 additional. Hunting cases, Gold cap, 7 jewels, $23; 11 jewels, $24.50; 15 jewels, $27.50; do., adjusted, $31.50. In special artistic engraved Louis XIV. cases, $3 to $10 more. The latter are rarely seen in the best stores. All filled cases guaranteed 20 years. Beware of others!

THE CELEBRATED "OTTO WETTSTEIN" WATCH.—The best in the world for the money; all modern improvements; a perfect watch. In Silverine case, $19.50; in 3-ounce coin Silver case, $22.50; 4-ounce, $23.50; 5-ounce, $25; 6-ounce, $27 (no better sold for $40 elsewhere). In open-face, dust-proof case, filled Gold, $27; do., hinged, glass inside cap, $29; do., gold cap, $31; do., hunting, $33; do., Louis XIV. style, $35; in special artistic cases, $3 to $10 more; in 14-karat solid Gold cases, $50, $60 to $100.

LADIES' GOLD WATCHES.—All hunting, stem wind; best filled Gold cases, $18, $20, $26; 14-karat solid Gold, $28, $30, $36, $40, etc., to $150; latter special fine artistic embossed cases, set with Diamonds and other jewels.

DIAMONDS.—I am an expert in this line, and guarantee my goods at least 20 per cent below lowest market price. Rings, Pins, Eardrops, Studs, etc., worth $35. for $25; do., worth $70, for $50; do., worth $100, for $75; do., worth $200, for $150; do., worth $500, for $375. Sent subject to approval, and cash refunded if not strictly as represented.

RINGS AND EMBLEMS.—A specialty. A full line of solid Gold and best Plated Jewelry of the latest designs. Select from any catalogue, and I will fill order at lower prices or send better goods.

SUNDRIES.

Best Spectacles or Eye-glasses	$1.00	6 Rogers Bros.' tr.-plated Table-spoons	$3.40
Gold do., $5 and	6.00	Solid coin Silver Spoons, marked, per oz	1.60
(Send line of finest type you can read		Silver Thimbles	.30
14 in. from eyes; and I can fit you.)		Elegant 8-day Alarm Clock, worth $6	4.50
Best Razor (a luxury) $2; a good one	1.00	4 Best Violin Strings	.50
6 Rogers Bros' best triple-plated Knives	1.75	6 Guitar Strings	.70
" Forks	1.75	Largest Albums, $1, $2, $3, $4 to	10.00
" Teaspoons	1.70	Opera and Field Glasses, $5 to	15.00

All goods guaranteed satisfactory, or money refunded.

Send me your watches for repairs. Best work. Cleaning, $1; springs, $1; and returned free; will go a thousand miles as safely as one.

OTTO WETTSTEIN, Rochelle, Ill.

N. B. For prices of FREETHOUGHT BADGES see other column of this paper.

"A REMARKABLE BOOK," SAYS DR. EADON, land; a graduate of three universities, and retired after 50 years' practice, he writes: "The work is priceless in value, and calculated to regenerate society. It is new, startling, and very instructive." It is the most popular and comprehensive book treating of MEDICAL, SOCIAL, AND SEXUAL SCIENCE, Proven by the sale of Half a Million to be the most popular. Readable because written in language plain, concise, and forcible. Instructive, practical presentation of "Medical Common Sense" made available to invalids, showing new means by which they may be cured. Approved by editors, physicians, clergymen, critics, and literati. Thorough treatment of subjects especially important to young men. Everyone who "wants to know, you know," will find it interesting.

4 Parts, 35 Chapters, 936 Pages, 200 Illustrations, and Just introduced, consists of a series of beautiful colored anatomical charts, in five colors, guaranteed superior to any before offered in a popular physiological book, and rendering it again the most attractive and quick-selling.

AGENTS who have already found a gold mine in it. Mr. work for Koehler writes: "I sold the first six books in two hours." Many agents take 50 or 100 at once, at special rates. Send for terms.

FREE—a 16-page Contents Table of Plain Home Talk, red, white and blue circulars, and a sample of Dr. Fellows' Health Monthly. Standard Edition, $3.25; Same print and illustrations the Popular Edition, 1.50; difference is in paper and binding. MURRAY HILL PUB. CO., 129 (N.) East 28th St., New York.

Men, Women, and Gods.

A Short History of the Bible.

By Helen H. Gardener. Introduction by Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 50 cents,

Being a popular account of the formation and Development of the Canon. By Bronson C. Keeler. Price. 50 cents,

A KENTUCKY editor of democratic political proclivities and orthodox views overwhelms a skeptical contemporary with the following: "All the assaults of that blatant Infidel who edits the æsthetic sheet across the way, cannot bring discredit upon the Bible or tarnish the fair fame of its illustrious author, Thomas Jefferson."

THE VOICE OF THE TIMES.

Addresses on the Social Question.

Clear, Concise, Sparkling, Helpful.

- "Nationalism," by Edward Bellamy.
- "The Earth for Man," by Col. T. W. Higginson.
- "Christian Socialism," by Rev. W. D. P. Bliss, the Founder of the Order.
- "Individualism," by Wm. Lloyd Garrison.
- "Profit-Sharing," by Rev. N. P. Gilman.
- "The Commonwealth of Man," by Frederic A. Hinkley.
- "The Function of the State," by Edwin D. Mead.
- "Nationalism," by Mrs. Abby Morton Diaz.

Addresses, also, by Dr. Edward McGlynn, Rev. M. J. Savage, and Mrs. E. D. Cheney.

All just printed and to be had in this form alone.

Price for all, only 20 cents.

Address The New Ideal, 192 Summer st., Boston.

A REGULAR EDUCATED AND LEGALLY QUALIFIED PHYSICIAN, and the most successful (in his specialty) as his practice will surely prove. The Doctor treats all those peculiar diseases of young and middle-aged men such as seminal weakness, impotency, &c., resulting from indiscretion and ignorance of youth. Those who are ailing should send ten (10) cents for his book, "Private Counsellor," setting forth an external Application—

A POSITIVE CURE

The book is worth many times its cost, and should be read by the young for instruction and the afflicted for relief.

All Communications Strictly Confidential.

Plain Envelopes used. The book spoken of sent sealed. Address, DR. R. P. FELLOWS, VINELAND, NEW JERSEY Say where you saw this Advertisement.

[From the Washington National View.]

Dr. Fellows, of Vineland, New Jersey offers his valuable services to all those in need of a kind, sympathetic and skillful physician. Similar advertisements from unreliable practitioners have been assailed and exposed by the press, but, Dr. Fellows, a specialist, in his line, stands foremost in his profession, and the encomiums showered upon him publicly as well as in private, are flattering evidences of the high appreciation and confidence his long and conscientious devotion to his specialties in his profession have so justly merited for him, and it is safe to trust him.

A Testimonial.

WEST LIBERTY, O., Aug. 12, 1888.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: The remedy you sent is working like a charm. I am completely surprised the way it acts upon the organs. Have only been using it one week, and that weakness, (seminal weakness) is coming out all right. Yours respectfully, J. R.

REMARKS—The above is a fair sample of the hundreds of testimonials received from all parts of the United States, from young, middle-aged and elderly men, suffering from various kinds of sexual complaints, but who are now cured by my External Application, the greatest of all known remedies for this class of diseases. As I am an out-and-out Liberal I trust the Freethinkers of the Land will give me their patronage, and not waste their time and money on Christian doctors.

DR. FELLOWS,

The Minister Hears a Louder Call.

"Beloved flock," the parson said, then paused and wiped his eyes,
 "As pastor and as people we must sever tender ties;
 I've a call to go to Blanktown to be their chosen pastor;
 A call so loud to disobey, I fear, would grieve the Master."

Replied the spokesman of the flock: "Though loud the call may be We'll call you louder to remain; an X for every V
 Those Blanktown people offer you we'll give to keep you here.
 We trust you'll hear a voice divine, our call's so loud and clear."

With sobbing voice the parson said: "My duty's clearer now;
 I'll stay with you, beloved ones; to heaven's will I bow.
 So let us sing 'Blest be the tie,' and sing it clear and strong;
 To leave you when you call so loud would be exceeding wrong!"

Then in his study sat he down, a letter to indite
 Unto the church at Blanktown. Thus did the parson write:
 "I've wrestled o'er your call with prayer; the Lord bids me to stay,
 And, consecrated to his work, I dare not disobey."

GOD IN THE STATE.

By E. A. Stevens, Secretary of the American Secular Union.

This is the best presentation of the argument against God in the Constitution, ever prepared in a pamphlet of its size.

Price, 10 cents; three copies, 25 cents; eight copies, 50 cents.

Address, Putnam & Macdonald
 504 Kearny st. San Francisco.

THE SABBATH IMPOSTURE.

BY HARRY HOOVER.

Showing that there is no authority for the Sunday laws, either Human or "Divine."

Price, 10 cents; three copies, 25 cents; eight copies 50 cents. Address this office.

ROMAN RULE OR RUIN.

BY Z. SHED.

A Summary of the atrocities committed by the Catholic church.

Price, 10 cents; four copies, 25 cents; ten copies, 50 cents. Address

PUTNAM & MACDONALD.

WHY PRIESTS SHOULD WED.

BY JUSTIN D. FULTON, D.D.

A startling book, particularly to those unacquainted with the character of the confessional. Price, $1.50.

Address this office.

THE ORDER OF CREATION.

A Discussion between Gladstone, Huxley, Muller, Linton Reville on the Conflict between Genesis and Geology
 Price, 50 cents.

THE LATEST FASHIONS

BUSINESS SUITS FOR.....$25.00
 DRESS SUITS FOR.....35.00
 PANTS TO ORDER FOR.....6.00

Samples forwarded on Application.

CHAS. F. BURGMAN.

TAILOR,

—101 FIFTH STREET 101—

PACIFIC CARRIAGE CO.

BUSINESS OFFICE, 11 POWELL ST.

OLIVER HUNCKLEY - SUPERINTENDENT

Central Stands, 200 and 207 Sutter St.

N W and S W Corners Kearny and Sutter Sts.

Telephone 1950.

J A. REED.

FIRST-CLASS

BOOTS & SHOES

Made to order. Perfect fit guaranteed. Repairing neatly done. I invite the readers of this paper to give me a trial. JAS. A. REED,
 375 Natoma st., cor. 5th, S. F.

P. A. CLARK.

CHAS. W. CLARK

DIAMOND VALLEY NURSERIES.

CLARK BROS., PROPRIETORS,
NURSERYMEN.

Catalogs for Timber Culture a Specialty.

Have at Their Nurseries all Kinds of Fruit and Ornamental Trees and Vines.

Orders Filled and Delivered on Short Notice. Special Attention Given to Planting and Caring of Orchards and Vineyards.

Address

CLARK BROS.,

P. O. Box C,

San Jacinto, Cal.

REMSBURG'S WORKS.

False Claims. Price 10 cents singly; 75 cents per dozen. As a Missionary Document it is unexcelled. Among the subjects considered by Mr. Remsburg are: The Church and Morality; Criminal Statistics, showing the creeds of the prisoners in the penitentiaries; the Church and Civilization; the Church and Science; the Church and Learning; the Church and Liberty; the Church and the Anti-slavery Reform; the Woman's Rights Movement; the Temperance Reform; the Church and the Republic.

Fathers of the Republic. Paine, Washington, Jefferson, and Franklin. Price 15 cents.

Bible Morals. Twenty Crimes and Vices Sanctioned by Scripture; Falsehood and Deception; Cheating; Theft and Robbery; Adultery and Prostitution; Murder; Wars of Conquest and Extermination; Despotism; Intolerance and Persecution; Injustice to Woman; Unkindness to Children; Cruelty to Animals; Human Sacrifices; Cannibalism; Witchcraft; Slavery; Polygamy; Intemperance; Poverty and Vagrancy; Ignorance and Idiocy; Obscenity. Price, single copies, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1. Special discount on larger quantities.

Sabbath-Breaking. This is the best and most thorough work ever written on the Sabbath from a rational point of view. Large and handsome print. The question is discussed under the following heads: Origin of the Sabbath Idea; the Jewish Sabbath; the Christian Scriptures and the Sabbath; Examination of Sunday Arguments; Origin of Christian Sabbath; Testimony of the Christian Fathers; the Sabbath during the Middle Ages; the Puritan Sabbath; Testimony of Christian Reformers, Scholars, and Divines; Abrogation of Sunday Laws. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.

WASHBURN'S WORKS.

The False Teachings of the Christian Church. Price, 10 cents.

Sunday and the Sabbath. Price, 10 cents.

The Foolishness of Prayer. Price, 10 cents.

The Catholic Church and the Public Schools. Price, 5 cents.

Was Jesus Insane? Price, 10 cents.

JUST PUBLISHED.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FREETHOUGHT BOOKS.

THE GLORY OF INFIDELITY

BY SAMUEL P. PUTNAM.

"The Glory of Infidelity" was one of the poet-secretary's happiest efforts, and ranks with the best speeches of the Congress.—New York Truth Seeker.

Putnam's "Glory of Infidelity" is one of the ablest defenses of Freethought to which I have ever listened.

JOHN E. REMSBURG.

The lecture was "The Glory of Infidelity." No man or woman could hear it without being inspired by the heroic Infidel manhood and womanhood coming down to us as a rich inheritance through the dreary ages of the past, and pointing with glorious hope to the "New Heaven and Earth."

J. F. BECK.

I believe I express the unanimous sentiment of all when I say that for a lecture of its character, Mr. Putnam has never been surpassed and seldom equaled on our platform—a platform famous for the talent it affords. "The Glory of Infidelity" fairly bristles with good things, and each sentence is an epigrammatic Secular sermon.

E. A. STREVS, Secretary American Secular Union.

—PRICE 10 CENTS.—

Address PUTNAM & MACDONALD, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, Cal.

INGERSOLL'S WORKS.

The Gods. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1. In five lectures, comprising: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies."

The Ghosts. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25. Contents: "The Ghosts," "Liberty for Man, Woman, and Child," "The Declaration of Independence," "About Farming in Illinois," "The Grant Banquet," "The Rev. Alexander Clark," "The Past Rises before Me Like a Dream," and "A Tribute to Eben C. Ingersoll."

Some Mistakes of Moses. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.25.

Interviews on Talmage. Paper, 50 cents; plain cloth, $1.25.

What Must We Do to be Saved? Paper, 25 cents.

The Christian Religion. By R. G. Ingersoll, Judge Jeremiah S. Black and Prof. George F. Fisher. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.

Orthodoxy. 56 pages, 12mo., paper, 10 cents. $1 per dozen, postpaid.

Ingersoll Catechised: His Answers to a Number of Vital Questions Propounded by the editor of the San Francisco. 5 cents, 50 cents per dozen; 25 copies, $1; 100 copies, $3.

Vindication of Thomas Paine from the attacks of the New York Observer. By Robert G. Ingersoll. Price, 15 cents.

A Lay Sermon, On the Labor Question. Price, 5 cents.

Address on the Civil Rights Bill. Large size octavo, paper, 10 cents.

Ingersoll's Lectures Complete. Bound in one volume, containing over 1,300 pages. $5.

Time to Quit

The Rev. Mr. Perkins, being called upon suddenly to address a Sunday-school, thought he would get a few original ideas from his young hearers.

"Children," he said, "I want some of you to tell me what I shall talk to you about to-night. What shall I say?"

At first there was no response. "That bright little fellow over there," said he, pointing to a youngster sitting in one of the back seats. "What shall I say to you to-night?" In a little, piping voice came the answer: "Say Amen, and sit down."

LATE anecdotes of the bar include the following description of Mr. Justice Maule's way of putting it: "Do you know what an oath is, my child?" "Yes, sir; I am obliged to tell the truth." "And if you always tell the truth, where will you go to when you die?" "Up to heaven, sir." "And what will become of you if you tell lies?" "I shall go down to the naughty place, sir." "Are you quite sure of that?" "Yes, sir; quite sure." "Let her be sworn. It's quite clear she knows a great deal more about it than I do."

MRS. PROOFTEXT (who remained at home, sick)—"Did you take up a collection this morning, my dear?"

REV. MR. PROOFTEXT—That's a theological point which puzzles me, my love—whether a collection where you don't get anything can properly be called a collection.—Burlington Free press.

PUTNAM'S WORKS.

The New God. 10c. The New God was made by an artist hand, guided by a poet soul. It is as perfect as sculpture. The creator makes his "god" in his own image, and breathes into his nostrils the breath of his own life.—L. K. Washburn.

Golden Throne. A romance. Price, $1.00. "The author certainly has genius. The divine creative spark is within him. The book is filled with manly thoughts, expressed in manly words, the transcript of a manly mind. Every Liberal should read 'Golden Throne.'"—Robert G. Ingersoll.

Waifs and Wanderings. A new American story. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. "A prose epic of the war; rich with incident and dramatic power; breezy from first page to last with the living spirit of to-day."—John Swinton's Factor.

Why Don't He Lend a Hand? And other Agnostic Poems. Price, 10 cents. "Mr. Putnam is a vigorous poet. His poetry rings like a bell, and stirs the reader like a trumpet."—Bulgarius.

Adam and Heva. Price, 10 cents. "A magnificent Agnostic poem, descriptive of the ever novel and ever mysterious legend of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden. The story is told with a wealth of imagination, a beauty of diction, and purity of thought which rank Mr. Putnam as a genuine poet."—The Universe, San Francisco.

The Problem of the Universe, and Its Scientific Solution. Price, 20 cents. "As a philosophical writer Mr. Putnam is always a success, and we delight to read him. His easy style and poetic expression make his productions very attractive."—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

Ingersoll and Jesus. A Poem. Price, 10 cents. "Written in a rather familiar style, but the sentiment is quite good, liberal, and sensible, and witty without being coarse. On the whole, it is a very clever dream, and very pleasantly related. It is well worth reading."—Boston Investigator.

Prometheus: A Poem. Price, $1. "It is crammed with life, thought and profound emotion, poured forth, it seems to me, with extraordinary richness and beauty."—Dr. Henry W. Bellows.

Gottlieb: His Life; or, Love Triumphant. A Romance of Earth, Heaven and Hell. Price, 25 cents. "To describe all the beauties of this simple, yet touchingly told little tale, would be a work of which I confess myself utterly incapable. To realize what it is, you must read the book itself. I have never read anything so exquisitely beautiful and good in all my life before."—Elmina Drake Slenker.

THE FIELD-INGERSOLL DISCUSSION.

Faith or Agnosticism.

A series of articles

—from—

The North American Review

—by—

REV. HENRY M. FIELD, | ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The discussion upon which are based the Remarks of
Hon. W. E. Gladstone.

Price 50 cents. Sold by Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny st., San Francisco, California.

Freethought.

A LIBERAL JOURNAL.

VOL. II—No. 34.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 24, 1889.

PRICE, TEN CENTS

Entered at the Postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as Second-class Mail Matter Jan., 1888

FREETHOUGHT.

SAMUEL P. PUTNAM, }
GEO. E. MACDONALD, } EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY AT TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR.

Address all communications, and make all Drafts, Checks, and Money Orders payable to Putnam & Macdonald, 504 Kearny Street, San Francisco, Cal. FREETHOUGHT will be supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company.

SAN FRANCISCO, - - - AUGUST 24, 1889.

It has been reported that the Italian government will not allow the pope to leave Italy. That is not so. The government cannot prevent the pope from going personally, but it will not allow him to take the Vatican furniture, treasure, and art objects with him.

THE Catholic church is still the leader of society in the prison at San Quentin. When Archbishop Riordan conducted services at that spiritual retreat a few weeks ago, he confirmed one hundred and fifty. Inspired by his example, Bishop Kip, of the Episcopal church, tried his hand last Sunday, but took only twenty-one distinguished residents into his fold.

THE Sabbatarians are making some progress in this city. Outside of the city they claim a large majority in favor of a reasonably strict observance of Sunday in the state.—Post.

All right. If the majority are in favor of a "reasonably strict observance" of Sunday, let them observe Sunday with reasonable strictness. If they are sincere they can keep Sunday voluntarily, which will please their maker just as much, we think, as it would if they had a law and a constable to make them keep it.

WE do not take any stock in the report that Cardinal Lavagerie is about to inaugurate a crusade for wresting the holy land from the hands of the infidel Mohammedans. Such a crusade would be the height of folly, and the heads of the church of Rome are not fools, whatever the rank and file may be. Besides, if the Moslems were driven from Jerusalem, who would stand at the door of the sepulchre and prevent the warring sects of Christianity from cutting one another's throats in the quarrel about the possession of their savior's tomb?

At the ministers' meeting last Monday, says the Chronicle, "the Rev. Dr Barrows denied the truth of Dr. Crafts's statement that this state had gone backward in morals and religion since the repeal of the Sunday law. On the contrary, he said, there had been a constant and gratifying progress." We hope this is so. Nothing is more pleasing than to see people living up to their convictions, freed from the coercive force of law. The Christian who observes Sunday because he would be jailed if he did otherwise deserves no credit for his action. If, on the other hand, he denies himself some pleasure out of regard for the day, he at least has the merit of sincerity. To enforce a Sunday law is to put handcuffs on the citizen and send him to church as a culprit in the care of a police officer.

FOR years it has been the custom of the English Christian Evidence Society to send a representative to the London Hall of Science to refute the Infidels. Last year the Secular Federation sent Messrs. Foote, Standring, and others to present the Freethought side of the argument, and these gentlemen performed their duty so faithfully that the Christian Society now declines to meet them.

It is learned from the English Freethought papers that the case against Dr. Voelkel, editor of the Neues Freireligiöses Sonntags Blatt (Germany), is likely to break down. Dr. Voelkel was proceeded against some time ago for a speech delivered at Erfurt, in Rhenish Saxony, wherein he asserted that the mode of Christ's death was hypothetical, as some authorities contended that he was hanged instead of crucified. The state prosecutor, at last accounts, had the matter under consideration.

THE SAN FRANCISCO FREETHOUGHT SOCIETY.

The next meeting of the San Francisco Freethought Society will be held at Union Square Hall, 421 Post street, Sunday evening, August 25, at 8 o'clock. Hon. F. B. Perkins will lecture on "Truth."

NEWS AND NOTES.

The state of Oregon is enveloped in smoke. The sun rolls like a round red disk in heaven, and there is a kind of funeral aspect on everything, as if Father Time had concluded to give up the race and retire. Arriving at Eugene, I found the stage, that "like a wounded snake drags its slow length along," had gone the day before, and I must foot it, or find a private conveyance. Fortunately the latter appeared without much cost, and I proceeded on my dusty journey. I found the driver an "Ingersoll man," and so we had a pleasant trip together. That magic name is something like a Masonic sign. It is a word of interpretation. I tell a man I am a Freethinker, a Liberal, an Infidel, and he does not always quite understand these terms, but the moment I say I am an "Ingersoll man" the cloud disappears and there is a complete understanding. I am no longer a stranger. It is then known just where I stand. "Ingersoll" has done more to introduce people to each other and make good friends than any other word in the English language.

Coburg is a straggling hamlet on the verge of a vast lumber country, and the music of the mill goes merrily on. I never found a more cordial welcome than here, and with the electric handshake all the melancholy of the smoke disappeared. The red sun became Apollo's chariot again. I was looking for a Diamond and the Diamond appeared—John Diamond, beyond the seventies now, but with the flash of youth still, and the beams of enthusiasm that no age can dim. He came to this country forty-two years ago, and camped with the wild Indians, and he has witnessed a marvelous growth. He is Freethought from head to foot, and living in "single blessedness." He seems to make Universal Mental Liberty his "better half" and lavishes his wealth upon its support. It seems to be his delight to make the toilsome way of the pioneer lecturer happy with good gifts. Age, to him, is illuminated with the undying glory of man's advancement.

At the hospitable home of Senator Coleman I find that genial entertainment which ministers both to the mind and body. In the political world our friend has always been true blue to American liberty—a representative of honesty and independence. Mrs. Coleman is equally radical and advanced, and shows that woman's genius is not under the dominion of the church.

Geo. H. Murch called around in the afternoon. His faith passes "the flaming bounds of space and time," but he is not at all upset by spiritualistic phenomena. He still recognizes the value of this world, and joins our secular forces, and the clergy find in him a level-headed combatant. He is always ready to do his share for the glory and honor of "this world" and to make a plea for common sense and humanity. The way the fur flies occasionally around the ears of the unfortunate theologian would delight the heart of the sturdiest Materialist.

In the shades of evening Mr. and Mrs. John Long arrive to give greeting. It is a busy season, and the harvest wheels are flying. Besides, our friends have just brought twelve hundred sheep from Coos county, and the coyotes are about the land, and hence the shepherds hear another song besides "peace on earth good will to men," and so we do not have all the time for sociability that we desire. But there is a good gathering in spite of all, and our first lecture at this place is most encouraging, and I look with bright anticipations to a return October next. The hall was nearly full, and the lecture on "The American Republic" was well received.

Other friends are here—Alonzo Tofflemeyer, P. J. Blackiston, J. B. Cochran, etc., a generous company indeed, and if all along the line such allies appeared how splendid the result. These give us hope and the golden promise of the future.

I arise at half past five o'clock on Friday morning and take the train for Belleville, where there is just one barn and the station, but Arnold is here and so I am not "a pilgrim and a stranger in a lone land." He takes me to his house, where all the good things of this world help to make the journey delightful, and in the afternoon we pursue our dusty way to Lebanon. We are amply covered with earth by the time we arrive at this scriptural goal. We find John Settle busy at the grain elevator trying to make room for all the wheat that is coming in, for the harvest is more than average. He is eighty-three years of age, but he keeps right at work, simply because he likes to see the world move. I hope he will travel on to a hundred years with the same happy health and hope. Geo. W. Taylor is also hard at it with the harvester, but takes time to come to the lecture and conduct the campaign. He is one of the "Captains of Industry" for golden sheaves of thought as well as the bright fruits of earth. With such there is no failure, be it a summer's or a winter's campaign.

There was a good audience present for the time of year. Just now all hands are at work early and late. Time is precious, and from sunrise to sunset the wheels are making music, and the strawstacks swell like billows on the sea.

X Dr. Foley evidently takes but little stock in the skeleton of orthodoxy, but finds plenty of good living in serving man instead of God. And others I find on the roll of Freethought, and so the "cedars of Lebanon" shall not always wave on the "hills of the lord," but the banners of liberty shall toss over the radiant fields and woods.

I am up again early in the morning Saturday, for a long day's journey is before us—from Lebanon to Albany and from Albany to Portland, and thence, by the Northern Pacific, to Olympia on the Sound, where I arrive at seven o'clock Saturday evening. Comrade Nathan Patterson meets me at the station and guides me to Young's Hotel, where I find liberal entertainment. My genial host, Mr. Young, is on the right side, both for Freethought and a good square meal.

Olympia is a slow place, somewhat after the fashion of a New England village. It has an air of antiquity about it that might suit a Bostonian. It is the oldest city in Washington, so old that it almost has "one foot in the grave." But sprightly youth is beginning to burn through its veins. The railroads are coming in and elegant buildings greet the sight. The forlorn and antique look is disappearing. An immense hotel is being erected which will be an imposing ornament. The iron bands are reaching down to Gray's Harbor. There are resources for the making of a beautiful city.

A large number of Liberals are in the place, but the "don't care" element prevails. However, a few keep on deck, and the ship goes sailing forth with now and then a favorable breeze. The audiences were not large, but they were appreciative, and of such good quality that I have bright hopes of the future.

Miss Lou M. Hartgrove is our real worker here, who puts the vim into those who are willing to act when the way is pointed out. She has had to make her own departure into Freethought. Her parents and family are mostly on the other side. It could not have been otherwise than Freethought with her temperament and practical outlook. She has the gift of independence and was not born to follow without knowing the reason why. She is enthusiastic for the cause and would sacrifice almost any worldly profit for its success; a friend whom it is a delight to meet—so frank and honest and straightforward, and doing the pioneer labor that naturally falls to man, with the delicacy and nobility of woman's heart. I believe that woman will come out ahead after all in the grand work of reform. When woman is once free the Promethean spark will be more brilliant than ever.

It was a rare privilege, also, to meet with Mrs. Sylvester and daughter, who promise to make their beautiful home hereafter a resting-place for the pilgrims of progress. I have not met those of brighter mind or nobler enthusiasm. Theology and all shams, masculine or otherwise, stand but poor show with these keen intelligences. These are the women of the future—logical and intuitive, with the heart of fire and the brain that analyzes. Alas for the "lords of creation" in the new civilization of the race. They must make a "new departure" or abdicate.

Mr. Sylvester was the original settler of Olympia, the first one to own the soil on which the city is now built. He has passed to the majority, but his name shines on the list of veteran Oregonians. The home of my friends is the loveliest in the city, overlooking the broad bay, ornamented with trees, and presenting a noble aspect. The atmosphere of liberty, science, and humanity is in this delightful dwelling.

Nathan Patterson is also an "old inhabitant." He has scarcely been out of town for the last half century, and Olympia could not do without him for even a summer's vacation, but I hope to see him at our Portland gathering.

My friend Dobbins, of the hammer and anvil, can make the fire glow, and take the sword of Christianity and fashion it into the pruning hook of Freethought. He is a generous worker, and I must thank him for his efficient service.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Rawson, Mrs. French, Geo. Collins, N. H. Owings, Chas. Kommensen, E. W. French; Mr. Blodgett, the auditor of the territory; my almost octogenarian friend Mr. Brown; Harvey Spiekerman, Joseph Snyder, of Tumwater; Geo. Hansard, of Seattle, and others have made my visit one of hope and cheer—and I shall always remember Olympia, with its gorgeous pictures of land and water, and quaint scenes of old and new jostling each other in confused variety, as one of my most happy labor fields; and I hope again to visit this capital of a magnificent state.

